Old Man Struck and Dazed by Automobile

J. R. Russell Run Down by E. N. O'Beirne at Broad and Forsyth Streets.

J. R. Russell, a pedestrian, was struck by an automobile driven by E. N. O'Beirne, 314 Empire Building, at Broad and Forsyth streets Tuesday afternoon. Dazed by the fall, Mr. Russell was unable to give his residence address. He was sent to Grady Hospital, where it was found his injuries were not serious.

It was clearly an accident and Policeman E. J. Florence, officer on the Broad Street beat, made no arrest. According to W. H. Rhett, in the car with Mr. O'Beirne, and T. J. Dickerson and W. T. Webb, who saw the accident, the automobile was moving slowly. It was said Russell, who is advanced in years, attempting to escape another car, stepped directly in the path of Mr. O'Beirne's machine.

Candler and Street Car Officials Confer

Company Reported Willing to Meet Rush Traffic Suggestions More Than Half Way.

P. S. Arkwright, president, and the traffic officials of the Georgia Railway and Power Company held a long conference with C. M. Candler, chairman of the Georgia Railroad Commission, in reference to the congestion of street car traffic in Atlanta during rush hours.

Statistics recently given the commission, showing the fare register readings at terminals and cross town points for a period of a week, were considered.

Mr. Candler submitted suggestions and criticisms. It is understood that the officials are ready to meet the commission's suggestions more than half-way. Increased service, it is said, has been delayed only to see what the commission intended to order.

WAYCROSS, GA., May 6.—Pretty Lee Hall, a 15-year-old girl, yesterday suddenly left her home a mile north of Waycross, rushed into the thick woods bordering Kettle Creek and disappeared. It is feared she may have been a victim of foul play. The entire county is being scoured for the missing girl. She was seen entering the woods, and when her father called she broke into a run. Hall states no man is involved as far as he knows, but thinks his daughter has lost her mind.

Jack London Faces Charge of Assault

Writer Accused of Beating Man He Disarmed and Ejected From His Ranch Home.

SANTA ROSE, CAL., May 6.—Jack London, the famous author, traveler and landowner of Glen Ellen, and his guest, John J. Burns, of San Francisco, must answer to a charge of battery next Monday as a result of trouble on the London ranch.

Mrs. J. H. Shepard and her sister had some words, according to Shepard, and because Burns, who was present, refused to interfere on behalf of Mrs. Shepard, Shepard is alleged to have made a demonstration with a revolver.

London and Burns are said to have taken the weapon from Shepard, grappled with him and forcibly ejected him. Shepard declared London choked and abused him.

Villages War for Railway Station

Wiley Claims 23 People and Is "Cow Center"—Mathis Depends on Natural Beauty.

Rabun County is at white heat, and the old feud between the towns of Wiley and Mathis is at its height. The vital question of which place gets a regular railroad station with an agent in charge is to be determined this week by the Georgia Railroad Commission.

Wiley claims the greater population. Within a radius of one mile from Wiley there are 23 persons living, it has been shown conclusively. It claims also to be "the natural center of the cow movement," whatever that may mean.

Mathis claims that it is due to become a great summer resort because of the beauty of the lake created there by the Georgia Railway and Power Company's dam.

Photographs of the surrounding country, letters from almost every State between Ohio and the District of Columbia, a mass of evidence and many personal appeals have reached the Railroad Commission on the subject.

Typists' Uniforms Please London Girls

"They Double the Life of Our Private Dresses," Says One, and Are Very Becoming Beside.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, May 10.—London typists have become reconciled to the uniform. It was feared there would be a great revolt on the part of the young women of this avocation when a leading firm adopted a specific style of dress for them, but there has been no open protest.

"We were inclined to believe the management could not possibly select a costume becoming to all of us," said Miss Dorothy Clegg, a pretty young typist to-day, "but we were mistaken. A dressmaker took our measurements, and a few days later the dresses arrived. They are ideal business dresses. Cinnamon in color, and in the Empire style, they harmonize with the cream and green color scheme of the offices.

"The full sleeves are appreciated. The low neck and the fullness of the skirt give perfect freedom, while the narrow cuffs give a neat effect. Our private dresses have now double the life, owing to the protection afforded them. When the day's work is done we can slip off the Empire dress in less than a minute."

Slayer of King of Greece a Suicide

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, May 6.—A news agency dispatch received here to-day from Ahens states that Aleko Shinas, the anarchist who assassinated King George of Greece in Salonika on March 18, jumped from a window in the police building and killed himself.

How the prisoner eluded the jailers is not told in the dispatch.

Schinas killed the King by firing point blank into his back while he was walking along the streets of Salonika. He gave as an explanation of the crime that in 1911 he had applied for assistance at the King's palace and had been driven away.

Society Folk Nabbed As They Roll Dice

Chicago Host Has His Guests Taken to Police Station as Joke.

CHICAGO, May 6.—An even dozen prominent society and business folk of Chicago learned to-day that their arrest on a charge of gambling at the home of Richard F. Peyton, in Highland Park, a fashionable suburb, was all a joke.

The guests of Peyton were caught rolling dice on the floor and wagering greenbacks on the turn of the "bones." Peyton had the suburban police force—the chief and his two assistants—"arrest" his guests and take them to the police station charged with gambling.

NEWEST CLEWS IN PHAGAN CASE NOT YET PUBLIC

Body of Slain Girl Exhumed and Bloodstains on Factory Floor Analyzed.

NEW THEORY ANNOUNCED

Solicitor Believes Victim May Have Been Thrown, Still Alive, Down Elevator Shaft.

Solicitor General Dorsey, Chief of Detectives Lanford, Chief of Police Beavers, and all men working under them in the Phagan case seem thoroughly satisfied with the progress they are making in the great mystery. They are actively engaged in many unknown directions—as they say, "piling up evidence to strengthen the case."

What evidence the officials have other than that which has already been made public they refuse to divulge. Solicitor Dorsey declines to make public his case in the newspapers. He is investigating every phase of the matter through trusted men working under his own direction.

It is perfectly proper for the chief prosecuting officer to withhold any and all evidence until such time as he may present his case to the Grand Jury.

That there is new and startling evidence seems true, but just what it indicates the officials refuse to say, and the newspaper reporters, therefore, are merely guessing at what may be, or may not be, the actual facts.

Solicitor Is Reticent.

Solicitor Dorsey was reticent about the nature of the most recent discoveries, but his guarded statements indicated that he considered the disclosures which have been made by the force of detectives, physicians and chemists working under his direction as having a most important bearing on the solution of the crime.

Mr. Dorsey issued this statement:

I see in an interview attributed to Quinn that I asked him if he was not paid by counsel for Frank to protect Frank.

This statement, so far as I am concerned, is absolutely false. Throughout my talk with him I did not mention the name of counsel nor did I intimate that counsel had been guilty of any such conduct.

It is known that a more thorough and minute examination of every locality and every article having any connection or possible connection with the slaying of Mary Phagan is being made now than was undertaken in the first few days of the mystery.

Blood Stains Analyzed.

Dr. H. F. Harris, director of the State Board of Health, is making a second examination of the body of the slain girl, which was taken from the grave in the cemetery at Marietta.

Whether it was from any one of the sources that Solicitor Dorsey obtained his new lead in tracking down the slayer, he would not say. He would only repeat that every clew that offered the slightest ray of hope would be followed to the end.

May Have Been Hurled Down Shaft.

A startling theory announced by the Solicitor is that the body of Mary Phagan was thrown, alive, down the elevator shaft from the second floor to the basement. He has found that the soil at the bottom of the shaft is soft and that the girl might not have been seriously injured by a fall of this distance. He would not be surprised if subsequent developments proved that the girl was slain not on the second floor of the factory, but in the basement at just about the spot where the body was found.

To insure that not the smallest particle of evidence is overlooked, Solicitor Dorsey is continuing his rigid investigation of the factory itself. Electric lights have been strung in every nook and corner of the basement, where before it was black and gloomy. Te dirt and trash covering the floor is being searched painstakingly in the hope that some tell-tale clew may be discovered—that the girl's missing purse may be found, or that some article disclosing the identity of the slayer may be turned up.

BOWEN STILL HELD BY HOUSTON POLICE IN THE PHAGAN CASE

Atlanta Police Do Not Believe He is Implicated in Tragedy---Letters From Women and 50 Photographs of Girls Found in Prisoners Trunk.

The Atlanta police and State officials say they place little importance in the arrest of Paul P. Bowen, the former Atlanta youth who is being held by the Houston authorities.

In Bowen's trunk was found a mass of clippings telling of the Phagan killing, and at least 50 photographs of girls and young women. Several times while he was being questioned, Bowen is said to have contradicted himself.

Atlanta detectives have investigated thoroughly Bowen's history in Atlanta and declared Tuesday afternoon that they have virtually established an alibi for him. Having satisfied themselves of the probability of Bowen's innocence, they are continuing on their original line of investigation and have abandoned the theory that Bowen could have been involved.

The local authorities have asked, however, that Bowen be held until a more complete investigation can be made. They think he will be able to prove his innocence and say that they have letters in their possession which practically establish that Bowen could not have been in Atlanta on the date of the crime.

One letter, addressed to Charles Kimball, a clerk in the Southern Railway office, was postmarked April 23 at Lukin, Texas, and did not reach Atlanta until April 27, the day after the killing in the National Pencil Factory basement.

Another letter, which is in the possession of Solicitor Dorsey, was written by Bowen to an Atlanta friend and was mailed at Tyler, Texas, April 20 as Bowen was on his way to Texarkana, Ark. These letters lead the local authorities to believe that Bowen can not reasonably be supposed to have come the hundreds of miles just in time to commit the crime and then immediately jump a train to return Westward.

HOUSTON, TEXAS, May 6.—Paul P. Bowen, arrested because of the suspicion of the local authorities that he was connected with the murder of Mary Phagan in Atlanta, denied Tuesday all knowledge of the girl and the crime except as he read of it in the newspapers.

A score of clippings telling the story of the little girl's death were found in the young man's room. His only explanation was that Atlanta was his home town, and he was particularly interested in the crime because of that.

The police here regard as more significant than the clippings, the stories of Bowen's actions in his room at the St. Jean Hotel, and later at a rooming house. Roomers in adjoining rooms are said to have been disturbed by his moans and mutterings and by his constant pacing of the floor.

"Why did I do it? Why did I do it?" he is declared to have repeated to himself incessantly. Complaint was first made to the hotel authorities and later the police were notified.

Bowen was arrested last night by Chief of Police Davison, Chief of Detectives Peyton and Detective Hilton at 1529 Texas Avenue.

"A night of terror," as officers term it, led to the detention of Bowen.

Sunday night in room 214, at the St. Jean Hotel, the young man paced the floor and moaned. Persons in adjoining rooms were unable to sleep, and reported to the management that something was wrong in the room. An investigation disclosed Bowen poring over letters and newspaper accounts of the murder and crying aloud.

"Oh, why did I do it?" he is said to have cried.

"I would not have done it. I ought not to have done that. If I had it to do over I wouldn't do it," were repeatedly heard by those who listened and who frequently walked through the hall in an effort to ascertain some cause for the peculiar actions of the man.

Monday the young man was shadowed and the matter was reported to the detective department. About 5 o'clock he registered off and moved to Texas Avenue and Crawford Street. There he engaged a room for a week.

Police and Strikers In Syracuse Battle

Twenty-five Wounded, Two Fatally, In Fierce Clash—City Under Martial Law.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., May 6.—Blood flowed in the streets about the Catholic Cathedral to-day when 50 policemen fought 500 frenzied Italian strikers. Twenty-five men were wounded. Two may die.

The city is under martial law. Every saloon in Syracuse has been ordered closed.

Police are guarding buildings, while sullen strikers are gathered in various places awed by the troops, deputies and police.

1 KILLED AND 1 INJURED WHEN AUTO OVERTURNS

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., May 6.—J. L. Thornhill, aged 30, was instantly killed and H. O. Glasgow was seriously injured when an automobile they were in late last night turned over on the county road outside of Greater Birmingham.

The machine fell over a small embankment in making room for another automobile to pass. Both men were employed by the Tennessee Company at Edgewater. Thornhill was from Osica, Miss.

Last night, shortly after midnight, the officers went to the place. Bowen answered a knock at his room door, and then straightened himself and looked directly at the officers.

Holds Knife in Hand.

"Who are you fellows and what do you want here?" he asked.

The officers answered that they wanted to talk to him and he then invited them into his room. He kept a distance from them, however, and held an open knife in his right hand. Bowen appeared nervous throughout the conversation of perhaps fifteen minutes, but replied to all queries promptly and to the point.

When one of them told him to "consider yourself under arrest" he coolly answered, "That's all right, but you've got the wrong man."

Bowen closed his knife and handed it to an officer and sat on the side of the bed. To one officer he pointed out his trunk and suitcase—a small affair in the nature of a traveling man's grip. As the officers opened the trunk they lifted out clothes—some nice ones that indicated a well-dressed man—and these, with letters, postcards and pictures, were piled on the floor.

"If I had a gun you never would go through that trunk," said Bowen. "The things in there are mine, and not yours. I don't know anything about this affair and you'll have to show me strong."

Stoutly Denies Crime.

Officers talked to him for more than an hour at the police station, but Bowen stoutly denied any knowledge of the killing of the young girl. He continued to show nervousness, though, and frequently inquired of the detectives why he should be treated the way they were doing him.

"If I had the least suspicion that this would happen to me, I would not have been in Houston this long," he said. "I would have left here Sunday night."

Bowen was taken from the rooming house to the police station and was placed in a cell across the hall from the Chief of Detectives' offices. He slept but little and did not undress to lie down. This morning he was at the cell door early and looked haggard.

Bowen complained of being hungry. He declared that he was tired—almost worn out. He walked the floor nervously, then sat down on the side of his cot. Next he stepped to the grating and inquired if he was going to be allowed to starve to death or would he be given some breakfast. About 9 o'clock he was taken into a private office with Chief of Detectives Peyton and Detective Andrew F. Shelly. He admitted that he lived in Atlanta and had come from that city to Houston, but stoutly denied that he even knew Mary Phagan.

Only Interested, He Says.

When shown the pictures in his trunk and grip, he pointed out a number of persons, including several young women, though he declared that none of them was "Mary Phagan or any of her kinfolk."

Bowen Well Educated.

Bowen is 22 years of age and has light hair. He is well dressed and well educated. He has been a bookkeeper and stenographer, and claimed that he worked in Atlanta for the Morrow Transfer Company. He gave his home address as 108 Ivy Street.

He claimed this was his first visit to Houston. He declined to talk to officers or to tell anything about his kinspeople or any of his business connections except as given above.

Bowen is slight of build, perhaps 5 feet 6 or 7 inches in height. He weighs about 125 pounds and appears brisk and energetic.

He admitted to officers that he had lived in Atlanta nearly all his life. He denied, however, that he knows anything about the National Pencil Factory, Leo Frank, the manager, or any persons connected with or employed in the factory.

He talked freely about some matters and evasively about others. Efforts to corner the young man in every instance proved futile.

Letter Signed "M. J. P."

A hundred pictures in his trunk show auto rides and picnic parties, individual pictures and groups and couples. When shown them he merely laughed and made a jocular remark about some girl "being pretty."

There are batches of letters and postcards.

The letters were nearly all from young women; some of them were endearing ones. A few were from young men friends.

Many of the letters are signed "Mary," but none is signed "Mary Phagan." The signature to one letter is merely the initials, "M. J. P."

This is believed by the Houston police to have been written by the Phagan girl.

Woman's Bloodstained Vest.

Hanging from the window of room 214 in the St. Jean Hotel was found a woman's bloodstained undervest. It was of small size, as if for a girl from 14 to 16 years of age. The discovery of the undervest was made yesterday morning. A guest at the hotel saw it fluttering from the window and advised an attache of the place. It was wrapped in a paper and sent to the police station.

It is believed that an effort was made to throw the vest out of the window and that it caught on the ledge. It was not seen there before Monday morning, and two guests at the hotel declared that it was not there Sunday night. The vest was bloodstained toward the top of the breast and about halfway down the front. The vest is being held in connection with other properties by the detectives.

Bowen told the officers again and again that he had never heard of the girl, but admitted that he knew the place where she had worked. Bowen failed to explain the newspaper clippings containing accounts of the murder. He was shown them and portions of them were read to him. He admitted that he is familiar with the story of the crime, through reading the papers, and said his interest was simply because Atlanta is his home.

Bowen came to Houston Sunday night, presumably from New Orleans, although this has not been determined, as the prisoner declined to talk about his arrival as freely as he did other matters. He went directly to the St. Jean Hotel and asked for a dollar room.

"Sorry, sir, but we haven't got anything less than dollar-fifty," said the clerk. Bowen turned and walked to the door with his grip in his hand. The clerk called him, but he did not heed it and started out. The clerk ran to the door and explained that he had just discovered a dollar room vacant. The young man returned and registered. On the book he wrote "Paul P. Bowen, Atlanta, Ga.," boldly. There was no effort to conceal his identity or the city from whence he came.

The young man went to his room and a few minutes later went out for supper. He had registered at 7:45 o'clock. Before 9 o'clock he was in his room. He did not retire at that hour, though.

Opening his grip, it developed, Bowen read and reread some letters. Most of them were from young women.

He wept and then threw aside the missives. Picking from among the contents of the grip a number of newspaper clippings, he pored over them as if eager to get every word of every sentence. Then he moaned aloud: "Oh, if I hadn't done that! What did I do it for?"

A youth named Paul A. Bowen lived at the Atlanta Y. M. C. A. until February of 1912, when he left for Houston, Texas, according to Secretary J. C. Bell, of the Atlanta association.

Mr. Bell said Bowen was an ideal young man and stood high in the estimation of the Y. M. C. A. workers of Atlanta. He was a clerk at the Inman Yards of the Southern Railway.

Mr. Bell said that to the best of his knowledge Bowen had not been in Atlanta since he left in 1912. Bowen was living at the Y. M. C. A. when Secretary Bell took up his duties there and he did not know how long Bowen had been in Atlanta.

Defends Bowen.

Charles Kimball, a clerk in the master mechanic's office at the Southern Railway shops and a close personal friend of Paul P. Bowen's, said this morning, when seen by a Georgian reporter, that he did not believe his friend could be in any way implicated in the murder of little Mary Phagan.

"I have just come back from the detectives' office, where I went to carry a letter which I received from Paul on Sunday morning, April 27," he said. "There is nothing unusual about the letter. It is simply a personal letter about affairs in which we were both interested, and my only idea of showing it to the detectives at all is that it bears a postmark which might serve to divert suspicion from him. The letter is dated and postmarked Lufkin, Texas, April 22. I gave the letter to Detectives Black and Harry Scott.

"As for Bowen, personally, he had a great many friends here in Atlanta, and I am sure that they do not take any stock in the theory that he had anything to do with the murder or was even in Atlanta at the time.

"He left here in the early part of last spring and went to El Dorado, Ark., where he was employed in the offices of the Rock Island lines as a clerk. He later became private secretary to the superintendent of the St. Louis and Southwestern line, and spent a great deal of his time traveling over the lines in the superintendent's private car.

All the local authorities were inclined to belittle the importance of the Bowen arrest.

Innocent, Says Lanford.

Chief of Detectives Lanford declared his belief in the innocence of Paul Bowen Tuesday. He said that the detectives of his department had been tracing the movements of Bowen since he left Atlanta about a year ago after he had left the employ of the Morrow Transfer Company, of which he was secretary. In all this time, said the chief of detectives, they were unable to find that he had returned to Atlanta.

On the contrary, Bowen had written to friends in Atlanta from various points and had never suggested returning home.

"Bowen didn't know the girl," said the chief. "He didn't know the girl's family. It is preposterous to think that he would make a hurried and secret trip into the city from Lufkin, Texas, where he was heard from in a letter bearing the date of April 23, and then make his way back to Houston, where he was captured.

"Our disbelief in his guilt, however, does not mean that we are going to overlook any possibility that he might have been concerned. He is being held for us."

Another Defends Him.

Clarence Duncan, a student at the Atlanta Dental College, and Bowen's room mate at the Young Men's Christian Association, declared Tuesday afternoon that Bowen had not been in Atlanta, to his knowledge, since last June.

NEWNAN, GA., May 6.—Paul P. Bowen, arrested in Houston, Texas, on suspicion of complicity in the murder of Mary Phagan, could not have been connected with the Atlanta mystery, according to members of his family here.

Albert Bowen, a brother, said Paul Bowen has been in the West since last August, when he went to Arkansas to work for the Rock Island Railroad. He has never been back to Georgia since, he declared, but has spent the time in Arkansas, Oklahoma and Texas.

On April 21, Albert Bowen declared, he received a letter from Paul, written at Alto, Texas, April 17 and mailed at Tyler, Texas, April 18, in which he mentioned having been to Lufkin a few days before. Another letter, he said, was written from El Reno, Okla., April 4, and one was received just previous to that from Warren, Ark.

The Bowen family stands well here, the brother, Albert, and father being connected with mercantile establishments here in responsible positions. Friends of the family declare their belief in Paul Bowen's innocence.

HUGH DORSEY, Solicitor General of Fulton Superior Court, now bending every effort toward the solution of the Phagan mystery. He is following every clew, and in every way exerting all his powers and ability in clearing the baffling case.

Solicitor General Hugh Dorsey.

Phagan Case and the Solicitor General's Power Under Law---Dorsey Hasn't Encroached on Coroner.

By A GEORGIA LAWYER.

It is absurd to say, as some people have been saying in Atlanta of late, that Solicitor General Dorsey "has taken the Phagan case from the Coroner," or has "butted in" on the Coroner's business in some way.

It would be equally sensible to say that the commanding general in a battle had "butted in" on a captain's business, when, as the battle progressed, the general gave directions of one sort and another to the captain as to its conduct.

The truth of the matter is, Solicitor General Dorsey has been in charge of the Mary Phagan case ever since it was brought to light.

Murder is a crime against the sovereign State, and not particularly against either the city of Atlanta or the county of Fulton, save in so far as they are a part of the State.

A murder in Atlanta is as much Savannah's business as it is Atlanta's, so far as the violation of the laws of Georgia are concerned.

Office Useless in Main.

For certain purposes a Coroner's inquest sometimes is permitted under the law prior to Grand Jury investigation. Many lawyers hold, and rightly, that the office of Coroner is useless in the main, and ought to be abolished. It is a relic of old English procedure, instituted before the days of newspapers, telephones, telegrams, fast mails and other quick methods of communication.

In the absence of eyewitnesses to an apparent murder, however, a Coroner's inquest sometimes may serve an immediate purpose, and, perhaps, the Phagan case is a case in point with regard to that.

The Coroner is an officer entirely and definitely subordinate to the Solicitor General, and does not exercise any authority except such as he may exercise under the Solicitor.

The Solicitor assembles, in his discretion, the evidence against the accused, from it makes out a case for the Grand Jury, advises and instructs the Grand Jury as to its duty and rights in the matter, prepares an indictment for the Grand Jury's consideration, which, if found true, must be depended upon to set forth the case against the defendant to be summoned to bar in such exact terms that it may be guaranteed to withstand all attacks of opposing counsel in the trial of the case.

Has Full Responsibility.

The initial and the final responsibility for the State's case is in the hands of the Solicitor General.

There never is a minute from the time a murder is committed until a verdict is recorded that the State's cause is not in the hands of the Solicitor General, over and above all other officials.

He can not take a murder case "from out the hands of a Coroner," because there never was a point of time in any murder case's history that it was not more in the hands of the Solicitor than it possibly could have been in the hands of the Coroner.

No man may be put in jeopardy of his life a second time in Georgia (save of his own motion) in criminal proceedings, but the "verdict" of a Coroner's jury can not be pleaded as former jeopardy.

Policemen, Coroners, Sheriffs are all peace officers, and have their direct and indirect duties to perform in the presence of crime against the State, but never is there a time when any one of them is equal in dignity or authority to the Solicitor General.

There is but one trial, upon motion of the State, of a criminal case in Georgia, and that is in the court house, under the direction of the Solicitor.

If a defendant be acquitted, that ends the matter. If he be convicted, he may move for another trial or appeal to a competent court of review. The State has no appeal.

Therefore, the law very properly provides that Coroners' findings, committal hearings and Grand Jury returns shall be merely parts of the process employed, or permitted, by the Solicitor, in whole or in part, prior to the actual trial of a case in the court house, before the judge and the trial jury.

There never is any question of the Solicitor General's supreme prosecuting status in the progress of a criminal investigation. Within the wide and sometimes arbitrary scope of his office he stands first in responsibility as the State's accredited representative and agent in the prosecution.

To be sure, there are Constitutional and statutory curbs and restrictions upon a Solicitor General, but none of them may be invoked by a Coroner.

MUSIC IN PARKS ACTIVELY URGED

Councilmen and Officials Advocate Fund for Concerts During Summer Months.

Music in Grant and Piedmont Parks at least four times a week through the summer is the plan actively urged by park officials and a number of Councilmen. Councilman Claude L. Ashley Monday introduced a resolution in Council appropriating $5,000 for the purpose. To-day his move is backed by strong support.

"The meager music we have had in the parks in the past has attracted thousands," said Councilman Ashley. "It is what the people want. This city, especially the parks, is for the people, and it is our duty to give them the amusement and recreation they crave."

Councilman Ashley said that with an additional gift from the Georgia Railway and Power Company it would be possible to have music in both parks every evening and Sunday afternoon.

"The Park Board is heartily in favor of Councilman Ashley's plan," said J. O. Cochran, president.

Labor Expert Denies Low Pay Means Vice

Declares Statement That Immorality Is Related to Small Wages Unjust to Girls.

CHICAGO, May 6.—"The statement that low wages is the cause of most of the immorality and that immorality is necessary or usualy is related to the girl working for small wages is cruelly unjust. Wages should not be accepted as a basis of assurance of virtue or character."

This statement was made to-day by Harry T. Powers, State Labor Commissioner of Michigan, here to attend the annual convention of the State bureaus of labor and factory inspection.

The convention was opened to-day by A. L. Garrett, of Texas, first vice president of the organization.

GIRL FLEES FROM UNLOVED FIANCE

Emily Douglas, of Daytona, Fla., Arrested Here, Says Mother Tried to Force Marriage.

A story of flight to escape marriage with a man she did not love was told to the police Tuesday morning by Miss Emily Douglas, a pretty 18-year-old girl from Daytona, Fla., after she had been arrested at the Terminal station as she alighted from the Cincinnati and Florida Limited from Jacksonville, Fla.

According to the story the girl told Police Captain Mayo, her mother, Mrs. M. H. Douglas, had tried to force her to marry a man who lives in Chicago, Ill. The would-be bridegroom, Miss Douglas says, is many years older than she.

"I told mama I did not love him," the girl said, "and she said I had to marry him anyway. She said he would make me a good husband. But I wouldn't marry a man I didn't love, so I ran away. I don't want to get married, anyway. I'm too young. I want to have some fun, and I never heard of a married woman having any fun."

The girl left her home early yesterday afternoon. An hour later her disappearance was noticed, and F. W. Haskell, who says he is engaged to marry the girl's sister, left Daytona on her trail. He arrived in Atlanta on the next train, several hours after she had been placed under arrest.

Haskell has volunteered to take her back to Daytona, but the police are holding her until they hear from her mother.

NAVAL STORES MEN PLAN NEW SYSTEM OF SELLING

SAVANNAH, GA., May 6.—Naval stores factors from Savannah, Jacksonville, Pensacola and Brunswick are in session in Savannah to-day to formulate a plan which will revolutionize the sales end of the industry.

The main idea of the plan is to establish one handling agency at each port interested, and then place all buyers on an equal footing through selling by grades instead of by lots. The plan has been explained to the Department of Justice at Washington by a committee representing the factors, and it is said the Government approves it.

OLD GUARD TO GIVE MRS. WILSON ROSES

A huge bouquet of red roses picked from the lawn where Mrs. Woodrow Wilson lived as a girl at Rome, Ga., will be carried to Washington and presented to the President's wife May 20 by the Old Guard of the Gate City Guard.

Mrs. Wilson was a Georgia girl, a daughter of Rev. Mr. Axson, a well known Presbyterian minister. She spent a great part of her girlhood at Rome and knew personally some of the members of the Old Guard, as it was reorganized after the war.

The Old Guard will visit Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York, Boston and other points to renew the friendships that were made at the time of the historic mission of peace in 1879. The organization will call on President and Mrs. Wilson at the White House, and the presentation of the flowers will be made at that time.

The Guard will leave Atlanta Monday morning. They will spend Tuesday in the Capital City.

According to present plans, about a dozen Georgia women, wives and daughters of the members of the Old Guard, will accompany them on the trip North. Between 50 and 60 members of the Old Guard have already signified their intention of going. They will travel by special train, coming back by water via Savannah.

SUFFRAGETTES' VIOLENCE STIRS CIVIL WAR FEAR

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, May 6.—Great Britain is becoming panic-stricken at the outrages of militant suffragettes and the criticism of the Government's method of handling the situation is becoming sharper daily. Prophecies are common that the political situation will give way to civil war soon unless the Government finds a way effectually to curb the amazons.

It is estimated that the "wild women," as they were christened by the Public Prosecutor in Bow Street Court yesterday, have done nearly $3,000,000 damage since they opened their campaign of violence under the leadership of Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst two years ago.

"Anti" Papers Under Guard.

Since the offices of The Standard were wrecked yesterday because it published an editorial condemning militancy, other newspapers which have been criticising the methods of the suffragettes have been put under heavy guard.

Ada Ward, a member of the Women's Social and Political Union, was arrested to-day, charged with placing a bomb in the fashionable Grand Hotel in Northumberland Avenue. The hotel at the time was crowded with American and European tourists.

The women made no effort to avoid detection. After taking the bomb from a handbag, she lighted the fuse and then hurried away. Panic followed, but a policeman was on hand and he immediately placed the suffragette under arrest.

Bomb Used as Evidence.

The bomb was made of a tin canister filled with explosive. On the outside of the infernal machine was painted: "Votes for Women." When the woman was taken into Bow Street Police Court for preliminary examination the bomb was offered in evidence against her.

It is now charged that suffragists were responsible for the death of Choo Tai, the $10,000 Pekinese champion, owned by Miss Violet Cross, which was poisoned last week. Miss Cross has offered a reward for information leading to the identity of the poisoner, and declares she will vigorously prosecute any person suspected.

Fear Bill Will Not Pass.

On account of the feminist violence now raging in England, the opinion is being expressed that the female enfranchisement bill, which was moved for second reading in Parliament yesterday, will not pass. Already there is a division of sentiment among the members of Parliament over the bill which, if enacted, would give the ballot to 6,000,000 women.

The opponents to woman suffrage have enlisted the aid of those who had no convictions upon the subject up to the time of the present violence wave. On the other hand, the radical supporters of the "cause" declare that the bill does not give women all the rights they are entitled to.

Nina Boyle and Annie Morrow, arrested for rioting Sunday, to-day were sentenced to spend 14 days in jail or pay $5 fines.

The police are convinced the suffragettes used an explosive bomb and oil-soaked rags.

Suffragettes Accused Of $50,000 Church Fire.

LONDON, May 6.—St. Catherine's Church, a fine modern edifice in South London, was destroyed by fire to-day, with $50,000 loss.

A number of cassocks were found saturated with oil, which sustained the theory of the police.

The vicar of the church told of seeing several women leaving the building shortly before the fire was discovered.

Old Are of Greatest Service, Says Wiley

Doctor Declares Race's Benefactors Are All More Than 60 Years of Age.

WASHINGTON, May 6.—Men and women 60 years old and over are the real benefactors and the actual workers for the uplift of the human race, in the opinion of Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, former Government "pure food" expert, who made the declaration to the Washington Secular League.

Dr. Wiley was distinctly opposed to the Osler theory, and insisted it was possible to grow old without becoming senile.

"The idea that the greatest services to humanity are rendered by young men and women," Dr. Wiley said, "is shown by the facts to be erroneous. We do not reach the maximum of efficiency until the age of 60."

DIES SAYING WIFE FIRED FATAL SHOT

George Radcliffe, Columbus Merchant, Succumbs to Wound Inflicted on April 19.

COLUMBUS, GA., May 6.—George Radcliff, a Columbus merchant, who was shot on the night of April 19, for which his wife is being held in the Muscogee County jail, died at the City Hospital last night. He was paralyzed below the waist by his wound.

Radcliff stated from the first that his wife shot him, while she maintained that she was innocent and did not know who did the shooting.

The woman, it is alleged by the police, was infuriated with her husband because he left home with another man over her protest. There was no previous trouble between the couple, the difficulty being the result of a drunken row, according to the police.

Mrs. Radcliff will remain in jail until the grand jury passes on her case.

YORK, PA., May 6.—The real reason for Bryan's grape juice dinner, it is said, appears in the record of the First Presbyterian Church here. On March 1, 1903, Bryan, who was visiting in York, "signed the pledged."

In the book in which the local teetotalers are registered his name appears as No. 1824.

Wilson Rivals Dewey As Beau Brummel

WASHINGTON, May 6.—Of all his laurels Admiral George Dewey is in danger of losing the leaf awarded him as the best dressed man in Washington. For President Wilson seems to yearn to go down in history as the Beau Brummel of Presidents.

Perhaps unwittingly Mr. Wilson has appropriated to his own wear the soft, almost cream gray cloth so becoming to Admiral Dewey. The President is fond of brown clothes, too.

On informal occasions he wears sack coats. His frock coats are of lusterless black cloth and are bound with black silk braid. With a frock coat he adorns himself with a white silk four-in-hand tie. His evening clothes have heavy grained silk lapels. He dons a pale gray brocaded silk waistcoast with his dinner jacket. His silk socks, scarf and handkerchiefs always match in color.

TURKS GIVE UP ALBANIA; ARMY TO GO TO ASIA

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

VIENNA, May 6.—Having failed in its final effort to retain Albania as a Turkish possession in Europe, the Ottoman Government to-day sent orders to Essed Pasha, former commander at Scutari, to cease his efforts to keep the Crescent flag flying over the new monarchy.

This information was contained in an exchange company telegram from Constantinople. In addition it stated that the Turkish Government has entered into an agreement with Greece relative to the transportation of the two Turkish armies under Essed Pasha and Djavid Pasha from Albania to Asia Minor.

These troops will not be made prisoners of war, but will be allowed to return to Turkey with their arms.

That section of the press regarded as official said to-day that Austria has come to the conclusion that Montenegro should not be compensated for giving up Scutari.

According to the official press, Austria and Italy have come to an agreement as to the disposition of Albania, and this program neither called for a division of that territory nor the cession of any of it to Montenegro.

Italy Not to Send Force Into Albania.

ROME, May 6.—In consequence of Montenegro's action in leaving the status of Scutari to the powers, Italy has abandoned the plan to send an expedition into Albania, it was announced to-day.

U. S. WOMEN IN PERIL AS REBEL ARMY ATTACKS

American and English Refugees Caught Between Fires in Battle at Cuernavaca, Mexico.

MEXICO CITY, May 6.—A number of American and English women and children are imperiled in Cuernavaca, capitol of the State of Morelos, by fighting there between Zapatista rebels and federals under General Robles. The rebels outnumber the Government force, but the latter is equipped with heavy artillery and machine guns. The insurrectos made two attacks upon Cuernavaca yesterday and another in the darkness early to-day.

Five hundred soldiers, 200 infantrymen and 300 cavalrymen, left here this morning on a troop train for the scene of the fighting.

Another revolutionary outbreak is reported from the Southern part of the State of Vera Cruz. Tramp steamers, plying as filibusters, are said to have landed ammunition and arms there. Bandits and rebels are pillaging and burning towns and ranch buildings. This is the eighth revolt against President Huerta since Francisco I. Madero, Jr., was put out of office.

The easy Resinol way to stop skin troubles

The soothing, healing medication in Resinol Ointment and Resinol Soap penetrates the tiny pores of the skin, clears them of impurities, and stops itching instantly. Resinol heals eczema, rashes, ringworm, and other eruptions, and removes disfiguring pimples and blackheads quickly and easily, when other treatments prove worse than useless.

Resinol is not an experiment. It is a doctor's prescription which proved so uniformly successful for skin troubles that it has been used by other doctors all over the country for eighteen years. No other treatment for the skin now before the public can show such a record of professional approval.

Practically every druggist, large or small, sells Resinol Ointment (50c and $1) and Resinol Soap (25c), but you can test them at our expense if you prefer. Send to Dept. 17-S, Resinol, Baltimore, Md., for liberal samples and the two new Resinol booklets.

Relieved eczema instantly

Philadelphia, Pa., March 28, 1913: "Resinol has surely been a friend in need to me. I had eczema on my face. It was in the form of a rash. I used many treatments, without any results. I tried Resinol Soap and Resinol Ointment and it gave me instant relief, and very thankful I was, for my whole head felt like it was afire. I told the doctor about Resinol and he highly recommended it and told me to continue its use. I am now completely cured of that dreadful disease after using only about four jars of Resinol Ointment and washing with Resinol Soap." (Signed) Miss Carolene B. Laughlin, 174 Pleasant St., Mt. Airey.

ATLANTA BANKS AFTER PART OF NEW U. S. FUND

Government Soon to Deposit Additional $10,000,000—Municipal Bonds as Security.

Atlanta national banks are taking advantage to the full of charges being put into effect by the new Secretary of the Treasury. Secretary McAdoo has announced that the Government soon will deposit $10,000,000 additional in the banks. He announced at the same time that instead of requiring that deposits be covered dollar for dollar with Government 2s, he will accept municipal bonds under certain restriction as security for deposits.

Both of these changes will operate to the benefit of Atlanta and the South in general.

Government depositories here have put in application for a share of the $10,000,000. The money can be used to advantage in the South. Eastern banks, on the other hand, are not so anxious for additional Government funds since they will have to pay 2 per cent interest in future.

Many Southern Applications.

There are about 900 Government depositories in the United States. Of these, 300 have made application for the $10,000,000, and it is surmised, from the facts stated, that many of these applicants are in the South.

As Atlanta banks understand the municipal bond restrictions, 30 per cent of the bonds they are required to deposit with the Treasurer may be municipals, at 75 per cent of their value. In other words, a bank holding $100,000 Government funds may put up $70,000 in Government 2s, and $40,000 in municipal bonds, yielding 4 1-2 or 5 per cent.

By doing this, notwithstanding the payment of 2 per cent interest on deposits, the transaction will yield a small profit in interest, besides possible profits from purchasing municipal bonds chiefly, during periods of depression like the present, and realizing a profit on their rise in value.

Government bonds cost a small premium, and never fluctuate in value.

Opens Municipal Bond Market.

The new ruling opens up a market for municipal bonds, too, in a quarter which was closed to such issues before.

This does not amount to so much in Atlanta, with $500,000 Government deposits now, and a possible $600,000 when the additional $10,000,000 is allotted, but for the nation, it amounts to considerable.

Government deposits all over the nation will amount to $53,000,000, which will make a market for $16,430,000 in municipal bonds, if the depositories care to take advantage of it.

Banks have found it profitable to handle postal savings deposits under a similar system.

MISS AGNES TINSLEY HARRISON, of Atlanta, who made local debut as professional actress Monday night.

ATLANTA ACTRESS IN LOCAL DEBUT

Miss Agnes Tinsley Harrison, a well known Atlanta girl, is receiving numerous congratulations on the success that attended her local debut as a professional actress with Miss Billy Long's stock company at the Atlanta Theater Monday night. Miss Harrison appeared in the role of Clarice Stapleton, a young society girl, in the comedy drama, "The Girl From Out Yonder," Miss Long's offering for the week.

Though competing with a company of seasoned professionals, and naturally affected by nervousness on her first appearance, Miss Harrison's work did not suffer in contrast with the acting of the other members of the company; in fact, she was one of the hits of the show and would have been even had she not been an Atlanta girl. She possesses a good stage presence, her lines were enunciated clearly, and she played the part with a simplicity and power that appealed to the audience.

Strongest in Third Act.

Her strongest scene came in the third act, when she changed quickly from a portrayal of jealous dissatisfaction to the realization of love. Her work in this scene was decidedly clever, and she earned a round of applause.

The boxes and orchestra seats were filled with a number of Miss Harrison's friends, and they showered applause upon her in recognition of her work. At the end of the second act she was given a great armful of roses.

Miss Harrison has selected "Marjorie Mason" as her stage name. She is taking up stage life with the highest ambitions. She wants to rise to the topmost heights of her profession, and if her work of last night can be taken as a criterion of her ability, she is destined for greater things in the theatrical world.

Comes From Talented Family.

Miss Harrison comes from a well-known and talented family, and prepared for the stage by two years of study. Her ability as an elocutionist created an impression upon her instructor at St. Mary's College, at Raleigh, N. C., and she was urged to enter the professional ranks.

Her relationship gives an added touch of interest to her stage debut. Her sister, Miss Emily Harrison, has achieved success in educational work. She is a niece of the late Mrs. Robert Emory Park, and a cousin of Mrs. Virginia Clay Clopton, of Alabama. The families of Harrison, Tinsley and Hendree, with which she is connected, have produced many prominent figures in Georgia history.

Train Kills Soldier At Fort McPherson

Relatives of Private John Galivan Not Located—Engineer and Conductor Surrender.

Preparations are being made for the burial of John Galivan, private in Company L, Seventeenth United States Infantry, who was struck and instantly killed Monday night by a Central of Georgia passenger train. Galivan's place of enlistment has not been learned and thus far no relatives have been located.

It is said Galivan, who was slightly deaf, did not hear the approaching train as he crossed the tracks in front of the army post. His neck and practically every bone in his body was broken.

W. B. Last and J. D. Wather, engineer and conductor of the train, after surrendering themselves, were released on their own recognizance.

Galivan was a native of Ireland, 45 years old, and had been in the service 20 years. He was a Spanish War veteran.

JOKE MAY COST PARK JOB WITH STATE BANKERS

Strong Fight Is Made on Legal Representation Because of Utterance at Macon.

Some of the members of the Georgia Bankers Association are going to the convention in Macon this month prepared to do battle. Just how much battle they will do depends on developments, but indications are for a lively time.

The fight will center around the appointment of a legal representative for the association.

Orville Park, of Macon, is the present legal representative. In a recent speech at a group meeting in Macon, he made a "bad break." He suggested, jocularly, he says, that bankers attempt to influence Legislators in favor of the new bank law when the Legislators come seeking loans.

The speech was reported, and caused a rumpus. Mr. Park sticks to his "all a joke" explanation. But many of the bankers are not satisfied. They think a man of legal acumen sufficient to advise the bankers should be shrewd enough not to make ill-timed and ill-considered jests.

Mr. Park does not want to quit under fire.

Hence the probability of warfare.

The position of legal representative pays a salary merely nominal, but the appointment brings considerable legal business to the holder of the title, and is valuable in that way.

Sleep Cures Small Orphans' Wanderlust

Six-Mile Flight From Baptist Home in Scanty Attire Too Much for Brothers.

James Johnson, aged 6, and Charles Johnson, 3 years old, are perfectly satisfied to remain at the Georgia Baptist Orphans' Home at Hapeville. The 6-mile walk they indulged in Monday after taking French leave from the institution proved a bit too much for them, and the two "kiddies" were sleeping like tops when the breakfast bell sounded Tuesday morning.

The youngsters were placed in the institution by their aunt, Mrs. Carrie Meade, of 24 Milledgeville Avenue, but at the time declared their intention of leaving the place. They succeeded in slipping away from the home and two hours later were found in West End.

Attired in a slim amount of raiment somewhat akin to pajamas, the two boys drew smiles from the West Enders. They were returned to the orphans' home, but declared their intention of leaving again. The long walk, however, brought heavy sleep to the wanderers, and they were sleeping soundly at last reports from the home this morning.

French Anarchists Doom King Alfonso

Paris Police Expect Hard Time Guarding Ruler on State Visit to Poincare.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, May 6.—On account of the activity of anarchists, the Paris police fear they will have a difficult time protecting the life of King Alfonso, of Spain, who will arrive here to-morrow on a state visit to President Poincare.

Revolutionaries held a violent meeting to-day, at which a resolution was adopted declaring that Alfonso is an enemy of democracy and should so be treated. The police broke up the meeting and arrested several of the ringleaders, who will be locked up until the Spanish King has left.

Alfonso will remain in Paris two days, leaving Friday, after a review of the aerial fleet of the French army.

ANGRY ANGLERS DEFY STATE LAWS

Game Warden Says Mob of 300 Threatened Him and Mayor of Nashville Locked Him Up.

Having his revolver taken from him and his life threatened by a mob of from 200 to 300 people is neither a pleasant nor a dignified experience for an officer of the law to undergo, but that's what happened to Deputy Game Warden M. F. Boisclair when he tried to stop the fishing in the big pond at Milltown, between Lowndes and Berrien Counties.

Deputy Boisclair is back in Atlanta with his exciting tale and State Game Warden Jesse E. Mercer has deemed the matter of sufficient importance to take it up with Governor Brown.

Warden Mercer said he had sent a warden from an adjoining county to Milltown about a month ago, but the officer was so greatly intimidated that he was able to accomplish nothing. Then he sent Deputy Boisclair.

"He swore out 22 warrants," declared Mr. Mercer in relating the details of his officer's trip to the fishing pond. "But he says that no sooner had he done this than he was warned to leave that section of the country. He found public sentiment so strong against him that he withdrew the warrants in the justice courts and went to Nashville, the county seat of Berrien County, and again swore them out.

"While he was talking to the justice of the peace in Nashville, he reports that he was surrounded by a mob of from 200 to 300 and that Mayor Pafford shook his finger in his face and called him names. He says the Mayor ordered his arrest without a warrant and had his revolver taken from him. It was only with the greatest difficulty that two bondsmen were found."

Warden Mercer declared Tuesday that his department would enforce the law, regardless of the attitude or sentiment of the people in the various localities.

"I am going to enforce the law," he stated, "if I have to camp on the bank of the pond all summer, spend every dollar in the department and call on the Governor for assistance."

'Christianity Alone Keeps America Alive'

Statement Made by Vice President Marshall in Address to Girl College Students.

LEWISBURG, W. VA., May 6.—Vice President and Mrs. Marshall were guests of honor at the 100th anniversary of the Lewisburg Female College. Speaking on "The Modern Puritan," Mr. Marshall said: "Without Christianity America could not live. We are the melting pot of numerous types of the world. Without Christianity to mark the rule of life our hopes would come to naught."

Start Your Baby With Sound Health

We cannot all start life with the advantages of money, but every child born is entitled to the heritage of good health. Through unfortunate ignorance or carelessness in the feeding of a baby its tiny stomach may become deranged. The disorder spreads to the bowels and before the mother realizes it the two chief organs on which the infant's comfort and health depend are causing it great suffering. If the condition is allowed to continue grave ailments often result.

There is, however, no occasion for alarm, and the sensible thing to do—but it should be done instantly—is to give the baby a small dose of a mild laxative-tonic. In the opinion of a great many people, among them such well-known persons as the parents of Dixie Dudley, Magnolia, Ark., the proper remedy is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. Mrs. Earl Dudley writes: "Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is the best medicine I ever used. It cured my baby of flatulency colic when the doctors failed; it cured my husband of constipation. My home shall never be without Syrup Pepsin." It is a pleasant-tasting laxative, which every person likes. It is mild, non-griping, and contains that most excellent of all digestants, pepsin.

This remedy is especially intended for infants, children, women, old people and all others to whom harsh cathartics, salt waters, pills, etc., are distressing. In fact, in the common disorders of life, such as constipation, liver trouble, indigestion, biliousness, headaches, and the various other disorders of the stomach, liver and bowels nothing is more suitable than this mild laxative-tonic, Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin.

DIXIE ASKEW DUDLEY.

Two generations of people are using it to-day, and thousands of families keep it constantly in the house, for every member of the family can use it. It can be obtained of any druggist at fifty cents or one dollar a bottle, the latter being the size bought by families who already know its value. Results are always guaranteed or money will be refunded.

If no member of your family has ever used Syrup Pepsin and you would like to make a personal trial of it before buying it in the regular way of a druggist, send your address—a postal will do—to W. B. Caldwell, 417 Washington St., Monticello, Ill., and a free sample bottle will be mailed you.

The Empire Life's Great 12-Year Record

The Empire Life Building. Home Office of the Company.

It is, no doubt, a source of gratification to the people of the South, and especially those of Georgia, to note the steady and substantial growth of The Empire, their home Life Insurance Company.

The Empire Life's recent statement as filed with the Insurance Department of the State of Georgia shows a wonderful transformation of figures since its first entrance into the insurance field in 1901. Every year has shown an increase over the previous year, which shows conclusively the growth of the company to be steady, and not spasmodic.

END OF 1901—GROSS SURPLUS	5,861.01
END OF 1901—INSURANCE IN FORCE	927,000.00

MOVEMENT TO DIVIDE FLORIDA LIKELY TO WIN

Georgians View With Interest Effort to Make Two States of Southern Peninsula.

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

Georgians generally will be interested in the movement now aggressively under way to divide the State of Florida into two States, to be known, respectively, as East and West Florida.

Every now and then, a motion has been made to divide the grand old State of Georgia—as the stump speakers call it—into two separate commonwealths, and this proposition bobs up now and then in the suggestion that Macon be made the capital of the State instead of Atlanta, but it never has gone to anything like the length that the movement to divide Florida has gone.

A bill already has been prepared for introduction in the Florida Legislature—as a matter of fact, it is scheduled to be sent to the House for a first reading Wednesday, May 7—and there can be no doubt that the movement is on in dead earnest and in all seriousness.

A poll of the State Legislature, moreover, is said to favor the idea, and every indication is that the bill will pass.

After the passage of the bill the measure will be submitted to the people for a vote, and if ratified, the Governor will take the matter up with the Florida congressional delegation and proceed at once to apply for statehood for both the proposed new States, without any further action in the Florida Legislature. The newspapers of the State are nearly all in favor of the movement.

The matter has gone so far that already keen rivalries have sprung up between cities in both the proposed new States, wishing to be the capitals thereof. Citizens generally seem to view the forthcoming division—if it ever arrives—with calmness and poise.

Nobody seems to be mad with anybody particularly—somehow Florida appears merely to think that it just as well be two States as one, if not better.

One aspiring city, with somebody possessed of a happy sense of humor press-agenting its claims to the capital plum of one of the new States, gravely asserts that it is entitled to the honor because "the town is utterly free of insects, and is popular with the politicians."

Whether the one statement negatives the other is, of course, for the gentle reader to say.

The Vidalia Advance, in publishing the following unique communication from a correspondent, has solved something of a mystery, and thrown an illuminating and serious light upon a matter considered for many years more or less of a joke:

"Editor Advance: I notice in a recent issue of your paper where you say that you will hereafter leave off 'Colonel' from the names of attorneys, in which I heartily agree with you, as I think the highest title an American in civil life can have is 'Mr.,' writes L. J. Cowart.

"But as to how they came to be called Colonel I will explain for the benefit of posterity. Some time in the distant past every Solicitor General was, by virtue of his office, a member of the Governor's staff, with the rank of colonel, and there being but few lawyers in the State, they were soon nearly all solicitors or ex-solicitors general, and for fear of robbing some of them of their military title, of which they were very proud, the people, and more especially strangers, called them all "Colonel," until finally it is applied to all alike, some of whom I am constrained to believe would scarcely make a good country 'squire.

"Yours, etc., C. B. N."

Governor Joseph M. Brown delights to talk of nothing so much, perhaps, as of his big Cherokee County farm, where every now and then he spends a few hours—sometimes a day or more—looking over things.

He can catch an early train out of Atlanta, ride four miles through the country and back, catch an afternoon train back to Atlanta, and not be absent from the executive office more than six or eight hours.

When he gets to the farm, however, he keeps things on the jump, for every minute counts. He can get over a surprising amount of territory in a mighty short time, and he generally comes back to the Capital with his cuffs covered with minute pencil memoranda, about this, that and the other things, big and little, needing attention in some way.

He knows all the country folk about his farm, and they are to a man proud of their neighbor, both as a statesman and a farmer—for they look upon him as an eminent success in both lines of endeavor.

John R. Cooper, of Macon, is an Atlanta visitor.

Mr. Cooper says his late Congressional race, although he failed to win, has not greatly discouraged him. He intimates that he may have another try at that plum some of these days.

Brenau Composer Given Signal Honor

Otto W. G. Pfefferkorn Chosen by Godowsky to Help Arrange Ideal Piano Course.

Georgia has been signally honored through the selection of Otto W. G. Pfefferkorn, director of music at Brenau College, Gainesville, Ga., as a collaborator with Godowsky, the world famous pianist, in the preparation of an ideal course of study for piano students.

Mr. Pfefferkorn received the invitation from one of the leading publishing companies of America, the gifted American director being chosen at the request of Godowsky himself.

Godowsky, who is of Vienna, is one of the foremost musicians of the day. Mr. Pfefferkorn, who has been connected with Brenau Conservatory for twelve years, is a composer himself, his work being widely known.

The Austrian and American musicians were chosen in order to make the ideal course of study one of international scope and interest.

U. S. Asked to Aid in Battle Celebration

Representative Howard Promises to Try to Interest Federal Government—Socities Meet.

The semi-centennial of the Battle of Atlanta will be celebrated by Atlantans. Wilmer C. Moore, president of the Chamber of Commerce, has been working on the plan, and at 3:30 o'clock Tuesday a meeting will be held at which all of the patriotic societies in the city will be represented. Arrangements for the celebration will be made.

An effort will be made to obtain Federal aid in holding the celebration. Representative William Schley Howard has been communicated with by President Moore and has written that he will try to interest the National Government. Other members of the Georgia delegation are also being communicated with.

Martinez, convicted of murder and sentenced to life imprisonment, will be tried again. At the first trial a witness testified that Martinez in his sleep muttered, "I killed her."

Atlantan Arbiter in Raleigh Water Fight

Benjamin H. Hall Fixes Price for Plant—Daniels to Sue for Burning of Newspaper.

Benjamin H. Hall, an Atlanta engineer, is back in the city to-day after spending several weeks in Raleigh, N. C., as a member of a board of arbitration to settle a suit for the possession and operation of the Raleigh waterworks.

The arbitration board decided on a price of $250,000, suggested by Mr. Hall. Figures were based on a careful survey and estimate of the water power plant and the distributing system.

An impounding basin is planned. Heretofore there has been no reserve for fire or emergency. It is understood that Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy, will sue the city for the difference in the loss of his newspaper plant and the insurance he carried. He will base the suit upon the assertion that the property was insufficiently protected by the city.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, May 6.—The most interesting feature of the Royal Academy exhibition is the contrast between the work of the royal portrait painters, John Lavery and William Llewellyn. The former has painted a portrait group of the King, the Queen, the Prince of Wales and the Princess Mary. It is a realistic Anglo-Teutonic family, stiff, almost wooden.

Llewellyn has produced a portrait of Queen Mary making her look like a Parisian beauty.

LAWYER FEARS CITIZENS WILL MOB WILBURN

Attorney Who Admits He Has Been One of Lynchers Himself Begs Change of Venue.

"I helped lynch one man in a court house, and I don't want to help lynch another."

This was the sensational statement made to the Supreme Court at the Capitol by John R. Cooper, a Macon attorney, as he pleaded for a change of venue for Nick Wilburn, alleged Jones County murderer. The court has the plea under consideration.

Wilburn, together with Mrs. James King, is charged with murdering the woman's husband last December. Feeling in Jones County was so strong against him he was rushed to Macon and placed in Bibb County jail for safekeeping.

Attorney Cooper, acting under the recently enacted Felker law, asked the trial judge for a change of venue. This was denied. He appealed to the Supreme Court, but that body questioned its jurisdiction in the matter.

In addressing the court, Mr. Cooper declared that if a Jones County jury recommended his client to mercy the citizens would take him out and hang him in two minutes.

Fears Client's Lynching.

"I don't want Wilburn mobbed in a court of justice," he said. "I helped lynch one man in a court house at Valdosta and every time I heard a noise outside while the case was being tried, I thought it was a mob marching on the building to take my client."

Mr. Cooper referred to the case of "Old Man Rawlings," convicted and hanged in Lowndes County, after a long fight was made to save him.

Felker Law Test.

Under the Felker law, Mr. Cooper claims it is mandatory on the part of the trial judge to order a change of venue when there is doubt about a fair trial and he wants the Supreme Court to compel the trial judge to issue the order.

Attorney General Felder, appearing for the State, also asked the court to make a decision and have the question settled. The court asked both sides to submit written arguments to be acted upon later.

After Wilburn's arrest detectives claimed to have secured a confession from him, and also one from the dead man's wife. Wilburn now repudiates this confession and declares he is innocent.

Mr. Cooper says Jones County people have made up their minds that Wilburn is guilty and should hang, and he insists that Wilburn will be killed legally or otherwise if forced to go to trial in that county.

Slang Is All Right, Says Girl Evangelist

"You've Got to Get It Across, So Use the Hot Stuff," She Declares.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 6.—Miss Amy Stockton, girl preacher and San Jose normal student, is going to "pass up" the use of classic English in her addresses and use slang when that form of speech carries with it the "kick."

With modifications of Billy Sunday's grammatical curves and drives she proposes, as an evangelist, to hew out a direct method of discourse all her own.

"You've got to get it across to your hearers," said Miss Stockton. "Some of my friends have roasted me for the slang; others say it is right stuff. Anyway, I'm for it."

DRUMMOND, JR., WON'T REFORM; 2D BRIDE SUES

"Riches Don't Mean Happiness When Your Husband Is Untrue," She Declares.

LOS ANGELES, May 6.—"Beautiful clothes and jewels do not make a marriage happy if your husband is joy-riding with other women."

With wistful expression in her dark blue eyes, Mrs. John R. Drummond, Jr., who is suing the son of the multi-millionaire tobacco magnate for divorce on the grounds of desertion, cruelty and infidelity, said so to-day. She maintained wealth did not mean happiness.

Mrs. Drummond told for the first time the cause leading to the break-up in what was known as an "ideal marriage."

"I loved my husband," said Mrs. Drummond, "but I never knew where he was. Evenings he would go away and never say when he would return or where he was going. He led a high, fast life, leaving me alone with our little daughter.

"I knew Mr. Drummond was divorced from his first wife and that she was a beautiful and charming woman. The grounds of her divorce were practically the same as mine. He treated her cruelly as he did me, but I foolishly hoped I could reform him.

"Married life has taken away my youth and beauty. I was famed in Chicago as a beautiful girl, now worry has made me a wreck. I met John R. Drummond, Jr., in Los Angeles, five years ago, when I was visiting here. I was carried away by his dashing manner, for he was an ardent lover. I returned to Chicago in about a month and he followed me there, where we were married.

"We had a beautiful wedding and I hoped for a happy married life. Mr. Drummond did not care to stay at home evenings or seem to enjoy my company after a few weeks. Our little daughter, Virginia Harrison Drummond, who is nearly four years old, is our only tie.

"I am told that Mr. Drummond is now camping at Lakeside, near San Diego, a summer resort where he lives in the company of other women."

Boy Badly Hurt by Runaway Elevator

J. W. Green Tries to Catch His Ascending Lift and Is Hurled to Basement.

J. W. Green, an elevator boy in the Candler Building, is recovering from a fall from the first floor to the basement late Monday afternoon. One leg was broken, and it is thought internal injuries were sustained. Green was at once removed to Wesley Memorial Hospital. He resides at the Greer House, Walton Street.

According to the elevator starter, Green, a new employee, is said to have left his car without placing the brakes at a full stop. As he stepped from it the elevator began to ascend, and Green made a dash to board it. Gaining only a partial foothold, the boy was carried from the basement to the first floor, when he struck the sides of the shaft and was dashed back into the basement.

Miss O'Gorman Will Wed Her Life-Saver

Romance of New York Senator's Daughter Began With Seashore Incident.

WASHINGTON, May 6.—Behind the announcement that Miss Dolorita O'Gorman is to wed John Anthony Maher, of New York City, May 24, is a pretty story.

Miss O'Gorman and her fiance saw each other for the first time four years ago when she was spending the summer on the New Jersey coast.

Maher was a strong swimmer, while Miss O'Gorman was only a beginner, and on the occasion which marks the beginning of the romance she got out beyond her depth. Young Maher jumped in and saved her life. He is a son of Edward Maher, former Mayor of Albany, and is wealthy.

Manufacturers Ask Whitehall Regrading

Jobbers, Too, Deny There Has Been Opposition to Improvement of Business Street.

Whitehall Street jobbers and manufacturers have signed an emphatic statement advocating the regrading of that street from Mitchell to Brotherton Streets.

The petition reads:

"We, the manufacturers of Whitehall Street, desire to correct the report that some opposition has been shown by manufacturers to the grading of Whitehall Street. On the contrary, and without exception, we consider it the greatest street improvement that can be made at this time in our entire city.

"The $3,000 which we would urge the city to furnish at once will be made and saved many times over to both the city and business interests."

THOUSANDS GIVEN THEATER TICKETS

Great Mass of Coupons Causes Delay—Many More To Be Mailed Out.

Office employees of The Georgian and Sunday American worked all of Monday and late into the night mailing out free theater tickets to thousands of Georgian and American readers who clipped and sent in the necessary four coupons and a self-addressed, stamped envelope.

Despite this hard work, so heavy that it interfered seriously with the regular office routine, it was impossible to work through more than half of the letters sent in.

Therefore, readers will remember, please, that because of the great demand it will be impossible to furnish tickets for any particular night. Naturally, capacious as the Atlanta Theater is, it cannot care for all The Georgian and American guests in one night, or two. Several hundreds will be cared for each night until all requests have been satisfied.

And please be assured that while there is some necessary delay because of the great mass of work to be done your ticket will come through the mail, unless—

You are one of those who failed to send in a complete set of coupons; or one of those who failed to send a stamped envelope; or one of those who failed to give name and address.

If you are one of these, we are sorry, but there will be no ticket for you.

Wife Ready to Go on Stand to Save Life of Man Who Killed Boarder.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, May 6.—Mrs. Henry Lauer to-day said she was ready to go on the stand in an effort to save her husband, charged with killing Stephen Clatworthy Friday night. Lauer admitted the killing when arrested Monday night. He said he had shot "the wrong man."

If Lauer is indicted for first-degree murder his defense will be the "unwritten law."

Lauer told officials he was jealous of a boarder in his home, and, looking for him, shot Clatworthy by mistake.

Dresden claims the interest of world-tourists primarily by virtue of Raphael's wonderful painting, the Sistine Madonna, and then by the china that bears its name. No one will deny that Dresden china is in its way a work of art just as the Sistine Madonna is. The phrase "as dainty as a piece of Dresden china" did not just happen.

And a splendid collection of this china is priced very remarkably in the Bazaar right now. We doubt if Atlanta has ever had such a display — especially at such prices. And at this time when the June Brides' presents are to be bought and the home is to be fixed up for the summer such prices take on a very interesting meaning.

CHICAGO AIMS TO ANNIHILATE VICE

Investigators Recommend That Segregated District Be Done Away With.

CHICAGO, May 6.—Annihilation of vice rather than segregation in Chicago was the keynote of a preliminary report of the City Council vice committee, announced to-day. The committee reported improved conditions since the closing of the vice districts, and recommended the following:

That vice be annihilated wherever found.

That apartment houses supposed to be used for immoral purposes be watched by the police, and arrests made so frequently that the business will be unprofitable.

That parents and children be instructed in sex problems.

That applications for marriage licenses be publicly announced in advance of the granting of the licenses.

That employers take especial pains to protect their girl employees.

LOS ANGELES AT POLLS FIGHTING SOCIALISM

LOS ANGELES, May 6.—Interest in the primary election here to-day centered about the attempt to defeat Job Harriman, Socialist candidate for Mayor.

Socialists were centering their fight against John W. Shank, city attorney, who is supported for Mayor by an organization of progressives and old guard leaders.

DEMOCRATS SOLID FOR TARIFF BILL

Wool Certain to Go on Free List When It Comes to Vote Thursday.

WASHINGTON, May 6.—An almost solid Democratic vote will be cast for the Underwood tariff bill, which will come up for final action in the House probably Thursday. Several Ohio Democrats, opposed to the free wool provision in the bill, will vote against it, including Representative Ashbrook. There probably will be no other Democratic votes in opposition.

Progressives will divide, Representative Murdock, Progressive leader, voting against the measure. Some of his followers will vote for it, and still others will not vote at all. Representative Kent, of Ohio, Independent, will vote for the bill.

A final show-down on the question of whether raw wool should remain on the free list came to-day, and it was apparent that there was a multitude of Democratic votes to make certain that the provision will be in the bill.

Opponents of the income tax principle are about evenly divided between the Democratic and Republican sides, although no Democrats will oppose the bill.

Dispute on Tile Rate Before Commission

Roads Contend Carrying Charge for Fragile Building Material Should Be Higher Than for Brick.

Hollow tile, used in the construction of Atlanta skyscrapers, should be carried by the railroads at the same rate as ordinary building brick, according to the contention of the manufacturers. The railroads contend that hollow tile is more fragile than brick, can not be loaded as heavily, and should take a higher rate.

The case was before the Georgia Railroad Commission Tuesday for a hearing. The Chattanooga Sewer Pipe Co., whose plant is across the line in Georgia, and the Oconee Brick and Tile Co., of Milledgeville, Ga., are the principal complainants.

Another case before the commission Tuesday is a request for additional passenger service between Bremen and Cedartown, Ga., on the Central of Georgia Railroad.

GIRL-WIFE'S FOLLY CAUSE OF SLAYING

Mrs. Irene LeCount Gives Warning Against Marrying Young and to Trust Husband Only.

CHICAGO, May 6.—Declaring she was branded with a woman's shame, Mrs. Irene Westfall LeCount, 17 years old, widow of Leon L. LeCount, slain by Joe Williams, a young art student, in a quarrel over attentions said to have been paid Mrs. LeCount, to-day warned other girls from the path she followed.

For the first time she seemed to realize her husband's death was the result of her folly.

"I want to warn girls not to trust any man after they are married, except their husbands, and none at all before that," she said. "I was lonesome. I was a careless little girl when I went out seeking amusement, chaperoned at first, and later alone.

"Now I am branded. I am paying for my sin. I wish to warn other girls not to marry until they grow up. It's best to wait until they can deny themselves the little pleasures young girls like."

Williams was held without bail by a Coroner's jury. He will plead he shot LeCount in self-defense. Williams has a wife in Kansas City.

THE PLAYS THIS WEEK

"THE GIRL" SPLENDIDLY PLAYED.

With every part excellently cast, "The Girl From Out Yonder" was given the initial performance of the week by Miss Billy Long and supporting company at the Atlanta last night.

The big audience was in thorough sympathy with the work of the players, generous in applause and laughter.

The central characters in the story are the daughter and father, played by Miss Long and Joseph Kirkham, and that their work was most excellent is best evidenced by the fact that the big scene—the parting—in the third act was met by a silence as breathless as it was profound, and in which the female element of the audience were constantly drying their eyes, more or less surreptitiously.

The story of the play briefly is that an old light house keeper has reared his daughter from infancy to young womanhood as a rough little sea chap, with all the characteristics and manners of the rough sea folks. When the story opens she has met a young civil engineer and they love each other. The old father believes that twenty years earlier he has murdered the civil engineer's father in a drunken fit. That his daughter may marry the young man, he tells her that she is not his daughter, but a bit of human flotsam from a wreck. That another killed the engineer's father is shown in the last act, and all comes out right.

Without exception, every part was well played, and besides those mentioned above, Ralph Marthy as Joey handled a difficult character study well, and Miss Kathryn Sheldon and Al Warren presented some effective and infectious comedy. In the part of Cousin Simonson Miss Sheldon was particularly good, for the character is one which could be so easily overdrawn.

Except Wednesday evening, "The Girl from Out Yonder" will be played all week every evening and at Wednesday and Saturday matinees.

SPLENDID BILL AT FORSYTH.

It's a "summery" show they have at the Forsyth this week—one of those light, bright, refreshing bills that is fully able to successfully combat hot weather. There's a lot of singing and dancing, pretty girls and laughs galore—and that's the season of summer vaudeville.

Atlanta always is partial to a Gus Edwards' production, more than likely because they always are good. The Kid Kabaret which heads this week's bill at the Forsyth is no exception. With a dozen or more clever young folks and the latest of Edwards' catchy music, the act delights thoroughly. Some old favorites are in the bunch—Eddie Cantor, George Jessell, the funny little Yiddish man; Betty Washington and Ruthie Francis. Each of them scores the usual hit. Little Miss Washington with her violin—in the parlance of the footlights—registers a "regular knockout."

Pythians of Atlanta To Build a Castle

Association Files Petition for Charter—Capital Stock $50,000. Site Not Selected.

The Atlanta Pythian Castle Association on Tuesday filed a petition for a charter and the right to build a Pythian castle for the use of Pythian lodges in Atlanta.

The capital stock of the association will be not less than $50,000, said the petition, and the privilege of increasing it to $250,000 was asked. No location for the proposed new castle was designated. R. M. Jones, F. G. McCool, F. T. Ridge and W. G. Moore were the petitioners.

Thomas J. Lewis, attorney for the petitioners, said definite plans would be decided on at some future meeting of the association.

Bankers Invited to Meet Here in 1914

John K. Ottley Bears Bid From Atlanta to National Convention at Briarcliffe, N. Y.

The Atlanta Clearing House Association Tuesday authorized John K Ottley, a member of the executive committee of the American Bankers' Association, now in session at Briarcliffe, N. Y., to extend an invitation to the association to hold its 1914 meeting in Atlanta. The 1913 meeting will be held in Boston, and the 1915 convention already has been awarded to San Francisco.

"There are about 13,000 members of the American Bankers' Association," said Colonel Robert J. Lowry, president of the Clearing House, "and about 4,000 or 5,000 of them usually attend the annual meetings."

It is probable that the Chamber of Commerce and the city will also issue invitations to the bankers.

It is time to act quickly, surely.

To you who know the Chamberlin-Johnson-DuBose Co.'s methods, the way things are done in such sales, the simple announcement that to-morrow is the day would doubtless prove sufficient---but, nevertheless, you who know us best can hardly appreciate the true significance of to-morrow's event.

The suits are fresh, bright, splendid styles, a great part of them just sent us by our buyer, now returning from New York. To say they are the latest styles is to tell an interesting fact, and one that is full of meaning to women at this time, when stocks are supposed to be rather low and picked over.

So up to-morrow and to this sale---nothing that could be desired has been left undone, your suit, in the material, shade and fashion you want is here---at one of these prices:

$25.00 $29.75 $35.00 $37.50 Suits at $14.75

Serges, corded and striped materials, eponges in all colors---which, of course, means that the staple navy and black suits are included---and shepherd checks. We will not attempt the styles, their name is legion, qualified by beautiful---cutaways, blouses, plain tailored.

$39.50, $45.00, $48.50 to $60.00 Suits At $22.50

Here we get into the suits distinguished by Paris style points---the "de luxe" suits; in fact, a splendid little lot of silk suits in bright spring colors has been included, too. Gracefully draped skirts are prominent and little cutaway coats and odd blouses and rich trimmings and again just simple elegance. Many are of imported fabrics, serge, eponge, diagonals, light, soft corded materials---any color.

EXONERATION IN GRAFT PROBE ANGERS MAYOR

Renews Accusations Against the Council Despite Sweeping Acquittal of Officials.

Council's unanimous action in exonerating Fire Chief W. B. Cummings and Aldermen J. W. Maddox, F. J. Spratling and I. N. Ragsdale has aroused Mayor Woodward to additional attacks. He said Tuesday:

"I believe the charges against Chief Cummings, regardless of the action of the investigating committee and Council.

"I had nothing to do with accusing the Aldermen, but I knew Council would vindicate them. Council had to to protect itself; for all its members have known for months of the alleged corrupt activities.

"Just the same, I have accomplished what I expected to accomplish. I have let the people know what is going on in their city government. I have won a victory against graft and corruption despite Council, for the people do not approve of their "whitewashings."

Exoneration Not Protested.

In striking contrast to the attitude of the Mayor is that of every member of Council. The reports of the two investigating committees were unanimously adopted without a note of protest.

The evidence was reviewed at length and the closing words of each report were:

"The evidence does not support the charges."

Councilman Albert Thomson was the only member to voice a resentment. When the report of Alderman John S. Candler's committee on the councilmanic graft charges had been read, Councilman Thomson said:

"I move that the report of this committee be adopted, the committee be thanked and continued as a body. Some serious accusations have been made through the newspapers against Alderman John E. McClelland, the accuser of his three colleagues. I am sure he will want these charges investigated when he returns from his leave of absence, and I want this committee to make the investigation."

McClelland Charges Pass.

However, the committee was dismissed at the request of its members. It was stated that if Alderman McClelland wanted the charges against him investigated a new committee could be appointed.

The essence of the report of the fire probe committee was:

"That the committee preferred to believe the denial of Chief Cummings instead of the unsupported statement of R. E. Davidson, fire apparatus agent, that he had presented Chief Cummings with $400.

"That the purchase of the $9,000 fire engine by the Board of Firemasters without authority from Council was not a purchase, but merely a recommendation to Council, and, therefore, not irregular.

"That the system of buying hose without competitive bids was an old precedent in the department, for which Chief Cummings was not responsible, wrong though it was, and that the evidence disproved the accusation that Chief Cummings had failed to secure for the city an available 7½ per cent discount on hose.

Candler Committee Positive.

Alderman John S. Candler's councilmanic graft probe committee was somewhat more positive in its exonerations.

Referring to the charge against Alderman Maddox that he had illegally held sub-contracts with the city, it stated:

"Maddox was requested and urged by the contractor to make bids on the excavations in question. Before bidding he sought the advice of the City Attorney.

"Maddox did not violate the code in question and he did not do anything which, under the charter of the city, the ordinances of same and the code of the State he could not legally do."

Ragsdale Is Praised.

The conclusion on the charges against Alderman Ragsdale that he had been dealing in stock with the city was:

"A careful examination of every act of Alderman Ragsdale in connection with the various transactions with which he has been connected all show the acts of a faithful, honest, conscientious officer of the city, doing far more for the city than his duty required him to do, and doing these acts for the sole purpose of helping the city, and, so far as it was possible for us to ascertain, at a great loss of both time and money to himself."

Spratling Charges Dismissed.

The report reviewed the charges that Alderman F. J. Spratling had borrowed money from beer dealers and dismissed them as follows:

"Your committee is of the opinion that the General Council can not take cognizance of matters such as these, which happened long prior to the election to membership in this body, and where every person concerned, under a rigid examination, swears that there was no promise of assistance nor of help of any sort and no engagement for any service of any sort to any of the parties from the Alderman named."

ROUND-ABOUT-TOWN STORIES

Picked Wrong Man To Get Interview.

"While I was in Los Angeles recently," said the Atlanta man who used to be a newspaper reporter, "I ran into Arthur Bennett. In the days of the Cotton States Exposition Arthur was a reporter for one of the Atlanta papers. He was sent out to get a lot of interviews with prominent citizens concerningt he demonetization of silver, that question being a burning one about that time. Arthur was new to the town and didn't know many prominent citizens. He had made friends with a local poet and went to him for advice.

"'Aw, that's easy,' said the poet. 'Here's a city directory. Pick out the names that look good to you and interview 'em. They'll all fall for it. Feel swelled up to see their names in the paper.'

"Arthur did as directed. The interviews were gems. The office was pleased and Arthur was thinking of striking the boss for a raise when somebody called attention to the fact that one of the gentlemen interviewed had been dead for about three years. The directory the poet had offerd in the emergency was an old one.

"Arthur then went to painting pictures. 'The Bull Fight' and the one of the lions at the Aragon Hotel are two examples of his work. He sold them to 'Pop' Dodge when that genial gentleman was manager of the Aragon. Just now Arthur is in his glory. He's press agent for the Sells-Floto Circus in summer and star reporter for The Denver Post in winter. Circus and Post are owned by the same people. Arthur asked to be remembered to the Atlanta bunch."

Getting Latest News of Fashion's Decree.

"While on Fifth Avenue the other day," said a well known Atlanta lawyer who has just returned from a visit to New York, "I saw a group of men in front of the Public Library closely scrutinizing passersby and jotting down notes on pads or notebooks. Investigation revealed that they were tailors who had selected that point of vantage to examine the latest creations of the world's leading dressmakers as worn by women afoot or in passing carriages. And thus are Dame Fashion's decrees promulgated to those who do not order

Suburbanite Still True to the Spring Water.

There is a well known business man who has a home in one of the suburbs. He comes to work every week day morning on the train and he brings his supply of drinking water with him.

"I never could get used to this hydrant water," he explained, exhibiting a small jug in which he keeps his daily supply of thirst eradicator. "I've got a little place of ten acres near here and on it is one of the finest springs in the country.

"I was born and raised on a farm and one of the most pleasant memories of my boyhood days is that of lying down on my stomach at the spring and drinking my fill of cool, delicious water.

"Every day I bring this jug full of spring water with me to the office. I keep it next the ice in the cooler in hot weather and it certainly does taste good. I haven't been sick in five years and I really believe this spring water has had a good deal to do with keeping me in such splendid condition.

Important Sayings

"As I sit in my office at Washington there are windows on only one side of the room, and those windows look out upon parks and the Potomac and the shore of Virginia on the other side. I can not see Washington from those windows, and I sometimes thank God that I can't, because Washington behind me is seething with the little games of special privilege."—Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States.

"Corporal punishment in the public schools would be a step backward in education. This method of discipline was, and perhaps still is, of value in rural districts, but in New York, where there are 20,000 teachers, the possibility of its abuse would be too great."—Thomas W. Churchill, President of the Board of Education of New York.

"I don't think votes for women would cure all evils. But I know from observation in the Western States that it's a good thing. In no instance have I seen it produce damage, and in many cases I have seen it work betterment in social and civic conditions. We hear it said that women would neglect their homes if they voted. A century ago it was argued that if laboring men voted they would neglect their work."—Theodore Roosevelt, ex-President of the United States. in address to suffragists.

HARDWARE MEN OPEN CONVENTION IN MOBILE

MOBILE, ALA., May 6.—The annual convention of the Southern Hardware Jobbers' Association and the National Association of Hardware Manufacturers convened in Mobile to-day at the Battle House with more than 800 delegates and visitors present from all parts of the country.

BIG SURPRISE IS COMING SOON IN PONY CONTEST

Publication of Entrants' Names and Standings May Reveal Many Unexpected Rivals.

Prepare for a surprise.

It will come when, in the next few days, the names and standings of the entrants in the pony contest are announced.

The Georgian and American expected the contest to prove popular, but expected nothing like the flood which has come by mail, by telephone and telegraph.

The mere matter of listing contestants and their standings has proved to be much more of a task than looked for, and it will take a day or two more.

The youngster who has expected to find himself the only one in the race in his district is likely to pick up the Georgian one of these days and find he has a dozen rivals.

'Twill Be No "Walk Away."

We can say this much, from hurried scanning of the application blanks, not a district but has its contenders, and most of them have a score or more. There is going to be no "walk away" for anyone.

And already new subscriptions are beginning to come in from contestants.

The books in which subscriptions are listed and voting strength computed are ready. Most of the contestants noticed the announcement in the Sunday American and in the Georgian, and have called for these books. Those who have not done so, should come in at once, for the books are the handiest things ever devised for the use of contestants.

Anyone can nominate a contestant. Any boy or girl who wishes to enter may send in his own name on an entrance blank, and 1,000 votes will be credited to the person so doing.

Only One Nomination Taken.

It is not necessary to get someone else to submit the name. Inquiries are coming in by telephone and mail on this point, and this announcement is made to settle the point.

Only one nomination, however, is accepted for any one person. Two or more nominations have been received from some entrants.

The ponies are coming, and they are the best to be found in careful search of the Bluegrass region of Tennessee, which is the pony market of the United States. Twelve intelligent, gentle, handsome little beasts, thoroughly broken for children to drive, are the prizes the Georgian and Sunday American will distribute to the boys and girls of Atlanta and of the State together with prizes for carriers and agents contesting under the same rules.

Coupon Counts 5 Votes.

A coupon in every issue of the Georgian counts five votes. There is a coupon in every issue of the Sunday American which counts fifteen votes. These are worth having.

But the contest will be won by the contestants who get the most subscriptions. A year's subscription to the Georgian and American counts 3,500 votes. Votes are credited for subscriptions of varying periods, down to 100 votes for one month for the Georgian alone.

The rules are simple, and the prizes are worth while.

Go in and win!

When Your Hair Turns Gray

When a woman's hair turns gray, the world expects her to step back from the limelight. Active and abreast of the times she may be, with a wide experience, but—she has grown old and gray headed. Fortunate, indeed, is the woman whose hair retains its color through her forties.

But what of the woman whose hair begins to fade, maybe as early as 25 or 30, the woman in the midst of the active business world? "We don't want old women!" She feels it all around her.

Don't let your hair turn gray. But be careful. Very few hair stains are absolutely pure and harmless. There are some reliable preparations: our Robinnaire Hair Dye is one. Made here in Atlanta, in our own laboratory, and we guarantee it to be pure and positively non-injurious to either hair or scalp. It makes the hair soft and keeps it in fine condition, and no one can detect that a hair stain has been used. It is not a vulgar bleach or artificial coloring. It is a natural restorative that puts back life and color into the hair. No one need hesitate to use it. Non-sticky, and does not stain skin or scalp.

No woman need have gray hair undesired. But don't pull out the white hairs. Two will grow in immediately for every one you pull out. Use Robinnaire's Hair Dye at once, and don't let people call you old. It is prepared for light, medium and dark brown and black hair. Trial size, 25c; postpaid, 31c; regular size, 75c; postpaid, 83c. For sale by all Jacobs' Pharmacy Stores and druggists generally.

Students Hear Shady Law Practice Scored

"The corporation lawyer insists that a green plaster will cure spinal concussion, and that the injured victim gets well at the sight of the long green," said the expert. "If you think your client is going to get well before the trial comes, or if he gets well too quick, do your duty; there are some cases to be settled.

"But the most outrageous practice of the personal injury lawyer is the frequency with which the claims of clients are sacrificed and compromised by lawyers who have no qualms of conscience at this shady practice."

INJURED ARM GIVES MOBILE D. ROBERTSON

By Jack Law.

Robertson, who is a native of Portsmouth, Va., attended the University at Rocky Mount, where Dick Crozier taught the young steps how best to perfect their athletic abilities. Under Crozier's watchful coaching the Virginian showed remarkable athletic prowess especially in baseball.

When the Tide Water League was started in a spirit of pique to put the Virginia League out of business, Robertson pitched the Elizabeth City team, which was a member of the outlaw Tide Water League. He soon was acknowledged the best pitcher in that organization. Opposing clubs were lucky when they made a run off him. On account of his wonderful hitting he was used in the outfield and at first base when not pitching.

Charlie Babb, the ex-Memphis manager, was managing Norfolk in the Virginia League, at that time, and tried to secure Robertson but was unable to land the big pitcher. In fact, every manager in the Virginia League tried to seize Robertson, but he was loyal to the Tide Water. Robertson was a free agent at the time, as the Tide Water was not recognized by organized ball.

Scouts After Robertson.

In a short time Norfolk was besieged by scouts of almost all the major league clubs in the country.

Detroit especially made Robertson flattering offers and Bobby Rothermel, their scout, took another pitcher named Stafford, from the same team, but could not induce Dave to sign. The more offers that were turned down by Robertson only made the major league clubs the more anxious to secure him.

Mike Finn, at present in charge of the Mobile team, was at that time a scout for the New York club. Dick Crozier, whom Robertson always called upon for advice, was with Mike Finn several years in both the Southern and the Connecticut Leagues and was on particularly friendly terms with Mike. This friendship resulted in Finn securing the young Portsmouth lad's signature to a piece of paper that bound him to the New York team.

Robertson practiced a little of Ty Cobb's stuff on McGraw's club by demanding a bonus of $1,200 for signing and was not to report until the 15th of June. It was also stipulated in the agreement that the left hander could not be released by the New York club inside of a year.

Injures His Arm.

Robertson's arm while pitching in the Tide Water League was as free as the wing of Rube Waddell in his palmy days. But sad to relate, Robertson injured his left shoulder in a football game and was compelled to throw underhanded ever since. On account of his superior hitting ability McGraw kept him and was endeavoring to make a first baseman of him. He was offered to one manager of a Southern League team on the condition that the player be returned to him under optional agreement, and it was also demanded that the manager should play him at first base. The manager in question refused to take Robertson unless he was given a clear title to him, which McGraw refused to consider. It was a lucky break for Finn, as the player has demonstrated here that he can certainly hit the ball and is exceedingly fast on his feet.

Rheumatic Blood is Whole Story

Sciatica, Lumbago, and Dreaded Articular Rheumatism Cured.

You Will Feel Like an Acrobat After Using S. S. S.

There is a host of pills, powders, tablets and what-not for rheumatism, but they all lack the first essential to being a natural medicine. To begin with, rheumatism is simply a name given to designate a variety of pains, and can only be reached by irrigating the entire blood supply with a naturally assimilative antidote. True, the pains may be eased with narcotics or the acids may be neutralized for the time being. But such methods merely temporize and do not even lead to a cure. There is but one standard rheumatism remedy, and is sold in all drug stores under the name of S. S. S.

It contains only pure vegetable elements, and is absolutely free of mercury, iodide of potash or arsenic, and has proved a wonder for every form of rheumatism.

The recoveries of all types of rheumatism by the use of S. S. S. is a fine tribute to the natural efficacy of this remarkable medicine, for it is assimilated just as naturally, just as specifically, and just as well ordained as the most acceptable, most palatable and most readily digested food. Do not fail to get a bottle of S. S. S. to-day. You will be astonished at the results. If your rheumatism is of such a nature that you cannot call, consult a great specialist confidentially, write the Medical Dept., The Swift Specific Co., 137 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.

Many Stars After Ritchie's Title

Morgan Says Coast Wants Britton

By Ed W. Smith.

CHICAGO, ILL., May 6.—Unless all signs fail, there will be some lively fireworks touched off before July 4 under the championship chair in which Willie Ritchie has such an insecure seat at the present time. Jack Britton, of this city, to say nothing of Freddie Welsh, of England; Tommy Murphy, of New York, and one or two others, are preparing some stunning pyrotechnics, and believe when the fireworks are set off there will be something fine doing and that Ritchie will no longer be the champion de luxe in idleness that he now is.

Dumb Dan Morgan, who is helmsman on the British ship, was in the city the other day on his way to New York, and had a few lively things to say about the lightweight situation. A young man named Bud Anderson cleared the air pretty well for Morgan by removing one of Dan's fighters from serious consideration as a champion. Said Bud knocked out Knockout Brown in hurricane style, and now Dan has only the one lightweight to give him any concern. But Dan can make just as much noise and advance just as many arguments over one star as he can over two; so, as far as Dan is concerned, it really doesn't make a great deal of difference about the Kayo's defeat.

Ritchie Must Meet Britton.

"Ritchie simply has got to pay attention to Britton now, and within a couple of weeks we will be on our way to Los Angeles to force him into a match out there," spake the word miser from New York. "They told me in Los Angeles just before I left that if I didn't return within a month with Britton, they would know then that I wasn't sincere in wanting a battle with Ritchie. So what can we do but go right out there and try to force the issue? Ritchie must fight, and Britton is the card on the coast. That is why I am feeling quite complacent about the matter, and can see a match in sight right now. Nolan cannot keep Ritchie bottled up and cart him around the country in a glass case any longer.

"Britton has done everything that has been asked of him in the last year. Excepting the Packey McFarland fight, where he met a welterweight, Jack has whipped them all, and that entitles him to a chance at the title. He can make 133 pounds at the ringside and fight well. He can make it easier than Ritchie can, and I am willing to bet on it. So you can safely jot back down as the best lightweight bet of the day right now.

Brown Clears $120,000.

"Because he wanted to take a rest, I sent Brown back home. The kid has cleared up $120,000 since I've had him, and it is a record that I am proud of. He is well fixed, and doesn't have to worry at all. Sorry that some of the coin doesn't cling to me, but somehow I cannot make it stick. Britton also is pretty fat financially. He has something like $50,000 scattered around the country in different banks. Just think of it, he has had thirty fights in the last eight months! That's going some, eh? And because he didn't knock Pal Moore's head off in Philadelphia the other night they accuse him of faking! I think after I have had a chance to talk with the board of safety there that I can get the ban lifted on him.

Anderson Not Inexperienced.

"This Anderson boy that licked Brown is not an inexperienced hand. He is about 26 years old, and has been fighting six or seven years. He stands and waits for a man to come to him, and then chops down on the jaw with funny little hooks that are mighty dangerous. He will be a good man when he learns more about the real championship stuff. If Mandot isn't in the best of shape, Bud is apt to flatten Joe just as he did Brown. Also, I saw this McAllister fellow fight out there. Great man, too, and he'll be a heavyweight some day. Take it from me, he can fight."

ALL TECH WILL GO TO ATHENS FOR BIG GAME

GREAT preparations are under way for the first series of the Tech-Georgia baseball games at Athens on Friday and Saturday of this week.

At Tech Flats yesterday morning a monster demonstration of the everlasting, never-say-die spirit was made at chapel when all the students signified their intention of attending the Saturday game.

A special train will be chartered and, with the band, the trip to Athens will be made at 11 o'clock. Students will be excused from classes on this special occasion, and Athens will be virtually overrun with the Yellow Jackets. A goodly number will leave on Friday to be on hand for the Friday game.

Jackets Going Strong.

The Jackets were given a stiff workout yesterday afternoon and showed up well after their struggle with Sewanee on Saturday. The regular varsity line-up was played, with the exception of E. Montague, whose place at the second sack is ably taken care of by Captain F. Montague. Pitts, the Jackets' southpaw, had a good workout and showed up well. He will doubtless get a chance either Friday or Saturday to prove his worth. He is steady, has plenty of speed and is a strong batter, which is something unusual for a pitcher. If not on the mound, he will probably gather them up in right field, and he can do that, too.

Dope Doesn't Count Here.

A comparison or even a near-comparison of any sort of a Tech-Georgia game is not worth the ink it would take to print it, and baseball is no exception. All previous dope, luck, material and general all-round playing are cast to the four winds before the schedule of these games is even made up.

However, this year Georgia has the only advantage in having played and won more games, while Tech has only won the series from Sewanee and Clemson, with single games from Mercer and Auburn. Georgia has won from all these, coupled with wins from other teams and a long, hard knock on the road which abounded in experience. Naturally, this fills the lads from Athens with confidence. Already touted as the Southern champions, they are anxious to keep up the name, and this they will try to do aaginst the Jackets. They have everything to lose, while the Techs have nothing.

Since the Alabama games the Jackets have been fighting harder and stronger than ever before, and at present are showing the goods. Their batting, base running and general all-round playing has developed wonderfully, and they are bound to be in top-notch condition by the first game on Friday.

Georgia's Pitchers Strong.

Post-season dope had it that neither team has pitchers that could be depended upon. That has been knocked aside by Corley and Morris, of the Red and Black aggregation, who have been pitching good ball. The latter pitched a no-hit game against Vanderbilt, and Corley also has pitched jam-up ball all season.

Eubanks has proved himself to be a steady pitcher, ready to go in at any pinch. During the Sewanee series he pitched thirteen innings, or part of two games, allowing but three hits. All season he has been keeping his opponents' hits well scattered and has not allowed over seven hits in any game. Pitts is also on the upgrade and can be expected to cut loose some stuff when called on.

ATHENS, GA., May 6.—Washington and Lee fell before the hands of the University of Georgia here yesterday by the score of 12 to 0. The visitors were in the air at all times and exhibited the poorest fielding seen here this season. The Virginians were able to connect for but two safeties off the delivery of Corley, while the locals larrupped the benders of Larrick for thirteen bingles.

The features of the game were the pitching of Corley, the fielding of McWhorter and Erwin and the batting of Ginn, McWhorter, Hutchens, Bowden and Erwin.

IRA DAVENPORT TO RETIRE.

CHICAGO, May 6.—Ira J. Davenport, one of the greatest runners the West has produced, is about to oil the spikes and scanty clothes a fond farewell. Before he wanders into the dim obscurity of business life Ira wants to crown his career with a new world's record for the half mile on an outdoor track.

Sporting Food

By GEORGE E. PHAIR

A mother was weeping,
Her baby was sleeping,
Its father, the villain, had fled from the fold.
As daylight was waning
She sat there complaining
And wept as she saw all the victuals grow cold.

Far out on the bleachers,
With joy on his features,
The father was lifting his voice to the sky.
The poor mother's wailing
Was all unavailing,
For how could he leave when the score was a tie?

Perseverance wins in all walks of life. If the Lookouts keep on playing they may some day win a couple of ball games.

There are various things which cause persons to laugh, one of which is a verbal agreement between two baseball magnates.

Ty Cobb's life is rendered all the more joyous by the fact that his contract does not bind him to read the baseball dope over which he signs his name.

Charley Frank does not state what form of athletics he pursued while at college, but we presume he was a member of the tank team.

As we understand it, the mutual esteem between Messrs. Charles Frank and Bill Smith is so great that they could strangle each other at a moment's notice.

We note by the papers that Luther McCarty and Arthur Pelky are matched to do battle in Calgary. In some circles it is rumored that they are pugilists.

If it be true that Gotch and Zbyszko will meet in one of Chicago's baseball parks, we are unanimously in favor of investigating the baseball trust.

The baseball season was inaugurated in Paris with a score of 22 to 16, indicating that there are futurists in baseball as well as in art.

THE NATIONAL COMMISH.

It was a heinous crime, they thought,
when Tyrus Raymond Cobb
Demanded several chunks of dough
for working at his job.
And so they fined him fifty bones and
put him on the pan,
A horrible example for the others of his clan.

But when a magnate boosts the price
of seats by yonder fence,
Where fans can get a bird's-eye view
by paying 50 cents—
Said magnate breaks a baseball law,
but does he pay a fine.
'Tush! Tush!" they say. "Don't bother
us. Bring in a case of wine!"

In view of the recent work of Mr. Chance's athletes, we can say without fear of successful contradiction that the Bermuda onion will not be adopted as the national flower.

Joe Tinker has secured a mortgage on the services of Johnny Kling, but by some strange oversight he has neglected to sign Adrian C. Anson and Bill Lange.

Despite the fact that George Bausewein is getting down to shape, we fear that he never will be used as an advertisement for anti-fat.

Tommy Burns owns a club, makes the matches, manages the club's meal tickets and referees the fights. Thus we see that a prizefighter sometimes develops into a merger.

Possibly the Mikado will lose some of that warlike spirit when he learns that Gunboat Smith is headed for California.

The official scorer in Detroit is unanimously in favor of an upward revision of Ty Cobb's batting average.

COWEE DEFEATS MOTT IN EAST LAKE FINALS

The results of the three flights in the vice president's tournament at the East Lake course, just finished, were as follows:

H. P. D. Cowee defeated C. B. Mott, 5-4, in 36 holes in the first flight. W. P. Hazelwood won the second flight, defeating W. F. Spalding, 3-2. Frank Adair defeated W. F. Upshaw, 4-3, in the third flight.

The second and third flights were only 18 holes. Cowee was never over 85 in any of his matches. Frank Adair was 82 in his match with Upshaw.

CUNNINGHAM'S MEN EXPECT TO WIN WITH EASE

ATHENS, GA., May 6.—For one time during the many years that Tech and Georgia have met in battle for athletic supremacy there is a feeling of confidence in the Red and Black camp that Georgia will take the series from the Yellow Jackets this season, and should do it handily. Although such a feeling as this pervades the entire atmosphere around the Classic City it does not mean that Cunningham and his sluggers are going into the series overconfident.

That old story of upset dope is liable to be called in to make explanations after most any old game when Georgia and Tech are contenders, yet there is even money here that Georgia will make a clean sweep of the four games.

The Red and Black team will miss the services of Covington on third base, as he has been the sensation of two seasons at this corner and possesses one of the best baseball heads and batting eyes on the squad. Holden, captain of the scrubs, has filled the place creditably in the most series, but is woefully weak with the stick, and his inexperience on foreign territory will be a point in favor of the Jackets, who usually want to swarm and buzz very evidently on the third base line.

Henderson May Play Third.

Henderson has about recovered from his case of mumps, and Cunningham has announced that he will give him a try-out in Covington's old place. Since Bowden has gone to first he has been leading the team in batting, and the placing of Henderson on third will give him another effective hitter, especially against Tech's southpaw. "Tiny" has fattened his average against every left-hander he has faced this season.

If the Georgia men can keep up their wonderful batting it will take great playing to head them off.

Team Hits Terrifically.

Though the twenty games played to the Washington and Lee series, eight regulars were batting over .300, while the average for the entire team was .310. A total of 222 hits have been made by the Georgians, which counted for 137 runs.

Davis, of Auburn, has been the only Southern pitcher that has been able to halfway stop the terrific slugging of McWhorter's "Southern Champs," as they are now being called by loyal Georgians far and near.

Corley will be Cunningham's selection on the mound in the opening game here Friday, while big John Morris will hurl the second. The fact that the men of Athens have run off with every series played is not allaying any of the spirit, and the chances are that the largest crowds that have ever visited Sanford Field will be on hand for the contests, especially with Saturday a gala day.

COAST ANTI-FIGHT BILL KILLED AFTER BATTLE

SACRAMENTO, May 6.—The Brown anti-prize fight bill was killed by an amendment after a three-hour fight last night. The vote was 20 to 17.

The amendment was offered by Juillard, and it merely re-enacts the present law, with the single change that it limits boxing contests to twenty rounds.

If the Brown bill had passed, the professional boxing game would have been crushed in California. It limited to eight rounds and prohibited more than a 25-cent admission charge. Only a $35 trophy to the winner was allowed.

DIXON DEFEATS GREELY.

MUTT and JEFF COLUMN

JIMMY SHECKARD compiled a record in a game last week that probably never has been duplicated and never will. He went to bat four times, had 24 balls pitched to him, still never made a single swing and the Ump had to call every pitch.

In the first with three on, Jim had two successive strikes called on him, and then waited for four successive balls, forcing Huggins home with a run. In the third Jim waited for another 3-2 count and then was called out on a strike that easily was 6 inches on the inside.

And it was the same in the sixth and seventh. The two reached 3-2, when Camnitz dished up wide ones on each occasion and Sheckard walked, getting three free passes to first, a strike-out, 24 balls pitched to him and without swinging at a single one.

ONCE upon a Time a Promoter grew Tired of standing on the Side Lines and Rubbering while Others sent their Treasurers to the Banks with Gate Receipts, and after having a Chat with Himself He decided that he would Tear the Velvet off his Antlers and Horn into the Division of the Spoils. Despite the Protests of the Frayed and Ragged Magnates He got the Hunch that there was Room for Another to starve in the Baseball World.

Staking Himself to a Handful of Schedules and a Cluster of Railroad Routes He took a load off his Feet, and a brief Half Hour with the Pencil and Slate gave him a List of Towns that were Starving for the National Game. Able to read, He was Hep to all of the Stuff that was Annoying to the Expert Scribes and the Common Run of Fanatics, and being Anxious to Please he Framed up the Nifty Stunt of cutting It all out.

There would be no White Slaves in his Grand Aggregation. The Reserve Clause would be Sidestepped, and at the End of a Season the Performers could go out and get Jobs with other Teams or with the Street Cleaning Department. At the Swell Beaneries the Rube Performers would be taught how to Stab Peas and other Rolling Food with a Fork. Tango Dancing would be made a Cinch for Them to Fritter away Their Hours of Leisure, and as for the Fanatics, Real Seats would be Held when Reserved, and Gun Men Ushers would be barred from the Ball Yards. If there was Anything left undone the Fanatics would always find the Management willing to Remedy the Defects.

All in All, the Promoter had a Grand Little Idea, and then He prepared to get Busy. His Announcement was sent to the Press and the next Morning Sixteen Funny Men in Sixteen Separate and Distinct Sections of the Country took a Crack at the Wild Idea. The Frost that was spattered about the collection of States wouldn't have given His League a Chance if the Performers had been Gum Prop Fed Guides from the Far North. The Managers of the News Services checked up and found that it would Tear still more from Their Appropriations if They sent out the Stories of the Games and the Word was given to Forget the New League.

Learning of all this the Frayed and Ragged Baseball Bosses, who had become Horny Handed through dealing out the Kale necessary to provide Entertainment for the Beloved Fanatics, rejoiced because Popular Approval had been Withheld, and One who would have become a Brother to Them had been Forced to keep his Money.

Moral:—One has a fine, fat chance to pry his way into organized baseball.

CLUB OWNERS MAKE KILLING THIS SEASON

By Percy H. Whiting.

IT looks as though the Southern League were set to make a killing this year. The attendance thus far has been marvelous.

At the opening of the season, thanks to the early start and the consequent bad weather, receipts were not what they should have been—but at that records were broken.

Since the weather has come around and warmed up decently there has been nothing to it but ENORMOUS crowds.

Here in Atlanta all records for early attendance were smashed. Chattanooga has held up well, despite the wretched work of the team. Nashville has had corking crowds. Memphis is off in attendance—and always will be as long as a cheap team is inflicted on the Bluff City folks. Birmingham has had amazing crowds. The attendance in Montgomery is FINE. New Orleans has been a shade off. And Mobile—well, please picture nearly 8,000 people paying their way in at the turnstile there!

If the race stays close the attendance records will smash all records to bits.

DOWN in New Orleans there is a feeling that the Pelicans' chief played a pretty shrewd joke on the Crackers by euchring them out of Williams.

Maybe so. We'll let it go at that—if they will.

But to Cracker fans it appears that the joke is on Frank. After Williams' debut here and while it was supposed he still belonged to the Crackers I asked Bill Smith, "What about Williams?"

Now Bill is slow to criticise a man. But there wasn't any room for argument in this case.

"I don't care a lot for what he's showed me yet," was Bill's reply, "He may come around, but—" and he sighed.

Bill was tickled to death to be so well rid of Williams.

As for Bisland—he continues to look like a million dollars ($1,000,000)!

This lad wasn't one of the kind who was hawked around and nabbed by the highest bidder. Smith has had his eye on him for six months. When he found out Williams wouldn't do he wired Barney Dreyfuss, "What will you take for Bisland?"

About that time it began to appear that Hans Wagner was coming around all right, so the Pirates made a stiff price on Bisland. The local club closed so fast it took their breath away!

As for Williams—well, we'll keep Bisland.

BASEBALL writers the country over are hooting at what they call the "Cincinnati" base hit. It is one of these fielder's choices that, by dictum of Ban Johnson, is to be scored a base hit.

For instance, a runner is on first. The batter, on the hit and run, grounds weakly to the third baseman. The third baseman tries to land the runner going to second. The throw is too late. And all hands are safe. But had the third baseman thrown to first it would have been an easy out.

Ban Johnson says it's a hit.

The baseball writers say it's a "Cincinnati" hit.

In the Atlanta press box we score that in what appears to be the only logical way. If the thing looks like an infield hit and it appears that the runner would have beaten it we give the batter a hit. On the other hand, if it is apparent that the batter would have been out a mile at first, if the throw had been made there, we score it a fielder's choice.

Of course there are some close decisions on this—but so there are on a lot of other hits, when the scorer must decide whether to let them go as hits or errors.

It is better to let the scorers use their judgment than it is to give men hits when they were not entitled to them.

It isn't that we object to giving the batters a few unearned hits—but these hits go against the pitcher just the same as screaming singles and work an awful hardship on him. The pitcher is thus made to pay the penalty because the infielder throws to the wrong base.

Buffalo Team Buys Jackson From Braves

BOSTON, MASS., May 6.—Manager George Stallings of the Boston Braves is planning a big shake-up in his team, which he hopes will help put Boston on the baseball map.

Stallings started the shake-up yesterday when he sold George "Hickory" Jackson, the former Southern League boy, who has held an outfield berth with the Braves for some time, to the Buffalo club of the International League. He will join the team at Providence.

"Buster" Brown is also doomed to walk the plank. The big right hander has shown nothing so far this season and Stallings has about decided that Brown will not do.

FINN TO SEND HOGG AGAINST CRACKER CLAN

By Joe Agler.

MOBILE, ALA., May 6.—Manager Smith will select King Brady to stop the high-flying Gulls, with Pat Granam receiving. Manager Finn will use Bradley Hogg, the undefeated pitcher, with Schmidt catching.

Atlanta lost again yesterday, 10 to 6.

Bausewein got away bad and gave the first three batters bases on balls. Musser and Price were not effective.

The Gulls walloped the ball hard, and it seemed as though they would hit any pitcher that was sent in the box. It was just one of those days when they would hit anything that was served up to them.

The Crackers were the first to score, but were overtaken.

The Gulls hit at opportune times, while we got all our hits after two men were out.

Bisland continues to hit the ball hard. His two triples would have been home runs on the Atlanta grounds. The fans of Atlanta will see in Bisland one of the most finished shortfielders ever in the Southern League.

The Crackers hope to get at least an even break, and will try hard to annex two games to the won column. We all hope Bill Bailey will soon be in shape to don the spangles and be with us, as he is missed very badly.

Yesterday's game was the eighth straight win for the Gulls and the second of the series with the Crackers. Campbell went the route for Mobile. He fanned five men and gave one pass.

Robertson, with two homers and as many singles in five times up, led the batting. Jacobson, in five times at bat, got a homer and two singles.

For the visitors, Bisland, in four times up, got two triple-sackers. Long found three safeties in five chances.

The game was long drawn out, due to the many batters going up.

Atlanta started off well with three runs in the first on as many hits, one a triple, but couldn't hold the pace. One run was put over in the fourth and two in the sixth, but that was all.

GEORGE ROHE TO PLAY AGAINST MOBILE TO-DAY

MOBILE, ALA., May 6.—George Rohe, the ex-Pelican, will act as utility man for the Crackers this season. Bill Smith secured Rohe from New Orleans yesterday and he will report to the club some time to-day.

Al Lippe, who had four American fighters in Paris this winter, has completed arrangements to take three boxers to Australia. He has picked Al Kaufman, California; Jeff Smith, Bayonne, N. J., and Frank Loughrey, Philadelphia. They plan to sail from San Francisco June 3, leaving New York May 20.

Young Brown, the New York lightweight, has wired a challenge to the winner of the Mandot-Anderson contest on the coast May 30. Brown has fought the toughest lightweights in the Eastern city.

Kid Young, the local featherweight, is certainly wearing classy togs these days. Young is one of our best newsboys, besides being some bear when it comes to swinging the padded mitts.

Meyer Pries threatens to desert our ranks. Pries is seriously thinking of beating it to Baltimore, where he hopes to get on with some of the bantams in the Maryland city.

Battling Nelson says he is going to quit the boxing game on May 15. Bat's great work during his career, however, will live long after that. Of all the lightweight champions, the great Dane can easily be classed as one of the greatest.

Although beaten and slambed around, Bat still packs the various arenas he boxes at and would even to-day draw a banner house with Willie Ritchie.

FRANKIE RUSSELL LACES ANDERSON IN MEMPHIS GO

MEMPHIS, TENN., May 6—Frankie Russell, of New Orleans, easily defeated Jimmy Anderson, of Indianapolis, in eight rounds last night. Anderson took his beating gamely. Russell made a good showing, and efforts are being made to match him with some real star of the lightweight division.

PHIL CROSS BEATS ERNE IN SIX-ROUND BATTLE

PHILADELPHIA, May 6.—In a fast six-round bout Phil Cross sprung a surprise by decisively beating Young Erne, of Philadelphia, recent conqueror of Mike Gibbons. He not only outslugged, but outboxed Erne, and made a great hit by his fast and aggressive style.

CHRISTY MATHEWSON'S BIG LEAGUE GOSSIP

"NAP" RUCKER, of Brooklyn, is probably the most unlucky performer in the world. He can pitch shutout ball for nine innings and lose more games than any man who ever stepped into the middle of the diamond. He wears the championship belt for this.

Rucker started against me in Brooklyn last week and did not give the New York club a bit for seven innings. The safe punches against him totaled only two in nine innings, and yet he lost his battle.

It was one of the keenest pitching duels in which I have ever engaged, and there was nothing to do but work all the way.

When the thirteenth inning rolled around, and it was the Giants' turn to bat, a messenger boy handed McGraw a telegram. He looked at it for a minute, and saw it was numbered thirteen. He turned to the bench and said: "Well, boys, here's where we win it."

IT was then that the Giants started the rally which tore Rucker apart. He is a great twirler, one of the greatest in the game, and he assumes nothing. He does not complain because he has had his rare talents buried among the relics of a second division club ever since he invaded the big league. He is not at all conceited. He takes his defeat philosophically and does not "beef."

Yet, like the rest of us, Rucker hates to lose.

"They got to me at last," he remarked at the end of the thirteenth inning. He did not find fault with any of his backers.

SOME may criticise me when I say he is one of the greatest pitchers in the game, and then hint at the box score in which my club came out on top. It is like the story a war correspondent told me once.

"During the Japanese war," he said, "we were attacking a Russian position one day and had thrown up some hasty fortifications. General Nogi insisted in standing in an exposed place and viewing the action through his glass. Finally I said to him:

"'General, you are in a dangerous position. You had better come down.'

"'Yes,' he replied, 'and I would come off those fortifications and quit making sketches, too, if I were you.'"

By praising Rucker for this game, I am hinting that I deserve some. But I honestly say that the better ball club was behind me. Rucker should get just as much credit for the magnificent game he pitched as I did for my work.

Whenever I twirl, I never have any luck. That is the second game this year in which I have been forced to work overtime.

WHEN the Eastern clubs in the American League invade the West this week, there will be a lot of scars left on the teams that inhabit the West.

The Yankees will be the only boys that will look soft from present indications.

Philadelphia and Washington are two tough clubs this season. When these two teams go West, they will meet only one possible championship contender, and that is Cleveland.

Cleveland appears to be going better so far in this race than the team has in years, but Washington is liable to take the ambition out of the Naps.

Even during the many years when the Senators were trailing along in the dust of the American League, they could always give the Cleveland team a fight, as a weak club frequently will some particularly strong one. The Washington team took eighteen out of twenty-two battles from the Cleveland club last year.

BOSTON has been going bad so far this season, and the club has not played ball at all like a world's championship team. Stahl's chances of repeating look to me to be very slim, considering the competition in his league. "Jake," himself, will probably be out of the game a good deal from now on, as he is slowing up. Stahl has been trying to dig up a good first baseman to take his place, but the digging has not been very profitable. He made an effort to grab Hal Chase, but Chance was looking when they tried to slip him three or four boys whose names seldom appear in the headlines. If Stahl could have picked up Chase, it might have put him in the race. As it is, it strikes me he is going to have a tough time keeping even near Washington and Philadelphia.

Both these clubs are traveling as fast as gossip in an actor's boarding house now. One of the teams may drop by the wayside on the Western trip, but I doubt it, because I cannot see any keen opposition in the West. It will probably be a case this year of Washington and Philadelphia fighting it out, with every series between them being of vital importance.

PROPHETS are springing up all over the circuit every day who openly declare that Washington is going to win the pennant. Griffith has one pitcher he can fire against his enemies any time he wants to be sure of a game, and his name is Walter Johnson. He humbled the heretofore unbeaten Plank in a thrilling battle the other day.

So far on the season's record, Griffith appears to have the edge on the Athletics with pitchers, but there is no doubt about "Connie" Mack's infield being stronger than the Washington one, while the outfields are about a standoff. The Athletics are a harder-hitting club, while the Washington team is faster. To my mind, it is the speediest aggregation I ever saw in action in the American League, in spite of the fact they call the Red Sox the "Speed Boys." The club plays together well, too, and is a great machine. I think that the real battle will develop between the Senators and Athletics.

IN the meantime, the New York Americans are not acting as if they intended to crowd anybody fighting for the pennant.

So far, Chance has had very hard luck with his club, and none realizes better than he that some of the present members of the team will have to go. He told me himself, only recently, that a catcher and a pitcher would be let out, and that he expected the public would be very much surprised when the names were announced.

Chance is like a woman when it comes to perspicacity.

You can't fool women.

They let you think you are fooling them some of the time, but just when you believe you are getting away with it they bring you up with a half-turn.

Some of the Yankee ball players thought they were fooling Chance. Might as well endeavor to hide something from an X-ray by wrapping it in tissue paper.

PREP LEAGUE NOTES

There will be two good struggles in the Prep championship race this season. The first one is between Tech High, Boys High and Marist for first place, and G. M. A. and Peacock will fight fully as hard to keep out of last place.

If Piedmont Park bathing beach is opened early enough this year, Boys High School will have a water polo team. Many of the school athletes are expert swimmers and a good team can be organized. If arrangements can be made some aquatic meets will be held with some of the other schools in the city.

The annual track meet Friday is the chief topic of discussion among local prep school students, and a large attendance is expected. The meet should prove the most successful in years.

Boys' High and Marist will meet Wednesday for the second time this season on the Marist diamond. The other game resulted in a ten-inning tie, and since that time both teams have been steadily improving. The game Wednesday will have a great deal to do in regard to deciding the local prep championship.

The West Point High School team is one of the strongest teams ever organized at that school. The team has played a number of games and in most cases has come out victorious. They would like to get a game with Tech or Boys' High.

It is estimated that at least fifty entries will be seen in the track meet Friday at Marist field. The latest rumor at Boys' High has it that the school will be entered in the meet, but many of the athletes have announced that they positively would not enter.

* * *

It seems strange that there are no relay races on the program of the prep track meet Friday. A mile relay race with six men on each team is one of the most exciting events one would want to see.

Gene Turner, official Prep League umpire, has given entire satisfaction this season, and an attempt will be made to engage him for next year. Turner is at present a member of the Georgia Tech faculty and is also a former minor league ball player.

It begins to look as though Riverside will finish the baseball season this year with a clean slate. So far this team has won sixteen straight games and has played one tie. They have met nearly every prep team in the State and beaten them all easily. Riverside could trim most of the colleges this year.

The reason for the success of the Riverside nine this year is in the excellent pitching staff and the slugging ability of the players. Williamson, McNeill and Haines are all first-class twirlers.

So much pressure is being brought to bear by the alumni of Emory College in favor of intercollegiate athletics that it looks as if the faculty and regents will be forced to grant their wishes.

Following is a list of athletes from Tech High School and the events in which they will be entered in Friday:

100-yard dash, Bedell and Parks; 220-yard low hurdles, Bedell and Parks; 440-yard dash, Bedell, Covington and Whittaker; 880-yard run, Downing, Covington, Shropshire and Hiles; one-mile run, Cobb, Hiles, Downing and Covington; shot put, Meyers, Bedell, Weston; hammer throw, Bedell and Meyers; high jump, Perry and Chamberlain; broad jump, Jacobus and Bedell; pole vault, Meyers.

Jim Prease, of Riverside, is one of the best first basemen in prep circles this year. He is a big, rangy chap and can pull in anything that comes within six feet of the bag. He is also one of the heaviest hitters on the team.

The game Wednesday between Boys' High and Marist will be a pitchers' battle between Fox and Callahan. These two lads are perhaps the best pair of twirlers in the local league and both are going great now.

A tennis tournament will soon start at Peacock. There are a number of experts at this game there and the tournament will be a hot one. The games will probably be played on the Piedmont Park courts.

BASEBALL
Diamond News and Gossip

The fans yesterday gave Hal Chase, Yankee first baseman, an unmerciful roasting, calling him "bonehead," "quitter," "boots," and like names. To those who have seen Chase in action during the past week, it has seemed that he is not giving his best efforts to the club. Sporting writers in New York are almost a unit in the clamor to have Chase traded or sold.

The Yankees, who left last night for the Western trip, now own the unenviable record of not having won a game this season on their home grounds.

The Pirates defeated the Naps 6 to 5 in an exhibition game played in Cleveland yesterday. It was the first time a Pittsburg club has played there in seven years.

Manager Fred Clarke got back into the game for the first time since 1911. Honus Wagner cavorted at short for the first time since the 1913 season opened.

The Giants are now in sixth place—the lowest position they have held in the National League race at this time of the season for many years.

Walter Johnson, of the Senators, acted as relief pitcher again yesterday when the score was tied, and his team then batted out a victory. Johnson now has a straight string of six victories, and has pitched 42 consecutive innings without being scored upon.

The Brooklyn Dodgers grabbed off another victory yesterday and are now resting in third place.

Ty Cobb's return to the game has put a lot of ginger into the turnstiles.

The Red Sox last again yesterday and those who predicted a runaway race for the world's championship this season are wondering who monkeyed with the jinx.

Hendricksen, the sub-outfielder, whose hit helped the Red Sox to win the final game in the world's series last fall, was a regular yesterday, and amassed four hits out of five times at the bat.

The Giants, who have just lost four straight games to the Phillies, are hopeful to-day of recruiting their losses. Joe Tinker's tail-end Reds open a four-game series in Gotham.

"GIANTS MUST WAKE UP AND HUSTLE"-CRANE

By Sam Crane.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., May 6.—If the Giants have the idea roaming around in their belfrys that they have the National League pennant cinched without playing for it they want to chase it.

They were never more fooled in their young and tender lives.

Other champion clubs before them have fallen by reason of over confidence, and they are on the high road for a thud that will shake them from their head to their heels.

It is possible they are having their annual slump now, but with any other team excepting the Giants it might be said they are outclassed. Of the victories to their credit, a majority were won from the tail-end Boston Braves, a team that has been just as easy for every other team that has had the luck to go up against them.

Lack Fighting Spirit.

The Brooklyns have more than held their own with the Champs, and now the Phillies have broken even with them. The first month of the championship season is nearly over. Another week and it will be.

What have the much-touted Giants to show for it?

In the two Philadelphia games played here the boys have not shown the fighting spirit that they have so long been noted for.

I will not say they have been indifferent, but they have played a listless game and that verges closely on indifference with them for they are famous for the good old "pepper." They have lacked that snap, the fire, the ginger that heretofore have been their middle games.

They must pull themselves out of the dopey rut they are in and quickly too or they will be so far behind that it will develop into a question whether then can or not.

The Passing of Miss Tearful

Woman Is Ceasing to Weep—They Realize That No Man Wants to Be Salted Down in Brine as If He Were a Dried Herring.

By DOROTHY DIX.

ONE of the most interesting and significant phases of the evolution of woman is that she is ceasing to weep. I don't know how science explains it, but it is a self-evident fact that every observing person must have noted that as women developed backbone their tear ducts have dried up.

Time was, and not so long ago, when the very name of the feminine sex was synonymous with crying. It was woman's hereditary destiny to weep, just as it was man's to work, and she did what was expected of her by sitting down and howling whenever she came up against any of the hard propositions of life.

The modern woman has changed all of that. You hardly ever see a woman weep now. There are—God help us—just as many things to wring a woman's heart to-day, and just as many causes for tears as there ever were, but if she weeps, she weeps in private. It is almost as unusual and startling now to see a woman give way publicly to emotion as it is to see a man do so, and I can think of no other one thing that so emphatically marks the progress of my sex.

It measures all the distance between hysteria and reason. It marks the immeasurable difference between the spoilt child crying impotently for forbidden sweets, and the strong adult who takes what life gives with unfaltering bravery and cheerfulness.

It seems likely that women always overvalued the effectiveness of tears, anyway. Tears were supposed to always be an unanswerable argument so far as men were concerned. Unfortunately few women can weep effectively. In poetry a pearly drop that makes a blue eye look like a violet drowned in dew, gathers slowly and rolls gently down the alabaster cheek, and the man who goes down before it. In everyday life the woman who weeps gets red-eyed, her nose swells and she looks purple and apoplectic, and the man gets up, and slams the door behind, and goes downtown until the water spout is over. In these prosaic and commonsense days weeping has played out as a fascination, and tears are a failure. No man wants to be salted down in brine as if he were a dried herring.

They Wept Too Much.

The trouble with women's tears in the past has been that they wept too much, and in the wrong way. A tear as a tear is as effective as any other drop of salt water, yet people make the mistake of reverencing it as if weeping over a thing was going to perform some kind of a miracle.

You might weep over a starving family until you shed an ocean of tears, yet it wouldn't keep them from perishing of hunger. It is only when you begin to sob with your pocketbook that you do any good. It isn't the people who come to weep with us when we are unfortunate and poor and downcast who help us. It is those who have learned to sympathize with their bank book and personal interest and assistance.

Nothing else on earth is as plentiful and cheap and useless as tears, but until they are backed up with good deeds and money nobody has a right to attempt to sustain a reputation for charity on them. Plenty of people do. I have seen women sit up in a fashionable church and sniffle into a point lace handkerchief all through a charity sermon and then drop a plugged nickel into the contribution plate.

Then there's poverty. If all the tears women have shed over being poor had been brought to account it would make a water power that would turn the wheels of the machinery of the world. Tears toll back no vanished dollars. Nobody ever heard of a woman lamenting herself into a fortune, yet they go making themselves perfect Niobes over their spilt milk.

I had a friend once who lost her money and who thereafter did nothing but weep. "What shall I do?" she demanded. "I shall starve." "If you would put in as much time and energy mopping a floor as you do in mopping your eyes, you could make a fortune as a charwoman," I answered, brutally. She never forgave me. People never do when you tell them the truth, but it is a fact nevertheless, that the only tears that can conjure back prosperity are the tears we weep with our hands at some good, honest labor.

Sometimes I amuse myself by speculating on what an improvement it would be if mothers wept less over their wayward children and spanked more.

Shameful Tears.

Sentimentalists have embalmed a mother's tears in song and story, and made them sacred, but I tell you the tears a mother sheds over an illraised son or daughter are shameful. There should be no cause for them, and there would be no cause for them, once in a million times, if she had done her duty. Weep with strict authority, mothers, sob with a wise up-bringing while your children are little, and when they are grown you will not have to shed salt and bitter tears over sons and daughters who have brought disgrace upon you.

It has also appeared to me that women have wasted quite an unnecessary amount of tears on their husbands. For a thousand generations wives have clung to the theory that a man could be wept into all the virtues of beatitude. When a woman had a drunken husband she opened the door for him in the early hours of the morning, and bedewed him with her tears. When she had a brutal one, she wept when he mistreated her, but she forgave him and let him go on doing it. Men don't weep any over women. They make their wives behave themselves, or else they haul them up before the divorce court, and that's why the percentage of good conduct is so largely in favor of the fair sex, and women might well copy their example.

Any way you look at it, it is a hopeful sign women have abandoned doing the baby act. It was always weak and useless. We owe it to the world to give it smiles and sunshine, not showers, and we best do our part in it when we meet the misfortunes of life with that brave attitude that nothing can daunt.

:: Electing a New Pope ::

ONE OF THE WORLD'S MOST MOMENTOUS CEREMONIES

THE greatest secrecy, as well as the utmost solemnity, is observed when the Cardinals of the Church of Rome are called upon to elect one of their number as Pope.

Immediately after the Pope is buried there is a gathering together of the Cardinals, or conclave, as it is called. Incidentally it might be mentioned that the word "Conclave" is derived from the Latin cum clave, and literally means an apartment which can be closed with one key.

Once gathered together, the Cardinals, like the jury in a murder case, are not permitted to leave the Vatican until they have selected from among themselves a successor to the Papal chair. The ceremony of election observed to-day is the same as that inaugurated by Gregory X, six hundred years ago.

Communication Impossible.

The Cardinals assemble in what is known as the Sistine Chapel. All the entrances are walled up with the exception of one great door known as the "Sala Regia." The greatest precautions are observed that no persons except the Cardinals remain in the building during the conclave, and a very careful search is made, not only by officials of the Vatican, but also by the Swiss guards, who maintain a vigil over the only door leading to the building. Even the food is carefully examined to make sure that no communication enters the Vatican.

The actual election ceremony is quite simple. Each Cardinal writes in a disised hand on a ballot-paper the name of his particular selection for the high office, which he then deposits in a chalice or urn placed upon a special altar. Before doing so, however, he turns to his colleagues and solemnly swears he has voted according to his firm belief, without fear or favor, and in the true interests of the Church of Rome only.

First and Second Ballots.

There are three official scrutators, who, when all the Cardinals have voted, and after a short prayer, take all the ballot-papers from the chalice and read aloud to the conclave the names recorded. The number of votes required to immediately the two-thirds majority has been recorded for any candidate a bell is rung by the junior Cardinal Deacon. In response the secretary of the Sacred College enters with the master of ceremonies, after which the Cardinal Dean approaches the Pope that is to be and inquires whether he accepts the papacy. Receiving an answer in the affirmative, he next inquires what name the new pontiff intends to be known by.

It should be mentioned that the name usually selected is that of the Pope by whom the Pope-elect was created a Cardinal, and as soon as this is announced the senior Cardinal Deacon goes outside and thus addresses the waiting crowd: "I announce to you a great joy. We have as Pope the Most Eminent and Most Reverend ——— Cardinal of the Holy Roman Church, who has taken the name of ———."

Meanwhile the new dignitary has been conducted to the rear of the high altar, where he is speedily arrayed in the vestments of the pontificate. He then takes his place in the chair of state in front of the high altar, and is ready to receive the greetings of the Sacred College. Each of the Cardinals kisses him on the foot, the hand and the mouth, and that precious symbol, the ring of the Fisherman, is placed on his finger by the Cardinal Camerlingo.

A Powerful Story of Adventure, Intrigue and Love

Within the Law

By MARVIN DANA, from the Play of BERNARD VEILLER

SYNOPSIS.

Mary Turner, after the death of her father and mother, is forced to make her own way in life. She secures a position at the Emporium, a department store owned by Edward Gilder, and, after five years of bare existence, valuable silks are stolen from the store, traced to Mary's department, and some of the goods found in her locker. Although innocent, the girl is arrested and sentenced to three years in prison.

After her conviction she tells George Damarest, chief of Gilder's legal staff, that she can show the merchant how to stop thievery in his store if garnted a ten-minute interview. The interview is granted, and, handcuffed to a plain-clothes man, she enters Gilder's private office. He enters immediately afterward.

Without mincing of words, Mary tells him that he can stop stealing by paying his employees a living wage.

Now go on with the story

TODAY'S INSTALLMENT.

Nevertheless, indomitable in her purpose, she maintained the struggle. A third time she obtained work, and there, after a little, she told her employer, a candy manufacturer in a small way, the truth as to her having been in prison. The man had a kindly heart, and, in addition, he ran little risk in the matter, so he allowed her to remain. When, presently, the police called his attention to the girl's criminal record, he paid no heed to their advice against retaining her services. But such action on his part offended the greatness of the law's dignity. The police brought pressure to bear on the man. They even called in the assistance of Edward Gilder himself, who obligingly wrote a very severe letter to the girl's employer. In the end, such tactics alarmed the man. For the sake of his own interests, though unwillingly enough, he dismissed Mary from his service.

With All Her Strength.

It was then that despair did come upon the girl. She had tried with all the strength of her to live straight. Yet, despite her innocence, the world would not let her live according to her own conscience. It demanded that she be the criminal it had branded her—if she were to live at all. So, it was despair! For she would not turn to evil, and without such turning she could not live. She still walked the streets falteringly, seeking some place; but her heart was gone from the quest. Now, she was sunken in an apathy that saved her from the worst pangs of misery. She had suffered so much, so poignantly, that at last her emotions had grown sluggish. She did not mind much even when her tiny hoard of money was quite gone, and she roamed the city starving. * * * Came an hour when she thought of the river, and was glad!

Mary remembered, with a wan smile, how, long ago, she had thought with amazed horror of suicide unable to imagine any trouble sufficient to drive one to death as the only relief. Now, however, the thing was simple to her. Since there was nothing else, she must turn to that—to death. Indeed, it was so very simple, so final, and so easy, after the agonies she had endured, that she marveled over her own folly in not having sought such escape before.* * * Even with the first wild fancy, she had unconsciously bent her steps westward toward the North River. Now, she quickened her pace, anxious for the plunge that should set the term to sorrow. In her numbed brain was no flicker of thought as to whatever might come to her afterward. Her sole guide was that compelling passion of desire to be done with this unbearable present. Nothing else mattered—not in the least!

In That Final Second.

So, she came through the long stretch of ill-lighted streets, crossed some railroad tracks to a pier, over which she hurried to the far end, where it projected out to the fiercer currents of the Hudson. There, without giving herself a moment's pause for reflection of hesitation, she leaped out as far as her strength permitted into the coil of waters. But, in that final second, natural terror in the face of death overcame the lethargy of despair—a shriek burst from her lips.

But for that scream of fear, the story of Mary Turner had ended there and then. Only one person was anywhere near to catch the sound. And that single person heard. On the south side of the pier a man had just tied up a motorboat. He stood up in alarm at the cry, and was just in time to gain a glimpse of a white face under the dim moonlight as it swept down with the tide, two rods beyond him. On the instant, he threw off his coat and sprang far out after the drifting body. He came to it in a few furious strokes, and caught it. Then began the savage struggle to save her and himself. The currents tore at him wrathfully, but he fought against them with all the fierceness of his nature. He had strength a-plenty, but he needed all of it, and more, to win out of the river's hungry clutch. What saved the two of them was the violent temper of the man. Always, it had been the demon to set him aflame. To-night, there in the faint light, within the grip of the waters, he was moved to insensate fury against the element that menaced. His rage mounted, and gave him new power in the battle. Maniacal strength grew out of supreme wrath. Under the urge of it, he conquered—at last brought himself and his charge to the shore.

When, finally, the rescuer was able to do something more than gasp chokingly, he gave anxious attention to the woman whom he had brought out from the river. Yet, at the outset, he could not be sure that she still lived. She had shown no sign of life at any time since he had first seized her. That fact had been of incalculable advantage to him in his efforts to reach the shore with her. Now, however, it alarmed him slightly, though it hardly seemed possible that she could have drowned. So far as he could determine, she had not even sunk once beneath the surface. Nevertheless, she displayed no evidence of vitality, though he chafed her hands for a long time. The shore here was very lonely; it would take precious time to summon aid. It seemed, nothwithstanding, that this must be the only course. Then just as the man was about to leave her, the girl sighed, very faintly, with an infinite weariness, and opened her eyes. The man echoed the sigh, but his was of joy, since now he knew that his strife in the girl's behalf had not been in vain.

Afterward, the rescuer experienced no great difficulty in carrying out his work to a satisfactory conclusion. Mary revived to clear consciousness, which was at first inclined toward hysteria, but this phase yielded soon under the sympathetic ministrations of the man. His rather low voice was soothing to her tired soul, and his whole air was at once masterful and gently tender. Moreover, there was an inexpressible balm to her spirit in the very fact that some one was thus ministering to her. It was the first time for many dreadful years that any one had taken thought for her welfare. The effect of it was like a draught of rarest wine to warm her heart. So, she rested obediently as he busied himself with her complete restoration, and, when finally she was able to stand, and to walk with the support of his arm, she went forward slowly at his side without so much even as a question of whither.

And, curiously, the man himself shared the gladness that touched the mood of the girl, for he experienced a sudden pride in his accomplishment of the night. Somewhere in him were the seeds of self-sacrifice, the seeds of a generous devotion to others. But those seeds had been left undeveloped in a life that had been lived since early boyhood outside the pale of respectability. To-night Joe Garson had performed, perhaps, his first action with no thought of self at the back of it. He had risked his life to save that of a stranger. The fact astonished him, while it pleased him hugely. The sensation was at once novel and thrilling.

Glow of Satisfaction.

Since it was so agreeable, he meant to prolong the glow of self-satisfaction by continuing to care for this waif of the river. He must make his rescue complete. It did not occur to him to question his fitness for the work. His introspection did not reach to a point of suspecting that he, an habitual criminal, was necessarily of a sort to be most objectionable as the protector of a young girl. Indeed, had any one suggested the thought to him, he would have met it with a sneer, to the effect that a wretch thus tired of life could hardly object to any one who constituted himself her savior.

In this manner, Joe Garson, the notorious forger, led the dripping girl eastward through the squalid streets, until at last they came to an adequately lighted avenue, and there a taxicab was found. It carried them farther north, and to the east still, until at last it came to a halt before an apartment house that was rather imposing, set in a street of humbler dwellings. Here, Garson paid the fare, and then helped the girl to alight, and on into the hallway. Mary went with him quite unafraid, though now with a growing curiosity. Strange as it all was, she felt that she could trust this man who had plucked her from death, who had worked over her with so much of tender kindliness. So, she waited patiently; only watched with intentness as he pressed the button of the flat number. She observed with interest the thick, wavy gray of his hair, which contradicted pleasantly the youthfulness of his clean-shaven, resolute face, and the spare, yet well-muscled form.

The clicking of the door-latch sounded soon, and the two entered and went slowly up three flights of stairs. On the landing beyond the third flight, the door of a real flat stood open, and in the doorway appeared the figure of a woman.

"Well, Joe, who's the skirt?" this person demanded, as the man and his charge halted before her. Then, abruptly, the round, baby-like face of the woman puckered in amazement. Her voice rose shrill. "My Gawd, if it ain't Mary Turner!"

At that, the newcomer's eyes opened swiftly to their widest, and she stared astounded in her turn.

"Aggie!" she cried.

CHAPTER VII.

IN the time that followed, Mary lived in the flat with Aggie Lynch occupied along with her brother, Jim, a pickpocket much esteemed among his fellow craftsmen. The period wrought transformations of a radical and bewildering sort in both the appearance and the character of the girl. Joe Garson, the forger, had long been acquainted with Aggie and her brother, though he considered them far beneath him in the social scale, since their criminal work was not of that high kind on which he prided himself. But, as he cast about for some woman to whom he might take the hapless girl he had rescued, his thoughts fell on Aggie, and forthwith his determination was made since he knew that she was respectable, viewed according to his own peculiar lights. He was relieved rather than otherwise to learn that there was already an acquaintance between the two women, and the fact that his charge had served time in prison did not influence him one jot against her. On the contrary, it increased in some measure his respect for her as one of his own kind. By the time he had learned as well of her innocence he had grown so interested that even her folly, as he was inclined to deem it, did not cause any wavering in his regard.

Now, at last, Mary Turner let herself adrift. It seemed to her that she had abandoned herself to fate in that hour when she threw herself into the river. Afterward, without any volition on her part, she had been restored to life, and set within an environment new and strange to her, in which soon, to her surprise, she discovered a vivid pleasure. So, she fought no more, but left destiny to work its will unhampered by her futile strivings. For the first time in her life, thanks to the hospitality of Aggie Lynch, secretly reinforced from the funds of Joe Garson, Mary found herself living in luxurious idleness, while her every wish could be gratified by he merest mention of it. She was fed on the daintiest of fare, for Aggie was a sybarite in all sensuous pleasures that were apart from sex. She was clothed with the most delicate richness for the first time as to those more mysterious garments which women love, and she soon had a variety of frocks as charming as her graceful form demanded. In addition, there were as many of books and magazines as she could wish. Her mind, long starved like her body, seized avidly on the nourishment thus afforded. In this interest, Aggie had no share—was perhaps a little envious over Mary's absorption in printed pages. But for her consolation were the matters of food and dress, and of countless junketings. In such directions, Aggie was the leader, an eager, joyous one always. She took a vast pride in her guest, with the unmistakable air of elegance, and she dared to dream of great triumphs to come, though as yet she carefully avoided any suggestion to Mary of wrongdoing.

The Girl Alone in New York

By LILLIAN LAUFFERTY.

DARLING KITTY:

Since I have been over here in the role of needle in the big New York haystack, I have had blue days and rose-colored days and just gray days; but to-day is all a white glare, and I think the lights are pretty strong for my eyes, sis. Not the "Bright Lights," but the glow and gleam of excitement and having adventures follow themselves up as I didn't think they ever could in really truly life.

Your kind attention, sisterkin, and I will tell my little tale from its beginning. Three days ago I lost my job—but don't picture me starving on the streets of New York, for I found a new one this morning! Hard times—and cutting down the staff." That is why I went.

After dealing that blow to my pride and my literary aspirations, fate turned around and began to treat me like the perfect gentleman he can sometimes be!

A New Job.

I answered thirty advertisements yesterday—but I did not seem to answer any one's needs. When I got down to No. 4 on my list to-day I had arrived at the offices of Clark, Clarke & Clark, attorneys-at-law. Just when I began to open the door from the outside some one was turning the handle from the inner realms. . . . . open flies the door . . . . . collision . . . Madge's hat takes a little list to port, and Madge yearns for a port of her own.

A voice speaks: "I BEG your pardon. Have I upset you completely? Well, I declare—I do seem to run into you! And on your way to my office this time. Now what can I do for you?"

I should have fled the spot I suppose. Instead I said, "Your office?" And I wanted to add—"Who are YOU?"

"Why yes," I am Clarke—the one with the 'E.' Now what can I do for you?"

"Give me a position; I have lost mine." Probably I should not have said it—but I did not want to come home defeated at the end of four weeks! I wanted work and a chance to "show" New York—well, I guess I have both.

I am to get twenty-five dollars a week in return for my services as "Private Secretary" and Stenographer to the firm, which consists of Clarke Senior, forty-five or fifty, as New York ages go—so he may be sixty or a grandfather at that)! Mr. James T. Clarke, of whom "more anon," and Clarke Junior, who looks twenty-two or three, and thinks life is to be devoted to getting a cane with just the crook to fit his arm to a nicety. He is called Mr. Tommy, and looks it!

And now for the "Anon" and more of Mr. Clarke. He is the man who jumped into me so violently that day as I was coming out of Grand Central, and then invited me to tea to give me a chance to recover my equilibrium—thereby quite upsetting it. I will never do for the wife of a President! For Mr. Clarke has a perfectly unforgettable voice, and all I could do about remembering it was feel that it belonged to someone I had in all probability met and forgotten—and it was not until he was my employer, duly signed and sealed, that I realized the full force of that first impact.

Asked to Tea.

But he was considerate and recommended me to the attention of his partners in the most impersonal, hardly-knew-you-were-a-girl sort of a way. And yet the girl alone has as her "Boss" a man who thought he might venture to ask a little stranger—that stranger being me—to tea!

Now, Little Miss Safe-at-Home, think it over—I need work if I am to be a self-supporting person in New York, the while I wait for my literary ability to develop so it can be seen by people who are more interested in subscription pulling than in the mere feeling of personal pride in "Darling Madgie"—and I like Mr. James T. Clarke. Was I silly to go on the payroll of Clarke, Clarke and Clark?

And Kitty, I want to know that man—so that is a perfectly good reason why I shouldn't—since I am an employee in his office. Mr. Clarke is surely a gentleman—even if he is a bit overly friendly. I shall have to prove that I am a lady, I suppose, by being overly unfriendly.

Or, won't I? Hurry up and give your sage opinion to

Your loving

MADGE.

: Good Discipline ::

"IF you think any member of your family needs a spiritual stimulant during the present season," said the young girl with the camera slung over her shoulder, "buy him a camera and a tank and a scale and a few dozen different chemicals, and a book of directions and leave him to his fate. The seeds of humility, patience and long suffering will bear fruit a thousand fold.

"Don't laugh. It's true! If you know anything about the capital sins you know that pride is at the head of the list. To cure it, let some one take a good swift snapshot of you when you're not looking. It can reveal and correct more beauty defects than 52 visits to the shop where they make your beautiful while you wait. When that same snapshot is three or four years old and you gaze upon the hat that was none too becoming in its best days, you begin to realize that the lily of the field had some advantages over Solomon.

"As for patience, amateur photography is more instructive than Bruce's spider and more effective than Job's soliloquies. When you have measured out 16 ounces of hypo in a half-ounce scale—which means that you have to balance it 32 times, to the rhythmic chant of 'Twenty grains one scruple, three scruples one dram, eight drams one ounce'—and then forget whether the last measure was the twenty-first or twenty-second half ounce, and you have to spill it all out and begin all over again—if you can do it with cheerful heart your spiritual condition is encouraging.

Vacation Time.

"When you have come home from a vacation with several rolls of films and begin developing the best and most cherished roll, and it comes out of the tank distinct and clear and you drop it into a bowl of innocent looking hot water which should have been cold—a bowl which a member of your family had placed carelessly at your side—and you see your jolly groups of bathers and canoers run into a shapeless mass of gelatin and you hold in your hand a blank film roll, then if you can turn to the offender and say with serenity: 'It's all right, I really don't mind——,' then you have merited a triple halo.

"Do you wish to understand your neighbor? Try a group picture. In the first place, when it comes to posing a group, have you ever observed the serene indifference with which each member regards the position and advantages of every other member? The most humble and retiring individual quietly and persistently slides into an advantageous position, regardless of the same desire on the part of everyone else.

"And when that same group has been finished and you talk about light and shade, tone and contrast—you were not in it, of course—and you try to get anyone else to observe these points and you say, 'Don't you think the shadows are good?' your friend will invariably reply, 'I didn't know I had a double chin!' or 'I certainly can't wear a soft collar!'

"Then you suddenly realize that your modest, self-effacing friend has a normal ego.

"For social popularity the snapshot is an open sesame. If with your 'bread and butter' letter you can inclose a few snapshots of the infant idol of the family, of your host's new chicken coop, or your hostess' new porch set, the invitation to come again will be sincere and urgent.

"When it comes to generosity this gentle art of snapshotting has no equal. Suppose in a rash moment you have promised each of eight friends a full set of twelve prints. After a preliminary struggle with drams and scruples you start in to print. Your family admonishes, urges and finally commands you to be sensible and go to bed, but you feel that you must persist in your altruistic endeavors. It is midnight before you set your 96 prints to wash in a bowl of running water in the kitchen sink.

"When you return at the end of an hour you find that several of the prints, with the perversity of inanimate things, have slipped over the drain and a miniature Niagara is splashing down upon the floor, on which the water is already three inches deep. You try a mop, which is no more effective than a handkerchief in the Gulf of Mexico.

"The heat has been off two hours and it's 10 degrees below zero, and the kitchen has a west exposure, but you open the door and sweep strenuously and exhaustively. And you hear the splash of the water on the porch, on the landing below, then on the walk in the yard, and you think of the profile of drainage of the great lakes. And you tread lightly and softly, partly because you are reluctant to dislodge the water-soaked ceiling in the flat below and partly because you are afraid of waking your family and bringing down on your unoffending head a chorus of 'I told you so's.'

"After three hours of hard labor you close the door just before the milkman tears up the back stairs. And then, when you come to the breakfast table the next morning, heavy lidded and sore of spirit, but discreetly silent, another of your household comes in and says in a convincing and appealing tone: 'I'm dead tired! I didn't sleep a wink last night!'

"Then, if you can restrain your words of contradiction and offer sympathy in soft and gentle tones, with an invisible smile for the audible slumbers to the rhythm of which you swished a broom half the night—well, amateur photography has done more for you than Gideon Bibles and long weeks of fasting and sacrifice!"

WOMAN SICK FOURTEEN YEARS

Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Elkhart, Ind.:—"I suffered for fourteen years from organic inflammation, female weakness, pain and irregularities. The pains in my sides were increased by walking or standing on my feet and I had such awful bearing down feelings, was depressed in spirits and became thin and pale with dull, heavy eyes. I had six doctors from whom I received only temporary relief. I decided to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a fair trial and also the Sanative Wash. I have now used the remedies for four months and cannot express my thanks for what they have done for me.

"If these lines will be of any benefit you have my permission to publish them."—Mrs. Sadie Williams, 455 James Street, Elkhart, Indiana.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no narcotic or harmful drugs, and to-day holds the record of being the most successful remedy for female ills we know of, and thousands of voluntary testimonials on file in the Pinkham laboratory at Lynn, Mass., seem to prove this fact.

If you have the slightest doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential,) Lynn, Mass., for advice. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.

:: Putting Yourself in Your Wife's Place ::

I HEARD a man talking about his wife the other day—he began with his wife—and he ended with all the women in the world.

"What is the matter with them?" he said bitterly. "Are they all going crazy, or what? If am a good husband, if I do have to say it myself to get any one to believe it; I work like a bond slave for my wife and family; I devote most of my waking hours and some of my sleeping ones to thinking of new ways to make more money and more money and more money for her and the little fellows.

"My wife has a new hat whenever she wants one, and I never complain about the bill—even if it does make me feel blue to see it sometimes—a hat and a feather, $35. Why, it's enough to take a man's breath. And she goes away in the summer and takes the children and has a fine time for three months, and she has a good home, and—yet is she happy?

"She is not.

"She is miserable, perfectly miserable, and she makes me miserable, too. 'Where have I been?' 'Who gave me that play bill?' 'Where did I hear that song I'm whistling?' 'Who was the woman who stared at me so in the theater the other night?' 'Why don't I love her any more?'

"And she's not the only one. My brother's wife is the same—worse, if anything. My brother can't spend an evening out to save his life without his wife wanting to know exactly where he went and whom he saw, and all about it—and she doesn't believe him when he tells her the truth."

Nice little preachment, wasn't it? And the man meant it, too—every word of it. You could see that by the look of irritated, puzzled misery in his tired face.

What is the matter with us, anyhow, girls?

I wonder if any one knows?

For one thing, it's the mystery of the thing that puzzles us.

Did you ever think of that, Mr Man?

What if the person you loved best in the world, the person you left every one you ever cared for just to be with, went away every day to a mysterious place he called downtown and stayed all day, and came home speaking with the speech of aliens, looking ith the look of strangers, always thinking, thinking about something that you didn't know a thing about?

Wouldn't you wonder sometimes what it all was that made him so absent-minded? Wouldn't you wish he'd tell you something about it once in a while, just enough so you could visualize his day to some extent and have some sort of vague idea what it is that he does—down there in the barred city where you must never go?

It Wouldn't Bore Her.

You know every step your wife takes all day long—she wants to tell you all about it—and when you don't listen she thinks you are tired of her.

It wouldn't bore her to hear all about what you do, but you never help her out a bit. You see, she's in love with you; you're fond of her, but you are not in love with her. That isn't the way you acted when you were in love. Don't tell me! She may not know much, but no woman on earth is there who can't tell when a man really loves her and when he stops loving her, too—so you might as well stop going over that fiction once and for all.

She's in love and you aren't—that's all. Help you any to know that?

Well, maybe not, but it may help your judgment of her and your sympathy, too. Just think back a year or so and remember how you used to feel about her. That will help you to realize that she is having rather a bad time of it herself just now, too.

Morbid, unbalanced, irritating—of course it is—all of these things, but so is the life the woman who loves leads morbid, unbalanced and irritating from start to finish.

You'd go crazy in six months if you had to live it, shut in all day with a baby; no one to speak to but the grocer's boy and the postman; no big ambitions, no great hopes; just little things, little, little, from morning to night.

Don't scold your wife, don't be cross with her, get her mind off the little, silly suspicions and little stupid curiosities by telling her a few things she'd dearly love to know. Tell them to her without her asking, and see how surprised and delighted she'll be.

She'll take just as much interest in you and your affairs as Jones, and yet you talk and talk to Jones.

Think it over, Friend Husband. Put yourself in the place of the poor little puzzled thing who's been tied into a corset every morning of her life and had her poor little tootsies pinched, and her poor head made to ache by some fool kind of hair dressing ever since she can remember, just to get ready for you and for love, and then she finds out that love is just a part of life after all and not all of it, as she has been carefully taught to think, and she's all at sea. Put yourself in her odd, confused, mixed up place and see if you can't see what's the matter with her.

Maybe you can, and if you do you've won the battle before it is fought.

Try it and let's hear from you—we'd like to know.

- In a Safe - Place

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

"I CALLED on a girl a number of times," a young man writes, "and I found her very agreeable, and I admit I made love to her. I had no intention of being serious, and now find that she is desperately in love with me. As I do not want to marry her, what can I do?"

But that is the very thing you must do. A man so fascinating as yourself, who calls on a girl a few times, and lo, the mischief is done, must be safely corraled within the bonds of matrimony that this needless slaughter of female hearts may cease.

Safely married to a woman who realizes what a dangerous person you are to be at large among weak, fluttering female hearts, you will never again have opportunity for making few passes at a girl with a wave of your hand, and reduce her to a state of paralytic adoration in doing it. So long as your wife lives, no girl will again be desperately in love with you if she knows it.

So long as you remain single this trail of women's hearts strewn crushed and bleeding in the path you have trod will continue to grow. For the sake of the women helpless before your charms; for the sake of a nation which can not prosper with all its womankind dying of love, you must marry, and marry at once.

Many Sacrifices.

I admit that you will make many sacrifices. It will be a hardship to a man of your temperament to confine all your lovemaking to one woman, and many, many times you will be aghast at the sacrifice of limiting all your fascinations to the four walls of your own home, but it must be done and I hope you are sensible to the necessity. It is your misfortune to be fascinating, but no one will hold you to blame if you hold those powers within some restraint.

When holding to car strap; when engaged in your daily occupation, if it be that of interpreting the law or selling muslins; keep your mind on the task in hand and don't raise your eyes to the face of any woman. Remember always your fatal power of rendering the women desperately in love with you, and have mercy on my sex. If you are engaged in an occupation that throws you in contact with the silly creatures, quit it, and go to digging trenches where your living will depend on keeping those fascinating eyes on the ground.

Some Simple Rules.

Never leave the house in the evening or on a Sunday without your wife by your side, and when you feel that you can no longer exist without some display of your fascinating power, try them on her. Make love to her, though you may not mean it; make eyes at her, squeeze her hand, and endeavor by every art of which you are master to cause her to love you desperately.

Having renewed the flame of her love to such bounds, she will double her vigilance over you, and reduce to a minimum the dangerous influence you may exert over other women.

Perhaps you may argue that you intend to marry, but would rather wait till you have made love to a girl seriously. That, most irresistible of your sex, is something you will never do. To be serious in love is something beyond you. Marry the girl who thought you were serious, and in her hands entrust your future.

Do You Know That—

Women who obstruct the view of people by wearing large hats are to be prohibited by law from buying a new hat for three years in the State of Texas, if a bill just introduced in the Legislature there is passed. Senator H. W. Brelsford found his view obstructed in church, and brought forward the bill at once. It seeks to make it unlawful for any woman to wear in church or any public gathering any hat or headdress having a crown of any ornament exceeding two inches in height, or a brim more than four inches wide. At the end of three years the offender will be permitted to buy only a certain uniform type of hat costing less than $2.

Most races have ailments peculiarly their own, and one of the very latest of workmen's complaints to be discovered is the "conductor's thumb." This affliction is generated by the continual use of the steel punch which is employed to mark the passenger's ticket. The pain, very slight at first, gradually increases and spreads to the palm of the hand, bringing in its train a species of cramp of the hand, and compelling those affected to handle their punches very gingerly.

THIS is one of the handsomest models produced from the Paris shops this season.

It's foundation is "mole" charmeuse. The top of the bodice is a fichu of guipure veiled by an "amethyst" silk muslin, which falls back in two long points.

The long tunic is of gray silk muslin, richly embroidered in gold and silver and edged all around with a row of silver beads.

The skirt, which is of mole charmeuse, is but slightly draped and is finished by a square train.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"NOT that alone," she answered, with a shudder. "I have said that I should under ordinary circumstances have thought he was merely training for the autumn sports—for, you see, he was in a running costume of white cotton stuff and his legs were bare from the knees down—but as he shot past me in the moonlight I caught sight of something like a huge splash of blood on his clothes, and coupling that with the rest I nearly went out of my senses. It wasn't until long afterward I recollected that the badge of the County Club is the Winged Foot of Mercury wrought in brilliant scarlet embroidery. To me, just then, that thing of red was blood—my uncle's blood—and I ran and ran and ran until I got back here to the house and flew up the covered passage and burst into the Round House. He was sitting there still—just as he had been sitting before. But he didn't call out to me this time; he didn't reprove me for disturbing him; didn't make one single movement, utter one single sound. And when I flew to him I knew why. He was dead—stone dead! The face and throat of him were torn and rent as if some furious animal had mauled him, and there were curious yellow stains upon his clothes. That's all Mr. Headland, that's all. I don't know what I did nor where I went from the moment I rushed shrieking from that room until I came to my senses and found myself in this one with dear, kind Mrs. Armroyd here, bending over me and doing all in her power to soothe and to comfort me."

"It Is Better."

"There, there, cherie, you shall not more distress yourself. It is of a hardness too great for the poor mind to bear," put in Mrs. Armroyd herself at this, bending over the sofa as she spoke and softly smoothing the girl's hair. "It is better she should be at peace for a little, is it not, monsieur?"

"Very much better, madame," replied Cleek, noting how softly her hand fell and how gracefully it moved over the soft hair and across the white forehead. "No doubt the major part of what still remains to be told, you in the goodness of your heart will supply——"

"Of a certainty, monsieur, of a certainty."

"——but, for the present," continued Cleek finishing the interrupted sentence, "there still remain one or two questions which must be asked, and which only Miss Renfrew herself can answer. As those are of a private and purely personal nature, madame, would it be asking too much——?" He gave his shoulders an eloquent Frenchified shrug, looked up at her after the manner of her own countrymen and let the rest of the sentence go by default.

"Of a certainty, monsieur," she said, with charming grace, "Cela m'est egal." And walked away with a step remarkably light and remarkably graceful for one of such weight and generous dimensions.

A Private Talk.

"Miss Renfrew," said Cleek, sinking his voice and looking her straight in the eyes, as soon as Mrs. Armroyd had left them, "Miss Renfrew, tell me something, please. Have you any suspicion regarding the identity or the purpose of the person who murdered your uncle?"

"Not in the slightest, Mr. Headland. Of course, in the beginning my thoughts flew at once to Sir Ralph Droger, but I now see how absurd it is to think that such as he—"

"I am not even hinting at Sir Ralph Droger," interposed Cleek. "Two other people in the world have a 'motive' quite as strong as any that might be assigned to him. You, of course, feel every confidence in the honor and integrity of Mr. Charles Drummond?"

Kept in His Desk.

"Mr. Headland!"

"Gently, gently, please! I merely wished to know if in your heart you had any secret doubt, and your flaring up like that has answered me. You see, one has to remember that the late Mr. Nosworth is said to have made a will in your favor. The statement is correct, is it not?"

"To the best of my belief—yes."

"Filed it with his solicitors has he?"

"That I can't say. I think not, however. He was always sufficient unto himself and had a rooted objection to trusting anything of value to the care of any man living. Even his most important documents—plans and formula of his various inventions; even the very lease of this property—have always been kept in the desk in the laboratory."

"Hum-m-m!" said Cleek—and pinched his chin hard. Then, after a moment, "One last question," he went on, suddenly. "What do you know, Miss Renfrew, of the recent movements of Mr. Harry Nosworth, the son who was kicked out?"

"Nothing, nothing—absolutely nothing!" she answered, with a look of something akin to horror. "I know what you are thinking of, but although he is as bad as man can be it is abominable to suppose that he would lift his hand against his own father."

To Be Continued To-morrow.

An Educated Eel

"YOU take it from me, sir," said the old showman, "that the higher education of animals is a mistake.

"I have trained all sorts of beasts from fleas to elephants. I've taught horses to dance on their hind legs, dogs to act music-hall sketches, elephants to play the barrel-organ and do all sorts of tricks; but not one of them showed such intelligence as my educated eel.

"I picked him out of the water one day, and was attracted by his cute brown orbs. He looked at me in a sort of friendly, knowin' way, as if to say: 'Let's be friends, guv'nor—real pals.'

"So I picked him up and put him in my pocket. Then a bright idea struck me. I would train him with the other animals and let him take part in my show.

Was a Winner.

"Talk of the intelligence of animals. That eel simply beat the bunch. He guessed what I wanted him to do before I'd thought it out myself. He had the true spirit of the artist, too, he 'ad. He performed because he loved to act.

"The first tricks I taught him he took to as mere child's play. In a few days he could put his tail into his mouth and roll round the room, pretending to be a hoop. He would smile when I said 'Smile' in the cutest way, and, what is more, he would often smile on his own without being told, as if tickled at the humors of this funny world.

"Then I taught him to wiggle himself into the shape of letters. Soon he could twist himself into every letter in the alphabet and spell words as easy as you please. This beats science,' thought I, when one day he actually spelt my name; so I formed the idea of inviting some of the greatest scientists in the country to witness the feats of my marvellous eel.

"As the day of the private view drew near I put him regularly through his tricks, and that marvellous animal seemed to guess exactly what was in store for him. He got nervous, excited, and vain, too. If he had been a peacock I can just imagine him spreading his tail. But he merely blinked his eyes in the cutest, knowin'est way.

He Broke Down.

"Then all of a sudden the excitement began to tell upon him, and he showed signs of a nervous breakdown. He took trembling fits, which nigh scared me to death. I dosed him with spirit, which seemed to do him good for a time, but he got weaker an' weaker until at last one morning I found him stretched out stiff and stark upon the floor.

"If ever a human being died of brain fever, that poor beast did. I never trained another eel again. He died about this time last year, and I would give anything to have him by me now, with his cute little smile and his 'We're pals-guv'nor' look."

Little Bobbie's Pa

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

PA brought a book hoam with him last nite & he was showing it to me. It was called How a Husband & Wife shud act to Avoid Quarls. It was a big book, about a foot thick.

This book Bobbie, sed Pa, is a book that was wrote by a very wise guy. He was married three times & his first two wifes left him beefbar he reelized that he was hard to git along with, so wen he married the third time he made up his mind to study the fair sex & find out what wud humor them. This book is the result of yeers of pashunt watching & experiments on his part, Pa sed. I think that it ought to keep yure Ma & me from ever having a other unkind word. Here is sum of the rules, Bobbie, so wen you grow up & git a wife of yure own you will be abel to greet her right at all times & salv quarls.

Good Rules.

Rule 1—The husband shud never becum angry at the saim time that the wife is angry. One angry person in a fambly is enuff at a time.

Rule 2—The wife shud nevver stay angry after she has gone to sleep. She might have a nitemare.

Rule 3—When a husband is contradickted by a wife he shud smile sweetly & say, wen his wife gives him a chanst, "I dare say you are right." That is the greatest sentence that was ever invented for making matrimony possibel.

Now, Bobbie, sed Pa, there is a good point right thare. Let us go in the other room & I will ask you to notis how yure Ma acts wen I answer her that way. "I dare say you are right."

So we went in the living room & Ma was thare. She was kind out of sorta abôût sumthing, I guess, beekaus she looked at Pa & me kind of cross wen we caim in. Well, I suppose you want yure supper, Sed Ma. Yes, deerest, sed Pa. It is a wonder that you & our son dident fool around in the library until it was time for brekfust, sed Ma. The men nowadays, sed Ma, act for all the wurld as if wimmen was made to wait on them & nevver give anything else a thought.

Of course, I am rite, sed Ma. Now thare is Missus Norris. She jest left a few minutes before you got hoam. She toald me that her husband reefused to buy her another frock until next month and then went to his club and lost four dollars bowling ten pins. Think of it! sed Ma, unable to buy his little wife another frock when she only had three, and then going and losing four dollars bowling. That is the man of it for you.

How much was the frock? sed Pa.

Very Cheap.

Only sixty dollars, Ma sed. Thay was eighty dollars last, but you know wimmen's clothes has went down a whole lot in price this season.

Maybe he cud afford to spend four dollars bowling & cuddent spend sixty dollars for a other frock, sed Pa.

Thare you go, sed Ma, deefending him. Of course, man can do no wrong. The men want to be the lords of creashum.

I dare say you are rite, sed Pa. How about dinner?

It is on the table waiting for you, sed Ma. Oh, dear, it is the saim old story, Ma sed. Git the dinner & then put away the dishes. A man's work is from sun to sun, a woman's work is nevver done.

Pa sed "I dare say you are rite" wen he had a peece of staik in his mouth & he nearly choaked.

Thar you go laffing at me, sed Ma, you are a brute.

Poor Pa, I guess he will have to read sum moar rules in his new book.

:: Making Sure ::

THEY were on parade when the Irish drill-sergeant stopped dead in front of the newest recruit and eyed him steadily from top to toe before he burst out:

"Arrah! an' here's a nice state of affairs. How dare ye come here and stand before a dacent man loike meself covered in dust from head to foot? Answer me when I spake to ye!"

With knocking knees the now thoroughly wretched recruit endeavored to squeeze in a few well-chosen words of explanation, but his attempts were rudely overborne by a further torrent of words from the sergeant, who fairly bellowed:

"Ye would answer me, would ye? Spake at your peril! Now, tell me, ye spalpeen, what have ye been doin' to yer nice new uniform?"

Again the bewiledered recruit opened a capacious mouth as a preliminary to speech, but the violent voice of his superior broke in once again:

"Take care!" he shouted. "Oi can hear ye. If ye answer me when I spakes to ye, I'll have ye arrested for insolence. An' if ye don't answer when I spakes to ye, I'll send ye to the guard room for disobedience. So moind, I'll have ye both ways."

Distinctly Suspicious.

It was when on maneuvers, and a soldier was being tried for the shooting of a chicken on prohibited ground.

"Look here, my man," said the commanding officer to the farmer who brought the accusation, "are you quite certain this is the man who shot your bird? Will you swear to him?"

"No, I won't do that," replied the canny yokel, "but I will say he's the man I suspect o' doing it."

"That's not enough to convict a man!" retorted the C. O., considerably nettled. "What raised your suspicions?"

"Well, sir," replied the sturdy farmer, as he slowly mopped his forehead with his bandanna, "it was this way: I see 'im on my property with a gun; then I heered the gun go off, then I see 'im puttting the chicken into his knapsack; and it didn't seem nohow to think the bird committed suicide."

Some Use After All.

Diminutive Onlooker (after golfer makes his sixth fruitless stroke)—If yer digs up any wriggly worms can I 'ave 'em, guv'nor, 'cos I'm goin' a-fishin'?

"Woman's Work Is Never Done"

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

"MAN'S work lasts from sun to sun,
But woman's work is never done."

And one reason why it is never done is that she is not allowed to do it.

Men can understand that other men have necessary work to perform; it is, however, hard for women of leisure to understand how busy a busy woman may be. And until they do understand this it will not be easy for any woman to labor as steadily and satisfactorily as does a man.

A man who is an author said to me, "From the time that I go into my study after breakfast in the morning, until I am ready to come out at luncheon, I am not disturbed."

I gasped with envy and also with a little incredulity, for I know that his study is in his apartment and that he has a wife and children.

"I mean it," he said. "If I would do good work, I must be left alone."

"But your telephone?" I queried. That is right on your desk."

Should Be Unmolested.

He smiled in a superior kind of way. "Ah, yes, but that is only a switch from the instrument in the hall, and my wife or the maid answers the main phone. If I am asked for the reply is that I am 'engaged and cannot be disturbed.'"

I do insist that when the man has gone to business, and the children to school and college, when the orders have been given to the maids, the butcher, grocer, etc., that even a woman might have three or four hours each day in which she need not be disturbed—or, at least, that she might have her mornings unmolested.

"But she should explain to her friends," says someone. "They would understand and not call on her or telephone to her in the morning."

Who is it then who interrupts the woman and ignores the fact that she is "engaged?"

First of all, it is next to impossible to make a maid understand that when a woman would write a story, paint a picture or give a music lesson she has in view any object except that of amusing herself for a little while when she has nothing else on hand. Therefore, in spite of interdicts, she often interrupts any one of these occupations to deliver some message that could wait, without injury, for a half day. But if she is so well trained that she does not do this, she seldom has strength of mind to say to those who would reach her mistress by telephone or in person that the busy woman cannot be disturbed.

What Is Another Way?

I remember that when I flattered myself that I had at last drilled one maid into doing this, I discovered that her answer for weeks had been the same, namely, that I was gone away and that nobody knew when I would come back. When I learned of this and protested to her, explaining that her statement was an untruth, she said—with a knowledge of human nature at which I could not sufficiently wonder—"Indade, ma'am, if I said you was engaged and couldn't see 'em, they'd not be satisfied. But if I say you're away, sure what is there for them to do but lave you alone?"

No, it is not one's own friends who will not accept the "engaged" statement, for they love one enough to let her alone during her golden morning hours. But there are a plenty of other people who do not love one. Among them are the casual acquaintance, who wants to ask one to subscribe to a certain philantropic movement; the woman who telephones to ask about a maid who was once in one's employ and who queriat "must engage immediately if at all," and who talks for at least ten minutes about her past experiences with "help;" the book agent—for whom one cannot help being sorry—the former schoolmate who has not seen one for years, but who, in passing through the city, has "looked one up," and insists to the hesitating maid that she knows her mistress will be displeased if this "friend of her girlhood" is turned from the door; these are among the hundred-and-one people who would be wounded by that "engaged." Yet we are told that it is not honest to send word that one is "not at home."

Is there not some way in which the members of society who do not have to be let alone to accomplish their work can be made to understand that even a woman may need time and quiet in which to do the task laid to her hand?

And yet, what woman calling on an acquaintance, does not feel rebuffed by the message that "Mrs. Blank is engaged, and begs to be excused?"

Underground Trespassers : Quaint Callers That Are Found In the Depths of Coal Mines

AFTER a colliery explosion at Llanbradach, Wales, one of the rescue parties made a surprising discovery. Perched on a tub in the mine was a robin! Now, most colliers regard the presence of birds, particularly those with white plumage, about pits as a "token," and the "fire" which had occurred was therefore attributed to the intrusion of the perky little stranger!

Rats are not uncommon about a pithead, and some of them reach the depths beneath, occasionally with fatal haste.

One, during the process of falling down a shaft, acquired such momentum by the time it reached the bottom that when it struck a collier there was a loud report as of an explosion, and the man was knocked to the ground with great force.

In warm mines, too, mice are numerous. A few reach a new pit in the trusses of hay and bags of corn that are taken down it for the ponies, and these, notwithstanding the strangeness of their environment, multiply so rapidly that cats have to be installed in the stables.

It might be supposed that "mousers," at any rate, would not take at all kindly to the subterranean world; but they soon become used to their surroundings.

In one mine a fine tabby used to knock off with the men on Saturday, but, unlike them, she did not start again on Monday morning. She was always missing till Wednesday or Thursday, when she returned from the old and disused portions of the mine.

Bad For Mice.

A strike, however, plays far greater havoc with the mouse population of a pit than any number of cats, because the food of the ponies and of the men and boys is no longer available for the unfortunate little creatures.

When, by way of example, the Durham colliers joined in the general strike last year many of the pits in that county were overrun with mice; and for some time after work was resumed not one was seen.

Dogs also are among the animal trespassers in mines. By some means a terrier entered a disused pit in Swaledale, and for eight days it roamed about the workings, apparently without anything to eat.

More remarkable was a dog's intrusion into a South Wales pit which has the reputation of being haunted.

The animal in question was seen prowling about the workings, and, as it seemed to vanish when an attempt was made to catch it, a number of colliers at once "downed tools" and went home.

Some of them then consulted a local wise woman, telling her of the "vision" they had seen earlier in the day, whereupon she predicted a disaster. As a result more than 200 men refused to go down the following morning, and, though the manager did his utmost to induce them to resume work, they obstinately determined to remain idle.

And, what is more, it was not until three days later that all the men were at work again.

There were two curious sequels to this incident. One, which took place about a week afterward, was the prosecution and conviction of the fortune teller for causing the miners to absent themselves from work.

A Gruesome Discovery.

The other sequel happened much more recently, and was the discovery of the skeleton of a dog—doubtless that which had been seen by some of the miners—in the workings.

The most singular trespassers in coal mines, perhaps, are workers from neighboring pits. A man or boy loses his way and, when his lamp goes out, wanders in pitchy darkness through the disused workings, ever listening for the sound of a pick, till he either sinks exhausted or gets in touch with humanity again.

A bloodhound was once taken down a pit to find a man who had disappeared, and in several cases lost miners have ultimately worked back to their starting point. Some years ago, for instance, a boy was lost in a Scotch colliery from Monday morning to Wednesday morning, notwithstanding he was searched for systematically the whole time, and in the end, when almost exhausted, he came upon his father and uncle at the place where he had left them.

Sometimes, however, miners become trespassers—only in a technical sense—through "striking" a road communicating with another pit and following it up.

Inconsiderate Men

FIRST the telephone rang. Then the buzzer buzzed. Then a voice from the inner office called sharply for the little stenographer.

"You can all wait until I'm good and ready," announced the little stenographer, decidedly, to the world in general.

After this declaration of independence she hastily answered the phone, then grabbed book and pencil and hurried into the inner office, pausing an instant on the way to let the owner of the impatient voice know that she was engaged.

"I tell you," she remarked to the bookkeeper when she returned, "I get so exasperated sometimes that I almost explode! These men make me awfully tired! Here I've been working all the years that they've been having a good time getting educated. Then they come into the office, and, after selecting the lightest window and the most comfortable chair, they think they're busy!

"Here I am—with my desk piled high with real work! And what do you suppose that young Mr. Babcock wanted? He calmly asked me to take a few letters—personal thank you letters—to friends of his who entertained him on his trip! And in each one he excused himself for using a stenographer on the ground that he was so pressed for time! Pressed for time! Why, he doesn't know how to fill in the hours.

He Was Lazy.

"Do you know what Mr. Brown was so urgent about? He's been calling out here for ten minutes, while I was engaged, and I thought it couldn't be anything less than drawing up a contract! But there he sat, looking over his last month's personal account, and he was too lazy to think for himself! He wanted me to stand there beside him and go through the things with him—because, as he said, two heads are better than one! What he might have said, if he'd been strictly truthful, is that my head is better than his!

"This morning Mr. Gray came strolling in an hour after things had begun, and he sat down and read a newspaper and smoked a cigar before he went through his mail. Then he called me in to take his letters, and, though I purposely let him know how much work I had piled up, he gave me half a dozen phone numbers to call for him! And he sat there looking out of the window while I got his numbers on the telephone! Oh, it makes me so angry I'd like to express myself from a public platform on the wrongs of busy stenographers!"

The bookkeeper listened sympathetically. "I must own," he said, "that they're an inconsiderate bunch!"

"Inconsiderate!" cried the little stenographer. "They do it on purpose. They've got it into their thick heads that they're business men, and they can't be bothered with detail and the little things. They're such big men! Their time is awfully valuable and mustn't be wasted!

"Do you know what I'm going to do some time? I'm going to accept a proposal of marriage. That'll make me free to do as I please. Then I'm coming down to the office the same as usual. When the buzzer buzzes I'll go in, and I'll take the business letters, but when a personal letter comes I'll simply say, 'I'm busy to-day.' Then, when they ask me to get some phone numbers, I'll say, 'I see you aren't at all busy; would you mind getting those numbers yourself? I've a great deal of work to do!' Then I'll walk out to my desk!

"When Mr. Brown calls me away in the midst of an important letter to stand at his side while he leans back in his swivel chair, so that I may help him add up figures and straighten out accounts, I'll say, 'Mr. Brown, I'm very busy to-day, and if you've nothing of importance to say you'll have to excuse me!'

"Oh, but won't they be surprised? The only trouble is that I've been a slave for so long that I'm afraid I won't have the courage to break up traditions and precedents."

The Other Side.

"Then," said the bookkeeper, musingly, "you'll put on your hat and go home, and the man who proposed to you, so you could be free from this daily grind, will say: 'I want dinner early to-night,' and you'll hurry to get it. Between times you'll be mending and darning and dusting, to make him comfortable; and he'll call you, and you'll come running to hear what he's got to say. And you'll go on training him to expect that sort of service, so when he goes to his office he'll be just like the rest of the men!"

The little stenographer listened fascinated. "Why, that's so!" she exclaimed. She paused and thought it over. "But I guess I'll try it anyway," she announced, "because I'll dare to say, 'I won't for he can't fire me!'"

The Bitter Bit.

The workhouse inmates were just about to sit down, when two men came along one of the corridors carrying a steaming caldron between them.

"Aha!" cried the official, who had been lying in wait for them. "Put that kettle down and fetch me a spoon!"

One of the men brought a spoon and at the same time tried to say something, but was peremptorily told to hold his tongue.

"D'yer call that soup?" at length spluttered the official, as he swallowed a heaped-up spoonful of the steaming mess. "It's more like dirty water."

"But that's just wot it is, sir," answered the second man, timidly. "We have been scrubbin' down the tables!"

COTTON GOES UP AS SHORTS COVER

Cooler Weather and Firm Cables Cause Scare Among Shorts. Offerings Are Light.

NEW YORK, May 6.—Although the cotton market received good support at the opening to-day, first prices showed irrirregularity, being 2 points up to 4 points off from last night's close. Cables were unsatisfactory, but short sellers were cautious, fearing developments in the old crop months. Weather conditions were favorable and sentiment was against the market, but shorts became general buyers shortly after the call, when indications pointed to cooler weather. At the end of half an hour the list was back to last night's level and the tone was satisfactory.

It is estimated that shorts covered fully 60,000 bales yesterday, attributed mainly to Wall Street and the Waldorf clique.

The principal points of to-day's weather map are reliable indications for more general rains in the eastern half of the belt during the next thirty-six hours; slightly cooler, but no cold weather.

Weather reports and acreage estimates, also the technical conditions, are forming speculative option. Weather conditions have been excellent as a whole, but acreage estimates are rather smaller than generally expected. It seems plain that short covering has furnished the principal buying in the market.

Wall Street was said to be covering short lines and a rally of about 10 points from the opening quotations followed. During the afternoon session the market was featureless, with prices fluctuating narrowly. The weekly weather report was unfavorable for Alabama and the Eastern States, but very favorable for the Western belt.

It is said that the market has been heavily oversold. There seem to be no forces who are anxious to bull the market in the face of such good crop reports and weather conditions. On the other hand, the market finds plenty of sellers on all rallies which makes it obvious that this is a weather market.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, May 6.—Liverpool was disappointing at first with futures about 2 points lower than due, spot unchanged, sales 6,000 bales. Political news is mixed. The evacuation of Scutari announced by Montenegro is accepted with faith and optimism in London, but with doubt and diffidence by the Continent. Austria and Italy are reported to continue their military preparations to move on Albania.

New York acted as though concerted support was applied which is brought out in connection with the recent bullish literature of Mr. Price.

There is no question, however, that more confidence prevails in regard to the political situation and increased demand for contracts and more inquiry for spots is showing up. This is the explanation of the better tone in our market this morning.

Expectation of an unfavorable weekly weather report, except for Western States, gave strength to the new crops. The market held a 5-point advance well up to 11 o'clock, when the latest quotation of French rentes showing a decline of 80 points caused uneasiness on renewed fear of politics.

MERGER TROUBLES SEND STOCKS DOWN

U. P. and S. P. Dissolution Plan Again Comes Into Prominence as Annoying Factor.

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, May 6.—There was an irregular tendency in the stock market at the opening to-day and gains and losses offset one another. The undertone was steady. Canadian Pacific opened at 243¼ for a gain of 1⅜, but subsequently shaded.

The Harriman issues influenced the market and at the end of half an hour they had exerted a weakening tendency. Southern Pacific was freely offered, opening for a loss of 1⅛. Union Pacific fell a point. Amalgamated Copper began ½ higher, but afterward declined.

The show of strength during the early trading was not maintained after the first half hour. Union Pacific was off 1⅝ at 149⅛. Reading and Amalgamated Copper were fractional gains to 1 point. St. Paul dropped 1 point, Steel ½ to 60½. At 96⅝ Southern Pacific declined 1⅜. Similar recessions were noted in the other issues. Call money loaned at 2½.

Anaconda Copper was strong on its earnings report, advancing ⅜. United States Steel common fell ¼, while Erie, after opening with a fractional gain, lost its advance and sustained a net loss of ⅛. Baltimore and Ohio declined fractionally. Among the stocks making fractional advances were American Can, Northern Pacific, New York, New Haven and Hartford and Missouri Pacific.

The curb market was steady.

Sentiment in Americans in London was cheerful. Canadian Pacific in London spurted, then shaded.

Oats—No. 2 35

CHICAGO, May 6.—Wheat was again lower this morning, the list showing recessions of ⅛@⅜c on further losses abroad and the favorable crop news from this country, as well as from Russia. There was liberal realizing in the Old World and there was some short selling there. Northwestern receipts, as well as those in Canada, were in excess of a year ago.

Corn was ⅜@½c lower and was under considerable selling pressure, with May the weakest.

Oats were ⅛@¼c lower in sympathy with corn.

Provisions were easier, except for September lard and July ribs.

NEW YORK, May 6.—Earnings of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad for the fourth week of April show a decrease of 109,000. From July 1, earnings show an increase of $472,000.

OPINION ON GRAIN.

CHICAGO, May 6.—Bartlett, Frazier & Co.:

Wheat—Map shows frosts in Northwest, rains in Iowa and Southwest, with traces in Illinois. Local sentiment is very bearish, which may result in a still further decline, but we do not care to take that side of the market.

Corn—There is no new pressure.

Oats—Local traders rather bearish.

Provisions—Market seems to meet with good support on declines, but prices depend chiefly on volume of receipts.

POULTRY, PET and LIVE STOCK

Chicks Die Because Of Mismanagement Or Carelessness

EDITED BY JUDGE F. J. MARSHALL

Chicks are being hatched by hundreds all over the country at this time, many of which will never live to reach the age of value to their owners, owing to mismanagement or carelessness.

If farmers and poultry raisers would strive as hard to find the successful way to handle little chicks as they do to master other things frequently of much less importance, we would see thousands of good chickens go to our markets in the place of filling an untimely grave.

By way of warning, I might say that the three most harmful things the chicks have to contend with are cold, wet and sloppy feed. In other words, keep them dry. Feed cracked grain and small seeds mixed, and feed dry. If you will have the nerve to stick to this kind of feed in their bill of fare any length of time, you will succeed. Keep coops, houses and runs strictly clean and fresh and do not crowd. This is an old story to some of our readers, but to thousands of others it will mean a radical change in methods.

To give you an idea of how valuable I consider the dry feeding method, I will say that had I known twenty years ago what I do now about it, and practiced it during that time of my breeding of pure bred chickens, I would have made $5 in place of every $1 I did make. But someone asks why I make such a statement? Simply because I could not raise half the chickens I hatched, even with hens, and there seemed to be more difference than that with brooder chicks. My trade demanded twice as many eggs and stock as I could produce under the soft or wet food theory.

Chicks under the new method of dry feed need a constant supply of good grit in some form, either very coarse, sharp sand or prepared grit. Well supplied with these few essentials, there will be no trouble. Do not be in a rush to feed them as soon as they are out of the shell; better wait two days if you want health.

Caponizing.

Judge Marshall: I raise White Leghorns and White Wyandottes, and have a good many cockerels of both breeds coming on that I shall have to put on the market in some shape, as I want to keep the pullets for egg producers. I have been thinking of caponizing a lot of them. Do you think it will pay me to go to the extra trouble in the increase in price and weight? MRS. J. J. MORRIS.
Quitman, Ga.

ANSWER—I do not believe it will pay you to go to the trouble to caponize at all, and I know it will not pay on the Leghorns. They are too small a breed to make capons worth your while to trouble with them. The larger breeds, such as the Brahmas and Cochins and Rocks, make the finest capons. It would hardly pay you to go into the business unless you already had a good market for them, for the average hotel will not pay enough extra to pay for the trouble and extra time and work it takes.

Good capons bring a fancy price on the New York and Boston markets, but it would not pay one down here to run the risk of shipping so far.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Many Parcels Sold At Morning Auction

Interest in local real estate circles centered largely to-day around public sales before the court house door.

A large crowd attended and the bidding was lively. The Brookhaven Club property was sold to perfect a title in the Brookhaven estates; two lots on Decatur Street of the Joseph E. Brown estate were sold; certain properties of Moise DeLeon on South Forsyth and Whitehall Streets changed hands; seventeen lots on West Fourteenth and State Streets went to bidders, and a well-known real estate man bought a Carnegie Way lot of the Lagomarsino estate.

The Brookhaven estates, holders of $80,000 worth of bonds in the Brookhaven Club on Peachtree Road, bought in the Brookhaven property for $90,000—$88,000 for the land and building and $2,000 for the furnishings. Charles P. Glover, president of the Brookhaven estates, and Ivan E. Allen, vice president, represented the corporation. The sale was made in order to clear the way for a contemplated sale to the Capital City Club for $110,000. There are $80,000 worth of improvements on the property, the road frontage is some 9,000 feet and there are about 150 acres estimated at approximately $500 an acre.

A. J. and H. F. West sold 35 and 37 Decatur Street, 50 by 100 feet, for Governor Joseph M. Brown to J. J. Haverty and A. G. Rhodes for $70,000, and the following lots on West Fourteenth and State Streets, in the W. B. B. Richards estate, for a total of about $12,000.

Courtland S. Winn and O. F. Owen, executors of the late L. P. Thomas, sold the following:

A 54 by 203-foot lot on South Forsyth Street, between Garnett and Brotherton Streets, to J. H. McCord at the rate of $265 a front foot, or $14,310; two lots, with small houses, on Hightower Street, 80 feet front, to J. H. Ewing for $1,350, and to W. A. Hennington, 739 Chestnut Street, 50 by 127, for $685 cash.

Lot 2 of the Conn & Fitzpatrick property on Habersham Road, near Paces Ferry Road, was sold for the estate of Holmes Frederick to Jerome Moore, attorney for a client, for $20 a front foot, or $4,700. The frontage is 235 feet.

Auctioneer J. W. Ferguson and S. B. Turman sold a $5,000 equity in the Guthman property on Whitehall Street, between West Fair and Brotherton Streets, to Dr. W. J. Blalock for $1,500, making the price $31,500. This lot was formerly held by Moise DeLeon under bond for title. It fronts 107.5 feet on Whitehall and 52.33 on Forsyth. E. M. Mitchell bought for Joseph Isoewus a one-third interest in the equity of the other DeLeon parcel at the northwest corner of South Forsyth and Castleberry Streets for $1,950. Bell Apartments Resold.

The Charles P. Glover Realty Company sold to-day for the Corinthian Company to the Realty Mortgage Company the Bell apartments at the southwest corner of Ponce DeLeon Avenue and North Boulevard for $65,000. This property has changed hands several times of late.

Brookhaven Transfer To-day?

A report this afternoon had it that at a final conference the Capital City Club property committee would close up the deal for the Brookhaven Club, a proposition having been submitted some time ago by the Brookhaven Estates. The site is wanted by the Capital City for a country club. The Brookhaven property was sold this morning so that the title might be clearly in the Brookhaven Estates.

Progress of Peachtree Work.

The county convicts have practically finished digging up the old asphalt on the right-hand side of Peachtree and will start at once on the opposite side of the thoroughfare, going south. They were working north of Fourteenth Street this morning. A separate gang is following close behind with rock, binder, etc., and the street will soon be good for traffic between Sixth and Fifteenth Streets.

Healey Building Delayed.

Two monster derricks, intended to lift steel girders into place on the Healey Building site, have not yet come from the manufacturers, and the work has been held up now some two weeks. The daily loss to Mr. Healey is considerable, since the job has not been pushed following the completion of foundation work. Enough steel is already on hand, but the derricks have upset calculations.

The Baby That Cried and the Baby That Didn't

The Mother of the First Baby Had Real Cause for Thanksgiving

Copyright, 1913.

It was on a suburban train running out of Atlanta. A mother with her family, two half-grown children and a baby, was on the way, apparently, to spend a day with friends and relatives in the country.

The baby was cross and fretful. The motion of the car irritated him, the conductor frightened him, the other passengers, jingling keys foolishly to distract his attention, annoyed him.

He was perhaps ten months old, and a baby of ten months has a magnificently developed voice.

This baby knew what his voice was for, and he used it. From one end of the car to the other he could be heard, howling an indignant protest against taking a journey he did not want to take, and undergoing privations without being consulted.

The mother, terribly worried by the indignant frowns of the other passengers, fussed and worried. She offered the baby his bottle, but he batted it away with a tiny pink hand and yelled louder than ever.

Being a careful mother, she examined his clothing for possible loose pins, but she didn't find any.

The woman in the seat ahead of her turned and rudely stared, first at her and then at the purple-faced baby.

A crusty old man in the seat behind said to his companion: "Why in the thunder do people travel with babies? If they cannot afford nurses they ought to stay at home."

More sympathetic people strolled past and offered the mother advice and made faces for the baby to admire. But the baby did not admire them. He merely expressed eloquently, though without articulate words, his contempt and disgust.

Presently the mother, driven nearly frantic, turned to a woman across the aisle and said:

"I wish to goodness he wouldn't cry. I'd give anything in the world if he'd only keep quiet for a week, absolutely quiet."

Now, this was a healthy baby, dressed in frills and ribbons, his little feet in brand-new, soft, red shoes, and his distorted face framed in a circle of fluffy white fur.

And because he was healthy and well fed, and protected against disease, his voice was of the lustiest kind.

Perhaps it is not surprising that his mother wished she might not hear his voice for another week, but——

Recently a party of men went among the tenement houses in New York to distribute some small gifts for the tenants.

They were poor, squalid tenement houses. On every floor were dozens of babies, but there was no crying.

In one little room a mother sat beside a little, dirty bed—a mattress placed on two up-ended cracker boxes.

On the bed was a baby—also ten months old, but with no shoes whatever, and clothed in a few dingy garments that had served several other babies before him.

The baby was very white and very still. On each cheek was a red spot, showing that a fever was pumping his blood to an abnormal pressure. His eyes were large and blue and wide open.

The mother turned to the visitors and tried to smile. Then she looked back at the patient, quiet baby.

"If he would only just cry," she said. "It seems to me I would give my life to hear him cry just a little."

There is something to remember, you mothers who lose your patience when your babies cry. Think of those other babies in the tenements who do not cry, either because they have not the strength or because they have learned that not even a baby's needs can be satisfied because of his crying for them when there is nothing in the house to satisfy them.

Healthy babies MUST cry. Crying not only develops their lungs, but it is their only means of telling their mothers that there is something the matter or that they are dissatisfied and unhappy.

And no baby is dissatisfied or unhappy who is well fed and well cared for.

When he cries you may be sure that he is sick or tired or that he feels that he is being trifled with.

Feed him well, keep him clean, clothe him warmly, and he will be content to play and coo as long as he keeps awake.

But when his stomach is empty or overfull, when pins are sticking in him, or his feet are cold, you may expect to hear his voice raised in loud and emphatic protest.

Be glad that you can hear it, you mothers whose nerves are "all frayed out" because the crying disturbs you—and you fathers who spend the night away from home because "you cannot bear to hear that baby howling all night."

Let the baby tell you by his crying that something is the matter, and, rather than scold and storm, find out what it is and make him easier and more comfortable.

Remember that there are many mothers, whose babies are now silent forever, who would give all that they have in the world could they hear those wailing baby voices come back to them across the years, and, taking the little creatures in their arms, try with all their mother instinct to help them and make them happy again.

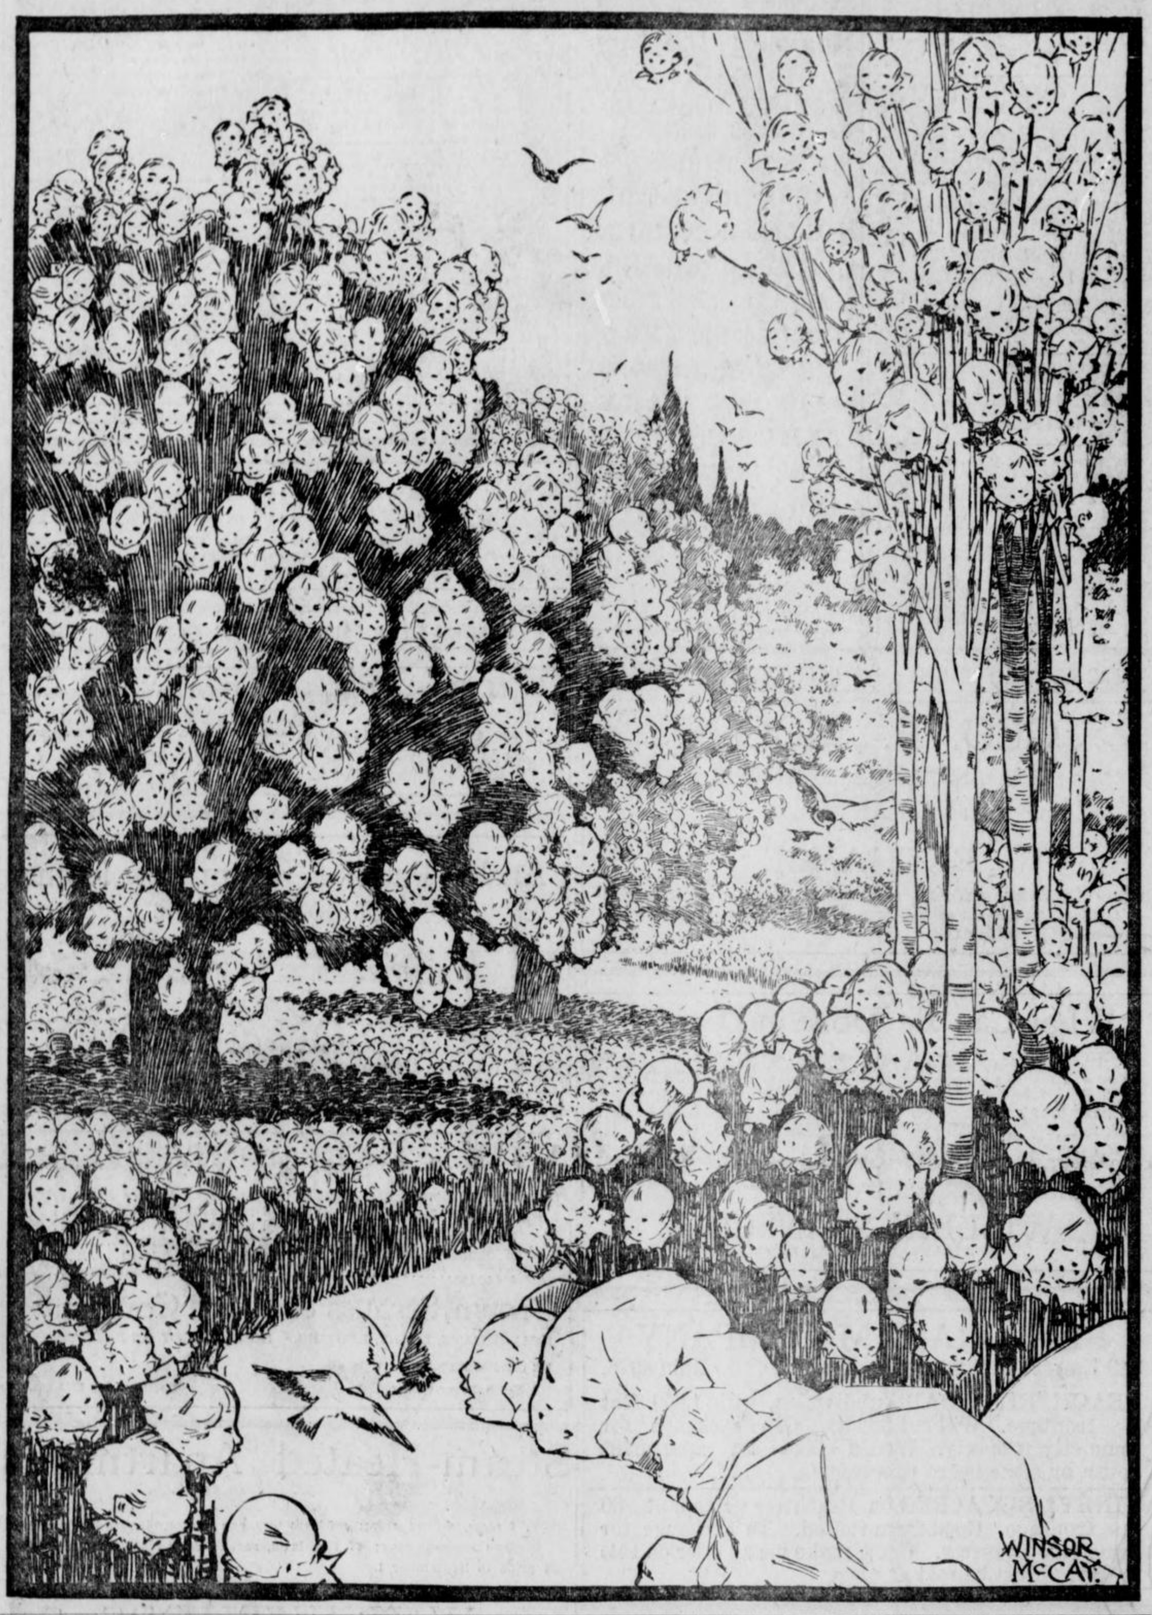
May-Time When the Buds Come

By WINSOR M'CAY.



Winifred Black Writes About "Doors That Slam"

By WINIFRED BLACK.

BANG!—said the door—

I turned over in my sleep—

Rattle-bang!—there it was again. If I could only think of some way to stop it.

It really was too bad—there I was so tired, up all night the night before and busy all day that day, so tired, so weary—and no one cared, no one seemed to notice how drawn my poor face was—no one even said they were sorry—that's always the way—a woman could work herself to death and that's all the thanks that she would get. Biff!—there's that door again!

The rising wind took a delight in that door and the wooden slam of it. Sometimes the door didn't bang; it simply rattled—R-R-R-R-R-rattle, rattle, rattle, like a train of cars going over a shaky bridge—rrrrrrattle, rattle, rattle, there—there is water under that bridge; you can tell by the sort of rustle in the rattle—shake, shake, shake—someone must be there; no, it is only the wind again—shake, shake, shake—well, come in if you want to so badly.

Door Banged No More.

Not a soul in the house will get up and shut that door tight, and let me sleep.

Along about daylight I rose, walked over to the door just a few steps, turned the key, and it was done—the door banged no more.

My train ceased to run over bridges, and I fell asleep—at last peacefully, calmly, sweetly asleep, and yet—outside the wind blew—I could hear him singing in the bare boughs of the great oak—like some entranced musician loath to leave his music—and I was neither younger nor more blessed in any way than before. Yet I slept as if I were sweet sixteen, with all the world waiting to lay garlands of roses at my feet when I deigned to awaken a glad world with my presence.

It didn't take a minute to work the miracle—nor any genius or inspiration. Just plain sense and some little resolution for the instant, and the troublous night and the uneasy dreams turned to refreshing slumber—and the door was the same door, only it wasn't locked when it banged.

I wonder——

How often have I turned upon an easy pillow and let the door bang—rather than to get up and shut it?

A hundred times, I fear, and more than that.

Are Sensitive Souls.

The cook leaves the gas burning in the range when she doesn't need it. What an extravagance!—it irritates me every time I see it. I turn it out, but the next time I go to the kitchen there it is, blazing away at so much a blaze—I hated to speak of it—cooks are such sensitive souls, and this one makes such delicious waffles. Last week I took my courage in my hands and called the cook into the pantry.

"Mary," I said, "there is something I want to speak to you about—the gas you are so careless about; please turn it out the minute you are through with it, will you?"

"Yes," said Mary, and she did it; and now I like to go into the kitchen, and Mary seems to like to see me come. The secret irritation that must have disturbed her as much as it did me is gone—all by a few calm words spoken at the right time.

I didn't hear from my old friend for a while. When I met her she seemed cold. What could the matter be?

Last week she gave a party and didn't ask me—I didn't care for the party—I couldn't have managed to go anyhow—but—I sat down and wrote and asked her what was the matter.

What's the Matter?

"I love you," I said. "Don't you care for me any more? How have I offended?" She came that afternoon and told me of a careless remark, spitefully repeated, and we are good friends again—and I am glad.

What's the matter with life? The bills are high—every one is grasping—no one seems to care—oh, it's a terrible world! Ten to one it's only some door slamming somewhere that's doing it all—one foolish, no-account door that should be locked.

Get up, you sleepy thing! Get up at once and lock it!

The Celestial Locket

By MINNA IRVING.

THE big round moon is at the full,
And riding bright and high,
With little flecks of lacy cloud
Around it in the sky.
It's like a silver locket hung
Upon a chain of diamond stars,
That pale before its light.

Against the midnight's purple robe
Brocaded with the beams
Of constellations far and near,
How brilliantly it gleams!
And look! as from the world below
Its polished disk we scan,
We see within its shining rim

John Temple Graves Says Our Navy Needs a Charles Beresford

The Great Englishman, he says, Keeps Britain's Navy Up-to-Date and In Repair by Exposing Its Glaring Weakness from Time to Time.

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES

GEORGIANS and other Americans who read of the great banquet last October given by the city of New York to the President and his Cabinet and the officers of the assembled fleet, will recall the confident assurance of President Taft at that banquet that these magnificent vessels, then anchored off New York, in the North River were the chief defense of the country, and that each one of them was ready at a moment's notice to weigh anchor and sail out to meet and conquer an invading foe.

President Taft doubtless made this statement upon information furnished him by some one in authority in the Navy Department.

It was a shame for any official of the American Government to have imposed upon the President of the United States such a gross misstatement of the facts.

Disquieting Whispers.

It was a greater shame to have permitted the President of the United States to give out such an untruthful statement to the American people.

For the navy was then, as the navy is now, inadequate in the number of officers and of men and shamefully inadequate in its equipment of fuel and coal.

Such a statement going out at that time was calculated to lull the activity of the heads of the Navy Department, who ought to have known the facts and who certainly must know them now. It was whispered on the day after the banquet that the President's assuring words were not founded upon facts and that the navy was lacking in many elements that rendered it effective for battle and defense.

It would have been the part of a brave man then, who knew these facts, to have told them, in order that the condition might have been corrected at the time.

It would be a cowardly American now who would keep these facts from the public at this time and permit our navy to go out to sea in its present condition.

A Fearless Patriot.

And it would appear to any thoughtful American who loves his country that the prompt and fearless dealing with these conditions, as they have been stated, is the highest possible duty which appeals now to the Secretary of the Navy and to the President of the United States.

England has a great and fearless patriot in Lord Charles Beresford, and no part of Lord Beresford's great service has been more marked than the incessant challenge by which he has kept England posted as to the deficiencies of her navy and the necessity for repairing. Time after time, when England has been boasting herself before her people of the greatness and irresistible power of her navy, Lord Beresford, himself one of England's mightiest sailors, has broken into the eulogy with a public exposure of some glaring weakness and inefficiency in the English navy, and this sharp challenge of the fearless sailor-publicist has done perhaps as much or more than anything else to keep the English battleships up to the mark of efficiency.

We ought to have in America some great publicist who will not fear to tell our Government the truth about its navy in time of peace and not wait for the sharp necessity of war to prod the department into action. Either in Congress or in the departments, or in the press, there should be found a monitor who would warn and direct the carelessness or the apathy of the American navy.

The present Secretary of the Navy is a young man, who has just assumed that office. He has had no experience with naval affairs and is frank and honest enough to confess it. He appears to be very earnest and devoted to his work.

Work for the Secretary.

If Secretary Daniels would do his country some service he will address himself here and now to finding out from inside sources the real facts about the American navy, the condition of its ships, the equipment of its crews, the preparation for its fuel and its colliers, and he would make his administration of that department liberal by holding the navy rigidly up to the standard of efficiency for instant service.

He would see to it, if official persuasion could be effective, that additional inducements were given to men to enlist in the navy. He would remember that most young men enlist in the navy not for a career, but to see the world, and he would devote himself to plans to securing the full complement for every one of the unfilled battleships that carries our flag today.

There is a great opportunity for a Secretary of the Navy at the present time, and that opportunity lies not along the line of trivial improvements, but of vital preparedness for that which battleships were built to do—to fight when necessary with every force of men and machinery and fuel in its place.

The Empress of India

By REV. THOMAS B. GREGORY.

THAN the proclamation of Queen Victoria as Empress of India, made in the city of London thirty-seven years ago, there is perhaps nothing stranger or, from the standpoint of the psychologist, more interesting, in all history.

Think of it for a moment. The Queen of a little island in the Atlantic, with an area of some eighty-five thousand square miles and a population under thirty millions, is solemnly proclaimed sovereign of an empire thousands of miles away, covering one million six hundred thousand square miles and containing a population of two hundred and eighty-seven millions of souls.

The audacity of it! The cool, colossal impudence of the thing! It was sublime. That vote of the Parliament commanding the ever memorable proclamation reminds us of the rulings of Providence, of the ways of the omnipotent God. The little handful of Britishers, speaking through their representatives gathered in the council house by the Thames, declare their good little Queen to be absolute ruler of the ancient and august Empire by the Ganges and the Brahmaputra, and, lo! it is done. Six months later, at a Durbar of unequaled magnificence held on the historic ridge overlooking the mogul capital of Delhi, the princes and leading men of India bow down before the representatives of the little woman in England, and, in the name of the two hundred and eighty-seven millions of the Indian people, swear eternal fealty to her rule.

Was there ever such romance as this cold-blooded history? What kind of people are the two hundred and eighty-seven million to be falling down before the thirty millions thousands of miles away? And what kind of people are the thirty millions that they should be even dreaming of declaring themselves the lords and masters of the two hundred and eighty-seven millions?

The explanation is to be found in the difference between the Saxon man and the Hindoo man. We think we know what that difference is—but in spite of it all there remains that mystery of mysteries—British rule in India. Nor is the mystery much lightened by the fact that, upon the whole, that rule has ben a blessing to the Indian people.

REFERENDUM ON ALIEN LAND LAW IS LIKELY

Move Is Begun to Put Japanese Question to a Vote in State of California.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 5.—The anti-alien b'll, as soon as it becomes a law, will be attacked by referendum.

Word came from New York that Californians at present in that city, consulting their Eastern business representatives, had joined in an urgent appeal which will be telegraphed to C. C. Moore, chairman of the Panama-Pacific Exposition Board, asking that immediate steps be taken to petition for a referendum on the issue, so that it may be put squarely up to the people of the State.

The signers of this message, it is reported, assert to Mr. Moore their belief that the measure rushed through the State Legislature will seriously injure the prospects of California's great world's fair.

At the same time Assemblyman Shearer, of Del Norte, in Sacramento, said that the referendum movement now is on. He asserted yesterday that the Senate bill, as affirmed in the Assembly, did not fit the requirements of the State as regards aliens, and especially the Japanese, and that a recall would be made necessary.

After the recall, in his opinion, the right sort of anti-alien legislation could be enacted. He believes the present bill is weak and that it will not accomplish the purposes for which it was ostensibly designed.

California to Hear From Washington Again.

WASHINGTON, May 5.—Pending the return of Secretary of State Bryan to the Capital, no action will be taken by President Wilson or the State Department with reference to the California-Japanese situation. The President to-day said that Governor Johnson undoubtedly will receive a communication from Washington with reference to the bill, but that this message will not be drafted until after Secretary Bryan returns.

Forces Way in Jail And Shoots Prisoner

Montgomery Lawyer Tries to Avenge Slaying of Uncle—Crazy, Says Father.

MONTGOMERY, ALA., May 5.—W. J. Fuller, widely known lawyer, rushed by the turnkey at the county jail today, and, drawing a pistol, fired through the bars of a big cage where negroes were confined. A negro, charged with some minor crime, received a painful flesh wound in the leg. Fuller intended the bullet for another negro, Bud Hannon, charged with the slaying of his uncle, Constable Thurman, here last week, but Hannon escaped unharmed.

Fuller's father appeared at the jail shortly afterward and stated he would sue out a writ of lunacy for his son, the latter himself now being held as a prisoner, charged with assault with intent to murder.

Alabama Wins Fight For 2 1-2-Cent Fares

Federal Judge Grubb Decdes for State in Railroads' Test Case.

MONTGOMERY, ALA., May 5.—The state of Alabama won a sweeping victory over the railroads to-day when Federal Judge W. I. Crubb, handed down a decision upholding the state railroad commission in requiring the Louisville and Nashville Railroad to establesh a two-and-one-half-cent passenger fare in Alabama. This was a test case for all lines.

The reduced pasenger rate has been a political factor in Alabama for nearly eight years. The United States court, through Judge Thomas G. Jones, a few years ago, upheld the contention of the railroads and the three-cent rate was restored, after the state legislature had reduced it to two-and one-half cents.

Father of Twins Feasts in Orinoco

Men Have the Big Vacations When Children Arrive, A. S. Williams Says.

NEW YORK, May 5.—Allen S. Williams, lecturer, has returned from the Orinoco. Mr. Williams said that before he left Venezuela he found a native just a year married, whose wife had presented twins to him in a hammock in a tree top. She got up the next day and went on with her work. The happy father immediately went to bed, that is to hammock, and all the men and women of the tribe brought delicacies to him, pampering him two weeks, while he lay in the hammock and looked proud. If his wife had given him only one baby he would have had only a week of feasting. The wife also visited him occasionally gloryin' in his fatherhood. Nobody took any notice of her, but she seemed to think it was all right.

Lawnless Peruvians Get Lawn Mowers

WASHINGTON, May5— What is a lawn mower without a lawn?—that is what the citizens of Callao, Peru, want to know. They have viewed with great curiosity a sample mower sent down there by an American manufacturer to tempt the trade. In view of the fact that there are no lawns in Peru folks there have had a treat.

Consul L. G. Dreyfus reports that it has been suggested to him that the manufacturer might send down more of them to be sold as curiosities in the novelty stores.

Harry Thaw Denies Child's Parentage

Not Father, He Says, of Boy Declared by Wife To Be Her Son.

NEW YORK, May 5.—A denial of fathership to the child of which his wife, Evelyn Nesbitt Thaw, is the mother, was issued to-day by Harry K. Thaw from Matteawan.

CONGRESSMAN URGES TAX FOR $1000 INCOMES

Others Demand Revenue From Bachelors and Dogs in "Race Suicide" Families.

WASHINGTON, May 5.—The sundries schedule to-day was under consideration together with the free list. It is probable the House will complete these sections of the bill this evening and take up the income tax to-morrow.

The income tax section as framed exempts all incomes of less than $4,000 from taxation. Representative Gillett, of Massachusetts, intends to offer an amendment putting the limit down so as to make incomes of more than $1,000 taxable. He believes a low limit will have the effect of making people take a sharper interest in Government finance and insist on more rigid economy in Congress.

The amendment may obtain some support on the Democratic side if the Democrats have the courage to shake off caucus ties and defy the leaders. It is doubtful if any change will be made in the bill.

An amendment by Representative Britton, of Illinois, to make single men pay higher taxes than married men will be offered. Representative Kitchin, of North Carolina, has received a suggestion that poodle dogs in "race suicide" families be taxed in lieu of children.

The House probably will vote on the tariff bill Wednesday or Thursday.

Chief Justice Shepard dissented.

MILITANTS CAUSE UPROAR IN COURT

Become Hysterical and Shriek Threats as Leaders Receive Sentence for Sunday Riots.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, May 5.—Charged with obstructing the police during a suffragette demonstration in Hyde Park yesterday, Mary Neil, a member of the Women's Social and Political Union, was arraigned to-day and sentenced to pay a fine of $10 or spend three weeks in jail.

"Sunday should be spent in religious meditation rather than in fighting with policemen," observed the court, but the suffragette said she thought votes were more imporiant than religious meditation.

Three other women—Mrs. Barnes, Miss Brown and Miss Lansbry—were sentenced to fines and imprisonment for rioting in Hyde Park.

Two male supporters of the "cause" in the riots and six other men, arrested for their part in a free speech demonstration, also were fined.

Archbald Bodkin, of the Treasury Department, appeared as prosecutor on behalf of the Government.

All of the women except Mrs. Flora ("General") Drummond and Annie Kenney were admitted to bail. The women became hysterical and kept the court room in a state of pandemonium with their screams.

"You will have to carry us here next time," shouted Miss Kenney.

"We will go on a hunger strike; we will kill ourselves," cried Mrs. Drummond. Sidney Drew, the publisher who printed the militants' newspape', The Suffragette, against the wishes of the Government, apologized and said he would not publish the paper again, so the warrant against him was withdrawn.

The train was stopped and run back over the road for several miles, but the missing engineer could not be found.

MARY PHAGAN'S BODY EXHUMED; HURT LOOKS FOR SIGNS OF 'DOPE'

Coroner and County Physician Will Have Girl's Stomach Examined

The reason for the delay in beginning the Coroner's inquest was that Coroner Donehoo was in Marietta up to 2:30 o'clock.

The body of Mary Phagan was exhumed by direction of the Coroner who went to Marietta for the purpose. An examination of the contents of the stomach will be made for the purpose of determining whether the child had been "doped" before she was attacked on the day of her death.

It will probably be several days before this examination can be completed.

The exhumation was done very quietly, and few people in Marietta knew anything about it.

With the Coroner were Dr. J. W. Hurt, County Physician, and Dr. H. F. Harris, of the State Board of Health, acting under the direction of Solicitor Dorsey.

It is understood that the analysis of the stomach's contents will be made by Dr. Harris at the laboratory of the State Board of Health at the capitol.

Aside from this the State official made a thorough examination of the

Hearst Editorial Is Read in Congress

WASHINGTON, May 5.—The editorial cabled by W. R. Hearst from abroad October 10, 1912, warning the Democrats against free trade theories and making comparisons with foreign living conditions, was read into the Congressional Record during the tariff debate by Representative Austin, of Tennessee.

Mr. Austin was complaining against excessive tariff cuts by the Underwood bill and, declaring that the bill would prove injurious alike to business and to labor, said:

"I want to read to you what Mr. Hearst said about free trade. Mr. Hearst rendered splendid service to the Democrats during the last campaign. He rendered especial service to the country in championing the cause of our Speaker, Mr. Clark."

Mr. Austin then read the editorial.

WILKESBARRE, PA., May 5.—Workmen in the Truesdale mine of the D. L. & W. Co. at Nanticoke were given a surprise to-day when mine officials told them that Harold Vanderbilt and George F. Baker, Jr., of New York, had worked a night shift in the mine as miners and laborers and cut enough coal to load a regulation car.

The young men wore the regulation outfit—overalls, blouse and a cap and lamp. They wore gloves, which are uncommon in the mining region.

Vice President Loomis was their instructor and he showed them how to cut the coal. They toiled several hours.

LEMMIE QUINN IN FACTORY ON DAY OF DEATH

Phagan Inquest, Starting Late Monday Afternoon, Attracts Throng---200 Girls and Women Summoned As Witnesses, at Police Station.

Leo M. Frank, Superintendent of the National Pencil Factory, was a witness late Monday afternoon in the Coroner's inquest into the death of Mary Phagan.

There was a sensation when it was learned for the first time fro mthe lips of Frank that another man was in the factory aside fro mthose already known after Mary Phagan drew her pay, shortly after noon on the Saturday she met her death. The man was Lemmie Quinn, foreman of the tipping department.

Frank told in detail all he knew about Quinn and his work in the factory.

Frank was cool and collected. He answered the questions shot at him by the Coroner without hesitation and his utterance was distinct. He seemed absolutely sure of himself.

Solciitor Dorsey and Luther Z. Rosser, attorney for Frank, occupied prominent places, but Solicitor Dorsey did not interpose any questions during the early part of the inquiry. None of the questions directe dat Frank were objected to by his attorney. Coroner Donehoos's questioning was uninterrupted.

Anoth reisgnficant point in Frank's testimony was that he says he heard Mary Phagan talking with another girl as the two left the building.

This gives strength to the report that another girl actually accompanied Mary to the factory.

Where is this girl now?

The detectives have reported nothing of the discovery of the girl who is said to have waited at the factory door for Mary to come out and finally left when some one from the factory told her that Mary would be detained for a half hour with some work.

Factory girls called as witnesses were excused at 5:30 o'clock, indicating that the inqust would be adjourned with the conclusion of Frank's testimoney or the testimony of the Selig's who follow him.

INQUEST OPENING DELAYED.

The Coroner's inquest into the Phagan mystery did not really begin until 3 o'clock on Monday afternoon, instead of 2 o'clock, the hour set for the hearing.

Lo M. Frank and Newt Lee left the jail in charge of Chief of Police Beavers, Detectives Lanford and Starnes and entered the patrol wagon for the trip to police headquarters.

A curious crowd waited around the jail doorway to get a look at the two prisoners.

Both men appeared nervous. Frank walked with a quick step between Beavers and Lanford. He was freshly shaved, wore a dark suit and a derby hat. Starnes followed with Lee. Neither man was handcuffed.

They arrived at police headquarters five minutes later and were greeted by 700 or 800 persons, who packed the corriders and stairways of the police station.

Both Frank and Lee were taken directly to the detectives' room through a rear entrance, where the inquest was held.

It was necessary for the officers to cut a passageway through the jam of humanity. Into this narrow lane Frank, with Chief Lanford's hand on his arm, entered, looking neither to the right nor the left. He walked with a hurried step and appeared to be relieved when the room, where the inquest is being held, was reached.

Lee seemed less concerned and walked carelessly along from the rear door, up the stairs and through the packed corridors.

BAR MERELY CURIOUS FROM ROOM.

The inquest room was closed to all but those who could prove that they had actual business inside. Sergeant Maddox stood at the doorway and denied admittance to several hundred persons who were eager to hear the testimony.

Nearly 200 women and young girls, most of whom are employees either of the pencil factory, or of the paper factory where Mary Phagan formerly worked, were herded into the large roll-call room on the first floor to await the time when they should be called upon to testify.

Just before hte inquest was called Coroner Donehoo was closeted in a conference with Solicitor Dorsey, Detective Lanford, Chief Beavers and the detectives who had bee nworking on the case.

Chief Lanford held subpoenas for two more witnesses whom it was decided to call at the last moment.

Before the first witness, Leo Frank was called, the coroner

Upon his return he said that he handed the orders to Miss Hall, who sent out postcard acknowledgments of the orders and returned the orders to him.

Phagan Girl Came In.

Frank was positive that Miss Hall and Alonzo Mann left the office at 12 o'clock, as he heard a whistle blow at that time. Frank was then interrogated as to the time Mary Phagan came after her money.

Q. Did any one else come in after Miss Hall and Alonzo Mann left?—A. About 12.10 the little girl who was killed came in.

Q. Was any one with her when she came in?—A. No.

Q. Did you hear her talk to any one as she came in?—A. No.

Q. How did she announce herself?—A. I think she asked for her pay.

Q. How did you get her pay envelope?—A. I asked her what her number was.

Q. Do you remember her number?—A. No.

Q. Have you looked up her number since her death?—A. Yes, but I don't remember what it was.

Q. Did she say anything else?—A. Yes, as she was going out she stopped, turned and asked me if the metal had come.

Q. Did you check the pay roll after paying her?—No. We never do that.

Q. Where was she when she asked about the metal?—A. She was in the outer office near the door.

Q. Did she call back as an afterthought? A. It seemed like an afterthought.

Q. What was the amount of her envelope? A. One dollar twenty, I think.

Q. How was it made up? A. She had worked part of the Friday, part of the Saturday and part of the Monday previous.

Q. Do you remember how the pay was given her? A. I do not remember the denominations, as the envelopes were sealed.

Heard Steps Die Away.

When she came in to get her pay, that disturbed your work, did it not? A. Yes, for a minute or two.

Q. Where did she go when she left the office? A. I heard her footsteps dying away.

Q. What time did she come in? A. I don't know exactly; it was 12.10 or 12:15.

Q. How long did it take you to pay her? A. Two minutes

Q. How did you identify her? A. Just took her number.

Q. Was her name on the envelope? A. I don't remember, but it should have been.

Said He Heard Girl's Voice.

Q. Did any one else come in between 12 and 12:15? A. No, but as she went out I heard a girl's voice as Mary was walking down the steps. I don't know what was said. I just heard a girl's voice talking.

Q. Don't you remember that you made an entry on the pay roll after paying her? A. No.

Q. Had the metal of which Mary Phagan spoke come at that time? A. I don't think it has come yet.

Q. How does it get to the factory? A. On a dray.

Q. How do you know when it comes in? A. The chief clerk checks it in.

Denies Sending Girl Back.

Q. Do you know off-hand when that metal comes in? A. Yes, and in this instance particularly, because we were short.

Q. You are sure you didn't send the little girl back to see whether it had come in, are you? A. I did not.

Q. Did you ask Schiff about it? A. No, because I would know about it.

Q. How do you fix the time that she came in as 12:10 or 12:15? A. Because the other people left at 12 and I judged it to be ten or fifteen minutes later when she came in.

Q. Were you out of the office from the time the whistles blew at 12 until the time that Mary came in? A. No.

Q. Were you out of the office from the time Mary left until the time Quinn came in? A. No.

Q. Was Quinn foreman of the tipping plant. A. Yes.

Thinks He Left Plant.

Q. Did Mary work under him? A. Yes.

Q. How was Quinn dressed? A. I don't remember.

Q. Had he been working Saturday? A. No.

Q. Did he have on overalls? A. No, he was dressed up.

Q. Had he been working all the week until Saturday? A. Yes.

Q. What on? A. Fixing machinery and the like. There was some metal that he could work on.

Q. Did he go down stairs when he left your office? A. I don't know but I think he went out. I heard his footsteps die away.

Q. How old is Quinn? A. He is 25 or 30.

Q. How long has he been with the National Pencil Company? A. Three or four years.

Q. Is he married? A. Yes.

Q. What time was it when he left? A. About 12:25.

Q. What were you working on when Quinn left? A. Getting ready to go to work on the financial sheet.

Q. Do you remember what papers you got together? A. One of them was a production sheet.

Q. How much is there of that? A. It is a big sheet 14x30 inches and shows the whole week's production.

Q. Anything else? A. I looked over it for some time to see if it was correct.

Q. You hadn't left the building since Miss Hall left about 12 o'clock? A. No. About 1 o'clock I got ready to go home and found Arthur White and Harry Denham and Mrs. White up stairs. Itold them that I was going home to lunch and they said they would stay and finish work. Mrs. White said she wanted to go. I afterward went down, put on my coat and went out.

When Did Watchman Leave?

Q. What time did the day watchman go? A. I don't know exactly.

Q. When you went upstairs how long did you stay? A. About two minutes.

Q. When you came back what did you do? A. Put on my coat, locked the door and went out.

Q. Did you lock any other door except your office door? A. No.

Q. What time did you leave the building? A. A trifle after 1 o'clock.

Q. Doesn't the day watchman stay on duty until the night watchman comes on? A. Yes, usually, but Saturday was a holiday. I work nearly every Saturday, anyhow, and I thought my being there was sufficient.

Q. Do you know Walter Pride? A. Yes, he is the oldest employee of the pencil company.

Q. Who pays him off? A. Mr. Schiff.

Q. What time does he usually leave on Saturday? A. He usually does extra work on Saturday cleaning up in the gluing department.

Q. What did Walter Pride do Saturday? A. Nothing that I know of.

Q. Did you see him? A. No.

Q. Does he get extra pay for doing this work? A. I think he gets a round sum of so much per week.

Q. Did you excuse him Saturday? A. No, I haven't seen him for two weeks.

Q. Is the front door usually locked or open when Walter is there? A. It is generally open.

Q. Then any one could go in there at any time and you would not know it? A. Yes.

Q. Has it ever been true that you were alone there before? A. Yes.

Q. Where did you go after leaving the building? A. Up Forsyth Street to Alabama. I think it was a Washington Street car.

Q. Do you remember any one on the car? A. No.

Q. Where did you get off the car? A. Georgia Avenue and Washington Street.

"Straight Home."

Q. Where did you go then? A. Straight home.

Q. Whom did you see at your home? A. My mother-in-law and wife were going to the matinee of the grand opera and had eaten their lunch. My father-in-law and myself ate lunch together.

Q. Who served the lunch? A. The servant.

Q. What did you do after eating? A. Lit a cigarette and lay down to take a nap.

Q. Who was there at the time? A. My father-in-law went down to the back yard to look at the chickens.

Q. Did he come back before you woke up? A. No, I got up and left before he came back.

Q. How long were you asleep? A. Only a short time. I hardly went to sleep at all.

Q. What time did you leave home? A. It must have been about 10 minutes of 2 o'clock.

Q. Did you see any one when you left the house? A. Yes, I saw Jerome Michael and his mother and walked up to Glenn street and spoke to them.

Q. Did any car pass you going to town? A. No.

Q. What car did you catch—at what time? A. It must have been the 2 o'clock car.

Q. Did you know any one on the car? A. Yes, a cousin of my wife's, Mr. Loeb.

Q. Where did you leave the car? A. The streets were blocked on account of the parade and I got off at Hunter Street adn walked.

Q. Did you speak to any one on Hunter Street. A. No, I walked down to Whitehall Street and saw the parade.

Met an Employe.

Q. Where did you go then? A. Down Whitehall Street toward Brown & Allen's.

Q. Did you meet any one you knew? A. Yes, in front of Rich's I met one of our foreladies, Miss Rebecca Carson.

Q. Did she go with you? A. No, she was with some one and I merely spoke to her. I went on down to the corner of Whitehall and Alabama and bought some cigars and a package of cigarettes.

Q. Do you smoke cigars or cigarettes? A. Sometimes cigars and sometimes cigarettes.

Q. Where did you go next? A. To the factory.

Q. Where did you cross Forsyth Street? A. I don't remember.

Q. Did you unlock the door? A. Yes.

Q. What time was it? A. I don't know exactly, but about 3 o'clock.

Q. What did you do then? A. Went up to see about the two men I had locked in. They were fixing to go home. I told them I was back and then went to the office. A few minutes later I heard the bell on the clock ring and these boys came in. White borrowed $2 from me, and I remember I joked him about needing money so soon after pay day and he replied that his wife had robbed him that morning.

Q. How did you know it was White's wife when you went upstairs before leaving for lunch? A. Earlier in the day she was in the office and told me that she was White's wife and wanted to se White. I told her to go upstairs and see him.

Q. I thought you said there were no outsiders there? A. That's right—it is true that she was there.

Q. How long does it take to make the financial statement? A. About an hour and a half. It took longer on Saturday or account of Thursday's entries not having been made.

Hugh Dorsey, Solicitor General, on left, and Judge W. D. Ellis. The former is hard at work on the Phagan case. The latter has charged the Grand Jury to probe the slaying thoroughly.

Coroner's Jury Likely to Hold Both Prisoners

In the following story will be found the developments in the Phagan case up to the time the inquest was resumed Monday afternoon:

It is said, but without authority, that a great deal of very important evidence has been accumulated, but that it will not be presented at the Coroner's inquest. Instead, it will go directly into the hands of Solicitor Dorsey, who, as the chief prosecuting officer of Fulton County, is really in charge of the case now, although it has never been the duty of a prosecuting officer to interfere with the functions of the Coroner.

May Hold Both Lee and Frank.

It seems probable that both Frank and Lee will be held for the Grand Jury. The testimony brought out at the Coroner's inquest will be turned over to Solicitor Dorsey, who will study it carefully and make such further investigations as he may deem necessary, using the detective force of the city for that purpose.

Judge Ellis of the Superior Court on Monday instructed the May Grand Jury to investigate the mystery in a thorough manner. It is not likely, however, that the Grand Jury will take up the case for several days. The matter of presenting evidence on which indictments may be found is in the hands of Solicitor Dorsey. He has charge of the Grand Jury, and it is he who presents the evidence and who frames the indictments, and it may take him several days to strengthen certain links in the chain of evidence, so that when indictments are brought they will be found to be legally correct and will leave no opportunity for the lawyers engaged by the accused to make objections in court.

It is the intention of Solicitor Dorsey to keep secret all evidence in his possession until the matter has been passed upon by the Grand Jury, indictments found and the case brought to trial.

Frank Maintains His Innocence.

Everything depends upon what transpires at the Coroner's inquest. Frank's testimony may make necessary an entirely new deal of the cards. He still maintains his innocence, and Lawyer Rosser, his counsel, declares that there is no evidence by which to connect him with the case.

Coroner Donehoo will hold a conference with Chief of Detectives Lanford and Solicitor Dorsey before the inquest to decide upon the witnesses who will be asked to testify.

In addition to Lee and Frank, the detectives will have on hand persons they have been interrogating since the inquest adjourned last Thursday. Several of these are said to have made disclosures of great importance.

Dorsey's Action Misconstrued.

There seems to be a misapprehension in the public mind about the attitude of Solicitor Dorsey. Rumors on the streets and gossip in newspapers that he "has taken the Phagan case out of the hands of the police and out of the control of the Coroner" is not true, for the very simple reason that Mr. Dorsey is the chief prosecuting officer of Fulton County, superior to the police, the detectives and the Coroner. He may act with them or independently of them. As Solicitor he is the most important official in the county government, more powerful than the Mayor or the Police Commission.

The Phagan case is in the hands of Mr. Dorsey now, as it has been from the beginning.

The function of the Coroner's office is simply to gather testimony and evidence that is turned over to the Solicitor for him to act upon.

Statement by Solicitor.

Solicitor Dorsey made this statement:

"Mr. Scott, of the Pinkertons, has given to this office valuable information. The policy of the Pinkertons is to establish the truth. They recognize that this office will receive from them to that end any information they have, but under no circumstances do they expect to get any information we have gathered from other sources."

Council Ignores New Woodward Charges

No Official Attention Will be Paid to Fire Alarm Accusations—Mayor Threatens Court.

Council will approve the report of the investigating committee exonerating all city officials of charges of graft, it was declared Monday. Both committees were in session up to 3 o'clock drafting the reports, and all the members were agreed. The reports will be read Monday afternoon.

Mayor Woodward's new bitter criticisms of excess charges on the new fire alarm system will pass without formal official attention from Council. Mayor Woodward himself said he expected no action from Council.

"The only way I have of making an effective fight is to refuse to sign the check for the first payment on the system and air the matter in court," he said. "I don't expect to get any real action from Council on these graft charges. They can't afford to condemn anyone."

He said he did not know yet whether he would take his fire alarm charges into court.

CHARGES GRAND JURY TO PROBE PHAGAN KILLING

Judge W. D. Ellis, of the Superior Court, delivered the following address to the new Grand Jury, and touched upon the Phagan case:

"Under our system of judicial procedure, we have in the Superior Court of this county six terms each year. Grand juries are drawn and impaneled at each term, but the duties of making investigations into matters of a general nature, such as the inspection of the offices, the books, papers and records of the Clerk of the Superior Court, of the Ordinary and of the County Treasurer, the duty of examination of public buildings and their condition, the examinations of the lists of voters, and the examination of convict camps, the inspection of the jail and such other matters concerning the public welfare, the peace and good order of the county at large, are required at the March and September terms.

"While such matters are looked after by the grand juries of the terms named, yet you are not prohibited from inquiring into such matters if you deem it necessary, or if brought to your attention by the court or the Solicitor General.

Cites Violation of Liquor Law.

"You are impaneled at this the May term specially to inquire into and take action upon cases of violation of the penal code. While you are to consider all violations of the law, and bring to trial by presentment or indictment all who are probably guilty of crime, I will call your special attention to some matters.

"Look to the violation of the law against the sale of intoxicating liquors. Find true bills against all who conduct clubs, which are run for the purpose of selling liquor. Under the law, locker clubs can be operated, but if a club is organized or maintained for the purpose of making money by the sale of intoxicating liquors, those who operate or maintain it are violators of the law.

"If a locker club, organized for social pleasure, is conducted as such an organization, it is permitted that the members may keep liquor as a part of the social establishment; but if the sale of intoxicating liquor is the purpose and the social feature only an excuse for the organization or operation, then those who run such an alleged club are guilty and should be brought to trial.

Defines Tippling Houses.

"I want again to call your special attention to keeping open tippling houses on the Sabbath day. Every club, no matter how well organized and operated within the law, is a tippling house if the members are permitted to assemble there on Sunday and drink intoxicating liquors. Even a private citizen would be guilty of keeping a tippling house on the Sabbath day if he allows his friends and neighbors to assemble in his parlor and drink intoxicating liquors on Sunday, and this would be true even if he furnished the liquor free or allowed those who assemble to bring it with them. I charge you to look closely into this matter.

"I wish to invite your careful attention to the law against carrying concealed weapons. No man, under the law, has a right to carry a concealed weapon. Officers of the law may openly carry them and private persons may carry them openly by obtaining a license, but nobody has a right to carry a deadly weapon concealed. This is a free country, and life and person ought to be safe in it.

"Good people do not go armed, but the vicious and desperate do go armed. The good citizen is certainly as courageous as the bad, and he is entitled to walk in the pathways of life without being at the disadvantage of being shot down by some cowardly villain who walks about armed and equipped for slaughter.

Law Bars "Gun Toters."

"If all men are to have an equal showing, all ought to be allowed to go armed or all ought to be compelled to go about unarmed. The law has decided which equality shall exist, and it declares that no man shall go about with concealed weapons and none shall carry pistols even openly unless he shows some reason for it and publicly procures a license.

"It is claimed that public houses of prostitution have been abated in this county. Of course, it is desirable that prostitution should cease, but the abatement of the evil of lewd houses in known localities makes it most probable that assignation houses will spring up, and that the illicit intercourse will be shifted from known localities to dark and secret places.

"A thousand such cases are not in the aggregate so revolting as one case of seduction of a virtuous girl or the rape and murder of little Mary Phagan. I charge you to look carefully and deliberately into all these matters, and especially to investigate suspected places of assignation or houses or places run for the purpose of prostitution under the name of rooming houses.

"The Mary Phagan case calls for your immediate and vigorous attention. The power of the State is behind you. What appears to be an awful crime has been committed and the welfare of the community, the good name of Atlanta, public justice and the majesty of the law demand at the hands of this Grand Jury and of all officers of the law the most searching investigation and the prompt bringing to trial of the guilty party.

"This is a good community. There are thousands of intelligent and law-abiding people, a vast majority of our people are good and virtuous, but, like all other communities, there are bad people in it. The reputation and progress of Atlanta attracts to it large numbers of people from all parts of the country, and some of the worst people from other places come here and add themselves to the bad element of our county. Let the Grand Jury get after the bad element. You indict all violators of the law in Fulton County and the court will see that speedy trials will follow and that certain punishment will be inflicted on the guilty.

Should Not Exploit Crime.

"I do not sympathize with the common cry that humanity is all bad. I do not believe that the tendency of humanity is for the bad. I believe that it is unfair to cry out in a sort of wail of despair because crime is committed. I doubt if the holding out to public view of all the frailties of the human tide is conducive to the public good.

"There is no perfect community anywhere, and probably never will be upon the face of this world of ours; but in trying to elevate and promote good citizenship, in trying to suppress crime and disorder, we should not be led into the error of bringing reproach upon the people of one of the best communities in the world by exploiting the misdeeds of a few.

"Let us rather contend for reaching to the high level of honesty and virtue and at the same time ferret out and punish the guilty who are upon us, and who, by their conduct, violate the laws which condemn the vicious and which give praise to and provide for the well-being and safety of the good.

Recalls Oath of Secrecy.

"I want to remind you of your duty as to matters which occur in the Grand Jury room. Your oath is to keep secret the State's counsel, your fellows' and your own, unless called on to give evidence thereof in a court of justice.

"The object of the law is to allow the utmost freedom in the Grand Jury room, in making honest and fair investigations. It is bad faith, and a violation of his oath, for a grand juror to tell what transpires in their deliberations, but it is not an uncommon thing for the general public to be informed of things that transpire during the investigation of alleged crimes.

"Look to this, and if there is a violation of it, you should investigate, find out who has betrayed the confidence reposed, and report to the court the offending person."

MOONSHINERS KILL TWO; GIRL LEADS RAIDERS

PIKEVILLE, KY., May 5.—The story of how a 16-year-old girl, in an effort to end the moonshining career of her two brothers, caused two deaths and the serious wounding of another man, was told in official dispatches to the Government authorities to-day.

The girl, Ardelia Hall, went to Deputy United States Marshal Mark Porter, in Pikeville, Ky., and told him where her brothers were running a moonshine whisky still at Blue Notch, in the mountains, and offered to lead a party of officers to the spot.

Porter swore in John Sloan, of Pikeville, and Marion Ramey, of Elkhorn City, Ky., as deputies and, led by the girl, went to the still.

They were destroying the apparatus when fired on from ambush by Soloman Hall, Dave Hall and Tom Riddle, a negro.

Sloan and Ramey fell dead and Porter was seriously wounded. Porter returned the fire, using Sloan's revolver, until he became unconscious.

The moonshiners seized the girl and were dragging her toward the Virginia State line when she broke away and, catching Porter's horse, rode into Elkhorn City and spread the alarm.

A posse is searching the mountains for the moonshiners, and a battle is expected if they are overtaken.

DODD RICHES TO GO TO MERCER AND CHARITIES

Bequeathing the bulk of her estate, amounting from $115,000 to $120,000, to Mercer University, the will of the late Mrs. Barbara C. Dodd, who died here April 30, was filed for probate in the Fulton County Court of Ordinary Monday.

To the Grady Memorial Hospital Mrs. Dodd bequeathed the proceeds of a $2,000 fund for the maintenance of the infants' ward at the hospital. This amount was left in trust with the Central Bank and Trust Corporation, together with a like amount for the Georgia Baptist Orphanage at Hapeville.

A sum of $1,500 was left in trust for the maintenance of her grave, any excess in its earnings to go to Mercer.

Mrs. Fannie T. Ackerman, of New York, sister of Mrs. Dodd, receives $5,000 outright, while her brother, Henry E. Dibble, of Campbell County, was left the earnings of $5,000 placed in trust with C. E. Currier, executor of the estate. Barbara E. Dibble, a niece, living in Montgomery, receives $2,000 and a handsome marquis ring set with nine diamonds.

All her other jewelry is to be sold by the Central Bank and Trust Corporation, the proceeds to go to the Home for Old Women in Atlanta. This will amount to several thousand dollars.

The remainder of the Dodd estate is bequeathed to Mercer University, which, it is estimated, will comprise an immediate donation of practically $100,000. At the death of her brother an additional $5,000 will go to the Baptist college, it having been made residuary beneficiary.

Mrs. Dodd was the widow of Philip Dodd, a wealthy wholesale grocer of Atlanta, reputed as a man of great wealth. She had but the two near relatives. None of their children, except the niece in Montgomery, was named as beneficiary in the will. It is said that in 1909 Mrs. Dodd destroyed a will by which she had bequeathed most of her property to relatives.

MONTENEGRINS FINALLY YIELD; LEAVE SCUTARI

Ambassadorial Court Is Convening for Decisive Session as the Little Kingdom Gives Up.

CETTINJE, May 5.—After defying the powers for a month, King Nicholas to-day decided to give up the citadel of Scutari.

Scutari was occupied by a Montenegrin army on April 23, after a siege lasting six months. During the latter weeks of the bombardment the European powers repeatedly warned Montenegro to cease the cannonade.

Scutari will remain an Albanian city.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, May 5.—Official announcement was made in the House of Commons this afternoon by Premier Asquith that the Ambassadors had received a formal communication from King Nicholas to the effect that Montenegro has decided to leave the disposition of Scutari to the powers.

"This decision on the part of King Nicholas is satisfactory to the powers," said the Premier. "King Nicholas is to be congratulated on this welcome decision in both the interests of Montenegro and the peace of Europe."

A telegram from Cettinje said that a ministerial crisis has been precipitated by the attitude of the Montenegrin Government toward Scutari and that the resignation of King Nicholas' cabinet had been given and accepted.

The downfall of the cabinet was brought about by the rejection by Crown Prince Danilo of the proposition of the ministerial council that Montenegro stand firm and even go to war against Europe if that step is necessary to retain Scutari.

The session to-day of the ambassadorial court was to have been one of extreme importance, as the program included final action on the attitude of Montenegro.

A meeting of the National Parliament of Montenegro has been summoned for May 8, when official sanction will be given to any course adopted by King Nicholas.

Plan to Divide Albania Likely To Be Dropped.

PARIS, May 5.—Belief was expressed in diplomatic circles to-day that Austria and Italy soon will abandon their plan to divide Albania.

Strong opposition to the plan comes from Germany, which country considers the power of the triple alliance would be considerably weakened in the event of a general war, as the two powers would have to put armies into Albania to maintain their interests.

According to the Austro-Italian plan, Albania would be occupied by troops of the two powers much the same as England occupies Egypt.

Plan to Invade Albania Not To Be Abandoned.

VIENNA, May 5.—Count VonBerchthold, the Austrian Foreign Minister, announced to-day that the Austrian Government had just received assurances from Montenegro that King Nicholas would abandon Scutari unconditionally.

This will not prevent Austria and Italy from sending a military expedition into Albania, it was said.

Fresh Eggs Part Man and His Wife

Fact That Husband Gave All the Product of His Hens to His Mother, Secured Divorce.

CINCINNATI, May 5.—Mrs. Zella Cunningham, of Walnut Hills, who was granted a divorce from William Cunningham, alleged cruelty as one of the grounds. One form of the cruelty she charged was her husband's refusal to give her any of the fresh eggs that were the products of the family chickens. She alleged that he gave the eggs to his mother, who lived with them.

Mrs. Cunningham also testified that when her husband was away on a trip he gave the key to the hennery to his mother.

14 CONVICTS ESCAPE FROM A FLORIDA CAMP

TAMA, FLA., May 5.—A big man hunt is in progress to-day around the head of Tampa Bay. Fourteen convicts, some of them life termers, escaped from a stockade near Largo last night. Guards discovered the break and headed off the rest. One bloodhound was killed during the night by the fugitives.

'Miracle' Denounced By Bishop as Fraud

Famous Bleeding Effigy Removed From Shrine—Priest Claims Supernatural Mission.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, May 5.—The controversy between Bishop Potiers and Mgr. Vachere Abbe de Gratelou over the suppression of the "miracle" known as the "Bleeding Heart of Poitiers" is arousing tremendous interest throughout France.

Several years ago a priest noticed that an ordinary effigy in the chapel at Mirabeau en Poitiers was exuding drops of blood. Thousands of pilgrims flocked to the shrine. It was claimed that a drop of the mysterious blood effected the cure of various diseases.

The present bishop, lately appointed, has denounced the "miracle" as an imposture and ordered the removal of the effigy from the shrine.

NEGRO PUGILIST ON TRIAL ON WHITE SLAVERY CHARGE

CHICAGO, May 5.—Jack Johnson, negro pugilist, was called to trial before Federal Judge Carpenter to-day on charges of violating the Mann white slave law.

The Government's star witness, Belle Schreiber, formerly a manicurist, of Milwaukee, Wis., later a burlesque actress, was being guarded at a downtown hotel by Government agents. United States attorneys said she was ready to testify against Johnson.

DR. FRIEDMANN IS SCORED BY CRITICS

NEW YORK, May 5.—"This man has outraged every sense of propriety and abused in the most astounding manner the courtesies and considerations extended to him for the purpose of proving the correctness of his claims.

"His attitude from first to last has been one of boorish disregard and complete indifference to the feelings of his colleagues. He has snubbed and ignored the physicians—men of high standing—delegated by the Government to investigate the effects of his treatment."

The above is a part of an arraignment of Dr. Friedrich Friedmann, in the current issue of American Medicine. The attack is contained in a lengthy editorial and is the bitterest yet made upon the turtle germ "curist."

U. S. Surgeon Silent on "Cure."

WASHINGTON, May 5.—Efforts of Dr. John S. Billings, of the New York Public Health Association, to get Surgeon General Rupert Blue, in charge of the Federal public health service, to issue a statement regarding the Friedmann treatment for consumption have been futile.

Surgeon General Blue has told the New York physician that he is not prepared to either allay optimism or boost pessimism, so far as the Friedmann serum was concerned.

MOVE ON TO UNIONIZE CHICAGO'S STOCKYARDS

Close Congress Ten Years, Hill Suggests

Then, Railroad President Says, the Country Would See Unprecedented Prosperity.

ST. PAUL, May 5.—Congress should adjourn and stay adjourned for ten years in order to better conditions in the United States, according to James J. Hill.

Mr. Hill attacked the Congressional legislation, which, he said, had prevented a more rapid influx of immigration. Laws that have been passed recently are responsible for the flood of immigration to the Argentine Republic, he asserted.

"If he could just tie a bell on each one of our illustrious statesmen who is trying to keep workmen out of this country and adjourn Congress for ten years, I believe the country would see an unprecedented period of prosperity," he said. "Business men then would carry on big undertakings without fear of legislative interruption.

HUERTA BLOCKS NEW REVOLT ON 'FREEDOM DAY'

Mexican Ruler Plans Concentration Camps, and General Massacre of Foes Is Feared.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

MEXICO CITY, May 5.—A new anti-Government plot, which was to have broken into a general uprising to-day, has been nipped in the bud by the aggressive measures of President Huerta. The first news of the conspiracy came from Cuernavaca, capital of Morelos, and stated that this was the day set for an attack on the Government forces.

This is the fifty-first anniversary of the capture of Puebla from the French and is the Mexican Fourth of July.

A national salute fired from a battery at the National Palace in honor of the occasion caused widespread alarm, as many persons thought the city had been attacked.

Massacre Is Foreseen.

The Government has decided to establish concentration camps through Morelos. All inhabitants of the State must gather at these camps or run the risk of being put to death. This step is believed to be the forerunner of a massacre throughout the State. President Huerta has ordered that no quarter be shown the Zapatistas.

Although the Government is trying to minimize the outrage perpetrated by the Zapatistas near the Azumba last Thursday, when a train was wrecked with the loss of 160 lives, further details, adding to the horror of the tragedy, were received here to-day.

Victims Are Tortured.

Men, women and children were tortured before being put to death. The barbarous rebels, with the savagery of cannibals, drank the blood of their victims and ate their flesh. Acts of unbelievable cruelty were practiced on the women and children.

Reports that the Government has completed arrangements to borrow $55,000,000 from France and England on the strength of recognition of the Government by England were officially denied.

Law Forbidding Arms Exportation Effective.

WASHINGTON, May 5.—The joint resolution of Congress March 14, 1912, passed to authorize the President to prevent the exportation of arms and ammunition from the United States into Mexico was made effective by decision of the United States Supreme Court to-day in the cases of the Government against Joseph E. Mesa and Arnulfo Chavez, of El Paso, Texas.

Professor W. H. Taft, in First Yale Lecture

Ex-President Says "Majority of the People Will Never Get the Ballot in United States."

NEW HAVEN, May 5.—"A majority of the people in the United States probably will never be given the ballot," said Professor William Howard Taft, in opening his lecture course on "Some Questions of Government."

He said when the Constitution was adopted a century ago, only about one in 25 of the 4,500,000 people of the country, including women and children, were given the ballot. The number has been constantly extended until to-day about one in six has a vote.

Should the electorate privilege be extended by the admission of women, only about 30 per cent would be given the ballot, and it is not likely that a majority of the people will ever be accorded it.

Senate Committee to Fight Wilson's Plans for Currency Reform

Will Oppose Every Effort to Rush Through Administration Bill.

WASHINGTON, May 5.—The Senate committee on banking and currency is unalterably opposed to a number of the features of currency legislation suggested by President Wilson and Secretary McAdoo.

The members of the committee are wide apart on what the law should be. They say they do not intend to be coerced or impressed into the support of an Administration bill to which they cannot give their adherence.

Practically the only conclusion reached was that there should be no legislation at this session of Congress.

A subcommittee consisting of Senators Owen, Hitchcock, Shafroth, Bristow and Weeks has drafted thirty inquiries to be addressed to prominent bankers and economists throughout the country. Here are some of the questions:

"What are the essential defects of our banking and currency system?"

"Should a new system include State as well as national banks?"

"Should there be one central reserve association or a number, and if the latter, how many?"

"Should the Aldrich-Vreeland act be extended after its expiration in 1914? If so, should it be amended?"

"Should additional currency be permanent or temporary?"

"Should national banks be required to keep their reserves in their own vaults and with their own reserve association?"

"Should the rate on discounts be the same for all, and should this rate be published weekly?"

Politics Barred on Chautauqua Circuits

Booking Agents Give Statesmen "Tip" That Only Old-Time Orators Are Welcome This Year.

WASHINGTON, May 5.—Political speakers are not desired on the summer chautauqua circuits, according to information that reached here to-day. The booking agents have informed a number of Representatives and Senators who make a good deal of extra money in the summer on the lecture platform that old-style lecturers are in demand and that there is no interest in politics.

Representative Hobson, who has arranged a number of speaking engagements, will confine his talks to temperance topics.

Secretary of State Bryan is the chief chautauqua headliner. He generally receives more than $500 for each lecture.

Some of the RECENT Developments in this Growing Section of DEKALB COUNTY

The Mayor and Council of Decatur have let contracts for PAVING parts of COLLEGE AVENUE, CANDLER STREET, M'DONOUGH STREET, JEFFERSON PLACE and PONCE DE LEON AVENUE in DECATUR. Part of this work is now under way.

The GOOD ROADS COMMITTEE of the Decatur Board of Trade has let a contract for macadamizing CANDLER STREET from the corporate limits of DECATUR to Morgan Street, and the work is now being done.

MORGAN STREET in EAST LAKE is now being laid with macadam and tarvia binding to meet Candler Street.

PONCE DE LEON AVENUE is now passable for vehicles from the GEORGIAN TERRACE to the beautiful Court House Square at Decatur, and this beautiful avenue will soon be an exact counterpart of EAST LAKE DRIVE.

When all this work is completed, during the next three or four months, DECATUR will be at the CENTER of the BEST SYSTEM of DRIVEWAYS out of Atlanta.

TILE WALKS are now being laid on KINGS HIGHWAY and CHURCH STREET; thus completing modern sidewalks for these streets to the corporate limits of DECATUR.

The NEW PUBLIC SCHOOL BUILDING—the second in three years—is now being constructed in DECATUR.

Many NEW homes are being erected at East Lake, Oakhurst, Kirkwood, and in other parts of the "DECATUR SECTION" as well as in DECATUR itself.

The people of KIRKWOOD—one of the most attractive parts of the "DECATUR SECTION"—are TURNING THINGS UPSIDE DOWN, grading and macadamizing streets, laying concrete curb and walks, and building new homes in every part of the town.

The STONE MOUNTAIN ELECTRIC LINE extending from Decatur through INGLESIDE, SCOTTDALE and CLARKSTON, to STONE MOUNTAIN is opening up a beautiful NEW country, a most important addition to the "DECATUR SECTION."

DEKALB AVENUE from Mayson's Crossing to Kirkwood, is now being laid with vitrified brick, making another MODERN driveway through KIRKWOOD and OAKHURST to DECATUR.

What is BOUND TO HAPPEN with ALL THESE MODERN IMPROVEMENTS GOING ON IN the "DECATUR SECTION?"

OLD FOLKS FIND NEW REMEDY RELIEVES ALL KIDNEY AND BLADDER MISERIES

Drives Rheumatic Pains Away, Relieves Backache and Bladder Disorders After a Few Doses Are Taken.

Sleep-disturbing bladder weaknesses, backache, rheumatism and the many other kindred ailments which so commonly come with declining years need no longer be a source of dread and misery to those who are past the middle age of life.

The new discovery, Croxone, relieves all such disorders because it removes the very cause of the trouble. It soaks right into the kidneys, through the walls and linings; cleans out the little filtering glands and cells, and gives the kidneys new strength to do their work properly. It neutralizes and dissolves the poisonous uric acid substances that lodge in the joints and muscles, causing rheumatism; and makes the kidneys filter and sift out all the poisonous waste matter from the blood and drive it out of the system.

It matters not how old you are or how long you have suffered, Croxone is so prepared that it is practically impossible to take it into the human system without results. You will find it different from all other remedies. There is nothing else on earth like it. It starts to work immediately and more than a few doses are seldom required to relieve even the most chronic, obstinate case.

You can obtain an original package of Croxone at trifling cost from any first-class druggist. All druggists return the purchase price if Croxone should fail in a single case.

CARNEGIE AND JOHN D. SCORED BY SEN. WORKS

"Any Self-Respecting People Should Be Ashamed to Accept Charity From Them."

WASHINGTON, May 5.—In a speech before the Senate, in which he attacked the Sherman anti-trust law as a failure, Senator Works, of California, bitterly criticised the methods of Andrew Carnegie and John D. Rockefeller in acquiring great fortunes.

Senator Works advocated the passage of measures providing for the criminal punishment of specific acts in restraint of trade and clothing the Interstate Commerce Commission with power to supervise the business of other corporations as it now controls railroads.

He urged that the commission be given power "to investigate any corporation or corporations charged with or suspected of contracting, combining, conspiring or monopolizing in restraint of trade, and to dissolve the combination and place the offending corporations in the hands of a receiver, whose duty it shall be to close up the business of such corporations. It is not enough to dissolve the combination. The corporations themselves should be dissolved and their business wound up."

"Too Lenient With Rich Criminals."

Senator Works declared that rich criminals are dealt with too leniently. He declared there is no remedy but "to take away the discretion of the weaklings on the bench, make the crime a felony and imprisonment imperative."

Speaking of the relation of a protective tariff, trusts and wages paid, Senator Works declared it would be an excellent thing if the Interstate Commerce Commission were given power to adjust tariffs to compel manufacturers to pay fair wages.

Andrew Carnegie and John D. Rockefeller and their charities were handled without gloves. After expressing his surprise that Congress should have considered for one minute the question of incorporating the Rockefeller foundation, Senator Works said of Carnegie's libraries:

Calls John D. a Poor Model.

"Any self-respecting community should be ashamed to accept charity of this kind, under any circumstances. Much more should they refuse it, coming from such a source. As a matter of simple justice and right the money thus accumulated belongs not to the dispenser of these charities, but to the men, women and children whose underpaid toil accumulated the fund.

"We do not want our children to be taught the ways nor the methods of John D. Rockefeller or his kind; nor to be generous with ill-gotten gains; nor to touch, handle or profit by gold that should blister the fingers of the man who has accumulated it by extortion, oppression and crime and is now attempting to rid himself of it by giving it away; nor to become the receivers of stolen goods in the name and under the guise of charity."

300 HOMES OPENED TO PRESBYTERIANS

Committee Looks for Five Hundred to House Assembly Delegates by Wednesday.

More than half of the 500 homes needed to take care of the overflow of delegates to the big Presbyterian convention have been promised, according to a report made at a meeting of the chairmen and members of the sub-committees at the Capital City Club at 1 o'clock this afternoon. The report showed that between 250 and 300 Atlantans have expressed a willingness to throw their homes open for the entertainment of the delegates who were unable to obtain accommodations at hotels or boarding houses.

Prior to the meeting this afternoon the ladies were entertained at lunch by J. K. Orr, general chairman of the entertainment committee.

The committees hope to have the list completed by next Wednesday.

Among the committee chairmen who made a report to-day were Mrs. Clarence Johnson, chairman of the Methodist committee; Mrs. George McCarthy, of the Baptist committee; Mrs. C. B. Wilmer, of the Episcopalian committee, and Mrs. Farlinger, of the Congregational committee.

SLIGHT DAMAGE BY BLAZE AT ARAGON

Fire Causes Panic Among Hotel Guests, but All Escape Without Injury.

Guests at the Aragon Hotel to-day are congratulating themselves that beyond a genuine scare and some slight damage to their personal belongings they are none the worse from a fire that swept the fifth and sixth floors of the building yesterday afternoon.

Of the 200 persons who occupied rooms at the hotel none was hurt, although in the panic that followed the first alarm the corridors were crowded with men and women dragging with them trunks and other personal property.

Charles Casher, a guest rooming on the fifth floor, slept throughout the turmoil and awakened at 5:45 o'clock to inquire the cause of the disturbance.

Henry Reese, a negro porter, discovered the flames in the rear portion of the roof, which, it is believed, originated from defective wiring in the elevator shaft. L. A. Tisdell, the clerk on duty, attempted to clear the top floors of the building without creating a disturbance, but the rapid spread of the flames prevented, and before the fire department arrived the halls and corridors were thronged with the guests rushing pell-mell toward the elevators and stairs.

The building was flooded with water, it being almost ankle deep in the lobby before the flames were extinguished.

Miss Katherine Wright, 314 Houston Street, the telephone operator, is receiving warm praise for her faithfulness in remaining at her post in the dense smoke that choked the lobby until occupants of every room in the building were warned of the danger. Mr. Tisdell is being congratulated upon rescuing two women, Mrs. Agnes Turner and Mrs. Ladd, who had been rendered helpless from fright and had to be carried downstairs.

SUNDAY SCHOOL WORLD RECORD BROKEN HERE

Largest Attendance Ever Known Brought Out by Contest. Great Sunday Rally.

Atlanta is just now recovering from its wonder over the record-breaking spectacle of yesterday, when more than 7,000 Sunday school scholars of the First Christian and Second Baptist Churches formed a gigantic procession to march to a Sunday school rally.

Enthusiasm that marked the occasion came as the result of a thrilling membership contest, of which the demonstration was the crowning feature.

A result was the enrollment of the largest single Sunday school in the world, as experts declared the First Christian Sunday school to be when yesterday the roll call revealed 4,129 members. The previous record, of about 2,800, was held by Glasgow, Scotland.

The announcement brought thrilling applause. The applause came again at the Auditorium when the pastors of the two churches talked of the contest and its results.

7,000 in Procession.

The procession, beginning at the State Capitol at 10:15 o'clock, was headed by the two pastors, Rev. John E. White and Rev. L. O. Bricker, and the two superintendents, John S. Spalding and C. V. LeCraw. Thomas Day and R. A. Burnett were marshals of the day, assisted by E. K. Martin, Homer Hall, W. C. Davlett, H. W. Quinn, A. W. Malone, Fred Patterson, Joseph A. Hall and Fred Hannah.

Marching down Washington Street to the Auditorium, the great procession was the target for fire from moving picture cameras. The Auditorium was filled, as no grand opera crowd has filled it, to the last seat in the highest balcony row.

Dr. anad Mrs. Percy J. Starnes were leaders in the musical program.

Christian Church Leads.

The score in the membership contest was announced:

First Christian Church attendance, 4,129; points scored, 10,987; contest standing, 55,344.

Second Baptist attendance, 2,197; points scored, 9,558; contest standing, 48,083.

The contest began twelve weeks ago when the First Christian Church challenged the Second Baptist to a race for an enlarged enrollment. The losing school would entertain at a picnic to the winning school. The results were greater than had been anticipated.

The contest, its moving spirits believe, will be spread to other Sunday schools and an effort to make of Atlanta the foremost Sunday school city in the world will be launched.

The contest will close next Sunday.

INVADES POLICE STATION; SEEKS GUN AND $6200

James K. Tupper, Much Excited, Also Tells Chief About Some Conspiracy—Locked Up.

Chief of Detectives Lanford was busily engaged with detectives on the Phagan murder mystery shortly before noon Monday when an excited man, giving his name as James K. Tupper, 121 Plum Street, summoned him from the conference and, with an air of mystery, called him aside and asked for a pistol.

"Lend me a pistol for a few minutes," he exclaimed, excitedly.

Taken by surprise, the Chief eyed the stranger closely, noticing a strange gleam in his eyes and that he appeared pale and agitated. The man declined to give his reason for wanting a pistol, but insisted that the Chief let him have one immediately.

Chief Lanford stepped back into his office on the pretext of getting a revolver, but the stranger, evidently divining that his purpose was to have him detained, darted down the stairs to the second floor and into the office of Police Chief Beavers.

Approaching close to the side of the Chief, who was seated at his desk, the man, who by this time was all atremble, startled the Chief by demanding:

"I want to know all about this conspiracy. You just as well tell me, because I'm going to know right now."

When asked what he meant by "the conspiracy," the strange caller replied:

"You know what conspiracy. You know what I'm doing here, and what I want, and you just as well come clean."

Then Wanted $6,200 Check.

Chief Beavers humored the man until he could telephone to the station sergeant's office and summon a call officer. In the meantime, the man demanded of the Chief that he turn over to him a check for $6,200 left there for him.

"Who told you I had a check for you?" asked the Chief.

"Why, I overheard a man and woman talking down on the street, and I heard them say the check had been left here for me—and I want it."

He was unable to give any idea as to what the check was for. Policeman Hamilton escorted him to a cell until he could be investigated.

Standard Accused Of Abusing Labor

Investigators Charge Corporation Works Men in New York 38 Hours Out of 48.

NEW YORK, May 5.—Charges that more than 2,000 firemen and other employees of the Standard Oil Company plants in and around New York are subjected to great hardships were made to-day by an investigating committee appointed by the American Federation of Labor and the International Brotherhood of Stationary Firemen.

The investigators, in their report, recite that once every two weeks when the day and night shifts change the men are compelled to work a double shift and then, after only ten hours' relief, must come back to work fourteen hours more, making a total of 38 hours work out of the possible 48.

The wages of the men averaged from $15 to $20. The investigators worked secretly.

British Ashamed of Their Paltry Graft

But They Have Adopted the Word Which Fits Their Conditions.

LONDON, May 5.—There has been a general, not to say formal, adoption of the American word "graft," for want of anything so concise and descriptive, in the revelations that have come in an investigation by the Government, an effort to show that there has been a fixed tariff or "scale of prices" for the selling of public appointments by the Poor Law Board and that there has also been systematic bribery in contracts.

It is rather sheepishly pointed out that the only difference between the corruption of local bodies here and in the United States is that the loot here is so paltry.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, May 5.—Cleveland's church jury has gone on record against mothers-in-law. Called into service by Rev. R. J. Owes Her Life to Eckman's Alterative

Eckman's Alterative is being used with success in the treatment of Tuberculosis in all parts of the country. Persons who have taken it improved, gained weight, exhausting night sweats stopped, fever diminished, and many recovered. If you are interested to know more about it, we will put you in touch with some who are now well. You can investigate and judge for yourself. Read of Mrs. Govert's recovery:

Griffith, Ind.

"Gentlemen: About September 10, 1908, my mother-in-law was taken sick with catarrhal pneumonia, which developed into lung trouble. In January, when Rev. William Berg, of St. Michael's Church, at Schererville, Ind., prepared for her death, he recommended that I get Eckman's Alterative, and see if it would not give her some relief. The attending physician declared she had consumption and was beyond all medical aid. So I immediately had Rev. William Berg to send for a bottle. Practically without hope of recovery, I insisted that she try the Alterative, which she did. I am glad to say that she soon began to improve. Now, she works as hard as ever, weighs 20 pounds heavier than she ever did before she took sick, and is in good health."

(Affidavit) JOS. GRIMMER.

Eckman's Alterative has been proven by many years' test to be most efficacious in cases of severe throat and lung affections, bronchitis, bronchial asthma, stubborn colds and in upbuilding the system. Does not contain narcotics, poisons, or habit-forming drugs. For sale by all Jacobs' drug stores and other leading druggists. Write the Eckman Laboratory, Philadelphia, Pa., for booklet telling of recoveries and additional evidence.

Do You Make Biscuits This Way?

2 cups flour; 4 teaspoons Baking Powder; 2 tablespoons Swift's Silver-Leaf Lard; ½ cups milk; ½ teaspoon salt. Mix dry ingredients and sift. Work in lard, add milk gradually. If too stiff add a little more milk or water. Roll out on floured board to ½ inch thick. Cut and place in greased pan. Bake in hot oven. They are delicious.

Swift's Silver-Leaf Lard

is the very best shortening for Baking Powder Biscuits, because it has just the right consistency and richness to make them perfectly light and flaky and you can't taste the lard in them.

Swift's Silver-Leaf Lard is put up in tight covered, new tin pails under the close supervision of Government inspectors.

It is as clean and pure as lard can be and it makes such tasty pastry.

CANDLER NAILS RATE CUT WAIL BY RAILROADS

Atlanta Expert Declares Neither Interstate Nor State Commissioners Reduced Revenue.

"Railroads, in my opinion, cannot consistently claim that the Interstate Commerce Commission or the State railroad Commissions have decreased their revenues by lowering rates. Railroad Commissions have decreased others have been raised. The rate per ton per mile for freight has remained fairly stable."

C. M. Candler, of the Georgia Railroad Commission, one of the best informed men in the United States on railroad problems, makes this comment in connection with the Eastern railroads' application for a 5 per cent increase in rates, which just now is arousing much controversy and interest, as foreshadowing similar action in other sections of the nation.

"Operating expenses of the railroads, however, have increased," says Mr. Candler. "Our figures show conclusively that every item which goes to make up the expense of operation has increased steadily with the single exception of coal, which is about the same.

"If the railroads want an increase in freight rates, if it be true as they claim, that present rates do not permit of proper returns on their investment, they should base their demands square upon the plank of increased expenses, and fight the thing out along that line and that alone.

Denies Ruinous Reductions.

"Any claim that commissions have made ruinous reductions can not be upheld successfully.

"A layman can understand it readily. The Interstate Commerce Commission, for example, does not make rates. It simply takes up rates against which complaint is made.

"Suppose that an increase is made on one classification embracing 10,000 articles. Shippers will fight only 50 or 60 increases. Even if they win, the other rates stand. Then, by changing articles from one classification to a higher, and by similar manipulation, the railroads manage to keep their revenues at a stable figure.

"The commission can regulate inequalities and remedy discriminations. That is all they can do, and all they ever have attempted.

"Of course, in Georgia, the situation is somewhat different. Here railroads cannot increase rates without our permission. And if they lower a rate, that rate at once becomes the commission's rate, and it cannot be changed without a proper hearing.

Try to Make Rates Fair.

"But the Georgia Commission has made no sweeping reductions. It has not tried. All that it ever has tried to do is make the rates fair alike to all localities."

The railroads make the plea that in order to return fair profits, and in order to build up a surplus for emergencies and for additional equipment and improvements, they must have a wider margin between operating expense and revenue.

In this connection, the report of the Georgia Railroad Commission, just published, gives interesting figures. The ten trunk lines in Georgia now pay an average of $29.12 per ton for steel rails, an increase of four per cent over 1908. Cross ties have increased in cost in the same period from 34 to 42 cents apiece; lumber from $16.02 to $19.41 per M. Locomotives now cost an average of $19,409 against $15,146 in 1908, an increase of 28 per cent, and passenger coaches have increased in cost from $6,739 to $9,252; box, coal and flat cars, an average of 18 per cent.

Of course, rolling stock bought nowadays is better than four years ago. Still it represents increased expense.

Unions Raise Fund For Aid of Darrow

Chicago Workmen to Partly Reimburse Attorney for Fortune Dissipated in Trial.

CHICAGO, May 5.—The Chicago Federation of Labor to-day was pledged to raise a fund to partially reimburse Clarence Darrow, labor attorney, whose fortune of $150,000 was dissipated in his own defense following his two trials which resulted from his part in the defense of the McNamara brothers at Los Angeles.

Darrow addressed the Federation yesterday.

"When society is in such a condition that laws must be passed to prevent women working more than ten hours it is time that some changes be made," said the attorney. "One cure would be the uniting of all unions in one great political machine."

ROUND-ABOUT-TOWN STORIES

Buttermilk Marathon by Insurance Clerks.

Six insurance clerks who are employed in a skyscraper not a thousand miles from Five Points have entered a buttermilk marathon and every day about noon they make a run.

They congregate about the counter of a soda fount which makes a specialty of lactone buttermilk and there they drink, and drink, and drink. All of them used to be thin and dyspeptic looking. But now they are taking on flesh and say buttermilk did it.

"I used to be very fond of beer," said one of the six as he sipped his milk, "but this lactone stuff has it beaten seventeen ways. I have developed a real craving for buttermilk and my doctor tells me it is the best thing in the world for me. I am getting fat," and he showed a first class double chin to prove his assertion.

"Lots of folks are beginning to drink buttermilk," said the soda water clerk. "Nearly every day I get acquainted with a new lactone 'fan' and I am increasing my order for milk every week. If this demand keeps up I'll have to enlarge the stand."

Won't Trust Own Memory, So Writes to Himself.

One of the hardest worked business men in town is a man who is afraid to trust his memory. To quote him he has about a million different things to think about and he lives in daily terror that he will forget something important which ought to be attended to.

Not long ago he hit upon a scheme that works admirably and saves him much wear and tear of mind. He writes notes to himself every day, jogging his memory about something that has to be looked after.

If he is to attend a meeting of some committee of which he is a member he will dictate a letter to his stenographer to that effect and in the morning it is turned over to him with the other mail. He carries a package of postals in his pocket all the time and if while walking along the street he should happen to think of something which he wishes to do next day he'll stop, scribble a note to himself, drop the card in the nearest letter box and next morning it is delivered at his desk.

"Some of my friends wonder how I am able to attend to so many things and make so few mistakes," said this man. "It's system, that's all. It's a great scheme. Saves me lots of gray matter and I couldn't spare much of it."

Mother's Advice To Her Daughter

A Real Live Doll to Fondle Is Woman's Greatest Happiness.

One of the most important matters about which women concern themselves is their future status as a grandmother. And she is wisdom itself who knows of or learns of that famous remedy, Mother's Friend. This is an external application for the abdominal muscles and breasts. It certainly has a wonderful influence, allays all fear, banishes all pain, is a most grateful encouragement to the young, expectant mother, and permits her to go through the period happy in mind, free in body and thus destined to anticipate woman's greatest happiness as nature intended she should.

The action of Mother's Friend makes the muscles free, pliant and responsive to expansion. Thus all strain and tension upon the nerves and ligaments is avoided, and, in place of a period of discomfort and consequent dread, it is a season of calm repose and joyful expectation.

There is no nausea, no morning sickness, no nervous twitching, none of that constant strain known to so many women, hence Mother's Friend is really one of the greatest blessings that could be devised.

This splendid and certain remedy can be had of any druggist at $1.00 a bottle, and is sure to prove of inestimable value, not only upon the mother, but upon the health and future of the child. Write to Bradfield Regulator Co., 132 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga., for their book to expectant mothers.

LABOR BUREAU PLANS TO ACT AS A MEDIATOR

Stanley Wants the Legislature to Permit Department to Arbitrate Capital-Workers Disputes.

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

Commission of Labor H. M. Stanley likely will ask the incoming Legislature to increase the efficiency of the department of which he is the head, particularly in the matter of its friendly intervention in disputes between capital and labor, wherever he may have reason to believe that his services would be welcomed or calculated to bring about a solution of questions involved.

This, in all probability, will open the way to other propositions for legislative consideration, and somewhere along the line a compulsory arbitration bill likely will be presented.

It is too early to say what the new Legislature will do with these suggestions. It not only is a new body—that is, composed largely of untried material—but all Legislatures proverbially are slow to assume attitudes in advance of the introduction of legislation touching the relation between labor and capital.

It perhaps is safe enough to say, howevere, that the chances of putting through a compulsory arbitration bill are slim. There is a disposition to think that the Department of Labor could be made to play a better part, through amplification of its powers and discretions, in disputes between capital and labor in Georgia than heretofore has been possible, but there is no likelihood that the State Legislature would be willing to set up a board of arbitration with compelling powers.

It is possible that a provision for special boards in special cases might be enacted—a board composed of one representative each from the disputing parties, they to select a third—with further provisions for making binding the awards of such boards, but it is doubtful whether the Legislature would care to go further than that.

There is little doubt, however, that the entire question of the relations between capital and labor in Georgia will be opened wide in the next General Assembly, and some genuinely constructive legislation is anticipated.

It is certain now that Secretary of the Navy Daniels and his party will arrive in Savannah on board a United States destroyer from Port Royal, S. C., at 6 o'clock Sunday evening, May 11.

The Secretary and his wife, together with Mr. Palmer, will be driven at once to the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Pleasant A. Stovall, whose guests they will be during their stay in Savannah.

Later in the evening the North Carolina Society, in Savannah, will take Secretary Daniels out for an informal dinner and smoker. Mrs. Daniels will be taken charge by lady friends at the same time.

The party will leave at 1:20 a. m. the following morning for Raleigh, N. C., their home, over the Seaboard Air Line Railway.

Their stay in Savannah will therefore only be about six hours, but the program arranged will guarantee that the friends of Secretary and Mrs. Daniels will see something of them at that time.

Unless the new membership of the Legislature produces something of a surprise by way of a good dresser, it now seems probable that Representative "Bob" Hardeman, of Jefferson, will retain his well-earned right and title to be known as the "Beau Brummel of the House."

Hardeman is a wonderful dresser. His sartorial philosophy is exact and altogether pleasing. On real hot days—such as come inevitably when the Georgia Legislature is in session—Hardeman is a human cucumber in its most fetching make-up. He can deliver a fifteen-minutes' speech, overflowing with eloquence and emphasis, vehement in appeal and animated in gesture—and then sit down, as cool as a cold storage plant, and as free of perspiration as a tadpole.

Hardeman never wilts a collar, never mops his alabaster brow, and never pants for breath. He is always and ever the same immaculate and well-groomed "Bob."

And the man in the next House, if such man there be, who robs him of his title will have to go some—that's all!

Dr. Joe P. Bowdoin, of Adairsville, who has just been elected grand high priest of the Royal Arch Masons of Georgia and grand master of the Grand Council of the Royal and Select Master Masons of Georgia, is one of the most popular men in Northwest Georgia, and has figured prominently in the politics of that section for several years.

Time and again he has been mentioned as prospective legislative material, but always has declined to be a candidate. It may be that he will stick to his resolve never to enter the General Assembly—for his political activity never has been personal to himself—but if he should come either to the House or the Senate he would be a most valuable member.

The current issue of The Baxley Banner carries the following interesting statement: "Senator R. Toombs DuBose, of Clarke County, will introduce at the next Legislature a bill providing for a tax commission whose duty it shall be to gather data on the situation in the State, and, with the aid of the Attorney General and Comptroller, sit in recess, hear any citizen who may wish to appear before it and report to the next Legislature recommending legislation which the facts and conditions they find may warrant. Mr. DuBose is in thorough accord with any plan to get better tax laws enacted and to get definitely at the situation he favors a commission."

Apparently, the State press is not warming up particularly to the proposed re-offering of the Tippins bill in the House of Representatives.

The State press seems to think the people got enough of that fight in the last Legislature, and that they would be much obliged to the General Assembly if it would let them off this time.

Florida to Honor Secretary of Navy

Governor, Cabinet and Legislators to Meet Daniels in Pensacola To-morrow.

PENSACOLA, FLA., May 5.—Secretary of the Navy Josephus Daniels, accompanied by Mrs. Daniels and his aide, Commander Palmer, passed through Pensacola last night en route to New Orleans. He will return here to-morrow morning and inspect the Pensacola Navy Yard with a view to reopening it.

Elaborate preparations for his entertainment have been made. Governor Trammell and Cabinet and about 400 members of the Florida Legislature will arrive to-night to meet him. Governor O'Neal of Alabama and Senator Bryan and Congressman Wilson of Florida are also expected.

CHICAGO, May 5.—Animal dances (tempered with decency) to-day stand approved by the dancing masters of Chicago.

At their monthly meeting the masters stamped as "O. K." the "Palm Beach sway."

"The dance is naughty—just naughty enough to be nice," said President Hutchinson, of the masters' association. "It has all the shoulder movements and the swing of the bear trot and bunny hug, but the steps are those of the old-fashioned waltz."

Has a Way to Stop Wild Automobiles

Install Contrivance for Controlling Spark Magneto, Urges French Expert.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, May 5.—A simple way in which passengers in a runaway auto can stop the machine is suggested by a distinguished French mechanical engineer. What he urges is the installation at the back seat of the auto of a contrivance for controlling the spark magneto in case the chauffeur becomes sick or dies or is thrown out of the machine.

Such a contrivance, he says, should be compulsory under law, and it would cost but $1 for each auto, and it could be covered with a glass case, to be broken only in case of emergency.

Think 'Man Without Past' Admiral's Son

Mysterious Patient in Minnesota Insane Asylum May Be 'Jack' Ramsay of Washington.

WASHINGTON, May 5.—It has been suggested that the mysterious patient in the Minnesota State Hospital for the Insane at Rochester, Minn., who has forgotten his identity and his past through some mental kink caused by a blow on the head, may be George D. Ramsay, usually called "Jack," who disappeared from Washington in September, 1908.

George D. Ramsay is a son of Rear Admiral Francis Munroe Ramsay, retired, one of the heroes of the war between the States.

PENSACOLA NAMES FIRST COMMISSIONERS TUESDAY

PENSACOLA, FLA., May 5.—Tomorrow the first primary for the nomination of three city commissioners under a new charter will be held. Seventeen candidates have announced. The salaries are $3,000 per year each. The commissioners will go in office early in June.

PONY CONTEST STIRS INTEREST ALL OVER DIXIE

Nominations Pouring in by Telegraph, Telephone and Mail. Attracts Record Attention.

Never before in the South has a newspaper contest attracted the attention that the Georgian and American's pony outfit contest is drawing.

Nominations come in by telegraph, telephone and mail. Nearly 100 contestants already are in the race, and it is likely that the number will be greatly increased within a few days.

An early start is a great advantage. Late comers are at something of a disadvantage, and as the Georgian and American want to see all on an even footing, it is hoped that if you contemplate backing a candidate, you will send in the name of the boy or girl at once.

By far the most entrants are from Atlanta, of course, for eight ponies are to be given away in Atlanta alone. But look at the list of towns in Georgia which are represented—a partial list, not corrected up to the minute. Every mail brings more, but here are a few:

Even Come From Alabama.

Lithonia, Decatur, Blakeley, Ft. McPherson, Union City, Forsyth Rome, Sparta, Barnesville, Fayetteville and Bolton.

Then from outside the State, such widely separated localities as Anderson, S. C., and Piedmont, Ala., are represented.

In answer to many inquiries, the subscription books for the use of contestants, now are ready and may be had on application.

These books contain all the rules of the contest; the limits of the districts, subscription rates and votes credited for subscriptions of various lengths. Contestants, upon securing a new subscription, fill out a page in one of these books which gives the subscriber a receipt, is a voucher for a certain number of votes for the contestant and a record for our offices to assure the new patron that he will get his paper promptly and at the right address.

Made Easy for Contestants.

Everything is being made easy for the contestants, and you never saw anything more convenient than these books.

Coupons good for votes are appearing daily in the Georgian. Many shrewd contestants already are saving them, and getting their friends to save them. Remember, in the daily Georgian, each coupon is valued at five votes, and in the Sunday American, the coupon is worth fifteen votes. From seven consecutive papers, you can get 45 votes, and 45 votes weekly will help win a prize.

Here is a word for parents who perhaps have been contemplating the purchase of a pony for the children:

Do not overlook the Georgian and American offer. You intend of course to buy a good pony. But the Georgian and American have used the services of an expert in picking the twelve to be given as prizes. This is service you could not get, or afford if you could get it, in the purchase of one pony.

DISASTROUS FIRE SWEEPS MOLINO, NEAR PENSACOLA

PENSACOLA, FLA., May 5.—A disastrous fire occurred at Molino, 20 miles from here on the Louisville and Nashville Railroad, last night, several business houses being entirely destroyed. It is impossible to learn the value of the property destroyed. The Molino Mercantile Company's store, a meat market, a blacksmith shop, a restaurant, an ice house and one residence burned.

In your hand you hold a five-cent piece.

Right at the grocer's hand is a moisture-proof package of Uneeda Biscuit. He hands you the package—you hand him the coin. A trifling transaction?

No! A remarkable one—for you have spent the smallest sum that will buy a package of good food; and the grocer has sold you the most nutritious food made from flour—as clean and crisp and delicious as it was when it came from the oven.

License for Kissing, Pastor's Reform Idea

Policeman Urged to Guard Over Public Spooners—"Lips Not Fool's Paradise."

MINNEAPOLIS, May 5.—A city license for spooners was advocated in a sermon by Rev. G. L. Morrill on the subject, "When to Kiss."

"Persistent public spooners should be compelled to take out a license," he said, "and an unjealous policeman should be placed on guard to watch over them."

Other things the minister said were:

"A girl should make her lips an altar of incense and not a fool's paradise."

"She had better kiss a thoroughbred lap dog than an ill-bred, turkey-trotting dude."

"A kiss is love's trademark and may be the bliss of heaven or the blister of hades."

This pamphlet also will be presented to Georgia Senators and Representatives in Congress as a basis for impeachment proceedings against Judge Speer.

2 Moonshiners Taken In Duel at Ben Hill

County Police Battle Negroes in Thick Canebrake—Still in Full Operation Seized.

That negroes in Atlanta have adopted not only the trade of the mountaineer moonshiner, but have incorporated his fighting disposition in their code, was revealed in a pistol duel Sunday night between a squad of county policemen and five still operators. As a result, John Love and Clem Wilson are in jail, the first with a bullet hole in his hand.

Policemen Lockhart, Oliver, Hayne, Peacock and Jackson were called to Ben Hill late Sunday, and when about to abandon search for the suspects, were startled by a gunshot. The flash of the gun betrayed the whereabouts of the negroes and the thick canebrake was stormed. Three of the party escaped in the darkness. A full-fledged still in full operation was taken.

The trips to the canal will be made in October from Mobile, where the fifth annual convention of the Southern Commercial Congress will be held.

PLAN OBSERVANCE OF GHENT TREATY

International Committee, Arranging for 1914 Peace Celebration, Welcomed to New York.

NEW YORK, May 5.—There was a historic gathering at the City Hall here to-day, when the members of the International Conference Committee, who are arranging the program for next year's anniversary celebration of the 100 years of uninterrupted peace between England and the United States, were welcomed by Mayor Gaynor.

The Mayor's address of welcome was responded to by Lord Weardale, the head of the English delegation and president of the Inter-parliamentary Union.

The formal address of the day was delivered by ex-President Taft, who voiced the conviction that within 100 years war would be heard of no more.

Although the centenary of the treaty of Ghent will not be reached until December 24, 1914, it is the purpose of the conferees to make elaborate plans in advance for a suitable celebration, which will include ceremonies at Ghent and in churches and schools and by legislative bodies and other organizations throughout the English-speaking world.

The conference committee will be in session for several days, and during that time will visit Washington, Richmond, Chicago, Buffalo, Cleveland, Philadelphia and Boston, where local committees, headed by the mayors of their respective cities, will look after their entertainment.

Hibernians Oppose Peace Celebration.

WASHINGTON, May 5.—Strong opposition to Government participation in the proposed celebration of the 100th anniversary of the signing of the treaty of Ghent is being voiced by Hibernian societies throughout the United States, according to information reaching here to-day.

Petitions are coming to Congress urging Representatives to prevent the Government from taking any cognizance of 100 years of amity between Great Britain and this country. A bill pending before Congress, providing $10,000,000 for a peace memorial bridge and other projects at Niagara Falls, on the International boundary lines, it is said, will not be passed on account of this opposition.

Irish-American Representatives in Congress declare they will vote against an appropriation for an official celebration of any kind.

Women of Portland Serve in Elections

City Auditor Asks for Them as Judges and Clerks So Incompetents May Be Barred.

PORTLAND, OREG., May 5.—Women are serving as judges and clerks at the city primary nominating election to-day. City Auditor Barbur some time ago addressed communications to the various women's organizations asking that the names of women who would be willing to serve on the election boards be sent to the auditor's office.

"We are having a great deal of difficulty in getting judges and clerks," reads Mr. Barbur's communication, "and it has occurred to me that as this is the first time the women are to vote here, it would be to their credit if the election could be carried on in a better manner than in the past.

"You are probably familiar with the trouble experienced at the last November election by having incompetent judges and clerks serving on the boards. It is my desire that you suggest the names of competent women. It is not alone of importance to all the women voters, but to the city of Portland, that the coming election be held in a competent manner, that an honest count may be had."

Every employee of the Bureau of Animal Industry in Georgia, South Carolina and Florida will be vaccinated this week against typhoid fever, according to an order issued by Dr. E. M. Neighbert, Chief of the Department.

The scheme is suggested that employees of every department in the State Government as well be vaccinated."

Husband Slain; Bride And Art Pupil Held

Girl Tells the Police Admirer Shot Spouse When Latter Accused Him as Too Friendly.

CHICAGO, May 5.—Mrs. Irene Westfall Lacount, aged 17, bride of four months, was held in a cell today not knowing that her husband, Harry Leon Lacount, had been killed by her confessed admirer, Joe Williams, an art student, who came to Chicago from Kansas City. The police merely told her that her husband had been hurt in a fight with Williams. Williams is held on a charge of murder.

Mrs. Lacount said that shortly after their marriage Lacount was ordered to Panama by the Government, where he worked as a canal inspector. Returning here unexpectedly, he learned of the relations between his wife and Williams. Mrs. Lacount said that when her husband attempted to talk to Williams the latter shot him.

Hit by Baseball Bat; Given $4,375

Former South Dakota Man Wins Personal Injury Suit After Long Fight. Judgment Paid Him.

SIOUX FALLS, S. DAK., May 10.—After having been pending in the State and Federal courts for nearly three years, the case of Gus Siebke against the McCook County Fair Association has been terminated by the payment to Siebke of $4,375 damages, which was the amount of judgment granted the young man by the United States Court in Sioux Falls.

The payment of the judgment ends a remarkable case for personal damages. While attending the McCook County Fair at Salem in 1910, Siebke was struck on the head by a baseball bat, which slipped from the hands of a player. He instituted a suit by which he sought to recover damages of $10,000, on the ground that proper protection to spectators in the grandstand had not been provided by the fair association because there was no wire screen in front of the seats.

The case originally was tried in the Circuit Court of McCook County, where a jury decided in favor of the fair association. Afterward Siebke removed to Iowa, and later instituted a damage suit in the United States Court in this city, where he was granted the judgment which has just been paid, ending the case.

NEW YORK, May 5.—The application for a warrant for the arrest of Mayor Gaynor on the charge of criminal libel, made by Ralph Pulitzer, proprietor of The Evening World, was denied to-day by Magistrate Kernochan.

The magistrate said that no proof had been presented to him to substantiate the charge that the Mayor actually caused to be printed certain libelous statements he was alleged to have made concerning Joseph Pulitzer, late proprietor of The World, and father of Ralph, in an address at a banquet in Brooklyn on February 4 last.

Crepes de Chine Are Not Scarce---Here

Nor are any of their very worthy sisters, the crepe meteors.

Newly arrived and priced at $1.50 and $1.75 a yard are crepes de chine, 40 inches wide, full of weight and worth, in black, white, navy, light blue, Alice, Copenhagen, King's blue, electric blue, old blue, taupe, gray, lilac, mais, brown—in short, in all good colors.

Other new arrivals are crepe meteors and charmeuse in plain colors, some of them shades still novel, 40 and 44 inches wide, at $3.00 to $7.50 a yard. Corded brocades and the plain bengalines that are being used in happy combinations now, 45 inches wide, at $3.50 and $4.50 a yard. The new Cubist silks, splotched and splattered over with color on color and showing queer little geometric patterns. These 22 to 36 inches wide, at $1.50 to $2.50 a yard.

Vudorize Your Sleeping Porch

From the outside Vudor shades give a finish to the porch and an air of hominess to the house that are very attractive. They make the porch a place everyone will seek during the hot, sultry days of summer. But you must not confuse Vudor Shades with ordinary bamboo screens. There is all the difference in the world between them, both in the service and in the comfort they bring.

The light, strong wooden strips of Vudor Shades are lock-stitched together by heavy seine twine so the strips will not work out at the sides of the shades and become broken. The twine is rot-proof and the raising cords will not annoy you by curling up and sticking in the pulleys.

Vudor Shades are indelibly stained (not painted nor dipped) in soft, pleasing colors to harmonize with your house. They will retain their newness and withstand sun and rain for many seasons.

Vudor Shades repel the sun's rays but let in all the light and air you want. You can see out, but no one can see in. They make the porch a delightfully cool and secluded place where your family can spend the long summer days and where you may rest in comfort during nights when the thought of a hot bedroom banishes sleep.

We are exclusive agents for these splendid shades in Atlanta. A telephone call will bring one of our men to measure your porch, to fit the shade just so.

MANY STARS TO BOX THIS WEEK AT NEW YORK

NEW YORK, May 5.—The St. Nicholas Athletic Club will be in the field again this week with another high-class bill, featuring with ten-round bouts between boys of three classes. The main event will show Johnny Lore, of the West Side, against Sam Robideau, one of the best lightweights which Philadelphia has turned out in some time. Robideau has had considerable experience, and is regarded as one of the most promising boys of his class. In the ten-round semi-final the contestants will be George "Knockout" Brown, of Chicago, and Leo Houck, of Lancaster. These two middleweights have been figuring in bouts with the top-notchers of their class for the past two years. In the opening ten-round bout the principals will be Kid Black, of the West Side, and Tommy Houck, of Philadelphia.

THE Atlantic Garden Athletic Club will also put on an all-star show at its club house to-morrow night. Frankie Burns, the Jersey City bantamweight, who has fought all the leading boys of his class, including the champion, as well as two featherweight champions, will oppose Jimmy Murray, in the main event. Battling Hurley, of Passaic, and Young Frank, of the West Side, will come together in the ten-round semi-final, and the opening bout will show Young Gradwell, of Newark, vs. Gene Gilvey, a local 133-pound boy.

THREE ten-round bouts will be put on to-morrow night at the Brooklyn Beach Athletic Club, of South Brooklyn. Jack Hanlon and Al McCloskey, heavyweights, will be the headliners. The other bouts will bring together Jack O'Donnell vs. Young McGowan, and George Frazer vs. Jimmy Jarvis.

The new Polo A. A. will put on its regular weekly show Friday night. On Saturday night the usual programs will be put on at the Fairmont. St. Nicholas and Atlantic Garden Clubs, of New York; the Irving National and Gowanus Clubs, of Brooklyn, and the Liberal Athletic Club, of Staten Island.

THE real feature on the week's card is the show to be staged at the Forty-fourth Street Sporting Club. It was intended to reopen this club to-night, but a postponement was found necessary and the show arranged for to-night will be put on Friday night. The star event of the card will bring together Mike Gibbons, of St. Paul, and Dave Kurtz, the rugged middleweight of Newark. Gibbons has not boxed here since his unsatisfactory affair with Eddie McGoorty at Madison Square Garden several months ago.

In the ten-round semi-final at the same show Tom Gibbons, who made such an impression in his two recent bouts here, will test his speed and skill against Antoine Pollet, the Canadian light-heavyweight, who won two bouts by the knockout route at the new Polo A. A. Another ten-round bout will complete the card.

MORAN FOUGHT M'CARTY WITH BROKEN HAND

By Ed Curley.

NEW YORK, May 5.—There was a semblance of a tragedy enacted last week at the St. Nicholas A. C., when Frank Moran battled Luther McCarty ten hard rounds. The crowd cheered on Moran when he landed a telling punch on the acknowledged best man of the white hope division.

Moran always answered with a smile and was apparently the most cheerful man at the scene. He left the ring laughing and joking, but it was only by a strong effort that the blond-haired gladiator acted the part. Down deep in his heart there was a leaden feeling, for Moran knew what few others were aware of; his right hand was totally out of business through the breaking of a small bone, and what was more important he wasn't to receive a penny for his services.

Held Luther Even.

For 30 minutes he fought McCarty, and in the majority of rounds gave as well as he received. All the time he was in action Moran realized that with a useless hand he did not have the slightest chance of knocking out McCarty, which feat would be the only solace for the fact that he was fighting for nothing.

It was an exhibition of gameness, and the real heroism of the whole affair was that Moran carried out his part without a murmur. There was nothing for him to gain and everything for him to lose. He went through with it and gave the spectators their money's worth, for he did most of the forcing and made the fight.

Few realized that the fight was as good as canceled Wednesday morning. Moran's handlers knew he was really unfit to enter the ring and wanted him to call the affair off. He said, "No."

Few Morans in Ring.

Again in the evening he heard the receipts were only a little over $3,000. According to his contract, he was to receive a percentage on all over $4,800. When he was told that all he was to receive was a beating and that the injured hand would be accepted as a legitimate excuse, Moran simply said: "I'll fight McCarty if he knocks me out in the first round. I never ran away from a fight and no one is going to ever say I dodged McCarty."

There are few Morans in the ring.

NELSON SAYS HE WILL QUIT RING ON MAY 4

PHILADELPHIA, PA., May 5.—Battling Nelson last night announced his retirement from the prize ring after his fight in Pittsburg on May 14.

He declares that he is satisfied that he never can be a contender for the lightweight crown. "I promised the public I would make this announcement when I had satisfied myself that I could not come back. I am satisfied."

PELICANS SELL COTTON KNAUPP TO BILLIKENS

FATE OF MITT GAME ON COAST DECIDED TODAY

By H. M. Walker.

LOS ANGELES, May 5.—"How would you feel if you owned a business and that was worth $100,000 and knew that a 'soup' peddler was hiding in the basement trying to hand you a McNamara highball?"

Thomas Jefferson McCarey's answer when asked if he was feeling a bit nervous.

The Browne bill, aimed to kill boxing contests in California, is to be taken up again to-day in Sacramento. The fate of the game should be known inside the next few hours.

As McCarey, together with Promoter James W. Coffroth, of San Francisco, practically controls the whole world so far as championship contests are concerned, it will be seen that he is not padding his assets when he mentions the mere sum of $100,000.

"I can not believe that the sport will be legislated out of the State," said McCarey to-day.

"For ten years we have handled it here in so clean a manner that the enemies of the game, 99 per cent of whom never witnessed a game, have been unable to say a truthful word against it."

It is learned from a reliable source that the city of New Orleans would welcome McCarey in case the boxing game is killed in California.

Twenty-round contests are now permissible in Louisiana, and the Crescent City would become the logical championship battleground with this state closed.

Tommy Walsh, manager of Joe Mandot, the Southern lightweight, had a few words to say concerning the New Orleans situation.

ANOTHER MAN CURED OF RHEUMATISM

Quaker Herb Extract Again Produces a Startling Result.

At last it seems a remedy has been discovered which actually gives results. Quaker Herb Extract, which has been introduced at Coursey & Munn's drug store, has certainly produced such marvelous results that it has proven its worth. This great remedy, composed of God's choicest gifts to mankind, viz., herbs, roots, barks and blossoms, is the same remedy which has been so successfully used by our forefathers, the friends of Quakers. There is not one ingredient in the remedy which can possibly harm, and for that reason it may be taken by all, young and old. It is a tonic which builds up quickly, a blood purifier and system cleanser. For sufferers of rheumatism, catarrh and stomach troubles it is particularly recommended, and that it actually gives wonderfully quick results can be proven by the hundreds of people right here in Atlanta who have been cured.

Another great cure was reported at Coursey & Munn's drug store. Mr. McWhorter said: "I had a severe case of plain, every-day rheumatism, just like thousands of other people have. It seemed to locate in my right side. When I arose in the morning I was sore and stiff." Mr. McWhorter had used almost every liniment and rheumatic relief known, but they had failed to do anything in his case. He was becoming discouraged until he called at the drug store and obtained Quaker Herb Extract. After using twelve bottles, he states that he is entirely cured, and his wife is now using the Extract and states she is highly pleased. He lives at 301 Luckie Street, if you wish to investigate.

If you suffer from rheumatism, catarrh, kidney, liver, stomach or blood troubles call to-day at Coursey & Munn's drug store, 29 Marietta Street, and obtain Quaker Herb Extract, $1.00 per bottle, 3 for $2.50, or 6 for $5.00. Oil of Balm, 25c or 5 for $1.00. We prepay express charges on all orders of $3.00 or over.

Those Rheumatic Twinges

"Every Picture Tells a Story."

Much of the rheumatic pain that comes in damp, changing weather is the work of uric acid crystals.

Needles couldn't cut, tear, or hurt any worse when the affected muscle joint is used.

If such attacks are marked with headache, backache, dizziness and disturbances of the urine, it's time to help the weakened kidneys.

ATLANTA PROOF

Testimony of a Resident of East Georgia Avenue

Mrs. W. B. Adams, 381 E. Georgia Avenue, Atlanta, Ga., says: "A few months ago I strained myself while doing some housework, and after that began to suffer from severe pains across my back and shoulders. I would have blind spells and everything would turn black before me. I was finally persuaded to try Doan's Kidney Pills, and they cured me."

SCHWARTZ WILL STAND PAT ON PRESENT CLUB

NASHVILLE, TENN., May —Bill Schwartz's move in replacing Jesse James, in right field, with Delmar Dewaine Young, the Cleveland grocery clerk, and the subsequent sale of Jesse to the Pelicans, will likely be the last time the boy leader will tinker with the lineup of the club, outside of a choice between twirlers Lefty Williams and Charles "Jonah" Case.

James' work on the rightfield precipice in Sulphur Dell was a great improvement over the showing made by Young, for he is a fast fielder and has a whip of steel. But the ex-Texas Leaguer wasn't doing any great amount of damage and since he was owned by Brooklyn, Schwartz decided to allow Frank to claim him at the waiver price.

Dell Young has all along been frank to confess that the steep hill in right has been an unsolvable riddle to him, owing to his weight but he insists that on the road he can field with the best of them. It begins to look as if his alibi will have to be accepted for Young on the road is continually making all sorts of hair-raising catches, while at home he looks like a school boy. Schwartz will probably shift Davey Callahan to the cliff when the club returns and use Dell in center.

League Standing Due a Shake-Up

Mobile May Slump a Bit Very Soon

By Percy H. Whiting.

THE Southern League clubs are getting ready for the first show down. Up to yesterday the Eastern clubs were playing only in the East, the Western clubs in the West.

What these games proved was merely that:

1. Atlanta and Nashville were stronger in the East than Chattanooga and Birmingham.

2. Mobile and Montgomery are stronger in the West than Memphis and New Orleans.

Up to yesterday no Eastern club had played a Western club.

So, as far as the records go, every club in the Eastern division might be stronger than any in the Western.

And Mobile, with all its lead, might be able to finish no better than fifth. Our private opinion is that the Eastern clubs may puncture the Gulls' bubble.

The games of the next couple of weeks will give us some real line on what is to be expected.

JUST how much Leonard Dobard has had to do with the knocks on the Atlanta club published in papers in the Southern section, we don't know. But knowing him, we have an idea. Here is a fair sample of what is appearing:

Refusing to join the Beaumont Texas League club, to which he was released under an optional agreement, Leo Dobard, local shortstop, whom the Crackers secured from Cralk Griffith, of the Washington club, returned to New Orleans Tuesday.

Dobard was out in a Montgomery uniform during the practice, and it is probable he will become a member of "Jawn" Dobbs' Billikens, if a trade can be arranged with the Crackers. Dobbs is eager to get Dobard, and it is believed Billy Smith will turn him over to Montgomery.

The local boy is said to have received a raw deal from Billy Smith. It seems that Dobard was brought to Atlanta and practically forced to sign a contract calling for the same salary that he drew last year from the Dayton Central League club.

In working this ancient trick Smith was violating the rules of baseball, for a player taken from a smaller league is entitled to a boost in salary. Following a quarrel, however, Smith shipped Dobard to Beaumont.

LET'S have a look at Dobard's record:

He was secured from the Central League by draft.

When reporting time came Dobard was one of the last men to report.

He claimed to be in good condition but he didn't show it.

No man on the team acquired the enmity of ALL the fans any sooner.

When it came time to sign Dobard wouldn't sign.

He took his said story to Bill Smith.

"Don't sign, and see if I give a cuss," Bill Smith told him. "You make me tired. You haven't shown me ANYTHING. You're lucky to be offered a contract. Sign it or GET OUT."

Dobard sulked around a day or two and then signed.

After he was a member of the team he showed even less than before. If ever there was a rum-dum playing ball in Atlanta Dobard was the man. He fielded miserably, threw wretchedly, got crossed on signals, was a joke on bases and didn't know anything.

Finally, in disgust, Bill Smith sold him to Beaumont. Instead of going he sticks around and tells the newspapers what an awful deal Bill Smith handed him.

In our opinion Bill paid Dobard a signal honor in thinking he was good enough for the Beaumont club and handed an awful knock to the Texas League at the same time.

If Dobard had been offered $85 a month to play in Atlanta it would have been shameful carelessness on the part of Bill Smith in wasting the Crackers' money.

BRANCH RICKEY, coach of the University of Michigan team has a new one. He is handcuffing his players in bunting practice. Of course he doesn't use the regular police bracelets. But he ties ropes to their wrists and then fastens them to their belts.

The idea is to keep them from hitting at the high ones.

Rickey tried to talk his men out of bunting at the lofty hurls but it did no good. Then he tied their arms down. With the handcuffs on, if a man tries to bunt at a high one it nearly breaks his wrists.

This plan might work with Bill Smith's men. They surely lack a lot of being polished bunters right at present.

JOE KUTINA MAY BEAT TARLETON OUT OF JOB

NEW ORLEANS, May —Bob Tarleton's job with the Billikens is everything but safe, according to reliable information. Johnny Dobbs is said to be awaiting Joe Kutina, a hold-out to report and as soon as he does, which is expected to occur in a few days, Bob Tarleton, local first sacker, is to be given his unconditional release.

Tarleton joined the Billikens this spring when Dobbs needed ball players, and has been going fairly well. Kutina, however, in Dobbs' position, is a better man than Tarleton and because of this Bob will have to go elsewhere.

Tarleton has been slated for his release for several weeks. Refusal of Hornhorst to report forced Dobbs to keep Bob, but all hope for his job is now given up, due to Kutina notifying the Billiken leader he will report soon.

BOSTON WOULD SEE GOTCH TACKLE ZBYSZKO AGAIN

CHICAGO, May —George V. Tuohy, Boston wrestling promoter, is in Chicago seeking to bring Frank Gotch, wrestling champion, and Stanislaus Zbyszko, the Pole, together in another bout, to be staged at Boston some time in July.

Tuohy found the Pole's manager willing to sign up and expects to go to Marshalltown, Ia., to-day to meet Gotch.

RUSSELL AND ANDERSON IN RING BOUT TO-NIGHT

MEMPHIS, TENN., May —Frankie Russell, the New Orleans lightweight, and Jimmy Anderson, local boy will clash here to-night in a 10 round battle. Anderson recently defeated Young Dyson here and is looked upon as a comer in the lightweight ranks. The weight, 133 pounds at 3 o'clock, will be an easy matter for both boys.

LAJOIE ENTERS 18TH SEASON GOING STRONG

APPROPRIATE words of regret have long since been prepared. For years the historians of baseball have been ready to sound the death knell over the baseball career of the great Frenchman, Napoleon Lajoie.

For years scribes and fans have watched with keen, practiced eyes for the first signs of that slipping which marks the beginning of the end of the career of all great men of the diamond.

In their eagerness to be the first to sound the warning some have occasionally mentioned that "Larry doesn't go as far to get 'em as he used to."

Some enthusiastic scribes have written volumes when he fanned, taking the opportunity to note that at last they had seen a flaw in his marvelous batting eye.

A "Veteran" 10 Years Ago.

Ten years ago he earned the title of "veteran." They called him the wonderful Larry, the greatest batsman who ever lived. A short time later they began to call him the "old veteran." They marked the passing of each season with the notation that Larry was getting close to his finish. They began to utter regrets that baseball must soon lose one of its brightest lights. They made much of the fact that most diamond stars lose their luster after passing the tenth year and almost invariably are forced to retire before or in the neighborhood of their fifteenth year.

Each injury which forced his temporary withdrawal from the game caused a quiver of fear to trickle through the nation lest the injury should result in his permanent retirement.

With the rise to fame of the noble little Trojan Johnny Evers; the sensational young Eddie Collins, and the dashing Capt. Larry Doyle, of the Giants, admirers of those gentlemen, in their enthusiasm over favorites, have been wont to refer to Larry as "the great Frenchman who was."

Looks Better Than Ever.

Now what a change there has been. Those sentiments, expressions, and opinions have been buried with the past. Piled high as a sarcastic monument above them now stands a series of performances since the opening of the campaign of 1913 which makes the name and glory of Napoleon Lajoie sparkle and glisten as it has not in many years.

Not that his work has ever seriously retrograded, but rather that he is consistently demonstrating that as a ball player he is as great as if not greater than he ever was before, and that to-day, just as ten years ago, he is sole possessor of the title of "The greatest second baseman of the past or present."

Eighteen years ago Larry flashed over the baseball horizon to be termed the marvel of the sport. Sensational plays by him both in the field and at the bat were chronicled with regularity. From the moment of his baptism in the National League he was one of its most prominent actors.

His feats of recent dates are so thoroughly engraved on the minds of the fan army that it is scarcely necessary to recall them at this time. Only a few days ago a sensational stop by him enabled Fred Blanding to shut out Detroit. Only the day before that was his fielding one of the brightest features of another victory over Detroit.

And they said he was "going back."

JAKE STAHL TO BE BENCH MANAGER NEXT SEASON

BOSTON, May —Jake Stahl, manager of the Boston Red Sox, will be a bench manager after this season and will surrender the guardianship of the initial sack as soon as he can find a suitable successor, according to a report in circulation yesterday in the Red Sox camp. Neither Engle nor Janverin fit in with Stahl's idea of a first baseman, and it is said he is willing to turn over three or four players for a star first baseman if one is on the market.

CROSS AND TRENDALL SIGN.

ST. LOUIS, MO., May —Lemon Cross, of New York, and Harry Trendall, of St. Louis, signed articles yesterday to fight eight rounds here May 8 at 135 pounds.

BASEBALL IN 1925

(Copyright, 1913, International News Service.)

By William F. Kirk.

THE baseball park was crowded on a lovely summer day
With rooters young and full of life, and rooters old and gray.
This was no plain steel structure like the stadiums of old;
The bleachers were of silver and the stands were solid gold.
The peanut venders moved about with grandeur and disdain
Bedecked as Spanish pages in the days of Philip's reign.
The bat boy's silver spangles shone resplendent in the sun;
Groundkeeper Murphy's raiment was the best that could be spun.
The press box in the grandstand, with its busy telephones,
Was built of purest marble, studded thick with precious stones.
The people sat enraptured, no one caring to go home,
Feasting their eyes on splendor like the pomp of ancient Rome.
The umpire, in a diadem of rubies and of pearls,
Removed it for a moment from his richly perfumed curls.
And this is what he had to say
Upon that lovely summer day:

"Cobb has gone to Europe
In his aeroplane;
Wagner's down on Wall Street
Cornering all the grain.
Matty's loaning money
To Rockefeller's firm;
McGraw has launched his navy
To make the English squirm.
Larry Doyle went with him
And both remarked to me
They might be back this winter
As soon as Ireland's free.
Don't blame the athletes, people!
They're all too rich to play.
Get back your tenspots at the gate—
There'll be no game to-day!"

FOOD FOR SPORT FANS

By GEORGE E. PHAIR.

MATTY.

He is old and decrepit and lame;
You can tell by the droop in his frame,
You can tell by his sigh
And the woe in his eye
As he wins a thirteen-inning game.

He is weary and feeble and weak,
And his elbows and vertebrae squeak;
You can tell he's a joke
By the volumes of smoke
As the ball whizzes by like a streak.

He is broken and haggard and sore,
And he cannot produce any more;
You can tell he's a cinch
When he works in a pinch
And prevents them from tying the score.

He is aged and crusty and grim;
He has lost all his pepper and vim.
Said McGraw with a sigh:
"I would give my right eye
For a few more old cripples like him."

It must be admitted that Mr. Elberfeld's athletes play a consistent game. In fact, they are the most consistent losers in the Southern League.

It behooves Tyrus Cobb to pay strict attention to his knitting this year. Ping Bodie has developed so much speed that he can stretch a home run wallop into a two-bagger.

Reports from the Far West indicate that Messrs. Kilbane and Dundee have split fifty-fifty on the featherweight title.

Joe Tinker, who was presented with a suitcase by his admiring friends, may need it when Garry Hermann sends him on his way.

THEM UNIFORMS.

An umpire faced an athlete grim
And spoke these burning words to him:
"Strike, if you will, you horrid brute,
But do not soil my ice cream suit!"

Speaking of uniforms for umpires, the most appropriate would be one of black and white stripes, running crosswise.

In view of the fact that he had the approbation so to speak, of James J. Corbett, Johnny Kilbane did exceedingly well to get an even break.

Speaking of omens, this is Christy Mathewson's thirteenth year in the National League. When he pitches, it is considered an unlucky sign for the other team.

Norman Elberfeld is beginning to realize that a manager can not win a pennant unless he is aided and abetted by a baseball team.

Walter Johnson arises to remark that he will not play next year for less than $10,000. This constitutes the world's record for long-distance holdouts.

As for hunger strikes, Mrs. Pankhurst has nothing on the male citizen who lingers until the finish of a Southern League game.

HERO WORSHIP.

He may have been a wonder yesterday;
He may have hammered many a healthy clout,
But when his batting eye goes wrong they say:
"Aw, take him out!"

He may have been a Walsh in days gone by
And heaved the ball with many a curve and crook,
But when his stuff goes wrong they up and cry:
"Aw, get the hook!"

The baseball rooters know no yesterday.
To them the past is always dark and dim,
And when a hero falls they laugh and say:
"The bush for him!"

"RUBE" WADDELL SAYS HE IS THROUGH WITH GAME

MINNEAPOLIS, May —George Edward ("Rube") Waddell is through with baseball forever, so he declares to-day. He had been turned over to the Northern League club here by the Minneapolis American Association club, after a long illness. He pitched one good game for the bush leaguers, but Saturday turned in his uniform and declared that he was through.

"I've been in the business for fifteen years," said the once great twirler, "and I guess I'll quit. I may pitch a game occasionally for an independent team, but that will be all. I'll make my living some other way."

"KEEP PURCHASE PRICES SECRET," SAYS JENNINGS

DETROIT, MICH., May —Hughey Jennings opposes the giving out of the purchase price of star minor leaguers.

"If I had my way not a club in the league would announce its purchase prices," declared he. "In nineteen cases out of twenty this practice ruins a ball player. Marquard wasn't a bit of good for two years after he went to New York. I could name dozens of instances where ball players went wrong because in the first few days they failed to live up to expectations, and after that they lost confidence in themselves.

"What difference does it make whether a man cost the club $20 or $20,000, so long as he delivers the goods? It is the club's affair if it chooses to pay a high price for the player, just the same as it is the club's affair when it pays a star a big price for his services."

LIPPE TO TAKE YANKEE BOXERS ON LONG TRIP

By Ed. W. Smith.

CHICAGO, May —Unmindful of the numerous warnings by American fighters and fight managers who have tried the Australian boxing game and found it sadly wanting in many respects, Al Lippe is going to give it a whirl with a couple of Yankee stars. And in the face of all that has gone before, Lippe must be set down as one of the gamest and most courageous of all to make a trip of that character and length in search of the fleeting and floating dollar or Bank of England note, as the case may be. Lippe is going to take Jeff Smith, a corking good middleweight, and Frank Loughrey, a speedy lightweight, to the "land down under," as the English call Australia. They are booked to sail from San Francisco June 3.

WE take it that Lippe has his round trips and a snug sum of expense money stowed away in his fashionable jeans, else he would be the muttiest of mutts to undertake the journey. Every returning pilgrim from Australia smiles a knowing smile and advises against anybody else making the journey. Joe Woodman, Sam Langford's manager, was compelled to sue for $12,000 that he had coming to him over there and the defendants got so many continuances and delays that Joe apparently is about to pass up the whole thing and quit cold—incidentally without his money. That is merely a sample of the treatment that has been accorded American fighters and their managers over there.

LIPPE would like to show his two stars around Chicago before he leaves for California to board the steamer. He says that Smith can make 152 pounds in a pinch, but that he will meet any of them right up to 158, and would prefer a match with Eddie McGoorty because he regards the Oshkosh man as the real champion of the county. Loughrey is credited with victories over Bat Nelson, Young Erne, Dave Deshler and most of the good boys of the East. He is a bit oversized for an American lightweight, his lowest poundage being 138. But he will fit in beautifully in Australia, where lightweights are just as apt to be thrown into the pit with middies and feathers with welters, etc. Note the case of Rudy Unholz, the Denver lightweight, who fought in every class above his own during his trip to the Antipodes.

JORDAN SIGNS TO PLAY UTILITY FOR CRACKERS

MOBILE, ALA., May —A. Otto Jordan, the oldest player in the Southern League in point of continuous service, and in his day the greatest second baseman the Southern League ever saw, has been signed to play utility roles with the Atlanta club.

He will probably join the team to-day.

Jordan played for years under Billy Smith as field captain, and the Atlanta manager believes that Otto will be worth his pay as his personal representative on the coaching lines.

JOE THOMAS AND WHITE REMATCHED FOR MAY 19

CHICAGO, May —Charlie White, local scrapper, who recently knocked out Joe Thomas, of New Orleans, in that city in eight rounds and who meets him again at New Orleans on May 19, to-day started training at Nate Lewis' gym to fit himself for another knockout victory.

White hopes to get on with Freddie Welsh, Johnny Dundee, Leach Cross or some of the other top-notchers.

EDDIE FOSTER STILL ILL.

WASHINGTON, May —No change has been noted in the condition of Eddie Foster, the Nationals third baseman, who is ill at Georgetown Hospital with typhoid fever.

FORTY-FOUR years ago the first professional ball club in the world was organized. It was the famous Cincinnati Reds, the pioneer paid baseball club, in whose existence the great national game, as it exists to-day, had its inception.

In 1869 this club played through the entire season, from March 15 till November 15, and never lost a game. It finished the season with a standing of 1,000. Its pay-roll for the year, including every cent that went to the players in salaries, was $9,500.

There were ten players on the club, of which one was a pitcher, Asa Brainard, and another was a substitute. The average salary per player was less than a thousand dollars, or, to be exact, $950. The highest paid man was George Wright, who got $1,400, the shortstop. Captain Harry Wright, pulled down $1,200 for his share. The pitcher, who went through the season with a clean record, got $1,100.

And last year Hans Wagner pulled down a cool $10,000 for galloping around somewhere between second and third, punishing the pill and running bases.

Some difference, what!

Tyrus Cobb got $9,000 last season, and is said to be drawing $12,500 this season.

HARKING back, the payroll of that little old club in the '60s that went clear through without sustaining a defeat looks picayunish, doesn't it?

And those fellows played ball in a different way than it is played to-day. They didn't have gloves, masks, shoes, protectors and the thousand and one things that the modern diamond star has to guard himself with. The games were riots. When there was no blood shed the fans demanded their money back.

Harry Wright, Captain	$1,200
George Wright, shortstop	1,400
Asa Brainard, pitcher	1,100
Fred Waterman, third base	1,000
Charles Sweasy, second base	800
Charles Gould, first base	800
Douglas Allison, catcher	800
Andrew Leonard, left field	800
Calvin McVey, right field	800
Richard Hurley, substitute	800

ONCE upon a time there was a black-and-tan maul-swinger named Steve who took up the light and remunerative work of editing a bootblack stand and was doing fairly well at it until a fight promoter got a slant at his biceps and lured him away.

Steve was generously designed as to beam and water-line length, but all of his bigness was on the outside. His soul never soared above shoeshining. If violently shaken his heart rattled around inside him like a navy bean in a wash boiler, but his manager did not take the precaution of shaking him before he tied him to a pair of gloves and pushed him into the ring against a lad whose middle name was Mingle.

Up to this moment the manager believed that he had a meal ticket in Steve and up to this minute Steve knew that he had a meal ticket in his manager. But the first time the unsmoked meat eater in the opposite corner came out and poked Steve generally about the mush, he hastily climbed through the ropes.

"What's the matter?" yelled the manager, rushing toward him and motioning him back. "Ain't you gonna fight any more?"

"Yes," replied Steve, deliberately, slipping on the new bath robe his manager had bought him, "but not any more to-night."

"Pennants aren't won in April," says Barney Dreyfuss. True, quite true. But the games won in April help an awful lot.

It seems now, according to New Orleans papers, that the reason the Pelicans are making such a wretched showing is that they are being robbed by the umpires.

* * *

"The umpire done it."

Umpires are human, poor devils. They do their best. It may look bad. But remember they are trained men, and right on top of the plays.

In civilized cities they have stopped panning the umpires. It does not hurt the umpires or help the decision.

Joe Tinker goes so far as to admit that the Cubs have a chance for the pennant—which may be considered a warm tip, considering Joe's feelings on the subject.

McGraw says the reason the Reds have made such a wretched start is that the team didn't really train in the South. "They only practiced once a day," says McGraw, "and they didn't work very hard then."

* * *

The Baltimore team has canned the celebrated "Lefty" Russell—who tried to pitch for Atlanta once. Thus passes the cheatiest bloomer of them all.

John Ganzel says the newspapers are breaking up his club—which is the silliest alibi in the world, surpassing in ridiculousness the celebrated one entitled, "The umpires done it."

The Passing of Miss Tearful

Woman Is Ceasing to Weep—They Realize That No Man Wants to Be Salted Down in Brine as If He Were a Dried Herring.

By DOROTHY DIX.

ONE of the most interesting and significant phases of the evolution of woman is that she is ceasing to weep. I don't know how science explains it, but it is a self-evident fact that every observing person must have noted that as women developed backbone their tear ducts have dried up.

Time was, and not so long ago, when the very name of the feminine sex was synonymous with crying. It was woman's hereditary destiny to weep, just as it was man's to work, and she did what was expected of her by sitting down and howling whenever she came up against any of the hard propositions of life.

The modern woman has changed all of that. You hardly ever see a woman weep now. There are—God help us—just as many things to wring a woman's heart to-day, and just as many causes for tears as there ever were, but if she weeps, she weeps in private. It is almost as unusual and startling now to see a woman give way publicly to emotion as it is to see a man do so, and I can think of no other one thing that so emphatically marks the progress of my sex.

It measures all the distance between hysteria and reason. It marks the immeasurable difference between the spoilt child crying impotently for forbidden sweets, and the strong adult who takes what life gives with unfaltering bravery and cheerfulness.

It seems likely that women always overvalued the effectiveness of tears, anyway. Tears were supposed to always be an unanswerable argument so far as men were concerned. Unfortunately few women can weep effectively. In poetry a pearly drop that makes a blue eye look like a violet drowned in dew, gathers slowly and rolls gently down the alabaster cheek, and the man who goes down before it. In everyday life the woman who weeps gets red-eyed, her nose swells and she looks purple and apoplectic, and the man gets up, and slams the door behind, and goes downtown until the water spout is over. In these prosaic and commonsense days weeping has played out as a fascination, and tears are a failure. No man wants to be salted down in brine as if he were a dried herring.

They Wept Too Much.

The trouble with women's tears in the past has been that they wept too much, and in the wrong way. A tear as a tear is as effective as any other drop of salt water, yet people make the mistake of reverencing it as if weeping over a thing was going to perform some kind of a miracle.

You might weep over a starving family until you shed an ocean of tears, yet it wouldn't keep them from perishing of hunger. It is only when you begin to sob with your pocketbook that you do any good. It isn't the people who come to weep with us when we are unfortunate and poor and downcast who help us. It is those who have learned to sympathize with their bank book and personal interest and assistance.

Nothing else on earth is as plentiful and cheap and useless as tears, but until they are backed up with good deeds and money nobody has a right to attempt to sustain a reputation for charity on them. Plenty of people do. I have seen women sit up in a fashionable church and shiffle into a point lace handkerchief all through a charity sermon and then drop a plugged nickel into the contribution plate.

Then there's poverty. If all the tears women have shed over being poor had been brought to account it would make a water power that would turn the wheels of the machinery of the world. Tears toll back no vanished dollars. Nobody ever heard of a woman lamenting herself into a fortune, yet they go making themselves perfect Niobes over their split milk.

I had a friend once who lost her money and who thereafter did nothing but weep. "What shall I do?" she demanded. "I shall starve." "If you would put in as much time and energy mopping a floor as you do in mopping your eyes, you could make a fortune as a charwoman," I answered, brutally. She never forgave me. People never do when you tell them the truth, but it is a fact nevertheless, that the only tears that can conjure back prosperity are the tears we weep with our hands at some good, honest labor.

Sometimes I amuse myself by speculating on what an improvement it would be if mothers wept less over their wayward children and spanked more.

Shameful Tears.

Sentimentalists have embalmed a mother's tears in song and story, and made them sacred, but I tell you the tears a mother sheds over an illraised son or daughter are shameful. There should be no cause for them, and there would be no cause for them, once in a million times, if she had done her duty. Weep with strict authority, mothers, sob with a wise up-bringing while your children are little, and when they are grown you will not have to shed salt and bitter tears over sons and daughters who have brought disgrace upon you.

It has also appeared to me that women have wasted quite an unnecessary amount of tears on their husbands. For a thousand generations wives have clung to the theory that a man could be wept into all the virtues of beatitude. When a woman had a drunken husband she opened the door for him in the early hours of the morning, and bedewed him with her tears. When she had a brutal one, she wept when he mistreated her, but she forgave him and let him go on doing it. Men don't weep any over women. They make their wives behave themselves, or else they haul them up before the divorce court, and that's why the percentage of good conduct is so largely in favor of the fair sex, and women might well copy their example.

Any way you look at it, it is a hopeful sign women have abandoned doing the baby act. It was always weak and useless. We owe it to the world to give it smiles and sunshine, not showers, and we best do our part in it when we meet the misfortunes of life with that brave attitude that nothing can daunt.

A Powerful Story of Adventure, Intrigue and Love — Within the Law — By MARVIN DANA, from the Play of BERNARD VEILLER

SYNOPSIS.

Mary Turner, after the death of her father and mother, is forced to make her own way in life. She secures a position at the Emporium, a department store owned by Edward Gilder, and, after five years of bare existence, valuable silks are stolen from the store, traced to Mary's department, and some of the goods found in her locker. Although innocent, the girl is arrested and sentenced to three years in prison.

After her conviction she tells George Damarest, chief of Gilder's legal staff, that she can show the merchant how to stop thievery in his store if garnted a ten-minute interview. The interview is granted, and, handcuffed to a plain-clothes man, she enters Gilder's private office. He enters immediately afterward.

Without mincing of words, Mary tells him that he can stop stealing by paying his employees a living wage.

Now go on with the story

TODAY'S INSTALLMENT.

Nevertheless, indomitable in her purpose, she maintained the struggle. A third time she obtained work, and there, after a little, she told her employer, a candy manufacturer in a small way, the truth as to her having been in prison. The man had a kindly heart, and, in addition, he ran little risk in the matter, so he allowed her to remain. When, presently, the police called his attention to the girl's criminal record, he paid no heed to their advice against retaining her services. But such action on his part offended the greatness of the law's dignity. The police brought pressure to bear on the man. They even called in the assistance of Edward Gilder himself, who obligingly wrote a very severe letter to the girl's employer. In the end, such tactics alarmed the man. For the sake of his own interests, though unwillingly enough, he dismissed Mary from his service.

With All Her Strength.

It was then that despair did come upon the girl. She had tried with all the strength of her to live straight. Yet, despite her innocence, the world would not let her live according to her own conscience. It demanded that she be the criminal it had branded her—if she were to live at all. So, it was despair! For she would not turn to evil, and without such turning she could not live. She still walked the streets falteringly, seeking some place; but her heart was gone from the quest. Now, she was sunken in an apathy that saved her from the worst pangs of misery. She had suffered so much, so poignantly, that at last her emotions had grown sluggish. She did not mind much even when her tiny hoard of money was quite gone, and she roamed the city starving. * * * Came an hour when she thought of the river, and was glad!

Mary remembered, with a wan smile, how, long ago, she had thought with amazed horror of suicide, unable to imagine any trouble sufficient to drive one to death as the only relief. Now, however, the thing was simple to her. Since there was nothing else, she must turn to that—to death. Indeed, it was so very simple, so final, and so easy, after the agonies she had endured, that she marveled over her own folly in not having sought such escape before. * * * Even with the first wild fancy, she had unconsciously bent her steps westward toward the North River. Now, she quickened her pace, anxious for the plunge that should set the term to sorrow. In her numbed brain was no flicker of thought as to whatever might come to her afterward. Her sole guide was that compelling passion of desire to be done with this unbearable present. Nothing else mattered—not in the least!

In That Final Second.

So, she came through the long stretch of ill-lighted streets, crossed some railroad tracks to a pier, over which she hurried to the far end, where it projected out to the fiercer currents of the Hudson. There, without giving herself a moment's pause for reflection of hesitation, she leaped out as far as her strength permitted into the coil of waters. But, in that final second, natural terror in the face of death overcame the lethargy of despair—a shriek burst from her lips.

But for that scream of fear, the story of Mary Turner had ended there and then. Only one person was anywhere near to catch the sound. And that single person heard. On the south side of the pier a man had just tied up a motorboat. He stood up in alarm at the cry, and was just in time to gain a glimpse of a white face under the dim moonlight as it swept down with the tide, two rods beyond him. On the instant, he threw off his coat and sprang far out after the drifting body. He came to it in a few furious strokes, and caught it. Then began the savage struggle to save her and himself. The currents tore at him wrathfully, but he fought against them with all the fierceness of his nature. He had strength a-plenty, but he needed all of it, and more, to win out of the river's hungry clutch. What saved the two of them was the violent temper of the man. Always, it had been the demon to set him aflame. To-night, there in the faint light, within the grip of the waters, he was moved to insensate fury against the element that menaced. His rage mounted, and gave him new power in the battle. Maniacal strength grew out of supreme wrath. Under the urge of it, he conquered—at last brought himself and his charge to the shore.

When, finally, the rescuer was able to do something more than gasp chokingly, he gave anxious attention to the woman whom he had brought out from the river. Yet, at the outset, he could not be sure that she still lived. She had shown no sign of life at any time since he had first seized her. That fact had been of incalculable advantage to him in his efforts to reach the shore with her. Now, however, it alarmed him mightily, though it hardly seemed possible that she could have drowned. So far as he could determine, she had not even sunk once beneath the surface. Nevertheless, she displayed no evidence of vitality, though he chafed her hands for a long time. The shore here was very lonely; it would take precious time to summon aid. It seemed, notwithstanding, that this must be the only course. Then just as the man was about to leave her, the girl sighed, very faintly, with an infinite weariness, and opened her eyes. The man echoed the sigh, but his was of joy, since now he knew that his strife in the girl's behalf had not been in vain.

Afterward, the rescuer experienced no great difficulty in carrying out his work to a satisfactory conclusion. Mary revived to clear consciousness, which was at first inclined toward hysteria, but this phase yielded soon under the sympathetic ministrations of the man. His rather low voice was soothing to her tired soul, and his whole air was at once masterful and gently tender. Moreover, there was an inexpressible balm to her spirit in the very fact that some one was thus ministering to her. It was the first time for many dreadful years that any one had taken thought for her welfare. The effect of it was like a draught of rarest wine to warm her heart. So, she rested obediently as he busied himself with her complete restoration, and, when finally she was able to stand, and to walk with the support of his arm, she went forward slowly at his side without so much even as a question of whither.

And, curiously, the man himself shared the gladness that touched the mood of the girl, for he experienced a sudden pride in his accomplishment of the night. Somewhere in him were the seeds of self-sacrifice, the seeds of a generous devotion to others. But those seeds had been left undeveloped in a life that had been lived since early boyhood outside the pale of respectability. To-night Joe Garson had performed, perhaps, his first action with no thought of self at the back of it. He had risked his life to save that of a stranger. The fact astonished him, while it pleased him hugely. The sensation was at once novel and thrilling.

Glow of Satisfaction.

Since it was so agreeable, he meant to prolong the glow of self-satisfaction by continuing to care for this waif of the river. He must make his rescue complete. It did not occur to him to question his fitness for the work. His introspection did not reach to a point of suspecting that he, an habitual criminal, was necessarily of a sort to be most objectionable as the protector of a young girl. Indeed, had any one suggested the thought to him, he would have met it with a sneer, to the effect that a wretch thus tired of life could hardly object to any one who constituted himself her savior.

In this manner, Joe Garson, the notorious forger, led the dripping girl eastward through the squalid streets, until at last they came to an adequately lighted avenue, and there a taxicab was found. It carried them farther north, and to the east still, until at last it came to a halt before an apartment house that was rather imposing, set in a street of humbler dwellings. Here, Garson paid the fare, and then helped the girl to alight, and on into the hallway. Mary went with him quite unafraid, though now with a growing curiosity. Strange as it all was, she felt that she could trust this man who had plucked her from death, who had worked over her with so much of tender kindliness. So, she waited patiently; only watched with intentness as he pressed the button of the flat number. She observed with interest the thick, wavy gray of his hair, which contradicted pleasantly the youthfulness of his clean-shaven, resolute face, and the spare, yet well-muscled form.

The clicking of the door-latch sounded soon, and the two entered and went slowly up three flights of stairs. On the landing beyond the third flight, the door of a real flat stood open, and in the doorway appeared the figure of a woman.

"Well, Joe, who's the skirt?" this person demanded, as the man and his charge halted before her. Then, abruptly, the round, baby-like face of the woman puckered in amazement. Her voice rose shrill. "My Gawd, if it ain't Mary Turner!"

At that, the newcomer's eyes opened swiftly to their widest, and she stared astounded in her turn.

"Aggie!" she cried.

CHAPTER VII.

IN the time that followed, Mary lived in the flat with Aggie Lynch occupied along with her brother, Jim, a pickpocket much esteemed among his fellow craftsmen. The period wrought transformations of a radical and bewildering sort in both the appearance and the character of the girl. Joe Garson, the forger, had long been acquainted with Aggie and her brother, though he considered them far beneath him in the social scale, since their criminal work was not of that high kind on which he prided himself. But, as he cast about for some woman to whom he might take the hapless girl he had rescued, his thoughts fell on Aggie, and forthwith his determination was made since he knew that she was respectable, viewed according to his own peculiar lights. He was relieved rather than otherwise to learn that there was already an acquaintance between the two women, and the fact that his charge had served time in prison did not influence him one jot against her. On the contrary, it increased in some measure his respect for her as one of his own kind. By the time he had learned as well of her innocence he had grown so interested that even her folly, as he was inclined to deem it, did not cause any wavering in his regard.

Now, at last, Mary Turner let herself adrift. It seemed to her that she had abandoned herself to fate in that hour when she threw herself into the river. Afterward, without any volition on her part, she had been restored to life, and set within an environment new and strange to her, in which soon, to her surprise, she discovered a vivid pleasure. So, she fought no more, but left destiny to work its will unhampered by her futile strivings. For the first time in her life, thanks to the hospitality of Aggie Lynch, secretly reinforced from the funds of Joe Garson, Mary found herself living in luxurious idleness, while her every wish could be gratified by he merest mention of it. She was fed on the daintiest of fare, for Aggie was a sybarite in all sensuous pleasures that were apart from sex. She was clothed with the most delicate richness for the first time as to those more mysterious garments which women love, and she soon had a variety of frocks as charming as her graceful form demanded. In addition, there were as many of books and magazines as she could wish. Her mind, long starved like her body, seized avidly on the nourishment thus afforded. In this interest, Aggie had no share—was perhaps a little envious over Mary's absorption in printed pages. But for her consolation were the matters of food and dress, and of countless junketings. In such directions, Aggie was the leader, an eager, joyous one always. She took a vast pride in her guest, with the unmistakable air of elegance, and she dared to dream of great triumphs to come, though as yet she carefully avoided any suggestion to Mary of wrongdoing.

The Girl Alone in New York

By LILLIAN LAUFFERTY.

DARLING KITTY:

Since I have been over here in the role of needle in the big New York haystack, I have had blue days and rose-colored days and just gray days; but to-day is all a white glare, and I think the lights are pretty strong for my eyes, sis. Not the "Bright Lights," but the glow and gleam of excitement and having adventures follow themselves up as I didn't think they ever could in really truly life.

Your kind attention, sisterkin, and I will tell my little tale from its beginning. Three days ago I lost my job—but don't picture me starving on the streets of New York, for I found a new one this morning! Hard times—and cutting down the staff." That is why I went.

After dealing that blow to my pride and my literary aspirations, fate turned around and began to treat me like the perfect gentleman he can sometimes be!

A New Job.

I answered thirty advertisements yesterday—but I did not seem to answer any one's needs. When I got down to No. 4 on my list to-day I had arrived at the offices of Clark, Clarke & Clark, attorneys-at-law. Just when I began to open the door from the outside some one was turning the handle from the inner realms. . . . . open flies the door . . . . collision . . . Madge's hat takes a little list to port, and Madge yearns for a port of her own.

A voice speaks: "I BEG your pardon. Have I upset you completely? Well, I declare—I do seem to run into you! And on your way to my office this time. Now what can I do for you?"

I should have fled the spot I suppose. Instead I said, "Your office?" And I wanted to add—"Who are YOU?"

"Why yes," I am Clarke—the one with the 'E.' Now what can I do for you?"

"Give me a position; I have lost mine." Probably I should not have said it—but I did not want to come home defeated at the end of four weeks! I wanted work and a chance to "show" New York—well, I guess I have both.

I am to get twenty-five dollars a week in return for my services as "Private Secretary" and Stenographer to the firm, which consists of Clarke Senior, forty-five or fifty, as New York ages go—so he may be sixty or a grandfather at that! Mr. James T. Clarke, of whom "more anon," and Clarke Junior, who looks twenty-two or three, and thinks life is to be devoted to getting a cane with just the crook to fit his arm to a nicety. He is called Mr. Tommy, and looks it!

And now for the "Anon" and more of Mr. Clarke. He is the man who jumped into me so violently that day as I was coming out of Grand Central, and then invited me to tea to give me a chance to recover my equilibrium, thereby quite upsetting it. I will never do for the wife of a President! For Mr. Clarke has a perfectly unforgettable voice, and all I could do about remembering it was feel that it belonged to someone I had in all probability met and forgotten—and it was not until he was my employer, duly signed and sealed, that I realized the full force of that first impact.

Asked to Tea.

But he was considerate and recommended me to the attention of his partners in the most impersonal, hardly-knew-you-were-a-girl sort of a way. And yet the girl alone has as her "Boss" a man who thought he might venture to ask a little stranger—that stranger being me—to tea!

Now, Little Miss Safe-at-Home, think it over—I need work if I am to be a self-supporting person in New York, the while I wait for my literary ability to develop so it can be seen by people who are more interested in subscription pulling than in the mere feeling of personal pride in "Darling Madgie"—and I like Mr. James T. Clarke. Was I silly to go on the payroll of Clarke, Clarke and Clark?

And Kitty, I want to know that man—so that is a perfectly good reason why I shouldn't—since I am an employee in his office. Mr. Clarke is surely a gentleman—even if he is a bit overly friendly. I shall have to prove that I am a lady, I suppose, by being overly unfriendly.

Or, won't I? Hurry up and give your sage opinion to

Your loving

MADGE.

:: Good Discipline ::

"IF you think any member of your family needs a spiritual stimulant during the present season," said the young girl with the camera slung over her shoulder, "buy him a camera and a tank and a scale and a few dozen different chemicals, and a book of directions and leave him to his fate. The seeds of humility, patience and long suffering will bear fruit a thousand fold.

"Don't laugh. It's true! If you know anything about the capital sins you know that pride is at the head of the list. To cure it, let some one take a good swift snapshot of you when you're not looking. It can reveal and correct more beauty defects than 52 visits to the shop where they make you beautiful while you wait. When that same snapshot is three or four years old and you gaze upon the hat that was none too becoming in its best days, you begin to realize that the lily of the field had some advantages over Solomon.

"As for patience, amateur photography is more instructive than Bruce's spider and more effective than Job's soliloquies. When you have measured out 16 ounces of hypo in a half-ounce scale—which means that you have to balance it 32 times, to the rhythmic chant of 'Twenty grains one scruple, three scruples one dram, eight drams one ounce'—and then forget whether the last measure was the twenty-first or twenty-second half ounce, and you have to spill it all out and begin all over again—if you can do it with cheerful heart your spiritual condition is encouraging.

Vacation Time.

"When you have come home from a vacation with several rolls of films and begin developing the best and most cherished roll, and it comes out of the tank distinct and clear and you drop it into a bowl of innocent looking hot water which should have been cold—a bowl which a member of your family had placed carelessly at your side—and you see your jolly groups of bathers and canoers run into a shapeless mass of gelatin and you hold in your hand a blank film roll, then if you can turn to the offender and say with serenity: 'It's all right, I really don't mind——,' then you have merited a triple halo.

"Do you wish to understand your neighbor? Try a group picture. In the first place, when it comes to posing a group, have you ever observed the serene indifference with which each member regards the position and advantages of every other member? The most humble and retiring individual quietly and persistently slides into an advantageous position, regardless of the same desire on the part of everyone else.

"And when that same group has been finished and you talk about light and shade, tone and contrast—you were not in it, of course—and you try to get anyone else to observe these points and you say, 'Don't you think the shadows are good?' your friend will invariably reply, 'I didn't know I had a double chin!' or 'I certainly can't wear a soft collar!'

"Then you suddenly realize that your modest, self-effacing friend has a normal ego.

"For social popularity the snapshot is an open sesame. If with your 'bread and butter' letter you can inclose a few snapshots of the infant idol of the family, of your host's new chicken coop, or your hostess' new porch set, the invitation to come again will be sincere and urgent.

"When it comes to generosity this gentle art of snapshotting has no equal. Suppose in a rash moment you have promised each of eight friends a full set of twelve prints. After a preliminary struggle with drams and scruples you start in to print. Your family admonishes, urges and finally commands you to be sensible and go to bed, but you feel that you must persist in your altruistic endeavors. It is midnight before you set your 96 prints to wash in a bowl of running water in the kitchen sink.

"When you return at the end of an hour you find that several of the prints, with the perversity of inanimate things, have slipped over the drain and a miniature Niagara is splashing down upon the floor, on which the water is already three inches deep. You try a mop, which is no more effective than a handkerchief in the Gulf of Mexico.

"The heat has been on two hours and it's 10 degrees below zero, and the kitchen has a west exposure, but you open the door and sweep strenuously and exhaustively. And you hear the splash of the water on the porch, on the landing below, then on the walk in the yard, and you think of the profile of drainage of the great lakes. And you tread lightly and softly, partly because you are reluctant to dislodge the water-soaked ceiling in the flat below and partly because you are afraid of waking your family and bringing down on your unoffending head a chorus of 'I told you so's.'

"After three hours of hard labor you close the door just before the milkman tears up the back stairs. And then, when you come to the breakfast table the next morning, heavy lidded and sore of spirit, but discreetly silent, another of your household comes in and says in a convincing and appealing tone: 'I'm dead tired! I didn't sleep a wink last night!'

"Then, if you can restrain your words of contradiction and offer sympathy in soft and gentle tones, with an invisible smile for the audible slumbers to the rhythm of which you swished a broom half the night—well, amateur photography has done more for you than Gideon Bibles and long weeks of fasting and sacrifice!"

:: Electing a New Pope ::

ONE OF THE WORLD'S MOST MOMENTOUS CEREMONIES

THE greatest secrecy, as well as the utmost solemnity, is observed when the Cardinals of the Church of Rome are called upon to elect one of their number as Pope.

Immediately after the Pope is buried there is a gathering together of the Cardinals, or conclave, as it is called. Incidentally it might be mentioned that the word "Conclave" is derived from the Latin cum clave, and literally means an apartment which can be closed with one key.

Once gathered together, the Cardinals, like the jury in a murder case, are not permitted to leave the Vatican until they have selected from among themselves a successor to the Papal chair. The ceremony of election observed to-day is the same as that inaugurated by Gregory X, six hundred years ago.

Communication Impossible.

The Cardinals assemble in what is known as the Sistine Chapel. All the entrances are walled up with the exception of one great door known as the "Sala Regia." The greatest precautions are observed that no persons except the Cardinals remain in the building during the conclave, and a very careful search is made, not only by officials of the Vatican, but also by the Swiss guards, who maintain a vigil over the only door leading to the building. Even the food is carefully examined to make sure that no communication enters the Vatican.

The actual election ceremony is quite simple. Each Cardinal writes in a disised hand on a ballot-paper the name of his particular selection for the high office, which he then deposits in a chalice or urn placed upon a special altar. Before doing so, however, he turns to his colleagues and solemnly swears he has voted according to his firm belief, without fear or favor, and in the true interests of the Church of Rome only.

First and Second Ballots.

There are three official scrutators, who, when all the Cardinals have voted, and after a short prayer, take all the ballot-papers from the chalice and read aloud to the conclave the names recorded. The number of votes required to Immediately the two-thirds majority has been recorded for any candidate a bell is rung by the junior Cardinal Deacon. In response the secretary of the Sacred College enters with the master of ceremonies, after which the Cardinal Dean approaches the Pope that is to be and inquires whether he accepts the papacy. Receiving an answer in the affirmative, he next inquires what name the new pontiff intends to be known by.

It should be mentioned that the name usually selected is that of the Pope by whom the Pope-elect was created a Cardinal, and as soon as this is announced the senior Cardinal Deacon goes outside and thus addresses the waiting crowds: "I announce to you a great joy. We have as Pope the Most Eminent and Most Reverend ———, Cardinal of the Holy Roman Church, who has taken the name of ———."

Meanwhile the new dignitary has been conducted to the rear of the high altar, where he is speedily arrayed in the vestments of the pontificate. He then takes his place in the chair of state in front of the high altar, and is ready to receive the greetings of the Sacred College. Each of the Cardinals kisses him on the foot, the hand and the mouth, and that precious symbol, the ring of the Fisherman, is placed on his finger by the Cardinal Camerlingo.

:: Putting Yourself in Your Wife's Place ::

I HEARD a man talking about his wife the other day—he began with his wife—and he ended with all the women in the world.

"What is the matter with them?" he said bitterly. "Are they all going crazy, or what? If am a good husband, if I do have to say it myself to get any one to believe it. I work like a bond slave for my wife and family; I devote most of my waking hours and some of my sleeping ones to thinking of new ways to make more money and more money and more money for her and the little fellows.

"My wife has a new hat whenever she wants one, and I never complain about the bill—even if it does make me feel blue to see it sometimes—a hat and a feather, $85. Why, it's enough to take a man's breath. And she goes away in the summer and takes the children and has a fine time for three months, and she has a good home, and—yet is she happy?

"She is not.

"She is miserable, perfectly miserable, and she makes me miserable, too. Where have I been? Who gave me that play bill? Where did I hear that song I'm whistling? Who was the woman who stared at me so in the theater the other night? Why don't I love her any more?

"And she's not the only one. My brother's wife is the same—worse, if anything. My brother can't spend an evening out to save his life without his wife wanting to know exactly where he went and whom he saw, and all about it—and she doesn't believe him when he tells her the truth."

Nice little preachment, wasn't it? And the man meant it, too—every word of it. You could see that by the look of irritated, puzzled misery in his tired face.

What is the matter with us, anyhow, girls?

I wonder if any one knows?

For one thing, it's the mystery of the thing that puzzles us.

Did you ever think of that, Mr Man?

What if the person you loved best in the world, the person you left every one you ever cared for just to be with, went away every day to a mysterious place he called downtown and stayed all day, and came home speaking with the speech of aliens, looking like the look of strangers, always thinking, thinking about something that you didn't know a thing about?

Wouldn't you wonder sometimes what it all was that made him so absent-minded? Wouldn't you wish he'd tell you something about it once in a while, just enough so you could visualize his day to some extent and have some sort of vague idea what it is that he does—down there in the barred city where you must never go?

It Wouldn't Bore Her.

You know every step your wife takes all day long—she wants to tell you all about it—and when you don't listen she thinks you are tired of her.

It wouldn't bore her to hear all about what you do, but you never help her out a bit. You see, she's in love with you; you're fond of her, but you are not in love with her. That isn't the way you acted when you were in love. Don't tell me! She may not know much, but no woman on earth is there who can't tell when a man really loves her and when he stops loving her, too—so you might as well stop going over that fiction once and for all.

She's in love and you aren't—that's all. Help you any to know that?

Well, maybe not, but it may help your judgment of her and your sympathy, too. Just think back a year or so and remember how you used to feel about her. That will help you to realize that she is having rather a bad time of it herself just now, too.

Morbid, unbalanced, irritating—of course it is—all of these things, but so is the life the women who loves leads morbid, unbalanced and irritating from start to finish.

You'd go crazy in six months if you had to live it, shut in all day with a baby; no one to speak to but the grocer's boy and the postman; no big ambitions, no great hopes; just little things, little, little, from morning to night.

Don't scold your wife, don't be cross with her, get her mind off the little, silly suspicions and little stupid curiosities by telling her a few things she'd dearly love to know. Tell them to her without her asking, and see how surprised and delighted she'll be.

She'll take just as much interest in you and your affairs as Jones, and yet you talk and talk to Jones.

Think it over, Friend Husband. Put yourself in the place of the poor little puzzled thing who's been tied into a corset every morning of her life and had her poor little tootsies pinched, and her poor head made to ache by some fool kind of hair dressing ever since she can remember, just to get ready for you and for love, and then she finds out that love is just a part of life after all and not all of it, as she has been carefully taught to think, and she's all at sea. Put yourself in her odd, confused, mixed up place and see if you can't see what's the matter with her.

Maybe you can, and if you do you've won the battle before it is fought.

Try it and let's hear from you—we'd like to know.

- In a Safe - Place

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

"I CALLED on a girl a number of times," a young man writes, "and I found her very agreeable, and I admit I made love to her. I had no intention of being serious, and now find that she is desperately in love with me. As I do not want to marry her, what can I do?"

But that is the very thing you must do. A man so fascinating as yourself, who calls on a girl a few times, and lo, the mischief is done, must be safely corraled within the bonds of matrimony that this needless slaughter of female hearts may cease.

Safely married to a woman who realizes what a dangerous person you are to be at large among weak, fluttering female hearts, you will never again have opportunity for making few passes at a girl with a wave of your hand, and reduce her to a state of paralytic adoration in doing it. So long as your wife lives, no girl will again be desperately in love with you if she knows it.

So long as you remain single this trail of women's hearts strewn crushed and bleeding in the path you have trod will continue to grow. For the sake of the women helpless before your charms; for the sake of a nation which can not prosper with all its womankind dying of love, you must marry, and marry at once.

Many Sacrifices.

I admit that you will make many sacrifices. It will be a hardship to a man of your temperament to confine all your lovemaking to one woman, and many, many times you will be aghast at the sacrifice of limiting all your fascinations to the four walls of your own home, but it must be done and I hope you are sensible to the necessity. It is your misfortune to be fascinating, but no one will hold you to blame if you hold those powers within some restraint.

When holding to car strap; when engaged in your daily occupation, if it be that of interpreting the law or selling muslins; keep your mind on the task in hand and don't raise your eyes to the face of any woman. Remember always your fatal power of rendering the women desperately in love with you, and have mercy on my sex. If you are engaged in an occupation that throws you in contact with the silly creatures, quit it, and go to digging trenches where your living will depend on keeping those fascinating eyes on the ground.

Some Simple Rules.

Never leave the house in the evening or on a Sunday without your wife by your side, and when you feel that you can no longer exist without some display of your fascinating power, try them on her. Make love to her, though you may not mean it; make eyes at her, squeeze her hand, and endeavor by every art of which you are master to cause her to love you desperately.

Having renewed the flame of her love to such bounds, she will double her vigilance over you, and reduce to a minimum the dangerous influence you may exert over other women.

Perhaps you may argue that you intend to marry, but would rather wait till you have made love to a girl seriously. That, most irresistible of your sex, is something you will never do. To be serious in love is something beyond you. Marry the girl who thought you were serious, and in her hands entrust your future.

Do You Know That—

Women who obstruct the view of people by wearing large hats are to be prohibited by law from buying a new hat for three years in the State of Texas, if a bill just introduced in the Legislature there is passed. Senator H. W. Brelsford found his view obstructed in church, and brought forward the bill at once. It seeks to make it unlawful for any woman to wear in church or any public gathering any hat or headdress having a crown of any ornament exceeding two inches in height, or a brim more than four inches wide. At the end of three years the offender will be permitted to buy only a certain uniform type of hat costing less than $2.

Most races have ailments peculiarly their own, and one of the very latest of workmen's complaints to be discovered is the "conductor's thumb." This affliction is generated by the continual use of the steel punch which is employed to mark the passenger's ticket. The pain, very slight at first, gradually increases and spreads to the palm of the hand, bringing in its train a species of cramp of the hand, and compelling those affected to handle their punches very gingerly.

Style, beauty and magnificence.

THIS is one of the handsomest models produced from the Paris shops this season.

It's foundation is "mole" charmeuse. The top of the bodice is a fichu of guipure veiled by an "amethyst" silk muslin, which falls back in two long points.

The long tunic is of gray silk muslin, richly embroidered in gold and silver and edged all around with a row of silver beads.

The skirt, which is of mole charmeuse, is but slightly draped and is finished by a square train.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"NOT that alone," she answered, with a shudder. "I have said that I should under ordinary circumstances have thought he was merely training for the autumn sports—for, you see, he was in a running costume of white cotton stuff and his legs were bare from the knees down—but as he shot past me in the moonlight I caught sight of something like a huge splash of blood on his clothes, and coupling that with the rest I nearly went out of my senses. It wasn't until long afterward I recollected that the badge of the County Club is the Winged Foot of Mercury wrought in brilliant scarlet embroidery. To me, just then, that thing of red was blood—my uncle's blood—and I ran and ran and ran until I got back here to the house and flew up the covered passage and burst into the Round House. He was sitting there still—just as he had been sitting before. But he didn't call out to me this time; he didn't reprove me for disturbing him; didn't make one single movement, utter one single sound. And when I flew to him I knew why. He was dead—stone dead! The face and throat of him were torn and rent as if some furious animal had mauled him, and there were curious yellow stains upon his clothes. That's all Mr. Headland, that's all. I don't know what I did nor where I went from the moment I rushed shrieking from that room until I came to my senses and found myself in this one with dear, kind Mrs. Armroyd here, bending over me and doing all in her power to soothe and to comfort me."

"It Is Better."

"There, there, cherie, you shall not more distress yourself. It is of a hardness too great for the poor mind to bear," put in Mrs. Armroyd herself at this, bending over the sofa as she spoke and softly smoothing the girl's hair. "It is better she should be at peace for a little, is it not, monsieur?"

"Very much better, madame," replied Cleek, noting how softly her hand fell and how gracefully it moved over the soft hair and across the white forehead. "No doubt the major part of what still remains to be told, you in the goodness of your heart will supply——"

"Of a certainty, monsieur, of a certainty."

"——but, for the present," continued Cleek, finishing the interrupted sentence, "there still remain one or two questions which must be asked, and which only Miss Renfrew herself can answer. As those are of a private and purely personal nature, madame, would it be asking too much——?" He gave his shoulders an eloquent Frenchified shrug, looked up at her after the manner of her own countrymen and let the rest of the sentence go by default.

"Madame" looked at him and gave her little hands an airy and a graceful flirt.

"Of a certainty, monsieur," she said, with charming grace. "Cela m'est egal." And walked away with a step remarkably light and remarkably graceful for one of such weight and generous dimensions.

A Private Talk.

"Miss Renfrew," said Cleek, sinking his voice and looking her straight in the eyes, as soon as Mrs. Armroyd had left them, "Miss Renfrew, tell me something, please. Have you any suspicion regarding the identity or the purpose of the person who murdered your uncle?"

"Not in the slightest, Mr. Headland. Of course, in the beginning my thoughts flew at once to Sir Ralph Droger, but I now see how absurd it is to think that such as he——"

"I am not even hinting at Sir Ralph Droger," interposed Cleek. "Two other people in the world have a 'motive' quite as strong as any that might be assigned to him. You, of course, feel every confidence in the honor and integrity of Mr. Charles Drummond?"

Kept in His Desk.

"Mr. Headland!"

"Gently, gently, please! I merely wished to know if in your heart you had any secret doubt, and your flaring up like that has answered me. You see, one has to remember that the late Mr. Nosworth is said to have made a will in your favor. The statement is correct, is it not?"

"To the best of my belief—yes."

"Filed it with his solicitors has he?"

"That I can't say. I think not, however. He was always sufficient unto himself and had a rooted objection to trusting anything of value to the care of any man living. Even his most important documents—plans and formula of his various inventions; even the very lease of this property—have always been kept in the desk in the laboratory."

"Hum-m-m!" said Cleek—and pinched his chin hard. Then, after a moment, "One last question," he went on suddenly. "What do you know, Miss Renfrew, of the recent movements of Mr. Harry Nosworth, the son who was kicked out?"

"Nothing, nothing—absolutely nothing!" she answered, with a look of something akin to horror. "I know what you are thinking of, but although he is as bad as man can be, it is abominable to suppose that he would lift his hand against his own father."

To Be Continued To-morrow.

An Educated Eel

"YOU take it from me, sir," said the old showman, "that the higher education of animals is a mistake.

"I have trained all sorts of beasts from fleas to elephants. I've taught horses to dance on their hind legs, dogs to act music-hall sketches, elephants to play the barrel-organ and do all sorts of tricks; but not one of them showed such intelligence as my educated eel.

"I picked him out of the water one day, and was attracted by his cute brown orbs. He looked at me in a sort of friendly, knowin' way, as if to say: 'Let's be friends, guv'nor—real pals.'

"So I picked him up and put him in my pocket. Then a bright idea struck me. I would train him with the other animals and let him take part in my show.

Was a Winner.

"Talk of the intelligence of animals. That eel simply beat the bunch. He guessed what I wanted him to do before I'd thought it out myself. He had the true spirit of the artist, too, he 'ad. He performed because he loved to act.

"The first tricks I taught him he took to as mere child's play. In a few days he could put his tail into his mouth and roll round the room, pretending to be a hoop. He would smile when I said 'Smile' in the cutest way, and, what is more, he would often smile on his own without being told, as if tickled at the humors of this funny world.

"Then I taught him to wiggle himself into the shape of letters. Soon he could twist himself into every letter in the alphabet and spell words as easy as you please. This beats science,' thought I, when one day he actually spelt my name; so I formed the idea of inviting some of the greatest scientists in the country to witness the feats of my marvellous eel.

"As the day of the private view drew near I put him regularly through his tricks, and that marvellous animal seemed to guess exactly what was in store for him. He got nervous, excited, and vain, too. If he had been a peacock I can just imagine him spreading his tail. But he merely blinked his eyes in the cutest, knowin'est way.

He Broke Down.

"Then all of a sudden the excitement began to tell upon him, and he showed signs of a nervous breakdown. He took trembling fits, which nigh scared me to death. I dosed him with spirit, which seemed to do him good for a time, but he got weaker an' weaker until at last one morning I found him stretched out stiff and stark upon the floor.

"If ever a human being died of brain fever, that poor beast did. I never trained another eel again. He died about this time last year, and I would give anything to have him by me now, with his cute little smile and his 'We're pals-guv'nor' look."

Little Bobbie's Pa

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

PA brought a book hoam with him last nite & he was showing it to me. It was called How a Husband & Wife shud act to Avoid Quarls. It was a big book, about a foot thick.

This book Bobbie, sed Pa, is a book that was wrote by a very wise guy. He was married three times & his first two wifes left him beefoar he reelized that he was hard to git along with, so wen he married the third time he made up his mind to study the fair sex & find out what wud humor them. This book is the result of yeers of pashunt watching & experiments on his part, Pa sed. I think that it ought to keep yure Ma & me from evver having a other unkind word. Here is sum of the rules, Bobbie, so wen you grow up & git a wife of yure own you will be abel to greet her right at all times & saiv quarls.

Good Rules.

Rule 1—The husband shud never becum angry at the saim time that the wife is angry. One angry person in a fambly is enuff at a time.

Rule 2—The wife shud nevver stay angry after she has gone to sleep. She might have a nitemare.

Rule 3—When a husband is contradickted by a wife he shud smile sweetly & say, wen his wife gives him a chanst, "I dare say you are right." That is the greatest sentence that was evver invented for making matrimony possibel.

Now, Bobbie, sed Pa, there is a good point right thare. Let us go in the other room & I will ask you to notis how yure Ma acts wen I answer her that way. "I dare say you are right."

So we went in the living room & Ma was thare. She was kind out of sorta about sumthing, I guess, beekaus she looked at Pa & me kind of cross wen we caim in. Well, I suppose you want yure supper, Sed Ma. Yes, deerest, sed Pa. It is a wonder that you & our son dident fool around in the library until it was time for brekfust, sed Ma. The men nowadays, sed Ma, act for all the wurld as if wimmen was made to wait on them & nevver give anything else a thought.

Of course, I am rite, sed Ma. Now thare is Missus Norris. She jest left a few minutes before you got hoam. She toald me that her husband reefused to buy her another frock until next mouth and then went to his club and lost four dollars bowling ten pins. Think of it, sed Ma, unable to buy his little wife another frock when she only had three, and then going and losing four dollars bowling. That is the man of it for you.

How much was the frock? sed Pa.

Very Cheap.

Only sixty dollars, Ma sed. Thay was eighty dollars last, but you know wimmen's clothes has went down a whole lot in price this season.

Maybe he cud afford to spend four dollars bowling & cuddent spend sixty dollars for a other frock, sed Pa.

Thare you go, sed Ma, deefending him. Of course, man can do no wrong. The men want to be the lords of creashum.

I dare say you are rite, sed Pa. How about dinner?

It is on the table waiting for you, sed Ma. Oh, dear, it is the saim old story, Ma sed. Git the dinner & then put away the dishes. A man's work is from sun to sun, a woman's work is nevver done.

Pa sed "I dare say you are rite" wen he had a peece of stalk in his mouth & he nearly choaked.

Thar you go laffing at me, sed Ma, you are a brute.

Poor Pa, I guess he will have to read sum moar rules in his new book.

:: Making Sure ::

THEY were on parade when the Irish drill-sergeant stopped dead in front of the newest recruit and eyed him steadily from top to toe before he burst out:

"Arrah! an' here's a nice state of affairs. How dare ye come here and stand before a dacent man loike meself covered in dust from head to foot? Answer me when I spake to ye!"

With knocking knees the now thoroughly wretched recruit endeavored to squeeze in a few well-chosen words of explanation, but his attempts were rudely overborne by a further torrent of words from the sergeant, who fairly bellowed:

"Ye would answer me, would ye? Spake at your paril! Now, tell me, ye spalpeen, what have ye been doin' to yer nice new uniform?"

Again the bewildered recruit opened a capacious mouth as a preliminary to speech, but the violent voice of his superior broke in once again:

"Take care!" he shouted. "Oi can hear ye. If ye answer me when I spakes to ye, I'll have ye arrested for insolence. An' if ye don't answer when I spakes to ye, I'll send ye to the guard room for disobedience. So moind, I'll have ye both ways."

Distinctly Suspicious.

It was when on maneuvers, and a soldier was being tried for the shooting of a chicken on prohibited ground.

"Look here, my man," said the commanding officer to the farmer who brought the accusation, "are you quite certain this is the man who shot your bird? Will you swear to him?"

"No, I won't do that," replied the canny yokel, "but I will say he's the man I suspect o' doing it."

"That's not enough to convict a man!" retorted the C. O., considerably nettled. "What raised your suspicions?"

"Well, sir," replied the sturdy farmer, as he slowly mopped his forehead with his bandanna, "it was this way: I see 'im on my property with a gun; then I heered the gun go off, then I see 'im putting the chicken into his knapsack; and it didn't seem nohow to think the bird committed suicide."

Some Use After All.

Diminutive Onlooker (after golfer makes his sixth fruitless stroke)—If yer digs up any wriggly worms can I 'ave 'em, guv'nor, 'cos I'm goin' a-fishin'?

"Woman's Work Is Never Done"

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

"MAN'S work lasts from sun to sun,
But woman's work is never done."

And one reason why it is never done is that she is not allowed to do it.

Men can understand that other men have necessary work to perform; it is, however, hard for women of leisure to understand how busy a busy woman may be. And until they do understand this it will not be easy for any woman to labor as steadily and satisfactorily as does a man.

A man who is an author said to me, "From the time that I go into my study after breakfast in the morning, until I am ready to come out at luncheon, I am not disturbed."

I gasped with envy and also with a little incredulity, for I know that his study is in his apartment and that he has a wife and children.

"I mean it," he said. "If I would do good work, I must be left alone."

"But your telephone?" I queried. That is right on your desk."

Should Be Unmolested.

He smiled in a superior kind of way. "Ah, yes, but that is only a switch from the instrument in the hall, and my wife or the maid answers the main phone. If I am asked for the reply is that I am 'engaged and cannot be disturbed.'"

I do insist that when the man has gone to business, and the children to school and college, when the orders have been given to the maids, the butcher, grocer, etc., that even a woman might have three or four hours each day in which she need not be disturbed—or, at least, that she might have her mornings unmolested.

"But she should explain to her friends," says someone. "They would understand and not call on her or telephone to her in the morning."

Her friends! Does anyone fancy it is one's close friends that disturb one? No, indeed!

Who is it then who interrupts the woman and ignores the fact that she is "engaged?"

First of all, it is next to impossible to make a maid understand that when a woman would write a story, paint a picture or give a music lesson she has in view any object except that of amusing herself for a little while when she has nothing else on hand. Therefore, in spite of interdicts, she often interrupts any one of these occupations to deliver some message that could wait, without injury, for a half day. But if she is so well trained that she does not do this, she seldom has strength of mind to say to those who would reach her mistress by telephone or in person that the busy woman cannot be disturbed.

What Is Another Way?

I remember that when I flattered myself that I had at last drilled one maid into doing this, I discovered that her answer for weeks had been the same, namely, that I was gone away and that nobody knew when I would come back. When I learned of this and protested to her, explaining that her statement was an untruth, she said—with a knowledge of human nature at which I could not sufficiently wonder—"Indade, ma'am, if I said you was engaged and couldn't see 'em, they'd not be satisfied. But if I say you're away, sure what is there for them to do but lave you alone?"

No, it is not one's own friends who will not accept the "engaged" statement, for they love one enough to let her alone during her golden morning hours. But there are a plenty of other people who do not love one. Among them are the casual acquaintance, who wants to ask one to subscribe to a certain philantropic movement; the woman who telephones to ask about a maid who was once in one's employ and who querist "must engage immediately if at all," and who talks for at least ten minutes about her past experiences with "help;" the book agent—for whom one cannot help being sorry—the former schoolmate who has not seen one for years, but who, in passing through the city, has "looked one up," and insists to the hesitating maid that she knows her mistress will be displeased if this "friend of her girlhood" is turned from the door; these are among the hundred-and-one people who would be wounded by that "engaged." Yet we are told that it is not honest to send word that one is "not at home."

Is there not some way in which the members of society who do not have to be let alone to accomplish their work can be made to understand that even a woman may need time and quiet in which to do the task laid to her hand?

And yet, what woman calling on an acquaintance, does not feel rebuffed by the message that "Mrs. Blank is engaged, and begs to be excused?"

Underground Trespassers : Quaint Callers That Are Found In the Depths of Coal Mines

AFTER a colliery explosion at Llanbradach, Wales, one of the rescue parties made a surprising discovery. Perched on a tub in the mine was a robin! Now, most colliers regard the presence of birds, particularly those with white plumage, about pits as a "token," and the "fire" which had occurred was therefore attributed to the intrusion of the perky little stranger!

Rats are not uncommon about a pithead, and some of them reach the depths beneath, occasionally with fatal haste.

One, during the process of falling down a shaft, acquired such momentum by the time it reached the bottom that when it struck a collier there was a loud report as of an explosion, and the man was knocked to the ground with great force.

In warm mines, too, mice are numerous. A few reach a new pit in the trusses of hay and bags of corn that are taken down it for the ponies, and these, notwithstanding the strangeness of their environment, multiply so rapidly that cats have to be installed in the stables.

It might be supposed that "mousers," at any rate, would not take at all kindly to the subterranean world; but they soon become used to their surroundings.

In one mine a fine tabby used to knock off with the men on Saturday, but, unlike them, she did not start again on Monday morning. She was always missing till Wednesday or Thursday, when she returned from the old and disused portions of the mine.

Bad For Mice.

A strike, however, plays far greater havoc with the mouse population of a pit than any number of cats, because the food of the ponies and of the men and boys is no longer available for the unfortunate little creatures.

When, by way of example, the Durham colliers joined in the general strike last year many of the pits in that county were overrun with mice; and for some time after work was resumed not one was seen.

Dogs also are among the animal trespassers in mines. By some means a terrier entered a disused pit in Swaledale, and for eight days it roamed about the workings, apparently without anything to eat.

More remarkable was a dog's intrusion into a South Wales pit which has the reputation of being haunted. The animal in question was seen prowling about the workings, and, as it seemed to vanish when an attempt was made to catch it, a number of colliers at once "downed tools" and went home.

Some of them then consulted a local wise woman, telling her of the "vision" they had seen earlier in the day, whereupon she predicted a disaster. As a result more than 200 men refused to go down the following morning, and, though the manager did his utmost to induce them to resume work, they obstinately determined to remain idle.

And, what is more, it was not until three days later that all the men were at work again.

There were two curious sequels to this incident. One, which took place about a week afterward, was the prosecution and conviction of the fortune teller for causing the miners to absent themselves from work.

A Gruesome Discovery.

The other sequeal happened much more recently, and was the discovery of the skeleton of a dog—doubtless that which had been seen by some of the miners—in the workings.

The most singular trespassers in coal mines, perhaps, are workers from neighboring pits. A man or boy loses his way and, when his lamp goes out, wanders in pitchy darkness through the disused workings, ever listening for the sound of a pick, till he either sinks exhausted or gets in touch with humanity again.

A bloodhound was once taken down a pit to find a man who had disappeared, and in several cases lost miners have ultimately worked back to their starting point. Some years ago, for instance, a boy was lost in a Scotch colliery from Monday morning to Wednesday morning, notwithstanding he was searched for systematically the whole time, and in the end, when almost exhausted, he came upon his father and uncle at the place where he had left them.

Sometimes, however, miners become trespassers—only in a technical sense—through "striking" a road communicating with another pit and following it up.

Inconsiderate Men

FIRST the telephone rang. Then the buzzer buzzed. Then a voice from the inner office called sharply for the little stenographer.

"You can all wait until I'm good and ready," announced the little stenographer, decidedly, to the world in general.

After this declaration of independence she hastily answered the phone, then grabbed book and pencil and hurried into the inner office, pausing an instant on the way to let the owner of the impatient voice know that she was engaged.

"I tell you," she remarked to the bookkeeper when she returned, "I get so exasperated sometimes that I almost explode! These men make me awfully tired! Here I've been working all the years that they've been having a good time getting educated. Then they come into the office, and, after selecting the lightest window and the most comfortable chair, they think they're busy!

"Here I am—with my desk piled high with real work! And what do you suppose that young Mr. Babcock wanted? He calmly asked me to take a few letters—personal thank you letters—to friends of his who entertained him on his trip! And in each one he excused himself for using a stenographer on the ground that he was so pressed for time! Pressed for time! Why, he doesn't know how to fill in the hours.

He Was Lazy.

"Do you know what Mr. Brown was so urgent about? He's been calling out here for ten minutes, while I was engaged, and I thought it couldn't be anything less than drawing up a contract! But there he sat, looking over his last month's personal account, and he was too lazy to think for himself! He wanted me to stand there beside him and go through the things with him—because, as he said, two heads are better than one! What he might have said, if he'd been strictly truthful, is that my head is better than his!

"This morning Mr. Gray came strolling in an hour after things had begun, and he sat down and read a newspaper and smoked a cigar before he went through his mail. Then he called me in to take his letters, and, though I purposely let him know how much work I had piled up, he gave me half a dozen phone numbers to call for him! And he sat there looking out of the window while I got his numbers on the telephone! Oh, it makes me so angry I'd like to express myself from a public platform on the wrongs of busy stenographers!"

The bookkeeper listened sympathetically. "I must own," he said, "that they're an inconsiderate bunch!"

"Inconsiderate!" cried the little stenographer. "They do it on purpose. They've got it into their thick heads that they're business men, and they can't be bothered with detail and the little things. They're such big men! Their time is awfully valuable and mustn't be wasted!

"Do you know what I'm going to do some time? I'm going to accept a proposal of marriage. That'll make me free to do as I please. Then I'm coming down to the office the same as usual. When the buzzer buzzes I'll go in, and I'll take the business letters, but when a personal letter comes I'll simply say, 'I'm busy to-day.' Then, when they ask me to get some phone numbers, I'll say, 'I see you aren't at all busy; would you mind getting those numbers yourself? I've a great deal of work to do!' Then I'll walk out to my desk!

"When Mr. Brown calls me away in the midst of an important letter to stand at his side while he leans back in his swivel chair, so that I may help him add up figures and straighten out accounts, I'll say, 'Mr. Brown, I'm very busy to-day, and if you've nothing of importance to say you'll have to excuse me!'

"Oh, but won't they be surprised! The only trouble is that I've been a slave for so long that I'm afraid I won't have the courage to break up traditions and precedents."

The Other Side.

"Then," said the bookkeeper, musingly, "you'll put on your hat and go home, and the man who proposed to you, so you could be free from this daily grind, will say: 'I want dinner early to-night,' and you'll hurry to get it. Between times you'll be mending and darning and dusting, to make him comfortable; and he'll call you, and you'll come running to hear what he's got to say. And you'll go on training him to expect that sort of service, so when he goes to his office he'll be just like the rest of the men!"

The little stenographer listened fascinated. "Why, that's so!" she exclaimed. She paused and thought it over. "But I guess I'll try it anyway," she announced, "because I'll dare to say, 'I won't for he can't fire me!'"

The Bitter Bit.

The workhouse inmates were just about to sit down, when two men came along one of the corridors carrying a steaming caldron between them.

"Aha!" cried the official, who had been lying in wait for them. "Put that kettle down and fetch me a spoon!"

One of the men brought a spoon and at the same time tried to say something, but was peremptorily told to hold his tongue.

"D'yer call that soup?" at length spluttered the official, as he swallowed a heaped-up spoonful of the steaming mess. "It's more like dirty water."

"But that's just wot it is, sir," answered the second man, timidly. "We have been scrubbin' down the tables!"

RIP VAN WINKLE WOULD DOUBT HIS EYES TODAY

Quarter Century's Progress Has Transformed World of the Workingman.

By B. C. FORBES.

In the new issue of Hearst's Magazine I picture a Rip Van Winkle workman opening his eyes after a sleep of a quarter of a century or less. There is so much discontent, so much pessimism hanging like a black pall over the land to-day that it may not be untimely to reproduce an extract here:

Picture in your mind a Rip Van Winkle workman opening his eyes on the world of to-day after a sleep of a quarter of a century or less. What would he behold? What changes would strike him? Would he be able to believe his eyes?

When he fell asleep— say 25 years ago—he and his class were slaving from early morning to darkness every day, with no thought of half-holidays or fortnight vacations. They lived in houses that were, outwardly, hovels and enriched with no bath rooms, no hot-and-cold water systems, no hygienic contrivances such as we know to-day. The world beyond a few miles from their doorsteps was an unopened book; travel for sightseeing was unknown.

Places of amusement were few and far between, and the ordinary worker seldom had either the time or the money to patronize them. The one problem about clothes was how to find enough to cover nakedness and keep warm in winter. Education was well-nigh beyond the reach of the poor.

Our Rip Van Winkle workman would stare in bewilderment at modern sights and conditions and listen with incredulity to the tales he would be told.

He would see workers living in comfortable, even pretentious, homes, adorned with appliances and conveniences such as only the wealthy aspired to when he fell asleep. He would see them wearing clothing that a millionaire might have envied in his day had there been millionaires then. He would see public schools at every turn and every child from 5 to 13 or more attending daily, with no tasks (save in rare cases) beyond their lessons.

On all sides theaters would meet his gaze, drawing their hundreds and their thousands of amusement-seekers nightly. Of sights and wonders beyond his home—and even beyond the seas—he would hear fairylike tales from people who had seen them with their own eyes.

Most of all would the changed lot of the worker, the transformation in conditions of toil, impress him.

Instead of a twelve and fourteen hours' day he would hear of eight or nine hours' days' of demands that these hours be further reduced, and that every hour over eight be paid for at a special high rate.

His head would buzz with descriptions of ingenious plans designed to better the life of his fellows. He would be told of old-age pensions, of profit-sharing plans, of sick benefits, of workmen's compensation laws, of minimum wage scales voluntarily granted.

He would learn of co-operative, cost-price stores for corporation employees, of recreation halls, dining rooms, and libraries attached to large factories and workshops, of free hospitals, of weekly half-holidays and regular summer vacations, of extra pay for every hour of overtime, of occasional bonuses at Christmas and princely gifts from retiring or deceased employers.

He would find trades unions ready at any moment to throw down the gauntlet to an over-reaching firm or corporation, of laws providing for sanitary work places and safety devices at danger spots, of technical classes and schools organized by leading corporations for the instruction of ambitious youths, and of innumerable instances of humble lads having risen to the topmost places of industry and railroading, displacing the ornamental sons of gifted fathers, birth being no longer a guarantee of high position in the world of business.

Emancipation is not complete—far, very far, from it. There are still many wrongs to be righted, many cruelties to be banished, many dark places to be lighted. The curse of child labor still blots our escutcheon. Starvation wages are still paid by many employers and a few big corporations.

Long hours are still worked in various factories and stores by women in the making, sapping the strength and womanhood of the mothers of our men of to-morrow. Seven-day weeks are not yet entirely unknown in a few industries. There are no unions to stand up for fair play in many poorly paid lines of work. Sweatshops still blur the picture of modern industry.

"Get, get, get!" drowns the cry "Give, give, give!" but there is more giving every year. Selfishness has not been eradicated from employers any more than from employees, but there are more men of means seeking to serve mankind to-day than ever before, more of them applying the square-deal principle among their workers, more of them influenced by a spirit of righteousness and not wholly by a spirit of rapacity.

NEW YORK, May 5.—Due to bearish weather conditions the cotton market opened under pressure to-day and first prices were 3 to 8 points off. Although cables were unsatisfactory the list received fairly good support. This was particularly true of new crops. The selling of late positions was not aggressive.

Beginning Monday, May 12, mills of the Big Fall River Iron Works Company will suspend business indefinitely. Also notices of complete shutdown have been posted in all seven mills. This caused further selling by the ring and Wall Street, resulting in a rapid decline of 22 to 7 points throughout the list from the opening. The selling was also based upon Texas rains and continued favorable weather throughout the belt.

The weather indications added to the bearish argument and encouraged active selling of new crops. The map indicates partly cloudy to fair over the western half of Texas and unsettled to showery weather in East Texas and the central part. Cloudy in the Atlantics.

During the late forenoon the market was given rather good support, which was believed to be shorts covering, and prices retrieved the early decline and fluctuated within the approximate of the opening quotations.

Wall Street was a buyer of old and new crop positions and commission houses were fair buyers. Much sentiment seemed to be against the market and the ring continued to sell during the afternoon session. Still, prices rallied a shade above the initial level for old crops and ruled irregular for new positions.

The reports that the mills at Fall River will close down was discouraging in the face of unsettled political conditions abroad. The closing of the mills was taken to indicate that the stringency of money is having real effect upon the trade and that business conditions both local and foreign are worse. The market was saved from a serious decline by short covering. July showed considerable weakness, but managed to hold steady around the opening level.

With the prevailing bearish sentiment and continued favorable crop reports it will be a difficult task to bring about any advance of consequence, especially in the face of the pessimistic feeling, leaders say.

A wire was received from Cordill from Memphis stating that the crop outlook is very favorable and the soil is exceptionally well prepared. The start is more favorable in the Memphis district than either 1912 or 1911. During the past few days the weather has been warm and sunny and favorable for germination.

A wave of scattered short covering by the ring during the closing hour gave a steadier tone for a few minutes, but offerings continued of a good character from a number of brokers with spot house connection and the market closed steady with prices unchanged to 5 points lower than Saturday's final.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, May 5.—Political news over Sunday was of such composition as to make it difficult to form a judgment. While Montenegro consented to evacuate Scutari, there are persistent rumors of Austria and Italy trying to gain control of Albania, thereby creating a new difficulty. English consols this morning were ⅛ higher to 74 13-16, but French rentes were 20 down, to 85.22½. Liverpool was poor, with futures 5 to 7 points down; spots 6 points down, sales 8,000 bales.

There was no cold weather over Sunday. On the contrary, temperatures were higher in the lower and middle sections. New York wired that the Iron Works Mills, Borden, the largest at Fall River, expected to go on short time at the end of this week, and that others will follow.

Our market dropped about 10 points in the early trading, but ruled steady at the decline. There was no real pressure to sell.

The favorable rains, with prospects of needed rains in the near future in the Eastern States, was the principal cause of the easiness.

Guarantee Bank Co. Heads Are Accused

Sam E. Smith and H. S. Miles, Owners of Atlanta Bank, Charged With "Wildcat" Operations.

Charges that officers of the Guarantee Trust and Banking Company engaged in "wildcat" finance are contained in amendments to the suit filed against the concern in Superior Court.

The foundation of the company is attacked in allegations that it never was organized in good faith, but that Sam E. Smith and H. S. Miles, principal owners of the Guarantee Redemption Company, organized the Guarantee Trust and Banking Company and unloaded the old concern on it at an excessive price of $224,000, after seven years of unsuccessful operation.

It is charged that after an audit Smith and Miles restored about $79,000 of their stock to the company in order to prevent an effort to rescind the entire transaction.

Lots of the Hollywood Cemetery, bought for $35,000, were entered upon the books immediately at $150,000 and listed in the assets, it is alleged, and further, that expenses have been $50,000 and income $30,000 for the past three months.

The company must earn $1,000 in ten years on an investment of $470, besides paying expenses, the attorneys charge in the amended suit.

"Tariff Will Be Blow to Steel, but I'm Not Quitting"---Schwab

"Enterprise and Resourcefulness of U. S. Insure Continued Prosperity," He Says.

WASHINGTON, May 5.—The steel industry in the East will be hard hit by the new tariff and business generally will be unsettled for some time, but the enterprise and resourcefulness of the country are sufficient to justify expectations for continued prosperity."

Charles M. Schwab, president of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation, thus declared his optimism:

"I did not come to Washington to fight the tariff" he added. "I have testified before several Congressional committees that if the tariff on steel were materially lowered we would be compelled to abandon plans for enlarging our plant at Bethlehem.

"I have been quoted as saying I would go out of the steel business if the country has a tariff such as is now proposed. I did not make any such statement, however. I am not going to quit."

CLEARINGS FOR WEEK SHOW HEAVY DECREASE

Bank clearings for the week ending May 1 totaled $3,098,813,000 against $3,-149,417,000 the preceding week and $3,-577,581,000 the coresponding week, 1912. The total showed a decrease of 13.3 per cent, the total outside New York, a decrease of 7.4 per cent from the same week of last year.

Clearings for April were 6.2 per cent larger than for March, but 4.7 per cent smaller than April, 1912. New York's decrease from April, 1912, of 8.7 per cent, explains the entire shrinkage. Outside New York, clearings were larger for the past month than for any April on record.

DRY GOODS REVIEW.

Marshall Field & Co., in their weekly review of the dry goods trade, says:

Warmer weather has stimulated the movement of dry goods both in retail and wholesale lines. Large daily sales have been recorded during the week on spring and summer merchandize, both in staples and novelties. Collections are holding close to normal. There has been no let up in the large amount of business that is being booked for fall delivery on all lines that are being shown on the road.

Dress goods men have been out for some time and are sending in handsome orders. Ratines still are in big demand and hard to get. Tissue ginghams and voiles, both in cotton and cotton and silk, are included in nearly all of the filling-in orders. Printed batiste is also a leading dress goods item.

There has been a deluge of orders for muslin underwear. This demand has not centered on particular garments, but has been general throughout the line.

Investor' Column

W. S.—There is some question as to the ability of Denver and Rio Grande Railroad to carry the Western Pacific until such time as the road may be able to pay its own way. It would appear wisest to broaden your line of investments by the purchase of other issues. Baltimore and Ohio convertible 4½'s or Lorillard 5's might be suggested.

J. H. F. M.—Seaboard Air Line 4 per cents are a good venture for a long pull. California Petroleum preferred can hardly be recommended. The company was floated in a way that has met with public disapproval. It might be well to wait until further information can be obtained of the intrinsic value behind the stocks.

COTTON MARKET OPINIONS.

Hutton & Co.: On any further break would buy new crops.

Sternberger, Sinn & Co.: We can not see any reason for a particular upward very large, which should help stimulate movement, although the short interest is late prices.

Miller & Co.: We advise sale of new crop months.

Logan & Bryan: We feel sales should be made on sharp bulges only.

Hayden, Stone & Co.: On hard spots cotton seems to come out freely.

GOOD CROP NEWS PUTS STOCKS UP

The Market Also Makes Creditable Response to Improvement in the European Situation.

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, May 5.—There was a marked show of strength at the opening of the stock market to-day and gains were recorded throughout the list. Canadian Pacific opened 2¼ higher at 240⅜ and soon crossed 241.

Traders attributed the upturn to better news from Europe. Reports that Montenegro will avert an armed clash by giving up Scutari caused a better tone in the bourses, which, in turn, was sympathetically communicated to this market. Other advances were: Amalgamated Copper, ½; American Can, ¾; Atchison, ⅝; St. Paul, ¾; Erie, ⅜; Northern Pacific, ¼; Missouri Pacific, ⅛; New York Central, ¼; Reading, 1¼; Southern Pacific, ⅛; Union Pacific, 1⅛; United States Rubber common ¼, and United States Steel common, ⅛.

New York, New Haven and Hartford was the weakest issue on the list, opening at 104½ for a decline of ⅜.

The curb was steady. Americans in London were strong.

Canadian Pacific spurted in London on Berlin buying.

The higher range of prices established in the early trading continued throughout the forenoon. Canadian Pacific advanced 2⅞ to 241½. At 74⅝, Copper was up 1⅜. Reading was up 1⅝. Union Pacific reached 150¼, a gain of 1⅝. Fractional gains were recorded in all the other issues.

Call money loaned at 3 per cent.

A quiet tone prevailed in the market in the last hour. Canadian Pacific was unchanged from its noon price and American Can made a fractional decline. Slight advances were scored by Steel common and Reading.

The market closed quiet. Governments unchanged; other bonds firm.

REPORT BY SNOW CHEAPENS WHEAT

Expert Gives Condition as Excellent and Abandoned Acreage as the Smallest Known.

ST. LOUIS CASH QUOTATIONS.

Wheat—No. 2 red	104½@109
Corn—No. 2	56
Oats—No. 2	35

CHICAGO, May 5.—Wheat was ⅝ to 1⅛c lower this morning and was under considerable selling pressure. Northwestern receipts were heavier than a year ago and the primary receipts will show an increase over those of a year ago. World's shipments were smaller than comparative periods and there was a big decrease in the amount of breadstuffs on ocean passage for the week.

Corn was off ⅛ to ¼c. Farmers are selling corn more freely and they are also disposing of their surplus oats and the latter was off ⅛ to ⅝c in consequence.

Provisions were stronger under short covering.

Losses were shown of ¼@⅝c in wheat, ⅛@⅜c in corn and ⅛ in oats. Sentiment was bearish during the last hour of the session, and the selling was more liberal, while the buying was cautious. The visible supply of wheat decreased 3,666,000 bushels, corn decreased 3,175,000 bushels and oats decreased 779,000 bushels for the past week. The cash business was reported at 65,000 bushels of wheat at Chicago, 100,000 bushels of corn and 235,000 bushels of oats. The seaboard reported 45 boatloads of Duluth wheat for shipment abroad. While there are a great many bears in the Chicago grain markets, they are afraid to put out any great amount of wheat, corn or oats, as they believe that those who are in control of those markets will force them out of their positions whether they are on the short or long side. The excellent crop conditions are reflected in the big receipts of wheat at the various positions, coupled with the desire on the part of holders in the country to get rid of at least part of their grain.

While the provision market was dull, it was strong and higher all around.

POULTRY, PET and LIVE STOCK

Average Egg Yield Per Hen Per Year

Highest Mark Reached in Australian Contest Was 247.

Again and again the question is asked: What is a good average yield of eggs per hen per year?

In the great Australian egg-laying contest conducted by the Government there were 100 pens of six hens each in competition. The contest covered one year, and the eggs laid per pen ranged from 1,481 down to 721, or an average per hen of 247 the highest and 120 the lowest, which would be 183 for the average hen out of the 600. Or, taking the record of the lowest hens in the contest, 120 eggs per year at 25 cents per dozen would mean $2.50 per hen. Allowing $1.25 for feed, you would have a profit of $1.25 per hen per year. Or, allowing 25 cents per hen for looking after them, and you have just a big round dollar profit. Allowing 50 cents for the price of your hen and you see you have made 100 per cent profit.

Good Profit.

In what other kind of business without any element of speculation in it can you beat this for showing? Taking the old method of figuring results: Net profit on one hen, $1; net profit on 1,000 hens, $1,000. With an experienced poultryman, this can be done. It is not an unreasonable proposition to carry out.

Some of you will be desirous to know what kind of chickens did the best laying. We have not the room to give the table complete, but will say that the first prize pen was Black Langshans; second and third, White Leghorns; fourth, Golden Wyandottes, and fifth, Black Orpingtons. Included in the best 25 pens were ten Leghorn pens strengthening their reputation of being egg machines. The monthly laying was: April, 5,645 eggs; May, 6,854 eggs; June, 7,032 eggs; July, 9,548 eggs; August, 12,292 eggs; September, 11,940 eggs; October, 11,294 eggs; November, 9,548 eggs; December, 8,466 eggs; January, 8,084 eggs; February, 6,948 eggs; March, 5,278 eggs; grand total, 102,209 eggs from 600 hens. You will note how the egg season varies from this country.

Orpingtons.

F. J. Marshall: Can you tell me something about the Orpingtons. I am green about poultry.

MRS. J. J. M.

Wadley, Ga.

Answer: The Orpingtons consist of Buff, Black and White varieties. The most important and extensively bred is the Buff. The first Orpingtons were imported from England a few years ago. The Buffs have become quite popular over this country, and very deservedly so, for they are a first-class fowl. In shape they have very long, round, deep bodies with very full breasts. The length of the hackle feathers flowing well upon the back give that section the appearance of being short, when, in reality, it is not. The body is carried somewhat horizontal, in that particular it is entirely different from the Plymouth Rock in type. It is deep from the back down through the breast and body. In size they are just about one-half pound heavier than the Plymouth Rocks. Cocks, 10 pounds; hens, 8 pounds; cockerels, 8 1-2 pounds, and pullets, 7 pounds. The comb is single and medium in size, perhaps a trifle larger than the Plymouth Rocks. Tails are full and well rounded in the male and carried rather low. In females the tail is broad and full, and is carried medium low. Legs and skin of all the varieties are white or flesh color with a tinge of pink on the sides of legs of males. In color of plumage the Buff should be a golden buff in all sections, but in most cases it is very hard to obtain. The black should be lustrous beetle or greenish black as free from purple barring as possible. When you get them about right they are a most handsome fowl. The Whites are quite hard to breed true to color. In color they should be a milky white with no tinge of cream or brass, as is seen in the yellow-legged varieties. The Orpingtons are a good thrifty fowl and splendid layers.

The committee met Saturday at the Brookhaven Club and went over the property, and virtually agreed to buy it, according to report, on condition that certain details of the proposition can be perfected.

On the committee are Robert F. Maddox, Jack J. Spalding, John E. Murphy, Preston S. Arkwright, Edward H. Inman, Dr. W. S. Elkin, Madison Bell and W. G. Humphries. A majority of the committee, it is said, favor the general proposition and will vote accordingly.

Their removal will give West Peachtree its second church, the first being All Saints, at the northwest corner of West Peachtree Street and North Avenue.

The Baby That Cried and the Baby That Didn't

The Mother of the First Baby Had Real Cause for Thanksgiving

Copyright, 1913.

It was on a suburban train running out of Atlanta. A mother with her family, two half-grown children and a baby, was on the way, apparently, to spend a day with friends and relatives in the country.

The baby was cross and fretful. The motion of the car irritated him, the conductor frightened him, the other passengers, jingling keys foolishly to distract his attention, annoyed him.

He was perhaps ten months old, and a baby of ten months has a magnificently developed voice.

This baby knew what his voice was for, and he used it. From one end of the car to the other he could be heard, howling an indignant protest against taking a journey he did not want to take, and undergoing privations without being consulted.

The mother, terribly worried by the indignant frowns of the other passengers, fussed and worried. She offered the baby his bottle, but he batted it away with a tiny pink hand and yelled louder than ever.

Being a careful mother, she examined his clothing for possible loose pins, but she didn't find any.

The woman in the seat ahead of her turned and rudely stared, first at her and then at the purple-faced baby.

A crusty old man in the seat behind said to his companion: "Why in the thunder do people travel with babies? If they cannot afford nurses they ought to stay at home."

More sympathetic people strolled past and offered the mother advice and made faces for the baby to admire. But the baby did not admire them. He merely expressed eloquently, though without articulate words, his contempt and disgust.

Presently the mother, driven nearly frantic, turned to a woman across the aisle and said:

"I wish to goodness he wouldn't cry. I'd give anything in the world if he'd only keep quiet for a week, absolutely quiet."

Now, this was a healthy baby, dressed in frills and ribbons, his little feet in brand-new, soft, red shoes, and his distorted face framed in a circle of fluffy white fur.

And because he was healthy and well fed, and protected against disease, his voice was of the lustiest kind.

Perhaps it is not surprising that his mother wished she might not hear his voice for another week, but——

Recently a party of men went among the tenement houses in New York to distribute some small gifts for the tenants.

They were poor, squalid tenement houses. On every floor were dozens of babies, but there was no crying.

In one little room a mother sat beside a little, dirty bed—a mattress placed on two up-ended cracker boxes.

On the bed was a baby—also ten months old, but with no shoes whatever, and clothed in a few dingy garments that had served several other babies before him.

The baby was very white and very still. On each cheek was a red spot, showing that a fever was pumping his blood to an abnormal pressure. His eyes were large and blue and wide open.

The mother turned to the visitors and tried to smile. Then she looked back at the patient, quiet baby.

"If he would only just cry," she said. "It seems to me I would give my life to hear him cry just a little."

There is something to remember, you mothers who lose your patience when your babies cry. Think of those other babies in the tenements who do not cry, either because they have not the strength or because they have learned that not even a baby's needs can be satisfied because of his crying for them when there is nothing in the house to satisfy them.

Healthy babies MUST cry. Crying not only develops their lungs, but it is their only means of telling their mothers that there is something the matter or that they are dissatisfied and unhappy.

And no baby is dissatisfied or unhappy who is well fed and well cared for.

When he cries you may be sure that he is sick or tired or that he feels that he is being trifled with.

Feed him well, keep him clean, clothe him warmly, and he will be content to play and coo as long as he keeps awake.

But when his stomach is empty or overfull, when pins are sticking in him, or his feet are cold, you may expect to hear his voice raised in loud and emphatic protest.

Be glad that you can hear it, you mothers whose nerves are "all frayed out" because the crying disturbs you—and you fathers who spend the night away from home because "you cannot bear to hear that baby howling all night."

Let the baby tell you by his crying that something is the matter, and, rather than scold and storm, find out what it is and make him easier and more comfortable.

Remember that there are many mothers, whose babies are now silent forever, who would give all that they have in the world could they hear those wailing baby voices come back to them across the years, and, taking the little creatures in their arms, try with all their mother instinct to help them and make them happy again.

Winifred Black Writes About "Doors That Slam"

By WINIFRED BLACK.

BANG!—said the door—
I turned over in my sleep—
Rattle-bang!—there it was again. If I could only think of some way to stop it.

It really was too bad—there I was so tired, up all night the night before and busy all day that day, so tired, so weary—and no one cared, no one seemed to notice how drawn my poor face was—no one even said they were sorry—that's always the way—a woman could work herself to death and that's all the thanks that she would get. Biff!—there's that door again!

The rising wind took a delight in that door and the wooden slam of it. Sometimes the door didn't bang; it simply rattled—R-R-R-R-R-rattle, rattle, rattle, like a train of cars going over a shaky bridge—rrrrrattle, rattle, rattle, there—there is water under that bridge; you can tell by the sort of rustle in the rattle—shake, shake, shake—someone must be there; no, it is only the wind again—shake, shake, shake—well, come in if you want to so badly.

Door Banged No More.

Not a soul in the house will get up and shut that door tight, and let me sleep.

Along about daylight I rose, walked over to the door just a few steps, turned the key, and it was done—the door banged no more.

My train ceased to run over bridges, and I fell asleep—at last peacefully, calmly, sweetly asleep, and yet—outside the wind blew—I could hear him singing in the bare boughs of the great oak—like some entranced musician loath to leave his music—and I was neither younger nor more blessed in any way than before. Yet I slept as if I were sweet sixteen, with all the world waiting to lay garlands of roses at my feet when I deigned to awaken a glad world with my presence.

It didn't take a minute to work the miracle—nor any genius or inspiration. Just plain sense and some little resolution for the instant, and the troublous night and the uneasy dreams turned to refreshing slumber—and the door was the same door, only it wasn't locked when it banged.

I wonder——

How often have I turned upon an easy pillow and let the door bang—rather than to get up and shut it?

A hundred times, I fear, and more than that.

Are Sensitive Souls.

The cook leaves the gas burning in the range when she doesn't need it. What an extravagance!—it irritates me every time I see it. I turn it out, but the next time I go to the kitchen there it is, blazing away at so much a blaze—I hated to speak of it—cooks are such sensitive souls, and this one makes such delicious waffles. Last week I took my courage in my hands and called the cook into the pantry.

"Mary," I said, "there is something I want to speak to you about—the gas you are so careless about; please turn it out the minute you are through with it, will you?"

"Yes," said Mary, and she did it; and now I like to go into the kitchen, and Mary seems to like to see me come. The secret irritation that must have disturbed her as much as it did me is gone—all by a few calm words spoken at the right time.

I didn't hear from my old friend for a while. When I met her she seemed cold. What could the matter be?

Last week she gave a party and didn't ask me—I didn't care for the party—I couldn't have managed to go anyhow—but—I sat down and wrote and asked her what was the matter.

What's the Matter?

"I love you," I said. 'Don't you care for me any more? How have I offended?" She came that afternoon and told me of a careless remark, spitefully repeated, and we are good friends again—and I am glad.

What's the matter with life? The bills are high—every one is grasping—no one seems to care—oh, it's a terrible world! Ten to one it's only some door slamming somewhere that's doing it all—one foolish, no-account door that should be locked.

Get up, you sleepy thing! Get up at once and lock it!

The Celestial Locket

By MINNA IRVING.

THE big round moon is at the full,
And riding bright and high,
With little flecks of lacy cloud
Around it in the sky.
It's like a silver locket hung
Upon a chain of diamond stars,
That pale before its light.

Against the midnight's purple robe
Brocaded with the beams
Of constellations far and near,
How brilliantly it gleams!
And look! as from the world below
Its polished disk we scan,
We see within its shining rim

John Temple Graves Says

Our Navy Needs a Charles Beresford

The Great Englishman, he says, Keeps Britain's Navy Up-to-Date and In Repair by Exposing Its Glaring Weakness from Time to Time.

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES

GEORGIANS and other Americans who read of the great banquet last October given by the city of New York to the President and his Cabinet and the officers of the assembled fleet, will recall the confident assurance of President Taft at that banquet that these magnificent vessels, then anchored off New York, in the North River were the chief defense of the country, and that each one of them was ready at a moment's notice to weigh anchor and sail out to meet and conquer an invading foe.

President Taft doubtless made this statement upon information furnished him by some one in authority in the Navy Department.

It was a shame for any official of the American Government to have imposed upon the President of the United States such a gross misstatement of the facts.

Disquieting Whispers.

It was a greater shame to have permitted the President of the United States to give out such an untruthful statement to the American people.

For the navy was then, as the navy is now, inadequate in the number of officers and of men and shamefully inadequate in its equipment of fuel and coal.

Such a statement going out at that time was calculated to lull the activity of the heads of the Navy Department, who ought to have known the facts and who certainly must know them now. It was whispered on the day after the banquet that the President's assuring words were not founded upon facts and that the navy was lacking in many elements that rendered it effective for battle and defense.

It would have been the part of a brave man then, who knew these facts, to have told them, in order that the condition might have been corrected at the time.

It would be a cowardly American now who would keep these facts from the public at this time and permit our navy to go out to sen in its present condition.

A Fearless Patriot.

And it would appear to any thoughtful American who loves his country that the prompt and fearless dealing with these conditions, as they have been stated, is the highest possible duty which appeals now to the Secretary of the Navy and to the President of the United States.

England has a great and fearless patriot in Lord Charles Beresford, and no part of Lord Beresford's great service has been more marked than the incessant challenge by which he has kept England posted as to the deficiencies of her navy and the necessity for repairing. Time after time, when England has been boasting herself before her people of the greatness and irresistible power of her navy, Lord Beresford, himself one of England's mightiest sailors, has broken into the eulogy with a public exposure of some glaring weakness and inefficiency in the English navy, and this sharp challenge of the fearless sailor-publicist has done perhaps as much or more than anything else to keep the English battleships up to the mark of efficiency.

We ought to have in America some great publicist who will not fear to tell our Government the truth about its navy in time of peace and not wait for the sharp necessity of war to prod the department into action. Either in Congress or in the departments, or in the press, there should be found a monitor who would warn and direct the carelessness or the apathy of the American navy.

The present Secretary of the Navy is a young man, who has just assumed that office. He has had no experience with naval affairs and is frank and honest enough to confess it. He appears to be very earnest and devoted to his work.

Work for the Secretary.

If Secretary Daniels would do his country some service he will address himself here and now to finding out from inside sources the real facts about the American navy, the condition of its ships, the equipment of its crews, the preparation for its fuel and its colliers, and he would make his administration of that department liberal by holding the navy rigidly up to the standard of efficiency for instant service.

He would see to it, if official persuasion could be effective, that additional inducements were given to men to enlist in the navy. He would remember that most young men enlist in the navy not for a career, but to see the world, and he would devote himself to plans to securing the full complement for every one of the unfilled battleships that carries our flag today.

There is a great opportunity for a Secretary of the Navy at the present time, and that opportunity lies not along the line of trivial improvements, but of vital preparedness for that which battleships were built to do—to fight when necessary with every force of men and machinery and fuel in its place.

The Empress of India

By REV. THOMAS B. GREGORY.

THAN the proclamation of Queen Victoria as Empress of India, made in the city of London thirty-seven years ago, there is perhaps nothing stranger or, from the standpoint of the psychologist, more interesting, in all history.

Think of it for a moment. The Queen of a little island in the Atlantic, with an area of some eighty-five thousand square miles and a population under thirty millions, is solemnly proclaimed sovereign of an empire thousands of miles away, covering one million six hundred thousand square miles and containing a population of two hundred and eighty-seven millions of souls.

The audacity of it! The cool, colossal impudence of the thing! It was sublime. That vote of the Parliament commanding the ever memorable proclamation reminds us of the rulings of Providence, of the ways of the omnipotent God. The little handful of Britishers, speaking through their representatives gathered in the council house by the Thames, declare their good little Queen to be absolute ruler of the ancient and august Empire by the Ganges and the Brahmaputra, and, lo! it is done. Six months later, at a Durbar of unequaled magnificence held on the historic ridge overlooking the mogul capital of Delhi, the princes and leading men of India bow down before the representatives of the little woman in England, and, in the name of the two hundred and eighty-seven millions of the Indian people, swear eternal fealty to her rule.

Was there ever such romance as this cold-blooded history? What kind of people are the two hundred and eighty-seven million to be falling down before the thirty millions thousands of miles away? And what kind of people are the thirty millions that they should be even dreaming of declaring themselves the lords and masters of the two hundred and eighty-seven millions?

The explanation is to be found in the difference between the Saxon man and the Hindoo man. We think we know what that difference is—but in spite of it all there remains that mystery of mysteries—British rule in India. Nor is the mystery much lightened by the fact that, upon the whole, that rule has ben a blessing to the Indian people.

Jack London Faces Charge of Assault

Writer Accused of Beating Man He Disarmed and Ejected From His Ranch Home.

SANTA ROSE, CAL., May 6.—Jack London, the famous author, traveler and landowner of Glen Ellen, and his guest, John J. Burns, of San Francisco, must answer to a charge of battery next Monday as a result of trouble on the London ranch.

Mrs. J. H. Shepard and her sister had some words, according to Shepard, and because Burns, who was present, refused to interfere on behalf of Mrs. Shepard, Shepard is alleged to have made a demonstration with a revolver.

London and Burns are said to have taken the weapon from Shepard, grappled with him and forcibly ejected him. Shepard declared London choked and abused him.

LONDON, May 6.—A news agency dispatch received here to-day from Ahens states that Aleko Shinas, the anarchist who assassinated King George of Greece in Salonika on March 18, jumped from a window in the police building and killed himself.

How the prisoner eluded the jailers is not told in the dispatch.

Schinas killed the King by firing point blank into his back while he was walking along the streets of Salonika. He gave as an explanation of the crime that in 1911 he had applied for assistance at the King's palace and had been driven away.

Villages War for Railway Station

Wiley Claims 23 People and Is "Cow Center"—Mathis Depends on Natural Beauty.

Rabun County is at white heat, and the old feud between the towns of Wiley and Mathis is at its height. The vital question of which place gets a regular railroad station with an agent in charge is to be determined this week by the Georgia Railroad Commission.

Wiley claims the greater population. Within a radius of one mile from Wiley there are 23 persons living. It has been shown conclusively. It claims also to be "the natural center of the cow movement," whatever that may mean.

Mathis claims that it is due to become a great summer resort because of the beauty of the lake created there by the Georgia Railway and Power Company's dam.

Photographs of the surrounding country, letters from almost every State between Ohio and the District of Columbia, a mass of evidence and many personal appeals have reached the Railroad Commission on the subject.

NEWEST CLEWS IN PHAGAN CASE NOT YET PUBLIC

Body of Slain Girl Exhumed and Bloodstains on Factory Floor Analyzed.

NEW THEORY ANNOUNCED

Solicitor Believes Victim May Have Been Thrown, Still Alive, Down Elevator Shaft.

The force of detectives working under the supervision of Solicitor Dorsey Tuesday night will make another searching investigation of the factory basement of the National Pencil Company.

The search for clews will be conducted under the glare of a string of electric lights that have been installed in the last twenty-four hours for the express purpose of revealing the obscure corners and dark places that hitherto have been illumined only by the unsatisfactory light of ordinary lanterns and the few flickering gas lights that are in the basement.

All of the new evidence obtained will be presented at the resumption of the inquest Thursday morning.

That there already is new and startling evidence seems true, but just what it indicates the officials refuse to say, and the reporters, therefore, are merely guessing at what may be, or may not be, the actual facts.

Solicitor Is Reticent.

Solicitor Dorsey was reticent about the nature of the most recent discoveries, but his guarded statements indicated that he considered the disclosures which have been made by the force of detectives, physicians and chemists working under his direction as having a most important bearing on the solution of the crime.

Mr. Dorsey issued this statement:

I see in an interview attributed to Quinn that I asked him if he was not paid by counsel for Frank to protect Frank.

This statement, so far as I am concerned, is absolutely false. Throughout my talk with him I did not mention the name of counsel nor did I intimate that counsel had been guilty of any such conduct.

It is known that a more thorough and minute examination of every locality and every article having any connection or possible connection with the slaying of Mary Phagan is being made now than was undertaken in the first few days of the mystery.

Blood Stains Analyzed.

Dr. H. F. Harris, director of the State Board of Health, is making a second examination of the body of the slain girl, which was taken from the grave in the cemetery at Marietta.

Whether it was from any one of the sources that Solicitor Dorsey obtained his new lead in tracking down the slayer, he would not say. He would only repeat that every clew that offered the slightest ray of hope would be followed to the end.

May Have Been Hurled Down Shaft.

A startling theory announced by the Solicitor is that the body of Mary Phagan was thrown, alive, down the elevator shaft from the second floor to the basement. He has found that the soil at the bottom of the shaft is soft and that the girl might not have been seriously injured by a fall of this distance. He would not be surprised if subsequent developments proved that the girl was slain not on the second floor of the factory, but in the basement at just about the spot where the body was found.

To insure that not the smallest particle of evidence is overlooked, Solicitor Dorsey is continuing his rigid investigation of the factory itself. Electric lights have been strung in every nook and corner of the basement, where before it was black and gloomy. Te dirt and trash covering the floor is being searched painstakingly in the hope that some tell-tale clew may be discovered—that the girl's missing purse may be found, or that some article disclosing the identity of the slayer may be turned up.

BOWEN STILL HELD BY HOUSTON POLICE IN THE PHAGAN CASE

Atlanta Police Do Not Believe He is Implicated in Tragedy---Letters From Women and 50 Photographs of Girls Found in Prisoners Trunk.

The Atlanta police and State officials say they place little importance in the arrest of Paul P. Bowen, the former Atlanta youth who is being held by the Houston authorities.

In Bowen's trunk was found a mass of clippings telling of the Phagan killing, and at least 50 photographs of girls and young women. Several times while he was being questioned, Bowen is said to have contradicted himself.

Bowen stoutly maintains his innocence. Relatives and friends of his in Atlanta say his arrest is preposterous.

Atlanta detectives have investigated thoroughly Bowen's history in Atlanta and declared Tuesday afternoon that they have virtually established an alibi for him. Having satisfied themselves of the probability of Bowen's innocence, they are continuing on their original line of investigation and have abandoned the theory that Bowen could have been involved.

The local authorities have asked, however, that Bowen be held until a more complete investigation can be made. They think he will be able to prove his innocence and say that they have letters in their possession which practically establish that Bowen could not have been in Atlanta on the date of the crime.

One letter, addressed to Charles Kimball, a clerk in the Southern Railway office, was postmarked April 23 at Lukin, Texas, and did not reach Atlanta until April 27, the day after the killing in the National Pencil Factory basement.

Another letter, which is in the possession of Solicitor Dorsey, was written by Bowen to an Atlanta friend and was mailed at Tyler, Texas, April 20 as Bowen was on his way to Texarkana, Ark. These letters lead the local authorities to believe that Bowen can not reasonably be supposed to have come the hundreds of miles just in time to commit the crime and then immediately jump a train to return Westward.

HOUSTON, TEXAS, May 6.—Paul P. Bowen, arrested because of the suspicion of the local authorities that he was connected with the murder of Mary Phagan in Atlanta, denied Tuesday all knowledge of the girl and the crime except as he read of it in the newspapers.

A score of clippings telling the story of the little girl's death were found in the young man's room. His only explanation was that Atlanta was his home town, and he was particularly interested in the crime because of that.

The police here regard as more significant than the clippings, the stories of Bowen's actions in his room at the St. Jean Hotel, and later at a rooming house. Roomers in adjoining rooms are said to have been disturbed by his moans and mutterings and by his constant pacing of the floor.

"Why did I do it? Why did I do it?" he is declared to have repeated to himself incessantly. Compiaint was first made to the hotel authorities and later the police were notified.

Bowen was arrested last night by Chief of Police Davison, Chief of Detectives Peyton and Detective Hilton at 1520 Texas Avenue.

"A night of terror," as officers term it, led to the detention of Bowen.

Sunday night in room 214, at the St. Jean Hotel, the young man paced the floor and moaned. Persons in adjoining rooms were unable to sleep, and reported to the management that something was wrong in the room. An investigation disclosed Bowen poring over letters and newspaper accounts of the murder and crying aloud.

"Oh, why did I do it?" he is said to have cried.

"I would not have done it. I ought not to have done that. If I had it to do over I wouldn't do it," were repeatedly heard by those who listened and who frequently walked through the hall in an effort to ascertain some cause for the peculiar actions of the man.

Monday the young man was shadowed and the matter was reported to the detective department. About 5 o'clock he registered off and moved to Texas Avenue and Crawford Street. There he engaged a room for a week.

Old Man Struck and Dazed by Automobile

J. R. Russell Run Down by E. N. O'Beirne at Broad and Forsyth Streets.

J. R. Russell, a pedestrian, was struck by an automobile driven by E. N. O'Beirne, 314 Empire Building, at Broad and Forsyth streets Tuesday afternoon. Dazed by the fall, Mr. Russell was unable to give his residence address. He was sent to Grady Hospital, where it was found his injuries were not serious.

It was clearly an accident and Policeman E. J. Florence, officer on the Broad Street beat, made no arrest. According to W. H. Rhett, in the car with Mr. O'Beirne, and T. J. Dickerson and W. T. Webb, who saw the accident, the automobile was moving slowly. It was said Russell, who is advanced in years, attempting to escape another car, stepped directly in the path of Mr. O'Beirne's machine.

Last night, shortly after midnight, the officers went to the place. Bowen answered a knock at his room door, and then straightened himself and looked directly at the officers.

Holds Knife in Hand.

"Who are you fellows and what do you want here?" he asked.

The officers answered that they wanted to talk to him and he then invited them into his room. He kept a distance from them, however, and held an open knife in his right hand. Bowen appeared nervous throughout the conversation of perhaps fifteen minutes, but replied to all queries promptly and to the point.

When one of them told him to "consider yourself under arrest" he coolly answered, "That's all right, but you've got the wrong man."

Bowen closed his knife and handed it to an officer and sat on the side of the bed. To one officer he pointed out his trunk and suitcase—a small affair in the nature of a traveling man's grip. As the officers opened the trunk they lifted out clothes—some nice ones that indicated a well-dressed man—and these, with letters, postcards and pictures, were piled on the floor.

"If I had a gun you never would go through that trunk," said Bowen. "The things in there are mine, and not yours. I don't know anything about this affair and you'll have to show me strong."

Stoutly Denies Crime.

Officers talked to him for more than an hour at the police station, but Bowen stoutly denied any knowledge of the killing of the young girl. He continued to show nervousness, though, and frequently inquired of the detectives why he should be treated the way they were doing him.

"If I had the least suspicion that this would happen to me, I would not have been in Houston this long," he said. "I would have left here Sunday night."

Bowen was taken from the rooming house to the police station and was placed in a cell across the hall from the Chief of Detectives' offices. He slept but little and did not undress to lie down. This morning he was at the cell door early and looked haggard.

Bowen complained of being hungry. He declared that he was tired—almost worn out. He walked the floor nervously, then sat down on the side of his cot. Next he stepped to the grating and inquired if he was going to be allowed to starve to death or would he be given some breakfast. About 9 o'clock he was taken into a private office with Chief of Detectives Peyton and Detective Andrew F. Shelly. He admitted that he lived in Atlanta and had come from that city to Houston, but stoutly denied that he even knew Mary Phagan.

Only Interested, He Says.

When shown the pictures in his trunk and grip, he pointed out a number of persons, including several young women, though he declared that none of them was "Mary Phagan or any of her kinfolk."

Bowen Well Educated.

Bowen is 22 years of age and has light hair. He is well dressed and well educated. He has been a bookkeeper and stenographer, and claimed that he worked in Atlanta for the Morrow Transfer Company. He gave his home address as 108 Ivy Street.

He claimed this was his first visit to Houston. He declined to talk to officers or to tell anything about his kinspeople or any of his business connections except as given above.

Bowen is slight of build, perhaps 5 feet 6 or 7 inches in height. He weighs about 125 pounds and appears brisk and energetic.

He admitted to officers that he had lived in Atlanta nearly all his life. He denied, however, that he knows anything about the National Pencil Factory, Leo Frank, the manager, or any persons connected with or employed in the factory.

He talked freely about some matters and evasively about others. Efforts to corner the young man in every instance proved futile.

Letter Signed "M. J. P."

A hundred pictures in his trunk show auto rides and picnic parties, individual pictures and groups and couples. When shown them he merely laughed and made a jocular remark about some girl "being pretty."

There are batches of letters and postcards.

The letters were nearly all from young women; some of them were endearing ones. A few were from young men friends.

Many of the letters are signed "Mary," but none is signed "Mary Phagan." The signature to one letter is merely the initials, "M. J. P."

This is believed by the Houston police to have been written by the Phagan girl.

Woman's Bloodstained Vest.

Hanging from the window of room 214 in the St. Jean Hotel was found a woman's bloodstained undervest. It was of small size, as if for a girl from 14 to 16 years of age. The discovery of the undervest was made yesterday morning. A guest at the hotel saw it fluttering from the window and advised an attache of the place. It was wrapped in a paper and sent to the police station.

It is believed that an effort was made to throw the vest out of the window and that it caught on the ledge. It was not seen there before Monday morning, and two guests at the hotel declared that it was not there Sunday night. The vest was bloodstained toward the top of the breast and about halfway down the front. The vest is being held in connection with other properties by the detectives.

Bowen told the officers again and again that he had never heard of the girl, but admitted that he knew the place where she had worked. Bowen failed to explain the newspaper clippings containing accounts of the murder. He was shown them and portions of them were read to him. He admitted that he is familiar with the story of the crime, through reading the papers, and said his interest was simply because Atlanta is his home.

Bowen came to Houston Sunday night, presumably from New Orleans, although this has not been determined, as the prisoner declined to talk about his arrival as freely as he did other matters. He went directly to the St. Jean Hotel and asked for a dollar room.

"Sorry, sir, but we haven't got anything less than dollar-fifty," said the clerk. Bowen turned and walked to the door with his grip in his hand. The clerk called him, but he did not heed it and started out. The clerk ran to the door and explained that he had just discovered a dollar room vacant. The young man returned and registered. On the book he wrote "Paul P. Bowen, Atlanta, Ga.," boldly. There was no effort to conceal his identity or the city from whence he came.

The young man went to his room and a few minutes later went out for supper. He had registered at 7:45 o'clock. Before 9 o'clock he was in his room. He did not retire at that hour, though.

Opening his grip, it developed, Bowen read and reread some letters. Most of them were from young women.

He wept and then threw aside the missives. Picking from among the contents of the grip a number of newspaper clippings, he pored over them as if eager to get every word of every sentence. Then he moaned aloud: "Oh, if I hadn't done that! What did I do it for?"

A youth named Paul A. Bowen lived at the Atlanta Y. M. C. A. until February of 1912, when he left for Houston, Texas, according to Secretary J. C. Bell, of the Atlanta association.

Mr. Bell said Bowen was an ideal young man and stood high in the estimation of the Y. M. C. A. workers of Atlanta. He was a clerk at the Inman Yards of the Southern Railway.

Mr. Bell said that to the best of his knowledge Bowen had not been in Atlanta since he left in 1912. Bowen was living at the Y. M. C. A. when Secretary Bell took up his duties there and he did not know how long Bowen had been in Atlanta.

Defends Bowen.

Charles Kimball, a clerk in the master mechanic's office at the Southern Railway shops and a close personal friend of Paul P. Bowen's, said this morning, when seen by a Georgian reporter, that he did not believe his friend could be in any way implicated in the murder of little Mary Phagan.

"I have just come back from the detectives' office, where I went to carry a letter which I received from Paul on Sunday morning, April 27," he said. "There is nothing unusual about the letter. It is simply a personal letter about affairs in which we were both interested, and my only idea of showing it to the detectives at all is that it bears a postmark which might serve to divert suspicion from him. The letter is dated and postmarked Lufkin, Texas, April 23. I gave the letter to Detectives Black and Harry Scott.

"As for Bowen, personally, he had a great many friends here in Atlanta, and I am sure that they do not take any stock in the theory that he had anything to do with the murder or was even in Atlanta at the time.

"He left here in the early part of last spring and went to El Dorado, Ark., where he was employed in the offices of the Rock Island lines as a clerk. He later became private secretary to the superintendent of the St. Louis and Southwestern line, and I spent a great deal of his time traveling over the lines in the superintendent's private car.

"I have been in correspondence with him almost continually since he left here and have received letters from him from a great many points out West."

All the local authorities were inclined to belittle the importance of the Bowen arrest.

Innocent, Says Lanford.

Chief of Detectives Lanford declared his belief in the innocence of Paul Bowen Tuesday. He said that the detectives of his department had been tracing the movements of Bowen since he left Atlanta about a year ago after he had left the employ of the Morrow Transfer Company, of which he was secretary. In all this time, said the chief of detectives, they were unable to find that he had returned to Atlanta.

On the contrary, Bowen had written to friends in Atlanta from various points and had never suggested returning home.

"Bowen didn't know the girl," said the chief. "He didn't know the girl's family. It is preposterous to think that he would make a hurried and secret trip into the city from Lufkin, Texas, where he was heard from in a letter bearing the date of April 23, and then make his way back to Houston, where he was captured.

"Our disbelief in his guilt, however, does not mean that we are going to overlook any possibility that he might have been concerned. He is being held for us."

Another Defends Him.

Clarence Duncan, a student at the Atlanta Dental College, and Bowen's room mate at the Young Men's Christian Association, declared Tuesday afternoon that Bowen had not been in Atlanta, to his knowledge, since last June.

NEWNAN, GA., May 6.—Paul P. Bowen, arrested in Houston, Texas, on suspicion of complicity in the murder of Mary Phagan, could not have been connected with the Atlanta mystery, according to members of his family here.

Albert Bowen, a brother, said Paul Bowen has been in the West since last August, when he went to Arkansas to work for the Rock Island Railroad. He has never been back to Georgia since, he declared, but has spent the time in Arkansas, Oklahoma and Texas.

On April 21, Albert Bowen declared, he received a letter from Paul, written at Alto, Texas, April 17 and mailed at Tyler, Texas, April 18, in which he mentioned having been to Lufkin a few days before. Another letter, he said, was written from El Reno, Okla., April 4, and one was received just previous to that from Warren, Ark.

The Bowen family stands well here, the brother, Albert, and father being connected with mercantile establishments here in responsible positions. Friends of the family declare their belief in Paul Bowen's innocence.

HUGH DORSEY, Solicitor General of Fulton Superior Court, now bending every effort toward the solution of the Phagan mystery. He is following every clew, and in every way exerting all his powers and ability in clearing the baffling case.

Solicitor General Hugh Dorsey.

Phagan Case and the Solicitor General's Power Under Law---Dorsey Hasn't Encroached on Coroner.

By A GEORGIA LAWYER.

It is absurd to say, as some people have been saying in Atlanta of late, that Solicitor General Dorsey "has taken the Phagan case from the Coroner," or has "butted in" on the Coroner's business in some way.

It would be equally sensible to say that the commanding general in a battle had "butted in" on a captain's business, when, as the battle progressed, the general gave directions of one sort and another to the captain as to its conduct.

The truth of the matter is, Solicitor General Dorsey has been in charge of the Mary Phagan case ever since it was brought to light.

Murder is a crime against the sovereign State, and not particularly against either the city of Atlanta or the county of Fulton, save in so far as they are a part of the State.

A murder in Atlanta is as much Savannah's business as it is Atlanta's, so far as the violation of the laws of Georgia are concerned.

Solicitor Dorsey is a State official, and not specifically an Atlanta official, nor yet a Fulton County official.

Office Useless in Main.

For certain purposes a Coroner's inquest sometimes is permitted under the law prior to Grand Jury investigation. Many lawyers hold, and rightly, that the office of Coroner is useless in the main, and ought to be abolished. It is a relic of old English procedure, instituted before the days of newspapers, telephones, telegrams, fast mails and other quick methods of communication.

In the absence of eyewitnesses to an apparent murder, however, a Coroner's inquest sometimes may serve an immediate purpose, and, perhaps, the Phagan case is a case in point with regard to that.

The Coroner is an officer entirely and definitely subordinate to the Solicitor General, and does not exercise any authority except such as he may exercise under the Solicitor.

The Solicitor assembles, in his discretion, the evidence against the accused, from it makes out a case for the Grand Jury, advises and instructs the Grand Jury as to its duty and rights in the matter, prepares an indictment for the Grand Jury's consideration, which, if found true, must be depended upon to set forth the case against the defendant to be summoned to bar in such exact terms that it may be guaranteed to withstand all attacks of opposing counsel in the trial of the case.

Has Full Responsibility.

The initial and the final responsibility for the State's case is in the hands of the Solicitor General.

There never is a minute from the time a murder is committed until a verdict is recorded that the State's cause is not in the hands of the Solicitor General, over and above all other officials.

He can not take a murder case "from out the hands of a Coroner," because there never was a point of time in any murder case's history that it was not more in the hands of the Solicitor than it possibly could have been in the hands of the Coroner.

No man may be put in jeopardy of his life a second time in Georgia (save of his own motion) in criminal proceedings, but the "verdict" of a Coroner's jury can not be pleaded as former jeopardy.

Policemen, Coroners, Sheriffs are all peace officers, and have their direct and indirect duties to perform in the presence of crime against the State, but never is there a time when any one of them is equal in dignity or authority to the Solicitor General.

There is but one trial, upon motion of the State, of a criminal case in Georgia, and that is in the court house, under the direction of the Solicitor.

If a defendant be acquitted, that ends the matter. If he be convicted, he may move for another trial or appeal to a competent court of review. The State has no appeal.

Therefore, the law very properly provides that Coroners' findings, committal hearings and Grand Jury returns shall be merely parts of the process employed, or permitted, by the Solicitor, in whole or in part, prior to the actual trial of a case in the court house, before the Judge and the trial jury.

There never is any question of the Solicitor General's supreme prosecuting status in the progress of a criminal investigation. Within the wide and sometimes arbitrary scope of his office he stands first in responsibility as the State's accredited representative and agent in the prosecution.

To be sure, there are Constitutional and statutory curbs and restrictions upon a Solicitor General, but none of them may be invoked by a Coroner.

MUSIC IN PARKS ACTIVELY URGED

Councilmen and Officials Advocate Fund for Concerts During Summer Months.

Music in Grant and Piedmont Parks at least four times a week through the summer is the plan actively urged by park officials and a number of Councilmen. Councilman Claude L. Ashley Monday introduced a resolution in Council appropriating $5,000 for the purpose. To-day his move is backed by strong support.

"The meager music we have had in the parks in the past has attracted thousands," said Councilman Ashley. "It is what the people want. This city, especially the parks, is for the people, and it is our duty to give them the amusement and recreation they crave."

Councilman Ashley said that with an additional gift from the Georgia Railway and Power Company it would be possible to have music in both parks every evening and Sunday afternoon.

"The Park Board is heartily in favor of Councilman Ashley's plan," said J. O. Cochran, president.

Dan Carey, General Manager of Parks, is a strong advocate of park music.

Labor Expert Denies Low Pay Means Vice

Declares Statement That Immorality Is Related to Small Wages Unjust to Girls.

CHICAGO, May 6.—"The statement that low wages is the cause of most of the immorality and that immorality is necessary or usualy is related to the girl working for small wages is cruelly unjust. Wages should not be accepted as a basis of assurance of virtue or character."

This statement was made to-day by Harry T. Powers, State Labor Commissioner of Michigan, here to attend the annual convention of the State bureaus of labor and factory inspection.

The convention was opened to-day by A. L. Garrett, of Texas, first vice president of the organization.

Wireless Calls for Police From Mid-Lake

Aerograms Cause Arrest of Gem Salesmen Who Caused Reign of Terror on Boat.

DETROIT, MICH., May 6.—Charged with "assault on the high seas," which carries a penalty of fifteen years' imprisonment in a Federal prison, Robert Allan and George A. Schurtz, diamond salesmen of New York City, were taken off the steamer Western States to-day and held for the Federal authorities.

A wireless call, sent while the boat was far out in the lake, brought detectives to the dock. Both had small fortunes in gems.

The men battled nearly all night with officers on the boat, after indulging in liquor, breaking glassware and starting fights with passengers.

GIRL FLEES FROM UNLOVED FIANCE

Emily Douglas, of Daytona, Fla., Arrested Here, Says Mother Tried to Force Marriage.

A story of flight to escape marriage with a man she did not love was told to the police Tuesday morning by Miss Emily Douglas, a pretty 18-year-old girl from Daytona, Fla., after she had been arrested at the Terminal station as she alighted from the Cincinnati and Florida Limited from Jacksonville, Fla.

According to the story the girl told Police Captain Mayo, her mother, Mrs. M. H. Douglas, had tried to force her to marry a man who lives in Chicago, Ill. The would-be bridegroom, Miss Douglas says, is many years older than she.

"I told mama I did not love him," the girl said, "and she said I had to marry him anyway. She said he would make me a good husband. But I wouldn't marry a man I didn't love, so I ran away. I don't want to get married, anyway. I'm too young. I want to have some fun, and I never heard of a married woman having any fun."

The girl left her home early yesterday afternoon. An hour later her disappearance was noticed, and F. W. Haskell, who says he is engaged to marry the girl's sister, left Daytona on her trail. He arrived in Atlanta on the next train, several hours after she had been placed under arrest.

Haskell has volunteered to take her back to Daytona, but the police are holding her until they hear from her mother.

Sister Leads Posse In Hunt for Slayers

Fifty Men Search Kentucky Mountains for Moonshiners Who Killed Revenue Officers.

PIKEVILLE, KY., May 6.—A posse of 50 men started to-day through the mountains searching for John Hall, Dave Hall and Tom Riddle, who killed two revenue men in a battle Sunday. The posse is led by Ada Hall, sister of the two moonshiners, whom she betrayed.

Families of the moonshiners are reported to be arming to defend them. A feud is feared.

NAVAL STORES MEN PLAN NEW SYSTEM OF SELLING

SAVANNAH, GA., May 6.—Naval stores factors from Savannah, Jacksonville, Pensacola and Brunswick are in session in Savannah to-day to formulate a plan which will revolutionize the sales end of the industry.

The main idea of the plan is to establish one handling agency at each port interested, and then place all buyers on an equal footing through selling by grades instead of by lots. The plan has been explained to the Department of Justice at Washington by a committee representing the factors, and it is said the Government approves it.

BOXERS WILL STAGE BOUTS FOR ILLINOIS LEGISLATORS

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., May 6.—Boxing enthusiasts from all parts of the State are gathering here to-day for to-night's boxing exhibition, staged for the benefit of those legislators who are dubious about approving any of the various pending boxing bills.

REAL COMEDIANS AND GOOD CHORUS AT BONITA.

A tabloid musical comedy with a real plot and good actors and actresses to handle it is the innovation at the Bonita Theater this week.

Being a new company, it was an agreeable surprise that was sprung on the patrons of the house Monday, but there has always been something good at the Bonita, and this time the only difference was it was something better.

OLD GUARD TO GIVE MRS. WILSON ROSES

A huge bouquet of red roses picked from the lawn where Mrs. Woodrow Wilson lived as a girl at Rome, Ga., will be carried to Washington and presented to the President's wife May 20 by the Old Guard of the Gate City Guard.

Mrs. Wilson was a Georgia girl, a daughter of Rev. Mr. Axson, a well known Presbyterian minister. She spent a great part of her girlhood at Rome and knew personally some of the members of the Old Guard, as it was reorganized after the war.

The Old Guard will visit Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York, Boston and other points to renew the friendships that were made at the time of the historic mission of peace in 1879. The organization will call on President and Mrs. Wilson at the White House, and the presentation of the flowers will be made at that time.

The Guard will leave Atlanta Monday morning. They will spend Tuesday in the Capital City.

According to present plans, about a dozen Georgia women, wives and daughters of the members of the Old Guard, will accompany them on the trip North. Between 50 and 60 members of the Old Guard have already signified their intention of going. They will travel by special train, coming back by water via Savannah.

SUFFRAGETTES' VIOLENCE STIRS CIVIL WAR FEAR

England Roused by Outbreaks and Government's Methods. Militants Burn Church.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, May 6.—Great Britain is becoming panic-stricken at the outrages of militant suffragettes and the criticism of the Government's method of handling the situation is becoming sharper daily. Prophecies are common that the political situation will give way to civil war soon unless the Government finds a way effectually to curb the amazons.

It is estimated that the "wild women," as they were christened by the Public Prosecutor in Bow Street Court yesterday, have done nearly $3,000,000 damage since they opened their campaign of violence under the leadership of Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst two years ago.

"Anti" Papers Under Guard.

Since the offices of The Standard were wrecked yesterday because it published an editorial condemning militancy, other newspapers which have been criticising the methods of the suffragettes have been put under heavy guard.

Ada Ward, a member of the Women's Social and Political Union, was arrested to-day, charged with placing a bomb in the fashionable Grand Hotel in Northumberland Avenue. The hotel at the time was crowded with American and European tourists.

The women made no effort to avoid detection. After taking the bomb from a handbag, she lighted the fuse and then hurried away. Panic followed, but a policeman was on hand and he immediately placed the suffragette under arrest.

Bomb Used as Evidence.

The bomb was made of a tin canister filled with explosive. On the outside of the infernal machine was painted: "Votes for Women." When the woman was taken into Bow Street Police Court for preliminary examination the bomb was offered in evidence against her.

It is now charged that suffragists were responsible for the death of Choo Tai, the $10,000 Pekinese champion, owned by Miss Violet Cross, which was poisoned last week. Miss Cross has offered a reward for information leading to the identity of the poisoner, and declares she will vigorously prosecute any person suspected.

Fear Bill Will Not Pass.

On account of the feminist violence now raging in England, the opinion is being expressed that the female enfranchisement bill, which was moved for second reading in Parliament yesterday, will not pass. Already there is a division of sentiment among the members of Parliament over the bill which, if enacted, would give the ballot to 6,000,000 women.

The opponents to woman suffrage have enlisted the aid of those who had no convictions upon the subject up to the time of the present violence wave. On the other hand, the radical supporters of the "cause" declare that the bill does not give women all the rights they are entitled to.

Nina Boyle and Annie Morrow, arrested for rioting Sunday, to-day were sentenced to spend 14 days in jail or pay $5 fines.

The police are convinced the suffragettes used an explosive bomb and oil-soaked rags.

Suffragettes Accused Of $50,000 Church Fire.

LONDON, May 6.—St. Catherine's Church, a fine modern edifice in South London, was destroyed by fire to-day, with $50,000 loss.

Suffragettes are accused of setting the fire. The police declare that the blaze was of incendiary origin.

A number of cassocks were found saturated with oil, which sustained the theory of the police.

The vicar of the church told of seeing several women leaving the building shortly before the fire was discovered.

Yet It Might Have Been Worse.

Old Are of Greatest Service, Says Wiley

Doctor Declares Race's Benefactors Are All More Than 60 Years of Age.

WASHINGTON, May 6.—Men and women 60 years old and over are the real benefactors and the actual workers for the uplift of the human race, in the opinion of Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, former Government "pure food" expert, who made the declaration to the Washington Secular League.

Dr. Wiley was distinctly opposed to the Osler theory, and insisted it was possible to grow old without becoming senile.

"The idea that the greatest services to humanity are rendered by young men and women," Dr. Wiley said, "is shown by the facts to be erroneous. We do not reach the maximum of efficiency until the age of 60."

DIES SAYING WIFE FIRED FATAL SHOT

George Radcliffe, Columbus Merchant, Succumbs to Wound Inflicted on April 19.

COLUMBUS, GA., May 6.—George Radcliff, a Columbus merchant, who was shot on the night of April 19, for which his wife is being held in the Muscogee County jail, died at the City Hospital last night. He was paralyzed below the waist by his wound.

Radcliff stated from the first that his wife shot him, while she maintained that she was innocent and did not know who did the shooting.

The woman, it is alleged by the police, was infuriated with her husband because he left home with another man over her protest. There was no previous trouble between the couple, the difficulty being the result of a drunken row, according to the police.

Mrs. Radcliff will remain in jail until the grand jury passes on her case.

Wilson Rivals Dewey As Beau Brummel

WASHINGTON, May 6.—Of all his laurels Admiral George Dewey is in danger of losing the leaf awarded him as the best dressed man in Washington. For President Wilson seems to yearn to go down in history as the Beau Brummel of Presidents.

Perhaps unwittingly Mr. Wilson has appropriated to his own wear the soft, almost cream gray cloth so becoming to Admiral Dewey. The President is fond of brown clothes, too.

On informal occasions he wears sack coats. His frock coats are of lusterless black cloth and are bound with black silk braid. With a frock coat he adorns himself with a white silk four-in-hand tie. His evening clothes have heavy grained silk lapels. He dons a pale gray brocaded silk waistcoast with his dinner jacket. His silk socks, scarf and handkerchiefs always match in color.

TURKS GIVE UP ALBANIA; ARMY TO GO TO ASIA

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

VIENNA, May 6.—Having failed in its final effort to retain Albania as a Turkish possession in Europe, the Ottoman Government to-day sent orders to Essed Pasha, former commander at Scutari, to cease his efforts to keep the Crescent flag flying over the new monarchy.

This information was contained in an exchange company telegram from Constantinople. In addition it stated that the Turkish Government has entered into an agreement with Greece relative to the transportation of the two Turkish armies under Essed Pasha and Djavid Pasha from Albania to Asia Minor.

These troops will not be made prisoners of war, but will be allowed to return to Turkey with their arms.

That section of the press regarded as official said to-day that Austria has come to the conclusion that Montenegro should not be compensated for giving up Scutari.

According to the official press, Austria and Italy have come to an agreement as to the disposition of Albania, and this program neither called for a division of that territory nor the cession of any of it to Montenegro.

Italy Not to Send Force Into Albania.

ROME, May 6.—In consequence of Montenegro's action in leaving the status of Scutari to the powers, Italy has abandoned the plan to send an expedition into Albania, it was announced to-day.

U. S. WOMEN IN PERIL AS REBEL ARMY ATTACKS

American and English Refugees Caught Between Fires in Battle at Cuernavaca, Mexico.

MEXICO CITY, May 6.—A number of American and English women and children are imperiled in Cuernavaca, capitol of the State of Morelos, by fighting there between Zapatista rebels and federals under General Robles. The rebels outnumber the Government force, but the latter is equipped with heavy artillery and machine guns. The insurrectos made two attacks upon Cuernavaca yesterday and another in the darkness early to-day.

Five hundred soldiers, 200 infantrymen and 300 cavalrymen, left here this morning on a troop train for the scene of the fighting.

Another revolutionary outbreak is reported from the Southern part of the State of Vera Cruz. Tramp steamers, plying as filibusters, are said to have landed ammunition and arms there. Bandits and rebels are pillaging and burning towns and ranch buildings. This is the eighth revolt against President Huerta since Francisco I. Madero, Jr., was put out of office.

SARGENT PAINTS PORTRAIT OF HENRY JAMES, NOVELIST

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, May 6.—John S. Sargent, R. A., the famous American painter, who makes his home in London, is at work on the portrait of Henry James, the American novelist, who likewise has adopted England as his place of residence.

The portrait is being painted for presentation to Mr. James by his English friends in commemoration of his seventieth birthday.

A building is to be erected soon, adjoining the medical school, for this work.

Dr. Duane was a pupil of Mme. Curie in Paris.

Secret Divorce Is Barred in England

House of Lords Decides All Suits In Great Britain Must Be Heard in Public.

LONDON, May 6.—The house of lords, sitting as the highest court of appeals, has handed down a decision prohibiting secret proceedings in divorce and other suits in Great Britain in the future.

The decision grew out of contempt proceedings brought against a woman who had revealed evidence taken in her divorce suit which was heard behind closed doors.

The easy Resinol way to stop skin troubles

The soothing, healing medication in Resinol Ointment and Resinol Soap penetrates the tiny pores of the skin, clears them of impurities, and stops itching instantly. Resinol heals eczema, rashes, ringworm, and other eruptions, and removes disfiguring pimples and blackheads quickly and easily, when other treatments prove worse than useless.

Resinol is not an experiment. It is a doctor's prescription which proved so uniformly successful for skin troubles that it has been used by other doctors all over the country for eighteen years. No other treatment for the skin now before the public can show such a record of professional approval.

Practically every druggist, large or small, sells Resinol Ointment (50c and $1) and Resinol Soap (25c), but you can test them at our expense if you prefer. Send to Dept. 17-S, Resinol, Baltimore, Md., for liberal samples and the two new Resinol booklets.

Relieved eczema instantly

Philadelphia, Pa., March 28, 1913: "Resinol has surely been a friend in need to me. I had eczema on my face. It was in the form of a rash. I used many treatments, without any results. I tried Resinol Soap and Resinol Ointment and it gave me instant relief, and very thankful I was, for my whole head felt like it was afire. I told the doctor about Resinol and he highly recommended it and told me to continue its use. I am now completely cured of that dreadful disease after using only about four jars of Resinol Ointment and washing with Resinol Soap." (Signed) Miss Carolene B. Laughlin, 174 Pleasant St., Mt. Airey.

ATLANTA BANKS AFTER PART OF NEW U. S. FUND

Government Soon to Deposit Additional $10,000,000—Municipal Bonds as Security.

Atlanta national banks are taking advantage to the full of charges being put into effect by the new Secretary of the Treasury. Secretary McAdoo has announced that the Government soon will deposit $10,000,000 additional in the banks. He announced at the same time that instead of requiring that deposits be covered dollar for dollar with Government 2s, he will accept municipal bonds under certain restriction as security for deposits.

Both of these changes will operate to the benefit of Atlanta and the South in general.

Government depositories here have put in application for a share of the $10,000,000. The money can be used to advantage in the South. Eastern banks, on the other hand, are not so anxious for additional Government funds since they will have to pay 2 per cent interest in future.

Many Southern Applications.

There are about 900 Government depositories in the United States. Of these, 200 have made application for the $10,000,000, and it is surmised, from the facts stated, that many of these applicants are in the South.

As Atlanta banks understand the municipal bond restrictions, 30 per cent of the bonds they are required to deposit with the Treasurer may be municipals, at 75 per cent of their value. In other words, a bank holding $100,000 Government funds may put up $70,000 in Government 2s, and $40,000 in municipal bonds, yielding 4 1-2 or 5 per cent.

By doing this, notwithstanding the payment of 2 per cent interest on deposits, the transaction will yield a small profit in interest, besides possible profits from purchasing municipal bonds chiefly, during periods of depression like the present, and realizing a profit on their rise in value.

Government bonds cost a small premium, and never fluctuate in value.

Opens Municipal Bond Market.

The new ruling opens up a market for municipal bonds, too, in a quarter which was closed to such issues before.

This does not amount to so much in Atlanta, with $500,000 Government deposits now, and a possible $600,000 when the additional $10,000,000 is allotted, but for the nation, it amounts to considerable.

Government deposits all over the nation will amount to $53,000,000, which will make a market for $16,430,000 in municipal bonds, if the depositories care to take advantage of it.

Banks have found it profitable to handle postal savings deposits under a similar system.

ENVOY LEISHMAN IS STILL PENNSYLVANIA RESIDENT

PITTSBURG, May 6.—Judge R. A. MacFarlane has decided that John G. A. Leishman, United States Ambassador to Germany, is still a resident of Pennsylvania and made an order dissolving a writ of foreign attachment to seize $70,000 Mr. Leishman has on deposit in banks in this city. The money is claimed as balance due on stock transactions carried on by Leishman in New York last fall.

MISS AGNES TINSLEY HARRISON, of Atlanta, who made local debut as professional actress Monday night.

ATLANTA ACTRESS IN LOCAL DEBUT

Miss Agnes Tinsley Harrison, a well known Atlanta girl, is receiving numerous congratulations on the success that attended her local debut as a professional actress with Miss Billy Long's stock company at the Atlanta Theater Monday night. Miss Harrison appeared in the role of Clarice Stapleton, a young society girl, in the comedy drama, "The Girl From Out Yonder," Miss Long's offering for the week.

Though competing with a company of seasoned professionals, and naturally affected by nervousness on her first appearance, Miss Harrison's work did not suffer in contrast with the acting of the other members of the company; in fact, she was one of the hits of the show and would have been even had she not been an Atlanta girl. She possesses a good stage presence, her lines were enunciated clearly, and she played the part with a simplicity and power that appealed to the audience.

Strongest in Third Act.

Her strongest scene came in the third act, when she changed quickly from a portrayal of jealous dissatisfaction to the realization of love. Her work in this scene was decidedly clever, and she earned a round of applause.

The boxes and orchestra seats were filled with a number of Miss Harrison's friends, and they showered applause upon her in recognition of her work. At the end of the second act she was given a great armful of roses.

Miss Harrison has selected "Marjorie Mason" as her stage name. She is taking up stage life with the highest ambitions. She wants to rise to the topmost heights of her profession, and if her work of last night can be taken as a criterion of her ability, she is destined for greater things in the theatrical world.

Comes From Talented Family.

Miss Harrison comes from a well-known and talented family, and prepared for the stage by two years of study. Her ability as an elocutionist created an impression upon her instructor at St. Mary's College, at Raleigh, N. C., and she was urged to enter the professional ranks.

Her relationship gives an added touch of interest to her stage debut. Her sister, Miss Emily Harrison, has achieved success in educational work. She is a niece of the late Mrs. Robert Emory Park, and a cousin of Mrs. Virginia Clay Copton, of Alabama. The families of Harrison, Tinsley and Hendree, with which she is connected, have produced many prominent figures in Georgia history.

Train Kills Soldier At Fort McPherson

Relatives of Private John Galivan Not Located—Engineer and Conductor Surrender.

Preparations are being made for the burial of John Galivan, private in Company L, Seventeenth United States Infantry, who was struck and instantly killed Monday night by a Central of Georgia passenger train. Galivan's place of enlistment has not been learned and thus far no relatives have been located.

It is said Galivan, who was slightly deaf, did not hear the approaching train as he crossed the tracks in front of the army post. His neck and practically every bone in his body was broken.

W. B. Last and J. D. Wather, engineer and conductor of the train, after surrendering themselves, were released on their own recognizance.

Galivan was a native of Ireland, 45 years old, and had been in the service 20 years. He was a Spanish War veteran.

JOKE MAY COST PARK JOB WITH STATE BANKERS

Strong Fight Is Made on Legal Representation Because of Utterance at Macon.

Some of the members of the Georgia Bankers Association are going to the convention in Macon this month prepared to do battle. Just how much battle they will do depends on developments, but indications are for a lively time.

The fight will center around the appointment of a legal representative for the association.

Orville Park, of Macon, is the present legal representative. In a recent speech at a group meeting in Macon, he made a "bad break." He suggested, jocularly, he says, that bankers attempt to influence Legislators in favor of the new bank law when the Legislators come seeking loans.

The speech was reported, and caused a rumpus. Mr. Park sticks to his "all a joke" explanation. But many of the bankers are not satisfied. They think a man of legal acumen sufficient to advise the bankers should be shrewd enough not to make ill-timed and ill-considered jests.

Mr. Park does not want to quit under fire.

Hence the probability of warfare.

The position of legal representative pays a salary merely nominal, but the appointment brings considerable legal business to the holder of the title, and is valuable in that way.

Sleep Cures Small Orphans' Wanderlust

Six-Mile Flight From Baptist Home in Scanty Attire Too Much for Brothers.

James Johnson, aged 6, and Charles Johnson, 3 years old, 'are perfectly satisfied to remain at the Georgia Baptist Orphans' Home at Hapeville. The 6-mile walk they indulged in Monday after taking French leave from the institution proved a bit too much for them, and the two "kiddies" were sleeping like tops when the breakfast bell sounded Tuesday morning.

The youngsters were placed in the institution by their aunt, Mrs. Carrie Meade, of 24 Milledgeville Avenue, but at the time declared their intention of leaving the place. They succeeded in slipping away from the home and two hours later were found in West End.

Attired in a slim amount of raiment somewhat akin to pajamas, the two boys drew smiles from the West Enders. They were returned to the orphans' home, but declared their intention of leaving again. The long walk, however, brought heavy sleep to the wanderers, and they were sleeping soundly at last reports from the home this morning.

French Anarchists Doom King Alfonso

Paris Police Expect Hard Time Guarding Ruler on State Visit to Poincare.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, May 6.—On account of the activity of anarchists, the Paris police fear they will have a difficult time protecting the life of King Alfonso, of Spain, who will arrive here to-morrow on a state visit to President Poincare.

Alfonso will remain in Paris two days, leaving Friday, after a review of the aerial fleet of the French army.

ANGRY ANGLERS DEFY STATE LAWS

Game Warden Says Mob of 300 Threatened Him and Mayor of Nashville Locked Him Up.

Having his revolver taken from him and his life threatened by a mob of from 200 to 300 people is neither a pleasant nor a dignified experience for an officer of the law to undergo, but that's what happened to Deputy Game Warden M. F. Bolsclair when he tried to stop the fishing in the big pond at Milltown, between Lowndes and Berrien Counties.

Deputy Bolsclair is back in Atlanta with his exciting tale and State Game Warden Jesse E. Mercer has deemed the matter of sufficient importance to take it up with Governor Brown.

Warden Mercer said he had sent a warden from an adjoining county to Milltown about a month ago, but the officer was so greatly intimidated that he was able to accomplish nothing. Then he sent Deputy Bolsclair.

"He swore out 22 warrants," declared Mr. Mercer in relating the details of his officer's trip to the fishing pond. "But he says that no sooner had he done this than he was warned to leave that section of the country. He found public sentiment so strong against him that he withdrew the warrants in the justice courts and went to Nashville, the county seat of Berrien County, and again swore them out.

"While he was talking to the justice of the peace in Nashville, he reports that he was surrounded by a mob of from 200 to 300 and that Mayor Pafford shook his finger in his face and called him names. He says the Mayor ordered his arrest without a warrant and had his revolver taken from him. It was only with the greatest difficulty that two bondsmen were found."

Warden Mercer declared Tuesday that his department would enforce the law, regardless of the attitude or sentiment of the people in the various localities.

"I am going to enforce the law," he stated, "if I have to camp on the bank of the pond all summer, spend every dollar in the department and call on the Governor for assistance."

Start Your Baby With Sound Health

We cannot all start life with the advantages of money, but every child born is entitled to the heritage of good health. Through unfortunate ignorance or carelessness in the feeding of a baby its tiny stomach may become deranged. The disorder spreads to the bowels and before the mother realizes it the two chief organs on which the infant's comfort and health depend are causing it great suffering. If the condition is allowed to continue grave ailments often result.

There is, however, no occasion for alarm, and the sensible thing to do—but it should be done instantly—is to give the baby a small dose of a mild laxative-tonic. In the opinion of a great many people, among them such well-known persons as the parents of Dixie Dudley, Magnolia, Ark., the proper remedy is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. Mrs. Earl Dudley writes: "Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is the best medicine I ever used. It cured my baby of flatulency colic when the doctors failed; it cured my husband of constipation. My home shall never be without Syrup Pepsin." It is a pleasant-tasting laxative, which every person likes. It is mild, non-griping, and contains that most excellent of all digestants, pepsin.

This remedy is especially intended for infants, children, women, old people and all others to whom harsh cathartics, salt waters, pills, etc., are distressing. In fact, in the common disorders of life, such as constipation, liver trouble, indigestion, biliousness, headaches, and the various other disorders of the stomach, liver and bowels nothing is more suitable than this mild laxative-tonic, Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin.

DIXIE ASKEW DUDLEY.

Two generations of people are using it to-day, and thousands of families keep it constantly in the house, for every member of the family can use it. It can be obtained of any druggist at fifty cents or one dollar a bottle, the latter being the size bought by families who already know its value. Results are always guaranteed or money will be refunded.

If no member of your family has ever used Syrup Pepsin and you would like to make a personal trial of it before buying it in the regular way of a druggist, send your address—a postal will do—to W. B. Caldwell, 417 Washington St., Monticello, Ill., and a free sample bottle will be mailed you.

It is, no doubt, a source of gratification to the people of the South, and especially those of Georgia, to note the steady and substantial growth of The Empire, their home Life Insurance Company.

MOVEMENT TO DIVIDE FLORIDA LIKELY TO WIN

Georgians View With Interest Effort to Make Two States of Southern Peninsula.

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

Georgians generally will be interested in the movement now aggressively under way to divide the State of Florida into two States, to be known, respectively, as East and West Florida.

Every now and then, a motion has been made to divide the grand old State of Georgia—as the stump speakers call it—into two separate commonwealths, and this proposition bobs up now and then in the suggestion that Macon be made the capital of the State instead of Atlanta, but it never has gone to anything like the length that the movement to divide Florida has gone.

A bill already has been prepared for introduction in the Florida Legislature—as a matter of fact, it is scheduled to be sent to the House for a first reading Wednesday, May 7—and there can be no doubt that the movement is on in dead earnest and in all seriousness.

A poll of the State Legislature, moreover, is said to favor the idea, and every indication is that the bill will pass.

After the passage of the bill the measure will be submitted to the people for a vote, and if ratified, the Governor will take the matter up with the Florida congressional delegation and proceed at once to apply for statehood for both the proposed new States, without any further action in the Florida Legislature. The newspapers of the State are nearly all in favor of the movement.

The matter has gone so far that already keen rivalries have sprung up between cities in both the proposed new States, wishing to be the capitals thereof. Citizens generally seem to view the forthcoming division—if it ever arrives—with calmness and poise.

Nobody seems to be mad with anybody particularly—somehow Florida appears merely to think that it just as well be two States as one, if not better!

One aspiring city, with somebody possessed of a happy sense of humor press-agenting its claims to the capital plum of one of the new States, gravely asserts that it is entitled to the honor because "the town is utterly free of insects, and is popular with the politicians."

Whether the one statement negatives the other is, of course, for the gentle reader to say.

The Vidalia Advance, in publishing the following unique communication from a correspondent, has solved something of a mystery, and thrown an illuminating and serious light upon a matter considered for many years more or less of a joke:

"Editor Advance: I notice in a recent issue of your paper where you say that you will hereafter leave off 'Colonel' from the names of attorneys, in which I heartily agree with you, as I think the highest title an American in civil life can have is 'Mr.,' writes L. J. Cowart.

"But as to how they came to be called Colonel I will explain for the benefit of posterity. Some time in the distant past every Solicitor General was, by virtue of his office, a member of the Governor's staff, with the rank of colonel, and there being but few lawyers in the State, they were soon nearly all solicitors or ex-solicitors general, and for fear of robbing some of them of their military title, of which they were very proud, the people, and more especially strangers, called them all "Colonel," until finally it is applied to all alike, some of whom I am constrained to believe would scarcely make a good country 'squire.

"Yours, etc., C. B. N."

Governor Joseph M. Brown delights to talk of nothing so much, perhaps, as of his big Cherokee County farm, where every now and then he spends a few hours—sometimes a day or more—looking over things.

He can catch an early train out of Atlanta, ride four miles through the country and back, catch an afternoon train back to Atlanta, and not be absent from the executive office more than six or eight hours.

When he gets to the farm, however, he keeps things on the jump, for every minute counts. He can get over a surprising amount of territory in a mighty short time, and he generally comes back to the Capital with his cuffs covered with minute pencil memoranda, about this, that and the other things, big and little, needing attention in some way.

He knows all the country folk about his farm, and they are to a man proud of their neighbor, both as a statesman and a farmer—for they look upon him as an eminent success in both lines of endeavor.

Mr. Cooper says his late Congressional race, although he failed to win, has not greatly discouraged him. He intimates that he may have another try at that plum some of these days.

Benjamin H. Hall, an Atlanta engineer, is back in the city to-day after spending several weeks in Raleigh, N. C., as a member of a board of arbitration to settle a suit for the possession and operation of the Raleigh waterworks.

The arbitration board decided on a price of $250,000, suggested by Mr. Hall. Figures were based on a careful survey and estimate of the water power plant and the distributing system.

An impounding basin is planned. Heretofore there has been no reserve for fire or emergency. It is understood that Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy, will sue the city for the difference in the loss of his newspaper plant and the insurance he carried. LAWYER FEARS CITIZENS WILL MOB WILBURN

Attorney Who Admits He Has Been One of Lynchers Himself Begs Change of Venue.

"I helped lynch one man in a court house, and I don't want to help lynch another."

This was the sensational statement made to the Supreme Court at the Capitol by John R. Cooper, a Macon attorney, as he pleaded for a change of venue for Nick Wilburn, alleged Jones County murderer. The court has the plea under consideration.

Wilburn, together with Mrs. James King, is charged with murdering the woman's husband last December. Feeling in Jones County was so strong against him he was rushed to Macon and placed in Bibb County jail for safekeeping.

Attorney Cooper, acting under the recently enacted Felker law, asked the trial judge for a change of venue. This was denied. He appealed to the Supreme Court, but that body questioned its jurisdiction in the matter.

In addressing the court, Mr. Cooper declared that if a Jones County jury recommended his client to mercy the citizens would take him out and hang him in two minutes.

Fears Client's Lynching.

"I don't want Wilburn mobbed in a court of justice," he said. "I helped lynch one man in a court house at Valdosta and every time I heard a noise outside while the case was being tried, I thought it was a mob marching on the building to take my client."

Mr. Cooper referred to the case of "Old Man Rawlings," convicted and hanged in Lowndes County, after a long fight was made to save him.

Felker Law Test.

Under the Felker law, Mr. Cooper claims it is mandatory on the part of the trial judge to order a change of venue when there is doubt about a fair trial and he wants the Supreme Court to compel the trial judge to issue the order.

Attorney General Felder, appearing for the State, also asked the court to make a decision and have the question settled. The court asked both sides to submit written arguments to be acted upon later.

After Wilburn's arrest detectives claimed to have secured a confession from him, and also one from the dead man's wife. Wilburn now repudiates this confession and declares he is innocent.

Mr. Cooper says Jones County people have made up their minds that Wilburn is guilty and should hang, and he insists that Wilburn will be killed legally or otherwise if forced to go to trial in that county.

Slang Is All Right, Says Girl Evangelist

"You've Got to Get It Across, So Use the Hot Stuff," She Declares.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 6.—Miss Amy Stockton, girl preacher and San Jose normal student, is going to "pass up" the use of classic English in her addresses and use slang when that form of speech carries with it the "kick."

With modifications of Billy Sunday's grammatical curves and drives she proposes, as an evangelist, to hew out a direct method of discourse all her own.

"You've got to get it across to your hearers," said Miss Stockton. "Some of my friends have roasted me for the slang; others say it is right stuff. Anyway, I'm for it."

Presbyterians Here Want World Alliance

Invitation Will Be Carried to Scotland for Meeting of Great Church Body in 1914.

Members of the Evangelical Ministers' Association are making arrangements to-day to invite the World's Presbyterian Alliance to meet in Atlanta in 1914. The alliance meets at Dundee, Scotland, this June. Rev. W. C. Schaeffer, presiding officer of the Atlanta association, or W. H. Roberts, of Philadelphia, will personally present the invitation.

Mr. Roberts is stated clerk of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., and American secretary for the World's Presbyterian Alliance. He will be in Atlanta for the four great conferences of the Presbyterian Church this month, and will go from here to Scotland.

He may be asked to carry Atlanta's invitation.

DRUMMOND, JR., WON'T REFORM; 2D BRIDE SUES

"Riches Don't Mean Happiness When Your Husband Is Untrue," She Declares.

LOS ANGELES, May 6.—"Beautiful clothes and jewels do not make a marriage happy if your husband is joy-riding with other women."

With wistful expression in her dark blue eyes, Mrs. John R. Drummond, Jr., who is suing the son of the multimillionaire tobacco magnate for divorce on the grounds of desertion, cruelty and infidelity, said so to-day. She maintained wealth did not mean happiness.

Mrs. Drummond told for the first time the cause leading to the breakup in what was known as an "ideal marriage."

"I loved my husband," said Mrs. Drummond, "but I never knew where he was. Evenings he would go away and never say when he would return or where he was going. He led a high, fast life, leaving me alone with our little daughter.

"I knew Mr. Drummond was divorced from his first wife and that she was a beautiful and charming woman. The grounds of her divorce were practically the same as mine. He treated her cruelly as he did me, but I foolishly hoped I could reform him.

"Married life has taken away my youth and beauty. I was famed in Chicago as a beautiful girl, now worry has made me a wreck. I met John R. Drummond, Jr., in Los Angeles, five years ago, when I was visiting here. I was carried away by his dashing manner, for he was an ardent lover. I returned to Chicago in about a month and he followed me there, where we were married.

"We had a beautiful wedding and I hoped for a happy married life. Mr. Drummond did not care to stay at home evenings or seem to enjoy my company after a few weeks. Our little daughter, Virginia Harrison Drummond, who is nearly four years old, is our only tie.

"I am told that Mr. Drummond is now camping at Lakeside, near San Diego, a summer resort where he lives in the company of other women."

"AN UNCLEAN HABIT," SAYS UNKISSED MAIDEN OF 30

POTTSVILLE, PA., May 6.—Miss Elanroe Stager, of Cincinnati, who is visiting in this city, refused at a party to take part in a kissing game.

She confessed she had never been kissed by a man or woman in her 30 years and declared that osculation was an unclean habit and a practice which she despised.

Boy Badly Hurt by Runaway Elevator

J. W. Green Tries to Catch His Ascending Lift and Is Hurled to Basement.

J. W. Green, an elevator boy in the Candler Building, is recovering from a fall from the first floor to the basement late Monday afternoon. One leg was broken, and it is thought internal injuries were sustained. Green was at once removed to Wesley Memorial Hospital. He resides at the Greer House, Walton Street.

According to the elevator starter, Green, a new employee, is said to have left his car without placing the brakes at a full stop. As he stepped from it the elevator began to ascend, and Green made a dash to board it. Gaining only a partial foothold, the boy was carried from the basement to the first floor, when he struck the sides of the shaft and was dashed back into the basement.

Miss O'Gorman Will Wed Her Life-Saver

Romance of New York Senator's Daughter Began With Seashore Incident.

WASHINGTON, May 6.—Behind the announcement that Miss Dolorita O'Gorman is to wed John Anthony Maher, of New York City, May 24, is a pretty story.

Miss O'Gorman and her fiance saw each other for the first time four years ago when she was spending the summer on the New Jersey coast.

Maher was a strong swimmer, while Miss O'Gorman was only a beginner, and on the occasion which marks the beginning of the romance she got out beyond her depth. Young Maher jumped in and saved her life. He is a son of Edward Maher, former Mayor of Albany, and is wealthy.

Manufacturers Ask Whitehall Regrading

Jobbers, Too, Deny There Has Been Opposition to Improvement of Business Street.

Whitehall Street jobbers and manufacturers have signed an emphatic statement advocating the regrading of that street from Mitchell to Brotherton Streets.

The petition reads:

"We, the manufacturers of Whitehall Street, desire to correct the report that some opposition has been shown by manufacturers to the grading of Whitehall Street. On the contrary, and without exception, we consider it the greatest street improvement that can be made at this time in our entire city.

"The $5,000 which we would urge the city to furnish at once will be made and saved many times over to both the city and business interests."

THOUSANDS GIVEN THEATER TICKETS

Great Mass of Coupons Causes Delay—Many More To Be Mailed Out.

Office employees of The Georgian and Sunday American worked all of Monday and late into the night mailing out free theater tickets to thousands of Georgian and American readers who clipped and sent in the necessary four coupons and a self-addressed, stamped envelope.

Despite this hard work, so heavy that it interfered seriously with the regular office routine, it was impossible to work through more than half of the letters sent in.

Therefore, readers will remember, please, that because of the great demand it will be impossible to furnish tickets for any particular night. Naturally, capacious as the Atlanta Theater is, it cannot care for all The Georgian and American guests in one night, or two. Several hundreds will be cared for each night until all requests have been satisfied.

And please be assured that while there is some necessary delay because of the great mass of work to be done your ticket will come through the mail, unless—

You are one of those who failed to send in a complete set of coupons; or one of those who failed to send a stamped envelope; or one of those who failed to give name and address.

If you are one of these, we are sorry, but there will be no ticket for you.

Wife Ready to Go on Stand to Save Life of Man Who Killed Boarder.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, May 6.—Mrs. Henry Lauer to-day said she was ready to go on the stand in an effort to save her husband, charged with killing Stephen Clatworthy Friday night. Lauer admitted the killing when arrested Monday night. He said he had shot "the wrong man."

If Lauer is indicted for first-degree murder his defense will be the "unwritten law."

Lauer told officials he was jealous of a boarder in his home, and, looking for him, shot Clatworthy by mistake.

Dresden---The City of the Sistine Madonna and Exquisite China.

Dresden claims the interest of world-tourists primarily by virtue of Raphael's wonderful painting, the Sistine Madonna, and then by the china that bears its name. No one will deny that Dresden china is in its way a work of art just as the Sistine Madonna is. The phrase "as dainty as a piece of Dresden china" did not just happen.

And a splendid collection of this china is priced very remarkably in the Bazaar right now. We doubt if Atlanta has ever had such a display — especially at such prices. And at this time when the June Brides' presents are to be bought and the home is to be fixed up for the summer such prices take on a very interesting meaning.

CHICAGO AIMS TO ANNIHILATE VICE

Investigators Recommend That Segregated District Be Done Away With.

CHICAGO, May 6.—Annihilation of vice rather than segregation in Chicago was the keynote of a preliminary report of the City Council vice committee, announced to-day. The committee reported improved conditions since the closing of the vice districts, and recommended the following:

That vice be annihilated wherever found.

That apartment houses supposed to be used for immoral purposes be watched by the police, and arrests made so frequently that the business will be unprofitable.

That parents and children be instructed in sex problems.

That applications for marriage licenses be publicly announced in advance of the granting of the licenses.

That employers take especial pains to protect their girl employees.

LOS ANGELES AT POLLS FIGHTING SOCIALISM

LOS ANGELES, May 6.—Interest in the primary election here to-day centered about the attempt to defeat Job Harriman, Socialist candidate for Mayor.

Socialists were centering their fight against John W. Shank, city attorney, who is supported for Mayor by an organization of progressives and old guard leaders.

DEMOCRATS SOLID FOR TARIFF BILL

Wool Certain to Go on Free List When It Comes to Vote Thursday.

WASHINGTON, May 6.—An almost solid Democratic vote will be cast for the Underwood tariff bill, which will come up for final action in the House probably Thursday. Several Ohio Democrats, opposed to the free wool provision in the bill, will vote against it, including Representative Ashbrook. There probably will be no other Democratic votes in opposition.

Progressives will divide, Representative Murdock, Progressive leader, voting against the measure. Some of his followers will vote for it, and still others will not vote at all. Representative Kent, of Ohio, Independent, will vote for the bill.

A final show-down on the question of whether raw wool should remain on the free list came to-day, and it was apparent that there was a multitude of Democratic votes to make certain that the provision will be in the bill.

Opponents of the income tax principle are about evenly divided between the Democratic and Republican sides, although no Democrats will oppose the bill.

Dispute on Tile Rate Before Commission

Roads Contend Carrying Charge for Fragile Building Material Should Be Higher Than for Brick.

Hollow tile, used in the construction of Atlanta skyscrapers, should be carried by the railroads at the same rate as ordinary building brick, according to the contention of the manufacturers. The railroads contend that hollow tile is more fragile than brick, can not be loaded as heavily, and should take a higher rate.

The case was before the Georgia Railroad Commission Tuesday for a hearing. The Chattanooga Sewer Pipe Co., whose plant is across the line in Georgia, and the Oconee Brick and Tile Co., of Milledgeville, Ga., are the principal complainants.

Another case before the commission Tuesday is a request for additional passenger service between Bremen and Cedartown, Ga., on the Central of Georgia Railroad.

Judge Churchman decided that if the child had pulled the dog's tail he did not think anything could be done with the owner of the dog.

GIRL-WIFE'S FOLLY CAUSE OF SLAYING

Mrs. Irene LeCount Gives Warning Against Marrying Young and to Trust Husband Only.

CHICAGO, May 6.—Declaring she was branded with a woman's shame, Mrs. Irene Westfall LeCount, 17 years old, widow of Leon L. LeCount, slain by Joe Williams, a young art student, in a quarrel over attentions said to have been paid Mrs. LeCount, to-day warned other girls from the path she followed.

For the first time she seemed to realize her husband's death was the result of her folly.

"I want to warn girls not to trust any man after they are married, except their husbands, and none at all before that," she said. "I was lonesome. I was a careless little girl when I went out seeking amusement, chaperoned at first, and later alone.

"Now I am branded. I am paying for my sin. I wish to warn other girls not to marry until they grow up. It's best to wait until they can deny themselves the little pleasures young girls like."

Williams was held without bail by a Coroner's jury. He will plead he shot LeCount in self-defense. Williams has a wife in Kansas City.

THE PLAYS THIS WEEK

"THE GIRL" SPLENDIDLY PLAYED.

With every part excellently cast, "The Girl From Out Yonder" was given the initial performance of the week by Miss Billy Long and supporting company at the Atlanta last night.

The big audience was in thorough sympathy with the work of the players, generous in applause and laughter.

The central characters in the story are the daughter and father, played by Miss Long and Joseph Kirkham, and that their work was most excellent is best evidenced by the fact that the big scene—the parting—in the third act was met by a silence as breathless as it was profound, and in which the female element of the audience were constantly drying their eyes, more or less surreptitiously.

The story of the play briefly is that an old light house keeper has reared his daughter from infancy to young womanhood as a rough little sea chap, with all the characteristics and manners of the rough sea folks. When the story opens she has met a young civil engineer and they love each other. The old father believes that twenty years earlier he has murdered the civil engineer's father in a drunken fit. That his daughter may marry the young man, he tells her that she is not his daughter, but a bit of human flotsam from a wreck. That another killed the engineer's father is shown in the last act, and all comes out right.

Without exception, every part was well played, and besides those mentioned above, Ralph Marthy as Joey handled a difficult character study well, and Miss Kathryn Sheldon and Al Warren presented some effective and infectious comedy. In the part of Cousin Simonson Miss Sheldon was particularly good, for the character is one which could be so easily overdrawn.

Except Wednesday evening, "The Girl from Out Yonder" will be played all week every evening and at Wednesday and Saturday matinees.

SPLENDID BILL AT FORSYTH.

It's a "summery" show they have at the Forsyth this week—one of those light, bright, refreshing bills that is fully able to successfully combat hot weather. There's a lot of singing and dancing, pretty girls and laughs galore—and that's the season of summer vaudeville.

Atlanta always is partial to a Gus Edwards' production, more than likely because they always are good. The Kid Kabaret which heads this week's bill at the Forsyth is no exception. With a dozen or more clever young folks and the latest of Edwards' catchy music, the act delights thoroughly. Some old favorites are in the bunch—Eddie Cantor, George Jessell, the funny little Yiddish man; Betty Washington and Ruthie Francis. Each of them scores the usual hit. Little Miss Washington with her violin—in the parlance of the footlights—registers a "regular knockout."

Pythians of Atlanta To Build a Castle

Association Files Petition for Charter—Capital Stock $50,000. Site Not Selected.

The Atlanta Pythian Castle Association on Tuesday filed a petition for a charter and the right to build a Pythian castle for the use of Pythian lodges in Atlanta.

The capital stock of the association will be not less than $50,000, said the petition, and the privilege of increasing it to $250,000 was asked. No location for the proposed new castle was designated. R. M. Jones, F. G. McCool, F. T. Ridge and W. G. Moore were the petitioners.

Thomas J. Lewis, attorney for the petitioners, said definite plans would be decided on at some future meeting of the association.

Bankers Invited to Meet Here in 1914

John K. Ottley Bears Sid From Atlanta to National Convention at Briarcliffe, N. Y.

The Atlanta Clearing House Association Tuesday authorized John K Ottley, a member of the executive committee of the American Bankers' Association, now in session at Briarcliffe, N. Y., to extend an invitation to the association to hold its 1914 meeting in Atlanta. The 1913 meeting will be held in Boston, and the 1915 convention already has been awarded to San Francisco.

"There are about 13,000 members of the American Bankers' Association," said Colonel Robert J. Lowry, president of the Clearing House, "and about 4,000 or 5,000 of them usually attend the annual meetings."

It is probable that the Chamber of Commerce and the city will also issue invitations to the bankers.

Only Once a Year Do the Papers Carry Such News As This

THE SPRING SALE OF SUITS

The Chamberlin-Johnson-DuBose Co.'s sale of suits for the Spring season of this good year of 1913!

Now all who have waited, stop waiting.

It is time to act quickly, surely.

To you who know the Chamberlin-Johnson-DuBose Co.'s methods, the way things are done in such sales, the simple announcement that to-morrow is the day would doubtless prove sufficient---but, nevertheless, you who know us best can hardly appreciate the true significance of to-morrow's event.

This outranks other spring sales!

There is a finality about it, from the price viewpoint, from the style viewpoint; the finality of the price viewpoint you see below; that of the style viewpoint you shall see to-morrow---we can but hint at it here.

The suits are fresh, bright, splendid styles, a great part of them just sent us by our buyer, now returning from New York. To say they are the latest styles is to tell an interesting fact, and one that is full of meaning to women at this time, when stocks are supposed to be rather low and picked over.

So up to-morrow and to this sale---nothing that could be desired has been left undone, your suit, in the material, shade and fashion you want is here---at one of these prices:

$25.00 $29.75 $35.00 $37.50 Suits at $14.75

Picture the charmingest suits that this gay season has brought out at prices from $25 to $37.50, these are what you are going to choose from to-morrow at $14.75. Serges, corded and striped materials, eponges in all colors---which, of course, means that the staple navy and black suits are included---and shepherd checks. We will not attempt the styles, their name is legion, qualified by beautiful---cutaways, blouses, plain tailored.

$39.50, $45.00, $48.50 to $60.00 Suits At $22.50

Here we get into the suits distinguished by Paris style points---the "de luxe" suits; in fact, a splendid little lot of silk suits in bright spring colors has been included, too. Gracefully draped skirts are prominent and little cutaway coats and odd blouses and rich trimmings and again just simple elegance. Many are of imported fabrics, serge, eponge, diagonals, light, soft corded materials---any color.

EXONERATION IN GRAFT PROBE ANGERS MAYOR

Council's unanimous action in exonerating Fire Chief W. B. Cummings and Aldermen J. W. Maddox, F. J. Spratling and I. N. Ragsdale has aroused Mayor Woodward to additional attacks. He said Tuesday:

"I believe the charges against Chief Cummings, regardless of the action of the investigating committee and Council.

"I had nothing to do with accusing the Aldermen, but I knew Council would vindicate them. Council had to to protect itself; for all its members have known for months of the alleged corrupt activities.

"Just the same, I have accomplished what I expected to accomplish. I have let the people know what is going on in their city government. I have won a victory against graft and corruption despite Council, for the people do not approve of their "whitewashings."

Exoneration Not Protested.

In striking contrast to the attitude of the Mayor is that of every member of Council. The reports of the two investigating committees were unanimously adopted without a note of protest.

The evidence was reviewed at length and the closing words of each report were:

"The evidence does not support the charges."

Councilman Albert Thomson was the only member to voice a resentment. When the report of Alderman John S. Candler's committee on the councilmanic graft charges had been read, Councilman Thomson said:

"I move that the report of this committee be adopted, the committee be thanked and continued as a body. Some serious accusations have been made through the newspapers against Alderman John E. McClelland, the accuser of his three colleagues. I am sure he will want these charges investigated when he returns from his leave of absence, and I want this committee to make the investigation."

McClelland Charges Pass.

However, the committee was dismissed at the request of its members. It was stated that if Alderman McClelland wanted the charges against him investigated a new committee could be appointed.

The essence of the report of the fire probe committee was:

"That the committee preferred to believe the denial of Chief Cummings instead of the unsupported statement of R. E. Davidson, fire apparatus agent, that he had presented Chief Cummings with $400.

"That the purchase of the $9,000 fire engine by the Board of Firemasters without authority from Council was not a purchase, but merely a recommendation to Council, and, therefore, not irregular.

"That the system of buying hose without competitive bids was an old precedent in the department, for which Chief Cummings was not responsible, wrong though it was, and that the evidence disproved the accusation that Chief Cummings had failed to secure for the city an available 10 per cent discount on hose.

Candler Committee Positive.

Alderman John S. Candler's councilmanic graft probe committee was somewhat more positive in its exonerations.

Referring to the charge against Alderman Maddox that he had illegally held sub-contracts with the city, it stated:

"Maddox was requested and urged by the contractor to make bids on the excavations in question. Before bidding he sought the advice of the City Attorney.

"Maddox did not violate the code in question and he did not do anything which, under the charter of the city, the ordinances of same and the code of the State he could not legally do."

Ragsdale Is Praised.

The conclusion on the charges against Alderman Ragsdale that he had been dealing in stock with the city was:

"A careful examination of every act of Alderman Ragsdale in connection with the various transactions with which he has been connected all show the acts of a faithful, honest, conscientious officer of the city, doing far more for the city than his duty required him to do, and doing these acts for the sole purpose of helping the city, and, so far as it was possible for us to ascertain, at a great loss of both time and money to himself."

Spratling Charges Dismissed.

The report reviewed the charges that Alderman F. J. Spratling had borrowed money from beer dealers and dismissed them as follows:

"Your committee is of the opinion that the General Council can not take cognizance of matters such as these, which happened long prior to the election to membership in this body, and where every person concerned, under a rigid examination, swears that there was no promise of assistance nor of help of any sort and no engagement for any service of any sort to any of the parties from the Alderman named."

ROUND-ABOUT-TOWN STORIES

Picked Wrong Man To Get Interview.

"While I was in Los Angeles recently," said the Atlanta man who used to be a newspaper reporter, "I ran into Arthur Bennett. In the days of the Cotton States Exposition Arthur was a reporter for one of the Atlanta papers. He was sent out to get a lot of interviews with prominent citizens concerning the demonetization of silver, that question being a burning one about that time. Arthur was new to the town and didn't know many prominent citizens. He had made friends with a local poet and went to him for advice.

"'Aw, that's easy,' said the poet. 'Here's a city directory. Pick out the names that look good to you and interview 'em. They'll all fall for it. Feel swelled up to see their names in the paper.'

"Arthur did as directed. The interviews were gems. The office was pleased and Arthur was thinking of striking the boss for a raise when somebody called attention to the fact that one of the gentlemen interviewed had been dead for about three years. The directory the poet had offerd in the emergency was an old one.

"Arthur then went to painting pictures. 'The Bull Fight' and the one of the lions at the Aragon Hotel are two examples of his work. He sold them to 'Pop' Dodge when that genial gentleman was manager of the Aragon. Just now Arthur is in his glory. He's press agent for the Sells-Floto Circus in summer and star reporter for The Denver Post in winter. Circus and Post are owned by the same people. Arthur asked to be remembered to the Atlanta bunch."

Getting Latest News of Fashion's Decree.

"While on Fifth Avenue the other day," said a well known Atlanta lawyer who has just returned from a visit to New York, "I saw a group of men in front of the Public Library closely scrutinizing passersby and jotting down notes on pads or notebooks. Investigation revealed that they were tailors who had selected that point of vantage to examine the latest creations of the world's leading dressmakers as worn by women afoot or in passing carriages. And thus are Dame Fashion's decrees promulgated to those who do not order

Suburbanite Still True to the Spring Water.

There is a well known business man who has a home in one of the suburbs. He comes to work every week day morning on the train and he brings his supply of drinking water with him.

"I never could get used to this hydrant water," he explained, exhibiting a small jug in which he keeps his daily supply of thirst eradicator. "I've got a little place of ten acres near here and on it is one of the finest springs in the country.

"I was born and raised on a farm and one of the most pleasant memories of my boyhood days is that of lying down on my stomach at the spring and drinking my fill of cool, delicious water.

"Every day I bring this jug full of spring water with me to the office. I keep it next the ice in the cooler in hot weather and it certainly does taste good. I haven't been sick in five years and I really believe this spring water has had a good deal to do with keeping me in such splendid condition.

"As I sit in my office at Washington there are windows on only one side of the room, and those windows look out upon parks and the Potomac and the shore of Virginia on the other side. I can not see Washington from those windows, and I sometimes thank God that I can't, because Washington behind me is seething with the little games of special privilege."—Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States.

"Corporal punishment in the public schools would be a step backward in education. This method of discipline was, and perhaps still is, of value in rural districts, but in New York, where there are 20,000 teachers, the possibility of its abuse would be too great."—Thomas W. Churchill, President of the Board of Education of New York.

"I don't think votes for women would cure all evils. But I know from observation in the Western States that it's a good thing. In no instance have I seen it produce damage, and in many cases I have seen it work betterment in social and civic conditions. We hear it said that women would neglect their homes if they voted. A century ago it was argued that if laboring men voted they would neglect their work."—Theodore Roosevelt, ex-President of the United States. in address to suffragists.

HARDWARE MEN OPEN CONVENTION IN MOBILE

MOBILE, ALA., May 6.—The annual convention of the Southern Hardware Jobbers' Association and the National Association of Hardware Manufacturers convened in Mobile to-day at the Battle House with more than 800 delegates and visitors present from all parts of the country.

BIG SURPRISE IS COMING SOON IN PONY CONTEST

Publication of Entrants' Names and Standings May Reveal Many Unexpected Rivals.

Prepare for a surprise.

It will come when, in the next few days, the names and standings of the entrants in the pony contest are announced.

The Georgian and American expected the contest to prove popular, but expected nothing like the flood which has come by mail, by telephone and telegraph.

The mere matter of listing contestants and their standings has proved to be much more of a task than looked for, and it will take a day or two more.

The youngster who has expected to find himself the only one in the race in his district is likely to pick up the Georgian one of these days and find he has a dozen rivals.

'Twill Be No "Walk Away."

We can say this much, from hurried scanning of the application blanks, not a district but has its contenders, and most of them have a score or more. There is going to be no "walk away" for anyone.

And already new subscriptions are beginning to come in from contestants.

The books in which subscriptions are listed and voting strength computed are ready. Most of the contestants noticed the announcement in the Sunday American and in the Georgian, and have called for these books. Those who have not done so, should come in at once, for the books are the handiest things ever devised for the use of contestants.

Anyone can nominate a contestant. Any boy or girl who wishes to enter may send in his own name on an entrance blank, and 1,000 votes will be credited to the person so doing.

Only One Nomination Taken.

It is not necessary to get someone else to submit the name. Inquiries are coming in by telephone and mail on this point, and this announcement is made to settle the point.

Only one nomination, however, is accepted for any one person. Two or more nominations have been received from some entrants.

The ponies are coming, and they are the best to be found in careful search of the Bluegrass region of Tennessee, which is the pony market of the United States. Twelve intelligent, gentle, handsome little beasts, thoroughly broken for children to drive, are the prizes the Georgian and Sunday American will distribute to the boys and girls of Atlanta and of the State, together with prizes for carriers and agents contesting under the same rules.

Coupon Counts 5 Votes.

A coupon in every issue of the Georgian counts five votes. There is a coupon in every issue of the Sunday American which counts fifteen votes. These are worth having.

But the contest will be won by the contestants who get the most subscriptions. A year's subscription to the Georgian and American counts 3,500 votes. Votes are credited for subscriptions of varying periods, down to 100 votes for one month for the Georgian alone.

The rules are simple, and the prizes are worth while.

Go in and win!

Students Hear Shady Law Practice Scored

Medical Expert Condemns Sacrifice of Clients' Interests in Personal Injury Cases.

Members of the Atlanta bar and students of the Atlanta Law School are today pondering a lecture by Dr. William Perrin Nicolson, medical expert, delivered Monday night on "The Ethics of the Profession."

"The corporation lawyer insists that a green plaster will cure spinal concussion, and that the injured victim gets well at the sight of the long green," said the expert. "If you think your client is going to get well before the trial comes, or if he gets well too quick, do your duty; there are some cases to be settled.

"But the most outrageous practice of the personal injury lawyer is the frequency with which the claims of clients are sacrificed and compromised by lawyers who have no qualms of conscience at this shady practice."

When Your Hair Turns Gray

When a woman's hair turns gray, the world expects her to step back from the limelight. Active and abreast of the times she may be, with a wide experience, but—she has grown old and gray headed. Fortunate, indeed, is the woman whose hair retains its color through her forties.

But what of the woman whose hair begins to fade, maybe as early as 25 or 30, the woman in the midst of the active business world? "We don't want old women!" She feels it all around her.

Don't let your hair turn gray. But be careful. Very few hair stains are absolutely pure and harmless. There are some reliable preparations: our Robinnaire Hair Dye is one. Made here in Atlanta, in our own laboratory, and we guarantee it to be pure and positively non-injurious to either hair or scalp. It makes the hair soft and keeps it in fine condition, and no one can detect that a hair stain has been used. It is not a vulgar bleach or artificial coloring. It is a natural restorative that puts back life and color into the hair. No one need hesitate to use it. Non-sticky, and does not stain skin or scalp.

No woman need have gray hair undesired. But don't pull out the white hairs. Two will grow in immediately for every one you pull out. Use Robinnaire's Hair Dye at once, and don't let people call you old. It is prepared for light, medium and dark brown and black hair. Trial size, 25c; postpaid, 31c; regular size, 75c; postpaid, 83c. For sale by all Jacobs' Pharmacy Stores and druggists generally.

INJURED ARM GIVES MOBILE D. ROBERTSON

By Jack Law.

DAVE ROBERTSON, who is covering right field for Mike Finn's Mobile team, secured his early baseball training under the tutelage of a former popular Southern League player, Dick Crozier, who covered the outfield at different times for Little Rock and Atlanta, was the man who taught Robertson the first rudiments of the game.

Robertson, who is a native of Portsmouth, Va., attended the University at Rocky Mount, where Dick Crozier taught the young steps how best to perfect their athletic abilities. Under Crozier's watchful coaching the Virginian showed remarkable athletic prowess especially in baseball.

When the Tide Water League was started in a spirit of pique to put the Virginia League out of business, Robertson pitched the Elizabeth City team, which was a member of the outlaw Tide Water League. He soon was acknowledged the best pitcher in that organization. Opposing clubs were lucky when they made a run off him. On account of his wonderful hitting he was used in the outfield and at first base when not pitching.

Charlie Babb, the ex-Memphis manager, was managing Norfolk in the Virginia League, at that time, and tried to secure Robertson but was unable to land the big pitcher. In fact, every manager in the Virginia League tried to seize Robertson, but he was loyal to the Tide Water. Robertson was a free agent at the time, as the Tide Water was not recognized by organized ball.

Scouts After Robertson.

In a short time Norfolk was besieged by scouts of almost all the major league clubs in the country.

Detroit especially made Robertson flattering offers and Bobby Rothermel, their scout, took another pitcher named Stafford, from the same team, but could not induce Dave to sign. The more offers that were turned down by Robertson only made the major league clubs the more anxious to secure him.

Mike Finn, at present in charge of the Mobile team, was at that time a scout for the New York club. Dick Crozier, whom Robertson always called upon for advice, was with Mike Finn several years in both the Southern and the Connecticut Leagues and was on particularly friendly terms with Mike. This friendship resulted in Finn securing the young Portsmouth lad's signature to a piece of paper that bound him to the New York team.

Robertson practiced a little of Ty Cobb's stuff on McGraw's club by demanding a bonus of $1,200 for signing and was not to report until the 15th of June. It was also stipulated in the agreement that the left hander could not be released by the New York club inside of a year.

Injures His Arm.

Robertson's arm while pitching in the Tide Water League was as free as the wing of Rube Waddell in his palmy days. But sad to relate, Robertson injured his left shoulder in a football game and was compelled to throw underhanded ever since. On account of his superior hitting ability McGraw kept him and was endeavoring to make a first baseman of him. He was offered to one manager of a Southern League team on the condition that the player be returned to him under optional agreement, and it was also demanded that the manager should play him at first base. The manager in question refused to take Robertson unless he was given a clear title to him, which McGraw refused to consider. It was a lucky break for Finn, as the player has demonstrated here that he can certainly hit the ball and is exceedingly fast on his feet.

Rheumatic Blood is Whole Story

Sciatica, Lumbago, and Dreaded Articular Rheumatism Cured.

You Will Feel Like an Acrobat After Using S. S. S.

There is a host of pills, powders, tablets and what-not for rheumatism, but they all lack the first essential to being a natural medicine. To begin with, rheumatism is simply a name given to designate a variety of pains, and can only be reached by irrigating the entire blood supply with a naturally assimilative antidote. True, the pains may be eased with narcotics or the acids may be neutralized for the time being. But such methods merely temporize and do not even lead to a cure. There is but one standard rheumatism remedy, and is sold in all drug stores under the name of S. S. S.

It contains only pure vegetable elements, and is absolutely free of mercury, iodide of potash or arsenic, and has proved a wonder for every form of rheumatism.

The recoveries of all types of rheumatism by the use of S. S. S. is a fine tribute to the natural efficacy of this remarkable medicine, for it is assimilated just as naturally, just as specifically, and just as well ordained as the most acceptable, most palatable and most readily digested food. Do not fail to get a bottle of S. S. S. to-day. You will be astonished at the results. If your rheumatism is of such a nature that you would like to consult a great specialist confidentially, write to The Medical Dept., The Swift Specific Co., 137 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.

Many Stars After Ritchie's Title

Morgan Says Coast Wants Britton

By Ed W. Smith.

CHICAGO, ILL., May 6.—Unless all signs fail, there will be some lively fireworks touched off before July 4 under the championship chair in which Willie Ritchie has such an insecure seat at the present time. Jack Britton, of this city, to say nothing of Freddie Welsh, of England; Tommy Murphy, of New York, and one or two others, are preparing some stunning pyrotechnics, and believe when the fireworks are set off there will be something fine doing and that Ritchie will no longer be the champion de luxe in idleness that he now is.

Dumb Dan Morgan, who is helmsman on the British ship, was in the city the other day on his way to New York, and had a few lively things to say about the lightweight situation. A young man named Bud Anderson cleared the air pretty well for Morgan by removing one of Dan's fighters from serious consideration as a champion. Said Bud knocked out Knockout Brown in hurricane style, and now Dan has only the one lightweight to give him any concern. But Dan can make just as much noise and advance just as many arguments over one star as he can over two; so, as far as Dan is concerned, it really doesn't make a great deal of difference about the Kayo's defeat.

Ritchie Must Meet Britton.

"Ritchie simply has got to pay attention to Britton now, and within a couple of weeks we will be on our way to Los Angeles to force him into a match out there," spake the word miser from New York. "They told me in Los Angeles just before I left that if I didn't return within a month with Britton, they would know then that I wasn't sincere in wanting a battle with Ritchie. So what can we do but go right out there and try to force the issue? Ritchie must fight, and Britton is the card on the coast. That is why I am feeling quite complacent about the matter, and can see a match in sight right now. Nolan cannot keep Ritchie bottled up and cart him around the country in a glass case any longer.

"Britton has done everything that has been asked of him in the last year. Excepting the Packey McFarland fight, where he met a welterweight, Jack has whipped them all, and that entitles him to a chance at the title. He can make 133 pounds at the ringside and fight well. He can make it easier than Ritchie can, and I am willing to bet on it. So you can safely jot back down as the best lightweight bet of the day right now.

Brown Clears $120,000.

"Because he wanted to take a rest, I sent Brown back home. The kid has cleared up $120,000 since I've had him, and it is a record that I am proud of. He is well fixed, and doesn't have to worry at all. Sorry that some of the coin doesn't cling to me, but somehow I cannot make it stick. Britton also is pretty fat financially. He has something like $50,000 scattered around the country in different banks. Just think of it, he has had thirty fights in the last eight months! That's going some, eh? And because he didn't knock Pal Moore's head off in Philadelphia the other night they accuse him of faking! I think after I have had a chance to talk with the board of safety there that I can get the ban lifted on him.

Anderson Not Inexperienced.

"This Anderson boy that licked Brown is not an inexperienced hand. He is about 26 years old, and has been fighting six or seven years. He stands and waits for a man to come to him, and then chops down on the jaw with funny little hooks that are mighty dangerous. He will be a good man when he learns more about the real championship stuff. If Mandot isn't in the best of shape, Bud is apt to flatten Joe just as he did Brown. Also, I saw this McAllister fellow fight out there. Great man, too, and he'll be a heavyweight some day. Take it from me, he can fight."

ALL TECH WILL GO TO ATHENS FOR BIG GAME

GREAT preparations are under way for the first series of the Tech-Georgia baseball games at Athens on Friday and Saturday of this week.

At Tech Flats yesterday morning a monster demonstration of the everlasting, never-say-die spirit was made at chapel when all the students signified their intention of attending the Saturday game.

A special train will be chartered and, with the band, the trip to Athens will be made at 11 o'clock. Students will be excused from classes on this special occasion, and Athens will be virtually overrun with the Yellow Jackets. A goodly number will leave on Friday to be on hand for the Friday game.

Jackets Going Strong.

The Jackets were given a stiff workout yesterday afternoon and showed up well after their struggle with Sewanee on Saturday. The regular varsity line-up was played, with the exception of E. Montague, whose place at the second sack is ably taken care of by Captain F. Montague. Pitts, the Jackets' southpaw, had a good workout and showed up well. He will doubtless get a chance either Friday or Saturday to prove his worth. He is steady, has plenty of speed and is a strong batter, which is something unusual for a pitcher. If not on the mound, he will probably gather them up in right field, and he can do that, too.

Dope Doesn't Count Here.

A comparison or even a near-comparison of any sort of a Tech-Georgia game is not worth the ink it would take to print it, and baseball is no exception. All previous dope, luck, material and general all-round playing are cast to the four winds before the schedule of these games is even made up.

However, this year Georgia has the only advantage in having played and won more games, while Tech has only won the series from Sewanee and Clemson, with single games from Mercer and Auburn. Georgia has won from all these, coupled with wins from other teams and a long, hard knock on the road which abounded in experience. Naturally, this fills the lads from Athens with confidence. Already touted as the Southern champions, they are anxious to keep up the name, and this they will try to do against the Jackets. They have everything to lose, while the Techs have nothing.

Since the Alabama games the Jackets have been fighting harder and stronger than ever before, and at present are showing the goods. Their batting, base running and general all-round playing has developed wonderfully, and they are bound to be in top-notch condition by the first game on Friday.

Georgia's Pitchers Strong.

Post-season dope had it that neither team has pitchers that could be depended upon. That has been knocked aside by Corley and Morris, of the Red and Black aggregation, who have been pitching good ball. The latter pitched a no-hit game against Vanderbilt, and Corley also has pitched jam-up ball all season.

Eubanks has proved himself to be a steady pitcher, ready to go in at any pinch. During the Sewanee series he pitched thirteen innings, or part of two games, allowing but three hits. All season he has been keeping his opponents' hits well scattered and has not allowed over seven hits in any game. Pitts is also on the upgrade and can be expected to cut loose some stuff when called on.

GEORGIA TRIUMPHS OVER WASHINGTON AND LEE, 12-0

ATHENS, GA., May 6.—Washington and Lee fell before the hands of the University of Georgia here yesterday by the score of 12 to 0. The visitors were in the air at all times and exhibited the poorest fielding seen here this season. The Virginians were able to connect for but two safeties off the delivery of Corley, while the locals larrupped the benders of Larrick for thirteen bingles.

The features of the game were the pitching of Corley, the fielding of McWhorter and Erwin and the batting of Ginn, McWhorter, Hutchens, Bowden and Erwin.

IRA DAVENPORT TO RETIRE.

CHICAGO, May 6.—Ira J. Davenport, one of the greatest runners the West has produced, is about to old the spikes and scanty clothes a fond farewell. Before he wanders into the dim obscurity of business life Ira wants to crown his career with a new world's record for the half mile on an outdoor track.

Sporting Food

By GEORGE E. PHAIR

A mother was weeping,
Her baby was sleeping,
Its father, the villain, had fled from the fold.
As daylight was waning
She sat there complaining
And wept as she saw all the victuals grow cold.

Far out on the bleachers,
With joy on his features,
The father was lifting his voice to the sky.
The poor mother's wailing
Was all unavailing,
For how could he leave when the score was a tie?

Perseverance wins in all walks of life. If the Lookouts keep on playing they may some day win a couple of ball games.

There are various things which cause persons to laugh, one of which is a verbal agreement between two baseball magnates.

Ty Cobb's life is rendered all the more joyous by the fact that his contract does not bind him to read the baseball dope over which he signs his name.

Charley Frank does not state what form of athletics he pursued while at college, but we presume he was a member of the tank team.

As we understand it, the mutual esteem between Messrs. Charles Frank and Bill Smith is so great that they could strangle each other at a moment's notice.

We note by the papers that Luther McCarty and Arthur Pelky are matched to do battle in Calgary. In some circles it is rumored that they are pugilists.

If it be true that Gotch and Zbyszko will meet in one of Chicago's baseball parks, we are unanimous in favor of investigating the baseball trust.

The baseball season was inaugurated in Paris with a score of 22 to 16, indicating that there are futurists in baseball as well as in art.

THE NATIONAL COMMISH.

It was a heinous crime, they thought,
when Tyrus Raymond Cobb
Demanded several chunks of dough
for working at his job.
And so they fined him fifty bones and
put him on the pan,
A horrible example for the others of
his clan.

But when a magnate boosts the price
of seats by yonder fence,
Where fans can get a bird's-eye view
by paying 50 cents—
Said magnate breaks a baseball law,
but does he pay a fine,
'Tush! Tush!' they say. "Don't bother
us. Bring in a case of wine!"

In view of the recent work of Mr. Chance's athletes, we can say without fear of successful contradiction that the Bermuda onion will not be adopted as the national flower.

Joe Tinker has secured a mortgage on the services of Johnny Kling, but by some strange oversight he has neglected to sign Adrian C. Anson and Bill Lange.

Despite the fact that George Bausewein is getting down to shape, we fear that he never will be used as an advertisement for anti-fat.

Tommy Burns owns a club, makes the matches, manages the club's meal tickets and referees the fights. Thus we see that a prizefighter sometimes develops into a merger.

Possibly the Mikado will lose some of that warlike spirit when he learns that Gunboat Smith is headed for California.

The official scorer in Detroit is unanimously in favor of an upward revision of Ty Cobb's batting average.

COWEE DEFEATS MOTT IN EAST LAKE FINALS

The results of the three flights in the vice president's tournament at the East Lake course, just finished, were as follows:

H. P. D. Cowee defeated C. B. Mott, 5-4, in 36 holes in the first flight. W. P. Hazelwood won the second flight, defeating W. F. Spalding, 3-2. Frank Adair defeated W. F. Upshaw, 4-3, in the third flight.

The second and third flights were only 18 holes. Cowee was never over 85 in any of his matches. Frank Adair was 82 in his match with Upshaw.

CUNNINGHAM'S MEN EXPECT TO WIN WITH EASE

ATHENS, GA., May 6.—For one time during the many years that Tech and Georgia have met in battle for athletic supremacy there is a feeling of confidence in the Red and Black camp that Georgia will take the series from the Yellow Jackets this season, and should do it handily. Although such a feeling as this pervades the entire atmosphere around the Classic City it does not mean that Cunningham and his sluggers are going into the series overconfident.

That old story of upset dope is liable to be called in to make explanations after most any old game when Georgia and Tech are contenders, yet there is even money here that Georgia will make a clean sweep of the four games.

The Red and Black team will miss the services of Covington on third base, as he has been the sensation of two seasons at this corner and possesses one of the best baseball heads and batting eyes on the squad. Holden, captain of the scrubs, has filled the place creditably in the most series, but is woefully weak with the stick, and his inexperience on foreign territory will be a point in favor of the Jackets, who usually want to swarm and buzz very evidently on the third base line.

Henderson May Play Third.

Henderson has about recovered from his case of mumps, and Cunningham has announced that he will give him a try-out in Covington's old place. Since Bowden has gone to first he has been leading the team in batting, and the placing of Henderson on third will give him another effective hitter, especially against Tech's southpaw. "Tiny" has fattened his average against every left-hander he has faced this season.

If the Georgia men can keep up their wonderful batting it will take great playing to head them off.

Team Hits Terrifically.

Though the twenty games played to the Washington and Lee series, eight regulars were batting over .300, while the average for the entire team was .310. A total of 222 hits have been made by the Georgians, which counted for 137 runs.

Davis, of Auburn, has been the only Southern pitcher that has been able to halfway stop the terrific slugging of McWhorter's "Southern Champs," as they are now being called by loyal Georgians far and near.

Corley will be Cunningham's selection on the mound in the opening game here Friday, while big John Morris will hurl the second. The fact that the men of Athens have run off with every series played is not allaying any of the spirit, and the chances are that the largest crowds that have ever visited Sanford Field will be on hand for the contests, especially with Saturday a gala day.

COAST ANTI-FIGHT BILL KILLED AFTER BATTLE

SACRAMENTO, May 6.—The Brown anti-prize fight bill was killed by an amendment after a three-hour fight last night. The vote was 20 to 17.

The amendment was offered by Juillard, and it merely re-enacts the present law, with the single change that it limits boxing contests to twenty rounds.

If the Brown bill had passed, the professional boxing game would have been crushed in California. It limited to eight rounds and prohibited more than a 25-cent admission charge. Only a $35 trophy to the winner was allowed.

DIXON DEFEATS GREELY.

WINNIPEG, May 6.—Tommy Dixon, of Kansas City, was awarded the popular decision over Johnny Greely, of Pittsburg, in a fifteen-round bout last night.

MUTT and JEFF COLUMN

JIMMY SHECKARD compiled a record in a game last week that probably never has been duplicated and never will. He went to bat four times, had 24 balls pitched to him, still never made a single swing and the Ump had to call every pitch.

In the first with three on, Jim had two successive strikes called on him, and then waited for four successive balls, forcing Huggins home with a run. In the third Jim waited for another 3-2 count and then was called out on a strike that easily was 6 inches on the inside.

And it was the same in the sixth and seventh. The two reached 3-2, when Camnitz dished up wide ones on each occasion and Sheckard walked, getting three free passes to first, a strike-out, 24 balls pitched to him and without swinging at a single one.

ONCE upon a Time a Promoter grew Tired of standing on the Side Lines and Rubbering while Others sent their Treasurers to the Banks with Gate Receipts, and after having a Chat with Himself He decided that he would Tear the Velvet off his Antlers and Horn into the Division of the Spoils. Despite the Protests of the Frayed and Ragged Magnates He got the Hunch that there was Room for Another to starve in the Baseball World.

Staking Himself to a Handful of Schedules and a Cluster of Railroad Routes He took a load off his Feet, and a brief Half Hour with the Pencil and Slate gave him a List of Towns that were Starving for the National Game. Able to read, He was Hep to all of the Stuff that was Annoying to the Expert Scribes and the Common Run of Fanatics, and being Anxious to Please he Framed up the Nifty Stunt of cutting It all out.

There would be no White Slaves in his Grand Aggregation. The Reserve Clause would be Sidestepped, and at the End of a Season the Performers could go out and get Jobs with other Teams or with the Street Cleaning Department. At the Swell Beaneries the Rube Performers would be taught how to Stab Peas and other Rolling Food with a Fork, Tango Dancing would be made a Cinch for Them to Fritter away Their Hours of Leisure, and as for the Fanatics, Real Seats would be Held when Reserved, and Gun Men Ushers would be barred from the Ball Yards. If there was Anything left undone the Fanatics would always find the Management willing to Remedy the Defects.

All in All, the Promoter had a Grand Little Idea, and then He prepared to get Busy. His Announcement was sent to the Press and the next Morning Sixteen Funny Men in Sixteen Separate and Distinct Sections of the Country took a Crack at the Wild Idea. The Frost that was spattered about the collection of States wouldn't have given His League a Chance if the Performers had been Gum Prop Fed Guides from the Far North. The Managers of the News Services checked up and found that it would Tear still more from Their Appropriations if They sent out the Stories of the Games and the Word was given to Forget the New League.

Learning of all this the Frayed and Ragged Baseball Bosses, who had become Horny Handed through dealing out the Kale necessary to provide Entertainment for the Beloved Fanatics, rejoiced because Popular Approvat had been Withheld, and One who would have become a Brother to Them had been Forced to keep his Money.

Moral:—One has a fine, fat chance to pry his way into organized baseball.

CLUB OWNERS MAKE KILLING THIS SEASON

By Percy H. Whiting.

IT looks as though the Southern League were set to make a killing this year. The attendance thus far has been marvelous.

At the opening of the season, thanks to the early start and the consequent bad weather, receipts were not what they should have been—but at that records were broken.

Since the weather has come around and warmed up decently there has been nothing to it but ENORMOUS crowds.

Here in Atlanta all records for early attendance were smashed. Chattanooga has held up well, despite the wretched work of the team. Nashville has had corking crowds. Memphis is off in attendance—and always will be as long as a cheap team is inflicted on the Bluff City folks. Birmingham has had amazing crowds. The attendance in Montgomery is FINE. New Orleans has been a shade off. And Mobile—well, please picture nearly 8,000 people paying their way in at the turnstile there!

If the race stays close the attendance records will smash all records to bits

DOWN in New Orleans there is a feeling that the Pelicans' chief played a pretty shrewd joke on the Crackers by euchring them out of Williams.

Maybe so. We'll let it go at that—if they will.

But to Cracker fans it appears that the joke is on Frank. After Williams' debut here and while it was supposed he still belonged to the Crackers I asked Bill Smith, "What about Williams?"

Now Bill is slow to criticise a man. But there wasn't any room for argument in this case.

"I don't care a lot for what he's showed me yet," was Bill's reply, "He may come around, but—" and he sighed.

Bill was tickled to death to be so well rid of Williams.

As for Bisland—he continues to look like a million dollars ($1,000,000)!

This lad wasn't one of the kind who was hawked around and nabbed by the highest bidder. Smith has had his eye on him for six months. When he found out Williams wouldn't do he wired Barney Dreyfuss, "What will you take for Bisland?"

About that time it began to appear that Hans Wagner was coming around all right, so the Pirates made a stiff price on Bisland. The local club closed so fast it took their breath away.

As for Williams—well, we'll keep Bisland.

BASEBALL writers the country over are hooting at what they call the "Cincinnati" base hit. It is one of these fielder's choices that, by dictum of Ban Johnson, is to be scored a base hit.

For instance, a runner is on first. The batter, on the hit and run, grounds weakly to the third baseman. The third baseman tries to land the runner going to second. The throw is too late. And all hands are safe. But had the third baseman thrown to first it would have been an easy out.

Ban Johnson says it's a hit.

The baseball writers say it's a "Cincinnati" hit.

In the Atlanta press box we score that in what appears to be the only logical way. If the thing looks like an infield hit and it appears that the runner would have beaten it we give the batter a hit. On the other hand, if it is apparent that the batter would have been out a mile at first, if the throw had been made there, we score it a fielder's choice.

Of course there are some close decisions on this—but so there are on a lot of other hits, when the scorer must decide whether to let them go as hits or errors.

It is better to let the scorers use their judgment than it is to give men hits when they were not entitled to them.

It isn't that we object to giving the batters a few unearned hits—but these hits go against the pitcher just the same as screaming singles and work an awful hardship on him. The pitcher is thus made to pay the penalty because the infielder throws to the wrong base.

Buffalo Team Buys Jackson From Braves

BOSTON, MASS., May 6.—Manager George Stallings of the Boston Braves is planning a big shake-up in his team, which he hopes will help put Boston on the baseball map.

Stallings started the shake-up yesterday when he sold George "Hickory" Jackson, the former Southern League boy, who has held an outfield berth with the Braves for some time, to the Buffalo club of the International League. He will join the team at Providence.

"Buster" Brown is also doomed to walk the plank. The big right hander has shown nothing so far this season and Stallings has about decided that Brown will not do.

FINN TO SEND HOGG AGAINST CRACKER CLAN

By Joe Agler.

MOBILE, ALA., May 6.—Manager Smith will select King Brady to stop the high-flying Gulls, with Pat Granam receiving. Manager Finn will use Bradley Hogg, the undefeated pitcher, with Schmidt catching.

Atlanta lost again yesterday, 10 to 6.

Bausewein got away bad and gave the first three batters bases on balls. Musser and Price were not effective.

The Gulls walloped the ball hard, and it seemed as though they would hit any pitcher that was sent in the box. It was just one of those days when they would hit anything that was served up to them.

The Crackers were the first to score, but were overtaken.

The Gulls hit at opportune times, while we got all our hits after two men were out.

Bisland continues to hit the ball hard. His two triples would have been home runs on the Atlanta grounds. The fans of Atlanta will see in Bisland one of the most finished shortfielders ever in the Southern League.

The Crackers hope to get at least an even break, and will try hard to annex two games to the won column. We all hope Bill Bailey will soon be in shape to don the spangles and be with us, as he is missed very badly.

Yesterday's game was the eighth straight win for the Gulls and the second of the series with the Crackers. Campbell went the route for Mobile. He fanned five men and gave one pass.

Robertson, with two homers and as many singles in five times up, led the batting. Jacobson, in five times at bat, got a homer and two singles.

For the visitors, Bisland, in four times up, got two triple-sackers. Long found three safeties in five chances.

The game was long drawn out, due to the many batters going up.

Atlanta started off well with three runs in the first on as many hits, one a triple, but couldn't hold the pace. One run was put over in the fourth and two in the sixth, but that was all.

TIGERS DEFEAT NEWBERRY AND WIN CAROLINA TITLE

CLEMSON COLLEGE, S. C., May 6.—Clemson won from Newberry, 6 to 5, and thereby cinched the State championship with 1,000 per cent. Many of the ten games played in the State were won by large scores. The game yesterday was featureless, except for the base running of the Tigers, who purloined 11 sacks, and a home run by Cureton for Clemson. Ezell struck out 13 and Epting 5.

GEORGE ROHE TO PLAY AGAINST MOBILE TO-DAY

MOBILE, ALA., May 6.—George Rohe, the ex-Pelican, will act as utility man for the Crackers this season. Bill Smith secured Rohe from New Orleans yesterday and he will report to the club some time to-day.

Rohe will probably be placed in right field against Mobile this afternoon in place of Graham.

"WILDCAT" FERNS WINS DECISION OVER PERRY

KANSAS CITY, MO., May 6.—Clarence "Wildcat" Ferns, of this city, was given the decision over Jimmy Perry, of Pittsburg, Pa., here last night at the end of a ten-round fight, which was tame and featureless throughout.

AUTO FOR MIKE MURPHY.

PHILADELPHIA, May 6.—As a token of their esteem members of the Detroit Athletic Club have announced their intention of presenting Mike Murphy, Penn's veteran track coach, with an automobile, which he may use to go from his home to Franklin Field to train the Red and Blue athletes.

MARS TRIMS M'GOVERN.

CINCINNATI, May 6.—Knockout Mars, of New York, won over Benny McGovern, of St. Louis, in ten rounds last night.

FRANKIE RUSSELL LACES ANDERSON IN MEMPHIS GO

MEMPHIS, TENN., May 6—Frankie Russell, of New Orleans, easily defeated Jimmy Anderson, of Indianapolis, in eight rounds last night. Anderson took his beating gamely. Russell made a good showing, and efforts are being made to match him with some real star of the lightweight division.

PHIL CROSS BEATS ERNE IN SIX-ROUND BATTLE

CHRISTY MATHEWSON'S BIG LEAGUE GOSSIP

"NAP" RUCKER, of Brooklyn, is probably the most unlucky performer in the world. He can pitch shutout ball for nine innings and lose more games than any man who ever stepped into the middle of the diamond. He wears the championship belt for this.

Rucker started against me in Brooklyn last week and did not give the New York club a hit for seven innings. The safe punches against him totaled only two in nine innings, and yet he lost his battle.

It was one of the keenest pitching duels in which I have ever engaged, and there was nothing to do but work all the way.

When the thirteenth inning rolled around, and it was the Giants' turn to bat, a messenger boy handed McGraw a telegram. He looked at it for a minute, and saw it was numbered thirteen. He turned to the bench and said: "Well, boys, here's where we win it."

IT was then that the Giants started the rally which tore Rucker apart. He is a great twirler, one of the greatest in the game, and he assumes nothing. He does not complain because he has had his fare talents buried among the relics of a second division club ever since he invaded the big league. He is not at all conceited. He takes his defeat philosophically and does not "beef."

Yet, like the rest of us, Rucker hates to lose.

"They got to me at last," he remarked at the end of the thirteenth inning. He did not find fault with any of his backers.

SOME may criticise me when I say he is one of the greatest pitchers in the game, and then hint at the box score in which my club came out on top. It is like the story a war correspondent told me once.

"During the Japanese war," he said, "we were attacking a Russian position one day and had thrown up some hasty fortifications. General Nogi insisted in standing in an exposed place and viewing the action through his glass. Finally I said to him:

"'General, you are in a dangerous position. You had better come down.'

"'Yes,' he replied, 'and I would come off those fortifications and quit making sketches, too, if I were you.'"

By praising Rucker for this game, I am hinting that I deserve some. But I honestly say that the better ball club was behind me. Rucker should get just as much credit for the magnificent game he pitched as I did for my work.

Whenever I twirl, I never have any luck. That is the second game this year in which I have been forced to work overtime.

• • •

WHEN the Eastern clubs in the American League invade the West this week, there will be a lot of scars left on the teams that inhabit the West.

The Yankees will be the only boys that will look soft from present indications.

Philadelphia and Washington are two tough clubs this season. When these two teams go West, they will meet only one possible championship contender, and that is Cleveland.

Cleveland appears to be going better so far in this race than the team has in years, but Washington is liable to take the ambition out of the Naps.

Even during the many years when the Senators were trailing along in the dust of the American League, they could always give the Cleveland team a fight, as a weak club frequently will some particularly strong one. The Washington team took eighteen out of twenty-two battles from the Cleveland club last year.

BOSTON has been going bad so far this season, and the club has not played ball at all like a world's championship team. Stahl's chances of repeating look to me to be very slim, considering the competition in his league. "Jake," himself, will probably be out of the game a good deal from now on, as he is slowing up. Stahl has been trying to dig up a good first baseman to take his place, but the digging has not been very profitable. He made an effort to grab Hal Chase, but Chance was looking when they tried to slip him three or four boys whose names seldom appear in the headlines. If Stahl could have picked up Chase, it might have put him in the race. As it is, it strikes me he is going to have a tough time keeping even near Washington and Philadelphia.

Both these clubs are traveling as fast as gossip in an actor's boarding house now. One of the teams may drop by the wayside on the Western trip, but I doubt it, because I cannot see any keen opposition in the West. It will probably be a case this year of Washington and Philadelphia fighting it out, with every series between them being of vital importance.

PROPHETS are springing up all over the circuit every day who openly declare that Washington is going to win the pennant. Griffith has one pitcher he can fire against his enemies any time he wants to be sure of a game, and his name is Walter Johnson. He humbled the heretofore unbeaten Plank in a thrilling battle the other day.

So far on the season's record, Griffith appears to have the edge on the Athletics with pitchers, but there is no doubt about "Connie" Mack's infield being stronger than the Washington one, while the outfields are about a standoff. The Athletics are a harder-hitting club, while the Washington team is faster. To my mind, it is the speediest aggregation I ever saw in action in the American League, in spite of the fact they call the Red Sox the "Speed Boys." The club plays together well, too, and is a great machine. I think that the real battle will develop between the Senators and Athletics.

IN the meantime, the New York Americans are not acting as if they intended to crowd anybody fighting for the pennant.

So far, Chance has had very hard luck with his club, and none realizes better than he that some of the present members of the team will have to go. He told me himself, only recently, that a catcher and a pitcher would be let out, and that he expected the public would be very much surprised when the names were announced.

Chance is like a woman when it comes to perspicacity.

You can't fool women.

They let you think you are fooling them some of the time, but just when you believe you are getting away with it they bring you up with a half-turn.

Some of the Yankee ball players thought they were fooling Chance. Might as well endeavor to hide something from an X-ray by wrapping it in tissue paper.

PREP LEAGUE NOTES

There will be two good struggles in the Prep championship race this season. The first one is between Tech High, Boys High and Marist for first place, and G. M. A. and Peacock will fight fully as hard to keep out of last place.

• • •

If Piedmont Park bathing beach is opened early enough this year, Boys High School will have a water polo team. Many of the school athletes are expert swimmers and a good team can be organized. If arrangements can be made some aquatic meets will be held with some of the other schools in the city.

• • •

The annual track meet Friday is the chief topic of discussion among local prep school students, and a large attendance is expected. The meet should prove the most successful in years.

• • •

Boys' High and Marist will meet Wednesday for the second time this season on the Marist diamond. The other game resulted in a ten-inning tie, and since that time both teams have been steadily improving. The game Wednesday will have a great deal to do in regard to deciding the local prep championship.

• • •

The West Point High School team is one of the strongest teams ever organized at that school. The team has played a number of games and in most cases has come out victorious. They would like to get a game with Tech or Boys' High.

• • •

It is estimated that at least fifty entries will be seen in the track meet Friday at Marist field. The latest rumor at Boys' High has it that the school will be entered in the meet, but many of the athletes have announced that they positively would not enter.

• • •

It seems strange that there are no relay races on the program of the prep track meet Friday. A mile relay race with six men on each team is one of the most exciting events one would want to see.

• • •

Gene Turner, official Prep League umpire, has given entire satisfaction this season, and an attempt will be made to engage him for next year. Turner is at present a member of the Georgia Tech faculty and is also a former minor league ball player.

It begins to look as though Riverside will finish the baseball season this year with a clean slate. So far this team has won sixteen straight games and has played one tie. They have met nearly every prep team in the State and beaten them all easily. Riverside could trim most of the colleges this year.

• • •

The reason for the success of the Riverside nine this year is in the excellent pitching staff and the slugging ability of the players. Williamson, McNeill and Haines are all first-class twirlers.

• • •

So much pressure is being brought to bear by the alumni of Emory College in favor of intercollegiate athletics that it looks as if the faculty and regents will be forced to grant their wishes.

Following is a list of athletes from Tech High School and the events in which they will be entered in Friday:

100-yard dash, Bedell and Parks; 220-yard low hurdles, Bedell and Parks; 440-yard dash, Bedell, Covington and Whittaker; 880-yard run, Downing, Covington, Shropshire and Hiles; one-mile run, Cobb, Hiles, Downing and Covington; shot put, Meyers, Bedell, Weston; hammer throw, Bedell and Meyers; high jump, Perry and Chamberlain; broad jump, Jacobus and Bedell; pole vault, Meyers.

• • •

Jim Prease, of Riverside, is one of the best first basemen in prep circles this year. He is a big, rangy chap and can pull in anything that comes within six feet of the bag. He is also one of the heaviest hitters on the team.

• • •

The game Wednesday between Boys' High and Marist will be a pitchers' battle between Fox and Callahan. These two lads are perhaps the best pair of twirlers in the local league and both are going great now.

A tennis tournament will soon start at Peacock. There are a number of experts at this game there and the tournament will be a hot one. The games will probably be played on the Piedmont Park courts.

The fans yesterday gave Hal Chase, Yankee first baseman, an unmerciful roasting, calling him "bonehead," "quitter," "boots," and like names. "GIANTS MUST WAKE UP AND HUSTLE"-CRANE

By Sam Crane.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., May 6.—If the Giants have the idea roaming around in their belfrys that they have the National League pennant cinched without playing for it they want to chase it.

They were never more footed in their young and tender lives.

Other champion clubs before them have fallen by reason of over confidence, and they are on the high road for a thud that will shake them from their head to their heels.

It is possible they are having their annual slump now, but with any other team excepting the Giants it might be said they are outclassed. Of the victories to their credit, a majority were won from the tail-end Boston Braves, a team that has been just as easy for every other team that has had the luck to go up against them.

Lack Fighting Spirit.

The Brooklyns have more than held their own with the Champs, and now the Phillies have broken even with them. The first month of the championship season is nearly over. Another week and it will be.

What have the much-touted Giants to show for it?

In the two Philadelphia games played here the boys have not shown the fighting spirit that they have so long been noted for.

I will not say they have been indifferent, but they have played a listless game and that verges closely on indifference with them for they are famous for the good old "pepper." They have lacked that snap, the fire, the ginger that heretofore have been their middle games.

They must pull themselves out of the dopey rut they are in and quickly too or they will be so far behind that it will develop into a question whether then can or not.

The Passing of Miss Tearful

Woman Is Ceasing to Weep—They Realize That No Man Wants to Be Salted Down in Brine as If He Were a Dried Herring.

By DOROTHY DIX.

ONE of the most interesting and significant phases of the evolution of woman is that she is ceasing to weep. I don't know how science explains it, but it is a self-evident fact that every observing person must have noted that as women developed backbone their tear ducts have dried up.

Time was, and not so long ago, when the very name of the feminine sex was synonymous with crying. It was woman's hereditary destiny to weep, just as it was man's to work, and she did what was expected of her by sitting down and howling whenever she came up against any of the hard propositions of life.

The modern woman has changed all of that. You hardly ever see a woman weep now. There are—God help us—just as many things to wring a woman's heart to-day, and just as many causes for tears as there ever were, but if she weeps, she weeps in private. It is almost as unusual and startling now to see a woman give way publicly to emotion as it is to see a man do so, and I can think of no other one thing that so emphatically marks the progress of my sex.

It measures all the distance between hysteria and reason. It marks the immeasurable difference between the spoilt child crying impotently for forbidden sweets, and the strong adult who takes what life gives with unfaltering bravery and cheerfulness.

It seems likely that women always overvalued the effectiveness of tears, anyway. Tears were supposed to always be an unanswerable argument so far as men were concerned. Unfortunately few women can weep effectively. In poetry a pearly drop that makes a blue eye look like a violet drowned in dew, gathers slowly and rolls gently down the alabaster cheek, and the man who goes down before it. In everyday life the woman who weeps gets red-eyed, her nose swells and she looks purple and apoplectic, and the man gets up, and slams the door behind, and goes downtown until the water spout is over. In these prosaic and commonsense days weeping has played out as a fascination, and tears are a failure. No man wants to be salted down in brine as if he were a dried herring.

They Wept Too Much.

The trouble with women's tears in the past has been that they wept too much, and in the wrong way. A tear as a tear is as effective as any other drop of salt water, yet people make the mistake of reverencing it as if weeping over a thing was going to perform some kind of a miracle.

You might weep over a starving family until you shed an ocean of tears, yet it wouldn't keep them from perishing of hunger. It is only when you begin to sob with your pocketbook that you do any good. It isn't the people who come to weep with us when we are unfortunate and poor and downcast who help us. It is those who have learned to sympathize with their bank book and personal interest and assistance.

Nothing else on earth is as plentiful and cheap and useless as tears, but until they are backed up with good deeds and money nobody has a right to attempt to sustain a reputation for charity on them. Plenty of people do. I have seen women sit up in a fashionable church and sniffle into a point lace handkerchief all through a charity sermon and then drop a plugged nickel into the contribution plate.

Then there's poverty. If all the tears women have shed over being poor had been brought to account it would make a water power that would turn the wheels of the machinery of the world. Tears toll back no vanished dollars. Nobody ever heard of a woman lamenting herself into a fortune, yet they go malding themselves perfect Niobes over their spilt milk.

I had a friend once who lost her money and who thereafter did nothing but weep. "What shall I do?" she demanded. "I shall starve." "If you would put in as much time and energy mopping a floor as you do in mopping your eyes, you could make a fortune as a charwoman." I answered, brutally. She never forgave me. People never do when you tell them the truth, but it is a fact nevertheless, that the only tears that can conjure back prosperity are the tears we weep with our hands at some good, honest labor.

Sometimes I amuse myself by speculating on what an improvement it would be if mothers wept less over their wayward children and spanked more.

Shameful Tears.

Sentimentalists have embalmed a mother's tears in song and story, and made them sacred, but I tell you the tears a mother sheds over an illraised son or daughter are shameful. There should be no cause for them, and there would be no cause for them, once in a million times, if she had done her duty. Weep with strict authority, mothers, sob with a wise up-bringing while your children are little, and when they are grown you will not have to shed salt and bitter tears over sons and daughters who have brought disgrace upon you.

It has also appeared to me that women have wasted quite an unnecessary amount of tears on their husbands. For a thousand generations wives have clung to the theory that a man could be wept into all the virtues of beatitude. When a woman had a drunken husband she opened the door for him in the early hours of the morning, and bedewed him with her tears. When she had a brutal one, she wept when he mistreated her, but she forgave him and let him go on doing it. Men don't weep any over women. They make their wives behave themselves, or else they haul them up before the divorce court, and that's why the percentage of good conduct is so largely in favor of the fair sex, and women might well copy their example.

Any way you look at it, it is a hopeful sign women have abandoned doing the baby act. It was always weak and useless. We owe it to the world to give it smiles and sunshine, not showers, and we best do our part in it when we meet the misfortunes of life with that brave attitude that nothing can daunt.

:: Electing a New Pope ::

ONE OF THE WORLD'S MOST MOMENTOUS CEREMONIES

THE greatest secrecy, as well as the utmost solemnity, is observed when the Cardinals of the Church of Rome are called upon to elect one of their number as Pope.

Immediately after the Pope is buried there is a gathering together of the Cardinals, or conclave, as it is called. Incidentally it might be mentioned that the word "Conclave" is derived from the Latin cum clave, and literally means an apartment which can be closed with one key.

Once gathered together, the Cardinals, like the jury in a murder case, are not permitted to leave the Vatican until they have selected from among themselves a successor to the Papal chair. The ceremony of election observed to-day is the same as that inaugurated by Gregory X, six hundred years ago.

Communication Impossible.

The Cardinals assemble in what is known as the Sistine Chapel. All the entrances are walled up with the exception of one great door known as the "Sala Regia." The greatest precautions are observed that no persons except the Cardinals remain in the building during the conclave, and a very careful search is made, not only by officials of the Vatican, but also by the Swiss guards, who maintain a vigil over the only door leading to the building. Even the food is carefully examined to make sure that no communication enters the Vatican.

The actual election ceremony is quite simple. Each Cardinal writes in a dissolved hand on a ballot-paper the name of his particular selection for the high office, which he then deposits in a chalice or urn placed upon a special altar. Before doing so, however, he turns to his colleagues and solemnly swears he has voted according to his firm belief, without fear or favor, and in the true interests of the Church of Rome only.

First and Second Ballots.

There are three official scrutators, who, when all the Cardinals have voted, and after a short prayer, take all the ballot-papers from the chalice and read aloud to the conclave the names recorded. The number of votes required to Immediately the two-thirds majority has been recorded for any candidate a bell is rung by the junior Cardinal Deacon. In response the secretary of the Sacred College enters with the master of ceremonies, after which the Cardinal Dean approaches the Pope that is to be and inquires whether he accepts the papacy. Receiving an answer in the affirmative, he next inquires what name the new pontiff intends to be known by.

It should be mentioned that the name usually selected is that of the Pope by whom the Pope-elect was created a Cardinal, and as soon as this is announced the senior Cardinal Deacon goes outside and thus addresses the waiting crowd: "I announce to you a great joy. We have as Pope the Most Eminent and Most Reverend ————, Cardinal of the Holy Roman Church, who has taken the name of ————."

Meanwhile the new dignitary has been conducted to the rear of the high altar, where he is speedily arrayed in the vestments of the pontificate. He then takes his place in the chair of state in front of the high altar, and is ready to receive the greetings of the Sacred College. Each of the Cardinals kisses him on the foot, the hand and the mouth, and that precious symbol, the ring of the Fisherman, is placed on his finger by the Cardinal Camerlingo.

A Powerful Story of Adventure, Intrigue and Love

Within the Law

By MARVIN DANA, from the Play of BERNARD VEILLER

SYNOPSIS.

Mary Turner, after the death of her father and mother, is forced to make her own way in life. She secures a position at the Emporium, a department store owned by Edward Gilder, and, after five years of bare existence, valueble silks are stolen from the store, traced to Mary's department, and some of the goods found in her locker. Although innocent, the girl is arrested and sentenced to three years in prison.

After her conviction she tells George Damarest, chief of Gilder's legal staff, that she can show the merchant how to stop thievery in his store if garnted a ten-minute interview. The interview is granted, and, handcuffed to a plain-clothes man, she enters Gilder's private office. He enters immediately afterward.

Without mincing of words, Mary tells him that he can stop stealing by paying his employees a living wage.

Now go on with the story

TODAY'S INSTALLMENT.

Nevertheless indomitable in her purpose, she maintained the struggle. A third time she obtained work, and there, after a little, she told her employer, a candy manufacturer in a small way, the truth as to her having been in prison. The man had a kindly heart, and, in addition, he ran little risk in the matter, so he allowed her to remain. When, presently, the police called his attention to the girl's criminal record, he paid no heed to their advice against retaining her services. But such action on his part offended the greatness of the law's dignity. The police brought pressure to bear on the man. They even called in the assistance of Edward Gilder himself, who obligingly wrote a very severe letter to the girl's employer. In the end, such tactics alarmed the man. For the sake of his own interests, though unwillingly enough, he dismissed Mary from his service.

With All Her Strength.

It was then that despair did come upon the girl. She had tried with all the strength of her to live straight. Yet, despite her innocence, the world would not let her live according to her own conscience. It demanded that she be the criminal it had branded her—if she were to live at all. So, it was despair! For she would not turn to evil, and without such turning she could not live. She still walked the streets falteringly, seeking some place; but her heart was gone from the quest. Now, she was sunken in an apathy that saved her from the worst pangs of misery. She had suffered so much, so poignantly, that at last her emotions had grown sluggish. She did not mind much even when her tiny hoard of money was quite gone, and she roamed the city starving. * * * Came an hour when she thought of the river, and was glad!

Mary remembered, with a wan smile, how, long ago, she had thought with amazed horror of suicide unable to imagine any trouble sufficient to drive one to death as the only relief. Now, however, the thing was simple to her. Since there was nothing else, she must turn to that—to death. indeed, it was so very simple, so final, and so easy, after the agonies she had endured, that she marveled over her own folly in not having sought such escape before.* * * Even with the first wild fancy, she had unconsciously bent her steps westward toward the North River. Now, she quickened her pace, anxious for the plunge that should set the term to sorrow. In her numbed brain was no flicker of thought as to whatever might come to her afterward. Her sole guide was that compelling passion of desire to be done with this unbearable present. Nothing else mattered—not in the least!

In That Final Second.

So, she came through the long stretch of ill-lighted streets, crossed some railroad tracks to a pier, over which she hurried to the far end, where it projected out to the fiercer currents of the Hudson. There, without giving herself a moment's pause for reflection of hesitation, she leaped out as far as her strength permitted into the coil of waters. But, in that final second, natural terror in the face of death overcame the lethargy of despair—a shriek burst from her lips.

But for that scream of fear, the story of Mary Turner had ended there and then. Only one person was anywhere near to catch the sound. And that single person heard. On the south side of the pier a man had just tied up a motorboat. He stood up in alarm at the cry, and was just in time to gain a glimpse of a white face under the dim moonlight as it swept down with the tide, two rods beyond him. On the instant, he threw off his coat and sprang far out after the drifting body. He came to it in a few furious strokes, and caught it. Then began the savage struggle to save her and himself. The currents tore at him wrathfully, but he fought against them with all the fierceness of his nature. He had strength a-plenty, but he needed all of it, and more, to win out of the river's hungry clutch. What saved the two of them was the violent temper of the man. Always, it had been the demon to set him aflame. To-night, there in the faint light, within the grip of the waters, he was moved to insensate fury against the element that menaced. His rage mounted, and gave him new power in the battle. Maniacal strength grew out of supreme wrath. Under the urge of it, he conquered—at last brought himself and his charge to the shore.

When, finally, the rescuer was able to do something more than gasp chokingly, he gave anxious attention to the woman whom he had brought out from the river. Yet, at the outset, he could not be sure that she still lived. She had shown no sign of life at any time since he had first seized her. That fact had been of incalculable advantage to him in his efforts to reach the shore with her. Now, however, it alarmed him slightly, though it hardly seemed possible that she could have drowned. So far as he could determine, she had not even sunk once beneath the surface. Nevertheless, she displayed no evidence of vitality, though he chafed her hands for a long time. The shore here was very lonely; it would take precious time to summon aid. It seemed, nothwithstanding, that this must be the only course. Then just as the man was about to leave her, the girl sighed, very faintly, with an infinite weariness, and opened her eyes. The man echoed the sigh, but his was of joy, since now he knew that his strife in the girl's behalf had not been in vain.

Afterward, the rescuer experienced no great difficulty in carrying out his work to a satisfactory conclusion. Mary revived to clear consciousness, which was at first inclined toward hysteria, but this phase yielded soon under the sympathetic ministrations of the man. His rather low voice was soothing to her tired soul, and his whole air was at once masterful and gently tender. Moreover, there was an inexpressible balm to her spirit in the very fact that some one was thus ministering to her. It was the first time for many dreadful years that any one had taken thought for her welfare. The effect of it was like a draught of rarest wine to warm her heart. So, she rested obediently as he busied himself with her complete restoration, and, when finally she was able to stand, and to walk with the support of his arm, she went forward slowly at his side without so much even as a question of whither.

And, curiously, the man himself shared the gladness that touched the mood of the girl, for he experienced a sudden pride in his accomplishment of the night. Somewhere in him were the seeds of self-sacrifice, the seeds of a generous devotion to others. But those seeds had been left undeveloped in a life that had been lived since early boyhood outside the pale of respectability. To-night Joe Garson had performed, perhaps, his first action with no thought of self at the back of it. He had risked his life to save that of a stranger. The fact astonished him, while it pleased him hugely. The sensation was at once novel and thrilling.

Glow of Satisfaction.

Since it was so agreeable, he meant to prolong the glow of self-satisfaction by continuing to care for this waif of the river. He must make his rescue complete. It did not occur to him to question his fitness for the work. His introspection did not reach to a point of suspecting that he, an habitual criminal, was necessarily of a sort to be most objectionable as the protector of a young girl. Indeed, had any one suggested the thought to him, he would have met it with a sneer, to the effect that a wretch thus tired of life could hardly object to any one who constituted himself her savior.

In this manner, Joe Garson, the notorious forger, led the dripping girl eastward through the squalid streets, until at last they came to an adequately lighted avenue, and there a taxicab was found. It carried them farther north, and to the east still, until at last it came to a halt before an apartment house that was rather imposing, set in a street of humbler dwellings. Here, Garson paid the fare, and then helped the girl to alight, and on into the hallway. Mary went with him quite unafraid, though now with a growing curiosity. Strange as it all was, she felt that she could trust this man who had plucked her from death, who had worked over her with so much of tender kindliness. So, she waited patiently; only watched with intentness as he pressed the button of the flat number. She observed with interest the thick, wavy gray of his hair, which contradicted pleasantly the youthfulness of his clean-shaven, resolute face, and the spare, yet well-muscled form.

The clicking of the door-latch sounded soon, and the two entered and went slowly up three flights of stairs. On the landing beyond the third flight, the door of a real flat stood open, and in the doorway appeared the figure of a woman.

"Well, Joe, who's the skirt?" this person demanded, as the man and his charge halted before her. Then, abruptly, the round, baby-like face of the woman puckered in amazement. Her voice rose shrill. "My Gawd, if it ain't Mary Turner!"

At that, the newcomer's eyes opened swiftly to their widest, and she stared astounded in her turn.

"Aggie!" she cried.

CHAPTER VII.

IN the time that followed, Mary lived in the flat with Aggie Lynch occupied along with her brother, Jim, a pickpocket much esteemed among his fellow craftsmen. The period wrought transformations of a radical and bewildering sort in both the appearance and the character of tht girl. Joe Garson, the forger, had long been acquainted with Aggie and her brother, though he considered them far beneath him in the social scale, since their criminal work was not of that high kind on which he prided himself. But, as he cast about for some woman to whom he might take the hapless girl he had rescued, his thoughts fell on Aggie, and forthwith his determination was made since he knew that she was respectable, viewed according to his own peculiar lights. He was relieved rather than otherwise to learn that there was already an acquaintance between the two women, and the fact that his charge had served time in prison did not influence him one jot against her. On the contrary, it increased in some measure his respect for her as one of his own kind. By the time he had learned as well of her innocence he had grown so interested that even her folly, as he was inclined to deem it, did not cause any wavering in his regard.

Now, at last, Mary Turner let herself adrift. It seemed to her that she had abandoned herself to fate in that hour when she threw herself into the river. Afterward, without any volition on her part, she had been restored to life, and set within an environment new and strange to her, in which soon, to her surprise, she discovered a vivid pleasure. So, she fought no more, but left destiny to work its will unhampered by her futile strivings. For the first time in her life, thanks to the hospitality of Aggie Lynch, secretly reinforced from the funds of Joe Garson, Mary found herself living in luxurious idleness, while her every wish could be gratified by he merest mention of it. She was fed on the daintiest of fare, for Aggie was a sybarite in all sensuous pleasures that were apart from sex. She was clothed with the most delicate richness for the first time as to those more mysterious garments which women love, and she soon had a variety of frocks as charming as her graceful form demanded. In addition, there were as many of books and magazines as she could wish. Her mind, long starved like her body, seized avidly on the nourishment thus afforded. In this interest, Aggie had no share—was perhaps a little envious over Mary's absorption in printed pages. But for her consolation were the matters of food and dress, and of countless junketings. In such directions, Aggie was the leader, an eager, joyous one always. She took a vast pride in her guest, with the unmistakable air of elegance, and she dared to dream of great triumphs to come, though as yet she carefully avoided any suggestion to Mary of wrongdoing.

The Girl Alone in New York

By LILLIAN LAUFFERTY.

DARLING KITTY:

Since I have been over here in the role of needle in the big New York haystack, I have had blue days and rose-colored days and just gray days; but to-day is all a white glare, and I think the lights are pretty strong for my eyes, sis. Not the "Bright Lights," but the glow and gleam of excitement and having adventures follow themselves up as I didn't think they ever could in really truly life.

Your kind attention, sisterkin, and I will tell my little tale from its beginning. Three days ago I lost my job—but don't picture me starving on the streets of New York, for I found a new one this morning! Hard times—and cutting down the staff." That is why I went.

After dealing that blow to my pride and my literary aspirations, fate turned around and began to treat me like the perfect gentleman he can sometimes be!

A New Job.

I answered thirty advertisements yesterday—but I did not seem to answer any one's needs. When I got down to No. 4 on my list to-day I had arrived at the offices of Clark, Clarke & Clark, attorneys-at-law. Just when I began to open the door from the outside some one was turning the handle from the inner realms. . . . . open flies the door . . . . collision . . . Madge's hat takes a little list to port, and Madge yearns for a port of her own.

A voice speaks: "I BEG your pardon. Have I upset you completely? Well, I declare—I do seem to run into you! And on your way to my office this time. Now what can I do for you?"

I should have fled the spot I suppose. Instead I said, "Your office?" And I wanted to add—"Who are YOU?"

"Why yes," I am Clarke—the one with the 'E.' Now what can I do for you?"

"Give me a position; I have lost mine." Probably I should not have said it—but I did not want to come home defeated at the end of four weeks! I wanted work and a chance to "show" New York—well, I guess I have both.

I am to get twenty-five dollars a week in return for my services as "Private Secretary" and Stenographer to the firm, which consists of Clarke Senior, forty-five or fifty, as New York ages go—so he may be sixty or a grandfather at that)! Mr. James T. Clarke, of whom "more anon," and Clarke Junior, who looks twenty-two or three, and thinks life is to be devoted to getting a cane with just the crook to fit his arm to a nicety. He is called Mr. Tommy, and looks it!

And now for the "Anon" and more of Mr. Clarke. He is the man who jumped into me so violently that day as I was coming out of Grand Central, and then invited me to tea to give me a chance to recover my equilibrium—thereby quite upsetting it. I will never do for the wife of a President! For Mr. Clarke has a perfectly unforgettable voice, and all I could do about remembering it was feel that it belonged to someone I had in all probability met and forgotten—and it was not until he was my employer, duly signed and sealed, that I realized the full force of that first impact.

Asked to Tea.

But he was considerate and recommended me to the attention of his partners in the most impersonal, hardly-knew-you-were-a-girl sort of a way. And yet the girl alone has as her "Boss" a man who thought he might venture to ask a little stranger—that stranger being me—to tea!

Now, Little Miss Safe-at-Home, think it over—I need work if I am to be a self-supporting person in New York, the while I wait for my literary ability to develop so it can be seen by people who are more interested in subscription pulling than in the mere feeling of personal pride in "Darling Madgie"—and if like Mr. James T. Clarke. Was I silly to go on the payroll of Clarke, Clarke and Clark?

And Kitty, I want to know that man—so that is a perfectly good reason why I shouldn't—since I am an employee in his office. Mr. Clarke is surely a gentleman—even if he is a bit overly friendly. I shall have to prove that I am a lady, I suppose, by being overly unfriendly.

Or, won't I? Hurry up and give your sage opinion to

Your loving

MADGE.

: Good Discipline ::

"IF you think any member of your family needs a spiritual stimulant during the present season," said the young girl with the camera slung over her shoulder, "buy him a camera and a tank and a scale and a few dozen different chemicals, and a book of directions and leave him to his fate. The seeds of humility, patience and long suffering will bear fruit a thousand fold.

"Don't laugh. It's true! If you know anything about the capital sins you know that pride is at the head of the list. To cure it, let some one take a good swift snapshot of you when you're not looking. It can reveal and correct more beauty defects than 52 visits to the shop where they make you beautiful while you wait. When that same snapshot is three or four years old and you gaze upon the hat that was none too becoming in its best days, you begin to realize that the lily of the field had some advantages over Solomon.

"As for patience, amateur photography is more instructive than Bruce's spider and more effective than Job's soliloquies. When you have measured out 16 ounces of hypo in a half-ounce scale—which means that you have to balance it 32 times, to the rhythmic chant of 'Twenty grains one scruple, three scruples one dram, eight drams one ounce'—and then forget whether the last measure was the twenty-first or twenty-second half ounce, and you have to spill it all out and begin all over again—if you can do it with cheerful heart your spiritual condition is encouraging.

Vacation Time.

"When you have come home from a vacation with several rolls of films and begin developing the best and most cherished roll, and it comes out of the tank distinct and clear and you drop it into a bowl of innocent looking hot water which should have been cold—a bowl which a member of your family had placed carelessly at your side—and you see your jolly groups of bathers and canoers run into a shapeless mass of gelatin and you hold in your hand a blank film roll, then if you can turn to the offender and say with serenity: 'It's all right, I really don't mind——,' then you have merited a triple halo.

"Do you wish to understand your neighbor? Try a group picture. In the first place, when it comes to posing a group, have you ever observed the serene indifference with which each member regards the position and advantages of every other member? The most humble and retiring individual quietly and persistently slides into an advantageous position, regardless of the same desire on the part of everyone else.

"And when that same group has been finished and you talk about light and shade, tone and contrast—you were not in it, of course—and you try to get anyone else to observe these points and you say, 'Don't you think the shadows are good?' your friend will invariably reply, 'I didn't know I had a double chin!' or 'I certainly can't wear a soft collar!'

"Then you suddenly realize that your modest, self-effacing friend has a normal ego.

"For social popularity the snapshot is an open sesame. If with your bread and butter' letter you can inclose a few snapshots of the infant idol of the family, of your host's new chicken coop, or your hostess' new porch set, the invitation to come again will be sincere and urgent.

"When it comes to generosity the gentle art of snapshotting has no equal. Suppose in a rash moment you have promised each of eight friends a full set of twelve prints. After a preliminary struggle with drams and scruples you start in to print. Your family admonishes, urges and finally commands you to be sensible and go to bed, but you feel that you must persist in your altruistic endeavors. It is midnight before you set your 96 prints to wash in a bowl of running water in the kitchen sink.

"When you return at the end of an hour you find that several of the prints, with the perversity of inanimate things, have slipped over the drain and a miriature Niagara is splashing down upon the floor, on which the water is already three inches deep. You try a mop, which is no more effective than a handkerchief in the Gulf of Mexico.

"The heat has been off two hours and it's 10 degrees below zero, and the kitchen has a west exposure, but you open the door and sweep strenuously and exhaustively. And you hear the splash of the water on the porch, on the landing below, then on the walk in the yard, and you think of the profile of drainage of the great lakes. And you tread lightly and softly, partly because you are reluctant to dislodge the water-soaked ceiling in the flat below and partly because you are afraid of waking your family and bringing down on your unoffending head a chorus of 'I told you so's.'

"After three hours of hard labor you close the door just before the milkman tears up the back stairs. And then, when you come to the breakfast table the next morning, heavy lidded and sore of spirit, but discreetly silent, another of your household comes in and says in a convincing and appealing tone: 'I'm dead tired! I didn't sleep a wink last night!'

"Then, if you can restrain your words of contradiction and offer sympathy in soft and gentle tones, with an invisible smile for the audible slumbers to the rhythm of which you swished a broom half the night—well, amateur photography has done more for you than Gideon Bibles and long weeks of fasting and sacrifice!"

WOMAN SICK FOURTEEN YEARS

Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Elkhart, Ind.:—"I suffered for fourteen years from organic inflammation, female weakness, pain and irregularities. The pains in my sides were increased by walking or standing on my feet and I had such awful bearing down feelings, was depressed in spirits and became thin and pale with dull, heavy eyes. I had six doctors from whom I received only temporary relief. I decided to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a fair trial and also the Sanative Wash. I have now used the remedies for four months and cannot express my thanks for what they have done for me.

"If these lines will be of any benefit you have my permission to publish them."—Mrs. Sadie Williams, 455 James Street, Elkhart, Indiana.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no narcotic or harmful drugs, and to-day holds the record of being the most successful remedy for female ills we know of, and thousands of voluntary testimonials on file in the Pinkham laboratory at Lynn, Mass., seem to prove this fact.

:: Putting Yourself in Your Wife's Place ::

I HEARD a man talking about his wife the other day—he began with his wife—and he ended with all the women in the world.

"What is the matter with them?" he said bitterly. "Are they all going crazy, or what? If am a good husband, if I do have to say it myself to get any one to believe it; I work like a bond slave for my wife and family; I devote most of my waking hours and some of my sleeping ones to thinking of new ways to make more money and more money and more money for her and the little fellows.

"My wife has a new hat whenever she wants one, and I never complain about the bill—even if it does make me feel blue to see it sometimes—a hat and a feather, $35. Why, it's enough to take a man's breath. And she goes away in the summer and takes the children and has a fine time for three months, and she has a good home, and—yet is she happy?

"She is not.

"She is miserable, perfectly miserable, and she makes me miserable, too. 'Where have I been?' 'Who gave me that play bill?' 'Where did I hear that song I'm whistling?' 'Who was the woman who stared at me so in the theater the other night?' 'Why don't I love her any more?'

"And she's not the only one. My brother's wife is the same—worse, if anything. My brother can't spend an evening out to save his life without his wife wanting to know exactly where he went and whom he saw, and all about it—and she doesn't believe him when he tells her the truth.

Nice little preachment, wasn't it? And the man meant it, too—every word of it. You could see that by the look of irritated, puzzled misery in his tired face.

What is the matter with us, anyhow, girls?

I wonder if any one knows?

For one thing, it's the mystery of the thing that puzzles us.

Did you ever think of that, Mr Man?

What if the person you loved best in the world, the person you left every one you ever cared for just to be with, went away every day to a mysterious place he called downtown and stayed all day, and came home speaking with the speech of aliens, looking ith the look of strangers, always thinking, thinking about something that you didn't know a thing about?

Wouldn't you wonder sometimes what it all was that made him so absent-minded? Wouldn't you wish he'd tell you something about it once in a while, just enough so you could visualize his day to some extent and have some sort of vague idea what it is that he does—down there in the barred city where you must never go?

It Wouldn't Bore Her.

You know every step your wife takes all day long—she wants to tell you all about it—and when you don't listen she thinks you are tired of her.

It wouldn't bore her to hear all about what you do, but you never help her out a bit. You see, she's in love with you; you're fond of her, but you are not in love with her. That isn't the way you acted when you were in love. Don't tell me! She may not know much, but no woman on earth is there who can't tell when a man really loves her and when he stops loving her, too—so you might as well stop going over that fiction once and for all.

She's in love and you aren't—that's all. Help you any to know that?

Well, maybe not, but it may help your judgment of her and your sympathy, too. Just think back a year or so and remember now you used to feel about her. That will help you to realize that she is having rather a bad time of it herself just now, too.

Morbid, unbalanced, irritating—of course it is—all of these things, but so is the life the woman who loves leads morbid, unbalanced and irritating from start to finish.

You'd go crazy in six months if you had to live it, shut in all day with a baby; no one to speak to but the grocer's boy and the postman; no big ambitions, no great hopes; just little things, little, little, from morning to night.

Don't scold your wife, don't be cross with her, get her mind off the little, silly suspicions and little stupid curiosities by telling her a few things she'd dearly love to know. Tell them to her without her asking, and see how surprised and delighted she'll be.

She'll take just as much interest in you and your affairs as Jones, and yet you talk and talk to Jones.

Think it over, Friend Husband. Put yourself in the place of the poor little puzzled thing who's been tied into a corset every morning of her life and had her poor little tootsies pinched, and her poor head made to ache by some fool kind of hair dressing ever since she can remember, just to get ready for you and for love, and then she finds out that love is just a part of life after all and not all of it, as she has been carefully taught to think, and she's all at sea. Put yourself in her odd, confused, mixed up place and see if you can't see what's the matter with her.

Maybe you can, and if you do you've won the battle before it is fought.

Try it and let's hear from you—we'd like to know.

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

"I CALLED on a girl a number of times," a young man writes, "and I found her very agreeable, and I admit I made love to her. I had no intention of being serious, and now find that she is desperately in love with me. As I do not want to marry her, what can I do?"

But that is the very thing you must do. A man so fascinating as yourself, who calls on a girl a few times, and lo, the mischief is done, must be safely corraled within the bonds of matrimony that this needless slaughter of female hearts may cease.

Safely married to a woman who realizes what a dangerous person you are to be at large among weak, fluttering female hearts, you will never again have opportunity for making few passes at a girl with a wave of your hand, and reduce her to a state of paralytic adoration in doing it. So long as your wife lives, no girl will again be desperately in love with you if she knows it.

So long as you remain single this trail of women's hearts strewn crushed and bleeding in the path you have trod will continue to grow. For the sake of the women helpless before your charms; for the sake of a nation which can not prosper with all its womankind dying of love, you must marry, and marry at once.

Many Sacrifices.

I admit that you will make many sacrifices. It will be a hardship to a man of your temperament to confine all your lovemaking to one woman, and many, many times you will be aghast at the sacrifice of limiting all your fascinations to the four walls of your own home, but it must be done and I hope you are sensible to the necessity. It is your misfortune to be fascinating, but no one will hold you to blame if you hold those powers within some restraint.

When holding to car strap; when engaged in your daily occupation, if it be that of interpreting the law or selling muslins; keep your mind on the task in hand and don't raise your eyes to the face of any woman. Remember always your fatal power of rendering the women desperately in love with you, and have mercy on my sex. If you are engaged in an occupation that throws you in contact with the silly creatures, quit it, and go to digging trenches where your living will depend on keeping those fascinating eyes on the ground.

Some Simple Rules.

Never leave the house in the evening or on a Sunday without your wife by your side, and when you feel that you can no longer exist without some display of your fascinating power, try them on her. Make love to her, though you may not mean it; make eyes at her, squeeze her hand, and endeavor by every art of which you are master to cause her to love you desperately.

Having renewed the flame of her love to such bounds, she will double her vigilance over you, and reduce to a minimum the dangerous influence you may exert over other women.

Perhaps you may argue that you intend to marry, but would rather wait till you have made love to a girl seriously. That, most irresistible of your sex, is something you will never do. To be serious in love is something beyond you. Marry the girl who thought you were serious, and in her hands entrust your future.

Do You Know That—

Women who obstruct the view of people by wearing large hats are to be prohibited by law from buying a new hat for three years in the State of Texas, if a bill just introduced in the Legislature there is passed. Senator H. W. Breisford found his view obstructed in church, and brought forward the bill at once. It seeks to make it unlawful for any woman to wear in church or any public gathering any hat or headdress having a crown of any ornament exceeding two inches in height, or a brim more than four inches wide. At the end of three years the offender will be permitted to buy only a certain uniform type of hat costing less than $2.

Most races have ailments peculiarly their own, and one of the very latest of workmen's complaints to be discovered is the "conductor's thumb." This affliction is generated by the continual use of the steel punch which is employed to mark the passenger's ticket. The pain, very slight at first, gradually increases and spreads to the palm of the hand, bringing in its train a species of cramp of the hand, and compelling those affected to handle their punches very gingerly.

Lala Karim Dut, a Hindu barber who died recently at Meerut, had for the last three years slept every night with two pet pythons coiled up beside him in his bed.

THE WORKINGMAN'S FOOD.

The man who toils hard all day needs strengthening food. A lot of meat is not essential to nourish and sustain the system.

A 10c package of Faust Spaghetti contains more nutrition than 4 lbs of beef. Faust Spaghetti is made from Durum Wheat, the cereal that overflows in gluten—the food-content that makes muscle, bone and flesh.

Faust Spaghetti costs one-tenth the price of meat—contains more nutrition—is easier digested and makes a savory, appetizing dish. Write for free recipe book. Sold in 5 and 10c packages—at all grocers.

Fashion by Night :: A Magnificent Evening Gown Modeled by Paris Artistes

Style, beauty and magnificence.

THIS is one of the handsomest models produced from the Paris shops this season.

It's foundation is "mole" charmeuse. The top of the bodice is a fichu of guipure veiled by an "amethyst" silk muslin, which falls back in two long points.

The long tunic is of gray silk muslin, richly embroidered in gold and silver and edged all around with a row of silver beads.

This tunic tightens the bust and the hips, crossing in front under a girdle of draped amethyst satin and a huge scarabaeus of silver.

The skirt, which is of mole charmeuse, is but slightly draped and is finished by a square train.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"NOT that alone," she answered, with a shudder. "I have said that I should under ordinary circumstances have thought he was merely training for the autumn sports—for, you see, he was in a running costume of white cotton stuff and his legs were bare from the knees down—but as he shot past me in the moonlight I caught sight of something like a huge splash of blood on his clothes, and coupling that with the rest I nearly went out of my senses. It wasn't until long afterward I recollected that the badge of the County Club is the Winged Foot of Mercury wrought in brilliant scarlet embroidery. To me, just then, that thing of red was blood—my uncle's blood—and I ran and ran and ran until I got back here to the house and flew up the covered passage and burst into the Round House. He was sitting there still—just as he had been sitting before. But he didn't call out to me this time; he didn't reprove me for disturbing him; didn't make one single movement, utter one single sound. And when I flew to him I knew why. He was dead—stone dead! The face and throat of him were torn and rent as if some furious animal had mauled him, and there were curious yellow stains upon his clothes. That's all Mr. Headland, that's all. I don't know what I did nor where I went from the moment I rushed shrieking from that room until I came to my senses and found myself in this one with dear, kind Mrs. Armroyd here, bending over me and doing all in her power to soothe and to comfort me."

"It Is Better."

"There, there, cherie, you shall not more distress yourself. It is of a hardness too great for the poor mind to bear," put in Mrs. Armroyd herself at this, bending over the sofa as she spoke and softly smoothing the girl's hair. "It is better she should be at peace for a little, is it not, monsieur?"

"Very much better, madame," replied Cleek, noting how softly her hand fell and how gracefully it moved over the soft hair and across the white forehead. "No doubt the major part of what still remains to be told, you in the goodness of your heart will supply——"

"Of a certainty, monsieur, of a certainty."

"——but, for the present," continued Cleek, finishing the interrupted sentence, "there still remain one or two questions which must be asked, and which only Miss Renfrew herself can answer. As those are of a private and purely personal nature, madame, would it be asking too much——?" He gave his shoulders an eloquent Frenchified shrug, looked up at her after the manner of her own countrymen and let the rest of the sentence go by default.

"Madame" looked at him and gave her little hands an airy and a graceful flirt.

"Of a certainty, monsieur," she said, with charming grace, "Cela m'est egal." And walked away with a step remarkably light and remarkably graceful for one of such weight and generous dimensions.

A Private Talk.

"Miss Renfrew," said Cleek, sinking his voice and looking her straight in the eyes, as soon as Mrs. Armroyd had left them, "Miss Renfrew, tell me something, please. Have you any suspicion regarding the identity or the purpose of the person who murdered your uncle?"

"Not in the slightest, Mr. Headland. Of course, in the beginning my thoughts flew at once to Sir Ralph Droger, but I now see how absurd it is to think that such as he—"

"I am not even hinting at Sir Ralph Droger," interposed Cleek. "Two other people in the world have a 'motive' quite as strong as any that might be assigned to him. You, of course, feel every confidence in the honor and integrity of Mr. Charles Drummond?"

Kept in His Desk.

"Mr. Headland!"

"Gently, gently, please! I merely wished to know if in your heart you had any secret doubt, and your flaring up like that has answered me. You see, one has to remember that the late Mr. Nosworth is said to have made a will in your favor. The statement is correct, is it not?"

"To the best of my belief—yes."

"Filed it with his solicitors has he?"

"That I can't say. I think not, however. He was always sufficient unto himself and had a rooted objection to trusting anything of value to the care of any man living. Even his most important documents—plans and formula of his various inventions; even the very lease of this property—have always been kept in the desk in the laboratory."

"Hum-m-m!" said Cleek—and pinched his chin hard. Then, after a moment, "One last question," he went on, suddenly. "What do you know, Miss Renfrew, of the recent movements of Mr. Harry Nosworth, the son who was kicked out?"

"Nothing, nothing—absolutely nothing!" she answered, with a look of something akin to horror. "I know what you are thinking of, but although he is as bad as man can be it is abominable to suppose that he would lift his hand against his own father."

To Be Continued To-morrow.

An Educated Eel

"YOU take it from me, sir," said the old showman, "that the higher education of animals is a mistake.

"I have trained all sorts of beasts from fleas to elephants. I've taught horses to dance on their hind legs, dogs to act music-hall sketches, elephants to play the barrel-organ and do all sorts of tricks; but not one of them showed such intelligence as my educated eel.

"I picked him out of the water one day, and was attracted by his cute brown orbs. He looked at me in a sort of friendly, knowin' way, as if to say: 'Let's be friends, guv'nor—real pals.'

"So I picked him up and put him in my pocket. Then a bright idea struck me. I would train him with the other animals and let him take part in my show.

Was a Winner.

"Talk of the intelligence of animals. That eel simply beat the bunch. He guessed what I wanted him to do before I'd thought it out myself. He had the true spirit of the artist, too, he 'ad. He performed because he loved to act.

"The first tricks I taught him he took to as mere child's play. In a few days he could put his tail into his mouth and roll round the room, pretending to be a hoop. He would smile when I said 'Smile' in the cutest way, and, what is more, he would often smile on his own without being told, as it tickled at the humors of this funny world.

"Then I taught him to wiggle himself into the shape of letters. Soon he could twist himself into every letter in the alphabet and spell words as easy as you please. This beats science,' thought I, when one day he actually spelt my name; so I formed the idea of inviting some of the greatest scientists in the country to witness the feats of my marvellous eel.

"As the day of the private view drew near I put him regularly through his tricks, and that marvellous animal seemed to guess exactly what was in store for him. He got nervous, excited, and vain, too. If he had been a peacock I can just imagine him spreading his tail. But he merely blinked his eyes in the cutest, knowin'est way.

He Broke Down.

"Then all of a sudden the excitement began to tell upon him, and he showed signs of a nervous breakdown. He took trembling fits, which nigh scared me to death. I dosed him with spirit, which seemed to do him good for a time, but he got weaker an' weaker until at last one morning I found him stretched out stiff and stark upon the floor.

"If ever a human being died of brain fever, that poor beast did. I never trained another eel again. He died about this time last year, and I would give anything to have him by me now, with his cute little smile and his 'We're-pals-guv'nor' look."

Little Bobbie's Pa

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

PA brought a book hoam with him last nite & he was showing it to me. It was called How a Husband & Wife shud act to Avoid Quarls. It was a big book, about a foot thick.

This book Bobbie, sed Pa, is a book that was wrote by a very wise guy. He was married three times & his first two wifes left him beefoar he reelized that he was hard to git along with, so wen he married the third time he made up his mind to study the fair sex & find out what wud humor them. This book is the result of yeers of pashunt watching & experiments on his part, Pa sed. I think that it ought to keep yure Ma & me from evver having a other unkind word. Here is sum of the rules, Bobbie, so wen you grow up & git a wife of yure own you will be abel to greet her right at all times & safv quarls.

Good Rules.

Rule 1—The husband shud never becum angry at the saim time that the wife is angry. One angry person in a fambly is enuff at a time.

Rule 2—The wife shud nevver stay angry after she has gone to sleep. She might have a nitemare.

Rule 3—When a husband is contradickted by a wife he shud smile sweetly & say, wen his wife gives him a chanst, "I dare say you are right." That is the greatest sentence that was evver invented for making matrimony possibel.

Now, Bobbie, sed Pa, there is a good point right thare. Let us go in the other room & I will ask you to notis how yure Ma acts wen I answer her that way. "I dare say you are right."

So we went in the living room & Ma was thare. She was kind out of sorta abôut sumthing, I guess, beekaus she looked at Pa & me kind of cross wen we caim in. Well, I suppose you want yure supper, Sed Ma. Yes, deerest, sed Pa. It is a wonder that you & our son dident fool around in the library until it was time for brekfust, sed Ma. The men nowadays, sed Ma, act for all the wurld as if wimmen was made to wait on them & nevver give anything else a thought.

I dare say you are rite, sed Pa.

Of course, I am rite, sed Ma. Now thare is Missus Norris. She jest left a few minutes before you got hoam. She toald me that her husband reefused to buy her another frock until next month and then went to his club and lost four dollars bowling ten pins. Think of it, sed Ma, unable to buy his little wife another frock when she only had three, and then going and losing four dollars bowling. That is the man of it for you.

How much was the frock? sed Pa.

Very Cheap.

Only sixty dollars, Ma sed. Thay was eighty dollars last, but you know wimmen's clothes has went down a whole lot in price this season.

Maybe he cud afford to spend four dollars bowling & cuddent spend sixty dollars for a other frock, sed Pa.

Thare you go, sed Ma, deefending him. Of course, man can do no wrong. The men want to be the lords of creashum.

I dare say you are rite, sed Pa. How about dinner?

It is on the table waiting for you, sed Ma. Oh, dear, it is the saim old story, Ma sed. Git the dinner & then put away the dishes. A man's work is from sun to sun, a woman's work is nevver done.

Pa sed "I dare say you are rite" wen he had a peece of stalk in his mouth & he nearly choaked.

Thar you go laffing at me, sed Ma, you are a brute.

Poor Pa, I guess he will have to read sum moar rules in his new book.

:: Making Sure ::

THEY were on parade when the Irish drill-sergeant stopped dead in front of the newest recruit and eyed him steadily from top to toe before he burst out:

"Arrah! an' here's a nice state of affairs. How dare ye come here and stand before a dacent man loike meself covered in dust from head to foot? Answer me when I spake to ye!"

With knocking knees the now thoroughly wretched recruit endeavored to squeeze in a few well-chosen words of explanation, but his attempts were rudely overborne by a further torrent of words from the sergeant, who fairly bellowed:

"Ye would answer me, would ye? Spake at your peril! Now, tell me, ye spalpeen, what have ye been doin' to yer nice new uniform?"

Again the bewiledered recruit opened a capacious mouth as a preliminary to speech, but the violent voice of his superior broke in once again:

"Take care!" he shouted. "Oi can hear ye. If ye answer me when I spakes to ye, I'll have ye arrested for insolence. An' if ye don't answer when I spakes to ye, I'll send ye to the guard room for disobedience. So moind, I'll have ye both ways."

Distinctly Suspicious.

It was when on maneuvers, and a soldier was being tried for the shooting of a chicken on prohibited ground.

"Look here, my man," said the commanding officer to the farmer who brought the accusation, "are you quite certain this is the man who shot your bird? Will you swear to him?"

"No, I won't do that," replied the canny yokel, "but I will say he's the man I suspect o' doing it."

"That's not enough to convict a man!" retorted the C. O., considerably nettled. "What raised your suspicions?"

"Well, sir," replied the sturdy farmer, as he slowly mopped his forehead with his bandanna, "it was this way: I see 'im on my property with a gun; then I heered the gun go off, then I see 'im putting the chicken into his knapsack; and it didn't seem nohow to think the bird committed suicide."

Some Use After All.

Diminutive Onlooker (after golfer makes his sixth fruitless stroke)—If yer digs up any wriggly worms can I 'ave 'em, guv'nor, 'cos I'm goin' a-fishin'?

"Woman's Work Is Never Done"

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

"MAN'S work lasts from sun to sun,
But woman's work is never done."

And one reason why it is never done is that she is not allowed to do it.

Men can understand that other men have necessary work to perform; it is, however, hard for women of leisure to understand how busy a busy woman may be. And until they do understand this it will not be easy for any woman to labor as steadily and satisfactorily as does a man.

A man who is an author said to me, "From the time that I go into my study after breakfast in the morning, until I am ready to come out at luncheon, I am not disturbed."

I gasped with envy and also with a little incredulity, for I know that his study is in his apartment and that he has a wife and children.

"I mean it," he said. "If I would do good work, I must be left alone."

"But your telephone?" I queried. That is right on your desk."

Should Be Unmolested.

He smiled in a superior kind of way. "Ah, yes, but that is only a switch from the instrument in the hall, and my wife or the maid answers the main phone. If I am asked for the reply is that I am 'engaged and cannot be disturbed.'"

I do insist that when the man has gone to business, and the children to school and college, when the orders have been given to the maids, the butcher, grocer, etc., that even a woman might have three or four hours each day in which she need not be disturbed—or, at least, that she might have her mornings unmolested.

"But she should explain to her friends," says someone. "They would understand and not call on her or telephone to her in the morning."

Her friends! Does anyone fancy it is one's close friends that disturb one? No, indeed!

Who is it then who interrupts the woman and ignores the fact that she is "engaged?"

First of all, it is next to impossible to make a maid understand that when a woman would write a story, paint a picture or give a music lesson she has in view any object except that of amusing herself for a little while when she has nothing else on hand. Therefore, in spite of interdicts, she often interrupts any one of these occupations to deliver some message that could wait, without injury, for a half day. But if she is so well trained that she does not do this, she seldom has strength of mind to say to those who would reach her mistress by telephone or in person that the busy woman cannot be disturbed.

What Is Another Way?

I remember that when I flattered myself that I had at last drilled one maid into doing this, I discovered that her answer for weeks had been the same, namely, that I was gone away and that nobody knew when I would come back. When I learned of this and protested to her, explaining that her statement was an untruth, she said—with a knowledge of human nature at which I could not sufficiently wonder—"Indade, ma'am, if I said you was engaged and couldn't see 'em, they'd not be satisfied. But if I say you're away, sure what is there for them to do but lave you alone?"

No, it is not one's own friends who will not accept the "engaged" statement, for they love one enough to let her alone during her golden morning hours. But there are a plenty of other people who do not love one. Among them are the casual acquaintance, who wants to ask one to subscribe to a certain philantropic movement; the woman who telephones to ask about a maid who was once in one's employ and who queriet "must engage immediately if at all," and who talks for at least ten minutes about her past experiences with "help;" the book agent—for whom one cannot help being sorry—the former schoolmate who has not seen one for years, but who, in passing through the city, has "looked one up," and insists to the hesitating maid that she knows her mistress will be displeased if this "friend of her girlhood" is turned from the door; these are among the hundred-and-one people who would be wounded by that "engaged." Yet we are told that it is not honest to send word that one is "not at home."

Is there not some way in which the members of society who do not have to be let alone to accomplish their work can be made to understand that even a woman may need time and quiet in which to do the task laid to her hand?

And yet, what woman calling on an acquaintance, does not feel rebuffed by the message that "Mrs. Blank is engaged, and begs to be excused?"

Underground Trespassers : Quaint Callers That Are Found In the Depths of Coal Mines

AFTER a colliery explosion at Llanbradach, Wales, one of the rescue parties made a surprising discovery. Perched on a tub in the mine was a robin! Now, most colliers regard the presence of birds, particularly those with white plumage, about pits as a "token," and the "fire" which had occurred was therefore attributed to the intrusion of the perky little stranger!

Rats are not uncommon about a pithead, and some of them reach the depths beneath, occasionally with fatal haste.

One, during the process of falling down a shaft, acquired such momentum by the time it reached the bottom that when it struck a collier there was a loud report as of an explosion, and the man was knocked to the ground with great force.

In warm mines, too, mice are numerous. A few reach a new pit in the trusses of hay and bags of corn that are taken down it for the ponies, and these, notwithstanding the strangeness of their environment, multiply so rapidly that cats have to be installed in the stables.

It might be supposed that "mousers," at any rate, would not take at all kindly to the subterranean world; but they soon become used to their surroundings.

In one mine a fine tabby used to knock off with the men on Saturday, but, unlike them, she did not start again on Monday morning. She was always missing till Wednesday or Thursday, when she returned from the old and disused portions of the mine.

Bad For Mice.

A strike, however, plays far greater havoc with the mouse population of a pit than any number of cats, because the food of the ponies and of the men and boys is no longer available for the unfortunate little creatures.

When, by way of example, the Durham colliers joined in the general strike last year many of the pits in that county were overrun with mice; and for some time after work was resumed not one was seen.

Dogs also are among the animal trespassers in mines. By some means a terrier entered a disused pit in Swaledale, and for eight days it roamed about the workings, apparently without anything to eat.

More remarkable was a dog's intrusion into a South Wales pit which has the reputation of being haunted.

The animal in question was seen prowling about the workings, and, as it seemed to vanish when an attempt was made to catch it, a number of colliers at once "downed tools" and went home.

Some of them then consulted a local wise woman, telling her of the "vision" they had seen earlier in the day, whereupon she predicted a disaster. As a result more than 200 men refused to go down the following morning, and, though the manager did his utmost to induce them to resume work, they obstinately determined to remain idle.

And, what is more, it was not until three days later that all the men were at work again.

There were two curious sequels to this incident. One, which took place about a week afterward, was the prosecution and conviction of the fortune teller for causing the miners to absent themselves from work.

A Gruesome Discovery.

The other sequeal happened much more recently, and was the discovery of the skeleton of a dog—doubtless that which had been seen by some of the miners—in the workings.

The most singular trespassers in coal mines, perhaps, are workers from neighboring pits. A man or boy loses his way and, when his lamp goes out, wanders in pitchy darkness through the disused workings, ever listening for the sound of a pick, till he either sinks exhausted or gets in touch with humanity again.

A bloodhound was once taken down a pit to find a man who had disappeared, and in several cases lost miners have ultimately worked back to their starting point. Some years ago, for instance, a boy was lost in a Scotch colliery from Monday morning to Wednesday morning, notwithstanding he was searched for systematically the whole time, and in the end, when almost exhausted, he came upon his father and uncle at the place where he had left them.

Sometimes, however, miners become trespassers—only in a technical sense—through "striking" a road communicating with another pit and following it up.

Inconsiderate Men

FIRST the telephone rang. Then the buzzer buzzed. Then a voice from the inner office called sharply for the little stenographer.

"You can all wait until I'm good and ready," announced the little stenographer, decidedly, to the world in general.

After this declaration of independence she hastily answered the phone, then grabbed book and pencil and hurried into the inner office, pausing an instant on the way to let the owner of the impatient voice know that she was engaged.

"I tell you," she remarked to the bookkeeper when she returned, "I get so exasperated sometimes that I almost explode! These men make me awfully tired! Here I've been working all the years that they've been having a good time getting educated. Then they come into the office, and, after selecting the lightest window and the most comfortable chair, they think they're busy!

"Here I am—with my desk piled high with real work! And what do you suppose that young Mr. Babcock wanted? He calmly asked me to take a few letters—personal thank you letters—to friends of his who entertained him on his trip! And in each one he excused himself for using a stenographer on the ground that he was so pressed for time! Pressed for time! Why, he doesn't know how to fill in the hours.

He Was Lazy.

"Do you know what Mr. Brown was so urgent about? He's been calling out here for ten minutes, while I was engaged, and I thought it couldn't be anything less than drawing up a contract! But there he sat, looking over his last month's personal account, and he was too lazy to think for himself! He wanted me to stand there beside him and go through the things with him—because, as he said, two heads are better than one! What he might have said, if he'd been strictly truthful, is that my head is better than his!

"This morning Mr. Gray came strolling in an hour after things had begun, and he sat down and read a newspaper and smoked a cigar before he went through his mail. Then he called me in to take his letters, and, though I purposely let him know how much work I had piled up, he gave me half a dozen phone numbers to call for him! And he sat there looking out of the window while I got his numbers on the telephone! Oh, it makes me so angry I'd like to express myself from a public platform on the wrongs of busy stenographers!"

The bookkeeper listened sympathetically. "I must own," he said, "that they're an inconsiderate bunch!"

"Inconsiderate!" cried the little stenographer. "They do it on purpose. They've got it into their thick heads that they're business men, and they can't be bothered with detail and the little things. They're such big men! Their time is awfully valuable and mustn't be wasted!

"Do you know what I'm going to do some time? I'm going to accept a proposal of marriage. That'll make me free to do as I please. Then I'm coming down to the office the same as usual. When the buzzer buzzes I'll go in, and I'll take the business letters, but when a personal letter comes I'll simply say, 'I'm busy today.' Then, when they ask me to get some phone numbers, I'll say, 'I see you aren't at all busy; would you mind getting those numbers yourself? I've a great deal of work to do!' Then I'll walk out to my desk!

"When Mr. Brown calls me away in the midst of an important letter to stand at his side while he leans back in his swivel chair, so that I may help him add up figures and straighten out accounts, I'll say, 'Mr. Brown, I'm very busy to-day, and if you've nothing of importance to say you'll have to excuse me!'

"Oh, but won't they be surprised! The only trouble is that I've been a slave for so long that I'm afraid I won't have the courage to break up traditions and precedents."

The Other Side.

"Then," said the bookkeeper, musingly, "you'll put on your hat and go home, and the man who proposed to you, so you could be free from this daily grind, will say: 'I want dinner early to-night,' and you'll hurry to get it. Between times you'll be mending and darning and dusting to make him comfortable; and he'll call you, and you'll come running to hear what he's got to say. And you'll go on training him to expect that sort of service, so when he goes to his office he'll be just like the rest of the men!"

The little stenographer listened fascinated. "Why, that's so!" she exclaimed. She paused and thought it over. "But I guess I'll try it anyway," she announced, "because I'll dare to say, 'I won't for he can't fire me!'"

The Bitter Bit.

The workhouse inmates were just about to sit down, when two men came along one of the corridors carrying a steaming caldron between them.

"Aha!" cried the official, who had been lying in wait for them. "Put that kettle down and fetch me a spoon!"

One of the men brought a spoon and at the same time tried to say something, but was peremptorily told to hold his tongue.

"D'yer call that soup?" at length spluttered the official, as he swallowed a heaped-up spoonful of the steaming mess. "It's more like dirty water."

"But that's just wot it is, sir," answered the second man, timidly. "We have been scrubbin' down the tables!"

COTTON GOES UP AS SHORTS COVER

Cooler Weather and Firm Cables Cause Scare Among Shorts. Offerings Are Light.

NEW YORK, May 6.—Although the cotton market received good support at the opening to-day, first prices showed irregularity, being 2 points up to 4 points off from last night's close. Cables were unsatisfactory, but short sellers were cautious, fearing developments in the old crop months. Weather conditions were favorable and sentiment was against the market, but shorts became general buyers shortly after the call, when indications pointed to cooler weather. At the end of half an hour the list was back to last night's level and the tone was satisfactory.

It is estimated that shorts covered fully 60,000 bales yesterday, attributed mainly to Wall Street and the Waldorf clique.

The principal points of to-day's weather map are reliable indications for more general rains in the eastern half of the belt during the next thirty-six hours; slightly cooler, but no cold weather.

Weather reports and acreage estimates, also the technical conditions, are forming speculative opinion. Weather conditions have been excellent as a whole, but acreage estimates are rather smaller than generally expected. It seems plain that short covering has furnished the principal buying in the market.

Wall Street was said to be covering short lines and a rally of about 10 points from the opening quotations followed. During the afternoon session the market was featureless, with prices fluctuating narrowly. The weekly weather report was unfavorable for Alabama and the Eastern States, but very favorable for the Western belt.

It is said that the market has been heavily oversold. There seem to be no forces who are anxious to bull the market in the face of such good crop reports and weather conditions. On the other hand, the market finds plenty of sellers on all rallies, which makes it obvious that this is a weather market.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, May 6.—Liverpool was disappointing at first with futures about 2 points lower than due, spot unchanged, sales 6,000 bales. Political news is mixed. The evacuation of Scutari announced by Montenegro is accepted with faith and optimism in London, but with doubt and diffidence by the Continent. Austria and Italy are reported to continue their military preparations to move on Albania.

New York acted as though concerted support was applied which is brought out in connection with the recent bullish literature of Mr. Price.

There is no question, however, that more confidence prevails in regard to the political situation and increased demand for contracts and more inquiry for spots is showing up. This is the explanation of the better tone in our market this morning.

Expectation of an unfavorable weekly weather report, except for Western States, gave strength to the new crops. The market held a 5-point advance well up to 11 o'clock, when the latest quotation of French rentes showing a decline of 80 points caused uneasiness on renewed fear of politics.

COTTON SEED OIL.

NEW YORK, May 6.—N. L. Carpenter & Co.: The cotton seed oil market was quiet and featureless, reflecting dullness in the consuming trade and lack of outside demand. Selling was in the way of scattered liquidation by local longs. Shorts bought a little May. Trading was professional, pending new developments. Bears show no signs of aggressiveness.

MERGER TROUBLES SEND STOCKS DOWN

U. P. and S. P. Dissolution Plan Again Comes Into Prominence as Annoying Factor.

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, May 6.—There was an irregular tendency in the stock market at the opening to-day and gains and losses offset one another. The undertone was steady. Canadian Pacific opened at 243¼ for a gain of 1⅛, but subsequently shaded.

The Harriman issues influenced the market and at the end of half an hour they had exerted a weakening tendency. Southern Pacific was freely offered, opening for a loss of 1⅛. Union Pacific fell a point. Amalgamated Copper began ½ higher, but afterward declined.

The show of strength during the early trading was not maintained after the first half hour. Union Pacific was off 1⅝ at 149⅛. Reading and Amalgamated Copper were fractional gains to 1 point. St. Paul dropped 1 point, Steel ½ to 60⅛. At 96⅜ Southern Pacific declined 1⅜. Similar recessions were noted in the other issues. Call money loaned at 2½.

Anaconda Copper was strong on its earnings report, advancing ⅜. United States Steel common fell ¼, while Erie, after opening with a fractional gain, lost its advance and sustained a net loss of ½. Baltimore and Ohio declined fractionally. Among the stocks making fractional advances were American Can, Northern Pacific, New York, New Haven and Hartford and Missouri Pacific.

The curb market was steady.

Sentiment in Americans in London was cheerful. Canadian Pacific in London spurted, then shaded.

OPINION ON GRAIN.

CHICAGO, May 6.—Bartlett, Frazier & Co.:

Wheat—Map shows frosts in Northwest, rains in Iowa and Southwest, with traces in Illinois. Local sentiment is very bearish, which may result in a still further decline, but we do not care to take that side of the market.

Corn—There is no new pressure.

Oats—Local traders rather bearish.

Provisions—Market seems to meet with good support on declines, but prices depend chiefly on volume of receipts.

POULTRY, PET and LIVE STOCK

Chicks Die Because Of Mismanagement Or Carelessness

Farmers Should Strive to Find Successful Way to Handle Them.

EDITED BY JUDGE F. J. MARSHALL

Chicks are being hatched by hundreds all over the country at this time, many of which will never live to reach the age of value to their owners, owing to mismanagement or carelessness.

If farmers and poultry raisers would strive as hard to find the successful way to handle little chicks as they do to master other things frequently of much less importance, we would see thousands of good chickens go to our markets in the place of filling an untimely grave.

By way of warning, I might say that the three most harmful things the chicks have to contend with are cold, wet and sloppy feed. In other words, keep them dry. Feed cracked grain and small seeds mixed, and feed dry. If you will have the nerve to stick to this kind of feed in their bill of fare any length of time, you will succeed. Keep coops, houses and runs strictly clean and fresh and do not crowd. This is an old story to some of our readers, but to thousands of others it will mean a radical change in methods.

To give you an idea of how valuable I consider the dry feeding method, I will say that had I known twenty years ago what I do now about it, and practiced it during that time of my breeding of pure bred chickens, I would have made $5 in place of every $1 I did make. But someone asks why I make such a statement? Simply because I could not raise half the chickens I hatched, even with hens, and there seemed to be more difference than that with brooder chicks. My trade demanded twice as many eggs and stock as I could produce under the soft or wet food theory.

Chicks under the new method of dry feed need a constant supply of good grit in some form, either very coarse, sharp sand or prepared grit. Well supplied with these few essentials, there will be no trouble. Do not be in a rush to feed them as soon as they are out of the shell; better wait two days if you want health.

Caponizing.

Judge Marshall: I raise White Leghorns and White Wyandottes, and have a good many cockerels of both breeds coming on that I shall have to put on the market in some shape, as I want to keep the pullets for egg-producers. I have been thinking of caponizing a lot of them. Do you think it will pay me to go to the extra trouble in the increase in price and weight? MRS. J. J. MORRIS.

Quitman, Ga.

ANSWER—I do not believe it will pay you to go to the trouble to caponize at all, and I know it will not pay on the Leghorns. They are too small a breed to make capons worth your while to trouble with them. The larger breeds, such as the Brahmas and Cochins and Rocks, make the finest capons. It would hardly pay you to go into the business unless you already had a good market for them, for the average hotel will not pay enough extra to pay for the trouble and extra time and work it takes.

Good capons bring a fancy price on the New York and Boston markets, but it would not pay one down here to run the risk of shipping so far.

Ducks.

ON ACCOUNT of my health I am forced to sell our entire flock of ducks, consisting of 100 Fawn and White Runners, 20 Mammoth Pekins and 14 White Runners. Steve R. Johnston sold for an out-of-town client representing the estate of Sarah Story, a lot on the McDonough Road for $705, Charles E. Thompson being the buyer.

Auctioneer J. W. Ferguson and S. B. Turman sold a $5,000 equity in the Guthman property on Whitehall Street, between West Fair and Brotherton Streets, to Dr. W. J. Blalock for $1,500, making the price $31,500. This lot was formerly held by Moise DeLeon under bond for title. It fronts 107.5 feet on Whitehall and 52.33 on Forsyth. E. M. Mitchell bought for Joseph Loewus a one-third interest in the equity of the other DeLeon parcel at the northwest corner of South Forsyth and Castleberry Streets for $1,950. This lot is 76.6 feet on Forsyth and 70 on Castleberry.

There were several other small sales.

Bell Apartments Resold.

The Charles P. Glover Realty Company sold to-day for the Corinthian Company to the Realty Mortgage Company the Bell apartments at the southwest corner of Ponce DeLeon Avenue and North Boulevard for $65,000. This property has changed hands several times of late.

Brookhaven Transfer To-day?

A report this afternoon had it that at a final conference the Capital City Club property committee would close up the deal for the Brookhaven Club, a proposition having been submitted some time ago by the Brookhaven Estates. The site is wanted by the Capital City for a country club. The Brookhaven property was sold this morning so that the title might be clearly in the Brookhaven Estates.

Progress of Peachtree Work.

The county convicts have practically finished digging up the old asphalt on the right-hand side of Peachtree and will start at once on the opposite side of the thoroughfare, going south. They were working north of Fourteenth Street this morning. A separate gang is following close behind with rock, binder, etc., and the street will soon be good for traffic between Sixth and Fifteenth Streets.

Healey Building Delayed.

Two monster derricks, intended to lift steel girders into place on the Healey Building site, have not yet come from the manufacturers, and the work has been held up now some two weeks. The daily loss to Mr. Healey is considerable, since the job has not been pushed following the completion of foundation work. Enough steel is already on hand, but the derricks have upset calculations.

The Baby That Cried and the Baby That Didn't

The Mother of the First Baby Had Real Cause for Thanksgiving

Copyright, 1913.

It was on a suburban train running out of Atlanta. A mother with her family, two half-grown children and a baby, was on the way, apparently, to spend a day with friends and relatives in the country.

The baby was cross and fretful. The motion of the car irritated him, the conductor frightened him, the other passengers, jingling keys foolishly to distract his attention, annoyed him.

He was perhaps ten months old, and a baby of ten months has a magnificently developed voice.

This baby knew what his voice was for, and he used it. From one end of the car to the other he could be heard, howling an indignant protest against taking a journey he did not want to take, and undergoing privations without being consulted.

The mother, terribly worried by the indignant frowns of the other passengers, fussed and worried. She offered the baby his bottle, but he batted it away with a tiny pink hand and yelled louder than ever.

Being a careful mother, she examined his clothing for possible loose pins, but she didn't find any.

The woman in the seat ahead of her turned and rudely stared, first at her and then at the purple-faced baby.

A crusty old man in the seat behind said to his companion: "Why in the thunder do people travel with babies? If they cannot afford nurses they ought to stay at home."

More sympathetic people strolled past and offered the mother advice and made faces for the baby to admire. But the baby did not admire them. He merely expressed eloquently, though without articulate words, his contempt and disgust.

Presently the mother, driven nearly frantic, turned to a woman across the aisle and said:

"I wish to goodness he wouldn't cry. I'd give anything in the world if he'd only keep quiet for a week, absolutely quiet."

Now, this was a healthy baby, dressed in frills and ribbons, his little feet in brand-new, soft, red shoes, and his distorted face framed in a circle of fluffy white fur.

And because he was healthy and well fed, and protected against disease, his voice was of the lustiest kind.

Perhaps it is not surprising that his mother wished she might not hear his voice for another week, but——

Recently a party of men went among the tenement houses in New York to distribute some small gifts for the tenants.

They were poor, squalid tenement houses. On every floor were dozens of babies, but there was no crying.

In one little room a mother sat beside a little, dirty bed—a mattress placed on two up-ended cracker boxes.

On the bed was a baby—also ten months old, but with no shoes whatever, and clothed in a few dingy garments that had served several other babies before him.

The baby was very white and very still. On each cheek was a red spot, showing that a fever was pumping his blood to an abnormal pressure. His eyes were large and blue and wide open.

The mother turned to the visitors and tried to smile. Then she looked back at the patient, quiet baby.

"If he would only just cry," she said. "It seems to me I would give my life to hear him cry just a little."

There is something to remember, you mothers who lose your patience when your babies cry. Think of those other babies in the tenements who do not cry, either because they have not the strength or because they have learned that not even a baby's needs can be satisfied because of his crying for them when there is nothing in the house to satisfy them.

Healthy babies MUST cry. Crying not only develops their lungs, but it is their only means of telling their mothers that there is something the matter or that they are dissatisfied and unhappy.

And no baby is dissatisfied or unhappy who is well fed and well cared for.

When he cries you may be sure that he is sick or tired or that he feels that he is being trifled with.

Feed him well, keep him clean, clothe him warmly, and he will be content to play and coo as long as he keeps awake.

But when his stomach is empty or overfull, when pins are sticking in him, or his feet are cold, you may expect to hear his voice raised in loud and emphatic protest.

Be glad that you can hear it, you mothers whose nerves are "all frayed out" because the crying disturbs you—and you fathers who spend the night away from home because "you cannot bear to hear that baby howling all night."

Let the baby tell you by his crying that something is the matter, and, rather than scold and storm, find out what it is and make him easier and more comfortable.

Remember that there are many mothers, whose babies are now silent forever, who would give all that they have in the world could they hear those wailing baby voices come back to them across the years, and, taking the little creatures in their arms, try with all their mother instinct to help them and make them happy again.

Winifred Black Writes About "Doors That Slam"

By WINIFRED BLACK.

BANG!—said the door—

I turned over in my sleep—

Rattle-bang!—there it was again. If I could only think of some way to stop it.

It really was too bad—there I was so tired, up all night the night before and busy all day that day, so tired, so weary—and no one cared, no one seemed to notice how drawn my poor face was—no one even said they were sorry—that's always the way—a woman could work herself to death and that's all the thanks that she would get. Biff!—there's that door again!

The rising wind took a delight in that door and the wooden slam of it. Sometimes the door didn't bang; it simply rattled—R-R-R-R-R-rattle, rattle, rattle, like a train of cars going over a shaky bridge—rrrrrrattle, rattle, rattle, there—there is water under that bridge; you can tell by the sort of rustle in the rattle—shake, shake, shake—someone must be there; no, it is only the wind again—shake, shake, shake—well, come in if you want to so badly.

Door Banged No More.

Not a soul in the house will get up and shut that door tight, and let me sleep.

Along about daylight I rose, walked over to the door just a few steps, turned the key, and it was done—the door banged no more.

My train ceased to run over bridges, and I fell asleep—at last peacefully, calmly, sweetly asleep, and yet—outside the wind blew—I could hear him singing in the bare boughs of the great oak—like some entranced musician loath to leave his music—and I was neither younger nor more blessed in any way than before. Yet I slept as if I were sweet sixteen, with all the world waiting to lay garlands of roses at my feet when I deigned to awaken a glad world with my presence.

WINIFRED BLACK.

It didn't take a minute to work the miracle—nor any genius or inspiration. Just plain sense and some little resolution for the instant, and the troublous night and the uneasy dreams turned to refreshing slumber—and the door was the same door, only it wasn't locked when it banged.

I wonder——

How often have I turned upon an easy pillow and let the door bang—rather than to get up and shut it?

A hundred times, I fear, and more than that.

Are Sensitive Souls.

The cook leaves the gas burning in the range when she doesn't need it. What an extravagance!—it irritates me every time I see it. I turn it out, but the next time I go to the kitchen there it is, blazing away at so much a blaze—I hated to speak of it—cooks are such sensitive souls, and this one makes such delicious waffles. Last week I took my courage in my hands and called the cook into the pantry.

"Mary," I said, "there is something I want to speak to you about—the gas you are so careless about; please turn it out the minute you are through with it, will you?"

"Yes," said Mary, and she did it; and now I like to go into the kitchen, and Mary seems to like to see me come. The secret irritation that must have disturbed her as much as it did me is gone—all by a few calm words spoken at the right time.

I didn't hear from my old friend for a while. When I met her she seemed cold. What could the matter be?

Last week she gave a party and didn't ask me—I didn't care for the party—I couldn't have managed to go anyhow—but—I sat down and wrote and asked her what was the matter.

What's the Matter?

"I love you," I said. "Don't you care for me any more? How have I offended?" She came that afternoon and told me of a careless remark, spitefully repeated, and we are good friends again—and I am glad.

What's the matter with life? The bills are high—every one is grasping—no one seems to care—oh, it's a terrible world! Ten to one it's only some door slamming somewhere that's doing it all—one foolish, no-account door that should be locked.

Get up, you sleepy thing! Get up at once and lock it!

The Celestial Locket

By MINNA IRVING.

THE big round moon is at the full,
And riding bright and high,
With little flecks of lacy cloud
Around it in the sky.
It's like a silver locket hung
Upon a chain of diamond stars,
That pale before its light.

Against the midnight's purple robe
Brocaded with the beams
Of constellations far and near,
How brilliantly it gleams!
And look! as from the world below
Its polished disk we scan,
We see within its shining rim
The picture of a man.

John Temple Graves

Says

Our Navy Needs a Charles Beresford

The Great Englishman, he says, Keeps Britain's Navy Up-to-Date and In Repair by Exposing Its Glaring Weakness from Time to Time.

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES

GEORGIANS and other Americans who read of the great banquet last October given by the city of New York to the President and his Cabinet and the officers of the assembled fleet, will recall the confident assurance of President Taft at that banquet that these magnificent vessels, then anchored off New York, in the North River were the chief defense of the country, and that each one of them was ready at a moment's notice to weigh anchor and sail out to meet and conquer an invading foe.

President Taft doubtless made this statement upon information furnished him by some one in authority in the Navy Department.

It was a shame for any official of the American Government to have imposed upon the President of the United States such a gross misstatement of the facts.

Disquieting Whispers.

It was a greater shame to have permitted the President of the United States to give out such an untruthful statement to the American people.

For the navy was then, as the navy is now, inadequate in the number of officers and of men and shamefully inadequate in its equipment of fuel and coal.

Such a statement going out at that time was calculated to lull the activity of the heads of the Navy Department, who ought to have known the facts and who certainly must know them now. It was whispered on the day after the banquet that the President's assuring words were not founded upon facts and that the navy was lacking in many elements that rendered it effective for battle and defense.

It would have been the part of a brave man then, who knew these facts, to have told them, in order that the condition might have been corrected at the time.

It would be a cowardly American now who would keep these facts from the public at this time and permit our navy to go out to sea in its present condition.

A Fearless Patriot.

And it would appear to any thoughtful American who loves his country that the prompt and fearless dealing with these conditions, as they have been stated, is the highest possible duty which appeals now to the Secretary of the Navy and to the President of the United States.

England has a great and fearless patriot in Lord Charles Beresford, and no part of Lord Beresford's great service has been more marked than the incessant challenge by which he has kept England posted as to the deficiencies of her navy and the necessity for repairing. Time after time, when England has been boasting herself before her people of the greatness and irresistible power of her navy, Lord Beresford, himself one of England's mightiest sailors, has broken into the eulogy with a public exposure of some glaring weakness and inefficiency in the English navy, and this sharp challenge of the fearless sailor-publicist has done perhaps as much or more than anything else to keep the English battleships up to the mark of efficiency.

We ought to have in America some great publicist who will not fear to tell our Government the truth about its navy in time of peace and not wait for the sharp necessity of war to prod the department into action. Either in Congress or in the departments, or in the press, there should be found a monitor who would warn and direct the carelessness or the apathy of the American navy.

The present Secretary of the Navy is a young man, who has just assumed that office. He has had no experience with naval affairs and is frank and honest enough to confess it. He appears to be very earnest and devoted to his work.

Work for the Secretary.

If Secretary Daniels would do his country some service he will address himself here and now to finding out from inside sources the real facts about the American navy, the condition of its ships, the equipment of its crews, the preparation for its fuel and its colliers, and he would make his administration of that department liberal by holding the navy rigidly up to the standard of efficiency for instant service.

He would see to it, if official persuasion could be effective, that additional inducements were given to men to enlist in the navy. He would remember that most young men enlist in the navy not for a career, but to see the world, and he would devote himself to plans to securing the full complement for every one of the unfilled battleships that carries our flag today.

There is a great opportunity for a Secretary of the Navy at the present time, and that opportunity lies not along the line of trivial improvements, but of vital preparedness for that which battleships were built to do—to fight when necessary with every force of men and machinery and fuel in its place.

The Empress of India

By REV. THOMAS B. GREGORY.

THAN the proclamation of Queen Victoria as Empress of India, made in the city of London thirty-seven years ago, there is perhaps nothing stranger or, from the standpoint of the psychologist, more interesting, in all history.

Think of it for a moment. The Queen of a little island in the Atlantic, with an area of some eighty-five thousand square miles and a population under thirty millions, is solemnly proclaimed sovereign of an empire thousands of miles away, covering one million six hundred thousand square miles and containing a population of two hundred and eighty-seven millions of souls.

The audacity of it! The cool, colossal impudence of the thing! It was sublime. That vote of the Parliament commanding the ever memorable proclamation reminds us of the rulings of Providence, of the ways of the omnipotent God. The little handful of Britishers, speaking through their representatives gathered in the council house by the Thames, declare their good little Queen to be absolute ruler of the ancient and august Empire by the Ganges and the Brahmaputra, and, lo! it is done. Six months later, at a Durbar of unequaled magnificence held on the historic ridge overlooking the mogul capital of Delhi, the princes and leading men of India bow down before the representatives of the little woman in England, and, in the name of the two hundred and eighty-seven millions of the Indian people, swear eternal fealty to her rule.

Was there ever such romance as this cold-blooded history? What kind of people are the two hundred and eighty-seven million to be falling down before the thirty millions thousands of miles away? And what kind of people are the thirty millions that they should be even dreaming of declaring themselves the lords and masters of the two hundred and eighty-seven millions?

The explanation is to be found in the difference between the Saxon man and the Hindoo man. We think we know what that difference is—but in spite of it all there remains that mystery of mysteries—British rule in India. Nor is the mystery much lightened by the fact that, upon the whole, that rule has ben a blessing to the Indian people.

POLICE HAVE NEW AND STARTLING EVIDENCE NOT YET MADE PUBLIC

Body of Mary Phagan Exhumed, Bloodstains on Clothing Analyzed and Every Effort Made to Uncover Additional Clews in the Mystery.

Solicitor General Dorsey, Chief of Detectives Lanford, Chief of Police Beavers, and all men working under them in the Phagan case seem thoroughly satisfied with the progress they are making in the great mystery. They are actively engaged in many unknown directions—as they say, "piling up evidence to strengthen the case."

What evidence the officials have other than that which has already been made public they refuse to divulge. Solicitor Dorsey declines to make public his case in the newspapers. He is investigating every phase of the matter through trusted men working under his own direction.

It is perfectly proper for the chief prosecuting officer to withhold any and all evidence until such time as he may present his case to the Grand Jury.

That there is new and startling evidence seems true, but just what it indicates the officials refuse to say, and the newspaper reporters, therefore, are merely guessing at what may be, or may not be, the actual facts.

Solicitor Dorsey was reticent about the nature of the most recent discoveries, but his guarded statements indicated that he considered the disclosures which have been made by the force of detectives, physicians and chemists working under his direction as having a most important bearing on the solution of the crime.

Mr. Dorsey issued this statement:

I see in an interview attributed to Quinn that I asked him if he was not paid by counsel for Frank to protect Frank.

This statement, so far as I am concerned, is absolutely false. Throughout my talk with him I did not mention the name of counsel nor did I intimate that counsel had been guilty of any such conduct.

It is known that a more thorough and minute examination of every locality and every article having any connection or possible connection with the slaying of Mary Phagan is being made now than was undertaken in the first few days of the mystery.

Under the direction of Solicitor Dorsey, chemists have made a new analysis of the blood found on the factory floor, where the Phagan girl evidently struggled with her assailant.

Dr. H. F. Harris, director of the State Board of Health, is making a second examination of the body of the slain girl, which was taken from the grave in the cemetery at Marietta.

Whether it was from any one of the sources that Solicitor Dorsey obtained his new lead in tracking down the slayer, he would not say. He would only repeat that every clew that offered the slightest ray of hope would be followed to the end.

May Have Been Hurled Down Shaft.

A startling theory announced by the Solicitor is that the body of Mary Phagan was thrown, alive, down the elevator shaft from the second floor to the basement. He has found that the soil at the bottom of the shaft is soft and that the girl might not have been seriously injured by a fall of this distance. He would not be surprised if subsequent developments proved that the girl was slain not on the second floor of the factory, but in the basement at just about the spot where the body was found.

To insure that not the smallest particle of evidence is overlooked, Solicitor Dorsey is continuing his rigid investigation of the factory itself. Electric lights have been strung in every nook and corner of the basement, where before it was black and gloomy. The dirt and trash covering the floor is being searched painstakingly in the hope that some tell-tale clew may be discovered—that the girl's missing purse may be found, or that some article disclosing the identity of the slayer may be turned up.

The report of Dr. Harris probably will not be made public until Thursday, when the inquest resumes. Meanwhile, the Solicitor is working on the information that he receives from time to time from Dr. Harris; from the chemists who have analyzed the bloodstained chips of wood taken from the factory floor, and from Dr. Claude A. Smith, city bacteriologist, who has analyzed the bloodstains on the shirt found at the home of Newt Lee.

Solicitor Dorsey telegraphed to New York Tuesday to verify a statement concerning Frank contained in an unsigned letter. The Solicitor said that the Pinkerton detectives would not be admitted to his conferences with the city police.

The Grand Jury will meet Friday and probably will take up the case then if a verdict has been rendered by the Coroner's jury.

Candler and Street Car Officials Confer

Company Reported Willing to Meet Rush Traffic Suggestions More Than Half Way.

P. S. Arkwright, president, and the traffic officials of the Georgia Railway and Power Company held a long conference with C. M. Candler, chairman of the Georgia Railroad Commission, in reference to the congestion of street car traffic in Atlanta during rush hours.

Statistics recently given the commission, showing the fare register readings at terminals and cross town points for a period of a week, were considered.

Mr. Candler submitted suggestions and criticisms. It is understood that the officials are ready to meet the commission's suggestions more than half-way. Increased service, it is said, has been delayed only to see what the commission intended to order.

Waycross Girl, 15, Vanishes in Woods

Country Searched for Pretty Lee Hall, Believed Insane or Victim of Foul Play.

WAYCROSS, GA., May 6.—Pretty Lee Hall, a 15-year-old girl, yesterday suddenly left her home a mile north of Waycross, rushed into the thick woods bordering Kettle Creek and disappeared. It is feared she may have been a victim of foul play. The entire county is being scoured for the missing girl. She was seen entering the woods, and when her father called she broke into a run. Hall states no man is involved so far as he knows, but thinks his daughter has lost her mind.

Slayer of King of Greece a Suicide

Assassin Leaps to His Death From Window of Police Building in Athens.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, May 6.—A news agency dispatch received here to-day from Ahens states that Aleko Shinas, the anarchist who assassinated King George of Greece in Salonika on March 18, jumped from a window in the police building and killed himself.

How the prisoner eluded the jailers is not told in the dispatch.

Schinas killed the King by firing point blank into his back while he was walking along the streets of Salonika. He gave as an explanation of the crime that in 1911 he had applied for assistance at the King's palace and had been driven away.

Society Folk Nabbed As They Roll Dice

Chicago Host Has His Guests Taken to Police Station as Joke.

CHICAGO, May 6.—An even dozen prominent society and business folk of Chicago learned to-day that their arrest on a charge of gambling at the home of Richard F. Peyton, in Highland Park, a fashionable suburb, was all a joke.

The guests of Peyton were caught rolling dice on the floor and wagering greenbacks on the turn of the "bones." Peyton had the suburban police force—the chief and his two assistants—"arrest" his guests and take them to the police station charged with gambling.

Typists' Uniforms Please London Girls

"They Double the Life of Our Private Dresses," Says One, and Are Very Becoming Beside.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, May 10.—London typists have become reconciled to the uniform. It was feared there would be a great revolt on the part of the young women of this avocation when a leading firm adopted a specific style of dress for them, but there has been no open protest.

"We were inclined to believe the management could not possibly select a costume becoming to all of us," said Miss Dorothy Clegg, a pretty young typist to-day, "but we were mistaken. A dressmaker took our measurements, and a few days later the dresses arrived. They are ideal business dresses. Cinnamon in color, and in the Empire style, they harmonize with the cream and green color scheme of the offices.

"The full sleeves are appreciated. The low neck and the fullness of the skirt give perfect freedom, while the narrow cuffs give a neat effect. Our private dresses have now double the life, owing to the protection afforded them. When the day's work is done we can slip off the Empire dress in less than a minute."

SANTA ROSE, CAL., May 6.—Jack London, the famous author, traveler and landowner of Glen Ellen, and his guest, John J. Burns, of San Francisco, must answer to a charge of battery next Monday as a result of trouble on the London ranch.

Mrs. J. H. Shepard and her sister had some words, according to Shepard, and because Burns, who was present, refused to interfere on behalf of Mrs. Shepard, Shepard is alleged to have made a demonstration with a revolver.

London and Burns are said to have taken the weapon from Shepard, grappled with him and forcibly ejected him. Shepard declared London choked and abused him.

Villages War for Railway Station

Wiley Claims 23 People and Is "Cow Center"—Mathis Depends on Natural Beauty.

Rabun County is at white heat, and the old feud between the towns of Wiley and Mathis is at its height. The vital question of which place gets a regular railroad station with an agent in charge is to be determined this week by the Georgia Railroad Commission.

Wiley claims the greater population. Within a radius of one mile from Wiley there are 23 persons living, it has been shown conclusively. It claims also to be "the natural center of the cow movement," whatever that may mean.

Mathis claims that it is due to become a great summer resort because of the beauty of the lake created there by the Georgia Railway and Power Company's dam.

Photographs of the surrounding country, letters from almost every State between Ohio and the District of Columbia, a mass of evidence and many personal appeals have reached the Railroad Commission on the subject.

MAN TAKEN BY THE POLICE OF HOUSTON STILL IS BEING HELD

Youth Arrested in Connection With Phagan Mystery Protests Innocence. Woman Says He Moaned, "Why Did I Do It?"---Local Men Skeptical.

Chief of Detectives George Peyton, of Houston, Texas, sent the following telegram to Chief of Police Beavers, of Atlanta, Tuesday:

"Am still holding Bowen as per your wire this morning. He did stop at 185 Ivy Street. He denies everything. The evidence here is very strong against him. Mrs. A. Blanchard, formerly of Atlanta, first to suspect, gave first information about him. Answer soon."

HOUSTON, TEXAS, May 6.—Paul P. Bowen, arrested because of the suspicion of the local authorities that he was connected with the murder of Mary Phagan in Atlanta, denied Tuesday all knowledge of the girl and the crime except as he read of it in the newspapers.

A score of clippings telling the story of the little girl's death were found in the young man's room. His only explanation was that Atlanta was his home town, and he was particularly interested in the crime because of that.

The police here regard as more significant than the clippings, the stories of Bowen's actions in his room at the St. Jean Hotel, and later at a rooming house. Roomers in adjoining rooms are said to have been disturbed by his moans and mutterings and by his constant pacing of the floor.

"Why did I do it? Why did I do it?" he is declared to have repeated to himself incessantly. Complaint was first made to the hotel authorities and later the police were notified.

Bowen was arrested last night by Chief of Police Davison, Chief of Detectives Peyton and Detective Hilton at 1520 Texas Avenue.

"A night of terror," as officers term it, led to the detention of Bowen.

Sunday night in room 214, at the St. Jean Hotel, the young man paced the floor and moaned. Persons in adjoining rooms were unable to sleep, and reported to the management that something was wrong in the room. An investigation disclosed Bowen poring over letters and newspaper accounts of the murder and crying aloud.

"Oh, why did I do it?" he is said to have cried.

"I would not have done it. I ought not to have done that. If I had it to do over I wouldn't do it," were repeatedly heard by those who listened and who frequently walked through the hall in an effort to ascertain some cause for the peculiar actions of the man.

Monday the young man was shadowed and the matter was reported to the detective department. About 5 o'clock he registered out and moved to Texas Avenue and Crawford Street. There he engaged a room for a week. Last night, shortly after midnight, the officers went to the place. Bowen answered a knock at his room door, and then straightened himself and looked directly at the officers.

Holds Knife in Hand.

"Who are you fellows and what do you want here?" he asked.

The officers answered that they wanted to talk to him and he then invited them into his room. He kept a distance from them, however, and held an open knife in his right hand. Bowen appeared nervous throughout the conversation of perhaps fifteen minutes, but replied to all queries promptly and to the point.

When one of them told him to "consider yourself under arrest" he coolly answered, "That's all right, but you've got the wrong man."

Bowen closed his knife and handed it to an officer and sat on the side of the bed. To one officer he pointed out his trunk and suitcase—a small affair in the nature of a traveling man's grip. As the officers opened the trunk they lifted out clothes—some nice ones that indicated a well-dressed man—and these, with letters, postcards and pictures, were piled on the floor.

MUSIC IN PARKS ACTIVELY URGED

Councilmen and Officials Advocate Fund for Concerts During Summer Months.

Music in Grant and Piedmont Parks at least four times a week through the summer is the plan actively urged by park officials and a number of Councilmen. Councilman Claude L. Ashley Monday introduced a resolution in Council appropriating $5,000 for the purpose. To-day his move is backed by strong support.

"The meager music we have had in the parks in the past has attracted thousands," said Councilman Ashley. "It is what the people want. This city, especially the parks, is for the people, and it is our duty to give them the amusement and recreation they crave."

Councilman Ashley said that with an additional gift from the Georgia Railway and Power Company it would be possible to have music in both parks every evening and Sunday afternoon.

"The Park Board is heartily in favor of Councilman Ashley's plan," said J. O. Cochran, president.

Dan Carey, General Manager of Parks, is a strong advocate of park music.

JURY HAS SILVA'S CASE FOR CHORUS GIRL'S DEATH

SAVANNAH, GA., May 6.—With no immediate prospect of a verdict, the jury is still out in the case of Isaac Silva, who was tried in the Superior Court yesterday for causing the death of Esther O'Mara, of Boston, Mass., a chorus girl, known as Marian Leonard. She died from the effects of morphine injected into her hip.

through that trunk," said Bowen. "The things in there are mine, and not yours. I don't know anything about this affair and you'll have to show me strong."

Stoutly Denies Crime.

Officers talked to him for more than an hour at the police station, but Bowen stoutly denied any knowledge of the killing of the young girl. He continued to show nervousness, though, and frequently inquired of the detectives why he should be treated the way they were doing him.

"If I had the least suspicion that this would happen to me, I would not have been in Houston this long," he said. "I would have left here Sunday night."

Bowen was taken from the rooming house to the police station and was placed in a cell across the hall from the Chief of Detectives' offices. He slept but little and did not undress to lie down. This morning he was at the cell door early and looked haggard.

Bowen complained of being hungry. He declared that he was tired—almost worn out. He walked the floor nervously, then sat down on the side of his cot. Next he stepped to the grating and inquired if he was going to be allowed to starve to death or would he be given some breakfast. About 9 o'clock he was taken into a private office with Chief of Detectives Peyton and Detective Andrew F. Shelly. He admitted that he lived in Atlanta and had come from that city to Houston, but stoutly denied that he even knew Mary Phagan.

Only Interested, He Says.

When shown the pictures in his trunk and grip, he pointed out a number of persons, including several young women, though he declared that none of them was "Mary Phagan or any of her kinfolk."

Bowen Well Educated.

Bowen is 22 years of age and has light hair. He is well dressed and well educated. He has been a bookkeeper and stenographer, and claimed that he worked in Atlanta for the Morrow Transfer Company. He gave his home address as 108 Ivy Street.

He claimed this was his first visit to Houston. He declined to talk to officers or to tell anything about his kinspeople or any of his business connections except as given above.

Bowen is slight of build, perhaps 5 feet 6 or 7 inches in height. He weighs about 125 pounds and appears brisk and energetic.

He admitted to officers that he had lived in Atlanta nearly all his life. He denied, however, that he knows anything about the National Pencil Factory, Leo Frank, the manager, or any persons connected with or employed in the factory.

He talked freely about some matters and evasively about others. Efforts to corner the young man in every instance proved futile.

Letter Signed "M. J. P."

A hundred pictures in his trunk show auto rides and picnic parties, individual pictures and groups and couples. When shown them he merely laughed and made a jocular remark about some girl "being pretty."

There are batches of letters and postcards.

The letters were nearly all from young women; some of them were endearing ones. A few were from young men friends.

Many of the letters are signed "Mary," but none is signed "Mary Phagan." The signature to one letter is merely the initials, "M. J. P."

This is believed by the Houston police to have been written by the Phagan girl.

Woman's Bloodstained Vest.

Hanging from the window of room 214 in the St. Jean Hotel was found a woman's bloodstained undervest. It was of small size, as if for a girl from 14 to 16 years of age. The discovery of the undervest was made yesterday morning. A guest at the hotel saw it fluttering from the window and advised an attachee of the place. It was wrapped in a paper and sent to the police station.

It is believed that an effort was made to throw the vest out of the window and that it caught on the ledge. It was not seen there before Monday morning, and two guests at the hotel declared that it was not there Sunday night. The vest was bloodstained toward the top of the breast and about halfway down the front. The vest is being held in connection with other properties by the detectives.

Bowen told the officers again and again that he had never heard of the girl, but admitted that he knew the place where she had worked. Bowen failed to explain the newspaper clippings containing accounts of the murder. He was shown them and portions of them were read to him. He admitted that he is familiar with the story of the crime, through reading the papers, and said his interest was simply because Atlanta is his home.

Bowen came to Houston Sunday night, presumably from New Orleans, although this has not been determined, as the prisoner declined to talk about his arrival as freely as he did other matters. He went directly to the St. Jean Hotel and asked for a dollar room.

"Sorry, sir, but we haven't got anything less than dollar-fifty," said the clerk. Bowen turned and walked to the door with his grip in his hand. The clerk called him, but he did not heed it and started out. The clerk ran to the door and explained that he had just discovered a dollar room vacant. The young man returned and registered. On the book he wrote "Paul P. Bowen, Atlanta, Ga.," boldly. There was no effort to conceal his identity or the city from whence he came.

The young man went to his room and a few minutes later went out for supper. He had registered at 7:45 o'clock. Before 9 o'clock he was in his room. He did not retire at that hour, though.

Opening his grip, it developed, Bowen read and reread some letters. Most of them were from young women.

He wept and then threw aside the missives. Picking from among the contents of the grip a number of newspaper clippings, he pored over them as if eager to get every word of every sentence. Then he moaned aloud: "Oh, if I hadn't done that! What did I do it for?"

A youth named Paul A. Bowen lived at the Atlanta Y. M. C. A. until February of 1912, when he left for Houston, Texas, according to Secretary J. C. Bell, of the Atlanta association.

Mr. Bell said Bowen was an ideal young man and stood high in the estimation of the Y. M. C. A. workers of Atlanta. He was a clerk at the Inman Yards of the Southern Railway.

Mr. Bell said that to the best of his knowledge Bowen had not been in Atlanta since he left in 1912. Bowen was living at the Y. M. C. A. when Secretary Bell took up his duties there and he did not know how long Bowen had been in Atlanta.

Defends Bowen.

Charles Kimball, a clerk in the master mechanic's office at the Southern Railway shops and a close personal friend of Paul P. Bowen's, said this morning, when seen by a Georgian reporter, that he did not believe his friend could be in any way implicated in the murder of little Mary Phagan.

"I have just come back from the detectives' office, where I went to carry a letter which I received from Paul on Sunday morning, April 27," he said. "There is nothing unusual about the letter. It is simply a personal letter about affairs in which we were both interested, and my only idea of showing it to the detectives at all is that it bears a postmark which might serve to divert suspicion from him. The letter is dated and postmarked Lufkin, Texas, April 23. I gave the letter to Detectives Black and Harry Scott.

"As for Bowen, personally, he had a great many friends here in Atlanta, and I am sure that they do not take any stock in the theory that he had anything to do with the murder or was even in Atlanta at the time.

"He left here in the early part of last spring and went to El Dorado, Ark., where he was employed in the offices of the Rock Island lines as a clerk. He later became private secretary to the superintendent of the St. Louis and Southwestern line, and spent a great deal of his time traveling over the lines in the superintendent's private car.

"I have been in correspondence with him almost continually since he left here and have received letters from him from a great many points out West."

All the local authorities were inclined to belittle the importance of the Bowen arrest.

Innocent, Says Lanford.

Chief of Detectives Lanford declared his belief in the innocence of Paul Bowen Tuesday. He said that the detectives of his department had been tracing the movements of Bowen since he left Atlanta about a year ago after he had left the employ of the Morrow Transfer Company, of which he was secretary. In all this time, said the chief of detectives, they were unable to find that he had returned to Atlanta.

On the contrary, Bowen had written to friends in Atlanta from various points and had never suggested returning home.

"Bowen didn't know the girl," said the chief. "He didn't know the girl's family. It is preposterous to think that he would make a hurried and secret trip into the city from Lufkin, Texas, where he was heard from in a letter bearing the date of April 23, and then make his way back to Houston, where he was captured.

"Our disbelief in his guilt, however, does not mean that we are going to overlook any possibility that he might have been concerned. He is being held for us."

Another Defends Him.

Clarence Duncan, a student at the Atlanta Dental College, and Bowen's room mate at the Young Men's Christian Association, declared Tuesday afternoon that Bowen had not been in Atlanta, to his knowledge, since last June.

HUGH DORSEY, Solicitor General of Fulton Superior Court, now bending every effort toward the solution of the Phagan mystery. He is following every clew, and in every way exerting all his powers and ability in clearing the baffling case.

Solicitor General Hugh Dorsey.

Phagan Case and the Solicitor General's Power Under Law---Dorsey Hasn't Encroached on Coroner.

By A GEORGIA LAWYER.

It is absurd to say, as some people have been saying in Atlanta of late, that Solicitor General Dorsey "has taken the Phagan case from the Coroner," or has "butted in" on the Coroner's business in some way.

It would be equally sensible to say that the commanding general in a battle had "butted in" on a captain's business, when, as the battle progressed, the general gave directions of one sort and another to the captain as to its conduct.

The truth of the matter is, Solicitor General Dorsey has been in charge of the Mary Phagan case ever since it was brought to light.

Murder is a crime against the sovereign State, and not particularly against either the city of Atlanta or the county of Fulton, save in so far as they are a part of the State.

A murder in Atlanta is as much Savannah's business as it is Atlanta's, so far as the violation of the laws of Georgia are concerned.

Solicitor Dorsey is a State official, and not specifically an Atlanta official, nor yet a Fulton County official.

Office Useless in Main.

For certain purposes a Coroner's inquest sometimes is permitted under the law prior to Grand Jury investigation. Many lawyers hold, and rightly, that the office of Coroner is useless in the main, and ought to be abolished. It is a relic of old English procedure, instituted before the days of newspapers, telephones, telegrams, fast mails and other quick methods of communication.

In the absence of eyewitnesses to an apparent murder, however, a Coroner's inquest sometimes may serve an immediate purpose, and, perhaps, the Phagan case is a case in point with regard to that.

The Coroner is an officer entirely and definitely subordinate to the Solicitor General, and does not exercise any authority except such as he may exercise under the Solicitor.

The Solicitor assembles, in his discretion, the evidence against the accused, from it makes out a case for the Grand Jury, advises and instructs the Grand Jury as to its duty and rights in the matter, prepares an indictment for the Grand Jury's consideration, which, if found true, must be depended upon to set forth the case against the defendant to be summoned to bar in such exact terms that it may be guaranteed to withstand all attacks of opposing counsel in the trial of the case.

Has Full Responsibility.

The initial and the final responsibility for the State's case is in the hands of the Solicitor General.

There never is a minute from the time a murder is committed until a verdict is recorded that the State's cause is not in the hands of the Solicitor General, over and above all other officials.

He can not take a murder case "from out the hands of a Coroner," because there never was a point of time in any murder case's history that it was not more in the hands of the Solicitor than it possibly could have been in the hands of the Coroner.

No man may be put in jeopardy of his life a second time in Georgia (save of his own motion) in criminal proceedings, but the "verdict" of a Coroner's jury can not be pleaded as former jeopardy.

Policemen, Coroners, Sheriffs are all peace officers, and have their direct and indirect duties to perform in the presence of crime against the State, but never is there a time when any one of them is equal in dignity or authority to the Solicitor General.

There is but one trial, upon motion of the State of a criminal case in Georgia, and that is in the court house, under the direction of the Solicitor.

If a defendant be acquitted, that ends the matter. If he be convicted, he may move for another trial or appeal to a competent court of review. The State has no appeal.

Therefore, the law very properly provides that Coroners' findings, committal hearings and Grand Jury returns shall be merely parts of the process employed, or permitted, by the Solicitor, in whole or in part, prior to the actual trial of a case in the court house, before the judge and the trial jury.

There never is any question of the Solicitor General's supreme prosecuting status in the progress of a criminal investigation. Within the wide and sometimes arbitrary scope of his office he stands first in responsibility as the State's accredited representative and agent in the prosecution.

To be sure, there are Constitutional and statutory curbs and restrictions upon a Solicitor General, but none of them may be invoked by a Coroner.

Wireless Calls for Police From Mid-Lake

Aerograms Cause Arrest of Gem Salesmen Who Caused Reign of Terror on Boat.

DETROIT, MICH., May 6.—Charged with "assault on the high seas," which carries a penalty of fifteen years' imprisonment in a Federal prison, Robert Allan and George A. Schuriz, diamond salesmen of New York City, were taken off the steamer Western States to-day and held for the Federal authorities.

A wireless call, sent while the boat was far out in the lake, brought detectives to the dock. Both had small fortunes in gems.

The men battled nearly all night with officers on the boat, after indulging in liquor, breaking glassware and starting fights with passengers.

FRANK'S TESTIMONY FAILS TO LIFT VEIL OF MYSTERY

Factory Superintendent's Statements on the Witness Stand Considered Distinctly Favorable to Him.

Leo M. Frank's testimony before the Coroner's inquest threw no new light upon the Phagan case. Indeed, if it did anything it strengthened the belief in the minds of many persons that the mystery is far from solved.

Frank's testimony was distinctly favorable to him. He was on the witness stand for several hours. He answered every question in a straight-forward manner. He was not more nervous than any other man in the room. He never halted for a word to make reply. The impression made upon those present was good.

The bringing into the case of another man not heretofore mentioned as having been in the factory on the day of Mary Phagan's death does not seem to have in any way helped to clear the mystery.

Quinn Talks Freely.

Lemmie Quinn, foreman, whose name was mentioned by Frank, apparently had nothing to conceal either, for he talked with the detectives and police without reserve, and gave a clear statement of his work in the factory. His testimony did more, if anything, than the testimony of any other person to shift the suspicion that has been attached to Frank.

Close reading of the testimony leads to the opinion that the police have not yet solved the great mystery.

Frank is in the Tower to-day. He will be heard again on Thursday. The police may have some important questions to ask him, but if they have, they gave nothing to indicate it at the inquest on Monday.

Solicitor Dorsey, now in active charge of the case, feels certain that the mystery soon will be solved. All the officials are reticent. They refuse to discuss the tragedy with reporters.

Following Every Clew.

Many baseless rumors are in circulation on the streets, and the public clew presented to them.

The police and detectives are working diligently and following every clew presenced to them.

It is too early to forecast what the authorities have in store in the way of additional evidence, but that brought out yesterday pointed the finger of suspicion at no one at all. It was simply negative. It involved the witness no more than suspicion already had involved him, and was not at all damaging to Lee, who is being held with Frank in connection with the mystery.

Quinn was examined by Lanford and Scott, of the Pinkertons. He corroborated Frank's story in detail. He was permitted to return to his home at 31-B Pulliam Street.

Quinn was foreman of the department in which the victim worked. He had known her ever since she first was employed with the concern. A stormy scene is said to have ensued during the interrogation to which he was subjected at headquarters. To a reporter he declared that Scott and Solicitor Dorsey charged him with having accepted a bribe.

He says he retorted to the charge: "Show me the man that says I took a bribe, and I'll whip him on the spot."

Quinn was asked if Frank's statement were true, and he replied:

"Yes; it's true. I left my house Saturday morning about 11:45 o'clock. On the way uptown I stopped into Wolfsheimer's and bought an order of fancy groceries. I stopped at another place and bought a cigar.

"Then I went to the factory. I wanted to see Frank and tell him 'Howdy do.' I knew he would be in the place. He is always there on Saturdays. It was about 12:15 or 12:30 when I arrived at the building. I saw no one in front or as I went upstairs to the office.

"Frank was at his desk. He appeared very busy. I stepped in and said: 'Well, I see you work even on holidays. You can't keep me from coming around the building on Saturdays, either. How do you feel?'

"He said he was feeling good. He didn't appear agitated or nervous. I didn't want to disturb him, so I left. I wasn't in the plant for more than two minutes. As I came downstairs on the way out, I saw someone in the rear of the first floor—a person whom I would have no grounds whatever to suspect.

Believes Frank Innocent.

"No! I won't divulge his name. I'll tell the detectives in time. I'm glad Frank told the Coroner of my visit. It was I who refreshed his memory of the incident. He apparently had forgotten it. I have not been keeping it secret. I told the detective Saturday of the visit.

"I have known Mr. Frank for years and I know he is not guilty."

Quinn declared that he was in the building about two minutes. He said that he did not see Mary Phagan.

He is outraged at the treatment he alleges was accorded him by the detectives.

"They were insulting and seemed to doubt my statement," he said. "In an insinuating manner Chief Lanford plied the question: 'So you put yourself there about the time the Phagan girl left the factory, eh?'"

Quinn was an ardent admirer of the murdered child. He says she was one of his most industrious employees.

He is married and has one child. His connection with the National Pencil Company dates back several years.

Quinn said that it was he who refreshed Frank's memory of his presence in the building shortly after noon of the day on which the girl is supposed to have been slain.

"I called upon Frank at the jail," he said. "The moment I reminded him of my visit, he recollected it. He apparently had forgotten it."

The inquest was adjourned at 7:18 o'clock. It will be resumed at 9:30 Thursday morning. The two-day postponement is to permit detectives to garner evidence they announce available.

Tells Actions in Detail.

In detailing every move on the day Mary Phagan was killed, Frank said he rose about 7 o'clock Saturday morning and was at the office by 8:20. About 9 o'clock Foreman M. D. Darley and others entered his office and talked business matters with him. Frank testified he went to the office of Sig Montag, factory manager, on Nelson Street, at 10 o'clock, and remained there for nearly an hour.

He returned at 11 o'clock and an hour later the stenographer and the office boy left him alone, Darley and the others having departed. He thought it was about ten minutes after noon that Mary Phagan came in to get her pay envelope and after receiving it started out of the door, stopping only to ask if an expected shipment of metal had arrived. He heard her voice as she seemed to be talking with another girl outside. He heard the footsteps die away and believes Mary Phagan left the building, he testified.

Visited by Lemmie Quinn.

Lemmie Quinn, foreman of the tipping department, came into the factory at 12:15 or 12:20, just after the Phagan girl had left. Frank said that the foreman merely greeted him and conversed for five or ten minutes and then left.

Frank said that he himself left the factory at 1 o'clock and went home for luncheon with his father-in-law, Emil Selig. He left home to return to the factory at 2 o'clock, arriving there about 3 o'clock, and speaking to several acquaintances on his way.

At 3:10 o'clock Harry Denham and Arthur White, two employees who had been doing some work on the holiday, punched the clock, stopped to talk a few minutes with Frank and then quit the building, leaving Frank there alone.

Sees Watchman and Gantt.

Newt Lee, the night watchman, came at 3:45, but was told by Frank that he might go away until 6 o'clock. The watchman returned at 6 o'clock and a few minutes later J. M. Gantt appeared at the factory and asked permission to get a pair of shoes he had left in the shipping room. Frank left before Gantt had obtained his shoes.

Frank said that he arrived home at 6:25 and that his wife and mother-in-law entered as he was calling Newt Lee to see if Gantt had left the factory. Lee did not answer at this time, but answered when Frank called at 7 o'clock. Frank testified that he remained in the house from this time until he went to bed at 11 o'clock. He was awakened at 7:30 o'clock the next morning by the telephone call which told him of the tragedy.

GIRL FLEES FROM UNLOVED FIANCE

Emily Douglas, of Daytona, Fla., Arrested Here, Says Mother Tried to Force Marriage.

A story of flight to escape marriage with a man she did not love was told to the police Tuesday morning by Miss Emily Douglas, a pretty 18-year-old girl from Daytona, Fla., after she had been arrested at the Terminal station as she alighted from the Cincinnati and Florida Limited from Jacksonville, Fla.

According to the story the girl told Police Captain Mayo, her mother, Mrs. M. H. Douglas, had tried to force her to marry a man who lives in Chicago, Ill. The would-be bridegroom, Miss Douglas says, is many years older than she.

"I told mama I did not love him," the girl said, "and she said I had to marry him anyway. She said he would make me a good husband. But I wouldn't marry a man I didn't love, so I ran away. I don't want to get married, anyway. I'm too young. I want to have some fun, and I never heard of a married woman having any fun."

The girl left her home early yesterday afternoon. An hour later her disappearance was noticed, and F. W. Haskell, who says he is engaged to marry the girl's sister, left Daytona on her trail. He arrived in Atlanta on the next train, several hours after she had been placed under arrest.

Haskell has volunteered to take her back to Daytona, but the police are holding her until they hear from her mother.

OLD GUARD TO GIVE MRS. WILSON ROSES

Childhood Friends Will Present Bouquet From Yard in Rome on Trip to Washington.

A huge bouquet of red roses picked from the lawn where Mrs. Woodrow Wilson lived as a girl at Rome, Ga., will be carried to Washington and presented to the President's wife May 20 by the Old Guard of the Gate City Guard.

Mrs. Wilson was a Georgia girl, a daughter of Rev. Mr. Axson, a well known Presbyterian minister. She spent a great part of her girlhood at Rome and knew personally some of the members of the Old Guard, as it was reorganized after the war.

The Old Guard will visit Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York, Boston and other points to renew the friendships that were made at the time of the historic mission of peace in 1879. The organization will call on President and Mrs. Wilson at the White House, and the presentation of the flowers will be made at that time.

The Guard will leave Atlanta Monday morning. They will spend Tuesday in the Capital City.

According to present plans, about a dozen Georgia women, wives and daughters of the members of the Old Guard, will accompany them on the trip North. Between 50 and 60 members of the Old Guard have already signified their intention of going. They will travel by special train, coming back by water via Savannah.

ITHACA, May 6.—Cornell students are preparing for the role which may be man's when women have the ballot. Some of them have already begun to fit themselves to take their place at the head of the kitchen.

Nine male students have this year registered in the domestic science department of the College of Agriculture. Among them are Watson, of the varsity baseball team, and L. C. Whitney, of Rochester, a member of the Glee Club.

Watson, Whitney and the others spend the regular hours each day in the kitchen laboratories, clad in aprons, kneading dough, studying recipes, cooking and washing dishes.

SUFFRAGETTES' VIOLENCE STIRS CIVIL WAR FEAR

England Roused by Outbreaks and Government's Methods. Militants Burn Church.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, May 6.—Great Britain is becoming panic-stricken at the outrages of militant suffragettes and the criticism of the Government's method of handling the situation is becoming sharper daily. Prophecies are common that the political situation will give way to civil war soon unless the Government finds a way effectually to curb the amazons.

It is estimated that the "wild women," as they were christened by the Public Prosecutor in Bow Street Court yesterday, have done nearly $3,000,000 damage since they opened their campaign of violence under the leadership of Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst two years ago.

"Anti" Papers Under Guard.

Since the offices of The Standard were wrecked yesterday because it published an editorial condemning militancy, other newspapers which have been criticising the methods of the suffragettes have been put under heavy guard.

Ada Ward, a member of the Women's Social and Political Union, was arrested to-day, charged with placing a bomb in the fashionable Grand Hotel in Northumberland Avenue. The hotel at the time was crowded with American and European tourists.

The women made no effort to avoid detection. After taking the bomb from a handbag, she lighted the fuse and then hurried away. Panic followed, but a policeman was on hand and he immediately placed the suffragette under arrest.

Bomb Used as Evidence.

The bomb was made of a tin canister filled with explosive. On the outside of the infernal machine was painted: "Votes for Women." When the woman was taken into Bow Street Police Court for preliminary examination the bomb was offered in evidence against her.

It is now charged that suffragists were responsible for the death of Choo Tai, the $10,000 Pekinese champion, owned by Miss Violet Cross, which was poisoned last week. Miss Cross has offered a reward for information leading to the identity of the poisoner, and declares she will vigorously prosecute any person suspected.

Fear Bill Will Not Pass.

On account of the feminist violence now raging in England, the opinion is being expressed that the female enfranchisement bill, which was moved for second reading in Parliament yesterday, will not pass. Already there is a division of sentiment among the members of Parliament over the bill which, if enacted, would give the ballot to 6,000,000 women.

The opponents to woman suffrage have enlisted the aid of those who had no convictions upon the subject up to the time of the present violence wave. On the other hand, the radical supporters of the "cause" declare that the bill does not give women all the rights they are entitled to.

Nina Boyle and Annie Morrow, arrested for rioting Sunday, to-day were sentenced to spend 14 days in jail or pay $5 fines.

The police are convinced the suffragettes used an explosive bomb and oil-soaked rags.

Suffragettes Accused Of $50,000 Church Fire.

LONDON, May 6.—St. Catherine's Church, a fine modern edifice in South London, was destroyed by fire to-day, with $50,000 loss.

Suffragettes are accused of setting the fire. The police declare that the blaze was of incendiary origin.

A number of cassocks were found saturated with oil, which sustained the theory of the police.

The vicar of the church told of seeing several women leaving the building shortly before the fire was discovered.

Yet It Might Have Been Worse.

Old Are of Greatest Service, Says Wiley

Doctor Declares Race's Benefactors Are All More Than 60 Years of Age.

WASHINGTON, May 6.—Men and women 60 years old and over are the real benefactors and the actual workers for the uplift of the human race, in the opinion of Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, former Government "pure food" expert, who made the declaration to the Washington Secular League.

Dr. Wiley was distinctly opposed to the Osler theory, and insisted it was possible to grow old without becoming senile.

"The idea that the greatest services to humanity are rendered by young men and women," Dr. Wiley said, "is shown by the facts to be erroneous. We do not reach the maximum of efficiency until the age of 60."

DIES SAYING WIFE FIRED FATAL SHOT

George Radcliffe, Columbus Merchant, Succumbs to Wound Inflicted on April 19.

COLUMBUS, GA., May 6.—George Radcliff, a Columbus merchant, who was shot on the night of April 19, for which his wife is being held in the Muscogee County jail, died at the City Hospital last night. He was paralyzed below the waist by his wound.

Radcliff stated from the first that his wife shot him, while she maintained that she was innocent and did not know who did the shooting.

The woman, it is alleged by the police, was infuriated with her husband because he left home with another man over her protest. There was no previous trouble between the couple, the difficulty being the result of a drunken row, according to the police.

Mrs. Radcliff will remain in jail until the grand jury passes on her case.

In the book in which the local teetotalers are registered his name appears as No. 1824.

TURKS GIVE UP ALBANIA; ARMY TO GO TO ASIA

Greeks Agree to Let Evacuating Troops Return to Native Land With Their Arms.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

VIENNA, May 6.—Having failed in its final effort to retain Albania as a Turkish possession in Europe, the Ottoman Government to-day sent orders to Essed Pasha, former commander at Scutari, to cease his efforts to keep the Crescent flag flying over the new monarchy.

This information was contained in an exchange company telegram from Constantinople. In addition it stated that the Turkish Government has entered into an agreement with Greece relative to the transportation of the two Turkish armies under Essed Pasha and Djavid Pasha from Albania to Asia Minor.

These troops will not be made prisoners of war, but will be allowed to return to Turkey with their arms.

That section of the press regarded as official said to-day that Austria has come to the conclusion that Montenegro should not be compensated for giving up Scutari.

According to the official press, Austria and Italy have come to an agreement as to the disposition of Albania, and this program neither called for a division of that territory nor the cession of any of it to Montenegro.

Italy Not to Send Force Into Albania.

ROME, May 6.—In consequence of Montenegro's action in leaving the status of Scutari to the powers, Italy has abandoned the plan to send an expedition into Albania, it was announced to-day.

U. S. WOMEN IN PERIL AS REBEL ARMY ATTACKS

American and English Refugees Caught Between Fires in Battle at Cuernavaca, Mexico.

MEXICO CITY, May 6.—A number of American and English women and children are imperiled in Cuernavaca, capitol of the State of Morelos, by fighting there between Zapatista rebels and federals under General Robles. The rebels outnumber the Government force, but the latter is equipped with heavy artillery and machine guns. The insurrectos made two attacks upon Cuernavaca yesterday and another in the darkness early to-day.

Five hundred soldiers, 200 infantrymen and 300 cavalrymen, left here this morning on a troop train for the scene of the fighting.

Another revolutionary outbreak is reported from the Southern part of the State of Vera Cruz. Tramp steamers, plying as filibusters, are said to have landed ammunition and arms there. Bandits and rebels are pillaging and burning towns and ranch buildings. This is the eighth revolt against President Huerta since Francisco I. Madero, Jr., was put out of office.

LONDON, May 6.—The house of lords, sitting as the highest court of appeals, has handed down a decision prohibiting secret proceedings in divorce and other suits in Great Britain in the future.

Relieved eczema instantly

Philadelphia, Pa., March 28, 1913: "Resinol has surely been a friend in need to me. I had eczema on my face. It was in the form of a rash. I used many treatments, without any results. I tried Resinol Soap and Resinol Ointment and it gave me instant relief, and very thankful I was, for my whole head felt like it was afire. I told the doctor about Resinol and he highly recommended it and told me to continue its use. I am now completely cured of that dreadful disease after using only about four jars of Resinol Ointment and washing with Resinol Soap." (Signed) Miss Carolene B. Laughlin, 174 Pleasant St., Mt. Airey.

Wilson Rivals Dewey As Beau Brummel

Reputation of Admiral as Best Dressed Man in Washington Menaced by President.

WASHINGTON, May 6.—Of all his laurels Admiral George Dewey is in danger of losing the leaf awarded him as the best dressed man in Washington. For President Wilson seems to yearn to go down in history as the Beau Brummel of Presidents.

Perhaps unwittingly Mr. Wilson has appropriated to his own wear the soft, almost cream gray cloth so becoming to Admiral Dewey. The President is fond of brown clothes, too.

On informal occasions he wears sack coats. His frock coats are of lusterless black cloth and are bound with black silk braid. With a frock coat he adorns himself with a white silk four-in-hand tie. His evening clothes have heavy grained silk lapels. He dons a pale gray brocaded silk waistcoast with his dinner jacket. His silk socks, scarf and handkerchiefs always match in color.

ATLANTA BANKS AFTER PART OF NEW U. S. FUND

Government Soon to Deposit Additional $10,000,000—Municipal Bonds as Security.

Atlanta national banks are taking advantage to the full of charges being put into effect by the new Secretary of the Treasury. Secretary McAdoo has announced that the Government soon will deposit $10,000,000 additional in the banks. He announced at the same time that instead of requiring that deposits be covered dollar for dollar with Government 2s, he will accept municipal bonds under certain restriction as security for deposits.

Both of these charges will operate to the benefit of Atlanta and the South in general.

Government depositories here have put in application for a share of the $10,000,000. The money can be used to advantage in the South. Eastern banks, on the other hand, are not so anxious for additional Government funds since they will have to pay 2 per cent interest in future.

Many Southern Applications.

There are about 900 Government depositories in the United States. Of these, 300 have made application for the $10,000,000, and it is surmised, from the facts stated, that many of these applicants are in the South.

As Atlanta banks understand the municipal bond restrictions, 30 per cent of the bonds they are required to deposit with the Treasurer may be municipals, at 75 per cent of their value. In other words, a bank holding $100,000 Government funds may put up $70,000 in Government 2s, and $40,000 in municipal bonds, yielding 4 1-2 or 5 per cent.

By doing this, notwithstanding the payment of 2 per cent interest on deposits, the transaction will yield a small profit in interest, besides possible profits from purchasing municipal bonds chiefly, during periods of depression like the present, and realizing a profit on their rise in value.

Government bonds cost a small premium, and never fluctuate in value.

Opens Municipal Bond Market.

The new ruling opens up a market for municipal bonds, too, in a quarter which was closed to such issues before.

This does not amount to so much in Atlanta, with $500,000 Government deposits now, and a possible $600,000 when the additional $10,000,000 is allotted, but for the nation, it amounts to considerable.

Government deposits all over the nation will amount to $53,000,000, which will make a market for $16,430,000 in municipal bonds, if the depositories care to take advantage of it.

Banks have found it profitable to handle postal savings deposits under a similar system.

MISS AGNES TINSLEY HARRISON, of Atlanta, who made local debut as professional actress Monday night.

ATLANTA ACTRESS IN LOCAL DEBUT

Miss Agnes Harrison Wins Applause on Appearance Here as Professional in Stock.

Miss Agnes Tinsley Harrison, a well known Atlanta girl, is receiving numerous congratulations on the success that attended her local debut as a professional actress with Miss Billy Long's stock company at the Atlanta Theater Monday night. Miss Harrison appeared in the role of Clarice Stapleton, a young society girl, in the comedy drama, "The Girl From Out Yonder," Miss Long's offering for the week.

Though competing with a company of seasoned professionals, and naturally affected by nervousness on her first appearance, Miss Harrison's work did not suffer in contrast with the acting of the other members of the company; in fact, she was one of the hits of the show and would have been even had she not been an Atlanta girl. She possesses a good stage presence, her lines were enunciated clearly, and she played the part with a simplicity and power that appealed to the audience.

Strongest in Third Act.

Her strongest scene came in the third act, when she changed quickly from a portrayal of jealous dissatisfaction to the realization of love. Her work in this scene was decidedly clever, and she earned a round of applause.

The boxes and orchestra seats were filled with a number of Miss Harrison's friends, and they showered applause upon her in recognition of her work. At the end of the second act she was given a great armful of roses.

Miss Harrison has selected "Marjorie Mason" as her stage name. She is taking up stage life with the highest ambitions. She wants to rise to the topmost heights of her profession, and if her work of last night can be taken as a criterion of her ability, she is destined for greater things in the theatrical world.

Comes From Talented Family.

Miss Harrison comes from a well-known and talented family, and prepared for the stage by two years of study. Her ability as an elocutionist created an impression upon her instructor at St. Mary's College, at Raleigh, N. C., and she was urged to enter the professional ranks.

Her relationship gives an added touch of interest to her stage debut. Her sister, Miss Emily Harrison, has achieved success in educational work. She is a niece of the late Mrs. Robert Emory Park, and a cousin of Mrs. Virginia Clay Clopton, of Alabama. The families of Harrison, Tinsley and Hendree, with which she is connected, have produced many prominent figures in Georgia history.

Train Kills Soldier At Fort McPherson

Relatives of Private John Galivan Not Located—Engineer and Conductor Surrender.

Preparations are being made for the burial of John Galivan, private in Company L, Seventeenth United States Infantry, who was struck and instantly killed Monday night by a Central of Georgia passenger train. Galivan's place of enlistment has not been learned and thus far no relatives have been located.

It is said Galivan, who was slightly deaf, did not hear the approaching train as he crossed the tracks in front of the army post. His neck and practically every bone in his body was broken.

W. B. Last and J. D. Wather, engineer and conductor of the train, after surrendering themselves, were released on their own recognizance.

Galivan was a native of Ireland, 45 years old, and had been in the service 20 years. He was a Spanish War veteran.

JOKE MAY COST PARK JOB WITH STATE BANKERS

Strong Fight Is Made on Legal Representation Because of Utterance at Macon.

Some of the members of the Georgia Bankers Association are going to the convention in Macon this month prepared to do battle. Just how much battle they will do depends on developments, but indications are for a lively time.

The fight will center around the appointment of a legal representative for the association.

Orville Park, of Macon, is the present legal representative. In a recent speech at a group meeting in Macon, he made a "bad break." He suggested, jocularly, he says, that bankers attempt to influence Legislators in favor of the new bank law when the Legislators come seeking loans.

The speech was reported, and caused a rumpus. Mr. Park sticks to his "all a joke" explanation. But many of the bankers are not satisfied. They think a man of legal acumen sufficient to advise the bankers should be shrewd enough not to make ill-timed and ill-considered jests.

Mr. Park does not want to quit under fire.

Hence the probability of warfare.

The position of legal representative pays a salary merely nominal, but the appointment brings considerable legal business to the holder of the title, and is valuable in that way.

Sleep Cures Small Orphans' Wanderlust

Six-Mile Flight From Baptist Home in Scanty Attire Too Much for Brothers.

James Johnson, aged 6, and Charles Johnson, 3 years old, are perfectly satisfied to remain at the Georgia Baptist Orphans' Home at Hapeville. The 6-mile walk they indulged in Monday after taking French leave from the institution proved a bit too much for them, and the two "kiddies" were sleeping like tops when the breakfast bell sounded Tuesday morning.

The youngsters were placed in the institution by their aunt, Mrs. Carrie Meade, of 24 Milledgeville Avenue, but at the time declared their intention of leaving the place. They succeeded in slipping away from the home and two hours later were found in West End.

Attired in a slim amount of raiment somewhat akin to pajamas, the two boys drew smiles from the West Enders. They were returned to the orphans' home, but declared their intention of leaving again. The long walk, however, brought heavy sleep to the wanderers, and they were sleeping soundly at last reports from the home this morning.

French Anarchists Doom King Alfonso

Paris Police Expect Hard Time Guarding Ruler on State Visit to Poincare.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, May 6.—On account of the activity of anarchists, the Paris police fear they will have a difficult time protecting the life of King Alfonso, of Spain, who will arrive here to-morrow on a state visit to President Poincare.

Revolutionaries held a violent meeting to-day, at which a resolution was adopted declaring that Alfonso is an enemy of democracy and should so be treated. The police broke up the meeting and arrested several of the ringleaders, who will be locked up until the Spanish King has left.

Alfonso will remain in Paris two days, leaving Friday, after a review of the aerial fleet of the French army.

ANGRY ANGLERS DEFY STATE LAWS

Game Warden Says Mob of 300 Threatened Him and Mayor of Nashville Locked Him Up.

Having his revolver taken from him and his life threatened by a mob of from 200 to 300 people is neither a pleasant nor a dignified experience for an officer of the law to undergo, but that's what happened to Deputy Game Warden M. F. Boisclair when he tried to stop the fishing in the big pond at Milltown, between Lowndes and Berrien Counties.

Deputy Boisclair is back in Atlanta with his exciting tale and State Game Warden Jesse E. Mercer has deemed the matter of sufficient importance to take it up with Governor Brown.

Warden Mercer said he had sent a warden from an adjoining county to Milltown about a month ago, but the officer was so greatly intimidated that he was able to accomplish nothing. Then he sent Deputy Boisclair.

"He swore out 22 warrants," declared Mr. Mercer in relating the details of his officer's trip to the fishing pond. "But he says that no sooner had he done this than he was warned to leave that section of the country. He found public sentiment so strong against him that he withdrew the warrants in the justice courts and went to Nashville, the county seat of Berrien County, and again swore them out.

"While he was talking to the justice of the peace in Nashville, he reports that he was surrounded by a mob of from 200 to 300 and that Mayor Pafford shook his finger in his face and called him names. He says the Mayor ordered his arrest without a warrant and had his revolver taken from him. It was only with the greatest difficulty that two bondsmen were found."

Warden Mercer declared Tuesday that his department would enforce the law, regardless of the attitude or sentiment of the people in the various localities.

"I am going to enforce the law," he stated, "if I have to camp on the bank of the pond all summer, spend every dollar in the department and call on the Governor for assistance."

Start Your Baby With Sound Health

Regular Bowel Movement from Childhood on Forestalls Future Serious Diseases

We cannot all start life with the advantages of money, but every child born is entitled to the heritage of good health. Through unfortunate ignorance or carelessness in the feeding of a baby its tiny stomach may become deranged. The disorder spreads to the bowels and before the mother realizes it the two chief organs on which the infant's comfort and health depend are causing it great suffering. If the condition is allowed to continue grave ailments often result.

There is, however, no occasion for alarm, and the sensible thing to do—but it should be done instantly—is to give the baby a small dose of a mild laxative-tonic. In the opinion of a great many people, among them such well-known persons as the parents of Dixie Dudley, Magnolia, Ark., the proper remedy is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. Mrs. Earl Dudley writes: "Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is the best medicine I ever used. It cured my baby of flatulency colic when the doctors failed; it cured my husband of constipation. My home shall never be without Syrup Pepsin." It is a pleasant-tasting laxative, which every person likes. It is mild, non-griping, and contains that most excellent of all digestants, pepsin.

This remedy is especially intended for infants, children, women, old people and all others to whom harsh cathartics, salt waters, pills, etc., are distressing. In fact, in the common disorders of life, such as constipation, liver trouble, indigestion, biliousness, headaches, and the various other disorders of the stomach, liver and bowels nothing is more suitable than this mild laxative-tonic, Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin.

DIXIE ASKEW DUDLEY.

Two generations of people are using it to-day, and thousands of families keep it constantly in the house, for every member of the family can use it. It can be obtained of any druggist at fifty cents or one dollar a bottle, the latter being the size bought by families who already know its value. Results are always guaranteed or money will be refunded.

If no member of your family has ever used Syrup Pepsin and you would like to make a personal trial of it before buying it in the regular way of a druggist, send your address—a postal will do—to W. B. Caldwell, 417 Washington St., Monticello, Ill., and a free sample bottle will be mailed you.

The Empire Life's Great 12-Year Record

The Empire Life Building, Home Office of the Company.

It is, no doubt, a source of gratification to the people of the South, and especially those of Georgia, to note the steady and substantial growth of The Empire, their home Life Insurance Company.

The Empire Life's recent statement as filed with the Insurance Department of the State of Georgia shows a wonderful transformation of figures since its first entrance into the insurance field in 1901. Every year has shown an increase over the previous year, which shows conclusively the growth of the company to be steady, and not spasmodic.

MOVEMENT TO DIVIDE FLORIDA LIKELY TO WIN

Georgians View With Interest Effort to Make Two States of Southern Peninsula.

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

Georgians generally will be interested in the movement now aggressively under way to divide the State of Florida into two States, to be known, respectively, as East and West Florida.

Every now and then, a motion has been made to divide the grand old State of Georgia—as the stump speakers call it—into two separate commonwealths, and this proposition bobs up now and then in the suggestion that Macon be made the capital of the State instead of Atlanta, but it never has gone to anything like the length that the movement to divide Florida has gone.

A bill already has been prepared for introduction in the Florida Legislature—as a matter of fact, it is scheduled to be sent to the House for a first reading Wednesday, May 7—and there can be no doubt that the movement is on in dead earnest and in all seriousness.

A poll of the State Legislature, moreover, is said to favor the idea, and every indication is that the bill will pass.

After the passage of the bill the measure will be submitted to the people for a vote, and if ratified, the Governor will take the matter up with the Florida congressional delegation and proceed at once to apply for statehood for both the proposed new States, without any further action in the Florida Legislature. The newspapers of the State are nearly all in favor of the movement.

The matter has gone so far that already keen rivalries have sprung up between cities in both the proposed new States, wishing to be the capitals thereof. Citizens generally seem to view the forthcoming division—if it ever arrives—with calmness and poise.

Nobody seems to be mad with anybody particularly—somehow. Florida appears merely to think that it just as well be two States as one, if not better!

One aspiring city, with somebody possessed of a happy sense of humor press-agenting its claims to the capital plum of one of the new States, gravely asserts that it is entitled to the honor because "the town is utterly free of insects, and is popular with the politicians."

Whether the one statement negatives the other is, of course, for the gentle reader to say.

The Vidalia Advance, in publishing the following unique communication from a correspondent, has solved something of a mystery, and thrown an illuminating and serious light upon a matter considered for many years more or less of a joke:

"Editor Advance: I notice in a recent issue of your paper where you say that you will hereafter leave off 'Colonel' from the names of attorneys, in which I heartily agree with you, as I think the highest title an American in civil life can have is 'Mr.,' writes L. J. Cowart.

"But as to how they came to be called Colonel I will explain for the benefit of posterity. Some time in the distant past every Solicitor General was, by virtue of his office, a member of the Governor's staff, with the rank of colonel, and there being but few lawyers in the State, they were soon nearly all solicitors or ex-solicitors general, and for fear of robbing some of them of their military title, of which they were very proud, the people, and more especially strangers, called them all 'Colonel,' until finally it is applied to all alike, some of whom I am constrained to believe would scarcely make a good country 'squire.

"Yours, etc., C. B. N."

Governor Joseph M. Brown delights to talk of nothing so much, perhaps, as of his big Cherokee County farm, where every now and then he spends a few hours—sometimes a day or more—looking over things.

He can catch an early train out of Atlanta, ride four miles through the country and back, catch an afternoon train back to Atlanta, and not be absent from the executive office more than six or eight hours.

When he gets to the farm, however, he keeps things on the jump, for every minute counts. He can get over a surprising amount of territory in a mighty short time, and he generally comes back to the Capital with his cuffs covered with minute pencil memoranda, about this, that and the other things, big and little, needing attention in some way.

He knows all the country folk about his farm, and they are to a man proud of their neighbor, both as a statesman and a farmer—for they look upon him as an eminent success in both lines of endeavor.

John R. Cooper, of Macon, is an Atlanta visitor.

Mr. Cooper says his late Congressional race, although he failed to win, has not greatly discouraged him. He intimates that he may have another try at that plum some of these days.

Brenau Composer Given Signal Honor

Otto W. G. Pfefferkorn Chosen by Godowsky to Help Arrange Ideal Piano Course.

Georgia has been signally honored through the selection of Otto W. G. Pfefferkorn, director of music at Brenau College, Gainesville, Ga., as a collaborator with Godowsky, the world famous pianist, in the preparation of an ideal course of study for piano students.

Mr. Pfefferkorn received the invitation from one of the leading publishing companies of America, the gifted American director being chosen at the request of Godowsky himself.

Godowsky, who is of Vienna, is one of the foremost musicians of the day. Mr. Pfefferkorn, who has been connected with Brenau Conservatory for twelve years, is a composer himself, his work being widely known.

The Austrian and American musicians were chosen in order to make the ideal course of study one of international scope and interest.

U. S. Asked to Aid in Battle Celebration

Representative Howard Promises to Try to Interest Federal Government—Socities Meet.

The semi-centennial of the Battle of Atlanta will be celebrated by Atlantans. Wilmer C. Moore, president of the Chamber of Commerce, has been working on the plan, and at 3:30 o'clock Tuesday a meeting will be held at which all of the patriotic societies in the city will be represented. Arrangements for the celebration will be made.

An effort will be made to obtain Federal aid in holding the celebration. Representative William Schley Howard has been communicated with by President Moore and has written that he will try to interest the National Government. Other members of the Georgia delegation are also being communicated with.

Atlantan Arbiter in Raleigh Water Fight

Benjamin H. Hall Fixes Price for Plant—Daniels to Sue for Burning of Newspaper.

Benjamin H. Hall, an Atlanta engineer, is back in the city to-day after spending several weeks in Raleigh, N. C., as a member of a board of arbitration to settle a suit for the possession and operation of the Raleigh waterworks.

The arbitration board decided on a price of $250,000, suggested by Mr. Hall. Figures were based on a careful survey and estimate of the water power plant and the distributing system.

An impounding basin is planned. Heretofore there has been no reserve for fire or emergency. It is understood that Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy, will sue the city for the difference in the loss of his newspaper plant and the insurance he carried. He will base the suit upon the assertion that the property was insufficiently protected by the city.

Llewellyn has produced a portrait of Queen Mary making her look like a Parisian beauty.

LAWYER FEARS CITIZENS WILL MOB WILBURN

Attorney Who Admits He Has Been One of Lynchers Himself Begs Change of Venue.

"I helped lynch one man in a court house, and I don't want to help lynch another."

This was the sensational statement made to the Supreme Court at the Capitol by John R. Cooper, a Macon attorney, as he pleaded for a change of venue for Nick Wilburn, alleged Jones County murderer. The court has the plea under consideration.

Wilburn, together with Mrs. James King, is charged with murdering the woman's husband last December. Feeling in Jones County was so strong against him he was rushed to Macon and placed in Bibb County jail for safekeeping.

Attorney Cooper, acting under the recently enacted Felker law, asked the trial judge for a change of venue. This was denied. He appealed to the Supreme Court, but that body questioned its jurisdiction in the matter.

In addressing the court, Mr. Cooper declared that if a Jones County jury recommended his client to mercy the citizens would take him out and hang him in two minutes.

Fears Client's Lynching.

"I don't want Wilburn mobbed in a court of justice," he said. "I helped lynch one man in a court house at Valdosta and every time I heard a noise outside while the case was being tried, I thought it was a mob marching on the building to take my client."

Mr. Cooper referred to the case of Old Man Rawlings," convicted and hanged in Lowndes County, after a long fight was made to save him.

Felker Law Test.

Under the Felker law, Mr. Cooper claims it is mandatory on the part of the trial judge to order a change of venue when there is doubt about a fair trial and he wants the Supreme Court to compel the trial judge to issue the order.

Attorney General Felder, appearing for the State, also asked the court to make a decision and have the question settled. The court asked both sides to submit written arguments to be acted upon later.

After Wilburn's arrest detectives claimed to have secured a confession from him, and also one from the dead man's wife. Wilburn now repudiates his confession and declares he is innocent.

Mr. Cooper says Jones County people have made up their minds that Wilburn is guilty and should hang, and he insists that Wilburn will be killed legally or otherwise if forced to go to trial in that county.

Slang Is All Right, Says Girl Evangelist

"You've Got to Get It Across, So Use the Hot Stuff," She Declares.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 6.—Miss Amy Stockton, girl preacher and San Jose normal student, is going to "pass up" the use of classic English in her addresses and use slang when that form of speech carries with it the "kick."

With modifications of Billy Sunday's grammatical curves and drives she proposes, as an evangelist, to hew out a direct method of discourse all her own.

"You've got to get it across to your hearers," said Miss Stockton. "Some of my friends have roasted me for the slang; others say it is right stuff. Anyway, I'm for it."

DRUMMOND, JR., WON'T REFORM; 2D BRIDE SUES

"Riches Don't Mean Happiness When Your Husband Is Untrue," She Declares.

LOS ANGELES, May 6.—"Beautiful clothes and jewels do not make a marriage happy if your husband is joy-riding with other women."

With wistful expression in her dark blue eyes, Mrs. John R. Drummond, Jr., who is suing the son of the multimillionaire tobacco magnate for divorce on the grounds of desertion, cruelty and infidelity, said so to-day. She maintained wealth did not mean happiness.

Mrs. Drummond told for the first time the cause leading to the break-up in what was known as an "ideal marriage."

"I loved my husband," said Mrs. Drummond, "but I never knew where he was. Evenings he would go away and never say when he would return or where he was going. He led a high, fast life, leaving me alone with our little daughter.

"I knew Mr. Drummond was divorced from his first wife and that she was a beautiful and charming woman. The grounds of her divorce were practically the same as mine. He treated her cruelly as he did me, but I foolishly hoped I could reform him.

"Married life has taken away my youth and beauty. I was famed in Chicago as a beautiful girl, now worry has made me a wreck. I met John R. Drummond, Jr., in Los Angeles, five years ago, when I was visiting here. I was carried away by his dashing manner, for he was an ardent lover. I returned to Chicago in about a month and he followed me there, where we were married.

"We had a beautiful wedding and I hoped for a happy married life. Mr. Drummond did not care to stay at home evenings or seem to enjoy my company after a few weeks. Our little daughter, Virginia Harrison Drummond, who is nearly four years old, is our only tie.

"I am told that Mr. Drummond is now camping at Lakeside, near San Diego, a summer resort where he lives in the company of other women."

Boy Badly Hurt by Runaway Elevator

J. W. Green Tries to Catch His Ascending Lift and Is Hurled to Basement.

J. W. Green, an elevator boy in the Candler Building, is recovering from a fall from the first floor to the basement late Monday afternoon. One leg was broken, and it is thought internal injuries were sustained. Green was at once removed to Wesley Memorial Hospital. He resides at the Greer House, Walton Street.

According to the elevator starter, Green, a new employee, is said to have left his car without placing the brakes at a full stop. As he stepped from it the elevator began to ascend, and Green made a dash to board it. Gaining only a partial foothold, the boy was carried from the basement to the first floor, when he struck the sides of the shaft and was dashed back into the basement.

Miss O'Gorman Will Wed Her Life-Saver

Romance of New York Senator's Daughter Began With Seashore Incident.

WASHINGTON, May 6.—Behind the announcement that Miss Dolorita O'Gorman is to wed John Anthony Maher, of New York City, May 24, is a pretty story.

Miss O'Gorman and her fiance saw each other for the first time four years ago when she was spending the summer on the New Jersey coast.

Maher was a strong swimmer, while Miss O'Gorman was only a beginner, and on the occasion which marks the beginning of the romance she got out beyond her depth. Young Maher jumped in and saved her life. He is a son of Edward Maher, former Mayor of Albany, and is wealthy.

Manufacturers Ask Whitehall Regrading

Jobbers, Too, Deny There Has Been Opposition to Improvement of Business Street.

Whitehall Street jobbers and manufacturers have signed an emphatic statement advocating the regrading of that street from Mitchell to Brotherton Streets.

The petition reads:

"We, the manufacturers of Whitehall Street, desire to correct the report that some opposition has been shown by manufacturers to the grading of Whitehall Street. On the contrary, and without exception, we consider it the greatest street improvement that can be made at this time in our entire city.

"The $5,000 which we would urge the city to furnish at once will be made and saved many times over to both the city and business interests."

THOUSANDS GIVEN THEATER TICKETS

Great Mass of Coupons Causes Delay—Many More To Be Mailed Out.

Office employees of The Georgian and Sunday American worked all of Monday and late into the night mailing out free theater tickets to thousands of Georgian and American readers who clipped and sent in the necessary four coupons and a self-addressed, stamped envelope.

Despite this hard work, so heavy that it interfered seriously with the regular office routine, it was impossible to work through more than half of the letters sent in.

Therefore, readers will remember, please, that because of the great demand it will be impossible to furnish tickets for any particular night. Naturally, capacious as the Atlanta Theater is, it cannot care for all The Georgian and American guests in one night, or two. Several hundreds will be cared for each night until all requests have been satisfied.

And please be assured that while there is some necessary delay because of the great mass of work to be done your ticket will come through the mail, unless—

You are one of those who failed to send in a complete set of coupons; or one of those who failed to send a stamped envelope; or one of those who failed to give name and address.

If you are one of these, we are sorry, but there will be no ticket for you.

Lauer told officials he was jealous of a boarder in his home, and, looking for him, shot Clatworthy by mistake.

Dresden---The City of the Sistine Modonia and Exqusite China.

Some of this China is Unusually Priced in the Bozarr

Dresden claims the interest of world-tourists primarily by virtue of Raphael's wonderful painting, the Sistine Madonna, and hen by the china that bears its name. No one will deny that Dresden china is in its way a work of art just as the Sistine Madonna is. The phrase "as dainty as a piece of Dresden china" did not just happen.

And a splendid collection of this china is priced very remarkably in the Bazaar right now. We doubt if Atlanta has ever had such a display — especially at such prices. And at this time when the June Brides' presents are to be bought and the home is to be fixed up for the summer such prices take on a very interesting meaning.

CHICAGO AIMS TO ANNIHILATE VICE

Investigators Recommend That Segregated District Be Done Away With.

CHICAGO, May 6.—Annihilation of vice rather than segregation in Chicago was the keynote of a preliminary report of the City Council vice committee, announced to-day. The committee reported improved conditions since the closing of the vice districts, and recommended the following:

That vice be annihilated wherever found.

That apartment houses supposed to be used for immoral purposes be watched by the police, and arrests made so frequently that the business will be unprofitable.

That parents and children be instructed in sex problems.

That applications for marriage licenses be publicly announced in advance of the granting of the licenses.

That employers take especial pains to protect their girl employees.

LOS ANGELES AT POLLS FIGHTING SOCIALISM

LOS ANGELES, May 6.—Interest in the primary election here to-day centered about the attempt to defeat Job Harriman, Socialist candidate for Mayor.

DEMOCRATS SOLID FOR TARIFF BILL

Wool Certain to Go on Free List When It Comes to Vote Thursday.

WASHINGTON, May 6.—An almost solid Democratic vote will be cast for the Underwood tariff bill, which will come up for final action in the House probably Thursday. Several Ohio Democrats, opposed to the free wool provision in the bill, will vote against it, including Representative Ashbrook. There probably will be no other Democratic votes in opposition.

Progressives will divide, Representative Murdock, Progressive leader, voting against the measure. Some of his followers will vote for it, and still others will not vote at all. Representative Kent, of Ohio, Independent, will vote for the bill.

A final show-down on the question of whether raw wool should remain on the free list came to-day, and it was apparent that there was a multitude of Democratic votes to make certain that the provision will be in the bill.

Opponents of the income tax principle are about evenly divided between the Democratic and Republican sides, although no Democrats will oppose the bill.

Dispute on Tile Rate Before Commission

Roads Contend Carrying Charge for Fragile Building Material Should Be Higher Than for Brick.

Hollow tile, used in the construction of Atlanta skyscrapers, should be carried by the railroads at the same rate as ordinary building brick, according to the contention of the manufacturers. The railroads contend that hollow tile is more fragile than brick, can not be loaded as heavily, and should take a higher rate.

The case was before the Georgia Railroad Commission Tuesday for a hearing. The Chattanooga Sewer Pipe Co., whose plant is across the line in Georgia, and the Oconee Brick and Tile Co., of Milledgeville, Ga., are the principal complainants.

Another case before the commission Tuesday is a request for additional passenger service between Bremen and Cedartown, Ga., on the Central of Georgia Railroad.

GIRL-WIFE'S FOLLY CAUSE OF SLAYING

Mrs. Irene LeCount Gives Warning Against Marrying Young and to Trust Husband Only.

CHICAGO, May 6.—Declaring she was branded with a woman's shame, Mrs. Irene Westfall LeCount, 17 years old, widow of Leon L. LeCount, slain by Joe Williams, a young art student, in a quarrel over attentions said to have been paid Mrs. LeCount, to-day warned other girls from the path she followed.

For the first time she seemed to realize her husband's death was the result of her folly.

"I want to warn girls not to trust any man after they are married, except their husbands, and none at all before that," she said. "I was lonesome. I was a careless little girl when I went out seeking amusement, chaperoned at first, and later alone.

"Now I am branded. I am paying for my sin. I wish to warn other girls not to marry until they grow up. It's best to wait until they can deny themselves the little pleasures young girls like."

Williams was held without bail by a Coroner's jury. He will plead he shot LeCount in self-defense. Williams has a wife in Kansas City.

THE PLAYS THIS WEEK

"THE GIRL" SPLENDIDLY PLAYED.

With every part excellently cast, "The Girl From Out Yonder" was given the initial performance of the week by Miss Billy Long and supporting company at the Atlanta last night.

The big audience was in thorough sympathy with the work of the players, generous in applause and laughter.

The central characters in the story are the daughter and father, played by Miss Long and Joseph Kirkham, and that their work was most excellent is best evidenced by the fact that the big scene—the parting—in the third act was met by a silence as breathless as it was profound, and in which the female element of the audience were constantly drying their eyes, more or less surreptitiously.

The story of the play briefly is that an old light house keeper has reared his daughter from infancy to young womanhood as a rough little sea chap, with all the characteristics and manners of the rough sea folks. When the story opens she has met a young civil engineer and they love each other. The old father believes that twenty years earlier he has murdered the civil engineer's father in a drunken fit. That his daughter may marry the young man, he tells her that she is not his daughter, but a bit of human flotsam from a wreck. That another killed the engineer's father is shown in the last act, and all comes out right.

Without exception, every part was well played, and besides those mentioned above, Ralph Marthy as Joey handled a difficult character study well, and Miss Kathryn Sheldon and Al Warren presented some effective and infectious comedy. In the part of Cousin Simonson Miss Sheldon was particularly good, for the character is one which could be so easily overdrawn.

Except Wednesday evening, "The Girl from Out Yonder" will be played all week every evening and at Wednesday and Saturday matinees.

SPLENDID BILL AT FORSYTH.

It's a "summery" show they have at the Forsyth this week—one of those light, bright, refreshing bills that is fully able to successfully combat hot weather. There's a lot of singing and dancing, pretty girls and laughs galore—and that's the season of summer vaudeville.

Atlanta always is partial to a Gus Edwards' production, more than likely because they always are good. The Kid Kabaret which heads this week's bill at the Forsyth is no exception. With a dozen or more clever young folks and the latest of Edwards' catchy music, the act delights thoroughly. Some old favorites are in the bunch—Eddie Cantor, George Jessell, the funny little Yiddish man; Betty Washington and Ruthie Francis. Each of them scores the usual hit. Little Miss Washington with her violin—in the parlance of the footlights—registers a "regular knockout."

Thomas J. Lewis, attorney for the petitioners, said definite plans would be decided on at some future meeting of the association.

EXONERATION IN GRAFT PROBE ANGERS MAYOR

Renews Accusations Against the Council Despite Sweeping Acquittal of Officials.

Council's unanimous action in exonerating Fire Chief W. B. Cummings and Aldermen J. W. Maddox, F. J. Spratling and I. N. Ragsdale has aroused Mayor Woodward to additional attacks. He said Tuesday:

"I believe the charges against Chief Cummings, regardless of the action of the investigating committee and Council.

"I had nothing to do with accusing the Aldermen, but I knew Council would vindicate them. Council had to to protect itself; for all its members have known for months of the alleged corrupt activities.

"Just the same, I have accomplished what I expected to accomplish. I have let the people know what is going on in their city government. I have won a victory against graft and corruption despite Council, for the people do not approve of their "whitewashings."

Exoneration Not Protested.

In striking contrast to the attitude of the Mayor is that of every member of Council. The reports of the two investigating committees were unanimously adopted without a note of protest.

The evidence was reviewed at length and the closing words of each report were:

"The evidence does not support the charges."

Councilman Albert Thomson was the only member to voice a resentment. When the report of Alderman John S. Candler's committee on the councilmanic graft charges had been read, Councilman Thomson said:

"I move that the report of this committee be adopted, the committee be thanked and continued as a body. Some serious accusations have been made through the newspapers against Alderman John E. McClelland, the accuser of his three colleagues. I am sure he will want these charges investigated when he returns from his leave of absence, and I want this committee to make the investigation."

McClelland Charges Pass.

However, the committee was dismissed at the request of its members. It was stated that if Alderman McClelland wanted the charges against him investigated a new committee could be appointed.

The essence of the report of the fire probe committee was:

"That the committee preferred to believe the denial of Chief Cummings instead of the unsupported statement of R. E. Davidson, fire apparatus agent, that he had presented Chief Cummings with $400.

"That the purchase of the $9,000 fire engine by the Board of Firemasters without authority from Council was not a purchase, but merely a recommendation to Council, and, therefore, not irregular.

"That the system of buying hose without competitive bids was an old precedent in the department, for which Chief Cummings was not responsible, wrong though it was, and that the evidence disproved the accusation that Chief Cummings had failed to secure for the city an available 10 per cent discount on hose.

Candler Committee Positive.

Alderman John S. Candler's councilmanic graft probe committee was somewhat more positive in its exonerations.

Referring to the charge against Alderman Maddox that he had illegally held sub-contracts with the city, it stated:

"Maddox was requested and urged by the contractor to make bids on the excavations in question. Before bidding he sought the advice of the City Attorney.

"Maddox did not violate the code in question and he did not do anything which, under the charter of the city, the ordinances of same and the code of the State he could not legally do."

Ragsdale Is Praised.

The conclusion on the charges against Alderman Ragsdale that he had been dealing in stock with the city was:

"A careful examination of every act of Alderman Ragsdale in connection with the various transactions with which he has been connected all show the acts of a faithful, honest, conscientious officer of the city, doing far more for the city than his duty required him to do, and doing these acts for the sole purpose of helping the city, and, so far as it was possible for us to ascertain, at a great loss of both time and money to himself."

Spratling Charges Dismissed.

The report reviewed the charges that Alderman F. J. Spratling had borrowed money from beer dealers and dismissed them as follows:

"Your committee is of the opinion that the General Council can not take cognizance of matters such as these, which happened long prior to the election to membership in this body, and where every person concerned, under a rigid examination, avers that there was no promise of assistance nor of help of any sort and no engagement for any service of any sort to any of the parties from the Alderman named."

ROUND-ABOUT-TOWN STORIES

Picked Wrong Man To Get Interview.

"While I was in Los Angeles recently," said the Atlanta man who used to be a newspaper reporter, "I ran into Arthur Bennett. In the days of the Cotton States Exposition Arthur was a reporter for one of the Atlanta papers. He was sent out to get a lot of interviews with prominent citizens concerning the demonetization of silver, that question being a burning one about that time. Arthur was new to the town and didn't know many prominent citizens. He had made friends with a local poet and went to him for advice.

"'Aw, that's easy,' said the poet. 'Here's a city directory. Pick out the names that look good to you and interview 'em. They'll all fall for it. Feel swelled up to see their names in the paper.'

"Arthur did as directed. The interviews were gems. The office was pleased and Arthur was thinking of striking the boss for a raise when somebody called attention to the fact that one of the gentlemen interviewed had been dead for about three years. The directory the poet had offerd in the emergency was an old one.

"Arthur then went to painting pictures. 'The Bull Fight' and the one of the lions at the Aragon Hotel are two examples of his work. He sold them to 'Pop' Dodge when that genial gentleman was manager of the Aragon. Just now Arthur is in his glory. He's press agent for the Sells-Floto Circus in summer and star reporter for The Denver Post in winter. Circus and Post are owned by the same people. Arthur asked to be remembered to the Atlanta bunch."

Getting Latest News of Fashion's Decree.

"While on Fifth Avenue the other day," said a well known Atlanta lawyer who has just returned from a visit to New York, "I saw a group of men in front of the Public Library closely scrutinizing passersby and jotting down notes on pads or notebooks. Investigation revealed that they were tailors who had selected that point of vantage to examine the latest creations of the world's leading dressmakers as worn by women afoot or in passing carriages. And thus are Dame Fashion's decrees promulgated to those who do not order

Suburbanite Still True to the Spring Water.

There is a well known business man who has a home in one of the suburbs. He comes to work every week day morning on the train and he brings his supply of drinking water with him.

"I never could get used to this hydrant water," he explained, exhibiting a small jug in which he keeps his daily supply of thirst eradicator. "I've got a little place of ten acres near here and on it is one of the finest springs in the country.

"I was born and raised on a farm and one of the most pleasant memories of my boyhood days is that of lying down on my stomach at the spring and drinking my fill of cool, delicious water.

"Every day I bring this jug full of spring water with me to the office. I keep it next the ice in the cooler in hot weather and it certainly does taste good. I haven't been sick in five years and I really believe this spring water has had a good deal to do with keeping me in such splendid condition.

Important Sayings

"As I sit in my office at Washington there are windows on only one side of the room, and those windows look out upon parks and the Potomac and the shore of Virginia on the other side. I can not see Washington from those windows, and I sometimes thank God that I can't, because Washington behind me is seething with the little games of special privilege."—Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States.

"Corporal punishment in the public schools would be a step backward in education. This method of discipline was, and perhaps still is, of value in rural districts, but in New York, where there are 20,000 teachers, the possibility of its abuse would be too great."—Thomas W. Churchill, President of the Board of Education of New York.

"I don't think votes for women would cure all evils. But I know from observation in the Western States that it's a good thing. In no instance have I seen it produce damage, and in many cases I have seen it work betterment in social and civic conditions. We hear it said that women would neglect their homes if they voted. A century ago it was argued that if laboring men voted they would neglect their work."—Theodore Roosevelt, ex-President of the United States, in address to suffragists.

BIG SURPRISE IS COMING SOON IN PONY CONTEST

Publication of Entrants' Names and Standings May Reveal Many Unexpected Rivals.

Prepare for a surprise.

It will come when, in the next few days, the names and standings of the entrants in the pony contest are announced.

The Georgian and American expected the contest to prove popular, but expected nothing like the flood which has come by mail, by telephone and telegraph.

The mere matter of listing contestants and their standings has proved to be much more of a task than looked for, and it will take a day or two more.

The youngster who has expected to find himself the only one in the race in his district is likely to pick up the Georgian one of these days and find he has a dozen rivals.

'Twill Be No "Walk Away."

We can say this much, from hurried scanning of the application blanks, not a district but has its contenders, and most of them have a score or more. There is going to be no "walk away" for anyone.

And already new subscriptions are beginning to come in from contestants.

The books in which subscriptions are listed and voting strength computed are ready. Most of the contestants noticed the announcement in the Sunday American and in the Georgian, and have called for these books. Those who have not done so, should come in at once, for the books are the handiest things ever devised for the use of contestants.

Anyone can nominate a contestant. Any boy or girl who wishes to enter may send in his own name on an entrance blank, and 1,000 votes will be credited to the person so doing.

Only One Nomination Taken.

It is not necessary to get someone else to submit the name. Inquiries are coming in by telephone and mail on this point, and this announcement is made to settle the point.

Only one nomination, however, is accepted for any one person. Two or more nominations have been received from some entrants.

The ponies are coming, and they are the best to be found in careful search of the Bluegrass region of Tennessee, which is the pony market of the United States. Twelve intelligent, gentle, handsome little beasts, thoroughly broken for children to drive, are the prizes the Georgian and Sunday American will distribute to the boys and girls of Atlanta and of the State, together with prizes for carriers and agents contesting under the same rules.

Coupon Counts 5 Votes.

A coupon in every issue of the Georgian counts five votes. There is a coupon in every issue of the Sunday American which counts fifteen votes. These are worth having.

But the contest will be won by the contestants who get the most subscriptions. A year's subscription to the Georgian and American counts 3,500 votes. Votes are credited for subscriptions of varying periods, down to 100 votes for one month for the Georgian alone.

The rules are simple, and the prizes are worth while.

Go in and win!

Students Hear Shady Law Practice Scored

Medical Expert Condemns Sacrifice of Clients' Interests in Personal Injury Cases.

Members of the Atlanta bar and students of the Atlanta Law School are today pondering a lecture by Dr. William Perrin Nicolson, medical expert, delivered Monday night on "The Ethics of the Profession."

"The corporation lawyer insists that a green plaster will cure spinal concussion, and that the injured victim gets well at the sight of the long green," said the expert. "If you think your client is going to get well before the trial comes, or if he gets well too quick, do your duty; there are some cases to be settled.

"But the most outrageous practice of the personal injury lawyer is the frequency with which the claims of clients are sacrificed and compromised by lawyers who have no qualms of conscience at this shady practice."

When Your Hair Turns Gray

When a woman's hair turns gray, the world expects her to step back from the limelight. Active and abreast of the times she may be, with a wide experience, but—she has grown old and gray headed. Fortunate, indeed, is the woman whose hair retains its color through her forties.

But what of the woman whose hair begins to fade, maybe as early as 25 or 30, the woman in the midst of the active business world? "We don't want old women!" She feels it all around her.

Don't let your hair turn gray. But be careful. Very few hair stains are absolutely pure and harmless. There are some reliable preparations: our Robinnaire Hair Dye is one. Made here in Atlanta, in our own laboratory, and we guarantee it to be pure and positively non-injurious to either hair or scalp. It makes the hair soft and keeps it in fine condition, and no one can detect that a hair stain has been used. It is not a vulgar bleach or artificial coloring. It is a natural restorative that puts back life and color into the hair. No one need hesitate to use it. Non-sticky, and does not stain skin or scalp.

No woman need have gray hair undesired. But don't pull out the white hairs. Two will grow in immediately for every one you pull out. Use Robinnaire's Hair Dye at once, and don't let people call you old. It is prepared for light, medium and dark brown and black hair. Trial size, 25c; postpaid, 31c; regular size, 75c; postpaid, 83c. For sale by all Jacobs' Pharmacy Stores and druggists generally.

INJURED ARM GIVES MOBILE D. ROBERTSON

By Jack Law.

DAVE ROBERTSON, who is covering right field for Mike Finn's Mobile team, secured his early baseball training under the tutelage of a former popular Southern League player, Dick Crozier, who covered the outfield at different times for Little Rock and Atlanta, was the man who taught Robertson the first rudiments of the game.

Robertson, who is a native of Portsmouth, Va., attended the University at Rocky Mount, where Dick Crozier taught the young steps how best to perfect their athletic abilities. Under Crozier's watchful coaching the Virginian showed remarkable athletic prowess especially in baseball.

When the Tide Water League was started in a spirit of pique to put the Virginia League out of business, Robertson ju'ned the Elizabeth City team, which w.s a member of the outlaw Tide Water League. He soon was acknowledged the best pitcher in that organization. Opposing clubs were lucky when they made a run off him. On account of his wonderful hitting he was used in the outfield and at first base when not pitching.

Charlie Babb, the ex-Memphis manager, was managing Norfolk in the Virginia League, at that time, and tried to secure Robertson but was unable to land the big pitcher. In fact, every manager in the Virginia League tried to seize Robertson, but he was loyal to the Tide Water. Robertson was a free agent at the time, as the Tide Water was not recognized by organized ball.

Scouts After Robertson.

In a short time Norfolk was besieged by scouts of almost all the major league clubs in the country.

Detroit especially made Robertson flattering offers and Bobby Rothermel, their scout, took another pitcher named Stafford, from the same team, but could not induce Dave to sign. The more offers that were turned down by Robertson only made the major league clubs the more anxious to secure him.

Mike Finn, at present in charge of the Mobile team, was at that time a scout for the New York club. Dick Crozier, whom Robertson always called upon for advice, was with Mike Finn several years in both the Southern and the Connecticut Leagues and was on particularly friendly terms with Mike. This friendship resulted in Finn securing the young Portsmouth lad's signature to a piece of paper that bound him to the New York team.

Robertson practiced a little of Ty Cobb's stuff on McGraw's club by demanding a bonus of $1,200 for signing and was not to report until the 15th of June. It was also stipulated in the agreement that the left hander could not be released by the New York club inside of a year.

Injures His Arm.

Robertson's arm while pitching in the Tide Water League was as free as the wing of Rube Waddell in his palmy days. But sad to relate, Robertson injured his left shoulder in a football game and was compelled to throw underhanded ever since. On account of his superior hitting ability McGraw kept him and was endeavoring to make a first baseman of him. He was offered to one manager of a Southern League team on the condition that the player be returned to him under optional agreement, and it was also demanded that the manager should play him at first base. The manager in question refused to take Robertson unless he was given a clear title to him, which McGraw refused to consider. It was a lucky break for Finn, as the player has demonstrated here that he can certainly hit the ball and is exceedingly fast on his feet.

SEATS SOLD FOR CHANCE DAY.

CHICAGO, May 6.—Every reserved seat in the White Sox park has been sold for May 17 which Chicago fans have set aside as "Frank Chance Day."

Rheumatic Blood is Whole Story

Sciatica, Lumbago, and Dreaded Articular Rheumatism Cured.

You Will Feel Like an Acrobat After Using S. S. S.

There is a host of pills, powders, tablets and what-not for rheumatism, but they all lack the first essential to being a natural medicine. To begin with, rheumatism is simply a name given to designate a variety of pains, and can only be reached by irrigating the entire blood supply with a naturally assimilative antidote. True, the pains may be eased with narcotics or the acids may be neutralized for the time being. But such methods merely temporize and do not even lead to a cure. There is but one standard rheumatism remedy, and is sold in all drug stores under the name of S. S. S.

It contains only pure vegetable elements, and is absolutely free of mercury, iodide of potash or arsenic, and has proved a wonder for every form of rheumatism.

The recoveries of all types of rheumatism by the use of S. S. S. is a fine tribute to the natural efficacy of this remarkable medicine, for it is assimilated just as naturally, just as specifically, and just as well ordained as the most acceptable, most palatable and most readily digested food. Do not fail to get a bottle of S. S. S. to-day. You will be astonished at the results. Many Stars After Ritchie's Title

Morgan Says Coast Wants Britton

By Ed W. Smith.

CHICAGO, ILL., May 6.—Unless all signs fail, there will be some lively fireworks touched off before July 4 under the championship chair in which Willie Ritchie has such an insecure seat at the present time. Jack Britton, of this city, to say nothing of Freddie Welsh, of England; Tommy Murphy, of New York, and one or two others, are preparing some stunning pyrotechnics, and believe when the fireworks are set off there will be something fine doing and that Ritchie will no longer be the champion de luxe in idleness that he now is.

Dumb Dan Morgan, who is helmsman on the British ship, was in the city the other day on his way to New York, and had a few lively things to say about the lightweight situation. A young man named Bud Anderson cleared the air pretty well for Morgan by removing one of Dan's fighters from serious consideration as a champion. Said Bud knocked out Knockout Brown in hurricane style, and now Dan has only the one lightweight to give him any concern. But Dan can make just as much noise and advance just as many arguments over one star as he can over two; so, as far as Dan is concerned, it really doesn't make a great deal of difference about the Kayo's defeat.

Ritchie Must Meet Britton.

"Ritchie simply has got to pay attention to Britton now, and within a couple of weeks we will be on our way to Los Angeles to force him into a match out there," spake the word miser from New York. "They told me in Los Angeles just before I left that if I didn't return within a month with Britton, they would know then that I wasn't sincere in wanting a battle with Ritchie. So what can we do but go right out there and try to force the issue? Ritchie must fight, and Britton is the card on the coast. That is why I am feeling quite complacent about the matter, and can see a match in sight right now. Nolan cannot keep Ritchie bottled up and cart him around the country in a glass case any longer.

"Britton has done everything that has been asked of him in the last year. Excepting the Packey McFarland fight, where he met a welterweight, Jack has whipped them all, and that entitles him to a chance at the title. He can make 133 pounds at the ringside and fight well. He can make it easier than Ritchie can, and I am willing to bet on it. So you can safely jot back down as the best lightweight bet of the day right now.

Brown Clears $120,000.

"Because he wanted to take a rest, I sent Brown back home. The kid has cleared up $120,000 since I've had him, and it is a record that I am proud of. He is well fixed, and doesn't have to worry at all. Sorry that some of the coin doesn't cling to me, but somehow I cannot make it stick. Britton also is pretty fat financially. He has something like $50,000 scattered around the country in different banks. Just think of it, he has had thirty fights in the last eight months! That's going some, eh? And because he didn't knock Pal Moore's head off in Philadelphia the other night they accuse him of faking! I think after I have had a chance to talk with the board of safety there that I can get the ban lifted on him.

Anderson Not Inexperienced.

"This Anderson boy that licked Brown is not an inexperienced hand. He is about 26 years old, and has been fighting six or seven years. He stands and waits for a man to come to him, and then chops down on the jaw with funny little hooks that are mighty dangerous. He will be a good man when he learns more about the real championship stuff. If Mandot isn't in the best of shape, Bud is apt to flatten Joe just as he did Brown. Also, I saw this McAllister fellow fight out there. Great man, too, and he'll be a heavyweight some day. Take it from me, he can fight."

ALL TECH WILL GO TO ATHENS FOR BIG GAME

GREAT preparations are under way for the first series of the Tech-Georgia baseball games at Athens on Friday and Saturday of this week.

At Tech Flats yesterday morning a monster demonstration of the everlasting, never-say-die spirit was made at chapel when all the students signified their intention of attending the Saturday game.

A special train will be chartered and, with the band, the trip to Athens will be made at 11 o'clock. Students will be excused from classes on this special occasion, and Athens will be virtually overrun with the Yellow Jackets. A goodly number will leave on Friday to be on hand for the Friday game.

Jackets Going Strong.

The Jackets were given a stiff workout yesterday afternoon and showed up well after their struggle with Sewanee on Saturday. The regular varsity line-up was played, with the exception of E. Montague, whose place at the second sack is ably taken care of by Captain F. Montague. Pitts, the Jackets' southpaw, had a good workout and showed up well. He will doubtless get a chance either Friday or Saturday to prove his worth. He is steady, has plenty of speed and is a strong batter, which is something unusual for a pitcher. If not on the mound, he will probably gather them up in right field, and he can do that, too.

Dope Doesn't Count Here.

A comparison or even a near-comparison of any sort of a Tech-Georgia game is not worth the ink it would take to print it, and baseball is no exception. All previous dope, luck, material and general all-round playing are cast to the four winds before the schedule of these games is even made up.

However, this year Georgia has the only advantage in having played and won more games, while Tech has only won the series from Sewanee and Clemson, with single games from Mercer and Auburn. Georgia has won from all these, coupled with wins from other teams and a long, hard knock on the road which abounded in experience. Naturally, this fills the lads from Athens with confidence. Already touted as the Southern champions, they are anxious to keep up the name, and this they will try to do aagainst the Jackets. They have everything to lose, while the Techs have nothing.

Since the Alabama games the Jackets have been fighting harder and stronger than ever before, and at present are showing the goods. Their batting, base running and general all-round playing has developed wonderfully, and they are bound to be in top-notch condition by the first game on Friday.

Georgia's Pitchers Strong.

Post-season dope had it that neither team has pitchers that could be depended upon. That has been knocked aside by Corley and Morris, of the Red and Black aggregation, who have been pitching good ball. The latter pitched a no-hit game against Vanderbilt, and Corley also has pitched jam-up ball all season.

Eubanks has proved himself to be a steady pitcher, ready to go in at any pinch. During the Sewanee series he pitched thirteen innings, or part of two games, allowing but three hits. All season he has been keeping his opponents' hits well scattered and has not allowed over seven hits in any game. Pitts is also on the upgrade and can be expected to cut loose some stuff when called on.

GEORGIA TRIUMPHS OVER WASHINGTON AND LEE, 12-0

ATHENS, GA., May 6.—Washington and Lee fell before the hands of the University of Georgia here yesterday by the score of 12 to 0. The visitors were in the air at all times and exhibited the poorest fielding seen here this season. The Virginians were able to connect for but two safeties off the delivery of Corley, while the locals larrupped the benders of Larrick for thirteen bingles.

The features of the game were the pitching of Corley, the fielding of McWhorter and Erwin and the batting of Ginn, McWhorter, Hutchens, Bowden and Erwin.

IRA DAVENPORT TO RETIRE.

CHICAGO, May 6.—Ira J. Davenport, one of the greatest runners the West has produced, is about to bid the spikes and scanty clothes a fond farewell. Before he wanders into the dim obscurity of business life Ira wants to crown his career with a new world's record for the half mile on an outdoor track.

Sporting Food

By GEORGE E. PHAIR

A mother was weeping,
Her baby was sleeping,
Its father, the villain, had fled from the fold,
As daylight was waning
She sat there complaining
And wept as she saw all the victuals grow cold.

Far out on the bleachers,
With joy on his features,
The father was lifting his voice to the sky.
The poor mother's wailing
Was all unavailing,
For how could he leave when the score was a tie?

Perseverance wins in all walks of life. If the Lookouts keep on playing they may some day win a couple of ball games.

There are various things which cause persons to laugh, one of which is a verbal agreement between two baseball magnates.

Ty Cobb's life is rendered all the more joyous by the fact that his contract does not bind him to read the baseball dope over which he signs his name.

Charley Frank does not state what form of athletics he pursued while at college, but we presume he was a member of the tank team.

As we understand it, the mutual esteem between Messrs. Charles Frank and Bill Smith is so great that they could strangle each other at a moment's notice.

We note by the papers that Luther McCarty and Arthur Pelky are matched to do battle in Calgary. In some circles it is rumored that they are pugilists.

If it be true that Gotch and Zbyszko will meet in one of Chicago's baseball parks, we are unanimously in favor of investigating the baseball trust.

The baseball season was inaugurated in Paris with a score of 22 to 16, indicating that there are futurists in baseball as well as in art.

THE NATIONAL COMMISH.

It was a heinous crime, they thought,
when Tyrus Raymond Cobb
Demanded several chunks of dough
for working at his job.
And so they fined him fifty bones and
put him on the pan,
A horrible example for the others of
his clan.

But when a magnate boosts the price
of seats by yonder fence,
Where fans can get a bird's-eye view
by paying 50 cents—
Said magnate breaks a baseball law,
but does he pay a fine.
'Tush! Tush!" they say. "Don't bother
us. Bring in a case of wine."

In view of the recent work of Mr. Chance's athletes, we san say without fear of successful contradiction that the Bermuda onion will not be adopted as the national flower.

Joe Tinker has secured a mortgage on the services of Johnny Kling, but by some strange oversight he has neglected to sign Adrian C. Anson and Bill Lange.

Despite the fact that George Bausewein is getting down to shape, we fear that he never will be used as an advertisement for anti-fat.

Tommy Burns owns a club, makes the matches, manages the club's meal tickets and referees the fights. Thus we see that a prizefighter sometimes develops into a merger.

Possibly the Mikado will lose some of that warlike spirit when he learns that Gunboat Smith is headed for California.

The official scorer in Detroit is unanimously in favor of an upward revision of Ty Cobb's batting average.

COWEE DEFEATS MOTT IN EAST LAKE FINALS

The results of the three flights in the vice president's tournament at the East Lake course, just finished, were as follows:

H. P. D. Cowee defeated C. B. Mott, 5-4, in 36 holes in the first flight. W. P. Hazelwood won the second flight, defeating W. F. Spalding, 3-2. Frank Adair defeated W. F. Upshaw, 4-3, in the third flight.

The second and third flights were only 18 holes. Cowee was never over 85 in any of his matches. Frank Adair was 82 in his match with Upshaw.

CUNNINGHAM'S MEN EXPECT TO WIN WITH EASE

ATHENS, GA., May 6.—For one time during the many years that Tech and Georgia have met in battle for athletic supremacy there is a feeling of confidence in the Red and Black camp that Georgia will take the series from the Yellow Jackets this season, and should do it handily. Although such a feeling as this pervades the entire atmosphere around the Classic City it does not mean that Cunningham and his sluggers are going into the series overconfident.

That old story of upset dope is liable to be called in to make explanations after most any old game when Georgia and Tech are contenders, yet there is even money here that Georgia will make a clean sweep of the four games.

The Red and Black team will miss the services of Covington on third base, as he has been the sensation of two seasons at this corner and possesses one of the best baseball heads and batting eyes on the squad. Holden, captain of the scrubs, has filled the place creditably in the most series, but is woefully weak with the stick, and his inexperience on foreign territory will be a point in favor of the Jackets, who usually want to swarm and buzz very evidently on the third base line.

Henderson May Play Third.

Henderson has about recovered from his case of mumps, and Cunningham has announced that he will give him a try-out in Covington's old place. Since Bowden has gone to first he has been leading the team in batting, and the placing of Henderson on third will give him another effective hitter, especially against Tech's southpaw. "Tiny" has fattened his average against every left-hander he has faced this season.

If the Georgia men can keep up their wonderful batting it will take great playing to head them off.

Team Hits Terrifically.

Though the twenty games played to the Washington and Lee series, eight regulars were batting over .300, while the average for the entire team was .310. A total of 222 hits have been made by the Georgians, which counted for 137 runs.

Davis, of Auburn, has been the only Southern pitcher that has been able to halfway stop the terrific slugging of McWhorter's "Southern Champs," as they are now being called by loyal Georgians far and near.

Corley will be Cunningham's selection on the mound in the opening game here Friday, while big John Morris will hurl the second. The fact that the men of Athens have run off with every series played is not allaying any of the spirit, and the chances are that the largest crowds that have ever visited Sanford Field will be on hand for the contests, especially with Saturday a gala day.

COAST ANTI-FIGHT BILL KILLED AFTER BATTLE

SACRAMENTO, May 6.—The Brown anti-prize fight bill was killed by an amendment after a three-hour fight last night. The vote was 20 to 17.

The amendment was offered by Juillard, and it merely re-enacts the present law, with the single change that it limits boxing contests to twenty rounds.

If the Brown bill had passed, the professional boxing game would have been crushed in California. It limited to eight rounds and prohibited more than a 25-cent admission charge. Only a $35 trophy to the winner was allowed.

DIXON DEFEATS GREELY.

MUTT and JEFF COLUMN

JIMMY SHECKARD compiled a record in a game last week that probably never has been duplicated and never will. He went to bat four times, had 24 balls pitched to him, still never made a single swing and the Ump had to call every pitch.

In the first with three on, Jim had two successive strikes called on him, and then waited for four successive balls, forcing Huggins home with a run. In the third Jim waited for another 3-2 count and then was called out on a strike that easily was 6 inches on the inside.

And it was the same in the sixth and seventh. The two reached 3-2, when Camnitz dished up wide ones on each occasion and Sheckard walked, getting three free passes to first, a strike-out, 24 balls pitched to him and without swinging at a single one.

ONCE upon a Time a Promofer grew Tired of standing on the Side Lines and Rubbering while Others sent their Treasurers to the Banks with Gate Receipts, and after having a Chat with Himself He decided that he would Tear the Velvet off his Antlers and Horn into the Division of the Spoils. Despite the Protests of the Frayed and Ragged Magnates He got the Hunch that there was Room for Another to Starve in the Baseball World.

Staking Himself to a Handful of Schedules and a Cluster of Railroad Routes He took a load off his Feet, and a brief Half Hour with the Pencil and Slate gave him a List of Towns that were Starving for the National Game. Able to read, He was Hep to all of the Stuff that was Annoying to the Expert Scribes and the Common Run of Fanatics, and being Anxious to Please he Framed up the Nifty Stunt of cutting It all out.

There would be no White Slaves in his Grand Aggregation. The Reserve Clause would be Sidestepped, and at the End of a Season the Performers could go out and get Jobs with other Teams or with the Street Cleaning Department. At the Swell Beaneries the Rube Performers would be taught how to Stab Peas and other Rolling Food with a Fork. Tango Dancing would be made a Cinch for Them to Fritter away Their Hours of Leisure, and as for the Fanatics, Real Seats would be Held when Reserved, and Gun Men Ushers would be barred from the Ball Yards. If there was Anything left undone the Fanatics would always find the Management willing to Remedy the Defects.

All in All, the Promoter had a Grand Little Idea, and then He prepared to get Busy. His Announcement was sent to the Press and the next Morning Sixteen Funny Men in Sixteen Separate and Distinct Sections of the Country took a Crack at the Wild Idea. The Frost that was spattered about the collection of States wouldn't have given His League a Chance if the Performers had been Gum Prop Fed Guides from the Far North. The Managers of the News Services checked up and found that it would Tear still more from Their Appropriations if They sent out the Stories of the Games and the Word was given to Forget the New League.

Learning of all this the Frayed and Ragged Baseball Bosses, who had become Horny Handed through dealing out the Kale necessary to provide Entertainment for the Beloved Fanatics, rejoiced because Popular Approval had been Withheld, and One who would have become a Brother to Them had been Forced to keep his Money.

Moral:—One has a fine, fat chance to pry his way into organized baseball.

CLUB OWNERS MAKE KILLING THIS SEASON

By Percy H. Whiting.

IT looks as though the Southern League were set to make a killing this year. The attendance thus far has been marvelous.

At the opening of the season, thanks to the early start and the consequent bad weather, receipts were not what they should have been—but at that records were broken.

Since the weather has come around and warmed up decently there has been nothing to it but ENORMOUS crowds.

Here in Atlanta all records for early attendance were smashed. Chattanooga has held up well, despite the wretched work of the team. Nashville has had corking crowds. Memphis is off in attendance—and always will be as long as a cheap team is inflicted on the Bluff City folks. Birmingham has had amazing crowds. The attendance in Montgomery is FINE. New Orleans has been a shade off. And Mobile—well, please picture nearly 8,000 people paying their way in at the turnstile there!

If the race stays close the attendance records will smash all records to bits

* * *

DOWN in New Orleans there is a feeling that the Pelicans' chief played a pretty shrewd joke on the Crackers by euchring them out of Williams.

Maybe so. We'll let it go at that—if they will.

But to Cracker fans it appears that the joke is on Frank. After Williams' debut here and while it was supposed he still belonged to the Crackers I asked Bill Smith, "What about Williams?"

Now Bill is slow to criticise a man. But there wasn't any room for argument in this case.

"I don't care a lot for what he's showed me yet," was Bill's reply. "He may come around, but—" and he sighed.

Bill was tickled to death to be so well rid of Williams.

As for Bisland—he continues to look like a million dollars ($1,000,000)!

This lad wasn't one of the kind who was hawked around and nabbed by the highest bidder. Smith has had his eye on him for six months. When he found out Williams wouldn't do he wired Barney Dreyfuss, "What will you take for Bisland?"

About that time it began to appear that Hans Wagner was coming around all right, so the Pirates made a stiff price on Bisland. The local club closed so fast it took their breath away.

As for Williams—well, we'll keep Bisland.

BASEBALL writers the country over are hooting at what they call the "Cincinnati" base hit. It is one of these fielder's choices that, by dictum of Ban Johnson, is to be scored a base hit.

For instance, a runner is on first. The batter, on the hit and run, grounds weakly to the third baseman. The third baseman tries to land the runner going to second. The throw is too late. And all hands are safe. But had the third baseman thrown to first it would have been an easy out.

Ban Johnson says it's a hit.

The baseball writers say it's a "Cincinnati" hit.

In the Atlanta press box we score that in what appears to be the only logical way. If the thing looks like an infield hit and it appears that the runner would have beaten it we give the batter a hit. On the other hand, if it is apparent that the batter would have been out a mile at first, if the throw had been made there, we score it a fielder's choice.

Of course there are some close decisions on this—but so there are on a lot of other hits, when the scorer must decide whether to let them go as hits or errors.

It is better to let the scorers use their judgment than it is to give men hits when they were not entitled to them.

It isn't that we object to giving the batters a few unearned hits—but these hits go against the pitcher just the same as screaming singles and work an awful hardship on him. The pitcher is thus made to pay the penalty because the infielder throws to the wrong base.

FINN TO SEND HOGG AGAINST CRACKER CLAN

By Joe Agler.

MOBILE, ALA., May 6.—Manager Smith will select King Brady to stop the high-flying Gulls, with Pat Granam receiving. Manager Finn will use Bradley Hogg, the undefeated pitcher, with Schmidt catching.

Atlanta lost again yesterday, 10 to 6.

Bausewein got away bad and gave the first three batters bases on balls. Musser and Price were not effective.

The Gulls walloped the ball hard and it seemed as though they would hit any pitcher that was sent in the box. It was just one of those days when they would hit anything that was served up to them.

The Crackers were the first to score, but were overtaken.

The Gulls hit at opportune times, while we got all our hits after two men were out.

Bisland continues to hit the ball hard. His two triples would have been home runs on the Atlanta grounds. The fans of Atlanta will see in Bisland one of the most finished shortfielders ever in the Southern League.

The Crackers hope to get at least an even break, and will try hard to annex two games to the won column. We all hope Bill Bailey will soon be in shape to don the spangles and be with us, as he is missed very badly.

Yesterday's game was the eighth straight win for the Gulls and the second of the series with the Crackers. Campbell went the route for Mobile. He fanned five men and gave one pass.

Robertson, with two homers and as many singles in five times up, led the batting. Jacobson, in five times at bat, got a homer and two singles.

For the visitors, Bisland, in four times up, got two triple-sackers. Long found three safeties in five chances.

The game was long drawn out, due to the many batters going up.

Atlanta started off well with three runs in the first on as many hits, one a triple, but couldn't hold the pace. One run was put over in the fourth and two in the sixth, but that was all.

TIGERS DEFEAT NEWBERRY AND WIN CAROLINA TITLE

CLEMSON COLLEGE, S. C., May 6.—Clemson won from Newberry, 6 to 5, and thereby cinched the State championship with 1,000 per cent. Many of the ten games played in the State were won by large scores. The game yesterday was featureless, except for the base running of the Tigers, who purloined 11 sacks, and a home run by Cureton for Clemson. Ezell struck out 13 and Epting 5.

GEORGE ROHE TO PLAY AGAINST MOBILE TO-DAY

MOBILE, ALA., May 6.—George Rohe, the ex-Pelican, will act as utility man for the Crackers this season. Bill Smith secured Rohe from New Orleans yesterday and he will report to the club some time to-day.

Rohe will probably be placed in right field against Mobile this afternoon in place of Graham.

"WILDCAT" FERNS WINS DECISION OVER PERRY

KANSAS CITY, MO., May 6.—Clarence "Wildcat" Ferns, of this city, was given the decision over Jimmy Perry, of Pittsburg, Pa., here last night at the end of a ten-round fight, which was tame and featureless throughout.

AUTO FOR MIKE MURPHY.

PHILADELPHIA, May 6.—As a token of their esteem members of the Detroit Athletic Club have announced their intention of presenting Mike Murphy, Penn's veteran track coach, with an automobile, which he may use to go from his home to Franklin Field to train the Red and Blue athletes.

MARS TRIMS M'GOVERN.

CINCINNATI, May 6.—Knockout Mars, of New York, won over Benny McGovern, of St. Louis, in ten rounds last night.

BOXING

News of the Ring Game

Tom McCarey is after a Wolgast-Dundee match for Los Angeles, June 3. Although Ad recently stated that he was going to quit the twenty-round game, McCarey thinks he can induce the former champion to go through with the Dundee scrap.

Joe Golden, manager of Joe Thomas, writes from New Orleans that he has his protege signed for a return bout with Charlie White, the Chicago whirlwind. Joe says he is confident Thomas will reverse the verdict next time, and again reach the top of his class. They are to meet on May 19.

Johnny McFarland, Packey's cousin, has picked up a new boxer that he thinks will make a star. His name is Johnny Doyle, and was sent to McFarland by Billy Gibson, the New York promoter. Doyle is after a match with Matty McCue.

* * *

Chicago fans are going wild over the McCue-O'Connell match May 15, although the scrap is to be staged at Racine, Wis., hundreds of fans are to attend the mix-up from the Windy City. O'Connell and McCue are both well known in Chicago, and have a host of admirers.

* * *

Jack White, of Chicago, was given the decision over Eddie Dennis last night at Frisco. The boys went four rounds, with White the aggressor in every period. Jack is a brother to Charlie White.

* * *

Reports from the Pacific Coast state that the fans there are very much disgruntled over the result of the Kilbane-Dundee match, and that if the men meet again little interest will be displayed or aroused.

* * *

"'Twould be a right smart trick if Jim Buckley were to pit Gunboat Smith against Luther McCarty, win, and then grab the lightweight championship with Tommy Murphy.

* * *

George "Knockout" Brown, the Greek middleweight from Chicago, is making good in New York. George has already had four bouts in the Eastern city, winning every one of them in decisive fashion.

* * *

* * *

Al Lippe, who had four American fighters in Paris this winter, has completed arrangements to take three boxers to Australia. He has picked Al Kaufman, California; Jeff Smith, Bayonne, N. J., and Frank Loughrey, Philadelphia. They plan to sail from San Francisco June 3, leaving New York May 20.

* * *

Young Brown, the New York lightweight, has wired a challenge to the winner of the Mandot-Anderson contest on the coast May 20. Brown has fought the toughest lightweights in the Eastern city.

* * *

Kid Young, the local featherweight, is certainly wearing classy togs these days. Young is one of our best pugboys, besides being some bear when it comes to swinging the padded mitts.

* * *

* * *

Meyer Pries threatens to desert our ranks. Pries is seriously thinking of beating it to Baltimore, where he hopes to get on with some of the bantams in the Maryland city.

* * *

Battling Nelson says he is going to quit the boxing game on May 15. Bat's great work during his career, however, will live long after that. Of all the lightweight champions, the great Dane can easily be classed as one of the greatest.

* * *

Although beaten and slambed around, Bat still packs the various arenas boxes at and would even to-day draw a banner house with Willie Ritchie.

FRANKIE RUSSELL LACES ANDERSON IN MEMPHIS GO

MEMPHIS, TENN., May 6.—Frankie Russell, of New Orleans, easily defeated Jimmy Anderson, of Indianapolis, in eight rounds last night. Anderson took his beating gamely. Russell made a good showing, and efforts are being made to match him with some real star of the lightweight division.

PHIL CROSS BEATS ERNE IN SIX-ROUND BATTLE

PHILADELPHIA, May 6.—In a fast six-round bout Phil Cross sprung a surprise by decisively beating Young Erne, of Philadelphia, recent conqueror of Mike Gibbons. He not only outslugged, but outboxed Erne and made a great hit by his fast and aggressive style.

CHRISTY MATHEWSON'S BIG LEAGUE GOSSIP

"NAP" RUCKER, of Brooklyn, is probably the most unlucky performer in the world. He can pitch shutout ball for nine innings and lose more games than any man who ever stepped into the middle of the diamond. He wears the championship belt for this.

Rucker started against me in Brooklyn last week and did not give the New York club a hit for seven innings. The safe punches against him totaled only two in nine innings, and yet he lost his battle.

It was one of the keenest pitching duels in which I have ever engaged, and there was nothing to do but work all the way.

When the thirteenth inning rolled around, and it was the Giants' turn to bat, a messenger boy handed McGraw a telegram. He looked at it for a minute, and saw it was numbered thirteen. He turned to the bench and said: "Well, boys, here's where we win it."

* * *

IT was then that the Giants started the rally which tore Rucker apart. He is a great twirler, one of the greatest in the game, and he assumes nothing. He does not complain because he has had his rare talents buried among the relics of a second division club ever since he invaded the big league. He is not at all conceited. He takes his defeat philosophically and does not "beef."

Yet, like the rest of us, Rucker hates to lose.

"They got to me at last," he remarked at the end of the thirteenth inning. He did not find fault with any of his backers.

SOME may criticise me when I say he is one of the greatest pitchers in the game, and then hint at the box score in which my club came out on top. It is like the story a war correspondent told me once.

"During the Japanese war," he said, "we were attacking a Russian position one day and had thrown up some hasty fortifications. General Nogi insisted in standing in an exposed place and viewing the action through his glass. Finally I said to him:

"'General, you are in a dangerous position. You had better come down.'

"'Yes,' he replied, 'and I would come off those fortifications and quit making sketches, too, if I were you.'"

By praising Rucker for this game, I am hinting that I deserve some. But I honestly say that the better ball club was behind me. Rucker should get just as much credit for the magnificent game he pitched as I did for my work.

Whenever I twirl, I never have any luck. That is the second game this year in which I have been forced to work overtime.

* * *

WHEN the Eastern clubs in the American League invade the West this week, there will be a lot of scars left on the teams that inhabit the West.

The Yankees will be the only boys that will look soft from present indications.

Philadelphia and Washington are two tough clubs this season. When these two teams go West, they will meet only one possible championship contender, and that is Cleveland.

Cleveland appears to be going better so far in this race than the team has in years, but Washington is liable to take the ambition out of the Naps.

Even during the many years when the Senators were trailing along in the dust of the American League, they could always give the Cleveland team a fight, as a weak club frequently will some particularly strong one. The Washington team took eighteen out of twenty-two battles from the Cleveland club last year.

BOSTON has been going bad so far this season, and the club has not played ball at all like a world's championship team. Stahl's chances of repeating look to me to be very slim, considering the competition in his league. "Jake," himself, will probably be out of the game a good deal from now on, as he is slowing up. Stahl has been trying to dig up a good first baseman to take his place, but the digging has not been very profitable. He made an effort to grab Hal Chase, but Chance was looking when they tried to slip him three or four boys whose names seldom appear in the headlines. If Stahl could have picked up Chase, it might have put him in the race. As it is, it strikes me he is going to have a tough time keeping even near Washington and Philadelphia.

Both these clubs are traveling as fast as gossip in an actor's boarding house now. One of the teams may drop by the wayside on the Western trip, but I doubt it, because I cannot see any keen opposition in the West. It will probably be a case this year of Washington and Philadelphia fighting it out, with every series between them being of vital importance.

PROPHETS are springing up all over the circuit every day who openly declare that Washington is going to win the pennant. Griffith has one pitcher he can fire against his enemies any time he wants to be sure of a game, and his name is Walter Johnson. He humbled the heretofore unbeaten Plank in a thrilling battle the other day.

So far on the season's record, Griffith appears to have the edge on the Athletics with pitchers, but there is no doubt about "Connie" Mack's infield being stronger than the Washington one, while the outfields are about a standoff. The Athletics are a harder-hitting club, while the Washington team is faster. To my mind, it is the speediest aggregation I ever saw in action in the American League, in spite of the fact they call the Red Sox the "Speed Boys." The club plays together well, too, and is a great machine. I think that the real battle will develop between the Senators and Athletics.

IN the meantime, the New York Americans are not acting as if they intended to crowd anybody fighting for the pennant.

So far, Chance has had very hard luck with his club, and none realizes better than he that some of the present members of the team will have to go. He told me himself, only recently, that a catcher and a pitcher would be let out, and that he expected the public would be very much surprised when the names were announced.

Chance is like a woman when it comes to perspicacity.

You can't fool women.

They let you think you are fooling them some of the time, but just when you believe you are getting away with it they bring you up with a half-turn.

Some of the Yankee ball players thought they were fooling Chance. Might as well endeavor to hide something from an X-ray by wrapping it in tissue paper.

PREP LEAGUE NOTES

There will be two good struggles in the Prep championship race this season. The first one is between Tech High, Boys High and Marist for first place, and G. M. A. and Hancock will fight fully as hard to keep out of last place.

* * *

If Piedmont Park bathing beach is opened early enough this year, Boys High School will have a water polo team. Many of the school athletes are expert swimmers and a good team can be organized. If arrangements can be made some aquatic meets will be held with some of the other schools in the city.

* * *

The annual track meet Friday is the chief topic of discussion among local prep school students, and a large attendance is expected. The meet should prove the most successful in years.

* * *

Boys' High and Marist will meet Wednesday for the second time this season on the Marist diamond. The other game resulted in a ten-inning tie, and since that time both teams have been steadily improving. The game Wednesday will have a great deal to do in regard to deciding the local prep championship.

* * *

The West Point High School team is one of the strongest teams ever organized at that school. The team has played a number of games and in most cases has come out victorious. They would like to get a game with Tech or Boys' High.

* * *

It is estimated that at least fifty entries will be seen in the track meet Friday at Marist field. The latest rumor at Boys' High has it that the school will be entered in the meet, but many of the athletes have announced that they positively would not enter.

* * *

It seems strange that there are no relay races on the program of the prep track meet Friday. A mile relay race with six men on each team is one of the most exciting events one would want to see.

* * *

Gene Turner, official Prep League umpire, has given entire satisfaction this season, and an attempt will be made to engage him for next year. Turner is at present a member of the Georgia Tech faculty and is also a former minor league ball player.

* * *

It begins to look as though Riverside will finish the baseball season this year with a clean slate. So far this team has won sixteen straight games and has played one tie. They have met nearly every prep team in the State and beaten them all easily. Riverside could trim most of the colleges this year.

* * *

The reason for the success of the Riverside nine this year is in the excellent pitching staff and the slugging ability of the players. Williamson, McNeill and Haines are all first-class twirlers.

* * *

So much pressure is being brought to bear by the alumni of Emory College in favor of intercollegiate athletics that it looks as if the faculty and regents will be forced to grant their wishes.

* * *

Following is a list of athletes from Tech High School and the events in which they will be entered in Friday:

100-yard dash, Bedell and Parks; 220-yard low hurdles, Bedell and Parks; 440-yard dash, Bedell, Covington and Whittaker; 880-yard run, Downing, Covington, Shropshire and Hiles; one-mile run, Cobb, Hiles, Downing and Covington; shot put, Meyers, Bedell, Weston; hammer throw, Bedell and Meyers; high jump, Perry and Chamberlain; broad jump, Jacobus and Bedell; pole vault, Meyers.

* * *

Jim Prease, of Riverside, is one of the best first basemen in prep circles this year. He is a big, rangy chap and can pull in anything that comes within six feet of the bag. He is also one of the heaviest hitters on the team.

* * *

The game Wednesday between Boys' High and Marist will be a pitchers' battle between Fox and Callahan. These two lads are perhaps the best pair of twirlers in the local league and both are going great now.

* * *

A tennis tournament will soon start at Peacock. There are a number of experts at this game there and the tournament will be a hot one. The games will probably be played on the Piedmont Park courts.

BASEBALL

Diamond News and Gossip

The fans yesterday gave Hal Chase, Yankee first baseman, an unmerciful roasting, calling him "bonehead," "quitter," "boots," and like names. To those who have seen Chase in action during the past week, it has seemed that he is not giving his best efforts to the club. Sporting writers in New York are almost a unit in the clamor to have Chase traded or sold.

The Yankees, who left last night for the Western trip, now own the unenviable record of not having won a game this season on their home grounds.

The Pirates defeated the Naps 6 to 5 in an exhibition game played in Cleveland yesterday. It was the first time a Pittsburg club has played there in seven years.

The Giants are now in sixth place—the lowest position they have held in the National League race at this time of the season for many years.

Walter Johnson, of the Senators, acted as relief pitcher again yesterday when the score was tied, and his team then batted out a victory. Johnson now has a straight string of six victories, and has pitched 42 consecutive innings without being scored upon.

Sherwood Magee, of the Phillies, annexed two home runs yesterday, while Cravath, his team mate, got one.

The Brooklyn Dodgers grabbed off another victory yesterday and are now resting in third place.

Ty Cobb's return to the game has put a lot of ginger into the turnstiles.

The Red Sox last again yesterday and those who predicted a runaway race for the world's championship this season are wondering who monkeyed with the jinx.

The Giants, who have just lost four straight games to the Phillies, are hopeful to-day of recruiting their losses. Joe Tinker's tail-end Reds open a four-game series in Gotham.

"GIANTS MUST WAKE UP AND HUSTLE"-CRANE

By Sam Crane.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., May 6.—If the Giants have the idea roaming around in their belfrys that they have the National League pennant cinched without playing for it they want to chase it.

They were never more fooled in their young and tender lives.

Other champion clubs before them have fallen by reason of over confidence, and they are on the high road for a thud that will shake them from their head to their heels.

It is possible they are having their annual slump now, but with any other team excepting the Giants it might be said they are outclassed. Of the victories to their credit, a majority were won from the tail-end Boston Braves, a team that has been just as easy for every other team that has had the luck to go up against them.

Lack Fighting Spirit.

The Brooklyns have more than held their own with the Champs, and now the Phillies have broken even with them. The first month of the championship season is nearly over. Another week and it will be.

What have the much-touted Giants to show for it?

In the two Philadelphia games played here the boys have not shown the fighting spirit that they have so long been noted for.

I will not say they have been listless, but they have played a listless game and that verges closely on indifference with them for they are famous for the good old "pepper." They have lacked that snap, the fire, the ginger that heretofore have been their middle games.

They must pull themselves out of the dopey rut they are in and quickly too or they will be so far behind that it will develop into a question whether then can or not.

The Passing of Miss Tearful

Woman Is Ceasing to Weep—They Realize That No Man Wants to Be Salted Down in Brine as If He Were a Dried Herring.

By DOROTHY DIX.

ONE of the most interesting and significant phases of the evolution of woman is that she is ceasing to weep. I don't know how science explains it, but it is a self-evident fact that every observing person must have noted that as women developed backbone their tear ducts have dried up.

Time was, and not so long ago, when the very name of the feminine sex was synonymous with crying. It was woman's hereditary destiny to weep, just as it was man's to work, and she did what was expected of her by sitting down and howling whenever she came up against any of the hard propositions of life.

The modern woman has changed all of that. You hardly ever see a woman weep now. There are—God help us—just as many things to wring a woman's heart to-day, and just as many causes for tears as there ever were, but if she weeps, she weeps in private. It is almost as unusual and startling now to see a woman give way publicly to emotion as it is to see a man do so, and I can think of no other one thing that so emphatically marks the progress of my sex.

It measures all the distance between hysteria and reason. It marks the immeasurable difference between the spoilt child crying impotently for forbidden sweets, and the strong adult who takes what life gives with unfaltering bravery and cheerfulness.

It seems likely that women always overvalued the effectiveness of tears, anyway. Tears were supposed to always be an unanswerable argument so far as men were concerned. Unfortunately few women can weep effectively. In poetry a pearly drop that makes a blue eye look like a violet drowned in dew, gathers slowly and rolls gently down the alabaster cheek, and the man who goes down before it. In everyday life the woman who weeps gets red-eyed, her nose swells and she looks purple and apoplectic, and the man gets up, and slams the door behind, and goes downtown until the water spout is over. In these prosaic and commonsense days weeping has played out as a fascination, and tears are a failure. No man wants to be salted down in brine as if he were a dried herring.

They Wept Too Much.

The trouble with women's tears in the past has been that they wept too much, and in the wrong way. A tear as a tear is as effective as any other drop of salt water, yet people make the mistake of reverencing it as if weeping over a thing was going to perform some kind of a miracle.

You might weep over a starving family until you shed an ocean of tears, yet it wouldn't keep them from perishing of hunger. It is only when you begin to sob with your pocketbook that you do any good. It isn't the people who come to weep with us when we are unfortunate and poor and downcast who help us. It is those who have learned to sympathize with their bank book and personal interest and assistance.

Nothing else on earth is as plentiful and cheap and useless as tears, but until they are backed up with good deeds and money nobody has a right to attempt to sustain a reputation for charity on them. Plenty of people do. I have seen women sit up in a fashionable church and sniffle into a point lace handkerchief all through a charity sermon and then drop a plugged nickel into the contribution plate.

Then there's poverty. If all the tears women have shed over being poor had been brought to account it would make a water power that would turn the wheels of the machinery of the world. Tears toll back no vanished dollars. Nobody ever heard of a woman lamenting herself into a fortune, yet they go making themselves perfect Niobes over their spilt milk.

I had a friend once who lost her money and who thereafter did nothing but weep. "What shall I do?" she demanded. "I shall starve." "If you would put in as much time and energy mopping a floor as you do in mopping your eyes, you could make a fortune as a charwoman." I answered, brutally. She never forgave me. People never do when you tell them the truth, but it is a fact nevertheless, that the only tears that can conjure back prosperity are the tears we weep with our hands at some good, honest labor.

Sometimes I amuse myself by speculating on what an improvement it would be if mothers wept less over their wayward children and spanked more.

Shameful Tears.

Sentimentalists have embalmed a mother's tears in song and story, and made them sacred, but I tell you the tears a mother sheds over an illraised son or daughter are shameful. There should be no cause for them, and there would be no cause for them, once in a million times, if she had done her duty. Weep with strict authority, mothers, sob with a wise up-bringing while your children are little, and when they are grown you will not have to shed salt and bitter tears over sons and daughters who have brought disgrace upon you.

It has also appeared to me that women have wasted quite an unnecessary amount of tears on their husbands. For a thousand generations wives have clung to the theory that a man could be wept into all the virtues of beatitude. When a woman had a drunken husband she opened the door for him in the early hours of the morning, and bedewed him with her tears. When she had a brutal one, she wept when he mistreated her, but she forgave him and let him go on doing it. Men don't weep any over women. They make their wives behave themselves, or else they haul them up before the divorce court, and that's why the percentage of good conduct is so largely in favor of the fair sex, and women might well copy their example.

Any way you look at it, it is a hopeful sign women have abandoned doing the baby act. It was always weak and useless. We owe it to the world to give it smiles and sunshine, not showers, and we best do our part in it when we meet the misfortunes of life with that brave attitude that nothing can daunt.

:: Electing a New Pope ::

ONE OF THE WORLD'S MOST MOMENTOUS CEREMONIES

THE greatest secrecy, as well as the utmost solemnity, is observed when the Cardinals of the Church of Rome are called upon to elect one of their number as Pope.

Immediately after the Pope is buried there is a gathering together of the Cardinals, or conclave, as it is called. Incidentally it might be mentioned that the word "Conclave" is derived from the Latin cum clave, and literally means an apartment which can be closed with one key.

Once gathered together, the Cardinals, like the jury in a murder case, are not permitted to leave the Vatican until they have selected from among themselves a successor to the Papal chair. The ceremony of election observed to-day is the same as that inaugurated by Gregory X, six hundred years ago.

Communication Impossible.

The Cardinals assemble in what is known as the Sistine Chapel. All the entrances are walled up with the exception of one great door known as the "Sala Regia." The greatest precautions are observed that no persons except the Cardinals remain in the building during the conclave, and a very careful search is made, not only by officials of the Vatican, but also by the Swiss guards, who maintain a vigil over the only door leading to the building. Even the food is carefully examined to make sure that no communication enters the Vatican.

The actual election ceremony is quite simple. Each Cardinal writes in a dissed hand on a ballot-paper the name of his particular selection for the high office, which he then deposits in a chalice or urn placed upon a special altar. Before doing so, however, he turns to his colleagues and solemnly swears he has voted according to his firm belief, without fear or favor, and in the true interests of the Church of Rome only.

First and Second Ballots.

There are three official scrutators, who, when all the Cardinals have voted, and after a short prayer, take all the ballot-papers from the chalice and read aloud to the conclave the names recorded. The number of votes required to immediately the two-thirds majority has been recorded for any candidate a bell is rung by the junior Cardinal Deacon. In response the secretary of the Sacred College enters with the master of ceremonies, after which the Cardinal Dean approaches the Pope that is to be and inquires whether he accepts the papacy. Receiving an answer in the affirmative, he next inquires what name the new pontiff intends to be known by.

It should be mentioned that the name usually selected is that of the Pope by whom the Pope-elect was created a Cardinal, and as soon as this is announced the senior Cardinal Deacon goes outside and thus addresses the waiting crowd: "I announce to you a great joy. We have as Pope the Most Eminent and Most Reverend ——————, Cardinal of the Holy Roman Church, who has taken the name of ——————."

Meanwhile the new dignitary has been conducted to the rear of the high altar, where he is speedily arrayed in the vestments of the pontificate. He then takes his place in the chair of state in front of the high altar, and is ready to receive the greetings of the Sacred College. Each of the Cardinals kisses him on the foot, the hand and the mouth, and that precious symbol, the ring of the Fisherman, is placed on his finger by the Cardinal Camerlingo.

A Powerful Story of Adventure, Intrigue and Love

Within the Law

By MARVIN DANA, from the Play of BERNARD VEILLER

SYNOPSIS.

Mary Turner, after the death of her father and mother, is forced to make her own way in life. She secures a position at the Emporium, a department store owned by Edward Gilder, and, after five years of bare existence, valuable silks are stolen from the store, traced to Mary's department, and some of the goods found in her locker. Although innocent, the girl is arrested and sentenced to three years in prison.

After her conviction she tells George Damarest, chief of Gilder's legal staff, that she can show the merchant how to stop thievery in his store if garnted a ten-minute interview. The interview is granted, and, handcuffed to a plain-clothes man, she enters Gilder's private office. He enters immediately afterward.

Without mincing of words, Mary tells him that he can stop stealing by paying his employees a living wage.

Nevertheless, indomitable in her purpose, she maintained the struggle. A third time she obtained work, and there, after a little, she told her employer, a candy manufacturer in a small way, the truth as to her having been in prison. The man had a kindly heart, and, in addition, he ran little risk in the matter, so he allowed her to remain. When, presently, the police called his attention to the girl's criminal record, he paid no heed to their advice against retaining her services. But such action on his part offended the greatness of the law's dignity. The police brought pressure to bear on the man. They even called in the assistance of Edward Gilder himself, who obligingly wrote a very severe letter to the girl's employer. In the end, such tactics alarmed the man. For the sake of his own interests, though unwillingly enough, he dismissed Mary from his service.

With All Her Strength.

It was then that despair did come upon the girl. She had tried with all the strength of her to live straight. Yet, despite her innocence, the world would not let her live according to her own conscience. It demanded that she be the criminal it had branded her—if she were to live at all. So, it was despair! For she would not turn to evil, and without such turning she could not live. She still walked the streets falteringly, seeking some place; but her heart was gone from the quest. Now, she was sunken in an apathy that saved her from the worst pangs of misery. She had suffered so much, so poignantly, that at last her emotions had grown sluggish. She did not mind much even when her tiny hoard of money was quite gone, and she roamed the city starving. * * * Came an hour when she thought of the river, and was glad.

Mary remembered, with a wan smile, how, long ago, she had thought with amazed horror of suicide, unable to imagine any trouble sufficient to drive one to death as the only relief. Now, however, the thing was simple to her. Since there was nothing else, she must turn to that—to death. Indeed, it was so very simple, so final, and so easy, after the agonies she had endured, that she marveled over her own folly in not having sought such escape before. * * Even with the first wild fancy, she had unconsciously bent her steps westward toward the North River. Now, she quickened her pace, anxious for the plunge that should set the term to sorrow. In her numbed brain was no flicker of thought as to whatever might come to her afterward. Her sole guide was that compelling passion of desire to be done with this unbearable present. Nothing else mattered—not in the least!

In That Final Second.

So, she came through the long stretch of ill-lighted streets, crossed some railroad tracks to a pier, over which she hurried to the far end, where it projected out to the fiercer currents of the Hudson. There, without giving herself a moment's pause for reflection of hesitation, she leaped out as far as her strength permitted into the coil of waters. But, in that final second, natural terror in the face of death overcame the lethargy of despair—a shriek burst from her lips.

But for that scream of fear, the story of Mary Turner had ended there and then. Only one person was anywhere near to catch the sound. And that single person heard. On the south side of the pier a man had just tied up a motorboat. He stood up in alarm at the cry, and was just in time to gain a glimpse of a white face under the dim moonlight as it swept down with the tide, two rods beyond him. On the instant, he threw off his coat and sprang far out after the drifting body. He came to it in a few furious strokes, and caught it. Then began the savage struggle to save her and himself. The currents tore at him wrathfully, but he fought against them with all the fierceness of his nature. He had strength a-plenty, but he needed all of it, and more, to win out of the river's hungry clutch. What saved the two of them was the violent temper of the man. Always, it had been the demon to set him aflame. To-night, there in the faint light, within the grip of the waters, he was moved to insensate fury against the element that menaced. His rage mounted, and gave him new power in the battle. Maniacal strength grew out of supreme wrath. Under the urge of it, he conquered—at last brought himself and his charge to the shore.

When, finally, the rescuer was able to do something more than gasp chokingly, he gave anxious attention to the woman whom he had brought out from the river. Yet, at the outset, he could not be sure that she still lived. She had shown no sign of life at any time since he had first seized her. That fact had been of incalculable advantage to him in his efforts to reach the shore with her. Now, however, it alarmed him slightly, though it hardly seemed possible that she could have drowned. So far as he could determine, she had not even sunk once beneath the surface. Nevertheless, she displayed no evidence of vitality, though he chafed her hands for a long time. The shore here was very lonely; it would take precious time to summon aid. It seemed, nothwithstanding, that this must be the only course. Then just as the man was about to leave her, the girl sighed, very faintly, with an infinite weariness, and opened her eyes. The man echoed the sigh, but his was of joy, since now he knew that his strife in the girl's behalf had not been in vain.

Afterward, the rescuer experienced no great difficulty in carrying out his work to a satisfactory conclusion. Mary revived to clear consciousness, which was at first inclined toward hysteria, but this phase yielded soon under the sympathetic ministrations of the man. His rather low voice was soothing to her tired soul, and his whole air was at once masterful and gently tender. Moreover, there was an inexpressible balm to her spirit in the very fact that some one was thus ministering to her. It was the first time for many dreadful years that any one had taken thought for her welfare. The effect of it was like a draught of rarest wine to warm her heart. So, she rested obediently as he busied himself with her complete restoration, and, when finally she was able to stand, and to walk with the support of his arm, she went forward slowly at his side without so much even as a question of whither.

And, curiously, the man himself shared the gladness that touched the mood of the girl, for he experienced a sudden pride in his accomplishment of the night. Somewhere in him were the seeds of self-sacrifice, the seeds of a generous devotion to others. But those seeds had been left undeveloped in a life that had been lived since early boyhood outside the pale of respectability. To-night Joe Garson had performed, perhaps, his first action with no thought of self at the back of it. He had risked his life to save that of a stranger. The fact astonished him, while it pleased him hugely. The sensation was at once novel and thrilling.

Glow of Satisfaction.

Since it was so agreeable, he meant to prolong the glow of self-satisfaction by continuing to care for this waif of the river. He must make his rescue complete. It did not occur to him to question his fitness for the work. His introspection did not reach to a point of suspecting that he, an habitual criminal, was necessarily of a sort to be most objectionable as the protector of a young girl. Indeed, had any one suggested the thought to him, he would have met it with a sneer, to the effect that a wretch thus tired of life could hardly object to any one who constituted himself her savior.

In this manner, Joe Garson, the notorious forger, led the dripping girl eastward through the squalid streets, until at last they came to an adequately lighted avenue, and there a taxicab was found. It carried them farther north, and to the east still, until at last it came to a halt before an apartment house that was rather imposing, set in a street of humbler dwellings. Here, Garson paid the fare, and then helped the girl to alight, and on into the hallway. Mary went with him quite unafraid, though now with a growing curiosity. Strange as it all was, she felt that she could trust this man who had plucked her from death, who had worked over her with so much of tender kindliness. So, she waited patiently; only watched with intentness as he pressed the button of the flat number. She observed with interest the thick, wavy gray of his hair, which contradicted pleasantly the youthfulness of his clean-shaven, resolute face, and the spare, yet well-muscled form.

The clicking of the door-latch sounded soon, and the two entered and went slowly up three flights of stairs. On the landing beyond the third flight, the door of a real flat stood open, and in the doorway appeared the figure of a woman.

"Well, Joe, who's the skirt?" this person demanded, as the man and his charge halted before her. Then, abruptly, the round, baby-like face of the woman puckered in amazement. Her voice rose shrill. "My Gawd, if it ain't Mary Turner!"

At that, the newcomer's eyes opened swiftly to their widest, and she stared astounded in her turn.

"Aggie!" she cried.

CHAPTER VII.

IN the time that followed, Mary lived in the flat with Aggie Lynch occupied along with her brother, Jim, a pickpocket much esteemed among his fellow craftsmen. The period wrought transformations of a radical and bewildering sort in both the appearance and the character of the girl. Joe Garson, the forger, had long been acquainted with Aggie and her brother, though he considered them far beneath him in the social scale, since their criminal work was not of that high kind on which he prided himself. But, as he cast about for some woman to whom he might take the hapless girl he had rescued, his thoughts fell on Aggie, and forthwith his determination was made since he knew that she was respectable, viewed according to his own peculiar lights. He was relieved rather than otherwise to learn that there was already an acquaintance between the two women, and the fact that his charge had served time in prison did not influence him one jot against her. On the contrary, it increased in some measure his respect for her as one of his own kind. By the time he had learned as well of her innocence he had grown so interested that even her folly, as he was inclined to deem it, did not cause any wavering in his regard.

Now, at last, Mary Turner let herself adrift. It seemed to her that she had abandoned herself to fate in that hour when she threw herself into the river. Afterward, without any volition on her part, she had been restored to life, and set within an environment new and strange to her, in which soon, to her surprise, she discovered a vivid pleasure. So, she fought no more, but left destiny to work its will unhampered by her futile strivings. For the first time in her life, thanks to the hospitality of Aggie Lynch, secretly reinforced from the funds of Joe Garson, Mary found herself living in luxurious idleness, while her every wish could be gratified by he merest mention of it. She was fed on the daintiest of fare, for Aggie was a sybarite in all sensuous pleasures that were apart from sex. She was clothed with the most delicate richness for the first time as to those more mysterious garments which women love, and she soon had a variety of frocks as charming as her graceful form demanded. In addition, there were as many of books and magazines as she could wish. Her mind, long starved like her body, seized avidly on the nourishment thus afforded. In this interest, Aggie had no share—was perhaps a little envious over Mary's absorption in printed pages. But for her consolation were the matters of food and dress, and of countless junketings. In such directions, Aggie was the leader, an eager, joyous one always. She took a vast pride in her guest, with the unmistakable air of elegance, and she dared to dream of great triumphs to come, though as yet she carefully avoided any suggestion to Mary of wrongdoing.

The Girl Alone in New York

By LILLIAN LAUFFERTY.

DARLING KITTY:

Since I have been over here in the role of needle in the big New York haystack, I have had blue days and rose-colored days and just gray days; but to-day is all a white glare, and I think the lights are pretty strong for my eyes, sis. Not the "Bright Lights," but the glow and gleam of excitement and having adventures follow themselves up as I didn't think they ever could in really truly life.

Your kind attention, sisterkin, and I will tell my little tale from its beginning. Three days ago I lost my job—but don't picture me starving on the streets of New York, for I found a new one this morning! Hard times—and cutting down the staff." That is why I went.

After dealing that blow to my pride and my literary aspirations, fate turned around and began to treat me like the perfect gentleman he can sometimes be!

A New Job.

I answered thirty advertisements yesterday—but I did not seem to answer any one's needs. When I got down to No. 4 on my list to-day I had arrived at the offices of Clark, Clarke & Clark, attorneys-at-law. Just when I began to open the door from the outside some one was turning the handle from the inner realms . . . . . open flies the door . . . . collision . . . Madge's hat takes a little list to port, and Madge yearns for a port of her own.

A voice speaks: "I BEG your pardon. Have I upset you completely? Well, I declare—I do seem to run into you! And on your way to my office this time. Now what can I do for you?"

I should have fled the spot I suppose. Instead I said, "Your office?" And I wanted to add—"Who are YOU?"

"Why yes," I am Clarke—the one with the 'E.' Now what can I do for you?"

"Give me a position; I have lost mine." Probably I should not have said it—but I did not want to come home defeated at the end of four weeks! I wanted work and a chance to "show" New York—well, I guess I have both.

I am to get twenty-five dollars a week in return for my services as "Private Secretary" and Stenographer to he firm, which consists of Clarke Senior, forty-five or fifty, as New York ages go—so he may be sixty or a grandfather at that)! Mr. James T. Clarke, of whom "more anon," and Clarke Junior, who looks twenty-two or three, and thinks life is to be devoted to getting a cane with just the crook to fit his arm to a nicety. He is called Mr. Tommy, and looks it!

And now for the "Anon" and more of Mr. Clarke. He is the man who umped into me so violently that day as I was coming out of Grand Central, and then invited me to tea to give me a chance to recover my equilibrium—thereby quite upsetting it. I will never do for the wife of a President! For Mr. Clarke has a perfectly unforgettable voice, and all I could do about remembering it was feel that it belonged to someone I had in all probability met and forgotten—and it was not until he was my employer, duly signed and sealed, that I realized the full force of that first impact.

Asked to Tea.

But he was considerate and recommended me to the attention of his partners in the most impersonal, hardly-knew-you-were-a-girl sort of a way. And yet the girl alone has as her "Boss" a man who thought he might venture to ask a little stranger—that stranger being me—to tea!

Now, Little Miss Safe-at-Home, think it over—I need work if I am to be a self-supporting person in New York, the while I wait for my literary ability to develop so it can be seen by people who are more interested in subscription pulling than in the mere feeling of personal pride in "Darling Madgie"—and I like Mr. James T. Clarke. Was I silly to go on the payroll of Clarke, Clarke and Clark?

And Kitty, I want to know that man —so that is a perfectly good reason why I shouldn't—since I am an employee in his office. Mr. Clarke is surely a gentleman—even if he is a bit overly friendly. I shall have to prove that I am a lady, I suppose, by being overly unfriendly.

Or, won't I? Hurry up and give your sage opinion to

Your loving

MADGE.

: Good Discipline ::

"IF you think any member of your family needs a spiritual stimulant during the present season," said the young girl with the camera slung over her shoulder, "buy him a camera and a tank and a scale and a few dozen different chemicals, and a book of directions and leave him to his fate. The seeds of humility, patience and long suffering will bear fruit a thousand fold.

"Don't laugh. It's true! If you know anything about the capital sins you know that pride is at the head of the list. To cure it, let some one take a good swift snapshot of you when you're not looking. It can reveal and correct more beauty defects than 52 visits to the shop where they make you beautiful while you wait. When that same snapshot is three or four years old and you gaze upon the hat that was none too becoming in its best days, you begin to realize that the lily of the field had some advantages over Solomon.

"As for patience, amateur photography is more instructive than Bruce's spider and more effective than Job's soliloquies. When you have measured out 16 ounces of hypo in a half-ounce scale—which means that you have to balance it 32 times, to the rhythmic chant of 'Twenty grains one scruple, three scruples one dram, eight drams one ounce'—and then forget whether the last measure was the twenty-first or twenty-second half ounce, and you have to spill it all out and begin all over again—if you can do it with cheerful heart your spiritual condition is encouraging.

Vacation Time.

"When you have come home from a vacation with several rolls of films and begin developing the best and most cherished roll, and it comes out of the tank distinct and clear and you drop it into a bowl of innocent looking hot water which should have been cold—a bowl which a member of your family had placed carelessly at your side—and you see your jolly groups of bathers and canoers run into a shapeless mass of gelatin and you hold in your hand a blank film roll, then if you can turn to the offender and say with serenity: 'It's all right, I really don't mind——,' then you have merited a triple halo.

"Do you wish to understand your neighbor? Try a group picture. In the first place, when it comes to posing a group, have you ever observed the serene indifference with which each member regards the position and advantages of every other member? The most humble and retiring individual quietly and persistently slides into an advantageous position, regardless of the same desire on the part of everyone else.

"And when that same group has been finished and you talk about light and shade, tone and contrast—you were not in it, of course—and you try to get anyone else to observe these points and you say, 'Don't you think the shadows are good?' your friend will invariably reply, 'I didn't know I had a double chin!' or 'I certainly can't wear a soft collar!'

"Then you suddenly realize that your modest, self-effacing friend has a normal ego.

"For social popularity the snapshot is an open sesame. If with your 'bread and butter' letter you can inclose a few snapshots of the infant idol of the family, of your host's new chicken coop, or your hostess' new porch set, the invitation to come again will be sincere and urgent.

"When it comes to generosity this gentle art of snapshotting has no equal. Suppose in a rash moment you have promised each of eight friends a full set of twelve prints. After a preliminary struggle with drams and scruples you start in to print. Your family admonishes, urges and finally commands you to be sensible and go to bed, but you feel that you must persist in your altruistic endeavors. It is midnight before you set your 96 prints to wash in a bowl of running water in the kitchen sink.

"When you return at the end of an hour you find that several of the prints, with the perversity of inanimate things, have slipped over the drain and a miniature Niagara is splashing down upon the floor, on which the water is already three inches deep. You try a mop, which is no more effective than a handkerchief in the Gulf of Mexico.

"The heat has been off two hours and it's 10 degrees below zero, and the kitchen has a west exposure, but you open the door and sweep strenuously and exhaustively. And you hear the splash of the water on the porch, on the landing below, then on the walk in the yard, and you think of the profile of drainage of the great lakes. And you tread lightly and softly, partly because you are reluctant to dislodge the water-soaked ceiling in the flat below and partly because you are afraid of waking your family and bringing down on your unoffending head a chorus of 'I told you so's.'

"After three hours of hard labor you close the door just before the milkman tears up the back stairs. And then, when you come to the breakfast table the next morning, heavy lidded and sore of spirit, but discreetly silent, another of your household comes in and says in a convincing and appealing tone: 'I'm dead tired! I didn't sleep a wink last night!'

"Then, if you can restrain your words of contradiction and offer sympathy in soft and gentle tones, with an invisible smile for the audible slumbers to the rhythm of which you swished a broom half the night—well, amateur photography has done more for you than Gideon Bibles and long weeks of fasting and sacrifice!"

WOMAN SICK FOURTEEN YEARS

Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Elkhart, Ind.:—"I suffered for fourteen years from organic inflammation, female weakness, pain and irregularities. The pains in my sides were increased by walking or standing on my feet and I had such awful bearing down feelings, was depressed in spirits and became thin and pale with dull, heavy eyes. I had six doctors from whom I received only temporary relief. I decided to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a fair trial and also the Sanative Wash. I have now used the remedies for four months and cannot express my thanks for what they have done for me.

:: Putting Yourself in Your Wife's Place ::

I HEARD a man talking about his wife the other day—he began with his wife—and he ended with all the women in the world.

"What is the matter with them?" he said bitterly. "Are they all going crazy, or what? If am a good husband, if I do have to say it myself to get any one to believe it; I work like a bond slave for my wife and family; I devote most of my waking hours and some of my sleeping ones to thinking of new ways to make more money and more money and more money for her and the little fellows.

"My wife has a new hat whenever she wants one, and I never complain about the bill—even if it does make me feel blue to see it sometimes—a hat and a feather, $35. Why, it's enough to take a man's breath. And she goes away in the summer and takes the children and has a fine time for three months, and she has a good home, and—yet is she happy?

"She is not.

"She is miserable, perfectly miserable, and she makes me miserable, too. 'Where have I been?' 'Who gave me that play bill?' 'Where did I hear that song I'm whistling?' 'Who was the woman who stared at me so in the theater the other night?' 'Why don't I love her any more?'

"And she's not the only one. My brother's wife is the same—worse, if anything. My brother can't spend an evening out to save his life without his wife wanting to know exactly where he went and whom he saw, and all about it—and she doesn't believe him when he tells her the truth."

Nice little preachment, wasn't it? And the man meant it, too—every word of it. You could see that by the look of irritated, puzzled misery in his tired face.

What is the matter with us, anyhow, girls?

I wonder if any one knows?

For one thing, it's the mystery of the thing that puzzles us.

Did you ever think of that, Mr Man?

What if the person you loved best in the world, the person you left every one you ever cared for just to be with, went away every day to a mysterious place he called downtown and stayed all day, and came home speaking with the speech of aliens, looking ith the look of strangers, always thinking, thinking about something that you didn't know a thing about?

Wouldn't you wonder sometimes what it all was that made him so absent-minded? Wouldn't you wish he'd tell you something about it once in a while, just enough so you could visualize his day to some extent and have some sort of vague idea what it is that he does—down there in the barred city where you must never go?

It Wouldn't Bore Her.

You know every step your wife takes all day long—she wants to tell you all about it—and when you don't listen she thinks you are tired of her.

It wouldn't bore her to hear all about what you do, but you never help her out a bit. You see, she's in love with you; you're fond of her, but you are not in love with her. That isn't the way you acted when you were in love. Don't tell me! She may not know much, but no woman on earth is there who can't tell when a man really loves her and when he stops loving her, too—so you might as well stop going over that fiction once and for all.

She's in love and you aren't—that's all. Help you any to know that?

Well, maybe not, but it may help your judgment of her and your sympathy, too. Just think back a year or so and remember how you used to feel about her. That will help you to realize that she is having rather a bad time of it herself just now, too.

Morbid, unbalanced, irritating—of course it is—all of these things, but so is the life the woman who loves leads morbid, unbalanced and irritating from start to finish.

You'd go crazy in six months if you had to live it, shut in all day with a baby; no one to speak to but the grocer's boy and the postman; no big ambitions, no great hopes; just little things, little, little, from morning to night.

Don't scold your wife, don't be cross with her, get her mind off the little, silly suspicions and little stupid curiosities by telling her a few things she'd dearly love to know. Tell them to her without her asking, and see how surprised and delighted she'll be.

She'll take just as much interest in you and your affairs as Jones, and yet you talk and talk to Jones.

Think it over, Friend Husband. Put yourself in the place of the poor little puzzled thing who's been tied into a corset every morning of her life and had her poor little tootsies pinched, and her poor head made to ache by some fool kind of hair dressing ever since she can remember, just to get ready for you and for love, and then she finds out that love is just a part of life after all and not all of it, as she has been carefully taught to think, and she's all at sea. Put yourself in her odd, confused, mixed up place and see if you can't see what's the matter with her.

Maybe you can, and if you do you've won the battle before it is fought.

Try it and let's hear from you—we'd like to know.

- In a Safe - Place

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

"I CALLED on a girl a number of times," a young man writes, "and I found her very agreeable, and I admit I made love to her. I had no intention of being serious, and now find that she is desperately in love with me. As I do not want to marry her, what can I do?"

But that is the very thing you must do. A man so fascinating as yourself, who calls on a girl a few times, and lo, the mischief is done, must be safely corraled within the bonds of matrimony that this needless slaughter of female hearts may cease.

Safely married to a woman who realizes what a dangerous person you are to be at large among weak, fluttering female hearts, you will never again have opportunity for making few passes at a girl with a wave of your hand, and reduce her to a state of paralytic adoration in doing it. So long as your wife lives, no girl will again be desperately in love with you if she knows it.

So long as you remain single this trail of women's hearts strewn crushed and bleeding in the path you have trod will continue to grow. For the sake of the women helpless before your charms; for the sake of a nation which can not prosper with all its womankind dying of love, you must marry, and marry at once.

Many Sacrifices.

I admit that you will make many sacrifices. It will be a hardship to a man of your temperament to confine all your lovemaking to one woman, and many, many times you will be aghast at the sacrifice of shutting all your fascinations to the four walls of your own home, but it must be done and I hope you are sensible to the necessity. It is your misfortune to be fascinating, but no one will hold you to blame if you hold those powers within some restraint.

When holding to car strap; when engaged in your daily occupation, if it be that of interpreting the law or selling muslins; keep your mind on the task in hand and don't raise your eyes to the face of any woman. Remember always your fatal power of rendering the women desperately in love with you, and have mercy on my sex. If you are engaged in an occupation that throws you in contact with the silly creatures, quit it, and go to digging trenches where your living will depend on keeping those fascinating eyes on the ground.

Some Simple Rules.

Never leave the house in the evening or on a Sunday without your wife by your side, and when you feel that you can no longer exist without some display of your fascinating power, try them on her. Make love to her, though you may not mean it; make eyes at her, squeeze her hand, and endeavor by every art of which you are master to cause her to love you desperately.

Having renewed the flame of her love to such bounds, she will double her vigilance over you, and reduce to a minimum the dangerous influence you may exert over other women.

Perhaps you may argue that you intend to marry, but would rather wait till you have made love to a girl seriously. That, most irresistible of your sex, is something you will never do. To be serious in love is something beyond you. Marry the girl who thought you were serious, and in her hands entrust your future.

Do You Know That—

Women who obstruct the view of people by wearing large hats are to be prohibited by law from buying a new hat for three years in the State of Texas, if a bill just introduced in the Legislature there is passed. Senator H. W. Breisford found his view obstructed in church, and brought forward the bill at once. It seeks to make it unlawful for any woman to wear in church or any public gathering any hat or headdress having a crown of any ornament exceeding two inches in height, or a brim more than four inches wide. At the end of three years the offender will be permitted to buy only a certain uniform type of hat costing less than $2.

Most races have ailments peculiarly their own, and one of the very latest of workmen's complaints to be discovered is the "conductor's thumb." This affliction is generated by the continual use of the steel punch which is employed to mark the passenger's ticket. The pain, very slight at first, gradually increases and spreads to the palm of the hand, bringing in its train a species of cramp of the hand, and compelling those affected to handle their punches very gingerly.

Fashion by Night :: A Magnificent Evening Gown Modeled by Paris Artistes

Style, beauty and magnificence.

THIS is one of the handsomest models produced from the Paris shops this season.

It's foundation is "mole" charmeuse. The top of the bodice is a fichu of guipure veiled by an "amethyst" silk muslin, which falls back in two long points.

The long tunic is of gray silk muslin, richly embroidered in gold and silver and edged all around with a row of silver beads.

This tunic tightens the bust and the hips, crossing in front under a girdle of draped amethyst satin and a huge scarabaeus of silver.

The skirt, which is of mole charmeuse, is but slightly draped and is finished by a square train.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"NOT that alone," she answered, with a shudder. "I have said that I should under ordinary circumstances have thought he was merely training for the autumn sports—for, you see, he was in a running costume of white cotton stuff and his legs were bare from the knees down—but as he shot past me in the moonlight I caught sight of something like a huge splash of blood on his clothes, and coupling that with the rest I nearly went out of my senses. It wasn't until long afterward I recollected that the badge of the County Club is the Winged Foot of Mercury wrought in brilliant scarlet embroidery. To me, just then, that thing of red was blood—my uncle's blood—and I ran and ran and ran until I got back here to the house and flew up the covered passage and burst into the Round House. He was sitting there still—just as he had been sitting before. But he didn't call out to me this time; he didn't reprove me for disturbing him; didn't make one single movement, utter one single sound. And when I flew to him I knew why. He was dead—stone dead! The face and throat of him were torn and rent as if some furious animal had mauled him, and there were curious yellow stains upon his clothes. That's all Mr. Headland, that's all. I don't know what I did nor where I went from the moment I rushed shrieking from that room until I came to my senses and found myself in this one with dear, kind Mrs. Armroyd here, bending over me and doing all in her power to soothe and to comfort me."

"It Is Better."

"There, there, cherie, you shall not more distress yourself. It is of a hardness too great for the poor mind to bear," put in Mrs. Armroyd herself at this, bending over the sofa as she spoke and softly smoothing the girl's hair. "It is better she should be at peace for a little, is it not, monsieur?"

"Very much better, madame," replied Cleek, noting how softly her hand fell and how gracefully it moved over the soft hair and across the white forehead. "No doubt the major part of what still remains to be told, you in the goodness of your heart will supply——"

"Of a certainty, monsieur, of a certainty."

"——but, for the present," continued Cleek finishing the interrupted sentence, "there still remain one or two questions which must be asked, and which only Miss Renfrew herself can answer. As those are of a private and purely personal nature, madame, would it be asking too much——?" he gave his shoulders an eloquent Frenchified shrug, looked up at her after the manner of her own countrymen and let the rest of the sentence go by default.

"Madame" looked at him and gave her little hands an airy and a graceful flirt.

"Of a certainty, monsieur," she said, with charming grace, "Cela m'est egal." And walked away with a step remarkably light and remarkably graceful for one of such weight and generous dimensions.

A Private Talk.

"Miss Renfrew," said Cleek, sinking his voice and looking her straight in the eyes, as soon as Mrs. Armroyd had left them, "Miss Renfrew, tell me something, please. Have you any suspicion regarding the identity or the purpose of the person who murdered your uncle?"

"Not in the slightest, Mr. Headland. Of course, in the beginning my thoughts flew at once to Sir Ralph Droger, but I now see how absurd it is to think that such a——"

"I am not even hinting at Sir Ralph Droger," interposed Cleek. "Two other people in the world have a 'motive' quite as strong as any that might be assigned to him. You, of course, feel every confidence in the honor and integrity of Mr. Charles Drummond?"

Kept in His Desk.

"Mr. Headland!"

"Gently, gently, please! I merely wished to know if in your heart you had any secret doubt, and your flaring up like that has answered me. You see, one has to remember that the late Mr. Nosworth is said to have made a will in your favor. The statement is correct, is it not?"

"To the best of my belief—yes."

"Filed it with his solicitors has he?"

"That I can't say. I think not, however. He was always sufficient unto himself and had a rooted objection to trusting anything of value to the care of any man living. Even his most important documents—plans and formulæ of his various inventions; even the very lease of this property—have always been kept in the desk in the laboratory."

"Hum-m-m!" said Cleek—and pinched his chin hard. "Then, after a moment, "One last question," he went on suddenly. "What do you know, Miss Renfrew, of the recent movements of Mr. Harry Nosworth, the son who was kicked out?"

"Nothing, nothing—absolutely nothing!" she answered, with a look of something akin to horror. "I know that you are thinking of him as though he is as bad as man can be. It is abominable to suppose that he could lift his hand against his own father."

To Be Continued To-morrow...

An Educated Eel

"YOU take it from me, sir," said the old showman, "that the higher education of animals is a mistake.

"I have trained all sorts of beasts from fleas to elephants. I've taught horses to dance on their hind legs, dogs to act music-hall sketches, elephants to play the barrel-organ and do all sorts of tricks; but not one of them showed such intelligence as my educated eel.

"I picked him out of the water one day, and was attracted by his cute brown orbs. He looked at me in a sort of friendly, knowin' way, as if to say: 'Let's be friends, guv'nor—real pals.'

"So I picked him up and put him in my pocket. Then a bright idea struck me. I would train him with the other animals and let him take part in my show.

Was a Winner.

"Talk of the intelligence of animals. That eel simply beat the bunch. He guessed what I wanted him to do before I'd thought it out myself. He had the true spirit of the artist, too, he 'ad. He performed because he loved to act.

"The first tricks I taught him he took to as mere child's play. In a few days he could put his tail into his mouth and roll round the room, pretending to be a hoop. He would smile when I said 'Smile' in the cutest way, and, what is more, he would often smile on his own without being told, as if tickled at the humors of this funny world.

"Then I taught him to wiggle himself into the shape of letters. Soon he could twist himself into every letter in the alphabet and spell words as easy as you please. 'This beats science,' thought I, when one day he actually spelt my name; so I formed the idea of inviting some of the greatest scientists in the country to witness the feats of my marvellous eel.

"All the day of the private view drew near I put him regularly through his tricks, and that marvellous animal seemed to guess exactly what was in store for him. He got nervous, excited, and vain, too. If he had been a cock I can just imagine him spreading his tail. But he merely blinked his eyes in the cutest, knowin'est way.

He Broke Down.

"Then all of a sudden the excitement began to tell upon him, and he showed signs of a nervous breakdown. He took trembling fits, which nigh scared me to death. I dosed him with stirit, which seemed to do him good for a time, but he got weaker an' weaker until at last one morning I found him stretched out stiff and stark on the floor.

"If ever a human being died of brain fever, that poor beast did. I never trained another eel again. He died about this time last year, and I would give anything to have him by me now, with his cute little smile and his 'Never-say-die-guv'nor' look."

:: Making Sure ::

THEY were on parade when the Irish drill-sergeant stopped dead in front of the newest recruit and eyed him steadily from top to toe before he burst out:

"Arrah! an' here's a nice state of affairs. How dare ye come here and stand before a dacent man lolke meself covered in dust from head to foot? Answer me when I spake to ye!"

With knocking knees the now thoroughly wretched recruit endeavored to squeeze in a few well-chosen words of explanation, but his attempts were rudely overborne by a further torrent of words from the sergeant, who fairly bellowed:

"Ye would answer me, would ye? Spake at your peril! Now, tell me, ye spalpeen, what have ye been doin' to yer nice new uniform?"

Again the bewildered recruit opened a capacious mouth as a preliminary to speech, but the violent voice of his superior broke in once again:

"Take care!" he shouted. "Oi can hear ye. If ye answer me when I spakes to ye, I'll have ye arrested for insolence. An' if ye don't answer when I spakes to ye, I'll send ye to the guard room for disobedience. So mind, I'll have ye both ways."

Distinctly Suspicious.

It was when on maneuvers, and a soldier was being tried for the shooting of a chicken on prohibited ground.

"Look here, my man," said the commanding officer to the farmer who brought the accusation, "are you quite certain this is the man who shot your bird? Will you swear to him?"

"No, I won't do that," replied the canny yokel, "but I will say he's the man I suspect o' doing it."

"That's not enough to convict a man!" retorted the C. O., considerably nettled. "What raises your suspicions?"

"Well, sir," replied the sturdy farmer, as he slowly mopped his forehead with his bandanna, "it was this way: I see 'im on my property with a gun; then I heered the gun go off; then I see 'im putting the chicken into his knapsack; and it didn't seem nohow to think the bird committed suicide."

Little Bobbie's Pa

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

PA brought a book hoam with him last nite & he was showing it to me. It was called How a Husband & Wife shud act to Avoid Quarls. It was a big book, about a foot thick.

This book Bobbie, sed Pa, is a book that was wrote by a very wise guy. He was married three times & his first two wifes left him beefour he reelized that he was hard to git along with, so wen he married the third time he made up his mind to study the fair sex & find out what wud humor them. This book is the result of yeers of pashunt watching & experiments on his part, Pa sed. I think that it ought to keep yure Ma & me from ever having a other unkind word. Here is sum of the rules, Bobbie, so wen you grow up & git a wife of yure own you will be abel to greet her right at all times & saiv quarls.

Good Rules.

Rule 1—The husband shud never becum angry at the saim time that the wife is angry. One angry person in a fambly is enuff at a time.

Rule 2—The wife shud nevver stay angry after she has gone to sleep. She might have a nitemare.

Rule 3—When a husband is contradickted by a wife he shud smile sweetly & say, wen his wife gives him a chanst, "I dare say you are right." That is the greatest sentence that was evver invented for making matrimony possibel.

Now, Bobbie, sed Pa, there is a good point right thare. Let us go in the other room & I will ask you to notis how yure Ma acts wen I answer her that way. "I dare say you are right."

So we went in the living room & Ma was thare. She was kind out of sorta about sumthing, I guess, beekaus she looked at Pa & me kind of cross wen we caim in. Well, I suppose you want yure supper, Sed Ma. Yes, deerest, sed Pa. It is a wonder that you & our son dident fool around in the library until it was time for brekfust, sed Ma. The men nowadays, sed Ma, act for all the wurld as if wimmen was made to wait on them & nevver give anything else a thought.

I dare say you are rite, sed Pa.

Of course, I am rite, sed Ma. Now thare is Missus Norris. She jest left a few minutes before you got hoam. She toald me that her husband reefused to buy her another frock until next month and then went to his club and lost four dollars bowling ten pins. Think of it, sed Ma, unable to buy his little wife another frock when she only had three, and then going and losing four dollars bowling. That is the man of it for you.

How much was the frock? sed Pa.

Very Cheap.

Only sixty dollars, Ma sed. Thay was eighty dollars last, but you know wimmen's clothes has went down a whole lot in price this season.

Maybe he sud afford to spend four dollars bowling & caddent spend sixty dollars for a other frock, sed Pa.

Thare you go, sed Ma, deefending him. Of course, man can do no wrong. The men want to be the lords of creashun.

I dare say you are rite, sed Pa. How about dinner?

It is on the table waiting for you, sed Ma. Oh, dear, it is the saim old story, Ma sed. Git the dinner & then put away the dishes. A man's work is from sun to sun, a woman's work is nevver done.

Pa sed "I dare say you are rite" wen he had a peece of stalk in his mouth & he nearly choaked.

Thar you go laffing at me, sed Ma, you are a brute.

Poor Pa, I guess he will have to read sum moar rules in his new book.

"Woman's Work Is Never Done"

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

"MAN'S work lasts from sun to sun,
But woman's work is never done."

And one reason why it is never done is that she is not allowed to do it.

Men can understand that other men have necessary work to perform; it is, however, hard for women of leisure to understand how busy a busy woman may be. And until they do understand this it will not be easy for any woman to labor as steadily and satisfactorily as does a man.

A man who is an author said to me, "From the time that I go into my study after breakfast in the morning, until I am ready to come out at luncheon, I am not disturbed."

I gasped with envy and also with a little incredulity, for I know that his study is in his apartment and that he has a wife and children.

"I mean it," he said. "If I would do good work, I must be left alone."

"But your telephone?" I queried. That is right on your desk."

Should Be Unmolested.

He smiled in a superior kind of way. "Ah, yes, but that is only a switch from the instrument in the hall, and my wife or the maid answers the main phone. If I am asked for the reply is that I am 'engaged and cannot be disturbed.'"

I do insist that when the man has gone to business, and the children to school and college, when the orders have been given to the maids, the butcher, grocer, etc., that even a woman might have three or four hours each day in which she need not be disturbed—or, at least, that she might have her mornings unmolested.

"But she should explain to her friends," says someone. "They would understand and not call on her or telephone to her in the morning."

Her friends! Does anyone fancy it is one's close friends that disturb one? No, indeed!

Who is it then who interrupts the woman and ignores the fact that she is "engaged?"

First of all, it is next to impossible to make a maid understand that when a woman would write a story, paint a picture or give a music lesson she has in view any object except that of amusing herself for a little while when she has nothing else on hand. Therefore, in spite of interdicts, she often interrupts any one of these occupations to deliver some message that could wait, without injury, for a half day. But if she is so well trained that she does not do this, she seldom has strength of mind to say to those who would reach her mistress by telephone or in person that the busy woman cannot be disturbed.

What Is Another Way?

I remember that when I flattered myself that I had at last drilled one maid into doing this, I discovered that her answer for weeks had been the same, namely, that I was gone away and that nobody knew when I would come back. When I learned of this and protested to her, explaining that her statement was an untruth, she said—with a knowledge of human nature at which I could not sufficiently wonder—"Indade, ma'am, if I said you was engaged and couldn't see 'em, they'd not be satisfied. But if I say you're away, sure what is there for them to do but lave you alone?"

No, it is not one's own friends who will not accept the "engaged" statement, for they love one enough to let her alone during her golden morning hours. But there are a plenty of other people who do not love one. Among them are the casual acquaintance, who wants to ask one to subscribe to a certain philantropic movement; the woman who telephones to ask about a maid who was once in one's employ and who queries "must engage immediately if at all," and who talks for at least ten minutes about her past experiences with "help;" the book agent—for whom one cannot help being sorry—the former schoolmate who has not seen one for years, but who, in passing through the city, has "looked one up," and insists to the hesitating maid that she knows her mistress will be displeased if this "friend of her girlhood" is turned from the door; these are among the hundred-and-one people who would be wounded by that "engaged." Yet we are told that it is not honest to send word that one is "not at home."

Is there not some way in which the members of society who do not have to be let alone to accomplish their work can be made to understand that even a woman may need time and quiet in which to do the task laid to her hand?

And yet, what woman calling on an acquaintance, does not feel rebuffed by the message that "Mrs. Blank is engaged, and begs to be excused?"

Underground Trespassers : Quaint Callers That Are Found In the Depths of Coal Mines

AFTER a colliery explosion at Llanbradach, Wales, one of the rescue parties made a surprising discovery. Perched on a tub in the mine was a robin! Now, most colliers regard the presence of birds, particularly those with white plumage, about pits as a "token," and the "fire" which had occurred was therefore attributed to the intrusion of the perky little stranger!

Rats are not uncommon about a pithead, and some of them reach the depths beneath, occasionally with fatal haste.

One, during the process of falling down a shaft, acquired such momentum by the time it reached the bottom that when it struck a collier there was a loud report as of an explosion, and the man was knocked to the ground with great force.

In warm mines, too, mice are numerous. A few reach a new pit in the trusses of hay and bags of corn that are taken down it for the ponies, and these, notwithstanding the strangeness of their environment, multiply so rapidly that cats have to be installed in the stables.

It might be supposed that "mousers," at any rate, would not take at all kindly to the subterranean world; but they soon become used to their surroundings.

In one mine a fine tabby used to knock off with the men on Saturday, but, unlike them, she did not start again on Monday morning. She was always missing till Wednesday or Thursday, when she returned from the old and disused portions of the mine.

Bad For Mice.

A strike, however, plays far greater havoc with the mouse population of a pit than any number of cats, because the food of the ponies and of the men and boys is no longer available for the unfortunate little creatures.

When, by way of example, the Durham colliers joined in the general strike last year many of the pits in that county were overrun with mice; and for some time after work was resumed not one was seen.

Dogs also are among the animal trespassers in mines. By some means a terrier entered a disused pit in Swaledale, and for eight days it roamed about the workings, apparently without anything to eat.

More remarkable was a dog's intrusion into a South Wales pit which has the reputation of being haunted.

The animal in question was seen prowling about the workings, and, as it seemed to vanish when an attempt was made to catch it, a number of colliers at once "downed tools" and went home.

Some of them then consulted a local wise woman, telling her of the "vision" they had seen earlier in the day, whereupon she predicted a disaster. As a result more than 200 men refused to go down the following morning, and, though the manager did his utmost to induce them to resume work, they obstinately determined to remain idle.

And, what is more, it was not until three days later that all the men were at work again.

There were two curious sequels to this incident. One, which took place about a week afterward, was the prosecution and conviction of the fortune teller for causing the miners to absent themselves from work.

A Gruesome Discovery.

The other sequel happened much more recently, and was the discovery of the skeleton of a dog—doubtless that which had been seen by some of the miners—in the workings.

The most singular trespassers in coal mines, perhaps, are workers from neighboring pits. A man or boy loses his way and, when his lamp goes out, wanders in pitchy darkness through the disused workings, ever listening for the sound of a pick, till he either sinks exhausted or gets in touch with humanity again.

A bloodhound was once taken down a pit to find a man who had disappeared, and in several cases lost miners have ultimately worked back to their starting point. Some years ago, for instance, a boy was lost in a Scotch colliery from Monday morning to Wednesday morning, notwithstanding he was searched for systematically the whole time, and in the end, when almost exhausted, he came upon his father and uncle at the place where he had left them.

Sometimes, however, miners become trespassers—only in a technical sense—through "striking" a road communicating with another pit and following it up.

Inconsiderate Men

FIRST the telephone rang. Then the buzzer buzzed. Then a voice from the inner office called sharply for the little stenographer.

"You can all wait until I'm good and ready," announced the little stenographer, decidedly, to the world in general.

After this declaration of independence she hastily answered the phone, then grabbed book and pencil and hurried into the inner office, pausing an instant on the way to let the owner of the impatient voice know that she was engaged.

"I tell you," she remarked to the bookkeeper when she returned, "I get so exasperated sometimes that I almost explode! These men make me awfully tired! Here I've been working all the years that they've been having a good time getting educated. Then they come into the office, and, after selecting the lightest window and the most comfortable chair, they think they're busy!

"Here I am—with my desk piled high with real work! And what do you suppose that young Mr. Babcock wanted? He calmly asked me to take a few letters—personal thank you letters—to friends of his who entertained him on his trip! And in each one he excused himself for using a stenographer on the ground that he was so pressed for time! Pressed for time! Why, he doesn't know how to fill in the hours.

He Was Lazy.

"Do you know what Mr. Brown was so urgent about? He's been calling out here for ten minutes, while I was engaged, and I thought it couldn't be anything less than drawing up a contract! But there he sat, looking over his last month's personal account, and he was too lazy to think for himself! He wanted me to stand there beside him and go through the things with him—because, as he said, two heads are better than one! What he might have said, if he'd been strictly truthful, is that my head is better than his!

"This morning Mr. Gray came strolling in an hour after things had begun, and he sat down and read a newspaper and smoked a cigar before he went through his mail. Then he called me in to take his letters, and, though I purposely let him know how much work I had piled up, he gave me half a dozen phone numbers to call for him! And he sat there looking out of the window while I got his numbers on the telephone! Oh, it makes me so angry I'd like to express myself from a public platform on the wrongs of busy stenographers!"

The bookkeeper listened sympathetically. "I must own," he said, "that they're an inconsiderate bunch!"

"Inconsiderate!" cried the little stenographer. "They do it on purpose. They've got it into their thick heads that they're business men, and they can't be bothered with detail and the little things. They're such big men! Their time is awfully valuable and mustn't be wasted!

"Do you know what I'm going to do some time? I'm going to accept a proposal of marriage. That'll make me free to do as I please. Then I'm coming down to the office the same as usual. When the buzzer buzzes I'll go in, and I'll take the business letters, but when a personal letter comes I'll simply say, 'I'm busy to-day.' Then, when they ask me to get some phone numbers, I'll say, 'I see you aren't at all busy; would you mind getting those numbers yourself? I've a great deal of work to do!' Then I'll walk out to my desk!

"When Mr. Brown calls me away in the midst of an important letter to stand at his side while he leans back in his swivel chair, so that I may help him add up figures and straighten out accounts, I'll say, 'Mr. Brown, I'm very busy to-day, and if you've nothing of importance to say you'll have to excuse me!'

"Oh, but won't they be surprised? The only trouble is that I've been a slave for so long that I'm afraid I won't have the courage to break up traditions and precedents."

The Other Side.

"Then," said the bookkeeper, musingly, "you'll put on your hat and go home, and the man who proposed to you, so you could be free from this daily grind, will say: 'I want dinner early to-night,' and you'll hurry to get it. Between times you'll be mending and darning and dusting, to make him comfortable; and he'll call you, and you'll come running to hear what he's got to say. And you'll go on training him to expect that sort of service, so when he goes to his office he'll be just like the rest of the men!"

The little stenographer listened fascinated. "Why, that's so!" she exclaimed. She paused and thought it over. "But I guess I'll try it anyway," she announced, "because I'll dare to say, 'I won't for he can't fire me!'"

The Bitter Bit.

The workhouse inmates were just about to sit down, when two men came along one of the corridors carrying a steaming caldron between them.

"Aha!" cried the official, who had been lying in wait for them. "Put that kettle down and fetch me a spoon!"

One of the men brought a spoon and at the same time tried to say something, but was peremptorily told to hold his tongue.

"D'yer call that soup?" at length spluttered the official, as he swallowed a heaped-up spoonful of the steaming mess. "It's more like dirty water."

"But that's just wot it is, sir," answered the second man, timidly. "We have been scrubbin' down the tables!"

COTTON GOES UP AS SHORTS COVER

Cooler Weather and Firm Cables Cause Scare Among Shorts. Offerings Are Light.

NEW YORK, May 6.—Although the cotton market received good support at the opening to-day, first prices showed irregularity, being 2 points up to 4 points off from last night's close. Cables were unsatisfactory, but short sellers were cautious, fearing developments in the old crop months. Weather conditions were favorable and sentiment was against the market, but shorts became general buyers shortly after the call, when indications pointed to cooler weather. At the end of half an hour the list was back to last night's level and the tone was satisfactory.

It is estimated that shorts covered fully 60,000 bales yesterday, attributed mainly to Wall Street and the Waldorf clique.

The principal points of to-day's weather map are reliable indications for more general rains in the eastern half of the belt during the next thirty-six hours; slightly cooler, but no cold weather.

Weather reports and acreage estimates, also the technical conditions, are forming speculative option. Weather conditions have been excellent as a whole, but acreage estimates are rather smaller than generally expected. It seems plain that short covering has furnished the principal buying in the market.

Wall Street was said to be covering short lines and a rally of about 10 points from the opening quotations followed. During the afternoon session the market was featureless, with prices fluctuating narrowly. The weekly weather report was unfavorable for Alabama and the Eastern States, but very favorable for the Western belt.

It is said that the market has been heavily oversold. There seem to be no forces who are anxious to bull the market in the face of such good crop reports and weather conditions. On the other hand, the market finds plenty of sellers on every rally, makes it obvious that this is a market

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, May 6.—Liverpool was disappointing at first with futures about 2 points lower than due, spot unchanged, sales 6,000 bales. Political news is mixed. The evacuation of Scutari announced by Montenegro is accepted with faith and optimism in London, but with doubt and diffidence by the Continent. Austria and Italy are reported to continue their military preparations to move on Albania.

New York acted as though concerted support was applied which is brought out in connection with the recent bullish literature of Mr. Price.

There is no question, however, that more confidence prevails in regard to the political situation and increased demand for contracts and more inquiry for spots is showing up. This is the explanation of the better tone in our market this morning.

Expectation of an unfavorable weekly weather report, except for Western States, gave strength to the new crops. The market held a 5-point advance well up to 11 o'clock, when the latest quotation of French rentes showing a decline of 80 points caused uneasiness on renewed fear of politics.

COTTON SEED OIL.

NEW YORK, May 6.—N. L. Carpenter & Co.: The cotton seed oil market was quiet and featureless, reflecting dullness in the consuming trade and lack of outside demand. Selling was in the way of scattered liquidation by local longs. Shorts bought a little May. Trading was professional, pending new developments. Bears show no signs of aggressiveness.

MERGER TROUBLES SEND STOCKS DOWN

U. P. and S. P. Dissolution Plan Again Comes Into Prominence as Annoying Factor.

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, May 6.—There was an irregular tendency in the stock market at the opening to-day and gains and losses offset one another. The undertone was steady. Canadian Pacific opened at 245¼ for a gain of 1⅛, but subsequently shaded.

The Harriman issues influenced the market and at the end of half an hour they had exerted a weakening tendency. Southern Pacific was freely offered, opening for a loss of 1⅛. Union Pacific fell a point. Amalgamated Copper began ½ higher, but afterward declined.

The show of strength during the early trading was not maintained after the first half hour. Union Pacific was off 1⅜ at 149¼. Reading and Amalgamated Copper were fractional gains to 1 point. St. Paul dropped 1 point. Steel ½ to 60¾. At 9:45 Southern Pacific declined 1⅝. Similar recessions were noted in the other issues. Call money loaned at 2½.

Anaconda Copper was strong on its earnings report, advancing ⅝. United States Steel common fell ¾, while Erie, after opening with a fractional gain, lost its advance and sustained a net loss of ½. Baltimore and Ohio declined fractionally. Among the stocks making fractional advances were American Can, Northern Pacific, New York, New Haven and Hartford and Missouri Pacific. The curb market was steady.

Sentiment in Americans in London was cheerful. Canadian Pacific in London spurted, then shaded.

Oats—No. 2 35

CHICAGO, May 6.—Wheat was again lower this morning, the list showing recessions of ½@⅝c on further losses abroad and the favorable crop news from this country, as well as from Russia. There was liberal realizing in the Old World and there was some short selling there. Northwestern receipts, as well as those in Canada, were in excess of a year ago.

Corn was ⅜@½c lower and was under considerable selling pressure, with May the weakest.

Oats were ⅛@¼c lower in sympathy with corn.

Provisions were easier, except for September lard and July ribs.

OPINION ON GRAIN.

CHICAGO, May 6.—Bartlett, Frazier & Co.:

Wheat—Map shows frosts in Northwest, rains in Iowa and Southwest, with traces in Illinois. Local sentiment is very bearish, which may result in a still further decline, but we do not care to take that side of the market.

Corn—There is no new pressure.

Oats—Local traders rather bearish.

Provisions—Market seems to meet with good support on declines, but prices depend chiefly on volume of receipts.

POULTRY, PET and LIVE STOCK

Chicks Die Because Of Mismanagement Or Carelessness

Farmers Should Strive to Find Successful Way to Handle Them.

EDITED BY JUDGE F. J. MARSHALL

Chicks are being hatched by hundreds all over the country at this time, many of which will never live to reach the age of value to their owners, owing to mismanagement or carelessness.

If farmers and poultry raisers would strive as hard to find the successful way to handle little chicks as they do to master other things frequently of much less importance, we would see thousands of good chickens go to our markets in the place of filling an untimely grave.

By way of warning, I might say that the three most harmful things the chicks have to contend with are cold, wet and sloppy feed. In other words, keep them dry. Feed cracked grain and small seeds mixed, and feed dry. If you will have the nerve to stick to this kind of feed in their bill of fare any length of time, you will succeed. Keep coops, houses and runs strictly clean and fresh and do not crowd. This is an old story to some of our readers, but to thousands of others it will mean a radical change in methods.

To give you an idea of how valuable I consider the dry feeding method, I will say that had I known twenty years ago what I do now about it, and practiced it during that time of my breeding of pure bred chickens, I would have made $5 in place of every $1 I did make. But someone asks why I make such a statement? Simply because I could not raise half the chickens I hatched, even with hens, and there seemed to be more difference than that with brooder chicks. My trade demanded twice as many eggs and stock as I could produce under the soft or wet food theory.

Chicks under the new method of dry feed need a constant supply of good grit in some form, either very coarse, sharp sand or prepared grit. Well supplied with these few essentials, there will be no trouble. Do not be in a rush to feed them as soon as they are out of the shell; better wait two days if you want health.

Caponizing.

Judge Marshall: I raise White Leghorns and White Wyandottes, and have a good many cockerels of both breeds coming on that I shall have to put on the market in some shape, as I want to keep the pullets for egg-producers. I have been thinking of caponizing a lot of them. Do you think it will pay me to go to the extra trouble in the increase in price and weight? MRS. J. J. MORRIS. Quitman, Ga.

ANSWER—I do not believe it will pay you to go to the trouble to caponize at all, and I know it will not pay on the Leghorns. They are too small a breed to make capons worth your while to trouble with them. The larger breeds, such as the Brahmas and Cochins and Rocks, make the finest capons. It would hardly pay you to go into the business unless you already had a good market for them, for the average hotel will not pay enough extra to pay for the trouble and extra time and work it takes.

Good capons bring a fancy price on the New York and Boston markets, but it would not pay one down here to run the risk of shipping so far.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Many Parcels Sold At Morning Auction

Lively Bidding on Brookhaven Club, and Luckie, Whitehall, Forsyth, Decatur St. Lots.

Interest in local real estate circles centered largely to-day around public sales before the court house door.

A large crowd attended and the bidding was lively. The Brookhaven Club property was sold to perfect a title in the Brookhaven estates; two lots on Decatur Street of the Joseph E. Brown estate were sold; certain properties of Moise DeLeon on South Forsyth and Whitehall Streets changed hands; seventeen lots on West Fourteenth and State Streets went to bidders, and a well-known real estate man bought a Carnegie Way lot of the Lagomarsino estate.

The Brookhaven estates, holders of $80,000 worth of bonds in the Brookhaven Club on Peachtree Road, bought in the Brookhaven property for $90,000—$88,000 for the land and building and $2,000 for the furnishings. Charles P. Glover, president of the Brookhaven estates, and Ivan E. Allen, vice president, represented the corporation. The sale was made in order to clear the way for a contemplated sale to the Capital City Club for $110,000. There are $80,000 worth of improvements on the property, the road frontage is some 9,000 feet and there are about 150 acres estimated at approximately $500 an acre.

A. J. and H. F. West sold 35 and 37 Decatur Street, 50 by 100 feet, for Governor Joseph M. Brown to J. J. Haverty and A. G. Rhodes for $70,000, and the following lots on West Fourteenth and State Streets, in the W. B. B. Richards estate, for a total of about $12,000.

Courtland S. Winn and O. F. Owen, executors of the late L. P. Thomas, sold the following:

A 54 by 203-foot lot on South Forsyth Street, between Garnett and Brotherton Streets, to J. H. McCord at the rate of $265 a front foot, or $14,310; two lots, with small houses, on Hightower Street, 80 feet front, to J. H. Ewing for $1,350, and to W. A. Hennington, 739 Chestnut Street, 50 by 127, for $685 cash.

Lot 2 of the Conn & Fitzpatrick property on Habersham Road, near Paces Ferry Road, was sold for the estate of Holmes Frederick to Jerome Moore, attorney for a client, for $20 a front foot, or $4,700. The frontage is 235 feet.

Steve R. Johnston sold for an out-of-town client representing the estate of Sarah Story, a lot on the McDonough Road for $705, Charles E. Thompson being the buyer.

Auctioneer J. W. Ferguson and S. B. Turman sold a $5,000 equity in the Guthman property on Whitehall Street, between West Fair and Brotherton Streets, to Dr. W. J. Blalock for $1,500, making the price $31,500. This lot was formerly held by Moise DeLeon under bond for title. It fronts 107.5 feet on Whitehall and 52.33 on Forsyth. E. M. Mitchell bought for Joseph Loewus a one-third interest in the equity of the other DeLeon parcel at the northwest corner of South Forsyth and Castleberry Streets for $1,950. This lot is 76.6 feet on Forsyth and 70 on Castleberry.

There were several other small sales.

Bell Apartments Resold.

The Charles P. Glover Realty Company sold to-day for the Corinthian Company to the Realty Mortgage Company the Bell apartments at the southwest corner of Ponce DeLeon Avenue and North Boulevard for $65,000. This property has changed hands several times of late.

Brookhaven Transfer To-day?

A report this afternoon had it that at a final conference the Capital City Club property committee would close up the deal for the Brookhaven Club, a proposition having been submitted some time ago by the Brookhaven Estates. The site is wanted by the Capital City for a country club. The Brookhaven property was sold this morning so that the title might be clearly in the Brookhaven Estates.

Progress of Peachtree Work.

The county convicts have practically finished digging up the old asphalt on the right-hand side of Peachtree and will start at once on the opposite side of the thoroughfare, going south. They were working north of Fourteenth Street this morning. A separate gang is following close behind with rock, binder, etc., and the street will soon be good for traffic between Sixth and Fifteenth Streets.

Healey Building Delayed.

Two monster derricks, intended to lift steel girders into place on the Healey Building site, have not yet come from the manufacturers, and the work has been held up now some two weeks. The daily loss to Mr. Healey is considerable, since the job has not been pushed following the completion of foundation work. Enough steel is already on hand, but the derricks have upset calculations.

The Baby That Cried and the Baby That Didn't

The Mother of the First Baby Had Real Cause for Thanksgiving

Copyright, 1913.

It was on a suburban train running out of Atlanta. A mother with her family, two half-grown children and a baby, was on the way, apparently, to spend a day with friends and relatives in the country.

The baby was cross and fretful. The motion of the car irritated him, the conductor frightened him, the other passengers, jingling keys foolishly to distract his attention, annoyed him.

He was perhaps ten months old, and a baby of ten months has a magnificently developed voice.

This baby knew what his voice was for, and he used it. From one end of the car to the other he could be heard, howling an indignant protest against taking a journey he did not want to take, and undergoing privations without being consulted.

The mother, terribly worried by the indignant frowns of the other passengers, fussed and worried. She offered the baby his bottle, but he batted it away with a tiny pink hand and yelled louder than ever.

Being a careful mother, she examined his clothing for possible loose pins, but she didn't find any.

The woman in the seat ahead of her turned and rudely stared, first at her and then at the purple-faced baby.

A crusty old man in the seat behind said to his companion: "Why in the thunder do people travel with babies? If they cannot afford nurses they ought to stay at home."

More sympathetic people strolled past and offered the mother advice and made faces for the baby to admire. But the baby did not admire them. He merely expressed eloquently, though without articulate words, his contempt and disgust.

Presently the mother, driven nearly frantic, turned to a woman across the aisle and said:

"I wish to goodness he wouldn't cry. I'd give anything in the world if he'd only keep quiet for a week, absolutely quiet."

Now, this was a healthy baby, dressed in frills and ribbons, his little feet in brand-new, soft, red shoes, and his distorted face framed in a circle of fluffy white fur.

And because he was healthy and well fed, and protected against disease, his voice was of the lustiest kind.

Perhaps it is not surprising that his mother wished she might not hear his voice for another week, but——

Recently a party of men went among the tenement houses in New York to distribute some small gifts for the tenants.

They were poor, squalid tenement houses. On every floor were dozens of babies, but there was no crying.

In one little room a mother sat beside a little, dirty bed—a mattress placed on two up-ended cracker boxes.

On the bed was a baby—also ten months old, but with no shoes whatever, and clothed in a few dingy garments that had served several other babies before him.

The baby was very white and very still. On each cheek was a red spot, showing that a fever was pumping his blood to an abnormal pressure. His eyes were large and blue and wide open.

The mother turned to the visitors and tried to smile. Then she looked back at the patient, quiet baby.

"If he would only just cry," she said. "It seems to me I would give my life to hear him cry just a little."

There is something to remember, you mothers who lose your patience when your babies cry. Think of those other babies in the tenements who do not cry, either because they have not the strength or because they have learned that not even a baby's needs can be satisfied because of his crying for them when there is nothing in the house to satisfy them.

Healthy babies MUST cry. Crying not only develops their lungs, but it is their only means of telling their mothers that there is something the matter or that they are dissatisfied and unhappy.

And no baby is dissatisfied or unhappy who is well fed and well cared for.

When he cries you may be sure that he is sick or tired or that he feels that he is being trifled with.

Feed him well, keep him clean, clothe him warmly, and he will be content to play and coo as long as he keeps awake.

But when his stomach is empty or overfull, when pins are sticking in him, or his feet are cold, you may expect to hear his voice raised in loud and emphatic protest.

Be glad that you can hear it, you mothers whose nerves are "all frayed out" because the crying disturbs you—and you fathers who spend the night away from home because "you cannot bear to hear that baby howling all night."

Let the baby tell you by his crying that something is the matter, and, rather than scold and storm, find out what it is and make him easier and more comfortable.

Remember that there are many mothers, whose babies are now silent forever, who would give all that they have in the world could they hear those wailing baby voices come back to them across the years, and, taking the little creatures in their arms, try with all their mother instinct to help them and make them happy again.

Winifred Black Writes About "Doors That Slam"

By WINIFRED BLACK.

BANG!—said the door—I turned over in my sleep—Rattle-bang!—there it was again. If I could only think of some way to stop it.

It really was too bad—there I was so tired, up all night the night before and busy all day that day, so tired, so weary—and no one cared, no one seemed to notice how drawn my poor face was—no one even said they were sorry—that's always the way—a woman could work herself to death and that's all the thanks that she would get. Biff!—there's that door again!

The rising wind took a delight in that door and the wooden slam of it. Sometimes the door didn't bang; it simply rattled—R-R-R-R-R-rattle, rattle, rattle, like a train of cars going over a shaky bridge—rrrrrrattle, rattle, rattle, there—there is water under that bridge; you can tell by the sort of rustle in the rattle—shake, shake, shake—someone must be there; no, it is only the wind again—shake, shake, shake—well, come in if you want to so badly.

Door Banged No More.

Not a soul in the house will get up and shut that door tight, and let me sleep.

Along about daylight I rose, walked over to the door just a few steps, turned the key, and it was done—the door banged no more.

My tired senses at rest, my eyelids closed, and I was just about to drift away into dreamland when I heard a sound that caused me to awaken a little more.

WINIFRED BLACK.

It was the sound of bare boughs of the great oak—like some entranced musician loath to leave his music—and I was neither younger nor more beautiful in any way than before. Yet I slept as if I were a child, with all the world waiting [illegible] to awaken a little more.

It didn't take a minute to work the miracle—nor any genius or inspiration. Just plain sense and some little resolution for the instant, and the troublous night and the uneasy dreams turned to refreshing slumber—and the door was the same door, only it wasn't locked when it banged.

I wonder——

How often have I turned upon an easy pillow and let the door bang—rather than to get up and shut it?

A hundred times, I fear, and more than that.

Are Sensitive Souls.

The cook leaves the gas burning in the range when she doesn't need it. What an extravagance!—it irritates me every time I see it. I turn it out, but the next time I go to the kitchen there it is, blazing away at so much a blaze—I hated to speak of it—cooks are such sensitive souls, and this one makes such delicious waffles. Last week I took my courage in my hands and called the cook into the pantry.

"Mary," I said, "there is something I want to speak to you about—the gas you are so careless about; please turn it out the minute you are through with it, will you?"

"Yes," said Mary, and she did it; and now I like to go into the kitchen, and Mary seems to like to see me come. The secret irritation that must have disturbed her as much as it did me is gone—all by a few calm words spoken at the right time.

I didn't [illegible] cool head in a while. When I got her she seemed cold. What could the matter be?

Last week she gave a party and didn't ask me—I didn't care for the party—I couldn't have managed to go anyhow—but—I sat down and wrote and asked her what was the matter.

What's the Matter?

"I love you," I said. "Don't you care for me any more? How have I offended?" She came that afternoon and told me of a careless remark, spitefully repeated, and we are good friends again—and I am glad.

What's the matter with life? The bills are high—every one is grasping—no one seems to care—oh, it's a terrible world! Ten to one it's only some door slamming somewhere that's doing it all—one foolish, no-account door that should be locked.

Get up, you sleepy thing! Get up at once and lock it!

The Celestial Locket

By MINNA IRVING.

THE big round moon is at the full,
And riding bright and high,
With little flecks of lacy cloud
Around it in the sky.
It's like a silver locket hung
Upon a chain of diamond stars,
That pale before its light.

Against the midnight's purple robe
Brocaded with the beams
Of constellations far and near,
How brilliantly it gleams!
And look! as from the world below
Its polished disk we scan,
We see within its shining rim
The picture of a man.

John Temple Graves Says

Our Navy Needs a Charles Beresford

The Great Englishman, he says, Keeps Britain's Navy Up-to Date and In Repair by Exposing Its Glaring Weakness from Time to Time.

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES

GEORGIANS and other Americans who read of the great banquet last October given by the city of New York to the President and his Cabinet and the officers of the assembled fleet, will recall the confident assurance of President Taft at that banquet that these magnificent vessels, then anchored off New York, in the North River were the chief defense of the country, and that each one of them was ready at a moment's notice to weigh anchor and sail out to meet and conquer an invading foe.

President Taft doubtless made this statement upon information furnished him by some one in authority in the Navy Department.

It was a shame for any official of the American Government to have imposed upon the President of the United States such a gross misstatement of the facts.

Disquieting Whispers.

It was a greater shame to have permitted the President of the United States to give out such an untruthful statement to the American people.

For the navy was then, as the navy is now, inadequate in the number of officers and of men and shamefully inadequate in its equipment of fuel and coal.

Such a statement going out at that time was calculated to lull the activity of the heads of the Navy Department, who ought to have known the facts and who certainly must know them now. It was whispered on the day after the banquet that the President's assuring words were not founded upon facts and that the navy was lacking in many elements that rendered it effective for battle and defense.

It would have been the part of a brave man then, who knew these facts, to have told them, in order that the condition might have been corrected at the time.

It would be a cowardly American now who would keep these facts from the public at this time and permit our navy to go out to sea in its present condition.

A Fearless Patriot.

And it would appear to any thoughtful American who loves his country that the prompt and fearless dealing with these conditions, as they have been stated, is the highest possible duty which appeals now to the Secretary of the Navy and to the President of the United States.

England has a great and fearless patriot in Lord Charles Beresford, and no part of Lord Beresford's great service has been more marked than the incessant challenge by which he has kept England posted as to the deficiencies of her navy and the necessity for repairing. Time after time, when England has been boasting herself before her people of the greatness and irresistible power of her navy, Lord Beresford, himself one of England's mightiest sailors, has broken into the eulogy with a public exposure of some glaring weakness and inefficiency in the English navy, and this sharp challenge of the fearless sailor-publicist has done perhaps as much or more than anything else to keep the English battleships up to the mark of efficiency.

We ought to have in America some great publicist who will not fear to tell our Government the truth about its navy in time of peace and not wait for the sharp necessity of war to prod the department into action. Either in Congress or in the departments, or in the press, there should be found a monitor who would warn and direct the carelessness or the apathy of the American navy.

The present Secretary of the Navy is a young man, who has just assumed that office. He has had no experience with naval affairs and is frank and honest enough to confess it. He appears to be very earnest and devoted to his work.

Work for the Secretary.

If Secretary Daniels would do his country some service he will address himself here and now to finding out from inside sources the real facts about the American navy, the condition of its ships, the equipment of its crews, the preparation for its fuel and its colliers, and he would make his administration of that department liberal by holding the navy rigidly up to the standard of efficiency for instant service.

He would see to it, if official persuasion could be effective, that additional inducements were given to men to enlist in the navy. He would remember that most young men enlist in the navy not for a career, but to see the world, and he would devote himself to plans to securing the full complement for every one of the unfilled battleships that carries our flag today.

There is a great opportunity for a Secretary of the Navy at the present time, and that opportunity lies not along the line of trivial improvements, but of vital preparedness for that which battleships were built to do—to fight when necessary with every force of men and machinery and fuel in its place.

The Empress of India

By REV. THOMAS B. GREGORY.

THAN the proclamation of Queen Victoria as Empress of India, made in the city of London thirty-seven years ago, there is perhaps nothing stranger or, from the standpoint of the psychologist, more interesting, in all history.

Think of it for a moment. The Queen of a little island in the Atlantic, with an area of some eighty-five thousand square miles and a population under thirty millions, is solemnly proclaimed sovereign of an empire thousands of miles away, covering one million six hundred thousand square miles and containing a population of two hundred and eighty-seven millions of souls.

The audacity of it! The cool, colossal impudence of the thing! It was sublime. That vote of the Parliament commanding the ever memorable proclamation reminds us of the rulings of Providence, of the ways of the omnipotent God. The little handful of Britishers, speaking through their representatives gathered in the council house by the Thames, declare their good little Queen to be absolute ruler of the ancient and august Empire by the Ganges and the Brahmaputra, and, lo! it is done. Six months later, at a Durbar of unequaled magnificence held on the historic ridge overlooking the mogul capital of Delhi, the princes and leading men of India bow down before the representatives of the little woman in England, and, in the name of the two hundred and eighty-seven millions of the Indian people, swear eternal fealty to her rule.

Was there ever such romance as this cold-blooded history? What kind of people are the two hundred and eighty-seven million to be falling down before the thirty millions thousands of miles away? And what kind of people are the thirty millions that they should be even dreaming of declaring themselves the lords and masters of the two hundred and eighty-seven millions?

The explanation is to be found in the difference between the Saxon man and the Hindoo man. We think we know what that difference is—but in spite of it all there remains that mystery of mysteries—British rule in India. Nor is the mystery much lightened by the fact that, upon the whole, that rule has been a blessing to the Indian people.
