And if I be right about that, the issue will be thrilling and dramatic enough to satisfy the cravings of the most exacting, when the case comes on for trial later along this month.

About these two points of disagreement, Hugh Dorsey and Frank Hooper, on the one hand, and Luther Rosser and Reuben Arnold, on the other, will be on their mettle—and if the fur and likewise the fire doesn't fly, I mistake my guess at this writing!

Leo Frank has been indicted for the murder of Mary Phagan, and for reasons presumably satisfactory to the Grand Jury.

Points Against Conley.

Let's examine the points upon which the defense will indict Conley, if the Grand Jury fails to beat the defense to it—which yet is problematical.

The defense will contend:

(1) That Conley wrote of his own notion the notes found beside the dead girl's body.

(2) That the negro told of incidents and conversations which took place admittedly in the pencil factory an hour or more before he swears he went there.

(3) That the negro admits he was drinking and "broke" when he went to the factory Saturday morning, and is known to have spent in the afternoon about the amount of money Mary Phagan is supposed to have had in her little mesh bag when she started out of the factory.

(4) That the negro admits he was in hiding or loafing near the open elevator shaft, at the foot of the steps Mary Phagan must have used as she came down to go out of the factory.

(5) That at the inquest Frank said he thought he had heard voices outside his office, very soon after Mary Phagan started down the stairs, and that the voices he thought he heard which might have been voices of Mary Phagan and the negro, just as the negro attacked the girl.

(6) That the negro said the body of Mary Phagan was carried down the elevator shaft, and yet two witnesses stand ready to swear, and have sworn, that the elevator did not run on the fatal Saturday at all.

(7) That, while the negro accounts after a fashion for the girl's shoe and hat thrown onto a trash pile, he fails to account for the incriminating parasol found at the foot of the elevator shaft, where it might have been thrown with Mary Phagan's body from above.

(8) That the negro says Frank called him at 12:56, notwithstanding the fact that Frank was talking to Mr. and Mrs. White at 1 o'clock, and immediately thereafter left the factory, reaching home about 1:20. That, therefore, Frank could not have done the things Conley accuses him of having done, for sheer lack of time, if nothing else.

(9) That the negro did not flee, if guilty himself, because the police promptly accused in turn Newt Lee, Gantt, Mullinix and Frank as suspects, not once mentioning Conley; and, besides, no one knew at the time these suspects were proclaimed that Conley had even been in the pencil factory Saturday morning.

(10) That Conley was caught washing his shirt, which might have been blood-stained, very soon after Mary Phagan's murder was effected, and that he said at the time he was worried over something not stated.

(11) That the negro's statements have been inconsistent and conflicting, both those under oath and those not under oath, and that he has admitted having sworn falsely more than once.

(12) That the negro's defense of himself is of no merit, because it is the only possible defense of himself he could frame—a last and desperate resort to fix upon Frank Conley's own guilt.

(13) That Conley's evidence is of small if any value against Frank, because it was not given until suspicion seemed drifting rapidly toward Conley.

(14) That Frank's statements have been straightforward, consistent and reasonable, whereas, in contrast thereto, the negro's have been inconsistent, conflicting and unreasonable.

(15) If the negro's presence in the factory had been known at the time Frank was indicted, Frank likely never would have been indicted; or, at least, would not likely have been indicted in preference to the negro.

(16) That the motive in the case of Frank never has been established and will be difficult to establish, but that the motive in the case of the negro—i. e., robbery—is immediately apparent.

(17) That the entire factory force testifies to the good character of Frank, whereas the character of the negro, both by his own admissions and the police court records, is bad.

(18) That many of the horrible details of the murder, scattered broadcast when it was first effected, are not true, and that the circumstances of the crime point to the negro Conley as its perpetrator, much more surely than to Frank.

Now, the reader must understand that which I have tried to impress upon him in every article I heretofore have written about the Phagan case, to wit: I know nothing more about the POSITIVE TRUTH of the case than he does—that is to say, my sources of information have been precisely the same sources that his have been—the newspapers.

I have scrutinized the files of The Georgian and The American and other Atlanta papers, and the foregoing eighteen counts against Conley I have gathered together from perhaps fifty different issues.

Framework Is Powerful.

I have set them forth as showing the strength of the position of those—or the imaginary strength, whichever it is—invoking the indictment of Conley NOW.

They may be of tremendous significance—they may be of no material significance. But they DO serve to show the framework of the powerful defense that is being constructed for Frank.

I give them for what they are worth.

There stands between Conley and Grand Jury indictment, of course, the compelling necessity of using Conley as a material witness—THE material witness, indeed!—against Frank.

To indict Conley NOW would weaken the State's case against Frank, unquestionably.

And yet the fact remains that certain members of the Grand Jury have been reported as seriously inclined to that course, nevertheless.

And, after all, that matter (theoretically, anyway) is utterly impersonal with the Grand Jury and arbitrarily in its hands.

Before I became a newspaper man and later along police reporter, I studied law, as I mentioned before, and was admitted to the bar. I practiced four years, and while I abandoned the law long ago for the newspaper profession, I never lost my taste entirely for my first love.

I went over to the State Library Saturday and looked up some few decisions bearing upon the two vital points to be raised in the Phagan case, as I view it now, and two things impressed me profoundly.

State Can Not Attack Frank.

When the defense attacks Conley it will be backed by some weighty law affecting his credibility, and when it puts Frank's character in evidence—the State CAN NOT put his character in evidence, it will be understood—it will be backed again by some weighty opinions as to the value of character, established and proved.

In the Twenty-third Georgia Supreme Court Reports I find that Mr. Justice McDonald laid down this rule:

If a witness swear willfully and knowingly false, even to a collateral fact, his testimony ought to be rejected entirely, unless it be so corroborated by circumstances, or other unimpeached evidence, as be irresistible!

That is the law of the land, and it will be invoked, I suppose, against Conley, with vigor and possible effect.

The defense, no doubt, will contend that Conley has sworn falsely—and proved it by written instruments—and it then will insist that Conley's entire evidence must be rejected unless corroborated by other unimpeached testimony.

Can the State corroborate Conley by such evidence?

Evidently the defense doubts it.

I do not know, of course.

Hearsay, irrelevant matter, street gossip, newspaper stories—those things will not do when it comes to trying Leo Frank for his life.

Conley Must Be Corroborated.

Conley, at best an admitted accessory after the fact of the murder, must be corroborated by COMPETENT and LEGAL evidence.

And right here, I think, the defense expects to give the State one of its very hardest nuts to crack.

Maybe the State can crack it, all right!

That remains to be seen, and as to that I venture no opinion.

Again, I take it the defense expects to strike straight from the shoulder when it puts Frank's character in issue.

I do not KNOW that the defense will do this, but from the tone of some of the articles, particularly Mrs. Frank's remarkable interview, given out recently by the defense, or authorized by it, I SUSPECT that is exactly what it will do.

This will be a bold stroke, too, for unless the DEFENSE puts Leo Frank's character in issue, IT CAN NOT BE PUT IN ISSUE AT ALL. The State is estopped, of its own motion, from doing that.

Therefore, when the defense DOES it, it is pretty apt to be taken as an evidence that the defense is very confident of itself.

Into the case at this point, then, will come a portion of the law of Georgia that is most picturesque and significant—a portion that is founded upon the very bedrock of decency and common sense, and that throws about all observers of the law and about all right-living men a protection as certain and as sure as it is majestic and noble.

Character Good Evidence.

In respect of CHARACTER as evidence of innocence of crime, I find that Chief Justice Simmons, in the 102d Georgia, said this:

"Evidence of good character is admitted as evidence of a positive fact, and may, of itself, by the creation of a reasonable doubt, produce acquittal!"

And, again, the same authority says:

"Of what avail is a good character, which a man may have been a lifetime in acquiring, if it is to benefit nothing in the hour of peril?"

Chief Justice Simmons was a Superior Court judge for some twenty years before he was elevated to the Supreme bench, and a Supreme Court justice for a like period.

He was one of the noblest men that Georgia ever produced, and one of the most profound and approved students of the law.

And he made good character the very Rock of Gibraltar upon which a man attacked might depend in time of peril!

Once the defense puts Leo Frank's character in issue, however, the State may attack it as bitterly and as vehemently as it likes.

This, it may be, the State is prepared to do.

Unless the State does break down Frank's character, however, once it is put in issue by his own attorneys, the State will be thereafter at a tremendous disadvantage, I think, particularly when the defense is undertaking to shoot the character of Conley to pieces from the other flank!

Character can not be broken down in a courtroom with whispered words and sinister gossip.

Must Attack in Open.

Under the impersonal rules of evidence and the law, character must be attacked in the open—it must be beaten down, if beaten down it be, with weapons the judge and the jury may see, wielded in fair play, and it must be a fight to a finish.

True, if a defendant deliberately puts his own character in issue, the burden is upon him to sustain his character; but once the law puts that burden upon a defendant, it holds in leash and sure control the State in its attempts to demolish it.

I have written of crimes and of criminals for fifteen years—of petty sneak thieves and bank robbers, of common back-alley bullies and murders, of brutes and degenerates, of clever confidence men and clumsy bunglers.

I have seen the innocent made victims of cruel circumstances and the unquestionably guilty escape, but I am yet to see a case in which good character, firmly and frankly set up, was not a tower of strength to the accused—a sure and abiding "benefit in his hour of peril," as Chief Justice Simmons says it should be!

After all is said and done, character is the corner stone upon which civilization and society most securely rests.

It holds the business world together, and it differentiates the wheat from the chaff in the professions.

Without it, the grand old name of gentleman is a mockery and a sham—and, above all things, it best marks the woman as fitted to her natural and noblest environment!

If Leo Frank puts his character in issue, it will be a challenge full and free to the State to do its worst—it well may be expected to make or mar the defense of Leo Frank, charged with the murder of Mary Phagan.

DECISIONS WHICH MAY AID DEFENSE OF FRANK

The old police reporter, in sizing up the many possibilities of the Phagan case, has reached two conclusions as to the line of action which he believes will be followed by the defense:

FIRST, he believes the defense will undertake to destroy the value of Conley's evidence, and fix upon Conley the guilt the State is trying to fix upon Frank.

SECOND, he thinks the defense will make the character of Leo Frank an issue.

The old police reporter, in poring through the files of the Georgia Supreme Court Reports, has found two decisions upon which he thinks the defense will rely.

The first which might be used to break down Conley's evidence is as follows:

If a witness swears willfullly and knowingly false, even to a collateral fact, his testimony ought to be rejected entirely, unless it be so corroborated by circumstances, or other unimpeached evidence, as to be irresistible.—23 GEORGIA REPORTS.

As a circumstance tending to prove Frank's innocence, the defense, the old police reporter thinks, will produce the following:

Evidence of good character is admitted as evidence of a positive fact, and may, of itself, by the creation of a reasonable doubt, produce acquittal!—102 GEORGIA REPORTS.

APPLICATION TO RELEASE LEE IS READY TO FILE

Negro's Lawyer Says He Will Offer Habeas Corpus When Solicitor Dorsey Returns.

On account of the absence from the city of Prosecuting Attorney Hugh M. Dosey, Bernard L. Chappell, attorney for Newt Lee, announced Saturday that he would not file a writ of habeas corpus until Monday. He claims in the petition for the release of the negro that Lee is being held unlawfully and without any charge against him.

Solicitor Dorsey left for his country place at Valdosta, Ga., Saturady morning. He will return Monday.

Solicitor General Hugh M. Dorsey will ask the courts to hold the negro as a material witness for the State, or may charge him with being an accessory. He was determined Friday to take no chances on so important a witness getting out of his control, as he feared the negro might get beyond the jurisdiction of the courts if given his liberty.

Attorney Chappell and Solicitor Dorsey had agreed, when the negro was committed to jail, to keep him there until the trial. Chappell notified Dorsey Wednesday that he wished to withdraw from the agreement and get his client freed.

Chief Discounts Conley Rumor.

The announcement Friday that the defense had secured an important and damaging affidavit that connected the State's star witness, Jim Conley, more directly with the crime created a sensation in the ranks of the prosecution.

Chief of Detectives Newport A. Lanford announced that every movement of the negro on the day of the crime had been "checked up," and that it was a matter of impossibility to find anything more damaging against him than his admission that he helped dispose of the body at the request of Frank.

In commenting on the affidavit secured at the office of Joseph H. Leavitt Thursday the attorney said that it would be almost impossible for the prosecution to break down any statement that was made in the affidavit when the witness was placed on the stand.

Calls Evidence Vital.

He said the witness was a citizen of high standing and would be one of the most important for the defense of Frank.

Attorney Leavitt said that this particular affidavit was one of more than 50 that had been recently secured that dealt almost exclusively with the movements of the negro on the day of the murder. While he would not comment at any length, he intimated that the defense had been able to establish conclusively the exact time Conley entered and left the factory.

He also intimated that affidavits had been secured that would show what time Monteen Stover entered and left the factory and be able to prove she left before Mary Phagan's car reached the vicinity of the pencil factory.

"End-Seat Hogs" to Receive Heavy Fines

Washington to Act After Woman and Baby Narrowly Escape Death in Leaving Car.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—Washington's "end seat hogs" will soon be amenable to law.

Commissioner Rudolph has taken the subject up with the Utilities Commission and announcement will be made in a few days. Convictions for refusing to "move up" in seats of the summer cars will probably be punished by a heavy fine.

"There have been many cases where accidents have been narrowly averted on account of the 'end seat hog,'" said Commissioner Rudolph. "One recent case was that of a woman with her baby in her arms about to alight from a car. A fat man obstructed her passage and she fell. It was just luck she was not killed."

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, July 5.—Queen Mary has ordered the Cinema Company to burn the films of pictures it made recently by special permission of the King and Queen, showing Princess Mary and the two children of Sir Derek and Lady Keppel at tea in Buckingham Palace grounds.

Her reason is that the Princess Mary appeared in the pictures in a low-cut frock.

The Queen will pay the cost of the films, $185, but the Cinema Company is out at least $25,000.

CONGRESSMAN Richard Bartholdt, of Missouri, charged with asking favors of steamship lines.

Bartholdt Accused in Own Private Letter

Missouri Congressman's Request of 20 Years Ago for Steamship Favors Brought Against Him.

ST. LOUIS, July 5.—Political opponents of Congressman Richard Bartholdt have just made public a photographic copy of a "confidential" letter which Bartholdt wrote 20 years ago to a personal friend, Major Eugene F. Weigel, whose influence he enlisted to obtain from the North German Lloyd Steamship Company "special rates" to Europe for himself and Mrs. Bartholdt.

The communication to Weigel, former Secretary of State of Missouri, followed the refusal of the North German Lloyd Company to extend transportation courtesies to the St. Louis Congressman, despite the fact, as stated in Bartholdt's letter, that he (Bartholdt) had expressed the opinion the "immigration question would, no doubt, form an important factor of the deliberations of the next Congress," when he expected to become a member of the House Immigration Committee and on which he was subsequently appointed.

WOMEN ASK STATE TO COMPEL MUSIC STUDY

JOPLIN, MO., July 5.—The study of music in all public school of Missouri will be compulsory if a plan advocated by the State Music Teachers' Association is adopted. A resolution carrying a provision that a petition making musical instruction a State law be circulated was adopted by the music teachers in convention here.

The association also decided to ask State authorities to give credits to public school students who study music from private instructors.

YOUNG PAGES IN MOCK SESSION APE SENATORS

Boys Legislate Against Senatorial Fire Water and Baneful "Soak Book."

WASHINGTON, July 7.—Visitors at the Senate wing of the Capitol recently saw such a session as they probably never will see again. It was the mock session, with the eighteen pages of the Senate acting the parts of Senators, while Joseph O'Toole, chief of pages, presided in Vice President Marshall's place.

The rules provide that pages shall not be under 12 years of age nor over 16, and their uniform is a white blouse shirt and knee breeches. With great dignity, save for occasional giggles, they introduced bills "for appropriate reference," offered resolutions and answered to the names of Senators when the roll was called. In the press gallery notes on the proceedings were taken with becoming solemnity.

One youngster introduced a bill that almost broke up the meeting. It bore the title "To prohibit Senators from using firewater, and for other purposes." Another was entitled "A bill to relieve a bull pup." It was duly referred to the committee on dog fights.

The opposition to these measures was led by a lad named McCoy, and he continued his leadership with great zest until a resolution was offerred directing the Sergeant-at-Arms to "put a Maxim silencer on McCoy."

The effectiveness of this parliamentary stroke was increased when it was noticed that Charles P. Higgins, Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, was standing in the doorway grinning. The bane of a page's existence is a little volume known as the "soak book," in which delinquent pages are "soaked" with various penalties. Young "Senator" McCoy was able to regain all his lost prestige by offering a resolution that the "soak book be burned with fire."

Acute Indigestion

T. M. WORD

For several years my wife suffered frequent attacks with acute indigestion. These attacks in their alarming frequency became the dread of my life. My wife never knew what she could eat without taking the risk of one of these attacks. We tried every remedy we could hear of, with only temporary relief. Sitting in my office one morning, feeling very despondent after spending a sleepless night and the terrible suspense over the alarming condition of my wife, a friend called my attention to Nuxcara, the wonderful stomach remedy, stating that Nuxcara would cure her without a doubt. I at once put her on the treatment, with the most happy results. She is entirely cured, and is in better health than she has been for years; eats anything she wants—Nuxcara is the most wonderful remedy I ever heard of.

My wife was so delighted with her experience with Nuxcara that she prevailed upon me to take it myself. I was suffering with a catarrhal condition which affected my liver and kidneys. I had been under the treatment of a specialist for my kidneys, who kept me on a diet for several months, but my condition seemed to grow worse and I was in a state of mind to make a change, so I began to take Nuxcara, which completely cured me in a short time. My health is perfect. I eat and sleep well; in fact, I never felt better in my life. I regard Nuxcara as an achievement in science unparalleled, a remedy which has no equal in all forms of stomach trouble.—T. M. Word, 373 Cherokee Avenue.

Demonstration of the wonderful merits of Nuxcara at Coursey & Munn's, corner Marietta and Broad Streets, by Dr. Shelnutt from 9 a. m. to 6 p. m. every day.

Acute Indigestion

Threatens everyone who has any disturbance of the digestive system—an uncomfortable feeling after eating is a warning which should not go unheeded, but Nuxcara should be taken at once and restore the digestive organs to a healthy condition, when there will be no danger from this often fatal attack. Nuxcara is guaranteed to be a positive and certain cure. The distress after eating is promptly relieved by a dose of Nuxcara.

Nuxcara

Is a scientific remedy which has been prescribed by eminent physicians for years with the most gratifying results in all forms of stomach troubles. Nuxcara was tested for ten years before offering it to the world as a positive and certain cure for indigestion, dyspepsia, catarrh and the many evils following the poisoning of the system with toxins from undigested and decomposing food in the digestive tracts. One may take digestive agents and relieve an attack of indigestion, but the poison generated through the decomposition of the undigested food may remain in the system for days before eliminated, and furnish the primary cause of another attack, besides setting up structural changes in the organisms. Nuxcara is positive and certain; restores the system to perfect health.

WORK PILES UP AS LEGISLATIVE DAYS GROW FEW

Leaders Recognize They Must Work at Sternest Pace To Pass Most Imperative Bills.

When the General Assembly convenes to-morrow morning there will remain just 38 working days of the first session ahead.

Thirty-eight days will remain of the 50-day limit, but five of those days will be Sundays, and will not count.

From the total of 33 working days left, moreover, five Saturdays, which are given over exclusively to local legislation, if the House does not adjourn over them entirely, must be taken out, which reduces the total of working days upon which general legislation may be handled to 28.

It therefore may be seen that when President Anderson and Speaker Burwell call the Senate and the House to order to-morrow, the summer session of 1913 will be practically half gone.

Within the remaining time, the General Assembly must pass a general appropriations bill, several tax reform bills and dispose of the various new county propositions to be brought before it, or fail in the legislative program mapped out for it by the Governor and the leaders of the two Houses.

Not a Bill Reported.

There have been already introduced in the two Houses something more than 200 bills, and not one yet has been reported back to either House from a committee, with a recommendation.

No bill yet has been read a second time, although one general bill, providing for Senator Bacon's election, was passed, and received the Governor's signature, in the record-breaking time of five days.

That the Senate and House leaders realize that time is slipping away from them, despite their inclination to push things along as rapidly as possible, is evidenced in the fact that there is a feverish desire perceptible among the committees to get busy this week, and send such bills as come before them back to the two Houses for action as soon as possible.

The Governor has placed the General Assembly on notice that he expects, and thinks he should have, the general appropriations bill in the executive office a good ten days before adjournment—or exactly four weeks from Monday.

That will mean that the House must dispose of it, send it to the Senate and then meet the Senate in conference for the adjournment of differences, all within less than a month.

After the Governor gets through with it, if he decides not to sign it, it must go back to both houses for further consideration, and with not more than five or six days left for that.

While the appropriations bill and the tax refor mmeasures are being considered, too, there will be something like 300 or 400 local bills to consider, and not less than 100 general bills of importance.

Legislature Ready for Work.

There is an evident disposition upon the part of the General Assembly not to declare any "dies non" during the present session—that is, non-legislative days, which are not counted in the 50 days' limit, and for which the members received no pay—and adjournment, therefore, confidently is predicted on August 13.

There are signs in plenty, however, notwithstanding the fact that so much of the first session already is gone, that the Legislature is fully prepared to get right down to hard work from to-day forward, and do the things expected of it.

Every committee of both the Senate and the House has been called to meet Monday at hours calculated as nearly as possible not to cause confusion among the more important.

Tuesday bills will begin coming back to the two houses from the committees, with recommendations, and within the week some general legislation should be well along the road to enactment.

Chairman Crawford Wheatley has promised to get the big general appropriations bill out of his committee within ten days, and the Ways and Means Committee will take the matter of the tax act immediately in hand for speedy disposition.

It is not likely that either afternoon or night sessions will be called soon, as that time will be needed by the members for committee meetings.

Afternoon sessions will come along about the last ten days of the session and night sessions the last three or four days.

One of the bills sure to engage the immediate attention of both the Senate and the House is Senator Foster's bill to provide for prison inspection in Georgia.

Prison Complaints Frequent.

Complaints of wretched prison conditions throughout the State have been getting more and more frequent of late years, and some of the State prisons are said to be in unpardonably unsanitary condition.

Senator Foster's bill provides for rigid prison inspections, at stated intervals, and sanitary reform wherever indicated.

Another bill that will attract considerable attention is the one by Mr. Adams, providing for a central place of execution of all criminals convicted fo capital offenses and sentenced to death.

This bill has the indorsement of many students of crime and prison conditions throughout the nation, and is framed to make less probable the chance of lynchings, particularly in those rural counties where the jails are insecure and easily broken into by mobs

Mr. Adams' bill seeks to make Atlanta the central place of execution for crime, but an amendment will be offered, so it is understood, seeking to substitute Milledgeville, the place of the general penitentiary.

There seems to be a disposition among many members of the General Assembly to get the proposed new county propositions out of the way as soon as may be, and to that end the House Committee on Constitutional Amendments is expected to send Barrow and Candler back with a recommendation by the middle of the week.

Others will be taken up immediately, in the order of their introduction, and passed upon rapidly.

Governor Slaton is understood to be engaged almost exclusively now seeking out a way whereby the common school teachers may be taken care of and their past due salaries paid.

Will Use Borrowing Power.

He will exercise his borrowing power to the extent he can, but he fears that will not be sufficient to relieve the embarrassment.

Speaker Burwell stated Saturday afternoon that he proposed keeping the House strictly down to hard work from now on, and President Anderson, of the Senate, is understood to feel the same way about the chamber over which he presides.

Judge Newman Still Eager to Work Plans Activities at Retiring Age Will Quit Bench When He Gets Old

Judge W. T. Newman, of the United States District Court. Though he is past the retiring age, Judge Newman's photograph shows his present vigor.

Federal Jurist Says He's as Able to Serve Country Now as When He Left Army.

One fine morning last week Federal Judge William T. Newman awoke to find that he had turned the seventieth milestone in his earthly journey, thereby qualifying for retirement, on pay, from the bench and from worry.

He looked well into the situation. He felt as fit as a Marathon runner, and not a day older than on the memorable morning in 1864 when he rode into a battle at Jonesboro to have his right arm shot away by a bullet from the gun of a Union soldier.

"So why," inquired he of a Sunday American reporter Saturday, "should I think of getting out of harness? I feel that I can still do good work. I am told that my work is giving satisfaction. Therefore, I shall not retire. Not now."

Judge Newman has occupied the bench of the United States Court of the Northern District of Georgia since 1886, and has held court in most of the cities of Georgia. The lawyers, watching his career, knew when the seventieth birthday came, June 23, and a number of letters were sent to him, friendly, congratulatory letters, expressing the hope that he remain on the bench.

Not Ready to Quit.

"Even if I had thought of quitting," he said, "these assurances would have been enough to show me that I still can render service. The day I find that an impairment of mental or physical faculties renders me unfit, then I shall quit. My duty to the Government I serve would demand that. But now—well, if my friends didn't remind me that I had reached my seventieth birthday, I wouldn't know it or believe it.

"When a man retires, to become a watcher of this very interesting world, instead of taking a part in its activities, then it is a sign that he is through—that he has quit.

"To quit—to merely look on, to read the papers, to pass the time of day, to go to the baseball game, to drop work—the idea has no appeal for me.

"As long as I can render service, I feel that I should remain at work. Every man should. As soon as I can not render service, then I shall quit. In this respect, a judge is somewhat different from a private citizen. A judge owes it to the public to step down and out, when his usefulness passes; a citizen, whose business is his own, and his own affair, can stay on and make a mess of it, to nobody's harm but his own.

"But while he can, a man should stick on the job."

Work, Judge Newman thinks, is every man's function.

"There is a moral and a spiritual satisfaction in labor," he said, "when you know that you are doing it well. Then there is physical well-being also. Retirement from a part in the world's affairs means inaction. Inaction spells physical decay.

"This world is a mighty interesting place when you know that you have a hand, however small, in its work."

Was Confederate Cavalryman.

Judge Newman was born June 23, 1843, in Knoxville, Tenn. When he was 17 years old he enlisted in the Second Tennessee Cavalry, of the Confederate Army, and the next year was promoted to a lieutenancy. Early in 1863 he was wounded and captured by the Federals, and later in the year was exchanged. His career as a soldier ended at the battle of Jonesboro, Ga., in 1864, when a bullet found his right arm, necessitating its removal.

After the war he located in Atlanta, became a lawyer, and from 1871 until 1883 was city attorney. In 1886 he received the appointment as United States judge, and has held the position now for 27 years.

Judge Newman enjoys a great popularity among the lawyers who practice in his court, and among laymen as well. A sincere tribute was that embodied in resolutions adopted by the Federal Grand Jury upon the occasion of his birthday.

ELKS ARRIVE IN ROCHESTER FOR REUNION

Southern Men Are Candidates for High Offices of Order on "Insurgent" Ticket.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., July 5.—The vanguard of the thousands of delegates to the forty-ninth annual reunion of Grand Lodge, B. P. O. E., who will invade Rochester during the next week, will begin to arrive in the city to-morrow. Preparations have been made for the reception of the visiting delegations and members of the Grand Lodge reunion committee of Rochester lodge will be at the various railroad stations throughout the day to extend the glad hand to the early arrivals.

Some of the visitors, including the Denver delegation, which is "plugging" for the 1914 reunion, have already arrived in the city, and a number of the Grand Lodge officers and candidates for Grand Lodge offices came to the city yesterday to open headquarters, which have been established at the Hotel Seneca.

Elaborate preparations have been made for the entertainment of the visitors, and there will not be an idle moment during the whole week, while some of the days are crammed so full of entertainment that the delegates and visitors will have to remain up night and day in order to participate in the generous amusements provided by the committee on entertainment.

Sulzer to Welcome Elks.

The Grand Lodge will formally open its sessions to-morrow night in Convention Hall, when addresses will be delivered by Governor Sulzer, who will welcome the herd on behalf of the State; Mayor Edgerton, who will extend the freedom of the city and welcome the visitors on behalf of the citizens of Rochester; former County Attorney Arthur Warren, who will extend the reunion committee's welcome to the Grand Lodge, and former Assemblyman John J. McInerney, who will welcome the Elks on behalf of the 1,800 members of Rochester lodge.

Two Southern Candidates.

Chief interest of the business sessions naturally centers in the election of officers and selection of the next meeting place. Two Southern "insurgent" Elks are candidates for the two most important offices in the Grand Lodge, opposing "machine" candidates from the North and West.

J. Cookman Boyd, a lawyer of Baltimore, is the insurgent opponent of Edward Leach, a New York business man, for exalted ruler. They are supported, respectively, by the factions that in 1909 at Los Angeles divided between J. U. Sammis and Garry Herrmann for this office, Sammis being then elected and in 1910 being succeeded by Herrmann.

T. J. Darling, postmaster at Temple, Texas, is the insurgent opponent of Fred Robinson, of Dubuque, Ia., who has held the office of grand secretary for nine years. David McAaron, of Grand Rapids, is also aspiring for this office.

The convention will continue until Saturday, and among the big features will be the annual Grand Lodge parade of visiting delegations, patrols and floats on Thursday morning, competitive prize drills in the afternoon and the annual spectacular water carnival and pyrotechnical display on the upper river in Genesee Valley Park at night. The Grand Lodge ball will be held in the Armory Friday night, and during the week there will be pleasure rides by automobile, steamboat and trolley car in and around Rochester, band concerts, ball games, roastfests at the lake and at Moerlbach Park and various other forms of entertainment.

The Grand Lodge reunion committee has expended $15,000 on electrical illuminations alone and thousands of dollars additional have been put into decorations of various kinds in streets in the downtown section and in the park.

C. O. D. PARCEL POST TO SWELL ATLANTA TRADE

Business in New Postal Department Increasing With Great Rapidity, Says McKee.

"A breezy, bang-up, rushing business, increasing every day," is the way Postmaster Hugh McKee last night characterized the C. O. D. parcel post law, which went into effect July 1.

"I have never seen anything which has found so much favor with large and small retail and wholesale dealers and manufacturers," he continued. "Only to-day three of Atlanta's largest manufacturers came to me and said that they were enthusiastic over the opportunity presented to branch out through the C. O. D. parcel post.

"The C. O. D. parcel post will produce a much larger business in smaller orders, they told me. The cost of postage is nominal and all they will have to do is to advertise their wares in the Atlanta papers and let people in this vicinity know that it is not necessary to come into town to purchase.

"I especially urge department stores to advertise. The business to be gained will not come to them. They must go after it. I also would encourage the farmers and rural population to use the C. O. D. parcel post. The people in the country will not need to leave home and drive ten to twelve miles in the hot sun. All they have to do is to order by C. O. D.

"There is a great field for the little truck grower in the use of the C. O. D. parcel post. We have 174 miles of rural free delivery routes out of the Atlanta postoffice. This embraces all territory within a radius of fifteen miles of the city, and in this territory are grown more than enough fresh vegetables to supply the entire city. The trouble is that at present the farmers do not bring their produce to town, and consequently it must be sent from other sections by rail."

And by taking these baths in warm water, there is a tendency to throw off abnormal flesh or fat, and without the slightest disadvantageous results, as is evident with almost all other treatments.

Jacobs' Perfumed Bath Salt is a most delightful addition to the bath, very cooling and refreshing, and beneficial in every way. It is also decidedly helpful in reducing the weight. Pleasantly perfumed with Verbena, Rose, Violet and Apple Blossom; handsome toilet bottles, 50c.

This Elixir has a slightly sweet taste with an agreeable sharp tang; it is taken without any disguisement, and no one can tell that it is other than a pleasant tonic.

It is a cold pressed oil with aromatics, carminatives and 2 grs. phenolphthalein to the ounce, which increases its efficiency as a mild purgative and at the same time reduces the dose. Children and infants like it. You will be more than satisfied with it. 25c.

Nursing a Baby

IS a serious problem because there is many times a deficiency either in the quantity or the quality of the child's natural food. In either case

BORDEN'S Malted Milk

HUSBAND GONE, WIFE BELIEVES HIM LYNCHED

Fortune Teller's Story So Impresses Woman That She Asks Warrants for Sawmill Men.

DALTON, July 5.—Judge S. B. Felker and others present in his office were decidedly startled when a woman entered and calmly announced that her husband had been hanged and his body disposed of by three men, adding that she wanted warrants for the arrests of several men employed at the Nations sawmill. On being questioned she stated that a fortune teller had given her the information and his evidence was all she had except the fact that her husband had disappeared.

The woman gave her name as Mrs. Will Grady.

When Judge Felker refused to issue the warrants the woman turned to Constable Gilbert and told him her husband's life was insured for $500, and if he would find the body she would give him half of the life insurance.

Mrs. Grady's earnestness was apparent. She told of the vivid impression left by the fortune teller's words. She had gone to the soothsayer following her husband's disappearance after three months of wedded life, and he, after going into a trance, vividly described to her the scene of three men "stringing up" her husband.

She then visited the sawmill at which her husband had been employed, and was told by some of the employees that he had gone to Alabama, while others said he was in North Carolina. These conflicting statements aroused her suspicion.

A Mr. Maxwell, who lives at No. 10 Dean Street, Gainesville Cotton Mill settlement, finally took the child, said he would adopt it, and supplied the man Smith with transportation money.

Girl of 15 Elopes to Wed Boy Named Pool

Miss Emma Gilbert Eludes Parents at Dalton and Drives to Spring Place.

DALTON, July 5.—Hundreds of people on Hamilton Street yesterday afternoon witnessed the beginning of an unusually romantic elopement which culminated at Spring Place, Murray County, to-day.

While the parents of Miss Emma Gilbert, aged 15 years, were at the depot awaiting a train to get her out of the way of Love Pool, the young people being bent on marriage, Pool had a friend to drive up. As the parents boarded the train the girl made a dash for the buggy. The friends drove her to where Pool was waiting. Then the question of a marriage license interfered, for Judge Wood, Ordinary, acting on previous instructions from the father, refused to issue it.

Not to be balked after getting an auspicious start, Pool secured a buggy at a livery stable here to-day and with his bride-to-be drove to Spring Place for the marriage license and wedding ceremony.

Butcher Pen Expose Cuts Sales of Meat

Griffin Residents Start Move for Abattoir, Following Disclosures in Newspaper.

GRIFFIN, July 5.—Although Griffin meat dealers are angry over the report regarding their markets and slaughter pens by State Inspector Hutchens, the people of the city are rejoicing over the new order of things that has been established since the report was printed in full in the local paper.

Conditions revealed by the inspector's report rivaled the reputation of the Chicago packing houses. Some of the citizens of the town went to inspect for themselves. They told the others. Every market in the city has been overhauled to some extent, and a move is on for a city abattoir. Meanwhile sales of fresh meats have decreased, while the supply of chickens has been practically consumed.

Another good result of the inspector's report is the beginning of a campaign for cleanliness on all lines throughout the city. The Board of Health is giving special attention to the milk supply and drinking water.

DALTON, July 5.—Undismayed by predictions of dire disaster, A. L. Henson, a young insurance agent of this city, has entered the office of Judge Glenn to take up the study of law. Before accepting him into his office, Judge Glenn insisted on giving him a true history of what befell the four other men who studied law under him.

"The first one ran off with another man's wife," said Judge Glenn; "the second went to the penitentiary; the third dropped dead, and the fourth was struck by lightning and made a cripple for life."

All of which is true, and Judge Glenn gave a list of the names of the four men who have studied law in his office.

SAYS OFFICER ATTEMPTED TO SLAY BROTHER

Rome Real Estate Man Secures Warrant for Policeman Who Clubbed Prisoner.

ROME, July 5.—As result of the arrest of Jake Collins for alleged drunkenness and disorderly conduct, Will Collins, his brother and well-known East Side real estate man, today had a warrant sworn out for Policeman Henry Selman, charging him with assault with attempt to murder. Considerable feeling exists over the affair.

Collins was in an automobile with a companion when Selman and another officer attempted to arrest him. Collins, they say, was drunk and had been riding carelessly. They claim Collins resisted and struck at Selman. In the scuffle Selman, it is alleged, clubbed Collins over the head several times. Blood flowed from his wounds.

Collins claims he offered to ride in auto with officers to station, and that instead the police patrol was called and hauled him to the lockup. Large crowd, a majority of whom appeared in sympathy with Collins, gathered round the City Hall, and for a while trouble was feared. Officers were prepared for any attack, but none came.

Charges of conduct unbecoming officers have also been preferred with the police committee against two other officers, and an effort will be made by Collins to have them discharged from the force.

Weds a Minute After She Is of Legal Age

Bride-to-Be Stays Up All Night Rather Than Cheat Law of Few Seconds.

COLUMBUS, IND., July 5.—Miss Zyri kept Cupid waiting until exactly midnight when she reached her eighteenth birthday, because she would not break the law covering legal marriageable age and marry Daniel Hughes to whom her parents had objected.

But not more than a minute elapsed before she stealthily withdrew from her house, whose parents were sleeping, and met Hughes not far away, waiting in an automobile. They drove to this city, wakened John Houk, Deputy County Clerk, and with him went to the court house, where she became Mrs. Daniel Hughes. Albert Jackson, a farmer, of Rock Creek Township, is her father, and Jacob A. Hughes, former County Commissioner, is father of the bridegroom.

Weather Prophet's Forecast Fulfilled

Griffin Observer Predicts Storm Which Comes on Fourth—Populace Now Does Him Reverence.

GRIFFIN, July 5.—Griffin's weather forecaster is much more respected today than ever before.

A month ago Albert L. Snyder, the local prognosticator, predicted that July would be a hot and dry month. He declared that on the Fourth rainstorms would be general, and that winds would rise to a dangerous strength.

Exactly as predicted, the month up to date has been warm and dry, and, according to schedule, the Fourth was ushered in with a good prospect, but was a stormy day before it was over.

Several thousand persons were assembled at the Spalding County Fair Grounds to celebrate. In midafternoon a terrific wind arose, accompanied by bad looking clouds. The celebration was broken up and people driven to shelter. Before nightfall a heavy downpour of rain came.

Professor Snyder predicts hail storms for the 9th, with cold spells on the 10th and 11th, and another cold season on the 18th.

Jumps Ministry to Try Law in Atlanta

Rev. Dent Atkinson Also Leaves Republican Party to Follow Thomas Jefferson.

GRIFFIN, July 5.—The Rev. Dr. Dent Atkinson, connected with the Chautauqua here, made an unusual leap when in one breath he withdrew from the Presbyterian ministry, from the Republican party, from educational work, and decided to enter the profession of law, enter the Democratic party, be received into the Georgia bar, and locate in Atlanta.

For 20 years Dr. Atkinson has been a minister of the most orthodox type in the Presbyterian denomination, and has held some important pulpits. He has taken a three years' course in law at the Ohio Northern University, as well as taking a degree at Harvard. He is an Englishman by birth, but has spent the greater part of his life in America.

While here Dr. Atkinson appeared before Judge R. T. Daniel, of the Flint Circuit, and was admitted to the bar of Georgia. In September Dr. Atkinson will begin the practice of law in Atlanta.

PUBLIC REJOICES OVER FIRING OF TICKET TAKERS

GRIFFIN, July 5.—Residents of this vicinity are rejoicing over the action taken by the Central Railway authorities in removing ticket collectors from the trains from Atlanta to Macon passing through Griffin. The collectors are blamed for much inconvenience, because of their ignorance of connections. On several occasions passengers for Eatonton were put out at Experiment, two miles above here, where the branch leading to Rome and Chattanooga leaves the main line. The passengers for Eatonton should have gone on to Gordon.

PASTOR STARTS BUILDING PLAN ON PLUCK ONLY

None of Dr. Harris' Members Affluent, but $25,000 Church Will Be Erected, He Says.

AUGUSTA, July 5.—The Rev. R. E. L. Harris, pastor of the Woodlawn Baptist Church of Augusta, has plenty of pluck and determination; else he wouldn't attempt to build a $25,000 church with not a single wealthy member.

Mr. Harris is known throughout Georgia. He has been pastor in many towns along the Georgia Railroad and is highly regarded as a minister and as a man. He is a brother of Mrs. Mary Harris Armor, the celebrated temperance lecturer.

Mr. Harris came to Augusta three years ago. His church is located on Chafee Avenue, just off Walton Way. Until Dr. Harris came the members seemed satisfied with the modest wooden structure.

However, they soon began to increase, and enthusiasm and fervor were injected into the members, who had been, before Mr. Harris' coming, unmindful of the great work which their church was capable of accomplishing.

"How do you expect to build a $25,000 brick edifice with not a single member of your church affluent?" was asked of Mr. Harris by a representative of The Sunday American.

"Why, of course, we do not expect to build the church entirely by ourselves," he said, "for we have friends and expect to call on them. We have been planning to build this church for over a year and have a considerable sum in hand, and much more in prospect.

"Patience, persistence and faith in the Lord will bring to pass many things that seem impossible, and we certainly expect to have our new church erected and paid for within the next few years."

The plans for the new church have been completed by the architects, and it will be a handsome structure, fully three times as large as the present building, and modern in every respect.

Augusta Pastors to Urge Prison Reform

Special Sermons To Be Preached by Leading Ministers for This Cause.

AUGUSTA, July 5.—A number of Augusta pastors have set aside tomorrow to preach on the wretched condition of the prisons of Georgia and the prisoners within their walls. In response to a letter from the Atlanta Ministers' Conference, making an appeal that the subject be discussed from the pulpits to-morrow, several ministers have indicated that they will do so.

The movement to better prison conditions started by the Men and Religion Forward Movement is expected to accomplish good results, according to a leading local minister, and Richmond County's Representatives in the General Assembly will be urged to favor any bill that tends to improve conditions in Georgia prisons and among Georgia prisoners.

SAVANNAH, July 5.—Police Court Judge John Schwarz has been called upon to define the difference between a nightmare and a plain drunk. The case was that of J. W. McMillan, a visitor, arrested at the Union Station charged with raising a disturbance and being drunk.

The defendant made the plea that he was not intoxicated, but took a few drinks and fell asleep at the station while waiting for his train, and that during his sleep he had a nightmare. The judge decided a nightmare was no offense and the case was dismissed.

Girl Makes Only Perfect Record 11 Years in School With Honors Miss Williams to Enter College

Miss Marion Williams, Macon's Record Honor Pupil.

In Addition to This Mark She Is First Graduate and Valedictorian of Her Class.

MACON, July 5.—When Miss Marian Williams graduated from the Gresham High School with first honor she completed the only perfect record credited to any pupil in the history of the public schools of Macon.

During the eleven years of her school life, Miss Williams has been perfect in her studies. At the end of each month of every year at the school she took home a card denoting excellence in every course and also excellence in conduct. At the end of each year she was awarded first honor.

Miss Williams, who is the daughter of Luther Williams, the president of the Williams Banking Company, is the first honor graduate of the Gresham High School. As long as the high school only had a two-year course, honors were not bestowed, but two years ago the curriculum was changed to a four-year course.

She not only graduated with first honor in this course, but she was also complimented by being selected as valedictorian. Her address was one of the conspicuous features of the commencement exercises.

Miss Williams has signified her intention of entering Wesleyan College next fall, taking up both the regular collegiate work and special study in music. Her school associates and former teachers predict a brilliant college career for her.

At the State High School meet in Athens this week Miss Williams won the State essay championship. She had previously won the Sixth District essay honor.

An invitation has been extended by Pastor White to both the men and women of his congregation to make themselves as comfortable as possible. It is possible the pastor will shed his coat, too.

Pastor White holds that to make people attend church in hot clothes will not increase their interest in religion.

NURSE IS GIVEN HONOR AS MILL DISTRICT ANGEL

Mrs. Louise Talbott Inaugurated Great Work in Relieving Distress of Poor Operatives.

AUGUSTA, July 5.—Suffering among hundreds of the 12,000 cotton mill district residents, some of whom are in want because of misfortune, others because of improvidence and extravagance, several years ago caused the formation of a Home Comfort Society with Mrs. W. H. Barrett as president, and Mrs. Warren Walker as secretary and treasurer. The society employed Miss Louise Biggar as district nurse and began a work the extent of which even the founders did not anticipate.

Miss Biggar, now Mrs. Louise Talbott, was a ministering angel in the mill district. She worked in conjunction with city physicians, attended clinics at which Drs. W. C. Kellogg, C. I. Bryans, W. A. Mulherin, Hinton Brooks and others prescribed for those who needed treatment and saw that their instructions were carried out.

She made daily trips to the homes of the sick, gave them their medicine and often cooked for the wife who was sick. She had drunken husbands sent to the stockade until they promised to reform; has forced men with two or three wives to change their mode of living and taught cleanliness to the children.

She has stressed the importance of parents sending their children to the John Milledge School, the $100,000 structure; has washed and scrubbed and taught and begged to get improved conditions.

President Murphy, of the Board of Health, even allowed her to write prescriptions when she couldn't procure a physician.

During the summer she distributed money collected by a local newspaper to furnish milk and ice to the babies of the mill district. Indeed, the district nurse began the transformation of a part of the population of Augusta by teaching the necessity of thrift, economy, cleanliness, good morals and education.

Mrs. Talbott at present is the nurse for an Augusta insurance company, but the work goes on. But instead of the Home Comfort Society paying the district nurse the city is paying her and there will be more district nurses in Augusta in the near future, for the task is too big for one person.

W. J. MASSEE PAYS $7,000 TO TENNESSEEAN

Criminal and Civil Prosecution Dropped by R. W. Williams. Former Stock Farm Partner.

MACON, July 5.—W. J. Massee, the Macon capitalist, has settled the prosecution of civil and criminal cases, which have kept him out of Tennessee for several years, by paying R. W. Williams, of Columbia, Tenn., $7,000.

The indictment, charging Massee with criminal extortion and libel, was dismissed at Nashville to-day upon motion of the Attorney General of Davidson County, and Williams at the same time dismissed his $25,000 suit for damages, in consideration of the payment of the $7,000.

A jury last year awarded Williams a verdict for $16,000, but the United State Court of Appeals last week set it aside and gave Massee a new trial, on the ground that the trial judge did not have the right to reduce the verdict to $7,500 as was done.

Massee and Williams were formerly partners in a stock farm. While at a club in Nashville several years ago Massee, it was alleged, made a remark reflecting on Williams' character. Williams then brought suit and also procured a grand jury indictment.

Requests for extradition of Massee were served on both Governors Smith and Brown, and were declined by them. Last year Massee was arrested in South Carolina, but Governor Hooper, of Tennessee, withdrew the request for extradition just when Governor Blease said he would honor it.

UNDERGROUND WIRES ORDERED BY ALDERMEN

Telephone Company Raises Rates in Dublin, Council Retaliating by Demanding Improvements.

DUBLIN, July 5.—The City Council has passed an ordinance requiring the Southern Bell Telephone Company to put all wires inside the fire limits underground at once. Also from now on when a street is to be paved, if the wires upon it are not already underground, they must be put underground.

This ordinance is the sequel of a lively fight over the recent raise in telephone rates of 50 cents all around. The company entered into a contract with the city when the exchange was purchased to charge $1.50 per month for residence phones on duplex lines until the number of phones in the exchange reached 500, then the price was to go up to $2.

When notice was served by the officials of the company several months ago that the rental would be raised, there was a loud protest. The raise stood, and the ordinance is in retaliation.

Brave Parson Tells Girls How to Dress

More Modest Clothes, Also More Clothes, Needed Reform, Says Savannah Preacher.

SAVANNAH, July 5.—"How Women Should Dress" will be discussed from the pulpit by the Rev. John S. Wilder, pastor of the South Side Baptist Church, to-morrow evening.

Mr. Wilder believes the present day women not only should wear more modest clothes, but also more clothes. The filmsy, clinging gowns, the tight skirts and those made with slits, which now are so popular, will be arraigned by Mr. Wilder.

"I don't intend to spare anything that has come under my observation, and I intend to tell the women some things that they seemingly have overlooked," he said.

MULE TEAM RUNS AWAY WITH WAYCROSS AUTO

WAYCROSS, July 5.—Mules hitched to the automobile of Charles T. Strickland, of this city, to-day became frightened at a passing train near Waycross and ran away, taking the machine into the woods with them and finally leaving it lodged against a large pine. The supply of gasoline had given out and the auto was being brought into the city at the time of the runaway. One mule was badly hurt. The car was not damaged.

WARE COUNTY OBJECTS TO LOSING ANY TERRITORY

WAYCROSS, July 5.—Failure to find any unanimous sentiment in any section of Ware County for the creation of new counties that include in their areas portions of this county probably will cause Ware's delegation in the Legislature to oppose all new county propositions that in any way cut into this county. Three different new county movements touch Ware, those advocated by Nicholls, Alma and Pearson.

FARMERS AND LABOR UNIONS TO JOIN IN PICNIC

WAYCROSS, July 5.—James Cowart, president of the Ware County Farmers' Union, has issued a general invitation for the picnic which will be given in Waycross Saturday, July 12. The Farmers' Union and unions of this city will join in giving the picnic.

KILLS GIRL AND SHOOTS SELF BECAUSE OF JEALOUSY

SAVANNAH, July 5.—Prompted by jealousy, Hugh Harrison shot and killed Ruth Hester, 21 years of age, in a house at 521 Broughton Street, and then turned the weapon upon himself in an effort to end it's own life. He is in the Savannah Hospital seriously wounded.

Georgia Man Has World's Only Terrapin Farm Discovers How to Incubate the Diamond Back

Alexander M. Barbee, of Savannah, Shows Government Experts He Can Prevent Extinction.

Alexander M. Barbee and two of his finest terrapin. Below is a scene on his terrapin farm.

SAVANNAH, July 5.—At Isle of Hope, a Savannah suburb, is the only farm in the world where diamond back terrapin are hatched and reared by artificial means. Alexander M. Barbee, proprietor of this unique industry, has solved the problem of terrapin propagation. He claims to hatch and rear more young terrapin than the females themselves, because the protection he gives the eggs and young from the enemies of the turtle family. He sells terrapin regularly to hotels and restaurants of the larger cities.

Barbee now has a business that brings him a handsome income. He has done what experts at Washington failed to do. He has hit upon a method of incubation. His discovery was accidental, but it probably means the prevention of the extinction of the diamond back terrapin.

The terrapin farm at Isle of Hope is one of the show places of Savannah. Thousands visit it annually. Five hundred baby terrapin were sold to tourists as souvenirs last winter. There are more than 5,000 terrapin in the 18 pens on the farm, not including 5,000 that have not reached a marketable age.

The terrapin know Barbee's voice and step. They will come at his call and eat out of his hand, but scurry to cover at the approach of a stranger.

Terrapin intended for the market are kept segregated, and there is a special hospital pen, where sick terrapin are isolated from the well ones. The loss by death is exceedingly small. The terrapin are sold by the dozen and in barrel lots through the winter season.

Artificial incubation of terrapin eggs heretofore has ben considered an impossibility. There are now 5,000 eggs in the incubators, and the little terrapin are coming out every day. There are 30 incubators on the farm. Incubation in the hatcheries occupies approximately 12 weeks, which is twice as long as is necessary under natural conditions. Out of the 5,000 eggs in the incubators Barbee expects to raise 4,500 terrapin.

Barbee started 23 years ago. He now is an expert and is acting in cooperation with fisheries experts at Washington. It is probable that the Federal Government eventually will adopt some of his ideas with a view to restocking depleted streams and swamps along the Southeastern coast.

Few Eaten in South.

The demand for terrapin is small south of Baltimore. Atlanta, Macon and other cities in this and neighboring States usually purchase a dozen or more in a winter to supply tourists. It is said before the war that slaves along the coast counties were fed upon them extensively.

Barbee sells direct to the larger hotels in Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia, Pittsburg, New York and Boston. With the growing scarcity of diamond backs French chefs are substituting cheaper and inferior terrapin. Men with discriminating taste though can tell when the distinctive flavor of the diamond back is lacking.

The farm on which the terrapin are raised is securely enclosed and roofed, but well ventilated. The entire place can be flooded with water at will. Pens always are flooded when the terrapin are fed, usually about three times a week in the spring and summer and not at all in the winter, when the terrapin bury themselves for their annual hibernation. Barbee has had to dig as deep as three feet to unearth terrapin for the winter trade. They are packed into a barrel like potatoes.

The trouble with raising terrapin heretofore always has been that the animals when in confinement will invariably eat their own eggs. It was many years before Barbee was able to overcome this trouble.

One day, after feeding, a small hillock of sand was left in one of the pens by the receding waters. The following morning Barbee found this hillock literally sown with fresh eggs. He has since learned that terrapin always seek elevations in which to deposit their eggs. Hillocks of sand are now carefully prepared and maintained in each of the breeding pens. Barbee has only to turn this sand over with his hands to uncover the eggs.

Follow Barbee Like Dogs.

Barbee calls the terrapin with a peculiar clucking sound. They also will respond to his whistle, crawling over his feet and almost up his legs to get at their food. They also will come when he waves a handkerchief. Barbee once went into the pens wearing a new suit of clothes and a new pair of shoes. His pets raced away in a panic of fear.

Barbee's dogs run about the farm at will, carefully avoiding stepping on the terrapin, which pay not the least attention.

Barbee's particular favorite among the terrapin is Toby. Nobody knows precisely how old Toby is. He was among the first terrapin Barbee secured, and he was already an adult when he first came to the farm. Toby lives in a fountain in the center of Barbee's restaurant. The alligators grew up with Toby. Toby is as gentle and docile as a dog. When taken out of the water he follows Barbee like a dog.

Barbee replenishes his stock with hundreds of fresh terrapin every summer. He furnishes nets to negroes up and down the coast of Georgia and South Carolina, who sell him their catch at the market. Barbee makes a round of his nets every two weeks during the season.

Diamond back terrapin are distributed along the eastern coast of North and Central America from Buzzard's Bay to Yucatan. All live in salt or brackish water and find their most congenial homes in low-lying swamps and protected bays or inlets. Barbee's tarrapin do not have access to salt water at all, but appear to thrive just as well without it. The little terrapin are dropped into a bucket of fresh water several days after they are hatched.

Sleep Through Winter.

The period of hibernation of the terrapin begins soon after the advent of cool weather, but for some weeks he emerges whenever there is a warm day. Eventually he buries himself at the bottom of a pool and remains until spring. Eggs are laid in May and June. The female, with her hind legs, digs a hole in a convenient bank, and at a depth from five to six inches deposits five to twelve eggs. She then covers up the nest and departs.

The eggs hatch in about six weeks, if the weather is warm, but may require twice as long if the season is a cold one. The young soon after hatching go to the marsh and dig into the ground, where they spend the first winter and a part of the second summer. The growth is, for a turtle, fairly rapid, the average increase in length being about one inch a year until five inches is reached, when it becomes slower. Twenty-five or thirty years is the limit of life.

The food of the diamond back terrapin consists largely of crustaceans and mollusks it catches and crushes, but as its jaws are weak it is compelled to feed upon the smaller and softer animals of these groups. During exceptionally high tides it sometimes follows the water into the grassy lowlands and catches and eats insects. The tender shoots and rootlets of some of the marsh plants also are eaten. Barbee feeds his terrapin on shrimp and finely chopped fish or meat.

ASK EXTENSION OF STATE ROAD VIA WAYCROSS

Several Counties Organizing to Push Senator Sweat's Scheme for Lengthening Line.

WAYCROSS, July 5.—Several counties are discussing the organization of an association for the purpose of promoting the suggested route for the State railroad extension via Fort Valley and Waycross to St. Marys and Jacksonville.

Right of way through nearly all counties named by Judge Sweat in his resolution before the Georgia Senate will be given to the State, and some counties have gone further and agreed to use their convicts in building the roadbed. This, it is argued, will materially reduce the cost.

Waycross for a number of years has hoped for the extension. Because of the low cost of constructing a road along what is known as the ridge route of Georgia, which would bring the road via Waycross, the territory traversed is among that in the State undergoing most rapid development. The State owns vast terminals already at St. Marys, and this is a fact that it is thought will have much weight with the commission if Governor Slaton appoints one.

Three Towns 'Kick' on R.F.D. Mail Service

Taylors Creek, Flemington and Trinity, in Liberty County, Want Postoffices Reopened.

SAVANNAH, July 5.—Three thriving Liberty County postal centers have a big kick on against the Democratic administration.

The postoffices at Taylors Creek, Flemington and Trinity, all of which have been in operation for many years, have been closed, and these towns have been made a part of a rural free delivery route that meanders out of Hinesville into the wilds of Liberty County.

As a result, it requires nearly a week to write a letter in Savannah, dispatch it and receive an answer from one of the towns named.

Congressman Edwards and Senator Bacon and Senator Smith are being bombarded with letters and telegrams from their constituents demanding that something be done to improve conditions.

2 Adjudged Insane By Savannah Juries

Woman Insisted on Posing in the Nude—Man Believed Himself Mental Replica of Christ.

SAVANNAH, GA., July 5.—J. H. Meredith, a white man, has been adjudged insane. He suffered from an hallucination that he was patterned after Christ in every particular, and that this distinction was confined to himself and one other man.

Meredith told the commission that he communes with the stars, and that he understands them as the three Wise Men did the star that led them to Bethlehem.

Julia Bryan, who insisted upon posing in the nude, was also sent to Milledgeville by a lunacy commission. While she was in jail she refused to wear any clothes. The weather was favorable to the humoring of her whim, but the commission was not.

Lanier's Motion for New Trial Up Soon

Acquittal of Wife May Have Important Bearing on Case of Convicted Man.

WAYCROSS, July 5.—Three weeks hence the motion of W. C. Lanier for a new trial will be heard by Judge T. A. Parker. Lanier is under life sentence for murder, convicted at the May term for killing an infant.

His wife, who was indicted jointly with him, was acquitted at an adjourned term of court in June. It is likely that in the motion for new trial it will be stated that evidence of a material nature that was not given at Lanier's trial has been secured and that Lanier should be given the benefit of this.

SCHOOL BOARD REFUSES TO VACATE ITS OFFICES

WAYCROSS, July 5.—Because the county commissioners have given the offices of the County Board of Education to Sheriff Pittman, due to crowded conditions at the courthouse, a lively scrap is in prospect when the board meets next Tuesday. County Superintendent J. R. Bourn has so far failed to vacate the office. That an order ejecting the county board from the courthouse will be issued by the commissioners is probable. This, it is said, will be resisted, and the outcome ihs awaited with interest.

PLANS PREPARED FOR UNION STATION ADDITION

WAYCROSS, July 5.—It is reported today that all plans for the addition to the union station here have been approved by the officials of the Atlantic Coast Line and that probably during the month the contract will be let. The addition will occupy a vacant tract between the station and the offices of the Southern Express Company and will, like the station proper, front Plant Avenue.

Brunswick Greatest Port for Crossties

Shipments Made Recently Total 350,000, Which Breaks All Known Records for the Trade.

BRUNSWICK, July 5.—Brunswick is the greatest crosstie port in the world, as shown by shipments during the past month. One steamer, the Grayson, under charter to the Joyce-Watkins Company, with the next shipment will have taken from this port within one month more than 120,000 crossties.

Other shipments made by the American Tie and Timber Company, the Baxter Company, the Joyce-Watkins Company, Emanuel, Mason and others during the last 30 days, aggregate over 150,000. That is an unprecedented record for ties. The wholesale price of crossties is ranging now around the highest levels.

Change Is Planned In Waycross Board

Membership Is To Be Increased From Six to Seven if New Bill Is Passed.

WAYCROSS, July 5.—It looks as if the Ware County Board of Commissioners will continue in politics, despite the efforts made at last year's session of the Legislature to get the board out of politics. The proposed changes in the act creating the board removes from the Grand Jury the privilege of selecting the commissioners and puts the board's election back to the people.

The number on the board is to be increased from six to seven, four to come from the Waycross district and three from country districts. The chairman, instead of having to be one of the Waycross commissioners, is to be elected by the board regardless of his place of residence.

A feature of the change as now advocated is the creation of a "board of information," consisting of one member from each of the ten districts in Ware County. This board is to make recommendations for road work and construction. The board, if the act passes, will have to maintain a repair gang, to be on hand for hasty work made necessary by storms.

Waycross Western Goes Ahead Rapidly

Ten More Miles of Track To Be Put Into Service Soon—Construction Gang Busy.

WAYCROSS, July 5.—Rapid progress has been made by the construction forces of the Waycross and Western, and it seems that soon from eight to ten miles more of the new railroad will be put into service. The line is being built from Waycross toward the Georgia Southern and Florida, and rumor is that with connections and other extensions the line is going into West Georgia and probably into Alabama.

Alex K. Sessoms, president of the road, is spending most of his time with the construction force.

The next extension that will be opened to traffic will be the one to Sirmans, in Clinch County, the home of the road's vice president, F. B. Sirmans. When this is finished the road will add to its rolling stock and make arrangements without delay for rushing the connection with the Georgia Southern and Florida.

Spots at Crossings To Save Pedestrians

White Spaces Will Be Painted, and All Vehicles Must Pass Around Them.

SAVANNAH, July 5.—As a means of giving further protection to pedestrians crossing the streets at busy corners, white spots, known as "safety spots," will be painted on the pavement at the intersection of several of the congested thoroughfares.

Some time ago some of these white spots were put on the pavement and proved of great assistance. In a rush of traffic, the pedestrian seeks the white spot, which the traffic regulations require all vehicles to pass around. There is no danger of any person standing on the white spot being injured.

The method has been successfully tried out in many cities.

Mayor Orders Ice Law Enforcement

Customers Complain of Short Weight by Savannah Companies—Wagon Scales Required.

SAVANNAH, GA., July 5.—Numerous complaints that the ice companies are giving their customers short weight has caused Mayor Richard J. Davant to order a rigid enforcement of the ordinance governing the sale of ice.

This ordinance provides that any person has the right to demand that the ice be weighed in his presence. It also requires ice wagons to carry scales which have been properly tested.

JUNIOR BASEBALL LEAGUE FORMING IN SAVANNAH

SAVANNAH, July 5.—A junior baseball league, consisting of four teams, of boys between fourteen and sixteen years, is being organized by W. J. Stewart, who is taking the initiative at the request of a number of boys who want to play in the league.

The teams will represent four sections of the city.

Mayor Davant has given assurances that the league will be permitted to use the diamond in Forsyth Park Extension.

FEDERAL AID SECURED FOR CHATHAM DRAINAGE

SAVANNAH, July 5.—United States aid in promoting the interest of drainage of the vast lands of Chatham County has been secured through Representative Charles L. Edwards, of the special subcommittee of the Chamber of Commerce, who has been handling the matter for several weeks.

Engineer J. G. Phillips, of the United States drainage corps, has received instructions to designate the best drainage district in the County, and he is now at work on the proposition.

BIGGEST MAN IN NATION IS PRIDE OF WAYCROSS

His Name Is W. T. Brinson and He Weighs 590 Pounds—Is Prominent Elk and Pythian.

WAYCROSS, June 28.—Not a city of any State of the United States has as a resident a man with the two distinctions possessed by a Waycross man—W. T. Brinson. First, he is to-day the biggest living man in the United States, if not in all America. Second, he is the jolliest man in the United States.

Incidentally, he enjoys also the distinction of being the largest Elk in the world, besides being the largest Pythian in the world. He is a member of Elks' Lodge No. 369 of Waycross and of Wakefield Lodge No. 27 Knights of Pythias.

Average Weight 590 Pounds.

Brinson's average weight is 590 pounds. He has passed the 600 mark and has been as low as 560 pounds. The man supposed to have been the world's largest man was reported to weigh only 565 pounds, and if this record is authentic, Brinson heads the list for the world so far as size goes.

He is a turpentine operator and a crosstie dealer. He is interested in real estate and farms, too, and is as active in looking after business as any one. He has been successful, too, and is always optimistic. When it comes to passing around jokes he can hold his own with the best.

Takes Ride With Governor.

In recent years when so many warm political campaigns have been waged in Gorgia and so many "joint disputements" held here, Brinson has met most of the "big" men of the State but he has yet to meet a man who has anything on him, physically speaking. During one of his visits to Waycross Governor Joseph M. Brown met Mr. Brinson and accepted an invitation to take a drive about Waycross. It is said that Governor Brown remarked at the time of meeting Mr. Brinson that he would never dispute the fact that he was "Little Joe" Brown. A photographer took a snap shot of the Governor and Mr. Brinson seated togetner in Mr. Brinson's buggy. The picture has been highly prized ever since.

SIX ORGANIZATIONS APPOINT TRUSTEES FOR BIG LEGACY

SAVANNAH, July 5.—A charter petition for the R. J. Nunn trust fund has been filed in the Chatham Superior Court. This association is being organized to administer that part of the estate of Dr. R. J. Nunn which was bequeathed to Zerubabel Lodge, Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite, Georgia Historical Society, Young Women's Christian Association, Savannah Female Orphanage and the Society of Colonial Wars in the State of Georgia.

Under Dr. Nunn's will most of his estate was left to Miss Annie G. Purse, to go at her death to the institutions named. Each was to appoint a trustee.

BOYS OF PARISH BUILD SUNDAY SCHOOL ANNEX

SAVANNAH, July 5.—At practically no cost St. Paul's Episcopal parish has acquired an additional Sunday school room for the infant class, with a seating capacity of approximately 200.

A temporary room has been constructed out of scrap lumber by Samuel K. Ward and Robert T. Waller, with the assistance of some of the boys of the parish. The building is situated immediately in the rear of the church and is very presentable.

SOUTH GEORGIA TO ASK SCHOOL FOR 150 DEAF

Legislature Will Be Asked for Appropriation to Establish Branch of Cave Spring Institution.

TIFTON, July 5.—The urgent need for a school for the deaf in South Georgia is demonstrated by the statistics furnished by the State school census, which shows that of 362 deaf children in the State, 199 are in South Georgia. There are approximately 150 deaf children in South Georgia who are not attending school.

According to State Superintendent of Schools M. L. Brittain the statistics furnished by the State school census taken in May are complete except for four counties and twelve local systems, where the enumerations must be made again. In 144 counties there are 202 white and 124 colored deaf children. Of these 102 white and 97 colored are in South Georgia. The counties and local systems not enumerated will add twelve or fifteen more to this number.

Last year the total enrollment at the Cave Spring School was 188. Of this number less than fifty were from South Georgia, leaving approximately 150 deaf children in South Georgia to whom the liberal appropriation for the institute at Cave Spring is practically worthless. It is to remedy this that the Legislature will be asked to pass a bill to establish a branch school in South Georgia.

At a meeting held in Tifton last March an executive committee with R. C. Postell, of Tifton, chairman, was appointed to inquire into the need for a school for the deaf in South Georgia. Chairman Postell has called a meeting of this committee in the Tifton Chamber of Commerce rooms Monday afternoon, July 7, at 4 o'clock. The purpose of the meeting is to frame a bill providing for the establishment of such a school and to arrange for its introduction.

Five-Year Fugitive Captured at Manor

Stacy Geiger, Under Fifteen-Year Sentence, Had Changed His Name.

WAYCROSS, July 5.—Stacy Geiger, who was convicted five years ago in Wayne County for assaulting a young white girl near Jesup, and who received a fifteen-year sentence in the penitentiary, was captured at Manor, west of Waycross, and turned over to Wayne County officers to-day by Sheriff D. W. Pittman.

Geiger escaped from jail in Jesup shortly after sentence was passed on him and has been able to keep out of the hands of officers ever since. He has been going under the name of Barton. He is 30 years old.

ALLEGED EMBEZZLER TO GO BACK TO WAYCROSS

WAYCROSS, July 5.—Officers were advised to-day that Harry Hoggs, wanted here for embezzlement, has been arrested at LaGrange. Deputy Sheriff Steedley has gone after him. Hoggs is charged with appropriating insurance money collected by him while in charge of a local agency.

Trusses Like These Are A Crime

Such Makeshifts Have Forced Thousands Into Risking Dangerous Operations

Wearing elastic and spring trusses year after year is almost sure to shorten your life.

You can't make them hold, even when drawn so tight you can scarcely stand to keep them on.

They usually let you get worse all the time—that's why every year they are forcing thousands of people into undergoing operation.

They are simply a crime—squeeze the rupture, often causing strangulation—dig into the pelvic bone in front—press against the spinal column at the back—make life miserable for nearly everybody who wears them.

The Plain Truth Is This

You can't possibly get well—can't even keep from getting worse—unless your rupture is constantly held in place. Just as a broken bone can't knit unless held securely together.

And just as a bandage or splint is the only way a broken bone can be held, so the right kind of truss is the only thing in the world that can keep a rupture from coming out and growing worse.

You'll feel like a new person from the day you put on that kind of truss.

But you know as well as we that you'll never find such a sure-to-hold truss at any drug store.

Yet it's easy enough to get one, you can test it first—by actual, every-day trial—without having to risk a single cent.

It's the famous Cluthe Truss or Cluthe Automatic Massager—absolutely guaranteed to hold, and won't cost you a cent if it doesn't.

It's so utterly different from everything else for rupture that it has received eighteen separate patents.

Made on an entirely new principle. Instantly and automatically protects you against every strain so your rupture can't possibly be forced out. Self-regulating, self-adjusting. Far more than just a truss.

In addition to constant holding it provides the only way ever discovered for overcoming the weakness which is the real cause of rupture.

Just how it does that—entirely automatically—and how it has thus completely cured hundreds and hundreds of people whose cases seemed almost hopeless—is all explained in the free book which the coupon below will bring you.

No Belt—No Leg-Straps—No Springs

The Cluthe Truss does away with the curse of belts, leg-straps and springs. Thousand say it is as comfortable as their clothing. It is waterproof—will hold in the bath. Also perspiration-proof and easily kept clean.

Make This 60-Day Test—You Won't Have to Risk a Penny

We don't ask you to trust to a mere try-on the way you have to do at a drug store.

We'll make a Cluthe Automatic Massaging Truss especially for your case—make it to your measure—and let you try it sixty days.

We'll practically lend it to you that long just for a test.

If it doesn't keep your rupture from coming out or bothering you in any way, no matter how hard you work or strain—if it doesn't prove every claim we make—then you can send it back and it won't cost you a penny.

Free Book Full of Facts Never Before Put in Print

Don't keep on letting yourself get worse—don't spend a cent on account of your rupture until you get our free book of advice.

This remarkable book—cloth-bound, 96 pages—sums up all we have learned about ruptures during forty years of experience. You'll find it full of facts never before put in print.

It shows just why elastic and spring trusses cause so much misery and such a shameful waste of money that the law should stop their sale.

It explains why operation is nearly always a needless gamble with death—and why, if you do manage to live through it, you may have to keep on wearing a truss.

It exposes the humbug "appliances," "methods," "plasters," etc.

It shows why sixty days' trial is the only safe way to buy anything for rupture—and how the Cluthe Truss is the only thing of any kind that you can get on such a long trial because the only thing good enough to stand such a thorough day-after-day test.

And it tells all about this famous Automatic Massaging Truss—how simple it is—how it ends constant expense—how it has saved thousands from operation—how you can get it on trial, and how little it costs if you keep it.

Also gives voluntary indorsements from over 5,000 benefited and cured people.

Write for this book to-day—don't put it off—the minute it takes to send for it may free you from trouble for the rest of your life.

Simply use the coupon or just say in a letter or postal "Send me your book."

WATERWORKS WAR UNDER WAY IN COLUMBUS

City and Private Company Strive for Supremacy—Bond Election to End Fight.

BIRMINGHAM CASH INVESTED

Municipal Plant Aim of Business Men's Club—Company Gets Favored Site on River.

COLUMBUS, July 5.—For the past ten years there has been constant warfare between the city of Columbus and the Columbus Waterworks Company, but with the approach of another waterworks bond campaign the outlook is that the end is near, for it generally is admitted that the whole question will be settled one way or the other with the election to be held October 18.

The waterworks situation in Columbus is interesting. For several years there has been no contract between the city and the company, because of litigation, but an old contract is serving.

Eleven years ago the city voted a $250,000 bond issue with which to put in a waterworks system, but the bonds never were sold and more than $100,000 worth have expired by limitation, but during that time there has been constant litigation on between the city and the waterworks company, which also has been wrestling with the bankruptcy courts.

Three Birmingham, Ala., capitalists —John B. Weakley, Eugene Fles and W. C. Hamilton—last fall purchased the old Columbus Waterworks Company and changed its name to the Columbus Water Supply Company. They purchased recently $100,000 worth of piping and other material to be used in improving its system.

Now the City Council has come forward with a waterworks bond issue for $450,000 5s, which, if they carry, are to be used in building a municipal waterworks system. The city has gone a step further and refused to grant the waterworks company permission to lay any other mains in the city, after the company had purchased an immense amount of piping ranging from 10 to 18 inches.

The old waterworks bondholders were scattered throughout the North and East, and among the number who had stock in the plant was a daughter of General Robert E. Lee. Not any were people of wealth, but all were well known, and as a result of the failure of the waterworks system and the continued litigation many had their small fortunes swept away.

A Municipal Ownership Club has been organized by business men of Columbus and it will conduct a vigorous campaign to carry the bonds. W. O. Johnson has been made permanent secretary, while T. E. Golden, president of the Golden Foundry and Machine Shops, is president. Offices have been established and a general publicity campaign will begin at once.

It has been practically demonstrated that there is only one source of water supply—the Chattahoochee River—and the Columbus Water Supply Company has recently come in possession of the most available place for a settling basin. It is probable that if the bond issue carries there will be further litigation.

In the meantime the water analysis at present shows that the river is affording the best water that the city has ever enjoyed.

ELBERTA PEACH SEASON AT HAND; CROP IS A FAILURE

AMERICUS, July 5.—The Elberta peach shipping season here will begin Monday. On account of the failure of the crop here, the shipments will be small. Callaway interposed his objection, and the resolution went over.

Fowler called it up again as soon as the House convened again. Callaway was two minutes late and the resolution passed.

Through Army Road to Tybee Plan Is Revived

Chamber of Commerce Will Be Asked to Urge Federal Appropriation.

SAVANNAH, July 5.—The proposition to build a through highway from Savannah to Tybee, making it a military turnpike, doubtless will be revived at the July meeting of the Chamber of Commerce. Arthur W. Solomon, a director in the Chamber, and secretary of the Savannah Automobile Club, will bring the matter up for consideration.

Two routes were considered a year ago. One was via Wilmington Island, making the turnpike a continuation to Tybee, with a ferry as a means of crossing Wilmington River. The other scheme was to have the road parallel the Tybee branch of the Central of Georgia Railway, which would reduce the number of streams to be crossed and make it possible for the same bridges used by the railroad to be used for the highway.

Under the old scheme it was planned to have the road built by private parties in co-operation with the Federal Government. It now is planned to have the matter taken up by Chatham County's Representatives in Congress, with the idea of securing the passage of a bill appropriating money to defray the cost of constructing the road.

AMERICUS, July 5.—As one of the results of the recent lynching here, the Americus police force will be given a thorough shaking up Tuesday evening, when the Police Commission will meet in special session.

This is an unusual procedure, but it has been deemed necessary as the Grand Jury which investigated the lynching criticised the local police, together with the Sheriff, for their failure to prevent it. Every member of the force will be summoned before the commission Tuesday evening.

Ministers Agree to Promote Good Plays

Unitarians Will Help Better Shows Instead of Criticising "Bad" Theaters.

LOS ANGELES, July 5.—That the church should promote the better shows given in theaters instead of criticising "bad" shows and condemning the theaters, was the consensus of opinion at a meeting of ministers at the First Unitarian Church.

In order to have more co-operation between the churches and theaters, it was decided that some of the ministers in the organization should go to theatrical managers and make arrangements with them to have lectures given in churches on the better plays presented in theaters.

Ministers of other denominations, "who are continually harping at the theater as an influence of evil," were criticised at the meeting.

FACTIONS STILL WAR FOR BRINSON RAILWAY CONTROL

SAVANNAH, July 5.—After two all-day conferences between conflicting elements in the Brinson Railroad no conclusion has been reached as to the ultimate fate of the road. Neither George M. Youngsters Arrested, but Only Penalty Is Unmerciful Whipping Administered by Father.

VALDOSTA, July 5.—O. T. Hill, special officer of the Atlantic Coast Line, has returned from Thomas County, where he went to investigate an alleged attempt to wreck a train. A piece of steel rail was placed across the tracks, but no damage was done. The officer found that the obstruction was placed on the tracks by two boys, ten and twelve years old, Grant Jones and Tim Jones, who said they merely wanted to see if the train would knock the rail off, and without any idea of causing a wreck.

The boys were arrested, but on account of their youth, they were not prosecuted. When their father was through whipping them, the lads said they never wanted to see another railroad track or train.

CAMPAIGN ON IN VALDOSTA FOR MODERN TOWN

Streets Are Being Paved, Water System Extended, Library Built and Hotels Made Attractive.

VALDOSTA, June 28.—The wonderful development of Georgia and the South within the past twenty years is epitomized in the marvelous progress of Valdosta. Here the Georgia Cracker has demonstrated in the highest degree his ability as a city builder.

Valdosta donned her "seven-league boots" twelve years ago when the business men here financed the Georgia State Fair, holding one of the most successful expositions ever in the State. For a town of less than 3,000 population the proposition was a tremendous one, but was so successfully carried out that it was repeated the following year.

The new city directory just published gives Valdosta a population of 14,913, including the suburbs. The Federal census of 1910 gave the city a population of less than 8,000, showing that the marvelous growth which began a dozen years ago was greatly increased within the last three years. People from every section of the country are being attracted by the opportunities here and an even more rapid growth in population is assured.

During this year the city will spend $250,000 on public improvements, the bulk of which will ge into street and sidewalk paving and additions to the waterworks. The business section is paved with vitrified brick, while the paving now under way in the residence section is beng laid with asphalt.

Six miles more of cement sidewalks will be laid with the appropriation already made, making the city one of the best paved smaller cities in the South.

Water System Adequate.

A new 3,000,000 gallon pump which is to be installed within the next four months, together with a doubling of the reservoir capacity and the laying of larger mains will give the city a waterworks system adequate for several years' growth. These improvements are all under way now. The sewerage system is being extended also, and will take in the new section in the northern part of the city which was included in the city limits during 1912.

Valdosta is headquarters for the District Court of the United States for the Southwestern Division of the Southern District of Georgia. The building erected by the Government three years ago for the postoffice and Federal Court cost $175,000 and is a handsome structure.

The high-class of the public buildings here is marked by every stranger. Lowndes County's Courthouse is one of the handsomest courthouses in the State, while the modern jail finished and occupied this year is the last word in prison construction. It cost $75,000 and is provided with every feature necessary for the safety and comfort of the prisoners.

Library Being Built.

A new public library, to cost $20,000, is now in course of construction and will be finished this year. Its churches and schools are sources of pride to the people of Valdosta. Some of the handsomest church edifices in the State are to be found here.

Two modern hotels have been opened within the last twelve months, the Hotel Patterson being an entirely new structure, occupying the former site of the Florence Hotel. The New Valdes, opened in January after a complete rearrangement and modernizing of the interior, is to have an anex of forty-six rooms, contract for which was let this week. No city of its size in the South has more modern hotel service.

RAILROAD WARS WITH VALDOSTA TO GET AVENUE

Atlantic Coast Line Claims Ownership of Thoroughfare Which City Wants to Pave.

VALDOSTA, July 5.—The acute stage has been reached in a row between the Mayor and Council of Valdosta and the Atlantic Coast Line, involving the ownership of Savannah Avenue.

The trouble was precipitated when the city recently decided to pave the avenue, with the intention, of course, that the railroad company should pay its portion of the paving assessment. The railroad company objected and the paving was held up, awaiting an adjustment of the differences. The railroad company claims that it has been unfairly treated by the city, in that the brick to pave the avenue, which is contends belongs to it, and which parallels its tracks through the city, was shipped over a rival road.

After the brick had been stacked in long lines along the avenue, the Coast Line notified the City Council that Savannah Avenue belonged to it, and the company had decided that it didn't want to pave its property. Superintendent R. A. McCranie, of the Atlantic Coast Line, attended the meeting of the City Council yesterday, presenting his company's contentions. Neither side would recede from its position, and nothing affecting the ownership of the avenue was done.

Superintendent McCranie sought to obtain from the Council admissions in writing that the railroad company owns the avenue, and that the proposed paving will not affect its ownership. The Mayor and Council refused to make any such admissions and notified Mr. McCranie that if the city paved the avenue it would be done on the same basis as other paving, leaving the question of ownership to be settled in the courts if necessary.

The sidewalks of the Patterson Hotel and those fronting the many splendid homes on the avenue, it is claimed by the railroad company, are laid on its land.

Ownership of the strip 150 feet wide, through the heart of the city, is claimed by the railroad company through purchase in 1859. It has been used as a street for 50 years. There has never been any effort to close the street, but the railroad company is jealous of its rights to lay sidetracks along the avenue.

Chief Would Make 'Mashing' a Lost Art

Springfield Alderman Asked to Pass Law Prohibiting Men from Flirting on Streets.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., July 5.—Springfield proposes to make "mashing" a specific violation of law.

Complaints about men who ogle young girls and not infrequently attempt to open conversation with them have been frequent, and the Mayor, the Chief of Police and the Aldermen have joined forces to suppress the nuisance.

Chief of Police Quilty, with the concurrence of Mayor Denison, sent to the Board of Aldermen a communication asking for the passage of an ordinance to punish mashers and others who annoy young women in the streets.

The Aldermen voted to refer the matter to City Solicitor Adams, with instructions to draft such an ordinance.

"If the Aldermen will give me the right kind of an ordinance—the more drastic the better—mashing will speedily become a lost art in Springfield," says Chief Quilty.

Turning Basin for Savannah Planned

Federal Engineer Says It Will Handle Any Ship That Can Go Through Canal.

SAVANNAH, July 5.—A turning basin at Fig Island big enough to handle any ship that can go through the Panama Canal will be constructed at Savannah, according to Colonel Dan C. Kingman, chief of the Government engineers for the Savannah district.

A preliminary examination has been made by Colonel Kingman and his report sent to headquarters in Washington, and the department has authorized Colonel Kingman to make estimates on the project.

The great size of the basin—2,000 by 800 feet—was thought by many to be unnecessary, but Colonel Kingman is building with an idea of the great influx of trade that is likely to accrue to Savannah and the South Atlantic coast with the opening of the Panama Canal.

Thomasville Gripped By Baseball Fever

Much Interest Aroused by Empire League Race and the Georgian's Cup Offer.

THOMASVILLE, July 5.—The only thing hotter in South Georgia than the weather now is baseball, and that is at fever heat. The winning of two games from Valdosta yesterday created great enthusiasm here, and nothing else is talked of by old and young. Great interest is taken in the plan of The Georgian to present a silver cup to the favorite player in the league, and everybody is discussing sending votes for some special one on the team.

Masons of Second District to Meet

Several Hundred Delegates Are Expected to Gather in Thomasville This Week.

THOMASVILLE, July 5.—The Second District Convention of Masons will meet in Thomasville Thursday for a two-day session.

Several hundred delegates are expected, and an interesting program has been prepared.

Grand Master Colling, of the Georgia Lodge, will be present, and Grand Master Glover, of the Florida Lodge, also will attend.

No Angles in Houses On City Corner Lots

Superintendent of Street Paving Set the Fashion and Contractors Follow.

CONWAY, ARK., July 5.—A paving contractor thrust fame upon this place, the home town of former Governor G. W. Donaghey, but Conway folk did not realize it until visitors told them.

A year ago Conway bought concrete walks for the entire town. The man who superintended the delivery did not like angles, so he made every street corner a curve. There is not a right angle in the entire system of walks.

Conway builders caught the idea, and those who have erected houses on corner lots since the curves were introduced have set them bias of the lot. As a result the residence faces the curve, or both streets impartially.

COLUMBUS MERCHANTS TO HOLD ANOTHER CONVENTION

COLUMBUS, July 5.—During the next week or ten days active steps will be taken looking toward a merchants' convention in Columbus, which will be tendered the retailers of the Columbus territory by Columbus jobbers.

Three already have been held, each of which was a success. The convention will be in progress something like two days.

MANAGER TOO EXTRAVAGANT, SAYS BRINSON

Builder and Chief Stockholder of Railroad Wants to Oust New York Official.

SAVANNAH, July 5.—Because it is costing nearly $10,000 a month more to operate the Brinson Railroad under the management of Richard Morgan, representing the interests of James Imbrie, the New York financier, than under the old regime, George M. Brinson, president of the road and the man who built it, is making every effort to oust Morgan and regain personal control of the porperty.

Imbrie, who has sold many securities for the road with the understanding that he was to have a voice in naming the manager of the property, desires to keep Morgan and continue his policies.

A conference between the conflicting interests has been on for the last three days in an effort to arrive at some settlement.

Brinson contends that if the present policy goes on, it means bankruptcy or a receivership. During the four months that Morgan has been in charge the operating expenses have increased something like $40,000, as compared to the same four months of 1912.

While Brinson is understood to have much of his stock in the road hypothecated, it is equally true that the notes which this stock was used to protect will not be due until the fall of 1914, and he has until that time to retain control of affairs.

Soda Clerks Mutiny; Demand Better Pay

As High Skill Required at Fountain as in Sanctuary of Chef, They Declare.

SAVANNAH, July 5.—Preparatory to asking for higher wages and shorter working hours, soda water dispensers are planning to form a union. They say they are determined to walk out if other means fail.

The clerks say they work for a minimum of ten hours a day, with a maximum of sixteen hours, and that they do not receive enough pay. They hold that their art is one that requires just as much skill and knowledge of how to tickle the palate, as hotel and restaurant chefs, bakers and cooks at other public establishments where edibles are served.

There are in Savannah about 250 soda "jerkers." The majority of them were members of a union that broke up something over a year ago, when the treasurer disappeared with the total funds of the organization.

APPOINTMENT OF GONZALES RECALLS FEUD

Brother of New Minister to Cuba Was Slain on Street by James H. Tillman.

When William Elliott Gonzales goes to Cuba, to which country he has been appointed as Minister by President Wilson, he will be returning to the land of his ancestors. Born in the United States, he is intensely American in his point of view, but this has not prevented him from taking a deep interest in the development of Cuba.

His name is a link between the two countries. His father, a native of Matanzas, Cuba, married into the old Elliott family of South Carolina, and the new Minister to Cuba was named for his uncle, William Elliott, a one-time Representative in Congress. The Elliotts had been for generations prominent in the social and political life of the Palmetto State, and General Ambrosio Jose Gonzales, the father of William Elliott Gonzales, was a greater politician than any of them and brought up his boys to take a vital interest in politics, for his participation in which one son paid with his life. The members of the Gonzales family have always had decided opinions on every public question and have always expressed their feelings forcibly.

Headed Fight for Liberty.

General Gonzales, with Narisco Lopez, headed the struggle for independence of Cuba in 1844, being one of the junta of five members who signed the declaration of independence, adopted the present flag and organized the first filibustering expedition under Lopez, he being second in command, with the rank of brigadier general. He was the first Cuban wounded in the battle for independence at Cardenas, May 20, 1850. The expedition failed and a sentence of death was pronounced upon Gonzales, but he escaped to the United States and settled in South Carolina, where he married a daughter of William Elliott, a prominent citizen of Beaufort. When the Civil War broke out the Cuban general offered his services to the Confederates and served as colonel and chief of artillery with General Beauregard, surrendering with Johnston's army at Greensboro in 1865. His two sons have followed in his footsteps, both having been soldiers, having proved their devotion to the United States and to Cuba.

He Opposed Tillman.

The feud which ended in the fatal shooting of Narisco G. Gonzales by Lieutenant Governor James H. Tillman in 1903 was partly political and partly personal. The two families had been on bad terms for years, and during the campaign which resulted in the election of Tillman as Lieutenant Governor, Gonzales through his paper, The State, had fought him bitterly. In his editorials he had called him names that Tillman could not forgive or forget. He challenged the editor to a duel, but Gonzales treated the proposal with contempt. This in no way impugned his courage, for the entire Gonzales family was noted for its bravery and nerve, and Narisco Gonzales, who was named for old Narisco Lopez, had acted as a scout for Gomez before the Spanish-American war and had served in the American army after war was declared, doing valiant service.

He was shot when walking unarmed in the public street by Tillman. At the first shot he called out "Coward!" and then "Shoot again!" as he sank to the ground. He died a few days afterward and feeling ran so high that Tillman, insisting that he could not get a fair trial in that county obtained a change of venue and was acquitted after a sensational trial.

Is a Spanish War Veteran.

William Elliott Gonzales succeeded his brother as the editor of The State. Like him, he had been a soldier in the war with Spain, having served as captain in the Second South Carolina regiment and having gone to Cuba with the army of pacification. Mr. Gonzales is a close personal and political friend of the Secretary of State, and in his paper warmly supported him in his candidacy for the Presidency in all of his campaigns. He is also a good friend of President Wilson and was one of the first men to suggest his name for the office which he now holds. The State led the fight in securing a delegation favorable to him, and it was largely owing to his efforts that the Palmetto delegation stood by Woodrow Wilson from first to last at the National Convention. After the nomination Mr. Gonzales returned home and worked for his election, raising a large popular subscription through the State to help defray the expenses of the campaign.

Mr. Gonzales has entertained both President Wilson and Secretary Bryan at hos home in Columbia, and it is understood that the appointment was tendered him out of personal regard by the President and because of his belief in his fitness for the place.

Senator Tillman Passive.

Notwithstanding the feeling between the Gonzales and Tillman families, it is understood that Senator Tillman, recognizing Mr. Gonzales' splendid work for President Wilson, will not oppose his confirmation. One of the most outspoken enemies of the newly appointed Minister to Cuba is Governor Blease, who was one of the counsel for James Tillman at the time of his trial. Not long ago the Governor was reported to have criticised Mr. Daniels, Secretary of the Navy, very bitterly because of his friendship for Mr. Gonzales.

Suffragist Is to Wear Trousers 'Are More Modest Than Skirts' Hiker Will Discard Her Petticoats

General Jones' Mascot on March to Washington Has a Corsetless Silk Costume.

NEW YORK, July 5.—They're here at last. Mrs. John Boldt, who was called the mascot of General Jones' suffrage army on its 250-mile hike to the inauguration last February, has designed several pairs of trouser costumes, and will wear them hereafter.

At her apartments in the Hotel Marseilles yesterday Mrs. Boldt criticised the women who are always talking dress reform, she said, but lacked the courage to wear "the sensible clothing they advocated."

"What we need to break the shackles and free these slaves to fashion is a leader," remarked Mrs. Boldt, as she sat in a big easy chair attired in her corsetless, trousette costume. It was made of sunburst-colored silk, caught in at the ankles with a band of gold and blue embroidery. The high waist, in Empire effect, was finished with a girdle of the same embroidery.

"The trouble with us is that we are many years behind the times in dress. The women of the East are far more progressive than we in dress. The majority of women in the world today wear trousers, the women of India, Turkey, China, Japan and even the peasant women of many European countries.

"Trousers of the style I wear, with draperies for evening of soft materials, giving an artistic Grecian line, are far more modest than the slit skirts you see on Broadway, with the limbs exposed to the knees, or transparent underclothing."

MRS. JOHN BOLDT, prominent suffragette and chief aide of General Rosalie Jones, wearing the type of trousers which she urges as a substitute for skirts.

Uncle Sam Must Pay Indian's Doctor Bill

Comptroller Holds That Government Must Care for Blind Aborigine Hurt in Auto Accident.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—Uncle Sam is just as much a protector and guardian of the life and welfare of his Indian wards as a parent is of his child.

This principle of responsibility was proclaimed by George E. Downey, Comptroller of the Treasury, in overruling the appeal of Robert W. Wooley, new auditor for the Interior Department, for a reversal of the Comptroller's decision approving a $900 bill of Dr. George P. Sampson for treating and nursing a blind Indian.

Charley Walker, a blind Navajo and ward of the Government, deserted by his guide on the approach of a train, was run over.

Dr. Sampson amputated his left leg and right foot and cared for him for three months.

NEW STANDARD OF WEIGHT FOR GEMS ADOPTED BY U. S.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—The Treasury Department has issued instructions to collectors of customs, adopting as the unit of weight for imported diamonds, pearls and other precious stones, the metric carat of 200 milligrams. The adoption of this standard will make the practice of this country conform to that of large countries dealing in diamonds, chief among them being the Netherlands, England, France and Belgium.

5TH REGIMENT OFF FOR LARK AT ST. SIMONS

Drudgery of Camp at Anniston Yast Year Will Be Forgotten at Seacoast Outing.

The Fifth Regiment, Georgia National Guard, composed of twelve companies with 560 officers and men, will leave over the Atlanta, Birmingham and Atlantic Railroad Tuesday evening in two sections at 8 and 8:30 for an outing of ten days at St. Simons Island.

This camp will be a picnic compared to the strenuous times of the State militia at Anniston, Ala., last year, when the entire time was devoted to military maneuvers. Then it was work, work, work. Realizing the fact that too much work and no play might have the same effect on the soldiers that it did on Jack, it was decided to give the boys an outing, at the same time make it worth while from a military viewpoint.

The work at St. Simons will be very light, but the discipline will be rigid, and the little details so necessary to the life of a soldier will be strictly observed. The work will be guard mount in the morning, dress parade in the afternoon and camp patrol duty.

School For Officers.

But the officers will not escape so easily. A practical school of instruction will be inaugurated, and it will require the services of the officers for at least four hours each day, and it is the opinion of the adjutant general that the regiment will be in better shape when it returns than it has been in years.

The regiment will leave the Auditorium-Armory at 7:30 Tuesday evening, headed by the colonel and his staff, the Fifth Regiment band and the companies in the order of their position in the line, as follows:

Company A, Captain Palmour commanding; Company B, Captain Weaver; Company C, Captain Candler; Company D, Captain Stoddard; Company E, Captain Leahy; Company F, Lieutenant McCarty; Company G, Captain Schmidt; Company H, Captain Quillian; Company I, Company Hartlaub; Company K, Captain Stokes; Company L, Captain Clarke; Company M, Captain Slaton.

Dress, military bearing and the minor details of camp life will be strictly enforced, but ample time has been provided for the men to enjoy the outing to the fullest.

Many to Visit the Island.

During the encampment of the Fifth Regiment, excursions will be run over the Atlanta, Birmingham and Atlantic Railroad, and there will probably be more people on the island than has ever been known.

With the camp right on the beach, or such a short distance that bathing suits can be donned in the tents, surf bathing, of course, will be the chief pastime of the landlubbers.

The Fifth Regiment band, under Chief Musician C. E. Barber, will furnish music, and the concerts in the evening by this noted organization of musicians will be an enjoyable feature. There will also be many entertainments and dances by the officers, and a royal good time is anticipated.

JULEP SECRET IS KEPT SACRED BY CONNOISSEUR

Connoisseur of Drinks Sees Mixologist Work Twelve Minutes on Concoction.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—A Providence, R. I., man, who is a connoisseur in things good to eat and drink, to wear, to read and to look at, was in Washington recently when a feeling came over him that he would like to have what he had not enjoyed for several years—a real Southern mint julep, the kind that he and others read about and that are dispensed in the private club rooms of Southern cities by leading citizens, accompanied by the traditional manifestations of Southern hospitality and courtesy.

At the cash register of an ornate bar an elderly gentleman was dozing, and there was no evidence whatever of life in the gilded and glass bedecked room. The old gentleman said, however, in reply to a query, that he thought a mint julep could be mixed there and he rang a bell. He was an old man, somewhere on the shady side of 70, and had all the earmarks of a Southern brigadier of the type that up to a few years ago was a typical Congressman.

Disappearing for several minutes, the Colonel, as the visitor afterward designated him, returned with two bunches of mint, the delicious aroma of which showed that it was fresh and crisp. Placing two glasses on the bar, he dissolved a lump of hard sugar in each by means of a tablespoonful of water.

Then, selecting shreds of the mint as carefully as if he were selecting pearls for a bride's necklace, he placed a bunch in each glass, folding the bottom ends into the dissolved and now thoroughly stirred sugar and pushing the tops back from the rim of the glass.

Whisky Aged as Mixer.

Then he added cracked ice, cracking it as carefully as he selected the mint, until the glasses were two-thirds full. After this the dignified barkeeper strolled deliberately to the other end of the long bar and returned with a bottle of whisky that bore a popular label and date showing that it was only slightly younger than the man who carried it.

Putting a large jigger of this into each glass, the Confederate brigadier next, by the same process of selection, collected two more bunches of mint, which he inserted, piece by piece, into the concoction and added a little more cracked ice. Up to this time exactly eleven minutes had been consumed since the glasses were placed on the bar to receive the sugar and water, and the thirsty patrons thought the beverage was ready for them.

Mysterious Bottle Used.

But not yet. Going off to the opposite end of the bar, the courtly mint julep mixer returned with a little bottle the label of which he carefully concealed by covering it with his hand. Squirt, squirt, he put a dash of something into each glass, went away back to the shelf whence he got the bottle, placed it thereon, and returning, indicated by a nod of the head that the juleps were ready to be disposed of. Twelve minutes had now been occupied in the labor of love and not a word had been spoken by any of the three persons present at the performance.

The glasses were picked up, the gentleman from Providence and his friend rejected the straws placed handy by, each stuck his nose into the mint and proceeded to drink. As they did so they looked at each other with an expression that spoke volumes. The Providence man, after his friend had returned from the other end of the room where he had gone to pay the check, found the cockles of his heart opening up, and he said to the silent and courtly barkeeper, "My dear sir, that was the finest—I may say the only—mint julep I ever drank, and I have traveled far and wide."

"But may I ask," said the Providence man, with his most seductive smile, "what was the little dash of stuff that you added at the last moment? It must be that that was what gave this mint julep the insinuating flavor that will long last in my memory."

"Oh, that!" was the reply, accompanied by a slight facial movement, falsely indicating that the julep artist was about to open up. "Why, that, you must excuse me, sir, is my secret."

Parrot Cries "Fire," But Dies in Flames

Alarm Saves Occupants of House, but Firemen Are Unable to Rescue the Screaming Bird.

GRAND JUNCTION, COLO., July 5.—Although they were able to save their household goods, due to the warning of a pet parrot, the hero or heroine failed to escape in the fire which destroyed the home of F. E. Post.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Post were away from the house, working on the ranch, when they heard a cry of "Help, help! Fire, fire!" from the vicinity of their home. They started back to see smoke coming from all the windows, while the parrot was screaming at hte top of its voice.

As they arrived at the house the bird toppled over into the flames, and when Post rushed into the house he found Polly dead.

Opticians to Operate On Hogs Before Jury

Defendants to Use Porkers' Eyes to Disprove Plaintiff's Malpractice Charge.

COLUMBUS, OHIO July 5.—A novel means of illustration was employed in Judge Rogers' court in a case in which two Columbus eye specialists are defendants for $10,000 damages.

Operations are to be performed on eyes to illustrate the claim of defendants that there was no malpractice. Human optics are not to be used. Because the eyes of hogs are very much like those of men, several healthy porkers are to be robbed of their "lamps."

These will be put in masks just like human "mugs" and the jurors will know exactly what happened to the plaintiff when he was put under the knives of the defendants.

Postoffice Lost by Veterans to Boy, 25

Missouri Youth Is Youngest Yet Named by President—Gets Salary of $2,400.

TRENTON, MO., July 5.—Winning the distinction of being the youngest postmaster in Missouri and the youngest yet appointed by President Wilson, Wilbur E. Austin has assumed charge of the Trenton office at 25. It is a second-class office, with a salary of $2,400 per annum.

Austin was nominated by President Wilson over five opponents, all of whom have been prominent in party affairs in this section for years. He was backed by Colonel E. M. Harber, of Trenton, an uncle, who is a close friend of Congressman W. W. Rucker, and was recommended by the Congressman.

"I Love You," Signals Heiress in Court

Millionaire's Daughter Cheers Sweetheart Accused by Her Father as Dead Beat.

STEAMBOAT SPRINGS, COLO., July 5.—A jury in the District Court has failed to agree in the case of Robert King, an artist, who recently attempted to elope with the 17-year-old daughter of F. E. Milner, millionaire lumberman and hotel proprietor. King was charged with beating a bill at the hotel owned by his sweetheart's father.

Women crowded the court room during the trial. Miss Milner and her father occupied front seats. The girl smiled at King on the stand and signaled to him with her hands. She explained afterward that her signal was: "I love you." Her father had forbidden her to speak to King.

Leaps Across Area To Save Child Afire

Neighbor Sees Girl's Peril and Makes Dangerous Jump, Putting Out Flames With Coat.

NEW YORK, July 5.—William Morrissey, of 252 Nepperhan Avenue, Yonkers, by a daring leap yesterday saved Olive Edick, 7 years old, from burning to death. The child is terribly burned, but physicians in St. Joseph's Hospital say she will live.

The girl was playing with her younger brother, Russell, on the fourth floor of her home at 121 New Main Street. The boy accidentally set Olive's dress afire. She ran, screaming, to the fire escape.

Morrissey was on the fourth floor of the next block. There is a wide space between the two fire escapes. Seeing the child was doomed unless he acted, Morrissey jumped and landed beside the blazing youngster. Pulling off his coat, he quickly blanketed the flames.

PASTOR LIKES THE "MOVIES."

SOUTH BEND, IND., July 5.—The Rev. John Walton, pastor of the First Baptist Church, of Garrett, Ind., attributes the success which has attended his ministry to popular interest in moving pictures.

MASHER LASHED BY WOMAN HE HAD ANNOYED

Tired of His Notes and Unwarranted Attention, Confectioner's Wife Uses Horsewhip.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 5.—Mrs B. C. Osmun, the wife of a confectioner, residing at 54 Fair Avenue, pluckily took matters in her own hands and dealt summary justice to a masher who had been annoying her Friday afternoon. The masher, L. M. Cox, received a sound horsewhipping which Mrs. Osmun, administered to him in the street near her home.

According to Mrs. Osmun, Cox, who is about 60 years of age, has been continually annoying her by sending love notes, following her on the street and trying to induce her to leave her husband for him. She states that he has also been slandering her to the neighbors, and being unable to stand his annoyances any longer, she decided to put a definite stop to the proceedings.

When Cox attempted to speak to her on the street Friday afternoon, Mrs. Osmun produced the whip and proceeded to thrash him. Mrs. Osmun did not escape without injury, for she bears a large black and blue spot on her arm and a discolored right eye, which, she asserts, Cox gave her after he had taken her whip away.

Following the scene in the street Mrs. Osmun hurried to the police station and gave herself up in order to prevent Cox swearing out a warrant for her arrest. She was not held, however, and she proceeded to have a citation issued against Cox.

Children Start Fire Curling Doll's Hair

Father Is Severely Burned Trying to Extinguish Flames Caused by Play of Little Ones.

CHICAGO, July 5.—Harry Qinck, 410 Noble Street, was severely burned last night while attempting to extinguish a fire in his home started by two of his children, Della, 11 years old, and Harry, aged 5.

They were curling a doll's hair when a curtain caught fire and spread to the bed clothes.

Qinck, asleep in another part of the house, was awakened by the cries of the children. Firemen extinguished the flames.

WHAT ATLANTA MANUFACTURERS AND JOBBERS ARE DOING

MAKE PROGRAM OF INTEREST TO ALL RETAILERS

Topics of Practical Value to Dealers Are To Be Discussed at Convention.

PARLIAMENT TO BE FEATURE

Informal Discussions at Each Session Give Chance for Each Man to Air Views.

"Buying," "merchandising as a developer of character," "when to hold special sales"—these are three of the interesting topics to be discussed during the Southern Merchants' Convention, August 5-15, inclusive.

After hearing suggestions from retailers all over the Southeast, the program committee of the Atlanta Merchants and Manufacturers' Association completed its work, and Saturday announced the outline of the discussions which will be held the first four days of the meeting.

The committee says it had in mind a desire to bring up the most interesting topics possible, and also to give an opportunity to all those not on the list for formal discussion. Therefore, much of each day's session will be devoted to an "open parliament" in which everyone will have a chance to debate.

At the same time the entertainment features were announced. They include two theater parties, one August 5, and the other August 11; a reception August 7 at the Piedmont Driving Club; a barbecue August 13 and a ball game August 15.

In presenting its report, the program committee gives special thanks to J. W. Vaughn, of Cartersville, and R. O. Crouch, of Griffin, for assistance.

The program follows:

Tuesday—"How can merchants, landlords and bankers best direct their influence toward securing a greater diversity of crops?"

"The marketing of overplus of grain."

"Cattle and hogs as a by-product."

"The greater stability of credit resulting."

Thursday—"Merchandising both as a legitimate means of livelihood and as a developer of character and mental vigor."

"Buying."

"When and how to buy."

"Benefits of buying often and according to active needs."

"Keeping the money at home by giving preference to home manufacturers where all things are equal."

"Keeping up sales and keeping down accumulations of stock."

"Ascertained cost vs. estimated cost."

"Proper depreciation of hard stock at inventory period."

"Disposing of slow stock."

"Special sales—when and how to open them."

Friday: "Store Discipline and Management."

"Store help—how to select and train."

"How to create and keep up enthusiasm among the store force."

"Courtesy as a business asset."

"Proper accounting methods a prime factor in the success of a business."

"Credits and collections."

"Can a merchant afford to imperil his capital by failure properly to insure his stock?"

"From the bankers' standpoint."

"Could not betterments, such as are suggested by these discussions, be most readily brought about by local organizations of merchants' associations?"

Committees follow:

Committee on Program—Bolling H. Jones, chairman; H. E. Choate, R. O. Crouch, Griffin; C. W. McClure, E. G Thomas, J. W. Vaughn, Cartersville.

Permanent Exhibit Now Assured; Long Campaign Near Culmination

Speeches of Men Who Studied Possibilities of Plan Stir Their Hearers to Action.

"Atlanta citizens do not know what is made in their own city.

"Southern merchants who come to Atlanta do not know the extent of the city's manufactures.

"The nation in general never thinks of Atlanta as a manufacturing center.

"All this must be changed. There must be systematic exploitation of Atlanta's factories. The future growth and prosperity of the city depend on this factor more than on any other. One of the best means of educating the public to Atlanta's importance as a manufacturing center is to maintain a permanent exhibit of the goods made here."

With this message ringing in their ears, 100 Atlanta manufacturers, banqueting at the Hotel Ansley Thursday night, decided to undertake the establishment of a permanent display. Twenty-three manufacturers signed agreements to take space in the exhibit hall. More have signed since.

For the purpose of handling the exhibit a Fulton County manufacturers' association will be formed this week. The scope of this association is to be broad. It will endeavor to safeguard its members from ill-advised legislation. It will wrestle with transportation problems, welfare of labor and other questions of vital interest to manufacturers.

Four sites for the permanent exhibit are offered, each within five minutes' walk of Five Points. These are for lease, for sale, or lease with privilege of purchase. These offers will be acted upon within ten days.

Campaign Now On.

From this time forward a year of preparation will culminate in a whirlwind campaign of activity.

Forceful, indeed, were the informal talks made at the banquet. The men behind the project have spent a long time in study of its possibilities. They are very much in earnest. They truly believe that nothing so important for the development of Atlanta has been launched in many years. This enthusiasm, restrained for so long, found vent when they rose to make the speeches which should "get action." If they failed to convince their hearers, all their work was wasted. They knew it—and they did not fail.

"One of the big things such a permanent display does is educate the children," said Brooks Morgan. "In Cleveland it is regarded as a valuable supplement to the work of the schools in teaching the children economic and industrial subjects. What this means in dollars and cents to the exhibitors to have the future buying public in Cleveland fully awake to the variety and merits of homemade goods, you can see for yourselves.

City Needs Manufacturing.

"There is a limit to Atlanta's growth as a jobbing and distributing center. Almost every great concern in the United States has representatives here. Atlanta already supplies its territory well, and some territory which belongs to its neighbors. There is a limit to this development, I say, and the maintenance of real estate values, the growth in population of the city, its prosperity, depend absolutely upon the development of our manufactories. We have 600 factories now. I doubt if we need more. What we need is to make these 600, each and every one, big, strong concerns.

"I do not know of a company which will benefit less than mine from an exhibit. My interest is not selfish. I sincerely believe this is necessary for Atlanta.

"Our idea is to have exhibits, as many and as attractive as possible, grouped effectively under one roof. A manager should be in charge. Let him show visitors through. If a visitor manifests interest in one line, or several, let him telephone at once to the manufacturers of these lines to send a salesman. I believe, too, that manufacturers in the outskirts of the city will find it profitable to use the exhibit building for their downtown office. This is done elsewhere with profit.

"Atlanta should have four times the payroll it now has. This is the way to go about it."

Evansville's Experience.

Bolling H. Jones told of the experience of 32 furniture manufacturers in Evansville, Ind., who put up a building and displayed their lines in it, keeping the ground floor for their offices. They find it easier to get prospective customers to look at their wares, and also find the selling cost cut to 3 per cent.

"That convinced me," said Mr. Jones. "Did any manufacturer here ever sell goods for 3 per cent merchandising cost? This argument alone seems to me unanswerable."

He spoke of the changes which have come about in the Southern field within five years. No longer is it possible to sell a merchant a full carload of one line. Therefore, he argued, the exhibit will be valuable in getting buyers to make up mixed carloads of Atlanta-made goods. Other cities, rivals of Atlanta, are doing this, he said, and Atlanta must, to keep what it has, to say nothing of expanding.

"Advertising no longer is a matter of buying a few inches of newspaper space, asserting through this space that 'John Smith makes good beds'," said C. S. Dobs. "Advertising is the science of creating a demand. Publicity is the cheapest known method of selling goods. It may be newspaper publicity; it may be billboards; it may be an exhibit of the kind you are considering. It may better be all three.

Like Shop Windows.

"I believe this exhibit will have the same effect as the Whitehall Street windows. A man comes downtown to buy a pair of shoes. As he walks along the street, he sees hats, neckwear and walking sticks displayed. These remind him that he needs such articles. The result is that he buys more than the shoes he set out after."

Forrest Adair has a "punch" when he talks.

"I am selling a home below the Fort to a family which consists of father, mother and seven girls. The father is a wagon-maker. The seven girls are employed in seven different factories in Atlanta. Wouldn't you rather buy the things these girls help make than some product of a New England sweat shop?

"Yet I talked to a bank director to-day who did not know that car wheels are made in Atlanta, and who thought that the famed Atlanta shoes really were made in Boston and sent here to be sold under the local label.

Interests Here Diverse.

"When the bottom falls out of the iron market, Birmingham and Pittsburg hang crape on the doors, and send flowers to each other. Do we care? We do not. Two or three of our plants suffer, but the hundreds of others go on, and business in the aggregate shows little contraction.

"As a man who earns his very bread from the growth of Atlanta, and who owes more of that bread to you manufacturers than to any other class, I want to make it as emphatic as I can that you must build up Atlanta's factories if you wish to see her continue to grow."

WORDS WHICH STIRRED ENTHUSIASM FOR SHOW

"All the machinery, all the enthusiasm, and all the push of the Chamber of Commerce will be behind the launching of the permanent exhibit."—Wilmer L. Moore, President of the Chamber of Commerce.

"I firmly believe a permanent exhibit will bring to Atlanta more merchants and more business than all the other things we have done put together."—Brooks Morgan, Chairman of the Exhibit Committee.

"Five years ago, you could sell solid carloads of one line to Macon and Augusta. You can not do it now. This plan will enable you to make up mixed carloads. Other cities are doing it. Atlanta must, not only to get more, but even to hold what she has."—Bolling H. Jones.

"The man who makes good products and doesn't advertise is like the man who winks at a girl in the dark. He knows it, but she doesn't, and it doesn't get him anywhere."—C. S. Dobbs.

"Agitation about the smoke nuisance makes me tired. I wish to goodness some one would turn 500 more smokestacks loose on us. I'll warrant there's not a man in town who could write a list of seventy-five of the hundreds of articles made in Atlanta."—Forrest Adir.

Atlanta's Future Absolutely Dependent on Building Up Factories, Experts Declare.

Rome, Ga., Exhibitors Sign Up for Space

Rome, Ga., is crowing over the fact that it made definite plans for a permanent exhibit before Atlanta.

Twelve manufacturers already have signed contracts for space, and nine more are about to do so. It is expected that 4,000 feet of floor space will be used.

Arrangements have been made for a building, and the exhibit will be ready within two months, Louis Spencer, managing director, says.

Included among the exhibitors are a stove works, a machine factory, a foundry, a furniture factory, a trunk factory and a spring bed factory. Some of these lines are duplicated.

ATLANTA GIRLS BUY MILLINERY MADE AT HOME

Half the Hats Seen on Peachtree Street Are Made Here, but the Fact Is Unheralded.

Half the women's hats seen on Peachtree Street are made right in Atlanta.

The fair Peachtree promenaders don't know it; the milliners they patronize don't know it; in many cases the jobbers themselves don't know it.

There are three factories in Atlanta making women's hats, of straw, felt, plush, hemp and the myriad other materials which go to bedeck milady's coiffure and frame her pretty face.

But as soon as the hat leaves these factories the manufacturers lose their identity. The hat is marked with the jobber's label. It may be marked New York, Philadelphia, New Orleans or even London. The fact that it is made in Atlanta is nowhere to be discovered.

One manufacturer tells, with a grin, of Atlanta milliners who "stocked up" in New York—with Atlanta-made hats.

Altogether, it is an interesting business.

The American Hat Manufacturing Company, one of the largest of the three Atlanta factories, imports straws direct from China, Japan, Italy and Germany. These straws are plaited abroad, and either are dyed there or bleached and dyed in Camden, N. J.

Japan sends hemp braid. Italy furnishes the milans, leghorns and tuscans. Germany furnishes a peculiar material known as Neapolitan braid, which, though few know it, is made from American cotton. China furnishes coarse straws.

So much for the straws. The felt bodies come from abroad, in the rough—queer, looking toadstools of various shades. Silks, ribbons, velvets, plushes and ornaments are carried in quantity enough to stock a dry goods store of large proportions.

Just now the factories are busy with the hats to be worn this fall and winter, and with misses' and children's hats for spring, 1914.

Sample rooms already are filled with fall and spring lines, dazzling arrays of colors, and seemingly in almost every shape, but with smaller hats predominating.

The making of a hat may be said to begin in the room where a skilled workman makes plaster molds accurately defining the shapes. From these plaster affairs, metal dies are made. These dies are put in the presses and heated by gas flames. The rough shapes, either felt, velvet, straw or hemp, are stamped with these hot dies and held in them until dry. When removed the heat has baked the sticky "sizing" until the shapes are firm.

From the presses the velvet and plush hats go to a workman who steams them and brushes up the nap to its original beauty.

The straw shapes are made in the factory. Ingeniously designed sewing machines, manipulated by skillful girls, sew the braid round and round, until a tiny knot grows into a gigantic hat. In the straw season 150 girls are busy at these machines.

Englishman's Criticism of American Stores Answered

Selfridge's Manager Unjustified in Saying Customers Wait Too Long for Parcels.

A. E. Cowper, one of the important men in the organization of Selfridge & Co., which in turn has, perhaps, the most important department store in London, recently made a visit to the United States. He spent most of his time, of course, in looking over American department stores, and before he departed for England freed himself of some criticism.

"One thing which struck me was the time it takes to complete a purchase and get your goods wrapped and delivered," he said.

"At home we have no bundle wrappers; the clerks wrap the packages, and we find it saves time and mistakes. When a customer has made a purchase and the goods are shipped by carrier or messenger to a distant cash-and-bundle desk, every second she has to wait is magnified to a minute, whereas if the goods are wrapped by the clerk, the customer is getting the full attention of that salesperson, and if a minute or two should be lost, she is seeing the action all the time, and does not feel that she has been lost sight of. In Selfridge's we use cash registers, and we find them great savers of time."

Atlanta merchandise experts do not agree with the English student of store service.

Mr. Cowper, in the opinion of various Atlantans approached on the subject, magnifies the importance of the transactions where the purchases actually are taken away by the buyer.

They remark that while it may be the custom in London for shoppers to carry home their purchases, nine out of ten customers in Atlanta demand delivery by wagon.

At any rate, they say, there is very little delay, and it is much better to free the salespeople from the duty of wrapping packages.

Managers of Atlanta department stores made tests at random to demonstrate that it takes on an average 30 seconds for the delivery of a package and the making of change.

Lucian York, manager of Rich's, says:

"We have a system which we believe is the best yet devised from the viewpoint of the customer, and Selfridge's certainly have nothing to compare with it. We use an 'identification coin.'

Departs at Once.

"Most of our charge customers have their parcels delivered. After the transaction is made the customer merely gives her name and address to the salesperson, shows her identification coin, and departs at once. Even when the customer takes the parcel with her, the wrapper in the stand has it ready in a jiffy. Time records to gauge our wrappers show that on an average they use less than a minute.

"The delivery of packages, after all, is simply a minor matter. What our American people want broadly is service—the right merchandise at the right time at the right price. In English stores customers still are importuned to buy; in fact, in many of the stores it is almost impossible to leave without buying. Fancy such a condition here!

"Again, here we make every effort to get what the customer wants. We anticipate the styles, bring on new models and patterns.

"When the customer purchases these goods she buys them at our risk—if they are not pleasing to her when she gets them home she is at liberty to return them. Here the customer is always right—in England, from what I understand, she is more at the mercy of the storekeeper."

Thousand Lined Up To Get Into Store

Furniture House Devises Attractive Scheme to Induce Public to Notice Low Prices.

Even in busy Atlanta, it is seldom enough that a thousand people are lined up waiting to get into a store when the doors are thrown open. This was the record established by Sterchi Bros. & Barnes, Mitchell Street, near Whitehall, Thursday morning.

The attraction was an unusual sale of furniture, coupled with a prize offer. Tags were widely distributed among the friends of the store. Each of these tags was numbered, and 100 of the numbers corresponded with the numbers on tags borne by articles in the store. When any visitor matched his tag with any tag in the store, he was privileged to claim the article, without being obligated to purchase anything.

The plan drew a big crowd, and, better, it attracted attention to some very low prices, and resulted in good sales.

TAFFETA RIBBONS SCARCE.

A scarcity of taffeta ribbons in stock colorings is reported. Pinks, blues and whites are especially hard to get.

Silk Dyers Strike; Feathers Face Bar; Flowers in Favor

Milliners Think That for Once They Can Predict Styles for Fall Well in Advance.

Flowers will be popular on women's hats for fall and winter wear.

In July this is a dangerous prediction. Circumstances, however, make it fairly safe prophecy, in the opinion of C. B. Palmer, of M. Kutz Co., wholesale milliners.

Dame Fashion might take a notion to dictate ribbons. But the silk dyers' strikes in Paterson, N. J., have caused an increase of 20 per cent in the cost of ribbons, and even at these advanced prices, deliveries can not be made. At best, goods can not be promised before August 15 or September 1, and even if the mills reopen, they are likely to be overwhelmed with the orders which have been accumulating.

Feathers, again, might have been Fashion's favorites. But right now there is trouble in Congress over the importation of feathers. The milliners and the Audubon Society are in the throes of a bitter struggle which will decide whether feathers will be admitted at all under the new tariff.

Remain only fur and flowers. For three seasons, velvet and silk flowers have been increasing in popularity on fall and winter hats, and, with the scarcity of other materials, are likely to take the ascendency this fall.

Small hats will rule—that is, smaller than those which have been worn for the past few seasons. Crowns will be round, with turned-up brims, according to Mr. Palmer. What will be the favorite colors, besides the staple blues, browns and black, no one will know until September 1.

The Kutz Co. salesmen started out last Monday to cover the Southern States for fall business.

MORE BUYERS THAN PEACHES.

NEW YORK, July 5.—Buyers returning here from Georgia say that it is generally estimated the peach crop of Georgia will run about 1,500 cars. According to the railroad men, they do not expect to move over 75 cars a day out of the State at the flush of the season. There are a great many buyers at Fort Valley. Fully 95 per cent of the peaches are being sold on track—in fact, there are more buyers than there are peaches.

PONY CONTEST REACHES HOTTEST STAGE AS BONUS CLUB OFFER IS CLOSED

GOOD FOR 1,000 VOTES.

Only One Nomination Blank Can be Voted for Any Contestant.

Candidates Work Until Last Hour to Take Advantage of Proposition. Close Race Gives Every Youngster Entered Chance for a Shetland.

It is a weary office force in the contest department of The Georgian and Sunday American.

Until midnight Saturday, the manager and his assistants toiled, receiving votes for the many boys and girls who made strenuous effort to take full advantage of the bonus offer which closed as Sunday was ushered in.

Generous offers of extra votes were made for clubs of five subscriptions, either yearly, half-yearly or quarterly, and either for the daily alone, the Sunday paper alone, or both in combination.

The contest manager gave his personal guarantee that no offer as generous would be made from then on to the end of the contest. Naturally, there was every inducement for the contestants to work their hardest. The result was gratifying, both to the contestants and to the newspapers.

Hundreds of Subscriptions Come.

Literally hundreds of subscriptions were turned in. Now comes the work of tabulating them, and grouping each contestant's returns into clubs of five. This will take several days of hard work, while the regular routine of the office must proceed uninterrupted. Possibly it may be next Sunday before the bonuses will be fully credited. But credited they will be, and accurately.

Nearly all the contestants took a "day off" July 4, and were the guests of The Georgian and American at Grant Park. At 10 o'clock Friday morning the parade left the offices of the newspapers in Alabama Street. There were nine of the 22 ponies in line, all gaily bedecked with flags. The contestants drove them, and it is safe to say that every boy and girl who handled the reins made a firmer resolve to earn permanent possession of one of the ponies as a result of this treat.

The ponies looked their best and were the subject of admiring comment all along the route.

"I know something about horses and ponies," remarked Darwin G. Jones, manager of the Atlanta Clearing House, who made a special trip to see the parade. "I want to remark that it would be impossible to find fine others as good in all Atlanta. They're fine little animals, among the best I ever saw."

More Special Inducements.

While the great bonus offer for clubs of five subscriptions has been withdrawn, it is probable that there will be early announcement of other special inducements to contestants.

With the end of the contest 25 days away, no one is to be allowed to loaf. The pace from now on will be the hottest yet made. From five to ten contestants in every district are running within a few votes of each other. And even the hindmost still has a chance to pass the leaders. It is anyone's race as yet in every district.

Perhaps never before was there as close a contest in Atlanta newspaperdom, which is natural, since certainly never before were as valuable prizes given.

Any boy or girl who wins one of the ponies The Georgian and American are giving away may well be proud of the acquisition. And anyone who assists the contestants by subscribing to The Georgian or American will be satisfied at getting the full value of his money.

'Seven-Day Bride' Is Given Divorce

Husband Procured Licenses to Marry Two Women on Her Wedding Day.

LOS ANGELES, July 5.—The seven inharmonious days of married life from which Mrs. Pansy Biggs Caples culled testimony which gave her a divorce from William J. Caples in El Paso yesterday prove, according to Mrs. Caples, that there is luck in odd numbers.

Mrs. Caples contended in her charges against her husband, said to be a millionaire and son of a former Mayor of El Paso, that on the seventh day of their married life her husband beat her. Charging extreme cruelty, she did not ask for alimony nor for the restoration of her maiden name. Mrs. Caples said in El Paso yesterday she will return to the stage.

The matrimonial affairs of several members of the Caples family have been more or less spectacular, it is recorded in El Paso, and William Caples startled his wealthy friends on his wedding day by obtaining two separate licenses to marry two different women.

WENT TO SELL REALTY, BUT MARRIED THE RICH WIDOW

MEDFORD, OREG., July 5.—Dr. W. H. Everhard, a prominent business man, secured a tip last Saturday that Mrs. L. M. Markin, of Los Angeles, an attractive and wealthy widow, was interested in real estate in the Rogue River Valley.

Instead of selling the widow a portion of his extensive holdings, the doctor was so charmed by his prospective client's beauty that he promptly made her his partner for life via the matrimonial route.

BROWN WILL CONTINUE AS A 'LIVE WIRE' IN POLITICS

Former Governor, as Private Citizen, Intends to Wage Campaign to Decide Supreme Authority in Georgia, and Will Push Issue.

Fact That He Proposes Keeping in Touch With State's Affairs Leads to Report That He Will Oppose Hoke Smith for Senate.

That Joseph M. Brown intends keeping very much in touch with the trend of events in Georgia, that he proposes to remain a very "live wire" in politics, and that he proposes to thrash to a final adjustment his view on law enforcement and the labor unions, at least in so far as he may, is abundantly evidenced in sa remarkable interview he furnished to The Sunday American yesterday.

It is very well known that many of Governor Brown's friends and partisans are urging him to enter the race for the United States Senate against Senator Hoke Smith, whose term of office expires within less than two years, and who will have to enter a campaign for re-election within the next twelve months.

To a Sunday American reporter Saturday the former Governor gave the following interview:

By JOSEPH M. BROWN.

I am going to stay at home for a few days and then I shall run up to my farm in Cherokee County, where I will be for the next week or two.

The duties of the executive office for more than a year past have forced me to neglect almost entirely my personal affairs; hence I must give primary attention to them for some time to come.

Later I expect to make an examination of the status which involves the State's relationship to the labor union. If there is a divided sovereignty of this relationship all the people are entitled to know it so that they can shape their course accordingly and choose to which they will yield allegiance.

If there is but one sovereignty that fact should be made so plain that no man and no organization of men should be betrayed into acts of attempted usurpation of that sovereignty.

Unions Have Made Issue.

In my retiring message to the General Assembly I stated that the labor union had made the issue as to whether or not its union label carried more authority in Georgia than does Georgia's great seal of State.

A mere statement of the official records of these two sources of authority necessarily confirms my declaration, viz: Some time before the year 1840 the State granted a charter to the Georgia Railroad and Banking Company, wherein she placed upon that company and upon future owners of that railroad the duties of a common carrier. She imposed upon the owners of that charter the obligation to operate trains for the conduct of the commerce of the public and of its power to travel. As the proof of her sovereign authority to grant that charter and to force obedience to its conditions she placed upon it her Great Seal of State.

In 1907 she specifically and positively made it the duty of the Railroad Commission to "order and compel" the operation of such train service as the needs of the public required.

In 1909 and again in 1912 the labor union ordered the trainmen on the Georgia Railroad to ignore the State's mandate and instead to prevent the running of the trains, which it knew would result in great inconvenience and loss to the public. On that order it placed its union label.

This made the issue between the union label and Georgia's great seal of State square and plain. No sophistry can obscure it; no vituperative personal abuse can wipe it out.

Exactly the same issue was

Greatest 'Merchant Princess' Will Wed

Mrs. Charles Netcher and Solomon Neuberger, of Chicago, Get Marriage License in Oregon.

PORTLAND, OREG., July 5.—Mrs. Charles Netcher, proprietor of the Boston store in Chicago, and Solomon Neuberger, a business man of the same city, living at 5134 Indiana Avenue, obtained a marriage license here to-day. Both are stopping at the Multnomah Hotel, the clerk of which says he is informed the marriage quickly followed the taking out of the license, but no one could be found who had actually witnessed the ceremony or professed to know when it occurred.

Mrs. Netcher is declared to be the only woman at the actual head of a great department store, and is certainly America's foremost "Merchant Princess." She carries a tremendous amount of life insurance, probably more than any woman in the world.

Miss Terry had been twice married before. Her first husband was George Frederick Watts, the painter, whom she married when she was very young. In 1868 she was married to Charles Wardell, an actor, who died some years ago.

Bolt Crashes Through Spire of Euclid Avenue Church and Wrecks Oil King's Seat of Worship.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, July 5.—John D. Rockefeller will have to build a new pew before he can enjoy his wonted comfort in church on Sundays. A bolt of lightning struck the spire of the Euclid Avenue Baptist Church, ripped its way through the roof and demolished John D.'s pew.

Several other pews in the vicinity were wrecked, but the big ball of fire did no further damage. The lightning flash failed to start a fire. No one was in the church at the time it was struck.

Mrs. Butt alleges her husband has been too fond of Miss Eleanor Churchill. Butt is a cousin of Major Archibald Butt, military aide of President Taft, who perished on the Titanic.

COURT FIGHT TO THOROUGHLY AIR MACON SCANDAL

Vindication of Accused Leaders by First Christian Church Takes Place To-day.

SLANDER SUITS TO FOLLOW

Choir Leader and Ladies' Aid Secretary Plan to Demand Legal Redress.

MACON, July 5.—Society and church folk here are anticipating not only one of the sharpest legal fights in the history of Macon courts, but the airing of sensational charges involving the local churches in general as the aftermath of the First Christian Church scandal, in which Professor Frank M. Charlton, the popular choir leader, and Mrs. Effie L. Lester, the secretary of the Ladies' Aid Society, are involved.

The accused parties, upon the recommendation of the elders' committee, which has conducted the investigation, Sunday morning will be exonerated of all charges by the congregation. Public expressions of confidence in the accused parties will be added, it is said, and a complete vindication of persons and church declared.

Instead of culminating, this will really mark the beginning of the controversy, however, for almost immediately the accused and the accusers and their friends will array themselves for a legal fight which bids fair to furnish "live copy" for the newspapers for months to come. Counsel has already been retained by both sides, the Lesters having engaged the services of Attorney Claud Estes to conduct their suit for slander, while Attorney Julian Urquhart has been selected by Mrs. Jenkins to defend her in the courts, in anticipation of libel and slander suits. Professor Charlton also, it is said, will be represented by able counsel of Macon.

Real Sensation to Come.

The real sensation of the entire affair, it is said, will be produced by Mrs. Lester, the accused church leader, who declares that the charges of her neighbor, Mrs. Jenkins, were instigated by a spirit of church jealousy which has cropped out at intervals and at various sources since the First Christian Church began its period of marvelous prosperity.

"My accusers," declared Mrs. Lester, "have been jealous for a long time of the prosperity which has attended our church. They have looked enviously upon the increase in our membership, which has been marvelous, and they have begrudged us the services of Professor Charlton, our choir leader, who sings in our church every Sunday morning and evening. These are the primary reasons these people and others in this neighborhood have singled me out for many months; have watched every move I have made almost, as well as that of Professor Charlton, who has been a friendly visitor with his wife at our little home. I can ascribe no other reason for these slanderous charges, unless it is just gossip. I have been made the unhappy victim of a plot to besmirch my character.

"Of course, I want vindication; I shall have that, by all means, and I suppose publicity can do no harm, unless to my mother and sister, who will feel it terribly. My name, however, will never be the same, even though I am cleared of these charges."

Lester Defends Wife.

Mr. Lester, who has defended his wife from the start, upholds her in the claim that church jealousy has figured prominently in the charges which have been preferred. Mr. Lester was formerly a member of Mulberry Street Methodist Church, where Professor Charlton led the music prior to his connection with the First Christian Church.

The stated determination of Rev. Mr. Anderson, pastor, and Lenoir Erwin, elder and member of the investigating committee of the First Christian Church, to clear the name of the church, either by ousting the accused parties if guilty, or vindicating them if not guilty, is said to be further indication of the prominent part which the churches will play in the coming trial in the courts.

Both Mr. Anderson and Mr. Irwin declared emphatically to the reporter that the name of the church must be preserved by an open and unbiased investigation of the entire matter. If the parties are guilty, they declared, then they must be dealt with accordingly, but if they are not guilty of the charges then they must be vindicated and the church which holds their membership vindicated also in open meeting.

Never have the church people of

Wearing of Belts to Cut Cost of Living

Custom of Tramps of Tightening Girths When Hungry Leads to Theory of Scientist.

CHICAGO, July 5.—If everyone wears a belt, will it reduce the high cost of living?

According to one of the latest scientific theories advanced by an eminent specialist, this is exactly what a belt will do—not by a direct reduction of the cost of foodstuffs, but by a reduction of the human craving for food.

No less an authority than Dr. Randolph Lennhoff, according to reports made to The Vossische Zeitung, has discovered that the wearing of a belt reduces the human appetite for food.

According to the report of Dr. Lennhoff, his investigations were based on his knowledge of the "knights of trampdom," who, when hungry and far from food, tighten their belts to allay the inner craving.

American Refuses to Drink Kaiser's Beer

Armour Tells Emperor He Saves Thousand a Year by Being a Total Abstainer.

Special Cable to The American.

BERLIN, July 5.—The Kiel correspondent of The National Zeitung says Allison V. Armour took the late J. Pierpont Morgan's place as the Kaiser's chief guest at the annual Kiel regatta week beer evening at the little Bordy tavern.

The neighbors of Mr. Armour were surprised to see that he did not smoke and that he drank only a glass of lemonade. In reply to a question he said: "I am a teetotaler, and I will tell you why. By not smoking and by refraining from the use of malt or spirituous liquors I save a thousand dollars every year, so you see it is well worth while to be a total abstainer."

100,000 Trainmen Vote to Walk Out

Flaw in Erdman Arbitration Act Threatens to Tie Up Eastern Railroad System.

NEW YORK, July 5.—According to advices received by the conference committee of managers the 100,000 conductors and trainmen on all the Eastern railroads have voted overwhelmingly to strike if called out by their leaders.

This radical step has been taken in face of the increase of $30,000,000 a year in wages given in 1910.

The conductors and trainmen have offered to arbitrate under the Erdman act, but President Lee of the trainmen's organization has been told unofficially by the railroad managers that they will not accept the Erdman act, which is admittedly faulty. Lee expects to force the railroads to accept Erdman act arbitration by threatening to tie up the railroads in the Eastern territory.

Pair Gets License To Wed Third Time

Couple Has Been Married Twice and Parted Twice and Married Some More in Mean Time.

LA CROSSE, WIS., July 5.—Wedded twice and parted by the divorce court, John Inman, aged 39, and Anna Eggen, 35, to-day obtained a license to wed each other for the third time. After their second matrimonial venture both parties married again and both obtained a divorce. After waiting the required length of time the couple came here from Minneapolis to marry.

Wedlock Shown as Incentive to Suicide

Reports Declare Bachelors Lead in Every Crime Save in Ending Their Own Lives.

NEW YORK, July 5.—Unmarried men are more often criminals than married men, according to the figures in a report of the work of the District Attorney's office. The same is shown in regard to women prisoners.

While the percentage of unmarried criminals is high in practically every sort of crime, the report shows that suicide is an exception.

Three times as many married men attempted suicide and were tried for it in 1912 as unmarried.

Lady Sackville, at Trial, Near Collapse

Verdict Expected Monday in Famous Will Contest—Five Million Dollars Involved.

pecial Cable to The American.

LONDON, July 5.—Lady Sackville, whose bequest of $5,000,000 from the late Sir John Murray Scott resulted in a suit by Sir John's relatives in an effort to break the will, is threatened to-day with a nervous collapse as the result of her ordeal on the witness stand. Both Lady Sackville and Lord Sackville testified Friday.

A verdict is expected in the case Monday.

CAR OFFICIALS HELD TO COURT IN BIRMINGHAM

President, Superintendent and Three Employees Must Face Grand Jury for Kidnaping.

UNION MEN PUSHING CASES

Alleged Dynamiter Arrested as Result of the Street Railway Strike Disturbance.

BIRMINGHAM, July 5.—A. H. Ford, president; George H. Harris, superintendent of transportation, and three other employees of the Birmingham Railway, Light and Power Company were to-day bound over to the Grand Jury under bonds of $300 each on charges growing out of the alleged kidnaping about three weeks ago of William F. Welch, vice president and national organizer of the Amalgamated Association of Electric and Street Railway Employees. The defendants waived the preliminary hearing before Judge Abernethy, of the Court of Common Pleas, and made bond readily.

A warrant was sworn out to-day against E. T. Stanfield, charging him with placing dynamite on the tracks during the street car strike. Bond was fixed at $1,000, which has not been made.

The latest developments growing out of the street car strike, caused a sensation in Birmingham, as the waiving of preliminary hearing by the high officials of the street car company was entirely unexpected. Further sensations are promised when the Grand Jury begins its probe within the next few weeks.

Deportation Caused Arrests.

The arrest of President Ford, Superintendent Harris, who has been connected with the street car company for more than fifteen years, and others was the direct result of the alleged deportation of National Organizer Welch, who came to Birmingham about four weeks ago, when the street car strike was threatened. Mr. Welch, it is alleged, was visited at his hotel by a delegation of car men, including some street car officials, and advised to leave the city. The union organizer took the hint, it is said, and was forthwith escorted to the railroad station, where he boarded a train for parts unknown.

When the alleged deportation was noised abroad, local union leaders and their lawyers raised a protest that eventually was carried to the City Commission, which called a conference on the matter. In the course of the conference, which was quite heated at times, President Ford admitted, it is alleged, that while he had no hand in the actual deportation of Welch, it was done with his knowledge and for what he though the best interests of the community. Immediately following this statement, the union attorneys demanded the arrest of Mr. Ford on the charge of conspiracy. Commissioner Lane heeded the request and had Chief Bodeker arrest Mr. Ford on the charge of disorderly conduct.

Union Leaders Push Cases.

The case was set to be tried in the Recorder's Court, but here it was nol prossed by the union leaders, who proceeded to swear out warrants for the arrest of Mr. Ford and Superintendent Harris and other minor officials of the company to be tried before Judge Abernethy, of the Court of Common Pleas. It is this court, in which the defendants have waived preliminary hearing, pending the action of the Grand Jury. Should Mr. Ford and the other defendants be convicted they are liable to a jail sentence of two years, lawyers say.

Although dynamiting and missile throwing were indulged in quite freely when the strike was at its height, only one arrest, that of E. T. Stanfield, has been made. Stanfield, a carpenter, is charged with placing dynamite under an East Lake car more than a week ago. He denies the accusation.

The strike is believed to be practically over, as no recent disorder has been reported and all the special deputies have been withdrawn from the service. Union men claim, however, they are still in the fight and not absolutely beaten.

Little Topeka Girl Will Visit Principal Cities of Country and Will Be Given Trip to Paris.

TOPEKA, KANS., July 5.—Atlanta will see the nation's most beautiful child, so proclaimed by photographers of the United States at practically all their exhibits, when 6-year-old Theresa Marie Blitz reaches the Georgia capital on her tour of the United States, which will later extend to Paris. She leaves her Topeka home to-day and will return in time to celebrate her seventh birthday.

Little Miss Blitz was declared to possess the most perfect features and figure of any child in the country by the Boston Art League. She won the distinction in a contest with 2,000 others from all States of the nation.

The elements which decided the art league in her case were: "Soft, wavy, dark-brown hair; big, wistful, wishful blue eyes, with the memory of dreams lurking in them: delicately molded lips and white transparent skin, with a touch of pink showing through."

She is not yet seven. Her weight is 55 pounds. Standing in her slippers she is 51 inches in height. A tape line drawn around her arm at the armpit over one thickness of light summer wear registers 9 inches. Wrist, 5 1-2 inches; thigh, 16 inches; calf, 10 inches; ankle, 7 inches.

After her tour of the big cities of this country and a visit to Paris she will return in time to celebrate her seventh birthday, November 18. Theresa has great love for flowers and music and bird life. She knows many flowers by name.

Little Theresa's mother died when the child was eight months old. She was a beautiful woman and possessed all the charms and graces so fully reflected in the figures and features of the daughter.

Theresa will spend two weeks each in Kansas City, St. Louis, Chicago, Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Atlanta and Norfolk. The trip to Paris will be made in five weeks. In New York and Philadelphia oil paintings will be made of her.

Wellesley Students Honor Julia Marlowe

Famous Actress One of Four Honorary Members of Shakespeare Society of Great Girls' College.

NEW YORK, July 5.—Julia Marlowe received word yesterday that at a meeting of the alumnae and active members of the Shakespeare Society of Wellesley College she had been elected an honorary member.

In a letter informing her of this honor, recognition of her devotion to Shakespeare and her histrionic ability, Miss Helen Troy, the president of the society, wrote to Miss Marlowe: "Not upon you but upon ourselves do we confer the honor in welcoming you to the 'Gentle Companie.'"

The importance of the honor conferred upon Miss Marlowe may be understood when it is known that up to her election as honorary member of the Shakespeare Society of Wellesley, the society had bestowed this compliment upon but three persons: Dr. Durant, the founder of Wellesley; Henry N. Hudson, the Shakespearean critic, and Horace Howard Furness, the author of the Variorum Shakespeare.

HOUSE BALKS AT ORDERING INQUIRY INTO LOBBY MAZE

Adjourns Without Acting on Resolution for Special Body to Sift Mulhall Charges That Manufacturers Controlled Congressmen.

Scope of Investigation Widened to Permit Scrutiny of Activities of Anti-Saloon, Equal Suffrage, Medical and Other Organizations

Kahn, of California, Voices Demand That Certain Acts of Executive Branch Be Exploited. Refers to White Slave Case.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—The machinery of the House to-day was set in motion for an investigation of the Mulhall charges when the Rules Committee decided to report a resolution providing for the naming of a committee of seven by the Speaker. This committee will inquire into all the Mulhall charges affecting members of Congress and also determine if in the present Congress or previous Congresses lobbyists of the National Association of Manufacturers "did in fact reach or influence" any officer or employee of the House.

The committee also is to look into the efforts of the National Association of Manufacturers to defeat any candidates for the House.

Will See if Lobby Remains.

Another object of the committee is to inquire whether improper influence has been exerted by the National Association of Manufacturers or any other bodies in the selection of committees, and find out if the association now maintains a lobby in Washington and how effective it is.

The special committee is empowered to employ all necessary legal and clerical assistance. Expenses are to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Following a point of no quorum raised by Republican Leader Mann, who insisted that consideration of the lobby inquiry resolution go over until next week, the House adjourned at 3:45 o'clock until noon Wednesday without taking final action on the resolution.

Levy Registers Protest.

When Chairman Henry called up the lobby resolution in the House, Representative Jefferson Levy, of New York, shouted:

"I make a point of order that there is no quorum. I want to oppose this resolution."

An agreement finally was reached for an hour's debate.

Representative Levy declared that he was opposed to the House undertaking further probes of any character. The Money Trust and Steel Trust investigations, he said, had caused only financial unrest throughout the country.

House Hears in Silence.

"I am opposed to taking any notice of these malicious attacks upon members of Congress," said Levy. "We have confidence in these members and we ought to show that confidence by voting against any resolution for an investigation of these ridiculous charges."

The House received Mr. Levy's suggestions in silence.

Representative Kelly, of Pennsylvania, a Progressive, urged the investigation, declaring that the cause of the social and business unrest in the country to-day is the belief that the interests are attempting to shape legislation.

Kahn Includes Wilson.

Representative Kahn of California referred to the Diggs-Caminetti white slave cases during his speech in support of the lobby investigation. He said that not only should there be a lobby investigation, but certain acts of the executive branch of the Government might be looked into.

"A remarkable situation was presented here the other day," he said, "when the majority tried to stifle debate on a proposition that there should be a thorough exploitation of the Caminetti-Diggs white slave matter.

"Ostrich Ruse Useless."

"You can not avoid laying bare these matters, and it is useless for you to stick your heads in the sand like ostriches and make believe that the people of the country can not see what you are doing.

"I am thoroughly in favor of investigation of these Mulhall charges, for this man man Mulhall, whom no one seems to know, has sent the impression abroad that he actually controlled legislation in this House."

Victor Murdock, Progressive leader, declared committees have been manipulated and he urged this be thoroughly investigated.

"It is my experience," said Republican Leader Mann, "that members of this House have not been influenced by lobbyists as much as by fear of what may happen to them in their districts.

Mann Scoffs at Lobby.

"When the oleomargarine bill was before the House, many members confessed privately that they had one opinion on the bill, but that they would vote the other way.

"The only fault I have had to find is that members have not had the courage of their convictions. When the pure food bill was before Congress, there was lots of talk about lobbyists, but they never came to me, and I was in charge of that legislation."

Representative Murray of Oklahoma favored the resolution and Representative Neeley of Kansas criticised the Senate Lobby Committee for allowing witness to "fill them up with wind."

Other Bodies Included.

The resolution was amended so that the investigating committee will be called upon to determine not only what part the National Association of Manufacturers played in defeating members, but also to inquire into the activities of all other organizations and persons along this line.

This makes it possible for the committee to investigate the Anti-Saloon League, the National Woman Suffrage Organization, the American Medical Association and all other organizations promoting legislation here.

JOE BROWN STATEMENT STARTS SENATE GOSSIP

made in the strike by the street car employees in Augusta.

I note that it has been said that I should not at this late day have stirred up this matter, thus renewing dissension among the people; but I call your attention to the fact that the present session of the General Assembly is the first that has been held since the occurrence of the strikes on the Augusta street car line and the Georgia Railroad. Hence, this was the first opportunity I had for officially notifying the General Assembly of these two glaring acts of disregard of the State's authority and of the necessity of enacting such laws as would protect the public against their recurrence.

Since the publication of extracts of the message I have received a multitude of letters from people in Georgia and about a dozen other States wherein my position is indorsed and statements are made that the labor union's exactions are becoming almost unbearable.

Thus far the labor union and its few newspaper advocates are alone in criticising the stand which the oath of office made it my duty to take. From these I note that I have "killed myself politically."

Never Considered Politics.

As to that act of so-styled political suicide, I will remark that it never occurred to me to consider any political bearing in the case. But, now that the point has been raised, I will observe that there was a matter of gratitude to the people of Georgia, which may even be styled political gratitude, which, I confess, swayed me. I refer to the fact that the voters of this State have twice conferred upon me the supreme honor in their gift.

Nothing which they control compares in responsibility, in dignity and eminence with the governorship!

Therefore, with my reward already bestowed, they had the right to expect and demand that I would safeguard their interests, oblivious to inducements or threats. My duty was plain.

Now, there is one point which I must ask you to bear especially in mind. I refer to the fact that there are thousands of members of the labor union in Georgia who are golden-hearted in their love of the State and of their fellow citizens.

But they have not appreciated the fact that in resorting to the process of a strike they have put themselves in direct rebellion to the laws of the State. They have not appreciated the fact that they are the victims of a system which holds itself above the law.

The strike status is not of Georgia. It is a foreign importation. Its aims are the securing of preference by force. Its attempts are the control and virtual ownership of the property which others own and upon which those others are required to pay taxes to the State.

Its concomitant is almost invariably violence to the persons of those who obey the laws in performing the duties which the strikers refuse to do, and frequently in damage to or destruction of property which they have temporarily abandoned for use, but over which they keep a hostile guard.

No Preference Is Shown.

Among these members of the labor union are a number of my friends of a lifetime. To oblige them I would go to any honorable lengths in my power, and I feel sure that I hold their reciprocal regard. Yet, probably the highest duty I owe them is to make clear to their minds the fact that they should not allow themselves to be deceived into doing deeds which in their essence are antagonistic to the very genius of our laws, and which, if tolerated, will breed anarchy, in which they will ultimately be among the worst sufferers.

It is needless to say that the State will not allow any class to have preference over others.

She does not intend that capital shall oppress labor, nor does she intend that labor shall rob or destroy capital, and she is very far from intending that the allies of union labor shall beat or kill or drive from the means of making an honoset livelihood those laborers who do the same kind of work the members of the labor union do, and especially when union labor has refused to do that work.

Now as to the claim that the courts can not reach all cases in which labor has rights against capital. There is really very little in this claim. But if it were ever so true, it is the duty of labor to go to the Legislature and have laws enacted which will cover such cases, instead of resorting to methods which embarrass unoffending thousands and are too often attended by destruction of property and by brutal violence, and even death to persons.

No man can claim that the Legislature would shut its ears and turn its hands against the proper demands of labor.

Court Is Proper Tribunal.

Therefore, what I have maintained as executive officer of the State, and what I plead for as a private citizen, is that all men go into court with their differences, if they can not settle them by mutual agreement or by arbitration. I insist that no man and no class be allowed any process which amounts to a special privilege. I insist that if any man be deprived of life, liberty or property, or that if any kind of personal punishment be inflicted upon him, it shall be by the hands of the law, and not by self-appointed or secretly instigated avengers.

Inasmuch, therefore, as the labor union, by obstructing and occasionally preventing the operation of the public utilities, has placed its mandate in opposition to the State's mandate, it may become necessary for the State to protect her citizens against its acts which bring damage to them.

She now requires insurance companies to make a money deposit with her before doing business in her borders. These companies represent capital. If she would make the same requirement of labor organizations, with the fund to be forfeited to the State in the event these organizations do deeds which damage the public, she would be but treating labor and capital alike—and who can say that this would be unfair?

Again, the public utilities are chartered to serve the public—all the people. Their tolls and general conduct are regulated by law. Therefore, they are, in great measure, public institutions.

Hence it would certainly conduce to the public interest if every member of the labor union, which assumes to control the working powers of the utilities, were required to take an oath before a State official to the effect that he would do no act which would obstruct that utility for which he works from performing the functions for which it was chartered. The penalty for violation of that oath should be the forfeiture of the right to service on any public utility in the State for the period of one year. The same penalty should be made to apply to any officer of the utility in question.

Merely Views of Citizen.

Of course, the foregoing views are merely those of a private citizen. Yet I recognize that, having entered as a public official upon the presentation of the questions which the labor union has made an issue with the State, it is not improper for me in any capacity to make a searching examination into this question involving the rights of each citizen of Georgia. This I will undertake to do after I give proper attention to my private affairs, which have been placed in the background for several years.

Mrs. Appelbaum in Accident in Chicago

Woman Acquitted Here of Slaying Husband Hurt When Electric Fan Flies Into Diners.

Atlanta friends of Mrs. Callie Scott Appelbaum, acquitted of the murder of her husband when tried last spring in this city, have received a letter from her telling of an accident she met while dining in a Chicago hotel.

An electric fan flew from its socket and hit Mrs. Appelbaum upon the left hand, injuring the member seriously. Mrs. Appelbaum fainted from loss of blood.

DUKE MILLIONS USED TO BUILD HIS HOME STATE

Tobacco King Is Developing Cheap Power All Over Carolinas to Help Cotton Mills.

CHARLOTTE, July 5.—James B. Duke, tobacco king, is playing the role of godfather to North Carolina.

To make his native State prosperous he has spent $50,000,000 on power plants and a similar amount has gone to aid young business men establisn cotton mills. Other States may scoff at Duke, but he is a prophet who is honored in his own country.

A year or two ago Mr. Duke retired as president of the American Tobacco Company. He maintained control of the British-American Tobacco Company, however, and to-day he dominates the tobacco industries of the Old World; but just prior to laying down the reins of the American company Mr. Duke conceived the idea of placing North Carolina in the forefront of the cotton manufacturing States of the Union.

While the cotton acreage of his native State was not nearly so great as that of other sister States, yet he determined that the Southern planter should find a market for his product without being forced to accept prices which are materially lessened by excessive freight rates demanded to land it in the New England mills.

Rivals of New England.

North and South Carolina were both likely places, in his opinion, for a chain of cotton mills as well equipped as those of New England. It is only a short haul from there to Norfolk and Newport News, where trans-Atlantic steamships touch going and coming, thus easily solving the problem of export facilities.

Then, too, should the mills grow in volume their owners could far outstrip their New England competitors in bidding for the raw product from neighboring States for the same reason that, with a lower freight rate to reckon with, they could pay the planter and broker better prices.

Knowing every nook and corner of his native State by heart, Mr. Duke awoke to the realization that millions upon millions of horsepower in her many waterways was going to waste. Once harness these streams and erect power plants at central points and it would be an easy matter to generate and diffuse sufficient power to turn the spindles of every cotton mill in the two States, as well as to light every municipality, the homes and business places of those dwelling within their confines, and at the same time to supply the motive power for every street railway line in the two States.

The result was cheap power and light for every county in North Carolina.

The demand for the product from the cotton plants soon became so compelling that within a few years the horsepower was doubled and then some.

Millions for Young.

Making Charlotte his central headquarters when not at the farm of his birth, near Durham, he let it be known that he was ready, willing and eager to help any and all deserving, energetic and capable persons who desired to join hands with him in making the Old North State one of the foremost cotton manufacturing centers of the Union.

The formal announcement was made that a fund of $50,000,000 was available for the establishment of cotton mills at likely and well-selected points. The money would be forthcoming at an instant's notice, provided the person could convince those in charge of it that he had a thorough knowledge of the business, was energetic, faithful and industrious and possessed sufficient money of his own to make it worth his while to strive for the success of the enterprise and stick to business.

Scores of young men who grew up in the cotton mill business, but whose chances of owning a mill of their own were remote in the extreme, were quick to benefit by the offer of their native State's wealthiest son.

Girl, Suddenly Rich, Stays a Dairymaid

Heiress to Winans' $500,000 Still Works at Father's Hotel, Where She Met Benefactor.

NEWPORT, R. I., July 5.—Miss Dorothy Bateman, who inherited half a million dollars from the late Ross R. Winans, of Baltimore, just for bringing sunshine into his life, has not had her head turned by the windfall.

She is still milking cows and caring for the chickens on her father's farm and assisting in the management of the exclusive Bateman Hotel, where Winans met her.

Although she no longer delivers milk and farm products to her father's select customers, she still runs her big automobile to boats and trains on which patrons of the hostelry are expected.

Specialize, Forgan's Advice to Students

Chicago Banker Also Says "Better be Poor in Purse Than Poor In Soul."

DE KALB, ILL., July 5.—David R. Forgan, president of the National City Bank of Chicago, delivered the address at the commencement exercises of the Northern Illinois State Normal School.

"There are three things which I would have each student know," he said. "First, how to write a legible hand; second, how to add, subtract and multiply; third, how to compose properly an application for a position.

"This is an age of specialization, and there should be more schools for vocational and industrial training. Build character. Better be poor in purse than poor in soul."

The school graduated 125.

Southern Girl To Be an Opera Star

Miss Baylor in Debut Sept. 14

Miss Eloise Baylor, who will make her debut as Philine in "Mignon."

Brilliant Career Is Predicted for Chattanooga Singer by European Masters.

CHATTANOOGA, July 5.—A gifted Southern girl will make her debut in grand opera at Bremen, Germany, September 14, when Miss Eloise Baylor, of Chattanooga, will appear in the role of Philine in the opera "Mignon." Miss Baylor will appear regularly until the following April, her repertoire comprising the following roles: Philine in "Mignin," Violetta in "Traviata," Martha in "Martha," Gilda in "Rigoletto," Frau Fluth in "Lustige Weiber," Konegin der Nacht in "Zauberflote," Konigin in "Hugenotter," Mimi in "La Boheme," Rosina in "Barbier von Siviglia," Lucia in "Lucia de Lammermoor," Ophelie in "Hamlet," Wald Vogel in "Siegfried," Erste Rheintochter in "Rheingold," Constance in "Entfuhrung," and Erste Rheintochter in "Gotterdammerung."

Miss Baylor is the daughter of Prof. and Mrs. J. Roy Baylor, and emphatically an American girl in spite of the fact that the past four years of her life have been spent in the study of music under the French, German and Italian masters. She is of Colonial stock on both her paternal and maternal side. She was born in Charlottesville, Va.

It might be said that Miss Baylor's musical career began when Mrs. Virginia Preston Means taught her as a delightful baby of 2 years to run the scale. Her father moved to Chattanooga from Virginia shortly afterward and her musical training was intrusted to Miss Ione Spears.

It was slightly more than seven years ago that Miss Baylor began the study of her chosen art, working in New York under the best masters. While here she sang before Madame Sembrich, and the latter was so delighted with her voice that she gave her a recommendation and ordered her to study under Jean de Reszke, in Paris.

The Southern girl followed her advise, and two years ago she completed the course prescribed by De Reszke and his chief assistant, Oscar Seagle, a native Chattanoogan.

Since completing this course Miss Baylor has appeared in practically all the European capitals and is even better known on the continent than in the United States. A brilliant career is predicted for her by all the European masters.

25,000 Expected at Endeavorer Meeting

Los Angeles Makes Extensive Preparations for Entertainment of Great Religious Body.

LOS ANGELES, July 5.—Great preparations have been made for entertaining 25,000 visitors and delegates to the twenty-sixth international Christian Endeavor convention which meets in Los Angeles July 9 to 14, inclusive, the first to be held on the coast since the 1897 convention in San Francisco.

Two immense canvas auditoriums, one designed to accommodate an audience of 10,000 people, with a stage for a large chorus, orchestra, speakers and officers, and the other for headquarters of the delegations, have been erected at Fiesta Park.

The Los Angeles convention of 1913 has been heralded everywhere as one of the red-letter events in the history of this remarkable organization. Music will be a big feature, and the convention orchestra of 100 pieces and the chorus of 1,000 voices, especially trained for the occasion, will be the big attractions.

Board to Consider Women as Police

Office of Roundsman May Be Abolished—Females Wanted as Probation Officers.

To abolish the office of roundsman, to put on women officers and to establish sub-stations are matters to be taken up by the Police Board at its meeting Tuesday evening.

Roundsman is a position similar to that of sergeant, but the pay is smaller. It is the intention of some members of the board to abolish this office and make the six officers now acting as roundsmen sergeants.

Four women officers will be added to the force, either as regular plain-clothes officers, detectives are probation officers, probably the latter, and in this the Chief heartily favors the probation idea.

Milton A. Candler Gate at Agnes Scott

Memorial Is Placed In Honor of Trustee of Decatur Institution of Learning.

A handsome iron gate has been erected at the north entrance of Agnes Scott campus as a memorial to the late Milton A. Candler, of Decatur, for years a trustee of this institution.

The gateway is 36 feet wide and has a clearance of 9 feet from the ground to the top of the gate, on which in letters of bronze over a foot tall is written, "Agnes Scott College." The posts are cast and the gate's palings are of steel.

On the memorial tablet, which is on the left-hand post, there appears this wording: "This gateway is erected as a memorial of Milton A. Candler, a co-laborer in the building of Agnes Scott College and for many years one of its faithful trustees. 1913."

Ill, Begs Wife in Europe Be Not Told

Richmond Ex-Alderman Sick at Home of Daughter In Atlanta While Wife Tours Europe.

While Telemachus H. Ellett, retired Richmond capitalist and former member of the Richmond Board of Aldermen, lies critically ill at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Dunbar Roy, in Atlanta, his wife is touring Europe in ignorance of his illness.

She sailed from New York early in June with a party of several friends, and about the same time Mr. Ellett, apparently in his usual health, left for Atlanta to visit his daughter. Soon after his arrival he became ill, and despite the efforts of several doctors, it is said that his condition has undergone practically no change for the better since then.

At his special request, it is understood that no effort has been made to notify Mrs. Ellett of his condition.

$15,000 HOUSE FOR CATS ONLY BEING ERECTED

Apartments to Have Janitor, Heat and Clam Chowder for Woman's Fifty-three Pets.

NEW YORK, July 5.—A $15,000 apartment house for cats, with janitor service, hot and cold clam chowder in every bedroom, a catnip bed on each fire escape and ample fence room for nocturnal promenading is the latest building note to come from Greenwich, Conn.

Mrs. Clifford Harmon, wife of the wealthy amateur aviator, and daughter of Commodore E. C. Benedict, has broken ground on the Benedict estate, outside of the Connecticut suburb, and before the summer is past Mrs. Harmon's 28 cats and 25 blooded kittens will be enjoying the dizziest high cat life in America.

Each of the nineteen rooms in the new establishment will be assigned to one cat family and only the heads of the various households will be provided with latch keys. Hardwood floors, hot water heat, vacuum cleaners, with wall socket attachments, and built-in cradles for kittens, will be among the appointments provided by the careful architect.

Quite modest in contrast with the $15,000 cattery will be the adjoining cottages, erected to accommodate Mrs. F. Y. Mathies, the cat expert who is to be employed as a permanent chaperon for Mrs. Harmon's cats.

Champ Clark Moves As Rent Goes Up $50

Speaker's Action Starts Rebellion of Washington Tenants of High-Priced Apartments for Better Rates.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—They raised the rent $50 a month on Speaker Champ Clark for his spacious apartments on the Avenue of the Presidents, in the heart of official Washington some time ago.

To-day the Speaker moved to a new apartment in Congress Hall Hotel. This hotel is very near the Capitol, and the Speaker will save not only in the matter of rent, but car fare as well.

The Speaker pulled off his coat today, took a holiday from his official duties, and personally superintended the removal of his Lares and Penates. Washingtonians, in danger of having their rent raised, have taken heart from his distinguished example and a rebellion of tenants is in sight.

'Elevator Boy' Now A Blushing Bride

Police Lieutenant Falls in Love With Girl He Arrests for Impersonating a Man.

LOS ANGELES, July 5.—A simple little ceremony yesterday afternoon in the chapel of the Paulist Fathers in California Street united in marriage Police Lieutenant Joseph F. Stuger and Miss Aileen Shaw.

It marked the culmination of a romance which started a month ago, when Miss Shaw cast aside her woman's garments, dressed like a man, assumed the name of Herbert Emery and got a job as elevator boy in the Hotel Alma.

Up to this time the romance was simply adventure. But Tuesday night Stuger stepped in, had her arrested inadvertently and then fell in love with her.

City Will Operate 3-Cent Dance Halls

Cost Will Be Little to Couples Who Whirl to Syncopated Music In Cincinnati.

CINCINNATI, July 5.—After hearing the report of Park Superintendent Hodgkinson on the park dance halls of Cleveland, the members of the Park Board decided to give the idea a trial as soon as the bonds, recently issued, could be sold. Hodgkinson said the city of Cleveland cleared a profit of $2,500 on two park dance halls last year, charging 3 cents a couple for admission.

Numerous cases of vandalism at playgrounds were reported by the Superintendent, and the board declared that the grounds would have to be closed unless proper protection is given the equipment.

CHURCH AFFAIR TO BE AIRED IN MACON COURTS

Accused and Accusers Engage Counsel for Impending Libel and Slander Suits.

Macon been as agitated as they are over the scandal charges which have been preferred against the two church leaders of the First Christian. That Professor Charlton, the choir leader, not only of the First Christian, but a teacher of music also in the Jewish synagogue as well as in the First Presbyterian Church, and Mrs. Lester should be guilty as charged seemed incredible to the majority of people. And yet there were the charges which were so strong that one of the elders, a member of the investigating committee, declared that on the first day of the investigation he believed the parties guilty from the evidence.

Probe Starts Gossip.

The very fact that the First Christian authorities felt warranted to conduct a thorough investigation of the matter caused people who passed the thing up as a hoax at first to think twice and then begin to search for themselves. As a result gossip, whispered in the church circles and openly indulged in society circles and elsewhere, has been the order of the day ever since the story became publicly known.

While the investigations of the committee have been conducted quietly, usually at night when people were in bed, the general trend of things has been pretty well known for several days following the exposure.

First came the incident itself on the night of June 5, of which little was then known, however, and then the publication of an anonymous story in an afternoon paper, but which in a most subtle manner hinted at the affair. A few days later copies of this paper were anonymously mailed to Mr. Lester, husband of the accused woman, and to Mrs. Charlton, wife of the accused choir leader. The whisperings became bolder and bolder and finally open gossip resulted in the appointment of a special committee in the First Christian Church to investigate the affair.

If time counts for anything, this committee has done its work well, for it probed for a full week. Secret conferences have been held with both accused and accusers, as well as the neighbors who were said to "know a thing or two." The newspaper man who "sprung" the anonymous story was even subpenaed as a witness in the case. All have testified. Mrs. Jenkins has repeated time and again that she heard the mysterious telephone conversation in which the alleged appointment was made between the music professor and Mrs. Lester. Mrs. Armstrong, it is said, although she refuses to make a statement to the press, has corroborated Mrs. Jenkins' testimony in substance; while Professor Charlton has established what he claims is an alibi and Mrs. Lester has submitted certain proof which she says clears her of all the charges.

Principals Prominent.

The good character of the accused persons has played but small part in the investigation, according to members of the committee, who say they have gone after the facts in the case. These facts, they now claim, disprove the charges which have been preferred.

The prominence of the parties, particularly of Professor Charlton, who has been connected with musical activities in Macon now for about five or six years, has lent color to the affair sufficient to carry it all over the State and far beyond. Professor Charlton is English by birth and came to Macon from Bloomington, Ill. His residence in this city was by accident only, as he was passing through here on a revival tour in which he was assisting an evangelist. Some months later he married a Miss Woods, the daughter, it is said, of a one-time prominent Georgia legislator. In addition to his church activities, Professor Charlton has a large class of pupils, girls and boys, members of prominent families in Macon.

Mrs. Lester has been connected with the First Christian Church for about seven or eight years, serving in various capacities in the ladies' organizations. At the present time she is secretary of the Ladies' Aid Society. Prior to marriage she was a Miss Head, of Zebulon. Mr. Lester is in the lumber business. He is also an officer in the First Christian Church, where he has held membership for about four years.

BATTLE OF LOVE ON FIELD OF GETTYSBURG IS CLOSED; EACH SIDE HAILED AS VICTOR

Martial Spirit of Old Soldiers of Both Blue and Gray Exceeded Only by Sincere Warmth of Affection for Their Former Foes.

GETTYSBURG, July 5.—The tumult and the shouting died for the second time on Gettysburg, and the battlefield again has figured in world history. For no less memorable than the hostile conflict of the armies of Lee and Meade in '63 was the friendly meeting between the meager remnants of the same armies which, lasting four days, is at an end to-day.

Voices have been raised in the name of peace and reconciliation during all the half century since Appomattox, but they have always remained merely unrealized appeals—until this last week, the semi-centennial of the greatest battle of the greatest war ever fought between brothers.

And now peace reigns, love reigns at last over the broad, rolling stretches of Gettysburg, where for fifty years has hovered a recollection of crashing terror of sectional hatred, of thirst for blood.

Affection of Veterans Sincere.

The reunion of the veterans of the Union and of the Confederacy has been the sincerest and most effective step ever taken for the reconciliation of the North and the South—this is so by common consent of the veterans themselves, of younger representatives of the two sections, and of expressions which have come from over the nation.

Yesterday it was proved so, when a pathetic but brave spectacle was staged. The white-haired men of the Union army were deployed, as nearly as could be calculated, in the positions they occupied the great third day of the battle of Bloody Angle. They stood there, proud in the forgetfulness of their years, oblivious of the terrific heat, oblivious of everything around them, with eyes seeing only the brave, strong day fifty years before, when they waited on the same spot for the enemy.

The feeble gray army, also, was placed in battle order. They, too, were exultant, eager, powerless to stifle the rebel yell that bubbled out of their souls.

The command was given to charge. The rebel yell came sharp and clear. The gray army started toward the blue line. Its charge did not have the force and nerve that impelled it 50 years ago. Instead, many of the veterans stumbled in their course, some of them fell. The advancing line became ragged, where the younger veterans, eager, outdistanced more feeble comrades. But the spirit of '63 was there.

Clasp Hands at Bloody Angle.

Years rolled back, and the echoes of cannonade, the sight of the all-pervading smoke film, the choking scent of that smoke, the thrill of battle and of youth—all were revived.

The gray army advanced to the Bloody Angle. The blue army braced itself for the shock, as they well knew how to do. The two lines came together.

As they met, the rebel yell became a laugh, the tense faces of the blue veterans melted. Blue and gray clasped hands and were friends. The old men were not ashamed of their frank arms that went out and around the shoulders of their enemies of 50 years ago—comrades now—nor of the tears. Nor were any of the thousands of spectators ashamed of the demonstration in which they joined impulsively.

All that was spectacular. Yet it was not exceptional in revealing the spirit that prompted the entire reunion. Since last Tuesday everywhere has been exhibited friendliness and reconciliation. More than 50,000 veterans were present, sleeping together, tenting together on the old camp ground, telling endless stories, pointing out spots here and there where they saw men die—but always smiling, always shaking hands, always jolly.

G. A. R. Outnumbers U. C. V.

Of those who attended the reunion of the two armies, little more than one-fourth were soldiers of the Confederacy. The others were G. A. R men, who, with less distance to travel, naturally were present in greater numbers.

The trip was trying, with the heat and with little inevitable discomforts that the old men would not have noticed 50 years ago, but which now were fraught with danger. There was tragedy in the sight of the feeble veterans fighting vainly against heat and exhaustion. There was real tragedy when a dozen or more succumbed and died on the same field where they escaped shot and shell.

The first two days of the reunion were almost unbearable with their heat, and the suffering was great. But a cooling storm blew up the third day, rendering pleasant enough the reunion weather.

Conversation Never Lags.

Within the tents there was always conversation. Not even in the dead of the night did it cease. The talk was of charges and of retreats, of maneuvers that have become more and more heroic now that the years have passed—but mostly, as is the way of veterans the world over, of personal prowess and adventure.

Mrs. H. D. Longstreet, of Gainesville, Ga., widow of the great Confederate leader, was here and was always the center of a reverent crowd. Many men who fought under her husband followed her day after day, telling of incidents that occurred during the war.

The first night at the battlefield she could find no quarters. Everything was reserved, and she was forced to sleep on the floor of a farmhouse. The next morning, however, she found that a tent had been reserved for her by General Sickles.

She went to the pump of a farmhouse to get a drink of water, and there met an old soldier. She asked him under whom he fought, and he, ignorant of her identity, replied, "Longstreet."

"And are you glad or sorry that the war ended as it did?" she asked him.

"I am glad," he said, emphatically, "so far as the war itself is concerned, but not for the reconstruction days. You may be a Northern woman, and if you are, you can't imagine what we went through—not in the war, when the soldiers fought us, but in the days afterward, when the politicians governed us. But I'm glad the war ended in a united nation."

Wore Badge of Union.

Mrs. Longstreet saw everywhere examples of the reconciliation that the Gettysburg meeting has brought about. She met a soldier wearing a gray suit but decked with a badge marked Fifth Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry. She asked him why he, a Union man, should wear a gray suit.

"Me?" he said, surprised. "I am not a Yankee. I fought under Longstreet, and I'm from Mississippi."

"Why do you wear that badge, then?" she asked.

"Why," he said, "a Yank came along to-day from the Fifth Pennsylvania and asked me of I'd trade badges with him, after we'd had a talk and found out where we were at Gettysburg. So we traded. He's wearing my badge now—Fifteenth Mississippi. Says he'll keep it as long as he lives."

Reconciliation is sincere. There was even talk during the four days of an amalgamation of the United Confederate Veterans and the Grand Army of the Republic under the name, "The United Veterans of the United States."

Old Nurses Open Hospital.

A band of devoted women were the survivors of the corps of nurses who served during the battle. Mrs. Salome Stewart, leader of the band, was here to open the old hospital. Others of her staff present were Mrs. Charles F. Dye and Miss Cornelia Hancock, of Philadelphia; Miss Margaret Hamilton, Wakefield, Conn.; Mrs. Mary Stevens, Peabody, Conn.; Mrs. Annie Irving, Newburg; Mrs. Helen Cole, Sheboygan, Wis. Women of the families of General Meade, General Pickett and General Hill were present, too.

There were reunions between survivors of Buford's division of Meade's army, and Wheeler's division of Lee's, and, at the Bloody Angle, between Meredith's Iron Brigade and Pettigrew's men. It was these latter, according to the history of the fight, who saw the fiercest struggle.

Not in all the story of the reunion is there the breath of an unpleasantness among the veterans. A serious fight occurred the second day of the meeting, when seven men were stabbed. The fight, however, was precipitated by several young men who, abusing Abraham Lincoln, aroused the anger of a Union veteran. None of the seven injured was a veteran.

But among the veterans of the two armies there was only friendship and serenity. Blue and Gray swapped coffee and tobacco, just as they had done during the war, swapped reminiscences, and, most of all, traded assurances of having forgiven and forgotten the bitterness and the struggle of half a century ago.

President Follows Lincoln.

Tuesday of the reunion was Veterans' Day, given over to a great meeting of all the old soldiers, with addresses by representatives of both sides. Wednesday was Military Day, when younger soldiers were on display. Thursday was Civic Day, when Governors of States, representatives of the national government, and other civil authorities made addresses. Friday was National Day, marked by the address of President Wilson.

Every night the veterans sang the old war songs through, and repeated on the chorus. The entire encampment of the Gray veterans in the valley below the ridge joined in, until a chorus resounded that was thundering even in the vast spaces of the battlefield.

The songs were more and more exultant as the evening wore on. Now and then the rebel yell punctuated the melody. The sound spread to the Blue army, and was there augmented by the voices of the Union veterans until the battlefield became each night a vast theater for the recrudescence of the most wonderful martial spirit of all ages.

INNOCENT MAN PARDONED AFTER 2 YEARS IN PRISON

TOPEKA, July 5.—George Horton, sent to the State Penitentiary in 1910 charged with robbing a jewelry store in Medicine Lodge, Kans., has served nearly two years for a crime he did not commit, according to facts brought out to-day when Governor Hodge granted him a permanent parole. Horton's conviction resulted because a bloodhound placed upon the trail directed suspicion to him. Horton's friends were able to present evidence to the Governor that the stolen jewelry was hidden under a Medicine Lodge hotel after Horton was in prison.

Jessie Wilson Picks Husband Just Like Father

Daughter's Fiance Called President's Replica

Sayre Had Brilliant College Career and Is Deep Student of Law and Politics.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—Miss Jessie Woodrow Wilson, always the chum and admirer of her father, the President, has not departed from this role in the circumstances surrounding her selection of a husband. For one thing Washington society has discovered, with a collective gasp of surprise, that Francis Bowes Sayre, the man of her choice, is a younger replica of her famous father, possessing the same asceticism of countenance, the same brow, nose, chin, eyes, and all.

For another thing, Miss Wilson follows her father in laughing down the time-worn superstition regarding the unluckiness of thirteen. It matters not to her that she will be the thirteenth White House bride in the year 1913.

Admiration for Father Deep.

All Washington to-day, following its discovery that Sayre possesses something like the Wilson physiognomy, is wondering whether that fact had not a great deal to do with Miss Jessie's capitulation to the young lawyer's suit. Her admiration for her father is profound, as is that of the entire Wilson family.

Never did hero worship exist in so marked a degree as in the family of the President, with the President as the figure for adoration. And now, after the first shock of discovery, Washington society is beginning to pass the remark that it is nothing but natural that a Wilson girl should marry a man like her father.

Young Sayre's career has been laid along lines identical with the early career of the President. A brilliant college record, the reputation achieved of a scholar and a leader, a vigorous plunge into law—all this he has done, just as Woodrow Wilson did before him.

Like Woodrow Wilson, too, his predilections have been toward the part of law in political economy and in sociology.

It was through his interest in social betterment work that he and Miss Jessie Wilson acquired their attachment.

Miss Wilson Prominent Worker.

Miss Wilson has been prominent in work of this kind, being a member of the national executive board of the Y. W. C. A. In this capacity she visited the Night Court for Women in New York City, together with Mrs. J. Borden Harriman last winter. She also visited the Children's Court. In February Miss Wilson addressed the Legislature of Delaware in behalf of a ten-hour law for working women. The Legislature passed the bill. In Richmond, Va., last year, Miss Wilson spoke before crowds that filled two churches, and was then compelled to address an overflow meeting.

President Wilson's career has been strangely intermingled with the supposedly unlucky number thirteen, and Miss Wilson is to become the thirteenth White House bride.

But the daughter of the President is not one of those persons who decline to sit in the thirteenth row at the theater or object to being the thirteenth guest at an entertainment. Many times has Miss Wilson defied the superstition, and sat in the thirteenth row of a theater with her father, who prefers to sit in that row, and regards the number as particularly lucky.

Francis Bowes Sayre, who is a clerk in the office of District Attorney Whitman, of New York, is a modest young man. To none of his fellow workers had he ever confided that he even knew the President's daughter. He is 28 years old, an admirer of former President Roosevelt, and a gentleman at heart, although admittedly a man who believes in principles in politics rather than in party.

The marriage will take place in November, on Saturday. This day makes another fling at convention. But Miss Wilson says she will "work for a living."

President at Summer Capital Seeking Quiet.

WINDSOR, VT., July 5.—President Wilson arrived here at 10:50 a. m. today to spend the summer. He was met by Mrs. Wilson and two of his daughters, and the party motored to the Summer White House at Cornish, N. H., three miles away.

Upon arrival at the Summer White House the President gave orders that no newspaper correspondents or photographers were to be admitted on any pretext. The President said he was in Cornish to take a rest, and that he would transact no official business nor even consider matters which would tend to disturb his brief vacation.

If anything of public moment occurs, the President said he would return to Washington, but he would not discuss it here. The squad of six secret service men is on hand to see that the President's orders are carried out to the letter.

According to present plans, the President will remain until Tuesday afternoon, but he may stay longer if developments in Washington are not of such a nature as to necessitate his presence.

GRADUATESTOLD TO MAKE MORIBUND SMALL TOWNS

MIDDLEBURY, VT., July 5.—John M. Thomas, president of Middlebury College, in his baccalaureate address appealed to the members of the graduating class to cast their fortunes with the small hill towns of New England, which, he said, had been losing population steadily for more than half a century.

"Leadership is all that is needed," said Dr. Thomas. "Who of you will go to live in a hill town of Vermont, not where there is the best job, but where there is the greatest good?

"One man of the right caliber and the right power could lift a whole community. One community so inspired would change a whole county, and one county leading the way, the whole State would follow."

KIMBALL SEAT OF WAR FOR ALL NEW COUNTIES

Advertisements and Maps Cover Lobbies of Hotel Which Is Thronged by Legislators.

Strangers entering the Kimball House lobby are apt to conclude that the business in chief of the Georgia Legislature is to create new counties. Placards, posters, banners and maps are everywhere, each setting forth advantages bound to accrue to the State at large if some particular locality is given local self-government and some thriving village authorized to construct a county courthouse.

Every county that hopes to be has a room in the Kimball House, an advertising scheme in the lobby and a few favored sons scattering arguments. Whosoever so much as hesitates and looks at one of the maps, posters, placards, banners or bulletins is sure to be button-holed and given an advisory talk.

Among the prospective counties whose advertisements embellish the Kimball House lobby are Morris, Griggs, Barrow, Tate, Hansell, Hardeman, Candler, Warner, Hampton, Atkinson, Milledge, Northen, Evans and Stonewall—fourteen in number.

Every would-be county on its poster, or map, sets forth a reason for seeking separate existence, and some of these reasons are decidedly novel. For instance, Morris County uses this plea: "Honor the name of Robert Morris, the man whose credit made American independence possible." Griggs County "takes in all people who want a new county." Hansell County posters proclaim that "Hansell County has merit." Hampton County boosters have put up the reason, "We need it."

Ban on Gum; Pretty Chicago Co-Eds Pout

"Blind Pigs" Started by Girls to Prove Their Independence of Rules.

CHICAGO, July 5.—Co-eds at the University of Chicago were inclined to-day to pout at a new order which in effect, places the ban on chewing gum. They don't want the gum so much, but many of them regard the order as an undue infringement of personal rights.

There was a rumor that several "blind pigs" where the chicle product may be obtained were already in operation in co-ed dormitories.

NURSE WHO WED TO SAVE MAN'S LIFE SUES HIM

But Woman Who Repents Action Is Denied a Divorce Decree by Court.

LOS ANGELES, July 5—Which? Marriage and the saving of a human life or refusal and the moral responsibility of its loss?

This was the question Mrs. Dorothy Lander, a pretty 20-year-old nurse, faced in the operating room of the Clara Barton Hospital when she agreed to become the wife of Kirk C. Lander, from whom she now seeks her liberty.

She testified in Judge Monroe's court that she married Lander to save his life.

This strange romance was revealed by the young woman as a witness in her own behalf. Her husband, she said, was a patient at the Clara Barton Hospital. She was his nurse and had attended him for ten days.

He suffered a relapse and an operation was declared by the attending physicians to be necessary to save his life. He was placed upon the operating table, but refused to submit to the operation until he had seen his nurse.

When she appeared, he told her that he loved her—that life without her was not worth living. If she promised to marry him he would submit to the operation necessary to save his life, he said, and if she refused he would die.

The operation was successful and two days later the couple were married. Mrs. Lander sought a divorce on the grounds of non-support, although she admitted that she had never lived with her husband, who contested the action.

Judge Monroe held that the young woman had failed to make out a case legally. Mrs. Lander was heartbroken when the court denied the decree.

Plunges Off Fourth Story; Spike Hooks In His Pants; Saved

Thrown by Falling Plank, Man Hangs Head Downward Until His Rescuers Arrive.

LOS ANGELES, July 5.—W. E. Duffessy, a workman employed in the construction of the new Braley Building at Pasadena, owes his life to the strength of his overalls, which prevented him from being hurled from the fourth story of the building.

Duffessy was struck on the head by a plank dropped by a workman on the floor above him. He was thrown down the improvised elevator shaft headfirst, but after falling to the third floor his overalls caught on a protruding spike and held him steadfast.

He remained in this position with his head down until several workmen who witnessed the accident hurriedly made their way, with the aid of a rope, to where he was hanging and hauled him to a place of safety.

SOUTHERN SOCIETY TAKES A SPURT IN CAPITAL; MANY NOTABLES BECOME MEMBERS

Records Smashed by Organization Since Claude N. Bennett Became President.

By HUGH S. MILLER.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—For rapidity of growth and for activity in developing the spirit of the South at the National Capital, the Southern Society of Washington has set a new record since the Democratic party came into power.

Less than a month after the election of officers, which placed Claude N. Bennett, of Georgia, in the president's chair, the society took in 150 new members from the leading Southerners in private, Congressional and other official life. They included such new members as Senator and Mrs. Hoke Smith, of Georgia; Senator and Mrs. Bryan, of Florida; Senator and Mrs. Robinson, of Arkansas; Senators Swanson, of Virginia, and Vardaman, of Mississippi; Representatives Gordon Lee, William Schley Howard and Hughes, of Georgia; Burnett and Heflin, of Alabama; Small, of North Carolina, and many other Southern Representatives and their wives.

Georgians Who Join.

Among the prominent Georgians who have joined are Justice and Mrs. William Bailey Lamar, Paymaster and Mrs. William C. Fite, Mr. and Mrs. James J. Lampton, Mr. and Mrs. Harry F. Cary, Mr. and Mrs. Sledge Tatum, Colonel Neyle Colquitt, Marion C. Howard, D. L. Hartsill, Miss Minnie E. Carroll, Miss Helen H. Hardin, Colonel John T. Boifeuillet and Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Lamkin. From other Southern States there are generals, admirals and others of note.

The Southern Society is now enjoying a success that it never before attained. It stands at the very top of the social organizations in the National Capital. Strangely enough, while the impetus which has made the society what it is came in part from the Georgian who is its new president, it is to be attributed mainly to a lively fight which developed in the society just previous to the last election.

The Southern Society had been running along for several years as quietly as a meadow stream. Its first president was Jacob M. Dickinson, Secretary of War in the Taft Cabinet. He was succeeded as president by Senator Thornton, of Louisiana, and he in turn was followed by Representative Richmond Pearson Hobson, of Alabama. Lack of time had made it difficult for any of these executives to give the society much personal attention.

Hobson Started Fight.

It was President Hobson who unintentionally precipitated the fight which culminated in the unprecedented expansion of the society. He proposed an amendment which would expand the eligibility clause of the society so as to take in people from every section of the country, provided they felt an interest in the South and the general objects of the organization. His amendment was seconded and ably advocated by Thomas Nelson Page, of Virginia, the author and recent appointee of President Wilson as Ambassador to Italy. Mr. Page was a member of the executive committee of the society. He and Captain Hobson argued very ably and eloquently for broadening the scope of the society, particularly with reference to its membership. They emphasized the need of doing away with sectionalism and giving the society a national character.

Some of the members of the society gathered from their remarks an intimation that the society amounted to very little and would never amount to much so long as it was run under exclusively Southern direction. However justified they were in getting this impression, the effect was electrical. They communicated their thoughts to others, and quickly the whole society was aroused. The more it was thought about and discussed the greater the opposition it created. The rank and file of the society declared that the adoption of the amendment would destroy both the character and the purpose of the society; that it would no longer be a Southern society, but an interstate society, the E Pluribus Unum Society, the Amalgamated Association of Selected Celebrities—anything, in fact—but that it would not be a Southern society.

CLAUDE N. BENNETT, of Georgia, the new President of the Southern Society of Washington.

Dr. McKelway Is Secretary.

The result was that the amendment was defeated, President Hobson resigned, and Mr. Bennett was unanimously elected to succeed him. Dr. A. J. McKelway, well known in Atlanta, is financial secretary of the society. Speaker Champ Clark is the first vice president.

Something of what the Southern Society is, and what it is doing, is contained in the following interview by Mr. Bennett:

"The objects of the Southern Society are to bring together at the National Capital Southern people; to promote friendship and fellowship among them; to nourish, cherish and perpetuate Southern ideals and ideas; to aid in interpreting the South to itself and to the nation at large; to develop and promote any good cause connected with the South—whether educational, philanthropic, patriotic or useful in any line. When the society grows in strength, membership and power as it should, it will be an easy matter to discover good things for it to do.

"The society is in no sense sectional, except in the broad sense that it is made up of Southerners. There is nothing narrow or limited or sectional about it in any way that could possibly be objected to. In its recent meeting at the National Theater, the society acted as the host of the nation. The society paid all expenses and entertained two thousand citizens of Washington, selected without regard to where they came from. Every Representative and Senator was invited, the diplomatic corps was well represented, the house was filled to its capacity, and the addresses were in a vein that could not but be approved and appreciated by any well balanced man or woman in the United States. The strongest eulogy on the South was delivered by William Jennings Bryan, of Nebraska, Secretary of State.

"There have been two other meetings in which the South has appeared in prominent roles. One was the noted banquet at the Raleigh Hotel in celebration of Washington's birthday, February 22, 1912, and the other was at the Pan American Building in the Hall of the Americas, when the society last fall gave a reception to the national convention of the United Daughters of the Confederacy—the most noted perhaps of the great entertainments given in Washington to that great organization of Southern women.

Cites Bigness of Field.

"Those of us who are endeavoring to direct the society's movements are fairly staggered by the bigness of the field that it represents. This field covers a representation at the National Capital of sixteen of the leading States of the Union, containing a population of more than thirty millions, having 600,000,000 acres of territory, possessing greater fertility and variety of soil than any other similar sized territory on the face of the globe, having one crop (cotton) worth a round billion dollars a year, and constituting the greatest natural monopoly that the Creator has given to any people.

"That the South now furnishes the President of the United States and half of the Cabinet, and is on the majority side of both House and Senate is only one of many phases of its importance and possibilities. That the Southern Society has something to stand for and can easily find something to do that will be well worth while needs no demonstration. The society regards the South as the nation's best asset, and desires to make that asset available to all good purposes."

ALMOST FRANTIC WITH DANDRUFF

Tormented by Itching. Hair Came Out by Combfuls. Pimples on Scalp. Cuticura Soap and Ointment Made Permanent Cure.

Bissell, Ala. — "I had a very bad case of dandruff on my head. I was tormented by itching and my hair began to come out by the combfuls. I almost became frantic, fearful that I would lose all of my hair which was my pride. There were some pimples on my scalp and I scratched them until they made sores. My hair was dry and lifeless.

"I was bothered about four months and had tried various kinds of preparations which seemed to only make it worse. I saw the advertisement of Cuticura Soap and Ointment and sent to my druggist for three cakes of Cuticura Soap and a box of Cuticura Ointment. I washed my scalp with warm water strong with the Cuticura Soap and dried, afterwards applying the Cuticura Ointment, working it in the scalp slowly with my fingers. After using them for several days my hair began to stop coming out. The dandruff all disappeared and in less than four weeks a cure was accomplished permanently." (Signed) Miss Lucy May, Nov. 6, 1912.

Cuticura Soap and Ointment do so much for pimples, blackheads, red, rough skins, itching, scaly scalps, dandruff, dry, thin and falling hair, chapped hands and shapeless nails, that it is almost criminal not to use them. Men who shave and shampoo with Cuticura Soap will find it best for skin and scalp.

TAKING SLICE OF LEMON INDICATES BETROTHAL

ANN ARBOR, MICH., July 5.—At the annual breakfast of the senior girls of the University of Michigan, one of the twelve girls who confessed to having become engaged to be married during her career here was Miss Christine Foster, of Attica, Ind.

This breakfast is an annual affair at the university, and it is the custom of all senior girls to confess their engagements to the other young women of the college at this breakfast. The method chosen this year was to have each engaged girl take a slice of lemon from a plate as it was passed around.

Phagan Case Centers on Conley

Negro Lone Hope of Both Sides

Frank Expects Freedom by Breaking Down Accuser's Testimony, and State a Conviction by Establishing Truth of Statements.

BY AN OLD POLICE REPORTER.

The developments in the Phagan case have been of late highly sigficant and interesting.

During the past week, it became evident that the very heart and soul of both the prosecution and the defense is to center largely about the negro, James Conley.

He is at once apparently the hope and the despair of both sides to the contest!

This circumstance, however, while tending to add much to the dramatic and the uncertain, in so far as the outcome is concerned, is not by any means an unusual thing in cases of this kind.

It frequently happens in mysterious murder cases that both the State and the defense must pin their faith to one and the same witness.

Of late there has been some talk of the Grand Jury indicting Conley, even over the Solicitor General's head, which, of course, it would have a perfect right to do.

The thought occurred to me some time ago that the case might take that direction, but in the article in which that point was discussed, I mentioned it incidentally, rather than as a likely thing.

Indictment may Mean Much.

It seems, nevertheless, that the idea of indicting Conley has had, and still may have, much more behind it than some people have been willing to admit, and that phase of the situation has caused me to speculate somewhat in detail today as to how and why Conley might be indicted.

I find that those who are urging it have much more to stand upon than would seem probable at first blush.

Two things are evident:

First, the defense will attack Conley vigorously.

Second, the character of Leo Frank will be put in issue by the defense, fearlessly and frankly!

These two things, I take it, will constitute the defense's primary challenge to the prosecution!

And if I be right about that, the issue will be thrilling and dramatic enough to satisfy the cravings of the most exacting, when the case comes on for trial later along this month.

About these two points of disagreement, Hugh Dorsey and Frank Hooper, on the one hand, and Luther Rosser and Reuben Arnold, on the other, will be on their mettle—and if the fur and likewise the fire doesn't fly, I mistake my guess at this writing!

Leo Frank has been indicted for the murder of Mary Phagan, and for reasons presumably satisfactory to the Grand Jury.

Points Against Conley.

Let's examine the points upon which the defense will indict Conley, if the Grand Jury fails to beat the defense to it—which yet is problematical.

The defense will contend:

(1) That Conley wrote of his own notion the notes found beside the dead girl's body.

(2) That the negro told of incidents and conversations which took place admittedly in the pencil factory an hour or more before he swears he went there.

(3) That the negro admits he was drinking and "broke" when he went to the factory Saturday morning, and is known to have spent in the afternoon about the amount of money Mary Phagan is supposed to have had in her little mesh bag when she started out of the factory.

(4) That the negro admits he was in hiding or loafing near the open elevator shaft, at the foot of the steps Mary Phagan must have used as she came down to go out of the factory.

(5) That at the inquest Frank said he thought he had heard voices outside his office, very soon after Mary Phagan started down the stairs, and that the voices he thought he heard which might have been voices of Mary Phagan and the negro, just as the negro attacked the girl.

(6) That the negro said the body of Mary Phagan was carried down the elevator shaft, and yet two witnesses stand ready to swear, and have sworn, that the elevator did not run on the fatal Saturday at all.

(7) That, while the negro accounts after a fashion for the girl's shoe and hat thrown onto a trash pile, he fails to account for the incriminating parasol found at the foot of the elevator shaft, where it might have been thrown with Mary Phagan's body from above.

(8) That the negro says Frank called him at 12:56, notwithstanding the fact that Frank was talking to Mr. and Mrs. White at 1 o'clock, and immediately thereafter left the factory, reaching home about 1:20. That, therefore, Frank could not have done the things Conley accuses him of having done, for sheer lack of time, if nothing else.

(9) That the negro did not flee, if guilty himself, because the police promptly accused in turn Newt Lee, Gantt, Mullinix and Frank as suspects, not once mentioning Conley; and, besides, no one knew at the time these suspects were proclaimed that Conley had even been in the pencil factory Saturday morning.

(10) That Conley was caught washing his shirt, which might have been blood-stained, very soon after Mary Phagan's murder was effected, and that he said at the time he was worried over something not stated.

(11) That the negro's statements have been inconsistent and conflicting, both those under oath and those not under oath, and that he has admitted having sworn falsely more than once.

(12) That the negro's defense of himself is of no merit, because it is the only possible defense of himself he could frame—a last and desperate resort to fix upon Frank Conley's own guilt.

(13) That Conley's evidence is of small if any value against Frank, because it was not given until suspicion seemed drifting rapidly toward Conley.

(14) That Frank's statements have been straightforward, consistent and reasonable, whereas, in contrast thereto, the negro's have been inconsistent, conflicting and unreasonable.

(15) If the negro's presence in the factory had been known at the time Frank was indicted, Frank likely never would have been indicted; or, at least, would not likely have been indicted in preference to the negro.

(16) That the motive in the case of Frank never has been established and will be difficult to establish, but that the motive in the case of the negro—i. e., robbery—is immediately apparent.

(17) That the entire factory force testifies to the good character of Frank, whereas the character of the negro, both by his own admissions and the police court records, is bad.

(18) That many of the horrible details of the murder, scattered broadcast when it was first effected, are not true, and that the circumstances of the crime point to the negro Conley as its perpetrator, much more surely than to Frank.

Now, the reader must understand that which I have tried to impress upon him in every article I heretofore have written about the Phagan case, to wit: I know nothing more about the POSITIVE TRUTH of the case than he does—that is to say, my sources of information have been precisely the same sources that his have been—the newspapers.

I have scrutinized the files of The Georgian and The American and other Atlanta papers, and the foregoing eighteen counts against Conley I have gathered together from perhaps fifty different issues.

Framework Is Powerful.

I have set them forth as showing the strength of the position of those—or the imaginary strength, whichever it is—invoking the indictment of Conley NOW.

They may be of tremendous significance—they may be of no material significance. But they DO serve to show the framework of the powerful defense that is being constructed for Frank.

I give them for what they are worth.

There stands between Conley and Grand Jury indictment, of course, the compelling necessity of using Conley as a material witness—THE material witness, indeed!—against Frank.

To indict Conley NOW would weaken the State's case against Frank, unquestionably.

And yet the fact remains that certain members of the Grand Jury have been reported as seriously inclined to that course, nevertheless.

And, after all, that matter (theoretically, anyway) is utterly impersonal with the Grand Jury and arbitrarily in its hands.

Before I became a newspaper man and later along police reporter, I studied law, as I mentioned before, and was admitted to the bar. I practiced four years, and while I abandoned the law long ago for the newspaper profession, I never lost my taste entirely for my first love.

I went over to the State Library Saturday and looked up some few decisions bearing upon the two vital points to be raised in the Phagan case, as I view it now, and two things impressed me profoundly.

State Can Not Attack Frank.

When the defense attacks Conley it will be backed by some weighty law affecting his credibility, and when it puts Frank's character in evidence—the State CAN NOT put his character in evidence, it will be understood—it will be backed again by some weighty opinions as to the value of character, established and proved.

In the Twenty-third Georgia Supreme Court Reports I find that Mr. Justice McDonald laid down this rule:

If a witness swear willfully and knowingly false, even to a collateral fact, his testimony ought to be rejected entirely, unless it be so corroborated by circumstances, or other unimpeached evidence, as to be irresistible!

That is the law of the land, and it will be invoked, I suppose, against Conley, with vigor and possible effect.

The defense, no doubt, will contend that Conley has sworn falsely—and proved it by written instruments—and it then will insist that Conley's entire evidence must be rejected unless corroborated by other unimpeached testimony.

Can the State corroborate Conley by such evidence?

Evidently the defense doubts it.

I do not know, of course.

Hearsay, irrelevant matter, street gossip, newspaper stories—those things will not do when it comes to trying Leo Frank for his life.

Conley Must Be Corroborated.

Conley, at best an admitted accessory after the fact of the murder, must be corroborated by COMPETENT and LEGAL evidence.

And right here, I think, the defense expects to give the State one of its very hardest nuts to crack.

Maybe the State can crack it, all right!

That remains to be seen, and as to that I venture no opinion.

Again, I take it the defense expects to strike straight from the shoulder when it puts Frank's character in issue.

I do not KNOW that the defense will do this, but from the tone of some of the articles, particularly Mrs. Frank's remarkable interview, given out recently by the defense, or authorized by it, I SUSPECT that is exactly what it will do.

This will be a bold stroke, too, for unless the DEFENSE puts Leo Frank's character in issue, IT CAN NOT BE PUT IN ISSUE AT ALL.

The State is estopped, of its own motion, from doing that.

Therefore, when the defense DOES it, it is pretty apt to be taken as an evidence that the defense is very confident of itself.

Into the case at this point, then, will come a portion of the law of Georgia that is most picturesque and significant—a portion that is founded upon the very bedrock of decency and common sense, and that throws about all observers of the law and about all right-living men a protection as certain and as sure as it is majestic and noble.

Character Good Evidence.

In respect of CHARACTER as evidence of innocence of crime, I find that Chief Justice Simmons, in the 102d Georgia, said this:

"Evidence of good character is admitted as evidence of a positive fact, and may, of itself, by the creation of a reasonable doubt, produce acquittal!"

And, again, the same authority says:

"Of what avail is a good character, which a man may have been a lifetime in acquiring, if it is to benefit nothing in the hour of peril?"

Chief Justice Simmons was a Superior Court judge for some twenty years before he was elevated to the Supreme bench, and a Supreme Court justice for a like period.

He was one of the noblest men that Georgia ever produced, and one of the most profound and approved students of the law.

And he made good character the very Rock of Gibraltar upon which a man attacked might depend in time of peril!

Once the defense puts Leo Frank's character in issue, however, the State may attack it as bitterly and as vehemently as it likes.

This, it may be, the State is prepared to do.

Unless the State does break down Frank's character, however, once it is put in issue by his own attorneys, the State will be thereafter at a tremendous disadvantage, I think, particularly when the defense is undertaking to shoot the character of Conley to pieces from the other flank!

Character can not be broken down in a courtroom with whispered words and sinister gossip.

Must Attack in Open.

Under the impersonal rules of evidence and the law, character must be attacked in the open—it must be beaten down, if beaten down it be, with weapons the judge and the jury may see, wielded in fair play, and it must be a fight to a finish.

True, if a defendant deliberately puts his own character in issue, the burden is upon him to sustain his character; but once the law puts that burden upon a defendant, it holds in leash and sure control the State in its attempts to demolish it.

I have written of crimes and of criminals for fifteen years—of petty sneak thieves and bank robbers, of common back-alley bullies and murders, of brutes and degenerates, of clever confidence men and clumsy bunglers.

I have seen the innocent made victims of cruel circumstances and the unquestionably guilty escape, but I am yet to see a case in which good character, firmly and frankly set up, was not a tower of strength to the accused—a sure and abiding "benefit in his hour of peril," as Chief Justice Simmons says it should be!

After all is said and done, character is the corner stone upon which civilization and society most securely rests.

It holds the business world together, and it differentiates the wheat from the chaff in the professions.

Without it, the grand old name of gentleman is a mockery and a sham—and, above all things, it best marks the woman as fitted to her natural and noblest environment!

If Leo Frank puts his character in issue, it will be a challenge full and free to the State to do its worst—it well may be expected to make or mar the defense of Leo Frank, charged with the murder of Mary Phagan.

DECISIONS WHICH MAY AID DEFENSE OF FRANK

The old police reporter, in sizing up the many possibilities of the Phagan case, has reached two conclusions as to the line of action which he believes will be followed by the defense:

FIRST, he believes the defense will undertake to destroy the value of Conley's evidence, and fix upon Conley the guilt the State is trying to fix upon Frank.

SECOND, he thinks the defense will make the character of Leo Frank an issue.

The old police reporter, in poring through the files of the Georgia Supreme Court Reports, has found two decisions upon which he thinks the defense will rely.

The first which might be used to break down Conley's evidence is as follows:

If a witness swears willfullly and knowingly false, even to a collateral fact, his testimony ought to be rejected entirely, unless it be so corroborated by circumstances, or other unimpeached evidence, as to be irresistible.—23 GEORGIA REPORTS.

As a circumstance tending to prove Frank's innocence, the defense, the old police reporter thinks, will produce the following:

Evidence of good character is admitted as evidence of a positive fact, and may, of itself, by the creation of a reasonable doubt, produce acquittal!—102 GEORGIA REPORTS.

APPLICATION TO RELEASE LEE IS READY TO FILE

Negro's Lawyer Says He Will Offer Habeas Corpus When Solicitor Dorsey Returns.

On account of the absence from the city of Prosecuting Attorney Hugh M. Dosey, Bernard L. Chappell, attorney for Newt Lee, announced Saturday that he would not file a writ of habeas corpus until Monday. He claims in the petition for the release of the negro that Lee is being held unlawfully and without any charge against him.

Solicitor Dorsey left for his country place at Valdosta, Ga., Saturady morning. He will return Monday.

Solicitor General Hugh M. Dorsey will ask the courts to hold the negro as a material witness for the State, or may charge him with being an accessory. He was determined Friday to take no chances on so important a witness getting out of his control, as he feared the negro might get beyond the jurisdiction of the courts if given his liberty.

Attorney Chappell and Solicitor Dorsey had agreed, when the negro was committed to jail, to keep him there until the trial. Chappell notified Dorsey Wednesday that he wished to withdraw from the agreement and get his client freed.

Chief Discounts Conley Rumor.

The announcement Friday that the defense had secured an important and damaging affidavit that connected the State's star witness, Jim Conley, more directly with the crime created a sensation in the ranks of the prosecution.

Chief of Detectives Newport A. Lanford announced that every movement of the negro on the day of the crime had been "checked up," and that it was a matter of impossibility to find anything more damaging against him than his admission that he helped dispose of the body at the request of Frank.

In commenting on the affidavit secured at the office of Joseph H. Leavitt Thursday the attorney said that it would be almost impossible for the prosecution to break down any statement that was made in the affidavit when the witness was placed on the stand.

Calls Evidence Vital.

He said the witness was a citizen of high standing and would be one of the most important for the defense of Frank.

Attorney Leavitt said that this particular affidavit was one of more than 50 that had been recently secured that dealt almost exclusively with the movements of the negro on the day of the murder. While he would not comment at any length, he intimated that the defense had been able to establish conclusively the exact time Conley entered and left the factory.

He also intimated that affidavits had been secured that would show what time Monteen Stover entered and left the factory and be able to prove she left before Mary Phagan's car reached the vicinity of the pencil factory.

"End-Seat Hogs" to Receive Heavy Fines

Washington to Act After Woman and Baby Narrowly Escape Death in Leaving Car.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—Washington's "end seat hogs" will soon be amenable to law.

Commissioner Rudolph has taken the subject up with the Utilities Commission and announcement will be made in a few days. Convictions for refusing to "move up" in seats of the summer cars will probably be punished by a heavy fine.

"There have been many cases where accidents have been narrowly averted on account of the 'end seat hog,'" said Commissioner Rudolph. "One recent case was that of a woman with her baby in her arms about to alight from a car. A fat man obstructed her passage and she fell. It was just luck she was not killed."

LONDON, July 5.—Queen Mary has ordered the Cinema Company to burn the films of pictures it made recently by special permission of the King and Queen, showing Princess Mary and the two children of Sir Derek and Lady Keppel at tea in Buckingham Palace grounds.

Her reason is that the Princess Mary appeared in the pictures in a low-cut frock.

The Queen will pay the cost of the films, $185, but the Cinema Company is out at least $25,000.

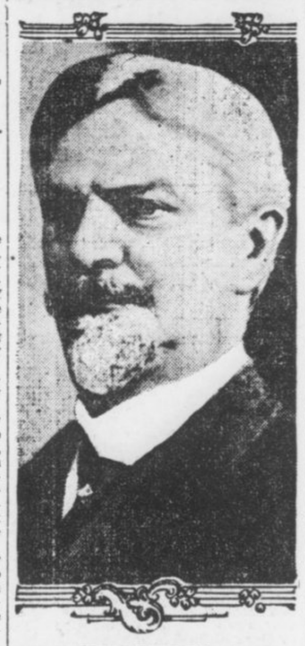
CONGRESSMAN Richard Bartholdt, of Missouri, charged with asking favors of steamship lines.



Bartholdt Accused in Own Private Letter

Missouri Congressman's Request of 20 Years Ago for Steamship Favors Brought Against Him.

ST. LOUIS, July 5.—Political opponents of Congressman Richard Bartholdt have just made public a photographic copy of a "confidential" letter which Bartholdt wrote 20 years ago to a personal friend, Major Eugene F. Weigel, whose influence he enlisted to obtain from the North German Lloyd Steamship Company "special rates" to Europe for himself and Mrs. Bartholdt.

The communication to Weigel, former Secretary of State of Missouri, followed the refusal of the North German Lloyd Company to extend transportation courtesies to the St. Louis Congressman, despite the fact, as stated in Bartholdt's letter, that he (Bartholdt) had expressed the opinion the "immigration question would, no doubt, form an important factor of the deliberations of the next Congress," when he expected to become a member of the House Immigration Committee and on which he was subsequently appointed.

WOMEN ASK STATE TO COMPEL MUSIC STUDY

JOPLIN, MO., July 5.—The study of music in all public school of Missouri will be compulsory if a plan advocated by the State Music Teachers' Association is adopted. A resolution carrying a provision that a petition making musical instruction a State law be circulated was adopted by the music teachers in convention here.

The association also decided to ask State authorities to give credits to public school students who study music from private instructors.

YOUNG PAGES IN MOCK SESSION APE SENATORS

Boys Legislate Against Senatorial Fire Water and Baneful "Soak Book."

WASHINGTON, July 7.—Visitors at the Senate wing of the Capitol recently saw such a session as they probably never will see again. It was the mock session, with the eighteen pages of the Senate acting the parts of Senators, while Joseph O'Toole, chief of pages, presided in Vice President Marshall's place.

The rules provide that pages shall not be under 12 years of age nor over 16, and their uniform is a white blouse shirt and knee breeches. With great dignity, save for occasional giggles, they introduced bills "for appropriate reference," offered resolutions and answered to the names of Senators when the roll was called. In the press gallery notes on the proceedings were taken with becoming solemnity.

One youngster introduced a bill that almost broke up the meeting. It bore the title "To prohibit Senators from using firewater, and for other purposes." Another was entitled "A bill to relieve a bull pup." It was duly referred to the committee on dog fights.

The opposition to these measures was led by a lad named McCoy, and he continued his leadership with great zest until a resolution was offerred directing the Sergeant-at-Arms to "put a Maxim silencer on McCoy."

The effectiveness of this parliamentary stroke was increased when it was noticed that Charles P. Higgins, Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, was standing in the doorway grinning. The bane of a page's existence is a little volume known as the "soak book," in which delinquent pages are "soaked" with various penalties. Young "Senator" McCoy was able to regain all his lost prestige by offering a resolution that the "soak book be burned with fire."

Acute Indigestion

T. M. WORD

For several years my wife suffered frequent attacks with acute indigestion. These attacks in their alarming frequency became the dread of my life. My wife never knew what she could eat without taking the risk of one of these attacks. We tried every remedy we could hear of, with only temporary relief. Sitting in my office one morning, feeling very despondent after spending a sleepless night and the terrible suspense over the alarming condition of my wife, a friend called my attention to Nuxcara, the wonderful stomach remedy, stating that Nuxcara would cure her without a doubt. I at once put her on the treatment, with the most happy results. She is entirely cured, and is in better health than she has been for years; eats anything she wants—Nuxcara is the most wonderful remedy I ever heard of.

My wife was so delighted with her experience with Nuxcara that she prevailed upon me to take it myself. I was suffering with a catarrhal condition which affected my liver and kidneys. I had been under the treatment of a specialist for my kidneys, who kept me on a diet for several months, but my condition seemed to grow worse and I was in a state of mind to make a change, so I began to take Nuxcara, which completely cured me in a short time. My health is perfect. I eat and sleep well; in fact, I never felt better in my life. I regard Nuxcara as an achievement in science unparalleled, a remedy which has no equal in all forms of stomach trouble.—T. M. Word, 373 Cherokee Avenue.

Demonstration of the wonderful merits of Nuxcara at Coursey & Munn's, corner Marietta and Broad Streets, by Dr. Shelnutt from 9 a. m. to 6 p. m. every day.

Acute Indigestion

Threatens everyone who has any disturbance of the digestive system—an uncomfortable feeling after eating is a warning which should not go unheeded, but Nuxcara should be taken at once and restore the digestive organs to a healthy condition, when there will be no danger from this often fatal attack. Nuxcara is guaranteed to be a positive and certain cure. The distress after eating is promptly relieved by a dose of Nuxcara.

Nuxcara

Is a scientific remedy which has been prescribed by eminent physicians for years with the most gratifying results in all forms of stomach troubles. Nuxcara was tested for ten years before offering it to the world as a positive and certain cure for indigestion, dyspepsia, catarrh and the many evils following the poisoning of the system with toxins from undigested and decomposing food in the digestive tracts. One may take digestive agents and relieve an attack of indigestion, but the poison generated through the decomposition of the undigested food may remain in the system for days before eliminated, and furnish the primary cause of another attack, besides setting up structural changes in the organisms. Nuxcara is positive and certain; restores the system to perfect health.

WORK PILES UP AS LEGISLATIVE DAYS GROW FEW

Leaders Recognize They Must Work at Sternest Pace To Pass Most Imperative Bills.

When the General Assembly convenes to-morrow morning there will remain just 33 working days of the first session ahead.

Thirty-eight days will remain of the 50-day limit, but five of those days will be Sundays, and will not count.

From the total of 33 working days left, moreover, five Saturdays, which are given over exclusively to local legislation, if the House does not adjourn over them entirely, must be taken out, which reduces the total of working days upon which general legislation may be handled to 28.

It therefore may be seen that when President Anderson and Speaker Burwell call the Senate and the House to order to-morrow, the summer session of 1913 will be practically half gone.

Within the remaining time, the General Assembly must pass a general appropriations bill, several tax reform bills and dispose of the various new county propositions to be brought before it, or fail in the legislative program mapped out for it by the Governor and the leaders of the two Houses.

Not a Bill Reported.

There have been already introduced in the two Houses something more than 200 bills, and not one yet has been reported back to either House from a committee, with a recommendation.

No bill yet has been read a second time, although one general bill, providing for Senator Bacon's election, was passed, and received the Governor's signature, in the record-breaking time of five days.

That the Senate and House leaders realize that time is slipping away from them, despite their inclination to push things along as rapidly as possible, is evidenced in the fact that there is a feverish desire perceptible among the committees to get busy this week, and send such bills as come before them back to the two Houses for action as soon as possible.

The Governor has placed the General Assembly on notice that he expects, and thinks he should have, the general appropriations bill in the executive office a good ten days before adjournment—or exactly four weeks from Monday.

That will mean that the House must dispose of it, send it to the Senate and then meet the Senate in conference for the adjournment of differences, all within less than a month.

After the Governor gets through with it, if he decides not to sign it, it must go back to both houses for further consideration, and with not more than five or six days left for that.

While the appropriations bill and the tax refor mmeasures are being considered, too, there will be something like 300 or 400 local bills to consider, and not less than 100 general bills of importance.

Legislature Ready for Work.

There is an evident disposition upon the part of the General Assembly not to declare any "dies non" during the present session—that is, non-legislative days, which are not counted in the 50 days' limit, and for which the members received no pay—and adjournment, therefore, confidently is predicted on August 13.

There are signs in plenty, however, notwithstanding the fact that so much of the first session already is gone, that the Legislature is fully prepared to get right down to hard work from to-day forward, and do the things expected of it.

Every committee of both the Senate and the House has been called to meet Monday at hours calculated as nearly as possible not to cause confusion among the more important.

Tuesday bills will begin coming back to the two houses from the committees, with recommendations, and within the week some general legislation should be well along the road to enactment.

Chairman Crawford Wheatley has promised to get the big general appropriations bill out of his committee within ten days, and the Ways and Means Committee will take the matter of the tax act immediately in hand for speedy disposition.

It is not likely that either afternoon or night sessions will be called soon, as that time will be needed by the members for committee meetings.

Afternoon sessions will come along about the last ten days of the session and night sessions the last three or four days.

One of the bills sure to engage the immediate attention of both the Senate and the House is Senator Foster's bill to provide for prison inspection in Georgia.

Prison Complaints Frequent.

Complaints of wretched prison conditions throughout the State have been getting more and more frequent of late years, and some of the State prisons are said to be in unpardonably unsanitary condition.

Senator Foster's bill provides for rigid prison inspections, at stated intervals, and sanitary reform wherever indicated.

Another bill that will attract considerable attention is the one by Mr. Adams, providing for a central place of execution of all criminals convicted fo capital offenses and sentenced to death.

This bill has the indorsement of many students of crime and prison conditions throughout the nation, and is framed to make less probable the chance of lynchings, particularly in those rural counties where the jails are insecure and easily broken into by mobs.

Mr. Adams' bill seeks to make Atlanta the central place of execution for crime, but an amendment will be offered, so it is understood, seeking to substitute Milledgeville, the place of the general penitentiary.

There seems to be a disposition among many members of the General Assembly to get the proposed new county propositions out of the way as soon as may be, and to that end the House Committee on Constitutional Amendments is expected to send Barrow and Candler back with a recommendation by the middle of the week.

Others will be taken up immediately, in the order of their introduction, and passed upon rapidly.

Governor Slaton is understood to be engaged almost exclusively now seeking out a way whereby the common school teachers may be taken care of and their past due salaries paid.

Will Use Borrowing Power.

He will exercise his borrowing power to the extent he can, but he fears that will not be sufficient to relieve the embarrassment.

Speaker Burwell stated Saturday afternoon that he proposed keeping the House strictly down to hard work from now on, and President Anderson, of the Senate, is understood to feel the same way about the chamber over which he presides.

Judge Newman Still Eager to Work Plans Activities at Retiring Age Will Quit Bench When He Gets Old

Judge W. T. Newman, of the United States District Court. Though he is past the retiring age, Judge Newman's photograph shows his present vigor.

Federal Jurist Says He's as Able to Serve Country Now as When He Left Army.

One fine morning last week Federal Judge William T. Newman awoke to find that he had turned the seventieth milestone in his earthly journey, thereby qualifying for retirement, on pay, from the bench and from worry.

He looked well into the situation. He felt as fit as a Marathon runner, and not a day older than on the memorable morning in 1864 when he rode into a battle at Jonesboro to have his right arm shot away by a bullet from the gun of a Union soldier.

"So why," inquired he of a Sunday American reporter Saturday, "should I think of getting out of harness? I feel that I can still do good work. I am told that my work is giving satisfaction. Therefore, I shall not retire. Not now."

Judge Newman has occupied the bench of the United States Court of the Northern District of Georgia since 1886, and has held court in most of the cities of Georgia. The lawyers, watching his career, knew when the seventieth birthday came, June 23, and a number of letters were sent to him, friendly, congratulatory letters, expressing the hope that he remain on the bench.

Not Ready to Quit.

"Even if I had thought of quitting," he said, "these assurances would have been enough to show me that I still can render service. The day I find that an impairment of mental or physical faculties renders me unfit, then I shall quit. My duty to the Government I serve would demand that. But now—well, if my friends didn't remind me that I had reached my seventieth birthday, I wouldn't know it or believe it.

"When a man retires, to become a watcher of this very interesting world, instead of taking a part in its activities, then it is a sign that he is through—that he has quit.

"To quit—to merely look on, to read the papers, to pass the time of day, to go to the baseball game, to drop work—the idea has no appeal for me.

"As long as I can render service, I feel that I should remain at work. Every man should. As soon as I can not render service, then I shall quit, in this respect, a judge is somewhat different from a private citizen. A judge owes it to the public to step down and out when his usefulness passes; a citizen, whose business is his own, and his own affair, can stay on and make a mess of it, to nobody's harm but his own.

"But while he can, a man should stick on the job."

Work, Judge Newman thinks, is every man's function.

"There is a moral and a spiritual satisfaction in labor," he said, "when you know that you are doing it well. Then there is physical well-being also. Retirement from a part in the world's affairs means inaction. Inaction spells physical decay.

"This world is a mighty interesting place when you know that you have a hand, however small, in its work."

Was Confederate Cavalryman.

Judge Newman was born June 23, 1843, in Knoxville, Tenn. When he was 17 years old he enlisted in the Second Tennessee Cavalry, of the Confederate Army, and the next year was promoted to a lieutenancy. Early in 1863 he was wounded and captured by the Federals, and later in the year was exchanged. His career as a soldier ended at the battle of Jonesboro, Ga., in 1864, when a bullet found his right arm, necessitating its removal.

After the war he located in Atlanta, became a lawyer, and from 1871 until 1883 was city attorney. In 1886 he received the appointment as United States judge, and has held the position now for 27 years.

Judge Newman enjoys a great popularity among the lawyers who practice in his court, and among laymen as well. A sincere tribute was that embodied in resolutions adopted by the Federal Grand Jury upon the occasion of his birthday.

ELKS ARRIVE IN ROCHESTER FOR REUNION

Southern Men Are Candidates for High Offices of Order on "Insurgent" Ticket.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., July 5.—The vanguard of the thousands of delegates to the forty-ninth annual reunion of Grand Lodge, B. P. O. E., who will invade Rochester during the next week, will begin to arrive in the city to-morrow. Preparations have been made for the reception of the visiting delegations and members of the Grand Lodge reunion committee of Rochester lodge will be at the various railroad stations throughout the day to extend the glad hand to the early arrivals.

Some of the visitors, including the Denver delegation, which is "plugging" for the 1914 reunion, have already arrived in the city, and a number of the Grand Lodge officers and candidates for Grand Lodge offices came to the city yesterday to open headquarters, which have been established at the Hotel Seneca.

Elaborate preparations have been made for the entertainment of the visitors, and there will not be an idle moment during the whole week, while some of the days are crammed so full of entertainment that the delegates and visitors will have to remain up night and day in order to participate in the generous amusements provided by the committee on entertainment.

Sulzer to Welcome Elks.

The Grand Lodge will formally open its sessions to-morrow night in Convention Hall, when addresses will be delivered by Governor Sulzer, who will welcome the herd on behalf of the State; Mayor Edgerton, who will extend the freedom of the city and welcome the visitors on behalf of the citizens of Rochester; former County Attorney Arthur Warren, who will extend the reunion committee's welcome to the Grand Lodge, and former Assemblyman John J. McInerney, who will welcome the Elks on behalf of the 1,800 members of Rochester lodge.

Two Southern Candidates.

Chief interest of the business sessions naturally centers in the election of officers and selection of the next meeting place. Two Southern "insurgent" Elks are candidates for the two most important offices in the Grand Lodge, opposing "machine" candidates from the North and West.

J. Cookman Boyd, a lawyer of Baltimore, is the insurgent opponent of Edward Leach, a New York business man, for exalted ruler. They are supported, respectively, by the factions that in 1909 at Los Angeles divided between J. U. Sammis and Garry Herrmann for this office, Sammis being then elected and in 1910 being succeeded by Herrmann.

T. J. Darling, postmaster at Temple, Texas, is the insurgent opponent of Fred Robinson, of Dubuque, Ia., who has held the office of grand secretary for nine years. David McAaron, of Grand Rapids, is also aspiring for this office.

The convention will continue until Saturday, and among the big features will be the annual Grand Lodge parade of visiting delegations, patrols and floats on Thursday morning, competitive prize drills in the afternoon and the annual spectacular water carnival and pyrotechnical display on the upper river in Genesee Valley Park at night. The Grand Lodge ball will be held in the Armory Friday night, and during the week there will be pleasure rides by automobile, steamboat and trolley car in and around Rochester, band concerts, ball games, roastfests at the lake and at Moerlbach Park and various other forms of entertainment.

The Grand Lodge reunion committee has expended $15,000 on electrical illuminations alone and thousands of dollars additional have been put into decorations of various kinds in streets in the downtown section and in the park.

C. O. D. PARCEL POST TO SWELL ATLANTA TRADE

Business in New Postal Department Increasing With Great Rapidity, Says McKee.

"A breezy, bang-up, rushing business, increasing every day," is the way Postmaster Hugh McKee last night characterized the C. O. D. parcel post law, which went into effect July 1.

"I have never seen anything which has found so much favor with large and small retail and wholesale dealers and manufacturers," he continued. "Only to-day three of Atlanta's largest manufacturers came to me and said that they were enthusiastic over the opportunity presented to branch out through the C. O. D. parcel post.

"The C. O. D. parcel post will produce a much larger business in smaller orders, they told me. The cost of postage is nominal and all they will have to do is to advertise their wares in the Atlanta papers and let people in this vicinity know that it is not necessary to come into town to purchase.

"I especially urge department stores to advertise. The business to be gained will not come to them. They must go after it. I also would encourage the farmers and rural population to use the C. O. D. parcel post. The people in the country will not need to leave home and drive ten to twelve miles in the hot sun. All they have to do is to order by C. O. D.

"There is a great field for the little truck grower in the use of the C. O. D. parcel post. We have 174 miles of rural free delivery routes out of the Atlanta postoffice. This embraces all territory within a radius of fifteen miles of the city, and in this territory are grown more than enough fresh vegetables to supply the entire city. The trouble is that at present the farmers do not bring their produce to town, and consequently it must be sent from other sections by rail."

Refreshing, Cool and Healthful

Recommended Especially if Inclined to Be Stout

IT is like a dip into the cool, bracing ocean, and has the same invigorating tonic effect upon the system, cooling, refreshing, throwing off fatigue and lassitude and soothing and strengthening the nervous system. And by taking these baths in warm water, there is a tendency to throw off abnormal flesh or fat, and without the slightest disadvantageous results, as is evident with almost all other treatments.

Jacobs' Perfumed Bath Salt is a most delightful addition to the bath, very cooling and refreshing, and beneficial in every way. It is also decidedly helpful in reducing the weight. Pleasantly perfumed with Verbena, Rose, Violet and Apple Blossom; handsome toilet bottles, 50c.

This Elixir has a slightly sweet taste with an agreeable sharp tang; it is taken without any disguisement, and no one can tell that it is other than a pleasant tonic.

It is a cold pressed oil with aromatics, carminatives and 2 grs. phenolphthalein to the ounce, which increases its efficiency as a mild purgative and at the same time reduces the dose. Children and infants like it. You will be more than satisfied with it. 25c.

Nursing a Baby

IS a serious problem because there is many times a deficiency either in the quantity or the quality of the child's natural food. In either case should be used. The mother will find her milk enriched and the supply increased by its use, owing to the stimulation of the lacteal glands by the (non-alcoholic) malt which is combined with strengthening extracts of wheat and with rich, creamy milk to form the food.

BORDEN'S Malted Milk

50c size 39c; $1.00 size 78c.

HUSBAND GONE, WIFE BELIEVES HIM LYNCHED

Fortune Teller's Story So Impresses Woman That She Asks Warrants for Sawmill Men.

DALTON, July 5.—Judge S. B. Felker and others present in his office were decidedly startled when a woman entered and calmly announced that her husband had been hanged and his body disposed of by three men, adding that she wanted warrants for the arrests of several men employed at the Nations sawmill. On being questioned she stated that a fortune teller had given her the information and his evidence was all she had except the fact that her husband had disappeared.

The woman gave her name as Mrs. Will Grady.

When Judge Felker refused to issue the warrants the woman turned to Constable Gilbert and told him her husband's life was insured for $500, and if he would find the body she would give him half of the life insurance.

Mrs. Grady's earnestness was apparent. She told of the vivid impression left by the fortune teller's words. She had gone to the soothsayer following her husband's disappearance after three months of wedded life, and he, after going into a trance, vividly described to her the scene of three men "stringing up" her husband.

She then visited the sawmill at which her husband had been employed, and was told by some of the employees that he had gone to Alabama, while others said he was in North Carolina. These conflicting statements aroused her suspicion.

Miss Emma Gilbert Eludes Parents at Dalton and Drives to Spring Place.

DALTON, July 5.—Hundreds of people on Hamilton Street yesterday afternoon witnessed the beginning of an unusually romantic elopement which culminated at Spring Place, Murray County, to-day.

While the parents of Miss Emma Gilbert, aged 15 years, were at the depot awaiting a train to get her out of the way of Love Pool, the young people being bent on marriage, Pool had a friend to drive up. As the parents boarded the train the girl made a dash for the buggy. The friends drove her to where Pool was waiting. Then the question of a marriage license interfered, for Judge Wood, Ordinary, acting on previous instructions from the father, refused to issue it.

Not to be balked after getting an auspicious start, Pool secured a buggy at a livery stable here to-day and with his bride-to-be drove to Spring Place for the marriage license and wedding ceremony.

Butcher Pen Expose Cuts Sales of Meat

Griffin Residents Start Move for Abattoir, Following Disclosures in Newspaper.

GRIFFIN, July 5.—Although Griffin meat dealers are angry over the report regarding their markets and slaughter pens by State Inspector Hutchens, the people of the city are rejoicing over the new order of things that has been established since the report was printed in full in the local paper.

Conditions revealed by the inspector's report rivaled the reputation of the Chicago packing houses. Some of the citizens of the town went to inspect for themselves. They told the others. Every market in the city has been overhauled to some extent, and a move is on for a city abattoir. Meanwhile sales of fresh meats have decreased, while the supply of chickens has been practically consumed.

Another good result of the inspector's report is the beginning of a campaign for cleanliness on all lines throughout the city. The Board of Health is giving special attention to the milk supply and drinking water.

"The first one ran off with another man's wife," said Judge Glenn; "the second went to the penitentiary; the third dropped dead, and the fourth was struck by lightning and made a cripple for life."

All of which is true, and Judge Glenn gave a list of the names of the four men who have studied law in his office.

SAYS OFFICER ATTEMPTED TO SLAY BROTHER

Rome Real Estate Man Secures Warrant for Policeman Who Clubbed Prisoner.

ROME, July 5.—As result of the arrest of Jake Collins for alleged drunkenness and disorderly conduct, Will Collins, his brother and well-known East Side real estate man, today had a warrant sworn out for Policeman Henry Selman, charging him with assault with attempt to murder. Considerable feeling exists over the affair.

Collins was in an automobile with a companion when Selman and another officer attempted to arrest him. Collins, they say, was drunk and had been riding carelessly. They claim Collins resisted and struck at Selman. In the scuffle Selman, it is alleged, clubbed Collins over the head several times. Blood flowed from his wounds.

Collins claims he offered to ride in auto with officers to station, and that instead the police patrol was called and hauled him to the lockup. Large crowd, a majority of whom appeared in sympathy with Collins, gathered round the City Hall, and for a while trouble was feared. Officers were prepared for any attack, but none came.

Charges of conduct unbecoming officers have also been preferred with the police committee against two other officers, and an effort will be made by Collins to have them discharged from the force.

Bride-to-Be Stays Up All Night Rather Than Cheat Law of Few Seconds.

COLUMBUS, IND., July 5.—Miss Zyrl kept Cupid waiting until exactly midnight when she reached her eighteenth birthday, because she would not break the law covering legal marriageable age and marry Daniel Hughes to whom her parents had objected.

But not more than a minute elapsed before she stealthily withdrew from her house, whose parents were sleeping, and met Hughes not far away, waiting in an automobile. They drove to this city, wakened John Houk, Deputy County Clerk, and with him went to the court house, where she became Mrs. Daniel Hughes. Albert Jackson, a farmer, of Rock Creek Township, is her father, and Jacob A. Hughes, former County Commissioner, is father of the bridegroom.

Weather Prophet's Forecast Fulfilled

Griffin Observer Predicts Storm Which Comes on Fourth—Populace Now Does Him Reverence.

GRIFFIN, July 5.—Griffin's weather forecaster is much more respected today than ever before.

A month ago Albert L. Snyder, the local prognosticator, predicted that July would be a hot and dry month. He declared that on the Fourth rainstorms would be general, and that winds would rise to a dangerous strength.

Exactly as predicted, the month up to date has been warm and dry, and, according to schedule, the Fourth was ushered in with a good prospect, but was a stormy day before it was over.

Several thousand persons were assembled at the Spalding County Fair Grounds to celebrate. In midafternoon a terrific wind arose, accompanied by bad looking clouds. The celebration was broken up and people driven to shelter. Before nightfall a heavy downpour of rain came.

Professor Snyder predicts hail storms for the 9th, with cold spells on the 10th and 11th, and another cold season on the 18th.

Jumps Ministry to Try Law in Atlanta

Rev. Dent Atkinson Also Leaves Republican Party to Follow Thomas Jefferson.

GRIFFIN, July 5.—The Rev. Dr. Dent Atkinson, connected with the Chautauqua here, made an unusual leap when in one breath he withdrew from the Presbyterian ministry, from the Republican party, from educational work, and decided to enter the profession of law, enter the Democratic party, be received into the Georgia bar, and locate in Atlanta.

For 20 years Dr. Atkinson has been a minister of the most orthodox type in the Presbyterian denomination, and has held some important pulpits. He has taken a three years' course in law at the Ohio Northern University, as well as taking a degree at Harvard. He is an Englishman by birth, but has spent the greater part of his life in America.

While here Dr. Atkinson appeared before Judge R. T. Daniel, of the Flint Circuit, and was admitted to the bar of Georgia. In September Dr. Atkinson will begin the practice of law in Atlanta.

PASTOR STARTS BUILDING PLAN ON PLUCK ONLY

None of Dr. Harris' Members Affluent, but $25,000 Church Will Be Erected, He Says.

AUGUSTA, July 5.—The Rev. R. E. L. Harris, pastor of the Woodlawn Baptist Church of Augusta, has plenty of pluck and determination; else he wouldn't attempt to build a $25,000 church with not a single wealthy member.

Mr. Harris is known throughout Georgia. He has been pastor in many towns along the Georgia Railroad and is highly regarded as a minister and as a man. He is a brother of Mrs. Mary Harris Armor, the celebrated temperance lecturer.

Mr. Harris came to Augusta three years ago. His church is located on Chafee Avenue, just off Walton Way. Until Dr. Harris came the members seemed satisfied with the modest wooden structure.

However, they soon began to increase, and enthusiasm and fervor were injected into the members, who had been, before Mr. Harris' coming, unmindful of the great work which their church was capable of accomplishing.

"How do you expect to build a $25,000 brick edifice with not a single member of your church affluent?" was asked of Mr. Harris by a representative of The Sunday American.

"Why, of course, we do not expect to build the church entirely by ourselves," he said, "for we have friends and expect to call on them. We have been planning to build this church for over a year and have a considerable sum in hand, and much more in prospect.

"Patience, persistence and faith in the Lord will bring to pass many things that seem impossible, and we certainly expect to have our new church erected and paid for within the next few years."

The plans for the new church have been completed by the architects, and it will be a handsome structure, fully three times as large as the present building, and modern in every respect.

Augusta Pastors to Urge Prison Reform

Special Sermons To Be Preached by Leading Ministers for This Cause.

AUGUSTA, July 5.—A number of Augusta pastors have set aside tomorrow to preach on the wretched condition of the prisons of Georgia and the prisoners within their walls. In response to a letter from the Atlanta Ministers' Conference, making an appeal that the subject be discussed from the pulpits to-morrow, several ministers have indicated that they will do so.

The movement to better prison conditions started by the Men and Religion Forward Movement is expected to accomplish good results, according to a leading local minister, and Richmond County's Representatives in the General Assembly will be urged to favor any bill that tends to improve conditions in Georgia prisons and among Georgia prisoners.

In Addition to This Mark She Is First Graduate and Valedictorian of Her Class.

MACON, July 5.—When Miss Marian Williams graduated from the Gresham High School with first honor she completed the only perfect record credited to any pupil in the history of the public schools of Macon.

During the eleven years of her school life, Miss Williams has been perfect in her studies. At the end of each month of every year at the school she took home a card denoting excellence in every course and also excellence in conduct. At the end of each year she was awarded first honor.

Miss Williams, who is the daughter of Luther Williams, the president of the Williams Banking Company, is the first honor graduate of the Gresham High School. As long as the high school only had a two-year course, honors were not bestowed, but two years ago the curriculum was changed to a four-year course.

She not only graduated with first honor in this course, but she was also complimented by being selected as valedictorian. Her address was one of the conspicuous features of the commencement exercises.

Miss Williams has signified her intention of entering Wesleyan College next fall, taking up both the regular collegiate work and special study in music. Her school associates and former teachers predict a brilliant college career for her.

At the State High School meet in Athens this week Miss Williams won the State essay championship. She had previously won the Sixth District essay honor.

NURSE IS GIVEN HONOR AS MILL DISTRICT ANGEL

Mrs. Louise Talbott Inaugurated Great Work in Relieving Distress of Poor Operatives.

AUGUSTA, July 5.—Suffering among hundreds of the 12,000 cotton mill district residents, some of whom are in want because of misfortune, others because of improvidence and extravagance, several years ago caused the formation of a Home Comfort Society with Mrs. W. H. Barrett as president, and Mrs. Warren Walker as secretary and treasurer. The society employed Miss Louise Biggar as district nurse and began a work the extent of which even the founders did not anticipate.

Miss Biggar, now Mrs. Louise Talbott, was a ministering angel in the mill district. She worked in conjunction with city physicians, attended clinics at which Drs. W. C. Kellogg, C. I. Bryans, W. A. Mulherin, Hinton Brooks and others prescribed for those who needed treatment and saw that their instructions were carried out.

She made daily trips to the homes of the sick, gave them their medicine and often cooked for the wife who was sick. She had drunken husbands sent to the stockade until they promised to reform; has forced men with two or three wives to change their mode of living and taught cleanliness to the children.

She has stressed the importance of parents sending their children to the John Milledge School, the $100,000 structure; has washed and scrubbed and taught and begged to get improved conditions.

President Murphy, of the Board of Health, even allowed her to write prescriptions when she couldn't procure a physician.

During the summer she distributed money collected by a local newspaper to furnish milk and ice to the babies of the mill district. Indeed, the district nurse began the transformation of a part of the population of Augusta by teaching the necessity of thrift, economy, cleanliness, good morals and education.

Mrs. Talbott at present is the nurse for an Augusta insurance company, but the work goes on. But instead of the Home Comfort Society paying the district nurse the city is paying her and there will be more district nurses in Augusta in the near future, for the task is too big for one person.

W. J. MASSEE PAYS $7,000 TO TENNESSEEAN

Criminal and Civil Prosecution Dropped by R. W. Williams. Former Stock Farm Partner.

MACON, July 5.—W. J. Massee, the Macon capitalist, has settled the prosecution of civil and criminal cases, which have kept him out of Tennessee for several years, by paying R. W. Williams, of Columbia, Tenn., $7,000.

The indictment, charging Massee with criminal extortion and libel, was dismissed at Nashville to-day upon motion of the Attorney General of Davidson County, and Williams at the same time dismissed his $25,000 suit for damages, in consideration of the payment of the $7,000.

A jury last year awarded Williams a verdict for $16,000, but the United State Court of Appeals last week set it aside and gave Massee a new trial, on the ground that the trial judge did not have the right to reduce the verdict to $7,500 as was done.

Massee and Williams were formerly partners in a stock farm. While at a club in Nashville several years ago Massee, it was alleged, made a remark reflecting on Williams' character. Williams then brought suit and also procured a grand jury indictment.

Requests for extradition of Massee were served on both Governors Smith and Brown, and were declined by them. Last year Massee was arrested in South Carolina, but Governor Hooper, of Tennessee, withdrew the request for extradition just when Governor Blease said he would honor it.

UNDERGROUND WIRES ORDERED BY ALDERMEN

Telephone Company Raises Rates in Dublin, Council Retaliating by Demanding Improvements.

DUBLIN, July 5.—The City Council has passed an ordinance requiring the Southern Bell Telephone Company to put all wires inside the fire limits underground at once. Also from now on when a street is to be paved, if the wires upon it are not already underground, they must be put underground.

This ordinance is the sequel of a lively fight over the recent raise in telephone rates of 50 cents all around. The company entered into a contract with the city when the exchange was purchased to charge $1.50 per month for residence phones on duplex lines until the number of phones in the exchange reached 500, then the price was to go up to $2.

When notice was served by the officials of the company several months ago that the rental would be raised, there was a loud protest. The raise stood, and the ordinance is in retaliation.

Brave Parson Tells Girls How to Dress

More Modest Clothes, Also More Clothes, Needed Reform, Says Savannah Preacher.

SAVANNAH, July 5.—"How Women Should Dress" will be discussed from the pulpit by the Rev. John S. Wilder, pastor of the South Side Baptist Church, to-morrow evening.

Mr. Wilder believes the present day women not only should wear more modest clothes, but also more clothes. The filmsy, clinging gowns, the tight skirts and those made with slits, which now are so popular, will be arraigned by Mr. Wilder.

"I don't intend to spare anything that has come under my observation, and I intend to tell the women some things that they seemingly have overlooked," he said.

MULE TEAM RUNS AWAY WITH WAYCROSS AUTO

WAYCROSS, July 5.—Mules hitched to the automobile of Charles T. Strickland, of this city, to-day became frightened at a passing train near Waycross and ran away, taking the machine into the woods with them and finally leaving it lodged against a large pine. The supply of gasoline had given out and the auto was being brought into the city at the time of the runaway. One mule was badly hurt. The car was not damaged.

WARE COUNTY OBJECTS TO LOSING ANY TERRITORY

WAYCROSS, July 5.—Failure to find any unanimous sentiment in any section of Ware County for the creation of new counties that include in their areas portions of this county probably will cause Ware's delegation in the Legislature to oppose all new county propositions that in any way cut into this county. Three different new county movements touch Ware, those advocated by Nicholls, Alma and Pearson.

FARMERS AND LABOR UNIONS TO JOIN IN PICNIC

WAYCROSS, July 5.—James Cowart, president of the Ware County Farmers' Union, has issued a general invitation for the picnic which will be given in Waycross Saturday, July 12. The Farmers' Union and unions of this city will join in giving the picnic.

KILLS GIRL AND SHOOTS SELF BECAUSE OF JEALOUSY

SAVANNAH, July 5.—Prompted by jealousy, Hugh Harrison shot and killed Ruth Hester, 21 years of age, in a house at 521 Broughton Street, and then turned the weapon upon himself in an effort to end his own life. He is in the Savannah Hospital seriously wounded.

Georgia Man Has World's Only Terrapin Farm Discovers How to Incubate the Diamond Back

Alexander M. Barbee, of Savannah, Shows Government Experts He Can Prevent Extinction.

Alexander M. Barbee and two of his finest terrapin. Below is a scene on his terrapin farm.

SAVANNAH, July 5.—At Isle of Hope, a Savannah suburb, is the only farm in the world where diamond back terrapin are hatched and reared by artificial means. Alexander M. Barbee, proprietor of this unique industry, has solved the problem of terrapin propagation. He claims to hatch and rear more young terrapin than the females themselves, because the protection he gives the eggs and young from the enemies of the turtle family. He sells terrapin regularly to hotels and restaurants of the larger cities.

Barbee now has a business that brings him a handsome income. He has done what experts at Washington failed to do. He has hit upon a method of incubation. His discovery was accidental, but it probably means the prevention of the extinction of the diamond back terrapin.

The terrapin farm at Isle of Hope is one of the show places of Savannah. Thousands visit it annually. Five hundred baby terrapin were sold to tourists as souvenirs last winter. There are more than 5,000 terrapin in the 18 pens on the farm, not including 5,000 that have not reached a marketable age.

The terrapin know Barbee's voice and step. They will come at his call and eat out of his hand, but scurry to cover at the approach of a stranger.

Terrapin intended for the market are kept segregated, and there is a special hospital pen, where sick terrapin are isolated from the well ones. The loss by death is exceedingly small. The terrapin are sold by the dozen and in barrel lots through the winter season.

Artificial incubation of terrapin eggs heretofore has ben considered an impossibility. There are now 5,000 eggs in the incubators, and the little terrapin are coming out every day. There are 30 incubators on the farm. Incubation in the hatcheries occupies approximately 12 weeks, which is twice as long as is necessary under natural conditions. Out of the 5,000 eggs in the incubators Barbee expects to raise 4,500 terrapin.

Barbee started 23 years ago. He now is an expert and is acting in cooperation with fisheries experts at Washington. It is probable that the Federal Government eventually will adopt some of his ideas with a view to restocking depleted streams and swamps along the Southeastern coast.

Few Eaten in South.

The demand for terrapin is small south of Baltimore. Atlanta, Macon and other cities in this and neighboring States usually purchase a dozen or more in a winter to supply tourists. It is said before the war that slaves along the coast counties were fed upon them extensively.

Barbee sells direct to the larger hotels in Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia, Pittsburg, New York and Boston. With the growing scarcity of diamond backs French chefs are substituting cheaper and inferior terrapin. Men with discriminating taste though can tell when the distinctive flavor of the diamond back is lacking.

The farm on which the terrapin are raised is securely enclosed and roofed, but well ventilated. The entire place can be flooded with water at will. Pens always are flooded when the terrapin are fed, usually about three times a week in the spring and summer and not at all in the winter, when the terrapin bury themselves for their annual hibernation. Barbee has had to dig as deep as three feet to unearth terrapin for the winter trade. They are packed into a barrel like potatoes.

The trouble with raising terrapin heretofore always has been that the animals when in confinement will invariably eat their own eggs. It was many years before Barbee was able to overcome this trouble.

One day, after feeding, a small hillock of sand was left in one of the pens by the receding waters. The following morning Barbee found this hillock literally sown with fresh eggs. He has since learned that terrapin always seek elevations in which to deposit their eggs. Hillocks of sand are now carefully prepared and maintained in each of the breeding pens. Barbee has only to turn this sand over with his hands to uncover the eggs.

Follow Barbee Like Dogs.

Barbee calls the terrapin with a peculiar clucking sound. They also will respond to his whistle, crawling over his feet and almost up his legs to get at their food. They also will come when he waves a handkerchief. Barbee once went into the pens wearing a new suit of clothes and a new pair of shoes. His pets raced away in a panic of fear.

Barbee's dogs run about the farm at will, carefully avoiding stepping on the terrapin, which pay not the least attention.

Barbee's particular favorite among the terrapin is Toby. Nobody knows precisely how old Toby is. He was among the first terrapin Barbee secured, and he was already an adult when he first came to the farm. Toby lives in a fountain in the center of Barbee's restaurant. The alligators grew up with Toby. Toby is as gentle and docile as a dog. When taken out of the water he follows Barbee like a dog.

Barbee replenishes his stock with hundreds of fresh terrapin every summer. He furnishes nets to negroes up and down the coast of Georgia and South Carolina, who sell him their catch at the market. Barbee makes a round of his nets every two weeks during the season.

Diamond back terrapin are distributed along the eastern coast of North and Central America from Buzzard's Bay to Yucatan. All live in salt or brackish water and find their most congenial homes in low-lying swamps and protected bays or inlets. Barbee's tarrapin do not have access to salt water at all, but appear to thrive just as well without it. The little terrapin are dropped into a bucket of fresh water several days after they are hatched.

Sleep Through Winter.

The period of hibernation of the terrapin begins soon after the advent of cool weather, but for some weeks he emerges whenever there is a warm day. Eventually he buries himself at the bottom of a pool and remains until spring. Eggs are laid in May and June. The female, with her hind legs, digs a hole in a convenient bank, and at a depth from five to six inches deposits five to twelve eggs. She then covers up the nest and departs.

The eggs hatch in about six weeks, if the weather is warm, but may require twice as long if the season is a cold one. The young soon after hatching go to the marsh and dig into the ground, where they spend the first winter and a part of the second summer. The growth is, for a turtle, fairly rapid, the average increase in length being about one inch a year until five inches is reached, when it becomes slower. Twenty-five or thirty years is the limit of life.

The food of the diamond back terrapin consists largely of crustaceans and mollusks it catches and crushes, but as its jaws are weak it is compelled to feed upon the smaller and softer animals of these groups. During exceptionally high tides it sometimes follows the water into the grassy lowlands, and catches and eats insects. The tender shoots and rootlets of some of the marsh plants also are eaten. Barbee feeds his terrapin on shrimp and finely chopped fish or meat.

ASK EXTENSION OF STATE ROAD VIA WAYCROSS

Several Counties Organizing to Push Senator Sweat's Scheme for Lengthening Line.

WAYCROSS, July 5.—Several counties are discussing the organization of an association for the purpose of promoting the suggested route for the State railroad extension via Fort Valley and Waycross to St. Marys and Jacksonville.

Right of way through nearly all counties named by Judge Sweat in his resolution before the Georgia Senate will be given to the State, and some counties have gone further and agreed to use their convicts in building the roadbed. This, it is argued, will materially reduce the cost.

Waycross for a number of years has hoped for the extension. Because of the low cost of constructing a road along what is known as the ridge route of Georgia, which would bring the road via Waycross, the territory traversed is among that in the State undergoing most rapid development. The State owns vast terminals already at St. Marys, and this is a fact that it is thought will have much weight with the commission if Governor Slaton appoints one.

Three Towns 'Kick' on R.F.D. Mail Service

Taylors Creek, Flemington and Trinity, in Liberty County, Want Postoffices Reopened.

SAVANNAH, July 5.—Three thriving Liberty County postal centers have a big kick on against the Democratic administration.

The postoffices at Taylors Creek, Flemington and Trinity, all of which have been in operation for many years, have been closed, and these towns have been made a part of a rural free delivery route that meanders out of Hinesville into the wilds of Liberty County.

As a result, it requires nearly a week to write a letter in Savannah, dispatch it and receive an answer from one of the towns named.

Congressman Edwards and Senator Bacon and Senator Smith are being bombarded with letters and telegrams from their constituents demanding that something be done to improve conditions.

2 Adjudged Insane By Savannah Juries

Woman Insisted on Posing in the Nude—Man Believed Himself Mental Replica of Christ.

SAVANNAH, GA., July 5.—J. H. Meredith, a white man, has been adjudged insane. He suffered from an hallucination that he was patterned after Christ in every particular, and that this distinction was confined to himself and one other man.

Meredith told the commission that he communes with the stars, and that he understands them as the three Wise Men did the star that led them to Bethlehem.

Julia Bryan, who insisted upon posing in the nude, was also sent to Milledgeville by a lunacy commission. While she was in jail she refused to wear any clothes. The weather was favorable to the humoring of her whim, but the commission was not.

Lanier's Motion for New Trial Up Soon

Acquittal of Wife May Have Important Bearing on Case of Convicted Man.

WAYCROSS, July 5.—Three weeks hence the motion of W. C. Lanier for a new trial will be heard by Judge T. A. Parker. Lanier is under life sentence for murder, convicted at the May term for killing an infant.

His wife, who was indicted jointly with him, was acquitted at an adjourned term of court in June. It is likely that in the motion for new trial it will be stated that evidence of a material nature that was not given at Lanier's trial has been secured and that Lanier should be given the benefit of this.

SCHOOL BOARD REFUSES TO VACATE ITS OFFICES

WAYCROSS, July 5.—Because the county commissioners have given the offices of the County Board of Education to Sheriff Pittman, due to crowded conditions at the courthouse, a lively scrap is in prospect when the board meets next Tuesday. County Superintendent J. R. Bourn has so far failed to vacate the office. That an order ejecting the county board from the courthouse will be issued by the commissioners is probable. This, it is said, will be resisted, and the outcome ihs awaited with interest.

PLANS PREPARED FOR UNION STATION ADDITION

WAYCROSS, July 5.—It is reported today that all plans for the addition to the union station here have been approved by the officials of the Atlantic Coast Line and that probably during the month the contract will be let. The addition will occupy a vacant tract between the station and the offices of the Southern Express Company and will, like the station proper, front Plant Avenue.

Brunswick Greatest Port for Crossties

Shipments Made Recently Total 350,000, Which Breaks All Known Records for the Trade.

BRUNSWICK, July 5.—Brunswick is the greatest crosstie port in the world, as shown by shipments during the past month. One steamer, the Grayson, under charter to the Joyce-Watkins Company, with the next shipment will have taken from this port within one month more than 120,000 crossties.

Other shipments made by the American Tie and Timber Company, the Baxter Company, the Joyce-Watkins Company, Emanuel, Mason and others during the last 30 days, aggregate over ...0,000. That is an unprecedented record for ties. The wholesale price of crossties is ranging now around the highest levels.

Change Is Planned In Waycross Board

Membership Is To Be Increased From Six to Seven if New Bill Is Passed.

WAYCROSS, July 5.—It looks as if the Ware County Board of Commissioners will continue in politics, despite the efforts made at last year's session of the Legislature to get the board out of politics. The proposed changes in the act creating the board removes from the Grand Jury the privilege of selecting the commissioners and puts the board's election back to the people.

The number on the board is to be incread from six to seven, four to come from the Waycross district and three from country districts. The chairman, instead of having to be one of the Waycross commissioners, is to be elected by the board regardless of his place of residence.

A feature of the change as now advocated is the creation of a "board of information," consisting of one member from each of the ten districts in Ware County. This board is to make recommendations for road work and construction. The board, if the act passes, will have to maintain a repair gang, to be on hand for hasty work made necessary by storms.

Waycross Western Goes Ahead Rapidly

Ten More Miles of Track To Be Put Into Service Soon—Construction Gang Busy.

WAYCROSS, July 5.—Rapid progress has been made by the construction forces of the Waycross and Western, and it seems that soon from eight to ten miles more of the new railroad will be put into service. The line is being built from Waycross toward the Georgia Southern and Florida, and rumor is that with connections and other extensions the line is going into West Georgia and probably into Alabama.

Alex K. Sessoms, president of the road, is spending most of his time with the construction force.

The next extension that will be opened to traffic will be the one to Sirmans, in Clinch County, the home of the road's vice president, F. B. Sirmans. When this is finished the road will add to its rolling stock and make arrangements without delay for rushing the connection with the Georgia Southern and Florida.

Spots at Crossings To Save Pedestrians

White Spaces Will Be Painted, and All Vehicles Must Pass Around Them.

SAVANNAH, July 5.—As a means of giving further protection to pedestrians crossing the streets at busy corners, white spots, known as "safety spots," will be painted on the pavement at the intersection of several of the congested thoroughfares.

Some time ago some of these white spots were put on the pavement and proved of great assistance. In a rush of traffic, the pedestrian seeks the white spot, which the traffic regulations require all vehicles to pass around. There is no danger of any person standing on the white spot being injured.

The method has been successfully tried out in many cities.

Mayor Orders Ice Law Enforcement

Customers Complain of Short Weight by Savannah Companies—Wagon Scales Required.

SAVANNAH, GA., July 5.—Numerous complaints that the ice companies are giving their customers short weight has caused Mayor Richard J. Davant to order a rigid enforcement of the ordinance governing the sale of ice.

This ordinance provides that any person has the right to demand that the ice be weighed in his presence. It also requires ice wagons to carry scales which have been properly tested.

JUNIOR BASEBALL LEAGUE FORMING IN SAVANNAH

SAVANNAH, July 5.—A junior baseball league, consisting of four teams, of boys between fourteen and sixteen years, is being organized by W. J. Stewart, who is taking the initiative at the request of a number of boys who want to play in the league.

The teams will represent four sections of The city.

Mayor Davant has given assurances that the league will be permitted to use the diamond in Forsyth Park Extension.

FEDERAL AID SECURED FOR CHATHAM DRAINAGE

SAVANNAH, July 5.—United States aid in promoting the interest of drainage of the vast lands of Chatham County has been secured through Representative Charles G. Edwards, of the special subcommittee of the Chamber of Commerce, who has been handling the matter for several weeks.

Engineer J. G. Phillips, of the United States drainage corps, has received instructions to designate the best drainage district in the County, and he is now at work on the proposition.

BIGGEST MAN IN NATION IS PRIDE OF WAYCROSS

His Name Is W. T. Brinson and He Weighs 590 Pounds—Is Prominent Elk and Pythian.

WAYCROSS, June 28.—Not a city of any State of the United States has as a resident a man with the two distinctions possessed by a Waycross man—W. T. Brinson. First, he is to-day the biggest living man in the United States, if not in all America. Second, he is the jolliest man in the United States.

Incidentally, he enjoys also the distinction of being the largest Elk in the world, besides being the largest Pythian in the world. He is a member of Elks' Lodge No. 369 of Waycross and of Wakefield Lodge No. 27 Knights of Pythias.

Average Weight 590 Pounds.

Brinson's average weight is 590 pounds. He has passed the 600 mark and has been as low as 560 pounds. The man supposed to have been the world's largest man was reported to weigh only 565 pounds, and if this record is authentic, Brinson heads the list for the world so far as size goes.

He is a turpentine operator and a crosstie dealer. He is interested in real estate and farms, too, and is as active in looking after business as any one. He has been successful, too, and is always optimistic. When it comes to passing around jokes he can hold his own with the best.

Takes Ride With Governor.

In recent years when so many warm political campaigns have been waged in Gorgia and so many "joint disputements" held here, Brinson has met most of the "big" men of the State but he has yet to meet a man who has anything on him, physically speaking. During one of his visits to Waycross Governor Joseph M. Brown met Mr. Brinson and accepted an invitation to take a drive about Waycross. It is said that Governor Brown remarked at the time of meeting Mr. Brinson that he would never dispute the fact that he was "Little Joe" Brown. A photographer took a snap shot of the Governor and Mr. Brinson seated togetner in Mr. Brinson's buggy. The picture has been highly prized ever since.

SIX ORGANIZATIONS APPOINT TRUSTEES FOR BIG LEGACY

SAVANNAH, July 5.—A charter petition for the R. J. Nunn trust fund has been filed in the Chatham Superior Court. This association is being organized to administer that part of the estate of Dr. R. J. Nunn which was bequeathed to Zerubabel Lodge, Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite, Georgia Historical Society, Young Women's Christian Association, Savannah Female Orphanage and the Society of Colonial Wars in the State of Georgia.

Under Dr. Nunn's will most of his estate was left to Miss Annie G. Purse, to go at her death to the institutions named. Each was to appoint a trustee.

BOYS OF PARISH BUILD SUNDAY SCHOOL ANNEX

SAVANNAH, July 5.—At practically no cost St. Paul's Episcopal parish has acquired an additional Sunday school room for the infant class, with a seating capacity of approximately 200.

A temporary room has been constructed out of scrap lumber by Samuel K. Ward and Robert T. Waller, with the assistance of some of the boys of the parish. The building is situated immediately in the rear of the church and is very presentable.

SOUTH GEORGIA TO ASK SCHOOL FOR 150 DEAF

Legislature Will Be Asked for Appropriation to Establish Branch of Cave Spring Institution.

TIFTON, July 5.—The urgent need for a school for the deaf in South Georgia is demonstrated by the statistics furnished by the State school census, which shows that of 362 deaf children in the State, 199 are in South Georgia. There are approximately 150 deaf children in South Georgia who are not attending school.

According to State Superintendent of Schools M. L. Brittain the statistics furnished by the State school census taken in May are complete except for four counties and twelve local systems, where the enumerations must be made again. In 144 counties there are 202 white and 124 colored deaf children. Of these 102 white and 97 colored are in South Georgia. The counties and local systems not enumerated will add twelve or fifteen more to this number.

Last year the total enrollment at the Cave Spring School was 188. Of this number less than fifty were from South Georgia, leaving approximately 150 deaf children in South Georgia to whom the liberal appropriation for the institute at Cave Spring is practically worthless. It is to remedy this that the Legislature will be asked to pass a bill to establish a branch school in South Georgia.

At a meeting held in Tifton last March an executive committee with R. C. Postell, of Tifton, chairman, was appointed to inquire into the need for a school for the deaf in South Georgia. Chairman Postell has called a meeting of this committee in the Tifton Chamber of Commerce rooms Monday afternoon, July 7, at 4 o'clock. The purpose of the meeting is to frame a bill providing for the establishment of such a school and to arrange for its introduction.

Five-Year Fugitive Captured at Manor

Stacy Geiger, Under Fifteen-Year Sentence, Had Changed His Name.

WAYCROSS, July 5.—Stacy Geiger, who was convicted five years ago in Wayne County for assaulting a young white girl near Jesup, and who received a fifteen-year sentence in the penitentiary, was captured at Manor, west of Waycross, and turned over to Wayne County officers to-day by Sheriff D. W. Pittman.

Geiger escaped from jail in Jesup shortly after sentence was passed on him and has been able to keep out of the hands of officers ever since. He has been going under the name of Barton. He is 30 years old.

ALLEGED EMBEZZLER TO GO BACK TO WAYCROSS

WAYCROSS, July 5.—Officers were advised to-day that Harry Hoggs, wanted here for embezzlement, has been arrested at LaGrange. Deputy Sheriff Steedley has gone after him. Hoggs is charged with apropriating insurance money collected by him while in charge of a local agency.

Trusses Like These Are A Crime

Such Makeshifts Have Forced Thousands Into Risking Dangerous Operations

Wearing elastic and spring trusses year after year is almost sure to shorten your life.

You can't make them hold, even when drawn so tight you can scarcely stand to keep them on.

They usually let you get worse all the time—that's why every year they are forcing thousands of people into undergoing operation.

They are simply a crime—squeeze the rupture, often causing strangulation—dig into the pelvic bone in front—press against the spinal column at the back—make life miserable for nearly everybody who wears them.

The Plain Truth Is This

You can't possibly get well—can't even keep from getting worse—unless your rupture is constantly held in place. Just as a broken bone can't knit unless held securely together.

And just as a bandage or splint is the only way a broken bone can be held, so the right kind of truss is the only thing in the world that can keep a rupture from coming out and growing worse.

You'll feel like a new person from the day you put on that kind of truss.

But you know as well as we that you'll never find such a sure-to-hold truss at any drug store.

Yet it's easy enough to get. And you can test it first—by sixty days trial—without having to risk a single cent.

It's the famous Cluthe Truss or Cluthe Automatic Massager—absolutely guaranteed to hold, and won't cost you a cent if it doesn't.

It's so utterly different from everything else for rupture that it has received eighteen separate patents.

Made on an entirely new principle. Instantly and automatically protects you against every strain so your rupture can't possibly be forced out. Self-regulating, self-adjusting. Far more than just a truss.

In addition to constant holding it provides the only way ever discovered for overcoming the weakness which is the real cause of rupture.

Just how it does that—entirely automatically—and how it has thus completely cured hundreds and hundreds of people whose cases seemed almost hopeless—is all explained in the free book which the coupon below will bring you.

No Belt—No Leg-Straps—No Springs

The Cluthe Truss does away with the curse of belts, leg-straps and springs. Thousand say it is as comfortable as their clothing. It is waterproof—will hold in the bath. Also perspiration-proof and easily kept clean.

Make This 60-Day Test—You Won't Have to Risk a Penny

We don't ask you to trust to a mere try-on the way you have to do at a drug store.

We'll make a Cluthe Automatic Massaging Truss especially for your case—make it to your measure—and let you try it sixty days.

We'll practically lend it to you that long just for a test.

If it doesn't keep your rupture from coming out or bothering you in any way, no matter how hard you work or strain—if it doesn't prove every claim we make—then you can send it back and it won't cost you a penny.

Free Book Full of Facts Never Before Put in Print

Don't keep on letting yourself get worse—don't spend a cent on account of your rupture until you get our free book of advice.

This remarkable book—cloth-bound, 96 pages—sums up all we have learned about ruptures during forty years of experience. You'll find it full of facts never before put in print.

It shows just why elastic and spring trusses cause so much misery and such a shameful waste of money that the law should stop their sale.

It explains why operation is nearly always a needless gamble with death—and why, if you do manage to live through it, you may have to keep on wearing a truss.

It exposes the humbug "appliances," "methods," "plasters," etc.

It shows why sixty days' trial is the only safe way to buy anything for rupture—and how the Cluthe Truss is the only thing of any kind that you can get on such a long trial because the only thing good enough to stand such a thorough day-after-day test.

And it tells all about this famous Automatic Massaging Truss—how simple it is—how it ends constant expense—how it has saved thousands from further trouble and cured people.

WATERWORKS WAR UNDER WAY IN COLUMBUS

City and Private Company Strive for Supremacy—Bond Election to End Fight.

BIRMINGHAM CASH INVESTED

Municipal Plant Aim of Business Men's Club—Company Gets Favored Site on River.

COLUMBUS, July 5.—For the past ten years there has been constant warfare between the city of Columbus and the Columbus Waterworks Company, but with the approach of another waterworks bond campaign the outlook is that the end is near, for it generally is admitted that the whole question will be settled one way or the other with the election to be held October 18.

The waterworks situation in Columbus is interesting. For several years there has been no contract between the city and the company, because of litigation, but an old contract is serving.

Eleven years ago the city voted a $250,000 bond issue with which to put in a waterworks system, but the bonds never were sold and more than $100,000 worth have expired by limitation, but during that time there has been constant litigation on between the city and the waterworks company, which also has been wrestling with the bankruptcy courts.

Three Birmingham, Ala., capitalists—John B. Weakley, Eugene Flies and W. C. Hamilton—last fall purchased the old Columbus Waterworks Company and changed its name to the Columbus Water Supply Company. They purchased recently $100,000 worth of piping and other materia to be used in improving its system.

Now the City Council has come forward with a waterworks bond issue for $450,000 5s, which, if they carry, are to be used in building a municipal waterworks system. The city has gone a step further and refused to grant the waterworks company permission to lay any other mains in the city, after the company had purchased an immense amount of piping ranging from 10 to 18 inches.

The old waterworks bondholders were scattered throughout the North and East, and among the number who had stock in the plant was a daughter of General Robert E. Lee. Not any were people of wealth, but all were well known, and as a result of the failure of the waterworks system and the continued litigation many had their small fortunes swept away.

A Municipal Ownership Club has been organized by business men of Columbus and it will conduct a vigorous campaign to carry the bonds. W. O. Johnson has been made permanent secretary, while T. E. Golden, president of the Golden Foundry and Machine Shops, is president. Offices have been established and a general publicity campaign will begin at once.

It has been practically demonstrated that there is only one source of water supply—the Chattahoochee River—and the Columbus Water Supply Company has recently come in possession of the most available place for a settling basin. It is probable that if the bond issue carries there will be further litigation.

In the meantime the water analysis at present shows that the river is affording the best water that the city has ever enjoyed.

AMERICUS, July 5.—Americus passed what is probably one of the safest and sanest Fourths in its history, as the docket of the Recorder's Court to-day showed not a single arrest or case made against any one in the city for the entire day. This record seems exceptionally good in view of the fact that there was a record-breaking crowd in the city.

CAMPAIGN ON IN VALDOSTA FOR MODERN TOWN

Streets Are Being Paved, Water System Extended, Library Built and Hotels Made Attractive.

VALDOSTA, June 28.—The wonderful development of Georgia and the South within the past twenty years is epitomized in the marvelous progress of Valdosta. Here the Georgia Cracker has demonstrated in the highest degree his ability as a city builder.

Valdosta donned her "seven-league boots" twelve years ago when the business men here financed the Georgia State Fair, holding one of the most successful expositions ever in the State. For a town of less than 3,000 population the proposition was a tremendous one, but was so successfully carried out that it was repeated the following year.

The new city directory just published gives Valdosta a population of 14,913, including the suburbs. The Federal census of 1910 gave the city a population of less than 8,000, showing that the marvelous growth which began a dozen years ago was greatly increased within the last three years. People from every section of the country are being attracted by the opportunities here and an even more rapid growth in population is assured.

During this year the city will spend $250,000 on public improvements, the bulk of which will ge into street and sidewalk paving and additions to the waterworks. The business section is paved with vitrified brick, while the paving now under way in the residence section is beng laid with asphalt.

Six miles more of cement sidewalks will be laid with the appropriation already made, making the city one of the best paved smaller cities in the South.

Water System Adequate.

A new 3,000,000 gallon pump which is to be installed within the next four months, together with a doubling of the reservoir capacity and the laying of larger mains will give the city a waterworks system adequate for several years' growth. These improvements are all under way now. The sewerage system is being extended also, and will take in the new section in the northern part of the city which was included in the city limits during 1912.

Valdosta is headquarters for the District Court of the United States for the Southwestern Division of the Southern District of Georgia. The building erected by the Government three years ago for the postoffice and Federal Court cost $175,000 and is a handsome structure.

The high-class of the public buildings here is marked by every stranger. Lowndes County's Courthouse is one of the handsomest courthouses in the State, while the modern jail finished and occupied this year is the last word in prison construction. It cost $75,000 and is provided with every feature necessary for the safety and comfort of the prisoners.

Library Being Built.

A new public library, to cost $20,000, is now in course of construction and will be finished this year. Its churches and schools are sources of pride to the people of Valdosta. Some of the handsomest church edifices in the State are to be found here.

Two modern hotels have been opened within the last twelve months, the Hotel Patterson being an entirely new structure, occupying the former cite of the Florence Hotel. The New Valdes, opened in January after a complete rearrangement and modernizing of the interior, is to have an anex of forty-six rooms, contract for which was let this week. No city of its size in the South has more modern hotel service.

RAILROAD WARS WITH VALDOSTA TO GET AVENUE

Atlantic Coast Line Claims Ownership of Thoroughfare Which City Wants to Pave.

VALDOSTA, July 5.—The acute stage has been reached in a row between the Mayor and Council of Valdosta and the Atlantic Coast Line, involving the ownership of Savannah Avenue.

The trouble was precipitated when the city recently decided to pave the avenue, with the intention, of course, that the railroad company should pay its portion of the paving assessment. The railroad company objected and the paving was held up, awaiting an adjustment of the differences. The railroad company claims that it has been unfairly treated by the city, in that the brick to pave the avenue, which is contends belongs to it, and which parallels its tracks through the city, was shipped over a rival road.

After the brick had been stacked in long lines along the avenue, the Coast Line notified the City Council that Savannah Avenue belonged to it, and the company had decided that it didn't want to pave its property. Superintendent R. A. McCranie, of the Atlantic Coast Line, attended the meeting of the City Council yesterday, presenting his company's contentions. Neither side would recede from its position, and nothing affecting the ownership of the avenue was done.

Superintendent McCranie sought to obtain from the Council admissions in writing that the railroad company owns the avenue, and that the proposed paving will not affect its ownership. The Mayor and Council refused to make any such admissions and notified Mr. McCranie that if the city paved the avenue it would be done on the same basis as other paving, leaving the question of ownership to be settled in the courts if necessary.

The sidewalks of the Patterson Hotel and those fronting the many splendid homes on the avenue, it is claimed by the railroad company, are laid on its land.

Ownership of the strip 150 feet wide, through the heart of the city, is claimed by the railroad company through purchase in 1859. It has been used as a street for 50 years. There has never been any effort to close the street, but the railroad company is jealous of its rights to lay sidetracks along the avenue.

Turning Basin for Savannah Planned

Federal Engineer Says It Will Handle Any Ship That Can Go Through Canal.

SAVANNAH, July 5.—A turning basin at Fig Island big enough to handle any ship that can go through the Panama Canal will be constructed at Savannah, according to Colonel Dan C. Kingman, chief of the Government engineers for the Savannah district.

A preliminary examination has been made by Colonel Kingman and his report sent to headquarters in Washington, and the department has authorized Colonel Kingman to make estimates on the project.

The great size of the basin—2,000 by 800 feet—was thought by many to be unnecessary, but Colonel Kingman is building with an idea of the great influx of trade that is likely to accrue to Savannah and the South Atlantic coast with the opening of the Panama Canal.

Thomasville Gripped By Baseball Fever

Much Interest Aroused by Empire League Race and the Georgian's Cup Offer.

THOMASVILLE, July 5.—The only thing hotter in South Georgia than the weather now is baseball, and that is at fever heat. The winning of two games from Valdosta yesterday created great enthusiasm here, and nothing else is talked of by old and young. Great interest is taken in the plan of The Georgian to present a silver cup to the favorite player in the league, and everybody is discussing sending votes for some special one on the team.

Masons of Second District to Meet

Several Hundred Delegates Are Expected to Gather in Thomasville This Week.

THOMASVILLE, July 5.—The Second District Convention of Masons will meet in Thomasville Thursday for a two-day session.

Several hundred delegates are expected, and an interesting program has been prepared.

Grand Master Colling, of the Georgia Lodge, will be present, and Grand Master Glover, of the Florida Lodge, also will attend.

No Angles in Houses On City Corner Lots

Superintendent of Street Paving Set the Fashion and Contractors Follow.

CONWAY, ARK., July 5.—A paving contractor thrust fame upon this place, the home town of former Governor G. W. Donaghey, but Conway folk did not realize it until visitors told them.

A year ago Conway bought concrete walks for the entire town. The man who superintended the delivery did not like angles, so he made every street corner a curve. There is not a right angle in the entire system of walks.

Conway builders caught the idea, and those who have erected houses on corner lots since the curves were introduced have set them bias of the lot. As a result the residence faces the curve, or both streets impartially.

COLUMBUS MERCHANTS TO HOLD ANOTHER CONVENTION

COLUMBUS, July 5.—During the next week or ten days active steps will be taken looking toward a merchants' convention in Columbus, which will be tendered the retailers of the Columbus territory by Columbus jobbers.

Three already have been held, each of which was a success. The convention will be in progress something like two days.

MANAGER TOO EXTRAVAGANT, SAYS BRINSON

Builder and Chief Stockholder of Railroad Wants to Oust New York Official.

SAVANNAH, July 5.—Because it is costing nearly $10,000 a month more to operate the Brinson Railroad under the management of Richard Morgan, representing the interests of James Imbrie, the New York financier, than under the old regime, George M. Brinson, president of the road and the man who built it, is making every effort to oust Morgan and regain personal control of the porperty.

Imbrie, who has sold many securities for the road with the understanding that he was to have a voice in naming the manager of the property, desires to keep Morgan and continue his policies.

A conference between the conflicting interests has been on for the last three days in an effort to arrive at some settlement.

Brinson contends that if the present policy goes on, it means bankruptcy or a receivership. During the four months that Morgan has been in charge the operating expenses have increased something like $40,000, as compared to the same four months of 1912.

While Brinson is understood to have much of his stock in the road hypothecated, it is equally true that the notes which this stock was used to protect will not be due until the fall of 1914, and he has until that time to retain control of affairs.

Soda Clerks Mutiny; Demand Better Pay

As High Skill Required at Fountain as In Sanctuary of Chef, They Declare.

SAVANNAH, July 5.—Preparatory to asking for higher wages and shorter working hours, soda water dispensers are planning to form a union. They say they are determined to walk out if other means fail.

The clerks say they work for a minimum of ten hours a day, with a maximum of sixteen hours, and that they do not receive enough pay. They hold that their art is one that requires just as much skill and knowledge of how to tickle the palate, as hotel and restaurant chefs, bakers and cooks at other public establishments where edibles are served.

There are in Savannah about 250 soda "jerkers." The majority of them were members of a union that broke up something over a year ago, when the treasurer disappeared with the total funds of the organization.

Twenty-one carloads of cows passed through Valdosta to-day, consigned to a big ranch in Texas. A number of Western ranchmen have representatives in Florida now, with instructions to buy 50,000 head. These agents now are making heavy purchases around Tampa.

ELBERTA PEACH SEASON AT HAND; CROP IS A FAILURE

AMERICUS, July 5.—The Elberta peach shipping season here will begin Monday. On account of the failure of the crop here, the shipments will be small. A prominent fruit grower said recently that he doubted if the total shipments from Americus would amount to one carload, so that they will all be crate shipments. This is in strong contrast with last season, when a total of about 50 carloads were shipped.

$2,000 a Minute Is Cost of Slow Watch

Representative Callaway Loses Fight Against Appropriation Because He Was Late.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—Because his watch was two minutes slow Representative Callaway, of Texas, today lost his fight against a resolution to appropriate $4,000 to send the Civil War veterans of the District of Columbia to the reunion at Gettysburg, and Representative Fowler, of Illinois, won a victory for which he has schemed for weeks.

Callaway interposed his objection, and the resolution went over.

Fowler called it up again as soon as the House convened again. Callaway was two minutes late and the resolution passed.

Episcopal Bishop Speaks From Truck

Rt. Rev. Rhinelander Addresses Throngs on Streets in Philadelphia Tenderloin.

PHILADELPHIA, July 5.—Bishop Rhinelander, head of the Episcopal Diocese of Pennsylvania, spoke twice on the streets of the Tenderloin here from the tailboard of the gospel truck of the Inasmuch Mission.

At the Tenderloin meetings men and women from the lowest homes in the city assembled in great numbers.

Before the large truck "church" left the "gospel" corners men down and out ran to shake the Bishop's hand.

Through Army Road to Tybee Plan Is Revived

Chamber of Commerce Will Be Asked to Urge Federal Appropriation.

SAVANNAH, July 5.—The proposition to build a through highway from Savannah to Tybee, making it a military turnpike, doubtless will be revived at the July meeting of the Chamber of Commerce. Arthur W. Solomon, a director in the Chamber, and secretary of the Savannah Automobile Club, will bring the matter up for consideration.

Two routes were considered a year ago. One was via Wilmington Island, making the turnpike a continuation to Tybee, with a ferry as a means of crossing Wilmington River. The other scheme was to have the road parallel the Tybee branch of the Central of Georgia Railway, which would reduce the number of streams to be crossed and make it possible for the same bridges used by the railroad to be used for the highway.

Under the old scheme it was planned to have the road built by private parties in co-operation with the Federal Government. It now is planned to have the matter taken up by Chatham County's Representatives in Congress, with the idea of securing the passage of a bill appropriating money to defray the cost of constructing the road.

Shake-up in Store For Americus Police

Investigation of Lynching Causes Grand Jury to Criticise Force. Commission Calls Meeting.

AMERICUS, July 5.—As one of the results of the recent lynching here, the Americus police force will be given a thorough shaking up Tuesday evening, when the Police Commission will meet in special session.

This is an unusual procedure, but it has been deemed necessary as the Grand Jury which investigated the lynching criticised the local police, together with the Sheriff, for their failure to prevent it. Every member of the force will be summoned before the commission Tuesday evening.

Ministers Agree to Promote Good Plays

Unitarians Will Help Better Shows Instead of Criticising "Bad" Theaters.

LOS ANGELES, July 5.—That the church should promote the better shows given in theaters instead of criticising "bad" shows and condemning the theaters, was the consensus of opinion at a meeting of ministers at the First Unitarian Church.

In order to have more co-operation between the churches and theaters, it was decided that some of the ministers in the organization should go to theatrical managers and make arrangements with them to have lectures given in churches on the better plays presented in theaters.

Ministers of other denominations, "who are continually harping at the theater as an influence of evil," were criticised at the meeting.

FACTIONS STILL WAR FOR BRINSON RAILWAY CONTROL

SAVANNAH, July 5.—After two all-day conferences between conflicting elements in the Brinson Railroad no conclusion has been reached as to the ultimate fate of the road. Neither George M. Brinson, president, nor James Imbrie, chairman of the board of directors, will discuss the situation. Brinson is fighting to retain control.

Boys Place Rail on Coast Line Tracks

Youngsters Arrested, but Only Penalty Is Unmerciful Whipping Administered by Father.

VALDOSTA, July 5.—O. T. Hill, special officer of the Atlantic Coast Line, has returned from Thomas County, where he went to investigate an alleged attempt to wreck a train. A piece of steel rail was placed across the tracks, but no damage was done. The officer found that the obstruction was placed on the tracks by two boys, ten and twelve years old, Grant Jones and Tim Jones, who said they merely wanted to see if the train would knock the rail off, and without any idea of causing a wreck.

The boys were arrested, but on account of their youth, they were not prosecuted. When their father was through whipping them, the lads said they never wanted to see another railroad track or train.

Complaints about men who ogle young girls and not infrequently attempt to open conversation with them have been frequent, and the Mayor, the Chief of Police and the Aldermen have joined forces to suppress the nuisance.

Chief of Police Quilty, with the concurrence of Mayor Denison, sent to the Board of Aldermen a communication asking for the passage of an ordinance to punish mashers and others who annoy young women in the streets.

The Aldermen voted to refer the matter to City Solicitor Adams, with instructions to draft such an ordinance.

"If the Aldermen will give me the right kind of an ordinance—the more drastic the better—mashing will speedily become a lost art in Springfield," says Chief Quilty.

APPOINTMENT OF GONZALES RECALLS FEUD

Brother of New Minister to Cuba Was Slain on Street by James H. Tillman.

When William Elliott Gonzales goes to Cuba, to which country he has been appointed as Minister by President Wilson, he will be returning to the land of his ancestors. Born in the United States, he is intensely American in his point of view, but this has not prevented him from taking a deep interest in the development of Cuba.

His name is a link between the two countries. His father, a native of Matanzas, Cuba, married into the old Elliott family of South Carolina, and the new Minister to Cuba was named for his uncle, William Elliott, a one-time Representative in Congress. The Elliotts had been for generations prominent in the social and political life of the Palmetto State, and General Ambrosio Jose Gonzales, the father of William Elliott Gonzales, was a greater politician than any of them and brought up his boys to take a vital interest in politics, for his participation in which one son paid with his life. The members of the Gonzales family have always had decided opinions on every public question and have always expressed their feelings forcibly.

Headed Fight for Liberty.

General Gonzales, with Narisco Lopez, headed the struggle for independence of Cuba in 1844, being one of the junta of five members who signed the declaration of independence, adopted the present flag and organized the first filibustering expedition under Lopez, he being second in command, with the rank of brigadier general. He was the first Cuban wounded in the battle for independence at Cardenas, May 20, 1850. The expedition failed and a sentence of death was pronounced upon Gonzales, but he escaped to the United States and settled in South Carolina, where he married a daughter of William Elliott, a prominent citizen of Beaufort. When the Civil War broke out the Cuban general offered his services to the Confederates and served as colonel and chief of artillery with General Beauregard, surrendering with Johnston's army at Greensboro in 1865. His two sons have followed in his footsteps, both having been soldiers, having proved their devotion to the United States and to Cuba.

He Opposed Tillman.

The feud which ended in the fatal shooting of Narisco G. Gonzales by Lieutenant Governor James H. Tillman in 1903 was partly political and partly personal. The two families had been on bad terms for years, and during the campaign which resulted in the election of Tillman as Lieutenant Governor, Gonzales through his paper, The State, had fought him bitterly. In his editorials he had called him names that Tillman could not forgive or forget. He challenged the editor to a duel, but Gonzales treated the proposal with contempt. This in no way impugned his courage, for the entire Gonzales family was noted for its bravery and nerve, and Narisco Gonzales, who was named for old Narisco Lopez, had acted as a scout for Gomez before the Spanish-American war and had served in the American army after war was declared, doing valiant service.

He was shot when walking unarmed in the public street by Tillman. At the first shot he called out "Coward!" and then "Shoot again!" as he sank to the ground. He died a few days afterward and feeling ran so high that Tillman, insisting that he could not get a fair trial in that county obtained a change of venue and was acquitted after a sensational trial.

Is a Spanish War Veteran.

William Elliott Gonzales succeeded his brother as the editor of The State. Like him, he had been a soldier in the war with Spain, having served as captain in the Second South Carolina regiment and having gone to Cuba with the army of pacification. Mr. Gonzales is a close personal and political friend of the Secretary of State, and in his paper warmly supported him in his candidacy for the Presidency in all of his campaigns. He is also a good friend of President Wilson and was one of the first men to suggest his name for the office which he now holds. The State led the fight in securing a delegation favorable to him, and it was largely owing to his efforts that the Palmetto delegation stood by Woodrow Wilson from first to last at the National Convention. After the nomination Mr. Gonzales returned home and worked for his election, raising a large popular subscription through the State to help defray the expenses of the campaign.

Mr. Gonzales has entertained both President Wilson and Secretary Bryan at hos home in Columbia, and it is understood that the appointment was tendered him out of personal regard by the President and because of his belief in his fitness for the place.

Senator Tillman Passive.

Notwithstanding the feeling between the Gonzales and Tillman families, it is understood that Senator Tillman, recognizing Mr. Gonzales' splendid work for President Wilson, will not oppose his confirmation. One of the most outspoken enemies of the newly appointed Minister to Cuba is Governor Blease, who was one of the counsel for James Tillman at the time of his trial. Not long ago the Governor was reported to have criticised Mr. Daniels, Secretary of the Navy, very bitterly because of his friendship for Mr. Gonzales.

Every building will be hauled two miles to a new town site on the railway. Scobey is located 60 miles west of Plentywood, and it already is a thriving city, having banks, a hotel and several stores.

CITY TO RUN TWO SALOONS.

SISSETON, S. D., July 5.—Sisseton will have two municipal saloons, licenses for which were granted to W. E. Bollenbeck by popular vote. Bollenbeck will conduct the business for a salary of $1,800 per year.

Suffragist Is to Wear Trousers 'Are More Modest Than Skirts' Hiker Will Discard Her Petticoats

General Jones' Mascot on March to Washington Has a Corsetless Silk Costume.

NEW YORK, July 5.—They're here at last. Mrs. John Boldt, who was called the mascot of General Jones' suffrage army on its 250-mile hike to the inauguration last February, has designed several pairs of trouser costumes, and will wear them hereafter.

At her apartments in the Hotel Marseilles yesterday, Mrs. Boldt criticised the women who are always talking dress reform, she said, but lacked the courage to wear "the sensible clothing they advocated."

"What we need to break the shackles and free these slaves to fashion is a leader," remarked Mrs. Boldt, as she sat in a big easy chair attired in her corsetless, trousette costume. It was made of sunburst-colored silk, caught in at the ankles with a band of gold and blue embroidery. The high waist, in Empire effect, was finished with a girdle of the same embroidery.

"The trouble with us is that we are many years behind the times in dress. The women of the East are far more progressive than us in dress. The majority of women in the world today wear trousers, the women of India, Turkey, China, Japan and even the peasant women of many European countries.

"Trousers of the style I wear, with draperies for evening of soft materials, giving an artistic Grecian line, are far more modest than the slit skirts you see on Broadway, with the limbs exposed to the knees, or transparent underclothing."

MRS. JOHN BOLDT, prominent suffragette and chief aide of General Rosalie Jones, wearing the type of trousers which she urges as a substitute for skirts.

Girls Writing Book Will Simplify Laws

Ohio Misses Preparing History of All State Statutes to Aid Bench and Bar.

CLEVELAND, July 5.—The embryo lawyer to-day, who will be the brilliant pleader of to-morrow, will owe a debt of gratitude to two Cleveland girls for a massive volume filled with simple interpretations of Ohio's laws.

The girls are Miss Ruth Winch, 23, daughter of Judge Louis H. Winch, and Miss Ruth Jenkins, 18.

The book they are writing is being prepared by two girls under the supervision of Judge Winch, and will be known as "The History of the Laws of Ohio," containing nearly a thousand pages of dry legal matter made simple and entertaining. The book will be published this fall.

Takes Horse to Wed; Girl Given 7 Years

Woman Declares She Induced Man to Steal Animal so That They Could Elope.

PARSONS, KANS., July 5.—For stealing a horse so she could elope and be married, Mrs. Marie Pollard was sentenced to seven years in the penitentiary.

It was the first time in the history of the Labette County Court that a woman was sentenced for horse stealing.

Before she was sentenced, Mrs. Pollard insisted that she alone was to blame. She declared she had induced Samuel Parks to steal the horse and buggy and drive her to Clinton, where they were to have been married.

2,500 CHURCH MEMBERS AT ANNUAL FOOT WASHING

ANDERSON, IND., July 5.—More than 2,500 adherents of the Church of God from all sections of the country, participated in the annual foot-washing ceremony at the national camp meeting near here.

Women of the church are not permitted to wear gay-colored ribbons or plumage, and the men wear no neckties. Jewelry is not allowed. Smoking is prohibited. Men kiss each other. The only musical instrument allowed in the service is a tuning fork.

Uncle Sam Must Pay Indian's Doctor Bill

Comptroller Holds That Government Must Care for Blind Aborigine Hurt in Auto Accident.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—Uncle Sam is just as much a protector and guardian of the life and welfare of his Indian wards as a parent is of his child.

This principle of responsibility was proclaimed by George E. Downey, Comptroller of the Treasury, in overruling the appeal of Robert W. Wooley, new auditor for the Interior Department, for a reversal of the Comptroller's decision approving a $900 bill of Dr. George P. Sampson for treating and nursing a blind Indian.

Charley Walker, a blind Navajo and ward of the Government, deserted by his guide on the approach of a train, was run over.

Dr. Sampson amputated his left leg and right foot and cared for him for three months.

NEW STANDARD OF WEIGHT FOR GEMS ADOPTED BY U. S.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—The Treasury Department has issued instructions to collectors of customs, adopting as the unit of weight for imported diamonds, pearls and other precious stones, the metric carat of 200 milligrams. The adoption of this standard will make the practice of this country conform to that of large countries dealing in diamonds, chief among them being the Netherlands, England, France and Belgium.

5TH REGIMENT OFF FOR LARK AT ST. SIMONS

Drudgery of Camp at Anniston Yast Year Will Be Forgotten at Seacoast Outing.

The Fifth Regiment, Georgia National Guard, composed of twelve companies with 560 officers and men, will leave over the Atlanta, Birmingham and Atlantic Railroad Tuesday evening in two sections at 8 and 8:30 for an outing of ten days at St. Simons Island.

This camp will be a picnic compared to the strenuous times of the State militia at Anniston, Ala., last year, when the entire time was devoted to military maneuvers. Then it was work, work, work. Realizing the fact that too much work and no play might have the same effect on the soldiers that it did on Jack, it was decided to give the boys an outing, at the same time make it worth while from a military viewpoint.

The work at St. Simons will be very light, but the discipline will be rigid, and the little details so necessary to the life of a soldier will be strictly observed. The work will be guard mount in the morning, dress parade in the afternoon and camp patrol duty.

School For Officers.

But the officers will not escape so easily. A practical school of instruction will be inaugurated, and it will require the services of the officers for at least four hours each day, and it is the opinion of the adjutant general that the regiment will be in better shape when it returns than it has been in years.

The regiment will leave the Auditorium-Armory at 7:30 Tuesday evening, headed by the colonel and his staff, the Fifth Regiment band and the companies in the order of their position in the line, as follows:

Company A, Captain Palmour commanding; Company B, Captain Weaver; Company C, Captain Candler; Company D, Captain Stoddard; Company E, Captain Leahy; Company F, Lieutenant McCarty; Company G, Captain Schmidt; Company H, Captain Quillian; Company I, Company Hartlaub; Company K, Captain Stokes; Company L, Captain Clarke; Company M, Captain Slaton.

Dress, military bearing and the minor details of camp life will be strictly enforced, but ample time has been provided for the men to enjoy the outing to the fullest.

Many to Visit the Island.

During the encampment of the Fifth Regiment, excursions will be run over the Atlanta, Birmingham and Atlantic Railroad, and there will probably be more people on the island than has ever been known.

With the camp right on the beach, or such a short distance that bathing suits can be donned in the tents, surf bathing, of course, will be the chief pastime of the landlubbers.

The Fifth Regiment band, under Chief Musician C. E. Barber, will furnish music, and the concerts in the evening by this noted organization of musicians will be an enjoyable feature. There will also be many entertainments and dances by the officers, and a royal good time is anticipated.

JULEP SECRET IS KEPT SACRED BY CONNOISSEUR

Connoisseur of Drinks Sees Mixologist Work Twelve Minutes on Concoction.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—A Providence, R. I., man, who is a connoisseur in things good to eat and drink, to wear, to read and to look at, was in Washington recently when a feeling came over him that he would like to have what he had not enjoyed for several years—a real Southern mint julep, the kind that he and others read about and that are dispensed in the private club rooms of Southern cities by leading citizens, accompanied by the traditional manifestations of Southern hospitality and courtesy.

At the cash register of an ornate bar an elderly gentleman was dozing, and there was no evidence whatever of life in the gilded and glass bedecked room. The old gentleman said, however, in reply to a query, that he thought a mint julep could be mixed there and he rang a bell. He was an old man, somewhere on the shady side of 70, and had all the earmarks of a Southern brigadier of the type that up to a few years ago was a typical Congressman.

Disappearing for several minutes, the Colonel, as the visitor afterward designated him, returned with two bunches of mint, the delicious aroma of which showed that it was fresh and crisp. Placing two glasses on the bar, he dissolved a lump of hard sugar in each by means of a tablespoonful of water.

Then, selecting shreds of the mint as carefully as if he were selecting pearls for a bride's necklace, he placed a bunch in each glass, folding the bottom ends into the dissolved and now thoroughly stirred sugar and pushing the tops back from the rim of the glass.

Whisky Aged as Mixer.

Then he added cracked ice, cracking it as carefully as he selected the mint, until the glasses were two-thirds full. After this the dignified barkeeper strolled deliberately to the other end of the long bar and returned with a bottle of whisky that bore a popular label and date showing that it was only slightly younger than the man who carried it.

Putting a large jigger of this into each glass, the Confederate brigadier next, by the same process of selection, collected two more bunches of mint, which he inserted, piece by piece, into the concoction and added a little more cracked ice. Up to this time exactly eleven minutes had been consumed since the glasses were placed on the bar to receive the sugar and water, and the thirsty patrons thought the beverage was ready for them.

Mysterious Bottle Used.

But not yet. Going off to the opposite end of the bar, the courtly mint julep mixer returned with a little bottle the label of which he carefully concealed by covering it with his hand. Squirt, squirt, he put a dash of something into each glass, went away back to the shelf whence he got the bottle, placed it thereon, and returning, indicated by a nod of the head that the juleps were ready to be disposed of. Twelve minutes had now been occupied in the labor of love and not a word had been spoken by any of the three persons present at the performance.

The glasses were picked up, the gentleman from Providence and his friend rejected the straws placed handy by, each stuck his nose into the mint and proceeded to drink. As they did so they looked at each other with an expression that spoke volumes. The Providence man, after his friend had returned from the other end of the room where he had gone to pay the check, found the cockles of his heart opening up, and he said to the silent and courtly barkeeper, "My dear sir, that was the finest—I may say the only—mint julep I ever drank, and I have traveled far and wide."

"But may I ask," said the Providence man, with his most seductive smile, "what was the little dash of stuff that you added at the last moment? It must be that that was what gave this mint julep the insinuating flavor that will long last in my memory."

"Oh, that!" was the reply, accompanied by a slight facial movement, falsely indicating that the julep artist was about to open up. "Why, that, you must excuse me, sir, is my secret."

Parrot Cries "Fire," But Dies in Flames

Alarm Saves Occupants of House, but Firemen Are Unable to Rescue the Screaming Bird.

GRAND JUNCTION, COLO., July 5.—Although they were able to save their household goods, due to the warning of a pet parrot, the hero or heroine failed to escape in the fire which destroyed the home of F. E. Post.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Post were away from the house, working on the ranch, when they heard a cry of "Help, help! Fire, fire!" from the vicinity of their home. They started back to see smoke coming from all the windows, while the parrot was screaming at hte top of its voice.

As they arrived at the house the bird toppled over into the flames, and when Post rushed into the house he found Polly dead.

Opticians to Operate On Hogs Before Jury

Defendants to Use Porkers' Eyes to Disprove Plaintiff's Malpractice Charge.

COLUMBUS, OHIO July 5.—A novel means of illustration was employed in Judge Rogers' court in a case in which two Columbus eye specialists are defendants for $10,000 damages.

Operations are to be performed on eyes to illustrate the claim of defendants that there was no malpractice. Human optics are not to be used. Because the eyes of hogs are very much like those of men, several healthy porkers are to be robbed of their "lamps."

These will be put in masks just like human "mugs" and the jurors will know exactly what happened to the plaintiff when he was put under the knives of the defendants.

Postoffice Lost by Veterans to Boy, 25

Missouri Youth Is Youngest Yet Named by President—Gets Salary of $2,400.

TRENTON, MO., July 5.—Winning the distinction of being the youngest postmaster in Missouri and the youngest yet appointed by President Wilson, Wilbur E. Austin has assumed charge of the Trenton office at 25. It is a second-class office, with a salary of $2,400 per annum.

Austin was nominated by President Wilson over five opponents, all of whom have been prominent in party affairs in this section for years. He was backed by Colonel E. M. Harber, of Trenton, an uncle, who is a close friend of Congressman W. W. Rucker, and was recommended by the Congressman.

"I Love You," Signals Heiress in Court

Millionaire's Daughter Cheers Sweetheart Accused by Her Father as Dead Beat.

STEAMBOAT SPRINGS, COLO., July 5.—A jury in the District Court has failed to agree in the case of Robert King, an artist, who recently attempted to elope with the 17-year-old daughter of F. E. Milner, millionaire lumberman and hotel proprietor. King was charged with beating a bill at the hotel owned by his sweetheart's father.

Women crowded the court room during the trial. Miss Milner and her father occupied front seats. The girl smiled at King on the stand and signaled to him with her hands. She explained afterward that her signal was: "I love you." Her father had forbidden her to speak to King.

Leaps Across Area To Save Child Afire

Neighbor Sees Girl's Peril and Makes Dangerous Jump, Putting Out Flames With Coat.

NEW YORK, July 5.—William Morrissey, of 252 Nepperhan Avenue, Yonkers, by a daring leap yesterday saved Olive Edick, 7 years old, from burning to death. The child is terribly burned, but physicians in St. Joseph's Hospital say she will live.

The girl was playing with her younger brother, Russell, on the fourth floor of her home at 121 New Main Street. The boy accidentally set Olive's dress afire. She ran, screaming, to the fire escape.

Morrissey was on the fourth floor of the next block. There is a wide space between the two fire eescapes. Seeing the child was doomed unless he acted, Morrissey jumped and landed beside the blazing youngster. Pulling off his coat, he quickly blanketed the flames.

PASTOR LIKES THE "MOVIES."

SOUTH BEND, IND., July 5.—The Rev. John Walton, pastor of the First Baptist Church, of Garrett, Ind., attributes the success which has attended his ministry to popular interest in moving pictures.

MASHER LASHED BY WOMAN HE HAD ANNOYED

Tired of His Notes and Unwarranted Attention, Confectioner's Wife Uses Horsewhip.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 5.—Mrs. B. C. Osmun, the wife of a confectioner, residing at 54 Fair Avenue, pluckily took matters in her own hands and dealt summary justice to a masher who had been annoying her Friday afternoon. The masher, L. M. Cox, received a sound horsewhipping which Mrs. Osmun, administered to him in the street near her home.

According to Mrs. Osmun, Cox, who is about 60 years of age, has been continually annoying her by sending love notes, following her on the street and trying to induce her to leave her husband for him. She states that he has also been slandering her to the neighbors, and being unable to stand his annoyances any longer, she decided to put a definite stop to the proceedings.

When Cox attempted to speak to her on the street Friday afternoon, Mrs. Osmun produced the whip and proceeded to thrash him. Mrs. Osmun did not escape without injury, for she bears a large black and blue spot on her arm and a discolored right eye, which, she asserts, Cox gave her after he had taken her whip away.

Following the scene in the street Mrs. Osmun hurried to the police station and gave herself up in order to prevent Cox swearing out a warrant for her arrest. She was not held, however, and she proceeded to have a citation issued against Cox.

Children Start Fire Curling Doll's Hair

Father Is Severely Burned Trying to Extinguish Flames Caused by Play of Little Ones.

CHICAGO, July 5.—Harry Qinck, 410 Noble Street, was severely burned last night while attempting to extinguish a fire in his home started by two of his children, Della, 11 years old, and Harry, aged 5.

They were curling a doll's hair when a curtain caught fire and spread to the bed clothes.

Qinck, asleep in another part of the house, was awakened by the cries of the children. Firemen extinguished the flames.

WHAT ATLANTA MANUFACTURERS AND JOBBERS ARE DOING

MAKE PROGRAM OF INTEREST TO ALL RETAILERS

Topics of Practical Value to Dealers Are To Be Discussed at Convention.

PARLIAMENT TO BE FEATURE

Informal Discussions at Each Session Give Chance for Each Man to Air Views.

"Buying," "merchandising as a developer of character," "when to hold special sales"—these are three of the interesting topics to be discussed during the Southern Merchants' Convention, August 5-15, inclusive.

After hearing suggestions from retailors all over the Southeast, the program committee of the Atlanta Merchants and Manufacturers' Association completed its work, and Saturday announced the outline of the discussions which will be held the first four days of the meeting.

The committee says it had in mind a desire to bring up the most interesting topics possible, and also to give an opportunity to all those not on the list for formal discussion. Therefore, much of each day's session will be devoted to an "open parliament" in which everyone will have a chance to debate.

At the same time the entertainment features were announced. They include two theater parties, one August 5, and the other August 11; a reception August 7 at the Piedmont Driving Club; a barbecue August 13 and a ball game August 15.

In presenting its report, the program committee gives special thanks to J. W. Vaughn, of Cartersville, and R. O. Crouch, of Griffin, for assistance.

The program follows:

Tuesday—"How can merchants, landlords and bankers best direct their influence toward securing a greater diversity of crops?"

"The marketing of overplus of grain."

"Cattle and hogs as a by-product."

"The greater stability of credit resulting."

Thursday—"Merchandising both as a legitimate means of livelihood and as a developer of character and mental vigor."

"Buying."

"When and how to buy."

"Benefits of buying often and according to active needs."

"Keeping the money at home by giving preference to home manufacturers where all things are equal."

"Keeping up sales and keeping down accumulations of stock."

"Ascertained cost vs. estimated cost."

"Proper depreciation of hard stock at inventory period."

"Disposing of slow stock."

"Special sales—when and how to open them."

Friday: "Store Discipline and Management."

"Store help—how to select and train."

"How to create and keep up enthusiasm among the store force."

"Courtesy as a business asset."

"Proper accounting methods a prime factor in the success of a business."

"Credits and collections."

"Can a merchant afford to imperil his capital by failure properly to insure his stock?"

"From the bankers' standpoint."

"Could not betterments, such as are suggested by these discussions, be most readily brought about by local organizations of merchants' associations?"

Committees follow:

Committee on Program—Bolling H. Jones, chairman; H. E. Choate, R. O. Crouch, Griffin; C. W. McClure, E. G. Thomas, J. W. Vaughn, Cartersville.

Permanent Exhibit Now Assured; Long Campaign Near Culmination

Speeches of Men Who Studied Possibilities of Plan Stir Their Hearers to Action.

"Atlanta citizens do not know what is made in their own city.

"Southern merchants who come to Atlanta do not know the extent of the city's manufactures.

"The nation in general never thinks of Atlanta as a manufacturing center.

"All this must be changed. There must be systematic exploitation of Atlanta's factories. The future growth and prosperity of the city depend on this factor more than on any other. One of the best means of educating the public to Atlanta's importance as a manufacturing center is to maintain a permanent exhibit of the goods made here."

With this message ringing in their ears, 100 Atlanta manufacturers, banqueting at the Hotel Ansley Thursday night, decided to undertake the establishment of a permanent display. Twenty-three manufacturers signed agreements to take space in the exhibit hall. More have signed since.

For the purpose of handling the exhibit a Fulton County manufacturers' association will be formed this week. The scope of this association is to be broad. It will endeavor to safeguard its members from ill-advised legislation. It will wrestle with transportation problems, welfare of labor and other questions of vital interest to manufacturers.

Four sites for the permanent exhibit are offered, each within five minutes' walk of Five Points. These are for leas., for sale, or lease with privilege of purchase. These offers will be acted upon within ten days.

Campaign Now On.

From this time forward a year of preparation will culminate in a whirlwind campaign of activity.

Forceful, indeed, were the informal talks made at the banquet. The men behind the project have spent a long time in study of its possibilities. They are very much in earnest. They truly believe that nothing so important for the development of Atlanta has been launched in many years. This enthusiasm, restrained for so long, found vent when they rose to make the speeches which should "get action." If they failed to convince their hearers, all their work was wasted. They knew it—and they did not fail.

"One of the big things such a permanent display does is educate the children," said Brooks Morgan. "In Cleveland it is regarded as a valuable supplement to the work of the schools in teaching the children economic and industrial subjects. What this means in dollars and cents to the exhibitors to have the future buying public in Cleveland fully awake to the variety and merits of homemade goods, you can see for yourselves.

City Needs Manufacturing.

"There is a limit to Atlanta's growth as a jobbing and distributing center. Almost every great concern in the United States has representatives here. Atlanta already supplies its territory well, and some territory which belongs to its neighbors. There is a limit to this development, I say, and the maintenance of real estate values, the growth in population of the city, its prosperity, depend absolutely upon the development of our manufactories. We have 600 factories now. I doubt if we need more. What we need is to make these 600, each and every one, big, strong concerns.

"I do not know of a company which will benefit less than mine from an exhibit. My interest is not selfish. I sincerely believe this is necessary for Atlanta.

"Our idea is to have exhibits, as many and as attractive as possible, grouped effectively under one roof. A manager should be in charge. Let him show visitors through. If a visitor manifests interest in one line, or several, let him telephone at once to the manufacturers of these lines to send a salesman. I believe, too, that manufacturers in the outskirts of the city will find it profitable to use the exhibit building for their downtown office. This is done elsewhere with profit.

"Atlanta should have four times the payroll it now has. This is the way to go about it."

Evansville's Experience.

Bolling H. Jones told of the experience of 32 furniture manufacturers in Evansville, Ind., who put up a building and displayed their lines in it, keeping the ground floor for their offices. They find it easier to get prospective customers to look at their wares, and also find the selling cost cut to 3 per cent.

"That convinced me," said Mr. Jones. "Did any manufacturer here ever sell goods for 3 per cent merchandising cost? This argument alone seems to me unanswerable."

He spoke of the changes which have come about in the Southern field within five years. No longer is it possible to sell a merchant a full carload of one line. Therefore, he argued, the exhibit will be valuable in getting buyers to make up mixed carloads of Atlanta-made goods. Other cities, rivals of Atlanta, are doing this, he said, and Atlanta must, to keep what it has, to say nothing of expanding.

"Advertising no longer is a matter of buying a few inches of newspaper space, asserting through this space that 'John Smith makes good beds'," said C. S. Dobs. "Advertising is the science of creating a demand. Publicity is the cheapest known method of selling goods. It may be newspaper publicity; it may be billboards; it may be an exhibit of the kind you are considering. It may better be all three.

Like Shop Windows.

"I believe this exhibit will have the same effect as the Whitehall Street windows. A man comes downtown to buy a pair of shoes. As he walks along the street, he sees hats, neckwear and walking sticks displayed. These remind him that he needs such articles. The result is that he buys more than the shoes he set out after."

Forrest Adair has a "punch" when he talks.

"I am selling a home below the Fort to a family which consists of father, mother and seven girls. The father is a wagon-maker. The seven girls are employed in seven different factories in Atlanta. Wouldn't you rather buy the things these girls help make than some product of a New England sweat shop?

"Yet I talked to a bank director to-day who did not know that car wheels are made in Atlanta, and who thought that the famed Atlanta shoes really were made in Boston and sent here to be sold under the local label.

Interests Here Diverse.

"When the bottom falls out of the iron market, Birmingham and Pittsburg hang crape on the doors, and send flowers to each other. Do we care? We do not. Two or three of our plants suffer, but the hundreds of others go on, and business in the aggregate shows little contraction.

"As a man who earns his very bread from the growth of Atlanta, and who owes more of that bread to you manufacturers than to any other class, I want to make it as emphatic as I can that you must build up Atlanta's factories if you wish to see her continue to grow."

WORDS WHICH STIRRED ENTHUSIASM FOR SHOW

"All the machinery, all the enthusiasm, and all the push of the Chamber of Commerce will be behind the launching of the permanent exhibit."—Wilmer L. Moore, President of the Chamber of Commerce.

"I firmly believe a permanent exhibit will bring to Atlanta more merchants and more business than all the other things we have done put together."—Brooks Morgan, Chairman of the Exhibit Committee.

"Five years ago, you could sell solid carloads of one line to Macon and Augusta. You can not do it now. This plan will enable you to make up mixed carloads. Other cities are doing it. Atlanta must, not only to get more, but even to hold what she has."—Bolling H. Jones.

"The man who makes good products and doesn't advertise is like the man who winks at a girl in the dark. He knows it, but she doesn't, and it doesn't get him anywhere."—C. S. Dobbs.

"Agitation about the smoke nuisance makes me tired. I wish to goodness some one would turn 500 more smokestacks loose on us. I'll warrant there's not a man in town who could write a list of seventy-five of the hundreds of articles made in Atlanta."—Forrest Adir.

Atlanta's Future Absolutely Dependent on Building Up Factories, Experts Declare.

Rome, Ga., Exhibitors Sign Up for Space

Rome, Ga., is crowing over the fact that it made definite plans for a permanent exhibit before Atlanta.

Twelve manufacturers already have signed contracts for space, and nine more are about to do so. It is expected that 4,000 feet of floor space will be used.

Arrangements have been made for a building, and the exhibit will be ready within two months, Louis Spencer, managing director, says.

Included among the exhibitors are a stove works, a machine factory, a foundry, a furniture factory, a trunk factory and a spring bed factory. Some of these lines are duplicated.

ATLANTA GIRLS BUY MILLINERY MADE AT HOME

Half the Hats Seen on Peachtree Street Are Made Here, but the Fact Is Unheralded.

Half the women's hats seen on Peachtree Street are made right in Atlanta.

The fair Peachtree promenaders don't know it; the milliners they patronize don't know it; in many cases the jobbers themselves don't know it.

There are three factories in Atlanta making women's hats, of straw, felt, plush, hemp and the myriad other materials which go to bedeck milady's coiffure and frame her pretty face.

But as soon as the hat leaves these factories the manufacturers lose their identity. The hat is marked with the jobber's label. It may be marked New York, Philadelphia, New Orleans or even London. The fact that it is made in Atlanta is nowhere to be discovered.

One manufacturer tells, with a grin, of Atlanta milliners who "stocked up" in New York—with Atlanta-made hats.

Altogether, it is an interesting business.

The American Hat Manufacturing Company, one of the largest of the three Atlanta factories, imports straws direct from China, Japan, Italy and Germany. These straws are plaited abroad, and either are dyed there or bleached and dyed in Camden, N. J.

Japan sends hemp braid. Italy furnishes the milans, leghorns and tuscans. Germany furnishes a peculiar material known as Neapolitan braid, which, though few know it, is made from American cotton. China furnishes coarse straws.

So much for the straws. The felt bodies come from abroad, in the rough—queer, looking toadstools of various shades. Silks, ribbons, velvets, plushes and ornaments are carried in quantity enough to stock a dry goods store of large proportions.

Just now the factories are busy with the hats to be worn this fall and winter, and with misses' and children's hats for spring, 1914.

Sample rooms already are filled with fall and spring lines, dazzling arrays of colors, and seemingly in almost every shape, but with smaller hats predominating.

The making of a hat may be said to begin in the room where a skilled workman makes plaster molds accurately defining the shapes. From these plaster affairs, metal dies are made. These dies are put in the presses and heated by gas flames. The rough shapes, either felt, velvet, straw or hemp, are stamped with these hot dies and held in them until dry. When removed the heat has baked the sticky "sizing" until the shapes are firm.

From the presses the velvet and plush hats go to a workman who steams them and brushes up the nap to its original beauty.

The straw shapes are made in the factory. Ingeniously designed sewing machines, manipulated by skillful girls, sew the braid round and round, until a tiny knot grows into a gigantic hat. In the straw season 150 girls are busy at these machines.

Englishman's Criticism of American Stores Answered

Selfridge's Manager Unjustified in Saying Customers Wait Too Long for Parcels.

A. E. Cowper, one of the important men in the organization of Selfridge & Co., which in turn has, perhaps, the most important department store in London, recently made a visit to the United States. He spent most of his time, of course, in looking over American department stores, and before he departed for England freed himself of some criticism.

"One thing which struck me was the time it takes to complete a purchase and get your goods wrapped and delivered," he said.

"At home we have no bundle wrappers; the clerks wrap the packages, and we find it saves time and mistakes. When a customer has made a purchase and the goods are shipped by carrier or messenger to a distant cash-and-bundle desk, every second she has to wait is magnified to a minute, whereas if the goods are wrapped by the clerk, the customer is getting the full attention of that salesperson, and if a minute or two should be lost, she is seeing the action all the time, and does not feel that she has been lost sight of. In Selfridge's we use cash registers, and we find them great savers of time."

Atlanta merchandise experts do not agree with the English student of store service.

Mr. Cowper, in the opinion of various Atlantans approached on the subject, magnifies the importance of the transactions where the purchases actually are taken away by the buyer.

They remark that while it may be the custom in London for shoppers to carry home their purchases, nine out of ten customers in Atlanta demand delivery by wagon.

At any rate, they say, there is very little delay, and it is much better to free the salespeople from the duty of wrapping packages.

Managers of Atlanta department stores made tests at random to demonstrate that it takes on an average 30 seconds for the delivery of a package and the making of change.

Lucian York, manager of Rich's, says:

"We have a system which we believe is the best yet devised from the viewpoint of the customer, and Selfridge's certainly have nothing to compare with it. We use an 'identification coin.'

Departs at Once.

"Most of our charge customers have their parcels delivered. After the transaction is made the customer merely gives her name and address to the salesperson, shows her identification coin, and departs at once. Even when the customer takes the parcel with her, the wrapper in the stand has it ready in a jiffy. Time records to gauge our wrappers show that on an average they use less than a minute.

"The delivery of packages, after all, is simply a minor matter. What our American people want broadly is service—the right merchandise at the right time at the right price. In English stores customers still are importuned to buy; in fact, in many of the stores it is almost impossible to leave without buying. Fancy such a condition here!

"Again, here we make every effort to get what the customer wants. We anticipate the styles, bring on new models and patterns.

"When the customer purchases these goods she buys them at our risk—if they are not pleasing to her when she gets them home she is at liberty to return them. Here the customer is always right—in England, from what I understand, she is more at the mercy of the storekeeper."

Thousand Lined Up To Get Into Store

Furniture House Devises Attractive Scheme to Induce Public to Notice Low Prices.

Even in busy Atlanta, it is seldom enough that a thousand people are lined up waiting to get into a store when the doors are thrown open. This was the record established by Sterchi Bros. & Barnes, Mitchell Street, near Whitehall, Thursday morning.

The attraction was an unusual sale of furniture, coupled with a prize offer. Tags were widely distributed among the friends of the store. Each of these tags was numbered, and 100 of the numbers corresponded with the numbers on tags borne by articles in the store. When any visitor matched his tag with any tag in the store, he was privileged to claim the article, without being obligated to purchase anything.

The plan drew a big crowd, and, better, it attracted attention to some very low prices, and resulted in good sales.

TAFFETA RIBBONS SCARCE.

A scarcity of taffeta ribbons in stock colorings is reported. Pinks, blues and whites are especially hard to get.

Silk Dyers Strike; Feathers Face Bar; Flowers in Favor

Milliners Think That for Once They Can Predict Styles for Fall Well in Advance.

Flowers will be popular on women's hats for fall and winter wear.

In July this is a dangerous prediction. Circumstances, however, make it fairly safe prophecy, in the opinion of C. B. Palmer, of M. Kutz Co., wholesale milliners.

Dame Fashion might take a notion to dictate ribbons. But the silk dyers' strikes in Paterson, N. J., have caused an increase of 20 per cent in the cost of ribbons, and even at these advanced prices, deliveries can not be made. At best, goods can not be promised before August 15 or September 1, and even if the mills reopen, they are likely to be overwhelmed with the orders which have been accumulating.

Feathers, again, might have been Fashion's favorites. But right now there is trouble in Congress over the importation of feathers. The milliners and the Audubon Society are in the throes of a bitter struggle which will decide whether feathers will be admitted at all under the new tariff.

Remain only fur and flowers. For three seasons, velvet and silk flowers have been increasing in popularity on fall and winter hats, and, with the scarcity of other materials, are likely to take the ascendency this fall.

Small hats will rule—that is, smaller than those which have been worn for the past few seasons. Crowns will be round, with turned-up brims, according to Mr. Palmer. What will be the favorite colors, besides the staple blues, browns and black, no one will know until September 1.

The Kutz Co. salesmen started out last Monday to cover the Southern States for fall business.

MORE BUYERS THAN PEACHES.

NEW YORK, July 5.—Buyers returning here from Georgia say that it is generally estimated the peach crop of Georgia will run about 1,500 cars. According to the railroad men, they do not expect to move over 75 cars a day out of the State at the flush of the season. There are a great many buyers at Fort Valley. Fully 95 per cent of the peaches are being sold on track—in fact, there are more buyers than there are peaches.

PONY CONTEST REACHES HOTTEST STAGE AS BONUS CLUB OFFER IS CLOSED

GOOD FOR 1,000 VOTES.

Only One Nomination Blank Can be Voted for Any Contestant.

Candidates Work Until Last Hour to Take Advantage of Proposition. Close Race Gives Every Youngster Entered Chance for a Shetland.

It is a weary office force in the contest department of The Georgian and Sunday American.

Until midnight Saturday, the manager and his assistants toiled, receiving votes for the many boys and girls who made strenuous effort to take full advantage of the bonus offer which closed as Sunday was ushered in.

Generous offers of extra votes were made for clubs of five subscriptions, either yearly, half-yearly or quarterly, and either for the daily alone, the Sunday paper alone, or both in combination.

The contest manager gave his personal guarantee that no offer as generous would be made from then on to the end of the contest. Naturally, there was every inducement for the contestants to work their hardest. The result was gratifying, both to the contestants and to the newspapers.

Hundreds of Subscriptions Come.

Literally hundreds of subscriptions were turned in. Now comes the work of tabulating them, and grouping each contestant's returns into clubs of five. This will take several days of hard work, while the regular routine of the office must proceed uninterrupted. Possibly it may be next Sunday before the bonuses will be fully credited. But credited they will be, and accurately.

Nearly all the contestants took a "day off" July 4, and were the guests of The Georgian and American at Grant Park. At 10 o'clock Friday morning the parade left the offices of the newspapers in Alabama Street. There were nine of the 22 ponies in line, all gaily bedecked with flags. The contestants drove them, and it is safe to say that every boy and girl who handled the reins made a firmer resolve to earn permanent possession of one of the ponies as a result of this treat.

The ponies looked their best and were the subject of admiring comment all along the route.

"I know something about horses and ponies," remarked Darwin G. Jones, manager of the Atlanta Clearing House, who made a special trip to see the parade. "I want to remark that it would be impossible to find nine others as good in all Atlanta. They're fine little animals, among the best I ever saw."

More Special Inducements.

While the great bonus offer for clubs of five subscriptions has been withdrawn, it is probable that there will be early announcement of other special inducements to contestants.

With the end of the contest 25 days away, no one is to be allowed to loaf. The pace from now on will be the hottest yet made. From five to ten contestants in every district are running within a few votes of each other. And even the hindmost still has a chance to pass the leaders. It is anyone's race as yet in every district.

Perhaps never before was there as close a contest in Atlanta newspaperdom, which is natural, since certainly never before were as valuable prizes given.

Any boy or girl who wins one of the ponies The Georgian and American are giving away may well be proud of the acquisition. And anyone who assists the contestants by subscribing to The Georgian or American will be satisfied at getting the full value of his money.

'Seven-Day Bride' Is Given Divorce

Husband Procured Licenses to Marry Two Women on Her Wedding Day.

LOS ANGELES, July 5.—The seven inharmonious days of married life from which Mrs. Pansy Biggs Caples culled testimony which gave her a divorce from William J. Caples in El Paso yesterday prove, according to Mrs. Caples, that there is luck in odd numbers.

Mrs. Caples contended in her charges against her husband, said to be a millionaire and son of a former Mayor of El Paso, that on the seventh day of their married life her husband beat her. Charging extreme cruelty, she did not ask for alimony nor for the restoration of her maiden name. Mrs. Caples said in El Paso yesterday she will return to the stage.

The matrimonial affairs of several members of the Caples family have been more or less spectacular, it is recorded in El Paso, and William Caples startled his wealthy friends on his wedding day by obtaining two separate licenses to marry two different women.

WENT TO SELL REALTY, BUT MARRIED THE RICH WIDOW

MEDFORD, OREG., July 5.—Dr. W. H. Everhard, a prominent business man, secured a tip last Saturday that Mrs. L. M. Markin, of Los Angeles, an attractive and wealthy widow, was interested in real estate in the Rogue River Valley.

Instead of selling the widow a portion of his extensive holdings, the doctor was so charmed by his prospective client's beauty that he promptly made her his partner for life via the matrimonial route.

BROWN WILL CONTINUE AS A 'LIVE WIRE' IN POLITICS

Former Governor, as Private Citizen, Intends to Wage Campaign to Decide Supreme Authority in Georgia, and Will Push Issue.

Fact That He Proposes Keeping in Touch With State's Affairs Leads to Report That He Will Oppose Hoke Smith for Senate.

That Joseph M. Brown intends keeping very much in touch with the trend of events in Georgia, that he proposes to remain a very "live wire" in politics, and that he proposes to thrash to a final adjustment his view on law enforcement and the labor unions, at least in so far as he may, is abundantly evidenced in a remarkable interview he furnished to The Sunday American yesterday.

It is very well known that many of Governor Brown's friends and partisans are urging him to enter the race for the United States Senate against Senator Hoke Smith, whose term of office expires within less than two years, and who will have to enter a campaign for re-election within the next twelve months.

To a Sunday American reporter Saturday the former Governor gave the following interview:

By JOSEPH M. BROWN.

I am going to stay at home for a few days and then I shall run up to my farm in Cherokee County, where I will be for the next week or two.

The duties of the executive office for more than a year past have forced me to neglect almost entirely my personal affairs; hence I must give primary attention to them for some time to come.

Later I expect to make an examination of the status which involves the State's relationship to the labor union. If there is a divided sovereignty of this relationship all the people are entitled to know it so that they can shape their course accordingly and choose to which they will yield allegiance.

If there is but one sovereignty that fact should be made so plain that no man and no organization of men should be betrayed into acts of attempted usurpation of that sovereignty.

Unions Have Made Issue.

In my retiring message to the General Assembly I stated that the labor union had made the issue as to whether or not its union label carried more authority in Georgia than does Georgia's great seal of State.

A mere statement of the official records of these two sources of authority necessarily confirms my declaration, viz: Some time before the year 1840 the State granted a charter to the Georgia Railroad and Banking Company, wherein she placed upon that company and upon future owners of that railroad the duties of a common carrier. She imposed upon the owners of that charter the obligation to operate trains for the conduct of the commerce of the public and of its power to travel. As the proof of her sovereign authority to grant that charter and to force obedience to its conditions she placed upon it her great seal of State.

In 1907 she specifically and positively made it the duty of the Railroad Commission to "order and compel" the operation of such train service as the needs of the public required.

In 1909 and again in 1912 the trainmen on the Georgia Railroad to ignore the State's mandate and instead to prevent the running of the trains, which it knew would result in great inconvenience and loss to the public. On that order it placed its union label.

This made the issue between the union label and Georgia's great seal of State square and plain. No sophistry can obscure it; no vituperative personal abuse can wipe it out.

Exactly the same issue was made in the strike by the street car employees in Augusta.

I note that it has been said that I should not at this late day have stirred up this matter, thus renewing dissension among the people; but I call your attention to the fact that the present session of the General Assembly is the first that has been held since the occurrence of the strikes on the Augusta street car line and the Georgia Railroad. Hence, this was the first opportunity I had for officially notifying the General Assembly of these two glaring acts of disregard of the State's authority and of the necessity of enacting such laws as would protect the public against their recurrence.

Since the publication of extracts of the message I have received a multitude of letters from people in Georgia and about a dozen other States wherein my

Plunges Off Fourth Story; Spike Hooks In His Pants; Saved

Thrown by Falling Plank, Man Hangs Head Downward Until His Rescuers Arrive.

LOS ANGELES, July 5.—W. E. Duffessy, a workman employed in the construction of the new Braley Building at Pasadena, owes his life to the strength of his overalls, which prevented him from being hurled from the fourth story of the building.

Duffessy was struck on the head by a plank dropped by a workman on the floor above him. He was thrown down the improvised elevator shaft headfirst, but after falling to the third floor his overalls caught on a protruding spike and held him steadfast.

He remained in this position with his head down until several workmen who witnessed the accident hurriedly made their way, with the aid of a rope, to where he was hanging and hauled him to a place of safety.

Champ Clark Moves As Rent Goes Up $50

Speaker's Action Starts Rebellion of Washington Tenants of High-Priced Apartments for Better Rates.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—They raised the rent $50 a month on Speaker Champ Clark for his spacious apartments on the Avenue of the Presidents, in the heart of official Washington some time ago.

To-day the Speaker moved to a new apartment in Congress Hall Hotel. This hotel is very near the Capitol, and the Speaker will save not only in the matter of rent, but car fare as well.

The Speaker pulled off his coat today, took a holiday from his official duties, and personally superintended the removal of his Lares and Penates. Washingtonians, in danger of having their rent raised, have taken heart from his distinguished example and a rebellion of tenants is in sight.

Chicago Banker Also Says "Better be Poor in Purse Than Poor in Soul."

DE KALB, ILL., July 5.—David R. Forgan, president of the National City Bank of Chicago, delivered the address at the commencement exercises of the Northern Illinois State Normal School.

"There are three things which I would have each student know," he said. "First, how to write a legible hand; second, how to add, subtract and multiply; third, how to compose properly an application for a position.

"This is an age of specialization, and there should be more schools for vocational and industrial training. Build character. Better be poor in purse than poor in soul."

The school graduated 125.

'Elevator Boy' Now A Blushing Bride

Police Lieutenant Falls in Love With Girl He Arrests for Impersonating a Man.

LOS ANGELES, July 5.—A simple little ceremony yesterday afternoon in the chapel of the Paulist Fathers in California Street united in marriage Police Lieutenant Joseph F. Stuger and Miss Aileen Shaw.

It marked the culmination of a romance which started a month ago, when Miss Shaw cast aside her woman's garments, dressed like a man, assumed the name of Herbert Emery and got a job as elevator boy in the Hotel Alma.

Up to this time the romance was simply adventure. But Tuesday night Stuger stepped in, had her arrested inadvertently and then fell in love with her.

City Will Operate 3-Cent Dance Halls

Cost Will Be Little to Couples Who Whirl to Syncopated Music in Cincinnati.

CINCINNATI, July 5.—After hearing the report of Park Superintendent Hodgkinson on the park dance halls of Cleveland, the members of the Park Board decided to give the idea a trial as soon as the bonds, recently issued, could be sold. Hodgkinson said the city of Cleveland cleared a profit of $2,500 on two park dance halls last year, charging 3 cents a couple for admission.

Numerous cases of vandalism at playgrounds were reported by the Superintendent, and the board declared that the grounds would have to be closed unless proper protection is given the equipment.

PASTOR MAKES MATCH-MAKING SPECIAL WORK

Keeps House for Aged on Fees He Collects for Performing Marriage Ceremonies.

SCOPE IS NATION-WIDE

East Needs Husbands, While West Wants Wives, Is Experience of Minister.

OMAHA, July 5.—"Here's a man worth $200,000 and he wants a wife," says the Rev. Charles W. Savidge, of Omaha. "He's a big cattle man, and last fall when he sent his range cattle to market he cleaned up $19,000. He is 50 years old, never has been married and is a man of good character. I won't make his name and address public, but when I find a woman who I think will suit him I'll send her name to him. He tells me he has never had an opportunity of becoming acquainted with the right sort, so he has asked me to find him a wife."

Mr. Savidge's fame as a matchmaker has spread far, and so many people write him for mates that he has been compelled to hire a special stenographer to take care of his correspondence. Rarely does a day pass that he has not united from two to five couples. All his marriage fees go to support a home for aged men and women which he established and maintains in this manner. At present there are about 35 inmates in his "House of Hope." None is ever asked to pay board.

Dane Seeks Matrimony.

"Here's another fellow wants a wife," he continued. "This man is 24 years old, a Dane by birth, owns a big farm and is worth about $25,000. He says he doesn't know which way to turn for a wife, so he has asked me to find one for him.

"A third one, an American, 33 years old, a rancher in Western Nebraska, and worth $35,000, is in the same predicament. He's a bachelor—but not an old one. Says he wants a wife who likes ranch life, and that she will not be asked to take part in the roundup."

Recently Mr. Savidge was called to the Rosebud country in South Dakota to lecture a bunch of ranchmen and homesteaders on the art of getting married. The ranchers paid the expenses of his trip. He took for his subject, "Have You Found Your Running Mate?" After his talk a big delegation of ranchers followed him to the hotel for a more intimate talk. They wanted to keep him right there until they were all supplied with wives. He placed them in correspondence with a number of women who had asked Mr. Savidge to get husbands for them.

Men in Biggest Demand.

"That South Dakota bunch certainly did want wives," says Mr. Savidge. "They almost wanted to hold me as a hostage, but I furnished them the names and addresses of a couple of dozen women who have written me to get husbands for them. When they finish with their courting and get ready for the ceremony I'm going back to tie them together.

"Far more women are seeking husbands than there are men seeking wives," says Mr. Savidge.

"Every day brings me letters from women—from here, there and yonder. Most of the requests for husbands come from back East, while most men who want wives live in Western States.

"Here is a request from a man who evidently needs someone to look out for him. He's a working man and has not much money, but there is $3,500 in the hands of a trustee, who has instructions to build a house with the money and deed it to the man's wife when he gets one. The money was left by his father. He lives in a small Nebraska town.

"Here's a doctor in a Missouri River city. He has a fine home and $6,000 in cash in the bank. He owns a farm of 225 acres about 70 miles from New York City and he goes down there every summer for a few weeks. He is 52 years old.

"Then here is a German, 50 years old, worth $30,000, with two Nebraska farms and several houses in a Nebraska town.

"An Omaha widow, aged 25, dark hair and eyes, with a splendid home, well furnished and complete, desires a husband, and none of the men of her acquaintance seems to suit her. So she has asked me to find her one.

"A St. Louis school teacher, with her own home, wants a husband. Says she is tired of waiting for some St. Louis man to propose. She is 32 years old and weighs about 120 pounds. Likewise a Colorado school teacher, 40 years old, good housekeeper, says she wants an Eastern husband.

"Here's a nice little telephone operator who has grown tired of answering 'hello' calls. She is slender and dark and 21 years old. I'll bet I can find her a husband in a week."

Mr. Savidge has performed the wedding ceremony for more than 6,000 applicants.

DUKE MILLIONS USED TO BUILD HIS HOME STATE

Tobacco King Is Developing Cheap Power All Over Carolinas to Help Cotton Mills.

AIDS YOUNG BUSINESS MEN

Devotes Fund Toward Financing Any Embryonic Operator Who Can Show Knowledge.

CHARLOTTE, July 5.—James B. Duke, tobacco king, is playing the role of godfather to North Carolina.

To make his native State prosperous he has spent $50,000,000 on power plants and a similar amount has gone to aid young business men establish cotton mills. Other States may scoff at Duke, but he is a prophet who is honored in his own country.

A year or two ago Mr. Duke retired as president of the American Tobacco Company. He maintained control of the British-American Tobacco Company, however, and to-day he dominates the tobacco industries of the Old World; but just prior to laying down the reins of the American company Mr. Duke conceived the idea of placing North Carolina in the forefront of the cotton manufacturing States of the Union.

While the cotton acreage of his native State was not nearly so great as that of other sister States, yet he determined that the Southern planter should find a market for his product without being forced to accept prices which are materially lessened by excessive freight rates demanded to land it in the New England mills.

Rivals of New England.

North and South Carolina were both likely places, in his opinion, for a chain of cotton mills as well equipped as those of New England. It is only a short haul from there to Norfolk and Newport News, where trans-Atlantic steamships touch going and coming, thus easily solving the problem of export facilities.

Then, too, should the mills grow in volume their owners could far outstrip their New England competitors in bidding for the raw product from neighboring States for the same reason that, with a lower freight rate to reckon with, they could pay the planter and broker better prices.

Knowing every nook and corner of his native State by heart, Mr. Duke awoke to the realization that millions upon millions of horsepower in her many waterways was going to waste. Once harness these streams and erect power plants at central points and it would be an easy matter to generate and diffuse sufficient power to turn the spindles of every cotton mill in the two States, as well as to light every municipality, the homes and business places of those dwelling within their confines, and at the same time to supply the motive power for every street railway line in the two States.

The result was cheap power and light for every county in North Carolina.

The demand for the product from the cotton plants soon became so compelling that within a few years the horsepower was doubled and then some.

Millions for Young.

Making Charlotte his central headquarters when not at the farm of his birth, near Durham, he let it be known that he was ready, willing and eager to help any and all deserving, energetic and capable persons who desired to join hands with him in making the Old North State one of the foremost cotton manufacturing centers of the Union.

The formal announcement was made that a fund of $50,000,000 was available for the establishment of cotton mills at likely and well-selected points. The money would be forthcoming at an instant's notice, provided the person could convince those in charge of it that he had a thorough knowledge of the business, was energetic, faithful and industrious and possessed sufficient money of his own to make it worth his while to strive for the success of the enterprise and stick to business.

Scores of young men who grew up in the cotton mill business, but whose chances of owning a mill of their own were remote in the extreme, were quick to benefit by the offer of their native State's wealthiest son.

Little Topeka Girl Will Visit Principal Cities of Country and Will Be Given Trip to Paris.

TOPEKA, KANS., July 5.—Atlanta will see the nation's most beautiful child, so proclaimed by photographers of the United States at practically all their exhibits, when 6-year-old Theresa Marie Blitz reaches the Georgia capital on her tour of the United States, which will later extend to Paris. She leaves her Topeka home to-day and will return in time to celebrate her seventh birthday.

Little Miss Blitz was declared to possess the most perfect features and figure of any child in the country by the Boston Art League. She won the distinction in a contest with 2,000 others from all States of the nation.

The elements which decided the art league in her case were: "Soft, wavy, dark-brown hair; big, wistful, wishful blue eyes, with the memory of dreams lurking in them; delicately molded lips and white transparent skin, with a touch of pink showing through."

She is not yet seven. Her weight is 55 pounds. Standing in her slippers she is 51 inches in height. A tape line drawn around her arm at the armpit over one thickness of light summer wear registers 9 inches. Wrist, 5 1-2 inches; thigh, 16 inches; calf, 10 inches; ankle, 7 inches.

After her tour of the big cities of this country and a visit to Paris she will return in time to celebrate her seventh birthday, November 18. Theresa has great love for flowers and music and bird life. She knows many flowers by name.

Little Theresa's mother died when the child was eight months old. She was a beautiful woman and possessed all the charms and graces so fully reflected in the figures and features of the daughter.

Theresa will spend two weeks each in Kansas City, St. Louis, Chicago, Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Atlanta and Norfolk. The trip to Paris will be made in five weeks. In New York and Philadelphia oil paintings will be made of her.

Film of Princess in Low-Cut Gown Burned

Queen Mary Orders Cinema Company to Destroy Work That Cost $25,000—She Pays $185.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, July 5.—Queen Mary has ordered the Cinema Company to burn the films of pictures it made recently by special permission of the King and Queen, showing Princess Mary and the two children of Sir Derek and Lady Keppel at tea in Buckingham Palace grounds.

Her reason is that the Princess Mary appeared in the pictures in a low-cut frock.

The Queen will pay the cost of the films, $185, but the Cinema Company is out at least $25,000.

BRIDE GIVES WEDDING RING TO SAVE HUSBAND FROM JAIL

Ban on Gum; Pretty Chicago Co-Eds Pout

"Blind Pigs" Started by Girls to Prove Their Independence of Rules.

CHICAGO, July 5.—Co-eds at the University of Chicago were inclined to-day to pout at a new order which, in effect, places the ban on chewing gum. They don't want the gum so much, but many of them regard the order as an undue infringement of personal rights.

There was a rumor that several "blind pigs" where the chicle product may be obtained were already in operation in co-ed dormitories.

"GOOD FELLOW MAYOR" PUTS LID ON IN WISCONSIN TOWN

LA CROSSE, WIS., July 5.—When Ori J. Sörenson, known during his first term as the "Good Fellow Mayor," was re-elected after a term held by the opposition, the more liberal minded citizens agreed that good times were coming.

Since his election he has been adjusting the screws on a "lid" the like of which La Crosse never saw before. The stopping of baseball pools is his latest.

BATTLE OF LOVE ON FIELD OF GETTYSBURG IS CLOSED; EACH SIDE HAILED AS VICTOR

Martial Spirit of Old Soldiers of Both Blue and Gray Exceeded Only by Sincere Warmth of Affection for Their Former Foes.

VETERANS BEAR HEAT WITH THEIR WARTIME FORTITUDE

General Sickles, of Union Army, and General Young, of the Confederacy, Greeted by Warriors They Led and Fought at Scene of the Reunion.

GETTYSBURG, PA., July 5.—The tumult and the shouting died for the second time on Gettysburg, and the battlefield again has figured in world history. For no less memorable than the hostile conflict of the armies of Lee and Meade in '63 was the friendly meeting between the meager remnants of the same armies which, lasting four days, is at an end to-day.

Voices have been raised in the name of peace and reconciliation during all the half century since Appomatox, but they have always remained merely unrealized appeals—until this last week, the semi-centennial of the greatest battle of the greatest war ever fought between brothers.

And now peace reigns, love reigns at last over the broad, rolling stretches of Gettysburg, where for fifty years has hovered a recollection of crashing terror of sectional hatred, of thirst for blood.

Affection of Veterans Sincere.

The reunion of the veterans of the Union and of the Confederacy has been the sincerest and most effective step ever taken for the reconciliation of the North and the South—this is so by common consent of the veterans themselves, of younger representatives of the two sections, and of expressions which have come from over the nation.

Yesterday it was proved so, when a pathetic but brave spectacle was staged. The white-haired men of the Union army were deployed, as nearly as could be calculated, in the positions they occupied the great third day of the battle at Bloody Angle. They stood there, proud in the forgetfulness of their years, oblivious of the terrific heat, oblivious of everything around them, with eyes seeing only the brave, strong day fifty years before, when they waited on the same spot for the enemy.

The feeble gray army, also, was placed in battle order. They, too, were exultant, eager, powerless to stifle the rebel yell that bubbled out of their souls.

The command was given to charge. The rebel yell came sharp and clear. The gray army started toward the blue line. Its charge did not have the force and nerve that impelled it fifty years ago. Instead, many of the veterans stumbled in their course, some of them fell. The advancing line became ragged, where the younger veterans, eager, outdistanced more feeble comrades. But the spirit of '63 was there.

Clasp Hands at Bloody Angle.

Years rolled back, and the echoes of cannonade, the sight of the all-pervading smoke film, the choking scent of that smoke, the thrill of battle and of youth—all were revived.

The gray army advanced to the Bloody Angle. The blue army braced itself for the shock, as they well knew how to do. The two lines came together.

As they met, the rebel yell became a laugh, the tense faces of the blue veterans melted. Blue and gray clasped hands and were friends. The old men were not ashamed of their frank arms that went out and around the shoulders of their enemies of fifty years ago—comrades now—nor of the tears. Nor were any of the thousands of spectators ashamed of the demonstration in which they joined impulsively.

All that was spectacular. Yet it was not exceptional in revealing the spirit that prompted the entire reunion. Since last Tuesday everywhere has been exhibited friendliness and reconciliation. More than 50,000 veterans were present, sleeping together, tenting together on the old camp ground, telling endless stories, pointing out spots here and there where they saw men die—but always smiling, always shaking hands, always jolly.

G. A. R. Outnumbers U. C. V.

Of those who attended the reunion of the two armies, little more than one-fourth were soldiers of the Confederacy. The others were G. A. R. men, who, with less distance to travel, naturally were present in greater numbers.

The trip was trying, with the heat and with little inevitable discomforts that the old men would not have noticed 50 years ago, but which now were fraught with danger. There was tragedy in the sight of the feeble veterans fighting vainly against heat and exhaustion. There was real tragedy when a dozen or more succumbed and died on the same field where they escaped shot and shell.

The first two days of the reunion were almost unbearable with their heat, and the suffering was great. But a cooling storm blew up the third day, rendering pleasant enough the reunion weather.

Conversation Never Lags.

Within the tents there was always conversation. Not even in the dead of the night did it cease. The talk was of charges and of retreats, of maneuvers that have become more and more heroic now that the years have passed—but mostly, as is the way of veterans the world over, of personal prowess and adventure.

Camp fires were lighted in rows that stretched for miles and miles along the streets between the tents. Around them men sat, talking. Under the tents men lay on the cots, talking. There was little sleep, especially the first two nights, but voices everywhere through the night. Voices that were steady and numerous, with a sort of staccato effect that came with the intermittent puffing of thousand of corncob pipes.

Every veteran was his own best listener. Naturally, with everybody talking.

There was so much to tell, so many deeds of valor, so many heroes, so many beloved leaders who now are demigods.

Some of the leaders were present. Most spectacular and attractive figure, perhaps, was General Daniel E. Sickles, of New York, the sole surviving corps commander of the Union army who participated in the battle of Gettysburg.

Every day of the four saw a stream of visitors to his quarters, men who cried like babies as they shook his hands, and who had a hundred stories to tell him. The old general cried himself, and at one time was ordered kept from the visitors. More than 3,000 men, it is estimated, came to see him and to shake his hand on the first day of the reunion, and he held a veritable court as he sat in an armchair on the porch of the Rodgers home, a battlefield landmark.

Young Leaders Scorn Beds.

Others of the leaders, younger and more vigorous than the aged Federal, scorned the proffered beds and snug chambers that had been reserved for them, choosing instead the tents and cots of their comrades. One of these men was General A. J. West, of Georgia, who later was presented with a loving cup by the men of his State.

General Bennet H. Young, of Louisville, commander-in-chief of the United Confederate Veterans, was another hero. When he addressed the reunion crowd the first day, his own gray veterans greeted him with a lusty rebel yell that was rivaled in vigor by the sincere cheer which came from the Union veterans.

Confederate generals present were Robertson, Texas; West, Georgi.; Shaffer, Louisiana; A. D. Williams, Florida; Law, Florida, and Carr, North Carolina.

Mrs. H. D. Longstreet, of Gainesville, Ga., widow of the great Confederate leader, was here and was always the center of a reverent crowd. Many men who fought under her husband followed her day after day, telling of incidents that occurred during the war.

The first night at the battlefield she could find no quarters. Everything was reserved, and she was forced to sleep on the floor of a farmhouse. The next morning, however, she found that a tent had been reserved for her by General Sickles.

She went to the pump of a farmhouse to get a drink of water, and there met an old soldier. She asked him under whom he fought, and he, ignorant of her identity, replied, "Longstreet."

"And are you glad or sorry that the war ended as it did?" she asked him.

"I am glad," he said, emphatically, "so far as the war itself is concerned, but not for the reconstruction days. You may be a Northern woman, and if you are, you can't imagine what we went through—not in the war, when the soldiers fought us, but in the days afterward, when the politicians governed us. But I'm glad the war ended in a united nation."

Wore Badge of Union.

Mrs. Longstreet saw everywhere examples of the reconciliation that the Gettysburg meeting has brought about. She met a soldier wearing a gray suit but decked with a badge marked Fifth Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry. She asked him why he, a Union man, should wear a gray suit.

"Me?" he said, surprised. "I am not a Yankee. I fought under Longstreet, and I'm from Mississippi."

"Why do you wear that badge, then?" she asked.

"Why," he said, "a Yank came along to-day from the Fifth Pennsylvania and asked me of I'd trade badges with him, after we'd had a talk and found out where we were at Gettysburg. So we traded. He's wearing my badge now—Fifteenth Mississippi. Says he'll keep it as long as he lives."

Reconciliation is sincere. There was even talk during the four days of an amalgamation of the United Confederate Veterans and the Grand Army of the Republic under the name, "The United Veterans of the United States."

Old Nurses Open Hospital.

A band of devoted women were the survivors of the corps of nurses who served during the battle. Mrs. Salome Stewart, leader of the band, was here to open the old hospital. Others of her staff present were Mrs. Charles F. Dye and Miss Cornelia Hancock of Philadelphia; Miss Margaret Hamilton, Wakefield, Conn.; Mrs. Mary Stevens, Peabody, Conn.; Mrs. Annie Irving, Newburg; Mrs. Helen Cole, Sheboygan, Wis. Women of the families of General Meade, General Pleasett and General Hill were present, too.

There were reunions between survivors of Buford's division of Meade's army, and Wheeler's division of Lee's, and, at the Bloody Angle, between Meredith's Iron Brigade and Pettigrew's men. It was these latter, according to the history of the fight, who saw the fiercest struggle.

Not in all the story of the reunion is there the breath of an unpleasantness among the veterans. A serious fight occurred the second day of the meeting, when seven men were stabbed. The fight, however, was precipitated by several young men who, abusing Abraham Lincoln, aroused the anger of a Union veteran. None of the seven injured was a veteran.

But among the veterans of the two armies there was only friendship and serenity. Blue and Gray swapped coffee and tobacco, just as they had done during the war, swapped reminiscences, and, most of all, traded assurances of having forgiven and forgotten the bitterness and the struggle of half a century ago.

President Follows Lincoln.

Tuesday of the reunion was Veterans' Day, given over to a great meeting of all the old soldiers, with addresses by representatives of both sides. Wednesday was Military Day, when younger soldiers were on display. Thursday was Civic Day, when Governors of States, representatives of the national government, and other civil authorities made addresses. Friday was National Day, marked by the address of President Wilson.

Every night the veterans sang the old war songs through, and repeated on the chorus. The entire encampment of the Gray veterans in the valley below the ridge joined in, until a chorus resounded that was thundering even in the vast spaces of the battlefield.

The songs were more and more exultant as the evening wore on. Now and then the rebel yell punctuated the melody. The sound spread to the Blue army, and was there augmented by the voices of the Union veterans until the battlefield became each night a vast theater for the recrudescence of the most wonderful martial spirit of all ages.

Gen. Sickles Paints Vivid Picture of Noted Struggle

By GENERAL DANIEL E. SICKLES.

Sole Surviving Corps Commander Who Participated in the Battle of Gettysburg.

MY heart beats faster to-night. The thronging hordes who motored, walked or came by trolley to my camp to-day have swept their hats off and hailed it as "Sickles' Day."

It was on this day a half century ago that God gave me strength to serve my country and my Maker better than I ever had been able to serve before.

It was upon this day in '63 that I lost my leg and did my little part by the mercy of God to preserve the Union.

July 2, 1863, broke hot and clear. Just as in the early hours to-day, a molten sun poured out of a sky that was but a trifle overclouded. I had retired shortly after midnight the previous evening and slept the quiet, dreamless sleep that is generally attributed to innocent babes.

Many men who came to-day to shake my hand told me they were too busy to do so 50 years ago—that their whole hearts and minds were wrapped up in the conflict to come.

I knew that a conflict of the utmost importance to our country was at hand. And something told me the fight would begin about 3 o'clock. So it proved.

Was Sent for by Meade.

A few minutes before that hour General Meade, in command, sent word to me that he desired to see me immediately. I replied that I could not come, as the enemy was about to attack. Meade did not believe me, and sent his aide-de-camp back with a more peremptory message.

Meade had never been in favor of giving battle at Gettysburg, and I knew that he would order me to leave my position and move to Pipe Creek, where he intended to battle. At this time I held the advance line extending from Devil's Den to the Peach Orchard. I had also forced out a further line on the Emmitsburg Road, which passes in front of the Rogers House here.

I had hardly given spurs to my horse in response to my superior's summons when the enemy's attack opened. I immediately sent word to Meade I could not obey his commands because I was actually being attacked.

In a few minutes hell had broken loose along my line. My 10,000 men were attacked with ferocity by two of Longstreet's divisions and Anderson's division of Hill's corps—20,000 men in all.

Let me call attention right here to the fact that if I had not taken the initiative our left would have been lost. Longstreet said I won the battle by my advance move. Sheridan said so, and Grant indorsed the former's opinion.

Sickles' Losses Were 4,200.

The fight was the most desperate, the most severe of my life. It was far more intense than Chancellorsville. My total losses were 4,200 men, while the enemy's was approximately 7,000 or 8,000. The cannonading was the heaviest I have ever heard.

The loss of my leg occurred between 6 and 7 o'clock in the evening. Owing to the small number of my men compared with that of the enemy I knew that it was only through force of personal leadership that I could hold them together, so I rode constantly upon my horse up and down my line of battle.

I have been criticised for this, but it was the only way I could prevent my men from being overpowered. And so I paid no attention when they cried: "Sickles to the rear. Sickles to the rear."

The loss of a limb or the loss of a life meant nothing to me then. Nor has it since. I had but one thought—to win the battle.

Wounded After Victory.

It was after the victory had been practically won that the piece of shrapnel that almost cost me my life came along. At first I did not know I was hit. My thoughts, as I said before, were solely on the battle and so I am unable to tell exactly at what point I was struck. It was somewhere between the peach orchard and the wheat field.

I made the discovery that I had been hit as I was riding back from immediate front to my headquarters' flag. I felt my foot was wet and damp. I looked down and found that my knee and leg were also wet and damp. I slipped my leg over the back of my horse and saw that I was bleeding a great deal. Then I knew my leg was badly fractured—it later turned out to have been fractured both above and below the knee.

Instantly I slipped from my horse's back and sent for a surgeon. I was still bleeding a great deal and I saw that I would bleed to death before the arrival of a surgeon unless something was done.

Blood's Flow Stayed.

So I ordered one of my staff to take a small strap from his blanket and buckle it about my leg. The strap was pulled into a tight tourniquet and the rapid flow of blood was stayed. The doctors said before they amputated the leg that not even one of my sturdy constitution could have stood the terrific loss of blood.

At the end of the second day's battle General Meade was still pessimistic. He still believed it would be better to retreat and fight at Pipe Creek. The council of war, however, would not hear of it. Slocum's ringing resolution: "Stay and fight," was unanimously adopted. Results proved its wisdom. I personally have always entertained doubts whether Lee would have followed us to Pipe Creek and offered battle.

Southern Girl To Be an Opera Star

Miss Baylor in Debut Sept. 14

Miss Eloise Baylor, who wil l make her debut as Philine in "Mignon."

Brilliant Career Is Predicted for Chattanooga Singer by European Masters.

CHATTANOOGA, July 5.—A gifted Southern girl will make her debut in grand opera at Bremen, Germany, September 14, when Miss Eloise Baylor, of Chattanooga, will appear in the role of Philine in the opera "Mignon." Miss Baylor will appear regularly until the following April, her repertoire comprising the following roles: Philine in "Mignin," Violetta in "Traviata," Martha in "Martha," Gilda in "Rigoletto," Frau Fluth in "Lustige Weiber," Konegin der Nacht in "Zauberflote," Konigin in "Hugenotter," Mimi in "La Boheme," Rosina in "Barbier von Siviglia," Lucia in "Lucia de Lammermoor," Ophelie in "Hamlet," Wald Vogel in "Siegfried," Erste Rheintochter in "Rheingold," Constance in "Entfuhrung," and Erste Rheintochter in "Gotterdammerung."

Miss Baylor is the daughter of Prof. and Mrs. J. Roy Baylor, and emphatically an American girl in spite of the fact that the past four years of her life have been spent in the study of music under the French, German and Italian masters. She is of Colonial stock on both her paternal and maternal side. She was born in Charloftesville, Va.

It might be said that Miss Baylor's musical career began when Mrs. Virginia Preston Means taught her as a delightful baby of 2 years to run the scale. Her father moved to Chattanooga from Virginia shortly afterward and her musical training was intrusted to Miss Ione Spears.

It was slightly more than seven years ago that Miss Baylor began the study of her chosen art, working in New York under the best masters. While here she sang before Madame Sembrich, and the latter was so delighted with her voice that she gave her a recommendation and ordered her to study under Jean de Reszke, in Paris.

The Southern girl followed her advise, and two years ago she completed the course prescribed by De Reszke and his chief assistant, Oscar Seagle, a native Chattanoogan.

Since completing this course Miss Baylor has appeared in practically all the European capitals and is even better known on the continent than in the United States. A brilliant career is predicted for her by all the European masters.

INNOCENT MAN PARDONED AFTER 2 YEARS IN PRISON

TOPEKA, July 5.—George Horton, sent to the State Penitentiary in 1910 charged with robbing a jewelry store in Medicine Lodge, Kans., has served nearly two years for a crime he did not commit, according to facts brought out to-day when Governor Hodge granted him a permanent parole. Horton's conviction resulted because a bloodhound placed upon the trail directed suspicion to him. Horton's friends were able to present evidence to the Governor that the stolen jewelry was hidden under a Medicine Lodge hotel after Horton was in prison.

position is indorsed and statements are made that the labor union's exactions are becoming almost unbearable

Thus far the labor union and its few newspaper advocates are alone in criticising the stand which the oath of office made it my duty to take. From these I note that I have "killed myself politically."

Never Considered Politics.

As to that act of so-styled political suicide, I will remark that it never occurred to me to consider any political bearing in the case. But, now that the point has been raised, I will observe that there was a matter of gratitude to the people of Georgia, which may even be styled political gratitude, which, I confess, swayed me. I refer to the fact that the voters of this State have twice conferred upon me the supreme honor in their gift.

Nothing which they control compares in responsibility, in dignity and eminence with the governorship!

Therefore, with my reward already bestowed, they had the right to expect and demand that I would safeguard their interests, oblivious to inducements or threats. My duty was plain.

Now, there is one point which I must ask you to bear especially in mind. I refer to the fact that there are thousands of members of the labor union in Georgia who are golden-hearted in their love of the State and of their fellow citizens.

But they have not appreciated the fact that in resorting to the process of a strike they have put themselves in direct rebellion to the laws of the State. They have not appreciated the fact that they are the victims of a system which holds itself above the law.

The strike status is not of Georgia. It is a foreign importation. Its aims are the securing of preference by force. Its attempts are the control and virtual ownership of the property which others own and upon which those others are required to pay taxes to the State.

Its concomitant is almost invariably violence to the persons of those who obey the laws in performing the duties which the strikers refuse to do, and frequently in damage to or destruction of property which they have temporarily abandoned for use, but over which they keep a hostile guard.

No Preference Is Shown.

Among these members of the labor union are a number of my friends of a lifetime. To oblige them I would go to any honorable lengths in my power, and I feel sure that I hold their reciprocal regard. Yet, probably the highest duty I owe them is to make clear to their minds the fact that they should not allow themselves to be deceived into doing deeds which in their essence are antagonistic to the very genius of our laws, and which, if tolerated, will breed anarchy, in which they will ultimately be among the worst sufferers.

It is needless to say that the State will not allow any class to have preference over others.

She does not intend that capital shall oppress labor, nor does she intend that labor shall rob or destroy capital, and she is very far from intending that the allies of union labor shall beat or kill or drive from the means of making an honoset livelihood those laborers who do the same kind of work the members of the labor union do, and especially when union labor has refused to do that work.

Now as to the claim that the courts can not reach all cases in which labor has rights against capital. There is really very little in this claim. But if it were ever so true, it is the duty of labor to go to the Legislature and have laws enacted which will cover such cases, instead of resorting to methods which embarrass unoffending thousands and are too often attended by destruction of property and by brutal violence, and even death to persons.

No man can claim that the Legislature would shut its ears and turn its hands against the proper demands of labor.

Court Is Proper Tribunal.

Therefore, what I have maintained as executive officer of the State, and what I plead for as a private citizen, is that all men go into court with their differences, if they can not settle them by mutual agreement or by arbitration. I insist that no man and no class be allowed any process which amounts to a special privilege. I insist that if any man be deprived of life, liberty or property, or that if any kind of personal punishment be inflicted upon him, it shall be by the hands of the law, and not by self-appointed or secretly instigated avengers.

Inasmuch, therefore, as the labor union, by obstructing and occasionally preventing the operation of the public utilities, has placed its mandate in opposition to the State's mandate, it may become necessary for the State to protect her citizens against its acts which bring damage to them.

She now requires insurance companies to make a money deposit with her before doing business in her borders. These companies represent capital. If she would make the same requirement of labor organizations, with the fund to be forfeited to the State in the event these organizations do deeds which damage the public, she would be but treating labor and capital alike—and who can say that this would be unfair?

Again, the public utilities are chartered to serve the public—all the people. Their tolls and general conduct are regulated by law. Therefore, they are, in great measure, public institutions.

Hence it would certainly conduce to the public interest if every member of the labor union, which assumes to control the working powers of the utilities, were required to take an oath before a State official to the effect that he would do no act which would obstruct that utility for which he works from performing the functions for which it was chartered. The penalty for violation of that oath should be the forfeiture of the right to service on any public utility in the State for the period of one year. The same penalty should be made to apply to any officer of the utility in question.

Merely Views of Citizen.

Of course, the foregoing views are merely those of a private citizen. Yet I recognize that, having entered as a public official upon the presentation of the questions which the labor union has made an issue with the State, it is not improper for me in any capacity to make a searching examination into this question involving the rights of each citizen of Georgia. This I will undertake to do after I give proper attention to my private affairs, which have been placed in the background for several years.

When Mozart Bowed Before the Boy Beethoven

(Stirring Stories of Great Musicians. No. 7.)

AWKWARD, ill-clothed, the boy entered the room that was to him a shrine. He had come far to see the world's great master, to beg a word of encouragement.

He sat at the piano, awkward still, his smouldering eyes fixed with grim intensity upon the other's. He wished to see his triumph. But as he watched, the light went out from the other's face. It grew uninterested.

Grimly the boy played on, but he knew his failure. He had learned his piece too well, its witchery was gone. Then with a crash, he suddenly ceased.

"Give me a theme" he pleaded. The great musician did so, unwilling to hurt him who had failed.

Grimly still, almost sullenly, the youth commenced again. And then the magic from his fingers came, tracing their mastery in immortal sound. Slow the tones grew. Slowly they faded, like a soft regret, faded and were still.

Slowly the man rose, reverently he bowed.

"Boy, thou art great," he said, "the world will hear of thee."

It was the tribute of the setting to the dawning Sun of Genius—the Great Man to the Great Boy. It was Mozart's tribute to Beethoven.

Have you a boy who hummed little airs at play when he was tiny? That boy has musical talent, and you are responsible for developing it.

Have you given him a musical chance, with a musical education, on a good piano? Or have you already ruined his ear by giving him the "cheap tone" habit of a cheap piano?

The delicate brain cells connected with the ear take bad "sound habits" quickly, which can't be lost. That is why an English cockney misplaces his "h," or a street boy loves a squeaking harmonica. The

PERRY VICTORY ON ERIE IN 1813 IS CELEBRATED

100 Years Peace With England and Centennial of Naval Engagement Commemorated.

SUNKEN FLAGSHIP RAISED

Struggle on Lake To Be Depicted by Sham Battle—Many Officials Attend.

ERIE, PA., July 5.—Beautifully decorated with bunting and flowers, the city of Erie presents a delightful spectacle in preparation for the centennial celebration of Perry's victory at the Battle of Lake Erie, which will be inaugurated to-morrow by a "Peace Sunday," closing on Saturday night. An elaborate program has been arranged for the entertainment of the thousands of visitors who will attend.

Throughout the summer several celebrations are scheduled at various points along the lake bearing a historical relationship to the battle. The list of celebrations will probably close with the dedication of the Perry memorial now nearing completion on South Bass Island, near the western end of Lake Erie. The celebration will also be in the nature of commemorations of a hundred years' peace between English-speaking nations.

To-morrow at 11 o'clock special services will be held in all the churches in the city. At 3:30 in the afternoon there will be a parade, terminating in a mass meeting before the reviewing stand at Perry Square. The children of the Sunday schools will be dressed and seated in such a manner, on a huge stand erected for the purpose, as to form a living American flag.

The old DuPont powder wagon, which was used for the transportation of ammunition in the War of 1812, is making an overland trip from the DuPont Works in Wilmington, Del., and is scheduled to arrive in Erie at 3 o'clock on Monday afternoon, when a reception in its honor will take place. The wagon is to be escorted by a detachment of the naval force of Pennsylvania from the United States steamship Wolverine, the oldest iron vessel in existence, built in Erie in 1844.

The National Guard State encampment has been arranged for the week of the celebration, the camp being pitched just outside of the city.

A 8 p. m. a leading citizen of the city, impersonating Commodore Perry, will sail into the harbor on Perry's flagship, the Niagara, which has been raised from the bottom of Misery Bay and restored. Following this there will be a band concert in Perry Square, after which the automobile parade will be held. The day will be known as Reception Day.

Tuesday will be Mothers' and Children's Day. The principal feature of the afternoon will be the parade of 12,000 school children. In the evening a band concert, followed by a pageantry parade, will take place. Wednesday has been designated as Governors' Day, and arrangements have been made to entertain Governor Tener, of Pennsylvania, and Governors from at least eight other States. In the afternoon there will be a military parade. There will also be hydroaeroplane flights on the bay on this and subsequent days.

Naval Day will be celebrated on Thursday, starting with a naval parade in the afternoon, to be reviewed by Secretary of the Navy Josephus Daniels. Following the parade, boat races will be held on the day, in which yachts, motorboats and naval training ships will compete.

Sham Battle on Water.

In the evening there will be a massed band concert in Perry Square, followed by a naval sham battle on the bay depicting the Battle of Lake Erie.

The principal features on Friday will be the fraternal parade in the afternoon. Saturday, the closing day of the celebration, has been designated as Industrial or Erie Day. In the evening, preceding a massed band concert in the square, the Niagara will sail out of the harbor, as she did 100 years ago. After leaving Erie she will visit other lake ports and participate in commemorative celebrations.

During the week of celebration the sword used by Perry at the battle will be on exhibition, as well as a brace of pistols and his flag, inscribed, "Don't Give Up the Ship." The sword has been lent by Perry Belmont, of New York, a grandson of Commodore M. C. Perry, the brother of Commodore Oliver Hazard Perry, the hero of the battle. Mrs. Alexander Perry, of Washington, D. C., lent the pistols. The flag is the property of the Government.

Every building will be hauled two miles to a new town site on the railway. Scobey is located 60 miles west of Plentywood, and it already is a thriving city, having banks, a hotel and several stores.

CITY TO RUN TWO SALOONS.

SISSETON, S. D., July 5.—Sisseton will have two municipal saloons, licenses for which were granted to W. E. Bollenbeck by popular vote. Bollenbeck will conduct the business for a salary of $1,800 per year.

Suffragist Is to Wear Trousers 'Are More Modest Than Skirts' Hiker Will Discard Her Petticoats

General Jones' Mascot on March to Washington Has a Corsetless Silk Costume.

NEW YORK, July 5.—They're here at last. Mrs. John Boldt, who was called the mascot of General Jones' suffrage army on its 250-mile hike to the inauguration last February, has designed several pairs of trouser costumes, and will wear them hereafter.

At her apartments in the Hotel Marseilles yesterday, Mrs. Boldt criticised the women who are always talking dress reform, she said, but lacked the courage to wear "the sensible clothing they advocated."

"What we need to break the shackles and free these slaves to fashion is a leader," remarked Mrs. Boldt, as she sat in a big easy chair attired in her corsetless, trousette costume. It was made of sunburst-colored silk, caught in at the ankles with a band of gold and blue embroidery. The high waist, in Empire effect, was finished with a girdle of the same embroidery.

"The trouble with us is that we are many years behind the times in dress. The women of the East are far more progressive than us in dress. The majority of women in the world today wear trousers, the women of India, Turkey, China, Japan and even the peasant women of many European countries.

"Trousers of the style I wear, with draperies for evening of soft materials, giving an artistic Grecian line, are far more modest than the slit skirts you see on Broadway, with the limbs exposed to the knees, or transparent underclothing."

MRS. JOHN BOLDT, prominent suffragette and chief aide of General Rosalie Jones, wearing the type of trousers which she urges as a substitute for skirts.

Girls Writing Book Will Simplify Laws

Ohio Misses Preparing History of All State Statutes to Aid Bench and Bar.

CLEVELAND, July 5.—The embryo lawyer to-day, who will be the brilliant pleader of to-morrow, will owe a debt of gratitude to two Cleveland girls for a massive volume filled with simple interpretations of Ohio's laws.

The girls are Miss Ruth Winch, 23, daughter of Judge Louis H. Winch, and Miss Ruth Jenkins, 18.

The book they are writing is being prepared by two girls under the supervision of Judge Winch, and will be known as "The History of the Laws of Ohio," containing nearly a thousand pages of dry legal matter made simple and entertaining. The book will be published this fall.

Takes Horse to Wed; Girl Given 7 Years

Woman Declares She Induced Man to Steal Animal so That They Could Elope.

PARSONS, KANS., July 5.—For stealing a horse so she could elope and be married, Mrs. Marie Pollard was sentenced to seven years in the penitentiary.

It was the first time in the history of the Labette County Court that a woman was sentenced for horse stealing.

Before she was sentenced, Mrs. Pollard insisted that she alone was to blame. She declared she had induced Samuel Parks to steal the horse and buggy and drive her to Clinton, where they were to have been married.

2,500 CHURCH MEMBERS AT ANNUAL FOOT WASHING

ANDERSON, IND., July 5.—More than 2,500 adherents of the Church of God from all sections of the country, participated in the annual foot-washing ceremony at the national camp meeting near here.

Women of the church are not permitted to wear gay-colored ribbons or plumage, and the men wear no neckties. Jewelry is not allowed. Smoking is prohibited. Men kiss each other. The only musical instrument allowed in the service is a tuning fork.

Uncle Sam Must Pay Indian's Doctor Bill

Comptroller Holds That Government Must Care for Blind Aborigine Hurt in Auto Accident.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—Uncle Sam is just as much a protector and guardian of the life and welfare of his Indian wards as a parent is of his child.

This principle of responsibility was proclaimed by George E. Downey, Comptroller of the Treasury, in overruling the appeal of Robert W. Wooley, new auditor for the Interior Department, for a reversal of the Comptroller's decision approving a $900 bill of Dr. George P. Sampson for treating and nursing a blind Indian.

Charley Walker, a blind Navajo and ward of the Government, deserted by his guide on the approach of a train, was run over.

Dr. Sampson amputated his left leg and right foot and cared for him for three months.

NEW STANDARD OF WEIGHT FOR GEMS ADOPTED BY U. S.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—The Treasury Department has issued instructions to collectors of customs, adopting as the unit of weight for imported diamonds, pearls and other precious stones, the metric carat of 200 milligrams. The adoption of this standard will make the practice of this country conform to that of large countries dealing in diamonds, chief among them being the Netherlands, England, France and Belgium.

TEACHERS WHO SPEAK SPANISH IN BIG DEMAND

Many Positions in Latin-America Go Begging Because of Lack of Knowledge of Language.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—Several well-paid teaching positions in Latin-America open to Americans will probably be filled by men from other countries because of a lack of trained men in the United States with a speaking knowledge of Spanish, according to L. A. Kalbach, chief clerk of the Bureau of Education.

On several occasions lately, he points out, the Bureau of Education, at the request of the State Department, has scoured the country in search of educators for responsible positions in Latin-American countries, only to find generally that those who might qualify in other particulars can not speak the language.

$2,400 Salaries Offered.

The American Minister to Panama recently asked the United States Government to recommend candidates for professor of industrial arts, professor of agriculture and professor of veterinary medicine in Panama. Salaries up to $2,400 and other inducements were offered. The Bureau of Education communicated with various institutions and organizations that usually have lists of available candidates, but in this case the response was meager, because of the language requirement.

"None of our industrial arts experts speaks Spanish," wrote an officer of one of the best known teacher-training institutions. Others declared that while they knew of men who would meet the requirements, so far as professional attainments and teaching experience were concerned, they knew of none who had the added requirement of Spanish.

Few Learn Spanish.

Spanish is, of course, taught in many American institutions of learning, but the bureau officials point out, comparatively few students avail themselves of the opportunity to learn it. Sometimes students feel that a high school or college course in Spanish will not furnish the necessary conversational knowledge. This difficulty has long been recognized in all modern language instruction, and in Spanish, particularly, practical control of the language is now insisted upon.

Furthermore, opportunities for practice in speaking Spanish are constantly increasing. Better transportation facilities are making the United States and Latin-American nations more and more accessible to each other.

APPOINTMENT OF GONZALES RECALLS FEUD

Brother of New Minister to Cuba Was Slain on Street by James H. Tillman.

When William Elliott Gonzales goes to Cuba, to which country he has been appointed as Minister by President Wilson, he will be returning to the land of his ancestors. Born in the United States, he is intensely American in his point of view, but this has not prevented him from taking a deep interest in the development of Cuba.

His name is a link between the two countries. His father, a native of Matanzas, Cuba, married into the old Elliott family of South Carolina, and the new Minister to Cuba was named for his uncle, William Elliott, a one-time Representative in Congress. The Elliotts had been for generations prominent in the social and political life of the Palmetto State, and General Ambrosio Jose Gonzales, the father of William Elliott Gonzales, was a greater politician than any of them and brought up his boys to take a vital interest in politics, for his participation in which one son paid with his life. The memoers of the Gonzales family have always had decided opinions on every public question and have always expressed their feelings forcibly.

Headed Fight for Liberty.

General Gonzales, with Narisco Lopez, headed the struggle for independence of Cuba in 1844, being one of the junta of five members who signed the declaration of independence, adopted the present flag and organized the first filibustering expedition under Lopez, he being second in command, with the rank of brigadier general. He was the first Cuban wounded in the battle for independence at Cardenas, May 20, 1850. The expedition failed and a sentence of death was pronounced upon Gonzales, but he escaped to the United States and settled in South Carolina, where he married a daughter of William Elliott, a prominent citizen of Beaufort. When the Civil War broke out the Cuban general offered his services to the Confederates and served as colonel and chief of artillery with General Beauregard, surrendering with Johnston's army at Greensboro in 1865. His two sons have followed in his footsteps, both having been soldiers, having proved their devotion to the United States and to Cuba.

He Opposed Tillman.

The feud which ended in the fatal shooting of Narisco G. Gonzales by Lieutenant Governor James H. Tillman in 1903 was partly political and partly personal. The two families had been on bad terms for years, and during the campaign which resulted in the election of Tillman as Lieutenant Governor, Gonzales through his paper, The State, had fought him bitterly. In his editorials he had called him names that Tillman could not forgive or forget. He challenged the editor to a duel, but Gonzales treated the proposal with contempt. This in no way impugned his courage, for the entire Gonzales family was noted for its bravery and nerve, and Narisco Gonzales, who was named for old Narisco Lopez, had acted as a scout for Gomez before the Spanish-American war and had served in the American army after war was declared, doing valiant service.

He was shot when walking unarmed in the public street by Tillman. At the first shot he called out "Coward!" and then "Shoot again!" as he sank to the ground. He died a few days afterward and feeling ran so high that Tillman, insisting that he could not get a fair trial in that county obtained a change of venue and was acquitted after a sensational trial.

Is a Spanish War Veteran.

William Elliott Gonzales succeeded his brother as the editor of The State. Like him, he had been a soldier in the war with Spain, having served as captain in the Second South Carolina regiment and having gone to Cuba with the army of pacification. Mr. Gonzales is a close personal and political friend of the Secretary of State, and in his paper warmly supported him in his candidacy for the Presidency in all of his campaigns. He is also a good friend of President Wilson and was one of the first men to suggest his name for the office which he now holds. The State led the fight in securing a delegation favorable to him, and it was largely owing to his efforts that the Palmetto delegation stood by Woodrow Wilson from first to last at the National Convention. After the nomination Mr. Gonzales returned home and worked for his election, raising a large popular subscription through the State to help defray the expenses of the campaign.

Mr. Gonzales has entertained both President Wilson and Secretary Bryan at hos home in Columbia, and it is understood that the appointment was tendered him out of personal regard by the President and because of his belief in his fitness for the place.

Senator Tillman Passive.

Notwithstanding the feeling between the Gonzales and Tillman families, it is understood that Senator Tillman, recognizing Mr. Gonzales' splendid work for President Wilson, will not oppose his confirmation. One of the most outspoken enemies of the newly appointed Minister to Cuba is Governor Blease, who was one of the counsel for James Tillman at the time of his trial. Not long ago the Governor was reported to have criticised Mr. Daniels, Secretary of the Navy, very bitterly because of his friendship for Mr. Gonzales.

Opticians to Operate On Hogs Before Jury

Defendants to Use Porkers' Eyes to Disprove Plaintiff's Malpractice Charge.

COLUMBUS, OHIO July 5.—A novel means of illustration was employed in Judge Rogers' court in a case in which two Columbus eye specialists are defendants for $10,000 damages.

Operations are to be performed on eyes to illustrate the claim of defendants that there was no malpractice. Human optics are not to be used. Because the eyes of hogs are very much like those of men, several healthy porkers are to be robbed of their "lamps."

These will be put in masks just like human "mugs" and the jurors will know exactly what happened to the plaintiff when he was put under the knives of the defendants.

Postoffice Lost by Veterans to Boy, 25

Missouri Youth Is Youngest Yet Named by President—Gets Salary of $2,400.

TRENTON, MO., July 5.—Winning the distinction of being the youngest postmaster in Missouri and the youngest yet appointed by President Wilson, Wilbur E. Austin has assumed charge of the Trenton office at 25. It is a second-class office, with a salary of $2,400 per annum.

Austin was nominated by President Wilson over five opponents, all of whom have been prominent in party affairs in this section for years. He was backed by Colonel E. M. Harber, of Trenton, an uncle, who is a close friend of Congressman W. W. Rucker, and was recommended by the Congressman.

"I Love You," Signals Heiress in Court

Millionaire's Daughter Cheers Sweetheart Accused by Her Father as Dead Beat.

STEAMBOAT SPRINGS, COLO., July 5.—A jury in the District Court has failed to agree in the case of Robert King, an artist, who recently attempted to elope with the 17-year-old daughter of F. E. Milner, millionaire lumberman and hotel proprietor. King was charged with beating a bill at the hotel owned by his sweetheart's father.

Women crowded the court room during the trial. Miss Milner and her father occupied front seats. The girl smiled at King on the stand and signaled to him with her hands. She explained afterward that her signal was: "I love you." Her father had forbidden her to speak to King.

Girl Is Near Death In Submarine Tango

Tries To Do Fancy Steps for Benefit of Lake Michigan "Mermaids," When She Sinks.

CHICAGO, July 5.—The mermaids at the bottom of Lake Michigan now dance the tango, Miss Kathryn Courts, of Normal Park, showed them how.

"Look, girls, this is the latest!" she cried to friends bathing with her off Margate Terrace.

And she tangoed right out into deep water and down among the mermaids, and would have drowned if Thomas Cooper, superintendent for Butler Bros., had not dragged her forth.

Her comrades had thought the symptoms of drowning part of the show.

MASHER LASHED BY WOMAN HE HAD ANNOYED

Tired of His Notes and Unwarranted Attention, Confectioner's Wife Uses Horsewhip.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 5.—Mrs. B. C. Osmun, the wife of a confectioner, residing at 54 Fair Avenue, pluckily took matters in her own hands and dealt summary justice to a masher who had been annoying her Friday afternoon. The masher, L. M. Cox, received a sound horsewhipping which Mrs. Osmun, administered to him in the street near her home.

According to Mrs. Osmun, Cox, who is about 60 years of age, has been continually annoying her by sending love notes, following her on the street and trying to induce her to leave her husband for him. She states that he has also been slandering her to the neighbors, and being unable to stand his annoyances any longer, she decided to put a definite stop to the proceedings.

When Cox attempted to speak to her on the street Friday afternoon, Mrs. Osmun produced the whip and proceeded to thrash him. Mrs. Osmun did not escape without injury, for she bears a large black and blue spot on her arm and a discolored right eye, which, she asserts, Cox gave her after he had taken her whip away.

Following the scene in the street Mrs. Osmun hurried to the police station and gave herself up in order to prevent Cox swearing out a warrant for her arrest. She was not held, however, and she proceeded to have a citation issued against Cox.

Leaps Across Area To Save Child Afire

Neighbor Sees Girl's Peril and Makes Dangerous Jump, Putting Out Flames With Coat.

NEW YORK, July 5.—William Morrissey, of 252 Nepperhan Avenue, Yonkers, by a daring leap yesterday saved Olive Edick, 7 years old, from burning to death. The child is terribly burned, but physicians in St. Joseph's Hospital say she will live.

The girl was playing with her younger brother, Russell, on the fourth floor of her home at 121 New Main Street. The boy accidentally set Olive's dress afire. She ran, screaming, to the fire escape.

Morrissey was on the fourth floor of the next block. There is a wide space between the two fire eescapes. Seeing the child was doomed unless he acted, Morrissey jumped and landed beside the blazing youngster. Pulling off his coat, he quickly blanketed the flames.

To Have Perfect Skin Throughout the Summer

(From The Guide to Beauty.)

These days the face and neck need special care and attention. Flying dust and dirt, the beating sun, are severe on any skin. Their despoiling effects are best overcome by the application of pure mercolized wax. This keeps skin and pores in a cleanly condition, the complexion beautifully white and spotless. Tan, freckles, blotches and roughened cuticle are actually absorbed by it. One ounce of mercolized wax, obtainable at any drug store, is sufficient to completely renovate a soiled complexion. It is used like cold cream, allowed to remain on over night and washed off in the morning.

As the skin tends to expand in warm weather, causing wrinkles to form, a good astringent lotion should be used. Dissolve one ounce powdered saxolite in one-half pint of witch hazel. Bathe the face in this during the heat of the day or before going out for theater or social affair. It is a remarkable skin tightener and wrinkle eraser.

Trusses Like These Are A Crime

Such Makeshifts Have Forced Thousands Into Risking Dangerous Operations

Wearing elastic and spring trusses year after year is almost sure to shorten your life.

You can't make them hold, even when drawn so tight you can scarcely stand to keep them on.

They usually let you get worse all the time—that's why every year they are forcing thousands of people into undergoing operation.

They are simply a crime—squeeze the rupture, often causing strangulation—dig into the pelvic bone in front—press against the spinal column at the back—make life miserable for nearly everybody who wears them.

The Plain Truth Is This

You can't possibly get well—can't even keep from getting worse—unless your rupture is constantly held in place. Just as a broken bone can't knit unless held securely together.

And just as a bandage or splint is the only way a broken bone can be held, so the right kind of truss is the only thing in the world that can keep a rupture from coming out and growing worse.

You'll feel like a new person from the day you put on that kind of truss.

But you know as well as we that you'll never find such a sure-to-hold truss at any drug store. Yet it's easy enough to get. And you can test it first—by sixty days trial—without having to risk a single cent.

It's the famous Cluthe Truss or Cluthe Automatic Massage—absolutely guaranteed to hold, and won't cost you a cent if it doesn't.

It's so utterly different from everything else for rupture that it has received eighteen separate patents.

Made on an entirely new principle. Instantly and automatically protects you against every strain on your rupture—can't possibly be forced out. Self-regulating, self-adjusting. Far more than just a truss.

In addition to constant holding it provides the only way ever discovered for overcoming the weakness which is the real cause of rupture.

Just how it does that—entirely automatically—and how it has thus completely cured hundreds and hundreds of people whose cases seemed almost hopeless—is all explained in the free book which the coupon below will bring you.

No Belt—No Leg-Straps—No Springs

The Cluthe Truss does away with the curse of belts, leg-straps and springs. Thousand say it is as comfortable as their clothing. It is waterproof—will hold in the bath. Also perspiration-proof and easily kept clean.

Make This 60-Day Test—You Won't Have to Risk a Penny

We don't ask you to trust to a mere try-out the way you have to do at a drug store.

We'll make a Cluthe Automatic Massaging Truss especially for your case—make it to your measure—and let you try it sixty days.

We'll practically lend it to you that long just for a test.

If it doesn't keep your rupture from coming out or bothering you in any way, no matter how hard you work or strain—if it doesn't prove every claim we make—then you can send it back and it won't cost you a penny.

Free Book Full of Facts Never Before Put in Print

Don't keep on letting yourself get worse—don't spend a cent on account of your rupture until you get our free book of advice.

This remarkable book—cloth-bound, 96 pages—sums up all we have learned about ruptures during forty years of experience. You'll find it full of facts never before put in print.

It shows just why elastic and spring trusses cause so much misery and such a shameful waste of money that the law should stop their sale.

It explains why operation is nearly always a needless gamble with death—and why, if you do manage to live through it, you may have to keep on wearing a truss.

It exposes the humbug "appliances," "methods," "plasters," etc.

It shows why sixty days' trial is the only safe way to buy anything for rupture—and how the Cluthe Truss is the only thing of any kind that you can get on such a long trial because the only thing good enough to stand such a thorough day-after-day test.

And it tells all about this famous Automatic Massaging Truss—how simple it is—how it ends constant expense—how it has saved thousands from operation—how you can get it on trial, and how little it costs if you keep it.

Also gives voluntary indorsements from over 5,000 benefited and cured people.

Write for this book to-day—don't put it off—the minute it takes to send for it may free you from trouble for the rest of your life.

Simply use the coupon or just say in a letter or postal "Send me your book."

SOUTHERN SOCIETY TAKES A SPURT IN CAPITAL; MANY NOTABLES BECOME MEMBERS

Records Smashed by Organization Since Claude N. Bennett Became President.

By HUGH S. MILLER.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—For rapidity of growth and for activity in developing the spirit of the South at the National Capital, the Southern Society of Washington has set a new record since the Democratic party came into power.

Less than a month after the election of officers, which placed Claude N. Bennett, of Georgia, in the president's chair, the society took in 150 new members from the leading Southerners in private, Congressional and other official life. They included such new members as Senator and Mrs. Hoke Smith, of Georgia; Senator and Mrs. Bryan, of Florida; Senator and Mrs. Robinson, of Arkansas; Senators Swanson, of Virginia, and Vardaman, of Mississippi; Representatives Gordon Lee, William Schley Howard and Hughes, of Georgia; Burnett and Heflin, of Alabama; Small, of North Carolina, and many other Southern Representatives and their wives.

Georgians Who Join.

Among the prominent Georgians who have joined are Justice and Mrs. William Bailey Lamar, Paymaster and Mrs. William C. Fite, Mr. and Mrs. James J. Lampton, Mr. and Mrs. Harry F. Cary, Mr. and Mrs. Sledge Tatum, Colonel Neyle Colquitt, Marion C. Howard, D. L. Hartsill, Miss Minnie E. Carroll, Miss Helen H. Hardin, Colonel John T. Boifeuillet and Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Lamkin. From other Southern States there are generals, admirals and others of note.

The Southern Society is now enjoying a success that it never before attained. It stands at the very top of the social organizations in the National Capital. Strangely enough, while the impetus which has made the society what it is came in part from the Georgian who is its new president, it is to be attributed mainly to a lively fight which developed in the society just previous to the last election.

The Southern Society had been running along for several years as quietly as a meadow stream. Its first president was Jacob M. Dickinson, Secretary of War in the Taft Cabinet. He was succeeded as president by Senator Thornton, of Louisiana, and he in turn was followed by Representative Richmond Pearson Hobson, of Alabama. Lack of time had made it difficult for any of these executives to give the society much personal attention.

Hobson Started Fight.

It was President Hobson who unintentionally precipitated the fight which culminated in the unprecedented expansion of the society. He proposed an amendment which would expand the eligibility clause of the society so as to take in people from every section of the country, provided they felt an interest in the South and the general objects of the organization. His amendment was seconded and ably advocated by Thomas Nelson Page, of Virginia, the author and recent appointee of President Wilson as Ambassador to Italy. Mr. Page was a member of the executive committee of the society. He and Captain Hobson argued very ably and eloquently for broadening the scope of the society, particularly with reference to its membership. They emphasized the need of doing away with sectionalism and giving the society a national character.

Some of the members of the society gathered from their remarks an intimation that the society amounted to very little and would never amount to much so long as it was run under exclusively Southern direction. However justified they were in getting this impression, the effect was electrical. They communicated their thoughts to others, and quickly the whole society was aroused. The more it was thought about and discussed the greater the opposition it created. The rank and file of the society declared that the adoption of the amendment would destroy both the character and the purpose of the society; that it would no longer be a Southern society, but an interstate society, the E Pluribus Unum Society, the Amalgamated Association of Selected Celebrities—anything, in fact—but that it would not be a Southern society.

Dr. McKelway Is Secretary.

The result was that the amendment was defeated, President Hobson resigned, and Mr. Bennett was unanimously elected to succeed him. Dr. A. J. McKelway, well known in Atlanta, is financial secretary of the society. Speaker Champ Clark is the first vice president.

Something of what the Southern Society is, and what it is doing, is contained in the following interview by Mr. Bennett:

"The objects of the Southern Society are to bring together at the National Capital Southern people; to promote friendship and fellowship among them; to nourish, cherish and perpetuate Southern ideals and ideas; to aid in interpreting the South to itself and to the nation at large; to develop and promote any good cause connected with the South—whether educational, philanthropic, patriotic or useful in any line. When the society grows in strength, membership and power as it should, it will be an easy matter to discover good things for it to do.

"Not a Sectional Society."

"The society is in no sense sectional, except in the broad sense that it is made up of Southerners. There is nothing narrow or limited or sectional about it in any way that could possibly be objected to. In its recent meeting at the National Theater, the society acted as the host of the nation. The society paid all expenses and entertained two thousand citizens of Washington, selected without regard to where they came from. Every Representative and Senator was invited, the diplomatic corps was well represented, the house was filled to its capacity, and the addresses were in a vein that could not but be approved and appreciated by any well balanced man or woman in the United States. The strongest eulogy on the South was delivered by William Jennings Bryan, of Nebraska, Secretary of State.

"There have been two other meetings in which the South has appeared in prominent roles. One was the noted banquet at the Raleigh Hotel in celebration of Washington's birthday, February 22, 1912, and the other was at the Pan American Building in the Hall of the Americas, when the society last fall gave a reception to the national convention of the United Daughters of the Confederacy—the most noted perhaps of the great entertainments given in Washington to that great organization of Southern women.

Cites Bigness of Field.

"Those of us who are endeavoring to direct the society's movements are fairly staggered by the bigness of the field that it represents. This field covers a representation at the National Capital of sixteen of the leading States of the Union, containing a population of more than thirty millions, having 600,000,000 acres of territory, possessing greater fertility and variety of soil than any other similar sized territory on the face of the globe, having one crop (cotton) worth a round billion dollars a year, and constituting the greatest natural monopoly that the Creator has given to any people.

"That the South now furnishes the President of the United States and half of the Cabinet, and is on the majority side of both House and Senate is only one of many phases of its importance and possibilities. That the Southern Society has something to stand for and can easily find something to do that will be well worth while needs no demonstration. The society regards the South as the nation's best asset, and desires to make that asset available to all good purposes."

CLAUDE N. BENNETT, of Georgia, the new President of the Southern Society of Washington.

GRADUATESTOLD TO MAKE MORIBUND SMALL TOWNS

MIDDLEBURY, VT., July 5.—John M. Thomas, president of Middlebury College, in his baccalaureate address appealed to the members of the graduating class to cast their fortunes with the small hill towns of New England, which, he said, had been losing population steadily for more than half a century.

"Leadership is all that is needed," said Dr. Thomas. "Who of you will go to live in a hill town of Vermont, not where there is the best job, but where there is the greatest good?

"One man of the right caliber and the right power could lift a whole community. One community so inspired would change a whole county, and one county leading the way, the whole State would follow."

JULEP SECRET IS KEPT SACRED BY CONNOISSEUR

Connoisseur of Drinks Sees Mixologist Work Twelve Minutes on Concoction.

MYSTERIOUS BOTTLE USED

Dash of Contents Put in Completed Masterpiece Adds Zest That Puzzles Expert.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—A Providence, R. I., man, who is a connoisseur in things good to eat and drink, to wear, to read and to look at, was in Washington recently when a feeling came over him that he would like to have what he had not enjoyed for several years—a real Southern mint julep, the kind that he and others read about and that are dispensed in the private club rooms of Southern cities by leading citizens, accompanied by the traditional manifestations of Southern hospitality and courtesy.

At the cash register of an ornate bar an elderly gentleman was dozing, and there was no evidence whatever of life in the gilded and glass bedecked room. The old gentleman said, however, in reply to a query, that he thought a mint julep could be mixed there and he rang a bell. He was an old man, somewhere on the shady side of 70, and had all the earmarks of a Southern brigadier of the type that up to a few years ago was a typical Congressman.

Disappearing for several minutes, the Colonel, as the visitor afterward designated him, returned with two bunches of mint, the delicious aroma of which showed that it was fresh and crisp. Placing two glasses on the bar, he dissolved a lump of hard sugar in each by means of a tablespoonful of water.

Then, selecting shreds of the mint as carefully as if he were selecting pearls for a bride's necklace, he placed a bunch in each glass, folding the bottom ends into the dissolved and now thoroughly stirred sugar and pushing the tops back from the rim of the glass.

Whisky Aged as Mixer.

Then he added cracked ice, cracking it as carefully as he selected the mint, until the glasses were two-thirds full. After this the dignified barkeeper strolled deliberately to the other end of the long bar and returned with a bottle of whisky that bore a popular label and date showing that it was only slightly younger than the man who carried it.

Putting a large jigger of this into each glass, the Confederate brigadier next, by the same process of selection, collected two more bunches of mint, which he inserted, piece by piece, into the concoction and added a little more cracked ice. Up to this time exactly eleven minutes had been consumed since the glasses were placd on the bar to receive the sugar and water, and the thirsty patrons thought the beverage was ready for them.

Mysterious Bottle Used.

But not yet. Going off to the opposite end of the bar, the courtly mint julep mixer returned with a little bottle the label of which he carefully concealed by covering it with his hand. Squirt, squirt, he put a dash of something into each glass, went away back to the shelf whence he got the bottle, placed it thereon, and returning, indicated by a nod of the head that the juleps were ready to be disposed of. Twelve minutes had now been occupied in the labor of love and not a word had been spoken by any of the three persons present at the performance.

The glasses were picked up, the gentleman from Providence and his friend rejected the straws placed handy by, each stuck his nose into the mint and proceeded to drink. As they did so they looked at each other with an expression that spoke volumes. The Providence man, after his friend had returned from the other end of the room where he had gone to pay the check, found the cockles of his heart opening up, and he said to the silent and courtly barkeeper, "My dear sir, that was the finest—I may say the only—mint julep I ever drank, and I have traveled far and wide."

"But may I ask," said the Providence man, with his most seductive smile, "what was the little dash of stuff that you added at the last moment? It must be that that was what gave this mint julep the insinuating flavor that will long last in my memory."

"Oh, that!" was the reply, accompanied by a slight facial movement, falsely indicating that the julep artist was about to open up. "Why, that, you must excuse me, sir, is my secret."

TAKING SLICE OF LEMON INDICATES BETROTHAL

ANN ARBOR, MICH., July 5.—At the annual breakfast of the senior girls of the University of Michigan, one of the twelve girls who confessed to having become engaged to be married during her career here was Miss Christine Foster, of Attica, Ind.

This breakfast is an annual affair at the university, and it is the custom of all senior girls to confess their engagements to the other young women of the college at this breakfast. The method chosen this year was to have each engaged girl take a slice of lemon from a plate as it was passed around.

White House Betrothal Gives Society a Thrill

Democrats to Celebrate Miss Wilson's Wedding

Bride-elect and her sisters and mother as they frequently ap pear in family party. Reading from left to right they are Miss Eleanor Wilson, Miss Jessie Wilson, the next White House bride; Miss Margaret Wilson and Mrs. Woodrow Wilson.

COPYRIGHT BY PACH BROS.

Washington Fashionables Now Look for the End of Rigid Simplicity.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—Announcement of the betrothal of Miss Jessie Woodrow Wilson, second daughter of the President, to Francis Bowes Sayre, a young lawyer of Lancaster, Pa., has given Washington society a stimulus that the fashionables sadly needed through the long summer months and the unending sessions of Congress on the tariff measure.

In fashionable Washington, the announcement that it was to be a White House wedding in November gave another flurry. White House weddings have always been a relief to the semi-formal round of social pleasures at the Capital. The wedding of Alice Roosevent and Representative Nicholas Longworth is still vividly and pleasantly remembered by Washington society.

May Unbend Simplicity.

By some it is believed that the wedding will mean the unbending to an extent of the rigid simplicity in social things so strictly adhered to since the Democrats took charge of the Government and the nuptials are thereby doubly hailed by the society leaders.

It is pointed out that while President Wilson could himself easily forego the pleasures of the inaugural ball and while Secretary Bryan could deprive himself of wines at his own festive feasts, it is hardly likely that Miss Wilson will wish the same simplicity to extend to her nuptials. It is entirely likely that she will wish the same sort of elaborate affair that other White House brides have had.

On the other hand, it is pointed out that Miss Roosevelt had entered extensively into the gayeties of Washington society, while Miss Wilson has gone out comparatively little. She is a deep student, tremendously interested in politics and in household affairs.

Her fiance, it is understood, while a man of considerable personal fortune, is also of studious habits and is active in his work of becoming an assistant in the office of District Attorney Whitman, of New York.

Democracy Sure to Celebrate.

But the wedding is sure to revive the days when Alice blue was the prevailing color of fashionable gowns and when presents arrived at the White House in carloads. Democracy is sure to celebrate the event. There have been but two Democratic Presidents since the war between the States, Cleveland and Wilson. Cleveland became a husband in the White House, while the first of President Wilson's daughters will wed there.

While close friends of both families have known of the engagement for some time, announcement was withheld until the first anniversary of Mr. Wilson's nomination at the Baltimore convention.

White House officials accompanied the brief announcement with a biography of Mr. Sayre. He is 28 years of age, and after preparing at the Hill School at Pottstown, Pa., and Lawrenceville, N. J., graduated from Williams College in 1909. He was manager of the football team there, valedictorian of his class, and interested in Y. M. C. A. work.

Spent Summers as Missionary.

He spent two summers with Dr. Alfred T. Grenfell in his missionary work on the coast of Labrador and studied law at Harvard Law School, where he graduated last year, "cum laude." He has traveled extensively during his vacations, spending last summer in Alaska and Northern Siberia.

Mr. Sayre comes from a collegiate family. His father was the late Robert Heysham Sayre, for a long time president of the board of trustees of Lehigh University, and builder of the Lehigh Valley Railroad. His mother was Martha Finley Nevin, a daughter of John Williamson Nevin, theologian, and president of Franklin and Marshall College at Lancaster, Pa. She is descended from Hugh Williamson, of North Carolina, one of the framers of the constitution.

She is a sister of Robert J. Nevin, head of the American Church of Rome, Italy, and a first cousin of Ethelbert Nevin, the composer.

Miss Wilson is 24 years of age, and was educated at Goucher College, Baltimore, and specialized in political science. She has done much settlement work in Philadelphia and has been actively identified with the Y. W. C. A., having recently made many speeches in its behalf.

NURSE WHO WED TO SAVE MAN'S LIFE SUES HIM

But Woman Who Repents Action Is Denied a Divorce Decree by Court.

LOS ANGELES, July 5—Which? Marriage and the saving of a human life or refusal and the moral responsibility of its loss?

This was the question Mrs. Dorothy Lander, a pretty 20-year-old nurse, faced in the operating room of the Clara Barton Hospital when she agreed to become the wife of Kirk C. Lander, from whom she now seeks her liberty.

She testified in Judge Monroe's court that she married Lander to save his life.

This strange romance was revealed by the young woman as a witness in her own behalf. Her husband, she said, was a patient at the Clara Barton Hospital. She was his nurse and had attended him for ten days.

He suffered a relapse and an operation was declared by the attending physicians to be necessary to save his life. He was placed upon the operating table, but refused to submit to the operation until he had seen his nurse.

When she appeared, he told her that he loved her—that life without her was not worth living. If she promised to marry him he would submit to the operation necessary to save his life, he said, and if she refused he would die.

The operation was successful and two days later the couple were married. Mrs. Lander sought a divorce on the grounds of non-support, although she admitted that she had never lived with her husband, who contested the action.

Judge Monroe held that the young woman had failed to make out a case legally. Mrs. Lander was heartbroken when the court denied the decree.

No Angles in Houses On City Corner Lots

Superintendent of Street Paving Set the Fashion and Contractors Follow.

CONWAY, ARK., July 5.—A paving contractor thrust fame upon this place, the home town of former Governor G. W. Donaghey, but Conway folk did not realize it until visitors told them.

A year ago Conway bought concrete walks for the entire town. The man who superintended the delivery did not like angles, so he made every street corner a curve. There is not a right angle in the entire system of walks.

Conway builders caught the idea, and those who have erected houses on corner lots since the curves were introduced have set them-bias of the lot. As a result the residence faces the curve, or both streets impartially.

Episcopal Bishop Speaks From Truck

Rt. Rev. Rhinelander Addresses Throngs on Streets in Philadelphia Tenderloin.

PHILADELPHIA, July 5.—Bishop Rhinelander, head of the Episcopal Diocese of Pennsylvania, spoke twice on the streets of the Tenderloin here from the tailboard of the gospel truck of the Inasmuch Mission.

At the Tenderloin meetings men and women from the lowest homes in the city assembled in great numbers.

Before the large truck "church" left the "gospel" corners men down and out ran to shake the Bishop's hand.

YOUNG PAGES IN MOCK SESSION APE SENATORS

Boys Legislate Against Senatorial Fire Water and Baneful "Soak Book."

WASHINGTON, July 7.—Visitors at the Senate wing of the Capitol recently saw such a session as they probably never will see again. It was the mock session, with the eighteen pages of the Senate acting the parts of Senators, while Joseph O'Toole, chief of pages, presided in Vice President Marshall's place.

The rules provide that pages shall not be under 12 years of age nor over 16, and their uniform is a white blouse shirt and knee breeches. With great dignity, save for occasional giggles, they introduced bills "for appropriate reference," offered resolutions and answered to the names of Senators when the roll was called. In the press gallery notes on the proceedings were taken with becoming solemnity.

One youngster introduced a bill that almost broke up the meeting. It bore the title "To prohibit Senators from using firewater, and for other purposes." Another was entitled "A bill to relieve a bull pup." It was duly referred to the committee on dog fights.

The opposition to these measures was led by a lad named McCoy, and he continued his leadership with great zest until a resolution was offerred directing the Sergeant-at-Arms to "put a Maxim silencer on McCoy."

The effectiveness of this parliamentary stroke was increased when it was noticed that Charles P. Higgins, Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, was standing in the doorway grinning. The bane of a page's existence is a little volume known as the "soak book," in which delinquent pages are "soaked" with various penalties. Young "Senator" McCoy was able to regain all his lost prestige by offering a resolution that the "soak book be burned with fire."

Parrot Cries "Fire," But Dies in Flames

Alarm Saves Occupants of House, but Firemen Are Unable to Rescue the Screaming Bird.

GRAND JUNCTION, COLO., July 5.—Although they were able to save their household goods, due to the warning of a pet parrot, the hero or heroine failed to escape in the fire which destroyed the home of F. E. Post.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Post were away from the house, working on the ranch, when they heard a cry of "Help, help! Fire, fire!" from the vicinity of their home. They started back to see smoke coming from all the windows, while the parrot was screaming at hte top of its voice.

As they arrived at the house the bird toppled over into the flames, and, when Post rush d into the house he found Polly dead.

PASTOR LIKES THE "MOVIES."

SOUTH BEND, IND., July 5.—The Rev. John Walton, pastor of the First Baptist Church, of Garrett, Ind., attributes the success which has attended his ministry to popular interest in moving pictures.

5TH REGIMENT OFF FOR LARK AT ST. SIMONS

Drudgery of Camp at Anniston Yast Year Will Be Forgotten at Seacoast Outing.

The Fifth Regiment, Georgia National Guard, composed of twelve companies with 560 officers and men, will leave over the Atlanta, Birmingham and Atlantic Railroad Tuesday evening in two sections at 8 and 8:30 for an outing of ten days at St. Simons Island.

This camp will be a picnic compared to the strenuous times of the State militia at Anniston, Ala., last year, when the entire time was devoted to military maneuvers. Then it was work, work, work. Realizing the fact that too much work and no play might have the same effect on the soldiers that it did on Jack, it was decided to give the boys an outing, at the same time make it worth while from a military viewpoint.

The work at St. Simons will be very light, but the discipline will be rigid, and the little details so necessary to the life of a soldier will be strictly observed. The work will be guard mount in the morning, dress parade in the afternoon and camp patrol duty.

School For Officers.

But the officers will not escape so easily. A practical school of instruction will be inaugurated, and it will require the services of the officers for at least four hours each day, and it is the opinion of the adjutant general that the regiment will be in better shape when it returns than it has been in years.

The regiment will leave the Auditorium-Armory at 7:30 Tuesday evening, headed by the colonel and his staff, the Fifth Regiment band and the companies in the order of their position in the line, as follows:

Company A, Captain Palmour commanding; Company B, Captain Weaver; Company C, Captain Candler; Company D, Captain Stoddard; Company E, Captain Leahy; Company F, Lieutenant McCarty; Company G, Captain Schmidt; Company H, Captain Quillian; Company I, Company Hartlaub; Company K, Captain Stokes; Company L, Captain Clarke; Company M, Captain Slaton.

Dress, military bearing and the minor details of camp life will be strictly enforced, but ample time has been provided for the men to enjoy the outing to the fullest.

Many to Visit the Island.

During the encampment of the Fifth Regiment, excursions will be run over the Atlanta, Birmingham and Atlantic Railroad, and there will probably be more people on the island than has ever been known.

With the camp right on the beach, or such a short distance that bathing suits can be donned in the tents, surf bathing, of course, will be the chief pastime of the landlubbers.

The Fifth Regiment band, under Chief Musician C. E. Barber, will furnish music, and the concerts in the evening by this noted organization of musicians will be an enjoyable feature. There will also be many entertainments and dances by the officers, and a royal good time is anticipated.

'Seven-Day Bride' Is Given Divorce

Husband Procured Licenses to Marry Two Women on Her Wedding Day.

LOS ANGELES, July 5.—The seven inharmonious days of married life from which Mrs. Pansy Biggs Caples culled testimony which gave her a divorce from William J. Caples in El Paso yesterday prove, according to Mrs. Caples, that there is luck in odd numbers.

Mrs. Caples contended in her charges against her husband, said to be a millionaire and son of a former Mayor of El Paso, that on the seventh day of their married life her husband beat her. Charging extreme cruelty, she did not ask for alimony nor for the restoration of her maiden name. Mrs. Caples said in El Paso yesterday she will return to the stage.

The matrimonial affairs of several members of the Caples family have been more or less spectacular, it is recorded in El Paso, and William Caples startled his wealthy friends on his wedding day by obtaining two separate licenses to marry two different women.

$2,000 a Minute Is Cost of Slow Watch

Representative Callaway Loses Fight Against Appropriation Because He Was Late.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—Because his watch was two minutes slow Representative Callaway, of Texas, today lost his fight against a resolution to appropriate $4,000 to send the Civil War veterans of the District of Columbia to the reunion at Gettysburg, and Representative Fowler, of Illinois, won a victory for which he has schemed for weeks.

Callaway interposed his objection, and the resolution went over.

Fowler called it up again as soon as the House convened again. Callaway was two minutes late and the resolution passed.

WENT TO SELL REALTY, BUT MARRIED THE RICH WIDOW

MEDFORD, OREG., July 5.—Dr. W. H. Everhard, a prominent business man, secured a tip last Saturday that Mrs. L. M. Markin, of Los Angeles, an attractive and wealthy widow, was interested in real estate in the Rogue River Valley.

Instead of selling the widow a portion of his extensive holdings, the doctor was so charmed by his prospective client's beauty that he promptly made her his partner for life via the matrimonial route.

ELKS ARRIVE IN ROCHESTER FOR REUNION

Southern Men Are Candidates for High Offices of Order on "Insurgent" Ticket.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., July 5.—The vanguard of the thousands of delegates to the forty-ninth annual reunion of Grand Lodge, B. P. O. E., who will invade Rochester during the next week, will begin to arrive in the city to-morrow. Preparations have been made for the reception of the visiting delegations and members of the Grand Lodge reunion committee of Rochester lodge will be at the various railroad stations throughout the day to extend the glad hand to the early arrivals.

Some of the visitors, including the Denver delegation, which is "plugging" for the 1914 reunion, have already arrived in the city, and a number of the Grand Lodge officers and candidates for Grand Lodge offices came to the city yesterday to open headquarters, which have been established at the Hotel Seneca.

Elaborate preparations have been made for the entertainment of the visitors, and there will not be an idle moment during the whole week, while some of the days are crammed so full of entertainment that the delegates and visitors will have to remain up night and day in order to participate in the generous amusements provided by the committee on entertainment.

Sulzer to Welcome Elks.

The Grand Lodge will formally open its sessions to-morrow night in Convention Hall, when addresses will be delivered by Governor Sulzer, who will welcome the herd on behalf of the State; Mayor Edgerton, who will extend the freedom of the city and welcome the visitors on behalf of the citizens of Rochester; former County Attorney Arthur Warren, who will extend the reunion committee's welcome to the Grand Lodge, and former Assemblyman John J. McInerney, who will welcome the Elks on behalf of the 1,800 members of Rochester lodge.

Two Southern Candidates.

Chief interest of the business sessions naturally centers in the election of officers and selection of the next meeting place. Two Southern "insurgent" Elks are candidates for the two most important offices in the Grand Lodge, opposing "machine" candidates from the North and West.

J. Cookman Boyd, a lawyer of Baltimore, is the insurgent opponent of Edward Leach, a New York business man, for exalted ruler. They are supported, respectively, by the factions that in 1909 at Los Angeles divided between J. U. Sammis and Garry Herrmann for this office, Sammis being then elected and in 1910 being succeeded by Herrmann.

T. J. Darling, postmaster at Temple, Texas, is the insurgent opponent of Fred Robinson, of Dubuque, Ia., who has held the office of grand secretary for nine years. David McAdam, of Grand Rapids, is also aspiring for this office.

The convention will continue until Saturday, and among the big features will be the annual Grand Lodge parade of visiting delegations, patrols and floats on Thursday morning, competitive prize drills in the afternoon and the annual spectacular water carnival and pyrotechnical display on the upper river in Genesee Valley Park at night. The Grand Lodge ball will be held in the Armory Friday night, and during the week there will be pleasure rides by automobile, steamboat and trolley car in and around Rochester, band concerts, ball games, roastfests at the lake and at Moerlbach Park and various other forms of entertainment.

The Grand Lodge reunion committee has expended $15,000 on electrical illuminations alone and thousands of dollars additional have been put into decorations of various kinds in streets in the downtown section and in the park.

10 Commandments for Summer Given U. S.

Bureau of Chemistry Tells What Food to Eat and What to Drink During Hot Months.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—The ten commandments to insure clean food during the summer were issued today by the Bureau of Chemistry of the Department of Agriculture in an official bulletin:

1. Use your nose and eyes to detect bad food.
2. Be watchful of ptomaine, a deadly poison bacilli, which thrives mightily in this weather.
3. Pasteurize all milk.
4. Keep your ice box clean.
5. Cook your food and never eat it uncooked.
6. Beware of restaurants and highly seasoned meats and fish.
7. Drink only boiled water at summer resorts.
8. Do not eat the skins of fruits.
9. Wage a persistent battle against flies in your home
10. Do not set too much store by the "guaranteed under the pure food and drugs act" label. The Government does not guarantee these wares.

FORTUNE PROBABLY LEFT TO CHILD HE NEVER SAW

CLASSVILLE, MO., July 5.—One of the most remarkable cases that ever confronted a probate court in Missouri was tried before C. M. Landis in this city.

The case involved the settlement of the estate of A. B. Gardner, a farmer of this county, who died recently, leaving a little girl 14 years old and $10,000.

Fourteen years ago Gardner married and separated. Several months later a little girl was born to the former wife, but no effort was made at reconciliation, and the father never saw the girl. When Gardner found he would not live he drew a will leaving all the property and money to his brother. Attendants raised Gardner so he could sign, but just as he took the pen he collapsed and died.

J. COOKMAN BOYD, Southern candidate for Grand Exalted Ruler of the Elks, and, below, T. J. Darling, Southern candidate for Grand Secretary.

Chief Would Make 'Mashing' a Lost Art

Springfield Alderman Asked to Pass Law Prohibiting Men from Flirting on Streets.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., July 5.—Springfield proposes to make "mashing" a specific violation of law.

Complaints about men who ogle young girls and not infrequently attempt to open conversation with them have been frequent, and the Mayor, the Chief of Police and the Aldermen have joined forces to suppress the nuisance.

Chief of Police Quilty, with the concurrence of Mayor Denison, sent to the Board of Aldermen a communication asking for the passage of an ordinance to punish mashers and others who annoy young women in the streets.

The Aldermen voted to refer the matter to City Solicitor Adams, with instructions to draft such an ordinance.

"If the Aldermen will give me the right kind of an ordinance—the more drastic the better—mashing will speedily become a lost art in Springfield," says Chief Quilty.

"End-Seat Hogs" to Receive Heavy Fines

Washington to Act After Woman and Baby Narrowly Escape Death in Leaving Car.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—Washington's "end seat hogs" will soon be amenable to law.

Commissioner Rudolph has taken the subject up with the Utilities Commission and announcement will be made in a few days. Convictions for refusing to "move up" in seats of the summer cars will probably be punished by a heavy fine.

"There have been many cases where accidents have been narrowly averted on account of the 'end seat hog,'" said Commissioner Rudolph. "One recent case was that of a woman with her baby in her arms about to alight from a car. A fat man obstructed her passage and she fell. It was just luck she was not killed."

Drunkards' Finger Prints To Be Taken

Persons Fined for Vagrancy and Intoxication To Be Permanently Recorded by N. Y. Police.

NEW YORK, July 5.—Hereafter finger prints of persons arrested for vagrancy and drunkenness will be taken and placed on file in police headquarters.

The Board of City Magistrates of the first division met yesterday and besides discussing this matter, decided that hereafter all women arrested after 1 a. m. shall be remanded for trial at the Women's Night Court in Jefferson Market.

PANAMA FAIR SEEKING NAME FOR 'MIDWAY'

Season Pass Will be Given to the Person Suggesting Appropriate Title for District.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 5.—Who will suggest the name by which the concessions and amusement center will be known at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition at San Francisco?

The Director of Concessions has announced that the person who suggests the best name will receive a lithographed portrait season pass to the exposition. The suggestions will be filed in the order that they are received by the exposition and if more than one person suggests the selected name the one first heard from will receive the pass. The contest will close August 1.

District To Be Unique.

The concessions district at the exposition will be unique, so marvelous, and so diverse in its attractions that it offers the widest possible range for the imagination. Between ten and twelve million dollars will be spent in the installation of the concessions, which will be the most costly and elaborate that have ever been presented at any of the world's universal expositions. Through the concessions center will run a great boulevard three thousand feet in length and at either side of the boulevard will be grouped the marvelous series of concessions that will amaze and mystify the world.

In the center of the length of this street will be the great Plaza of Wonders the glory spot of the night life of the exposition. From the center of the Plaza will rise the loftiest flag pole in the world, 246 feet high and donated by the citizens of Astoria, Ore.

Scenes Along Canal Route.

As one passes along the street he will see reproduced scenes along the Panama Canal that have become familiar to everybody. Perhaps, as at Chicago, the concessions district will take the name of the boulevard running through its center. Or again it is possible that some striking phase of the exposition the distinction of having named one of the most marvelous sections of the great world's exposition.

Perhaps a name will be suggested by the marvelous illumination of the exposition. At night the concessions center will be a land of enchantment.

All suggestions should be addressed to Mr. Frank Burt, Director of Concessions and Admissions, 501 Exposition Building, Pine and Battery Streets, San Francisco.

Ministers Agree to Promote Good Plays

Unitarians Will Help Better Shows Instead of Criticising "Bad" Theaters.

LOS ANGELES, July 5.—That the church should promote the better shows given in theaters instead of criticising "bad" shows and condemning the theaters, was the consensus of opinion at a meeting of ministers at the First Unitarian Church.

In order to have more co-operation between the churches and theaters, it was decided that some of the ministers in the organization should go to theatrical managers and make arrangements with them to have lectures given in churches on the better plays presented in theaters.

Ministers of other denominations, "who are continually harping at the theater as an influence of evil," were criticised at the meeting.

Children Start Fire Curling Doll's Hair

Father Is Severely Burned Trying to Extinguish Flames Caused by Play of Little Ones.

CHICAGO, July 5.—Harry Qinck, 410 Noble Street, was severely burned last night while attempting to extinguish a fire in his home started by two of his children, Della, 11 years old, and Harry, aged 5.

They were curling a doll's hair when a curtain caught fire and spread to the bed clothes.

Qinck, asleep in another part of the house, was awakened by the cries of the children. Firemen extinguished the flames.

RABBITS FEEL AT HOME.

BEAVER FALLS, PA., July 5.—Rabbits are declared to have taken entire possession of the aristocratic little town of Patterson Heights, two miles from here.

SUNDAY AMERICAN'S SPECIAL CABLE LETTERS RECEIVED FROM ALL THE GREAT CAPITALS OF EUROPE

GERMAN MASSES FORCED TO BEAR HEAVY TAX LOAD

Producers Pay for Increased Armaments While Wealthy Idlers Escape All Burdens.

By FREDERICK WERNER.

Special Cable to The American.

BERLIN, July 5.—Once more the party of the center has triumphed in Germany's domestic politics and has forced through a political compromise which satisfied nobody. The political situation is drastically described in the radical "Berliner Tageblatt," which writes:

"The compromise pudding is ready in the black kitchen, the chef has tasted it and declared it excellent. Now he presses a spoon into the hands of Right and Left and with a grin of satisfaction he encourages them to eat heartily and not be afraid of indigestion. The pudding may be a trifle heavy, but it must be eaten "with God for king and country." And the chef who, in 1909, made the German people swallow the financial reform smiles and says: What I have done is well done. Centrum is trump and always remains trump in the German empire."

Nothing, of course, is definitely decided yet, for the compromise must still pass through several stages before it becomes the law of the land, but the party of the center is sure of final victory, so sure that it has loudly announced that once more it has got its foot firmly on the neck on that part of the German people who increase the national wealth of Germany. These people must pay, while the wealthy idlers get off easily, almost without feeling the extra financial burden with which the increased armaments have saddled the taxpayers.

It is because of the inability of the upper and lower strata of the producing classes to co-operate politically that these have been forced to leave the Government in the hands of a bureaucracy which has gradually more and more become a mere tool of the reactionary landowners, while the greatest influence is exerted by Centrum, the strongest party in the Reichstag.

Now Germans are to see and enjoy the fruits of this political alliance in their worst form: a super tax on thrift. A punishment is to be meted out to those who even during the recent hard times have had the imprudence to go on increasing national wealth.

The new compromise provides for a distribution of the burdens of taxation, which is an even greater insult than the financial reform of 1909, and which may yet prove to be the straw which will break the camel's back.

Actress Spurns $50,000 Heart Balm Finally Takes Marquis' $250,000

Daisy Markham, the English actress, well known on the American stage, who finally accepted $250,000 settlement from the Marquis of Northampton as heart balm.

Daisy Markham, After Declaring All Money in World Couldn't Quash Suit, Accepts Offer.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, July 5.—Fifty thousand dollars was not near enough money to soothe the injured feelings of Daisy Markham, the English actress, who suddenly discovered that she was not to be the Marchioness of Northampton when the Marquis' betrothal to another was announced. "All the money in the world could not get me to withdraw my suit," she dramatically declared when the $50,000 offer was made. "I want his love and the name he promised to give me."

But to-day Daisy Markham seems reasonably contented with $250,000, which the Marquis has settled on her, though it is said that there is more money in the world, and she is still Daisy Markham.

Costs To Be Considerable.

The costs of the settlement will amount to a considerable sum on account of the number of distinguished counsel engaged to plead for the opposing parties. The Marquis, better known as Earl Compton, only recently succeeded to the title at the age of 27. The plaintiff is well known, both in America and the British Isles, under her stage name.

The settlement was announced when the case was called in the high court of justice this week in a court room crowded with fashionable women and actresses, who had come in anticipation of listening to some interesting evidence.

The young Marquis had previously offered $50,000 to settle the case, and many people had thought Miss Markham unwise not to accept the offer.

When Miss Markham insisted on proceeding with the suit London gossips anticipated that she had a sensational story to tell, and interest in the suit rose accordingly.

The damages paid to-day are the heaviest for many years in a breach of promise suit.

Didn't Deny Promise.

Sir Edward Carsons, representing Miss Markham, said she met the Marquis last year when he made a promise of marriage to her which was not denied. Subsequently at the desire of his father, the Marquis broke off the engagement. In doing so he wrote to Miss Markham that he wanted her to believe his action had been taken from a sense of duty, genuinely believing it best for both parties.

The Marquis further wrote:

"You do not know how these so-called ladies will treat you and I really could not bear to see you suffering it. Oh! if I could but escape my position! You will always be my ideal! My beautiful dream!"

The letter concluded, "Your broken-hearted Bim." This was the Marquis of Northampton's nickname.

Father Halted Wedding.

Sir Edward said the Marquis of Northampton had made provision for the lady, such as she would have been entitled to had he made her a marchioness. He then announced the settlement for the sum of $250,000.

Henry E. Duke, counsel for the defendant, said in confirming the settlement that when the Marquis of Northampton, who was then Earl Compton, asked his father's consent to his marriage with Miss Markham, he laid upon him an absolute prohibition and took from his son a solemn engagement that he would not pursue his desire to marry the plaintiff.

Miss Markham was born in India on July 20, 1886. She made her first appearance in Manchester in 1904 as Celia in "As You Like It." In December of the same year she appeared at the Lyceum Theater, New York, with Sir Charles Wyndham, as Elaine Shrimpton, in "The Case of Rebellious Susan," and has acted many other parts. She made her first London appearance as Claire Berton in "Leah Kleschna," and also appeared in many other plays here, including "Raffles," "Love Watches" and "The Glad Eye," which was one of London's recent successes.

MOTHER KEEPS WALES TIED TO APRON STRINGS

Prince Joins Rollicking Oxford Club, but Queen Makes Him Resign—Can't Speed Auto.

By HERBERT TEMPLE.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, July 5.—Queen Mary seems determined to keep her oldest son under her wings until the day when she turns him over to the tender cares of his bride. Not long ago he received permission to become a member of the Bullingdon Club, with the express stipulation that under no condition must he ever take part in any of the hilarious festivities of the club, which, under the name of "Bullingdon Blinds," are one of the features of college life at Oxford.

The other night, however, he could not resist the temptation, and with trembling heart he donned his evening clothes and went to the club, where he spent a few very pleasant hours.

Parents Wax Wrathy.

His presence, of course, could not remain secret, and a day or two afterward he received a very severe letter from his parents, who had just returned from their visit to the Kaiser, ordering him to hand in his resignation as a member of the Bullingdon Club immediately, and, in spite of his entreaties, he was forced to obey.

As a balm to his wounded dignity he shortly afterward received as a present from his father a beautiful automobile, accompanied by a driver's license, and driving his own car is now his principal pleasure, though it is somewhat lessened by the fact that the car is provided with a speedometer and he has had to promise his mother on his word of honor that he will never exceed the speed of twelve miles an hour, much as he would like to tear along.

Little Olaf Gets Car.

The Queen, indeed, opposed the Prince's wish for an automobile as long as she possibly could after Queen Alexandra a little over a year ago expressed her willingness to present her oldest grandson with one. But when Queen Alexandra presented little Prince Olaf of Norway with a car and permitted him to use it freely all around Sandringham, Queen Mary realized that she had been outwitted and reluctantly permitted King George to present the Prince of Wales with a fine touring car.

The question of the Prince's marriage is now becoming quite a serious one. The King and Queen both agree that their son ought to marry early in life, but they can not agree on the bride. Queen Mary desires the Prince of Wales to marry one of the Czar's daughters, but King George and Queen Alexandra, as well as her sister, the Dowager Empress of Russia, strongly oppose this idea, because of the close relationship of the two young people.

They favor a marriage with one of the daughters of the King and Queen of Italy, who are easily the two most beautiful and healthy princesses in Europe, probably because of the blood of the sturdy Montenegrin peasants which they have inherited from their mother's side.

The result is apt to be a compromise, for there is much talk in court circles of Princess Elizabeth of Roumania, daughter of the Roumanian Crown Prince, as the most likely next Princess of Wales. No one has thought of asking the Prince, who will, of couse, meekly submit to the choice of his parents.

For MILADY'S WARDROBE

By MME. HAUTE MONDE.

A NOVELTY of the season is the long glove of dark gray suede worn with white or pale tinted muslins. The innovation looks rather odd at first sight, but is really charming and artistic.

• • •

With the exaggeratedly decollete necks short sleeves are worn in the house. Sometimes the arms are covered with fine lace mittens, but far more often they are left bare, save for a veiling of tulle illusion. Here I must again mention that scarfs of tulle illusion are worn at all hours of the day and with almost every kind of costume.

• • •

Many of the newest rest gowns are accordion pleated from waist to hem, the material used being fine muslin or equally fine Indian silk. Then a picture mantle of lace or pale tinted chiffon is thrown in; a wide sash is wound round the waist; sweet-scented flowers are arranged at the breast and the boudoir cap is donned.

• • •

Leghorn is immensely popular this year, not only for dressy summer millinery, but also for simple tailored hats to be worn with linen and cotton frocks of the same genre, or with light tailored wool suits. They are deliciously comfortable and easy on the head, and will encroach on the field in which Panamas hitherto have reigned alone. The latter are shown in new shapes this season, a Panama sailor being one of the novelties.

• • •

All Panamas are smaller, the inclination being to a medium size, with a mannish crown and a comparatively narrow brim turned down part way around. Another popular shape is almost exactly that of the regular farmer's straw hat, rolling at the sides. Plain ribbon bands are tied in a flat bow, with ends falling onto the brim. The ribbon loops, characteristic of the season's millinery, are used on some of the Panamas also, but are placed at the left side toward the back.

• • •

A great deal of moire is worn this season, bloth black and colors. Lovely shades are obtainable in lime green, deep cream, blue, dull gold and gray. For a smart tailored suit moire makes an admirable selection.

• • •

The French and the English have invented charming fashions for the child in the house, but it is to our own American designers that the child who wants to have the time of its young life in outdoor play must come to be ideally fitted. The beach rompers shown this season are enough to make one sigh to be made a child again. Beach aprons are a boon, too. They are made of blue denim, bound with red and embroidered (also in red) with the appropriate emblems of pail, shovel, and so forth. The pail design, planted squarely in the middle of the apron, is in reality a large pocket, which will certainly be the joy of the wearer.

• • •

Many girls from 14 years of age and upward are wearing white ninon or cotton crepe skirts with basqued coats of soft satin or silk embroidered round the edge and upper portion of the sleeve. These coats, which cross over to the left and fasten with two silk-covered buttons, have a soft frill of net or lace down the front, while the low turn-down collar has a bow of black velvet as a finish, the waist belt being embroidered in wool or floss silk. In willow and lizard green, pale blue, lavender and dull pink such coats look most effective with white skirts.

• • •

The inexpensive negligee gown for hot weather is of sheer stuff, and is usually white, or shows a floral pattern in delicate colors on a white ground. For these models, aside from the kimono, variations of the Empire effect are, perhaps, most in evidence, wide liberty satin ribbons run through wide embroidery beading, serving as a girdle and giving to the model more trimness than is common to robes which fall loose from the shoulders. The flowered muslin negligees are, as a rule, little trimmed, save for frills of Valenciennes lace to soften the edges.

• • •

Quite a feature of the season's styles is the little cutaway corsage that has a suggestion of the postilion back. This is generally made over a cream net corsage. At all events, the ensemble looks like a little coat put over a summer vest or blouse; but it is really all made in one. Sometimes the sleeves are of net, mousseline, or tulle illusion, and sometimes of the material of the cutaway, satin, silk, shantung or pongee.

• • •

This summer veils will be long and worn loosely flowing over the face. Frail shadow laces are in favor for them and washable Shetland of a filmy quality. Some have an open mesh over the face, and the design of the veil is not carried over the open weave part. These are named "frame veils" and are most of them woven of Italian silk.

• • •

Summer is the season for embroidery, and the woman who puts in her spare moments in the preparation of dresses for the little folks will have cause for thanksgiving later on. Most children now wear cotton frocks the year around. It is a far more cleanly custom than putting a child into a blue serge suit when autmun comes and having it wear the suit day after day as long as the threads will hold together.

• • •

Almost heel-less are the ultra-smart English walking boots in mannish style. These boots have pointed, receding toes, low buttoned tops and heels scarcely lift the foot above the pavement. These new boots are delightfully comfortable, but they are neither graceful nor dainty and look best in tan leather accompanying tailored or athletic garb. Patent leather boots, with buttoned tops of gray suede or dull black kid, are much more attractive with soft, draped skirts, and with white frocks white buttoned boots are in order.

BOGUS PRINCESS TALE OF RICHES WINS CLUBMEN

Frenchmen Accepted When They Propose, But She Departs With $12,000 Worth of Gems.

Special Cable to The American.

PARIS, July 5.—A prominent young Parisian clubman was visited recently by a handsome woman, who represented herself as "Princess Salam," and presented a letter of introduction purporting to be signed by Monseigneur Journe, Canon of Caracas, whom the clubman had met at a society drawing room.

The visitor related that she belonged to the Salam-Ryndurg family, Princess of the Holy Empire. She had married, she said, a nobleman connected with the Imperial family who had left her an immense fortune while in addition her private fortune amounted to $60,000,000. She now wished to reside permanently in France.

Clubman Proposes.

The clubman offered to do all he could to be useful to the "Princess". They met frequently, and at last the clubman proposed marriage and was accepted and he placed on the "Princess'" finger an engagement ring that had cost $6,000.

A few days later the "Princess" departed for Madrid ostensibly to settle family matters and to have an interview with King Alfonso, but in the meantime she had related the same story to another clubman, a friend of the first, who had also presented to her a $6,000 engagement ring.

After her departure one of her fiances discovered that his friend and himself had both been duped.

Worked Scheme Before.

The police informed him that the self-styled "Princess" was an adventuress named Adelaide Julin Madeline Jelle, born in Paris in 1874. Eleven years ago the police learned that she obtained jewelry under a similar pretext, and that in 1905 they had again been called upon to investigate her identity in connection with a case of blackmailing.

The "Princess" was arrested at the railway station on her return from Madrid.

LONDON, July 5.—Mrs. Rebecca Clark, of High-road, Wood Green, celebrated her 109th birthday recently and was particularly cheerful at the celebration.

She rose about mid-day and ate a dinner of roast beef, potatoes and cauliflower, stewed fruit and custard, tea and a big piece of bread. "I never believed in being faddy about food," she declared. "Eat what you fancy and you'll be all right."

Mrs. Clark still walks up the hill to the postoffice on Fridays to draw her old-age pension, and "I'm sure I'll go on doing it for many a year yet," she said.

Count Eulenburg Is Most Decorated Man

Kaiser's Court Chamberlain Has 76 Orders—Can Not Wear All of Them.

Special Cable to The American.

BERLIN, July 5.—According to an enumeration just made of orders and decorations by the Kaiser, Count Eulenburg, the imperial court chamberlain, enjoys the distinction of being the most decorated man in the world.

Many prominent Germans have received orders to the number of 30 or more, but Eulenburg possesses 76, including some of the highest in Europe. It would be a physical impossibility for him to wear them all at the same time.

Kaiser Wilhelm in the 25 years since his accession to the throne has created 28 orders or decorations of various classes.

'Ought To See Spain's Queen Dance Tango'

"Infinitely Graceful," Says Instructor, But She Fails To Speak of Royalty's Obesity.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, July 5.—"The Spanish Queen dances the tango with infinite grace," Miss Vacani, a noted instructor in dancing, told a number of women of the nobility at a ball given by Mrs. James McDonald, wife of the Standard Oil Viceroy in England.

"If you could see her, you would never look upon it as vulgar or impossible for the modern ballroom. She has been carefully instructed and is an able pupil."

She did not refer to the surplus weight which greatly burdens the Queen in all active exercises.

Professor Killed; Students Aid Slayer

Shoots When Told He Failed In Examination—Police Overcome Crown.

Special Cable to The American.

VIENNA, June 5.—A Ruthenian student named Zachailo, who murdered a professor in the Lemberg Training College, was besieged in the college building with his fellow students and seevral of them were wounded before the murderer surrendered to the police.

Zachailo was enraged because Herr Butkowski, a Polish professor, informed him that he had failed in an examination. He produced a revolver during a lecture and shot Herr Butkowski dead.

The other students agreed to protect Zachailo and barricaded the doors of the college. When the police arrived shots were exchanged and two students were seriously hurt. The door was finally broken down, the students overpowered and Zachailo arrested.

PARIS, July 5.—Leonore Lloret, a Frenchwoman, who was captured by Moroccan rebels during a recent night attack on a French camp, is being held captive for a ransom.

She is the prisoner of the chief of the hostile Beni Bouyahi tribe, but is said to be well treated.

The case recalls a similar occurrence in 1836, when a French girl, Mile. Lanternier, was captured and placed in the chief's harem. She was converted to the faith of Islam, and the Sultan, Abdul Aziz, was her grandchild.

LONDON, July 5.—The latest rumor in regard to the Lord Chief Justiceship is that Premier Asquith is likely to accept the post himself. ACCIDENTS CUT LARGE FIGURE IN DIXIE RACE

Mobile Is Hit Hard by Injuries to Star Players—Jacobson and Starr Out.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., July 5. Announcement from Mobile that "Baby Doll" Jacobson and Charley Starr will be out of the game for weeks adds another chapter to the longest list of serious accidents that ever marred a Southern League season. While Gillespie, of Chattanooga; Yantz, of New Orleans, and Dilger, of Birmingham, are the only players who have been knocked out for the season, many others have been hurt so seriously as to prevent them from participating in the pastimes of their clubs for weeks.

Repeated accidents have necessitated pitchers and catchers working in many games out of their positions. Mobile has utilized Campbell and Hogg. 'Andsome 'Arry McIntyre has subbed on numerous occasions. Memphis has played few games without the services of Old George Merritt. Chattanooga used Hannah and Golden in utility roles, and Atlanta had Catcher Graham in the outfield for weeks, and these all in addition to the regular utility man who is on the payroll of each club.

* * *

MOBILE has been perhaps the most unfortunate of all in recent weeks, though the Gulls were remarkably lucky while obtaining their long lead. The Gulls missed Paulet for a few games at the start, Campbell going to right and Robertson to first. Then they got together and with a regular line-up began to climb rapidly, soon amassing a big lead. Two weeks ago hard luck returned and today finds the Gulls much nearer the rest of the teams and still slipping. Starr suffered a broken hand and still carries the injured member in a sling. Jacobson's injury is more serious as a permanent problem. It consists of a strained side and fever which has weakened him so that he may not play for two months.

Chattanooga's dose at the hands of fate is well known. Jimmy Gillespie is out for the year and drawing a salary from the coffers of the club while he recovers from the effect of a terrible blow on the head by a ball pitched by Hardgrove. Kid Elberfeld is now out of the game from another "beaning" process, and at least one game, if not two, has already been lost on account of the mishap. The team was fortunate in having a utility man to thrust into the breach in Williams, and in the Gillespie case in getting another third sacker who, while not quite as good as Jimmy, is good enough to keep third base from being a sieve.

Birmingham is another club that has suffered heavily. Dilger, the Barons' first catcher and one of the best throwers in the league, was the first to receive a serious injury and a break to put him out of it for the year. The club's two highest-priced players, who cost $5,000 to purchase them—Knisely and McDonald—have been repeatedly out of the game on account of injuries or sickness. Marcan has also been crippled, but forced to play most of the time from dire necessity. The Baron list was increased last week by a most serious blow. Hardgrove, the club's leading pitcher, being struck in the face by a batted ball and rendered hors de combat for weeks.

MEMPHIS was always "jonahed," and Bernhard has had a hospital list full ever since he took the reins of the club. This year the absence of Schweitzer doubtless has injured the club considerably. Center Fielder Love has also been out frequently. Bill has been able to keep his infield intact, however, and with battery men also unscathed has been much more fortunate than in former seasons.

Atlanta has had but two serious mishaps since the season started. Bailey was out for several weeks with a strain. Chapman, the second catcher, has just returned to the game on account of a broken finger, and Joe Dunn has wilted under the strain of too much work behind the counting station.

Nashville has been uniformly lucky. Young was ill for a time during the first of the season, but the infield has presented an unbroken front up to Goalby's injury this week.

Down at New Orleans, George Yantz's fatal "broken slide" to second in a game with Chattanooga in May put him out of commission until August, with a busted ankle. Other members of the Pels have been out for a few days with minor injuries, but the blow to Yantz was the most serious.

* * *

THE league's record of the past four seasons is liberally sprinkled with injuries to star players—Scotty Walker, Champ Osteen, Roy Ellam and many others being knocked out for practically entire seasons and leaving weak spots which were rarely patched up. And, generally, the pennant-winning club has been the one fortunate enough to escape the hospital.

The frequent serious injuries to regular players make the utility man a valuable institution. How the Southern clubs managed to drag along without one in the old fourteen-men-limit days seems almost a mystery now. Rohe, of Atlanta; Sentell, of Mobile; Breen, of Montgomery; Atz and McIntyre, of New Orleans; Merritt, of Memphis; Carroll, of Birmingham, and Williams, of Chattanooga, have done some yeoman service in the Southern flag chase, even though they don't play in every game. Doubtless, ere this, Bill Schwartz regrets that he tied a can to Summers, his man-of-all-work, as Goalby was injured a day after Summers departed.

CONNIE MACK WANTS FORD; WOULD TRADE OUTFIELDER

PHILADELPHIA, July 5.—Connie Mack is willing to let New York have one of his extra outfielders, Jimmy Walsh or Pete Daley, the coast star, provided Frank Chance desires to turn over to him Russell Ford. Mack, when asked concerning the report which emanated from New York that Chance desired an Athletic outfielder, stated he would be willing to hand over either player mentioned for Ford.

"But, you know," said Mack, with that quizzical smile of his, "there is no hope of getting Chance to let Ford come our way."

New System for Olympic Games

Big Change in Rules Planned

NEW YORK, July 5.—The initial steps toward systematizing and standardizing the Olympic games of the future will be taken within a month at Berlin. On August 20-24 there will be held the first conference of the provisionally formed International Amateur Athletic Federation, at which time a world-wide track and field governing body will be established. Representatives from the national amateur sport-controlling body of every civilized country have been invited to attend, and a real working agreement and basis for future international meets will be established.

At the present time the committee in charge of the federation affairs consists of P. L. Fisher, Great Britain; Pierre Roy, France; Carl Diem, Germany; H. Stankovits, Hungary, and James E. Sullivan, United States. These committeemen, in addition to a number of other delegates, will assemble in Berlin several days before the opening of the conference in order to discuss in an informal way the plans and scope of the new organization. To the athletes of the world the recommendations of the I. A. A. F. to the International Olympic committee will be of great interest. While the new body has not the slightest authority in matters pertaining to the Olympic games, its recommendations will undoubtedly carry much weight with the Olympic games committee when that body meets a year later at Berlin to plan for the Olympic meet of 1916.

Will Suggest Reforms.

This is particularly true because it is known that the I. A. A. F. will suggest a number of radical reforms, which, backed by the athletic governing bodies of such nations as the United States, Great Britain, Sweden, Germany, France, Finland and the British colonies, are likely to be incorporated into the permanent Olympic games code to be prepared at the conference of 1914.

It will be strongly urged that the Olympic committee adopt a standard set of track and field events at recognized distances and weights to hold for all time, and that this program be separate and distinct from such usual Olympic sidelights as skating, yachting, polo, tennis and other modern features of sporting competition. No objection to these sports will be interposed by the I. A. A. F., but it will be suggested that they be held as distinct and apart from the standard Olympic program.

The American delegates, consisting of Gustavus Kerby, Colonel Robert M. Thompson, James E. Sullivan, Barton S. Weeks and Joseph B. Maccabe, will ask the new association to suggest that a number of perpetual trophies be secured and awarded during the games at Berlin in 1916. These will include a grand international trophy for the winner of the greatest number of points in all the recognized Olympic sports of the meet, together with a number of minor trophies for the winning nations in track competition, swimming, wrestling, cycling and similar tests—these trophies to be held for three years and then returned to the country holding the succeeding meet.

The question of the measurement methods of future games also will be discussed. At present the Olympic meets are based upon the metric system, whereas the leading athletic nations of the world use yards and feet in measuring track and field sports. It appears likely that this proposed reform will fail, however, owing to the fact that the metric system has been used in Olympic games since the ancient meets in Athens and is really a better understood system, from an international standpoint, than that afforded by the English measuring methods.

No Way to Compare Men.

At present there is no way of comparing the best efforts of the world's leading athletic performers under the two systems. For example, the 100 yards, a standard sprint in America, England, Australasia, Canada and South Africa, is nine yards one foot and one inch short of the 100-meter sprint. Despite this clash in the two measuring systems, it is probable that the point of substituting the English for the metric system will be passed if the countries most interested can secure a standardized set of Olympic events. This in itself would be a great advantage and assistance to countries preparing to enter teams, since it would permit the program to be known several years in advance. In addition, it will bar the local Olympic committees from inserting in the schedules a number of events or contests which are intended purely for home athletic talent and which continue for a period of time which absolutely bars foreign entrants from continuing in the competition.

O'ROURKE SIGNS CONTRACT TO MANAGE CARL MORRIS

NEW YORK, July 5.—Tom O'Rourke has signed a contract to manage Carl Morris, the Oklahoma giant, for a period of three years, and as soon as there is a chance for a match here Morris will start for this city.

O'Rourke also holds a contract on the services of Albert Palzer, who is out on the Iowa farm, rapidly regaining his health and strength. Palzer recently submitted to a serious operation by a New York surgeon. It was successful, and the big fighter now feels sure that he will whip all the white hopes.

Until Palzer is able to stand training O'Rourke intends to develop Morris. The veteran manager says that Morris' great strength and pluck are unexcelled by any of the leading heavyweights, and that Carl simply lacks knowledge of ring tactics. As soon as he learns how to hit, O'Rourke believes that the Oklahoma mastodon will reclimb the ladder.

COURTNEY ADVISES NEW DATE FOR CREW RACES

ITHACA, N. Y., July 5.—Coach Charles E. Courtney, of Cornell, today sounded a warning to crews of visiting colleges to hold the Poughkeepsie crew races next year under more favorable tide conditions.

He said that during some of the recent races the tide was against the shells, and for this reason they could not have won.

This was true of the Pennsylvania and Washington four-oared crews, he said.

REULBACH TIRED OF CUBS; AFTER BERTH WITH REDS

CINCINNATI, OHIO, July 5.—Ed Reulbach, one of the Cub premiers in the days of pennant winners at Chicago, wants to get away from the Cubs and would like to see President Murphy trade him either to Joe Tinker's Reds or to the Boston Braves. "A change of scenery would do me a lot of good," said Reulbach. "Murphy has treated me all right, but I don't seem able to win for the Cubs."

TINKER TELLS PITCHERS NOT TO WALK SLUGGERS

CINCINNATI, OHIO, July 5.—Joe Tinker, boss of the Reds, has ordered the abandonment of an extremely ancient custom—that of passing a heavy hitter to get at a weak one. No trick in the valendar causes as much wrath among the bugs as this, but Tinker isn't playing to popular approval in ordering his pitchers to discontinue the idea.

What's the use? says Joe. The percentage, even with a big slugger, is 3 to 1 against him and in favor of the pitcher. Why not go right after him? Why decrease your own per cent of advantage by putting another runner on the bases, especially when the other fellows can yank out their weak hitter and send a tough pinch hitter in his place? That play is off the map for his club hereafter.

YANKEES' NEW BALL PARK WILL BE READY IN 1914

NEW YORK, July 5.—Announcement was made to-day by officials of the New York Americans that its new baseball plant would be ready for occupancy when the 1914 season opens. The plant is located on Washington Heights, just a short distance from the old Highland grounds, and will be one of the finest in the country. It will cost over $400,000. The Yankees, homeless this season, are playing at the Polo Grounds.

NO BASEBALL FOR EWING; STICKS TO LIFE ON FARM

BELLEFONTAINE, OHIO, July 5. "I can't get away from the farm," is the reply of Bob Ewing, former National League pitcher, to Manager Bade Myers, of the Canton Interstate team, in response to Myers' request that Ewing join his pitching staff. Ewing is living in retirement on a big farm in Auglaize County.

HICKMAN IS SCOUT FOR NAPS.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, July 5.—Charley Hickman, the old Toledo player, now coaching the University of West Virginia team, is to go with the Cleveland club as a scout.

FIFTY YEARS OF ATHLETICS PUTS AMERICA ON TOP

James C. Sullivan Writes on the Value of Exercising for Youths of United States.

By James E. Sullivan.

Secretary-Treasurer of A. A. U. and "Father of Amateur Athletics."

NEARLY half a century has passed since the introduction of amateur track and field sports into this country, and in this long lapse it has frequently been asked what was the real object of those early pioneers of athletics.

It is a question hot very difficult to answer. They wanted fresh air and exercise for themselves and to set a good example to the youth of America for after time. I allude to men like the late William B. Curtis, Harry E. Buermeyer and many others, men 50 years in advance of their time, who foresaw the growing need of physical development and outdoor exercise.

Had not the wisdom of these old-timers prevailed, where would America be to-day in amateur athletics, especially with regard to our rating in the Olympic games? Why, we would be worse off than Russia, Denmark or Austria, nations which have not so far produced a first-rate performer either on track or field. We lead the world, and the American athletes have taken the championship in every Olympiad since the first revival in 1896.

Americans Should Improve.

As to future Olympic fixtures, I see no reason why we should not continue to carry off the point honors, for, to my mind, we will continue to grow better from year to year, as the exploration of new districts will surely produce new material. This introduction of new material means everything. An instance of the force of the last statement is that of the State of Utah. Ten years ago if a man had talked of a world's champion coming from Utah he would have been ridiculed, yet at the last Olympic games in Stockholm Almah Richards, of Brigham Young University, Utah, was the hero of the running high jump, and is to-day the greatest natural jumper the world has ever seen.

Athletics a Religion.

For the boys athletics has simply instituted an eighth-day religion, as it were. It has taught him that in order to be a success in either track or field he must be good, morally and physically.

To participate in school sports nowadays the boy is impressed with the idea that he must first of all observe the rules of the sport, and that under no circumstances can he use abusive language to his superior or to another boy. Should the boy be guilty of any of these things there is always a referee at hand to discipline him and point out the error without being harsh or unduly severe. The honesty of competition is also brought home to the youth. If he cuts the course, shoulders another boy, does not touch off in a relay, he suffers a just disqualification, and thus it is shown to him, in the most convincing manner that, after all, honesty is the best policy.

Johnston Will Steal 100 Bases This Year

Chattanooga Lad Has Already Pilfered 50 Sacks in 85 Games With Seals.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., July 5.—Jimmy Johnston, the Chattanooga lad now with San Francisco, is setting up a new stolen base mark in the Pacific Coast League. He has already stolen over 50 bases in 85 games and at this rate will steal far more than 100 bases in a season. Jimmy hopes to make the mark at least 125 before the season is over, a record that has never been equaled in the annals of the professional sport.

A sample of the work Jimmy is doing is seen in the following excerpt from The San Francisco Examiner regarding a game against Venice in which Jimmy recently participated:

"Jimmy Valentine Johnston stole yesterday's ball game right out from beneath the nostrils of H. Hogan's Venetians. Jeems' little stunt came in the ninth inning, when our beloved Seals were one run behind after one of the slowest and curiously enough one of the most thrilling nerve-racking battles the season has yet produced.

"This wholesale robbery on the part of James Valentine Johnston made the score a tie. It also made it possible for the Seals to win out in the tenth."

Two Major Castoffs Are Sure to Return

Morgan and McQuillan Do Great Work for Class AA League Clubs.

Two pitchers who were cast off by major league clubs seem destined for another try in the big show next year. They are Cy Morgan, of Kansas City, and George McQuillan, of Columbus.

Failure to keep in condition was responsible for both of them departing the major circuits. Both have settled down, and either would help out a lot of clubs that are now faltering.

Morgan and McQuillan have already won over 15 games this season.

Mons. Hedges should have no regrets at having traded Lefty George for George Stovall. Lefty won six and lost eight battles for the Toledo club, where he was sent after being found wanting at Cleveland.

HOBBY'S BROTHER A STAR; GAINING FAME AS SLUGGER

CINCINNATI, OHIO, July 5.—Clinton Hoblitzel, younger brother of Dick Hoblitzel, of the Cincinnati Reds, has been elected captain of the High School baseball team of Parkersburg, W. Va., for the season of 1914. The selection was made by the unanimous vote of his teammates.

Young Hoblitzel is an outfielder and a heavy sticker in his class, giving promise of following in the footsteps of his distinguished brother, who started his baseball career as captain of this same school team.

MANY WANT THE BASEBALL THAT LASTED ENTIRE GAME

CINCINNATI, July 5.—Manager Joe Tinker is busying himself to-day turning down requests for the baseball that lasted throughout the entire game Sunday between the Reds and Cubs. It is believed that this is the only time in major league history that one ball continued in play from the beginning to the end of a full game.

LOSS OF GREAT TRIO BREAKS UP PIRATES' TEAM

Retirement of Clarke and Sale of Leach Put Big Hole in the Pittsburg Squad.

CINCINNATI, OHIO, July 5.—For a dozen years the Pittsburg Pirates have served as a pennant contender in the National League and their unexpected slump is the mystery of the 1913 race in the Lynch organization.

What has caused the team picked last winter to fight it out all the way to slip down into the second division has not been analyzed, but according to scribes here with the Corsairs the absence of that famous combination, Clarke-Wagner-Leach, is responsible for the downfall of the Pirates.

Since the day the Louisville and Pittsburg clubs consolidated and the stars of the Colonels—Clarke, Wagner, Leach, Ritchie, Phillippe and others—went to Pittsburg the Smoke Town organization has been right up there each year in the pennant chase.

Queer to See 'Em Down.

To see the Pirates trailing down in the second division is something unusual. For these dozen past years the Pirates have had Clarke, Wagner and Leach. And during the twelve seasons Pittsburg always was one of the main factors in deciding what team would be the pennant winners.

On four occasions the Pirates reigned supreme in the circuit. In 1901, 1902, 1903, the Pirates won the pennant and then in 1909 Clarke with his great combination repeated and topped the season by winning the world's series from the Detroit Tigers.

But now all that remains of the marvelous trio is Honus Wagner. Clarke retired in 1911 and in the middle of last year Barney Dreyfuss put through a trade with the Chicago Cubs which took Leach away.

Breaking up the great trio, Clarke now is trying to rebuild his forces. He is buying all promising recruits but finds it almost impossible to get successors not only for Tommy the Wee, but himself.

When Kitty Bransfield left the Pirates, Skipper Fred had a difficult task locating a competent first sacker and not until he converted Second Baseman "Dots" Miller into a first baseman did he succeed.

And now comes his troubles in developing outfielders to take the place of the positions covered by Leach and himself.

Must Fill Wagner's Place.

Probably when Clarke is lucky and picks up a pair of juvenile stars then he will have to find somebody to relieve that ancient and marvelous Wagner. At present, Honus is in the big arena on his nerve alone. So long as Hans can put on a glove and move about he'll be at short for the Pirates, but the information comes that even the burly Teuton is about ready to retire.

Johnson Has 'Made' Baseball

Instituted Much Needed Reforms

By W. J. McBeth.

NEW YORK, July 5.—Organized baseball owes much to Ban Johnson. He broke in as a rebel chief, but once firmly established in power, became the big Czar Johnson through his American League instituting a number of long-needed reforms. He made of the much-abused umpire a national figure instead of a "scapegoat," and by forcing respect for him from the player eventually commanded also the veneration of fandom. It was Johnson who was largely instrumental in stamping out all forms of rowdyism upon the field. And when he had forced recognition to equality from the National League, he was one of the leading spirits for peace and good will toward one happy, concerted union for the common good.

The Johson regime marked a new era in professional baseball. He was at first looked upon with suspicion. It was not believed at the time he expanded to major league distinction that there was room for two big circuits. He not only proved that there was, but by furnishing the big cities of the country which are now represented in both National and American with high-class sport every day throughout the entire playing season, added such an impetus toward universal patronage that the great pastime has gone booming on more and more steadily with each succeeding season.

Competition is the life of all healthy sport, and so the American League, as a rival to the National, was just the proper thing to arouse such interest as is manifested at present. But for Ban Johnson's invasion of the parent major league territory it is doubtful if there would be any steel and concrete stands to-day. And it is doubtful also if Ty Cobbs would be demanding $15,000 salaries. For after the old war days the pay never did adjust itself to former planes.

Square Deal His Motto.

Wherefore, the American League—which, in the opinion of Mr. Johnson, is, after all, the only major league doing business—has the heartfelt thanks of all well wishers of the game. It has always been very popular with the public, and especially with the playing fraternity, for it has always stood for a square deal both for the patrons and the public. Still baseball frenzy is a law unto itself, and the very rivalry, friendly as it may be between the two major leagues, has left along the trail of the last decade two distinctive factions in fandom. One faction worships at the shrine of the National and another at the footstool of the American League.

Ever since the American League began to cater to the public fandom has argued over the relative strengths and merits of the two major leagues. The debate never will be closed so long as both continue to do business. The patronage of each is loyal still, and in the division of opinion lies the secret of box office receipts. A fan is ever open to argument; to conviction, never.

Leagues Are on a Par.

Baseball writers in the big cities where both major leagues are established are rather an unbiased lot. They are generally of the opinion that there is no appreciable difference in the respective strengths of the big leagues. And why should there be? The present-day magnate stands ready to sacrifice the limit of profits in the hunt for talent. Each club has its scouts scouring the country for new players. There is little choice among the rival managers. Each circuit boasts its great popular heroes.

There was a time when the American League overshadowed its tottering rival. That was back in the war days of ten years and more ago. The young circuit, in the hands of young and vigorous capitalists who had gone in on a gamble, put up the money to rob the National League of its best known stars. There was such an exodus of talent from the parent major that the old-established organization was left weak, indeed.

NORDYKE QUITS AS UMPIRE.

PORTLAND, July 5.—Lou Nordyke, veteran player, telegraphed from Spokane his resignation as umpire of the Northwest League to Fielder Jones, president of the league. "I could get along with the boys when I was one of them," telegraphed Nordyke, "but as an umpire they look different."

VOLS MUST GET BUSY; TEAM IS SLUMPING FAST

Failure to Secure Ameida and Dodge From Reds Puts Big Hole in Team.

NASHVILLE, TENN., July 5.—Will wonders never cease? The Vols have at last stuck a few plugs in the numerous punctures in their inner wall of defense, by landing a batch of new faces for their line-up. While the bugs were waiting, breathless, for William ("Alibi") Hirsig to round up the cream of the Cincinnati Reds, Bill Schwartz got tired of fooling with his boss and hustled around and annexed Infielder Baumgartner from the Macon Sally Leaguers while the Vols' mogul was editing a story about Tinker sending Third Sacker Granfield to Nashville, after Dodge and Almeida had failed to come.

The poor old Vols have been floundering about since Kitty Goalby had his fin punctured by Dave Robertson's spikes, and the only crumb of comfort in the disaster was the hope that the accident would force Hirsig to shell out for some real ball players.

Granfield a Mystery.

Just as everybody expected, waivers could not be secured on the Cuban Almeida, and Dodge, hitting like a house afire, was too valuable a man for the Reds to turn loose. Hence Mr. Granfield, if one happens to be so affected by the intense heat that one can have faith in Hirsig's statements. Outside of the fact that Granfield is reported to be a third baser, he seems to have no antecedents at all. Where he came from or what his record is is as big a mystery as who hit Billy Patterson.

But Baumgartner, who will relieve Brackenridge, the pitching second-third sacker, comes highly touted in all departments, except in the hit-and-run column, which fact isn't causing anybody to be hilarious over his arrival in camp. There are already too many weak sisters on the team handling the ash, the wretched Vols seldom being able to pry more than five bingles off any twirler's delivery, and at the same time sandwiching in about half as many bobbles as hits, which is about the real reason for their miserable showing at present.

Doak Fails to Report.

Nothing has been heard of Pitcher Doak, the star of the Interstate League, who was to be traded for Charlie Case. But the fault of the lowly Vols' showing isn't all with the slabbers, for Mathewson or Walter Johnson couldn't bring home the bacon did their pals fail to push a tally or two across for them, as is the habit of Hirsig's hired men. They did get Phil Redding from the Cardinals, together with a thousand real dollars, in exchange for big Harry Glenn, who with Akron has been clouting the ball in terrific fashion, and landed Adams, a big right-hander from Savannah, paying $1,500 for the Sally League flinger. None but Hirsig can imagine what he intends to do with all these slabmen. Maybe he intends to trade the entire gang for one real, honest and true batter, who can do more toward lifting the poor old crippled Vols out of the ruck than all the pitchers in the world.

Not a bug in town but sympathizes with Bill Schwartz, who, it is admitted, can do wonders with a bunch of bushers, but it's thumbs down for the boss with the 10-karat alibi who sits calmly by and hopes that somebody will walk up and hand him a perfectly good ball player.

Introducing New Evidence

Heisman Gives Advice to Umpires

Arbiters Should Follow Plays

By J. W. Heisman.

IN my last story I wrote of the way an umpire should handle the decisions that come up in a ball game while he is standing back of the catcher and home plate. Problems of a somewhat different nature often confront him when he takes his stand out in the field of play behind the pitcher.

The umpire should take this latter position whenever a man gets on base, with the idea of being nearer to the scene of action in case he should be called upon to render a base decision.

From this position he will find that he has a better view of the plate and of pitched balls than when behind the catcher, for the reason that the pitcher in front of him will not interfere so much with his view of these plays as does a catcher.

Standing behind the pitcher an umpire must always be expectant of the pitcher or catcher throwing to a base to nail a runner, and he should be sure to follow the play carefully or else he will find that something has happened without his knowledge. He should be quick to apprehend a throw of the pitcher down to second, and be sure to jump quickly out of the way.

Must Get Close to Play.

The point that I consider most important of all for an umpire to bear in mind, is to get as close as possible to the base at which you expect to have to make a decision, without being or getting in the way of the play itself.

Suppose a man is on first and the batter hits safely to right with the hit and run on. It is certain the runner on first will attempt to take third on the hit, and the right fielder will make his throw to that sack. In such case the umpire ought to be within a couple of feet of third base at the time the throw and the runner get there, in order that he may be in the best possible position to judge. The same rule holds good for other plays at other bases; and if it appears that there is likely to be a double play he should have the second play in mind and get after that one also. For the life of me I can't understand why so many umpires think all in the world they have to do is to stand in one place, look wise and make the best guess they can. If they would only MOVE and get about the field, the same as a referee and umpire have to do in football, they would find themselves working into positions where they could give decisions that would meet with more general satisfaction.

Take the case of a fly ball or line drive hit right down the first or third base line. Often enough an umpire has plenty of time in which to run over and sight along the line before the ball hits the ground, but half of them never stir out of their tracks. This is the result of laziness and such a man is unfit to umpire a game; if it is mere thoughtlessness the fault should be corrected, and can easily be.

Don't Argue With Players.

Some players seem born to kick in ball games, whether they are captain or not. If I were umpiring a game I would never listen to anybody but the captain, and not him except in case of his differing with me as to the wording or interpretation of a rule, never in case of a question of fact. There is no reason on earth why baseball players should be allowed to argue and delay games as much as they do. It is not permitted in tennis, basket ball, football, track or any other sports. In fact, it would be very bad form for players to question an official's decision in other sports the way they do in baseball, and certainly in no other country are officials treated with the general discourtesy that we see exhibited by players to umpires in every baseball game in this country.

But if, in umpiring a game, I found I had made a mistake, whether in interpreting a rule or in deciding a question of fact, I would certainly have no hesitation whatever in reversing my decision on the spot. The prevalent idea that after an umpire has once made a decision he can not change it is nonsense. Of course he could not do so after the game had gone on a while, other players come to the bat, etc. But if before any further playing has been done the umpire ascertains that he has made a mistake he can undoubtedly reverse his decision. In fact, we see it done every day. An umpire calls the runner safe, but right after, or soon thereafter, observes that the fielding player or baseman did not catch and hold the ball as he, the umpire, at first supposed he had. Clearly the runner should have been called safe, and what choice has the umpire but to reverse his decision and call him so?

Umps Fooled in Trapped Ball.

Quite often an umpire is called upon to decide whether an outfielder caught a ball before it touched the ground or whether he got it on a trap. Too many umpires are fooled by the clever acting of the outfielder who pretends always that he caught it on the fly, whether he really did or not. Umpires should entirely disregard the actions and behavior of the player after getting the ball, and judge entirely from the way his eyes saw the play. This same proposition confronts an umpire every time he has to make a base decision where the runner only got the base, if at all, by a clever slide around behind the baseman and the latter had a hard time getting to him to put the ball on him. Both players will try to "pull the wool" over the umpire's eyes by their actions, which should be strictly disregarded. The only way to make sure that your eyesight alone shall be the test of whether the man is out or not is to run close up on the play and BE ON HAND so you can see for yourself.

Many first basemen have a habit of pulling their heel off the bag before they catch the ball. An umpire should be careful to note whether the first baseman's foot is in contact with the sack at the instant of catching the ball or not. He should also be sure to follow the course of the runner all the way around the diamond and observe whether he touches all the bases. Most umpires are watching the fielding of the ball, which is really none of their affair at all, instead of watching what the base runner is doing. The ball will come in all right some way or other, and it is proper that you should have your eyes on what is happening on the bases rather than the way the outfielders are getting the ball back into the diamond.

Umpires must also take firmly in hand the matter of spectators crowding out toward or upon the diamond. If he can not get them back himself he should hold the home management responsible for this disorder, and, after giving them a reasonable time in which to get the spectators back, he should notify them that unless they succeed in clearing them away within two minutes more he will award the game to the visiting team.

Arbiters Should Know Rules.

Umpiring is like playing in one respect, and that is that the more experience one gets the more proficient are they apt to become. That and these few hints may be of much benefit to one contemplating doing some of this work; but above all make sure that you know the rules. You may think you know them because you have a general idea of how the game is played, but anyone who thinks they know every rule in baseball will do well to go right out and buy a rulebook and read it through very carefully from beginning to end, and if they don't find at least a dozen things in the game that they never heard of before the circus lemonade is on me.

Thomson Will Face Many Good Rivals

Platt Adams, Mercer, Donahue and Other Stars to Compete Against Present Champion.

LOS ANGELES, CAL., July 5.—With the entries for the all-around championships, which will be held here on Bovard Field July 12, the outlook for the coming event is exceedingly good. Many coast athletes who could undoubtedly have made good records in all-around championships in years past are taking the opportunity to enter the coming classic and that Fred C. Thomson, the present champion, will have to look for his laurels in the coming event goes without a doubt.

Probably the most serious contenders for the present champion will be Mercer, the phenomenal Quaker, who has startled the Eastern critics with his work of late; Platt Adams, of the New York A. C.; James Donohue, of the L. A. A. C.; Ed Beeson, of California, and Olie Snedigar, the Olympic Club representative. All of these men are first-class performers, better in some events than in others, but can hardly be given credit as such first-class performers as Thomson until they have shown in the all-around tryouts.

AURORA MAY GET FRANCHISE.

AURORA, ILL., July 5.—A majority of the directors of the local baseball association favor going back into the Wisconsin-Illinois League, and it is certain that Aurora will take over Milwaukee's franchise. The directors are expected to formally approve the proposition when they meet Monday night.

Dubuc Throws Curves With Three Motions

DETROIT, MICH., July 5.—Jean Dubuc, the French-Canadian pitcher of the Tigers, attributes his success as an American League pitcher to the fact that he can deliver his curves, his slow ball and his fast ball with three different motions and have control of the ball at the same time.

"Years ago, when I was pitching with Notre Dame College, I learned that speed without control was valueless; I always had pretty fair control of my delivery, but with the acquired knowledge I began perfecting different deliveries and gaining control of the ball in each," says Jean.

"It took years of patient effort to acquire the delivery I now have, but I believe it is one of the least trying on the arm and shoulder muscles for the reason that I put the weight of my body behind the pitches and do not depend on the strength of my arm to send up a fast ball.

"I worked with my slow ball for three months before I could get a curve to it, and after that it took me three years to perfect the delivery."

Reds Are Composed Of Young Pastimers

Cincinnati Expert Ridicules Yarn That Club Is Home for Aged Ball Players.

CINCINNATI, July 5.—Criticism was made on the personnel of the Cincinnati Reds recently that the players are too old to deliver the goods and that that is the reason why they have occupied last place so long. The critic declares that the Cincinnati club was an old man's home and could never win until new life was instilled into it by the substitution of young men for the alleged "old-timers," who were said to be cluttering up the field.

Investigation shows that nothing could be further from the truth. As a matter of fact, the Reds, as now constituted, are one of the youngest clubs in the league.

Joe Tinker naturally is the oldest man in the regular line-up, and Joe is only 32 years old, and as fast as he ever was. Hoblitzel is only 24, though he has four years of experience as a major league first baseman.

Heine Groh is a youngster, and so is John Dodge, the latter having just passed his twentieth birthday. The infield is the youngest in the league, for if Almeida plays third he is only 26, and does not bring the average up very much. In the outfield Bob Bescher, the oldest man out there, is only 28, while Josh Devore is 24 and Marsans 25.

Some of the pitchers and catchers are older men, of course, which is as it should be. John Kling, the veteran of the club, is 37, but still in excellent form. Tom Clarke, who has been doing most of the work behind the bat this year, is only 24, and Earl Blackburn, the third backstop, has just turned 20.

CAMPI TO MEET WINNER OF LEDOUX-WILLIAMS GO

LOS ANGELES, July 5.—Eddie Campi, the Pacific Coast bantamweight, has been engaged by Tom McCarey, fight promoter, to meet the winner of the Charlie Ledoux-Kid Williams fight which will be staged here on July 15. Campi recently defeated Ledoux in a 20-round battle.

CARNEY PUTS IN FIRST CHALLENGE TO PLAY DE ORO

ST. LOUIS, MO., July 5.—The next match for the world's three-cushion championship will be played between Alfredo DeOro and Joe Carney. Frank Benson, the local billiard impresario, received word Friday morning that Carney, the Denver cueist, had placed his challenge ahead of all other performers, and would meet DeOro when the fall season starts in September.

It was thought that John Horgan would attempt to regain his laurels ahead of anybody else, after losing to the Cuban out in San Francisco last April, but "Banker Jawn" now will have to wait until Carney and DeOro play.

Carney was the carom expert who surprised the billiard world by defeating DeOro about a year and a half ago. Had DeOro won that match he would have secured possession of the diamond trophy. Carney's first match as champion was with Horgan, and the Sixth Street idol won with ease.

FEDERAL LEAGUE TEAMS ON WESTERN INVASION

INDIANAPOLIS, July 5.—The Federal League's Western invasion will open Monday, July 7, when Chicago will play at Kansas City. President John T. Powers said early to-day before departing for his home in Chicago. It is believed, league officials assert, that all work necessary to transfer the Covington team to Kansas City will have been completed by that time.

Edward Eckblad Is Foremost White Hope

That's Real Name of Gunboat Smith, Who Is Among Leading Heavyweights.

ST. PAUL, MINN., July 5.—The Gibbons brothers of St. Paul are not the only Minnesotans who are top-notchers in the squared circle, for no less a personage than Gunboat Smith, at present leading figure in the white hope brigade, started his journey to fame from this State. "Gunboat" Smith's real name is Edward Eckblad. He was brought up in Milica Township. His mother, who is now Mrs. Rosen, still lives in that township.

Young Eckblad is well remembered in Milica Township as a sturdy young fellow, always handy with his fists and of an adventure-loving disposition. Many stories are told of his prowess with his "dukes" at little disagreements such as occasionally arise at country dances.

The monotony of life in the country did not appeal to him, and in 1908 his eye was caught by one of "Uncle Sam's" advertisements depicting the joys of life in the navy, showing groups of young tars and non-commissioned officers standing around, apparently with little to do.

TINKER HAS HIGH HOPES.

CINCINNATI, OHIO, July 5.—Joe Tinker denies that he has given up hopes for this season and says he is building his Cincinnati team to run in 1913, not next year, as some have intimated. Tinker is right when he says there are a good many games to be played yet before the pennant is won.

1914 OLYMPIC GAMES WILL BE STAGED AT ATHENS

NEW YORK, July 5.—Next year's special Olympics at Athens, Greece, will be staged on March 25, the same day King Constantine is crowned by his subjects.

With the exception of an aeroplane contest, the same program of events that was put on in 1906 will be duplicated at this meeting. The games and festivities will last until May 5.

It is expected Uncle Sam will be represented by a small team. Only the best material will be sent to fight for the Stars and Stripes in Greece. The 1915 sports at San Francisco follow, and then the Berlin Olympics. The public will be asked to contribute for two of these trips.

KLING HELPS REDS.

CINCINNATI, OHIO, July 5.—The value of an experienced catcher is being proved by the Cincinnati team, which, since Johnny Kling has been catching regularly, has been winning a good percentage of its games.

Cotton Seed Meal a Southern Asset Poorly Appreciated by Southern Farmer

Affords One of the South's Greatest Advantages in Livestock Raising. Is Rich in Plant Food Content and Lends Itself Admirably to Soil Fertility.

CHARLES A. WHITTLE.
Georgia State College of Agriculture.

It is time for an ode to the golden meal similar to Timrod's to the cotton boll. Lurking in the heart of the fuzzy little seed are wonders incredible. Presto! They troop upon the stage at command of the genius of invention. Now, it is a dainty, elusive and rare perfume; now it is a shimmering liquid that parades as olive oil and defies the epicure to say it is not; now it is enthroned in snowy whiteness in the frying pan; now it is the Jersey's golden butter—but this isn't the ode. This is intended to be a very practical discussion, entitled "How the South turns its cotton seed over to others to go to the trouble of extracting some several millions therefrom, and how the Southern farmer could tap the golden stream without a worry."

The South gets about $16,000,000 for its crop of cotton seed, but if it got what the ultimate consumer pays for it in its various manufactured forms it would get a hundred million dollars. The South does not know all of the tricks of cotton seed transformation. The painstaking, delving, plodding German has unearthed several cotton seed gold mines which he has securely staked. Here the production of swineless lard and a few other edibles more or less known to the public has kept the cotton seed from expatriating the greater part of its resources.

Where the Farmer Comes In.

But to the farmer who grows the cotton, that produces the seed, that the mill grinds and the wonder workers transform, it is up to him to get his fertilizer from it and something more.

A ton of cotton seed contains 58.8 pounds of nitrogen, 21 pounds of phosphoric acid, 31.6 pounds of potash. Convert the seed into meal and a ton of meal will have more than twice as much nitrogen as a ton of seed, nearly three times as much phosphoric acid and considerably more potash.

From 40 to 50 gallons of oil can be obtained from a ton of cotton seed. The oil is not needed for feed or fertilizer. It is, therefore, a product that should go on to the manufacturer to be produced into various forms for the benefit of mankind. The farmer should look to the residue of the seed after the oil has been extracted as a further source of revenue.

A ton of cotton seed meal has plant food constituents or fertilizer values worth $24.26 per ton. The question is, How shall this meal be applied with greatest benefit to the farmer? Shall he apply it direct as a fertilizer or shall he feed it to live stock and apply the manure as fertilizer?

Feed it.

That cotton seed meal takes the place of corn in an animal's ration and can be bought in the South and be fed in the corn belt of the West cheaper than corn has been demonstrated by many years of practice. If cotton seed meal can be shipped to the West and North and fed successfully, what ought the South not gain by feeding it at home?

But—it is a shame to say it—the Southern farmer is not feeding the cotton seed meal, but he is selling it to the Western farmer and is buying from the Western farmer corn to feed. Penny wise and pound foolish! It is not to be explained upon any other basis than that the Southern farmer has not learned how to feed the meal, generally speaking, of course. There are farmers feeding meal in the South, but few, comparatively speaking.

Nothing stands in the way of feeding cotton seed meal in the South. Nothing in the climate forbids it. The food requirements of live stock do not forbid it. In fact, whenever cotton seed meal has been properly fed in the South it has always been with success.

Helps to Make Stock Profitable.

The unbeliever might query: "What, is the use of feeding cotton seed meal in the South if cattle can not be raised in competition with the West?"

Cattle can be raised in the South in competition with the West, but, of course, cotton seed meal alone will not account for it. Without the silo, without making use of the long grazing season, without using the double cropping possibilities of a long growing season, and without making the best use of cheap cotton seed meal, there is no use to try to compete with the West in beef production. By making use of the advantages offered, however, nothing whatever can put the South in second place.

In dairying, where the profits are larger than in the growing of beef, these advantages count for even more in the South than elsewhere.

The live stock to which to feed cotton seed meal and the willingness of the farmer to feed cotton seed meal are, of course, two very important essentials. One can not raise cotton alone and make a success of growing live stock on the side by buying the feed supplies. The Southern farmer must raise corn, wheat, oats, peas, clover, cotton, fill a silo and have Bermuda pasture, if he is going to grow live stock successfully.

Indeed agricultural progress in the South awaits diversified farming. Cattle can not be raised without growing the feed crops. The feed crops can not be used to best advantage without cattle on the place. Permanent upbuilding of the fertility of soil can not be accomplished without cattle, diversity of crops and crop rotation. That is the circuit which agricultural prosperity travels. Thus it will be seen that cotton seed meal has an important role to play in the progress of Southern farming.

How It Affords Cheap Food Supply.

In feeding cattle four things are of importance to the farmer: Dry matter, digestible protein, digestible carbohydrates and digestible fat. Dry matter is cheap enough and easy enough to get in the form of a variety of "roughness." Protein is different. It is the most expensive but very essential, going chiefly to building up nerves and tissues. In this element cotton seed meal stands far ahead of other feeds ordinarily used in this country. Carbohydrates build the fires, as it were, under the boiler in heating up the animal and supplying it with energy. They are abundant in most forms of feed raised on the farm. Being easy to get and abundant, carbohydrates are, therefore, comparatively inexpensive.

Fat is another one of the expensive food elements and also very important for building body fat. It can also take the place of carbohydrates as a source of energy and heat. Here again cotton seed meal comes to the fore. It excels in fat contents.

In three particulars cotton seed meal excels—dry matter, protein and fats, when compared to corn, corn bran, wheat bran, wheat middlings, rice bran and oats. The rank of cotton seed meal with some of the leading concentrates is given in the following table:

Name.	Dry Matter, Lbs.	Digestible Protein, Lbs.	Digestible Carbohydrates, Lbs.	Digestible Fat, Lbs.
Corn	89.1	7.9	66.7	4.3
Corn and cob meal	84.9	4.4	60.7	2.0
Corn bran	90.9	7.4	59.8	4.6
Wheat bran	88.1	12.2	39.2	2.7
Wheat middlings	87.9	12.8	53.0	3.4
Rice bran	90.3	5.3	45.1	7.0
Oats	89.0	9.2	47.2	4.2
Cotton-seed meal	91.8	37.2	16.9	12.2

The table speaks for itself. There is nothing in the class with cotton-seed meal for protein and fats. In no form can these comparatively expensive food constituents be purchased so cheaply as in the form of cotton-seed meal.

Value as Fertilizer When Fed.

Having determined the unquestioned value of the good contents of cotton-seed meal, how about its value as fertilizer when fed to animals? Here it is: A ton of cotton-seed meal contains 135.8 pounds of nitrogen, 57.6 pounds of phosphoric acid and 17.4 pounds of potash. Here again cotton-seed meal shines as compared with corn, corn bran, wheat bran, wheat middlings, rice bran and oats. None of them are in the class with cotton-seed meal in nitrogen, the most expensive of all plant food. The following table will show the relative standing:

Name.	Nitrogen.	Phos. Acid.	Potash.
Corn	36.4	14.0	8.0
Corn and cob meal	28.2	11.4	9.4
Corn bran	32.6	24.2	13.6
Wheat bran	52.4	57.8	32.2
Wheat middlings	52.6	19.0	12.6
Rice bran	14.2	5.8	4.8
Oats	41.2	16.4	12.4
Cotton-seed meal	135.8	57.6	17.4

From this it can be readily seen that the droppings of cattle fed on cotton seed meal will afford the most economic source of nitrogen when compared with other foods. Since about 75 per cent of nitrogen consumed by live stock in the form of food may be returned to the soil in the form of manure, it will be observed how inexpensively cotton seed meal can be made to put nitrogen in the soil.

Incidentally it may here be observed that 25 per cent of the nitrogen plant food in the cotton seed meal can be used to fatten an animal and the balance returned to the soil whence it came, to feed other plants. Is it not better to use the 25 per cent in feeding live stock than in returning it directly to the soil in the form of meal fertilizer?

The 25 per cent of nitrogen of the total content of the food, when fed to animals, gives ample return, but probably in no way more than in milk production. Always where Southern dairymen have used cotton seed meal better returns were received. In feeding beef cattle, cotton seed meal and silage are by all odds the cheapest combination of a ration.

In What Quantities to Feed.

The average ration fed to work animals in the South is 14 pounds of corn and 12 pounds of mixed hay per day per 1,000 live weight. It is deficient in protein. Add two pounds of cotton seed meal to the ration and we have nearly the correct standard. It will not hurt the mule or horse. It simply affords him what he needs and his system craves. Mix 900 pounds of corn, 750 pounds of oats and 300 pounds of cotton seed meal and 300 pounds of wheat bran and feed about 15 pounds per day per 1,000 live weight of horse or mule doing hard work, and good results will follow. The 15 pounds, of course, should be divided into three parts and fed morning, noon and night along with mixed hay or stover.

Another convenient combination is 1,500 pounds corn and cob meal and 300 pounds of cotton seed meal, to be fed, of course, three times a day, a total of 15 pounds per day, and along with it roughness.

A mixture of nine parts corn and one part cotton seed meal has been fed to hogs to advantage at the Alabama station, reducing the cost of gain per hundredweight from $7 or $10 per day to $5 or $6. Its value in feeding to dairy cattle has been mentioned. From four to five pounds per 1,000 pounds live weight when a cow is giving two gallons of milk per day is recommended to be fed with ordinary roughness. For beef production from 3 to 6 pounds of cotton seed meal can be fed, depending upon the size of the animal, along with silage and roughness.

Important to South to Boost Meal.

It is curious with all that has been demonstrated of the feeling advantage of cotton seed meal, the case which has often been made in its favor in dairying and beef production, the fertilizing value too clearly made known to leave doubt, that there should be those essaying to be agricultural leaders who, on every occasion choose to speaksoftly in advocacy of this vital resource of the South—cotton seed meal. There are not many. They do not openly oppose. They dare not in the face of a world of facts. Their purposes are concealed and doubtless few are deceived. It is unfortunate, however, when there is so much to be done to educate the Southern farmer to the vast benefits to be derived by the largest possible use of cotton seed, that there should be any one standing around with fingers crossed and "allowing" that it is a good thing for the cotton seed crushers. Of course, it is a good thing for the cotton seed crushers. Why should these progressive Southern men not have a good thing if there are any coming along? Why should not everybody wish not only that the cotton seed crushers should get something out of cotton seed meal but that the Southern farmer should also get something good out of it? What excuse is there for anybody living in the South not boosting the uses of cotton seed meal for every cent that the South can get out of it? Is anybody else more entitled to it?

The feeding of cotton seed meal in the South does not have to be boosted in order to provide a market for cotton seed meal. Germany, Sweeden, Norway, Denmark, Holland, England France and practically the whole civilized world is buying cotton seed products for feeding purposes. The North is a large consumer. The cotton seed crusher can get along without the South, but the South will be foolish to try to get along without getting every cent it can out of cotton seed meal as a feed for animals.

Peanut Shortage Coming; Chance for Georgia Farms

High Prices Now Paid for "Goobers" May Make Them Good Money Crop.

Although peanut raising has advanced greatly in recent years, the demand for peanuts has increased even faster, and dealers say that there is danger of a complete exhaustion of the present supply before this year's crop is harvested. In other years, when the domestic crop has been short, peanuts have been imported from Spain. Recent cable advices, however, have been to the effect that Spain has no peanuts to export this year.

Spanish peanuts now sell at wholesale for 10 1-4 cents a pound, and Virginia peanuts at 7 cents a pound. These are higher prices than have ever been known before. Last fall Spanish peanuts went above 6 1-4 cents, and other varieties above 5 1-2 cents, these figures causing New York operators to assert that the prices were too high, and that a sharp decline was bound to follow. Another year's showing of the vast increase in the consumption of peanuts in this country, however, has made it apparent that the peanut is destined to become one of the great staples of the country.

Leading dealers have recently been exploring areas adapted to peanut culture, and urging farmers to set out peanut crops. The probability of an overproduction at any time appears to be very small.

The nuts can be raised successfully in parts of New Jersey, and farmers there are taking a lively interest in the subject.

The peanut is easily cultivated, and singularly free from disease and insect pests. There are production records of 200 bushels an acre of the Spanish variety, while the general output from Virginia averages from 70 to 90 bushels an acre. The Virginia peanut is the better of the two.

Georgia farmers very probably would find profit in raising peanuts for market, in the opinion of the State Commissioner of Agriculture.

The last census report showed Georgia's crop for a year as 2,569,787 bushels, raised on 160,317 acres. Brooks County led, with an estimated 365,395 bushels, Thomas, Decatur, Grady, Colquitt and Berrien Counties also planted extensively in peanuts.

These peanuts are not grown for market, but for fattening hogs. The hogs are allowed to root in the fields for the nuts, after the vines have been cut off for the valuable hay.

The estimated average yield is 25 bushels an acre, 25 pounds to the bushel. At a price of 6 cents a pound, a farmer could get $37.50 per acre for the nuts, besides raising a good crop of hay.

In Louisiana and Mississippi, where the boll weevil has discouraged the planting of cotton, the farmers are turning to peanuts, and with considerable success.

Increasing commercial importance of the peanut, however, may yet make it a money crop in Georgia.

Overcoats Must Go, Say French Dandies

Uncle of Duc De Chaulnes Among Fashion Leaders Who Would Return to Old-Fashioned Cloaks.

Special Cable to The American.

PARIS, July 5.—Away with overcoats. The Duc De Luynes and the Count de Gontaut-Biron, two men of fashion and of the most aristocratic blood in all France, declare that the male of to-day's species should revive the glory of his plumage; that the attire of man is too somber, painfully funereal.

De Luynes is an uncle of the very young Duc De Chaulnes, whose mother was Miss Theodora Shonts, of New York. The Count De Gontaut-Biron's brother, now deceased, married Miss Martha Leishman, daughter of John G. A. Leishman, lately American Ambassador at Berlin.

The first attack has been directed against vulgar overcoats. The two leaders vow we must return to the graceful cloaks which poets and dandies of 1830 wore. They also say that the clawhammer evening coat must be left to hotel waiters and hired mourners.

SCIENTIST TO EXPLORE LAND OF CANNIBALS

Writes That He Is on His Way to Explore the Guainia, Little Known River.

BOSTON, July 5.—A letter from Dr. Hamilton Rice, F. R. G. S., the explorer, from San Jose, Rio Guaviare, to a Harvard classmate, has just been received, and in it Dr. Rice makes known his intention of exploring in the vicinity of the Guainia River, which is supposed to be inhabited by cannibals. Dr. Rice has made many expeditions to South America, and in 1908, when no word had been received from him for a long period, he was thought to have been lost, but a short time afterward he returned to Boston.

The letter, which is as follows, describes his expedition to his friend:

Letter Tells Experiences.

"I made this place a base last July and worked south from here to the Hills, Macaya and Ajaju Rivers, reaching the last-named river November 12 at 5 p. m., and taking observations and locating it November 13. Only six of us arrived, four white men and two Indians. At Takanemue I had the party cut down from 22 to 12, and of these, later on, eight refused to advance, but we compelled two of the Indians to continue. The retreat from Ajaju is a great story, but must wait until my return. It was wild, eerie country which has never before been visited and very difficult to work through, not only as rough country, but from the constant dread of most of the men and Indians, who feared attacks from the Carijoria Indians, who have been unusually active of late in killing 'blancos' and Huilotos.

"In a few days I am leaving here with two big canoes and a crew of five men to descend Cauo Grande and explore Yuirida, and on the way down try to push through overland to the Guainia, near its source. The Indians of Guainia have the reputation of being cannibals, owing to the non-appearance of several expeditions from San Fernando de Atabapo, hence it has not been easy to get men to go, and even when they would consent, doing it only at a high figure.

Canoe Destroyed.

"This jot will go down as far as the first Indian settlement on the Yuirida, about 30 days down; from there on I shall have Indian crews. One of my canoes was destroyed by a thunder storm, a big tree falling and breaking it; the other is useless, and, as canoes cost $150 each, it makes quite an item in one's exchequer.

"I have the whole country from Bogota well mapped, and two maps as well as all the data of 120 observations (astronomical) have been sent to the Royal Geographical Society.

"I have also performed a number of surgical operations, have some 250 slides of blood smears of fevers and pilaria and other parasites in the blood of animals examined.

"January 19—Exciting day. All the crews here are drunk. My pilot, whose woman does not wish him to go, has had all his clothes burned by her, and he is now beating her, armed with a machete and a revolver. I am also about to operate on a man wounded by a Yamu Indian arrow."

'Pluck Out Tonsil,' Doctor's New Method

New York Specialist Declares That Knife Is No Longer Needed in Operation.

CHICAGO, July 5.—Instead of cutting out a tonsil, Dr. Harold Foster, of New York, announced to-day, that he could pluck and has plucked out a diseased tonsil "as a man would pluck a cherry."

Only long fingers and a firm grip are needed, he says.

This remarkable declaration was made at the meeting of the American Homeopathic Society, over which Dr. George A. Shepard, of New York, presided. Dr. George A. Suffa declared, too, that the knife need not be employed to cure strabismus of certain types—"cross-eyes." The surgeon instead of cutting the muscles of the eye need only "take a loop in one or more of them," then tie the loop. After that the patient looks straight.

U. S. Gem Bill for June Is $5,102,917

Imports in Month Break All Records, According to Figures of Jewelry Examiner.

NEW YORK, July 5.—Gem imports for June broke all records, according to figures compiled by William B. Treadwell, jewelry examiner at the Appraisers' Stores. The total reached $5,102,917, of which the cut precious stones and pearls are value at $3,920,175 and the uncut gems, mostly diamonds, at $1,182,742.

It was predicted in Maiden Lane recently that the total value of the gem receipts throughout the United States would exceed $50,000,000 during the fiscal year, and these figures were considered a conservative estimate.

The large figures are due to the fear of importers of an advance in the duty under the new tariff.

First Woman Wills Her Body to Science

Leaves Strange Bequest in Hope That Her Remains Will Aid in Scientific Research.

PHILADELPHIA, July 5.—Miss Lucy Hunter Baird, the wealthy Washington society woman, who died here June 19, bequeathed her body to Dr. S. Weir Mitchell and his son, Dr. John King Mitchell, directing that they should perform an autopsy. She is perhaps the first woman in this country to will her body to science.

Miss Baird suffered for several years from a nervous ailment, and Dr. Mitchell and his son did much to relieve her. It was out of gratitude to them and with the hope that an autopsy might reveal facts of futre value to humanity that she inserted the strange clause in her will.

GUN METAL SHOES POPULAR.

A great many tan shoes for men are being sold this summer at wholesale, but in the better class trade gun metal finishes are the most sought. Narrow toes and low, broad heels are favored.

POULTRY

Southern farmers are neglecting the most profitable end of the fowl industry. Pekin Duck is the best all-round fowl for the market producer. Indian Runners are great layers.

By JUDGE F. J. MARSHALL.

There is but little question that the domestic duck originated from the wild duck which was widely distributed over the British Islands.

It has fallen to the lot of England and America to do most of the perfecting of the tame varieties, although one, the Pekin, was imported from China in a rather crude state.

At this time we have a dozen standard varieties of ducks.

The duck, while not nearly so commonly bred as the chicken, has great commercial importance in some sections of this country. In Philadelphia, Boston and New York it is a favorite with epicures.

Its principal market role is in the shape of what are called broilers or green roasters. As such they use the larger varieties—the Pekin, Aylesbury and Rouen. These ducks will weigh as high as 17 pounds to the pair at maturity.

Ducks on Farms.

Although but little attention has been paid to them by farmers, a good class of ducks could be made a very profitable addition to the farm stock. So many farmers, particularly in the South, have tried to keep the old puddle duck, as they were called, and derived but little revenue from them. Where they have gotten some of the fine breeds, they have found them money-makers.

The Pekin, as Americanized, is our most profitable market duck. As they stand to-day, they represent nearly three-fourths of the commercial duck business of this country.

New York, New Jersey and Massachusetts have breeders who raise these ducks by the thousands to be marked at from two to three months of age. They grow twice as fast as would a chicken during this time.

While the Aylesbury and the Rouen will make as large a growth, it has been thought that the Pekin takes less time, and for that reason they have been universally used for market purposes.

E. W. Fly, of Chalfont, Pa., writes for The Reliable Poultry Journal, telling of the remarkable growth of ducks as compared with chickens. It requires about three months for the average chick to reach two pounds, while ducks will reach that weight in less than half that time, and are ready for the market in seven weeks.

Ducks More Profitable.

In experiments conducted for the purpose of determining the relative value of ducks and chicks, it was found that at the end of nine weeks the average weight of the ducks was four pounds and 8 ounces, average weight of chicks two pounds. Ten ducks sold for 28 cents a pound, or $12.60. After paying the shipping expenses, the receipts were $9.68. The food cost $2.36, leaving a net income of $7.32. The chicks sold for 24 cents a pound, the receipts being $2.74; cost of food was 82 cents, leaving a profit of $2.92. The difference in profit in favor of the ducks was $4.40.

Repeated tests have clearly shown that the Pekin or any of the larger breeds will make wonderful growth if they are properly fed and handled. Of course, they must be of a healthy strain, uninjured by being bred to fancy points. Good, strong outcrosses are necessary to the vigor of any variety.

James Rankin, of Massachusetts, one of the first poultrymen of this country to take up the production of early market ducks, after experimenting with all kinds, says that the Pekin will yield the most profits. As he raises over 12,000 ducks yearly, a variation of 1 cent per pound will make a difference of $500 in his yearly income.

Early Ducks Make Early Layers.

Mr. Rankin not only puts a lot of early roasters on the Boston market, but he keeps over a lot of these for early layers the following fall and winter. It is as essential for him to have the early layers as the early roasters for the markets. They must furnish the eggs for hatching the following season's crop of ducks.

Mr. Rankin holds the distinction of being the first, or one of the first, to make a success of the market duck business by hatching his stock in incubators which he himself constructed before the days of the incubator proper.

The best breeders have found that it does not pay to feed or pamper weaklings. They have found that the ducks do much better when they are allowed a good run and fed out of doors at all seasons. This has reference to stock ducks, for the youngsters have no time to get hardy. Running water is one of the real essentials for Pekins, where they are kept for practical purposes.

Feed for Young Ducks.

One of the best methods of feeding young ducks for about a week is as follows: One measure of corn meal, one of middlings, one of good wheat bran; mix with sweet milk or water, with grit added. Do not have it sticky, but nice and crumbly. Second week—One and one-half measures of corn meal, one measure of middlings, one of wheat bran, one-eighth measure of beef scraps, one measure of roasted bread and one half measure of green rye or clover. Third week—Two measures of corn meal, one-half of bran, one-sixth of beef scrap, one-half of the green clover or rye.

Fourth week—Two measures of corn meal, one and one-half of bran, one-half of middlings, one-half of the beef scrap, one-half of the green stuff. Fifth week—The same, with three-fourths measure of the beef and two of the greens. Sixth week—The same. Seventh week—Three measures of corn meal, one and one-fourth of bran, one-half measure of middlings, one of beef scrap and two of green cut clover or rye. Eighth week (if finishing for the market)—Leave out the bran and add the amount in corn meal and middlings, which will tend to brighten the carcass.

During the last week of feeding avoid anything that may taint the flesh, such as onions or too much rye. Where the ducks are to be kept for layers and not forced for the market it is best to leave out the increase of corn meal and feed as for the fourth week right on to maturity, except a feed of mixed grain once a day, preferably at night.

While this feed is used largely for the development of the Pekin for the broiler market, it is all right for any kind of duck raising.

Indian Runners Disappointing.

During the last ten years the country has gone wild on the Indian Runner. It is best for laying. But many persons have been disappointed with their results, not being able to keep the Runners up in health and strength during a siege of this heavy laying.

We believe this is due more to the vitality of certain families which have been bred for character of feathering rather than for vitality and productiveness. We think that with the same care bestowed upon them as has been given the Pekin for real strength and health that they would do much better in holding up to the work of heavy laying.

These ducks were brought into England over 50 years ago in rather a crude state as to markings, though of a decided Runner type. They came from India. They are of very early maturity, and, as we have said, when well handled, are remarkable layers of much more delicately flavored eggs than the larger members of the duck family. A white egg is claimed for them, although many lay greenish-tinted eggs.

Type of Runners.

Our American Standard gives the Indian Runner as of a fawn-and-white color. There are many who contend the true Runner should be a white with a coarse penciling of fawn and white. In real type the Runner is slim and erect in body, with a long, slim neck, and head carried high, with bill straight out.

Being somewhat of the Leghorn type, they are of but little value for the market. For flavor, it is all right, but the producer is not willing to pay as much to produce a four-pound carcass as it does to get six or seven in the Pekin.

After we have considered the practical varieties, we have the more ornamental, such as the Crested White, Muscovey, Call and Blue Swedish. The later is remarkably beautiful in type and coloring. The Gray Call is very much the same as the wild mallard. In fact, they are of such a wild nature that during the migratory seasons they are decidedly restless. They are called the bantams of the duck family.

The duck question for the practical breeder resolves itself into two proposition—if you want eggs, take the Runners; if meat and eggs combined, the Pekin.

Farmers Will Raise Cattle Scientifically

Nebraskans Pledge to Follow Instructions in Effort to Cut Cost of Living.

LINCOLN, NEBR., July 5.—To do their part in reducing the high cost of living 200 Nebraska farmers have pledged themselves to devote their time, talents and energies to increasing the production of beef cattle and to follow the instructions of the university experiment station, which has for several years made a special study of raising cattle for beef by what it believes to be the best methods.

"The fact that the population of the country is increasing at an average of 20 per cent every ten years, while beef cattle are decreasing 7 per cent, has aroused the nation to a realization that the high cost of living can never be lowered until this state of affairs is mended, and that the farmers are responsible for the work is just as apparent as that the present conditions exist," said Dean Burnett, addressing the farmers.

11TH OF FAMILY GOES TO NURSE LEPERS IN INDIA

Rev. Gottfried Hahn, Now in New York, to Finish Education Preparatory to Life of Sacrifice.

NEW YORK, July 5.—Rev. Gottfried Hahn, recently ordained a minister of the German Evangelical Church in St. Louis, is in the city, preparatory to beginning a journey to India to sacrifice his life among the lepers.

He is on his way to become a missionary to Purulia, India, where hundreds of the most desperate cases of Asia are cared for and taught to look upon Christianity as their hope.

And more marvelous still, he is but following in the steps of eleven other members of his family, including his aged mother.

Regards Action as Duty.

Like Father Damien, young Hahn regards his action as a duty to his church and God. No one could better understand the horrible conditions he must face than he does, for he was born there.

"I shall finish my preparation. Then I will return to India and enter upon my work there," he said simply.

"My father gave his life to the work in that field and I must take it up later myself if my health permits.

"Mother is ill and I do not believe will live much longer. Nothing would delight her more than to know before she dies that I, too, will continue in the work of my father."

To him it is all in the day's work. His sister, Maria Hahn, is the wife of the superintendent of the colony. She has been there for years and has faithfully and courageously given her life to the cause.

Physical Being Frail.

Certainly if his father and if his sister and all of his other relatives could do what they have done and are doing, why should he hesitate, asks young Hahn.

Hahn, who is 26, came to America several years ago to pursue his theological studies at the Evangelical Seminary in St. Louis. His frail physique forbids his returning immediately to the lifework of his kin in India.

As soon as his health warrants his assuming the life of sacrifice and devotion, he will sail to Southern India, and follow in the missionary work of his people.

The St. Louis man is the fifth in his family to be ordained in the ministry.

His father, Rev. Ferdinand Hahn, who died in 1910, more than 40 years ago began his services as a missionary in India.

Three of his sons came to America after working for years in the colony.

PROPOSED TAX DIVERTS NOTICE FROM MARKET

Cotton Men Too Busy Fighting Clarke Amendment to Notice Closely Daily Fluctuations.

NEW ORLEANS, July 5.—Pending the outcome of the proposed legislation at Washington, which would place a prohibitive tax on contracts for the future delivery of cotton, comparatively little interest is being taken in the cotton market itself. Cotton men, who realize that the system of contract trading in New Orleans and New York is absolutely essential for carrying on the immense forward business in the South's great staple, are more concerned in the fight for the maintenance of contract markets than in temporary fluctuations, which, however, continue to show a steady undertone, with support on all easy periods.

In the fight against the adoption of the Clarke amendment to the tariff bill the New Orleans Cotton Exchange has enlisted the support of all the other cotton exchanges of the South. Already these exchanges have begun to adopt resolutions protesting against such destructive legislation as that proposed by the Senator from Arkansas. Telegrams and letters of protest are pouring into Washington from the business interests all over the South.

Producer Hardest Hit.

It has been clearly demonstrated by men here who are experts on cotton matters that while all lines of the cotton business will be seriously affected by the enactment of the Clarke amendment into law, the man who will suffer most from such ill-conceived legislation will be the cotton producer himself. In the first place, the wiping out of the contract markets would do away with an army of small spot buyers who are accustomed to hedge against possible losses by selling contracts against their purchases of spot cotton, and thus deprive the farmers of the benefit of competition for their cotton. The logical consequence would be that the control of the spot markets of the South would pass into the hands of a few rich interests, and eventually, it is argued, would lead to the formation of a gigantic cotton trust somewhat on the order of that which now has the cattle raisers of the United States in its grip.

No less an authority than Colonel Henry G. Hester states that if the Clarke amendment is adopted the value of cotton in the South will be lessened two to three cents a pound. Buyers of spot cotton, unable to protect themselves against losses by hedges in the contract market, will necessarily allow a margin for possible fluctuations in the value of the staple by reducing the prices paid to the producer. With the aid of the contract market spot buyers are able to pay full market values for cotton and can always find an outlet for their purchases.

Colonel Thompson's Position.

Colonel W. B. Thompson, who has been one of the leaders of the South in the fight for the betterment of the producers' condition, has come out emphatically in opposition to the proposed legislation. In a telegram addressed to President Barrett, of the National Farmers' Union at Union City, Ga., Colonel Thompson appeals to that organization, which is reported to be backing the proposed measure, to give this vital matter its most serious consideration.

After citing some of the evil consequences that would flow from the passage of the Clarke amendment, Colonel Thompson concludes his telegram to President Barrett as follows:

"It is reported that in supporting said amendment some Senators take the position that while they doubt the wisdom of the measure or are of the positive opinion that it is unwise and will be injurious, 'still as the farmers want it,' they say, 'let them have it, and take the consequences.' We can not afford to experiment with such a vital matter. I am not connected with any exchange in an official capacity, and I have no interest in any future business. You know that I have given much time and effort to the betterment of the producers' condition and to improvement in all legitimate trade. I think you believe in the sincerity of my purpose. I say to you earnestly that in my opinion this measure is fraught with the most serious consequences to the interests you represent, and with no intention of being officious, but animated only by sincere desire to co-operate with you in your work for the Southern farmer, I beg you to give this vital matter your most serious consideration before using the power of your great organization to advance so dangerous a measure and before you accept responsibility therefor."

English Carpets to Invade U. S. Markets

Tariff Situation Closely Watched, and Any Opening Will Be Seized by Britain.

NEW YORK, July 5.—Reports from carpet and rug manufacturers show that their mills are fully occupied in getting out orders which have been placed for the fall season. Reports to the effect that certain mills were closed, or partly closed down, have been promptly denied. The heaviest sales for the season have been on axminster rugs, and some additional orders are still coming from buyers who do not believe that they are sufficiently covered.

The opinion is becoming more general that fall prices were opened too low. Raw material has continued to move upward, and is in very short supply. There are a good many in the trade who believe that the tariff bill will not be passed in time to be of much service for the fall season, in the way of getting wool in free.

According to representatives of carpet houses in this market who have just returned from a visit to the manufacturing centers abroad, there will be keen competition on the part of the British mills for American trade.

Stock Exchange Working Hard to Restore Confidence

Old Secretive Attitude Gives Way to Campaign of Education—Queer Deals Cease.

NEW YORK, July 5.—Nearly a half-year has gone by since the New York Stock Exchange began measures of reform, and it is possible to gain a retrospective view of the results obtained. It may be said that the leaders in the movement are satisfied with what has been accomplished toward improving the general morale of operations in securities, and the groundwork laid for lifting the exchange above public reproach they believe to be secure.

The government committee has, in the first place, made application in recent months of the old adage about an ounce of prevention and a pound of cure. The committee has worked to eliminate incipient evils before they grew large enough to be subjects of general comment in the Street. The infliction of discipline—and there has been much discipline inflicted—has been gone about quietly, with the purpose of curbing infraction of the rules before greater infractions could occur. The effort has met with much success.

In consequence, largely, the exchange is entitled to considerable satisfaction over the fact that while recent sharp declines in the international markets brought in their train a number of failures in London, Paris and Berlin, not a single New York Stock Exchange house got into trouble.

Manipulation Dead.

"Manipulation is dead on the exchange," said a prominent member yesterday. "The governors have placed themselves so rigidly in opposition to every possible method of creating a fictitious market for a stock that no one would dare make the attempt. An outside operator might possibly try it, but the odds are greatly against any Stock Exchange house keeping his account if his trading became a matter of suspicion. There is no doubt about that. The committee on business conduct would take care of that end of the problem."

The committee on business conduct is, without doubt, the best adjunct to proper management of the exchange that has been added to the executive power in many years. The committee's function is to enforce proper conduct between members and their clients, to prevent reckless or unbusinesslike transactions on the board room floor, and to throttle manipulation. The scope of its influence is clearly seen in these three items.

Committee of Wide Powers.

The business conduct committee consists of five members, all of whom are members of the governing committee. The members have the power of examining the books of any Stock Exchange house at any time, to summon members of the exchange to explain acts which have been called into question, and to inquire into relations between members and customers.

If a stock begins to act strangely, the committee finds out who is buying and selling it, and the buyer and seller have to explain all about their transactions.

The committee reads carefully market letters sent out by commission houses. If it be decided that the contents are too much on the order of "tips," the house responsible therefor is warned that more matter-of-fact statements must be substituted for prophecies.

The formation of the committee on business conduct was one of the first products of the reform movement. The idea of having a number of responsible members in a position to get closer to the inner workings of the exchange than the larger board of governors was able to do was conceived by a special committee appointed to "consider the matter of handling margin accounts and rehypothecating securities and devise measures which will serve more fully to protect the public."

It is doubtful if the rank and file of Stock Exchange members realized how widespread would be the duties of the new organization. It was dubbed the "police committee" at first, and an impression prevailed in some quarters that the most onerous work of the members would be to prevent horseplay on the floor. Those who allowed this thought to submerge more weighty considerations were quickly disabused of it.

Educational Campaign.

Another direction taken by Stock Exchange reform which stands out prominent in the history of the past six months is in the way of education. There was a time, not so very long ago, when information about operations on the board was extremely hard to get. The attitude of the authorities seemed to be that the public did not need to know anything about a lot of matters. Such is not the case at the present time.

A committee has been formed which supplies inquirers with answers to all reasonable queries as to stocks, bonds, earnings of companies and methods of business on the exchange. Furthermore, this committee has carried the campaign of education to the public instead of waiting for the public to appear in Wall Street.

Hundreds of thousands of periodicals and newspaper clippings dealing with the Stock Exchange are distributed throughout the country monthly, and no opportunity is passed for disseminating information about the Stock Exchange in the year 1913.

Month of Good Weather Will Assure Big Yield of Cotton

Cleanest Crop Ever Seen Still Is Small and Needs Rain in Some Regions.

MEMPHIS, July 5.—If there is reasonably good weather in the cotton belt during the next thirty to forty days the foundation will be laid for a crop that should put at rest talk of very high prices during the ensuing fall and winter. At the present time there is ample basis for looking for the second largest crop the South has ever grown, some extremists talk of a possibility of it running the 1911 crop a close race. This, however, is hardly worthy serious talk, for acreage, according to official authorities, is not equal to that season, and condition at the time of the last compilation was several points lower. As conditions during the latter half of the summer of 1911 were rather abnormal in more ways than one and are not likely to be repeated, it is not conservative to expect the yield to reach within a million bales of the record.

The past week has been a period of crop improvement, though there still is basis for complaint, and continued ideal weather and growing conditions are necessary if the basis be laid for much excess over the season now drawing to a close.

Rains Not General.

There have been rains where needed, supplying the moisture essential to the plant catching up its late start and taking on fruit, yet as a rule they have been local in character and many areas are only partially supplied. Others have not had enough to do more than temporary good, and very soon permanent injury to prospects may result. The high temperatures in the central belt were not ideal, except where showers came and enabled the plant to take on size. Reports reaching here from the Eastern belt have told of improvement, though not by any means uniform.

The handicap to the crop continues to be its lack of size, which, the first week in July, is worthy of serious consideration. The season is at hand for fruiting, and if the plant is not well developed chances are against it becoming heavily fruited. The rains have helped considerably, but there have not been enough of them and there still is the danger of drouth later.

Cleanest Crop Known.

Cultivation has gone ahead under favorable conditions and the crop is perhaps cleaner than ever known, which is a feature of importance as to yield and the quality of the crop. It is difficult to conceive how conditions can arise that will cause the fields to become grassy. The crop will be laid by under the best conditions in years and in many sections earlier than usual, though it will not be an early crop when size and maturity of the plant is considered.

The depredations of the weevil in the infested sections have been checked, for little has been heard during the past week in regard to them. The hot sun and lack of moisture have helped to check the pest, while the vast numbers caught and destroyed have also been a factor. However, it is now between seasons with the pest, and the real test as to what it will do comes a little later.

There has been little activity in the spot department, though quotations have held fairly steady. Movement has been moderate. The strength in the summer contracts has extended to the entire market, and is based on continued good consumption and the smallness of stocks for protection of short sales.

Inquiry among the buyers here indicates that there is less selling of the actual ahead this summer than for several years, the experiences of the past two years having proven, in most instances, expensive. Some market observers think this fact helps to explain why the foreign spinners have been absorbing fall contracts so freely, thus providing in that way a partial hedge against orders for finished goods and yarns. If this opinion proves correct, it is likely to prove important as a speculative influence during the next few months.

BALKANS YET OFFER MENACE TO PROSPERITY

European Affairs Improved, but Vast Room Remains for Further Progress, Says Boersanier.

By BOERSANIER.

CHICAGO, July 5.—It is universally agreed that the Balkan war disorganized the world's finances. It frustrated what promised to be an exceptional boom in the United States. It stopped prosperity in Canada with an abruptness that threw the economic machinery of the Dominion almost into chaos. Europe, from the eastern end of Russia to France, from Norway to Italy, was thrown into confusion.

As Europe was the origin of the trouble, Europe is watched with keen and anxious eyes for signs of recuperation.

Europe is convalescing, but the convalescence is perceptible only to the eyes of the home expert. Too much was expected of the immediate effect of the signing of the preliminary treaty between the warring countries. An avalanche of fresh issues came on the market; securities attractive in form, substance and price. A few had scarcely been absorbed when an eruption occurred among the Turks' conquerors.

With the hereditary foe permanently vanquished, it had been unreasonable to expect all of the conquerors to lay aside their weapons and go to work. A fighter can not be converted into a dull and prosaic laborer in a day. Besides, there must be a paramount power among the allies, just as Prussia holds the whip hand in the Germanic confederation. The clash between Servia and Bulgaria is a contest for supremacy in the Balkans.

This may be troublesome. In the meanwhile, Germany is in need of capital, and Reichsbank, in its desire for gold, may pay a stiff premium, even as France paid it. America's monetary position is better, but not yet strong. We have the double task of moving full average crops and of financing a large number of short-term notes.

Briefly, the world's finances are not in a state to stand alarms and excursions in Europe. All the liquid capital that can be available the coming autumn will be wanted, and any action that tends to check the flow of capital might be embarrassing. Imagine, for example, what the effect would be if at the approach of autumn Paris took a gloomy view of international politics and began to call in her money. All who depend on French finance would find liquid capital, instead of expanding with the autumn's needs, contracted just when most wanted.

If these are the conditions of the world's finance, it is surely clear that what is needed now is not merely peace, but open good will and good understanding throughout Europe.

In a short sentence, Europe has improved, but the room for further improvement is vast.

HOSIERY MOVES WEL.

Hosiery manufacturers who have put their spring (1914) lines on the market do not anticipate great difficulty in selling them up quickly. In several instances the biggest part of the season's production has already been contracted for.

KNITTERS MAY STRIKE.

The unsettled condition of labor in the sweater end of the knit-goods trade is causing the manufacturers some concern. Some of the mills making these goods have already had strikes, and it is said that other outbreaks are not unexpected.

Coal to Cost More Within Next Year, Declare Operators

Export Demand One Factor in Creating New Markets for Product of Southern Mines.

KNOXVILLE, TENN., July 5.—Coal operators in the Kentucky and Tennessee fields, whose output moves largely into Georgia and adjoining States, report that the market is in better condition at this season of the year than ever before. Prices are averaging from 5c to 15c per ton higher than one year ago, with a strong demand for all grades. It is understood that contracts for railroads involving between 1,000,000 and 2,000,000 tons have been made at an advance of 10 cents per ton over the contract price of last year. This quantity of coal will be taken out of commercial channels, and will help advance prices during the next twelve months.

The demand for steam and domestic coal is unusually good for this season of the year, and most operators have sold their entire output up to September 1, and are not anxious to make quotations for shipments of domestic coals after that date, as they believe a strong market will develop in the fall and winter. There has been a slight let-up in the past 30 days for the finer grades of steam coal, and the increased production in domestic has caused 3-inch steam and nut and slack to be more plentiful, so that nut and slack is selling from 5c to 10c less than 30 days ago.

An unusual feature is a car shortage. Operators believe this indicates a serious shortage in the late fall and winter months.

There are several causes why prices on coal going from all fields into Georgia territory will probably be higher during the next twelve months. In the first place, exports of coal during the past ten months have been greater than ever before, especially from West Virginia fields.

This relieves the pressure of coal from that field on the other Southern coal fields. Alabama also is finding new markets at Gulf coast points and for export, which takes away some coal going into the Southeastern States. Alabama is coking considerable coal and this coke is going into Mexican and far West points. Large operators in Kentucky and Tennessee are successfully invading the Central and Northwestern States with domestic coal, which, because of its high quality, successfully competes in those parts with coal from all other fields. This diverts a large tonnage which has been going into Southeastern States.

DRESS GOODS DULL.

Business is quiet in the dress goods market at the moment. Buyers refuse to contract ahead until the tariff has been settled definitely. Cancellations are not so heavy as might be expected in view of the unsettled condition of the trade.

Carnegie in Favor of New Currency Bill

President Wilson Should Stand Firm if Opposition Develops to His Plans, He Says.

ZERMATT, SWITZERLAND, July 5.—Andrew Carnegie is keenly interested in the fate of the banking reform bill as presented to Congress by President Wilson.

"It is the most important and most necessary legislation on which America has had to decide for years," he says, "the present American currency system is a disgrace to the country. It is not true that bankers and leading business men are opposed to the measure. That is nonsense. The best bankers and business are for the reform. The Aldrich bill is all right and so long as the principle thereof is maintained I do not care about the details.

"If opposition should develop, my advice to President Wilson is to stand firm. When a panic starts other countries and governments possess the power to step in and act. Some speculators fail, it is true, but it is a good thing that they should do so.

Southern Railway Fours Are Sagging

Increased Dividends for Preferred Fail to Cause Rally Because of Underlying Conditions.

NEW YORK, July 5.—General investment conditions have operated against an advance in Southern Railway's development and general mortgage 4 per cent bonds after the preferred stock was put back on its regular 5 per cent basis. Around 74, the bonds are only four points above their lowest level. At present price they yield more than 5.66 per cent.

However, the decline has not been as marked as in the high-grade savings bank issues. These have suffered losses of 5, 6 and 7 points, while the Southern 4s are off only about 4½ points from the high of this year.

The Southern has more mileage with low-earning power than any other important road in its territory. However, its branch mileage is a source of strength, as indicated by the steady increase in gross and net earnings every year since 1909. Development of the South tends to increase the earning power of these branches. As yet little new capital has had to be spent on them.

Jacobs' Bed Bug Killer

QUICKEST and surest, better than powder because it soaks into the pores of wood and gets deep into minute crevices and under surfaces where the insects lay their eggs. It destroys instantly both bug and egg, and will completely exterminate these awful pests. A powerful preparation, and if bedsteads are cleaned with it occasionally during the hot weather the insects will not come to your premises, even though they may be in neighboring houses. Brush free with every bottle.

Krelol Prevents Sickness—Powerful disinfectant and germicide. Use it regularly about sinks, pipes, toilets, garbage containers, outhouses, etc. It destroys instantly all germs; stops the increase of flies and mosquitoes which carry germs and spread disease. Krelol is a preventive of disease and should be used regularly. Better than carbolic acid in sickroom; more powerful than ordinary disinfectants, hence more economical, as less is used. 4 oz. 25c, 10 oz. 50c, qt. 75c; 1-2 gal. $1.50.

Jacobs' Perfumed Salt Baths

Refreshing, Cool and Healthful

Recommended Especially if Inclined to Be Stout

IT is like a dip into the cool, bracing ocean, and has the same invigorating tonic effect upon the system, cooling, refreshing, throwing off fatigue and lassitude and soothing and strengthening the nervous system. And by taking these baths in warm water, there is a tendency to throw off abnormal flesh or fat, and without the slightest disadvantageous results, as is evident with almost all other treatments.

Jacobs' Perfumed Bath Salt is a most delightful addition to the bath, very cooling and refreshing, and beneficial in every way. It is also decidedly helpful in reducing the weight. Pleasantly perfumed with Verbena, Rose, Violet and Apple Blossom; handsome toilet bottles, 50c.

Jacobs' Castor Oil Elixir

All Babies Like It

THE first time that Castor Oil has been presented in a form which is positively pleasant both in odor and taste which does not offend the stomach, return nor in any way manifest the usual disagreeable properties of the oil.

This Elixir has a slightly sweet taste with an agreeable sharp tang; it is taken without any disguisement, and no one can tell that it is other than a pleasant tonic.

It is a cold pressed oil with aromatics, carminatives and 2 grs. phenolphthalein to the ounce, which increases its efficiency as a mild purgative and at the same time reduces the dose. Children and infants like it. You will be more than satisfied with it. 25c.

Nursing a Baby

WHAT ATLANTA MANUFACTURERS AND JOBBERS ARE DOING

ATLANTA GIRLS BUY MILLINERY MADE AT HOME

Half the Hats Seen on Peachtree Street Are Made Here, but the Fact Is Unheralded.

JOBBERS USE OWN LABELS

Factories Lose Identity When the Product Is Shipped—Materials Come From Many Lands.

Half the women's hats seen on Peachtree Street are made right in Atlanta.

The fair Peachtree promenaders don't know it; the milliners they patronize don't know it; in many cases the jobbers themselves don't know it.

There are three factories in Atlanta making women's hats, of straw, felt, plush, hemp and the myriad other materials which go to bedeck milady's coiffure and frame her pretty face.

But as soon as the hat leaves these factories the manufacturers lose their identity. The hat is marked with the jobber's label. It may be marked New York, Philadelphia, New Orleans or even London. The fact that it is made in Atlanta is nowhere to be discovered.

One manufacturer tells, with a grin, of Atlanta milliners who "stocked up" in New York—with Atlanta-made hats.

Altogether, it is an interesting business.

Materials From Afar.

The American Hat Manufacturing Company, one of the largest of the three Atlanta factories, imports straws direct from China, Japan, Italy and Germany. These straws are plaited abroad, and either are dyed there or bleached and dyed in Camden, N. J.

Japan sends hemp braid. Italy furnishes the milans, leghorns and tuscans. Germany furnishes a peculiar material known as Neapolitan braid, which, though few know it, is made from American cotton. China furnishes coarse straws.

So much for the straws. The felt bodies come from abroad, in the rough—queer, looking toadstools of various shades. Silks, ribbons, velvets, plushes and ornaments are carried in quantity enough to stock a dry goods store of large proportions.

Just now the factories are busy with the hats to be worn this fall and winter, and with misses' and children's hats for spring, 1914.

Sample rooms already are filled with fall and spring lines, dazzling arrays of colors, and seemingly in almost every shape, but with smaller hats predominating.

Plaster Hats the Start.

The making of a hat may be said to begin in the room where a skilled workman makes plaster molds accurately defining the shapes. From these plaster affairs, metal dies are made. These dies are put in the presses and heated by gas flames. The rough shapes, either felt, velvet, straw or hemp, are stamped with these hot dies and held in them until dry. When removed the heat has baked the sticky "sizing" until the shapes are firm.

From the presses the velvet and plush hats go to a workman who steams them and brushes up the nap to its original beauty.

The straw shapes are made in the factory. Ingeniously designed sewing machines, manipulated by skillful girls, sew the braid round and round, until a tiny knot grows into a gigantic hat. In the straw season 150 girls are busy at these machines.

Other ingenious machines sew in linings, attach cloth crowns to brims, bind brims, and do other complicated stitching which would seem to need the skill of the human hand.

Girl Designs Trimmings.

The elaborate bows and trimmings are designed by the young forewoman, who then teaches the girls under how to make them. This, in itself, is work requiring art.

Ready for shipment, the hats are put in the familiar round boxes—these, too, made in the factory, and then in big corrugated paper cases.

Off they go, bringing Atlanta no glory—but considerable money!

Permanent Exhibit Now Assured; Long Campaign Near Culmination

Speeches of Men Who Studied Possibilities of Plan Stir Their Hearers to Action.

"Atlanta citizens do not know what is made in their own city.

"Southern merchants who come to Atlanta do not know the extent of the city's manufactures.

"The nation in general never thinks of Atlanta as a manufacturing center.

"All this must be changed. There must be systematic exploitation of Atlanta's factories. The future growth and prosperity of the city depend on this factor more than on any other. One of the best means of educating the public to Atlanta's importance as a manufacturing center is to maintain a permanent exhibit of the goods made here."

With this message ringing in their ears, 100 Atlanta manufacturers, banqueting at the Hotel Ansley Thursday night, decided to undertake the establishment of a permanent display. Twenty-three manufacturers signed agreements to take space in the exhibit hall. More have signed since.

For the purpose of handling the exhibit a Fulton County manufacturers' association will be formed this week. The scope of this association is to be broad. It will endeavor to safeguard its members from ill-advised legislation. It will wrestle with transportation problems, welfare of labor and other questions of vital interest to manufacturers.

Four sites for the permanent exhibit are offered, each within five minutes' walk of Five Points. These are for lease, for sale, or lease with privilege of purchase. These offers will be acted upon within ten days.

Campaign Now On.

From this time forward a year of preparation will culminate in a whirlwind campaign of activity.

Forceful, indeed, were the informal talks made at the banquet. The men behind the project have spent a long time in study of its possibilities. They are very much in earnest. They truly believe that nothing so important for the development of Atlanta has been launched in many years. This enthusiasm, restrained for so long, found vent when they rose to make the speeches which should "get action." If they failed to convince their hearers, all their work was wasted. They knew it—and they did not fail.

"One of the big things such a permanent display does is educate the children," said Brooks Morgan. "In Cleveland it is regarded as a valuable supplement to the work of the schools in teaching the children economic and industrial subjects. What this means in dollars and cents to the exhibitors to have the future buying public in Cleveland fully awake to the variety and merits of homemade goods, you can see for yourselves.

City Needs Manufacturing.

"There is a limit to Atlanta's growth as a jobbing and distributing center. Almost every great concern in the United States has representatives here. Atlanta already supplies its territory well, and some territory which belongs to its neighbors. There is a limit to this development, I say, and the maintenance of real estate values, the growth in population of the city, its prosperity, depend absolutely upon the development of our manufactories. We have 600 factories now. I doubt if we need more. What we need is to make these 600, each and every one, big, strong concerns.

"I do not know of a company which will benefit less than mine from an exhibit. My interest is not selfish. I sincerely believe this is necessary for Atlanta.

"Our idea is to have exhibits, as many and as attractive as possible, grouped effectively under one roof. A manager should be in charge. Let him show visitors through. If a visitor manifests interest in one line, or several, let him telephone at once to the manufacturers of these lines to send a salesman. I believe, too, that manufacturers in the outskirts of the city will find it profitable to use the exhibit building for their downtown office. This is done elsewhere with profit.

"Atlanta should have four times the payroll it now has. This is the way to go about it."

Evansville's Experience.

Bolling H. Jones told of the experience of 32 furniture manufacturers in Evansville, Ind., who put up a building and displayed their lines in it, keeping the ground floor for their offices. They find it easier to get prospective customers to look at their wares, and also find the selling cost cut to 3 per cent.

"That convinced me," said Mr. Jones. "Did any manufacturer here ever sell goods for 3 per cent merchandising cost? This argument alone seems to me unanswerable."

He spoke of the changes which have come about in the Southern field within five years. No longer is it possible to sell a merchant a full carload of one line. Therefore, he argued, the exhibit will be valuable in getting buyers to make up mixed carloads of Atlanta-made goods. Other cities, rivals of Atlanta, are doing this, he said, and Atlanta must, to keep what it has, to say nothing of expanding.

"Advertising no longer is a matter of buying a few inches of newspaper space, asserting through this space that 'John Smith makes good beds'," said C. S. Dobs. "Advertising is the science of creating a demand. Publicity is the cheapest known method of selling goods. It may be newspaper publicity; it may be billboards; it may be an exhibit of the kind you are considering. It may better be all three.

Like Shop Windows.

"I believe this exhibit will have the same effect as the Whitehall Street windows. A man comes downtown to buy a pair of shoes. As he walks along the street, he sees hats, neckwear and walking sticks displayed. These remind him that he needs such articles. The result is that he buys more than the shoes he set out after."

Forrest Adair has a "punch" when he talks.

"I am selling a home below the Fort to a family which consists of father, mother and seven girls. The father is a wagon-maker. The seven girls are employed in seven different factories in Atlanta. Wouldn't you rather buy the things these girls help make than some product of a New England sweat shop?

"Yet I talked to a bank director to-day who did not know that car wheels are made in Atlanta, and who thought that the famed Atlanta shoes really were made in Boston and sent here to be sold under the local label.

Interests Here Diverse.

"When the bottom falls out of the iron market, Birmingham and Pittsburg hang crape on the doors, and send flowers to each other. Do we care? We do not. Two or three of our plants suffer, but the hundreds of others go on, and business in the aggregate shows little contraction.

"As a man who earns his very bread from the growth of Atlanta, and who owes more of that bread to you manufacturers than to any other class, I want to make it as emphatic as I can that you must build up Atlanta's factories if you wish to see her continue to grow."

WORDS WHICH STIRRED ENTHUSIASM FOR SHOW

"All the machinery, all the enthusiasm, and all the push of the Chamber of Commerce will be behind the launching of the permanent exhibit."—Wilmer L. Moore, President of the Chamber of Commerce.

"I firmly believe a permanent exhibit will bring to Atlanta more merchants and more business than all the other things we have done put together."—Brooks Morgan, Chairman of the Exhibit Committee.

"Five years ago, you could sell solid carloads of one line to Macon and Augusta. You can not do it now. This plan will enable you to make up mixed carloads. Other cities are doing it. Atlanta must, not only to get more, but even to hold what she has."—Bolling H. Jones.

"The man who makes good products and doesn't advertise is like the man who winks at a girl in the dark. He knows it, but she doesn't, and it doesn't get him anywhere."—C. S. Dobbs.

"Agitation about the smoke nuisance makes me tired. I wish to goodness some one would turn 500 more smokestacks loose on us. I'll warrant there's not a man in town who could write a list of seventy-five of the hundreds of articles made in Atlanta."—Forrest Adir.

Atlanta's Future Absolutely Dependent on Building Up Factories, Experts Declare.

Thousand Lined Up To Get Into Store

Furniture House Devises Attractive Scheme to Induce Public to Notice Low Prices.

Even in busy Atlanta, it is seldom enough that a thousand people are lined up waiting to get into a store when the doors are thrown open. This was the record established by Sterchi Bros. & Barnes, Mitchell Street, near Whitehall, Thursday morning.

The attraction was an unusual sale of furniture, coupled with a prize offer. Tags were widely distributed among the friends of the store. Each of these tags was numbered, and 100 of the numbers corresponded with the numbers on tags borne by articles in the store. When any visitor matched his tag with any tag in the store, he was privileged to claim the article, without being obligated to purchase anything.

The plan drew a big crowd, and, better, it attracted attention to some very low prices, and resulted in good sales.

MORE BUYERS THAN PEACHES.

NEW YORK, July 5.—Buyers returning here from Georgia say that it is generally estimated the peach crop of Georgia will run about 1,500 cars. According to the railroad men, they do not expect to move over 75 cars a day out of the State at the flush of the season. There are a great many buyers at Fort Valley. Fully 95 per cent of the peaches are being sold on track—in fact, there are more buyers than there are peaches.

FOREIGN DEALER SEES MISTAKES OF AMERICANS

Slow Delivery and Demand for Money in Advance Hinder U. S. Trade Abroad.

Slowness in delivery of goods ordered by European importers and the rule of full prepayment are doing a great deal of damage to the business interests of American exporters, Consul W. J. Pike, Reichenberg, Austria, took the matter up by mail with a prominent importer in that city not long ago, and received a reply setting forth the reasons why American business is not greater in Northern Bohemia. According to Mr. Pike, this importer more than three years ago established an important commercial agency in Reichenberg. The organization covers all of Northern Bohemia. It has 270 branch offices, all of which are engaged chiefly in the exploitation of foreign-made merchandise.

At the time Mr. Pike took up the matter of increasing American business in that part of the world, the importer was getting his merchandise principally from Germany, France and England. Following a notice published on the foreign trade opportunities page of The Daily Consular and Trade Report, however, the organization has entered into extensive business relations with firms in the United States. Now most of its purchases are confined to merchandise produced in this country.

Capital Tied Up.

The letter received by the Consul from the importer reads:

"Respectfully referring to your esteemed favor of the 8th instant, I would be obliged to inform the honorable consulate of methods to put an end in the future to the mistakes which are made in exporting by American firms.

"A great evil that exists for the importer is that the total payment for the merchandise ordered must be sent in advance. If the merchandise were delivered promptly to enable quick sales, the loss of working capital and of the investment would not be so considerable, but notwithstanding the total payment is sent in advance, the merchandise is only delivered in two or three months, and then only upon urging by cable, which all entails considerable costs.

"To illustrate: Early in February, I sent through my bank payment for 25 vacuum cleaners to Blank & Co., New York, and after much urgency I received to-day the reply that probably the goods will be shipped to-morrow. In the meantime not only can I do no business, but I have also invested the money; in other words, have the money lying unemployed. In view of the large force of salesmen dependent upon goods for delivery, such business conditions require too large a working capital with large expenses and costs.

"This invariably slow delivery is not the exception, but true as to all firms—I could give you the names of a large number of firms, the sale of whose products I was forced to discontinue and to break off every business relation because of failure to promptly deliver the goods.

Should Study Tariffs.

"American manufacturers could greatly facilitate matters and increase trade by giving attention to three important particulars, viz., prompt delivery, packing, and the duty—for instance, where articles are composed of different materials, as iron, nickel, enamel, leather or wood. In many instances it is possible to ship these parts separately, to be assembled in the country for sale, whereby there is an enormous saving in the amount of duty and the goods lowered in cost, which makes them more salable because of this saving.

"Another subject that should commend itself to the careful study of American manufacturers is shipping goods by the cheapest route. This is not always done, and the consequence in many cases is increased cost.

"In addition to the foregoing matters that work a great hindrance to the extension of American trade is the question of terms of credit, in which the, American manufacturer demands cash before shipment, a requirement not insisted on by any other country.

"These are some of the general experiences and complaints which I am forced to make, and I should be greatly obliged to the honorable consulate if by some action or report these conditions could be remedied, or at least relieved."

Englishman's Criticism of American Stores Answered

Selfridge's Manager Unjustified in Saying Customers Wait Too Long for Parcels.

A. E. Cowper, one of the important men in the organization of Selfridge & Co., which in turn has, perhaps, the most important department store in London, recently made a visit to the United States. He spent most of his time, of course, in looking over American department stores, and before he departed for England freed himself of some criticism.

"One thing which struck me was the time it takes to complete a purchase and get your goods wrapped and delivered," he said.

"At home we have no bundle wrappers; the clerks wrap the packages, and we find it saves time and mistakes. When a customer has made a purchase and the goods are shipped by carrier or messenger to a distant cash-and-bundle desk, every second she has to wait is magnified to a minute, whereas if the goods are wrapped by the clerk, the customer is getting the full attention of that salesperson, and if a minute or two should be lost, she is seeing the action all the time, and does not feel that she has been lost sight of. In Selfridge's we use cash registers, and we find them great savers of time."

Atlanta merchandise experts do not agree with the English student of store service.

Mr. Cowper, in the opinion of various Atlantans approached on the subject, magnifies the importance of the transactions where the purchases actually are taken away by the buyer.

They remark that while it may be the custom in London for shoppers to carry home their purchases, nine out of ten customers in Atlanta demand delivery by wagon.

At any rate, they say, there is very little delay, and it is much better to free the salespeople from the duty of wrapping packages.

Managers of Atlanta department stores made tests at random to demonstrate that it takes on an average 30 seconds for the delivery of a package and the making of change.

Lucian York, manager of Rich's, says:

"We have a system which we believe is the best yet devised from the viewpoint of the customer, and Selfridge's certainly have nothing to compare with it. We use an 'identification coin.'

Departs at Once.

"Most of our charge customers have their parcels delivered. After the transaction is made the customer merely gives her name and address to the salesperson, shows her identification coin, and departs at once. Even when the customer takes the parcel with her, the wrapper in the stand has it ready in a jiffy. Time records to gauge our wrappers show that on an average they use less than a minute.

"The delivery of packages, after all, is simply a minor matter. What our American people want broadly is service—the right merchandise at the right time at the right price. In English stores customers still are importuned to buy; in fact, in many of the stores it is almost impossible to leave without buying. Fancy such a condition here!

"Again, here we make every effort to get what the customer wants. We anticipate the styles, bring on new models and patterns.

"When the customer purchases these goods she buys them at our risk—if they are not pleasing to her when she gets them home she is at liberty to return them. Here the customer is always right—in England, from what I understand, she is more at the mercy of the storekeeper."

Rome, Ga., Exhibitors Sign Up for Space

Rome, Ga., is crowing over the fact that it made definite plans for a permanent exhibit before Atlanta.

Twelve manufacturers already have signed contracts for space, and nine more are about to do so. It is expected that 4,000 feet of floor space will be used.

Arrangements have been made for a building, and the exhibit will be ready within two months, Louis Spencer, managing director, says.

Included among the exhibitors are a stove works, a machine factory, a foundry, a furniture factory, a trunk factory and a spring bed factory. Some of these lines are duplicated.

Silk Dyers Strike; Feathers Face Bar; Ans.–Use Flowers

Milliners Think That for Once They Can Predict Styles for Fall Well In Advance.

Flowers will be popular on women's hats for fall and winter wear.

In July this is a dangerous prediction. Circumstances, however, make it fairly safe prophecy, in the opinion of C. B. Palmer, of M. Kutz Co., wholesale milliners.

Dame Fashion might take a notion to dictate ribbons. But the silk dyers' strikes in Paterson, N. J., have caused an increase of 20 per cent in the cost of ribbons, and even at these advanced prices, deliveries can not be made. At best, goods can not be promised before August 15 or September 1, and even if the mills reopen, they are likely to be overwhelmed with the orders which have been accumulating.

Feathers, again, might have been Fashion's favorites. But right now there is trouble in Congress over the importation of feathers. The milliners and the Audubon Society are in the throes of a bitter struggle which will decide whether feathers will be admitted at all under the new tariff.

Remain only fur and flowers. For three seasons, velvet and silk flowers have been increasing in popularity on fall and winter hats, and, with the scarcity of other materials, are likely to take the ascendency this fall.

Small hats will rule—that is, smaller than those which have been worn for the past few seasons. Crowns will be round, with turned-up brims, according to Mr. Palmer. What will be the favorite colors, besides the staple blues, browns and black, no one will know until September 1.

The Kutz Co. salesmen started out last Monday to cover the Southern States for fall business.

ARTIFICIAL FUR USED.

Artificial fur will be used to considerable extent this fall and winter both for the trimming of hats and street gowns. The lower cost of these goods and their close approach to the genuine in appearance are big factors in their favor.

The coming of warmer weather has stimulated greatly the movement of wash suits in retail circles. The jackets of some of the better numbers range in length from 32 to 34 inches in the back.

TAFFETA RIBBONS SCARCE.

A scarcity of taffeta ribbons in stock colorings is reported. Pinks, blues and whites are especially hard to get.

BROWN WILL CONTINUE AS A 'LIVE WIRE' IN POLITICS

Former Governor, as Private Citizen, Intends to Wage Campaign to Decide Supreme Authority in Georgia, and Will Push Issue.

Fact That He Proposes Keeping in Touch With State's Affairs Leads to Report That He Will Oppose Hoke Smith for Senate.

That Joseph M. Brown intends keeping very much in touch with the trend of events in Georgia, that he proposes to remain a very "live wire" in politics, and that he proposes to thrash to a final adjustment his view on law enforcement and the labor unions, at least in so far as he may, is abundantly evidenced in a remarkable interview he furnished to The Sunday American yesterday.

It is very well known that many of Governor Brown's friends and partisans are urging him to enter the race for the United States Senate against Senator Hoke Smith, whose term of office expires within less than two years, and who will have to enter a campaign for re-election within the next twelve months.

To a Sunday American reporter Saturday the former Governor gave the following interview:

By JOSEPH M. BROWN.

I am going to stay at home for a few days and then I shall run up to my farm in Cherokee County, where I will be for the next week or two.

The duties of the executive office for more than a year past have forced me to neglect almost entirely my personal affairs; hence I must give primary attention to them for some time to come.

Later I expect to make an examination of the status which involves the State's relationship to the labor union. If there is a divided sovereignty of this relationship all the people are entitled to know it so that they can shape their course accordingly and choose to which they will yield allegiance.

If there is but one sovereignty that fact should be made so plain that no man and no organization of men should be betrayed into acts of attempted usurpation of that sovereignty.

Unions Have Made Issue.

In my retiring message to the General Assembly I stated that the labor union had made the issue as to whether or not its union label carried more authority in Georgia than does Georgia's great seal of State.

A mere statement of the official records of these two sources of authority necessarily confirms my declaration, viz: Some time before the year 1840 the State granted a charter to the Georgia Railroad and Banking Company, wherein she placed upon that company and upon future owners of that railroad the duties of a common carrier. She imposed upon the owners of that charter the obligation to operate trains for the conduct of the commerce of the public and of its power to travel. As the proof of her sovereign authority to grant that charter and to force obedience to its conditions she placed upon it her great seal of State.

In 1907 she specifically and positively made it the duty of the Railroad Commission to "order and compel" the operation of such train service as the needs of the public required.

In 1909 and again in 1912 the labor union ordered the trainmen on the Georgia Railroad to ignore the State's mandate and instead to prevent the running of the trains, which it knew would result in great inconvenience and loss to the public. On that order it placed its union label.

This made the issue between the union label and Georgia's great seal of State square and plain. No sophistry can obscure it; no vituperative personal abuse can wipe it out.

Exactly the same issue was made in the strike by the street car employees in Augusta.

I note that it has been said that I should not at this late day have stirred up this matter, thus renewing dissension among the people; but I call your attention to the fact that the present session of the General Assembly is the first that has been held since the occurrence of the strikes on the Augusta street car line and the Georgia Railroad. Hence, this was the first opportunity I had for officially notifying the General Assembly of these two glaring acts of disregard of the State's authority and of the necessity of enacting such laws as would protect the public against their recurrence.

Since the publication of extracts of the message I have received a multitude of letters from people in Georgia and about a dozen other States wherein my

Plunges Off Fourth Story; Spike Hooks In His Pants; Saved

Thrown by Falling Plank, Man Hangs Head Downward Until His Rescuers Arrive.

LOS ANGELES, July 5.—W. E. Duffessy, a workman employed in the construction of the new Braley Building at Pasadena, owes his life to the strength of his overalls, which prevented him from being hurled from the fourth story of the building.

Duffessy was struck on the head by a plank dropped by a workman on the floor above him. He was thrown down the improvised elevator shaft headfirst, but after falling to the third floor his overalls caught on a protruding spike and held him steadfast.

He remained in this position with his head down until several workmen who witnessed the accident hurriedly made their way, with the aid of a rope, to where he was hanging and hauled him to a place of safety.

Champ Clark Moves As Rent Goes Up $50

Speaker's Action Starts Rebellion of Washington Tenants of High-Priced Apartments for Better Rates.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—They raised the rent $50 a month on Speaker Champ Clark for his spacious apartments on the Avenue of the Presidents, in the heart of official Washington some time ago.

To-day the Speaker moved to a new apartment in Congress Hall Hotel. This hotel is very near the Capitol, and the Speaker will save not only in the matter of rent, but car fare as well.

The Speaker pulled off his coat today, took a holiday from his official duties, and personally superintended the removal of his Lares and Penates. Washingtonians, in danger of having their rent raised, have taken heart from his distinguished example and a rebellion of tenants is in sight.

Specialize, Forgan's Advice to Students

Chicago Banker Also Says "Better be Poor in Purse Than Poor in Soul."

DE KALB, ILL., July 5.—David R. Forgan, president of the National City Bank of Chicago, delivered the address at the commencement exercises of the Northern Illinois State Normal School.

"There are three things which I would have each student know," he said. "First, how to write a legible hand; second, how to add, subtract and multiply; third, how to compose properly an application for a position.

"This is an age of specialization, and there should be more schools for vocational and industrial training. Build character. Better be poor in purse than poor in soul."

The school graduated 125.

'Elevator Boy' Now A Blushing Bride

Police Lieutenant Falls in Love With Girl He Arrests for Impersonating a Man.

LOS ANGELES, July 5.—A simple little ceremony yesterday afternoon in the chapel of the Paulist Fathers in California Street united in marriage Police Lieutenant Joseph F. Stuger and Miss Aileen Shaw.

It marked the culmination of a romance which started a month ago, when Miss Shaw cast aside her woman's garments, dressed like a man, assumed the name of Herbert Emery and got a job as elevator boy in the Hotel Alma.

Up to this time the romance was simply adventure. But Tuesday night Stuger stepped in, had her arrested inadvertently and then fell in love with her.

City Will Operate 3-Cent Dance Halls

Cost Will Be Little to Couples Who Whirl to Syncopated Music in Cincinnati.

CINCINNATI, July 5.—After hearing the report of Park Superintendent Hodgkinson on the park dance halls of Cleveland, the members of the Park Board decided to give the idea a trial as soon as the bonds, recently issued, could be sold. Hodgkinson said the city of Cleveland cleared a profit of $2,500 on two park dance halls last year, charging 3 cents a couple for admission.

Numerous cases of vandalism at playgrounds were reported by the Superintendent, and the board declared that the grounds would have to be closed unless proper protection is given the equipment.

PASTOR MAKES MATCH-MAKING SPECIAL WORK

Keeps House for Aged on Fees He Collects for Performing Marriage Ceremonies.

SCOPE IS NATION-WIDE

East Needs Husbands, While West Wants Wives, Is Experience of Minister.

OMAHA, July 5.—"Here's a man worth $200,000 and he wants a wife," says the Rev. Charles W. Savidge, of Omaha. "He's a big cattle man, and last fall when he sent his range cattle to market he cleaned up $19,000. He is 50 years old, never has been married and is a man of good character. I won't make his name and address public, but when I find a woman who I think will suit him I'll send her name to him. He tells me he has never had an opportunity of becoming acquainted with the right sort, so he has asked me to find him a wife."

Mr. Savidge's fame as a matchmaker has spread far, and so many people write him for mates that he has been compelled to hire a special stenographer to take care of his correspondence. Rarely does a day pass that he has not united from two to five couples. All his marriage fees go to support a home for aged men and women which he established and maintains in this manner. At present there are about 35 inmates in his "House of Hope." None is ever asked to pay board.

Dane Seeks Matrimony.

"Here's another fellow wants a wife," he continued. "This man is 24 years old, a Dane by birth, owns a big farm and is worth about $25,000. He says he doesn't know which way to turn for a wife, so he has asked me to find one for him.

"A third one, an American, 33 years old, a rancher in Western Nebraska, and worth $35,000, is in the same predicament. He's a bachelor—but not an old one. Says he wants a wife who likes ranch life, and that she will not be asked to take part in the roundup."

Recently Mr. Savidge was called to the Rosebud country in South Dakota to lecture a bunch of ranchmen and homesteaders on the art of getting married. The ranchers paid the expenses of his trip. He took for his subject, "Have You Found Your Running Mate?" After his talk a big delegation of ranchers followed him to the hotel for a more intimate talk. They wanted to keep him right there until they were all supplied with wives. He placed them in correspondence with a number of women who had asked Mr. Savidge to get husbands for them.

Men in Biggest Demand.

"That South Dakota bunch certainly did want wives," says Mr. Savidge. "They almost wanted to hold me as a hostage, but I furnished them the names and addresses of a couple of dozen women who have written me to get husbands for them. When they finish with their courting and get ready for the ceremony I'm going back to tie them together.

"Far more women are seeking husbands than there are men seeking wives," says Mr. Savidge.

"Every day brings me letters from women—from here, there and yonder. Most of the requests for husbands come from back East, while most men who want wives live in Western States.

"Here is a request from a man who evidently needs someone to look out for him. He's a working man and has not much money, but there is $3,500 in the hands of a trustee, who has instructions to build a house with the money and deed it to the man's wife when he gets one. The money was left by his father. He lives in a small Nebraska town.

"Here's a doctor in a Missouri River city. He has a fine home and $6,000 in cash in the bank. He owns a farm of 225 acres about 70 miles from New York City and he goes down there every summer for a few weeks. He is 52 years old.

"Then here is a German, 50 years old, worth $30,000, with two Nebraska farms and several houses in a Nebraska town.

"An Omaha widow, aged 35, dark hair and eyes, with a splendid home, well furnished and complete, desires a husband, and none of the men of her acquaintance seems to suit her. So she has asked me to find her one.

"A St. Louis school teacher, with her own home, wants a husband. Says she is tired of waiting for some St. Louis man to propose. She is 32 years old and weighs about 120 pounds. Likewise a Colorado school teacher, 40 years old, good housekeeper, says she wants an Eastern husband.

"Here's a nice little telephone operator who has grown tired of answering 'hello' calls. She is slender and dark and 21 years old. I'll bet I can find her a husband in a week."

Mr. Savidge has performed the wedding ceremony for more than 6,000 applicants.

DUKE MILLIONS USED TO BUILD HIS HOME STATE

Tobacco King Is Developing Cheap Power All Over Carolinas to Help Cotton Mills.

AIDS YOUNG BUSINESS MEN

Devotes Fund Toward Financing Any Embryonic Operator Who Can Show Knowledge.

CHARLOTTE, July 5.—James B. Duke, tobacco king, is playing the role of godfather to North Carolina.

To make his native State prosperous he has spent $50,000,000 on power plants and a similar amount has gone to aid young business men establish cotton mills. Other States may scoff at Duke, but he is a prophet who is honored in his own country.

A year or two ago Mr. Duke retired as president of the American Tobacco Company. He maintained control of the British-American Tobacco Company, however, and to-day he dominates the tobacco industries of the Old World; but just prior to laying down the reins of the American company Mr. Duke conceived the idea of placing North Carolina in the forefront of the cotton manufacturing States of the Union.

While the cotton acreage of his native State was not nearly so great as that of other sister States, yet he determined that the Southern planter should find a market for his product without being forced to accept prices which are materially lessened by excessive freight rates demanded to land it in the New England mills.

Rivals of New England.

North and South Carolina were both likely places, in his opinion, for a chain of cotton mills as well equipped as those of New England. It is only a short haul from there to Norfolk and Newport News, where trans-Atlantic steamships touch going and coming, thus easily solving the problem of export facilities.

Then, too, should the mills grow in volume their owners could far outstrip their New England competitors in bidding for the raw product from neighboring States for the same reason that, with a lower freight rate to reckon with, they could pay the planter and broker better prices.

Knowing every nook and corner of his native State by heart, Mr. Duke awoke to the realization that millions upon millions of horsepower in her many waterways was going to waste. Once harness these streams and erect power plants at central points and it would be an easy matter to generate and diffuse sufficient power to turn the spindles of every cotton mill in the two States, as well as to light every municipality, the homes and business places of those dwelling within their confines, and at the same time to supply the motive power for every street railway line in the two States.

The result was cheap power and light for every county in North Carolina.

The demand for the product from the cotton plants soon became so compelling that within a few years the horsepower was doubled and then some.

Millions for Young.

Making Charlotte his central headquarters when not at the farm of his birth, near Durham, he let it be known that he was ready, willing and eager to help any and all deserving, energetic and capable persons who desired to join hands with him in making the Old North State one of the foremost cotton manufacturing centers of the Union.

The formal announcement was made that a fund of $50,000,000 was available for the establishment of cotton mills at likely and well-selected points. The money would be forthcoming at an instant's notice, provided the person could convince those in charge of it that he had a thorough knowledge of the business, was energetic, faithful and industrious and possessed sufficient money of his own to make it worth his while to strive for the success of the enterprise and stick to business.

Scores of young men who grew up in the cotton mill business, but whose chances of owning a mill of their own were remote in the extreme, were quick to benefit by the offer of their native State's wealthiest son.

'Most Beautiful Child' Coming Miss Blitz Will Visit Atlanta To Pose Before Famous Artists

Prize picture of prize child beauty, Theresa Marie Blitz. This picture has been exhibited in nineteen conventions of photographers and awarded fifteen first prizes.

Little Topeka Girl Will Visit Principal Cities of Country and Will Be Given Trip to Paris.

TOPEKA, KANS., July 5.—Atlanta will see the nation's most beautiful child, so proclaimed by photographers of the United States at practically all their exhibits, when 6-year-old Theresa Marie Blitz reaches the Georgia capital on her tour of the United States, which will later extend to Paris. She leaves her Topeka home to-day and will return in time to celebrate her seventh birthday.

Little Miss Blitz was declared to possess the most perfect features and figure of any child in the country by the Boston Art League. She won the distinction in a contest with 2,000 others from all States of the nation.

The elements which decided the art league in her case were: "Soft, wavy, dark-brown hair; big, wistful, wishful blue eyes, with the memory of dreams lurking in them; delicately molded lips and white transparent skin, with a touch of pink showing through."

She is not yet seven. Her weight is 55 pounds. Standing in her slippers she is 51 inches in height. A tape line drawn around her arm at the armpit over one thickness of light summer wear registers 9 inches. Wrist, 5 1-2 inches; thigh, 16 inches; calf, 10 inches; ankle, 7 inches.

After her tour of the big cities of this country and a visit to Paris she will return in time to celebrate her seventh birthday, November 18. Theresa has great love for flowers and music and bird life. She knows many flowers by name.

Little Theresa's mother died when the child was eight months old. She was a beautiful woman and possessed all the charms and graces so fully reflected in the figures and features of the daughter.

Theresa will spend two weeks each in Kansas City, St. Louis, Chicago, Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Atlanta and Norfolk. The trip to Paris will be made in five weeks. In New York and Philadelphia oil paintings will be made of her.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, July 5.—Queen Mary has ordered the Cinema Company to burn the films of pictures it made recently by special permission of the King and Queen, showing Princess Mary and the two children of Sir Derek and Lady Keppel at tea in Buckingham Palace grounds.

Her reason is that the Princess Mary appeared in the pictures in a low-cut frock.

The Queen will pay the cost of the films, $185, but the Cinema Company is out at least $25,000.

Ban on Gum; Pretty Chicago Co-Eds Pout

"Blind Pigs" Started by Girls to Prove Their Independence of Rules.

CHICAGO, July 5.—Co-eds at the University of Chicago were inclined to-day to pout at a new order which, in effect, places the ban on chewing gum. They don't want the gum so much, but many of them regard the order as an undue infringement of personal rights.

There was a rumor that several "blind pigs" where the chicle product may be obtained were already in operation in co-ed dormitories.

LA CROSSE, WIS., July 5.—When Ori J. Sorenson, known during his first term as the "Good Fellow Mayor," was re-elected after a term held by the opposition, the more liberal minded citizens agreed that good times were coming.

Since his election he has been adjusting the screws on a "lid" the like of which La Crosse never saw before. The stopping of baseball pools is his latest.

BATTLE OF LOVE ON FIELD OF GETTYSBURG IS CLOSED; EACH SIDE HAILED AS VICTOR

Martial Spirit of Old Soldiers of Both Blue and Gray Exceeded Only by Sincere Warmth of Affection for Their Former Foes.

VETERANS BEAR HEAT WITH THEIR WARTIME FORTITUDE

General Sickles, of Union Army, and General Young, of the Confederacy, Greeted by Warriors They Led and Fought at Scene of the Reunion.

GETTYSBURG, PA., July 5.—The tumult and the shouting died for the second time on Gettysburg, and the battlefield again has figured in world history. For no less memorable than the hostile conflict of the armies of Lee and Meade in '63 was the friendly meeting between the meager remnants of the same armies which, lasting four days, is at an end to-day.

Voices have been raised in the name of peace and reconciliation during all the half century since Appomatox, but they have always remained merely unrealized appeals—until this last week, the semi-centennial of the greatest battle of the greatest war ever fought between brothers.

And now peace reigns, love reigns at last over the broad, rolling stretches of Gettysburg, where for fifty years has hovered a recollection of crashing terror of sectional hatred, of thirst for blood.

Affection of Veterans Sincere.

The reunion of the veterans of the Union and of the Confederacy has been the sincerest and most effective step ever taken for the reconciliation of the North and the South—this is so by common consent of the veterans themselves, of younger representatives of the two sections, and of expressions which have come from over the nation.

Yesterday it was proved so, when a pathetic but brave spectacle was staged. The white-haired men of the Union army were deployed, as nearly as could be calculated, in the positions they occupied the great third day of the battle at Bloody Angle. They stood there, proud in the forgetfulness of their years, oblivious of the terrific heat, oblivious of everything around them, with eyes seeing only the brave, strong day fifty years before, when they waited on the same spot for the enemy.

The feeble gray army, also, was placed in battle order. They, too, were exultant, eager, powerless to stifle the rebel yell that bubbled out of their souls.

The command was given to charge. The rebel yell came sharp and clear. The gray army started toward the blue line. Its charge did not have the force and nerve that impelled it fifty years ago. Instead, many of the veterans stumbled in their course, some of them fell. The advancing line became ragged, where the younger veterans, eager, outdistanced more feeble comrades. But the spirit of '63 was there.

Clasp Hands at Bloody Angle.

Years rolled back, and the echoes of cannonade, the sight of the all-pervading smoke film, the choking scent of that smoke, the thrill of battle and of youth—all were revived.

The gray army advanced to the Bloody Angle. The blue army braced itself for the shock, as they well knew how to do. The two lines came together.

As they met, the rebel yell became a laugh, the tense faces of the blue veterans melted. Blue and gray clasped hands and were friends. The old men were not ashamed of their frank arms that went out and around the shoulders of their enemies of fifty years ago—comrades now—nor of the tears. Nor were any of the thousands of spectators ashamed of the demonstration in which they joined impulsively.

All that was spectacular. Yet it was not exceptional in revealing the spirit that prompted the entire reunion. Since last Tuesday everywhere has been exhibited friendliness and reconciliation. More than 50,000 veterans were present, sleeping together, tenting together on the old camp ground, telling endless stories, pointing out spots here and there where they saw men die—but always smiling, always shaking hands, always jolly.

G. A. R. Outnumbers U. C. V.

Of those who attended the reunion of the two armies, little more than one-fourth were soldiers of the Confederacy. The others were G. A. R. men, who, with less distance to travel, naturally were present in greater numbers.

The trip was trying, with the heat and with little inevitable discomforts that the old men would not have noticed 50 years ago, but which now were fraught with danger. There was tragedy in the sight of the feeble veterans fighting vainly against heat and exhaustion. There was real tragedy when a dozen or more succumbed and died on the same field where they escaped shot and shell.

The first two days of the reunion were almost unbearable with their heat, and the suffering was great. But a cooling storm blew up the third day, rendering pleasant enough the reunion weather.

Conversation Never Lags.

Within the tents there was always conversation. Not even in the dead of the night did it cease. The talk was of charges and of retreats, of maneuvers that have become more and more heroic now that the years have passed—but mostly, as is the way of veterans the world over, of personal prowess and adventure.

Camp fires were lighted in rows that stretched for miles and miles along the streets between the tents. Around them men sat, talking. Under the tents men lay on the cots, talking. There was little sleep, especially the first two nights, but voices everywhere through the night. Voices that were steady and numerous, with a sort of staccato effect that came with the intermittent puffing of thousand of corncob pipes.

Every veteran was his own best listener. Naturally, with everybody talking.

There was so much to tell, so many deeds of valor, so many heroes, so many beloved leaders who now are demigods.

Some of the leaders were present. Most spectacular and attractive figure, perhaps, was General Daniel E. Sickles, of New York, the sole surviving corps commander of the Union army who participated in the battle of Gettysburg.

Every day of the four saw a stream of visitors to his quarters, men who cried like babies as they shook all hands, and who had a hundred stories to tell him. The old general cried himself, and at one time was ordered kept from the visitors. More than 3,000 men, it is estimated, came to see him and to shake his hand on the first day of the reunion, and he held a veritable court as he sat in an armchair on the porch of the Rodgers home, a battlefield landmark.

Young Leaders Scorn Beds.

Others of the leaders, younger and more vigorous than th aged Federal, scorned the proffered beds and snug chambers that had been reserved for them, choosing instead the tents and cots of their comrades. One of these men was General A. J. West, of Georgia, who later was presented with a loving cup by the men of his State.

General Bennett H. Young, of Louisville, commander-in-chief of the United Confederate Veterans, was another hero. When he addressed the reunion crowd the first day, his own gray veterans greeted him with a lusty rebel yell that was rivaled in vigor by the sincere cheer which came from the Union veterans.

Confederate generals present were Robertson, Texas; West, Georgia; Shaffer, Louisiana; A. D. Williams, Florida; Law, Florida, and Carr, North Carolina.

Mrs. H. D. Longstreet, of Gainesville, Ga., widow of the great Confederate leader, was here and was always the center of a reverent crowd. Many men who fought under her husband followed her day after day, telling of incidents that occurred during the war.

The first night at the battlefield she could find no quarters. Everything was reserved, and she was forced to sleep on the floor of a farmhouse. The next morning, however, she found that a tent had been reserved for her by General Sickles.

She went to the pump of a farmhouse to get a drink of water, and there met an old soldier. She asked him under whom he fought, and he, ignorant of her identity, replied, "Longstreet."

"And are you glad or sorry that the war ended as it did?" she asked him.

"I am glad," he said, emphatically, "so far as the war itself is concerned, but not for the reconstruction days. You may be a Northern woman, and if you are, you can't imagine what we went through—not in the war, when the soldiers fought us, but in the days afterward, when the politicians governed us. But I'm glad the war ended in a united nation."

Wore Badge of Union.

Mrs. Longstreet saw everywhere examples of the reconciliation that the Gettysburg meeting has brought about. She met a soldier wearing a gray suit but decked with a badge marked Fifth Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry. She asked him why he, a Union man, should wear a gray suit.

"Me?" he said, surprised. "I am not a Yankee. I fought under Longstreet, and I'm from Mississippi."

"Why do you wear that badge, then?" she asked.

"Why," he said, "a Yank came along to-day from the Fifth Pennsylvania and asked me of I'd trade badges with him, after we'd had a talk and found out where we were at Gettysburg. So we traded. He's wearing my badge now—Fifteenth Mississippi. Says he'll keep it as long as he lives."

Reconciliation is sincere. There was even talk during the four days of an amalgamation of the United Confederate Veterans and the Grand Army of the Republic under the name, "The United Veterans of the United States."

Old Nurses Open Hospital.

A band of devoted women were the survivors of the corps of nurses who served during the battle. Mrs. Salome Stewart, leader of the band, was here to open the old hospital. Others of her staff present were Mrs. Charles F. Dye and Miss Cornelia Hancock of Philadelphia; Miss Margaret Hamilton, Wakefield, Conn.; Mrs. Mary Stevens, Peabody, Conn.; Mrs. Annie Irving, Newburg; Mrs. Helen Cole, Sheboygan, Wis. Women of the families of General Meade, General Pickett and General Hill were present, too.

There were reunions between survivors of Buford's division of Meade's army, and Wheeler's division of Lee's, and, at the Bloody Angle, between Meredith's Iron Brigade and Pettigrew's men. It was these latter, according to the history of the fight, who saw the fiercest struggle.

Not in all the story of the reunion is there the breath of an unpleasantness among the veterans. A serious fight occurred the second day of the meeting, when seven men were stabbed. The fight, however, was precipitated by several young men who, abusing Abraham Lincoln, aroused the anger of a Union veteran. None of the seven injured was a veteran.

But among the veterans of the two armies there was only friendship and serenity. Blue and Gray swapped coffee and tobacco, just as they had done during the war, swapped reminiscences, and, most of all, traded assurances of having forgiven and forgotten the bitterness and the struggle of half a century ago.

President Follows Lincoln.

Tuesday of the reunion was Veterans' Day, given over to a great meeting of all the old soldiers, with addresses by representatives of both sides. Wednesday was Military Day, when younger soldiers were on display. Thursday was Civic Day, when Governors of States, representatives of the national government, and other civil authorities made addresses. Friday was National Day, marked by the address of President Wilson.

Every night the veterans sang the old war songs through, and repeated on the chorus. The entire encampment of the Gray veterans in the valley below the ridge joined in, until a chorus resounded that was thundering even in the vast spaces of the battlefield.

The songs were more and more exultant as the evening wore on. Now and then the rebel yell punctuated the melody. The sound spread to the Blue army, and was there augmented by the voices of the Union veterans until the battlefield became each night a vast theater for the recrudescence of the most wonderful martial spirit of all ages.

Gen. Sickles Paints Vivid Picture of Noted Struggle

By GENERAL DANIEL E. SICKLES.

Sole Surviving Corps Commander Who Participated in the Battle of Gettysburg.

My heart beats faster to-night. The thronging hordes who motored, walked or came by trolley to my camp to-day have swept their hats off and hailed it as "Sickles' Day."

It was on this day a half century ago that God gave me strength to serve my country and my Maker better than I ever had been able to serve before.

It was upon this day in '63 that I lost my leg and did my little part by the mercy of God to preserve the Union.

July 2, 1863, broke hot and clear. Just as in the early hours to-day, a molten sun poured out of a sky that was but a trifle overclouded. I had retired shortly after midnight the previous evening and slept the quiet, dreamless sleep that is generally attributed to innocent babes.

Many men who came to-day to shake my hand told me they were too busy to do so 50 years ago—that their whole hearts and minds were wrapped up in the conflict to come.

I knew that a conflict of the utmost importance to our country was at hand. And something told me the fight would begin about 3 o'clock. So it proved.

Was Sent for by Meade.

A few minutes before that hour General Meade, in command, sent word to me that he desired to see me immediately. I replied that I could not come, as the enemy was about to attack. Meade did not believe me, and sent his aide-de-camp back with a more peremptory message.

Meade had never been in favor of giving battle at Gettysburg, and I knew that he would order me to leave my position and move to Pipe Creek, where he intended to battle. At this time I held the advance line extending from Devil's Den to the Peach Orchard. I had also forced out a further line on the Emmitsburg Road, which passes in front of the Rogers House here.

I had hardly given spurs to my horse in response to my superior's summons when the enemy's attack opened. I immediately sent word to Meade I could not obey his commands because I was actually being attacked.

In a few minutes hell had broken loose along my line. My 10,000 men were attacked with ferocity by two of Longstreet's divisions and Anderson's division of Hill's corps—20,000 men in all.

Let me call attention right here to the fact that if I had not taken the initiative our left would have been lost. Longstreet said I won the battle by my advance move. Sheridan said so, and Grant indorsed the former's opinion.

Sickles' Losses Were 4,200.

The fight was the most desperate, the most severe of my life. It was far more intense than Chancellorsville. My total losses were 4,200 men, while the enemy's was approximately 7,000 or 8,000. The cannonading was the heaviest I have ever heard.

The loss of my leg occurred between 6 and 7 o'clock in the evening. Owing to the small number of my men compared with that of the enemy I knew that it was only through force of personal leadership that I could hold them together, so I rode constantly upon my horse up and down my line of battle.

I have been criticised for this, but it was the only way I could prevent my men from being overpowered. And so I paid no attention when they cried: "Sickles to the rear. Sickles to the rear."

The loss of a limb or the loss of a life meant nothing to me then. Nor has it since. I had but one thought—to win the battle.

Wounded After Victory.

It was after the victory had been practically won that the piece of shrapnel that almost cost me my life came along. At first I did not know I was hit. My thoughts, as I said before, were solely on the battle and so I am unable to tell exactly at what point I was struck. It was somewhere between the peach orchard and the wheat field.

I made the discovery that I had been hit as I was riding back from immediate front to my headquarters' flag. I felt my foot was wet and damp. I looked down and found that my knee and leg were also wet and damp. I slipped my leg over the back of my horse and saw that I was bleeding a great deal. Then I knew my leg was badly fractured—it later turned out to have been fractured both above and below the knee.

Instantly I slipped from my horse's back and sent for a surgeon. I was still bleeding a great deal and I saw that I would bleed to death before the arrival of a surgeon unless something was done.

Blood's Flow Stayed.

So I ordered one of my staff to take a small strap from his blanket and buckle it about my leg. The strap was pulled into a tight tourniquet and the rapid flow of blood was stayed. The doctors said before they amputated the leg that not even one of my sturdy constitution could have stood the terrific loss of blood.

At the end of the second day's battle General Meade was still pessimistic. He still believed it would be better to retreat and fight at Pipe Creek. The council of war, however, would not hear of it. Slocum's ringing resolution: "Stay and fight," was unanimously adopted. Results proved its wisdom. I personally have always entertained doubts whether Lee would have followed us to Pipe Creek and offered battle.

Roy Baylor, and emphatically an American girl in spite of the fact that the past four years of her life have been spent in the study of music under the French, German and Italian masters. She is of Colonial stock on both her paternal and maternal side. She was born in Charlottesville, Va.

It might be said that Miss Baylor's musical career began when Mrs. Virginia Preston Means taught her as a delightful baby of 2 years to run the scale. Her father moved to Chattanooga from Virginia shortly afterward and her musical training was intrusted to Miss Ione Spears.

It was slightly more than seven years ago that Miss Baylor began the study of her chosen art, working in New York under the best masters. While here she sang before Madame Sembrich, and the latter was so delighted with her voice that she gave her a recommendation and ordered her to study under Jean de Reszke, in Paris.

The Southern girl followed her advise, and two years ago she completed the course prescribed by De Reszke and his chief assistant, Oscar Seagle, a native Chattanoogan.

Since completing this course Miss Baylor has appeared in practically all the European capitals and is even better known on the continent than in the United States. A brilliant career is predicted for her by all the European masters.

INNOCENT MAN PARDONED AFTER 2 YEARS IN PRISON

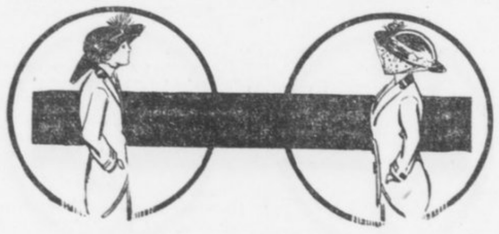
TOPEKA, July 5.—George Horton, sent to the State Penitentiary in 1910 charged with robbing a jewelry store in Medicine Lodge, Kans., has served nearly two years for a crime he did not commit, according to facts brought out to-day when Governor Hodge granted him a permanent parole. Horton's conviction resulted because a bloodhound placed upon the trail directed suspicion to him. Horton's friends were able to present evidence to the Governor that the stolen jewelry was hidden under a Medicine Lodge hotel after Horton was in prison.

THE EASIEST HABIT IS TO STOOP

—and the EASIEST WAY TO CURE IT is to buy and wear the peer of all health braces—the

"KOMFORT BRACE"

It immediately corrects stoops of long standing (or long stooping) and eradicates the habit altogether. Gives women the full rounded bust; reduces the stomach; makes you a "deep breather;" makes new corpuscles and gives you the "poise" and independence the Divine Plan intended.



Women are more prone to the "stoop-habit" than men. The "KOMFORT BRACE" antagonizes every inclination to "stoop" without making you conscious of the effort. It is a scientific Health Brace, as SIMPLE AS IT IS CERTAIN.

The Komfort Brace is on sale at leading dealers or will be sent postpaid on receipt of price, 1.50.

position is indorsed and statements are made that the labor union's exactions are becoming almost unbearable

Thus far the labor union and its few newspaper advocatee are alone in criticising the stand which the oath of office made it my duty to take. From these I note that I have "killed myself politically."

Never Considered Politics.

As to that act of so-styled political suicide, I will remark that it never occurred to me to consider any political bearing in the case. But, now that the point has been raised, I will observe that there was a matter of gratitude to the people of Georgia, which may even be styled political gratitude, which, I confess, swayed me. I refer to the fact that the voters of this State have twice conferred upon me the supreme honor in their gift.

Nothing which they control compares in responsibility, in dignity and eminence with the governorship!

Therefore, with my reward already bestowed, they had the right to expect and demand that I would safeguard their interests, oblivious to inducements or threats. My duty was plain.

Now, there is one point which I must ask you to bear especially in mind. I refer to the fact that there are thousands of members of the labor union in Georgia who are golden-hearted in their love of the State and of their fellow citizens.

But they have not appreciated the fact that in resorting to the process of a strike they have put themselves in direct rebellion to the laws of the State. They have not appreciated the fact that they are the victims of a system which holds itself above the law.

The strike status is not of Georgia. It is a foreign importation. Its aims are the securing of preference by force. Its attempts are the control and virtual ownership of the property which others own and upon which those others are required to pay taxes to the State.

Its concomitant is almost invariably violence to the persons of those who obey the laws in performing the duties which the strikers refuse to do, and frequently in damage to or destruction of property which they have temporarily abandoned for use, but over which they keep a hostile guard.

No Preference Is Shown.

Among these members of the labor union are a number of my friends of a lifetime. To oblige them I would go to any honorable lengths in my power, and I feel sure that I hold their reciprocal regard. Yet, probably the highest duty I owe them is to make clear to their minds the fact that they should not allow themselves to be deceived into doing deeds which in their essence are antagonistic to the very genius of our laws, and which, if tolerated, will breed anarchy, in which they will ultimately be among the worst sufferers.

It is needless to say that the State will not allow any class to have preference over others.

She does not intend that capital shall oppress labor, nor does she intend that labor shall rob or destroy capital, and she is very far from intending that the allies of union labor shall beat or kill or drive from the means of making an honoset livelihood those laborers who do the same kind of work the members of the labor union do, and especially when union labor has refused to do that work.

Now as to the claim that the courts can not reach all cases in which labor has rights against capital. There is really very little in this claim. But if it were ever so true, it is the duty of labor to go to the Legislature and have laws enacted which will cover such cases, instead of resorting to methods which embarrass unoffending thousands and are too often attended by destruction of property and by brutal violence, and even death to persons.

No man can claim that the Legislature would shut its ears and turn its hands against the proper demands of labor.

Court Is Proper Tribunal.

Therefore, what I have maintained as executive officer of the State, and what I plead for as a private citizen, is that all men go into court with their differences, if they can not settle them by mutual agreement or by arbitration. I insist that no man and no class be allowed any process which amounts to a special privilege. I insist that if any man be deprived of life, liberty or property, or that if any kind of personal punishment be inflicted upon him, it shall be by the hands of the law, and not by self-appointed or secretly instigated avengers.

Inasmuch, therefore, as the labor union, by obstructing and occasionally preventing the operation of the public utilities, has placed its mandate in opposition to the State's mandate, it may become necessary for the State to protect her citizens against its acts which bring damage to them.

She now requires insurance companies to make a money deposit with her before doing business in her borders. These companies represent capital. If she would make the same requirement of labor organizations, with the fund to be forfeited to the State in the event these organizations do deeds which damage the public, she would be but treating labor and capital alike—and who can say that this would be unfair?

Again, the public utilities are chartered to serve the public—all the people. Their tolls and general conduct are regulated by law. Therefore, they are, in great measure, public institutions.

Hence it would certainly conduce to the public interest if every member of the labor union, which assumes to control the working powers of the utilities, were required to take an oath before a State official to the effect that he would do no act which would obstruct that utility for which he works from performing the functions for which it was chartered. The penalty for violation of that oath should be the forfeiture of the right to service on any public utility in the State for the period of one year. The same penalty should be made to apply to any officer of the utility in question.

Merely Views of Citizen.

Of course, the foregoing views are merely those of a private citizen. Yet, I recognize that, having entered as a public official upon the presentation of the questions which the labor union has made an issue with the State, it is not improper for me in any capacity to make a searching examination into this question involving the rights of each citizen of Georgia. This I will undertake to do after I give proper attention to my private affairs, which have been placed in the background for several years.

When Mozart Bowed Before the Boy Beethoven

(Stirring Stories of Great Musicians. No. 7.)

AWKWARD, ill-clothed, the boy entered the room that was to him a shrine. He had come far to see the world's great master, to beg a word of encouragement.

He sat at the piano, awkward still, his smouldering eyes fixed with grim intensity upon the other's. He wished to see his triumph. But as he watched, the light went out from the other's face. It grew uninterested.

Grimly the boy played on, but he knew his failure. He had learned his piece too well, its witchery was gone. Then with a crash, he suddenly ceased.

"Give me a theme" he pleaded. The great musician did so, unwilling to hurt him who had failed.

Grimly still, almost sullenly, the youth commenced again. And then the magic from his fingers came, tracing their mastery in immortal sound. Slow the tones grew. Slowly they faded, like a soft regret, faded and were still.

Slowly the man rose, reverently he bowed.

"Boy, thou art great," he said, "the world will hear of thee."

It was the tribute of the setting to the dawning Sun of Genius—the Great Man to the Great Boy. It was Mozart's tribute to Beethoven.

* * * * *

Have you a boy who hummed little airs at play when he was tiny? That boy has musical talent, and you are responsible for developing it.

Have you given him a musical chance, with a musical education, on a good piano? Or have you already ruined his ear by giving him the "cheap tone" habit of a cheap piano?

The delicate brain cells connected with the ear take bad "sound habits" quickly, which can't be lost. That is why an English cockney misplaces his "h," or a street boy loves a squeaking harmonica. The will develop your boy's "musical liking" by developing his ear to true tones. The great musicians Liszt and Johann Strauss recommended it. His Holiness Pope Pius X endorsed it with a Papal medal.

Why don't you give your boy or girl a musical chance, by giving them a Hallet & Davis Piano?

PERRY VICTORY ON ERIE IN 1813 IS CELEBRATED

100 Years Peace With England and Centennial of Naval Engagement Commemorated.

SUNKEN FLAGSHIP RAISED

Struggle on Lake To Be Depicted by Sham Battle—Many Officials Attend.

ERIE, PA., July 5.—Beautifully decorated with bunting and flowers, the city of Erie presents a delightful spectacle in preparation for the centennial celebration of Perry's victory at the Battle of Lake Erie, which will be inaugurated to-morrow by a "Peace Sunday," closing on Saturday night. An elaborate program has been arranged for the entertainment of the thousands of visitors who will attend.

Throughout the summer several celebrations are scheduled at various points along the lake bearing a historical relationship to the battle. The list of celebrations will probably close with the dedication of the Perry memorial now nearing completion on South Bass Island, near the western end of Lake Erie. The celebration will also be in the nature of commemorations of a hundred years' peace between English-speaking nations.

To-morrow at 11 o'clock special services will be held in all the churches in the city. At 3:30 in the afternoon there will be a parade, terminating in a mass meeting before the reviewing stand at Perry Square. The children of the Sunday schools will be dressed and seated in such a manner, on a huge stand erected for the purpose, as to form a living American flag.

The old DuPont powder wagon, which was used for the transportation of ammunition in the War of 1812, is making an overland trip from the DuPont Works in Wilmington, Del., and is scheduled to arrive in Erie at 3 o'clock on Monday afternoon, when a reception in its honor will take place. The wagon is to be escorted by a detachment of the naval force of Pennsylvania from the United States steamship Wolverine, the oldest iron vessel in existence, built in Erie in 1844.

The National Guard State encampment has been arranged for the week of the celebration, the camp being pitched just outside of the city.

At 8 p. m. a leading citizen of the city, impersonating Commodore Perry, will sail into the harbor on Perry's flagship, the Niagara, which has been raised from the bottom of Misery Bay and restored. Following this there will be a band concert in Perry Square, after which the automobile parade will be held. The day will be known as Reception Day.

Tuesday will be Mothers' and Children's Day. The principal feature of the afternoon will be the parade of 12,000 school children. In the evening a band concert, followed by a pageantry parade, will take place. Wednesday has been designated as Governors' Day, and arrangements have been made to entertain Governor Tener, of Pennsylvania, and Governors from at least eight other States. In the afternoon there will be a military parade. There will also be hydroaeroplane flights on the bay on this and subsequent days.

Naval Day will be celebrated on Thursday, starting with a naval parade in the afternoon, to be reviewed by Secretary of the Navy Josephus Daniels. Following the parade, boat races will be held on the day, in which yachts, motorboats and naval training ships will compete.

Sham Battle on Water.

In the evening there will be a massed band concert in Perry Square, followed by a naval sham battle on the bay depicting the Battle of Lake Erie.

The principal features on Friday will be the fraternal parade in the afternoon. Saturday, the closing day of the celebration, has been designated as Industrial or Erie Day. In the evening, preceding a massed band concert in the square, the Niagara will sail out of the harbor, as she did 100 years ago. After leaving Erie she will visit other lake ports and participate in commemorative celebrations.

During the week of celebration the sword used by Perry at the battle will be on exhibition, as well as a brace of pistols and his flag, inscribed, "Don't Give Up the Ship." The sword has been lent by Perry Belmont, of New York, a grandson of Commodore M. C. Perry, the brother of Commodore Oliver Hazard Perry, the hero of the battle. Mrs. Alexander Perry, of Washington, D. C., lent the pistols. The flag is the property of the Government.

Suffragist Is to Wear Trousers 'Are More Modest Than Skirts' Hiker Will Discard Her Petticoats

General Jones' Mascot on March to Washington Has a Corsetless Silk Costume.

NEW YORK, July 5.—They're here at last. Mrs. John Boldt, who was called the mascot of General Jones' suffrage army on its 250-mile hike to the inauguration last February, has designed several pairs of trouser costumes, and will wear them hereafter.

At her apartments in the Hotel Marseilles yesterday, Mrs. Boldt criticised the women who are always talking dress reform, she said, but lacked the courage to wear "the sensible clothing they advocated."

"What we need to break the shackles and free these slaves to fashion is a leader," remarked Mrs. Boldt, as she sat in a big easy chair attired in her corsetless, trousette costume. It was made of sunburst-colored silk, caught in at the ankles with a band of gold and blue embroidery. The high waist, in Empire effect, was finished with a girdle of the same embroidery.

"The trouble with us is that we are many years behind the times in dress. The women of the East are far more progressive than us in dress. The majority of women in the world today wear trousers, the women of India, Turkey, China, Japan and even the peasant women of many European countries.

"Trousers of the style I wear, with draperies for evening of soft materials, giving an artistic Grecian line, are far more modest than the slit skirts you see on Broadway, with the limbs exposed to the knees, or transparent underclothing."

MRS. JOHN BOLDT, prominent suffragette and chief aide of General Rosalie Jones, wearing the type of trousers which she urges as a substitute for skirts.

Girls Writing Book Will Simplify Laws

Ohio Misses Preparing History of All State Statutes to Aid Bench and Bar.

CLEVELAND, July 5.—The embryo lawyer to-day, who will be the brilliant pleader of to-morrow, will owe a debt of gratitude to two Cleveland girls for a massive volume filled with simple interpretations of Ohio's laws.

The girls are Miss Ruth Winch, 23, daughter of Judge Louis H. Winch, and Miss Ruth Jenkins, 18.

The book they are writing is being prepared by two girls under the supervision of Judge Winch, and will be known as "The History of the Laws of Ohio," containing nearly a thousand pages of dry legal matter made simple and entertaining. The book will be published this fall.

Takes Horse to Wed; Girl Given 7 Years

Woman Declares She Induced Man to Steal Animal so That They Could Elope.

PARSONS, KANS., July 5.—For stealing a horse so she could elope and be married, Mrs. Marie Pollard was sentenced to seven years in the penitentiary.

It was the first time in the history of the Labette County Court that a woman was sentenced for horse stealing.

Before she was sentenced, Mrs. Pollard insisted that she alone was to blame. She declared she had induced Samuel Parks to steal the horse and buggy and drive her to Clinton, where they were to have been married.

2,500 CHURCH MEMBERS AT ANNUAL FOOT WASHING

ANDERSON, IND., July 5.—More than 2,500 adherents of the Church of God from all sections of the country, participated in the annual foot-washing ceremony at the national camp meeting near here.

Women of the church are not permitted to wear gay-colored ribbons or plumage, and the men wear no neckties. Jewelry is not allowed. Smoking is prohibited. Men kiss each other. The only musical instrument allowed in the service is a tuning fork.

Uncle Sam Must Pay Indian's Doctor Bill

Comptroller Holds That Government Must Care for Blind Aborigine Hurt in Auto Accident.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—Uncle Sam is just as much a protector and guardian of the life and welfare of his Indian wards as a parent is of his child.

This principle of responsibility was proclaimed by George E. Downey, Comptroller of the Treasury, in overruling the appeal of Robert W. Wooley, new auditor for the Interior Department, for a reversal of the Comptroller's decision approving a $900 bill of Dr. George P. Sampson for treating and nursing a blind Indian.

Charley Walker, a blind Navajo and ward of the Government, deserted by his guide on the approach of a train, was run over.

Dr. Sampson amputated his left leg and right foot and cared for him for three months.

NEW STANDARD OF WEIGHT FOR GEMS ADOPTED BY U. S.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—The Treasury Department has issued instructions to collectors of customs, adopting as the unit of weight for imported diamonds, pearls and other precious stones, the metric carat of 200 milligrams. The adoption of this standard will make the practice of this country conform to that of large countries dealing in diamonds, chief among them being the Netherlands, England, France and Belgium.

TEACHERS WHO SPEAK SPANISH IN BIG DEMAND

Many Positions in Latin-America Go Begging Because of Lack of Knowledge of Language.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—Several well-paid teaching positions in Latin-America open to Americans will probably be filled by men from other countries because of a lack of trained men in the United States with a speaking knowledge of Spanish, according to L. A. Kalbach, chief clerk of the Bureau of Education.

On several occasions lately, he points out, the Bureau of Education, at the request of the State Department, has scoured the country in search of educators for responsible positions in Latin-American countries, only to find generally that those who might qualify in other particulars can not speak the language.

$2,400 Salaries Offered.

The American Minister to Panama recently asked the United States Government to recommend candidates for professor of industrial arts, professor of agriculture and professor of veterinary medicine in Panama. Salaries up to $2,400 and other inducements were offered. The Bureau of Education communicated with various institutions and organizations that usually have lists of available candidates, but in this case the response was meager, because of the language requirement.

"None of our industrial arts experts speaks Spanish," wrote an officer of one of the best known teacher-training institutions. Others declared that while they knew of men who would meet the requirements, so far as professional attainments and teaching experience were concerned, they knew of none who had the added requirement of Spanish.

Few Learn Spanish.

Spanish is, of course, taught in many American institutions of learning, but the bureau officials point out, comparatively few students avail themselves of the opportunity to learn it. Sometimes students feel that a high school or college course in Spanish will not furnish the necessary conversational knowledge. This difficulty has long been recognized in all modern language instruction, and in Spanish, particularly, practical control of the language is now insisted upon.

Furthermore, opportunities for practice in speaking Spanish are constantly increasing. Better transportation facilities are making the United States and Latin-American nations more and more accessible to each other.

APPOINTMENT OF GONZALES RECALLS FEUD

Brother of New Minister to Cuba Was Slain on Street by James H. Tillman.

When William Elliott Gonzales goes to Cuba, to which country he has been appointed as Minister by President Wilson, he will be returning to the land of his ancestors. Born in the United States, he is intensely American in his point of view, but this has not prevented him from taking a deep interest in the development of Cuba.

His name is a link between the two countries. His father, a native of Matanzas, Cuba, married into the old Elliott family of South Carolina, and the new Minister to Cuba was named for his uncle, William Elliott, a one-time Representative in Congress. The Elliotts had been for generations prominent in the social and political life of the Palmetto State, and General Ambrosio Jose Gonzales, the father of William Elliott Gonzales, was a greater politician than any of them and brought up his boys to take a vital interest in politics, for his participation in which one son paid with his life. The members of the Gonzales family have always had decided opinions on every public question and have always expressed their feelings forcibly.

Headed Fight for Liberty.

General Gonzales, with Narisco Lopez, headed the struggle for independence of Cuba in 1844, being one of the junta of five members who signed the declaration of independence, adopted the present flag and organized the first filibustering expedition under Lopez, he being second in command, with the rank of brigadier general. He was the first Cuban wounded in the battle for independence at Cardenas, May 20, 1850. The expedition failed and a sentence of death was pronounced upon Gonzales, but he escaped to the United States and settled in South Carolina, where he married a daughter of William Elliott, a prominent citizen of Beaufort. When the Civil War broke out the Cuban general offered his services to the Confederates and served as colonel and chief of artillery with General Beauregard, surrendering with Johnston's army at Greensboro in 1865. His two sons have followed in his footsteps, both having been soldiers, having proved their devotion to the United States and to Cuba.

He Opposed Tillman.

The feud which ended in the fatal shooting of Narisco G. Gonzales by Lieutenant Governor James H. Tillman in 1903 was partly political and partly personal. The two families had been on bad terms for years, and during the campaign which resulted in the election of Tillman as Lieutenant Governor, Gonzales through his paper, The State, had fought him bitterly. In his editorials he had called him names that Tillman could not forgive or forget. He challenged the editor to a duel, but Gonzales treated the proposal with contempt. This in no way impugned his courage, for the entire Gonzales family was noted for its bravery and nerve, and Narisco Gonzales, who was named for old Narisco Lopez, had acted as a scout for Gomez before the Spanish-American war and had served in the American army after war was declared, doing valiant service.

He was shot when walking unarmed in the public street by Tillman. At the first shot he called out "Coward!" and then "Shoot again!" as he sank to the ground. He died a few days afterward and feeling ran so high that Tillman, insisting that he could not get a fair trial in that county obtained a change of venue and was acquitted after a sensational trial.

Is a Spanish War Veteran.

William Elliott Gonzales succeeded his brother as the editor of The State. Like him, he had been a soldier in the war with Spain, having served as captain in the Second South Carolina regiment and having gone to Cuba with the army of pacification. Mr. Gonzales is a close personal and political friend of the Secretary of State, and in his paper warmly supported him in his candidacy for the Presidency in all of his campaigns. He is also a good friend of President Wilson and was one of the first men to suggest his name for the office which he now holds. The State led the fight in securing a delegation favorable to him, and it was largely owing to his efforts that the Palmetto delegation stood by Woodrow Wilson from first to last at the National Convention. After the nomination Mr. Gonzales returned home and worked for his election, raising a large popular subscription through the State to help defray the expenses of the campaign.

Mr. Gonzales has entertained both President Wilson and Secretary Bryan at hos home in Columbia, and it is understood that the appointment was tendered him out of personal regard by the President and because of his belief in his fitness for the place.

Senator Tillman Passive.

Notwithstanding the feeling between the Gonzales and Tillman families, it is understood that Senator Tillman, recognizing Mr. Gonzales' splendid work for President Wilson, will not oppose his confirmation. One of the most outspoken enemies of the newly appointed Minister to Cuba is Governor Blease, who was one of the counsel for James Tillman at the time of his trial. Not long ago the Governor was reported to have criticised Mr. Daniels, Secretary of the Navy, very bitterly because of his friendship for Mr. Gonzales.

Opticians to Operate On Hogs Before Jury

Defendants to Use Porkers' Eyes to Disprove Plaintiff's Malpractice Charge.

COLUMBUS, OHIO July 5.—A novel means of illustration was employed in Judge Rogers' court in a case in which two Columbus eye specialists are defendants for $10,000 damages.

Operations are to be performed on eyes to illustrate the claim of defendants that there was no malpractice. Human optics are not to be used. Because the eyes of hogs are very much like those of men, several healthy porkers are to be robbed of their "lamps."

These will be put in masks just like human "mugs" and the jurors will know exactly what happened to the plaintiff when he was put under the knives of the defendants.

Missouri Youth Is Youngest Yet Named by President—Gets Salary of $2,400.

TRENTON, MO., July 5.—Winning the distinction of being the youngest postmaster in Missouri and the youngest yet appointed by President Wilson, Wilbur E. Austin has assumed charge of the Trenton office at 25. It is a second-class office, with a salary of $2,400 per annum.

Austin was nominated by President Wilson over five opponents, all of whom have been prominent in party affairs in this section for years. He was backed by Colonel E. M. Harber, of Trenton, an uncle, who is a close friend of Congressman W. W. Rucker, and was recommended by the Congressman.

"I Love You," Signals Heiress in Court

Millionaire's Daughter Cheers Sweetheart Accused by Her Father as Dead Beat.

STEAMBOAT SPRINGS, COLO., July 5.—A jury in the District Court has failed to agree in the case of Robert King, an artist, who recently attempted to elope with the 17-year-old daughter of F. E. Milner, millionaire lumberman and hotel proprietor. King was charged with beating a bill at the hotel owned by his sweetheart's father.

Women crowded the court room during the trial. Miss Milner and her father occupied front seats. The girl smiled at King on the stand and signaled to him with her hands. She explained afterward that her signal was: "I love you." Her father had forbidden her to speak to King.

Girl Is Near Death In Submarine Tango

Tries To Do Fancy Steps for Benefit of Lake Michigan "Mermaids," When She Sinks.

CHICAGO, July 5.—The mermaids at the bottom of Lake Michigan now dance the tango. Miss Kathryn Courts, of Normal Park, showed them how.

"Look, girls, this is the latest!" she cried to friends bathing with her off Margate Terrace.

And she tangoed right out into deep water and down among the mermaids, and would have drowned if Thomas Cooper, superintendent for Butler Bros., had not dragged her forth.

Her comrades had thought the symptoms of drowning part of the show.

MASHER LASHED BY WOMAN HE HAD ANNOYED

Tired of His Notes and Unwarranted Attention, Confectioner's Wife Uses Horsewhip.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 5.—Mrs. B. C. Osmun, the wife of a confectioner, residing at 54 Fair Avenue, pluckily took matters in her own hands and dealt summary justice to a masher who had been annoying her Friday afternoon. The masher, L. M. Cox, received a sound horsewhipping which Mrs. Osmun, administered to him in the street near her home.

According to Mrs. Osmun, Cox, who is about 60 years of age, has been continually annoying her by sending love notes, following her on the street and trying to induce her to leave her husband for him. She states that he has also been slandering her to the neighbors, and being unable to stand his annoyances any longer, she decided to put a definite stop to the proceedings.

When Cox attempted to speak to her on the street Friday afternoon, Mrs. Osmun produced the whip and proceeded to thrash him. Mrs. Osmun did not escape without injury, for she bears a large black and blue spot on her arm and a discolored right eye, which, she asserts, Cox gave her after he had taken her whip away.

Following the scene in the street Mrs. Osmun hurried to the police station and gave herself up in order to prevent Cox swearing out a warrant for her arrest. She was not held, however, and she proceeded to have a citation issued against Cox.

Leaps Across Area To Save Child Afire

Neighbor Sees Girl's Peril and Makes Dangerous Jump, Putting Out Flames With Coat.

NEW YORK, July 5.—William Morrissey, of 252 Nepperhan Avenue, Yonkers, by a daring leap yesterday saved Olive Edick, 7 years old, from burning to death. The child is terribly burned, but physicians in St. Joseph's Hospital say she will live.

The girl was playing with her younger brother, Russell, on the fourth floor of her home at 121 New Main Street. The boy accidentally set Olive's dress afire. She ran, screaming, to the fire escape.

Morrissey was on the fourth floor of the next block. There is a wide space between the two fire escapes. Seeing the child was doomed unless he acted, Morrissey jumped and landed beside the blazing youngster. Pulling off his coat, he quickly blanketed the flames.

To Have Perfect Skin Throughout the Summer

(From The Guide to Beauty.)

These days the face and neck need special care and attention. Flying dust and dirt, the beating sun, are severe on any skin. Their despoiling effects are best overcome by the application of pure mercolized wax. This keeps skin and pores in a cleanly condition, the complexion beautifully white and spotless. Tan, freckles, blotches and roughened cuticle are actually absorbed by it. One ounce of mercolized wax, obtainable at any drug store, is sufficient to completely renovate a soiled complexion. It is used like cold cream, allowed to remain on over night and washed off in the morning.

As the skin tends to expand in warm weather, causing wrinkles to form, a good astringent lotion should be used. Dissolve one ounce powdered saxolite in one-half pint of witch hazel. Bathe the face in this during the heat of the day or before going out for theater or social affair. It it a remarkable skin tightener and wrinkle eraser.

Trusses Like These Are A Crime

Such Makeshifts Have Forced Thousands Into Risking Dangerous Operations

Wearing elastic and spring trusses year after year is almost sure to shorten your life.

You can't make them hold, even when drawn so tight you can scarcely stand to keep them on.

They usually let you get worse all the time—that's why every year they are forcing thousands of people into undergoing operation.

They are simply a crime—squeeze the rupture, often causing strangulation—dig into the pelvic bone in front—press against the spinal column at the back—make life miserable for nearly everybody who wears them.

The Plain Truth Is This

You can't possibly get well—can't even keep from getting worse—unless your rupture is constantly held in place. Just as a broken bone can't knit unless held securely together.

And just as a bandage or splint is the only way a broken bone can be held, so the right kind of truss is the only thing in the world that can keep a rupture from coming out and growing worse.

You'll feel like a new person from the day you put on that kind of truss.

But you know as well as we that you'll never find such a sure-to-hold truss at any drug store.

Yet it's easy enough to get. And you can test it first—by sixty days trial—without having to risk a single cent.

It's the famous Cluthe Truss or Cluthe Automatic Massager—absolutely guaranteed to hold, and won't cost you a cent if it doesn't.

It's so utterly different from everything else for rupture that it has received eighteen separate patents.

Made on an entirely new principle. Instantly and automatically protects you against every strain so your rupture can't possibly be forced out. Self-regulating, self-adjusting. Far more than just a truss.

In addition to constant holding it provides the only way ever discovered for overcoming the weakness which is the real cause of rupture.

Just how it does that—entirely automatically—and how it has thus completely cured hundreds and hundreds of people whose cases seemed almost hopeless—is all explained in the free book which the coupon below will bring you.

No Belt—No Leg-Straps—No Springs

The Cluthe Truss does away with the curse of belts, leg-straps and springs. Thousand say it is as comfortable as their clothing. It is waterproof—will hold in the bath. Also perspiration-proof and easily kept clean.

Make This 60-Day Test—You Won't Have to Risk a Penny

We don't ask you to trust to a mere try-out the way you have to do at a drug store.

We'll make a Cluthe Automatic Massaging Truss especially for your case—make it to your measure—and let you try it sixty days.

We'll practically lend it to you that long just for a test.

If it doesn't keep your rupture from coming out or bothering you in any way, no matter how hard you work or strain—if it doesn't prove every claim we make—then you can send it back and it won't cost you a penny.

Free Book Full of Facts Never Before Put in Print

Don't keep on letting yourself get worse—don't spend a cent on account of your rupture until you get our free book of advice.

This remarkable book—cloth-bound, 96 pages—sums up all we have learned about ruptures during forty years of experience. You'll find it full of facts never before put in print.

It shows just why elastic and spring trusses cause so much misery and such a shameful waste of money that the law should stop their sale.

It explains why operation is nearly always a needless gamble with death—and why, if you do manage to live through it, you may have to keep on wearing a truss.

It exposes the humbug "appliances," "methods," "plasters," etc.

It shows why sixty days' trial is the only safe way to buy anything for rupture—and how the Cluthe Truss is the only thing of any kind that you can get on such a long trial because the only thing good enough to stand such a thorough day-after-day test.

And it tells all about this famous Automatic Massaging Truss—how simple it is—how it ends constant expense—how it has saved thousands from operation—how you can get it on trial, and how little it costs if you keep it.

Also gives voluntary indorsements from over 5,000 benefited and cured people.

Write for this book to-day—don't put it off—the minute it takes to send for it may free you from trouble for the rest of your life.

SOUTHERN SOCIETY TAKES A SPURT IN CAPITAL; MANY NOTABLES BECOME MEMBERS

Records Smashed by Organization Since Claude N. Bennett Became President.

By HUGH S. MILLER.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—For rapidity of growth and for activity in developing the spirit of the South at the National Capital, the Southern Society of Washington has set a new record since the Democratic party came into power.

Less than a month after the election of officers, which placed Claude N. Bennett, of Georgia, in the president's chair, the society took in 150 new members from the leading Southerners in private, Congressional and other official life. They included such new members as Senator and Mrs. Hoke Smith, of Georgia; Senator and Mrs. Bryan, of Florida; Senator and Mrs. Robinson, of Arkansas; Senators Swanson, of Virginia, and Vardaman, of Mississippi; Representatives Gordon Lee, William Schley Howard and Hughes, of Georgia; Burnett and Heflin, of Alabama; Small, of North Carolina, and many other Southern Representatives and their wives.

Georgians Who Join.

Among the prominent Georgians who have joined are Justice and Mrs. William Bailey Lamar, Paymaster and Mrs. William C. Fite, Mr. and Mrs. James J. Lampton, Mr. and Mrs. Harry P. Cary, Mr. and Mrs. Sledge Tatum, Colonel Neyle Colquitt, Marion C. Howard, D. L. Hartsill, Miss Minnie E. Carroll, Miss Helen H. Hardin, Colonel John T. Boifeuillet and Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Lamkin. From other Southern States there are generals, admirals and others of note.

The Southern Society is now enjoying a success that it never before attained. It stands at the very top of the social organizations in the National Capital. Strangely enough, while the impetus which has made the society what it is came in part from the Georgian who is its new president, it is to be attributed mainly to a lively fight which developed in the society just previous to the last election.

The Southern Society had been running along for several years as quietly as a meadow stream. Its first president was Jacob M. Dickinson, Secretary of War in the Taft Cabinet. He was succeeded as president by Senator Thornton, of Louisiana, and he in turn was followed by Representative Richmond Pearson Hobson, of Alabama. Lack of time had made it difficult for any of these executives to give the society much personal attention.

Hobson Started Fight.

It was President Hobson who unintentionally precipitated the fight which culminated in the unprecedented expansion of the society. He proposed an amendment which would expand the eligibility clause of the society so as to take in people from every section of the country, provided they felt an interest in the South and the general objects of the organization. His amendment was seconded and ably advocated by Thomas Nelson Page, of Virginia, the author and recent appointee of President Wilson as Ambassador to Italy. Mr. Page was a member of the executive committee of the society. He and Captain Hobson argued very ably and eloquently for broadening the scope of the society, particularly with reference to its membership. They emphasized the need of doing away with sectionalism and giving the society a national character.

Some of the members of the society gathered from their remarks an intimation that the society amounted to very little and would never amount to much so long as it was run under exclusively Southern direction. However justified they were in getting this impression, the effect was electrical. They communicated their thoughts to others, and quickly the whole society was aroused. The more it was thought about and discussed the greater the opposition it created. The rank and file of the society declared that the adoption of the amendment would destroy both the character and the purpose of the society; that it would no longer be a Southern society, but an interstate society, the E Pluribus Unum Society, the Amalgamated Association of Selected Celebrities—anything, in fact—but that it would not be a Southern society.

Dr. McKelway Is Secretary.

The result was that the amendment was defeated, President Hobson resigned, and Mr. Bennett was unanimously elected to succeed him. Dr. A. J. McKelway, well known in Atlanta, is financial secretary of the society. Speaker Champ Clark is the first vice president.

Something of what the Southern Society is, and what it is doing, is contained in the following interview by Mr. Bennett:

"The objects of the Southern Society are to bring together at the National Capital Southern people; to promote friendship and fellowship among them; to nourish, cherish and perpetuate Southern ideals and ideas; to aid in interpreting the South to itself and to the nation at large; to develop and promote any good cause connected with the South—whether educational, philanthropic, patriotic or useful in any line. When the society grows in strength, membership and power as it should, it will be an easy matter to discover good things for it to do.

"Not a Sectional Society."

"The society is in no sense sectional, except in the broad sense that it is made up of Southerners. There is nothing narrow or limited or sectional about it in any way that could possibly be objected to. In its recent meeting at the National Theater, the society acted as the host of the nation. The society paid all expenses and entertained two thousand citizens of Washington, selected without regard to where they came from. Every Representative and Senator was invited, the diplomatic corps was well represented, the house was filled to its capacity, and the addresses were in a vein that could not but be approved and appreciated by any well balanced man or woman in the United States. The strongest eulogy on the South was delivered by William Jennings Bryan, of Nebraska, Secretary of State.

"There have been two other meetings in which the South has appeared in prominent roles. One was the noted banquet at the Raleigh Hotel in celebration of Washington's birthday, February 22, 1912, and the other was at the Pan American Building in the Hall of the Americas, when the society last fall gave a reception to the national convention of the United Daughters of the Confederacy—the most noted perhaps of the great entertainments given in Washington to that great organization of Southern women.

Cites Bigness of Field.

"Those of us who are endeavoring to direct the society's movements are fairly staggered by the bigness of the field that it represents. This field covers a representation at the National Capital of sixteen of the leading States of the Union, containing a population of more than thirty millions, having 600,000,000 acres of territory, possessing greater fertility and variety of soil than any other similar sized territory on the face of the globe, having one crop (cotton) worth a round billion dollars a year, and constituting the greatest natural monopoly that the Creator has given to any people.

"That the South now furnishes the President of the United States and half of the Cabinet, and is on the majority side of both House and Senate is only one of many phases of its importance and possibilities. That the Southern Society has something to stand for and can easily find something to do that will be well worth while needs no demonstration. The society regards the South as the nation's best asset, and desires to make that asset available to all good purposes."

CLAUDE N. BENNETT, of Georgia, the new President of the Southern Society of Washington.

GRADUATESTOLD TO MAKE MORIBUND SMALL TOWNS

MIDDLEBURY, VT., July 5.—John M. Thomas, president of Middlebury College, in his baccalaureate address appealed to the members of the graduating class to cast their fortunes with the small hill towns of New England, which, he said, had been losing population steadily for more than half a century.

"Leadership is all that is needed," said Dr. Thomas. "Who of you will go to live in a hill town of Vermont, not where there is the best job, but where there is the greatest good?

"One man of the right caliber and the right power could lift a whole community. One community so inspired would change a whole county, and one county leading the way, the whole State would follow."

TAMPA CORONER PROBING PAYNE DEATH MYSTERY

Son of Aged Veteran, Who Left Young Widow, Asks for Autopsy.

SUE GIRL-WIFE FOR DIVORSE

Marriage Had Proven Unhappy, Though Couple Continued to Live in Same House.

TAMPA, Fla., July 5.—Coroner Jackson is conducting a rigid inquiry into the supposed mysterious death of Samuel R. Payne, a Union veteran 75 years of age, who died unexpectedly here Tuesday, leaving a 23-year-old wife. The Coroner is acting at the instance of Almon Payne, of Pensacola, a son of the dead man by his first marriage.

Payne was not a wealthy man, but lived in comfortable circumstances, leaving a small estate to his young widow. He had been drawing a $30 pension from the Federal Government for several years.

The inquiry into the aged veteran's death was started an hour before the funeral, when physicians, representing the Coroner and the son, performed an autopsy, removing the stomach. The minister was forced to wait almost an hour to conduct the funeral services while the doctors were removing the viscera. Since then they have been engaged in making a careful chemical analysis, the result of which will not be known probably for several days.

Was Seeking Divorce.

Payne was married two years ago in August. His bride was Lillian May Salters. She was 21 and Payne 72 at the time. They did not live happily and Payne was suing the girl-wife for divorce, claiming cruelty. Mental suffering was set up, it being alleged that she gave him no peace of mind.

Mrs. Payne told the story of his death in a straightforward manner to-day. Since he had sued her for divorce they continued to live in the same house, though not rooming together. Payne was taken sick about 1 o'clock Tuesday morning, she said, after having eaten a hearty supper. Mrs. Payne claims Payne's daughter, Mrs. Castaigne, who had been in the house for several weeks, cooked the supper, and claims she did not know of Payne's illness until she heard Mrs. Castaigne hunting for medicine.

Division of Property.

It is said Payne's property, worth about $6,000, was split into four parcels by his will, one-fourth to the girl-wife and one-fourth each to his three children. Mrs. Payne said she did not know what the will gave her, beyond his statement made soon after they were married that he "would provide for her as if she was his child."

The Coroner's inquest will be held Monday.

QUICK TRIAL ORDERED FOR OLD WOMAN'S ASSAILANT

An immediate trial is ordered for fear that excited neighbors might attempt to wreak vengeance on Daly. He has been removed to another county for safety.

The aged woman is in a critical condition. Daly is 45 years old.

Those who passed were Miss Patience Barrow, Miss Mary Hirsch, Miss Dorie Lippman, Miss Jane Meldrim, Miss Rita Wood, Miss Marjorie VanDiviere, Miss Mildred Guckenheimer, Mrs. Lloyd B. Taylor and Miss Edith D. Johnston.

SAVANNAH, July 5.—A charter petition for the R. J. Nunn trust fund has been filed in the Chatham Superior Court. This association is being organized to administer that part of the estate of Dr. R. J. Nunn which was bequeathed to Zerubabel Lodge, Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite, Georgia Historical Society, Young Women's Christian Association, Savannah Female Orphanage and the Society of Colonial Wars in the State of Georgia.

Under Dr. Nunn's will most of his estate was left to Miss Annie G. Purse, to go at her death to the institutions named. Each was to appoint a trustee.

Three Towns 'Kick'on R.F.D. Mail Service

Taylors Creek, Flemington and Trinity, in Liberty County, Want Postoffices Reopened.

SAVANNAH, July 5.—Three thriving Liberty County postal centers have a big kick on against the Democratic administration.

The postoffices at Taylors Creek, Flemington and Trinity, all of which have been in operation for many years, have been closed, and these towns have been made a part of a rural free delivery route that meanders out of Hinesville into the wilds of Liberty County.

As a result, it requires nearly a week to write a letter in Savannah, dispatch it and receive an answer from one of the towns named.

Congressman Edwards and Senator Bacon and Senator Smith are being bombarded with letters and telegrams from their constituents demanding that something be done to improve conditions.

CRIMEA WAR NURSE IN HOME FOR AGED

DETROIT, MICH July 5.—Mrs. Annie Wylde McEvoy, 82, one of the 15 original Florence Nightingale nurses who graduated from the St. Thomas Hospital, London Bridge, after the return from Crimea with Miss Nightingale, is engaged here upon a last, lingering assignment of an unusually long career.

The patient is her husband, Harry McEvoy, landscape artist, a paralytic and bedridden.

The couple are in the Arnold Home for the Aged, where they were sent when finally neither could provide for their support.

YOUNG FLORIDA LAWYER WEDS IN ELOPEMENT

George W. MacClellan, of Jacksonville, and California Girl Married in San Francisco.

LOS ANGELES, July 5.—Miss Venita Consigny, a favorite among younger society folk of Los Angeles, and George W. MacClellan, of Jacksonville, Fla., were married in San Francisco after a highly romantic elopement from under the watchful eyes of Miss Consigny's parents, who reside at the Rampart Boulevard. The couple were engaged, but their engagement only was known to the parents, and they had consented to a wedding in the fall.

Miss Consigny secured permission to go to San Francisco to visit a friend, Mrs. William Swears, of Marlborough Hall. She went unaccompanied on the steamer Harvard. There was no chance for an elopement as she boarded the steamer, as she had too many friends who were on hand to bid her good-bye.

It is supected that in wafting her farewells over the rail of the boat she managed to convey some signal to Mr. MacClellan on shore, for he returned to Los Angeles, and as soon as he could complete arrangements boarded a train for the Northern city. The first inkling of what was transpiring reached Mr. and Mrs. George Consigny, Jr., in a telegram announcing the marriage.

Miss Consigny had just graduated from the University of Southern California. Mr. MacClellan had made the journey from Florida to be present at the festivities and had spent four or five weeks here. They met during the holidays a year ago when he was spending a vacation in Southern California and Miss Consigny was a favorite guest at many of the brilliant affairs of the season. Their acquaintance had been continued by correspondence and Mr. MacClellan arranged to be the first man in the field after her university course had been completed.

The engagement followed so closely upon the graduation exercises that it was quite a shock to the small family circle who were in the secret.

Mr. MacClellan, who is 25 years old, is regarded as one of the most brilliant attorneys of Jacksonville, Fla. His mother and sister are living here at the Bryson Apartments.

Soda Clerks Mutiny; Demand Better Pay

As High Skill Required at Fountain as in Sanctuary of Chef, They Declare.

SAVANNAH, July 5.—Preparatory to asking for higher wages and shorter working hours, soda water dispensers are planning to form a union. They say they are determined to walk out if other means fail.

The clerks say they work for a minimum of ten hours a day, with a maximum of sixteen hours, and that they do not receive enough pay. They hold that their art is one that requires just as much skill and knowledge of how to tickle the palate, as hotel and restaurant chefs, bakers and cooks at other public establishments where edibles are served.

There are in Savannah about 250 soda "jerkers." The majority of them were members of a union that broke up something over a year ago, when the treasurer disappeared with the total funds of the organization.

Turning Basin for Savannah Planned

Federal Engineer Says It Will Handle Any Ship That Can Go Through Canal.

SAVANNAH, July 5.—A turning basin at Fig Island big enough to handle any ship that can go through the Panama Canal will be constructed at Savannah, according to Colonel Dan C. Kingman, chief of the Government engineers for the Savannah district.

A preliminary examination has been made by Colonel Kingman and his report sent to headquarters in Washington, and the department has authorized Colonel Kingman to make estimates on the project.

The great size of the basin—2,000 by 800 feet—was thought by many to be unnecessary, but Colonel Kingman is building with an idea of the great influx of trade that is likely to accrue to Savannah and the South Atlantic coast with the opening of the Panama Canal.

TORPEDO BOAT DESTROYER IN SAVANNAH ON CRUISE

SAVANNAH, July 5.—With a complement of machinists' mates on board for a cruise of instruction, the United States torpedo boat destroyer Thornton is anchored in the harbor. Ensign W. D. TALLAHASSEE, July 5.—A recent act of the Legislature provides that hotels, boarding and lodging houses and restaurants shall meet certain requirements in equipment and cleanliness, and shall pay a State license.

The Governor is authorized to appoint a hotel commissioner and two inspectors. The salaries and traveling expenses of the commissioner and inspectors are to be paid out of license fees collected.

The Governor has appointed A. L. Messer, hotel commissioner; A. Z. Brown has been appointed an inspector. The salary of the commissioner is $2,000 per annum and the inspector's $1,200.

PAVING HIGHWAY To St. Augustine

Duval County Now Completing Gaps in Road From Jacksonville.

JACKSONVILLE, July 5—The stretch of three-quarters of a mile that was left unpaved when the five miles of brick were put down last summer in Duval County from Loretto to Bayard will have immediate attention. In fact teams are now at work hauling sufficient brick to completely hard surface the sand grade either side of the Julington Creek bridge.

Whe nthis work is done, which ought to be within 30 days, there will be a continuous brick and shell highway from Bayard to Jacksonville. This leaves just a little less than four miles of unsurfaced road in the John Anderson highway in Duval County toward St. Augustine.

Fewer Wed, More Go Insane, Than in 1912

Savannah Blinks Its Eyes at Record for First Six Months of Present Year.

SAVANNAH, July 5.—Fewer people were married and a great many more went crazy the first six months of 1913 than in the same period last year.

The disparity in the marriage license record is not so great, though fewer licenses have been issued. It has been the history of the marriage license office that when money is tight and people are talking hard times there is a slump in the marriage market.

Up to this time last year 590 marriage licenses had been issued. So far this year the number has been 572.

There have been nearly as many lunacy warrants issued in the last six months as usually are in a whole year. The record is 95.

2 Adjudged Insane By Savannah Juries

Woman Insisted on Posing in the Nude—Man Believed Himself Mental Replica of Christ.

SAVANNAH, GA., July 5.—J. H. Meredith, a white man, has been adjudged insane. He suffered from an hallucination that he was patterned after Christ in every particular, and that this distinction was confined to himself and one other man.

Meredith told the commission that he communes with the stars, and that he understands them as the three Wise Men did the star that led them to Bethlehem.

Julia Bryan, who insisted upon posing in the nude, was also sent to Milledgeville by a lunacy commission. While she was in jail she refused to wear any clothes. The weather was favorable to the humoring of her whim, but the commission was not.

Nightmare No Crime, Police Judge Rules

Releases Man Arrested as Disorderly Who Proves He Was Only Dreaming.

SAVANNAH, July 5.—Police Court Judge John Schwarz has been called upon to define the difference between a nightmare and a plain drunk. The case was that of J. W. McMillan, a visitor, arrested at the Union Station charged with raising a disturbance and being drunk.

The defendant made the plea that he was not intoxicated, but took a few drinks and fell asleep at the station while waiting for his train, and that during his sleep he had a nightmare. The judge decided a nightmare was no offense and the case was dismissed.

Mayor Orders Ice Law Enforcement

Customers Complain of Short Weight by Savannah Companies—Wagon Scales Required.

SAVANNAH, GA., July 5.—Numerous complaints that the ice companies are giving their customers short weight has caused Mayor Richard J. Davant to order a rigid enforcement of the ordinance governing the sale of ice.

This ordinance provides that any person has the right to demand that the ice be weighed in his presence. It also requires ice wagons to carry scales which have been properly tested.

KILLS GIRL AND SHOOTS SELF BECAUSE OF JEALOUSY

SAVANNAH, July 5.—Prompted by jealousy, Hugh Harrison shot and killed Ruth Hester, 21 years of age, in a house at 521 Broughton Street, and then turned the weapon upon himself in an effort to end his own life. He is in the Savannah Hospital seriously wounded.

BUILDING-LOAN RECEIVER SUES FOR $264,000

Estate of Ybor City Association's Head Defendant in Litigation to Recover Cash.

TAMPA, July 5.—Receiver Petteway for the defunct Ybor City Building and Loan Association has filed a claim against the estate of Silas L. Biglow for twelve years in absolute charge of the association for $264,000, claiming Biglow owed the association this sum at the time of his death.

Biglow, it is claimed, had paid dividends out of money paid in. Auditor Harry Weldon says that the total deficiency will amount to $559,229.81. How much of this will be made good it is hard to say. It has been estimated that mortgages held by the company will net perhaps $160,000, but Mr. Petteway frankly says he does not know how much they will bring. Already several claims of payments on mortgages have been made, for which Biglow had not given credit on the books of the association.

Biglow ran the association himself, no meeting of directors having been held for years, and it was thought to be very prosperous. What he did with the money has not yet been developed, though it is alleged he accumulated large quantities of property in his own name. An inventory of his estate has not yet been taken.

Petteway may call on the directors of the association to make good part of the alleged loss.

Man, 70, Will Visit President's Graves

Septuagenarian to Walk 3,000 Miles and Will Take Nine Months for the Trip.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., July 5.—J. W. Carpenter left Lincoln's monument in Springfield for a trip on foot to every President's grave in the United States. The trip will cover about 3,000 miles, and Mr. Carpenter expects that it will take about nine moths.

Mr. Carpenter is 67 and believes walking of great benefit to his health. He will go to Indianapolis, North Bend, Ohio; Springfield, Ky.; Nashville Hermitage and Greenville, Tenn.; Richmond, Va.; Washington, D. C.; Lancaster, Pa.; Princeton, N. J.; New York City, Quincy, Mass.; Concord, N. H.; back into New York to Albany and Buffalo, thence to Canton and Cleveland, Ohio, ending his pilgrimage at the grave of Rutherford B. Hayes in Fremont, Ohio.

Wilson Stenographer Once a Sand Cutter

In Three Years Capital Employee Rises from Laborer to World's Champion Copyist.

QUINCY, ILL., July 5.—Three years ago Lawrence Weisenberger was working as a sand cutter in a local foundry. To-day he is one of the three stenographers in the office of President Wilson.

Weisenberger worked during the day in the foundry and attended business college at night. He successfully passed a civil service examination and obtained a position in the War Department. He was assigned temporarily to the private office of the President, who refused to part with his services when he was called back to the War Department.

Weisenberger is about 27. He also won the national copying contest a year ago over a field of twoscore of expert shorthand artists.

Weds a Minute After She Is of Legal Age

Bride-to-Be Stays Up All Night Rather Than Cheat Law of Few Seconds.

COLUMBUS, IND., July 5.—Miss Zyrl kept Cupid waiting until exactly midnight when she reached her eighteenth birthday, because she would not break the law covering legal marriageable age and marry Daniel Hughes to whom her parents had objected.

But not more than a minute elapsed before she stealthily withdrew from her house, whose parents were sleeping, and met Hughes not far away, waiting in an automobile. They drove to this city, wakened John Houk, Deputy County Clerk, and with him went to the court house, where she became Mrs. Daniel Hughes. Albert Jackson, a farmer of Rock Creek Township, is her father, and acob A. Hughes, former County Commissioner, is father of the bridegroom.

SEES WEDDING OF GIRL OF SIXTH GENERATION

LEAD HILL, ARK., July 5.—It is seldom that a person has the opportunity to attend the wedding of his great-great-great-grandchild, a child of the sixth generation in a family, but such was the case when Elmira Wagoner, who lives between Lead Hill and Protem, Mo., attended the wedding of Dosie Clarkson, her great-great-great-granddaughter, when she married John Upshaw at a big revival meeting at Bradley's Ferry.

MARRIED SEVENTY YEARS.

CHARLOTTE, MICH., July 5.—Mr. and Mrs. Joel Smith, of this city, are Eaton County's oldest married couple. On July 4 they celebrated their seventieth wedding anniversary.

Elizabeth Winner in Cabin Cruiser Race

Covers 287 Miles Between New Orleans and Pensacola in 27 Hours, 29 Minutes.

PENSACOLA, July 5.—Running the 287 miles between New Orleans and Pensacola, over the course of the long distance race between cabin cruisers for the William Garic cup, in 29 hours and 29 minutes, the cabin cruiser Elizabeth, owned and commanded by Captain Albert Mackie, won for the second consecutnve time the Garic cup and for the second time captured cups offered by the Pensacola Yacht and Motor Boat Club to the first boat in the long distance race to cross the line of the Pensacola stake boat.

The trim little yacht Waif, owned by Captain Robert McClure, won the second prize, offered by the Southern Yacht and Motor Boat Club.

The Tokay, owned by Captain Guy S. Crockett, was the third boat to cross the stake boat.

The Comet and the Violet also ran in the long distance race.

Accuse Rival Liquor Men of Aiding 'Drys'

St. Petersburg Saloonists Blame Tampa and Jacksonville Dealers for Prohibition Victory.

ST. PETERSBURG, July 5.—Pinellas County has gone "dry" by a majority of 100 votes. St. Petersburg, the largest town in the County, went "dry" by seven votes, while but one small country precinct went "wet."

Saloon men here are claiming that liquor men at Tampa and Jacksonville aided the "drys" in their effort to carry the county, because it will mean greatly increased business for them.

Squirming Baby Is Caught in Fly Paper

Neighbors Are Attracted by Screams of Child, and Arrive in Time to Save Life.

CHICAGO, July 5.—Kicking and squirming, a baby sticking to a strip of fly paper attracted neighbors by its pitiful cries. The child tried time and again to free itself from the sticky paste. It reached out one hand bravely, only to be held back by the other. Then it rolled over and cried until nearly exhausted.

The child was found by Humane Officer Scott too weak to make a sound except a low moan. The baby's mother, Mrs. Christopher Patrick Finnegan, had gone out and left little Julia near the fly paper to protect her from the flies.

Young Astor to Build New 1,500-Ton Yacht

Craft Will Be Twice the Size of Father's Famous Pleasure Ship, the Noma.

NEW YORK, July 5.—Vincent Astor is to build a new yacht. It will be twice the size of the Noma, the yacht built for his father in 1902. It will surpass in tonnage the Corsair, owned by J. P. Morgan.

The Noma, yachtsmen hear, will be sold to Hermann Oelrichs, the friend and sportsman rival of Astor. The gross tonnage of the new Astor yacht is to be between 1,200 and 1,500 tons.

Astor and Oelrichs are the owners of two motor boats of exactly the same size and model, and they frequently race on the Hudson, just off Fernecliffe, the Astor estate. Racing honors are about even.

The teams will represent four sections of the city.

Mayor Davant has given assurances that the league will be permitted to use the diamond in Forsyth Park Extension.

AGED MAN MARRIED TO GIRL HE NURSED AS BABY

CUMBERLAND, MD., July 5.—Miss Mabel Reicher, 21, and Abraham Garman, 60, were married here by the Rev. George E. Brown. They are Dunkards and reside on adjoining farms near Deotate, Pa. The bridegroom told Judge Humbird that he had nursed the girl when she was a baby and that as they naturally became attached to each other they decided that they would get married.

FEDERAL AID SECURED FOR CHATHAM DRAINAGE

SAVANNAH, July 5.—United States aid in promoting the interest of drainage of the vast lands of Chatham County has been secured through Representative Charles G. Edwards, of the special subcommittee of the Chamber of Commerce, who has been handling the matter for several weeks.

Engineer J. G. Phillips, of the United States drainage corps, has received instructions to designate the best drainage district in the County, and he is now at work on the proposition.

MAN WHO FIRED AT PRISONER TO ESCAPE A TRIAL

No One to Push Charge Against Georgian Who Shot-Up the Tampa Court.

TAMPA, July 4.—G. E. Green, the Sylvania, Ga., man who in the County Court Wednesday tried to shoot W. E. Mattox, accused of assaulting his 10-year-old niece, firing three shots in the court room, is not likely to suffer because of the act.

Sheriff Spencer says he will not push a case against the man, and Judge Whitaker says it will be necessary for someone else to start proceedings, as he might be called as a witness. A charge of assault with intent to murder can be preferred, but Mattox will have to file the complaint if a case is made. The authorities generally, while disparaging Green's attempt, are in sympathy with him.

Mrs. Mattox and the child are understood to be in Georgia, and it is planned to appoint a guardian for the child and have her brought back here by July 10 to confront Mattox and tell her story.

Plans a Political School at Capital

College Men To Be Taught in Institution Ex-Minister to Persia Will Build.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—Truxton Beale, ex-American Minister to Persia, intends to establish an institution for the education of college men in politics. Mr. Beale said that he would erect a building in Washington for that purpose.

"The purpose of the institution," Mr. Beale said, "is to discuss side by side with Congress the most important questions of the day that are under debate at the Capitol. My idea is to have a two weeks' session each spring, to be participated in by ten men from the senior class of each university, or such members of the faculty as are interested in political science."

Spots at Crossings To Save Pedestrians

White Spaces Will Be Painted, and All Vehicles Must Pass Around Them.

SAVANNAH, July 5.—As a means of giving further protection to pedestrians crossing the streets at busy corners, white spots, known as "safety spots," will be painted on the pavement at the intersection of several of the congested thoroughfares.

Some time ago some of these white spots were put on the pavement and proved of great assistance. In a rush of traffic, the pedestrian seeks the white spot, which the traffic regulations require all vehicles to pass around. There is no danger of any person standing on the white spot being injured.

The method has been successfully tried out in many cities.

GIRL IS COMMENCEMENT ORATOR AT WISCONSIN

MADISON, WIS., July 5.—For the first time in ten years a young woman was chosen to represent the outgoing class as commencement orator at the University of Wisconsin. The young woman thus honored was Belle Fligelman, Helena, Mont., who was recently voted the most prominent "co-ed" in the University.

In her commencement oration Miss Fligelman presented a plea for a better interpretation of the word "freedom."

RAISES STINGLESS HONEY BEE; BETTER THAN OTHERS

LAWRENCEBURG, IND., July 5.—Louis J. Terrell, an apiarist, who lives two miles south of this city, has produced stingless honey bees after several years of experiment. Mr. Terrell says the new bees are a cross between Italian queens and Cyprian drones. The new hybrids, he says, are better honey producers than the ordinary honey bee and are less liable to disease.

SUNDAY AMERICAN'S SPECIAL CABLE LETTERS RECEIVED FROM ALL THE GREAT CAPITALS OF EUROPE

GERMAN MASSES FORCED TO BEAR HEAVY TAX LOAD

Producers Pay for Increased Armaments While Wealthy Idlers Escape All Burdens.

By FREDERICK WERNER.
Special Cable to The American.

BERLIN, July 5.—Once more the party of the center has triumphed in Germany's domestic politics and has forced through a political compromise which satisfied nobody. The political situation is drastically described in the radical "Berliner Tageblatt," which writes:

"The compromise pudding is ready in the black kitchen, the chef has tasted it and declared it excellent. Now he presses a spoon into the hands of Right and Left and with a grin of satisfaction he encourages them to eat heartily and not be afraid of indigestion. The pudding may be a trifle heavy, but it must be eaten "with God for king and country." And the chef who, in 1909, made the German people swallow the financial reform smiles and says: What I have done is well done. Centrum is trump and always remains trump in the German empire."

Nothing, of course, is definitely decided yet, for the compromise must still pass through several stages before it becomes the law of the land, but the party of the center is sure of final victory, so sure that it has loudly announced that once more it has got its foot firmly on the neck on that part of the German people who increase the national wealth of Germany. These people must pay, while the wealthy idlers get off easily, almost without feeling the extra financial burden with which the increased armaments have saddled the taxpayers.

It is because of the inability of the upper and lower strata of the producing classes to co-operate politically that these have been forced to leave the Government in the hands of a bureaucracy which has gradually more and more become a mere tool of the reactionary landowners, while the greatest influence is exerted by Centrum, the strongest party in the Reichstag.

Now Germans are to see and enjoy the fruits of this political alliance in their worst form: a super tax on thrift. A punishment is to be meted out to those who even during the recent hard times have had the imprudence to go on increasing national wealth.

The new compromise provides for a distribution of the burdens of taxation, which is an even greater insult than the financial reform of 1909, and which may yet prove to be the straw which will break the camel's back.

Actress Spurns $50,000 Heart Balm Finally Takes Marquis' $250,000

Daisy Markham, the English actress, well known on the American stage, who finally accepted $250,000 settlement from the Marquis of Northampton as heart balm.

Daisy Markham, After Declaring All Money in World Couldn't Quash Suit, Accepts Offer.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, July 5.—Fifty thousand dollars was not near enough money to soothe the injured feelings of Daisy Markham, the English actress, who suddenly discovered that she was not to be the Marchioness of Northampton when the Marquis' betrothal to another was announced. "All the money in the world could not get me to withdraw my suit," she dramatically declared when the $50,000 offer was made. "I want his love and the name he promised to give me."

But to-day Daisy Markham seems reasonably contented with $250,000, which the Marquis has settled on her, though it is said that there is more money in the world, and she is still Daisy Markham.

Costs To Be Considerable.

The costs of the settlement will amount to a considerable sum on account of the number of distinguished counsel engaged to plead for the opposing parties. The Marquis, better known as Earl Compton, only recently succeeded to the title at the age of 27. The plaintiff is well known, both in America and the British Isles, under her stage name.

The settlement was announced when the case was called in the high court of justice this week in a court room crowded with fashionable women and actresses, who had come in anticipation of listening to some interesting evidence.

The young Marquis had previously offered $50,000 to settle the case, and many people had thought Miss Markham unwise not to accept the offer.

When Miss Markham insisted on proceeding with the suit London gossips anticipated that she had a sensational story to tell, and interest in the suit rose accordingly.

The damages paid to-day are the heaviest for many years in a breach of promise suit.

Didn't Deny Promise.

Sir Edward Carsons, representing Miss Markham, said she met the Marquis last year when he made a promise of marriage to her which was not denied. Subsequently at the desire of his father, the Marquis broke off the engagement. In doing so he wrote to Miss Markham that he wanted her to believe his action had been taken from a sense of duty, genuinely believing it best for both parties.

The Marquis further wrote:

"You do not know how these so-called ladies will treat you and I really could not bear to see you suffering it. Oh! if I could but escape my position! You will always be my ideal! My beautiful dream!"

The letter concluded, "Your broken-hearted Bim." This was the Marquis of Northampton's nickname.

Father Halted Wedding.

Sir Edward said the Marquis of Northampton had made provision for the lady, such as she would have been entitled to had he made her a marchioness. He then announced the settlement for the sum of $250,000.

Henry E. Duke, counsel for the defendant, said in confirming the settlement that when the Marquis of Northampton, who was then Earl Compton, asked his father's consent to his marriage with Miss Markham, he laid upon him an absolute prohibition and took from his son a solemn engagement that he would not pursue his desire to marry the plaintiff.

Miss Markham was born in India on July 20, 1886. She made her first appearance in Manchester in 1904 as Celia in "As You Like It." In December of the same year she appeared at the Lyceum Theater, New York, with Sir Charles Wyndham, as Elaine Shrimpton, in "The Case of Rebellious Susan," and has acted many other parts. She made her first London appearance as Claire Berton in "Leah Kleschna," and also appeared in many other plays here, including "Raffles," "Love Watches" and "The Glad Eye," which was one of London's recent successes.

MOTHER KEEPS WALES TIED TO APRON STRINGS

Prince Joins Rollicking Oxford Club, but Queen Makes Him Resign—Can't Speed Auto.

By HERBERT TEMPLE.
Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, July 5.—Queen Mary seems determined to keep her oldest son under her wings until the day when she turns him over to the tender cares of his bride. Not long ago he received permission to become a member of the Bullingdon Club, with the express stipulation that under no condition must he ever take part in any of the hilarious festivities of the club, which, under the name of "Bullingdon Blinds," are one of the features of college life at Oxford.

The other night, however, he could not resist the temptation, and with trembling heart he donned his evening clothes and went to the club, where he spent a few very pleasant hours.

Parents Wax Wrathy.

His presence, of course, could not remain secret, and a day or two afterward he received a very severe letter from his parents, who had just returned from their visit to the Kaiser, ordering him to hand in his resignation as a member of the Bullingdon Club immediately, and, in spite of his entreaties, he was forced to obey.

As a balm to his wounded dignity he shortly afterward received as a present from his father a beautiful automobile, accompanied by a driver's license, and driving his own car is now his principal pleasure, though it is somewhat lessened by the fact that the car is provided with a speedometer and he has had to promise his mother on his word of honor that he will never exceed the speed of twelve miles an hour, much as he would like to tear along.

Little Olaf Gets Car.

The Queen, indeed, opposed the Prince's wish for an automobile as long as she possibly could after Queen Alexandra a little over a year ago expressed her willingness to present her oldest grandson with one. But when Queen Alexandra presented little Prince Olaf of Norway with a car and permitted him to use it freely all around Sandringham, Queen Mary realized that she had been outwitted and reluctantly permitted King George to present the Prince of Wales with a fine touring car.

The question of the Prince's marriage is now becoming quite a serious one. The King and Queen both agree that their son ought to marry early in life, but they can not agree on the bride. Queen Mary desires the Prince of Wales to marry one of the Czar's daughters, but King George and Queen Alexandra, as well as her sister, the Dowager Empress of Russia, strongly oppose this idea, because of the close relationship of the two young people.

They favor a marriage with one of the daughters of the King and Queen of Italy, who are easily the two most beautiful and healthy princesses in Europe, probably because of the blood of the sturdy Montenegrin peasants which they have inherited from their mother's side.

The result is apt to be a compromise, for there is much talk in court circles of Princess Elizabeth of Roumania, daughter of the Roumanian Crown Prince, as the most likely next Princess of Wales. No one has thought of asking the Prince, who will, of couse, meekly submit to the choice of his parents.

For MILADY'S WARDROBE

By MME. HAUTE MONDE.

A NOVELTY of the season is the long glove of dark gray suede worn with white or pale tinted muslins. The innovation looks rather odd at first sight, but is really charming and artistic.

• • •

With the exaggeratedly decollete necks short sleeves are worn in the house. Sometimes the arms are covered with fine lace mittens, but far more often they are left bare, save for a veiling of tulle illusion. Here I must again mention that scarfs of tulle illusion are worn at all hours of the day and with almost every kind of costume.

• • •

Many of the newest rest gowns are accordion pleated from waist to hem, the material used being fine muslin or equally fine Indian silk. Then a picture mantle of lace or pale tinted chiffon is thrown in; a wide sash is wound round the waist; sweet-scented flowers are arranged at the breast and the boudoir cap is donned.

• • •

Leghorn is immensely popular this year, not only for dressy summer millinery, but also for simple tailored hats to be worn with linen and cotton frocks of the same genre, or with light tailored wool suits. They are deliciously comfortable and easy on the head, and will encroach on the field in which Panamas hitherto have reigned alone. The latter are shown in new shapes this season, a Panama sailor being one of the novelties.

• • •

All Panamas are smaller, the inclination being to a medium size, with a mannish crown and a comparatively narrow brim turned down part way around. Another popular shape is almost exactly that of the regular farmer's straw hat, rolling at the sides. Plain ribbon bands are tied in a flat bow, with ends falling onto the brim. The ribbon loops, characteristic of the season's millinery, are used on some of the Panamas also, but are placed at the left side toward the back.

• • •

A great deal of moire is worn this season, bloth black and colors. Lovely shades are obtainable in lime green, deep cream, blue, dull gold and gray. For a smart tailored suit moire makes an admirable selection.

• • •

The French and the English have invented charming fashions for the child in the house, but it is to our own American designers that the child who wants to have the time of its young life in outdoor play must come to be ideally fitted. The beach rompers shown this season are enough to make one sigh to be made a child again. Beach aprons are a boon, too. They are made of blue denim, bound with red and embroidered (also in red) with the appropriate emblems of pail, shovel, and so forth. The pail design, planted squarely in the middle of the apron, is in reality a large pocket, which will certainly be the joy of the wearer.

• • •

Many girls from 14 years of age and upward are wearing white ninon or cotton crepe skirts with basqued coats of soft satin or silk embroidered round the edge and upper portion of the sleeve. These coats, which cross over to the left and fasten with two silk-covered buttons, have a soft frill of net or lace down the front, while the low turn-down collar has a bow of black velvet as a finish, the waist belt being embroidered in wool or floss silk. In willow and lizard green, pale blue, lavender and dull pink such coats look most effective with white skirts.

• • •

The inexpensive negligee gown for hot weather is of sheer stuff, and is usually white, or shows a floral pattern in delicate colors on a white ground. For these models, aside from the kimono, variations of the Empire effect are, perhaps, most in evidence, wide liberty satin ribbons run through wide embroidery beading, serving as a girdle and giving to the model more trimness than is common to robes which fall loose from the shoulders. The flowered muslin negligees are, as a rule, little trimmed, save for frills of Valenciennes lace to soften the edges.

• • •

Quite a feature of the season's styles is the little cutaway corsage that has a suggestion of the postillon back. This is generally made over a cream net corsage. At all events, the ensemble looks like a little coat put over a summer vest or blouse; but it is really all made in one. Sometimes the sleeves are of net, mousseline, or tulle illusion, and sometimes of the material of the cutaway, satin, silk, shantung or pongee.

• • •

This summer veils will be long and worn loosely flowing over the face. Frail shadow laces are in favor for them and washable Shetland of a filmy quality. Some have an open mesh over the face, and the design of the veil is not carried over the open weave part. These are named "frame veils" and are most of them woven of Italian silk.

• • •

Summer is the season for embroidery, and the woman who puts in her spare moments in the preparation of dresses for the little folks will have cause for thanksgiving later on. Most children now wear cotton frocks the year around. It is a far more cleanly custom than putting a child into a blue serge suit when autmun comes and having it wear the suit day after day as long as the threads will hold together.

• • •

Almost heel-less are the ultra-smart English walking boots in mannish style. These boots have pointed, receding toes, low buttoned tops and heels scarcely lift the foot above the pavement. These new boots are delightfully comfortable, but they are neither graceful nor dainty and look best in tan leather accompanying tailored or athletic garb. Patent leather boots, with buttoned tops of gray suede or dull black kid, are much more attractive with soft, draped skirts, and with white frocks white buttoned boots are in order.

BOGUS PRINCESS TALE OF RICHES WINS CLUBMEN

Frenchmen Accepted When They Propose, But She Departs With $12,000 Worth of Gems.

Special Cable to The American.

PARIS, July 5.—A prominent young Parisian clubman was visited recently by a handsome woman, who represented herself as "Princess Salam," and presented a letter of introduction purporting to be signed by Monseigneur Journe, Canon of Caracas, whom the clubman had met at a society drawing room.

The visitor related that she belonged to the Salam-Ryndurg family, Princess of the Holy Empire. She had married, she said, a nobleman connected with the Imperial family who had left her an immense fortune while in addition her private fortune amounted to $60,000,000. She now wished to reside permanently in France.

Clubman Proposes.

The clubman offered to do all he could to be useful to the "Princess". They met frequently, and at last the clubman proposed marriage and was accepted and he placed on the "Princess'" finger an engagement ring that had cost $6,000.

A few days later the "Princess" departed for Madrid ostensibly to settle family matters and to have an interview with King Alfonso, but in the meantime she had related the same story to another clubman, a friend of the first, who had also presented to her a $6,000 engagement ring.

After her departure one of her fiances discovered that his friend and himself had both been duped.

Worked Scheme Before.

The police informed him that the self-styled "Princess" was an adventuress named Adelaide Julia Madeline Jelle, born in Paris in 1874. Eleven years ago the police learned that she obtained jewelry under a similar pretext, and that in 1905 they had again been called upon to investigate her identity in connection with a case of blackmailing.

The "Princess" was arrested at the railway station on her return from Madrid.

Borrowers of Royal Property Alarmed

English Queen Makes Inventory and Requests Delinquents to Return Dead King's Loans.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, July 5.—Queen Mary, who is a most excellent housewife, with an innate hatred of useless waste and a pronounced love of antique furniture, has been conducting a systematic search of all the boxrooms in the immense Windsor Castle, comparing the contents with the official inventory lists.

As a result she has not only unearthed a great many forgotten old treasures carelessly thrown aside under the reign of her late father-in-law, who cared nothing for antiquities, but she also has discovered that a great many valuable articles of furniture were lent to personal friends of King Edward, who have never seen fit to return them.

All these aristocratic borrowers have now received a note from the court asking them to return the things without delay, which some of them will find rather hard, having sold or given away these things, which they always looked upon as presents from the King.

Refuses $150,000 to Give Up Her Marquis

Actress, However, Will Settle the Breach of Promise Suit Out of Court.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, July 5.—Owing to the tremendous influence being exerted by the family of the Marquis of Northampton the breach of promise suit brought against the Marquis by Miss Viola Moss, the musical comedy actress, will be settled before it can be brought to trial.

It was learned to-night that Miss Moss has refused an offer of $150,000 made by the family of the young Marquis, but the sister of the Marquis, Lady Loch, has insisted that her brother's love affairs shall not be recounted in court.

Lawyer Errs Badly In Drawing Own Will

Noted British Attorney Makes Legal Mistakes in Disposition of $2,000,000 Estate.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, July 5.—A noted English lawyer has been added to the long list of those who have drawn their wills badly. He was Sir Richard Nicholson, of Cleveland Gardens, Hyde Park W., lately Clerk of the Peace for London and Middlesex, and legal adviser to the late Lord Salisbury. He died in March, leaving an estate of nearly $2,000,000. About $200,000 of this was bequeathed to charities.

The will is dated April 13, 1898, and there are thirteen codicils. Affidavits of due execution were required because of alterations in the first, second and fifth codicils, and as to the misquotation of the date of another codicil.

Woman, 109, Does Not Believe In Food Fads

Celebrates Birthday By Eating Big Dinner—Walks Up Hill For Pension.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, July 5.—Mrs. Rebecca Clark, of High-road, Wood Green, celebrated her 109th birthday recently and was particularly cheerful at the celebration.

She rose about mid-day and ate a dinner of roast beef, potatoes and cauliflower, stewed fruit and custard, tea and a big piece of bread. "I never believed in being faddy about food," she declared. "Eat what you fancy and you'll be all right."

Mrs. Clark still walks up the hill to the postoffice on Fridays to draw her old-age pension, and "I'm sure I'll go on doing it for many a year yet," she said.

Count Eulenburg Is Most Decorated Man

Kaiser's Court Chamberlain Has 76 Orders—Can Not Wear All of Them.

Special Cable to The American.

BERLIN, July 5.—According to an enumeration just made of orders and decorations by the Kaiser, Count Eulenburg, the imperial court chamberlain, enjoys the distinction of being the most decorated man in the world.

Many prominent Germans have received orders to the number of 30 or more, but Eulenburg possesses 76, including some of the highest in Europe. It would be a physical impossibility for him to wear them all at the same time.

Kaiser Wilhelm in the 25 years since his accession to the throne has created 28 orders or decorations of various classes.

'Ought To See Spain's Queen Dance Tango'

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, July 5.—"The Spanish Queen dances the tabro with infinite grace," Miss Vacani, a noted instructor in dancing, told a number of women of the nobility at a ball given by Mrs. James McDonald, wife of the Standard Oil Viceroy in England.

"If you could see her, you would never look upon it as vulgar or impossible for the modern ballroom. She has been carefully instructed and is an able pupil."

She did not refer to the surplus weight which greatly burdens the Queen in all active exercises.

Special Cable to The American.

VIENNA, June 5.—A Ruthenian student named Zachailo, who murdered a professor in the Lemberg Training College, was besieged in the college building with his fellow students and seevral of them were wounded before the murderer surrendered to the police.

Zachailo was enraged because Herr Butkowski, a Polish professor, informed him that he had failed in an examination. He produced a revolver during a lecture and shot Herr Butkowski dead.

The other students agreed to protect Zachailo and barricaded the doors of the college. When the police arrived shots were exchanged and two students were seriously hurt. The door was finally broken down, the students overpowered and Zachailo arrested.

She is the prisoner of the chief of the hostile Beni Bouyahi tribe, but is said to be well treated.

The case recalls a similar occurrence in 1836, when a French girl, Mlle. Lanternier, was captured and placed in the chief's harem. She was converted to the faith of Islam, and the Sultan, Abdul Aziz, was her grandchild.

Special Cable to The American.

ROME, July 5.—The mystery of the murder of Gennaro Renzullo at Naples in 1907 by the secret Camorra, has been solved.

It has been discovered by the police that the man was enticed by a woman to the neighborhood of the anatomical laboratory. After members of the society had murdered their victim they placed his remains in the laboratory, where they were used for research purposes.

WOMAN LETS BOY DROWN FOR FEAR OF SPOILING CLOTHES

LONDON, July 5.—At Atherstone, Warwickshirt, a little boy named William Rowntree, fell into the canal and was drowned.

Another boy, aged nine, who had been playing with him, told the police that a man was preparing to plunge into the water to save Rowntree, but was stopped by a woman, who said he would spoil his clothes.

ASQUITH IS MENTIONED FOR LORD CHIEF JUSTICE

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, July 5.—The latest rumor in regard to the Lord Chief Justiceship is that Premier Asquith is likely to accept the post himself. It was rumored a few days ago that Sir Rufus Isaacs, the Attorney General, would probably be appointed to fill this high office, although it was expected that such action would arouse sharp criticism of the Prime Minister because of the connection of the Attorney General with speculation in Marconi shares.

ACCIDENTS CUT LARGE FIGURE IN DIXIE RACE

Mobile Is Hit Hard by Injuries to Star Players—Jacobson and Starr Out.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., July 5. Announcement from Mobile that "Baby Doll" Jacobson and Charley Starr will be out of the game for weeks adds another chapter to the longest list of serious accidents that ever marred a Southern League season. While Gillespie, of Chattanooga; Yantz, of New Orleans, and Dilger, of Birmingham, are the only players who have been knocked out for the season, many others have been hurt so seriously as to prevent them from participating in the pastimes of their clubs for weeks.

Repeated accidents have necessitated pitchers and catchers working in many games out of their positions. Mobile has utilized Campbell and Hogg. 'Andsome 'Arry McIntyre has subbed on numerous occasions. Memphis has played few games without the services of Old George Merritt. Chattanooga used Hannah and Golden in utility roles, and Atlanta had Catcher Graham in the outfield for weeks, and these all in addition to the regular utility man who is on the payroll of each club.

* * *

MOBILE has been perhaps the most unfortunate of all in recent weeks, though the Gulls were remarkably lucky while obtaining their long lead. The Gulls missed Paulet for a few games at the start, Campbell going to right and Robertson to first. Then they got together and with a regular line-up began to climb rapidly, soon amassing a big lead. Two weeks ago hard luck returned and today finds the Gulls much nearer the rest of the teams and still slipping. Starr suffered a broken hand and still carries the injured member in a sling. Jacobson's injury is more serious as a permanent problem. It consists of a strained side and fever which has weakened him so that he may not play for two months.

Chattanooga's dose at the hands of fate is well known. Jimmy Gillespie is out for the year and drawing a salary from the coffers of the club while he recovers from the effect of a terrible blow on the head by a ball pitched by Hardgrove. Kid Elberfeld is now out of the game from another "beaning" process, and at least one game, if not two, has already been lost on account of the mishap. The team was fortunate in having a utility man to thrust into the breach in Williams, and in the Gillespie case in getting another third sacker who, while not quite as good as Jimmy, is good enough to keep third base from being a sieve.

Birmingham is another club that has suffered heavily. Dilger, the Barons' first catcher and one of the best throwers in the league, was the first to receive a serious injury and a break to put him out of it for the year. The club's two highest-priced players, who cost $5,000 to purchase them—Knisely and McDonald—have been repeatedly out of the game on account of injuries or sickness. Marcan has also been crippled, but forced to play most of the time from dire necessity. The Baron list was increased last week by a most serious blow. Hardgrove, the club's leading pitcher, being struck in the face by a batted ball and rendered hors de combat for weeks.

* * *

MEMPHIS was always "jonahed," and Bernhard has had a hospital list full ever since he took the reins of the club. This year the absence of Schweitzer doubtless has injured the club considerably. Center Fielder Love has also been out frequently. Bill has been able to keep his infield intact, however, and with battery men also unscathed has been much more fortunate than in former seasons.

Atlanta has had but two serious mishaps since the season started. Bailey was out for several weeks with a strain. Chapman, the second catcher, has just returned to the game on account of a broken finger, and Joe Dunn has wilted under the strain of too much work behind the counting station.

Nashville has been uniformly lucky. Young was ill for a time during the first of the season, but the infield has presented an unbroken front up to Goalby's injury this week.

Down at New Orleans, George Yantz's fatal "broken slide" to second in a game with Chattanooga in May put him out of commission until August, with a busted ankle. Other members of the Pels have been out for a few days with minor injuries, but the blow to Yantz was the most serious.

* * *

THE league's record of the past four seasons is liberally sprinkled with injuries to star players—Scotty Walker, Champ Osteen, Roy Ellam and many others being knocked out for practically entire seasons and leaving weak spots which were rarely patched up. And, generally, the pennant-winning club has been the one fortunate enough to escape the hospital.

The frequent serious injuries to regular players make the utility man a valuable institution. How the Southern clubs managed to drag along without one in the old fourteen-men-limit days seems almost a mystery now. Rohe, of Atlanta; Sentell, of Mobile; Breen, of Montgomery; Atz and McIntyre, of New Orleans; Merritt, of Memphis; Carroll, of Birmingham, and Williams, of Chattanooga, have done some yeoman service in the Southern flag chase, even though they don't play in every game. Doubtless, ere this, Bill Schwartz regrets that he tied a can to Summers, his man-of-all-work, as Goalby was injured a day after Summers departed.

CONNIE MACK WANTS FORD; WOULD TRADE OUTFIELDER

PHILADELPHIA, July 5.—Connie Mack is willing to let New York have one of his extra outfielders, Jimmy Walsh or Pete Daley, the coast star, provided Frank Chance desires to turn over to him Russell Ford. Mack, when asked concerning the report which emanated from New York that Chance desired an Athletic outfielder, stated he would be willing to hand over either player mentioned for Ford.

"But, you know," said Mack, with that quizzical smile of his, "there is no hope of getting Chance to let Ford come our way."

New System for Olympic Games

Big Change in Rules Planned

NEW YORK, July 5.—The initial steps toward systematizing and standardizing the Olympic games of the future will be taken within a month at Berlin. On August 20-24 there will be held the first conference of the provisionally formed International Amateur Athletic Federation, at which time a world-wide track and field governing body will be established. Representatives from the national amateur sport-controlling body of every civilized country have been invited to attend, and a real working agreement and basis for future international meets will be established.

At the present time the committee in charge of the federation affairs consists of P. L. Fisher, Great Britain; Pierre Roy, France; Carl Diem, Germany; H. Stankovits, Hungary, and James E. Sullivan, United States. These committeemen, in addition to a number of other delegates, will assemble in Berlin several days before the opening of the conference in order to discuss in an informal way the plans and scope of the new organization. To the athletes of the world the recommendations of the I. A. A. F. to the international Olympic committee will be of great interest. While the new body has not the slightest authority in matters pertaining to the Olympic games, its recommendations will undoubtedly carry much weight with the Olympic games committee when that body meets a year later at Berlin to plan for the Olympic meet of 1916.

Will Suggest Reforms.

This is particularly true because it is known that the I. A. A. F. will suggest a number of radical reforms, which, backed by the athletic governing bodies of such nations as the United States, Great Britain, Sweden, Germany, France, Finland and the British colonies, are likely to be incorporated into the permanent Olympic games code to be prepared at the conference of 1914.

It will be strongly urged that the Olympic committee adopt a standard set of track and field events at recognized distances and weights to hold for all time, and that this program be separate and distinct from such usual Olympic sidelights as skating, yachting, polo, tennis and other modern features of sporting competition. No objection to these sports will be interposed by the I. A. A. F., but it will be suggested that they be held as distinct and apart from the standard Olympic program.

The American delegates, consisting of Gustavus Kerby, Colonel Robert M. Thompson, James E. Sullivan, Barton S. Weeks and Joseph B. Maccabe, will ask the new association to suggest that a number of perpetual trophies be secured and awarded during the games at Berlin in 1916. These will include a grand international trophy for the winner of the greatest number of points in all the recognized Olympic sports of the meet, together with a number of minor trophies for the winning nations in track competition, swimming, wrestling, cycling and similar tests—these trophies to be held for three years and then returned to the country holding the succeeding meet.

The question of the measurement methods of future games also will be discussed. At present the Olympic meets are based upon the metric system, whereas the leading athletic nations of the world use yards and feet in measuring track and field sports. It appears likely that this proposed reform will fail, however, owing to the fact that the metric system has been used in Olympic games since the ancient meets in Athens and is really a better understood system, from an international standpoint, than that afforded by the English measuring methods.

No Way to Compare Men.

At present there is no way of comparing the best efforts of the world's leading athletic performers under the two systems. For example, the 100 yards, a standard sprint in America, England, Australasia, Canada and South Africa, is nine yards one foot and one inch short of the 100-meter sprint. Despite this clash in the two measuring systems, it is probable that the point of substituting the English for the metric system will be passed if the countries most interested can secure a standardized set of Olympic events. This in itself would be a great advantage and assistance to countries preparing to enter teams, since it would permit the program to be known several years in advance. In addition, it will bar the local Olympic committees from inserting in the schedules a number of events or contests which are intended purely for home athletic talent and which continue for a period of time which absolutely bars foreign entrants from continuing in the competition.

FIFTY YEARS OF ATHLETICS PUTS AMERICA ON TOP

James C. Sullivan Writes on the Value of Exercising for Youths of United States.

By James E. Sullivan.

Secretary-Treasurer of A. A. U. and "Father of Amateur Athletics."

NEARLY half a century has passed since the introduction of amateur track and field sports into this country, and in this long lapse it has frequently been asked what was the real object of those early pioneers of athletics.

It is a question not very difficult to answer. They wanted fresh air and exercise for themselves and to set a good example to the youth of America for after time. I allude to men like the late William B. Curtis, Harry E. Buermeyer and many others, men 50 years in advance of their time, who foresaw the growing need of physical development and outdoor exercise.

Had not the wisdom of these old-timers prevailed, where would America be to-day in amateur athletics, especially with regard to our rating in the Olympic games? Why, we would be worse off than Russia, Denmark or Austria, nations which have not so far produced a first-rate performer either on track or field. We lead the world, and the American athletes have taken the championship in every Olympiad since the first revival in 1896.

Americans Should Improve.

As to future Olympic fixtures, I see no reason why we should not continue to carry off the point honors, for, to my mind, we will continue to grow better from year to year, as the exploration of new districts will surely produce new material. This introduction of new material means everything. An instance of the force of the last statement is that of the State of Utah. Ten years ago if a man had talked of a world's champion coming from Utah he would have been ridiculed, yet at the last Olympic games in Stockholm Almah Richards, of Brigham Young University, Utah, was the hero of the running high jump, and is to-day the greatest natural jumper the world has ever seen.

Athletics a Religion.

For the boys athletics has simply instituted an eighth-day religion, as it were. It has taught him that in order to be a success in either track or field he must be good, morally and physically.

To participate in school sports nowadays the boy is impressed with the idea that he must first of all observe the rules of the sport, and that under no circumstances can he use abusive language to his superior or to another boy. Should the boy be guilty of any of these things there is always a referee at hand to discipline him and point out the error without being harsh or unduly severe. The honesty of competition is also brought home to the youth. If he cuts the course, shoulders another boy, does not touch off in a relay, he suffers a just disqualification, and thus it is shown to him, in the most convincing manner that, after all, honesty is the best policy.

Johnston Will Steal 100 Bases This Year

Chattanooga Lad Has Already Pilfered 50 Sacks in 85 Games With Seals.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., July 5.—Jimmy Johnston, the Chattanooga lad now with San Francisco, is setting up a new stolen base mark in the Pacific Coast League. He has already stolen over 50 bases in 85 games and at this rate will steal far more than 100 bases in a season. Jimmy hopes to make the mark at least 125 before the season is over, a record that has never been equaled in the annals of the professional sport.

A sample of the work Jimmy is doing is seen in the following excerpt from The San Francisco Examiner regarding a game against Venice in which Jimmy recently participated:

"Jimmy Valentine Johnston stole yesterday's ball game right out from beneath the nostrils of H. Hogan's Venetians. Jeems' little stunt came in the ninth inning, when our beloved Seals were one run behind after one of the slowest and curiously enough one of the most thrilling, nerve-racking battles the season has yet produced.

"This wholesale robbery on the part of James Valentine Johnston made the score a tie. It also made it possible for the Seals to win out in the tenth."

Two Major Castoffs Are Sure to Return

Morgan and McQuillan Do Great Work for Class AA League Clubs.

Two pitchers who were cast off by major league clubs seem destined for another try in the big show next year. They are Cy Morgan, of Kansas City, and George McQuillan, of Columbus.

Failure to keep in condition was responsible for both of them departing the major circuits. Both have settled down, and either would help out a lot of clubs that are now faltering.

Morgan and McQuillan have already won over 15 games this season.

Mons. Hedges should have no regrets at having traded Lefty George for George Stovall. Lefty won six and lost eight battles for the Toledo club, where he was sent after being found wanting at Cleveland.

HOBBY'S BROTHER A STAR; GAINING FAME AS SLUGGER

CINCINNATI, OHIO, July 5.—Clinton Hoblitzel, younger brother of Dick Hoblitzel, of the Cincinnati Reds, has been elected captain of the High School baseball team of Parkersburg, W. Va., for the season of 1914. The selection was made by the unanimous vote of his teammates.

Young Hoblitzel is an outfielder and a heavy sticker in his class, giving promise of following in the footsteps of his distinguished brother, who started his baseball career as captain of this same school team.

MANY WANT THE BASEBALL THAT LASTED ENTIRE GAME

CINCINNATI, July 5.—Manager Joe Tinker is busying himself to-day turning down requests for the baseball that lasted throughout the entire game Sunday between the Reds and Cubs. It is believed that this is the only time in major league history that one ball continued in play from the beginning to the end of a full game.

LOSS OF GREAT TRIO BREAKS UP PIRATES' TEAM

Retirement of Clarke and Sale of Leach Put Big Hole in the Pittsburg Squad.

CINCINNATI, OHIO, July 5.—For a dozen years the Pittsburg Pirates have served as a pennant contender in the National League and their unexpected slump is the mystery of the 1913 race in the Lynch organization.

What has caused the team picked last winter to fight it out all the way to slip down into the second division has not been analyzed, but according to scribes here with the Corsairs the absence of that famous combination, Clarke-Wagner-Leach, is responsible for the downfall of the Pirates.

Since the day the Louisville and Pittsburg clubs consolidated and the stars of the Colonels—Clarke, Wagner, Leach, Ritchie, Phillippe and others—went to Pittsburg the Smoke Town organization has been right up there each year in the pennant chase.

Queer to See 'Em Down.

To see the Pirates trailing down in the second division is something unusual. For these dozen past years the Pirates have had Clarke, Wagner and Leach. And during the twelve seasons Pittsburg always was one of the main factors in deciding what team would be the pennant winners.

On four occasions the Pirates reigned supreme in the circuit. In 1901, 1902, 1903, the Pirates won the pennant and then in 1909 Clarke with his great combination repeated and topped the season by winning the world's series from the Detroit Tigers.

But now all that remains of the marvelous trio is Honus Wagner. Clarke retired in 1911 and in the middle of last year Barney Dreyfuss put through a trade with the Chicago Cubs which took Leach away.

Breaking up the great trio, Clarke now is trying to rebuild his forces. He is buying all promising recruits but finds it almost impossible to get successors not only for Tommy the Wee, but himself.

When Kitty Bransfield left the Pirates, Skipper Fred had a difficult task locating a competent first sacker and not until he converted Second Baseman "Dots" Miller into a first baseman did he succeed.

And now comes his troubles in developing outfielders to take the place of the positions covered by Leach and himself.

Must Fill Wagner's Place.

Probably when Clarke is lucky and picks up a pair of juvenile stars then he will have to find somebody to relieve that ancient and marvelous Wagner. At present, Honus is in the big arena on his nerve alone. So long as Hans can put on a glove and move about he'll be at short for the Pirates, but the information comes that even the burly Teuton is about ready to retire.

Johnson Has 'Made' Baseball

Instituted Much Needed Reforms

By W. J. McBeth.

NEW YORK, July 5.—Organized baseball owes much to Ban Johnson. He broke in as a rebel chief, but once firmly established in power, became the big Czar Johnson through his American League instituting a number of long-needed reforms. He made of the much-abused umpire a national figure instead of a "scapegoat," and by forcing respect for him from the player eventually commanded also the veneration of fandom. It was Johnson who was largely instrumental in stamping out all forms of rowdyism upon the field. And when he had forced recognition to equality from the National League, he was one of the leading spirits for peace and good will toward one happy, concerted union for the common good.

The Johson regime marked a new era in professional baseball. He was at first looked upon with suspicion. It was not believed at the time he expanded to major league distinction that there was room for two big circuits. He not only proved that there was, but by furnishing the big cities of the country which are now represented in both National and American with high-class sport every day throughout the entire playing season, added such an impetus toward universal patronage that the great pastime has gone booming on more and more steadily with each succeeding season.

Competition is the life of all healthy sport, and so the American League, as a rival to the National, was just the proper thing to arouse such interest as is manifested at present. But for Ban Johnson's invasion of the parent major league territory it is doubtful if there would be any steel and concrete stands to-day. And it is doubtful also if Ty Cobbs would be demanding $15,000 salaries. For after the old war days the pay never did adjust itself to former planes.

Square Deal His Motto.

Wherefore, the American League—which, in the opinion of Mr. Johnson, is, after all, the only major league doing business—has the heartfelt thanks of all well wishers of the game. It has always been very popular with the public, and especially with the playing fraternity, for it has always stood for a square deal both for the patrons and the public. Still baseball frenzy is a law unto itself, and the very rivalry, friendly as it may be between the two major leagues, has left along the trail of the last decade two distinctive factions in fandom. One faction worships at the shrine of the National and another at the footstool of the American League.

Ever since the American League began to cater to the public fandom has argued over the relative strengths and merits of the two major leagues. The debate never will be closed so long as both continue to do business. The patronage of each is loyal still, and in the division of opinion lies the secret of box office receipts. A fan is ever open to argument; to conviction, never.

Leagues Are on a Par.

Baseball writers in the big cities where both major leagues are established are rather an unbiased lot. They are generally of the opinion that there is no appreciable difference in the respective strengths of the big leagues. And why should there be? The present-day magnate stands ready to sacrifice the limit of profits in the hunt for talent. Each club has its scouts scouring the country for new players. There is little choice among the rival managers. Each circuit boasts its great popular heroes.

There was a time when the American League overshadowed its tottering rival. That was back in the war days of ten years and more ago. The young circuit, in the hands of young and vigorous capitalists who had gone in on a gamble, put up the money to rob the National League of its best known stars. There was such an exodus of talent from the parent major that the old-established organization was left weak, indeed.

NORDYKE QUITS AS UMPIRE.

PORTLAND, July 5.—Lou Nordyke, veteran player, telegraphed from Spokane his resignation as umpire of the Northwest League to Fielder Jones, president of the league. "I could get along with the boys when I was one of them," telegraphed Nordyke, "but as an umpire they look different."

O'ROURKE SIGNS CONTRACT TO MANAGE CARL MORRIS

NEW YORK, July 5.—Tom O'Rourke has signed a contract to manage Carl Morris, the Oklahoma giant, for a period of three years, and as soon as there is a chance for a match here Morris will start for this city.

O'Rourke also holds a contract on the services of Albert Palzer, who is out on the Iowa farm, rapidly regaining his health and strength. Palzer recently submitted to a serious operation by a New York surgeon. It was successful, and the big fighter now feels sure that he will whip all the white hopes.

Until Palzer is able to stand training O'Rourke intends to develop Morris. The veteran manager says that Morris' great strength and pluck are unexcelled by any of the leading heavyweights, and that Carl simply lacks knowledge of ring tactics. As soon as he learns how to hit, O'Rourke believes that the Oklahoma mastodon will reclimb the ladder.

COURTNEY ADVISES NEW DATE FOR CREW RACES

ITHACA, N. Y., July 5.—Coach Charles E. Courtney, of Cornell, today sounded a warning to crews of visiting colleges to hold the Poughkeepsie crew races next year under more favorable tide conditions.

He said that during some of the recent races the tide was against the shells, and for this reason they could not have won.

This was true of the Pennsylvania and Washington four-oared crews, he said.

REULBACH TIRED OF CUBS; AFTER BERTH WITH REDS

CINCINNATI, OHIO, July 5.—Ed Reulbach, one of the Cub premiers in the days of pennant winners at Chicago, wants to get away from the Cubs and would like to see President Murphy trade him either to Joe Tinker's Reds or to the Boston Braves. "A change of scenery would do me a lot of good," said Reulbach. "Murphy has treated me all right, but I don't seem able to win for the Cubs."

TINKER TELLS PITCHERS NOT TO WALK SLUGGERS

CINCINNATI, OHIO, July 5.—Joe Tinker, boss of the Reds, has ordered the abandonment of an extremely ancient custom—that of passing a heavy hitter to get at a weak one. No trick in the valendar causes as much wrath among the bugs as this, but Tinker isn't playing to popular approval in ordering his pitchers to discontinue the idea.

What's the use? says Joe. The percentage, even with a big slugger, is 3 to 1 against him and in favor of the pitcher. Why not go right after him? Why decrease your own per cent of advantage by putting another runner on the bases, especially when the other fellows can yank out their weak hitter and send a tough pinch hitter in his place? That play is off the map for his club hereafter.

YANKEES' NEW BALL PARK WILL BE READY IN 1914

NEW YORK, July 5.—Announcement was made to-day by officials of the New York Americans that its new baseball plant would be ready for occupancy when the 1914 season opens. The plant is located on Washington Heights, just a short distance from the old Highland grounds, and will be one of the finest in the country. It will cost over $400,000. The Yankees, homeless this season, are playing at the Polo Grounds.

NO BASEBALL FOR EWING; STICKS TO LIFE ON FARM

BELLEFONTAINE, OHIO, July 5. "I can't get away from the farm," is the reply of Bob Ewing, former National League pitcher, to Manager Bade Myers, of the Canton Interstate team, in response to Myers' request that Ewing join his pitching staff. Ewing is living in retirement on a big farm in Auglaize County.

HICKMAN IS SCOUT FOR NAPS.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, July 5.—Charley Hickman, the old Toledo player, now coaching the University of West Virginia team, is to go with the Cleveland club as a scout.

VOLS MUST GET BUSY; TEAM IS SLUMPING FAST

Failure to Secure Ameida and Dodge From Reds Puts Big Hole in Team.

NASHVILLE, TENN., July 5.—Will wonders never cease? The Vols have at last stuck a few plugs in the numerous punctures in their inner wall of defense, by landing a batch of new faces for their line-up. While the bugs were waiting, breathless, for William ("Alibi") Hirsig to round up the cream of the Cincinnati Reds, Bill Schwartz got tired of fooling with his boss and hustled around and annexed Infielder Baumgartner from the Macon Sally Leaguers while the Vols' mogul was editing a story about Tinker sending Third Sacker Granfield to Nashville, after Dodge and Almeida had failed to come.

The poor old Vols have been floundering about since Kitty Goalby had his fin punctured by Dave Robertson's spikes, and the only crumb of comfort in the disaster was the hope that the accident would force Hirsig to shell out for some real ball players.

Granfield a Mystery.

Just as everybody expected, waivers could not be secured on the Cuban Almeida, and Dodge, hitting like a house afire, was too valuable a man for the Reds to turn loose. Hence Mr. Granfield, if one happens to be so affected by the intense heat that one can have faith in Hirsig's statements. Outside of the fact that Granfield is reported to be a third baser, he seems to have no antecedents at all. Where he came from or what his record is is as big a mystery as who hit Billy Patterson.

But Baumgartner, who will relieve Brackenridge, the pitching second-third sacker, comes highly touted in all departments, except in the hit-and-run column, which fact isn't causing anybody to be hilarious over his arrival in camp. There are already too many weak sisters on the team handling the ash, the wretched Vols seldom being able to pry more than five bingles off any twirler's delivery, and at the same time sandwiching in about half as many bobbles as hits, which is about the real reason for their miserable showing at present.

Doak Fails to Report.

Nothing has been heard of Pitcher Doak, the star of the Interstate League, who was to be traded for Charlie Case. But the fault of the lowly Vols' showing isn't all with the slabbers, for Mathewson or Walter Johnson couldn't bring home the bacon did their pals fail to push a tally or two across for them, as is the habit of Hirsig's hired men. They did get Phil Redding from the Cardinals, together with a thousand real dollars, in exchange for big Harry Glenn, who with Akron has been clouting the ball in terrific fashion, and landed Adams, a big right-hander from Savannah, paying $1,500 for the Sally League flinger. None but Hirsig can imagine what he intends to do with all these slabmen. Maybe he intends to trade the entire gang for one real, honest and true batter, who can do more toward lifting the poor old crippled Vols out of the ruck than all the pitchers in the world.

Not a bug in town but sympathizes with Bill Schwartz, who, it is admitted, can do wonders with a bunch of bushers, but it's thumbs down for the boss with the 10-karat alibi who sits calmly by and hopes that somebody will walk up and hand him a perfectly good ball player.

Heisman Gives Advice to Umpires

Arbiters Should Follow Plays

By J. W. Heisman.

IN my last story I wrote of the way an umpire should handle the decisions that come up in a ball game while he is standing back of the catcher and home plate. Problems of a somewhat different nature often confront him when he takes his stand out in the field of play behind the pitcher.

The umpire should take this latter position whenever a man gets on base, with the idea of being nearer to the scene of action in case he should be called upon to render a base decision.

From this position he will find that he has a better view of the plate and of pitched balls than when behind the catcher, for the reason that the pitcher in front of him will not interfere so much with his view of these plays as does a catcher.

Standing behind the pitcher an umpire must always be expectant of the pitcher or catcher throwing to a base to nail a runner, and he should be sure to follow the play carefully or else he will find that something has happened without his knowledge. He should be quick to apprehend a throw of the pitcher down to second, and be sure to jump quickly out of the way.

Must Get Close to Play.

The point that I consider most important of all for an umpire to bear in mind, is to get as close as possible to the base at which you expect to have to make a decision, without being or getting in the way of the play itself.

Suppose a man is on first and the batter hits safely to right with the hit and run on. It is certain the runner on first will attempt to take third on the hit, and the right fielder will make his throw to that sack. In such case the umpire ought to be within a couple of feet of third base at the time the throw and the runner get there, in order that he may be in the best possible position to judge. The same rule holds good for other plays at other bases; and if it appears that there is likely to be a double play he should have the second play in mind and get after that one also. For the life of me I can't understand why so many umpires think all in the world they have to do is to stand in one place, look wise and make the best guess they can. If they would only MOVE and get about the field, the same as a referee and umpire have to do in football, they would find themselves working into positions where they could give decisions that would meet with more general satisfaction.

Take the case of a fly ball or line drive hit right down the first or third base line. Often enough an umpire has plenty of time in which to run over and sight along the line before the ball hits the ground, but half of them never stir out of their tracks. This is the result of laziness and such a man is unfit to umpire a game; if it is mere thoughtlessness the fault should be corrected, and can easily be.

Don't Argue With Players.

Some players seem born to kick in all games, whether they are captain or not. If I were umpiring a game I would never listen to anybody but the captain, and not him except in case of his differing with me as to the wording or interpretation of a rule, never in case of a question of fact. There is no reason on earth why baseball players should be allowed to argue and delay games as much as they do. It is not permitted in tennis, basket ball, football, track or any other sports. In fact, it would be very bad form for players to question an official's decision in other sports the way they do in baseball, and certainly in no other country are officials treated with the general discourtesy that we see exhibited by players to umpires in every baseball game in this country.

But if, in umpiring a game, I found I had made a mistake, whether in interpreting a rule or in deciding a question of fact, I would certainly have no hesitation whatever in reversing my decision on the spot. The prevalent idea that after an umpire has once made a decision he can not change it is nonsense. Of course he could not do so after the game had gone on a while, other players come to the bat, etc. But if before any further playing has been done the umpire ascertains that he has made a mistake he can undoubtedly reverse his decision. In fact, we see it done every day. An umpire calls the runner safe, but right after, or soon thereafter, observes that the fielding player or baseman did not catch and held the ball as he, the umpire, at first supposed he had. Clearly the runner should have been called safe, and what choice has the umpire but to reverse his decision and call him so?

Umps Fooled in Trapped Ball.

Quite often an umpire is called upon to decide whether an outfielder caught a ball before it touched the ground or whether he got it on a trap. Too many umpires are fooled by the clever acting of the outfielder who pretends always that he caught it on the fly, whether he really did or not. Umpires should entirely disregard the actions and behavior of the player after getting the ball, and judge entirely from the way his eyes saw the play. This same proposition confronts an umpire every time he has to make a base decision where the runner only got the base, if at all, by a clever slide around behind the baseman and the latter had a hard time getting to him to put the ball on him. Both players will try to "pull the wool" over the umpire's eyes by their actions, which should be strictly disregarded. The only way to make sure that your eyesight alone shall be the test of whether the man is out or not is to run close up on the play and BE ON HAND so you can see for yourself.

Many first basemen have a habit of pulling their heel off the bag before they catch the ball. An umpire should be careful to note whether the first baseman's foot is in contact with the sack at the instant of catching the ball or not. He should also be sure to follow the course of the runner all the way around the diamond and observe whether he touches all the bases. Most umpires are watching the fielding of the ball, which is really none of their affair at all, instead of watching what the base runner is doing. The ball will come in all right some way or other, and it is proper that you should have your eyes on what is happening on the bases rather than the way the outfielders are getting the ball back into the diamond.

Umpires must also take firmly in hand the matter of spectators crowding out toward or upon the diamond. If he can not get them back himself he should hold the home management responsible for this disorder, and, after giving them a reasonable time in which to get the spectators back, he should notify them that unless they succeed in clearing them away within two minutes more he will award the game to the visiting team.

Arbiters Should Know Rules.

Umpiring is like playing in one respect, and that is that the more experience one gets the more proficient are they apt to become. That and these few hints may be of much benefit to one contemplating doing some of this work; but above all make sure that you know the rules. You may think you know them because you have a general idea of how the game is played, but anyone who thinks they know every rule in baseball will do well to go right out and buy a rulebook and read it through very carefully from beginning to end, and if they don't find at least a dozen things in the game that they never heard of before the circus lemonade is on me.

Thomson Will Face Many Good Rivals

Platt Adams, Mercer, Donahue and Other Stars to Compete Against Present Champion.

LOS ANGELES, CAL., July 5.—With the entries for the all-around championships, which will be held here on Bovard Field July 12, the outlook for the coming event is exceedingly good. Many coast athletes who could undoubtedly have made good records in all-around championships in years past are taking the opportunity to enter the coming classic and that Fred C. Thomson, the present champion, will have to look for his laurels in the coming event goes without a doubt.

Probably the most serious contenders for the present champion will be Mercer, the phenomenal Quaker, who has startled the Eastern critics with his work of late; Platt Adams, of the New York A. C.; James Donohue, of the L. A. A. C.; Ed Beeson, of California, and Ollie Snedigar, the Olympic Club representative. All of these men are first-class performers, better in some events than in others, but can hardly be given credit as such first-class performers as Thomson until they have shown in the all-around tryouts.

AURORA MAY GET FRANCHISE.

AURORA, ILL., July 5.—A majority of the directors of the local baseball association favor going back into the Wisconsin-Illinois League, and it is certain that Aurora will take over Milwaukee's franchise. The directors are expected to formally approve the proposition when they meet Monday night.

Dubuc Throws Curves With Three Motions

DETROIT, MICH., July 5.—Jean Dubuc, the French-Canadian pitcher of the Tigers, attributes his success as an American League pitcher to the fact that he can deliver his curves, his slow ball and his fast ball with three different motions and have control of the ball at the same time.

"Years ago, when I was pitching with Notre Dame College, I learned that speed without control was valueless; I always had pretty fair control of my delivery, but with the acquired knowledge I began perfecting different deliveries and gaining control of the ball in each," says Jean.

"It took years of patient effort to acquire the delivery I now have, but I believe it is one of the least trying on the arm and shoulder muscles for the reason that I put the weight of my body behind the pitches and do not depend on the strength of my arm to send up a fast ball.

"I worked with my slow ball for three months before I could get a curve to it, and after that it took me three years to perfect the delivery."

Reds Are Composed Of Young Pastimers

Cincinnati Expert Ridicules Yarn That Club Is Home for Aged Ball Players.

CINCINNATI, July 5.—Criticism was made on the personnel of the Cincinnati Reds recently that the players are too old to deliver the goods and that that is the reason why they have occupied last place so long. The critic declares that the Cincinnati club was an old man's home and could never win until new life was instilled into it by the substitution of young men for the alleged "old-timers," who were said to be cluttering up the field.

Investigation shows that nothing could be further from the truth. As a matter of fact, the Reds, as now constituted, are one of the youngest clubs in the league.

Joe Tinker naturally is the oldest man in the regular line-up, and Joe is only 32 years old, and as fast as he ever was. Hoblitzel is only 24, though he has four years of experience as a major league first baseman.

Heine Groh is a youngster, and so is John Dodge, the latter having just passed his twentieth birthday. The infield is the youngest in the league, for if Almeida plays third he is only 26, and does not bring the average up very much. In the outfield Bob Bescher, the oldest man out there, is only 28, while Josh Devore is 24 and Marsans 25.

Some of the pitchers and catchers are older men, of course, which is as it should be. John Kling, the veteran of the club, is 37, but still in excellent form. Tom Clarke, who has been doing most of the work behind the bat this year, is only 24, and Earl Blackburn, the third backstop, has just turned 20.

CAMPI TO MEET WINNER OF LEDOUX-WILLIAMS GO

LOS ANGELES, July 5.—Eddie Campi, the Pacific Coast bantamweight, has been engaged by Tom McCarey, fight promoter, to meet the winner of the Charlie Ledoux-Kid Williams fight which will be staged here on July 15. Campi recently defeated Ledoux in a 20-round battle.

CARNEY PUTS IN FIRST CHALLENGE TO PLAY DE ORO

ST. LOUIS, MO., July 5.—The next match for the world's three-cushion championship will be played between Alfredo DeOro and Joe Carney. Frank Benson, the local billiard impresario, received word Friday morning that Carney, the Denver cueist, had placed his challenge ahead of all other performers, and would meet DeOro when the fall season starts in September.

It was thought that John Horgan would attempt to regain his laurels ahead of anybody else, after losing to the Cuban out in San Francisco last April, but "Banker Jawn" now will have to wait until Carney and DeOro play.

Carney was the carom expert who surprised the billiard world by defeating DeOro about a year and a half ago. Had DeOro won that match he would have secured possession of the diamond trophy. Carney's first match as champion was with Horgan, and the Sixth Street idol won with ease.

FEDERAL LEAGUE TEAMS ON WESTERN INVASION

INDIANAPOLIS, July 5.—The Federal League's Western invasion will open Monday, July 7, when Chicago will play at Kansas City, President John T. Powers said early to-day before departing for his home in Chicago. It is believed, league officials assert, that all work necessary to transfer the Covington team to Kansas City will have been completed by that time.

Edward Eckblad Is Foremost White Hope

That's Real Name of Gunboat Smith, Who Is Among Leading Heavyweights.

ST. PAUL, MINN., July 5.—The Gibbons brothers of St. Paul are not the only Minnesotans who are top-notchers in the squared circle, for no less a personage than Gunboat Smith, at present leading figure in the white hope brigade, started his journey to fame from this State. "Gunboat" Smith's real name is Edward Eckblad. He was brought up in Milica Township. His mother, who is now Mrs. Rosen, still lives in that township.

Young Eckblad is well remembered in Milica Township as a sturdy young fellow, always handy with his fists and of an adventure-loving disposition. Many stories are told of his prowess with his "dukes" at little disagreements such as occasionally arise at country dances.

The monotony of life in the country did not appeal to him, and in 1908 his eye was caught by one of "Uncle Sam's" advertisements depicting the joys of life in the navy, showing groups of young tars and non-commissioned officers standing around, apparently with little to do.

TINKER HAS HIGH HOPES.

CINCINNATI, OHIO, July 5.—Joe Tinker denies that he has given up hopes for this season and says he is building his Cincinnati team to run in 1913, not next year, as some have intimated. Tinker is right when he says there are a good many games to be played yet before the pennant is won.

1914 OLYMPIC GAMES WILL BE STAGED AT ATHENS

NEW YORK, July 5.—Next year's special Olympics at Athens, Greece, will be staged on March 25, the same day King Constantine is crowned by his subjects.

With the exception of an aeroplane contest, the same program of events that was put on in 1906 will be duplicated at this meeting. The games and festivities will last until May 5.

It is expected Uncle Sam will be represented by a small team. Only the best material will be sent to fight for the Stars and Stripes in Greece. The 1915 sports at San Francisco follow, and then the Berlin Olympics. The public will be asked to contribute for two of these trips.

KLING HELPS REDS.

CINCINNATI, OHIO, July 5.—The value of an experienced catcher is being proved by the Cincinnati team, which, since Johnny Kling has been catching regularly, has been winning a good percentage of its games.

Cotton Seed Meal a Southern Asset Poorly Appreciated by Southern Farmer

Affords One of the South's Greatest Advantages in Livestock Raising. Is Rich in Plant Food Content and Lends Itself Admirably to Soil Fertility.

CHARLES A. WHITTLE.

Georgia State College of Agricultu re.

It is time for an ode to the golden meal similar to Timrod's to the cotton boll. Lurking in the heart of the fuzzy little seed are wonders incredible. Presto! They troop upon the stage at command of the genius of invention. Now, it is a dainty, elusive and rare perfume; now it is a shimmering liquid that parades as olive oil and defies the epicure to say it is not; now it is enthroned in snowy whiteness in the frying pan; now it is the Jersey's golden butter—but this isn't the ode. This is intended to be a very practical discussion, entitled "How the South turns its cotton seed over to others to go to the trouble of extracting some several millions therefrom, and how the Southern farmer could tap the golden stream without a worry."

The South gets about $16,000,000 for its crop of cotton seed, but if it got what the ultimate consumer pays for it in its various manufactured forms it would get a hundred million dollars. The South does not know all of the tricks of cotton seed transformation. The painstaking, delving, plodding German has unearthed several cotton seed gold mines which he has securely staked. Here the production of swineless lard and a few other edibles more or less known to the public has kept the cotton seed from expatriating the greater part of its resources.

Where the Farmer Comes In.

But to the farmer who grows the cotton, that produces the seed, that the mill grinds and the wonder workers transform, it is up to him to get his fertilizer from it and something more.

A ton of cotton seed contains 58.8 pounds of nitrogen, 21 pounds of phosphoric acid, 31.6 pounds of potash. Convert the seed into meal and a ton of meal will have more than twice as much nitrogen as a ton of seed, nearly three times as much phosphoric acid and considerably more potash.

From 40 to 50 gallons of oil can be obtained from a ton of cotton seed. The oil is not needed for feed or fertilizer. It is, therefore, a product that should go on to the manufacturer to be produced into various forms for the benefit of mankind. The farmer should look to the residue of the seed after the oil has been extracted as a further source of revenue.

A ton of cotton seed meal has plant food constituents or fertilizer values worth $24.26 per ton. The question is, How shall this meal be applied with greatest benefit to the farmer? Shall he apply it direct as a fertilizer or shall he feed it to live stock and apply the manure as fertilizer?

Feed it.

That cotton seed meal takes the place of corn in an animal's ration and can be bought in the South and be fed in the corn belt of the West cheaper than corn has been demonstrated by many years of practice. If cotton seed meal can be shipped to the West and North and fed successfully, what ought the South not gain by feeding it at home?

But—it is a shame to say it—the Southern farmer is not feeding the cotton seed meal, but he is selling it to the Western farmer and is buying from the Western farmer corn to feed. Penny wise and pound foolish! It is not to be explained upon any other basis than that the Southern farmer has not learned how to feed the meal, generally speaking, of course. There are farmers feeding meal in the South, but few, comparatively speaking.

Nothing stands in the way of feeding cotton seed meal in the South. Nothing in the climate forbids it. The food requirements of live stock do not forbid it. In fact, whenever cotton seed meal has been properly fed in the South it has always been with success.

Helps to Make Stock Profitable.

The unbeliever might query: "What is the use of feeding cotton seed meal in the South if cattle can not be raised in competition with the West?"

Cattle can be raised in the South in competition with the West, but, of course, cotton seed meal alone will not account for it. Without the silo, without making use of the long grazing season, without using the double cropping possibilities of a long growing season, and without making the best use of cheap cotton seed meal, there is no use to try to compete with the West in beef production. By making use of the advantages offered, however, nothing whatever can put the South in second place.

In dairying, where the profits are larger than in the growing of beef, these advantages count for even more in the South than elsewhere.

The live stock to which to feed cotton seed meal and the willingness of the farmer to feed cotton seed meal are, of course, two very important essentials. One can not raise cotton alone and make a success of growing live stock on the side by buying the feed supplies. The Southern farmer must raise corn, wheat, oats, peas, clover, cotton, fill a silo and have Bermuda pasture, if he is going to grow live stock successfully.

Indeed agricultural progress in the South awaits diversified farming. Cattle can not be raised without growing the feed crops. The feed crops can not be used to best advantage without cattle on the place. Permanent upbuilding of the fertility of soil can not be accomplished without cattle, diversity of crops and crop rotation. That is the circuit which agricultural prosperity travels. Thus it will be seen that cotton seed meal has an important role to play in the progress of Southern farming.

How It Affords Cheap Food Supply.

In feeding cattle four things are of importance to the farmer: Dry matter, digestible protein, digestible carbohydrates and digestible fat. Dry matter is cheap enough and easy enough to get in the form of a variety of "roughness." Protein is different. It is the most expensive but very essential, going chiefly to building up nerves and tissues. In this element cotton seed meal stands far ahead of other feeds ordinarily used in this country. Carbohydrates build the fires, as it were, under the boiler in heating up the animal and supplying it with energy. They are abundant in most forms of feed raised on the farm. Being easy to get and abundant, carbohydrates are, therefore, comparatively inexpensive.

Fat is another one of the expensive food elements and also very important for building body fat. It can also take the place of carbohydrates as a source of energy and heat. Here again cotton seed meal comes to the fore. It excels in fat contents.

In three particulars cotton seed meal excels—dry matter, protein and fats, when compared to corn, corn bran, wheat bran, wheat middlings, rice bran and oats. The rank of cotton seed meal with some of the leading concentrates is given in the following table:

Name.	Dry Matter, Lbs.	Digestible Protein, Lbs.	Carbohydrates, Lbs.	Fat, Lbs.
Corn	89.1	7.9	66.7	4.3
Corn and cob meal	84.9	4.4	60.7	2.0
Corn bran	90.9	7.4	59.8	4.6
Wheat bran	88.1	12.2	39.2	2.7
Wheat middlings	87.9	12.8	53.0	3.4
Rice bran	90.3	5.3	45.1	7.0
Oats	89.0	9.2	47.8	4.2
Cotton-seed meal	91.8	37.2	16.9	12.2

The table speaks for itself. There is nothing in the class with cotton-seed meal for protein and fats. In no form can these comparatively expensive food constituents be purchased so cheaply as in the form of cotton-seed meal.

Value as Fertilizer When Fed.

Having determined the unquestioned value of the good contents of cotton-seed meal, how about its value as fertilizer when fed to animals? Here it is: A ton of cotton-seed meal contains 135.8 pounds of nitrogen, 57.6 pounds of phosphoric acid and 17.4 pounds of potash. Here again cotton-seed meal shines as compared with corn, corn bran, wheat bran, wheat middlings, rice bran and oats. None of them are in the class with cotton-seed meal in nitrogen, the most expensive of all plant food. The following table will show the relative standing:

Name.	Nitrogen.	Phos. Acid.	Potash.
Corn	36.4	14.0	8.0
Corn and cob meal	28.2	11.4	9.4
Corn bran	32.6	24.2	13.6
Wheat bran	52.4	57.8	32.2
Wheat middlings	52.6	19.0	12.6
Rice bran	14.2	5.8	4.8
Oats	41.2	16.4	12.4
Cotton-seed meal	135.8	57.6	17.4

From this it can be readily seen that the droppings of cattle fed on cotton seed meal will afford the most economic source of nitrogen when compared with other foods. Since about 75 per cent of nitrogen consumed by live stock in the form of food may be returned to the soil in the form of manure, it will be observed how inexpensively cotton seed meal can be made to put nitrogen in the soil.

Incidentally it may here be observed that 25 per cent of the nitrogen plant food in the cotton seed meal can be used to fatten an animal and the balance returned to the soil whence it came, to feed other plants. Is it not better to use the 25 per cent in feeding live stock than in returning it directly to the soil in the form of meal fertilizer?

The 25 per cent of nitrogen of the total content of the food, when fed to animals, gives ample return, but probably in no way more than in milk production. Always where Southern dairymen have used cotton seed meal better returns were receivd. In feeding beef cattle, cotton seed meal and silage are by all odds the cheapest combination of a ration.

In What Quantities to Feed.

The average ration fed to work animals in the South is 14 pounds of corn and 12 pounds of mixed hay per day per 1,000 live weight. It is deficient in protein. Add two pounds of cotton seed meal to the ration and we have nearly the correct standard. It will not hurt the mule or horse. It simply affords him what he needs and his system craves. Mix 900 pounds of corn, 750 pounds of oats and 300 pounds of cotton seed meal and 300 pounds of wheat bran and feed about 15 pounds per day per 1,000 live weight of horse or mule doing hard work, and good results will follow. The 15 pounds, of course, should be divided into three parts and fed morning, noon and night along with mixed hay or stover.

Another convenient combination is 1,500 pounds corn and cob meal and 300 pounds of cotton seed meal, to be fed, of course, three times a day, a total of 15 pounds per day, and along with it roughness.

A mixture of nine parts corn and one part cotton seed meal has been fed to hogs to advantage at the Alabama station, reducing the cost of gain per hundredweight from $7 or $10 per day to $5 or $6. Its value in feeding to dairy cattle has been mentioned. From four to five pounds per 1,000 pounds live weight when a cow is giving two gallons of milk per day is recommended to be fed with ordinary roughness. For beef production from 3 to 6 pounds of cotton seed meal can be fed, depending upon the size of the animal, along with silage and roughness.

Important to South to Boost Meal.

It is curious with all that has been demonstrated of the feeling advantage of cotton seed meal, the case which has often been made in its favor in dairying and beef production, the fertilizing value too clearly made known to leave doubt, that there should be those essaying to be agricultural leaders who, on every occasion choose to speaksoftly in advocacy of this vital resource of the South—cotton seed meal. There are not many. They do not openly oppose. They dare not in the face of a world of facts. Their purposes are concealed and doubtless few are deceived. It is unfortunate, however, when there is so much to be done to educate the Southern farmer to the vast benefits to be derived by the largest possible use of cotton seed, that there should be any one standing around with fingers crossed and "allowing" that it is a good thing for the cotton seed crushers. Of course, it is a good thing for the cotton seed crushers. Why should these progressive Southern men not have a good thing if there are any coming along? Why should not everybody wish not only that the cotton seed crushers should get something out of cotton seed meal but that the Southern farmer should also get something good out of it? What excuse is there for anybody living in the South not boosting the uses of cotton seed meal for every cent that the South can get out of it? Is anybody else more entitled to it?

The feeding of cotton seed meal in the South does not have to be boosted in order to provide a market for cotton seed meal. Germany, Sweeden, Norway, Denmark, Holland, England, France and practically the whole civilized world is buying cotton seed products for feeding purposes. The North is a large consumer. The cotton seed crusher can get along without the South, but the South will be foolish to try to get along without getting every cent it can out of cotton seed meal as a feed for animals.

SCIENTIST TO EXPLORE LAND OF CANNIBALS

Writes That He Is on His Way to Explore the Guainia, Little Known River.

BOSTON, July 5.—A letter from Dr. Hamilton Rice, F. R. G. S., the explorer, from San Jose, Rio Guaviare, to a Harvard classmate, has just been received, and in it Dr. Rice makes known his intention of exploring in the vicinity of the Guainia River, which is supposed to be inhabited by cannibals. Dr. Rice has made many expeditions to South America, and in 1908, when no word had been received from him for a long period, he was thought to have been lost, but a short time afterward he returned to Boston.

The letter, which is as follows, describes his expedition to his friend:

Letter Tells Experiences.

"I made this place a base last July and worked south from here to the Hilla, Macaya and Ajaju Rivers, reaching the last-named river November 12 at 5 p. m., and taking observations and locating it November 13. Only six of us arrived, four white men and two Indians. At Takanemue I had the party cut down from 22 to 12, and of these, later on, eight refused to advance, but we compelled two of the Indians to continue. The retreat from Ajaju is a great story, but must wait until my return. It was wild, eerie country which has never before been visited and very difficult to work through, not only as rough country, but from the constant dread of most of the men and Indians, who feared attacks from the Carijoria Indians, who have been unusually active of late in killing 'blancos' and Huilotos.

"In a few days I am leaving here with two big canoes and a crew of five men to descend Cauo Grande and explore Yuirida, and on the way down try to push through overland to the Guainia, near its source. The Indians of Guainia have the reputation of being cannibals, owing to the non-appearance of several expeditions from San Fernando de Atabapo, hence it has not been easy to get men to go, and even when they would consent, doing it only at a high figure.

Canoe Destroyed.

"This lot will go down as far as the first Indian settlement on the Yuirida, about 30 days down; from there on I shall have Indian crews. One of my canoes was destroyed by a thunder storm, a big tree falling and breaking it; the other is useless, and, as canoes cost $150 each, it makes quite an item in one's exchequer.

"I have the whole country from Bogota well mapped, and two maps as well as all the data of 120 observations (astronomical) have been sent to the Royal Geographical Society.

"I have also performed a number of surgical operations, have some 250 slides of blood smears of fevers and pliaria and other parasites in the blood of animals examined.

"January 19—Exciting day. All the crews here are drunk. My pilot, whose woman does not wish him to go, has had all his clothes burned by her, and he is now beating her, armed with a machete and a revolver. I am also about to operate on a man wounded by a Yamu Indian arrow."

'Pluck Out Tonsil,' Doctor's New Method

New York Specialist Declares That Knife Is No Longer Needed in Operation.

CHICAGO, July 5.—Instead of cutting out a tonsil, Dr. Harold Foster, of New York, announced to-day, that he could pluck and has plucked out a diseased tonsil "as a man would pluck a cherry."

Only long fingers and a firm grip are needed, he says.

This remarkable declaration was made at the meeting of the American Homeopathic Society, over which Dr George A. Shepard, of New York, presided. Dr. George A. Suffa declared, too, that the knife need not be employed to cure strabismus of certain types—"cross-eyes." The surgeon instead of cutting the muscles of the eye need only "take a loop in one or more of them," then tie the loop. After that the patient looks straight.

U. S. Gem Bill for June Is $5,102,917

Imports in Month Break All Records, According to Figures of Jewelry Examiner.

NEW YORK, July 5.—Gem imports for June broke all records, according to figures compiled by William B. Treadwell, jewelry examiner at the Appraisers' Stores. The total reached $5,102,917, of which the cut precious stones and pearls are value at $3,920,175 and the uncut gems, mostly diamonds, at $1,182,742.

It was predicted in Malden Lane recently that the total value of the gem receipts throughout the United States would exceed $50,000,000 during the fiscal year, and these figures were considered a conservative estimate.

The large figures are due to the fear of importers of an advance in the duty under the new tariff.

First Woman Wills Her Body to Science

Leaves Strange Bequest in Hope That Her Remains Will Aid in Scientific Research.

PHILADELPHIA, July 5.—Miss Lucy Hunter Baird, the wealthy Washington society woman, who died here June 19, bequeathed her body to Dr. S. Weir Mitchell and his son, Dr. John Kinq Mitchell, directing that they should perform an autopsy. She is perhaps the first woman in this country to will her body to science.

Miss Baird suffered for several years from a nervous ailment, and Dr. Mitchell and his son did much to relieve her. It was out of gratitude to them and with the hope that an autopsy might reveal facts of futre value to humanity that she inserted the strange clause in her will.

GUN METAL SHOES POPULAR.

A great many tan shoes for men are being sold this summer at wholesale, but in the better class trade gun metal finishes are the most sought. Narrow toes and low, broad heels are favored.

POULTRY

Southern farmers are neglecting the most profitable end of the fowl industry. Pekin Duck is the best all-round fowl for the market producer. Indian Runners are great layers.

By JUDGE F. J. MARSHALL.

There is but little question that the domestic duck originated from the wild duck which was widely distributed over the British Islands.

It has fallen to the lot of England and America to do most of the perfecting of the tame varieties, although one, the Pekin, was imported from China in a rather crude state.

At this time we have a dozen standard varieties of ducks.

The duck, while not nearly so commonly bred as the chicken, has great commercial importance in some sections of this country. In Philadelphia, Boston and New York it is a favorite with epicures.

Its principal market role is in the shape of what are called broilers or green roasters. As such they use the larger varieties—the Pekin, Aylesbury and Rouen. These ducks will weigh as high as 17 pounds to the pair at maturity.

Ducks on Farms.

Although but little attention has been paid to them by farmers, a good class of ducks could be made a very profitable addition to the farm stock. So many farmers, particularly in the South, have tried to keep the old puddle duck, as they were called, and derived but little revenue from them. Where they have gotten some of the fine breeds, they have found them money-makers.

The Pekin, as Americanized, is our most profitable market duck. As they stand to-day, they represent nearly three-fourths of the commercial duck business of this country.

New York, New Jersey and Massachusetts have breeders who raise these ducks by the thousands to be marked at from two to three months of age. They grow twice as fast as would a chicken during this time.

While the Aylesbury and the Rouen will make as large a growth, it has been thought that the Pekin takes less time, and for that reason they have been universally used for market purposes.

E. W. Fly, of Chalfont, Pa., writes for The Reliable Poultry Journal, telling of the remarkable growth of ducks as compared with chickens. It requires about three months for the average chick to reach two pounds, while ducks will reach that weight in less than half that time, and are ready for the market in seven weeks.

Ducks More Profitable.

In experiments conducted for the purpose of determining the relative value of ducks and chicks, it was found that at the end of nine weeks the average weight of the ducks was four pounds and 8 ounces, average weight of chicks two pounds. Ten ducks sold for 28 cents a pound, or $12.60. After paying the shipping expenses, the receipts were $9.68. The food cost $2.36, leaving a net income of $7.32. The chicks sold for 24 cents a pound, the receipts being $8.74; cost of food was 82 cents, leaving a profit of $2.92. The difference in profit in favor of the ducks was $4.40.

Repeated tests have clearly shown that the Pekin or any of the larger breeds will make wonderful growth if they are properly fed and handled. Of course, they must be of a healthy strain, uninjured by being bred to fancy points. Good, strong outcrosses are necessary to the vigor of any variety.

James Rankin, of Massachusetts, one of the first poultrymen of this country to take up the production of early market ducks, after experimenting with all kinds, says that the Pekin will yield the most profits. As he raises over 12,000 ducks yearly, a variation of 1 cent per pound will make a difference of $500 in his yearly income.

Early Ducks Make Early Layers.

Mr. Rankin not only puts a lot of early roasters on the Boston market, but he keeps over a lot of these for early layers the following fall and winter. It is as essential for him to have the early layers as the early roasters for the markets. They must furnish the eggs for hatching the following season's crop of ducks.

Mr. Rankin holds the distinction of being the first, or one of the first, to make a success of the market duck business by hatching his stock in incubators which he himself constructed before the days of the incubator proper.

The best breeders have found that it does not pay to feed or pamper weaklings. They have found that the ducks do much better when they are allowed a good run and fed out of doors at all seasons. This has reference to stock ducks, for the youngsters have no time to get hardy. Running water is one of the real essentials for Pekins, where they are kept for practical purposes.

Feed for Young Ducks.

One of the best methods of feeding young ducks for about a week is as follows: One measure of corn meal, one of middlings, one of good wheat bran; mix with sweet milk or water, with grit added. Do not have it sticky, but nice and crumbly. Second week—One and one-half measures of corn meal, one measure of middlings, one of wheat bran, one-eighth measure of beef scraps, one measure of roasted bread and one half measure of green rye or clover. Third week—Two measures of corn meal, one-half of bran, one-sixth of beef scrap, one-half of the green clover or rye.

Fourth week—Two measures of corn meal, one and one-half of bran, one-half of middlings, one-half of the beef scrap, one-half of the green stuff. Fifth week—The same, with three-fourths measure of the beef and two of the greens. Sixth week—The same. Seventh week—Three measures of corn meal, one and one-fourth of bran, one-half measure of middlings, one of beef scrap and two of green cut clover or rye. Eighth week (if finishing for the market)—Leave out the bran and add the amount in corn meal and middlings, which will tend to brighten the carcass.

During the last week of feeding avoid anything that may taint the flesh, such as onions or too much rye. Where the ducks are to be kept for layers and not forced for the market it is best to leave out the increase of corn meal and feed as for the fourth week right on to maturity, except a feed of mixed grain once a day, preferably at night.

While this feed is used largely for the development of the Pekin for the broiler market, it is all right for any kind of duck raising.

Indian Runners Disappointing.

During the last ten years the country has gone wild on the Indian Runner. It is best for laying. But many persons have been disappointed with their results, not being able to keep the Runners up in health and strength during a siege of this heavy laying.

We believe this is due more to the vitality of certain families which have been bred for character of feathering rather than for vitality and productiveness. We think that with the same care bestowed upon them as has been given the Pekin for real strength and health that they would do much better in holding up to the work of heavy laying.

These ducks were brought into England over 50 years ago in rather a crude state as to markings, though of a decided Runner type. They came from India. They are of very early maturity, and, as we have said, when well handled, are remarkable layers of much more delicately flavored eggs than the larger members of the duck family. A white egg is claimed for them, although many lay greenish-tinted eggs.

Type of Runners.

Our American Standard gives the Indian Runner as of a fawn-and-white color. There are many who contend the true Runner should be a white with a coarse penciling of fawn and white. In real type the Runner is slim and erect in body, with a long, slim neck, and head carried high, with bill straight out.

Being somewhat of the Leghorn type, they are of but little value for the market. For flavor, it is all right, but the producer is not willing to pay as much to produce a four-pound carcass as it does to get six or seven in the Pekin.

After we have considered the practical varieties, we have the more ornamental, such as the Crested White, Muscovey, Call and Blue Swedish. The later is remarkably beautiful in type and coloring. The Gray Call is very much the same as the wild mallard. In fact, they are of such a wild nature that during the migratory seasons they are decidedly restless. They are called the bantams of the duck family.

The duck question for the practical breeder resolves itself into two propositions—if you want eggs, take the Runners; if meat and eggs combined, the Pekin.

Farmers Will Raise Cattle Scientifically

Nebraskans Pledge to Follow Instructions in Effort to Cut Cost of Living.

LINCOLN, NEBR., July 5.—To do their part in reducing the high cost of living 200 Nebraska farmers have pledged themselves to devote their time, talents and energies to increasing the production of beef cattle and to follow the instructions of the university experiment station, which has for several years made a special study of raising cattle for beef by what it believes to be the best methods.

"The fact that the population of the country is increasing at an average of 20 per cent every ten years, while beef cattle are decreasing 7 per cent, has aroused the nation to a realization that the high cost of living can never be lowered until this state of affairs is mended, and that the farmers are responsible for the work is just as apparent as that the present conditions exist," said Dean Burnett, addressing the farmers.

11TH OF FAMILY GOES TO NURSE LEPERS IN INDIA

Rev. Gottfried Hahn, Now in New York, to Finish Education Preparatory to Life of Sacrifice.

NEW YORK, July 5.—Rev. Gottfried Hahn, recently ordained a minister of the German Evangelical Church in St. Louis, is in the city, preparatory to beginning a journey to India to sacrifice his life among the lepers.

He is on his way to become a missionary to Purulia, India, where hundreds of the most desperate cases of Asia are cared for and taught to look upon Christianity as their hope.

And more marvelous still, he is but following in the steps of eleven other members of his family, including his aged mother.

Regards Action as Duty.

Like Father Damien, young Hahn regards his action as a duty to his church and God. No one could better understand the horrible conditions he must face than he does, for he was born there.

"I shall finish my preparation. Then I will return to India and enter upon my work there," he said simply.

"My father gave his life to the work in that field and I must take it up later myself if my health permits.

"Mother is ill and I do not believe will live much longer. Nothing would delight her more than to know before she dies that I, too, will continue in the work of my father."

To him it is all in the day's work. His sister, Maria Hahn, is the wife of the superintendent of the colony. She has been there for years and has faithfully and courageously given her life to the cause.

Physical Being Frail.

Certainly if his father and if his sister and all of his other relatives could do what they have done and are doing, why should he hesitate, asks young Hahn.

Hahn, who is 26, came to America several years ago to pursue his theological studies at the Evangelical Seminary in St. Louis. His frail physique forbids his returning immediately to the lifework of his kin in India.

As soon as his health warrants his assuming the life of sacrifice and devotion, he will sail to Southern India, and follow in the missionary work of his people.

The St. Louis man is the fifth in his family to be ordained in the ministry.

His father, Rev. Ferdinand Hahn, who died in 1910, more than 40 years ago began his services as a missionary in India.

Three of his sons came to America after working for years in the colony.

Peanut Shortage Coming; Chance for Georgia Farms

High Prices Now Paid for "Goobers" May Make Them Good Money Crop.

Although peanut raising has advanced greatly in recent years, the demand for peanuts has increased even faster, and dealers say that there is danger of a complete exhaustion of the present supply before this year's crop is harvested. In other years, when the domestic crop has been short, peanuts have been imported from Spain. Recent cable advices, however, have been to the effect that Spain has no peanuts to export this year.

Spanish peanuts now sell at wholesale for 10 1-4 cents a pound, and Virginia peanuts at 7 cents a pound. These are higher prices than have ever been known before. Last fall Spanish peanuts went above 6 1-4 cents, and other varieties above 5 1-2 cents, these figures causing New York operators to assert that the prices were too high, and that a sharp decline was bound to follow. Another year's showing of the vast increase in the consumption of peanuts in this country, however, has made it apparent that the peanut is destined to become one of the great staples of the country.

Leading dealers have recently been exploring areas adapted to peanut culture, and urging farmers to set out peanut crops. The probability of an overproduction at any time appears to be very small.

The nuts can be raised successfully in parts of New Jersey, and farmers there are taking a lively interest in the subject.

The peanut is easily cultivated, and singularly free from disease and insect pests. There are production records of 200 bushels an acre of the Spanish variety, while the general output from Virginia averages from 70 to 90 bushels an acre. The Virginia peanut is the better of the two.

Georgia farmers very probably would find profit in raising peanuts for market, in the opinion of the State Commissioner of Agriculture.

The last census report showed Georgia's crop for a year as 2,569,787 bushels, raised on 160,317 acres. Brooks County led, with an estimated 365,395 bushels. Thomas, Decatur, Grady, Colquitt and Berrien Counties also planted extensively in peanuts.

These peanuts are not grown for market, but for fattening hogs. The hogs are allowed to root in the fields for the nuts, after the vines have been cut off for the valuable hay.

The estimated average yield is 25 bushels an acre, 25 pounds to the bushel. At a price of 6 cents a pound, a farmer could get $37.50 per acre for the nuts, besides raising a good crop of hay.

In Louisiana and Mississippi, where the boll weevil has discouraged the planting of cotton, the farmers are turning to peanuts, and with considerable success.

Increasing commercial importance of the peanut, however, may yet make it a money crop in Georgia.

Overcoats Must Go, Say French Dandies

Uncle of Duc De Chaulnes Among Fashion Leaders Who Would Return to Old-Fashioned Cloaks.

Special Cable to The American.

PARIS, July 5.—Away with overcoats. The Duc De Luynes and the Count de Gontaut-Biron, two men of fashion and of the most aristocratic blood in all France, declare that the male of to-day's species should revive the glory of his plumage; that the attire of man is too somber, painfully funereal.

De Luynes is an uncle of the very young Duc De Chaulnes, whose mother was Miss Theodora Shonts, of New York. The Count De Gontaut-Biron's brother, now deceased, married Miss Martha Leishman, daughter of John G. A. Leishman, lately American Ambassador at Berlin.

The first attack has been directed against vulgar overcoats. The two leaders vow we must return to the graceful cloaks which poets and dandies of 1830 wore. They also say that the clawhammer evening coat must be left to hotel waiters and hired mourners.

PROPOSED TAX DIVERTS NOTICE FROM MARKET

Cotton Men Too Busy Fighting Clarke Amendment to Notice Closely Daily Fluctuations.

NEW ORLEANS, July 5.—Pending the outcome of the proposed legislation at Washington, which would place a prohibitive tax on contracts for the future delivery of cotton, comparatively little interest is being taken in the cotton market itself. Cotton men, who realize that the system of contract trading in New Orleans and New York is absolutely essential for carrying on the immense forward business in the South's great staple, are more concerned in the fight for the maintenance of contract markets than in temporary fluctuations, which, however, continue to show a steady undertone, with support on all easy periods.

In the fight against the adoption of the Clarke amendment to the tariff bill the New Orleans Cotton Exchange has enlisted the support of all the other cotton exchanges of the South. Already these exchanges have begun to adopt resolutions protesting against such destructive legislation as that proposed by the Senator from Arkansas. Telegrams and letters of protest are pouring into Washington from the business interests all over the South.

Producer Hardest Hit.

It has been clearly demonstrated by men here who are experts on cotton matters that while all lines of the cotton business will be seriously affected by the enactment of the Clarke amendment into law, the man who will suffer most from such ill-conceived legislation will be the cotton producer himself. In the first place, the wiping out of the contract markets would do away with an army of small spot buyers who are accustomed to hedge against possible losses by selling contracts against their purchases of spot cotton, and thus deprive the farmers of the benefit of competition for their cotton. The logical consequence would be that the control of the spot markets of the South would pass into the hands of a few rich interests, and eventually, it is argued, would lead to the formation of a gigantic cotton trust somewhat on the order of that which now has the cattle raisers of the United States in its grip.

No less an authority than Colonel Henry G. Hester states that if the Clarke amendment is adopted the value of cotton in the South will be lessened two to three cents a pound. Buyers of spot cotton, unable to protect themselves against losses by hedges in the contract market, will necessarily allow a margin for possible fluctuations in the value of the staple by reducing the prices paid to the producer. With the aid of the contract market spot buyers are able to pay full market values for cotton and can always find an outlet for their purchases.

Colonel Thompson's Position.

Colonel W. B. Thompson, who has been one of the leaders of the South in the fight for the betterment of the producers' condition, has come out emphatically in opposition to the proposed legislation. In a telegram addressed to President Barrett, of the National Farmers' Union at Union City, Ga., Colonel Thompson appeals to that organization, which is reported to be backing the proposed measure, to give this vital matter its most serious consideration.

After citing some of the evil consequences that would flow from the passage of the Clarke amendment, Colonel Thompson concludes his telegram to President Barrett as follows:

"It is reported that in supporting said amendment some Senators take the position that while they doubt the wisdom of the measure or are of the positive opinion that it is unwise and will be injurious, 'still as the farmers want it,' they say, 'let them have it, and take the consequences.' We can not afford to experiment with such a vital matter. I am not connected with any exchange in an official capacity, and I have no interest in any future business. You know that I have given much time and effort to the betterment of the producers' condition and to improvement in all legitimate trade. I think you believe in the sincerity of my purpose. I say to you earnestly that in my opinion this measure is fraught with the most serious consequences to the interests you represent, and with no intention of being officious, but animated only by sincere desire to co-operate with you in your work for the Southern farmer, I beg you to give this vital matter your most serious consideration before using the power of your great organization to advance so dangerous a measure and before you accept responsibility therefor."

English Carpets to Invade U. S. Markets

Tariff Situation Closely Watched, and Any Opening Will Be Seized by Britain.

NEW YORK, July 5.—Reports from carpet and rug manufacturers show that their mills are fully occupied in getting out orders which have been placed for the fall season. Reports to the effect that certain mills were closed, or partly closed down, have been promptly denied. The heaviest sales for the season have been on axminster rugs, and some additional orders are still coming from buyers who do not believe that they are sufficiently covered.

The opinion is becoming more general that fall prices were opened too low. Raw material has continued to move upward, and is in very short supply. There are a good many in the trade who believe that the tariff bill will not be passed in time to be of much service for the fall season, in the way of getting wool in free.

According to representatives of carpet houses in this market who have just returned from a visit to the manufacturing centers abroad, there will be keen competition on the part of the British mills for American trade.

Stock Exchange Working Hard to Restore Confidence

Old Secretive Attitude Gives Way to Campaign of Education—Queer Deals Cease.

NEW YORK, July 5.—Nearly a half-year has gone by since the New York Stock Exchange began measures of reform, and it is possible to gain a retrospective view of the results obtained. It may be said that the leaders in the movement are satisfied with what has been accomplished toward improving the general morale of operations in securities, and the groundwork laid for lifting the exchange above public reproach they believe to be secure.

The government committee has, in the first place, made application in recent months of the old adage about an ounce of prevention and a pound of cure. The committee has worked to eliminate incipient evils before they grew large enough to be subjects of general comment in the Street. The infliction of discipline—and there has been much discipline inflicted—has been gone about quietly, with the purpose of curbing infraction of the rules before greater infractions could occur. The effort has met with much success.

In consequence, largely, the exchange is entitled to considerable satisfaction over the fact that while recent sharp declines in the international markets brought in their train a number of failures in London, Paris and Berlin, not a single New York Stock Exchange house got into trouble.

Manipulation Dead.

"Manipulation is dead on the exchange," said a prominent member yesterday. "The governors have placed themselves so rigidly in opposition to every possible method of creating a fictitious market for a stock that no one would dare make the attempt. An outside operator might possibly try it, but the odds are greatly against any Stock Exchange house keeping his account if his trading became a matter of suspicion. There is no doubt about that. The committee on business conduct would take care of that end of the problem."

The committee on business conduct is, without doubt, the best adjunct to proper management of the exchange that has been added to the executive power in many years. The committee's function is to enforce proper conduct between members and their clients, to prevent reckless or unbusinesslike transactions on the board room floor, and to throttle manipulation. The scope of its influence is clearly seen in these three items.

Committee of Wide Powers.

The business conduct committee consists of five members, all of whom are members of the governing committee. The members have the power of examining the books of any Stock Exchange house at any time, to summon members of the exchange to explain acts which have been called into question, and to inquire into relations between members and customers.

If a stock begins to act strangely, the committee finds out who is buying and selling it, and the buyer and seller have to explain all about their transactions.

The committee reads carefully market letters sent out by commission houses. If it be decided that the contents are too much on the order of "tips," the house responsible therefor is warned that more matter-of-fact statements must be substituted for prophecies.

The formation of the committee on business conduct was one of the first products of the reform movement. The idea of having a number of responsible members in a position to get closer to the inner workings of the exchange than the larger board of governors was able to do was conceived by a special committee appointed to "consider the matter of handling margin accounts and rehypothecating securities and devise measures which will serve more fully to protect the public."

It is doubtful if the rank and file of Stock Exchange members realized how widespread would be the duties of the new organization. It was dubbed the "police committee" at first, and an impression prevailed in some quarters that the most onerous work of the members would be to prevent horseplay on the floor. Those who allowed this thought to submerge more weighty considerations were quickly disabused of it.

Educational Campaign.

Another direction taken by Stock Exchange reform which stands out prominent in the history of the past six months is in the way of education. There was a time, not so very long ago, when information about operations on the board was extremely hard to get. The attitude of the authorities seemed to be that the public did not need to know anything about a lot of matters. Such is not the case at the present time.

A committee has been formed which supplies inquirers with answers to all reasonable queries as to stocks, bonds, earnings of companies and methods of business on the exchange. Furthermore, this committee has carried the campaign of education to the public instead of waiting for the public to appear in Wall Street.

Hundreds of thousands of periodicals and newspaper clippings dealing with the Stock Exchange are distributed throughout the country monthly, and no opportunity is passed for disseminating information about the Stock Exchange in the year 1913.

BALKANS YET OFFER MENACE TO PROSPERITY

European Affairs Improved, but Vast Room Remains for Further Progress, Says Boersanier.

By BOERSANIER.

CHICAGO, July 5.—It is universally agreed that the Balkan war disorganized the world's finances. It frustrated what promised to be an exceptional boom in the United States. It stopped prosperity in Canada with an abruptness that threw the economic machinery of the Dominion almost into chaos. Europe, from the eastern end of Russia to France, from Norway to Italy, was thrown into confusion.

As Europe was the origin of the trouble, Europe is watched with keen and anxious eyes for signs of recuperation.

Europe is convalescing, but the convalescence is perceptible only to the eyes of the home expert. Too much was expected of the immediate effect of the signing of the preliminary treaty between the warring countries. An avalanche of fresh issues came on the market; securities attractive in form, substance and price. A few had scarcely been absorbed when an eruption occurred among the Turks' conquerors.

With the hereditary foe permanently vanquished, it had been unreasonable to expect all of the conquerors to lay aside their weapons and go to work. A fighter can not be converted into a dull and prosaic laborer in a day. Besides, there must be a paramount power among the allies, just as Prussia holds the whip hand in the Germanic confederation. The clash between Servia and Bulgaria is a contest for supremacy in the Balkans.

This may be troublesome. In the meanwhile, Germany is in need of capital, and Reichsbank, in its desire for gold, may pay a stiff premium, even as France paid it. America's monetary position is better, but not yet strong. We have the double task of moving full average crops and of financing a large number of short-term notes.

Briefly, the world's finances are not in a state to stand alarms and excursions in Europe. All the liquid capital that can be available the coming autumn will be wanted, and any action that tends to check the flow of capital might be embarrassing. Imagine, for example, what the effect would be if at the approach of autumn Paris took a gloomy view of international politics and began to call in her money. All who depend on French finance would find liquid capital, instead of expanding with the autumn's needs, contracted just when most wanted.

If these are the conditions of the world's finance, it is surely clear that what is needed now is not merely peace, but open good will and good understanding throughout Europe.

In a short sentence, Europe has improved, but the room for further improvement is vast.

HOSIERY MOVES WEL.

Hosiery manufacturers who have put their spring (1914) lines on the market do not anticipate great difficulty in selling them up quickly. In several instances the biggest part of the season's production has already been contracted for.

KNITTERS MAY STRIKE.

The unsettled condition of labor in the sweater end of the knit-goods trade is causing the manufacturers some concern. Some of the mills making these goods have already had strikes, and it is said that other outbreaks are not unexpected.

Coal to Cost More Within Next Year, Declare Operators

Export Demand One Factor in Creating New Markets for Product of Southern Mines.

KNOXVILLE, TENN., July 5.—Coal operators in the Kentucky and Tennessee fields, whose output moves largely into Georgia and adjoining States, report that the market is in better condition at this season of the year than ever before. Prices are averaging from 5c to 15c per ton higher than one year ago, with a strong demand for all grades. It is understood that contracts for railroads involving between 1,000,000 and 2,000,000 tons have been made at an advance of 10 cents per ton over the contract price of last year. This quantity of coal will be taken out of commercial channels, and will help advance prices during the next twelve months.

The demand for steam and domestic coal is unusually good for this season of the year, and most operators have sold their entire output up to September 1, and are not anxious to make quotations for shipments of domestic coals after that date, as they believe a strong market will develop in the fall and winter. There has been a slight let-up in the past 30 days for the finer grades of steam coal, and the increased production in domestic has caused 3-inch steam and nut and slack to be more plentiful, so that nut and slack is selling from 5c to 10c less than 30 days ago.

An unusual feature is a car shortage. Operators believe this indicates a serious shortage in the late fall and winter months.

There are several causes why prices on coal going from all fields into Georgia territory will probably be higher during the next twelve months. In the first place, exports of coal during the past ten months have been greater than ever before, especially from West Virginia fields.

This relieves the pressure of coal from that field on the other Southern coal fields. Alabama also is finding new markets at Gulf coast points and for export, which takes away some coal going into the Southeastern States. Alabama is coking considerable coal and this coke is going into Mexican and far West points. Large operators in Kentucky and Tennessee are successfully invading the Central and Northwestern States with domestic coal, which, because of its high quality, successfully competes in those parts with coal from all other fields. This diverts a large tonnage which has been going into Southeastern States.

DRESS GOODS DULL.

Business is quiet in the dress goods market at the moment. Buyers refuse to contract ahead until the tariff has been settled definitely. Cancellations are not so heavy as might be expected in view of the unsettled condition of the trade.

Carnegie in Favor of New Currency Bill

President Wilson Should Stand Firm if Opposition Develops to His Plans, He Says.

ZERMATT, SWITZERLAND, July 5.—Andrew Carnegie is keenly interested in the fate of the banking reform bill as presented to Congress by President Wilson.

"It is the most important and most necessary legislation on which America has had to decide for years," he says, "the present American currency system is a disgrace to the country. It is not true that bankers and leading business men are opposed to the measure. That is nonsense. The best bankers and business are for the reform. The Aldrich bill is all right and so long as the principle thereof is maintained I do not care about the details.

"If opposition should develop, my advice to President Wilson is to stand firm. When a panic starts other countries and governments possess the power to step in and act. Some speculators fail, it is true, but it is a good thing that they should do so.

Southern Railway Fours Are Sagging

Increased Dividends for Preferred Fail to Cause Rally Because of Underlying Conditions.

NEW YORK, July 5.—General investment conditions have operated against an advance in Southern Railway's development and general mortgage 4 per cent bonds after the preferred stock was put back on its regular 5 per cent basis. Around 74, the bonds are only four points above their lowest level. At present price they yield more than 5.60 per cent.

However, the decline has not been as marked as in the high-grade savings bank issues. These have suffered losses of 5, 6 and 7 points, while the Southern 4s are off only about 4½ points from the high of this year.

The Southern has more mileage with low-earning power than any other important road in its territory. However, its branch mileage is a source of strength, as indicated by the steady increase in gross and net earnings every year since 1909. Development of the South tends to increase the earning power of these branches. As yet little new capital has had to be spent on them.

Month of Good Weather Will Assure Big Yield of Cotton

Cleanest Crop Ever Seen Still Is Small and Needs Rain in Some Regions.

MEMPHIS, July 5.—If there is reasonably good weather in the cotton belt during the next thirty to forty days the foundation will be laid for a crop that should put at rest talk of very high prices during the ensuing fall and winter. At the present time there is ample basis for looking for the second largest crop the South has ever grown, some extremists talk of a possibility of it running the 1911 crop a close race. This, however, is hardly worthy serious talk, for acreage, according to official authorities, is not equal to that season, and condition at the time of the last compilation was several points lower. As conditions during the latter half of the summer of 1911 were rather abnormal in more ways than one and are not likely to be repeated, it is not conservative to expect the yield to reach within a million bales of the record.

The past week has been a period of crop improvement, though there still is basis for complaint, and continued ideal weather and growing conditions are necessary if the basis be laid for much excess over the season now drawing to a close.

Rains Not General.

There have been rains where needed, supplying the moisture essential to the plant catching up its late start and taking on fruit, yet as a rule they have been local in character and many areas are only partially supplied. Others have not had enough to do more than temporary good, and very soon permanent injury to prospects may result. The high temperatures in the central belt were not ideal, except where showers came and enabled the plant to take on size. Reports reaching here from the Eastern belt have told of improvement, though not by any means uniform.

The handicap to the crop continues to be its lack of size, which, the first week in July, is worthy of serious consideration. The season is at hand for fruiting, and if the plant is not well developed chances are against it becoming heavily fruited. The rains have helped considerably, but there have not been enough of them and there still is the danger of drouth later.

Cleanest Crop Known.

Cultivation has gone ahead under favorable conditions and the crop is perhaps cleaner than ever known, which is a feature of importance as to yield and the quality of the crop. It is difficult to conceive how conditions can arise that will cause the fields to become grassy. The crop will be laid by under the best conditions in years and in many sections earlier than usual, though it will not be an early crop when size and maturity of the plant is considered.

The depredations of the weevil in the infested sections have been checked, for little has been heard during the past week in regard to them. The hot sun and lack of moisture have helped to check the pest, while the vast numbers caught and destroyed have also been a factor. However, it is now between seasons with the pest, and the real test as to what it will do comes a little later.

There has been little activity in the spot department, though quotations have held fairly steady. Movement has been moderate. The strength in the summer contracts has extended to the entire market, and is based on continued good consumption and the smallness of stocks for protection of short sales.

Inquiry among the buyers here indicates that there is less selling of the actual ahead this summer than for several years, the experiences of the past two years having proven, in most instances, expensive. Some market observers think this fact helps to explain why the foreign spinners have been absorbing fall contracts so freely, thus providing in that way a partial hedge against orders for finished goods and yarns. If this opinion proves correct, it is likely to prove important as a speculative influence during the next few months.

WHAT ATLANTA MANUFACTURERS AND JOBBERS ARE DOING

ATLANTA GIRLS BUY MILLINERY MADE AT HOME

Half the Hats Seen on Peachtree Street Are Made Here, but the Fact Is Unheralded.

JOBBERS USE OWN LABELS

Factories Lose Identity When the Product Is Shipped—Materials Come From Many Lands.

Half the women's hats seen on Peachtree Street are made right in Atlanta.

The fair Peachtree promenaders don't know it; the milliners they patronize don't know it; in many cases the jobbers themselves don't know it.

There are three factories in Atlanta making women's hats, of straw, felt, plush, hemp and the myriad other materials which go to bedeck milady's coiffure and frame her pretty face.

But as soon as the hat leaves these factories the manufacturers lose their identity. The hat is marked with the jobber's label. It may be marked New York, Philadelphia, New Orleans or even London. The fact that it is made in Atlanta is nowhere to be discovered.

One manufacturer tells, with a grin, of Atlanta milliners who "stocked up" in New York—with Atlanta-made hats.

Altogether, it is an interesting business.

Materials From Afar.

The American Hat Manufacturing Company, one of the largest of the three Atlanta factories, imports straws direct from China, Japan, Italy and Germany. These straws are plaited abroad, and either are dyed there or bleached and dyed in Camden, N. J.

Japan sends hemp braid. Italy furnishes the milans, leghorns and tuscans. Germany furnishes a peculiar material known as Neapolitan braid, which, though few know it, is made from American cotton. China furnishes coarse straws.

So much for the straws. The felt bodies come from abroad, in the rough—queer, looking toadstools of various shades. Silks, ribbons, velvets, plushes and ornaments are carried in quantity enough to stock a dry goods store of large proportions.

Just now the factories are busy with the hats to be worn this fall and winter, and with misses' and children's hats for spring, 1914.

Sample rooms already are filled with fall and spring lines, dazzling arrays of colors, and seemingly in almost every shape, but with smaller hats predominating.

Plaster Hats the Start.

The making of a hat may be said to begin in the room where a skilled workman makes plaster molds accurately defining the shapes. From these plaster affairs, metal dies are made. These dies are put in the presses and heated by gas flames. The rough shapes, either felt, velvet, straw or hemp, are stamped with these hot dies and held in them until dry. When removed the heat has baked the sticky "sizing" until the shapes are firm.

From the presses the velvet and plush hats go to a workman who steams them and brushes up the nap to its original beauty.

The straw shapes are made in the factory. Ingeniously designed sewing machines, manipulated by skillful girls, sew the braid round and round, until a tiny knot grows into a gigantic hat. In the straw season 180 girls are busy at these machines.

Other ingenious machines sew in linings, attach cloth crowns to brims, bind brims, and do other complicated stitching which would seem to need the skill of the human hand.

Girl Designs Trimmings.

The elaborate bows and trimmings are designed by the young forewoman, who then teaches the girls under how to make them. This, in itself, is work requiring art.

Ready for shipment, the hats are put in the familiar round boxes—these, too, made in the factory, and then in big corrugated paper cases.

Off they go, bringing Atlanta no glory—but considerable money!

Permanent Exhibit Now Assured; Long Campaign Near Culmination

Speeches of Men Who Studied Possibilities of Plan Stir Their Hearers to Action.

"Atlanta citizens do not know what is made in their own city.

"Southern merchants who come to Atlanta do not know the extent of the city's manufactures.

"The nation in general never thinks of Atlanta as a manufacturing center.

"All this must be changed. There must be systematic exploitation of Atlanta's factories. The future growth and prosperity of the city depend on this factor more than on any other. One of the best means of educating the public to Atlanta's importance as a manufacturing center is to maintain a permanent exhibit of the goods made here."

With this message ringing in their ears, 100 Atlanta manufacturers, banqueting at the Hotel Ansley Thursday night, decided to undertake the establishment of a permanent display. Twenty-three manufacturers signed agreements to take space in the exhibit hall. More have signed since.

For the purpose of handling the exhibit a Fulton County manufacturers' association will be formed this week. The scope of this association is to be broad. It will endeavor to safeguard its members from ill-advised legislation. It will wrestle with transportation problems, welfare of labor and other questions of vital interest to manufacturers.

Four sites for the permanent exhibit are offered, each within five minutes' walk of Five Points. These are for lease, for sale, or lease with privilege of purchase. These offers will be acted upon within ten days.

Campaign Now On.

From this time forward a year of preparation will culminate in a whirlwind campaign of activity.

Forceful, indeed, were the informal talks made at the banquet. The men behind the project have spent a long time in study of its possibilities. They are very much in earnest. They truly believe that nothing so important for the development of Atlanta has been launched in many years. This enthusiasm, restrained for so long, found vent when they rose to make the speeches which should "get action." If they failed to convince their hearers, all their work was wasted. They knew it—and they did not fail.

"One of the big things such a permanent display does is educate the children," said Brooks Morgan. "In Cleveland it is regarded as a valuable supplement to the work of the schools in teaching the children economic and industrial subjects. What this means in dollars and cents to the exhibitors to have the future buying public in Cleveland fully awake to the variety and merits of homemade goods, you can see for yourselves.

City Needs Manufacturing.

"There is a limit to Atlanta's growth as a jobbing and distributing center. Almost every great concern in the United States has representatives here. Atlanta already supplies its territory well, and some territory which belongs to its neighbors. There is a limit to this development, I say, and the maintenance of real estate values, the growth in population of the city, its prosperity, depend absolutely upon the development of our manufactories. We have 600 factories now. I doubt if we need more. What we need is to make these 600, each and every one, big, strong concerns.

"I do not know of a company which will benefit less than mine from an exhibit. My interest is not selfish. I sincerely believe this is necessary for Atlanta.

"Our idea is to have exhibits, as many and as attractive as possible, grouped effectively under one roof. A manager should be in charge. Let him show visitors through. If a visitor manifests interest in one line, or several, let him telephone at once to the manufacturers of these lines to send a salesman. I believe, too, that manufacturers in the outskirts of the city will find it profitable to use the exhibit building for their downtown office. This is done elsewhere with profit.

"Atlanta should have four times the payroll it now has. This is the way to go about it."

Evansville's Experience.

Bolling H. Jones told of the experience of 32 furniture manufacturers in Evansville, Ind., who put up a building and displayed their lines in it, keeping the ground floor for their offices. They find it easier to get prospective customers to look at their wares, and also find the selling cost cut to 3 per cent.

"That convinced me," said Mr. Jones. "Did any manufacturer here ever sell goods for 3 per cent merchandising cost? This argument alone seems to me unanswerable."

He spoke of the changes which have come about in the Southern field within five years. No longer is it possible to sell a merchant a full carload of one line. Therefore, he argued, the exhibit will be valuable in getting buyers to make up mixed carloads of Atlanta-made goods. Other cities, rivals of Atlanta, are doing this, he said, and Atlanta must, to keep what it has, to say nothing of expanding.

"Advertising no longer is a matter of buying a few inches of newspaper space, asserting through this space that 'John Smith makes good beds'," said C. S. Dobs. "Advertising is the science of creating a demand. Publicity is the cheapest known method of selling goods. It may be newspaper publicity; it may be billboards; it may be an exhibit of the kind you are considering. It may better be all three.

Like Shop Windows.

"I believe this exhibit will have the same effect as the Whitehall Street windows. A man comes downtown to buy a pair of shoes. As he walks along the street, he sees hats, neckwear and walking sticks displayed. These remind him that he needs such articles. The result is that he buys more than the shoes he set out after."

Forrest Adair has a "punch" when he talks.

"I am selling a home below the Fort to a family which consists of father, mother and seven girls. The father is a wagon-maker. The seven girls are employed in seven different factories in Atlanta. Wouldn't you rather buy the things these girls help make than some product of a New England sweat shop?

"Yet I talked to a bank director to-day who did not know that car wheels are made in Atlanta, and who thought that the famed Atlanta shoes really were made in Boston and sent here to be sold under the local label.

Interests Here Diverse.

"When the bottom falls out of the iron market, Birmingham and Pittsburg hang crape on the doors, and send flowers to each other. Do we care? We do not. Two or three of our plants suffer, but the hundreds of others go on, and business in the aggregate shows little contraction.

"As a man who earns his very bread from the growth of Atlanta, and who owes more of that bread to you manufacturers than to any other class, I want to make it as emphatic as I can that you must build up Atlanta's factories if you wish to see her continue to grow."

WORDS WHICH STIRRED ENTHUSIASM FOR SHOW

"All the machinery, all the enthusiasm, and all the push of the Chamber of Commerce will be behind the launching of the permanent exhibit."—Wilmer L. Moore, President of the Chamber of Commerce.

"I firmly believe a permanent exhibit will bring to Atlanta more merchants and more business than all the other things we have done put together."—Brooks Morgan, Chairman of the Exhibit Committee.

"Five years ago, you could sell solid carloads of one line to Macon and Augusta. You can not do it now. This plan will enable you to make up mixed carloads. Other cities are doing it. Atlanta must, not only to get more, but even to hold what she has."—Bolling H. Jones.

"The man who makes good products and doesn't advertise is like the man who winks at a girl in the dark. He knows it, but she doesn't, and it doesn't get him anywhere."—C. S. Dobbs.

"Agitation about the smoke nuisance makes me tired. I wish to goodness some one would turn 500 more smokestacks loose on us. I'll warrant there's not a man in town who could write a list of seventy-five of the hundreds of articles made in Atlanta."—Forrest Adir.

Atlanta's Future Absolutely Dependent on Building Up Factories, Experts Declare.

Thousand Lined Up To Get Into Store

Furniture House Devises Attractive Scheme to Induce Public to Notice Low Prices.

Even in busy Atlanta, it is seldom enough that a thousand people are lined up waiting to get into a store when the doors are thrown open. This was the record established by Sterchi Bros. & Barnes, Mitchell Street, near Whitehall, Thursday morning.

The attraction was an unusual sale of furniture, coupled with a prize offer. Tags were widely distributed among the friends of the store. Each of these tags was numbered, and 100 of the numbers corresponded with the numbers on tags borne by articles in the store. When any visitor matched his tag with any tag in the store, he was privileged to claim the article, without being obligated to purchase anything.

The plan drew a big crowd, and, better, it attracted attention to some very low prices, and resulted in good sales.

MORE BUYERS THAN PEACHES.

NEW YORK, July 5.—Buyers returning here from Georgia say that it is generally estimated the peach crop of Georgia will run about 1,500 cars. According to the railroad men, they do not expect to move over 75 cars a day out of the State at the flush of the season. There are a great many buyers at Fort Valley. Fully 95 per cent of the peaches are being sold on track—in fact, there are more buyers than there are peaches.

FOREIGN DEALER SEES MISTAKES OF AMERICANS

Slow Delivery and Demand for Money in Advance Hinder U. S. Trade Abroad.

Slowness in delivery of goods ordered by European importers and the rule of full prepayment are doing a great deal of damage to the business interests of American exporters. Consul W. J. Pike, Reichenberg, Austria, took the matter up by mail with a prominent importer in that city not long ago, and received a reply setting forth the reasons why American business is not greater in Northern Bohemia. According to Mr. Pike, this importer more than three years ago established an important commercial agency in Reichenberg. The organization covers all of Northern Bohemia. It has 270 branch offices, all of which are engaged chiefly in the exploitation of foreign-made merchandise.

At the time Mr. Pike took up the matter of increasing American business in that part of the world, the importer was getting his merchandise principally from Germany, France and England. Following a notice published on the foreign trade opportunities page of The Daily Consular and Trade Report, however, the organization has entered into extensive business relations with firms in the United States. Now most of its purchases are confined to merchandise produced in this country.

Capital Tied Up.

The letter received by the Consul from the importer reads:

"Respectfully referring to your esteemed favor of the 8th instant, I would be obliged to inform the honorable consulate of methods to put an end in the future to the mistakes which are made in exporting by American firms.

"A great evil that exists for the importer is that the total payment for the merchandise ordered must be sent in advance. If the merchandise were delivered promptly to enable quick sales, the loss of working capital and of the investment would not be so considerable, but notwithstanding the total payment is sent in advance, the merchandise is only delivered in two or three months, and then only upon urging by cable, which all entails considerable costs.

"To illustrate: Early in February, I sent through my bank payment for 25 vacuum cleaners to Blank & Co., New York, and after much urgency I received to-day the reply that probably the goods will be shipped tomorrow. In the meantime not only can I do no business, but I have also invested the money; in other words, have the money lying unemployed. In view of the large force of salesmen dependent upon goods for delivery, such business conditions require too large a working capital with large expenses and costs.

"This invariably slow delivery is not the exception, but true as to all firms—I could give you the names of a large number of firms, the sale of whose products I was forced to discontinue and to break off every business relation because of failure to promptly deliver the goods.

Should Study Tariffs.

"American manufacturers could greatly facilitate matters and increase trade by giving attention to three important particulars, viz., prompt delivery, packing, and the duty—for instance, where articles are composed of different materials, as iron, nickel, enamel, leather or wood. In many instances it is possible to ship these parts separately, to be assembled in the country for sale, whereby there is an enormous saving in the amount of duty and the goods lowered in cost, which makes them more salable because of this saving.

"Another subject that should commend itself to the careful study of American manufacturers is shipping goods by the cheapest route. This is not always done, and the consequence in many cases is increased cost.

"In addition to the foregoing matters that work a great hindrance to the extension of American trade is the question of terms of credit, in which the American manufacturer demands cash before shipment, a requirement not insisted on by any other country.

"These are some of the general experiences and complaints which I am forced to make, and I should be greatly obliged to the honorable consulate if by some action or report these conditions could be remedied, or at least relieved."

Englishman's Criticism of American Stores Answered

Selfridge's Manager Unjustified in Saying Customers Wait Too Long for Parcels.

A. E. Cowper, one of the important men in the organization of Selfridge & Co., which in turn has, perhaps, the most important department store in London, recently made a visit to the United States. He spent most of his time, of course, in looking over American department stores, and before he departed for England freed himself of some criticism.

"One thing which struck me was the time it takes to complete a purchase and get your goods wrapped and delivered," he said.

"At home we have no bundle wrappers; the clerks wrap the packages, and we find it saves time and mistakes. When a customer has made a purchase and the goods are shipped by carrier or messenger to a distant cash-and-bundle desk, every second she has to wait is magnified to a minute, whereas if the goods are wrapped by the clerk, the customer is getting the full attention of that salesperson, and if a minute or two should be lost, she is seeing the action all the time, and does not feel that she has been lost sight of. In Selfridge's we use cash registers, and we find them great savers of time."

Atlanta merchandise experts do not agree with the English student of store service.

Mr. Cowper, in the opinion of various Atlantans approached on the subject, magnifies the importance of the transactions where the purchases actually are taken away by the buyer.

They remark that while it may be the custom in London for shoppers to carry home their purchases, nine out of ten customers in Atlanta demand delivery by wagon.

At any rate, they say, there is very little delay, and it is much better to free the salespeople from the duty of wrapping packages.

Managers of Atlanta department stores made tests at random to demonstrate that it takes on an average 30 seconds for the delivery of a package and the making of change.

Lucian York, manager of Rich's, says:

"We have a system which we believe is the best yet devised from the viewpoint of the customer, and Selfridge's certainly have nothing to compare with it. We use an 'identification coin.'

Departs at Once.

"Most of our charge customers have their parcels delivered. After the transaction is made the customer merely gives her name and address to the salesperson, shows her identification coin, and departs at once. Even when the customer takes the parcel with her, the wrapper in the stand has it ready in a jiffy. Time records to gauge our wrappers show that on an average they use less than a minute.

"The delivery of packages, after all, is simply a minor matter. What our American people want broadly is service—the right merchandise at the right time at the right price. In English stores customers still are importuned to buy; in fact, in many of the stores it is almost impossible to leave without buying. Fancy such a condition here!

"Again, here we make every effort to get what the customer wants. We anticipate the styles, bring on new models and patterns.

"When the customer purchases these goods she buys them at our risk—if they are not pleasing to her when she gets them home she is at liberty to return them. Here the customer is always right—in England, from what I understand, she is more at the mercy of the storekeeper."

Rome, Ga., Exhibitors Sign Up for Space

Rome, Ga., is crowing over the fact that it made definite plans for a permanent exhibit before Atlanta.

Twelve manufacturers already have signed contracts for space, and nine more are about to do so. It is expected that 4,000 feet of floor space will be used.

Arrangements have been made for a building, and the exhibit will be ready within two months, Louis Spencer, managing director, says.

Included among the exhibitors are a stove works, a machine factory, a foundry, a furniture factory, a trunk factory and a spring bed factory. Some of these lines are duplicated.

Silk Dyers Strike; Feathers Face Bar; Ans.–Use Flowers

Milliners Think That for Once They Can Predict Styles for Fall Well in Advance.

Flowers will be popular on women's hats for fall and winter wear.

In July this is a dangerous prediction. Circumstances, however, make it fairly safe prophecy, in the opinion of C. B. Palmer, of M. Kutz Co., wholesale milliners.

Dame Fashion might take a notion to dictate ribbons. But the silk dyers' strikes in Paterson, N. J., have caused an increase of 20 per cent in the cost of ribbons, and even at these advanced prices, deliveries can not be made. At best, goods can not be promised before August 15 or September 1, and even if the mills reopen, they are likely to be overwhelmed with the orders which have been accumulating.

Feathers, again, might have been Fashion's favorites. But right now there is trouble in Congress over the importation of feathers. The milliners and the Audubon Society are in the throes of a bitter struggle which will decide whether feathers will be admitted at all under the new tariff.

Remain only fur and flowers. For three seasons, velvet and silk flowers have been increasing in popularity on fall and winter hats, and, with the scarcity of other materials, are likely to take the ascendency this fall.

Small hats will rule—that is, smaller than those which have been worn for the past few seasons. Crowns will be round, with turned-up brims, according to Mr. Palmer. What will be the favorite colors, besides the staple blues, browns and black, no one will know until September 1.

The Kutz Co. salesmen started out last Monday to cover the Southern States for fall business.

ARTIFICIAL FUR USED.

Artificial fur will be used to considerable extent this fall and winter both for the trimming of hats and street gowns. The lower cost of these goods and their close approach to the genuine in appearance are big factors in their favor.

The coming of warmer weather has stimulated greatly the movement of wash suits in retail circles. The jackets of some of the better numbers range in length from 32 to 34 inches in the back.

TAFFETA RIBBONS SCARCE.

A scarcity of taffeta ribbons in stock colorings is reported. Pinks, blues and whites are especially hard to get.

BROWN WILL CONTINUE AS A 'LIVE WIRE' IN POLITICS

Former Governor, as Private Citizen, Intends to Wage Campaign to Decide Supreme Authority in Georgia, and Will Push Issue.

Fact That He Proposes Keeping in Touch With State's Affairs Leads to Report That He Will Oppose Hoke Smith for Senate.

That Joseph M. Brown intends keeping very much in touch with the trend of events in Georgia, that he proposes to remain a very "live wire" in politics, and that he proposes to thrash to a final adjustment his view on law enforcement and the labor unions, at least in so far as he may, is abundantly evidenced in a remarkable interview he furnished to The Sunday American yesterday.

It is very well known that many of Governor Brown's friends and partisans are urging him to enter the race for the United States Senate against Senator Hoke Smith, whose term of office expires within less than two years, and who will have to enter a campaign for re-election within the next twelve months.

To a Sunday American reporter Saturday the former Governor gave the following interview:

By JOSEPH M. BROWN.

I am going to stay at home for a few days and then I shall run up to my farm in Cherokee County, where I will be for the next week or two.

The duties of the executive office for more than a year past have forced me to neglect almost entirely my personal affairs; hence I must give primary attention to them for some time to come.

Later I expect to make an examination of the status which involves the State's relationship to the labor union. If there is a divided sovereignty of this relationship all the people are entitled to know it so that they can shape their course accordingly and choose to which they will yield allegiance.

If there is but one sovereignty that fact should be made so plain that no man and no organization of men should be betrayed into acts of attempted usurpation of that sovereignty.

Unions Have Made Issue.

In my retiring message to the General Assembly I stated that the labor union had made the issue as to whether or not its union label carried more authority in Georgia than does Georgia's great seal of State.

A mere statement of the official records of these two sources of authority necessarily confirms my declaration, viz: Some time before the year 1840 the State granted a charter to the Georgia Railroad and Banking Company, wherein she placed upon that company and upon future owners of that railroad the duties of a common carrier. She imposed upon the owners of that charter the obligation to operate trains for the conduct of the commerce of the public and of its power to travel. As the proof of her sovereign authority to grant that charter and to force obedience to its conditions she placed upon it her great seal of State.

In 1907 she specifically and positively made it the duty of the Railroad Commission to "order and compel" the operation of such train service as the needs of the public required.

In 1909 and again in 1912 the labor union ordered the trainmen on the Georgia Railroad to ignore the State's mandate and instead to prevent the running of the trains, which it knew would result in great inconvenience and loss to the public. On that order it placed its union label.

This made the issue between the union label and Georgia's great seal of State square and plain. No sophistry can obscure it; no vituperative personal abuse can wipe it out.

Exactly the same issue was made in the strike by the street car employees in Augusta.

I note that it has been said that I should not at this late day have stirred up this matter, thus renewing dissension among the people; but I call your attention to the fact that the present session of the General Assembly is the first that has been held since the occurrence of the strikes on the Augusta street car line and the Georgia Railroad. Hence, this was the first opportunity I had for officially notifying the General Assembly of these two glaring acts of disregard of the State's authority and of the necessity of enacting such laws as would protect the public against their recurrence.

Since the publication of extracts of the message I have received a multitude of letters from people in Georgia and about a dozen other States wherein my

Plunges Off Fourth Story; Spike Hooks In His Pants; Saved

Thrown by Falling Plank, Man Hangs Head Downward Until His Rescuers Arrive.

LOS ANGELES, July 5.—W. E. Duffessy, a workman employed in the construction of the new Braley Building at Pasadena, owes his life to the strength of his overalls, which prevented him from being hurled from the fourth story of the building.

Duffessy was struck on the head by a plank dropped by a workman on the floor above him. He was thrown down the improvised elevator shaft headfirst, but after falling to the third floor his overalls caught on a protruding spike and held him steadfast.

He remained in this position with his head down until several workmen who witnessed the accident hurriedly made their way, with the aid of a rope, to where he was hanging and hauled him to a place of safety.

Champ Clark Moves As Rent Goes Up $50

Speaker's Action Starts Rebellion of Washington Tenants of High-Priced Apartments for Better Rates.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—They raised the rent $50 a month on Speaker Champ Clark for his spacious apartments on the Avenue of the Presidents, in the heart of official Washington some time ago.

To-day the Speaker moved to a new apartment in Congress Hall Hotel. This hotel is very near the Capitol, and the Speaker will save not only in the matter of rent, but car fare as well.

The Speaker pulled off his coat today, took a holiday from his official duties, and personally superintended the removal of his Lares and Penates. Washingtonians, in danger of having their rent raised, have taken heart from his distinguished example and a rebellion of tenants is in sight.

"This is an age of specialization, and there should be more schools for vocational and industrial training. Build character. Better be poor in purse than poor in soul."

The school graduated 125.

'Elevator Boy' Now A Blushing Bride

Police Lieutenant Falls In Love With Girl He Arrests for Impersonating a Man.

LOS ANGELES, July 5.—A simple little ceremony yesterday afternoon in the chapel of the Paulist Fathers in California Street united in marriage Police Lieutenant Joseph F. Stuger and Miss Aileen Shaw.

It marked the culmination of a romance which started a month ago, when Miss Shaw cast aside her woman's garments, dressed like a man, assumed the name of Herbert Emery and got a job as elevator boy in the Hotel Alma.

Up to this time the romance was simply adventure. But Tuesday night Stuger stepped in, had her arrested inadvertently and then fell in love with her.

Cost Will Be Little to Couples Who Whirl to Syncopated Music in Cincinnati.

CINCINNATI, July 5.—After hearing the report of Park Superintendent Hodgkinson on the park dance halls of Cleveland, the members of the Park Board decided to give the idea a trial as soon as the bonds, recently issued, could be sold. Hodgkinson said the city of Cleveland cleared a profit of $2,500 on two park dance halls last year, charging 3 cents a couple for admission.

Numerous cases of vandalism at playgrounds were reported by the Superintendent, and the board declared that the grounds would have to be closed unless proper protection is given the equipment.

PASTOR MAKES MATCH-MAKING SPECIAL WORK

Keeps House for Aged on Fees He Collects for Performing Marriage Ceremonies.

SCOPE IS NATION-WIDE

East Needs Husbands, While West Wants Wives, Is Experience of Minister.

OMAHA, July 5.—"Here's a man worth $200,000 and he wants a wife," says the Rev. Charles W. Savidge, of Omaha. "He's a big cattle man, and last fall when he sent his range cattle to market he cleaned up $19,000. He is 50 years old, never has been married and is a man of good character. I won't make his name and address public, but when I find a woman who I think will suit him I'll send her name to him. He tells me he has never had an opportunity of becoming acquainted with the right sort, so he has asked me to find him a wife."

Mr. Savidge's fame as a matchmaker has spread far, and so many people write him for mates that he has been compelled to hire a special stenographer to take care of his correspondence. Rarely does a day pass that he has not united from two to five couples. All his marriage fees go to support a home for aged men and women which he established and maintains in this manner. At present there are about 35 inmates in his "House of Hope." None is ever asked to pay board.

Dane Seeks Matrimony.

"Here's another fellow wants a wife," he continued. "This man is 24 years old, a Dane by birth, owns a big farm and is worth about $25,000. He says he doesn't know which way to turn for a wife, so he has asked me to find one for him.

"A third one, an American, 33 years old, a rancher in Western Nebraska, and worth $35,000, is in the same predicament. He's a bachelor—but not an old one. Says he wants a wife who likes ranch life, and that she will not be asked to take part in the roundup."

Recently Mr. Savidge was called to the Rosebud country in South Dakota to lecture a bunch of ranchmen and homesteaders on the art of getting married. The ranchers paid the expenses of his trip. He took for his subject, "Have You Found Your Running Mate?" After his talk a big delegation of ranchers followed him to the hotel for a more intimate talk. They wanted to keep him right there until they were all supplied with wives. He placed them in correspondence with a number of women who had asked Mr. Savidge to get husbands for them.

Men in Biggest Demand.

"That South Dakota bunch certainly did want wives," says Mr. Savidge. "They almost wanted to hold me as a hostage, but I furnished them the names and addresses of a couple of dozen women who have written me to get husbands for them. When they finish with their courting and get ready for the ceremony I'm going back to tie them together."

"Far more women are seeking husbands than there are men seeking wives," says Mr. Savidge.

"Every day brings me letters from women—from here, there and yonder. Most of the requests for husbands come from back East, while most men who want wives live in Western States.

"Here is a request from a man who evidently needs someone to look out for him. He's a working man and has not much money, but there is $3,500 in the hands of a trustee, who has instructions to build a house with the money and deed it to the man's wife when he gets one. The money was left by his father. He lives in a small Nebraska town.

"Here's a doctor in a Missouri River city. He has a fine home and $6,000 in cash in the bank. He owns a farm of 225 acres about 70 miles from New York City and he goes down there every summer for a few weeks. He is 52 years old.

"Then here is a German, 50 years old, worth $30,000, with two Nebraska farms and several houses in a Nebraska town.

"An Omaha widow, aged 35, dark hair and eyes, with a splendid home, well furnished and complete, desires a husband, and none of the men of her acquaintance seems to suit her. So she has asked me to find her one.

"A St. Louis school teacher, with her own home, wants a husband. Says she is tired of waiting for some St. Louis man to propose. She is 32 years old and weighs about 120 pounds. Likewise a Colorado school teacher, 40 years old, good housekeeper, says she wants an Eastern husband.

"Here's a nice little telephone operator who has grown tired of answering 'hello' calls. She is slender and dark and 21 years old. I'll bet I can find her a husband in a week."

Mr. Savidge has performed the wedding ceremony for more than 6,000 applicants.

DUKE MILLIONS USED TO BUILD HIS HOME STATE

Tobacco King Is Developing Cheap Power All Over Carolinas to Help Cotton Mills.

AIDS YOUNG BUSINESS MEN

Devotes Fund Toward Financing Any Embryonic Operator Who Can Show Knowledge.

CHARLOTTE, July 5.—James B. Duke, tobacco king, is playing the role of godfather to North Carolina.

To make his native State prosperous he has spent $50,000,000 on power plants and a similar amount has gone to aid young business men establish cotton mills. Other States may scoff at Duke, but he is a prophet who is honored in his own country.

A year or two ago Mr. Duke retired as president of the American Tobacco Company. He maintained control of the British-American Tobacco Company, however, and to-day he dominates the tobacco industries of the Old World; but just prior to laying down the reins of the American company Mr. Duke conceived the idea of placing North Carolina in the forefront of the cotton manufacturing States of the Union.

While the cotton acreage of his native State was not nearly so great as that of other sister States, yet he determined that the Southern planter should find a market for his product without being forced to accept prices which are materially lessened by excessive freight rates demanded to land it in the New England mills.

Rivals of New England.

North and South Carolina were both likely places, in his opinion, for a chain of cotton mills as well equipped as those of New England. It is only a short haul from there to Norfolk and Newport News, where trans-Atlantic steamships touch going and coming, thus easily solving the problem of export facilities.

Then, too, should the mills grow in volume their owners could far outstrip their New England competitors in bidding for the raw product from neighboring States for the same reason that, with a lower freight rate to reckon with, they could pay the planter and broker better prices.

Knowing every nook and corner of his native State by heart, Mr. Duke awoke to the realization that millions upon millions of horsepower in her many waterways was going to waste. Once harness these streams and erect power plants at central points and it would be an easy matter to generate and diffuse sufficient power to turn the spindles of every cotton mill in the two States, as well as to light every municipality, the homes and business places of those dwelling within their confines, and at the same time to supply the motive power for every street railway line in the two States.

The result was cheap power and light for every county in North Carolina.

The demand for the product from the cotton plants soon became so compelling that within a few years the horsepower was doubled and then some.

Millions for Young.

Making Charlotte his central headquarters when not at the farm of his birth, near Durham, he let it be known that he was ready, willing and eager to help any and all deserving, energetic and capable persons who desired to join hands with him in making the Old North State one of the foremost cotton manufacturing centers of the Union.

The formal announcement was made that a fund of $50,000,000 was available for the establishment of cotton mills at likely and well-selected points. The money would be forthcoming at an instant's notice, provided the person could convince those in charge of it that he had a thorough knowledge of the business, was energetic, faithful and industrious and possessed sufficient money of his own to make it worth his while to strive for the success of the enterprise and stick to business.

Scores of young men who grew up in the cotton mill business, but whose chances of owning a mill of their own were remote in the extreme, were quick to benefit by the offer of their native State's wealthiest son.

LUTHERAN PASTOR SCORES CHURCH FAIRS AND SOCIALS

'Most Beautiful Child' Coming Miss Blitz Will Visit Atlanta To Pose Before Famous Artists

Prize picture of prize child beauty, Theresa Marie Blitz. This picture has been exhibited in nineteen conventions of photographers and awarded fifteen first prizes.

Little Topeka Girl Will Visit Principal Cities of Country and Will Be Given Trip to Paris.

TOPEKA, KANS., July 5.—Atlanta will see the nation's most beautiful child, so proclaimed by photographers of the United States at practically all their exhibits, when 6-year-old Theresa Marie Blitz reaches the Georgia capital on her tour of the United States, which will later extend to Paris. She leaves her Topeka home to-day and will return in time to celebrate her seventh birthday.

Little Miss Blitz was declared to possess the most perfect features and form of any child in the country by the Boston Art League. She won the distinction in a contest with 2,000 others from all States of the nation.

The elements which decided the art league in her case were: "Soft, wavy, dark-brown hair; big, wistful, wishful blue eyes, with the memory of dreams lurking in them; delicately molded lips and white transparent skin, with a touch of pink showing through."

She is not yet seven. Her weight is 55 pounds. Standing in her slippers she is 51 inches in height. A tape line drawn around her arm at the armpit over one thickness of light summer wear registers 9 inches. Wrist, 5 1-2 inches; thigh, 16 inches; calf, 10 inches; ankle, 7 inches.

After her tour of the big cities of this country and a visit to Paris she will return in time to celebrate her seventh birthday, November 18. Theresa has great love for flowers and music and bird life. She knows many flowers by name.

Little Theresa's mother died when the child was eight months old. She was a beautiful woman and possessed all the charms and graces so fully reflected in the figures and features of the daughter.

Theresa will spend two weeks each in Kansas City, St. Louis, Chicago, Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Atlanta and Norfolk. The trip to Paris will be made in five weeks. In New York and Philadelphia oil paintings will be made of her.

Film of Princess in Low-Cut Gown Burned

Queen Mary Orders Cinema Company to Destroy Work That Cost $25,000—She Pays $185.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, July 5.—Queen Mary has ordered the Cinema Company to burn the films of pictures it made recently by special permission of the King and Queen, showing Princess Mary and the two children of Sir Derek and Lady Keppel at tea in Buckingham Palace grounds.

Her reason is that the Princess Mary appeared in the pictures in a low-cut frock.

The Queen will pay the cost of the films, $185, but the Cinema Company is out at least $25,000.

Ban on Gum; Pretty Chicago Co-Eds Pout

"Blind Pigs" Started by Girls to Prove Their Independence of Rules.

CHICAGO, July 5.—Co-eds at the University of Chicago were inclined to-day to pout at a new order which, in effect, places the ban on chewing gum. They don't want the gum so much, but many of them regard the order as an undue infringement of personal rights.

There was a rumor that several "blind pigs" where the chicle product may be obtained were already in operation in co-ed dormitories.

"GOOD FELLOW MAYOR" PUTS LID ON IN WISCONSIN TOWN

LA CROSSE, WIS., July 5.—When Ori J. Sorenson, known during his first term as the "Good Fellow Mayor," was re-elected after a term held by the opposition, the more liberal minded citizens agreed that good times were coming.

Since his election he has been adjusting the screws on a "lid" the like of which La Crosse never saw before. The stopping of baseball pools is his latest.

BATTLE OF LOVE ON FIELD OF GETTYSBURG IS CLOSED; EACH SIDE HAILED AS VICTOR

Martial Spirit of Old Soldiers of Both Blue and Gray Exceeded Only by Sincere Warmth of Affection for Their Former Foes.

VETERANS BEAR HEAT WITH THEIR WARTIME FORTITUDE

General Sickles, of Union Army, and General Young, of the Confederacy, Greeted by Warriors They Led and Fought at Scene of the Reunion.

GETTYSBURG, PA., July 5.—The tumult and the shouting died for the second time on Gettysburg, and the battlefield again has figured in world history. For no less memorable than the hostile conflict of the armies of Lee and Meade in '63 was the friendly meeting between the meager remnants of the same armies which, lasting four days, is at an end to-day.

Voices have been raised in the name of peace and reconciliation during all the half century since Appomatox, but they have always remained merely unrealized appeals—until this last week, the semi-centennial of the greatest battle of the greatest war ever fought between brothers.

And now peace reigns, love reigns at last over the broad, rolling stretches of Gettysburg, where for fifty years has hovered a recollection of crashing terror of sectional hatred, of thirst for blood.

Affection of Veterans Sincere.

The reunion of the veterans of the Union and of the Confederacy has been the sincerest and most effective step ever taken for the reconciliation of the North and the South—this is so by common consent of the veterans themselves, of younger representatives of the two sections, and of expressions which have come from over the nation.

Yesterday it was proved so, when a pathetic but brave spectacle was staged. The white-haired men of the Union army were deployed, as nearly as could be calculated, in the positions they occupied the great third day of the battle at Bloody Angle. They stood there, proud in the forgetfulness of their years, oblivious of the terrific heat, oblivious of everything around them, with eyes seeing only the brave, strong day fifty years before, when they waited on the same spot for the enemy.

The feeble gray army, also, was placed in battle order. They, too, were exultant, eager, powerless to stifle the rebel yell that bubbled out of their souls.

The command was given to charge. The rebel yell came sharp and clear. The gray army started toward the blue line. Its charge did not have the force and nerve that impelled it fifty years ago. Instead, many of the veterans stumbled in their course, some of them fell. The advancing line became ragged, where the younger veterans, eager, outdistanced more feeble comrades. But the spirit of '63 was there.

Clasp Hands at Bloody Angle.

Years rolled back, and the echoes of cannonade, the sight of the all-pervading smoke film, the choking scent of that smoke, the thrill of battle and of youth—all were revived.

The gray army advanced to the Bloody Angle. The blue army braced itself for the shock, as they well knew how to do. The two lines came together.

As they met, the rebel yell became a laugh, the tense faces of the blue veterans melted. Blue and gray clasped hands and were friends. The old men were not ashamed of their frank arms that went out and around the shoulders of their enemies of fifty years ago—comrades now—nor of the tears. Nor were any of the thousands of spectators ashamed of the demonstration in which they joined impulsively.

All that was spectacular. Yet it was not exceptional in revealing the spirit that prompted the entire reunion. Since last Tuesday everywhere has been exhibited friendliness and reconciliation. More than 50,000 veterans were present, sleeping together, tenting together on the old camp ground, telling endless stories, pointing out spots here and there where they saw men die—but always smiling, always shaking hands, always jolly.

G. A. R. Outnumbers U. C. V.

Of those who attended the reunion of the two armies, little more than one-fourth were soldiers of the Confederacy. The others were G. A. R. men, who, with less distance to travel, naturally were present in greater numbers.

The trip was trying, with the heat and with little inevitable discomforts that the old men would not have noticed 50 years ago, but which now were fraught with danger. There was tragedy in the sight of the feeble veterans fighting vainly against heat and exhaustion. There was real tragedy when a dozen or more succumbed and died on the same field where they escaped shot and shell.

The first two days of the reunion were almost unbearable with their heat, and the suffering was great. But a cooling storm blew

MIDNIGHT CAMP FIRES RECALL DEEDS OF VALOR

Old Soldiers Sit Up All Night to Tell Stories, and Everyone's a Good Listener.

up the third day, rendering pleasant enough the reunion weather.

Conversation Never Lags.

Within the tents there was always conversation. Not even in the dead of the night did it cease. The talk was of charges and of retreats, of maneuvers that have become more and more heroic now that the years have passed—but mostly, as is the way of veterans the world over, of personal prowess and adventure.

Camp fires were lighted in rows that stretched for miles and miles along the streets between the tents. Around them men sat, talking. Under the tents men lay on the cots, talking. There was little sleep, especially the first two nights, but voices everywhere through the night. Voices that were steady and numerous, with a sort of staccato effect that came with the intermittent puffing of thousand of corncob pipes.

Every veteran was his own best listener. Naturally, with everybody talking.

There was so much to tell, so many deeds of valor, so many heroes, so many beloved leaders who now are demigods.

Some of the leaders were present. Most spectacular and attractive figure, perhaps, was General Daniel E. Sickles, of New York, the sole surviving corps commander of the Union army who participated in the battle of Gettysburg.

Every day of the four saw a stream of visitors to his quarters, men who cried like babies as they shook his hands, and who had a hundred stories to tell him. The old general cried himself, and at one time was ordered kept from the visitors. More than 3,000 men, it is estimated, came to see him and to shake his hand on the first day of the reunion, and he held a veritable court as he sat in an armchair on the porch of the Rodgers house, a battlefield landmark.

Young Leaders Scorn Beds.

Others of the leaders, younger and more vigorous than the aged Federal, scorned the proffered beds and snug chambers that had been reserved for them, choosing instead the tents and cots of their comrades. One of these men was General A. J. West, of Georgia, who later was presented with a loving cup by the men of his State.

General Bennet H. Young, of Louisville, commander-in-chief of the United Confederate Veterans, was another hero. When he addressed the reunion crowd the first day, his own gray veterans greeted him with a lusty rebel yell that was rivaled in vigor by the sincere cheer which came from the Union veterans.

Confederate generals present were Robertson, Texas; West, Georgia; Shaffer, Louisiana; A. D. Williams, Florida; Law, Florida, and Carr, North Carolina.

Mrs. H. D. Longstreet, of Gainesville, Ga., widow of the great Confederate leader, was here and was always the center of a reverent crowd. Many men who fought under her husband followed her day after day, telling of incidents that occurred during the war.

The first night at the battlefield she could find no quarters. Everything was reserved, and she was forced to sleep on the floor of a farmhouse. The next morning, however, she found that a tent had been reserved for her by General Sickles.

She went to the pump of a farmhouse to get a drink of water, and there met an old soldier. She asked him under whom he fought, and he, ignorant of her identity, replied, "Longstreet."

"And are you glad or sorry that the war ended as it did?" she asked him.

"I am glad," he said, emphatically, "so far as the war itself is concerned, but not for the reconstruction days. You may be a Northern woman, and if you are, you can't imagine what we went through—not in the war, when the soldiers fought us, but in the days afterward, when the politicians governed us. But I'm glad the war ended in a united nation."

Wore Badge of Union.

Mrs. Longstreet saw everywhere examples of the reconciliation that the Gettysburg meeting has brought about. She met a soldier wearing a gray suit but decked with a badge marked Fifth Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry. She asked him why he, a Union man, should wear a gray suit.

"Me?" he said, surprised. "I am not a Yankee. I fought under Longstreet, and I'm from Mississippi."

"Why do you wear that badge, then?" she asked.

"Why," he said, "a Yank came along to-day from the Fifth Pennsylvania and asked me of I'd trade badges with him, after we'd had a talk and found out where we were at Gettysburg. So we traded. He's wearing my badge now—Fifteenth Mississippi. Says he'll keep it as long as he lives."

Reconciliation is sincere. There was even talk during the four days of an amalgamation of the United Confederate Veterans and the Grand Army of the Republic under the name, "The United Veterans of the United States."

Old Nurses Open Hospital.

A band of devoted women were the survivors of the corps of nurses who served during the battle. Mrs. Salome Stewart, leader of the band, was here to open the old hospital. Others of her staff present were Mrs. Charles F. Dye and Miss Cornelia Hancock, of Philadelphia; Miss Margaret Hamilton, Wakefield, Conn.; Mrs. Mary Stevens, Peabody, Conn.; Mrs. Annie Irving, Newburg; Mrs. Helen Cole, Sheboygan, Wis. Women of the families of General Meade, General Pickett and General Hill were present, too.

There were reunions between survivors of Buford's division of Meade's army, and Wheeler's division of Lee's, and, at the Bloody Angle, between Meredith's Iron Brigade and Pettigrew's men. It was these latter, according to the history of the fight, who saw the fiercest struggle.

Not in all the story of the reunion is there the breath of an unpleasantness among the veterans. A serious fight occurred the second day of the meeting, when seven men were stabbed. The fight, however, was precipitated by several young men who, abusing Abraham Lincoln, aroused the anger of a Union veteran. None of the seven injured was a veteran.

But among the veterans of the two armies there was only friendship and serenity. Blue and Gray swapped coffee and tobacco, just as they had done during the war, swapped reminiscences, and, most of all, traded assurances of having forgiven and forgotten the bitterness and the struggle of half a century ago.

President Follows Lincoln.

Tuesday of the reunion was Veterans' Day, given over to a great meeting of all the old soldiers, with addresses by representatives of both sides. Wednesday was Military Day, when younger soldiers were on display. Thursday was Civic Day, when Governors of States, representatives of the national government, and other civil authorities made addresses. Friday was National Day, marked by the address of President Wilson.

Every night the veterans sang the old war songs through, and repeated on the chorus. The entire encampment of the Gray veterans in the valley below the ridge joined in, until a chorus resounded that was thundering even in the vast spaces of the battlefield.

The songs were more and more exultant as the evening wore on. Now and then the rebel yell punctuated the melody. The sound spread to the Blue army, and was there augmented by the voices of the Union veterans until the battlefield became each night a vast theater for the recrudescence of the most wonderful martial spirit of all ages.

Gen. Sickles Paints Vivid Picture of Noted Struggle

By GENERAL DANIEL E. SICKLES.

Sole Surviving Corps Commander Who Participated in the Battle of Gettysburg.

MY heart beats faster to-night. The thronging hordes who motored, walked or came by trolley to my camp to-day have swept their hats off and hailed it as "Sickles' Day."

It was on this day a half century ago that God gave me strength to serve my country and my Maker better than I ever had been able to serve before.

It was upon this day in '63 that I lost my leg and did my little part by the mercy of God to preserve the Union.

July 2, 1863, broke hot and clear. Just as in the early hours to-day, a molten sun poured out of a sky that was but a trifle overclouded. I had retired shortly after midnight the previous evening and slept the quiet, dreamless sleep that is generally attributed to innocent babes.

Many men who came to-day to shake my hand told me they were too busy to do so 50 years ago—that their whole hearts and minds were wrapped up in the conflict to come.

I knew that a conflict of the utmost importance to our country was at hand. And something told me the fight would begin about 3 o'clock. So it proved.

Was Sent for by Meade.

A few minutes before that hour General Meade, in command, sent word to me that he desired to see me immediately. I replied that I could not come, as the enemy was about to attack. Meade did not believe me, and sent his aide-de-camp back with a more peremptory message.

Meade had never been in favor of giving battle at Gettysburg, and I knew that he would order me to leave my position and move to Pipe Creek, where he intended to battle. At this time I held the advance line extending from Devil's Den to the Peach Orchard. I had also forced out a further line on the Emmitsburg Road, which passes in front of the Rogers House here.

I had hardly given spurs to my horse in response to my superior's summons when the enemy's attack opened. I immediately sent word to Meade I could not obey his commands because I was actually being attacked.

In a few minutes hell had broken loose along my line. My 10,000 men were attacked with ferocity by two of Longstreet's divisions and Anderson's division of Hill's corps—20,000 men in all.

Let me call attention right here to the fact that if I had not taken the initiative our left would have been lost. Longstreet said I won the battle by my advance move. Sheridan said so, and Grant indorsed the former's opinion.

Sickles' Losses Were 4,200.

The fight was the most desperate, the most severe of my life. It was far more intense than Chancellorsville. My total losses were 4,200 men, while the enemy's was approximately 7,000 or 8,000. The cannonading was the heaviest I have ever heard.

The loss of my leg occurred between 6 and 7 o'clock in the evening. Owing to the small number of my men compared with that of the enemy I knew that it was only through force of personal leadership that I could hold them together, so I rode constantly upon my horse up and down my line of battle.

I have been criticised for this, but it was the only way I could prevent my men from being overpowered. And so I paid no attention when they cried: "Sickles to the rear. Sickles to the rear."

The loss of a limb or the loss of a life meant nothing to my then. Nor has it since. I had but one thought—to win the battle.

Wounded After Victory.

It was after the victory had been practically won that the piece of shrapnel that almost cost me my life came along. At first I did not know I was hit. My thoughts, as I said before, were solely on the battle and so I am unable to tell exactly at what point I was struck. It was somewhere between the peach orchard and the wheat field.

I made the discovery that I had been hit as I was riding back from immediate front to my headquarters' flag. I felt my foot was wet and damp. I looked down and found that my knee and leg were also wet and damp. I slipped my leg over the back of my horse and saw that I was bleeding a great deal. Then I knew my leg was badly fractured—it later turned out to have been fractured both above and below the knee.

Instantly I slipped from my horse's back and sent for a surgeon. I was still bleeding a great deal and I saw that I would bleed to death before the arrival of a surgeon unless something was done.

Blood's Flow Stayed.

So I ordered one of my staff to take a small strap from his blanket and buckle it about my leg. The strap was pulled into a tight tourniquet and the rapid flow of blood was stayed. The doctors said before they amputated the leg that not even one of my sturdy constitution could have stood the terrific loss of blood.

At the end of the second day's battle General Meade was still pessimistic. He still believed it would be better to retreat and fight at Pipe Creek. The council of war, however, would not hear of it. Slocum's ringing resolution: "Stay and fight," was unanimously adopted. Results proved its wisdom. I personally have always entertained doubts whether Lee would have followed us to Pipe Creek and offered battle.

WHISTLING CAT PROVES TO BE "UNMUSICAL"

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., July 5.—Stanislaus Czynszky, of West Springfield, is the owner of a cat with a hare lip which whistles with the facility of the schoolboy, but cannot mew. Czynszky is inclined to believe that no animal in its normal state of mind would whistle, but is loath to do away with the cat.

Southern Girl To Be an Opera Star

Miss Baylor in Debut Sept. 14

Miss Eloise Baylor, who wil l make her debut as Philine in "Mignon."

Brilliant Career Is Predicted for Chattanooga Singer by European Masters.

CHATTANOOGA, July 5.—A gifted Southern girl will make her debut in grand opera at Bremen, Germany, September 14, when Miss Eloise Baylor, of Chattanooga, will appear in the role of Philine in the opera "Mignon." Miss Baylor will appear regularly until the following April, her repertoire comprising the following roles: Philine in "Mignin," Violetta in "Traviata," Martha in "Martha," Gilda in "Rigoletto," Frau Fluth in "Lustige Weiber," Konegin der Nacht in "Zauberflote," Konigin in "Hugenotter," Mimi in "La Boheme," Rosina in "Barbier von Siviglia," Lucia in "Lucia de Lammermoor," Ophelie in "Hamlet," Wald Vogel in "Siegfried," Erste Rheintochter in "Rheingold," Constance in "Entfuhrung," and Erste Rheintochter in "Gotterdammerung."

Miss Baylor is the daughter of Prof. and Mrs. J. Roy Baylor, and emphatically an American girl in spite of the fact that the past four years of her life have been spent in the study of music under the French, German and Italian masters. She is of Colonial stock on both her paternal and maternal side. She was born in Charlottesville, Va.

It might be said that Miss Baylor's musical career began when Mrs. Virginia Preston Means taught her as a delightful baby of 2 years to run the scale. Her father moved to Chattanooga from Virginia shortly afterward and her musical training was intrusted to Miss Ione Spears.

It was slightly more than seven years ago that Miss Baylor began the study of her chosen art, working in New York under the best masters. While here she sang before Madame Sembrich, and the latter was so delighted with her voice that she gave her a recommendation and ordered her to study under Jean de Reszke, in Paris.

The Southern girl followed her advise, and two years ago she completed the course prescribed by De Reszke and his chief assistant, Oscar Seagle, a native Chattanoogan.

Since completing this course Miss Baylor has appeared in practically all the European capitals and is even better known on the continent than in the United States. A brilliant career is predicted for her by all the European masters.

INNOCENT MAN PARDONED AFTER 2 YEARS IN PRISON

TOPEKA, July 5.—George Horton, sent to the State Penitentiary in 1910 charged with robbing a jewelry store in Medicine Lodge, Kans., has served nearly two years for a crime he did not commit, according to facts brought out to-day when Governor Hodge granted him a permanent parole. Horton's conviction resulted because a bloodhound placed upon the trail directed suspicion to him. Horton's friends were able to present evidence to the Governor that the stolen jewelry was hidden under a Medicine Lodge hotel after Horton was in prison.

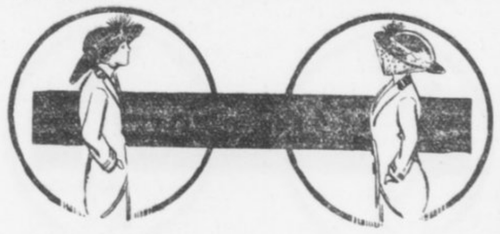
"KOMFORT BRACE"

It immediately corrects stoops of long standing (or long stooping) and eradicates the habit altogether. Gives women the full rounded bust; reduces the stomach; makes you a "deep breather;" makes new corpuscles and gives you the "poise" and independence the Divine Plan intended.



Women are more prone to the "stoop-habit" than men. The "KOMFORT BRACE" antagonises every inclination to "stoop" without making you conscious of the effort. It is a scientific Health Brace, as SIMPLE AS IT IS CERTAIN.

BROWN WILL KEEP HIS EAR TO GROUND

position is indorsed and statements are made that the labor union's exactions are becoming almost unbearable

Thus far the labor union and its few newspaper advocates are alone in criticising the stand which the oath of office made it my duty to take. From these I note that I have "killed myself politically."

Never Considered Politics.

As to that act of so-styled political suicide, I will remark that it never occurred to me to consider any political bearing in the case. But, now that the point has been raised, I will observe that there was a matter of gratitude to the people of Georgia, which may even be styled political gratitude, which, I confess, swayed me. I refer to the fact that the voters of this State have twice conferred upon me the supreme honor in their gift.

Nothing which they control compares in responsibility, in dignity and eminence with the governorship!

Therefore, with my reward already bestowed, they had the right to expect and demand that I would safeguard their interests, oblivious to inducements or threats. My duty was plain.

Now, there is one point which I must ask you to bear especially in mind. I refer to the fact that there are thousands of members of the labor union in Georgia who are golden-hearted in their love of the State and of their fellow citizens.

But they have not appreciated the fact that in resorting to the process of a strike they have put themselves in direct rebellion to the laws of the State. They have not appreciated the fact that they are the victims of a system which holds itself above the law.

The strike status is not of Georgia. It is a foreign importation. Its aims are the securing of preference by force. Its attempts are the control and virtual ownership of the property which others own and upon which those others are required to pay taxes to the State.

Its concomitant is almost invariably violence to the persons of those who obey the laws in performing the duties which the strikers refuse to do, and frequently in damage to or destruction of property which they have temporarily abandoned for use, but over which they keep a hostile guard.

No Preference Is Shown.

Among these members of the labor union are a number of my friends of a lifetime. To oblige them I would go to any honorable lengths in my power, and I feel sure that I hold their reciprocal regard. Yet, probably the highest duty I owe them is to make clear to their minds the fact that they should not allow themselves to be deceived into doing deeds which in their essence are antagonistic to the very genius of our laws, and which, if tolerated, will breed anarchy, in which they will ultimately be among the worst sufferers.

It is needless to say that the State will not allow any class to have preference over others.

She does not intend that capital shall oppress labor, nor does she intend that labor shall rob or destroy capital, and she is very far from intending that the allies of union labor shall beat or kill or drive from the means of making an honoset livelihood those laborers who do the same kind of work the members of the labor union do, and especially when union labor has refused to do that work.

Now as to the claim that the courts can not reach all cases in which labor has rights against capital. There is really very little in this claim. But if it were ever so true, it is the duty of labor to go to the Legislature and have laws enacted which will cover such cases, instead of resorting to methods which embarrass unoffending thousands and are too often attended by destruction of property and by brutal violence, and even death to persons.

No man can claim that the Legislature would shut its ears and turn its hands against the proper demands of labor.

Court Is Proper Tribunal.

Therefore, what I have maintained as executive officer of the State, and what I plead for as a private citizen, is that all men go into court with their differences, if they can not settle them by mutual agreement or by arbitration. I insist that no man and no class be allowed any process which amounts to a special privilege. I insist that if any man be deprived of life, liberty or property, or that if any kind of personal punishment be inflicted upon him, it shall be by the hands of the law, and not by self-appointed or secretly instigated avengers.

Inasmuch, therefore, as the labor union, by obstructing and occasionally preventing the operation of the public utilities, has placed its mandate in opposition to the State's mandate, it may become necessary for the State to protect her citizens against its acts which bring damage to them.

She now requires insurance companies to make a money deposit with her before doing business in her borders. These companies represent capital. If she would make the same requirement of labor organizations, with the fund to be forfeited to the State in the event these organizations do deeds which damage the public, she would be but treating labor and capital alike—and who can say that this would be unfair?

Again, the public utilities are chartered to serve the public—all the people. Their tolls and general conduct are regulated by law. Therefore, they are, in great measure, public institutions.

Hence it would certainly conduce to the public interest if every member of the labor union, which assumes to control the working powers of the utilities, were required to take an oath before a State official to the effect that he would do no act which would obstruct that utility for which he works from performing the functions for which it was chartered. The penalty for violation of that oath should be the forfeiture of the right to service on any public utility in the State for the period of one year. The same penalty should be made to apply to any officer of the utility in question.

Merely Views of Citizen.

Of course, the foregoing views are merely those of a private citizen. Yet I recognize that, having entered as a public official upon the presentation of the questions which the labor union has made an issue with the State, it is not improper for me in any capacity to make a searching examination into this question involving the rights of each citizen of Georgia. This I will undertake to do after I give proper attention to my private affairs, which have been placed in the background for several years.

When Mozart Bowed Before the Boy Beethoven

(Stirring Stories of Great Musicians. No. 7.)

AWKWARD, ill-clothed, the boy entered the room that was to him a shrine. He had come far to see the world's great master, to beg a word of encouragement.

He sat at the piano, awkward still, his smouldering eyes fixed with grim intensity upon the other's. He wished to see his triumph. But as he watched, the light went out from the other's face. It grew uninterested.

Grimly the boy played on, but he knew his failure. He had learned his piece too well, its witchery was gone. Then with a crash, he suddenly ceased.

"Give me a theme" he pleaded. The great musician did so, unwilling to hurt him who had failed.

Grimly still, almost sullenly, the youth commenced again. And then the magic from his fingers came, tracing their mastery in immortal sound. Slow the tones grew. Slowly they faded, like a soft regret, faded and were still.

Slowly the man rose, reverently he bowed.

"Boy, thou art great," he said, "the world will hear of thee."

It was the tribute of the setting to the dawning Sun of Genius—the Great Man to the Great Boy. It was Mozart's tribute to Beethoven.

* * * * *

Have you a boy who hummed little airs at play when he was tiny? That boy has musical talent, and you are responsible for developing it.

Have you given him a musical chance, with a musical education, on a good piano? Or have you already ruined his ear by giving him the "cheap tone" habit of a cheap piano?

The delicate brain cells connected with the ear take bad "sound habits" quickly, which can't be lost. That is why an English cockney misplaces his "h," or a street boy loves a squeaking harmonica. The will develop your boy's "musical liking" by developing his ear to true tones. The great musicians Liszt and Johann Strauss recommended it. His Holiness Pope Pius X endorsed it with a Papal medal.

HALLET & DAVIS PIANO

Why don't you give your boy or girl a musical chance, by giving them a Hallet & Davis Piano?

It's our business to show you how you can afford it. You'll be surprised to learn how low-priced these high-grade instruments are and what Easy Payments will secure one. Call at the store for full information on prices and terms today.

PERRY VICTORY ON ERIE IN 1813 IS CELEBRATED

100 Years Peace With England and Centennial of Naval Engagement Commemorated.

SUNKEN FLAGSHIP RAISED

Struggle on Lake To Be Depicted by Sham Battle—Many Officials Attend.

ERIE, PA., July 5.—Beautifully decorated with bunting and flowers, the city of Erie presents a delightful spectacle in preparation for the centennial celebration of Perry's victory at the Battle of Lake Erie, which will be inaugurated to-morrow by a "Peace Sunday," closing on Saturday night. An elaborate program has been arranged for the entertainment of the thousands of visitors who will attend.

Throughout the summer several celebrations are scheduled at various points along the lake bearing a historical relationship to the battle. The list of celebrations will probably close with the dedication of the Perry memorial now nearing completion on South Bass Island, near the western end of Lake Erie. The celebration will also be in the nature of commemorations of a hundred years' peace between English-speaking nations.

To-morrow at 11 o'clock special services will be held in all the churches in the city. At 3:30 in the afternoon there will be a parade, terminating in a mass meeting before the reviewing stand at Perry Square. The children of the Sunday schools will be dressed and seated in such a manner, on a huge stand erected for the purpose, as to form a living American flag.

The old DuPont powder wagon, which was used for the transportation of ammunition in the War of 1812, is making an overland trip from the DuPont Works in Wilmington, Del., and is scheduled to arrive in Erie at 3 o'clock on Monday afternoon, when a reception in its honor will take place. The wagon is to be escorted by a detachment of the naval force of Pennsylvania from the United States steamship Wolverine, the oldest iron vessel in existence, built in Erie in 1844.

The National Guard State encampment has been arranged for the week of the celebration, the camp being pitched just outside of the city.

At 8 p. m. a leading citizen of the city, impersonating Commodore Perry, will sail into the harbor on Perry's flagship, the Niagara, which has been raised from the bottom of Misery Bay and restored. Following this there will be a band concert in Perry Square, after which the automobile parade will be held. The day will be known as Reception Day.

Tuesday will be Mothers' and Children's Day. The principal feature of the afternoon will be the parade of 12,000 school children. In the evening a band concert, followed by a pageantry parade, will take place. Wednesday has been designated as Governors' Day, and arrangements have been made to entertain Governor Tener, of Pennsylvania, and Governors from at least eight other States. In the afternoon there will be a military parade. There will also be hydroaeroplane flights on the bay on this and subsequent days.

Naval Day will be celebrated on Thursday, starting with a naval parade in the afternoon, to be reviewed by Secretary of the Navy Josephus Daniels. Following the parade, boat races will be held on the day, in which yachts, motorboats and naval training ships will compete.

Sham Battle on Water.

In the evening there will be a massed band concert in Perry Square, followed by a naval sham battle on the bay depicting the Battle of Lake Erie.

The principal features on Friday will be the fraternal parade in the afternoon. Saturday, the closing day of the celebration, has been designated as Industrial or Erie Day. In the evening, preceding a massed band concert in the square, the Niagara will sail out of the harbor, as she did 100 years ago. After leaving Erie she will visit other lake ports and participate in commemorative celebrations.

During the week of celebration the sword used by Perry at the battle will be on exhibition, as well as a brace of pistols and his flag, inscribed, "Don't Give Up the Ship." The sword has been lent by Perry Belmont, of New York, a grandson of Commodore M. C. Perry, the brother of Commodore Oliver Hazard Perry, the hero of the battle. Mrs. Alexander Perry, of Washington, D. C., lent the pistols. The flag is the property of the Government.

Suffragist Is to Wear Trousers 'Are More Modest Than Skirts' Hiker Will Discard Her Petticoats

General Jones' Mascot on March to Washington Has a Corsetless Silk Costume.

NEW YORK, July 5.—They're here at last. Mrs. John Boldt, who was called the mascot of General Jones' suffrage army on its 250-mile hike to the inauguration last February, has designed several pairs of trouser costumes, and will wear them hereafter.

At her apartments in the Hotel Marseilles yesterday, Mrs. Boldt criticised the women who are always talking dress reform, she said, but lacked the courage to wear "the sensible clothing they advocated."

"What we need to break the shackles and free these slaves to fashion is a leader," remarked Mrs. Boldt, as she sat in a big easy chair attired in her corsetless, trousette costume. It was made of sunburst-colored silk, caught in at the ankles with a band of gold and blue embroidery. The high waist, in Empire effect, was finished with a girdle of the same embroidery.

"The trouble with us is that we are many years behind the times in dress. The women of the East are far more progressive than us in dress. The majority of women in the world today wear trousers, the women of India, Turkey, China, Japan and even the peasant women of many European countries.

"Trousers of the style I wear, with draperies for evening of soft materials, giving an artistic Grecian line, are far more modest than the slit skirts you see on Broadway, with the limbs exposed to the knees, or transparent underclothing."

MRS. JOHN BOLDT, prominent suffragette and chief aide of General Rosalie Jones, wearing the type of trousers which she urges as a substitute for skirts.

Girls Writing Book Will Simplify Laws

Ohio Misses Preparing History of All State Statutes to Aid Bench and Bar.

CLEVELAND, July 5.—The embryo lawyer to-day, who will be the brilliant pleader of to-morrow, will owe a debt of gratitude to two Cleveland girls for a massive volume filled with simple interpretations of Ohio's laws.

The girls are Miss Ruth Winch, 23, daughter of Judge Louis H. Winch, and Miss Ruth Jenkins, 18.

The book they are writing is being prepared by two girls under the supervision of Judge Winch, and will be known as "The History of the Laws of Ohio," containing nearly a thousand pages of dry legal matter made simple and entertaining. The book will be published this fall.

Takes Horse to Wed; Girl Given 7 Years

Woman Declares She Induced Man to Steal Animal so That They Could Elope.

PARSONS, KANS., July 5.—For stealing a horse so she could elope and be married, Mrs. Marie Pollard was sentenced to seven years in the penitentiary.

It was the first time in the history of the Labette County Court that a woman was sentenced for horse stealing.

Before she was sentenced, Mrs. Pollard insisted that she alone was to blame. She declared she had induced Samuel Parks to steal the horse and buggy and drive her to Clinton, where they were to have been married.

2,500 CHURCH MEMBERS AT ANNUAL FOOT WASHING

ANDERSON, IND., July 5.—More than 2,500 adherents of the Church of God from all sections of the country, participated in the annual foot-washing ceremony at the national camp meeting near here.

Women of the church are not permitted to wear gay-colored ribbons or plumage, and the men wear no neckties. Jewelry is not allowed. Smoking is prohibited. Men kiss each other. The only musical instrument allowed in the service is a tuning fork.

Uncle Sam Must Pay Indian's Doctor Bill

Comptroller Holds That Government Must Care for Blind Aborigine Hurt in Auto Accident.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—Uncle Sam is just as much a protector and guardian of the life and welfare of his Indian wards as a parent is of his child.

This principle of responsibility was proclaimed by George E. Downey, Comptroller of the Treasury, in overruling the appeal of Robert W. Wooley, new auditor for the Interior Department, for a reversal of the Comptroller's decision approving a $900 bill of Dr. George P. Sampson for treating and nursing a blind Indian.

Charley Walker, a blind Navajo and ward of the Government, deserted by his guide on the approach of a train, was run over.

Dr. Sampson amputated his left leg and right foot and cared for him for three months.

NEW STANDARD OF WEIGHT FOR GEMS ADOPTED BY U. S.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—The Treasury Department has issued instructions to collectors of customs, adopting as the unit of weight for imported diamonds, pearls and other precious stones, the metric carat of 200 milligrams. The adoption of this standard will make the practice of this country conform to that of large countries dealing in diamonds, chief among them being the Netherlands, England, France and Belgium.

TEACHERS WHO SPEAK SPANISH IN BIG DEMAND

Many Positions in Latin-America Go Begging Because of Lack of Knowledge of Language.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—Several well-paid teaching positions in Latin-America open to Americans will probably be filled by men from other countries because of a lack of trained men in the United States with a speaking knowledge of Spanish, according to L. A. Kalbach, chief clerk of the Bureau of Education.

On several occasions lately, he points out, the Bureau of Education, at the request of the State Department, has scoured the country in search of educators for responsible positions in Latin-American countries, only to find generally that those who might qualify in other particulars can not speak the language.

$2,400 Salaries Offered.

The American Minister to Panama recently asked the United States Government to recommend candidates for professor of industrial arts, professor of agriculture and professor of veterinary medicine in Panama. Salaries up to $2,400 and other inducements were offered. The Bureau of Education communicated with various institutions and organizations that usually have lists of available candidates, but in this case the response was meager, because of the language requirement.

"None of our industrial arts experts speaks Spanish," wrote an officer of one of the best known teacher-training institutions. Others declared that while they knew of men who would meet the requirements, so far as professional attainments and teaching experience were concerned, they knew of none who had the added requirement of Spanish.

Few Learn Spanish.

Spanish is, of course, taught in many American institutions of learning, but the bureau officials point out, comparatively few students avail themselves of the opportunity to learn it. Sometimes students feel that a high school or college course in Spanish will not furnish the necessary conversational knowledge. This difficulty has long been recognized in all modern language instruction, and in Spanish, particularly, practical control of the language is now insisted upon.

Furthermore, opportunities for practice in speaking Spanish are constantly increasing. Better transportation facilities are making the United States and Latin-American nations more and more accessible to each other.

APPOINTMENT OF GONZALES RECALLS FEUD

Brother of New Minister to Cuba Was Slain on Street by James H. Tillman.

When William Elliott Gonzales goes to Cuba, to which country he has been appointed as Minister by President Wilson, he will be returning to the land of his ancestors. Born in the United States, he is intensely American in his point of view, but this has not prevented him from taking a deep interest in the development of Cuba.

His name is a link between the two countries. His father, a native of Matanzas, Cuba, married into the old Elliott family of South Carolina, and the new Minister to Cuba was named for his uncle, William Elliott, a one-time Representative in Congress. The Elliotts had been for generations prominent in the social and political life of the Palmetto State, and General Ambrosio Jose Gonzales, the father of William Elliott Gonzales, was a greater politician than any of them and brought up his boys to take a vital interest in politics, for his participation in which one son paid with his life. The memoers of the Gonzales family have always had decided opinions on every public question and have always expressed their feelings forcibly.

Headed Fight for Liberty.

General Gonzales, with Narisco Lopez, headed the struggle for independence of Cuba in 1844, being one of the junta of five members who signed the declaration of independence, adopted the present flag and organized the first filibustering expedition under Lopez, he being second in command, with the rank of brigadier general. He was the first Cuban wounded in the battle for independence at Cardenas, May 20, 1850. The expedition failed and a sentence of death was pronounced upon Gonzales, but he escaped to the United States and settled in South Carolina, where he married a daughter of William Elliott, a prominent citizen of Beaufort. When the Civil War broke out the Cuban general offered his services to the Confederates and served as colonel and chief of artillery with General Beauregard, surrendering with Johnston's army at Greensboro in 1865. His two sons have followed in his footsteps, both having been soldiers, having proved their devotion to the United States and to Cuba.

He Opposed Tillman.

The feud which ended in the fatal shooting of Narisco G. Gonzales by Lieutenant Governor James H. Tillman in 1903 was partly political and partly personal. The two families had been on bad terms for years, and during the campaign which resulted in the election of Tillman as Lieutenant Governor, Gonzales through his paper, The State, had fought him bitterly. In his editorials he had called him names that Tillman could not forgive or forget. He challenged the editor to a duel, but Gonzales treated the proposal with contempt. This in no way impugned his courage, for the entire Gonzales family was noted for its bravery and nerve, and Narisco Gonzales, who was named for old Narisco Lopez, had acted as a scout for Gomez before the Spanish-American war and had served in the American army after war was declared, doing valiant service.

He was shot when walking unarmed in the public street by Tillman. At the first shot he called out "Coward!" and then "Shoot again!" as he sank to the ground. He died a few days afterward and feeling ran so high that Tillman, insisting that he could not get a fair trial in that county obtained a change of venue and was acquitted after a sensational trial.

Is a Spanish War Veteran.

William Elliott Gonzales succeeded his brother as the editor of The State. Like him, he had been a soldier in the war with Spain, having served as captain in the Second South Carolina regiment and having gone to Cuba with the army of pacification. Mr. Gonzales is a close personal and political friend of the Secretary of State, and in his paper warmly supported him in his candidacy for the Presidency in all of his campaigns. He is also a good friend of President Wilson and was one of the first men to suggest his name for the office which he now holds. The State led the fight in securing a delegation favorable to him, and it was largely owing to his efforts that the Palmetto delegation stood by Woodrow Wilson from first to last at the National Convention. After the nomination Mr. Gonzales returned home and worked for his election, raising a large popular subscription through the State to help defray the expenses of the campaign.

Mr. Gonzales has entertained both President Wilson and Secretary Bryan at hos home in Columbia, and it is understood that the appointment was tendered him out of personal regard by the President and because of his belief in his fitness for the place.

Senator Tillman Passive.

Notwithstanding the feeling between the Gonzales and Tillman families, it is understood that Senator Tillman, recognizing Mr. Gonzales' splendid work for President Wilson, will not oppose his confirmation. One of the most outspoken enemies of the newly appointed Minister to Cuba is Governor Blease, who was one of the counsel for James Tillman at the time of his trial. Not long ago the Governor was reported to have criticised Mr. Daniels, Secretary of the Navy, very bitterly because of his friendship for Mr. Gonzales.

Opticians to Operate On Hogs Before Jury

Defendants to Use Porkers' Eyes to Disprove Plaintiff's Malpractice Charge.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 5.—A novel means of illustration was employed in Judge Rogers' court in a case in which two Columbus eye specialists are defendants for $10,000 damages.

Operations are to be performed on eyes to illustrate the claim of defendants that there was no malpractice. Human optics are not to be used. Because the eyes of hogs are very much like those of men, several healthy porkers are to be robbed of their "lamps."

These will be put in masks just like human "mugs" and the jurors will know exactly what happened to the plaintiff when he was put under the knives of the defendants.

Postoffice Lost by Veterans to Boy, 25

Missouri Youth Is Youngest Yet Named by President—Gets Salary of $2,400.

TRENTON, MO., July 5.—Winning the distinction of being the youngest postmaster in Missouri and the youngest yet appointed by President Wilson, Wilbur E. Austin has assumed charge of the Trenton office at 25. It is a second-class office, with a salary of $2,400 per annum.

Austin was nominated by President Wilson over five opponents, all of whom have been prominent in party affairs in this section for years. He was backed by Colonel E. M. Harber, of Trenton, an uncle, who is a close friend of Congressman W. W. Rucker, and was recommended by the Congressman.

"I Love You," Signals Heiress in Court

Millionaire's Daughter Cheers Sweetheart Accused by Her Father as Dead Beat.

STEAMBOAT SPRINGS, COLO., July 5.—A jury in the District Court has failed to agree in the case of Robert King, an artist, who recently attempted to elope with the 17-year-old daughter of F. E. Milner, millionaire lumberman and hotel proprietor. King was charged with beating a bill at the hotel owned by his sweetheart's father.

Women crowded the court room during the trial. Miss Milner and her father occupied front seats. The girl smiled at King on the stand and signaled to him with her hands. She explained afterward that her signal was: "I love you." Her father had forbidden her to speak to King.

Girl Is Near Death In Submarine Tango

Tries To Do Fancy Steps for Benefit of Lake Michigan "Mermaids," When She Sinks.

CHICAGO, July 5.—The mermaids at the bottom of Lake Michigan now dance the tango. Miss Kathryn Courts, of Normal Park, showed them how.

"Look, girls, this is the latest!" she cried to friends bathing with her off Margate Terrace.

And she tangoed right out into deep water and down among the mermaids, and would have drowned if Thomas Cooper, superintendent for Butler Bros., had not dragged her forth.

Her comrades had thought the symptoms of drowning part of the show.

MASHER LASHED BY WOMAN HE HAD ANNOYED

Tired of His Notes and Unwarranted Attention, Confectioner's Wife Uses Horsewhip.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 5.—Mrs. B. C. Osmun, the wife of a confectioner, residing at 54 Fair Avenue, pluckily took matters in her own hands and dealt summary justice to a masher who had been annoying her Friday afternoon. The masher, L. M. Cox, received a sound horsewhipping which Mrs. Osmun, administered to him in the street near her home.

According to Mrs. Osmun, Cox, who is about 60 years of age, has been continually annoying her by sending love notes, following her on the street and trying to induce her to leave her husband for him. She states that he has also been slandering her to the neighbors, and being unable to stand his annoyances any longer, she decided to put a definite stop to the proceedings.

When Cox attempted to speak to her on the street Friday afternoon, Mrs. Osmun produced the whip and proceeded to thrash him. Mrs. Osmun did not escape without injury, for she bears a large black and blue spot on her arm and a discolored right eye, which, she asserts, Cox gave her after he had taken her whip away.

Following the scene in the street Mrs. Osmun hurried to the police station and gave herself up in order to prevent Cox swearing out a warrant for her arrest. She was not held, however, and she proceeded to have a citation issued against Cox.

Leaps Across Area To Save Child Afire

Neighbor Sees Girl's Peril and Makes Dangerous Jump, Putting Out Flames With Coat.

NEW YORK, July 5.—William Morrissey, of 252 Nepperhan Avenue, Yonkers, by a daring leap yesterday saved Olive Edick, 7 years old, from burning to death. The child is terribly burned, but physicians in St. Joseph's Hospital say she will live.

The girl was playing with her younger brother, Russell, on the fourth floor of her home at 121 New Main Street. The boy accidentally set Olive's dress afire. She ran, screaming, to the fire escape.

Morrissey was on the fourth floor of the next block. There is a wide space between the two fire escapes. Seeing the child was doomed unless he acted, Morrissey jumped and landed beside the blazing youngster. Pulling off his coat, he quickly blanketed the flames.

To Have Perfect Skin Throughout the Summer

(From The Guide to Beauty.)

These days the face and neck need special care and attention. Flying dust and dirt, the beating sun, are severe on any skin. Their despoiling effects are best overcome by the application of pure mercolized wax. This keeps skin and pores in a cleanly condition, the complexion beautifully white and spotless. Tan, freckles, blotches and roughened cuticle are actually absorbed by it. One ounce of mercolized wax, obtainable at any drug store, is sufficient to completely renovate a soiled complexion. It is used like cold cream, allowed to remain on over night and washed off in the morning.

As the skin tends to expand in warm weather, causing wrinkles to form, a good astringent lotion should be used. Dissolve one ounce powdered saxolite in one-half pint of witch hazel. Bathe the face in this during the heat of the day or before going out for theater or social affair. It is a remarkable skin tightener and wrinkle eraser.

Trusses Like These Are A Crime

Such Makeshifts Have Forced Thousands Into Risking Dangerous Operations

Wearing elastic and spring trusses year after year is almost sure to shorten your life.

You can't make them hold, even when drawn so tight you can scarcely stand to keep them on.

They usually let you get worse all the time—that's why every year they are forcing thousands of people into undergoing operation.

They are simply a crime—squeeze the rupture, often causing strangulation—dig into the pelvic bone in front—press against the spinal column at the back—make life miserable for nearly everybody who wears them.

The Plain Truth Is This

You can't possibly get well—can't even keep from getting worse—unless your rupture is constantly held in place. Just as a broken bone can't knit unless held securely together.

And just as a bandage or splint is the only way a broken bone can be held, so the right kind of truss is the only thing in the world that can keep a rupture from coming out and growing worse.

You'll feel like a new person from the day you put on that kind of truss.

But you know as well as we that you'll never find such a sure-to-hold truss at any drug store.

Yet it's easy enough to get. And you can test it first—by sixty days trial—without having to risk a single cent.

It's the famous Cluthe Truss or Cluthe Automatic Massager absolutely guaranteed to hold, and won't cost you a cent if it doesn't.

It's so utterly different from everything else for rupture that it has received eighteen separate patents.

Made on an entirely new principle. Instantly and automatically protects you against every strain so your rupture can't possibly be forced out. Self-regulating, self-adjusting. Far more than just a truss.

In addition to constant holding it provides the only way ever discovered for overcoming the weakness which is the real cause of rupture.

Just how it does that—entirely automatically—and how it has thus completely cured hundreds and hundreds of people whose cases seemed almost hopeless—is all explained in the free book which the coupon below will bring you.

No Belt—No Leg-Straps—No Springs

The Cluthe Truss does away with the curse of belts, leg-straps and springs. Thousand say it is as comfortable as their clothing. It is waterproof—will hold in the bath. Also perspiration-proof and easily kept clean.

Make This 60-Day Test—You Won't Have to Risk a Penny

We don't ask you to trust to a mere try-on the way you have to do at a drug store.

We'll make a Cluthe Automatic Massaging Truss especially for your case—make it to your measure—and let you try it sixty days.

We'll practically lend it to you that long just for a test.

If it doesn't keep your rupture from coming out or bothering you in any way, no matter how hard you work or strain—if it doesn't prove every claim we make—then you can send it back and it won't cost you a penny.

Free Book Full of Facts Never Before Put in Print

Don't keep on letting yourself get worse—don't spend a cent on account of your rupture until you get our free book of advice.

This remarkable book—cloth-bound, 96 pages—sums up all we have learned about ruptures during forty years of experience. You'll find it full of facts never before put in print.

It shows just why elastic and spring trusses cause so much misery and such a shameful waste of money that the law should stop their sale.

It explains why operation is nearly always a needless gamble with death—and why, if you do manage to live through it, you may have to keep on wearing a truss.

It exposes the humbug "appliances," "methods," "plasters," etc.

It shows why sixty days' trial is the only safe way to buy anything for rupture—and how the Cluthe Truss is the only thing of any kind that you can get on such a long trial because the only thing good enough to stand such a thorough day-after-day test.

And it tells all about this famous Automatic Massaging Truss—how simple it is—how it ends constant expense—how it has saved thousands from operation—how you can get it on trial, and how little it costs if you keep it.

Also gives voluntary indorsements from over 5,000 benefited and cured people.

Write for this book to-day—don't put it off—the minute it takes to send for it may free you from trouble for the rest of your life.

Simply use the coupon or just say in a letter or postal "Send me your book."

ALL SAVANNAH WITH MAYOR IN BIG PARK PLAN

Project to Make Playground of Forsyth Extension Greeted With Delight.

SAVANNAH, July 5.—The plan of Mayor Richard J. Davant to convert the Forsyth Park Extension into a public playground has struck a popular chord in the hearts of the citizens. On every hand the Mayor is being commended and encouraged.

The City Council is committed to the plan.

The Savannah officers of the Georgia National Guard have announced their intention of co-operating with the Mayor.

The extension originally was set aside under an old grant as a drill ground for the military, and is under their control.

Women Take Part.

Women will enter largely into the playground and athletic field proposition. A committee of young women called upon Mayor Davant at his home, with the request that he provide tennis courts for them, as well as baseball diamonds and running tracks for the young men.

The young women promised the Mayor they will turn suffragists if not given equal rights.

The Mayor isn't taking any chances about this equal rights proposition, and he just likes to do things that are appreciated, anyhow; so he is going to have provision made for the young women.

Project Rapidly Maturing.

When the Mayor departed from the City Hall to-day, he left with the project crystallized into more definite shape and seemingly more assured of success than at any stage since the movement was launched. Committees have been appointed by various organizations to co-operate with the Mayor. These include women's and girls' organizations as well as those of men and boys.

Complete plans for the playground will not be made until a conference can be arranged between Mayor Davant and various organizations, including the military. At that time the subject will be discussed from every point of view and a program mapped out.

Police Judge Declares No Resorts Will Be Permitted Outside of District Lines.

SAVANNAH, GA., July 5.—That houses of questionable character will not be tolerated outside the segregated district has been made clear by Recorder John Schwartz. The Recorder will back the police in every move made against houses that are operated outside the district.

The Protestant Ministers' Association will take up the vice question in the fall.

SAVANNAH, July 5.—At play with a small boy of her own age, on the second story balcony of her home, Gladys, the three-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Gray, Jr., slipped and fell headfirst to the ground, striking on a pile of bricks. The child's foot caught in her dress. There was no railing and she fell 20 feet. It is thought the child may have suffered concussion of the brain.

CRUISER TACOMA SAILS FOR NEW YORK MONDAY

SAVANNAH, July 5.—After a stay of eighteen days in Savannah, the United States protected cruiser Tacoma will sail for New York Monday. The Tacoma wore gala colors for Independence Day, and her guns boomed a national salute. The bluejackets were paid off on the 2d, and so had plenty of money with which to celebrate. Several dinners and dances were given on board by officers for Savannah girls.

SHIP CITY OF ATLANTA UNDERGOES REJUVENATION

SAVANNAH, July 5.—With fourteen new rooms added on the promenade deck and many other improvements the steamship City of Atlanta of the Ocean Steamship Company has been made as luxurious in every respect as the other vessels of the fleet. The company now has four ships of about the same capacity and comforts in its Savannah-New York service.

FACTIONS STILL WAR FOR BRINSON RAILWAY CONTROL

SAVANNAH, July 5.—After two all-day conferences between conflicting elements in the Brinson Railroad no conclusion has been reached as to the ultimate fate of the road. Neither George M. Brinson, president, nor James Imbrie, chairman of the board of directors, will discuss the situation. Brinson is fighting to retain control.

SPEER SIGNS EXCEPTIONS BILL IN THE MILLER CASE

SAVANNAH, July 5.—Judge Emory Speer, in the United States Court, has signed the bill of exceptions in the case of Miller Bros., Philadelphia grain brokers, convicted last spring of receiving freight rebates from railroads and steamship companies. Pastor May Shed Coat in the Pulpit

Urges Flock to Come Hatless and Coatless for Comfort, and May Emphasize Invitation.

SAVANNAH, July 5.—Men in their shirt sleeves and women without hats will be seen at the Second Christian Church to-morrow. An invitation has been extended by Pastor White to both the men and women of his congregation to make themselves as comfortable as possible. It is possible the pastor will shed his coat, too.

Pastor White holds that to make people attend church in hot clothes will not increase their interest in religion.

Savannah Will Bid Stovall Godspeed

Entertainment on Eve of Minister's Sailing for Switzerland Being Planned.

SAVANNAH, July 5.—The friends of Colonel Pleasant A. Stovall are planning an entertainment in his honor before he sails for Switzerland on July 29 as Minister to that republic. Colonel Stovall has been in Washington all week receiving his instructions and studying the relations between the two countries.

It has been agreed that the entertainment will be informal. It is possible that a luncheon will be tendered the new Minister, at which representative business and professional men will be invited.

He said his wife had seen him pull off his socks twice a week for fifteen years, and it did not hurt her.

SOUTH GEORGIA TO ASK SCHOOL FOR 150 DEAF

Legislature Will Be Asked for Appropriation to Establish Branch of Cave Spring Institution.

TIFTON, July 5.—The urgent need for a school for the deaf in South Georgia is demonstrated by the statistics furnished by the State school census, which shows that of 362 deaf children in the State, 199 are in South Georgia. There are approximately 150 deaf children in South Georgia who are not attending school.

According to State Superintendent of Schools M. L. Brittain the statistics furnished by the State school census taken in May are complete except for four counties and twelve local systems, where the enumerations must be made again. In 144 counties there are 202 white and 124 colored deaf children. Of these 102 white and 97 colored are in South Georgia. The counties and local systems not enumerated will add twelve or fifteen more to this number.

Last year the total enrollment at the Cave Spring School was 188. Of this number less than fifty were from South Georgia, leaving approximately 150 deaf children in South Georgia to whom the liberal appropriation for the institute at Cave Spring is practically worthless. It is to remedy this that the Legislature will be asked to pass a bill to establish a branch school in South Georgia.

At a meeting held in Tifton last March an executive committee with R. C. Postell, of Tifton, chairman, was appointed to inquire into the need for a school for the deaf in South Georgia. Chairman Postell has called a meeting of this committee in the Tifton Chamber of Commerce rooms Monday afternoon, July 7, at 4 o'clock. The purpose of the meeting is to frame a bill providing for the establishment of such a school and to arrange for its introduction.

Three Towns 'Kick' on R.F.D. Mail Service

Taylors Creek, Flemington and Trinity, in Liberty County, Want Postoffices Reopened.

SAVANNAH, July 5.—Three thriving Liberty County postal centers have a big kick on against the Democratic administration.

The postoffices at Taylors Creek, Flemington and Trinity, all of which have been in operation for many years, have been closed, and these towns have been made a part of a rural free delivery route that meanders out of Hinesville into the wilds of Liberty County.

As a result, it requires nearly a week to write a letter in Savannah, dispatch it and receive an answer from one of the towns named.

Congressman Edwards and Senator Bacon and Senator Smith are being bombarded with letters and telegrams from their constituents demanding that something be done to improve conditions.

2 Adjudged Insane By Savannah Juries

Woman Insisted on Posing in the Nude—Man Believed Himself Mental Replica of Christ.

SAVANNAH, GA., July 5.—J. H. Meredith, a white man, has been adjudged insane. He suffered from an hallucination that he was patterned after Christ in every particular, and that this distinction was confined to himself and one other man.

Meredith told the commission that he communes with the stars, and that he understands them as the three Wise Men did the star that led them to Bethlehem.

Julia Bryan, who insisted upon posing in the nude, was also sent to Milledgeville by a lunacy commission. While she was in jail she refused to wear any clothes. The weather was favorable to the humoring of her whim, but the commission was not.

Spots at Crossings To Save Pedestrians

White Spaces Will Be Painted, and All Vehicles Must Pass Around Them.

SAVANNAH, July 5.—As a means of giving further protection to pedestrians crossing the streets at busy corners, white spots, known as "safety spots," will be painted on the pavement at the intersection of several of the congested thoroughfares.

Some time ago some of these white spots were put on the pavement and proved of great assistance. In a rush of traffic, the pedestrian seeks the white spot, which the traffic regulations require all vehicles to pass around. There is no danger of any person standing on the white spot being injured.

The method has been successfully tried out in many cities.

Georgia Man Has World's Only Terrapin Farm Discovers How to Incubate the Diamond Back

Alexander M. Barbee, of Savannah, Shows Government Experts He Can Prevent Extinction.

Alexander M. Barbee and two of his finest terrapin. Below is a scene on his terrapin farm.

SAVANNAH, July 5.—At Isle of Hope, a Savannah suburb, is the only farm in the world where diamond back terrapin are hatched and reared by artificial means. Alexander M. Barbee, proprietor of this unique industry, has solved the problem of terrapin propagation. He claims to hatch and rear more young terrapin than the females themselves, because the protection he gives the eggs and young from the enemies of the turtle family. He sells terrapin regularly to hotels and restaurants of the larger cities.

Barbee now has a business that brings him a handsome income. He has done what experts at Washington failed to do. He has hit upon a method of incubation. His discovery was accidental, but it probably means the prevention of the extinction of the diamond back terrapin.

The terrapin farm at Isle of Hope is one of the show places of Savannah. Thousands visit it annually. Five hundred baby terrapin were sold to tourists as souvenirs last winter. There are more than 5,000 terrapin in the 18 pens on the farm, not including 5,000 that have not reached a marketable age.

The terrapin know Barbee's voice and step. They will come at his call and eat out of his hand, but scurry to cover at the approach of a stranger.

Terrapin intended for the market are kept segregated, and there is a special hospital pen, where sick terrapin are isolated from the well ones. The loss by death is exceedingly small. The terrapin are sold by the dozen and in barrel lots through the winter season.

Artificial incubation of terrapin eggs heretofore has ben considered an impossibility. There are now 5,000 eggs in the incubators, and the little terrapin are coming out every day. There are 30 incubators on the farm. Incubation in the hatcheries occupies approximately 12 weeks, which is twice as long as is necessary under natural conditions. Out of the 5,000 eggs in the incubators Barbee expects to raise 4,500 terrapin.

Barbee started 23 years ago. He now is an expert and is acting in cooperation with fisheries experts at Washington. It is probable that the Federal Government eventually will adopt some of his ideas with a view to restocking depleted streams and swamps along the Southeastern coast.

Few Eaten in South.

The demand for terrapin is small south of Baltimore. Atlanta, Macon and other cities in this and neighboring States usually purchase a dozen or more in a winter to supply tourists. It is said before the war that slaves along the coast counties were fed upon them extensively.

Barbee sells direct to the larger hotels in Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia, Pittsburg, New York and Boston. With the growing scarcity of diamond backs French chefs are substituting cheaper and inferior terrapin. Men with discriminating taste though can tell when the distinctive flavor of the diamond back is lacking.

The farm on which the terrapin are raised is securely enclosed and roofed, but well ventilated. The entire place can be flooded with water at will. Pens always are flooded when the terrapin are fed, usually about three times a week in the spring and summer and not at all in the winter, when the terrapin bury themselves for their annual hibernation. Barbee has had to dig as deep as three feet to unearth terrapin for the winter trade. They are packed into a barrel like potatoes.

The trouble with raising terrapin heretofore always has been that the animals when in confinement will invariably eat their own eggs. It was many years before Barbee was able to overcome this trouble.

One day, after feeding, a small hillock of sand was left in one of the pens by the receding waters. The following morning Barbee found this hillock literally sown with fresh eggs. He has since learned that terrapin always seek elevations in which to deposit their eggs. Hillocks of sand are now carefully prepared and maintained in each of the breeding pens. Barbee has only to turn this sand over with his hands to uncover the eggs.

Follow Barbee Like Dogs.

Barbee calls the terrapin with a peculiar clucking sound. They also will respond to his whistle, crawling over his feet and almost up his legs to get at their food. They also will come when he waves a handkerchief. Barbee once went into the pens wearing a new suit of clothes and a new pair of shoes. His pets raced away in a panic of fear.

Barbee's dogs run about the farm at will, carefully avoiding stepping on the terrapin, which pay not the least attention.

Barbee's particular favorite among the terrapin is Toby. Nobody knows precisely how old Toby is. He was among the first terrapin Barbee secured, and he was already an adult when he first came to the farm. Toby lives in a fountain in the center of Barbee's restaurant. The alligators grew up with Toby. Toby is as gentle and docile as a dog. When taken out of the water he follows Barbee like a dog.

Barbee replenishes his stock with hundreds of fresh terrapin every summer. He furnishes nets to negroes up and down the coast of Georgia and South Carolina, who sell him their catch at the market. Barbee makes a round of his nets every two weeks during the season.

Diamond back terrapin are distributed along the eastern coast of North and Central America from Buzzard's Bay to Yucatan. All live in salt or brackish water and find their most congenial homes in low-lying swamp and protected bays or inlets. Barbee's tarrapin do not have access to salt water at all, but appear to thrive just as well without it. The little terrapin are dropped into a bucket of fresh water several days after they are hatched.

Sleep Through Winter.

The period of hibernation of the terrapin begins soon after the advent of cool weather, but for some weeks he emerges whenever there is a warm day. Eventually he buries himself at the bottom of a pool and remains until spring. Eggs are laid in May and June. The female, with her hind legs, digs a hole in a convenient bank, and at a depth from five to six inches deposits five to twelve eggs. She then covers up the nest and departs.

The eggs hatch in about six weeks, if the weather is warm, but may require twice as long if the season is a cold one. The young soon after hatching go to the marsh and dig into the ground, where they spend the first winter and a part of the second summer. The growth is, for a turtle, fairly rapid, the average increase in length being about one inch a year until five inches is reached, when it becomes slower. Twenty-five or thirty years is the limit of life.

The food of the diamond back terrapin consists largely of crustaceans and mollusks it catches and crushes, but as its jaws are weak it is compelled to feed upon the smaller and softer animals of these groups. During exceptionally high tides it sometimes follows the water into the grassy lowlands, and catches and eats insects. The tender shoots and rootlets of some of the marsh plants also are eaten. Barbee feeds his terrapin on shrimp and finely chopped fish or meat.

DEATH TOLL IN SAVANNAH LESS THAN IN DECADE

Improvement in Milk Conditions Given as Cause of Marked Decrease.

SAVANNAH, July 5.—In the face of an increase in population Savannah's death rate shows a steady decrease.

In the first six months of this year there were 751 deaths, and there were but two records lower than this in ten years. In 1909 the number of deaths during the first six months was 644. During the same period of 1906 there were 707 deaths.

Ten years ago, in the first half of 1904, there was a total of 819 deaths. The first six months of 1905 saw a death record of 920. In the first six months of 1907, 851 people died; in 1908, 765; in 1910, 809; in 1911, 1,016, and in 1912, 844.

Negro Fatality High.

On the average there are twice as many negro deaths as there are white. In the first six months of 1913, 504 negroes died and 247 whites. In the first half of last year 584 negroes died and 264 white people.

When it is considered that the population of Savannah is steadily increasing, it can be seen the death rate, in proportion to population, was lower in the first six months of this year than any similar period in the last ten years.

Pure Milk Betters Record.

The death rate would be even lower than it is were it not for the fact that large numbers of people come here from the surrounding territory for treatment. Their death here is charged against Savannah.

One reason the death rate has shown such an encouraging decrease is because milk conditions have been improved, reducing the number of infant deaths. A large percentage of infants who died in recent years were victims of bad milk.

CIVIL SERVICE MAY RULE CITY DEPARTMENTS

Savannah Mayor Considers Law Obviating Political Influence Among Police and Firemen.

SAVANNAH, July 5.—To remove the police and fire departments from the reach of political patronage, and to place the men in these two branches on a system of merit, it is proposed to introduce a bill at the present session of the Legislature creating a civil service commission and requiring competitive examinations for places in the departments. This bill is now in the hands of Mayor Richard J. Davant.

The bill is a result of the scramble for jobs in the police and fire departments which occurred following the change in city administration in January. If enacted the measure will make political pull or influence worthless in securing jobs.

The administration of the affairs of the two departments will be in the hands of a commission. Every member of each department will be required to comply with civil service rules. Whether or not this will apply to men now holding jobs has not been decided.

There will be a pension feature under the new system. Men who are retired after honorable service at a certain age would receive a pension based on the number of years they had held office, and the salary they received during the five years preceding their retirement. No man could be removed from either department until he had been given a fair and impartial trial on written charges preferred to the civil service commission.

A special committee of City Council was appointed for the purpose of drafting the bill. The bill was drawn under the supervision of City Attorney Atkinson. Mayor Davant will call a meeting of the committee to take action on the measure as soon as he has acquainted himself with all its provisions.

TORPEDO BOAT DESTROYER IN SAVANNAH ON CRUISE

SAVANNAH, July 5.—With a complement of machinists' mates on board for a cruise of instruction, the United States torpedo boat destroyer Thornton is anchored in the harbor. Ensign W. D. Lamont is in command. The Thornton will remain at Savannah until to-morrow night, when she will go on a short cruise, finally returning to Charleston.

Captain Durell, of the cruiser Tacoma, also here, and Ensign Lamont exchanged courtesies.

Through Army Road to Tybee Plan Is Revived

Chamber of Commerce Will Be Asked to Urge Federal Appropriation.

SAVANNAH, July 5.—The proposition to build a through highway from Savannah to Tybee, making it a military turnpike, doubtless will be revived at the July meeting of the Chamber of Commerce, Arthur W. Solomon, a director in the Chamber, and secretary of the Savannah Automobile Club, will bring the matter up for consideration.

Two routes were considered a year ago. One was via Wilmington Island, making the turnpike a continuation to Tybee, with a ferry as a means of crossing Wilmington River. The other scheme was to have the road parallel the Tybee branch of the Central of Georgia Railway, which would reduce the number of streams to be crossed and make it possible for the same bridges used by the railroad to be used for the highway.

Under the old scheme it was planned to have the road built by private parties in co-operation with the Federal Government. It now is planned to have the matter taken up by Chatham County's Representatives in Congress, with the idea of securing the passage of a bill appropriating money to defray the cost of constructing the road.

Soda Clerks Mutiny; Demand Better Pay

As High Skill Required at Fountain as in Sanctuary of Chef, They Declare.

SAVANNAH, July 5.—Preparatory to asking for higher wages and shorter working hours, soda water dispensers are planning to form a union. They say they are determined to walk out if other means fail.

The clerks say they work for a minimum of ten hours a day, with a maximum of sixteen hours, and that they do not receive enough pay. They hold that their art is one that requires just as much skill and knowledge of how to tickle the palate, as hotel and restaurant chefs, bakers and cooks at other public establishments where edibles are served.

There are in Savannah about 250 soda "jerkers." The majority of them were members of a union that broke up something over a year ago, when the treasurer disappeared with the total funds of the organization.

Turning Basin for Savannah Planned

Federal Engineer Says It Will Handle Any Ship That Can Go Through Canal.

SAVANNAH, July 5.—A turning basin at Fig Island big enough to handle any ship that can go through the Panama Canal will be constructed at Savannah, according to Colonel Dan C. Kingman, chief of the Government engineers for the Savannah district.

A preliminary examination has been made by Colonel Kingman and his report sent to headquarters in Washington, and the department has authorized Colonel Kingman to make estimates on the project.

The great size of the basin—2,000 by 800 feet—was thought by many to be unnecessary, but Colonel Kingman is building with an idea of the great influx of trade that is likely to accrue to Savannah and the South Atlantic coast with the opening of the Panama Canal.

Fewer Wed, More Go Insane, Than in 1912

Savannah Blinks Its Eyes at Record for First Six Months of Present Year.

SAVANNAH, July 5.—Fewer people were married and a great many more went crazy the first six months of 1913 than in the same period last year.

The disparity in the marriage license record is not so great, though fewer licenses have been issued. It has been the history of the marriage license office that when money is tight and people are talking hard times there is a slump in the marriage market.

Up to this time last year 590 marriage licenses had been issued. So far this year the number has been 572.

There have been nearly as many lunacy warrants issued in the last six months as usually are in a whole year. The record is 95.

Girl Scouts Pass Exam for Red Cross

First Aid Crtificates Awarded Eight. Leaders Will Instruct Their Commands.

SAVANNAH, July 5.—The leaders of the Girl Scouts, who have been studying under Dr. Antonio J. Waring and Dr. Lawrence Lee for Red Cross first aid certificates, have successfully passed the examination.

Only two, Mrs. Charles France and Miss Carolyn Myers, were unable to be present to take the examination. Those who passed were Miss Patience Barrow, Miss Mary Hirsch, Miss Doris Lippman, Miss Jane Meldrim, Miss Rita Wood, Miss Marjorie VanDiviere, Miss Mildred Guckenheimer, Mrs. Lloyd B. Taylor and Miss Edith D. Johnston.

The examination was oral, and included a demonstration of artificial respiration, bandaging, splints, etc. The leaders are now prepared to instruct the Girl Scouts.

FIANCE WAITS AT STATION AS FIANCEE WEDS

South Carolina Girl Bids Betrothed Fond Adieu and Then Hurries to Marry Atlanta Man.

SAVANNAH, July 5.—After bidding the young man to whom she was engaged a fond farewell at the railroad station at Varnville, S. C., Miss Lula Rhett Dowling, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lucius R. Dowling, of Varnville, boarded a train for Savannah and on her arrival here became the bride of R. D. Reid, of Atlanta. The South Carolina fiance had no intimation that his wedding would not take place as announced.

The engagement of Miss Dowling to the young Carolinan was announced a week ago. When she and Miss Ida Speakes left Varnville Monday morning for Savannah, ostensibly for a shopping trip, there was no intimation that the young woman had changed her plans. Her fiance took the couple to the train in his automobile.

That an understanding had been reached between Miss Dowling and Reid, however, is shown by the fact that upon her arrival in Savannah her Atlanta admirer was waiting for her. The decision to be married was reached after a short conference, and the ceremony followed.

Immediately after the ceremony Reid departed for Atlanta alone, leaving his bride at the Savannah Hotel. She telegraphed her husband, however, when the facts of the marriage became known, and he met her in Macon on the following train. The girl stated that she remained here for the purpose of breaking the news gently to her Carolina sweetheart, whom she had summoned by telegraph.

Miss Dowling acknowledged that she was engaged to both men at the same time, but said that as the time for her marriage drew near she found that she loved the other man best.

Nightmare No Crime, Police Judge Rules

Releases Man Arrested as Disorderly Who Proves He Was Only Dreaming.

SAVANNAH, July 5.—Police Court Judge John Schwarz has been called upon to define the difference between a nightmare and a plain drunk. The case was that of J. W. McMillan, a visitor, arrested at the Union Station charged with raising a disturbance and being drunk.

The defendant made the plea thaf he was not intoxicated, but took a few drinks and fell asleep at the station while waiting for his train, and that during his sleep he had a nightmare. The judge decided a nightmare was no offense and the case was dismissed.

Mayor Orders Ice Law Enforcement

Customers Complain of Short Weight by Savannah Companies—Wagon Scales Required.

SAVANNAH, GA., July 5.—Numerous complaints that the ice companies are giving their customers short weight has caused Mayor Richard J. Davant to order a rigid enforcement of the ordinance governing the sale of ice.

This ordinance provides that any person has the right to demand that the ice be weighed in his presence. It also requires ice wagons to carry scales which have been properly tested.

SIX ORGANIZATIONS APPOINT TRUSTEES FOR BIG LEGACY

SAVANNAH, July 5.—A charter petition for the R. J. Nunn trust fund has been filed in the Chatham Superior Court. This association is being organized to administer that part of the estate of Dr. R. J. Nunn which was bequeathed to Zerubabel Lodge, Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite, Georgia Historical Society, Young Women's Christian Association, Savannah Female Orphanage and the Society of Colonial Wars in the State of Georgia.

Under Dr. Nunn's will most of his estate was left to Miss Annie G. Purse, to go at her death to the institutions named. Each was to appoint a trustee.

SUNDAY AMERICAN'S SPECIAL CABLE LETTERS RECEIVED FROM ALL THE GREAT CAPITALS OF EUROPE

GERMAN MASSES FORCED TO BEAR HEAVY TAX LOAD

Producers Pay for Increased Armaments While Wealthy Idlers Escape All Burdens.

By FREDERICK WERNER.
Special Cable to The American.

BERLIN, July 5.—Once more the party of the center has triumphed in Germany's domestic politics and has forced through a political compromise which satisfied nobody. The political situation is drastically described in the radical "Berliner Tageblatt," which writes:

"The compromise pudding is ready in the black kitchen, the chef has tasted it and declared it excellent. Now he presses a spoon into the hands of Right and Left and with a grin of satisfaction he encourages them to eat heartily and not be afraid of indigestion. The pudding may be a trifle heavy, but it must be eaten 'with God for king and country.' And the chef who, in 1909, made the German people swallow the financial reform smiles and says: What I have done is well done. Centrum is trump and always remains trump in the German empire."

Nothing, of course, is definitely decided yet, for the compromise must still pass through several stages before it becomes the law of the land, but the party of the center is sure of final victory, so sure that it has loudly announced that once more it has got its foot firmly on the neck on that part of the German people who increase the national wealth of Germany. These people must pay, while the wealthy idlers get off easily, almost without feeling the extra financial burden with which the increased armaments have saddled the taxpayers.

It is because of the inability of the upper and lower strata of the producing classes to co-operate politically that these have been forced to leave the Government in the hands of a bureaucracy which has gradually more and more become a mere tool of the reactionary landowners, while the greatest influence is exerted by Centrum, the strongest party in the Reichstag.

Now Germans are to see and enjoy the fruits of this political alliance in their worst form: a super tax on thrift. A punishment is to be meted out to those who even during the recent hard times have had the imprudence to go on increasing national wealth.

The new compromise provides for a distribution of the burdens of taxation, which is an even greater insult than the financial reform of 1909, and which may yet prove to be the straw which will break the camel's back.

Actress Spurns $50,000 Heart Balm Finally Takes Marquis' $250,000

Daisy Markham, the English actress, well known on the American stage, who finally accepted $250,000 settlement from the Marquis of Northampton as heart balm.

Daisy Markham, After Declaring All Money in World Couldn't Quash Suit, Accepts Offer.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, July 5.—Fifty thousand dollars was not near enough money to soothe the injured feelings of Daisy Markham, the English actress, who suddenly discovered that she was not to be the Marchioness of Northampton when the Marquis' betrothal to another was announced. "All the money in the world could not get me to withdraw my suit," she dramatically declared when the $50,000 offer was made. "I want his love and the name he promised to give me."

But to-day Daisy Markham seems reasonably contented with $250,000, which the Marquis has settled on her, though it is said that there is more money in the world, and she is still Daisy Markham.

Costs To Be Considerable.

The costs of the settlement will amount to a considerable sum on account of the number of distinguished counsel engaged to plead for the opposing parties. The Marquis, better known as Earl Compton, only recently succeeded to the title at the age of 27. The plaintiff is well known, both in America and the British Isles, under her stage name.

The settlement was announced when the case was called in the high court of justice this week in a court room crowded with fashionable women and actresses, who had come in anticipation of listening to some interesting evidence.

The young Marquis had previously offered $50,000 to settle the case, and many people had thought Miss Markham unwise not to accept the offer.

When Miss Markham insisted on proceeding with the suit London gossips anticipated that she had a sensational story to tell, and interest in the suit rose accordingly.

The damages paid to-day are the heaviest for many years in a breach of promise suit.

Didn't Deny Promise.

Sir Edward Carsons, representing Miss Markham, said she met the Marquis last year when he made a promise of marriage to her which was not denied. Subsequently at the desire of his father, the Marquis broke off the engagement. In doing so he wrote to Miss Markham that he wanted her to believe his action had been taken from a sense of duty, genuinely believing it best for both parties.

The Marquis further wrote:

"You do not know how these so-called ladies will treat you and I really could not bear to see you suffering it. Oh! if I could but escape my position! You will always be my ideal! My beautiful dream!"

The letter concluded, "Your broken-hearted Bim." This was the Marquis of Northampton's nickname.

Father Halted Wedding.

Sir Edward said the Marquis of Northampton had made provision for the lady, such as she would have been entitled to had he made her a marchioness. He then announced the settlement for the sum of $250,000.

Henry E. Duke, counsel for the defendant, said in confirming the settlement that when the Marquis of Northampton, who was then Earl Compton, asked his father's consent to his marriage with Miss Markham, he laid upon him an absolute prohibition and took from his son a solemn engagement that he would not pursue his desire to marry the plaintiff.

Miss Markham was born in India on July 20, 1886. She made her first appearance in Manchester in 1904 as Celia in "As You Like It." In December of the same year she appeared at the Lyceum Theater, New York, with Sir Charles Wyndham, as Elaine Shrimpton, in "The Case of Rebellious Susan," and has acted many other parts. She made her first London appearance as Claire Berton in "Leah Kleschna," and also appeared in many other plays here, including "Raffles," "Love Watches" and "The Glad Eye," which was one of London's recent successes.

MOTHER KEEPS WALES TIED TO APRON STRINGS

Prince Joins Rollicking Oxford Club, but Queen Makes Him Resign—Can't Speed Auto.

By HERBERT TEMPLE.
Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, July 5.—Queen Mary seems determined to keep her oldest son under her wings until the day when she turns him over to the tender cares of his bride. Not long ago he received permission to become a member of the Bullingdon Club, with the express stipulation that under no condition must he ever take part in any of the hilarious festivities of the club, which, under the name of "Bullingdon Blinds," are one of the features of college life at Oxford.

The other night, however, he could not resist the temptation, and with trembling heart he donned his evening clothes and went to the club, where he spent a few very pleasant hours.

Parents Wax Wrathy.

His presence, of course, could not remain secret, and a day or two afterward he received a very severe letter from his parents, who had just returned from their visit to the Kaiser, ordering him to hand in his resignation as a member of the Bullingdon Club immediately, and, in spite of his entreaties, he was forced to obey.

As a balm to his wounded dignity he shortly afterward received as a present from his father a beautiful automobile, accompanied by a driver's license, and driving his own car is now his principal pleasure, though it is somewhat lessened by the fact that the car is provided with a speedometer and he has had to promise his mother on his word of honor that he will never exceed the speed of twelve miles an hour, much as he would like to tear along.

Little Olaf Gets Car.

The Queen, indeed, opposed the Prince's wish for an automobile as long as she possibly could after Queen Alexandra a little over a year ago expressed her willingness to present her oldest grandson with one. But when Queen Alexandra presented little Prince Olaf of Norway with a car and permitted him to use it freely all around Sandringham, Queen Mary realized that she had been outwitted and reluctantly permitted King George to present the Prince of Wales with a fine touring car.

The question of the Prince's marriage is now becoming quite a serious one. The King and Queen both agree that their son ought to marry early in life, but they can not agree on the bride. Queen Mary desires the Prince of Wales to marry one of the Czar's daughters, but King George and Queen Alexandra, as well as her sister, the Dowager Empress of Russia, strongly oppose this idea, because of the close relationship of the two young people.

They favor a marriage with one of the daughters of the King and Queen of Italy, who are easily the two most beautiful and healthy princesses in Europe, probably because of the blood of the sturdy Montenegrin peasants which they have inherited from their mother's side.

The result is apt to be a compromise, for there is much talk in court circles of Princess Elizabeth of Roumania, daughter of the Roumanian Crown Prince, as the most likely next Princess of Wales. No one has thought of asking the Prince, who will, of couse, meekly submit to the choice of his parents.

For MILADY'S WARDROBE

By MME. HAUTE MONDE.

A NOVELTY of the season is the long glove of dark gray suede worn with white or pale tinted muslins. The innovation looks rather odd at first sight, but is really charming and artistic.

* * *

With the exaggeratedly decollete necks short sleeves are worn in the house. Sometimes the arms are covered with fine lace mittens, but far more often they are left bare, save for a veiling of tulle illusion. Here I must again mention that scarfs of tulle illusion are worn at all hours of the day and with almost every kind of costume.

* * *

Many of the newest rest gowns are accordion pleated from waist to hem, the material used being fine muslin or equally fine Indian silk. Then a picture mantle of lace or pale tinted chiffon is thrown in; a wide sash is wound round the waist; sweet-scented flowers are arranged at the breast and the boudoir cap is donned.

* * *

Leghorn is immensely popular this year, not only for dressy summer millinery, but also for simple tailored hats to be worn with linen and cotton frocks of the same genre, or with light tailored wool suits. They are deliciously comfortable and easy on the head, and will encroach on the field in which Panamas hitherto have reigned alone. The latter are shown in new shapes this season, a Panama sailor being one of the novelties.

* * *

All Panamas are smaller, the inclination being to a medium size, with a mannish crown and a comparatively narrow brim turned down part way around. Another popular shape is almost exactly that of the regular farmer's straw hat, rolling at the sides. Plain ribbon bands are tied in a flat bow, with ends falling onto the brim. The ribbon loops, characteristic of the season's millinery, are used on some of the Panamas also, but are placed at the left side toward the back.

* * *

A great deal of moire is worn this season, bloth black and colors. Lovely shades are obtainable in lime green, deep cream, blue, dull gold and gray. For a smart tailored suit moire makes an admirable selection.

* * *

The French and the English have invented charming fashions for the child in the house, but it is to our own American designers that the child who wants to have the time of its young life in outdoor play must come to be ideally fitted. The beach rompers shown this season are enough to make one sigh to be made a child again. Beach aprons are a boon, too. They are made of blue denim, bound with red and embroidered (also in red) with the appropriate emblems of pail, shovel, and so forth. The pail design, planted squarely in the middle of the apron, is in reality a large pocket, which will certainly be the joy of the wearer.

Many girls from 14 years of age and upward are wearing white ninon or cotton crepe skirts with basqued coats of soft satin or silk embroidered round the edge and upper portion of the sleeve. These coats, which cross over to the left and fasten with two silk-covered buttons, have a soft frill of net or lace down the front, while the low turn-down collar has a bow of black velvet as a finish, the waist belt being embroidered in wool or floss silk. In willow and lizard green, pale blue, lavender and dull pink such coats look most effective with white skirts.

The inexpensive negligee gown for hot weather is of sheer stuff, and is usually white, or shows a floral pattern in delicate colors on a white ground. For these models, aside from the kimono, variations of the Empire effect are, perhaps, most in evidence, wide liberty satin ribbons run through wide embroidery beading, serving as a girdle and giving to the model more trimness than is common to robes which fall loose from the shoulders. The flowered muslin negligees are, as a rule, little trimmed, save for frills of Valenciennes lace to soften the edges.

Quite a feature of the season's styles is the little cutaway corsage that has a suggestion of the postilion back. This is generally made over a cream net corsage. At all events, the ensemble looks like a little coat put over a summer vest or blouse; but it is really all made in one. Sometimes the sleeves are of net, mousseline, or tulle illusion, and sometimes of the material of the cutaway, satin, silk, shantung or pongee.

* * *

This summer veils will be long and worn loosely flowing over the face. Frail shadow laces are in favor for them and washable Shetland of a filmy quality. Some have an open mesh over the face, and the design of the veil is not carried over the open weave part. These are named "frame veils" and are most of them woven of Italian silk.

* * *

Summer is the season for embroidery, and the woman who puts in her spare moments in the preparation of dresses for the little folks will have cause for thanksgiving later on. Most children now wear cotton frocks the year around. It is a far more cleanly custom than putting a child into a glue serge suit when autmun comes and having it wear the suit day after day as long as the threads will hold together.

Almost heel-less are the ultra-smart English walking boots in mannish style. These boots have pointed, receding toes, low buttoned tops and heels scarcely lift the foot above the pavement. These new boots are delightfully comfortable, but they are neither graceful nor dainty and look best in tan leather accompanying tailored or athletic garb. Patent leather boots, with buttoned tops of gray suede or dull black kid, are much more attractive with soft, draped skirts, and with white frocks white buttoned boots are in order.

BOGUS PRINCESS TALE OF RICHES WINS CLUBMEN

Frenchmen Accepted When They Propose, But She Departs With $12,000 Worth of Gems.

Special Cable to The American.

PARIS, July 5.—A prominent young Parisian clubman was visited recently by a handsome woman, who represented herself as "Princess Salam," and presented a letter of introduction purporting to be signed by Monseigneur Journe, Canon of Caracas, whom the clubman had met at a society drawing room.

The visitor related that she belonged to the Salam-Ryndurg family, Princess of the Holy Empire. She had married, she said, a nobleman connected with the Imperial family who had left her an immense fortune while in addition her private fortune amounted to $60,000,000. She now wished to reside permanently in France.

Clubman Proposes.

The clubman offered to do all he could to be useful to the "Princess". They met frequently, and at last the clubman proposed marriage and was accepted, and he placed on the "Princess'" finger an engagement ring that had cost $6,000.

A few days later the "Princess" departed for Madrid ostensibly to settle family matters and to have an interview with King Alfonso, but in the meantime she had related the same story to another clubman, a friend of the first, who had also presented to her a $6,000 engagement ring.

After her departure one of her fiances discovered that his friend and himself had both been duped.

Worked Scheme Before.

The police informed him that the self-styled "Princess" was an adventuress named Adelaide Julia Madeline Jeile, born in Paris in 1874. Eleven years ago the police learned that she obtained jewelry under a similar pretext, and that in 1905 they had again been called upon to investigate her identity in connection with a case of blackmailing.

The "Princess" was arrested at the railway station on her return from Madrid.

Borrowers of Royal Property Alarmed

English Queen Makes Inventory and Requests Delinquents to Return Dead King's Loans.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, July 5.—Queen Mary, who is a most excellent housewife, with an innate hatred of useless waste and a pronounced love of antique furniture, has been conducting a systematic search of all the boxrooms in the immense Windsor Castle, comparing the contents with the official inventory lists.

As a result she has not only unearthed a great many forgotten old treasures carelessly thrown aside under the reign of her late father-in-law, who cared nothing for antiquities, but she also has discovered that a great many valuable articles of furniture were lent to personal friends of King Edward, who have never seen fit to return them.

All these aristocratic borrowers have now received a note from the court asking them to return the things without delay, which some of them will find rather hard, having sold or given away these things, which they always looked upon as presents from the King.

Lawyer Errs Badly In Drawing Own Will

Noted British Attorney Makes Legal Mistakes in Disposition of $2,000,000 Estate.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, July 5.—A noted English lawyer has been added to the long list of those who have drawn their wills badly. He was Sir Richard Nicholson, of Cleveland Gardens, Hyde Park W., lately Clerk of the Peace for London and Middlesex, and legal adviser to the late Lord Salisbury. He died in March, leaving an estate of nearly $2,000,000. About $200,000 of this was bequeathed to charities.

The will is dated April 13, 1898, and there are thirteen codicils. Affidavits of due execution were required because of alterations in the first, second and fifth codicils, and as to the misquotation of the date of another codicil.

LONDON, July 5.—Mrs. Rebecca Clark, of High-road, Wood Green, celebrated her 109th birthday recently and was particularly cheerful at the celebration.

She rose about mid-day and ate a dinner of roast beef, potatoes and cauliflower, stewed fruit and custard, tea and a big piece of bread. "I never believed in being faddy about food," she declared. "Eat what you fancy and you'll be all right."

Mrs. Clark still walks up the hill to the postoffice on Fridays to draw her old-age pension, and "I'm sure I'll go on doing it for many a year yet," she said.

Count Eulenburg Is Most Decorated Man

Kaiser's Court Chamberlain Has 76 Orders—Can Not Wear All of Them.

Special Cable to The American.

BERLIN, July 5.—According to an enumeration just made of orders and decorations by the Kaiser, Count Eulenburg, the imperial court chamberlain, enjoys the distinction of being the most decorated man in the world.

Many prominent Germans have received orders to the number of 30 or more, but Eulenburg possesses 76, including some of the highest in Europe. It would be a physical impossibility for him to wear them all at the same time.

Kaiser Wilhelm in the 25 years since his accession to the throne has created 28 orders or decorations of various classes.

LONDON, July 5.—"The Spanish Queen dances the tango with infinite grace," Miss Vacani, a noted instructor in dancing, told a number of women of the nobility at a ball given by Mrs. James McDonald, wife of the Standard Oil Viceroy in England.

"If you could see her, you would never look upon it as vulgar or impossible for the modern ballroom. She has been carefully instructed and is an able pupil."

She did not refer to the surplus weight which greatly burdens the Queen in all active exercises.

Professor Killed; Students Aid Slayer

Zachailo was enraged because Herr Butkowski, a Polish professor, informed him that he had failed in an examination. He produced a revolver during a lecture and shot Herr Butkowski dead.

The other students agreed to protect Zachailo and barricaded the doors of the college. When the police arrived shots were exchanged and two students were seriously hurt. The door was finally broken down, the students overpowered and Zachailo arrested.

ASQUITH IS MENTIONED FOR LORD CHIEF JUSTICE

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, July 5.—The latest rumor in regard to the Lord Chief Justiceship is that Premier Asquith is likely to accept the post himself. It was rumored a few days ago that Sir Rufus Isaacs, the Attorney General, would probably be appointed to fill this high office, although it was expected that such action would arouse sharp criticism of the Prime Minister because of the connection of the Attorney General with speculation in Marconi shares.

ACCIDENTS CUT LARGE FIGURE IN DIXIE RACE

Mobile Is Hit Hard by Injuries to Star Players—Jacobson and Starr Out.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., July 5. Announcement from Mobile that "Baby Doll" Jacobson and Charley Starr will be out of the game for weeks adds another chapter to the longest list of serious accidents that ever marred a Southern League season. While Gillespie, of Chattanooga; Yantz, of New Orleans, and Dilger, of Birmingham, are the only players who have been knocked out for the season, many others have been hurt so seriously as to prevent them from participating in the pastimes of their clubs for weeks.

Repeated accidents have necessitated pitchers and catchers working in many games out of their positions. Mobile has utilized Campbell and Hogg. 'Andsome 'Arry McIntyre has subbed on numerous occasions. Memphis has played few games without the services of Old George Merritt. Chattanooga used Hannah and Golden in utility roles, and Atlanta had Catcher Graham in the outfield for weeks, and these all in addition to the regular utility man who is on the payroll of each club.

* * *

MOBILE has been perhaps the most unfortunate of all in recent weeks, though the Gulls were remarkably lucky while obtaining their long lead. The Gulls missed Paulet for a few games at the start, Campbell going to right and Robertson to first. Then they got together and with a regular line-up began to climb rapidly, soon amassing a big lead. Two weeks ago hard luck returned and today finds the Gulls much nearer the rest of the teams and still slipping. Starr suffered a broken hand and still carries the injured member in a sling. Jacobson's injury is more serious as a permanent problem. It consists of a strained side and fever which has weakened him so that he may not play for two months.

Chattanooga's dose at the hands of fate is well known. Jimmy Gillespie is out for the year and drawing a salary from the coffers of the club while he recovers from the effect of a terrible blow on the head by a ball pitched by Hardgrove. Kid Elberfeld is now out of the game from another "beaning" process, and at least one game, if not two, has already been lost on account of the mishap. The team was fortunate in having a utility man to thrust into the breach in Williams, and in the Gillespie case in getting another third sacker who, while not quite as good as Jimmy, is good enough to keep third base from being a sieve.

Birmingham is another club that has suffered heavily. Dilger, the Barons' first catcher and one of the best throwers in the league, was the first to receive a serious injury and a break to put him out of it for the year. The club's two highest-priced players, who cost $5,000 to purchase them—Knisely and McDonald—have been repeatedly out of the game on account of injuries or sickness. Marcan has also been crippled, but forced to play most of the time from dire necessity. The Baron list was increased last week by a most serious blow. Hardgrove, the club's leading pitcher, being struck in the face by a batted ball and rendered hors de combat for weeks.

* * *

MEMPHIS was always "jonahed," and Bernhard has had a hospital list full ever since he took the reins of the club. This year the absence of Schweitzer doubtless has injured the club considerably. Center Fielder Love has also been out frequently. Bill has been able to keep his infield intact, however, and with battery men also unscathed has been much more fortunate than in former seasons.

Atlanta has had but two serious mishaps since the season started. Bailey was out for several weeks with a strain. Chapman, the second catcher, has just returned to the game on account of a broken finger, and Joe Dunn has wilted under the strain of too much work behind the counting station.

Nashville has been uniformly lucky. Young was ill for a time during the first of the season, but the infield has presented an unbroken front up to Goalby's injury this week.

Down at New Orleans, George Yantz's fatal "broken slide" to second in a game with Chattanooga in May put him out of commission until August, with a busted ankle. Other members of the Pels have been out for a few days with minor injuries, but the blow to Yantz was the most serious.

* * *

THE league's record of the past four seasons is liberally sprinkled with injuries to star players—Scotty Walker, Champ Osteen, Roy Ellam and many others being knocked out for practically entire seasons and leaving weak spots which were rarely patched up. And, generally, the pennant-winning club has been the one fortunate enough to escape the hospital.

The frequent serious injuries to regular players make the utility man a valuable institution. How the Southern clubs managed to drag along without one in the old fourteen-men-limit days seems almost a mystery now. Rohe, of Atlanta; Sentell, of Mobile; Breen, of Montgomery; Atz and McIntyre, of New Orleans; Merritt, of Memphis; Carroll, of Birmingham, and Williams, of Chattanooga, have done some yeoman service in the Southern flag chase, even though they don't play in every game. Doubtless, ere this, Bill Schwartz regrets that he tied a can to Summers, his man-of-all-work, as Goalby was injured a day after Summers departed.

CONNIE MACK WANTS FORD; WOULD TRADE OUTFIELDER

PHILADELPHIA, July 5.—Connie Mack is willing to let New York have one of his extra outfielders, Jimmy Walsh or Pete Daley, the coast star, provided Frank Chance desires to turn over to him Russell Ford. Mack, when asked concerning the report which emanated from New York that Chance desired an Athletic outfielder, stated he would be willing to hand over either player mentioned for Ford.

"But, you know," said Mack, with that quizzical smile of his, "there is no hope of getting Chance to let Ford come our way."

New System for Olympic Games

Big Change in Rules Planned

NEW YORK, July 5.—The initial steps toward systematizing and standardizing the Olympic games of the future will be taken within a month at Berlin. On August 20-24 there will be held the first conference of the provisionally formed International Amateur Athletic Federation, at which time a world-wide track and field governing body will be established. Representatives from the national amateur sport-controlling body of every civilized country have been invited to attend, and a real working agreement and basis for future international meets will be established.

At the present time the committee in charge of the federation affairs consists of P. L. Fisher, Great Britain; Pierre Roy, France; Carl Diem, Germany; H. Stankovits, Hungary, and James E. Sullivan, United States. These committeemen, in addition to a number of other delegates, will assemble in Berlin several days before the opening of the conference in order to discuss in an informal way the plans and scope of the new organization. To the athletes of the world the recommendations of the I. A. A. F. to the international Olympic committee will be of great interest. While the new body has not the slightest authority in matters pertaining to the Olympic games, its recommendations will undoubtedly carry much weight with the Olympic games committee when that body meets a year later at Berlin to plan for the Olympic meet of 1916.

Will Suggest Reforms.

This is particularly true because it is known that the I. A. A. F. will suggest a number of radical reforms, which, backed by the athletic governing bodies of such nations as the United States, Great Britain, Sweden, Germany, France, Finland and the British colonies, are likely to be incorporated into the permanent Olympic games code to be prepared at the conference of 1914.

It will be strongly urged that the Olympic committee adopt a standard set of track and field events at recognized distances and weights to hold for all time, and that this program be separate and distinct from such usual Olympic sidelights as skating, yachting, polo, tennis and other modern features of sporting competition. No objection to these sports will be interposed by the I. A. A. F., but it will be suggested that they be held as distinct and apart from the standard Olympic program.

The American delegates, consisting of Gustavus Kerby, Colonel Robert M. Thompson, James E. Sullivan, Barton S. Weeks and Joseph B. Maccabe, will ask the new association to suggest that a number of perpetual trophies be secured and awarded during the games at Berlin in 1916. These will include a grand international trophy for the winner of the greatest number of points in all the recognized Olympic sports of the meet, together with a number of minor trophies for the winning nations in track competition, swimming, wrestling, cycling and similar tests—these trophies to be held for three years and then returned to the country holding the succeeding meet.

The question of the measurement methods of future games also will be discussed. At present the Olympic meets are based upon the metric system, whereas the leading athletic nations of the world use yards and feet in measuring track and field sports. It appears likely that this proposed reform will fail, however, owing to the fact that the metric system has been used in Olympic games since the ancient meets in Athens and is really a better understood system, from an international standpoint, than that afforded by the English measuring methods.

No Way to Compare Men.

At present there is no way of comparing the best efforts of the world's leading athletic performers under the two systems. For example, the 100 yards, a standard sprint in America, England, Australasia, Canada and South Africa, is nine yards one foot and one inch short of the 100-meter sprint. Despite this clash in the two measuring systems, it is probable that the point of substituting the English for the metric system will be passed if the countries most interested can secure a standardized set of Olympic events. This in itself would be a great advantage and assistance to countries preparing to enter teams, since it would permit the program to be known several years in advance. In addition, it will bar the local Olympic committees from inserting in the schedules a number of events or contests which are intended purely for home athletic talent and which continue for a period of time which absolutely bars foreign entrants from continuing in the competition.

O'ROURKE SIGNS CONTRACT TO MANAGE CARL MORRIS

NEW YORK, July 5.—Tom O'Rourke has signed a contract to manage Carl Morris, the Oklahoma giant, for a period of three years, and as soon as there is a chance for a match here Morris will start for this city.

O'Rourke also holds a contract on the services of Albert Palzer, who is out on the Iowa farm, rapidly regaining his health and strength. Palzer recently submitted to a serious operation by a New York surgeon. It was successful, and the big fighter now feels sure that he will whip all the white hopes.

Until Palzer is able to stand training O'Rourke intends to develop Morris. The veteran manager says that Morris' great strength and pluck are unexcelled by any of the leading heavyweights, and that Carl simply lacks knowledge of ring tactics. As soon as he learns how to hit, O'Rourke believes that the Oklahoma mastodon will reclimb the ladder.

COURTNEY ADVISES NEW DATE FOR CREW RACES

ITHACA, N. Y., July 5.—Coach Charles E. Courtney, of Cornell, today sounded a warning to crews of visiting colleges to hold the Poughkeepsie crew races next year under more favorable tide conditions.

He said that during some of the recent races the tide was against the shells, and for this reason they could not have won.

This was true of the Pennsylvania and Washington four-oared crews, he said.

REULBACH TIRED OF CUBS; AFTER BERTH WITH REDS

CINCINNATI, OHIO, July 5.—Ed Reulbach, one of the Cub premiers in the days of pennant winners at Chicago, wants to get away from the Cubs and would like to see President Murphy trade him either to Joe Tinker's Reds or to the Boston Braves. "A change of scenery would do me a lot of good," said Reulbach. "Murphy has treated me all right, but I don't seem able to win for the Cubs."

TINKER TELLS PITCHERS NOT TO WALK SLUGGERS

CINCINNATI, OHIO, July 5.—Joe Tinker, boss of the Reds, has ordered the abandonment of an extremely ancient custom—that of passing a heavy hitter to get at a weak one. No trick in the valendar causes as much wrath among the bugs as this, but Tinker isn't playing to popular approval in ordering his pitchers to discontinue the idea.

What's the use? says Joe. The percentage, even with a big slugger, is 3 to 1 against him and in favor of the pitcher. Why not go right after him? Why decrease your own per cent of advantage by putting another runner on the bases, especially when the other fellows can yank out their weak hitter and send a tough pinch hitter in his place? That play is off the map for his club hereafter.

YANKEES' NEW BALL PARK WILL BE READY IN 1914

NEW YORK, July 5.—Announcement was made to-day by officials of the New York Americans that its new baseball plant would be ready for occupancy when the 1914 season opens. The plant is located on Washington Heights, just a short distance from the old Highland grounds, and will be one of the finest in the country. It will cost over $400,000. The Yankees, homeless this season, are playing at the Polo Grounds.

NO BASEBALL FOR EWING; STICKS TO LIFE ON FARM

BELLEFONTAINE, OHIO, July 5. "I can't get away from the farm," is the reply of Bob Ewing, former National League pitcher, to Manager Bade Myers, of the Canton Interstate team, in response to Myers' request that Ewing join his pitching staff. Ewing is living in retirement on a big farm in Auglaize County.

HICKMAN IS SCOUT FOR NAPS.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, July 5.—Charley Hickman, the old Toledo player, now coaching the University of West Virginia team, is to go with the Cleveland club as a scout.

FIFTY YEARS OF ATHLETICS PUTS AMERICA ON TOP

James C. Sullivan Writes on the Value of Exercising for Youths of United States.

By James E. Sullivan.

Secretary-Treasurer of A. A. U. and "Father of Amateur Athletics."

NEARLY half a century has passed since the introduction of amateur track and field sports into this country, and in this long lapse it has frequently been asked what was the real object of those early pioneers of athletics.

It is a question not very difficult to answer. They wanted fresh air and exercise for themselves and to set a good example to the youth of America for after time. I allude to men like the late William B. Curtis, Harry E. Buermeyer and many others, men 50 years in advance of their time, who foresaw the growing need of physical development and outdoor exercise.

Had not the wisdom of these old-timers prevailed, where would America be to-day in amateur athletics, especially with regard to our rating in the Olympic games? Why, we would be worse off than Russia, Denmark or Austria, nations which have not so far produced a first-rate performer either on track or field. We lead the world, and the American athletes have taken the championship in every Olympiad since the first revival in 1896.

Americans Should Improve.

As to future Olympic fixtures, I see no reason why we should not continue to carry off the point honors, for, to my mind, we will continue to grow better from year to year, as the exploration of new districts will surely produce new material. This introduction of new material means everything. An instance of the force of the last statement is that of the State of Utah. Ten years ago if a man had talked of a world's champion coming from Utah he would have been ridiculed, yet at the last Olympic games in Stockholm Almah Richards, of Brigham Young University, Utah, was the hero of the running high jump, and is to-day the greatest natural jumper the world has ever seen.

Athletics a Religion.

For the boys athletics has simply instituted an eighth-day religion, as it were. It has taught him that in order to be a success in either track or field he must be good, morally and physically.

To participate in school sports nowadays the boy is impressed with the idea that he must first of all observe the rules of the sport, and that under no circumstances can he use abusive language to his superior or to another boy. Should the boy be guilty of any of these things there is always a referee at hand to discipline him and point out the error without being harsh or unduly severe.

The honesty of competition is also brought home to the youth. If he cuts the course, shoulders another boy, does not touch off in a relay, he suffers a just disqualification, and thus it is shown to him, in the most convincing manner that, after all, honesty is the best policy.

Johnston Will Steal 100 Bases This Year

Chattanooga Lad Has Already Pilfered 50 Sacks in 85 Games With Seals.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., July 5.—Jimmy Johnston, the Chattanooga lad now with San Francisco, is setting up a new stolen base mark in the Pacific Coast League. He has already stolen over 50 bases in 85 games and at this rate will steal far more than 100 bases in a season. Jimmy hopes to make the mark at least 125 before the season is over, a record that has never been equaled in the annals of the professional sport.

A sample of the work Jimmy is doing is seen in the following excerpt from The San Francisco Examiner regarding a game against Venice in which Jimmy recently participated:

"Jimmy Valentine Johnston stole yesterday's ball game right out from beneath the nostrils of H. Hogan's Venetians. Jeems' little stunt came in the ninth inning, when our beloved Seals were one run behind after one of the slowest and curiously enough one of the most thrilling nerve-racking battles the season has yet produced.

"This wholesale robbery on the part of James Valentine Johnston made the score a tie. It also made it possible for the Seals to win out in the tenth."

Two Major Castoffs Are Sure to Return

Morgan and McQuillan Do Great Work for Class AA League Clubs.

Two pitchers who were cast off by major league clubs seem destined for another try in the big show next year. They are Cy Morgan, of Kansas City, and George McQuillan, of Columbus.

Failure to keep in condition was responsible for both of them departing the major circuits. Both have settled down, and either would help out a lot of clubs that are now faltering.

Morgan and McQuillan have already won over 15 games this season.

Mons. Hedges should have no regrets at having traded Lefty George for George Stovall. Lefty won six and lost eight battles for the Toledo club, where he was sent after being found wanting at Cleveland.

HOBBY'S BROTHER A STAR; GAINING FAME AS SLUGGER

CINCINNATI, OHIO, July 5.—Clinton Hoblitzel, younger brother of Dick Hoblitzel, of the Cincinnati Reds, has been elected captain of the High School baseball team of Parkersburg, W. Va., for the season of 1914. The selection was made by the unanimous vote of his teammates.

Young Hoblitzel is an outfielder and a heavy sticker in his class, giving promise of following in the footsteps of his distinguished brother, who started his baseball career as captain of this same school team.

MANY WANT THE BASEBALL THAT LASTED ENTIRE GAME

CINCINNATI, July 5.—Manager Joe Tinker is busying himself to-day turning down requests for the baseball that lasted throughout the entire game Sunday between the Reds and Cubs. It is believed that this is the only time in major league history that one ball continued in play from the beginning to the end of a full game.

LOSS OF GREAT TRIO BREAKS UP PIRATES' TEAM

Retirement of Clarke and Sale of Leach Put Big Hole in the Pittsburg Squad.

CINCINNATI, OHIO, July 5.—For a dozen years the Pittsburg Pirates have served as a pennant contender in the National League and their unexpected slump is the mystery of the 1913 race in the Lynch organization.

What has caused the team picked last winter to fight it out all the way to slip down into the second division has not been analyzed, but according to scribes here with the Corsairs the absence of that famous combination, Clarke-Wagner-Leach, is responsible for the downfall of the Pirates.

Since the day the Louisville and Pittsburg clubs consolidated and the stars of the Colonels—Clarke, Wagner, Leach, Ritchie, Phillippe and others—went to Pittsburg the Smoke Town organization has been right up there each year in the pennant chase.

Queer to See 'Em Down.

To see the Pirates trailing down in the second division is something unusual. For these dozen past years the Pirates have had Clarke, Wagner and Leach. And during the twelve seasons Pittsburg always was one of the main factors in deciding what team would be the pennant winners.

On four occasions the Pirates reigned supreme in the circuit. In 1901, 1902, 1903, the Pirates won the pennant and then in 1909 Clarke with his great combination repeated and topped the season by winning the world's series from the Detroit Tigers.

But now all that remains of the marvelous trio is Honus Wagner. Clarke retired in 1911 and in the middle of last year Barney Dreyfuss put through a trade with the Chicago Cubs which took Leach away.

Breaking up the great trio, Clarke now is trying to rebuild his forces. He is buying all promising recruits but finds it almost impossible to get successors not only for Tommy the Wee, but himself.

When Kitty Bransfield left the Pirates, Skipper Fred had a difficult task locating a competent first sacker and not until he converted Second Baseman "Dots" Miller into a first baseman did he succeed.

And now comes his troubles in developing outfielders to take the place of the positions covered by Leach and himself.

Must Fill Wagner's Place.

Probably when Clarke is lucky and picks up a pair of juvenile stars then he will have to find somebody to relieve that ancient and marvelous Wagner. At present, Honus is in the big arena on his nerve alone. So long as Hans can put on a glove and move about he'll be at short for the Pirates, but the information comes that even the burly Teuton is about ready to retire.

Johnson Has 'Made' Baseball

Instituted Much Needed Reforms

By W. J. McBeth.

NEW YORK, July 5.—Organized baseball owes much to Ban Johnson. He broke in as a rebel chief, but once firmly established in power, became the big Czar Johnson through his American League instituting a number of long-needed reforms. He made of the much-abused umpire a national figure instead of a "scapegoat," and by forcing respect for him from the player eventually commanded also the veneration of fandom. It was Johnson who was largely instrumental in stamping out all forms of rowdyism upon the field. And when he had forced recognition to equality from the National League, he was one of the leading spirits for peace and good will toward one happy, concerted union for the common good.

The Johson regime marked a new era in professional baseball. He was at first looked upon with suspicion. It was not believed at the time he expanded to major league distinction that there was room for two big circuits. He not only proved that there was, but by furnishing the big cities of the country which are now represented in both National and American with high-class sport every day throughout the entire playing season, added such an impetus toward universal patronage that the great pastime has gone booming on more and more steadily with each succeeding season.

Competition is the life of all healthy sport, and so the American League, as a rival to the National, was just the proper thing to arouse such interest as is manifested at present. But for Ban Johnson's invasion of the parent major league territory it is doubtful if there would be any steel and concrete stands to-day. And it is doubtful also if Ty Cobbs would be demanding $15,000 salaries. For after the old war days the pay never did adjust itself to former planes.

Square Deal His Motto.

Wherefore, the American League—which, in the opinion of Mr. Johnson, is, after all, the only major league doing business—has the heartfelt thanks of all well wishers of the game. It has always been very popular with the public, and especially with the playing fraternity, for it has always stood for a square deal both for the patrons and the public. Still baseball frenzy is a law unto itself, and the very rivalry, friendly as it may be between the two major leagues, has left along the trail of the last decade two distinctive factions in fandom. One faction worships at the shrine of the National and another at the footstool of the American League.

Ever since the American League began to cater to the public fandom has argued over the relative strengths and merits of the two major leagues. The debate never will be closed so long as both continue to do business. The patronage of each is loyal still, and in the division of opinion lies the secret of box office receipts. A fan is ever open to argument; to conviction, never.

Leagues Are on a Par.

Baseball writers in the big cities where both major leagues are established are rather an unbiased lot. They are generally of the opinion that there is no appreciable difference in the respective strengths of the big leagues. And why should there be? The present-day magnate stands ready to sacrifice the limit of profits in the hunt for talent. Each club has its scouts scouring the country for new players. There is little choice among the rival managers. Each circuit boasts its great popular heroes.

There was a time when the American League overshadowed its tottering rival. That was back in the war days of ten years and more ago. The young circuit, in the hands of young and vigorous capital, its who had gone in on a gamble, put up the money to rob the National League of its best known stars. There was such an exodus of talent from the parent major that the old-established organization was left weak, indeed.

NORDYKE QUITS AS UMPIRE.

PORTLAND, July 5.—Lou Nordyke, veteran player, telegraphed from Spokane his resignation as umpire of the Northwest League to Fielder Jones, president of the league. "I could get along with the boys when I was one of them," telegraphed Nordyke, "but as an umpire they look different."

VOLS MUST GET BUSY; TEAM IS SLUMPING FAST

Failure to Secure Ameida and Dodge From Reds Puts Big Hole in Team.

NASHVILLE, TENN., July 5.—Will wonders never cease? The Vols have at last stuck a few plugs in the numerous punctures in their inner wall of defense, by landing a batch of new faces for their line-up. While the bugs were waiting, breathless, for William ("Alibi") Hirsig to round up the cream of the Cincinnati Reds, Bill Schwartz got tired of fooling with his boss and hustled around and annexed Infielder Baumgartner from the Macon Sally Leaguers while the Vols' mogul was editing a story about Tinker sending Third Sacker Granfield to Nashville, after Dodge and Almeida had failed to come.

The poor old Vols have been floundering about since Kitty Goalby had his fin punctured by Dave Robertson's spikes, and the only crumb of comfort in the disaster was the hope that the accident would force Hirsig to shell out for some real ball players.

Granfield a Mystery.

Just as everybody expected, waivers could not be secured on the Cuban Almeida, and Dodge, hitting like a house afire, was too valuable a man for the Reds to turn loose. Hence Mr. Granfield, if one happens to be so affected by the intense heat that one can have faith in Hirsig's statements. Outside of the fact that Granfield is reported to be a third baser, he seems to have no antecedents at all. Where he came from or what his record is is as big a mystery as who hit Billy Patterson.

But Baumgartner, who will relieve Brackenridge, the pitching second-third sacker, comes highly touted in all departments, except in the hit-and-run column, which fact isn't causing anybody to be hilarious over his arrival in camp. There are already too many weak sisters on the team handling the ash, the wretched Vols seldom being able to pry more than five bingles off any twirler's delivery, and at the same time sandwiching in about half as many bobbles as hits, which is about the real reason for their miserable showing at present.

Doak Fails to Report.

Nothing has been heard of Pitcher Doak, the star of the Interstate League, who was to be traded for Charlie Case. But the fault of the lowly Vols' showing isn't all with the slabbers, for Mathewson or Walter Johnson couldn't bring home the bacon did their pals fail to push a tally or two across for them, as is the habit of Hirsig's hired men. They did get Phil Redding from the Cardinals, together with a thousand real dollars, in exchange for big Harry Glenn, who with Akron has been clouting the ball in terrific fashion, and landed Adams, a big right-hander from Savannah, paying $1,500 for the Sally League flinger. None but Hirsig can imagine what he intends to do with all these slabmen. Maybe he intends to trade the entire gang for one real, honest and true batter, who can do more toward lifting the poor old crippled Vols out of the ruck than all the pitchers in the world.

Not a bug in town but sympathizes with Bill Schwartz, who, it is admitted, can do wonders with a bunch of bushers, but it's thumbs down for the boss with the 10-karat alibi who sits calmly by and hopes that somebody will walk up and hand him a perfectly good ball player.

Thomson Will Face Many Good Rivals

Platt Adams, Mercer, Donahue and Other Stars to Compete Against Present Champion.

LOS ANGELES, CAL., July 5.—With the entries for the all-around championships, which will be held here on Bovard Field July 12, the outlook for the coming event is exceedingly good. Many coast athletes who could undoubtedly have made good records in all-around championships in years past are taking the opportunity to enter the coming classic and that Fred C. Thomson, the present champion, will have to look for his laurels in the coming event goes without a doubt.

Probably the most serious contenders for the present champion will be Mercer, the phenomenal Quaker, who has startled the Eastern critics with his work of late; Platt Adams, of the New York A. C.; James Donohue, of the L. A. A. C.; Ed Beeson, of California, and Olie Snedigar, the Olympic Club representative. All of these men are first-class performers, better in some events than in others, but can hardly be given credit as such first-class performers as Thomson until they have shown in the all-around tryouts.

AURORA MAY GET FRANCHISE.

AURORA, ILL., July 5.—A majority of the directors of the local baseball association favor going back into the Wisconsin-Illinois League, and it is certain that Aurora will take over Milwaukee's franchise. The directors are expected to formally approve the proposition when they meet Monday night.

Dubuc Throws Curves With Three Motions

DETROIT, MICH., July 5.—Jean Dubuc, the French-Canadian pitcher of the Tigers, attributes his success as an American League pitcher to the fact that he can deliver his curves, his slow ball and his fast ball with three different motions and have control of the ball at the same time.

"Years ago, when I was pitching with Notre Dame College, I learned that speed without control was valueless; I always had pretty fair control of my delivery, but with the acquired knowledge I began perfecting different deliveries and gaining control of the ball in each," says Jean.

"It took years of patient effort to acquire the delivery I now have, but I believe it is one of the least trying on the arm and shoulder muscles for the reason that I put the weight of my body behind the pitches and do not depend on the strength of my arm to send up a fast ball.

"I worked with my slow ball for three months before I could get a curve to it, and after that it took me three years to perfect the delivery."

Introducing New Evidence

Heisman Gives Advice to Umpires

Arbiters Should Follow Plays

By J. W. Heisman.

IN my last story I wrote of the way an umpire should handle the decisions that come up in a ball game while he is standing back of the catcher and home plate. Problems of a somewhat different nature often confront him when he takes his stand out in the field of play behind the pitcher.

The umpire should take this latter position whenever a man gets on base, with the idea of being nearer to the scene of action in case he should be called upon to render a base decision.

From this position he will find that he has a better view of the plate and of pitched balls than when behind the catcher, for the reason that the pitcher in front of him will not interfere so much with his view of these plays as does a catcher.

Standing behind the pitcher an umpire must always be expectant of the pitcher or catcher throwing to a base to nail a runner, and he should be sure to follow the play carefully or else he will find that something has happened without his knowledge. He should be quick to apprehend a throw to the pitcher down to second, and be sure to jump quickly out of the way.

Must Get Close to Play.

The point that I consider most important of all for an umpire to bear in mind, is to get as close as possible to the base at which you expect to have to make a decision, without being or getting in the way of the play itself.

Suppose a man is on first and the batter hits safely to right with the hit and run on. It is certain the runner on first will attempt to take third on the hit, and the right fielder will make his throw to that sack. In such case the umpire ought to be within a couple of feet of third base at the time the throw and the runner get there, in order that he may be in the best possible position to judge. The same rule holds good for other plays at other bases; and if it appears that there is likely to be a double play he should have the second play in mind and get after that one also. For the life of me I can't understand why so many umpires think all in the world they have to do is to stand in one place, look wise and make the best guess they can. If they would only MOVE and get about the field, the same as a referee and umpire have to do in football, they would find themselves working into positions where they could give decisions that would meet with more general satisfaction.

Take the case of a fly ball or line drive hit right down the first or third base line. Often enough an umpire has plenty of time in which to run over and sight along the line before the ball hits the ground, but half of them never stir out of their tracks. This is the result of laziness and such a man is unfit to umpire a game; if it is mere thoughtlessness the fault should be corrected, and can easily be.

Don't Argue With Players.

Some players seem born to kick in ball games, whether they are captain or not. If I were umpiring a game I would never listen to anybody but the captain, and not him except in case of his differing with me as to the wording or interpretation of a rule, never in case of a question of fact. There is no reason on earth why baseball players should be allowed to argue and delay games as much as they do. It is not permitted in tennis, basket ball, football, track or any other sports. In fact, it would be very bad form for players to question an official's decision in other sports the way they do in baseball, and certainly in no other country are officials treated with the general discourtesy that we see exhibited by players to umpires in every baseball game in this country.

But if, in umpiring a game, I found I had made a mistake, whether in interpreting a rule or in deciding a question of fact, I would certainly have no hesitation whatever in reversing my decision on the spot. The prevalent idea that after an umpire has once made a decision he can not change it is nonsense. Of course he could not do so after the game had gone on a while, other players come to the bat, etc. But if before any further playing has been done the umpire ascertains that he has made a mistake he can undoubtedly reverse his decision. In fact, we see it done every day. An umpire calls the runner safe, but right after, or soon thereafter, observes that the fielding player or baseman did not catch and hold the ball as he, the umpire, at first supposed he had. Clearly the runner should have been called safe, and what choice has the umpire but to reverse his decision and call him so?

Umps Fooled in Trapped Ball.

Quite often an umpire is called upon to decide whether an outfielder caught a ball before it touched the ground or whether he got it on a trap. Too many umpires are fooled by the clever acting of the outfielder who pretends always that he caught it on the fly, whether he really did or not. Umpires should entirely disregard the actions and behavior of the players after getting the ball, and judge entirely from the way his eyes saw the play. This same proposition confronts an umpire every time he has to make a base decision where the runner only got the base, if at all, by a clever slide around behind the baseman and the latter had a hard time getting to him to put the ball on him. Both players will try to "pull the wool" over the umpire's eyes by their actions, which should be strictly disregarded. The only way to make sure that your eyesight alone shall be the test of whether the man is out or not is to run close up on the play and BE ON HAND so you can see for yourself.

Many first basemen have a habit of pulling their heel off the bag before they catch the ball. An umpire should be careful to note whether the first baseman's foot is in contact with the sack at the instant of catching the ball or not. He should also be sure to follow the course of the runner all the way around the diamond and observe whether he touches all the bases. Most umpires are watching the fielding of the ball, which is really none of their affair at all, instead of watching what the base runner is doing. The ball will come in all right some way or other, and it is proper that you should have your eyes on what is happening on the bases rather than the way the outfielders are getting the ball back into the diamond.

Umpires must also take firmly in hand the matter of spectators crowding out toward or upon the diamond. If he can not get them back himself he should hold the home management responsible for this disorder, and, after giving them a reasonable time in which to get the spectators back, he should notify them that unless they succeed in clearing them away within two minutes more he will award the game to the visiting team.

Arbiters Should Know Rules.

Umpiring is like playing in one respect, and that is that the more experience one gets the more proficient are they apt to become. That and these few hints may be of much benefit to one contemplating doing some of this work; but above all make sure that you know the rules. You may think you know them because you have a general idea of how the game is played, but anyone who thinks they know every rule in baseball will do well to go right out and buy a rulebook and read it through very carefully from beginning to end, and if they don't find at least a dozen things in the game that they never heard of before the circus lemonade is on me.

Reds Are Composed Of Young Pastimers

Cincinnati Expert Ridicules Yarn That Club Is Home for Aged Ball Players.

CINCINNATI, July 5.—Criticism was made on the personnel of the Cincinnati Reds recently that the players are too old to deliver the goods and that that is the reason why they have occupied last place so long. The critic declares that the Cincinnati club was an old man's home and could never win until new life was instilled into it by the substitution of young men for the alleged "old-timers," who were said to be cluttering up the field.

Investigation shows that nothing could be further from the truth. As a matter of fact, the Reds, as now constituted, are one of the youngest clubs in the league.

Joe Tinker naturally is the oldest man in the regular line-up, and Joe is only 32 years old, and as fast as he ever was. Hoblitzel is only 24, though he has four years of experience as a major league first baseman.

Heine Groh is a youngster, and so is John Dodge, the latter having just passed his twentieth birthday. The infield is the youngest in the league, for if Almeida plays third he is only 26, and does not bring the average up very much. In the outfield Bob Bescher, the oldest man out there, is only 28, while Josh Devore is 24 and Marsans 25.

Some of the pitchers and catchers are older men, of course, which is as it should be. John Kling, the veteran of the club, is 37, but still in excellent form. Tom Clarke, who has been doing most of the work behind the bat this year, is only 24, and Earl Blackburn, the third backstop, has just turned 20.

LOS ANGELES, July 5.—Eddie Campi, the Pacific Coast bantamweight, has been engaged by Tom McCarey, fight promoter, to meet the winner of the Charlie Ledoux-Kid Williams fight which will be staged here on July 15. Campi recently defeated Ledoux in a 20-round battle.

CARNEY PUTS IN FIRST CHALLENGE TO PLAY DE ORO

ST. LOUIS, MO., July 5.—The next match for the world's three-cushion championship will be played between Alfredo DeOro and Joe Carney. Frank Benson, the local billiard impresario, received word Friday morning that Carney, the Denver cuelst, had placed his challenge ahead of all other performers, and would meet DeOro when the fall season starts in September.

It was thought that John Horgan would attempt to regain his laurels ahead of anybody else, after losing to the Cuban out in San Francisco last April, but "Banker Jawn" now will have to wait until Carney and DeOro play.

Carney was the carom expert who surprised the billiard world by defeating DeOro about a year and a half ago. Had DeOro won that match he would have secured possession of the diamond trophy. Carney's first match as champion was with Horgan, and the Sixth Street idol won with ease.

FEDERAL LEAGUE TEAMS ON WESTERN INVASION

INDIANAPOLIS, July 5.—The Federal League's Western invasion will open Monday, July 7, when Chicago will play at Kansas City. President John T. Powers said early to-day before departing for his home in Chicago. It is believed, league officials assert, that all work necessary to transfer the Covington team to Kansas City will have been completed by that time.

Edward Eckblad Is Foremost White Hope

That's Real Name of Gunboat Smith, Who Is Among Leading Heavyweights.

ST. PAUL, MINN., July 5.—The Gibbons brothers of St. Paul are not the only Minnesotans who are top-notchers in the squared circle, for no less a personage than Gunboat Smith, at present leading figure in the white hope brigade, started his journey to fame from this State. "Gunboat" Smith's real name is Edward Eckblad. He was brought up in Milica Township. His mother, who is now Mrs. Rosen, still lives in that township.

Young Eckblad is well remembered in Milica Township as a sturdy young fellow, always handy with his fists and of an adventure-loving disposition. Many stories are told of his prowess with his "dukes" at little disagreements such as occasionally arise at country dances.

The monotony of life in the country did not appeal to him, and in 1908 his eye was caught by one of "Uncle Sam's" advertisements depicting the joys of life in the navy, showing groups of young tars and non-commissioned officers standing around, apparently with little to do.

TINKER HAS HIGH HOPES.

CINCINNATI, OHIO, July 5.—Joe Tinker denies that he has given up hopes for this season and says he is building his Cincinnati team to run in 1913, not next year, as some have intimated. Tinker is right when he says there are a good many games to be played yet before the pennant is won.

1914 OLYMPIC GAMES WILL BE STAGED AT ATHENS

NEW YORK, July 5.—Next year's special Olympics at Athens, Greece, will be staged on March 25, the same day King Constantine is crowned by his subjects.

With the exception of an aeroplane contest, the same program of events that was put on in 1906 will be duplicated at this meeting. The games and festivities will last until May 5.

It is expected Uncle Sam will be represented by a small team. Only the best material will be sent to fight for the Stars and Stripes in Greece. The 1915 sports at San Francisco follow, and then the Berlin Olympics. The public will be asked to contribute for two of these trips.

KLING HELPS REDS.

Cotton Seed Meal a Southern Asset Poorly Appreciated by Southern Farmer

Affords One of the South's Greatest Advantages in Livestock Raising. Is Rich in Plant Food Content and Lends Itself Admirably to Soil Fertility.

CHARLES A. WHITTLE.
Georgia State College of Agricultu re.

It is time for an ode to the golden meal similar to Timrod's to the cotton boll. Lurking in the heart of the fuzzy little seed are wonders incredible. Presto! They troop upon the stage at command of the genius of invention. Now, it is a dainty, elusive and rare perfume; now it is a shimmering liquid that parades as olive oil and defies the epicure to say it is not; now it is enthroned in snowy whiteness in the frying pan; now it is the Jersey's golden butter—but this isn't the ode. This is intended to be a very practical discussion, entitled "How the South turns its cotton seed over to others to go to the trouble of extracting some several millions therefrom, and how the Southern farmer could tap the golden stream without a worry."

The South gets about $16,000,000 for its crop of cotton seed, but if it got what the ultimate consumer pays for it in its various manufactured forms it would get a hundred million dollars. The South does not know all of the tricks of cotton seed transformation. The painstaking, delving, plodding German has unearthed several cotton seed gold mines which he has securely staked. Here the production of swineless lard and a few other edibles more or less known to the public has kept the cotton seed from expatriating the greater part of its resources.

Where the Farmer Comes In.

But to the farmer who grows the cotton, that produces the seed, that the mill grinds and the wonder workers transform, it is up to him to get his fertilizer from it and something more.

A ton of cotton seed contains 58.8 pounds of nitrogen, 21 pounds of phosphoric acid, 31.6 pounds of potash. Convert the seed into meal and a ton of meal will have more than twice as much nitrogen as a ton of seed, nearly three times as much phosphoric acid and considerably more potash.

From 40 to 50 gallons of oil can be obtained from a ton of cotton seed. The oil is not needed for feed or fertilizer. It is, therefore, a product that should go on to the manufacturer to be produced into various forms for the benefit of mankind. The farmer should look to the residue of the seed after the oil has been extracted as a further source of revenue.

A ton of cotton seed meal has plant food constituents or fertilizer values worth $24.26 per ton. The question is, How shall this meal be applied with greatest benefit to the farmer? Shall he apply it direct as a fertilizer or shall he feed it to live stock and apply the manure as fertilizer?

Feed it.

That cotton seed meal takes the place of corn in an animal's ration and can be bought in the South and be fed in the corn belt of the West cheaper than corn has been demonstrated by many years of practice. If cotton seed meal can be shipped to the West and North and fed successfully, what ought the South not gain by feeding it at home?

But—it is a shame to say it—the Southern farmer is not feeding the cotton seed meal, but he is selling it to the Western farmer and is buying from the Western farmer corn to feed. Penny wise and pound foolish! It is not to be explained upon any other basis than that the Southern farmer has not learned how to feed the meal, generally speaking, of course. There are farmers feeding meal in the South, but few, comparatively speaking.

Nothing stands in the way of feeding cotton seed meal in the South. Nothing in the climate forbids it. The food requirements of live stock do not forbid it. In fact, whenever cotton seed meal has been properly fed in the South it has always been with success.

Helps to Make Stock Profitable.

The unbeliever might query: "What is the use of feeding cotton seed meal in the South if cattle can not be raised in competition with the West?"

Cattle can be raised in the South in competition with the West, but, of course, cotton seed meal alone will not account for it. Without the silo, without making use of the long grazing season, without using the double cropping possibilities of a long growing season, and without making the best use of cheap cotton seed meal, there is no use to try to compete with the West in beef production. By making use of the advantages offered, however, nothing whatever can put the South in second place.

In dairying, where the profits are larger than in the growing of beef, these advantages count for even more in the South than elsewhere.

The live stock to which to feed cotton seed meal and the willingness of the farmer to feed cotton seed meal are, of course, two very important essentials. One can not raise cotton alone and make a success of growing live stock on the side by buying the feed supplies. The Southern farmer must raise corn, wheat, oats, peas, clover, cotton, fill a silo and have Bermuda pasture, if he is going to grow live stock successfully.

Indeed agricultural progress in the South awaits diversified farming. Cattle can not be raised without growing the feed crops. The feed crops can not be used to best advantage without cattle on the place. Permanent upbuilding of the fertility of soil can not be accomplished without cattle, diversity of crops and crop rotation. That is the circuit which agricultural prosperity travels. Thus it will be seen that cotton seed meal has an important role to play in the progress of Southern farming.

How It Affords Cheap Food Supply.

In feeding cattle four things are of importance to the farmer: Dry matter, digestible protein, digestible carbohydrates and digestible fat. Dry matter is cheap enough and easy enough to get in the form of a variety of "roughness." Protein is different. It is the most expensive but very essential, going chiefly to building up nerves and tissues. In this element cotton seed meal stands far ahead of other feeds ordinarily used in this country. Carbohydrates build the fires, as it were, under the boiler in heating up the animal and supplying it with energy. They are abundant in most forms of feed raised on the farm. Being easy to get and abundant, carbohydrates are, therefore, comparatively inexpensive.

Fat is another one of the expensive food elements and also very important for building body fat. It can also take the place of carbohydrates as a source of energy and heat. Here again cotton seed meal comes to the fore. It excels in fat contents.

In three particulars cotton seed meal excels—dry matter, protein and fats, when compared to corn, corn bran, wheat bran, wheat middlings, rice bran and oats. The rank of cotton seed meal with some of the leading concentrates is given in the following table:

Name.	Dry Matter, Lbs.	Digestible Protein, Lbs.	Carbohydrates, Lbs.	Fat, Lbs.
Corn	89.1	7.9	66.7	4.3
Corn and cob meal	84.9	4.4	60.7	2.0
Corn bran	90.9	7.4	59.8	4.6
Wheat bran	88.1	12.2	39.2	2.7
Wheat middlings	87.9	12.8	53.0	3.4
Rice bran	90.3	5.3	45.1	7.0
Oats	89.0	9.2	47.8	4.2
Cotton-seed meal	91.8	37.2	16.9	12.2

The table speaks for itself. There is nothing in the class with cotton-seed meal for protein and fats. In no form can these comparatively expensive food constituents be purchased so cheaply as in the form of cotton-seed meal.

Value as Fertilizer When Fed.

Having determined the unquestioned value of the good contents of cotton-seed meal, how about its value as fertilizer when fed to animals? Here it is: A ton of cotton-seed meal contains 135.8 pounds of nitrogen, 57.6 pounds of phosphoric acid and 17.4 pounds of potash. Here again cotton-seed meal shines as compared with corn, corn bran, wheat bran, wheat middlings, rice bran and oats. None of them are in the class with cotton-seed meal in nitrogen, the most expensive of all plant food. The following table will show the relative standing:

Name.	Nitrogen.	Phos. Acid.	Potash.
Corn	36.4	14.0	8.0
Corn and cob meal	28.2	11.4	9.4
Corn bran	32.6	24.2	13.6
Wheat bran	52.4	57.8	32.2
Wheat middlings	52.6	19.0	12.6
Rice bran	14.2	5.8	4.8
Oats	41.2	16.4	12.4
Cotton-seed meal	135.8	57.6	17.4

From this it can be readily seen that the droppings of cattle fed on cotton seed meal will afford the most economic source of nitrogen when compared with other foods. Since about 75 per cent of nitrogen consumed by live stock in the form of food may be returned to the soil in the form of manure, it will be observed how inexpensively cotton seed meal can be made to put nitrogen in the soil.

Incidentally it may here be observed that 25 per cent of the nitrogen plant food in the cotton seed meal can be used to fatten an animal and the balance returned to the soil whence it came, to feed other plants. Is it not better to use the 25 per cent in feeding live stock than in returning it directly to the soil in the form of meal fertilizer?

The 25 per cent of nitrogen of the total content of the food, when fed to animals, gives ample return, but probably in no way more than in milk production. Always where Southern dairymen have used cotton seed meal better returns were received. In feeding beef cattle, cotton seed meal and silage are by all odds the cheapest combination of a ration.

In What Quantities to Feed.

The average ration fed to work animals in the South is 14 pounds of corn and 12 pounds of mixed hay per day per 1,000 live weight. It is deficient in protein. Add two pounds of cotton seed meal to the ration and we have nearly the correct standard. It will not hurt the mule or horse. It simply affords him what he needs and his system craves. Mix 900 pounds of corn, 750 pounds of oats and 300 pounds of cotton seed meal and 300 pounds of wheat bran and feed about 15 pounds per day per 1,000 live weight of horse or mule doing hard work, and good results will follow. The 15 pounds, of course, should be divided into three parts and fed morning, noon and night along with mixed hay or stover.

Another convenient combination is 1,500 pounds corn and cob meal and 300 pounds of cotton seed meal, to be fed, of course, three times a day, a total of 15 pounds per day, and along with it roughness.

A mixture of nine parts corn and one part cotton seed meal has been fed to hogs to advantage at the Alabama station, reducing the cost of gain per hundredweight from $7 or $10 per day to $5 or $6. Its value in feeding to dairy cattle has been mentioned. From four to five pounds per 1,000 pounds live weight when a cow is giving two gallons of milk per day is recommended to be fed with ordinary roughness. For beef production from 3 to 6 pounds of cotton seed meal can be fed, depending upon the size of the animal, along with silage and roughness.

Important to South to Boost Meal.

It is curious with all that has been demonstrated of the feeling advantage of cotton seed meal, the case which has often been made in its favor in dairying and beef production, the fertilizing value too clearly made known to leave doubt, that there should be those essaying to be agricultural leaders who, on every occasion choose to speak softly in advocacy of this vital resource of the South—cotton seed meal. There are not many. They do not openly oppose. They dare not in the face of a world of facts. Their purposes are concealed and doubtless few are deceived. It is unfortunate, however, when there is so much to be done to educate the Southern farmer to the vast benefits to be derived by the largest possible use of cotton seed, that there should be any one standing around with fingers crossed and "allowing" that it is a good thing for the cotton seed crushers. Of course, it is a good thing for the cotton seed crushers. Why should these progressive Southern men not have a good thing if there are any coming along? Why should not everybody wish not only that the cotton seed crushers should get something out of cotton seed meal but that the Southern farmer should also get something good out of it? What excuse is there for anybody living in the South not boosting the uses of cotton seed meal for every cent that the South can get out of it? Is anybody else more entitled to it?

The feeding of cotton seed meal in the South does not have to be boosted in order to provide a market for cotton seed meal. Germany, Sweeden, Norway, Denmark, Holland, England, France and practically the whole civilized world is buying cotton seed products for feeding purposes. The North is a large consumer. The cotton seed crusher can get along without the South, but the South will be foolish to try to get along without getting every cent it can out of cotton seed meal as a feed for animals.

SCIENTIST TO EXPLORE LAND OF CANNIBALS

Writes That He Is on His Way to Explore the Guainia, Little Known River.

BOSTON, July 5.—A letter from Dr. Hamilton Rice, F. R. G. S., the explorer, from San Jose, Rio Guaviare, to a Harvard classmate, has just been received, and in it Dr. Rice makes known his intention of exploring in the vicinity of the Guainia River, which is supposed to be inhabited by cannibals. Dr. Rice has made many expeditions to South America, and in 1908, when no word had been received from him for a long period, he was thought to have been lost, but a short time afterward he returned to Boston.

The letter, which is as follows, describes his expedition to his friend:

Letter Tells Experiences.

"I made this place a base last July and worked south from here to the Hilla, Macaya and Ajaju Rivers, reaching the last-named river November 12 at 5 p. m., and taking observations and locating it November 13. Only six of us arrived, four white men and two Indians. At Takanemue I had the party cut down from 22 to 12, and of these, later on, eight refused to advance, but we compelled two of the Indians to continue. The retreat from Ajaju is a great story, but must wait until my return. It was wild, eerie country which has never before been visited and very difficult to work through, not only as rough country, but from the constant dread of most of the men and Indians, who feared attacks from the Carijoria Indians, who have been unusually active of late in killing 'blancos' and Huilotos.

"In a few days I am leaving here with two big canoes and a crew of five men to descend Cauo Grande and explore Yuirida, and on the way down try to push through overland to the Guainia, near its source. The Indians of Guainia have the reputation of being cannibals, owing to the non-appearance of several expeditions from San Fernando de Atabapo, hence it has not been easy to get men to go, and even when they would consent, doing it only at a high figure.

Canoe Destroyed.

"This jot will go down as far as the first Indian settlement on the Yuirida, about 30 days down; from there on I shall have Indian crews. One of my canoes was destroyed by a thunder storm, a big tree falling and breaking it; the other is useless, and, as canoes cost $150 each, it makes quite an item in one's exchequer.

"I have the whole country from Bogota well mapped, and two maps as well as all the data of 120 observations (astronomical) have been sent to the Royal Geographical Society.

"I have also performed a number of surgical operations, have some 250 slides of blood smears of fevers and pilaria and other parasites in the blood of animals examined.

"January 19—Exciting day. All the crews here are drunk. My pilot, whose woman does not wish him to go, has had all his clothes burned by her, and he is now beating her, armed with a machete and a revolver. I am also about to operate on a man wounded by a Yamu Indian arrow."

'Pluck Out Tonsil,' Doctor's New Method

New York Specialist Declares That Knife Is No Longer Needed in Operation.

CHICAGO, July 5.—Instead of cutting out a tonsil, Dr. Harold Foster, of New York, announced to-day, that he could pluck and has plucked out a diseased tonsil "as a man would pluck a cherry."

Only long fingers and a firm grip are needed, he says.

This remarkable declaration was made at the meeting of the American Homeopathic Society, over which Dr. George A. Shepard, of New York, presided. Dr. George A. Suffa declared, too, that the knife need not be employed to cure strabismus of certain types—"cross-eyes." The surgeon instead of cutting the muscles of the eye need only "take a loop in one or more of them," then tie the loop. After that he patient looks straight.

U. S. Gem Bill for June Is $5,102,917

Imports in Month Break All Records, According to Figures of Jewelry Examiner.

NEW YORK, July 5.—Gem imports for June broke all records, according to figures compiled by William B. Treadwell, jewelry examiner at the Appraisers' Stores. The total reached $5,102,917, of which the cut precious stones and pearls are value at $3,920,175 and the uncut gems, mostly diamonds, at $1,182,742.

It was predicted in Maiden Lane recently that the total value of the gem receipts throughout the United States would exceed $50,000,000 during the fiscal year, and these figures were considered a conservative estimate.

The large figures are due to the fear of importers of an advance in the duty under the new tariff.

First Woman Wills Her Body to Science

Leaves Strange Bequest in Hope That Her Remains Will Aid in Scientific Research.

PHILADELPHIA, July 5.—Miss Lucy Hunter Baird, the wealthy Washington society woman, who died here June 19, bequeathed her body to Dr. S. Weir Mitchell and his son, Dr. John King Mitchell, directing that they should perform an autopsy. She is perhaps the first woman in this country to will her body to science.

Miss Baird suffered for several years from a nervous ailment, and Dr. Mitchell and his son did much to relieve her. It was out of gratitude to them and with the hope that an autopsy might reveal facts of futre value to humanity that she inserted the strange clause in her will.

GUN METAL SHOES POPULAR.

A great many tan shoes for men are being sold this summer at wholesale, but in the better class trade gun metal finishes are the most sought. Narrow toes and low, broad heels are favored.

POULTRY

Southern farmers are neglecting the most profitable end of the fowl industry. Pekin Duck is the best all-round fowl for the market producer. Indian Runners are great layers.

By JUDGE F. J. MARSHALL.

There is but little question that the domestic duck originated from the wild duck which was widely distributed over the British Islands.

It has fallen to the lot of England and America to do most of the perfecting of the tame varieties, although one, the Pekin, was imported from China in a rather crude state.

At this time we have a dozen standard varieties of ducks.

The duck, while not nearly so commonly bred as the chicken, has great commercial importance in some sections of this country. In Philadelphia, Boston and New York it is a favorite with epicures.

Its principal market role is in the shape of what are called broilers or green roasters. As such they use the larger varieties—the Pekin, Aylesbury and Rouen. These ducks will weigh as high as 17 pounds to the pair at maturity.

Ducks on Farms.

Although but little attention has been paid to them by farmers, a good class of ducks could be made a very profitable addition to the farm stock. So many farmers, particularly in the South, have tried to keep the old puddle duck, as they were called, and derived but little revenue from them. Where they have gotten some of the fine breeds, they have found them money-makers.

The Pekin, as Americanized, is our most profitable market duck. As they stand to-day, they represent nearly three-fourths of the commercial duck business of this country.

New York, New Jersey and Massachusetts have breeders who raise these ducks by the thousands to be marked at from two to three months of age. They grow twice as fast as would a chicken during this time.

While the Aylesbury and the Rouen will make as large a growth, it has been thought that the Pekin takes less time, and for that reason they have been universally used for market purposes.

E. W. Fly, of Chalfont, Pa., writes for The Reliable Poultry Journal, telling of the remarkable growth of ducks as compared with chickens. It requires about three months for the average chick to reach two pounds, while ducks will reach that weight in less than half that time, and are ready for the market in seven weeks.

Ducks More Profitable.

In experiments conducted for the purpose of determining the relative value of ducks and chicks, it was found that at the end of nine weeks the average weight of the ducks was four pounds and 8 ounces, average weight of chicks two pounds. Ten ducks sold for 28 cents a pound, or $12.60. After paying the shipping expenses, the receipts were $9.68. The food cost $2.36, leaving a net income of $7.32. The chicks sold for 24 cents a pound, the receipts being $2.74; cost of food was 82 cents, leaving a profit of $2.92. The difference in profit in favor of the ducks was $4.40.

Repeated tests have clearly shown that the Pekin or any of the larger breeds will make wonderful growth if they are properly fed and handled. Of course, they must be of a healthy strain, uninjured by being bred to fancy points. Good, strong outcrosses are necessary to the vigor of any variety.

James Rankin, of Massachusetts, one of the first poultrymen of this country to take up the production of early market ducks, after experimenting with all kinds, says that the Pekin will yield the most profits. As he raises over 12,000 ducks yearly, a variation of 1 cent per pound will make a difference of $500 in his yearly income.

Early Ducks Make Early Layers.

Mr. Rankin not only puts a lot of early roasters on the Boston market, but he keeps over a lot of these for early layers the following fall and winter. It is as essential for him to have the early layers as the early roasters for the markets. They must furnish the eggs for hatching the following season's crop of ducks.

Mr. Rankin holds the distinction of being the first, or one of the first, to make a success of the market duck business by hatching his stock in incubators which he himself constructed before the days of the incubator proper.

The best breeders have found that it does not pay to feed or pamper weaklings. They have found that the ducks do much better when they are allowed a good run and fed out of doors at all seasons. This has reference to stock ducks, for the youngsters have no time to get hardy. Running water is one of the real essentials for Pekins, where they are kept for practical purposes.

Feed for Young Ducks.

One of the best methods of feeding young ducks for about a week is as follows: One measure of corn meal, one of middlings, one of good wheat bran; mix with sweet milk or water, with grit added. Do not have it sticky, but nice and crumbly. Second week—One and one-half measures of corn meal, one measure of middlings, one of wheat bran, one-eighth measure of beef scraps, one measure of roasted bread and one half measure of green rye or clover. Third week—Two measures of corn meal, one-half of bran, one-sixth of beef scrap, one-half of the green clover or rye.

Fourth week—Two measures of corn meal, one and one-half of bran, one-half of middlings, one-half of the beef scrap, one-half of the green stuff. Fifth week—The same, with three-fourths measure of the beef and two of the greens. Sixth week—The same. Seventh week—Three measures of corn meal, one and one-fourth of bran, one-half measure of middlings, one of beef scrap and two of green cut clover or rye. Eighth week (if finishing for the market)—Leave out the bran and add the amount in corn meal and middlings, which will tend to brighten the carcass.

During the last week of feeding avoid anything that may taint the flesh, such as onions or too much rye. Where the ducks are to be kept for layers and not forced for the market it is best to leave out the increase of corn meal and feed as for the fourth week right on to maturity, except a feed of mixed grain once a day, preferably at night.

While this feed is used largely for the development of the Pekin for the broiler market, it is all right for any kind of duck raising.

Indian Runners Disappointing.

During the last ten years the country has gone wild on the Indian Runner. It is best for laying. But many persons have been disappointed with their results, not being able to keep the Runners up in health and strength during a siege of this heavy laying.

We believe this is due more to the vitality of certain families which have been bred for character of feathering rather than for vitality and productiveness. We think that with the same care bestowed upon them as has been given the Pekin for real strength and health that they would do much better in holding up to the work of heavy laying.

These ducks were brought into England over 50 years ago in rather a crude state as to markings, though of a decided Runner type. They came from India. They are of very early maturity, and, as we have said, when well handled, are remarkable layers of much more delicately flavored eggs than the larger members of the duck family. A white egg is claimed for them, although many lay greenish-tinted eggs.

Type of Runners.

Our American Standard gives the Indian Runner as of a fawn-and-white color. There are many who contend the true Runner should be a white with a coarse penciling of fawn and white. In real type the Runner is slim and erect in body, with a long, slim neck, and head carried high, with bill straight out.

Being somewhat of the Leghorn type, they are of but little value for the market. For flavor, it is all right, but the producer is not willing to pay as much to produce a four-pound carcass as it does to get six or seven in the Pekin.

After we have considered the practical varieties, we have the more ornamental, such as the Crested White, Muscovey, Call and Blue Swedish. The later is remarkably beautiful in type and coloring. The Gray Call is very much the same as the wild mallard. In fact, they are of such a wild nature that during the migratory seasons they are decidedly restless. They are called the bantams of the duck family.

The duck question for the practical breeder resolves itself into two proposition—if you want eggs, take the Runners; if meat and eggs combined, the Pekin.

Farmers Will Raise Cattle Scientifically

Nebraskans Pledge to Follow Instructions in Effort to Cut Cost of Living.

LINCOLN, NEBR., July 5.—To do their part in reducing the high cost of living 200 Nebraska farmers have pledged themselves to devote their time, talents and energies to increasing the production of beef cattle and to follow the instructions of the university experiment station, which has for several years made a special study of raising cattle for beef by what it believes to be the best methods.

"The fact that the population of the country is increasing at an average of 20 per cent every ten years, while beef cattle are decreasing 7 per cent, has aroused the nation to a realization that the high cost of living can never be lowered until this state of affairs is mended, and that the farmers are responsible for the work is just as apparent as that the present conditions exist," said Dean Burnett, addressing the farmers.

11TH OF FAMILY GOES TO NURSE LEPERS IN INDIA

Rev. Gottfried Hahn, Now in New York, to Finish Education Preparatory to Life of Sacrifice.

NEW YORK, July 5.—Rev. Gottfried Hahn, recently ordained a minister of the German Evangelical Church in St. Louis, is in the city, preparatory to beginning a journey to India to sacrifice his life among the lepers.

He is on his way to become a missionary to Purulia, India, where hundreds of the most desperate cases of Asia are cared for and taught to look upon Christianity as their hope.

And more marvelous still, he is but following in the steps of eleven other members of his family, including his aged mother.

Regards Action as Duty.

Like Father Damien, young Hahn regards his action as a duty to his church and God. No one could better understand the horrible conditions he must face than he does, for he was born there.

"I shall finish my preparation. Then I will return to India and enter upon my work there," he said simply.

"My father gave his life to the work in that field and I must take it up later myself if my health permits.

"Mother is ill and I do not believe will live much longer. Nothing would delight her more than to know before she dies that I, too, will continue in the work of my father."

To him it is all in the day's work. His sister, Maria Hahn, is the wife of the superintendent of the colony. She has been there for years and has faithfully and courageously given her life to the cause.

Physical Being Frail.

Certainly if his father and if his sister and all of his other relatives could do what they have done and are doing, why should he hesitate, asks young Hahn.

Hahn, who is 26, came to America several years ago to pursue his theological studies at the Evangelical Seminary in St. Louis. His frail physique forbids his returning immediately to the lifework of his kin in India.

As soon as his health warrants his assuming the life of sacrifice and devotion, he will sail to Southern India, and follow in the missionary work of his people.

The St. Louis man is the fifth in his family to be ordained in the ministry.

His father, Rev. Ferdinand Hahn, who died in 1910, more than 40 years ago began his services as a missionary in India.

Three of his sons came to America after working for years in the colony.

Peanut Shortage Coming; Chance for Georgia Farms

High Prices Now Paid for "Goobers" May Make Them Good Money Crop.

Although peanut raising has advanced greatly in recent years, the demand for peanuts has increased even faster, and dealers say that there is danger of a complete exhaustion of the present supply before this year's crop is harvested. In other years, when the domestic crop has been short, peanuts have been imported from Spain. Recent cable advices, however, have been to the effect that Spain has no peanuts to export this year.

Spanish peanuts now sell at wholesale for 10 1-4 cents a pound, and Virginia peanuts at 7 cents a pound. These are higher prices than have ever been known before. Last fall Spanish peanuts went above 6 1-4 cents, and other varieties above 5 1-2 cents, these figures causing New York operators to assert that the prices were too high, and that a sharp decline was bound to follow. Another year's showing of the vast increase in the consumption of peanuts in this country, however, has made it apparent that the peanut is destined to become one of the great staples of the country.

Leading dealers have recently been exploring areas adapted to peanut culture, and urging farmers to set out peanut crops. The probability of an overproduction at any time appears to be very small.

The nuts can be raised successfully in parts of New Jersey, and farmers there are taking a lively interest in the subject.

The peanut is easily cultivated, and singularly free from disease and insect pests. There are production records of 200 bushels an acre of the Spanish variety, while the general output from Virginia averages from 70 to 90 bushels an acre. The Virginia peanut is the better of the two.

Georgia farmers very probably would find profit in raising peanuts for market, in the opinion of the State Commissioner of Agriculture.

The last census report showed Georgia's crop for a year as 2,569,787 bushels, raised on 160,317 acres. Brooks County led, with an estimated 365,395 bushels, Thomas, Decatur, Grady, Colquitt and Berrien Counties also planted extensively in peanuts.

These peanuts are not grown for market, but for fattening hogs. The hogs are allowed to root in the fields for the nuts, after the vines have been cut off for the valuable hay.

The estimated average yield is 25 bushels an acre, 25 pounds to the bushel. At a price of 6 cents a pound, a farmer could get $37.50 per acre for the nuts, besides raising a good crop of hay.

In Louisiana and Mississippi, where the boll weevil has discouraged the planting of cotton, the farmers are turning to peanuts, and with considerable success.

Increasing commercial importance of the peanut, however, may yet make it a money crop in Georgia.

Overcoats Must Go, Say French Dandies

Uncle of Duc De Chaulnes Among Fashion Leaders Who Would Return to Old-Fashioned Cloaks.

Special Cable to The American.

PARIS, July 5.—Away with overcoats. The Duc De Luynes and the Count de Gontaut-Biron, two men of fashion and of the most aristocratic blood in all France, declare that the male of to-day's species should revive the glory of his plumage; that the attire of man is too somber, painfully funereal.

De Luynes is an uncle of the very young Duc De Chaulnes, whose mother was Miss Theodora Shonts, of New York. The Count De Gontaut-Biron's brother, now deceased, married Miss Martha Leishman, daughter of John G. A. Leishman, lately American Ambassador at Berlin.

The first attack has been directed against vulgar overcoats. The two leaders vow we must return to the graceful cloaks which poets and dandies of 1830 wore. They also say that the clawhammer evening coat must be left to hotel waiters and hired mourners.

PROPOSED TAX DIVERTS NOTICE FROM MARKET

Cotton Men Too Busy Fighting Clarke Amendment to Notice Closely Daily Fluctuations.

NEW ORLEANS, July 5.—Pending the outcome of the proposed legislation at Washington, which would place a prohibitive tax on contracts for the future delivery of cotton, comparatively little interest is being taken in the cotton market itself. Cotton men, who realize that the system of contract trading in New Orleans and New York is absolutely essential for carrying on the immense forward business in the South's great staple, are more concerned in the fight for the maintenance of contract markets than in temporary fluctuations, which, however, continue to show a steady undertone, with support on all easy periods.

In the fight against the adoption of the Clarke amendment to the tariff bill the New Orleans Cotton Exchange has enlisted the support of all the other cotton exchanges of the South. Already these exchanges have begun to adopt resolutions protesting against such destructive legislation as that proposed by the Senator from Arkansas. Telegrams and letters of protest are pouring into Washington from the business interests all over the South.

Producer Hardest Hit.

It has been clearly demonstrated by men here who are experts on cotton matters that while all lines of the cotton business will be seriously affected by the enactment of the Clarke amendment into law, the man who will suffer most from such ill-conceived legislation will be the cotton producer himself. In the first place, the wiping out of the contract markets would do away with an army of small spot buyers who are accustomed to hedge against possible losses by selling contracts against their purchases of spot cotton, and thus deprive the farmers of the benefit of competition for their cotton. The logical consequence would be that the control of the spot markets of the South would pass into the hands of a few rich interests, and eventually, it is argued, would lead to the formation of a gigantic cotton trust somewhat on the order of that which now has the cattle raisers of the United States in its grip.

No less an authority than Colonel Henry G. Hester states that if the Clarke amendment is adopted the value of cotton in the South will be lessened two to three cents a pound. Buyers of spot cotton, unable to protect themselves against losses by hedges in the contract market, will necessarily allow a margin for possible fluctuations in the value of the staple by reducing the prices paid to the producer. With the aid of the contract market spot buyers are able to pay full market values for cotton and can always find an outlet for their purchases.

Colonel Thompson's Position.

Colonel W. B. Thompson, who has been one of the leaders of the South in the fight for the betterment of the producers' condition, has come out emphatically in opposition to the proposed legislation. In a telegram addressed to President Barrett, of the National Farmers' Union at Union City, Ga., Colonel Thompson appeals to that organization, which is reported to be backing the proposed measure, to give this vital matter its most serious consideration.

After citing some of the evil consequences that would flow from the passage of the Clarke amendment, Colonel Thompson concludes his telegram to President Barrett as follows:

"It is reported that in supporting said amendment some Senators take the position that while they doubt the wisdom of the measure or are of the positive opinion that it is unwise and will be injurious, 'still as the farmers want it,' they say, 'let them have it, and take the consequences.' We can not afford to experiment with such a vital matter. I am not connected with any exchange in an official capacity, and I have no interest in any future business. You know that I have given much time and effort to the betterment of the producers' condition and to improvement in all legitimate trade. I think you believe in the sincerity of my purpose. I say to you earnestly that in my opinion this measure is fraught with the most serious consequences to the interests you represent, and with no intention of being officious, but animated only by sincere desire to co-operate with you in your work for the Southern farmer, I beg you to give this vital matter your most serious consideration before using the power of your great organization to advance so dangerous a measure and before you accept responsibility therefor."

English Carpets to Invade U. S. Markets

Tariff Situation Closely Watched, and Any Opening Will Be Seized by Britain.

NEW YORK, July 5.—Reports from carpet and rug manufacturers show that their mills are fully occupied in getting out orders which have been placed for the fall season. Reports to the effect that certain mills were closed, or partly closed down, have been promptly denied. The heaviest sales for the season have been on axminster rugs, and some additional orders are still coming from buyers who do not believe that they are sufficiently covered.

The opinion is becoming more general that fall prices were opened too low. Raw material has continued to move upward, and is in very short supply. There are a good many in the trade who believe that the tariff bill will not be passed in time to be of much service for the fall season, in the way of getting wool in free.

According to representatives of carpet houses in this market who have just returned from a visit to the manufacturing centers abroad, there will be keen competition on the part of the British mills for American trade.

Stock Exchange Working Hard to Restore Confidence

Old Secretive Attitude Gives Way to Campaign of Education—Queer Deals Cease.

NEW YORK, July 5.—Nearly a half-year has gone by since the New York Stock Exchange began measures of reform, and it is possible to gain a retrospective view of the results obtained. It may be said that the leaders in the movement are satisfied with what has been accomplished toward improving the general morale of operations in securities, and the groundwork laid for lifting the exchange above public reproach they believe to be secure.

The government committee has, in the first place, made application in recent months of the old adage about an ounce of prevention and a pound of cure. The committee has worked to eliminate incipient evils before they grew large enough to be subjects of general comment in the Street. The infliction of discipline—and there has been much discipline inflicted—has been gone about quietly, with the purpose of curbing infraction of the rules before greater infractions could occur. The effort has met with much success.

In consequence, largely, the exchange is entitled to considerable satisfaction over the fact that while recent sharp declines in the international markets brought in their train a number of failures in London, Paris and Berlin, not a single New York Stock Exchange house got into trouble.

Manipulation Dead.

"Manipulation is dead on the exchange," said a prominent member yesterday. "The governors have placed themselves so rigidly in opposition to every possible method of creating a fictitious market for a stock that no one would dare make the attempt. An outside operator might possibly try it, but the odds are greatly against any Stock Exchange house keeping his account if his trading became a matter of suspicion. There is no doubt about that. The committee on business conduct would take care of that end of the problem."

The committee on business conduct is, without doubt, the best adjunct to proper management of the exchange that has been added to the executive power in many years. The committee's function is to enforce proper conduct between members and their clients, to prevent reckless or unbusinesslike transactions on the board room floor, and to throttle manipulation. The scope of its influence is clearly seen in these three items.

Committee of Wide Powers.

The business conduct committee consists of five members, all of whom are members of the governing committee. The members have the power of examining the books of any Stock Exchange house at any time, to summon members of the exchange to explain acts which have been called into question, and to inquire into relations between members and customers.

If a stock begins to act strangely, the committee finds out who is buying and selling it, and the buyer and seller have to explain all about their transactions.

The committee reads carefully market letters sent out by commission houses. If it be decided that the contents are too much on the order of "tips," the house responsible therefor is warned that more matter-of-fact statements must be substituted for prophecies.

The formation of the committee on business conduct was one of the first products of the reform movement. The idea of having a number of responsible members in a position to get closer to the inner workings of the exchange than the larger board of governors was able to do was conceived by a special committee appointed to "consider the matter of handling margin accounts and rehypothecating securities and devise measures which will serve more fully to protect the public."

It is doubtful if the rank and file of Stock Exchange members realized how widespread would be the duties of the new organization. It was dubbed the "police committee" at first, and an impression prevailed in some quarters that the most onerous work of the members would be to prevent horseplay on the floor. Those who allowed this thought to submerge more weighty considerations were quickly disabused of it.

Educational Campaign.

Another direction taken by Stock Exchange reform which stands out prominent in the history of the past six months is in the way of education. There was a time, not so very long ago, when information about operations on the board was extremely hard to get. The attitude of the authorities seemed to be that the public did not need to know anything about a lot of matters. Such is not the case at the present time.

A committee has been formed which supplies inquirers with answers to all reasonable queries as to stocks, bonds, earnings of companies and methods of business on the exchange. Furthermore, this committee has carried the campaign of education to the public instead of waiting for the public to appear in Wall Street.

Hundreds of thousands of periodicals and newspaper clippings dealing with the Stock Exchange are distributed throughout the country monthly, and no opportunity is passed for disseminating information about the Stock Exchange in the year 1913.

Month of Good Weather Will Assure Big Yield of Cotton

Cleanest Crop Ever Seen Still Is Small and Needs Rain in Some Regions.

MEMPHIS, July 5.—If there is reasonably good weather in the cotton belt during the next thirty to forty days the foundation will be laid for a crop that should put at rest talk of very high prices during the ensuing fall and winter. At the present time there is ample basis for looking for the second largest crop the South has ever grown, some extremists talk of a possibility of it running the 1911 crop a close race. This, however, is hardly worthy serious talk, for acreage, according to official authorities, is not equal to that season, and condition at the time of the last compilation was several points lower. As conditions during the latter half of the summer of 1911 were rather abnormal in more ways than one and are not likely to be repeated, it is not conservative to expect the yield to reach within a million bales of the record.

The past week has been a period of crop improvement, though there still is basis for complaint, and continued ideal weather and growing conditions are necessary if the basis be laid for much excess over the season now drawing to a close.

Rains Not General.

There have been rains where needed, supplying the moisture essential to the plant catching up its late start and taking on fruit, yet as a rule they have been local in character and many areas are only partially supplied. Others have not had enough to do more than temporary good, and very soon permanent injury to prospects may result. The high temperatures in the central belt were not ideal, except where showers came and enabled the plant to take on size. Reports reaching here from the Eastern belt have told of improvement, though not by any means uniform.

The handicap to the crop continues to be its lack of size, which, the first week in July, is worthy of serious consideration. The season is at hand for fruiting, and if the plant is not well developed chances are against it becoming heavily fruited. The rains have helped considerably, but there have not been enough of them and there still is the danger of drouth later.

Cleanest Crop Known.

Cultivation has gone ahead under favorable conditions and the crop is perhaps cleaner than ever known, which is a feature of importance as to yield and the quality of the crop. It is difficult to conceive how conditions can arise that will cause the fields to become grassy. The crop will be laid by under the best conditions in years and in many sections earlier than usual, though it will not be an early crop when size and maturity of the plant is considered.

The depredations of the weevil in the infested sections have been checked, for little has been heard during the past week in regard to them. The hot sun and lack of moisture have helped to check the pest, while the vast numbers caught and destroyed have also been a factor. However, it is now between seasons with the pest, and the real test as to what it will do comes a little later.

There has been little activity in the spot department, though quotations have held fairly steady. Movement has been moderate. The strength in the summer contracts has extended to the entire market, and is based on continued good consumption and the smallness of stocks for protection of short sales.

Inquiry among the buyers here indicates that there is less selling of the actual ahead this summer than for several years, the experiences of the past two years having proven, in most instances, expensive. Some market observers think this fact helps to explain why the foreign spinners have been absorbing fall contracts so freely, thus providing in that way a partial hedge against orders for finished goods and yarns. If this opinion proves correct, it is likely to prove important as a speculative influence during the next few months.

BALKANS YET OFFER MENACE TO PROSPERITY

European Affairs Improved, but Vast Room Remains for Further Progress, Says Boersanier.

By BOERSANIER.

CHICAGO, July 5.—It is universally agreed that the Balkan war disorganized the world's finances. It frustrated what promised to be an exceptional boom in the United States. It stopped prosperity in Canada with an abruptness that threw the economic machinery of the Dominion almost into chaos. Europe, from the eastern end of Russia to France, from Norway to Italy, was thrown into confusion.

As Europe was the origin of the trouble, Europe is watched with keen and anxious eyes for signs of recuperation.

Europe is convalescing, but the convalescence is perceptible only to the eyes of the home expert. Too much was expected of the immediate effect of the signing of the preliminary treaty between the warring countries. An avalanche of fresh issues came on the market; securities attractive in form, substance and price. A few had scarcely been absorbed when an eruption occurred among the Turks' conquerors.

With the hereditary foe permanently vanquished, it had been unreasonable to expect all of the conquerors to lay aside their weapons and go to work. A fighter can not be converted into a dull and prosaic laborer in a day. Besides, there must be a paramount power among the allies, just as Prussia holds the whip hand in the Germanic confederation. The clash between Servia and Bulgaria is a contest for supremacy in the Balkans.

This may be troublesome. In the meanwhile, Germany is in need of capital, and Reichsbank, in its desire for gold, may pay a stiff premium, even as France paid it. America's monetary position is better, but not yet strong. We have the double task of moving full average crops and of financing a large number of short-term notes.

Briefly, the world's finances are not in a state to stand alarms and excursions in Europe. All the liquid capital that can be available the coming autumn will be wanted, and any action that tends to check the flow of capital might be embarrassing. Imagine, for example, what the effect would be if at the approach of autumn Paris took a gloomy view of international politics and began to call in her money. All who depend on French finance would find liquid capital, instead of expanding with the autumn's needs, contracted just when most wanted.

If these are the conditions of the world's finance, it is surely clear that what is needed now is not merely peace, but open good will and good understanding throughout Europe.

In a short sentence, Europe has improved, but the room for further improvement is vast.

HOSIERY MOVES WEL.

Hosiery manufacturers who have put their spring (1914) lines on the market do not anticipate great difficulty in selling them up quickly. In several instances the biggest part of the season's production has already been contracted for.

KNITTERS MAY STRIKE.

The unsettled condition of labor in the sweater end of the knit-goods trade is causing the manufacturers some concern. Some of the mills making these goods have already had strikes, and it is said that other outbreaks are not unexpected.

Coal to Cost More Within Next Year, Declare Operators

Export Demand One Factor in Creating New Markets for Product of Southern Mines.

KNOXVILLE, TENN., July 5.—Coal operators in the Kentucky and Tennessee fields, whose output moves largely into Georgia and adjoining States, report that the market is in better condition at this season of the year than ever before. Prices are averaging from 5c to 15c per ton higher than one year ago, with a strong demand for all grades. It is understood that contracts for railroads involving between 1,000,000 and 2,000,000 tons have been made at an advance of 10 cents per ton over the contract price of last year. This quantity of coal will be taken out of commercial channels, and will help advance prices during the next twelve months.

The demand for steam and domestic coal is unusually good for this season of the year, and most operators have sold their entire output up to September 1, and are not anxious to make quotations for shipments of domestic coals after that date, as they believe a strong market will develop in the fall and winter. There has been a slight let-up in the past 30 days for the finer grades of steam coal, and the increased production in domestic has caused 3-inch steam and nut and slack to be more plentiful, so that nut and slack is selling from 5c to 10c less than 30 days ago.

An unusual feature is a car shortage. Operators believe this indicates a serious shortage in the late fall and winter months.

There are several causes why prices on coal going from all fields into Georgia territory will probably be higher during the next twelve months. In the first place, exports of coal during the past ten months have been greater than ever before, especially from West Virginia fields.

This relieves the pressure of coal from that field on the other Southern coal fields. Alabama also is finding new markets at Gulf coast points and for export, which takes away some coal going into the Southeastern States. Alabama is coking considerable coal and this coke is going into Mexican and far West points. Large operators in Kentucky and Tennessee are successfully invading the Central and Northwestern States with domestic coal, which, because of its high quality, successfully competes in those parts with coal from all other fields. This diverts a large tonnage which has been going into Southeastern States.

DRESS GOODS DULL.

Business is quiet in the dress goods market at the moment. Buyers refuse to contract ahead until the tariff has been settled definitely. Cancellations are not so heavy as might be expected in view of the unsettled condition of the trade.

Carnegie in Favor of New Currency Bill

President Wilson Should Stand Firm if Opposition Develops to His Plans, He Says.

ZERMATT, SWITZERLAND, July 5.—Andrew Carnegie is keenly interested in the fate of the banking reform bill as presented to Congress by President Wilson.

"It is the most important and most necessary legislation on which America has had to decide for years," he says, "the present American currency system is a disgrace to the country. It is not true that bankers and leading business men are opposed to the measure. That is nonsense. The best bankers and business are for the reform. The Aldrich bill is all right and so long as the principle thereof is maintained I do not care about the details.

"If opposition should develop, my advice to President Wilson is to stand firm. When a panic starts other countries and governments possess the power to step in and act. Some speculators fail, it is true, but it is a good thing that they should do so.

Southern Railway Fours Are Sagging

Increased Dividends for Preferred Fail to Cause Rally Because of Underlying Conditions.

NEW YORK, July 5.—General investment conditions have operated against an advance in Southern Railway's development and general mortgage 4 per cent bonds after the preferred stock was put back on its regular 5 per cent basis. Around 74, the bonds are only four points above their lowest level. At present price they yield more than 5.60 per cent.

However, the decline has not been as marked as in the high-grade savings bank issues. These have suffered losses of 5, 6 and 7 points, while the Southern 4s are off only about 4½ points from the high of this year.

The Southern has more mileage with low-earning power than any other important road in its territory. However, its branch mileage is a source of strength, as indicated by the steady increase in gross and net earnings every year since 1909. Development of the South tends to increase the earning power of these branches. As yet little new capital has had to be spent on them.

WHAT ATLANTA MANUFACTURERS AND JOBBERS ARE DOING

ATLANTA GIRLS BUY MILLINERY MADE AT HOME

Half the Hats Seen on Peachtree Street Are Made Here, but the Fact Is Unheralded.

JOBBERS USE OWN LABELS

Factories Lose Identity When the Product Is Shipped—Materials Come From Many Lands.

Half the women's hats seen on Peachtree Street are made right in Atlanta.

The fair Peachtree promenaders don't know it; the milliners they patronize don't know it; in many cases the jobbers themselves don't know it.

There are three factories in Atlanta making women's hats, of straw, felt, plush, hemp and the myriad other materials which go to bedeck milady's coiffure and frame her pretty face.

But as soon as the hat leaves these factories the manufacturers lose their identity. The hat is marked with the jobber's label. It may be marked New York, Philadelphia, New Orleans or even London. The fact that it is made in Atlanta is nowhere to be discovered.

One manufacturer tells, with a grin, of Atlanta milliners who "stocked up" in New York—with Atlanta-made hats.

Altogether, it is an interesting business.

Materials From Afar.

The American Hat Manufacturing Company, one of the largest of the three Atlanta factories, imports straws direct from China, Japan, Italy and Germany. These straws are plaited abroad, and either are dyed there or bleached and dyed in Camden, N. J.

Japan sends hemp braid. Italy furnishes the milans, leghorns and tuscans. Germany furnishes a peculiar material known as Neapolitan braid, which, though few know it, is made from American cotton. China furnishes coarse straws.

So much for the straws. The felt bodies come from abroad, in the rough—queer, looking toadstools of various shades. Silks, ribbons, velvets, plushes and ornaments are carried in quantity enough to stock a dry goods store of large proportions.

Just now the factories are busy with the hats to be worn this fall and winter, and with misses' and children's hats for spring, 1914.

Sample rooms already are filled with fall and spring lines, dazzling arrays of colors, and seemingly in almost every shape, but with smaller hats predominating.

Plaster Hats the Start.

The making of a hat may be said to begin in the room where a skilled workman makes plaster molds accurately defining the shapes. From these plaster affairs, metal dies are made. These dies are put in the presses and heated by gas flames. The rough shapes, either felt, velvet, straw or hemp, are stamped with these hot dies and held in them until dry. When removed the heat has baked the sticky "sizing" until the shapes are firm.

From the presses the velvet and plush hats go to a workman who steams them and brushes up the nap to its original beauty.

The straw shapes are made in the factory. Ingeniously designed sewing machines, manipulated by skillful girls, sew the braid round and round, until a tiny knot grows into a gigantic hat. In the straw season 150 girls are busy at these machines.

Other ingenious machines sew in linings, attach cloth crowns to brims, bind brims, and do other complicated stitching which would seem to need the skill of the human hand.

Girl Designs Trimmings.

The elaborate bows and trimmings are designed by the young forewoman, who then teaches the girls under how to make them. This, in itself, is work requiring art.

Ready for shipment, the hats are put in the familiar round boxes—these, too, made in the factory, and then in big corrugated paper cases.

Off they go, bringing Atlanta no glory—but considerable money!

Permanent Exhibit Now Assured; Long Campaign Near Culmination

Speeches of Men Who Studied Possibilities of Plan Stir Their Hearers to Action.

"Atlanta citizens do not know what is made in their own city.

"Southern merchants who come to Atlanta do not know the extent of the city's manufactures.

"The nation in general never thinks of Atlanta as a manufacturing center.

"All this must be changed. There must be systematic exploitation of Atlanta's factories. The future growth and prosperity of the city depend on this factor more than on any other. One of the best means of educating the public to Atlanta's importance as a manufacturing center is to maintain a permanent exhibit of the goods made here."

With this message ringing in their ears, 100 Atlanta manufacturers, banqueting at the Hotel Ansley Thursday night, decided to undertake the establishment of a permanent display. Twenty-three manufacturers signed agreements to take space in the exhibit hall. More have signed since.

For the purpose of handling the exhibit a Fulton County manufacturers' association will be formed this week. The scope of this association is to be broad. It will endeavor to safeguard its members from ill-advised legislation. It will wrestle with transportation problems, welfare of labor and other questions of vital interest to manufacturers.

Four sites for the permanent exhibit are offered, each within five minutes' walk of Five Points. These are for lease, for sale, or lease with privilege of purchase. These offers will be acted upon within ten days.

Campaign Now On.

From this time forward a year of preparation will culminate in a whirlwind campaign of activity.

Forceful, indeed, were the informal talks made at the banquet. The men behind the project have spent a long time in study of its possibilities. They are very much in earnest. They truly believe that nothing so important for the development of Atlanta has been launched in many years. This enthusiasm, restrained for so long, found vent when they rose to make the speeches which should "get action." If they failed to convince their hearers, all their work was wasted. They knew it—and they did not fail.

"One of the big things such a permanent display does is educate the children," said Brooks Morgan. "In Cleveland it is regarded as a valuable supplement to the work of the schools in teaching the children economic and industrial subjects. What this means in dollars and cents to the exhibitors to have the future buying public in Cleveland fully awake to the variety and merits of homemade goods, you can see for yourselves.

City Needs Manufacturing.

"There is a limit to Atlanta's growth as a jobbing and distributing center. Almost every great concern in the United States has representatives here. Atlanta already supplies its territory well, and some territory which belongs to its neighbors. There is a limit to this development, I say, and the mainfenance of real estate values, the growth in population of the city, its prosperity, depend absolutely upon the development of our manufactories. We have 600 factories now. I doubt if we need more. What we need is to make these 600, each and every one, big, strong concerns.

"I do not know of a company which will benefit less than mine from an exhibit. My interest is not selfish. I sincerely believe this is necessary for Atlanta.

"Our idea is to have exhibits, as many and as attractive as possible, grouped effectively under one roof. A manager should be in charge. Let him show visitors through. If a visitor manifests interest in one line, or several, let him telephone at once to the manufacturers of these lines to send a salesman. I believe, too, that manufacturers in the outskirts of the city will find it profitable to use the exhibit building for their downtown office. This is done elsewhere with profit.

"Atlanta should have four times the payroll it now has. This is the way to go about it."

Evansville's Experience.

Bolling H. Jones told of the experience of 32 furniture manufacturers in Evansville, Ind., who put up a building and displayed their lines in it, keeping the ground floor for their offices. They find it easier to get prospective customers to look at their wares, and also find the selling cost cut to 3 per cent.

"That convinced me," said Mr. Jones. "Did any manufacturer here ever sell goods for 3 per cent merchandising cost? This argument alone seems to me unanswerable."

He spoke of the changes which have come about in the Southern field within five years. No longer is it possible to sell a merchant a full carload of one line. Therefore, he argued, the exhibit will be valuable in getting buyers to make up mixed carloads of Atlanta-made goods. Other cities, rivals of Atlanta, are doing this, he said, and Atlanta must, to keep what it has, to say nothing of expanding.

"Advertising no longer is a matter of buying a few inches of newspaper space, asserting through this space that 'John Smith makes good beds'," said C. S. Dobs. "Advertising is the science of creating a demand. Publicity is the cheapest known method of selling goods. It may be newspaper publicity; it may be billboards; it may be an exhibit of the kind you are considering. It may better be all three.

Like Shop Windows.

"I believe this exhibit will have the same effect as the Whitehall Street windows. A man comes downtown to buy a pair of shoes. As he walks along the street, he sees hats, neckwear and walking sticks displayed. These remind him that he needs such articles. The result is that he buys more than the shoes he set out after."

Forrest Adair has a "punch" when he talks.

"I am selling a home below the Fort to a family which consists of father, mother and seven girls. The father is a wagon-maker. The seven girls are employed in seven different factories in Atlanta. Wouldn't you rather buy the things these girls help make than some product of a New England sweat shop?

"Yet I talked to a bank director to-day who did not know that car wheels are made in Atlanta, and who thought that the famed Atlanta shoes really were made in Boston and sent here to be sold under the local label.

Interests Here Diverse.

"When the bottom falls out of the iron market, Birmingham and Pittsburg hang crape on the doors, and send flowers to each other. Do we care? We do not. Two or three of our plants suffer, but the hundreds of others go on, and business in the aggregate shows little contraction.

"As a man who earns his very bread from the growth of Atlanta, and who owes more of that bread to you manufacturers than to any other class, I want to make it as emphatic as I can that you must build up Atlanta's factories if you wish to see her continue to grow."

WORDS WHICH STIRRED ENTHUSIASM FOR SHOW

"All the machinery, all the enthusiasm, and all the push of the Chamber of Commerce will be behind the launching of the permanent exhibit."—Wilmer L. Moore, President of the Chamber of Commerce.

"I firmly believe a permanent exhibit will bring to Atlanta more merchants and more business than all the other things we have done put together."—Brooks Morgan, Chairman of the Exhibit Committee.

"Five years ago, you could sell solid carloads of one line to Macon and Augusta. You can not do it now. This plan will enable you to make up mixed carloads. Other cities are doing it. Atlanta must, not only to get more, but even to hold what she has."—Bolling H. Jones.

"The man who makes good products and doesn't advertise is like the man who winks at a girl in the dark. He knows it, but she doesn't, and it doesn't get him anywhere."—C. S. Dobbs.

"Agitation about the smoke nuisance makes me tired. I wish to goodness some one would turn 500 more smokestacks loose on us. I'll warrant there's not a man in town who could write a list of seventy-five of the hundreds of articles made in Atlanta."—Forrest Adir.

Atlanta's Future Absolutely Dependent on Building Up Factories, Experts Declare.

Thousand Lined Up To Get Into Store

Furniture House Devises Attractive Scheme to Induce Public to Notice Low Prices.

Even in busy Atlanta, it is seldom enough that a thousand people are lined up waiting to get into a store when the doors are thrown open. This was the record established by Sterchi Bros. & Barnes, Mitchell Street, near Whitehall, Thursday morning.

The attraction was an unusual sale of furniture, coupled with a prize offer. Tags were widely distributed among the friends of the store. Each of these tags was numbered, and 100 of the numbers corresponded with the numbers on tags borne by articles in the store. When any visitor matched his tag with any tag in the store, he was privileged to claim the article, without being obligated to purchase anything.

The plan drew a big crowd, and, better, it attracted attention to some very low prices, and resulted in good sales.

MORE BUYERS THAN PEACHES.

NEW YORK, July 5.—Buyers returning here from Georgia say that it is generally estimated the peach crop of Georgia will run about 1,500 cars. According to the railroad men, they do not expect to move over 75 cars a day out of the State at the flush of the season. There are a great many buyers at Fort Valley. Fully 95 per cent of the peaches are being sold on track—in fact, there are more buyers than there are peaches.

FOREIGN DEALER SEES MISTAKES OF AMERICANS

Slow Delivery and Demand for Money in Advance Hinder U. S. Trade Abroad.

Slowness in delivery of goods ordered by European importers and the rule of full prepayment are doing a great deal of damage to the business interests of American exporters, Consul W. J. Pike, Reichenberg, Austria, took the matter up by mail with a prominent importer in that city not long ago, and received a reply setting forth the reasons why American business is not greater in Northern Bohemia. According to Mr. Pike, this importer more than three years ago established an important commercial agency in Reichenberg. The organization covers all of Northern Bohemia. It has 270 branch offices, all of which are engaged chiefly in the exploitation of foreign-made merchandise.

At the time Mr. Pike took up the matter of increasing American business in that part of the world, the importer was getting his merchandise principally from Germany, France and England. Following a notice published on the foreign trade opportunities page of The Daily Consular and Trade Report, however, the organization has entered into extensive business relations with firms in the United States. Now most of its purchases are confined to merchandise produced in this country.

Capital Tied Up.

The letter received by the Consul from the importer reads:

"Respectfully referring to your esteemed favor of the 8th instant, I would be obliged to inform the honorable consulate of methods to put an end in the future to the mistakes which are made in exporting by American firms.

"A great evil that exists for the importer is that the total payment for the merchandise ordered must be sent in advance. If the merchandise were delivered promptly to enable quick sales, the loss of working capital and of the investment would not be so considerable, but notwithstanding the total payment is sent in advance, the merchandise is only delivered in two or three months, and then only upon urging by cable, which all entails considerable costs.

"To illustrate: Early in February I sent through my bank payment for 25 vacuum cleaners to Blank & Co., New York, and after much urgency I received to-day the reply that probably the goods will be shipped tomorrow. In the meantime not only can I do no business, but I have also invested the money; in other words, have the money lying unemployed. In view of the large force of salesmen dependent upon goods for delivery, such business conditions require too large a working capital with large expenses and costs.

"This invariably slow delivery is not the exception, but true as to all firms—I could give you the names of a large number of firms, the sale of whose products I was forced to discontinue and to break off every business relation because of failure to promptly deliver the goods.

Should Study Tariffs.

"American manufacturers could greatly facilitate matters and increase trade by giving attention to three important particulars, viz., prompt delivery, packing, and the duty—for instance, where articles are composed of different materials, as iron, nickel, enamel, leather or wood. In many instances it is possible to ship these parts separately, to be assembled in the country for sale, whereby there is an enormous saving in the amount of duty and the goods lowered in cost, which makes them more salable because of this saving.

"Another subject that should commend itself to the careful study of American manufacturers is shipping goods by the cheapest route. This is not always done, and the consequence in many cases is increased cost.

"In addition to the foregoing matters that work a great hindrance to the extension of American trade is the question of terms of credit, in which the American manufacturer demands cash before shipment, a requirement not insisted on by any other country.

"These are some of the general experiences and complaints which I am forced to make, and I should be greatly obliged to the honorable consulate if by some action or report these conditions could be remedied, or at least relieved."

Englishman's Criticism of American Stores Answered

Selfridge's Manager Unjustified in Saying Customers Wait Too Long for Parcels.

A. E. Cowper, one of the important men in the organization of Selfridge & Co., which in turn has, perhaps, the most important department store in London, recently made a visit to the United States. He spent most of his time, of course, in looking over American department stores, and before he departed for England freed himself of some criticism.

"One thing which struck me was the time it takes to complete a purchase and get your goods wrapped and delivered," he said.

"At home we have no bundle wrappers; the clerks wrap the packages, and we find it saves time and mistakes. When a customer has made a purchase and the goods are shipped by carrier or messenger to a distant cash-and-bundle desk, every second she has to wait is magnified to a minute, whereas if the goods are wrapped by the clerk, the customer is getting the full attention of that salesperson, and if a minute or two should be lost, she is seeing the action all the time, and does not feel that she has been lost sight of. In Selfridge's we use cash registers, and we find them great savers of time."

Atlanta merchandise experts do not agree with the English student of store service.

Mr. Cowper, in the opinion of various Atlantans approached on the subject, magnifies the importance of the transactions where the purchases actually are taken away by the buyer.

They remark that while it may be the custom in London for shoppers to carry home their purchases, nine out of ten customers in Atlanta demand delivery by wagon.

At any rate, they say, there is very little delay, and it is much better to free the salespeople from the duty of wrapping packages.

Managers of Atlanta department stores made tests at random to demonstrate that it takes on an average 30 seconds for the delivery of a package and the making of change.

Lucian York, manager of Rich's, says:

"We have a system which we believe is the best yet devised from the viewpoint of the customer, and Selfridge's certainly have nothing to compare with it. We use an 'identification coin.'

Departs at Once.

"Most of our charge customers have their parcels delivered. After the transaction is made the customer merely gives her name and address to the salesperson, shows her identification coin, and departs at once. Even when the customer takes the parcel with her, the wrapper in the stand has it ready in a jiffy. Time records to gauge our wrappers show that on an average they use less than a minute.

"The delivery of packages, after all, is simply a minor matter. What our American people want broadly is service—the right merchandise at the right time at the right price. In English stores customers still are importuned to buy; in fact, in many of the stores it is almost impossible to leave without buying. Fancy such a condition here!

"Again, here we make every effort to get what the customer wants. We anticipate the styles, bring on new models and patterns.

"When the customer purchases these goods she buys them at our risk—if they are not pleasing to her when she gets them home she is at liberty to return them. Here the customer is always right—in England, from what I understand, she is more at the mercy of the storekeeper."

Rome, Ga., Exhibitors Sign Up for Space

Rome, Ga., is crowing over the fact that it made definite plans for a permanent exhibit before Atlanta.

Twelve manufacturers already have signed contracts for space, and nine more are about to do so. It is expected that 4,000 feet of floor space will be used.

Arrangements have been made for a building, and the exhibit will be ready within two months, Louis Spencer, managing director, says.

Included among the exhibitors are a stove works, a machine factory, a foundry, a furniture factory, a trunk factory and a spring bed factory. Some of these lines are duplicated.

Silk Dyers Strike; Feathers Face Bar; Ans.–Use Flowers

Milliners Think That for Once They Can Predict Styles for Fall Well in Advance.

Flowers will be popular on women's hats for fall and winter wear.

In July this is a dangerous prediction. Circumstances, however, make it fairly safe prophecy, in the opinion of C. B. Palmer, of M. Kutz Co., wholesale milliners.

Dame Fashion might take a notion to dictate ribbons. But the silk dyers' strikes in Paterson, N. J., have caused an increase of 20 per cent in the cost of ribbons, and even at these advanced prices, deliveries can not be made. At best, goods can not be promised before August 15 or September 1, and even if the mills reopen, they are likely to be overwhelmed with the orders which have been accumulating.

Feathers, again, might have been Fashion's favorites. But right now there is trouble in Congress over the importation of feathers. The milliners and the Audubon Society are in the throes of a bitter struggle which will decide whether feathers will be admitted at all under the new tariff.

Remain only fur and flowers. For three seasons, velvet and silk flowers have been increasing in popularity on fall and winter hats, and, with the scarcity of other materials, are likely to take the ascendency this fall.

Small hats will rule—that is, smaller than those which have been worn for the past few seasons. Crowns will be round, with turned-up brims, according to Mr. Palmer. What will be the favorite colors, besides the staple blues, browns and black, no one will know until September 1.

The Kutz Co. salesmen started out last Monday to cover the Southern States for fall business.

ARTIFICIAL FUR USED.

Artificial fur will be used to considerable extent this fall and winter both for the trimming of hats and street gowns. The lower cost of these goods and their close approach to the genuine in appearance are big factors in their favor.

The coming of warmer weather has stimulated greatly the movement of wash suits in retail circles. The jackets of some of the better numbers range in length from 32 to 34 inches in the back.

TAFFETA RIBBONS SCARCE.

A scarcity of taffeta ribbons in stock colorings is reported. Pinks, blues and whites are especially hard to get.

DUKE MILLIONS USED TO BUILD HIS HOME STATE

Tobacco King Is Developing Cheap Power All Over Carolinas to Help Cotton Mills.

AIDS YOUNG BUSINESS MEN

Devotes Fund Toward Financing Any Embryonic Operator Who Can Show Knowledge.

CHARLOTTE, July 5.—James B. Duke, tobacco king, is playing the role of godfather to North Carolina.

To make his native State prosperous he has spent $50,000,000 on power plants and a similar amount has gone to aid young business men establish cotton mills. Other States may scoff at Duke, but he is a prophet who is honored in his own country.

A year or two ago Mr. Duke retired as president of the American Tobacco Company. He maintained control of the British-American Tobacco Company, however, and to-day he dominates the tobacco industries of the Old World; but just prior to laying down the reins of the American company Mr. Duke conceived the idea of placing North Carolina in the forefront of the cotton manufacturing States of the Union.

While the cotton acreage of his native State was not nearly so great as that of other sister States, yet he determined that the Southern planter should find a market for his product without being forced to accept prices which are materially lessened by excessive freight rates demanded to land it in the New England mills.

Rivals of New England.

North and South Carolina were both likely places, in his opinion, for a chain of cotton mills as well equipped as those of New England. It is only a short haul from there to Norfolk and Newport News, where trans-Atlantic steamships touch going and coming, thus easily solving the problem of export facilities.

Then, too, should the mills grow in volume their owners could far outstrip their New England competitors in bidding for the raw product from neighboring States for the same reason that, with a lower freight rate to reckon with, they could pay the planter and broker better prices.

Knowing every nook and corner of his native State by heart, Mr. Duke awoke to the realization that millions upon millions of horsepower in her many waterways was going to waste. Once harness these streams and erect power plants at central points and it would be an easy matter to generate and diffuse sufficient power to turn the spindles of every cotton mill in the two States, as well as to light every municipality, the homes and business places of those dwelling within their confines, and at the same time to supply the motive power for every street railway line in the two States.

The result was cheap power and light for every county in North Carolina.

The demand for the product from the cotton plants soon became so compelling that within a few years the horsepower was doubled and then some.

Millions for Young.

Making Charlotte his central headquarters when not at the farm of his birth, near Durham, he let it be known that he was ready, willing and eager to help any and all deserving, energetic and capable persons who desired to join hands with him in making the Old North State one of the foremost cotton manufacturing centers of the Union.

The formal announcement was made that a fund of $50,000,000 was available for the establishment of cotton mills at likely and well-selected points. The money would be forthcoming at an instant's notice, provided the person could convince those in charge of it that he had a thorough knowledge of the business, was energetic, faithful and industrious and possessed sufficient money of his own to make it worth his while to strive for the success of the enterprise and stick to business.

Scores of young men who grew up in the cotton mill business, but whose chances of owning a mill of their own were remote in the extreme, were quick to benefit by the offer of their native State's wealthiest son.

Plunges Off Fourth Story; Spike Hooks In His Pants; Saved

Thrown by Falling Plank, Man Hangs Head Downward Until His Rescuers Arrive.

LOS ANGELES, July 5.—W. E. Duffessy, a workman employed in the construction of the new Braley Building at Pasadena, owes his life to the strength of his overalls, which prevented him from being hurled from the fourth story of the building.

Duffessy was struck on the head by a plank dropped by a workman on the floor above him. He was thrown down the improvised elevator shaft headfirst, but after falling to the third floor his overalls caught on a protruding spike and held him steadfast.

He remained in this position with his head down until several workmen who witnessed the accident hurriedly made their way, with the aid of a rope, to where he was hanging and hauled him to a place of safety.

Champ Clark Moves As Rent Goes Up $50

Speaker's Action Starts Rebellion of Washington Tenants of High-Priced Apartments for Better Rates.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—They raised the rent $50 a month on Speaker Champ Clark for his spacious apartments on the Avenue of the Presidents, in the heart of official Washington some time ago.

To-day the Speaker moved to a new apartment in Congress Hall Hotel. This hotel is very near the Capitol, and the Speaker will save not only in the matter of rent, but car fare as well.

The Speaker pulled off his coat to-day, took a holiday from his official duties, and personally superintended the removal of his Lares and Penates. Washingtonians, in danger of having their rent raised, have taken heart from his distinguished example and a rebellion of tenants is in sight.

Chicago Banker Also Says "Better be Poor in Purse Than Poor In Soul."

DE KALB, ILL., July 5.—David R. Forgan, president of the National City Bank of Chicago, delivered the address at the commencement exercises of the Northern Illinois State Normal School.

"There are three things which I would have each student know," he said. "First, how to write a legible hand; second, how to add, subtract and multiply; third, how to compose properly an application for a position.

"This is an age of specialization, and there should be more schools for vocational and industrial training. Build character. Better be poor in purse than poor in soul."

The school graduated 125.

LOS ANGELES, July 5.—A simple little ceremony yesterday afternoon in the chapel of the Paulist Fathers in California Street united in marriage Police Lieutenant Joseph F. Stuger and Miss Aileen Shaw.

It marked the culmination of a romance which started a month ago, when Miss Shaw cast aside her woman's garments, dressed like a man, assumed the name of Herbert Emery and got a job as elevator boy in the Hotel Alma.

Up to this time the romance was simply adventure. But Tuesday night Stuger stepped in, had her arrested inadvertently and then fell in love with her.

CINCINNATI, July 5.—After hearing the report of Park Superintendent Hodgkinson on the park dance halls of Cleveland, the members of the Park Board decided to give the idea a trial as soon as the bonds, recently issued, could be sold. Hodgkinson said the city of Cleveland cleared a profit of $2,500 on two park dance halls last year, charging 3 cents a couple for admission.

Numerous cases of vandalism at playgrounds were reported by the Superintendent, and the board declared that the grounds would have to be closed unless proper protection is given the equipment.

PASTOR MAKES MATCH-MAKING SPECIAL WORK

Keeps House for Aged on Fees He Collects for Performing Marriage Ceremonies.

SCOPE IS NATION-WIDE

East Needs Husbands, While West Wants Wives, Is Experience of Minister.

OMAHA, July 5.—"Here's a man worth $200,000 and he wants a wife," says the Rev. Charles W. Savidge, of Omaha. "He's a big cattle man, and last fall when he sent his range cattle to market he cleaned up $19,000. He is 50 years old, never has been married and is a man of good character. I won't make his name and address public, but when I find a woman who I think will suit him I'll send her name to him. He tells me he has never had an opportunity of becoming acquainted with the right sort, so he has asked me to find him a wife."

Mr. Savidge's fame as a matchmaker has spread far, and so many people write him for mates that he has been compelled to hire a special stenographer to take care of his correspondence. Rarely does a day pass that he has not united from two to five couples. All his marriage fees go to support a home for aged men and women which he established and maintains in this manner." At present there are about 35 inmates in his "House of Hope." None is ever asked to pay board.

Dane Seeks Matrimony.

"Here's another fellow wants a wife," he continued. "This man is 24 years old, a Dane by birth, owns a big farm and is worth about $25,000. He says he doesn't know which way to turn for a wife, so he has asked me to find one for him.

"A third one, an American, 33 years old, a rancher in Western Nebraska, and worth $35,000, is in the same predicament. He's a bachelor—but not an old one. Says he wants a wife who likes ranch life, and that she will not be asked to take part in the roundup."

Recently Mr. Savidge was called to the Rosebud country in South Dakota to lecture a bunch of ranchmen and homesteaders on the art of getting married. The ranchers paid the expenses of his trip. He took for his subject, "Have You Found Your Running Mate?" After his talk a big delegation of ranchers followed him to the hotel for a more intimate talk. They wanted to keep him right there until they were all supplied with wives. He placed them in correspondence with a number of women who had asked Mr. Savidge to get husbands for them.

Men in Biggest Demand.

"That South Dakota bunch certainly did want wives," says Mr. Savidge. "They almost wanted to hold me as a hostage, but I furnished them the names and addresses of a couple of dozen women who have written me to get husbands for them. When they finish with their courting and get ready for the ceremony I'm going back to tie them together.

"Far more women are seeking husbands than there are men seeking wives," says Mr. Savidge.

"Every day brings me letters from women—from here, there and yonder. Most of the requests for husbands come from back East, while most men who want wives live in Western States.

"Here is a request from a man who evidently needs someone to look out for him. He's a working man and has not much money, but there is $3,500 in the hands of a trustee, who has instructions to build a house with the money and deed it to the man's wife when he gets one. The money was left by his father. He lives in a small Nebraska town.

"Here's a doctor in a Missouri River city. He has a fine home and $6,000 in cash in the bank. He owns a farm of 225 acres about 70 miles from New York City and he goes down there every summer for a few weeks. He is 52 years old.

"Then here is a German, 50 years old, worth $30,000, with two Nebraska farms and several houses in a Nebraska town.

"An Omaha widow, aged 35, dark hair and eyes, with a splendid home, well furnished and complete, desires a husband, and none of the men of her acquaintance seems to suit her. So she has asked me to find her one.

"A St. Louis school teacher, with her own home, wants a husband. Says she is tired of waiting for some St. Louis man to propose. She is 32 years old and weighs about 120 pounds. Likewise a Colorado school teacher, 40 years old, good housekeeper, says she wants an Eastern husband.

"Here's a nice little telephone operator who has grown tired of answering 'hello' calls. She is slender and dark and 21 years old. I'll bet I can find her a husband in a week."

Mr. Savidge has performed the wedding ceremony for more than 6,000 applicants.

EXPERT FINDS A TARIFF BOARD ALREADY IN U. S.

Dr. Baldwin Declares Department of Commerce Is Required to Make Investigations.

NO OTHER BODY IS NEEDED

Special Agents Both at Home and Abroad Gather All Facts That Bear on Trade.

By VICTOR ELLIOTT.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—Interest never seems to die in the vexed question as to whether or not there should be a Federal tariff board for the collecting of information relative to all aspects of the industrial activities of the United States having any effect whatsoever on the tariff. Former President Taft was a strong supporter of the tariff board idea and there are many members of both houses of Congress who believe that such a board is the surest way of solving tariff difficulties. Arguments have rotated about this proposition for several years.

And all this time the Government has had a tariff board to all intents and purposes, although it seems to have been in complete ignorance of the fact. Dr. A. H. Baldwin, Chief of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce, has discovered the tariff board.

The Department of Commerce, says Dr. Baldwin, is a tariff board. The law which created the Department of Commerce and Labor gave it authority to initiate and conduct all such investigations as are proposed should be conducted by a specially designated tariff board.

Direct Law on Subject.

A clause of the law charges the Bureau of Labor, one of the subsidiary offices of the Department of Labor which formerly was a part of the Department of Commerce and Labor, with the duty of ascertaining "at as early a date as possible and whenever industrial changes should make it essential, the cost of producing articles at the time dutiable in the United States, in leading countries where such articles are produced." In a dozen other parts of the bill there are specific directions that the department shall do everything that the proposed and at one time extant tariff board is expected to do.

A tariff board existed under the Taft administration, but determined opposition resulted in the board's final dismissal. A significant fact connected with the activities of the tariff board is that when it began its work the board applied to the Department of Commerce and Labor for experts. The Department of Commerce and Labor had been making examinations along the lines prescribed in the organic act and had a great deal of material on hand. This material was of great assistance to the tariff board in making its investigations.

When the act creating the Department of Labor as an executive department of the Government was passed the greater part of this tariff and industrial work fell to the bureaus included under the supervision of the Department of Commerce. The Bureau of Labor, however, still is conducting investigations.

Agents Investigate.

The Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce carries on the greater part of this work. It has agents all over the United States collecting data. These men go into the manufacturing districts and make a critical analysis of the state of affairs.

So with all these figures in hand it is possible to make the nicest calculations as to what effect changes in the tariff will have upon the industries.

The Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce also sends agents abroad. These men make the same general sort of study of foreign industrial conditions that are made in this country. Then it is easy to figure out how much of the trade of American manufacturers would be taken away from them as the result of a lower tariff.

These are in effect the functions of a tariff board, and as they are being performed by bureaus and departments already established, there is doubt in Dr. Baldwin's mind as to the wisdom of constituting a tariff board in addition.

'Most Beautiful Child' Coming Miss Blitz Will Visit Atlanta To Pose Before Famous Artists

Prize picture of prize child beauty, Theresa Marie Blitz. This picture has been exhibited in nineteen conventions of photographers and awarded fifteen first prizes.

Little Topeka Girl Will Visit Principal Cities of Country and Will Be Given Trip to Paris.

TOPEKA, KANS., July 5.—Atlanta will see the nation's most beautiful child, so proclaimed by photographers of the United States at practically all their exhibits, when 6-year-old Theresa Marie Blitz reaches the Georgia capital on her tour of the United States, which will later extend to Paris. She leaves her Topeka home to-day and will return in time to celebrate her seventh birthday.

Little Miss Blitz was declared to possess the most perfect features and figure of any child in the country by the Boston Art League. She won the distinction in a contest with 2,000 others from all States of the nation.

The elements which decided the art league in her case were: "Soft, wavy, dark-brown hair; big, wistful, wishful blue eyes, with the memory of dreams lurking in them; delicately molded lips and white transparent skin, with a touch of pink showing through."

She is not yet seven. Her weight is 55 pounds. Standing in her slippers she is 51 inches in height. A tape line drawn around her arm at the armpit over one thickness of light summer wear registers 9 inches. Wrist, 5 1-2 inches; thigh, 16 inches; calf, 10 inches; ankle, 7 inches.

After her tour of the big cities of this country and a visit to Paris she will return in time to celebrate her seventh birthday, November 18. Theresa has great love for flowers and music and bird life. She knows many flowers by name.

Little Theresa's mother died when the child was eight months old. She was a beautiful woman and possessed all the charms and graces so fully reflected in the figures and features of the daughter.

Theresa will spend two weeks each in Kansas City, St. Louis, Chicago, Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Atlanta and Norfolk. The trip to Paris will be made in five weeks. In New York and Philadelphia oil paintings will be made of her.

Film of Princess in Low-Cut Gown Burned

Queen Mary Orders Cinema Company to Destroy Work That Cost $25,000—She Pays $185.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, July 5.—Queen Mary has ordered the Cinema Company to burn the films of pictures it made recently by special permission of the King and Queen, showing Princess Mary and the two children of Sir Derek and Lady Keppel at tea in Buckingham Palace grounds.

Her reason is that the Princess Mary appeared in the pictures in a low-cut frock.

The Queen will pay the cost of the films, $185, but the Cinema Company is out at least $25,000.

BRIDE GIVES WEDDING RING TO SAVE HUSBAND FROM JAIL

LIMA, OHIO, July 5.—Mrs. Lewis Kitchen, a telephone operator who recently became a bride, saved a Toledo railroad conductor, her husband, from being taken to jail by surrendering her wedding ring after their honeymoon had been halted by a Constable.

Ban on Gum; Pretty Chicago Co-Eds Pout

"Blind Pigs" Started by Girls to Prove Their Independence of Rules.

CHICAGO, July 5.—Co-eds at the University of Chicago were inclined to-day to pout at a new order which, in effect, places the ban on chewing gum. They don't want the gum so much, but many of them regard the order as an undue infringement of personal rights.

There was a rumor that several "blind pigs" where the chicle product may be obtained were already in operation in co-ed dormitories.

"GOOD FELLOW MAYOR" PUTS LID ON IN WISCONSIN TOWN

LA CROSSE, WIS., July 5.—When Ori J. Sorenson, known during his first term as the "Good Fellow Mayor," was re-elected after a term held by the opposition, the more liberal minded citizens agreed that good times were coming.

Since his election he has been adjusting the screws on a "lid" the like of which La Crosse never saw before. The stopping of baseball pools is his latest.

BATTLE OF LOVE ON FIELD OF GETTYSBURG IS CLOSED; EACH SIDE HAILED AS VICTOR

Martial Spirit of Old Soldiers of Both Blue and Gray Exceeded Only by Sincere Warmth of Affection for Their Former Foes.

VETERANS BEAR HEAT WITH THEIR WARTIME FORTITUDE

General Sickles, of Union Army, and General Young, of the Confederacy, Greeted by Warriors They Led and Fought at Scene of the Reunion.

GETTYSBURG, PA., July 5.—The tumult and the shouting died for the second time on Gettysburg, and the battlefield again has figured in world history. For no less memorable than the hostile conflict of the armies of Lee and Meade in '63 was the friendly meeting between the meager remnants of the same armies which, lasting four days, is at an end to-day.

Voices have been raised in the name of peace and reconciliation during all the half century since Appomatox, but they have always remained merely unrealized appeals—until this last week, the semi-centennial of the greatest battle of the greatest war ever fought between brothers.

And now peace reigns, love reigns at last over the broad, rolling stretches of Gettysburg, where for fifty years has hovered a recollection of crashing terror of sectional hatred, of thirst for blood.

Affection of Veterans Sincere.

The reunion of the veterans of the Union and of the Confederacy has been the sincerest and most effective step ever taken for the reconciliation of the North and the South—this is so by common consent of the veterans themselves, of younger representatives of the two sections, and of expressions which have come from over the nation.

Yesterday it was proved so, when a pathetic but brave spectacle was staged. The white-haired men of the Union army were deployed, as nearly as could be calculated, in the positions they occupied the great third day of the battle at Bloody Angle. They stood there, proud in the forgetfulness of their years, oblivious of the terrific heat, oblivious of everything around them, with eyes seeing only the brave, strong day fifty years before, when they waited on the same spot for the enemy.

The feeble gray army, also, was placed in battle order. They, too, were exultant, eager, powerless to stifle the rebel yell that bubbled out of their souls.

The command was given to charge. The rebel yell came sharp and clear. The gray army started toward the blue line. Its charge did not have the force and nerve that impelled it fifty years ago. Instead, many of the veterans stumbled in their course, some of them fell. The advancing line became ragged, where the younger veterans, eager, outdistanced more feeble comrades. But the spirit of '63 was there.

Clasp Hands at Bloody Angle.

Years rolled back, and the echoes of cannonade, the sight of the all-pervading smoke film, the choking scent of that smoke, the thrill of battle and of youth—all were revived.

The gray army advanced to the Bloody Angle. The blue army braced itself for the shock, as they well knew how to do. The two lines came together.

As they met, the rebel yell became a laugh, the tense faces of the blue veterans melted. Blue and gray clasped hands and were friends. The old men were not ashamed of their frank arms that went out and around the shoulders of their enemies of fifty years ago—comrades now—nor of the tears. Nor were any of the thousands of spectators ashamed of the demonstration in which they joined impulsively.

All that was spectacular. Yet it was not exceptional in revealing the spirit that prompted the entire reunion. Since last Tuesday everywhere has been exhibited friendliness and reconciliation. More than 50,000 veterans were present, sleeping together, tenting together on the old camp ground, telling endless stories, pointing out spots here and there where they saw men die—but always smiling, always shaking hands, always jolly.

G. A. R. Outnumbers U. C. V.

Of those who attended the reunion of the two armies, little more than one-fourth were soldiers of the Confederacy. The others were G. A. R. men, who, with less distance to travel, naturally were present in greater numbers.

The trip was trying, with the heat and with little inevitable discomforts that the old men would not have noticed 50 years ago, but which now were fraught with danger. There was tragedy in the sight of the feeble veterans fighting vainly against heat and exhaustion. There was real tragedy when a dozen or more succumbed and died on the same field where they escaped shot and shell.

The first two days of the reunion were almost unbearable with their heat, and the suffering was great. But a cooling storm blew up the third day, rendering pleasant enough the reunion weather.

Old Soldiers Sit Up All Night to Tell Stories, and Everyone's a Good Listener.

The veterans exulted in that storm. They were in snug tents, and they were soldiers. When the storm began to rage, they fastened the flaps of their tents as they had learned to do so well. With all the heavy wind not a tent was blown over, nor even were the lashings loosened.

Conversation Never Lags.

Within the tents there was always conversation. Not even in the dead of the night did it cease. The talk was of charges and of retreats, of maneuvers that have become more and more heroic now that the years have passed—but mostly, as is the way of veterans the world over, of personal prowess and adventure.

Camp fires were lighted in rows that stretched for miles and miles along the streets between the tents. Around them men sat, talking. Under the tents men lay on the cots, talking. There was little sleep, especially the first two nights, but voices everywhere through the night. Voices that were steady and numerous, with a sort of staccato effect that came with the intermittent puffing of thousand of corncob pipes.

Every veteran was his own best listener. Naturally, with everybody talking.

There was so much to tell, so many deeds of valor, so many heroes, so many beloved leaders who now are demigods.

Some of the leaders were present. Most spectacular and attractive figure, perhaps, was General Daniel E Sickles, of New York, the sole surviving corps commander of the Union army who participated in the battle of Gettysburg.

Every day of the four saw a stream of visitors to his quarters, men who cried like babies as they shook his hands, and who had a hundred stories to tell him. The old general cried himself, and at one time was ordered kept from the visitors. More than 3,000 men, it is estimated, came to see him and to shake his hand on the first day of the reunion, and he held a veritable court as he sat in an armchair on the porch of the Rodgers home, a battlefield landmark.

Young Leaders Scorn Beds.

Others of the leaders, younger and more vigorous than the aged Federal, scorned the proffered beds and snug chambers that had been reserved for them, choosing instead the tents and cots of their comrades. One of these men was General A. J. West, of Georgia, who later was presented with a loving cup by the men of his State.

Another was General Felix H. Robertson, of Texas, who throughout the period of reunion was a resplendent figure in his gold-braided uniform of a Confederate general. His chief glory was the fact that he had been at Fort Sumter when the first gun of the war was fired.

General Bennet H. Young, of Louisville, commander-in-chief of the United Confederate Veterans, was another hero. When he addressed the reunion crowd the first day, his own gray veterans greeted him with a lusty rebel yell that was rivaled in vigor by the sincere cheer which came from the Union veterans.

Confederate generals present were Robertson, Texas; West, Georgi., Shaffer, Louisiana; A. D Williams, Florida; Law, Florida, and Carr, North Carolina.

Mrs. H. D. Longstreet, of Gainesville, Ga., widow of the great Confederate leader, was here and was always the center of a reverent crowd. Many men who fought under her husband followed her day after day, telling of incidents that occurred during the war.

The first night at the battlefield she could find no quarters. Everything was reserved, and she was forced to sleep on the floor of a farmhouse. The next morning, however, she found that a tent had been reserved for her by General Sickles.

She went to the pump of a farmhouse to get a drink of water, and there met an old soldier. She asked him under whom he fought, and he, ignorant of her identity, replied, "Longstreet."

"And are you glad or sorry that the war ended as it did?" she asked him.

"I am glad," he said, emphatically, "so far as the war itself is concerned, but not for the reconstruction days. You may be a Northern woman, and if you are, you can't imagine what we went through—not in the war, when the soldiers fought us, but in the days afterward, when the politicians governed us. But I'm glad the war ended in a united nation."

Wore Badge of Union.

Mrs. Longstreet saw everywhere examples of the reconciliation that the Gettysburg meeting has brought about. She met a soldier wearing a gray suit but decked with a badge marked Fifth Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry. She asked him why he, a Union man, should wear a gray suit.

"Me?" he said, surprised. "I am not a Yankee. I fought under Longstreet, and I'm from Mississippi."

"Why do you wear that badge, then?" she asked.

"Why," he said, "a Yank came along to-day from the Fifth Pennsylvania and asked me of I'd trade badges with him, after we'd had a talk and found out where we were at Gettysburg. So we traded. He's wearing my badge now—Fifteenth Mississippi. Says he'll keep it as long as he lives."

Reconciliation is sincere. There was even talk during the four days of an amalgamation of the United Confederate Veterans and the Grand Army of the Republic under the name, "The United Veterans of the United States."

One correspondent, writing to a New York paper, said of the proposition:

"The Confederates are wild for it. It isn't good merely good-natured talk; they mean it."

Individual reunions between veterans of the North and South were numerous. Numbers of them found that they fought almost face to face in the conflict at Bloody Angle, scores recalling incidents of personal combat. Over every such discovery there were handclasps and assurances of friendship.

Mrs. Longstreet was not the only woman prominent in the reunion crowds. General A. P. Hill started the battle of Gettysburg. His daughter, Mrs. Lucy Lee Hill MacGill, was here to lead a genuine rebel yell for Governor Tener of Pennsylvania, leading it with a will. She beckoned the Confederate veterans to their feet, and they cheered, standing. The Union men listened, hardly able to restrain themselves, and cheered wildly for several minutes when the gray veterans sank into their seats.

Old Nurses Open Hospital.

A band of devoted women were the survivors of the corps of nurses who served during the battle. Mrs. Salome Stewart, leader of the band, was here to open the old hospital. Others of her staff present were Mrs. Charles F. Dye and Miss Cornelia Hancock, of Philadelphia; Miss Margaret Hamilton, Wakefield, Conn.; Mrs. Mary Stevens, Peabody, Conn.; Mrs. Annie Irving, Newburg; Mrs. Helen Cole, Sheboygan, Wis. Women of the families of General Meade, General Pickett and General Hill were present, too.

Women sang the old songs and the old hymns, and never were there tenderer moments during the reunion than when they sang with broken voices. They were schoolgirls and the sweethearts of soldiers 50 years ago, and every speech made during the reunion bore a reverent tribute to them. Many of the women present had heard the roll and thunder of the battle, and had lived through the tense moments that came during the week of 1863 after Pettigrew's men had discovered Buford's cavalry in the little town and after General A. P. Hill ordered the first movement of the battle.

There were reunions between survivors of Buford's division of Meade's army, and Wheeler's division of Lee's, and, at the Bloody Angle, between Meredith's Iron Brigade and Pettigrew's men. It was these latter, according to the history of the fight, who saw the fiercest struggle.

Not in all the story of the reunion is there the breath of an unpleasantness among the veterans. A serious fight occurred the second day of the meeting, when seven men were stabbed. The fight, however, was precipitated by several young men who, abusing Abraham Lincoln, aroused the anger of a Union veteran. None of the seven injured was a veteran.

But among the veterans of the two armies there was only friendship and serenity. Blue and Gray swapped coffee and tobacco, just as they had done during the war, swapped reminiscences, and, most of all, traded assurances of having forgiven and forgotten the bitterness and the struggle of half a century ago.

President Follows Lincoln.

Tuesday of the reunion was Veterans' Day, given over to a great meeting of all the old soldiers, with addresses by representatives of both sides. Wednesday was Military Day, when younger soldiers were on display. Thursday was Civic Day, when Governors of States, representatives of the national government, and other civil authorities made addresses. Friday was National Day, marked by the address of President Wilson.

The President spoke only briefly, as had his great predecessor, Lincoln. The speech was one in which breathed the spirit of a united nation, with scars all healed and differences forgotten. A wonderful demonstration marked its delivery.

Governors of States present were Sulzer, New York; Mann, Virginia; McGovern, Wisconsin; Clarke, Iowa; Ralston, Indiana; Hanna, North Dakota.

Governor Mann's arrival was marked by the most splendid reception of the reunion, given by men of Virginia who were here. The Virginians, about 3,000 in number, were the most enthusiastic of the reunion crowd. Prominent men of Virginia were here, many of whom were too young to take part in the great fight.

Virginia camped within a stone's throw of Seminary Ridge. Every night its camp fires blazed near the wall over which the cannons point to-day as they did fifty years ago.

Every night the veterans sang the old war songs through, and repeated on the chorus. The entire encampment of the Gray veterans in the valley below the ridge joined in, until a chorus resounded that was thundering even in the vast spaces of the battlefield.

The songs were more and more exultant as the evening wore on. Now and then the rebel yell punctuated the melody. The sound spread to the Blue army, and was there augmented by the voices of the Union veterans until the battlefield became each night a vast theater for the recrudescence of the most wonderful martial spirit of all ages.

Few Sordid Spots.

And so the reunion was held, a great demonstration of peace and reconciliation. A few unpleasant notes were struck—the tragedy in the deaths, the sordidness of pickpockets, the debate that was really bitter at times over whether the barrooms should be closed. But these features were insignificant, and were lost in the great swell of enthusiasm and affection toward all the world.

$15,000 HOUSE FOR CATS ONLY BEING ERECTED

Apartments to Have Janitor, Heat and Clam Chowder for Woman's Fifty-three Pets.

NEW YORK, July 5.—A $15,000 apartment house for cats, with janitor service, hot and cold clam chowder in every bedroom, a catnip bed on each fire escape and ample fence room for nocturnal promenading is the latest building note to come from Greenwich, Conn.

Mrs. Clifford Harmon, wife of the wealthy amateur aviator, and daughter of Commodore E. C. Benedict, has broken ground on the Benedict estate, outside of the Connecticut suburb, and before the summer is past Mrs. Harmon's 28 cats and 25 blooded kittens will be enjoying the dizziest high cat life in America.

Each of the nineteen rooms in the new establishment will be assigned to one cat family and only the heads of the various households will be provided with latch keys. Hardwood floors, hot water heat, vacuum cleaners, with wall socket attachments, and built-in cradles for kittens, will be among the appointments provided by the careful architect.

Quite modest in contrast with the $15,000 cattery will be the adjoining cottages, erected to accommodate Mrs. F. Y. Mathies, the cat expert who is to be employed as a permanent chaperon for Mrs. Harmon's cats.

BALD PATE USED TO SHOW HE IS PLUCKED CLEAN

Husband Tells Court His Wife Made Him Cook and Then Complained of Smoke.

NEW YORK, July 5.—Benjamin F. Frisbie, a St. Nicholas Avenue real estate operator, wrote of his marital experience that he had "been plucked clean, not a feather left on him," and his bald head in the Supreme Court yesterday seemed to bear out his statement. He testified in his own defense against his wife's plea for a separation. Justice Blanchard reserved decision.

Mrs. Frisbie objected to "the names" her husband called her and he didn't like her neglect of household duties. She complained that "he would break the heart of a wheelbarrow" and he said she made him cook his own steak for dinner and do other household tasks.

"Didn't your wife lend a hand at cooking the steak?" he was asked.

"She only sat down and complained about the smoke I made," he answered.

Mrs. Frisbie said after she separated from her husband he hired a house girl "about three feet" from her home. He never spoke to her, but whenever he paid her alimony he announced it so she and their neighbors could hear.

Mrs. Frisbie inherited about $10,000 from relatives. Frisbie owns many houses.

PANAMA-PACIFIC FAIR IS SURE TO OPEN ON TIME

Promise Made One Year Ago Now Certain of Realization—Work Far Advanced.

The Panama-Pacific International Exposition will open on time! More than one year ago this promise was made. To-day its realization is certain.

When the great gates swing wide February 20, 1915, the grounds will be in order, the vast buildings completed, the exhibits installed, the amusement features in operation, every detail of the colossal enterprise perfected. This is not only a conviction of the present; it will be the pride of the future.

Five of the largest and most important of the thirteen exhibit palaces are now under construction. Machinery Hall, the largest wooden building in the world, and the palaces devoted to education, food products, agriculture and liberal arts.

Construction Work Finished.

The construction work incident to the planning of the exposition may be said to be finished. The design of the Administration Tower, or colossal Tower Gate, the dominating feature of the architectural scheme, is selected and approved. Artistic conception for courts, groups of statuary, fountains, columns, arches and ornamental details have been evolved by the world's masters, all of which have commissioned and many modeled. The color scheme by the famous painter, Jules Guerin, is fully wrought out. The engineering mechanism and marvelous effects of the illumination are already prepared. All the remaining exhibit palaces have been designed, and will be under construction by time-limit contracts before the end of July. More than 116 congresses and conventions have been secured. The Service Building on the grounds is completed and occupied. In this, and in the large office building in the city the drilled and classified forces of the executive divisions are at work. The whole great plan moves forward rapidly, surely, orderly, to the certain fulfillment of its beneficent purpose, an exposition unrivaled in the history of the world.

That the exposition will be international in character is also assured. Official acceptances of the invitation of the United States to participate has been received from twenty-seven nations. From the Orient will come China and Japan. From the South American Continent, Bolivia, Ecuador, Peru, Uruguay, Argentine Republic, Chile and Brazil. From Europe, France, Holland, Portugal, Sweden, Spain and Denmark will send exhibits. Cuba, Costa Rica, Canada, Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Liberia, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Salvador will be represented by the order and appropriation of their respective governments.

Two great European commercial nations have not yet sent their official acceptances, owing to considerations of space. But it is confidently anticipated that every commercial nation of the world whose trades will be affected by the opening of the Panama Canal will appreciate the opportunity afforded and officially exhibit its resources. In addition to this, private exhibitors will come from all parts of the civilized globe. The largest appropriation so far made by a foreign country is $600,000, by Japan.

25 States Represented.

The States and Territories of the United States have responded promptly and generously, and there is no doubt that every one will be represented. Already 35 have made appropriations and selected sites, as follows:

Arizona, Colorado, Hawaii, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Jersey, New Mexico, New York, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, Pennsylvania, the Philippines, Porto Rico, Wisconsin. The largest appropriation made by any State is $700,000, by the State of New York. Appropriations by 17 States aggregate $2,600,000. Large displays also will be made independently by commercial bodies from many of the States and large cities.

Applications for exhibit space are overwhelming, and it would be possible at this date to allot available area. Many of these exhibits will be costly, involving an expenditure of from $250,000 to $300,000.

Applications for amusement concessions have been received from all parts of the world, and the management is confronted only with the important task of selecting the most moral and entertaining. So far more than 6,000 applications have been received. Only 75 have been granted, but these involve an expenditure of $350,000. The total estimated outlay on concessions is placed at $10,000,000 to $12,000,000, and it is computed that 7,000 persons will be employed in the 65-acre district devoted to amusements.

Based upon a review of all departments, and by comparison with other world's fairs of lesser magnitude, the comptroller of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition estimates that its initial cost will exceed $80,000,000, exclusive of the intrinsic wealth represented in the exhibits.

Wife Tires of Tent; Seeks Her Freedom

Woman Agreed to Live Twelve Months Under Canvas, but After Six Years Institutes Suit.

INDIANAPOLIS, July 5.—The novelty of six years' life in a tent on a lot on Tecumseh Street, near St. Clair Street, has worn off for Mrs. Clara J. Buck and she filed a suit for divorce from Leland N. Buck, who is alleged to have compelled her to live in the tent.

According to her attorney, John P. Leyendecker, Mrs. Buck consented to live in the tent the first summer of her married life with Buck. When the summer ended Buck is said to have made no effort to move from the tent into a house and, when his wife remonstrated, he told her to move if she desired, but he intended to remain in the tent. Leyendecker says they have had several tents in the six years.

White House Betrothel Gives Society a Thrill

Democrats Sure to Revive Days of 'Alice Blue'

Washington Fashionables Now Look for the End of Rigid Simplicity.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—Announcement of the betrothal of Miss Jessie Woodrow Wilson, second daughter of the President, to Francis Bowes Sayre, a young lawyer of Lancaster, Pa., has given Washington society a stimulus that the fashionables sadly needed through the long summer months and the unending sessions of Congress on the tariff measure.

In fashionable Washington, the announcement that it was to be a White House wedding in November gave another flurry. White House weddings have always been a relief to the semi-formal round of social pleasures at the Capital. The wedding of Alice Roosevent and Representative Nicholas Longworth is still vividly and pleasantly remembered by Washington society.

May Unbend Simplicity.

By some it is believed that the wedding will mean the unbending to an extent of the rigid simplicity in social things so strictly adhered to since the Democrats took charge of the Government and the nuptials are thereby doubly hailed by the society leaders. It is pointed out that while President Wilson could himself easily forego the pleasures of the inaugural ball and while Secretary Bryan could deprive himself of wines at his own festive feasts, it is hardly likely that Miss Wilson will wish the same simplicity to extend to her nuptials. It is entirely likely that she will wish the same sort of elaborate affair that other White House brides have had.

On the other hand, it is pointed out that Miss Roosevelt had entered extensively into the gayeties of Washington society, while Miss Wilson has gone out comparatively little. She is a deep student, tremendously interested in politics and in household affairs.

Her fiance, it is understood, while a man of considerable personal fortune, is also of studious habits and is active in his work of becoming an assistant in the office of District Attorney Whitman of New York.

Democracy Sure to Celebrate.

But the wedding is sure to revive the days when Alice blue was the prevailing color of fashionable gowns and when presents arrived at the White House in carloads. Democracy is sure to celebrate the event. There have been but two Democratic Presidents since the war between the States, Cleveland and Wilson. Cleveland became a husband in the White House, while the first of President Wilson's daughters will wed there.

While close friends of both families have known of the engagement for some time, announcement was withheld until the first anniversary of Mr. Wilson's nomination at the Baltimore convention.

White House officials accompanied the brief announcement with a biography of Mr. Sayre. He is 28 years of age, and after preparing at the Hill School at Pottstown, Pa., and Lawrenceville, N. J., graduated from Williams College in 1909. He was manager of the football team there, valedictorian of his class, and interested in Y. M. C. A. work.

Spent Summers as Missionary.

He spent two summers with Dr Alfred T. Grenfell in his missionary work on the coast of Labrador and studied law at Harvard Law School, where he graduated last year, "cum laude." He has traveled extensively during his vacations, spending last summer in Alaska and Northern Siberia.

Mr. Sayre comes from a collegiate family. His father was the late Robert Heysham Sayre, for a long time president of the board of trustees of Lehigh University, and builder of the Lehigh Valley Railroad. His mother was Martha Finley Nevin, a daughter of John Williamson Nevin, theologian, and president of Franklin and Marshall College at Lancaster, Pa. She is descended from Hugh Williamson of North Carolina, one of the framers of the constitution.

She is a sister of Robert J. Nevin, head of the American Church of Rome, Italy, and a first cousin of Ethelbert Nevin, the composer.

Miss Wilson is 24 years of age, and was educated at Goucher College, Baltimore, and specialized in political science. She has done much settlement work in Philadelphia, and has been actively identified with the Y. W. C. A., having recently made many speeches in its behalf.

NURSE WHO WED TO SAVE MAN'S LIFE SUES HIM

But Woman Who Repents Action Is Denied a Divorce Decree by Court.

LOS ANGELES, July 5—Which? Marriage and the saving of a human life or refusal and the moral responsibility of its loss?

This was the question Mrs. Dorothy Lander, a pretty 20-year-old nurse, faced in the operating room of the Clara Barton Hospital when she agreed to become the wife of Kirk C. Lander, from whom she now seeks her liberty.

She testified in Judge Monroe's court that she married Lander to save his life.

This strange romance was revealed by the young woman as a witness in her own behalf. Her husband, she said, was a patient at the Clara Barton Hospital. She was his nurse and had attended him for ten days.

He suffered a relapse and an operation was declared by the attending physicians to be necessary to save his life. He was placed upon the operating table, but refused to submit to the operation until he had seen his nurse.

When she appeared, he told her that he loved her—that life without her was not worth living. If she promised to marry him he would submit to the operation necessary to save his life, he said, and if she refused he would die.

The operation was successful and two days later the couple were married. Mrs. Lander sought a divorce on the grounds of non-support, although she admitted that she had never lived with her husband, who contested the action.

Judge Monroe held that the young woman had failed to make out a case legally. Mrs. Lander was heartbroken when the court denied the decree.

No Angles in Houses On City Corner Lots

Superintendent of Street Paving Set the Fashion and Contractors Follow.

CONWAY, ARK., July 5.—A paving contractor thrust fame upon this place, the home town of former Governor G. W. Donaghey, but Conway folk did not realize it until visitors told them.

A year ago Conway bought concrete walks for the entire town. The man who superintended the delivery did not like angles, so he made every street corner a curve. There is not a right angle in the entire system of walks.

Conway builders caught the idea, and those who have erected houses on corner lots since the curves were introduced have set them bias of the lot. As a result the residence faces the curve, or both streets impartially.

Episcopal Bishop Speaks From Truck

Rt. Rev. Rhinelander Addresses Throngs on Streets in Philadelphia Tenderloin.

PHILADELPHIA, July 5.—Bishop Rhinelander, head of the Episcopal Diocese of Pennsylvania, spoke twice on the streets of the Tenderloin here from the tailboard of the gospel truck of the Inasmuch Mission.

At the Tenderloin meetings men and women from the lowest homes in the city assembled in great numbers.

Before the large truck "church" left the "gospel" corners men down and out ran to shake the Bishop's hand.

YOUNG PAGES IN MOCK SESSION APE SENATORS

Boys Legislate Against Senatorial Fire Water and Baneful "Soak Book."

WASHINGTON, July 7.—Visitors at the Senate wing of the Capitol recently saw such a session as they probably never will see again. It was the mock session, with the eighteen pages of the Senate acting the parts of Senators, while Joseph O'Toole, chief of pages, presided in Vice President Marshall's place.

The rules provide that pages shall not be under 12 years of age nor over 16, and their uniform is a white blouse shirt and knee breeches. With great dignity, save for occasional giggles, they introduced bills "for appropriate reference," offered resolutions and answered to the names of Senators when the roll was called. In the press gallery notes on the proceedings were taken with becoming solemnity.

One youngster introduced a bill that almost broke up the meeting. It bore the title "To prohibit Senators from using firewater, and for other purposes." Another was entitled "A bill to relieve a bull pup." It was duly referred to the committee on dog fights.

The opposition to these measures was led by a lad named McCoy, and he continued his leadership with great zest until a resolution was offerred directing the Sergeant-at-Arms to "put a Maxim silencer on McCoy."

The effectiveness of this parliamentary stroke was increased when it was noticed that Charles P. Higgins, Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, was standing in the doorway grinning. The bane of a page's existence is a little volume known as the "soak book," in which delinquent pages are "soaked" with various penalties. Young "Senator" McCoy was able to regain all his lost prestige by offering a resolution that the "soak book be burned with fire."

Parrot Cries "Fire," But Dies in Flames

Alarm Saves Occupants of House, but Firemen Are Unable to Rescue the Screaming Bird.

GRAND JUNCTION, COLO., July 5.—Although they were able to save their household goods, due to the warning of a pet parrot, the hero or heroine failed to escape in the fire which destroyed the home of F. E. Post.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Post were away from the house, working on the ranch, when they heard a cry of "Help, help! Fire, fire!" from the vicinity of their home. They started back to see smoke coming from all the windows, while the parrot was screaming at hte top of its voice.

As they arrived at the house the bird toppled over into the flames, and when Post rushed into the house he found Polly dead.

SOUTH BEND, IND., July 5.—The Rev. John Walton, pastor of the First Baptist Church, of Garrett, Ind., attributes the success which has attended his ministry to popular interest in moving pictures.

PARTY POLITICS ARE ABOLISHED BY CLEVELAND

Non-Partisan Elections With Provision for Recall of Mayor Provided for in New Charter.

CLEVELAND, July 5.—Non-partisan elections, with the absolute abolition of political parties, as far as municipal affairs are concerned, is assured to Cleveland in the terms of the new city charter, which has been completed. Experts declare the proposed charter is a model.

Nominations by petition instead of by primaries and the preferential system of voting in elections are to be leading features of the new governemntal system of the city.

Will Simplify Elections.

It is aimed to simplify election machinery and give the greatest possible expression to the will of the voters, who not only are to have their first choice for each office counted, but their second and other choices as well.

The Mayor and 26 members of the Council are the only city officials who are to be elected under the new charter. All the others are appointive. Candidates for the elective positions are to certify their names backed by the signatures of voters to the Board of Elections and be placed upon a non-partisan ballot, carrying no party designations of any kind, and on which the names are to be rotated.

Mayor May Be Recalled.

The recall is to apply to all elective officials. The Mayor may be recalled upon the petition of 15,000 voters, and a Councilman may be recalled upon the petition of 600 of his voting constituents.

The Mayor and Councilmen are elected for two-year terms.

The Mayor is to have the veto, but it is to be nullified to a large extent by the provision that any measure may be passed by the Council over the veto by a majority vote.

Ordinances may be initiated by petitions which contain the names of 5,000 voters, and a referendum also is provided for, by which the acts of the Council are to be submitted direct to the people.

The executive department is to be vested in six departments under the Mayor, directors of which are to be appointed by the chief executive.

Qinck, asleep in another part of the house, was awakened by the cries of the children. Firemen extinguished the flames.

Ministers Agree to Promote Good Plays

Unitarians Will Help Better Shows Instead of Criticising "Bad" Theaters.

LOS ANGELES, July 5.—That the church should promote the better shows given in theaters instead of criticising "bad" shows and condemning the theaters, was the consensus of opinion at a meeting of ministers at the First Unitarian Church.

In order to have more co-operation between the churches and theaters, it was decided that some of the ministers in the organization should go to theatrical managers and make arrangements with them to have lectures given in churches on the better plays presented in theaters.

Ministers of other denominations, who are continually harping at the theater as an influence of evil," were criticised at the meeting.

The Grand Lodge reunion committee has expended $15,000 on electrical illuminations alone and thousands of dollars additional have been put into decorations of various kinds in streets in the downtown section and in the park.

Suffragist Is to Wear Trousers 'Are More Modest Than Skirts' Hiker Will Discard Her Petticoats

General Jones' Mascot on March to Washington Has a Corsetless Silk Costume.

NEW YORK, July 5.—They're here at last. Mrs. John Boldt, who was called the mascot of General Jones' suffrage army on its 250-mile hike to the inauguration last February, has designed several pairs of trouser costumes, and will wear them hereafter.

At her apartments in the Hotel Marseilles yesterday, Mrs. Boldt criticised the women who are always talking dress reform, she said, but lacked the courage to wear "the sensible clothing they advocated."

"What we need to break the shackles and free these slaves to fashion is a leader," remarked Mrs. Boldt, as she sat in a big easy chair attired in her corsetless, trousette costume. It was made of sunburst-colored silk, caught in at the ankles with a band of gold and blue embroidery. The high waist, in Empire effect, was finished with a girdle of the same embroidery.

"The trouble with us is that we are many years behind the times in dress. The women of the East are far more progressive than us in dress. The majority of women in the world today wear trousers, the women of India, Turkey, China, Japan and even the peasant women of many European countries.

"Trousers of the style I wear, with draperies for evening of soft materials, giving an artistic Grecian line, are far more modest than the slit skirts you see on Broadway, with the limbs exposed to the knees, or transparent underclothing."

MRS. JOHN BOLDT, prominent suffragette, and chief aide of General Rosalie Jones, wearing the type of trousers which she urges as a substitute for skirts.

Girls Writing Book Will Simplify Laws

Ohio Misses Preparing History of All State Statutes to Aid Bench and Bar.

CLEVELAND, July 5.—The embryo lawyer to-day, who will be the brilliant pleader of to-morrow, will owe a debt of gratitude to two Cleveland girls for a massive volume filled with simple interpretations of Ohio's laws.

The girls are Miss Ruth Winch, 23, daughter of Judge Louis H. Winch, and Miss Ruth Jenkins, 18.

The book they are writing is being prepared by two girls under the supervision of Judge Winch, and will be known as "The History of the Laws of Ohio," containing nearly a thousand pages of dry legal matter made simple and entertaining. The book will be published this fall.

Takes Horse to Wed; Girl Given 7 Years

Woman Declares She Induced Man to Steal Animal so That They Could Elope.

PARSONS, KANS., July 5.—For stealing a horse so she could elope and be married, Mrs. Marie Pollard was sentenced to seven years in the penitentiary.

It was the first time in the history of the Labette County Court that a woman was sentenced for horse stealing.

Before she was sentenced, Mrs. Pollard insisted that she alone was to blame. She declared she had induced Samuel Parks to steal the horse and buggy and drive her to Clinton, where they were to have been married.

2,500 CHURCH MEMBERS AT ANNUAL FOOT WASHING

ANDERSON, IND., July 5.—More than 2,500 adherents of the Church of God from all sections of the country, participated in the annual foot-washing ceremony at the national camp meeting near here.

Women of the church are not permitted to wear gay-colored ribbons or plumage, and the men wear no neckties. Jewelry is not allowed. Smoking is prohibited. Men kiss each other. The only musical instrument allowed in the service is a tuning fork.

Uncle Sam Must Pay Indian's Doctor Bill

Comptroller Holds That Government Must Care for Blind Aborigine Hurt in Auto Accident.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—Uncle Sam is just as much a protector and guardian of the life and welfare of his Indian wards as a parent is of his child.

This principle of responsibility was proclaimed by George E. Downey, Comptroller of the Treasury, in overruling the appeal of Robert W. Wooley, new auditor for the Interior Department, for a reversal of the Comptroller's decision approving a $900 bill of Dr. George P. Sampson for treating and nursing a blind Indian.

Charley Walker, a blind Navajo and ward of the Government, deserted by his guide on the approach of a train, was run over.

Dr. Sampson amputated his left leg and right foot and cared for him for three months.

NEW STANDARD OF WEIGHT FOR GEMS ADOPTED BY U. S.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—The Treasury Department has issued instructions to collectors of customs, adopting as the unit of weight for imported diamonds, pearls and other precious stones, the metric carat of 200 milligrams. The adoption of this standard will make the practice of this country conform to that of large countries dealing in diamonds, chief among them being the Netherlands, England, France and Belgium.

TEACHERS WHO SPEAK SPANISH IN BIG DEMAND

Many Positions in Latin-America Go Begging Because of Lack of Knowledge of Language.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—Several well-paid teaching positions in Latin-America open to Americans will probably be filled by men from other countries because of a lack of trained men in the United States with a speaking knowledge of Spanish, according to L. A. Kalbach, chief clerk of the Bureau of Education.

On several occasions lately, he points out, the Bureau of Education, at the request of the State Department, has scoured the country in search of educators for responsible positions in Latin-American countries, only to find generally that those who might qualify in other particulars can not speak the language.

$2,400 Salaries Offered.

The American Minister to Panama recently asked the United States Government to recommend candidates for professor of industrial arts, professor of agriculture and professor of veterinary medicine in Panama. Salaries up to $2,400 and other inducements were offered. The Bureau of Education communicated with various institutions and organizations that usually have lists of available candidates, but in this case the response was meager, because of the language requirement.

"None of our industrial arts experts speaks Spanish," wrote an officer of one of the best known teacher-training institutions. Others declared that while they knew of men who would meet the requirements, so far as professional attainments and teaching experience were concerned, they knew of none who had the added requirement of Spanish.

Few Learn Spanish.

Spanish is, of course, taught in many American institutions of learning, but the bureau officials point out, comparatively few students avail themselves of the opportunity to learn it. Sometimes students feel that a high school or college course in Spanish will not furnish the necessary conversational knowledge. This difficulty has long been recognized in all modern language instruction, and in Spanish, particularly, practical control of the language is now insisted upon.

Furthermore, opportunities for practice in speaking Spanish are constantly increasing. Better transportation facilities are making the United States and Latin-American nations more and more accessible to each other.

SAVES LIVES OF GIRLS, BUT HERO MISSES GAME

Star Boy Outfielder, on Way to Clash of Nines, Has to Pause to Rescue Children.

NEW YORK, July 5.—Allen McKinney heard clamor in the region of his home in Ash Street, Yonkers, yesterday afternoon. Excited women were gathered about little 'Liz'beth Wyborn's mother and Leonora Kline's mother, and two policemen were trying to find out what was the matter.

Allen would have found out for the policemen, only there was a ball game on down by Nepperhan Creek, and being 11 years old, Allen had a sense of human values. He trudged on.

Orders Girls Home.

Down by Nepperhan Creek he saw 'Liz'beth and Leonora trying, in their girls' way, to sail a toy boat. 'Liz'beth being 4 years old and Leonora 5, Allen knew his authority.

"You kids, run home," he commanded. "They're lookin' fer you."

"Smarty," said 'Liz'beth.

"You hitted my bruvver," said Leonora.

And they dared stand there and make faces at Allen McKinney, right-fielder for the Young Yonkerses—even when he had his hat on his shoulder and his glove strapped to his left hand.

Meanwhile the boat had sailed away. 'Liz'beth, with a cry, started out on a slippery log that reached to mid-stream. Leonora followed. 'Liz'beth leaned over to reach the boat. There was a splash, and then another, for Leonora had clung to 'Liz'beth's dress.

"That's what yuh get," yelled Allen. But he was wringing off the glove and the bat lay in the road. In an instant he was out on the log; in another he had dived and clutched a dress. He rose and pulled 'Liz'beth to the shore.

"That's what yuh get," he spluttered and was in the water again.

When both drenched and choking babies were on land, Allen doctored them the best he knew how and led them back to Ash Street, whence neighborhood posses had set out in all directions to search for the missing girls.

He walked into a storm. Enraptured mothers enveloped him, hugged him. Men patted him on the back and called him a hero, when he hadn't had one whack at the ball. The crowning catastrophe was when his father led him home to change his clothes.

'Seven-Day Bride' Is Given Divorce

Husband Procured Licenses to Marry Two Women on Her Wedding Day.

LOS ANGELES, July 5.—The seven inharmonious days of married life from which Mrs. Pansy Biggs Caples culled testimony which gave her a divorce from William J. Caples in El Paso yesterday prove, according to Mrs. Caples, that there is luck in odd numbers.

Mrs. Caples contended in her charges against her husband, said to be a millionaire and son of a former Mayor of El Paso, that on the seventh day of their married life her husband beat her. Charging extreme cruelty, she did not ask for alimony nor for the restoration of her maiden name. Mrs. Caples said in El Paso yesterday she will return to the stage.

The matrimonial affairs of several members of the Caples family have been more or less spectacular, it is recorded in El Paso, and William Caples startled his wealthy friends on his wedding day by obtaining two separate licenses to marry two different women.

Persons Fined for Vagrancy and Intoxication To Be Permanently Recorded by N. Y. Police.

MEDFORD, OREG., July 5.—Dr. W. H. Everhard, a prominent business man, secured a tip last Saturday that Mrs. L. M. Markin, of Los Angeles, an attractive and wealthy widow, was interested in real estate in the Rogue River Valley.

Opticians to Operate On Hogs Before Jury

Defendants to Use Porkers' Eyes to Disprove Plaintiff's Malpractice Charge.

COLUMBUS, OHIO July 5.—A novel means of illustration was employed in Judge Rogers' court in a case in which two Columbus eye specialists are defendants for $10,000 damages.

Operations are to be performed on eyes to illustrate the claim of defendants that there was no malpractice. Human optics are not to be used. Because the eyes of hogs are very much like those of men, several healthy porkers are to be robbed of their "lamps."

These will be put in masks just like human "mugs" and the jurors will know exactly what happened to the plaintiff when he was put under the knives of the defendants.

Postoffice Lost by Veterans to Boy, 25

Missouri Youth Is Youngest Yet Named by President—Gets Salary of $2,400.

TRENTON, MO., July 5.—Winning the distinction of being the youngest postmaster in Missouri and the youngest yet appointed by President Wilson, Wilbur E. Austin has assumed charge of the Trenton office at 25. It is a second-class office, with a salary of $2,400 per annum.

Austin was nominated by President Wilson over five opponents, all of whom have been prominent in party affairs in this section for years. He was backed by Colonel E. M. Harber, of Trenton, an uncle, who is a close friend of Congressman W. W. Rucker, and was recommended by the Congressman.

"I Love You," Signals Heiress in Court

Millionaire's Daughter Cheers Sweetheart Accused by Her Father as Dead Beat.

STEAMBOAT SPRINGS, COLO., July 5.—A jury in the District Court has failed to agree in the case of Robert King, an artist, who recently attempted to elope with the 17-year-old daughter of F. E. Milner, millionaire lumberman and hotel proprietor. King was charged with beating a bill at the hotel owned by his sweetheart's father.

Women crowded the court room during the trial. Miss Milner and her father occupied front seats. The girl smiled at King on the stand and signaled to him with her hands. She explained afterward that her signal was: "I love you." Her father had forbidden her to speak to King.

Girl Is Near Death In Submarine Tango

Tries To Do Fancy Steps for Benefit of Lake Michigan "Mermaids," When She Sinks.

CHICAGO, July 5.—The mermaids at the bottom of Lake Michigan now dance the tango. Miss Kathryn Courts, of Normal Park, showed them how.

"Look, girls, this is the latest!" she cried to friends bathing with her off Margate Terrace.

And she tangoed right out into deep water and down among the mermaids, and would have drowned if Thomas Cooper, superintendent for Butler Bros., had not dragged her forth.

Her comrades had thought the symptoms of drowning part of the show.

MASHER LASHED BY WOMAN HE HAD ANNOYED

Tired of His Notes and Unwarranted Attention, Confectioner's Wife Uses Horsewhip.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 5.—Mrs. B. C. Osmun, the wife of a confectioner, residing at 54 Fair Avenue, pluckily took matters in her own hands and dealt summary justice to a masher who had been annoying her Friday afternoon. The masher, L. M. Cox, received a sound horsewhipping which Mrs. Osmun, administered to him in the street near her home.

According to Mrs. Osmun, Cox, who is about 60 years of age, has been continually annoying her by sending love notes, following her on the street and trying to induce her to leave her husband for him. She states that he has also been slandering her to the neighbors, and being unable to stand his annoyances any longer, she decided to put a definite stop to the proceedings.

When Cox attempted to speak to her on the street Friday afternoon, Mrs. Osmun produced the whip and proceeded to thrash him. Mrs. Osmun did not escape without injury, for she bears a large black and blue spot on her arm and a discolored right eye, which, she asserts, Cox gave her after he had taken her whip away.

Following the scene in the street Mrs. Osmun hurried to the police station and gave herself up in order to prevent Cox swearing out a warrant for her arrest. She was not held, however, and she proceeded to have a citation issued against Cox.

Leaps Across Area To Save Child Afire

Neighbor Sees Girl's Peril and Makes Dangerous Jump, Putting Out Flames With Coat.

NEW YORK, July 5.—William Morrissey, of 252 Nepperhan Avenue, Yonkers, by a daring leap yesterday saved Olive Edick, 7 years old, from burning to death. The child is terribly burned, but physicians in St. Joseph's Hospital say she will live.

The girl was playing with her younger brother, Russell, on the fourth floor of her home at 121 New Main Street. The boy accidentally set Olive's dress afire. She ran, screaming, to the fire escape.

Morrissey was on the fourth floor of the next block. There is a wide space between the two fire escapes. Seeing the child was doomed unless he acted, Morrissey jumped and landed beside the blazing youngster. Pulling off his coat, he quickly blanketed the flames.

To Have Perfect Skin Throughout the Summer

(From The Guide to Beauty.)

These days the face and neck need special care and attention. Flying dust and dirt, the beating sun, are severe on any skin. Their despoiling effects are best overcome by the application of pure mercolized wax. This keeps skin and pores in a cleanly condition, the complexion beautifully white and spotless. Tan, freckles, blotches and roughened cuticle are actually absorbed by it. One ounce of mercolized wax, obtainable at any drug store, is sufficient to completely renovate a soiled complexion. It is used like cold cream, allowed to remain on over night and washed off in the morning.

As the skin tends to expand in warm weather, causing wrinkles to form, a good astringent lotion should be used. Dissolve one ounce powdered saxolite in one-half pint of witch hazel. Bathe the face in this during the heat of the day or before going out for theater or social affair. It it a remarkable skin tightener and wrinkle eraser.

Trusses Like These Are A Crime

Such Makeshifts Have Forced Thousands Into Risking Dangerous Operations

Wearing elastic and spring trusses year after year is almost sure to shorten your life.

You can't make them hold, even when drawn so tight you can scarcely stand to keep them on.

They usually let you get worse all the time—that's why every year they are forcing thousands of people into undergoing operation.

They are simply a crime—squeeze the rupture, often causing strangulation—dig into the pelvic bone in front—press against the spinal column at the back—make life miserable for nearly everybody who wears them.

The Plain Truth Is This

You can't possibly get well—can't even keep from getting worse—unless your rupture is constantly held in place. Just as a broken bone can't knit unless held securely together.

And just as a bandage or splint is the only way a broken bone can be held, so the only right kind of truss is the only thing in the world that can keep a rupture from coming out and growing worse.

You'll feel like a new person from the day you put on that kind of truss.

But you know as well as we that you'll never find such a sure-to-hold truss at any drug store. Yet it's easy enough to get. And you can test it first—by sixty days trial—without having to risk a single cent.

It's the famous Cluthe Truss or Cluthe Automatic Massager—absolutely guaranteed to hold, and won't cost you a cent if it doesn't.

It's so utterly different from everything else for rupture that it has received eighteen separate patents.

Made on an entirely new principle. Instantly and automatically protects you against every strain so your rupture can't possibly be forced out. Self-regulating, self-adjusting. Far more than just a truss.

In addition to constant holding it provides the only way ever discovered for overcoming the weakness which is the real cause of rupture.

Just how it does that—entirely automatically—and how it has thus completely cured hundreds and hundreds of people whose cases seemed almost hopeless—is all explained in the free book which the coupon below will bring you.

No Belt—No Leg-Straps—No Springs

The Cluthe Truss does away with the curse of belts, leg-straps and springs. Thousand say it is as comfortable as their clothing. It is waterproof—will hold in the bath. Also perspiration-proof and easily kept clean.

Make This 60-Day Test—You Won't Have to Risk a Penny

We don't ask you to trust to a mere try-on the way you have to do at a drug store.

We'll make a Cluthe Automatic Massaging Truss especially for your case—make it to your measure—and let you try it sixty days.

We'll practically lend it to you that long just for a test.

If it doesn't keep your rupture from coming out or bothering you in any way, no matter how hard you work or strain—if it doesn't prove every claim we make—then you can send it back and it won't cost you a penny.

Free Book Full of Facts Never Before Put in Print

Don't keep on letting yourself get worse—don't spend a cent on account of your rupture until you get our free book of advice.

This remarkable book—cloth-bound, 96 pages—sums up all we have learned about ruptures during forty years of experience. You'll find it full of facts never before put in print.

It shows just why elastic and spring trusses cause so much misery and such a shameful waste of money that the law should stop their sale.

It explains why operation is nearly always a needless gamble with death—and why, if you do manage to live through it, you may have to keep on wearing a truss.

It exposes the humbug "appliances," "methods," "plasters," etc.

It shows why sixty days' trial is the only sane way to buy anything for rupture—and how the Cluthe Truss is the only thing of any kind that you can get on such a long trial because the only thing good enough to stand such a thorough day-after-day test.

And it tells all about this famous Automatic Massaging Truss—how simple it is—how it ends constant expense—how it has saved thousands from operation—how you can get it on trial, and how little it costs if you keep it.

Also gives voluntary indorsements from over 3,000 benefited and cured people.

Write for this book to-day—don't put it off—the minute it takes to send for it may free you from trouble for the rest of your life.

Simply use the coupon or just say in a letter or postal "Send me your book."

PERRY VICTORY ON ERIE IN 1813 IS CELEBRATED

100 Years Peace With England and Centennial of Naval Engagement Commemorated.

SUNKEN FLAGSHIP RAISED

Struggle on Lake To Be Depicted by Sham Battle—Many Officials Attend.

ERIE, PA., July 5.—Beautifully decorated with bunting and flowers, the city of Erie presents a delightful spectacle in preparation for the centennial celebration of Perry's victory at the Battle of Lake Erie, which will be inaugurated to-morrow by a "Peace Sunday," closing on Saturday night. An elaborate program has been arranged for the entertainment of the thousands of visitors who will attend.

Throughout the summer several celebrations are scheduled at various points along the lake bearing a historical relationship to the battle. The list of celebrations will probably close with the dedication of the Perry memorial now nearing completion on South Bass Island, near the western end of Lake Erie. The celebration will also be in the nature of commemorations of a hundred years' peace between English-speaking nations.

To-morrow at 11 o'clock special services will be held in all the churches in the city. At 3:30 in the afternoon there will be a parade, terminating in a mass meeting before the reviewing stand at Perry Square. The children of the Sunday schools will be dressed and seated in such a manner, on a huge stand erected for the purpose, as to form a living American flag.

The old DuPont powder wagon, which was used for the transportation of ammunition in the War of 1812, is making an overland trip from the DuPont Works in Wilmington, Del., and is scheduled to arrive in Erie at 3 o'clock on Monday afternoon, when a reception in its honor will take place. The wagon is to be escorted by a detachment of the naval force of Pennsylvania from the United States steamship Wolverine, the oldest iron vessel in existence, built in Erie in 1844.

The National Guard State encampment has been arranged for the week of the celebration, the camp being pitched just outside of the city.

At 8 p. m. a leading citizen of the city, impersonating Commodore Perry, will sail into the harbor on Perry's flagship, the Niagara, which has been raised from the bottom of Misery Bay and restored. Following this there will be a band concert in Perry Square, after which the automobile parade will be held. The day will be known as Reception Day.

Tuesday will be Mothers' and Children's Day. The principal feature of the afternoon will be the parade of 12,000 school children. In the evening a band concert, followed by a pageantry parade, will take place. Wednesday has been designated as Governors' Day, and arrangements have been made to entertain Governor Tener, of Pennsylvania, and Governors from at least eight other States. In the afternoon there will be a military parade. There will also be hydroaeroplane flights on the bay on this and subsequent days.

Naval Day will be celebrated on Thursday, starting with a naval parade in the afternoon, to be reviewed by Secretary of the Navy Josephus Daniels. Following the parade, boat races will be held on the day, in which yachts, motorboats and naval training ships will compete.

Sham Battle on Water.

In the evening there will be a massed band concert in Perry Square, followed by a naval sham battle on the bay depicting the Battle of Lake Erie.

The principal features on Friday will be the fraternal parade in the afternoon. Saturday, the closing day of the celebration, has been designated as Industrial or Erie Day. In the evening, preceding a massed band concert in the square, the Niagara will sail out of the harbor, as she did 100 years ago. After leaving Erie she will visit other lake ports and participate in commemorative celebrations.

During the week of celebration the sword used by Perry at the battle will be on exhibition, as well as a brace of pistols and his flag, inscribed, "Don't Give Up the Ship." The sword has been lent by Perry Belmont, of New York, a grandson of Commodore M. C. Perry, the brother of Commodore Oliver Hazard Perry, the hero of the battle. Mrs. Alexander Perry, of Washington, D. C., lent the pistols. The flag is the property of the Government.

The couple are in the Arnold Home for the Aged, where they were sent when finally neither could provide for their support.

RAISES STINGLESS HONEY BEE; BETTER THAN OTHERS

LAWRENCEBURG, IND., July 5.—Louis J. Terrell, an apiarist, who lives two miles south of this city, has produced stingless honey bees after several years of experiment. Mr. Terrell says the new bees are a cross between Italian queens and Cyprian drones. The new hybrids, he says, are better honey producers than the ordinary honey bee and are less liable to disease.

Southern Society Takes a Spurt Has a Big Field in Washington Many Notables Become Members

Records Smashed by Organization Since Claude N. Bennett Became President.

By HUGH S. MILLER.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—For rapidity of growth and for activity in developing the spirit of the South at the National Capital, the Southern Society of Washington has set a new record since the Democratic party came into power.

Less than a month after the election of officers, which placed Claude N. Bennett, of Georgia, in the president's chair, the society took in 150 new members from the leading Southerners in private, Congressional and other official life. They included such new members as Senator and Mrs. Hoke Smith, of Georgia; Senator and Mrs. Bryan, of Florida; Senator and Mrs. Robinson, of Arkansas; Senators Swanson, of Virginia, and Vardaman, of Mississippi; Representatives Gordon Lee, William Schley Howard and Hughes, of Georgia; Burnett and Heflin, of Alabama; Small, of North Carolina, and many other Southern Representatives and their wives.

Georgians Who Join.

Among the prominent Georgians who have joined are Justice and Mrs. William Bailey Lamar, Paymaster and Mrs. William C. Fite, Mr. and Mrs. James J. Lampton, Mr. and Mrs. Harry F. Cary, Mr. and Mrs. Sledge Tatum, Colonel Neyle Colquitt, Marion C. Howard, D. L. Hartsill, Miss Minnie E. Carroll, Miss Helen H. Hardin, Colonel John T. Boifeuillet and Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Lamkin. From other Southern States there are generals, admirals and others of note.

The Southern Society is now enjoying a success that it never before attained. It stands at the very top of the social organizations in the National Capital. Strangely enough, while the impetus which has made the society what it is came in part from the Georgian who is its new president, it is to be attributed mainly to a lively fight which developed in the society just previous to the last election.

The Southern Society had been running along for several years as quietly as a meadow stream. Its first president was Jacob M. Dickinson, Secretary of War in the Taft Cabinet. He was succeeded as president by Senator Thornton, of Louisiana, and he in turn was followed by Representative Richmond Pearson Hobson, of Alabama. Lack of time had made it difficult for any of these executives to give the society much personal attention.

Hobson Started Fight.

It was President Hobson who unintentionally precipitated the fight which culminated in the unprecedented expansion of the society. He proposed an amendment which would expand the eligibility clause of the society so as to take in people from every section of the country, provided they felt an interest in the South and the general objects of the organization. His amendment was seconded and ably advocated by Thomas Nelson Page, of Virginia, the author and recent appointee of President Wilson as Ambassador to Italy. Mr. Page was a member of the executive committee of the society. He and Captain Hobson argued very ably and eloquently for broadening the scope of the society, particularly with reference to its membership. They emphasized the need of doing away with sectionalism and giving the society a national character.

Some of the members of the society gathered from their remarks an intimation that the society amounted to very little and would never amount to much so long as it was run under exclusively Southern direction. However justified they were in getting this impression, the effect was electrical. They communicated their thoughts to others, and quickly the whole society was aroused. The more it was thought about and discussed the greater the opposition it created. The rank and file of the society declared that the adoption of the amendment would destroy both the character and the purpose of the society; that it would no longer be a Southern society, but an interstate society, the E Pluribus Unum Society, the Amalgamated Association of Selected Celebrities—anything, in fact—but that it would not be a Southern society.

Dr. McKelway Is Secretary.

The result was that the amendment was defeated, President Hobson resigned, and Mr. Bennett was unanimously elected to succeed him. Dr. A. J. McKelway, well known in Atlanta, is financial secretary of the society. Speaker Champ Clark is the first vice president.

Something of what the Southern Society is, and what it is doing, is contained in the following interview by Mr. Bennett:

"The objects of the Southern Society are to bring together at the National Capital Southern people; to promote friendship and fellowship among them; to nourish, cherish and perpetuate Southern ideals and ideas; to aid in interpreting the South to itself and to the nation at large; to develop and promote any good cause connected with the South—whether educational, philanthropic, patriotic or useful in any line. When the society grows in strength, membership and power as it should, it will be an easy matter to discover good things for it to do.

"Not a Sectional Society."

"The society is in no sense sectional, except in the broad sense that it is made up of Southerners. There is nothing narrow or limited or sectional about it in any way that could possibly be objected to. In its recent meeting at the National Theater, the society acted as the host of the nation. The society paid all expenses and entertained two thousand citizens of Washington, selected without regard to where they came from. Every Representative and Senator was invited, the diplomatic corps was well represented, the house was filled to its capacity, and the addresses were in a vein that could not but be approved and appreciated by any well balanced man or woman in the United States. The strongest eulogy on the South was delivered by William Jennings Bryan, of Nebraska, Secretary of State.

"There have been two other meetings in which the South has appeared in prominent roles. One was the noted banquet at the Raleigh Hotel in celebration of Washington's birthday, February 22, 1912, and the other was at the Pan American Building in the Hall of the Americas, when the society last fall gave a reception to the national convention of the United Daughters of the Confederacy—the most noted perhaps of the great entertainments given in Washington to that great organization of Southern women.

Cites Bigness of Field.

"Those of us who are endeavoring to direct the society's movements are fairly staggered by the bigness of the field that it represents. This field covers a representation at the National Capital of sixteen of the leading States of the Union, containing a population of more than thirty millions, having 600,000,000 acres of territory, possessing greater fertility and variety of soil than any other similar sized territory on the face of the globe, having one crop (cotton) worth a round billion dollars a year, and constituting the greatest natural monopoly that the Creator has given to any people.

"That the South now furnishes the President of the United States and half of the Cabinet, and is on the majority side of both House and Senate is only one of many phases of its importance and possibilities. That the Southern Society has something to stand for and can easily find something to do that will be well worth while needs no demonstration. The society regards the South as the nation's best asset, and desires to make that asset available to all good purposes."

CLAUDE N. BENNETT, of Georgia, the new President of the Southern Society of Washington.

Low Wages Blamed as Bar to Churchgoing

Girls Cannot Afford to Contribute, So They Will Not Attend, Says Investigator.

KANSAS CITY, July 5.—Working girls lack spiritual training because, as a rule, they are too proud to attend church services when they do not earn enough to permit them to drop a dime in the collection basket, according to testimony by Miss Louise Mittlestadt, organizer of the Women's Trade Union League, at the opening session of the Senate committee's inquiry into local wage conditions.

"One is expected to contribute if she goes to church," she said; "the church expects it, and the average factory girl can not give."

Mrs. Nan Sperry, Deputy City Factory Inspector, testified that "the servant girl is looked down upon by the factory girl, who, in turn, is considered by the shop girl as just a little below her own level. But the shop girl is looked down upon by the stenographer, and so up through the whole gamut."

JUDGE SITS ON A TACK.

LINCOLN, NEBR., July 5.—District Judge P. James Cosgrove gravely seated himself this morning as the bailiff rapped for court to convene, and with a sudden absence of judicial dignity and solemnity arose. A sharp tack in the judge's chair was the cause of his hasty action.

APPOINTMENT OF GONZALES RECALLS FEUD

Brother of New Minister to Cuba Was Slain on Street by James H. Tillman.

When William Elliott Gonzales goes to Cuba, to which country he has been appointed as Minister by President Wilson, he will be returning to the land of his ancestors. Born in the United States, he is intensely American in his point of view, but this has not prevented him from taking a deep interest in the development of Cuba.

His name is a link between the two countries. His father, a native of Matanzas, Cuba, married into the old Elliott family of South Carolina, and the new Minister to Cuba was named for his uncle, William Elliott, a one-time Representative in Congress. The Elliotts had been for generations prominent in the social and political life of the Palmetto State, and General Ambrosio Jose Gonzales, the father of William Elliott Gonzales, was a greater politician than any of them and brought up his boys to take a vital interest in politics, for his participation in which one son paid with his life. The members of the Gonzales family have always had decided opinions on every public question and have always expressed their feelings forcibly.

Headed Fight for Liberty.

General Gonzales, with Narisco Lopez, headed the struggle for independence of Cuba in 1844, being one of the junta of five members who signed the declaration of independence, adopted the present flag and organized the first filibustering expedition under Lopez, he being second in command, with the rank of brigadier general. He was the first Cuban wounded in the battle for independence at Cardenas, May 20, 1850. The expedition failed and a sentence of death was pronounced upon Gonzales, but he escaped to the United States and settled in South Carolina, where he married a daughter of William Elliott, a prominent citizen of Beaufort. When the Civil War broke out the Cuban general offered his services to the Confederates and served as colonel and chief of artillery with General Beauregard, surrendering with Johnston's army at Greensboro in 1865. His two sons have followed in his footsteps, both having been soldiers, having proved their devotion to the United States and to Cuba.

He Opposed Tillman.

The feud which ended in the fatal shooting of Narisco G. Gonzales by Lieutenant Governor James H. Tillman in 1903 was partly political and partly personal. The two families had been on bad terms for years, and during the campaign which resulted in the election of Tillman as Lieutenant Governor, Gonzales through his paper, The State, had fought him bitterly. In his editorials he had called him names that Tillman could not forgive or forget. He challenged the editor to a duel, but Gonzales treated the proposal with contempt. This in no way impugned his courage, for the entire Gonzales family was noted for its bravery and nerve, and Narisco Gonzales, who was named for old Narisco Lopez, had acted as a scout for Gomez before the Spanish-American war and had served in the American army after war was declared, doing valiant service.

He was shot when walking unarmed in the public street by Tillman. At the first shot he called out "Coward!" and then "Shoot again!" as he sank to the ground. He died a few days afterward and feeling ran so high that Tillman, insisting that he could not get a fair trial in that county obtained a change of venue and was acquitted after a sensational trial.

Is a Spanish War Veteran.

William Elliott Gonzales succeeded his brother as the editor of The State. Like him, he had been a soldier in the war with Spain, having served as captain in the Second South Carolina regiment and having gone to Cuba with the army of pacification. Mr. Gonzales is a close personal and political friend of the Secretary of State, and in his paper warmly supported him in his candidacy for the Presidency in all of his campaigns. He is also a good friend of President Wilson and was one of the first men to suggest his name for the office which he now holds. The State led the fight in securing a delegation favorable to him, and it was largely owing to his efforts that the Palmetto delegation stood by Woodrow Wilson from first to last at the National Convention. After the nomination Mr. Gonzales returned home and worked for his election, raising a large popular subscription through the State to help defray the expenses of the campaign.

Mr. Gonzales has entertained both President Wilson and Secretary Bryan at hos home in Columbia, and it is understood that the appointment was tendered him out of personal regard by the President and because of his belief in his fitness for the place.

Senator Tillman Passive.

Notwithstanding the feeling between the Gonzales and Tillman families, it is understood that Senator Tillman, recognizing Mr. Gonzales' splendid work for President Wilson, will not oppose his confirmation. One of the most outspoken enemies of the newly appointed Minister to Cuba is Governor Blease, who was one of the counsel for James Tillman at the time of his trial. Not long ago the Governor was reported to have criticised Mr. Daniels, Secretary of the Navy, very bitterly because of his friendship for Mr. Gonzales.

In 1887 Mr. Gonzales married Miss Sarah C. Shiver, of Columbia, and they have two children, Robert E. Gonzales, an editorial writer on The State, and little Miss Alida Gonzales.

Tenor Will Wed Lina Cavalieri Muratore Wins Prima Donna

Lina Cavalieri and the tenor, Muratore, whom she is to marry.

Intimates Say They Will Be Married Quietly in August—Affection Is Called Platonic.

Special Cable to The American.

PARIS, July 5.—Mme. Lina Cavalieri, the beautiful and fascinating prima donna, is to marry Lucien Muratore, the tenor, who accompanied her and sang with her on her last tour in America.

So it was announced definitely here to-day by those very close to the lovely soprano. They declare that Cavalieri and Muratore will be married perhaps in the presence of a few intimates at her country house just outside of Paris. The ceremony is to take place next August, it is said authoritatively.

Mme. Cavalieri has denied several times, both here and in New York, she has had any further interest in Muratore than one platonic, artistic; as a singer who, in a duet, sets off and decorates her voice.

Muratore, much applauded here, handsome, well put up, has been one of the favored tenors at the opera house. Mme. Bartiza, the soprano, well known at the Boston Opera House, divorced him. It was reported Muratore was engaged to the French dancer Roubiga.

Mme. Cavalieri was automobiling to-day, so it was impossible to gain confirmation of the rumor that she will marry.

As everyone knows, Cavalieri's former husband was Robert Winthrop Chanler, of New York, of the Astor family, and of strong artistic temperament. While they were divorced it was reported Chanler soothed Mme. Cavalieri's sorrow at parting with some $60,000.

SLAYING CHARGE HE IGNORED IS USED AS TRAP

Ancient Indictment Is Brought to Light After Prosperous Denver Man Sues Keeper of Resort.

DENVER, July 5.—The story of Jean Valjean was repeated in the West Side Criminal Court of Denver, but in the place of the French convict stood a small, stocky, pleasant-faced Austrian, surrounded by his wife and four children. For fifteen years he has lived an exemplary life in Denver, acquiring property, family, friends. But from Pittston, Pa., had come an officer of the law, charging the prisoner with a murder committed fifteen years ago.

John Kremchik was the name of the man at the bar. He admitted the killing, but asserted that it was so plainly justified that he had remained in the same town where the murder was committed for a number of months, and that no attempt had been made to arrest him.

Had Returned Three Times.

Then he had come to Denver, where he had prospered. Three times, he said, he had gone back to the Pennsylvania city and had visited old friends, but no one had molested him.

The case did not proceed far enough yesterday for the officer from Pittston to explain to Judge Butler why this old murder charge had been revived at this time. He merely said he had come here seeking the extradition of Kremchik. The case was put up to Governor Ammons, but the Austrian's attorney intervened with habeas corpus proceedings, in an effort to keep Kremchik from being taken East.

Says Suit Caused Arrest.

Kremchik asserts that his present plight is due to a damage suit he brought recently against the keeper of a Market Street resort. He says he was beaten and thrown out of the place when he went there on business. The resort keeper is charged with retaliating by raking up the old murder case in Pittston.

When John Kremchik was arrested nearly the entire population of Globeville swarmed to the District Attorney's office, seeking to give bail for their friend. They offered $10,000 cash—$15,000—any sum that would release the Austrian.

PANAMA FAIR SEEKING NAME FOR 'MIDWAY'

Season Pass Will be Given to the Person Suggesting Appropriate Title for District.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 5.—Who will suggest the name by which the concessions and amusement center will be known at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition at San Francisco?

The Director of Concessions has announced that the person who suggests the best name will receive a lithographed portrait season pass to the exposition. The suggestions will be filed in the order that they are received by the exposition and if more than one person suggests the selected name the one first heard from will receive the pass. The contest will close August 1.

District To Be Unique.

The concessions district at the exposition will be unique, so marvelous, and so diverse in its attractions that it offers the widest possible range for the imagination. Between ten and twelve million dollars will be spent in the installation of the concessions, which will be the most costly and elaborate that have ever been presented at any of the world's universal expositions. Through the concessions center will run a great boulevard three thousand feet in length and at either side of the boulevard will be grouped the marvelous series of concessions that will amaze and mystify the world.

In the center of the length of this street will be the great Plaza of Wonders the glory spot of the night life of the exposition. From the center of the Plaza will rise the loftiest flag pole in the world, 246 feet high and donated by the citizens of Astoria, Ore.

Scenes Along Canal Route.

As one passes along the street he will see reproduced scenes along the Panama Canal that have become familiar to everybody. Perhaps, as at Chicago, the concessions district will take the name of the boulevard running through its center. Or again it is possible that some striking phase of the exposition the distinction of having named one of the most marvelous sections of the great world's exposition.

Perhaps a name will be suggested by the marvelous illumination of the exposition. At night the concessions center will be a land of enchantment.

All suggestions should be addressed to Mr. Frank Burt, Director of Concessions and Admissions, 501 Exposition Building, Pine and Battery Streets, San Francisco.

JULEP SECRET KEPT SACRED BY OLD BARTENDER

Connoisseur of Drinks Sees Mixologist Work Twelve Minutes on Concoction.

MYSTERIOUS BOTTLE USED

Dash of Contents Put in Completed Masterpiece Adds Zest That Puzzles Expert.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—A Providence, R. I., man, who is a connoisseur in things good to eat and drink, to wear, to read and to look at, was in Washington recently when a feeling came over him that he would like to have what he had not enjoyed for several years—a real Southern mint julep, the kind that he and others read about and that are dispensed in the private club rooms of Southern cities by leading citizens, accompanied by the traditional manifestations of Southern hospitality and courtesy.

At the cash register of an ornate bar an elderly gentleman was dozing, and there was no evidence whatever of life in the gilded and glass bedecked room. The old gentleman said, however, in reply to a query, that he thought a mint julep could be mixed there and he rang a bell. He was an old man, somewhere on the shady side of 70, and had all the earmarks of a Southern brigadier of the type that up to a few years ago was a typical Congressman.

Disappearing for several minutes, the Colonel, as the visitor afterward designated him, returned with two bunches of mint, the delicious aroma of which showed that it was fresh and crisp. Placing two glasses on the bar, he dissolved a lump of hard sugar in each by means of a tablespoonful of water.

Then, selecting shreds of the mint as carefully as if he were selecting pearls for a bride's necklace, he placed a bunch in each glass, folding the bottom ends into the dissolved and now thoroughly stirred sugar and pushing the tops back from the rim of the glass.

Whisky Aged as Mixer.

Then he added cracked ice, cracking it as carefully as he selected the mint, until the glasses were two-thirds full. After this the dignified barkeeper strolled deliberately to the other end of the long bar and returned with a bottle of whisky that bore a popular label and date showing that it was only slightly younger than the man who carried it.

Putting a large jigger of this into each glass, the Confederate brigadier next, by the same process of selection, collected two more bunches of mint, which he inserted, piece by piece, into the concoction and added a little more cracked ice. Up to this time exactly eleven minutes had been consumed since the glasses were placed on the bar to receive the sugar and water, and the thirsty patrons thought the beverage was ready for them.

Mysterious Bottle Used.

But not yet. Going off to the opposite end of the bar, the courtly mint julep mixer returned with a little bottle the label of which he carefully concealed by covering it with his hand. Squirt, squirt, he put a dash of something into each glass, went away back to the shelf whence he got the bottle, placed it thereon, and returning, indicated by a nod of the head that the juleps were ready to be disposed of. Twelve minutes had now been occupied in the labor of love and not a word had been spoken by any of the three persons present at the performance.

The glasses were picked up, the gentleman from Providence and his friend rejected the straws placed handy by, each stuck his nose into the mint and proceeded to drink. As they did so they looked at each other with an expression that spoke volumes. The Providence man, after his friend had returned from the other end of the room where he had gone to pay the check, found the cockles of his heart opening up, and he said to the silent and courtly barkeeper, "My dear sir, that was the finest—I may say the only—mint julep I ever drank, and I have traveled far and wide."

"But may I ask," said the Providence man, with his most seductive smile, "what was the little dash of stuff that you added at the last moment? It must be that that was what gave this mint julep the insinuating flavor that will long last in my memory."

"Oh, that!" was the reply, accompanied by a slight facial movement, falsely indicating that the julep artist was about to open up. "Why, that, you must excuse me, sir, is my secret."

Miss Baylor in Debut Sept. 14

Voice Wins Praise in London

Miss Eloise Baylor, who will make her debut as Philine in "Mignon."

Brilliant Career Is Predicted for Chattanooga Singer by European Masters.

CHATTANOOGA, July 5.—A gifted Southern girl will make her debut in grand opera at Bremen, Germany, September 14, when Miss Eloise Baylor, of Chattanooga, will appear in the role of Philine in the opera "Mignon." Miss Baylor will appear regularly until the following April, her repertoire comprising the following roles: Philine in "Mignin," Violetta in "Traviata," Martha in "Martha," Gilda in "Rigoletto," Frau Fluth in "Lustige Weiber," Konegin der Nacht in "Zauberflote," Konigin in "Hugenotter," Mimi in "La Boheme," Rosina in "Barbier von Siviglia," Lucia in "Lucia de Lammermoor," Ophelie in "Hamlet," Wald Vogel in "Siegfried," Erste Rheintochter in "Rheingold," Constance in "Entfuhrung," and Erste Rheintochter in "Gotterdammerung."

Miss Baylor is the daughter of Prof. and Mrs. J. Roy Baylor, and emphatically an American girl in spite of the fact that the past four years of her life have been spent in the study of music under the French, German and Italian masters. She is of Colonial stock on both her paternal and maternal side. She was born in Charlottesville, Va.

Her Career Began Early.

It might be said that Miss Baylor's musical career began when Mrs. Virginia Preston Means taught her as a delightful baby of 2 years to run the scale. Her father moved to Chattanooga from Virginia shortly afterward and her musical training was intrusted to Miss Ione Spears.

It was slightly more than seven years ago that Miss Baylor began the study of her chosen art, working in New York under the best masters. While here she sang before Madame Sembrich, and the latter was so delighted with her voice that she gave her a recommendation and ordered her to study under Jean de Reszke, in Paris.

The Southern girl followed her advise, and two years ago she completed the course prescribed by De Reszke and his chief assistant, Oscar Seagle, a native Chattanoogan.

Since completing this course Miss Baylor has appeared in practically all the European capitals and is even better known on the continent than in the United States. A brilliant career is predicted for her by all the European masters.

Praised by London Paper.

The following is an excerpt from a recent issue of The Era, of London:

"Among the vocal schools that have done first-rate work during the past season that of Frantz Proschowsky stands out conspicuously, and among Mr. Proschowsky's many successful pupils Miss Eloise Baylor takes a high place. At a recent recital this young American gained great and well-merited praise from the critics. Her voice has a coloratura of unusual beauty and wide range, with the pure, full tone and warmth of a mezzo soprano, and her execution not only reflects much credit upon her training, but also upon her musical intelligence and industry. Miss Baylor, who rendered a program including songs and arias by Mozart, DeBussy, Scarlatti and Hue, as well as the Mignon Polonaise and 'I've Been Roaming,' should take a prominent place on the concert platform or in grand opera, as her inclination dictates."

Chief Would Make 'Mashing' a Lost Art

Springfield Alderman Asked to Pass Law Prohibiting Men from Flirting on Streets.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., July 5.—Springfield proposes to make "mashing" a specific violation of law.

Complaints about men who ogle young girls and not infrequently attempt to open conversation with them have been frequent, and the Mayor, the Chief of Police and the Aldermen have joined forces to suppress the nuisance.

Chief of Police Quilty, with the concurrence of Mayor Denison, sent to the Board of Aldermen a communication asking for the passage of an ordinance to punish mashers and others who annoy young women in the streets.

The Aldermen voted to refer the matter to City Solicitor Adams, with instructions to draft such an ordinance.

"If the Aldermen will give me the right kind of an ordinance—the more drastic the better—mashing will speedily become a lost art in Springfield," says Chief Quilty.

NATION GETS OLD WEAPONS.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—A remarkable collection of 58 old weapons collected by George Kennan, the celebrated traveler, has been lent to the National Museum. The greater part of the weapons were originally gathered by Prince Pasklevich, of Russia, a noted connoisseur.

Pastor Says He Has Failed and Resigns

Head of Oldest Baptist Church in Wilmington, Del., Surprises His Flock.

WILMINGTON, DEL., July 5.—The Rev. N. C. Lassiter, who has been pastor of the fashionable Delaware Avenue Baptist Church for three years, astonished his congregation when he announced that he was tired and weary of everything and intended to quit preaching immediately. Unlike Caesar, he said, "I came, I saw, I failed."

Mr. Lassiter said he does not intend to preach another sermon for at least a year, and may never preach again. Regarding his plans for the future, the minister said he was undecided. He said he might travel, but most of all he wanted a rest for a year.

So far as known there is no trouble between the church and its pastor, and the latter's action in tendering his resignation was wholly unexpected. The Delaware Avenue Church is the oldest Baptist church in Wilmington.

WHISTLING CAT PROVES TO BE "UNMUSICAL"

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., July 5.—Stanislaus Czynszky, of West Springfield, is the owner of a cat with a hare lip which whistles with the facility of the schoolboy, but cannot mew. Czynszky is inclined to believe that no animal in its normal state of mind would whistle, but is loath to do away with the cat.

5TH REGIMENT OFF FOR LARK AT ST. SIMONS

Drudgery of Camp at Anniston Yast Year Will Be Forgotten at Seacoast Outing.

The Fifth Regiment, Georgia National Guard, composed of twelve companies with 560 officers and men, will leave over the Atlanta, Birmingham and Atlantic Railroad Tuesday evening in two sections at 8 and 8:30 for an outing of ten days at St. Simons Island.

This camp will be a picnic compared to the strenuous times of the State militia at Anniston, Ala., last year, when the entire time was devoted to military maneuvers. Then it was work, work, work. Realizing the fact that too much work and no play might have the same effect on the soldiers that it did on Jack, it was decided to give the boys an outing, at the same time make it worth while from a military viewpoint.

The work at St. Simons will be very light, but the discipline will be rigid, and the little details so necessary to the life of a soldier will be strictly observed. The work will be guard mount in the morning, dress parade in the afternoon and camp patrol duty.

School For Officers.

But the officers will not escape so easily. A practical school of instruction will be inaugurated, and it will require the services of the officers for at least four hours each day, and it is the opinion of the adjutant general that the regiment will be in better shape when it returns than it has been in years.

The regiment will leave the Auditorium-Armory at 7:30 Tuesday evening, headed by the colonel and his staff, the Fifth Regiment band and the companies in the order of their position in the line, as follows:

Company A, Captain Palmour commanding; Company B, Captain Weaver; Company C, Captain Candler; Company D, Captain Stoddard; Company E, Captain Leahy; Company F, Lieutenant McCarty; Company G, Captain Schmidt; Company H, Captain Quillian; Company I, Company Hartlaub; Company K, Captain Stokes; Company L, Captain Clarke; Company M, Captain Slaton.

Dress, military bearing and the minor details of camp life will be strictly enforced, but ample time has been provided for the men to enjoy the outing to the fullest.

Many to Visit the Island.

During the encampment of the Fifth Regiment, excursions will be run over the Atlanta, Birmingham and Atlantic Railroad, and there will probably be more people on the island than has ever been known.

With the camp right on the beach, or such a short distance that bathing suits can be donned in the tents, surf bathing, of course, will be the chief pastime of the landlubbers.

The Fifth Regiment band, under Chief Musician C. E. Barber, will furnish music, and the concerts in the evening by this noted organization of musicians will be an enjoyable feature. There will also be many entertainments and dances by the officers, and a royal good time is anticipated.

"End-Seat Hogs" to Receive Heavy Fines

Washington to Act After Woman and Baby Narrowly Escape Death in Leaving Car.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—Washington's "end seat hogs" will soon be amenable to law.

Commissioner Rudolph has taken the subject up with the Utilities Commission and announcement will be made in a few days. Convictions for refusing to "move up" in seats of the summer cars will probably be punished by a heavy fine.

"There have been many cases where accidents have been narrowly averted on account of the 'end seat hog,'" said Commissioner Rudolph. "One recent case was that of a woman with her baby in her arms about to alight from a car. A fat man obstructed her passage and she fell. It was just luck she was not killed."

KEPT PLEDGES FOR 10 YEARS; BROTHERS GIVEN REWARD

SIOUX CITY, IOWA, July 5.—Ten years ago Ray and Jay Garnett, brothers, of Sioux City, pledged their word to their uncle, William E. Garnett, they would not smoke, chew or drink until they reached their majority. The uncle promised them a gift of importance in case they fulfilled their promise.

The period named in their promise ended this week and now, to hold up his end of the bargain, William E. Garnett deeded to the brothers a half section of land in Cass County, Minnesota, share and share alike.

RELIGIOUS DIFFERENCES HELD NO DIVORCE GROUND

KANSAS CITY, July 5.—Religious differences do not constitute grounds for divorce, according to the ruling to-day of Circuit Judge Seehorn, who denied the application of Mrs. Margaret M. Shine for divorce from John J. Shine, a railway passenger agent.

Shine is a Catholic, his wife an Episcopalian. Their troubles began when their son reached school age and the place for his education could not be agreed upon. Judge Seehorn advised principals and attorneys to confer and reach an agreement.

INNOCENT MAN PARDONED AFTER 2 YEARS IN PRISON

TOPEKA, July 5.—George Horton, sent to the State Penitentiary in 1910 charged with robbing a jewelry store in Medicine Lodge, Kans., has served nearly two years for a crime he did not commit, according to facts brought out to-day when Governor Hodge granted him a permanent parole. Horton's conviction resulted because a bloodhound placed upon the trail directed suspicion to him. Horton's friends were able to present evidence to the Governor that the stolen jewelry was hidden under a Medicine Lodge hotel after Horton was in prison.

CATS THINK AND HAVE LANGUAGE SAYS SCIENTIST

Professor of Zoology Declares Felines Possess Power of Reasoning.

LOS ANGELES, July 5.—After years of study and experimenting with cats, Dr. Charles Lincoln Edwards, professor of zoology at the University of Southern California and head of nature study in the Los Angeles schools, announced that he has found that cats think, reason, have a language of their own and possess a keen sense of humor.

As a cat fancier Dr. Edwards has had several tabbies near him at his home for many years, and as a carefully observing man of science he has studied the felines as he has studied no other animal, and has arrived at the conclusion that the only difference between the intelligence of the cat and the intelligence of a human is a difference of degree rather than kind.

Can Reason, Too.

He expressed his views relative to the intellectual attainments and manifestations of the cat family in an interview in which he used his prize orange tabby cat, Shadi Fawe, the prize winner at many cat shows, for the purpose of demonstration.

"What's said about animals not having reasoning power is all nonsense," he declared. "I have observed cats more closely than any other animal, as they are near me so much of the time at my home, and I know that they act in accordance with reason and not alone by instinct.

"The animal is lacking in the ability to express itself through articulatory sounds as does a human, perhaps," he said, "but for the natural means of expressing desire or emotion, a cat has man, bereft of his voice, bested. The cat has a language of its own. By its succeeding experiences, it is able to understand the law of cause and effect, just as a human does, and it can reason in his limited capacity as does a man.

"The sneer of a human is the lineal descendant of the snarl of the beast. The cat perhaps cannot express himself in his 'meow,' but he does successfully by his attitude and his actions.

Moves Lips; Tries to Talk.

"Cowper, the poet, in a letter to a friend, told of some of the remarkable actions of his pet cat, and stated that it moved its lips, as though in talking. I have observed this in some cats, and with others they seem to articulate from the throat. It might be possible through the proper sympathetic understanding, to understand the wishes and desires of the feline kind.

"My wife, who is a great cat fancier, was able to so successfully imitate the 'meows' of a pet cat, that it would follow her around, and, from all appearances talk to her."

Dr. Edwards intends to carry on his close observations of his pet cats, and is of the belief that he will be able to come to a greater sympathetic understanding of the working of the intellect of the animal. Being a scholar, he has named his pet cat from the Persian, "shadi," meaning "perfect delight."

FORTUNE PROBABLY LEFT TO CHILD HE NEVER SAW

CLASSVILLE, MO., July 5.—One of the most remarkable cases that ever confronted a probate court in Missouri was tried before C. M. Landis in this city.

The case involved the settlement of the estate of A. B. Gardner, a farmer of this county, who died recently, leaving a little girl 14 years old and $10,000.

Fourteen years ago Gardner married and separated. Several months later a little girl was born to the former wife, but no effort was made at reconciliation, and the father never saw the girl. When Gardner found he would not live he drew a will leaving all the property and money to his brother. Attendants raised Gardner so he could sign, but just as he took the pen he collapsed and died.

GRADUATESTOLD TO MAKE MORIBUND SMALL TOWNS

MIDDLEBURY, VT., July 5.—John M. Thomas, president of Middlebury College, in his baccalaureate address appealed to the members of the graduating class to cast their fortunes with the small hill towns of New England, which, he said, had been losing population steadily for more than half a century.

"Leadership is all that is needed," said Dr. Thomas. "Who of you will go to live in a hill town of Vermont, not where there is the best job, but where there is the greatest good?

"One man of the right caliber and the right power could lift a whole community. One community so inspired would change a whole county, and one county leading the way, the whole State would follow."

Wilson Stenographer Once a Sand Cutter

In Three Years Capital Employee Rises from Laborer to World's Champion Copyist.

QUINCY, ILL., July 5.—Three years ago Lawrence Weisenberger was working as a sand cutter in a local foundry. To-day he is one of the three stenographers in the office of President Wilson.

Weisenberger worked during the day in the foundry and attended business college at night. He successfully passed a civil service examination and obtained a position in the War Department. He was assigned temporarily to the private office of the President, who refused to part with his services when he was called back to the War Department.

Weisenberger is about 27. He also won the national copying contest a year ago over a field of twoscore of expert shorthand artists.

$2,000 a Minute Is Cost of Slow Watch

Representative Callaway Loses Fight Against Appropriation Because He Was Late.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—Because his watch was two minutes slow Representative Callaway, of Texas, today lost his fight against a resolution to appropriate $4,000 to send the Civil War veterans of the District of Columbia to the reunion at Gettysburg, and Representative Fowler, of Illinois, won a victory for which he has schemed for weeks.

Callaway interposed his objection, and the resolution went over.

Fowler called it up again as soon as the House convened again. Callaway was two minutes late and the resolution passed.

CENSORS TO PART DANCERS.

CHICAGO, July 5.—Public censors of dancing, who shall be armed with rules and tape measures and force all dancers to remain at least six inches apart when they step the light fantastic, are advocated by the United Professional Teachers of Dancing.

GOVERNMENT'S NEWEST AIM IS FROG INCREASE

Frenchmen Maligned by Title of "Frogeaters"—People of U. S. Should Have That Name.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—Experiments have been begun on a large scale at the United States fish culture station at Edenton, N. C., to see if bullfrogs can be propagated successfully by artificial means.

The matter has been under discussion for some time between the Bureau of Fisheries at Washington and Representative John H. Small, of the First North Carolina District.

There are a few frog farms in the United States now. If the experiments at Edenton are successful, thousand of such farms will be established, and what is to-day only a haphazard and restricted industry will become a dependable and extensive one. Frogs are readily salable. The market fairly begs for them. The difficulty is to supply the demand, which may be regarded as inexhaustible.

Because the Frenchman has been making the delicious flesh of the frog a feature of his diet for a longer time than any of his European brethren, and has had the nickname of "frog-eater" applied to him in derision by his English neighbors, it is generally supposed that France leads the world in the consumption of frogs as food for human beings.

This is altogether a mistake—just as big a one as the prejudice which some folks cherish against the edible frog on account of the resemblance he bears to the despised and nauseous toad. The people of the United States eat ten times as many frogs as do the people of France, and there are only twice as many people in this country.

WAX TO SHIELD LIBERTY BELL ON LONG TRIP

Philadelphia Mayor Promises Girls to Aid Plan for San Francisco Exposition.

PHILADELPHIA, July 5.—To the young women of the three Northwestern States who came to Philadelphia to secure the loan of the Liberty Bell for the San Francisco Exposition in 1915 Mayor Blankenburg promised his full aid.

"I will do everything I can for you," he said, in answer to the petition of the 6,000 school children of the Western Coast cities, the supplications of the Governors of Oregon, Washington and California, and the pleadings of the young women who made this long journey.

"I think all the school children of the country should be given an opportunity to see the bell that proclaimed liberty throughout the land in 1776."

Patriotic societies here are opposing the trip of the bell on the ground that it would be dangerous.

Mr. Bates declared the management of the Panama-Pacific Exposition was willing to incase the bell in a huge wax covering, so that it could not be jarred during its long trip.

WEDS ON DEATHBED TO GIVE BRIDE HIS PROPERTY

EMPORIA, KANS., July 5.—A deathbed wedding took place in St. Mary's Hospital when Miss Marie C. Black, of Texas, was married to Jesse P. Chapman. When it became known that Chapman could not recover from an operation for appendicitis he asked that he might be married, and Miss Black consented.

He left a will bequeathing his property to his bride.

When Mozart Bowed Before the Boy Beethoven

(Stirring Stories of Great Musicians. No. 7.)

AWKWARD, ill-clothed, the boy entered the room that was to him a shrine. He had come far to see the world's great master, to beg a word of encouragement.

He sat at the piano, awkward still, his smouldering eyes fixed with grim intensity upon the other's. He wished to see his triumph. But as he watched, the light went out from the other's face. It grew uninterested.

Grimly the boy played on, but he knew his failure. He had learned his piece too well, its witchery was gone. Then with a crash, he suddenly ceased.

"Give me a theme" he pleaded. The great musician did so, unwilling to hurt him who had failed.

Grimly still, almost sullenly, the youth commenced again. And then the magic from his fingers came, tracing their mastery in immortal sound. Slow the tones grew. Slowly they faded, like a soft regret, faded and were still.

Slowly the man rose, reverently he bowed.

"Boy, thou art great," he said, "the world will hear of thee."

It was the tribute of the setting to the dawning Sun of Genius—the Great Man to the Great Boy. It was Mozart's tribute to Beethoven.

Have you a boy who hummed little airs at play when he was tiny? That boy has musical talent, and you are responsible for developing it.

Have you given him a musical chance, with a musical education, on a good piano? Or have you already ruined his ear by giving him the "cheap tone" habit of a cheap piano?

The delicate brain cells connected with the ear take bad "sound habits" quickly, which can't be lost. That is why an English cockney misplaces his "h," or a street boy loves a squeaking harmonica. The will develop your boy's "musical liking" by developing his ear to true tones. The great musicians Liszt and Johann Strauss recommended it. His Holiness Pope Pius X endorsed it with a Papal medal.

HALLET & DAVIS PIANO

Why don't you give your boy or girl a musical chance, by giving them a Hallet & Davis Piano?

FOR MILADY'S WARDROBE

By MME. HAUTE MONDE.

A NOVELTY of the season is the long glove of dark gray suede worn with white or pale tinted muslins. The innovation looks rather odd at first sight, but is really charming and artistic.

* * *

With the exaggeratedly decollete necks short sleeves are worn in the house. Sometimes the arms are covered with fine lace mittens, but far more often they are left bare, save for a veiling of tulle illusion. Here I must again mention that scarfs of tulle illusion are worn at all hours of the day and with almost every kind of costume.

* * *

Many of the newest rest gowns are accordion pleated from waist to hem, the material used being fine muslin or equally fine Indian silk. Then a picture mantle of lace or pale tinted chiffon is thrown in; a wide sash is wound round the waist; sweet-scented flowers are arranged at the breast and the boudoir cap is donned.

* * *

Leghorn is immensely popular this year, not only for dressy summer millinery, but also for simple tailored hats to be worn with linen and cotton frocks of the same genre, or with light tailored wool suits. They are deliciously comfortable and easy on the head, and will encroach on the field in which Panamas hitherto have reigned alone. The latter are shown in new shapes this season, a Panama sailor being one of the novelties.

* * *

All Panamas are smaller, the inclination being to a medium size, with a mannish crown and a comparatively narrow brim turned down part way around. Another popular shape is almost exactly that of the regular farmer's straw hat, rolling at the sides. Plain ribbon bands are tied in a flat bow, with ends falling onto the brim. The ribbon loops, characteristic of the season's millinery, are used on some of the Panamas also, but are placed at the left side toward the back.

* * *

The French and the English have invented charming fashions for the child in the house, but it is to our own American designers that the child who wants to have the time of its young life in outdoor play must come to be ideally fitted. The beach rompers shown this season are enough to make one sigh to be made a child again. Beach aprons are a boon, too. They are made of blue denim, bound with red and embroidered (also in red) with the appropriate emblems of pail, shovel, and so forth. The pail design, planted squarely in the middle of the apron, is in reality a large pocket, which will certainly be the joy of the wearer.

* * *

Many girls from 14 years of age and upward are wearing white linon or cotton crepe skirts with basqued coats of soft satin or silk embroidered round the edge and upper portion of the sleeve. These coats, which cross over to the left and fasten with two silk-covered buttons, have a soft frill of net or lace down the front, while the low turn-down collar has a bow of black velvet as a finish, the waist belt being embroidered in wool or floss silk. In willow and lizard green, pale blue, lavender and dull pink such coats look most effective with white skirts.

* * *

A great deal of moire is worn this season, both black and colors. Lovely shades are obtainable in lime green, deep cream, blue, dull gold and gray. For a smart tailored suit moire makes an admirable selection.

* * *

The inexpensive negligee gown for hot weather is of sheer stuff, and is usually white, or shows a floral pattern in delicate colors on a white ground. For these models, aside from the kimono, variations of the Empire effect are perhaps most in evidence, wide liberty satin ribbons run through wide embroidery beading, serving as a girdle and giving to the model more trimness than is common to robes which fall loose from the shoulders. The flowered muslin negligees are, as a rule, little trimmed, save for frills of Valenciennes lace to soften the edges.

* * *

Quite a feature of the season's styles is the little cutaway corsage that has a suggestion of the postilion back. This is generally made over a cream net corsage. At all events, the ensemble looks like a little coat put over a summer vest or blouse; but it is really all made in one. Sometimes the sleeves are of net, mousseline, or tulle illusion, and sometimes of the material of the cutaway, satin, silk, chantung or pongee.

* * *

This summer veils will be long and worn loosely, floving over the face. Frail shadow laces are in favor for them and washable Shetland of a fluffy quality. Some have an open mesh over the face, and the design of the veil is not carried over the open weave part. These are named "frame veils" and are most of them woven of Italian silk.

* * *

Summer is the season for embroidery, and the woman who puts in her spare moments in the preparation of dresses for the little folks will have cause for thanksgiving later on. Most children now wear cotton frocks the year around. It is a far more cleanly custom than putting a child into a blue serge suit when autumn comes and having it wear the suit day after day as long as the threads will hold together.

* * *

It is predicted now that the Eton jacket and the bolero will have a prominent place in juvenile fashions next winter. These will be embroidered or braided in gay colors and will be charming on children. The embroidery can be done this summer by the woman who is clever with her needle.

* * *

Roman stripes and Scotch plaids are promised for fall, and already these bright effects are creeping into summer costumes. A tailleur model for autumn is of navy blue lansdowne, with blue buttons and blue corded silk pipings at the seams of the coat. Around the hips is knotted a tasseled sash of blue and green checked taffeta.

* * *

The airy black tulle hats are extremely practical—one very good reason for their excessive popularity. The black hat may be worn with a frock of any color, and is particularly effective with white. Some of these modish black hats have pleated tulle brims and shirred black satin crowns. Again the brim may be of straw, faced with satin, and the crown of puffed tulle. A few models, worn by quite youthful women, are entirely of the black tulle, shirred closely over wire frames. Sometimes a big red rose, a pale pink or a saffron yellow rose trims the black tulle and satin hat effectively.

* * *

Almost heel-less are the ultra-smart English walking boots in mannish style. These boots have pointed, receding toes, low buttoned tops and heels scarcely lift the foot above the pavement. These new boots are delightfully comfortable, but they are neither graceful nor dainty and look best in tan leather accompanying tailored or athletic garb. Patent leather boots, with buttoned tops of gray suede or dull black kid, are much more attractive with soft, drapad skirts, and with white frocks white buttoned boots are in order.

* * *

Some dressmakers advise their customers to dress according to the color of eyes in the daytime, and the color of the hair at night. Of course, this is not always possible, but it can be accomplished to a certain extent. But one should never forget that the complexion deserves very much attention and is invariably dressed up to. In case the hair runs in brown tones and the complexion is of a cream tint, it is a good plan to wear warm colorings—preferably yellows, red browns and deep orange yellows of the daffodil cast.

Cuts of corsages still show a slight bloused or loose effect at the waist, which is particularly noticeable in the back. The lining may be tight, but this air of comfort and indolence must be in evidence with everything. A woman who is dressed otherwise would appear too prim and precise to be admired. The large, loose-waisted beauty is the model this year, and one who has ideas of fitness or elegance at odds with all this must take a back seat. Word has come over from England, where the Versailles Festival was held last week, that the short-waisted dresses were an immense success, even on the long, tall Englishwoman, on whom as a rule French fashions do not sit well.

WHEN WILL THE LIMIT OF DARING IN WOMAN'S DRESS BE REACHED?

HARDLY a day passes that the newspapers of the country do not contain accounts of some daring innovation in woman's dress. Between the transparent dress and the split skirt there is little left to the imagination.

The pictures shown here are typical of the new fad. The one on the left is a snap-shot of a Parisienne society woman, and was taken at the Longchamps race course at the gathering of the French capital's most fashionable set. This woman was only one of many dressed in a similar manner. So common has this costume become she attracted little attention.

The picture on the right is that of a gown offered for sale in one of the largest New York department stores. It is an importation from France, and after it was placed on view the manager of the department received orders for a number of similar costumes. It is very aptly named "the exposee gown." This gown is priced from $850 to $1,100.

The vogue of these split-skirt gowns has caused the makers of fashion's decree to concentrate their attention upon novelties in hosiery. Dispatches from Paris tell us that some startling effects in stockings are to be seen where the split skirt flourishes.

Hosiery bearing embroidered snakes, birds, butterflies and even mottoes were seen. Most of the stockings were pink, although some were white, and even a few purple and green ones were seen. Those bearing the reptilian decorations were so marked that it would appear that the snakes were twined about the leg, head downward.

Bands of diamonds and other precious jewels were used for decorative purposes. Many had the heels of their shoes covered with pearls, rubies and diamonds.

Sandals Threaten To Be All the Rage for Women

The foot is the thing!

Atlanta shoe dealers foresee a controversy amounting to little short of civil war over the question of how women will dress their feet. And a storm center in the controversy will be sandals.

The esthetic footgear of the early Greeks has captured Paris, say cable messages. Soft, flat sandals, with dainty ribbons that wind around the ankles; silken sandals that adapt themselves to the foot of the wearer, have acquired a vogue in that center of the fashion world.

Will America—Atlanta—shy at this newest and most daring innovation? The shoe dealers of Atlanta would like to know.

"I don't know where I am at," said a buyer for one big Atlanta house yesterday, unmindful of grammar. "Nobody does.

"More brain work, more intelligent effort has been spent in trying to work out in advance the styles in women's shoes than is required to run all the other departments of a big store put together," he continued, "and all to no purpose. The shoe world has gone wild."

Buyers in Despair.

Then he threw up his hands in despair and said that the flat, rubber-soled, heelless shoes have spoiled the women.

"I wouldn't be surprised to see anything come in," he confessed, "sandals or anything. Not even bare feet." He was hopeless.

The flat soles, he said, agreeing with others of the profession, have come to stay—in some form or other, even if not with such extreme lack of heels. The step from the shoe without heels to the sandals will not be so startling or radical as the adoption of the no-heeled shoe in favor of the regulation high heel that had the sanction of generations, shoe men declare.

"Another point to indicate a favorable impression that the sandals might receive," a shoe dealer said, "is the fact that they have attractive ribbon laces.

"The ribbons please women. And if sandals do become the general fashion, it will be so on account of the dainty ankle ties, which are particularly effective with the style of dress now worn. Feet were never so much in evidence as this season, and women are giving more attention to dressing them than ever. Silk stockings are seen on the majority of women, whereas a few years ago they were displayed only by the fastidious and the wealthy."

Fad Will Not Spread.

In another boot shop on Whitehall Street which is frequented by well-dressed women, one of the assistant managers said he did not think the Parisian fad would ever capture the American woman, "because, you see, the need the support of high heels, and after a woman has walked all her life in shoes with heels, she would find it extremely difficult, if not painful, to cover the ground in perfectly flat heels.

"If a woman has an arched instep she requires a heel to support it. And sandals, while being flexible and comfortable in some ways, allow this arch to drop and the feet to spread. If women began to wear these flat foot coverings and continued to follow the simple style they would have more serious trouble with their feet than they have now."

Although the general opinion of those who supply shoes was that the sandal would not find favor in this city, they admitted that anything novel and fresh from France would have a chance to win.

And they wondered what chance the tango and the turkey trot would have with the threatened sandal style.

Up-to-Date Brides Are Expected to Design Own Gowns

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, July 5.—There is really no fashion nowadays in bridal gowns. It seems to be the ambition of every bride to strike an individual note.

One of the principal brides this week, Miss Dorothy Pratt, who married the son of General Cecil Bingham, chose a gown which was simplicity itself, but entirely novel in design. It was of white satin, the skirt being put into rather full pleats just above the waist at the back and sides and turned lightly underneath at about the height of the knees.

The front of the corsage fell softly away over a long stole of white chiffon embroidered in seed pearls and silk floss, with a glimpse of gold thread, and thickly fringed with silk at the base, while there was a peep of a lace petticoat beneath. The corsage was of the same chiffon similarly embroidered, while there were long miltaine sleeves, which were brought well down over the hand and wide frills at the open throat, merged into a little wired medici collar.

A point of chiffon was brought up over the tulle at the back and a great flat bow ornamented the corsage in front.

The graceful and exquisite line of the gown was enhanced by a train which flowed out from the jupe, instead of commencing on the shoulders.

Gives Up a Castle to Go to University

Miss Lutie Blake's Father Inherits 1,300-Acre Irish Estate and Title, but Will Sell Land.

COLUMBIA, MO., July 5.—The joys of living in an Irish castle are not alluring enough to make Miss Lutie Blake, of Salisbury, Mo., stop her school work at the University of Missouri.

With a 1,300-acre estate awaiting her in Ireland she prefers to attend summer school in Columbia.

The castle and estate belong to Miss Blake's father, J. D. Blake, who inherited them last November from Nicholas Blake.

A title of nobility goes with the estate. Mr. Blake, however, probably will not go to Ireland to claim the title. Instead, he plans to dispose of all the property except the castle as soon as the leases for the tenants expire.

Overcoats Must Go, Say French Dandies

Uncle of Duc De Chaulnes Among Fashion Leaders Who Would Return to Old-Fashioned Cloaks.

Special Cable to The American.

PARIS, July 5.—Away with overcoats. The Duc De Luynes and the Count de Gontaut-Biron, two men of fashion and of the most aristocratic blood in all France, declare that the male of to-day's species should revive the glory of his plumage; that the attire of man is too somber, painfully funereal.

De Luynes is an uncle of the very young Duc De Chaulnes, whose mother was Miss Theodora Shonts, of New York. The Count De Gontaut-Biron's brother, now deceased, married Miss Martha Leishman, daughter of John G. A. Leishman, lately American Ambassador at Berlin.

The first attack has been directed against vulgar overcoats. The two leaders vow we must return to the graceful cloaks which poets and dandies of 1830 wore. They also say that the clawhammer evening coat must be left to hotel waiters and hired mourners.

Melba Jealous of U. S. Girl's High 'C'

Famous Diva Refuses to Sing in "La Boheme" With Young American on Program.

NEW YORK, July 5.—A prize pupil of Mme. Marchesi, later a member of the far-famed opera school of Jean de Reszke in Paris, Miss Frances Roeder was selected from 26 aspirants to sing star roles at the Covent Garden Opera House in London. But she sings a high C, and Melba, who discerned a rival, objected to sharing honors with any debutante in "La Boheme." So instead of being Musetta, Miss Roeder made her first appearance as Conchita in the "Jewels of the Madonna" and scored a great hit. Miss Roeder is the daughter of Gus Roeder, a member of the staff of a New York newspaper.

LAND TURTLE CAUGHT WITH TAG GROWN IN BACK

SCANDIA, KAN., July 5.—While fishing on the Solomon River, Fred Mathews caught a land turtle nearly a foot broad, which had attached to its shell a silver tag. The inscription on the tag or medal was badly worn, but it is believed that it originally was a silver Catholic medal such as many Catholics wear. The medal was fastened to the turtle's shell with a silver ring, and judging from its appearance it had been on the reptile many years.

YOUTHFUL HUSBAND'S KIN ARE SUED FOR ALIENATION

ATLANTIC CITY, July 5.—The romance of Mrs. Anna MacFarland Gould, 60, and John Metzger Gould, 26, which culminated in an elopement to Doylestown, where they were married two months ago, has gone to smash. Mrs. Gould has entered suit in the Supreme Court against the youthful husband's mother and aunt for $50,000, charging them with alienation of his affections. Gould has started divorce proceedings in the Chancery Court, alleging cruelty.

ROOSTER WAS A NUISANCE.

PHILADELPHIA, July 5.—The crowing of a rooster which the complainant declared interrupted his sleep and rest, was held to be a nuisance that should be suppressed, in an opinion filed by Judge McMichael. The court declared that "if a man desires to have a rooster and hens, he should remove them to the country.

World's Latest and Most Radiant Gowns Make Grand Prix Year's Fashion Event

By CHARLES HENRY MELTZER

Special Cable to The American.

PARIS, July 5.—There was hardly standing room on the great Longchamps race course Sunday afternoon when the Grand Prix was won by the French colt Bruleur in the presence of quite 500,000 onlookers and in record time. The four reserved stands overflowed. The paddock was a feminine flower garden. The vast "pelouse" was one moving mass of eager and happy or unhappy mortals.

The verdant slopes and white roads surrounding the course were thronged with spectators, while in the alleys of the Bois contented bourgeois picnicked gayly. President Poincare, who was accompanied by Mme. Poincare and his civil and military attaches, had a whole-hearted welcome when he drove up in a dashing open carriage preceded by a lackey in a blue and gold livery.

Mrs. Belmont's Fine Gown.

Hundreds of private turnouts and 6,000 or more hired autos and victorias filled the approaches to the course with life and movement. The weather was ideal, bright and fair.

Mrs. Perry Belmont wore an exquisite black and white creation, black satin being chosen for the dress. Over this were a lovely tunic and corsage of cream-colored lace. She wore a black hat with rare white aigrettes.

The Duchess de Brissac looked charming in a gown made almost entirely of black chantilly lace over white. The bodice was of the same lace, draped over flesh-tinted chiffon and tulle, while the skirt was draped with several deep flounces of black chantilly. A small black hat trimmed with white ospreys completed the costume.

Unusual Elegance Shown.

Mrs. Frank J. Gould looked very fetching in a creation of maline lace over delicate pearl pink chiffon, the lace falling in softly draped folds onto the plain and rather transparent chiffon skirt. On the bodice were several touches of Mandarin-colored satin.

The costumes in the paddock and the stands were of unusual elegance and on the whole less startling than on other Grand Prix days. Black and white greatly predominated in the color schemes. Nearly all the best dressed women wore gowns of chiffon and lace, in many cases white chiffon being trimmed with black chantilly.

Some of the most charming tunics and bodices were softly draped in lace over flesh-colored chiffon. In every case the bodices were transparent, and the sleeves very short.

Skirts Show Hosiery.

Skirts were draped gracefully and almost invariably open in front, as far as the knee, revealing the silk hosiery below quite plainly.

Madame Poincare was beautifully gowned in white mousseline de soie with a mousseline mantle embroidered in black and trimmed with bands of ermine.

She had small white Mandarin silk stockings and satin shoes of white lent piquancy to the costume.

The Princess Murat made a fascinating picture in a tasteful gown of black and white, relieved at the waist with violet satin. The black satin skirt was draped with soft malines lace, while the bodice was a dainty mixture of lace and tulle. Her hat was of black velvet.

Despite the glowing sun, most of the hats at Longchamps were of velvet or satin. This marks a new departure. Formerly all the hats one saw on days like this were made of straw or tulle.

Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt was dressed in black chiffon and lace, the draperies being carried out in chantilly; the dark bodice was relieved by a pink charmeuse sash and waistband, and the costume was completed by a black hat trimmed with ospreys.

The Comtesse de Gallifet wore a gown of black mousseline de soie veiled and draped with white lace. Mlle. Dorselat, a favorite actress, wore a smart dress of white chiffon with the skirt elaborately draped and open in front. Beneath the white chiffon of the bodice was seen bright gold lace. With this there went a large black velvet hat trimmed with black chantilly.

Mrs. Vanderbilt's Costume.

Mrs. Carroll wore a gown of white filet lace over pale pink chiffon, with a straw hat trimmed with pale pink roses and a blue ribbon. Mme. de Mumm, nee Scobell, was charming in white, worn over black satin, a handsomely draped skirt with a lace bodice and a hat of white tulle, trimmed with black.

Mrs. Bower Ismay was attired in a white and black gown with gold lace showing beneath the white chiffon and a white hat with white ospreys. Mrs. Chauncey Depew appeared in pale pink chiffon and malines lace. Above this was a black chantilly lace hat. Mrs. B. Cummings wore white lace over black chiffon.

Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr., also arrayed herself in black lace and white chiffon. The costume chosen by Mrs. McClelland was an effective pale blue charmeuse creation, worn with a white lace hat, trimmed with ospreys.

Many Americans There.

The Marchesa de Radini de Labouchere was dressed in black charmeuse with a cerise sash embroidered in black and a black velvet hat, with a violet feather. Mrs. George Harrison wore mauve satin trimmed with lace. Her hat was of same material and color.

Mrs. W. Lewisohn looked smart in a handsome black chantilly lace gown glittering with diamonds.

Among many other Americans noticed at Longchamps were Mrs. Louise Sands, Mr. and Mrs. H. Wertheim, H. B. Duryea, Mr. and Mrs. F. Gray, Mr. and Mrs. S. Howland, Mr. and Mrs. Charles F. Garland, Mrs. and Miss Gilbert, Hamilton Carhardt, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Crocker, Sherwood Aldrich, Mr. and Mrs. George Blumenthal, August Belmont, Harry Lehr, and Mr. and Mrs. John W. Barrett.

Jewels on Their Stockings.

The French fashionables present included Comte de la Rochefoucauld, Comte de Brimont, Marquis de Ganay, Marquis de Gallifet and Prince Murat.

Shoes and stockings of the most vivid hues enlivened the paddock. Some were of violet, some of pink, others of golden tones. In many instances the hosiery was richly embroidered with designs in jewelry. As for shoes, the heels were so high that their owners almost seemed to walk on stilts.

Transparent Gowns To Cause New Rules

Hot Weather Blamed for Jolts to Councilmen's Modesty—Will Regulate Women's Apparel.

ROCHESTER, PA., July 5.—Following suggestions made by D. W. Denton, president of the Rochester Council, Burgess J. M. Cargo will be asked to formulate a set of rules regulating wearing apparel of women who appear on the streets of Rochester.

Denton's suggestions were made on complaints he said had been made to him about the transparency of the gowns worn by young women. A Moral Efficiency Committee was named to take the matter up with the Burgess. It is believed that the extremely hot weather of the last few days is responsible for the severe jolts which the modesty of the Councilmen have received. It was agreed by the Councilmen that women should wear enough underskirts to hide the contour of the body.

West began an explanation with an apology and cited the case of Daniel Webster, who tore up a diploma given him by one of the colleges he attended.

SUNDAY AMERICAN'S SPECIAL CABLE LETTERS RECEIVED FROM ALL THE GREAT CAPITALS OF EUROPE

GERMAN MASSES FORCED TO BEAR HEAVY TAX LOAD

Producers Pay for Increased Armaments While Wealthy Idlers Escape All Burdens.

By FREDERICK WERNER.
Special Cable to The American.

BERLIN, July 5.—Once more the party of the center has triumphed in Germany's domestic politics and has forced through a political compromise which satisfied nobody. The political situation is drastically described in the radical "Berliner Tageblatt," which writes:

"The compromise pudding is really in the black kitchen, the chef has tasted it and declared it excellent. Now he presses a spoon into the hands of Right and Left and with a grin of satisfaction he encourages them to eat heartily and not be afraid of indigestion. The pudding may be a trifle heavy, but it must be eaten "with God for king and country." And the chef who, in 1909, made the German people swallow the financial reform smiles and says: What I have done is well done. Centrum is trump and always remains trump in the German empire."

Nothing, of course, is definitely decided yet, for the compromise must still pass through several stages before it becomes the law of the land, but the party of the center is sure of final victory, so sure that it has loudly announced that once more it has got its foot firmly on the neck on that part of the German people who increare the national wealth of Germany. These people must pay, while the wealthy idlers get off easily, almost without feeling the extra financial burden with which the increased armaments have saddled the taxpayers.

It is because of the inability of the upper and lower strata of the producing classes to co-operate politically that these have been forced to leave the Government in the hands of a bureaucracy which has gradually more and more become a mere tool of the reactionary landowners, while the greatest influence is exerted by Centrum, the strongest party in the Reichstag.

Now Germans are to see and enjoy the fruits of this political alliance in their worst form: a super tax on thrift. A punishment is to be meted out to those who even during the recent hard times have had the imprudence to go on increasing national wealth.

The new compromise provides for a distribution of the burdens of taxation, which is an even greater insult than the financial reform of 1909, and which may yet prove to be the straw which will break the camel's back.

Actress Spurns $50,000 Heart Balm Finally Takes Marquis' $250,000

Daisy Markham, the English actress, well known on the American stage, who finally accepted $250,000 settlement from the Marquis of Northampton as heart balm.

Daisy Markham, After Declaring All Money in World Couldn't Quash Suit, Accepts Offer.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, July 5.—Fifty thousand dollars was not near enough money to soothe the injured feelings of Daisy Markham, the English actress, who suddenly discovered that she was not to be the Marchioness of Northampton when the Marquis' betrothal to another was announced. "All the money in the world could not get me to withdraw my suit," she dramatically declared when the $50,000 offer was made. "I want his love and the name he promised to give me."

But to-day Daisy Markham seems reasonably contented with $250,000, which the Marquis has settled on her, though it is said that there is more money in the world, and she is still Daisy Markham.

Costs To Be Considerable.

The costs of the settlement will amount to a considerable sum on account of the number of distinguished counsel engaged to plead for the opposing parties. The Marquis, better known as Earl Compton, only recently succeeded to the title at the age of 27. The plaintiff is well known, both in America and the British Isles, under her stage name.

The settlement was announced when the case was called in the high court of justice this week in a court room crowded with fashionable women and actresses, who had come in anticipation of listening to some interesting evidence.

The young Marquis had previously offered $50,000 to settle the case, and many people had thought Miss Markham unwise not to accept the offer.

When Miss Markham insisted on proceeding with the suit London gossips anticipated that she had a sensational story to tell, and interest in the suit rose accordingly.

The damages paid to-day are the heaviest for many years in a breach of promise suit.

Didn't Deny Promise.

Sir Edward Carsons, representing Miss Markham, said she met the Marquis last year when he made a promise of marriage to her which was not denied. Subsequently at the desire of his father, the Marquis broke off the engagement. In doing so he wrote to Miss Markham that he wanted her to believe his action had been taken from a sense of duty, genuinely believing it best for both parties.

The Marquis further wrote:

"You do not know how these so-called ladies will treat you and I really could not bear to see you suffering it. Oh! if I could but escape my position! You will always be my ideal! My beautiful dream!"

The letter concluded, "Your broken-hearted Bim." This was the Marquis of Northampton's nickname.

Father Halted Wedding.

Sir Edward said the Marquis of Northampton had made provision for the lady, such as she would have been entitled to had he made her a marchioness. He then announced the settlement for the sum of $250,000.

Henry E. Duke, counsel for the defendant, said in confirming the settlement that when the Marquis of Northampton, who was then Earl Compton, asked his father's consent to his marriage with Miss Markham, he laid upon him an absolute prohibition and took from his son a solemn engagement that he would not pursue his desire to marry the plaintiff.

Miss Markham was born in India on July 20, 1886. She made her first appearance in Manchester in 1904 as Cella in "As You Like It." In December of the same year she appeared at the Lyceum Theater, New York, with Sir Charles Wyndham, as Elaine Shrimpton, in "The Case of Rebellious Susan," and has acted many other parts. She made her first London appearance as Claire Berton in "Leah Kleschna," and also appeared in many other plays here, including "Raffles," "Love Watches" and "The Glad Eye," which was one of London's recent successes.

MOTHER KEEPS WALES TIED TO APRON STRINGS

Prince Joins Rollicking Oxford Club, but Queen Makes Him Resign—Can't Speed Auto.

By HERBERT TEMPLE.
Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, July 5.—Queen Mary seems determined to keep her oldest son under her wings until the day when she turns him over to the tender cares of his bride. Not long ago he received permission to become a member of the Bullingdon Club, with the express stipulation that under no condition must he ever take part in any of the hilarious festivities of the club, which, under the name of "Bullingdon Blinds," are one of the features of college life at Oxford.

The other night, however, he could not resist the temptation, and with trembling heart he donned his evening clothes and went to the club, where he spent a few very pleasant hours.

Parents Wax Wrathy.

His presence, of course, could not remain secret, and a day or two afterward he received a very severe letter from his parents, who had just returned from their visit to the Kaiser, ordering him to hand in his resignation as a member of the Bullingdon Club immediately, and, in spite of his entreaties, he was forced to obey.

As a balm to his wounded dignity he shortly afterward received as a present from his father a beautiful automobile, accompanied by a driver's license, and driving his own car is now his principal pleasure, though it is somewhat lessened by the fact that the car is provided with a speedometer and he has had to promise his mother on his word of honor that he will never exceed the speed of twelve miles an hour, much as he would like to tear along.

Little Olaf Gets Car.

The Queen, indeed, opposed the Prince's wish for an automobile as long as she possibly could after Queen Alexandra a little over a year ago expressed her willingness to present her oldest grandson with one. But when Queen Alexandra presented little Prince Olaf of Norway with a car and permitted him to use it freely all around Sandringham, Queen Mary realized that she had been outwitted and reluctantly permitted King George to present the Prince of Wales with a fine touring car.

The question of the Prince's marriage is now becoming quite a serious one. The King and Queen both agree that their son ought to marry early in life, but they can not agree on the bride. Queen Mary desires the Prince of Wales to marry one of the Czar's daughters, but King George and Queen Alexandra, as well as her sister, the Dowager Empress of Russia, strongly oppose this idea, because of the close relationship of the two young people.

They favor a marriage with one of the daughters of the King and Queen of Italy, who are easily the two most beautiful and healthy princesses in Europe, probably because of the blood of the sturdy Montenegrin peasants which they have inherited from their mother's side.

The result is apt to be a compromise, for there is much talk in court circles of Princess Elizabeth of Roumania, daughter of the Roumanian Crown Prince, as the most likely next Princess of Wales. No one has thought of asking the Prince, who will, of couse, meekly submit to the choice of his parents.

Bernstein's "Secret" Called An Incomprehensible Play

By ALAN DALE

Special Cable to The American.

PARIS, July 5.—One is always grateful to Henri Bernstein, because he is really a dramatic person, with that "sense of the theater" that is born and not acquired. His plays have been reaching New York pretty regularly, with varied success. Last night I saw his latest play, "Le Secret," at the Bouffes Pariens, with Mme. Simone in the leading role, and I'll say right here that if it hadn't been for Mme. Simone I couldn't have sat through the play. That's my secret, and it is more powerful, I think, than Bernstein's.

Now, Bernstein, if he can get hold of a strong situation, will do more for it theatrically than any other French playwright. He will play it for all it is worth. Of late his plays have suffered from lack of motive. It has been very difficult for him to get the strong situation upon which to rear his edifice. And that is just the trouble with "The Secret." After having seen it, you can't help saying to yourself: "I wonder why . . . and wherefore?"

Who Would Play the Role?

Who, in America, will want to play such an unsympathetic role as that of Gabrielle? In America stellar ladies love the "sympathy of the audience." They can't bear being hated till the very end of the play, except in a few Ibsen cases, and, let me say that "the Secret" is an Ibsen case. Its heroine is as peevish, as fractious, as disagreeable, as unlovely and as forbidding as Hedda Gabler, but in a motiveless and foolish way.

It is really an incomprehensible play. Gabrielle is the heroine, and all she has to do is, for no reason at all, to interfere with the happiness of her boon companion, Henriette. Henriette has had a past —only one lover, but still a past, don't you know. She is on the eve of marrying an awful looked called Denis. The hero of the past was Charlie, and it was owing to Gabrielle that she broke with Charlie, for Gabrielle told her that Charlie would never marry her. Saucy thing!

They have such loving, elastic hearts in French plays! Henriette, as I said, is on the eve of marrying Denis, and dead friend Gabrielle begs her to tell him of her past. That she declines to do, for she loves him, and he dislikes anything that has to do with a past. Isn't that odd—and in Paris, too?

Play Made Ridiculous.

No sooner are they married than they meet at a country house, Gabrielle and her husband, the newlyweds Henriette and Denis, and Charlie, the hero of Henriette's past. Oh, that past! She is horrified, aghast, to find Charlie there, for now she loves her husband and she fears that the presence of Charlie makes him ridiculous. (As a matter of fact, it makes the play ridiculous.) She decides that Charlie must go, and she begs her dear friend Gabrielle to insist upon his departure.

Big doings. Charlie won't go. He wants to try and recapture Henriette, whom he has never ceased to love (Parision idea!), and there is a great scene between them. They discover that it is Gabrielle who has separated them and who has lied in order to do so. This scene is interrupted by Henriette's husband, who, finding his wife in earnest parley with Charlie, smells a rat, as it were. Jealousy, the prime motive of nearly all French plays and novels, is aroused, and the stage grows noisily violent and clamorous. They almost eat up the furniture in their agony. They nearly scratch out each other's eyes in their anguish.

The Heroine Confesses All.

At this point you ask yourself: Why? Wherefore? How? Whence? and a few other interrogatories. All these are answered very soon. The "heroine," Gabrielle, confesses that she is a terrible person—that she hates to see anybody's happiness—that she is jealous of everybody—that she as a sort of mania to do evil—that she can not help her malevolence—that it is her nature—that she herself suffers from it fully as much as those whom she "undoes"—et cetera. It is she who has separated Henriette and Charlie; it is she who has invited Charlie to the country house. "I did it to make them miserable," she confesses, "and to bring about the unhappiness that you see." It is she who has given away the secret of Henriette's past. She tells her husband everything, and is frightfully miserable, and tear-drenched, and limp, and—er—silly!

No Excuse Apparent.

Honestly, I felt awfully indignant with her, not because she was wicked and hideous, but because there was no other excuse for this long-drawn-out and motiveless play. The whole thing was Gabrielle's wicked nature, that made her happy at other people's mishappiness. And, oh, how desolately wretched they all got! Denis, Henriette's newly-wed husband, wept himself blue in the face, as husbands and lovers do in Paris. They love to weep. It is as usual for a man to weep in a French play as it is for a women.

Simone saved the play from dreadful wreckage. Without her it would have been impossible. She played the thankless, foolish and inane role magnificently. Why she did it I don't know. Her secret is certainly more interesting than Bernstein's. We know his, but we don't know hers.

A charming little actress named Madeline Leiy played Henriette, and the men were capable enough in their artless French way. But a more unsatisfactory Bernstein play has not yet been written. This playwright must realize that he is no psychologist.

BOGUS PRINCESS TALE OF RICHES WINS CLUBMEN

Frenchmen Accepted When They Propose, But She Departs With $12,000 Worth of Gems.

Special Cable to The American.

PARIS, July 5.—A prominent young Parisian clubman was visited recently by a handsome woman, who represented herself as "Princess Salam," and presented a letter of introduction purporting to be signed by Monseigneur Journe, Canon of Caracas, whom the clubman had met at a society drawing room.

The visitor related that she belonged to the Salam-Ryndurg family, Princess of the Holy Empire. She had married, she said, a nobleman connected with the Imperial family who had left her an immense fortune while in addition her private fortune amounted to $60,000,000. She now wished to reside permanently in France.

Clubman Proposes.

The clubman offered to do all he could to be useful to the "Princess". They met frequently, and at last the clubman proposed marriage and was accepted, and he placed on the "Princess'" finger an engagement ring that had cost $6,000.

A few days later the "Princess" departed for Madrid ostensibly to settle family matters and to have an interview with King Alfonso, but in the meantime she had related the same story to another clubman, a friend of the first, who had also presented to her a $6,000 engagement ring.

After her departure one of her fiances discovered that his friend and himself had both been duped.

Worked Scheme Before.

The police informed him that the self-styled "Princess" was an adventuress named Adelaide Julia Madeline Jelle, born in Paris in 1874. Eleven years ago the police learned that she obtained jewelry under a similar pretext, and that in 1905 they had again been called upon to investigate her identity in connection with a case of blackmailing.

The "Princess" was arrested at the railway station on her return from Madrid.

Rome to Hear Opera Of Eloping Princess

Princess Louise and Her Pseudo Husband to Attend the First Performance.

Special Cable to The American.

ROME, July 5.—Next week will see the first production of the new operetta, "Principessa Bizzarra," or "The Strange Princess," from the joint pens of Princess Louise, of Saxony, and her pseudo-husband, Signor Toselli. The libretto is by her Royal Highness, and Toselli has composed the music.

It is further stated that Right, the well-known tenor, has been engaged to play the part of the husband of the Princess in the play. An announcement that "both Princess Louise and Signor Toselli have promised to be present at the production" attracts more attention than the operetta itself.

Few court scandals have surpassed in vivid interest the stormy periods of the life of Louise of Saxony.

Mrs. Clark still walks up the hill to the postoffice on Fridays to draw her old-age pension, and "I'm sure I'll go on doing it for many a year yet," she said.

Count Eulenburg Is Most Decorated Man

Kaiser's Court Chamberlain Has 76 Orders—Can Not Wear All of Them.

Special Cable to The American.

BERLIN, July 5.—According to an enumeration just made of orders and decorations by the Kaiser, Count Eulenburg, the imperial court chamberlain, enjoys the distinction of being the most decorated man in the world.

Many prominent Germans have received orders to the number of 30 or more, but Eulenburg possesses 76, including some of the highest in Europe. It would be a physical impossibility for him to wear them all at the same time.

Kaiser Wilhelm in the 25 years since his accession to the throne has created 28 orders or decorations of various classes.

Noted British Attorney Makes Legal Mistakes in Disposition of $2,000,000 Estate.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, July 5.—A noted English lawyer has been added to the long list of those who have drawn their wills badly. He was Sir Richard Nicholson, of Cleveland Gardens, Hyde Park W., lately Clerk of the Peace for London and Middlesex, and legal adviser to the late Lord Salisbury. He died in March, leaving an estate of nearly $2,000,000. About $200,000 of this was bequeathed to charities.

The will is dated April 13, 1898, and there are thirteen codicils. Affidavits of due execution were required because of alterations in the first, second and fifth codicils, and as to the misquotation of the date of another codicil.

She did not refer to the surplus weight which greatly burdens the Queen in all active exercises.

The other students agreed to protect Zachailo and barricaded the doors of the college. When the police arrived shots were exchanged and two students were seriously hurt. The door was finally broken down, the students overpowered and Zachailo arrested.

She is the prisoner of the chief of the hostile Beni Bouyahi tribe, but is said to be well treated.

It has been discovered by the police that the man was enticed by a woman to the neighborhood of the anatomical laboratory. After members of the society had murdered their victim they placed his remains in the laboratory, where they were used for research purposes.

French Marry, But 14,579 Get Divorces

Births For 1912 Show Increase of 8,537 Over 1911, Which Was Nation's Worst.

Special Cable to The American.

PARIS, July 5.—Population statistics for France of 1912 show a slight improvement as compared with those for the previous year, which, however, was the first for over a century.

The improvement is due rather to a decline in the death rate than to an increase in the births, the explanation being that the great heat of 1911 carried off a large number of persons. The number of births last year amounted to 750,000, being an increase of 8,537, but marking a lamentable decline as compared with the average of 800,000 ten years ago, 900,000 25 years ago, and a million previous to the war.

A notable point is that marriages were never more numerous. On the other hand, the list of divorces continues to swell, the number last year being 15,579.

Churchill Plans to Seize Premiership

Wants to Form Coalition With Opposition and Make Asquith Chief Justice.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, July 5.—It is a matter of public knowledge that the principal subject of discussion between Messrs. Asquith and Winston Churchill during their trip on the Adriatic is the future fate of the Cabinet.

Churchill, it is said, believes the Radical party can not gain another election. He, therefore, plans to join the men of the opposite party and form a coalition government.

In the arrangement Asquith might become the Chief Justice, while Churchill would strive for the post of Prime Minister.

A decision is expected soon.

ASQUITH IS MENTIONED FOR LORD CHIEF JUSTICE

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, July 5.—The latest rumor in regard to the Lord Chief Justiceship is that Premier Asquith is likely to accept the post himself. It was rumored a few days ago that Sir Rufus Isaacs, the Attorney General, would probably be appointed to fill this high office, although it was expected that such action would arouse sharp criticism of the Prime Minister because of the connection of the Attorney General with speculation in Marconi shares.

Soprano to Sing for Revenge on Jilter

Maria Barrientos Signs With Hammerstein to Work Against Gatti Casazza.

Special Cable to The American.

PARIS, July 5.—Arthur Hammerstein announced to-day that he has contracted with the Spanish coloratura soprano, Maria Barrientos, now singing in Buenos Aires, for the opening of Oscar Hammerstein's opera season in New York. Arthur said he had succeeded in closing the contract by cable to-day against Campanini's competitive offers for the Chicago season because of Maria's long standing feud with Tita Ruffo, the baritone, with whom she declines to appear.

But he added that perhaps the really deciding factor in inducing Maria to sing for Oscar is that she will be delighted to sing against the Gatti Casazza opera house. The impresario, according to Arthur, was once engaged to Maria, but threw her over for Mme. Francesca Alda.

Thus said Hammerstein, the Spanish soprano will have the chance of overshadowing Alda as soprano, snubbing her alleged former fiance, Gatti, and earning $2,000 nightly, which is given out as her salary. Gatti Casazza is in Paris. His secretary said he was stranded somewhere in the suburbs of Paris because of the taxi strike which was on.

Alexandra Back in Society; Mary Vexed

Queen Mother Opposed by Daughter-in-Law, Who Feared Lost Laurels.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, July 5.—Queen Alexandra, who has been living quietly at Sandringham and Marlborough House since the death of King Edward, but who is as bright and youthful looking as ever, has now decided to take her rightful place in London society, and will be giving a series of entertainments, and especially a number of dances, for her two grandchildren, Princess Mary and the Prince of Wales, who have never attended any such functions under their parental roof.

The Queen Mother's decision to return to society greatly annoyed Queen Mary, who opposed it as much as she could, fearing that her beautiful mother-in-law would outshine her, but she was conquered by the Dowager Empress of Russia, who convinced her that Queen Alexandra was in real earnest and that it would be far more sensible on the part of the Queen to ask Queen Alexandra to support her in the great number of society functions she often finds it difficult to discharge herself.

ACCIDENTS CUT LARGE FIGURE IN DIXIE RACE

Mobile Is Hit Hard by Injuries to Star Players—Jacobson and Starr Out.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., July 5. Announcement from Mobile that "Baby Doll" Jacobson and Charley Starr will be out of the game for weeks adds another chapter to the longest list of serious accidents that ever marred a Southern League season. While Gillespie, of Chattanooga; Yantz, of New Orleans, and Dilger, of Birmingham, are the only players who have been knocked out for the season, many others have been hurt so seriously as to prevent them from participating in the pastimes of their clubs for weeks.

Repeated accidents have necessitated pitchers and catchers working in many games out of their positions. Mobile has utilized Campbell and Hogg. 'Andsome 'Arry McIntyre has subbed on numerous occasions. Memphis has played few games without the services of Old George Merritt. Chattanooga used Hannah and Golden in utility roles, and Atlanta had Catcher Graham in the outfield for weeks, and these all in addition to the regular utility man who is on the payroll of each club.

* * *

MOBILE has been perhaps the most unfortunate of all in recent weeks, though the Gulls were remarkably lucky while obtaining their long lead. The Gulls missed Paulet for a few games at the start, Campbell going to right and Robertson to first. Then they got together and with a regular line-up began to climb rapidly, soon amassing a big lead. Two weeks ago hard luck returned and today finds the Gulls much nearer the rest of the teams and still slipping. Starr suffered a broken hand and still carries the injured member in a sling. Jacobson's injury is more serious as a permanent problem. It consists of a strained side and fever which has weakened him so that he may not play for two months.

Chattanooga's dose at the hands of fate is well known. Jimmy Gillespie is out for the year and drawing a salary from the coffers of the club while he recovers from the effect of a terrible blow on the head by a ball pitched by Hardgrove. Kid Elberfeld is now out of the game from another "beaning" process, and at least one game, if not two, has already been lost on account of the mishap. The team was fortunate in having a utility man to thrust into the breach in Williams, and in the Gillespie case in getting another third sacker who, while not quite as good as Jimmy, is good enough to keep third base from being a sieve.

Birmingham is another club that has suffered heavily. Dilger, the Barons' first catcher and one of the best throwers in the league, was the first to receive a serious injury and a break to put him out of it for the year. The club's two highest-priced players, who cost $5,000 to purchase them—Knisely and McDonald—have been repeatedly out of the game on account of injuries or sickness. Marcan has also been crippled, but forced to play most of the time from dire necessity. The Baron list was increased last week by a most serious blow. Hardgrove, the club's leading pitcher, being struck in the face by a batted ball and rendered hors de combat for weeks.

* * *

MEMPHIS was always "jonahed," and Bernhard has had a hospital list full ever since he took the reins of the club. This year the absence of Schweitzer doubtless has injured the club considerably. Center Fielder Love has also been out frequently. Bill has been able to keep his infield intact, however, and with battery men also unscathed has been much more fortunate than in former seasons.

Atlanta has had but two serious mishaps since the season started. Bailey was out for several weeks with a strain. Chapman, the second catcher, has just returned to the game on account of a broken finger, and Joe Dunn has wilted under the strain of too much work behind the counting station.

Nashville has been uniformly lucky. Young was ill for a time during the first of the season, but the infield has presented an unbroken front up to Goalby's injury this week.

Down at New Orleans, George Yantz's fatal "broken slide" to second in a game with Chattanooga in May put him out of commission until August, with a busted ankle. Other members of the Pels have been out for a few days with minor injuries, but the blow to Yantz was the most serious.

* * *

THE league's record of the past four seasons is liberally sprinkled with injuries to star players—Scotty Walker, Champ Osteen, Roy Ellam and many others being knocked out for practically entire seasons and leaving weak spots which were rarely patched up. And, generally, the pennant-winning club has been the one fortunate enough to escape the hospital.

The frequent serious injuries to regular players make the utility man a valuable institution. How the Southern clubs managed to drag along without one in the old fourteen-men-limit days seems almost a mystery now. Rohe, of Atlanta; Sentell, of Mobile; Breen, of Montgomery; Atz and McIntyre, of New Orleans; Merritt, of Memphis; Carroll, of Birmingham, and Williams, of Chattanooga, have done some yeoman service in the Southern flag chase, even though they don't play in every game. Doubtless, ere this, Bill Schwartz regrets that he tied a can to Summers, his man-of-all-work, as Goalby was injured a day after Summers departed.

CONNIE MACK WANTS FORD; WOULD TRADE OUTFIELDER

PHILADELPHIA, July 5.—Connie Mack is willing to let New York have one of his extra outfielders, Jimmy Walsh or Pete Daley, the coast star, provided Frank Chance desires to turn over to him Russell Ford. Mack, when asked concerning the report which emanated from New York that Chance desired an Athletic outfielder stated he would be willing to hand over either player mentioned for Ford.

"But, you know," said Mack, with that quizzical smile of his, "there is no hope of getting Chance to let Ford some our way."

New System for Olympic Games

Big Change in Rules Planned

NEW YORK, July 5.—The initial steps toward systematizing and standardizing the Olympic games of the future will be taken within a month at Berlin. On August 20-24 there will be held the first conference of the provisionally formed International Amateur Athletic Federation, at which time a world-wide track and field governing body will be established. Representatives from the national amateur sport-controlling body of every civilized country have been invited to attend, and a real working agreement and basis for future international meets will be established.

At the present time the committee in charge of the federation affairs consists of P. L. Fisher, Great Britain; Pierre Roy, France; Carl Diem, Germany; H. Stankovits, Hungary, and James E. Sullivan, United States. These committeemen, in addition to a number of other delegates, will assemble in Berlin several days before the opening of the conference in order to discuss in an informal way the plans and scope of the new organization. To the athletes of the world the recommendations of the I. A. A. F. to the international Olympic committee will be of great interest. While the new body has not the slightest authority in matters pertaining to the Olympic games, its recommendations will undoubtedly carry much weight with the Olympic games committee when that body meets a year later at Berlin to plan for the Olympic meet of 1916.

Will Suggest Reforms.

This is particularly true because it is known that the I. A. A. F. will suggest a number of radical reforms, which, backed by the athletic governing bodies of such nations as the United States, Great Britain, Sweden, Germany, France, Finland and the British colonies, are likely to be incorporated into the permanent Olympic games code to be prepared at the conference of 1914.

It will be strongly urged that the Olympic committee adopt a standard set of track and field events at recognized distances and weights to hold for all time, and that this program be separate and distinct from such usual Olympic sidelights as skating, yachting, polo, tennis and other modern features of sporting competition. No objection to these sports will be interposed by the I. A. A. F., but it will be suggested that they be held as distinct and apart from the standard Olympic program.

The American delegates, consisting of Gustavus Kerby, Colonel Robert M. Thompson, James E. Sullivan, Barton S. Weeks and Joseph B. Maccabe, will ask the new association to suggest that a number of perpetual trophies be secured and awarded during the games at Berlin in 1916. These will include a grand international trophy for the winner of the greatest number of points in all the recognized Olympic sports of the meet, together with a number of minor trophies for the winning nations in track competition, swimming, wrestling, cycling and similar tests—these trophies to be held for three years and then returned to the country holding the succeeding meet.

The question of the measurement methods of future games also will be discussed. At present the Olympic meets are based upon the metric system, whereas the leading athletic nations of the world use yards and feet in measuring track and field sports. It appears likely that this proposed reform will fail, however, owing to the fact that the metric system has been used in Olympic games since the ancient meets in Athens and is really a better understood system, from an international standpoint, than that afforded by the English measuring methods.

No Way to Compare Men.

At present there is no way of comparing the best efforts of the world's leading athletic performers under the two systems. For example, the 100 yards, a standard sprint in America, England, Australasia, Canada and South Africa, is nine yards one foot and one inch short of the 100-meter sprint. Despite this clash in the two measuring systems, it is probable that the point of substituting the English for the metric system will be passed if the countries most interested can secure a standardized set of Olympic events. This in itself would be a great advantage and assistance to countries preparing to enter teams, since it would permit the program to be known several years in advance. In addition, it will bar the local Olympic committees from inserting in the schedules a number of events or contests which are intended purely for home athletic talent and which continue for a period of time which absolutely bars foreign entrants from continuing in the competition.

O'ROURKE SIGNS CONTRACT TO MANAGE CARL MORRIS

NEW YORK, July 5.—Tom O'Rourke has signed a contract to manage Carl Morris, the Oklahoma giant, for a period of three years, and as soon as there is a chance for a match here Morgis will start for this city.

O'Rourke also holds a contract on the services of Albert Palzer, who is out on the Iowa farm, rapidly regaining his health and strength. Palzer recently submitted to a serious operation by a New York surgeon. It was successful, and the big fighter now feels sure that he will whip all the white hopes.

Until Palzer is able to stand training O'Rourke intends to develop Morris. The veteran manager says that Morris' great strength and pluck are unexcelled by any of the leading heavyweights, and that Carl simply lacks knowledge of ring tactics. As soon as he learns how to hit, O'Rourke believes that the Oklahoma mastodon will reclimb the ladder.

COURTNEY ADVISES NEW DATE FOR CREW RACES

ITHACA, N. Y., July 5.—Coach Charles E. Courtney, of Cornell, today sounded a warning to crews of visiting colleges to hold the Poughkeepsie crew races next year under more favorable tide conditions.

He said that during some of the recent races the tide was against the shells, and for this reason they could not have won.

This was true of the Pennsylvania and Washington four-oared crews, he said.

REULBACH TIRED OF CUBS; AFTER BERTH WITH REDS

CINCINNATI, OHIO, July 5.—Ed Reulbach, one of the Cub premiers in the days of pennant winners at Chicago, wants to get away from the Cubs and would like to see President Murphy trade him either to Joe Tinker's Reds or to the Boston Braves. "A change of scenery would do me a lot of good," said Reulbach. "Murphy has treated me all right, but I don't seem able to win for the Cubs."

TINKER TELLS PITCHERS NOT TO WALK SLUGGERS

CINCINNATI, OHIO, July 5.—Joe Tinker, boss of the Reds, has ordered the abandonment of an extremely ancient custom—that of passing a heavy hitter to get at a weak one. No trick in the valendar causes as much wrath among the bugs as this, but Tinker isn't playing to popular approval in ordering his pitchers to discontinue the idea.

What's the use? says Joe. The percentage, even with a big slugger, is 3 to 1 against him and in favor of the pitcher. Why not go right after him? Why decrease your own per cent of advantage by putting another runner on the bases, especially when the other fellows can yank out their weak hitter and send a tough pinch hitter in his place? That play is off the map for his club hereafter.

YANKEES' NEW BALL PARK WILL BE READY IN 1914

NEW YORK, July 5.—Announcement was made to-day by officials of the New York Americans that its new baseball plant would be ready for occupancy when the 1914 season opens. The plant is located on Washington Heights, just a short distance from the old Highland grounds and will be one of the finest in the country. It will cost over $400,000. The Yankees, homeless this season, are playing at the Polo Grounds.

NO BASEBALL FOR EWING; STICKS TO LIFE ON FARM

BELLEFONTAINE, OHIO, July 5. "I can't get away from the farm," is the reply of Bob Ewing, former National League pitcher, to Manager Bade Myers, of the Canton Interstate team, in response to Myers' request that Ewing join his pitching staff. Ewing is living in retirement on a big farm in Auglaize County.

HICKMAN IS SCOUT FOR NAPS.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, July 5.—Charley Hickman, the old Toledo player, now coaching the University of West Virginia team, is to go with the Cleveland club as a scout.

FIFTY YEARS OF ATHLETICS PUTS AMERICA ON TOP

James C. Sullivan Writes on the Value of Exercising for Youths of United States.

By James E. Sullivan.

Secretary-Treasurer of A. A. U. and "Father of Amateur Athletics."

NEARLY half a century has passed since the introduction of amateur track and field sports into this country, and in this long lapse it has frequently been asked what was the real object of those early pioneers of athletics.

It is a question not very difficult to answer. They wanted fresh air and exercise for themselves and to set a good example to the youth of America for after time. I allude to men like the late William B. Curtis, Harry E. Buermeyer and many others, men 50 years in advance of their time, who foresaw the growing need of physical development and outdoor exercise.

Had not the wisdom of these old-timers prevailed, where would America be to-day in amateur athletics, especially with regard to our rating in the Olympic games? Why, we would be worse off than Russia, Denmark or Austria, nations which have not so far produced a first-rate performer either on track or field. We lead the world, and the American athletes have taken the championship in every Olympiad since the first revival in 1896.

Americans Should Improve.

As to future Olympic fixtures, I see no reason why we should not continue to carry off the point honors, for, to my mind, we will continue to grow better from year to year, as the exploration of new districts will surely produce new material. This introduction of new material means everything. An instance of the force of the last statement is that of the State of Utah. Ten years ago if a man had talked of a world's champion coming from Utah he would have been ridiculed, yet at the last Olympic games in Stockholm Almah Richards, of Brigham Young University, Utah, was the hero of the running high jump, and is to-day the greatest natural jumper the world has ever seen.

Athletics a Religion.

For the boys athletics has simply instituted an eighth-day religion, as it were. It has taught him that in order to be a success in either track or field he must be good, morally and physically.

To participate in school sports nowadays the boy is impressed with the idea that he must first of all observe the rules of the sport, and that under no circumstances can he use abusive language to his superior or to another boy. Should the boy be guilty of any of these things there is always a referee at hand to discipline him and point out the error without being harsh or unduly severe.

The honesty of competition is also brought home to the youth. If he cuts the course, shoulders another boy, does not touch off in a relay, he suffers a just disqualification, and thus it is shown to him, in the most convincing manner that, after all, honesty is the best policy.

Johnston Will Steal 100 Bases This Year

Chattanooga Lad Has Already Pilfered 50 Sacks in 85 Games With Seals.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., July 5.—Jimmy Johnston, the Chattanooga lad now with San Francisco, is setting up a new stolen base mark in the Pacific Coast League. He has already stolen over 50 bases in 85 games and at this rate will steal far more than 100 bases in a season. Jimmy hopes to make the mark at least 125 before the season is over, a record that has never been equaled in the annals of the professional sport.

A sample of the work Jimmy is doing is seen in the following excerpt from The San Francisco Examiner regarding a game against Venice in which Jimmy recently participated:

"Jimmy Valentine Johnston stole yesterday's ball game right out from beneath the nostrils of H. Hogan's Venetians. Jeems', little stunt came in the ninth inning, when our beloved Seals were one run behind after one of the slowest and curiously enough one of the most thrilling, nerve-racking battles the season has yet produced.

"This wholesale robbery on the part of James Valentine Johnston made the score a tie. It also made it possible for the Seals to win out in the tenth."

Two Major Castoffs Are Sure to Return

Morgan and McQuillan Do Great Work for Class AA League Clubs.

Two pitchers who were cast off by major league clubs seem destined for another try in the big show next year. They are Cy Morgan, of Kansas City, and George McQuillan, of Columbus.

Failure to keep in condition was responsible for both of them departing the major circuits. Both have settled down, and either would help out a lot of clubs that are now faltering.

Morgan and McQuillan have already won over 15 games this season.

Mons. Hedges should have no regrets at having traded Lefty George for George Stovall. Lefty won six and lost eight battles for the Toledo club, where he was sent after being found wanting at Cleveland.

HOBBY'S BROTHER A STAR; GAINING FAME AS SLUGGER

CINCINNATI, OHIO, July 5.—Clinton Hoblitzel, younger brother of Dick Hoblitzel, of the Cincinnati Reds, has been elected captain of the High School baseball team of Parkersburg, W. Va., for the season of 1914. The selection was made by the unanimous vote of his teammates.

Young Hoblitzel is an outfielder and a heavy sticker in his class, giving promise of following in the footsteps of his distinguished brother, who started his baseball career as captain of this same school team.

MANY WANT THE BASEBALL THAT LASTED ENTIRE GAME

CINCINNATI, July 5.—Manager Joe Tinker is busying himself to-day turning down requests for the baseball that lasted throughout the entire game Sunday between the Reds and Cubs. It is believed that this is the only time in major league history that one ball continued in play from the beginning to the end of a full game.

LOSS OF GREAT TRIO BREAKS UP PIRATES' TEAM

Retirement of Clarke and Sale of Leach Put Big Hole in the Pittsburg Squad.

CINCINNATI, OHIO, July 5.—For a dozen years the Pittsburg Pirates have served as a pennant contender in the National League and their unexpected slump is the mystery of the 1913 race in the Lynch organization.

What has caused the team picked last winter to fight it out all the way to slip down into the second division has not been analyzed, but according to scribes here with the Corsairs the absence of that famous combination, Clarke-Wagner-Leach, is responsible for the downfall of the Pirates.

Since the day the Louisville and Pittsburg clubs consolidated and the stars of the Colonels—Clarke, Wagner, Leach, Ritchie, Phillippe and others—went to Pittsburg the Smoke Town organization has been right up there each year in the pennant chase.

Queer to See 'Em Down.

To see the Pirates trailing down in the second division is something unusual. For these dozen past years the Pirates have had Clarke, Wagner and Leach. And during the twelve seasons Pittsburg always was one of the main factors in deciding what team would be the pennant winners.

On four occasions the Pirates reigned supreme in the circuit. In 1901, 1902, 1903, the Pirates won the pennant and then in 1909 Clarke with his great combination repeated and topped the season by winning the world's series from the Detroit Tigers.

But now all that remains of the marvelous trio is Honus Wagner. Clarke retired in 1911 and in the middle of last year Barney Dreyfuss put through a trade with the Chicago Cubs which took Leach away.

Breaking up the great trio, Clarke now is trying to rebuild his forces. He is buying all promising recruits but finds it almost impossible to get successors not only for Tommy the Wee, but himself.

When Kitty Bransfield left the Pirates, Skipper Fred had a difficult task locating a competent first sacker and not until he converted Second Baseman "Dots" Miller into a first baseman did he succeed.

And now comes his troubles in developing outfielders to take the place of the positions covered by Leach and himself.

Must Fill Wagner's Place.

Probably when Clarke is lucky and picks up a pair of juvenile stars then he will have to find somebody to relieve that ancient and marvelous Wagner. At present, Honus is in the big arena on his nerve alone. So long as Hans can put on a glove and move about he'll be at short for the Pirates, but the information comes that even the burly Teuton is about ready to retire.

Johnson Has 'Made' Baseball

Instituted Much Needed Reforms

By W. J. McBeth.

NEW YORK, July 5.—Organized baseball owes much to Ban Johnson. He broke in as a rebel chief, but once firmly established in power, became the big Czar Johnson through his American League instituting a number of long-needed reforms. He made of the much-abused umpire a national figure instead of a "scapegoat," and by forcing respect for him from the player eventually commanded also the veneration of fandom. It was Johnson who was largely instrumental in stamping out all forms of rowdyism upon the field. And when he had forced recognition to equality from the National League, he was one of the leading spirits for peace and good will toward one happy, concerted union for the common good.

The Johson regime marked a new era in professional baseball. He was at first looked upon with suspicion. It was not believed at the time he expanded to major league distinction that there was room for two big circuits. He not only proved that there was, but by furnishing the big cities of the country which are now represented in both National and American with high-class sport every day throughout the entire playing season, added such an impetus toward universal patronage that the great pastime has gone booming on more and more steadily with each succeeding season.

Competition is the life of all healthy sport, and so the American League, as a rival to the National, was just the proper thing to arouse such interest as is manifested at present. But for Ban Johnson's invasion of the parent major league territory it is doubtful if there would be any steel and concrete stands to-day. And it is doubtful also if Ty Cobbs would be demanding $15,000 salaries. For after the old war days the pay never did adjust itself to former planes.

Square Deal His Motto.

Wherefore, the American League—which, in the opinion of Mr. Johnson, is, after all, the only major league doing business—has the heartfelt thanks of all well wishers of the game. It has always been very popular with the public, and especially with the playing fraternity, for it has always stood for a square deal both for the patrons and the public. Still baseball frenzy is a law unto itself, and the very rivalry, friendly as it may be between the two major leagues, has left along the trail of the last decade two distinctive factions in fandom. One faction worships at the shrine of the National and another at the footstool of the American League.

Ever since the American League began to cater to the public fandom has argued over the relative strengths and merits of the two major leagues. The debate never will be closed so long as both continue to do business. The patronage of each is loyal still, and in the division of opinion lies the secret of box office receipts. A fan is ever open to argument; to conviction, never.

Leagues Are on a Par.

Baseball writers in the big cities where both major leagues are established are rather an unbiased lot. They are generally of the opinion that there is no appreciable difference in the respective strengths of the big leagues. And why should there be? The present-day magnate stands ready to sacrifice the limit of profits in the hunt for talent. Each club has its scouts scouring the country for new players. There is little choice among the rival managers. Each circuit boasts its great popular heroes.

There was a time when the American League overshadowed its tottering rival. That was back in the war days of ten years and more ago. The young circuit, in the hands of young and vigorous capital, its who had gone in on a gamble, put up the money to rob the National League of its best known stars. There was such an exodus of talent from the parent major that the old-established organization was left weak, indeed.

NORDYKE QUITS AS UMPIRE.

PORTLAND, July 5.—Lou Nordyke, veteran player, telegraphed from Spokane his resignation as umpire of the Northwest League to Fielder Jones, president of the league. "I could get along with the boys when I was one of them," telegraphed Nordyke, "but as an umpire they look different."

VOLS MUST GET BUSY; TEAM IS SLUMPING FAST

Failure to Secure Ameida and Dodge From Reds Puts Big Hole in Team.

NASHVILLE, TENN., July 5.—Will wonders never cease? The Vols have at last stuck a few plugs in the numerous punctures in their inner wall of defense, by landing a batch of new faces for their line-up. While the bugs were waiting, breathless, for William ("Alibi") Hirsig to round up the cream of the Cincinnati Reds, Bill Schwartz got tired of fooling with his boss and hustled around and annexed Infielder Baumgartner from the Macon Sally Leaguers while the Vols' mogul was editing a story about Tinker sending Third Sacker Granfield to Nashville, after Dodge and Almeida had failed to come.

The poor old Vols have been floundering about since Kitty Goalby had his fin punctured by Dave Robertson's spikes, and the only crumb of comfort in the disaster was the hope that the accident would force Hirsig to shell out for some real ball players.

Granfield a Mystery.

Just as everybody expected, waivers could not be secured on the Cuban Almeida, and Dodge, hitting like a house afire, was too valuable a man for the Reds to turn loose. Hence Mr. Granfield, if one happens to be so affected by the intense heat that one can have faith in Hirsig's statements. Outside of the fact that Granfield is reported to be a third baser, he seems to have no antecedents at all. Where he came from or what his record is is as big a mystery as who hit Billy Patterson.

But Baumgartner, who will relieve Brackenridge, the pitching second-third sacker, comes highly touted in all departments, except in the hit-and-run column, which fact isn't causing anybody to be hilarious over his arrival in camp. There are already too many weak sisters on the team handling the ash, the wretched Vols seldom being able to pry more than five bingles off any twirler's delivery, and at the same time sandwiching in about half as many bobbles as hits, which is about the real reason for their miserable showing at present.

Doak Fails to Report.

Nothing has been heard of Pitcher Doak, the star of the Interstate League, who was to be traded for Charlie Case. But the fault of the lowly Vols' showing isn't all with the slabbers, for Mathewson or Walter Johnson couldn't bring home the bacon did their pals fail to push a tally or two across for them, as is the habit of Hirsig's hired men. They did get Phil Redding from the Cardinals, together with a thousand real dollars, in exchange for big Harry Glenn, who with Akron has been clouting the ball in terrific fashion, and landed Adams, a big right-hander from Savannah, paying $1,500 for the Sally League flinger. None but Hirsig can imagine what he intends to do with all these slabmen. Maybe he intends to trade the entire gang for one real, honest and true batter, who can do more toward lifting the poor old crippled Vols out of the ruck than all the pitchers in the world.

Not a bug in town but sympathizes with Bill Schwartz, who, it is admitted, can do wonders with a bunch of bushers, but it's thumbs down for the boss with the 10-karat alibi who sits calmly by and hopes that somebody will walk up and hand him a perfectly good ball player.

Thomson Will Face Many Good Rivals

Platt Adams, Mercer, Donahue and Other Stars to Compete Against Present Champion.

LOS ANGELES, CAL., July 5.—With the entries for the all-around championships, which will be held here on Bovard Field July 12, the outlook for the coming event is exceedingly good. Many coast athletes who could undoubtedly have made good records in all-around championships in years past are taking the opportunity to enter the coming classic and that Fred C. Thomson, the present champion, will have to look for his laurels in the coming event goes without a doubt.

Probably the most serious contenders for the present champion will be Mercer, the phenomenal Quaker, who has startled the Eastern critics with his work of late; Platt Adams, of the New York A. C.; James Donohue, of the L. A. A. C.; Ed Beeson, of California, and Ollie Snedigar, the Olympic Club representative. All of these men are first-class performers, better in some events than in others, but can hardly be given credit as such first-class performers as Thomson until they have shown in the all-around tryouts.

AURORA MAY GET FRANCHISE.

AURORA, ILL., July 5.—A majority of the directors of the local baseball association favor going back into the Wisconsin-Illinois League, and it is certain that Aurora will take over Milwaukee's franchise. The directors are expected to formally approve the proposition when they meet Monday night.

Dubuc Throws Curves With Three Motions

DETROIT, MICH., July 5.—Jean Dubuc, the French-Canadian pitcher of the Tigers, attributes his success as an American League pitcher to the fact that he can deliver his curves, his slow ball and his fast ball with three different motions and have control of the ball at the same time.

"Years ago, when I was pitching with Notre Dame College, I learned that speed without control was valueless; I always had pretty fair control of my delivery, but with the acquired knowledge I began perfecting different deliveries and gaining control of the ball in each," says Jean.

"It took years of patient effort to acquire the delivery I now have, but I believe it is one of the least trying on the arm and shoulder muscles for the reason that I put the weight of my body behind the pitches and do not depend on the strength of my arm to send up a fast ball.

"I worked with my slow ball for three months before I could get a curve to it, and after that it took me three years to perfect the delivery."

Introducing New Evidence

Heisman Gives Advice to Umpires

Arbiters Should Follow Plays

By J. W. Heisman.

IN my last story I wrote of the way an umpire should handle the decisions that come up in a ball game while he is standing back of the catcher and home plate. Problems of a somewhat different nature often confront him when he takes his stand out in the field of play behind the pitcher.

The umpire should take this latter position whenever a man gets on base, with the idea of being nearer to the scene of action in case he should be called upon to render a base decision.

From this position he will find that he has a better view of the plate and of pitched balls than when behind the catcher, for the reason that the pitcher in front of him will not interfere so much with his view of these plays as does a catcher.

Standing behind the pitcher an umpire must always be expectant of the pitcher or catcher throwing to a base to nail a runner, and he should be sure to follow the play carefully or else he will find that something has happened without his knowledge. He should be quick to apprehend a throw of the pitcher down to second, and be sure to jump quickly out of the way.

Must Get Close to Play.

The point that I consider most important of all for an umpire to bear in mind, is to get as close as possible to the base at which you expect to have to make a decision, without being or getting in the way of the play itself.

Suppose a man is on first and the batter hits safely to right with the hit and run on. It is certain the runner on first will attempt to take third on the hit, and the right fielder will make his throw to that sack. In such case the umpire ought to be within a couple of feet of third base at the time the throw and the runner get there, in order that he may be in the best possible position to judge. The same rule holds good for other plays at other bases; and if it appears that there is likely to be a double play he should have the second play in mind and get after that one also. For the life of me I can't understand why so many umpires think all in the world they have to do is to stand in one place, look wise and make the best guess they can. If they would only MOVE and get about the field, the same as a referee and umpire have to do in football, they would find themselves working into positions where they could give decisions that would meet with more general satisfaction.

Take the case of a fly ball or line drive hit right down the first or third base line. Often enough an umpire has plenty of time in which to run over and sight along the line before the ball hits the ground, but half of them never stir out of their tracks. This is the result of laziness and such a man is unfit to umpire a game; if it is mere thoughtlessness the fault should be corrected, and can easily be.

Don't Argue With Players.

Some players seem born to kick in ball games, whether they are captain or not. If I were umpiring a game I would never listen to anybody but the captain, and not him except in case of his differing with me as to the wording or interpretation of a rule, never in case of a question of fact. There is no reason on earth why baseball players should be allowed to argue and delay games as much as they do. It is not permitted in tennis, basket ball, football, track or any other sports. In fact, it would be very bad form for players to question an official's decision in other sports the way they do in baseball, and certainly in no other country are officials treated with the general discourtesy that we see exhibited by players to umpires in every baseball game in this country.

But if, in umpiring a game, I found I had made a mistake, whether in interpreting a rule or in deciding a question of fact, I would certainly have no hesitation whatever in reversing my decision on the spot. The prevalent idea that after an umpire has once made a decision he can not change it is nonsense. Of course he could not do so after the game had gone on a while, other players come to the bat, etc. But if before any further playing has been done the umpire ascertains that he has made a mistake he can undoubtedly reverse his decision. In fact, we see it done every day. An umpire calls the runner safe, but right after, or soon thereafter, observes that the fielding player or baseman did not catch and hold the ball as he, the umpire, at first supposed he had. Clearly the runner should have been called safe, and what choice has the umpire but to reverse his decision and call him so?

Umps Fooled in Trapped Ball.

Quite often an umpire is called upon to decide whether an outfielder caught a ball before it touched the ground or whether he got it on a trap. Too many umpires are fooled by the clever acting of the outfielder who pretends always that he caught it on the fly, whether he really did or not. Umpires should entirely disregard the actions and behavior of the player after getting the ball, and judge entirely from the way his eyes saw the play. This same proposition confronts an umpire every time he has to make a base decision where the runner only got the base, if at all, by a clever slide around behind the baseman and the latter had a hard time getting to him to put the ball on him. Both players will try to "pull the wool" over the umpire's eyes by their actions, which should be strictly disregarded. The only way to make sure that your eyesight alone shall be the test of whether the man is out or not is to run close up on the play and BE ON HAND so you can see for yourself.

Many first basemen have a habit of pulling their heel off the bag before they catch the ball. An umpire should be careful to note whether the first baseman's foot is in contact with the sack at the instant of catching the ball or not. He should also be sure to follow the course of the runner all the way around the diamond and observe whether he touches all the bases. Most umpires are watching the fielding of the ball, which is really none of their affair at all, instead of watching what the base runner is doing. The ball will come in all right some way or other, and it is proper that you should have your eyes on what is happening on the bases rather than the way the outfielders are getting the ball back into the diamond.

Umpires must also take firmly in hand the matter of spectators crowding out toward or upon the diamond. If he can not get them back himself he should hold the home management responsible for this disorder, and, after giving them a reasonable time in which to get the spectators back, he should notify them that unless they succeed in clearing them away within two minutes more he will award the game to the visiting team.

Arbiters Should Know Rules.

Umpiring is like playing in one respect, and that is that the more experience one gets the more proficient are they apt to become. That and these few hints may be of much benefit to one contemplating doing some of this work; but above all make sure that you know the rules. You may think you know them because you have a general idea of how the game is played, but anyone who thinks they know every rule in baseball will do well to go right out and buy a rulebook and read it through very carefully from beginning to end, and if they don't find at least a dozen things in the game that they never heard of before the circus lemonade is on me.

Reds Are Composed Of Young Pastimers

Cincinnati Expert Ridicules Yarn That Club Is Home for Aged Ball Players.

CINCINNATI, July 5.—Criticism was made on the personnel of the Cincinnati Reds recently that the players are too old to deliver the goods and that that is the reason why they have occupied last place so long. The critic declares that the Cincinnati club was an old man's home and could never win until new life was instilled into it by the substitution of young men for the alleged "old-timers," who were said to be cluttering up the field.

Investigation shows that nothing could be further from the truth. As a matter of fact, the Reds, as now constituted, are one of the youngest clubs in the league.

Joe Tinker naturally is the oldest man in the regular line-up, and Joe is only 32 years old, and as fast as he ever was. Hoblitzel is only 24, though he has four years of experience as a major league first baseman.

Heine Groh is a youngster, and so is John Dodge, the latter having just passed his twentieth birthday. The infield is the youngest in the league, for if Almeida plays third he is only 26, and does not bring the average up very much. In the outfield Bob Bescher, the oldest man out there, is only 28, while Josh Devore is 24 and Marsans 25.

Some of the pitchers and catchers are older men, of course, which is as it should be. John Kling, the veteran of the club, is 37, but still in excellent form. Tom Clarke, who has been doing most of the work behind the bat this year, is only 24, and Earl Blackburn, the third backstop, has just turned 20.

CARNEY PUTS IN FIRST CHALLENGE TO PLAY DE ORO

ST. LOUIS, MO., July 5.—The next match for the world's three-cushion championship will be played between Alfredo DeOro and Joe Carney, Frank Benson, the local billiard impresario, received word Friday morning that Carney, the Denver cueist, had placed his challenge ahead of all other performers, and would meet DeOro when the fall season starts in September.

It was thought that John Horgan would attempt to regain his laurels ahead of anybody else, after losing to the Cuban out in San Francisco last April, but "Banker Jawn" now will have to wait until Carney and DeOro play.

Carney was the carom expert who surprised the billiard world by defeating DeOro about a year and a half ago. Had DeOro won that match he would have secured possession of the diamond trophy. Carney's first match as champion was with Horgan, and the Sixth Street idol won with ease.

FEDERAL LEAGUE TEAMS ON WESTERN INVASION

INDIANAPOLIS, July 5.—The Federal League's Western invasion will open Monday, July 7, when Chicago will play at Kansas City, President John T. Powers said early to-day before departing for his home in Chicago. It is believed, league officials assert, that all work necessary to transfer the Covington team to Kansas City will have been completed by that time.

Edward Eckblad Is Foremost White Hope

That's Real Name of Gunboat Smith, Who Is Among Leading Heavyweights.

ST. PAUL, MINN., July 5.—The Gibbons brothers of St. Paul are not the only Minnesotans who are top-notchers in the squared circle, for no less a personage than Gunboat Smith, at present leading figure in the white hope brigade, started his journey to fame from this State. "Gunboat" Smith's real name is Edward Eckblad. He was brought up in Milica Township. His mother, who is now Mrs. Rosen, still lives in that township.

Young Eckblad is well remembered in Milica Township as a sturdy young fellow, always handy with his fists and of an adventure-loving disposition. Many stories are told of his prowess with his "dukes" at little disagreements such as occasionally arise at country dances.

The monotony of life in the country did not appeal to him, and in, 1908 his eye was caught by one of "Uncle Sam's" advertisements depicting the joys of life in the navy, showing groups of young tars and non-commissioned officers standing around, apparently with little to do.

TINKER HAS HIGH HOPES.

CINCINNATI, OHIO, July 5.—Joe Tinker denies that he has given up hopes for this season and says he is building his Cincinnati team to run in 1913, not next year, as some have intimated. Tinker is right when he says there are a good many games to be played yet before the pennant is won.

1914 OLYMPIC GAMES WILL BE STAGED AT ATHENS

NEW YORK, July 5.—Next year's special Olympics at Athens, Greece, will be staged on March 25, the same day King Constantine is crowned by his subjects.

With the exception of an aeroplane contest, the same program of events that was put on in 1906 will be duplicated at this meeting. The games and festivities will last until May 5.

It is expected Uncle Sam will be represented by a small team. Only the best material will be sent to fight for the Stars and Stripes in Greece. The 1915 sports at San Francisco follow, and then the Berlin Olympics. The public will be asked to contribute for two of these trips.

Cotton Seed Meal a Southern Asset Poorly Appreciated by Southern Farmer

Affords One of the South's Greatest Advantages in Livestock Raising. Is Rich in Plant Food Content and Lends Itself Admirably to Soil Fertility.

CHARLES A. WHITTLE.

Georgia State College of Agricultu re.

It is time for an ode to the golden meal similar to Timrod's to the cotton boll. Lurking in the heart of the fuzzy little seed are wonders incredible. Presto! They troop upon the stage at command of the genius of invention. Now, it is a dainty, elusive and rare perfume; now it is a shimmering liquid that parades as olive oil and defies the epicure to say it is not; now it is enthroned in snowy whiteness in the frying pan; now it is the Jersey's golden butter—but this isn't the ode. This is intended to be a very practical discussion, entitled "How the South turns its cotton seed over to others to go to the trouble of extracting some several millions therefrom, and how the Southern farmer could tap the golden stream without a worry."

The South gets about $16,000,000 for its crop of cotton seed, but if it got what the ultimate consumer pays for it in its various manufactured forms it would get a hundred million dollars. The South does not know all of the tricks of cotton seed transformation. The painstaking, delving, plodding German has unearthed several cotton seed gold mines which he has securely staked. Here the production of swineless lard and a few other edibles more or less known to the public has kept the cotton seed from expatriating the greater part of its resources.

Where the Farmer Comes In.

But to the farmer who grows the cotton, that produces the seed, that the mill grinds and the wonder workers transform, it is up to him to get his fertilizer from it and something more.

A ton of cotton seed contains 58.8 pounds of nitrogen, 21 pounds of phosphoric acid, 31.6 pounds of potash. Convert the seed into meal and a ton of meal will have more than twice as much nitrogen as a ton of seed, nearly three times as much phosphoric acid and considerably more potash.

From 40 to 50 gallons of oil can be obtained from a ton of cotton seed. The oil is not needed for feed or fertilizer. It is, therefore, a product that should go on to the manufacturer to be produced into various forms for the benefit of mankind. The farmer should look to the residue of the seed after the oil has been extracted as a further source of revenue.

A ton of cotton seed meal has plant food constituents or fertilizer values worth $24.26 per ton. The question is, How shall this meal be applied with greatest benefit to the farmer? Shall he apply it direct as a fertilizer or shall he feed it to live stock and apply the manure as fertilizer?

Feed it.

That cotton seed meal takes the place of corn in an animal's ration and can be bought in the South and be fed in the corn belt of the West cheaper than corn has been demonstrated by many years of practice. If cotton seed meal can be shipped to the West and North and fed successfully, what ought the South not gain by feeding it at home?

But—it is a shame to say it—the Southern farmer is not feeding the cotton seed meal, but he is selling it to the Western farmer and is buying from the Western farmer corn to feed. Penny wise and pound foolish! It is not to be explained upon any other basis than that the Southern farmer has not learned how to feed the meal, generally speaking, of course. There are farmers feeding meal in the South, but few, comparatively speaking.

Nothing stands in the way of feeding cotton seed meal in the South. Nothing in the climate forbids it. The food requirements of live stock do not forbid it. In fact, whenever cotton seed meal has been properly fed in the South it has always been with success.

Helps to Make Stock Profitable.

The unbeliever might query: "What is the use of feeding cotton seed meal in the South if cattle can not be raised in competition with the West?"

Cattle can be raised in the South in competition with the West, but, of course, cotton seed meal alone will not account for it. Without the silo, without making use of the long grazing season, without using the double cropping possibilities of a long growing season, and without making the best use of cheap cotton seed meal, there is no use to try to compete with the West in beef production. By making use of the advantages offered, however, nothing whatever can put the South in second place.

In dairying, where the profits are larger than in the growing of beef, these advantages count for even more in the South than elsewhere.

The live stock to which to feed cotton seed meal and the willingness of the farmer to feed cotton seed meal are, of course, two very important essentials. One can not raise cotton alone and make a success of growing live stock on the side by buying the feed supplies. The Southern farmer must raise corn, wheat, oats, peas, clover, cotton, fill a silo and have Bermuda pasture, if he is going to grow live stock successfully.

Indeed agricultural progress in the South awaits diversified farming. Cattle can not be raised without growing the feed crops. The feed crops can not be used to best advantage without cattle on the place. Permanent upbuilding of the fertility of soil can not be accomplished without cattle, diversity of crops and crop rotation. That is the circuit which agricultural prosperity travels. Thus it will be seen that cotton seed meal has an important role to play in the progress of Southern farming.

How It Affords Cheap Food Supply.

In feeding cattle four things are of importance to the farmer: Dry matter, digestible protein, digestible carbohydrates and digestible fat. Dry matter is cheap enough and easy enough to get in the form of a variety of "roughness." Protein is different. It is the most expensive but very essential, going chiefly to building up nerves and tissues. In this element cotton seed meal stands far ahead of other feeds ordinarily used in this country. Carbohydrates build the fires, as it were, under the boiler in heating up the animal and supplying it with energy. They are abundant in most forms of feed raised on the farm. Being easy to get and abundant, carbohydrates are, therefore, comparatively inexpensive.

Fat is another one of the expensive food elements and also very important for building body fat. It can also take the place of carbohydrates as a source of energy and heat. Here again cotton seed meal comes to the fore. It excels in fat contents.

In three particulars cotton seed meal excels—dry matter, protein and fats, when compared to corn, corn bran, wheat bran, wheat middlings, rice bran and oats. The rank of cotton seed meal with some of the leading concentrates is given in the following table:

Name.	Dry Matter, Lbs.	Digestible Protein, Lbs.	Digestible Carbohydrates, Lbs.	Digestible Fat, Lbs.
Corn	89.1	7.9	66.7	4.3
Corn and cob meal	84.9	4.4	60.7	2.0
Corn bran	90.9	7.4	59.8	4.6
Wheat bran	88.1	12.2	39.2	2.7
Wheat middlings	87.9	12.8	53.0	3.4
Rice bran	90.3	5.3	45.1	7.0
Oats	89.0	9.2	47.3	4.2
Cotton-seed meal	91.8	37.2	16.9	12.2

The table speaks for itself. There is nothing in the class with cotton-seed meal for protein and fats. In no form can these comparatively expensive food constituents be purchased so cheaply as in the form of cotton-seed meal.

Value as Fertilizer When Fed.

Having determined the unquestioned value of the good contents of cotton-seed meal, how about its value as fertilizer when fed to animals? Here it is: A ton of cotton-seed meal contains 135.8 pounds of nitrogen, 57.6 pounds of phosphoric acid and 17.4 pounds of potash. Here again cotton-seed meal shines as compared with corn, corn bran, wheat bran, wheat middlings, rice bran and oats. None of them are in the class with cotton-seed meal in nitrogen, the most expensive of all plant food. The following table will show the relative standing:

Name.	Nitrogen.	Phos. Acid.	Potash.
Corn	26.4	14.0	8.0
Corn and cob meal	28.2	11.4	9.4
Corn bran	32.6	24.2	13.6
Wheat bran	52.4	57.8	32.2
Wheat middlings	52.6	19.0	12.6
Rice bran	14.2	5.8	4.8
Oats	41.2	16.4	12.4
Cotton-seed meal	135.8	57.6	17.4

From this it can be readily seen that the droppings of cattle fed on cotton seed meal will afford the most economic source of nitrogen when compared with other foods. Since about 75 per cent of nitrogen consumed by live stock in the form of food may be returned to the soil in the form of manure, it will be observed how inexpensively cotton seed meal can be made to put nitrogen in the soil.

Incidentally it may here be observed that 25 per cent of the nitrogen plant food in the cotton seed meal can be used to fatten an animal and the balance returned to the soil whence it came, to feed other plants. Is it not better to use the 25 per cent in feeding live stock than in returning it directly to the soil in the form of meal fertilizer?

The 25 per cent of nitrogen of the total content of the food, when fed to animals, gives ample return, but probably in no way more than in milk production. Always where Southern dairymen have used cotton seed meal better returns were received. In feeding beef cattle, cotton seed meal and silage are by all odds the cheapest combination of a ration.

In What Quantities to Feed.

The average ration fed to work animals in the South is 14 pounds of corn and 12 pounds of mixed hay per day per 1,000 live weight. It is deficient in protein. Add two pounds of cotton seed meal to the ration and we have nearly the correct standard. It will not hurt the mule or horse. It simply affords him what he needs and his system craves. Mix 900 pounds of corn, 750 pounds of oats and 300 pounds of cotton seed meal and 300 pounds of wheat bran and feed about 15 pounds per day per 1,000 live weight of horse or mule doing hard work, and good results will follow. The 15 pounds, of course, should be divided into three parts and fed morning, noon and night along with mixed hay or stover.

Another convenient combination is 1,500 pounds corn and cob meal and 300 pounds of cotton seed meal, to be fed, of course, three times a day, a total of 15 pounds per day, and along with it roughness.

A mixture of nine parts corn and one part cotton seed meal has been fed to hogs to advantage at the Alabama station, reducing the cost of gain per hundredweight from $7 or $10 per day to $5 or $6. Its value in feeding to dairy cattle has been mentioned. From four to five pounds per 1,000 pounds live weight when a cow is giving two gallons of milk per day is recommended to be fed with ordinary roughness. For beef production from 3 to 6 pounds of cotton seed meal can be fed, depending upon the size of the animal, along with silage and roughness.

Important to South to Boost Meal.

It is curious with all that has been demonstrated of the feeling advantage of cotton seed meal, the case which has often been made in its favor in dairying and beef production, the fertilizing value too clearly made known to leave doubt, that there should be those essaying to be agricultural leaders who, on every occasion choose to speaksoftly in advocacy of this vital resource of the South—cotton seed meal. There are not many. They do not openly oppose. They dare not in the face of a world of facts. Their purposes are concealed and doubtless few are deceived. It is unfortunate, however, when there is so much to be done to educate the Southern farmer to the vast benefits to be derived by the largest possible use of cotton seed, that there should be any one standing around with fingers crossed and "allowing" that it is a good thing for the cotton seed crushers. Of course, it is a good thing for the cotton seed crushers. Why should these progressive Southern men not have a good thing if there are any coming along? Why should not everybody wish not only that the cotton seed crushers should get something out of cotton seed meal but that the Southern farmer should also get something good out of it? What excuse is there for anybody living in the South not boosting the uses of cotton seed meal for every cent that the South can get out of it? Is anybody else more entitled to it?

The feeding of cotton seed meal in the South does not have to be boosted in order to provide a market for cotton seed meal. Germany, Sweeden Norway, Denmark, Holland, England France and practically the whole civilized world is buying cotton seed products for feeding purposes. The North is a large consumer. The cotton seed crusher can get along without the South, but the South will be foolish to try to get along without getting every cent it can out of cotton seed meal as a feed for animals.

SCIENTIST TO EXPLORE LAND OF CANNIBALS

Writes That He Is on His Way to Explore the Guainia, Little Known River.

BOSTON, July 5.—A letter from Dr. Hamilton Rice, F. R. G. S., the explorer, from San Jose, Rio Guaviare, to a Harvard classmate, has just been received, and in it Dr. Rice makes known his intention of exploring in the vicinity of the Guainia River, which is supposed to be inhabited by cannibals. Dr. Rice has made many expeditions to South America, and in 1908, when no word had been received from him for a long period, he was thought to have been lost, but a short time afterward he returned to Boston.

The letter, which is as follows, describes his expedition to his friend:

Letter Tells Experiences.

"I made this place a base last July and worked south from here to the Hilia, Macaya and Ajaju Rivers, reaching the last-named river November 12 at 5 p. m., and taking observations and locating it November 13. Only six of us arrived, four white men and two Indians. At Takanemue I had the party cut down from 22 to 12, and of these, later on, eight refused to advance, but we compelled two of the Indians to continue. The retreat from Ajaju is a great story, but must wait until my return. It was wild, eerie country which has never before been visited and very difficult to work through, not only as rough country, but from the constant dread of most of the men and Indians, who feared attacks from the Carijoria Indians, who have been unusually active of late in killing 'blancos' and Huilotos.

"In a few days I am leaving here with two big canoes and a crew of five men to descend Cauo Grande and explore Yuirida, and on the way down try to push through overland to the Guainia, near its source. The Indians of Guainia have the reputation of being cannibals, owing to the non-appearance of several expeditions from San Fernando de Atabapo, hence it has not been easy to get men to go, and even when they would consent, doing it only at a high figure.

Canoe Destroyed.

"This lot will go down as far as the first Indian settlement on the Yuirida, about 30 days down; from there on I shall have Indian crews. One of my canoes was destroyed by a thunder storm, a big tree falling and breaking it; the other is useless, and, as canoes cost $150 each, it makes quite an item in one's exchequer.

"I have the whole country from Bogota well mapped, and two maps as well as all the data of 120 observations (astronomical) have been sent to the Royal Geographical Society.

"I have also performed a number of surgical operations, have some 250 slides of blood smears of fevers and pliaria and other parasites in the blood of animals examined.

"January 19—Exciting day. All the crews here are drunk. My pilot, whose woman does not wish him to go, has had all his clothes burned by her, and he is now beating her, armed with a machete and a revolver. I am also about to operate on a man wounded by a Yamu Indian arrow."

'Pluck Out Tonsil,' Doctor's New Method

New York Specialist Declares That Knife Is No Longer Needed in Operation.

CHICAGO, July 5.—Instead of cutting out a tonsil, Dr. Harold Foster, of New York, announced to-day, that he would pluck and has plucked out a diseased tonsil "as a man would pluck a cherry."

Only long fingers and a firm grip are needed, he says.

This remarkable declaration was made at the meeting of the American Homeopathic Society, over which Dr. George A. Shepard, of New York, presided. Dr. George A. Suffa declared, too, that the knife need not be employed to cure strabismus of certain types—"cross-eyes." The surgeon instead of cutting the muscles of the eye need only "take a loop in one or more of them," then tie the loop. After that the patient looks straight.

U. S. Gem Bill for June Is $5,102,917

Imports in Month Break All Records, According to Figures of Jewelry Examiner.

NEW YORK, July 5.—Gem imports for June broke all records, according to figures compiled by William B. Treadwell, jewelry examiner at the Appraisers' Stores. The total reached $5,102,917, of which the cut precious stones and pearls are value at $3,920,175 and the uncut gems, mostly diamonds, at $1,182,742.

It was predicted in Maiden Lane recently that the total value of the gem receipts throughout the United States would exceed $50,000,000 during the fiscal year, and these figures were considered a conservative estimate.

The large figures are due to the fear of importers of an advance in the duty under the new tariff.

First Woman Wills Her Body to Science

Leaves Strange Bequest in Hope That Her Remains Will Aid in Scientific Research.

PHILADELPHIA, July 5.—Miss Lucy Hunter Baird, the wealthy Washington society woman, who died here Juen 19, bequeathed her body to Dr. S. Weir Mitchell and his son, Dr. John King Mitchell, directing that they should perform an autopsy. She is perhaps the first woman in this country to will her body to science.

Miss Baird suffered for several years from a nervous ailment, and Dr. Mitchell and his son did much to relieve her. It was out of gratitude to them and with the hope that an autopsy might reveal facts of future value to humanity that she inserted the strange clause in her will.

GUN METAL SHOES POPULAR.

A great many tan shoes for men are being sold this summer at wholesale, but in the better class trade gun metal finishes are the most sought. Narrow toes and low, broad heels are favored.

POULTRY

Southern farmers are neglecting the most profitable end of the fowl industry. Pekin Duck is the best all-round fowl for the market producer. Indian Runners are great layers.

By JUDGE F. J. MARSHALL.

There is but little question that the domestic duck originated from the wild duck which was widely distributed over the British Islands.

It has fallen to the lot of England and America to do most of the perfecting of the tame varieties, although one, the Pekin, was imported from China in a rather crude state.

At this time we have a dozen standard varieties of ducks.

The duck, while not nearly so commonly bred as the chicken, has great commercial importance in some sections of this country. In Philadelphia, Boston and New York it is a favorite with epicures.

Its principal market role is in the shape of what are called broilers or green roasters. As such they use the larger varieties—the Pekin, Aylesbury and Rouen. These ducks will weigh as high as 17 pounds to the pair at maturity.

Ducks on Farms.

Although but little attention has been paid to them by farmers, a good class of ducks could be made a very profitable addition to the farm stock. So many farmers, particularly in the South, have tried to keep the old puddle duck, as they were called, and derived but little revenue from them. Where they have gotten some of the fine breeds, they have found them money-makers.

The Pekin, as Americanized, is our most profitable market duck. As they stand to-day, they represent nearly three-fourths of the commercial duck business of this country.

New York, New Jersey and Massachusetts have breeders who raise these ducks by the thousands to be marked at from two to three months of age. They grow twice as fast as would a chicken during this time.

While the Aylesbury and the Rouen will make as large a growth, it has been thought that the Pekin takes less time, and for that reason they have been universally used for market purposes.

E. W. Fly, of Chalfont, Pa., writes for The Reliable Poultry Journal, telling of the remarkable growth of ducks as compared with chickens. It requires about three months for the average chick to reach two pounds, while ducks will reach that weight in less than half that time, and are ready for the market in seven weeks.

Ducks More Profitable.

In experiments conducted for the purpose of determining the relative value of ducks and chicks, it was found that at the end of nine weeks the average weight of the ducks was four pounds and 8 ounces, average weight of chicks two pounds. Ten ducks sold for 28 cents a pound, or $12.60. After paying the shipping expenses, the receipts were $9.68. The food cost $2.36, leaving a net income of $7.32. The chicks sold for 24 cents a pound, the receipts being $3.74; cost of food was 82 cents, leaving a profit of $2.92. The difference in profit in favor of the ducks was $4.40.

Repeated tests have clearly shown that the Pekin or any of the larger breeds will make wonderful growth if they are properly fed and handled. Of course, they must be of a healthy strain, uninjured by being bred to fancy points. Good, strong outcrosses are necessary to the vigor of any variety.

James Rankin, of Massachusetts, one of the first poultrymen of this country to take up the production of early market ducks, after experimenting with all kinds, says that the Pekin will yield the most profits. As he raises over 12,000 ducks yearly, a variation of 1 cent per pound will make a difference of $500 in his yearly income.

Early Ducks Make Early Layers.

Mr. Rankin not only puts a lot of early roasters on the Boston market, but he keeps over a lot of these for early layers the following fall and winter. It is as essential for him to have the early layers as the early roasters for the markets. They must furnish the eggs for hatching the following season's crop of ducks.

Mr. Rankin holds the distinction of being the first, or one of the first, to make a success of the market duck business by hatching his stock in incubators which he himself constructed before the days of the incubator proper.

The best breeders have found that it does not pay to feed or pamper weaklings. They have found that the ducks do much better when they are allowed a good run and fed out of doors at all seasons. This has reference to stock ducks, for the youngsters have no time to get hardy. Running water is one of the real essentials for Pekins, where they are kept for practical purposes.

Feed for Young Ducks.

One of the best methods of feeding young ducks for about a week is as follows: One measure of corn meal, one of middlings, one of good wheat bran; mix with sweet milk or water, with grit added. Do not have it sticky, but nice and crumbly. Second week—One and one-half measures of corn meal, one measure of middlings, one of wheat bran, one-eighth measure of beef scraps, one measure of roasted bread and one half measure of green rye or clover. Third week—Two measures of corn meal, one-half of bran, one-sixth of beef scrap, one-half of the green clover or rye.

Fourth week—Two measures of corn meal, one and one-half of bran, one-half of middlings, one-half of the beef scrap, one-half of the green stuff. Fifth week—The same, with three-fourths measure of the beef and two of the greens. Sixth week—The same. Seventh week—Three measures of corn meal, one and one-fourth of bran, one-half measure of middlings, one of beef scrap and two of green cut clover or rye. Eighth week (if finishing for the market)—Leave out the bran and add the amount in corn meal and middlings, which will tend to brighten the carcass.

During the last week of feeding avoid anything that may taint the flesh, such as onions or too much rye. Where the ducks are to be kept for layers and not forced for the market it is best to leave out the increase of corn meal and feed as for the fourth week right on to maturity, except a feed of mixed grain once a day, preferably at night.

While this feed is used largely for the development of the Pekin for the broiler market, it is all right for any kind of duck raising.

Indian Runners Disappointing.

During the last ten years the country has gone wild on the Indian Runner. It is best for laying. But many persons have been disappointed with their results, not being able to keep the Runners up in health and strength during a siege of this heavy laying.

We believe this is due more to the vitality of certain families which have been bred for character of feathering rather than for vitality and productiveness. We think that with the same care bestowed upon them as has been given the Pekin for real strength and health that they would do much better in holding up to the work of heavy laying.

These ducks were brought into England over 50 years ago in rather a crude state as to markings, though of a decided Runner type. They came from India. They are of very early maturity, and, as we have said, when well handled, are remarkable layers of much more delicately flavored eggs than the larger members of the duck family. A white egg is claimed for them, although many lay greenish-tinted eggs.

Type of Runners.

Our American Standard gives the Indian Runner as of a fawn-and-white color. There are many who contend the true Runner should be a white with a coarse penciling of fawn and white. In real type the Runner is slim and erect in body, with a long, slim neck, and head carried high, with bill straight out.

Being somewhat of the Leghorn type, they are of but little value for the market. For flavor, it is all right, but the producer is not willing to pay as much to produce a four-pound carcass as it does to get six or seven in the Pekin.

After we have considered the practical varieties, we have the more ornamental, such as the Crested White, Muscovey, Call and Blue Swedish. The later is remarkably beautiful in type and coloring. The Gray Call is very much the same as the wild mallard. In fact, they are of such a wild nature that during the migratory seasons they are decidedly restless. They are called the bantams of the duck family.

The duck question for the practical breeder resolves itself into two proposition—If you want eggs, take the Runners; if meat and eggs combined, the Pekin.

Farmers Will Raise Cattle Scientifically

Nebraskans Pledge to Follow Instructions in Effort to Cut Cost of Living.

LINCOLN, NEBR., July 5.—To do their part in reducing the high cost of living 200 Nebraska farmers have pledged themselves to devote their time, talents and energies to increasing the production of beef cattle and to follow the instructions of the university experiment station, which has for several years made a special study of raising cattle for beef by what it believes to be the best methods.

"The fact that the population of the country is increasing at an average of 20 per cent every ten years, while beef cattle are decreasing 7 per cent, has aroused the nation to a realization that the high cost of living can never be lowered until this state of affairs is mended, and that the farmers are responsible for the work is just as apparent as that the present conditions exist," said Dean Burnett, addressing the farmers.

11TH OF FAMILY GOES TO NURSE LEPERS IN INDIA

Rev. Gottfried Hahn, Now in New York, to Finish Education Preparatory to Life of Sacrifice.

NEW YORK, July 5.—Rev. Gottfried Hahn, recently ordained a minister of the German Evangelical Church in St. Louis, is in the city, preparatory to beginning a journey to India to sacrifice his life among the lepers.

He is on his way to become a missionary to Purulia, India, where hundreds of the most desperate cases of Asia are cared for and taught to look upon Christianity as their hope.

And more marvelous still, he is but following in the steps of eleven other members of his family, including his aged mother.

Regards Action as Duty.

Like Father Damien, young Hahn regards his action as a duty to his church and God. No one could better understand the horrible conditions he must face than he does, for he was born there.

"I shall finish my preparation. Then I will return to India and enter upon my work there," he said simply.

"My father gave his life to the work in that field and I must take it up later myself if my health permits.

"Mother is ill and I do not believe will live much longer. Nothing would delight her more than to know before she dies that I, too, will continue in the work of my father."

To him it is all in the day's work. His sister, Maria Hahn, is the wife of the superintendent of the colony. She has been there for years and has faithfully and courageously given her life to the cause.

Physical Being Frail.

Certainly if his father and if his sister and all of his other relatives could do what they have done and are doing, why should he hesitate, asks young Hahn.

Hahn, who is 26, came to America several years ago to pursue his theological studies at the Evangelical Seminary in St. Louis. His frail physique forbids his returning immediately to the lifework of his kin in India.

As soon as his health warrants his assuming the life of sacrifice and devotion, he will sail to Southern India, and follow in the missionary work of his people.

The St. Louis man is the fifth in his family to be ordained in the ministry.

His father, Rev. Ferdinand Hahn, who died in 1910, more than 40 years ago began his services as a missionary in India.

Three of his sons came to America after working for years in the colony.

STATE POLITICS DISTURBED BY WOMEN VOTERS

Kansas Parties Try in Vain to Predict Results of Fall Elections.

TOPEKA, July 5.—Kansas officeholders are not particularly interested in what effect the tariff legislation is going to have on their jobs or what the President is going to do next.

They are wondering and working industriously to find out what the Kansas women are going to do in the next election. The women were given full suffrage by constitutional amendment last fall.

Kansas has polled in the neighborhood of 350,000 votes at its general State elections and from 30,000 to 40,000 more at the Presidential elections. It is generally estimated that the women vote of the State will not be less than 300,000, and the politicians are greatly worried about this vote.

Three thousand women, scattered through every Kansas county, carried on the suffrage fight last fall and won. That is the total number of active workers in the cause of suffrage.

If there were a big moral fight on in Kansas, like the resubmission of the prohibitory law, it is a certainty that 280,000 of the 300,000 women voters in the State would go to the polls. A comparatively small number of women could upset any political scheme in the State, which usually wages very close political fights. With a big human scrap on there is no doubt about the number of women voting, but in an ordinary election the men who have managed campaigns for years are entirely at sea.

If the women should follow, in a general way, the political bents of their fathers, husbands or brothers, there would be no changes in the politics of Kansas. But no one knows what the women are likely to do.

MILLIONAIRE TO SPEND RICHES FIGHTING RUM

Seeks to Secure Constitutional Amendment Outlawing All but Wine and Beer.

PORTLAND, OREG., July 5.—S. Benson, millionaire timberman, will spend a fortune in an effort to secure the adoption of a constitutional amendment prohibiting the manufacture, importation and sale of whisky, gin and similar spirituous liquors.

Mr. Benson said he does not intend to make any effort to prohibit the manufacture or sale of wines, beer or malt products, but will confine his efforts to putting the whisky industry out of business through the passage and enforcement of Federal laws.

This will necessitate the adoption of a constitutional amendment by Congress which must then be indorsed by two-thirds of the States to become effective.

Realizing the fight may take years to win and will cost him thousands of dollars, Mr. Benson has made an appropriation of $50,000 for preliminary work. If satisfactory progress is shown by the time this sum is spent, he declares he will make another large appropriation and as many more as the situation warrants.

"I have the money," he said, "and I want to spend it in a way that will bring good to the greatest number. I can think of no better way than to kill the whisky business absolutely. Figures gathered by experts show that 80 per cent of the people who drink whisky can not afford it."

BOY PLOWS UP WATCH.

BLUE EARTH, MINN., July 5.—While working in a field, the son of John Franke, living near here, plowed up a gold watch that he lost while at work in the same field seven years ago. The watch is an open face one, but the crystal had not been broken, and it is still in good condition.

BALKANS YET OFFER MENACE TO PROSPERITY

European Affairs Improved, but Vast Room Remains for Further Progress, Says Boersanier.

By BOERSANIER.

CHICAGO, July 5.- It is universally agreed that the Balkan war disorganized the world's finances. It frustrated what promised to be an exceptional boom in the United States. It stopped prosperity in Canada with an abruptness that threw the economic machinery of the Dominion almost into chaos. Europe, from the eastern end of Russia to France, from Norway to Italy, was thrown into confusion.

As Europe was the origin of the trouble, Europe is watched with keen and anxious eyes for signs of recuperation.

Europe is convalescing, but the convalescence is perceptible only to the eyes of the home expert. Too much was expected of the immediate effect of the signing of the preliminary treaty between the warring countries. An avalanche of fresh issues came on the market; securities attractive in form, substance and price. A few had scarcely been absorbed when an eruption occurred among the Turks' conquerors.

With the hereditary foe permanently vanquished, it had been unreasonable to expect all of the conquerors to lay aside their weapons and go to work. A fighter can not be converted into a dull and prosaic laborer in a day. Besides, there must be a paramount power among the allies, just as Prussia holds the whip hand in the Germanic confederation. The clash between Servia and Bulgaria is a contest for supremacy in the Balkans.

This may be troublesome. In the meanwhile, Germany is in need of capital, and Reichsbank, in its desire for gold, may pay a stiff premium, even as France paid it. America's monetary position is better, but not yet strong. We have the double task of moving full average crops and of financing a large number of short-term notes.

Briefly, the world's finances are not in a state to stand alarms and excursions in Europe. All the liquid capital that can be available the coming autumn will be wanted, and any action that tends to check the flow of capital might be embarrassing. Imagine, for example, what the effect would be if at the approach of autumn Paris took a gloomy view of international politics and began to call in her money. All who depend on French finance would find liquid capital, instead of expanding with the autumn's needs, contracted just when most wanted.

If these are the conditions of the world's finance, it is surely clear that what is needed now is not merely peace, but open good will and good understanding throughout Europe.

In a short sentence, Europe has improved, but the room for further improvement is vast.

English Carpets to Invade U. S. Markets

Tariff Situation Closely Watched, and Any Opening Will Be Seized by Britain.

NEW YORK, July 5.—Reports from carpet and rug manufacturers show that their mills are fully occupied in getting out orders which have been placed for the fall season. Reports to the effect that certain mills were closed, or partly closed down, have been promptly denied. The heaviest sales for the season have been on axminster rugs, and some additional orders are still coming from buyers who do not believe that they are sufficiently covered.

The opinion is becoming more general that fall prices were opened too low. Raw material has continued to move upward, and is in very short supply. There are a good many in the trade who believe that the tariff bill will not be passed in time to be of much service for the fall season, in the way of getting wool in free.

According to representatives of carpet houses in this market who have just returned from a visit to the manufacturing centers abroad, there will be keen competition on the part of the British mills for American trade.

Domestic manufacturers who believe that manufacturers in England will be slow to take advantage of a change in the tariff, are due for a rude awakening, according to the representative of one of the largest houses, who has just returned from England. Arraagements have been quietly made for going after the American trade, and on some lines the competition will be keen.

On certain lines British mills can not compete with the domestic mills, but othr goods of better construction and more attractive can be placed on this market below what domestic manufacturers can do.

DRESS GOODS DULL.

Business is quiet in the dress goods market at the moment. Buyers refuse to contract ahead until the tariff has been settled definitely. Cancellations are not so heavy as might be expected in view of the unsettled condition of the trade.

HOSIERY MOVES WEL.

Hosiery manufacturers who have put their spring (1914) lines on the market do not anticipate great difficulty in selling them up quickly. In several instances the biggest part of the season's production has already been contracted for.

KNITTERS MAY STRIKE.

The unsettled condition of labor in the sweater end of the knit-goods trade is causing the manufacturers some concern. Some of the mills making these goods have already had strikes, and it is said that other outbreaks are not unexpected.

Stock Exchange Working Hard to Restore Confidence

Old Secretive Attitude Gives Way to Campaign of Education—Queer Deals Cease.

NEW YORK, July 5.—Nearly a half-year has gone by since the New York Stock Exchange began measures of reform, and it is possible to gain a retrospective view of the results obtained. It may be said that the leaders in the movement are satisfied with what has been accomplished toward improving the general morale of operations in securities, and the groundwork laid for lifting the exchange above public reproach they believe to be secure.

The government committee has, in the first place, made application in recent months of the old adage about an ounce of prevention and a pound of cure. The committee has worked to eliminate incipient evils before they grew large enough to be subjects of general comment in the Street. The infliction of discipline—and there has been much discipline inflicted—has been gone about quietly, with the purpose of curbing infraction of the rules before greater infractions could occur. The effort has met with much success.

In consequence, largely, the exchange is entitled to considerable satisfaction over the fact that while recent sharp declines in the international markets brought in their train a number of failures in London, Paris and Berlin, not a single New York Stock Exchange house got into trouble.

Manipulation Dead.

"Manipulation is dead on the exchange," said a prominent member yesterday. "The governors have placed themselves so rigidly in opposition to every possible method of creating a fictitious market for a stock that no one would dare make the attempt. An outside operator might possibly try it, but the odds are greatly against any Stock Exchange house keeping his account if his trading became a matter of suspicion. There is no doubt about that. The committee on business conduct would take care of that end of the problem."

The committee on business conduct is, without doubt, the best adjunct to proper management of the exchange that has been added to the executive power in many years. The committee's function is to enforce proper conduct between members and their clients, to prevent reckless or unbusinesslike transactions on the board room floor, and to throttle manipulation. The scope of its influence is clearly seen in these three items.

Committee of Wide Powers.

The business conduct committee consists of five members, all of whom are members of the governing committee. The members have the power of examining the books of any Stock Exchange house at any time, to summon members of the exchange to explain acts which have been called into question, and to inquire into relations between members and customers.

If a stock begins to act strangely, the committee finds out who is buying and selling it, and the buyer and seller have to explain all about their transactions.

The committee reads carefully market letters sent out by commission houses. If it be decided that the contents are too much on the order of "tips," the house responsible therefor is warned that more matter-of-fact statements must be substituted for prophecies.

The formation of the committee on business conduct was one of the first products of the reform movement. The idea of having a number of responsible members in a position to get closer to the inner workings of the exchange than the larger board of governors was able to do was conceived by a special committee appointed to "consider the matter of handling margin accounts and rehypothecating securities and devise measures which will serve more fully to protect the public."

It is doubtful if the rank and file of Stock Exchange members realized how widespread would be the duties of the new organization. It was dubbed the "police committee" at first, and an impression prevailed in some quarters that the most onerous work of the members would be to prevent horseplay on the floor. Those who allowed this thought to submerge more weighty considerations were quickly disabused of it.

Educational Campaign.

Another direction taken by Stock Exchange reform which stands out prominent in the history of the past six months is in the way of education. There was a time, not so very long ago, when information about operations on the board was extremely hard to get. The attitude of the authorities seemed to be that the public did not need to know anything about a lot of matters. Such is not the case at the present time.

A committee has been formed which supplies inquirers with answers to all reasonable queries as to stocks, bonds, earnings of companies and methods of business on the exchange. Furthermore, this committee has carried the campaign of education to the public instead of waiting for the public to appear in Wall Street.

Hundreds of thousands of periodicals and newspaper clippings dealing with the Stock Exchange are distributed throughout the country monthly, and no opportunity is passed for disseminating information about the Stock Exchange in the year 1913.

LAST LINK DONE IN BIG HIGHWAY

No More Bogs Between Atlanta and Jacksonville After Next Week—Good Work Done.

VALDOSTA, GA., July 5.—Before the end of next week the highway from Atlanta to Jacksonville will be completed and the only bad place in the road will be repaired. It is a strip of two miles through the edge of Brooks County, between Lowndes and Madison, which the Commissioners of Brooks County refused to work because the road was not important to that county.

The business men of Valdosta put up the money to build a splendid highway through this strip of territory, and a large force of hands have been working on it for the past month under the direction of former County Commissioner Coffee.

Every day since the work was started large delegations have gone from this city to look after the work and to enjoy fish fries which Superintendent Coffee has been giving to the visitors on the banks of the river.

Weds a Minute After She Is of Legal Age

Bride-to-Be Stays Up All Night Rather Than Cheat Law of Few Seconds.

COLUMBUS, IND., July 5.—Miss Zyrl kept Cupid waiting until exactly midnight when she reached her eighteenth birthday, because she would not break the law covering legal marriageable age and marry Daniel Hughes to whom her parents had objected.

But not more than a minute elapsed before she stealthily withdrew from her house, whose parents were sleeping, and met Hughes not far away, waiting in an automobile. They drove to this city, wakened John Houk, Deputy County Clerk, and with him went to the court house, where she became Mrs. Daniel Hughes. Albert Jackson, a farmer, of Rock Creek Township, is her father, and Jacob A. Hughes, former County Commissioner, is father of the bridegroom.

KANSAS FARMERS CUT WHEAT BY MOONLIGHT

WICHITA, KANS., July 5.—To hasten the harvesting, farmers around Wichita are cutting wheat by moonlight.

Reports from Mount Hope and other great wheat fields says late rains and cool nights have filled out the heads, and that the average wheat yield is 15 to 20 bushels to the acre.

RAILROADS BUY EQUIPMENT ON EXTENDED TIME

Builders of Rolling Stock Show Increase in "Accounts Receivable" in Recent Statements.

NEW YORK, July 5.—One feature of the equipment situation which has apparently escaped general attention is the fact that the placing of orders for equipment by railroads within the past half year has depended to a very large extent upon the financial ability of the company taking the order to give long credit, and competition has not been ruled as much as usual by the matter of price.

That many railroads, to which new equipment was an absolute necessity, have been unable to purchase their needs out of current earnings and have been equally unable to finance purchases in the present state of the money market, was indicated by the large increase shown by the American Car and Foundry Company in its "accounts receivable." Other builders of rolling stock are understood to be in much the same position, and it is probable that the same state of affairs would be discovered were the books of rail-making steel companies to be examined.

It is for this reason that the equipment companies, whose earnings depend on railroad prosperity, are very much concerned over the question of a freight rate advance. It is felt that railroad purchasing, during the present summer, would have been fairly active had railroad earnings been satisfactory and had they been able to finance their needs, instead of falling off, as it has, to a state of stagnation.

At present, equipment buying is insignificant, the number of inquiries for rolling stock on the market being smaller than in a number of years, and although the car and locomotive building concerns have several months' business now on their books, it is evident that unless a revival in demand is witnessed, they will find themselves compelled to reduce mill operations considerably by the early fall.

Should the Interstate Commerce Commission decide, following its investigation, that freight rates now prevailing are sufficiently high, the equipment companies are likely to find themselves at the beginning of a long period of dull business, and the outcome of the freight rate matter is consequently being watched by these interests with considerable anxiety. As equipment concerns are large consumers of steel, it is obvious that the question is also of importance to the steel industry; apart from the direct demand from the railroads.

The long time carrying of railroad accounts does not appear to be a serious matter at present, as there is no doubt that the money will be forthcoming eventually, but it shows that a situation exists wherein an element of danger always lurks. Fortunately, the majority of the equipment companies at present are in excellent financial shape and are able to stand the strain of long credit, temporarily at least. It is to be hoped, however, that conditions will soon change so as to obviate the necessity for such long credits.

Carnegie in Favor of New Currency Bill

President Wilson Should Stand Firm if Opposition Develops to His Plans, He Says.

ZERMATT, SWITZERLAND, July 5.—Andrew Carnegie is keenly interested in the fate of the banking reform bill as presented to Congress by President Wilson.

"It is the most important and most necessary legislation on which America has had to decide for years," he says, "the present American currency system is a disgrace to the country. It is not true that bankers and leading business men are opposed to the measure. That is nonsense. The best bankers and business are for the reform. The Aldrich bill is all right and so long as the principle thereof is maintained I do not care about the details.

"If opposition should develop, my advice to President Wilson is to stand firm. When a panic starts other countries and governments possess the power to step in and act. Some speculators fail, it is true, but it is a good thing that they should do so.

"It is ridiculous to say," Mr. Carnegie added, "that the American Government has not the same power that the English, French and German Governments have. My position is this: If it is a question whether private bankers or the President acting for the American people shall come to the rescue during a panic, I am for the President taking action."

NEW EMBROIDERY MACHINE DOES DELICATE WORK

According to Consul R. B. Mosher, Plauen, Germany, Julius Grotschel, of that city, a designer, has invented an improvement in schiffli embroidery machines. He was assisted in perfecting the invention by a lace manufacturer of Plauen.

The invention permits the production on schiffli machines of thinner laces than have heretofore been woven and bone laces. Patent applications covering the invention have been made in Germany and other foreign countries.

The first machine embodying the improvement was constructed recently. Sample goods made on it showed many soft and delicate effects. The new machine has several schiffli rows, compared with one row in all the others. The bobbins may be changed and the bobbin thread stopped at will. It is said that the improvement may be added to any embroidery machine without hindering the use of the machine for ordinary work.

Peanut Shortage Coming; Chance for Georgia Farms

High Prices Now Paid for "Goobers" May Make Them Good Money Crop.

Although peanut raising has advanced greatly in recent years, the demand for peanuts has increased even faster, and dealers say that there is danger of a complete exhaustion of the present supply before this year's crop is harvested. In other years, when the domestic crop has been short, peanuts have been imported from Spain. Recent cable advices, however, have been to the effect that Spain has no peanuts to export this year.

Spanish peanuts now sell at wholesale for 10 1-4 cents a pound, and Virginia peanuts at 7 cents a pound. These are higher prices than have ever been known before. Last fall Spanish peanuts went above 6 1-4 cents, and other varieties above 5 1-2 cents, these figures causing New York operators to assert that the prices were too high, and that a sharp decline was bound to follow. Another year's showing of the vast increase in the consumption of peanuts in this country, however, has made it apparent that the peanut is destined to become one of the great staples of the country.

Leading dealers have recently been exploring areas adapted to peanut culture, and urging farmers to set out peanut crops. The probability of an overproduction at any time appears to be very small.

The nuts can be raised successfully in parts of New Jersey, and farmers there are taking a lively interest in the subject.

The peanut is easily cultivated, and singularly free from disease and insect pests. There are production records of 200 bushels an acre of the Spanish variety, while the general output from Virginia averages from 70 to 90 bushels an acre. The Virginia peanut is the better of the two.

Georgia farmers very probably would find profit in raising peanuts for market, in the opinion of the State Commissioner of Agriculture.

The last census report showed Georgia's crop for a year as 2,569,787 bushels, raised on 160,317 acres. Brooks County led, with an estimated 365,395 bushels. Thomas, Decatur, Grady, Colquitt and Berrien Counties also planted extensively in peanuts.

These peanuts are not grown for market, but for fattening hogs. The hogs are allowed to root in the fields for the nuts, after the vines have been cut off for the valuable hay.

The estimated average yield is 25 bushels an acre, 25 pounds to the bushel. At a price of 6 cents a pound, a farmer could get $37.50 per acre for the nuts, besides raising a good crop of hay.

In Louisiana and Mississippi, where the boll weevil has discouraged the planting of cotton, the farmers are turning to peanuts, and with considerable success.

Increasing commercial importance of the peanut, however, may yet make it a money crop in Georgia.

LUNCH BASKET TOURS CATCH MOTOR GIRLS

Milady Finds Joy in New Diversion on Jaunts in Country. How Plan Works Out.

By EVELYN WREN.

At last Atlanta motor girls have learned one of the cardinal principles of ultimate success in automobile life. I mean a new way of preparing edibles in a truly "jumped-up" fashion so that no matter how far away from the kitchen and the grocery store, or how keen the appetite, the motor girl can survive the crisis.

How does she do it? The answer is easy. She has begun to carry along with her on tiresome trips these hot summer months modern lunch baskets for automobile use, and she sets before herself and her fortunate companions the most toothsome edibles that dainty fingers can devise. Open-air luncheons and suppers are accordingly having quite a vogue. Why, it is frequently asked, should the motor girl hasten back to the town house for dinner or supper in broiling hot sun, when she can carry along a lunch basket, enjoy a meal from it and return home in the cool of twilight?

The Lunch Basket Appeal.

Many a man and many a women makes plans for week-end or daily excursions in which these open-air "feeds" have a prominent place. But it is especially to the women motorists, be they passengers or pilots, that this lunch basket idea makes its strongest appeal. There is something irresistible, dear reader, about a well-filled lunch basket. It is the suggestion of housekeeping and the horn of plenty, without any of the boresome formalities of drudgery or routine.

For those bent on pleasure of this kind, the motor departments of the shops have made ample provision, and there are some attractive novelties to be had for the proper consideration. In many of these the fireless cooker has been added to the old-time equipment, for preparing hot dishes in the open. This might even be so arranged as to do its work as one bowls along, and thus save waiting time at the halt.

Of course, of sandwich boxes, contrived compartments for good things, there is no end. Of these an attractive type is in the shape of a small automobile trunk, covered with black leather. Its cooker and other appurtenances, including the plates, are of aluminum, an ideal material for this purpose, because of combined lightness and strength.

Description of Kit.

This convenient kit, which can be carried either on the rack or in the tonneau, would make the motor picnic an assured success, provided, of course, that the viands which it was to carry had been chosen with discretion. It may be bought for $38.50. Another, a variation of the one just described, is priced at $17.50. This has white enamel fittings, plates and cups. The outside covering is of wicker, and the whole affair looks not unlike a straw-covered suit case. Naturally it has a handle for easy transportation, as has the leather picnic "basket."

The more expensive of the two outfits is surprisingly complete in the matter of fittings. Not content with containing merely the ordinary implements of gastronomic warfare, it has a neat teapot with tea ball, and even a tea strainer. Vacuum bottles for the liquid portions of the meal are, of course, indispensable factors in these baskets. In the aluminum-fitted one these are of two sizes.

Some cylindrical, alluring looking baskets of rough straw prove, upon the lifting of the lid, to contain camp cookers. These would be mighty handy things to have with one in a case of more or less protracted touring, and with one of them and a lunch basket of the modern sort, the motorist could be rather independent of habitations, and milady would have nearly all the required tools at hand for establishing a household wherever the call of the road might place her.

Milady's Beauty Preserved.

For short trips, and long ones, too, if supplemented by bad weather garments, the woman who motors may now buy dustcoats so light and sheer as to defy even the most ambitiously climbing mercury. These are of mohair and of silk. Some may be had in dun color, that ignore the stains of travel, for $38.50. Others, with wide kimono sleeves, bring $25. By holding them up to the light one may look through them quite easily, and they have a delightfully cool "feel." But the material is so woven and of such a texture that it will shed dust with remarkable facility and bring you in at the end of the run looking quite as fresh, as to dainty waist or lingerie dress, as you were at the beginning.

A new and chic bit of headgear for the summer motoring is a little cap-like bonnet of crocheted straw, with an open mesh like a very coarse lace. This is lined with silk to match the shade of the exterior, which comes in many hues. These hats feten $2.25 and weigh practically nothing.

Try this recipe for a jolly tour, girls, when you are sure "father" has had a good year in business.

MOVE MADE TO STRENGTHEN GREAT HIGHWAY

Famous Men of America Will Be Sponsors—Cost of Enterprise $10,000,000.

A plan is afoot to strengthen further the Lincoln transcontinental highway recently incorporated at Detroit to succeed the manufacturers' ocean-to-ocean highway of Indianapolis, by inviting the most prominent men of the nation to act as its sponsors. It is thought that with a number of nationally famous individuals lending their names to the enterprise subscriptions will come in much faster because of the greater confidence they will inspire. An enterprise which proposes to disburse $10,000,000 must rest upon the soundest foundations. For this reason only men in the forefront of affairs are to be considered.

Movement To Be Launched.

The inauguration of the movement will take place this month during the Indiana-to-Pacific tour of Indiana automobile manufacturers in behalf of the highway. Instructions have been given to Carl G. Fisher and Charles A. Bookwalter, Lincoln representatives on the tour, to invite a number of prominent people along the road to become permanently identified with the highway association. No money is to be involved, save that which may be voluntarily forthcoming, the service rendered being held more than an ample contribution.

A glance at a partial list of those who are to be approached shows them to be literally the nation's vanguard. Adolphus Busch, the noted St. Louis brewer; John W. Springer, the Denver financier; Simon R. Guggenheim, mining king and former United States Senator from Colorado; Utah's famous governor, William Spry; Senator Key Pitman, of Nevada; the Spreckles brothers, Rudolph and Claus, Hawaiian and Californian sugar kings; A. G. Spalding, the retired manufacturer of baseball supplies, now living at Point Loma, Cal., and many others of equal fame comprise this memorable list. Not a man who has not won sufficient distinction in some walk of life or other to make him a national figure.

To Choose Vice Presidents.

The work of Fisher and Bookwalter will not end with the mere selection of sponsors, however. Two vice presidents to the Lincoln proposition from the far West are to be chosen. This is a matter which will probably be left until the end of the tour, inasmuch as it is thought wise to inspect thoroughly the field before rendering a final decision.

Meanwhile, similar negotiations will be begun by the home office in other parts of the United States. Three vice presidents from the East are to be chosen, besides a vast number of sponsors. Such men as James J. Storrow, of Boston; Colonel Du-Pont and J. Ogden Armour will be communicated with. None but the strongest of organizations will satisfy.

Southern Railway Fours Are Sagging Despite Stock Rise

Increased Dividends for Preferred Fail to Cause Rally Because of Underlying Conditions.

NEW YORK, July 5.—General investment conditions have operated against an advance in Southern Railway's development and general mortgage 4 per cent bonds after the preferred stock was put back on its regular 5 per cent basis. Around 74 the bonds are only four points above their lowest level. At present price they yield more than 5.60 per cent.

However, the decline has not been as marked as in the high-grade savings bank issues. These have suffered losses of 5, 6 and 7 points, while the Southern 4s are off only about 4½ points from the high of this year.

This is the only open issue that the road has available for future financing. There are $200,000,000 bonds authorized, $20,000,000 are held in the treasury and $61,000,000 have been sold. About $31,000,000 more can be issued for improvements and betterments at the rate of $5,000,000 a year, besides $38,000,000 reserved for retiring underlying bonds and part of Southern's equipment obligations, and $20,000,000 for acquiring certain stocks and properties. That all these additional bonds may be issued naturally has a depressing effect.

But the most severe pressure is from the last offering of $26,000,000, in 1909. This was unsuccessful, and ever since, when the bonds have reached 79, the price at which the underwriters could get out, without loss, a large supply has appeared in the market.

Southern Railway now has outstanding interest-bearing obligations to the amount of over $38,000 per mile of road operated. This compares with about $33,000 for Louisville and Nashville and $30,500 on the Atlantic Coast Line.

The Southern has more mileage with low-earning power than any other important road in its territory. However, its branch mileage is a source of strength, as indicated by the steady increase in gross and net earnings every year since 1909. Development of the South tends to increase the earning power of these branches. As yet little new capital has had to be spent on them.

Young Astor to Build New 1,500-Ton Yacht

Craft Will Be Twice the Size of Father's Famous Pleasure Ship, the Noma.

NEW YORK, July 5.—Vincent Astor is to build a new yacht. It will be twice the size of the Noma, the yacht built for his father in 1902. It will surpass in tonnage the Corsair, owned by J. P. Morgan.

The Noma, yachtsmen hear, will be sold to Hermann Oelrichs, the friend and sportsman rival of Astor. The gross tonnage of the new Astor yacht is to be between 1,200 and 1,500 tons.

Astor and Oelrichs are the owners of two motor boats of exactly the same size and model, and they frequently race on the Hudson, just off Fernciiffe, the Astor estate. Racing honors are about even.

Squirming Baby Is Caught in Fly Paper

Neighbors Are Attracted by Screams of Child, and Arrive in Time to Save Life.

CHICAGO, July 5.—Kicking and squirming, a baby sticking to a strip of fly paper attracted neighbors by its pitiful cries. The child tried time and again to free itself from the sticky paste, it reached out one hand bravely, only to be held back by the other. Then it rolled over and cried until nearly exhausted.

The child was found by Humane Officer Scott too weak to make a sound except a low moan. The baby's mother, Mrs. Christopher Patrick Finnegan, had gone out and left little Julia near the fly paper to protect her from the flies.

TAFFETA RIBBONS SCARCE.

A scarcity of taffeta ribbons in stock colorings is reported. Pinks, blues and whites are especially hard to get.

CLASSIC CITY EXTENDS ARMS TO TRAVELERS

Atlanta Autoists Assured of Good Roads on Athens Tirp—Historic and Commercial Center.

ATHENS, GA., July 5.—The automobile log of the local Chamber of Commerce, showing turns and dips in the road from Atlanta to Athens, is complete, and is at the disposal of Atlantans who contemplate week-end trips to the Classic City and of Athenians who desire to spend Saturday and Sunday in the Gate City. The log was made up this week by Andrew C. Erwin, president of the Athens Chamber of Commerce; Martin J. Abney, vice president; C. D. Heidler, director, and C. C. Callaway, secretary, who toured to Atlanta and back to Athens.

The trip out was through Winder, Duluth, Norcross and Buckhead, and back through Decatur, Stone Mountain, Snellville and Monroe, with logging the entire way. The party reported unusually good roads most of the way, with convict gangs working out the bad places in Clarke, Oconee, Jackson, Gwinnett, DeKalb and Fulton Counties. Clarke County claims to have the best roads in the State, but the Chamber of Commerce scouts were free to admit that the highways of Fulton and DeKalb were unusually good on the average.

Atlantans Going on Trips.

For quite a while Atlanta people and Athens people have been exchanging visits by way of the automobile routes between the two cities. Young couples frequently come to Georgia-Tech athletic contests by the use of the automobile and go back the same day, a total distance of 150 miles. Similarly, well-to-do Athenians are accustomed to tour through the country to Atlanta to visit friends and relatives.

Now all this visiting will be much more simple, and the local Chamber of Commerce has made it so. Amateur automobilists need not lose their way and people to whom the trip is not new can get valuable pointers on various turns in the road and the general condition of the same.

The chamber's information is contained in a handsome booklet that is being distributed. The information will be supplied alike to individuals and to touring bureaus. Trips can be made in about four hours' easy sailing.

Historic Charm of Athens.

Athens is one of the oldest cities in the State, the home during college days of hundreds of history-making Georgians, a section where the intellectual and social spirit finds unique expression. Situated on the banks of the Oconee River and on the undulating stretches which slough off from the Blue Ridge mountain chain, it has inspired many a university poet to sing. Its hospitality is famed throughout the State, and its social conventions have weathered most of the industrial storms.

Apart from sentiment, however, Athens is noted for its steady commercial progress. Once considered a town which grew up around the State University, it is now regarded as quite an entity. Civic activities and academic activities are not out of harmony, yet the two operate more independently now than ever before. The growth of Athens in population and in public buildings and fine commercial spirit has excited general admiration. About six years ago Athens' first office building was erected, and since then the city's business leaders have been busy making two grow where but one grew before.

EMBROIDERIES IN FAVOR.

Importers of embroideries are anticipating better business for the coming season than has been enjoyed for some time. The use of this merchandise in trimming the gowns seen at the big French races is in part held responsible for the improved outlook.

WHAT ATLANTA MANUFACTURERS AND JOBBERS ARE DOING

ATLANTA GIRLS BUY MILLINERY MADE AT HOME

Half the Hats Seen on Peachtree Street Are Made Here, but the Fact Is Unheralded.

JOBBERS USE OWN LABELS

Factories Lose Identity When the Product Is Shipped—Materials Come From Many Lands.

Half the women's hats seen on Peachtree Street are made right in Atlanta.

The fair Peachtree promenaders don't know it; the milliners they patronize don't know it; in many cases the jobbers themselves don't know it.

There are three factories in Atlanta making women's hats, of straw, felt, plush, hemp and the myriad other materials which go to bedeck milady's coiffure and frame her pretty face.

But as soon as the hat leaves these factories the manufacturers lose their identity. The hat is marked with the jobber's label. It may be marked New York, Philadelphia, New Orleans or even London. The fact that it is made in Atlanta is nowhere to be discovered.

One manufacturer tells, with a grin, of Atlanta milliners who "stocked up" in New York—with Atlanta-made hats.

Altogether, it is an interesting business.

Materials From Afar.

The American Hat Manufacturing Company, one of the largest of the three Atlanta factories, imports straws direct from China, Japan, Italy and Germany. These straws are plaited abroad, and either are dyed there or bleached and dyed in Camden, N. J.

Japan sends hemp braid. Italy furnishes the milans, leghorns and tuscans. Germany furnishes a peculiar material known as Neapolitan braid, which, though few know it, is made from American cotton. China furnishes coarse straws.

So much for the straws. The felt bodies come from abroad, in the rough—queer, looking toadstools of various shades. Silks, ribbons, velvets, plushes and ornaments are carried in quantity enough to stock a dry goods store of large proportions.

Just now the factories are busy with the hats to be worn this fall and winter, and with misses' and children's hats for spring, 1914.

Sample rooms already are filled with fall and spring lines, dazzling arrays of colors, and seemingly in almost every shape, but with smaller hats predominating.

Plaster Hats the Start.

The making of a hat may be said to begin in the room where a skilled workman makes plaster molds accurately defining the shapes. From these plaster affairs, metal dies are made. These dies are put in the presses and heated by gas flames. The rough shapes, either felt, velvet, straw or hemp, are stamped with these hot dies and held in them until dry. When removed the heat has baked the sticky "sizing" until the shapes are firm.

From the presses the velvet and plush hats go to a workman who steams them and brushes up the nap to its original beauty.

The straw shapes are made in the factory. Ingeniously designed sewing machines, manipulated by skillful girls, sew the braid round and round, until a tiny knot grows into a gigantic hat. In the straw season 150 girls are busy at these machines.

Other ingenious machines sew in linings, attach cloth crowns to brims, bind brims, and do other complicated stitching which would seem to need the skill of the human hand.

Girl Designs Trimmings.

The elaborate bows and trimmings are designed by the young forewoman, who then teaches the girls under how to make them. This, in itself, is work requiring art.

Ready for shipment, the hats are put in the familiar round boxes—these, too, made in the factory, and then in big corrugated paper cases.

Off they go, bringing Atlanta no glory—but considerable money!

Englishman's Criticism of American Stores Answered

Selfridge's Manager Unjustified in Saying Customers Wait Too Long for Parcels.

A. E. Cowper, one of the important men in the organization of Selfridge & Co., which in turn has, perhaps, the most important department store in London, recently made a visit to the United States. He spent most of his time, of course, in looking over American department stores, and before he departed for England freed himself of some criticism.

"One thing which struck me was the time it takes to complete a purchase and get your goods wrapped and delivered," he said.

"At home we have no bundle wrappers; the clerks wrap the packages, and we find it saves time and mistakes. When a customer has made a purchase and the goods are shipped by carrier or messenger to a distant cash-and-bundle desk, every second she has to wait is magnified to a minute, whereas if the goods are wrapped by the clerk, the customer is getting the full attention of that salesperson, and if a minute or two should be lost, she is seeing the action all the time, and does not feel that she has been lost sight of. In Selfridge's we use cash registers, and we find them great savers of time."

Atlanta merchandise experts do not agree with the English student of store service.

Mr. Cowper, in the opinion of various Atlantans approached on the subject, magnifies the importance of the transactions where the purchases actually are taken away by the buyer.

They remark that while it may be the custom in London for shoppers to carry home their purchases, nine out of ten customers in Atlanta demand delivery by wagon.

At any rate, they say, there is very little delay, and it is much better to free the salespeople from the duty of wrapping packages.

Managers of Atlanta department stores made tests at random to demonstrate that it takes on an average 30 seconds for the delivery of a package and the making of change.

Lucian York, manager of Rich's, says:

"We have a system which we believe is the best yet devised from the viewpoint of the customer, and Selfridge's certainly have nothing to compare with it. We use an 'identification coin.'

Departs at Once.

"Most of our charge customers have their parcels delivered. After the transaction is made the customer merely gives her name and address to the salesperson, shows her identification coin, and departs at once. Even when the customer takes the parcel with her, the wrapper in the stand has it ready in a jiffy. Time records to gauge our wrappers show that on an average they use less than a minute.

"The delivery of packages, after all, is simply a minor matter. What our American people want broadly is service—the right merchandise at the right time at the right price. In English stores customers still are importuned to buy; in fact, in many of the stores it is almost impossible to leave without buying. Fancy such a condition here!

"Again, here we make every effort to get what the customer wants. We anticipate the styles, bring on new models and patterns.

"When the customer purchases these goods she buys them at our risk—if they are not pleasing to her when she gets them home she is at liberty to return them. Here the customer is always right—in England, from what I understand, she is more at the mercy of the storekeeper."

Georgia Melons Are Moving Out Rapidly

Green Fruit Not Being Sold—Cantaloupes Are Excellent and Plentiful—Peaches Scarce.

QUITMAN, GA., July 5.—The watermelon season is on in full blast and the fruit is moving in carlots from all melon shipping points in South Georgia. The prospects are fine for a good season and the best crop in years.

It is estimated that fully 1,200 cars will be shipped from Brooks County. Many of the cars being loaded will average from 25 to 28 pounds per melon, and it is believed that melon shippers will forward nothing but ripe stuff, as the shipping of green melons from South Georgia has been discouraged, the growers finding out to their sorrow that the melon buying public knows what a good melon is and refuses to buy green ones.

The heaviest shippers at this point are Fuller Groover, Joseph Wilson & Mabbett. They claim that the melon crop is one of the best in years, and that quality will be everything desired.

Thomasville, Dixie, Boston, Bainbridge, Pelham and Meigs and other points are loading in carlots. At points farther north, Camilla and Pelham cantaloupes are moving in carlots, and from all reports the quality is good.

Cantaloupes are showing up well netted and of desirable size.

ARTIFICIAL FUR USED.

Artificial fur will be used to considerable extent this fall and winter both for the trimming of hats and street gowns. The lower cost of these goods and their close approach to the genuine in appearance are big factors in their favor.

The coming of warmer weather has stimulated greatly the movement of wash suits in retail circles. The jackets of some of the better numbers range in length from 32 to 34 inches in the back.

Cotton Rates Raised On English Canal

Importers at Manchester Face New Charges, but Still Have Advantage Over Liverpool.

MANCHESTER, July 5.—The Manchester Ship Canal Company has issued a new schedule of rates for raw cotton, put in force July 1. Emphasis is laid upon a paragraph which states that whenever the quay porterage rate or any quay rent becomes payable on cotton ordered to be forwarded by railway or water at the company's through rates the amount of such charge or charges must be paid on demand. Such charges will not be added to the through rate to be paid at destination.

The importer is responsible to the company for the canal tolls and quay charges upon his cotton, and the person or firm in whose name the ship's delivery order for cotton is made out is held by the company to be the importer. All charges due upon the cotton must be paid before its removal from the docks. The ship canal toll and wharfage amounts to $1.34 a ton. This, having been paid, will be deducted from the through railway rate when cotton is forwarded by rail from the warehouse.

The canal company's storage accommodations being limited, they do not desire to warehouse cotton at the Manchester docks so long as there is space available in the safes at Trafford Park. As regards cotton removed from the Manchester docks by road vehicles, the combined charges for ship canal toll and wharfage rates and quay porterage are unaltered.

The through railway rates from the Manchester docks were increased July 1 to the extent of the general increase in railway rates and by the increase of 10 per cent of the scheduled ship canal toll and wharfage rates. The general superintendent adds that the total of these increases will not prejudice the favorable comparison with the cost of importing via Liverpool previously existing.

RIVALRY OFTEN PROVES AN AID TO MERCHANTS

Fallacy to Oppose New Firms, Declares Observer, Who Tells of Incident in Missouri.

There is often an idea among merchants in the smaller cities and towns that the establishment of a rival concern in their vicinity means loss of trade to the older firm. This resentment to newcomers is sometimes so bitter that these merchants will withdraw their patronage from local papers that encourage the "interlopers."

The fallacy of this attitude was pointed out recently by George A. Mahan, an attorney of Hannibal, Mo., in a speech before the Commercial Club of Macon, that State.

"I do not think it helps the home merchant to oppose the incoming of a new enterprise, even if it does infringe on his class of trade," he said. "I know a Missouri town where a good general store was established. It was a growing town, and the store had a large stock of general dry goods and clothing. The store had been established a long time and the owner had made money out of it. In time the growing importance of the town attracted the attention of another merchant, who ultimately established a second store. This store also carried a variety of goods.

"The older merchant bought pages in the newspapers and advertised at attractive prices. The newcomer was forced to follow suit. The older merchant, who thought that he had to get all the trade or quit, then sent bill posters all over the country to stick up announcements of his bargains. He even began a campaign for business that extended into all the counties within a radius of 50 to 75 miles, and offered rebates on railroad fares where necessary. The new merchant, who was a fighter, did the same thing. He even went so far as to buy a big automobile with which to bring customers in from the country when the roads were good.

"The result of this warfare was a patronage as large as both stores could handle. The old store did more business after its rival was established firmly than it did before. It was not long before the two owners became friendly. The older one learned the truth of the saying that competition is the life of trade. The newer merchant knew it all the time, and that is why he entered a field that seemed to be supplied fully.

"Of course, I am not saying that there is no such thing as overdoing certain lines of business in any town. It is done frequently, and much money is lost by houses struggling to exist in a territory that is not large enough to support both of them. But I do believe that in a great many cases new business enterprises stimulate and develop trade."

STRIKE CAUSES WORRY.

American buyers of silks who have placed substantial orders abroad are wondering whether the strike of the silk dyers in various parts of Europe will mean holding up their goods until it is too late to use them in this market. At the moment it is said that there does not appear to be much chance of relief from the scarcity of silks caused here by the labor trouble in Paterson. Velvet deliveries from abroad may be affected also.

FOREIGN DEALER SEES MISTAKES OF AMERICANS

Slow Delivery and Demand for Money in Advance Hinder U. S. Trade Abroad.

Slowness in delivery of goods ordered by European importers and the rule of full prepayment are doing a great deal of damage to the business interests of American exporters. Consul W. J. Pike, Reichenberg, Austria, took the matter up by mail with a prominent importer in that city not long ago, and received a reply setting forth the reasons why American business is not greater in Northern Bohemia. According to Mr. Pike, this importer more than three years ago established an important commercial agency in Reichenberg. The organization covers all of Northern Bohemia. It has 270 branch offices, all of which are engaged chiefly in the exploitation of foreign-made merchandise.

At the time Mr. Pike took up the matter of increasing American business in that part of the world, the importer was getting his merchandise principally from Germany, France and England. Following a notice published on the foreign trade opportunities page of The Daily Consular and Trade Report, however, the organization has entered into extensive business relations with firms in the United States. Now most of its purchases are confined to merchandise produced in this country.

Capital Tied Up.

The letter received by the Consul from the importer reads:

"Respectfully referring to your esteemed favor of the 8th instant, I would be obliged to inform the honorable consulate of methods to put an end in the future to the mistakes which are made in exporting by American firms.

"A great evil that exists for the importer is that the total payment for the merchandise ordered must be sent in advance. If the merchandise were delivered promptly to enable quick sales, the loss of working capital and of the investment would not be so considerable, but notwithstanding the total payment is sent in advance, the merchandise is only delivered in two or three months, and then only upon urging by cable, which all entails considerable costs.

"To illustrate: Early in February I sent through my bank payment for 25 vacuum cleaners to Blank & Co., New York, and after much urgency I received to-day the reply that probably the goods will be shipped tomorrow. In the meantime not only can I do no business, but I have also invested the money; in other words, have the money lying unemployed. In view of the large force of salesmen dependent upon goods for delivery, such business conditions require too large a working capital with large expenses and costs.

"This invariably slow delivery is not the exception, but true as to all firms—I could give you the names of a large number of firms, the sale of whose products I was forced to discontinue and to break off every business relation because of failure to promptly deliver the goods.

Should Study Tariffs.

"American manufacturers could greatly facilitate matters and increase trade by giving attention to three important particulars, viz., prompt delivery, packing, and the duty—for instance, where articles are composed of different materials, as iron, nickel, enamel, leather or wood. In many instances it is possible to ship these parts separately, to be assembled in the country for sale, whereby there is an enormous saving in the amount of duty and the goods lowered in cost, which makes them more salable because of this saving.

"Another subject that should commend itself to the careful study of American manufacturers is shipping goods by the cheapest route. This is not always done, and the consequence in many cases is increased cost.

"In addition to the foregoing matters that work a great hindrance to the extension of American trade is the question of terms of credit, in which the American manufacturer demands cash before shipment, a requirement not insisted on by any other country.

"These are some of the general experiences and complaints which I am forced to make, and I should be greatly obliged to the honorable consulate if by some action or report these conditions could be remedied, or at least relieved."

Silk Dyers Strike; Feathers Face Bar; Ans.–Use Flowers

Milliners Think That for Once They Can Predict Styles for Fall Well in Advance.

Flowers will be popular on women's hats for fall and winter wear.

In July this is a dangerous prediction. Circumstances, however, make it fairly safe prophecy, in the opinion of C. B. Palmer, of M. Kutz Co., wholesale milliners.

Dame Fashion might take a notion to dictate ribbons. But the silk dyers' strikes in Paterson, N. J., have caused an increase of 20 per cent in the cost of ribbons, and even at these advanced prices, deliveries can not be made. At best, goods can not be promised before August 15 or September 1, and even if the mills reopen, they are likely to be overwhelmed with the orders which have been accumulating.

Feathers, again, might have been Fashion's favorites. But right now there is trouble in Congress over the importation of feathers. The milliners and the Audubon Society are in the throes of a bitter struggle which will decide whether feathers will be admitted at all under the new tariff.

Remain only fur and flowers. For three seasons, velvet and silk flowers have been increasing in popularity on fall and winter hats, and, with the scarcity of other materials, are likely to take the ascendency this fall.

Small hats will rule—that is, smaller than those which have been worn for the past few seasons. Crowns will be round, with turned-up brims, according to Mr. Palmer. What will be the favorite colors, besides the staple blues, browns and black, no one will know until September 1.

The Kutz Co. salesmen started out last Monday to cover the Southern States for fall business.

RUSSIA OFFERS NEW FIELD FOR U. S. EXPORTERS

Tariff to Readjust Trade Conditions and Open Opportunity in Quarters Now Neglected.

The projected changes in the tariff laws are expected to bring about a sharp readjustment of trade conditions in foreign as well as in domestic business. While discussion has been confined largely to the probable effect of the new schedule on home industries, the lowering of duties is expected to open new doors for business abroad. Possibilities in this line are particularly alluring in Russia, India and China.

The area of the Russian Empire comprises one-sixth of the land surface of the world, all of which is now under compact administration. The population is the largest of any civilized country, numbering 165,000,000. Four-fifths of the population is in European Russia, and it is steadily increasing at the rate of 3,000,000 people a year. It is estimated that in ten years Russia will have a population of 200,000,000.

Public Debt Small.

The financial situation appears equally significant. The public debt per head of population is only about one-third that of Italy or Great Britain and one-fifth of that of France. In excess of revenues over expenditures Russia is easily first of all countries.

The natural assets of Russia, which have never until recently been fully appreciated, are enormous. Her forest area is more than twice that of Canada, placing her first in the world in that respect. In her fisheries 300,000 people are engaged, and the annual output is valued at $50,000,000. She has an annual output of 2,000,000 tons of beet sugar, which will shortly be increased to 5,000,000 tons. The Russians have never learned to eat sugar as people of other countries are accustomed to eat it, or perhaps most of her people have been unable to supply their needs. At any rate, her annual per capita consumption of 22 pounds compares with 47 pounds for Germany, 79 pounds for the United States, and 91 pounds for Great Britain.

In tobacco Russia stands third in the area under cultivation, the United States and British India leading her. In 1910 Russia's land under cultivation for tobacco was only one-seventh that of the United States. During the last four years her exports of tobacco have increased 50 per cent. In 1911 $11,000,000 worth of flaxseed and $7,000,000 of linseed oil cake were exported. It is said that fruit of all kinds can be grown, and there are approximately 200 varieties of the Russian apple. The country produces great quantities of strawberries.

Coal and Petroleum.

A measure of what Russia's place is to be in the commerce of the future is furnished by the figures of her supply of coal and petroleum. The output of coal was 26,000,000 tons in 1909, which was well below the demand. The importation of foreign coal equals about one-fifth of the amount produced at home. There are vast undeveloped fields, both in Russia and Siberia, where the railway is still burning wood. The chief need to-day is of capital to develop these sources of supply. At present Russia buys coal both from Japan and Great Britain.

In 1900 Russia led the world in the production of petroleum, with an output of 9,700,000 tons, or more than 50 per cent of the world's production, with the United States second. Ten years later Russia's output, while still over 9,000,000 tons, made up but 21 per cent of the world's total. Recently a number of other valuable petroleum fields have been discovered, and the production is again increasing. Drilled wells and refineries were not known in Russia until 1876, American oil being used. By 1885 Russian oil had entirely excluded American and an export trade had grown up.

Rome, Ga., Exhibitors Sign Up for Space

Mountain City Takes Much Pride in Getting Busy a Little Sooner Than Atlanta.

Rome, Ga., is crowing over the fact that it made definite plans for a permanent exhibit before Atlanta.

Twelve manufacturers already have signed contracts for space, and nine more are about to do so. It is expected that 4,000 feet of floor space will be used.

Arrangements have been made for a building, and the exhibit will be ready within two months, Louis Spencer, managing director, says.

Included among the exhibitors are a stove works, a machine factory, a foundry, a furniture factory, a trunk factory and a spring bed factory. Some of these lines are duplicated.

MORE BUYERS THAN PEACHES.

NEW YORK, July 5.—Buyers returning here from Georgia say that it is generally estimated the peach crop of Georgia will run about 1,500 cars. According to the railroad men, they do not expect to move over 75 cars a day out of the State at the flush of the season. There are a great many buyers at Fort Valley. Fully 95 per cent of the peaches are being sold on track—in fact, there are more buyers than there are peaches.

U.S. SECRETARY OF LABOR ALL NIGHT IN JAIL AS A PLOTTER

Wilson's Record During Mine Troubles in Which He Was a Leader Are Unearthed—Never Returned to Face Charges.

Appellate Body in Reviewing Case Afterward Held Cabinet Officer Was Dangerously Near Being in Contempt of High Tribunal.

NEW YORK, July 6.—The New York American to-day prints the following:

William B. Wilson, Secretary of Labor in the Cabinet of President Wilson, was arrested and placed in jail at Cumberland, Allegheny County, Maryland, June 13, 1894.

The charge against the Cabinet member was of unlawful assembly and conspiracy.

The offenses were alleged to have been committed in connection with a miners' strike which Wilson directed as a member of the United Mine Workers of America, of which John McBride was then president.

Held in Jail Overnight.

Wilson was held in jail all night by order of Sheriff Clarence King, of Cumberland, who arrested him at the mining town of Lonaconing, Md. The following day, June 14, he was held in bonds of $500 to await the action of the October term of court at Cumberland by Justice of the Peace Alexander King.

The bail was furnished by William Atkinson, of Allegheny County.

The case appeared on the October court calendar as No. 83, Criminal Appeals, and was continued. State's Attorney David W. Sloan, now deceased, announced to the court that the warrant was missing.

At the succeeding January (1895) term of court the case, No. 9, Criminal Appeals, was again continued, the records not revealing the nature of the continuance.

When the matter was brought before the April term as No. 4, Criminal Appeals, it was dismissed.

Only Criminal Appeared.

As far as can be learned by diligent search of the court record, files of newspapers of the day and interviews with the former Sheriff, Wilson did not appear within the county at any of the terms of court at which the case was docketed. He was represented by counsel but was not there to be tried.

But this was the second time that Wilson had been before the Cumberland courts. Earlier in the same year he had been made defendant to three injunctions and had been served with an order to show cause why he should not be adjudged guilty of contempt.

The case was that of the Consolidation Coal Company of Maryland against William B. Wilson et al., No. 4304 equity, in the Circuit Court of Allegheny County.

A remarkable signed opinion delivered jointly by Judges Hunter Boyd, now chief judge of the Court of Appeals of Maryland, and H. W. Hoffman, deceased, while not holding Wilson guilty places upon his shoulders responsibility for lawlessness. It was entitled "In the Matter of the Alleged Contempt of William B. Wilson."

Held Responsible for Disorder.

Here is the language of the opinion:

"It is clearly shown that the respondent, William B. Wilson, is largely responsible for the present condition of affairs and it is equally true that whatever may be his accomplishments, many of our own miners are his equal in intelligence and know far better than he does what is for their interests. He is responsible, in part, at least, for the loss of wages already sustained and for such lawlessness as has already occurred in this country.

"The evidence shows acts done or incited by him that would have unquestionably made him amenable to the law, and liable to punishment if they had occurred subsequently to the service of the injunction on him.

"It is true that it is shown by the evidence and admitted by Wilson when on the stand that he addressed a meeting near the Allegheny mines on the afternoon of May 22, in which

American Refuses to Drink Kaiser's Beer

Armour Tells Emperor He Saves Thousand a Year by Being a Total Abstainer.

Special Cable to The American.

BERLIN, July 5.—The Kiel correspondent of The National Zeitung says Allison V. Armour took the late J. Pierpont Morgan's place as the Kaiser's chief guest at the annual Kiel regatta week beer evening at the little Bordy tavern.

The neighbors of Mr. Armour were surprised to see that he did not smoke and that he drank only a glass of lemonade. In reply to a question he said: "I am a teetotaler, and I will tell you why. By not smoking and by refraining from the use of malt or spirituous liquors I save a thousand dollars every year, so you see it is well worth while to be a total abstainer."

CHARGES FILED AGAINST NINTH POLICE OFFICER

I. E. Jackson to Face Trial Tuesday Night on Complaint of L. M. Smith.

CLAIMS ABUSIVE CONDUCT

More Serious Allegations Against Other Eight, Involving Moral Conduct—All Suspended.

Charges preferred Saturday against Policeman I. E. Jackson made him the ninth member of the force whose case will be tried Tuesday night before the Board of Police Commissioners. Jackson was accused by L. M. Smith, of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, of conduct unbecoming a police officer.

Smith said he attended the Bijou Theater several nights ago in company with Mrs. Smith, and that while standing in the aisle Jackson addressed them roughly, telling them to "move on." He charged that the policeman became abusive when objection was made to his language.

The other eight policemen will have to answer to more serious charges. All are accused either of drinking in and frequenting the negro resort in the rear of 127 Auburn Avenue or of permitting it to continue without making report of its existence to headquarters. They have been suspended pending Tuesday night's hearing.

Johnson to Push Probe.

"I will ask for a committee investigation of the police and detective department at the meeting of the Board of Police Commissioners," said Police Commissioner George E. Johnson Saturday.

"I will offer a resolution calling for the appointment of five members of the board to go into the matter, and I am satisfied the investigation will be thorough, and that all the facts will be brought to light. The five members will act as a court of inquiry, and witnesses will be summoned and every effort made to find just where the trouble is. If it is in the department it will be unearthed.

"The investigation," said Commissioner Johnson, "will be open to the public, and any evidence submitted will be given due consideration. If policemen have been guilty of giving protection to any class of lawbreakers, they will be summarily dealt with. If any officer is found guilty of conduct unbecoming an officer, he must take the consequences."

Factional Fight Revived.

The fact that George E. Johnson is a strong supporter of Mayor Woodward and the further fact that Mayor Woodward is in no sense of the word an admirer of the two chiefs, some sensational developments may be expected if the investigation is made as planned by the commissioners.

There is no denying the fact that there are two distinct factions in the Police Board—one headed by the Mayor and the other by Chairman Mason. The line-up in the past has been 8 to 4 in favor of Mason.

Commissioner Johnson says his resolution is not in the interest of any faction, but for the good of the department.

Hawthorne Assured Of Prompt Release From Atlanta Cell

Parole Board's Report to Favor Prisoner—Warden Moyer Not Informed of Development.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—Julian Hawthorne, the author, will be paroled from the Federal prison at Atlanta, Ga., where he is serving a sentence of a year and a day for using the mails to sell fraudulent mining stock, according to information here to-night.

The report of the parole Board on Hawthorne's application will favor him, provided he is willing to conform to certain restrictions. The board will not report before July 24.

Hawthorne's friends plead that the ends of justice already have been served in the humiliation and punishment suffered by the prisoner.

W. H. Moyer, Warden of the Federal prison of Atlanta, said Saturday night that he knew of no contemplated release of Julian Hawthorne.

"I can not imagine how the report got out," he said. "I have had no intimation that he will be released before the expiration of his time."

Child's Plaything a Nitroglycerin Bomb

3-Year-Old Toyed With Deadly Ball Four Days—Policeman Removes It.

What is now thought to be a bomb was for three days the plaything of 3-year-old Clarence Sudderth, infant son of Mrs. Sallie Sudderth, of 512 Capitol Avenue.

The child found an iron ball, about eight inches in diameter and weighing about a pound, on the sidewalk in front of the Sudderth home Wednesday morning. He played with it until Saturday, when a neighbor noticed it and declared it was a bomb, loaded with nitroglycerin. Mrs. Sudderth became alarmed and called an officer, who gingerly removed it to police barracks.

The presence of the ball on Capitol Avenue can not be accounted for unless it was picked up at Fort Walker and started rolling down the hill into Capitol Avenue.

Queen Mary Forbids All Freak Dresses

Bare Necks and Other Extreme Fashions Are Banned at Reception She Attends.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, July 5.—Queen Mary is persisting in her campaign against freak dress or anything approaching a daring form of attire for women.

Her latest act was to notify the people of the Bedford College for Women that Her Majesty would not attend the opening if any woman member of the reception committee who was to appear on the platform was allowed to wear a dress cut more than an inch below the neck, or a split skirt.

Three members of the reception committee retired as a result of the Queen's warning, but among those who appeared in the approved fashion was the Duchess of Marlborough.

Bolt Crashes Through Spire of Euclid Avenue Church and Wrecks Oil King's Seat of Worship.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, July 5.—John D. Rockefeller will have to build a new pew before he can enjoy his wonted comfort in church on Sundays. A bolt of lightning struck the spire of the Euclid Avenue Baptist Church, ripped its way through the roof and demolished John D.'s pew.

Several other pews in the vicinity were wrecked, but the big ball of fire did no further damage. The lightning flash failed to start a fire. No one was in the church at the time it was struck.

'Most Beautiful Child' Coming

Miss Blitz Will Visit Atlanta

To Pose Before Famous Artists

Prize picture of prize child beauty, Theresa Marie Blitz. This picture has been exhibited in nineteen conventions of photographers and awarded fifteen first prizes.

Little Topeka Girl Will Visit Principal Cities of Country and Will Be Given Trip to Paris.

TOPEKA, KANS., July 5.—Atlanta will see the nation's most beautiful child, so proclaimed by photographers of the United States at practically all their exhibits, when 6-year-old Theresa Marie Blitz reaches the Georgia capital on her tour of the United States, which will later extend to Paris. She leaves her Topeka home to-day and will return in time to celebrate her seventh birthday.

Little Miss Blitz was declared to possess the most perfect features and figure of any child in the country by the Boston Art League. She won the distinction in a contest with 2,000 others from all States of the nation.

The elements which decided the art league in her case were: "Soft, wavy, dark-brown hair; big, wistful, wishful blue eyes, with the memory of dreams lurking in them; delicately molded lips and white transparent skin, with a touch of pink showing through."

She is not yet seven. Her weight is 55 pounds. Standing in her slippers she is 51 inches in height. A tape line drawn around her arm at the armpit over one thickness of light summer wear registers 9 inches. Wrist, 5 1-2 inches; thigh, 16 inches; calf, 10 inches; ankle, 7 inches.

After her tour of the big cities of this country and a visit to Paris she will return in time to celebrate her seventh birthday, November 18. Theresa has great love for flowers and music and bird life. She knows many flowers by name.

Little Theresa's mother died when the child was eight months old. She was a beautiful woman and possessed all the charms and graces so fully reflected in the figures and features of the daughter.

Theresa will spend two weeks each in Kansas City, St. Louis, Chicago, Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Atlanta and Norfolk. The trip to Paris will be made in five weeks. In New York and Philadelphia oil paintings will be made of her.

HOUSE TO ORDER MOST RIGID INVESTIGATION OF ACTIVITIES OF LOBBIES

Petty Differences Between the Republicans and the Bull Moose Leaders Prevent Early Passage of Probe Order.

Striking Feature of the Inquiry Will Be That Into the Money Trust; Morgan's Death Laid to the Investigation of Combines.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—Only petty differences between the Republicans and Progressive leaders prevented the passage to-day of the Henry resolution providing for a blanket investigation of lobby influences in Washington, which would be the most rigid ever conducted in the national capital.

Republican Leader Mann, angered at an amendment providing that investigation of accused members of the House should take precedence, which was offered by Mr. Bryan, the Progressive member from Washington State, raised the point of no quorum, and the matter went over until next Wednesday. House leaders at once sent out notice to absentees to be in their seats Wednesday morning, and there will be no trouble in getting the resolution through at that time.

As presented to-day in the final form in which it will be passed, the resolution authorizes the committee of seven, which the Speaker is to appoint, to inquire into every effort that is making or has been made to influence individual action, committee action or action by the House as a whole in this or previous sessions of Congress.

An effort was made by Representative Kahn, of California, to include in the scope of the resolution an inquiry into the influences behind the recent attempt to postpone the trial of the Diggs-Caminetti white slave cases, but it was defeated.

To Investigate Money Trust.

One striking feature of the resolution is its intent that a special inquiry shall be made of the methods in vogue to influence legislation by the creation of false sentiment through high-priced accelerators. Along these lines it is proposed to take up the charge that an insidious attempt has been made by the money trust to shape currency legislation through a flood of literature prepared en banking interests and later distributed through the public printer at public expense.

A specific fund raised by a certain group of bankers to carry on this propaganda will receive close attention. No effort, it is declared, will be made to reopen by this means the money trust investigation, but newly discovered evidence has been introduced to show the lobbying influences of the trust along the lines indicated.

Lays Morgan's Death to Probe.

A sensational feature of the debate was the charge made by Representative Levy, of New York, that the investigation of the money trust was responsible for the death of J. Pierpont Morgan.

Mr. Levy opposed the resolution providing for the new investigation on the ground that the House ought not to dignify the Mulhall charges by taking any official notice of them.

Mr. Bryan's proposition, which precipitated the row, would fix upon the committee the duty of investigating and reporting without delay on the charges against every member of the House made by Mulhall.

Mr. Mann intimated that if the committee were instructed to investigate members first, it might grow tired of the more general and sweeping inquiry after it had disposed of the charges against its own people. Mr. Rucker, of Missouri, pertinently suggested that unless the charges against members were quickly disposed of, another Congressional election would roll around before the scandal had been cleared up, and a number of perfectly innocent members would have to go before their constituents resting under a cloud.

But Mann refused to recede, and as Bryan insisted upon his amendment, the Republican floor leader raised the point of no quorum and forced an adjournment.

The delay will be only temporary.

And it was ascertained later that the Bryan amendment will not be accepted by the Rules Committee, which, under the leadership of Mr. Henry, of Texas, adopted the resolution unanimously at its meeting this morning.

House Resolutions.

Following is the text of the House resolution reported to-day:

Whereas there have appeared in recent issues of various newspapers published in the United States diverse statements and charges as to the existence and activity of a lobby organized by and on behalf of an organization known as the National Association of Manufacturers for the purpose of improperly influencing the legislation by Congress, the official conduct of certain of its members and employees, the appointment and selection of committees of the House and for other purposes designed to affect the integrity of the proceedings of the House of Representatives and its members; therefore be it

Resolved, That the Speaker appoint a select committee of seven members of the House, and that such members be instructed to inquire into and report upon all the matters so alleged concerning said Representatives, and more especially whether during this or any previous Congress the lobbyists of the said National Association of Manufacturers or the said association, through any officer, agent or member thereof, did in fact reach or influence,

Said committee shall inquire whether money has been used or improper influence exerted by said National Association of Manufacturers or any agents thereof to accomplish the defeat for nomination or election of any candidate for the House of Representatives of Congress; and said committee shall likewise inquire whether members of Congress have been employed by said association for the accomplishment of any improper purpose whatever.

Said committee is also directed to inquire whether improper influence has been exerted by said association or by any other association, corporation, or person to secure the appointment or selection of the committee of the House or any of them.

Said committee shall also inquire whether the said National Association of Manufacturers or any other organization or corporation, association or person does not now maintain or has heretofore maintained a lobby for the purpose of influencing legislation by Congress, and ascertaining and reporting to what extent and in what manner, if at all, legislation has been improperly effected or prevented by reason of the existence of such lobby, if it be found to exist at all now or heretofore.

HERE ARE THE FACTS THAT THE HOUSE IS TRYING TO UNCOVER

WHETHER during this or any previous Congress the lobbyists of the said National Association of Manufacturers did, in fact, reach or influence, whether for business, political or sympathetic reasons or otherwise, the said Representatives or any one of them or any officer or employee of this or any former House of Representatives in or about the discharge of their official duties, and if so, when, by whom and in what manner.

WHETHER money has been used or improper influence exerted by said National Association of Manufacturers or any agents thereof to accomplish the defeat for nomination or election of any candidate for Congress.

WHETHER members of Congress have been employed by said association for the accomplishment of any improper purpose whatever.

WHETHER improper influence has been exerted by said association or by any other association, corporation, or person to secure the appointment or selection of the committee of the House or any of them.

WHETHER the National Association of Manufacturers or any other organization or corporation, association or person does now maintain or has heretofore maintained a lobby for the purpose of influencing legislation by Congress and ascertaining and reporting to what extent and in what manner, if at all, legislation has been improperly effected or prevented by reason of the existence of such lobby, if it be found to exist at all now or heretofore.

STOCK BROKER GAVE SIGNAL FOR START OF BALKAN WAR

Financier Demanded Right to Name Date for Beginning of Hostilities in Return for Lending Funds for Montenegrin Chest

Franco-Prussian Banker Sold Short Quietly; Gave Word for Firing First Gun; Saw Market Slump and Reaped His Profits.

By CAPT. ALBERT H. TRAPMAN, Special Correspondent With the Greek Army.

Special Cable to The American.

SALONIKA, July 5.—From a source absolutely reliable I have just learned details of perhaps the most extraordinary deal ever consummated for the starting of a war, a war which is now on and which has cost thousands of lives.

Back of the start of the Balkan war was a stock-jobbing deal. Not that the war would not have been started without this, but it might have been delayed for months. The boom of the first cannon in the great Balkan struggle was dictated by a group of financiers. The speculators of the Paris Bourse were made to finance Montenegro.

In September the enterprising King Nicholas of Montenegro realized that if he was to stand with the other Balkan allies his army, his handful of troops, must be brought up to date and his exchequer must be replenished.

Montenegro is poor, very poor. To raise money in his own country was out of the question. Greece, Servia and Bulgaria were too busy with their own troubles to listen to talk of money from the little kingdom.

Crown Prince Delegated.

Two million was the sum asked to put the army on a war footing, provide for a commissary and do other things. In this emergency, the Crown Prince, carrying with him his father's blessing and signet ring, was sent to Paris to see what could be done.

Three or four reputable banking houses were sounded. They wanted to know what security for the loan was to be given. The sentimental side of the thing, the signet ring of a monarch and his word of honor, did not tempt them and they turned down the application for a loan. At last the famous Franco-Prussian financier, Monsieur Gunsbourg, came forward.

"I can not lend his majesty $2,000,000," he said, "but I will enter into business with him and share the profits. The conditions are these, that he declare war when I give the word. I will dabble in stock shares and he and I will share whatever profits result."

Banker Sets Date.

The Crown Prince put the matter up to the King by telegraph and the arrangement was made. Gunsbourg named October 6 for the declaration of war.

King Nicholas said he must have at least five days more to prepare.

Gunsbourg pointed out to him that it was not necessary to begin war seriously. For his purposes, a declaration after the closing of the stock exchange for the day and a demonstration in which cannons were used the next day was all that was necessary.

On these conditions, the King consented to act and the declaration of war made October 8. At sunrise the next morning the Montegrin guns fired a few rounds and the news was telegraphed around the world that the great Balkan war had been started by Montenegro.

The Gunsbourg syndicate had sold Turkish, Bulgarian, Servian and Greek bonds for all they were worth. The break came when the news of the opening guns was flashed upon the world. The syndicate made more than $3,000,000. The next day the Crown Prince left Paris for Cettinje with $1,500,000. It is on this sum that Montenegro has sustained ever since.

It is an open secret that the Bulgarian Ministers, Savoff and Daneff, made huge fortunes out of speculation on the exclusive knowledge which they alone possessed, but unlike the King of Montenegro, it did not go into the war chest of their country.

Greek-Bulgar Battle Rages in 100 Mile Line.

LONDON, July 5.—Directed from Salonika by King Constantine in person, 80,000 Greeks to-day were engaged in battle with a Bulgar army of 100,000 men. The Greeks occupied a strongly fortified position on a high plateau, up the slopes of which the Bulgars charged again and again with desperate courage, in the face of a hail of artillery fire.

The battle line extends for 100 miles, dispatches from Athens say, and it is reported the King is ready to take the field if the tide of battle seems to be going against his troops. The battle will decide the war, it is believed by strategists who have studied the situation.

A second army of 30,000 Bulgars is moving to join the men already engaged.

Spirited struggles were reported from various other points. The Greeks won a victory at Kilkis by virtue of their artillery. The Bulgarians, after a five-day battle near Uskub with the Servians, are reported to have begun a retreat to-day, leaving 1,000 prisoners and 300 heavy guns. Near Matia the Servians and Albanians fought, with heavy losses on both sides. The report of the Servian victory at Uskub is contradicted from Sofia, where the Bulgarian Government announces its troops were the winners.

Augusta Young Man Killed by an Auto

Oscar Pearre's Skull Crushed as He Jumps From Wagon in Front of Car.

AUGUSTA, July 5.—Oscar Pearre was run over by an automobile owned by Dr. J. M. Hull this afternoon, dying at the City Hospital four hours later of a fractured skull. Pearre was only 20 years of age. He had married just a few months ago. Eyewitnesses exonerated the negro chauffeur.

The automobile and a wagon, on which Pearre was riding, were going in the same direction, and as the auto was about to pass, it is said Pearre, without looking back, jumped in front of the car. He was knocked down and was unconscious when picked up, and rushed to the hospital in the automobile. Officer Newson placed the chauffeur under arrest. He was later released.

The body of the young man will be taken to Thomson, his former home, Sunday, the funeral being held at Thomson in the afternoon.

Soda Clerks Mutiny; Demand Better Pay

As High Skill Required at Fountain as in Sanctuary of Chef, They Declare.

SAVANNAH, July 5.—Preparatory to asking for higher wages and shorter working hours, soda water dispensers are planning to form a union. They say they are determined to walk out if other means fail.

The clerks say they work for a minimum of ten hours a day, with a maximum of sixteen hours, and that they do not receive enough pay. They hold that their art is one that requires just as much skill and knowledge of how to tickle the palate, as hotel and restaurant chefs, bakers and cooks at other public establishments where edibles are served.

There are in Savannah about 250 soda "jerkers." The majority of them were members of a union that broke up something over a year ago, when the treasurer disappeared with the total funds of the organization.

Five-Year Fugitive Captured at Manor

Stacy Geiger, Under Fifteen-Year Sentence, Had Changed His Name.

WAYCROSS, July 5.—Stacy Geiger, who was convicted five years ago in Wayne County for assaulting a young white girl near Jesup, and who received a fifteen-year sentence in the penitentiary, was captured at Manor, west of Waycross, and turned over to Wayne County officers to-day by Sheriff D. W. Pittman.

Geiger escaped from jail in Jesup shortly after sentence was passed on him and has been able to keep out of the hands of officers ever since. He has been going under the name of Barton. He is 30 years old.

WILSON SCORED BY JUGES IN REVIEW OF CASE

Secretary of Labor Is Declared Never To Have Returned to Scene of His Arrest.

he advised those present to attend a meeting to be held the next day, and stated in substance that if the strike failed, the men at work in the Consolidation mines would be largely responsible for it.

"Such conduct at a meeting evidently held for the purpose of affecting those working at Allegheny mines by a man who had been enjoined in this case was, to say the least, very reprehensible, and if we felt at liberty to take into consideration that transaction in these proceedings we would be inclined to hold him guilty of violating the spirit of the injunction."

Wilson Admits Arrest But Denies His Guilt.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—Secretary of Labor Wilson explains his arrest and activities in the Cumberland strike in the following statement issued to-day:

"On May 24, 1894, the courts of Allegheny County, Maryland, issued a restraining order enjoining myself and others from doing those things which are usually included in the injunctive process in labor disputes.

"On the 22d day of May a copy of the injunction was served on me.

"On the 24th I was cited to appear and show cause why I should not be held for contempt, and on the 26th and 27th of May I was tried for contempt before Judges Hoffman and Boyd.

"Over the protest of my lawyers, the court let down the bars, accepting evidence of my action prior to the issuance of the injunction of the court and after the citation for contempt. Notwithstanding this fact I was acquitted of contempt.

"Immediately following that a charge was made that I was conspiring with the coal miners of the Georges Creek coal region to stop the mines of coal companies.

"I was standing at the station in Lonaconing, Md., waiting on a train coming from Frostburg, on which I expected a message. When the train pulled in Sheriff King stepped off and invited me into the train for a private talk.

"As the train always stops a few minutes at Lonaconing, I complied. When we got on the train he said he had a warrant for my arrest, charging conspiracy. I asked him to read it, which he did. By that time the train was in motion, and I was taken to Piedmont, W. Va., and from there to Cumberland, Md., where I was placed in jail.

"None of my friends among the coal miners knew of my arrest.

"The next day when they learned of it, they came down to Cumberland, got me before a justice of the peace, where they gave bond for me in the sum of $500 for appearance at court.

"The coal companies used the usual 'big business' method to break the strike; thugs were employed to follow at my heels wherever I went. They went so far as to employ one man, paying him $300 to kidnap me and held me prisoner in an abandoned farm house in order that they might be able to announce to the miners that I had sold out and left the region, hoping thereby to discourage the strikers and break the strike."

Negro Delivery Boy Slashes Employer

Attacks White Man When Wages Are Docked—Police Search Futile.

Al Morris, proprietor of a grocery store at 248 Oglethorpe Street, was slashed Saturday night about the wrists and hands by Vance Simmons, a negro boy employed to drive his delivery wagon.

Morris told the police that Simmons was 60 cents short in his collections last week, and that he docked him this amount when he paid him Saturday. This angered the boy, Morris said, and he drew the knife. Call Officer Miner was unable to find the Simmons boy.

Jessie Wilson Picks Husband Just Like Father

Daughter's Fiance Called President's Replica

Daughter of Executive Rejoices That She Is To Be Thirteenth White House Bride in 1913. Considers the Number Lucky.

Miss Jessie Wilson, whose admiration for father caused her to choose husband like him, is shown in the upper picture, while in the lower group Francis Bowes Sayre, the bridegroom-to-be, is shown with the President. The photograph shows their remarkable facial resemblance.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—Miss Jessie Woodrow Wilson, always the chum and admirer of her father, the President, has not departed from this role in the circumstances surrounding her selection of a husband. For one thing Washington society has discovered, with a collective gasp of surprise, that Francis Bowes Sayre, the man of her choice, is a younger replica of her famous father, possessing the same asceticism of countenance, the same brow, nose, chin, eyes, and all.

For another thing, Miss Wilson follows her father in laughing down the time-worn superstition regarding the unluckiness of thirteen. It matters not to her that she will be the thirteenth White House bride in the year 1913.

Admiration for Father Deep.

All Washington to-day, following its discovery that Sayre possesses something like the Wilson physiognomy, is wondering whether that fact had not a great deal to do with Miss Jessie's capitulation to the young lawyer's suit. Her admiration for her father is profound, as is that of the entire Wilson family.

Never did hero worship exist in so the national executive board of the Y. W. C. A. In this capacity she visited the Night Court for Women in New York City, together with Mrs. J. Borden Harriman last winter. She also visited the Children's Court. In February Miss Wilson addressed the Legislature of Delaware in behalf of a ten-hour law for working women. The Legislature passed the bill. In Richmond, Va., last year, Miss Wilson spoke before crowds that filled two marked a degree as in the family of the President, with the President as the figure for adoration. And now, after the first shock of discovery, Washington society is beginning to pass the remark that it is nothing but natural that a Wilson girl should marry a man like her father.

Young Sayre's career has been laid along lines identical with the early career of the President. A brilliant college record, the reputation achieved of a scholar and a leader, a vigorous plunge into law—all this he has done, just as Woodrow Wilson did before him.

Like Woodrow Wilson, too, his predilections have been toward the part of law in political economy and in sociology.

It was through his interest in social betterment work that he and Miss Jessie Wilson acquired their attachment.

Miss Wilson Prominent Worker.

Miss Wilson has been prominent in work of this kind, being a member of churches, and was then compelled to address an overflow meeting.

President Wilson's career has been strangely intermingled with the supposedly unlucky number thirteen, and Miss Wilson is to become the thirteenth White House bride.

But the daughter of the President is not one of those persons who decline to sit in the thirteenth row at the theater or object to being the thirteenth guest at an entertainment. Many times has Miss Wilson defied the superstition, and sat in the thirteenth row of a theater with her father, who prefers to sit in that row, and regards the number as particularly lucky.

Francis Bowes Sayre, who is a clerk in the office of District Attorney Whitman, of New York, is a modest young man. To none of his fellow workers had he ever confided that he even knew the President's daughter. He is 28 years old, an admirer of former President Roosevelt, and a gentleman at heart, although admittedly a man who believes in principles in politics rather than in party.

The marriage will take place in November, on Saturday. This day makes another fling at convention. But Miss Wilson says she will "work for a living."

President Orders "Absolute Quiet."

CORNISH, N. H., July 5.—President Wilson having reached the Summer White House shortly before noon today, immediately commenced the rest for which he came to Cornish.

The President spent the entire day upon the Churchill estate, reading and chatting with his wife and daughters. He indulged in a short nap in the afternoon and took a trip "up country," as the natives say, before dinner. After the evening meal the President secluded himself in his private portion of the Harlakenden House and chatted with Miss Margaret Wilson and his wife until bedtime.

The President had told the newspaper men prior to reaching Windsor that he would do nothing but rest, and to-day's program showed that he

EVELYN THAW WILL SEEK TO ANNUL WEDDING

Declares She Will Investigate Legal Proceedings After Arrival in United States.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, July 5.—Evelyn Nesbit Thaw will seek to annul her marriage to Harry K. Thaw as soon as she reaches the United States to appear in vaudeville in the fall.

"Under the laws of New York, I can not divorce Harry, as he has been adjudged insane," she said to-day, "but I can have the marriage annulled, and that is what I intend to do at the first opportunity."

That her greatest care at present is her young son, Russell, whom she affectionately calls "Pom Pom," was shown by her remarks when seen today in her dressing room at the Hippodrome.

"Just look at that boy's picture," she said, pointing to a large picture of "Pom Pom" reposing in a gold frame on her dressing table, "and then tell me who it looks like. You have seen his father countless times. Every one who has seen Harry and then sees this picture immediately recognizes the strong family resemblance.

"The Thaws have treated me in an inhuman way. They cut off my income, hoping I would go to the dogs, but I am showing them that I can support my boy and myself by my work. When the time comes, I will tie up the Thaw estate through this boy of mine."

SPEER SIGNS EXCEPTIONS BILL IN THE MILLER CASE

SAVANNAH, July 5.—Judge Emory Speer, in the United States Court, has signed the bill of exceptions in the case of Miller Bros., Philadelphia grain brokers, convicted last spring of receiving freight rebates from railroads and steamship companies. The record was presented to Judge Speer in Macon when he returned from his Western trip.

Brave Parson Tells Girls How to Dress

More Modest Clothes, Also More Clothes, Needed Reform, Says Savannah Preacher.

SAVANNAH, July 5.—"How Women Should Dress" will be discussed from the pulpit by the Rev. John S. Wilder, pastor of the South Side Baptist Church, to-morrow evening.

Mr. Wilder believes the present day women not only should wear more modest clothes, but also more clothes. The flimsy, clinging gowns, the tight skirts and those made with slits, which now are so popular, will be arraigned by Mr. Wilder.

"I don't intend to spare anything that has come under my observation, and I intend to tell the women some things that they seemingly have overlooked," he said.

OWLS ACCUSED OF EFFORT TO HIDE SHOOTING

Lanford Probes Charge That Club Officials Tried to Conceal the Ballue-Thompson Incident.

EXPLANATION IS DEMANDED

Police Think Woman Who Wounded Companion Would Have Been Taken Beyond Their Reach.

Chief of Detectives Lanford issued orders Saturday night for a searching investigation into the alleged effort on the part of Owl Club officials to hide from the knowledge of the police the mysterious shooting in the club reception room Friday night, when pretty Mrs. Lucy Ballue, of 18 Lynch Street, shot Captain A. C. Thompson, County Warden.

Chief Lanford summoned L. C. Raoul, secretary of the club, to explain the alleged attempt to spirit Mrs. Ballue away. Harry Latham, court deputy, who was one of the club members at the rooms Friday night, also has been called as a witness. Louis Benton is another.

"I am determined," said the Chief, "to have an explanation of why Captain Thompson, with a bullet wound in his right thigh and another in his left leg, was hustled into another room before the arrival of the officers, and why denial was made of his presence there until his groans disclosed the subterfuge.

Woman Nearly Escaped.

"I also want to know why an apparent effort was made to spirit away Mrs. Ballue, who has admitted firing the shot. She would have been beyond the reach of my department in a few hours, I am confident, if two of the detectives had not caught her Friday night."

Detectives Doyal and Waggoner, who were put on the case soon after the news came to headquarters, heard that the woman, in company with Secretary Raoul, had slipped quietly down the back stairs of the club a few minutes after the shooting.

When they saw the two figures in the dark doorway, they darted into the shadows and awaited developments. It was not long before a cab dashed up to the curb. Doyal and Waggoner rushed up just in time to make the arrest. As they had expected, their captives were Raoul and Mrs. Ballue.

Chief Lanford construes these circumstances to mean a concerted effort on the part of Owl Club officials and members to suppress the knowledge of the shooting, and the probe into this phase of the affair appears likely to approach in importance the investigation into the details of the shooting itself.

Believes Accident Story.

The Chief is inclined to believe the story of Mrs. Ballue, in which she asserted that she was examining the revolver while drinking with Captain Thompson in the club reception room and that it was discharged entirely by accident.

Mrs. Ballue, who was held first under $1,000 bond on the suspicion of shooting Captain Thompson intentionally and later released on bond of $100, will be tried Tuesday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock on the charge of disorderly conduct. The same charge has been preferred against Captain Thompson, who was able to leave the hospital late Saturday afternoon, and he will be tried at the same time. W. H. Holbrook, Mrs. Ballue's brother-in-law, signed bond for both.

Wearing of Belts to Cut Cost of Living

Custom of Tramps of Tightening Girths When Hungry Leads to Theory of Scientist.

CHICAGO, July 5.—If everyone wears a belt, will it reduce the high cost of living?

According to one of the latest scientific theories advanced by an eminent specialist, this is exactly what a belt will do—not by a direct reduction of the cost of foodstuffs, but by a reduction of the human craving for food.

No less an authority than Dr. Randolph Lennhoff, according to reports made to The Vossische Zeitung, has discovered that the wearing of a belt reduces the human appetite for food.

According to the report of Dr. Lennhoff, his investigations were based on his knowledge of the "knights of trampdom," who, when hungry and far from food, tighten their belts to allay the inner craving.

HUSBAND, AGED 15, SUES TO ANNUL HIS MARRIAGE

BIRMINGHAM, July 5.—Abe Sherill, aged 15, by next friend, Nancy Sherill, entered suit to-day in Circuit Court for the annulment of his marriage to Rosa Sherman, alias Rosa Sherill, aged 15, to whom he was married forcibly, he claims, on April 14. He alleges that he did not get the marriage license and that charges were wrongfully made against him. He further declares that he has been arrested since his marriage charged with failure to support his wife.

Forrest Adair Holds His Pigeons as Models

Feathered Pets Teach Lesson in Home Life

Two Hundred Birds at Druid Hills Cote Give Fluttering Welcome Each Day to Owner.

Next to a month's vacation on pay, or a baseball game, or maybe an automobile, the thing that will make life more worth living for the tired business man is a flock of pigeons. Forrest Adair recommends the pigeon as an agency to drive away worry.

Mr. Adair also would hold up the behavior of the pigeon as a model for poor, frail human beings. In his family life the bird is a paragon.

"There are no domestic difficulties and no divorces in pigeonland," he explains. "The male bird doesn't a bit mind helping to hatch or to take care of his children. He is as constant as Stone Mountain, and lighted on her shoulders and head, tearing her carefully arranged coiffure into a blond disorder, at which she only alughed, and held out her hands to coax more. And more came, talking to her with their throaty chuckles. They were wise birds.

"Why can't all birds and animals be tamed in just this way?" remarked Mr. Adair, who stood watching the behavior of his birds, and in no way jealous of the girl. "My pigeons are tame because I never allow anyone to frighten them or make an effort to harm them, and they have been taught wouldn't look at any other dove than his mate for any consideration."

Mr. Adair should know. His experience with pigeons is that of a lifetime, and his flock of 200 or more is one of the most attractive features of his altogether attractive estate in Druid Hills.

Pigeons Answer Owner's Call.

When he approaches, the birds flutter toward him in a whirring shower, lighting on his hands and shoulders and head, a very friendly horde. To be overwhelmed by them, it is only necessary for him to call them, with a cooing, chuckling sort of hail like the note of the pigeons themselves.

He calls, and there is the fluttering shower again, in the midst of which the pleased Mr. Adair stands, smiling, stroking the birds, some of whom are his friends of ten or twelve years' standing.

To own a pigeon flock seems very much worth while at such moments.

The pigeons are discriminating and altogether like human beings in more than one respect. Mr. Adair is blessed with the friendship of many pretty girls, and it is when they visit the Adair home that the little birds are most enthusiastic and friendly and lovable.

Timid with most strangers, the pigeons mind not in the least to fly to girls they never saw before, and are so very forward as even to peck at the lips of the fair visitors, with ardent, affectionate pecks.

"They are the most ardent lovers in the bird world," said Mr. Adair yesterday, explaining this attribute of his pigeons. "To watch them bill and coo—and bill and coo is a term with a real meaning as applied to pigeons—is a lesson to human Romeos and Juliets."

Miss Nash Birds' Chum.

Miss Lydia Nash was a visitor to the Adair home yesterday afternoon. Miss Nash is a chum of long standing with the pigeons, particularly with Baldy, one of the friendliest, prettiest little birds in the world. Baldy's coat is tan except for a snow white head and neck, and being the Adonis of the flock he is naturally Mr. Adair's show pigeon. There is a rivalry between Mr. Adair and Miss Nash for Baldy's affections, with the honors slightly in favor of the young woman.

Baldy, with a dozen others, fluttered toward her as she came near the pigeon house and called them. They to have utmost confidence in every person who comes near them, to regard us as friends, and not enemies."

Lesson in Gentleness Taught.

Mr. Adair himself would no more think of frightening his birds with a sudden gesture or a harsh call than he would of wringing their necks. It was plain, from his conduct in the pigeon yard and from the conduct which he imposes on his guests, that the ownership of pigeons teaches one lots as to consideration and gentleness.

"Any bird or animal can be tamed in just this way," he said, "as is demonstrated in the Government reservation at Yellowstone Park, where the bear, elk and antelopes, the most timid, naturally, of wild beings, will eat from a person's hand."

Most of the Adair pigeons are of the species known as Birmingham Rollers—the Rollers from the fact that they are the most vivacious birds alive, turning single and back somersaults in the air as they fly, from the pure joy of flying. Sometimes the acrobatic feats of the birds are complicated, involving double somersaults, zigzag dashes and whimsical movements of the wings, all done in the course of a full flight.

However, besides the Rollers are a number of homing pigeons, all of which have records that would put to shame a Marathon runner for endurance qualities. The parents of the Adair homing pigeons have made the flight from Macon to Baltimore, the mother arriving home the same day she was liberated and the father reaching Baltimore the next morning about 11 o'clock.

Their progeny run true to form. All have been taken, at one time to another, to suburban points around Atlanta, varying from ten miles to sixty miles distant, and have returned home immediately.

Homers Are New Pigeons.

The homing pigeons are new additions to the flock, having been obtained from the Homing Club in Baltimore. The other pigeons, however, have been reared by Mr. Adair for years. The most venerable have tags about their legs proclaiming the fact that they are ten to twelve years old.

The birds have quarters in a pretty nook on the estate of Mr. Adair in Druid Hills, a few hundred feet back of the house, and never a day passes but their master is there to assure them of his friendship, and to cultivate theirs.

He keeps them for the same reason that he keeps the squirrels on his estate, and those supercilious patricians, his English bloodhounds, that have never trailed a man, but have lived in sybaritic ease all their lives—he keeps them all as things to be loved an to love him in return. In all the twenty years that he has maintained pigeons, he has never sold one, although the flock multiplies consistently in the natural course of events. He has given many away, however, and it is a proof of his true friendship when he makes a gift of one of his feathered pets.

Valuable Aid in Business.

"I love pigeons," he said yesterday. "The main reasons I am fond of them is that man can learn a great many valuable lessons from them. I think pigeons are the cleanest, nicest pets that anyone can have, and I particularly commend them to the business man, who ought to have something of the kind with which he can spend a few moments each day in relaxation from his usual routine."

Pigeons, he said, have many virtues, not the least of which is their domestic fidelity.

"As most people know," he explained, "pigeons mate for life, and both male and female do their full part of the domestic duties without shirking or misunderstandings. When a pair have mated, they select a place for the nest, get together the sticks and twigs, do their building, and after the little hen has laid a couple of eggs they both do duty in sitting."

There are no late hours, no "good fellow" absences, no lack of regard for his home on the part of Mr. Pigeon, Mr. Adair has found out.

"It is not because he is henpecked," he said, "but because he has a sense of home duty that we humans maybe could consider with profit. Johnny Pigeon goes to the nest every morning about 10 o'clock, when there are eggs to be warmed, and remains until about 4 o'clock in the afternoon. Then the hen comes to relieve him, and she holds down the job until the next morning.

Parents Share Cares.

"When the young have hatched, each of the parent birds shares the responsibility of the feeding until the little birds are able to fly and forage around for themselves. In his way, both are kept too busy for any domestic troubles, and there are never any causes for applications for divorce."

Connubial fidelity, he said, is their strong point.

"I have one pair of white birds that have been mated for nine years," he said, "and no black, brown or yellow feather has ever been seen in any of their young.

"Pigeons are very clean, and a healthy bird takes a bath every day, winter and summer. It is, therefore, important in raising them to have not only fresh drinking water, but a suitable place provided for the daily bath."

Altogether, he drew the conclusion, pigeons are rather desirable beings to have around the place.

"Consider the way of the pigeon," he said, "and be, if not made wiser, at least entertained, interested and instructed."

With that he picked up Baldy, and the two passed the time of day in pigeon talk.

LADY SACKVILLE COLLAPSES ON EVE OF VERDICT

Daughter's Determination Not to Wed Unless Name Is Cleared Adds to Mother's Worries.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, July 5.—Lady Sackville, a nervous wreck as the result of her ordeal when she testified in the suit for $5,000,000 left her by Sir John Murray Scott, which is contested by his relatives, to-day is in a state of collapse as she realizes that on the success or failure of her suit probably depends the happiness of her daughter, Hon. Victoria Mary Sackville-West, betrothed to Viscount Lascelles, heir to the Earl of Harewood.

A verdict in the celebrated case is expected Monday, and in the meantime Lady Sackville must suffer the fear of losing her fortune and the dread that her daughter lose the man she loves.

Name Must Be Cleared.

But she makes a condition now—there must be not a shadow of a doubt that her mother's claim to the great fortune is absolutely just, else she will not marry Lascelles.

This is stated positively, although known up to this moment only to a few of the young pair's intimates. The Viscount, 31 years old, has accompanied his fiancee every day to the Probate Court and Admiralty Court, where the suit, all important to them, is being tried.

Lady Sackville said it was in the spring of 1900 that Sir John first told her of his intention to leave her $1,000,000. He said to her that now his mother was dead Lady Sackville had taken a great place in his life, and that he was going to leave to her the $1,000,000, his furniture, his houses at Bagatelle, near Paris, and at Lisbon, and, in fact, all except the houses in London, which he had left to his sisters and brothers.

She swore she never saw the will and did not know it had been made until much later, when Sir John Scott spoke of revoking it.

Speaking of her father, who had been British Minister at Washington, Lady Sackville said he was at times frightfully depressed about the overdrafts on his account at the bank. Sir John Scott, she declared, noticing this, gave him $45,000 at different times.

Lady Sackville testified that on another occasion Sir John paid $15,000 into her bank in order to help her father out of his difficulties. Sir John also occasionally gave her $250 for Christmas or birthday presents, and he sometimes paid her traveling expenses.

She added Sir John had given her daughter, Viscount Lascelles' fiancee, furs which cost $15,000 and to herself an emerald bracelet which cost $25,000. This was the only piece of jewelry she had had from him.

Coogler Hunts Jobs For 'Probationers'

Officer's Array of Proteges Would Put Licensed Employment Agency to Shame.

Adult Probation Officer S. J. Coogler has a new title. It is "Official Job Getter."

"Why, I've got a bunch of job hunters lined up at the Christian Helpers' League on Decatur Street that would put a licensed employment agency to shame," said Mr. Coogler Saturday night.

"And the range of talent is surprising," he continued. "There are bricklayers, carpenters, plasterers, plumbers, night watchmen and so on. One young fellow has been to school most of his life and is willing to try anything. Another professes to be a rattling good stationary engineer out of a job. And there's a quiet, industrious German lad whom I would like to find a good home.

"If you see anyone looking for help, just send him around to me. I can supply a man for almost any ordinary position in the catalogue."

Two Hold-up Gangs In Atlanta Streets

White Man Choked and Beaten by Two Negroes—Messenger Robbed of Collections.

Two squads of highwaymen were working on Atlanta streets early Saturday night, according to reports that came to the police. E. M. Duke, 570 Capitol Avenue, was the victim of two negroes at Hayden and Harris Streets when, passing by an uncompleted house on the corner, he was seized, choked and beaten. The robbers got $6.

Later, at Crew and Clarke Streets, Bob Huntington, a negro boy, in the employ of Jacobs' Pharmacy, was beset by two negroes, who took from him $6 he had collected from deliveries made during the day.

U. S. DISPLEASED AT EXPERIMENT FARM OF STATE

Funds From Federal Government Will Be Withdrawn if Changes Are Not Made.

"I may say that in view of the present condition of the station and the unsatisfactory use it has made of its funds in the past, this department will feel constrained to insist on a literal interpretation of the laws in the future use of the Federal appropriations, and to recommend their suspension if such conditions are not maintained."

This is the statement contained in a letter from Acting Secretary of Agriculture B. T. Galloway, at Washington, to former Governor Brown relative to the use of Federal funds in the carrying on of the work of the Georgia experiment farm. The letter, which was written June 11, has just been made public.

The letter does not charge crooked work by any official, but asserts that the State has violated the provisions under which the Federal appropriation was made. This violation consists in the fact that the money has not been devoted to experiment work, but that the State has used the fund to develop a farm out of which it has obtained profit.

Acting Secretary Galloway's letter followed a report made by Federal Inspector E. W. Allen.

There will be a meeting of the board of commissioners in charge of the farm July 9, which will be attended by Inspector Allen. State Commissioner of Agriculture Price will also attend this meeting, and an effort will be made to have the matter straightened out.

NEW MOVE IN PHAGAN CASE BY SOLICITOR

Dorsey Will Endeavor to Force Defense to Disclose Their Documentary Evidence.

ACT IS COUNTERSTROKE

Frank's Attorneys Said to Have Affidavits Exonerating Frank and Indicating Conley's Guilt.

A sensational turn in the Phagan murder mystery, according to one of the attorneys for the defense, will develop next week when Solicitor General Hugh M. Dorsey issues a subpena duces tecum on Attorneys Luther Z. Rosser and Reuben Arnold, citing them to produce all the affidavits they have secured that bear on the crime.

The movement is in the nature of a counterstroke to block the pending subpenaes duces tecum filed by the defense citing the State to produce all the affidavits that have been secured.

The defense strongly maintains that it will win its point and that the prosecution will suffer. The attorneys say that the Constitution of the State clearly outlines the action of the court in such matters—"that the defendant is entitled to be faced with all the evidence against him"—while the prosecution will labor under the handicap that "a defendant is innocent until he is proven guilty."

Dorsey Is Silent.

While no announcement would be made by Solicitor Dorsey relative to the contemplated subpenaes duces tecum, it was intimated by him that such action might be taken at an early date, and that when it was the defense and the prosecution would lock horns in the first decisive battle in the sensational case.

Affidavits that are sought by the defense are the three different sworn statements of the negro, Jim Conley, the affidavit given by the negro cook at the Frank home, Minola McKnight, the Formby affidavit and the affidavit of Monteen Stover, the girl who stated that she entered Frank's office at a time when he said he was there, and found the office deserted.

The State will seek to obtain affidavits contradicting their theory and placing the crime on the negro sweeper, Jim Conley. These affidavits are said to deal principally with the time different witnesses entered and left the factory April 26, the most vital question in the trial.

Affidavits of Defense.

The defense is said to be in possession of affidavits that show Monteen Stover entered and departed from the factory before Mary Phagan's car reached the heart of the city; that the negro Jim Conley entered the factory earlier in the day than he said he did, and that he, instead of the indicted pencil factory superintendent, committed the murder, because the superintendent left the factory at least ten minutes before Conley said he helped him dispose of the body, and that the Formby affidavit, a one-time sensational bit of evidence substantiating the defense, was given by the woman at the behest of the police detectives without regard for its accuracy, and that Mrs. Formby has since admitted that she never knew Leo M. Frank or heard of him until he was held as a suspect in connection with the murder.

ALMOST FRANTIC WITH DANDRUFF

Tormented by Itching. Hair Came Out by Combfuls. Pimples on Scalp. Cuticura Soap and Ointment Made Permanent Cure.

Bissell, Ala. — "I had a very bad case of dandruff on my head. I was tormented by itching and my hair began to come out by the combfuls. I almost became frantic, fearful that I would lose all of my hair which was my pride. There were some pimples on my scalp and I scratched them until they made sores. My hair was dry and lifeless.

"I was bothered about four months and had tried various kinds of preparations which seemed to only make it worse. I saw the advertisement of Cuticura Soap and Ointment and sent to my druggist for three cakes of Cuticura Soap and a box of Cuticura Ointment. I washed my scalp with warm water strong with the Cuticura Soap and dried, afterwards applying the Cuticura Ointment, working it in the scalp slowly with my fingers. After using them for several days my hair began to stop coming out. The dandruff all disappeared and in less than four weeks a cure was accomplished permanently." (Signed) Miss Lucy May, Nov. 6, 1912.

Cuticura Soap and Ointment do so much for pimples, blackheads, red, rough skins, itching, scaly scalps, dandruff, dry, thin and falling hair, chapped hands and shapeless nails, that it is almost criminal not to use them. Sold everywhere. Liberal sample of each mailed free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. T, Boston."

Men who shave and shampoo with Cuticura Soap will find it best for skin and scalp.

Phagan Case Centers on Conley

Negro Lone Hope of Both Sides

Frank Expects Freedom by Breaking Down Accuser's Testimony, and State a Conviction by Establishing Truth of Statements.

BY AN OLD POLICE REPORTER.

The developments in the Phagan case have been of late highly significant and interesting.

During the past week, it became evident that the very heart and soul of both the prosecution and the defense is to center largely about the negro, James Conley.

He is at once apparently the hope and the despair of both sides to the contest!

This circumstance, however, while tending to add much to the dramatic and the uncertain, in so far as the outcome is concerned, is not by any means an unusual thing in cases of this kind.

It frequently happens in mysterious murder cases that both the State and the defense must pin their faith to one and the same witness.

Of late there has been some talk of the Grand Jury indicting Conley, even over the Solicitor General's head, which, of course, it would have a perfect right to do.

The thought occurred to me some time ago that the case might take that direction, but in the article in which that point was discussed, I mentioned it incidentally, rather than as a likely thing.

Indictment may Mean Much.

It seems, nevertheless, that the idea of indicting Conley has had, and still may have, much more behind it than some people have been willing to admit, and that phase of the situation has caused me to speculate somewhat in detail today as to how and why Conley might be indicted.

I find that those who are urging it have much more to stand upon than would seem probable at first blush.

Two things are evident:

First, the defense will attack Conley vigorously.

Second, the character of Leo Frank will be put in issue by the defense, fearlessly and frankly!

These two things, I take it, will constitute the defense's primary challenge to the prosecution!

And if I be right about that, the issue will be thrilling and dramatic enough to satisfy the cravings of the most exacting, when the case comes on for trial later along this month.

About these two points of disagreement, Hugh Dorsey and Frank Hooper, on the one hand, and Luther Rosser and Reuben Arnold, on the other, will be on their mettle—and if the fur and likewise the fire doesn't fly, I mistake my guess at this writing!

Leo Frank has been indicted for the murder of Mary Phagan, and for reasons presumably satisfactory to the Grand Jury.

Points Against Conley.

Let's examine the points upon which the defense will indict Conley, if the Grand Jury fails to beat the defense to it—which yet is problematical.

The defense will contend:

(1) That Conley wrote of his own notion the notes found beside the dead girl's body.

(2) That the negro told of incidents and conversations which took place admittedly in the pencil factory an hour or more before he swears he went there.

(3) That the negro admits he was drinking and "broke" when he went to the factory Saturday morning, and is known to have spent in the afternoon about the amount of money Mary Phagan is supposed to have had in her little mesh bag when she started out of the factory.

(4) That the negro admits he was in hiding or loafing near the open elevator shaft, at the foot of the steps Mary Phagan must have used as she came down to go out of the factory.

(5) That at the inquest Frank said he thought he had heard voices outside his office, very soon after Mary Phagan started down the stairs, and that the voices he thought he heard which might have been voices of Mary Phagan and the negro, just as the negro attacked the girl.

(6) That the negro said the body of Mary Phagan was carried down the elevator shaft, and yet two witnesses stand ready to swear, and have sworn, that the elevator did not run on the fatal Saturday at all.

(7) That, while the negro accounts after a fashion for the girl's shoe and hat thrown onto a trash pile, he fails to account for the incriminating parasol found at the foot of the elevator shaft, where it might have been thrown with Mary Phagan's body from above.

(8) That the negro says Frank called him at 12:56, notwithstanding the fact that Frank was talking to Mr. and Mrs. White at 1 o'clock, and immediately thereafter left the factory, reaching home about 1:20. That, therefore, Frank could not have done the things Conley accuses him of having done, for sheer lack of time, if nothing else.

(9) That the negro did not flee, if guilty himself, because the police promptly accused in turn Newt Lee, Gantt, Mullinix and Frank as suspects, not once mentioning Conley; and, besides, no one knew at the time these suspects were proclaimed that Conley had even been in the pencil factory Saturday morning.

(10) That Conley was caught washing his shirt, which might have been blood-stained, very soon after Mary Phagan's murder was effected, and that he said at the time he was worried over something not stated.

(11) That the negro's statements have been inconsistent and conflicting, both those under oath and those not under oath, and that he has admitted having sworn falsely more than once.

(12) That the negro's defense of himself is of no merit, because it is the only possible defense of himself he could frame—a last and desperate resort to fix upon Frank Conley's own guilt.

(13) That Conley's evidence is of small if any value against Frank, because it was not given until suspicion seemed drifting rapidly toward Conley.

(14) That Frank's statements have been straightforward, consistent and reasonable, whereas, in contrast thereto, the negro's have been inconsistent, conflicting and unreasonable.

(15) If the negro's presence in the factory had been known at the time Frank was indicted, Frank likely never would have been indicted; or, at least, would not likely have been indicted in preference to the negro.

(16) That the motive in the case of Frank never has been established and will be difficult to establish, but that the motive in the case of the negro—i. e., robbery—is immediately apparent.

(17) That the entire factory force testifies to the good character of Frank, whereas the character of the negro, both by his own admissions and the police court records, is bad.

(18) That many of the horrible details of the murder, scattered broadcast when it was first effected, are not true, and that the circumstances of the crime point to the negro Conley as its perpetrator, much more surely than to Frank.

Now, the reader must understand that which I have tried to impress upon him in every article I heretofore have written about the Phagan case, to wit: I know nothing more about the POSITIVE TRUTH of the case than he does—that is to say, my sources of information have been precisely the same sources that his have been—the newspapers.

I have scrutinized the files of The Georgian and The American and other Atlanta papers, and the foregoing eighteen counts against Conley I have gathered together from perhaps fifty different issues.

Framework Is Powerful.

I have set them forth as showing the strength of the position of those—or the imaginary strength, whichever it is—invoking the indictment of Conley NOW.

They may be of tremendous significance—they may be of no material significance. But they DO serve to show the framework of the powerful defense that is being constructed for Frank.

I give them for what they are worth.

There stands between Conley and Grand Jury indictment, of course, the compelling necessity of using Conley as a material witness—THE material witness, indeed!—against Frank.

To indict Conley NOW would weaken the State's case against Frank, unquestionably.

And yet the fact remains that certain members of the Grand Jury have been reported as seriously inclined to that course, nevertheless.

And, after all, that matter (theoretically, anyway) is utterly impersonal with the Grand Jury and arbitrarily in its hands.

Before I became a newspaper man and later along police reporter, I studied law, as I mentioned before, and was admitted to the bar. I practiced four years, and while I abandoned the law long ago for the newspaper profession, I never lost my taste entirely for my first love.

I went over to the State Library Saturday and looked up some few decisions bearing upon the two vital points to be raised in the Phagan case, as I view it now, and two things impressed me profoundly.

State Can Not Attack Frank.

When the defense attacks Conley it will be backed by some weighty law affecting his credibility, and when it puts Frank's character in evidence—the State CAN NOT put his character in evidence, it will be understood—it will be backed again by some weighty opinions as to the value of character, established and proved.

In the Twenty-third Georgia Supreme Court Reports I find that Mr. Justice McDonald laid down this rule:

If a witness swear willfully and knowingly false, even to a collateral fact, his testimony ought to be rejected entirely, unless it be so corroborated by circumstances, or other unimpeached evidence, as be irresistible!

That is the law of the land, and it will be invoked, I suppose, against Conley, with vigor and possible effect.

The defense, no doubt, will contend that Conley has sworn falsely—and proved it by written instruments—and it then will insist that Conley's entire evidence must be rejected unless corroborated by other unimpeached testimony.

Can the State corroborate Conley by such evidence?

Evidently the defense doubts it.

I do not know, of course.

Hearsay, irrelevant matter, street gossip, newspaper stories—those things will not do when it comes to trying Leo Frank for his life.

Conley Must Be Corroborated.

Conley, at best an admitted accessory after the fact of the murder, must be corroborated by COMPETENT and LEGAL evidence.

And right here, I think, the defense expects to give the State one of its very hardest nuts to crack.

Maybe the State can crack it, all right!

That remains to be seen, and as to that I venture no opinion.

Again, I take it the defense expects to strike straight from the shoulder when it puts Frank's character in issue.

I do not KNOW that the defense will do this, but from the tone of some of the articles, particularly Mrs. Frank's remarkable interview, given out recently by the defense, or authorized by it, I SUSPECT that is exactly what it will do.

This will be a bold stroke, too, for unless the DEFENSE puts Leo Frank's character in issue, IT CAN NOT BE PUT IN ISSUE AT ALL.

The State is estopped, of its own motion, from doing that.

Therefore, when the defense DOES it, it is pretty apt to be taken as an evidence that the defense is very confident of itself.

Into the case at this point, then, will come a portion of the law of Georgia that is most picturesque and significant—a portion that is founded upon the very bedrock of decency and common sense, and that throws about all observers of the law and about all right-living men a protection as certain and as sure as it is majestic and noble.

Character Good Evidence.

In respect of CHARACTER as evidence of innocence of crime, I find that Chief Justice Simmons, in the 102d Georgia, said this:

"Evidence of good character is admitted as evidence of a positive fact, and may, of itself, by the creation of a reasonable doubt, produce acquittal!"

And, again, the same authority says:

"Of what avail is a good character, which a man may have been a lifetime in acquiring, if it is to benefit nothing in the hour of peril?"

Chief Justice Simmons was a Superior Court judge for some twenty years before he was elevated to the Supreme bench, and a Supreme Court justice for a like period.

He was one of the noblest men that Georgia ever produced, and one of the most profound and approved students of the law.

And he made good character the very Rock of Gibraltar upon which a man attacked might depend in time of peril!

Once the defense puts Leo Frank's character in issue, however, the State may attack it as bitterly and as vehemently as it likes.

This, it may be, the State is prepared to do.

Unless the State does break down Frank's character, however, once it is put in issue by his own attorneys, the State will be thereafter at a tremendous disadvantage, I think, particularly when the defense is undertaking to shoot the character of Conley to pieces from the other flank!

Character can not be broken down in a courtroom with whispered words and sinister gossip.

Must Attack in Open.

Under the impersonal rules of evidence and the law, character must be attacked in the open—it must be beaten down, if beaten down it be, with weapons the judge and the jury may see wielded in fair play, and it must be a fight to a finish.

True, if a defendant deliberately puts his own character in issue, the burden is upon him to sustain his character; but once the law puts that burden upon a defendant, it holds in leash and sure control the State in its attempts to demolish it.

I have written of crimes and of criminals for fifteen years—of petty sneak thieves and bank robbers, of common back-alley bullies and murders, of brutes and degenerates, of clever confidence men and clumsy bunglers.

I have seen the innocent made victims of cruel circumstances and the unquestionably guilty escape, but I am yet to see a case in which good character, firmly and frankly set up, was not a tower of strength to the accused—a sure and abiding "benefit in his hour of peril," as Chief Justice Simmons says it should be!

After all is said and done, character is the corner stone upon which civilization and society most securely rests.

It holds the business world together, and it differentiates the wheat from the chaff in the professions.

Without it, the grand old name of gentleman is a mockery and a sham—and, above all things, it best marks the woman as fitted to her natural and noblest environment!

If Leo Frank puts his character in issue, it will be a challenge full and free to the State to do its worst—it well may be expected to make or mar the defense of Leo Frank, charged with the murder of Mary Phagan.

DECISIONS WHICH MAY AID DEFENSE OF FRANK

The old police reporter, in sizing up the many possibilities of the Phagan case, has reached two conclusions as to the line of action which he believes will be followed by the defense:

FIRST, he believes the defense will undertake to destroy the value of Conley's evidence, and fix upon Conley the guilt the State is trying to fix upon Frank.

SECOND, he thinks the defense will make the character of Leo Frank an issue.

The old police reporter, in poring through the files of the Georgia Supreme Court Reports, has found two decisions upon which he thinks the defense will rely.

The first which might be used to break down Conley's evidence is as follows:

If a witness swears willfullly and knowingly false, even to a collateral fact, his testimony ought to be rejected entirely, unless it be so corroborated by circumstances, or other unimpeached evidence, as to be irresistible.—23 GEORGIA REPORTS.

As a circumstance tending to prove Frank's innocence, the defense, the old police reporter thinks, will produce the following:

Evidence of good character is admitted as evidence of a positive fact, and may, of itself, by the creation of a reasonable doubt, produce acquittal!—102 GEORGIA REPORTS.

TURPIN TRACED WITH HOPE OF CATCHING GANG

Cracksman Wounded at Kirkwood Is Believed Master in Juvenile School of Crime.

Hoping to run down one of the most remarkable gangs of cracksmen that ever operated in the South—as remarkable an aggregation of criminals as Dickens created when he wrote of Bill Fagin and his school of crooks—inspectors from the Postoffice Department have started to trace the movements of Walter Turpin from the time he was released from the Federal Prison in February until he was wounded in a pistol battle with citizens of Kirkwood Friday night, after blowing the safe in the village postoffice.

H. N. Graham, the inspector who is in charge of the case, has developed clews that strongly indicate the existence of such a gang, and that it consists of two men and three boys. These clews indicate that Walter Turpin and the other man ran a sort of preparatory school of crime—that they gained control and influence over boys from 12 to 16 years of age and used them as lookouts and to get into places where the presence of a man would arouse suspicion.

In the theory the detectives have evolved Turpin is likened to Fagin in his apparently uncanny ability to control boys and lead them into lives of crime, despite their natural inclinations to be useful citizens.

Suspect Young Eberhart.

Actions of the police and of Graham indicate that they have a well-grounded suspicion that Tommy Eberhart, the 14-year-old boy who has been rooming with Turpin for three weeks, is one of the boys over whom Turpin has been trying to gain control. When the boy was taken to detective headquarters Saturday morning he was quizzed for more than four hours. Then Chief Lanford ordered him sent to the juvenile detention home on Central Avenue, and announced that he will be held until the investigation is completed. It is understood that the boy's detention came through the request of Graham.

The theory of the existence of the gang is based on a curious chain of circumstances. Some time between the hours of 9 o'clock and midnight, before the blowing of the safe at Kirkwood, the postoffice and two stores at Battle Hill were robbed. These robberies are supposed to have been committed by two men and a boy. A report has also come to the police that the two men and the boy were seen running from the village shortly before the robberies were discovered.

The Other Robberies.

Only a few stamps and some loose change were stolen from the Battle Hill postoffice, which is in a grocery store operated by T. J. Daniels, and from T. J. Key's grocery store a box of cigars and some chipped beef were taken. M. R. Bratton's refreshment stand was entered and a few dollars taken from the cash register.

The fact that a boy is supposed to have had a hand in the Battle Hill burglaries and that two boys were seen running from the Kirkwood postoffice when the posse of citizens came upon Turpin at his work have convinced Graham and the local police that Turpin and his gang committed the Battle Hill burglaries and then went to Kirkwood to blow the postoffice safe. Graham is making a thorough probe of the Battle Hill and the Kirkwood burglaries, and stated Saturday that he will seek to fasten the former crimes on Turpin and the gang of which he is said to be the leader.

Graham also stated Saturday that he has good reasons for believing Turpin is connected with several postoffice robberies that have been reported to the Atlanta postal authorities in the past few weeks. Some of these are robberies of considerable importance. From the safe of the postoffice at Adairsville money and stamps amounting to $2,000 were taken, while $500 was stolen from the postoffice at Williamson, Ga. And though it was not given out officially, it is strongly hinted that suspicious-looking men, always accompanied by one or more boys, were seen in the villages a few hours before each of the robberies.

Insists He Was Alone.

The date for Turpin's preliminary hearing has not been set, but it was stated last night that he may be brought to Atlanta and tried in the Federal Court. The self-confessed "yeggman" still insists that he was alone and that the Kirkwood job is the first he has done since his release from prison.

Turpin is tattooed, and there are also little marks which detectives say are made by a hypodermic needle, indicating that the man is a drug fiend.

NORTH HIGHLANDS' PLEA FOR EXPRESS IS PROBED

MACON, July 5.—Campbell Wallace, secretary of the Railroad Commission, to-day came to Macon and investigated the conditions alleged by the residents of North Highlands who have petitioned that the Southern Express Company be made to give them delivery service. He was accompanied to North Highlands by the manager of the express company and by Secretary Hymen, of the Chamber of Commerce. He did not state what his report to the commission would show.

BIG POSITION WITH LEACH INTERESTS GIVEN MACON MAN

MACON, July 5.—Leon S. Dure, one of Macon's most prominent business men, has been elected vice president of the A. B. Leach interests in Macon, these comprising the gas company, railway and light company, Central Georgia Power Company and Georgia Transmission Company.

P. F. Wickham resigned as vice president to accept a similar position with the Leach interests in Cincinnati, Ohio.

Judge Newman Still Eager to Work

Plans Activities at Retiring Age

Judge W. T. Newman, of the United States District Court. Though he is past the retiring age, Judge Newman's photograph shows his present vigor.

Federal Jurist Says He's as Able to Serve Country Now as When He Left Army.

One fine morning last week Federal Judge William T. Newman awoke to find that he had turned the seventieth milestone in his earthly journey, thereby qualifying for retirement, on pay, from the bench and from worry.

He looked well into the situation. He felt as fit as a Marathon runner, and not a day older than on the memorable morning in 1864 when he rode into a battle at Jonesboro to have his right arm shot away by a bullet from the gun of a Union soldier.

"So why," inquired he of a Sunday American reporter Saturday, "should I think of getting out of harness? I feel that I can still do good work. I am told that my work is giving satisfaction. Therefore, I shall not retire. Not now."

Judge Newman has occupied the bench of the United States Court of the Northern District of Georgia since 1886, and has held court in most of the cities of Georgia. The lawyers, watching his career, knew when the seventieth birthday came, June 23, and a number of letters were sent to him, friendly, congratulatory letters, expressing the hope that he remain on the bench.

Not Ready to Quit.

"Even if I had thought of quitting," he said, "these assurances would have been enough to show me that I still can render service. The day I find that an impairment of mental or physical faculties renders me unfit, then I shall quit. My duty to the Government I serve would demand that. But now—well, if my friends didn't remind me that I had reached my seventieth birthday, I wouldn't know it or believe it.

"When a man retires, to become a watcher of this very interesting world, instead of taking a part in its activities, then it is a sign that he is through—that he has quit.

"To quit—to merely look on, to read the papers, to pass the time of day, to go to the baseball game, to drop work—the idea has no appeal for me.

"As long as I can render service, I feel that I should remain at work. Every man should. As soon as I can not render service, then I shall quit, in this respect, a judge is somewhat different from a private citizen. A judge owes it to the public to step down and out when his usefulness passes; a citizen, whose business is his own, and his own affair, can stay on and make a mess of it, to nobody's harm but his own.

"But while he can, a man should stick on the job."

Work, Judge Newman thinks, is every man's function.

"There is a moral and a spiritual satisfaction in labor," he said, "when you know that you are doing it well. Then there is physical well-being also. Retirement from a part in the world's affairs means inaction. Inaction spells physical decay.

"This world is a mighty interesting place when you know that you have a hand, however small, in its work."

Was Confederate Cavalryman.

Judge Newman was born June 23, 1843, in Knoxville, Tenn. When he was 17 years old he enlisted in the Second Tennessee Cavalry, of the Confederate Army, and the next year was promoted to a lieutenancy. Early in 1863 he was wounded and captured by the Federals, and later in the year was exchanged. His career as a soldier ended at the battle of Jonesboro, Ga., in 1864, when a bullet found his right arm, necessitating its removal.

After the war he located in Atlanta, became a lawyer, and from 1871 until 1883 was city attorney. In 1886 he received the appointment as United States judge, and has held the position now for 27 years.

W. J. MASSEE PAYS $7,000 TO TENNESSEEAN

Criminal and Civil Prosecution Dropped by R. W. Williams, Former Stock Farm Partner.

MACON, July 5.—W. J. Massee, the Macon capitalist, has settled the prosecution of civil and criminal cases, which have kept him out of Tennessee for several years, by paying R. W. Williams, of Columbia, Tenn., $7,000.

The indictment, charging Massee with criminal extortion and libel, was dismissed at Nashville to-day upon motion of the Attorney General of Davidson County, and Williams at the same time dismissed his $35,000 suit for damages, in consideration of the payment of the $7,000.

A jury last year awarded Williams a verdict for $16,000, but the United State Court of Appeals last week set it aside and gave Massee a new trial, on the ground that the trial judge did not have the right to reduce the verdict to $7,500 as was done.

Massee and Williams were formerly partners in a stock farm. While at a club in Nashville several years ago Massee, it was alleged, made a remark reflecting on Williams' character. Williams then brought suit and also procured a grand jury indictment.

Requests for extradition of Massee were served on both Governors Smith and Brown, and were declined by them. Last year Massee was arrested in South Carolina, but Governor Hooper, of Tennessee, withdrew the request for extradition just when Governor Blease said he would honor it.

Acute Indigestion

T. M. WORD

For several years my wife suffered frequent attacks with acute indigestion. These attacks in their alarming frequency became the dread of my life. My wife never knew what she could eat without taking the risk of one of these attacks. We tried every remedy we could hear of, with only temporary relief. Sitting in my office one morning, feeling very despondent after spending a sleepless night and the terrible suspense over the alarming condition of my wife, a friend called my attention to Nuxcara, the wonderful stomach remedy, stating that Nuxcara would cure her without a doubt. I at once put her on the treatment, with the most happy results. She is entirely cured, and is in better health than she has been for years; eats anything she wants—Nuxcara is the most wonderful remedy I ever heard of.

My wife was so delighted with her experience with Nuxcara that she prevailed upon me to take it myself. I was suffering with a catarrhal condition which affected my liver and kidneys. I had been under the treatment of a specialist for my kidneys, who kept me on a diet for several months, but my condition seemed to grow worse and I was in a state of mind to make a change, so I began to take Nuxcara, which completely cured me in a short time. My health is perfect. I eat and sleep well; in fact, I never felt better in my life. I regard Nuxcara as an achievement in science unparalleled, a remedy which has no equal in all forms of stomach trouble.—T. M. Word, 373 Cherokee Avenue.

Demonstration of the wonderful merits of Nuxcara at Coursey & Munn's, corner Marietta and Broad Streets, by Dr. Shelnutt from 9 a. m. to 6 p. m. every day.

Acute Indigestion

Threatens everyone who has any disturbance of the digestive system—an uncomfortable feeling after eating is a warning which should not go unheeded, but Nuxcara should be taken at once and restore the digestive organs to a healthy condition, when there will be no danger from this often fatal attack. Nuxcara is guaranteed to be a positive and certain cure. The distress after eating is promptly relieved by a dose of Nuxcara.

Nuxcara

Is a scientific remedy which has been prescribed by eminent physicians for years with the most gratifying results in all forms of stomach troubles. Nuxcara was tested for ten years before offering it to the world as a positive and certain cure for indigestion, dyspepsia, catarrh and the many evils following the poisoning of the system with toxins from undigested and decomposing food in the digestive tracts. One may take digestive agents and relieve an attack of indigestion, but the poison generated through the decomposition of the undigested food may remain in the system for days before eliminated, and furnish the primary cause of another attack, besides setting up structural changes in the organisms. Nuxcara is positive and certain; restores the system to perfect health.

BABIES WILL BE IN PERIL UNLESS CITY RESPONDS

Mothers' Congress Has Supply for 32, While 35 Appeals Are on the Books.

HEARST AND PAXON AID

Milk Bottles Will Be Blaced as Donation Receptacles in Atlanta Stores.

Three Atlanta babies, insufficiently nourished and sweltering in their poverty-stricken homes, will get no milk Monday unless some generous Atlantan comes forward with a donation to the fund being raised by the Mothers' Congress of Atlanta to supply the poor babies of the city with pure, fresh milk each day during the summer.

"We have the names of 35 babies who should be given a quart of milk each day," said Mrs. John Rowlett, in charge of the pure milk campaign, Saturday night, "and are able to take care of only 32. Twenty-three of these are taken care of by the subscriptions of Mr. Hearst and Mr. Paxon, and there are nine other persons who have promised to provide a quart of milk a day for some poor child. Names of more babies are coming in every day, and our list is growing faster than we can find generous people to take care of it."

Mrs. Rowlett declared that the $25 gift of Colonel Paxon made Saturday morning would do much to enable them to keep up the work. "If more of the men of Atlanta would come forward as Mr. Paxon has and donate something to the fund," she said, "it would not be so hard. The Mothers' Congress wishes to express its thanks and appreciation to Mr. Paxon for his generous gift."

Monday morning 50 milk bottles will be placed in the Whitehall and Peachtree Street stores, and every citizen of Atlanta is asked to donate something to the work of giving the poor babies of the city a chance for their lives.

Though everyone will be urged to give as much as his or her circumstances will permit, small donations will be welcome. Even a nickel or a dime dropped in the bottle will be of aid in the good work. Just how long the bottles will remain in the stores depends to a large extent upon the size of the donations.

It is hoped to obtain enough money this way to eke out the subscriptions that are made to the fund, and enable the congress to carry on their work all summer without overlooking any babies.

Six Atlanta Girls Made Heroines

Mrs. Futrelle's Friends in Fiction

Author Compliments Old Chums

The top picture shows Miss Lottie Peck Wylie, who is the heroine of the first of Mrs. Futrelle's new series of stories. Below is Mrs. May Futrelle, the author.

Widow of Writer Who Sank With Titanic Finishes Stories Carrying Names of Georgians.

The names of six well-known Atlanta girls are to figure in six stories by May Futrelle, widow of Jacques Futrelle, who went down with the Titanic.

Mrs. Futrelle is an Atlanta woman, and has hundreds of close friends in this city, and the placing of the names of some of them in her stories is a gracious compliment.

The first of the series is called "Consequences," and the heroine is named Lottie Peck Wyly.

"Consequences" is published in the July number of Harper's Bazaar, and is one of those delicious little "He and She" stories that the author prides herself on.

Of Course Man Is Near.

The story begins at a railroad station, with a wreck up the road, and the heroine desperately anxious to get to New York to avert a great calamity.

Lottie Wyly is detained at the station. A young man with an automobile stands conveniently near, inquiring the road to New York. His name is William Strickland, 3d.

She said: "I beg your pardon."

"She said: "Don't mention it."

It is then arranged that the young man drive the heroine to the city to avert the great calamity. All the necessary accidents happen to delay the hurrying party, when suddenly a young man named Ned appears upon the road in his car, and more complications arise.

As the story goes on, a thrilling romance is developed and by the time the hero and heroine arrive at the place of their destination the reader is on the tiptoe of happy expectation.

It would not do to tell the whole story, with the consequences, but it is worth reading, and measures fully up to what Mrs. Futrelle has already done in the way of fiction.

Miss Roper Described.

In the first and most pretentious story attempted by May Futrelle, a novel called "The Secretary of Frivolous Affairs," the heroine is named for the beautiful Loulie Roper, and that young woman is personally described as she is, a charming Southern belle of the most aristocratic type. Miss Roper is the niece of the late General John B. Gordon. She spends her summers at Newport or some other famous and fashionable resort and her winters on her peach farm, near Kingston, where personally she overlooks her orchards, and assists in the packing of her peaches in the early summer.

In her series of smart mystery stories Mrs. Futrelle has used the name of Miss Kit Calloway, of LaGrange, daughter of one of the wealthy financiers of the State, and of a former beauty of Atlanta who, as Miss Fannie Banks, was one of the most beautiful young girls in her time in the South.

Visit Atlanta in Fall.

Mrs. Futrelle is at present spending the summer at her home, Stepping Stones, at Scituate, Mass., where she is engaged with her splendid collection of dahlias which offer her a rest and recreation from the busy stress of a New York season of writing.

In the fall Mrs. Futrelle will probably come to Atlanta to spend the winter. She is an Atlanta woman, and was educated in this city, and developed her first talents of music, expression and writing in this city.

"Consequences" is the first of the series of stories to exploit the name of an Atlanta girl, and there are five more to follow in the course of time.

COURTS TO BARE MACON CHURCH ROW TO PUBLIC

Choirmaster and Ladies' Aid Society Worker Must Face Ordeal of Open Trial in Suit.

MACON, July 5.—Society and church folk here are anticipating not only one of the sharpest legal fights in the history of Macon courts, by the airing of sensational charges involving the local churches in general as the aftermath of the First Christian Church charges, in which Professor Frank M. Charlton, the choir leader, and Mrs. Effie L. Lester, the secretary of the Ladies' Aid Society, are involved.

The accused persons, upon the recommendation of the elders' committee, Sunday morning will be exonerated of all charges by the congregation.

Instead of culminating, this will really mark the beginning of the controversy, however, for almost immediately the accused and the accusers and their friends will array themselves for a legal fight.

Counsel has already been retained by both sides, the Lesters having engaged the services of Attorney Claud Estes to conduct their suit for slander, while Attorney Julian Urquhart has been selected by Mrs. Jenkins, who preferred the charges, in anticipation of libel and slander suits. Professor Charlton also, it is said, will be represented by able counsel of Macon.

Real Sensation to Come.

The real sensation of the entire affair, it is said, will be produced by Mrs. Lester, the accused church leader, who declares that the charges of her neighbor, Mrs. Jenkins, were instigated by a spirit of church jealousy which has cropped out since the First Christian Church began its period of marvelous prosperity.

"My accusers," declared Mrs. Lester, "have been jealous for a long time of the prosperity which has attended our church. They have looked enviously upon the increase in our membership, which has been marvelous, and they have begrudged us the services of Professor Charlton.

Lester Defends Wife.

Lester, who has defended his wife from the start, upholds her in the claim that church jealousy has figured prominently in the charges.

The stated determination of Rev. Mr. Anderson, pastor, and Lenoir Erwin, elder and member of the investigating committee of the First Christian Church, to clear the name of the church, either by ousting the accused parties if guilty, or vindicating them if not guilty, is said to be further indication of the prominent part which the churches will play in the coming trial in the courts.

Both Mr. Anderson and Mr. Irwin declared emphatically to the reporter that the name of the church must be preserved by an open and unbiased investigation of the entire matter. If the parties are guilty, they declared, then they must be dealt with accordingly, but if they are not guilty of the charges then they must be vindicated and the church which holds their membership vindicated also in open meeting.

Americans Leave, So Japs Celebrate 4th

Aliens In California Village Observe Day by Inviting White Men to Speak.

NEWCASTLE, CAL., July 5.—Newcastle would not have had a Fourth of July celebration yesterday had it not been for Japanese residents.

Most of the Americans had gone on a visit to neighboring cities, so the Japanese built a platform in a field, decorated it with American flags and Japanese lanterns, invited Americans to attend and provided day and night fireworks and free refreshments.

A Japanese acted as master of ceremonies and introduced the speakers, several of whom were Americans.

C. O. D. PARCEL POST TO SWELL ATLANTA TRADE

Business in New Postal Department Increasing With Great Rapidity, Says McKee.

"A breezy, bang-up, rushing business, increasing every day," is the way Postmaster Hugh McKee last night characterized the C. O. D. parcel post law, which went into effect July 1.

"I have never seen anything which has found so much favor with large and small retail and wholesale dealers and manufacturers," he continued. "Only to-day three of Atlanta's largest manufacturers came to me and said that they were enthusiastic over the opportunity presented to branch out through the C. O. D. parcel post.

"The C. O. D. parcel post will produce a much larger business in smaller orders, they told me. The cost of postage is nominal and all they will have to do is to advertise their wares in the Atlanta papers and let people in this vicinity know that it is not necessary to come into town to purchase.

"I especially urge department stores to advertise. The business to be gained will not come to them. They must go after it. I also would encourage the farmers and rural population to use the C. O. D. parcel post. The people in the country will not need to leave home and drive ten to twelve miles in the hot sun. All they have to do is to order by C. O. D.

"There is a great field for the little truck grower in the use of the C. O. D. parcel post. We have 174 miles of rural free delivery routes out of the Atlanta postoffice. This embraces all territory within a radius of fifteen miles of the city, and in this territory are grown more than enough fresh vegetables to supply the entire city. The trouble is that at present the farmers do not bring their produce to town, and consequently it must be sent from other sections by rail."

SALESMEN FORMALLY INDORSE '500,000 CLUB'

Resolutions of Two Organizations Praise Hearst Papers for Launching Plan

SLOGAN BUTTONS WILL BE WORN BY T. P. A. MEMBERS ON ALL TRIPS THEY MAKE

City Salesmen Express Enthusiasm for Georgian and American's Movement to Make Atlanta Half-Million City by 1920---Contest for Motto On.

Both the City Salesmen's Association and the Georgia State Board of the Travelers' Protective Association Saturday heartily indorsed the American and Georgian "500,000 club plan. Members of both organizations were pleased especially with the idea of wearing buttons with a suitable slogan signifying membership in the club and pledged themselves to wear these buttons on their travels.

The State Board of the T. P. A. met at 5 o'clock Saturday afternoon in the office of J. H. Andrews, secretary, in the Austell building. These resolutions, signed by Secretary Andrews and President E. D. McDonald, were passed.

Be it resolved, That we, the members of the State Board of the Travelers' Protective Association, indorse the formation of a 500,000 club to boost the population of Atlanta to that figure by 1920 as proposed by The Atlanta Georgian and Hearst's Sunday American. We urge the members of this organization to wear the 500,000 club buttons that are to be distributed, especially on their trips out of Atlanta and out of the State, and we pledge ourselves to aid in making this club a success worthy of the object for which it is created.

Marcellus M. Anderson, a prominent member of the T. P. A., said:

"Atlantans' boosting spirits are at exactly the right stage for such an organization. It will mean greater patriotism and greater development for our wonderful city. And you can bet your life there will be no more enthusiastic members of the 500,000 club than the boys of the T. P. A."

City Salesmen Meet.

The City Salesmen's Association met in the council chamber of the City Hall Saturday to talk over their annual vacation trip to the Isle of Palms, from which they returned Friday. They told of some good practical jokes played on various members and all reported a "great time." When the time for resolutions came, J. C. Harrison offered these:

"Whereas The Atlanta Georgian and Hearst's Sunday American have inaugurated a movement to create a 500,000 club in Atlanta for the purpose of securing a population of 500,000 by 1920; and

Whereas this plan has been indorsed by many of our leading citizens as a good way to aid in the growth and development of our fair city, and, believing that it will result in a great common benefit;

"Be it resolved, That we, the members of the City Salesmen's Association, add our indorsement of the enterprise and pledge ourselves to become members and wear the buttons of the 500,000 Club, and that we commend the efforts of those who have taken the initiative in organizing this club, which is a distinct civic need.

"CITY SALESMEN'S ASSOCIATION.

"By W. E. Gulley, Secretary; H. L. Simmons, President."

Sam J. Jones personally wanted to commend the Hearst papers for their interest in Atlanta and to say that the organization of this club drew forth a spontaneous response from him.

"I am reminded of what I told a man in Augusta the other day," he said. "I had said to a group of men that I was not very enthusiastic over President Woodrow Wilson and that I did not even vote for him in the primary.

"One man in the party seemed very much surprised and, after being assured that I was a loyal Democrat, he wanted to know the reason.

Wilson Left City.

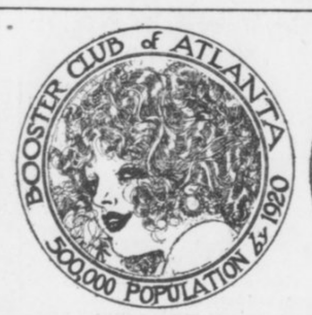
"'Well,' said I, 'I don't believe he is well balanced mentally.

"'You know, he once lived in Atlanta. He left, and I don't believe any mentally well balanced man ever would leave.'"

The $25 prize slogan contest which is to run during the week has aroused great interest. The Georgian and Sunday American will pay $25 for the best slogan submitted for the 500,000 Club buttons which are soon to be distributed. The winner will be announced in next Sunday's American, John W. Grant, Wilmer L. Moore and Walter C. Taylor acting as the judges.

Send your slogans to the Contest Editor, Atlanta Georgian or Hearst's Sunday American.

FIVE striking designs already submitted by contestants in the contest conducted by The Georgian and American, which offer a reward of $25 for the best slogan to emblazon the buttons which will show that the wearers are members of the 500,000 Club, which has for its object to more than double Atlanta's population before the next census.



HUNT 2 SUSPECTS IN AUTO MYSTERY

Woman Gives Police Important Clews to Identity of Driver Who Struck Eva Kilpatrick.

Backed by descriptions that make identification certain, the suspicions of the police have centered on two suspects in the case of the automobile driver who ran down little Eva Kilpatrick on Mills Street Wednesday afternoon. Captain Poole, of the police department, declared that he is practically assured one of the two suspects is guilty. Officers have been assigned to take the two men into custody.

The information upon which Captin Poole has based his action was furnished him by a woman who asserts that she was an eye-witness to the accident.

The woman has informed the police that she noted the description of the machine as it turned into Williams street after striking the Kilpatrick girl. She described the car as a slate-gray runabout, and declares that it possesses peculiar features which make identification easy. On this information the police have worked. Portions of the license number borne by the machine which the woman saw have aided the police in their investigation.

"Our men are hot on the trail," declared Captain Poole Saturday night, "and we expect to have the guilty party within a short time."

Ellen Terry Leaves Her Third Husband

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, July 5.—Ellen Terry, the famous actress, and her husband, James Carew, 24 years her junior, have separated by mutual agreement. Mr. Carew is to retain possession of the most beautiful furnishings of their home.

Miss Terry and James Carew were married in Pittsburg by a Justice of the Peace on March 22, 1907. Mr. Carew is 41 years old; Miss Terry is 65.

Miss Terry had been twice married before. Her first husband was George Frederick Watts, the painter, whom she married when she was very young. In 1868 she was married to Charles Wardell, an actor, who died some years ago.

100,000 Trainmen Vote to Walk Out

Flaw in Erdman Arbitration Act Threatens to Tie Up Eastern Railroad System.

NEW YORK, July 5.—According to advices received by the conference committee of managers the 100,000 conductors and trainmen on all the Eastern railroads have voted overwhelmingly to strike if called out by their leaders.

This radical step has been taken in face of the increase of $30,000,000 a year in wages given in 1910.

The conductors and trainmen have offered to arbitrate under the Erdman act, but President Lee of the trainmen's organization has been told unofficially by the railroad managers that they will not accept the Erdman act, which is admittedly faulty. Lee expects to force the railroads to accept Erdman act arbitration by threatening to tie up the railroads in the Eastern territory.

TUSCALOOSA-BIRMINGHAM INTERURBAN NOW ASSURED

BIRMINGHAM, July 5.—The filing of a mortgage for $5,000,000 at Tuscaloosa by the Tuscaloosa-Birmingham Railway Utilities Company means the development of the street railway, gas and electric companies in Tuscaloosa and the extension of the railway to Birmingham, 60 miles. The work will be started in the near future and rushed to completion. Cheap freight will be accorded products of the Birmingham district to navigable water at Tuscaloosa.

'When Is Man Drunk' Puzzles Washington

Capital Excise Law Provides for Arrest of Intoxicated Men and Serious Question Arises.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—"When is a man drunk?" is the question that is puzzling official Washington since the excise law came into effect and all "drunks" are required by law to be arrested.

The definition of drunkenness varies greatly among the officers of the law. The only harmony appears to be that when a man staggers he is drunk. Major Sylvester, superintendent of police, is indefinite and explains "a man is drunk when he becomes a nuisance and obstruction to the public."

Acting Police Judge Aukam thinks a man is drunk when "he loses control of bodily and mental faculties," while former Police Judge Kimball, known as the terror of the criminal, considers a man drunk if he has had but one drink.

A well known inebriate says: "No man is drunk so long as he can say that he is not."

Wellesley Students Honor Julia Marlowe

Famous Actress One of Four Honorary Members of Shakespeare Society of Great Girls' College.

NEW YORK, July 5.—Julia Marlowe received word yesterday that at a meeting of the alumnae and active members of the Shakespeare Society of Wellesley College she had been elected an honorary member.

In a letter informing her of this honor, recognition of her devotion to Shakespeare and her histrionic ability, Miss Helen Troy, the president of the society, wrote to Miss Marlowe: "Not upon you but upon ourselves do we confer the honor in welcoming you to the 'Gentle Companie.'"

The importance of the honor conferred upon Miss Marlowe may be understood when it is known that up to her election as honorary member of the Shakespeare Society of Wellesley, the society had bestowed this compliment upon but three persons: Dr. Durant, the founder of Wellesley; Henry N. Hudson, the Shakespearean critic, and Horace Howard Furness, the author of the Variorum Shakespeare.

Police in Search for BoyThoughtDrowned

Abe Sheppard Tells His Mother He Is Going Swimming, but Never Returns Home.

Whereabouts of 14-year-old Abe Sheppard, who has not been heard of since he told his mother late Friday afternoon that he was going in swimming at Piedmont Lake, caused relatives to call upon the police to search for the boy Saturday.

The mother and sisters of young Sheppard believe the boy has been drowned, but the police express the opinion that it is a case of runaway.

When seen last, Abe wore gray knee pants, a dark coat, dark felt hat and tennis shoes. The family resides on Ivy Street and Georgia Avenue.

Grand Lodge of Elks Meets in Rochester

Two Southern Insurgents Fight for Offices at Forty-ninth Annual Reunion.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., July 5.—The vanguard of the thousands of delegates to the forty-ninth annual reunion of Grand Lodge, B. P. O. E., who will invade Rochester during the next week, will begin to arrive in the city to-morrow.

Some of the visitors, including the Denver delegation, which is "plugging" for the 1914 reunion, have already arrived in the city. Two Southern "insurgent" Elks are candidates for the two most important offices in the Grand Lodge, opposing "machine" candidates from the North and West.

J. Cookman Boyd, a lawyer of Baltimore, is the insurgent opponent of Edward Leach, a New York business man, for exalted ruler. T. J. Darling, postmaster at Temple, Texas, is the insurgent opponent of Fred Robinson, of Dubuque, Iowa, who has held the office of grand secretary for nine years. David McAaron, of Grand Rapids, is also aspiring for this office.

CHILD TAKES HER DOLL TO COURT

Little Miss Charlotte Burnham Goes Unwillingly to Grandmother After Parents Quit.

Charlotte Burnham, escorted by an officer of the Juvenile Court, went unwillingly to the home of her grandmother, Mrs. J. P. Burnham, 48 Simpson Street, Saturday afternoon. She had an opportunity to reflect over her discovery that courts and judges are not to be laughed aside lightly, however much she may think in her 12-year-old judgment, that they have not the slightest idea of what is best for a little girl.

The divorce court, separating her father and mother, had given her to Mr. Burnham. Last week the girl found that she preferred living with her mother, and told Judge Bell so, arriving at the courtroom with a big doll under her arm. But Judge Bell told her the order of court must stand, and that she must try to make the best of her lot.

In spite of this, she nonchalantly packed her trunk, and moved to the home of her mother, Mrs. Laura Burnham on Spring Street, where the detention officers later found her. They took her to the detention home. An order of the Juvenile Court forced her to return to the grandmother's.

The father and mother have been separated for several years.

CAR OFFICIALS UNDER ARREST FOR KIDNAPING

President, Superintendent and Three Employees of Birmingham Lines Face Grand Jury.

BIRMINGHAM, July 5.—A. H. Ford, president; George H. Harris, superintendent of transportation, and three other employees of the Birmingham Railway, Light and Power Company were to-day bound over to the Grand Jury under bonds of $300 each on charges growing out of the alleged kidnaping about three weeks ago of William F. Welch, vice president and national organizer of the Amalgamated Association of Electric and Street Railway Employees. The defendants waived the preliminary hearing before Judge Abernethy, of the Court of Common Pleas, and made bond readily.

A warrant was sworn out to-day against E. T. Stanfield, charging him with placing dynamite on the tracks during the street car strike. Bond was fixed at $1,000, which has not been made.

The arrest of President Ford, Superintendent Harris, who has been connected with the street car company for more than fifteen years, and others was the direct result of the alleged deportation of National Organizer Welch, who came to Birmingham about four weeks ago, when the street car strike was threatened. Mr. Welch, it is alleged, was visited at his hotel by a delegation of car men, including some street car officials, and advised to leave the city. The union organizer took the hint, it is said, and was forthwith escorted to the railroad station, where he boarded a train for parts unknown.

PATRIOTIC CHURCH SERVICE.

"The Patriotic South" will be the subject of an address delivered by the Rev. William O. Foster at the West End Christian Church at 10:50 Sunday morning, when a special patriotic service will be conducted.

Four Negroes Held For Double Slaying

Coroner's Jury at Dublin Fixes Responsibility for Death of Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Hewell.

DUBLIN, GA., July 5.—After an investigation lasting two weeks, the jury impanelled by Coroner Donaldson to investigate the killing of Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Hewell on Saturday night, June 21, returned its verdict to-night that the two were murdered and charged four negroes, Rich Shinholster, Henry Kitchens, Joe May and Frank Harris with the murder. Warrants were sworn out against the negroes, and as all of them have been held since the day following the shooting, no new arrests will be made.

The first of the negroes has been held in Dublin, while the other three have been in Bibb County Jail in Macon since the day they were arrested, because of a threatened lynching.

Kitchens was brought to Dublin this afternoon to testify before the Coroner, leaving only two of the negroes in Macon. No evidence could be found to show which of the negroes actually did the shooting, but there was enough to warrant holding all of them on the charge of murder.

25,000 Expected at Endeavorer Meeting

Los Angeles Makes Extensive Preparations for Entertainment of Great Religious Body.

LOS ANGELES, July 5.—Great preparations have been made for entertaining 25,000 visitors and delegates to the twenty-sixth international Christian Endeavor convention which meets in Los Angeles July 9 to 14, inclusive, the first to be held on the coast since the 1897 convention in San Francisco.

Two immense canvas auditoriums, one designed to accommodate an audience of 10,000 people, with a stage for a large chorus, orchestra, speakers and officers, and the other for headquarters of the delegations, have been erected at Fiesta Park.

The Los Angeles convention of 1913 has been heralded everywhere as one of the red-letter events in the history of this remarkable organization. Music will be a big feature, and the convention orchestra of 100 pieces and the chorus of 1,000 voices, especially trained for the occasion, will be the big attractions.

At 107, Says Staying Single Aids Long Life

Never Married, So Sickness and Worry Never Shortened His Years, Veteran Explains.

LOS ANGELES, July 5.—Daniel Turner, a veteran of the war between the States, who celebrated his 107th birthday yesterday, thanks his judgment in remaining single for his long life and apparent good health at this advanced age.

"My life never was blighted by worry or sickness, because I never married," said Uncle Dan. "Married men die younger than bachelors; sometimes death is a welcome relief to the man who gets a modern wife."

Trusses Like These Are A Crime

Such Makeshifts Have Forced Thousands Into Risking Dangerous Operations

Wearing elastic and spring trusses year after year is almost sure to shorten your life.

You can't make them hold, even when drawn so tight you can scarcely stand to keep them on.

They usually let you get worse all the time—that's why every year they are forcing thousands of people into undergoing operation.

They are simply a crime—squeeze the rupture, often causing strangulation—dig into the pelvic bone in front—press against the spinal column at the back—make life miserable for nearly everybody who wears them.

The Plain Truth Is This

You can't possibly get well—can't even keep from getting worse—unless your rupture is constantly held in place. Just as a broken bone can't knit unless held securely together.

And just as a bandage or splint is the only way a broken bone can be held, so the right kind of truss is the only thing in the world that can keep a rupture from coming out and growing worse.

You'll feel like a new person from the day you put on that kind of truss.

But you know as well as we that you'll never find such a sure-to-hold truss at any drug store.

Yet it's easy enough to get. And you can test it first—by sixty days trial—without having to risk a single cent.

It's the famous Cluthe Truss or Cluthe Automatic Massager—absolutely guaranteed to hold, and won't cost you a cent if it doesn't.

It's so utterly different from everything else for rupture that it has received eighteen separate patents.

Made on an entirely new principle. Instantly and automatically protects you against every strain so your rupture can't possibly be forced out. Self-regulating, self-adjusting. Far more than just a truss.

In addition to constant holding it provides the only way ever discovered for overcoming the weakness which is the real cause of rupture.

Just how it does that—entirely automatically—and how it has thus completely cured hundreds and hundreds of people whose cases seemed almost hopeless—is all explained in the free book which the coupon below will bring you.

No Belt—No Leg-Straps—No Springs

The Cluthe Truss does away with the curse of belts, leg-straps and springs. Thousand say it is as comfortable as their clothing. It is waterproof—will hold in the bath. Also perspiration-proof and easily kept clean.

Make This 60-Day Test—You Won't Have to Risk a Penny

We don't ask you to trust to a mere try-on the way you have to do at a drug store.

We'll make a Cluthe Automatic Massaging Truss especially for your case—make it to your measure—and let you try it sixty days.

We'll practically lend it to you that long just for a test.

If it doesn't keep your rupture from coming out or bothering you in any way, no matter how hard you work or strain—if it doesn't prove every claim we make—then you can send it back and it won't cost you a penny.

Free Book Full of Facts Never Before Put in Print

Don't keep on letting yourself get worse—don't spend a cent on account of your rupture until you get our free book of advice.

This remarkable book—cloth-bound, 96 pages—sums up all we have learned about ruptures during forty years of experience. You'll find it full of facts never before put in print.

It shows just why elastic and spring trusses cause so much misery and such a shameful waste of money that the law should stop their sale.

It explains why operation is nearly always a needless gamble with death—and why, if you do manage to live through it, you may have to keep on wearing a truss.

It exposes the humbug "appliances," "methods," "plasters," etc.

It shows why sixty days' trial is the only safe way to buy anything for rupture—and how the Cluthe Truss is the only thing of any kind that you can get on such a long trial because the only thing good enough to stand such a thorough day-after-day test.

And it tells all about this famous Automatic Massaging Truss—how simple it is—how it ends constant expense—how it has saved thousands from operation—how you can get it on trial, and how little it costs if you keep it.

Also gives voluntary indorsements from over 5,000 benefited and cured people.

Write for this book to-day—don't put it off—the minute it takes to send for it may free you from trouble for the rest of your life.

JOE BROWN WILL STAY 'LIVE WIRE' IN POLITICS; SENATE BOOM IS TALKED

Former Governor Will at Once Become Active in State Questions When He Is Rested From Duties of Office---May Oppose Hoke Smith.

That Joseph M. Brown intends keeping very much in touch with the trend of events in Georgia, that he proposes to remain a very "live wire" in politics, and that he proposes to thrash to a final adjustment his view on law enforcement and the labor unions, at least in so far as he may, is abundantly evidenced in a remarkable interview he furnished to The Sunday American yesterday.

It is very well known that many of Governor Brown's friends and partisans are urging him to enter the race for the United States Senate against Senator Hoke Smith, whose term of office expires within less than two years, and who will have to enter a campaign for re-election within the next twelve months.

To a Sunday American reporter Saturday the former Governor gave the following interview:

By JOSEPH M. BROWN.

I am going to stay at home for a few days and then I shall run up to my farm in Cherokee County, where I will be for the next week or two.

The duties of the executive office for more than a year past have forced me to neglect almost entirely my personal affairs; hence I must give primary attention to them for some time to come.

Later I expect to make an examination of the status which involves the State's relationship to the labor union. If there is a divided sovereignty of this relationship all the people are entitled to know it so that they can shape their course accordingly and choose to which they will yield allegiance.

If there is but one sovereignty that fact should be made so plain that no man and no organization of men should be betrayed into acts of attempted usurpation of that sovereignty.

Unions Have Made Issue.

In my retiring message to the General Assembly I stated that the labor union had made the issue as to whether or not its union label carried more authority in Georgia than does Georgia's great seal of State.

A mere statement of the official records of these two sources of authority necessarily confirms my declaration, viz: Some time before the year 1840 the State granted a charter to the Georgia Railroad and Banking Company, wherein she placed upon that company and upon future owners of that railroad the duties of a common carrier. She imposed upon the owners of that charter the obligation to operate trains for the conduct of the commerce of the public and of its power to travel. As the proof of her sovereign authority to grant that charter and to force obedience to its conditions she placed upon it her Great Seal of State.

In 1907 she specifically and positively made it the duty of the Railroad Commission to "order and compel" the operation of such train service as the needs of the public required.

In 1909 and again in 1912 the labor union ordered the trainmen on the Georgia Railroad to ignore the State's mandate and instead to prevent the running of the trains, which it knew would result in great inconvenience and loss to the public. On that order it placed its union label.

This made the issue between the union label and Georgia's great seal of State square and plain. No sophistry can obscure it; no vituperative personal abuse can wipe it out.

Exactly the same issue was made in the strike by the street car employees in Augusta.

I note that it has been said that I should not at this late day have first that has been held since the stirred up this matter, thus renewing dissension among the people; but I call your attention to the fact that the present session of the General Assembly vs the occurrence of the strikes on the Augusta street car line and the Georgia Railroad. Hence, this was the first opportunity I had for officially notifying the General Assembly of these two glaring acts of disregard of the State's authority and of the necessity of enacting such laws as would protect the public against their recurrence.

Since the publication of extracts of the message I have received a multitude of letters from people in Georgia and about a dozen other States wherein my position is indorsed and statements are made that the labor union's exactions are becoming almost unbearable.

Thus far the labor union and its few newspaper advocates are alone in criticising the stand which the oath of office made it my duty to take. From these I note that I have "killed myself politically."

Never Considered Politics.

As to that act of so-styled political suicide, I will remark that it never occurred to me to consider any political bearing in the case. But, now that the point has been raised, I will observe that there was a matter of gratitude to the people of Georgia, which may even be styled political gratitude, which, I confess, swayed me. I refer to the fact that the voters of this State have twice conferred upon me the supreme honor in their gift.

Nothing which they control compares in responsibility, in dignity and eminence with the governorship!

Therefore, with my reward already bestowed, they had the right to expect and demand that I would safeguard their interests, oblivious to inducements or threats. My duty was plain.

Now, there is one point which I must ask you to bear especially in mind. I refer to the fact that there are thousands of members of the labor union in Georgia who are golden-hearted in their love of the State and of their fellow citizens.

But they have not appreciated the fact that in resorting to the process of a strike they have put themselves in direct rebellion to the laws of the State. They have not appreciated the fact that they are the victims of a system which holds itself above the law.

The strike status is not of Georgia. It is a foreign importation. Its aims are the securing of preference by force. Its attempts are the control and virtual ownership of the property which others own and upon which those others are required to pay taxes to the State.

Its concomitant is almost invariably violence to the persons of those who obey the laws in performing the duties which the strikers refuse to do, and frequently in damage to or destruction of property which they have temporarily abandoned for use, but over which they keep a hostile guard.

No Preference Is Shown.

Among these members of the labor union are a number of my friends of a lifetime. To oblige them I would go to any honorable lengths in my power, and I feel sure that I hold their reciprocal regard. Yet, probably the highest duty I owe them is to make clear to their minds the fact that they should not allow themselves to be deceived into doing deeds which in their essence are antagonistic to the very genius of our laws, and which, if tolerated, will breed anarchy, in which they will ultimately be among the worst sufferers.

It is needless to say that the State will not allow any class to have preference over others.

She does not intend that capital shall oppress labor, nor does she intend that labor shall rob or destroy capital, and she is very far from intending that the allies of union labor shall beat or kill or drive from the means of making an honoset livelihood those laborers who do the same kind of work the members of the labor union do, and especially when union labor has refused to do that work.

Now as to the claim that the courts can not reach all cases in which labor has rights against capital. There is really very little in this claim. But if it were ever so true, it is the duty of labor to go to the Legislature and have laws enacted which will cover such cases, instead of resorting to methods which embarrass unoffending thousands and are too often attended by destruction of property and by brutal violence, and even death to persons.

No man can claim that the Legislature would shut its ears and turn its hands against the proper demands of labor.

Court Is Proper Tribunal.

Therefore, what I have maintained as executive officer of the State, and what I plead for as a private citizen, is that all men go into court with their differences, if they can not settle them by mutual agreement or by arbitration. I insist that no man and no class be allowed any process which amounts to a special privilege. I insist that if any man be deprived of life, liberty or property, or that if any kind of personal punishment be inflicted upon him, it shall be by the hands of the law, and not by self-appointed or secretly instigated avengers.

Inasmuch, therefore, as the labor union, by obstructing and occasionally preventing the operation of the public utilities, has placed its mandate in opposition to the State's mandate, it may become necessary for the State to protect her citizens against its acts which bring damage to them.

She now requires insurance companies to make a money deposit with her before doing business in her borders. These companies represent capital. If she would make the same requirement of labor organizations, with the fund to be forfeited to the State in the event these organizations do deeds which damage the public, she would be but treating labor and capital alike—and who can say that this would be unfair?

Again, the public utilities are chartered to serve the public—all the people. Their tolls and general conduct are regulated by law. Therefore, they are, in great measure, public institutions.

Hence it would certainly conduce to the public interest if every member of the labor union, which assumes to control the working powers of the utilities, were required to take an oath before a State official to the effect that he would do no act which would obstruct that utility for which he works from performing the functions for which it was chartered. The penalty for violation of that oath should be the forfeiture of the right to service on any public utility in the State for the period of one year. The same penalty should be made to apply to any officer of the utility in question.

Merely Views of Citizen.

Of course, the foregoing views are merely those of a private citizen. Yet I recognize that, having entered as a public official upon the presentation of the questions which the labor union has made an issue with the State, it is not improper for me in any capacity to make a searching examination into this question involving the rights of each citizen of Georgia. This I will undertake to do after I give proper attention to my private affairs, which have been placed in the background for several years.

Sermons on Prison Reform Will Occupy Georgia Ministers

Movement Started by Atlanta Pastors to Result in State-wide Discussion From Pulpit.

The mission of the church in connection with prisons and their inmates will be discussed from many pulpits in Georgia to-day, as a result of a movement inaugurated by Atlanta clergymen to name July 6 as Prison Reform Sunday.

The movement started several weeks ago, when a resolution was adopted by the Evangelical Ministers' Association. From the resolution a significant campaign issued, clergymen of all Protestant denominations agreeing to further the work. To interest ministers all over Georgia in the movement the following committee of Atlanta churchmen have been working: Rev. John E. White, Rev. C. B. Wilmer, Rev. Dunbar Ogden, Rev. W. C. Schaeffer, Rev. W. P. Lovejoy, Rev. G. L. Hanscomb.

investigation into the efficiency of the present prison system as to civic righteousness will be urged. All clergymen of Atlanta will deliver sermons on the subject.

Whites Replaced By Negroes in Cafes

St. Louis Restaurants Plan to Break Strike With Blacks—Race Riot Is Feared.

ST. LOUIS, July 5.—The white union waiters employed at the Planters, Jefferson, American and Marquette hotels were dismissed to-night and their places will be filled in the morning by negroes.

Fearing trouble, Chief of Police Young assigned eight patrolmen and a sergeant to the American, the same number to the Marquette, and twelve men to both the Jefferson and Planters hotels.

A race riot is feared. The trouble follows strikes in restaurants.

Big Outdoor Dinner at Woodward Springs Entertains City's Judiciary Hosts Royally.

A drizzling rain, which set in directly after the special car reached the end of the river line, did not minimize the jollity of the annual barbecue, tendered the judges of the various Atlanta courts by the members of the Atlanta Bar. More than 150 judges and lawyers fraternized together at the big barbecue at Woodward Springs Saturday afternoon, and good "eats" and witty speeches were the order of the day.

The judges were carried out to the barbecue grounds in automobiles. The majority of the lawyers went out in a special car, tendered by Attorneys Hughes Spalding and Walter Colquitt.

After a regular Georgia barbecue dinner, in which lamb, pork, veal and real old-fashioned Brunswick stew, with fruit punch and lemonade, was served, Honorable Howell C. Erwin, chairman of the day, introduced various speakers, who entertained the crowd. Among those who spoke were Judges W. T. Newman, W. D. Ellis, J. H. Lumpkin, Marcus Beck, Eugene Black, Arthur Powell and H. M. Patty.

Judge Lumpkin made an earnest plea that the laws and the courts of the land be respected, and especially urged that the legal profession set a good example in this respect.

Among the prominent men present were Thomas Ripley, Lamar Hill, Roy Donehoo, E. Z. Arnold, C. B. Atkins, Judge J. F. Golightly, E. S. Croft, W. S. Dillon, Thomas B. Felder, Alonzo Field, E. C. Kontz, J. C. Harkins, E. C. Hill, H. Hirsch, F. M. Hughes, J. K. McDonald ,E. W. Martin, J. S. McClellan, P. C. McDuffie, P. L. Lindsay, E. M. Mitchell, A. A. Meyers, W. Napier, J. H. Porter, C. W. Wedlock Shown as Incentive to Suicide

Reports Declare Bachelors Lead in Every Crime Save in Ending Their Own Lives.

NEW YORK, July 5.—Unmarried men are more often criminals than married men, according to the figures in a report of the work of the District Attorney's office. The same is shown in regard to women prisoners.

While the percentage of unmarried criminals is high in practically every sort of crime, the report shows that suicide is an exception.

Three times as many married men attempted suicide and were tried for it in 1912 as unmarried.

5TH REGIMENT OFF FOR LARK AT ST. SIMONS

Drudgery of Camp at Anniston Last Year Will Be Forgotten at Seacoast Outing.

The Fifth Regiment, Georgia National Guard, composed of twelve companies with 560 officers and men, will leave over the Atlanta, Birmingham and Atlantic Railroad Tuesday evening in two sections at 8 and 8:30 for an outing of ten days at St. Simons Island.

This camp will be a picnic compared to the strenuous times of the State militia at Anniston, Ala., last year, when the entire time was devoted to military maneuvers. Then it was work, work, work. Realizing the fact that too much work and no play might have the same effect on the soldiers that it did on Jack, it was decided to give the boys an outing, at the same time make it worth while from a military viewpoint.

The work at St. Simons will be very light, but the discipline will be rigid, and the little details so necessary to the life of a soldier will be strictly observed. The work will be guard mount in the morning, dress parade in the afternoon and camp patrol duty.

But the officers will not escape so easily. A practical school of instruction will be inaugurated, and it will require the services of the officers for at least four hours each day, and it is the opinion of the adjutant general that the regiment will be in better shape when it returns than it has been in years.

Governor John M. Slaton will pay an official visit to the regimental camp at St. Simons Island this week. In the Governor's party will be ex-Governor Joseph M. Brown, Adjutant General J. Van Holt Nash and a dozen or so colonels of the Governor's staff. Brigadier General Evans and Colonel Barth, of the Department of the Gulf, also will be guests of the regiment and accompany the official State party. A number of women will accompany the officials, including Miss Cora Brown, Mrs. Frederick J. Paxon, and other members of the families of the officers.

The party will leave next Friday night and be received officially by the Brunswick Board of Trade the next morning. On arrival at St. Simons, an official Governor's salute of seventeen guns will be fired. The guests will remain until Sunday afternoon.

Camp Wyanoke Not Open Until Tuesday

Carpenters Unable to Complete Sleeping Quarters for "Hello Girls" in Desired Time.

Formal opening of Camp Wyanoke, where the telephone operators of the Southern Bell Telephone Company will spend their vacations this summer, has been postponed until Tuesday, because of the inability of the carpenters to complete the sleeping quarters. It was planned originally to throw the camp open to the girls Monday.

The camp was built by the telephone company with the sole idea of giving the operators a vacation in the open, and arrangements have been made whereby every woman employee of the company can spend some time at the camp. The actual running expenses will be paid by the girls themselves, the assessments not to exceed 50 cents a day. Mrs. Mattie Kirkpatrick, of Decatur, will be matron.

Fellow Officers Aid Yancey Family Fund

Few Minutes' Collection Nets $33.50 for Relief of Slain Deputy Sheriff's Children.

Tribute from the men who worked with Dave Yancey, the Deputy Sheriff who was killed in the attempt to arrest a negro desperado, was paid in a substantial form Saturday when they supplemented the fund for the benefit of the dead officer's family by $33.50.

The sum is the result of a few minutes' collection from Yancey's fellow officers. Each of the men subscribing announced his intention of working to increase the amount.

Dave Yancey was beloved by the men with whom he worked, and was admired as being fearless and conscientious.

WORK PILES UP AS LEGISLATIVE DAYS GROW FEW

Leaders Recognize They Must Work at Sternest Pace To Pass Most Imperative Bills.

When the General Assembly convenes to-morrow morning there will remain just 33 working days of the first session ahead.

Thirty-eight days will remain of the 50-day limit, but five of those days will be Sundays, and will not count.

From the total of 33 working days left, moreover, five Saturdays, which are given over exclusively to local legislation, if the House does not adjourn over them entirely, must be taken out, which reduces the total of working days upon which general legislation may be handled to 28.

It therefore may be seen that when President Anderson and Speaker Burwell call the Senate and the House to order to-morrow, the summer session of 1913 will be practically half gone.

Within the remaining time, the General Assembly must pass a general appropriations bill, several tax reform bills and dispose of the various new county propositions to be brought before it, or fail in the legislative program mapped out for it by the Governor and the leaders of the two Houses.

Not a Bill Reported.

There have been already introduced in the two Houses something more than 200 bills, and not one yet has been reported back to either House from a committee, with a recommendation.

No bill yet has been read a second time, although one general bill, providing for Senator Bacon's election, was passed, and received the Governor's signature, in the record-breaking time of five days.

That the Senate and House leaders realize that time is slipping away from them, despite their inclination to push things along as rapidly as possible, is evidenced in the fact that there is a feverish desire perceptible among the committees to get busy this week, and send such bills as come before them back to the two Houses for action as soon as possible.

The Governor has placed the General Assembly on notice that he expects, and thinks he should have, the general appropriations bill in the executive office a good ten days before adjournment—or exactly four weeks from Monday.

That will mean that the House must dispose of it, send it to the Senate and then meet the Senate in conference for the adjournment of differences, all within less than a month.

After the Governor gets through with it, if he decides not to sign it, it must go back to both houses for further consideration, and with not more than five or six days left for that.

While the appropriations bill and the tax refor mmeasures are being considered, too, there will be something like 300 or 400 local bills to consider, and not less than 100 general bills of importance.

Legislature Ready for Work.

There is an evident disposition upon the part of the General Assembly not to declare any "dies non" during the present session—that is, non-legislative days, which are not counted in the 50 days' limit, and for which the members received no pay—and adjournment, therefore, confidently is predicted on August 13.

There are signs in plenty, however, notwithstanding the fact that so much of the first session already is gone, that the Legislature is fully prepared to get right down to hard work from to-day forward, and do the things expected of it.

Every committee of both the Senate and the House has been called to meet Monday at hours calculated as nearly as possible not to cause confusion among the more important.

Tuesday bills will begin coming back to the two houses from the committees, with recommendations, and within the week some general legislation should be well along the road to enactment.

Chairman Crawford Wheatley has promised to get the big general appropriations bill out of his committee within ten days, and the Ways and Means Committee will take the matter of the tax act immediately in hand for speedy disposition.

It is not likely that either afternoon or night sessions will be called soon, as that time will be needed by the members for committee meetings.

Afternoon sessions will come along about the last ten days of the session and night sessions the last three or four days.

One of the bills sure to engage the immediate attention of both the Senate and the House is Senator Foster's bill to provide for prison inspection in Georgia.

Prison Complaints Frequent.

Complaints of wretched prison conditions throughout the State have been getting more and more frequent of late years, and some of the State prisons are said to be in unpardonably unsanitary condition.

Senator Foster's bill provides for rigid prison inspections, at stated intervals, and sanitary reform wherever indicated.

Another bill that will attract considerable attention is the one by Mr. Adams, providing for a central place of execution of all criminals convicted fo capital offenses and sentenced to death.

Governor Slaton is understood to be engaged almost exclusively now seeking out a way whereby the common school teachers may be taken care of and their past due salaries paid.

He will exercise his borrowing power to the extent he can, but he fears that will not be sufficient to relieve the embarrassment.

Suffragist Is to Wear Trousers 'Are More Modest Than Skirts' Hiker Will Discard Her Petticoats

General Jones' Mascot on March to Washington Has a Corsetless Silk Costume.

MRS. JOHN BOLDT, prominent suffragette and chief aide of General Rosalie Jones, wearing the type of trousers which she urges as a substitute for skirts.

NEW YORK, July 5—They're here at last. Mrs. John Boldt, who was called the mascot of General Jones' suffrage army on its 250-mile hike to the inauguration last February, has designed several pairs of trouser costumes, and will wear them hereafter.

At her apartments in the Hotel Marseilles yesterday, Mrs. Boldt criticised the women who are always talking dress reform, she said, but lacked the courage to wear "the sensible clothing they advocated."

"What we need to break the shackles and free these slaves to fashion is a leader," remarked Mrs. Boldt, as she sat in a big easy chair attired in her corsetless, trousette costume. It was made of sunburst-colored silk, caught in at the ankles with a band of gold and blue embroidery. The high waist, in Empire effect, was finished with a girdle of the same embroidery.

"The trouble with us is that we are many years behind the times in dress. The women of the East are far more progressive than us in dress. The majority of women in the world today wear trousers, the women of India, Turkey, China, Japan and even the peasant women of many European countries.

"Trousers of the style I wear, with draperies for evening of soft materials, giving an artistic Grecian line, are far more modest than the slit skirts you see on Broadway, with the limbs exposed to the knees, or transparent underclothing."

Board to Consider Women as Police

Office of Roundsman May Be Abolished—Females Wanted as Probation Officers.

To abolish the office of roundsman, to put on women officers and to establish sub-stations are matters to be taken up by the Police Board at its meeting Tuesday evening.

Roundsman is a position similar to that of sergeant, but the pay is smaller. It is the intention of some members of the board to abolish this office and make the six officers now acting as roundsmen sergeants.

Four women officers will be added to the force, either as regular plainclothes officers, detectives are probation officers, probably the latter, and in this the Chief heartily favors the probation idea.

KIMBALL SEAT OF WAR FOR ALL NEW COUNTIES

Advertisements and Maps Cover Lobbies of Hotel Which Is Thronged by Legislators.

Strangers entering the Kimball House lobby are apt to conclude that the business in chief of the Georgia Legislature is to create new counties. Placards, posters, banners and maps are everywhere, each setting forth advantages bound to accrue to the State at large if some particular locality is given local self-government and some thriving village authorized to construct a county courthouse.

Every county that hopes to be has a room in the Kimball House, an advertising scheme in the lobby and a few favored sons scattering arguments. Whosoever so much as hesitates and looks at one of the maps, posters, placards, banners or bulletins is sure to be button-holed and given an advisory talk.

Among the prospective counties whose advertisements embellish the Kimball House lobby are Morris, Griggs, Barrow, Tate, Hansell, Hardeman, Candler, Warner, Hampton, Atkinson, Milledge, Northen, Evans and Stonewall—fourteen in number.

Every would-be county on its poster, or map, sets forth a reason for seeking separate existence, and some of these reasons are decidedly novel. For instance, Morris County uses this plea: "Honor the name of Robert Morris, the man whose credit made American independence possible." Griggs County "takes in all people who want a new county." Hansell County posters proclaim that "Hansell County has merit." Hampton County boosters have put up the reason, "We need it."

Milton A. Candler Gate at Agnes Scott

Memorial Is Placed in Honor of Trustee of Decatur Institution of Learning.

A handsome iron gate has been erected at the north entrance of Agnes Scott campus as a memorial to the late Milton A. Candler, of Decatur, for years a trustee of this institution.

The gateway is 36 feet wide and has a clearance of 9 feet from the ground to the top of the gate, on which in letters of bronze over a foot tall is written, "Agnes Scott College." The posts are cast and the gate's palings are of steel.

On the memorial tablet, which is on the left-hand post, there appears this wording: "This gateway is erected as a memorial of Milton A. Candler, a co-laborer in the building of Agnes Scott College and for many years one of its faithful trustees. 1913."

Bartholdt Accused in Own Private Letter

Missouri Congressman's Request of 20 Years Ago for Steamship Favors Brought Against Him.

ST. LOUIS, July 5.—Political opponents of Congressman Richard Bartholdt have just made public a photographic copy of a "confidential" letter which Bartholdt wrote 20 years ago to a personal friend, Major Eugene F. Weigel, whose influence he enlisted to obtain from the North German Lloyd Steamship Company "special rates" to Europe for himself and Mrs. Bartholdt.

The communication to Weigel, former Secretary of State of Missouri, followed the refusal of the North German Lloyd Company to extend transportation courtesies to the St. Louis Congressman, despite the fact, as stated in Bartholdt's letter, that he (Bartholdt) had expressed the opinion the "immigration question would, no doubt, form an important factor of the deliberations of the next Congress," when he expected to become a member of the House Immigration Committee and on which he was subsequently appointed.

Ill, Begs Wife in Europe Be Not Told

Richmond Ex-Alderman Sick at Home of Daughter in Atlanta While Wife Tours Europe.

While Telemachus H. Ellett, retired Richmond capitalist and former member of the Richmond Board of Aldermen, lies critically ill at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Dunbar Roy, in Atlanta, his wife is touring Europe in ignorance of his illness.

She sailed from New York early in June with a party of several friends, and about the same time Mr. Ellett, apparently in his usual health, left for Atlanta to visit his daughter. Soon after his arrival he became ill, and despite the efforts of several doctors, it is said that his condition has undergone practically no change for the better since then.

At his special request, it is understood that no effort has been made to notify Mrs. Ellett of his condition.

Wife Goes Shopping Fails to Come Home

Husband Asks Police to Find Mrs. T. J. Baker, of Center Hill, Lost Since Friday.

Mrs. Baker, who is about 20 years the junior of her husband, was last heard of at about 4 o'clock, when she called up a friend, Mrs. J. B. Robbins, of Center Hill, and requested her to tell her husband that she had gone to Memphis, Tenn., where she has relatives.

Mr. Baker told Assistant Chief Jett, however, that he does not believe this, as his wife had only 50 cents.

RURAL CARRIERS INDORSE GRIGGS COUNTY SCHEME

Officers and National Convention Delegates Chosen at Closing Session of State Meeting.

A resolution requesting the Georgia Legislature to create a new county, to be named in honor of the late James M. Griggs, Congressman from the Second District, featured the closing session of the Georgia Rural Letter Carriers' Association Saturday afternoon. Officers for the ensuing year and delegates to the national convention were elected, and Atlanta selected again as the next meeting place, on July 3 and 4, 1914.

Some spice was injected into the final session by the remarks of Paul L. Lindsay, of Atlanta, former national president, who called upon Editor Brown to investigate the charges made sometime ago in the Rural Free Delivery News, with the view of retracting them if proved false. Mr. Brown heeded the request, but not before the delegates had expressed their disapproval of the reopening of the old enemity between the two men. The trouble, it is said, grew out of published statements to the effect that Mr. Lindsay had no right to the floor of the national convention at Little Rock some years ago on grounds of ineligibility.

Governor John M. Slaton and Editor Brown addressed the carriers during the morning, commending them for the work they have undertaken for better roads throughout the State. Governor Slaton expressed the hope that each succeeding year would find the organization on a firmer basis.

One of the most important resolutions adopted was that introduced by Fred L. White, of Buckhead, providing for an assessment of 50 cents upon each member on the death of a member in good standing. The association finally decided also to grant to a carrier a receipt for the full year upon the payment of the regular dues of $1.50. This put an end to the sharp controversy over the payment of dues.

The new officers elected are George M. Gammage, Bronwood, president; W. B. Astin, Palmetto, vice president, and W. A. Keown, Rome, secretary and treasurer. The delegates to the national convention are Fred L. White, George Pippin and E. G. Beasley. Resolutions of thanks to the press of the city were adopted unanimously.

WHAT ATLANTA MANUFACTURERS AND JOBBERS ARE DOING

MAKE PROGRAM OF INTEREST TO ALL RETAILERS

Topics of Practical Value to Dealers Are To Be Discussed at Convention.

PARLIAMENT TO BE FEATURE

Informal Discussions at Each Session Give Chance for Each Man to Air Views.

"Buying," "merchandising as a developer of character," "when to hold special sales"—these are three of the interesting topics to be discussed during the Southern Merchants' Convention, August 5-15, inclusive.

After hearing suggestions from retailors all over the Southeast, the program committee of the Atlanta Merchants and Manufacturers' Association completed its work, and Saturday announced the outline of the discussions which will be held the first four days of the meeting.

The committee says it had in mind a desire to bring up the most interesting topics possible, and also to give an opportunity to all those not on the list for formal discussion. Therefore, much of each day's session will be devoted to an "open parliament" in which everyone will have a chance to debate.

At the same time the entertainment features were announced. They include two theater parties, one August 5, and the other August 11; a reception August 7 at the Piedmont Driving Club; a barbecue August 13 and a ball game August 15.

In presenting its report, the program committee gives special thanks to J. W. Vaughn, of Cartersville, and R. O. Crouch, of Griffin, for assistance.

The program follows:

Tuesday—"How can merchants, landlords and bankers best direct their influence toward securing a greater diversity of crops?"

"The marketing of overplus of grain."

"Cattle and hogs as a by-product."

"The greater stability of credit resulting."

Thursday—"Merchandising both as a legitimate means of livelihood and as a developer of character and mental vigor."

"Buying."

"When and how to buy."

"Benefits of buying often and according to active needs."

"Keeping the money at home by giving preference to home manufacturers where all things are equal."

"Keeping up sales and keeping down accumulations of stock."

"Ascertained cost vs. estimated cost."

"Proper depreciation of hard stock at inventory period."

"Disposing of slow stock."

"Special sales—when and how to open them."

Friday: "Store Discipline and Management."

"Store help—how to select and train."

"How to create and keep up enthusiasm among the store force."

"Courtesy as a business asset."

"Proper accounting methods a prime factor in the success of a business."

"Credits and collections."

"Can a merchant afford to imperil his capital by failure properly to insure his stock?"

"From the bankers' standpoint."

"Could not betterments, such as are suggested by these discussions, be most readily brought about by local organizations of merchants' associations?"

Committees follow:

Committee on Program—Bolling H. Jones, chairman; H. E. Choate, R. O. Crouch, Griffin; C. W. McClure, E. G. Thomas, J. W. Vaughn, Cartersville.

Permanent Exhibit Now Assured; Long Campaign Near Culmination

Speeches of Men Who Studied Possibilities of Plan Stir Their Hearers to Action.

"Atlanta citizens do not know what is made in their own city.

"Southern merchants who come to Atlanta do not know the extent of the city's manufactures.

"The nation in general never thinks of Atlanta as a manufacturing center.

"All this must be changed. There must be systematic exploitation of Atlanta's factories. The future growth and prosperity of the city depend on this factor more than on any other. One of the best means of educating the public to Atlanta's importance as a manufacturing center is to maintain a permanent exhibit of the goods made here."

With this message ringing in their ears, 100 Atlanta manufacturers, banqueting at the Hotel Ansley Thursday night, decided to undertake the establishment of a permanent display. Twenty-three manufacturers signed agreements to take space in the exhibit hall. More have signed since.

For the purpose of handling the exhibit a Fulton County manufacturers' association will be formed this week. The scope of this association is to be broad. It will endeavor to safeguard its members from ill-advised legislation. It will wrestle with transportation problems, welfare of labor and other questions of vital interest to manufacturers.

Four sites for the permanent exhibit are offered, each within five minutes' walk of Five Points. These are for leas., for sale, or lease with privilege of purchase. These offers will be acted upon within ten days.

Campaign Now On.

From this time forward a year of preparation will culminate in a whirlwind campaign of activity.

Forceful, indeed, were the informal talks made at the banquet. The men behind the project have spent a long time in study of its possibilities. They are very much in earnest. They truly believe that nothing so important for the development of Atlanta has been launched in many years. This enthusiasm, restrained for so long, found vent when they rose to make the speeches which should "get action." If they failed to convince their hearers, all their work was wasted. They knew it—and they did not fail.

"One of the big things such a permanent display does is educate the children," said Brooks Morgan. "In Cleveland it is regarded as a valuable supplement to the work of the schools in teaching the children economic and industrial subjects. What this means in dollars and cents to the exhibitors to have the future buying public in Cleveland fully awake to the variety and merits of homemade goods, you can see for yourselves.

City Needs Manufacturing.

"There is a limit to Atlanta's growth as a jobbing and distributing center. Almost every great concern in the United States has representatives here. Atlanta already supplies its territory well, and some territory which belongs to its neighbors. There is a limit to this development, I say, and the maintenance of real estate values, the growth in population of the city, its prosperity, depend absolutely upon the development of our manufactories. We have 600 factories now. I doubt if we need more. What we need is to make these 600, each and every one, big, strong concerns.

"I do not know of a company which will benefit less than mine from an exhibit. My interest is not selfish. I sincerely believe this is necessary for Atlanta.

"Our idea is to have exhibits, as many and as attractive as possible, grouped effectively under one roof. A manager should be in charge. Let him show visitors through. If a visitor manifests interest in one line, or several, let him telephone at once to the manufacturers of these lines to send a salesman. I believe, too, that manufacturers in the outskirts of the city will find it profitable to use the exhibit building for their downtown office. This is done elsewhere with profit.

"Atlanta should have four times the payroll it now has. This is the way to go about it."

Evansville's Experience.

Bolling H. Jones told of the experience of 32 furniture manufacturers in Evansville, Ind., who put up a building and displayed their lines in it, keeping the ground floor for their offices. They find it easier to get prospective customers to look at their wares, and also find the selling cost cut to 3 per cent.

"That convinced me," said Mr. Jones. "Did any manufacturer here ever sell goods for 3 per cent merchandising cost? This argument alone seems to me unanswerable."

He spoke of the changes which have come about in the Southern field within five years. No longer is it possible to sell a merchant a full carload of one line. Therefore, he argued, the exhibit will be valuable in getting buyers to make up mixed carloads of Atlanta-made goods. Other cities, rivals of Atlanta, are doing this, he said, and Atlanta must, to keep what it has, to say nothing of expanding.

"Advertising no longer is a matter of buying a few inches of newspaper space, asserting through this space that 'John Smith makes good beds'," said C. S. Dobs. "Advertising is the science of creating a demand. Publicity is the cheapest known method of selling goods. It may be newspaper publicity; it may be billboards; it may be an exhibit of the kind you are considering. It may better be all three.

Like Shop Windows.

"I believe this exhibit will have the same effect as the Whitehall Street windows. A man comes downtown to buy a pair of shoes. As he walks along the street, he sees hats, neckwear and walking sticks displayed. These remind him that he needs such articles. The result is that he buys more than the shoes he set out after."

Forrest Adair has a "punch" when he talks.

"I am selling a home below the Fort to a family which consists of father, mother and seven girls. The father is a wagon-maker. The seven girls are employed in seven different factories in Atlanta. Wouldn't you rather buy the things these girls help make than some product of a New England sweat shop?

"Yet I talked to a bank director to-day who did not know that car wheels are made in Atlanta, and who thought that the famed Atlanta shoes really were made in Boston and sent here to be sold under the local label.

Interests Here Diverse.

"When the bottom falls out of the iron market, Birmingham and Pittsburg hang crape on the doors, and send flowers to each other. Do we care? We do not. Two or three of our plants suffer, but the hundreds of others go on, and business in the aggregate shows little contraction.

"As a man who earns his very bread from the growth of Atlanta, and who owes more of that bread to you manufacturers than to any other class, I want to make it as emphatic as I can that you must build up Atlanta's factories if you wish to see her continue to grow."

WORDS WHICH STIRRED ENTHUSIASM FOR SHOW

"All the machinery, all the enthusiasm, and all the push of the Chamber of Commerce will be behind the launching of the permanent exhibit."—Wilmer L. Moore, President of the Chamber of Commerce.

"I firmly believe a permanent exhibit will bring to Atlanta more merchants and more business than all the other things we have done put together."—Brooks Morgan, Chairman of the Exhibit Committee.

"Five years ago, you could sell solid carloads of one line to Macon and Augusta. You can not do it now. This plan will enable you to make up mixed carloads. Other cities are doing it. Atlanta must, not only to get more, but even to hold what she has."—Bolling H. Jones.

"The man who makes good products and doesn't advertise is like the man who winks at a girl in the dark. He knows it, but she doesn't, and it doesn't get him anywhere."—C. S. Dobbs.

"Agitation about the smoke nuisance makes me tired. I wish to goodness some one would turn 500 more smokestacks loose on us. I'll warrant there's not a man in town who could write a list of seventy-five of the hundreds of articles made in Atlanta."—Forrest Adir.

Atlanta's Future Absolutely Dependent on Building Up Factories, Experts Declare.

Rome, Ga., Exhibitors Sign Up for Space

Rome, Ga., is crowing over the fact that it made definite plans for a permanent exhibit before Atlanta.

Twelve manufacturers already have signed contracts for space, and nine more are about to do so. It is expected that 4,000 feet of floor space will be used.

Arrangements have been made for a building, and the exhibit will be ready within two months, Louis Spencer, managing director, says.

Included among the exhibitors are a stove works, a machine factory, a foundry, a furniture factory, a trunk factory and a spring bed factory. Some of these lines are duplicated.

ATLANTA GIRLS BUY MILLINERY MADE AT HOME

Half the Hats Seen on Peachtree Street Are Made Here, but the Fact Is Unheralded.

Half the women's hats seen on Peachtree Street are made right in Atlanta.

The fair Peachtree promenaders don't know it; the milliners they patronize don't know it; in many cases the jobbers themselves don't know it.

There are three factories in Atlanta making women's hats, of straw, felt, plush, hemp and the myriad other materials which go to bedeck milady's coiffure and frame her pretty face.

But as soon as the hat leaves these factories the manufacturers lose their identity. The hat is marked with the jobber's label. It may be marked New York, Philadelphia, New Orleans or even London. The fact that it is made in Atlanta is nowhere to be discovered.

One manufacturer tells, with a grin, of Atlanta milliners who "stocked up" in New York—with Atlanta-made hats.

Altogether, it is an interesting business.

The American Hat Manufacturing Company, one of the largest of the three Atlanta factories, imports straws direct from China, Japan, Italy and Germany. These straws are plaited abroad, and either are dyed there or bleached and dyed in Camden, N. J.

Japan sends hemp braid. Italy furnishes the milans, leghorns and tuscans. Germany furnishes a peculiar material known as Neapolitan braid, which, though few know it, is made from American cotton. China furnishes coarse straws.

So much for the straws. The felt bodies come from abroad, in the rough—queer, looking toadstools of various shades. Silks, ribbons, velvets, plushes and ornaments are carried in quantity enough to stock a dry goods store of large proportions.

Just now the factories are busy with the hats to be worn this fall and winter, and with misses' and children's hats for spring, 1914.

Sample rooms already are filled with fall and spring lines, dazzling arrays of colors, and seemingly in almost every shape, but with smaller hats predominating.

The making of a hat may be said to begin in the room where a skilled workman makes plaster molds accurately defining the shapes. From these plaster affairs, metal dies are made. These dies are put in the presses and heated by gas flames. The rough shapes, either felt, velvet, straw or hemp, are stamped with these hot dies and held in them until dry. When removed the heat has baked the sticky "sizing" until the shapes are firm.

From the presses the velvet and plush hats go to a workman who steams them and brushes up the nap to its original beauty.

The straw shapes are made in the factory. Ingeniously designed sewing machines, manipulated by skillful girls, sew the braid round and round, until a tiny knot grows into a gigantic hat. In the straw season 150 girls are busy at these machines.

Englishman's Criticism of American Stores Answered

Selfridge's Manager Unjustified in Saying Customers Wait Too Long for Parcels.

A. E. Cowper, one of the important men in the organization of Selfridge & Co., which in turn has, perhaps, the most important department store in London, recently made a visit to the United States. He spent most of his time, of course, in looking over American department stores, and before he departed for England freed himself of some criticism.

"One thing which struck me was the time it takes to complete a purchase and get your goods wrapped and delivered," he said.

"At home we have no bundle wrappers; the clerks wrap the packages, and we find it saves time and mistakes. When a customer has made a purchase and the goods are shipped by carrier or messenger to a distant cash-and-bundle desk, every second she has to wait is magnified to a minute, whereas if the goods are wrapped by the clerk, the customer is getting the full attention of that salesperson, and if a minute or two should be lost, she is seeing the action all the time, and does not feel that she has been lost sight of. In Selfridge's we use cash registers, and we find them great savers of time."

Atlanta merchandise experts do not agree with the English student of store service.

Mr. Cowper, in the opinion of various Atlantans approached on the subject, magnifies the importance of the transactions where the purchases actually are taken away by the buyer.

They remark that while it may be the custom in London for shoppers to carry home their purchases, nine out of ten customers in Atlanta demand delivery by wagon.

At any rate, they say, there is very little delay, and it is much better to free the salespeople from the duty of wrapping packages.

Managers of Atlanta department stores made tests at random to demonstrate that it takes on an average 30 seconds for the delivery of a package and the making of change.

Lucian York, manager of Rich's, says:

"We have a system which we believe is the best yet devised from the viewpoint of the customer, and Selfridge's certainly have nothing to compare with it. We use an 'identification coin.'

Departs at Once.

"Most of our charge customers have their parcels delivered. After the transaction is made the customer merely gives her name and address to the salesperson, shows her identification coin, and departs at once. Even when the customer takes the parcel with her, the wrapper in the stand has it ready in a jiffy. Time records to gauge our wrappers show that on an average they use less than a minute.

"The delivery of packages, after all, is simply a minor matter. What our American people want broadly is service—the right merchandise at the right time at the right price. In English stores customers still are importuned to buy; in fact, in many of the stores it is almost impossible to leave without buying. Fancy such a condition here!

"Again, here we make every effort to get what the customer wants. We anticipate the styles, bring on new models and patterns.

"When the customer purchases these goods she buys them at our risk—if they are not pleasing to her when she gets them home she is at liberty to return them. Here the customer is always right—in England, from what I understand, she is more at the mercy of the storekeeper."

Thousand Lined Up To Get Into Store

Furniture House Devises Attractive Scheme to Induce Public to Notice Low Prices.

Even in busy Atlanta, it is seldom enough that a thousand people are lined up waiting to get into a store when the doors are thrown open. This was the record established by Sterchi Bros. & Barnes, Mitchell Street, near Whitehall, Thursday morning.

The attraction was an unusual sale of furniture, coupled with a prize offer. Tags were widely distributed among the friends of the store. Each of these tags was numbered, and 100 of the numbers corresponded with the numbers on tags borne by articles in the store. When any visitor matched his tag with any tag in the store, he was privileged to claim the article, without being obligated to purchase anything.

The plan drew a big crowd, and, better, it attracted attention to some very low prices, and resulted in good sales.

TAFFETA RIBBONS SCARCE.

A scarcity of taffeta ribbons in stock colorings is reported. Pinks, blues and whites are especially hard to get.

Silk Dyers Strike: Feathers Face Bar; Flowers in Favor

Milliners Think That for Once They Can Predict Styles for Fall Well in Advance.

Flowers will be popular on women's hats for fall and winter wear.

In July this is a dangerous prediction. Circumstances, however, make it fairly safe prophecy, in the opinion of C. B. Palmer, of M. Kutz Co., wholesale milliners.

Dame Fashion might take a notion to dictate ribbons. But the silk dyers' strikes in Paterson, N. J., have caused an increase of 20 per cent in the cost of ribbons, and even at these advanced prices, deliveries can not be made. At best, goods can not be promised before August 15 or September 1, and even if the mills reopen, they are likely to be overwhelmed with the orders which have been accumulating.

Feathers, again, might have been Fashion's favorites. But right now there is trouble in Congress over the importation of feathers. The milliners and the Audubon Society are in the throes of a bitter struggle which will decide whether feathers will be admitted at all under the new tariff.

Remain only fur and flowers. For three seasons, velvet and silk flowers have been increasing in popularity on fall and winter hats, and, with the scarcity of other materials, are likely to take the ascendency this fall.

Small hats will rule—that is, smaller than those which have been worn for the past few seasons. Crowns will be round, with turned-up brims, according to Mr. Palmer. What will be the favorite colors, besides the staple blues, browns and black, no one will know until September 1.

The Kutz Co. salesmen started out last Monday to cover the Southern States for fall business.

MORE BUYERS THAN PEACHES.

NEW YORK, July 5.—Buyers returning here from Georgia say that it is generally estimated the peach crop of Georgia will run about 1,500 cars. According to the railroad men, they do not expect to move over 75 cars a day out of the State at the flush of the season. There are a great many buyers at Fort Valley. Fully 95 per cent of the peaches are being sold on track—in fact, there are more buyers than there are peaches.

SOUTHERN SOCIETY TAKES A SPURT IN CAPITAL; MANY NOTABLES BECOME MEMBERS

Records Smashed by Organization Since Claude N. Bennett Became President.

By HUGH S. MILLER.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—For rapidity of growth and for activity in developing the spirit of the South at the National Capital, the Southern Society of Washington has set a new record since the Democratic party came into power.

Less than a month after the election of officers, which placed Claude N. Bennett, of Georgia, in the president's chair, the society took in 150 new members from the leading Southerners in private, Congressional and other official life. They included such new members as Senator and Mrs. Hoke Smith, of Georgia; Senator and Mrs. Bryan, of Florida; Senator and Mrs. Robinson, of Arkansas; Senators Swanson, of Virginia, and Vardaman, of Mississippi; Representatives Gordon Lee, William Schley Howard and Hughes, of Georgia; Burnett and Heflin, of Alabama; Small, of North Carolina, and many other Southern Representatives and their wives.

Georgians Who Join.

Among the prominent Georgians who have joined are Justice and Mrs. William Bailey Lamar, Paymaster and Mrs. William C. Fite, Mr. and Mrs. James J. Lampton, Mr. and Mrs. Harry F. Cary, Mr. and Mrs. Sledge Tatum, Colonel Neyle Colquitt, Marion C. Howard, D. L. Hartsill, Miss Minnie E. Carroll, Miss Helen H. Hardin, Colonel John T. Boifeuillet and Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Lamkin. From other Southern States there are generals, admirals and others of note.

The Southern Society is now enjoying a success that it never before attained. It stands at the very top of the social organizations in the National Capital. Strangely enough, while the impetus which has made the society what it is came in part from the Georgian who is its new president, it is to be attributed mainly to a lively fight which developed in the society just previous to the last election.

The Southern Society had been running along for several years as quietly as a meadow stream. Its first president was Jacob M. Dickinson, Secretary of War in the Taft Cabinet. He was succeeded as president by Senator Thornton, of Louisiana, and he in turn was followed by Representative Richmond Pearson Hobson, of Alabama. Lack of time had made it difficult for any of these executives to give the society much personal attention.

Hobson Started Fight.

It was President Hobson who unintentionally precipitated the fight which culminated in the unprecedented expansion of the society. He proposed an amendment which would expand the elligibility clause of the society so as to take in people from every section of the country, provided they felt an interest in the South and the general objects of the organization. His amendment was seconded and ably advocated by Thomas Nelson Page, of Virginia, the author and recent appointee of President Wilson as Ambassador to Italy. Mr. Page was a member of the executive committee of the society. He and Captain Hobson argued very ably and eloquently for broadening the scope of the society, particularly with reference to its membership. They emphasized the need of doing away with sectionalism and giving the society a national character.

Some of the members of the society gathered from their remarks an intimation that the society amounted to very little and would never amount to much so long as it was run under exclusively Southern direction. However justified they were in getting this impression, the effect was electrical. They communicated their thoughts to others, and quickly the whole society was aroused. The more it was thought about and discussed the greater the opposition it created. The rank and file of the society declared that the adoption of the amendment would destroy both the character and the purpose of the society; that it would no longer be a Southern society, but an interstate society, the E Pluribus Unum Society, the Amalgamated Association of Selected Celebrities—anything, in fact—but that it would not be a Southern society.

Dr. McKelway Is Secretary.

The result was that the amendment was defeated, President Hobson resigned, and Mr. Bennett was unanimously elected to succeed him. Dr. A. J. McKelway, well known in Atlanta, is financial secretary of the society. Speaker Champ Clark is the first vice president.

Something of what the Southern Society is, and what it is doing, is contained in the following interview by Mr. Bennett:

"The objects of the Southern Society are to bring together at the National Capital Southern people; to promote friendship and fellowship among them; to nourish, cherish and perpetuate Southern ideals and ideas; to aid in interpreting the South to itself and to the nation at large; to develop and promote any good cause connected with the South—whether educational, philanthropic, patriotic or useful in any line. When the society grows in strength, membership and power as it should, it will be an easy matter to discover good things for it to do.

"The society is in no sense sectional, except in the broad sense that it is made up of Southerners. There is nothing narrow or limited or sectional about it in any way that could possibly be objected to. In its recent meeting at the National Theater, the society acted as the host of the nation. The society paid all expenses and entertained two thousand citizens of Washington, selected without regard to where they came from. Every Representative and Senator was invited, the diplomatic corps was well represented, the house was filled to its capacity, and the addresses were in a vein that could not but be approved and appreciated by any well balanced man or woman in the United States. The strongest eulogy on the South was delivered by William Jennings Bryan, of Nebraska, Secretary of State.

"There have been two other meetings in which the South has appeared in prominent roles. One was the noted banquet at the Raleigh Hotel in celebration of Washington's birthday, February 22, 1912, and the other was at the Pan American Building in the Hall of the Americas, when the society last fall gave a reception to the national convention of the United Daughters of the Confederacy—the most noted perhaps of the great entertainments given in Washington to that great organization of Southern women.

Cites Bigness of Field.

"Those of us who are endeavoring to direct the society's movements are fairly staggered by the bigness of the field that it represents. This field covers a representation at the National Capital of sixteen of the leading States of the Union, containing a population of more than thirty millions, having 600,000,000 acres of territory, possessing greater fertility and variety of soil than any other similar sized territory on the face of the globe, having one crop (cotton) worth a round billion dollars a year, and constituting the greatest natural monopoly that the Creator has given to any people.

"That the South now furnishes the President of the United States and half of the Cabinet, and is on the majority side of both House and Senate is only one of many phases of its importance and possibilities. That the Southern Society has something to stand for and can easily find something to do that will be well worth while needs no demonstration. The society regards the South as the nation's best asset, and desires to make that asset available to all good purposes."

CLAUDE N. BENNETT, of Georgia, the new President of the Southern Society of Washington.
