EDWARDS LIKELY TO RAISE ROW AT REMOVAL

MACON, July 12.—It is very likely that a lively incident will develop out of the action of the Postoffice Department in asking for the resignation of Harry Stilwell Edwards, Macon postmaster, who is a Republican appointee. It is thought that Mr. Edwards will refuse to resign, as the San Francisco postmaster has done, making it necessary for the department to summarily remove him.

"I was recently advised that my resignation was wanted," stated Mr. Edwards to-day, "and I have had the matter under consideration with friends. I do not care to make a public statement just at present, but rest assured that I will be heard from."

Custis Nottingham, whom Senator Bacon has recommended for the place, is the Senator's local agent in Macon, looking after all of the Bacon property interests here. He was formerly Recorder of the city, and in the preconvention campaign last year he was an active Underwood supporter. He also has always supported Joe Brown.

W. T. Morgan, whom Representative Bartlett desires to be postmaster, is a close friend of the Congressman and is well known for his Hoke Smith sentiments.

Nottingham to Get Postoffice at Macon.

WASHINGTON, July 12.—Curtis Nottingham probably will be nominated as postmaster at Macon, Ga., whose resignation Harry Stilwell Edwards has been called for by the Postoffice Department.

The nomination of Mr. Nottingham will be in accord with the wishes of Senator Bacon. Representative Bartless, of the Sixth Georgia District, it is understood, has a rival candidate.

Not Contemplating Divorce, She Declares, But Will Not Live With Him Again.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 12.—Interest in the Caminetti-Diggs white slave case scandal centers to-day in Mrs. Drew Caminetti, the wife of one of the defendants, who, deserted for a young society girl, is living in seclusion with her two children in the little mining town of Jackson, Cal.

Mrs. Caminetti, when seen by an interviewer, declared that her only thoughts were of her little children. She is 22 years old, girlish in appearance and a devoted mother.

"I want to see the men punished, even though I realize it means the penitentiary for my husband in case of conviction," she declared. "My only thoughts are for my children. They are the ones that must suffer."

While she sat talking, Naomi, a precocious child peered over her mother's lap at a copy of a newspaper carrying the portraits of the quarter involved in the abduction charges—Drew, Caminetti, Maury Diggs, Miss Marsha Warrington and Miss Lola Norris.

"Oh, there's daddy," lisped the curly haired youngster. "When is daddy coming home?"

"There's the tragedy," grieved the mother. "What does all the national entanglement, involving explanations by Cabinet officers and the jeopardizing of political fortunes, as has been hinted in the papers, amount to beside the welfare and the future of these little babes!

"While I am not contemplating divorce, because I do not believe in such a course to settle domestic difficulty," she asserted, "still we will never again live together."

She evinced deep concern about how the denouement of the case might affect the elder Caminetti.

"Both he and Mrs. Caminetti have been good to me. I get a night letter or some cheering, thoughtful message from them every day. They are as heartbroken over this as I am," she concluded.

Sheriff Seeking Widow in Poison Mystery

UPRISING IN CUBA NOW FEARED

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

HAVANA, July 12.—A tense political situation exists here in consequence of the assassination of General Riva, chief of the national police.

Reports were current to-day that followers of General Asbert, one of the men indicted for the murder of Riva, would attempt to storm the jail and liberate the prisoners.

Asbert has been deposed as Governor of the Province of Havana by President Menocal.

Troops still patroled the streets today and while there was no outward disorder there was a strong undercurrent of hostility.

Bacon Halts Plan for Bill Drafting Bureau

WASHINGTON, July 12.—Senator Bacon, of Georgia, created consternation in the Senate to-day when he declared he was so shocked at the attempt of Senator Owen to have the Senate pass a bill creating a bureau to draft bills upon the request of the President and others that he was completely "knocked off his pins."

The bill was withdrawn for further consideration. It provides for a committee of eight Senators or 25 Representatives.

Senator Bacon referred to the President as the schoolmaster, who, it is proposed, shall do work Senators are supposed to do.

Urges Abolishment Of Death Penalty as He Goes to Gallows

FOLSOM, CAL., July 12.—Jake Oppenheimer, the "man tiger," was executed at Folsom Prison.

trap of the gallows was sprung at 10:33 o'clock this morning. Twelve minutes later Oppenheimer was dead.

He maintained the game spirit that characterized his whole career of crime. As he was about to die he pleaded with the prison officials to use their efforts to abolish capital punishment in California at the next session of the Legislature.

Mabel Taliaferro Is Wed in Daisy Field

ST. LOUIS, July 12.—After keeping her marriage to Thomas J. Carrigan, of La Peer, Mich., a secret for more than a month, Mabel Taliaferro, of Chicago, the actress, formerly wife of Frederic Thompson, New York theatrical promoter, admitted here today she had been married June 1 in the Michigan city.

The marriage took place before a Justice of the Peace, in a field of daisies that edged down to a river bank just outside of La Peer, in order that all possible secrecy might be maintained.

T. R. Warns Japs of American Antipathy

Special Cable to The American.

TOKIO, July 12.—The Tai-Hei-Yo News Agency says that Viscount Konntaro Kaneko has received a letter from Theodore Roosevelt expressing the view that American public opinion will not permit naturalization of Japanese in the United States, as it would lead to a similar claim on the part of the Chinese. Mr. Roosevelt, according to the News Agency, promised to use his efforts in his solution of the Californian alien land ownership situation.

Viscount Kanego is a graduate in law of Harvard University.

$150,000,000 Baby Gets Farm as 'Toy'

NEWPORT, R. I., July 12.—Vinson Walsh McLean, the $150,000,000 baby, has a new plaything which his father, Edward McLean, says is the most sensible of all his toys, the total cost of which would foot up nearly as much as the salary of the President of the United States for a year. The new plaything is a farm with an Angora goat on it.

With goats, sheep and chickens, and the negro boy whom his father has picked out as a playmate, the young multimillionaire may grow up Democratic.

Outcast White Deer Herds With Horses

LIBBY, MONT., July 11.—Henry Wegner, who has a ranch on the upper Yaki, says that a pure white deer has become associated with his the horses and follows them into the horses and follows them into the corral. Mr. Wegner said it was a doe and had pink eyes, so he named it Albino.

Old hunters here say that on account of its freakish apearance it had become an outcast, and in such cases the animal always will go to a herd of cattle or horses if possible.

Bandit Chief Raisuli Would Be a German

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

BERLIN, July 12.—Raisuli, the Moroccan bandit chieftain whom President Roosevelt ordered captured "dead or alive," has applied to the Kaiser's Government to be taken under its wing as a German subject and his request is now being formally considered in Berlin.

According to dispatches published here, French opinion is somewhat stirred at the prospect of Raisuli's formally becoming entitled to the protection of the German flag.

CONLEY KEPT ON GRILL 4 HOURS

After Gruelling Third Degree, Officials Refuse to Deny or Affirm Negro Confessed.

Jim Conley underwent a racking third degree late Friday afternoon at the hands of Solicitor General Hugh M. Dorsey and Attorney Frank A. Hooper in an effort to verify or discredit the W. H. Mincey affidavit, in which the negro was charged with confessing to the murder of a girl on the afternoon that Mary Phagan met her death.

The grilling of nearly four hours followed The Georgian's publication of the details of Mincey's accusations and was undertaken with the utmost secrecy, an attempt being made to avoid knowledge of the "sweating" becoming public by taking Conley to the Commissioners' room on the second floor of the police station by a circuitous route.

Negro's Most Severe Ordeal.

It was the most severe ordeal through which the negro has passed. Its result was kept a profound secret both by the Solicitor and Attorney Hooper. Neither would deny the rumor that Conley had made a complete confession admitting that it was he that killed the little factory girl, nor would they confirm the report, which arose when it was learned that Solicitor Dorsey apparently was making ready to take an entirely new statement from the negro.

Dorsey, Hooper and Chief Lanford were present in the Commissioners' room when the inquisition began. After a few minutes Chief Lanford departed and did not return while the questioning was in progress. He was inclined to deny at first that Conley even was behind the closed doors. But occular proof had been afforded and the newspaper men hovered about the hallway in the hope that some scrap of information might come to them.

Policeman Guards Door.

Their hovering tactics received a bad setback when Chief Lanford detailed a policeman to guard the door and keep all inquisitive persons away.

For an hour Dorsey and Hooper alternated in shooting questions at the negro, apparently without getting anything from him that he had not already told. Then they removed their coats and renewed the grilling. At one point it seemed Conley must have wavered in some of his statements or changed some of the testimony he previously had given. Dorsey emerged from the room and got a blotter from Chief Beavers' office. It was taken to mean that a new statement was being obtained from the negro.

The questioning was resumed and the Solicitor from a distant vantage point could be seen turning sheet after sheet of the testimony already given by Conley and comparing it with the statements then being made.

Attorneys Keep Silence.

Dorsey, coatless and perspiring, leaned far over the table and asked the negro question after question, his finger following the answers which had been given when the negro was interrogated before.

Not until after dark did the sweating process cease. Conley was taken back to his cell and Dorsey and Hooper went to their homes. Not a word could be obtained from either.

Another scene in the murder mystery was to be staged Saturday in the court of Judge Ellis. Here Attorney Bernard L. Chappell summoned half a hundred witnesses to testify in the habeas corpus proceedings he was bringing to free Newt Lee from the Tower. Leo M. Frank, under indictment charged with the murder of Mary Phagan, and Jim Conley, self-confessed accessory after the fact, were two of the witnesses called. They were expected to testify that so far as they knew Newt Lee could have had nothing to do with the crime and could have had no material knowledge of it.

DEFENSE TO PUT UP HOT FIGHT

Slaying Warrant Persecution in Will Case, Mrs. Mary Belle Crawford Declares.

A murder warrant will be served on Mrs. Mary Belle Crawford by a deputy from the Sheriff's office some time Saturday morning.

The paper was received by Sheriff C. Wheeler Mangum early Saturday morning. He made preparations to have it served at the earliest possible moment. It was signed by C. W. Baukin, Coroner of Carroll County, under date of July 10, and charged Mrs. Crawford with the murder, by poisoning, of her husband, Joshua B. Crawford, in the county of Fulton, on or about March 27, 1909. The warrant is returnable to the Fulton County courts.

The Sheriff has no authority to fix a bond, and Mrs. Crawford will have to be held in the Tower unless at a preliminary hearing before a justice of the peace a bond is fixed or she is exonerated.

Mrs. Crawford will demand an immediate hearing, and the attorneys who have represented her in the contest for the $250,000 estate will plead her case before the justice of the peace. Reuben Arnold and Luther Z. Rosser, attorneys for Leo M. Frank, are among her counsel.

Hold Criminal Hearing.

This action in the famous will case will shift the scene of action from the hearing before an auditor, a strictly civil procedure, to a criminal hearing before a magistrate that will consume the greater part of the day and be a bitter legal battle.

It will force Colonel J. S. James, attorney for the dissenting heirs-at-law, who had the body of Crawford exhumed after four years, and who introduced what he termed "a part of his evidence of poisoning," to produce all the evidence at his command and a rehearsal of the evidence of Dr. H. F. Harris, of the State Board of Health.

Attorney Arnold said Mrs. Crawford would be completely exonerated at the prospective hearing before a justice of the peace. He said the action was nothing more than a move to "force" civil procedure.

"We have had experts at work, too," said Arnold. "Dr. J. W. Hurt, the Coroner's physician for this county, was Crawford's attending physician. He will testify that he himself gave Crawford the medicine that contained morphine, or opium, and we will have at least eight or ten of the most prominent medical experts in Atlanta to substantiate his statements and evidence. We also will conclusively demonstrate that Crawford died of pneumonia.

Persecution Is Claimed.

"It is nothing more than persecution to push such a flimsy charge as this. The Coroner's inquest was not legal, or according to law, and the whole thing is just a flash in the pan."

Feeling is bitter between the contesting parties, and the Sheriff's office feared trouble at the preliminary hearing, which probably will be today.

"It is not really the Crawford heirs who are fighting me," said Mrs. Crawford, "but the rather distant relatives who were not mentioned in any will. I settled with the real heirs according to the will left by Mr. Crawford's first wife. Every one was satisfied.

"I gave Charlie Crawford more than he was even entitled to by the will that was made before I even knew the man I later married. He thanked me for the generosity by later letting the very distant relatives prevail upon him to fight me. He deeded them an interest in his share of the

Whether Smith admitted there was any truth in the rumors regarding irregularities in the sale of State cotton is not known.

CHIEF SPURS POLICE TO WAR ON VICE

Grills Sleuths for Laxity and Theatens Suspensions—Girls to Bare "Ring."

Smarting under the lash of a severe grilling given them by Chief Beavers late Friday afternoon, the members of the detective department have entered the campaign against vice with renewed vigor.

One of the results of the Chief's criticism of the department was the making of a new case against Hattie Smith Saturday morning by Detectives Hollingsworth and Rosser.

In his conference with the detective department late Friday afternoon, which was held in Chief Lanfod'r office behind closed doors, Chief Beavers took the detectives severely to task for their laxity in reporting vice cases. He intimated strongly that the detectives were not doing their duty and not getting results.

Makes Suspension Threat.

"It is as much your duty as it is the duty of any other man on the force," Chief Beavers is said to have told them, "to report the existence of vice. In the future all knowledge gained by detectives as to the existence of immoral resorts must be reported at once to headquarters. If you personally are engaged on some other case and have not time to work the vice case, report it so some one else can investigate and make the case."

Chief Beavers urged the detectives to greater activity in the war against vice, and declared that they would fare the same as uniformed men if it was shown that they know of immoral houses and do not report them. They will be promptly suspended, the chief said.

Sudden change in the plans of Chief Beavers in the vice probe resulted Saturday morning in the trial of persons involved before Recorder Broyles. Hattie Smith, Mrs. Lola White, Hoyt Monroe and Paul Estes were bound over on $100 bond to the Superior Court of DeKalb County on the charge of disorderly conduct, growing out of a "joy ride."

A sensation was produced in the court room when Hattie Smith refused to offer any testimony either affirming or denying the charges. However, Recorder Broyles found the four parties guilty on the testimony of the other three, who admitted that they took a "joy ride" to DeKalb County. As a result of the decision of the Recorder, the four parties will be tried in the Superior Court of DeKalb County at the coming session of this court.

Girl to Give Names.

The Wilson girl has told Chief Beavers through Plainclothes Officers Green and McKibben that she will tell everything she knows about vice in Atlanta when she is placed on the witness stand. The Rothstein girl, who, the police say, is the leader of the pair in their immoral enterprises, has not indicated such a willingness to talk, but she has intimated that she will reveal the names of a number of men with whom she has had illegal relations, some of whom, she asserts, are prominent in the business world.

Chief Beavers and Recorder Broyles expect the story of the Wilson girl to be more important and more sensational than the startling tale of Hattie Smith, who implicated half a dozen well known Atlantans and three hotels in her statements. The lives of the Wilson girl and of Dora Rothstein, since the Fourth of July, the police declare, have been of almost unbelievable immorality. They have been continuously away from their homes, and their nights have been spent at the baseball park, in old abandoned buildings and in the woods just outside of Atlanta, with men friends who had taken them automobile riding and enticed them into lives of shame.

May Involve Hotels.

The story of the Wilson girl is fraught with possibilities, Chief Beavers declares. She will give a detailed account of her adventures after she met Dora Rothstein at the White City on July4, and it is understood that she will make revelations of her life before she was married, several months ago, by which she will involve several downtown hotels. She has promised Chief Beavers that she will make public the name of every man who has been with her and the Rothstein girl during the past two weeks.

The girl already has given the Chief the names of several men whom she asserts are connected with the vice ring, and in all probability these men will be subpenaed as witnesses in the case. They will be brought into court, and if the evidence warrants it cases of disorderly conduct or statutory charges will be made against them. If there is no evidence that they are directly connected with the Wilson girl and the Rothstein girl, they will be held as witnesses and compelled to tell all they know about vice in Atlanta.

Two Men To Be Tried.

The two men who were arrested following the first story of Corrine Wilson, A. C. Dollar and W. W. Suttles, also will be tried in police court Saturday afternoon, charged with selling cocaine. He was arrested on Decatur street Friday night by Officers Allen and Gresham, who say they interrupted a sale of the drug to a young white man.

The young man is being held as a witness in the case.

Militia Ready for Governor's Visit

ST. SIMONS, July 12.—Preparations are complete for the visit of Governor Slaton and his staff, who are expected here to-day to inspect the camp of the Fifth Regiment. The visitors will be entertained and shown everything of interest on the Island.

The militiamen have settled to the routine of military camp life. They are being instructed in extended order work and how to attack a strong defensive position. Captain Kimbrough of the United States Army, and Colonel Pomeroy of the Fifth Regiment, are the instructors.

The social life on the Island is a pleasant feature of the encampment. Dances and band concerts are given every night.

Doctor To Be Tried As Cocaine Peddler

Dr. W. W. McAfee, 62 Hill street, probably will be tried in police court Saturday afternoon, charged with selling cocaine. He was arrested on Decatur street Friday night by Officers Allen and Gresham, who say they interrupted a sale of the drug to a young white man.

The young man is being held as a witness in the case.

SIDELIGHTS on GEORGIA POLITICS

by JAMES B. NEVIN

Mr. McMichael of Marion Friday made pos-i-tively his first American appearance as Speaker Pro Tem of the Georgia House of Representatives, and got away with victorious eagles and things of that sort.

The Speakership Pro Tem carries no prerogative other than that of presiding when the Speaker is absent from the chair, and, as Mr. Burwell had not been absent a minute up to the time of Mr. McMichaels participation in the direction of affairs in the House, nobody in the House knew exactly what sort of a Speaker Pro Tem it had selected, so far as his ability to handle things was concerned.

Whatever doubt there may have been in anybody's mind that McMichael would get away with things was speedily removed. The gentleman from Marion seemed perfectly at home from the very beginning of his active career as Speaker Pro Tem, and was warmly applauded by his colleagues when he had finished Round 1.

Mr. McMichael, by the way, is one of the best and most convincing speakers on the floor of the House, and has the happy faculty of making himself understood perfectly. He is clean-cut in enunciation and exceedingly easy to follow.

Moreover, he is very popular among his fellow members, and whatever he says attracts instant and interested attention.

Judge John T. Allen is, perhaps, the best speaker on the floor of the Senate. And that is no mean compliment, either, for there are several good speakers in that honorable body.

Judge Allen not only is a mighty good lawyer, but he also is a business man of widespread reputation. His voice has great carrying power, without in any way being harsh. Whenever he arises to address the Senate, is invariably given close attention.

Whether one agrees with what he says or not, Judge Allen never is at a loss for words in which to make himself perfectly plain.

Dispensing with the reading of the journal in the Senate is not easily effected. Notwithstanding the fact that the journal has been examined and approved, a motion to dispense with reading rarely gets by without objection.

The Senate is more dignified than the House, as a rule, anyway, and its methods of procedure are much more orderly and repressed.

It is an interesting circumstance that the Senate Committee on Constitutional Amendments has reported favorably a bill to raise the total of Senate membership from 44 to 60. There is an excellent chance that the bill will pass, and if it does, the impression is that the people will ratify it.

There is one little page in the Senate who makes it a regular business to fall reverently to his knees while the chaplain is praying every morning.

He doesn't look to be over 8 or 9 years old, and he evidently has not forgotten—yet—that the proper praying posture is kneeling.

A number of Georgia Legislators to-day forwarded to Washington—some to the President and others to Secretary Bryan—letters endorsing Colonel J. Lindsay Johnson, of Rome, for a consuiship, preferably in the Orient.

It is well-known, of course, that the Colonel wishes to be named Consul to Shanghai, and his friends in the Legislature—of which he is several times a former member—evidently are desirous of hastening the appointment along in such wise as they may.

South Georgia is talking of former President of the Senate, W. S. West, of Valdosta, for Governor, in succession to Governor Slaton.

If South Georgia has an eye on the Executive Office after Governor Slaton gets through, it will be readily admitted on all sides that Colonel West would make an ideal candidate.

He knows the game, he has the friends, and assuredly he has the ability—and what more could South Georgia ask of a favorite son?

Citizen J. L. H. Waldrop, of Clayton County, 77 years of age, boasts with pride that he has voted for a Brown for Governor of Georgia seven times.

Away back yonder in the dim and distant past he voted four times for former Governor Joseph M. Brown's distinguished father, Joseph E. Brown, and of late years he voted three times for that gentleman's son.

Mr. Waldrop makes no bones of admitting, indeed, that he always has voted for that tribe of particular Browns, and stands ready to repeat the performance whenever occasion shall arise for doing so, if it ever does again.

William R. Leaken, Collector of the Port of Savannah, has appointed B. Palmer Axson as an assistant in his office, with the rank of inspector. Axson has already begun his new duties, appointment was made by Collector although the appointment has not yet been approved.

There is no doubt that the appointment will be made permanent. The Leaken without solicitation or political consideration.

The new appointee is a blood relative of Mrs. Woodrow Wilson.

Representative Barry Wright, of Floyd, hopes to revive the scheme to convert the Western and Atlantic terminals in Atlanta, between Madison Avenue and Pryor Street, in a grand overhead plaza, and to that end will earnestly champion a bill in the House providing for the same.

Mr. Wright is a member of the Western and Atlantic Railway Committee of the House, and is capable of putting up a mighty good fight for anything he undertakes.

The plaza scheme, he thinks, is an admirable solution of a much vexed question, and a probable effective factor in disposing of the smoke nuisance in Atlanta.

In the first place, Representative Ed Cole, of Bartow, was not christened Edward, or Edwin, or Ed, or anything like that.

As a matter of fact, his full entitlements are Emreid Dargan Cole!

That, however, was entirely too fancy an outlay of names for this gentleman when first he started out to make his own way in life, and so he elected to have himself called "E. D.," which inevitably evoluted into plain, ordinary, old-fashioned "Ed" as time ran on.

Ed Cole began his business career with a total capital of $1.35. Besides that, he possessed nothing beyond one suit of clothes, vintage unknown, a couple of pairs of socks and a superabundance of energy and pluck.

He plunged into business for himself at 16 by getting a job as train "butcher" on a jerkwater railroad in South Carolina, and he soon enlarged his capital of $1.35 to 100 times that amount.

Not long after this experience one of the big news agencies heard of Cole and grabbed him. Before long he was in charge of a division or so for that concern—and now he still is on the sunny side of 30, worth along toward—well, he is worth a six-figure sum, all right, anyway!

In casting about for a vice chairman of the important Ways and Means Committee of the House, Speaker Burwell looked into Cole's record. He became convinced that Cole was one of the safest and sanest business men in the House, and as that was exactly what he was looking for, Cole got the assignment.

Cole's inheritance tax bill is House bill No. 1, and is generally accepted as the most intelligent inheritance tax measure pending in the Legislature. It likely is the one that will be enacted into law. Cole never introduced it until he felt sure it was right and modeled along the most approved lines.

ATTORNEYS PASS LIE AND BLOWS IN MACON

Solicitor General Ross and Lawyer Harris Clash Over Trial of Vice Cases.

MACON, July 12.—Attorney Jesse C. Harris brought about a sudden adjournment of the special criminal session of the Bibb Superior Court yesterday afternoon by calling Solicitor John P. Ross a liar and striking him in the face in the courtroom. Harris was fined $50 for contempt of court and also censured by Judge Mathews for his conduct.

Harris represented fifteen women of the restricted district who are charged with operating disorderly houses. In moving for a continuance of these cases, he declared that Solicitor Ross would not call the cases represented by any other lawyers, but was seeking solely to prosecute those represented by him (Harris).

"That's a falsehood, your honor," interposed the Solicitor.

"You're a liar," shouted Attorney Harris, striking the Solicitor in the face.

Deputies seized both men immediately.

"He's a dirty little scoundrel; let me hit him once," shouted Solicitor Ross, but was restrained.

Judge Mathews held that the jury was prejudiced in the matter of trying any of the defendants represented by Harris, and as Solicitor Ross refused to call any other cases, though stating that he was prepared for trial in all of them, the court was adjourned for the term and all parties discharged. The Solicitor stated that Harris represented all of the prominent defendants, and that he did not propose to try the lessor and weaker defendants first. "There are 'stars' of varying magnitude in Tybee (the vice district) as well as in glory," he said.

'Rube' Waddell Hero In Drowning Tragedy

TOWER, MINN., July 12.—The body of Emmett Gary, 23 years old, who drowned in Lake Vermillion, was recovered last night by "Rube" Waddell, of baseball fame.

"Rube" is camping on Lake Vermillion, and, learning that the attempts to find the body were futile, dived 30 feet and brought it up at the first attempt.

property and filed suit. Since then he has fought me. The closer relatives have never been anything but my best friends."

Sheriff Mangum will select the Justice Court for the hearing instead of the attorneys. It is more than likely it will start in the forenoon, and it is not improbable it will be necessary to conclude Monday.

Widow's Side of Case.

Attorney Arnold, for Mrs. Crawford, issued the following statemnet Friday afternoon:

"There is nothing whatever new in the recent developments of the Crawford case.

"Four years after Crawford's death some of the collateral kinpeople of J. B. Crawford and his first wife, who are seeking to recover this estate, worth perhaps $100,000, from the widow and legatees under Crawford's will, went to Carroll County with their lawyer, J. S. James, and Dr. H. F. Harris, and on some kind of showing which we know nothing of persuaded the Coroner to exhume the body and allow the doctor employed by thees relatives to make a post mortem examination. Neither the widow nor any of the other legatees who are defendants had any notice and were not present.

Claims Lungs Shriveeld.

"The doctor for these people took various parts of the body of Crawford and made a test for morphine. He claims to have found a trace of morphine by applying the color test. He would not swear to any quantity of morphine or meconic acid and could not swear as to any quantity which the deceased took in his lifetime.

"This doctor also looked at the lungs of J. B. Crawford and swore that they had shriveled up about one-third of their size.

"The presence of the morphine and meconic acid, Dr. Harris (who was employed by these collateral kin) said, indicated that a large quantity had been taken by the deceased in his life, but how much more he could not say. Harris could not swear that he found more than one-fiftieth of a grain, and said he made no test for quantity.

Tempest in Teapot.

"The whole thing is a tempest in a teapot, an effort to make a mountain out of a molehill.

"Dr. oJhn W. Hurt, who treated Crawford for pneumonia in his last illness, and the trained expert nurse who attended him show that Crawford died of pneumonia. To ease Crawford's severe pain Dr. Hurt had given him several injections of morphine, and no secret was made of the fact. To ease Crawford's coughing Dr. Hurt had given him a cough medicine which contained opium, which was taken into the stomach.

"This administration of these drugs by Dr. Hurt, who is a safe and conservative physician, would account for vastly more than the trace of morphine found in Crawford's body by Harris.

Calls Charge Illegal.

"As to Dr. Harris' opinion that Dr. Hurt was wrong in diagnosing the case as pneumonia we will be able to show by various experts that Dr. Harris' opinion, based on the examination he made on these shriveled lungs four years after death is worthless as compared with the opinion of Dr. Hurt and the trained nurse.

"We propose to try this case in court in this county and will be satisfied with the judgment that the court renders; but in justice to our client we is nothing in these charges.

Pennsylvania Raises A Record Frog Crop

HARRISBURG, PA., July 12.—Bullfrogs by the thousand are being placed in the streams of Pennsylvania by the State Department of Fisheries and it is expected that by the end of July more young frogs will have been distributed than ever before handled by the State's fish propagators.

The propagation of frogs was undertaken a few years ago by the department when the demand for the greenbacked "bullies" became so great on the part of hotels and restaurants.

SOLONS INSPECT INSTITUTIONS AT ATHENS

As Guests of City's Chamber of Commerce, Legislators Combine Business and Pleasure.

Headed by the two Representatives from Clarke County, J. Frank Rhodes and Frank A. Lipscomb, the Georgia Legislature is visiting Athens to-day, inspecting State institutions there.

The General Assembly, under the chaperonage of President of the Senate J. Randolph Anderson, left on a special train over the Seaboard at 8 o'clock this morning, and will return to Atlanta to-night at 8:30.

For the purpose of making this trip the Legislature adjourned over to-day to meet again Monday morning, but as it is on public business the day was not declared a dies non.

The Athens Chamber of Commerce has the entertainment of the legislators in hand. A fine program has been arranged for their profit and pleasure.

Automobile tours of the University of Georgia properties, including the Normal and Industrial Schools, will be made, and the members of the General Assembly will have every opportunity to see for themselves what the State has at Athens and what it needs.

After the business of the day, the Chamber of Commerce will tender the Legislature a big barbecue and Brunswick stew on the banks of the Oconee River, near Athens.

Twenty-two members of the Senate and 61 members of the House composed the party. A big contingent of the Senate and House pages went along, by special invitation of the Athens Chamber of Commerce.

ATLANTA WOMEN LIKE SKIRT WITH POCKETS

Miss Lucie Goodrich, Atlanta sponsor for new suffragette pocket skirt.

Two Large Receptacles at Sides Feature of New Fad From Paris—Fine for Suffragettes.

Just why women suffragists should have pockets in their skirts is a mystery. Still they've got 'em, and they make no secret of the fact.

Strange to say, this new fad originated in Paris, where suffragettes are rare. It has come to Atlanta via New York, and has found favor here, not only as an insignia of the cause but for convenience sake.

According to Mrs. N. Springold, the New York creator of fashionable gowns, who imported the pocket skirt, it is going to be the sensation of the season.

"Women, and suffragists especially, ought to hail the advent of the new skirt with particular joy, she declared, "because of the pockets. There are two of them, one on each side. And they are not stingy little affairs, like the pockets that used to be put in women's dresses in the ancient days before Fashion frowned on such features of feminine apparel."

In Atlanta a few of them were seen at the recent convention of the Georgia Woman Suffrage Association. Others have been seen at the Driving Club and elsewhere in society circles.

Miss Lucile Goodrich has sponsored the skirt in the younger set. Adherents are beginning to gather to the new fad.

Bills Provide for Special Registration

Three bills championed by Representative Miller, of Bibb County, providing for an amendment to the code so that there may be special registration of voters preliminary to bond elections in counties have been reported favorably by the House General Judiciary Committee No. 1.

Mr. Miller believes greater interest will be taken in bond elections and a more representative opinion obtained by such a provision.

Mercury Stationary At 71 as Rain Falls

For three hours Saturday morning the temperature was stationary at 71 degrees. So far as is known, this is a record. At 5 o'clock the mercury dropped to 71, which was the lowest mark of the preceding night. At 6, 7 and 8 o'clock the mark was exactly the same, variations between the even hours being inconsiderable.

Rainfall for the 24 hours ending Saturday morning totaled only .06 of an inch. Very little rain fell during the night, but shortly after 6 o'clock, when the 24-hour period ended, heavy showers began and continued intermittently for two hours.

EUROPE'S RURAL CREDIT FREES PEASANTS

American Expert Declares Farm Banks and Societies Have Revolutionized Agriculture.

By A. E. TATE.
(Member of the American Agricultural Commission.)
Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, July 12.—Since our commission reached Europe, on May 10, we have studied all the co-operative agricultural systems and methods of rural banking in Italy, Hungary, Austria, Germany, Russia, Switzerland, Belgium, Holland, Denmark, Norway, France, England and Ireland and have found these systems of rural organization have practically revolutionized the agricultural development of these countries.

I found at the head of many of their banks and societies some of the best men in the communities, men who have caught a vision of nobility in this service to their fellowmen and who are devoting their lives to this work with practically no monetary compensation.

Farmers, who, for centuries, were a downtrodden peasantry, are being lifted up to a state of independence and freedom such as was never seen before, through the medium of these co-operative agricultural societies and credit banks.

Once Robbed by Usurers.

Formerly they were forced to obtain their financial requirements from persons who abstracted from them usurious rates of interest and inflicted upon them hardships of all sorts, even to refusing to renew loans and taking property.

Now they are able to secure their accommodations from their co-operative rural banks at rates of interest varying from 2 1-2 to 5 per cent, according to the length of time required and the character of loan made.

The farmer thus is able to secure these loans at such a reasonable rate and on such liberal terms that he is amply able to discharge his obligation at maturity with perfect ease. Both the Raiffeisen system and land mortgage banks are used.

Credit Systems Vary.

The Raiffeisen system, with its unlimited personal liability, and the land mortgage band, with its long-time amortization feature, which allows repayment of a loan covered by real estate mortgage in small yearly payment of a loan covering a period of 10 to 65 years' time, vary in different countries.

I have not found in any country a yearly rate palyment, including interest and expenses of amortization, which has been more than 5 1-2 per cent on the amount borrowed, which is less than the straight interest in North Carolina, not to say anything about the commission which the farmer has often to pay to secure money.

Governments Lend Aid.

There is one thing they have here which is a great factor in furnishing cheap money for the farmer and that is the Governments in those countries are right behind the co-operative societies to encourage them in every way possible. They have come to a realization that itis only when a farmer is prosperous the country is able to make a real substantial advance along all lines and, without this, there must be retrogression and decay.

So Governments have grasped the full significance of what it means to have a well-organized, systematic agriculture and they neglect no opportunity of developing their agricultural resources.

While there is much to learn along co-operative lines from Continental Europe, we can learn very littlee from them in the way of social conditions or country life. In nearly all the countries we visited we found women doing farm work.

In a few countries, we might say, women do the major portion of field work. This should not be, in my opinion, and it is a serious defect in agricultura conditions, and should be eradicated, if the highest order of the country life is ever to be developed.

Army Steals Young Men.

This condition is brought about, no doubt, party by heavy war footing in thees countries, as young men are enlisted in the army and navy and thus farms are robbed of their services.

One thing certain we have learned, that co-operation is a success in Europe and there will be no difficulty in our commission agreeing on that point. Whether that can be applied to the different States remains to be seen. Naturally there would have to be some legislation enacted in both Federal and State Legislatures that would enable the farmers to organize under a co-operative system.

The American Agricultural Commission visited Ipswich to-day, and inquired into the working of the Eastern Counties Farmers' Co-operative Association and subsequently inspected Lord Rayleigh's farm at Hatfield, Peverll.

AMERICAN LIFE INTEREST FUND IS HELD UP

Court Grants Restraining Order to Stockholders Who Have Filed Receivership Suits

Following the filing of two receivership suits against the American Life and Annuity Company, Judge Ellis issued an order Friday restraining officials of the company from making payment on the interest of income certificates.

Pope M. Brown, defeated candidate for Governor in the last campaign, is president of the company. N. G. Parker, Horace Sandiford and T. K. Bowles filed the suits as certificate holders. July 14 was set for a hearing.

Bowles was secretary of the company until November, when he was succeeded by Parker, who himself resigned Thursday. General Manager W. R. Taylor asserts that the company is in good financial condition and has assets of more than $100,000 over its liabilities. He said the report of Deputy Insurance Commissioner Copeland, made June 15, showed liabilities of $88,662.21 against assets of $189,084.37.

The suits charge that the company has taken in $441,000 in the last three years on income certificates alone, and that it has other sources of revenue. The assets are placed at $135,000. It is charged that the company has threatened to pay $12,000 interest on income certificates July 15, and that it has no funds with which to do so.

The American Life and Annuity Company was organized at McRae, Ga., three years ago. It has been regarded as one of the most successful of Georgia companies.

Georgian in West Tricks 5 Women

DENVER, COLO., July 12.—Five young women of this city to-day are wondering how it all happened, while C. F. Thompson, of Macon, Ga., is in prison contemplating the danger of a too vivid imagination.

Three weeks ago Thompson landed in Denver, it is said, with just $20 in a pocket of his one and only suit. Within the course of a few days he had become engaged to four women, had picked out costly trousseaus for each and had made arrangements to purchase two high-priced automobiles.

Thursday he became engaged to the fifth young woman, after pawning a phonograph which he had obtained under false pretenses. This put the detectives on his trail. Now he is in jail, with prospects of a later trip to Canon City Penitentiary.

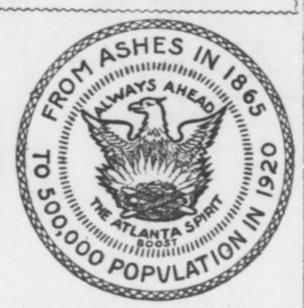
JUDGES DECIDE WHO IS BUTTON PRIZE WINNER

Submitted by W. Mae Jones, 1428 Candler Building.



Submitted by W. T. Wilson, 388 North Jackson street.

Hearst's Sunday American Will Announce Best Slogan—Many Submitted Saturday.

Judges Saturday took charge of all the "500,000 club" slogans submitted in the $25 prize contest. They are John W. Grant, Wilmer L. Moore and Walter C. Taylor. At The Georgian office they began a careful study of the hundreds of suggestions submitted.

Hearst's Sunday American will announce the winner.

The last day of the contest brought in the largest number of submissions of any other day. Many are beautiful designs by well-known artists. Others are striking for their literary merit. All bespeak the wonderful Atlanta spirit—save one.

That came in anonymously from a cynical humorist. He went to the trouble of drawing a large picture burlesquing Atlanta from the City Hall to the last garbage dump beyond "Pittsburg."

The Cynic's Slogan.

In one corner was a large building marked "Hot Air Factory." Next to it was the City Hall, called "The House of Mystery," and on top of the building sat a doubtful bird marked "Graft." The bottom of the picture showed three stragglers passing out of a gate with the remark:

"Griffin ain't so bad after all."

It's a cinch this design won't get the prize.

One of the best of the last suggestions was a map of Georgia with a star marking Atlanta, its capital. The slogan, offered by George L. Taylor, No. 152 Courtland street, is:

"Hitch your wagon to the star. Half million by 1920."

Here are many scintillating with enthusiasm:

"Boost Atlanta. Everybody's doing it; 500,000 by 1920. Welcome. The Gate City."—W. L. Maddox, No. 395 Whitehall street.

"For Atlanta 500,000 by 1920. Come on."—Wilbur G. Kurtz, No. 90 Sinclair avenue.

"Atlanta, the livest and niftiest town always."—G. O. Shepard, No. 36 North Pryor street.

W. T. Wilson, No. 388 North Jackson street, offers the Phoenix arising from the ashes with the slogan, "Always ahead."

"Get the spirit and join Atlanta Half-Million Club, 1920; to prosperity and happiness."—F. E. Taylor, Empire building.

"1864, 2,000 people; 1865, less than 3,000 people; 1910, 155,000 people; 1920, let's make it 500,000."—Joseph Uleiner, No. 224 Capitol avenue.

.:. Two in a Train .:.

"A THIRD class single to Galway, please!" Miss Mathers moved away from the ticket office, but not before a tall man, wrapped in a thin ulster, with a tweed cap pulled down over his eyes, had seen her—started first at sound of her soft voice, and then deliberately followed her to the waiting train. It was a bitter winter evening, and Miss Mathers shuddered inwardly as she thought of that long, long train journey through South Wales, the odious crossing of the Irish Channel and the wearisome journey to Galway.

Tears started to her eyes as she thought of past arrivals there. How different they had been! Then she had traveled thither as a guest. Now all was sadly changed, and she was going back to dear, well-remembered places to earn her own living as a governess.

Seated in the corner of a third-class compartment, Mary Mathers settled herself under her rug for the first stage of her journey.

A warning whistle from the train—the door was wrenched open, and a man, wrapped in a big ulster, got in, followed by a porter with a bag and bundle of golf sticks. There was a momentary bustle, during which the express began to glide slowly along the platform. The porter jumped out, shut the door—they were off.

And in the opposite corner was sitting——

Mary's heart gave a jump.

"I thought it was you," said Meredith, quietly. "Aren't you going to speak to me?"

"Of course," she stammered, with lips that tried so hard not to quiver. "You startled me so." She smiled at him gallantly. "You see, you are about the last person I expected to see. Are you going to Ireland?"

The Old Haunts.

"Yes, and you? To the old haunts?" The quick tears started to her eyes.

"Yes, to one of the old haunts near Galway."

"Lough Corrib?" he asked.

Mary winced.

"Yes, just on the shores, half-way to Oughterard."

He leant forward.

"You don't mean to say that you are going to the Wintons?"

"Yes."

"Good! So am I. They're getting up a first-rate house party, you know. I'm awfully glad you're going to be one of them, too."

Mary gave a little gasp, opened her mouth as if to speak, and said nothing. What could she say?

Tell him the truth, of course—that instead of an honored guest she was going to the Wintons as governess at $150 a year, relegated to the schoolroom in a distant wing, dining when the rest of the party lunched, disappearing back again to the distant wing of the house with her charges. Perhaps now and then she would be sent for to play accompaniments or something of the kind. But if Meredith was to be in the house, how could she bear it? How could she tell him? He probably knew nothing about her reverses of fortune. She couldn't blurt it out—apropos of nothing at all.

Three years ago she and Meredith had seen a good deal of each other. No other man had ever touched her heart or made any great difference in her life, but he—she wrenched herself from her dreams with an effort as she spoke.

A Bad Prospect.

"I'm afraid it's going to be a bad night. Are you obliged to cross?"

"Yes."

"And if I remember rightly, you don't care much about the sea, do you?"

"I care this much—that I loathe it," said Mary, with a faint smile. "I have never got over my distaste for boats and everything to do with them. And the Irish Channel is always rough when I cross it."

Meredith laughed.

"Have you only just come back from East Africa?" said Mary, breaking the silence that had fallen between them.

"Three months ago."

"But you will go out again?"

"I don't think so," he said slowly. "It all depends on——"

The door into the corridor was slid open; the dining car attendant looked in.

"Take your seats for dinner, please."

He passed on.

"You will dine, won't you?" asked Meredith. "Nothing like a good meal, you know."

The color mounted to Mary's face. How could she tell him that dinner was not a possibility to her, simply because she had no spare money to waste? She had a little packet of sandwiches in her bag, and some biscuits, but her appetite sickened at the thought of them.

"I am not hungry," she said, evasively. "I couldn't eat any dinner."

Left Alone.

"Very well. Willful woman must always have her way, but don't say I didn't warn you. Will you be all right if I leave you? I feel the pangs of a furious hunger."

"Of course. I am quite comfortable."

Left alone, Mary sat up and gazed out into the darkness. Her face burned. How could she endure the hours of this journey with Meredith sitting there, talking, looking at her? She must get away from him. Her hard-won self-control might desert her, and then—— She rapidly collected her rug, papers and bag and slipped into the corridor, walking with difficulty toward the far end of the swinging train to another compartment.

Here she would be alone. Presently, to the hum of the express, Mary fell asleep, wrapped in her rug, and dreamed things that brought a smile to her lips and a color to her soft cheeks.

And in the dining car, at his solitary meal, Meredith wondered why fate had deliberately thrown him and Mary together, when that impassable barrier of wealth still stood between them. It had driven him away from her once before, and now—well, he must let things slide. Perhaps, that same interfering dame Fortune might find a way out.

The Irish air was soft and fresh, and the gray country looked inexpressibly lovely to Mary's tired eyes. The crossing had been just as odious as she expected, and she had hurried from the boat in the wintry darkness to the waiting room, dreading, yet hoping to find Meredith at her side. She saw his tall figure once. He was looking about him, but he did not see her, and she took refuge in a carriage with three other women, and slept away some of her exhaustion on the way to Waterford. There she had to change, and on the platform the first person she saw was—Meredith. He came up to her at once.

"Why did you run away last night?" he said.

"I—I"—

"I don't want to worry you, but you must let me look after you. You look half dead. Have you had any breakfast?"

"Yes."

She had had tea and bread and butter in the train, and the cool morning air had whipped a faint color to her white cheeks.

Slowly they crept away into the thick mist, nothing to be seen but low fields, stone walls and driving mist on every side. Mary felt her spirits sinking lower and lower as she approached her destination.

"Are we there?" she said.

"No, we've stopped for something—signal against us I expect."

Meredith put down the window and looked out into the mist. He saw a row of low sheds, the outline of a tiny station, a branch line, and nothing beyond them but a couple of other compartments. The rest of the train had gone.

She Confesses.

There they were, left behind—in a siding.

"What has happened?" asked Mary.

Meredith turned and looked at her with a rueful sort of smile.

"We're left behind."

"Left behind!" cried Mary aghast. "What do you mean?"

"They've run us into a siding, and the train has gone on without us. The fact is, I was asleep. I only woke up to find ourselves dumped down here. They let us get into the coach they were leaving behind—idiots! But we'll get on somehow, Mary. After all, it only means a little delay."

He said her name involuntarily, and Mary's heart jumped. Then a feeling of dismay swept over her.

"But we may not arrive till night," she said. "I suppose the only thing we can do is to drive, if a vehicle is to be had. We must be twenty miles from our destination, at least."

"I suppose so, but what does it matter? They'll understand."

"It may not matter for you," said Mary, in a low, harsh voice. "They will excuse in a guest what they may not pardon in the governess."

Meredith stared at her as if she had suddenly gone mad.

"The what?" he said.

"The governess. That is what I am."

"You're mad."

"I'm not; it's a fact."

"You a governess? What does it mean? What are you masquerading for?"

"It's no masquerade. I'm a governess because—I can not dig, and to beg I am ashamed," said Mary, with a miserable little laugh. "That's all."

"But do you mean to say you've got to do it?" said Meredith, dazedly.

"Yes. Everything went in a big smash on the Stock Exchange more than a year ago. I have to do something, and the Wintons wanted a governess for their two little nephews who are living with them, that's all."

"All!" said Meredith, violently. "And I knew nothing of it. I never heard a word of this before. When we met last do you know what sent me away in such haste? Can you guess?"

"No."

"It was because I was afraid to stay. I loved you so much, and I could not speak. I was only a poor soldier of fortune—you were a wealthy heiress. I had already been called a fortune hunter by those who must have seen how I lingered at your side. I didn't think you cared, so I went away. Now, Mary darling, I'm free to speak. I can't give you the riches that are gone, but I can give you a good home and lots of love. Do you care a little? Try to, Mary, when I care so much. I believe Fate brought us together on purpose."

"And let us in a siding," said Mary, with a smile breaking over her face like sunshine through mist.

"It might have left us in a worse place," cried Meredith, his arm about her shoulders. "Mary, is it going to be 'Yes?'"

"Yes—yes," murmured Mary.

Beauty Secrets of Beautiful Women

How Dot Wilson Found Milk an Aid to Natural Loveliness

By LILIAN LAUFERTY.

IF you want to have your skin white, your eyes bright, your digestion good and your weight always adjusted to a pleasing plumpness that does not increase to stoutness, try the milk diet. This is pretty pink and white, sparkling-eyed Dot Wilson's great beauty secret, and she longs for converts to her theory of the simple life."

I found Miss Wilson and her sisters in a cool, wind-swept room down at Brighton Beach, New York, and after I had adjusted myself to this triple personality as illustrated by the "three-twin" sisters, we settled down to a cozy little visit that gave me one or two brand-new ideas for the attainment of beauty. The first idea was something no one said—it was just the generous, kindly attitude of admiration and willingness to have their "baby sister" featured that Miss Doris Wilson and Miss Alma showed throughout our interview. Next fall B. F. Keith will give you all a chance to see the three clever girls who make up the Doris Wilson trio—but before that time pray let me present to you a bit of their philosophy of life—and beauty.

Only Milk.

"Milk, milk, nothing but milk—that is what my mother brought me up on. None of her children had any other article of diet until they were 12; and I have never found anything so nourishing, so easy to digest and so productive of good results. So milk is my diet, and though the girls vary from it, they often regret some indiscretion of diet to the tune of a pain of a skin rash or one of the ills that food is so generous about presenting people with," said Miss Dot.

"I live on milk—no water to drink, for milk takes its place. No indigestible food can tempt me, for milk keeps me so well, so buoyant and so free from nerves that I flourish thereon and never long for the flavor of any food but my tried and true friend. About twice a year I have a taste of some such foreign substance as ice cream. Oh, yes, I can eat food, and I do occasionally, but I don't like it.

"I drink eight quarts of milk a day—not iced milk to shock the sensitive stomach nerves, but normal tempered milk.

"I sip it slowly—'Just sneak it down,' said one specialist who cures all sorts of nervous and digestive diseases by a seven week' milk cure. Well, it takes me about fifteen minutes to drink one glass of milk, and I am enjoying it all the time. We're all only bigger babies—babies grown up—and if it is so good for the wee things to live on milk, why should it not be good for them to go on living on milk, the friendly food of their childhood? The girls drink five or six glasses of milk a day, and whenever they are tired or nervous, or feel on the verge of a little breakdown, back they go to the milk diet, and then they just get in tune with things again."

Miss Dot Wilson.

I looked at the three pairs of bright eyes—blue, blue-gray and hazel-gray—each pair with a spark of light at the back of their starry depths; I studied the creamy, peachblow complexions, and the gracefully rounded, tall figures, and I decided that as a near-milk cure made you pretty and the absolute milk-dietist was conceded to be the prettiest of the sisters, perhaps it would be a good idea to go right off and corner the milk market.

THEIR MARRIED LIFE

By MABEL HERBERT URNER.

PARIS at 7 o'clock of a summer evening! The gleaming lights, the gay gowns of the women, the trees, the outdoor cafes—Helen, clinging to Warren's arm, walked down the broad boulevard athrill with the glamour of it all.

It had been just four hours since they arrived from Cherbourg—tired, dusty, travel-stained. But now, rested and in cooler clothes, they started out to find, as Warren expressed it, "a place to feed."

Where should they go? Helen suggested a number of well-known places that she had read of in the guide book. But Warren was determined to have their first dinner at a restaurant he had been particularly fond of when he was in Paris eight years before.

Although he had forgotten the name, he had felt confident of his sense of location. They had taken a 'bus to Porte St. Martin and had walked several blocks in what he felt was the right direction.

"Must be around here somewhere," frowning down a street that was plainly unfamiliar. "I don't believe they've moved."

"Isn't that a restaurant over there—where the lights are?" asked Helen hopefully.

"By Jove! I believe that's the place," as they crossed the wide street. "I'd have sworn it was on the other side."

Entering, they were met by an officious head waiter, who bustled ahead, ushering them to a table in an inner room.

"Oh, we don't want to sit back here," objected Warren. "Give us a table out on the veranda."

"Sorry, monsieur, but they're all taken."

"Why, there's a half dozen vacant ones up at that end."

"They're all reserved, monsieur," repeated the head waiter stolidly.

Warren turned to Helen with a scowling "So they know that game over here, too. This fellow's looking for five francs. Well, what do you say? Want to sit back here—or look up some other place?"

"Oh, dear, let's go somewhere else," resenting the supercilious air of the head waiter, who stood impatiently tapping the dinner card with his pencil.

Outside Warren demanded curtly:

"Now, where to? It's getting late and I'm hungry. We don't want to wander around all night, you know."

"But, dear, we don't want to stay there. That man was almost insolent."

He Blames Her.

"Well, you're pretty darn particular," as usual throwing the responsibility upon her. "We'd have been sure of good food there, anyway. But you're always kicking. Suppose you find a place now."

Helen realized that Warren was on the verge of one of his irritable moods, when he would blame her for whatever happened, however inconsistent or unjust. He had had nothing to eat since that early and unsatisfactory luncheon on the train. It was a critical moment, and she was desperately anxious to find some other good restaurant at once—before his growing hunger increased his irritability.

They walked on for several blocks, Helen gazing anxiously in every direction, while Warren maintained the scowling, sullen silence that always foreboded a storm.

"Oh, there, dear!" eagerly, as she caught sight of a balcony, high above the street, with white clothed tables and rose-shaded lights. "Doesn't that look like a good place?"

"You can't tell anything about these strange places in Paris," growled Warren. "May be rotten. But we've got to eat somewhere. Come on. And we'll stay here—understand? Whether we get a table you like or not. No more trotting around for me to-night."

Helen followed Warren up the broad, red-carpeted stairs, hoping desperately that at this place things would "go right."

The first glimpse was disappointing. The room was crowded. Would they have to go somewhere else?

"Sounds Good."

As they stood uncertainly at the doorway, a couple rose from a most desirable table on the veranda—one that Helen had seen from the street. If they could only get that!

The next moment the head waiter was bowing them toward it. Two other waiters rushed forward with fresh linen and silver, and a third placed a footstool for Helen's feet.

"Oh, dear, it's a wonderful place," sinking back with a sense of infinite relief that a critical situation had been safely passed.

"Well, we'll not get enthusiastic till we see what the food's like," grunted Warren, somewhat appeased by the attention they had received.

"I can't make anything out of this," scowling at the menu, which was illegibly written in French with pale purple ink.

"Will you have our 5-franc table d'hote dinner, monsieur?" asked a waiter at his elbow.

"Uumph, you speak English? Well, that simplifies things. What do we get with that dinner?"

"Hors d'oeuvres, potage, fish, entree, roast, salade, entrements and a bottle of red or white Bordeaux."

"That sounds pretty good," assented Warren. "All right; we'll try it."

To Helen the atmosphere of the place and the street scene below was one of enchantment. She was beginning to feel the charm of Paris.

With the hors d'oeuvres and first glass of wine, the scowling frown on Warren's brow had relaxed, and with the thick green Saint Germain soup he grew almost genial.

"Just taste that fish! It's great. What they call filet of sole at home is only flounder. We never see the real thing there. This is an all right place."

"Oh, I'm so glad we found this, dear. For I felt that you were getting out of humor, and would blame me for not staying at that other place," exclaimed Helen, who, womanlike, always wanted to go back over a situation, instead of being content to let well enough alone. "And I couldn't bear to have our first dinner in Paris an unhappy one."

"Who in thunder was going to make it unhappy, unless you were?" growled Warren, who hated post-mortems. "What the devil are you harping on it now for, anyway?"

"Oh, I only meant, dear—" began Helen, hastening to conciliate. But fortunately at this moment the waiter uncovered the fowl, roasted to a delicate brown, and Warren's attention was diverted from Helen's untactful remark.

"Dear, there's not so much difference in the gowns worn by the French women," commented Helen, now anxious to change the subject. There aren't any sensational dresses here. That woman over there in pink, is rather striking, but any of the others might be in New York."

"Well, this isn't the sort of place where you'd see much in the way of dress. Some night I'll take you to supper at Maxim's. The gowns there'll be striking enough."

"Oh, are we going to Maxim's?" delightedly. "I thought it was a dreadful place."

"Not so dreadful as they want you to think—that's their best asset. You'll find it pretty tame. More than half the crowd will be rubber necks like ourselves."

But Helen had read and heard much of Maxim's, and as she minced over the fruit salad she gazed down on the gay boulevard in eager anticipation of a supper there.

"Dear, what IS this?" as the waiter placed before them two small brown jars filled with a thick creamy substance. "Search me!" shrugged Waren, investigating it with a spoon.

"That's Creme de Zeigny, Monsieur. Will you have sugar with it?"

"I'll try it straight first."

"Oh, it's delicious, dear," exclaimed Helen enthusiastically. "It's sort of sour, salty and sweet! More like a delicate liquid cheese."

Very Smooth.

"By Jove, that is pretty smooth," admitted Warren. Isn't this the stuff the Thustons raved over when they got back last year? We'll have this often—that's sure."

When the waiter had cleared off the table, Warren lit his cigar and turned over the check placed unobtrusively before him.

"Ten francs—two dollars! Well that's what I call a good run for your money. Everything specially cooked, too—and that was a whole chicken. To get a dinner like that in New York, you'd have to order it a la carte, and with that wine it would cost you not a cent less than $10."

"Now aren't you glad we didn't stay at that other restaurant?" insisted Helen with a true feminine persistency. "The food COULDN'T have been any better! You see I didn't find such a bad place after all."

But Warren was no longer in an inflammable mood. The excellent dinner had had a most pacifying effect on his temper. So to this rather indiscreet remark, he only shrugged a good-natured: "Umph, that's right—rub it in!"

Advice to a Young Man

By DOROTHY DIX.

A YOUNG man, who is ambitious and who feels within himself the ability to rise in the world, is very much in love with a pretty young girl who has no aspirations beyond a new dress and going to Coney Island or a cheap theater.

The young man is making enough money for them to be married on and live in fair comfort in their present status in life, but he is not satisfied with this.

He is anxious to get an education and study a profession. To this the sweetheart objects. She isn't willing for the young man to make his way through college. She doesn't see any use in an education, any how. When the young man talks to her about books it bores her to death, and when he wants to take her to hear a good lecture or good music she offsets it with a proposal to take in a vaudeville show.

The young man wants to know whether he should give up his books or his girl, or if there is any way in which he could interest his fiancee in intellectual pursuits and kindle the fires of ambition in her soul.

To answer the last question first, I would say, no. The homely old proverb about the impossibility of making a silk purse out of a sow's ear is still gospel true. There is no way to make a clod aspire, and you can no more change the tastes of a woman who was born without a perception of the finer things of life than you can change the color of her eyes, or the height of her stature.

Born That Way.

The girl who does not perceive the advantage of an education, or the necessity for one, who yawns over even a novel and who doesn't see why anybody reads the daily paper, who is absolutely and totally unintellectual was simply born that way. There's some lack in her mental equipment, and nothing that her husband can do is going to supply it. She was just born that way, and that way she will stay to her dying day, and it isn't her fault.

Such a woman may be the best of housekeepers, the most devoted of wives, but she is no mental companion for an intelligent man. Many men marry this kind of a girl because she has a pretty face, and then torture her trying to make her clever—something she can never be. This is cruelly unjust. He who marries a girl who frankly admits that she doesn't like to read and has no ambition should never bother her with books, or reproach her with her lack of progressiveness.

As to which he should take when a man is called upon to choose between his career and his sweetheart, I should say take the career every time, because an ambitious man soon learns to hate any woman who is the handicap that prevents him winning in the race of life. When even those that we love become a burden upon us that keep us from success—good-bye love! This is unromantic, but true.

Many an ambitious man finds out after marriage that he has saddled himself unknowingly with a wife who can not and will not keep pace with him, and who holds him back from the achievements that he is capable of making. Such a man is the victim of a hard and bitter fate, but in honor there is nothing left for him but to bear with whatever fortitude he can the misfortune that he has brought upon himself.

A Chance.

But the man who finds out before marriage that the girl he thinks himself in love with is not his mental and spiritual mate, that she can not think his thoughts, that she is not interested in the pursuits that he is interested in; that she does not wish to reach the goal toward which his feet are set, has still a chance to save himself from a marriage that is bound to bring misery both to himself and the woman.

For what attracts him to her is only the ephemeral charms of her youth and good looks, and when they are gone, as they must be in a few years, nothing remains but the memory of the sacrifice he has made for her, and the irksomeness of a tie that binds him to a wife with whom he has not one thing in common.

In that day a man remembers what he might have been and is not. He sees other men, no better equipped than himself, climbing up to the top of the ladder while he sits at the bottom with his dull and commonplace wife. And in that day he sees with fatal clearness just how much of the earth earthy is the woman who is not animated by anything except a desire for the things that make for her physical comfort.

Matrimony can mean the closest companionship that two human beings ever attain. It can be literally two souls with but a single thought, and it can mean a lonesomeness that is as great as Robinson Crusoe ever suffered on his desert isle. And when it is that it is the abomination of desolation.

The Solitude.

Think of what the ambitious man suffers when he is married to a woman who never wants to advance one step, who never sees why he wants to make a change, and whom he has to fight at every step of his progress. Think of the solitude of soul of a man married to a woman with whom he can never discuss a book he has read, or a play he has seen, or an opera he has heard; who never even comprehends anything that he tries to tell her that is more psychic than the price of butchers' meat. Not always "the woman who never could know, and never could understand" is a vampire. Only too often she is just a dull and stupid wife, without brains or imagination or aspiration.

So I say to the man who is hesitating between his career and his pretty, ambitionless, unintellectual sweetheart to choose the career. He will soon outgrow her anyway, and it is far, far better for both that this inevitable separation should come before they are married than afterward.

Confessions of a Medium

No. 3.---When the Clock Stopped

By Chas. D. Isaacson.

Copyright 1913 by International News Service.

IN the midst of the seance the grave faced spirit medium paused. He slowly rose from his seat before his assembled auditors and impressively spoke:

"My good friends, we are now going to attempt the most difficult experiment of all—something never before accomplished in the records of the world. If we succeed in doing it, we shall prove beyond all possible doubt the fact that we CAN communicate with the dead."

He cleared his throat and waited as a sharp flash of lightning illumined the room and a murderous peal of thunder crashed on its heels.

It was a night late in August—a hot, black, scary night, when you look warily over your shoulder at the bent, slinking, soaking figures that pass you by; when the very air seems laden with hobgoblin phantoms, and the wind seems to echo the moaning and groaning of lost souls.

A Night of Wonders.

Within the darkened room, fifty frightened people held firmly to their chairs and listened to the deep, far-away tones of the speaker medium. This had been a night of wonders. Tables and chairs had floated about by unseen supernatural means. Wonderful messages had made fifty hearts flutter like leaves in a Kansas cyclone. To these persons, accustomed to unusual things brought about by their mystifying leader, the startling events of the meeting had overshadowed anything of the past. And now the thought of something still more dramatic brought them to breathless and awed attention.

"Dear spirit," breathed the medium, raising his eyes to the ceiling, "we crave your assistance and beg your pardon for tiring you so much this day. Accomplish this seeming impossibility which I am about to put to you, and prove your existence and your ability to communicate with us, to the most skeptical, unbelieving member of this circle.

"Over there is a clock"—and the speaker pointed a long, lean, bony finger to the opposite end of the room, where on the mantel could be faintly traced the outlines of a ponderous old-fashioned timepiece.

"Listen. Spirit, listen. Over there, you hear the ticking of that clock. Over there—you head it?"

Tick—tick—tick fell on the ears of the listeners, who held their breath for fear it would drown the sound which grew louder and louder with each successive second, until it seemed to beat on their very hearts.

A Request.

"Spirit, think carefully now please. Here is where the experiment begins. Can you—will you STOP THAT CLOCK?"

Deathly silence ensued. Just tick—tick—loud and clear and sharp as a bell.

No answer.

"Spirit, will you do it?"

Tick—tick—tick.

"Will you?"

"Why—why, y-yes, I'll try," came the answer in mysterious taps on the table.

Tick—tick—tick — tick — each second seemed an hour to the 50 auditors, who sat half turned toward the clock, eager-eared, faint-hearted.

Tick—tick——

Snap! In the very middle of a beat! IT STOPPED!

Oh, the eternity of silence that followed broken soon by a storm of gasps and screams. There was a crash of thunder, and some one, no longer able to stand the oppression of the darkness, turned on the gas, flooding the room with light. Then they crowded about the clock—pale and wide-eyed. It was stopped, no question of that. The men, comparing it with their watches, found it recorded just one minute behind theirs.

"Wonderful!" "Weird!" "Proves spiritualism absolutely," "Could NEVER have been done by human or material means—it was surely the work of a spirit." These were the comments rapidly uttered, as they examined the clock to see if any wires or mechanical contrivances could have been connected with it.

The Answer.

This incident happened. To those who were there, it was the most wonderful phenomenon they had ever witnessed. At least that is how it happened to all but the medium. And the medium was myself. Would you like to know how it was done? I will tell you.

No spirit stopped the clock. No mechanical means stopped it. Even I did not stop it. IN THE FIRST PLACE, THE CLOCK WAS NOT GOING AT ALL! "How and why was ticking heard?"

Here is the whole story: Back of me, on a roll-top desk, I had previously placed a very tiny alarm clock, noted for its loud tick. Nobody thinks of a clock until you mention it. When I said, "You hear the ticking over there—OVER THERE," the audience imagined the sound emanated from the direction I pointed; and, by suggestion, on which is based hypnotism, by the way, they had placed it as coming from the silent clock on the mantel. Then, while they were listening for the unexpected, half turned to the opposite wall, I had, unobserved, slipped my finger to the pendulum, stopped the alarm and dropped the clock into a drawer!

"But then how was the other clock the exact time?"

Before the audience had arrived I had placed the hands ahead several hours and had brought my experiment to conform to the very minute I had arranged. This was simple—in a flash of lightning I had casually looked at my watch. The mystery of the night, the darkness, the wonders already witnessed, had all aided me to fool these intelligent people, among whom were a magazine writer, an artist, two theatrical folks, and several writers and lawyers.

Now consider this: That this experiment was far more dramatic and inexplicable than is generally seen at professional seances, where money is paid for admittance. Yet on incidents such as these, the credulous people of the masses are convinced of spiritism and defrauded by fakers, whose wonders I warrant could be unraveled as simply as the one I have just recorded. I did these things to study and expose. Professionals do them for money. Is it not highly probable that others who earn their living at this mockery are forced to work out similar "wonders?" I do not say spiritualism is wrong. I do not essay to pass judgment on this great question. It is against the fakers that I direct my campaign, beseeching every sensible man and woman to save their hard-earned money and evade them.

Jones—If Mr. Oldboy makes any such assertion, I will denounce him as a liar.

Jones—Then I call Mr. Oldboy a liar as far as it is permitted by the by-laws of this association.

Six Miles Up!

And Safety Instead of Death Because of a New and Wonderful Device for Aviators

The picture, which was taken at an altitude of more than six miles, shows Messrs. Maurice Bienaime and Jacques Schneider in the car of the balloon "Icare" wearing the patent breathing apparatus. In 1878 the balloon "Zenith" attained a height of about four miles, but two of its three passengers were suffocated. With this apparatus the fatality could not have occurred.

By GARRETT P. SERVISS.

THE greatest peril for those who ascend to great altitudes is not that of falling, but that of being suffocated, like fish taken out of water!

It was the climbers of high mountains who first discovered the fact that it is often difficult for men to breathe at a height of from two and a half to three miles above sea level. The late Edward Whymper, the conqueror of the terrible Matterhorn, made many experiments on this, and he concluded, after climbing Chimborazo and other huge peaks in the Andes, that the cause of "mountain sickness," as the trouble was called, was due both to the lessened value of air that is inspired at such altitudes and to the expansion of the gases contained within the body, producing a pressure upon the internal organs.

But more recent study has shown that the difficulty arises mainly from the comparative lack of oxygen in the upper air, and that this may be overcome by means of apparatus supplying extra oxygen to the lungs.

The two principal constituents of the atmosphere are oxygen and nitrogen. Nitrogen is an inert gas which stifles animal respiration. Oxygen, on the other hand, is a very active gas, which, when breathed, supports animal life. When mixed, as near the earth's surface, in the proportion of about four volumes of nitrogen to one of oxygen, the air is respirable, and the inertness of the nitrogen does no harm. But if the proportion of oxygen is reduced the air becomes stifling.

Now, oxygen is heavier than nitrogen in ratio of about eight to seven, and in obedience to the law that heavier substances sink lower than lighter ones, the oxygen thins out as the height above the ground increases, until its proportion to the nitrogen becomes considerably reduced. Above three or four miles the amount of oxygen is so much diminished that breathing becomes very difficult, and at still higher altitudes respiration may cease entirely.

A Tragedy.

A very tragic instance of the effect thus produced is furnished by the story of the famous balloon ascent made in April, 1878, by Gaston Tissandier, Croce Spinelli and Signor Sivel. They ascended from La Villette in France, in the balloon "Zenith," to a height of 28,200 feet, or a little more than five and one-third miles. The thinness of the air, and as we now know, the relative lack of oxygen, killed Spinelli and Sivel, and nearly cost the life of Tissandier.

To show what modern science and invention have done to avert this peril of the high atmosphere, let us turn to the story of a still higher ascent, made on May 28, 1913, by the balloon "Icare," carrying Albert Senouque, Jacques Schneider and M. Bienaime. They started from Lamotte-Breuil in France, and attained an elevation of nearly 33,000 feet, or six and a quarter miles, and yet they did not suffer at all, and came down in perfect condition, and exulting in their great feat!

Their success and immunity from suffocation were due to the fact that they took with them the apparatus shown in the accompanying photograph.

A Wonderful Picture.

This consists of an air-tight vessel filled with compressed oxygen. A mask which can be fitted closely over the nose and mouth is connected by a tube with the reservoir of oxygen. There is a pressure gauge which enables the aeronaut to measure the quantity of oxygen remaining in the reservoir, and there is also a device by which to regulate the amount flowing through the tubes. Thus they could take just as much oxygen as they needed and no more. The rate of supply varied from two quarts per minute to ten. The reservoir contained about 1,600 quarts.

They began to breathe the oxygen when at a height of about 11,800 feet.

The method of using the apparatus is shown in the photograph, which was taken by Senouque, showing Bienaime and Schneider, with their breathing masks on, at the very time when they were at the top of their flight, more than six miles above the earth!

Similar apparatus has recently been carried by mountain climbers, and by the pilots of aeroplanes ascending to great altitudes. With the rapid progress of aerial navigation it will become indispensable in the future.

If fish had human brains they might safely make a voyage of discovery in the air!

MELANCHOLY WOMEN

Should Profit by Mrs. Hurley's Experience—Her Own Story Here Told.

Eldon, Mo.—"I was troubled with displacement, organic inflammation and female weakness. For two years I could not stand on my feet long at a time and I could not walk two blocks without enduring cutting and drawing pains down my right side which increased once a month. I have been at that time purple in the face and would walk the floor. I could not lie down or sit still sometimes for a day and a night at a time. I was nervous, had very little appetite, no ambition, melancholy, and often felt as though I had not a friend in the world.

"After I had tried most every female remedy first, without success, my mother-in-law advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I did so and gained in strength every day. I have now no trouble in any way and highly praise your medicine. It advertises itself."—Mrs. S. T. HURLEY, Eldon, Missouri.

Remember, the remedy which did this was Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. For sale everywhere.

It has helped thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing down feeling, indigestion, and nervous prostration, after all other means have failed. Why don't you try it?

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

IN ALL PROBABILITY, YES.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

A certain girl friend of mine recently wrote me a letter asking a favor of me. I could easily oblige her as the favor is slight. I have been keeping company with a friend of hers lately and am decidedly in love with her. She (the one who wrote the letter) knows this, but still bestows her attentions on me. I myself am not paying her much attention and do not like her. Do you think I would arouse the jealousy of my lover if I showed the other friend this favor just to be polite? M. B.

You letter is rather ambiguous, as you do not state the nature of the favor.

If of such a nature it would cause trouble between you and your sweetheart, you must refuse. Your first thought should be of her.

And please see to it that the other girl's attentions are bestowed elsewhere. I am afraid she will make trouble.

THERE MAY BE SOME EXCUSE.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 18, am considered very handsome, and am in love with a boy three years my senior. He tells me he loves me, but when we have an engagement he always disappoints me. Do you think he is sincere? MARJORIE.

If by "always" you mean once or twice, he may have been unavoidably detained. But if he makes a practice of disappointing you, you must make no more engagements with him, for he cares nothing for you.

HIS RUDENESS IS INEXCUSABLE.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I have been married four years and am only 22 years old. My husband is 29. When out in company with my husband, is it not his place to notice me or talk to me?

When out dining at a friend's, is it right for him to pay attention to young ladies at the table by passing dishes to them and not noticing me? R. B.

He does everything he should not, and his sins of omission are as great.

His behavior is unpardonable, but I know of no redress for you. I hope all girls of 18 who think they are old enough to select a husband will take warning from you.

OBEY YOUR PARENTS.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I have been attending college, and last fall met a young man who is also a student. For the past four months he has been very attentive to me. I love him very much. My parents, who know the young man, say he is wild and associates with bad company. They want me to give him up. What shall I do? I love my family, but I also love the young man very, very much.

M. F. F.

I would urge you to obey your parents, were the young man desirable, for parents always know best. How much more I urge it since he is wild and dissolute! Give him up! Let there be no compromise. I add my pleadings to those of your parents.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"Brave!" he exclaimed in low, contemptuous tones. "It takes no bravery to fight a coward—and that's what this ghost is! It's a coward, like every other spook. Did you ever hear of any spirit that walked in the daytime? Never! They sneak and dodge and hide in crumbling and deserted places. I tell you that men are not half so afraid of spirits as spirits are of men! Face the supernatural, and it is beaten before the fight begins. Spooks, horse thieves and peevish wildcats can all be tamed by the same little charm."

He stoped in a dead silence. The others were staring at him intently, but with highly different expressions.

"Charm?" repeated the Duke, vaguely.

"What is it?" asked the Princess, breathlessly.

Unostentatiously, Jarvis produced his pistol, handling it as one might handle a familiar pencil. To one reared in a community where firearms are never seen excepting in the windows of the hardware store the sight of a pistol occasions either panic or the utmost indifference, depending entirely on the degree of ignorance or natural timidity. But in localities where the revolver is as common and serves the same purpose as the rapier of medieval Europe it is a known and fixed quantity. To one native to those localities the interest in the appearance of the pistol is directed entirely toward the man who displays it—what manner of man he is and what is his manner of handling the weapon.

The Duke had never seen a pistol excepting once or twice on the field of honor and strapped to the thigh of a cavalry man. He was an utter stranger to the type of man to whom a 44-caliber revolver is a shield sword. Consequently, though any ten-year-old boy from the lower Ohio Valley could have told him at one glance that Warren Jarvis carried a revolver. Because it was a protection and not a menace, as it is to be unused, the appearance of the weapon seemed to amuse him, rather than otherwise.

A Joke.

"I had been hoping, Mr. Warren," he said, with light scorn, "that you had some subtle method of handling this problem. But no! You propose to meet the forces of the supernatural with firearms! I may tell you that this specter has been fired at before without the slightest effect."

Jarvis smiled and nodded as he returned the pistol to his pocket.

"Quite likely," Your Excellency. I have seen rifle fire that had not the slightest effect on a wildcat—for the very good reason that the shooting was wilder than the cat."

The Duke made a gesture as if waiving all respnosibility.

"I am sorry for you, Mr. Warren. You will find the ghost more real than the treasure."

"But the treasure is real, Carlos!" exclaimed the Princess, with spirit. "Would I have crossed the ocean for this locket unless I knew? Why, with this paer a total stranger, anybody who had never seen the castle, could walk right up to the place and point out the very stone that hides it!"

For the barest fraction of a second the glances of the two men crossed like foils.

"Pretty dangerous sort of paper to have around," observed Jarvis, slowly. "Look out that somebody doesn't get there ahead of you."

"Yes, it is a dangerous paper," chimed in the Duke in the same time, "if it leads any one into the castle."

The young man laughed, silently and naturally.

"Well, Your Excellency, I'd go a long way for the fun of unraveling a good mystery with a little spice of danger thrown in."

Dangerous Ground.

The Duke nodded as if he understood and sympathized with the feeling. Then, as if something had just occurred to him, he remarked:

"You needn't have gone so far, Mr. Warren. You are leaving a very unusual case behind you in New York. I suppose you read the papers on your way to the boat?"

The young man's lips twitched and he glanced at the trunk.

"Why, no. I was so wrapped up in my baggage I really didn't have a chance."

He glanced slyly at the Princess, who immediately discovered something of interest out of a porthole.

"This will interest you, too, cousin," remarked the Duke, picking up a newspaper he had dropped when he first presented himself to his kinswoman. "You were at the Vanderlip last night, I believe." He opened the paper, found the item he had in mind and read aloud:

"'Pistol duel in Vanderlip Hotel—Guests awake in panic to find prominent Kentuckian dangerously wounded by unknown assailant—Mysterious escape.—Colonel James Markham, a prominent and wealthy Kentuckian, nearly met his death at 5 o'clock this morning in a pistol duel in his room at the Vanderlip Hotel.' 'At a late hour the police had no clew to the identity of his assailant except the remarkable fact that he is still hiding somewhere in the hotel.'"

"He's probably a long way from the hotel by now," interrupted Jarvis with a smile.

"They say he couldn't have gotten out without being seen."

Jarvis shrugged his shoulders. "That's the theory of the police or the reporters."

"What do you think?" demanded the Duke.

"Oh, he might have escaped in a thousand ways. But that's hardly in my line. That work belongs to what we call the 'gum-shoes.'"

"'Gum-shoes!'" echoed the Duke, with amazement.

"Yes, ordinary detectives," Jarvis explained. "But," he added, turning to the Princess, "we are keeping you from getting settled, I'm afraid. So, if you will excuse me, I will see you both at dinner, perhaps."

"Yes, do," invited the Princess, graciously. "And, Carlos, do arrange to sit with us. We will have quite a party."

The Police.

Jarvis bowed to the Duke. "I am pleased to have made your acquaintance, Your Excellency."

"Thank you, Mr. Warren. I find you most interesting. I shall be glad to hear more of—of your remarkable profession."

There was just the faintest echo of a sneer in this last, but the young man bowed as if complimented, and had just turned to the door, when there was a sharp knock. He drew back and the Princess quickly opened it.

With no greeting, bow or apology, two men thrust themselves into the stateroom. Jarvis recognized them at once and set his shoulders for the final combat.

By this you are not to suppose that he was personally acquainted with the men themselves—his familiarity was with the type. In all the world-wide phantasmagoria of races and classes there is none that can be so readily recognized and classified as the New York detective. With the present craze for uniformed bellboys, pages, milliners' attendants, door tenders, errand boys and governors it is quite possible to confuse the uniformed policeman with some of these. But when he is sent out in plain clothes there is no mistaking him. When you have seen one of them you can recognize any one of them to the extreme range of your vision. There is a combination of a certain physical solidity manifest in their carriage and mental stolidity evidenced in their faces that can be found nowhere else.

This pair were typical—thick-chested, thick-handed, thick-headed, with round moon-like faces.

On the Rack.

One stepped just inside the door and a little to one side of it as if on guard. The other advanced a step farther. He had evidently been decided on as spokesman. He glanced at the two men and then addressed the Princess, consulting a tiny note-book as he spoke.

"Is this Miss M. T. Ar-r-agan?" he inquired in a rich, "far-down" brogue, overlaid with the indescribable Manhattanese accent.

"Yes," replied the Princess, uncertainly, and evidently puzzled by the sudden and unexplained intrusion. Jarvis remained in the background and thrust his wounded hand into his overcoat pocket. The Duke's little mustache began to bristle and he stepped forward.

"You were at the Vanderlip Hotel last night?" pursued Detective Driscoll, ignoring the Duke.

"Ye-es."

"The lock on your door was broken?"

"Yes."

"I am from headquarters, ma'am," explained the detective, having gotten these "damaging admissions." "And I have orders to clear up one or two little matters connected with that affair at the hotel last night."

The exalted cousin could no longer restrain himself.

"Orders, orders!" he burst out. "To break in here! What headquarters?"

Detective Driscoll stared at him in open-eyed insolence. Jarvis smiled discreetly behind his hand.

"Police Headquarters!" bellowed the detective so loudly that every one started. His colleague at the door smiled wearily.

"Do you know whom you are addressing?" splutttered the grandee angrily.

Detective Driscoll rolled toward him, pushed out about five cubic inches of chin and snarled:

"That'll be about all from you!" resentative Kimbrough, of Harris County, a snap. Driscoll returned to the Duke quietly, "let me attend to this matter. Won't you come in, gentlemen?"

"Thanks," said Detective Driscoll, easily, nodding to his partner to close the door and giving the Duke a final glare as if daring him to say another word.

"Yes," Jarvis' pleasant voice added its soothing influence, "we were just talking about the mystery."

The Duke, feeling that he would only risk a loss of dignity by quarreling with a foreign police officer, took the cue and held out the olive branch with a patronizing air.

"You are, I take it," he remarked to Driscoll as the sleuth was peering into his little book, "one of the—er 'gum shoes.'"

Jarvis snickered, the book shut with a snap. Driscoll returned to the duke and thrust a menacing face into his.

"Gum shoes!" he snarled. "Say, are you tryin' to be funny?"

The Duke startled, drew back a step.

"Well, sir," he replied half apologetically," you are speaking rather loudly, and, if I may say so, with undue asperity. I presume I have offended you."

"'You presume!'" answered Driscoll. "That's a hot one! Say—who are you, any way?"

The exalted cousin drew himself up and gave one end of his mustache an upward twist.

"I am Hernando, Duke d'Alva," he replied pompously. "I have other titles, but they would hardly interest you."

The detective looked him over from head to foot and licked his lips hungrily.

"Dook de Alvers—and then some, eh? Ain't that nice! Well, if you was the Archbishop of Canterbury I'd run yer in and take yer ashore if yer gimme any more sass!" Fascinated by a savage glare the Duke declined to give him any more "sass," and the detective turned to the Princess, but still eyed the exalted cousin, as if longing for an excuse to "run him in."

Spoiled by Success

PRECISELY as the clocks in the vicinity of Dowman Square announced the hour of midnight, John Maine's pen ceased suddenly in its rapid flight across the paper before him. For a time he sat motionless, his forehead wrinkled in perplexity. Twice he attempted to resume his work, but each time stopped short in the effort.

For five long hours he had worked with feverish mental energy and the first time his pen refused to become the vehicle of his thoughts the physical strength of the man gave out, then, as a gift from the gods, came the blessing of sleep to the jaded worker.

Dimly, vaguely, John Maine became conscious of the fact that his arms were bound and useless at his side. His legs were cramped in an unnatural position; he endeavored to move his head, and discovered, with a painful shock, that his neck was securely held by a tight collar attached to the back of his chair. With startled eyes he glanced round swiftly in the little circle his bonds allowed and saw nothing. Then, as the perspiration oprued from him in his fear, he knew that from somewhere in the room a voice was speaking, slowly, monotonously, but its every word articulated with striking distinctness.

"Don't waste your energy," came in a sibilant whisper. "You have nothing to fear but the truth. Compose yourself.

"I am here to talk," began the voice, "and you to listen."

"So it seems," said Maine briefly. "Tell me," he urged quietly, "who are you?"

"Ten years ago, John Maine," the unknown said, completely ignoring the other's question, "you were a poor man struggling to achieve distinction. Today you are an acknowledged power in the literary world; but has your path upward been a clean, praiseworthy path?"

Congratulations.

The man in the chair stirred uneasily; his eyes sought the one remaining flicker in the fire.

"I suppose," he mused, addressing the tiny, cheerless flame as one in a reverie, "I suppose you're a kind of spectre of the past, eh? You've a remarkably fine idea of stage management," he added, with assumed lightness. "As one artist to another, I congratulate you on your sense of the dramatic."

"You fool! You unspeakable fool!" hissed the voice venomously in his ear. "As you can not tell yourself, suppose I show you what manner of man you are. Take your mind back ten years and tell me what happened then. You can't?"

"I was married ten years ago," Maine replied, hastily.

"So you were married ten years ago, were you?"

"As an unknown man," the voice continued evenly, "without a penny to bless yourself, you married the sweetest little girl in Christendom. She left her parents, she abandoned all to make a mesalliance with you; she shared your garret, she helped you with your work and she bore her altered condition in life with a fortitude which only threw your quibbling nature into more heinous relief. Slowly, gradually, as you mounted the ladder to success, all the magnificent resolutions of your early married life faded into insignificance. You lived only for your work. You became a supreme artist. And you, for whom she had forsaken everything, forgot the very existence of the woman whose heart was still yours.

A Son.

"Five years ago," continued the voice, "a son was born to you, and for a time you forgot you were a man of letters. But you soon slipped away when your clubs called you, when the public fawned on you; and your wife, broken-hearted and neglected, fled from your home. Did you realize then"—the words came in a thundering torrent now—"the revolting act of savagery which cast your wife adrift without the child she loved so dearly?"

"Good heavens!" exclaimed Maine fearfully. "Are you—"

"Listen!" came the imperious command. "She wanted your love, and you had buried it in your success. But, strangely as it sounds, you still loved the child that is sleeping in this house. Do you think that the boy has not missed his mother more than you have missed your wife? John Maine, in the grate before you are ashes, cold and gray. They are your portion in life, for that boy of yours, his heart yearning for the tender love you can not give, is even now slipping into the void——"

"Enough!" screamed the wretched man. "You lie—you know you lie!" He moistened his lips with his tongue. "Who are you?" he asked, with sudden humility.

"I am your better self," came sadly, morosely from a long way off, and John Maine sat up on the words to find himself blinking terrified in the small arc light from a policeman's lantern.

"Beg pardon, sir," whispered the policeman, quickly covering the light; "but I guessed you would be in here at work as usual, and, and——"

His Wife.

"I've been asleep, constable," Maine interposed slowly, and the words conveyed a subtle relief to his aching heart at once. "But how on earth did you get in?" he asked, suddenly realizing that the presence of a policeman in his house in the early hours of the morning was something to be explained.

"Softly, sir," counseled the other. "I saw a woman creep through a window at the back, and followed her. I've been on this beat for a good many years, sir, and I fancied I knew who she was. I thought perhaps you might like"——

Maine was standing up now, alert and brisk.

"Is she still in the house?" he asked. The constable nodded.

"She crept upstairs, sir," he said simply.

But John Maine waited for no more. With his heart pounding at his ribs, he sprang out of the room and leaped swiftly up the stairs.

The policeman followed him slowly....

Maine had reached the landing which led to the boy's room, when he heard a door in front of him open. He switched on the electric light, and there, panting fearfully in the sudden blaze, leaning against the wall, was the thin and emaciated figure of a woman.

Her clothes were in rags and atters; in her arms she clutched a sleeping child to her breast.

They stood thus, silently regarding each other, until the sound of a discreet cough warned Maine of the presence of the constable. With hands that shook perceptibly, and eyes in which there lurked a strange moistness, John Maine turned swiftly on the landing.

"You're a good fellow," he said quietly. "It is as you surmised. My wife"—he waved his hand courteously to the wretched woman in front of him—"has returned home unexpectedly. You can let yourself out."

They waited until the man had passed through the house and they could hear his retreating footsteps die away in the distance. Then:

"Maisie," said Maine, gently, "you have come home to me?"

The woman tottered where she stood, one arm went out before her, sweetly, pathetically, and John Maine sprang to her side in an instant.

"Maisie, my love!" he cried, the tears coursing down his cheeks with the weakness of a strong man who is suddenly robbed of his calm, "thank God, I know my better self!"

Jealousy.

The teacher was addressing his pupils on the subject of laziness and idleness.

He drew a terrible picture of the habitual loafer—the man who dislikes work and who begs for all he gets.

"Now, John," said the teacher to a little boy who had been very inattentive during the lesson.

John was instantly on the alert.

"Tell me," continued the teacher, "who is the miserable individual who gets clothes, food and lodging and yet does nothing in return?"

John's face brightened.

"Please, sir," said he, "the baby."

AN EPIDEMIC OF HOFMANITIS HAS HIT NASHVILLE

NASHVILLE, TENN., July 12.—An epidemic of Hofmanitis has broken out among the baseball bugs in Voltown, and the infection has spread like wildfire, even unto the mightiest hammer-throwers, who have been blistering the poor, old Vanishing Vols for their rank showing in the gonfalon hunt.

The town is simply delirious in its joy, that the friendship of the old swimming days in Akron between Bill Schwartz and the former Pirate was strong enough to induce Artie to rush to his old pal's assistance, while the appeal for help was loudest.

There is a striking parallel to be found in Circus Solly's case with that of the boy manager, for it was Bill Bernhardt's distress signal in 1909, when first base was in wretched hands, that persuaded Schwartz to give up a swell job with the Diamond Rubber people and hike to Nashville to help out his old friend he had known back with the Cleveland Naps, when Bernhard was one of the kingpin slabbers of the big show. It's a hoary narrative, but it only goes to prove the infernal way history has of "working in double."

Doesn't Appear To Be "In".

Maybe something better could have happened to the Vols than the acquisition of Hofman, but nobody can make the fans in this town believe that, and they are not forgetting that it was for the sake of "Auld Lang Syne" that Artie came, and Schwartz could not have built a greater monument in the fans' hearts in any other fashion than by landing this "ex-major leaguer who is going back."

If Artie is on his way, nobody can see the end of the passage with a pair of field glasses, and there is quite a swarm of youngsters coming who will have to travel at a mighty hefty clip before they will meet Hofman going out.

Schwartz benched himself when Artie lighted in camp, and it was the ex-Cub's tip to the boy leader that he warm the bench a while until he could get together the nerves that were shattered by the sickening plunge which the Vols have taken cellarways.

He Was Chance's Understudy.

The first station was no stranger to Artie, for when he was at the top of his stride he was Frank Chance's understudy with the Cubs, and although the big fellow had not seen a baseball for two weeks, jumped right into the game and took care of everything like a veteran.

Hofman brought to the Vols the stuff they have been so sadly in need of—ginger—and he wasn't stingy about handing it around. The Schwartzmen have been playing in a totally demoralized fashion. They have gone out with an idea that no matter who was in the box, they were doomed to lose, and with their leader unable either to hit or field, not a man on the club has been able to play anything like his best.

BALDWIN MATCHED TO BATTLE LEACH CROSS

LOS ANGELES, July 12.—Matty Baldwin and Leach Cross have been matched for a 20-round bout at Vernon Arena on July 29 by Promoter McCarey. Arrangements for the the match were made by wire and closed in record time. Sam Wallach, the dentist's manager, wired to McCarey from San Francisco accepting terms for the fight, and will return here with Cross on Sunday and take possession of Jack Doyle's camp at Vernon on Tuesday.

Kid Williams and Charley Ledoux, the bantams scheduled for twenty rounds at Vernon on Tuesday night, made a short day of it in the training camps to-day, but to-morrow's workout will be a strenuous one and both boys will go the limit for the benefit of the usual Sunday crowd. The little fellows are in fine shape.

CROSS AND SHERIDAN MAY CLASH AT KANSAS CITY

CHICAGO, July 12.—Leach Cross, the New York dentist-fighter, who has gained the position of contender for the lightweight championship through his knockouts of Joe Mandot and Bud Anderson will have for his next opponent a Chicago fighter, if arrangements under way do not go awry.

Cross practically has agreed to terms for a ten-round bout with Mickey Sheridan to be staked at Kansas City next month. Fred Gilmore, manager of Sheridan, yesterday received a telegram from Cross' manager, who is at Los Angeles, stating that everything was o. k. for the match if held the early part of next month.

The Kansas City promoters are anxious to hold the fight at the American Association baseball park either on August 2 or August 9, but it is understood there is some hitch over the plan.

CHAPPELLE PICKED TO WIN BIG EVENT AT NEW YORK

NEWYORK, July 12.—Arthur Chappelle, the motorcycle speed demon, was to-day picked to win the sweepstakes handicap at the Brighton Beach motordrome to-night. In a sensational practice drive of nine miles yesterday Chappelle covered the distance in 5 minutes 59 1-5 seconds. This beats the record of 6:01 2-5 set by Eddie Hasha last year. Chappelle will give the field a handicap of two and one-quarter laps.

How Chance Tamed Gotham Fans

Magnetism or Hypnotism Aids

By Bill Bailey.

CHICAGO, July 12.—If any of these modern colleges happens to be seeking a man to teach that valuable art of personal magnetism we know the man they are seeking.

Who? Why, Frank Chance.

A ball field a strange place to seek a man to teach that valuable art? Maybe. Again, why not?

Oh, yes, we may be mistaken. It may be downright hypnotism that this fellow possesses.

Naturally those few words were but the introduction.

* * *

HERE is the story:

Why are those New York fans so tolerant with Chance? Remember what happened to Wolverton? Remember what they said about Chase when he was bossing the team? Remember what happened to Clark Griffith when he made several ineffectual attempts to capture a pennant? There may have been mean words in the dictionary that were not heaped, hurled and tossed at the heads of these men. I say there may have been. But I don't believe there were.

And Chance!

Say, he has a ball club that hasn't won anywhere near one-third of its games. Its percentage is less than .500. Not a peep, not a chirp has come out of the fans at New York.

"Think what a team he had when he came here," they tell you. "You wait."

* * *

FRANK CHANCE and his men are here. Still it is a different Frank Chance who is leading the Highlanders. The fellow the West Siders knew so well was a worrying Frank Chance. If the West Siders had lost as many ball games in a season as those Highlanders already have put on the losing side of the ledger it's terrible to think what would have become of Chance.

Then he worried. If his team developed a losing streak, and two losses in succession was a losing streak in those days, he didn't sleep.

And now?

He has developed into a philosopher. "I can't worry like I used to," he said. "I'm fighting just as hard to win as I ever did. But no more of the sleepless nights for me. I couldn't and stick in the game."

* * *

IT may be that the New York fans realize that Chance had nothing but numbers to work with that has made them so tolerant. But the fact remains that for about the first time in the history of New York they are not howling because they are down in the race. For in New York, you know, they can't understand why anybody should have anything that can lick anything they possess.

* * *

FRANK CHANCE certainly has no warm spot in his heart for the fellows who touted him on Bill Borton. And he certainly has a lot of people in this city who should ask him for forgiveness.

"Can Borton hit?" the P. L. asked of several of his baseball friends about here when he was in Chicago on the last trip.

"Can he hit?" was the comeback. "Say, he simply can murder the ball. He just won five games for the White Sox in Detroit. He just about won that city series last fall, as you well know. Say, if there is one thing he can do, it is to hit. He may be a bit shy on the pep and the ginger. Maybe he can't get around those bases as fast as Rollie Zeider. But hit? Say, if there were nine Bortons on an opposing team half the pitchers would go to digging sewers."

And hitting was the one thing that Borton didn't do.

Oh, yes, there are a lot of alleged baseball men in Chicago who will have a tough time explaining to this same Chance.

* * *

AT that Chance doesn't figure that the White Sox can afford to lie back and give him the merry ha-ha because Borton didn't develop into a hero in New York. For the P. L. is certain that he hooked one man from the South Side aggregation who will develop into a hummer. Gossett, the catcher, is the lad.

"There is a lad who will develop into a star," said the P. L. "I look to see him ranked as one of the greatest catchers in the league in a little while. And he cost only the waiver price."

Chance naturally isn't admitting that he received the worst of the Chase-Zeider-Borton deal. But if he did he would still figure his trading percentage was .500. Because he thinks he picked up a mighty valuable youngster in this same Gossett.

EMPIRE LEAGUE NOTES

Something that rarely happens in a ball game happened in Waycross this week in one of the Waycross-Cordele games. All assists credited to Cordele went to two players, the pitcher and catcher. Seven were made, and the catcher took four of them.

* * *

Seigfried, of Brunswick, is one of the best all-round players in the league. He is just now playing in the outfield, but is a dandy first baseman and plays short like a veteran. His batting is splendid.

* * *

"Babe" Wilder continues his record of winning almost every game he pitches. It is reported that he will go to the Savannah team at the close of this season, but Jacksonville has been after him and may land him. Wilder is the best pitcher Cordele has and is going good now.

* * *

Valdosta turned around, after an apparent slump, and walloped the Shrimp Chasers to perfection. Jordan will not tolerate indifferent playing, even if his team has won the first season rag.

* * *

Shortstop Murphy, a league leader at bat and a sensational fielder, one of the best Thomasville has, is out of the game with a sprained ankle.

* * *

Clancy, of West Virginia, who came South to play with Brunswick, is getting a try-out in Waycross. He fields fairly well, but is a little weak at bat.

* * *

Of all ball players, one always to be depended upon to act square and be as much a gentleman on the diamond as off, is Reagan, the clever manager for Cordele.

Derrick, one of the new umpires, has shown in just a few games that beefing won't go in games at which he officiates. He chased Manager Moran, of the Brunswick team, from the Valdosta grounds for beefing, and before that episode slapped a fine on Manager Jordan, of the Valdosta team.

* * *

Wild Bill Clark, the Waycross manager, has a rumabout that he chases around in when not playing baseball. His friends claim that it is merely a question of time before Bill has his auto running bases.

* * *

That the schedule for the next Empire season will be arranged entirely different from the one used this year is certain. Hardly any team in the league is satisfied the way they are having to play, and the directors, at the end of the season, are going to see to it that a better schedule is prepared for 1914.

* * *

So far, the Empire has escaped any serious injuries to ball players. All teams have had players out for a few days because of minor hurts, but nothing serious to date.

* * *

Cordele's hard-hitting left fielder, Wassen, continues to swat the ball. He has had but a few off days and seems to be able to hit the league's best.

* * *

Americus seems to be getting a little of the hard luck that has been haunting most of the teams since the first of the month. Its team is playing well nearly every day, but fails to win the majority of games. But Americus has got to be considered by whatever team wins the pennant—that is certain.

BOXING
News of the Ring Game

Gunboat Smith, claimant of the world's heavyweight title, has challenged Georges Carpenter, the tough French champion of Europe, to a 20-round contest for $5,000 a side in England, France or Belgium. If Carpentier agrees, the match probably will be arranged to take place during the fall.

* * *

When it is taken into consideration that Frank Klaus, middleweight, recently stopped Carpentier, the New York heavyweight should find little trouble in putting the foreigner away in quick order. Carpentier would have everything to gain and nothing to lose in such a match.

* * *

Jess Willard is another scrapper who has his eyes peeled on a Smith match. Tom Jones' protege is taking on all the big hopes in 4-round bouts on the coast and is showing improved form. If Smith refuses to meet Willard, Jones says he will try to sign his boxer for a Pelky set-to.

* * *

Knockout Brown, the Chicago middleweight, will make his next fight against Frank Klaus, at Butte, Mont. Tommy Walsh, who is now handling Brown's affairs, wired the Butte promoters his acceptance for the mill yesterday. The pair will probably meet on Labor Day.

* * *

Kid Duke, local bantamweight, wishes to announce that he is ready to take on any of the local boys seeking fame in the padded arena. Duke aims his challenge at Young, Pries and Britt. The kid says he will accommodate either of the boys with a neat side bet.

* * *

Kid Young, the local newsboy boxer, says he is getting tired of reading challenges from various boys in the city. "Let them post their money and I will sign to meet any of them," wails the little featherweight. Several boys have been sending in their defis daily, but when the Kid asks them to put up, they usually beat it to the tall timbers.

* * *

Johnny Coulon, bantamweight champion, left a Chicago hospital the other day weighing 115 pounds, which is 10 pounds more than he weighed a week ago when he entered the institution to be treated for stomach trouble. Despite his rapid improvement in health, it is doubtful whether he will be able to box for some time.

* * *

"Wildcat" Ferns and Young Denny have been re-matched to box at New Orleans. The pair met in the Pelican City on Labor Day and Ferns was awarded the verdict after ten rounds of fierce fighting. The Denny admirers, however, were not satisfied with the decision, and the promoters decided to send them over the 20-round route on August 13.

* * *

Tom McCarey is still working on a Ritchie-Cross match for Labor Day. Cross has already consented to the bout, but the champion is waiting to hear from several other promoters, who are after his services. New Orleans wants Willie to box Britton, while Vancouver is after a Ritchie-Welsh mill.

* * *

Coast fans have made Kid Williams a 2 to 1 favorite over Charley Ledoux. The two bantamweights clash in a 20-round mill in Tom McCarey's arena at Los Angeles on July 15.

* * *

The Johnny Dundee-Jack White match, scheduled to take place on the coast July 29, may not take place. Dundee is holding out for a larger guarantee than the promoters are willing to give for such a scrap. If Dundee refuses to meet White, George Kirkwood or Tommy Dixon may be substituted.

* * *

Terry Nelson, local lightweight, is waiting to hear from Dayton, Ohio, regarding a match there. Terry is trying to get on with either Jimmy Murphy, Jimmy Traverse or Danny Goodman. Nelson is surely entitled to a match with some good 133-pounder. He is a willing mixer and always gives the fans a run for their money.

* * *

Packey McFarland gave exhibition bouts at the Joliet, Ill., prison the other day for the entertainment of the prisoners. He boxed Kid Mack, of Joliet, and other local boys. Warden Allen is a friend of McFarland.

HARRIS TO MEET ALRICK IN TENNIS TITLE MATCH

LITHCHFIELD, CONN., July 12.—F. H. Harris, of Brattleboro, Vt., will meet Alrick H. Man, Jr., of Richmond Hill, N. Y., for the State tennis title and cup here this afternoon. Harris yesterday defeated W. S. Cushing, of Simsbury, in the final of the State tennis tournament. Man won the New England championship from Harris in the tournament at Hartford last month.

YACHTING.

Becalmed, becalmed, all, all becalmed,
Becalmed on a wide, wide bay,
Our souls were tried when the breezes died,
For we moved not either way.

We sat and mourned for the west wind scorned
To hand us a single breath,
And, what was worst, we were all athirst,
And it felt like the pangs of death.

The wind may howl and the sea may growl,
And the waves be high and strong,
But we scorn the worst when we have no thirst
And we sing a gladsome song.

But worst of all, when there is no squall,
Nor even a breath of air,
And the deck is dry as a desert sky,
Nor even a bottle there.

Becalmed, becalmed, all, all becalmed,
Four miles from the nearest land!
And there we lay for half a day
With an opener in our hand.

Yachts are deceiving. We asked the chauffeur what was concealed beneath the cellar door and he answered: "Life savers." Opening the door and looking into the basement we saw nothing but those things that you wrap around yourself when the boat sinks. One learns only by experience.

We still are a novice as far as things nautical are concerned, but we are forced to admit that we like it as far as we drank.

August Belmont has insured his noble steed, Tracery, for $150,000 for fear of another suffragette rough house. If August were a regular sportsman he would train his steed for the jumps and hold a suffragette steeplechase.

A statistician informs us that the Cardinals accepted 206 chances without an error. Aside from the fact that they lost a flock of games in the meantime it was great baseball.

One is not surprised to read that Bud Anderson was doped when he fought Leach Cross. A flock of knuckles injected at the right spot is quite an effective anesthetic.

Reading a headline, one observes that the "Sox welcome Frank Chance." Looking over the box score one is led to believe it.

SPEAKING OF WORK.

Were I to labor sixteen hours a day,
Without a pause, without a gasp of air,
I would not grieve my fair young life away,
But gladly do my share.

'Twould only make me smile, for I have seen
The hardest working thing this side the grave—

JOHNSON IS IN ENGLAND, BUT CAN'T FIGHT THERE

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, July 12.—Jack Johnson, the negro pugilist who fled from Chicago after being convicted of white slavery, arrived here to-day from Paris. Johnson wants to arrange a short bout with some good English heavyweight, preferably Bombardier Wells. Any match that Johnson makes, however, probably will have to be fought on the Continent, for the English authorities will not allow him to box in this country.

After his arrival to-day Johnson visited the newspaper offices in Fleet street and denied stories about him which had been cabled from the United States.

COULON ORDERED TO TAKE LONG REST IN COLORADO

CHICAGO, July 12.—Johnny Coulon, the bantam champion, announced that he probably would not fight again before Thanksgiving Day. Coulon was in the Presbyterian Hospital for ten days, during which time Bertram W. Sippy, a specialist on stomach troubles, gave the little fighter a careful examination. The doctor has ordered the champion to take a long rest in Colorado.

Coulon left the hospital day before yesterday and already is making preparations for the Colorado trip. He expects to leave for the West some time next week.

STARS' CHANCES IN GOLF MEETS RUINED BY RAIN

By Chick Evans.

THERE is an opinion deeply rooted in the minds of most Americans that it rains three-fourths of the time in Great Britain, and that in consequence, the British golfer is an amphibious creature. I can not testify to the truth of this belief because I visited Britain in a dry year, but a friend, who spent several months in the British Isles, assures me that, although it rained every day while he was there, the British rain was not so wet as the American variety. Perhaps my friend's delusion springs from the fact that almost every clubhouse in Great Britain has a drying room where golfers may hang their rain-soaked clothing, while such a convenience is almost unknown in America, the New Edgewater being the only American club that, as far as I know, has made such provision for its members.

Playing golf in the rain is a good deal like jumping into a cold tub—there is always hesitation in the beginning, but the act itself is never regretted, for the real golfer can not let a little thing like the rain interfere with his game. When a man has journeyed all the way out to some country club he is almost sure to play, rain or shine, and I am confident that playing in the rain does not injure any one physically. It is attended, however, with many inconveniences, and to find enjoyment, the player must be well prepared for the weather. He needs an old pair of shoes and other wearing apparel that can be easily dried and not easily injured. But the best of rainy-day clothes are usually too many and too binding for good golf, and raincoats are an abomination. I well remember that W. C. Fownes, Jr., once spent a great deal of valuable time trying to invent one suited to the needs of the golfer.

Moisture Ruins Clubs.

Personally, I dislike to play in the rain; I do not like to get my clothes wet, and most of all, I detect the effect of moisture upon my clubs. The shafts are always heavily stained, so that they may withstand the weather, but water warps wood, and I do hate to draw a wooden club from my bag on a rainy day. Then again, the best grips are supposed to be of oiled and treated leather, and moisture affects them most unfavorably. So the golfer carries towels, because wet hands and wet grips are a distinctly disagreeable combination. Another rainy day necessity is the hooded golf bag.

Of course, no golfer expects to play his best on a rainy day, but in all big tournaments, or indeed any competition, golfers must play, regardless of the weather. The luck of the condition is, however, more deeply felt in a qualification round. Perhaps in the morning the course may have been too fast for the players; then, between 1 and 2, a heavy shower comes up, catching those who must go out then; at 2 the rain ceases and the latter players start forth under most favorable conditions, for the rain has softened the greens and made the balls more manageable. This is a chance of the game that affects almost every score with unequal conditions.

Deluge Has Spoiled Tournaments.

Glen View, for a long time, had an unfortunate reputation for rainy tournaments, big events there being almost invariably attended by terrific downpours. In the National of 1904, the river overflowed the second nine holes, and only the first nine were playable in the finals. None of the Western players can forget the deluge at Denver, and I also recall vividly a four-day tournament at Chicago Golf when it rained practically during the whole competition.

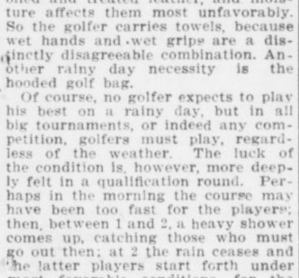
These incidents merely teach us as old fables say, that the real golfer must be a bit of a philosopher. He accepts the weather cheerily and makes the best of it.

MANY MANAGERS ON COAST IN INTEREST OF BOXERS

LOS ANGELES, CAL., July 12.—With six managers on the ground anxious to arrange matches for their boxers, ther is no danger that Promoter McCarey will not be able to keep his fight program filled.

Among those who are here in the interest of high class boys are Joe Levy, manager of Joe Rivers and Jack White; Sam Wallach, manager of Leach and Phil Cross; Frank Galvin, manager of Charley Ledoux; Sam Harris, manager of Kid Williams; Scotty Monteith, manager of Johnny Dundee, and Dick Donald, manager of Bud Anderson.

Good Time Now For Blood Health



Blood Disorders Gone to Stay.

A few doses of that wonderful blood purifier, S. S. S., will start activities in the cellular tissues of the body and soon show decided changes in the skin. The skin is but a fine network of tiny blood vessels, and the specific action of S. S. S. is declared to be a pronounced stimulation of the activity of these cells. Certain it is that in a surprisingly short time any skin eruption shows a most remarkable change; it begins to dry up; the skin scales off in tiny flecks, and soon a layer of clear, healthy and firm tissue results.

The reason for this is in the peculiar stimulation of S. S. S., which enables the cells in the skin to select from the blood the nutriment it requires for regeneration.

You can obtain S. S. S. at any well stocked drug store, if you insist upon it, but be sure you are not talked into something "just as good."

S. S. S. is prepared by the Swift Specific Company, 180 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga. Write for their illustrated book on skin diseases.

MEET AT DROME GOES OVER TO TUESDAY NIGHT

THE Motordrome meet set for decision last night is off until Tuesday night. The rain knocked it out last night and the managers, of which there are three, all with varying views on all subjects, decided to postpone it until Tuesday.

In the face of the announcement by Noon Hudson, manager of the local track, and Jack Prince, manager of the Dixie Circuit, that all meets postponed one night would go over to the next, the public would have had a kick coming to-day if the weather had been fair.

However, the rain of the morning knocked out all chance of a meet to-night, and the public will have to be content now to wait until Tuesday night.

GRAND CIRCUIT HORSES MOVE ON TO PITTSBURG

CLEVELAND, OHIO., July 12.—The entire "works" of the Grand Circuit is on the move to-day over to Pittsburg, where the second Grand Circuit meet of the season will be held.

The first one came to a close at North Randall tracks yesterday with four trotting events that brought out a fine quality of sport. Outsiders shared honors with the favorites. The Tavern "Steak," though previously conceded to Dago F., was won by Eulabel, an outsider.

The 2:00 trot went to Jean Arion, although Eve Cord, driven by Geers, had been expected to win easily.

The championship trotting sweepstakes was taken by Anvil, a heavy favorite, because he trotted the two fastest miles of theye ar. The veteran driver, Ed Geers, pushed Anvil around the oval in the remarkably fast time of 2:04 1-4 in the first heat, and came right back in the next and concluding heat with a mark of 2:04 3-4.

Again Hogg Beats Crackers 6-0

Rain May Stop To-day's Game

By Percy H. Whiting.

THE Gulls and the Crackers meet in the final tangle this afternoon—that is, if the weather is even half-way decent. And, for a pleasing change, even if it is Saturday afternoon, the game will be called at the usual time and will go to a decision.

The fates forbid that it be another knock-out.

One fan sized up yesterday's game pretty well when he said:

"Well, that's my idea of a WHITE-WASH."

It was all of that and more besides.

The Gulls won 6 to 0, and they did it with such ease that they made the Crackers look like the tail-enders of a Class D league.

* * *

IT'S a hard matter not to acquire a grouch over a game like that. No matter how one attempts to wax flippant and facetious, the waxing isn't any good at all.

It was a gloomy contest.

At that, there were fielding spots of amazing brilliancy.

Wally Smith fielded like a world's champion. Bisland, despite two errors, almost evened up by some brilliant work. Stock had a brilliant day, and he did it in spite of the fact that Chapman nearly took his head off with a batted ball, which would have taken the "pep" out of an ordinary player.

Hogg pitched another grand game for Mobile.

The last time he was here he beat Atlanta 6 to 0.

Yesterday he won, 6 to 0.

However, he must be getting better, for the last time he allowed six hits, while this time, he gave up only three.

And it was an awful day for Atlanta's records, for Chapman made two out of the three hits, while the big batting stars, Long, Welchonce and Smith, went hitless.

* * *

OF course, it would hurt to be beaten by the Mobile at any time. But it hurts, especially now that the Gulls are crippled and very much weakened.

If the Crackers can't win from them now, what chance have they when the Gulls get back in condition, as they are bound to do soon? This is what the fans are asking themselves, and it's a serious question.

* * *

THE pitching of Dent was a bright feature. After Brady was knocked out Dent took up the burden and carried it well. The Gulls' only run after he went in resulted from a hit and an error.

This chap also made a nice play at the plate when Stock tried to score on what looked like a passed ball. Chapman fielded it and Dent received the throw and tagged Stock out, risking his legs and his neck in doing it. It was a game, clever piece of work.

* * *

ONLY three more games will be played at home after the Gulls depart. The Montgomery team is to be here Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. Then the Crackers beat it away for a long journey.

WILLIE RITCHIE WILLING TO BATTLE JACK BRITTON

SAN FRANCISCO, July 12.—Ritchie says that he never received the offer of Promoter Tortorich, of New Orleans, to box Britton for a $20,000 purse, though such an offer had been made through the press.

Regarding such a bout in September, Ritchie says that Tortorich would be treated the same as the other promoters and if he hands in the highest bid he will gladly box in New Orleans. If he does so, Jack Britton, who is a heavy lightweight, will have to make 133 pounds ringside.

Willie is confident that he can make this weight and be at his best. When Ritchie and Britton boxed four rounds in this city they milled at catch weights.

Study to Know the Profitable From the Unprofitable Hen

Follow Advice and Eliminate the Drones From Your Flock.

It seems to me we can not overestimate the importance of finding out whether our hens are paying a good profit or not; and which ones are the drones and cutting down the profit. The only way to do this is to keep a record. Under present conditions, when almost everything that goes to help produce a dozen eggs, comes the necessity for stricter economy and the knowing of what it takes to produce the eggs. We must turn over a new leaf and open an account with the hens. We must charge them with what they consume, and at the same time give them credit for all eggs laid at the market price, whether they are sold or consumed by the family. It is not much work, if you but have a little account book in which to keep it. Five minutes a day will do it. It may pay you to go to the little extra trouble in ascertaining just where you stand.

The owner who has, by the use of the trap-nest, found out the egg-producing abilities of his flock, has taken the first step toward separating the unprofitable hen from the profitable one, a thing that every one who keeps hens should be able to tell or know.

We are often asked the question as to what constitutes a profitable hen? It is one that will pay for her feed, interest on the investment of roosting house, labor taken to care for her, and a profit besides. Of course, the cost of feeding a hen will vary quite a little, owing to the different sections of the country in which it is kept. Feed is quite a little cheaper in some places than others. It is but little trouble to count the cost of feeding ten or twenty hens. If you buy the feed, it is easily put down. If you are raising your own feed, simply measure out a barrel or two of it, putting down the price it is worth, then go to work feeding it.

Farmers are beginning to appreciate the worth of the really laying hen. They are beginning to find out that it does not pay to even harbor one that is too old to lay well or that never did lay much. All such should be cut right out of the game. And there is no way so good to determine that fact as by the trap-nest and the little record book.

With the ever and rapidly-increasing values of farm lands it is but natural that the farmer should look about him for some plan by which he can increase his income without greatly increasing his farm expenses, or investing in more land to do it with. The farmer has this very factor in the hen, if she is a good one. And there are good ones if we will but take the trouble to get acquainted with her. There are but few farms in the country but what have from one to three acres of land going to waste, or rather that are not being utilized. This is about the house and outbuildings. If this could be fenced and subdivided and a lot of good hens located therein it would soon begin to give revenue rather than be an expense to keep free from weeds and trash. I do not think it advisable for the farmer to try to run all to poultry, but just a hint to them that may help them to raise money for the taxes and various odds and ends that take the cash, leaving the regular farm crops in tact for other purposes. Tests show us that hens have made a record of 200 eggs per year; some have done even better than that, but a good many have done that well. Now it is an old saying that what has been done can be done again, so let us not fool away our time keeping hens that will only give us the old farm average of 75 eggs per year. That kind just about pays for its keep, so that if we get rid of them and keep the 150 to 200-egg kind then we get the profit that is due us. A flock of good, thoroughbred hens, say 300, should give us a profit of $400 to $500. Of course, you read of people making $500 from ten hens and a rooster, but that is from real fancy stock in which there is all kinds of possibilities, but on the other hand, there is the chance that you will not make anything from them. We have reference to the commercial kind, well managed; but it can not be done with the hit-or-miss scrub kind. They are too much like the Irishman's flea, you get your finger on them and they are not there.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Wide Range Is Shown In Realty Transfers

Announcements Include $85,750 Exchange, Sales of Land Lots in Fulton and DeKalb, Peachtree Buys.

An exchange involving 42 North Side city lots, a 1,750-acre farm in South Georgia and $85,750 in money, the purchase of 206 1-4 acres in North Fulton County and 203 acres in DeKalb, a transfer of business property at Buckhead and announcement of a $25,000 building on South Forsyth Street featured Friday's real estate news.

John H. Maddox, of the Smith & Ewing real estate agency, effected an exchange of properties between Dr. Joel T. Daves, of that agency, and George L. Patterson, of Valdosta, whereby the former gave 42 residence lots, beginning at the southeast corner of State and West Tenth Streets, and valued at $42,000, for a 1,750-acre farm in Lowndes County, valued at $43,700, or $25 an acre, and paid the differences, $1,750, in cash.

The North Side lots comprise about four blocks and front on Tenth, Eighth and State Streets, Peachtree Place and Ridge Avenue. Mr. Patterson has placed them with Mr. Maddox for resale, and Dr. Daves will cut his South Georgia farm into 100-acre tracts and offer them to immigrants. The sale indicates that South Georgians are willing to trust Atlanta real estate investments, and that, on the other hand, Atlantans recognize the opportunity in South Georgia colonization.

North Fulton Acreage Bought.

C. C. Foster and S. Y. Stribling, of Cobb County, and G. B. Thomason, of Jeff Davis, have sold to Morris Brandon and Ben J. Conyers three separate acreage tracts, aggregating 206 1-2 acres, in the upper portion of North Fulton County, north of Oak Grove, for $10,312, or at the rate of $50 an acre. This is in land lots 86 and 127 of the Seventeenth District, and is known as lots 1, 2 and 3 of the William E. Brightwell subdivision. A parcel 14 by 16 feet in lot 1 was reserved.

DeKalb Acreage Transfer.

Another large acreage deal has been consummated. Mrs. S. E. L. Ivey, of DeKalb, has sold to M. W. Reid and others, executors of the estate of the late J. D. Kilpatrick, 40 acres on the east side of land lot 18, Seventeenth District, and also 40 acres in DeKalb County; and W. T. Ivey, of DeKalb, has sold to same 23 acres in land lot 15, on the north line of said land lot 799 feet west of the east line thereof, and 54 acres in the southeast corner of land lot 16, and 46 acres in DeKalb County.

The total is 203 acres. That conveyed by Mrs. Ivey was sold for $3,800, and that by Mr. Ivey, $5,800.

Buckhead Transfer.

John G. Burckhardt has conveyed to B. F. and A. C. Burdett the triangle at the intersection of the Peachtree and Roswell Roads, for $15,000. The transaction was handled by George P. Moore and is understood to have been in the nature of a swap.

The frontage on Peachtree is 152 feet, on Roswell Road 150 and the base line is 72. Mr. Burckhardt bought this some months ago from Mrs. Lena Swift Huntley for about $12,000.

To Erect $25,000 Building.

There will be no nine-story business building for the present on the property of the D. Greenfield estate on South Forsyth Street, between Mitchell and Hunter Streets. A change of plans calls for a one-story and basement building to cost $25,000. Permit to build was issued Friday by Building Inspector Ed R. Hays.

The building has a foundation for nine stories, however, and it is probable that the estate will add to it later. Moise DeLeon is the contractor.

Interesting Loan Deed.

Joseph Loewus has given a loan deed to the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Company of Massachusetts for $37,500, borrowed on the Bass Dry Goods Company property at 18 West Mitchell Street, 48 1-2x140 feet. The Bass concern adjoins the McCroskey property at the northwest corner and was bought from the D. Greenfield estate some months ago by Mr. Loewus.

Lot Sales Total $9,000.

Fitzhugh Knox has announced the sale of six residence lots in his subdivision on South Moreland Avenue at an aggregate of $9,000. These sales have taken place since Mr. Knox started his fourteen bungalows in this section. The subdivision originally contained 41 lots, all but five of which have been sold.

Morris Brandon Sells.

J. B. Thompson has bought from Morris Brandon and others through the Smith & Ewing Real Estate Agency the northeast corner of Pine and Lovejoy Streets for $1,300 cash.

To Sell at Courthouse.

The Greene Realty Company will sell before the courthouse door Tuesday, August 5, the southwest corner of East Fair and Fraser Streets, 68 by 90 feet, for the estate of the late Dominico Gussi. The terms will be half cash and one and two years.

Not in Druid Hills.

In an account Thursday of the sale of 510 Briarcliff Road it was stated that this property was in Druid Hills. Briarcliff Road is in the Druid Hills section, but not in Druid Hills proper.

Buy on Peachtree.

Mrs. R. G. Warner has given E. A. Bancker, Jr., a warranty deed on a Peachtree property 162 feet north of Sixteenth Street for $10,500, 50 by 290 feet, this being lot 11, block 3, of Ansley Park, and Mr. Bancker has placed a $10,000 loan on it through the Home Life Insurance Company of New York. The place is described as 1096 Peachtree.

Interest in Electric Line.

A meeting of people interested in the proposed electric trunk line from Anderson, S. C., to Atlanta is expected to be called soon by the officials of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce, which body has received overtures from the Anderson Chamber. This road would connect up Atlanta with Greensboro, Winston-Salem, Anderson and Norfolk, if the plans of the Duke interests and the Anderson officials are carried out.

Real estate men are watching this development because of its possibilities in opening up new territory to the north of Atlanta and bringing in settlers from the other States.

Finish Peachtree in Three Weeks.

Repairs to Peachtree will be completed within three weeks, according to a statement of Shelby Smith, chairman of the Board of County Commissioners. The convicts have reached Peachtree Creek on their southward tour from Buckhead and have turned back to complete that part of the job. After finishing both sides they will begin at Peachtree Creek and work southward.

Chairman Smith declared that the machines now being used are capable of doing the work of 100 men, and that another labor-saving device, in the shape of a pulverizer, had been bought to break up the soil and road material. Hand labor is now being employed to do the pulverizing, and the work is necessarily slow.

Completing Healey Steel.

United States flags have been run up on the steel frame of the Healey Building, denoting that the first girders of the sixteenth and last above-ground story have been installed. This is a favorite performance among construction gangs—to hold an informal celebration when the last floor is reached.

Not only is the Healey Building going up fast in steel, but Stone Mountain granite has made its appearance at the base and soon will rise above the fences that inclose the structure. It will go 15 feet, where terra cotta will begin. Two stories are under ground.

William T. Healey, the owner, declares that although the building was two months late in starting, he is satisfied with the progress made.

Hurt Building's Arcade.

The unique entrance arcade of the Hurt Building is rapidly taking place. This is to be two stories high and is located in the apex of the triangular lot on which the structure stands, at the junction of Edgewood Avenue and Exchange Place. Handsome stone slabs are being put in place around the sides of the arcade. As for the rest of the building, it is progressing nicely. The exterior is almost completed, and soon the workmen will go inside to put on finishing touches.

Although the Hurt Building is not due to be opened before October 1, it is declared that leases have been signed for most of the space and that there will be no trouble filling the structure. The same is true of the Healey Building, which will not be completed until some time after January 1, 1914.

Some Day Babies Will Be Born Wise.

In Ages to Come Human Beings at Birth Will Know More Than Any Man Knows Now.

(Copyright, 1913.)

The most helpless and ignorant thing in the world is a new-born human being.

The most independent and wise thing in the world—in proportion to its ability—is a new-born mud wasp, or newly fledged sparrow.

That is because the human being is just in the beginning of its development, whereas the mud wasp, the ant and other insects have reached the highest development of which they are capable.

The saddest thing in the education of human beings is the fact that each child must begin at the beginning and learn everything for itself.

Each little baby learns to walk, learns to avoid the fire, learns to talk. The mind starts its life as a blank page, and everything must be written upon it. The child can not even learn by hearing from the father and mother of their mistakes. Each child must make its own mistakes, and can be taught only by experience.

But will that last forever?

When you see the lower forms of animal life giving birth to creatures fully equipped and independent, can you not believe that when the human race, practically just born on this planet, shall have lived here for a few hundreds of thousands or millions of years, that the human child will be born with all the material knowledge stored away, and have no work to do except the discovering of unknown truths, working in new fields?

We base this editorial upon an article by Sir William Ramsay, in the current number of Hearst's Magazine. We advise intelligent, thoughtful readers to get the magazine this month and every month. It is published for those who are interested in realities, those who are capable of thought.

In the article referred to, Sir William Ramsay describes both in the animal world and among human beings indications of a certain power of mind, of knowledge born in the newly created animal, apart from all teaching or experience.

He says, concerning the inhabitants of Burmah:

"Cases are known where a child, born of parents living in a village not their own, to which they had migrated, was able to recognize people, and to 'remember' events which had taken place in the native village of his parents, of which he could have had no direct knowledge. Is it possible that a memory for particular events is sometimes inherited?"

Then he says, of certain observations made upon swallows:

"Their nest was under the eaves; and for long, the parents fed and attended to their young brood. The day arrived for them to leave their nest; and without any practice, each fledgling dropped out of the nest, flew backward and forward, and without the least hesitation entered the nest, just like an old bird. The wonderful power of control of muscles, of guiding motion, and of correlation of brain and eye must have lain in the germ of these birds until the time for their use arrived. Examples of the sort might be given by the thousand; although the one mentioned is perhaps particularly striking."

It is extremely likely that the little boy of Burmah, a child bred for ages along the same limited line of thought, should have certain ideas and associations before birth strongly impressed upon it, and that these should be transmitted and appear in the child without any teaching.

There is no doubt that the children of savages recognize of their own accord the danger in poisonous reptiles and other animals to which the civilized child would be indifferent, except after the experience of a bite.

In the animal world the fact that the brain of the new animal is born with exact, wonderful knowledge is not disputed. And that fact is of intense interest to human beings who hope that the human race itself may develop one day in such a way as to have the children born with a ready-made education in excess of that which they now possess after years of schooling.

Suppose that a child could come into this world wise in proportion to its possibilities, as does the child of the mud wasp.

No baby mud wasp ever saw its own mother. The eggs are laid, and the mother who lays the eggs dies before they hatch.

Each new mud wasp begins its career as did Adam in the Garden of Eden, with nobody back of him so far as he knows.

When the mud wasp is ready she selects a good place to lay her eggs. Then she goes off and selects a fat caterpillar.

She intends that the caterpillar shall feed her young wasps when the latter hatch out. She puts that caterpillar beside the eggs that she has laid, covers up the eggs and the caterpillar, and goes away, leaving food for the young, unborn wasps, as some human mother might go out for a day's work leaving bread and butter on the table and saying, "Johnny, eat that when you get hungry."

The wonderful thing is that the mother wasp does not KILL the caterpillar. If she killed it, it would be decayed and useless by the time the young wasps arrived.

The mother wasp seizes the caterpillar and carefully stings it just back of the head, between two of the little rings that form the caterpillar's body.

This stuns the caterpillar, makes it impossible for it to move or struggle, but does not kill it.

And while the wasp eggs are hatching, the caterpillar, rendered helpless, but not killed by the poison, lies there ALIVE waiting for the little wasps to hatch out and eat it.

Presently they hatch, they eat it, and scatter.

The wonderful thing is that each of these wasps, never having seen the thing done, never having had lessons from its mother, or from any school-teacher, goes out when the time comes, lays her eggs, finds a fat caterpillar, stings it exactly in the same scientific way, and puts it away with the eggs, never having been told how to do it.

What a fine thing it would be for the children of human beings if they could be born with knowledge of that kind. Some of them are born WITH UNUSUAL KNOWLEDGE.

Some have musical power, which means that the brain before birth developed knowledge of harmony.

Some children can compose music correctly when they are almost too young to read.

Other children have a phenomenal mathematical faculty and can do "sums" that would puzzle their elders.

So far, man's brain is really too big for his body.

He was a timid, frightened monkey-man, running away from everything, developing his brain rapidly in order to make up for physical weakness. He has been a thinking man only

A Woman Next Door

You Choose Your Friends, She Says, Because You Like Them, and Like Their Kind, Not Because Somebody Else Thinks You Ought to Like Them.

By WINIFRED BLACK.

I READ a brilliant story by a brilliant writer the other day. Did you happen to read it, too?

It was about a woman who lived down "behind the tracks," in a country town. She was a woman who flaunted the streets in a gorgeous hat and expensive gowns. She wore bangle bracelets that jingled and rings that sparkled, and high-heeled slippers and "open-worked" stockings, and the men grinned sheepishly when she passed, and nudged each other, and the women looked the other way and pretended they didn't even see her.

One day the woman from "behind the tracks" bought a house uptown and moved into it—a neat, pretty little house, with a garden and trees, and she dug in the flower beds and watered the lawn and put out hanging baskets, and she went to market in a little checked gingham, and she looked wistfully over the fence when the neighbors went by, but nobody ever spoke to her at all.

One night a baby was taken sick in the neighborhood and the woman from "behind the tracks" saved its life. The next day she stood out on her porch and waited to see the baby's mother go by. And the baby's mother went by—and did not see the woman from "behind the tracks" at all, and the woman from "behind the tracks" went and sold her little new house and the garden and all, and went back "behind the tracks" to live—and all the people in the village pursed their lips and said, "She's gone back—they always do."

What Did She Expect?

Good story, wasn't it, and a good slap at the narrow-minded little mother, who wouldn't make friends with the woman who had saved her baby's life?

We need a few such slaps as that, we women; and yet——

I wonder what the woman from "behind the tracks" expected when she bought the pretty little house and the garden, and went to live among decent people?

Did she think they would get out the band and meet and greet her at the doorsteps, or what?

You choose your friends because you like them, and like their kind—not because somebody else thinks you ought to like them.

If the woman from "behind the tracks" had come to the village from somewhere else and nobody knew a thing about her, do you think the neighbor women would have liked her anyhow? I don't.

She wasn't their kind; never was, never could be. She belonged to a different world, and every time she turned her over-blonded head and every time she opened her good-humored, too easily-pleased mouth, and every time she laughed her rather coarse laugh, she would have told what she was, and no woman of any fineness of perception could have been mistaken in her for a minute.

No, I don't mean what she had been. That isn't what would concern a kindly woman who was trying to decide whether she wanted her for a neighbor or not. I mean what she is. A gingham dress doesn't change the beat of a woman's heart; a garden hoe doesn't turn her from a coarse, easy-going, blunt-hearted person to a gentle, delicate, lovely woman, does it? I don't believe it.

A Lesson From Home.

Once I had a maid—a strange, silent, stubborn girl with blue eyes, so hard that they were like a flint. She had a strange, measured walk and a strange, controlled voice, and she always acted as if she thought some one was watching her.

One day I saw her in a blue print dress, of peculiar cut and shade, and I knew—she was a reformatory girl. I'd seen her before, at the reformatory.

I didn't say a word. I treated her exactly as I had always treated her, but one day she was gone and she left a letter for me. In it she said many things. One of them was this: "You know me; don't you? I believe you do. I thought I could be different, but I can't. You've been good to me, but I ain't happy here. I ain't comfortable, so I'm going," and gone she was, back to the people with whom she was "comfortable," poor thing. Back to the people who were like her and who had her ways and her point of view. I was sorry, but I didn't go after her or try in any way to reach her.

Perhaps I should have—I've often wondered—and yet there were the children. Would it have been exactly safe?"

Selfish—protecting my children at the expense of a poor thing who was trying to make herself over.

Perhaps; but those children are mine. They are my business. It is my affair to keep them safe as long as I can. My own doorstep I must keep clean, and then if I have time and strength I may help my neighbor about her's. That's the way it looks to me. I wonder if I am right or wrong?

What You Really Are.

The poor thing from "behind the tracks" didn't belong in the neat little street uptown. She was no more in place there with her loud laugh and her bleached hair than the timid little woman who lived beside her would be in place in the ranks of a marching army. I don't blame the neighbor women for looking the other way. Honestly, now, I don't.

And the high-heeled, expensive slippers and the open-worked stockings and the gorgeous hats and the flashing rings—she had had all these things while little neighbor turned her blue cashmere and trimmed it with black velvet one year and with cream-colored lace the next, trying to make herself look pretty to the one man she loved. How could the poor thing from "behind the tracks" think she would never have to pay for all that?

After all, though, it isn't what you used to be that counts. It isn't what you would like to be, either; but what you really are, and no change in dress or in housing or anything else will change that. I wish it would. How pitifully I wish it would.

Some Day Babies Will Be Born Wise

for a short time—probably not more than two or three hundred thousand years.

Unlike the ants, the wasps, and the swallows, he has not had time yet to develop knowledge, make it thoroughly his own, and TRANSMIT it.

But there is every reason to believe that in time to come the baby will be born with all the practical knowledge that it requires, just as the young swallow and the young wasps begin life thoroughly educated.

When the time comes, each individual will have a highly interesting career—each being born knowing everything that is generally known, and each being able to devote the whole of life to acquiring NEW knowledge and making original research.

The difference between the mud-wasp and the human baby now is that the wasp is born knowing everything that it needs to know—and never learns anything more.

The baby of the human kind is born knowing nothing, and learns a good deal.

In days to come, when the baby is born with knowledge, there will still be a difference between it and the wasp, the ant, and the swallow, for born with the things that it must know in order to live comfortably, the human baby, unlike its animal associates on the earth, will start out ADDING to human knowledge—which, in turn, by slow processes that go on within us, will be handed down to the new generation.

SAYS WOMEN HEARD CONLEY CONFESSION

WIDOW, LEAVING CITY, EVADES ARREST

CORONER'S WRIT HELD ILLEGAL

Delay in Hearing Will Mean Woman's Commitment to Jail, Attorney Says.

Mrs. Mary Belle Crawford had disappeared Saturday afternoon when officers went to arrest her on a warrant charging her with the murder of her husband, Joshua B. Crawford, in 1909.

Constables R. F. Mauldin and W. W. Rogers went immediately to Mrs. Crawford's home at West Peachtree and Fourteenth streets when the warrant was sworn out. They were informed that she had left the city for Carrollton. To verify this statement, the officers made a thorough search about the city, failing to find the woman. It is not known whether she left before or after she learned that the warrant had been issued.

The warrant was sworn out by C. Z. Crawford, a nephew and beneficiary under the $250,000 will of Joshua Crawford, before Justice of the Peace C. H. Girardeau. The action was taken following close upon a decision by Superior Court Justice Pendleton that a warrant signed by the Coroner of Carroll County was not enforceable in Fulton County. If arrested, Mrs. Crawford was to be brought before Justice Girardeau for commitment trial.

The first warrant charging Mrs. Crawfod with murder was signed by Coroner C. W. Baukin, of Carroll County, who had disinterred the body of Joshua B. Crawford and found evidence of poison. Crawford died in Fulton county March 27, 1909.

Hearing May Be Delayed.

The warrant reached Atlanta Friday, and Sheriff Mangum notified Mrs. Crawford to appear before Justice of the Peace D. K. Johnson Saturday morning, when a hearing would be held as to the authority of the Sheriff to serve the warrant in Fulton County.

Colonel J. S. James, attorney for the heirs, said later that he did not know whether both sides would be ready for the commitment trial, as the prosecution has several material witnesses out of the State.

In the event of delay in the commitment hearing, he said, Justice Girardeau would have no other alternative than to commit Mrs. Crawford to jail.

Says Heirs Are Satisfied.

"It is not really the Crawford heirs who are fighting me," said Mrs. Crawford, "but the rather distant relatives who were not mentioned in any will. I settled with the real heirs according to the will left by Mr. Crawford's first wife. Every one was satisfied.

"I gave Charlie Crawford more than he was even entitled to by the will that was made before I even knew the man I later married. He thanked me for the generosity by later letting the very distant relatives prevail upon him to fight me. He deeded them an interest in his share of the property and filed suit. Since then he has fought me. The closer relatives have never been anything but my best friends."

Widow's Side of Case.

Attorney Arnold, for Mrs. Crawford, issued the following statement Saturday:

"Four years after Crawford's death some of the collateral kinpeople of J. B. Crawford and his first wife, who are seeking to recover this estate, worth perhaps $100,000, from the widow and legatees under Crawford's will, went to Carroll County with their lawyer, J. S. James, and Dr. H. F. Harris, and on some kind of showing which we know nothing of persuaded the Coroner to exhume the body and allow the doctor employed by these relatives to make a postmortem examination. Neither the widow nor any of the other legatees who are defendants had any notice and were not present.

Claims Lungs Shriveled.

"The doctor for these people took various parts of the body of Crawford and made a test for morphine. He claims to have found a trace of

BULGAR CZAR REPORTED SLAIN

Unconfirmed Rumors Tell of Assassination and Military Revolt in Capital.

VIENNA, July 12.—Unconfirmed reports have reached here from Sofia and Bucharest that King Ferdinand of Bulgaria has been assassinated.

The despatches state that a military revolt has broken out in the capital.

SOFIA, July 12.—Scores of men were shot down in the streets here to-day in a general uprising against the Government aroused by the defeat of Bulgarian troops in the field and the passive manner in which Roumania's declaration of war is being treated by the Government.

Mob rule prevails. The palace is surrounded by a throng shouting denunciations and calling upon Czar Ferdinand to abdicate.

A Roumanian army is marching upon Sofia and unless there is a peaceful settlement in the meantime the Bulgarian capital will be occupied next week.

It was not until to-day that the people learned that the Bulgars have been crushed at every point.

Try to Assassinate Daneff.

An attempt was made to assassinate Dr. Daneff, former Premier, as he was on his way to confer with President Guechoff.

Czar Ferdinand is reported to be preparing to evacuate the city.

So far as Servia and Greece are concerned the Balkan war is believed to be over, but Roumanian troops continue to pour into the eastern part of Bulgaria. These troops are fresh and fully equipped for fighting and are eager to clash with the Bulgarians. The shattered Bulgarian forces are no match for the Roumanians.

The Roumanians have occupied the Bulgarian towns of Turtukai, Dobridsh and Baltchik. There is no resistance to the advance of the Roumanian forces.

Bulgars, Routed, Massacre 200 Greeks; Foes Pursue.

ATHENS, July 12.—Greek and Servian forces in Central Macedonia have now joined, making a mighty army of 150,000 men. Two hundred Greeks, both men and women, have been massacred near Serres by the retreating Bulgarians. The Bulgarians have fled from Serres in a panic at the approach of the Greek soldiers.

The powers have advised Greece to make peace with Bulgaria. Mr. Coromilas, the Greek Foreign Minister, received a note from the European states advising Greece to join with Servia in ceasing hostilities. France will probably become the "protector" of Greece, now that the Balkan league has become shattered by war.

Lieut. Becker's Plea For New Trial Fails

NEW YORK, July 12.—Supreme Court Justice Goff to-day denied a motion for a new trial in behalf of former Police Lieutenant Charles Becker, who is in Sing Sing under sentence of death for instigating the murder of Herman Rosenthal a year ago. The motion was based on newly discovered evidence.

Justice Goff based his denial on the ground that the same evidence could have been discovered before the trial.

Boy on Wheel Hits Car and Breaks Arm

Samuel Griggs, a 12-year-old boy living at No. 76 Roy street, was knocked down and his arm broken by a street car in South Broad street, near Hunter, Saturday morning. The boy was riding a bicycle and ran into the car. An ambulance was called and the injured lad taken to a hospital.

Scores of persons saw the accident. A big crowd gathered before the arrival of the ambulance.

Trainmen in Strike Meeting Hunt Room To Find Dictographs

NEW YORK, July 12.—Nearly 1,000 representatives of the men employed on railroads east of Chicago met here to-day to determine definitely whether or not 100,000 trainmen shall strike in support of their demand for more money and a reorganization of working conditions.

To keep news of their deliberations from the managers every corner of the meeting hall was searched for hidden dictographs.

It also was to be decided to-day whether the trainmen would participate in a conference in Washington, at which President Wilson and Secretary of Labor Wilson are to try to establish peace.

Forecasts were made that a strike would be called immediately unless guarantees were given that the Erdman act, providing for arbitration of strikes affecting common carriers, is amended to provide for six instead of three arbitrators.

Found—Monkey; Its Owner Please Hurry

Good news for Tony, the organ grinder!

Joko has been found.

With decorated collar and chain still trailing, a pet monkey that was wont to gather pennies for some Tony in Atlanta was discovered gayly chattering in the trees at the residence of Mrs. H. Winsta, on the Howell Mill road. She called Chief Beavers Saturday and said members of her family had been trying to capture the elusive Simian since Tuesday, but that Jocko had proved his superiority in climbing.

She suggested a posse. The Chief told her he would try to locate the owner and notify him to claim and capture his property.

Revolt Feared in Cuba Over Politics

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

HAVANA, July 12.—A tense political situation exists here in consequence of the assassination of General Riva, chief of the national police.

Reports were current to-day that followers of General Asbert, one of the men indicted for the murder of Riva, would attempt to storm the jail and liberate the prisoners.

Asbert has been deposed as Governor of the Province of Havana by President Menocal.

Troops still patroled the streets today and while there was no outward disorder there was a strong undercurrent of hostility.

Strike Ties Up All Cars at Lexington

LEXINGTON, July 12.—Every street and interurban car in this city is at a standstill to-day, following the inauguration of a general strike for higher wages and shorter working hours.

Long was safe at the first corner when Stock threw his grounder over Robertson's head. Welchonce smashed a neat single to left and Long went to second. Alperman laid down a neat sacrifice, Cavet to Paulet. Both runners advanced a sack. Smith was handed four wide ones filling the bases. Bisland was not equal to the occasion and fanned. On a wild pitch Long tallied and Welchonce took third. Agler also struck out. One hit, one run.

Bacon Halts Plan for Bill-Drafting Bureau

WASHINGTON, July 12.—Senator Bacon, of Georgia, created consternation in the Senate to-day when he declared he was so shocked at the attempt of Senator Owen to have the Senate pass a bill creating a bureau to draft bills upon the request of the President and others that he was completely "knocked off his pins."

The bill was withdrawn for further consideration. It provides for a committee of eight Senators or 25 Representatives.

Senator Bacon referred to the President as the schoolmaster, who, it is proposed, shall do work Senators are supposed to do.

President Off for Washington Sunday

HANOVER, N. H., July 12.—President Wilson to-day played on the Dartmouth College golf links. He does not expect to see them again until late in the summer, when he will come to Cornish for a long vacation. The President played two full rounds with Dr. Grayson.

The Chief Executive returned to Harlakenden House in time for lunch and planned to take an extensive motor trip in the late afternoon. He will start back to Washington tomorrow afternoon.

$150,000,000 Baby Gets Farm as 'Toy'

NEWPORT, R. I., July 12.—Vinson Walsh McLean, the $150,000,000 baby, has a new plaything which his father, Edward McLean, says is the most sensible of all his toys, the total cost of which would foot up nearly as much as the salary of the President of the United States for a year. The new plaything is a farm with an Angora goat on it.

With goats, sheep and chickens, and the negro boy whom his father has picked out as a playmate, the young multimillionaire may grow up Democratic.

Henry in House Asks National Bank Probe

WASHINGTON, July 12.—In a resolution offered by Henry, of Texas, the House to-day was urged to renew the investigation of the Money Trust through the appointment of a special committee of eleven members of the House Banking and Currency Committee.

Under the resolution this committee would have all the inquisitorial powers of the old committee, and in addition the right to examine into the affairs of national banks.

Governor Asks and Secures Acquittal

JACKSON, MISS., July 12.—A. C. Davis was acquitted of the charge of embezzlement in connection with the sale of State property, after Governor Brewer went to the courthouse and asked the State's attorneys to request the judge to sign a verdict for the defendant. The Governor explained that the attorneys had evidence that showed Davis not guilty. The judge did as requested. Governor Brewer said he had no desire to prosecute an innocent man.

Attorneys asked that four other indictments against Davis be filed to await future action, if desired.

Showers Saturday Night and Sunday

"Showers Saturday night and Sunday," was the forecast made by the Atlanta office of the United States Weather Bureau Saturday.

Owing to almost unbroken cloudiness, Saturday was one of the coolest days of the summer. Maximum temperature up to 1 o'clock was 76, and the mercury rise was imperceptible. There was .24 of an inch rainfall in the morning.

Temperatures for the day read: Five, 6, 7 and 8 o'clock, 71; 10 o'clock, 74; 11 o'clock, 75; noon, 76; 1 o'clock, 76.

Pennsylvania Raises A Record Frog Crop

HARRISBURG, PA., July 12.—Bullfrogs by the thousand are being placed in the streams of Pennsylvania by the State Department of Fisheries and it is expected that by the end of July more young frogs will have been distributed than ever before handled by the State's fish propagators.

The propagation of frogs was undertaken a few years ago by the department when the demand for the greenbacked "bullies" became so great on the part of hotels and restaurants.

AFFIDAVITS SUPPORT MINCEY STORY

Attorney Leavitt Declares Tale That Negro Admitted Killing Girl Will Stand Test.

That several negro women overheard Jim Conley when he ran the insurance agent, Mincey, away with the alleged statement that he had just killed a girl and didn't want to kill any one else, and that the affidavits from the women are in the hands of the attorneys for the defense, was stated Saturday by Attorney J. H. Leavitt, who aided in obtaining the sensational affidavit from Mincey.

Attorney Leavitt defended the character of the man who made the affidavit and denied emphatically that Mincey even asked about the money he would receive as a witness, except whether his railroad fare would be paid if he were out of the city.

Explains Dukes' Doubts.

"I am attorney for the American Insurance Company and know its manager, J. S. Dukes, very well," said Leavitt. "He sought to discredit the affidavit very likely because Mincey left his employ to get a better position and he had to do some of the outside work. Mincey is a college graduate and is well known in Atlanta. It will be utterly impossible to shake his evidence.

"I am not employed to represent Frank and aided in getting this affidavit purely because I happened to stumble on to the information. Before I submitted it to Mr. Rosser, Frank's attorney, I spent eleven days investigating the character of the man, questioning the women in the neighborhood and generally verifying the facts. When I turned it over to him I was convinced of its absolute truth and that it would stand the acid test."

Habeas Corpus Fight Fails.

Habeas corpus proceedings to release Newt Lee collapsed in the court of Judge Ellis Saturday morning.

By agreement, Bernard L. Chappell, representing Lee, withdrew his application for a habeas corpus; Solicitor Dorsey promised to present a bill against Lee as a suspect in the Phagan murder case, with the expectation that a "no bill" would be returned. This appeared satisfactory to the attorneys for Lee, as well as to the State.

Luther Z. Rosser, Reuben R. Arnold and Herbert J. Haas, of counsel for Frank, were in court to fight against the appearance of Frank as a witness. William M. Smith represented Conley, one of the witnesses subpenaed.

Conley Gets Third Degree.

Jim Conley underwent a racking third degree late Friday afternoon at the hands of Solicitor General Hugh M. Dorsey and Attorney Frank A. Hooper in an effort to verify or discredit the W. H. Mincey affidavit, in which the negro was charged with confessing to the murder of a girl on the afternoon that Mary Phagan met her death.

The grilling of nearly four hours followed The Georgian's publication of the details of Mincey's accusations and was undertaken with the utmost secrecy, an attempt being made to avoid knowledge of the "sweating" becoming public by taking Conley to the Commissioners' room on the second floor of the police station by a circuitous route.

CHIEF SETS NET FOR NEW VICE SUSPECTS

Scores Detectives for Alleged Laxity in Reporting Cases. Arrests Due Soon.

As the result of the increased activity by the detective and police departments, following the grilling given the detectives Friday afternoon by Chief Beavers, five new arrests were made by a squad of officers shortly after noon Saturday, in a raid on a boarding house at No. 164 1-2 Peters Street.

The persons under arrest gave their names as Lulu Bell, Maud Wilson, Mrs. Lee Berkstein and L. W. Berkstein. Effie Drummond, a 22-year-old country girl, who has been in Atlanta only four weeks, is held as a material witness.

A man whose name is given as Joe North escaped through a back window while the police were raiding the place. A general order has been issued for his arrest. The raid was made by Officers Brannan, Moncrief and Baker.

More Arrests Probable.

Chief Beavers declares he has evidence that the boarding house, which was run by the Bell woman, is an immoral resort. The quintet probably will be tried in Police Court Monday. The Chief intimated after the arrest that other arrests are probable within 24 hours as a result of developments of the day's investigation, which have brought out the following:

Dora Rothstein has made a new statement, implicating three more men in her downfall, and naming half a dozen girls as victims of the ring.

The detective department, following a severe grilling given them by Chief Beavers Friday night, is seeking evidence against the vice ring with renewed vigor.

Business Men Aid Chief.

Two prominent business men, interested in the welfare of the little Rothstein girl, have entered the case and are aiding Chief Beavers in securing evidence.

Information has come to Chief Beavers of a house where young girls are taken by men and ruined, and then taken to hotels or immoral resorts.

The dragnet has been thrown out for the son of one of Atlanta's most prominent business men, named by Hattie Smith in her story of immorality at the Cumberland Hotel.

Four persons—Hattie Smith, Mrs. Lola White, Paul Estes and Hoyt Monroe—were held for the Grand Jury Saturday morning on new charges, following the Smith girl's story of a "joy ride." Estes has said that he will make a confession, in which he will involve men hitherto unsuspected.

Girl Promises Confession.

Corinne Wilson, one of the victims of the ring, told Chief Beavers that when she is placed on the witness stand Saturday afternoon, she will make a complete confession, implicating more than a dozen men and half a dozen young girls.

Chief Beavers attaches great importance to evidence already obtained by the two business men who have joined him in the crusade. These men held a conference with the Chief Saturday morning and told him of the existence of the house where young girls are taken and plied with liquor until they lose their senses.

The new statement of Dora Rothstein was made to these men. The girl, who charges that Corinne Wilson lured her into a life of shame, named three more men with whom she has had illegal relations, and also furnished the names of half a dozen girls who, she declared, had trodden the same path as she.

Chief Beavers now has the names of between fifteen and twenty men, and more than a dozen young girls, furnished to him by Hattie Smith, Dora Rothstein and Corinne Wilson. He said, as can be found, they will be brought into court, and cases made where there is evidence enough to justify such a course. Those against whom cases are not made will be summoned as witnesses and forced to tell what they know.

One of the startling incidents of the investigation came in police court Saturday morning, in the hearing of Hattie Smith, Mrs. Lola White, Paul Estes and Hoyt Monroe. The Smith girl, heretofore one of the main sources of evidence, flatly refused to talk when placed on the stand. She would neither affirm nor deny that she had taken an auto ride with Estes and Monroe and that she had had illicit relations with them.

Startling Story Expected.

The stories of the other three, however, were sufficient for the holding of the quartet.

What is expected to be the most startling and sordid story told since the beginning of the vice crusade will be told in Police Court Saturday afternoon by Corinne Wilson when she is placed on trial on a charge of disorderly conduct.

The two men whom she named in her first statement, A. C. Dollar and W. W. Suttles, will be tried at the same time, the former on a disorderly conduct charge and the latter on a kidnaping charge.

Dora Rothstein, arrested with the Wilson girl, will be tried before Judge Pendleton, of the Juvenile Court, as she is only 14 years old. She will appear in Police Court Saturday, however, as a witness.

Chief Warns Detectives.

In his conference with the detective department late Friday afternoon, which was held in Chief Lanford'r office behind closed doors, Chief Beavers took the detectives severely to task for their laxity in reporting vice cases. He intimated strongly that the detectives were not doing their duty and not getting results.

"It is as much your duty as it is the duty of any other man on the force," Chief Beavers is said to have told them, "to report the existence of vice. In the future all knowledge gained by detectives as to the existence of immoral resorts must be reported at once to headquarters. If you personally are engaged on some other case and have not time to work the vice case, report it so some one else can investigate and make the case."

The story of the Wilson girl is fraught with possibilities, Chief Beavers declares. She will give a detailed account of her adventures after she met Dora Rothstein at the White City on July 4, and it is understood that she will make revelations of her life before she was married, several months ago, by which she will involve several downtown hotels. She has promised Chief Beavers that she will make public the name of every man who has been with her and the Rothstein girl during the past two weeks.

The girl already has given the Chief the names of several men whom she asserts are connected with the vice ring, and in all probability these men will be subpenaed as witnesses in the case. They will be brought into court, and if the evidence warrants it cases of disorderly conduct or statutory charges will be made against them. If there is no evidence that they are directly connected with the Wilson girl and the Rothstein girl, they will be held as witnesses and compelled to tell all they know about vice in Atlanta.

SEARCHING SIDELIGHTS ON POLITICS IN GEORGIA

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

Mr. McMichael of Marion Friday made pos-i-tively his first American appearance as Speaker Pro Tem of the Georgia House of Representatives, and got away with victorious eagles and things of that sort.

The Speakership Pro Tem carries no prerogative other than that of presiding when the Speaker is absent from the chair, and, as Mr. Burwell had not been absent a minute up to the time of Mr. McMichaels participation in the direction of affairs in the House, nobody in the House knew exactly what sort of a Speaker Pro Tem it had selected, so far as his ability to handle things was concerned.

Whatever doubt there may have been in anybody's mind that McMichael would get away with things was speedily removed. The gentleman from Marion seemed perfectly at home from the very beginning of his active career as Speaker Pro Tem, and was warmly applauded by his colleagues when he had finished Round 1.

Mr. McMichatel, by the way, is one of the best and most convincing speakers on the floor of the House, and has the happy faculty of making himself understood perfectly. He is clean-cut in enunciation and exceedingly easy to follow.

Moreover, he is very popular among his fellow members, and whatever he says attracts instant and interested attention.

Judge John T. Allen is, perhaps, the best speaker on the floor of the Senate. And that is no mean compliment, either, for there are several good speakers in that honorable body.

Judge Allen not only is a mighty good lawyer, but he also is a business man of widespread reputation. His voice has great carrying power, without in any way being harsh. Whenever he arises to address the Senate, is invariably given close attention.

Whether one agrees with what he says or not, Judge Allen never is at a loss for words in which to make himself perfectly plain.

Dispensing with the reading of the journal in the Senate is not easily effected. Notwithstanding the fact that the journal has been examined and approved, a motion to dispense with reading rarely gets by without objection.

The Senate is more dignified than the House, as a rule, anyway, and its methods of procedure are much more orderly and repressed.

It is an interesting circumstance that the Senate Committee on Constitutional Amendments has reported favorably a bill to raise the total of Senate membership from 44 to 60. There is an excellent chance that the bill will pass, and if it does, the impression is that the people will ratify it.

There is one little page in the Senate who makes it a regular business to fall reverently to his knees while the chaplain is praying every morning.

He doesn't look to be over 8 or 9 years old, and he evidently has not forgotten—yet—that the proper praying posture is kneeling.

A number of Georgia Legislators to-day forwarded to Washington—some to the President and others to Secretary Bryan—letters endorsing Colonel J. Lindsay Johnson, of Rome, for a consulship, preferably in the Orient.

It is well-known, of course, that the Colonel wishes to be named Consul to Shanghai, and his friends in the Legislature—of which he is several times a former member—evidently are desirous of hastening the appointment along in such wise as they may.

South Georgia is talking of former President of the Senate, W. S. West, of Valdosta, for Governor, in succession to Governor Slaton.

If South Georgia has an eye on the Executive Office after Governor Slaton gets through, it will be readily admitted on all sides that Colonel West would make an ideal candidate.

He knows the game, he has the friends, and assuredly he has the ability—and what more could South Georgia ask of a favorite son?

Citizen J. L. H. Waldrop, of Clayton County, 77 years of age, boasts with pride that he has voted for a Brown for Governor of Georgia seven times.

Away back yonder in the dim and distant past he voted four times for former Governor Joseph M. Brown's distinguished father, Joseph E. Brown, and of late years he voted three times for that gentleman's son.

Mr. Waldrop makes no bones of admitting, indeed, that he always has voted for that tribe of particular Browns, and stands ready to repeat the performance whenever occasion shall arise for doing so, if it ever does again.

William R. Leaken, Collector of the Port of Savannah, has appointed B. Palmer Axson as an assistant in his office, with the rank of inspector. Axson has already begun his new duties, appointment was made by Collector although the appointment has not yet been approved.

There is no doubt that the appointment will be made permanent. The Leaken without solicitation or political consideration.

The new appointee is a blood relative of Mrs. Woodrow Wilson.

Representative Barry Wright, of Floyd, hopes to revive the scheme to convert the Western and Atlantic terminals in Atlanta, between Madison Avenue and Fryor Street, in a grand overhead plaza, and to that end will earnestly champion a bill in the House providing for the same.

Mr. Wright is a member of the Western and Atlantic Railway Committee of the House, and is capable of putting up a mighty good fight for anything he undertakes.

The plaza scheme, he thinks, is an admirable solution of a much vexed question, and a probable effective factor in disposing of the smoke nuisance in Atlanta.

Warrant for Poisoning Husband Issued by Coroner Is Held To Be Illegal.

morphine by applying the color test. He would not swear to any quantity of morphine or meconic acid and could not swear as to any quantity which the deceased took in his lifetime.

"This doctor also looked at the lungs of J. B. Crawford and swore that they had shriveled up about one-third of their size.

"The presence of the morphine and meconic acid, Dr. Harris (who was employed by these collateral kin) said, indicated that a large quantity had been taken by the deceased in his life, but how much he could not say. Harris could not swear that he found more than one-fiftieth of a grain, and said he made no test for quantity.

Tempest in Teapot.

"The whole thing is a tempest in a teapot, an effort to make a mountain out of a molehill.

"Dr. John W. Hurt, who treated Crawford for pneumonia in his last illness, and the trained expert nurse who attended him show that Crawford died of pneumonia. To ease Crawford's severe pain Dr. Hurt had given him several injections of morphine, and no secret was made of the fact. To ease Crawford's coughing Dr. Hurt had given him a cough medicine which contained opium, which was taken into the stomach.

"This administration of these drugs by Dr. Hurt, who is a safe and conservative physician, would account for vastly more than the trace of morphine found in Crawford's body by Harris.

Calls Charge Illegal.

"As to Dr. Harris' opinion that Dr. Hurt was wrong in diagnosing the case as pneumonia we will be able to show by various experts that Dr. Harris' opinion, based on the examination he made on these shriveled lungs four years after death, is worthless as compared with the opinion of Dr. Hurt and the trained nurse.

"We propose to try this case in court in this county and will be satisfied with the judgment that the court renders; but in justice to our client we state these facts to show that there is nothing in these charges.

"The Coroner of Carroll County had no right to make any investigation or recommendation as to Mrs. Crawford. The matter is entirely out of his jurisdiction.

"If anybody wants to make any sworn charge that Mrs. Crawford poisoned J. B. Crawford she will welcome any such investigation and will show it utterly groundless."

PEACE PLAN FOR HEALEY STRIKE HANGS FIRE

Committee to Settle Walkout Involving 150 Men on New Building Reported Named.

Negotiations looking to the settlement of the strike declared Friday by union men employed on the Healey Building had not materialized at noon Saturday. During the morning a number of strikers gathered near the structure, but no demonstration was attempted.

President C. Harrison Barnes, of the Building Trades Council, who called the strike, maintains silence on the matter, although it is understood representatives to a conference with the contractor, B. M. Walker, have been named. This conference may be held Saturday afternoon.

The strike, which was called Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock, was the result of the alleged awarding of an electrical contract to a concern which does not employ union labor. This act on the part of Contractor Walker, the union leaders claim, is a violation of certain alleged existing contracts between employer and employee.

Fourteen labor organizations are involved, including the structural iron workers, brick masons, plasterers, steel workers, plumbers, gas workers, steam and electrical engineers, painters, marble cutters, carpenters and hod carriers—in all, about 150 men.

According to statements Saturday morning, a number of the structural iron workers have planned to leave Atlanta to take other jobs. While the steel work on the Healey Building is nearly completed, about three weeks work for the riveting gang and ten days work for the steel men remain.

The strike will not involve other buildings, it is believed.

MEYERS SUICIDE THROUGH FEAR OF INSANITY

Former Atlanta Telephone Man Is Found Dead in St. Louis Hotel. Health Was Broken.

ST. LOUIS, July 12.—Dr. Heine Marks, uncle of Charles L. Meyers, of Nashville, Tenn., who shot and killed himself at the Planters Hotel Friday, said to-day that in his opinion his nephew's suicide was due to a fear of insanity, brought about by overwork.

Meyers suffered a nervous breakdown six months ago and had to quit work. He was general contractor for the Cumberland Telephone Company.

A few days ago Meyers told his bride of three months that if he became convinced that he would go insane he would kill himself. A close guard was kept over him, but he eluded it. Funeral arrangements will follow the inquest to-day. His wife was Miss Pearl Goldstein, of Nashville.

Mr. Meyers, who was a special agent for the Southern Bell Telephone Company, was regarded as an efficient employee. Formerly he lived in Nashville, where he was connected with the Cumberland, and retained his position when that concern was taken over by the Southern. Several months ago he was transferred to Atlanta, but worked here but a few weeks when his health failed and he took a vacation.

Mr. Meyers and his bride arrived in St. Louis Thursday to visit his brother.

MULHALL USED LABOR BODY AS HIS TOOL

Professional Lobbyist Tells of Political Welding of Unions and Manufacturers.

WASHINGTON, July 12.—An interesting glimpse of "inside" politics was given by Colonel Martin M. Mulhall in his testimony to-day before the Overman Lobby Committee.

How as president of the Baltimore Working Men's Association, though lobbying for the National Association of Manufacturers, he lined up the working men against Senator McComas, who was fought because of his advocacy of an eight-hour law, was told by the witness.

Mulhall's testimony portrayed the Manufacturers' Association in the light of a big and powerful non-partisan organization bent on defeating legislation favorable to labor interests and legislators who opposed the association.

Efforts to swing the labor vote in Rhode Island in 1904 for Senator Nelson W. Aldrich also were described by Mulhall. He spent ten days in the State, he said, at the solicitation of Senator Foraker, of Ohio.

Labor union leaders, Colonel Mulhall said, knew of his connection with the Manufacturers' Association.

Colonel Mulhall charged Marshall Cushing, secretary of the National Association of Manufacturers, with trying to defeat William Hughes, now Senator from New Jersey, because Hughes was active in support of labor measures.

Mulhall told the committee "all you had to do was to see 'Boss' Barnes to get a bill killed in the Legislature at Albany."

Senate Beats House for Possession of Mulhall.

WASHINGTON, July 12.—The opening skirmish for physical possession of Colonel Martin M. Mulhall was won by the Senate Lobby Investigation Committee to-day. Chairman Garrett, of the House committee, had subpenaed the witness for examination at 9 o'clock to-day, but late last night the Senators, finding their prerogatives might be infringed upon, told Mulhall to show up at 9 o'clock at the Senate, and he did.

Garrett indicated that if the Senate committee persisted in stopping the House, the House committee will have a subpena out at all times for Mulhall.

James E. Emery, counsel for the National Association of Manufacturers, promised to give a list of about 40 witnesses to disprove Mulhall's accusations affecting business men. He said he was trying to locate some men he knew could tell of Mulhall's record.

REPRESENTATIVE E. D. COLE, OF BARTOW.

Representative Ed Cole Has Acquired a Fortune, but Has Lost Most of His Name.

In the first place, Representative Ed Cole, of Bartow, was not christened Edward, or Edwin, or Ed, or anything like that.

As a matter of fact, his full entitlements are Emreid Dargan Cole!

That, however, was entirely too fancy an outlay of names for this gentleman when first he started out to make his own way in life, and so he elected to have himself called "E. D.," which inevitably evoluted into plain, ordinary, old-fashioned "Ed" as time ran on.

Ed Cole began his business career with a total capital of $1.35. Besides that, he possessed nothing beyond one suit of clothes, vintage unknown, a couple of pairs of socks and a superabundance of energy and pluck.

He plunged into business for himself at 16 by getting a job as train "butcher" on a jerkwater railroad in South Carolina, and he soon enlarged his capital of $1.35 to 100 times that amount.

Not long after this experience one of the big news agencies heard of Cole and grabbed him. Before long he was in charge of a division or so for that concern—and now he still is on the sunny side of 30, worth along toward—well, he is worth a six-figure sum, all right, anyway!

In casting about for a vice chairman of the important Ways and Means Committee of the House, Speaker Burwell looked into Cole's record. He became convinced that Cole was one of the safest and sanest business men in the House, and as that was exactly what he was looking for, Cole got the assignment.

Cole's inheritance tax bill is House bill No. 1, and is generally accepted as the most intelligent inheritance tax measure pending in the Legislature. It likely is the one that will be enacted into law. Cole never introduced it until he felt sure it was right and modeled along the most approved lines.

Christian Endeavor In Sunrise Meeting

LOS ANGELES, July 12.—A majority of the delegates to the International Christian Endeavor convention here were on hand for the sunrise meeting half an hour before dawn.

Reasons assigned to-day for the action of the convention in selecting Chicago for its 1915 meeting were the raising of a $10,000 convention entertainment fund, the fact that there are more than 1,000,000 members of the Christian Endeavor within a radius of a few miles of Chicago, and the presence in this country of thousands of visitors who will be able to stop in Chicago on their way to the Panama Exposition.

TWO BADLY HURT WHEN TROLLEY HITS AUTO

Marietta Car Smashes Smyrna Physician's Machine, Driven by Fifteen-Year-Old Boy.

Dr. W. T. Pace, a physician of Smyrna, and his chauffeur, Fred Reed, 15, narrowly escaped death Saturday morning shortly before 10 o'clock when an incoming Marietta trolley car smashed into the physician's automobile at a curve just beyond Carmichael Station.

Dr. Pace and young Reed, although badly cut and bruised about the face and arms, were able to leave the Atlanta Hospital, where they were rushed, shortly before noon. The car, a new two-passenger Ford, was demolished.

According to Dr. Pace, the street car bore down on them at a rapid rate before either he or the chauffeur knew there was a car in sight.

"The car came down the hill at a rate I would estimate at from 40 to 45 miles an hour," said Dr. Pace, "and we did not see it in time to get out of the way. The motorman blew his whistle once, but it was too late. My chauffeur tried to reverse the machine and then came the crash."

Inspector Winn, of the Georgia Railway and Power Company, said it had been reported to him that the boy driving the car apparently lost his nerve and stopped his car on the track. The car was filled with passengers.

SOLONS INSPECT INSTITUTIONS AT ATHENS

As Guests of City's Chamber of Commerce, Legislators Combine Business and Pleasure.

Headed by the two Representatives from Clarke County, J. Frank Rhodes and Frank A. Lipscomb, the Georgia Legislature is visiting Athens to-day, inspecting State institutions there.

The General Assembly, under the chaperonage of President of the Senate J. Randolph Anderson, left on a special train over the Seaboard at 8 o'clock this morning, and will return to Atlanta to-night at 8:30.

For the purpose of making this trip the Legislature adjourned over to-day to meet again Monday morning, but as it is on public business the day was not declared a dies non.

The Athens Chamber of Commerce has the entertainment of the legislators in hand. A fine program has been arranged for their profit and pleasure.

Automobile tours of the University of Georgia properties, including the Normal and Industrial Schools, will be made, and the members of the General Assembly will have every opportunity to see for themselves what the State has at Athens and what it needs.

After the business of the day, the Chamber of Commerce will tender the Legislature a big barbecue and Brunswick stew on the banks of the Oconee River, near Athens.

Twenty-two members of the Senate and 61 members of the House composed the party. A big contingent of the Senate and House pages went along, by special invitation of the Athens Chamber of Commerce.

.:. Two in a Train .:.

"A THIRD class single to Galway, please!" Miss Mathers moved away from the ticket office, but not before a tall man, wrapped in a thin ulster, with a tweed cap pulled down over his eyes, had seen her—started first at sound of her soft voice, and then deliberately followed her to the waiting train. It was a bitter winter evening, and Miss Mathers shuddered inwardly as she thought of that long, long train journey through South Wales, the odious crossing of the Irish Channel and the wearisome journey to Galway.

Tears started to her eyes as she thought of past arrivals there. How different they had been! Then she had traveled thither as a guest. Now all was sadly changed, and she was going back to dear, well-remembered places to earn her own living as a governess.

Seated in the corner of a third-class compartment, Mary Mathers settled herself under her rug for the first stage of her journey.

A warning whistle from the train—the door was wrenched open, and a man, wrapped in a big ulster, got in, followed by a porter with a bag and bundle of golf sticks. There was a momentary bustle, during which the express began to glide slowly along the platform. The porter jumped out, shut the door—they were off.

And in the opposite corner was sitting——

Mary's heart gave a jump.

"I thought it was you," said Meredith, quietly. "Aren't you going to speak to me?"

"Of course," she stammered, with lips that tried so hard not to quiver. "You startled me so." She smiled at him gallantly. "You see, you are about the last person I expected to see. Are you going to Ireland?"

The Old Haunts.

"Yes, and you? To the old haunts?" The quick tears started to her eyes.

"Yes, to one of the old haunts near Galway."

"Lough Corrib?" he asked.

Mary winced.

"Yes, just on the shores, half-way to Oughterard."

He leant forward.

"You don't mean to say that you are going to the Wintons?"

"Yes."

"Good! So am I. They're getting up a first-rate house party, you know. I'm awfully glad you're going to be one of them, too."

Mary gave a little gasp, opened her mouth as if to speak, and said nothing. What could she say?

Tell him the truth, of course—that instead of an honored guest she was going to the Wintons as governess at $150 a year, relegated to the schoolroom in a distant wing, dining when the rest of the party lunched, disappearing back again to the distant wing of the house with her charges. Perhaps now and then she would be sent for to play accompaniments or something of the kind. But if Meredith was to be in the house, how could she bear it? How could she tell him? He probably knew nothing about her reverses of fortune. She couldn't blurt it out—apropos of nothing at all.

Three years ago she and Meredith had seen a good deal of each other. No other man had ever touched her heart or made any great difference in her life, but he—she wrenched herself from her dreams with an effort as she spoke.

A Bad Prospect.

"I'm afraid it's going to be a bad night. Are you obliged to cross?"

"Yes."

"And if I remember rightly, you don't care much about the sea, do you?"

"I care this much—that I loathe it," said Mary, with a faint smile. "I have never got over my distaste for boats and everything to do with them. And the Irish Channel is always rough when I cross it."

Meredith laughed.

"Have you only just come back from East Africa?" said Mary, breaking the silence that had fallen between them.

"Three months ago."

"But you will go out again?"

"I don't think so," he said slowly. "It all depends on——"

The door into the corridor was slid open; the dining car attendant looked in.

"Take your seats for dinner, please."

He passed on.

"You will dine, won't you?" asked Meredith. "Nothing like a good meal, you know."

The color mounted to Mary's face. How could she tell him that dinner was not a possibility to her, simply because she had no spare money to waste? She had a little packet of sandwiches in her bag, and some biscuits, but her appetite sickened at the thought of them.

"I am not hungry," she said, evasively. "I couldn't eat any dinner."

Left Alone.

"Very well. Willful woman must always have her way, but don't say I didn't warn you. Will you be all right if I leave you? I feel the pangs of a furious hunger."

"Of course. I am quite comfortable."

Left alone, Mary sat up and gazed out into the darkness. Her face burned. How could she endure the hours of this journey with Meredith sitting there, talking, looking at her? She must get away from him. Her hard-won self-control might desert her, and then—— She rapidly collected her rug, papers and bag and slipped into the corridor, walking with difficulty toward the far end of the swinging train to another compartment.

Here she would be alone. Presently, to the hum of the express, Mary fell asleep, wrapped in her rug, and dreamed things that brought a smile to her lips and a color to her soft cheeks.

And in the dining car, at his solitary meal, Meredith wondered why fate had deliberately thrown him and Mary together, when that impassable barrier of wealth still stood between them. It had driven him away from her once before, and now—well, he must let things slide. Perhaps, that same interfering dame Fortune might find a way out.

The Irish air was soft and fresh, and the gray country looked inexpressibly lovely to Mary's tired eyes. The crossing had been just as odious as she expected, and she had hurried from the boat in the wintry darkness to the waiting room, dreading, yet hoping, to find Meredith at her side. She saw his tall figure once. He was looking about him, but he did not see her, and she took refuge in a carriage with three other women, and slept away some of her exhaustion on the way to Waterford. There she had to change, and on the platform the first person she saw was—Meredith. He came up to her at once.

"Why did you run away last night?" he said.

"I—I"—

"I don't want to worry you, but you must let me look after you. You look half dead. Have you had any breakfast?"

"Yes."

She had had tea and bread and butter in the train, and the cool morning air had whipped a faint color to her white cheeks.

Slowly they crept away into the thick mist, nothing to be seen but low fields, stone walls and driving mist on every side. Mary felt her spirits sinking lower and lower as she approached her destination.

"Are we there?" she said.

"No, we've stopped for something—signal against us I expect."

Meredith put down the window and looked out into the mist. He saw a row of low sheds, the outline of a tiny station, a branch line, and nothing beyond them but a couple of other compartments. The rest of the train had gone.

She Confesses.

There they were, left behind—in a siding.

"What has happened?" asked Mary.

Meredith turned and looked at her with a rueful sort of smile.

"Left behind!" cried Mary aghast. "What do you mean?"

"They've run us into a siding, and the train has gone on without us. The fact is, I was asleep. I only woke up to find ourselves dumped down here. They let us get into the coach they were leaving behind—idiots! But we'll get on somehow, Mary. After all, it only means a little delay."

He said her name involuntarily, and Mary's heart jumped. Then a feeling of dismay swept over her.

"But we may not arrive till night," she said. "I suppose the only thing we can do is to drive, if a vehicle is to be had. We must be twenty miles from our destination, at least."

"I suppose so, but what does it matter? They'll understand."

"It may not matter for you," said Mary, in a low, harsh voice. "They will excuse in a guest what they may not pardon in the governess."

Meredith stared at her as if she had suddenly gone mad.

"The what?" he said.

"The governess. That is what I am."

"You're mad."

"I'm not; it's a fact."

"You a governess? What does it mean? What are you masquerading for?"

"It's no masquerade. I'm a governess because—I can not dig, and to beg I am ashamed," said Mary, with a miserable little laugh. "That's all."

"But do you mean to say you've got to do it?" said Meredith, dazedly.

"Yes. Everything went in a big smash on the Stock Exchange more than a year ago. I have to do something, and the Wintons wanted a governess for their two little nephews who are living with them, that's all."

"All!" said Meredith, violently. "And I knew nothing of it. I never heard a word of this before. When we met last do you know what sent me away in such haste? Can you guess?"

"No."

"It was because I was afraid to stay. I loved you so much, and I could not speak. I was only a poor soldier of fortune—you were a wealthy heiress. I had already been called a fortune hunter by those who must have seen how I lingered at your side. I didn't think you cared, so I went away. Now, Mary darling, I'm free to speak. I can't give you the riches that are gone, but I can give you a good home and lots of love. Do you care a little? Try to, Mary, when I care so much. I believe Fate brought us together on purpose."

"And let us in a siding," said Mary, with a smile breaking over her face like sunshine through mist.

"It might have left us in a worse place," cried Meredith, his arm about her shoulders. "Mary, is it going to be 'Yes?'"

"Yes—yes," murmured Mary.

Dr. Samuel Rideal, of London University, who read a paper on the advantages of gas over coal as the fuel at a teachers' conference at Sheffield, said that 2 per cent of coal used was converted into soot, and in London the annual sootfall was 76,000 tons. The annual soot and dust fall in Leeds and London averages between 300 and 650 tons per square mile; in Glasgow, 1,331 tons, and in Coatbridge, 1,930 tons.

Beauty Secrets of Beautiful Women

How Dot Wilson Found Milk an Aid to Natural Loveliness

By LILIAN LAUFERTY.

IF you want to have your skin white, your eyes bright, your digestion good and your weight always adjusted to a pleasing plumpness that does not increase to stoutness, try the milk diet. This is pretty pink and white, sparkling-eyed Dot Wilson's great beauty secret, and she longs for converts to her theory of the simple life."

I found Miss Wilson and her sisters in a cool, wind-swept room down at Brighton Beach, New York, and after I had adjusted myself to this triple personality as illustrated by the "three-twin" sisters, we settled down to a cozy little visit that gave me one or two brand-new ideas for the attainment of beauty. The first idea was something no one said—it was just the generous, kindly attitude of admiration and willingness to have their "baby sister" featured that Miss Doris Wilson and Miss Alma showed throughout our interview. Next fall B. F. Keith will give you all a chance to see the three clever girls who make up the Doris Wilson trio—but before that time pray let me present to you a bit of their philosophy of life—and beauty.

Only Milk.

"Milk, milk, nothing but milk—that is what my mother brought me up on. None of her children had any other article of diet until they were 12; and I have never found anything so nourishing, so easy to digest and so productive of good results. So milk is my diet, and though the girls vary from it, they often regret some indiscretion of diet to the tune of a pain of a skin rash or one of the ills that food is so generous about presenting people with," said Miss Dot.

"I live on milk—no water to drink, for milk takes its place. No indigestible food can tempt me, for milk keeps me so well, so buoyant and so free from nerves that I flourish thereon and never long for the flavor of any food but my tried and true friend. About twice a year I have a taste of some such foreign substance as ice cream. Oh, yes, I can eat food, and I do occasionally, but I don't like it.

"I drink eight quarts of milk a day—not iced milk to shock the sensitive stomach nerves, but normal tempered milk.

"I sip it slowly—'Just sneak it down,' said one specialist who cures all sorts of nervous and digestive diseases by a seven week' milk cure. Well, it takes me about fifteen minutes to drink one glass of milk, and I am enjoying it all the time. We're all only bigger babies—babies grown up—and if it is so good for the wee things to live on milk, why should it not be good for them to go on living on milk, the friendly food of their childhood? The girls drink five or six glasses of milk a day, and whenever they are tired or nervous, or feel on the verge of a little breakdown, back they go to the milk diet, and then they just get in tune with things again."

Miss Dot Wilson.

I looked at the three pairs of bright eyes—blue, blue-gray and hazel-gray—each pair with a spark of light at the back of their starry depths; I studied the creamy, peachblow complexions, and the gracefully rounded, tall figures, and I decided that as a near-milk cure made you pretty and the absolute milk-dietist was conceded to be the prettiest of the sisters, perhaps it would be a good idea to go right off and corner the milk market.

THEIR MARRIED LIFE

By MABEL HERBERT URNER.

PARIS at 7 o'clock of a summer evening! The gleaming lights, the gay gowns of the women, the trees, the outdoor cafes—Helen, clinging to Warren's arm, walked down the broad boulevard athrill with the glamour of it all.

It had been just four hours since they arrived from Cherbourg—tired, dusty, travel-stained. But now, rested and in cooler clothes, they started out to find, as Warren expressed it, "a place to feed."

Where should they go? Helen suggested a number of well-known places that she had read of in the guide book. But Warren was determined to have their first dinner at a restaurant he had been particularly fond of when he was in Paris eight years before.

Although he had forgotten the name, he had felt confident of his sense of location. They had taken a 'bus to Porte St. Martin and had walked several blocks in what he felt was the right direction.

"Must be around here somewhere," frowning down a street that was plainly unfamiliar. "I don't believe they've moved."

"Isn't that a restaurant over there—where the lights are?" asked Helen hopefully.

"By Jove! I believe that's the place," as they crossed the wide street. "I'd have sworn it was on the other side."

Entering, they were met by an officious head waiter, who bustled ahead, ushering them to a table in an inner room.

"Oh, we don't want to sit back here," objected Warren. "Give us a table out on the veranda."

"Sorry, monsieur, but they're all taken."

"Why, there's a half dozen vacant ones up at that end."

"They're all reserved, monsieur," repeated the head waiter stolidly.

Warren turned to Helen with a scowling "So they know that game over here, too. This fellow's looking for five francs. Well, what do you say? Want to sit back here—or look up some other place?"

"Oh, dear, let's go somewhere else," resenting the supercilious air of the head waiter, who stood impatiently tapping the dinner card with his pencil.

Outside Warren demanded curtly:

"Now, where to? It's getting late and I'm hungry. We don't want to wander around all night, you know."

"But, dear, we don't want to stay there. That man was almost insolent."

He Blames Her.

"Well, you're pretty darn particular," as usual throwing the responsibility upon her. "We'd have been sure of good food there, anyway. But you're always kicking. Suppose you find a place now."

Helen realized that Warren was on the verge of one of his irritable moods, when he would blame her for whatever happened, however inconsistent or unjust. He had had nothing to eat since that early and unsatisfactory luncheon on the train. It was a critical moment, and she was desperately anxious to find some other good restaurant at once—before his growing hunger increased his irritability.

They walked on for several blocks, Helen gazing anxiously in every direction, while Warren maintained the scowling, sullen silence that always foreboded a storm.

"Oh, there, dear!" eagerly, as she caught sight of a balcony, high above the street, with white clothed tables and rose-shaded lights. "Doesn't that look like a good place?"

"You can't tell anything about these strange places in Paris," growled Warren. "May be rotten. But we've got to eat somewhere. Come on. And we'll stay here—understand? Whether we get a table you like or not. No more trotting around for me to-night."

Helen followed Warren up the broad, red-carpeted stairs, hoping desperately that at this place things would "go right."

The first glimpse was disappointing. The room was crowded. Would they have to go somewhere else?

"Sounds Good."

As they stood uncertainly at the doorway, a couple rose from a most desirable table on the veranda—one that Helen had seen from the street. If they could only get that!

The next moment the head waiter was bowing them toward it. Two other waiters rushed forward with fresh linen and silver, and a third placed a footstool for Helen's feet.

"Oh, dear, it's a wonderful place," sinking back with a sense of infinite relief that a critical situation had been safely passed.

"Well, we'll not get enthusiastic till we see what the food's like," grunted Warren, somewhat appeased by the attention they had received.

"I can't make anything out of this," scowling at the menu, which was illegibly written in French with pale purple ink.

"Will you have our 5-franc table d'hote dinner, monsieur?" asked a waiter at his elbow.

"Umph, you speak English? Well, that simplifies things. What do we get with that dinner?"

"Hors d'oeuvres, potage, fish, entree, roast, salade, entrements and a bottle of red or white Bordeaux."

"That sounds pretty good," assented Warren. "All right; we'll try it."

To Helen the atmosphere of the place and the street scene below was one of enchantment. She was beginning to feel the charm of Paris.

With the hors d'oeuvres and first glass of wine, the scowling frown on Warren's brow had relaxed, and with the thick green Saint Germain soup he grew almost genial.

"Just taste that fish! It's great. What they call filet of sole at home is only flounder. We never see the real thing there. This is an all right place."

"Oh, I'm so glad we found this, dear. For I felt that you were getting out of humor, and would blame me for not staying at that other place," exclaimed Helen, who, womanlike, always wanted to go back over a situation, instead of being content to let well enough alone. "And I couldn't bear to have our first dinner in Paris an unhappy one."

"Who in thunder was going to make it unhappy, unless you were?" growled Warren, who hated post-mortems. "What the devil are you harping on it now for, anyway?"

"Oh, I only meant, dear—" began Helen, hastening to conciliate. But fortunately at this moment the waiter uncovered the fowl, roasted to a delicate brown, and Warren's attention was diverted from Helen's untactful remark.

"Dear, there's not so much difference in the gowns worn by the French women," commented Helen, now anxious to change the subject. There aren't any sensational dresses here. That woman over there in pink, is rather striking, but any of the others might be in New York."

"Well, this isn't the sort of place where you'd see much in the way of dress. Some night I'll take you to supper at Maxim's. The gowns there'll be striking enough."

"Oh, are we going to Maxim's?" delightedly. "I thought it was a dreadful place."

"Not so dreadful as they want you to think—that's their best asset. You'll find it pretty tame. More than half the crowd will be rubber necks like ourselves."

But Helen had read and heard much of Maxim's, and as she minced over the fruit salad she gazed down on the gay boulevard in eager anticipation of a supper there.

"Dear, what IS this?" as the waiter placed before them two small brown jars filled with a thick creamy substance. "Search me!" shrugged Waren, investigating it with a spoon.

"That's Creme de Zeigny, Monsieur. Will you have sugar with it?"

"I'll try it straight first."

"Oh, it's delicious, dear," exclaimed Helen enthusiastically. "It's sort of sour, salty and sweet! More like a delicate liquid cheese."

Very Smooth.

"By Jove, that is pretty smooth," admitted Warren. Isn't this the stuff the Thustons raved over when they got back last year? We'll have this often—that's sure."

When the waiter had cleared off the table, Warren lit his cigar and turned over the check placed unobtrusively before him.

"Ten francs—two dollars! Well that's what I call a good run for your money. Everything specially cooked, too—and that was a whole chicken. To get a dinner like that in New York, you'd have to order it a la carte, and with that wine it would cost you not a cent less than $10."

"Now aren't you glad we didn't stay at that other restaurant?" insisted Helen with a true feminine persistency. "The food COULDN'T have been any better! You see I didn't find such a bad place after all."

But Warren was no longer in an inflammable mood. The excellent dinner had had a most pacifying effect on his temper. So to this rather indiscreet remark, he only shrugged a good-natured:

"Umph, that's right—rub it in!"

Advice to a Young Man

By DOROTHY DIX.

A YOUNG man, who is ambitious and who feels within himself the ability to rise in the world, is very much in love with a pretty young girl who has no aspirations beyond a new dress and going to Coney Island or a cheap theater.

The young man is making enough money for them to be married on and live in fair comfort in their present status in life, but he is not satisfied with this.

He is anxious to get an education and study a profession. To this the sweetheart objects. She isn't willing for the young man to make his way through college. She doesn't see any use in an education, any how. When the young man talks to her about books it bores her to death, and when he wants to take her to hear a good lecture or good music she offsets it with a proposal to take in a vaudeville show.

The young man wants to know whether he should give up his books or his girl, or if there is any way in which he could interest his fiancee in intellectual pursuits and kindle the fires of ambition in her soul.

To answer the last question first, I would say, no. The homely old proverb about the impossibility of making a silk purse out of a sow's ear is still gospel true. There is no way to make a clod aspire, and you can no more change the tastes of a woman who was born without a perception of the finer things of life than you can change the color of her eyes, or the height of her stature.

Born That Way.

The girl who does not perceive the advantage of an education, or the necessity for one, who yawns over even a novel and who doesn't see why anybody reads the daily paper, who is absolutely and totally unintellectual was simply born that way. There's some lack in her mental equipment, and nothing that her husband can do is going to supply it. She was just born that way, and that way she will stay to her dying day, and it isn't her fault.

Such a woman may be the best of housekeepers, the most devoted of wives, but she is no mental companion for an intelligent man. Many men marry this kind of a girl because she has a pretty face, and then torture her trying to make her clever—something she can never be. This is cruelly unjust. He who marries a girl who frankly admits that she doesn't like to read and has no ambition should never bother her with books, or reproach her with her lack of progressiveness.

As to which he should take when a man is called upon to choose between his career and his sweetheart, I should say take the career every time, because an ambitious man soon learns to hate any woman who is the handicap that prevents him winning in the race of life. When even those that we love become a burden upon us that keep us from success—good-bye love! This is unromantic, but true.

Many an ambitious man finds out after marriage that he has saddled himself unknowingly with a wife who can not and will not keep pace with him, and who holds him back from the achievements that he is capable of making. Such a man is the victim of a hard and bitter fate, but in honor there is nothing left for him but to bear with whatever fortitude he can the misfortune that he has brought upon himself.

A Chance.

But the man who finds out before marriage that the girl he thinks himself in love with is not his mental and spiritual mate, that she can not think his thoughts, that she is not interested in the pursuits that he is interested in; that she does not wish to reach the goal toward which his feet are set, has still a chance to save himself from a marriage that is bound to bring misery both to himself and the woman.

For what attracts him to her is only the ephemeral charms of her youth and good looks, and when they are gone, as they must be in a few years, nothing remains but the memory of the sacrifice he has made for her, and the irksomeness of a tie that binds him to a wife with whom he has not one thing in common.

In that day a man remembers what he might have been and is not. He sees other men, no better equipped than himself, climbing up to the top of the ladder while he sits at the bottom with his dull and commonplace wife. And in that day he sees with fatal clearness just how much of the earth earthy is the woman who is not animated by anything except a desire for the things that make for her physical comfort.

Matrimony can mean the closest companionship that two human beings ever attain. It can be literally two souls with but a single thought, and it can mean a lonesomeness that is as great as Robinson Crusoe ever suffered on his desert isle. And when it is that it is the abomination of desolation.

The Solitude.

Think of what the ambitious man suffers when he is married to a woman who never wants to advance one step, who never sees why he wants to make a change, and whom he has to fight at every step of his progress. Think of the solitude of soul of a man married to a woman with whom he can never discuss a book he has read, or a play he has seen, or an opera he has heard; who never even comprehends anything that he tries to tell her that is more psychic than the price of butchers' meat. Not always "the woman who never could know, and never could understand" is a vampire. Only too often she is just a dull and stupid wife, without brains or imagination or aspiration.

So I say to the man who is hesitating between his career and his pretty, ambitionless, unintellectual sweetheart to choose the career. He will soon outgrow her anyway, and it is far, far better for both that this inevitable separation should come before they are married than afterward.

Confessions of a Medium

No. 3.---When the Clock Stopped

By Chas. D. Isaacson.

Copyright 1913 by International News Service.

IN the midst of the seance the grave faced spirit medium paused. He slowly rose from his seat before his assembled auditors and impressively spoke:

"My good friends, we are now going to attempt the most difficult experiment of all—something never before accomplished in the records of the world. If we succeed in doing it, we shall prove beyond all possible doubt the fact that we CAN communicate with the dead."

He cleared his throat and waited as a sharp flash of lightning illumined the room and a murderous peal of thunder crashed on its heels.

It was a night late in August—a hot, black, scary night, when you look warily over your shoulder at the bent, slinking, soaking figures that pass you by; when the very air seems laden with hobgoblin phantoms, and the wind seems to echo the moaning and groaning of lost souls.

A Night of Wonders.

Within the darkened room, fifty frightened people held firmly to their chairs and listened to the deep, far-away tones of the speaker medium. This had been a night of wonders. Tables and chairs had floated about by unseen supernatural means. Wonderful messages had made fifty hearts flutter like leaves in a Kansas cyclone. To these persons, accustomed to unusual things brought about by their mystifying leader, the startling events of the meeting had overshadowed anything of the past. And now the thought of something still more dramatic brought them to breathless and awed attention.

"Dear spirit," breathed the medium, raising his eyes to the ceiling, "we crave your assistance and beg your pardon for tiring you so much this day. Accomplish this seeming impossibility which I am about to put to you, and prove your existence and your ability to communicate with us, to the most skeptical, unbelieving member of this circle.

"Over there is a clock"—and the speaker pointed a long, lean, bony finger to the opposite end of the room, where on the mantel could be faintly traced the outlines of a ponderous old-fashioned timepiece.

"Listen. Spirit, listen. Over there, you hear the ticking of that clock. Over there—you head it?"

Tick—tick—tick fell on the ears of the listeners, who held their breath for fear it would drown the sound which grew louder and louder with each successive second, until it seemed to beat on their very hearts.

A Request.

"Spirit, think carefully now please. Here is where the experiment begins. Can you—will you STOP THAT CLOCK?"

Deathly silence ensued. Just tick—tick—loud and clear and sharp as a bell.

No answer.

"Spirit, will you do it?"

Tick—tick—tick.

"Will you?"

"Why—why, y-yes, I'll try," came the answer in mysterious taps on the table.

Tick—tick—tick — tick — each second seemed an hour to the 50 auditors, who sat half turned toward the clock, eager-eared, faint-hearted.

Tick—tick——

Snap! In the very middle of a beat! IT STOPPED!

Oh, the eternity of silence that followed broken soon by a storm of gasps and screams. There was a crash of thunder, and some one, no longer able to stand the oppression of the darkness, turned on the gas, flooding the room with light. Then they crowded about the clock—pale and wide-eyed. It was stopped, no question of that. The men, comparing it with their watches, found it recorded just one minute behind theirs.

"Wonderful!" "Weird!" "Proves spiritualism absolutely," "Could NEVER have been done by human or material means—it was surely the work of a spirit." These were the comments rapidly uttered, as they examined the clock to see if any wires or mechanical contrivances could have been connected with it.

The Answer.

This incident happened. To those who were there, it was the most wonderful phenomenon they had ever witnessed. At least that is how it happened to all but the medium. And the medium was myself. Would you like to know how it was done? I will tell you.

No spirit stopped the clock. No mechanical means stopped it. Even I did not stop it. IN THE FIRST PLACE, THE CLOCK WAS NOT GOING AT ALL! "How and why was ticking heard?"

Here is the whole story: Back of me, on a roll-top desk, I had previously placed a very tiny alarm clock, noted for its loud tick. Nobody thinks of a clock until you mention it. When I said, "You hear the ticking over there—OVER THERE," the audience imagined the sound emanated from the direction I pointed; and, by suggestion, on which is based hypnotism, by the way, they had placed it as coming from the silent clock on the mantel. Then, while they were listening for the unexpected, half turned to the opposite wall, I had, unobserved, slipped my finger to the pendulum, stopped the alarm and dropped the clock into a drawer!

"But then how was the other clock the exact time?"

Before the audience had arrived I had placed the hands ahead several hours and had brought my experiment to conform to the very minute I had arranged. This was simple—in a flash of lightning I had casually looked at my watch. The mystery of the night, the darkness, the wonders already witnessed, had all aided me to fool these intelligent people, among whom were a magazine writer, an artist, two theatrical folks, and several writers and lawyers.

Now consider this: That this experiment was far more dramatic and inexplicable than is generally seen at professional seances, where money is paid for admittance. Yet on incidents such as these, the credulous people of the masses are convinced of spiritism and defrauded by fakers, whose wonders I warrant could be unraveled as simply as the one I have just recorded. I did these things to study and expose. Professionals do them for money. Is it not highly probable that others who earn their living at this mockery are forced to work out similar "wonders?" I do not say spiritualism is wrong. I do not essay to pass judgment on this great question. It is against the fakers that I direct my campaign, beseeching every sensible man and woman to save their hard-earned money and evade them.

Going the Limit.

Jones—If Mr. Oldboy makes any such assertion, I will denounce him as a liar.

President—Mr. Jones, I call you to order. Our by-laws do not allow you to go that far.

Jones—Then I call Mr. Oldboy a liar as far as it is permitted by the by-laws of this association.

Literally.

Six Miles Up!

And Safety Instead of Death Because of a New and Wonderful Device for Aviators

The picture, which was taken at an altitude of more than six miles, shows Messrs. Maurice Bienaime and Jacques Schneider in the car of the balloon "Icare" wearing the patent breathing apparatus. In 1878 the balloon "Zenith" attained a height of about four miles, but two of its three passengers were suffocated. With this apparatus the fatality could not have occurred.

By GARRETT P. SERVISS.

THE greatest peril for those who ascend to great altitudes is not that of falling, but that of being suffocated, like fish taken out of water!

It was the climbers of high mountains who first discovered the fact that it is often difficult for men to breathe at a height of from two and a half to three miles above sea level. The late Edward Whymper, the conqueror of the terrible Matterhorn, made many experiments on this, and he concluded, after climbing Chimborazo and other huge peaks in the Andes, that the cause of "mountain sickness," as the trouble was called, was due both to the lessened value of air that is inspired at such altitudes and to the expansion of the gases contained within the body, producing a pressure upon the internal organs.

But more recent study has shown that the difficulty arises mainly from the comparative lack of oxygen in the upper air, and that this may be overcome by means of apparatus supplying extra oxygen to the lungs.

The two principal constituents of the atmosphere are oxygen and nitrogen. Nitrogen is an inert gas which stifles animal respiration. Oxygen, on the other hand, is a very active gas, which, when breathed, supports animal life. When mixed, as near the earth's surface, in the proportion of about four volumes of nitrogen to one of oxygen, the air is respirable, and the inertness of the nitrogen does no harm. But if the proportion of oxygen is reduced the air becomes stifling.

Now, oxygen is heavier than nitrogen in ratio of about eight to seven, and in obedience to the law that heavier substances sink lower than lighter ones, the oxygen thins out as the height above the ground increases, until its proportion to the nitrogen becomes considerably reduced. Above three or four miles the amount of oxygen is so much diminished that breathing becomes very difficult, and at still higher altitudes respiration may cease entirely.

A Tragedy.

A very tragic instance of the effect thus produced is furnished by the story of the famous balloon ascent made in April, 1878, by Gaston Tissandier, Croce Spinelli and Signor Sivel. They ascended from La Villette in France, in the balloon "Zenith," to a height of 28,200 feet, or a little more than five and one-third miles. The thinness of the air, and as we now know, the relative lack of oxygen, killed Spinelli and Sivel, and nearly cost the life of Tissandier.

To show what modern science and invention have done to avert this peril of the high atmosphere, let us turn to the story of a still higher ascent, made on May 28, 1913, by the balloon "Icare," carrying Albert Senouque, Jacques Schneider and M. Bienaime. They started from Lamotte-Breuil in France, and attained an elevation of nearly 33,000 feet, or six and a quarter miles, and yet they did not suffer at all, and came down in perfect condition, and exulting in their great feat!

Their success and immunity from suffocation were due to the fact that they took with them the apparatus shown in the accompanying photograph.

A Wonderful Picture.

This consists of an air-tight vessel filled with compressed oxygen. A mask which can be fitted closely over the nose and mouth is connected by a tube with the reservoir of oxygen. There is a pressure gauge which enables the aeronaut to measure the quantity of oxygen remaining in the reservoir, and there is also a device by which to regulate the amount flowing through the tubes. Thus they could take just as much oxygen as they needed and no more. The rate of supply varied from two quarts per minute to ten. The reservoir contained about 1,600 quarts.

They began to breathe the oxygen when at a height of about 11,000 feet.

The method of using the apparatus is shown in the photograph, which was taken by Senouque, showing Bienaime and Schneider, with their breathing masks on, at the very time when they were at the top of their flight, more than six miles above the earth!

Similar apparatus has recently been carried by mountain climbers, and by the pilots of aeroplanes ascending to great altitudes. With the rapid progress of aerial navigation it will become indispensable in the future.

If fish had human brains they might safely make a voyage of discovery in the air!

MELANCHOLY WOMEN

Should Profit by Mrs. Hurley's Experience—Her Own Story Here Told.

Eldon, Mo.—"I was troubled with displacement, organic inflammation and female weakness. For two years I could not stand on my feet long at a time and I could not walk two blocks without enduring cutting and drawing pains down my right side which increased once a month. I have been at that time purple in the face and would walk the floor. I could not lie down or sit still sometimes for a day and a night at a time. I was nervous, had very little appetite, no ambition, melancholy, and often felt as though I had not a friend in the world.

"After I had tried most every female remedy first, without success, my mother-in-law advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I did so and gained in strength every day. I have now no trouble in any way and highly praise your medicine. It advertises itself."—Mrs. S. T. HURLEY, Eldon, Missouri.

Remember, the remedy which did this was Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. For sale everywhere.

It has helped thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing down feeling, indigestion, and nervous prostration, after all other means have failed. Why don't you try it?

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

IN ALL PROBABILITY, YES.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

A certain girl friend of mine recently wrote me a letter asking a favor of me. I could easily oblige her as the favor is slight. I have been keeping company with a friend of hers lately and am decidedly in love with her. She (the one who wrote the letter) knows this, but still bestows her attentions on me. I myself am not paying her much attention and do not like her. Do you think I would arouse the jealousy of my lover if I showed the other friend this favor just to be polite? M. B.

You letter is rather ambiguous, as you do not state the nature of the favor.

If of such a nature it would cause trouble between you and your sweetheart, you must refuse. Your first thought should be of her.

And please see to it that the other girl's attentions are bestowed elsewhere. I am afraid she will make trouble.

THERE MAY BE SOME EXCUSE.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 18, am considered very handsome, and am in love with a boy three years my senior. He tells me he loves me, but when we have an engagement he always disappoints me. Do you think he is sincere? MARJORIE.

If by "always" you mean once or twice, he may have been unavoidably detained. But if he makes a practice of disappointing you, you must make no more engagements with him, for he cares nothing for you.

HIS RUDENESS IS INEXCUSABLE.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I have been married four years and am only 22 years old. My husband is 29. When out in company with my husband, is it not his place to notice me or talk to me?

When out dining at a friend's, is it right for him to pay attention to young ladies at the table by passing dishes to them and not noticing me? R. B.

He does everything he should not, and his sins of omission are as great.

His behavior is unpardonable, but I know of no redress for you. I hope all girls of 18 who think they are old enough to select a husband will take warning from you.

OBEY YOUR PARENTS.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I have been attending college, and last fall met a young man who is also a student. For the past four months he has been very attentive to me. I love him very much. My parents, who know the young man, say he is wild and associates with bad company. They want me to give him up. What shall I do? I love my family, but I also love the young man very, very much. M. F. F.

I would urge you to obey your parents, were the young man desirable, for parents always know best. How much more I urge it since he is wild and dissolute! Give him up! Let there be no compromise. I add my pleadings to those of your parents.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"Brave!" he exclaimed in low, contemptuous tones. "It takes no bravery to fight a coward—and that's what this ghost is! It's a coward, like every other spook. Did you ever hear of any spirit that walked in the daytime? Never! They sneak and dodge and hide in crumbling and deserted places. I tell you that men are not half so afraid of spirits as spirits are of men! Face the supernatural, and it is beaten before the fight begins. Spooks, horse thieves and peevish wildcats can all be tamed by the same little charm."

He stoped in a dead silence. The others were staring at him intently, but with highly different expressions.

"Charm?" repeated the Duke, vaguely.

"What is it?" asked the Princess, breathlessly.

Unostentatiously, Jarvis produced his pistol, handling it as one might handle a familiar pencil. To one reared in a community where firearms are never seen excepting in the windows of the hardware store the sight of a pistol occasions either panic or the utmost indifference, depending entirely on the degree of ignorance or natural timidity. But in localities where the revolver is as common and serves the same purpose as the rapier of medieval Europe it is a known and fixed quantity. To one native to those localities the interest in the appearance of the pistol is directed entirely toward the man who displays it—what manner of man he is and what is his manner of handling the weapon.

The Duke had never seen a pistol excepting once or twice on the field of honor and strapped to the thigh of a cavalry man. He was an utter stranger to the type of man to whom a 44-caliber revolver is a shield sword. Consequently, though any ten-year-old boy from the lower Ohio Valley could have told him at one glance that Warren Jarvis carried a revolver. Because it was a protection and not a menace, as it is to be unused, the appearance of the weapon seemed to amuse him, rather than otherwise.

A Joke.

"I had been hoping, Mr. Warren," he said, with light scorn, "that you had some subtle method of handling this problem. But no! You propose to meet the forces of the supernatural with fire-arms! I may tell you that this specter has been fired at before without the slightest effect."

Jarvis smiled and nodded as he returned the pistol to his pocket.

"Quite likely," Your Excellency. I have seen rifle fire that had not the slightest effect on a wildcat—for the very good reason that the shooting was wilder than the cat."

The Duke made a gesture as if waiving all respnosibility.

"I am sorry for you, Mr. Warren. You will find the ghost more real than the treasure."

"But the treasure is real, Carlos!" exclaimed the Princess, with spirit. "Would I have crossed the ocean for this locket unless I knew? Why, with this paer a total stranger, anybody who had never seen the castle, could walk right up to the place and point out the very stone that hides it!"

For the barest fraction of a second the glances of the two men crossed like foils.

"Pretty dangerous sort of paper to have around," observed Jarvis, slowly. "Look out that somebody doesn't get there ahead of you."

"Yes, it is a dangerous paper," chimed in the Duke in the same time, "if it leads any one into the castle."

The young man laughed, silently and naturally.

"Well, Your Excellency, I'd go a long way for the fun of unraveling a good mystery with a little spice of danger thrown in."

Dangerous Ground.

The Duke nodded as if he understood and sympathized with the feeling. Then, as if something had just occurred to him, he remarked:

"You needn't have gone so far, Mr. Warren. You are leaving a very unusual case behind you in New York. I suppose you read the papers on your way to the boat?"

The young man's lips twitched and he glanced at the trunk.

"Why, no. I was so wrapped up in my baggage I really didn't have a chance."

He glanced slyly at the Princess, who immediately discovered something of interest out of a porthole.

"This will interest you, too, cousin," remarked the Duke, picking up a newspaper he had dropped when he first presented himself to his kinswoman. "You were at the Vanderlip last night, I believe." He opened the paper, found the item he had in mind and read aloud:

"'Pistol duel in Vanderlip Hotel—Guests awake in panic to find prominent Kentuckian dangerously wounded by unknown assailant—Mysterious escape.—Colonel James Markham, a prominent and wealthy Kentuckian, nearly met his death at 5 o'clock this morning in a pistol duel in his room at the Vanderlip Hotel.' 'At a late hour the police had no clew to the identity of his assailant except the remarkable fact that he is still hiding somewhere in the hotel.'"

"He's probably a long way from the hotel by now," interrupted Jarvis with a smile.

"They say he couldn't have gotten out without being seen."

Jarvis shrugged his shoulders. "That's the theory of the police or the reporters."

"What do you think?" demanded the Duke.

"Oh, he might have escaped in a thousand ways. But that's hardly in my line. That work belongs to what we call the 'gum-shoes.'"

"'Gum-shoes!'" echoed the Duke, with amazement.

"Yes, ordinary detectives," Jarvis explained. "But," he added, turning to the Princess, "we are keeping you from getting settled, I'm afraid. So, if you will excuse me, I will see you both at dinner, perhaps."

"Yes, do," invited the Princess, graciously. "And, Carlos, do arrange to sit with us. We will have quite a party."

The Police.

Jarvis bowed to the Duke. "I am pleased to have made your acquaintance, Your Excellency."

"Thank you, Mr. Warren. I find you most interesting. I shall be glad to hear more of—of your remarkable profession."

There was just the faintest echo of a sneer in this last, but the young man bowe as if complimented, and had just turned to the door, when there was a sharp knock. He drew back and the Princess quickly opened it.

With no greeting, bow or apology, two men thrust themselves into the stateroom. Jarvis recognized them at once and set his shoulders for the final combat.

By this you are not to suppose that he was personally acquainted with the men themselves—his familiarity was with the type. In all the world-wide phantasmagoria of races and classes there is none that can be so readily recognized and classified as the New York detective. With the present craze for uniformed bellboys, pages, milliners' attendants, door tenders, errand boys and governors it is quite possible to confuse the uniformed policeman with some of these. But when he is sent out in plain clothes there is no mistaking him. When you have seen one of them you can recognize any one of them to the extreme range of your vision. There is a combination of a certain physical solidity manifest in their carriage and mental stolidity evidenced in their faces that can be found nowhere else.

This pair were typical—thick-chested, thick-handed, thick-headed, with round moon-like faces.

On the Rack.

One stepped just inside the door and a little to one side of it as if on guard. The other advanced a step farther. He had evidently been decided on as spokesman. He glanced at the two men and then addressed the Princess, consulting a tiny note-book as he spoke.

"Is this Miss M. T. Ar-r-agan?" he inquired in a rich, "far-down" brogue, overlaid with the indescribable Manhattanese accent.

"Yes," replied the Princess, uncertainly, and evidently puzzled by the sudden and unexplained intrusion. Jarvis remained in the background and thrust his wounded hand into his overcoat pocket. The Duke's little mustache began to bristle and he stepped forward.

"You were at the Vanderlip Hotel last night?" pursued Detective Driscoll, ignoring the Duke.

"Ye-es."

"The lock on your door was broken?"

"Yes."

"I am from headquarters, ma'am," explained the detective, having gotten these "damaging admissions." "And I have orders to clear up one or two little matters connected with that affair at the hotel last night."

The exalted cousin could no longer restrain himself.

"Orders, orders!" he burst out. "To break in here! What headquarters?"

Detective Driscoll stared at him in open-eyed insolence. Jarvis smiled discreetly behind his hand.

"Police Headquarters!" bellowed the detective so loudly that every one started. His colleague at the door smiled wearily.

"Do you know whom you are addressing?" spluttered the grandee angrily.

Detective Driscoll rolled toward him, pushed out about five cubic inches of chin and snarled:

"That'll be about all from you!" resentative Kimbrough, of Harris County a snap. Driscoll returned to the Duke quietly, "let me attend to this matter. Won't you come in, gentlemen?"

"Thanks," said Detective Driscoll, easily, nodding to his partner to close the door and giving the Duke a final glare as if daring him to say another word.

"Yes," Jarvis' pleasant voice added its soothing influence, "we were just talking about the mystery."

The Duke, feeling that he would only risk a loss of dignity by quarreling with a foreign police officer, took the cue and held out the olive branch with a patronizing air.

"You are, I take it," he remarked to Driscoll as the sleuth was peering into his little book, "one of the—er 'gum shoes.'"

Jarvis snickered, the book shut with a snap. Driscoll returned to the duke and thrust a menacing face into his.

"Gum shoes!" he snarled. "Say, are you tryin' to be funny?"

The Duke startled, drew back a step.

"Well, sir," he replied half apologetically, "you are speaking rather loudly, and, if I may say so, with undue asperity. I presume I have offended you."

"'You presume!'" answered Driscoll. "That's a hot one! Say—who are you, any way?"

The exalted cousin drew himself up and gave one end of his mustache an upward twist.

"I am Hernando, Duke d'Alva," he replied pompously. "I have other titles, but they would hardly interest you."

The detective looked him over from head to foot and licked his lips hungrily.

"Dook de Alvers—and then some, eh? Ain't that nice! Well, if you was the Archbishop of Canterbury I'd run yer in and take yer ashore if yer gimme any more sass!" Fascinated by a savage glare the Duke declined to give him any more "sass," and the detective turned to the Princess, but still eyed the exalted cousin, as if longing for an excuse to "run him in."

Spoiled by Success

PRECISELY as the clocks in the vicinity of Dowman Square announced the hour of midnight, John Maine's pen ceased suddenly in its rapid flight across the paper before him. For a time he sat motionless, his forehead wrinkled in perplexity. Twice he attempted to resume his work, but each time stopped short in the effort.

For five long hours he had worked with feverish mental energy and the first time his pen refused to become the vehicle of his thoughts the physical strength of the man gave out, then, as a gift from the gods, came the blessing of sleep to the jaded worker.

Dimly, vaguely, John Maine became conscious of the fact that his arms were bound and useless at his side. His legs were cramped in an unnatural position; he endeavored to move his head, and discovered, with a painful shock, that his neck was securely held by a tight collar attached to the back of his chair. With startled eyes he glanced round swiftly in the little circle his bonds allowed and saw nothing. Then, as the perspiration oprued from him in his fear, he knew that from somewhere in the room a voice was speaking, slowly, monotonously, but its every word articulated with striking distinctness.

"Don't waste your energy," came in a sibilant whisper. "You have nothing to fear but the truth. Compose yourself.

"I am here to talk," began the voice, "and you to listen."

"So it seems," said Maine briefly. "Tell me," he urged quietly, "who are you?"

"Ten years ago, John Maine," the unknown said, completely ignoring the other's question, "you were a poor man struggling to achieve distinction. Today you are an acknowledged power in the literary world; but has your path upward been a clean, praiseworthy path?"

Congratulations.

The man in the chair stirred uneasily; his eyes sought the one remaining flicker in the fire.

"I suppose," he mused, addressing the tiny, cheerless flame as one in a reverie, "I suppose you're a kind of spectre of the past, eh? You've a remarkably fine idea of stage management," he added, with assumed lightness. "As one artist to another, I congratulate you on your sense of the dramatic."

"You fool! You unspeakable fool!" hissed the voice venomously in his ear. "As you can not tell yourself, suppose I show you what manner of man you are. Take your mind back ten years and tell me what happened then. You can't?"

"I was married ten years ago," Maine replied, hastily.

"So you were married ten years ago, were you?"

"As an unknown man," the voice continued evenly, "without a penny to bless yourself, you married the sweetest little girl in Christendom. She left her parents, she abandoned all to make a mesalliance with you; she shared your garret, she helped you with your work and she bore her altered condition in life with a fortitude which only threw your quibbling nature into more heinous relief. Slowly, gradually, as you mounted the ladder to success, all the magnificent resolutions of your early married life faded into insignificance. You lived only for your work. You became a supreme artist. And you, for whom she had forsaken everything, forgot the very existence of the woman whose heart was still yours.

A Son.

"Five years ago," continued the voice, "a son was born to you, and for a time you forgot you were a man of letters. But you soon slipped away when your clubs called you, when the public fawned on you; and your wife, broken-hearted and neglected, fled from your home. Did you realize then"—the words came in a thundering torrent now—"the revolting act of savagery which cast your wife adrift without the child she loved so dearly?"

"Good heavens!" exclaimed Maine fearfully. "Are you—"

"Listen!" came the imperious command. "She wanted your love, and you had buried it in your success. But, strangely as it sounds, you still loved the child that is sleeping in this house. Do you think that the boy has not missed his mother more than you have missed your wife? John Maine, in the grate before you are ashes, cold and gray. They are your portion in life, for that boy of yours, his heart yearning for the tender love you can not give, is even now slipping into the void——"

"Enough!" screamed the wretched man. "You lie—you know you lie!" He moistened his lips with his tongue. "Who are you?" he asked, with sudden humility.

"I am your better self," came sadly, morosely from a long way off, and John Maine sat up on the words to find himself blinking terrified in the small arc light from a policeman's lantern.

"Beg pardon, sir," whispered the policeman, quickly covering the light; "but I guessed you would be in here at work as usual, and, and——"

His Wife.

"I've been asleep, constable," Maine interposed slowly, and the words conveyed a subtle relief to his aching heart at once. "But how on earth did you get in?" he asked, suddenly realizing that the presence of a policeman in his house in the early hours of the morning was something to be explained.

"Softly, sir," counseled the other. "I saw a woman creep through a window at the back, and followed her. I've been on this beat for a good many years, sir, and I fancied I knew who she was. I thought perhaps you might like"——

Maine was standing up now, alert and brisk.

"Is she still in the house?" he asked.

The constable nodded.

"She crept upstairs, sir," he said simply.

But John Maine waited for no more. With his heart pounding at his ribs, he sprang out of the room and leaped swiftly up the stairs.

The policeman followed him slowly... Maine had reached the landing which led to the boy's room, when he heard a door in front of him open. He switched on the electric light, and there, panting fearfully in the sudden blaze, leaning against the wall, was the thin and emaciated figure of a woman.

Her clothes were in rags and atters; in her arms she clutched a sleeping child to her breast.

They stood thus, silently regarding each other, until the sound of a discreet cough warned Maine of the presence of the constable. With hands that shook perceptibly, and eyes in which there lurked a strange moistness, John Maine turned swiftly on the landing.

"You're a good fellow," he said quietly. "It is as you surmised. My wife"—he waved his hand courteously to the wretched woman in front of him—"has returned home unexpectedly. You can let yourself out."

They waited until the man had passed through the house and they could hear his retreating footsteps die away in the distance. Then:

"Maisie," said Maine, gently, "you have come home to me?"

The woman tottered where she stood, one arm went out before her, sweetly, pathetically, and John Maine sprang to her side in an instant.

"Maisie, my love!" he cried, the tears coursing down his cheeks with the weakness of a strong man who is suddenly robbed of his calm, "thank God, I know my better self!"

Jealousy.

The teacher was addressing his pupils on the subject of laziness and idleness.

He drew a terrible picture of the habitual loafer—the man who dislikes work and who begs for all he gets.

"Now, John," said the teacher to a little boy who had been very inattentive during the lesson.

John was instantly on the alert.

"Tell me," continued the teacher, "who is the miserable individual who gets clothes, food and lodging and yet does nothing in return?"

John's face brightened.

"Please, sir," said he, "the baby."

AN EPIDEMIC OF HOFMANITIS HAS HIT NASHVILLE

NASHVILLE, TENN., July 12.—An epidemic of Hofmanitis has broken out among the baseball bugs in Voltown, and the infection has spread like wildfire, even unto the mightiest hammer-throwers, who have been blistering the poor, old Vanishing Vols for their rank showing in the gonfalon hunt.

The town is simply delirious in its joy, that the friendship of the old swimming days in Akron between Bill Schwartz and the former Pirate was strong enough to induce Artie to rush to his old pal's assistance, while the appeal for help was loudest.

There is a striking parallel to be found in Circus Solly's case with that of the boy manager, for it was Bill Bernhardt's distress signal in 1909, when first base was in wretched hands, that persuaded Schwartz to give up a swell job with the Diamond Rubber people and hike to Nashville to help out his old friend he had known back with the Cleveland Naps, when Bernhard was one of the kingpin slabbers of the big show. It's a hoary narrative, but it only goes to prove the infernal way history has of "working in double."

Doesn't Appear To Be "In".

Maybe something better could have happened to the Vols than the acquisition of Hofman, but nobody can make the fans in this town believe that, and they are not forgetting that it was for the sake of "Auld Lang Syne" that Artie came, and Schwartz could not have built a greater monument in the fans' hearts in any other fashion than by landing this "ex-major leaguer who is going back."

If Artie is on his way, nobody can see the end of the passage with a pair of field glasses, and there is quite a swarm of youngsters coming who will have to travel at a mighty hefty clip before they will meet Hofman going out.

Schwartz benched himself when Artie lighted in camp, and it was the ex-Cub's tip to the boy leader that he warm the bench a while until he could get together the nerves that were shattered by the sickening plunge which the Vols have taken cellarways.

He Was Chance's Understudy.

The first station was no stranger to Artie, for when he was at the top of his stride he was Frank Chance's understudy with the Cubs, and although the big fellow had not seen a baseball for two weeks, jumped right into the game and took care of everything like a veteran.

Hofman brought to the Vols the stuff they have been so sadly in need of—ginger—and he wasn't stingy about handing it around. The Schwartzmen have been playing in a totally demoralized fashion. They have gone out with an idea that no matter who was in the box, they were doomed to lose, and with their leader unable either to hit or field, not a man on the club has been able to play anything like his best.

BALDWIN MATCHED TO BATTLE LEACH CROSS

LOS ANGELES, July 12.—Matty Baldwin and Leach Cross have been matched for a 20-round bout at Vernon Arena on July 29 by Promoter McCarey. Arrangements for the the match were made by wire and closed in record time. Sam Wallach, the dentist's manager, wired to McCarey from San Francisco accepting terms for the fight, and will return here with Cross on Sunday and take possession of Jack Doyle's camp at Vernon on Tuesday.

Kid Williams and Charley Ledoux, the bantams scheduled for twenty rounds at Vernon on Tuesday night, made a short day of it in the training camps to-day, but to-morrow's workout will be a strenuous one and both boys will go the limit for the benefit of the usual Sunday crowd. The little fellows are in fine shape.

CROSS AND SHERIDAN MAY CLASH AT KANSAS CITY

CHICAGO, July 12.—Leach Cross, the New York dentist-fighter, who has gained the position of contender for the lightweight championship through his knockouts of Joe Mandot and Bud Anderson will have for his next opponent a Chicago fighter, if arrangements under way do not go awry.

Cross practically has agreed to terms for a ten-round bout with Mickey Sheridan to be staked at Kansas City next month. Fred Gilmore, manager of Sheridan, yesterday received a telegram from Cross' manager, who is at Los Angeles, stating that everything was o. k. for the match if held the early part of next month.

The Kansas City promoters are anxious to hold the fight at the American Association baseball park either on August 2 or August 9, but it is understood there is some hitch over the plan.

CHAPPELLE PICKED TO WIN BIG EVENT AT NEW YORK

NEWYORK, July 12.—Arthur Chappelle, the motorcycle speed demon, was to-day picked to win the sweepstakes handicap at the Brighton Beach motordrome to-night. In a sensational practice drive of nine miles yesterday Chappelle covered the distance in 5 minutes 59 1-5 seconds. This beats the record of 6:01 2-5 set by Eddie Hasha last year. Chappelle will give the field a handicap of two and one-quarter laps.

Magnetism or Hypnotism Aids

By Bill Bailey.

CHICAGO, July 12.—If any of these modern colleges happens to be seeking a man to teach that valuable art of personal magnetism we know the man they are seeking.

Who? Why, Frank Chance.

A ball field a strange place to seek a man to teach that valuable art? Maybe. Again, why not?

Oh, yes, we may be mistaken. It may be downright hypnotism that this fellow possesses.

Naturally those few words were but the introduction.

* * *

HERE is the story:

Why are those New York fans so tolerant with Chance? Remember what happened to Wolverton? Remember what they said about Chase when he was bossing the team? Remember what happened to Clark Griffith when he made several ineffectual attempts to capture a pennant? There may have been mean words in the dictionary that were not heaped, hurled and tossed at the heads of these men. I say there may have been. But I don't believe there were.

And Chance!

Say, he has a ball club that hasn't won anywhere near one-third of its games. Its percentage is less than .300. Not a peep, not a chirp has come out of the fans at New York.

"Think what a team he had when he came here," they tell you. "You wait."

* * *

FRANK CHANCE and his men are here. Still it is a different Frank Chance who is leading the Highlanders. The fellow the West Siders knew so well was a worrying Frank Chance. If the West Siders had lost as many ball games in a season as those Highlanders already have put on the losing side of the ledger it's terrible to think what would have become of Chance.

Then he worried. If his team developed a losing streak, and two losses in succession was a losing streak in those days, he didn't sleep.

And now?

He has developed into a philosopher. "I can't worry like I used to," he said. "I'm fighting just as hard to win as I ever did. But no more of the sleepless nights for me. I couldn't and stick in the game."

* * *

IT may be that the New York fans realize that Chance had nothing but numbers to work with that has made them so tolerant. But the fact remains that for about the first time in the history of New York they are not howling because they are down in the race. For in New York, you know, they can't understand why anybody should have anything that can lick anything they possess.

* * *

FRANK CHANCE certainly has no warm spot in his heart for the fellows who touted him on Bill Borton. And he certainly has a lot of people in this city who should ask him for forgiveness.

"Can Borton hit?" the P. L. asked of several of his baseball friends about here when he was in Chicago on the last trip.

"Can he hit?" was the comeback. "Say, he simply can murder the ball. He just won five games for the White Sox in Detroit. He just about won that city series last fall, as you well know. Say, if there is one thing he can do, it is to hit. He may be a bit shy on the pep and the ginger. Maybe he can't get around those bases as fast as Rollie Zeider. But hit? Say, if there were nine Bortons on an opposing team half the pitchers would go to digging sewers."

And hitting was the one thing that Borton didn't do.

Oh, yes, there are a lot of alleged baseball men in Chicago who will have a tough time explaining to this same Chance.

* * *

AT that Chance doesn't figure that the White Sox can afford to lie back and give him the merry ha-ha because Borton didn't develop into a hero in New York. For the P. L. is certain that he hooked one man from the South Side aggregation who will develop into a hummer. Gossett, the catcher, is the lad.

"There is a lad who will develop into a star," said the P. L. "I look to see him ranked as one of the greatest catchers in the league in a little while. And he cost only the waiver price."

Chance naturally isn't admitting that he received the worst of the Chase-Zelder-Borton deal. But if he did he would still figure his trading percentage was .500. Because he thinks he picked up a mighty valuable youngster in this same Gossett.

EMPIRE LEAGUE NOTES

Something that rarely happens in a ball game happened in Waycross this week in one of the Waycross-Cordele games. All assists credited to Cordele went to two players, the pitcher and catcher. Seven were made, and the catcher took four of them.

* * *

Seigfried, of Brunswick, is one of the best all-round players in the league. He is just now playing in the outfield, but is a dandy first baseman and plays short like a veteran. His batting is splendid.

* * *

"Babe" Wilder continues his record of winning almost every game he pitches. It is reported that he will go to the Savannah team at the close of this season, but Jacksonville has been after him and may land him. Wilder is the best pitcher Cordele has and is going good now.

* * *

Valdosta turned around, after an apparent slump, and walloped the Shrimp Chasers to perfection. Jordan will not tolerate indifferent playing, even if his team has won the first season rag.

* * *

Shortstop Murphy, a league leader at bat and a sensational fielder, one of the best Thomasville has, is out of the game with a sprained ankle.

* * *

Clancy, of West Virginia, who came South to play with Brunswick, is getting a try-out in Waycross. He fields fairly well, but is a little weak at bat.

* * *

Of all ball players, one always to be depended upon to act square and be as much a gentleman on the diamond as off, is Reagan, the clever manager for Cordele.

Derrick, one of the new umpires, has shown in just a few games that beefing won't go in games at which he officiates. He chased Manager Moran, of the Brunswick team, from the Valdosta grounds for beefing, and before that episode slapped a fine on Manager Jordan, of the Valdosta team.

* * *

Wild Bill Clark, the Waycross manager, has a runabout that he chases around in when not playing baseball. His friends claim that it is merely a question of time before Bill has his auto running bases.

* * *

That the schedule for the next Empire season will be arranged entirely different from the one used this year is certain. Hardly any team in the league is satisfied the way they are having to play, and the directors, at the end of the season, are going to see to it that a better schedule is prepared for 1914.

* * *

So far, the Empire has escaped any serious injuries to ball players. All teams have had players out for a few days because of minor hurts, but nothing serious to date.

* * *

Cordele's hard-hitting left fielder, Wassen, continues to swat the ball. He has had but a few off days and seems to be able to hit the league's best.

* * *

Americus seems to be getting a little of the hard luck that has been haunting most of the teams since the first of the month. Its team is playing well nearly every day, but fails to win the majority of games. But Americus has got to be considered by whatever team wins the pennant—that is certain.

BOXING

News of the Ring Game

Gunboat Smith, claimant of the world's heavyweight title, has challenged Georges Carpentier, the tough French champion of Europe, to a 20-round contest, for $5,000 a side in England, France or Belgium. If Carpentier agrees, the match probably will be arranged to take place during the fall.

* * *

When it is taken into consideration that Frank Klaus, middleweight, recently stopped Carpentier, the New York heavyweight should find little trouble in putting the foreigner away in quick order. Carpentier would have everything to gain and nothing to lose in such a match.

* * *

Jess Willard is another scrapper who has his eyes peeled on a Smith match. Tom Jones' protege is taking on all the big hopes in 4-round bouts on the coast and is showing improved form. If Smith refuses to meet Willard, Jones says he will try to sign his boxer for a Pelky set-to.

* * *

Knockout Brown, the Chicago middleweight, will make his next fight against Frank Klaus, at Butte, Mont. Tommy Walsh, who is now handling Brown's affairs, wired the Butte promoters his acceptance for the mill yesterday. The pair will probably meet on Labor Day.

* * *

Kid Duke, local bantamweight, wishes to announce that he is ready to take on any of the local boys seeking fame in the padded arena. Duke aims his challenge at Young, Pries and Britt. The kid says he will accommodate either of the boys with a neat side bet.

* * *

Kid Young, the local newsboy boxer, says he is getting tired of reading challenges from various boys in the city. "Let them post their money and I will sign to meet any of them," wails the little featherweight. Several boys have been sending in their defis daily, but when the Kid asks them to put up, they usually beat it to the tall timbers.

* * *

Johnny Coulon, bantamweight champion, left a Chicago hospital the other day weighing 115 pounds, which is 10 pounds more than he weighed a few ago when he entered the institution to be treated for stomach trouble. Despite his rapid improvement in health, it is doubtful whether he will be able to box for some time.

* * *

"Wildcat" Ferns and Young Denny have been re-matched to box at New Orleans. The pair met in the Pelican City on Labor Day and Ferns was awarded the verdict after ten rounds of fierce fighting. The Denny admirers, however, were not satisfied with the decision, and the promoters decided to send them over the 20-round route on August 13.

* * *

Tom McCarey is still working on a Ritchie-Cross match for Labor Day. Cross has already consented to the bout, but the champion is waiting to hear from several other promoters, who are after his services. New Orleans wants Willie to box Britton, while Vancouver is after a Ritchie-Welsh mill.

* * *

Coast fans have made Kid Williams a 2 to 1 favorite over Charley Ledoux. The two bantamweights clash in a 20-round mill in Tom McCarey's arena at Los Angeles on July 15.

* * *

The Johnny Dundee-Jack White match, scheduled to take place on the coast July 29, may not take place. Dundee is holding out for a larger guarantee than the promoters are willing to give for such a scrap. If Dundee refuses to meet White, George Kirkwood or Tommy Dixon may be substituted.

* * *

Terry Nelson, local lightweight, is waiting to hear from Dayton, Ohio, regarding a match there. Terry is trying to get on with either Jimmy Murphy, Jimmy Traverse or Danny Goodman. Nelson is surely entitled to a match with some good 133-pounder. He is a willing mixer and always gives the fans a run for their money.

* * *

Packey McFarland gave exhibition bouts at the Joliet, Ill., prison the other day for the entertainment of the prisoners. He boxed Kid Mack, of Joliet, and other local boys. Warden Allen is a friend of McFarland.

HARRIS TO MEET ALRICK IN TENNIS TITLE MATCH

LITHCHFIELD, CONN., July 12.—F. H. Harris, of Brattleboro, Vt., will meet Alrick H. Man, Jr., of Richmond Hill, N. Y., for the State tennis title and cup here this afternoon. Harris yesterday defeated W. S. Cushing, of Simsbury, in the final of the State tennis tournament. Man won the New England championship from Harris in the tournament at Hartford last month.

YACHTING.

Becalmed, becalmed, all, all becalmed,
Becalmed on a wide, wide bay.
Our souls were tried when the breezes died,
For we moved not either way.

We sat and mourned for the west wind scorned
To hand us a single breath,
And, what was worst, we were all athirst,
And it felt like the pangs of death.

The wind may howl and the sea may growl,
And the waves be high and strong,
But we scorn the worst when we have no thirst
And we sing a gladsome song.

But worst of all, when there is no squall,
Nor even a breath of air,
And the deck is dry as a desert sky,
Nor even a bottle there.

Becalmed, becalmed, all, all becalmed,
Four miles from the nearest land!
And there we lay for half a day
With an opener in our hand.

Yachts are deceiving. We asked the chauffeur what was concealed beneath the cellar door and he answered: "Life savers." Opening the door and looking into the basement we saw nothing but those things that you wrap around yourself when the boat sinks. One learns only by experience.

We still are a novice as far as things nautical are concerned, but we are forced to admit that we like it as far as we drank.

August Belmont has insured his noble steed, Tracery, for $150,000 for fear of another suffragette rough house. If August were a regular sportsman he would train his steed for the jumps and hold a suffragette steeplechase.

A statistician informs us that the Cardinals accepted 206 chances without an error. Aside from the fact that they lost a flock of games in the meantime it was great baseball.

One is not surprised to read that Bud Anderson was doped when he fought Leach Cross. A flock of knuckles injected at the right spot is quite an effective anesthetic.

Reading a headline, one observes that the "Sox weclome Frank Chance." Looking over the box score one is led to believe it.

SPEAKING OF WORK.

Were I to labor sixteen hours a day,
Without a pause, without a gasp of air,
I would not grieve my fair young life away,
But gladly do my share.
If I were called upon to be a slave
'Twould only make me smile, for I have seen
The hardest working thing this side the grave—

TAYLOR, BRITISH OPEN CHAMP, CALLS OFF TRIP

LONDON, July 12.—J. H. Taylor, open golf champion of England, has decided not to join Harry Vardon and Edward Ray in their American tour to play, during which Vardon and Ray will compete in the open championship tournament at Brookline, Mass. They sail on August 6, accompanied by Wilfrid Reid, professional at the Banstad Downs Club, and Louis Tallier, a French "pro."

JOHNSON IS IN ENGLAND, BUT CAN'T FIGHT THERE

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, July 12.—Jack Johnson, the negro pugilist who fled from Chicago after being convicted of white slavery, arrived here to-day from Paris. Johnson wants to arrange a short bout with some good English heavyweight, preferably Bombardier Wells. Any match that Johnson makes, however, probably will have to be fought on the Continent, for the English authorities will not allow him to box in this country.

After his arrival to-day Johnson visited the newspaper offices in Fleet street and denied stories about him which had been cabled from the United States.

COULON ORDERED TO TAKE LONG REST IN COLORADO

CHICAGO, July 12.—Johnny Coulon, the bantam champion, announced that he probably would not fight again before Thanksgiving Day. Coulon was in the Presbyterian Hospital for ten days, during which time Bertram W. Sippy, a specialist on stomach troubles, gave the little fighter a careful examination. The doctor has ordered the champion to take a long rest in Colorado.

Coulon left the hospital day before yesterday and already is making preparations for the Colorado trip. He expects to leave for the West some time next week.

STARS' CHANCES IN GOLF MEETS RUINED BY RAIN

By Chick Evans.

THERE is an opinion deeply rooted in the minds of most Americans that it rains three-fourths of the time in Great Britain, and that in consequence, the British golfer is an amphibious creature. I can not testify to the truth of this belief because I visited Britain in a dry year, but a friend, who spent several months in the British Isles, assures me that, although it rained every day while he was there, the British rain was not so wet as the American variety. Perhaps my friend's delusion springs from the fact that almost every clubhouse in Great Britain has a drying room where golfers may hang their rain-soaked clothing, while such a convenience is almost unknown in America, the New Edgewater being the only American club that, as far as I know, has made such provision for its members.

Playing golf in the rain is a good deal like jumping into a cold tub—there is always hesitation in the beginning, but the act itself is never regretted, for the real golfer can not let a little thing like the rain interfere with his game. When a man has journeyed all the way out to some country club he is almost sure to play, rain or shine, and I am confident that playing in the rain does not injure any one physically. It is attended, however, with many inconveniences, and to find enjoyment, the player must be well prepared for the weather. He needs an old pair of shoes and other wearing apparel that can be easily dried and not easily injured. But the best of rainy-day clothes are usually too many and too binding for good golf, and raincoats are an abomination. I well remember that W. C. Fownes, Jr., once spent a great deal of valuable time trying to invent one suited to the needs of the golfer.

Moisture Ruins Clubs.

Personally, I dislike to play in the rain; I do not like to get my clothes wet, and most of all, I detect the effect of moisture upon my clubs. The shafts are always heavily stained, so that they may withstand the weather, but water warps wood, and I do hate to draw a wooden club from my bag on a rainy day. Then again, the best grips are supposed to be of oiled and treated leather, and moisture affects them most unfavorably. So the golfer carries towels, because wet hands and wet grips are a distinctly disagreeable combination. Another rainy day necessity is the hooded golf bag.

Of course, no golfer expects to play his best on a rainy day, but in all big tournaments, or indeed any competition, golfers must play, regardless of the weather. The luck of the condition is, however, more deeply felt in a qualification round. Perhaps in the morning the course may have been too fast for the players; then, between 1 and 2, a heavy shower comes up, catching those who must go out then; at 2 the rain ceases and the latter players start forth under most favorable conditions, for the rain has softened the greens and made the balls more manageable. This is a chance of the game that affects almost every score with unequal conditions.

Deluge Has Spoiled Tournaments.

Glen View, for a long time, had an unfortunate reputation for rainy tournaments, big events there being almost invariably attended by terrific downpours. In the National of 1904, the river overflowed the second nine holes, and only the first nine were playable in the finals. None of the Western players can forget the deluge at Denver, and I also recall vividly a four-day tournament at Chicago Golf when it rained practically during the whole competition.

These incidents merely teach us as old fables say, that the real golfer must be a bit of a philosopher. He accepts the weather cheerily and makes the best of it.

MEET AT DROME GOES OVER TO TUESDAY NIGHT

THE Motordrome meet set for decision last night is off until Tuesday night. The rain knocked it out last night and the managers, of which there are three, all with varying views on all subjects, decided to postpone it until Tuesday.

GRAND CIRCUIT HORSES MOVE ON TO PITTSBURG

CLEVELAND, OHIO., July 12.—The entire "works" of the Grand Circuit is on the move to-day over to Pittsburg, where the second Grand Circuit meet of the season will be held.

The first one came to a close at North Randall tracks yesterday with four trotting events that brought out a fine quality of sport. Outsiders shared honors with the favorites. The Tavern "Steak," though previously conceded to Dago F., was won by Eulabel, an outsider.

The 2:00 trot went to Jean Arlon, although Eve Cord, driven by Geers, had been expected to win easily.

The championship trotting sweepstakes was taken by Anvil, a heavy favorite, because he trotted the two fastest miles of the year. The veteran driver Ed Geers pushed Anvil around the oval in the remarkably fast time of 2:04 1-4 in the first heat, and came right back in the next and concluding heat with a mark of 2:04 3-4.

WILLIE RITCHIE WILLING TO BATTLE JACK BRITTON

SAN FRANCISCO, July 12.—Ritchie says that he never received the offer of Promoter Tortorich, of New Orleans, to box Britton for a $20,000 purse, though such an offer had been made through the press.

Regarding such a bout in September, Ritchie says that Tortorich would be treated the same as the other promoters and if he hands in the highest bid he will gladly box in New Orleans. If he does so, Jack Britton, who is a heavy lightweight, will have to make 133 pounds ringside.

Willie is confident that he can make this weight and be at his best. When Ritchie and Britton boxed four rounds in this city they milled at catch weights.

MANY MANAGERS ON COAST IN INTEREST OF BOXERS

LOS ANGELES, CAL., July 12.—With six managers on the ground anxious to arrange matches for their boxers, there is no danger that Promoter McCarey will not be able to keep his fight program filled.

Among those who are here in the interest of high-class boys are Joe Levy, manager of Joe Rivers and Jack White; Sam Wallach, manager of Leach and Phil Cross; Frank Galvin, manager of Charley Ledoux; Sam Harris, manager of Kid Williams; Scotty Montelth, manager of Johnny Dundee, and Dick Donald, manager of Bud Anderson.

Good Time Now For Blood Health

Blood Disorders Gone to Stay.

A few doses of that wonderful blood purifier, S. S. S., will start activities in the cellular tissues of the body and soon show decided changes in the skin. The skin is but a fine network of tiny blood vessels, and the specific action of S. S. S. is declared to be a pronounced stimulation of the activity of these cells. Certain it is that in a surprisingly short time any skin eruption shows a most remarkable change; it begins to dry up; the skin scales off in tiny flecks, and soon a layer of clear, healthy and firm tissue results.

The reason for this is in the peculiar stimulation of S. S. S., which enables the cells in the skin to select from the blood the nutriment it requires for regeneration.

You can obtain S. S. S. at any well stocked drug store, if you insist upon it, but be sure you are not talked into something "just as good."

S. S. S. is prepared by the Swift Specific Company, 180 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga. Write for their illustrated book on skin diseases.

Again Hogg Beats Crackers 6-0

Rain May Stop To-day's Game

By Percy H. Whiting.

THE Gulls and the Crackers meet in the final tangle this afternoon—that is, if the weather is even half-way decent. Early in the afternon the prospects were good that the game would be played. And, for a pleasing change, even if it is Saturday afternoon, the game will be called at the usual time and will go to a decision.

The fates forbid that it be another knock-out.

One fan sized up yesterday's game pretty well when he said:

"Well, that's my idea of a WHITEWASH."

It was all of that and more besides.

The Gulls won, 6 to 0, and they did it with such ease that they made the Crackers look like the tail-enders of a Class D league.

* * *

IT'S a hard matter not to acquire a grouch over a game like that. No matter how one attempts to wax flippant and facetious, the waxing isn't any good at all.

It was a gloomy contest.

At that, there were fielding spots of amazing brilliancy.

Wally Smith fielded like a world's champion. Bisland, despite two errors, almost evened up by some brilliant work. Stock had a brilliant day, and he did it in spite of the fact that Chapman nearly took his head off with a batted ball, which would have taken the "pep" out of an ordinary player.

Hogg pitched another grand game for Mobile.

The last time he was here he beat Atlanta 6 to 0.

Yesterday he won, 6 to 0.

However, he must be getting better, for the last time he allowed six hits, while this time, he gave up only three.

And it was an awful day for Atlanta's records, for Chapman made two out of the three hits, while the big batting stars, Long, Welchonce and Smith, went hitless.

* * *

OF course, it would hurt to be beaten by the Mobile at any time. But it hurts, especially now that the Gulls are crippled and very much weakened.

If the Crackers can't win from them now, what chance have they when the Gulls get back in condition, as they are bound to do soon? This is what the fans are asking themselves, and it's a serious question.

* * *

THE pitching of Dent was a bright feature. After Brady was knocked out Dent took up the burden and carried it well. The Gulls' only run after he went in resulted from a hit and an error.

This chap also made a nice play at the plate when Stock tried to score on what looked like a passed ball. Chapman fielded it and Dent received the throw and tagged Stock out, risking his legs and his neck in doing it. It was a game, clever piece of work.

* * *

ONLY three more games will be played at home after the Gulls depart. The Montgomery team is to be here Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. Then the Crackers beat it away for a long journey.

BROWN PRAISES THE GEORGIAN TO FARMERS

Former Assistant Commissioner of Agriculture Tells Them This Paper Is Best of All.

DUBLIN, July 12.—"I want every farmer in Laurens County—every farmer in Georgia—to read The Atlanta Georgian," said J. J. Brown, formerl Assistant Commissioner of Agriculture for Georgia, in an address at a great rally of the Farmers' Union, seven miles from Dublin, Friday.

"It is the best and fairest paper I have ever read," he continued. "It is our friend and we should read it. Of course, there are other great papers, but there is none in the class of The Atlanta Georgian."

This statement was made while discussing rural free delivery, and was received with enthusiasm by the great crowd present.

Mr. Brown joined Charles S. Barrett and L. M. Rhodes at Dublin Friday, and is a great addition to the team, for he is a great speaker.

Rhodes and Barrett Speak.

Mr. Rhodes, that great big Tennessee farmer, who has statistics, facts and figures to prove his assertions, who knows what the farmers need and who is making their cause his life work, fairly took the big crowd by storm. He is a natural orator and is making friends and converts to the Farmers' Union.

President Barrett made his speech of this tour, and created more enthusiasm than any speaker ever heard in the county. He is the idol of the farmers, and they have faith in him.

Farmers Drive 15 Miles.

More than 200 vehicles surrounded the place of the rally, many of the farmers coming across the country for a distance of fifteen miles, showing their interest in the Farmers' Union. It is the impression of Mr. Rhodes and Mr. Brown that the number of members of the Farmers' Union in Georgia will be increased to 75,000 before another year shall have passed.

Crops in this section of the State are good, and from the appearance of the farmers they have been good for several years.

The speaking lasted more than three hours, and not a single person left, which shows how the farmers feel in regard to unionism.

After the speechmaking a great picnic dinner of fried chiken, potato pie and watermelon was enjoyed.

It is expected that fully 5,000 persons will gather at Waycross on Saturday, where the campaign closes.

Farmers Rally At Douglasville.

DOUGLASVILLE, July 12.—An agricultural rally was held here to-day under the auspices of the State Agricultural College, with a large attendance. The movement was fathered by the Farmers' Union in this county and by the local Commercial Club.

The occasion was also a booster day for the Douglas County Fair to be held here next fall, and several important committees of the Fair Association met the farmers.

Butts Planters Rally at Jackson.

JACKSON, July 12.—Several hundred farmers and their families gathered in Jackson Friday to attend the Butts County Farmers' Institute, held under direction of the State College of Agriculture.

The occasion was made a rally day for the members of the Boys' Corn Club and the Girls' Canning Club. Dinner was served by the farmers at the Farmers' Union Warehouse.

Talks were made by Dr. William Burson, of the department of veterinary science at the State College of Agriculture; Professor T. H. McHatton, of the horticulture department, and S. M. Cown, district agent of the Boys' Corn Club work. County School Superintendent C. S. Maddox was chairman. The meeting was held in the courthouse.

DON'T TIRE AS END OF PONY CONTEST NEARS

Every Incentive Is Offered Candidates in the Race for the Beautiful Shetlands.

Ginger for Contestants.

Shetland ponies never tire. Neither must you if you want one.

It is a half-hearted youngster who tires near the finish.

Watch your receipt book, and go after renewals just before the short-term subscriptions expire.

Remember, you are asking people to do themselves a favor when you ask them to subscribe to The Georgian and American.

Aim for a pony and cart; you may get a pony and saddle. Aim for a pony and saddle, and you may get a gold watch. Aim for a gold watch, and you may get a silver watch, and very likely you will get—left.

Every incentive is being offered contestants to make the last few weeks of The Georgian and American pony contest the liveliest of the entire struggle.

There is a generous extra-vote offer, with its only condition the turning in of $35, $25 or $15 for subscriptions. The subscriptions may be for any length of time, from a month up.

Sunday afternoon, at Grant Park, the ponies will be seen, harnessed and saddled, for the enjoyment of the contestants. There is inspiration for any youngster in driving or riding one of these little animals. Just to enjoy one of them for a few minutes stimulates a desire to own it. Never were more intelligent, kinder or better-trained animals seen in Atlanta.

Parents are particularly invited to be at the Park, when the contest manager will talk with them as to means of helping the children.

PLAN ON TO LEASE SPACE OVER W. & A.

Representative Suggests Way to Raise $100,000 Each Year. Committee Approves.

Representative Barry Wright, of Floyd County, plans to lease the space over the Western and Atlantic Railroad in the business district of Atlanta to a local syndicate for 30 years at $100,000 per annum. His plan met with the favor of the Western and Atlantic Committee of the Legislature, to which it was revealed Friday.

The committee recommended the creation of a committee of two Senators, five Representatives, the Governor and the chairman of the Railroad Commission as ex-officio members, to investigate Representative Wright's plan. It also recommended a legislative appropriation of $5,000 for the investigation.

The committee indorsed a constitutional amendment offered by Representative Meaders, of Oconee County, forbidding the sale of the W. & A., except by vote of the people. A bill providing for the appointment of a joint committee to investigate the desirability of purchasing the A., B. & A. Railroad, thereby extending the W. & A. to the sea, also was indorsed.

Mabel Taliaferro Is Wed in Daisy Field

Carrigan, of La Peer, Mich., a secret for more than a month, Mabel Taliaferro, of Chicago, the actress, formerly wife of Frederic Thompson, New York theatrical promoter, admitted here today she had been married June 1 in the Michigan city.

The marriage took place before a Justice of the Peace, in a field of daisies that edged down to a river bank just outside of La Peer, in order that all possible secrecy might be maintained.

Outcast White Deer Herds With Horses

LIBBY, MONT., July 11.—Henry Wegner, who has a ranch on the upper Yakt, says that a pure white deer has become associated with his the horses and follows them into the horses and follows them into the corral. Mr. Wegner said it was a doe and had pink eyes, so he named it Albino.

Old hunters here say that on account of its freakish apearance it had become an outcast, and in such cases the animal always will go to a herd of cattle or horses if possible.

JAPANESE PACT WITH MEXICO STIRS U. S.

Hostile Attitude Toward Americans Draws Protest Through Ambassador Lane.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

MEXICO CITY, July 12.—Formal protest was lodged to-day by the United States Government against the action of the Mexican Government in allowing the Mexican press to stir up anti-American feeling.

Two notes were presented by United States Ambassador H. L. Wilson. At the same time denial was made of the report that United States warships in the harbor at Guayamas used their wireless and searchlights to aid the rebels.

Those publications have resulted in scattered demonstrations and rioting, although no arrests have been reported. Notices have been posted in the schools here for the children to secure small Japanse flags. These will be carried in a procession of children who will welcome the new Japanese Ambassador upon his arrival.

Jap Concessions Reported.

Mexico is cementing her relations with Japan, and it is reported that a special envoy will soon be sent to Tokio to invite the investment of Japanese capital and rich concessions will be given, it is said.

Following is a translation of the notices posted in the schools:

"The representative of the Japanese Emperor to our Government is about to arrive in this city. The attitude of mutual sympathy and esteem which our people and the people of Japan profess is well known.

"National Life in Balance."

"We firmly believe that the time has come to tender a public and solemn testimonial of international sympathy now that our national life has been put to a test by the imperialistic ambassador of a strong people.

"Therefore, the students of all the schools are asked to be at the railway station, each carrying a Japanese flag, to receive the Japanese Emperor's representative.

"This act will be significant and of great importance. The day and hour of the Japanese Ambassador's arrival will be announced later."

A number of American families have made preparations to leave here if further evidences of hostility are shown.

Minister Admits Crisis.

"It is true that the situation is delicate," said Minister of War Blanquet, "but the Government feels it can cope with it. Lamentable consequences may be occasioned by the anti-American feeling, but we are trying to kill it."

El Pais, most rabid of the newspapers, to-day published nearly a full-page picture of Friday's anti-American demonstration by students. On the editorial page the paper said:

"We see in Japan a future ally and defender of our independence, because such an alliance would be dangerous to the United States."

An anonymous letter threatening the United States Embassy with destruction has been received by Ambassador Wilson and turned over to the Mexican Foreign Office.

Georgian in West Tricks 5 Women

DENVER, COLO., July 12.—Five young women of this city to-day are wondering how it all happened, while C. F. Thompson, of Macon, Ga., is in prison contemplating the danger of a too vivid imagination.

Three weeks ago Thompson landed in Denver, it is said, with just $20 in a pocket of his one and only suit. Within the course of a few days he had become engaged to four women, had picked out costly trousseaus for each and had made arrangements to purchase two high-priced automobiles.

Thursday he became engaged to the fifth young woman, after pawning a phonograph which he had obtained under false pretenses. This put the detectives on his trail. Now he is in jail, with prospects of a later trip to Canon City Penitentiary.

Japs Protest Being Listed With Blacks

A Sustaining Diet.

These are the enervating days, when, as somebody has said, men drop by the sunstroke as if the Day of Fire had dawned. They are fraught with danger to people whose systems are poorly sustained; and this leads us to say, in the interest of the less robust of our readers, that the full effect of Hood's Sarsaparilla is such as to suggest the propriety of calling this medicine something besides a blood purifier and tonic—say, a sustaining diet. It makes it much easier to bear the heat, assures refreshing sleep, and will without any doubt avert much sickness at this time of year.

SHORT COVERING STEADIES COTTON

Buying of Old Crops by Spot Houses Principal Feature—Offerings General.

NEW YORK, July 12.—The cotton market was quiet at the opening of the cotton market to-day and first prices were 1 to 5 points higher than Friday's final. The demand from shorts who desired to even up for the week-end. When this was supplied prices eased off a few points. T he Liverpool market was closed and was responsible to some extent for the quiet market here.

Spot houses again purchased summer positions quite freely. One large spot broker started the market on an upward scale shortly after the call by bidding aggressively for large blocks of new crops, but bought little. The selling was mainly attributed to Wall Street and the uptown crowd.

The weather map was favorable, showing rains over the greater part of the belt, with lower temperatures and sentiment against the market.

Two of the largest local operators have covered since Tuesday about 50,000 bales of short cotton, and now the market has reached the point where it is practically in the hands of certain big interests, who are trading this and that way merely for small turns for bulging operations, pending further developments in connection with the ultimate outcome of the bull deal in July-August. These two options for the past two weeks have governed new crop positions as well as operations. The outcome of the Clarke amendment is also killing off business.

At the close the market was steady with prices at a net gain of 1 to 5 points from the final quotations of Friday.

Warehouse stocks in New York to-day is 37,301 bales; certificated, 31,199 bales.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, July 12.—Further good and rather general rains occurred during the past 48 hours in the eastern half of the belt. Precipitation was heaviest in Tennessee and North Alabama. Temperatures were lower in North Texas.

European political news was a little more cheerful, expressing the hope of early peace, but financial views continue pessimistic, owing to fear of heavy financial losses in connection with the Balkan war.

Our market was inclined to ease at the start on the favorable weather prospects, but open bidding for July by the controlling interests checked selling on the belief that scares might be turned on July. The bidding by these interests reflects the view that it is getting too late to bring cotton here to spoil the July squeeze by tenders.

The Times-Democrat's monthly report will appear Monday. It is expected to be favorable except for a tendency to give special prominence to the weevil danger.

The market ruled steady during the early session around 11.45 for December.

COTTON GOSSIP

The principal feature of the market to-day was the buying of old crop by spot interests. Wall Street and uptown crowds are thought to have sold new crop. Market took the selling well and ruled rather steady all day. Riordan was good seller of new crop around the close.—Anderson.

* * *

The several bearish reports issued yesterday has caused some change in sentiment and the feeling this morning was more bearish.

* * *

There are predictions for favorable weather over the belt for the next few days.

* * *

Around the close yesterday Geer, Shearson, McEnany, Hubbard, Flinn, Hartcorn and Seidenberg were among the leading buyers. Riordan, Parrott, Hicks, Cone and Montgomery were the principal sellers.

* * *

Senator Smith, of South Carolina, has introduced a bill providing for Governmental standard for grades of cotton and requiring futures contracts to be filled by grade specified in contract. The bill was ordered favorably reported by the Senate's sub-committee. The bill aims to overcome objections of Cotton Exchange to the proposed tax on future transactions and does not fix a penalty for failure to deliver actual cotton.

NEW ORLEANS, July 13.—Hayward & Clark: The weather map was very favorable, cloudy over entire belt, with general rains in eastern half, heaviest in Tennessee and North Alabama, where most needed. Cooler in west. Indications are for partly cloudy to fair in the Atlantics; possibly some scattered showers. Cloudy in central and western States, with cooler weather and showers coming on Texas over Sunday. Clearing and cooler in Oklahoma and Arkansas.

J. B. Turner, of Memphis, has the following on the condition of the cotton crop for the week ending July 11:

"The week was a normal and hence a favorable one for the season. Temperatures were quite high over a great part of the belt, but toward the end were materially moderated. Generally speaking, there was an abundance of moisture in the soil, and hence the cultivation was near perfect. The plant stood the excess of temperatures quite well and continued its growth and fruiting in a satisfactory manner. There is no striking change from the conditions of one week ago and this of itself is a favorable item.

"Little or no rain fell in Texas and Oklahoma, where already the supply of moisture was abundant, while down the Mississippi Valley there were many showers and locally heavy rains, which relieved an incipient drouth and set the cotton to growing rapidly. Showers fell also in the eastern States and were of benefit. As a whole, more rain in Alabama and States eastward would be desirable, though not necessary at this time.

"In Eastern Texas, Louisiana and Mississippi, weevils are more numerous than in several years, and their appearance has aroused the planters' alarm. As yet their depredations have been quite limited."

* * *

The Times-Democrat monthly crop report is expected Monday. We think it will be favorable except for the giving the boll weevil danger the usual prominence.

* * *

Official Texas records show an average for the State of 98 degrees; three stations show 100; nine stations 102; one station 104; and one station 106. The maximum average for Oklahoma is 102.

* * *

Galveston will get a new bale to-day from Patricio, Texas, the same date as last year. New bale here from San Benito, consigned to John M. Parker & Co., will be sold at auction to-day.

* * *

The Government advises Corpus Christi, Texas: "Small craft warning. Disturbance over Southern New Mexico moving eastward; will cause brisk to high northerly winds to-day and probably Sunday."

* * *

The first new bale was sold here at auction for 16 cents; it was bought by E. Christ.

Grain Notes

The Chicago Inter Ocean says: "The wheat bears have the best of it. Hedging business is coming into the market, making it safer for the short seller than at any time within a year. Sentiment has become excessively bearish, and it would not be surprising to a majority to see lower prices, although the best traders are looking for irregular declines.

"Corn specialists attributed the break of 1¾ on September yesterday, making a drop of almost 4 cents from the recent high point to unloading by longs. It is noticeable that sharp traders, who were long, have unloaded their purchases on bids. Traders said they would not be surprised to see a rally some day, but believe corn should be sold on all bulges.

"September oats dropped below 40 cents yesterday with stop orders selling sufficient to carry prices to 39¼. Those who have watched the market closely for two weeks say there has been a steady unloading by longs and a decrease in the outside buying. The liquidation, however, is not regarded as over."

* * *

Bartlett, Frazier & Co. says: "Wheat—Offerings from the country are somewhat lighter, but local sentiment is bearish and new speculative buying from the outside does not come in.

"Corn—The rallies this morning are likely to cause further selling, although liquidation was on a liberal scale yesterday. Cash prices do not show as much weakness as the future, owing to moderate receipts and scarcity of offerings from first hands.

"Oats—There is nothing new in the situation, except that receipts are somewhat smaller and cash inquiry a shade better. Sentiment is very bearish, and, as in the other grains, outside buying is extremely limited.

"Provisions—Hogs under estimates with hog prices at yards steady to 5c higher."

Rainfall and Temperatures in Grain Region: Canadian Northwest cloudy, 42 to 58; Femonton, Swift Current, Winnipeg, 06; Calgary, .94; Battleford, .42; Regina, raining, 1.10; Northwest, part cloudy, 48 to 64; Williston, Huron, .08; Devils Lake, Bismark, .01; Moosehead, .20; Duluth, 1.26; West generally cloudy, 54 to 70; Omaha, Davenport, .02; Sioux City, .04; Des Moines, .86; Charles City, .96; Dubuque, 1.08; Springfield, .14; Southwest part cloudy, .62 to .76; Dodge City, .10; Wichita, .01; Kansas City, .58; Springfield, .84; St. Louis, .50; Ohio Valley cloudy, .70 to .76; Cairo, .97; Evansville, .34; Cincinnati, .02; Indianapolis, .16; Columbus raining; Louisville raining, .36.

Think wheat, corn and oats all have had break enough. Would cover shorts and wait for a rally before selling again.—Roycroft.

IRREGULARITY IN PRICE OF STOCKS

Good Crop Advices and Easier Feeling Abroad Encourage Better Active Bidding.

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, July 12.—A higher range of prices was established at the opening of the stock market, although business was very quiet. Canadian Pacific began 2⅛ higher at 213½, but afterward shaded.

There was no change in speculative conditions and the gains which were recorded were chiefly due to a change in position on the part of the speculative element. Finding bear operations fruitless, the professionals turned bullish.

Union Pacific advanced ⅝ and some of the other gains were: Amalgamated Copper, ¼; United States Steel, ¼; Reading, ⅜; Lehigh Valley, ⅛; Erie, ⅛; American Can ¼, and Chesapeake and Ohio, ⅛.

The curb was quiet.

Americans in London were dull, but ruled above New York parity.

The market closed strong. Governments unchanged; other bonds steady.

STOCK GOSSIP

* * *

The trainmen and conductors' committee of 1,000 will meet to-day to ratify the Eastern railway vote.

Trade reports show that conservatism in business circles is still manifest, owing chiefly to the tariff legislation.

* * *

Twelve industrials declined .11; 20 active rails declined .15.

* * *

Although the market continues dull, with few changes in prices, there are many bullish factors in the situation that are being ignored, which later in the season will have a beneficial effect on values. We believe stocks conservatively accumulated around this level will in a reasonable time show satisfactory profits.—Potter.

WHEAT LEADER IN CEREAL DECLINE

General Rains and Absence of Speculative Buying Cause of Heavy Liquidation.

CHICAGO, July 12.—Wheat was ¾c lower at the opening this morning on further fine rains which covered the entire spring wheat country in the Northwest. There were some rains in the winter wheat belt, which possibly may delay the movement for a day or two. The official report on wheat crop of France shows the condition to be 3 points higher for winter and 2 higher for spring than July 1 a year ago. Northwestern receipts were moderate.

Corn was ¾c to ⅞c lower on rains where needed throughout the belt.

Oats were off ⅜c to ½c in sympathy with the other grains.

Provisions were firmer and higher.

EAST WANTS LIGHT HOGS.

CHICAGO, July 12.—Eastern orders for light hogs were in excess of weekend supply and a 10 to 12c higher market for everything fit for that outlet resulted. Shipping hogs sold largely at $9@9.25. Packing grades were little if any higher, as that branch was without competition. There were 35,000 at eight markets, against 45,000 a year ago and not to exceed 40,000 are expected here Monday. Shipping demand is coming back in emphatic manner, with outlet having absorbed 20,000 this week. Both in cattle and sheep the market was nominally strong at the best prices of the week. Monday's expectancy is for about 20,000 cattle and 35,000 hogs.

JUDGES DECIDE WHO IS BUTTON PRIZE WINNER

Submitted by W. Mae Jones, 1428 Candler Building.

Submitted by W. T. Wilson, 388 North Jackson street.

Hearst's Sunday American Will Announce Best Slogan—Many Submitted Saturday.

Judges Saturday took charge of all the "500,000 club" slogans submitted in the $25 prize contest. They are John W. Grant, Wilmer L. Moore and Walter C. Taylor. At The Georgian office they began a careful study of the hundreds of suggestions submitted.

Hearst's Sunday American will announce the winner.

The last day of the contest brought in the largest number of submissions of any other day. Many are beautiful designs by well-known artists. Others are striking for their literary merit. All bespeak the wonderful Atlanta spirit—save one.

That came in anonymously from a cynical humorist. He went to the trouble of drawing a large picture burlesquing Atlanta from the City Hall to the last garbage dump beyond "Pittsburg."

The Cynic's Slogan.

In one corner was a large building marked "Hot Air Factory." Next to it was the City Hall, called "The House of Mystery," and on top of the building sat a doubtful bird marked "Graft." The bottom of the picture showed three stragglers passing out of a gate with the remark:

"Griffin ain't so bad after all."

It's a cinch this design won't get the prize.

One of the best of the last suggestions was a map of Georgia with a star marking Atlanta, its capital. The slogan, offered by George L. Taylor, No. 152 Courtland street, is:

"Hitch your wagon to the star. Half million by 1920."

Here are many scintillating with enthusiasm:

"Boost Atlanta. Everybody's doing it; 500,000 by 1920. Welcome. The Gate City."—W. L. Mandos, No. 395 Whitehall street.

"For Atlanta 500,000 by 1920. Come on."—Wilbur G. Kurtz, No. 90 Sinclair avenue.

"Atlanta, the livest and niftiest town always."—G. O. Shepard, No. 36 North Pryor street.

W. T. Wilson, No. 388 North Jackson street, offers the Phoenix arising from the ashes with the slogan, "Always ahead."

"Atlanta, the bright star of the Southland. Pleasure, health, wealth, prosperity; 500,000 by 1920."—E. B. Gibson, No. 72 Cherokee avenue.

"Atlanta always ahead; 500,000 1920; 1847-1865; Phoenix."—U. F. Harbour, No. 41 North Pryor street.

Poet Offers One.

"Half a million. That's our bet. Watch Atlanta. She'll get it yet."—Alex Maddox, No. 212 Euclid avenue.

"Place, Atlanta, Ga.; time, 1920; population, 500,000; our motto, 'Cooperation.'"—C. L. Nicholson, No. 78 Ormond street.

"Here's to Atlanta, greatest inland city; boost for half a million in 1920."—Margaret Maddox, No. 212 Euclid avenue.

"Get the spirit and join Atlanta Half-Million Club, 1920; to prosperity and happiness."—F. E. Taylor, Empire building.

"1864, 2,000 people; 1865, less than 3,000 people; 1910, 155,000 people; 1920, let's make it 500,000."—Joseph Uleiner, No. 224 Capitol avenue.

"Success is sure. Omnia vincit fides. Atlanta, 500,000 by 1920."—W. G. Hynds, No. 202 McLendon street.

"Atlanta Half-Million Club. Faith, ambition, labor. In hoc signo vinces."—J. Howard Hynds, No. 202 McLendon street.

"Atlanta, half-million, 1920."—Charles H. Terry, No. 43 Zachary street.

Alabama Man Suggests.

500,000 people in 1920. Atlanta always gets what she goes after."—Frederick C. Pfeffer, Clanton,

AMERICAN LIFE INTEREST FUND IS HELD UP

Court Grants Restraining Order to Stockholders Who Have Filed Receivership Suits

Following the filing of two receivership suits against the American Life and Annuity Company, Judge Ellis issued an order Friday restraining officials of the company from making payment on the interest of income certificates.

Pope M. Brown, defeated candidate for Governor in the last campaign, is president of the company. N. G. Parker, Horace Sandiford and T. K. Bowles filed the suits as certificate holders. July 14 was set for a hearing.

Bowles was secretary of the company until November, when he was succeeded by Parker, who himself resigned Thursday. General Manager W. R. Taylor asserts that the company is in good financial condition and has assets of more than $100,000 over its liabilities. He said the report of Deputy Insurance Commissioner Copeland, made June 15, showed liabilities of $88,662.21 against assets of $189,084.37.

The suits charge that the company has taken in $441,000 in the last three years on income certificates alone, and that it has other sources of revenue. The assets are placed at $135,000. It is charged that the company has threatened to pay $12,000 interest on income certificates July 15, and that it has no funds with which to do so.

The American Life and Annuity Company was organized at McRae, Ga., three years ago. It has been regarded as one of the most successful of Georgia companies.

ATTORNEYS PASS LIE AND BLOWS IN MACON

Solicitor General Ross and Lawyer Harris Clash Over Trial of Vice Cases.

MACON, July 12.—Attorney Jesse C. Harris brought about a sudden adjournment of the special criminal session of the Bibb Superior Court yesterday afternoon by calling Solicitor John P. Ross a liar and striking him in the face in the courtroom. Harris was fined $50 for contempt of court and also censured by Judge Mathews for his conduct.

Harris represented fifteen women of the restricted district who are charged with operating disorderly houses. In moving for a continuance of these cases, he declared that Solicitor Ross would not call the cases represented by any other lawyers, but was seeking solely to prosecute those represented by him (Harris).

"That's a falsehood, your honor," interposed the Solicitor.

"You're a liar," shouted Attorney Harris, striking the Solicitor in the face.

Deputies seized both men immediately.

"He's a dirty little scoundrel; let me hit him once," shouted Solicitor Ross, but was restrained.

Judge Mathews held that the jury was prejudiced in the matter of trying any of the defendants represented by Harris, and as Solicitor Ross refused to call any other cases, though stating that he was prepared for trial in all of them, the court was adjourned for the term and all parties discharged. The Solicitor stated that Harris represented all of the prominent defendants, and that he did not propose to try the lesser and weaker defendants first. "There are 'stars' of varying magnitude in Tybee (the vice district) as well as in glory," he said.

Mating for Breeding Purposes; Also Why Hens Go Blind

Questions Answered That Might Be Ones You Are Anxious to Have Explained.

By JUDGE F. J. MARSHALL.

Judge F. J. Marshall: I will appreciate some good advice. Last February I got five thoroughbred S. C. White Leghorns. From these I have raised 110 chickens, in addition to having used some eggs for the table. What arrangement should I make in the autumn for cocks? Must I dispose of all that I raise and procure fresh male birds, and how many shall I kep for, say 60 hens? My Leghorn flock has free range on Bermuda and Johnson grass, and will have cowpeas and winter oats. What feeding will they need during the fall and winter? When may I expect my pullets to lay that were hatched during April and May? I plan in the autumn to fence in a half-acre of winter oats, to divide it in half, and to keep in these two divisions, alternatingly, some large fowls from which to raise early broilers. What is the very best breed for this purpose? I do not need a general utility fowl, as my Leghorns will provide me with eggs. I simply want a breed that are early layers and rapid growers. How many birds can I keep to advantage on my half-acre? I have recently hatched sixteen thoroughbred ducks, they are Pekin ducks, from which I wish to raise. Is it better to give them range or keep them in an enclosure? What proportion of drakes are needed, and must I procure others than those which I have hatched.

Gunnison, Miss. MRS. M. M. S.

Reply: I should advise keeping the old cock you have been breeding from someone's yards not akin to three good, vigorous, young cockerels from one one's yards not akin to yours, and let the four run with the 60 hens and pullets you are going to have on your free range. One male to every fifteen females is sufficient where they all have free range.

Where stock is yarded, there should be one male to every ten females. Your Leghorn pullets hatched in April and May should commence laying in September and October, perhaps some of them a little sooner than that if well cared for and they have no dis

Bridge Plaza Plan Before Committee

Suggestion of 30-Year Property Lease for $3,000,000—Jonesboro Road Acreage Sold.

A new proposition has been submitted in the so-called Bleckley plaza plan for bridging the railroad tracks in the center of town and erecting handsome business buildings along the superstructure. It is to lease the Western and Atlantic Railroad acreage from the State for 30 years on a basis of $100,000 a year, and then give the property back to the State.
This suggestion was made at a meeting of the W. & A. Committee of the State Legislature by Barry Wright, Representative from Rome. Mr. Wright declared he was confident he could get a syndicate of business men to take such a lease.
The plaza plan was first put forward several years ago by Haralson Bleckley, the well-known architect, who submitted a sketch showing the feasibility of it. Leaders in local finance indorsed the movement, declaring that the waste space over the railroad tracks could be made to yield the State a handsome income with no outlay.
Included in the plan are a handsome new depot and an incline from the Forsyth street bridge to Madison avenue, to handle traffic to and from the Terminal Station. Ralph O. Cochran, John Y. Smith and Robert B. Blackburn, Representatives from Fulton, recently indorsed this project on condition that the State's interests could be protected in the deal. Mr. Cochran declared that the property frontage created under the plan would be extremely valuable and that owners whose property adjoined the plaza could afford to pay for the improvement out of their own pockets, in consideration

Some Day Babies Will Be Born Wise.

In Ages to Come Human Beings at Birth Will Know More Than Any Man Knows Now.

(Copyright, 1913.)

The most helpless and ignorant thing in the world is a new-born human being.

The most independent and wise thing in the world—in proportion to its ability—is a new-born mud wasp, or newly fledged sparrow.

That is because the human being is just in the beginning of its development, whereas the mud wasp, the ant and other insects have reached the highest development of which they are capable.

The saddest thing in the education of human beings is the fact that each child must begin at the beginning and learn everything for itself.

Each little baby learns to walk, learns to avoid the fire, learns to talk. The mind starts its life as a blank page, and everything must be written upon it. The child can not even learn by hearing from the father and mother of their mistakes. Each child must make its own mistakes, and can be taught only by experience.

But will that last forever?

When you see the lower forms of animal life giving birth to creatures fully equipped and independent, can you not believe that when the human race, practically just born on this planet, shall have lived here for a few hundreds of thousands or millions of years, that the human child will be born with all the material knowledge stored away, and have no work to do except the discovering of unknown truths, working in new fields?

We base this editorial upon an article by Sir William Ramsay, in the current number of Hearst's Magazine. We advise intelligent, thoughtful readers to get the magazine this month and every month. It is published for those who are interested in realities, those who are capable of thought.

In the article referred to, Sir William Ramsay describes both in the animal world and among human beings indications of a certain power of mind, of knowledge born in the newly created animal, apart from all teaching or experience.

He says, concerning the inhabitants of Burmah:

"Cases are known where a child, born of parents living in a village not their own, to which they had migrated, was able to recognize people, and to 'remember' events which had taken place in the native village of his parents, of which he could have had no direct knowledge. Is it possible that a memory for particular events is sometimes inherited?"

Then he says, of certain observations made upon swallows:

"Their nest was under the eaves; and for long, the parents fed and attended to their young brood. The day arrived for them to leave their nest; and without any practice, each fledgling dropped out of the nest, flew backward and forward, and without the least hesitation entered the nest, just like an old bird. The wonderful power of control of muscles, of guiding motion, and of correlation of brain and eye must have lain in the germ of these birds until the time for their use arrived. Examples of the sort might be given by the thousand; although the one mentioned is perhaps particularly striking."

It is extremely likely that the little boy of Burmah, a child bred for ages along the same limited line of thought, should have certain ideas and associations before birth strongly impressed upon it, and that these should be transmitted and appear in the child without any teaching.

There is no doubt that the children of savages recognize of their own accord the danger in poisonous reptiles and other animals to which the civilized child would be indifferent, except after the experience of a bite.

In the animal world the fact that the brain of the new animal is born with exact, wonderful knowledge is not disputed. And that fact is of intense interest to human beings who hope that the human race itself may develop one day in such a way as to have the children born with a ready-made education in excess of that which they now possess after years of schooling.

Suppose that a child could come into this world wise in proportion to its possibilities, as does the child of the mud wasp.

No baby mud wasp ever saw its own mother. The eggs are laid, and the mother who lays the eggs dies before they hatch.

Each new mud wasp begins its career as did Adam in the Garden of Eden, with nobody back of him so far as he knows.

When the mud wasp is ready she selects a good place to lay her eggs. Then she goes off and selects a fat caterpillar.

She intends that the caterpillar shall feed her young wasps when the latter hatch out. She puts that caterpillar beside the eggs that she has laid, covers up the eggs and the caterpillar, and goes away, leaving food for the young, unborn wasps, as some human mother might go out for a day's work leaving bread and butter on the table and saying, "Johnny, eat that when you get hungry."

The wonderful thing is that the mother wasp does not KILL the caterpillar. If she killed it, it would be decayed and useless by the time the young wasps arrived.

The mother wasp seizes the caterpillar and carefully stings it just back of the head, between two of the little rings that form the caterpillar's body.

This stuns the caterpillar, makes it impossible for it to move or struggle, but does not kill it.

And while the wasp eggs are hatching, the caterpillar, rendered helpless, but not killed by the poison, lies there ALIVE waiting for the little wasps to hatch out and eat it.

Presently they hatch, they eat it, and scatter.

The wonderful thing is that each of these wasps, never having seen the thing done, never having had lessons from its mother, or from any school-teacher, goes out when the time comes, lays her eggs, finds a fat caterpillar, stings it exactly in the same scientific way, and puts it away with the eggs, never having been told how to do it.

What a fine thing it would be for the children of human beings if they could be born with knowledge of that kind. Some of them are born WITH UNUSUAL KNOWLEDGE.

Some have musical power, which means that the brain before birth developed knowledge of harmony.

Some children can compose music correctly when they are almost too young to read.

Other children have a phenomenal mathematical faculty and can do "sums" that would puzzle their elders.

So far, man's brain is really too big for his body.

He was a timid, frightened monkey-man, running away from everything, developing his brain rapidly in order to make up for physical weakness. He has been a thinking man only

Writes on

A Woman Next Door

You Choose Your Friends, She Says, Because You Like Them, and Like Their Kind, Not Because Somebody Else Thinks You Ought to Like Them.

By WINIFRED BLACK.

I READ a brilliant story by a brilliant writer the other day.

Did you happen to read it, too?

It was about a woman who lived down "behind the tracks," in a country town. She was a woman who flaunted the streets in a gorgeous hat and expensive gowns. She wore bangle bracelets that jingled and rings that sparkled, and high-heeled slippers and "open-worked" stockings, and the men grinned sheepishly when she passed, and nudged each other, and the women looked the other way and pretended they didn't even see her.

One day the woman from "behind the tracks" bought a house uptown and moved into it—a neat, pretty little house, with a garden and trees, and she dug in the flower beds and watered the lawn and put out hanging baskets, and she went to market in a little checked gingham, and she looked wistfully over the fence when the neighbors went by, but nobody ever spoke to her at all.

One night a baby was taken sick in the neighborhood and the woman from "behind the tracks" saved its life. The next day she stood out on her porch and waited to see the baby's mother go by. And the baby's mother went by—and did not see the woman from "behind the tracks" at all, and the woman from "behind the tracks" went and sold her little new house and the garden and all, and went back "behind the tracks" to live—and all the people in the village pursed their lips and said, "She's gone back—they always do."

What Did She Expect?

Good story, wasn't it, and a good slap at the narrow-minded little mother, who wouldn't make friends with the woman who had saved her baby's life?

We need a few such slaps as that, we women; and yet——

I wonder what the woman from "behind the tracks" expected when she bought the pretty little house and the garden, and went to live among decent people?

Did she think they would get out the band and meet and greet her at the doorsteps, or what?

You choose your friends because you like them, and like their kind—not because somebody else thinks you ought to like them.

If the woman from "behind the tracks" had come to the village from somewhere else and nobody knew a thing about her, do you think the neighbor women would have liked her anyhow? I don't.

She wasn't their kind; never was, never could be. She belonged to a different world, and every time she turned her over-blonded head and every time she opened her good-humored, too easily-pleased mouth, and every time she laughed her rather coarse laugh, she would have told what she was, and no woman of any fineness of perception could have been mistaken in her for a minute.

No, I don't mean what she had been. That isn't what would concern a kindly woman who was trying to decide whether she wanted her for a neighbor or not. I mean what she is. A gingham dress doesn't change the beat of a woman's heart; a garden hoe doesn't turn her from a coarse, easy-going, blunt-hearted person to a gentle, delicate, lovely woman, does it? I don't believe it.

A Lesson From Home.

Once I had a maid—a strange, silent, stubborn girl with blue eyes, so hard that they were like a flint. She had a strange, measured walk and a strange, controlled voice, and she always acted as if she thought some one was watching her.

One day I saw her in a blue print dress, of peculiar cut and shade, and I knew—she was a reformatory girl. I'd seen her before, at the reformatory.

I didn't say a word. I treated her exactly as I had always treated her, but one day she was gone and she left a letter for me. In it she said many things. One of them was this: "You know me; don't you? I believe you do. I thought I could be different, but I can't. You've been good to me, but I ain't happy here. I ain't comfortable, so I'm going," and gone she was, back to the people with whom she was "comfortable," poor thing. Back to the people who were like her and who had her ways and her point of view. I was sorry, but I didn't go after her or try in any way to reach her.

Perhaps I should have—I've often wondered—and yet there were the children. Would it have been exactly safe?"

Selfish—protecting my children at the expense of a poor thing who was trying to make herself over.

Perhaps; but those children are mine. They are my business. It is my affair to keep them safe as long as I can. My own doorstep I must keep clean, and then if I have time and strength I may help my neighbor about her's. That's the way it looks to me. I wonder if I am right or wrong?

What You Really Are.

The poor thing from "behind the tracks" didn't belong in the neat little street uptown. She was no more in place there with her loud laugh and her bleached hair than the timid little woman who lived beside her would be in place in the ranks of a marching army. I don't blame the neighbor women for looking the other way. Honestly, now, I don't.

And the high-heeled, expensive slippers and the open-worked stockings and the gorgeous hats and the flashing rings—she had had all these things while little neighbor turned her blue cashmere and trimmed it with black velvet one year and with cream-colored lace the next, trying to make herself look pretty to the one man she loved. How could the poor thing from "behind the tracks" think she would never have to pay for all that?

After all, though, it isn't what you used to be that counts. It isn't what you would like to be, either; but what you really are, and no change in dress or in housing or anything else will change that. I wish it would. How pitifully I wish it would.

Some Day Babies Will Be Born Wise

for a short time—probably not more than two or three hundred thousand years.

Unlike the ants, the wasps, and the swallows, he has not had time yet to develop knowledge, make it thoroughly his own, and TRANSMIT it.

But there is every reason to believe that in time to come the baby will be born with all the practical knowledge that it requires, just as the young swallow and the young wasps begin life thoroughly educated.

When the time comes, each individual will have a highly interesting career—each being born knowing everything that is generally known, and each being able to devote the whole of life to acquiring NEW knowledge and making original research.

The difference between the mud-wasp and the human baby now is that the wasp is born knowing everything that it needs to know—and never learns anything more.

The baby of the human kind is born knowing nothing, and learns a good deal.

In days to come, when the baby is born with knowledge, there will still be a difference between it and the wasp, the ant, and the swallow, for born with the things that it must know in order to live comfortably, the human baby, unlike its animal associates on the earth, will start out ADDING to human knowledge—which, in turn, by slow processes that go on within us, will be handed down to the new generation.

BALKAN KING REPORTED ASSASSINATED

SAYS WOMEN OVERHEARD CONLEY CONFESS

Attorney Leavitt Declares Tale That Negro Admitted Killing Girl Will Stand Test.

That several negro women overheard Jim Conley when he ran the insurance agent, Mincey, away with the alleged statement that he had just killed a girl and didn't want to kill any one else, and that the affidavits from the women are in the hands of the attorneys for the defense, was stated Saturday by Attorney J. H. Leavitt, who aided in obtaining the sensational affidavit from Mincey.

Attorney Leavitt defended the character of the man who made the affidavit and denied emphatically that Mincey even asked about the money he would receive as a witness, except whether his railroad fare would be paid if he were out of the city.

Explains Dukes' Doubts.

"I am attorney for the American Insurance Company and know its manager, J. S. Dukes, very well," said Leavitt. "He sought to discredit the affidavit very likely because Mincey left his employ to get a better position and he had to do some of the outside work. Mincey is a college graduate and is well known in Atlanta. It will be utterly impossible to shake his evidence.

"I am not employed to represent Frank and aided in getting this affidavit purely because I happened to stumble on to the information. Before I submitted it to Mr. Rosser, Frank's attorney, I spent eleven days investigating the character of the man, questioning the women in the neighborhood and generally verifying the facts. When I turned it over to him I was convinced of its absolute truth and that it would stand the acid test."

Habeas Corpus Fight Fails.

Habeas corpus proceedings to release Newt Lee collapsed in the court of Judge Ellis Saturday morning.

By agreement, Bernard L. Chappell, representing Lee, withdrew his application for a habeas corpus; Solicitor Dorsey promised to present a bill against Lee as a suspect in the Phagan murder case, with the expectation that a "no bill" would be returned. This appeared satisfactory to the attorneys for Lee, as well as to the State.

Luther Z. Rosser, Reuben R. Arnold and Herbert J. Haas, of counsel for Frank, were in court to fight against the appearance of Frank as a witness. William M. Smith represented Conley, one of the witnesses subpenaed.

Conley Gets Third Degree.

Jim Conley underwent a racking third degree late Friday afternoon at the hands of Solicitor General Hugh M. Dorsey and Attorney Frank A. Hooper in an effort to verify or discredit the W. H. Mincey affidavit, in which the negro was charged with confessing to the murder of a girl on the afternoon that Mary Phagan met her death.

The grilling of nearly four hours followed The Georgian's publication of the details of Mincey's accusations and was undertaken with the utmost secrecy, an attempt being made to avoid knowledge of the "sweating" becoming public by taking Conley to the Commissioners' room on the second floor of the police station by a circuitous route.

Lieut. Becker's Plea For New Trial Fails

NEW YORK, July 12.—Supreme Court Justice Goff to-day denied a motion for a new trial in behalf of former Police Lieutenant Charles Becker, who is in Sing Sing under sentence of death for instigating the murder of Herman Rosenthal a year ago. The motion was based on newly discovered evidence.

Justice Goff based his denial on the ground that the same evidence could have been discovered before the trial.

Boy on Wheel Hits Car and Breaks Arm

Samuel Griggs, a 12-year-old boy living at No. 76 Roy street, was knocked down and his arm broken by a street car in South Broad street, near Hunter, Saturday morning. The boy was riding a bicycle and ran into the car. An ambulance was called and the injured lad taken to a hospital.

Scores of persons saw the accident. A big crowd gathered before the arrival of the ambulance.

BULGAR CZAR REPORTED SLAIN

Unconfirmed Rumors Tell of Assassination and Military Revolt in Capital.

VIENNA, July 12.—Unconfirmed reports have reached here from Sofia and Bucharest that King Ferdinand of Bulgaria has been assassinated.

The dispatches state that a military revolt has broken out in the capital.

SOFIA, July 12.—Scores of men were shot down in the streets here to-day in a general uprising against the Government aroused by the defeat of Bulgarian troops in the field and the passive manner in which Roumania's declaration of war is being treated by the Government.

Mob rule prevails. The palace is surrounded by a throng shouting denunciations and calling upon Czar Ferdinand to abdicate.

A Roumanian army is marching upon Sofia and unless there is a peaceful settlement in the meantime the Bulgarian capital will be occupied next week.

It was not until to-day that the people learned that the Bulgars have been crushed at every point.

Try to Assassinate Daneff.

An attempt was made to assassinate Dr. Daneff, former Premier, as he was on his way to confer with President Guechoff.

Czar Ferdinand is reported to be preparing to evacuate the city.

So far as Servia and Greece are concerned the Balkan war is believed to be over, but Roumanian troops continue to pour into the eastern part of Bulgaria. These troops are fresh and fully equipped for fighting and are eager to clash with the Bulgarians. The shattered Bulgarian forces are no match for the Roumanians.

The Roumanians have occupied the Bulgarian towns of Turtukai, Dobridsh and Baltchik. There is no resistance to the advance of the Roumanian forces.

Bulgars, Routed, Massacre 200 Greeks; Foes Pursue.

ATHENS, July 12.—Greek and Servian forces in Central Macedonia have now joined, making a mighty army of 150,000 men. Two hundred Greeks, both men and women, have been massacred near Serres by the retreating Bulgarians. The Bulgarians have fled from Serres in a panic at the approach of the Greek soldiers.

The powers have advised Greece to make peace with Bulgaria. Mr. Coromilas, the Greek Foreign Minister, received a note from the European states advising Greece to join with Servia in ceasing hostilities. France will probably become the "protector" of Greece, now that the Balkan league has become shattered by war.

Bacon Halts Plan for Bill-Drafting Bureau

WASHINGTON, July 12.—Senator Bacon, of Georgia, created consternation in the Senate to-day when he declared he was so shocked at the attempt of Senator Owen to have the Senate pass a bill creating a bureau to draft bills upon the request of the President and others that he was completely "knocked off his pins."

The bill was withdrawn for further consideration. It provides for a committee of eight Senators or 25 Representatives.

Senator Bacon referred to the President as the schoolmaster, who, it is proposed, shall do work Senators are supposed to do.

WIDOW QUITS CITY, FOILS OFFICERS

Mrs. Crawford, Sought Under Warrant for Murder, Evades Arrest.

Mrs. Mary Belle Crawford had disappeared Saturday afternoon when officers went to arrest her on a warrant charging her with the murder of her husband, Joshua B. Crawford, in 1909.

Constables R. F. Mauldin and W. W. Rogers went immediately to Mrs. Crawford's home at West Peachtree and Fourteenth streets when the warrant was sworn out. They were informed that she had left the city for Carrollton. To verify this statement, the officers made a thorough search about the city, failing to find the woman. It is not known whether she left before or after she learned that the warrant had been issued.

The warrant was sworn out by C. Z. Crawford, a nephew and beneficiary under the $250,000 will of Joshua Crawford, before Justice of the Peace C. H. Girardeau. The action was taken following close upon a decision by Superior Court Justice Pendleton that a warrant signed by the Coroner of Carroll County was not enforceable in Fulton County. If arrested, Mrs. Crawford was to be brought before Justice Girardeau for commitment trial.

The first warrant charging Mrs. Crawford with murder was signed by Coroner C. W. Baukin, of Carroll County, who had disinterred the body of Joshua B. Crawford and found evidence of poison. Crawford died in Fulton county March 27, 1909.

Hearing May Be Delayed.

The warrant reached Atlanta Friday, and Sheriff Mangum notified Mrs. Crawford to appear before Justice of the Peace D. K. Johnson Saturday morning, when a hearing would be held as to the authority of the Sheriff to serve the warrant in Fulton County.

"It is not really the Crawford heirs who are fighting me," said Mrs. Crawford, "but the rather distant relatives who were not mentioned in any will. I settled with the real heirs according to the will left by Mr. Crawford's first wife. Every one was satisfied.

"I gave Charlie Crawford more than he was even entitled to by the will that was made before I even knew the man I later married. He thanked me for the generosity by later letting the very distant relatives prevail upon him to fight me. He deeded them an interest in his share of the property and filed suit. Since then he has fought me. The closer relatives have never been anything but my best friends."

Widow's Side of Case.

Attorney Arnold, for Mrs. Crawford, issued the following statement Saturday:

"Four years after Crawford's death some of the collateral kinpeople of J. B. Crawford and his first wife, who are seeking to recover this estate, worth perhaps $100,000, from the widow and legatees under Crawford's will, went to Carroll County with their lawyer, J. S. James, and Dr. H. F. Harris, and on some kind of showing which we know nothing of persuaded the Coroner to exhume the body and allow the doctor employed by these relatives to make a post-mortem examination. Neither the widow nor any of the other legatees who are defendants had any notice and were not present.

Claims Lungs Shriveled.

"The doctor for these people took various parts of the body of Crawford and made a test for morphine. He claims to have found a trace of

ONE RUN FOR CRACKERS IN FIRST

Billy Smith's Crackers Meet Mike Finn's Gulls in Final Battle of Series at Poncy Park.

Ponce DeLeon Park, July 12—Crackers and Gulls met in the final game of the series here this afternoon. Thompson and Cavet were the pitchers secelected to do the mound work.

FIRST INNING.

Stock bounded one to Bisland and was an easy out to Agler. Alperman let McGill's roller get through him and the Gull's outfielder was safe at the initial sack. Robertson popped a tall fly to Bisland. McGill out, trying to pilfer second, Dunn to Bisland. NO HITS, NO RUNS.

Long was safe at the first corner when Stock threw his grounder over Robertson's head. Welchonce smashed a neat single to left and Long went to second. Alperman laid down a neat sacrifice, Cavet to Paulet. Both runners advanced a sack. Smith was handed four wide ones filling the bases. Bisland was not equal to the occasion and fanned. On a wild pitch Long tallied and Welchonce took third. Agler also struck out. One hit, one run.

SECOND INNING.

O'Dell slambed a single to center. Only fast fielding by Welchonce held the smash to a one-baser. Schmidt hit into a double play, Thompson to Alperman to Agler. Paulet was easy picking for Alperman to Agler. One hit, no runs.

Manush did a Casey act and took a seat on the bench. O'Dell picked up Dunn's grounder and tossed it to first ahead of the runner. Thompson popped to Stock. No hits, no runs.

THIRD INNING.

Clark lofted one to Bisland. Campbell drove a line drive to Alperman. Cavet struck out. No hits, no runs.

Long stung a safe one through Cavet. Welchonce bunted to Cavet and Long was forced at second to Stock. Alperman hit into a double play, Stock to Papulet to Robertson. One hit, no runs.

FOURTH INNING.

Stock fanned. McGill was also disposed of over the strike-out route. Thompson finished the inning by whiffing Robertson, giving him four strike outs in a row. No hits, no runs.

Smith placed his bat against the pill for a single to center. Bisland bunted to Cavet, who therw to Stock forcing Wallie at second. Agler's best was a pop fly to Stock. Manush was there with a single to right and Bisland romped to the middle sack. Dunn lined out to Clark. TWO HITS, NO RUNS.

FIFTH INNING.

O'Dell lifted a long fly to Long. Schmidt was out when Manush made a shoestring catch of his hot smash to left. Welchonce took care of Paulet's fly. NO HITS, NO RUNS.

Thompson was given a great hand when he came to bat. Carl responded with an easy pop to Schmidt. Long's grounder was handled by Robertson. O'Dell picked up Welchonce's grounder and threw the Cracker outfielder out at first. Robertson dropped the throw, but Umpire Kerin ruled that Dave had held the ball momentarially. NO HITS, NO RUNS.

SIXTH INNING.

Clark fouled out to Dunn. Campbell pushed a single through Smith. Cavet was Thompson's victim over the strike-out route. Alperman grabbed Stock's roller and tossed him out to Agler. ONE HIT, NO RUNS.

Alperman found one of Cavet's offerings to his liking and poled it to left field for two bases. Smith bunted to Cavet and Alperman was tagged out at third. This was about the fourth time the Cracker players failed to lay down a neat bunt. Bisland slambed a single to right and Smith took second. Agler was the handy boy in the pinch with a dandy single to left and Smith ambled over the home platter. Manush was called out on strikes. Dunn went out, Stock to Robertson. THREE HITS, ONE RUN.

SEVENTH INNING.

Agler dropped McGill's liner after a great leap and the batter was safe at first. It was a hit. Robertson followed with a single to center and McGill took second. O'Dell whiffed. Schmidt grounded out to Agler and both runners advanced a peg. Paulet lined out to Thompson. TWO HITS, NO RUNS.

Thompson fanned. Long out, Stock to Robertson. Welchonce singles over second. Alperman flies to McGill. ONE HIT, NO RUNS.

CHIEF SETS NET FOR NEW VICE SUSPECTS

Scores Detectives for Alleged Laxity in Reporting Cases. Arrests Due Soon.

As the result of the increased activity by the detective and police departments, following the grilling given the detectives Friday afternoon by Chief Beavers, five new arrests were made by a squad of officers shortly after noon Saturday, in a raid on a boarding house at No. 164 1-2 Peters Street.

The persons under arrest gave their names as Lulu Bell, Maud Wilson, Mrs. Lee Berkstein and L. W. Berkstein. Effie Drummond, a 22-year-old country girl, who has begn in Atlanta only four weeks, is held as a material witness.

A man whose name is given as Joe North escaped through a back window while the police were raiding the place. A general order has been issued for his arrest. The raid was made by Officers Brannan, Moncrief and Baker.

More Arrests Probable.

Chief Beavers declares he has evidence that the boarding house, which was run by the Bell woman, is an immoral resort. The quintet probably will be tried in Police Court Monday. The Chief intimated after the arrest that other arrests are probable within 24 hours as a result of developments of the day's investigation, which have brought out the following:

Dora Rothstein has made a new statement, implicating three more men in her downfall, and naming half a dozen girls as victims of the ring.

The detective department, following a severe grilling given them by Chief Beavers Friday night, is seeking evidence against the vice ring with renewed vigor.

Business Men Aid Chief.

Two prominent business men, interested in the welfare of the little Rothstein girl, have entered the case and are aiding Chief Beavers in securing evidence.

Information has come to Chief Beavers of a house where young girls are taken by men and ruined, and then taken to hotels or immoral resorts.

The dragnet has been thrown out for the son of one of Atlanta's most prominent business men, named by Hattie Smith in her story of immorality at the Cumberland Hotel.

Four persons—Hattie Smith, Mrs. Lola White, Paul Estes and Hoyt Monroe—were held for the Grand Jury Saturday morning on new charges, following the Smith girl's story of a "joy ride." Estes has said that he will make a confession, in which he will involve men hitherto unsuspected.

Girl Promises Confession.

Corinne Wilson, one of the victims of the ring, told Chief Beavers that when she is placed on the witness stand Saturday afternoon she will make a complete confession, implicating more than a dozen men and half a dozen young girls.

Chief Beavers attaches great importance to evidence already obtained by the two business men who have joined him in the crusade. These men held a conference with the Chief Saturday morning and told him of the existence of the house where young girls are taken and plied with liquor until they lose their senses.

The new statement of Dora Rothstein was made to these men. The girl, who charges that Corinne Wilson lured her into a life of shame, named three more men with whom she has had illegal relations, and also furnished the names of half a dozen girls who, she declared, had trodden the same path as she.

Chief Beavers now has the names of between fifteen and twenty men, and more than a dozen young girls, furnished to him by Hattie Smith, Dora Rothstein and Corinne Wilson. He said, as can be found, they will be brought into court, and cases made where there is evidence enough to justify such a course. Those against whom cases are not made will be summoned as witnesses and forced to tell what they know.

One of the startling incidents of the investigation came in police court Saturday morning, in the hearing of Hattie Smith, Mrs. Lola White, Paul Estes and Hoyt Monroe. The Smith girl, heretofore one of the main sources of evidence, flatly refused to talk when placed on the stand. She would neither affirm nor deny that she had taken an auto ride with Estes and Monroe and that she had had illicit relations with them.

Startling Story Expected.

The stories of the other three, however, were sufficient for the holding of the quartet.

What is expected to be the most startling and sordid story told since the beginning of the vice crusade will be told in Police Court Saturday afternoon by Corinne Wilson when she is placed on trial on a charge of disorderly conduct.

The two men whom she named in her first statement, A. C. Dollar and W. W. Suttles, will be tried at the same time, the former on a disorderly conduct charge and the latter on a kidnaping charge.

Dora Rothstein, arrested with the Wilson girl, will be tried before Judge Pendleton, of the Juvenile Court, as she is only 14 years old. She will appear in Police Court Saturday, however, as a witness.

Chief Warns Detectives.

In his conference with the detective department late Friday afternoon, which was held in Chief Lanfod'r office behind closed doors, Chief Beavers took the detectives severely to task for their laxity in reporting vice cases. He intimated strongly that the detectives were not doing their duty and not getting results.

"It is as much your duty as it is the duty of any other man on the force," Chief Beavers is said to have told them, "to report the existence of vice. In the future all knowledge gained by detectives as to the existence of immoral resorts must be reported at once to headquarters. If you personally are engaged on some other case and have not time to work the vice case, report it so some one else can investigate and make the case."

The story of the Wilson girl is fraught with possibilities, Chief Beavers declares. She will give a detailed account of her adventures after she met Dora Rothstein at the White City on July4, and it is understood that she will make revelations of her life before she was married, several months ago, by which she will involve several downtown hotels. She has promised Chief Beavers that she will make public the name of every man who has been with her and the Rothstein girl during the past two weeks.

The girl already has given the Chief the names of several men whom she asserts are connected with the vice ring, and in all probability these men will be subpenaed as witnesses in the case. They will be brought into court, and if the evidence warrants it cases of disorderly conduct or statutory charges will be made against them. If there is no evidence that they are directly connected with the Wilson girl and the Rothstein girl, they will be held as witnesses and compelled to tell all they know about vice in Atlanta.

SEARCHING SIDELIGHTS ON POLITICS IN GEORGIA

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

Mr. McMichael of Marion Friday made pos-i-tively his first American appearance as Speaker Pro Tem of the Georgia House of Representatives, and got away with victorious eagles and things of that sort.

The Speakership Pro Tem carries no prerogative other than that of presiding when the Speaker is absent from the chair, and, as Mr. Burwell had not been absent a minute up to the time of Mr. McMichaels participation in the direction of affairs in the House, nobody in the House knew exactly what sort of a Speaker Pro Tem it had selected, so far as his ability to handle things was concerned.

Whatever doubt there may have been in anybody's mind that McMichael would get away with things was speedily removed. The gentleman from Marion seemed perfectly at home from the very beginning of his active career as Speaker Pro Tem, and was warmly applauded by his colleagues when he had finished Round 1.

Mr. McMichatel, by the way, is one of the best and most convincing speakers on the floor of the House, and has the happy faculty of making himself understood perfectly. He is clean-cut in enunciation and exceedingly easy to follow.

Moreover, he is very popular among his fellow members, and whatever he says attracts instant and interested attention.

Judge John T. Allen is, perhaps, the best speaker on the floor of the Senate. And that is no mean compliment, either, for there are several good speakers in that honorable body.

Judge Allen not only is a mighty good lawyer, but he also is a business man of widespread reputation. His voice has great carrying power, without in any way being harsh. Whenever he arises to address the Senate, is invariably given close attention.

Whether one agrees with what he says or not, Judge Allen never is at a loss for words in which to make himself perfectly plain.

Dispensing with the reading of the journal in the Senate is not easily effected. Notwithstanding the fact that the journal has been examined and approved, a motion to dispense with reading rarely gets by without objection.

The Senate is more dignified than the House, as a rule, anyway, and its methods of procedure are much more orderly and repressed.

It is an interesting circumstance that the Senate Committee on Constitutional Amendments has reported favorably a bill to raise the total of Senate membership from 44 to 60. There is an excellent chance that the bill will pass, and if it does, the impression is that the people will ratify it.

There is one little page in the Senate who makes it a regular business to fall reverently to his knees while the chaplain is praying every morning.

He doesn't look to be over 8 or 9 years old, and he evidently has not forgotten—yet—that the proper praying posture is kneeling.

A number of Georgia Legislators to-day forwarded to Washington—some to the President and others to Secretary Bryan—letters endorsing Colonel J. Lindsay Johnson, of Rome, for a consuiship, preferably in the Orient.

It is well-known, of course, that the Colonel wishes to be named Consul to Shanghai, and his friends in the Legislature—of which he is several times a former member—evidently are desirous of hastening the appointment along in such wise as they may.

South Georgia is talking of former President of the Senate, W. S. West, of Valdosta, for Governor, in succession to Governor Slaton.

If South Georgia has an eye on the Executive Office after Governor Slaton gets through, it will be readily admitted on all sides that Colonel West would make an ideal candidate.

He knows the game, he has the friends, and assuredly he has the ability—and what more could South Georgia ask of a favorite son?

Citizen J. L. H. Waldrop, of Clayton County, 77 years of age, boasts with pride that he has voted for a Brown for Governor of Georgia seven times.

Away back yonder in the dim and distant past he voted four times for former Governor Joseph M. Brown's distinguished father, Joseph E. Brown, and of late years he voted three times for that gentleman's son.

Mr. Waldrop makes no bones of admitting, indeed, that he always has voted for that tribe of particular Browns, and stands ready to repeat the performance whenever occasion shall arise for doing so, if it ever does again.

William R. Leaken, Collector of the Port of Savannah, has appointed B. Palmer Axson as an assistant in his office, with the rank of inspector. Axson has already begun his new duties, appointment was made by Collector although the appointment has not yet been approved.

There is no doubt that the appointment will be made permanent. The Leaken without solicitation or political consideration.

The new appointee is a blood relative of Mrs. Woodrow Wilson.

Representative Barry Wright, of Floyd, hopes to revive the scheme to convert the Western and Atlantic terminals in Atlanta, between Madison Avenue and Fryor Street, in a grand overhead plaza, and to that end will earnestly champion a bill in the House providing for the same.

Mr. Wright is a member of the Western and Atlantic Railway Committee of the House, and is capable of putting up a mighty good fight for anything he undertakes.

The plaza scheme, he thinks, is an admirable solution of a much vexed question, and a probable effective factor in disposing of the smoke nuisance in Atlanta.

morphine by applying the color test. He would not swear to any quantity of morphine or meconic acic and could not swear as to any quantity which the deceased took in his lifetime.

"This doctor also looked at the lungs of J. B. Crawford and swore that they had shriveled up about one-third of their size.

"The presence of the morphine and meconic acid, Dr. Harris (who was employed by these collateral kin) said, indicated that a large quantity had been taken by the deceased in his life, but how much he could not say. Harris could not swear that he found more than one-fiftieth of a grain, and said he made no test for quantity.

Tempest in Teapot.

"The whole thing is a tempest in a teapot, an effort to make a mountain out of a molehill.

"Dr. John W. Hurt, who treated Crawford for pneumonia in his last illness, and the trained expert nurse who attended him show that Crawford died of pneumonia. To ease Crawford's severe pain Dr. Hurt had given him several injections of morphine, and no secret was made of the fact. To ease Crawford's coughing Dr. Hurt had given him a cough medicine which contained opium, which was taken into the stomach.

"This administration of these drugs by Dr. Hurt, who is a safe and conservative physician, would account for vastly more than the trace of morphine found in Crawford's body by Harris.

Calls Charge Illegal.

"As to Dr. Harris' opinion that Dr. Hurt was wrong in diagnosing the case as pneumonia we will be able to show by various experts that Dr. Harris' opinion, based on the examination he made on these shriveled lungs four years after death, is worthless as compared with the opinion of Dr. Hurt and the trained nurse.

"We propose to try this case in court in this county and will be satisfied with the judgment that the court renders; but in justice to our client we state these facts to show that there is nothing in these charges.

"The Coroner of Carroll County had no right to make any investigation or recommendation as to Mrs. Crawford. The matter is entirely out of his jurisdiction.

"If anybody wants to make any sworn charge that Mrs. Crawford poisoned J. B. Crawford she will welcome any such investigation and will show it utterly groundless."

PEACE PLAN FOR HEALEY STRIKE HANGS FIRE

Committee to Settle Walkout Involving 150 Men on New Building Reported Named.

Negotiations looking to the settlement of the strike declared Friday by union men employed on the Healey Building had not materialized at noon Saturday. During the morning a number of strikers gathered near the structure, but no demonstration was attempted.

President C. Harrison Barnes, of the Building Trades Council, who called the strike, maintains silence on the matter, although it is understood representatives to a conference with the contractor, B. M. Walker, have been named. This conference may be held Saturday afternoon.

The strike, which was called Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock, was the result of the alleged awarding of an electrical contract to a concern which does not employ union labor. This act on the part of Contractor Walker, the union leaders claim, is a violation of certain alleged existing contracts between employer and employee.

Fourteen labor organizations are involved, including the structural iron workers, brick masons, plasterers, steel workers, plumbers, gas workers, steam and electrical engineers, painters, marble cutters, carpenters and hod carriers—in all, about 150 men.

According to statements Saturday morning, a number of the structural iron workers have planned to leave Atlanta to take other jobs. While the steel work on the Healey Building is nearly completed, about three weeks work for the riveting gang and ten days work for the steel men remain.

The strike will not involve other buildings, it is believed.

MEYERS SUICIDE THROUGH FEAR OF INSANITY

Former Atlanta Telephone Man Is Found Dead in St. Louis Hotel. Health Was Broken.

ST. LOUIS, July 12.—Dr. Heine Marks, uncle of Charles L. Meyers, of Nashville, Tenn., who shot and killed himself at the Planters Hotel Friday, said to-day that in his opinion his nephew's suicide was due to a fear of insanity, brought about by overwork.

Meyers suffered a nervous breakdown six months ago and had to quit work. He was general contractor for the Cumberland Telephone Company.

A few days ago Meyers told his bride of three months that if he became convinced that he would go insane he would kill himself. A close guard was kept over him, but he eluded it. Funeral arrangements will follow the inquest to-day. His wife was Miss Pearl Goldstein, of Nashville.

Mr. Meyers, who was a special agent for the Southern Bell Telephone Company, was regarded as an efficient employee. Formerly he lived in Nashville, where he was connected with the Cumberland, and retained his position when that concern was taken over by the Southern. Several months ago he was transferred to Atlanta, but worked here but a few weeks when his health failed and he took a vacation.

Mr. Meyers and his bride arrived in St. Louis Thursday to visit his brother.

MULHALL USED LABOR BODY AS HIS TOOL

Professional Lobbyist Tells of Political Welding of Unions and Manufacturers.

WASHINGTON, July 12.—An interesting glimpse of "inside" politics was given by Colonel Martin M. Mulhall in his testimony to-day before the Overman Lobby Committee.

How as president of the Baltimore Working Men's Association, though lobbying for the National Association of Manufacturers, he lined up the working men against Senator McComas, who was fought because of his advocacy of an eight-hour law, was told by the witness.

Mulhall's testimony portrayed the Manufacturers' Association in the light of a big and powerful non-partisan organization bent on defeating legislation favorable to labor interests and legislators who opposed the association.

Efforts to swing the labor vote in Rhode Island in 1904 for Senator Nelson W. Aldrich also were described by Mulhall. He spent ten days in the State, he said, at the solicitation of Senator Foraker, of Ohio.

Labor union leaders, Colonel Mulhall said, knew of his connection with the Manufacturers' Association.

Colonel Mulhall charged Marshall Cushing, secretary of the National Association of Manufacturers, with trying to defeat William Hughes, now Senator from New Jersey, because Hughes was active in support of labor measures.

Mulhall told the committee "all you had to do was to see 'Boss' Barnes to get a bill killed in the Legislature at Albany."

Senate Beats House for Possession of Mulhall.

WASHINGTON, July 12.—The opening skirmish for physical possession of Colonel Martin M. Mulhall was won by the Senate Lobby Investigation Committee to-day. Chairman Garrett, of the House committee, had subpenaed the witness for examination at 9 o'clock to-day, but late last night the Senators, finding their prerogatives might be infringed upon, told Mulhall to show up at 9 o'clock at the Senate, and he did.

Garrett indicated that if the Senate committee persisted in stopping the House, the House committee will have a subpena out at all times for Mulhall.

James E. Emery, counsel for the National Association of Manufacturers, promised to give a list of about 40 witnesses to disprove Mulhall's accusations affecting business men. He said he was trying to locate some men he knew could tell of Mulhall's record.

REPRESENTATIVE E. D. COLE, OF BARTOW.

Representative Ed Cole Has Acquired a Fortune, but Has Lost Most of His Name.

In the first place, Representative Ed Cole, of Bartow, was not christened Edward, or Edwin, or Ed, or anything like that.

As a matter of fact, his full entitlements are Emreid Dargan Cole!

That, however, was entirely too fancy an outlay of names for this gentleman when first he started out to make his own way in life, and so he elected to have himself called "E. D.," which inevitably evoluted into plain, ordinary, old-fashioned "Ed" as time ran on.

Ed Cole began his business career with a total capital of $1.35. Besides that, he possessed nothing beyond one suit of clothes, vintage unknown, a couple of pairs of socks and a superabundance of energy and pluck.

He plunged into business for himself at 16 by getting a job as train "butcher" on a jerkwater railroad in South Carolina, and he soon enlarged his capital of $1.35 to 100 times that amount.

Not long after this experience one of the big news agencies heard of Cole and grabbed him. Before long he was in charge of a division or so for that concern—and now he still is on the sunny side of 30, worth along toward—well, he is worth a six-figure sum, all right, anyway!

In casting about for a vice chairman of the important Ways and Means Committee of the House, Speaker Burwell looked into Cole's record. He became convinced that Cole was one of the safest and sanest business men in the House, and as that was exactly what he was looking for, Cole got the assignment.

Cole's inheritance tax bill is House bill No. 1, and is generally accepted as the most intelligent inheritance tax measure pending in the Legislature. It likely is the one that will be enacted into law. Cole never introduced it until he felt sure it was right and modeled along the most approved lines.

Christian Endeavor In Sunrise Meeting

LOS ANGELES, July 12.—A majority of the delegates to the International Christian Endeavor convention here were on hand for the sunrise meeting half an hour before dawn.

Reasons assigned to-day for the action of the convention in selecting Chicago for its 1915 meeting were the raising of a $10,000 convention entertainment fund, the fact that there are more than 1,000,000 members of the Christian Endeavor within a radius of a few miles of Chicago, and the presence in this country of thousands of visitors who will be able to stop in Chicago on their way to the Panama Exposition.

TWO BADLY HURT WHEN TROLLEY HITS AUTO

Marietta Car Smashes Smyrna Physician's Machine, Driven by Fifteen-Year-Old Boy.

Dr. W. T. Pace, a physician of Smyrna, and his chauffeur, Fred Reed, 15, narrowly escaped death Saturday morning shortly before 10 o'clock when an incoming Marietta trolley car smashed into the physician's automobile at a curve just beyond Carmichael Station.

Dr. Pace and young Reed, although badly cut and bruised about the face and arms, were able to leave the Atlanta Hospital, where they were rushed, shortly before noon. The car, a new two-passenger Ford, was demolished.

According to Dr. Pace, the street car bore down on them at a rapid rate before either he or the chauffeur knew there was a car in sight.

"The car came down the hill at a rate I would estimate at from 40 to 45 miles an hour," said Dr. Pace, "and we did not see it in time to get out of the way. The motorman blew his whistle once, but it was too late. My chauffeur tried to reverse the machine and then came the crash."

Inspector Winn, of the Georgia Railway and Power Company, said it had been reported to him that the boy driving the car apparently lost his nerve and stopped his car on the track. The car was filled with passengers.

.:. Two in a Train .:.

"A THIRD class single to Galway, please!" Miss Mathers moved away from the ticket office, but not before a tall man, wrapped in a thin ulster, with a tweed cap pulled down over his eyes, had seen her—started first at sound of her soft voice, and then deliberately followed her to the waiting train. It was a bitter winter evening, and Miss Mathers shuddered inwardly as she thought of that long, long train journey through South Wales, the odious crossing of the Irish Channel and the wearisome journey to Galway.

Tears started to her eyes as she thought of past arrivals there. How different they had been! Then she had traveled thither as a guest. Now all was sadly changed, and she was going back to dear, well-remembered places to earn her own living as a governess.

Seated in the corner of a third-class compartment, Mary Mathers settled herself under her rug for the first stage of her journey.

A warning whistle from the train—the door was wrenched open, and a man, wrapped in a big ulster, got in, followed by a porter with a bag and bundle of golf sticks. There was a momentary bustle, during which the express began to glide slowly along the platform. The porter jumped out, shut the door—they were off.

And in the opposite corner was sitting——

Mary's heart gave a jump.

"I thought it was you," said Meredith, quietly. "Aren't you going to speak to me?"

"Of course," she stammered, with lips that tried so hard not to quiver. "You startled me so." She smiled at him gallantly. "You see, you are about the last person I expected to see. Are you going to Ireland?"

The Old Haunts.

"Yes, and you? To the old haunts?" The quick tears started to her eyes.

"Yes, to one of the old haunts near Galway."

"Lough Corrib?" he asked.

Mary winced.

"Yes, just on the shores, half-way to Oughterard."

He leant forward.

"You don't mean to say that you are going to the Wintons?"

"Yes."

"Good! So am I. They're getting up a first-rate house party, you know. I'm awfully glad you're going to be one of them, too."

Mary gave a little gasp, opened her mouth as if to speak, and said nothing. What could she say?

Tell him the truth, of course—that instead of an honored guest she was going to the Wintons as governess at $150 a year, relegated to the schoolroom in a distant wing, dining when the rest of the party lunched, disappearing back again to the distant wing of the house with her charges. Perhaps now and then she would be sent for to play accompaniments or something of the kind. But if Meredith was to be in the house, how could she bear it? How could she tell him? He probably knew nothing about her reverses of fortune. She couldn't blurt it out—apropos of nothing at all.

Three years ago she and Meredith had seen a good deal of each other. No other man had ever touched her heart or made any great difference in her life, but he—she wrenched herself from her dreams with an effort as she spoke.

A Bad Prospect.

"I'm afraid it's going to be a bad night. Are you obliged to cross?"

"Yes."

"And if I remember rightly, you don't care much about the sea, do you?"

"I care this much—that I loathe it," said Mary, with a faint smile. "I have never got over my distaste for boats and everything to do with them. And the Irish Channel is always rough when I cross it."

Meredith laughed.

"Have you only just come back from East Africa?" said Mary, breaking the silence that had fallen between them.

"Three months ago."

"But you will go out again?"

"I don't think so," he said slowly. "It all depends on——"

The door into the corridor was slid open; the dining car attendant looked in.

"Take your seats for dinner, please."

He passed on.

"You will dine, won't you?" asked Meredith. "Nothing like a good meal, you know."

The color mounted to Mary's face.

How could she tell him that dinner was not a possibility to her, simply because she had no spare money to waste? She had a little packet of sandwiches in her bag, and some biscuits, but her appetite sickened at the thought of them.

"I am not hungry," she said, evasively. "I couldn't eat any dinner."

Left Alone.

"Very well. Willful woman must always have her way, but don't say I didn't warn you. Will you be all right if I leave you? I feel the pangs of a furious hunger."

"Of course. I am quite comfortable."

Left alone, Mary sat up and gazed out into the darkness. Her face burned. How could she endure the hours of this journey with Meredith sitting there, talking, looking at her? She must get away from him. Her hard-won self-control might desert her—and then—— She rapidly collected her rug, papers and bag and slipped into the corridor, walking with difficulty toward the far end of the swinging train to another compartment.

Here she would be alone. Presently, to the hum of the express, Mary fell asleep, wrapped in her rug, and dreamed things that brought a smile to her lips and a color to her soft cheeks.

And in the dining car, at his solitary meal, Meredith wondered why fate had deliberately thrown him and Mary together, when that impassable barrier of wealth still stood between them. It had driven him away from her once before, and now—well, he must let things slide. Perhaps, that same interfering dame Fortune might find a way out.

The Irish air was soft and fresh, and the gray country looked inexpressibly lovely to Mary's tired eyes. The crossing had been just as odious as she expected, and she had hurried from the boat in the wintry darkness to the waiting room, dreading, yet hoping, to find Meredith at her side. She saw his tall figure once. He was looking about him, but he did not see her, and she took refuge in a carriage with three other women, and slept away some of her exhaustion on the way to Waterford. There she had to change, and on the platform the first person she saw was—Meredith. He came up to her at once.

"Why did you run away last night?" he said.

"I—I"—

"I don't want to worry you, but you must let me look after you. You look half dead. Have you had any breakfast?"

"Yes."

She had had tea and bread and butter in the train, and the cool morning air had whipped a faint color to her white cheeks.

Slowly they crept away into the thick mist, nothing to be seen but low fields, stone walls and driving mist on every side. Mary felt her spirits sinking lower and lower as she approached her destination.

"Are we there?" she said.

"No, we've stopped for something—signal against us I expect."

Meredith put down the window and looked out into the mist. He saw a row of low sheds, the outline of a tiny station, a branch line, and nothing beyond them but a couple of other compartments. The rest of the train had gone.

She Confesses.

There they were, left behind—in a siding.

"What has happened?" asked Mary.

Meredith turned and looked at her with a rueful sort of smile.

"Left behind!" cried Mary aghast. "What do you mean?"

"They've run us into a siding, and the train has gone on without us. The fact is, I was asleep. I only woke up to find ourselves dumped down here. They let us get into the coach they were leaving behind—idiots! But we'll get on somehow, Mary. After all, it only means a little delay."

He said her name involuntarily, and Mary's heart jumped. Then a feeling of dismay swept over her.

"But we may not arrive till night," she said. "I suppose the only thing we can do is to drive, if a vehicle is to be had. We must be twenty miles from our destination, at least."

"I suppose so, but what does it matter? They'll understand."

"It may not matter for you," said Mary, in a low, harsh voice. "They will excuse in a guest what they may not pardon in the governess."

Meredith stared at her as if she had suddenly gone mad.

"The what?" he said.

"The governess. That is what I am."

"You're mad."

"I'm not; it's a fact."

"You a governess? What does it mean? What are you masquerading for?"

"It's no masquerade. I'm a governess because—I can not dig, and to beg I am ashamed," said Mary, with a miserable little laugh. "That's all."

"But do you mean to say you've got to do it?" said Meredith, dazedly.

"Yes. Everything went in a big smash on the Stock Exchange more than a year ago. I have to do something, and the Wintons wanted a governess for their two little nephews who are living with them, that's all."

"All!" said Meredith, violently. "And I knew nothing of it. I never heard a word of this before. When we met last do you know what sent me away in such haste? Can you guess?"

"No."

"It was because I was afraid to stay. I loved you so much, and I could not speak. I was only a poor soldier of fortune—you were a wealthy heiress. I had already been called a fortune hunter by those who must have seen how I lingered at your side. I didn't think you cared, so I went away. Now, Mary darling, I'm free to speak. I can't give you the riches that are gone, but I can give you a good home and lots of love. Do you care a little? Try to, Mary, when I care so much. I believe Fate brought us together on purpose."

"And let us in a siding," said Mary, with a smile breaking over her face like sunshine through mist.

"It might have left us in a worse place," cried Meredith, his arm about her shoulders. "Mary, is it going to be Yes?"

"Yes—yes," murmured Mary.

Do You Know---

Dr. Samuel Rideal, of London University, who read a paper on the advantages of gas over coal as the fuel at a teachers' conference at Sheffield, said that 2 per cent of coal used was converted into soot, and in London the annual sootfall was 76,000 tons. The annual soot and dust fall in Leeds and London averages between 300 and 650 tons per square mile; in Glasgow, 1,331 tons, and in Coatbridge, 1,930 tons.

Doctor—From now you may let your husband have a glass of beer every day. You understand?

Wife—Yes, doctor—just one glass a day.

Wife—Most decidedly, doctor—only he is four weeks in advance with his allowance.

Beauty Secrets of Beautiful Women

How Dot Wilson Found Milk an Aid to Natural Loveliness

By LILIAN LAUFERTY.

IF you want to have your skin white, your eyes bright, your digestion good and your weight always adjusted to a pleasing plumpness that does not increase to stoutness, try the milk diet. This is pretty pink and white, sparkling-eyed Dot Wilson's great beauty secret, and she longs for converts to her theory of the simple life."

I found Miss Wilson and her sisters in a cool, wind-swept room down at Brighton Beach, New York, and after I had adjusted myself to this triple personality as illustrated by the "three-twin" sisters, we settled down to a cozy little visit that gave me one or two brand-new ideas for the attainment of beauty. The first idea was something no one said—it was just the generous, kindly attitude of admiration and willingness to have their "baby sister" featured that Miss Doris Wilson and Miss Alma showed throughout our interview. Next fall B. F. Keith will give you all a chance to see the three clever girls who make up the Doris Wilson trio—but before that time pray let me present to you a bit of their philosophy of life—and beauty:

Only Milk.

"Milk, milk, nothing but milk—that is what my mother brought me up on. None of her children had any other article of diet until they were 12; and I have never found anything so nourishing, so easy to digest and so productive of good results. So milk is my diet, and though the girls vary from it, they often regret some indiscretion of diet to the tune of a pain of a skin rash or one of the ills that food is so generous about presenting people with," said Miss Dot.

"I live on milk—no water to drink, for milk takes its place. No indigestible food can tempt me, for milk keeps me so well, so buoyant and so free from nerves that I flourish thereon and never long for the flavor of any food but my tried and true friend. About twice a year I have a taste of some such foreign substance as ice cream. Oh, yes, I can eat food, and I do occasionally, but I don't like it.

"I drink eight quarts of milk a day—not iced milk to shock the sensitive stomach nerves, but normal tempered milk.

"I sip it slowly—'Just sneak it down,' said one specialist who cures all sorts of nervous and digestive diseases by a seven week' milk cure. Well, it takes me about fifteen minutes to drink one glass of milk, and I am enjoying it all the time. We're all only bigger babies—babies grown up—and if it is so good for the wee things to live on milk, why should it not be good for them to go on living on milk, the friendly food of their childhood? The girls drink five or six glasses of milk a day, and whenever they are tired or nervous, or feel on the verge of a little breakdown, back they go to the milk diet, and then they just get in tune with things again."

Miss Dot Wilson.

I looked at the three pairs of bright eyes—blue, blue-gray and hazel-gray—each pair with a spark of light at the back of their starry depths; I studied the creamy, peachblow complexions, and the gracefully rounded, tall figures, and I decided that as a near-milk cure made you pretty and the absolute milk-dietist was conceded to be the prettiest of the sisters, perhaps it would be a good idea to go right off and corner the milk market.

THEIR MARRIED LIFE

By MABEL HERBERT URNER.

PARIS at 7 o'clock of a summer evening! The gleaming lights, the gay gowns of the women, the trees, the outdoor cafes—Helen, clinging to Warren's arm, walked down the broad boulevard athrill with the glamour of it all.

It had been just four hours since they arrived from Cherbourg—tired, dusty, travel-stained. But now, rested and in cooler clothes, they started out to find, as Warren expressed it, "a place to feed."

Where should they go? Helen suggested a number of well-known places that she had read of in the guide book. But Warren was determined to have their first dinner at a restaurant he had been particularly fond of when he was in Paris eight years before.

Although he had forgotten the name, he had felt confident of his sense of location. They had taken a 'bus to Porte St. Martin and had walked several blocks in what he felt was the right direction.

"Must be around here somewhere," frowning down a street that was plainly unfamiliar. "I don't believe they've moved."

"Isn't that a restaurant over there—where the lights are?" asked Helen hopefully.

"By Jove! I believe that's the place," as they crossed the wide street. "I'd have sworn it was on the other side."

Entering, they were met by an officious head waiter, who bustled ahead, ushering them to a table in an inner room.

"Oh, we don't want to sit back here," objected Warren. "Give us a table out on the veranda."

"Sorry, monsieur, but they're all taken."

"Why, there's a half dozen vacant ones up at that end."

"They're all reserved, monsieur," repeated the head waiter stolidly.

Warren turned to Helen with a scowling "So they know that game over here, too. This fellow's looking for five francs. Well, what do you say? Want to sit back here—or look up some other place?"

"Oh, dear, let's go somewhere else," resenting the supercilious air of the head waiter, who stood impatiently tapping the dinner card with his pencil.

Outside Warren demanded curtly:

"Now, where to? It's getting late and I'm hungry. We don't want to wander around all night, you know."

"But, dear, we don't want to stay there. That man was almost insolent."

He Blames Her.

"Well, you're pretty darn particular," as usual throwing the responsibility upon her. "We'd have been sure of good food there, anyway. But you're always kicking. Suppose you find a place now."

Helen realized that Warren was on the verge of one of his irritable moods, when he would blame her for whatever happened, however inconsistent or unjust. He had had nothing to eat since that early and unsatisfactory luncheon on the train. It was a critical moment, and she was desperately anxious to find some other good restaurant at once—before his growing hunger increased his irritability.

They walked on for several blocks, Helen gazing anxiously in every direction, while Warren maintained the scowling, sullen silence that always foreboded a storm.

"Oh, there, dear!" eagerly, as she caught sight of a balcony, high above the street, with white clothed tables and rose-shaded lights. "Doesn't that look like a good place?"

"You can't tell anything about these strange places in Paris," growled Warren. "May be rotten. But we've got to eat somewhere. Come on. And we'll stay here—understand? Whether we get a table you like or not. No more trotting around for me to-night."

Helen followed Warren up the broad, red-carpeted stairs, hoping desperately that at this place things would "go right."

The first glimpse was disappointing. The room was crowded. Would they have to go somewhere else?

"Sounds Good."

As they stood uncertainly at the doorway, a couple rose from a most desirable table on the veranda—one that Helen had seen from the street. If they could only get that!

The next moment the head waiter was bowing them toward it. Two other waiters rushed forward with fresh linen and silver, and a third placed a footstool for Helen's feet.

"Oh, dear, it's a wonderful place," sinking back with a sense of infinite relief that a critical situation had been safely passed.

"Well, we'll not get enthusiastic till we see what the food's like," grunted Warren, somewhat appeased by the attention they had received.

"I can't make anything out of this," scowling at the menu, which was illegibly written in French with pale purple ink.

"Will you have our 5-franc table d'hote dinner, monsieur?" asked a waiter at his elbow.

"Uumph, you speak English? Well, that simplifies things. What do we get with that dinner?"

"Hors d'oeuvres, potage, fish, entree, roast, salade, entrements and a bottle of red or white Bordeaux."

"That sounds pretty good," assented Warren. "All right; we'll try it."

To Helen the atmosphere of the place and the street scene below was one of enchantment. She was beginning to feel the charm of Paris.

With the hors d'oeuvres and first glass of wine, the scowling frown on Warren's brow had relaxed, and with the thick green Saint Germain soup he grew almost genial.

"Just taste that fish! It's great. What they call filet of sole at home is only flounder. We never see the real thing there. This is an all right place."

"Oh, I'm so glad we found this, dear. For I felt that you were getting out of humor, and would blame me for not staying at that other place," exclaimed Helen, who, womanlike, always wanted to go back over a situation, instead of being content to let well enough alone. "And I couldn't bear to have our first dinner in Paris an unhappy one."

"Who in thunder was going to make it unhappy, unless you were?" growled Warren, who hated post-mortems. "What the devil are you harping on it now for, anyway?"

"Oh, I only meant, dear—" began Helen, hastening to conciliate. But fortunately at this moment the waiter uncovered the fowl, roasted to a delicate brown, and Warren's attention was diverted from Helen's untactful remark.

"Dear, there's not so much difference in the gowns worn by the French women," commented Helen, now anxious to change the subject. There aren't any sensational dresses here. That woman over there in pink, is rather striking, but any of the others might be in New York."

"Well, this isn't the sort of place where you'd see much in the way of dress. Some night I'll take you to supper at Maxim's. The gowns there'll be striking enough."

"Oh, are we going to Maxim's?" delightedly. "I thought it was a dreadful place."

"Not so dreadful as they want you to think—that's their best asset. You'll find it pretty tame. More than half the crowd will be rubber necks like ourselves."

But Helen had read and heard much of Maxim's, and as she minced over the fruit salad she gazed down on the gay boulevard in eager anticipation of a supper there.

"Dear, what IS this?" as the waiter placed before them two small brown jars filled with a thick creamy substance. "Search me!" shrugged Waren, investigating it with a spoon.

"That's Creme de Zeigny, Monsieur. Will you have sugar with it?"

"I'll try it straight first."

"Oh, it's delicious, dear," exclaimed Helen enthusiastically. "It's sort of sour, salty and sweet! More like a delicate liquid cheese."

Very Smooth.

"By Jove, that is pretty smooth," admitted Warren. Isn't this the stuff the Thustons raved over when they got back last year? We'll have this often—that's sure."

When the waiter had cleared off the table, Warren lit his cigar and turned over the check placed unobtrusively before him.

"Ten francs—two dollars! Well that's what I call a good run for your money. Everything specially cooked, too—and that was a whole chicken. To get a dinner like that in New York, you'd have to order it a la carte, and with that wine it would cost you not a cent less than $10."

"Now aren't you glad we didn't stay at that other restaurant?" insisted Helen with a true feminine persistency. "The food COULDN'T have been any better! You see I didn't find such a bad place after all."

But Warren was no longer in an inflammable mood. The excellent dinner had had a most pacifying effect on his temper. So to this rather indiscreet remark, he only shrugged a good-natured: "Umph, that's right—rub it in!"

Advice to a Young Man

By DOROTHY DIX.

A YOUNG man, who is ambitious and who feels within himself the ability to rise in the world, is very much in love with a pretty young girl who has no aspirations beyond a new dress and going to Coney Island or a cheap theater.

The young man is making enough money for them to be married on and live in fair comfort in their present status in life, but he is not satisfied with this.

He is anxious to get an education and study a profession. To this the sweetheart objects. She isn't willing for the young man to make his way through college. She doesn't see any use in an education, any how. When the young man talks to her about books it bores her to death, and when he wants to take her to hear a good lecture or good music she offsets it with a proposal to take in a vaudeville show.

The young man wants to know whether he should give up his books or his girl, or if there is any way in which he could interest his fiancee in intellectual pursuits and kindle the fires of ambition in her soul.

To answer the last question first, I would say, no. The homely old proverb about the impossibility of making a silk purse out of a sow's ear is still gospel true. There is no way to make a clod aspire, and you can no more change the tastes of a woman who was born without a perception of the finer things of life than you can change the color of her eyes, or the height of her stature.

Born That Way.

The girl who does not perceive the advantage of an education, or the necessity for one, who yawns over even a novel and who doesn't see why anybody reads the daily paper, who is absolutely and totally unintellectual was simply born that way. There's some lack in her mental equipment, and nothing that her husband can do is going to supply it. She was just born that way, and that way she will stay to her dying day, and it isn't her fault.

Such a woman may be the best of housekeepers, the most devoted of wives, but she is no mental companion for an intelligent man. Many men marry this kind of a girl because she has a pretty face, and then torture her trying to make her clever—something she can never be. This is cruelly unjust. He who marries a girl who frankly admits that she doesn't like to read and has no ambition should never bother her with books, or reproach her with her lack of progressiveness.

As to which he should take when a man is called upon to choose between his career and his sweetheart, I should say take the career every time, because an ambitious man soon learns to hate any woman who is the handicap that prevents him winning in the race of life. When even those that we love become a burden upon us that keep us from success—good-bye love! This is unromantic, but true.

Many an ambitious man finds out after marriage that he has saddled himself unknowingly with a wife who can not and will not keep pace with him, and who holds him back from the achievements that he is capable of making. Such a man is the victim of a hard and bitter fate, but in honor there is nothing left for him but to bear with whatever fortitude he can the misfortune that he has brought upon himself.

A Chance.

But the man who finds out before marriage that the girl he thinks himself in love with is not his mental and spiritual mate, that she can not think his thoughts, that she is not interested in the pursuits that he is interested in; that she does not wish to reach the goal toward which his feet are set, has still a chance to save himself from a marriage that is bound to bring misery both to himself and the woman.

For what attracts him to her is only the ephemeral charms of her youth and good looks, and when they are gone, as they must be in a few years, nothing remains but the memory of the sacrifice he has made for her, and the irksomeness of a tie that binds him to a wife with whom he has not one thing in common.

In that day a man remembers what he might have been and is not. He sees other men, no better equipped than himself, climbing up to the top of the ladder while he sits at the bottom with his dull and commonplace wife. And in that day he sees with fatal clearness just how much of the earth earthy is the woman who is not animated by anything except a desire for the things that make for her physical comfort.

Matrimony can mean the closest companionship that two human beings ever attain. It can be literally two souls with but a single thought, and it can mean a lonesomeness that is as great as Robinson Crusoe ever suffered on his desert isle. And when it is that it is the abomination of desolation.

The Solitude.

Think of what the ambitious man suffers when he is married to a woman who never wants to advance one step, who never sees why he wants to make a change, and whom he has to fight at every step of his progress. Think of the solitude of soul of a man married to a woman with whom he can never discuss a book he has read, or a play he has seen, or an opera he has heard; who never even comprehends anything that he tries to tell her that is more psychic than the price of butchers' meat. Not always "the woman who never could know, and never could understand" is a vampire. Only too often she is just a dull and stupid wife, without brains or imagination or aspiration.

So I say to the man who is hesitating between his career and his pretty, ambitionless, unintellectual sweetheart to choose the career. He will soon outgrow her anyway, and it is far, far better for both that this inevitable separation should come before they are married than afterward.

Confessions of a Medium

No. 3.---When the Clock Stopped

By Chas. D. Isaacson.

Copyright 1913 by International News Service.

IN the midst of the seance the grave faced spirit medium paused. He slowly rose from his seat before his assembled auditors and impressively spoke:

"My good friends, we are now going to attempt the most difficult experiment of all—something never before accomplished in the records of the world. If we succeed in doing it, we shall prove beyond all possible doubt the fact that we CAN communicate with the dead."

He cleared his throat and waited as a sharp flash of lightning illumined the room and a murderous peal of thunder crashed on its heels.

It was a night late in August—a hot, black, scary night, when you look warily over your shoulder at the bent, slinking, soaking figures that pass you by; when the very air seems laden with hobgoblin phantoms, and the wind seems to echo the moaning and groaning of lost souls.

A Night of Wonders.

Within the darkened room, fifty frightened people held firmly to their chairs and listened to the deep, far-away tones of the speaker medium. This had been a night of wonders. Tables and chairs had floated about by unseen supernatural means. Wonderful messages had made fifty hearts flutter like leaves in a Kansas cyclone. To these persons, accustomed to unusual things brought about by their mystifying leader, the startling events of the meeting had overshadowed anything of the past. And now the thought of something still more dramatic brought them to breathless and awed attention.

"Dear spirit," breathed the medium, raising his eyes to the ceiling, "we crave your assistance and beg your pardon for tiring you so much this day. Accomplish this seeming impossibility which I am about to put to you, and prove your existence and your ability to communicate with us, to the most skeptical, unbelieving member of this circle.

"Over there is a clock"—and the speaker pointed a long, lean, bony finger to the opposite end of the room, where on the mantel could be faintly traced the outlines of a ponderous old-fashioned timepiece.

"Listen, Spirit, listen. Over there, you hear the ticking of that clock. Over there—you head it?"

Tick—tick—tick fell on the ears of the listeners, who held their breath for fear it would drown the sound which grew louder and louder with each successive second, until it seemed to beat on their very hearts.

A Request.

"Spirit, think carefully now please. Here is where the experiment begins. Can you—will you STOP THAT CLOCK?"

Deathly silence ensued. Just tick—tick—loud and clear and sharp as a bell.

No answer.

"Spirit, will you do it?"

Tick—tick—tick.

"Will you?"

"Why—why, y-yes, I'll try," came the answer in mysterious taps on the table.

Tick—tick—tick — tick — each second seemed an hour to the 50 auditors, who sat half turned toward the clock, eager-eared, faint-hearted.

Tick—tick——

Snap! In the very middle of a beat! IT STOPPED!

Oh, the eternity of silence that followed broken soon by a storm of gasps and screams. There was a crash of thunder, and some one, no longer able to stand the oppression of the darkness, turned on the gas, flooding the room with light. Then they crowded about the clock—pale and wide-eyed. It was stopped, no question of that. The men, comparing it with their watches, found it recorded just one minute behind theirs.

"Wonderful!" "Weird!" "Proves spiritualism absolutely," "Could NEVER have been done by human or material means—it was surely the work of a spirit." These were the comments rapidly uttered, as they examined the clock to see if any wires or mechanical contrivances could have been connected with it.

The Answer.

This incident happened. To those who were there, it was the most wonderful phenomenon they had ever witnessed. At least that is how it happened to all but the medium. And the medium was myself. Would you like to know how it was done? I will tell you.

No spirit stopped the clock. No mechanical means stopped it. Even I did not stop it. IN THE FIRST PLACE, THE CLOCK WAS NOT GOING AT ALL! "How and why was ticking heard?"

Here is the whole story: Back of me, on a roll-top desk, I had previously placed a very tiny alarm clock, noted for its loud tick. Nobody thinks of a clock until you mention it. When I said, "You hear the ticking over there—OVER THERE," the audience imagined the sound emanated from the direction I pointed; and, by suggestion, on which is based hypnotism, by the way, they had placed it as coming from the silent clock on the mantel. Then, while they were listening for the unexpected, half turned to the opposite wall, I had, unobserved, slipped my finger to the pendulum, stopped the alarm and dropped the clock into a drawer!

"But then how was the other clock the exact time?"

Before the audience had arrived I had placed the hands ahead several hours and had brought my experiment to conform to the very minute I had arranged. This was simple—in a flash of lightning I had casually looked at my watch. The mystery of the night, the darkness, the wonders already witnessed, had all aided me to fool these intelligent people, among whom were a magazine writer, an artist, two theatrical folks, and several writers and lawyers.

Now consider this: That this experiment was far more dramatic and inexplicable than is generally seen at professional seances, where money is paid for admittance. Yet on incidents such as these, the credulous people of the masses are convinced of spiritism and defrauded by fakers, whose wonders I warrant could be unraveled as simply as the one I have just recorded. I did these things to study and expose. Professionals do them for money. Is it not highly probable that others who earn their living at this mockery are forced to work out similar "wonders?" I do not say spiritualism is wrong. I do not essay to pass judgment on this great question. It is against the fakers that I direct my campaign, beseeching every sensible man and woman to save their hard-earned money and evade them.

Going the Limit.

Six Miles Up!

And Safety Instead of Death Because of a New and Wonderful Device for Aviators

The picture, which was taken at an altitude of more than six miles, shows Messrs. Maurice Bienaime and Jacques Schneider in the car of the balloon "Icare" wearing the patent breathing apparatus. In 1878 the balloon "Zenith" attained a height of about four miles, but two of its three passengers were suffocated. With this apparatus the fatality could not have occurred.

By GARRETT P. SERVISS.

THE greatest peril for those who ascend to great altitudes is not that of falling, but that of being suffocated, like fish taken out of water!

It was the climbers of high mountains who first discovered the fact that it is often difficult for men to breathe at a height of from two and a half to three miles above sea level. The late Edward Whymper, the conqueror of the terrible Matterhorn, made many experiments on this, and he concluded, after climbing Chimborazo and other huge peaks in the Andes, that the cause of "mountain sickness," as the trouble was called, was due both to the lessened value of air that is inspired at such altitudes and to the expansion of the gases contained within the body, producing a pressure upon the internal organs.

But more recent study has shown that the difficulty arises mainly from the comparative lack of oxygen in the upper air, and that this may be overcome by means of apparatus supplying extra oxygen to the lungs.

The two principal constituents of the atmosphere are oxygen and nitrogen. Nitrogen is an inert gas which stifles animal respiration. Oxygen, on the other hand, is a very active gas, which, when breathed, supports animal life. When mixed, as near the earth's surface, in the proportion of about four volumes of nitrogen to one of oxygen, the air is respirable, and the inertness of the nitrogen does no harm. But if the proportion of oxygen is reduced the air becomes stifling.

Now, oxygen is heavier than nitrogen in ratio of about eight to seven, and in obedience to the law that heavier substances sink lower than lighter ones, the oxygen thins out as the height above the ground increases, until its proportion to the nitrogen becomes considerably reduced. Above three or four miles the amount of oxygen is so much diminished that breathing becomes very difficult, and at still higher altitudes respiration may cease entirely.

A Tragedy.

A very tragic instance of the effect thus produced is furnished by the story of the famous balloon ascent made in April, 1878, by Gaston Tissandier, Croce Spinelli and Signor Sivel. They ascended from La Villette in France, in the balloon "Zenith," to a height of 28,200 feet, or a little more than five and one-third miles. The thinness of the air, and as we now know, the relative lack of oxygen, killed Spinelli and Sivel, and nearly cost the life of Tissandier.

To show what modern science and invention have done to avert this peril of the high atmosphere, let us turn to the story of a still higher ascent, made on May 28, 1913, by the balloon "Icare," carrying Albert Senouque, Jacques Schneider and M. Bienaime. They started from Lamotte-Breuil in France, and attained an elevation of nearly 33,000 feet, or six and a quarter miles, and yet they did not suffer at all, and came down in perfect condition, and exulting in their great feat!

Their success and immunity from suffocation were due to the fact that they took with them the apparatus shown in the accompanying photograph.

A Wonderful Picture.

This consists of an air-tight vessel filled with compressed oxygen. A mask which can be fitted closely over the nose and mouth is connected by a tube with the reservoir of oxygen. There is a pressure gauge which enables the aeronaut to measure the quantity of oxygen remaining in the reservoir, and there is also a device by which to regulate the amount flowing through the tubes. Thus they could take just as much oxygen as they needed and no more. The rate of supply varied from two quarts per minute to ten. The reservoir contained about 1,600 quarts.

They began to breathe the oxygen when at a height of about 11,000 feet.

The method of using the apparatus is shown in the photograph, which was taken by Senouque, showing Bienaime and Schneider, with their breathing masks on, at the very time when they were at the top of their flight, more than six miles above the earth!

Similar apparatus has recently been carried by mountain climbers, and by the pilots of aeroplanes ascending to great altitudes. With the rapid progress of aerial navigation it will become indispensable in the future.

If fish had human brains they might safely make a voyage of discovery in the air!

MELANCHOLY WOMEN

Should Profit by Mrs. Hurley's Experience—Her Own Story Here Told.

Eldon, Mo.—"I was troubled with displacement, organic inflammation and female weakness. For two years I could not stand on my feet long at a time and I could not walk two blocks without enduring cutting and drawing pains down my right side which increased once a month, I have been at that time purple in the face and would walk the floor. I could not lie down or sit still sometimes for a day and a night at a time. I was nervous, had very little appetite, no ambition, melancholy, and often felt as though I had not a friend in the world.

"After I had tried most every female remedy first, without success, my mother-in-law advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I did so and gained in strength every day. I have now no trouble in any way and highly praise your medicine. It advertises itself."—Mrs. S. T. HURLEY, Eldon, Missouri.

Remember, the remedy which did this was Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. For sale everywhere.

It has helped thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing down feeling, indigestion, and nervous prostration, after all other means have failed. Why don't you try it?

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

IN ALL PROBABILITY, YES.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

A certain girl friend of mine recently wrote me a letter asking a favor of me. I could easily oblige her as the favor is slight. I have been keeping company with a friend of hers lately and am decidedly in love with her. She (the one who wrote the letter) knows this, but still bestows her attentions on me. I myself am not paying her much attention and do not like her. Do you think I would arouse the jealousy of my lover if I showed the other friend this favor just to be polite? M. B.

You letter is rather ambiguous, as you do not state the nature of the favor.

If of such a nature it would cause trouble between you and your sweetheart, you must refuse. Your first thought should be of her.

And please see to it that the other girl's attentions are bestowed elsewhere. I am afraid she will make trouble.

THERE MAY BE SOME EXCUSE.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 18, am considered very handsome, and am in love with a boy three years my senior. He tells me he loves me, but when we have an engagement he always disappoints me. Do you think he is sincere? MARJORIE.

If by "always" you mean once or twice, he may have been unavoidably detained. But if he makes a practice of disappointing you, you must make no more engagements with him, for he cares nothing for you.

HIS RUDENESS IS INEXCUSABLE.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I have been married four years and am only 22 years old. My husband is 29. When out in company with my husband, is it not his place to notice me or talk to me?

When out dining at a friend's, is it right for him to pay attention to young ladies at the table by passing dishes to them and not noticing me? R. B.

He does everything he should not, and his sins of omission are as great.

His behavior is unpardonable, but I know of no redress for you. I hope all girls of 18 who think they are old enough to select a husband will take warning from you.

OBEY YOUR PARENTS.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I have been attending college, and last fall met a young man who is also a student. For the past four months he has been very attentive to me. I love him very much. My parents, who know the young man, say he is wild and associates with bad company. They want me to give him up. What shall I do? I love my family, but I also love the young man very, very much.

M. F. F.

I would urge you to obey your parents, were the young man desirable, for parents always know best. How much more I urge it since he is wild and dissolute! Give him up! Let there be no compromise. I add my pleadings to those of your parents.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"Brave!" he exclaimed in low, contemptuous tones. "It takes no bravery to fight a coward—and that's what this ghost is! It's a coward, like every other spook. Did you ever hear of any spirit that walked in the daytime? Never! They sneak and dodge and hide in crumbling and deserted places. I tell you that men are not half so afraid of spirits as spirits are of men! Face the supernatural, and it is beaten before the fight begins. Spooks, horse thieves and peevish wildcats can all be tamed by the same little charm."

He stoped in a dead silence. The others were staring at him intently, but with highly different expressions.

"Charm?" repeated the Duke, vaguely.

"What is it?" asked the Princess, breathlessly.

Unostentatiously, Jarvis produced his pistol, handling it as one might handle a familiar pencil. To one reared in a community where firearms are never seen excepting in the windows of the hardware store the sight of a pistol occasions either panic or the utmost indifference, depending entirely on the degree of ignorance or natural timidity. But in localities where the revolver is as common and serves the same purpose as the rapier of medieval Europe it is a known and fixed quantity. To one native to those localities the interest in the appearance of the pistol is directed entirely toward the man who displays it—what manner of man he is and what is his manner of handling the weapon.

The Duke had never seen a pistol excepting once or twice on the field of honor and strapped to the thigh of a cavalry man. He was an utter stranger to the type of man to whom a 44-caliber revolver is a shield sword. Consequently, though any ten-year-old boy from the lower Ohio Valley could have told him at one glance that Warren Jarvis carried a revolver. Because it was a protection and not a menace, as it is to be unused, the appearance of the weapon seemed to amuse him, rather than otherwise.

A Joke.

"I had been hoping, Mr. Warren," he said, with light scorn, "that you had some subtle method of handling this problem. But no! You propose to meet the forces of the supernatural with firearms! I may tell you that this specter has been fired at before without the slightest effect."

Jarvis smiled and nodded as he returned the pistol to his pocket.

"Quite likely," Your Excellency. I have seen rifle fire that had not the slightest effect on a wildcat—for the very good reason that the shooting was wilder than the cat."

The Duke made a gesture as if waiving all responsibility.

"I am sorry for you, Mr. Warren. You will find the ghost more real than the treasure."

"But the treasure is real, Carlos!" exclaimed the Princess, with spirit. "Would I have crossed the ocean for this locket unless I knew? Why, with this paer a total stranger, anybody who had never seen the castle, could walk right up to the place and point out the very stone that hides it!"

For the barest fraction of a second the glances of the two men crossed like foils.

"Pretty dangerous sort of paper to have around," observed Jarvis, slowly. "Look out that somebody doesn't get there ahead of you."

"Yes, it is a dangerous paper," chimed in the Duke in the same time, "if it leads any one into the castle."

The young man laughed, silently and naturally.

"Well, Your Excellency, I'd go a long way for the fun of unraveling a good mystery with a little spice of danger thrown in."

Dangerous Ground.

The Duke nodded as if he understood and sympathized with the feeling. Then, as if something had just occurred to him, he remarked:

"You needn't have gone so far, Mr. Warren. You are leaving a very unusual case behind you in New York. I suppose you read the papers on your way to the boat?"

The young man's lips twitched and he glanced at the trunk.

"Why, no. I was so wrapped up in my baggage I really didn't have a chance."

He glanced slyly at the Princess, who immediately discovered something of interest out of a porthole.

"This will interest you, too, cousin," remarked the Duke, picking up a newspaper he had dropped when he first presented himself to his kinswoman. "You were at the Vanderlip last night, I believe." He opened the paper, found the item he had in mind and read aloud:

"'Pistol duel in Vanderlip Hotel—Guests awake in panic to find prominent Kentuckian dangerously wounded by unknown assailant—Mysterious escape.—Colonel James Markham, a prominent and wealthy Kentuckian, nearly met his death at 5 o'clock this morning in a pistol duel in his room at the Vanderlip Hotel.' 'At a late hour the police had no clew to the identity of his assailant except the remarkable fact that he is still hiding somewhere in the hotel.'"

"He's probably a long way from the hotel by now," interrupted Jarvis with a smile.

"They say he couldn't have gotten out without being seen."

Jarvis shrugged his shoulders. "That's the theory of the police or the reporters."

"What do you think?" demanded the Duke.

"Oh, he might have escaped in a thousand ways. But that's hardly in my line. That work belongs to what we call the 'gum-shoes.'"

"'Gum-shoes!'" echoed the Duke, with amazement.

"Yes, ordinary detectives," Jarvis explained. "But," he added, turning to the Princess, "we are keeping you from getting settled, I'm afraid. So, if you will excuse me, I will see you both at dinner, perhaps."

"Yes, do," invited the Princess, graciously. "And, Carlos, do arrange to sit with us. We will have quite a party."

The Police.

Jarvis bowed to the Duke. "I am pleased to have made your acquaintance, Your Excellency."

"Thank you, Mr. Warren. I find you most interesting. I shall be glad to hear more of—of your remarkable profession."

There was just the faintest echo of a sneer in this last, but the young man bowe as if complimented, and had just turned to the door, when there was a sharp knock. He drew back and the Princess quickly opened it.

With no greeting, bow or apology, two men thrust themselves into the stateroom. Jarvis recognized them at once and set his shoulders for the final combat.

By this you are not to suppose that he was personally acquainted with the men themselves—his familiarity was with the type. In all the world-wide phantasmagoria of races and classes there is none that can be so readily recognized and classified as the New York detective. With the present craze for uniformed bellboys, pages, milliners' attendants, door tenders, errand boys and governors it is quite possible to confuse the uniformed policeman with some of these. But when he is sent out in plain clothes there is no mistaking him. When you have seen one of them you can recognize any one of them to the extreme range of your vision. There is a combination of a certain physical solidity manifest in their carriage and mental stolidity evidenced in their faces that can be found nowhere else.

This pair were typical—thick-chested, thick-handed, thick-headed, with round moon-like faces.

On the Rack.

One stepped just inside the door and a little to one side of it as if on guard. The other advanced a step farther. He had evidently been decided on as spokesman. He glanced at the two men and then addressed the Princess, consulting a tiny note-book as he spoke.

"Is this Miss M. T. Ar-r-agan?" he inquired in a rich, "far-down" brogue, overlaid with the indescribable Manhattanese accent.

"Yes," replied the Princess, uncertainly, and evidently puzzled by the sudden and unexplained intrusion. Jarvis remained in the background and thrust his wounded hand into his overcoat pocket. The Duke's little mustache began to bristle and he stepped forward.

"You were at the Vanderlip Hotel last night?" pursued Detective Driscoll, ignoring the Duke.

"Ye-es."

"The lock on your door was broken?"

"Yes."

"I am from headquarters, ma'am," explained the detective, having gotten these "damaging admissions." "And I have orders to clear up one or two little matters connected with that affair at the hotel last night."

The exalted cousin could no longer restrain himself.

"Orders, orders!" he burst out. "To break in here! What headquarters?"

Detective Driscoll stared at him in open-eyed insolence. Jarvis smiled discreetly behind his hand.

"Police Headquarters!" bellowed the detective so loudly that every one started. His colleague at the door smiled wearily.

"Do you know whom you are addressing?" sputtered the grandee angrily.

Detective Driscoll rolled toward him, pushed out about five cubic inches of chin and snarled:

"That'll be about all from you!" resentative Kimbrough, of Harris County, a snap. Driscoll returned to the Duke quietly, "let me attend to this matter. Won't you come in, gentlemen?"

"Thanks," said Detective Driscoll, easily, nodding to his partner to close the door and giving the Duke a final glare as if daring him to say another word.

"Yes," Jarvis' pleasant voice added its soothing influence, "we were just talking about the mystery."

The Duke, feeling that he would only risk a loss of dignity by quarreling with a foreign police officer, took the cue and held out the olive branch with a patronizing air.

"You are, I take it," he remarked to Driscoll as the sleuth was peering into his little book, "one of the—er 'gum shoes.'"

Jarvis snickered, the book shut with a snap. Driscoll returned to the duke and thrust a menacing face into his.

"Gum shoes!" he snarled. "Say, are you tryin' to be funny?"

The Duke, startled, drew back a step. "Well, sir," he replied half apologetically," you are speaking rather loudly, and, if I may say so, with undue asperity. I presume I have offended you."

"'You presume!'" answered Driscoll. "That's a hot one! Say—who are you, any way?"

The exalted cousin drew himself up and gave one end of his mustache an upward twist.

"I am Hernando, Duke d'Alva," he replied pompously. "I have other titles, but they would hardly interest you."

The detective looked him over from head to foot and licked his lips hungrily.

"Dook de Alvers—and then some, eh? Ain't that nice! Well, if you was the Archbishop of Canterbury I'd run yer in and take yer ashore if yer gimme any more sass!" Fascinated by a savage glare the Duke declined to give him any more "sass," and the detective turned to the Princess, but still eyed the exalted cousin, as if longing for an excuse to "run him in."

Spoiled by Success

PRECISELY as the clocks in the vicinity of Dowman Square announced the hour of midnight, John Maine's pen ceased suddenly in its rapid flight across the paper before him. For a time he sat motionless, his forehead wrinkled in perplexity. Twice he attempted to resume his work, but each time stopped short in the effort.

For five long hours he had worked with feverish mental energy and the first time his pen refused to become the vehicle of his thoughts the physical strength of the man gave out, then, as a gift from the gods, came the blessing of sleep to the jaded worker.

Dimly, vaguely, John Maine became conscious of the fact that his arms were bound and useless at his side. His legs were cramped in an unnatural position; he endeavored to move his head, and discovered, with a painful shock, that his neck was securely held by a tight collar attached to the back of his chair. With startled eyes he glanced round swiftly in the little circle his bonds allowed and saw nothing. Then, as the perspiration oprued from him in his fear, he knew that from somewhere in the room a voice was speaking, slowly, monotonously, but its every word articulated with striking distinctness.

"Don't waste your energy," came in a sibilant whisper. "You have nothing to fear but the truth. Compose yourself.

"I am here to talk," began the voice, "and you to listen."

"So it seems," said Maine briefly. "Tell me," he urged quietly, "who are you?"

"Ten years ago, John Maine," the unknown said, completely ignoring the other's question, "you were a poor man struggling to achieve distinction. Today you are an acknowledged power in the literary world; but has your path upward been a clean, praiseworthy path?"

Congratulations.

The man in the chair stirred uneasily; his eyes sought the one remaining flicker in the fire.

"I suppose," he mused, addressing the tiny, cheerless flame as one in a reverie, "I suppose you're a kind of spectre of the past, eh? You've a remarkably fine idea of stage management," he added, with assumed lightness. "As one artist to another, I congratulate you on your sense of the dramatic."

"You fool! You unspeakable fool!" hissed the voice venomously in his ear. "As you can not tell yourself, suppose I show you what manner of man you are. Take your mind back ten years and tell me what happened then. You can't?"

"I was married ten years ago," Maine replied, hastily.

"So you were married ten years ago, were you?"

"As an unknown man," the voice continued evenly, "without a penny to bless yourself, you married the sweetest little girl in Christendom. She left her parents, she abandoned all to make a mesalliance with you; she shared your garret, she helped you with your work and she bore her altered condition in life with a fortitude which only threw your quibbling nature into more heinous relief. Slowly, gradually, as you mounted the ladder to success, all the magnificent resolutions of your early married life faded into insignificance. You lived only for your work. You became a supreme artist. And you, for whom she had forsaken everything, forgot the very existence of the woman whose heart was still yours.

A Son.

"Five years ago," continued the voice, "a son was born to you, and for a time you forgot you were a man of letters. But you soon slipped away when your clubs called you, when the public fawned on you; and your wife, broken-hearted and neglected, fled from your home. Did you realize then"—the words came in a thundering torrent now—"the revolting act of savagery which cast your wife adrift without the child she loved so dearly?"

"Good heavens!" exclaimed Maine fearfully. "Are you—"

"Listen!" came the imperious command. "She wanted your love, and you had buried it in your success. But, strangely as it sounds, you still loved the child that is sleeping in this house. Do you think that the boy has not missed his mother more than you have missed your wife? John Maine, in the grate before you are ashes, cold and gray. They are your portion in life, for that boy of yours, his heart yearning for the tender love you can not give, is even now slipping into the void——"

"Enough!" screamed the wretched man. "You lie—you know you lie!" He moistened his lips with his tongue. "Who are you?" he asked, with sudden humility.

"I am your better self," came sadly, morosely from a long way off, and John Maine sat up on the words to find himself blinking terrified in the small arc light from a policeman's lantern.

"Beg pardon, sir," whispered the policeman, quickly covering the light; "but I guessed you would be in here at work as usual, and, and——"

His Wife.

"I've been asleep, constable," Maine interposed slowly, and the words conveyed a subtle relief to his aching heart at once. "But how on earth did you get in?" he asked, suddenly realizing that the presence of a policeman in his house in the early hours of the morning was something to be explained.

"Softly, sir," counseled the other. "I saw a woman creep through a window at the back, and followed her. I've been on this beat for a good many years, sir, and I fancied I knew who she was. I thought perhaps you might like"——

Maine was standing up now, alert and brisk.

"Is she still in the house?" he asked. The constable nodded.

"She crept upstairs, sir," he said simply.

But John Maine waited for no more. With his heart pounding at his ribs, he sprang out of the room and leaped swiftly up the stairs.

The policeman followed him slowly... Maine had reached the landing which led to the boy's room, when he heard a door in front of him open. He switched on the electric light, and there, panting fearfully in the sudden blaze, leaning against the wall, was the thin and emacited figure of a woman.

Her clothes were in rags and atters; in her arms she clutched a sleeping child to her breast.

They stood thus, silently regarding each other, until the sound of a discreet cough warned Maine of the presence of the constable. With hands that shook perceptibly, and eyes in which there lurked a strange moistness, John Maine turned swiftly on the landing.

"You're a good fellow," he said quietly. "It is as you surmised. My wife"—he waved his hand courteously to the wretched woman in front of him—"has returned home unexpectedly. You can let yourself out."

They waited until the man had passed through the house and they could hear his retreating footsteps die away in the distance. Then:

"Maisie," said Maine, gently, "you have come home to me?"

The woman tottered where she stood, one arm went out before her, sweetly, pathetically, and John Maine sprang to her side in an instant.

"Maisie, my love!" he cried, the tears coursing down his cheeks with the weakness of a strong man who is suddenly robbed of his calm, "thank God, I know my better self!"

Jealousy.

The teacher was addressing his pupils on the subject of laziness and idleness.

He drew a terrible picture of the habitual loafer—the man who dislikes work and who begs for all he gets.

"Now, John," said the teacher to a little boy who had been very inattentive during the lesson.

John was instantly on the alert.

"Tell me," continued the teacher, "who is the miserable individual who gets clothes, food and lodging and yet does nothing in return?"

John's face brightened.

"Please, sir," said he, "the baby."

AN EPIDEMIC OF HOFMANITIS HAS HIT NASHVILLE

NASHVILLE, TENN., July 12.—An epidemic of Hofmanitis has broken out among the baseball bugs in Voltown, and the infection has spread like wildfire, even unto the mightiest hammer-throwers, who have been blistering the poor, old Vanishing Vols for their rank showing in the gonfalon hunt.

The town is simply delirious in its joy, that the friendship of the old swimming days in Akron between Bill Schwartz and the former Pirate was strong enough to induce Artie to rush to his old pal's assistance, while the appeal for help was loudest.

There is a striking parallel to be found in Circus Solly's case with that of the boy manager, for it was Bill Bernhardt's distress signal in 1909, when first base was in wretched hands, that persuaded Schwartz to give up a swell job with the Diamond Rubber people and hike to Nashville to help out his old friend he had known back with the Cleveland Naps, when Bernhard was one of the kingpin slabbers of the big show. It's a hoary narrative, but it only goes to prove the infernal way history has of "working in double."

Doesn't Appear To Be "In".

Maybe something better could have happened to the Vols than the acquisition of Hofman, but nobody can make the fans in this town believe that, and they are not forgetting that it was for the sake of "Auld Lang Syne" that Artie came, and Schwartz could not have built a greater monument in the fans' hearts in any other fashion than by landing this "ex-major leaguer who is going back."

If Artie is on his way, nobody can see the end of the passage with a pair of field glasses, and there is quite a swarm of youngsters coming who will have to travel at a mighty hefty clip before they will meet Hofman going out.

Schwartz benched himself when Artie lighted in camp, and it was the ex-Cub's tip to the boy leader that he warm the bench a while until he could get together the nerves that were shattered by the sickening plunge which the Vols have taken cellarways.

He Was Chance's Understudy.

The first station was no stranger to Artie, for when he was at the top of his stride he was Frank Chance's understudy with the Cubs, and although the big fellow had not seen a baseball for two weeks, jumped right into the game and took care of everything like a veteran.

Hofman brought to the Vols the stuff they have been so sadly in need of—ginger—and he wasn't stingy about handing it around. The Schwartzmen have been playing in a totally demoralized fashion. They have gone out with an idea that no matter who was in the box, they were doomed to lose, and with their leader unable either to hit or field, not a man on the club has been able to play anything like his best.

BALDWIN MATCHED TO BATTLE LEACH CROSS

LOS ANGELES, July 12.—Matty Baldwin and Leach Cross have been matched for a 20-round bout at Vernon Arena on July 29 by Promoter McCarey. Arrangements for the the match were made by wire and closed in record time. Sam Wallach, the dentist's manager, wired to McCarey from San Francisco accepting terms for the fight, and will return here with Cross on Sunday and take possession of Jack Doyle's camp at Vernon on Tuesday.

Kid Williams and Charley Ledoux, the bantams scheduled for twenty rounds at Vernon on Tuesday night, made a short day of it in the training camps to-day, but to-morrow's workout will be a strenuous one and both boys will go the limit for the benefit of the usual Sunday crowd. The little fellows are in fine shape.

CROSS AND SHERIDAN MAY CLASH AT KANSAS CITY

CHICAGO, July 12.—Leach Cross, the New York dentist-fighter, who has gained the position of contender for the lightweight championship through his knockouts of Joe Mandot and Bud Anderson will have for his next opponent a Chicago fighter, if arrangements under way do not go awry.

Cross practically has agreed to terms for a ten-round bout with Mickey Sheridan to be staked at Kansas City next month. Fred Gilmore, manager of Sheridan, yesterday received a telegram from Cross' manager, who is at Los Angeles, stating that everything was o. k. for the match if held the early part of next month.

The Kansas City promoters are anxious to hold the fight at the American Association baseball park either on August 2 or August 9, but it is understood there is some hitch over the plan.

CHAPPELLE PICKED TO WIN BIG EVENT AT NEW YORK

NEWYORK, July 12.—Arthur Chappelle, the motorcycle speed demon, was to-day picked to win the sweepstakes handicap at the Brighton Beach motordrome to-night. In a sensational practice drive of nine miles yesterday Chappelle covered the distance in 5 minutes 59 1-5 seconds. This beats the record of 6:01 2-5 set by Eddie Hasha last year. Chappelle will give the field a handicap of two and one-quarter laps.

Magnetism or Hypnotism Aids

By Bill Bailey.

CHICAGO, July 12.—If any of these modern colleges happens to be seeking a man to teach that valuable art of personal magnetism we know the man they are seeking.

Who? Why, Frank Chance.

A ball field a strange place to seek a man to teach that valuable art? Maybe. Again, why not?

Oh, yes, we may be mistaken. It may be downright hypnotism that this fellow possesses.

Naturally those few words were but the introduction.

* * *

HERE is the story:

Why are those New York fans so tolerant with Chance? Remember what happened to Wolverton? Remember what they said about Chase when he was bossing the team? Remember what happened to Clark Griffith when he made several ineffectual attempts to capture a pennant? There may have been mean words in the dictionary that were not heaped, hurled and tossed at the heads of these men. I say there may have been. But I don't believe there were.

And Chance!

Say, he has a ball club that hasn't won anywhere near one-third of its games. Its percentage is less than .300. Not a peep, not a chirp has come out of the fans at New York.

"Think what a team he had when he came here," they tell you. "You wait."

* * *

FRANK CHANCE and his men are here. Still it is a different Frank Chance who is leading the Highlanders. The fellow the West Siders knew so well was a worrying Frank Chance. If the West Siders had lost as many ball games in a season as those Highlanders already have put on the losing side of the ledger it's terrible to think what would have become of Chance.

Then he worried. If his team developed a losing streak, and two losses in succession was a losing streak in those days, he didn't sleep.

And now?

He has developed into a philosopher. "I can't worry like I used to," he said. "I'm fighting just as hard to win as I ever did. But no more of the sleepless nights for me. I couldn't and stick in the game."

* * *

IT may be that the New York fans realize that Chance had nothing but numbers to work with that has made them so tolerant. But the fact remains that for about the first time in the history of New York they are not howling because they are down in the race. For in New York, you know, they can't understand why anybody should have anything that can lick anything they possess.

* * *

FRANK CHANCE certainly has no warm spot in his heart for the fellows who touted him on Bill Borton. And he certainly has a lot of people in this city who should ask him for forgiveness.

"Can Borton hit?" the P. L. asked of several of his baseball friends about here when he was in Chicago on the last trip.

"Can he hit?" was the comeback. "Say, he simply can murder the ball. He just won five games for the White Sox in Detroit. He just about won that city series last fall, as you well know. Say, if there is one thing he can do, it is to hit. He may be a bit shy on the pep and the ginger. Maybe he can't get around those bases as fast as Rollie Zeider. But hit? Say, if there were nine Bortons on an opposing team half the pitchers would go to digging sewers."

And hitting was the one thing that Borton didn't do.

Oh, yes, there are a lot of alleged baseball men in Chicago who will have a tough time explaining to this same Chance.

* * *

AT that Chance doesn't figure that the White Sox can afford to lie back and give him the merry ha-ha because Borton didn't develop into a hero in New York. For the P. L. is certain that he hooked one man from the South Side aggregation who will develop into a hummer. Gossett, the catcher, is the lad.

"There is a lad who will develop into a star," said the P. L. "I look to see him ranked as one of the greatest catchers in the league in a little while. And he cost only the waiver price."

Chance naturally isn't admitting that he received the worst of the Chase-Zeider-Borton deal. But if he did he would still figure his trading percentage was .500. Because he thinks he picked up a mighty valuable youngster in this same Gossett.

EMPIRE LEAGUE NOTES

Something that rarely happens in a ball game happened in Waycross this week in one of the Waycross-Cordele games. All assists credited to Cordele went to two players, the pitcher and catcher. Seven were made, and the catcher took four of them.

* * *

Seigfried, of Brunswick, is one of the best all-round players in the league. He is just now playing in the outfield, but is a dandy first baseman and plays short like a veteran. His batting is splendid.

* * *

"Babe" Wilder continues his record of winning almost every game he pitches. It is reported that he will go to the Savannah team at the close of this season, but Jacksonville has been after him and may land him. Wilder is the best pitcher Cordele has and is going good now.

* * *

Valdosta turned around, after an apparent slump, and walloped the Shrimp Chasers to perfection. Jordan will not tolerate indifferent playing, even if his team has won the first season rag.

* * *

Shortstop Murphy, a league leader at bat and a sensational fielder, one of the best Thomasville has, is out of the game with a sprained ankle.

* * *

Clancy, of West Virginia, who came South to play with Brunswick, is getting a try-out in Waycross. He fields fairly well, but is a little weak at bat.

* * *

Of all ball players, one always to be depended upon to act square and be as much a gentleman on the diamond as off, is Reagan, the clever manager for Cordele.

Derrick, one of the new umpires, has shown in just a few games that beefing won't go in games at which he officiates. He chased Manager Moran, of the Brunswick team, from the Valdosta grounds for beefing, and before that episode slapped a fine on Manager Jordan, of the Valdosta team.

* * *

Wild Bill Clark, the Waycross manager, has a runabout that he chases around in when not playing baseball. His friends claim that it is merely a question of time before Bill has his auto running bases.

* * *

That the schedule for the next Empire season will be arranged entirely different from the one used this year is certain. Hardly any team in the league is satisfied the way they are having to play, and the directors, at the end of the season, are going to see to it that a better schedule is prepared for 1914.

* * *

So far, the Empire has escaped any serious injuries to ball players. All teams have had players out for a few days because of minor hurts, but nothing serious to date.

* * *

Cordele's hard-hitting left fielder, Wassen, continues to swat the ball. He has had but a few off days and seems to be able to hit the league's best.

* * *

Americus seems to be getting a little of the hard luck that has been haunting most of the teams since the first of the month. Its team is playing well nearly every day, but fails to win the majority of games. But Americus has got to be considered by whatever team wins the pennant—that is certain.

BOXING

News of the Ring Game

Gunboat Smith, claimant of the world's heavyweight title, has challenged Georges Carpentier, the tough French champion of Europe, to a 20-round contest for $5,000 a side in England, France or Belgium. If Carpentier agrees, the match probably will be arranged to take place during the fall.

* * *

When it is taken into consideration that Frank Klaus, middleweight, recently stopped Carpentier, the New York heavyweight should find little trouble in putting the foreigner away in quick order. Carpentier would have everything to gain and nothing to lose in such a match.

* * *

Jess Willard is another scrapper who has his eyes peeled on a Smith match. Tom Jones' protege is taking on all the big hopes in 4-round bouts on the coast and is showing improved form. If Smith refuses to meet Willard, Jones says he will try to sign his boxer for a Pelky set-to.

* * *

Knockout Brown, the Chicago middleweight, will make his next fight against Frank Klaus, at Butte, Mont. Tommy Walsh, who is now handling Brown's affairs, wired the Butte promoters his acceptance for the mill yesterday. The pair will probably meet on Labor Day.

* * *

Kid Duke, local bantamweight, wishes to announce that he is ready to take on any of the local boys seeking fame in the padded arena. Duke aims his challenge at Young, Pries and Britt. The kid says he will accommodate either of the boys with a neat side bet.

* * *

Kid Young, the local newsboy boxer, says he is getting tired of reading challenges from various boys in the city. "Let them post their money and I will sign to meet any of them," wails the little featherweight. Several boys have been sending in their defis daily, but when the Kid asks them to put up, they usually beat it to the tall timbers.

Johnny Coulon, bantamweight champion, left a Chicago hospital the other day weighing 115 pounds, which is 10 pounds more than he weighed a week ago when he entered the institution to be treated for stomach trouble. Despite his rapid improvement in health, it is doubtful whether he will be able to box for some time.

* * *

"Wildcat" Ferns and Young Denny have been re-matched to box at New Orleans. The pair met in the Pelican City on Labor Day and Ferns was awarded the verdict after ten rounds of fierce fighting. The Denny admirers, however, were not satisfied with the decision, and the promoters decided to send them over the 20-round route on August 13.

* * *

Tom McCarey is still working on a Ritchie-Cross match for Labor Day. Cross has already consented to the bout, but the champion is waiting to hear from several other promoters, who are after his services. New Orleans wants Willie to box Britton, while Vancouver is after a Ritchie-Welsh mill.

* * *

Coast fans have made Kid Williams a 2 to 1 favorite over Charley Ledoux. The two bantamweights clash in a 20-round mill in Tom McCarey's arena at Los Angeles on July 15.

* * *

The Johnny Dupdee-Jack White match, scheduled to take place on the coast July 29, may not take place. Dundee is holding out for a larger guarantee than the promoters are willing to give for such a scrap. If Dundee refuses to meet White, George Kirkwood or Tommy Dixon may be substituted.

* * *

Terry Nelson, local lightweight, is waiting to hear from Dayton, Ohio, regarding a match there. Terry is trying to get on with either Jimmy Murphy, Jimmy Traverse or Danny Goodman. Nelson is surely entitled to a match with some good 133-pounder. He is a willing mixer and always gives the fans a run for their money.

Packey McFarland gave exhibition bouts at the Joliet, Ill., prison the other day for the entertainment of the prisoners. He boxed Kid Mack, of Joliet, and other local boys. Warden Allen is a friend of McFarland.

HARRIS TO MEET ALRICK IN TENNIS TITLE MATCH

LITHCHFIELD, CONN., July 12.—F. H. Harris, of Brattleboro, Vt., will meet Alrick H. Man, Jr., of Richmond Hill, N. Y., for the State tennis title and cup here this afternoon. Harris yesterday defeated W. S. Cushing, of Simsbury, in the final of the State tennis tournament. Man won the New England championship from Harris in the tournament at Hartford last month.

YACHTING.

Becalmed, becalmed, all, all becalmed,
Becalmed on a wide, wide bay,
Our souls were tried when the breezes died,
For we moved not either way.

We sat and mourned for the west wind scorned
To hand us a single breath,
And, what was worst, we were all athirst,
And it felt like the pangs of death.

The wind may howl and the sea may growl,
And the waves be high and strong,
But we scorn the worst when we have no thirst
And we sing a gladsome song.

But worst of all, when there is no squall,
Nor even a breath of air,
And the deck is dry as a desert sky,
Nor even a bottle there.

Becalmed, becalmed, all, all becalmed,
Four miles from the nearest land!
And there we lay for half a day
With an opener in our hand.

Yachts are deceiving. We asked the chauffeur what was concealed beneath the cellar door and he answered: "Life savers." Opening the door and looking into the basement we saw nothing but those things that you wrap around yourself when the boat sinks. One learns only by experience.

We still are a novice as far as things nautical are concerned, but we are forced to admit that we like it as far as we drank.

August Belmont has insured his noble steed, Tracery, for $150,000 for fear of another suffragette rough house. If August were a regular sportsman he would train his steed for the jumps and hold a suffragette steeplechase.

A statistician informs us that the Cardinals accepted 206 chances without an error. Aside from the fact that they lost a flock of games in the meantime it was great baseball.

One is not surprised to read that Bud Anderson was doped when he fought Leach Cross. A flock of knuckles injected at the right spot is quite an effective anesthetic.

Reading a headline, one observes that the "Sox welcome Frank Chance." Looking over the box score one is led to believe it.

SPEAKING OF WORK.

Were I to labor sixteen hours a day,
Without a pause, without a gasp of air,
I would not grieve my fair young life away,
But gladly do my share.
If I were called upon to be a slave
'Twould only make me smile, for I have seen
The hardest working thing this side the grave—

LONDON, July 12.—J. H. Taylor, open golf champion of England, has decided not to join Harry Vardon and Edward Ray in their American tour to play, during which Vardon and Ray will compete in the open championship tournament at Brookline, Mass. They sail on August 6, accompanied by Wilfrid Reid, professional at the Banstad Downs Club, and Louis Tallier, a French "pro."

JOHNSON IS IN ENGLAND, BUT CAN'T FIGHT THERE

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, July 12.—Jack Johnson, the negro pugilist who fled from Chicago after being convicted of white slavery, arrived here to-day from Paris. Johnson wants to arrange a short bout with some good English heavyweight, preferably Bombardier Wells. Any match that Johnson makes, however, probably will have to be fought on the Continent, for the English authorities will not allow him to box in this country.

After his arrival to-day Johnson visited the newspaper offices in Fleet street and denied stories about him which had been cabled from the United States.

COULON ORDERED TO TAKE LONG REST IN COLORADO

CHICAGO, July 12.—Johnny Coulon, the bantam champion, announced that he probably would not fight again before Thanksgiving Day. Coulon was in the Presbyterian Hospital for ten days, during which time Bertram W. Sippy, a specialist on stomach troubles, gave the little fighter a careful examination. The doctor has ordered the champion to take a long rest in Colorado.

Coulon left the hospital day before yesterday and already is making preparations for the Colorado trip. He expects to leave for the West some time next week.

STARS' CHANCES IN GOLF MEETS RUINED BY RAIN

By Chick Evans.

THERE is an opinion deeply rooted in the minds of most Americans that it rains three-fourths of the time in Great Britain, and that in consequence, the British golfer is an amphibious creature. I can not testify to the truth of this belief because I visited Britain in a dry year, but a friend, who spent several months in the British Isles, assures me that, although it rained every day while he was there, the British rain was not so wet as the American variety. Perhaps my friend's delusion springs from the fact that almost every clubhouse in Great Britain has a drying room where golfers may hang their rain-soaked clothing, while such a convenience is almost unknown in America, the New Edgewater being the only American club that, as far as I know, has made such provision for its members.

Playing golf in the rain is a good deal like jumping into a cold tub—there is always hesitation in the beginning, but the act itself is never regretted, for the real golfer can not let a little thing like the rain interfere with his game. When a man has journeyed all the way out to some country club he is almost sure to play, rain or shine, and I am confident that playing in the rain does not injure any one physically. It is attended, however, with many inconveniences, and to find enjoyment, the player must be well prepared for the weather. He needs an old pair of shoes and other wearing apparel that can be easily dried and not easily injured. But the best of rainy-day clothes are usually too many and too binding for good golf, and raincoats are an abomination. I well remember that W. C. Fownes, Jr., once spent a great deal of valuable time trying to invent one suited to the needs of the golfer.

Moisture Ruins Clubs.

Personally, I dislike to play in the rain; I do not like to get my clothes wet, and most of all, I detect the effect of moisture upon my clubs. The shafts are always heavily stained, so that they may withstand the weather, but water warps wood, and I do hate to draw a wooden club from my bag on a rainy day. Then again, the best grips are supposed to be of oiled and treated leather, and moisture affects them most unfavorably. So the golfer carries towels, because wet hands and wet grips are a distinctly disagreeable combination. Another rainy day necessity is the hooded golf bag.

Of course, no golfer expects to play his best on a rainy day, but in all big tournaments, or indeed any competition, golfers must play, regardless of the weather. The luck of the condition is, however, more deeply felt in a qualification round. Perhaps in the morning the course may have been too fast for the players; then, between 1 and 2, a heavy shower comes up, catching those who must go out then; at 2 the rain ceases and the latter players start forth under most favorable conditions, for the rain has softened the greens and made the balls more manageable. This is a chance of the game that affects almost every score with unequal conditions.

Deluge Has Spoiled Tournaments.

Glen View, for a long time, had an unfortunate reputation for rainy tournaments, big events there being almost invariably attended by terrific downpours. In the National of 1904, the river overflowed the second nine holes, and only the first nine were playable in the finals. None of the Western players can forget the deluge at Denver, and I also recall vividly a four-day tournament at Chicago Golf when it rained practically during the whole competition.

These incidents merely teach us, as old fables say, that the real golfer must be a bit of a philosopher. He accepts the weather cheerily and makes the best of it.

MANY MANAGERS ON COAST IN INTEREST OF BOXERS

LOS ANGELES, CAL., July 12.—With six managers on the ground anxious to arrange matches for their boxers, there is no danger that Promoter McCarey will not be able to keep his fight program filled.

Among those who are here in the interest of high-class boys are Joe Levy, manager of Joe Rivers and Jack White; Sam Wallach, manager of Leach and Phil Cross; Frank Galvin, manager of Charley Ledoux; Sam Harris, manager of Kid Williams; Scotty Montelth, manager of Johnny Dundee, and Dick Donald, manager of Bud Anderson.

Good Time Now For Blood Health

Blood Disorders Gone to Stay.

A few doses of that wonderful blood purifier, S. S. S., will start activities in the cellular tissues of the body and soon show decided changes in the skin. The skin is but a fine network of tiny blood vessels, and the specific action of S. S. S. is declared to be a pronounced stimulation of the activity of these cells. Certain it is that in a surprisingly short time any skin eruption shows a most remarkable change; it begins to dry up; the skin scales off in tiny flecks, and soon a layer of clear, healthy and firm tissue results.

The reason for this is in the peculiar stimulation of S. S. S., which enables the cells in the skin to select from the blood the nutriment it requires for regeneration.

You can obtain S. S. S. at any well stocked drug store, if you insist upon it, but be sure you are not talked into something "just as good."

S. S. S. is prepared by the Swift Specific Company, 180 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga. Write for their illustrated book on skin diseases.

GRAND CIRCUIT HORSES MOVE ON TO PITTSBURG

CLEVELAND, OHIO., July 12.—The entire "works" of the Grand Circuit is on the move to-day over to Pittsburg, where the second Grand Circuit meet of the season will be held.

The first one came to a close at North Randall tracks yesterday with four trotting events that brought out a fine quality of sport. Outsiders shared honors with the favorites. The Tavern "Steak," though previously conceded to Dago F., was won by Eulabel, an outsider.

The 2:09 trot went to Jean Arlon, although Eve Cord, driven by Geers, had been expected to win easily.

The championship trotting sweepstakes was taken by Anvil, a heavy favorite, because he trotted the two fastest miles of the year. The veteran driver Ed Geers pushed Anvil around the oval in the remarkably fast time of 2:04 1-4 in the first heat, and came right back in the next and concluding heat with a mark of 2:04 3-4.

WILLIE RITCHIE WILLING TO BATTLE JACK BRITTON

SAN FRANCISCO, July 12.—Ritchie says that he never received the offer of Promoter Tortorich, of New Orleans, to box Britton for a $20,000 purse, though such an offer had been made through the press.

Regarding such a bout in September, Ritchie says that Tortorich would be treated the same as the other promoters and if he hands in the highest bid he will gladly box in New Orleans. If he does so, Jack Britton, who is a heavy lightweight, will have to make 133 pounds ringside.

Willie is confident that he can make this weight and be at his best. When Ritchie and Britton boxed four rounds in this city they milled at catch weights.

Again Hogg Beats Crackers 6-0

Rain May Stop To-day's Game

By Percy H. Whiting.

THE Gulls and the Crackers meet in the final tangle this afternoon—that is, if the weather is even half-way decent. Early in the afternon the prospects were good that the game would be played. And, for a pleasing change, even if it is Saturday afternoon, the game will be called at the usual time and will go to a decision.

The fates forbid that it be another knock-out.

One fan sized up yesterday's game pretty well when he said:

"Well, that's my idea of a WHITEWASH."

It was all of that and more besides.

The Gulls won, 6 to 0, and they did it with such ease that they made the Crackers look like the tail-enders of a Class D league.

* * *

IT'S a hard matter not to acquire a grouch over a game like that. No matter how one attempts to wax flippant and facetious, the waxing isn't any good at all.

It was a gloomy contest.

At that, there were fielding spots of amazing brilliancy.

Wally Smith fielded like a world's champion. Bisland, despite two errors, almost evened up by some brilliant work. Stock had a brilliant day, and he did it in spite of the fact that Chapman nearly took his head off with a batted ball, which would have taken the "pep" out of an ordinary player.

Hogg pitched another grand game for Mobile.

The last time he was here he beat Atlanta 6 to 0.

Yesterday he won, 6 to 0.

However, he must be getting better, for the last time he allowed six hits, while this time, he gave up only three.

And it was an awful day for Atlanta's records, for Chapman made two out of the three hits, while the big batting stars, Long, Welchonce and Smith, went hitless.

* * *

OF course, it would hurt to be beaten by the Mobile at any time. But it hurts, especially now that the Gulls are crippled and very much weakened.

If the Crackers can't win from them now, what chance have they when the Gulls get back in condition, as they are bound to do soon? This is what the fans are asking themselves, and it's a serious question.

* * *

THE pitching of Dent was a bright feature. After Brady was knocked out Dent took up the burden and carried it well. The Gulls' only run after he went in resulted from a hit and an error.

This chap also made a nice play at the plate when Stock tried to score on what looked like a passed ball. Chapman fielded it and Dent received the throw and tagged Stock out, risking his legs and his neck in doing it. It was a game, clever piece of work.

* * *

ONLY three more games will be played at home after the Gulls depart. The Montgomery team is to be here Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. Then the Crackers beat it away for a long journey.

BROWN PRAISES THE GEORGIAN TO FARMERS

Former Assistant Commissioner of Agriculture Tells Them This Paper Is Best of All.

DUBLIN, July 12.—"I want every farmer in Laurens County—every farmer in Georgia—to read The Atlanta Georgian," said J. J. Brown, former Assistant Commissioner of Agriculture for Georgia, in an address at a great rally of the Farmers' Union, seven miles from Dublin, Friday.

"It is the best and fairest paper I have ever read," he continued. "It is our friend and we should read it. Of course, there are other great papers, but there is none in the class of The Atlanta Georgian."

This statement was made while discussing rural free delivery, and was received with enthusiasm by the great crowd present.

Mr. Brown joined Charles S. Barrett and L. M. Rhodes at Dublin Friday, and is a great addition to the team, for he is a great speaker.

Rhodes and Barrett Speak.

Mr. Rhodes, that great big Tennessee farmer, who has statistics, facts and figures to prove his assertions, who knows what the farmers need and who is making their cause his life work, fairly took the big crowd by storm. He is a natural orator and is making friends and converts to the Farmers' Union.

President Barrett made his speech of this tour, and created more enthusiasm than any speaker ever heard in the county. He is the idol of the farmers, and they have faith in him.

Farmers Drive 15 Miles.

More than 200 vehicles surrounded the place of the rally, many of the farmers coming across the country for a distance of fifteen miles, showing their interest in the Farmers' Union. It is the impression of Mr. Rhodes and Mr. Brown that the number of members of the Farmers' Union in Georgia will be increased to 75,000 before another year shall have passed.

Crops in this section of the State are good, and from the appearance of the farmers they have been good for several years.

The speaking lasted more than three hours, and not a single person left, which shows how the farmers feel in regard to unionism.

After the speechmaking a great picnic dinner of fried chiken, potato pie and watermelon was enjoyed.

It is expected that fully 5,000 persons will gather at Waycross on Saturday, where the campaign closes.

Farmers Rally At Douglasville.

DON'T TIRE AS END OF PONY CONTEST NEARS

Every Incentive Is Offered Candidates in the Race for the Beautiful Shetlands.

Ginger for Contestants.

Shetland ponies never tire. Neither must you if you want one.

It is a half-hearted youngster who tires near the finish.

Watch your receipt book, and go after renewals just before the short-term subscriptions expire.

Remember, you are asking people to do themselves a favor when you ask them to subscribe to The Georgian and American.

Aim for a pony and cart; you may get a pony and saddle. Aim for a pony and saddle, and you may get a gold watch. Aim for a gold watch, and you may get a silver watch, and very likely you will get—left.

Every incentive is being offered contestants to make the last few weeks of The Georgian and American pony contest the liveliest of the entire struggle.

There is a generous extra-vote offer, with its only condition the turning in of $25, $25 or $15 for subscriptions. The subscriptions may be for any length of time, from a month up.

Sunday afternoon, at Grant Park, the ponies will be seen, harnessed and saddled, for the enjoyment of the contestants. There is inspiration for any youngster in driving or riding one of these little animals. Just to enjoy one of them for a few minutes stimulates a desire to own it. Never were more intelligent, kinder or better-trained animals seen in Atlanta.

Parents are particularly invited to be at the Park, when the contest manager will talk with them as to means of helping the children.

PLAN ON TO LEASE SPACE OVER W. & A.

Representative Suggests Way to Raise $100,000 Each Year. Committee Approves.

Representative Barry Wright, of Floyd County, plans to lease the space over the Western and Atlantic Railroad in the business district of Atlanta to a local syndicate for 30 years at $100,000 per annum. His plan met with the favor of the Western and Atlantic Committee of the Legislature, to which it was revealed Friday.

The committee recommended the creation of a committee of two Senators, five Representatives, the Governor and the chairman of the Railroad Commission as ex-officio members, to investigate Representative Wright's plan. It also recommended a legislative appropriation of $5,000 for the investigation.

The committee indorsed a constitutional amendment offered by Representative Meaders, of Oconee County, forbidding the sale of the W. & A., except by vote of the people. A bill providing for the appointment of a joint committee to investigate the desirability of purchasing the A., B. & A. Railroad, thereby extending the W. & A. to the sea, also was indorsed.

Old hunters here say that on account of its freakish apearance it had become an outcast, and in such cases the animal always will go to a herd of cattle or horses if possible.

JAPANESE PACT WITH MEXICO STIRS U. S.

Hostile Attitude Toward Americans Draws Protest Through Ambassador Lane.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

MEXICO CITY, July 12.—Formal protest was lodged to-day by the United States Government against the action of the Mexican Government in allowing the Mexican press to stir up anti-American feeling.

Two notes were presented by United States Ambassador H. L. Wilson. At the same time denial was made of the report that United States warships in the harbor at Guayamas used their wireless and searchlights to aid the rebels.

Those publications have resulted in scattered demonstrations and rioting, although no arrests have been reported. Notices have been posted in the schools here for the children to secure small Japanse flags. These will be carried in a procession of children who will welcome the new Japanese Ambassador upon his arrival.

Jap Concessions Reported.

Mexico is cementing her relations with Japan, and it is reported that a special envoy will soon be sent to Tokio to invite the investment of Japanese capital and rich concessions will be given, it is said.

Following is a translation of the notices posted in the schools:

"The representative of the Japanese Emperor to our Government is about to arrive in this city. The attitude of mutual sympathy and esteem which our people and the people of Japan profess is well known.

"National Life in Balance."

"We firmly believe that the time has come to tender a public and solemn testimonial of international sympathy now that our national life has been put to a test by the imperialistic ambassador of a strong people.

"Therefore, the students of all the schools are asked to be at the railway station, each carrying a Japanese flag, to receive the Japanese Emperor's representative.

"This act will be significant and of great importance. The day and hour of the Japanese Ambassador's arrival will be announced later."

A number of American families have made preparations to leave here if further evidences of hostility are shown.

Minister Admits Crisis.

"It is true that the situation is delicate," said Minister of War Blanquet, "but the Government feels it can cope with it. Lamentable consequences may be occasioned by the anti-American feeling, but we are trying to kill it."

El Pais, most rabid of the newspapers, to-day published nearly a full-page picture of Friday's anti-American demonstration by students. On the editorial page the paper said:

"We see in Japan a future ally and defender of our independence, because such an alliance would be dangerous to the United States."

An anonymous letter threatening the United States Embassy with destruction has been received by Ambassador Wilson and turned over to the Mexican Foreign Office.

Georgian in West Tricks 5 Women

DENVER, COLO., July 12.—Five young women of this city to-day are wondering how it all happened, while C. F. Thompson, of Macon, Ga., is in prison contemplating the danger of a too vivid imagination.

Three weeks ago Thompson landed in Denver, it is said, with just $20 in a pocket of his one and only suit. Within the course of a few days he had become engaged to four women, had picked out costly trousseaus for each and had made arrangements to purchase two high-priced automobiles.

Thursday he became engaged to the fifth young woman, after pawning a phonograph which he had obtained under false pretenses. This put the detectives on his trail. Now he is in jail, with prospects of a later trip to Canon City Penitentiary.

Japs Protest Being Listed With Blacks

A Sustaining Diet.

These are the enervating days, when, as somebody has said, men drop by the sunstroke as if the Day of Fire had dawned. They are fraught with danger to people whose systems are poorly sustained; and this leads us to say, in the interest of the less robust of our readers, that the full effect of Hood's Sarsaparilla is such as to suggest the propriety of calling this medicine something besides a blood purifier and tonic—say, a sustaining diet. It makes it much easier to bear the heat, assures refreshing sleep, and will without any doubt avert much sickness at this time of year.

SHORT COVERING STEADIES COTTON

Buying of Old Crops by Spot Houses Principal Feature—Offerings General.

NEW YORK, July 12.—The cotton market was quiet at the opening of the cotton market to-day and first prices were 1 to 5 points higher than Friday's final. The demand from shorts who desired to even up for the week-end. When this was supplied prices eased off a few points. The Liverpool market was closed and was responsible to some extent for the quiet market here.

Spot houses again purchased summer positions quite freely. One large spot broker started the market on an upward scale shortly after the call by bidding aggressively for large blocks of new crops, but bought little. The selling was mainly attributed to Wall Street and the uptown crowd.

The weather map was favorable, showing rains over the greater part of the belt, with lower temperatures and sentiment against the market.

Two of the largest local operators have covered since Tuesday about 50,000 bales of short cotton, and now the market has reached the point where it is practically in the hands of certain big interests, who are trading this and that way merely for small turns for caliping operations, pending further developments in connection with the ultimate outcome of the bull deal in July-August. These two options for the past two weeks have governed new crop positions as well as operations. The outcome of the Clarke amendment is also killing off business.

At the close the market was steady with prices at a net gain of 1 to 5 points from the final quotations of Friday.

Warehouse stocks in New York today is 37,501 bales; certificated, 31,199 bales.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, July 12.—Further good and rather general rains occurred during the past 48 hours in the eastern half of the belt. Precipitation was heaviest in Tennessee and North Alabama. Temperatures were lower in North Texas.

European political news was a little more cheerful, expressing the hope of early peace, but financial views continue pessimistic, owing to fear of heavy financial losses in connection with the Balkan war.

Our market was inclined to ease at the start on the favorable weather prospects, but open bidding for July by the controlling interests checked selling on the belief that screws might be turned on July. The bidding by these interests reflects the view that it is getting too late to bring cotton here to spoil the July squeeze by tenders.

The Times-Democrat's monthly report will appear Monday. It is expected to be favorable except for a tendency to give special prominence to the weevil danger.

The market ruled steady during the early session around 11.45 for December.

COTTON GOSSIP

The principal feature of the market to-day was the buying of old crop by spot interests. Wall Street and uptown crowds are thought to have sold new crop. Market took the selling well and ruled rather steady all day. Riordan was good seller of new crop around the close.—Anderson.

* * *

The several bearish reports issued yesterday has caused some change in sentiment and the feeling this morning was more bearish.

* * *

There are predictions for favorable weather over the belt for the next few days.

* * *

Around the close yesterday Geer, Shearson, McEnany, Hubbard, Flinn, Harteorn and Seidenberg were among the leading buyers. Riordan, Parrott, Hicks, Cone and Montgomery were the principal sellers.

* * *

Senator Smith, of South Carolina, has introduced a bill providing for Government standard for grades of cotton and requiring futures contracts to be filled by grade specified in contract. The bill was ordered favorably reported by the Senate's sub-committee. The bill aims to overcome objections of Cotton Exchange to the proposed tax on future transactions and does not fix a penalty for failure to deliver actual cotton.

NEW ORLEANS, July 13.—Hayward & Clark: The weather map was very favorable, cloudy over entire belt, with general rains in eastern half, heaviest in Tennessee and North Alabama, where most needed. Cooler in west. Indications are for partly cloudy to fair in the Atlantics; possibly some scattered showers. Cloudy in central and western States, with cooler weather and showers coming on Texas over Sunday. Clearing and cooler in Oklahoma and Arkansas.

J. B. Turner, of Memphis, has the following on the condition of the cotton crop for the week ending July 11:

"The week was a normal and hence a favorable one for the season. Temperatures were quite high over a great part of the belt, but toward the end were materially moderated. Generally speaking, there was an abundance of moisture in the soil, and hence the cultivation was near perfect. The plant stood the excess of temperatures quite well and continued its growth and fruiting in a satisfactory manner. There is no striking change from the conditions of one week ago and this of itself is a favorable item.

"Little or no rain fell in Texas and Oklahoma, where already the supply of moisture was abundant, while down the Mississippi Valley there were many showers and locally heavy rains, which relieved an incipient drouth and set the cotton to growing rapidly. Showers fell also in the eastern States and were of benefit. As a whole, more rain in Alabama and States eastward would be desirable, though not necessary at this time.

"In Eastern Texas, Louisiana and Mississippi, weevils are more numerous than in several years, and their appearance has aroused the planters' alarm. As yet their depredations have been quite limited."

* * *

The Times-Democrat monthly crop report is expected Monday. We think it will be favorable except for giving the boll weevil danger the usual prominence.

* * *

Official Texas records show an average for the State of 98 degrees; three stations show 100; nine stations 102; one station 104; and one station 106. The maximum average for Oklahoma is 102.

* * *

Galveston will get a new bale to-day from Patricio, Texas, the same date as last year. New bale here from San Benito, consigned to John M. Parker & Co., will be sold at auction to-day.

* * *

The Government advises Corpus Christi, Texas: "Small craft warning. Disturbance over Southern New Mexico moving eastward; will cause brisk to high northerly winds to-day and probably Sunday."

* * *

The first new bale was sold here at auction for 16 cents; it was bought by E. Christ.

Grain Notes

The Chicago Inter Ocean says: "The wheat bears have the best of it. Hedging business is coming into the market, making it safer for the short seller than at any time within a year. Sentiment has become excessively bearish, and it would not be surprising to a majority to see lower prices, although the best traders are looking for irregular declines.

"Corn specialists attributed the break of 1⅞ on September yesterday, making a drop of almost 4 cents from the recent high point to unloading by longs. It is noticeable that sharp traders, who were long, have unloaded their purchases on bids. Traders said they would not be surprised to see a rally some time, but believe corn should be sold on all bulges.

"September oats dropped below 40 cents yesterday with stop orders selling sufficient to carry prices to 39¼. Those who have watched the market closely for two weeks say there has been a steady unloading by longs and a decrease in the outside buying. The liquidation, however, is not regarded as over."

* * *

Bartlett, Frazier & Co. says: "Wheat—Offerings from the country are somewhat lighter, but local sentiment is bearish and new speculative buying from the outside does not come in.

"Corn—The rains this morning are likely to cause further selling, although liquidation was on a liberal scale yesterday. Cash prices do not show as much weakness as the future, owing to moderate receipts and scarcity of offerings from first hands.

"Oats—There is nothing new in the situation, except that receipts are somewhat smaller and cash inquiry a shade better. Sentiment is very bearish, and, as in the other grains, outside buying is extremely limited.

"Provisions—Hogs under estimates with hog prices at yards steady to 5c higher."

Rainfall and Temperatures in Grain Region: Canadian Northwest cloudy, 52 to 58; Fernorton, Swift Current, Winnipeg, 66; Calgary, 54; Battleford, 42; Regina, raining, 1.10; Northwest, part cloudy, 48 to 64; Williston, Huron, .08; Devils Lake, Bismark, .01; Moosehead, .20; Duluth, 1.26; West generally cloudy, 54 to 70; Omaha, Davenport, .02; Sioux City, .04; Des Moines, .86; Charles City, .56; Dubuque, 1.08; Springfield, .14; Southwest part cloudy, 62 to 76; Dodge City, .10; Wichita, .01; Kansas City, .58; Springfield, .84; St. Louis, .50; Ohio Valley cloudy, 70 to 76; Cairo, .07; Evansville, .34; Cincinnati, .42; Indianapolis, .16; Columbus raining; Louisville raining, .36.

Think wheat, corn and oats all have had break enough. Would cover shorts and wait for a rally before selling again.—Roycroft.

IRREGULARITY IN PRICE OF STOCKS

Good Crop Advices and Easier Feeling Abroad Encourage Better Active Bidding.

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, July 12.—A higher range of prices was established at the opening of the stock market, although business was very quiet. Canadian Pacific began 2⅛ higher at 213½, but afterward shaded.

There was no change in speculative conditions and the gains which were recorded were chiefly due to a change in position on the part of the speculative element. Finding bear operations fruitless, the professionals turned bullish.

Union Pacific advanced ⅝ and some of the other gains were: Amalgamated Copper, ¼; United States Steel, ¼; Reading, ⅜; Lehigh Valley, ⅛; Erie, ½; American Can ¼, and Chesapeake and Ohio, ⅛.

The curb was quiet.

Americans in London were dull, but ruled above New York parity.

The market closed strong. Governments unchanged; other bonds steady.

STOCK GOSSIP

* * *

The trainmen and conductors' committee of 1,000 will meet to-day to ratify the Eastern railway vote.

* * *

Trade reports show that conservatism in business circles is still manifest, owing chiefly to the tariff legislation.

* * *

Twelve industrials declined .11; 20 active rails declined .15.

* * *

Although the market continues dull, with few changes in prices, there are many bullish factors in the situation that are being ignored, which later in the season will have a beneficial effect on values. We believe stocks conservatively accumulated around this level will in a reasonable time show satisfactory profits.—Potter.

WHEAT LEADER IN CEREAL DECLINE

General Rains and Absence of Speculative Buying Cause of Heavy Liquidation.

CHICAGO, July 12.—Wheat was ¾c lower at the opening this morning on further fine rains which covered the entire spring wheat country in the Northwest. There were some rains in the winter wheat belt, which possibly may delay the movement for a day or two. The official report on wheat crop of France shows the condition to be 3 points higher for winter and 2 higher for spring than July 1 a year ago. Northwestern receipts were moderate.

Corn was ⅜c to ¾c lower on rains where needed throughout the belt.

Oats were off ⅝c to ½c in sympathy with the other grains.

Provisions were firmer and higher.

EAST WANTS LIGHT HOGS.

CHICAGO, July 12.—Eastern orders for light hogs were in excess of weekend supply and a 10 to 12c higher market for everything fit for that outlet resulted. Shipping hogs sold largely at 9.10@9.25. Packing grades were little weaker, as was the case with trade without competition. There were 35,000 at eleven markets, against 45,000 a year ago, and not to exceed 40,000 are expected here Monday. Shipping demand is coming back in emphatic manner, that outlet having absorbed 20,000 this week. Both in cattle and sheep the finish was nominally strong at the best prices of the week. Monday's expectancy is for about 20,000 cattle and 35,000 hogs.

JUDGES DECIDE WHO IS BUTTON PRIZE WINNER

Submitted by W. Mae Jones, 1428 Candler Building.

Submitted by W. T. Wilson, 388 North Jackson street.

Hearst's Sunday American Will Announce Best Slogan—Many Submitted Saturday.

Judges Saturday took charge of all the "500,000 club" slogans submitted in the $25 prize contest. They are John W. Grant, Wilmer L. Moore and Walter C. Taylor. At The Georgian office they began a careful study of the hundreds of suggestions submitted.

Hearst's Sunday American will announce the winner.

The last day of the contest brought in the largest number of submissions of any other day. Many are beautiful designs by well-known artists. Others are striking for their literary merit. All bespeak the wonderful Atlanta spirit—save one.

That came in anonymously from a cynical humorist. He went to the trouble of drawing a large picture burlesquing Atlanta from the City Hall to the last garbage dump beyond "Pittsburg."

The Cynic's Slogan.

In one corner was a large building marked "Hot Air Factory." Next to it was the City Hall, called "The House of Mystery," and on top of the building sat a doubtful bird marked "Graft." The bottom of the picture showed three stragglers passing out of a gate with the remark:

"Griffin ain't so bad after all."

It's a cinch this design won't get the prize.

One of the best of the last suggestions was a map of Georgia with a star marking Atlanta, its capital. The slogan, offered by George L. Taylor, No. 152 Courtland street, is:

"Hitch your wagon to the star. Half million by 1920."

Here are many scintillating with enthusiasm:

"Boost Atlanta. Everybody's doing it; 500,000 by 1920. Welcome. The Gate City."—W. L. Maddox, No. 395 Whitehall street.

"For Atlanta 500,000 by 1920. Come on."—Wilbur G. Kurtz, No. 90 Sinclair avenue.

"Atlanta, the livest and niftiest town always."—G. O. Shepard, No. 36 North Pryor street.

W. T. Wilson, No. 388 North Jackson street, offers the Phoenix arising from the ashes with the slogan, "Always ahead."

"Atlanta, the bright star of the Southland. Pleasure, health, wealth, prosperity; 500,000 by 1920."—E. B. Gibson, No. 72 Cherokee avenue.

"Atlanta always ahead; 500,000 1920; 1847-1865; Phoenix."—U. F. Harbour, No. 41 North Pryor street.

Poet Offers One.

"Half a million. That's our bet. Watch Atlanta. She'll get it yet."—Alex Maddox, No. 212 Euclid avenue.

"Place, Atlanta, Ga.; time, 1920; population, 500,000; our motto, 'Cooperation.'"—C. L. Nicholson, No. 78 Ormond street.

"Here's to Atlanta, greatest inland city; boost for half a million in 1920."—Margaret Maddox, No. 212 Euclid avenue.

"Get the spirit and join Atlanta Half-Million Club, 1920; to prosperity and happiness."—F. E. Taylor, Empire building.

"1864, 2,000 people; 1865, less than 3,000 people; 1910, 155,000 people; 1920, let's make it 500,000."—Joseph Uleiner, No. 224 Capitol avenue.

"Success is sure. Omnia vincit fides. Atlanta, 500,000 by 1920."—W. G. Hynds, No. 202 McLendon street.

"Atlanta Half-Million Club. Faith, ambition, labor. In hoc signo vinces."—J. Howard Hynds, No. 202 McLendon street.

"Atlanta, half-million, 1920."—Charles H. Terry, No. 43 Zachary street.

Alabama Man Suggests.

500,000 people in 1920. Atlanta always gets what she goes after."—Frederick C. Pfeffer, Clanton

AMERICAN LIFE INTEREST FUND IS HELD UP

Court Grants Restraining Order to Stockholders Who Have Filed Receivership Suits

Following the filing of two receivership suits against the American Life and Annuity Company, Judge Ellis issued an order Friday restraining officials of the company from making payment on the interest of income certificates.

Pope M. Brown, defeated candidate for Governor in the last campaign, is president of the company. N. G. Parker, Horace Sandiford and T. K. Bowles filed the suits as certificate holders. July 14 was set for a hearing.

Bowles was secretary of the company until November, when he was succeeded by Parker, who himself resigned Thursday. General Manager W. R. Taylor asserts that the company is in good financial condition and has assets of more than $100,000 over its liabilities. He said the report of Deputy Insurance Commissioner Copeland, made June 15, showed liabilities of $88,662.21 against assets of $189,084.37.

The suits charge that the company has taken in $441,000 in the last three years on income certificates alone, and that it has other sources of revenue. The assets are placed at $135,000. It is charged that the company has threatened to pay $12,000 interest on income certificates July 15, and that it has no funds with which to do so.

The American Life and Annuity Company was organized at McRae, Ga., three years ago. It has been regarded as one of the most successful of Georgia companies.

ATTORNEYS PASS LIE AND BLOWS IN MACON

Solicitor General Ross and Lawyer Harris Clash Over Trial of Vice Cases.

MACON, July 12.—Attorney Jesse C. Harris brought about a sudden adjournment of the special criminal session of the Bibb Superior Court yesterday afternoon by calling Solicitor John P. Ross a liar and striking him in the face in the courtroom. Harris was fined $50 for contempt of court and also censured by Judge Mathews for his conduct.

Harris represented fifteen women of the restricted district who are charged with operating disorderly houses. In moving for a continuance of these cases, he declared that Solicitor Ross would not call the cases represented by any other lawyers, but was seeking solely to prosecute those represented by him (Harris).

"That's a falsehood, your honor," interposed the Solicitor.

"You're a liar," shouted Attorney Harris, striking the Solicitor in the face.

Deputies seized both men immediately.

"He's a dirty little scoundrel; let me hit him once," shouted Solicitor Ross, but was restrained.

Judge Mathews held that the jury was prejudiced in the matter of trying any of the defendants represented by Harris, and as Solicitor Ross refused to call any other cases, though stating that he was prepared for trial in all of them, the court was adjourned for the term and all parties discharged. The Solicitor stated that Harris represented all of the prominent defendants, and that he did not propose to try the lesser and weaker defendants first. "There are 'stars' of varying magnitude in Tybee (the vice district) as well as in glory," he said.

Poultry, Pet and Live Stock

Mating for Breeding Purposes; Also Why Hens Go Blind

Questions Answered That Might Be Ones You Are Anxious to Have Explained.

By JUDGE F. J. MARSHALL.

Judge F. J. Marshall: I will appreciate some good advice. Last February I got five thoroughbred S. C. White Leghorns. From these I have raised 110 chickens, in addition to having used some eggs for the table. What arrangement should I make in the autumn for cocks? Must I dispose of all that I raise and procure fresh male birds, and how many shall I kep for, say 60 hens? My Leghorn flock has free range on Bermuda and Johnson grass, and will have cowpeas and winter oats. What feeding will they need during the fall and winter? When may I expect my pullets to lay that were hatched during April and May? I plan in the autumn to fence in a half-acre of winter oats, to divide it in half, and to keep in these two divisions, alternatingly, some large fowls from which to raise early broilers. What is the very best breed for this purpose? I do not need a general utility fowl, as my Leghorns will provide me with eggs. I simply want a breed that are early layers and rapid growers. How many birds can I keep to advantage on my half-acre? I have recently hatched sixteen thoroughbred ducks, they are Pekin ducks, from which I wish to raise. Is it better to give them range or keep them in an enclosure? What proportion of drakes are needed, and must I procure others than those which I have hatched.

Gunnison, Miss. MRS. M. M. S.

Reply: I should advise keeping the old cock you have been breeding from someone's yards not akin to three good, vigorous, young cockerels from one one's yards not akin to yours, and let the four run with the 60 hens and pullets you are going to have on your free range. One male to every fifteen females is sufficient where they all have free range.

Where stock is yarded, there should be one male to every ten females. Your Leghorn pullets hatched in April and May should

Suggestion of 30-Year Property Lease for $3,000,000—Jonesboro Road Acreage Sold.

Smith and Robert B. Blackburn, Representatives from Fulton, recently indorsed this project on condition that the State's interests could be protected in the deal. Mr. Cochran declared that the property frontage created under the plan would be extremely valuable and that

Some Day Babies Will Be Born Wise.

In Ages to Come Human Beings at Birth Will Know More Than Any Man Knows Now.

(Copyright, 1913.)

The most helpless and ignorant thing in the world is a new-born human being.

The most independent and wise thing in the world—in proportion to its ability—is a new-born mud wasp, or newly fledged sparrow.

That is because the human being is just in the beginning of its development, whereas the mud wasp, the ant and other insects have reached the highest development of which they are capable.

The saddest thing in the education of human beings is the fact that each child must begin at the beginning and learn everything for itself.

Each little baby learns to walk, learns to avoid the fire, learns to talk. The mind starts its life as a blank page, and everything must be written upon it. The child can not even learn by hearing from the father and mother of their mistakes. Each child must make its own mistakes, and can be taught only by experience.

But will that last forever?

When you see the lower forms of animal life giving birth to creatures fully equipped and independent, can you not believe that when the human race, practically just born on this planet, shall have lived here for a few hundreds of thousands or millions of years, that the human child will be born with all the material knowledge stored away, and have no work to do except the discovering of unknown truths, working in new fields?

We base this editorial upon an article by Sir William Ramsay, in the current number of Hearst's Magazine. We advise intelligent, thoughtful readers to get the magazine this month and every month. It is published for those who are interested in realities, those who are capable of thought.

In the article referred to, Sir William Ramsay describes both in the animal world and among human beings indications of a certain power of mind, of knowledge born in the newly created animal, apart from all teaching or experience.

He says, concerning the inhabitants of Burmah:

"Cases are known where a child, born of parents living in a village not their own, to which they had migrated, was able to recognize people, and to 'remember' events which had taken place in the native village of his parents, of which he could have had no direct knowledge. Is it possible that a memory for particular events is sometimes inherited?"

Then he says, of certain observations made upon swallows:

"Their nest was under the eaves; and for long, the parents fed and attended to their young brood. The day arrived for them to leave their nest; and without any practice, each fledgling dropped out of the nest, flew backward and forward, and without the least hesitation entered the nest, just like an old bird. The wonderful power of control of muscles, of guiding motion, and of correlation of brain and eye must have lain in the germ of these birds until the time for their use arrived. Examples of the sort might be given by the thousand; although the one mentioned is perhaps particularly striking."

It is extremely likely that the little boy of Burmah, a child bred for ages along the same limited line of thought, should have certain ideas and associations before birth strongly impressed upon it, and that these should be transmitted and appear in the child without any teaching.

There is no doubt that the children of savages recognize of their own accord the danger in poisonous reptiles and other animals to which the civilized child would be indifferent, except after the experience of a bite.

In the animal world the fact that the brain of the new animal is born with exact, wonderful knowledge is not disputed. And that fact is of intense interest to human beings who hope that the human race itself may develop one day in such a way as to have the children born with a ready-made education in excess of that which they now possess after years of schooling.

Suppose that a child could come into this world wise in proportion to its possibilities, as does the child of the mud wasp.

No baby mud wasp ever saw its own mother. The eggs are laid, and the mother who lays the eggs dies before they hatch.

Each new mud wasp begins its career as did Adam in the Garden of Eden, with nobody back of him so far as he knows.

When the mud wasp is ready she selects a good place to lay her eggs. Then she goes off and selects a fat caterpillar.

She intends that the caterpillar shall feed her young wasps when the latter hatch out. She puts that caterpillar beside the eggs that she has laid, covers up the eggs and the caterpillar, and goes away, leaving food for the young, unborn wasps, as some human mother might go out for a day's work leaving bread and butter on the table and saying, "Johnny, eat that when you get hungry."

The wonderful thing is that the mother wasp does not KILL the caterpillar. If she killed it, it would be decayed and useless by the time the young wasps arrived.

The mother wasp seizes the caterpillar and carefully stings it just back of the head, between two of the little rings that form the caterpillar's body.

This stuns the caterpillar, makes it impossible for it to move or struggle, but does not kill it.

And while the wasp eggs are hatching, the caterpillar, rendered helpless, but not killed by the poison, lies there ALIVE waiting for the little wasps to hatch out and eat it.

Presently they hatch, they eat it, and scatter.

The wonderful thing is that each of these wasps, never having seen the thing done, never having had lessons from its mother, or from any school-teacher, goes out when the time comes, lays her eggs, finds a fat caterpillar, stings it exactly in the same scientific way, and puts it away with the eggs, never having been told how to do it.

What a fine thing it would be for the children of human beings if they could be born with knowledge of that kind. Some of them are born WITH UNUSUAL KNOWLEDGE.

Some have musical power, which means that the brain before birth developed knowledge of harmony.

Some children can compose music correctly when they are almost too young to read.

Other children have a phenomenal mathematical faculty and can do "sums" that would puzzle their elders.

So far, man's brain is really too big for his body.

He was a timid, frightened monkey-man, running away from everything, developing his brain rapidly in order to make up for physical weakness. He has been a thinking man only

WINIFRED BLACK

Writes on

A Woman Next Door

You Choose Your Friends, She Says, Because You Like Them, and Like Their Kind, Not Because Somebody Else Thinks You Ought to Like Them.

By WINIFRED BLACK.

I READ a brilliant story by a brilliant writer the other day. Did you happen to read it, too?

It was about a woman who lived down "behind the tracks," in a country town. She was a woman who flaunted the streets in a gorgeous hat and expensive gowns. She wore bangle bracelets that jingled and rings that sparkled, and high-heeled slippers and "open-worked" stockings, and the men grinned sheepishly when she passed, and nudged each other, and the women looked the other way and pretended they didn't even see her.

One day the woman from "behind the tracks" bought a house uptown and moved into it—a neat, pretty little house, with a garden and trees, and she dug in the flower beds and watered the lawn and put out hanging baskets, and she went to market in a little checked gingham, and she looked wistfully over the fence when the neighbors went by, but nobody ever spoke to her at all.

One night a baby was taken sick in the neighborhood and the woman from "behind the tracks" saved its life. The next day she stood out on her porch and waited to see the baby's mother go by. And the baby's mother went by—and did not see the woman from "behind the tracks" at all, and the woman from "behind the tracks" went and sold her little new house and the garden and all, and went back "behind the tracks" to live—and all the people in the village pursed their lips and said, "She's gone back—they always do."

What Did She Expect?

Good story, wasn't it, and a good slap at the narrow-minded little mother, who wouldn't make friends with the woman who had saved her baby's life?

We need a few such slaps as that, we women; and yet——

I wonder what the woman from "behind the tracks" expected when she bought the pretty little house and the garden, and went to live among decent people?

Did she think they would get out the band and meet and greet her at the doorsteps, or what?

You choose your friends because you like them, and like their kind—not because somebody else thinks you ought to like them.

If the woman from "behind the tracks" had come to the village from somewhere else and nobody knew a thing about her, do you think the neighbor women would have liked her anyhow? I don't.

She wasn't their kind; never was, never could be. She belonged to a different world, and every time she turned her over-blonded head and every time she opened her good-humored, too easily-pleased mouth, and every time she laughed her rather coarse laugh, she would have told what she was, and no woman of any fineness of perception could have been mistaken in her for a minute.

No, I don't mean what she had been. That isn't what would concern a kindly woman who was trying to decide whether she wanted her for a neighbor or not. I mean what she is. A gingham dress doesn't change the beat of a woman's heart; a garden hoe doesn't turn her from a coarse, easy-going, blunt-hearted person to a gentle, delicate, lovely woman, does it? I don't believe it.

A Lesson From Home.

Once I had a maid—a strange, silent, stubborn girl with blue eyes, so hard that they were like a flint. She had a strange, measured walk and a strange, controlled voice, and she always acted as if she thought some one was watching her.

One day I saw her in a blue print dress, of peculiar cut and shade, and I knew—she was a reformatory girl. I'd seen her before, at the reformatory.

I didn't say a word. I treated her exactly as I had always treated her, but one day she was gone and she left a letter for me. In it she said many things. One of them was this: "You know me; don't you? I believe you do. I thought I could be different, but I can't. You've been good to me, but I ain't happy here. I ain't comfortable, so I'm going," and gone she was, back to the people with whom she was "comfortable," poor thing. Back to the people who were like her and who had her ways and her point of view. I was sorry, but I didn't go after her or try in any way to reach her.

Perhaps I should have—I've often wondered—and yet there were the children. Would it have been exactly safe?"

Selfish—protecting my children at the expense of a poor thing who was trying to make herself over.

Perhaps; but those children are mine. They are my business. It is my affair to keep them safe as long as I can. My own doorstep I must keep clean, and then if I have time and strength I may help my neighbor about her's. That's the way it looks to me. I wonder if I am right or wrong?

What You Really Are.

The poor thing from "behind the tracks" didn't belong in the neat little street uptown. She was no more in place there with her loud laugh and her bleached hair than the timid little woman who lived beside her would be in place in the ranks of a marching army. I don't blame the neighbor women for looking the other way. Honestly, now, I don't.

And the high-heeled, expensive slippers and the open-worked stockings and the gorgeous hats and the flashing rings—she had had all these things while little neighbor turned her blue cashmere and trimmed it with black velvet one year and with cream-colored lace the next, trying to make herself look pretty to the one man she loved. How could the poor thing from "behind the tracks" think she would never have to pay for all that?

After all, though, it isn't what you used to be that counts. It isn't what you would like to be, either; but what you really are, and no change in dress or in housing or anything else will change that. I wish it would. How pitifully I wish it would.

Some Day Babies Will Be Born Wise

for a short time—probably not more than two or three hundred thousand years.

Unlike the ants, the wasps, and the swallows, he has not had time yet to develop knowledge, make it thoroughly his own, and TRANSMIT it.

But there is every reason to believe that in time to come the baby will be born with all the practical knowledge that it requires, just as the young swallow and the young wasps begin life thoroughly educated.

When the time comes, each individual will have a highly interesting career—each being born knowing everything that is generally known, and each being able to devote the whole of life to acquiring NEW knowledge and making original research.

The difference between the mud-wasp and the human baby now is that the wasp is born knowing everything that it needs to know—and never learns anything more.

The baby of the human kind is born knowing nothing, and learns a good deal.

In days to come, when the baby is born with knowledge, there will still be a difference between it and the wasp, the ant, and the swallow, for born with the things that it must know in order to live comfortably, the human baby, unlike its animal associates on the earth, will start out ADDING to human knowledge—which, in turn, by slow processes that go on within us, will be handed down to the new generation.

CRACKERS WIN 2-0

PARENTS ARE BLAMED FOR 'SLAVERY'

Acting Recorder Sends Girls to Reform School and Binds Two Men Over.

Probe into vice conditions resulted in a startling climax Saturday afternoon when Acting Recorder Preston sentenced two girls, Corinne Wilson and Dora Rothstein to the Cincinnati Reform School and bound over two men, W. W. Suttles and C. A. Dollar, under $200 bond each, making eight vice cases tried Saturday, with the prospect of five more trials for Monday.

The trial was featured by the statements of the Acting Recorder, who declared that the parents of the girls were largely responsible for the deplorable conditions which exist. This accusation followed a severe reprimand of the parents of the Rothstein girl, who were in court.

"If you had a dog in your home," said the Recorder to the two parents as they stood before the bar of justice, "you would not treat it as you have treated this girl. Just such action as this is resulting to-day in the ruin of hundreds of girls of this city."

Efforts to Convict Fail.

Suttles and Dollar were placed under $200 bonds on the charge of furnishing beer to the girls. Efforts to convict the men on other charges growing out of their relaitons with the girls failed because the alleged acts were committed in Campbell County.

As the result of the increased activity by the detective and police departments, following the grilling given the detectives Friday afternoon by Chief Beavers, five new arrests were made by a squad of officers shortly after noon Saturday, in a raid on a boarding house at No. 164 1-2 Peters Street.

The persons under arrest gave their names as Lulu Bell, Maud Wilson, Mrs. Lee Berkstein and L. W. Berkstein. Effie Drummond, a 22-year-old country girl, who has been in Atlanta only four weeks, is held as a material witness.

A man whose name is given as Joe North escaped through a back window while the police were raiding the place. A general order has been issued for his arrest. The raid was made by Officers Brannan, Moncrief and Baker.

More Arrests Probable.

Chief Beavers declares he has evidence that the boarding house, which was run by the Bell woman, is an immoral resort. The quintet probably will be tried in Police Court Monday. The Chief intimated after the arrest that other arrests are probable within 24 hours as a result of developments of the day's investigation, which have brought out the following:

Information has come to Chief Beavers of a house where young girls are taken by men and ruined, and then taken to hotels or immoral resorts.

The dragnet has been thrown out for the son of one of Atlanta's most prominent business men, named by Hattie Smith in her story of immorality at the Cumberland Hotel.

Four persons—Hattie Smith, Mrs. Lola White, Paul Estes and Hoyt Monroe—were held for the Grand Jury Saturday morning on new charges, following the Smith girl's story of a "joy ride." Estes has said that he will make a confession, in which he will involve men hitherto unsuspected.

Chief Beavers now has the names of between fifteen and twenty men.

Lieut. Becker's Plea For New Trial Fails

NEW YORK, July 12.—Supreme Court Justice Goff to-day denied a motion for a new trial in behalf of former Police Lieutenant Charles Becker, who is in Sing Sing under sentence of death for instigating the murder of Herman Rosenthal a year ago. The motion was based on newly discovered evidence.

Justice Goff based his denial on the ground that the same evidence could have been discovered before the trial.

COOKS DESERTING ENGLAND.

LONDON, July 12.—England's domestic cooks are flocking to Canada and Australia at a rate that is spreading consternation throughout the country. The association of employment agents is holding a series of meetings to discuss the "crisis."

BULGAR CZAR REPORTED SLAIN

Unconfirmed Rumors Tell of Assassination and Military Revolt in Capital.

VIENNA, July 12.—Unconfirmed reports have reached here from Sofia and Bucharest that King Ferdinand of Bulgaria has been assassinated.

The dispatches state that a military revolt has broken out in the capital.

SOFIA, July 12.—Scores of men were shot down in the streets here to-day in a general uprising against the Government aroused by the defeat of Bulgarian troops in the field and the passive manner in which Roumania's declaration of war is being treated by the Government.

Mob rule prevails. The palace is surrounded by a throng shouting denunciations and calling upon Czar Ferdinand to abdicate.

A Roumanian army is marching upon Sofia and unless there is a peaceful settlement in the meantime the Bulgarian capital will be occupied next week.

It was not until to-day that the people learned that the Bulgars have been crushed at every point.

Try to Assassinate Daneff.

An attempt was made to assassinate Dr. Daneff, former Premier, as he was on his way to confer with President Guechoff.

Czar Ferdinand is reported to be preparing to evacuate the city.

So far as Servia and Greece are concerned the Balkan war is believed to be over, but Roumanian troops continue to pour into the eastern part of Bulgaria. These troops are fresh and fully equipped for fighting and are eager to clash with the Bulgarians. The shattered Bulgarian forces are no match for the Roumanians.

The Roumanians have occupied the Bulgarian towns of Turtukai, Dobridsh and Baltchik. There is no resistance to the advance of the Roumanian forces.

Bulgars, Routed, Massacre 200 Greeks; Foes Pursue.

ATHENS, July 12.—Greek and Servian forces in Central Macedonia have now joined, making a mighty army of 150,000 men. Two hundred Greeks, both men and women, have been massacred near Serres by the retreating Bulgarians. The Bulgarians have fled from Serres in a panic at the approach of the Greek soldiers.

The powers have advised Greece to make peace with Bulgaria. Mr. Coromilas, the Greek Foreign Minister, received a note from the European states advising Greece to join with Servia in ceasing hostilities. France will probably become the "protector" of Greece, now that the Balkan league has become shattered by war.

Bacon Halts Plan for Bill-Drafting Bureau

WASHINGTON, July 12.—Senator Bacon, of Georgia, created consternation in the Senate to-day when he declared he was so shocked at the attempt of Senator Owen to have the Senate pass a bill creating a bureau to draft bills upon the request of the President and others that he was completely "knocked off his pins."

The bill was withdrawn for further consideration. It provides for a committee of eight Senators or 25 Representatives.

Senator Bacon referred to the President as the schoolmaster, who, it is proposed, shall do work Senators are supposed to do.

THOMPSONIS TOUGH NUT FOR GULLS

Wild Pitch by Cavet Gives Crackers First Run and Agler's Single Scores Second.

PONCE DE LEON BALL PARK, July 12.—Carl Thompson's great hurling here this afternoon blanked the Gulls, 2 to 0, in the final game of the series. The ex-Georgia hurler fanned eight of Mike Finn's crew and allowed them but four scattered hits.

Cavet attempted to make it three straight over the Crackers, but was found in the pinches to-day. Smith's men had several other chances to score against the big southpaw, but foozled them away by failing to lay down bunts. The home boys secured one run in the first and another in the sixth.

FIRST INNING.

Stock bounded one to Bisland and was an easy out to Agler. Alperman let McGill's roller get through him and the Gull's outfielder was safe at the initial sack. Robertson popped a tall fly to Bisland. McGill out, trying to pilfer second, Dunn to Bisland. NO HITS, NO RUNS.

Long was safe at the first corner when Stock threw his grounder over Robertson's head. Welchonce smashed a neat single to left and Long went to second. Alperman laid down a neat sacrifice, Cavet to Paulet. Both runners advanced a sack. Smith was handed four wide ones filling the bases. Bisland was not equal to the occasion and fanned. On a wild pitch Long tallied and Welchonce took third. Agler also struck out. One hit, one run.

SECOND INNING.

O'Dell slambed a single to center. Only fast fielding by Welchonce held the smash to a one-baser. Schmidt hit into a double play, Thompson to Alperman to Agler. Paulet was easy picking for Alperman to Agler. One hit, no runs.

Manush did a Casey act and took a seat on the bench. O'Dell picked up Dunn's grounder and tossed it to first ahead of the runner. Thompson popped to Stock. No hits, no runs.

THIRD INNING.

Clark lofted one to Bisland. Campbell drove a line drive to Alperman. Cavet struck out. No hits, no runs.

Long stung a safe one through Cavet. Welchonce bunted to Cavet and Long was forced at second to Stock. Alperman hit into a double play, Stock to Papulet to Robertson. One hit, no runs.

FOURTH INNING.

Stock fanned. McGill was also disposed of over the strike-out route. Thompson finished the inning by whiffing Robertson, giving him four strike outs in a row. No hits, no runs.

Smith placed his bat against the pill for a single to center. Bisland bunted to Cavet, who threw to Stock forcing Wallie at second. Agler's best was a pop fly to Stock. Manush was there with a single to right and Bisland romped to the middle sack. Dunn lined out to Clark. TWO HITS, NO RUNS.

FIFTH INNING.

O'Dell lifted a long fly to Long. Schmidt was out when Manush made a shoestring catch of his hot smash to left. Welchonce took care of Paulet's fly. NO HITS, NO RUNS.

Thompson was given a great hand when he came to bat. Carl responded with an easy pop to Schmidt. Long's grounder was handled by Robertson. O'Dell picked up Welchonce's grounder and threw the Cracker outfielder out at first. Robertson dropped the throw, but Umpire Kerin ruled that Dave had held the ball momentarially. NO HITS, NO RUNS.

SIXTH INNING.

Clark fouled out to Dunn. Campbell pushed a single through Smith. Cavet was Thompson's victim over the strike-out route. Alperman grabbed Stock's roller and tossed him out to Agler. ONE HIT, NO RUNS.

Alperman found one of Cavet's offerings to his liking and poled it to left field for two bases. Smith bunted to Cavet and Alperman was tagged out at third to O'Dell. This was about the fourth time the Cracker players failed to lay down a neat bunt. Bisland slambed a single to right and Smith took second. Agler was the handy boy in the pinch with a dandy single to left and Smith ambled over the home platter. Manush was called out on strikes. Dunn went out, Stock to Robertson. THREE HITS, ONE RUN.

SEVENTH INNING.

Agler dropped McGill's liner after a great leap and the batter was safe at first. It was a hit. Robertson followed with a single to center and McGill took second. O'Dell whiffed. Schmidt grounded out to Agler and both runners advanced a peg. Paulet lined out to Thompson. TWO HITS, NO RUNS.

Thompson fanned. Long out, Stock to Robertson. Welchonce singles over second. Alperman flies to McGill. ONE HIT, NO RUNS.

EIGHTH INNING.

Clark out, Alperman to Agler. Campbell filed to Welchonce. Cavet filed to Manush. NO HITS, NO RUNS.

Smith out, Stock to Robertson. Bisland popped to Schmidt. Agler popped to Stock. NO HITS, NO RUNS.

NINTH INNING.

Stock fanned. McGill was safe when Smith booted his grounder and then threw wild to first and McGill went to second. Robertson popped to Alperman. O'Dell doubled to Manush. NO HITS, NO RUNS.

SAYS WOMEN OVERHEARD CONLEY CONFESS

Attorney Leavitt Declares Tale That Negro Admitted Killing Girl Will Stand Test.

That several negro women overheard Jim Conley when he ran the insurance agent, Mincey, away with the alleged statement that he had just killed a girl and didn't want to kill any one else, and that the affidavits from the women are in the hands of the attorneys for the defense, was stated Saturday by Attorney J. H. Leavitt, who aided in obtaining the sensational affidavit from Mincey.

Attorney Leavitt defended the character of the man who made the affidavit and denied emphatically that Mincey even asked about the money he would receive as a witness, except whether his railroad fare would be paid if he were out of the city.

Explains Dukes' Doubts.

"I am attorney for the American Insurance Company and know its manager, J. S. Dukes, very well," said Leavitt. "He sought to discredit the affidavit very likely because Mincey left his employ to get a better position and he had to do some of the outside work. Mincey is a college graduate and is well known in Atlanta. It will be utterly impossible to shake his evidence.

"I am not employed to represent Frank and aided in getting this affidavit purely because I happened to stumble on to the information. Before I submitted it to Mr. Rosser, Frank's attorney, I spent eleven days investigating the character of the man, questioning the women in the neighborhood and generally verifying the facts. When I turned it over to him I was convinced of its absolute truth and that it would stand the acid test."

Habeas Corpus Fight Fails.

Habeas corpus proceedings to release Newt Lee collapsed in the court of Judge Ellis Saturday morning.

By agreement, Bernard L. Chappell, representing Lee, withdrew his application for a habeas corpus; Solicitor Dorsey promised to present a bill against Lee as a suspect in the Phagan murder case, with the expectation that a "no bill" would be returned. This appeared satisfactory to the attorneys for Lee, as well as to the State.

Luther Z. Rosser, Reuben R. Arnold and Herbert J. Haas, of counsel for Frank, were in court to fight against the appearance of Frank as a witness. William M. Smith represented Conley, one of the witnesses subpenaed.

Conley Gets Third Degree.

Jim Conley underwent a racking third degree late Friday afternoon at the hands of Solicitor General Hugh M. Dorsey and Attorney Frank A. Hooper in an effort to verify or discredit the W. H. Mincey affidavit, in which the negro was charged with confessing to the murder of a girl on the afternoon that Mary Phagan met her death.

The grilling of nearly four hours followed The Georgian's publication of the details of Mincey's accusations and was undertaken with the utmost secrecy, an attempt being made to avoid knowledge of the "sweating" becoming public by taking Conley to the Commissioners' room on the second floor of the police station by a circuitous route.

WIDOW EVADES ARREST; QUITS THE CITY

Mrs. Crawford, Sought Under Warrant for Murder, Evades Arrest.

Mrs. Mary Belle Crawford had disappeared Saturday afternoon when officers went to arrest her on a warrant charging her with the murder of her husband, Joshua B. Crawford, in 1909.

Constables R. F. Mauldin and W. W. Rogers went immediately to Mrs. Crawford's home at West Peachtree and Fourteenth streets when the warrant was sworn out. They were informed that she had left the city for Carrollton. To verify this statement, the officers made a thorough search about the city, failing to find the woman. It is not known whether she left before or after she learned that the warrant had been issued.

The warrant was sworn out by C. Z. Crawford, a nephew and beneficiary under the $250,000 will of Joshua Crawford, before Justice of the Peace C. H. Girardeau. The action was taken following close upon a decision by Superior Court Justice Pendleton that a warrant signed by the Coroner of Carroll County was not enforceable in Fulton County. If arrested, Mrs. Crawford was to be brought before Justice Girardeau for commitment trial.

The first warrant charging Mrs. Crawfod with murder was signed by Coroner C. W. Baukin, of Carroll County, who had disinterred the body of Joshua B. Crawford and found evidence of poison. Crawford died in Fulton county March 27, 1909.

Hearing May Be Delayed.

The warrant reached Atlanta Friday, and Sheriff Mangum notified Mrs. Crawford to appear before Justice of the Peace D. K. Johnson Saturday morning, when a hearing would be held as to the authority of the Sheriff to serve the warrant in Fulton County.

"It is not really the Crawford heirs who are fighting me," said Mrs. Crawford, "but the rather distant relatives who were not mentioned in any will. I settled with the real heirs according to the will left by Mr. Crawford's first wife. Every one was satisfied.

"I gave Charlie Crawford more than he was even entitled to by the will that was made before I even knew the man I later married. He thanked me for the generosity by later letting the very distant relatives prevail upon him to fight me. He deeded them an interest in his share of the property and filed suit. Since then he has fought me. The closer relatives have never been anything but my best friends."

Widow's Side of Case.

Attorney Arnold, for Mrs. Crawford, issued the following statement Saturday:

"Four years after Crawford's death some of the collateral kinpeople of J. B. Crawford and his first wife, who are seeking to recover this estate, worth perhaps $100,000, from the widow and legatees under Crawford's will, went to Carroll County with their lawyer, J. S. James, and Dr. H. F. Harris, and on some kind of showing which we know nothing of persuaded the Coroner to exhume the body and allow the doctor employed by these relatives to make a post-mortem examination. Neither the widow nor any of the other legatees who are defendants had any notice and were not present.

Claims Lungs Shriveled.

"The doctor for these people took various parts of the body of Crawford and made a test for morphine. He claims to have found a trace of morphine by applying the color test. He would not swear to any quantity of morphine or meconic acid and could not swear as to any quantity which the deceased took in his lifetime.

"This doctor also looked at the lungs of J. B. Crawford and swore that they had shriveled up about one-third of their size.

"The presence of the morphine and meconic acid, Dr. Harris (who was employed by these collateral kin) said, indicated that a large quantity had been taken by the deceased in his life, but how much he could not say. Harris could not swear that he found more than one-fiftieth of a grain, and said he made no test for quantity.

Tempest in Teapot.

"The whole thing is a tempest in a teapot, an effort to make a mountain out of a molehill.

"Dr. John W. Hurt, who treated Crawford for pneumonia in his last illness, and the trained expert nurse who attended him show that Crawford died of pneumonia. To ease Crawford's severe pain Dr. Hurt had given him several injections of morphine, and no secret was made of the fact. To ease Crawford's coughing Dr. Hurt had given him a cough medicine which contained opium, which was taken into the stomach.

"This administration of these drugs by Dr. Hurt, who is a safe and conservative physician, would account for vastly more than the trace of morphine found in Crawford's body by Harris.

"As to Dr. Harris' opinion that Dr. Hurt was wrong in diagnosing the case as pneumonia we will be able to show by various experts that Dr. Harris' opinion, based on the examination he made on these shriveled lungs four years after death, is worthless as compared with the opinion of Dr. Hurt and the trained nurse.

"We propose to try this case in court in this county and will be satisfied with the judgment that the court renders; but in justice to our client we state these facts to show that there is nothing in these charges.

"The Coroner of Carroll County had no right to make any investigation or recommendation as to Mrs. Crawford. The matter is entirely out of his jurisdiction.

"If anybody wants to make any sworn charge that Mrs. Crawford poisoned J. B. Crawford she will welcome any such investigation and will show it utterly groundless."

SEARCHING SIDELIGHTS ON POLITICS IN GEORGIA

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

Mr. McMichael of Marion Friday made pos-i-tively his first American appearance as Speaker Pro Tem of the Georgia House of Representatives, and got away with victorious eagles and things of that sort.

The Speakership Pro Tem carries no prerogative other than that of presiding when the Speaker is absent from the chair, and, as Mr. Burwell had not been absent a minute up to the time of Mr. McMichaels participation in the direction of affairs in the House, nobody in the House knew exactly what sort of a Speaker Pro Tem it had selected, so far as his ability to handle things was concerned.

Whatever doubt there may have been in anybody's mind that McMichael would get away with things was speedily removed. The gentleman from Marion seemed perfectly at home from the very beginning of his active career as Speaker Pro Tem, and was warmly applauded by his colleagues when he had finished Round 1.

Mr. McMichatel, by the way, is one of the best and most convincing speakers on the floor of the House, and has the happy faculty of making himself understood perfectly. He is clean-cut in enunciation and exceedingly easy to follow.

Moreover, he is very popular among his fellow members, and whatever he says attracts instant and interested attention.

Judge John T. Allen is, perhaps, the best speaker on the floor of the Senate. And that is no mean compliment, either, for there are several good speakers in that honorable body.

Judge Allen not only is a mighty good lawyer, but he also is a business man of widespread reputation. His voice has great carrying power, without in any way being harsh. Whenever he arises to address the Senate, is invariably given close attention.

Whether one agrees with what he says or not, Judge Allen never is at a loss for words in which to make himself perfectly plain.

Dispensing with the reading of the journal in the Senate is not easily effected. Notwithstanding the fact that the journal has been examined and approved, a motion to dispense with reading rarely gets by without objection.

The Senate is more dignified than the House, as a rule, anyway, and its methods of procedure are much more orderly and repressed.

It is an interesting circumstance that the Senate Committee on Constitutional Amendments has reported favorably a bill to raise the total of Senate membership from 44 to 60. There is an excellent chance that the bill will pass, and if it does, the impression is that the people will ratify it.

There is one little page in the Senate who makes it a regular business to fall reverently to his knees while the chaplain is praying every morning.

He doesn't look to be over 8 or 9 years old, and he evidently has not forgotten—yet—that the proper praying posture is kneeling.

A number of Georgia Legislators to-day forwarded to Washington—some to the President and others to Secretary Bryan—letters endorsing Colonel J. Lindsay Johnson, of Rome, for a consulship, preferably in the Orient.

It is well-known, of course, that the Colonel wishes to be named Consul to Shanghai, and his friends in the Legislature—of which he is several times a former member—evidently are desirous of hastening the appointment along in such wise as they may.

South Georgia is talking of former President of the Senate, W. S. West, of Valdosta, for Governor, in succession to Governor Slaton.

If South Georgia has an eye on the Executive Office after Governor Slaton gets through, it will be readily admitted on all sides that Colonel West would make an ideal candidate.

He knows the game, he has the friends, and assuredly he has the ability—and what more could South Georgia ask of a favorite son?

Citizen J. L. H. Waldrop, of Clayton County, 77 years of age, boasts with pride that he has voted for a Brown for Governor of Georgia seven times.

Away back yonder in the dim and distant past he voted four times for former Governor Joseph M. Brown's distinguished father, Joseph E. Brown, and of late years he voted three times for that gentleman's son.

Mr. Waldrop makes no bones of admitting, indeed, that he always has voted for that tribe of particular Browns, and stands ready to repeat the performance whenever occasion shall arise for doing so, if it ever does again.

William R. Leaken, Collector of the Port of Savannah, has appointed B. Palmer Axson as an assistant in his office, with the rank of inspector. Axson has already begun his new duties, appointment was made by Collector although the appointment has not yet been approved.

There is no doubt that the appointment will be made permanent. The Leaken without solicitation or political consideration.

The new appointee is a blood relative of Mrs. Woodrow Wilson.

Representative Barry Wright, of Floyd, hopes to revive the scheme to convert the Western and Atlantic terminals in Atlanta, between Madison Avenue and Fryor Street, in a grand overhead plaza, and to that end will earnestly champion a bill in the House providing for the same.

Mr. Wright is a member of the Western and Atlantic Railway Committee of the House, and is capable of putting up a mighty good fight for anything he undertakes.

The plaza scheme, he thinks, is an admirable solution of a much vexed question, and a probable effective factor in disposing of the smoke nuisance in Atlanta.

Grantville Man Dies In Sanitarium Here

H. Abner Camp, aged 39, of Grantville, Ga., died in Atlanta early Saturday morning from a severe kidney trouble.

Two weeks ago Mr. Camp's condition became critical, and Friday evening he was brought to a private sanitarium here.

The body was taken to Grantville Saturday afternoon. The funeral will take place from the home of Mr. Camp's father-in-law, Thomas E. Zellars, Sunday. Burial will follow at Newnan.

CHIEF SETS NET FOR NEW VICE SUSPECTS

Scores Detectives for Alleged Laxity in Reporting Cases. Arrests Due Soon.

and more than a dozen young girls, furnished to him by Hattie Smith, Dora Rothstein and Corinne Wilson. He said, as can be found, they will be brought into court, and cases made where there is evidence enough to justify such a course. Those against whom cases are not made will be summoned as witnesses and forced to tell what they know.

One of the startling incidents of the investigation came in police court Saturday morning, in the hearing of Hattie Smith, Mrs. Lola White, Paul Estes and Hoyt Monroe. The Smith girl, heretofore one of the main sources of evidence, flatly refused to talk when placed on the stand. She would neither affirm nor deny that she had taken an auto ride with Estes and Monroe and that she had had illicit relations with them.

The stories of the other three, however, were sufficient for the holding of the quartet.

Chief Warns Detectives.

In his conference with the detective department late Friday afternoon, which was held in Chief Lanfod'r office behind closed doors, Chief Beavers took the detectives severely to task for their laxity in reporting vice cases. He intimated strongly that the detectives were not doing their duty and not getting results.

"It is as much your duty as it is the duty of any other man on the force," Chief Beavers is said to have told them, "to report the existence of vice. In the future all knowledge gained by detectives as to the existence of immoral resorts must be reported at once to headquarters. If you personally are engaged on some other case and have not time to work the vice case, report it so some one else can investigate and make the case."

Found—Monkey; Its Owner Please Hurry

Good news for Tony, the organ grinder!

Joko has been found.

With decorated collar and chain still trailing, a pet monkey that was wont to gather pennies for some Tony in Atlanta was discovered gayly chattering in the trees at the residence of Mrs. H. Winsta, on the Howell Mill road. She called Chief Beavers Saturday and said members of her family had been trying to capture the elusive Simian since Tuesday, but that Jocko had proved his superiority in climbing.

She suggested a posse. The Chief told her he would try to locate the owner and notify him to claim and capture his property.

Revolt Feared in Cuba Over Politics

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

HAVANA, July 12.—A tense political situation exists here in consequence of the assassination of General Riva, chief of the national police.

Reports were current to-day that followers of General Asbert, one of the men indicted for the murder of Riva, would attempt to storm the jail and liberate the prisoners.

Asbert has been deposed as Governor of the Province of Havana by President Menocal.

Troops still patroled the streets today and while there was no outward disorder there was a strong undercurrent of hostility.

FIFTH REGIMENT READY FOR GOVERNOR'S VISIT

Snapshot of play at miltary encampment shows Private Bell in air and Private Blackwell on ground.

Soldiers in camp do not drill all the time.

Fine Entertainment Planned for Inspecting Party by Troops Maneuvering on St. Simons.

ST. SIMONS, July 12.—Preparations are complete for the visit of Governor Slaton and his staff, who are expected here to-day to inspect the camp of the Fifth Regiment. The visitors will be entertained and shown everything of interest on the Island.

The militiamen have settled to the routine of military camp life. They are being instructed in extended order work and how to attack a strong defensive position. Captain Kimbrough, of the United States Army, and Colonel Pomeroy, of the Fifth Regiment, are the instructors.

The social life on the Island is a pleasant feature of the encampment. Dances and band concerts are given every night.

Governor Slaton and Chief of Staff Frederic J. Paxon and other members of the Governor's staff are inspecting the Fifth Regiment of the National Guard at St. Simons Island, where the regiment is encamped. They will return to Atlanta Sunday or Monday.

The Governor and his party left Friday night.

PEACE PLAN FOR HEALEY STRIKE HANGS FIRE

Committee to Settle Walkout Involving 150 Men on New Building Reported Named.

Negotiations looking to the settlement of the strike declared Friday by union men employed on the Healey Building had not materialized at noon Saturday. During the morning a number of strikers gathered near the structure, but no demonstration was attempted.

President C. Harrison Barnes, of the Building Trades Council, who called the strike, maintains silence on the matter, although it is understood representatives to a conference with the contractor, B. M. Walker, have been named. This conference may be held Saturday afternoon.

The strike, which was called Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock, was the result of the alleged awarding of an electrical contract to a concern which does not employ union labor. This act on the part of Contractor Walker, the union leaders claim, is a violation of certain alleged existing contracts between employer and employee.

Fourteen labor organizations are involved, including the structural iron workers, brick masons, plasterers, steel workers, plumbers, gas workers, steam and electrical engineers, painters, marble cutters, carpenters and hod carriers—in all, about 150 men.

According to statements Saturday morning, a number of the structural iron workers have planned to leave Atlanta to take other jobs. While the steel work on the Healey Building is nearly completed, about three weeks work for the riveting gang and ten days work for the steel men remain.

The strike will not involve other buildings, it is believed.

MEYERS SUICIDE THROUGH FEAR OF INSANITY

Former Atlanta Telephone Man Is Found Dead in St. Louis Hotel. Health Was Broken.

ST. LOUIS, July 12.—Dr. Heine Marks, uncle of Charles L. Meyers, of Nashville, Tenn., who shot and killed himself at the Planters Hotel Friday, said to-day that in his opinion his nephew's suicide was due to a fear of insanity, brought about by overwork.

Meyers suffered a nervous breakdown six months ago and had to quit work. He was general contractor for the Cumberland Telephone Company.

A few days ago Meyers told his bride of three months that if he became convinced that he would go insane he would kill himself. A close guard was kept over him, but he eluded it. Funeral arrangements will follow the inquest to-day. His wife was Miss Pearl Goldstein, of Nashville.

Mr. Meyers, who was a special agent for the Southern Bell Telephone Company, was regarded as an efficient employee. Formerly he lived in Nashville, where he was connected with the Cumberland, and retained his position when that concern was taken over by the Southern. Several months ago he was transferred to Atlanta, but worked here but a few weeks when his health failed and he took a vacation.

Mr. Meyers and his bride arrived in St. Louis Thursday to visit his brother.

MULHALL USED LABOR BODY AS HIS TOOL

Professional Lobbyist Tells of Political Welding of Unions and Manufacturers.

WASHINGTON, July 12.—An interesting glimpse of "inside" politics was given by Colonel Martin M. Mulhall in his testimony to-day before the Overman Lobby Committee.

How as president of the Baltimore Working Men's Association, though lobbying for the National Association of Manufacturers, he lined up the working men against Senator McComas, who was fought because of his advocacy of an eight-hour law, was told by the witness.

Mulhall's testimony portrayed the Manufacturers' Association in the light of a big and powerful non-partisan organization bent on defeating legislation favorable to labor interests and legislators who opposed the association.

Efforts to swing the labor vote in Rhode Island in 1904 for Senator Nelson W. Aldrich also were described by Mulhall. He spent ten days in the State, he said, at the solicitation of Senator Foraker, of Ohio.

Labor union leaders, Colonel Mulhall said, knew of his connection with the Manufacturers' Association.

Colonel Mulhall charged Marshall Cushing, secretary of the National Association of Manufacturers, with trying to defeat William Hughes, now Senator from New Jersey, because Hughes was active in support of labor measures.

Mulhall told the committee "all you had to do was to see 'Boss' Barnes to get a bill killed in the Legislature at Albany."

Senate Beats House for Possession of Mulhall.

WASHINGTON, July 12.—The opening skirmish for physical possession of Colonel Martin M. Mulhall was won by the Senate Lobby Investigation Committee to-day. Chairman Garrett, of the House committee, had subpenaed the witness for examination at 9 o'clock to-day, but late last night the Senators, finding their prerogatives might be infringed upon, told Mulhall to show up at 9 o'clock at the Senate, and he did.

Garrett indicated that if the Senate committee persisted in stopping the House, the House committee will have a subpena out at all times for Mulhall.

James E. Emery, counsel for the National Association of Manufacturers, promised to give a list of about 40 witnesses to disprove Mulhall's accusations affecting business men. He said he was trying to locate some men he knew could tell of Mulhall's record.

ONCE NEWSIE, NOW HE AIDS IN MAKING LAWS

Georgia lawmaker, who rose from ranks of "newsies" to halls of Legislature.

REPRESENTATIVE E. D. COLE, OF BARTOW.

Representative Ed Cole Has Acquired a Fortune, but Has Lost Most of His Name.

In the first place, Representative Ed Cole, of Bartow, was not christened Edward, or Edwin, or Ed, or anything like that.

As a matter of fact, his full entitlements are Emreid Dargan Cole!

That, however, was entirely too fancy an outlay of names for this gentleman when first he started out to make his own way in life, and so he elected to have himself called "E. D." which inevitably evoluted into plain, ordinary, old-fashioned "Ed" as time ran on.

Ed Cole began his business career with a total capital of $1.35. Besides that, he possessed nothing beyond one suit of clothes, vintage unknown, a couple of pairs of socks and a superabundance of energy and pluck.

He plunged into business for himself at 16 by getting a job as train "butcher" on a jerkwater railroad in South Carolina, and he soon enlarged his capital of $1.35 to 100 times that amount.

Not long after this experience one of the big news agencies heard of Cole and grabbed him. Before long he was in charge of a division or so for that concern—and now he still is on the sunny side of 30, worth along toward—well, he is worth a six-figure sum, all right, anyway!

In casting about for a vice chairman of the important Ways and Means Committee of the House, Speaker Burwell looked into Cole's record. He became convinced that Cole was one of the safest and sanest business men in the House, and as that was exactly what he was looking for, Cole got the assignment.

Cole's inheritance tax bill is House bill No. 1, and is generally accepted as the most intelligent inheritance tax measure pending in the Legislature. It likely is the one that will be enacted into law. Cole never introduced it until he felt sure it was right and modeled along the most approved lines.

Christian Endeavor In Sunrise Meeting

LOS ANGELES, July 12.—A majority of the delegates to the International Christian Endeavor convention here were on hand for the sunrise meeting half an hour before dawn.

Reasons assigned to-day for the action of the convention in selecting Chicago for its 1915 meeting were the raising of a $10,000 convention entertainment fund, the fact that there are more than 1,000,000 members of the Christian Endeavor within a radius of a few miles of Chicago, and the presence in this country of thousands of visitors who will be able to stop in Chicago on their way to the Panama Exposition.

Marietta Car Smashes Smyrna Physician's Machine, Driven by Fifteen-Year-Old Boy.

Dr. W. T. Pace, a physician of Smyrna, and his chauffeur, Fred Reed, 15, narrowly escaped death Saturday morning shortly before 10 o'clock when an incoming Marietta trolley car smashed into the physician's automobile at a curve just beyond Carmichael Station.

Dr. Pace and young Reed, although badly cut and bruised about the face and arms, were able to leave the Atlanta Hospital, where they were rushed, shortly before noon. The car, a new two-passenger Ford, was demolished.

According to Dr. Pace, the street car bore down on them at a rapid rate before either he or the chauffeur knew there was a car in sight.

"The car came down the hill at a rate I would estimate at from 40 to 45 miles an hour," said Dr. Pace, "and we did not see it in time to get out of the way. The motorman blew his whistle once, but it was too late. My chauffeur tried to reverse the machine and then came the crash."

Inspector Winn, of the Georgia Railway and Power Company, said it had been reported to him that the boy driving the car apparently lost his nerve and stopped his car on the track. The car was filled with passengers.

Headed by the two Representatives from Clarke County, J. Frank Rhodes and Frank A. Lipscomb, the Georgia Legislature is visiting Athens to-day, inspecting State institutions there.

The General Assembly, under the chaperonage of President of the Senate J. Randolph Anderson, left on a special train over the Seaboard at 8 o'clock this morning, and will return to Atlanta to-night at 8:30.

For the purpose of making this trip the Legislature adjourned over to-day to meet again Monday morning, but as it is on public business the day was not declared a dies non.

.:. Two in a Train .:.

"A THIRD class single to Galway, please!" Miss Mathers moved away from the ticket office, but not before a tall man, wrapped in a thin ulster, with a tweed cap pulled down over his eyes, had seen her—started first at sound of her soft voice, and then deliberately followed her to the waiting train. It was a bitter winter evening, and Miss Mathers shuddered inwardly as she thought of that long, long train journey through South Wales, the odious crossing of the Irish Channel and the wearisome journey to Galway.

Tears started to her eyes as she thought of past arrivals there. How different they had been! Then she had traveled thither as a guest. Now all was sadly changed, and she was going back to dear, well-remembered places to earn her own living as a governess.

Seated in the corner of a third-class compartment, Mary Mathers settled herself under her rug for the first stage of her journey.

A warning whistle from the train—the door was wrenched open, and a man, wrapped in a big ulster, got in, followed by a porter with a bag and bundle of golf sticks. There was a momentary bustle, during which the express began to glide slowly along the platform. The porter jumped out, shut the door—they were off.

And in the opposite corner was sitting—

Mary's heart gave a jump.

"I thought it was you," said Meredith, quietly. "Aren't you going to speak to me?"

"Of course," she stammered, with lips that tried so hard not to quiver. "You startled me so." She smiled at him gallantly. "You see, you are about the last person I expected to see. Are you going to Ireland?"

The Old Haunts.

"Yes, and you? To the old haunts?" The quick tears started to her eyes.

"Yes, to one of the old haunts near Galway."

"Lough Corrib?" he asked.

Mary winced.

"Yes, just on the shores, half-way to Oughterard."

He leant forward.

"You don't mean to say that you are going to the Wintons?"

"Yes."

"Good! So am I. They're getting up a first-rate house party, you know. I'm awfully glad you're going to be one of them, too."

Mary gave a little gasp, opened her mouth as if to speak, and said nothing. What could she say?

Tell him the truth, of course—that instead of an honored guest she was going to the Wintons as governess at $150 a year, relegated to the schoolroom in a distant wing, dining when the rest of the party lunched, disappearing back again to the distant wing of the house with her charges. Perhaps now and then she would be sent for to play accompaniments or something of the kind. But if Meredith was to be in the house, how could she bear it? How could she tell him? He probably knew nothing about her reverses of fortune. She couldn't blurt it out—apropos of nothing at all.

Three years ago she and Meredith had seen a good deal of each other. No other man had ever touched her heart or made any great difference in her life, but he—she wrenched herself from her dreams with an effort as she spoke.

A Bad Prospect.

"I'm afraid it's going to be a bad night. Are you obliged to cross?"

"Yes."

"And if I remember rightly, you don't care much about the sea, do you?"

"I care this much—that I loathe it," said Mary, with a faint smile. "I have never got over my distaste for boats and everything to do with them. And the Irish Channel is always rough when I cross it."

Meredith laughed.

"Have you only just come back from East Africa?" said Mary, breaking the silence that had fallen between them.

"Three months ago."

"But you will go out again?"

"I don't think so," he said slowly. "It all depends on——"

The door into the corridor was slid open; the dining car attendant looked in.

"Take your seats for dinner, please."

He passed on.

"You will dine, won't you?" asked Meredith. "Nothing like a good meal, you know."

The color mounted to Mary's face. How could she tell him that dinner was not a possibility to her, simply because she had no spare money to waste? She had a little packet of sandwiches in her bag, and some biscuits, but her appetite sickened at the thought of them.

"I am not hungry," she said, evasively. "I couldn't eat any dinner."

Left Alone.

"Very well. Willful woman must always have her way, but don't say I didn't warn you. Will you be all right if I leave you? I feel the pangs of a furious hunger."

"Of course. I am quite comfortable."

Left alone, Mary sat up and gazed out into the darkness. Her face burned. How could she endure the hours of this journey with Meredith sitting there, talking, looking at her? She must get away from him. Her hard-won self-control might desert her, and then—— She rapidly collected her rug, papers and bag and slipped into the corridor, walking with difficulty toward the far end of the swinging train to another compartment.

Here she would be alone. Presently, to the hum of the express, Mary fell asleep, wrapped in her rug, and dreamed things that brought a smile to her lips and a color to her soft cheeks.

And in the dining car, at his solitary meal, Meredith wondered why fate had deliberately thrown him and Mary together, when that impassable barrier of wealth still stood between them. It had driven him away from her once before, and now—well, he must let things slide. Perhaps, that same interfering dame Fortune might find a way out.

The Irish air was soft and fresh, and the gray country looked inexpressibly lovely to Mary's tired eyes. The crossing had been just as odious as she expected, and she had hurried from the boat in the wintry darkness to the waiting room, dreading, yet hoping, to find Meredith at her side. She saw his tall figure once. He was looking about him, but he did not see her, and she took refuge in a carriage with three other women, and slept away some of her exhaustion on the way to Waterford. There she had to change, and on the platform the first person she saw was—Meredith. He came up to her at once.

"Why did you run away last night?" he said.

"I—I"—

"I don't want to worry you, but you must let me look after you. You look half dead. Have you had any breakfast?"

"Yes."

She had had tea and bread and butter in the train, and the cool morning air had whipped a faint color to her white cheeks.

Slowly they crept away into the thick mist, nothing to be seen but low fields, stone walls and driving mist on every side. Mary felt her spirits sinking lower and lower as she approached her destination.

"Are we there?" she said.

"No, we've stopped for something—signal against us I expect."

Meredith put down the window and looked out into the mist. He saw a row of low sheds, the outline of a tiny station, a branch line, and nothing beyond them but a couple of other compartments. The rest of the train had gone.

She Confesses.

There they were, left behind—in a siding.

"What has happened?" asked Mary.

Meredith turned and looked at her with a rueful sort of smile.

"Left behind!" cried Mary aghast. "What do you mean?"

"They've run us into a siding, and the train has gone on without us. The fact is, I was asleep. I only woke up to find ourselves dumped down here. They let us get into the coach they were leaving behind—idiots! But we'll get on somehow, Mary. After all, it only means a little delay."

He said her name involuntarily, and Mary's heart jumped. Then a feeling of dismay swept over her.

"But we may not arrive till night," she said. "I suppose the only thing we can do is to drive, if a vehicle is to be had. We must be twenty miles from our destination, at least."

"I suppose so, but what does it matter? They'll understand."

"It may not matter for you," said Mary, in a low, harsh voice. "They will excuse in a guest what they may not pardon in the governess."

Meredith stared at her as if she had suddenly gone mad.

"The what?" he said.

"The governess. That is what I am."

"You're mad."

"I'm not; it's a fact."

"You a governess? What does it mean? What are you masquerading for?"

"It's no masquerade. I'm a governess because—I can not dig, and to beg I am ashamed," said Mary, with a miserable little laugh. "That's all."

"But do you mean to say you've got to do it?" said Meredith, dazedly.

"Yes. Everything went in a big smash on the Stock Exchange more than a year ago. I have to do something, and the Wintons wanted a governess for their two little nephews who are living with them, that's all."

"All!" said Meredith, violently. "And I knew nothing of it. I never heard a word of this before. When we met last do you know what sent me away in such haste? Can you guess?"

"No."

"It was because I was afraid to stay. I loved you so much, and I could not speak. I was only a poor soldier of fortune—you were a wealthy heiress. I had already been called a fortune hunter by those who must have seen how I lingered at your side. I didn't think you cared, so I went away. Now, Mary darling, I'm free to speak. I can't give you the riches that are gone, but I can give you a good home and lots of love. Do you care a little? Try to, Mary, when I care so much. I believe Fate brought us together on purpose."

"And let us in a siding," said Mary, with a smile breaking over her face like sunshine through mist.

"It might have left us in a worse place," cried Meredith, his arm about her shoulders. "Mary, is it going to be 'Yes?'"

"Yes—yes," murmured Mary.

Do You Know---

Dr. Samuel Rideal, of London University, who read a paper on the advantages of gas over coal as the fuel at a teachers' conference at Sheffield, said that 2 per cent of coal used was converted into soot, and in London the annual sootfall was 76,000 tons. The annual soot and dust fall in Leeds and London averages between 300 and 650 tons per square mile; in Glasgow, 1,331 tons, and in Coatbridge, 1,930 tons.

Beauty Secrets of Beautiful Women

How Dot Wilson Found Milk an Aid to Natural Loveliness

By LILIAN LAUFERTY.

IF you want to have your skin white, your eyes bright, your digestion good and your weight always adjusted to a pleasing plumpness that does not increase to stoutness, try the milk diet. This is pretty pink and white, sparkling-eyed Dot Wilson's great beauty secret, and she longs for converts to her theory of the simple life."

I found Miss Wilson and her sisters in a cool, wind-swept room down at Brighton Beach, New York, and after I had adjusted myself to this triple personality as illustrated by the "three-twin" sisters, we settled down to a cozy little visit that gave me one or two brand-new ideas for the attainment of beauty. The first idea was something no one said—it was just the generous, kindly attitude of admiration and willingness to have their "baby sister" featured that Miss Doris Wilson and Miss Alma showed throughout our interview. Next fall B. F. Keith will give you all a chance to see the three clever girls who make up the Doris Wilson trio—but before that time pray let me present to you a bit of their philosophy of life—and beauty.

Only Milk.

"Milk, milk, nothing but milk—that is what my mother brought me up on. None of her children had any other article of diet until they were 12; and I have never found anything so nourishing, so easy to digest and so productive of good results. So milk is my diet, and though the girls vary from it, they often regret some indiscretion of diet to the tune of a pain of a skin rash or one of the ills that food is so generous about presenting people with," said Miss Dot.

"I live on milk—no water to drink, for milk takes its place. No indigestible food can tempt me, for milk keeps me so well, so buoyant and so free from nerves that I flourish thereon and never long for the flavor of any food but my tried and true friend. About twice a year I have a taste of some such foreign substance as ice cream. Oh, yes, I can eat food, and I do occasionally, but I don't like it.

"I drink eight quarts of milk a day—not iced milk to shock the sensitive stomach nerves, but normal tempered milk.

"I sip it slowly—'Just sneak it down,' said one specialist who cures all sorts of nervous and digestive diseases by a seven week' milk cure. Well, it takes me about fifteen minutes to drink one glass of milk, and I am enjoying it all the time. We're all only bigger babies—babies grown up—and if it is so good for the wee things to live on milk, why should it not be good for them to go on living on milk, the friendly food of their childhood? The girls drink five or six glasses of milk a day, and whenever they are tired or nervous, or feel on the verge of a little breakdown, back they go to the milk diet, and then they just get in tune with things again."

Miss Dot Wilson.

I looked at the three pairs of bright eyes—blue, blue-gray and hazel-gray—each pair with a spark of light at the back of their starry depths; I studied the creamy, peachblow complexions, and the gracefully rounded, tall figures, and I decided that as a near-milk cure made you pretty and the absolute milk-dietist was conceded to be the prettiest of the sisters, perhaps it would be a good idea to go right off and corner the milk market.

THEIR MARRIED LIFE

By MABEL HERBERT URNER.

PARIS at 7 o'clock of a summer evening! The gleaming lights, the gay gowns of the women, the trees, the outdoor cafes—Helen, clinging to Warren's arm, walked down the broad boulevard athrill with the glamour of it all.

It had been just four hours since they arrived from Cherbourg—tired, dusty, travel-stained. But now, rested and in cooler clothes, they started out to find, as Warren expressed it, "a place to feed."

Where should they go? Helen suggested a number of well-known places that she had read of in the guide book. But Warren was determined to have their first dinner at a restaurant he had been particularly fond of when he was in Paris eight years before.

Although he had forgotten the name, he had felt confident of his sense of location. They had taken a 'bus to Porte St. Martin and had walked several blocks in what he felt was the right direction.

"Must be around here somewhere," frowning down a street that was plainly unfamiliar. "I don't believe they've moved."

"Isn't that a restaurant over there—where the lights are?" asked Helen hopefully.

"By Jove! I believe that's the place," as they crossed the wide street. "I'd have sworn it was on the other side."

Entering, they were met by an officious head waiter, who bustled ahead, ushering them to a table in an inner room.

"Oh, we don't want to sit back here," objected Warren. "Give us a table out on the veranda."

"Sorry, monsieur, but they're all taken."

"Why, there's a half dozen vacant ones up at that end."

"They're all reserved, monsieur," repeated the head waiter stolidly.

Warren turned to Helen with a scowling "So they know that game over here, too. This fellow's looking for five francs. Well, what do you say? Want to sit back here—or look up some other place?"

"Oh, dear, let's go somewhere else," resenting the supercilious air of the head waiter, who stood impatiently tapping the dinner card with his pencil.

Outside Warren demanded curtly:

"Now, where to? It's getting late and I'm hungry. We don't want to wander around all night, you know."

"But, dear, we don't want to stay there. That man was almost insolent.'

He Blames Her.

"Well, you're pretty darn particular," as usual throwing the responsibility upon her. "We'd have been sure of good food there, anyway. But you're always kicking. Suppose you find a place now."

Helen realized that Warren was on the verge of one of his irritable moods, when he would blame her for whatever happened, however inconsistent or unjust. He had had nothing to eat since that early and unsatisfactory luncheon on the train. It was a critical moment, and she was desperately anxious to find some other good restaurant at once—before his growing hunger increased his irritability.

They walked on for several blocks, Helen gazing anxiously in every direction, while Warren maintained the scowling, sullen silence that always foreboded a storm.

"Oh, there, dear!" eagerly, as she caught sight of a balcony, high above the street, with white clothed tables and rose-shaded lights. "Doesn't that look like a good place?"

"You can't tell anything about these strange places in Paris," growled Warren. "May be rotten. But we've got to eat somewhere. Come on. And we'll stay here—understand? Whether we get a table you like or not. No more trotting around for me to-night."

Helen followed Warren up the broad, red-carpeted stairs, hoping desperately that at this place things would "go right."

The first glimpse was disappointing. The room was crowded. Would they have to go somewhere else?

"Sounds Good."

As they stood uncertainly at the doorway, a couple rose from a most desirable table on the veranda—one that Helen had seen from the street. If they could only get that!

The next moment the head waiter was bowing them toward it. Two other waiters rushed forward with fresh linen and silver, and a third placed a footstool for Helen's feet.

"Oh, dear, it's a wonderful place," sinking back with a sense of infinite relief that a critical situation had been safely passed.

"Well, we'll not get enthusiastic till we see what the food's like," grunted Warren, somewhat appeased by the attention they had received.

"I can't make anything out of this," scowling at the menu, which was illegibly written in French with pale purple ink.

"Will you have our 5-franc table d'hote dinner, monsieur?" asked a waiter at his elbow.

"Uumph, you speak English? Well, that simplifies things. What do we get with that dinner?"

"Hors d'oeuvres, potage, fish, entree, roast, salade, entrements and a bottle of red or white Bordeaux."

"That sounds pretty good," assented Warren. "All right; we'll try it."

To Helen the atmosphere of the place and the street scene below was one of enchantment. She was beginning to feel the charm of Paris.

With the hors d'oeuvres and first glass of wine, the scowling frown on Warren's brow had relaxed, and with the thick green Saint Germain soup he grew almost genial.

"Just taste that fish! It's great. What they call filet of sole at home is only flounder. We never see the real thing there. This is an all right place."

"Oh, I'm so glad we found this, dear. For I felt that you were getting out of humor, and would blame me for not staying at that other place," exclaimed Helen, who, womanlike, always wanted to go back over a situation, instead of being content to let well enough alone. "And I couldn't bear to have our first dinner in Paris an unhappy one."

"Who in thunder was going to make it unhappy, unless you were?" growled Warren, who hated post-mortems. "What the devil are you harping on it now for, anyway?"

"Oh, I only meant, dear—" began Helen, hastening to conciliate. But fortunately at this moment the waiter uncovered the fowl, roasted to a delicate brown, and Warren's attention was diverted from Helen's untactful remark.

"Dear, there's not so much difference in the gowns worn by the French women," commented Helen, now anxious to change the subject. There aren't any sensational dresses here. That woman over there in pink, is rather striking, but any of the others might be in New York."

"Well, this isn't the sort of place where you'd see much in the way of dress. Some night I'll take you to supper at Maxim's. The gowns there'll be striking enough."

"Oh, are we going to Maxim's?" delightedly. "I thought it was a dreadful place."

"Not so dreadful as they want you to think—that's their best asset. You'll find it pretty tame. More than half the crowd will be rubber necks like ourselves."

But Helen had read and heard much of Maxim's, and as she minced over the fruit salad she gazed down on the gay boulevard in eager anticipation of a supper there.

"Dear, what IS this?" as the waiter placed before them two small brown jars filled with a thick creamy substance. "Search me!" shrugged Waren, investigating it with a spoon.

"That's Creme de Zeigny, Monsieur. Will you have sugar with it?"

"I'll try it straight first."

"Oh, it's delicious, dear," exclaimed Helen enthusiastically. "It's sort of sour, salty and sweet! More like a delicate liquid cheese."

Very Smooth.

"By Jove, that is pretty smooth," admitted Warren. Isn't this the stuff the Thustons raved over when they got back last year? We'll have this often—that's sure."

When the waiter had cleared off the table, Warren lit his cigar and turned over the check placed unobtrusively before him.

"Ten francs—two dollars! Well that's what I call a good run for your money. Everything specially cooked, too—and that was a whole chicken. To get a dinner like that in New York, you'd have to order it a la carte, and with that wine it would cost you not a cent less than $10."

"Now aren't you glad we didn't stay at that other restaurant?" insisted Helen with a true feminine persistency. "The food COULDN'T have been any better! You see I didn't find such a bad place after all."

But Warren was no longer in an inflammable mood. The excellent dinner had had a most pacifying effect on his temper. So to this rather indiscreet remark, he only shrugged a good-natured: "Umph, that's right—rub it in!"

Advice to a Young Man

By DOROTHY DIX.

A YOUNG man, who is ambitious and who feels within himself the ability to rise in the world, is very much in love with a pretty young girl who has no aspirations beyond a new dress and going to Coney Island or a cheap theater.

The young man is making enough money for them to be married on and live in fair comfort in their present status in life, but he is not satisfied with this.

He is anxious to get an education and study a profession. To this the sweetheart objects. She isn't willing for the young man to make his way through college. She doesn't see any use in an education, any how. When the young man talks to her about books it bores her to death, and when he wants to take her to hear a good lecture or good music she offsets it with a proposal to take in a vaudeville show.

The young man wants to know whether he should give up his books or his girl, or if there is any way in which he could interest his fiancee in intellectual pursuits and kindle the fires of ambition in her soul.

To answer the last question first, I would say, no. The homely old proverb about the impossibility of making a silk purse out of a sow's ear is still gospel true. There is no way to make a clod aspire, and you can no more change the tastes of a woman who was born without a perception of the finer things of life than you can change the color of her eyes, or the height of her stature.

Born That Way.

The girl who does not perceive the advantage of an education, or the necessity for one, who yawns over even a novel and who doesn't see why anybody reads the daily paper, who is absolutely and totally unintellectual was simply born that way. There's some lack in her mental equipment, and nothing that her husband can do is going to supply it. She was just born that way, and that way she will stay to her dying day, and it isn't her fault.

Such a woman may be the best of housekeepers, the most devoted of wives, but she is no mental companion for an intelligent man. Many men marry this kind of a girl because she has a pretty face, and then torture her trying to make her clever—something she can never be. This is cruelly unjust. He who marries a girl who frankly admits that she doesn't like to read and has no ambition should never bother her with books, or reproach her with her lack of progressiveness.

As to which he should take when a man is called upon to choose between his career and his sweetheart, I should say take the career every time, because an ambitious man soon learns to hate any woman who is the handicap that prevents him winning in the race of life. When even those that we love become a burden upon us that keep us from success—good-bye love! This is unromantic, but true.

Many an ambitious man finds out after marriage that he has saddled himself unknowingly with a wife who can not and will not keep pace with him, and who holds him back from the achievements that he is capable of making. Such a man is the victim of a hard and bitter fate, but in honor there is nothing left for him but to bear with whatever fortitude he can the misfortune that he has brought upon himself.

A Chance.

But the man who finds out before marriage that the girl he thinks himself in love with is not his mental and spiritual mate, that she can not think his thoughts, that she is not interested in the pursuits that he is interested in; that she does not wish to reach the goal toward which his feet are set, has still a chance to save himself from a marriage that is bound to bring misery both to himself and the woman.

For what attracts him to her is only the ephemeral charms of her youth and good looks, and when they are gone, as they must be in a few years, nothing remains but the memory of the sacrifice he has made for her, and the irksomeness of a tie that binds him to a wife with whom he has not one thing in common.

In that day a man remembers what he might have been and is not. He sees other men, no better equipped than himself, climbing up to the top of the ladder while he sits at the bottom with his dull and commonplace wife. And in that day he sees with fatal clearness just how much of the earth earthy is the woman who is not animated by anything except a desire for the things that make for her physical comfort.

Matrimony can mean the closest companionship that two human beings ever attain. It can be literally two souls with but a single thought, and it can mean a lonesomeness that is as great as Robinson Crusoe ever suffered on his desert isle. And when it is that it is the abomination of desolation.

The Solitude.

Think of what the ambitious man suffers when he is married to a woman who never wants to advance one step, who never sees why he wants to make a change, and whom he has to fight at every step of his progress. Think of the solitude of soul of a man married to a woman with whom he can never discuss a book he has read, or a play he has seen, or an opera he has heard; who never even comprehends anything that he tries to tell her that is more psychic than the price of butchers' meat. Not always "the woman who never could know, and never could understand" is a vampire. Only too often she is just a dull and stupid wife, without brains or imagination or aspiration.

So I say to the man who is hesitating between his career and his pretty, ambitionless, unintellectual sweetheart to choose the career. He will soon outgrow her anyway, and it is far, far better for both that this inevitable separation should come before they are married than afterward.

Confessions of a Medium

No. 3.---When the Clock Stopped

By Chas. D. Isaacson.

Copyright 1913 by International News Service.

IN the midst of the seance the grave faced spirit medium paused. He slowly rose from his seat before his assembled auditors and impressively spoke:

"My good friends, we are now going to attempt the most difficult experiment of all—something never before accomplished in the records of the world. If we succeed in doing it, we shall prove beyond all possible doubt the fact that we CAN communicate with the dead."

He cleared his throat and waited as a sharp flash of lightning illumined the room and a murderous peal of thunder crashed on its heels.

It was a night late in August—a hot, black, scary night, when you look warily over your shoulder at the bent, slinking, soaking figures that pass you by; when the very air seems laden with hobgoblin phantoms, and the wind seems to echo the moaning and groaning of lost souls.

A Night of Wonders.

Within the darkened room, fifty frightened people held firmly to their chairs and listened to the deep, far-away tones of the speaker medium. This had been a night of wonders. Tables and chairs had floated about by unseen supernatural means. Wonderful messages had made fifty hearts flutter like leaves in a Kansas cyclone. To these persons, accustomed to unusual things brought about by their mystifying leader, the startling events of the meeting had overshadowed anything of the past. And now the thought of something still more dramatic brought them to breathless and awed attention.

"Dear spirit," breathed the medium, raising his eyes to the ceiling, "we crave your assistance and beg your pardon for tiring you so much this day. Accomplish this seeming impossibility which I am about to put to you, and prove your existence and your ability to communicate with us, to the most skeptical, unbelieving member of this circle.

"Over there is a clock"—and the speaker pointed a long, lean, bony finger to the opposite end of the room, where on the mantel could be faintly traced the outlines of a ponderous old-fashioned timepiece.

"Listen. Spirit, listen. Over there, you hear the ticking of that clock. Over there—you head it?"

Tick—tick—tick fell on the ears of the listeners, who held their breath for fear it would drown the sound which grew louder and louder with each successive second, until it seemed to beat on their very hearts.

A Request.

"Spirit, think carefully now please. Here is where the experiment begins. Can you—will you STOP THAT CLOCK?"

Deathly silence ensued. Just tick—tick—loud and clear and sharp as a bell.

No answer.

"Spirit, will you do it?"

Tick—tick—tick.

"Will you?"

"Why—why, y-yes, I'll try," came the answer in mysterious taps on the table.

Tick—tick—tick — tick — each second seemed an hour to the 50 auditors, who sat half turned toward the clock, eager-eared, faint-hearted.

Tick—tick——

Snap! In the very middle of a beat! IT STOPPED!

Oh, the eternity of silence that followed, broken soon by a storm of gasps and screams. There was a crash of thunder, and some one, no longer able to stand the oppression of the darkness, turned on the gas, flooding the room with light. Then they crowded about the clock—pale and wide-eyed. It was stopped, no question of that. The men, comparing it with their watches, found it recorded just one minute behind theirs.

"Wonderful!" "Weird!" "Proves spiritualism absolutely," "Could NEVER have been done by human or material means—it was surely the work of a spirit." These were the comments rapidly uttered, as they examined the clock to see if any wires or mechanical contrivances could have been connected with it.

The Answer.

This incident happened. To those who were there, it was the most wonderful phenomenon they had ever witnessed. At least that is how it happened to all but the medium. And the medium was myself. Would you like to know how it was done? I will tell you.

No spirit stopped the clock. No mechanical means stopped it. Even I did not stop it. IN THE FIRST PLACE, THE CLOCK WAS NOT GOING AT ALL! "How and why was ticking heard?"

Here is the whole story: Back of me, on a roll-top desk, I had previously placed a very tiny alarm clock, noted for its loud tick. Nobody thinks of a clock until you mention it. When I said, "You hear the ticking over there—OVER THERE," the audience imagined the sound emanated from the direction I pointed; and, by suggestion, on which is based hypnotism, by the way, they had placed it as coming from the silent clock on the mantel. Then, while they were listening for the unexpected, half turned to the opposite wall, I had, unobserved, slipped my finger to the pendulum, stopped the alarm and dropped the clock into a drawer!

"But then how was the other clock the exact time?"

Before the audience had arrived I had placed the hands ahead several hours and had brought my experiment to conform to the very minute I had arranged. This was simple—in a flash of lightning I had casually looked at my watch. The mystery of the night, the darkness, the wonders already witnessed, had all aided me to fool these intelligent people, among whom were a magazine writer, an artist, two theatrical folks, and several writers and lawyers.

Now consider this: That this experiment was far more dramatic and inexplicable than is generally seen at professional seances, where money is paid for admittance. Yet on incidents such as these, the credulous people of the masses are convinced of spiritism and defrauded by fakers, whose wonders I warrant could be unraveled as simply as the one I have just recorded. I did these things to study and expose. Professionals do them for money. Is it not highly probable that others who earn their living at this mockery are forced to work out similar "wonders?" I do not say spiritualism is wrong. I do not essay to pass judgment on this great question. It is against the fakers that I direct my campaign, beseeching every sensible man and woman to save their hard-earned money and evade them.

Going the Limit.

Jones—If Mr. Oldboy makes any such assertion, I will denounce him as a liar.

Six Miles Up!

And Safety Instead of Death Because of a New and Wonderful Device for Aviators

The picture, which was taken at an altitude of more than six miles, shows Messrs. Maurice Bienaime and Jacques Schneider in the car of the balloon "Icare" wearing the patent breathing apparatus. In 1878 the balloon "Zenith" attained a height of about four miles, but two of its three passengers were suffocated. With this apparatus the fatality could not have occurred.

By GARRETT P. SERVISS.

THE greatest peril for those who ascend to great altitudes is not that of falling, but that of being suffocated, like fish taken out of water!

It was the climbers of high mountains who first discovered the fact that it is often difficult for men to breathe at a height of from two and a half to three miles above sea level. The late Edward Whymper, the conqueror of the terrible Matterhorn, made many experiments on this, and he concluded, after climbing Chimborazo and other huge peaks in the Andes, that the cause of "mountain sickness," as the trouble was called, was due both to the lessened value of air that is inspired at such altitudes and to the expansion of the gases contained within the body, producing a pressure upon the internal organs.

But more recent study has shown that the difficulty arises mainly from the comparative lack of oxygen in the upper air, and that this may be overcome by means of apparatus supplying extra oxygen to the lungs.

The two principal constituents of the atmosphere are oxygen and nitrogen. Nitrogen is an inert gas which stifles animal respiration. Oxygen, on the other hand, is a very active gas, which, when breathed, supports animal life. When mixed, as near the earth's surface, in the proportion of about four volumes of nitrogen to one of oxygen, the air is respirable, and the inertness of the nitrogen does no harm. But if the proportion of oxygen is reduced the air becomes stifling.

Now, oxygen is heavier than nitrogen in ratio of about eight to seven, and in obedience to the law that heavier substances sink lower than lighter ones, the oxygen thins out as the height above the ground increases, until its proportion to the nitrogen becomes considerably reduced. Above three or four miles the amount of oxygen is so much diminished that breathing becomes very difficult, and at still higher altitudes respiration may cease entirely.

A Tragedy.

A very tragic instance of the effect thus produced is furnished by the story of the famous balloon ascent made in April, 1878, by Gaston Tissandier, Croce Spinelli and Signor Sivel. They ascended from La Villette in France, in the balloon "Zenith," to a height of 28,200 feet, or a little more than five and one-third miles. The thinness of the air, and as we now know, the relative lack of oxygen, killed Spinelli and Sivel, and nearly cost the life of Tissandier.

To show what modern science and invention have done to avert this peril of the high atmosphere, let us turn to the story of a still higher ascent, made on May 28, 1913, by the balloon "Icare," carrying Albert Senouque, Jacques Schneider and M. Bienaime. They started from Lamotte-Breuil in France, and attained an elevation of nearly 33,000 feet, or six and a quarter miles, and yet they did not suffer at all, and came down in perfect condition, and exulting in their great feat!

Their success and immunity from suffocation were due to the fact that they took with them the apparatus shown in the accompanying photograph.

A Wonderful Picture.

This consists of an air-tight vessel filled with compressed oxygen. A mask which can be fitted closely over the nose and mouth is connected by a tube with the reservoir of oxygen. There is a pressure gauge which enables the aeronaut to measure the quantity of oxygen remaining in the reservoir, and there is also a device by which to regulate the amount flowing through the tubes. Thus they could take just as much oxygen as they needed and no more. The rate of supply varied from two quarts per minute to ten. The reservoir contained about 1,600 quarts.

They began to breathe the oxygen when at a height of about 11,000 feet.

The method of using the apparatus is shown in the photograph, which was taken by Senouque, showing Bienaime and Schneider, with their breathing masks on, at the very time when they were at the top of their flight, more than six miles above the earth!

Similar apparatus has recently been carried by mountain climbers, and by the pilots of aeroplanes ascending to great altitudes. With the rapid progress of aerial navigation it will become indispensable in the future.

If fish had human brains they might safely make a voyage of discovery in the air!

MELANCHOLY WOMEN

Should Profit by Mrs. Hurley's Experience—Her Own Story Here Told.

Eldon, Mo.—"I was troubled with displacement, organic inflammation and female weakness. For two years I could not stand on my feet long at a time and I could not walk two blocks without enduring cutting and drawing pains down my right side which increased once a month. I have been at that time purple in the face and would walk the floor. I could not lie down or sit still sometimes for a day and a night at a time. I was nervous, had very little appetite, no ambition, melancholy, and often felt as though I had not a friend in the world.

"After I had tried most every female remedy first, without success, my mother-in-law advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I did so and gained in strength every day. I have now no trouble in any way and highly praise your medicine. It advertises itself."—Mrs. S. T. HURLEY, Eldon, Missouri.

Remember, the remedy which did this was Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. For sale everywhere.

It has helped thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing down feeling, indigestion, and nervous prostration, after all other means have failed. Why don't you try it?

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

IN ALL PROBABILITY, YES.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

A certain girl friend of mine recently wrote me a letter asking a favor of me. I could easily oblige her as the favor is slight. I have been keeping company with a friend of hers lately and am decidedly in love with her. She (the one who wrote the letter) knows this, but still bestows her attentions on me. I myself am not paying her much attention and do not like her. Do you think I would arouse the jealousy of my lover if I showed the other friend this favor just to be polite? M. B.

You letter is rather ambiguous, as you do not state the nature of the favor.

If of such a nature it would cause trouble between you and your sweetheart, you must refuse. Your first thought should be of her.

And please see to it that the other girl's attentions are bestowed elsewhere. I am afraid she will make trouble.

THERE MAY BE SOME EXCUSE.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 18, am considered very handsome, and am in love with a boy three years my senior. He tells me he loves me, but when we have an engagement he always disappoints me. Do you think he is sincere? MARJORIE.

If by "always" you mean once or twice, he may have been unavoidably detained. But if he makes a practice of disappointing you, you must make no more engagements with him, for he cares nothing for you.

HIS RUDENESS IS INEXCUSABLE.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I have been married four years and am only 22 years old. My husband is 29. When out in company with my husband, is it not his place to notice me or talk to me?

When out dining at a friend's, is it right for him to pay attention to young ladies at the table by passing dishes to them and not noticing me? R. B.

He does everything he should not, and his sins of omission are as great.

His behavior is unpardonable, but I know of no redress for you. I hope all girls of 18 who think they are old enough to select a husband will take warning from you.

OBEY YOUR PARENTS.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I have been attending college, and last fall met a young man who is also a student. For the past four months he has been very attentive to me. I love him very much. My parents, who know the young man, say he is wild and associates with bad company. They want me to give him up. What shall I do? I love my family, but I also love the young man very, very much. M. F. F.

I would urge you to obey your parents, were the young man desirable, for parents always know best. How much more I urge it since he is wild and dissolute! Give him up! Let there be no compromise. I add my pleadings to those of your parents.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"Brave!" he exclaimed in low, contemptuous tones. "It takes no bravery to fight a coward—and that's what this ghost is! It's a coward, like every other spook. Did you ever hear of any spirit that walked in the daytime? Never! They sneak and dodge and hide in crumbling and deserted places. I tell you that men are not half so afraid of spirits as spirits are of men! Face the supernatural, and it is beaten before the fight begins. Spooks, horse thieves and peevish wildcats can all be tamed by the same little charm."

He stoped in a dead silence. The others were staring at him intently, but with highly different expressions.

"Charm?" repeated the Duke, vaguely.

"What is it?" asked the Princess, breathlessly.

Unostentatiously, Jarvis produced his pistol, handling it as one might handle a familiar pencil. To one reared in a community where firearms are never seen excepting in the windows of the hardware store the sight of a pistol occasions either panic or the utmost indifference, depending entirely on the degree of ignorance or natural timidity. But in localities where the revolver is as common and serves the same purpose as the rapier of medieval Europe it is a known and fixed quantity. To one native to those localities the interest in the appearance of the pistol is directed entirely toward the man who displays it—what manner of man he is and what is his manner of handling the weapon.

The Duke had never seen a pistol excepting once or twice on the field of honor and strapped to the thigh of a cavalry man. He was an utter stranger to the type of man to whom a 44-caliber revolver is a shield sword. Consequently, though any ten-year-old boy from the lower Ohio Valley could have told him at one glance that Warren Jarvis carried a revolver. Because it was a protection and not a menace, as it is to be unused, the appearance of the weapon seemed to amuse him, rather than otherwise.

A Joke.

"I had been hoping, Mr. Warren," he said, with light scorn, "that you had some subtle method of handling this problem. But no! You propose to meet the forces of the supernatural with fire-arms! I may tell you that this specter has been fired at before without the slightest effect."

Jarvis smiled and nodded as he returned the pistol to his pocket.

"Quite likely," Your Excellency. I have seen rifle fire that had not the slightest effect on a wildcat—for the very good reason that the shooting was wilder than the cat."

The Duke made a gesture as if waiving all respnosibility.

"I am sorry for you, Mr. Warren. You will find the ghost more real than the treasure."

"But the treasure is real, Carlos!" exclaimed the Princess, with spirit. "Would I have crossed the ocean for this locket unless I knew? Why, with this paer a total stranger, anybody who had never seen the castle, could walk right up to the place and point out the very stone that hides it!"

For the barest fraction of a second the glances of the two men crossed like foils.

"Pretty dangerous sort of paper to have around," observed Jarvis, slowly. "Look out that somebody doesn't get there ahead of you."

"Yes, it is a dangerous paper," chimed in the Duke in the same time, "if it leads any one into the castle."

The young man laughed, sliently and naturally.

"Well, Your Excellency, I'd go a long way for the fun of unraveling a good mystery with a little spice of danger thrown in."

Dangerous Ground.

The Duke nodded as if he understood and sympathized with the feeling. Then, as if something had just occurred to him, he remarked:

"You needn't have gone so far, Mr. Warren. You are leaving a very unusual case behind you in New York. I suppose you read the papers on your way to the boat?"

The young man's lips twitched and he glanced at the trunk.

"Why, no. I was so wrapped up in my baggage I really didn't have a chance."

He glanced slyly at the Princess, who immediately discovered something of interest out of a porthole.

"This will interest you, too, cousin," remarked the Duke, picking up a newspaper he had dropped when he first presented himself to his kinswoman. "You were at the Vanderlip last night, I believe." He opened the paper, found the item he had in mind and read aloud:

"'Pistol duel in Vanderlip Hotel—Guests awake in panic to find prominent Kentuckian dangerously wounded by unknown assailant—Mysterious escape.—Colonel James Markham, a promineng and wealthy Kentuckian, nearly met his death at 5 o'clock this morning in a pistol duel in his room at the Vanderlip Hotel.' 'At a late hour the police had no clew to the identity of his assailant except the remarkable fact that he is still hiding somewhere in the hotel.'"

"He's probably a long way from the hotel by now," interrupted Jarvis with a smile.

"They say he couldn't have gotten out without being seen."

Jarvis shrugged his shoulders. "That's the theory of the police or the reporters."

"What do you think?" demanded the Duke.

"Oh, he might have escaped in a thousand ways. But that's hardly in my line. That work belongs to what we call the 'gum-shoes.'"

"'Gum-shoes!'" echoed the Duke, with amazement.

"Yes, ordinary detectives," Jarvis explained. "But," he added, turning to the Princess, "we are keeping you from getting settled, I'm afraid. So, if you will excuse me, I will see you both at dinner, perhaps."

"Yes, do," invited the Princess, graciously. "And, Carlos, do arrange to sit with us. We will have quite a party."

The Police.

Jarvis bowed to the Duke. "I am pleased to have made your acquaintance, Your Excellency."

"Thank you, Mr. Warren. I find you most interesting. I shall be glad to hear more of—of your remarkable profession."

There was just the faintest echo of a sneer in this last, but the young man bowe as if complimented, and had just turned to the door, when there was a sharp knock. He drew back and the Princess quickly opened it.

With no greeting, bow or apology, two men thrust themselves into the stateroom. Jarvis recognized them at once and set his shoulders for the final combat.

By this you are not to suppose that he was personally acquainted with the men themselves—his familiarity was with the type. In all the world-wide phantasmagoria of races and classes there is none that can be so readily recognized and classified as the New York detective. With the present craze for uniformed bellboys, pages, milliners' attendants, door tenders, errand boys and governors it is quite possible to confuse the uniformed policeman with some of these. But when he is sent out in plain clothes there is no mistaking him. When you have seen one of them you can recognize any one of them to the extreme range of your vision. There is a combination of a certain physical solidity manifest in their carriage and mental stolidity evidenced in their faces that can be found nowhere else.

This pair were typical—thick-chested, thick-handed, thick-headed, with round moon-like faces.

On the Rack.

One stepped just inside the door and a little to one side of it as if on guard. The other advanced a step farther. He had evidently been decided on as spokesman. He glanced at the two men and then addressed the Princess, consulting a tiny note-book as he spoke.

"Is this Miss M. T. Ar-r-agan?" he inquired in a rich, "far-down" brogue, overlaid with the indescribable Manhattanese accent.

"Yes," replied the Princess, uncertainly, and evidently puzzled by the sudden and unexplained intrusion. Jarvis remained in the background and thrust his wounded hand into his overcoat pocket. The Duke's little mustache began to bristle and he stepped forward.

"You were at the Vanderlip Hotel last night?" pursued Detective Driscoll, ignoring the Duke.

"Ye-es."

"The lock on your door was broken?"

"Yes."

"I am from headquarters, ma'am," explained the detective, having gotten these "damaging admissions." "And I have orders to clear up one or two little matters connected with that affair at the hotel last night."

The exalted cousin could no longer restrain himself.

"Orders, orders!" he burst out. "To break in here! What headquarters?"

Detective Driscoll stared at him in open-eyed insolence. Jarvis smiled discreetly behind his hand.

"Police Headquarters!" bellowed the detective so loudly that every one started. His colleague at the door smiled wearily.

"Do you know whom you are addressing?" spluttered the grandee angrily.

Detective Driscoll rolled toward him, pushed out about five cubic inches of chin and snarled:

"That'll be about all from you!" resentative Kimbrough, of Harris Counsa snap. Driscoll returned to the Duke quietly, "let me attend to this matter. Won't you come in, gentlemen?"

"Thanks," said Detective Driscoll, easily, nodding to his partner to close the door and giving the Duke a final glare as if daring him to say another word.

"Yes," Jarvis' pleasant voice added its soothing influence, "we were just talking about the mystery."

The Duke, feeling that he would only risk a loss of dignity by quarreling with a foreign police officer, took the cue and held out the olive branch with a patronizing air.

"You are, I take it," he remarked to Driscoll as the sleuth was peering into his little book, "one of the—er 'gum shoes.'"

Jarvis snickered, the book shut with a snap. Driscoll returned to the duke and thrust a menacing face into his.

"Gum shoes!" he snarled. "Say, are you tryin' to be funny?"

The Duke, startled, drew back a step.

"Well, sir," he replied half apologetically," you are speaking rather loudly, and, if I may say so, with undue asperity. I presume I have offended you."

"'You presume!'" answered Driscoll. "That's a hot one! Say—who are you, any way?"

The exalted cousin drew himself up and gave one end of his mustache an upward twist.

"I am Hernando, Duke d'Alva," he replied pompously. "I have other titles, but they would hardly interest you."

The detective looked him over from head to foot and licked his lips hungrily.

"Dook de Alvers—and then some, eh? Ain't that nice! Well, if you was the Archbishop of Canterbury I'd run yer in and take yer ashore if yer gimme any more sass!" Fascinated by a savage glare the Duke declined to give him any more "sass," and the detective turned to the Princess, but still eyed the exalted cousin, as if longing for an excuse to "run him in."

Spoiled by Success

PRECISELY as the clocks in the vicinity of Dowman Square announced the hour of midnight, John Maine's pen ceased suddenly in its rapid flight across the paper before him. For a time he sat motionless, his forehead wrinkled in perplexity. Twice he attempted to resume his work, but each time stopped short in the effort.

For five long hours he had worked with feverish mental energy and the first time his pen refused to become the vehicle of his thoughts the physical strength of the man gave out, then, as a gift from the gods, came the blessing of sleep to the jaded worker.

Dimly, vaguely, John Maine became conscious of the fact that his arms were bound and useless at his side. His legs were cramped in an unnatural position; he endeavored to move his head, and discovered, with a painful shock, that his neck was securely held by a tight collar attached to the back of his chair. With startled eyes he glanced round swiftly in the little circle his bonds allowed and saw nothing. Then, as the perspiration oprued from him in his fear, he knew that from somewhere in the room a voice was speaking, slowly, monotonously, but its every word articulated with striking distinctness.

"Don't waste your energy," came in a sibilant whisper. "You have nothing to fear but the truth. Compose yourself.

"I am here to talk," began the voice, "and you to listen."

"So it seems," said Maine briefly. "Tell me," he urged quietly, "who are you?"

"Ten years ago, John Maine," the unknown said, completely ignoring the other's question, "you were a poor man struggling to achieve distinction. Today you are an acknowledged power in the literary world; but has your path upward been a clean, praiseworthy path?"

Congratulations.

The man in the chair stirred uneasily; his eyes sought the one remaining flicker in the fire.

"I suppose," he mused, addressing the tiny, cheerless flame as one in a reverie, "I suppose you're a kind of spectre of the past, eh? You've a remarkably fine idea of stage management," he added, with assumed lightness. "As one artist to another, I congratulate you on your sense of the dramatic."

"You fool! You unspeakable fool!" hissed the voice venomously in his ear. "As you can not tell yourself, suppose I show you what manner of man you are. Take your mind back ten years and tell me what happened then. You can't?"

"I was married ten years ago," Maine replied, hastily.

"So you were married ten years ago, were you?"

"As an unknown man," the voice continued evenly, "without a penny to bless yourself, you married the sweetest little girl in Christendom. She left her parents, she abandoned all to make a mesalliance with you; she shared your garret, she helped you with your work and she bore her altered condition in life with a fortitude which only threw your quibbling nature into more heinous relief. Slowly, gradually, as you mounted the ladder to success, all the magnificent resolutions of your early married life faded into insignificance. You lived only for your work. You became a supreme artist. And you, for whom she had forsaken everything, forgot the very existence of the woman whose heart was still yours.

A Son.

"Five years ago," continued the voice, "a son was born to you, and for a time you forgot you were a man of letters. But you soon slipped away when your clubs called you, when the public fawned on you; and your wife, broken-hearted and neglected, fled from your home. Did you realize then"—the words came in a thundering torrent now—"the revolting act of savagery which cast your wife adrift without the child she loved so dearly?"

"Good heavens!" exclaimed Maine fearfully. "Are you—"

"Listen!" came the imperious command. "She wanted your love, and you had buried it in your success. But, strangely as it sounds, you still loved the child that is sleeping in this house. Do you think that the boy has not missed his mother more than you have missed your wife? John Maine, in the grate before you are ashes, cold and gray. They are your portion in life, for that boy of yours, his heart yearning for the tender love you can not give, is even now slipping into the void——"

"Enough!" screamed the wretched man. "You lie—you know you lie!" He moistened his lips with his tongue. "Who are you?" he asked, with sudden humility.

"I am your better self," came sadly, morosely from a long way off, and John Maine sat up on the words to find himself blinking terrified in the small arc light from a policeman's lantern.

"Beg pardon, sir," whispered the policeman, quickly covering the light; "but I guessed you would be in here at work as usual, and, and——"

His Wife.

"I've been asleep, constable," Maine interposed slowly, and the words conveyed a subtle relief to his aching heart at once. "But how on earth did you get in?" he asked, suddenly realizing that the presence of a policeman in his house in the early hours of the morning was something to be explained.

"Softly, sir," counseled the other. "I saw a woman creep through a window at the back, and followed her. I've been on this beat for a good many years, sir, and I fancied I knew who she was. I thought perhaps you might like"——

Maine was standing up now, alert and brisk.

"Is she still in the house?" he asked. The constable nodded.

"She crept upstairs, sir," he said simply.

But John Maine waited for no more. With his heart pounding at his ribs, he sprang out of the room and leaped swiftly up the stairs.

The policeman followed him slowly...

Maine had reached the landing which led to the boy's room, when he heard a door in front of him open. He switched on the electric light, and there, panting fearfully in the sudden blaze, leaning against the wall, was the thin and emacited figure of a woman.

Her clothes were in rags and atters; in her arms she clutched a sleeping child to her breast.

They stood thus, sliently regarding each other, until the sound of a discreet cough warned Maine of the presence of the constable. With hands that shook perceptibly, and eyes in which there lurked a strange moistness, John Maine turned swiftly on the landing.

"You're a good fellow," he said quietly. "It is as you surmised. My wife"—he waved his hand courteously to the wretched woman in front of him—"has returned home unexpectedly. You can let yourself out."

They waited until the man had passed through the house and they could hear his retreating footsteps die away in the distance. Then:

"Maisie," said Maine, gently, "you have come home to me?"

The woman tottered where she stood, one arm went out before her, sweetly, pathetically, and John Maine sprang to her side in an instant.

"Maisie, my love!" he cried, the tears coursing down his cheeks with the weakness of a strong man who is suddenly robbed of his calm, "thank God, I know my better self!"

Jealousy.

The teacher was addressing his pupils on the subject of laziness and idleness.

He drew a terrible picture of the habitual loafer—the man who dislikes work and who begs for all he gets.

"Now, John," said the teacher to a little boy who had been very inattentive during the lesson.

John was instantly on the alert.

"Tell me," continued the teacher, "who is the miserable individual who gets clothes, food and lodging and yet does nothing in return?"

John's face brightened.

"Please, sir," said he, "the baby."

AN EPIDEMIC OF HOFMANITIS HAS HIT NASHVILLE

NASHVILLE, TENN., July 12.—An epidemic of Hofmanitis has broken out among the baseball bugs in Voltown, and the infection has spread like wildfire, even unto the mightiest hammer-throwers, who have been blistering the poor, old Vanishing Vols for their rank showing in the gonfalon hunt.

The town is simply delirious in its joy, that the friendship of the old swimming days in Akron between Bill Schwartz and the former Pirate was strong enough to induce Artie to rush to his old pal's assistance, while the appeal for help was loudest.

There is a striking parallel to be found in Circus Solly's case with that of the boy manager, for it was Bill Bernhardt's distress signal in 1909, when first base was in wretched hands, that persuaded Schwartz to give up a swell job with the Diamond Rubber people and hike to Nashville to help out his old friend he had known back with the Cleveland Naps, when Bernhard was one of the king-pin slabbers of the big show. It's a hoary narrative, but it only goes to prove the infernal way history has of "working in double."

Doesn't Appear To Be "In".

Maybe something better could have happened to the Vols than the acquisition of Hofman, but nobody can make the fans in this town believe that, and they are not forgetting that it was for the sake of "Auld Lang Syne" that Artie came, and Schwartz could not have built a greater monument in the fans' hearts in any other fashion than by landing this "ex-major leaguer who is going back."

If Artie is on his way, nobody can see the end of the passage with a pair of field glasses, and there is quite a swarm of youngsters coming who will have to travel at a mighty hefty clip before they will meet Hofman going out.

Schwartz benched himself when Artie lighted in camp, and it was the ex-Cub's tip to the boy leader that he warm the bench a while until he could get together the nerves that were shattered by the sickening plunge which the Vols have taken cellarways.

He Was Chance's Understudy.

The first station was no stranger to Artie, for when he was at the top of his stride he was Frank Chance's understudy with the Cubs, and although the big fellow had not seen a baseball for two weeks, jumped right into the game and took care of everything like a veteran.

Hofman brought to the Vols the stuff they have been so sadly in need of—ginger—and he wasn't stingy about handing it around. The Schwartzmen have been playing in a totally demoralized fashion. They have gone out with an idea that no matter who was in the box, they were doomed to lose, and with their leader unable either to hit or field, not a man on the club has been able to play anything like his best.

BALDWIN MATCHED TO BATTLE LEACH CROSS

LOS ANGELES, July 12.—Matty Baldwin and Leach Cross have been matched for a 20-round bout at Vernon Arena on July 29 by Promoter McCarey. Arrangements for the the match were made by wire and closed in record time. Sam Wallach, the dentist's manager, wired to McCarey from San Francisco accepting terms for the fight, and will return here with Cross on Sunday and take possession of Jack Doyle's camp at Vernon on Tuesday.

Kid Williams and Charley Ledoux, the bantams scheduled for twenty rounds at Vernon on Tuesday night, made a short day of it in the training camps to-day, but to-morrow's workout will be a strenuous one and both boys will go the limit for the benefit of the usual Sunday crowd. The little fellows are in fine shape.

CROSS AND SHERIDAN MAY CLASH AT KANSAS CITY

CHICAGO, July 12.—Leach Cross, the New York dentist-fighter, who has gained the position of contender for the lightweight championship through his knockouts of Joe Mandot and Bud Anderson will have for his next opponent a Chicago fighter, if arrangements under way do not go awry.

Cross practically has agreed to terms for a ten-round bout with Mickey Sheridan to be staked at Kansas City next month. Fred Gilmore, manager of Sheridan, yesterday received a telegram from Cross' manager, who is at Los Angeles, stating that everything was o. k. for the match if held the early part of next month.

The Kansas City promoters are anxious to hold the fight at the American Association baseball park either on August 2 or August 9, but it is understood there is some hitch over the plan.

CHAPPELLE PICKED TO WIN BIG EVENT AT NEW YORK

NEWYORK ,July 12.—Arthur Chappelle, the motorcycle speed demon, was to-day picked to win the sweepstakes handicap at the Brighton Beach motordrome to-night. In a sensational practice drive of nine miles yesterday Chappelle covered the distance in 5 minutes 59 1-5 seconds. This beats the record of 6:01 2-5 set by Eddie Hasha last year. Chappelle will give the field a handicap of two and one-quarter laps.

How Chance Tamed Gotham Fans

Magnetism or Hypnotism Aids

By Bill Bailey.

CHICAGO, July 12.—If any of these modern colleges happens to be seeking a man to teach that valuable art of personal magnetism we know the man they are seeking.

Who? Why, Frank Chance.

A ball field a strange place to seek a man to teach that valuable art? Maybe. Again, why not?

Oh, yes, we may be mistaken. It may be downright hypnotism that this fellow possesses.

Naturally those few words were but the introduction.

* * *

HERE is the story:

Why are those New York fans so tolerant with Chance? Remember what happened to Wolverton? Remember what they said about Chase when he was bossing the team? Remember what happened to Clark Griffith when he made several ineffectual attempts to capture a pennant? There may have been mean words in the dictionary that were not heaped, hurled and tossed at the heads of these men. I say there may have been. But I don't believe there were.

And Chance!

Say, he has a ball club that hasn't won anywhere near one-third of its games. Its percentage is less than .300. Not a peep, not a chirp has come out of the fans at New York.

"Think what a team he had when he came here," they tell you. "You wait."

* * *

FRANK CHANCE and his men are here. Still it is a different Frank Chance who is leading the Highlanders. The fellow the West Siders knew so well was a worrying Frank Chance. If the West Siders had lost as many ball games in a season as those Highlanders already have put on the losing side of the ledger it's terrible to think what would have become of Chance.

Then he worried. If his team developed a losing streak, and two losses in succession was a losing streak in those days, he didn't sleep.

And now?

He has developed into a philosopher. "I can't worry like I used to," he said. "I'm fighting just as hard to win as I ever did. But no more of the sleepless nights for me. I couldn't and stick in the game."

* * *

IT may be that the New York fans realize that Chance had nothing but numbers to work with that has made them so tolerant. But the fact remains that for about the first time in the history of New York they are not howling because they are down in the race. For in New York, you know, they can't understand why anybody should have anything that can lick anything they possess.

* * *

FRANK CHANCE certainly has no warm spot in his heart for the fellows who touted him on Bill Borton. And he certainly has a lot of people in this city who should ask him for forgiveness.

"Can Borton hit?" the P. L. asked of several of his baseball friends about here when he was in Chicago on the last trip.

"Can he hit?" was the comeback. "Say, he simply can murder the ball. He just won five games for the White Sox in Detroit. He just about won that city series last fall, as you well know. Say, if there is one thing he can do, it is to hit. He may be a bit shy on the pep and the ginger. Maybe he can't get around those bases as fast as Rollie Zeider. But hit? Say, if there were nine Bortons on an opposing team half the pitchers would go to digging sewers."

And hitting was the one thing that Borton didn't do.

Oh, yes, there are a lot of alleged baseball men in Chicago who will have a tough time explaining to this same Chance.

* * *

AT that Chance doesn't figure that the White Sox can afford to lie back and give him the merry ha-ha because Borton didn't develop into a hero in New York. For the P. L. is certain that he hooked one man from the South Side aggregation who will develop into a hummer. Gossett, the catcher, is the lad.

"There is a lad who will develop into a star," said the P. L. "I look to see him ranked as one of the greatest catchers in the league in a little while. And he cost only the waiver price."

Chance naturally isn't admitting that he received the worst of the Chase-Zeider-Borton deal. But if he did he would still figure his trading percentage was .500. Because he thinks he picked up a mighty valuable youngster in this same Gossett.

EMPIRE LEAGUE NOTES

Something that rarely happens in a ball game happened in Waycross this week in one of the Waycross-Cordele games. All assists credited to Cordele went to two players, the pitcher and catcher. Seven were made, and the catcher took four of them.

* * *

Seigfried, of Brunswick, is one of the best all-round players in the league. He is just now playing in the outfield, but is a dandy first baseman and plays short like a veteran. His batting is splendid.

* * *

"Babe" Wilder continues his record of winning almost every game he pitches. It is reported that he will go to the Savannah team at the close of this season, but Jacksonville has been after him and may land him. Wilder is the best pitcher Cordele has and is going good now.

* * *

Valdosta turned around, after an apparent slump, and walloped the Shrimp Chasers to perfection. Jordan will not tolerate indifferent playing, even if his team has won the first season rag.

* * *

Shortstop Murphy, a league leader at bat and a sensational fielder, one of the best Thomasville has, is out of the game with a sprained ankle.

* * *

Clancy, of West Virginia, who came South to play with Brunswick, is getting a try-out in Waycross. He fields fairly well, but is a little weak at bat.

* * *

Of all ball players, one always to be depended upon to act square and be as much a gentleman on the diamond as off, is Reagan, the clever manager for Cordele.

Derrick, one of the new umpires, has shown in just a few games that beefing won't go in games at which he officiates. He chased Manager Moran, of the Brunswick team, from the Valdosta grounds for beefing, and before that episode slapped a fine on Manager Jordan, of the Valdosta team.

* * *

Wild Bill Clark, the Waycross manager, has a runabout that he chases around in when not playing baseball. His friends claim that it is merely a question of time before Bill has his auto running bases.

That the schedule for the next Empire season will be arranged entirely different from the one used this year is certain. Hardly any team in the league is satisfied the way they are having to play, and the directors, at the end of the season, are going to see to it that a better schedule is prepared for 1914.

* * *

So far, the Empire has escaped any serious injuries to ball players. All teams have had players out for a few days because of minor hurts, but nothing serious to date.

* * *

Cordele's hard-hitting left fielder, Wassen, continues to swat the ball. He has had but a few off days and seems to be able to hit the league's best.

* * *

Americus seems to be getting a little of the hard luck that has been haunting most of the teams since the first of the month. Its team is playing well nearly every day, but fails to win the majority of games. But Americus has got to be considered by whatever team wins the pennant—that is certain.

BOXING

News of the Ring Game

Gunboat Smith, claimant of the world's heavyweight title, has challenged Georges Carpenter, the tough French champion of Europe, to a 20-round contest for $5,000 a side in England, France or Belgium. If Carpentier agrees, the match probably will be arranged to take place during the fall.

* * *

When it is taken into consideration that Frank Klaus, middleweight, recently stopped Carpentier, the New York heavyweight should find little trouble in putting the foreigner away in quick order. Carpentier would have everything to gain and nothing to lose in such a match.

* * *

Jess Willard is another scrapper who has his eyes peeled on a Smith match. Tom Jones' protege is taking on all the big hopes in 4-round bouts on the coast and is showing improved form. If Smith refuses to meet Willard, Jones says he will try to sign his boxer for a Pelky set-to.

* * *

Knockout Brown, the Chicago middleweight, will make his next fight against Frank Klaus, at Butte, Mont. Tommy Walsh, who is now handling Brown's affairs, wired the Butte promoters his acceptance for the mill yesterday. The pair will probably meet on Labor Day.

* * *

Kid Duke, local bantamweight, wishes to announce that he is ready to take on any of the local boys seeking fame in the padded arena. Duke aims his challenge at Young, Fries and Britt. The kid says he will accommodate either of the boys with a neat side bet.

* * *

Kid Young, the local newsboy boxer, says he is getting tired of reading challenges from various boys in the city. "Let them post their money and I will sign to meet any of them," wails the little featherweight. Several boys have been sending in their defis daily, but when the Kid asks them to put up, they usually beat it to the tall timbers.

* * *

Johnny Coulon, bantamweight champion, left a Chicago hospital the other day weighing 115 pounds, which is 10 pounds more than he weighed a week ago when he entered the institution to be treated for stomach trouble. Despite his rapid improvement in health, it is doubtful whether he will be able to box for some time.

* * *

"Wildcat" Ferns and Young Denny have been re-matched to box at New Orleans. The pair met in the Pelican City on Labor Day and Ferns was awarded the verdict after ten rounds of fierce fighting. The Denny admirers, however, were not satisfied with the decision, and the promoters decided to send them over the 20-round route on August 13.

* * *

Tom McCarey is still working on a Ritchie-Cross match for Labor Day. Cross has already consented to the bout, but the champion is waiting to hear from several other promoters, who are after his services. New Orleans wants Willie to box Britton, while Vancouver is after a Ritchie-Welsh mill.

* * *

Coast fans have made Kid Williams a 2 to 1 favorite over Charley Ledoux. The two bantamweights clash in a 20-round mill in Tom McCarey's arena at Los Angeles on July 15.

* * *

The Johnny Dundee-Jack White match, scheduled to take place on the coast July 29, may not take place. Dundee is holding out for a larger guarantee than the promoters are willing to give for such a scrap. If Dundee refuses to meet White, George Kirkwood or Tommy Dixon may be substituted.

* * *

Terry Nelson, local lightweight, is waiting to hear from Dayton, Ohio, regarding a match there. Terry is trying to get on with either Jimmy Murphy, Jimmy Traverse or Danny Goodman. Nelson is surely entitled to a match with some good 133-pounder. He is a willing mixer and always gives the fans a run for their money.

* * *

Packey McFarland gave exhibition bouts at the Joliet, Ill., prison the other day for the entertainment of the prisoners. He boxed Kid Mack, of Joliet, and other local boys. Warden Allen is a friend of McFarland.

HARRIS TO MEET ALRICK IN TENNIS TITLE MATCH

LITHCHFIELD, CONN., July 12.—F. H. Harris, of Brattleboro, Vt., will meet Alrick H. Man, Jr., of Richmond Hill, N. Y., for the State tennis title and cup here this afternoon. Harris yesterday defeated W. S. Cushing, of Simsbury, in the final of the State tennis tournament. Man won the New England championship from Harris in the tournament at Hartford last month.

YACHTING.

Becalmed, becalmed, all, all becalmed,
Becalmed on a wide, wide bay,
Our souls were tried when the breezes died,
For we moved not either way.

We sat and mourned for the west wind scorned
To hand us a single breath,
And, what was worst, we were all athirst,
And it felt like the pangs of death.

The wind may howl and the sea may growl,
And the waves be high and strong,
But we scorn the worst when we have no thirst
And we sing a gladsome song.

But worst of all, when there is no squall,
Nor even a breath of air,
And the deck is dry as a desert sky,
Nor even a bottle there.

Becalmed, becalmed, all, all becalmed,
Four miles from the nearest land!
And there we lay for half a day
With an opener in our hand.

Yachts are deceiving. We asked the chauffeur what was concealed beneath the cellar door and he answered: "Life savers." Opening the door and looking into the basement we saw nothing but those things that you wrap around yourself when the boat sinks. One learns only by experience.

We still are a novice as far as things nautical are concerned, but we are forced to admit that we like it as far as we drank.

August Belmont has insured his noble steed, Tracery, for $150,000 for fear of another suffragette rough house. If August were a regular sportsman he would train his steed for the jumps and hold a suffragette steeplechase.

A statistician informs us that the Cardinals accepted 206 chances without an error. Aside from the fact that they lost a flock of games in the meantime it was great baseball.

One is not surprised to read that Bud Anderson was doped when he fought Leach Cross. A flock of knuckles injected at the right spot is quite an effective anesthetic.

Reading a headline, one observes that the "Sox welcome Frank Chance." Looking over the box score one is led to believe it.

SPEAKING OF WORK.

Were I to labor sixteen hours a day,
Without a pause, without a gasp of air,
I would not grieve my fair young life away,
But gladly do my share.
If I were called upon to be a slave
'Twould only make me smile, for I have seen
The hardest working thing this side the grave—

Taylor, open golf champion of England, has decided not to join Harry Vardon and Edward Ray in their American tour to play, during which Vardon and Ray will compete in the open championship tournament at Brookline, Mass. JOHNSON IS IN ENGLAND, BUT CAN'T FIGHT THERE

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, July 12.—Jack Johnson, the negro pugilist who fled from Chicago after being convicted of white slavery, arrived here to-day from Paris. Johnson wants to arrange a short bout with some good English heavyweight, preferably Bombardier Wells. Any match that Johnson makes, however, probably will have to be fought on the Continent, for the English authorities will not allow him to box in this country.

After his arrival to-day Johnson visited the newspaper offices in Fleet street and denied stories about him which had been cabled from the United States.

COULON ORDERED TO TAKE LONG REST IN COLORADO

CHICAGO, July 12.—Johnny Coulon, the bantam champion, announced that he probably would not fight again before Thanksgiving Day. Coulon was in the Presbyterian Hospital for ten days, during which time Bertram W. Sippy, a specialist on stomach troubles, gave the little fighter a careful examination. The doctor has ordered the champion to take a long rest in Colorado.

Coulon left the hospital day before yesterday and already is making preparations for the Colorado trip. He expects to leave for the West some time next week.

STARS' CHANCES IN GOLF MEETS RUINED BY RAIN

By Chick Evans.

THERE is an opinion deeply rooted in the minds of most Americans that it rains three-fourths of the time in Great Britain, and that in consequence, the British golfer is an amphibious creature. I can not testify to the truth of this belief because I visited Britain in a dry year, but a friend, who spent several months in the British Isles, assures me that, although it rained every day while he was there, the British rain was not so wet as the American variety. Perhaps my friend's delusion springs from the fact that almost every clubhouse in Great Britain has a drying room where golfers may hang their rain-soaked clothing, while such a convenience is almost unknown in America, the New Edgewater being the only American club that, as far as I know, has made such provision for its members.

Playing golf in the rain is a good deal like jumping into a cold tub—there is always hesitation in the beginning, but the act itself is never regretted, for the real golfer can not let a little thing like the rain interfere with his game. When a man has journeyed all the way out to some country club he is almost sure to play, rain or shine, and I am confident that playing in the rain does not injure any one physically. It is attended, however, with many inconveniences, and to find enjoyment, the player must be well prepared for the weather. He needs an old pair of shoes and other wearing apparel that can be easily dried and not easily injured. But the best of rainy-day clothes are usually too many and too binding for good golf, and raincoats are an abomination. I well remember that W. C. Fownes, Jr., once spent a great deal of valuable time trying to invent one suited to the needs of the golfer.

Moisture Ruins Clubs.

Personally, I dislike to play in the rain; I do not like to get my clothes wet, and most of all, I detect the effect of moisture upon my clubs. The shafts are always heavily stained, so that they may withstand the weather, but water warps wood, and I do hate to draw a wooden club from my bag on a rainy day. Then again, the best grips are supposed to be of oiled and treated leather, and moisture affects them most unfavorably. So the golfer carries towels, because wet hands and wet grips are a distinctly disagreeable combination. Another rainy day necessity is the hooded golf bag.

Of course, no golfer expects to play his best on a rainy day, but in all big tournaments, or indeed any competition, golfers must play, regardless of the weather. The luck of the condition is, however, more deeply felt in a qualification round. Perhaps in the morning the course may have been too fast for the players; then, between 1 and 2, a heavy shower comes up, catching those who must go out then; at 2 the rain ceases and the latter players start forth under most favorable conditions, for the rain has softened the greens and made the balls more manageable. This is a chance of the game that affects almost every score with unequal conditions.

Deluge Has Spoiled Tournaments.

Glen View, for a long time, had an unfortunate reputation for rainy tournaments, big events there being almost invariably attended by terrific downpours. In the National of 1904, the river overflowed the second nine holes, and only the first nine were playable in the finals. None of the Western players can forget the deluge at Denver, and I also recall vividly a four-day tournament at Chicago Golf when it rained practically during the whole competition.

These incidents merely teach us, as old fables say, that the real golfer must be a bit of a philosopher. He accepts the weather cheerily and makes the best of it.

MANY MANAGERS ON COAST IN INTEREST OF BOXERS

LOS ANGELES, CAL., July 12.—With six managers on the ground anxious to arrange matches for their boxers, there is no danger that Promoter McCarey will not be able to keep his fight program filled.

Among those who are here in the interest of high-class boys are Joe Levy, manager of Joe Rivers and Jack White; Sam Wallach, manager of Leach and Phil Cross; Frank Galvin, manager of Charley Ledoux; Sam Harris, manager of Kid Williams; Scotty Monteith, manager of Johnny Dundee, and Dick Donald, manager of Bud Anderson.

Good Time Now For Blood Health

Blood Disorders Gone to Stay.

A few doses of that wonderful blood purifier, S. S. S., will start activities in the cellular tissues of the body and soon show decided changes in the skin. The skin is but a fine network of tiny blood vessels, and the specific action of S. S. S. is declared to be a pronounced stimulation of the activity of these cells. Certain it is that in a surprisingly short time any skin eruption shows a most remarkable change; it begins to dry up; the skin scales off in tiny flecks, and soon a layer of clear, healthy and firm tissue results.

The reason for this is in the peculiar stimulation of S. S. S., which enables the cells in the skin to select from the blood the nutriment it requires for regeneration.

You can obtain S. S. S. at any well stocked drug store, if you insist upon it, but be sure you are not talked into something "just as good." S. S. S. is prepared by the Swift Specific Company, 180 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga. Write for their illustrated book on skin diseases.

GRAND CIRCUIT HORSES MOVE ON TO PITTSBURG

CLEVELAND, OHIO., July 12.—The entire "works" of the Grand Circuit is on the move to-day over to Pittsburg, where the second Grand Circuit meet of the season will be held.

The first one came to a close at North Randall tracks yesterday with four trotting events that brought out a fine quality of sport. Outsiders shared honors with the favorites. The Tavern "Steak," though previously conceded to Dago F., was won by Eulabel, an outsider.

The 2:00 trot went to Jean Arion, although Eve Cord, driven by Geers, had been expected to win easily.

The championship trotting sweepstakes was taken by Anvil, a heavy favorite, because he trotted the two fastest miles of the year. The veteran driver Ed Geers pushed Anvil around the oval in the remarkably fast time of 2:04 1-4 in the first heat, and came right back in the next and concluding heat with a mark of 2:04 3-4.

WILLIE RITCHIE WILLING TO BATTLE JACK BRITTON

SAN FRANCISCO, July 12.—Ritchie says that he never received the offer of Promoter Tortorich, of New Orleans, to box Britton for a $20,000 purse, though such an offer had been made through the press.

Regarding such a bout in September, Ritchie says that Tortorich would be treated the same as the other promoters and if he hands in the highest bid he will gladly box in New Orleans. If he does so, Jack Britton, who is a heavy lightweight, will have to make 132 pounds ringside.

Willie is confident that he can make this weight and be at his best. When Ritchie and Britton boxed four rounds in this city they milled at catch weights.

Again Hogg Beats Crackers 6-0

Rain May Stop To-day's Game

By Percy H. Whiting.

THE Gulls and the Crackers meet in the final tangle this afternoon—that is, if the weather is even half-way decent. Early in the afternon the prospects were good that the game would be played. And, for a pleasing change, even if it is Saturday afternoon, the game will be called at the usual time and will go to a decision.

The fates forbid that it be another knock-out.

One fan sized up yesterday's game pretty well when he said:

"Well, that's my idea of a WHITEWASH."

It was all of that and more besides.

The Gulls won, 6 to 0, and they did it with such ease that they made the Crackers look like the tail-enders of a Class D league.

* * *

IT'S a hard matter not to acquire a grouch over a game like that. No matter how one attempts to wax flippant and facetious, the waxing isn't any good at all.

It was a gloomy contest.

At that, there were fielding spots of amazing brilliancy.

Wally Smith fielded like a world's champion. Bisland, despite two errors, almost evened up by some brilliant work. Stock had a brilliant day, and he did it in spite of the fact that Chapman nearly took his head off with a batted ball, which would have taken the "pep" out of an ordinary player.

Hogg pitched another grand game for Mobile.

The last time he was here he beat Atlanta 6 to 0.

Yesterday he won, 6 to 0.

However, he must be getting better, for the last time he allowed six hits, while this time, he gave up only three.

And it was an awful day for Atlanta's records, for Chapman made two out of the three hits, while the big batting stars, Long, Welchonce and Smith, went hitless.

* * *

OF course, it would hurt to be beaten by the Mobile at any time. But it hurts, especially now that the Gulls are crippled and very much weakened.

If the Crackers can't win from them now, what chance have they when the Gulls get back in condition, as they are bound to do soon? This is what the fans are asking themselves, and it's a serious question.

* * *

THE pitching of Dent was a bright feature. After Brady was knocked out Dent took up the burden and carried it well. The Gulls' only run after he went in resulted from a hit and an error.

This chap also made a nice play at the plate when Stock tried to score on what looked like a passed ball. Chapman fielded it and Den; received the throw and tagged Stock out, risking his legs and his neck in doing it. It was a game, clever piece of work.

* * *

ONLY three more games will be played at home after the Gulls depart. The Montgomery team is to be here Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. Then the Crackers beat it away for a long journey.

BROWN PRAISES THE GEORGIAN TO FARMERS

Former Assistant Commissioner of Agriculture Tells Them This Paper Is Best of All.

DUBLIN, July 12.—"I want every farmer in Laurens County—every farmer in Georgia—to read The Atlanta Georgian," said J. J. Brown, former Assistant Commissioner of Agriculture for Georgia, in an address at a great rally of the Farmers' Union, seven miles from Dublin, Friday.

"It is the best and fairest paper I have ever read," he continued. "It is our friend and we should read it. Of course, there are other great papers, but there is none in the class of The Atlanta Georgian."

This statement was made while discussing rural free delivery, and was received with enthusiasm by the great crowd present.

Mr. Brown joined Charles S. Barrett and L. M. Rhodes at Dublin Friday, and is a great addition to the team, for he is a great speaker.

Rhodes and Barrett Speak.

Mr. Rhodes, that great big Tennessee farmer, who has statistics, facts and figures to prove his assertions, who knows what the farmers need and who is making their cause his life work, fairly took the big crowd by storm. He is a natural orator and is making friends and converts to the Farmers' Union.

President Barrett made his speech of this tour, and created more enthusiasm than any speaker ever heard in the county. He is the idol of the farmers, and they have faith in him.

Farmers Drive 15 Miles.

More than 200 vehicles surrounded the place of the rally, many of the farmers coming across the country for a distance of fifteen miles, showing their interest in the Farmers' Union. It is the impression of Mr. Rhodes and Mr. Brown that the number of members of the Farmers' Union in Georgia will be increased to 75,000 before another year shall have passed.

Crops in this section of the State are good, and from the appearance of the farmers they have been good for several years.

The speaking lasted more than three hours, and not a single person left, which shows how the farmers feel in regard to unionism.

After the speechmaking a great picnic dinner of fried chiken, potato pie and watermelon was enjoyed.

It is expected that fully 5,000 persons will gather at Waycross on Saturday, where the campaign closes.

Farmers Rally At Douglasville.

DOUGLASVILLE, July 12.—An agricultural rally was held here to-day under the auspices of the State Agricultural College, with a large attendance. The movement was fathered by the Farmers' Union in this county and by the local Commercial Club.

The occasion was also a booster day for the Douglas County Fair to be held here next fall, and several important committees of the Fair Association met the farmers.

Butts Planters Rally at Jackson.

JACKSON, July 12.—Several hundred farmers and their families gathered in Jackson Friday to attend the Butts County Farmers' Institute, held under direction of the State College of Agriculture.

The occasion was made a rally day for the members of the Boys' Corn Club and the Girls' Canning Club. Dinner was served by the farmers at the Farmers' Union Warehouse.

Talks were made by Dr. William Burson, of the department of veterinary science at the State College of Agriculture; Professor T. H. McHatton, of the horticulture department, and S. M. Cown, district agent of the Boys' Corn Club work. County School Superintendent C. S. Maddox was chairman. The meeting was held in the courthouse.

DON'T TIRE AS END OF PONY CONTEST NEARS

Every Incentive Is Offered Candidates in the Race for the Beautiful Shetlands.

Ginger for Contestants.

Shetland ponies never tire. Neither must you if you want one.

It is a half-hearted youngster who tires near the finish.

Watch your receipt book, and go after renewals just before the short-term subscriptions expire.

Remember, you are asking people to do themselves a favor when you ask them to subscribe to The Georgian and American.

Aim for a pony and cart; you may get a pony and saddle. Aim for a pony and saddle, and you may get a gold watch. Aim for a gold watch, and you may get a silver watch, and very likely you will get—left.

Every incentive is being offered contestants to make the last few weeks of The Georgian and American pony contest the liveliest of the entire struggle.

There is a generous extra-vote offer, with its only condition the turning in of $35, $25 or $15 for subscriptions. The subscriptions may be for any length of time, from a month up.

Sunday afternoon, at Grant Park, the ponies will be seen, harnessed and saddled, for the enjoyment of the contestants. There is inspiration for any youngster in driving or riding one of these little animals. Just to enjoy one of them for a few minutes stimulates a desire to own it. Never were more intelligent, kinder or better-trained animals seen in Atlanta.

Parents are particularly invited to be at the Park, when the contest manager will talk with them as to means of helping the children.

PLAN ON TO LEASE SPACE OVER W. & A.

Representative Suggests Way to Raise $100,000 Each Year. Committee Approves.

Representative Barry Wright, of Floyd County, plans to lease the space over the Western and Atlantic Railroad in the business district of Atlanta to a local syndicate for 30 years at $100,000 per annum. His plan met with the favor of the Western and Atlantic Committee of the Legislature, to which it was revealed Friday.

The committee recommended the creation of a committee of two Senators, five Representatives, the Governor and the chairman of the Railroad Commission as ex-officio members, to investigate Representative Wright's plan. It also recommended a legislative appropriation of $5,000 for the investigation.

The committee indorsed a constitutional amendment offered by Representative Meaders, of Oconee County, forbidding the sale of the W. & A., except by vote of the people. A bill providing for the appointment of a joint committee to investigate the desirability of purchasing the A., B. & A. Railroad, thereby extending the W. & A. to the sea, also was indorsed.

Mabel Taliaferro Is Wed in Daisy Field

ST. LOUIS, July 12.—After keeping her marriage to Thomas J. Carrigan, of La Peer, Mich., a secret for more than a month, Mabel Taliaferro, of Chicago, the actress, formerly wife of Frederic Thompson, New York theatrical promoter, admitted here today she had been married June 1 in the Michigan city.

The marriage took place before a Justice of the Peace, in a field of daisies that edged down to a river bank just outside of La Peer, in order that all possible secrecy might be maintained.

Old hunters here say that on account of its freakish apearance it had become an outcast, and in such cases the animal always will go to a herd of cattle or horses if possible.

JAPANESE PACT WITH MEXICO STIRS U. S.

Hostile Attitude Toward Americans Draws Protest Through Ambassador Lane.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

MEXICO CITY, July 12.—Formal protest was lodged to-day by the United States Government against the action of the Mexican Government in allowing the Mexican press to stir up anti-American feeling.

Two notes were presented by United States Ambassador H. L. Wilson. At the same time denial was made of the report that United States warships in the harbor at Guayamas used their wireless and searchlights to aid the rebels.

Those publications have resulted in scattered demonstrations and rioting, although no arrests have been reported. Notices have been posted in the schools here for the children to secure small Japanse flags. These will be carried in a procession of children who will welcome the new Japanese Ambassador upon his arrival.

Jap Concessions Reported.

Mexico is cementing her relations with Japan, and it is reported that a special envoy will soon be sent to Tokio to invite the investment of Japanese capital and rich concessions will be given, it is said.

Following is a translation of the notices posted in the schools:

"The representative of the Japanese Emperor to our Government is about to arrive in this city. The attitude of mutual sympathy and esteem which our people and the people of Japan profess is well known.

"National Life in Balance."

"We firmly believe that the time has come to tender a public and solemn testimonial of international sympathy now that our national life has been put to a test by the imperialistic ambassador of a strong people.

"Therefore, the students of all the schools are asked to be at the railway station, each carrying a Japanese flag, to receive the Japanese Emperor's representative.

"This act will be significant and of great importance. The day and hour of the Japanese Ambassador's arrival will be announced later."

A number of American families have made preparations to leave here if further evidences of hostility are shown.

Minister Admits Crisis.

"It is true that the situation is delicate," said Minister of War Blanquet, "but the Government feels it can cope with it. Lamentable consequences may be occasioned by the anti-American feeling, but we are trying to kill it."

El Pais, most rabid of the newspapers, to-day published nearly a full-page picture of Friday's anti-American demonstration by students. On the editorial page the paper said:

"We see in Japan a future ally and defender of our independence, because such an alliance would be dangerous to the United States."

An anonymous letter threatening the United States Embassy with destruction has been received by Ambassador Wilson and turned over to the Mexican Foreign Office.

Georgian in West Tricks 5 Women

DENVER, COLO., July 12.—Five young women of this city to-day are wondering how it all happened, while C. F. Thompson, of Macon, Ga., is in prison contemplating the danger of a too vivid imagination.

Three weeks ago Thompson landed in Denver, it is said, with just $20 in a pocket of his one and only suit. Within the course of a few days he had become engaged to four women, had picked out costly trousseaus for each and had made arrangements to purchase two high-priced automobiles.

Thursday he became engaged to the fifth young woman, after pawning a phonograph which he had obtained under false pretenses. This put the detectives on his trail. Now he is in jail, with prospects of a later trip to Canon City Penitentiary.

Japs Protest Being Listed With Blacks

DENVER, July 12.—A delegation of Japanese has notified the city authorities to-day that they would appeal to the ambassador of their Government at Washington to secure the rescinding of an order issued by Otto Thumms, Commissioner of Property, barring Japanese from bathing beaches in the city parks.

Thumm's order also bars negroes from the beaches.

A Sustaining Diet.

These are the enervating days, when, as somebody has said, men drop by the sunstroke as if the Day of Fire had dawned. They are fraught with danger to people whose systems are poorly sustained; and this leads us to say, in the interest of the less robust of our readers, that the full effect of Hood's Sarsaparilla is such as to suggest the propriety of calling this medicine something besides a blood purifier and tonic—say, a sustaining diet. It makes it much easier to bear the heat, assures refreshing sleep, and will without any doubt avert much sickness at this time of year.

SHORT COVERING STEADIES COTTON

Buying of Old Crops by Spot Houses Principal Feature—Offerings General.

NEW YORK, July 12.—The cotton market was quiet at the opening of the cotton market to-day and first prices were 1 to 5 points higher than Friday's final. The demand from shorts who desired to even up for the week-end. When this was supplied prices eased off a few points. T he Liverpool market was closed and was responsible to some extent for the quiet market here.

Spot houses again purchased summer positions quite freely. One large spot broker started the market on an upward scale shortly after the call by bidding aggressively for large blocks of new crops, but bought little. The selling was mainly attributed to Wall Street and the uptown crowd.

The weather map was favorable, showing rains over the greater part of the belt, with lower temperatures and sentiment against the market.

Two of the largest local operators have covered since Tuesday about 50,000 bales of short cotton, and now the market has reached the point where it is practically in the hands of certain big interests, who are trading this and that way merely for small turns for scalping operations, pending further developments in connection with the ultimate outcome of the bull deal in July-August. These two options for the past two weeks have governed new crop positions as well as operations. The outcome of the Clarke amendment is also killing off business.

At the close the market was steady with prices at a net gain of 1 to 5 points from the final quotations of Friday.

Warehouse stocks in New York to-day is 37,301 bales; certificated, 31,199 bales.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, July 12.—Further good and rather general rains occurred during the past 48 hours in the eastern half of the belt. Precipitation was heaviest in Tennessee and North Alabama. Temperatures were lower in North Texas.

European political news was a little more cheerful, expressing the hope of early peace, but financial views continue pessimistic, owing to fear of heavy financial losses in connection with the Balkan war.

Our market was inclined to ease at the start on the favorable weather prospects, but open bidding for July by the controlling interests checked selling on the belief that screws might be turned on July. The bidding by these interests reflects the view that it is getting too late to bring cotton here to spoil the July squeeze by tenders.

The Times-Democrat's monthly report will appear Monday. It is expected to be favorable except for a tendency to give special prominence to the weevil danger.

The market ruled steady during the early session around 11.45 for December.

COTTON GOSSIP

The principal feature of the market to-day was the buying of old crop by spot interests. Wall Street and uptown crowd are thought to have sold new crop. Market took the selling well and ruled rather steady all day. Riordan was good seller of new crop around the close.—Anderson.

* * *

The several bearish reports issued yesterday has caused some change in sentiment and the feeling this morning was more bearish.

* * *

There are predictions for favorable weather over the belt for the next few days.

* * *

Around the close yesterday Geer, Shearson, McEnany, Hubbard, Flinn, Hartcorn and Seidenberg were among the leading buyers. Riordan, Parrott, Hicks, Cone and Montgomery were the principal sellers.

* * *

Senator Smith, of South Carolina, has introduced a bill providing for Governmental standard for grades of cotton and requiring futures contracts to be filed by grade specified in contract. The bill was ordered favorably reported by the Senate's sub-committee. The bill aims to overcome objections of Cotton Exchange to the proposed tax on future transactions and does not fix a penalty for failure to deliver actual cotton.

NEW ORLEANS, July 13.—Hayward & Clark: The weather map was very favorable, cloudy over entire belt, with general rains in eastern half, heaviest in Tennessee and North Alabama, where most needed. Cooler in west. Indications are for partly cloudy to fair in the Atlantics; possibly some scattered showers. Cloudy in central and western States, with cooler weather and showers coming on Texas over Sunday. Clearing and cooler in Oklahoma and Arkansas.

J. B. Turner, of Memphis, has the following on the condition of the cotton crop for the week ending July 11:

"The week was a normal and hence a favorable one for the season. Temperatures were quite high over a great part of the belt, but toward the end were materially moderated. Generally speaking, there was an abundance of moisture in the soil, and hence the cultivation was near perfect. The plant stood the excess of temperature quite well and continued its growth and fruiting in a satisfactory manner. There is no striking change from the conditions of one week ago and this of itself is a favorable item.

"Little or no rain fell in Texas and Oklahoma, where already the supply of moisture was abundant, while down the Mississippi Valley there were many showers and locally heavy rains, which relieved an incipient drouth and set the cotton to growing rapidly. Showers fell also in the eastern States and were of benefit. As a whole, more rain Alabama and States eastward would be desirable, though not necessary at this time.

"In Eastern Texas, Louisiana and Mississippi, weevils are more numerous than in several years, and their appearance has aroused the planters' alarm. As yet their depredations have been quite limited."

* * *

The Times-Democrat monthly crop report is expected Monday. We think it will be favorable except for giving the boll weevil danger the usual prominence.

* * *

Official Texas records show an average for the State of 98 degrees; three stations show 100; nine stations 102; one station 104; and one station 106. The maximum average for Oklahoma is 102.

* * *

Galveston will get a new bale to-day from Patricio, Texas, the same date as last year. New bale here from San Benito, consigned to John M. Parker & Co., will be sold at auction to-day.

* * *

The Government advises Corpus Christi, Texas: "Small craft warning. Disturbance over Southern New Mexico moving eastward; will cause brisk to high northerly winds to-day and probably Sunday."

* * *

The first new bale was sold here at auction for 16 cents; it was bought by E. Christ.

Grain Notes

The Chicago Inter Ocean says: "The wheat bears have the best of it. Hedging business is coming into the market, making it safer for the short seller than at any time within a year. Sentiment has become excessively bearish, and it would not be surprising to a majority to see lower prices, although the best traders are looking for irregular declines.

"Corn specialists attributed the break of 1⅜ on September yesterday, making a drop of almost 4 cents from the recent high point to unloading by longs. It is noticeable that sharp traders, who were long, have unloaded their purchases on bids. Traders said they would not be surprised to see a rally some day, but believe corn should be sold on all bulges.

"September oats dropped below 40 cents yesterday with stop orders selling sufficient to carry prices to 39¼. Those who have watched the market closely for two weeks say there has been a steady unloading by longs and a decrease in the outside buying. The liquidation, however, is not regarded as over."

* * *

Bartlett, Frazier & Co. says: "Wheat—Offerings from the country are somewhat lighter, but local sentiment is bearish and new speculative buying from the outside does not come in.

"Corn—The rains this morning are likely to cause further selling, although liquidation was on a liberal scale yesterday. Cash prices do not show as much weakness as the future, owing to moderate receipts and scarcity of offerings from first hands.

"Oats—There is nothing new in the situation, except that receipts are somewhat smaller and cash inquiry a shade better. Sentiment is very bearish, and, as in the other grains, outside buying is extremely limited.

"Provisions—Hogs under estimates with hog prices at yards steady to 5c higher."

Rainfall and Temperatures in Grain Region: Chadian, Northwest cloudy, 42 to 58; Fremonton, Swift Current, Winnipeg, 06; Calgary, 94; Battleford, 42; Regina, raining, 1.10; Northwest, part cloudy, 48 to 64; Williston, Huron, 08; Devils Lake, Bismark, 01; Moosehead, 20; Duluth, 1.20; West generally cloudy, 54 to 70; Omaha, Davenport, 02; Sioux City, 04; Des Moines, 86; Charles City, 96; Dubuque, 1.08; Springfield, 14; Southwest part cloudy, 62 to 76; Dodge City, 10; Wichita, 01; Kansas City, 58; Springfield, 84; St. Louis, 50; Ohio Valley cloudy, 70 to 76; Cairo, 07; Evansville, 34; Cincinnati, 42; Indianapolis, 16; Columbus raining; Louisville raining, 36.

Think wheat, corn and oats all have had break enough. Would cover shorts and wait for a rally before selling again.—Roycroft.

IRREGULARITY IN PRICE OF STOCKS

Good Crop Advices and Easier Feeling Abroad Encourage Better Active Bidding.

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, July 12.—A higher range of prices was established at the opening of the stock market, although business was very quiet. Canadian Pacific began 2⅛ higher at 213½, but afterward shaded.

There was no change in speculative conditions and the gains which were recorded were chiefly due to a change in position on the part of the speculative element. Finding bear operations fruitless, the professionals turned bullish.

Union Pacific advanced ⅝ and some of the other gains were: Amalgamated Copper, ¼; United States Steel, ⅛; Reading, ⅝; Lehigh Valley, ½; Erie, ⅛; American Can ¼, and Chesapeake and Ohio, ⅛.

The curb was quiet.

Americans in London were dull, but ruled above New York parity.

The market closed strong. Governments unchanged; other bonds steady.

The trainmen and conductors' committee of 1,000 will meet to-day to ratify the Eastern railway vote.

Although the market continues dull, with few changes in prices, there are many bullish factors in the situation that are being ignored, which later in the season will have a beneficial effect on values. We believe stocks conservatively accumulated around this level will in a reasonable time show satisfactory profits.—Potter.

WHEAT LEADER IN CEREAL DECLINE

General Rains and Absence of Speculative Buying Cause of Heavy Liquidation.

CHICAGO, July 12.—Wheat was ⅝c lower at the opening this morning on further fine rains which covered the entire spring wheat country in the Northwest. There were some rains in the winter wheat belt, which possibly may delay the movement for a day or two. The official report on wheat crop of France shows the condition to be 3 points higher for winter and 2 higher for spring than July 1 a year ago. Northwestern receipts were moderate.

Corn was ⅜c to ½c lower on rains where needed throughout the belt.

Oats were off ⅜c to ½c in sympathy with the other grains.

Provisions were firmer and higher.

EAST WANTS LIGHT HOGS.

CHICAGO, July 12.—Eastern orders for light hogs were in excess of weekend supply and a 10 to 15c higher market for everything fit for that outlet resulted. Shipping hogs sold largely at 9.10@9.25. Packing grades were little if any higher, as that branch was without competition. There were 35,000 at eleven markets, against 45,000 a year ago, and not to exceed 40,000 are expected here Monday. Shipping demand is coming back in emphatic manner, that outlet having absorbed 20,000 this week. Both in cattle and sheep the finish was nominally strong at the best prices of the week. Monday's expectancy is for about 20,000 cattle and 35,000 hogs.

JUDGES DECIDE WHO IS BUTTON PRIZE WINNER

Submitted by W. Mae Jones, 1428 Candler Building.

Submitted by W. T. Wilson, 388 North Jackson street.

Hearst's Sunday American Will Announce Best Slogan—Many Submitted Saturday.

Judges Saturday took charge of all the "500,000 club" slogans submitted in the $25 prize contest. They are John W. Grant, Wilmer L. Moore and Walter C. Taylor. At The Georgian office they began a careful study of the hundreds of suggestions submitted.

Hearst's Sunday American will announce the winner.

The last day of the contest brought in the largest number of submissions of any other day. Many are beautiful designs by well-known artists. Others are striking for their literary merit. All bespeak the wonderful Atlanta spirit—save one.

That came in anonymously from a cynical humorist. He went to the trouble of drawing a large picture burlesquing Atlanta from the City Hall to the last garbage dump beyond "Pittsburg."

The Cynic's Slogan.

In one corner was a large building marked "Hot Air Factory." Next to it was the City Hall, called "The House of Mystery," and on top of the building sat a doubtful bird marked "Graft." The bottom of the picture showed three stragglers passing out of a gate with the remark:

"Griffin ain't so bad after all."

It's a cinch this design won't get the prize.

One of the best of the last suggestions was a map of Georgia with a star marking Atlanta, its capital. The slogan, offered by George L. Taylor, No. 152 Courtland street, is:

"Hitch your wagon to the star. Half million by 1920."

Here are many scintillating with enthusiasm:

"Boost Atlanta. Everybody's doing it; 500,000 by 1920. Welcome. The Gate City."—W. L. Maddox, No. 395 Whitehall street.

"For Atlanta 500,000 by 1920. Come on."—Wilbur G. Kurtz, No. 90 Sinclair avenue.

"Atlanta, the livest and niftiest town always."—G. O. Shepard, No. 36 North Pryor street.

W. T. Wilson, No. 388 North Jackson street, offers the Phoenix arising from the ashes with the slogan, "Always ahead."

"Atlanta, the bright star of the Southland. Pleasure, health, wealth, prosperity; 500,000 by 1920."—E. B. Gibson, No. 72 Cherokee avenue.

"Atlanta always ahead; 500,000 1920; 1847-1865; Phoenix."—U. F. Harbour, No. 41 North Pryor street.

Poet Offers One.

"Half a million. That's our bet. Watch Atlanta. She'll get it yet."—Alex Maddox, No. 212 Euclid avenue.

"Place, Atlanta, Ga.; time, 1920; population, 500,000; our motto, 'Co-operation.'"—C. L. Nicholson, No. 18 Ormond street.

"Here's to Atlanta, greatest inland city; boost for half a million in 1920."—Margaret Maddox, No. 212 Euclid avenue.

"Get the spirit and join Atlanta Half-Million Club, 1920; to prosperity and happiness."—F. E. Taylor, Empire building.

"1864, 2,000 people; 1865, less than 3,000 people; 1910, 155,000 people; 1920, let's make it 500,000."—Joseph Uleiner, No. 224 Capitol avenue.

"Success is sure. Omnia vincit fides. Atlanta, 500,000 by 1920."—W. G. Hynds, No. 202 McLendon street.

"Atlanta Half-Million Club, Faith, ambition, labor. In hoc signo vinces."—J. Howard Hynds, No. 202 McLendon street.

"Atlanta, half-million, 1920."—Charles H. Terry, No. 43 Zachary street.

AMERICAN LIFE INTEREST FUND IS HELD UP

Court Grants Restraining Order to Stockholders Who Have Filed Receivership Suits

Following the filing of two receivership suits against the American Life and Annuity Company, Judge Ellis issued an order Friday restraining officials of the company from making payment on the interest of income certificates.

Pope M. Brown, defeated candidate for Governor in the last campaign, is president of the company. N. G. Parker, Horace Sandiford and T. K. Bowles filed the suits as certificate holders. July 14 was set for a hearing.

Bowles was secretary of the company until November, when he was succeeded by Parker, who himself resigned Thursday. General Manager W. R. Taylor asserts that the company is in good financial condition and has assets of more than $100,000 over its liabilities. He said the report of Deputy Insurance Commissioner Copeland made June 15, showed liabilities of $88,662.21 against assets of $189,084.37.

The suits charge that the company has taken in $441,000 in the last three years on income certificates alone, and that it has other sources of revenue. The assets are placed at $135,000. It is charged that the company has threatened to pay $12,000 interest on income certificates July 15, and that it has no funds with which to do so.

The American Life and Annuity Company was organized at McRae, Ga., three years ago. It has been regarded as one of the most successful of Georgia companies.

ATTORNEYS PASS LIE AND BLOWS IN MACON

Solicitor General Ross and Lawyer Harris Clash Over Trial of Vice Cases.

MACON, July 12.—Attorney Jesse C. Harris brought about a sudden adjournment of the special criminal session of the Bibb Superior Court yesterday afternoon by calling Solicitor John P. Ross a liar and striking him in the face in the courtroom. Harris was fined $50 for contempt of court and also censured by Judge Mathews for his conduct.

Harris represented fifteen women of the restricted district who are charged with operating disorderly houses. In moving for a continuance of these cases, he declared that Solicitor Ross would not call the cases represented by any other lawyers, but was seeking solely to prosecute those represented by him (Harris).

"That's a falsehood, your honor," interposed the Solicitor.

"You're a liar," shouted Attorney Harris, striking the Solicitor in the face.

Deputies seized both men immediately.

"He's a dirty little scoundrel; let me hit him once," shouted Solicitor Ross, but was restrained.

Judge Mathews held that the jury was prejudiced in the matter of trying any of the defendants represented by Harris, and as Solicitor Ross refused to call any other cases, though stating that he was prepared for trial in all of them, the court was adjourned for the term and all parties discharged. The Solicitor stated that Harris represented all of the prominent defendants, and that he did not propose to try the lesser and weaker defendants first. "There are 'stars' of varying magnitude in Tybee (the vice district) as well as in glory," he said.

Mating for Breeding Purposes; Also Why Hens Go Blind

Questions Answered That Might Be Ones You Are Anxious to Have Explained.

By JUDGE F. J. MARSHALL.

Judge F. J. Marshall: I will appreciate some good advice. Last February I got five thoroughbred S. C. White Leghorns. From these I have raised 110 chickens, in addition to having used some eggs for the table. What arrangement should I make in the autumn for cocks? Must I dispose of all that I raise and procure fresh male birds, and how many shall I kep for, say 60 hens? My Leghorn flock has free range on Bermuda and Johnson grass, and will have cowpeas and winter oats. What feeding will they need during the fall and winter? When may I expect my pullets to lay that were hatched during April and May? I plan in the autumn to fence in a half-acre of winter oats, to divide it in half, and to keep in these two divisions, alternatingly, some large fowls from which to raise early broilers. What is the very best breed for this purpose? I do not need a general utility fowl, as my Leghorns will provide me with eggs. I simply want a breed that are early layers and rapid growers. How many birds can I keep to advantage on my half-acre? I have recently hatched sixteen thoroughbred ducks, they are Pekin ducks, from which I wish to raise. Is it better to give them range or keep them in an enclosure? What proportion of drakes are needed, and must I procure others than those which I have hatched.

Gunnison, Miss. MRS. M. M. S.

Reply: I should advise keeping the old cock you have been breeding from someone's yards not akin to three good, vigorous, young cockerels from one one's yards not akin to yours, and let the four run with the 60 hens and pullets you are going to have on your free range. One male to every fifteen females is sufficient where they all have free range.

Where stock is yarded, there should be one male to every ten females. Your Leghorn pullets hatched in April and May should commence laying in September and October, perhaps some of them a little sooner than that if well cared for and they have no disease to bother them during their maturing. For your broiler raising, any one of the Plymouth Rocks or the Wyand

GRANT PARK COTTAGE

The scarcity of good homes for sale in the Grant Park section is a well-known fact. A great many subdivisions have been made beyond Grant Park to meet the demand for this very desirable section.

When a good home on a good street near Grant Park is offered for sale, it is usually sold right away. We have had listed with us for sale a 7-room cottage at 45 Park Avenue, on a lot 50 by 200 feet. The lot is elevated, has plenty of trees and faces east. The cottage is well built and has all conveniences. This place is located near several churches, public schools and is on one of the few double car-tracked streets in the Grant Park section. Price, $4,750. Very reasonable terms.

Bridge Plaza Plan Before Committee

Suggestion of 30-Year Property Lease for $3,000,000—Jonesboro Road Acreage Sold.

A new proposition has been submitted in the so-called Bleckley plaza plan for bridging the railroad tracks in the center of town and erecting handsome business buildings along the superstructure. It is to lease the Western and Atlantic Railroad acreage from the State for 30 years on a basis of $100,000 a year, and then give the property back to the State.

This suggestion was made at a meeting of the W. & A. Committee of the State Legislature by Barry Wright, Representative from Rome. Mr. Wright declared he was confident he could get a syndicate of business men to take such a lease.

The plaza plan was first put forward several years ago by Haralson Bleckley, the well-known architect, who submitted a sketch showing the feasibility of it. Leaders in local finance indorsed the movement, declaring that the waste space over the railroad tracks could be made to yield the State a handsome income with no outlay.

Included in the plan are a handsome new depot and an incline from the Forsyth street bridge to Madison avenue, to handle traffic to and from the Terminal Station. Ralph O. Cochran, John Y. Smith and Robert B. Blackburn, Representatives from Fulton, recently indorsed this project on condition that the State's interests could be protected in the deal. Mr. Cochran declared that the property frontage created under the plan would be extremely valuable and that owners whose property adjoined the plaza

Some Day Babies Will Be Born Wise.

In Ages to Come Human Beings at Birth Will Know More Than Any Man Knows Now.

(Copyright, 1913.)

The most helpless and ignorant thing in the world is a new-born human being.

The most independent and wise thing in the world—in proportion to its ability—is a new-born mud wasp, or newly fledged sparrow.

That is because the human being is just in the beginning of its development, whereas the mud wasp, the ant and other insects have reached the highest development of which they are capable.

The saddest thing in the education of human beings is the fact that each child must begin at the beginning and learn everything for itself.

Each little baby learns to walk, learns to avoid the fire, learns to talk. The mind starts its life as a blank page, and everything must be written upon it. The child can not even learn by hearing from the father and mother of their mistakes. Each child must make its own mistakes, and can be taught only by experience.

But will that last forever?

When you see the lower forms of animal life giving birth to creatures fully equipped and independent, can you not believe that when the human race, practically just born on this planet, shall have lived here for a few hundreds of thousands or millions of years, that the human child will be born with all the material knowledge stored away, and have no work to do except the discovering of unknown truths, working in new fields?

We base this editorial upon an article by Sir William Ramsay, in the current number of Hearst's Magazine. We advise intelligent, thoughtful readers to get the magazine this month and every month. It is published for those who are interested in realities, those who are capable of thought.

In the article referred to, Sir William Ramsay describes both in the animal world and among human beings indications of a certain power of mind, of knowledge born in the newly created animal, apart from all teaching or experience.

He says, concerning the inhabitants of Burmah:

"Cases are known where a child, born of parents living in a village not their own, to which they had migrated, was able to recognize people, and to 'remember' events which had taken place in the native village of his parents, of which he could have had no direct knowledge. Is it possible that a memory for particular events is sometimes inherited?"

Then he says, of certain observations made upon swallows:

"Their nest was under the eaves; and for long, the parents fed and attended to their young brood. The day arrived for them to leave their nest; and without any practice, each fledgling dropped out of the nest, flew backward and forward, and without the least hesitation entered the nest, just like an old bird. The wonderful power of control of muscles, of guiding motion, and of correlation of brain and eye must have lain in the germ of these birds until the time for their use arrived. Examples of the sort might be given by the thousand; although the one mentioned is perhaps particularly striking."

It is extremely likely that the little boy of Burmah, a child bred for ages along the same limited line of thought, should have certain ideas and associations before birth strongly impressed upon it, and that these should be transmitted and appear in the child without any teaching.

There is no doubt that the children of savages recognize of their own accord the danger in poisonous reptiles and other animals to which the civilized child would be indifferent, except after the experience of a bite.

In the animal world the fact that the brain of the new animal is born with exact, wonderful knowledge is not disputed. And that fact is of intense interest to human beings who hope that the human race itself may develop one day in such a way as to have the children born with a ready-made education in excess of that which they now possess after years of schooling.

Suppose that a child could come into this world wise in proportion to its possibilities, as does the child of the mud wasp.

No baby mud wasp ever saw its own mother. The eggs are laid, and the mother who lays the eggs dies before they hatch.

Each new mud wasp begins its career as did Adam in the Garden of Eden, with nobody back of him so far as he knows.

When the mud wasp is ready she selects a good place to lay her eggs. Then she goes off and selects a fat caterpillar.

She intends that the caterpillar shall feed her young wasps when the latter hatch out. She puts that caterpillar beside the eggs that she has laid, covers up the eggs and the caterpillar, and goes away, leaving food for the young, unborn wasps, as some human mother might go out for a day's work leaving bread and butter on the table and saying, "Johnny, eat that when you get hungry."

The wonderful thing is that the mother wasp does not KILL the caterpillar. If she killed it, it would be decayed and useless by the time the young wasps arrived.

The mother wasp seizes the caterpillar and carefully stings it just back of the head, between two of the little rings that form the caterpillar's body.

This stuns the caterpillar, makes it impossible for it to move or struggle, but does not kill it.

And while the wasp eggs are hatching, the caterpillar, rendered helpless, but not killed by the poison, lies there ALIVE waiting for the little wasps to hatch out and eat it.

Presently they hatch, they eat it, and scatter.

The wonderful thing is that each of these wasps, never having seen the thing done, never having had lessons from its mother, or from any school-teacher, goes out when the time comes, lays her eggs, finds a fat caterpillar, stings it exactly in the same scientific way, and puts it away with the eggs, never having been told how to do it.

What a fine thing it would be for the children of human beings if they could be born with knowledge of that kind. Some of them are born WITH UNUSUAL KNOWLEDGE.

Some have musical power, which means that the brain before birth developed knowledge of harmony.

Some children can compose music correctly when they are almost too young to read.

Other children have a phenomenal mathematical faculty and can do "sums" that would puzzle their elders.

So far, man's brain is really too big for his body.

He was a timid, frightened monkey-man, running away from everything, developing his brain rapidly in order to make up for physical weakness. He has been a thinking man only

WINIFRED BLACK

Writes on

A Woman Next Door

You Choose Your Friends, She Says, Because You Like Them, and Like Their Kind, Not Because Somebody Else Thinks You Ought to Like Them.

By WINIFRED BLACK.

I READ a brilliant story by a brilliant writer the other day. Did you happen to read it, too?

It was about a woman who lived down "behind the tracks," in a country town. She was a woman who flaunted the streets in a gorgeous hat and expensive gowns. She wore bangle bracelets that jingled and rings that sparkled, and high-heeled slippers and "open-worked" stockings, and the men grinned sheepishly when she passed, and nudged each other, and the women looked the other way and pretended they didn't even see her.

One day the woman from "behind the tracks" bought a house uptown and moved into it—a neat, pretty little house, with a garden and trees, and she dug in the flower beds and watered the lawn and put out hanging baskets, and she went to market in a little checked gingham, and she looked wistfully over the fence when the neighbors went by, but nobody ever spoke to her at all.

One night a baby was taken sick in the neighborhood and the woman from "behind the tracks" saved its life. The next day she stood out on her porch and waited to see the baby's mother go by. And the baby's mother went by—and did not see the woman from "behind the tracks" at all, and the woman from "behind the tracks" went and sold her little new house and the garden and all, and went back "behind the tracks" to live—and all the people in the village pursed their lips and said, "She's gone back—they always do."

What Did She Expect?

Good story, wasn't it, and a good slap at the narrow-minded little mother, who wouldn't make friends with the woman who had saved her baby's life?

We need a few such slaps as that, we women; and yet——

I wonder what the woman from "behind the tracks" expected when she bought the pretty little house and the garden, and went to live among decent people?

Did she think they would get out the band and meet and greet her at the doorsteps, or what?

You choose your friends because you like them, and like their kind—not because somebody else thinks you ought to like them.

If the woman from "behind the tracks" had come to the village from somewhere else and nobody knew a thing about her, do you think the neighbor women would have liked her anyhow? I don't.

She wasn't their kind; never was, never could be. She belonged to a different world, and every time she turned her over-blonded head and every time she opened her good-humored, too easily-pleased mouth, and every time she laughed her rather coarse laugh, she would have told what she was, and no woman of any fineness of perception could have been mistaken in her for a minute.

No, I don't mean what she had been. That isn't what would concern a kindly woman who was trying to decide whether she wanted her for a neighbor or not.

I mean what she is. A gingham dress doesn't change the beat of a woman's heart; a garden hoe doesn't turn her from a coarse, easy-going, blunt-hearted person to a gentle, delicate, lovely woman, does it? I don't believe it.

A Lesson From Home.

Once I had a maid—a strange, silent, stubborn girl with blue eyes, so hard that they were like a flint. She had a strange, measured walk and a strange, controlled voice, and she always acted as if she thought some one was watching her.

One day I saw her in a blue print dress, of peculiar cut and shade, and I knew—she was a reformatory girl. I'd seen her before, at the reformatory.

I didn't say a word. I treated her exactly as I had always treated her, but one day she was gone and she left a letter for me. In it she said many things. One of them was this: "You know me; don't you? I believe you do. I thought I could be different, but I can't. You've been good to me, but I ain't happy here. I ain't comfortable, so I'm going," and gone she was, back to the people with whom she was "comfortable," poor thing. Back to the people who were like her and who had her ways and her point of view. I was sorry, but I didn't go after her or try in any way to reach her.

Perhaps I should have—I've often wondered—and yet there were the children. Would it have been exactly safe?"

Selfish—protecting my children at the expense of a poor thing who was trying to make herself over.

Perhaps; but those children are mine. They are my business. It is my affair to keep them safe as long as I can. My own doorstep I must keep clean, and then if I have time and strength I may help my neighbor about her's. That's the way it looks to me. I wonder if I am right or wrong?

What You Really Are.

The poor thing from "behind the tracks" didn't belong in the neat little street uptown. She was no more in place there with her loud laugh and her bleached hair than the timid little woman who lived beside her would be in place in the ranks of a marching army. I don't blame the neighbor women for looking the other way. Honestly, now, I don't.

And the high-heeled, expensive slippers and the open-worked stockings and the gorgeous hats and the flashing rings—she had had all these things while little neighbor turned her blue cashmere and trimmed it with black velvet one year and with cream-colored lace the next, trying to make herself look pretty to the one man she loved. How could the poor thing from "behind the tracks" think she would never have to pay for all that?

After all, though, it isn't what you used to be that counts. It isn't what you would like to be, either; but what you really are, and no change in dress or in housing or anything else will change that. I wish it would. How pitifully I wish it would.

Some Day Babies Will Be Born Wise

for a short time—probably not more than two or three hundred thousand years.

Unlike the ants, the wasps, and the swallows, he has not had time yet to develop knowledge, make it thoroughly his own, and TRANSMIT it.

But there is every reason to believe that in time to come the baby will be born with all the practical knowledge that it requires, just as the young swallow and the young wasps begin life thoroughly educated.

When the time comes, each individual will have a highly interesting career—each being born knowing everything that is generally known, and each being able to devote the whole of life to acquiring NEW knowledge and making original research.

The difference between the mud-wasp and the human baby now is that the wasp is born knowing everything that it needs to know—and never learns anything more.

The baby of the human kind is born knowing nothing, and learns a good deal.

In days to come, when the baby is born with knowledge, there will still be a difference between it and the wasp, the ant, and the swallow, for born with the things that it must know in order to live comfortably, the human baby, unlike its animal associates on the earth, will start out ADDING to human knowledge—which, in turn, by slow processes that go on within us, will be handed down to the new generation.

SAYS WOMEN HEARD CONLEY CONFESS

MEXICAN-JAPANESE ALLIANCE STIRS U.S. TO ACTION

ATLANTA WOMEN LIKE SKIRT WITH POCKETS

Miss Lucie Goodrich, Atlanta sponsor for new suffragette pocket skirt.

Two Large Receptacles at Sides Feature of New Fad From Paris—Fine for Suffragettes.

Just why women suffragists should have pockets in their skirts is a mystery. Still they've got 'em, and they make no secret of the fact.

Strange to say, this new fad originated in Paris, where suffragettes are rare. It has come to Atlanta via New York, and has found favor here, not only as an insignia of the cause but for convenience sake.

According to Mrs. N. Springold, the New York creator of fashionable gowns, who imported the pocket skirt, it is going to be the sensation of the season.

"Women, and suffragists especially, ought to hail the advent of the new skirt with particular joy, she declared, "because of the pockets. There are two of them, one on each side. And they are not stingy little affairs, like the pockets that used to be put in women's dresses in the ancient days before Fashion frowned on such features of feminine apparel."

In Atlanta a few of them were seen at the recent convention of the Georgia Woman Suffrage Association. Others have been seen at the Driving Club and elsewhere in society circles.

Miss Lucile Goodrich has sponsored the skirt in the younger set. Adherents are beginning to gather to the new fad.

Governor Asks and Secures Acquittal

JACKSON, MISS., July 12.—A. C. Davis was acquitted of the charge of embezzlement in connection with the sale of State property, after Governor Brewer went to the courthouse and asked the State's attorneys to request the judge to sign a verdict for the defendant. The Governor explained that the attorneys had evidence that showed Davis not guilty. The judge did as requested. Governor Brewer said he had no desire to prosecute an innocent man.

Attorneys asked that four other indictments against Davis be filed to await future action, if desired.

Seeking Crawford Widow With New Warrant

CORONER'S WRIT HELD ILLEGAL

Delay in Hearing Will Mean Woman's Commitment to Jail, Attorney Says.

Following close upon a decision by Superior Court Justice Pendleton Saturday morning that a warrant signed by the Coroner of Carroll County was not enforceable in Fulton County, C. Z. Crawford, a nephew and beneficiary under the $250,000 will of Joshua B. Crawford, went before Justice of the Peace C. H. Girardeau and swore out a second warrant charging the widow, Mary Belle Crawford, with murder.

Constables R. F. Mauldin and W. W. Rogers went immediately to the home of Mrs. Crawford, at West Peachtree and Fourteenth streets, to arrest her and take her before Justice Girardeau for commitment trial.

The first warrant charging Mrs. Crawford with murder was signed by Coroner C. W. Baukin, of Carroll County, who had disinterred the body of Joshua B. Crawford and found evidence of poison. Crawford died in Fulton county March 27, 1909.

Hearing May Be Delayed.

The warrant reached Atlanta Friday, and Sheriff Mangum notified Mrs. Crawford to appear before Justice of the Peace D. K. Johnson Saturday morning, when a hearing would be held as to the authority of the Sheriff to serve the warrant in Fulton County.

Colonel J. S. James, attorney for the heirs, said later that he did not know whether both sides would be ready for the commitment trial, as the prosecution has several material witnesses out of the State.

In the event of delay in the commitment hearing, he said, Justice Girardeau would have no other alternative than to commit Mrs. Crawford to jail.

Arnold Sees Exoneration.

Attorney Arnold said Mrs. Crawford would be completely exonerated at the prospective hearing before a justice of the peace. He said the action was nothing more than a move to "force" civil procedure.

"It is not really the Crawford heirs who are fighting me," said Mrs. Crawford, "but the rather distant relatives who were not mentioned in any will. I settled with the real heirs according to the will left by Mr. Crawford's first wife. Every one was satisfied.

"I gave Charlie Crawford more than he was even entitled to by the will that was made before I even knew the man I later married. He thanked me for the generosity by later letting the very distant relatives prevail upon him to fight me. He deeded them an interest in his share of the property and filed suit. Since then he has fought me. The closer relatives have never been anything but my best friends."

Sheriff Mangum will select the Justice Court for the hearing instead of the attorneys. It is more than likely it will start in the forenoon, and it is not improbable it will be necessary to conclude Monday.

Widow's Side of Case.

Attorney Arnold, for Mrs. Crawford, issued the following statement Friday afternoon:

"There is nothing whatever new in the recent developments of the Crawford case.

"Four years after Crawford's death some of the collateral kinpeople of J. B. Crawford and his first wife, who are seeking to recover this estate, worth perhaps $100,000, from the widow and legatees under Crawford's will, went to Carroll County with their lawyer, J. S. James, and Dr. H. F. Harris, and on some kind of showing which we know nothing of persuaded the Coroner to exhume the

ENVOY LANE PROTESTS ENMITY

Mexican Government Asserts It Is Attempting to Crush Hostility. Minister Admits Crisis.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

MEXICO CITY, July 12.—Formal protest was lodged to-day by the United States Government against the action of the Mexican Government in allowing the Mexican press to stir up anti-American feeling.

Two notes were presented by United States Ambassador H. L. Wilson. At the same time denial was made of the report that United States warships in the harbor at Guayamas used their wireless and searchlights to aid the rebels.

Those publications have resulted in scattered demonstrations and rioting, although no arrests have been reported. Notices have been posted in the schools here for the children to secure small Japanse flags. These will be carried in a procession of children who will welcome the new Japanese Ambassador upon his arrival.

Jap Concessions Reported.

Mexico is cementing her relations with Japan, and it is reported that a special envoy will soon be sent to Tokio to invite the investment of Japanese capital and rich concessions will be given, it is said.

Following is a translation of the notices posted in the schools:

"The representative of the Japanese Emperor to our Government is about to arrive in this city. The attitude of mutual sympathy and esteem which our people and the people of Japan profess is well known.

"National Life in Balance."

"We firmly believe that the time has come to tender a public and solemn testimonial of international sympathy now that our national life has been put to a test by the imperialistic ambassador of a strong people.

"Therefore, the students of all the schools are asked to be at the railway station, each carrying a Japanese flag, to receive the Japanese Emperor's representative.

"This act will be significant and of great importance. The day and hour of the Japanese Ambassador's arrival will be announced later."

A number of American families have made preparations to leave here if further evidences of hostility are shown.

Minister Admits Crisis.

"It is true that the situation is delicate," said Minister of War Blanquet, "but the Government feels it can cope with it. Lamentable consequences may be occasioned by the anti-American feeling, but we are trying to kill it."

El Pais, most rabid of the newspapers, to-day published nearly a full-page picture of Friday's anti-American demonstration by students. On the editorial page the paper said:

"We see in Japan a future ally and defender of our independence, because such an alliance would be dangerous to the United States."

Showers Saturday Night and Sunday

"Showers Saturday night and Sunday," was the forecast made by the Atlanta office of the United States Weather Bureau Saturday.

Owing to almost unbroken cloudiness, Saturday was one of the coolest days of the summer. Maximum temperature up to 1 o'clock was 76, and the mercury rise was imperceptible. There was .24 of an inch rainfall in the morning.

Temperatures for the day read: Five, 6, 7 and 8 o'clock, 71; 10 o'clock, 74; 11 o'clock, 75; noon, 76; 1 o'clock, 76.

Trainmen in Strike Meeting Hunt Room To Find Dictographs

NEW YORK, July 12.—Nearly 1,000 representatives of the men employed on railroads east of Chicago met here to-day to determine definitely whether or not 100,000 trainmen shall strike in support of their demand for more money and a reorganization of working conditions.

To keep news of their deliberations from the managers every corner of the meeting hall was searched for hidden dictographs.

It also was to be decided to-day whether the trainmen would participate in a conference in Washington at which President Wilson and Secretary of Labor Wilson are to try to establish peace.

Forecasts were made that a strike would be called immediately unless guarantees were given that the Erdman act, providing for arbitration of strikes affecting common carriers, is amended to provide for six instead of three arbitrators.

Found—Monkey; Its Owner Please Hurry

Good news for Tony, the organ grinder!

Joko has been found.

With decorated collar and chain still trailing, a pet monkey that was wont to gather pennies for some Tony in Atlanta was discovered gayly chattering in the trees at the residence of Mrs. H. Winsta, on the Howell Mill road. She called Chief Beavers Saturday and said members of her family had been trying to capture the elusive Simian since Tuesday, but that Jocko had proved his superiority in climbing.

She suggested a posse. The Chief told her he would try to locate the owner and notify him to claim and capture his property.

Revolt Feared in Cuba Over Politics

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

HAVANA, July 12.—A tense political situation exists here in consequence of the assassination of General Riva, chief of the national police.

Reports were current to-day that followers of General Asbert, one of the men indicted for the murder of Riva, would attempt to storm the jail and liberate the prisoners.

Asbert has been deposed as Governor of the Province of Havana by President Menocal.

Troops still patroled the streets today and while there was no outward disorder there was a strong undercurrent of hostility.

$150,000,000 Baby Gets Farm as 'Toy'

NEWPORT, R. I., July 12.—Vinson Walsh McLean, the $150,000,000 baby, has a new plaything which his father, Edward McLean, says is the most sensible of all his toys, the total cost of which would foot up nearly as much as the salary of the President of the United States for a year. The new plaything is a farm with an Angora goat on it.

With goats, sheep and chickens, and the negro boy whom his father has picked out as a playmate, the young multimillionaire may grow up Democratic.

Boy on Wheel Hits Car and Breaks Arm

Samuel Griggs, a 12-year-old boy living at No. 76 Roy street, was knocked down and his arm broken by a street car in South Broad street, near Hunter, Saturday morning. The boy was riding a bicycle and ran into the car. An ambulance was called and the injured lad taken to a hospital.

Scores of persons saw the accident. A big crowd gathered before the arrival of the ambulance.

FIVE CAUGHT IN BEAVERS' VICE NET

Police, Spurred by Chief, Raid Boarding House—Additional Arrests Due Soon.

As the result of the increased activity by the detective and police departments, following the grilling given the detectives Friday afternoon by Chief Beavers, five new arrests were made by a squad of officers shortly after noon Saturday, in a raid on a boarding house at No. 164 1-2 Peters Street.

The persons under arrest gave their names as Lulu Bell, Maud Wilson, Mrs. Lee Berkstein and L. W. Berkstein. Effie Drummond, a 22-year-old country girl, who has been in Atlanta only four weeks, is held as a material witness.

A man whose name is given as Joe North escaped through a back window while the police were raiding the place. A general order has been issued for his arrest. The raid was made by Officers Brannan, Moncrief and Baker.

More Arrests Probable.

Chief Beavers declares he has evidence that the boarding house, which was run by the Bell woman, is an immoral resort. The quintet probably will be tried in Police Court Monday. The Chief intimated after the arrest that other arrests are probable within 24 hours as a result of developments of the day's investigation, which have brought out the following:

Dora Rothstein has made a new statement, implicating three more men in her downfall, and naming half a dozen girls as victims of the ring.

The detective department, following a severe grilling given them by Chief Beavers Friday night, is seeking evidence against the vice ring with renewed vigor.

Business Men Aid Chief.

Two prominent business men, interested in the welfare of the little Rothstein girl, have entered the case and are aiding Chief Beavers in securing evidence.

Information has come to Chief Beavers of a house where young girls are taken by men and ruined, and then taken to hotels or immoral resorts.

The dragnet has been thrown out for the son of one of Atlanta's most prominent business men, named by Hattie Smith in her story of immorality at the Cumberland Hotel.

Four persons—Hattie Smith, Mrs. Lola White, Paul Estes and Hoyt Monroe—were held for the Grand Jury Saturday morning on new charges, following the Smith girl's story of a "joy ride." Estes has said that he will make a confession, in which he will involve men hitherto unsuspected.

Girl Promises Confession.

Corinne Wilson, one of the victims of the ring, told Chief Beavers that when she is placed on the witness stand Saturday afternoon she will make a complete confession, implicating more than a dozen men and half a dozen young girls.

Chief Beavers attaches great importance to evidence already obtained by the two business men who have joined him in the crusade. These men held a conference with the Chief Saturday morning and told him of the existence of the house where young girls are taken and plied with liquor until they lose their senses.

The new statement of Dora Rothstein was made to these men. The girl, who charges that Corinne Wilson lured her into a life of shame, named three more men with whom she has had illegal relations, and also furnished the names of half a dozen girls who, she declared, had trodden the same path as she.

Has Score of Names of Men.

AFFIDAVITS SUPPORT MINCEY STORY

Attorney Leavitt Declares Tale That Negro Admitted Killing Girl Will Stand Test.

That several negro women overheard Jim Conley when he ran the insurance agent, Mincey, away with the alleged statement that he had just killed a girl and didn't want to kill any one else, and that the affidavits from the women are in the hands of the attorneys for the defense, was stated Saturday by Attorney J. H. Leavitt, who aided in obtaining the sensational affidavit from Mincey.

Attorney Leavitt defended the character of the man who made the affidavit and denied emphatically that Mincey even asked about the money he would receive as a witness, except whether his railroad fare would be paid if he were out of the city.

Explains Dukes' Doubts.

"I am attorney for the American Insurance Company and know its manager, J. S. Dukes, very well," said Leavitt. "He sought to discredit the affidavit very likely because Mincey left his employ to get a better position and he had to do some of the outside work. Mincey is a college graduate and is well known in Atlanta. It will be utterly impossible to shake his evidence.

"I am not employed to represent Frank and aided in getting this affidavit purely because I happened to stumble on to the information. Before I submitted it to Mr. Rosser, Frank's attorney, I spent eleven days investigating the character of the man, questioning the women in the neighborhood and generally verifying the facts. When I turned it over to him I was convinced of its absolute truth and that it would stand the acid test."

Habeas Corpus Fight Fails.

Habeas corpus proceedings to release Newt Lee collapsed in the court of Judge Ellis Saturday morning.

By agreement, Bernard L. Chappell, representing Lee, withdrew his application for a habeas corpus; Solicitor Dorsey promised to present a bill against Lee as a suspect in the Phagan murder case, with the expectation that a "no bill" would be returned. This appeared satisfactory to the attorneys for Lee, as well as to the State.

Luther Z. Rosser, Reuben R. Arnold and Herbert J. Haas, of counsel for Frank, were in court to fight against the appearance of Frank as a witness. William M. Smith represented Conley, one of the witnesses subpenaed.

Conley Gets Third Degree.

Jim Conley underwent a racking third degree late Friday afternoon at the hands of Solicitor General Hugh M. Dorsey and Attorney Frank A. Hooper in an effort to verify or discredit the W. H. Mincey affidavit, in which the negro was charged with confessing to the murder of a girl on the afternoon that Mary Phagan met her death.

The grilling of nearly four hours followed The Georgian's publication of the details of Mincey's accusations and was undertaken with the utmost secrecy, an attempt being made to avoid knowledge of the "sweating" becoming public by taking Conley to the Commissioners' room on the second floor of the police station by a circuitous route.

body and allow the doctor employed by these relatives to make a post-mortem examination. Neither the widow nor any of the other legatees who are defendants had any notice and were not present.

Claims Lungs Shriveled.

"The doctor for these people took various parts of the body of Crawford and made a test for morphine. He claims to have found a trace of morphine by applying the color test. He would not swear to any quantity of morphine or meconic acid and could not swear as to any quantity which the deceased took in his lifetime.

"This doctor also looked at the lungs of J. B. Crawford and swore that they had shriveled up about one-third of their size.

"The presence of the morphine and meconic acid, Dr. Harris (who was employed by these collateral kin) said, indicated that a large quantity had been taken by the deceased in his life, but how much he could not say. Harris could not swear that he found more than one-fiftieth of a grain, and said he made no test for quantity.

Tempest in Teapot.

"The whole thing is a tempest in a teapot, an effort to make a mountain out of a molehill.

"Dr. John W. Hurt, who treated Crawford for pneumonia in his last illness, and the trained expert nurse who attended him show that Crawford died of pneumonia. To ease Crawford's severe pain Dr. Hurt had given him several injections of morphine, and no secret was made of the fact. To ease Crawford's coughing Dr. Hurt had given him a cough medicine which contained opium, which was taken into the stomach.

"This administration of these drugs by Dr. Hurt, who is a safe and conservative physician, would account for vastly more than the trace of morphine found in Crawford's body by Harris.

Calls Charge Illegal.

"As to Dr. Harris' opinion that Dr. Hurt was wrong in diagnosing the case as pneumonia we will be able to show by various experts that Dr. Harris' opinion, based on the examination he made on these shriveled lungs four years after death, is worthless as compared with the opinion of Dr. Hurt and the trained nurse.

"We propose to try this case in court in this county and will be satisfied with the judgment that the court renders; but in justice to our client we state these facts to show that there is nothing in these charges.

"The Coroner of Carroll County had no right to make any investigation or recommendation as to Mrs. Crawford. The matter is entirely out of his jurisdiction.

"If anybody wants to make any sworn charge that Mrs. Crawford poisoned J. B. Crawford she will welcome any such investigation and will show it utterly groundless."

SIDELIGHTS on GEORGIA POLITICS

by JAMES B. NEVIN

Mr. McMichael of Marion Friday made pos-i-tively his first American appearance as Speaker Pro Tem of the Georgia House of Representatives, and got away with victorious eagles and things of that sort.

The Speakership Pro Tem carries no prerogative other than that of presiding when the Speaker is absent from the chair, and, as Mr. Burwell had not been absent a minute up to the time of Mr. McMichaels participation in the direction of affairs in the House, nobody in the House knew exactly what sort of a Speaker Pro Tem it had selected, so far as his ability to handle things was concerned.

Whatever doubt there may have been in anybody's mind that McMichael would get away with things was speedily removed. The gentleman from Marion seemed perfectly at home from the very beginning of his active career as Speaker Pro Tem, and was warmly applauded by his colleagues when he had finished Round 1.

Mr. McMichatel, by the way, is one of the best and most convincing speakers on the floor of the House, and has the happy faculty of making himself understood perfectly. He is clean-cut in enunciation and exceedingly easy to follow.

Moreover, he is very popular among his fellow members, and whatever he says attracts instant and interested attention.

Judge John T. Allen is, perhaps, the best speaker on the floor of the Senate. And that is no mean compliment, either, for there are several good speakers in that honorable body.

Judge Allen not only is a mighty good lawyer, but he also is a business man of widespread reputation. His voice has great carrying power, without in any way being harsh. Whenever he arises to address the Senate, is invariably given close attention.

Whether one agrees with what he says or not, Judge Allen never is at a loss for words in which to make himself perfectly plain.

Dispensing with the reading of the journal in the Senate is not easily effected. Notwithstanding the fact that the journal has been examined and approved, a motion to dispense with reading rarely gets by without objection.

The Senate is more dignified than the House, as a rule, anyway, and its methods of procedure are much more orderly and repressed.

It is an interesting circumstance that the Senate Committee on Constitutional Amendments has reported favorably a bill to raise the total of Senate membership from 44 to 60. There is an excellent chance that the bill will pass, and if it does, the impression is that the people will ratify it.

There is one little page in the Senate who makes it a regular business to fall reverently to his knees while the chaplain is praying every morning.

He doesn't look to be over 8 or 9 years old, and he evidently has not forgotten—yet—that the proper praying posture is kneeling.

A number of Georgia Legislators to-day forwarded to Washington—some to the President and others to Secretary Bryan—letters endorsing Colonel J. Lindsay Johnson, of Rome, for a consulship, preferably in the Orient.

It is well-known, of course, that the Colonel wishes to be named Consul to Shanghai, and his friends in the Legislature—of which he is several times a former member—evidently are desirous of hastening the appointment along in such wise as they may.

South Georgia is talking of former President of the Senate, W. S. West, of Valdosta, for Governor, in succession to Governor Slaton.

If South Georgia has an eye on the Executive Office after Governor Slaton gets through, it will be readily admitted on all sides that Colonel West would make an ideal candidate.

He knows the game, he has the friends, and assuredly he has the ability—and what more could South Georgia ask of a favorite son?

Citizen J. L. H. Waldrop, of Clayton County, 77 years of age, boasts with pride that he has voted for a Brown for Governor of Georgia seven times.

Away back yonder in the dim and distant past he voted four times for former Governor Joseph M. Brown's distinguished father, Joseph E. Brown, and of late years he voted three times for that gentleman's son.

Mr. Waldrop makes no bones of admitting, indeed, that he always has voted for that tribe of particular Browns, and stands ready to repeat the performance whenever occasion shall arise for doing so, if it ever does again.

William R. Leaken, Collector of the Port of Savannah, has appointed B. Palmer Axson as an assistant in his office, with the rank of inspector. Axson has already begun his new duties, appointment was made by Collector although the appointment has not yet been approved.

There is no doubt that the appointment will be made permanent. The Leaken without solicitation or political consideration.

The new appointee is a blood relative of Mrs. Woodrow Wilson.

Representative Barry Wright, of Floyd, hopes to revive the scheme to convert the Western and Atlantic terminals in Atlanta, between Madison Avenue and Fryor Street, in a grand overhead plaza, and to that end will earnestly champion a bill in the House providing for the same.

Mr. Wright is a member of the Western and Atlantic Railway Committee of the House, and is capable of putting up a mighty good fight for anything he undertakes.

The plaza scheme, he thinks, is an admirable solution of a much vexed question, and a probable effective factor in disposing of the smoke nuisance in Atlanta.

Chicago's Mayor to Ban Cabaret Tights

CHICAGO, July 12.—Mayor Carter Harrison has announced that he proposes to stamp out the wearing of tights, singing of suggestive songs and exhibition of "animal" dances in cabarets, summer parks and amusement places. An ordinance prohibiting these three things will be sent to the City Council by the Mayor Monday.

"I did not know," said Mayor Harrison, "that women clad in tights pass among the tables in some cafes."

Bacon Halts Plan for Bill-Drafting Bureau

WASHINGTON, July 12.—Senator Bacon, of Georgia, created consternation in the Senate to-day when he declared he was so shocked at the attempt of Senator Owen to have the Senate pass a bill creating a bureau to draft bills upon the request of the President and others that he was completely "knocked off his pins."

The bill was withdrawn for further consideration. It provides for a committee of eight Senators or 25 Representatives.

Senator Bacon referred to the President as the schoolmaster, who, it is proposed, shall do work Senators are supposed to do.

CHIEF SETS NET FOR NEW VICE SUSPECTS

Scores Detectives for Alleged Laxity in Reporting Cases. Arrests Due Soon.

Chief Beavers now has the names of between fifteen and twenty men, and more than a dozen young girls, furnished to him by Hattie Smith, Dora Rothstein and Corinne Wilson. He said, as can be found, they will be brought into court, and cases made where there is evidence enough to justify such a course. Those against whom cases are not made will be summoned as witnesses and forced to tell what they know.

One of the startling incidents of the investigation came in police court Saturday morning, in the hearing of Hattie Smith, Mrs. Lola White, Paul Estes and Hoyt Monroe. The Smith girl, heretofore one of the main sources of evidence, flatly refused to talk when placed on the stand. She would neither affirm nor deny that she had taken an auto ride with Estes and Monroe and that she had had illicit relations with them.

Startling Story Expected.

The stories of the other three, however, were sufficient for the holding of the quartet.

What is expected to be the most startling and sordid story told since the beginning of the vice crusade will be sold in Police Court Saturday afternoon by Corinne Wilson when she is placed on trial on a charge of disorderly conduct.

The two men whom she named in her first statement, A. C. Dollar and W. W. Suttles, will be tried at the same time, the former on a disorderly conduct charge and the latter on a kidnaping charge.

Dora Rothstein, arrested with the Wilson girl, will be tried before Judge Pendleton, of the Juvenile Court, as she is only 14 years old. She will appear in Police Court Saturday, however, as a witness.

Chief Warns Detectives.

In his conference with the detective department late Friday afternoon, which was held in Chief Lanfod'r office behind closed doors, Chief Beavers took the detectives severely to task for their laxity in reporting vice cases. He intimated strongly that the detectives were not doing their duty and not getting results.

"It is as much your duty as it is the duty of any other man on the force," Chief Beavers is said to have told them, "to report the existence of vice. In the future all knowledge gained by detectives as to the existence of immoral resorts must be reported at once to headquarters. If you personally are engaged on some other case and have not time to work the vice case, report it so some one else can investigate and make the case."

The story of the Wilson girl is fraught with possibilities, Chief Beavers declares. She will give a detailed account of her adventures after she met Dora Rothstein at the White City on July4, and it is understood that she will make revelations of her life before she was married, several months ago, by which she will involve several downtown hotels. She has promised Chief Beavers that she will make public the name of every man who has been with her and the Rothstein girl during the past two weeks.

The girl already has given the Chief the names of several men whom she asserts are connected with the vice ring, and in all probability these men will be subpenaed as witnesses in the case. They will be brought into court, and if the evidence warrants it cases of disorderly conduct or statutory charges will be made against them. If there is no evidence that they are directly connected with the Wilson girl and the Rothstein girl, they will be held as witnesses and compelled to tell all they know about vice in Atlanta.

Fine Entertainment Planned for Inspecting Party by Troops Maneuvering on St. Simons.

ST. SIMONS, July 12.—Preparations are complete for the visit of Governor Slaton and his staff, who are expected here to-day to inspect the camp of the Fifth Regiment. The visitors will be entertained and shown everything of interest on the Island.

The militiamen have settled to the routine of military camp life. They are being instructed in extended order work and how to attack a strong defensive position. Captain Kimbrough, of the United States Army, and Colonel Pomeroy, of the Fifth Regiment, are the instructors.

The social life on the Island is a pleasant feature of the encampment. Dances and band concerts are given every night.

Chief of Staff Frederic J. Paxon and other members of the Governor's staff are inspecting the Fifth Regiment of the National Guard at St. Simons Island, where the regiment is encamped. They will return to Atlanta Sunday or Monday.

PEACE PLAN FOR HEALEY STRIKE HANGS FIRE

Committee to Settle Walkout Involving 150 Men on New Building Reported Named.

Negotiations looking to the settlement of the strike declared Friday by union men employed on the Healey Building had not materialized at noon Saturday. During the morning a number of strikers gathered near the structure, but no demonstration was attempted.

President C. Harrison Barnes, of the Building Trades Council, who called the strike, maintains silence on the matter, although it is understood representatives to a conference with the contractor, B. M. Walker, have been named. This conference may be held Saturday afternoon.

The strike, which was called Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock, was the result of the alleged awarding of an electrical contract to a concern which does not employ union labor. This act on the part of Contractor Walker, the union leaders claim, is a violation of certain alleged existing contracts between employer and employee.

Fourteen labor organizations are involved, including the structural iron workers, brick masons, plasterers, steel workers, plumbers, gas workers, steam and electrical engineers, painters, marble cutters, carpenters and hod carriers—in all, about 150 men.

According to statements Saturday morning, a number of the structural iron workers have planned to leave Atlanta to take other jobs. While the steel work on the Healey Building is nearly completed, about three weeks work for the riveting gang and ten days work for the steel men remain.

The strike will not involve other buildings, it is believed.

MEYERS SUICIDE THROUGH FEAR OF INSANITY

Former Atlanta Telephone Man Is Found Dead in St. Louis Hotel. Health Was Broken.

ST. LOUIS, July 12.—Dr. Heine Marks, uncle of Charles L. Meyers, of Nashville, Tenn., who shot and killed himself at the Planters Hotel Friday, said to-day that in his opinion his nephew's suicide was due to a fear of insanity, brought about by overwork.

Meyers suffered a nervous breakdown six months ago and had to quit work. He was general contractor for the Cumberland Telephone Company.

A few days ago Meyers told his bride of three months that if he became convinced that he would go insane he would kill himself. A close guard was kept over him, but he eluded it. Funeral arrangements will follow the inquest to-day. His wife was Miss Pearl Goldstein, of Nashville.

Mr. Meyers, who was a special agent for the Southern Bell Telephone Company, was regarded as an efficient employee. Formerly he lived in Nashville, where he was connected with the Cumberland, and retained his position when that concern was taken over by the Southern. Several months ago he was transferred to Atlanta, but worked here but a few weeks when his health failed and he took a vacation.

Mr. Meyers and his bride arrived in St. Louis Thursday to visit his brother.

MULHALL USED LABOR BODY AS HIS TOOL

Professional Lobbyist Tells of Political Welding of Unions and Manufacturers.

WASHINGTON, July 12.—An interesting glimpse of "inside" politics was given by Colonel Martin M. Mulhall in his testimony to-day before the Overman Lobby Committee.

How as president of the Baltimore Working Men's Association, though lobbying for the National Association of Manufacturers, he lined up the working men against Senator McComas, who was fought because of his advocacy of an eight-hour law, was told by the witness.

Mulhall's testimony portrayed the Manufacturers' Association in the light of a big and powerful non-partisan organization bent on defeating legislation favorable to labor interests and legislators who opposed the association.

Efforts to swing the labor vote in Rhode Island in 1904 for Senator Nelson W. Aldrich also were described by Mulhall. He spent ten days in the State, he said, at the solicitation of Senator Foraker, of Ohio.

Labor union leaders, Colonel Mulhall said, knew of his connection with the Manufacturers' Association.

Colonel Mufhall charged Marshall Cushing, secretary of the National Association of Manufacturers, with trying to defeat William Hughes, now Senator from New Jersey, because Hughes was active in support of labor measures.

Mulhall told the committee "all you had to do was to see 'Boss' Barnes to get a bill killed in the Legislature at Albany."

Senate Beats House for Possession of Mulhall.

WASHINGTON, July 12.—The opening skirmish for physical possession of Colonel Martin M. Mulhall was won by the Senate Lobby Investigation Committee to-day. Chairman Garrett, of the House committee, had subpenaed the witness for examination at 9 o'clock to-day, but late last night the Senators, finding their prerogatives might be infringed upon, told Mulhall to show up at 9 o'clock at the Senate, and he did.

Garrett indicated that if the Senate committee persisted in stopping the House, the House committee will have a subpena out at all times for Mulhall.

James E. Emery, counsel for the National Association of Manufacturers, promised to give a list of about 40 witnesses to disprove Mulhall's accusations affecting business men. He said he was trying to locate some men he knew could tell of Mulhall's record.

ONCE NEWSIE, NOW HE AIDS IN MAKING LAWS

Georgia lawmaker, who rose from ranks of "newsies" to halls of Legislature.

REPRESENTATIVE E. D. COLE, OF BARTOW.

Representative Ed Cole Has Acquired a Fortune, but Has Lost Most of His Name.

In the first place, Representative Ed Cole, of Bartow, was not christened Edward, or Edwin, or Ed, or anything like that.

As a matter of fact, his full entitlements are Emreid Dargan Cole!

That, however, was entirely too fancy an outlay of names for this gentleman when first he started out to make his own way in life, and so he elected to have himself called "E. D.," which inevitably evoluted into plain, ordinary, old-fashioned "Ed" as time ran on.

Ed Cole began his business career with a total capital of $1.35. Besides that, he possessed nothing beyond one suit of clothes, vintage unknown, a couple of pairs of socks and a superabundance of energy and pluck.

He plunged into business for himself at 16 by getting a job as train "butcher" on a jerkwater railroad in South Carolina, and he soon enlarged his capital of $1.35 to 100 times that amount.

Not long after this experience one of the big news agencies heard of Cole and grabbed him. Before long he was in charge of a division or so for that concern—and now he still is on the sunny side of 30, worth along toward—well, he is worth a six-figure sum, all right, anyway!

In casting about for a vice chairman of the important Ways and Means Committee of the House, Speaker Burwell looked into Cole's record. He became convinced that Cole was one of the safest and sanest business men in the House, and as that was exactly what he was looking for, Cole got the assignment.

Cole's inheritance tax bill is House bill No. 1, and is generally accepted as the most intelligent inheritance tax measure pending in the Legislature. It likely is the one that will be enacted into law. Cole never introduced it until he felt sure it was right and modeled along the most approved lines.

Christian Endeavor In Sunrise Meeting

LOS ANGELES, July 12.—A majority of the delegates to the International Christian Endeavor convention here were on hand for the sunrise meeting half an hour before dawn.

Reasons assigned to-day for the action of the convention in selecting Chicago for its 1915 meeting were the raising of a $10,000 convention entertainment fund, the fact that there are more than 1,000,000 members of the Christian Endeavor within a radius of a few miles of Chicago, and the presence in this country of thousands of visitors who will be able to stop in Chicago on their way to the Panama Exposition.

JACKSON, MISS., July 12.—C. C. Smith, head of the prison board, convicted Wednesday night of conspiracy to defraud the State, this morning held a two-hour conference with Governor Brewer. Smith was accompanied to the Governor's mansion by the Sheriff.

Governor Brewer refused to say what passed between them, but it is rumored Smith made a complete confession of irregularities in the penitentiary department.

Whether Smith admitted there was any truth in the rumors regarding irregularities in the sale of State cotton is not known.

TWO BADLY HURT WHEN TROLLEY HITS AUTO

Marietta Car Smashes Smyrna Physician's Machine, Driven by Fifteen-Year-Old Boy.

Dr. W. T. Pace, a physician of Smyrna, and his chauffeur, Fred Reed, 15, narrowly escaped death Saturday morning shortly before 10 o'clock when an incoming Marietta trolley car smashed into the physician's automobile at a curve just beyond Carmichael Station.

Dr. Pace and young Reed, although badly cut and bruised about the face and arms, were able to leave the Atlanta Hospital, where they were rushed, shortly before noon. The car, a new two-passenger Ford, was demolished.

According to Dr. Pace, the street car bore down on them at a rapid rate before either he or the chauffeur knew there was a car in sight.

"The car came down the hill at a rate I would estimate at from 40 to 45 miles an hour," said Dr. Pace, "and we did not see it in time to get out of the way. The motorman blew his whistle once, but it was too late. My chauffeur tried to reverse the machine and then came the crash."

Inspector Winn, of the Georgia Railway and Power Company, said it had been reported to him that the boy driving the car apparently lost his nerve and stopped his car on the track. The car was filled with passengers.

After the business of the day, the Chamber of Commerce will tender the Legislature a big barbecue and Brunswick stew on the banks of the Oconee River, near Athens.

Twenty-two members of the Senate and 61 members of the House composed the party. A big contingent of the Senate and House pages went along, by special invitation of the Athens Chamber of Commerce.

.:. Two in a Train .:.

"A THIRD class single to Galway, please!" Miss Mathers moved away from the ticket office, but not before a tall man, wrapped in a thin ulster, with a tweed cap pulled down over his eyes, had seen her—started first at sound of her soft voice, and then deliberately followed her to the waiting train. It was a bitter winter evening, and Miss Mathers shuddered inwardly as she thought of that long, long train journey through South Wales, the odious crossing of the Irish Channel and the wearisome journey to Galway.

Tears started to her eyes as she thought of past arrivals there. How different they had been! Then she had traveled thither as a guest. Now all was sadly changed, and she was going back to dear, well-remembered places to earn her own living as a governess.

Seated in the corner of a third-class compartment, Mary Mathers settled herself under her rug for the first stage of her journey.

A warning whistle from the train—the door was wrenched open, and a man, wrapped in a big ulster, got in, followed by a porter with a bag and bundle of golf sticks. There was a momentary bustle, during which the express began to glide slowly along the platform. The porter jumped out, shut the door—they were off.

And in the opposite corner was sitting——

Mary's heart gave a jump.

"I thought it was you," said Meredith, quietly. "Aren't you going to speak to me?"

"Of course," she stammered, with lips that tried so hard not to quiver. "You startled me so." She smiled at him gallantly. "You see, you are about the last person I expected to see. Are you going to Ireland?"

The Old Haunts.

"Yes, and you? To the old haunts?" The quick tears started to her eyes.

"Yes, to one of the old haunts near Galway."

"Lough Corrib?" he asked.

Mary winced.

"Yes, just on the shores, half-way to Oughterard."

He leant forward.

"You don't mean to say that you are going to the Wintons?"

"Yes."

"Good! So am I. They're getting up a first-rate house party, you know. I'm awfully glad you're going to be one of them, too."

Mary gave a little gasp, opened her mouth as if to speak, and said nothing. What could she say?

Tell him the truth, of course—that instead of an honored guest she was going to the Wintons as governess at $150 a year, relegated to the schoolroom in a distant wing, dining when the rest of the party lunched, disappearing back again to the distant wing of the house with her charges. Perhaps now and then she would be sent for to play accompaniments or something of the kind. But if Meredith was to be in the house, how could she bear it? How could she tell him? He probably knew nothing about her reverses of fortune. She couldn't blurt it out—apropos of nothing at all.

Three years ago she and Meredith had seen a good deal of each other. No other man had ever touched her heart or made any great difference in her life, but he—she wrenched herself from her dreams with an effort as she spoke.

A Bad Prospect.

"I'm afraid it's going to be a bad night. Are you obliged to cross?"

"Yes."

"And if I remember rightly, you don't care much about the sea, do you?"

"I care this much—that I loathe it," said Mary, with a faint smile. "I have never got over my distaste for boats and everything to do with them. And the Irish Channel is always rough when I cross it."

Meredith laughed.

"Have you only just come back from East Africa?" said Mary, breaking the silence that had fallen between them.

"Three months ago."

"But you will go out again?"

"I don't think so," he said slowly. "It all depends on——"

The door into the corridor was slid open; the dining car attendant looked in.

"Take your seats for dinner, please."

He passed on.

"You will dine, won't you?" asked Meredith. "Nothing like a good meal, you know."

The color mounted to Mary's face. How could she tell him that dinner was not a possibility to her, simply because she had no spare money to waste? She had a little packet of sandwiches in her bag, and some biscuits, but her appetite sickened at the thought of them.

"I am not hungry," she said, evasively. "I couldn't eat any dinner."

Left Alone.

"Very well. Willful woman must always have her way, but don't say I didn't warn you. Will you be all right if I leave you? I feel the pangs of a furious hunger."

"Of course. I am quite comfortable."

Left alone, Mary sat up and gazed out into the darkness. Her face burned. How could she endure the hours of this journey with Meredith sitting there, talking, looking at her? She must get away from him. Her hard-won self-control might desert her, and then—— She rapidly collected her rug, papers and bag and slipped into the corridor, walking with difficulty toward the far end of the swinging train to another compartment.

Here she would be alone. Presently, to the hum of the express, Mary fell asleep, wrapped in her rug, and dreamed things that brought a smile to her lips and a color to her soft cheeks.

And in the dining car, at his solitary meal, Meredith wondered why fate had deliberately thrown him and Mary together, when that impassable barrier of wealth still stood between them. It had driven him away from her once before, and now—well, he must let things slide. Perhaps, that same interfering dame Fortune might find a way out.

The Irish air was soft and fresh, and the gray country looked inexpressibly lovely to Mary's tired eyes. The crossing had been just as odious as she expected, and she had hurried from the boat in the wintry darkness to the waiting room, dreading, yet hoping, to find Meredith at her side. She saw his tall figure once. He was looking about him, but he did not see her, and she took refuge in a carriage with three other women, and slept away some of her exhaustion on the way to Waterford. There she had to change, and on the platform the first person she saw was—Meredith. He came up to her at once.

"Why did you run away last night?" he said.

"I—I"—

"I don't want to worry you, but you must let me look after you. You look half dead. Have you had any breakfast?"

"Yes."

She had had tea and bread and butter in the train, and the cool morning air had whipped a faint color to her white cheeks.

Slowly they crept away into the thick mist, nothing to be seen but low fields, stone walls and driving mist on every side. Mary felt her spirits sinking lower and lower as she approached her destination.

"Are we there?" she said.

"No, we've stopped for something—signal against us I expect."

Meredith put down the window and looked out into the mist. He saw a row of low sheds, the outline of a tiny station, a branch line, and nothing beyond them but a couple of other compartments. The rest of the train had gone.

She Confesses.

There they were, left behind—in a siding.

"What has happened?" asked Mary.

Meredith turned and looked at her with a rueful sort of smile.

"Left behind!" cried Mary aghast. "What do you mean?"

"They've run us into a siding, and the train has gone on without us. The fact is, I was asleep. I only woke up to find ourselves dumped down here. They let us get into the coach they were leaving behind—idiots! But we'll get on somehow, Mary. After all, it only means a little delay."

He said her name involuntarily, and Mary's heart jumped. Then a feeling of dismay swept over her.

"But we may not arrive till night," she said. "I suppose the only thing we can do is to drive, if a vehicle is to be had. We must be twenty miles from our destination, at least."

"I suppose so, but what does it matter? They'll understand."

"It may not matter for you," said Mary, in a low, harsh voice. "They will excuse in a guest what they may not pardon in the governess."

Meredith stared at her as if she had suddenly gone mad.

"The what?" he said.

"The governess. That is what I am."

"You're mad."

"I'm not; it's a fact."

"You a governess? What does it mean? What are you masquerading for?"

"It's no masquerade. I'm a governess because—I can not dig, and to beg I am ashamed," said Mary, with a miserable little laugh. "That's all."

"But do you mean to say you've got to do it?" said Meredith, dazedly.

"Yes. Everything went in a big smash on the Stock Exchange more than a year ago. I have to do something, and the Wintons wanted a governess for their two little nephews who are living with them, that's all."

"All!" said Meredith, violently. "And I knew nothing of it. I never heard a word of this before. When we met last do you know what sent me away in such haste? Can you guess?"

"No."

"It was because I was afraid to stay. I loved you so much, and I could not speak. I was only a poor soldier of fortune—you were a wealthy heiress. I had already been called a fortune hunter by those who must have seen how I lingered at your side. I didn't think you cared, so I went away. Now, Mary darling, I'm free to speak. I can't give you the riches that are gone, but I can give you a good home and lots of love. Do you care a little? Try to, Mary, when I care so much. I believe Fate brought us together on purpose."

"And let us in a siding," said Mary, with a smile breaking over her face like sunshine through mist.

"It might have left us in a worse place," cried Meredith, his arm about her shoulders. "Mary, is it going to be 'Yes?'"

"Yes—yes," murmured Mary.

Beauty Secrets of Beautiful Women

How Dot Wilson Found Milk an Aid to Natural Loveliness

By LILIAN LAUFERTY.

IF you want to have your skin white, your eyes bright, your digestion good and your weight always adjusted to a pleasing plumpness that does not increase to stoutness, try the milk diet. This is pretty pink and white, sparkling-eyed Dot Wilson's great beauty secret, and she longs for converts to her theory of the simple life."

I found Miss Wilson and her sisters in a cool, wind-swept room down at Brighton Beach, New York, and after I had adjusted myself to this triple personality as illustrated by the "three-twin" sisters, we settled down to a cozy little visit that gave me one or two brand-new ideas for the attainment of beauty. The first idea was something no one said—it was just the generous, kindly attitude of admiration and willingness to have their "baby sister" featured that Miss Doris Wilson and Miss Alma showed throughout our interview. Next fall B. F. Keith will give you all a chance to see the three clever girls who make up the Doris Wilson trio—but before that time pray let me present to you a bit of their philosophy of life—and beauty.

Only Milk.

"Milk, milk, nothing but milk—that is what my mother brought me up on. None of her children had any other article of diet until they were 12; and I have never found anything so nourishing, so easy to digest and so productive of good results. So milk is my diet, and though the girls vary from it, they often regret some indiscretion of diet to the tune of a pain of a skin rash or one of the ills that food is so generous about presenting people with," said Miss Dot.

"I live on milk—no water to drink, for milk takes its place. No indigestible food can tempt me, for milk keeps me so well, so buoyant and so free from nerves that I flourish thereon and never long for the flavor of any food but my tried and true friend. About twice a year I have a taste of some such foreign substance as ice cream. Oh, yes, I can eat food, and I do occasionally, but I don't like it.

"I drink eight quarts of milk a day—not iced milk to shock the sensitive stomach nerves, but normal tempered milk.

"I sip it slowly—'Just sneak it down,' said one specialist who cures all sorts of nervous and digestive diseases by a seven week' milk cure. Well, it takes me about fifteen minutes to drink one glass of milk, and I am enjoying it all the time. We're all only bigger babies—babies grown up—and if it is so good for the wee things to live on milk, why should it not be good for them to go on living on milk, the friendly food of their childhood? The girls drink five or six glasses of milk a day, and whenever they are tired or nervous, or feel on the verge of a little breakdown, back they go to the milk diet, and then they just get in tune with things again."

Miss Dot Wilson.

I looked at the three pairs of bright eyes—blue, blue-gray and hazel-gray—each pair with a spark of light at the back of their starry depths; I studied the creamy, peachblow complexions, and the gracefully rounded, tall figures, and I decided that as a near-milk cure made you pretty and the absolute milk-dietist was conceded to be the prettiest of the sisters, perhaps it would be a good idea to go right off and corner the milk market.

THEIR MARRIED LIFE

By MABEL HERBERT URNER.

PARIS at 7 o'clock of a summer evening! The gleaming lights, the gay gowns of the women, the trees, the outdoor cafes—Helen, clinging to Warren's arm, walked down the broad boulevard athrill with the glamour of it all.

It had been just four hours since they arrived from Cherbourg—tired, dusty, travel-stained. But now, rested and in cooler clothes, they started out to find, as Warren expressed it, "a place to feed."

Where should they go? Helen suggested a number of well-known places that she had read of in the guide book. But Warren was determined to have their first dinner at a restaurant he had been particularly fond of when he was in Paris eight years before.

Although he had forgotten the name, he had felt confident of his sense of location. They had taken a 'bus to Porte St. Martin and had walked several blocks in what he felt was the right direction.

"Must be around here somewhere," frowning down a street that was plainly unfamiliar. "I don't believe they've moved."

"Isn't that a restaurant over there—where the lights are?" asked Helen hopefully.

"By Jove! I believe that's the place," as they crossed the wide street. "I'd have sworn it was on the other side."

Entering, they were met by an officious head waiter, who bustled ahead, ushering them to a table in an inner room.

"Oh, we don't want to sit back here," objected Warren. "Give us a table out on the veranda."

"Sorry, monsieur, but they're all taken."

"Why, there's a half dozen vacant ones up at that end."

"They're all reserved, monsieur," repeated the head waiter stolidly.

Warren turned to Helen with a scowling "So they know that game over here, too. This fellow's looking for five francs. Well, what do you say? Want to sit back here—or look up some other place?"

"Oh, dear, let's go somewhere else," resenting the supercilious air of the head waiter, who stood impatiently tapping the dinner card with his pencil.

Outside Warren demanded curtly:

"Now, where to? It's getting late and I'm hungry. We don't want to wander around all night, you know."

"But, dear, we don't want to stay there. That man was almost insolent."

He Blames Her.

"Well, you're pretty darn particular," as usual throwing the responsibility upon her. "We'd have been sure of good food there, anyway. But you're always kicking. Suppose you find a place now."

Helen realized that Warren was on the verge of one of his irritable moods, when he would blame her for whateyer happened, however inconsistent or unjust. He had had nothing to eat since that early and unsatisfactory luncheon on the train. It was a critical moment, and she was desperately anxious to find some other good restaurant at once—before his growing hunger increased his irritability.

They walked on for several blocks, Helen gazing anxiously in every direction, while Warren maintained the scowling, sullen silence that always foreboded a storm.

"Oh, there, dear!" eagerly, as she caught sight of a balcony, high above the street, with white clothed tables and rose-shaded lights. "Doesn't that look like a good place?"

"You can't tell anything about these strange places in Paris," growled Warren. "May be rotten. But we've got to eat somewhere. Come on. And we'll stay here—understand? Whether we get a table you like or not. No more trotting around for me to-night."

Helen followed Warren up the broad, red-carpeted stairs, hoping desperately that at this place things would "go right."

The first glimpse was disappointing. The room was crowded. Would they have to go somewhere else?

"Sounds Good."

As they stood uncertainly at the doorway, a couple rose from a most desirable table on the veranda—one that Helen had seen from the street. If they could only get that!

The next moment the head waiter was bowing them toward it. Two other waiters rushed forward with fresh linen and silver, and a third placed a footstool for Helen's feet.

"Oh, dear, it's a wonderful place," sinking back with a sense of infinite relief that a critical situation had been safely passed.

"Well, we'll not get enthusiastic till we see what the food's like," grunted Warren, somewhat appeased by the attention they had received.

"I can't make anything out of this," scowling at the menu, which was illegibly written in French with pale purple ink.

"Will you have our 5-franc table d'hote dinner, monsieur?" asked a waiter at his elbow.

"Umph, you speak English? Well, that simplifies things. What do we get with that dinner?"

"Hors d'oeuvres, potage, fish, entree, roast, salade, entrements and a bottle of red or white Bordeaux."

"That sounds pretty good," assented Warren. "All right; we'll try it."

To Helen the atmosphere of the place and the street scene below was one of enchantment. She was beginning to feel the charm of Paris.

With the hors d'oeuvres and first glass of wine, the scowling frown on Warren's brow had relaxed, and with the thick green Saint Germain soup he grew almost genial.

"Just taste that fish! It's great. What they call filet of sole at home is only flounder. We never see the real thing there. This is an all right place."

"Oh, I'm so glad we found this, dear. For I felt that you were getting out of humor, and would blame me for not staying at that other place," exclaimed Helen, who, womanlike, always wanted to go back over a situation, instead of being content to let well enough alone. "And I couldn't bear to have our first dinner in Paris an unhappy one."

"Who in thunder was going to make it unhappy, unless you were?" growled Warren, who hated post-mortems. "What the devil are you harping on it now for, anyway?"

"Oh, I only meant, dear—" began Helen, hastening to conciliate. But fortunately at this moment the waiter uncovered the fowl, roasted to a delicate brown, and Warren's attention was diverted from Helen's untactful remark.

"Dear, there's not so much difference in the gowns worn by the French women," commented Helen, now anxious to change the subject. There aren't any sensational dresses here. That woman over there in pink, is rather striking, but any of the others might be in New York."

"Well, this isn't the sort of place where you'd see much in the way of dress. Some night I'll take you to supper at Maxim's. The gowns there'll be striking enough."

"Oh, are we going to Maxim's?" delightedly. "I thought it was a dreadful place."

"Not so dreadful as they want you to think—that's their best asset. You'll find it pretty tame. More than half the crowd will be rubber necks like ourselves."

But Helen had read and heard much of Maxim's, and as she minced over the fruit salad she gazed down on the gay boulevard in eager anticipation of a supper there.

"Dear, what IS this?" as the waiter placed before them two small brown jars filled with a thick creamy substance. "Search me!" shrugged Waren, investigating it with a spoon.

"That's Creme de Zeigny, Monsieur. Will you have sugar with it?"

"I'll try it straight first."

"Oh, it's delicious, dear," exclaimed Helen enthusiastically. "It's sort of sour, salty and sweet! More like a delicate liquid cheese."

Very Smooth.

"By Jove, that is pretty smooth," admitted Warren. Isn't this the stuff the Thustons raved over when they got back last year? We'll have this often—that's sure."

When the waiter had cleared off the table, Warren lit his cigar and turned over the check placed unobtrusively before him.

"Ten francs—two dollars! Well that's what I call a good run for your money. Everything specially cooked, too—and that was a whole chicken. To get a dinner like that in New York, you'd have to order it a la carte, and with that wine it would cost you not a cent less than $10."

"Now aren't you glad we didn't stay at that other restaurant?" insisted Helen with a true feminine persistency. "The food COULDN'T have been any better! You see I didn't find such a bad place after all."

But Warren was no longer in an inflammable mood. The excellent dinner had had a most pacifying effect on his temper. So to this rather indiscreet remark, he only shrugged a good-natured: "Umph, that's right—rub it in!"

Advice to a Young Man

By DOROTHY DIX.

A YOUNG man, who is ambitious and who feels within himself the ability to rise in the world, is very much in love with a pretty young girl who has no aspirations beyond a new dress and going to Coney Island or a cheap theater.

The young man is making enough money for them to be married on and live in fair comfort in their present status in life, but he is not satisfied with this.

He is anxious to get an education and study a profession. To this the sweetheart objects. She isn't willing for the young man to make his way through college. She doesn't see any use in an education, any how. When the young man talks to her about books it bores her to death, and when he wants to take her to hear a good lecture or good music she offsets it with a proposal to take in a vaudeville show.

The young man wants to know whether he should give up his books or his girl, or if there is any way in which he could interest his fiancee in intellectual pursuits and kindle the fires of ambition in her soul.

To answer the last question first, I would say, no. The homely old proverb about the impossibility of making a silk purse out of a sow's ear is still gospel true. There is no way to make a clod aspire, and you can no more change the tastes of a woman who was born without a perception of the finer things of life than you can change the color of her eyes, or the height of her stature.

Born That Way.

The girl who does not perceive the advantage of an education, or the necessity for one, who yawns over even a novel and who doesn't see why anybody reads the daily paper, who is absolutely and totally unintellectual was simply born that way. There's some lack in her mental equipment, and nothing that her husband can do is going to supply it. She was just born that way, and that way she will stay to her dying day, and it isn't her fault.

Such a woman may be the best of housekeepers, the most devoted of wives, but she is no mental companion for an intelligent man. Many men marry this kind of a girl because she has a pretty face, and then torture her trying to make her clever—something she can never be. This is cruelly unjust. He who marries a girl who frankly admits that she doesn't like to read and has no ambition should never bother her with books, or reproach her with her lack of progressiveness.

As to which he should take when a man is called upon to choose between his career and his sweetheart, I should say take the career every time, because an ambitious man soon learns to hate any woman who is the handicap that prevents him winning in the race of life. When even those that we love become a burden upon us that keep us from success—good-bye love! This is unromantic, but true.

Many an ambitious man finds out after marriage that he has saddled himself unknowingly with a wife who can not and will not keep pace with him, and who holds him back from the achievements that he is capable of making. Such a man is the victim of a hard and bitter fate, but in honor there is nothing left for him but to bear with whatever fortitude he can the misfortune that he has brought upon himself.

A Chance.

But the man who finds out before marriage that the girl he thinks himself in love with is not his mental and spiritual mate, that she can not think his thoughts, that she is not interested in the pursuits that he is interested in; that she does not wish to reach the goal toward which his feet are set, has still a chance to save himself from a marriage that is bound to bring misery both to himself and the woman.

For what attracts him to her is only the ephemeral charms of her youth and good looks, and when they are gone, as they must be in a few years, nothing remains but the memory of the sacrifice he has made for her, and the irksomeness of a tie that binds him to a wife with whom he has not one thing in common.

In that day a man remembers what he might have been and is not. He sees other men, no better equipped than himself, climbing up to the top of the ladder while he sits at the bottom with his dull and commonplace wife. And in that day he sees with fatal clearness just how much of the earth earthy is the woman who is not animated by anything except a desire for the things that make for her physical comfort.

Matrimony can mean the closest companionship that two human beings ever attain. It can be literally two souls with but a single thought, and it can mean a lonesomeness that is as great as Robinson Crusoe ever suffered on his desert isle. And when it is that it is the abomination of desolation.

The Solitude.

Think of what the ambitious man suffers when he is married to a woman who never wants to advance one step, who never sees why he wants to make a change, and whom he has to fight at every step of his progress. Think of the solitude of soul of a man married to a woman with whom he can never discuss a book he has read, or a play he has seen, or an opera he has heard; who never even comprehends anything that he tries to tell her that is more psychic than the price of butchers' meat. Not always "the woman who never could know, and never could understand" is a vampire. Only too often she is just a dull and stupid wife, without brains or imagination or aspiration.

So I say to the man who is hesitating between his career and his pretty, ambitionless, unintellectual sweetheart to choose the career. He will soon outgrow her anyway, and it is far, far better for both that this inevitable separation should come before they are married than afterward.

Confessions of a Medium

No. 3.---When the Clock Stopped

By Chas. D. Isaacson.

Copyright 1913 by International News Service.

IN the midst of the seance the grave faced spirit medium paused. He slowly rose from his seat before his assembled auditors and impressively spoke:

"My good friends, we are now going to attempt the most difficult experiment of all—something never before accomplished in the records of the world. If we succeed in doing it, we shall prove beyond all possible doubt the fact that we CAN communicate with the dead."

He cleared his throat and waited as a sharp flash of lightning illumined the room and a murderous peal of thunder crashed on its heels.

It was a night late in August—a hot, black, scary night, when you look warily over your shoulder at the bent, slinking, soaking figures that pass you by; when the very air seems laden with hobgoblin phantoms, and the wind seems to echo the moaning and groaning of lost souls.

A Night of Wonders.

Within the darkened room, fifty frightened people held firmly to their chairs and listened to the deep, far-away tones of the speaker medium. This had been a night of wonders. Tables and chairs had floated about by unseen supernatural means. Wonderful messages had made fifty hearts flutter like leaves in a Kansas cyclone. To these persons, accustomed to unusual things brought about by their mystifying leader, the startling events of the meeting had overshadowed anything of the past. And now the thought of something still more dramatic brought them to breathless and awed attention.

"Dear spirit," breathed the medium, raising his eyes to the ceiling, "we crave your assistance and beg your pardon for tiring you so much this day. Accomplish this seeming impossibility which I am about to put to you, and prove your existence and your ability to communicate with us, to the most skeptical, unbelieving member of this circle.

"Over there is a clock"—and the speaker pointed a long, lean, bony finger to the opposite end of the room, where on the mantel could be faintly traced the outlines of a ponderous old-fashioned timepiece.

"Listen. Spirit, listen. Over there, you hear the ticking of that clock. Over there—you head it?"

Tick—tick—tick fell on the ears of the listeners, who held their breath for fear it would drown the sound which grew louder and louder with each successive second, until it seemed to beat on their very hearts.

A Request.

"Spirit, think carefully now please. Here is where the experiment begins. Can you—will you STOP THAT CLOCK?"

Deathly silence ensued. Just tick—tick—loud and clear and sharp as a bell.

No answer.

"Spirit, will you do it?"

Tick—tick—tick.

"Will you?"

"Why—why, y-yes, I'll try," came the answer in mysterious taps on the table.

Tick—tick—tick — tick — each second seemed an hour to the 50 auditors, who sat half turned toward the clock, eager-eared, faint-hearted.

Tick—tick——

Snap! In the very middle of a beat! IT STOPPED!

Oh, the eternity of silence that followed broken soon by a storm of gasps and screams. There was a crash of thunder, and some one, no longer able to stand the oppression of the darkness, turned on the gas, flooding the room with light. Then they crowded about the clock—pale and wide-eyed. It was stopped, no question of that. The men, comparing it with their watches, found it recorded just one minute behind theirs.

"Wonderful!" "Weird!" "Proves spiritualism absolutely," "Could NEVER have been done by human or material means—it was surely the work of a spirit." These were the comments rapidly uttered, as they examined the clock to see if any wires or mechanical contrivances could have been connected with it.

The Answer.

This incident happened. To those who were there, it was the most wonderful phenomenon they had ever witnessed. At least that is how it happened to all but the medium. And the medium was myself. Would you like to know how it was done? I will tell you.

No spirit stopped the clock. No mechanical means stopped it. Even I did not stop it. IN THE FIRST PLACE, THE CLOCK WAS NOT GOING AT ALL! "How and why was ticking heard?"

Here is the whole story: Back of me, on a roll-top desk, I had previously placed a very tiny alarm clock, noted for its loud tick. Nobody thinks of a clock until you mention it. When I said, "You hear the ticking over there—OVER THERE," the audience imagined the sound emanated from the direction I pointed; and, by suggestion, on which is based hyphotism, by the way, they had placed it as coming from the silent clock on the mantel. Then, while they were listening for the unexpected, half turned to the opposite wall, I had, unobserved, slipped my finger to the pendulum, stopped the alarm and dropped the clock into a drawer!

"But then how was the other clock the exact time?"

Before the audience had arrived I had placed the hands ahead several hours and had brought my experiment to conform to the very minute I had arranged. This was simple—in a flash of lightning I had casually looked at my watch. The mystery of the night, the darkness, the wonders already witnessed, had all aided me to fool these intelligent people, among whom were a magazine writer, an artist, two theatrical folks, and several writers and lawyers.

Now consider this: That this experiment was far more dramatic and inexplicable than is generally seen at professional seances, where money is paid for admittance. Yet on incidents such as these, the credulous people of the masses are convinced of spiritism and defrauded by fakers, whose wonders I warrant could be unraveled as simply as the one I have just recorded. I did these things to study and expose. Professionals do them for money. Is it not highly probable that others who earn their living at this mockery are forced to work out similar "wonders?" I do not say spiritualism is wrong. I do not essay to pass judgment on this great question. It is against the fakers that I direct my campaign, beseeching every sensible man and woman to save their hard-earned money and evade them.

Six Miles Up!

And Safety Instead of Death Because of a New and Wonderful Device for Aviators

The picture, which was taken at an altitude of more than six miles, shows Messrs. Maurice Bienaime and Jacques Schneider in the car of the balloon "Icare" wearing the patent breathing apparatus. In 1878 the balloon "Zenith" attained a height of about four miles, but two of its three passengers were suffocated. With this apparatus the fatality could not have occurred.

By GARRETT P. SERVISS.

THE greatest peril for those who ascend to great altitudes is not that of falling, but that of being suffocated, like fish taken out of water!

It was the climbers of high mountains who first discovered the fact that it is often difficult for men to breathe at a height of from two and a half to three miles above sea level. The late Edward Whymper, the conqueror of the terrible Matterhorn, made many experiments on this, and he concluded, after climbing Chimborazo and other huge peaks in the Andes, that the cause of "mountain sickness," as the trouble was called, was due bottl to the lessened value of air that is inspired at such altitudes and to the expansion of the gases contained within the body, producing a pressure upon the internal organs.

But more recent study has shown that the difficulty arises mainly from the comparative lack of oxygen in the upper air, and that this may be overcome by means of apparatus supplying extra oxygen to the lungs.

The two principal constituents of the atmosphere are oxygen and nitrogen. Nitrogen is an inert gas which stifles animal respiration. Oxygen, on the other hand, is a very active gas, which, when breathed, supports animal life. When mixed, as near the earth's surface, in the proportion of about four volumes of nitrogen to one of oxygen, the air is respirable, and the inertness of the nitrogen does no harm. But if the proportion of oxygen is reduced the air becomes stifling.

Now, oxygen is heavier than nitrogen in ratio of about eight to seven, and in obedience to the law that heavier substances sink lower than lighter ones, the oxygen thins out as the height above the ground increases, until its proportion to the nitrogen becomes considerably reduced. Above three or four miles the amount of oxygen is so much diminished that breathing becomes very difficult, and at still higher altitudes respiration may cease entirely.

A Tragedy.

A very tragic instance of the effect thus produced is furnished by the story of the famous balloon ascent made in April, 1878, by Gaston Tissandier, Croce Spinelli and Signor Sivel. They ascended from La Villette in France, in the balloon "Zenith," to a height of 28,200 feet, or a little more than five and one-third miles. The thinness of the air, and as we now know, the relative lack of oxygen, killed Spinelli and Sivel, and nearly cost the life of Tissandier.

To show what modern science and invention have done to avert this peril of the high atmosphere, let us turn to the story of a still higher ascent, made on May 28, 1913, by the balloon "Icare," carrying Albert Senouque, Jacques Schneider and M. Bienaime. They started from Lamotte-Breuil in France, and attained an elevation of nearly 33,-900 feet, or six and a quarter miles, and yet they did not suffer at all, and came down in perfect condition, and exulting in their great feat!

Their success and immunity from suffocation were due to the fact that they took with them the apparatus shown in the accompanying photograph.

A Wonderful Picture.

This consists of an air-tight vessel filled with compressed oxygen. A mask which can be fitted closely over the nose and mouth is connected by a tube with the reservoir of oxygen. There is a pressure gauge which enables the aeronaut to measure the quantity of oxygen remaining in the reservoir, and there is also a device by which to regulate the amount flowing through the tubes. Thus they could take just as much oxygen as they needed and no more. The rate of supply varied from two quarts per minute to ten. The reservoir contained about 1,600 quarts.

They began to breathe the oxygen when at a height of about 11,000 feet.

The method of using the apparatus is shown in the photograph, which was taken by Senouque, showing Bienaime and Schneider, with their breathing masks on, at the very time when they were at the top of their flight, more than six miles above the earth!

Similar apparatus has recently been carried by mountain climbers, and by the pilots of aeroplanes ascending to great altitudes. With the rapid progress of aerial navigation it will become indispensable in the future.

If fish had human brains they might safely make a voyage of discovery in the air!

MELANCHOLY WOMEN

Should Profit by Mrs. Hurley's Experience—Her Own Story Here Told.

Eldon, Mo.—"I was troubled with displacement, organic inflammation and female weakness. For two years I could not stand on my feet long at a time and I could not walk two blocks without enduring cutting and drawing pains down my right side which increased once a month. I have been at that time purple in the face and would walk the floor. I could not lie down or sit still sometimes for a day and a night at a time. I was nervous, had very little appetite, no ambition, melancholy, and often felt as though I had not a friend in the world.

"After I had tried most every female remedy first, without success, my mother-in-law advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I did so and gained in strength every day. I have now no trouble in any way and highly praise your medicine. It advertises itself."—Mrs. S. T. HURLEY, Eldon, Missouri.

Remember, the remedy which did this was Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. For sale everywhere.

It has helped thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing down feeling, indigestion, and nervous prostration, after all other means have failed. Why don't you try it?

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

IN ALL PROBABILITY, YES.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

A certain girl friend of mine recently wrote me a letter asking a favor of me. I could easily oblige her as the favor is slight. I have been keeping company with a friend of hers lately and am decidedly in love with her. She (the one who wrote the letter) knows this, but still bestows her attentions on me. I myself am not paying her much attention and do not like her. Do you think I would arouse the jealousy of my lover if I showed the other friend this favor just to be polite? M. B.

You letter is rather ambiguous, as you do not state the nature of the favor.

If of such a nature it would cause trouble between you and your sweetheart, you must refuse. Your first thought should be of her.

And please see to it that the other girl's attentions are bestowed elsewhere. I am afraid she will make trouble.

THERE MAY BE SOME EXCUSE.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 18, am considered very handsome, and am in love with a boy three years my senior. He tells me he loves me, but when we have an engagement he always disappoints me. Do you think he is sincere? MARJORIE.

If by "always" you mean once or twice, he may have been unavoidably detained. But if he makes a practice of disappointing you, you must make no more engagements with him, for he cares nothing for you.

HIS RUDENESS IS INEXCUSABLE.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I have been married four years and am only 22 years old. My husband is 29. When out in company with my husband, is it not his place to notice me or talk to me?

When out dining at a friend's, is it right for him to pay attention to young ladies at the table by passing dishes to them and not noticing me? R. B.

He does everything he should not, and his sins of omission are as great.

His behavior is unpardonable, but I know of no redress for you. I hope all girls of 18 who think they are old enough to select a husband will take warning from you.

OBEY YOUR PARENTS.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I have been attending college, and last fall met a young man who is also a student. For the past four months he has been very attentive to me. I love him very much. My parents, who know the young man, say he is wild and associates with bad company. They want me to give him up. What shall I do? I love my family, but I also love the young man very, very much.

M. F. F.

I would urge you to obey your parents, were the young man desirable, for parents always know best. How much more I urge it since he is wild and dissolute! Give him up! Let there be no compromise. I add my pleadings to those of your parents.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"Brave!" he exclaimed in low, contemptuous tones. "It takes no bravery to fight a coward—and that's what this ghost is! It's a coward, like every other spook. Did you ever hear of any spirit that walked in the daytime? Never! They sneak and dodge and hide in crumbling and deserted places. I tell you that men are not half so afraid of spirits as spirits are of men! Face the supernatural, and it is beaten before the fight begins. Spooks, horse thieves and peevish wildcats can all be tamed by the same little charm."

He stoped in a dead silence. The others were staring at him intently, but with highly different expressions.

"Charm?" repeated the Duke, vaguely.

"What is it?" asked the Princess, breathlessly.

Unostentatiously, Jarvis produced his pistol, handling it as one might handle a familiar pencil. To one reared in a community where firearms are never seen excepting in the windows of the hardware store the sight of a pistol occasions either panic or the utmost indifference, depending entirely on the degree of ignorance or natural timidity. But in localities where the revolver is as common and serves the same purpose as the rapier of medieval Europe it is a known and fixed quantity. To one native to those localities the interest in the appearance of the pistol is directed entirely toward the man who displays it—what manner of man he is and what is his manner of handling the weapon.

The Duke had never seen a pistol excepting once or twice on the field of honor and strapped to the thigh of a cavalry man. He was an utter stranger to the type of man to whom a 44-caliber revolver is a shield sword. Consequently, though any ten-year-old boy from the lower Ohio Valley could have told him at one glance that Warren Jarvis carried a revolver. Because it was a protection and not a menace, as it is to be unused, the appearance of the weapon seemed to amuse him, rather than otherwise.

A Joke.

"I had been hoping, Mr. Warren," he said, with light scorn, "that you had some subtle method of handling this problem. But no! You propose to meet the forces of the supernatural with firearms! I may tell you that this specter has been fired at before without the slightest effect."

Jarvis smiled and nodded as he returned the pistol to his pocket.

"Quite likely," Your Excellency. I have seen rifle fire that had not the slightest effect on a wildcat—for the very good reason that the shooting was wilder than the cat."

The Duke made a gesture as if waiving all respnosibility.

"I am sorry for you, Mr. Warren. You will find the ghost more real than the treasure."

"But the treasure is real, Carlos!" exclaimed the Princess, with spirit. "Would I have crossed the ocean for this locket unless I knew? Why, with this paer a total stranger, anybody who had never seen the castle, could walk right up to the place and point out the very stone that hides it!"

For the barest fraction of a second the glances of the two men crossed like foils.

"Pretty dangerous sort of paper to have around," observed Jarvis, slowly. "Look out that somebody doesn't get there ahead of you."

"Yes, it is a dangerous paper," chimed in the Duke in the same time, "if it leads any one into the castle."

The young man laughed, silently and naturally.

"Well, Your Excellency, I'd go a long way for the fun of unraveling a good mystery with a little spice of danger thrown in."

Dangerous Ground.

The Duke nodded as if he understood and sympathized with the feeling. Then, as if something had just occurred to him, he remarked:

"You needn't have gone so far, Mr. Warren. You are leaving a very unusual case behind you in New York. I suppose you read the papers on your way to the boat?"

The young man's lips twitched and he glanced at the trunk.

"Why, no. I was so wrapped up in my baggage I really didn't have a chance."

He glanced slyly at the Princess, who immediately discovered something of interest out of a porthole.

"This will interest you, too, cousin," remarked the Duke, picking up a newspaper he had dropped when he first presented himself to his kinswoman. "You were at the Vanderlip last night, I believe." He opened the paper, found the item he had in mind and read aloud:

"'Pistol duel in Vanderlip Hotel—Guests awake in panic to find prominent Kentuckian dangerously wounded by unknown assailant—Mysterious escape.—Colonel James Markham, a promineng and wealthy Kentuckian, nearly met his death at 5 o'clock this morning in a pistol duel in his room at the Vanderlip Hotel.' 'At a late hour the police had no clew to the identity of his assailant except the remarkable fact that he is still hiding somewhere in the hotel.'"

"He's probably a long way from the hotel by now," interrupted Jarvis with a smile.

"They say he couldn't have gotten out without being seen."

Jarvis shrugged his shoulders. "That's the theory of the police or the reporters."

"What do you think?" demanded the Duke.

"Oh, he might have escaped in a thousand ways. But that's hardly in my line. That work belongs to what we call the 'gum-shoes.'"

"'Gum-shoes!'" echoed the Duke, with amazement.

"Yes, ordinary detectives," Jarvis explained. "But," he added, turning to the Princess, "we are keeping you from getting settled, I'm afraid. So, if you will excuse me, I will see you both at dinner, perhaps."

"Yes, do," invited the Princess, graciously. "And, Carlos, do arrange to sit with us. We will have quite a party."

The Police.

Jarvis bowed to the Duke. "I am pleased to have made your acquaintance, Your Excellency."

"Thank you, Mr. Warren. I find you most interesting. I shall be glad to hear more of—of your remarkable profession."

There was just the faintest echo of a sneer in this last, but the young man bowe as if complimented, and had just turned to the door, when there was a sharp knock. He drew back and the Princess quickly opened it.

With no greeting, bow or apology, two men thrust themselves into the stateroom. Jarvis recognized them at once and set his shoulders for the final combat.

By this you are not to suppose that he was personally acquainted with the men themselves—his familiarity was with the type. In all the world-wide phantasmagoria of races and classes there is none that can be so readily recognized and classified as the New York detective. With the present craze for uniformed bellboys, pages, milliners' attendants, door tenders, errand boys and governors it is quite possible to confuse the uniformed policeman with some of these. But when he is sent out in plain clothes there is no mistaking him. When you have seen one of them you can recognize any one of them to the extreme range of your vision. There is a combination of a certain physical solidity manifest in their carriage and mental stolidity evidenced in their faces that can be found nowhere else.

This pair were typical—thick-chested, thick-handed, thick-headed, with round moon-like faces.

On the Rack.

One stepped just inside the door and a little to one side of it as if on guard. The other advanced a step farther. He had evidently been decided on as spokesman. He glanced at the two men and then addressed the Princess, consulting a tiny note-book as he spoke.

"Is this Miss M. T. Ar-r-agan?" he inquired in a rich, "far-down" brogue, overlaid with the indescribable Manhattanese accent.

"Yes," replied the Princess, uncertainly, and evidently puzzled by the sudden and unexplained intrusion. Jarvis remained in the background and thrust his wounded hand into his overcoat pocket. The Duke's little mustache began to bristle and he stepped forward.

"You were at the Vanderlip Hotel last night?" pursued Detective Driscoll, ignoring the Duke.

"Ye-es."

"The lock on your door was broken?"

"Yes."

"I am from headquarters, ma'am," explained the detective, having gotten these "damaging admissions." "And I have orders to clear up one or two little matters connected with that affair at the hotel last night."

The exalted cousin could no longer restrain himself.

"Orders, orders!" he burst out. "To break in here! What headquarters?"

Detective Driscoll stared at him in open-eyed insolence. Jarvis smiled discreetly behind his hand.

"Police Headquarters!" bellowed the detective so loudly that every one started. His colleague at the door smiled wearily.

"Do you know whom you are addressing?" spluttered the grandee angrily.

Detective Driscoll rolled toward him, pushed out about five cubic inches of chin and snarled:

"That'll be about all from you!" resentative Kimbrough, of Harris County, a snap. Driscoll returned to the Duke quietly, "let me attend to this matter. Won't you come in, gentlemen?"

"Thanks," said Detective Driscoll, easily, nodding to his partner to close the door and giving the Duke a final glare as if daring him to say another word.

"Yes," Jarvis' pleasant voice added its soothing influence, "we were just talking about the mystery."

The Duke, feeling that he would only risk a loss of dignity by quarreling with a foreign police officer, took the cue and held out the olive branch with a patronizing air.

"You are, I take it," he remarked to Driscoll as the sleuth was peering into his little book, "one of the—er 'gum shoes.'"

Jarvis snickered, the book shut with a snap. Driscoll returned to the duke and thrust a menacing face into his.

"Gum shoes!" he snarled. "Say, are you tryin' to be funny?"

The Duke startled, drew back a step.

"Well, sir," he replied half apologetically," you are speaking rather loudly, and, if I may say so, with undue asperity. I presume I have offended you."

"'You presume!'" answered Driscoll. "That's a hot one! Say—who are you, any way?"

The exalted cousin drew himself up and gave one end of his mustache an upward twist.

"I am Hernando, Duke d'Alva," he replied pompously. "I have other titles, but they would hardly interest you."

The detective looked him over from head to foot and licked his lips hungrily.

"Dook de Alvers—and then some, eh? Ain't that nice! Well, if you was the Archbishop of Canterbury I'd run yer in and take yer ashore if yer gimme any more sass!" Fascinated by a savage glare, the Duke declined to give him any more "sass," and the detective turned to the Princess, but still eyed the exalted cousin, as if longing for an excuse to "run him in."

Spoiled by Success

PRECISELY as the clocks in the vicinity of Dowman Square announced the hour of midnight, John Maine's pen ceased suddenly in its rapid flight across the paper before him. For a time he sat motionless, his forehead wrinkled in perplexity. Twice he attempted to resume his work, but each time stopped short in the effort.

For five long hours he had worked with feverish mental energy and the first time his pen refused to become the vehicle of his thoughts the physical strength of the man gave out, then, as a gift from the gods, came the blessing of sleep to the jaded worker.

Dimly, vaguely, John Maine became conscious of the fact that his arms were bound and useless at his side. His legs were cramped in an unnatural position; he endeavored to move his head, and discovered, with a painful shock, that his neck was securely held by a tight collar attached to the back of his chair. With startled eyes he glanced round swiftly in the little circle his hands allowed and saw nothing. Then, as the perspiration oprued from him in his fear, he knew that from somewhere in the room a voice was speaking, slowly, monotonously, but its every word articulated with striking distinctness.

"Don't waste your energy," came in a sibilant whisper. "You have nothing to fear but the truth. Compose yourself.

"I am here to talk," began the voice, "and you to listen."

"So it seems," said Maine briefly. "Tell me," he urged quietly, "who are you?"

"Ten years ago, John Maine," the unknown said, completely ignoring the other's question, "you were a poor man struggling to achieve distinction. Today you are an acknowledged power in the literary world; but has your path upward been a clean, praiseworthy path?"

Congratulations.

The man in the chair stirred uneasily; his eyes sought the one remaining flicker in the fire.

"I suppose," he mused, addressing the tiny, cheerless flame as one in a reverie, "I suppose you're a kind of spectre of the past, eh? You've a remarkably fine idea of stage management," he added, with assumed lightness. "As one artist to another, I congratulate you on your sense of the dramatic."

"You fool! You unspeakable fool!" hissed the voice venomously in his ear. "As you can not tell yourself, suppose I show you what manner of man you are. Take your mind back ten years and tell me what happened then. You can't?"

"I was married ten years ago," Maine replied, hastily.

"So you were married ten years ago, were you?"

"As an unknown man," the voice continued evenly, "without a penny to bless yourself, you married the sweetest little girl in Christendom. She left her parents, she abandoned all to make a mesalliance with you; she shared your garret, she helped you with your work and she bore her altered condition in life with a fortitude which only threw your quibbling nature into more heinous relief. Slowly, gradually, as you mounted the ladder to success, all the magnificent resolutions of your early married life faded into insignificance. You lived only for your work. You became a supreme artist. And you, for whom she had forsaken everything, forgot the very existence of the woman whose heart was still yours.

A Son.

"Five years ago," continued the voice, "a son was born to you, and for a time you forgot you were a man of letters. But you soon slipped away when your clubs called you, when the public fawned on you; and your wife, broken-hearted and neglected, fled from your home. Did you realize then"—the words came in a thundering torrent now—"the revolting act of savagery which cast your wife adrift without the child she loved so dearly?"

"Good heavens!" exclaimed Maine fearfully. "Are you—"

"Listen!" came the imperious command. "She wanted your love, and you had buried it in your success. But, strangely as it sounds, you still loved the child that is sleeping in this house. Do you think that the boy has not missed his mother more than you have missed your wife? John Maine, in the grate before you are ashes, cold and gray. They are your portion in life, for that boy of yours, his heart yearning for the tender love you can not give, is even now slipping into the void—"

"Enough!" screamed the wretched man. "You lie—you know you lie!" He moistened his lips with his tongue. "Who are you?" he asked, with sudden humility.

"I am your better self," came sadly, morosely from a long way off, and John Maine sat up on the words to find himself blinking terrified in the small arc light from a policeman's lantern.

"Beg pardon, sir," whispered the policeman, quickly covering the light; "but I guessed you would be in here at work as usual, and, and——"

His Wife.

"I've been asleep, constable," Maine interposed slowly, and the words conveyed a subtle relief to his aching heart at once. "But how on earth did you get in?" he asked, suddenly realizing that the presence of a policeman in his house in the early hours of the morning was something to be explained.

"Softly, sir," counseled the other. "I saw a woman creep through a window at the back, and followed her. I've been on this beat for a good many years, sir, and I fancied I knew who she was. I thought perhaps you might like"——

Maine was standing up now, alert and brisk.

"Is she still in the house?" he asked.

The constable nodded.

"She crept upstairs, sir," he said simply.

But John Maine waited for no more. With his heart pounding at his ribs, he sprang out of the room and leaped swiftly up the stairs.

The policeman followed him slowly.

Maine had reached the landing which led to the boy's room, when he heard a door in front of him open. He switched on the electric light, and there, panting fearfully in the sudden blaze, leaning against the wall, was the thin and emacited figure of a woman.

Her clothes were in rags and atters; in her arms she clutched a sleeping child to her breast.

They stood thus, silently regarding each other, until the sound of a discreet cough warned Maine of the presence of the constable. With hands that shook perceptibly, and eyes in which there lurked a strange moistness, John Maine turned swiftly on the landing.

"You're a good fellow," he said quietly. "It is as you surmised. My wife"—he waved his hand courteously to the wretched woman in front of him—"has returned home unexpectedly. You can let yourself out."

They waited until the man had passed through the house and they could hear his retreating footsteps die away in the distance. Then:

"Maisie," said Maine, gently, "you have come home to me?"

The woman tottered where she stood, one arm went out before her, sweetly, pathetically, and John Maine sprang to her side in an instant.

"Maisie, my love!" he cried, the tears coursing down his cheeks with the weakness of a strong man who is suddenly robbed of his calm, "thank God, I know my better self!"

Jealousy.

The teacher was addressing his pupils on the subject of laziness and idleness.

He drew a terrible picture of the habitual loafer—the man who dislikes work and who begs for all he gets.

"Now, John," said the teacher to a little boy who had been very inattentive during the lesson.

John was instantly on the alert.

"Tell me," continued the teacher, "who is the miserable individual who gets clothes, food and lodging and yet does nothing in return?"

John's face brightened.

"Please, sir," said he, "the baby."

AN EPIDEMIC OF HOFMANITIS HAS HIT NASHVILLE

NASHVILLE, TENN., July 12.—An epidemic of Hofmanitis has broken out among the baseball bugs in Voltown, and the infection has spread like wildfire, even unto the mightiest hammer-throwers, who have been blistering the poor, old Vanishing Vols for their rank showing in the gonfalon hunt.

The town is simply delirious in its joy, that the friendship of the old swimming days in Akron between Bill Schwartz and the former Pirate was strong enough to induce Artie to rush to his old pal's assistance, while the appeal for help was loudest.

There is a striking parallel to be found in Circus Solly's case with that of the boy manager, for it was Bill Bernhardt's distress signal in 1909, when first base was in wretched hands, that persuaded Schwartz to give up a swell job with the Diamond Rubber people and hike to Nashville to help out his old friend he had known back with the Cleveland Naps, when Bernhard was one of the kingpin slabbers of the big show. It's a hoary narrative, but it only goes to prove the infernal way history has of "working in double."

Doesn't Appear To Be "In".

Maybe something better could have happened to the Vols than the acquisition of Hofman, but nobody can make the fans in this town believe that, and they are not forgetting that it was for the sake of "Auld Lang Syne" that Artie came, and Schwartz could not have built a greater monument in the fans' hearts in any other fashion than by landing this "ex-major leaguer who is going back."

If Artie is on his way, nobody can see the end of the passage with a pair of field glasses, and there is quite a swarm of youngsters coming who will have to travel at a mighty hefty clip before they will meet Hofman going out.

Schwartz benched himself when Artie lighted in camp, and it was the ex-Cub's tip to the boy leader that he warm the bench a while until he could get together the nerves that were shattered by the sickening plunge which the Vols have taken cellarways.

He Was Chance's Understudy.

The first station was no stranger to Artie, for when he was at the top of his stride he was Frank Chance's understudy with the Cubs, and although the big fellow had not seen a baseball for two weeks, jumped right into the game and took care of everything like a veteran.

Hofman brought to the Vols the stuff they have been so sadly in need of—ginger—and he wasn't stingy about handing it around. The Schwartzmen have been playing in a totally demoralized fashion. They have gone out with an idea that no matter who was in the box, they were doomed to lose, and with their leader unable either to hit or field, not a man on the club has been able to play anything like his best.

BALDWIN MATCHED TO BATTLE LEACH CROSS

LOS ANGELES, July 12.—Matty Baldwin and Leach Cross have been matched for a 20-round bout at Vernon Arena on July 29 by Promoter McCarey. Arrangements for the the match were made by wire and closed in record time. Sam Wallach, the dentist's manager, wired to McCarey from San Francisco accepting terms for the fight, and will return here with Cross on Sunday and take possession of Jack Doyle's camp at Vernon on Tuesday.

Kid Williams and Charley Ledoux, the bantams scheduled for twenty rounds at Vernon on Tuesday night, made a short day of it in the training camps to-day, but to-morrow's workout will be a strenuous one and both boys will go the limit for the benefit of the usual Sunday crowd. The little fellows are in fine shape.

CROSS AND SHERIDAN MAY CLASH AT KANSAS CITY

CHICAGO, July 12.—Leach Cross, the New York dentist-fighter, who has gained the position of contender for the lightweight championship through his knockouts of Joe Mandot and Bud Anderson will have for his next opponent a Chicago fighter, if arrangements under way do not go awry.

Cross practically has agreed to terms for a ten-round bout with Mickey Sheridan to be staked at Kansas City next month. Fred Gilmore, manager of Sheridan, yesterday received a telegram from Cross' manager, who is at Los Angeles, stating that everything was o. k. for the match if held the early part of next month.

The Kansas City promoters are anxious to hold the fight at the American Association baseball park either on August 2 or August 9, but it is understood there is some hitch over the plan.

CHAPPELLE PICKED TO WIN BIG EVENT AT NEW YORK

NEWYORK, July 12.—Arthur Chappelle, the motorcycle speed demon, was to-day picked to win the sweepstakes handicap at the Brighton Beach motordrome to-night. In a sensational practice drive of nine miles yesterday Chappelle covered the distance in 5 minutes 59 1-5 seconds. This beats the record of 6:01 2-5 set by Eddie Hasha last year. Chappelle will give the field a handicap of two and one-quarter laps.

How Chance Tamed Gotham Fans

Magnetism or Hypnotism Aids

By Bill Bailey.

CHICAGO, July 12.—If any of these modern colleges happens to be seeking a man to teach that valuable art of personal magnetism we know the man they are seeking.

Who? Why, Frank Chance.

A ball field a strange place to seek a man to teach that valuable art? Maybe. Again, why not?

Oh, yes, we may be mistaken. It may be downright hypnotism that this fellow possesses.

Naturally those few words were but the introduction.

* * *

HERE is the story:

Why are those New York fans so tolerant with Chance? Remember what happened to Wolverton? Remember what they said about Chase when he was bossing the team? Remember what happened to Clark Griffith when he made several ineffectual attempts to capture a pennant? There may have been mean words in the dictionary that were not heaped, hurled and tossed at the heads of these men. I say there may have been. But I don't believe there were.

And Chance!

Say, he has a ball club that hasn't won anywhere near one-third of its games. Its percentage is less than .300. Not a peep, not a chirp has come out of the fans at New York.

"Think what a team he had when he came here," they tell you. "You wait."

* * *

FRANK CHANCE and his men are here. Still it is a different Frank Chance who is leading the Highlanders. The fellow the West Siders knew so well was a worrying Frank Chance. If the West Siders had lost as many ball games in a season as those Highlanders already have put on the losing side of the ledger it's terrible to think what would have become of Chance.

Then he worried. If his team developed a losing streak, and two losses in succession was a losing streak in those days, he didn't sleep.

And now?

He has developed into a philosopher. "I can't worry like I used to," he said. "I'm fighting just as hard to win as I ever did. But no more of the sleepless nights for me. I couldn't and stick in the game."

* * *

IT may be that the New York fans realize that Chance had nothing but numbers to work with that has made them so tolerant. But the fact remains that for about the first time in the history of New York they are not howling because they are down in the race. For in New York, you know, they can't understand why anybody should have anything that can lick anything they possess.

* * *

FRANK CHANCE certainly has no warm spot in his heart for the fellows who touted him on Bill Borton. And he certainly has a lot of people in this city who should ask him for forgiveness.

"Can Borton hit?" the P. L. asked of several of his baseball friends about here when he was in Chicago on the last trip.

"Can he hit?" was the comeback. "Say, he simply can murder the ball. He just won five games for the White Sox in Detroit. He just about won that city series last fall, as you well know. Say, if there is one thing he can do, it is to hit. He may be a bit shy on the pep and the ginger. Maybe he can't get around those bases as fast as Rollie Zelder. But hit? Say, if there were nine Bortons on an opposing team half the pitchers would go to digging sewers."

And hitting was the one thing that Borton didn't do.

Oh, yes, there are a lot of alleged baseball men in Chicago who will have a tough time explaining to this same Chance.

* * *

AT that Chance doesn't figure that the White Sox can afford to lie back and give him the merry ha-ha because Borton didn't develop into a hero in New York. For the P. L. is certain that he hooked one man from the South Side aggregation who will develop into a hummer. Gossett, the catcher, is the lad.

"There is a lad who will develop into a star," said the P. L. "I look to see him ranked as one of the greatest catchers in the league in a little while. And he cost only the waiver price."

Chance naturally isn't admitting that he received the worst of the Chase-Zelder-Borton deal. But if he did he would still figure his trading percentage was .500. Because he thinks he picked up a mighty valuable youngster in this same Gossett.

EMPIRE LEAGUE NOTES

Something that rarely happens in a ball game happened in Waycross this week in one of the Waycross-Cordele games. All assists credited to Cordele went to two players, the pitcher and catcher. Seven were made, and the catcher took four of them.

* * *

Selgfried, of Brunswick, is one of the best all-round players in the league. He is just now playing in the outfield, but is a dandy first baseman and plays short like a veteran. His batting is splendid.

* * *

"Babe" Wilder continues his record of winning almost every game he pitches. It is reported that he will go to the Savannah team at the close of this season, but Jacksonville has been after him and may land him. Wilder is a good pitcher Cordele has and is going good now.

* * *

Valdosta turned around, after an apparent slump, and walloped the Shrine Chasers to perfection. Jordan will not tolerate indifferent playing, even if his team has won the first season rag.

* * *

Shortstop Murphy, a league leader at bat and a sensational fielder, one of the best Thomasville has, is out of the game with a sprained ankle.

* * *

Clancy, of West Virginia, who came South to play with Brunswick, is getting a try-out in Waycross. He fields fairly well, but is a little weak at bat.

* * *

Of all ball players, one always to be depended upon to act square and be as much a gentleman on the diamond as off, is Reagan, the clever manager for Cordele.

Derrick, one of the new umpires, has shown in just a few games that beefing won't go in games at which he officiates. He chased Manager Moran, of the Brunswick team, from the Valdosta grounds for beefing, and before that episode slapped a fine on Manager Jordan, of the Valdosta team.

* * *

Wild Bill Clark, the Waycross manager, has a runabout that he chases around in when not playing baseball. His friends claim that it is merely a question of time before Bill has his auto running bases.

* * *

That the schedule for the next Empire season will be arranged entirely different from the one used this year is certain. Hardly any team in the league is satisfied the way they are having to play, and the directors, at the end of the season, are going to see to it that a better schedule is prepared for 1914.

* * *

So far, the Empire has escaped any serious injuries to ball players. All teams have had players out for a few days because of minor hurts, but nothing serious to date.

* * *

Cordele's hard-hitting left fielder, Wassen, continues to swat the ball. He has had but a few off days and seems to be able to hit the league's best.

* * *

Americus seems to be getting a little of the hard luck that has been haunting most of the teams since the first of the month. Its team is playing well nearly every day, but fails to win the majority of games. But Americus has got to be considered by whatever team wins the pennant—that is certain.

BOXING

News of the Ring Game

Gunboat Smith, claimant of the world's heavyweight title, has challenged Georges Carpenter, the tough French champion of Europe, to a 20-round contest for $5,000 a side in England, France or Belgium. If Carpentier agrees, the match probably will be arranged to take place during the fall.

* * *

When it is taken into consideration that Frank Klaus, middleweight, recently stopped Carpentier, the New York heavyweight should find little trouble in putting the foreigner away in quick order. Carpentier would have everything to gain and nothing to lose in such a match.

* * *

Jess Willard is another scrapper who has his eyes peeled on a Smith match. Tom Jones' protege is taking on all the big hopes in 4-round bouts on the coast and is showing improved form. If Smith refuses to meet Willard, Jones says he will try to sign his boxer for a Pelky set-to.

* * *

Knockout Brown, the Chicago middleweight, will make his next fight against Frank Klaus, at Butte, Mont. Tommy Walsh, who is now handling Brown's affairs, wired the Butte promoters his acceptance for the mill yesterday. The pair will probably meet on Labor Day.

* * *

Kid Duke, local bantamweight, wishes to announce that he is ready to take on any of the local boys seeking fame in the padded arena. Duke aims his challenge at Young, Pries and Britt. The kid says he will accommodate either of the boys with a neat side bet.

* * *

Kid Young, the local newsboy boxer, says he is getting tired of reading challenges from various boys in the city. "Let them post their money and I will sign to meet any of them," wails the little featherweight. Several boys have been sending in their defis daily, but when the Kid asks them to put up, they usually beat it to the tall timbers.

* * *

Johnny Coulon, bantamweight champion, left a Chicago hospital the other day weighing 115 pounds, which is 10 pounds more than he weighed a week ago when he entered the institution to be treated for stomach trouble. Despite his rapid improvement in health, it is doubtful whether he will be able to box for some time.

* * *

"Wildcat" Ferns and Young Denny have been re-matched to box at New Orleans. The pair met in the Pelican City on Labor Day and Ferns was awarded the verdict after ten rounds of fierce fighting. The Denny admirers, however, were not satisfied with the decision, and the promoters decided to send them over the 20-round route on August 13.

* * *

Tom McCarey is still working on a Ritchie-Cross match for Labor Day. Cross has already consented to the bout, but the champion is waiting to hear from several other promoters, who are after his services. New Orleans wants Willie to box Britton, while Vancouver is after a Ritchie-Welsh mill.

* * *

Coast fans have made Kid Williams a 2 to 1 favorite over Charley Ledoux. The two bantamweights clash in a 20-round mill in Tom McCarey's arena at Los Angeles on July 15.

* * *

The Johnny Dundee-Jack White match, scheduled to take place on the coast July 29, may not take place. Dundee is holding out for a larger guarantee than the promoters are willing to give for such a scrap. If Dundee refuses to meet White, George Kirkwood or Tommy Dixon may be substituted.

* * *

Terry Nelson, local lightweight, is waiting to hear from Dayton, Ohio, regarding a match there. Terry is trying to get on with either Jimmy Murphy, Jimmy Traverse or Danny Goodman. Nelson is surely entitled to a match with some good 132-pounder. He is a willing mixer and always gives the fans a run for their money.

* * *

Packey McFarland gave exhibition bouts at the Joliet, Ill., prison the other day for the entertainment of the prisoners. He boxed Kid Mack, of Joliet, and other local boys. Warden Allen is a friend of McFarland.

HARRIS TO MEET ALRICK IN TENNIS TITLE MATCH

LITHCHFIELD, CONN., July 12.—F. H. Harris, of Brattleboro, Vt., will meet Alrick H. Man, Jr., of Richmond Hill, N. Y., for the State tennis title and cup here this afternoon. Harris yesterday defeated W. S. Cushing, of Simsbury, in the final of the State tennis tournament. Man won the New England championship from Harris in the tournament at Hartford last month.

YACHTING.

Becalmed, becalmed, all, all becalmed,
Becalmed on a wide, wide bay,
Our souls were tried when the breezes died,
For we moved not either way.

We sat and mourned for the west wind scorned
To hand us a single breath,
And, what was worst, we were all athirst,
And it felt like the pangs of death.

The wind may howl and the sea may growl,
And the waves be high and strong,
But we scorn the worst when we have no thirst
And we sing a gladsome song.

But worst of all, when there is no squall,
Nor even a breath of air,
And the deck is dry as a desert sky,
Nor even a bottle there.

Becalmed, becalmed, all, all becalmed,
Four miles from the nearest land!
And there we lay for half a day
With an opener in our hand.

Yachts are deceiving. We asked the chauffeur what was concealed beneath the cellar door and he answered: "Life savers." Opening the door and looking into the basement we saw nothing but those things that you wrap around yourself when the boat sinks. One learns only by experience.

We still are a novice as far as things nautical are concerned, but we are forced to admit that we like it as far as we drank.

August Belmont has insured his noble steed, Tracery, for $150,000 for fear of another suffragette rough house. If August were a regular sportsman he would train his steed for the jumps and hold a suffragette steeplechase.

A statistician informs us that the Cardinals accepted 206 chances without an error. Aside from the fact that they lost a flock of games in the meantime it was great baseball.

One is not surprised to read that Bud Anderson was doped when he fought Leach Cross. A flock of knuckles injected at the right spot is quite an effective anesthetic.

Reading a headline, one observes that the "Sox welcome Frank Chance." Looking over the box score one is led to believe it.

SPEAKING OF WORK.

Were I to labor sixteen hours a day,
Without a pause, without a gasp of air,
I would not grieve my fair young life away,
But gladly do my share.
If I were called upon to be a slave
'Twould only make me smile, for I have seen
The hardest working thing this side the grave—

JOHNSON IS IN ENGLAND, BUT CAN'T FIGHT THERE

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, July 12.—Jack Johnson, the negro pugilist who fled from Chicago after being convicted of white slavery, arrived here to-day from Paris. Johnson wants to arrange a short bout with some good English heavyweight, preferably Bombardier Wells. Any match that Johnson makes, however, probably will have to be fought on the Continent, for the English authorities will not allow him to box in this country.

After his arrival to-day Johnson visited the newspaper offices in Fleet street and denied stories about him which had been cabled from the United States.

COULON ORDERED TO TAKE LONG REST IN COLORADO

CHICAGO, July 12.—Johnny Coulon, the bantam champion, announced that he probably would not fight again before Thanksgiving Day. Coulon was in the Presbyterian Hospital for ten days, during which time Bertram W. Sippy, a specialist on stomach troubles, gave the little fighter a careful examination. The doctor has ordered the champion to take a long rest in Colorado.

Coulon left the hospital day before yesterday and already is making preparations for the Colorado trip. He expects to leave for the West some time next week.

STARS' CHANCES IN GOLF MEETS RUINED BY RAIN

By Chick Evans.

THERE is an opinion deeply rooted in the minds of most Americans that it rains three-fourths of the time in Great Britain, and that in consequence, the British golfer is an amphibious creature. I can not testify to the truth of this belief because I visited Britain in a dry year, but a friend, who spent several months in the British Isles, assures me that, although it rained every day while he was there, the British rain was not so wet as the American variety. Perhaps my friend's delusion springs from the fact that almost every clubhouse in Great Britain has a drying room where golfers may hang their rain-soaked clothing, while such a convenience is almost unknown in America, the New Edgewater being the only American club that, as far as I know, has made such provision for its members.

Playing golf in the rain is a good deal like jumping into a cold tub—there is always hesitation in the beginning, but the act itself is never regretted, for the real golfer can not let a little thing like the rain interfere with his game. When a man has journeyed all the way out to some country club he is almost sure to play, rain or shine, and I am confident that playing in the rain does not injure any one physically. It is attended, however, with many inconveniences, and to find enjoyment, the player must be well prepared for the weather. He needs an old pair of shoes and other wearing apparel that can be easily dried and not easily injured. But the best of rainy-day clothes are usually too many and too binding for good golf, and raincoats are an abomination. I well remember that W. C. Fownes, Jr., once spent a great deal of valuable time trying to invent one suited to the needs of the golfer.

Moisture Ruins Clubs.

Personally, I dislike to play in the rain; I do not like to get my clothes wet, and most of all, I detect the effect of moisture upon my clubs. The shafts are always heavily stained, so that they may withstand the weather, but water warps wood, and I do hate to draw a wooden club from my bag on a rainy day. Then again, the best grips are supposed to be of oiled and treated leather, and moisture affects them most unfavorably. So the golfer carries towels, because wet hands and wet grips are a distinctly disagreeable combination. Another rainy day necessity is the hooded golf bag.

Of course, no golfer expects to play his best on a rainy day, but in all big tournaments, or indeed any competition, golfers must play, regardless of the weather. The luck of the condition is, however, more deeply felt in a qualification round. Perhaps in the morning the course may have been too fast for the players; then, between 1 and 2, a heavy shower comes up, catching those who must go out then; at 2 the rain ceases and the latter players start forth under most favorable conditions, for the rain has softened the greens and made the balls more manageable. This is a chance of the game that affects almost every score with unequal conditions.

Deluge Has Spoiled Tournaments.

Glen View, for a long time, had an unfortunate reputation for rainy tournaments, big events there being almost invariably attended by terrific downpours. In the National of 1904, the river overflowed the second nine holes, and only the first nine were playable in the finals. None of the Western players can forget the deluge at Denver, and I also recall vividly a four-day tournament at Chicago Golf when it rained practically during the whole competition.

These incidents merely teach us, as old fables say, that the real golfer must be a bit of a philosopher. He accepts the weather cheerily and makes the best of it.

MANY MANAGERS ON COAST IN INTEREST OF BOXERS

LOS ANGELES, CAL., July 12.—With six managers on the ground anxious to arrange matches for their boxers, there is no danger that Promoter McCarey will not be able to keep his fight program filled.

Among those who are here in the interest of high-class boys are Joe Levy, manager of Joe Rivers and Jack White; Sam Wallach, manager of Leach and Phil Cross; Frank Galvin, manager of Charley Ledoux; Sam Harris, manager of Kid Williams; Scotty Monteith, manager of Johnny Dundee, and Dick Donald, manager of Bud Anderson.

Good Time Now For Blood Health

Blood Disorders Gone to Stay.

A few doses of that wonderful blood purifier, S. S. S., will start activities in the cellular tissues of the body and soon show decided changes in the skin. The skin is but a fine network of tiny blood vessels, and the specific action of S. S. S. is declared to be a pronounced stimulation of the activity of these cells. Certain it is that in a surprisingly short time any skin eruption shows a most remarkable change; it begins to dry up; the skin scales off in tiny flecks, and soon a layer of clear, healthy and firm tissue results.

The reason for this is in the peculiar stimulation of S. S. S., which enables the cells in the skin to select from the blood the nutriment it requires for regeneration.

You can obtain S. S. S. at any well stocked drug store, if you insist upon it, but be sure you are not talked into something "just as good."

S. S. S. is prepared by the Swift Specific Company, 180 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga. Write for their illustrated book on skin diseases.

GRAND CIRCUIT HORSES MOVE ON TO PITTSBURG

CLEVELAND, OHIO., July 12.—The entire "works" of the Grand Circuit is on the move to-day over to Pittsburg, where the second Grand Circuit meet of the season will be held.

The first one came to a close at North Randall tracks yesterday with four trotting events that brought out a fine quality of sport. Outsiders shared honors with the favorites. The Tavern "Steak," though previously conceded to Dago P., was won by Eulabel, an outsider.

The 2:00 trot went to Jean Arlon, although Eve Cord, driven by Geers, had been expected to win easily.

The championship trotting sweepstakes was taken by Anvil, a heavy favorite, because he trotted the two fastest miles of the year. The veteran driver Ed Geers pushed Anvil around the oval in the remarkably fast time of 2:04 1-4 in the first heat, and came right back in the next and concluding heat with a mark of 2:04 3-4.

WILLIE RITCHIE WILLING TO BATTLE JACK BRITTON

SAN FRANCISCO, July 12.—Ritchie says that he never received the offer of Promoter Tortorich, of New Orleans, to box Britton for a $20,000 purse, though such an offer had been made through the press.

Regarding such a bout in September, Ritchie says that Tortorich would be treated the same as the other promoters and if he hands in the highest bid he will gladly box in New Orleans. If he does so, Jack Britton, who is a heavy lightweight, will have to make 133 pounds ringside.

Willie is confident that he can make this weight and be at his best. When Ritchie and Britton boxed four rounds in this city they milled at catch weights.

Again Hogg Beats Crackers 6-0

Rain May Stop To-day's Game

By Percy H. Whiting.

THE Gulls and the Crackers meet in the final tangle this afternoon—that is, if the weather is even half-way decent. Early in the afternon the prospects were good that the game would be played. And, for a pleasing change, even if it is Saturday afternoon, the game will be called at the usual time and will go to a decision.

The fates forbid that it be another knock-out.

One fan sized up yesterday's game pretty well when he said:

"Well, that's my idea of a WHITE-WASH."

It was all of that and more besides.

The Gulls won, 6 to 0, and they did it with such ease that they made the Crackers look like the tail-enders of a Class D league.

* * *

IT'S a hard matter not to acquire a grouch over a game like that. No matter how one attempts to wax flippant and facetious, the waxing isn't any good at all.

It was a gloomy contest.

At that, there were fielding spots of amazing brilliancy.

Wally Smith fielded like a world's champion. Bisland, despite two errors, almost evened up by some brilliant work. Stock had a brilliant day, and he did it in spite of the fact that Chapman nearly took his head off with a batted ball, which would have taken the "pep" out of an ordinary player.

Hogg pitched another grand game for Mobile.

The last time he was here he beat Atlanta 6 to 0.

Yesterday he won, 6 to 0.

However, he must be getting better, for the last time he allowed six hits, while this time, he gave up only three.

And it was an awful day for Atlanta's records, for Chapman made two out of the three hits, while the big batting stars, Long, Welchonce and Smith, went hitless.

* * *

OF course, it would hurt to be beaten by the Mobile at any time. But it hurts, especially now that the Gulls are crippled and very much weakened.

If the Crackers can't win from them now, what chance have they when the Gulls get back in condition, as they are bound to do soon? This is what the fans are asking themselves, and it's a serious question.

* * *

THE pitching of Dent was a bright feature. After Brady was knocked out Dent took up the burden and carried it well. The Gulls' only run after he went in resulted from a hit and an error.

This chap also made a nice play at the plate when Stock tried to score on what looked like a passed ball. Chapman fielded it and Dent received the throw and tagged Stock out, risking his legs and his neck in doing it. It was a game, clever piece of work.

* * *

ONLY three more games will be played at home after the Gulls depart. The Montgomery team is to be here Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. Then the Crackers beat it away for a long journey.

BROWN PRAISES THE GEORGIAN TO FARMERS

Former Assistant Commissioner of Agriculture Tells Them This Paper Is Best of All.

DUBLIN, July 12.—"I want every farmer in Laurens County—every farmer in Georgia—to read The Atlanta Georgian," said J. J. Brown, former Assistant Commissioner of Agriculture for Georgia, in an address at a great rally of the Farmers' Union, seven miles from Dublin, Friday.

"It is the best and fairest paper I have ever read," he continued. "It is our friend and we should read it. Of course, there are other great papers, but there is none in the class of The Atlanta Georgian."

This statement was made while discussing rural free delivery, and was received with enthusiasm by the great crowd present.

Mr. Brown joined Charles S. Barrett and L. M. Rhodes at Dublin Friday, and is a great addition to the team, for he is a great speaker.

Rhodes and Barrett Speak.

Mr. Rhodes, that great big Tennessee farmer, who has statistics, facts and figures to prove his assertions, who knows what the farmers need and who is making their cause his life work, fairly took the big crowd by storm. He is a natural orator and is making friends and converts to the Farmers' Union.

President Barrett made his speech of this tour, and created more enthusiasm than any speaker ever heard in the county. He is the idol of the farmers, and they have faith in him.

Farmers Drive 15 Miles.

More than 200 vehicles surrounded the place of the rally, many of the farmers coming across the country for a distance of fifteen miles, showing their interest in the Farmers' Union. It is the impression of Mr. Rhodes and Mr. Brown that the number of members of the Farmers' Union in Georgia will be increased to 75,000 before another year shall have passed.

Crops in this section of the State are good, and from the appearance of the farmers they have been good for several years.

The speaking lasted more than three hours, and not a single person left, which shows how the farmers feel in regard to unionism.

After the speechmaking a great picnic dinner of fried chiken, potato pie and watermelon was enjoyed.

It is expected that fully 5,000 persons will gather at Waycross on Saturday, where the campaign closes.

Farmers Rally At Douglasville.

DOUGLASVILLE, July 12.—An agricultural rally was held here to-day under the auspices of the State Agricultural College, with a large attendance. The movement was fathered by the Farmers' Union in this county and by the local Commercial Club.

The occasion was also a booster day for the Douglas County Fair to be held here next fall, and several important committees of the Fair Association met the farmers.

Butts Planters Rally at Jackson.

JACKSON, July 12.—Several hundred farmers and their families gathered in Jackson Friday to attend the Butts County Farmers' Institute, held under direction of the State College of Agriculture.

The occasion was made a rally day for the members of the Boys' Corn Club and the Girls' Canning Club. Dinner was served by the farmers at the Farmers' Union Warehouse.

Talks were made by Dr. William Burson, of the department of veterinary science at the State College of Agriculture; Porfessor T. H. McHatton, of the horticulture department, and S. M. Cown, district agent of the Boys' Corn Club work. County School Superintendent C. S. Maddox was chairman. The meeting was held in the courthouse.

DON'T TIRE AS END OF PONY CONTEST NEARS

Every Incentive Is Offered Candidates in the Race for the Beautiful Shetlands.

Ginger for Contestants.

Shetland ponies never tire. Neither must you if you want one.

It is a half-hearted youngster who tires near the finish.

Watch your receipt book, and go after renewals just before the short-term subscriptions expire.

Remember, you are asking people to do themselves a favor when you ask them to subscribe to The Georgian and American.

Aim for a pony and cart; you may get a pony and saddle. Aim for a pony and saddle, and you may get a gold watch. Aim for a gold watch, and you may get a silver watch, and very likely you will get—left.

Miss Idell Shaw, No. 179 Pine street.

John Trimble, No. 4015 Boulevard avenue.

Every incentive is being offered contestants to make the last few weeks of The Georgian and American pony contest the liveliest of the entire struggle.

There is a generous extra-vote offer, with its only condition the turning in of $35, $25 or $15 for subscriptions. The subscriptions may be for any length of time, from a month up.

Sunday afternoon, at Grant Park, the ponies will be seen, harnessed and saddled, for the enjoyment of the contestants. There is inspiration for any youngster in driving or riding one of these little animals. Just to enjoy one of them for a few minutes stimulates a desire to own it. Never were more intelligent, kinder or better-trained animals seen in Atlanta.

Parents are particularly invited to be at the Park, when the contest manager will talk with them as to means of helping the children.

MOB RULE GRIPS SOFIA; SCORES ARE SHOT

Palace Is Stormed—Ferdinand's Abdication Demanded — Roumanians Near Capital.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

SOFIA, July 12.—Scores of men were shot down in the streets here to-day in a general uprising against the Government aroused by the defeat of Bulgarian troops in the field and the passive manner in which Roumania's declaration of war is being treated by the Government.

Mob rule prevails. The palace is surrounded by a throng shouting denunciations and calling upon Czar Ferdinand to abdicate.

A Roumanian army is marching upon Sofia and unless there is a peaceful settlement in the meantime the Bulgarian capital will be occupied next week.

It was not until to-day that the people learned that the Bulgars have been crushed at every point.

Try to Assassinate Daneff.

An attempt was made to assassinate Dr. Daneff, former Premier, as he was on his way to confer with President Guechoff.

Czar Ferdinand is reported to be preparing to evacuate the city.

So far as Servia and Greece are concerned the Balkan war is believed to be over, but Roumanian troops continue to pour into the eastern part of Bulgaria. These troops are fresh and fully equipped for fighting and are eager to clash with the Bulgarians. The shattered Bulgarian forces are no match for the Roumanians.

The Roumanians have occupied the Bulgarian towns of Turtukai, Dobridsh and Baltchik. There is no resistance to the advance of the Roumanian forces.

Bulgars, Routed, Massacre 200 Greeks; Foes Pursue.

ATHENS, July 12.—Greek and Servian forces in Central Macedonia have now joined, making a mighty army of 150,000 men. Two hundred Greeks, both men and women, have been massacred near Serres by the retreating Bulgarians. The Bulgarians have fled from Serres in a panic at the approach of the Greek soldiers.

The powers have advised Greece to make peace with Bulgaria. Mr. Coromilas, the Greek Foreign Minister, received a note from the European states advising Greece to join with Servia in ceasing hostilities. France will probably become the "protector" of Greece, now that the Balkan league has become shattered by war.

PLAN ON TO LEASE SPACE OVER W. & A.

Representative Suggests Way to Raise $100,000 Each Year. Committee Approves.

Representative Barry Wright, of Floyd County, plans to lease the space over the Western and Atlantic Railroad in the business district of Atlanta to a local syndicate for 20 years at $100,000 per annum. His plan met with the favor of the Western and Atlantic Committee of the Legislature, to which it was revealed Friday.

The committee recommended the creation of a committee of two Senators, five Representatives, the Governor and the chairman of the Railroad Commission as ex-officio members, to investigate Representative Wright's plan. It also recommended a legislative appropriation of $5,000 for the investigation.

The committee indorsed a constitutional amendment offered by Representative Meaders, of Oconee County, forbidding the sale of the W. & A., except by vote of the people. A bill providing for the appointment of a joint committee to investigate the desirability of purchasing the A., B. & A. Railroad, thereby extending the W. & A. to the sea, also was indorsed.

THE PLAYS THIS WEEK

At the Bijou.

The four performances of to-day will close a successful week's engagement of "Along Broadway," at the Bijou. This attraction, which is a remarkable offering at popular prices, made the biggest kind of a hit with Bijou patrons, and those who are looking for an ideal warm weather attraction will do well to visit the Bijou before the close of the engagement.

For next week another splendid musical attraction is announced. "Hotel a la Carte" comes to the Bijou with the very strongest praise from the press of the cities where it has appeared, and indications point to one of the very best offerings of the season.

As the name implies, the action takes place in a modern hotel, and the situations and complications that arise furnish a thread of plot on which to hang lots of tuneful songs, some graceful dances, presented by a company containing plenty of pretty girls.

Mabel Taliaferro Is Wed in Daisy Field

ST. LOUIS, July 12.—After keeping her marriage to Thomas J. Carrigan, of La Peer, Mich., a secret for more than a month, Mabel Taliaferro, of Chicago, the actress, formerly wife of Frederic Thompson, New York theatrical promoter, admitted here to-day she had been married June 1 in the Michigan city.

The marriage took place before a Justice of the Peace, in a field of daisies that edged down to a river bank just outside of La Peer, in order that all possible secrecy might be maintained.

Outcast White Deer Herds With Horses

LIBBY, MONT., July 11.—Henry Wegner, who has a ranch on the upper Yakt, says that a pure white deer has become associated with his the horses and follows them into the horses and follows them into the corral. Mr. Wegner said it was a doe and had pink eyes, so he named it Albino.

Old hunters here say that on account of its freakish apearance it had become an outcast, and in such cases the animal always will go to a herd of cattle or horses if possible.

Georgian in West Tricks 5 Women

DENVER, COLO., July 12.—Five young women of this city to-day are wondering how it all happened, while C. F. Thompson, of Macon, Ga., is in prison contemplating the danger of a too vivid imagination.

Three weeks ago Thompson landed in Denver, it is said, with just $20 in a pocket of his one and only suit. Within the course of a few days he had become engaged to four women, had picked out costly trousseaus for each and had made arrangements to purchase two high-priced automobiles.

Thursday he became engaged to the fifth young woman, after pawning a phonograph which he had obtained under false pretenses. This put the detectives on his trail. Now he is in jail, with prospects of a later trip to Canon City Penitentiary.

HARRISBURG, PA., July 12.—Bullfrogs by the thousand are being placed in the streams of Pennsylvania by the State Department of Fisheries and it is expected that by the end of July more young frogs will have been distributed than ever before handled by the State's fish propagators.

A Sustaining Diet.

These are the enervating days, when, as somebody has said, men drop by the sunstroke as if the Day of Fire had dawned. They are fraught with danger to people whose systems are poorly sustained; and this leads us to say, in the interest of the less robust of our readers, that the full effect of Hood's Sarsaparilla is such as to suggest the propriety of calling this medicine something besides a blood purifier and tonic—say, a sustaining diet. It makes it much easier to bear the heat, assures refreshing sleep, and will without any doubt avert much sickness at this time of year.

SHORT COVERING STEADIES COTTON

Buying of Old Crops by Spot Houses Principal Feature—Offerings General.

NEW YORK, July 12.—The cotton market was quiet at the opening of the cotton market to-day and first prices were 1 to 5 points higher than Friday's final. The demand from shorts who desired to even up for the week-end. When this was supplied prices eased off a few points. T he Liverpool market was closed and was responsible to some extent for the quiet market here.

Spot houses again purchased summer positions quite freely. One large spot broker started the market on an upward scale shortly after the call by bidding aggressively for large blocks of new crops, but bought little. The selling was mainly attributed to Wall Street and the uptown crowd.

The weather map was favorable, showing rains over the greater part of the belt, with lower temperatures and sentiment against the market.

Two of the largest local operators have covered since Tuesday about 50,000 bales of short cotton, and now the market has reached the point where it is practically in the hands of certain big interests, who are trading this and that way merely for small turns for scalping operations, pending further developments in connection with the ultimate outcome of the bull deal in July-August. These two options for the past two weeks have governed new crop positions as well as operations. The outcome of the Clarke amendment is also killing off business.

At the close the market was steady with prices at a net gain of 1 to 5 points from the final quotations of Friday.

Warehouse stocks in New York today is 37,301 bales; certificated, 31,199 bales.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, July 12.—Further good and rather general rains occurred during the past 48 hours in the eastern half of the belt. Precipitation was heaviest in Tennessee and North Alabama. Temperatures were lower in North Texas.

European political news was a little more cheerful, expressing the hope of early peace, but financial views continue pessimistic, owing to fear of heavy financial losses in connection with the Balkan war.

Our market was inclined to ease at the start on the favorable weather prospects, but open bidding for July by the controlling interests checked selling on the belief that screws might be turned on July. The bidding by these interests reflects the view that it is getting too late to bring cotton here to spoil the July squeeze by tenders.

The Times-Democrat's monthly report will appear Monday. It is expected to be favorable except for a tendency to give special prominence to the weevil danger.

The market ruled steady during the early session around 11.45 for December.

COTTON GOSSIP

The principal feature of the market to-day was the buying of old crop by spot interests. Wall Street and uptown crowd are thought to have sold new crop. Market took the selling well and ruled rather steady all day. Riordan was good seller of new crop around the close.—Anderson.

* * *

The several bearish reports issued yesterday has caused some change in sentiment and the feeling this morning was more bearish.

* * *

There are predictions for favorable weather over the belt for the next few days.

* * *

Around the close yesterday Geer, Shearson, McEnany, Hubbard, Flinn, Hartcorn and Seidenberg were among the leading buyers. Riordan, Parrott, Hicks, Cone and Montgomery were the principal sellers.

* * *

Senator Smith, of South Carolina, has introduced a bill providing for Governmental standard for grades of cotton and requiring futures contracts to be filled by grade specified in contract. The bill was ordered favorably reported by the Senate's sub-committee. The bill aims to overcome objections of Cotton Exchange to the proposed tax on future transactions and does not fix a penalty for failure to deliver actual cotton.

NEW ORLEANS, July 13.—Hayward & Clark: The weather map was very favorable, cloudy over entire belt, with general rains in eastern half, heaviest in Tennessee and North Alabama, where most needed. Cooler in west. Indications are for partly cloudy to fair in the Atlantics; possibly some scattered showers. Cloudy in central and western States, with cooler weather and showers coming on Texas over Sunday. Clearing and cooler in Oklahoma and Arkansas.

* * *

J. B. Turner, of Memphis, has the following on the condition of the cotton crop for the week ending July 11:

"The week was a normal and hence a favorable one for the season. Temperatures were quite high over a great part of the belt, but toward the end were materially moderated. Generally speaking, there was an abundance of moisture in the soil, and hence the cultivation was near perfect. The plant stood the excess of temperatures quite well and continued its growth and fruiting in a satisfactory manner. There is no striking change from the conditions of one week ago and this of itself is a favorable item.

"Little or no rain fell in Texas and Oklahoma, where already the supply of moisture was abundant, while down in Mississippi Valley there were many showers and locally heavy rains, which relieved an incipient drouth and set the cotton to growing rapidly. Showers fell also in the eastern States and were of benefit. As a whole, more rain in Alabama and States eastward would be desirable, though not necessary at this time.

"In Eastern Texas, Louisiana and Mississippi, weevils are more numerous than in several years, and their appearance has aroused the planters' alarm. As yet their depredations have been quite limited."

* * *

The Times-Democrat monthly crop report is expected Monday. We think it will be favorable except for giving the boll weevil danger the usual prominence.

* * *

Official Texas records show an average for the State of 98 degrees; three stations show 100; nine stations 102; one station 104; and one station 106. The maximum average for Oklahoma is 102.

* * *

Galveston will get a new bale to-day from Patricio, Texas, the same date as last year. New bale here from San Benito, consigned to John M. Parker & Co., will be sold at auction to-day.

* * *

The Government advises Corpus Christi, Texas: "Small craft warning. Disturbance over Southern New Mexico moving eastward; will cause brisk to high northerly winds to-day and probably Sunday."

* * *

The first new bale was sold here at auction for 16 cents; it was bought by E. Christ.

Grain Notes

The Chicago Inter Ocean says: "The wheat bears have the best of it. Hedging business is coming into the market, making it safer for the short seller than at any time within a year. Sentiment has become excessively bearish, and it would not be surprising to a majority to see lower prices, although the best traders are looking for irregular declines.

"Corn specialists attributed the break of 1⅜ on September yesterday, making a drop of almost 4 cents from the recent high point to unloading by longs. It is noticeable that such traders, who were long, have unloaded their purchases on bids. Traders said they would not be surprised to see a rally some day, but believe corn should be sold on all bulges.

"September oats dropped below 40 cents yesterday with stop orders selling sufficient to carry prices to 39¼. Those who have watched the market closely for two weeks say there has been a steady unloading by longs and a decrease in the outside buying. The liquidation, however, is not regarded as over."

* * *

Bartlett, Frazier & Co. says: "Wheat—Offerings from the country are somewhat lighter, but local sentiment is bearish and new speculative buying from the outside does not come in.

"Corn—The rains this morning are likely to cause further selling, although liquidation was on a liberal scale yesterday. Cash prices do not show as much weakness as the future, owing to moderate receipts and scarcity of offerings from first hands.

"Oats—There is nothing new in the situation, except that receipts are somewhat smaller and cash inquiry a shade better. Sentiment is very bearish, and, as in the other grains, outside buying is extremely limited.

"Provisions—Hogs under estimates with hog prices at yards steady to 5c higher."

IRREGULARITY IN PRICE OF STOCKS

Good Crop Advices and Easier Feeling Abroad Encourage Better Active Bidding.

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, July 12.—A higher range of prices was established at the opening of the stock market, although business was very quiet. Canadian Pacific began 2⅛ higher at 213½, but afterward shaded.

There was no change in speculative conditions and the gains which were recorded were chiefly due to a change in position on the part of the speculative element. Finding bear operations fruitless, the professionals turned bullish.

Union Pacific advanced ⅝ and some of the other gains were: Amalgamated Copper, ¼; United States Steel, ¼; Reading, ⅜; Lehigh Valley, ⅛; Erie, ½; American Can ¼, and Chesapeake and Ohio, ⅛.

The curb was quiet.

Americans in London were dull, but ruled above New York parity.

The market closed strong. Governments unchanged; other bonds steady.

STOCK GOSSIP

The New York Financial Bureau says: "We would buy the standard issues on recessions with the intention to take trading profits. Information channels are friendly to the stock list. Irregular and narrow fluctuations may be seen to-day."

* * *

The trainmen and conductors' committee of 1,000 will meet to-day to ratify the Eastern railway vote.

* * *

Trade reports show that conservatism in business circles is still manifest, owing chiefly to the tariff legislation.

* * *

Twelve industrials declined .11; 20 active rails declined .15.

Although the market continues dull, with few changes in prices, there are many bullish factors in the situation that are being ignored, which later in the season will have a beneficial effect on values. We believe stocks conservatively accumulated around this level will in a reasonable time show satisfactory profits.—Potter.

WHEAT LEADER IN CEREAL DECLINE

General Rains and Absence of Speculative Buying Cause of Heavy Liquidation.

CHICAGO, July 12.—Wheat was ⅜c lower at the opening this morning on further fine rains which covered the entire spring wheat country in the Northwest. There were some rains in the winter wheat belt, which possibly may delay the movement for a day or two. The official report on wheat crop of France shows the condition to be 3 points higher for winter and 2 higher for spring than July 1 a year ago. Northwestern receipts were moderate.

Corn was ⅜c to ¾c lower on rains where needed throughout the belt.

Oats were off ⅜c to ½c in sympathy with the other grains.

Provisions were firmer and higher.

EAST WANTS LIGHT HOGS.

CHICAGO, July 12.—Eastern orders for light hogs were in excess of weekend supply and a 10 to 12c higher market for everything fit for that outlet resulted. Shipping hogs sold largely at 9.10@9.25. Packing grades were little if any higher, as that branch was without competition. There were 35,000 at eleven markets, against 45,000 a year ago, and not to exceed 40,000 are expected here Monday. Shipping demand is coming back in emphatic manner, that outlet having absorbed 20,000 this week. Both in cattle and sheep the finish was nominally strong at the best prices of the week. Monday's expectancy is for about 20,000 cattle and 35,000 hogs.

JUDGES DECIDE WHO IS BUTTON PRIZE WINNER

Submitted by W. Mae Jones, 1428 Candler Building.

Submitted by W. T. Wilson, 388 North Jackson street.

Hearst's Sunday American Will Announce Best Slogan—Many Submitted Saturday.

Judges Saturday took charge of all the "500,000 club" slogans submitted in the $25 prize contest. They are John W. Grant, Wilmer L. Moore and Walter C. Taylor. At The Georgian office they began a careful study of the hundreds of suggestions submitted.

Hearst's Sunday American will announce the winner.

The last day of the contest brought in the largest number of submissions of any other day. Many are beautiful designs by well-known artists. Others are striking for their literary merit. All bespeak the wonderful Atlanta spirit—save one.

That came in anonymously from a cynical humorist. He went to the trouble of drawing a large picture burlesquing Atlanta from the City Hall to the last garbage dump beyond "Pittsburg."

The Cynic's Slogan.

In one corner was a large building marked "Hot Air Factory." Next to it was the City Hall, called "The House of Mystery," and on top of the building sat a doubtful bird marked "Graft." The bottom of the picture showed three stragglers passing out of a gate with the remark:

"Griffin ain't so bad after all."

It's a cinch this design won't get the prize.

One of the best of the last suggestions was a map of Georgia with a star marking Atlanta, its capital. The slogan, offered by George L. Taylor, No. 152 Courtland street, is:

"Hitch your wagon to the star. Half million by 1920."

Here are many scintillating with enthusiasm:

"Boost Atlanta. Everybody's doing it; 500,000 by 1920. Welcome. The Gate City."—W. L. Maddox, No. 395 Whitehall street.

"For Atlanta 500,000 by 1920. Come on."—Wilbur G. Kurtz, No. 90 Sinclair avenue.

"Atlanta, the lives; and niftiest town always."—G. O Shepard, No. 36 North Pryor street.

W. T. Wilson, No. 388 North Jackson street, offers the Phoenix arising from the ashes with the slogan, "Always ahead."

"Atlanta, the bright star of the Southland. Pleasure, health, wealth, prosperity; 500,000 by 1920."—E. B. Gibson, No. 72 Cherokee avenue.

"Atlanta always ahead; 500,000 1920; 1847-1865; Phoenix."—U. F. Harbour, No. 41 North Pryor street.

Poet Offers One.

"Half a million. That's our bet. Watch Atlanta. She'll get it yet."—Alex Maddox, No. 212 Euclid avenue.

"Place, Atlanta, Ga.; time, 1920; population, 500,000; our motto, 'Cooperation.'"—C. L. Nicholson, No. 18 Ormond street.

AMERICAN LIFE INTEREST FUND IS HELD UP

Court Grants Restraining Order to Stockholders Who Have Filed Receivership Suits

Following the filing of two receivership suits against the American Life and Annuity Company, Judge Ellis issued an order Friday restraining officials of the company from making payment on the interest of income certificates.

Pope M. Brown, defeated candidate for Governor in the last campaign, is president of the company. N. G. Parker, Horace Sandiford and T. K. Bowles filed the suits as certificate holders. July 14 was set for a hearing.

Bowles was secretary of the company until November, when he was succeeded by Parker, who himself resigned Thursday. General Manager W. R. Taylor asserts that the company is in good financial condition and has assets of more than $100,000 over its liabilities. He said the report of Deputy Insurance Commissioner Copeland, made June 15, showed liabilities of $88,662.21 against assets of $189,084.37.

The suits charge that the company has taken in $441,000 in the last three years on income certificates alone, and that it has other sources of revenue. The assets are placed at $135,000. It is charged that the company has threatened to pay $12,000 interest on income certificates July 15, and that it has no funds with which to do so.

The American Life and Annuity Company was organized at McRae, Ga., three years ago. It has been regarded as one of the most successful of Georgia companies.

ATTORNEYS PASS LIE AND BLOWS IN MACON

Solicitor General Ross and Lawyer Harris Clash Over Trial of Vice Cases.

MACON, July 12.—Attorney Jesse C. Harris brought about a sudden adjournment of the special criminal session of the Bibb Superior Court yesterday afternoon by calling Solicitor John P. Ross a liar and striking him in the face in the courtroom. Harris was fined $50 for contempt of court and also censured by Judge Mathews for his conduct.

Harris represented fifteen women of the restricted district who are charged with operating disorderly houses. In moving for a continuance of these cases, he declared that Solicitor Ross would not call the cases represented by any other lawyers, but was seeking solely to prosecute those represented by him (Harris).

"That's a falsehood, your honor," interposed the Solicitor.

"You're a liar," shouted Attorney Harris, striking the Solicitor in the face.

Deputies seized both men immediately.

"He's a dirty little scoundrel; let me hit him once," shouted Solicitor Ross, but was restrained.

Judge Mathews held that the jury was prejudiced in the matter of trying any of the defendants represented by Harris, and as Solicitor Ross refused to call any other cases, though stating that he was prepared for trial in all of them, the court was adjourned for the term and all parties discharged. The Solicitor stated that Harris represented all of the prominent defendants, and that he did not propose to try the lesser and weaker defendants first. "There are 'stars' of varying magnitude in Tybee (the vice district) as well as in glory," he said.

Mating for Breeding Purposes; Also Why Hens Go Blind

Questions Answered That Might Be Ones You Are Anxious to Have Explained.

By JUDGE F. J. MARSHALL.

Judge F. J. Marshall: I will appreciate some good advice. Last February I got five thoroughbred S. C. White Leghorns. From these I have raised 110 chickens, in addition to having used some eggs for the table. What arrangement should I make in the autumn for cocks? Must I dispose of all that I raise and procure fresh male birds, and how many shall I kep for, say 60 hens? My Leghorn flock has free range on Bermuda and Johnson grass, and will have cowpeas and winter oats. What feeding will they need during the fall and winter? When may I expect my pullets to lay that were hatched during April and May? I plan in the autumn to fence in a half-acre of winter oats, to divide it in half, and to keep in these two divisions, alternatingly, some large fowls from which to raise early broilers. What is the very best breed for this purpose? I do not need a general utility fowl, as my Leghorns will provide me with eggs. I simply want a breed that are early layers and rapid growers. How many birds can I keep to advantage on my half-acre? I have recently hatched sixteen thoroughbred ducks, they are Pekin ducks, from which I wish to raise. Is it better to give them range or keep them in an enclosure? What proportion of drakes are needed, and must I procure others than those which I have hatched.

Gunnison, Miss. MRS. M. M. S.

Reply: I should advise keeping the old cock you have been breeding from someone's yards not akin to three good, vigorous, young cockerels from one one's yards not akin to yours, and let the four run with the 60 hens and pullets you are going to have on your free range. One male to every fifteen females is sufficient where they all have free range.

Where stock is yarded, there should be one male to every ten females. Your Leghorn pullets hatched in April and May should commence laying in September and October, perhaps some of them a little sooner than that if well cared for and they have no disease to bother them during their maturing. For your broiler raising, any one of the Plymouth Rocks or the Wyandottes are good. The Barred Rock is hard to beat for this purpose. You could keep 50 layers on the half-acre you speak of, but 30 would do better and give you the eggs you need for broiler raising upon a limited scale. You can keep your broilers in other yards where there is no grass, if you furnish them with sufficient green stuff and the like. You will get better results from Pekin ducks when

Suggestion of 30-Year Property Lease for $3,000,000—Jonesboro Road Acreage Sold.

A new proposition has been submitted in the so-called Bleckley plaza plan for bridging the railroad tracks in the center of town and erecting handsome business buildings along the superstructure. It is to lease the Western and Atlantic Railroad acreage from the State for 30 years on a basis of $100,000 a year, and then give the property back to the State.

This suggestion was made at a meeting of the W. & A. Committee of the State Legislature by Barry Wright, Representative from Rome. Mr. Wright declared he was confident he could get a syndicate of business men to take such a lease.

The plaza plan was first put forward several years ago by Haralson Bleckley, the well-known architect, who submitted a sketch showing the feasibility of it. Leaders in local finance indorsed the movement, declaring that the waste space over the railroad tracks could be made to yield the State a handsome income with no outlay.

Included in the plan are a handsome new depot and an incline from the Forsyth street bridge to Madison avenue, to handle traffic to and from the Terminal Station. Ralph O. Cochran, John Y. Smith and Robert B. Blackburn, Representatives from Fulton, recently indorsed this project on condition that the State's interests could be protected in

Some Day Babies Will Be Born Wise.

In Ages to Come Human Beings at Birth Will Know More Than Any Man Knows Now.

(Copyright, 1913.)

The most helpless and ignorant thing in the world is a new-born human being.

The most independent and wise thing in the world—in proportion to its ability—is a new-born mud wasp, or newly fledged sparrow.

That is because the human being is just in the beginning of its development, whereas the mud wasp, the ant and other insects have reached the highest development of which they are capable.

The saddest thing in the education of human beings is the fact that each child must begin at the beginning and learn everything for itself.

Each little baby learns to walk, learns to avoid the fire, learns to talk. The mind starts its life as a blank page, and everything must be written upon it. The child can not even learn by hearing from the father and mother of their mistakes. Each child must make its own mistakes, and can be taught only by experience.

But will that last forever?

When you see the lower forms of animal life giving birth to creatures fully equipped and independent, can you not believe that when the human race, practically just born on this planet, shall have lived here for a few hundreds of thousands or millions of years, that the human child will be born with all the material knowledge stored away, and have no work to do except the discovering of unknown truths, working in new fields?

We base this editorial upon an article by Sir William Ramsay, in the current number of Hearst's Magazine. We advise intelligent, thoughtful readers to get the magazine this month and every month. It is published for those who are interested in realities, those who are capable of thought.

In the article referred to, Sir William Ramsay describes both in the animal world and among human beings indications of a certain power of mind, of knowledge born in the newly created animal, apart from all teaching or experience.

He says, concerning the inhabitants of Burmah:

"Cases are known where a child, born of parents living in a village not their own, to which they had migrated, was able to recognize people, and to 'remember' events which had taken place in the native village of his parents, of which he could have had no direct knowledge. Is it possible that a memory for particular events is sometimes inherited?"

Then he says, of certain observations made upon swallows:

"Their nest was under the eaves; and for long, the parents fed and attended to their young brood. The day arrived for them to leave their nest; and without any practice, each fledgling dropped out of the nest, flew backward and forward, and without the least hesitation entered the nest, just like an old bird. The wonderful power of control of muscles, of guiding motion, and of correlation of brain and eye must have lain in the germ of these birds until the time for their use arrived. Examples of the sort might be given by the thousand; although the one mentioned is perhaps particularly striking."

It is extremely likely that the little boy of Burmah, a child bred for ages along the same limited line of thought, should have certain ideas and associations before birth strongly impressed upon it, and that these should be transmitted and appear in the child without any teaching.

There is no doubt that the children of savages recognize of their own accord the danger in poisonous reptiles and other animals to which the civilized child would be indifferent, except after the experience of a bite.

In the animal world the fact that the brain of the new animal is born with exact, wonderful knowledge is not disputed. And that fact is of intense interest to human beings who hope that the human race itself may develop one day in such a way as to have the children born with a ready-made education in excess of that which they now possess after years of schooling.

Suppose that a child could come into this world wise in proportion to its possibilities, as does the child of the mud wasp.

No baby mud wasp ever saw its own mother. The eggs are laid, and the mother who lays the eggs dies before they hatch.

Each new mud wasp begins its career as did Adam in the Garden of Eden, with nobody back of him so far as he knows.

When the mud wasp is ready she selects a good place to lay her eggs. Then she goes off and selects a fat caterpillar.

She intends that the caterpillar shall feed her young wasps when the latter hatch out. She puts that caterpillar beside the eggs that she has laid, covers up the eggs and the caterpillar, and goes away, leaving food for the young, unborn wasps, as some human mother might go out for a day's work leaving bread and butter on the table and saying, "Johnny, eat that when you get hungry."

The wonderful thing is that the mother wasp does not KILL the caterpillar. If she killed it, it would be decayed and useless by the time the young wasps arrived.

The mother wasp seizes the caterpillar and carefully stings it just back of the head, between two of the little rings that form the caterpillar's body.

This stuns the caterpillar, makes it impossible for it to move or struggle, but does not kill it.

And while the wasp eggs are hatching, the caterpillar, rendered helpless, but not killed by the poison, lies there ALIVE waiting for the little wasps to hatch out and eat it.

Presently they hatch, they eat it, and scatter.

The wonderful thing is that each of these wasps, never having seen the thing done, never having had lessons from its mother, or from any school-teacher, goes out when the time comes, lays her eggs, finds a fat caterpillar, stings it exactly in the same scientific way, and puts it away with the eggs, never having been told how to do it.

What a fine thing it would be for the children of human beings if they could be born with knowledge of that kind. Some of them are born WITH UNUSUAL KNOWLEDGE.

Some have musical power, which means that the brain before birth developed knowledge of harmony.

Some children can compose music correctly when they are almost too young to read.

Other children have a phenomenal mathematical faculty and can do "sums" that would puzzle their elders.

So far, man's brain is really too big for his body.

He was a timid, frightened monkey-man, running away from everything, developing his brain rapidly in order to make up for physical weakness. He has been a thinking man only

WINIFRED BLACK

Writes on

A Woman Next Door

You Choose Your Friends, She Says, Because You Like Them, and Like Their Kind, Not Because Somebody Else Thinks You Ought to Like Them.

By WINIFRED BLACK.

I READ a brilliant story by a brilliant writer the other day.

Did you happen to read it, too?

It was about a woman who lived down "behind the tracks," in a country town. She was a woman who flaunted the streets in a gorgeous hat and expensive gowns. She wore bangle bracelets that jingled and rings that sparkled, and high-heeled slippers and "open-worked" stockings, and the men grinned sheepishly when she passed, and nudged each other, and the women looked the other way and pretended they didn't even see her.

One day the woman from "behind the tracks" bought a house uptown and moved into it—a neat, pretty little house, with a garden and trees, and she dug in the flower beds and watered the lawn and put out hanging baskets, and she went to market in a little checked gingham, and she looked wistfully over the fence when the neighbors went by, but nobody ever spoke to her at all.

One night a baby was taken sick in the neighborhood and the woman from "behind the tracks" saved its life. The next day she stood out on her porch and waited to see the baby's mother go by. And the baby's mother went by—and did not see the woman from "behind the tracks" at all, and the woman from "behind the tracks" went and sold her little new house and the garden and all, and went back "behind the tracks" to live—and all the people in the village pursed their lips and said, "She's gone back—they always do."

What Did She Expect?

Good story, wasn't it, and a good slap at the narrow-minded little mother, who wouldn't make friends with the woman who had saved her baby's life?

We need a few such slaps as that, we women; and yet——

I wonder what the woman from "behind the tracks" expected when she bought the pretty little house and the garden, and went to live among decent people?

Did she think they would get out the band and meet and greet her at the doorsteps, or what?

You choose your friends because you like them, and like their kind—not because somebody else thinks you ought to like them.

If the woman from "behind the tracks" had come to the village from somewhere else and nobody knew a thing about her, do you think the neighbor women would have liked her anyhow? I don't.

She wasn't their kind; never was, never could be. She belonged to a different world, and every time she turned her over-blonded head and every time she opened her good-humored, too easily-pleased mouth, and every time she laughed her rather coarse laugh, she would have told what she was, and no woman of any fineness of perception could have been mistaken in her for a minute.

No, I don't mean what she had been. That isn't what would concern a kindly woman who was trying to decide whether she wanted her for a neighbor or not. I mean what she is. A gingham dress doesn't change the beat of a woman's heart; a garden hoe doesn't turn her from a coarse, easy-going, blunt-hearted person to a gentle, delicate, lovely woman, does it? I don't believe it.

A Lesson From Home.

Once I had a maid—a strange, silent, stubborn girl with blue eyes, so hard that they were like a flint. She had a strange, measured walk and a strange, controlled voice, and she always acted as if she thought some one was watching her.

One day I saw her in a blue print dress, of peculiar cut and shade, and I knew—she was a reformatory girl. I'd seen her before, at the reformatory.

I didn't say a word. I treated her exactly as I had always treated her, but one day she was gone and she left a letter for me. In it she said many things. One of them was this: "You know me; don't you? I believe you do. I thought I could be different, but I can't. You've been good to me, but I ain't happy here. I ain't comfortable, so I'm going," and gone she was, back to the people with whom she was "comfortable," poor thing. Back to the people who were like her and who had her ways and her point of view. I was sorry, but I didn't go after her or try in any way to reach her.

Perhaps I should have—I've often wondered—and yet there were the children. Would it have been exactly safe?"

Selfish—protecting my children at the expense of a poor thing who was trying to make herself over.

Perhaps; but those children are mine. They are my business. It is my affair to keep them safe as long as I can. My own doorstep I must keep clean, and then if I have time and strength I may help my neighbor about her's. That's the way it looks to me. I wonder if I am right or wrong?

What You Really Are.

The poor thing from "behind the tracks" didn't belong in the neat little street uptown. She was no more in place there with her loud laugh and her bleached hair than the timid little woman who lived beside her would be in place in the ranks of a marching army. I don't blame the neighbor women for looking the other way. Honestly, now, I don't.

And the high-heeled, expensive slippers and the open-worked stockings and the gorgeous hats and the flashing rings—she had had all these things while little neighbor turned her blue cashmere and trimmed it with black velvet one year and with cream-colored lace the next, trying to make herself look pretty to the one man she loved. How could the poor thing from "behind the tracks" think she would never have to pay for all that?

After all, though, it isn't what you used to be that counts. It isn't what you would like to be, either; but what you really are, and no change in dress or in housing or anything else will change that. I wish it would. How pitifully I wish it would.

Some Day Babies Will Be Born Wise

for a short time—probably not more than two or three hundred thousand years.

Unlike the ants, the wasps, and the swallows, he has not had time yet to develop knowledge, make it thoroughly his own, and TRANSMIT it.

But there is every reason to believe that in time to come the baby will be born with all the practical knowledge that it requires, just as the young swallow and the young wasps begin life thoroughly educated.

When the time comes, each individual will have a highly interesting career—each being born knowing everything that is generally known, and each being able to devote the whole of life to acquiring NEW knowledge and making original research.

The difference between the mud-wasp and the human baby now is that the wasp is born knowing everything that it needs to know—and never learns anything more.

The baby of the human kind is born knowing nothing, and learns a good deal.

In days to come, when the baby is born with knowledge, there will still be a difference between it and the wasp, the ant, and the swallow, for born with the things that it must know in order to live comfortably, the human baby, unlike its animal associates on the earth, will start out ADDING to human knowledge—which, in turn, by slow processes that go on within us, will be handed down to the new generation.

TO ARREST WIDOW IN POISON MYSTERY

Girl Tells Police Startling Story of Vice Ring

MILITANTS ASSAIL KING AND QUEEN

THREE NEW VICE WAR ARRESTS

Man Prisoner Declares He Will Bare the Whole System if Brought to Trial.

As a result of statements made to Chief Beavers Friday morning by Hattie Smith, the young girl who has been held for the Grand Jury in connection with the vice war, Detective Rosser at noon arrested three persons —two men and a woman—who were named by the Smith girl as contributing to her downfall and being involved in her white slavery charges.

The persons under arrest are Paul Estes, 52 Queen Street; Hoyt Monroe, Edgewood, and Mrs. Lola White, 768 Marietta Street.

The woman is a cousin of Hattie Smith and lives next door, while both Estes and Monroe are in the employ of the Collier Garage at Cone and James Streets, where the Smith girl says she met Lena Barnhardt, who later took her to the Cumberland Hotel.

Says She Went Joy Riding.

In her new statement made Friday morning Hattie Smith declared that she went automobile riding with her cousin, Mrs. White, and Estes and Monroe. The two men were released by Chief Beavers after being giving a copy of charges, and their case set for Tuesday afternoon. The White woman was taken to detective headquarters and will be questioned by Chief Lanford. It was announced by the police that she will be held on heavy bonds.

The arrests of Estes and Monroe are considered by Chief Beavers as the preliminary to the spreading of the dragnet and the arrest of seventeen men, some of them prominent in business, who, it is alleged, are involved. Estes, when arrested, declared that he intends to make a complete confession and throw new light on the situation.

"I'm not going to be the goat," Estes declared. "I am going to open my mouth and tell everything I know about vice, and I'm going to give names. I'm going to name every girl and man that I know have taken automobile rides and gone to hotels for immoral purposes.

Promises a Sensation.

"And I know enough names to stir up an awful racket if they are all arrested, and I know a lot about vice in Atlanta that no one else knows."

Chief Beavers stated that every man whom Estes names in his proposed confession will be arrested and brought before Judge Broyles for trial. The Chief declares that the developments of Friday in the vice war have placed him in a position where he can put a speedy end to the immoral operations of men and women in Atlanta, and he stated that he intends to continue his investigation with increased vigor.

Sensational revelations involving two more downtown hotels and seventeen well-known men, one of them a prominent business man, were made to Chief Beavers and Plainclothes Officers Green and McKibben Friday morning by Corrinne Wilson, the 16-year-old girl who was arrested, together with 14-year-old Dora Rothstein, Thursday night.

The confession of the Wilson girl, which Chief Beavers regards as one of the most important developments of the vice crusade, and which is even more sensational than the story of Hattie Smith, came at the close of a long examination of the girl by the police.

Accuses Business Men.

The Wilson girl was definite in her accusations. She furnished the chief with the name of a prominent business man whom she said has contributed to her downfall, and told of three others whose names she does not remember, but whose places of

WOMEN RIOT AT ROYAL CARRIAGE

Gunman, Hired by Militants, Fires Shot From Gallery in the House of Commons.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LIVERPOOL, July 11.—Many persons were hurt here to-day in street fighting between men and women which followed an attempt by militant suffragettes to attack the carriage in which King George and Queen Mary were driving through the city.

The attack followed a wild scene in Lord Street when Miss Jolly, secretary of the Liverpool branch of the Women's Social and Political Union, made a lone raid, smashing hundreds of dollars' worth of plate-glass windows.

The local militant leaders had laid plans for the biggest suffrage demonstration Liverpool has ever seen, because of the presence here to-day of the King and Queen, who are making a tour of England.

Great Precautions Taken.

Extraordinary police precautions had been taken to guard their majesties from attack, as it was feared that the militants, who have been unusually active here of late, would attempt to interfere with the progress of the royal party and perhaps commit actual assault.

Soldiers co-operated with police and detectives in policing the streets and in protecting the King and Queen from the crowds.

Just before the royal party turned into Lord Street Miss Jolly appeared, dashing into the crowd of spectators, and brandishing a poker above her head, she scattered them right and left. Screaming denunciations of the Government, she sent her weapon crashing into the plate-glass windows, doing hundreds of dollars' worth of damage.

Several policemen overpowered her while she struggled with maniacal fury. She was locked up. This incident alarmed the authorities, for it served as a clew that the women planned an active day.

Royal Carriage Attacked.

Half an hour later the attack upon the royal carriage occurred. From a break in the police lines several women ran into the street. They hurled a quantity of suffrage literature into the carriage and one of them seized the door and tried to wrench it open. Another ran toward the horses' heads to stop them.

An equerry leaped to the street and grappled with one of the women, and in an instant the others were seized by policemen. In the meantime, however, supporters of the militants had swarmed to the aid of their sisters and a fight began.

Women attacked men and men retaliated. Fists, clubs and hatpins were the chief weapons. Many were knocked down and trampled. The police made a number of arrests.

Shot Creates Panic In House of Commons.

LONDON, July 11.—An evident attempt at assassination occurred in the House of Commons to-day when a man in the gallery for spectators drew a revolver and fired shortly after the session of the House opened. A parliamentary policeman who was nearby grasped the man and wrenched the pistol from his hand before he could fire again.

One sensational report which was circulated was that the man was a fanatic on the topic of suffrage and had attempted to assassinate Premier Asquith because of his opposition to the suffrage propaganda. Another report was that the man had been hired by the militants to make a demonstration, and that the bullet was not intended for any one in particular.

Owner Asks $25,000 For Death in Wreck Of Aristocratic Pig

Premier Longfellow Rival, a blue-blooded Berkshire hog with an ancestry tracing back to the Mayflower, was the subject of a $25,000 litigation in the court of Judge Bell Friday morning.

Rival's owner, J. B. DeBow, late of Nashville and now of Atlanta, sought to recover this amount for the killing of the aristocrat of pigdom.

Attorneys for the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Pacific Railroad were on hand to say that the hog was not worth even the $10,000 awarded DeBow by another court and from which award an appeal was taken.

The story told the court was that Premier Longfellow Rival was on his private palace car en route from Monigomery to Vicksburg, where he was to be exhibited at a fair in 1905. There was a collision and Rival was considerably smashed up. About a month later he calmly laid down and died.

President Wilson Near Injury as His Automobile Skids

CORNISH, N. H., July 11.—President Wilson had a narrow escape from a serious accident on the return trip from Hanover to-day when his automobile skidded on the newly oiled road and came near crashing into a rail fence.

Robinson, the White House chauffeur, threw on the emergency brakes and stopped the heavy machine just in time to prevent injury to the car or to the President.

The President's automobile attempted to turn aside to allow a heavy dray to pass. The skid chains failed to catch in the oil and the car swung around until it came within a foot of the fence by the side of the road.

The President was thrown slightly to one side of the car, but managed to retain his seat.

Charley Farley, a negro, who killed Albert J. Rucker, a negro preacher, on March 21, was given a sentence of eight years in the penitentiary. Appeal for bail pending application for a new trial was denied.

Brunswick Business Man Tries Suicide

BRUNSWICK, July 11.—W. B. Lee, cashier of the Mutual Light and Water Company of this city, who attempted suicide to-day, lies at his home in a dangerous condition.

Lee arose at an early and apparently was in his usual good spirits. The first intimation that his wife had of anythihg wrong was when she heard groans, and, going to the upper floor, found her husband lying in a pool of blood with a bullet hole in his right temple. No reason has been ascertained for the deed.

BIGGER ARMY POST HERE CERTAIN

Garrison's Plan to Centralize Regulars Will Result in Enlargement of Fort McPherson.

That Secretary of War Garrison's plan to abandon 100 or more "absolutely useless" posts in a move to centralize the army will mean an enlargement of Fort McPherson, making it one of the largest in the country, is the consensus of opinion of army men here, including Colonel VanOrsdale, of the Seventh Regiment.

Nor is this opinion a haphazard guess. The officers base their knowledge of the matter largely on remarks made by General Leonard Wood, chief of staff, on his last visit to Atlanta.

"If the plan of centralizing the army, which has been under consideration for several years, is put into effect," said General Wood on this occasion, "Fort McPherson will become one of the largest posts in the country."

Wood to Advise Secretary.

As General Wood will be one of the chief advisers of Secretary Garrison, accompanying him on his tour of the posts, there is little doubt, it is pointed out, that the Georgia post will receive favorable consideration. Mr. Garrison, General Wood and Quartermaster General Aleshire, who will make the inspection of the army posts, will begin their tour next week.

Atlanta is too strategic a point for the War Department even to consider its abandonment, according to Colonel VanOrsdale.

"I hardly think it is possible that Fort McPherson is being included in plans for army-post abandonment," said he. "If such a movement is on foot, I would be inclined to believe that it has to do with posts in the West and on the frontier, which are quite a distance from the railroad and which hold but a handful of troops in many cases.

Atlanta a Strategic Point.

"The location of Fort McPherson puts us within twelve hours of the Atlantic and twelve hours of the Gulf coasts, the great number of railroads entering Atlanta making it a central point. There are other big advantages also which make the abandonment of this post out of the question, it seems to me.

"If troops are to be concentrated, Congress must first appropriate money with which to build quarters at the larger posts sufficient to accommodate a much larger number of men. For instance, there has been talk of making Fort McPherson a brigade post, but before this can be accomplished it will be necessary to put up additional buildings. I believe a sufficient appropriation for this will be granted if Secretary Garrison decides to continue the post."

When questioned as to the probable abandonment of Fort Oglethorpe, at Chickamauga Park, Colonel VanOrsdale said he did not believe the War Department would consider its elimination, as it is a splendid strategic point.

Reynolds Announces In Race for Council

Frank H. Reynolds, Park Commissioner from the Eighth Ward, Friday positively announced his candidacy for Councilman from that ward, to succeed Clarence H. Haverty. Mr. Reynolds declared his efforts would be directed toward the development of Piedmont Park, if elected.

H. M. Patterson, prominent business man, also has announced for Councilman from the Eighth Ward. W. A. Hancock and Charles S. Owens have announced for Alderman. Others have intimated they might enter the contests.

WIDOW ACCUSED IN CRAWFORD WILL CASE

MRS. MARY BELLE CRAWFORD.

MINCEY'S STORY JOLTS POLICE TO ACTIVITY

Steps Taken Immediately to Discredit Affidavit Published Exclusively in The Georgian.

The Georgian's exclusive publication of the sensational details of the W. H. Mincey affidavit, in which Jim Conley was alleged to have confessed to the killing of a girl the afternoon that Mary Phagan was slain, created a big stir Friday in police circles and immediate efforts were made to discredit the accusations against the negro.

Detectives set out at once on a still hunt for Mincey. Lines were thrown out to produce witnesses who would swear that Mincey's word was not to be depended upon. The detective force, which virtually had been resting on its oars in the Phagan case for several weeks, was galvanized into action by the startling charges made in the affidavit of Mincey, which was first made public by The Georgian.

Police Deny Being Told.

Interviews with the detective heads brought denials that Mincey ever had told them the story that was printed in The Georgian. Attorneys for the defense, however, corroborated the published details of the affidavit.

"It is correct in every detail," said one of the lawyers. "It was not the intention to make any of our important evidence public, but now that Mincey's story has found its way into print, there is nothing to do but admit that we have the affidavit and that it makes the assertions which The Georgian printed yesterday.

"It is only natural that an attempt will be made to discredit Mincey's story. But we are assured of its truth and are confident that it will stand the test of all the investigation that can be made."

CHARGE DOCTOR WITH ATTACK ON WOMAN

Harris County Community Aroused by Accusation of Planter's Wife. Prisoner Guarded.

COLUMBUS, GA., July 11.—Dr. James Delemar, a well-known physician of Mountain Hill, Harris County, is confined in the Muscogee County jail, charged with attacking the wife of a prominent Harris County farmer.

Feeling between the families and friends of the accuser and accused is tense. Dr. Delemar was lodged in jail her because of threats of violence.

The Delemar family and that of the woman who says she was attacked are among the most prominent in Harris County and the charge against the doctor has caused a sensation.

Dr. Delemar is married and prior to this charge had always borne a splendid reputation.

His preliminary hearing has been set for Saturday morning.

The woman says she was attacked last February, but kept the fact a secret until yesterday.

Trouble between friends of the families is feared when the preliminary hearing is held.

CRAWFORD'S DEATH IS LAID TO WIFE

Coroner's Jury Holds Capitalist Was Slain by Poisoning. Recommends Inquiry.

The arrest of Mrs. Mary Belle Crawford on the charge of poisoning J. B. Crawford was recommended by a verdict of the Coroner of Carroll County, read at the hearing in the famous will case before J. N. Anderson, auditor.

The verdict was:

We, the jury, find that the deceased came to his death from poison administered by Mrs. Mary Belle Crawford, and recommend that she be held for investigation by the Fulton Grand Jury.

The inquest was held Thursday in Carrollton. It was an adjourned session of the first inquest on June 12, when the body was exhumed. Dr. H. F. Harris, of the State Board of Health, and Miss Viola Whitman, a woman who lived with the Crawfords after the marriage, were the witnesses.

Dr. Harris testified to finding morphine in the stomach, and that in his opinion Crawford did not die of pneumonia or any disease of the lungs.

Saw Medicine Given.

Miss Whitman testified to seeing Mrs. Crawford give her husband medicine from a small vial.

Attorneys for Mrs. Crawford allowed the verdict to be submitted as evidence, but stated to the auditor that they would later file an objection on the grounds of the inquest not having been legal. They stoutly maintained that before the hearing ends they will introduce positive evidence that Crawford died of pneumonia, and that the morphine found in his stomach was administered by his family physician.

J. S. James, attorney for the heirs-at-law stated he, in all probability, would start action along the line outlined in the recommendation of the Coroner's jury, but that he had not yet determined how soon he would do so.

That the testimony of Dr. H. F. Harris would be torn to shreds by the introduction of Dr. J. W. Hurt, Crawford's physician, was the declaration of Attorney Reuben Arnold.

Doctor Gave Drugs.

Dr. Hurt will testify, according to Attorney Arnold, that for several days before the death of Mr. Crawford he gave him small quantities of morphine to allay his suffering, and that it was unquestionably traces of the drug he administered found in the stomach when the body was exhumed last month. More than ten of the most prominent medical experts will be placed on the stand to substantiate the testimony of Dr. Hurt.

Colonel James announced that he would introduce no more witnesses on the poisoning theory, except statements from citizens in Florida, who, according to Colonel James, say that before she married Crawford Mrs. Crawford was heard to make damaging statements to a friend.

Colonel James said he would introduce testimony with a view to having the marriage annulled, and thus automatically have the property revert to the heirs-at-law. He said he would show that Mrs. Crawford was illegally divorced twice before she married Crawford.

The case before an auditor will not be concluded for more than two weeks and it then will go to the Superior Court again.

Attorney Found Dead In Woods Near Ensley

BIRMINGHAM, July 11.—The body of James Alexander, an attorney of Ensley, was found in the woods between Ensley and Wylam to-day. Alexander, who was 55 years old, went to Fairfield to attend court on Wednesday. On his return he started to walk to his home, two miles away. It is believed he was stricken with apoplexy and dropped dead in the woods.

Searching parties spent a day and night looking for him.

GIRL PRISONERS TELL MORE OF VICE RING

Seventeen Men, Some of Them Prominent in Business Circles, Accused by One Victim.

business she knows. The chief stated that the girl will be taken around the city Friday afternoon to identify the three men, and that they will be arrested at once after being identified.

In addition to the four men named by the Wilson girl against whom charges will be made, she gave the Chief the names of thirteen others with whom she says she and Dora Rothstein have taken auto rides.

These twelve will be subpenaed as witnesses in the trial of the two girls, which has been postponed until Saturday afternoon, and forced to tell all they know about vice. If evidence warranting it develops at the trial, they will be arrested and cases made against them.

Two men named by the Wilson girl as having kept her and the Rothstein girl in the woods for several nights were arrested by the police Friday morning. They are A. C. Dollar, a shoemaker, living at 69 Davis Street, who is held on a charge of disorderly conduct, and W. W. Suttles, assistant yardmaster of the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis Railroad, who is held on a kidnaping charge.

Suttles and Dollar were named also in the statements of the Rothstein girl, who named the Wilson girl as a procurer, and declared she introduced her to the two men.

Wilson Girl Denies Charge.

Corrinne Wilson denies the charges made against her by the Rothstein girl and declares that she was led into a life of shame by the latter girl and the two men.

"I met the Rothstein girl at the White City Park last Fourth of July," said the Wilson girl. "I was skating and fell, and she was among the crowd that gathered around me. That is how I met her. We were together all that evening and night in the woods near the park, and the next day we met Suttles and Dollar. Monday night we stayed all night with men at the baseball park.

"Saturday night and Sunday night we spent somewhere in the woods, and Monday night we stayed at the baseball park with some men. Tuesday and Wednesday night we stayed with Dollar and Suttles in an old mill on the Adamsville Road. Yesterday afternoon we came to Atlanta and were arrested last night.

Accuses Her Accuser.

"Dora Rothstein lied when she says I induced her to go with the men. She told me she had been doing it for a long time and that we could have a good time and make some money. I yielded when she told me we could make money, and she introduced me to the men."

The Wilson girl told Chief Beavers also that eight months ago, before she was married, she stayed at a hotel on Broad Street with a man, registering as his wife. She says she is the wife of Andrew Wilson, who now is working in Marietta. She came to Atlanta four weeks ago to visit her mother, who had burned her foot, she said.

Chief Beavers stated that in addition to involving the hotels and the seventeen men, the Wilson girl has told him a lot of things she had heard from other girls. He said she had given him the names of all the girls she knew who made a practice of going auto riding with men and of staying at the hotels with them, and that all of the girls will be brought to headquarters and questioned.

The Wilson girl also gave the chief the names of a number of alleged assignation houses which, she asserted, she and other girls had visited, and all will be thoroughly investigated.

MORTGAGE LAW REFORM LOSES IN HOUSE

Attempt to Reduce Number of Foreclosure Notices Defeated. Committee Report Ignored.

The effort to reform the mortgage laws of Georgia so that the mortgage holder would be required before foreclosing to advertise once a week for four weeks instead of for four months prior to the next term of the Superior Court, met with defeat in the House Friday, despite the favorable recommendation of General Judiciary Committee No. 1.

Representative Moss, of Cobb, presented a minority report, in which the proposed bill was declared to be too rapid and drastic. This drew a debate, in which Representative Wohlwender, chairman of General Judiciary Committee No. 1, and Garlington, of Fulton, and Wright, of Floyd, participated.

The roll call showed 83 ayes an 76 nays on the passage of the bill. This not being a constituetional majority, the bill was declared lost. Representative Barry Wright gave notice that he would move to reconsider the bill.

Davidson, of Putnam, and Sparks, of Toombs, presented the bill. Speaker Pro Tem. E. H. McMichael, of Marion, presided for the first time during the calling of the roll on this bill.

Among the new bills filed were:

By Fulbright, of Burke—Providing for a special tax of 1 mille during 1915 and 1916 to meet deficiencies.

Rhodes, of Clark—Appropriating $50,000 for new buildings at the University of Georgia.

Cheney, of Cobb—Requiring that befgore the marriage of persons under 18 years of age notice of the marriage license be advertised in the public gazette for at least one week.

Gower, of Crisp—Permitting owners of electric railroad companies, electric power and hydro-electric companies, to own and control gas companies.

Burwell, of Hancock—Providing amendment to the Constitution providing the pro rata ad valorem tax levy for the common schools of Georgia.

Connor, of Spalding—Providing for the county of Lamar.

$600 BACK PAY IS VOTED CLERK BY SENATE

First Expenditure by New Legislature Consummated — Slaton's Appointments Confirmed.

The first measure involving the expenditure of money by the present Legislature was acted on by the Georgia Senate Friday. It was a House resolution providing for payment of the earned salary of the insurance clerk, and made up a deficiency of $600 in the 1913 budget.

Four appointments by the Governor were approved by the Senate in executive session. The appointees were L. D. Shannon to be Judge of the City Court of Jeffersonville and H. J. Griffin to be Solicitor, and Carl Vinson to be Judge of the County Court of Baldwin and J. D. Howard to be Solicitor.

Among the bills reported from committees with recommendation for passage was one to increase the number of senatorial districts to 60. It provides that each of the six counties with the largest population shall be a senatorial district.

Would Regulate Doctors.

The bill regulating the practice of medicine and creating a State Board of Medical Examiners was reported favorably from committee. These two bills were read the second time.

Senator Grant D. Perry, of the Twenty-eighth District, introduced a bill providing for monthly pay of school-teachers. The first section provides that hereafter "teachers in the public schools of Georgia shall be paid monthly." The second section, in part, provides "that the payment of teachers shall be considered as much imortance as that of any other employees of the State, and the Governor shall have as much right to exercise his borrowing power for this purpose as for any other State expense."

Other Bills Are Presented.

New bills were introduced in the Senate and referred to committees as follows:

By Senator L. L. Ford—Amending the code with reference to quarantine against the Mexican boll weevil.

By Senator J. N. Watts—Changing the title of the stenographer in the Department of Commerce and Labor to "stenographer and chief clerk."

By Senator M. E. Rushin and Senator J. R. Anderson—Providing for maintenance of inter-county bridges and causeways.

The usual number of House bills were received and referred to Senate committees. The Senate adjourned to meet at noon Monday.

SLAYING CHARGE FOR CONLEY IS EXPECTED

Speedy Indictment of Negro Is Likely Following Publication of Mincey Affidavit.

Mincey was employed until two weeks ago, was seen Friday and was disposed to discredit Mincey's affidavit.

He declared that Mincey was something of a braggart and that on the Monday following the crime had asserted his belief in the guilt of Newt Lee. When Conley was arrested, said Dukes, Mincey at once became just as certain that Conley had committed the crime.

"Mincey was wondering how much money he might make as a witness and seemed more concerned with this phase of the case than with the identity of the murderer," said Dukes.

Conley Indictment Likely.

The speedy indictment of Jim Conley on the charge of murdering Mary Phagan was the strong possibility discussed in court circles Friday following the sensational turn given the strangling mystery.

For nearly two months a self-confessed accessory after the fact of the murder of the little factory girl, Conley has been allowed to go without an attempt at bringing an indictment against him. The startling new evidence which indicates most strongly, if the credibility of the defense's witness can be established, that Conley was not the accessory after the fact, but the actual principal in the crime, is expected to result in a thorough investigation by the Grand Jury of all the rumors and stories which have been in circulation of the negro's connection with the pencil factory tragedy.

Dorsey Makes No Comment.

Solicitor Dorsey Friday morning would make no comment on the new evidence.

The detectives openly declared their disbelief in the statements of Mincey. They said that he told a different story when he was at police headquarters and that he asserted after confronting the negro that Conley was not the man with whom he talked the afternoon that Mary Phagan was murdered.

Chief Lanford, of the city detectives, and Harry Scott, of the Pinkertons, said that if Mincey had related to them the story told in his sensational affidavit they would have made an immediate investigation in an attempt to verify it and would have sworn out a warrant charging Conley with the murder if a basis for the story could have been found.

Denies Police Assertions.

Mincey's statement, in so far as it provides an answer to the detectives, was that he did tell the same story to them; that he did identify Conley as the man he talked with on Saturday afternoon, and that the detectives told him they didn't care to take his evidence.

"Conley told me Saturday afternoon that he had killed a girl, and didn't want to kill anybody else," Mincey swears he told the detectives.

"This man Mincey never made mention of having heard Conley say that he had killed a girl, and Mincey never even identified Conley," is the reply of Detective Scott to this assertion.

Detective headquarters were thrown into excitement by the publication of the startling developments. Within a few minutes Scott was in conference with Chief Lanford and it was said that it had been decided to make a search for Mincey with a view of bringing him before Solicitor Dorsey for a grilling in regard to his story accusing the negro.

News Disturbs Dorsey.

Solicitor Dorsey was evidently disturbed by the new turn in the mystery, but would make no announcement of his intentions in respect to quizzing Mincey, providing Mincey can be found. The witness is said to be in Chattanooga at present teaching school. Leo Frank's lawyers, if they know Mincey's whereabouts, are keeping it a profound secret. They had not intended even that the contents of his affidavit should be made public. They declared, however, that he would be on hand for the trial prepared to repeat everything he said in the affidavit.

The latest rumor in connection with the Phagan mystery is that the girl's mesh bag pocketbook which she carried to the factory on the day she met her death has been found and has been examined for finger prints. This rumor could not be confirmed at police headquarters.

Lee Hearing Saturday.

The habeas corpus proceedings in behalf of Newt Lee, night watchman at the pencil factory, will be fought out Saturday forenoon at 10 o'clock before Judge Ellis. Bernard L. Chappell, representing the negro, said that he would issue subpenas for at least 50 witnesses whose testimony he would rely upon to obtain the freedom of his client.

Among them will be Leo M. Frank and Jim Conley. The appearance of both of these men, the first accused of murder, the second held as a material witness, will be bitterly contested. Reuben R. Arnold, of counsel for Frank, has declared that no law on earth can force Frank to appear as a witness at the hearing.

LEGISLATOR PROUD OF HIS LIKENESS TO BRYAN

SAM L. OLIVE.

Can't Bring Himself, Though, to Appreciation of Commoner's Kind of Highballs.

Representative Samuel L. Olive of Richmond is kept mighty busy most of his time nowadays looking like William Jennings Bryan. Generally he makes a first-class job of it.

Not only does Mr. Olive look the part of the Peerless Leader, but he acts it in numerous ways, particularly in speaking.

Olive, admittedly, is the very best orator in the House.

In one way, though, Mr. Olive fears he never shall come to be entirely like the Peerless—for the life of him, the gentleman from Richmond is unable to make grape juice the paramount liquid issue with himself!

Olive is the one man in the House who can overcome the wretched acoustic properties so completely as to make himself heard in every nook and corner when speaking.

He is ingenious in argument, happy in oratorical effect and finesse, and altogether well worth listening to when under full steam ahead on the floor.

The gentleman from Richmond is one of the younger members of the House, but has had considerable Legislative experience. As a consequence, he knows his way around amazingly well. He is popular and influential and regular in his attendance on the sessions, both of the House and his committees.

Because of his marked facial resemblance to Mr. Bryan, Mr. Olive is known to many as "The Boy Orator of the Savannah," and he rather likes it!

Pet Trout Likes to Have Back Stroked

ESTES PARK, CAL., July 11.—"Sunbeam," the pet speckled trout in the fish hatchery at Estes Park, has just recovered from an indisposition caused by stomach trouble or rheumatism.

The fish, now a 3-year-old, and about 11 inches long, is as good an example of gentle and loving trouthood as it is possible to find. It is very fond of being stroked and petted, and will swim around and rub itself against a person's hand whenever a chance is given it.

Frank Hammond, Secretary to Mayor James G. Woodward and owner of The Footlight, a theatrical publication, has been elected chairman of the finance committee of the Grand Lodge and deputy grand president of the Theatrical Mechanical Association.

Mr. Hammond has been one of the big men in the lodge for several years, and it was chiefly through his efforts that Atlanta won the convention of the T. M. A. for 1917, though competing with some of the largest cities in the country.

The Footlight, of which Earle E. Griggs is editor, was made the official publication of the T. M. A.

Macon Society Girl Outwits Parents to Wed Auto Salesman

MACON, July 11.—Despite strenuous efforts of her parents to prevent her elopement, Miss Ruth Hand, the daughter of T. O. Hand, a prominent business man, succeeded in eluding them last night and in marrying Edward H. Guilford, of Tampa, Fla., an automobile salesman. Miss Hand was considered the prettiest member of the younger social set.

The cook aided the young woman to slip a trunk out of the house. Miss Hand and Guilford then hastened to the Rev. R. E. Douglas, who married them. Telephoning a friend to buy him two tickets to Tampa, they hastened to the depot.

The bride's mother was watching the hotel where Guilford had registered, her father was on the lookout at the depot and other relatives had hurried to the minister's.

The young couple entered the depot through the rear way and boarded the train just as it pulled out, the friend handing Guilford the tickets after he had mounted the steps. At that moment Mr. Hand spied his daughter, but too late.

Wilson Didn't Ask Trainmen to Confer

NEW YORK, July 11.—A. B. Garretson, president of the Order of Railway Conductors, and W. G. Lee, president of the Brotherhood of Trainmen, denied to-day that representatives of the employees on the Eastern roads have been invited by President Wilson to go to Washington for a conference on the wage dispute which threatens to cause a strike of 100,000 men.

One thousand committeemen are gathered here for a meeting to-morrow, when a final decision of the proposed strike will be reached.

Motorcycle Racer At Macon Is Killed

MACON, July 11.—Martin O'Brien, formerly of Brooklyn, N. Y., a local hat store proprietor, was instantly killed in a motorcycle race at Central City Park.

While going about 50 miles an hour, and turning the first curve from the grandstand, a pedal scraped the ground and struck a rock. O'Brien was hurled against a fence, striking on his head, his neck being broken and his body badly mangled. The motorcycle was wrecked.

Homesteading Arid Lands Is Made Easy

WILSON'S MONEY BILL PRAISED BY BRITISHERS

Samuel Untemyer, Apostale of Currency Measure, Says London Bankers Call Act Sound.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, July 11.—Samuel Untermyer, of New York, who spent a busy week here, en route to Paris and Baden Baden, where he will remain a month, has been prosecuting an inquiry among banking circles—unofficially, of course—respecting the British feeling about the new American currency bill.

It is significant that Mr. Untermyer has been much in company with Colonel E. M. House, of Texas, during the week. These inquiries will be further pressed during Mr. Untermyer's stay in Paris.

When seen by The Georgian correspondent Mr. Untermyer admitted seeing many famous bankers here. He made this statement exclusively to The Georgian as a result of his investigation:

Bill Carefully Studied.

"The proposed new currency bill is surprisingly well understood here. It has been carefully studied and digested, and is favorably regarded. The fundamental principle of a Government currency issued and controlled directly by the Government is universally regarded as sound.

"I had rather expected that English traditions of banking would create a prejudice against so radical a departure, but find that this is not true, and that the question has been considered on its merits and meets with approval.

"The sentiment that has been sought to be created against it by the press bureaus of certain great New York financial interests is not shared here. The peril to the country from the vast concentration of the control of credit in a few hands that has assumed such gigantic proportions in past few years is recognized here as a stern reality."

Important Reductions in Underwood Bill Made by Upper Branch of Congress

WASHINGTON, July 11.—The Underwood-Simmons tariff bill, as it will be reported to the Senate by the Senate Finance Committee, differs from the original House measure in these important particulars:

The free list is amended to include additional food commodities.

The income tax amendment exemption of $4,000 in the House measure is changed to $3,000 where it applies to single men and women, and kept at $4,000 where it applies to persons having either a dependent husband or wife, with a further exemption of $500 for minor children also dependent; this latter provision to be limited to $1,000.

A retaliatory clause permitting the President to declare higher duties upon specified articles exported from countries discriminating against the United States is included.

The exclusion of foreign articles manufactured by child or convict labor is provided for.

The revenue producing taxes are placed upon bananas, brandies used in fortifying wines, and on gambling in cotton futures and "spots" in the exchanges. The revenue so produced is expected to make up for drastic reductions in the rest of the tariff schedules.

SENATE MAKES GREAT CUTS IN SCHEDULES OF HOUSE TARIFF MEASURE

WASHINGTON, July 11.—The Underwood-Simmons tariff bill which, it is expected, will be introduced in the Senate to-day, is unique in the history of American tariff making, in that a Senate committee will recommend even more drastic reductions than the original bill contained when adopted by the House.

The Senate's amended measure will average about 14 per cent under the duties prescribed in the Underwood bill. The still further lowering of duties affects every schedule passed by the House with the exception of the cotton schedule, which was revised in such a manner that the duties to be exacted from the importation of cotton and cotton manufactures remain practically the same as those specified in the bill when it was started on its way to the Senate from the House Democratic caucus.

Democratic Senators, however claim that they have not impaired the revenue producing qualities of the bill through reductions favoring the consumer.

According to their figures this has been obviated by an increase in the internal revenue tax on brandies used in fortifying wines from 3 cents per gallon to $1.10 per gallon, through a tax on so-called spurious wines, fortified with chemicals, and through the imposition of a tax of one-tenth of 1 cent a pound on cotton futures sold in trade and undelivered. A tax of one-tenth of 1 cent per pound also was placed on bananas, solely for revenue producing purposes.

Estimates of the revenue to be derived from these sources is about $8,000,000 in excess of the $267,000,000 revenue predicted for the Underwood bill. Revised estimates on corporation tax and the income tax amendment, which was redrafted by the Senate, place the revenue from those sections of the bill on about an equal footing with the House estimates.

The exact figures are as follows:

	House Estimates.	Senate Estimates.
Corporation tax	$ 30,000,000	$ 37,000,000
Income tax	70,000,000	69,625,000
Totals	$100,000,000	$106,625,000

An amendment has been made to the income tax as introduced on the floor of the Senate by the Finance Committee, which places the date upon which this tax shall become operative at March 1, 1913, instead of January 1, 1913.

Income Tax Suffers Cut.

This will cut the 1913 revenue from the income tax to about $58,000,000 and slightly decrease the estimated revenue for the current year and that calculated for the original House bill. This in part is counterbalanced by the extension of time granted the wool and sugar schedules, during which the Payne-Aldrich rates shall remain operative.

The extension of time for the Payne-Aldrich bill was the only change made in these schedules. In the sugar schedule the old tariff rates are to be continued until March 1, 1914, and in the wool schedule raw wool is to become free on December 1, 1913, and the Underwood-Simmons rates on wool manufacturings are to become operative on January 1, 1914. The sugar schedule retains May 1, 1916, as the date upon which sugar shall be admitted free of duty.

In the free list the principal additions were raw furs, works of art, gunpowder, Angora goat hair and alpaca, cattle, sheep and other domestic live animals, wheat, steel ingots, photographic and moving picture films, ferromanganese, flax, machinery used in making books for the blind, cement, text books used in the schools, jute bagging, lizarin, cast iron pipe and agricultural implements.

Autos Reclassified.

The chemical schedule was cut from 10 to 5 per cent. The earthenware and glassware schedule suffered a like reduction. In the metal schedule a number of important changes were made beside the free listing of iron and ore products. These included a decrease from 12 per cent to 10 per cent in beams, from 15 to 12 per cent in steel plate and iron forgings and from 10 to 6 per cent in steel castings.

Automobiles were reclassified, those valued up to $1,000 being made dutiable at 15 per cent; those from $1,000 to $1,500 at 30 per cent, and automobiles over $1,500 in value at 45 per cent. Parts remain the same as scheduled in the Houes bill.

In the wood schedule the principal change was the free listing of cedar logs.

In the agricultural schedule horses and mules are taxed at 10 per cent; oats are cut from $.10 to $.06 per bushel and a tax of $.33 per hundredweight on oatmeal and rolled oats, and $.09 per hundredweight on oat feed was added.

Foodstuffs Reduced.

Citrus fruits were left as they stood in the Underwood bill and substantial reductions were made on cheese, seeds, fish, extracts of meats, chocolate and peas.

The wine schedule was amended to increase the duty on brandies used in fortifying wines.

The cotton schedule was completely rewritten and reclassified, the net result being practically the same, from a revenue-producing standpoint, as the Underwood bill. The duties on stockings and some cotton clothes, however, were slightly reduced. The wool schedule was substantially reduced in all those manufactures coming into common use. This includes stockings, blankets, yarns and clothes.

The silk schedule was reclassified from an ad valorem to a specific basis, the general tendency being downward on articles coming into common use.

In the paper schedule a retaliatory clause aimed at Canada was included which permits the levy of a duty upon Canadian paper as high as the tax placed upon the exported American product.

Sues for $2,000 and Obtains Just $27.30

COLUMBUS, July 11.—A jury in the City Court returned a verdict for the plaintiff for $27.30, being the amount of premiums paid in the case of M. L. Richardson, administrator of the estate of F. M. Richardson, against the Prudential Life Insurance Company.

Richardson's death occurred October 25, 1912, and the investigation of the police led to the announcement that he had committed suicide. When the father of the young man demanded payment of the $2,000 policy the insurance company refused.

At 85, Sees Her First Hobble; Dislikes It

NEW YORK, July 11.—Mrs. John McCafferty, 85, of this city, who has been blind for fifteen years, has just seen an automobile for the first time. She also saw a number of hobble skirts, which met with her instant disapproval.

Although several doctors had declared the condition of her eyes hopeless, an operation for the removal of cataracts was successful.

RECEIVERSHIP DENIED.

CHATTANOOGA, July 11.—James H. Anderson, referee in bankruptcy, has denied a petition for the appointment of a receiver for the Dayton Coal and Iron Company, of Dayton, Tenn. Creditors whose claims aggregated more than $1,000,000 were represented.

A Physician's Faith in Eckman's Alterative

"Have used Eckman's Alterative in several cases of tubercular glands of the neck with excellent results every time. In one case it cost me $50, for the girl was put on it only until she could arrange to be operated, and in a short time an operation was not needed. I suppose your records are just as fine as of old. You know my faith in it."

(Original of this physician's letter on file.)

Eckman's Alterative is effective in other forms. Read what Mrs. Garvin says:

Idaho Falls, Idaho.

"Gentlemen: I have gained twenty-two pounds since last February, and my baby is in perfect health. I have been waiting since she was born to see how I would get along. (Affidavit) MRS. M. H. GARVIN.

Note—Mrs. Garvin has seven children.

(Also abbreviated; more on request.)

Eckman's Alterative has been proven by many years' test to be most efficacious in cases of severe Throat and Lung Affections, Bronchitis, Bronchial Asthma, Stubborn Colds and in upbuilding the system. VINCENT ASTOR'S SWEETHEART, MISS KATHERINE FORCE, TO WED

MISS KATHERINE FORCE AND MRS. JOHN JACOB ASTOR.

NEW YORK, July 11.—One romance was withered, and another made to bloom to-day by the announcement of the engagement of Katherine E. Force and Henri E. Harnickell.

For some time after the marriage of Katherine's beautiful sister, Madeline Force, to Colonel John Jacob Astor the society gossips were busy with the interesting bit of town talk that Katherine was to become the bride of none other than the second Mrs. Astor's stepson, Vincent Astor.

This romantic information spread and grew until it received a sudden blight from the mysterious rumor that another than Vincent Astor was to win the hand of the pretty Katherine. This rumor of another suitor crystallized into the story that Harkinell was the successful swain and that they had been betrothed for some months. This story was confirmed by to-day's formal announcement.

Mr. Harkinell is a son of the late Albert G. A. Harkinell, one of the founders of the New York Metal Exchange. He is about 30 years old. He and Miss Force have been seen together daily lately.

STATESBORO HAS LIVE UNION OF FARMERS

Bulloch County Town Supports One of State's Best Agricultural Colleges.

STATESBORO, GA., July 11.—Filling the large auditorium of the First District Agricultural College to its capacity Bulloch County farmers rallied to the call of the Farmers' Union and to the standard bearer, Charles S. Barrett.

L. M. Rhodes, of Tennessee, delivered one of the greatest addresses ever heard here. The crowd showed its appreciation by applause.

The Bulloch County Union is one of the best in the State, due largely to the efforts of Professor O. T. Harper, of the Agricultural College, a tireless worker for the farmer.

Another factor is President E. C. J. Dickens, who took charge of the college after it had run down to a handful of students, and built it up until it ranks as a leader. It has an enrollment equal to one-sixth of the total of the eleven district agricultural colleges in the State. Scientific farming, mechanics and domestic science are taught.

A magnificent brick building has been erected. It was designed and built by the students.

The farm of about 120 acres resembles an experiment farm after the experiment has proven a success. Finer corn could not be found anywhere. Other crops are as good. Bulloch farmers call it their school. It will not be long until reservations will have to be made a year in advance.

Bulloch County farmers believe in the Farmers' Union and Charles S. Barrett, who is making their cause his life work.

Statesboro is a progressive and up-to-date little town. On every hand new buildings are going up. Old ones are being remodele.

There is a magnificent three-story office building, covering a quarter of a block, which would be a credit to any town of five times the population.

There are good department stores. One is three stories. It covers a space of about 100 by 150 feet. The other big department store is only two stories high, but covers a space 150 by 150 feet, with a large warehouse in the rear.

An odd feature of this store is that the center, with a frontage of about 25 feet, is the First National Bank, of which the head of the store is president. On either side of the bank are entrances to the store.

Either of these stores would be appreciated in Atlanta or any other city.

NEW HAVEN, July 11.—The will of "Nick" Hubinger, former turfman and manufacturer, filed to-day, disposed of an estate of $1,400,000. Aside from a few small bequests, the estate goes to the widow, on condition that she remain a widow during the rest of her life.

In case of her remarrying, the property will be divided among Mr. Hubinger's four children. He was a patient of Dr. Friedmann, who injected the turtle serum in New York City several times. He had been ill with tuberculosis for years.

Fancy Stationery Taken From Senate

WASHINGTON, July 11.—Members of Congress will draw no more embossed stationery at the expense of the Government. Hereafter they will get along with plain, everyday printed letterheads and envelopes.

The Joint Committee on Printing discovered that the Government Printing Office last year turned out 11,000,000 embossed pieces of stationery at an extra cost of $30,000.

DEWBERRY PAYS FOR CRIME ON SCAFFOLD

Negro Confesses Slaying, Professes Religion and Mounts Gallows Calmly.

Exactly one year to the very day and hour after the death of his victim, Oscar Dewberry, the negro convicted of stabbing 15-year-old Horace Dodson on Decatur Street, May 27, 1912, expiated his crime on the gallows in the county prison Friday morning. The trap was sprung by Deputy Sheriff John Owens at 11:05 o'clock and the negro was pronounced dead 25 minutes later.

Dewberry confessed his guilt to Sheriff Mangum at 9:30 o'clock Friday morning and later dictated a written confession to the Rev. H. H. Proctor. He said he stabbed young Dodson after Dodson and some other boys had brushed against him.

The negro professed religion and prayed fervently just before he was led to the gallows.

Dewberry mounted the scaffold with a firm step. When Sheriff Mangum asked him if he had anything to to say, following the reading of the death warrant, he replied calmly that he did not.

During the hanging, which was attended by about 25 men, including county officials, newspaper men, physicians and deputy sheriffs, the condemned man's sister, who is also in jail charged with burglary, emitted shrieks which could be heard for blocks around.

SPEAKER DENIES CHARGES MADE BY LAMAR

Never Knew Him and Was Unacquainted With Morgan, Champ Clark Declares.

WASHINGTON, July 11.—Speaker Champ Clark appeared before the Lobby Committee of the Senate today and made a denial that he ever knew or had anything to do with J. Pierpont Morgan, Lewis Cass Ledyard, Edward Lauterbach or David Lamar. The Speaker's declaration was in answer to the Lamar-Lauterbach testimony before the committee, although Lamar finally admitted he never saw Speaker Clark and never had any direct communication with him.

It was the intention of the committee to call Colonel Martin W. Mulhall, but this action was delayed by lengthy testimony given by W. L. Whitman, of Boston, a wool manufacturer. Whitman testified, among other things, that Simon N. D. North, former Director of the Census, was on the pay roll of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers while he was chief statistician of the Census Bureau and while he was clerk of the Senate Finance Committee.

He was clerk of this committee while the Dingley tariff bill was under consideration. Whitman said North received $4,000 a year from the association up to the time he became Director of the Census.

Clark Defends Himself.

"Ledyard says that Lauterbach told him that he was in communication with me through Senator Stone," said Speaker Clark. "Lauterbach, who acknowledged that he lied, said that Lamar gave him the information. Lamar confessed that the whole tale was a lie to force Morgan & Co. to take Lauterbach back into their employ. All of them disclaimed any acquaintance or communication with me.

"Senator Stone justly and promptly characterized the Lamar-Lauterbach tale a lie, in which he was entirely correct. He and I never in our lives conversed about or in any way mentioned to each other Morgan & Co. nor the Steel Trust investigation.

"I never spoke to John Pierpont Morgan or any member of his firm in my life; never communicated with him or them in any manner whatsoever; never authorized anybody else to do so.

Didn't Know Morgan.

"I was, to my best knowledge and belief, never introduced, even casually, to him or to any of them. To my best knowledge and belief, I never saw any of them except Mr. Morgan himself, and that was across the large dining room of the New Willard at a Gridiron Club banquet.

"I was introduced to Lauterbach here in Washington several years ago in the presence of several gentlemen and passed the usual salutations with him. That was all. I never saw him before or since, and never communicated with him in any manner whatsoever nor about any business matter whatsoever.

"I never had heard of Lamar and knew only by seeing his name in the papers that there was such a man as Lewis Cass Ledyard. It seems to me that when Mr. Ledyard found out that Senator Stone's name and my name were being bandied about by Lamar, the pseudo Palmer, and Lauterbach he ought to have let me know."

Post Stops Wild Auto; Shoppers Imperiled

An electric light post probably saved the lives of a number of women and children at Whitehall and Hunter Streets Thursday afternoon. E. P. Williams was cranking his automobile when it lurched forward and struck the post. A number of women and children were standing on the sidewalk.

Four globes on the post were broken. Jenaro Peggutti, a balloon vender, was cut by falling glass.

4-YEAR-OLD MADE KING OF JUNIOR CLAN O'HARA

Chief Mike Riley and his greatest friend, Brigand.

Chief Mike Riley Rules for Year Over Younger Members of Famous Irish Tribe.

Chief Michael Riley hunched up his shoulders, stuck his finger in his mouth, and tightened his grip on the collar of his dog, Brigand.

Chief Mike, despite the fact that he had just been elected to the highest honor which his subjects could pay him, did not want to be photographed. The embarrassment of facing the camera's eye was extreme. Even Brigand showed hesitation. Not until the shutter clicked did Chief Mike and his dog ally resume their composure. The last of the election ceremonies was accomplished.

For be it known that Thursday saw a new chief inducted into chiefdom of the clan of O'Hara at the famous Gypsy camp on Bellwood and Ashby Streets.

Since time immemorial the children of this renowned Irish clan, which roams the county much as nomads, have had their chief just as their elders. There are 40 children in the camp and yearly they elect one among their number to reign over them.

This action has the sanction of the grown folk, whose duties keep them from direct supervision over the camp. They have taught their children to govern themselves while their parents are away on horse trading ventures.

Now, for a year, Mike Riley, the 4-year-old son of Pete Riley, one of the leaders of the clan, will guide the destinies of his juvenile subjects.

He is king of the kids and his rich brogue and antics, together with his fascinating countenance, with the map of old Ireland on his face, make him almost adorable even to a stranger.

Mike and his dog, Brigand, are bosom friends. Mike rides Brigand like a horse and "man handles" him in a manner which would try the patience of a proverbial saint. Notwithstanding this Brigand is faithful to his little master and wherever little Mike trudges Brigand is at his heels.

Mike likes camp life and is the happiest little fellow on earth. He hasn't a care in the world but has a temper any Irishman would envy.

Bijou Actors Delight Federal Prisoners

The players at the Bijou Theater this week held the boards Thursday at the Prison Auditorium, where they enacted "Along Broadway," much to the delight of the hundreds of men behind the walls.

Among those who gave the prisoners the benefit of their talents were Will Stanton, Miss Thornton and Miss Rosalind May. The tabloid was given under the direction of Mr. Labridy. The performers were assisted by the Bijou orchestra.

Aerial Liners to Ply From London to Paris

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, July 11.—The first regular passenger airship service in England is being planned. New semi-rigid dirgibles will be built with a speed of 60 miles an hour.

It is proposed to provide services from London to Brighton, Birmingham and other English cities and also to Paris.

BAGGING IN FUTURE MUST HIDE COTTON

Shipping Agent Explains New Export Rules to Atlanta Dealers and Traffic Men.

"Our rule, effective September 1, is that a bale of cotton must be covered so thoroughly that none of the lint is visible," said F. D. M. Strachan, of the Strachan Steamship Line, explaining new export rules to the assembled traffic men and cotton exporters in the Hotel Ansley Thursday.

"Much of the bagging used is very large mesh. If a bale were covered with this big mesh bagging, so that you could see the white cotton through it, would the steamship companies note on the bill of lading that the cotton was not thoroughly covered?" asked the general freight agent of a big railroad system.

"Certaintly," replied Mr. Strachan, who was quizzed at length.

"Mr. Strachan," came a voice from the rear of the hall, "if you were tendered a pretty girl, in good condition, but covered with a large mesh shirtwaist, would you make exception on the bill of lading?"

"You go to blazes," retorted the steamship man, and the quiz ended.

Saloon Men Plead Guilty; Take Fines

MACON, July 11.—After two had been convicted, fifteen other saloonkeepers pleaded guilty in the Superior Court to conducting their businesses for several months before paying licenses. J. J. Quinlan was fined $100 and J. B. Brooks $75, both going to the jury. The others, who pleaded guilty, paid fines ranging from $20 to $35.

When it was understood that Judge Mathews was imposing only nominal sentences on those who admitted their guilt, there was a rush by the defendants to enter pleas.

SUFFRAGE MEET ENDS; WOMEN ENCOURAGED

Tilts With Senate and the Civic League Show People Increasing Strength "of Course."

Members of the Georgia Woman Suffrage Association closed Thursday night one of the most successful conventions in the history of the organization. The fight started in the Legislature after the action of the Senate in denying the women the right to meet in the Capitol and the dissension with the Atlanta Civic League have served to bring the cause strongly before the people. More interest was manifested by the public generally in the convention than in any suffrage gathering of recent years.

About 50 women attended the business sessions of the convention. Their enthusiasm and willingness to fight to obtain their rights, shown by their stand before the Legislature and in the quarrel within the ranks, has given an impetus to the cause that is expected to aid them to obtain the 1,000 members they have set as their mark for 1914.

Press Bureau Is Indorsed.

Two propositions for spreading the suffrage movement were indorsed at the final session. A press bureau, under the direction of Mrs. Margaret T. McWhorter, was organized, and expects to begin its work of education immediately.

Volunteers will be secured in every town in the State to furnish live, local news of the suffrage movement to the country papers, and a central bureau will be established in Atlanta to handle the suffrage news of the Capitol.

Miss Augusta Howard, of Columbus, proposed the organization of a "Men's Suffrage League," similar to organizations now existing in other States, which met with approval. No official action on the proposition was taken, but it is probable that the executive committee will endeavor to complete the organization of the league.

Reports Show Progress.

The reports of department superintendents showed that the movement has gained in Georgia to a greater extent than is generally supposed. These reports were made by Mrs. E. L. Brewer, Miss Eugenia Estill, Mrs. Jennie Hart Sibley, Mrs. J. J. Ansley, Mrs. May C. Moore, Mrs. S. C. Osburne, Mrs. Mamie Matthews and Miss Katherine Koch.

Three addresses on suffrage, delivered before a crowd that filled the House of Representatives, brought the convention to a close Thursday night. The principal address was delivered by Mrs. W. A. Felton, of Cartersville, who made her first public appearance as a suffragist. Other speakers were Attorney Leonard Grossman and Miss Augusta Howard, founder of the State association and its president for six years.

On invitation of the DeKalb County Association, the convention voted to meet in Decatur in 1914.

Committees from Council and the Chamber of Commerce are co-operating with the railroad in arranging settlements with owners on Cherry Street who claim their properties will be damaged by the closing of the street.

Five 'Hofers' in Triple Wedding; Not Related

SIOUX FALLS, S. DAK., July 11.—The Rosedale Mennonite colony in Hanson County was the scene of a triple wedding with several unique features. The principals in the marriage were John Maendels and Susanna Hofer, Andreas Hofer and Rebecca Hofer, and John Hofer, and Susanna Hofer. The four last are not blood relatives, there being several and distinct families by that name in the colony.

In honor of the triple wedding work in the colony was suspended for the day.

CONTEST FOR PONIES OUTSIDE CITY STIRRING

Atlanta Contestants' Enthusiasm Equaled—Eight Days Remain in Extra Vote Offer.

While the boys and girls in Atlanta striving for The Georgian and American ponies are using every effort to get votes, and are making remarkable showings, the boys and girls in Georgia, outside Atlanta, and the contestants in other States are busy also.

For a time it seemed as if the interest in Atlanta would eclipse that in the rest of the State, but there has been a revival of activity in the smaller towns, and every mail brings letters telling of contestants' successful efforts. The race in the State at large is close—it is anyone's race as yet, and no one can pick the winner.

It is hoped that as many of the contestants from out in the State as Beverly Swanton, 52 Beecher Street.

Lee Bowden, of Athens, Ga.

can will avail themselves of the opportunity to see the ponies Sunday afternoon at Grant Park. They will be assured of a particularly warm welcome, as will their parents.

The ponies are to be at the park Sunday afternoon in charge of the contest department manager and his assistants. Some will be harnessed and some saddled, and there will be rides for all the children.

Eight days only remain in the special bonus offer, which gives liberal extra votes to contestants who turn in clubs of $35, $25 and $15 in subscriptions. This is an especially attractive offer, which no contestant should overlook. One feature of it is that the subscriptions may be for any length of time, from a month up.

Attempt to Blow Up Barracks Thwarted

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

CHRISTCHURCH, N. Z., July 11. An attempt was made here to-day to blow up the King Edward Military Barracks by sympathizers of youths who were imprisoned for refusing to do military service.

Electric wires attached to the explosives were discovered and disconnected, thus saving many lives and the building from destruction.

NEW COUNTY OF CANDLER IS LIKELY

House Amendment Committee Indorses Proposal—Three Others Meet With Rejection.

The House Committee on Constitutional Amendments has cleared the new county atmosphere considerably by recommending the creation of Candler County and turning down bills proposing the new counties of Evans, Hampton and Stonewall.

All of the counties proposed cutting into Tattnall County, and all were argued before the committee at the same time. The committee seems to have believed the Hampton, Evans and Stonewall proposals really were more "dummy" propositions set up to defeat Candler.

The throwing out of Evans, Hampton and Stonewall Counties very materially reduces the total number of new counties likely to get favorable action by the present Legislature.

The Constitutional Amendments Committee will go right along disposing of the dozen or so remaining propositions. Within the next week or ten days it should be possible to forecast with a degree of accuracy exactly what other counties besides Barrow and Candler stand any chance of getting through the Legislature.

SMITH AND BELL IN CLASH OVER PATRONAGE

Representative Scores Senator for "Interference" in Gainesville Postoffice Row.

WASHINGTON, July 11.—Following the confirmation of Mrs. H. W. J. Ham's appointment as postmaster at Gainesville, Thomas M. Bell, Representative from the Ninth District, has made a statement bitterly criticising Senator Hoke Smith for the defeat of A. S. Hardy. He openly charges that the defeat of the man he recommended for the place is directly the result of intense feeling against anti-Smith men.

Mrs. Ham succeeds Mrs. Helen D. Longstreet, who lost her position, it is said, through her activities for Roosevelt in the last presidential campaign.

"There seems to be an invisible, secret influence operating in Washington to the exclusion of anti-Smith-Wilson people," reads the statement. "If loyal Democrats are to be disqualified because of their pre-convention view, it is high time the people should know the facts and be given an opportunity at the polls to prevent the wrecking of the Democratic party, which for so many years has held the South together."

Congressman Bell charges that Senator Smith expressed satisfaction when the name of Hardy was first submitted to him. He declares that untrue charges against Hardy were sent from the President's office to the Senate without him being allowed to see him.

The statement gives correspondence between himself, Senator Smith, Postmaster General Burleson and President Wilson's secretary, J. P. Tumulty.

BUTTON SLOGAN MUST BE IN BY SATURDAY

Hearst's Sunday American Will Announce Winner—Hundreds of Designs Submitted.

All "500,000 Club" button slogans eligible for the $25 prize must be in by Saturday. Hearst's Sunday American will announce the winner selected by the committee of judges Sunday morning.

The mail of the contest editor has swelled to such proportions within the last few days that it seems a 500,000 booster club is already in action. Slogans come from all parts of the State as well as all sections of Atlanta and they bespeak such faith and pride in Atlanta that the judges, John W. Grant, Wilmer L. Moore and Walter C. Taylor, are going to come near bewilderment trying to decide which is the best.

All suggestions that have come in, whether accompanied by designs of buttons or not, will be submitted to the judges. They will name the winner. The Hearst papers will present the winner with a $25 check.

Here is a good example of an out-of-town letter, from John T. Abney, of the Swift Manufacturing Company, of Columbus, Ga.:

Some Good Ones.

"Editor The Georgian:

"As a regular subscriber of your paper since its first issue, and believing every Georgian should feel proud of Atlanta and every Atlantan should feel proud of The Georgian, I desire to submit the following as a button to be worn by members of your '500,000 club':

"A button carrying a photo of a telephone and the words, 'Call Atlanta.'"

H. W. Thorp, 152 West Peachtree Street, sends this one:

"Atlanta Beautiful. 500,000 by 1920."

Asking that his subscription be entered for The Georgian and Hearst's Sunday American, J. O. Bell, of 19 Jefferson Place, submits:

"We can get them if we try. A half-million population for Atlanta by 1920."

Here are slogans in profusion:

Puts Motto in Latin.

"In hoc signo vinces. Atlanta 500,000 1920 Booster Club. All Atlanta members."—H. J. Lanier, 346 Fraser Street.

"We've got to get it. Boost Atlanta—1920."—Charles M. Grist, 44 Inman Building.

"Atlanta—always leads, always succeeds—the Half-Million City."—Woodie Hardeman.

A design of a railroad engine with the caption, "Booster Club. Break the record. Make her the city of cities," is offered by J. D. Braselton, of College Park.

"Largest city South—Atlanta, 1920, 500,000 population."—Alvin Samuel, 93 East Georgia Avenue.

"Half million by 1920. Boost Atlanta."—W. C. Meador, 49 Washington Street.

"All the time, every time Atlanta, 1920, 500,000."—E. J. Saywell, 201 Hopkins Street.

Accompanied by a button design of a drawing of the heart of Atlanta's business district, G. Alfred Harbour, of 41 North Pryor Street, suggests:

"Nothing impossible in Atlanta. 500,000 population by 1920."

Many "Booster" Mottoes.

"Don't boast, just boost. Watch Atlanta grow."—Miss Susie Penny, 147 Whitehall Terrace.

"Atlanta's alive with 500,000 busy bees. 1920. Watch us hum."—Mrs. Albert Sydney Ullman, 483 Washington Street.

"A simple sum in addition. Atlanta, plus 1920, equals 500,000. Ask me how it's done."—J. T. Hamilton, 15 West Mitchell Street.

"Business and clime good all the time. 500,000 Atlanta, 1920."—Miss Pauline Britton, of St. Louis, visiting at 97 Hurt Street.

"Welcome to Atlanta, 1913. A1 city. 500,000 by 1920."—H. N. Maxey, route 2, box 100, Atlanta.

"Boost, boost, boost. Atlanta 1920. 500,000. Get the habit and come to Atlanta."—R. Speer, 635 Woodward Avenue.

"The Atlanta spirit, we have plenty, which assures half million in 1920."—Robert S. Link, Abbeville, S. C.

"Get 'Em or Bust."

"Half million or bust."—Carl J. Broome, Douglasville, Ga.

"Hearst's Sunday American did it. Atlanta, 500,000."—Mrs. Belle Tyson.

"God helps Atlanta."—H. L. Owen.

"Atlanta's growth and prosperity has no limit. Nineteen-twenty, half million people."—P. B. Rand.

"Hurrah for Atlanta, magic city,"—G. Ford, 40 1-2 North Forsyth Street.

"Prosperity, wealth, opportunity, morality. America's Queen City. Watch Atlanta grow. 500,000 by 1920."—J. K. Tippett, Frederick apartments.

All Express Optimism.

"Atlanta, the Pinnacle City."—Jas. E. Saunders, 94 Greenwood Avenue.

"Success is yours in Atlanta. Half-Million Club. 1920."—A. C. Lanier, 595 North Jackson Street.

"Onward to Atlanta, the Half-Million City, 1920."—Mrs. N. E. Love, 632 Woodward Avenue.

"Atlanta, the Gate City,
With a half-million plan,
And whatever has been called for
She has never failed to land."
—Orie King.

476 Whitehall Street.

J. S. Booth, of 12 West Pine Street, suggests a button with the face of Mayor Woodward on it, and these words around it: "Only one Atlanta. Half-Million Club, 1920."

"We push, Atlanta's Half-Million Club."—George A. Latimer.

"We boost Atlanta. Half Million, 1920. Opportunity, location, organization, co-operation. Come!"—W. W. Tommins, 35 Chatham Street.

Bowden Man Enters.

"Half million souls Atlanta needs and half million souls she's going to have. I'm in the fight for them. Are you?"—G. A. Barr, Bowden, Ga.

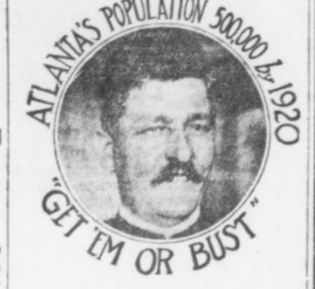
W. H. Gattis R. F. D. 6, suggests an emblem of a bee on a flower with the slogan: "Everybody get busy. 500,000 for Atlanta 1920."

A "Little Boy Blue," with a horn and the words, "Blow your own horn, Atlanta!" is the offering of Miss Hester Trenary, 488 Courtland Street.

"Boost Atlanta. At it all. Always at it. 1913-1920."—Mrs. W. F. Trenary, 488 Courtland Street.

Dr. Emmett V. Ball, 700 Austell Building, has sent in a number of slogans. Here is one of his best ones:

Two Suggestions For the Boosters



Button design showing Atlanta's diligent Chief of Police.

Booster button designed by A. P. Thompson, Jr., of the Crumley Hardware Company.

MR. DOLPH WALKER, Empire Bldg.

One of the most prominent and successful business men of the city, says: "Dr. Kelly's Nuxcara cured me of dyspepsia in its worst form after I had suffered for years. In spite of the fact that I took every digestive remedy that I could hear of I was almost an invalid, and so discouraged that I had about decided to give up all medicines advertised for stomach troubles, as I had about lost faith in drugs. My case was so bad that I could not see any improvement at all on the first bottle of Nuxcara, but by the time I had taken five bottles I had gained forty-five pounds and was stronger and in better health than I ever was in my life. It is certainly the most wonderful remedy known."

"ASK YOUR DRUGGIST."

THE PLAYS THIS WEEK

Forsyth Busy This Week.

Attendance this week at the Forsyth is well up to the standard of the busy theater. The house is being well filled at nearly every performance and the several feature acts are winning deserved applause.

Next week's program has already been arranged and includes some delightful acts. The headliner will be Valerie Bergere and company in "Judgment," and among the comedy features will be Britt Wood, an exceptionally clever character comedian.

Grand Pictures Popular.

Motion pictures at the Grand daily from 2:30 until 10:30 have added wonderfully to the popularity of this theater.

The very highest grade of first-run motion pictures is offered, and the program is as good as any that has been exhibited on a screen in the city.

At the Bijou.

"Along Broadway," with Will Stanton and Rosalind May, is filling the Bijou to capacity this week. TAX REFORM IS GEORGIA'S HOPE SAYS SLATON

Speakers at Chamber of Commerce Banquet Agreed More Money Is Needed.

"Revenues and expenditures of Georgia must balance," declared Governor John M. Slaton Thursday night. Randolph Anderson, President of the Senate, and W. H. Burwell, Speaker of the House of Representatives, concurred.

Members of the Georgia Legislature and of the Chamber of Commerce, 700 in all, voiced their hearty approval in the great ballroom of the Piedmont Driving Club.

The occasion was a reception to the Governor, the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House by the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce.

"We hope this will become an annual affair," said Wilmer L. Moore, president of the Chamber of Commerce, and the guests applauded noisily.

Governor Slaton and the heads of the legislative arm of the State government seized the chance to express their conviction that Georgia is confronted with one of the most serious problems of its history—a deficit in the State Treasury. It was the unanimous opinion that the Legislature is able to solve the problem.

"The revenue and expenditure of Georgia must square," said Governor Slaton to the diners. "When I tell you that in one of our State institutions, where girls are taught to cook and to sew and to make happy homes for Georgians, it is necessary to put fourteen girls in a room, you will see the need of greater revenues. When I tell you that the Technological School is offered $100,000 worth of the most modern machinery if only we can provide housing for it, and when I tell you that the Agricultural College at Athens is in sore need of funds, you will see the need of greater revenues.

"The man who is paying 10 cents on the dollar while his neighbor is paying 20 cents on the dollar in taxes ought to be made to increase his payments. An increase of only 20 per cent in taxable values in Georgia means $180,000,000, which means $900,000 added revenue—enough to supply all the State institutions and pay all the debts."

Mrs. Charles Gates Denies Family Row

NEW YORK, July 1.—Mrs. Charles G. Gates, of Minneapolis, Minn., emphatically denied to-day that she and her husband had quarreled. The report of the quarrel became current last week, when it was published also that Gates' father-in-law knocked him down for buying wine too freely and tipping too liberally in a Minneapolis saloon.

"Charley is the best husabnd in the world, and we love each other as much as we did when we first married," said she. "I'm sorry he isn't here, but he had to go to Canada to examine a mine. He's an awfully good boy."

Trust Controlled T. R. Hunt Movies

NEW YORK, July 11.—Moving pictures of Colonel Roosevelt's big game hunt in Africa were controlled by the Motion Picture Trust and sold for 20 cents a foot.

Testimony by William Devery, of the New York Imperial Film Exchange, before the special examiner in the Government's suit against the Motion Picture Patents Company for violation of the Sherman anti-trust law brought this out.

$1,200 Jewels Stolen From Macon Matron

MACON, July 11.—When Mrs. Harry Popper, of Georgia Avenue, looked on the dresser for her jewels last night, just before retiring, she discovered that they were missing. Match stubs on the floor and an open window, with a ladder leaning against the house outside, indicated that a burglar had previously located the valuables.

Several diamond rings, a bracelet and stick pins, all worth $1,200, were taken.

MAYOR'S ROOSTER MUST GO.

BOSTON, July 11.—A neighbor complained anonymously that Mayor Fitzgerald has been violating a city ordinance by keeping a rooster in the henyard at his home, and the Board of Health ordered that he must kill or remove it.

TWO WOMEN IN PERIL OF MOB IN TENNESSEE

Mother and Daughter, Confessed Slayers of Stepchildren, Given Additional Jail Guard.

UNION CITY, TENN., July 11.—Threats of mob violence against Mrs. James Yates and her daughter, Floy Farris, 18, in jail here following the confessed murder of the children of James Yates, caused county officials to-day to place a special guard about the jail. An attempt at lynching is expected to-night.

Mrs. Yates, second wife of James Yates, a prosperous farmer, confessed that she had drowned the two children of Yates' first wife. Her daughter by a former marriage, Floy Farris, was with her, and, according to the story, aided in the crime.

The killing occurred Wednesday. Mrs. Yates found the two children, a boy, 12, and his sister, 10, swimming in a creek that ran through the Yates farm. She ordered them to leave the water. The boy, she said, called her vile names. She became enraged at him, she said, and, seizing him by the throat, held his head under the water until he drowned.

The lad's sister screamed and tried to escape, but was caught by the Farris girl, the woman said, and was drowned as her brother had been.

The children's bodies were found in the creek Wednesday night. Yesterday Mrs. Yates and her daughter were arrested. The woman confessed today.

Her husband to-day declared he would use every effort to see that his wife was hanged for the crime.

Aviator in 900-Mile Air Race Near Record

MACATAWA, MICH., July 11.—A world's hydroaeroplane record for distance was within the grasp of Glenn Martin, of Los Angeles, this afternoon as he closed in upon Beckwith Haven and Roy M. Francis, leaders in the Chicago-to-Detroit airboat race.

Martin maintained a speed of 80 miles an hour for 200 miles to-day after leaving Chicago. He landed for half an hour at Michigan City, and then came on to Macatawa Bay, where he lunched and left for Cralevoix, his third scheduled stop, shortly after 1 o'clock.

Families Fight for Possession of Bride

ANNISTON, July 11.—Mr. and Mrs. Lacy Peel, who were married Wednesday morning, are central figures in a family quarrel to-day.

W. D. Chandler, the girl's father, hurried to the house where the two were stopping and took his daughter home. She now is held a prisoner.

The father of the bridegroom, Samuel Peel, is helping his son in his efforts to recover his bride. He contemplated habeas corpus proceedings, but was advised first to try moral suasion on the father of the bride.

PHILADELPHIA, July 11.—Maintaining his innocence even after a merciless cross-examination by detectives, Henry L. Kramer, who was brought back yesterday from Tifton, Ga., charged with forgery and embezzlement, was released under $1,500 bail.

A scene was caused in the courtroom when the accused man's wife denounced her husband's accusers. Later she secured the bondsmen.

Walter E. Willimon, of Greenville, who has been in the employ of the postal service for the past seven years, has been appointed a postoffice inspector and will be retained in the Atlanta division.

THE GEORGIAN'S MAGAZINE PAGE

.:. Two in a Train .:.

"A THIRD class single to Galway, please!" Miss Mathers moved away from the ticket office, but not before a tall man, wrapped in a thin ulster, with a tweed cap pulled down over his eyes, had seen her—started first at sound of her soft voice, and then deliberately followed her to the waiting train. It was a bitter winter evening, and Miss Mathers shuddered inwardly as she thought of that long, long train journey through South Wales, the odious crossing of the Irish Channel and the wearisome journey to Galway.

Tears started to her eyes as she thought of past arrivals there. How different they had been! Then she had traveled thither as a guest. Now all was sadly changed, and she was going back to dear, well-remembered places to earn her own living as a governess.

Seated in the corner of a third-class compartment, Mary Mathers settled herself under her rug for the first stage of her journey.

A warning whistle from the train—the door was wrenched open, and a man, wrapped in a big ulster, got in, followed by a porter with a bag and bundle of golf sticks. There was a momentary bustle, during which the express began to glide slowly along the platform. The porter jumped out, shut the door—they were off.

And in the opposite corner was sitting——

Mary's heart gave a jump.

"I thought it was you," said Meredith, quietly. "Aren't you going to speak to me?"

"Of course," she stammered, with lips that tried so hard not to quiver. "You startled me so." She smiled at him gallantly. "You see, you are about the last person I expected to see. Are you going to Ireland?"

The Old Haunts.

"Yes, and you? To the old haunts?" The quick tears started to her eyes.

"Yes, to one of the old haunts near Galway."

"Lough Corrib?" he asked.

Mary winced.

"Yes, just on the shores, half-way to Oughterard."

He leant forward.

"You don't mean to say that you are going to the Wintons?"

"Yes."

"Good! So am I. They're getting up a first-rate house party, you know. I'm awfully glad you're going to be one of them, too."

Mary gave a little gasp, opened her mouth as if to speak, and said nothing. What could she say?

Tell him the truth, of course—that instead of an honored guest she was going to the Wintons as governess at $150 a year, relegated to the schoolroom in a distant wing, dining when the rest of the party lunched, disappearing back again to the distant wing of the house with her charges. Perhaps now and then she would be sent for to play accompaniments or something of the kind. But if Meredith was to be in the house, how could she bear it? How could she tell him? He probably knew nothing about her reverses of fortune. She couldn't blurt it out—apropos of nothing at all.

Three years ago she and Meredith had seen a good deal of each other. No other man had ever touched her heart or made any great difference in her life, but he—she wrenched herself from her dreams with an effort as she spoke.

A Bad Prospect.

"I'm afraid it's going to be a bad night. Are you obliged to cross?"

"Yes."

"And if I remember rightly, you don't care much about the sea, do you?"

"I care this much—that I loathe it," said Mary, with a faint smile. "I have never got over my distaste for boats and everything to do with them. And the Irish Channel is always rough when I cross it."

Meredith laughed.

"Have you only just come back from East Africa?" said Mary, breaking the silence that had fallen between them.

"Three months ago."

"But you will go out again?"

"I don't think so," he said slowly. "It all depends on——"

The door into the corridor was slid open; the dining car attendant looked in.

"Take your seats for dinner, please."

He passed on.

"You will dine, won't you?" asked Meredith. "Nothing like a good meal, you know."

The color mounted to Mary's face. How could she tell him that dinner was not a possibility to her, simply because she had no spare money to waste? She had a little packet of sandwiches in her bag, and some biscuits, but her appetite sickened at the thought of them.

"I am not hungry," she said, evasively. "I couldn't eat any dinner."

Left Alone.

"Very well. Willful woman must always have her way, but don't say I didn't warn you. Will you be all right if I leave you? I feel the pangs of a furious hunger."

"Of course. I am quite comfortable."

Left alone, Mary sat up and gazed out into the darkness. Her face burned. How could she endure the hours of this journey with Meredith sitting there, talking, looking at her? She must get away from him. Her hard-won self-control might desert her, and then—— She rapidly collected her rug, papers and bag and slipped into the corridor, walking with difficulty toward the far end of the swinging train to another compartment.

Here she would be alone. Presently, to the hum of the express, Mary fell asleep, wrapped in her rug, and dreamed things that brought a smile to her lips and a color to her soft cheeks.

And in the dining car, at his solitary meal, Meredith wondered why fate had deliberately thrown him and Mary together, when that impassable barrier of wealth still stood between them. It had driven him away from her once before, and now—well, he must let things slide. Perhaps, that same interfering dame Fortune might find a way out.

The Irish air was soft and fresh, and the gray country looked inexpressibly lovely to Mary's tired eyes. The crossing had been just as odious as she expected, and she had hurried on the boat in the wintry darkness to the waiting room, dreading, yet hoping, to find Meredith at her side. She saw his tall figure once. He was looking about him, but he did not see her, and she took refuge in a carriage with three other women, and slept away some of her exhaustion on the way to Waterford. There she had to change, and on the platform the first person she saw was—Meredith. He came up to her at once.

"Why did you run away last night?" he said.

"I—I"—

"I don't want to worry you, but you must let me look after you. You look half dead. Have you had any breakfast?"

"Yes."

She had had tea and bread and butter in the train, and the cool morning air had whipped a faint color to her white cheeks.

Slowly they crept away into the thick mist, nothing to be seen but low fields, stone walls and driving mist on every side. Mary felt her spirits sinking lower and lower as she approached her destination.

"Are we there?" she said.

"No, we've stopped for something—signal against us I expect."

Meredith put down the window and looked out into the mist. He saw a row of low sheds, the outline of a tiny station, a branch line, and nothing beyond them but a couple of other compartments. The rest of the train had gone.

She Confesses.

There they were, left behind—in a siding.

"What has happened?" asked Mary.

Meredith turned and looked at her with a rueful sort of smile.

"Left behind!" cried Mary aghast. "What do you mean?"

"They've run us into a siding, and the train has gone on without us. The fact is, I was asleep. I only woke up to find ourselves dumped down here. They let us get into the coach they were leaving behind—idiots! But we'll get on somehow, Mary. After all, it only means a little delay."

He said her name involuntarily, and Mary's heart jumped. Then a feeling of dismay swept over her.

"But we may not arrive till night," she said. "I suppose the only thing we can do is to drive, if a vehicle is to be had. We must be twenty miles from our destination, at least."

"I suppose so, but what does it matter? They'll understand."

"It may not matter for you," said Mary, in a low, harsh voice. "They will excuse in a guest what they may not pardon in the governess."

Meredith stared at her as if she had suddenly gone mad.

"The what?" he said.

"The governess. That is what I am."

"You're mad."

"I'm not; it's a fact."

"You a governess? What does it mean? What are you masquerading for?"

"It's no masquerade. I'm a governess because—I can not dig, and to beg I am ashamed," said Mary, with a miserable little laugh. "That's all."

"But do you mean to say you've got to do it?" said Meredith, dazedly.

"Yes. Everything went in a big smash on the Stock Exchange more than a year ago. I have to do something, and the Wintons wanted a governess for their two little nephews who are living with them, that's all."

"All!" said Meredith, violently. "And I knew nothing of it. I never heard a word of this before. When we met last do you know what sent me away in such haste? Can you guess?"

"No."

"It was because I was afraid to stay. I loved you so much, and I could not speak. I was only a poor soldier of fortune—you were a wealthy heiress. I had already been called a fortune hunter by those who must have seen how I lingered at your side. I didn't think you cared, so I went away. Now, Mary darling, I'm free to speak. I can't give you the riches that are gone, but I can give you a good home and lots of love. Do you care a little? Try to, Mary, when I care so much. I believe Fate brought us together on purpose."

"And let us in a siding," said Mary, with a smile breaking over her face like sunshine through mist.

"It might have left us in a worse place," cried Meredith, his arm about her shoulders. "Mary, is it going to be 'Yes?'"

"Yes—yes," murmured Mary.

Beauty Secrets of Beautiful Women

How Dot Wilson Found Milk an Aid to Natural Loveliness

By LILIAN LAUFERTY.

IF you want to have your skin white, your eyes bright, your digestion good and your weight always adjusted to a pleasing plumpness that does not increase to stoutness, try the milk diet. This is pretty pink and white, sparkling-eyed Dot Wilson's great beauty secret, and she longs for converts to her theory of the simple life."

I found Miss Wilson and her sisters in a cool, wind-swept room down at Brighton Beach, New York, and after I had adjusted myself to this triple personality as illustrated by the "three-twin" sisters, we settled down to a cozy little visit that gave me one or two brand-new ideas for the attainment of beauty. The first idea was something no one said—it was just the generous, kindly attitude of admiration and willingness to have their "baby sister" featured that Miss Doris Wilson and Miss Alma showed throughout our interview. Next fall B. F. Keith will give you all a chance to see the three clever girls who make up the Doris Wilson trio—but before that time pray let me present to you a bit of their philosophy of life—and beauty.

Only Milk.

"Milk, milk, nothing but milk—that is what my mother brought me up on. None of her children had any other article of diet until they were 12; and I have never found anything so nourishing, so easy to digest and so productive of good results. So milk is my diet, and though the girls vary from it, they often regret some indiscretion of diet to the tune of a pain of a skin rash or one of the ills that food is so generous about presenting people with," said Miss Dot.

"I live on milk—no water to drink, for milk takes its place. No indigestible food can tempt me, for milk keeps me so well, so buoyant and so free from nerves that I flourish thereon and never long for the flavor of any food but my tried and true friend. About twice a year I have a taste of some such foreign substance as ice cream. Oh, yes, I can eat food, and I do occasionally, but I don't like it.

"I drink eight quarts of milk a day—not iced milk to shock the sensitive stomach nerves, but normal tempered milk.

"I sip it slowly—'Just sneak it down,' said one specialist who cures all sorts of nervous and digestive diseases by a seven week' milk cure. Well, it takes me about fifteen minutes to drink one glass of milk, and I am enjoying it all the time. We're all only bigger babies—babies grown up—and if it is so good for the wee things to live on milk, why should it not be good for them to go on living on milk, the friendly food of their childhood? The girls drink five or six glasses of milk a day, and whenever they are tired or nervous, or feel on the verge of a little breakdown, back they go to the milk diet, and then they just get in tune with things again."

Miss Dot Wilson.

I looked at the three pairs of bright eyes—blue, blue-gray and hazel-gray—each pair with a spark of light at the back of their starry depths; I studied the creamy, peachblow complexions, and the gracefully rounded, tall figures, and I decided that as a near-milk cure made you pretty and the absolute milk-dietist was conceded to be the prettiest of the sisters, perhaps it would be a good idea to go right off and corner the milk market.

THEIR MARRIED LIFE

By MABEL HERBERT URNER.

PARIS at 7 o'clock of a summer evening! The gleaming lights, the gay gowns of the women, the trees, the outdoor cafes—Helen, clinging to Warren's arm, walked down the broad boulevard athrill with the glamour of it all.

It had been just four hours since they arrived from Cherbourg—tired, dusty, travel-stained. But now, rested and in cooler clothes, they started out to find, as Warren expressed it, "a place to feed."

Where should they go? Helen suggested a number of well-known places that she had read of in the guide book. But Warren was determined to have their first dinner at a restaurant he had been particularly fond of when he was in Paris eight years before.

Although he had forgotten the name, he had felt confident of his sense of location. They had taken a 'bus to Porte St. Martin and had walked several blocks in what he felt was the right direction.

"Must be around here somewhere," frowning down a street that was plainly unfamiliar. "I don't believe they've moved."

"Isn't that a restaurant over there—where the lights are?" asked Helen hopefully.

"By Jove! I believe that's the place," as they crossed the wide street. "I'd have sworn it was on the other side."

Entering, they were met by an officious head waiter, who bustled ahead, ushering them to a table in an inner room.

"Oh, we don't want to sit back here," objected Warren. "Give us a table out on the veranda."

"Sorry, monsieur, but they're all taken."

"Why, there's a half dozen vacant ones up at that end."

"They're all reserved, monsieur," repeated the head waiter stolidly.

Warren turned to Helen with a scowling "So they know that game over here, too. This fellow's looking for five francs. Well, what do you say? Want to sit back here—or look up some other place?"

"Oh, dear, let's go somewhere else," resenting the supercilious air of the head waiter, who stood impatiently tapping the dinner card with his pencil.

Outside Warren demanded curtly:

"Now, where to? It's getting late and I'm hungry. We don't want to wander around all night, you know."

"But, dear, we don't want to stay there. That man was almost insolent."

He Blames Her.

"Well, you're pretty darn particular," as usual throwing the responsibility upon her. "We'd have been sure of good food there, anyway. But you're always kicking. Suppose you find a place now."

Helen realized that Warren was on the verge of one of his irritable moods, when he would blame her for whatever happened, however inconsistent or unjust. He had had nothing to eat since that early and unsatisfactory luncheon on the train. It was a critical moment, and she was desperately anxious to find some other good restaurant at once—before his growing hunger increased his irritability.

They walked on for several blocks, Helen gazing anxiously in every direction, while Warren maintained the scowling, sullen silence that always foreboded a storm.

"Oh, there, dear!" eagerly, as she caught sight of a balcony, high above the street, with white clothed tables and rose-shaded lights. "Doesn't that look like a good place?"

"You can't tell anything about these strange places in Paris," growled Warren. "May be rotten. But we've got to eat somewhere. Come on. And we'll stay here—understand? Whether we get a table you like or not. No more trotting around for me to-night."

Helen followed Warren up the broad, red-carpeted stairs, hoping desperately that at this place things would "go right."

The first glimpse was disappointing. The room was crowded. Would they have to go somewhere else?

"Sounds Good."

As they stood uncertainly at the doorway, a couple rose from a most desirable table on the veranda—one that Helen had seen from the street. If they could only get that!

The next moment the head waiter was bowing them toward it. Two other waiters rushed forward with fresh linen and silver, and a third placed a footstool for Helen's feet.

"Oh, dear, it's a wonderful place," sinking back with a sense of infinite relief that a critical situation had been safely passed.

"Well, we'll not get enthusiastic till we see what the food's like," grunted Warren, somewhat appeased by the attention they had received.

"I can't make anything out of this," scowling at the menu, which was illegibly written in French with pale purple ink.

"Will you have our 5-franc table d'hote dinner, monsieur?" asked a waiter at his elbow.

"Umph, you speak English? Well, that simplifies things. What do we get with that dinner?"

"Hors d'oeuvres, potage, fish, entree, roast, salade, entrements and a bottle of red or white Bordeaux."

"That sounds pretty good," assented Warren. "All right; we'll try it."

To Helen the atmosphere of the place and the street scene below was one of enchantment. She was beginning to feel the charm of Paris.

With the hors d'oeuvres and first glass of wine, the scowling frown on Warren's brow had relaxed, and with the thick green Saint Germain soup he grew almost genial.

"Just taste that fish! It's great. What they call filet of sole at home is only flounder. We never see the real thing there. This is an all right place."

"Oh, I'm so glad we found this, dear. For I felt that you were getting out of humor, and would blame me for not staying at that other place," exclaimed Helen, who, womanlike, always wanted to go back over a situation, instead of being content to let well enough alone. "And I couldn't bear to have our first dinner in Paris an unhappy one."

"Who in thunder was going to make it unhappy, unless you were?" growled Warren, who hated post-mortems. "What the devil are you harping on it now for, anyway?"

"Oh, I only meant, dear—" began Helen, hastening to conciliate. But fortunately at this moment the waiter uncovered the fowl, roasted to a delicate brown, and Warren's attention was diverted from Helen's untactful remark.

"Dear, there's not so much difference in the gowns worn by the French women," commented Helen, now anxious to change the subject. There aren't any sensational dresses here. That woman over there in pink, is rather striking, but any of the others might be in New York."

"Well, this isn't the sort of place where you'd see much in the way of dress. Some night I'll take you to supper at Maxim's. The gowns there'll be striking enough."

"Oh, are we going to Maxim's?" delightedly. "I thought it was a dreadful place."

"Not so dreadful as they want you to think—that's their best asset. You'll find it pretty tame. More than half the crowd will be rubber necks like ourselves."

But Helen had read and heard much of Maxim's, and as she minced over the fruit salad she gazed down on the gay boulevard in eager anticipation of a supper there.

"Dear, what IS this?" as the waiter placed before them two small brown jars filled with a thick creamy substance. "Search me!" shrugged Waren, investigating it with a spoon.

"That's Creme de Zeigny, Monsieur. Will you have sugar with it?"

"I'll try it straight first."

"Oh, it's delicious, dear," exclaimed Helen enthusiastically. "It's sort of sour, salty and sweet! More like a delicate liquid cheese."

Very Smooth.

"By Jove, that is pretty smooth," admitted Warren. Isn't this the stuff the Thustons raved over when they got back last year? We'll have this often—that's sure."

When the waiter had cleared off the table, Warren lit his cigar and turned over the check placed unobtrusively before him.

"Ten francs—two dollars! Well that's what I call a good run for your money. Everything specially cooked, too—and that was a whole chicken. To get a dinner like that in New York, you'd have to order it a la carte, and with that wine it would cost you not a cent less than $10."

"Now aren't you glad we didn't stay at that other restaurant?" insisted Helen with a true feminine persistency. "The food COULDN'T have been any better! You see I didn't find such a bad place after all."

But Warren was no longer in an inflammable mood. The excellent dinner had had a most pacifying effect on his temper. So to this rather indiscreet remark, he only shrugged a good-natured: "Umph, that's right—rub it in!"

Advice to a Young Man

By DOROTHY DIX.

A YOUNG man, who is ambitious and who feels within himself the ability to rise in the world, is very much in love with a pretty young girl who has no aspirations beyond a new dress and going to Coney Island or a cheap theater.

The young man is making enough money for them to be married on and live in fair comfort in their present status in life, but he is not satisfied with this.

He is anxious to get an education and study a profession. To this the sweetheart objects. She isn't willing for the young man to make his way through college. She doesn't see any use in an education, any how. When the young man talks to her about books it bores her to death, and when he wants to take her to hear a good lecture or good music she offsets it with a proposal to take in a vaudeville show.

The young man wants to know whether he should give up his books or his girl, or if there is any way in which he could interest his fiancee in intellectual pursuits and kindle the fires of ambition in her soul.

To answer the last question first, I would say, no. The homely old proverb about the impossibility of making a silk purse out of a sow's ear is still gospel true. There is no way to make a clod aspire, and you can no more change the tastes of a woman who was born without a perception of the finer things of life than you can change the color of her eyes, or the height of her stature.

Born That Way.

The girl who does not perceive the advantage of an education, or the necessity for one, who yawns over even a novel and who doesn't see why anybody reads the daily paper, who is absolutely and totally unintellectual was simply born that way. There's some lack in her mental equipment, and nothing that her husband can do is going to supply it. She was just born that way, and that way she will stay to her dying day, and it isn't her fault.

Such a woman may be the best of housekeepers, the most devoted of wives, but she is no mental companion for an intelligent man. Many men marry this kind of a girl because she has a pretty face, and then torture her trying to make her clever—something she can never be. This is cruelly unjust. He who marries a girl who frankly admits that she doesn't like to read and has no ambition should never bother her with books, or reproach her with her lack of progressiveness.

As to which he should take when a man is called upon to choose between his career and his sweetheart, I should say take the career every time, because an ambitious man soon learns to hate any woman who is the handicap that prevents him winning in the race of life. When even those that we love become a burden upon us that keep us from success—good-bye love! This is unromantic, but true.

Many an ambitious man finds out after marriage that he has saddled himself unknowingly with a wife who can not and will not keep pace with him, and who holds him back from the achievements that he is capable of making. Such a man is the victim of a hard and bitter fate, but in honor there is nothing left for him but to bear with whatever fortitude he can the misfortune that he has brought upon himself.

A Chance.

But the man who finds out before marriage that the girl he thinks himself in love with is not his mental and spiritual mate, that she can not think his thoughts, that she is not interested in the pursuits that he is interested in; that she does not wish to reach the goal toward which his feet are set, has still a chance to save himself from a marriage that is bound to bring misery both to himself and the woman.

For what attracts him to her is only the ephemeral charms of her youth and good looks, and when they are gone, as they must be in a few years, nothing remains but the memory of the sacrifice he has made for her, and the irksomeness of a tie that binds him to a wife with whom he has not one thing in common.

In that day a man remembers what he might have been and is not. He sees other men, no better equipped than himself, climbing up to the top of the ladder while he sits at the bottom with his dull and commonplace wife. And in that day he sees with fatal clearness just how much of the earth earthy is the woman who is not animated by anything except a desire for the things that make for her physical comfort.

Matrimony can mean the closest companionship that two human beings ever attain. It can be literally two souls with but a single thought, and it can mean a lonesomeness that is as great as Robinson Crusoe ever suffered on his desert isle. And when it is that it is the abomination of desolation.

The Solitude.

Think of what the ambitious man suffers when he is married to a woman who never wants to advance one step, who never sees why he wants to make a change, and whom he has to fight at every step of his progress. Think of the solitude of soul of a man married to a woman with whom he can never discuss a book he has read, or a play he has seen, or an opera he has heard; who never even comprehends anything that he tries to tell her that is more psychic than the price of butchers' meat. Not always "the woman who never could know, and never could understand" is a vampire. Only too often she is just a dull and stupid wife, without brains or imagination or aspiration.

So I say to the man who is hesitating between his career and his pretty, ambitionless, unintellectual sweetheart to choose the career. He will soon outgrow her anyway, and it is far, far better for both that this inevitable separation should come before they are married than afterward.

Confessions of a Medium

No. 3.---When the Clock Stopped

By Chas. D. Isaacson.

Copyright 1913 by International News Service.

IN the midst of the seance the grave faced spirit medium paused. He slowly rose from his seat before his assembled auditors and impressively spoke:

"My good friends, we are now going to attempt the most difficult experiment of all—something never before accomplished in the records of the world. If we succeed in doing it, we shall prove beyond all possible doubt the fact that we CAN communicate with the dead."

He cleared his throat and waited as a sharp flash of lightning illumined the room and a murderous peal of thunder crashed on its heels.

It was a night late in August—a hot, black, scary night, when you look warily over your shoulder at the bent, slinking, soaking figures that pass you by; when the very air seems laden with hobgoblin phantoms, and the wind seems to echo the moaning and groaning of lost souls.

A Night of Wonders.

Within the darkened room, fifty frightened people held firmly to their chairs and listened to the deep, far-away tones of the speaker medium. This had been a night of wonders. Tables and chairs had floated about by unseen supernatural means. Wonderful messages had made fifty hearts flutter like leaves in a Kansas cyclone. To these persons, accustomed to unusual things brought about by their mystifying leader, the startling events of the meeting had overshadowed anything of the past. And now the thought of something still more dramatic brought them to breathless and awed attention.

"Dear spirit," breathed the medium, raising his eyes to the ceiling, "we crave your assistance and beg your pardon for tiring you so much this day. Accomplish this seeming impossibility which I am about to put to you, and prove your existence and your ability to communicate with us, to the most skeptical, unbelieving member of this circle.

"Over there is a clock"—and the speaker pointed a long, lean, bony finger to the opposite end of the room, where on the mantel could be faintly traced the outlines of a ponderous old-fashioned timepiece.

"Listen. Spirit, listen. Over there, you hear the ticking of that clock. Over there—you head it?"

Tick—tick—tick fell on the ears of the listeners, who held their breath for fear it would drown the sound which grew louder and louder with each successive second, until it seemed to beat on their very hearts.

A Request.

"Spirit, think carefully now please. Here is where the experiment begins. Can you—will you STOP THAT CLOCK?"

Deathly silence ensued. Just tick—tick—loud and clear and sharp as a bell.

No answer.

"Spirit, will you do it?"

Tick—tick—tick.

"Will you?"

"Why—why, y-yes, I'll try," came the answer in mysterious taps on the table.

Tick—tick—tick — tick — each second seemed an hour to the 50 auditors, who sat half turned toward the clock, eager-eared, faint-hearted.

Tick—tick——

Snap! In the very middle of a beat! IT STOPPED!

Oh, the eternity of silence that followed broken soon by a storm of gasps and screams. There was a crash of thunder, and some one, no longer able to stand the oppression of the darkness, turned on the gas, flooding the room with light. Then they crowded about the clock—pale and wide-eyed. It was stopped, no question of that. The men, comparing it with their watches, found it recorded just one minute behind theirs.

"Wonderful!" "Weird!" "Proves spiritualism absolutely," "Could NEVER have been done by human or material means—it was surely the work of a spirit." These were the comments rapidly uttered, as they examined the clock to see if any wires or mechanical contrivances could have been connected with it.

The Answer.

This incident happened. To those who were there, it was the most wonderful phenomenon they had ever witnessed. At least that is how it happened to all but the medium. And the medium was myself. Would you like to know how it was done? I will tell you.

No spirit stopped the clock. No mechanical means stopped it. Even I did not stop it. IN THE FIRST PLACE, THE CLOCK WAS NOT GOING AT ALL! "How and why was ticking heard?"

Here is the whole story: Back of me, on a roll-top desk, I had previously placed a very tiny alarm clock, noted for its loud tick. Nobody thinks of a clock until you mention it. When I said, "You hear the ticking over there—OVER THERE," the audience imagined the sound emanated from the direction I pointed; and, by suggestion, on which is based hypnotism, by the way, they had placed it as coming from the silent clock on the mantel. Then, while they were listening for the unexpected, half turned to the opposite wall, I had, unobserved, slipped my finger to the pendulum, stopped the alarm and dropped the clock into a drawer!

"But then how was the other clock the exact time?"

Before the audience had arrived I had placed the hands ahead several hours and had brought my experiment to conform to the very minute I had arranged. This was simple—in a flash of lightning I had casually looked at my watch. The mystery of the night, the darkness, the wonders already witnessed, had all aided me to fool these intelligent people, among whom were a magazine writer, an artist, two theatrical folks, and several writers and lawyers.

Now consider this: That this experiment was far more dramatic and inexplicable than is generally seen at professional seances, where money is paid for admittance. Yet on incidents such as these, the credulous people of the masses are convinced of spiritism and defrauded by fakers, whose wonders I warrant could be unraveled as simply as the one I have just recorded. I did these things to study and expose. Professionals do them for money. Is it not highly probable that others who earn their living at this mockery are forced to work out similar "wonders?" I do not say spiritualism is wrong. I do not essay to pass judgment on this great question. It is against the fakers that I direct my campaign, beseeching every sensible man and woman to save their hard-earned money and evade them.

Going the Limit.

Jones—If Mr. Oldboy makes any such assertion, I will denounce him as a liar.

President—Mr. Jones, I call you to order. Our by-laws do not allow you to go that far.

Jones—Then I call Mr. Oldboy a liar as far as it is permitted by the by-laws of this association.

Literally.

Six Miles Up!

And Safety Instead of Death Because of a New and Wonderful Device for Aviators

The picture, which was taken at an altitude of more than six miles, shows Messrs. Maurice Bienaime and Jacques Schneider in the car of the balloon "Icare" wearing the patent breathing apparatus. In 1878 the balloon "Zenith" attained a height of about four miles, but two of its three passengers were suffocated. With this apparatus the fatality could not have occurred.

By GARRETT P. SERVISS.

THE greatest peril for those who ascend to great altitudes is not that of falling, but that of being suffocated, like fish taken out of water!

It was the climbers of high mountains who first discovered the fact that it is often difficult for men to breathe at a height of from two and a half to three miles above sea level. The late Edward Whymper, the conqueror of the terrible Matterhorn, made many experiments on this, and he concluded, after climbing Chimborazo and other huge peaks in the Andes, that the cause of "mountain sickness," as the trouble was called, was due both to the lessened value of air that is inspired at such altitudes and to the expansion of the gases contained within the body, producing a pressure upon the internal organs.

But more recent study has shown that the difficulty arises mainly from the comparative lack of oxygen in the upper air, and that this may be overcome by means of apparatus supplying extra oxygen to the lungs.

The two principal constituents of the atmosphere are oxygen and nitrogen. Nitrogen is an inert gas which stifles animal respiration. Oxygen, on the other hand, is a very active gas, which, when breathed, supports animal life. When mixed, as near the earth's surface, in the proportion of about four volumes of nitrogen to one of oxygen, the air is respirable, and the inertness of the nitrogen does no harm. But if the proportion of oxygen is reduced the air becomes stifling.

Now, oxygen is heavier than nitrogen in ratio of about eight to seven, and in obedience to the law that heavier substances sink lower than lighter ones, the oxygen thins out as the height above the ground increases, until its proportion to the nitrogen becomes considerably reduced. Above three or four miles the amount of oxygen is so much diminished that breathing becomes very difficult, and at still higher altitudes respiration may cease entirely.

A Tragedy.

A very tragic instance of the effect thus produced is furnished by the story of the famous balloon ascent made in April, 1878, by Gaston Tissandier, Croce Spinelli and Signor Sivel. They ascended from La Villette in France, in the balloon "Zenith," to a height of 28,200 feet, or a little more than five and one-third miles. The thinness of the air, and as we now know, the relative lack of oxygen, killed Spinelli and Sivel, and nearly cost the life of Tissandier.

To show what modern science and invention have done to avert this peril of the high atmosphere, let us turn to the story of a still higher ascent, made on May 28, 1913, by the balloon "Icare," carrying Albert Senouque, Jacques Schneider and M. Bienaime. They started from Lamotte-Breuil in France, and attained an elevation of nearly 33,000 feet, or six and a quarter miles, and yet they did not suffer at all, and came down in perfect condition, and exulting in their great feat!

Their success and immunity from suffocation were due to the fact that they took with them the apparatus shown in the accompanying photograph.

A Wonderful Picture.

This consists of an air-tight vessel filled with compressed oxygen. A mask which can be fitted closely over the nose and mouth is connected by a tube with the reservoir of oxygen. There is a pressure gauge which enables the aeronaut to measure the quantity of oxygen remaining in the reservoir, and there is also a device by which to regulate the amount flowing through the tubes. Thus they could take just as much oxygen as they needed and no more. The rate of supply varied from two quarts per minute to ten. The reservoir contained about 1,600 quarts.

They began to breathe the oxygen when at a height of about 11,000 feet.

The method of using the apparatus is shown in the photograph, which was taken by Senouque, showing Bienaime and Schneider, with their breathing masks on, at the very time when they were at the top of their flight, more than six miles above the earth!

Similar apparatus has recently been carried by mountain climbers, and by the pilots of aeroplanes ascending to great altitudes. With the rapid progress of aerial navigation it will become indispensable in the future.

If fish had human brains they might safely make a voyage of discovery in the air!

MELANCHOLY WOMEN

Should Profit by Mrs. Hurley's Experience—Her Own Story Here Told.

Eldon, Mo.—"I was troubled with displacement, organic inflammation and female weakness. For two years I could not stand on my feet long at a time and I could not walk two blocks without enduring cutting and drawing pains down my right side which increased once a month. I have been at that time purple in the face and would walk the floor. I could not lie down or sit still sometimes for a day and a night at a time. I was nervous, had very little appetite, no ambition, melancholy, and often felt as though I had not a friend in the world.

"After I had tried most every female remedy first, without success, my mother-in-law advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I did so and gained in strength every day. I have now no trouble in any way and highly praise your medicine. It advertises itself."—Mrs. S. T. HURLEY, Eldon, Missouri.

Remember, the remedy which did this was Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. For sale everywhere.

It has helped thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing down feeling, indigestion, and nervous prostration, after all other means have failed. Why don't you try it?

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

IN ALL PROBABILITY, YES.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

A certain girl friend of mine recently wrote me a letter asking a favor of me. I could easily oblige her as the favor is slight. I have been keeping company with a friend of hers lately and am decidedly in love with her. She (the one who wrote the letter) knows this, but still bestows her attentions on me. I myself am not paying her much attention and do not like her. Do you think I would arouse the jealousy of my lover if I showed the other friend this favor just to be polite? M. B.

You letter is rather ambiguous, as you do not state the nature of the favor.

If of such a nature it would cause trouble between you and your sweetheart, you must refuse. Your first thought should be of her.

And please see to it that the other girl's attentions are bestowed elsewhere. I am afraid she will make trouble.

THERE MAY BE SOME EXCUSE.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 18, am considered very handsome, and am in love with a boy three years my senior. He tells me he loves me, but when we have an engagement he always disappoints me. Do you think he is sincere? MARJORIE.

If by "always" you mean once or twice, he may have been unavoidably detained. But if he makes a practice of disappointing you, you must make no more engagements with him, for he cares nothing for you.

HIS RUDENESS IS INEXCUSABLE.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I have been married four years and am only 22 years old. My husband is 29. When out in company with my husband, is it not his place to notice me or talk to me?

When out dining at a friend's, is it right for him to pay attention to young ladies at the table by passing dishes to them and not noticing me? R. B.

He does everything he should not, and his sins of omission are as great.

His behavior is unpardonable, but I know of no redress for you. I hope all girls of 18 who think they are old enough to select a husband will take warning from you.

OBEY YOUR PARENTS.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I have been attending college, and last fall met a young man who is also a student. For the past four months he has been very attentive to me. I love him very much. My parents, who know the young man, say he is wild and associates with bad company. They want me to give him up. What shall I do? I love my family, but I also love the young man very, very much.

M. F. F.

I would urge you to obey your parents, were the young man desirable, for parents always know best. How much more I urge it since he is wild and dissolute! Give him up! Let there be no compromise. I add my pleadings to those of your parents.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"Brave!" he exclaimed in low, contemptuous tones. "It takes no bravery to fight a coward—and that's what this ghost is! It's a coward, like every other spook. Did you ever hear of any spirit that walked in the daytime? Never! They sneak and dodge and hide in crumbling and deserted places. I tell you that men are not half so afraid of spirits as spirits are of men! Face the supernatural, and it is beaten before the fight begins. Spooks, horse thieves and peevish wildcats can all be tamed by the same little charm."

He stoped in a dead silence. The others were staring at him intently, but with highly different expressions.

"Charm?" repeated the Duke, vaguely.

"What is it?" asked the Princess, breathlessly.

Unostentatiously, Jarvis produced his pistol, handling it as one might handle a familiar pencil. To one reared in a community where firearms are never seen excepting in the windows of the hardware store the sight of a pistol occasions either panic or the utmost indifference, depending entirely on the degree of ignorance or natural timidity. But in localities where the revolver is as common and serves the same purpose as the rapier of medieval Europe it is a known and fixed quantity. To one native to those localities the interest in the appearance of the pistol is directed entirely toward the man who displays it—what manner of man he is and what is his manner of handling the weapon.

The Duke had never seen a pistol excepting once or twice on the field of honor and strapped to the thigh of a cavalry man. He was an utter stranger to the type of man to whom a 44-caliber revolver is a shield sword. Consequently, though any ten-year-old boy from the lower Ohio Valley could have told him at one glance that Warren Jarvis carried a revolver. Because it was a protection and not a menace, as it is to be unused, the appearance of the weapon seemed to amuse him, rather than otherwise.

A Joke.

"I had been hoping, Mr. Warren," he said, with light scorn, "that you had some subtle method of handling this problem. But no! You propose to meet the forces of the supernatural with firearms! I may tell you that this specter has been fired at before without the slightest effect."

Jarvis smiled and nodded as he returned the pistol to his pocket.

"Quite likely," Your Excellency. I have seen rifle fire that had not the slightest effect on a wildcat—for the very good reason that the shooting was wilder than the cat."

The Duke made a gesture as if waiving all respnosibility.

"I am sorry for you, Mr. Warren. You will find the ghost more real than the treasure."

"But the treasure is real, Carlos!" exclaimed the Princess, with spirit. "Would I have crossed the ocean for this locket unless I knew? Why, with this paer a total stranger, anybody who had never seen the castle, could walk right up to the place and point out the very stone that hides it!"

For the barest fraction of a second the glances of the two men crossed like foils.

"Pretty dangerous sort of paper to have around," observed Jarvis, slowly. "Look out that somebody doesn't get there ahead of you."

"Yes, it is a dangerous paper," chimed in the Duke in the same time, "if it leads any one into the castle."

The young man laughed, silently and naturally.

"Well, Your Excellency, I'd go a long way for the fun of unraveling a good mystery with a little spice of danger thrown in."

Dangerous Ground.

The Duke nodded as if he understood and sympathized with the feeling. Then, as if something had just occurred to him, he remarked:

"You needn't have gone so far, Mr. Warren. You are leaving a very unusual case behind you in New York. I suppose you read the papers on your way to the boat?"

The young man's lips twitched and he glanced at the trunk.

"Why, no. I was so wrapped up in my baggage I really didn't have a chance."

He glanced slyly at the Princess, who immediately discovered something of interest out of a porthole.

"This will interest you, too, cousin," remarked the Duke, picking up a newspaper he had dropped when he first presented himself to his kinswoman. "You were at the Vanderlip last night, I believe." He opened the paper, found the item he had in mind and read aloud:

"'Pistol duel in Vanderlip Hotel—Guests awake in panic to find prominent Kentuckian dangerously wounded by unknown assailant—Mysterious escape.—Colonel James Markham, a prominent and wealthy Kentuckian, nearly met his death at 5 o'clock this morning in a pistol duel in his room at the Vanderlip Hotel.' 'At a late hour the police had no clew to the identity of his assailant except the remarkable fact that he is still hiding somewhere in the hotel.'"

"He's probably a long way from the hotel by now," interrupted Jarvis with a smile.

"They say he couldn't have gotten out without being seen."

Jarvis shrugged his shoulders. "That's the theory of the police or the reporters."

"What do you think?" demanded the Duke.

"Oh, he might have escaped in a thousand ways. But that's hardly in my line. That work belongs to what we call the 'gum-shoes.'"

"'Gum-shoes!'" echoed the Duke, with amazement.

"Yes, ordinary detectives," Jarvis explained. "But," he added, turning to the Princess, "we are keeping you from getting settled, I'm afraid. So, if you will excuse me, I will see you both at dinner, perhaps."

"Yes, do," invited the Princess, graciously. "And, Carlos, do arrange to sit with us. We will have quite a party."

The Police.

Jarvis bowed to the Duke. "I am pleased to have made your acquaintance, Your Excellency."

"Thank you, Mr. Warren. I find you most interesting. I shall be glad to hear more of—of your remarkable profession."

There was just the faintest echo of a sneer in this last, but the young man bowe as if complimented, and had just turned to the door, when there was a sharp knock. He drew back and the Princess quickly opened it.

With no greeting, bow or apology, two men thrust themselves into the stateroom. Jarvis recognized them at once and set his shoulders for the final combat.

By this you are not to suppose that he was personally acquainted with the men themselves—his familiarity was with the type. In all the world-wide phantasmagoria of races and classes there is none that can be so readily recognized and classified as the New York detective. With the present craze for uniformed bellboys, pages, milliners' attendants, door tenders, errand boys and governors it is quite possible to confuse the uniformed policeman with some of these. But when he is sent out in plain clothes there is no mistaking him. When you have seen one of them you can recognize any one of them to the extreme range of your vision. There is a combination of a certain physical solidity manifest in their carriage and mental stolidity evidenced in their faces that can be found nowhere else.

This pair were typical—thick-chested, thick-handed, thick-headed, with round moon-like faces.

On the Rack.

One stepped just inside the door and a little to one side of it as if on guard. The other advanced a step farther. He had evidently been decided on as spokesman. He glanced at the two men and then addressed the Princess, consulting a tiny note-book as he spoke.

"Is this Miss M. T. Ar-r-agan?" he inquired in a rich, "far-down" brogue, overlaid with the indescribable Manhattanese accent.

"Yes," replied the Princess, uncertainly, and evidently puzzled by the sudden and unexplained intrusion. Jarvis remained in the background and thrust his wounded hand into his overcoat pocket. The Duke's little mustache began to bristle and he stepped forward.

"You were at the Vanderlip Hotel last night?" pursued Detective Driscoll, ignoring the Duke.

"Ye-es."

"The lock on your door was broken?"

"Yes."

"I am from headquarters, ma'am," explained the detective, having gotten these "damaging admissions." "And I have orders to clear up one or two little matters connected with that affair at the hotel last night."

The exalted cousin could no longer restrain himself.

"Orders, orders!" he burst out. "To break in here! What headquarters?"

Detective Driscoll stared at him in open-eyed insolence. Jarvis smiled discreetly behind his hand.

"Police Headquarters!" bellowed the detective so loudly that every one started. His colleague at the door smiled wearily.

"Do you know whom you are addressing?" spluttered the grandee angrily.

Detective Driscoll rolled toward him, pushed out about five cubic inches of chin and snarled:

"That'll be about all from you!" resentative Kimbrough, of Harris Counsa snap. Driscoll returned to the Duke quietly, "let me attend to this matter. Won't you come in, gentlemen?"

"Thanks," said Detective Driscoll, easily, nodding to his partner to close the door and giving the Duke a final glare as if daring him to say another word.

"Yes," Jarvis' pleasant voice added its soothing influence, "we were just talking about the mystery."

The Duke, feeling that he would only risk a loss of dignity by quarreling with a foreign police officer, took the cue and held out the olive branch with a patronizing air.

"You are, I take it," he remarked to Driscoll as the sleuth was peering into his little book, "one of the—er 'gum shoes.'"

Jarvis snickered, the book shut with a snap. Driscoll returned to the duke and thrust a menacing face into his.

"Gum shoes!" he snarled. "Say, are you tryin' to be funny?"

The Duke startled, drew back a step.

"Well, sir," he replied half apologetically," you are speaking rather loudly, and, if I may say so, with undue asperity. I presume I have offended you."

"'You presume!'" answered Driscoll. "That's a hot one! Say—who are you, any way?"

The exalted cousin drew himself up and gave one end of his mustache an upward twist.

"I am Hernando, Duke d'Alva," he replied pompously. "I have other titles, but they would hardly interest you."

The detective looked him over from head to foot and licked his lips hungrily.

"Dook de Alvers—and then some, eh? Ain't that nice! Well, if you was the Archbishop of Canterbury I'd run yer in and take yer ashore if yer gimme any more sass!" Fascinated by a savage glare the Duke declined to give him any more "sass," and the detective turned to the Princess, but still eyed the exalted cousin, as if longing for an excuse to "run him in."

Spoiled by Success

PRECISELY as the clocks in the vicinity of Dowman Square announced the hour of midnight, John Maine's pen ceased suddenly in its rapid flight across the paper before him. For a time he sat motionless, his forehead wrinkled in perplexity. Twice he attempted to resume his work, but each time stopped short in the effort.

For five long hours he had worked with feverish mental energy and the first time his pen refused to become the vehicle of his thoughts the physical strength of the man gave out, then, as a gift from the gods, came the blessing of sleep to the jaded worker.

Dimly, vaguely, John Maine became conscious of the fact that his arms were bound and useless at his side. His legs were cramped in an unnatural position; he endeavored to move his head, and discovered, with a painful shock, that his neck was securely held by a tight collar attached to the back of his chair. With startled eyes he glanced round swiftly in the little circle his bonds allowed and saw nothing. Then, as the perspiration oprued from him in his fear, he knew that from somewhere in the room a voice was speaking, slowly, monotonously, but its every word articulated with striking distinctness.

"Don't waste your energy," came in a sibilant whisper. "You have nothing to fear but the truth. Compose yourself.

"I am here to talk," began the voice, "and you to listen."

"So it seems," said Maine briefly. "Tell me," he urged quietly, "who are you?"

"Ten years ago, John Maine," the unknown said, completely ignoring the other's question, "you were a poor man struggling to achieve distinction. Today you are an acknowledged power in the literary world; but has your path upward been a clean, praiseworthy path?"

Congratulations.

The man in the chair stirred uneasily; his eyes sought the one remaining flicker in the fire.

"I suppose," he mused, addressing the tiny, cheerless flame as one in a reverie, "I suppose you're a kind of spectre of the past, eh? You've a remarkably fine idea of stage management," he added, with assumed lightness. "As one artist to another, I congratulate you on your sense of the dramatic."

"You fool! You unspeakable fool!" hissed the voice venomously in his ear. "As you can not tell yourself, suppose I show you what manner of man you are. Take your mind back ten years and tell me what happened then. You can't?"

"I was married ten years ago," Maine replied, hastily.

"So you were married ten years ago, were you?"

"As an unknown man," the voice continued evenly, "without a penny to bless yourself, you married the sweetest little girl in Christendom. She left her parents, she abandoned all to make a mesalliance with you; she shared your garret, she helped you with your work and she bore her altered condition in life with a fortitude which only threw your quibbling nature into more heinous relief. Slowly, gradually, as you mounted the ladder to success, all the magnificent resolutions of your early married life faded into insignificance. You lived only for your work. You became a supreme artist. And you, for whom she had forsaken everything, forgot the very existence of the woman whose heart was still yours.

A Son.

"Five years ago," continued the voice, "a son was born to you, and for a time you forgot you were a man of letters. But you soon slipped away when your clubs called you, when the public fawned on you; and your wife, broken-hearted and neglected, fled from your home. Did you realize then"—the words came in a thundering torrent now—"the revolting act of savagery which cast your wife adrift without the child she loved so dearly?"

"Good heavens!" exclaimed Maine fearfully. "Are you—"

"Listen!" came the imperious command. "She wanted your love, and you had buried it in your success. But, strangely as it sounds, you still loved the child that is sleeping in this house. Do you think that the boy has not missed his mother more than you have missed your wife? John Maine, in the grate before you are ashes, cold and gray. They are your portion in life, for that boy of yours, his heart yearning for the tender love you can not give, is even now slipping into the void——"

"Enough!" screamed the wretched man. "You lie—you know you lie!" He moistened his lips with his tongue. "Who are you?" he asked, with sudden humility.

"I am your better self," came sadly, morosely from a long way off, and John Maine sat up on the words to find himself blinking terrified in the small arc light from a policeman's lantern.

"Beg pardon, sir," whispered the policeman, quickly covering the light; "but I guessed you would be in here at work as usual, and, and——"

His Wife.

"I've been asleep, constable," Maine interposed slowly, and the words conveyed a subtle relief to his aching heart at once. "But how on earth did you get in?" he asked, suddenly realizing that the presence of a policeman in his house in the early hours of the morning was something to be explained.

"Softly, sir," counseled the other. "I saw a woman creep through a window at the back, and followed her. I've been on this beat for a good many years, sir, and I fancied I knew who she was. I thought perhaps you might like"——

Maine was standing up now, alert and brisk.

"Is she still in the house?" he asked.

The constable nodded.

"She crept upstairs, sir," he said simply.

But John Maine waited for no more. With his heart pounding at his ribs, he sprang out of the room and leaped swiftly up the stairs.

The policeman followed him slowly.

Maine had reached the landing which led to the boy's room, when he heard a door in front of him open. He switched on the electric light, and there, panting fearfully in the sudden blaze, leaning against the wall, was the thin and emaciled figure of a woman.

Her clothes were in rags and atters; in her arms she clutched a sleeping child to her breast.

They stood thus, silently regarding each other, until the sound of a discreet cough warned Maine of the presence of the constable. With hands that shook perceptibly, and eyes in which there lurked a strange moistness, John Maine turned swiftly on the landing.

"You're a good fellow," he said quietly. "It is as you surmised. My wife"—he waved his hand courteously to the wretched woman in front of him—"has returned home unexpectedly. You can let yourself out."

They waited until the man had passed through the house and they could hear his retreating footsteps die away in the distance. Then:

"Maisie," said Maine, gently, "you have come home to me?"

The woman tottered where she stood, one arm went out before her, sweetly, pathetically, and John Maine sprang to her side in an instant.

"Maisie, my love!" he cried, the tears coursing down his cheeks with the weakness of a strong man who is suddenly robbed of his calm, "thank God, I know my better self!"

Jealousy.

The teacher was addressing his pupils on the subject of laziness and idleness.

He drew a terrible picture of the habitual loafer—the man who dislikes work and who begs for all he gets.

"Now, John," said the teacher to a little boy who had been very inattentive during the lesson.

John was instantly on the alert.

"Tell me," continued the teacher, "who is the miserable individual who gets clothes, food and lodging and yet does nothing in return?"

John's face brightened.

"Please, sir," said he, "the baby."

PONCE DE LEON BALL PARK, July 8edNe4Sic;xB.. 1D.Gh HJghC shrd luu 11.—Hogg twirled air-tight ball here this afternoon, and as a result the Gulls blanked the Crackers, 6 to 0, in the second game of their series. A batting rally in the fourth session netted Mike Finn's crew five runs, which practically settled the combat. They secured their final tally in the fifth inning.

Brady started for Smith's men, but was routed in the fourth period and was relieved by Dent, who hurled good ball the rest of the route. Stock and Paulet did the heavy stick work for the visitors.

THE GAME.

FIRST INNING.

Stock popped to Agler. McGill rolled one to Alperman and was out to Agler. Robertson was easy for Brady and Agler. NO HITS, NO RUNS.

Long grounded to Stock and was out to Robertson. Welchonce was given free transportation to first. Alperman lofted a tall one to Paulet. Smith sent a roller to Stock, who relayed the pill to Paulet, forcing Welchonce at the midway. NO HITS, NO RUNS.

SECOND INNING.

O'Dell rolled to Bisland, who made a crazy chuck past Agler and the former Cracker anchored safely at the opening peg. Paulet kindly sent a grasser to Bisland, who handed the ball to Alperman, forcing O'Dell at the keystone. Clark dropped a one-timer into left garden, Paulet moving up a base. Alperman tossed out Campbell. ONE HIT, NO RUNS.

Stock and Robertson made easy work of Bisland's grounder. Agler went out over the O'Dell-Robertson route. Bailey grounded to Paulet, but Bill was safe at first for Robertson dropped a perfectly good throw. Bailey stole second with neatness and dispatch. Chapman gladdened the hearts of the multitude with a single through short, Bailey pulling up at third. Brady's best was a roller down the first base line that Robertson handled all by his lonesome. ONE HIT, NO RUNS.

THIRD INNING.

Hogg sent a ballooner to Welchonce. Stock singled to right. McGillsacrificed Stock along to second with a bunt that Brady handed to Agler. Robertson was turned back to Agler. ONE HIT, NO RUNS.

FOURTH INNING.

Smith and Agler did all that was necessary with O'Dell's daisy-cutter. Schmidt laced a single to center. Schmidt raced around to third when Paulet dropped a one-timer to right. Hogg singled to center, scoring Clark and Campbell. Stock beat out a slow roller for a hit. McGill doubled to right, scoring Hogg, while Stock made third. Brady was yanked off the mound here, Dent taking up the unwelcomed burden. Robertson popped to Agler. Stock tried to score on a short passed ball, but died. Chapman to Dent. SIX HITS, FIVE RUNS.

Campbell ended the inning with a high foul to Smith. ONE HIT, ONE RUN.

Robertson handled Bailey's grounder without any assistance. Chapman rolled an easy grounder to Hogg and was out to Robertson. Dent rompedtofirst on four bad ones. Long's best was a pop fly to Paulet. NO HITS, NO RUNS.

SIXTH INNING.

Hogg lined to Bailey, but when the latter failed to hold the pill, the Gull twirler was safe. Stock placed his bat against the ball for a single to left and Hogg went to second. McGill bunted to Dent and Hogg was forced on Dent's fast relay to Smith. Robertson hit a grounder to Alperman and McGill was forced at second, to Bisland. Robertson pilfered second. DON'T HOLD YOUR VOTES, FANS, BUT SEND THEM IN

You May Have Just Enough to Place Your Favorite Ball Player in the Lead.

DON'T be a "vote holdout." We mean you fans who are holding hundreds of coupons that you have clipped since the Hearst Sunday American and The Atlanta Georgian inaugurated its great contest to determine the most popular baseball player in the Empire State League. Send in your coupons now, lest you be too late.

Thousands are coming in every day, but there is room for many more thousands of coupons in the files of the Popularity Baseball Editor.

Perhaps you have just enough votes to send your favorite into the lead, and, having attained that lead, he is likely to hold it until the end of the contest and win the loving cup and the honor of being the most popular player in the Empire State League.

As our newly acquired poetist recently put it:

"He who gets a lead in May
Can stand a slump some other day."

Learn from that, fans, and send in the coupons you are holding out.

The coupons appear daily and Sunday in this paper. Clip them, fill them in, and mail them to the Popularity Editor, Atlanta Georgian, Atlanta, Ga.

Jordan Regains Lead.

In the votes sent in yesterday Otto Jordan and Holliday are still running a neck and neck race, with the Valdosta manager again taking the lead by a very narrow margin. Holliday is right on his heels and a little hustling by his followers will again send him to the front.

But, another dark horse has entered this contest in the person of Herbert "Pat" Murphy, shortstop of the Thomasville Club. Votes have been piling in for him at a rapid pace. Following is one of the letters received for him yesterday:

22 Votes for Murphy.

Popularity Editor, Atlanta Georgian, Atlanta, Ga.: Inclosed find 22 votes for Herbert "Pat" Murphy, the popular shortstop of the Thomasville team. He is my favorite player in the Empire State League.

Yours truly,
MISS ELLA SANFORD.

The standing of the leading players will be published to-morrow.

The Giants will raise the 1912 pennant at the Polo Grounds on July 15. The Cincinnati Reds will play in New York on that date.

Ryan and Carisch, of the Cleveland Naps, got six hits between them in the game with Philadelphia yesterday.

Two members of the Yankees were victims of an exceptional play by the White Sox in which both were put out at the plate. One was out in the sixth, Peckinpaugh was on third and Knight was on second when Smith hit to Pitcher Russell, who threw the ball to Catcher Schalk, tagging Peckinpaugh after a chase toward third. Smith kept on for second and drew a throw. Knight had reached third and sped on toward home, but Rath dashed in, took Weaver's throw and got Knight by a close margin.

Miner Brown, who pitched for the Reds yesterday and won, is still suffering from an injury to his knee, although his arm is as strong as ever. His running is badly handicapped.

M'ALEER DENIES THAT HE AND STAHL HAVE HAD SPLIT

CLEVELAND, July 11.—James McAleer, of the Boston Red Sox, to-day denied a newspaper story that he and Manager Jake Stahl have reached the parting of the ways. McAleer, who is here for a day or so, denies there is any truth in the yarn.

The story said Stahl, jealous of McAleer, had been seeking the undermine the Red Sox president with the majority stockholders, wanting that position himself. McAleer, according to the report, learned of Stahl's action and arranged to meet the minority stockholders in Chicago Saturday, prepared to buy or sell.

TAGGART DECLARES HE IS NOT "ANGEL" FOR TRACK

FRENCH LICK, IND., July 11.—"What? Me the 'angel' for the Mineral Springs Jockey Club? Quit kidding me!" shouted Thomas Taggart, when interrogated as to the reports printed in Chicago newspapers that he had guaranteed purses offered by the Jockey Club so that the meeting would not "blow up."

Mr. Taggart pronounced the report as "a pure fabrication" or "untruth," declaring he had no connection whatever with the Porter races.

WALSH BACK FROM BUTTE; HAS PRAISE FOR BROWN

CHICAGO, July 11.—Tommy Walsh, who handled George "K. O." Brown July 4 in his winning fight with Jimmy Howard, at Butte, returned to town yesterday with the Greek warrior. Walsh allows "K. O." made a big hit up there and will be given a Butte match with one of the star middleweights before long. Walsh likes Butte as a boxing town so well that he is going to take Joe Mandot up there to fight in the fall. Mandot will be here to join Walsh in a few days.

INEXPERIENCE IN GOLF TOURNEYS ADDS 3 STROKES

By Chick Evans

THE inexperienced player usually plays from two to three strokes poorer in a tournament than in his practice rounds, while the seasoned golfer, as a rule, plays just the least bit better when a tourney makes the extra demand for skill. A tournament "rattles" one player and stimulates the other. Of course, trained players do go to pieces in a tournament, but it is their standing that makes this noticeable.

Formality Unnerves Youngsters.

Generally speaking, players of a certain ability can be depended upon to reach a definite place in a tournament with a certain average of excellence, while the inexperienced player, who is capable of a fine score in informal games, either fails to qualify or makes a very high score. The formality of the occasion and the presence of many first-class golfers destroy the confidence of the novice and ruins his game. The experienced golfer has his troubles, too; has unexpected defeats, but ordinarily, his game is played with clocklike regularity. He has learned his weaknesses in many a tournament, and he knows what to expect. His mental forces are not so easily stampeded, and when he fails in the first round it is before the skill of a fine player.

Experienced Player's Nerves Good.

The experienced player sleeps well before important matches. How essential that is only the golfer who has felt an absolute collapse of his physical energies before the end of the day knows. I well remember that in my early tournament experience I slept not at all before even the smallest events, and lost many of them from sheer lack of strength, and was ill in bed for days after. It took years of training to take that out of me. Now I know that I can only do my best, and it is useless to worry. Training does many things; it is indispensable in every branch of human endeavor, but, alas, it does not enable one to entirely escape his temperament.

APPROACHING IS THE BANE OF GOLFERS

MORE than a decade ago Walter J. Travis declared there was no department in the game of golf that required such a high degree of skill and the exercise of such sound judgment as approaching. As that was years before he even dreamed of annexing the British or world's championship, and had but once won the national, his statement did not attract the attention that it would have later. He added: "Strength must then be supplemented with delicacy and discrimination not called for elsewhere except in the approach shot, which is really an off-shoot."

Then, seemingly as if he were granted by fate prophetic glimpse far ahead, although at that time he had not heard of Jerome D. Travers, he continued: "Approaching is the largest single element in winning a national championship." And further: "No one can rank high who is not a master of lofted approaches."

Probably the best approacher this country ever had, previous to Jerome Travers, was Eben Byers, always a great stylist, who won the National at Englewood in 1906.

Gave Great Exhibition.

In the spring of that year, Byers, as runner-up to Travers in the Metropolitan at St. Andrews, gave an exhibition in the wizardry of serpentine approaching previously unknown in this country.

Getting the green on the next is a far finer achievement than direction and distance from the tee. Almost any club may be used for making an approach, the mashie or midiron being more often brought into requisition. Approaches seldom exceed 150 yards in distance and often less than a third of that stretch. A full stroke with a powerful cleek, however, is occasionally made in order to get well up.

Suppose you have a clear path to the flag. The stroke you would play would naturally depend on the character of the surface. On a firm course, such as that offered by a few seaside links, you would run your shot, which means that you would give it a short pitch and then let trickle along the ground. On a soft course, such as is the rule inland, the pitch would be bold to the green, because it could not run far upon alighting.

"Poached-Egg Shot."

Such a bold stroke, particularly when more or less of a cut has been given to land it dead, is what Harry Fulford onced called a "poached-egg shot." The cut stroke is one of the best of the many surpassing things that Travers does. Harold Hilton's greatest specialty is the back spin he imparts on many of his cut strokes, by which he lands his ball dead, with scarcely any roll. Each club has a range of its own. On the midiron and cleek you would stand and swing practically the same as if you were driving. You will naturally find yourself standing more directly over the ball, a tendency you need not attempt to alter.

Travers and others are well agreed that the mashie should be brought out of the bag, roughly speaking, when about one hundred yards from the hole. The face of the mashie is well laid back in order that the ball may be lofted. Consequently, it is unnecessary to drop the shoulder or knee in an attempt to get under the ball. A full swing with the mashie is almost unknown. For a stroke up to one hundred yards, the left foot should be about fifteen inches behind the right—sometimes designated as the "open stance."

The ball should be on a line with the left heel. Keep a firm grip on the club, for relaxation is sure to end in a jolt. The right elbow should be kept close to the body, no matter if you do feel cramped at first, for otherwise, accuracy is impossible. The face of the club should be turned out a little in order to avoid pulling—that is, deviating to the left of the line play. If you wish to pitch boldly, carry the weight mostly to the left leg. Shift to the right, if you desire to bring the ball lower.

Mandot Praises Willie Ritchie

Discusses Right-Hand Wallop

NEW ORLEANS, July 11.—Joe Mandot, who at one time threatened to put New Orleans on the lightweight championship map, was one of the interested spectators of the recent Ritchie-Rivers argument. Joe was one of the first to pick Ritchie as a winner and, having fought both, he was well posted on the respective ring merits of the two scrappers. The Southern pride is still a hit with the coast fans, as the following clipping will indicate:

"Young Mandot is a scholarly and clean-cut young fellow. He looks more like a bank clerk than a boxer, and his conduct would pass muster in the inner circles of the '400' or any other set in high society."

Joe Praises Ritchie.

Discussing Ritchie's victory, Mandot says:

"That boy is a terrific hitter and a splendid boxer. And what I like about Ritchie is that he carries his punch with him at all times and can get one over at almost any stage of the going.

"When I boxed Willie Ritchie ten rounds in New Orleans I felt that I had the better of the bout for at least nine and one-half rounds. I was going great against Ritchie, and I felt I had him beaten up to within 30 seconds of the close of the last round. Then something happened to me. Ritchie crossed that right of his over my jaw and I imagined that some one had turned off all the lights. It was the hardest punch I was ever hit in my life, and I guess I've gotten a few tough wallops in my career.

"After Ritchie landed that clout I was through. Of course, I started to duck instinctively, and I managed to avoid a further collision with Ritchie's right, but that one punch almost put me out of business.

Willie a Hard Hitter.

"Some of the local newspapers gave Ritchie that bout, some said that I won, and others called it a draw. Of course, there was no referee's decision, and we could each claim that bout.

"But I'll tell you one thing, I'd as soon have a sour dispositioned mule kick me as have that Ritchie boy hit me that kind of a wallop again. Ritchie hurt me more in the last 30 seconds of our 10-round bout than Rivers hurt me in the two 20-round contests I had with him.

"That right-hand cross of Ritchie's is the toughest proposition that I ever ran up against. Getting hit by Ritchie's right cross is, to my way of looking at it, about the same as being caressed by a policeman's night stick. Of course, I was never caressed by any policeman's night stick, but Ritchie did hit me, and if I were given my choice, I'd rather take a chance on the stick."

Gene Van Court, the boxing instructor of the Los Angeles Athletic Club, and formerly the boxing instructor of the Olympic Athletic Club, was in San Francisco with Mandot.

RITCHIE BRINGS SUIT ON MOVING PICTURE RIGHTS

SAN FRANCISCO, July 11.—Lightweight Champion Willie Ritchie, through his attorney, Edward Lynch, brings suit against Billy Kyne and Laurence Meehan to restrain them from exhibiting moving pictures of the Ritchie-Rivers fight pending adjustment of Ritchie's rights in the proceeds.

Ritchie claims Kyne and Meehan have refused to live up to the terms of a verbal agreement whereby he was to have 50 per cent of the profits. Kyne and Meehan bought the rights of Graney and Rivers.

CARDINALS PURCHASE TWO FROM BATTLE CREEK CLUB

BATTLE CREEK, MICH., July 11. Pitcher Neihaus and Shortstop Callahan, of the local Southern Michigan League team, have been sold to the St. Louis Nationals. Neihaus is a left-hander who has won 18 games and lost 4 this year.

STOCK FOR WOLVERTON.

SACRAMENTO, CAL., July 11.—Harry Wolverton will probably be given a bunch of stock in the Sacramento Baseball Club next year as a reward for his efficient leadership. This was said yesterday by W. L. Curtin, president of the club, speaking at Sacramento as the representative of Jack Atkin.

SMITH MEETS ALLEN IN SEMI FOR THE TITLE

KNOXVILLE, TENN., July 11.—The advance dope was shattered here Thursday when R. Y. Smith, of Nashville, defeated "Peck" Huggins, of Nashville, in the semifinals of the State championship tournament, 6-3, 6-4.

Since John Allen, Jr., of Knoxville, defeated Parish, of Nashville, Allen was slated to meet Smith, of Nashville, in the finals Friday.

The match between Allen and Parish was a very pretty affair, and the score was 3-6, 6-3, 6-3. However, more interest was centered in the Smith-Huggins match. Smith showed superior work all around, his smashing drives down the side lines proving Huggins' stumbling block.

The championship match between Carlton Y. Smith, of Atlanta, present title holder, and the winner of the tournament will be played Saturday afternoon at 4 o'clock.

SAIL CANOES TO-DAY FOR INTERNATIONAL TROPHY

NEW YORK, July 11.—Canoe sailing as an international sport has again been revived, and this afternoon the first contest between James A. Newman, of the Winchester Canoe Club, Winchester, Mass., representing the New York Canoe Club, of this city, and Ralph P. Britton, of the Gananoque Canoe Club of Gananoque, Ont., will be sailed.

The races will be held in Gravesend Bay, and the international cup, first put up by the New York Canoe Club in 1887, will go to the winner of the best two out of three races. The second race will be sailed tomorrow, and in case of a tie score on the two races, the third will be sailed on Monday.

GAMBLING ON BASEBALL FLOURISHES IN ST. LOUIS

ST. LOUIS, July 11.—Organized gambling on baseball is flourishing in St. Louis. Reporters have discovered that cigar stores, saloons and other places of business make no secret of the fact that they are selling pools unmolested by the police. Anybody is welcome to buy chances.

BARNES OFF TO AUSTRALIA.

MILWAUKEE, WIS., July 11.—John S. Barnes, formerly a well-known baseball man and owner of several clubs in the Middle West and on the coast, expects to sail to-morrow from Vancouver for Australia to organize a baseball league in that country. He will arrange to take two American teams over there this fall.

FOOD FOR SPORT FANS

By GEORGE E. PHAIR.

A LA BASEBALL.

A pugilist was putting up a gallant little scrap
And placing bumps and bruises on the other fellow's map,
When suddenly he halted in the middle of a swing
And turned around and jumped the ropes and beat it from the ring.
They asked him to return again, but asked him all in vain.
"There's nothing doing," he replied; "I've got to catch a train."

A football team was fighting on a bloody battle ground,
And from the rooters in the stands there came a mighty sound,
When suddenly they halted in the middle of a play
And calmly put their sweaters on and calmly walked away.
The rooters loudly called them back, but called them all in vain,
"There's nothing doing," they replied; "we've got to catch a train."

We hope, for humanity's sake, that the National League will not amputate the Cub owner from that $1,000 without handing him an anaesthetic.

If Mr. Evers were to be suspended for a year and a half we fear that Mr. McGraw would not succumb to excessive grief.

We fail to understand how Hugh Jennings has the heart to release a youth with a name like Pepioski.

This is one of those rare intervals during which Doc Roller and Charlie Cutler are not matched for an alleged battle on the mat.

One scarce can blame Gunboat Smith and Jim Flynn if they can not refrain from laughing when they read that they are matched for the world's heavyweight championship.

Motorcyclists all remind us

And, departing, leave behind us
Forty-seven kinds of smells.

It is rumored that the Yanks are dissatisfied with Frank Chance. If Frank Chance is not dissatisfied with the Yanks he ought to be.

Mr. Chance is a wonderful guy if he can reflect upon the Chase deal without delivering unto himself a swift kick.

Mr. Comiskey has established diplomatic relations with Mr. Bryan, but there is no truth in the rumor that he has taken to unfermented grape juice.

If Mr. Bryan can induce the National Commission to drink grape juice it will be recorded as the greatest diplomatic feat in the archives of history.

The practice of stalling to avoid a beating may be inside baseball, but it has a distinct shade of yellowness.

A motorcyclist in Pittsburg jumped the track and was rendered defunct, thereby making the meet a grand success.

Australia may beat us at cricket, but it will be at least a couple of years before the world's series is held in Melbourne.

We shudder to think of Connie Mack's mental strain as he hesitates between Bender and Plank for the first game of the world's series.

KICKS.

When the game is going badly you can bet your final dollar
That the gent who entered on a pass puts up the loudest holler.

Reds and Cubs Hold Confab With Fultz

NEW YORK, July 11.—President David Fultz, of the Baseball Players' Fraternity, held a confab with practically all the members of the Cincinnati Reds and the Chicago Cubs yesterday. It appears that Fultz has been holding these conferences with all the Western teams of the major leagues as they have visited this city in turn. He has been collecting the annual dues, in addition to laying plans for the future.

The Reds and Cubs at yesterday's meeting were informed that the fraternity would soon be asked to take a firm stand on the question of reduction of salaries of players sent from the major to the minor leagues. It was pointed out that the case of Borton, released by the New York Americans to the Jersey City club, was typical of the so-called abuse. Fultz declared, it is said, that the fraternity should demand legislation from organized baseball that would make it impossible to cut a player's salary in midseason. He argued that if a minor league club refused to pay a major league salary, the club releasing a player to a smaller league be forced to make up the difference for the balance of the playing season.

CHAPMAN LEADS AMERICAN IN TWO-PLY PLAYS

FANS are not in the habit of ruining their eyesight in studying the fielding records of the major league players, and there are few members of the Baseball Writers' Association of America who build up feature stories regarding the defensive work of the pastimers. Eddie Collins, guardian for the White Elephants of the middle cushion, is acknowledged by all experts to be the "keystone king" of the American League, but when any authority sets out to prove that the Columbia graduate is the peer of his contemporaries he never rushes to the guide books for statistical information on the subject.

A good way to find out how swift a fielder is, some persons think, is to take the number of double plays a man starts. Up to July 1 the American Leaguers had rid their systems of 380 dual killings, the man who started most of them being Collins. He took the initiative in sixteen of his team's two-ply massacres.

The Johnsonites' swiftest shortstop, according to the performances in the Double Play League, is Ray Chapman, of the Naps. He inaugurated a dozen plays that resulted in the retirement of a pair of runners. In figuring Chapman's speed as an inaugurator of double plays, it should be remembered that he has been often absent from the Naps' line-up because of injuries, and it is possible that had he played all season long, as has Collins, he would have started just as many two-ply killings.

Baker Leads Third-Sackers.

The third basemen who have started the greatest number of double plays are Frank Baker, of the White Elephants, and Ivan Olson, of the Naps. Each man has inaugurated six. George Stovall, of the Browns, shows the way to the first-sackers, having been the pioneer in seven dual massacres.

In the battery department there is a tie for the honors, Catchers Schalk, of the White Sox and Agnew, of the Brown Hose, each having started four. So have Pitchers Eddie Cicotte, of Chicago, and Walter Johnson, of Washington.

Shotten Tops Outfielders.

Tris Speaker, of Boston, who won the Chalmers American League trophy in 1912, and Ty Cobb, of Detroit, who secured the car the two previous season, generally are considered the two smartest outfielders in the junior league, but thus far this season neither man has made nearly the number of double plays that Bert Shotten, of the Browns, has to his credit. Shotten has taken the initiative in eight two-ply killings, which would indicate that he has been making as many sensational catches as the high-priced fly-chasers of the Detroit and Boston clubs. Bert started two double plays in the game of June 10, Duffy Lewis, left fielder of the Red Sox, having earlier in the campaign done the same thing. J. Gladstone Graney, of the Naps, is the lone American League outfielder to pull off an unassisted double play, he having accomplished this feat on June 1.

The Browns, just at present, are leading in manufacturing double plays, with the Washingtons a close second, and the World's Champion Red Sox last.

ROUMANIANS ALSO OPEN WAR ON THE BULGARIANS

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, July 11.—Intense anxiety has been caused in diplomatic circles of the European capitals by the action of Roumania in declaring war on Bulgaria. The dispute between the two countries dates back to the end of the war between Turkey and the "allies," when Bulgaria refused to give up territory demanded by Roumania as a price of the latter's neutrality.

Roumania is believed to have nearly half a million men under arms, although some of these have not been concentrated.

The powers will take concerted action, it is believed, to put an end to Bulgarian-Roumanian hostilities before they become general. Czar Ferdinand is anxious for peace for the campaign against Servia, and Greece has been disastrous to the Bulgarian nation.

Belief existed in diplomatic quarters that Bulgaria will not offer any armed resistance against Roumania unless it becomes absolutely necessary.

5,000 Roumanians Invade Bulgaria.

PARIS, July 11.—A force of 5,000 Roumanian troops have crossed the Danube River and invaded Bulgaria.

King Charles has promulgated a proclamation of war against the Bulgarians but it has not yet been approved by the Roumanian congress, which will assemble next Wednesday.

The occupation of a considerable portion of Bulgarian territory by the Roumanians is imminent.

Bulgars Try to Influence Turkey.

CONSTANTINOPLE, July 11.—Bulgaria is trying to provoke Turkey to reopen the war against the Balkan allies in order to save herself from humiliating defeat by Servia and Greece, according to the belief in official circles here to-day.

Word was received here to-day that Bulgarian troops had set fire to Midia, an important port on the Black Sea. It was said that a number of Turks had been massacred there by the Bulgarians.

Greek Army Sweeps All Before It.

ATHENS, July 11.—All of Southern Macedonia now is in the hands of the Greeks. The important city of Demir Hissar was occupied today.

The Greek army is sweeping all before it on its eastern march, and there is a possibility that it may penetrate as far as Adrianople.

Rake With 40 Teeth Given to President

WINSTED, CONN., July 11.—Following a custom inaugurated by his grandfather, who presented to Abraham Lincoln a hay rake, Marshall W. Stedman, a rake maker, of Tyringham, Mass., has sent a rake with 40 teeth, the whole handsomely grained and varnished, to President Wilson.

President Wilson's rake is smaller than the one which Stedman sent to President Taft.

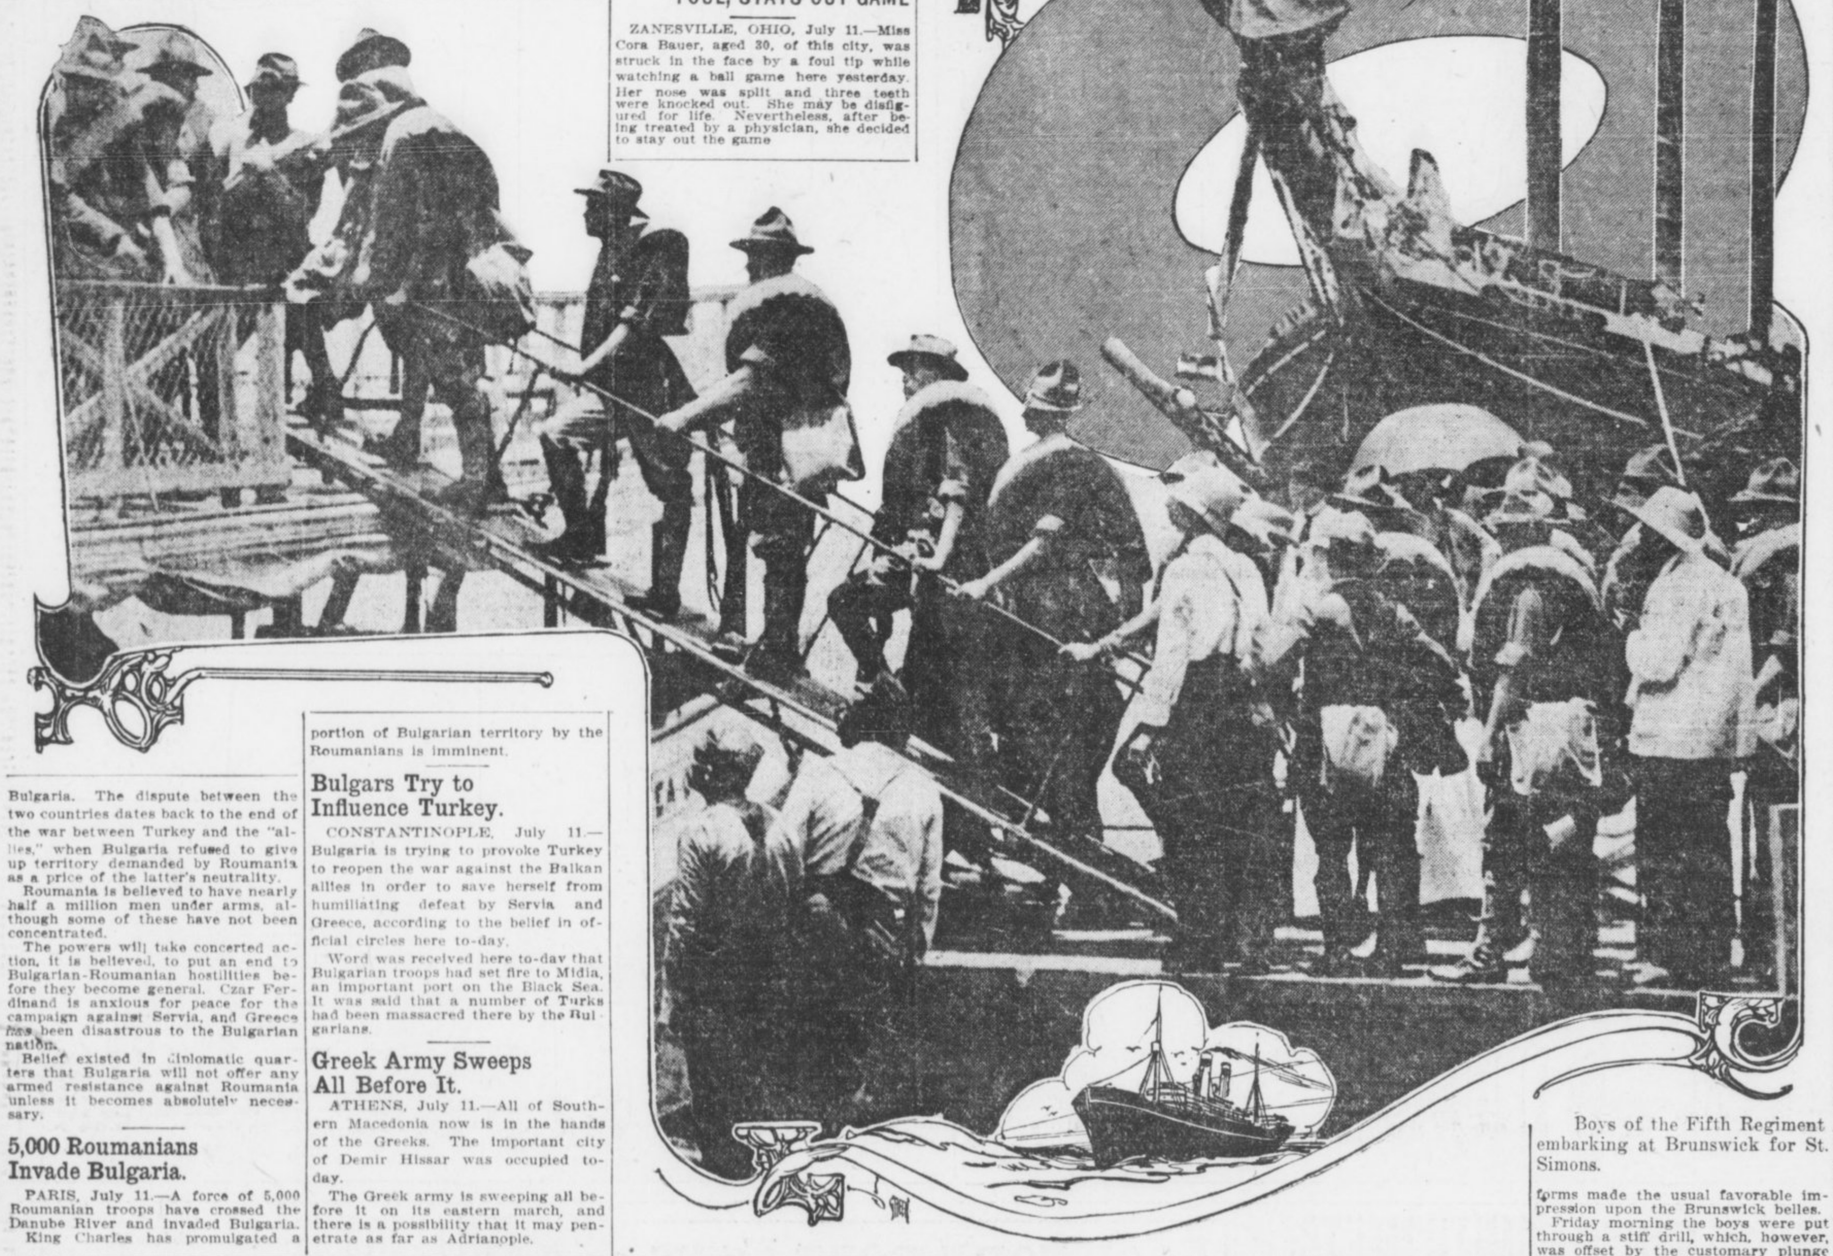
She may be disfigured for life. Nevertheless, after being treated by a physician, she decided to stay out the game

600 ATLANTA SOLDIERS IN CAMP AT ST. SIMONS



Boys of the Fifth Regiment embarking at Brunswick for St. Simons.

Soldier Boys Are Enjoying Maneuvers Immensely—Eagerly Await Governor's Visit.

ST. SIMONS ISLAND, July 11.—Approximately 600 Atlanta boys, members of the Fifth Georgia Regiment, encamped here, entered to-day upon the third day of the annual encampment.

That the soldier boys are enjoying themselves to the utmost, regardless of the fact that the dingy little guardhouse is the scene of much activity, as a result of the appearance of some of the boys in civilian clothes, is evidenced on all sides.

Thursday night the boys had the first big time of the week at the regiment dance at St. Simons Hotel. Colonel Pomeroy and members of the staff were in attendance, in addition to scores of people from Brunswick. The brass buttons and braided uniforms made the usual favorable impression upon the Brunswick belles.

Friday morning the boys were put through a stiff drill, which, however, was offset by the customary plunge in the surf, one of the chief delights of the camp life. Late in the afternoon the usual dress parade will be held, featured by the appearance of Colonel Pomeroy and his full staff.

The boys are all in the best of health and spirits, and as a result the hospital corps has little to do.

The big event of the week will be the visit of Governor John M. Slaton, ex-Governor Brown and United States Army officers Saturday and Sunday. The distinguished party will be met at the Brunswick depot by a committee of citizens, which will act as an escort to the camp of the Fifth.

SEARCHING SIDELIGHTS ON POLITICS IN GEORGIA

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

Mr. Slater, of Bryan, in explaining his vote in the House Thursday for the new county of Barrow, said he viewed new county propositions as good things rather than undesirable things, and that every time one was mentioned he undertook to find a reason for voting for it rather than against it.

Mr. Slater declared he not only favored the enlargement of the present House of Representatives because of Georgia's growth and progress, but he emphatically believed the Senate membership might well be doubled.

"In the Senate it is possible for a handful of men—fifteen—to block proposed constitutional amendments, even though the entire House of Representatives might favor them, and the remainder of the Senate—a very heavy majority—also might favor them," said Mr. Slater.

"I am not criticising the present Senate—it is, so far as I know, a fair-minded body—but it is too small. The power of individual Senators is too great.

"I favor new counties everywhere in the State where material conditions really justify—and I am satisfied there is more than one such locality in this State now."

Two members of the House—Messrs. Wohlwender, of Muscogee, and Sheppard, of Sumter—voted for Barrow County, each explaining that he did so absolutely on the plain merits of the proposition, although neither heretofore has been an advocate of the new county idea. Indeed, this was Mr. Wohlwender's first vote for a new county in any Legislature.

Candler County, which is to come up soon, generally is looked upon as another good proposition, likely to go through. Beyond these two, however, the guessing gets rather scattering and far between.

It is evident enough, however, from the Barrow vote that the present Legislature is not particularly hostile to the new county idea—and is, at least, willing to give all proposed new counties a fair and open hearing.

Ward Allen, Chatham County's famous Nimrod, who is a candidate for appointment to succeed Jesse Mercer, the incumbent, as State Game and Fish Commissioner, has been in Atlanta for the past week in the interest of his candidacy. He returned to Savannah Thursday to look after some personal business.

Allen had nothing to say before leaving regarding his candidacy, further than that the Governor had not yet taken the matter up officially, and probably would not do so for several weeks, maybe not until as late as September 1.

Allen says he is satisfied with conditions as they are at present, and hopes at least to see a South Georgia man get the place.

Ed Wohlwender, of Muscogee, "the Flying Dutchman" of the House of Representatives, again cinched his right to that title Thursday when he put through the very first general bill of the session of 1913-14.

The act was one amending and perfecting the insurance laws in a minor particular, but Wohlwender made a great speech advocating its passage, nevertheless.

When the vote was taken, the bill passed by 148 to 1.

"Wonder who the blazes that one lonesome party is, anyway," said Wohlwender, after the vote was announced. "Some folks are just too contrary for anything. This is the first general bill to pass, and I would like to have seen it go through unanimously."

Wohlwender was unhappy about that one obstreperous and unruly member, and grieved over that lost vote more than he rejoiced over the passage of his measure.

The committee appointed to draft the commission government bill for the city of Columbus, to be presented to the General Assembly of Georgia for enactment, has completed its labors and has a bill, which it is believed will be entirely satisfactory.

In order to avoid any chance of contest over the act of the Legislature a committee of lawyers will pass on the various phases of the bill. It then will be placed in the hands of the Muscogee County delegation in the General Assembly.

Former Representative R. A. Denny, of Rome, one of North Georgia's best-known attorneys, is in Atlanta for a few days.

Mr. Denny does not come to Atlanta often nowadays, but when he does he gets the glad hand, palm up, from many directions!

BEARISH ADVICES DEPRESS COTTON

Lower Temperatures and Weakness of Summer Months Cause General Selling.

NEW YORK, July 11.—At the opening of the cotton market the feeling was generally bearish and prices were unchanged to 4 points lower than Thursday's final. The ring was inclined to sell on favorable weather conditions, rains being fairly well distributed over the central and eastern belt.

The Government records show a temperature average in Oklahoma of 98 degrees, which is 4 degrees lower. Temperature average in Texas was 100 degrees, with five stations 100, four stations reporting 102 degrees, nine stations 104 and four stations 106 degrees.

This, together with favorable reports on the condition of the crop issued by Cordill and Habersham King, resulted in a general selling movement after the call. Before the call, however, July and December rallied 2 to 3 points from the opening range.

The ring, Wall Street and brokers representing spot houses sold the market heavily, resulting in prices losing 8 to 12 points from last night's close. Both July and August touched 12c. Summer positions were given no support. This was in part explained by the fact that late months reflected favorable weather and crop news.

During the late forenoon, prices recovered 2 to 7 points of the early decline through more active buying, which seemed to come mainly from a few scattered shorts. The selling, however, continued general.

At the close the market was steady with prices at a net decline of 3 to 11 points from the final quotations of Thursday.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, July 11.—Weather developments overnight were again favorable. The map shows fair weather in Texas, cloudy elsewhere; cooler with a fine general precipitation in the Central and Eastern States. Indications are for partly cloudy and showery weather in the belt, except fair in the West half of Texas.

There is a cool wave now heading for the Western States, which should bring general rains and cooler weather on Texas within the next six days, preceded, as usual, by a short heat spell of no consequence.

The market was inclined to open lower on good reports concerning the crop and the favorable weather prospects, but controlling influences in New York at once advanced August prices and by this show of power checked all selling, with the consequence that the market remained idle around last night's closing figures.

The Turner Crop Bureau, of Memphis, makes the condition 82.5 on July 8. The report says that the great producing area of Texas is practically free from the weevil pest. The market weakened in the second hour on an announcement from Houston of a second new bale from San Benito, shipped for sale to New Orleans, on Government record showing a temperature average for Oklahoma of only 98, against 102 the past two days, a bearish into-sight forecast and small forwardings from Liverpool to the mills, only 37,000, against 62,000 bales last year.

COTTON MARKET OPINIONS.

Morris H. Rothschild & Co.: We anticipate no pronounced decline and prefer purchases on moderate recessions.

Sternberger, Sim & Co.: We do not look for any big change one way or the other for the immediate future.

Logan & Bdyan: We are disposed to the view that the long side on sharp declines will possess the greatest attractions.

Hayden, Stone & Co.: For the moment, operators buy on declines, anticipating recoveries as long as stocks of cotton are so small in New York.

Miller & Co.: Sell cotton on the hard spots.

COTTON GOSSIP

NEW YORK, July 11.—The only feature of the market this morning was the weakness of the summer months, due to scattered selling, some of it on July notices. New crop sympathized to some extent and was also sold moderately on predictions for unsettled weather in Texas, and the favorable Turner and Cordill reports. Business was of small volume because of the holidays abroad. No important change is probable for the balance of the week. —Anderson.

* * *

J. B. Turner, of Memphis, reports the following condition of the cotton crop on July 8, by states: North Carolina, 77; South Carolina, 74; Georgia, 76; Alabama, 81; Mississippi, 84; Tennessee, 87; Arkansas, 85; Louisiana, 82; Oklahoma, 45; Texas, 87.

Where declines are shown from the condition of two weeks ago, the loss seems due to an imperfect distribution of the moisture supply. In Texas boll weevils are more evident than at this date last year. East of a line down from Runge to Tyler, weevils are sufficiently numerous to attract notice, but as yet have done little damage. West of that line there are very few or none. It is clear, therefore, that the general producing area of the state is practically free from the pest.—J. B. Turner.

* * *

Dallas wires: "Texas—Clear and pleasant. Oklahoma—Partly cloudy; no rain."

* * *

According to quoted views of members of the Georgia Legislature, the crop outlook for Georgia, which ranks next to Texas, is the largest producer of cotton in the belt. They say that conditions are much better than the previous season, and if the present outlook is fulfilled the yield will rival the record crop of 1911, when Georgia picked 2,794,000 bales.

NEW ORLEANS, July 11.—Hayward & Clark: The weather map is favorable and shows generally fair in Texas; no rain; cloudy rest of the belt, with no general rains in Central and Eastern States. Indications are for partly cloudy and showery weather; also in eastern part of Texas, and cool wave coming on the belt, which should bring general rains on Texas in about six days.

The New Orleans Times-Democrat says: "Very hot weather covers the western cotton belt and friends of the staple are exploiting high temperatures in Texas and Oklahoma as good reason why the cotton market should continue steady. Wednesday and Thursday the high temperature average for the State of Oklahoma was 102 degrees. Yesterday two Texas stations reported high temperatures, ranging between 100 and 106 degrees, seven of which were 104. Such temperatures, if sustained many days, would, of course, play havoc with the crop as well as with the boll weevil, but as yet reports of Texas boll weevils are more evident than at this date last year. East of a line down from Runge to Tyler, weevils are sufficiently numerous to attract notice, but as yet have done little damage. West of that line there are very few or none. It is clear, therefore, that the general producing area of the state is practically free from the pest."

KENTUCKY CROP PROSPECTS RUINED BY LONG DROUTH

LOUISVILLE, KY., July 11.—Drouth during the last month has ruined the prospects for the best crops Kentucky ever produced. The report of the Department of Agriculture of the State said on July 11 that prospects for record crops were splendid.

The report made public to-day said every crop in Kentucky will be short.

DULLNESS CAUSES BREAK IN STOCKS

Fluctuations Are Narrow—Sales Quite Liberal at Present Level. Investment Holdings Grow.

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, July 11.—Considerable irregularity was shown in the price list at the opening of the stock market to-day. The railroad situation in the East, involving a possible strike, caused some selling on account of reports that the general committee, which will meet in this city to-morrow, will probably refuse to entertain Federal intervention. On the other hand, optimistic news came from the Balkans.

Among the losses were Amalgamated Copper, ⅛; Canadian Pacific, ⅝; American Car and Foundry, ½; American Telephone and Telegraph, ¼; Southern Pacific, ⅛; United States Steel common, ⅝; Chino Copper, ¼; Northern Pacific, ⅜; Union Pacific, ¼.

The advances included Erie ¼, Atchison ⅛, Reading ⅛ and New York Central ⅛. New York Central turned weak, declining ¼.

The curb market was dull and easy. Americans in London were quiet above New York parity.

In the late forenoon trading was sluggish and price movements were almost at a standstill. Atchison yielded ⅛ under small sales and concessions were noted in a few other issues. Slight fractional declines were recorded in Amalgamated Copper, Steel common, Lehigh Valley, Northern Pacific, Atchison, Canadian Pacific and Guggenheim. At noon trading was very dull with prices unchanged. Call money loaned and renewed at 2¼ per cent.

STOCK GOSSIP

The New York Financial Bureau says: "We would buy the standard issues conservatively where good opportunities are offered with the intention to accept moderate profits. Trading movements in the general list will be seen to-day. Information channels are expecting further improvement."

* * *

Look for a profesional traders' market for the present. Would buy the active issues on any fair reaction for moderate profits. There is a good demand for standard dividend-paying stocks on all declines for investment. The odd lot buying by people of moderate means continues, and it looks as if speculative holdings are gradually being taken over by the investors throughout the country.—Potter.

* * *

Estimates of the quantity of Canadian Pacific stock liquidated by European sellers Wednesday ran as high as 20,000 shares. Canadian Pacific is about the highest-priced stock listed on the market and securities of such prices are usually the first ones sold if money is badly needed.

* * *

The weakness in Canadian Pacific stock during the past few days was said to be the result of the rumor that $60,000,000 new stock was to be issued. This, however, was officially denied.

* * *

Although the dullness in the market continues, there are few stocks for sale at the present level. Speculative holdings have decreased and investment holdings have increased considerably within the last thirty days. This is usually a favorable sign, as in the past under these conditions prices have advanced when activity begins.—Potter.

Wool Sales Reflect Extended Holiday

BOSTON, July 11.—Holiday week had a depressing effect upon the local wool market and total sales again dropped below a million pounds, with no especial features. Much interest is manifested in the buying in Montana, where higher prices still are being paid than appear justified by market conditions here. Some of the leading houses are holding back a little. The weakness developed by cross breeds at the London sale attracted attention; also the firmness of fine merinos. Tariff legislation and the holiday season at the mills form a bad combination in the wool trade, and the effect is shown in the falling off in both sales and shipments.

Receipts of wool in pounds for the week ending and including Wednesday were as follows:

	1913.	1912.
Domestic	5,042,642	11,638,729
Foreign	431,205	2,566,318
Totals	5,473,847	14,205,047

Total receipts of 5,473,847 pounds, compared with 4,716,447 pounds for the preceding week, of which 4,534,887 pounds were domestic wools.

Receipts in pounds from and including January 1, 1913, as compared with the corresponding period in 1912 were as follows:

	1913.	1912.
Domestic	53,607,375	92,178,305
Foreign	41,550,200	75,104,006

HOGS SELL AT WIDE RANGE.

CHICAGO, July 11.—Hogs sold at a wide range of 8.50@9.20 to-day. The 9c line the speculators made a market that was higher than yesterday's close, but a large deal was promised on grades that affected only the packer outlet. There were 68,000 at 11 points against 77,000 a year ago.

Good cattle were strong to 10c higher, owing to the presence of a few urgent orders. Others were neglected. Live muttons were strong, $.25 being paid freely for good lambs.

MILLER-COTTER COTTON LETTER.

MEMPHIS, July 11.—Good weather and crop accounts were of some influence in the day's decline. A few notices circulated on summer months caused some depression. The market is dull, but it is becoming increasingly difficult to sustain prices in the face of the steady improvement in the crop, which is reaching a stage of more definite assurance of yield.

Shorts in summer months have been eliminated and further manipulation promises little profit.

MODERN MILLER GRAIN REVIEW.

ST. LOUIS, July 11.—Weather favorable for winter wheat harvest. Heavy rains, which have prevailed over some areas, did no damage to wheat in shock, but this occurs more or less every year. Cutting is about completed and thrashing well under way. Quality of winter good and hard winter turning out better than expected. Movement to market continues free, yet it is evident that a further decline in price would cause a holding policy.

ALL GRAIN PRICES EASIER AT CLOSE

Losses of More Than Cent Made by Wheat, Corn and Oats. Provisions Off.

CHICAGO, July 11.—Lower prices were seen in all the grain pits at the close to-day. These losses were 1@1⅛ for wheat, 1@1⅛ for corn and 1@1¼ for oats. The provision market was lower in sympathy with the break in grain. The bids sent out on wheat to the country last night were lower than on several previous days and the transactions were smaller in consequence.

On the other hand, the business in cash wheat on export and shipping account was comparatively small, only 130,000 bushels changing hands at Chicago.

Cash corn sales were 339,000 bushels and oats 320,000 bushels. Vessel room was chartered for 400 bushels corn to go to Buffalo. Clearances of breadstuffs from the seaboard for the week were 5,176,000 bushels, compared with 2,495,000 bushels a year ago. Clearances of corn were only 32,000 bushels, against 126,000 bushels last year.

Grain Notes

The Chicago Inter Ocean says: Wheat traders regarded the rally yesterday as only natural following a four days' decline. Bears are looking for lower prices with a continuation of the liberal hedging sales. One cash handler looks for a free movement, believing tight money will force the grain to terminals and export business will be the best possible thing for the country.

Corn traders were mixed last night, most of them being bearish. Many of the longs have unloaded. The bulls figure that the market is heavily oversold and had reports from Kansas that the crop has been damaged by the recent high temperatures.

There are many bears in oats who believe that the rally yesterday was only temporary. Cutting of early oats has already begun in Illinois and yields are said to be light. Chief argument of bears is that stocks of old oats are too large for a big bull movement at present.

* * *

Grand Forks, N. Dak., wires: "Rain fell from four to six hours yesterday and last night on the parched fields throughout almost the entire northern part of North Dakota. The downpour began in the Minot District about noon and struck Red River Valley about 4 o'clock. More than an inch fell in places. Three days of hot winds had left the soil without moisture and caused heavy damage to crops. With the heavy rain, however, the crop is in condition to weather the remainder of the season without serious difficulty."

* * *

Bartlett, Frazier & Co.: "Wheat—The weather map shows general rains over the entire spring wheat country, parts of Iowa and Nebraska. The country continues to offer wheat to arrive in liberal quantities and this factor creates a good deal of local bearishness.

"Corn—With the exception of rain in Nebraska and Iowa, there was no rain in the corn belt, with fairly high temperatures again in the southwest. Judging from the strength shown late yesterday, indications point to considerable liquidation having taken place and a fair short interest created. We look for light receipts and a good demand.

"Oats—There seems nothing bullish in the news at the moment, but the market has been a pretty good evening up during the recent decline. Covering yesterday brought about a good rally from the low point.

"Provisions—Receipts of hogs considerably under the estimates, with opening prices 5c lower at the start. July pork is very strong and a fair outstanding short interest is indicated."

Spot Houses Favor Clarke's Amendment

NEW YORK, July 11.—Advices from telegrams and letters which are current, state that many, if not a majority, of the large spot cotton firms and many mills favor the passage of the Clarke amendment, believing it will enable them to buy their spot cotton from the planter cheaper than at present.

It said that the open competition and broadcast distribution of market information and quotations kept the producer of cotton well posted under ruling prices from hour to hour and day to day. This would not be the case with the adoption of the Clarke amendment, as it would leave the cotton markets in the hands of simply the few spot dealers.

With the adoption of the Clarke amendment there would be a fixed tax of 50 cents a bale for hedging contracts. When the local cotton buyer in interior towns buys his cotton from the farmer his bid price would be low enough to enable him to hedge his contract and pay the 50 cents a bale tax, and the farmer, therefore, would indirectly have to pay this tax. If the head and officials of the Farmers' Union could realize what this amendment means, and would look at it from purely a business standpoint, they would oppose the Clarke amendment and try to introduce some bill that would perpetuate the exchange and encourage competition that makes a broad market for cotton. This tax reduces the value of cotton as a collateral with the bank as protection in all lines of business has become a necessity.

Follow Advice and Eliminate the Drones From Your Flock.

It seems to me we can not overestimate the importance of finding out whether our hens are paying a good profit or not; and which ones are the drones and cutting down the profit. The only way to do this is to keep a record. Under present conditions, when almost everything that goes to help produce a dozen eggs, comes the necessity for stricter economy and the knowing of what it takes to produce the eggs. We must turn over a new leaf and open an account with the hens. We must charge them with what they consume, and at the same time give them credit for all eggs laid at the market price, whether they are sold or consumed by the family. It is not much work, if you but have a little account book in which to keep it. Five minutes a day will do it. It may pay you to go to the little extra trouble in ascertaining just where you stand.

The owner who has, by the use of the trap-nest, found out the egg-producing abilities of his flock, has taken the first step toward separating the unprofitable hen from the profitable one, a thing that every one who keeps hens should be able to tell or know.

We are often asked the question as to what constitutes a profitable hen? It is one that will pay for her feed, interest on the investment of roosting house, labor taken to care for her, and a profit besides. Of course, the cost of feeding a hen will vary quite a little, owing to the different sections of the country in which it is kept. Feed is quite a little cheaper in some places than others. It is but little trouble to count the cost of feeding ten or twenty hens. If you buy the feed, it is easily put down. If you are raising your own feed, simply measure out a barrel or two of it, putting down the price it is worth, then go to work feeding it.

Farmers are beginning to appreciate the worth of the really laying hen. They are beginning to find out that it does not pay to even harbor one that is too old to lay well or that never did lay much. All such should be cut right out of the game. And there is no way so good to determine that fact as by the trap-nest and the little record book.

With the ever and rapidly-increasing values of farm lands it is but natural that the farmer should look about him for some plan by which he can increase his income without greatly increasing his farm expenses, or investing in more land to do it with. The farmer has this very factor in the hen, if she is a good one. And there are good ones if we will but take the trouble to get acquainted with her. There are but few farms in the country but what have from one to three acres of land going to waste, or rather that are not being utilized. This is about the house and outbuildings. If this could be fenced and subdivided and a lot of good hens located therein it would soon begin to give revenue rather than be an expense to keep free from weeds and trash. I do not think it advisable for the farmer to try to run all to poultry, but just a hint to them that may help them to raise money for the taxes and various odds and ends that take the cash, leaving the regular farm crops in tact for other purposes. Tests show us that hens have made a record of 200 eggs per year; some have done even better than that, but a good many have done that well. Now it is an old saying that what has been done can be done again, so let us not fool away our time keeping hens that will only give us the old farm average of 75 eggs per year. That kind just about pays for its keep, so that if we get rid of them and keep the 150 to 200-egg kind then we get the profit that is due us. A flock of good, thoroughbred hens, say 300, should give us a profit of $400 to $500. Of course, you read of people making $500 from ten hens and a rooster, but that is from real fancy stock in which there is all kinds of possibilities, but on the other hand, there is the chance that you will not make anything from them. We have reference to the commercial kind, well managed; but it can not be done with the hit-or-miss scrub kind. They are too much like the Irishman's flea, you get your finger on them and they are not there.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Wide Range Is Shown In Realty Transfers

Announcements Include $85,750 Exchange, Sales of Land Lots in Fulton and DeKalb, Peachtree Buys.

An exchange involving 42 North Side city lots, a 1,750-acre farm in South Georgia and $85,750 in money, the purchase of 206 1-4 acres in North Fulton County and 203 acres in DeKalb, a transfer of business property at Buckhead and announcement of a $25,000 building on South Forsyth Street featured Friday's real estate news.

John H. Maddox, of the Smith & Ewing real estate agency, effected an exchange of properties between Dr. Joel T. Daves, of that agency, and George L. Patterson, of Valdosta, whereby the former gave 42 residence lots, beginning at the southeast corner of State and West Tenth Streets, and valued at $42,000, for a 1,750-acre farm in Lowndes County, valued at $43,700, or $25 an acre, and paid the differences, $1,750, in cash.

The North Side lots comprise about four blocks and front on Tenth, Eighth and State Streets, Peachtree Place and Ridge Avenue. Mr. Patterson has placed them with Mr. Maddox for resale, and Dr. Daves will cut his South Georgia farm into 100-acre tracts and offer them to immigrants. The sale indicates that South Georgians are willing to trust Atlanta real estate investments, and that, on the other hand, Atlantans recognize the opportunity in South Georgia colonization.

North Fulton Acreage Bought.

C. C. Foster and S. Y. Stribling, of Cobb County, and G. B. Thomason, of Jeff Davis, have sold to Morris Brandon and Ben J. Conyers three separate acreage tracts, aggregating 206 1-2 acres, in the upper portion of North Fulton County, north of Oak Grove, for $10,312, or at the rate of $50 an acre. This is in land lots 86 and 127 of the Seventeenth District, and is known as lots 1, 2 and 3 of the William E. Brightwell subdivision. A parcel 14 by 16 feet in lot 1 was reserved.

DeKalb Acreage Transfer.

Another large acreage deal has been consummated. Mrs. S. E. L. Ivey, of DeKalb, has sold to M. W. Reid and others, executors of the estate of the late J. D. Kilpatrick, 40 acres on the east side of land lot 15, Seventeenth District, and also 40 acres in DeKalb County; and W. T. Ivey, of DeKalb, has sold to same 23 acres in land lot 15, on the north line of said land lot 799 feet west of the east line thereof, and 54 acres in the southeast corner of land lot 16, and 46 acres in DeKalb County.

The total is 203 acres. That conveyed by Mrs. Ivey was sold for $3,800, and that by Mr. Ivey, $5,800.

Buckhead Transfer.

John G. Burckhardt has conveyed to B. F. and A. C. Burdett the triangle at the intersection of the Peachtree and Roswell Roads, for $15,000. The transaction was handled by George P. Moore and is understood to have been in the nature of a swap.

The frontage on Peachtree is 152 feet, on Roswell Road 150 and the base line is 72. Mr. Burckhardt bought this some months ago from Mrs. Lena Swift Huntley for about $12,000.

To Erect $25,000 Building.

There will be no nine-story business building for the present on the property of the D. Greenfield estate on South Forsyth Street, between Mitchell and Hunter Streets. A change of plans calls for a one-story and basement building to cost $25,000. Permit to build was issued Friday by Building Inspector Ed R. Hays.

The building has a foundation for nine stories, however, and it is probable that the estate will add to it later. Moise DeLeon is the contractor.

Interesting Loan Deed.

Joseph Loewus has given a loan deed to the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Company of Massachusetts for $37,500, borrowed on the Bass Dry Goods Company property at 18 West Mitchell Street, 48 1-2x140 feet. The Bass concern adjoins the McCroskey property at the northwest corner and was bought from the D. Greenfield estate some months ago by Mr. Loewus.

Lot Sales Total $9,000.

Fitzhugh Knox has announced the sale of six residence lots in his subdivision on South Moreland Avenue at an aggregate of $9,000. These sales have taken place since Mr. Knox started his fourteen bungalows in this section. The subdivision originally contained 41 lots, all but five of which have been sold.

Morris Brandon Sells.

J. B. Thompson has bought from Morris Brandon and others through the Smith & Ewing Real Estate Agency the northeast corner of Pine and Lovejoy Streets for $1,900 cash.

To Sell at Courthouse.

The Greene Realty Company will sell before the courthouse door Tuesday, August 5, the southwest corner of East Fair and Fraser Streets, 68 by 90 feet, for the estate of the late Dominico Gussi. The terms will be half cash and one and two years.

Not in Druid Hills.

In an account Thursday of the sale of 510 Briarcliff Road it was stated that this property was in Druid Hills. Briarcliff Road is in the Druid Hills section, but not in Druid Hills proper.

Buy on Peachtree.

Mrs. R. G. Warner has given E. A. Bancker, Jr., a warranty deed on a Peachtree property 162 feet north of Sixteenth Street for $10,500, 50 by 290 feet, this being lot 11, block 3, of Ansley Park, and Mr. Bancker has placed a $10,000 loan on it through the Home Life Insurance Company of New York. The place is described as 1096 Peachtree.

Interest in Electric Line.

A meeting of people interested in the proposed electric trunk line from Anderson, S. C., to Atlanta is expected to be called soon by the officials of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce, which body has received overtures from the Anderson Chamber. This road would connect up Atlanta with Greensboro, Winston-Salem, Anderson and Norfolk, if the plans of the Duke interests and the Anderson officials are carried out.

Real estate men are watching this development because of its possibilities in opening up new territory to the north of Atlanta and bringing in settlers from the other States.

Finish Peachtree in Three Weeks.

Repairs to Peachtree will be completed within three weeks, according to a statement of Shelby Smith, chairman of the Board of County Commissioners. The convicts have reached Peachtree Creek on their southward tour from Buckhead and have turned back to complete that part of the job. After finishing both sides they will begin at Peachtree Creek and work southward.

Chairman Smith declared that the machines now being used are capable of doing the work of 100 men, and that another labor-saving device, in the shape of a pulverizer, had been bought to break up the soil and road material. Hand labor is now being employed to do the pulverizing, and the work is necessarily slow.

Completing Healey Steel.

United States flags have been run up on the steel frame of the Healey Building, denoting that the first girders of the sixteenth and last above-ground story have been installed. This is a favorite performance among construction gangs—to hold an informal celebration when the last floor is reached.

Not only is the Healey Building going up fast in steel, but Stone Mountain granite has made its appearance at the base and soon will rise above the fences that inclose the structure. It will go 15 feet, where terra cotta will begin. Two stories are under ground.

William T. Healey, the owner, declares that although the building was two months late in starting, he is satisfied with the progress made.

Hurt Building's Arcade.

The unique entrance arcade of the Hurt Building is rapidly taking place. This is to be two stories high and is located in the apex of the triangular lot on which the structure stands, at the junction of Edgewood Avenue and Exchange Place. Handsome stone slabs are being put in place around the sides of the arcade. As for the rest of the building, it is progressing nicely. The exterior is almost completed, and soon the workmen will go inside to put on finishing touches.

Although the Hurt Building is not due to be opened before October 1, it is declared that leases have been signed for most of the space and that there will be no trouble filling the structure. The same is true of the Healey Building, which will not be completed until some time after January 1, 1914.

Some Day Babies Will Be Born Wise.

In Ages to Come Human Beings at Birth Will Know More Than Any Man Knows Now.

(Copyright, 1913.)

The most helpless and ignorant thing in the world is a new-born human being.

The most independent and wise thing in the world—in proportion to its ability—is a new-born mud wasp, or newly fledged sparrow.

That is because the human being is just in the beginning of its development, whereas the mud wasp, the ant and other insects have reached the highest development of which they are capable.

The saddest thing in the education of human beings is the fact that each child must begin at the beginning and learn everything for itself.

Each little baby learns to walk, learns to avoid the fire, learns to talk. The mind starts its life as a blank page, and everything must be written upon it. The child can not even learn by hearing from the father and mother of their mistakes. Each child must make its own mistakes, and can be taught only by experience.

But will that last forever?

When you see the lower forms of animal life giving birth to creatures fully equipped and independent, can you not believe that when the human race, practically just born on this planet, shall have lived here for a few hundreds of thousands or millions of years, that the human child will be born with all the material knowledge stored away, and have no work to do except the discovering of unknown truths, working in new fields?

We base this editorial upon an article by Sir William Ramsay, in the current number of Hearst's Magazine. We advise intelligent, thoughtful readers to get the magazine this month and every month. It is published for those who are interested in realities, those who are capable of thought.

In the article referred to, Sir William Ramsay describes both in the animal world and among human beings indications of a certain power of mind, of knowledge born in the newly created animal, apart from all teaching or experience.

He says, concerning the inhabitants of Burmah:

"Cases are known where a child, born of parents living in a village not their own, to which they had migrated, was able to recognize people, and to 'remember' events which had taken place in the native village of his parents, of which he could have had no direct knowledge. Is it possible that a memory for particular events is sometimes inherited?"

Then he says, of certain observations made upon swallows:

"Their nest was under the eaves; and for long, the parents fed and attended to their young brood. The day arrived for them to leave their nest; and without any practice, each fledgling dropped out of the nest, flew backward and forward, and without the least hesitation entered the nest, just like an old bird. The wonderful power of control of muscles, of guiding motion, and of correlation of brain and eye must have lain in the germ of these birds until the time for their use arrived. Examples of the sort might be given by the thousand; although the one mentioned is perhaps particularly striking."

It is extremely likely that the little boy of Burmah, a child bred for ages along the same limited line of thought, should have certain ideas and associations before birth strongly impressed upon it, and that these should be transmitted and appear in the child without any teaching.

There is no doubt that the children of savages recognize of their own accord the danger in poisonous reptiles and other animals to which the civilized child would be indifferent, except after the experience of a bite.

In the animal world the fact that the brain of the new animal is born with exact, wonderful knowledge is not disputed. And that fact is of intense interest to human beings who hope that the human race itself may develop one day in such a way as to have the children born with a ready-made education in excess of that which they now possess after years of schooling.

Suppose that a child could come into this world wise in proportion to its possibilities, as does the child of the mud wasp.

No baby mud wasp ever saw its own mother. The eggs are laid, and the mother who lays the eggs dies before they hatch.

Each new mud wasp begins its career as did Adam in the Garden of Eden, with nobody back of him so far as he knows.

When the mud wasp is ready she selects a good place to lay her eggs. Then she goes off and selects a fat caterpillar.

She intends that the caterpillar shall feed her young wasps when the latter hatch out. She puts that caterpillar beside the eggs that she has laid, covers up the eggs and the caterpillar, and goes away, leaving food for the young, unborn wasps, as some human mother might go out for a day's work leaving bread and butter on the table and saying, "Johnny, eat that when you get hungry."

The wonderful thing is that the mother wasp does not KILL the caterpillar. If she killed it, it would be decayed and useless by the time the young wasps arrived.

The mother wasp seizes the caterpillar and carefully stings it just back of the head, between two of the little rings that form the caterpillar's body.

This stuns the caterpillar, makes it impossible for it to move or struggle, but does not kill it.

And while the wasp eggs are hatching, the caterpillar, rendered helpless, but not killed by the poison, lies there ALIVE waiting for the little wasps to hatch out and eat it.

Presently they hatch, they eat it, and scatter.

The wonderful thing is that each of these wasps, never having seen the thing done, never having had lessons from its mother, or from any school-teacher, goes out when the time comes, lays her eggs, finds a fat caterpillar, stings it exactly in the same scientific way, and puts it away with the eggs, never having been told how to do it.

What a fine thing it would be for the children of human beings if they could be born with knowledge of that kind. Some of them are born WITH UNUSUAL KNOWLEDGE.

Some have musical power, which means that the brain before birth developed knowledge of harmony.

Some children can compose music correctly when they are almost too young to read.

Other children have a phenomenal mathematical faculty and can do "sums" that would puzzle their elders.

So far, man's brain is really too big for his body.

He was a timid, frightened monkey-man, running away from everything, developing his brain rapidly in order to make up for physical weakness. He has been a thinking man only

WINIFRED BLACK

Writes on

A Woman Next Door

You Choose Your Friends, She Says, Because You Like Them, and Like Their Kind, Not Because Somebody Else Thinks You Ought to Like Them.

By WINIFRED BLACK.

I READ a brilliant story by a brilliant writer the other day.

Did you happen to read it, too?

It was about a woman who lived down "behind the tracks," in a country town. She was a woman who flaunted the streets in a gorgeous hat and expensive gowns. She wore bangle bracelets that jingled and rings that sparkled, and high-heeled slippers and "open-worked" stockings, and the men grinned sheepishly when she passed, and nudged each other, and the women looked the other way and pretended they didn't even see her.

One day the woman from "behind the tracks" bought a house uptown and moved into it—a neat, pretty little house, with a garden and trees, and she dug in the flower beds and watered the lawn and put out hanging baskets, and she went to market in a little checked gingham, and she looked wistfully over the fence when the neighbors went by, but nobody ever spoke to her at all.

One night a baby was taken sick in the neighborhood and the woman from "behind the tracks" saved its life. The next day she stood out on her porch and waited to see the baby's mother go by. And the baby's mother went by—and did not see the woman from "behind the tracks" at all, and the woman from "behind the tracks" went and sold her little new house and the garden and all, and went back "behind the tracks" to live—and all the people in the village pursed their lips and said, "She's gone back—they always do."

What Did She Expect?

Good story, wasn't it, and a good slap at the narrow-minded little mother, who wouldn't make friends with the woman who had saved her baby's life?

We need a few such slaps as that, we women; and yet——

I wonder what the woman from "behind the tracks" expected when she bought the pretty little house and the garden, and went to live among decent people?

Did she think they would get out the band and meet and greet her at the doorsteps, or what?

You choose your friends because you like them, and like their kind—not because somebody else thinks you ought to like them.

If the woman from "behind the tracks" had come to the village from somewhere else and nobody knew a thing about her, do you think the neighbor women would have liked her anyhow? I don't.

She wasn't their kind; never was, never could be. She belonged to a different world, and every time she turned her over-blonded head and every time she opened her good-humored, too easily-pleased mouth, and every time she laughed her rather coarse laugh, she would have told what she was, and no woman of any fineness of perception could have been mistaken in her for a minute.

No, I don't mean what she had been. That isn't what would concern a kindly woman who was trying to decide whether she wanted her for a neighbor or not.

I mean what she is. A gingham dress doesn't change the beat of a woman's heart; a garden hoe doesn't turn her from a coarse, easy-going, blunt-hearted person to a gentle, delicate, lovely woman, does it? I don't believe it.

A Lesson From Home.

Once I had a maid—a strange, silent, stubborn girl with blue eyes, so hard that they were like a flint. She had a strange, measured walk and a strange, controlled voice, and she always acted as if she thought some one was watching her.

One day I saw her in a blue print dress, of peculiar cut and shade, and I knew—she was a reformatory girl. I'd seen her before, at the reformatory.

I didn't say a word. I treated her exactly as I had always treated her, but one day she was gone and she left a letter for me. In it she said many things. One of them was this: "You know me; don't you? I believe you do. I thought I could be different, but I can't. You've been good to me, but I ain't happy here. I ain't comfortable, so I'm going," and gone she was, back to the people with whom she was "comfortable," poor thing. Back to the people who were like her and who had her ways and her point of view. I was sorry, but I didn't go after her or try in any way to reach her.

Perhaps I should have—I've often wondered—and yet there were the children. Would it have been exactly safe?"

Selfish—protecting my children at the expense of a poor thing who was trying to make herself over.

Perhaps; but those children are mine. They are my business. It is my affair to keep them safe as long as I can. My own doorstep I must keep clean, and then if I have time and strength I may help my neighbor about her's. That's the way it looks to me. I wonder if I am right or wrong?

What You Really Are.

The poor thing from "behind the tracks" didn't belong in the neat little street uptown. She was no more in place there with her loud laugh and her bleached hair than the timid little woman who lived beside her would be in place in the ranks of a marching army. I don't blame the neighbor women for looking the other way. Honestly, now, I don't.

And the high-heeled, expensive slippers and the open-worked stockings and the gorgeous hats and the flashing rings—she had had all these things while little neighbor turned her blue cashmere and trimmed it with black velvet one year and with cream-colored lace the next, trying to make herself look pretty to the one man she loved. How could the poor thing from "behind the tracks" think she would never have to pay for all that?

After all, though, it isn't what you used to be that counts. It isn't what you would like to be, either; but what you really are, and no change in dress or in housing or anything else will change that. I wish it would. How pitifully I wish it would.

Some Day Babies Will Be Born Wise

for a short time—probably not more than two or three hundred thousand years.

Unlike the ants, the wasps, and the swallows, he has not had time yet to develop knowledge, make it thoroughly his own, and TRANSMIT it.

But there is every reason to believe that in time to come the baby will be born with all the practical knowledge that it requires, just as the young swallow and the young wasps begin life thoroughly educated.

When the time comes, each individual will have a highly interesting career—each being born knowing everything that is generally known, and each being able to devote the whole of life to acquiring NEW knowledge and making original research.

The difference between the mud-wasp and the human baby now is that the wasp is born knowing everything that it needs to know—and never learns anything more.

The baby of the human kind is born knowing nothing, and learns a good deal.

In days to come, when the baby is born with knowledge, there will still be a difference between it and the wasp, the ant, and the swallow, for born with the things that it must know in order to live comfortably, the human baby, unlike its animal associates on the earth, will start out ADDING to human knowledge—which, in turn, by slow processes that go on within us, will be handed down to the new generation.

MEXICAN AND JAPANESE ALLIANCE STIRS U. S.

Vice Squad Is Ordered to Increase Activity

DRAGNET FOR 'SLAVERS' IS SET

Arrest of Additional Men Named by Girl Victim of the "Ring" Due Soon.

With rapid-fire developments featuring the day's investigation of the "vice ring" said to exist in Atlanta, Chief of Police Beavers announced at noon that he is accumulating new evidence through which he hopes to be able soon to break up the gang. The new evidence, he intimtaed, is startling, and is expected to result in arrests of several men and women within 24 hours.

The principal developments of the day, through which Chief Beavers is errs:givr2ground-liciks,(urrr cmfwyp obtaining his new evidence are as follows:

Dora Rothstein has made a new statement, implicating three more men in her downfall, and naming half a dozen girls as victims of the ring.

The detective department, following a severe grilling given them by Chief Beavers Friday night, is seeking evidence against the vice ring with renewed vigor.

Two prominent business men, interested in the welfare of the little Rothstein girl, have entered the case and are aiding Chief Beavers in securing evidence.

Information has come to Chief Beavers of a house where young girls are taken by men and ruined, and then taken to hotels or immoral resorts.

The dragnet has been thrown out for the son of one of Atlanta's most prominent business men, named by Hattie Smith in her story of immorality at the Cumberland Hotel.

Four persons—Hattie Smith, Mrs. Lola White, Paul Estes and Hoyt Monroe—were held for the Grand Jury Saturday morning on new charges, following the Smith girl's story of a "joy ride." Estes has said that he will make a confession, in which he will involve men hitherto unsuspected.

Chief Warns Detectives.

In his conference with the detective department late Friday afternoon, which was held in Chief Lanfod'r office behind closed doors, Chief Beavers took the detectives severely to task for their laxity in reporting vice cases. He intimated strongly that the detectives were not doing their duty and not getting results.

Makes Suspension Threat.

"It is as much your duty as it is the duty of any other man on the force," Chief Beavers is said to have told them, "to report the existence of vice. In the future all knowledge gained by detectives as to the existence of immoral resorts must be reported at once to headquarters. If you personally are engaged on some other case and have not time to work the vice case, report it so some one else can investigate and make the case."

Chief Beavers urged the detectives to greater activity in the war against vice, and declared that they would fare the same as uniformed men if it was shown that they know of immoral houses and do not report them. They will be promptly suspended, the chief said.

May Involve Hotels.

The story of the Wilson girl is fraught with possibilities, Chief Beavers declares. She will give a detailed account of her adventures after she met Dora Rothstein at the White City on July4, and it is understood that she will make revelations of her life before she was married, several months ago, by which she will involve several downtown hotels. She has promised Chief Beavers that she will make public the name of every man who has been with her and the Rothstein girl during the past two weeks.

Trainmen in Strike Meeting Hunt Room To Find Dictographs

NEW YORK, July 12.—Nearly 1,000 representatives of the men employed on railroads east of Chicago met here to-day to determine definitely whether or not 100,000 trainmen shall strike in support of their demand for more money and a reorganization of working conditions.

To keep news of their deliberations from the managers every corner of the meeting hall was searched for hidden dictographs.

It also was to be decided to-day whether the trainmen would participate in a conference in Washington, at which President Wilson and Secretary of Labor Wilson are to try to establish peace.

Forecasts were made that a strike would be called immediately unless guarantees were given that the Erdman act, providing for arbitration of strikes affecting common carriers, is amended to provide for six instead of three arbitrators.

Revolt Feared in Cuba Over Politics

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

HAVANA, July 12.—A tense political situation exists here in consequence of the assassination of General Riva, chief of the national police.

Reports were current to-day that followers of General Asbert, one of the men indicted for the murder of Riva, would attempt to storm the jail and liberate the prisoners.

Asbert has been deposed as Governor of the Province of Havana by President Menocal.

Troops still patroled the streets to-day and while there was no outward disorder there was a strong undercurrent of hostility.

Governor Asks and Secures Acquittal

JACKSON, MISS., July 12.—A. C. Davis was acquitted of the charge of embezzlement in connection with the sale of State property, after Governor Brewer went to the courthouse and asked the State's attorneys to request the judge to sign a verdict for the defendant. The Governor explained that the attorneys had evidence that showed Davis not guilty. The judge did as requested. Governor Brewer said he had no desire to prosecute an innocent man.

Attorneys asked that four other indictments against Davis be filed to await future action, if desired.

$150,000,000 Baby Gets Farm as 'Toy'

NEWPORT, R. I., July 12.—Vinson Walsh McLean, the $150,000,000 babv, has a new plaything which his father, Edward McLean, says is the most sensible of all his toys, the total cost of which would foot up nearly as much as the salary of the President of the United States for a year. The new plaything is a farm with an Angora goat on it.

With goats, sheep and chickens, and the negro boy whom his father has picked out as a playmate, the young multimillionaire may grow up Democratic.

Strike Ties Up All Cars at Lexington

LEXINGTON, July 12.—Every street and interurban car in this city is at a standstill to-day, following the inauguration of a general strike for higher wages and shorter working hours.

Special deputy sheriffs are patrolling the city. Strikebreakers will be secured from other places and protected on cars unless arbitration is agreed to to-day. There are 125 men out, the number to be augmented during the day, it is reported, by strikes in other lines of business.

THE WEATHER.

Forecast for Atlanta and Georgia — Showers Saturday and probably Sunday.

ENVOY LANE PROTESTS ENMITY

Mexican Government Asserts It Is Attempting to Crush Hostility. Minister Admits Crisis.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

MEXICO CITY, July 12.—Formal protest was lodged to-day by the United States Government against the action of the Mexican Government in allowing the Mexican press to stir up anti-American feeling.

Two notes were presented by United States Ambassador H. L. Wilson. At the same time denial was made of the report that United States warships in the harbor at Guayamas used their wireless and searchlights to aid the rebels.

Those publications have resulted in scattered demonstrations and rioting, although no arrests have been reported. Notices have been posted in the schools here for the children to secure small Japanse flags. These will be carried in a procession of children who will welcome the new Japanese Ambassador upon his arrival.

Jap Concessions Reported.

Mexico is cementing her relations with Japan, and it is reported that a special envoy will soon be sent to Tokio to invite the investment of Japanese capital and rich concessions will be given, it is said.

Following is a translation of the notices posted in the schools:

"The representative of the Japanese Emperor to our Government is about to arrive in this city. The attitude of mutual sympathy and esteem which our people and the people of Japan profess is well known.

"National Life in Balance."

"We firmly believe that the time has come to tender a public and solemn testimonial of international sympathy now that our national life has been put to a test by the imperialistic ambassador of a strong people.

"Therefore, the students of all the schools are asked to be at the railway station, each carrying a Japanese flag, to receive the Japanese Emperor's representative.

"This act will be significant and of great importance. The day and hour of the Japanese Ambassador's arrival will be announced later."

A number of American families have made preparations to leave here if further evidences of hostility are shown.

Minister Admits Crisis.

"It is true that the situation is delicate," said Minister of War Blanquet, "but the Government feels it can cope with it. Lamentable consequences may be occasioned by the anti-American feeling, but we are trying to kill it."

El Pais, most rabid of the newspapers, to-day published nearly a full-page picture of Friday's anti-American demonstration by students. On the editorial page the paper said:

"We see in Japan a future ally and defender of our independence, because such an alliance would be dangerous to the United States."

CONLEY KEPT ON GRILL 4 HOURS

After Gruelling Third Degree, Officials Refuse to Deny or Affirm Negro Confessed.

Habeas corpus proceedings to release Newt Lee collapsed in the court of Judge Ellis Saturday morning.

By agreement, Bernard L. Chappell, representing Lee, withdrew his application for a habeas corpus; Solicitor Dorsey promised to present a bill against Lee as a suspect in the Phagan murder case, with the expectation that a "no bill" would be returned. This appeared satisfactory to the attorneys for Lee, as well as to the State.

Luther Z. Rosser, Reuben R. Arnold and Herbert J. Haas, of counsel for Frank, were in court to fight against the appearance of Frank as a witness. William M. Smith represented Conley, one of the witnesses subpenaed.

Jim Conley underwent a racking third degree late Friday afternoon at the hands of Solicitor General Hugh M. Dorsey and Attorney Frank A. Hooper in an effort to verify or discredit the W. H. Mincey affidavit, in which the negro was charged with confessing to the murder of a girl on the afternoon that Mary Phagan met her death.

The grilling of nearly four hours followed The Georgian's publication of the details of Mincey's accusations and was undertaken with the utmost secrecy, an attempt being made to avoid knowledge of the "sweating" becoming public by taking Conley to the Commissioners' room on the second floor of the police station by a circuitous route.

Negro's Most Severe Ordeal.

It was the most severe ordeal through which the negro has passed. Its result was kept a profound secret both by the Solicitor and Attorney Hooper. Neither would deny the rumor that Conley had made a complete confession admitting that it was he that killed the little factory girl, nor would they confirm the report, which arose when it was learned that Solicitor Dorsey apparently was making ready to take an entirely new statement from the negro.

Dorsey, Hooper and Chief Lanford were present in the Commissioners' room when the inquisition began. After a few minutes Chief Lanford departed and did not return while the questioning was in progress. He was inclined to deny at first that Conley even was behind the closed doors. But ocular proof had been afforded and the newspaper men hovered about the hallway in the hope that some scrap of information might come to them.

Policeman Guards Door.

Their hovering tactics received a bad setback when Chief Lanford detailed a policeman to guard the door and keep all inquisitive persons away.

For an hour Dorsey and Hooper alternated in shooting questions at the negro, apparently without getting anything from him that he had not already told. Then they removed their coats and renewed the grilling. At one point it seemed Conley must have wavered in some of his statements or changed some of the testimony he previously had given. Dorsey emerged from the room and got a blotter from Chief Beavers' office. It was taken to mean that a new statement was being obtained from the negro.

The questioning was resumed and the Solicitor from a distant vantage point could be seen turning sheet after sheet of the testimony already given by Conley and comparing it with the statements then being made.

Attorneys Keep Silence.

Dorsey, coatless and perspiring, leaned far over the table and asked the negro question after question, his finger following the answers which had been given when the negro was interrogated before.

Not until after dark did the sweating process cease. Conley was taken back to his cell and Dorsey and Hooper went to their homes. Not a word could be obtained from either.

TWO BADLY HURT WHEN TROLLEY HITS AUTO

Dr. W. T. Pace, a physician of Smyrna, and his chauffeur, Fred Reed, narrowly escaped death Saturday morning shortly before 10 o'clock when an incoming Marietta trolley car smashed into the physician's automobile at a curve just beyond Carmichael Station.

Dr. Pace and young Reed(although badly cut and bruised about the face and arms, were able to leave the Atlanta Hospital, where they were rushed, shortly before noon. The car, a new two-passenger Ford, was demolished.

According to Dr. Pace, the street car bore down on them at a rapid rate before either he or the chauffeur knew there was a car in sight.

"The car came down the hill at a rate I would estimate at from 40 to 50 miles an hour," said Dr. Pace, "and we did not see it in time to get out of the way. The motorman blew his whistle once, but it was too late. My chauffeur tried to reverse the machine and then came the crash."

Inspector Winn, of the Georgia Railway and Power Company, said it had been reported to him that the boy driving the car apparently lost his nerve and stopped his car on the track. The car was filled with passengers.

Governor John Marshall Slaton, Chief of Staff Frederic J. Paxon and other members of the Governor's staff are inspecting the Fifth Regiment of the National Guard at St. Simons Island, where the regiment is encamped. They will return to Atlanta Sunday or Monday.

JUDGE HOLDS CORONER'S WRIT NOT LEGAL

Delay in Hearing Will Mean Woman's Commitment to Jail, Attorney Says.

Following close upon a decision by Superior Court Justice Pendleton Saturday morning that a warrant signed by the Coroner of Carroll County was not enforceable in Fulton County, C. Z. Crawford ,a nephew and beneficiary under the $250,000 will of Joshua B. Crawford, went before Justice of the Peace C. H. Giradeau and swore out a second warrant charging the widow, Mary Belle Crawford, with murder.

Constables R. F. Mauldin and W. W. Rogers went immediately to the home of Mrs. Crawford, at West Peachtree and Fourteenth streets, to arrest her and take her before Justice Girardeau for commitment trial.

The first warrant charging Mrs. Crawfod with murder was signed by Coroner C. W. Baukin, of Carroll County, who had disinterred the body of Joshua B. Crawford and found evidence of poison. Crawford died in Fulton county March 27, 1909.

Hearing May Be Delayed.

The warrant reached Atlanta Friday, and Sheriff Mangum notified Mrs. Crawford to appear before Justice of the Peace D. K. Johnson Saturday morning, when a hearing would be held as to the authority of the Sheriff to serve the warrant in Fulton County.

Colonel J. S. James, attorney for the heirs, said later that he did not know whether both sides would be ready for the commitment trial, as the prosecution has several material witnesses out of the State.

In the event of delay in the commitment hearing, he said, Justice Girardeau would have no other alternative than to commit Mrs. Crawford to jail.

Arnold Sees Exoneration.

Attorney Arnold said Mrs. Crawford would be completely exonerated at the prospective hearing before a justice of the peace. He said the action was nothing more than a move to "force" civil procedure.

"It is not really the Crawford heirs who are fighting me," said Mrs. Crawford, "but the rather distant relatives who were not mentioned in any will. I settled with the real heirs according to the will left by Mr. Crawford's first wife. Every one was satisfied.

"I gave Charlie Crawford more than he was even entitled to by the will that was made before I even knew the man I later married. He thanked me for the generosity by later letting the very distant relatives prevail upon him to fight me. He deeded them an interest in his share of the property and filed suit. Since then he has fought me. The closer relatives have never been anything but my best friends."

Sheriff Mangum will select the Justice Court for the hearing instead of the attorneys. It is more than likely it will start in the forenoon, and it is not improbable it will be necessary to conclude Monday.

Widow's Side of Case.

Attorney Arnold, for Mrs. Crawford, issued the following statement Friday afternoon:

"There is nothing whatever new in the recent developments of the Crawford case.

"Four years after Crawford's death some of the collateral kinpeople of J. B. Crawford and his first wife, who are seeking to recover this estate, worth perhaps $100,000, from the widow and legatees under Crawford's will, went to Carroll County with their lawyer, J. S. James, and Dr.

Warrant for Poisoning Husband Issued by Coroner Is Held To Be Illegal.

H. F. Harris, and on some kind of showing which we know nothing of persuaded the Coroner to exhume the body and allow the doctor employed by these relatives to make a post-mortem examination. Neither the widow nor any of the other legatees who are defendants had any notice and were not present.

Claims Lungs Shriveled.

"The doctor for these people took various parts of the body of Crawford and made a test for morphine. He claims to have found a trace of morphine by applying the color test. He would not swear to any quantity of morphine or meconic acid and could not swear as to any quantity which the deceased took in his lifetime.

"This doctor also looked at the lungs of J. B. Crawford and swore that they had shriveled up about one-third of their size.

"The presence of the morphine and meconic acid, Dr. Harris (who was employed by these collateral kin) said, indicated that a large quantity had been taken by the deceased in his life, but how much he could not say. Harris could not swear that he found more than one-fiftieth of a grain, and said he made no test for quantity.

Tempest in Teapot.

"The whole thing is a tempest in a teapot, an effort to make a mountain out of a molehill.

"Dr. John W. Hurt, who treated Crawford for pneumonia in his last illness, and the trained expert nurse who attended him show that Crawford died of pneumonia. To ease Crawford's severe pain Dr. Hurt had given him several injections of morphine, and no secret was made of the fact. To ease Crawford's coughing Dr. Hurt had given him a cough medicine which contained opium, which was taken into the stomach.

"This administration of these drugs by Dr. Hurt, who is a safe and conservative physician, would account for vastly more than the trace of morphine found in Crawford's body by Harris.

Calls Charge Illegal.

"As to Dr. Harris' opinion that Dr. Hurt was wrong in diagnosing the case as pneumonia we will be able to show by various experts that Dr. Harris' opinion, based on the examination he made on these shriveled lungs four years after death, is worthless as compared with the opinion of Dr. Hurt and the trained nurse.

"We propose to try this case in court in this county and will be satisfied with the judgment that the court renders; but in justice to our client we state these facts to show that there is nothing in these charges.

"The Coroner of Carroll County had no right to make any investigation or recommendation as to Mrs. Crawford. The matter is entirely out of his jurisdiction.

"If anybody wants to make any sworn charge that Mrs. Crawford poisoned J. B. Crawford she will welcome any such investigation and will show it utterly groundless."

SIDELIGHTS on GEORGIA POLITICS

By JAMES B. NEVIN

Mr. McMichael of Marion Friday made pos-i-tively his first American appearance as Speaker Pro Tem of the Georgia House of Representatives, and got away with victorious eagles and things of that sort.

The Speakership Pro Tem carries no prerogative other than that of presiding when the Speaker is absent from the chair, and, as Mr. Burwell had not been absent a minute up to the time of Mr. McMichaels participation in the direction of affairs in the House, nobody in the House knew exactly what sort of a Speaker Pro Tem it had selected, so far as his ability to handle things was concerned.

Whatever doubt there may have been in anybody's mind that McMichael would get away with things was speedily removed. The gentleman from Marion seemed perfectly at home from the very beginning of his active career as Speaker Pro Tem, and was warmly applauded by his colleagues when he had finished Round 1.

Mr. McMichatel, by the way, is one of the best and most convincing speakers on the floor of the House, and has the happy faculty of making himself understood perfectly. He is clean-cut in enunciation and exceedingly easy to follow.

Moreover, he is very popular among his fellow members, and whatever he says attracts instant and interested attention.

Judge John T. Allen is, perhaps, the best speaker on the floor of the Senate. And that is no mean compliment, either, for there are several good speakers in that honorable body.

Judge Allen not only is a mighty good lawyer, but he also is a business man of widespread reputation. His voice has great carrying power, without in any way being harsh. Whenever he arises to address the Senate, is invariably given close attention.

Whether one agrees with what he says or not, Judge Allen never is at a loss for words in which to make himself perfectly plain.

Dispensing with the reading of the journal in the Senate is not easily effected. Notwithstanding the fact that the journal has been examined and approved, a motion to dispense with reading rarely gets by without objection.

The Senate is more dignified than the House, as a rule, anyway, and its methods of procedure are much more orderly and repressed.

It is an interesting circumstance that the Senate Committee on Constitutional Amendments has reported favorably a bill to raise the total of Senate membership from 44 to 60. There is an excellent chance that the bill will pass, and if it does, the impression is that the people will ratify it.

There is one little page in the Senate who makes it a regular business to fall reverently to his knees while the chaplain is praying every morning.

He doesn't look to be over 8 or 9 years old, and he evidently has not forgotten—yet—that the proper praying posture is kneeling.

A number of Georgia Legislators to-day forwarded to Washington—some to the President and others to Secretary Bryan—letters endorsing Colonel J. Lindsay Johnson, of Rome, for a consulship, preferably in the Orient.

It is well-known, of course, that the Colonel wishes to be named Consul to Shanghai, and his friends in the Legislature—of which he is several times a former member—evidently are desirous of hastening the appointment along in such wise as they may.

South Georgia is talking of former President of the Senate, W. S. West, of Valdosta, for Governor, in succession to Governor Slaton.

If South Georgia has an eye on the Executive Office after Governor Slaton gets through, it will be readily admitted on all sides that Colonel West would make an ideal candidate.

He knows the game, he has the friends, and assuredly he has the ability—and what more could South Georgia ask of a favorite son?

Citizen J. L. H. Waldrop, of Clayton County, 77 years of age, boasts with pride that he has voted for a Brown for Governor of Georgia seven times.

Away back yonder in the dim and distant past he voted four times for former Governor Joseph M. Brown's distinguished father, Joseph E. Brown, and of late years he voted three times for that gentleman's son.

Mr. Waldrop makes no bones of admitting, indeed, that he always has voted for that tribe of particular Browns, and stands ready to repeat the performance whenever occasion shall arise for doing so, if it ever does again.

William R. Leaken, Collector of the Port of Savannah, has appointed B. Palmer Axson as an assistant in his office, with the rank of inspector. Axson has already begun his new duties, appointment was made by Collector although the appointment has not yet been approved.

There is no doubt that the appointment will be made permanent. The Leaken without solicitation or political consideration.

The new appointee is a blood relative of Mrs. Woodrow Wilson.

Representative Barry Wright, of Floyd, hopes to revive the scheme to convert the Western and Atlantic terminals in Atlanta, between Madison Avenue and Fryor Street, in a grand overhead plaza, and to that end will earnestly champion a bill in the House providing for the same.

Mr. Wright is a member of the Western and Atlantic Railway Committee of the House, and is capable of putting up a mighty good fight for anything he undertakes.

The plaza scheme, he thinks, is an admirable solution of a much vexed question, and a probable effective factor in disposing of the smoke nuisance in Atlanta.

Chicago's Mayor to Ban Cabaret Tights

CHICAGO, July 12.—Mayor Carter Harrison has announced that he proposes to stamp out the wearing of tights, singing of suggestive songs and exhibition of "animal" dances in cabarets, summer parks and amusement places. An ordinance prohibiting these three things will be sent to the City Council by the Mayor Monday.

"I did not know," said Mayor Harrison, "that women clad in tights pass among the tables in some cafes."

Bacon Halts Plan for Bill-Drafting Bureau

WASHINGTON, July 12.—Senator Bacon, of Georgia, created consternation in the Senate to-day when he declared he was so shocked at the attempt of Senator Owen to have the Senate pass a bill creating a bureau to draft bills upon the request of the President and others that he was completely "knocked off his pins."

The bill was withdrawn for further consideration. It provides for a committee of eight Senators or 25 Representatives.

Senator Bacon referred to the President as the schoolmaster, who, it is proposed, shall do work Senators are supposed to do.

EUROPE'S RURAL CREDIT FREES PEASANTS

American Expert Declares Farm Banks and Societies Have Revolutionized Agriculture.

By A. E. TATE.
(Member of the American Agricultural Commission.)
Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, July 12.—Since our commission reached Europe, on May 10, we have studied all the co-operative agricultural systems and methods of rural banking in Italy, Hungary, Austria, Germany, Russia, Switzerland, Belgium, Holland, Denmark, Norway, France, England and Ireland and have found these systems of rural organization have practically revolutionized the agricultural development of these countries.

I found at the head of many of their banks and societies some of the best men in the communities, men who have caught a vision of nobility in this service to their fellowmen and who are devoting their lives to this work with practically no monetary compensation.

Farmers, who, for centuries, were a downtrodden peasantry, are being lifted up to a state of independence and freedom such as was never seen before, through the medium of these co-operative agricultural societies and credit banks.

Once Robbed by Usurers.

Formerly they were forced to obtain their financial requirements from persons who abstracted from them usurious rates of interest and inflicted upon them hardships of all sorts, even to refusing to renew loans and taking property.

Now they are able to secure their accommodations from their co-operative rural banks at rates of interest varying from 2 1-2 to 5 per cent, according to the length of time required and the character of loan made.

The farmer thus is able to secure these loans at such a reasonable rate and on such liberal terms that he is amply able to discharge his obligation at maturity with perfect ease Both the Raiffeisen system and land mortgage banks are used.

Credit Systems Vary.

The Raiffeisen system, with its unlimited personal liability, and the land mortgage band, with its long-time amortization feature, which allows repayment of a loan covered by real estate mortgage in small yearly payment of a loan covering a period of 10 to 65 years' time, vary in different countries.

I have not found in any country a yearly rate palyment, including interest and expenses of amortization, which has been more than 5 1-2 per cent on the amount borrowed, which is less than the straight interest in North Carolina, not to say anything about the commission which the farmer has often to pay to secure money.

Governments Lend Aid.

There is one thing they have here which is a great factor in furnishing cheap money for the farmer and that is the Governments in those countries are right behind the co-operative societies to encourage them in every way possible. They have come to a realization that itis only when a farmer is prosperous the country is able to make a real substantial advance along all lines and, without this, there must be retrogression and decay.

So Governments have grasped the full significance of what it means to have a well-organized, systematic agriculture and they neglect no opportunity of developing their agricultural resources.

While there is much to learn along co-operative lines from Continental Europe, we can learn very littlee from them in the way of social conditions or country life. In nearly all the countries we visited we found women doing farm work.

In a few countries, we might say, women do the major portion of field work. This should not be, in my opinion, and it is a serious defect in agricultura conditions, and should be eradicated, if the highest order of the country life is ever to be developed.

Army Steals Young Men.

This condition is brought about, no doubt, party by heavy war footing in thees countries, as young men are enlisted in the army and navy and thus farms are robbed of their services.

One thing certain we have learned, that co-operation is a success in Europe and there will be no difficulty in our commission agreeing on that point. Whether that can be applied to the different States remains to be seen. Naturally there would have to be some legislation enacted in both Federal and State Legislatures that would enable the farmers to organize under a co-operative system.

The American Agricultural Commission visited Ipswich to-day, and inquired into the working of the Eastern Counties Farmers' Co-operative Association and subsequently inspected Lord Rayleigh's farm at Hatfield, Peveril.

ATLANTA WOMEN LIKE SKIRT WITH POCKETS

Miss Lucie Goodrich, Atlanta sponsor for new suffragette pocket skirt.

Just why women suffragists should have pockets in their skirts is a mystery. Still they've got 'em, and they make no secret of the fact.

Strange to say, this new fad originated in Paris, where suffragettes are rare. It has come to Atlanta via New York, and has found favor here, not only as an insignia of the cause but for convenience sake.

According to Mrs. N. Springold, the New York creator of fashionable gowns, who imported the pocket skirt, it is going to be the sensation of the season.

"Women, and suffragists especially, ought to hail the advent of the new skirt with particular joy, she declared, "because of the pockets. There are two of them, one on each side. And they are not stingy little affairs, like the pockets that used to be put in women's dresses in the ancient days before Fashion frowned on such features of feminine apparel."

In Atlanta a few of them were seen at the recent convention of the Georgia Woman Suffrage Association. Others have been seen at the Driving Club and elsewhere in society circles.

Miss Lucile Goodrich has sponsored the skirt in the younger set. Adherents are beginning to gather to the new fad.

PEACE PLAN FOR HEALEY STRIKE HANGS FIRE

Committee to Settle Walkout Involving 150 Men on New Building Reported Named.

Negotiations looking to the settlement of the strike declared Friday by union men employed on the Healey Building had not materialized at noon Saturday. During the morning a number of strikers gathered near the structure, but no demonstration was attempted.

President C. Harrison Barnes, of the Building Trades Council, who called the strike, maintains silence on the matter, although it is understood representatives to a conference with the contractor, B. M. Walker, have been named. This conference may be held Saturday afternoon.

The strike, which was called Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock, was the result of the alleged awarding of an electrical contract to a concern which does not employ union labor. This act on the part of Contractor Walker, the union leaders claim, is a violation of certain alleged existing contracts between employer and employee.

Fourteen labor organizations are involved, including the structural iron workers, brick masons, plasterers, steel workers, plumbers, gas workers, steam and electrical engineers, painters, marble cutters, carpenters and hod carriers—in all, about 150 men.

According to statements Saturday morning, a number of the structural iron workers have planned to leave Atlanta to take other jobs. While the steel work on the Healey Building is nearly completed, about three weeks work for the riveting gang and ten days work for the steel men remain.

The strike will not involve other buildings, it is believed.

MEYERS SUICIDE THROUGH FEAR OF INSANITY

Former Atlanta Telephone Man Is Found Dead in St. Louis Hotel. Health Was Broken.

ST. LOUIS, July 12.—Dr. Heine Marks, uncle of Charles L. Meyers, of Nashville, Tenn., who shot and killed himself at the Planters Hotel Friday, said to-day that in his opinion his nephew's suicide was due to a fear of insanity, brought about by overwork.

Meyers suffered a nervous breakdown six months ago and had to quit work. He was general contractor for the Cumberland Telephone Company.

A few days ago Meyers told his bride of three months that if he became convinced that he would go insane he would kill himself. A close guard was kept over him, but he eluded it. Funeral arrangements will follow the inquest to-day. His wife was Miss Pearl Goldstein, of Nashville.

Mr. Meyers, who was a special agent for the Southern Bell Telephone Company, was regarded as an efficient employee. Formerly he lived in Nashville, where he was connected with the Cumberland, and retained his position when that concern was taken over by the Southern. Several months ago he was transferred to Atlanta, but worked here but a few weeks when his health failed and he took a vacation.

Mr. Meyers and his bride arrived in St. Louis Thursday to visit his brother.

ARE YOU ONE

Of That Vast Number of People Who Are Alive, But Not Living?

Who just feel down and out, fagged to a finish, utterly used up, with weary muscles, stagnant brain, frazzled nerves and a wonderful desire to just give up and quit? If you are, we have this message of cheer for you: Don't give up just because your system is out of order. Your liver is not doing what it ought to; your food is not agreeing with you. MULHALL USED LABOR BODY AS HIS TOOL

Professional Lobbyist Tells of Political Welding of Unions and Manufacturers.

WASHINGTON, July 12.—An interesting glimpse of "inside" politics was given by Colonel Martin M. Mulhall in his testimony to-day before the Overman Lobby Committee.

How as president of the Baltimore Working Men's Association, though lobbying for the National Association of Manufacturers, he lined up the working men against Senator McComas, who was fought because of his advocacy of an eight-hour law, was told by the witness.

Efforts to swing the labor vote in Rhode Island in 1904 for Senator Nelson W. Aldrich also were described by Mulhall. He spent ten days in the State, he said, at the solicitation of Senator Foraker, of Ohio.

Labor union leaders, Colonel Mulhall said, knew of his connection with the Manufacturers' Association.

Colonel Mulhall charged Marshall Cushing, secretary of the National Association of Manufacturers, with trying to defeat William Hughes, now Senator from New Jersey, because Hughes was active in support of labor measures.

Mulhall told the committee "all you had to do was to see 'Boss' Barnes to get a bill killed in the Legislature at Albany."

Senate Beats House for Possession of Mulhall.

WASHINGTON, July 12.—The opening skirmish for physical possession of Colonel Martin M. Mulhall was won by the Senate Lobby Investigation Committee to-day. Chairman Garrett, of the House committee, had subpenaed the witness for examination at 9 o'clock to-day, but late last night the Senators, finding their prerogatives might be infringed upon, told Mulhall to show up at 9 o'clock at the Senate, and he did.

Garrett indicated that if the Senate committee persisted in stopping the House, the House committee will have a subpena out at all times for Mulhall.

James E. Emery, counsel for the National Association of Manufacturers, promised to give a list of about 40 witnesses to disprove Mulhall's accusations affecting business men. He said he was trying to locate some men he knew could tell of Mulhall's record.

Christian Endeavor In Sunrise Meeting

LOS ANGELES, July 12.—A majority of the delegates to the International Christian Endeavor convention here were on hand for the sunrise meeting half an hour before dawn.

Reasons assigned to-day for the action of the convention in selecting Chicago for its 1915 meeting were the raising of a $10,000 convention entertainment fund, the fact that there are more than 1,000,000 members of the Christian Endeavor within a radius of a few miles of Chicago, and the presence in this country of thousands of visitors who will be able to stop in Chicago on their way to the Panama Exposition.

Pennsylvania Raises A Record Frog Crop

HARRISBURG, PA., July 12.—Bullfrogs by the thousand are being placed in the streams of Pennsylvania by the State Department of Fisheries and it is expected that by the end of July more young frogs will have been distributed than ever before handled by the State's fish propagators.

The propagation of frogs was undertaken a few years ago by the department when the demand for the greenbacked "bullies" became so great on the part of hotels and restaurants.

Committee Selects Text Book Inquirers

After sharp debate the House Committee on Education decided Friday to have one member from the Senate, two from the House, the Governor and the State Superintendent of Schools to investigate the school book question.

At the next meeting the committee will decide whether the investigation is to be concluded at this session or whether the investigators shall be instructed to finish their work in the vacation period.

Bills Provide for Special Registration

Three bills championed by Representative Miller, of Bibb County, providing for an amendment to the code so that there may be special registration of voters preliminary to bond elections in counties have been reported favorably by the House General Judiciary Committee No. 1.

Mr. Miller believes greater interest will be taken in bond elections and a more representative opinion obtained by such a provision.

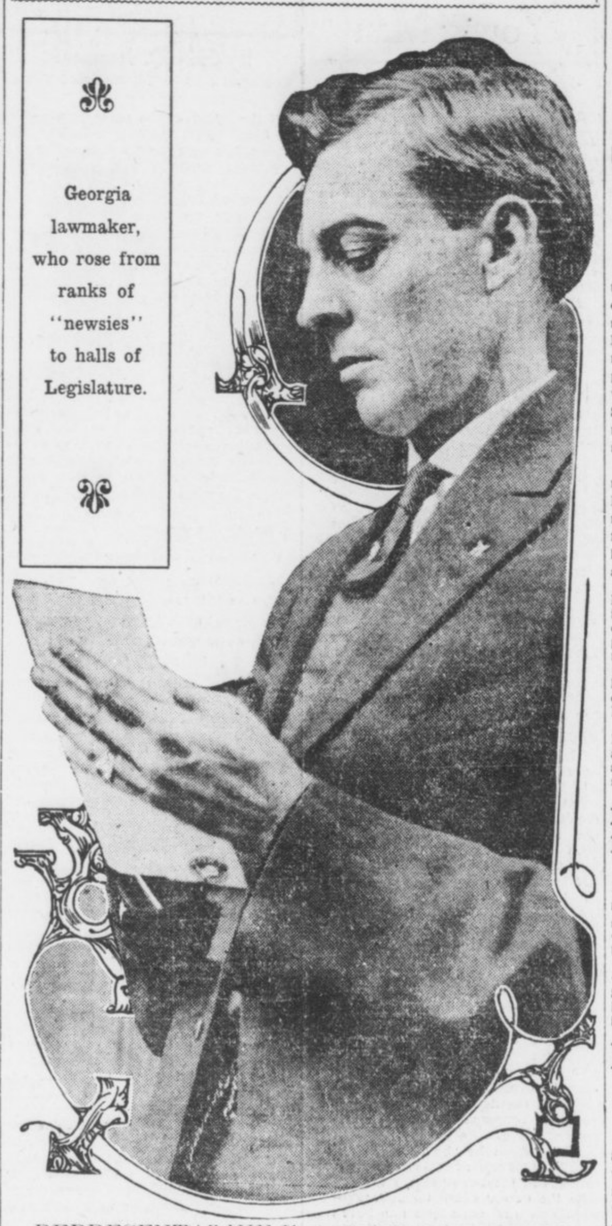
ONCE NEWSIE, NOW HE AIDS IN MAKING LAWS

Georgia lawmaker, who rose from ranks of "newsies" to halls of Legislature.



REPRESENTATIVE E. D. COLE, OF BARTOW.

Representative Ed Cole Has Acquired a Fortune, but Has Lost Most of His Name.

In the first place, Representative Ed Cole, of Bartow, was not christened Edward, or Edwin, or Ed, or anything like that.

As a matter of fact, his full entitlements are Emreid Dargan Cole!

That, however, was entirely too fancy an outlay of names for this gentleman when first he started out to make his own way in life, and so he elected to have himself called "E. D." which inevitably evoluted into plain, ordinary, old-fashioned "Ed" as time ran on.

Ed Cole began his business career with a total capital of $1.35. Besides that, he possessed nothing beyond one suit of clothes, vintage unknown, a couple of pairs of socks and a superabundance of energy and pluck.

He plunged into business for himself at 16 by getting a job as train "butcher" on a jerkwater railroad in South Carolina, and he soon enlarged his capital of $1.35 to 100 times that amount.

Not long after this experience one of the big news agencies heard of Cole and grabbed him. Before long he was in charge of a division or so for that concern—and now he still is on the sunny side of 30, worth along toward—well, he is worth a six-figure sum, all right, anyway!

In casting about for a vice chairman of the important Ways and Means Committee of the House, Speaker Burwell looked into Cole's record. He became convinced that Cole was one of the safest and sanest business men in the House, and as that was exactly what he was looking for, Cole got the assignment.

Cole's inheritance tax bill is House bill No. 1, and is generally accepted as the most intelligent inheritance tax measure pending in the Legislature. It likely is the one that will be enacted into law. Cole never introduced it until he felt sure it was right and modeled along the most approved lines.

THOUGHT HE WAS SQUIRREL.

PATERSON, N. J., July 12.—William Quinn, a lineman, after attending a birthday party, climbed a telephone pole and went to sleep on a cross-arm. Firemen rescued him.

PLAN ON TO LEASE SPACE OVER W. & A.

Representative Suggests Way to Raise $100,000 Each Year. Committee Approves.

Representative Barry Wright, of Floyd County, plans to lease the space over the Western and Atlantic Railroad in the business district of Atlanta to a local syndicate for 30 years at $100,000 per annum. His plan met with the favor of the Western and Atlantic Committee of the Legislature, to which it was revealed Friday.

The committee recommended the creation of a committee of two Senators, five Representatives, the Governor and the chairman of the Railroad Commission as ex-officio members, to investigate Representative Wright's plan. It also recommended a legislative appropriation of $5,000 for the investigation.

The committee indorsed a constitutional amendment offered by Representative Meaders, of Oconee County, forbidding the sale of the W. & A., except by vote of the people. A bill providing for the appointment of a joint committee to investigate the desirability of purchasing the A., B. & A. Railroad, thereby extending the W. & A. to the sea, also was indorsed.

EDWARDS LIKELY TO RAISE ROW AT REMOVAL

Macon Postmaster Says He Will Be Heard From Before He Quits.

MACON, July 12.—It is very likely that a lively incident will develop out of the action of the Postoffice Department in asking for the resignation of Harry Stilwell Edwards, Macon postmaster, who is a Republican appointee. It is thought that Mr. Edwards will refuse to resign, as the San Francisco postmaster has done, making it necessary for the department to summarily remove him.

"I was recently advised that my resignation was wanted," stated Mr. Edwards to-day, "and I have had the matter under consideration with friends. I do not care to make a public statement just at present, but rest assured that I will be heard from."

Custis Nottingham, whom Senator Bacon has recommended for the place, is the Senator's local agent in Macon, looking after all of the Bacon property interests here. He was formerly Recorder of the city, and in the pre-convention campaign last year he was an active Underwood supporter. He also has always supported Joe Brown.

W. T. Morgan, whom Representative Bartlett desires to be postmaster, is a close friend of the Congressman and is well known for his Hoke Smith sentiments.

Nottingham to Get Postoffice at Macon.

WASHINGTON, July 12.—Curtis Nottingham probably will be nominated as postmaster at Macon, Ga., succeeding Harry Stilwell Edwards, whose resignation has been called for by the Postoffice Department.

The nomination of Mr. Nottingham will be in accord with the wishes of Senator Bacon. Representative Bartless, of the Sixth Georgia District, it is understood, has a rival candidate.

Prison Board Head Confesses, Is Report

JACKSON, MISS., July 12.—C. C. Smith, head of the prison board, convicted Wednesday night of conspiracy to defraud the State, this morning held a two-hour conference with Governor Brewer. Smith was accompanied to the Governor's mansion by the Sheriff.

Governor Brewer refused to say what passed between them, but it is rumored Smith made a complete confession of irregularities in the penitentiary department.

Whether Smith admitted there was any truth in the rumors regarding irregularities in the sale of State cotton is not known.

SOLONS INSPECT INSTITUTIONS AT ATHENS

As Guests of City's Chamber of Commerce, Legislators Combine Business and Pleasure.

Headed by the two Representatives from Clarke County, J. Frank Rhodes and Frank A. Lipscomb, the Georgia Legislature is visiting Athens to-day, inspecting State institutions there.

The General Assembly, under the chaperonage of President of the Senate J. Randolph Anderson, left on a special train over the Seaboard at 8 o'clock this morning, and will return to Atlanta to-night at 8:30.

For the purpose of making this trip the Legislature adjourned over to-day to meet again Monday morning, but as it is on public business the day was not declared a dies non.

The Athens Chamber of Commerce has the entertainment of the legislators in hand. A fine program has been arranged for their profit and pleasure.

Automobile tours of the University of Georgia properties, including the Normal and Industrial Schools, will be made, and the members of the General Assembly will have every opportunity to see for themselves what the State has at Athens and what it needs.

After the business of the day, the Chamber of Commerce will tender the Legislature a big barbecue and Brunswick stew on the banks of the Oconee River, near Athens.

Twenty-two members of the Senate and 61 members of the House composed the party. A big contingent of the Senate and House pages went along, by special invitation of the Athens Chamber of Commerce.

Two in a Train

"A THIRD class single to Galway, please!" Miss Mathers moved away from the ticket office, but not before a tall man, wrapped in a thin ulster, with a tweed cap pulled down over his eyes, had seen her—started first at sound of her soft voice, and then deliberately followed her to the waiting train. It was a bitter winter evening, and Miss Mathers shuddered inwardly as she thought of that long, long train journey through South Wales, the odious crossing of the Irish Channel and the wearisome journey to Galway.

Tears started to her eyes as she thought of past arrivals there. How different they had been! Then she had traveled thither as a guest. Now all was sadly changed, and she was going back to dear, well-remembered places to earn her own living as a governess.

Seated in the corner of a third-class compartment, Mary Mathers settled herself under her rug for the first stage of her journey.

A warning whistle from the train—the door was wrenched open, and a man, wrapped in a big ulster, got in, followed by a porter with a bag and bundle of golf sticks. There was a momentary bustle, during which the express began to glide slowly along the platform. The porter jumped out, shut the door—they were off.

And in the opposite corner was sitting——

Mary's heart gave a jump.

"I thought it was you," said Meredith, quietly. "Aren't you going to speak to me?"

"Of course," she stammered, with lips that tried so hard not to quiver. "You startled me so." She smiled at him gallantly. "You see, you are about the last person I expected to see. Are you going to Ireland?"

The Old Haunts.

"Yes, and you? To the old haunts?" The quick tears started to her eyes.

"Yes, to one of the old haunts near Galway."

"Lough Corrib?" he asked.

Mary winced.

"Yes, just on the shores, half-way to Oughterard."

He leant forward.

"You don't mean to say that you are going to the Wintons?"

"Yes."

"Good! So am I. They're getting up a first-rate house party, you know. I'm awfully glad you're going to be one of them, too."

Mary gave a little gasp, opened her mouth as if to speak, and said nothing. What could she say?

Tell him the truth, of course—that instead of an honored guest she was going to the Wintons as governess at $150 a year, relegated to the schoolroom in a distant wing, dining when the rest of the party lunched, disappearing back again to the distant wing of the house with her charges. Perhaps now and then she would be sent for to play accompaniments or something of the kind. But if Meredith was to be in the house, how could she bear it? How could she tell him? He probably knew nothing about her reverses of fortune. She couldn't blurt it out—apropos of nothing at all.

Three years ago she and Meredith had seen a good deal of each other. No other man had ever touched her heart or made any great difference in her life, but he—she wrenched herself from her dreams with an effort as she spoke.

A Bad Prospect.

"I'm afraid it's going to be a bad night. Are you obliged to cross?"

"Yes."

"And if I remember rightly, you don't care much about the sea, do you?"

"I care this much—that I loathe it," said Mary, with a faint smile. "I have never got over my distaste for boats and everything to do with them. And the Irish Channel is always rough when I cross it."

Meredith laughed.

"Have you only just come back from East Africa?" said Mary, breaking the silence that had fallen between them.

"Three months ago."

"But you will go out again?"

"I don't think so," he said slowly. "It all depends on——"

The door into the corridor was slid open; the dining car attendant looked in.

"Take your seats for dinner, please."

He passed on.

"You will dine, won't you?" asked Meredith. "Nothing like a good meal, you know."

The color mounted to Mary's face. How could she tell him that dinner was not a possibility to her, simply because she had no spare money to waste? She had a little packet of sandwiches in her bag, and some biscuits, but her appetite sickened at the thought of them.

"I am not hungry," she said, evasively. "I couldn't eat any dinner."

Left Alone.

"Very well. Willful woman must always have her way, but don't say I didn't warn you. Will you be all right if I leave you? I feel the pangs of a furious hunger."

"Of course. I am quite comfortable."

Left alone, Mary sat up and gazed out into the darkness. Her face burned. How could she endure the hours of this journey with Meredith sitting there, talking, looking at her? She must get away from him. Her hard-won self-control might desert her, and then—— She rapidly collected her rug, papers and bag and slipped into the corridor, walking with difficulty toward the far end of the swinging train to another compartment.

Here she would be alone. Presently, to the hum of the express, Mary fell asleep, wrapped in her rug, and dreamed things that brought a smile to her lips and a color to her soft cheeks.

And in the dining car, at his solitary meal, Meredith wondered why fate had deliberately thrown him and Mary together, when that impassable barrier of wealth still stood between them. It had driven him away from her once before, and now—well, he must let things slide. Perhaps, that same interfering dame Fortune might find a way out.

The Irish air was soft and fresh, and the gray country looked inexpressibly lovely to Mary's tired eyes. The crossing had been just as odious as she expected, and she had hurried from the boat in the wintry darkness to the waiting room, dreading, yet hoping, to find Meredith at her side. She saw his tall figure once. He was looking about him, but he did not see her, and she took refuge in a carriage with three other women, and slept away some of her exhaustion on the way to Waterford. There she had to change, and on the platform the first person she saw was—Meredith. He came up to her at once.

"Why did you run away last night?" he said.

"I—I"—

"I don't want to worry you, but you must let me look after you. You look half dead. Have you had any breakfast?"

"Yes."

She had had tea and bread and butter in the train, and the cool morning air had whipped a faint color to her white cheeks.

Slowly they crept away into the thick mist, nothing to be seen but low fields, stone walls and driving mist on every side. Mary felt her spirits sinking lower and lower as she approached her destination.

"Are we there?" she said.

"No, we've stopped for something—signal against us I expect."

Meredith put down the window and looked out into the mist. He saw a row of low sheds, the outline of a tiny station, a branch line, and nothing beyond them but a couple of other compartments. The rest of the train had gone.

She Confesses.

There they were, left behind—in a siding.

"What has happened?" asked Mary.

Meredith turned and looked at her with a rueful sort of smile.

"Left behind!" cried Mary aghast. "What do you mean?"

"They've run us into a siding, and the train has gone on without us. The fact is, I was asleep. I only woke up to find ourselves dumped down here. They let us get into the coach they were leaving behind—idiots! But we'll get on somehow, Mary. After all, it only means a little delay."

He said her name involuntarily, and Mary's heart jumped. Then a feeling of dismay swept over her.

"But we may not arrive till night," she said. "I suppose the only thing we can do is to drive, if a vehicle is to be had. We must be twenty miles from our destination, at least."

"I suppose so, but what does it matter? They'll understand."

"It may not matter for you," said Mary, in a low, harsh voice. "They will excuse in a guest what they may not pardon in the governess."

Meredith stared at her as if she had suddenly gone mad.

"The what?" he said.

"The governess. That is what I am."

"You're mad."

"I'm not; it's a fact."

"You a governess? What does it mean? What are you masquerading for?"

"It's no masquerade. I'm a governess because—I can not dig, and to beg I am ashamed," said Mary, with a miserable little laugh. "That's all."

"But do you mean to say you've got to do it?" said Meredith, dazedly.

"Yes. Everything went in a big smash on the Stock Exchange more than a year ago. I have to do something, and the Wintons wanted a governess for their two little nephews who are living with them, that's all."

"All!" said Meredith, violently. "And I knew nothing of it. I never heard a word of this before. When we met last do you know what sent me away in such haste? Can you guess?"

"No."

"It was because I was afraid to stay. I loved you so much, and I could not speak. I was only a poor soldier of fortune—you were a wealthy heiress. I had already been called a fortune hunter by those who must have seen how I lingered at your side. I didn't think you cared, so I went away. Now, Mary darling, I'm free to speak. I can't give you the riches that are gone, but I can give you a good home and lots of love. Do you care a little? Try to, Mary, when I care so much. I believe Fate brought us together on purpose."

"And let us in a siding," said Mary, with a smile breaking over her face like sunshine through mist.

"It might have left us in a worse place," cried Meredith, his arm about her shoulders. "Mary, is it going to be 'Yes?'"

"Yes—yes," murmured Mary.

How Dot Wilson Found Milk an Aid to Natural Loveliness

By LILIAN LAUFERTY.

IF you want to have your skin white, your eyes bright, your digestion good and your weight always adjusted to a pleasing plumpness that does not increase to stoutness, try the milk diet. This is pretty pink and white, sparkling-eyed Dot Wilson's great beauty secret, and she longs for converts to her theory of the simple life."

I found Miss Wilson and her sisters in a cool, wind-swept room down at Brighton Beach, New York, and after I had adjusted myself to this triple personality as illustrated by the "three-twin" sisters, we settled down to a cozy little visit that gave me one or two brand-new ideas for the attainment of beauty. The first idea was something no one said—it was just the generous, kindly attitude of admiration and willingness to have their "baby sister" featured that Miss Doris Wilson and Miss Alma showed throughout our interview. Next fall B. F. Keith will give you all a chance to see the three clever girls who make up the Doris Wilson trio—but before that time pray let me present to you a bit of their philosophy of life—and beauty.

Only Milk.

"Milk, milk, nothing but milk—that is what my mother brought me up on. None of her children had any other article of diet until they were 12; and I have never found anything so nourishing, so easy to digest and so productive of good results. So milk is my diet, and though the girls vary from it, they often regret some indiscretion of diet to the tune of a pain of a skin rash or one of the ills that food is so generous about presenting people with," said Miss Dot.

"I live on milk—no water to drink, for milk takes its place. No indigestible food can tempt me, for milk keeps me so well, so buoyant and so free from nerves that I flourish thereon and never long for the flavor of any food but my tried and true friend. About twice a year I have a taste of some such foreign substance as ice cream. Oh, yes, I can eat food, and I do occasionally, but I don't like it.

"I drink eight quarts of milk a day—not iced milk to shock the sensitive stomach nerves, but normal tempered milk.

"I sip it slowly—'Just sneak it down,' said one specialist who cures all sorts of nervous and digestive diseases by a seven week' milk cure. Well, it takes me about fifteen minutes to drink one glass of milk, and I am enjoying it all the time. We're all only bigger babies—babies grown up—and if it is so good for the wee things to live on milk, why should it not be good for them to go on living on milk, the friendly food of their childhood? The girls drink five or six glasses of milk a day, and whenever they are tired or nervous, or feel on the verge of a little breakdown, back they go to the milk diet, and then they just get in tune with things again."

Miss Dot Wilson.

I looked at the three pairs of bright eyes—blue, blue-gray and hazel-gray—each pair with a spark of light at the back of their starry depths; I studied the creamy, peachblow complexions, and the gracefully rounded, tall figures, and I decided that as a near-milk cure made you pretty and the absolute milk-dietist was conceded to be the prettiest of the sisters, perhaps it would be a good idea to go right off and corner the milk market.

THEIR MARRIED LIFE

By MABEL HERBERT URNER.

PARIS at 7 o'clock of a summer evening! The gleaming lights, the gay gowns of the women, the trees, the outdoor cafes—Helen, clinging to Warren's arm, walked down the broad boulevard athrill with the glamour of it all.

It had been just four hours since they arrived from Cherbourg—tired, dusty, travel-stained. But now, rested and in cooler clothes, they started out to find, as Warren expressed it, "a place to feed."

Where should they go? Helen suggested a number of well-known places that she had read of in the guide book. But Warren was determined to have their first dinner at a restaurant he had been particularly fond of when he was in Paris eight years before.

Although he had forgotten the name, he had felt confident of his sense of location. They had taken a 'bus to Porte St. Martin and had walked several blocks in what he felt was the right direction.

"Must be around here somewhere," frowning down a street that was plainly unfamiliar. "I don't believe they've moved."

"Isn't that a restaurant over there—where the lights are?" asked Helen hopefully.

"By Jove! I believe that's the place," as they crossed the wide street. "I'd have sworn it was on the other side."

Entering, they were met by an officious head waiter, who bustled ahead, ushering them to a table in an inner room.

"Oh, we don't want to sit back here," objected Warren. "Give us a table out on the veranda."

"Sorry, monsieur, but they're all taken."

"Why, there's a half dozen vacant ones up at that end."

"They're all reserved, monsieur," repeated the head waiter stolidly.

Warren turned to Helen with a scowling "So they know that game over here, too. This fellow's looking for five francs. Well, what do you say? Want to sit back here—or look up some other place?"

"Oh, dear, let's go somewhere else," resenting the supercilious air of the head waiter, who stood impatiently tapping the dinner card with his pencil.

Outside Warren demanded curtly:

"Now, where to? It's getting late and I'm hungry. We don't want to wander around all night, you know."

"But, dear, we don't want to stay there. That man was almost insolent."

He Blames Her.

"Well, you're pretty darn particular," as usual throwing the responsibility upon her. "We'd have been sure of good food there, anyway. But you're always kicking. Suppose you find a place now."

Helen realized that Warren was on the verge of one of his irritable moods, when he would blame her for whatever happened, however inconsistent or unjust. He had had nothing to eat since that early and unsatisfactory luncheon on the train. It was a critical moment, and she was desperately anxious to find some other good restaurant at once—before his growing hunger increased his irritability.

They walked on for several blocks, Helen gazing anxiously in every direction, while Warren maintained the scowling, sullen silence that always foreboded a storm.

"Oh, there, dear!" eagerly, as she caught sight of a balcony, high above the street, with white clothed tables and rose-shaded lights. "Doesn't that look like a good place?"

"You can't tell anything about these strange places in Paris," growled Warren. "May be rotten. But we've got to eat somewhere. Come on. And we'll stay here—understand? Whether we get a table you like or not. No more trotting around for me to-night."

Helen followed Warren up the broad, red-carpeted stairs, hoping desperately that at this place things would "go right."

The first glimpse was disappointing. The room was crowded. Would they have to go somewhere else?

"Sounds Good."

As they stood uncertainly at the doorway, a couple rose from a most desirable table on the veranda—one that Helen had seen from the street. If they could only get that!

The next moment the head waiter was bowing them toward it. Two other waiters rushed forward with fresh linen and silver, and a third placed a footstool for Helen's feet.

"Oh, dear, it's a wonderful place," sinking back with a sense of infinite relief that a critical situation had been safely passed.

"Well, we'll not get enthusiastic till we see what the food's like," grunted Warren, somewhat appeased by the attention they had received.

"I can't make anything out of this," scowling at the menu, which was illegibly written in French with pale purple ink.

"Will you have our 5-franc table d'hote dinner, monsieur?" asked a waiter at his elbow.

"Umph, you speak English? Well, that simplifies things. What do we get with that dinner?"

"Hors d'oeuvres, potage, fish, entree, roast, salade, entrements and a bottle of red or white Bordeaux."

"That sounds pretty good," assented Warren. "All right; we'll try it."

To Helen the atmosphere of the place and the street scene below was one of enchantment. She was beginning to feel the charm of Paris.

With the hors d'oeuvres and first glass of wine, the scowling frown on Warren's brow had relaxed, and with the thick green Saint Germain soup he grew almost genial.

"Just taste that fish! It's great. What they call filet of sole at home is only flounder. We never see the real thing there. This is an all right place."

"Oh, I'm so glad we found this, dear. For I felt that you were getting out of humor, and would blame me for not staying at that other place," exclaimed Helen, who, womanlike, always wanted to go back over a situation, instead of being content to let well enough alone. "And I couldn't bear to have our first dinner in Paris an unhappy one."

"Who in thunder was going to make it unhappy, unless you were?" growled Warren, who hated post-mortems. "What the devil are you harping on it now for, anyway?"

"Oh, I only meant, dear—" began Helen, hastening to conciliate. But fortunately at this moment the waiter uncovered the fowl, roasted to a delicate brown, and Warren's attention was diverted from Helen's untactful remark.

"Dear, there's not so much difference in the gowns worn by the French women," commented Helen, now anxious to change the subject. There aren't any sensational dresses here. That woman over there in pink, is rather striking, but any of the others might be in New York."

"Well, this isn't the sort of place where you'd see much in the way of dress. Some night I'll take you to supper at Maxim's. The gowns there'll be striking enough."

"Oh, are we going to Maxim's?" delightedly. "I thought it was a dreadful place."

"Not so dreadful as they want you to think—that's their best asset. You'll find it pretty tame. More than half the crowd will be rubber necks like ourselves."

But Helen had read and heard much of Maxim's, and as she minced over the fruit salad she gazed down on the gay boulevard in eager anticipation of a supper there.

"Dear, what IS this?" as the waiter placed before them two small brown jars filled with a thick creamy substance. "Search me!" shrugged Waren, investigating it with a spoon.

"That's Creme de Zeigny, Monsieur. Will you have sugar with it?"

"I'll try it straight first."

"Oh, it's delicious, dear," exclaimed Helen enthusiastically. "It's sort of sour, salty and sweet! More like a delicate liquid cheese."

Very Smooth.

"By Jove, that is pretty smooth," admitted Warren. Isn't this the stuff the Thustons raved over when they got back last year? We'll have this often—that's sure."

When the waiter had cleared off the table, Warren lit his cigar and turned over the check placed unobtrusively before him.

"Ten francs—two dollars! Well that's what I call a good run for your money. Everything specially cooked, too—and that was a whole chicken. To get a dinner like that in New York, you'd have to order it a la carte, and with that wine it would cost you not a cent less than $10."

"Now aren't you glad we didn't stay at that other restaurant?" insisted Helen with a true feminine persistency. "The food COULDN'T have been any better! You see I didn't find such a bad place after all."

But Warren was no longer in an inflammable mood. The excellent dinner had had a most pacifying effect on his temper. So to this rather indiscreet remark, he only shrugged a good-natured: "Umph, that's right—rub it in!"

Advice to a Young Man

By DOROTHY DIX.

A YOUNG man, who is ambitious and who feels within himself the ability to rise in the world, is very much in love with a pretty young girl who has no aspirations beyond a new dress and going to Coney Island or a cheap theater.

The young man is making enough money for them to be married on and live in fair comfort in their present status in life, but he is not satisfied with this.

He is anxious to get an education and study a profession. To this the sweetheart objects. She isn't willing for the young man to make his way through college. She doesn't see any use in an education, any how. When the young man talks to her about books it bores her to death, and when he wants to take her to hear a good lecture or good music she offsets it with a proposal to take in a vaudeville show.

The young man wants to know whether he should give up his books or his girl, or if there is any way in which he could interest his fiancee in intellectual pursuits and kindle the fires of ambition in her soul.

To answer the last question first, I would say, no. The homely old proverb about the impossibility of making a silk purse out of a sow's ear is still gospel true. There is no way to make a clod aspire, and you can no more change the tastes of a woman who was born without a perception of the finer things of life than you can change the color of her eyes, or the height of her stature.

Born That Way.

The girl who does not perceive the advantage of an education, or the necessity for one, who yawns over even a novel and who doesn't see why anybody reads the daily paper, who is absolutely and totally unintellectual was simply born that way. There's some lack in her mental equipment, and nothing that her husband can do is going to supply it. She was just born that way, and that way she will stay to her dying day, and it isn't her fault.

Such a woman may be the best of housekeepers, the most devoted of wives, but she is no mental companion for an intelligent man. Many men marry this kind of a girl because she has a pretty face, and then torture her trying to make her clever—something she can never be. This is cruelly unjust. He who marries a girl who frankly admits that she doesn't like to read and has no ambition should never bother her with books, or reproach her with her lack of progressiveness.

As to which he should take when a man is called upon to choose between his career and his sweetheart, I should say take the career every time, because an ambitious man soon learns to hate any woman who is the handicap that prevents him winning in the race of life. When even those that we love become a burden upon us that keep us from success—good-bye love! This is unromantic, but true.

Many an ambitious man finds out after marriage that he has saddled himself unknowingly with a wife who can not and will not keep pace with him, and who holds him back from the achievements that he is capable of making. Such a man is the victim of a hard and bitter fate, but in honor there is nothing left for him but to bear with whatever fortitude he can the misfortune that he has brought upon himself.

A Chance.

But the man who finds out before marriage that the girl he thinks himself in love with is not his mental and spiritual mate, that she can not think his thoughts, that she is not interested in the pursuits that he is interested in; that she does not wish to reach the goal toward which his feet are set, has still a chance to save himself from a marriage that is bound to bring misery both to himself and the woman.

For what attracts him to her is only the ephemeral charms of her youth and good looks, and when they are gone, as they must be in a few years, nothing remains but the memory of the sacrifice he has made for her, and the irksomeness of a tie that binds him to a wife with whom he has not one thing in common.

In that day a man remembers what he might have been and is not. He sees other men, no better equipped than himself, climbing up to the top of the ladder while he sits at the bottom with his dull and commonplace wife. And in that day he sees with fatal clearness just how much of the earth earthy is the woman who is not animated by anything except a desire for the things that make for her physical comfort.

Matrimony can mean the closest companionship that two human beings ever attain. It can be literally two souls with but a single thought, and it can mean a lonesomeness that is as great as Robinson Crusoe ever suffered on his desert isle. And when it is that it is the abomination of desolation.

The Solitude.

Think of what the ambitious man suffers when he is married to a woman who never wants to advance one step, who never sees why he wants to make a change, and whom he has to fight at every step of his progress. Think of the solitude of soul of a man married to a woman with whom he can never discuss a book he has read, or a play he has seen, or an opera he has heard; who never even comprehends anything that he tries to tell her that is more psychic than the price of butchers' meat. Not always "the woman who never could know, and never could understand" is a vampire. Only too often she is just a dull and stupid wife, without brains or imagination or aspiration.

So I say to the man who is hesitating between his career and his pretty, ambitionless, unintellectual sweetheart to choose the career. He will soon outgrow her anyway, and it is far, far better for both that this inevitable separation should come before they are married than afterward.

Confessions of a Medium

No. 3.---When the Clock Stopped

By Chas. D. Isaacson.

Copyright 1913 by International News Service.

IN the midst of the seance the grave faced spirit medium paused. He slowly rose from his seat before his assembled auditors and impressively spoke:

"My good friends, we are now going to attempt the most difficult experiment of all—something never before accomplished in the records of the world. If we succeed in doing it, we shall prove beyond all possible doubt the fact that we CAN communicate with the dead."

He cleared his throat and waited as a sharp flash of lightning illumined the room and a murderous peal of thunder crashed on its heels.

It was a night late in August—a hot, black, scary night, when you look warily over your shoulder at the bent, slinking, soaking figures that pass you by; when the very air seems laden with hobgoblin phantoms, and the wind seems to echo the moaning and groaning of lost souls.

A Night of Wonders.

Within the darkened room, fifty frightened people held firmly to their chairs and listened to the deep, far-away tones of the speaker medium. This had been a night of wonders. Tables and chairs had floated about by unseen supernatural means. Wonderful messages had made fifty hearts flutter like leaves in a Kansas cyclone. To these persons, accustomed to unusual things brought about by their mystifying leader, the startling events of the meeting had overshadowed anything of the past. And now the thought of something still more dramatic brought them to breathless and awed attention.

"Dear spirit," breathed the medium, raising his eyes to the ceiling, "we crave your assistance and beg your pardon for tiring you so much this day. Accomplish this seeming impossibility which I am about to put to you, and prove your existence and your ability to communicate with us, to the most skeptical, unbelieving member of this circle.

"Over there is a clock"—and the speaker pointed a long, lean, bony finger to the opposite end of the room, where on the mantel could be faintly traced the outlines of a ponderous old-fashioned timepiece.

"Listen. Spirit, listen. Over there, you hear the ticking of that clock. Over there—you head it?"

Tick—tick—tick fell on the ears of the listeners, who held their breath for fear it would drown the sound which grew louder and louder with each successive second, until it seemed to beat on their very hearts.

A Request.

"Spirit, think carefully now please. Here is where the experiment begins. Can you—will you STOP THAT CLOCK?"

Deathly silence ensued. Just tick—tick—loud and clear and sharp as a bell.

No answer.

"Spirit, will you do it?"

Tick—tick—tick.

"Will you?"

"Why—why, y-yes, I'll try," came the answer in mysterious taps on the table.

Tick—tick—tick — tick — each second seemed an hour to the 50 auditors, who sat half turned toward the clock, eager-eared, faint-hearted.

Tick—tick——

Snap! In the very middle of a beat! IT STOPPED!

Oh, the eternity of silence that followed broken soon by a storm of gasps and screams. There was a crash of thunder, and some one, no longer able to stand the oppression of the darkness, turned on the gas, flooding the room with light. Then they crowded about the clock—pale and wide-eyed. It was stopped, no question of that. The men, comparing it with their watches, found it recorded just one minute behind theirs.

"Wonderful!" "Weird!" "Proves spiritualism absolutely," "Could NEVER have been done by human or material means—it was surely the work of a spirit." These were the comments rapidly uttered, as they examined the clock to see if any wires or mechanical contrivances could have been connected with it.

The Answer.

This incident happened. To those who were there, it was the most wonderful phenomenon they had ever witnessed. At least that is how it happened to all but the medium. And the medium was myself. Would you like to know how it was done? I will tell you.

No spirit stopped the clock. No mechanical means stopped it. Even I did not stop it. IN THE FIRST PLACE, THE CLOCK WAS NOT GOING AT ALL! "How and why was ticking heard?"

Here is the whole story: Back of me, on a roll-top desk, I had previously placed a very tiny alarm clock, noted for its loud tick. Nobody thinks of a clock until you mention it. When I said, "You hear the ticking over there—OVER THERE," the audience imagined the sound emanated from the direction I pointed; and, by suggestion, on which is based hypnotism, by the way, they had placed it as coming from the silent clock on the mantel. Then, while they were listening for the unexpected, half turned to the opposite wall, I had, unobserved, slipped my finger to the pendulum, stopped the alarm and dropped the clock into a drawer!

"But then how was the other clock the exact time?"

Before the audience had arrived I had placed the hands ahead several hours and had brought my experiment to conform to the very minute I had arranged. This was simple—in a flash of lightning I had casually looked at my watch. The mystery of the night, the darkness, the wonders already witnessed, had all aided me to fool these intelligent people, among whom were a magazine writer, an artist, two theatrical folks, and several writers and lawyers.

Now consider this: That this experiment was far more dramatic and inexplicable than is generally seen at professional seances, where money is paid for admittance. Yet on incidents such as these, the credulous people of the masses are convinced of spiritism and defrauded by fakers, whose wonders I warrant could be unraveled as simply as the one I have just recorded. I did these things to study and expose. Professionals do them for money. Is it not highly probable that others who earn their living at this mockery are forced to work out similar "wonders?" I do not say spiritualism is wrong. I do not essay to pass judgment on this great question. It is against the fakers that I direct my campaign, beseeching every sensible man and woman to save their hard-earned money and evade them.

Going the Limit.

Jones—If Mr. Oldboy makes any such assertion, I will denounce him as a liar.

President—Mr. Jones, I call you to order. Our by-laws do not allow you to go that far.

Jones—Then I call Mr. Oldboy a liar as far as it is permitted by the by-laws of this association.

Literally.

Six Miles Up!

And Safety Instead of Death Because of a New and Wonderful Device for Aviators

The picture, which was taken at an altitude of more than six miles, shows Messrs. Maurice Bienaime and Jacques Schneider in the car of the balloon "Icare" wearing the patent breathing apparatus. In 1878 the balloon "Zenith" attained a height of about four miles, but two of its three passengers were suffocated. With this apparatus the fatality could not have occurred.

By GARRETT P. SERVISS.

THE greatest peril for those who ascend to great altitudes is not that of falling, but that of being suffocated, like fish taken out of water!

It was the climbers of high mountains who first discovered the fact that it is often difficult for men to breathe at a height of from two and a half to three miles above sea level. The late Edward Whymper, the conqueror of the terrible Matterhorn, made many experiments on this, and he concluded, after climbing Chimborazo and other huge peaks in the Andes, that the cause of "mountain sickness," as the trouble was called, was due both to the lessened value of air that is inspired at such altitudes and to the expansion of the gases contained within the body, producing a pressure upon the internal organs.

But more recent study has shown that the difficulty arises mainly from the comparative lack of oxygen in the upper air, and that this may be overcome by means of apparatus supplying extra oxygen to the lungs.

The two principal constituents of the atmosphere are oxygen and nitrogen. Nitrogen is an inert gas which stifles animal respiration. Oxygen, on the other hand, is a very active gas, which, when breathed, supports animal life. When mixed, as near the earth's surface, in the proportion of about four volumes of nitrogen to one of oxygen, the air is respirable, and the inertness of the nitrogen does no harm. But if the proportion of oxygen is reduced the air becomes stifling.

Now, oxygen is heavier than nitrogen in ratio of about eight to seven, and in obedience to the law that heavier substances sink lower than lighter ones, the oxygen thins out as the height above the ground increases, until its proportion to the nitrogen becomes considerably reduced. Above three or four miles the amount of oxygen is so much diminished that breathing becomes very difficult, and at still higher altitudes respiration may cease entirely.

A Tragedy.

A very tragic instance of the effect thus produced is furnished by the story of the famous balloon ascent made in April, 1878, by Gaston Tissandier, Croce Spinelli and Signor Sivel. They ascended from La Villette in France, in the balloon "Zenith," to a height of 28,200 feet, or a little more than five and one-third miles. The thinness of the air, and as we now know, the relative lack of oxygen, killed Spinelli and Sivel, and nearly cost the life of Tissandier.

To show what modern science and invention have done to avert this peril of the high atmosphere, let us turn to the story of a still higher ascent, made on May 28, 1913, by the balloon "Icare," carrying Albert Senouque, Jacques Schneider and M. Bienaime. They started from Lamotte-Breuil in France, and attained an elevation of nearly 33,000 feet, or six and a quarter miles, and yet they did not suffer at all, and came down in perfect condition, and exulting in their great feat!

Their success and immunity from suffocation were due to the fact that they took with them the apparatus shown in the accompanying photograph.

A Wonderful Picture.

This consists of an air-tight vessel filled with compressed oxygen. A mask which can be fitted closely over the nose and mouth is connected by a tube with the reservoir of oxygen. There is a pressure gauge which enables the aeronaut to measure the quantity of oxygen remaining in the reservoir, and there is also a device by which to regulate the amount flowing through the tubes. Thus they could take just as much oxygen as they needed and no more. The rate of supply varied from two quarts per minute to ten. The reservoir contained about 1,600 quarts.

They began to breathe the oxygen when at a height of about 11,000 feet.

The method of using the apparatus is shown in the photograph, which was taken by Senouque, showing Bienaime and Schneider, with their breathing masks on, at the very time when they were at the top of their flight, more than six miles above the earth!

Similar apparatus has recently been carried by mountain climbers, and by the pilots of aeroplanes ascending to great altitudes. With the rapid progress of aerial navigation it will become indispensable in the future.

If fish had human brains they might safely make a voyage of discovery in the air!

MELANCHOLY WOMEN

Should Profit by Mrs. Hurley's Experience—Her Own Story Here Told.

Eldon, Mo.—"I was troubled with displacement, organic inflammation and female weakness. For two years I could not stand on my feet long at a time and I could not walk two blocks without enduring cutting and drawing pains down my right side which increased once a month. I have been at that time purple in the face and would walk the floor. I could not lie down or sit still sometimes for a day and a night at a time. I was nervous, had very little appetite, no ambition, melancholy, and often felt as though I had not a friend in the world.

"After I had tried most every female remedy first, without success, my mother-in-law advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I did so and gained in strength every day. I have now no trouble in any way and highly praise your medicine. It advertises itself."—Mrs. S. T. HURLEY, Eldon, Missouri.

Remember, the remedy which did this was Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. For sale everywhere.

It has helped thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing down feeling, indigestion, and nervous prostration, after all other means have failed. Why don't you try it?

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

IN ALL PROBABILITY, YES.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

A certain girl friend of mine recently wrote me a letter asking a favor of me. I could easily oblige her as the favor is slight. I have been keeping company with a friend of hers lately and am decidedly in love with her. She (the one who wrote the letter) knows this, but still bestows her attentions on me. I myself am not paying her much attention and do not like her. Do you think I would arouse the jealousy of my lover if I showed the other friend this favor just to be polite? M. B.

You letter is rather ambiguous, as you do not state the nature of the favor.

If of such a nature it would cause trouble between you and your sweetheart, you must refuse. Your first thought should be of her.

And please see to it that the other girl's attentions are bestowed elsewhere. I am afraid she will make trouble.

THERE MAY BE SOME EXCUSE.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 18, am considered very handsome, and am in love with a boy three years my senior. He tells me he loves me, but when we have an engagement he always disappoints me. Do you think he is sincere? MARJORIE.

If by "always" you mean once or twice, he may have been unavoidably detained. But if he makes a practice of disappointing you, you must make no more engagements with him, for he cares nothing for you.

HIS RUDENESS IS INEXCUSABLE.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I have been married four years and am only 22 years old. My husband is 29. When out in company with my husband, is it not his place to notice me or talk to me?

When out dining at a friend's, is it right for him to pay attention to young ladies at the table by passing dishes to them and not noticing me? R. B.

He does everything he should not, and his sins of omission are as great.

His behavior is unpardonable, but I know of no redress for you. I hope all girls of 18 who think they are old enough to select a husband will take warning from you.

OBEY YOUR PARENTS.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I have been attending college, and last fall met a young man who is also a student. For the past four months he has been very attentive to me. I love him very much. My parents, who know the young man, say he is wild and associates with bad company. They want me to give him up. What shall I do? I love my family, but I also love the young man very, very much. M. F. F.

I would urge you to obey your parents, were the young man desirable, for parents always know best. How much more I urge it since he is wild and dissolute! Give him up! Let there be no compromise. I add my pleadings to those of your parents.

"Brave!" he exclaimed in low, contemptuous tones. "It takes no bravery to fight a coward—and that's what this ghost is! It's a coward, like every other spook. Did you ever hear of any spirit that walked in the daytime? Never! They sneak and dodge and hide in crumbling and deserted places. I tell you that men are not half so afraid of spirits as spirits are of men! Face the supernatural, and it is beaten before the fight begins. Spooks, horse thieves and peevish wildcats can all be tamed by the same little charm."

He stoped in a dead silence. The others were staring at him intently, but with highly different expressions.

"Charm?" repeated the Duke, vaguely.

"What is it?" asked the Princess, breathlessly.

Unostentatiously, Jarvis produced his pistol, handling it as one might handle a familiar pencil. To one reared in a community where firearms are never seen excepting in the windows of the hardware store the sight of a pistol occasions either panic or the utmost indifference, depending entirely on the degree of ignorance or natural timidity. But in localities where the revolver is as common and serves the same purpose as the rapier of medieval Europe it is a known and fixed quantity. To one native to those localities the interest in the appearance of the pistol is directed entirely toward the man who displays it—what manner of man he is and what is his manner of handling the weapon.

The Duke had never seen a pistol excepting once or twice on the field of honor and strapped to the thigh of a cavalry man. He was an utter stranger to the type of man to whom a 44-caliber revolver is a shield sword. Consequently, though any ten-year-old boy from the lower Ohio Valley could have told him at one glance that Warren Jarvis carried a revolver. Because it was a protection and not a menace, as it is to be unused, the appearance of the weapon seemed to amuse him, rather than otherwise.

A Joke.

"I had been hoping, Mr. Warren," he said, with light scorn, "that you had some subtle method of handling this problem. But no! You propose to meet the forces of the supernatural with firearms! I may tell you that this specter has been fired at before without the slightest effect."

Jarvis smiled and nodded as he returned the pistol to his pocket.

"Quite likely," Your Excellency. I have seen rifle fire that had not the slightest effect on a wildcat—for the very good reason that the shooting was wilder than the cat."

The Duke made a gesture as if waiving all respnosibility.

"I am sorry for you, Mr. Warren. You will find the ghost more real than the treasure."

"But the treasure is real, Carlos!" exclaimed the Princess, with spirit. "Would I have crossed the ocean for this locket unless I knew? Why, with this paer a total stranger, anybody who had never seen the castle, could walk right up to the place and point out the very stone that hides it!"

For the barest fraction of a second the glances of the two men crossed like foils.

"Pretty dangerous sort of paper to have around," observed Jarvis, slowly. "Look out that somebody doesn't get there ahead of you."

"Yes, it is a dangerous paper," chimed in the Duke in the same time, "if it leads any one into the castle."

The young man laughed, silently and naturally.

"Well, Your Excellency, I'd go a long way for the fun of unraveling a good mystery with a little spice of danger thrown in."

Dangerous Ground.

The Duke nodded as if he understood and sympathized with the feeling. Then, as if something had just occurred to him, he remarked:

"You needn't have gone so far, Mr. Warren. You are leaving a very unusual case behind you in New York. I suppose you read the papers on your way to the boat?"

The young man's lips twitched and he glanced at the trunk.

"Why, no. I was so wrapped up in my baggage I really didn't have a chance."

He glanced slyly at the Princess, who immediately discovered something of interest out of a portholc.

"This will interest you, too, cousin," remarked the Duke, picking up a newspaper he had dropped when he first presented himself to his kinswoman. "You were at the Vanderlip last night, I believe." He opened the paper, found the item he had in mind and read aloud:

"'Pistol duel in Vanderlip Hotel—Guests awake in panic to find prominent Kentuckian dangerously wounded by unknown assailant—Mysterious escape.—Colonel James Markham, a prominent and wealthy Kentuckian, nearly met his death at 5 o'clock this morning in a pistol duel in his room at the Vanderlip Hotel.' At a late hour the police had no clew to the identity of his assailant except the remarkable fact that he is still hiding somewhere in the hotel.'"

"He's probably a long way from the hotel by now," interrupted Jarvis with a smile.

"They say he couldn't have gotten out without being seen."

Jarvis shrugged his shoulders. "That's the theory of the police or the reporters."

"What do you think?" demanded the Duke.

"Oh, he might have escaped in a thousand ways. But that's hardly in my line. That work belongs to what we call the 'gum-shoes.'"

"'Gum-shoes!'" echoed the Duke, with amazement.

"Yes, ordinary detectives," Jarvis explained. "But," he added, turning to the Princess, "we are keeping you from getting settled, I'm afraid. So, if you will excuse me, I will see you both at dinner, perhaps."

"Yes, do," invited the Princess, graciously. "And, Carlos, do arrange to sit with us. We will have quite a party."

The Police.

Jarvis bowed to the Duke, "I am pleased to have made your acquaintance, Your Excellency."

"Thank you, Mr. Warren. I find you most interesting. I shall be glad to hear more of—of your remarkable profession."

There was just the faintest echo of a sneer in this last, but the young man bowe as if complimented, and had just turned to the door, when there was a sharp knock. He drew back and the Princess quickly opened it.

With no greeting, bow or apology, two men thrust themselves into the stateroom. Jarvis recognized them at once and set his shoulders for the final combat.

By this you are not to suppose that he was personally acquainted with the men themselves—his familiarity was with the type. In all the world-wide phantasmagoria of races and classes there is none that can be so readily recognized and classified as the New York detective. With the present craze for uniformed bellboys, pages, milliners' attendants, door tenders, errand boys and governors it is quite possible to confuse the uniformed policeman with some of these. But when he is sent out in plain clothes there is no mistaking him. When you have seen one of them you can recognize any one of them to the extreme range of your vision. There is a combination of a certain physical solidity manifest in their carriage and mental stolidity evidenced in their faces that can be found nowhere else.

This pair were typical—thick-chested, thick-handed, thick-headed, with round moon-like faces.

On the Rack.

One stepped just inside the door and a little to one side of it as if on guard. The other advanced a step farther. He had evidently been decided on as spokesman. He glanced at the two men and then addressed the Princess, consulting a tiny note-book as he spoke.

"Is this Miss M. T. Ar-r-agan?" he inquired in a rich, "far-down" brogue, overlaid with the indescribable Manhattanese accent.

"Yes," replied the Princess, uncertainly, and evidently puzzled by the sudden and unexplained intrusion. Jarvis remained in the background and thrust his wounded hand into his overcoat pocket. The Duke's little mustache began to bristle and he stepped forward.

"You were at the Vanderlip Hotel last night?" pursued Detective Driscoll, ignoring the Duke.

"Ye-es."

"The lock on your door was broken?"

"Yes."

"I am from headquarters, ma'am," explained the detective, having gotten these "damaging admissions." "And I have orders to clear up one or two little matters connected with that affair at the hotel last night."

The exalted cousin could no longer restrain himself.

"Orders, orders!" he burst out. "To break in here! What headquarters?"

Detective Driscoll stared at him in open-eyed insolence. Jarvis smiled discreetly behind his hand.

"Police Headquarters!" bellowed the detective so loudly that every one started. His colleague at the door smiled wearily.

"Do you know whom you are addressing?" spluttered the grandee angrily.

Detective Driscoll rolled toward him, pushed out about five cubic inches of chin and snarled:

"That'll be about all from you!" resentative Kimbrough, of Harris Couna snap. Driscoll returned to the Duke quietly, "let me attend to this matter. Won't you come in, gentlemen?"

"Thanks," said Detective Driscoll, easily, nodding to his partner to close the door and giving the Duke a final glare as if daring him to say another word.

"Yes," Jarvis' pleasant voice added its soothing influence, "we were just talking about the mystery."

The Duke, feeling that he would only risk a loss of dignity by quarreling with a foreign police officer, took the cue and held out the olive branch with a patronizing air.

"You are, I take it," he remarked to Driscoll as the sleuth was peering into his little book, "one of the—er? 'gum shoes.'"

Jarvis snickered, the book shut with a snap. Driscoll returned to the duke and thrust a menacing face into his.

"Gum shoes!" he snarled. "Say, are you tryin' to be funny?"

The Duke, startled, drew back a step.

"Well, sir," he replied half apologetically," you are speaking rather loudly, and, if I may say so, with undue asperity. I presume I have offended you."

"'You presume!'" answered Driscoll. "That's a hot one! Say—who are you, any way?"

The exalted cousin drew himself up and gave one end of his mustache an upward twist.

"I am Hernando, Duke d'Alva," he replied pompously. "I have other titles, but they would hardly interest you."

The detective looked him over from head to foot and licked his lips hungrily.

"Dook de Alvers—and then some, eh? Ain't that nice! Well, if you was the Archbishop of Canterbury I'd run yer in and take yer ashore if yer gimme any more sass!" Fascinated by a savage glare the Duke declined to give him any more "sass," and the detective turned to the Princess, but still eyed the exalted cousin, as if longing for an excuse to "run him in."

Spoiled by Success

PRECISELY as the clocks in the vicinity of Dowman Square announced the hour of midnight, John Maine's pen ceased suddenly in its rapid flight across the paper before him. For a time he sat motionless, his forehead wrinkled in perplexity. Twice he attempted to resume his work, but each time stopped short in the effort.

For five long hours he had worked with feverish mental energy and the first time his pen refused to become the vehicle of his thoughts the physical strength of the man gave out, then, as a gift from the gods, came the blessing of sleep to the jaded worker.

Dimly, vaguely, John Maine became conscious of the fact that his arms were bound and useless at his side. His legs were cramped in an unnatural position; he endeavored to move his head, and discovered, with a painful shock, that his neck was securely held by a tight collar attached to the back of his chair. With startled eyes he glanced round swiftly in the little circle his bonds allowed and saw nothing. Then, as the perspiration oprued from him in his fear, he knew that from somewhere in the room a voice was speaking, slowly, monotonously, but its every word articulated with striking distinctness.

"Don't waste your energy," came in a sibilant whisper. "You have nothing to fear but the truth. Compose yourself.

"I am here to talk," began the voice, "and you to listen."

"So it seems," said Maine briefly. "Tell me," he urged quietly, "who are you?"

"Ten years ago, John Maine," the unknown said, completely ignoring the other's question, "you were a poor man struggling to achieve distinction. Today you are an acknowledged power in the literary world; but has your path upward been a clean, praiseworthy path?"

Congratulations.

The man in the chair stirred uneasily; his eyes sought the one remaining flicker in the fire.

"I suppose," he mused, addressing the tiny, cheerless flame as one in a reverie, "I suppose you're a kind of spectre of the past, eh? You've a remarkably fine idea of stage management," he added, with assumed lightness. "As one artist to another, I congratulate you on your sense of the dramatic."

"You fool! You unspeakable fool!" hissed the voice venomously in his ear. "As you can not tell yourself, suppose I show you what manner of man you are. Take your mind back ten years and tell me what happened then. You can't?"

"I was married ten years ago," Maine replied, hastily.

"So you were married ten years ago, were you?"

"As an unknown man," the voice continued evenly, "without a penny to bless yourself, you married the sweetest little girl in Christendom. She left her parents, she abandoned all to make a mesalliance with you; she shared your garret, she helped you with your work and she bore her altered condition in life with a fortitude which only threw your quibbling nature into more heinous relief. Slowly, gradually, as you mounted the ladder to success, all the magnificent resolutions of your early married life faded into insignificance. You lived only for your work. You became a supreme artist. And you, for whom she had forsaken everything, forgot the very existence of the woman whose heart was still yours.

A Son.

"Five years ago," continued the voice, "a son was born to you, and for a time you forgot you were a man of letters. But you soon slipped away when your clubs called you, when the public fawned on you; and your wife, broken-hearted and neglected, fled from your home. Did you realize then"—the words came in a thundering torrent now—"the revolting act of savagery which cast your wife adrift without the child she loved so dearly?"

"Good heavens!" exclaimed Maine fearfully. "Are you—"

"Listen!" came the imperious command. "She wanted your love, and you had buried it in your success. But, strangely as it sounds, you still loved the child that is sleeping in this house. Do you think that the boy has not missed his mother more than you have missed your wife? John Maine, in the grate before you are ashes, cold and gray. They are your portion in life, for that boy of yours, his heart yearning for the tender love you can not give, is even now slipping into the void——"

"Enough!" screamed the wretched man. "You lie—you know you lie!" He moistened his lips with his tongue. "Who are you?" he asked, with sudden humility.

"I am your better self," came sadly, morosely from a long way off, and John Maine sat up on the words to find himself blinking terrified in the small ere light from a policeman's lantern.

"Beg pardon, sir," whispered the policeman, quickly covering the light; "but I guessed you would be in here at work as usual, and, and——"

His Wife.

"I've been asleep, constable," Maine interposed slowly, and the words conveyed a subtle relief to his aching heart at once. "But how on earth did you get in?" he asked, suddenly realizing that the presence of a policeman in his house in the early hours of the morning was something to be explained.

"Softly, sir," counseled the other. "I saw a woman creep through a window at the back, and followed her. I've been on this beat for a good many years, sir, and I fancied I knew who she was. I thought perhaps you might like"——

Maine was standing up now, alert and brisk.

"Is she still in the house?" he asked. The constable nodded.

"She crept upstairs, sir," he said simply.

But John Maine waited for no more. With his heart pounding at his ribs, he sprang out of the room and leaped swiftly up the stairs.

The policeman followed him slowly.

Maine had reached the landing which led to the boy's room, when he heard a door in front of him open. He switched on the electri light, and there, panting fearfully in the sudden blaze, leaning against the wall, was the thin and emacited figure of a woman.

Her clothes were in rags and atters; in her arms she clutched a sleeping child to her breast.

They stood thus, silently regarding each other, until the sound of a discreet cough warned Maine of the presence of the constable. With hands that shook perceptibly, and eyes in which there lurked a strange moistness, John Maine turned swiftly on the landing.

"You're a good fellow," he said quietly. "It is as you surmised. My wife's—he waved his hand courteously, to the wretched woman in front of him—"has returned home unexpectedly. You can let yourself out."

They waited until the man had passed through the house and they could hear his retreating footsteps die away in the distance. Then:

"Maisie," said Maine, gently, "you have come home to me?"

The woman tottered where she stood, one arm went out before her, sweetly, pathetically, and John Maine sprang to her side in an instant.

"Maisie, my love!" he cried, the tears coursing down his cheeks with the weakness of a strong man who is suddenly robbed of his calm, "thank God, I know my better self!"

Jealousy.

The teacher was addressing his pupils on the subject of laziness and idleness.

He drew a terrible picture of the habitual loafer—the man who dislikes work and who begs for all he gets.

"Now, John," said the teacher to a little boy who had been very inattentive during the lesson.

John was instantly on the alert.

"Tell me," continued the teacher, "who is the miserable individual who gets clothes, food and lodging and yet does nothing in return?"

John's face brightened.

"Please, sir," said he, "the baby."

'AN EPIDEMIC OF HOFMANITIS HAS HIT NASHVILLE

NASHVILLE, TENN., July 12.—An epidemic of Hofmanitis has broken out among the baseball bugs in Voltown, and the infection has spread like wildfire, even unto the mightiest hammer-throwers, who have been blistering the poor, old Vanishing Vols for their rank showing in the gonfalon hunt.

The town is simply delirious in its joy, that the friendship of the old swimming days in Akron between Bill Schwartz and the former Pirate was strong enough to induce Artie to rush to his old pal's assistance, while the appeal for help was loudest.

There is a striking parallel to be found in Circus Solly's case with that of the boy manager, for it was Bill Bernhardt's distress signal in 1909, when first base was in wretched hands, that persuaded Schwartz to give up a swell job with the Diamond Rubber people and hike to Nashville to help out his old friend he had known back with the Cleveland Naps, when Bernhard was one of the kingpin slabbers of the big show. It's a hoary narrative, but it only goes to prove the infernal way history has of "working in double."

Doesn't Appear To Be "In".

Maybe something better could have happened to the Vols than the acquisition of Hofman, but nobody can make the fans in this town believe that, and they are not forgetting that it was for the sake of "Auld Lang Syne" that Artie came, and Schwartz could not have built a greater monument in the fans' hearts in any other fashion than by landing this "ex-major leaguer who is going back."

If Artie is on his way, nobody can see the end of the passage with a pair of field glasses, and there is quite a swarm of youngsters coming who will have to travel at a mighty hefty clip before they will meet Hofman going out.

Schwartz benched himself when Artie lighted in camp, and it was the ex-Cub's tip to the boy leader that he warm the bench a while until he could get together the nerves that were shattered by the sickening plunge which the Vols have taken cellarways.

He Was Chance's Understudy.

The first station was no stranger to Artie, for when he was at the top of his stride he was Frank Chance's understudy with the Cubs, and although the big fellow had not seen a baseball for two weeks, jumped right into the game and took care of everything like a veteran.

Hofman brought to the Vols the stuff they have been so sadly in need of—ginger—and he wasn't stingy about handing it around. The Schwartzmen have been playing in a totally demoralized fashion. They have gone out with an idea that no matter who was in the box, they were doomed to lose, and with their leader unable either to hit or field, not a man on the club has been able to play anything like his best.

BALDWIN MATCHED TO BATTLE LEACH CROSS

LOS ANGELES, July 12.—Matty Baldwin and Leach Cross have been matched for a 20-round bout at Vernon Arena on July 29 by Promoter McCarey. Arrangements for the the match were made by wire and closed in record time. Sam Wallach, the dentist's manager, wired to McCarey from San Francisco accepting terms for the fight, and will return here with Cross on Sunday and take possession of Jack Doyle's camp at Vernon on Tuesday.

Kid Williams and Charley Ledoux, the bantams scheduled for twenty rounds at Vernon on Tuesday night, made a short day of it in the training camps to-day, but to-morrow's workout will be a strenuous one and both boys will go the limit for the benefit of the usual Sunday crowd. The little fellows are in fine shape.

CROSS AND SHERIDAN MAY CLASH AT KANSAS CITY

CHICAGO, July 12.—Leach Gross, the New York dentist-fighter, who has gained the position of contender for the lightweight championship through his knockouts of Joe Mandot and Bud Anderson will have for his next opponent a Chicago fighter, if arrangements under way do not go awry.

Cross practically has agreed to terms for a ten-round bout with Mickey Sheridan to be staked at Kansas City next month. Fred Gilmore, manager of Sheridan, yesterday received a telegram from Cross' manager, who is at Los Angeles, stating that everything was o. k. for the match if held the early part of next month.

The Kansas City promoters are anxious to hold the fight at the American Association baseball park either on August 2 or August 9, but it is understood there is some hitch over the plan.

CHAPPELLE PICKED TO WIN BIG EVENT AT NEW YORK

NEWYORK, July 12.—Arthur Chappelle, the motorcycle speed demon, was to-day picked to win the sweepstakes handicap at the Brighton Beach motordrome to-night. In a sensational practice drive of nine miles yesterday Chappelle covered the distance in 5 minutes 59 1-5 seconds. This beats the record of 6:01 2-5 set by Eddie Hasha last year. Chappelle will give the field a handicap of two and one-quarter laps.

How Chance Tamed Gotham Fans

Magnetism or Hypnotism Aids

By Bill Bailey.

CHICAGO, July 12.—If any of these modern colleges happens to be seeking a man to teach that valuable art of personal magnetism we know the man they are seeking.

Who? Why, Frank Chance.

A ball field a strange place to seek a man to teach that valuable art? Maybe. Again, why not?

Oh, yes, we may be mistaken. It may be downright hypnotism that this fellow possesses.

Naturally those few words were but the introduction.

* * *

HERE is the story:

Why are those New York fans so tolerant with Chance? Remember what happened to Wolverton? Remember what they said about Chase when he was bossing the team? Remember what happened to Clark Griffith when he made several ineffectual attempts to capture a pennant? There may have been mean words in the dictionary that were not heaped, hurled and tossed at the heads of these men. I say there may have been. But I don't believe there were.

And Chance!

Say, he has a ball club that hasn't won anywhere near one-third of its games. Its percentage is less than .300. Not a peep, not a chirp has come out of the fans at New York.

"Think what a team he had when he came here," they tell you. "You wait."

* * *

FRANK CHANCE and his men are here. Still it is a different Frank Chance who is leading the Highlanders. The fellow the West Siders knew so well was a worrying Frank Chance. If the West Siders had lost as many ball games in a season as those Highlanders already have put on the losing side of the ledger it's terrible to think what would have become of Chance.

Then he worried. If his team developed a losing streak, and two losses in succession was a losing streak in those days, he didn't sleep.

And now?

He has developed into a philosopher. "I can't worry like I used to," he said. "I'm fighting just as hard to win as I ever did. But no more of the sleepless nights for me. I couldn't and stick in the game."

* * *

IT may be that the New York fans realize that Chance had nothing but numbers to work with that has made them so tolerant. But the fact remains that for about the first time in the history of New York they are not howling because they are down in the race. For in New York, you know, they can't understand why anybody should have anything that can lick anything they possess.

* * *

FRANK CHANCE certainly has no warm spot in his heart for the fellows who touted him on Bill Borton. And he certainly has a lot of people in this city who should ask him for forgiveness.

"Can Borton hit?" the P. L. asked of several of his baseball friends about here when he was in Chicago on the last trip.

"Can he hit?" was the comeback. "Say, he simply can murder the ball. He just won five games for the White Sox in Detroit. He just about won that city series last fall, as you well know. Say, if there is one thing he can do, it is to hit. He may be a bit shy on the pep and the ginger. Maybe he can't get around those bases as fast as Rollie Zeider. But hit? Say, if there were nine Bortons on an opposing team half the pitchers would go to digging sewers."

And hitting was the one thing that Borton didn't do.

Oh, yes, there are a lot of alleged baseball men in Chicago who will have a tough time explaining to this same Chance.

* * *

AT that Chance doesn't figure that the White Sox can afford to lie back and give him the merry ha-ha because Borton didn't develop into a hero in New York. For the P. L. is certain that he hooked one man from the South Side aggregation who will develop into a hummer. Gossett, the catcher, is the lad.

"There is a lad who will develop into a star," said the P. L. "I look to see him ranked as one of the greatest catchers in the league in a little while. And he cost only the waiver price."

Chance naturally isn't admitting that he received the worst of the Chase-Zelder-Borton deal. But if he did he would still figure his trading percentage was .500. Because he thinks he picked up a mighty valuable youngster in this same Gossett.

EMPIRE LEAGUE NOTES

Something that rarely happens in a ball game happened in Waycross this week in one of the Waycross-Cordele games. All assists credited to Cordele went to two players, the pitcher and catcher. Seven were made, and the catcher took four of them.

* * *

Seigfried, of Brunswick, is one of the best all-round players in the league. He is just now playing in the outfield, but is a dandy first baseman and plays short like a veteran. His batting is splendid.

* * *

"Babe" Wilder continues his record of winning almost every game he pitches. It is reported that he will go to the Savannah team at the close of this season, but Jacksonville has been after him and may land him. Wilder is the best pitcher Cordele has and is going good now.

* * *

Valdosta turned around, after an apparent slump, and walloped the Shrimp Chasers to perfection. Jordan will not tolerate indifferent playing, even if his team has won the first season rag.

* * *

Shortstop Murphy, a league leader at bat and a sensational fielder, one of the best Thomasville has, is out of the game with a sprained ankle.

* * *

Clancy, of West Virginia, who came South to play with Brunswick, is getting a try-out in Waycross. He fields fairly well, but is a little weak at bat.

* * *

Of all ball players, one always to be depended upon to act square and be as much a gentleman on the diamond as off, is Reagan, the clever manager for Cordele.

Derrick, one of the new umpires, has shown in just a few games that beefing won't go in games at which he officiates. He chased Manager Moran, of the Brunswick team, from the Valdosta grounds for beefing, and before that episode slapped a fine on Manager Jordan, of the Valdosta team.

* * *

Wild Bill Clark, the Waycross manager, has a runabout that he chases around in when not playing baseball. His friends claim that it is merely a question of time before Bill has his auto running bases.

* * *

That the schedule for the next Empire season will be arranged entirely different from the one used this year is certain. Hardly any team in the league is satisfied the way they are having to play, and the directors, at the end of the season, are going to see to it that a better schedule is prepared for 1914.

* * *

So far, the Empire has escaped any serious injuries to ball players. All teams have had players out for a few days because of minor hurts, but nothing serious to date.

* * *

Cordele's hard-hitting left fielder, Wassen, continues to swat the ball. He has had but a few off days and seems to be able to hit the league's best.

* * *

Americus seems to be getting a little of the hard luck that has been haunting most of the teams since the first of the month. Its team is playing well nearly every day, but fails to win the majority of games. But Americus has got to be considered by whatever team wins the pennant—that is certain.

BOXING
News of the Ring Game

Gunboat Smith, claimant of the world's heavyweight title, has challenged Georges Carpentier, the tough French champion of Europe, to a 20-round contest for $5,000 a side in England, France or Belgium. If Carpentier agrees, the match probably will be arranged to take place during the fall.

* * *

When it is taken into consideration that Frank Klaus, middleweight, recently stopped Carpentier, the New York heavyweight should find little trouble in putting the foreigner away in quick order. Carpentier would have everything to gain and nothing to lose in such a match.

* * *

Jess Willard is another scrapper who has his eyes peeled on a Smith match. Tom Jones' protege is taking on all the big hopes in 4-round bouts on the coast and is showing improved form. If Smith refuses to meet Willard, Jones says he will try to sign his boxer for a Pelky set-to.

* * *

Knockout Brown, the Chicago middleweight, will make his next fight against Frank Klaus, at Butte, Mont. Tommy Walsh, who is now handling Brown's affairs, wired the Butte promoters his acceptance for the mill yesterday. The pair will probably meet on Labor Day.

* * *

Kid Duke, local bantamweight, wishes to announce that he is ready to take on any of the local boys seeking fame in the padded arena. Duke aims his challenge at Young, Pries and Britt. The kid says he will accommodate either of the boys with a neat side bet.

* * *

Kid Young, the local newsboy boxer, says he is getting tired of reading challenges from various boys in the city. "Let them post their money and I will sign to meet any of them," wails the little featherweight. Several boys have been sending in their defis daily, but when the Kid asks them to put up, they usually beat it to the tall timbers.

* * *

Johnny Coulon, bantamweight champion, left a Chicago hospital the other day weighing 115 pounds, which is 10 pounds more than he weighed a week ago when he entered the institution to be treated for stomach trouble. Despite his rapid improvement in health, it is doubtful whether he will be able to box for some time.

"Wildcat" Ferns and Young Denny have been re-matched to box at New Orleans. The pair met in the Pelican City on Labor Day and Ferns was awarded the verdict after ten rounds of fierce fighting. The Denny admirers, however, were not satisfied with the decision, and the promoters decided to send them over the 20-round route on August 13.

* * *

Tom McCarey is still working on a Ritchie-Cross match for Labor Day. Cross has already consented to the bout, but the champion is waiting to hear from several other promoters, who are after his services. New Orleans wants Willie to box Britton, while Vancouver is after a Ritchie-Welsh mill.

* * *

Coast fans have made Kid Williams a 2 to 1 favorite over Charley Ledoux. The two bantamweights clash in a 20-round mill in Tom McCarey's arena at Los Angeles on July 15.

* * *

The Johnny Dundee-Jack White match, scheduled to take place on the coast July 29, may not take place. Dundee is holding out for a larger guarantee than the promoters are willing to give for such a scrap. If Dundee refuses to meet White, George Kirkwood or Tommy Dixon may be substituted.

* * *

Terry Nelson, local lightweight, is waiting to hear from Dayton, Ohio, regarding a match there. Terry is trying to get on with either Jimmy Murphy, Jimmy Traverse or Danny Goodman. Nelson is surely entitled to a match with some good 133-pounder. He is a willing mixer and always gives the fans a run for their money.

Packey McFarland gave exhibition bouts at the Joliet, Ill., prison the other day for the entertainment of the prisoners. He boxed Kid Mack, of Joliet, and other local boys. Warden Allen is a friend of McFarland.

HARRIS TO MEET ALRICK IN TENNIS TITLE MATCH

LITHCHFIELD, CONN., July 12.—F. H. Harris, of Brattleboro, Vt., will meet Alrick H. Man, Jr., of Richmond Hill, N. Y., for the State tennis title and cup here this afternoon. Harris yesterday defeated W. S. Cushing, of Simsbury, in the final of the State tennis tournament. Man won the New England championship from Harris in the tournament at Hartford last month.

YACHTING.

Becalmed, becalmed, all, all becalmed,
Becalmed on a wide, wide bay,
Our souls were tried when the breezes died,
For we moved not either way.

We sat and mourned for the west wind scorned
To hand us a single breath,
And, what was worst, we were all athirst,
And it felt like the pangs of death.

The wind may howl and the sea may growl,
And the waves be high and strong,
But we scorn the worst when we have no thirst
And we sing a gladsome song.

But worst of all, when there is no squall,
Nor even a breath of air,
And the deck is dry as a desert sky,
Nor even a bottle there.

Becalmed, becalmed, all, all becalmed,
Four miles from the nearest land!
And there we lay for half a day
With an opener in our hand.

Yachts are deceiving. We asked the chauffeur what was concealed beneath the cellar door and he answered: "Life savers." Opening the door and looking into the basement we saw nothing but those things that you wrap around yourself when the boat sinks. One learns only by experience.

We still are a novice as far as things nautical are concerned, but we are forced to admit that we like it as far as we drank.

August Belmont has insured his noble steed, Tracery, for $150,000 for fear of another suffragette rough house. If August were a regular sportsman he would train his steed for the jumps and hold a suffragette steeplechase.

A statistician informs us that the Cardinals accepted 206 chances without an error. Aside from the fact that they lost a flock of games in the meantime it was great baseball.

One is not surprised to read that Bud Anderson was doped when he fought Leach Cross. A flock of knuckles injected at the right spot is quite an effective anesthetic.

Reading a headline, one observes that the "Sox weclome Frank Chance." Looking over the box score one is led to believe it.

SPEAKING OF WORK.

Were I to labor sixteen hours a day,
Without a pause, without a gasp of air,
I would not grieve my fair young life away,
But gladly do my share.
If I were called upon to be a slave
'Twould only make me smile, for I have seen
The hardest working thing this side the grave—

Taylor, open golf champion of England, has decided not to join Harry Vardon and Edward Ray in their American tour to play, during which Vardon and Ray will compete in the open championship tournament at Brookline, Mass. JOHNSON IS IN ENGLAND, BUT CAN'T FIGHT THERE

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, July 12.—Jack Johnson, the negro pugilist who fled from Chicago after being convicted of white slavery, arrived here to-day from Paris. Johnson wants to arrange a short bout with some good English heavyweight, preferably Bombardier Wells. Any match that Johnson makes, however, probably will have to be fought on the Continent, for the English authorities will not allow him to box in this country.

After his arrival to-day Johnson visited the newspaper offices in Fleet street and denied stories about him which had been cabled from the United States.

COULON ORDERED TO TAKE LONG REST IN COLORADO

CHICAGO, July 12.—Johnny Coulon, the bantam champion, announced that he probably would not fight again before Thanksgiving Day. Coulon was in the Presbyterian Hospital for ten days, during which time Bertram W. Sippy, a specialist on stomach troubles, gave the little fighter a careful examination. The doctor has ordered the champion to take a long rest in Colorado.

Coulon left the hospital day before yesterday and already is making preparations for the Colorado trip. He expects to leave for the West some time next week.

STARS' CHANCES IN GOLF MEETS RUINED BY RAIN

By Chick Evans.

THERE is an opinion deeply rooted in the minds of most Americans that it rains three-fourths of the time in Great Britain, and that in consequence, the British golfer is an amphibious creature. I can not testify to the truth of this belief because I visited Britain in a dry year, but a friend, who spent several months in the British Isles, assures me that, although it rained every day while he was there, the British rain was not so wet as the American variety. Perhaps my friend's delusion springs from the fact that almost every clubhouse in Great Britain has a drying room where golfers may hang their rain-soaked clothing, while such a convenience is almost unknown in America, the New Edgewater being the only American club that, as far as I know, has made such provision for its members.

Playing golf in the rain is a good deal like jumping into a cold tub—there is always hesitation in the beginning, but the act itself is never regretted, for the real golfer can not let a little thing like the rain interfere with his game. When a man has journeyed all the way out to some country club he is almost sure to play, rain or shine, and I am confident that playing in the rain does not injure any one physically. It is attended, however, with many inconveniences, and to find enjoyment, the player must be well prepared for the weather. He needs an old pair of shoes and other wearing apparel that can be easily dried and not easily injured. But the best of rainy-day clothes are usually too many and too binding for good golf, and raincoats are an abomination. I well remember that W. C. Fownes, Jr., once spent a great deal of valuable time trying to invent one suited to the needs of the golfer.

Moisture Ruins Clubs.

Personally, I dislike to play in the rain; I do not like to get my clothes wet, and most of all, I detect the effect of moisture upon my clubs. The shafts are always heavily stained, so that they may withstand the weather, but water warps wood, and I do hate to draw a wooden club from my bag on a rainy day. Then again, the best grips are supposed to be of oiled and treated leather, and moisture affects them most unfavorably. So the golfer carries towels, because wet hands and wet grips are a distinctly disagreeable combination. Another rainy day necessity is the hooded golf bag.

Of course, no golfer expects to play his best on a rainy day, but in all big tournaments, or indeed any competition, golfers must play, regardless of the weather. The luck of the condition is, however, more deeply felt in a qualification round. Perhaps in the morning the course may have been too fast for the players; then, between 1 and 2, a heavy shower comes up, catching those who must go out then; at 2 the rain ceases and the latter players start forth under most favorable conditions, for the rain has softened the greens and made the balls more manageable. This is a chance of the game that affects almost every score with unequal conditions.

Deluge Has Spoiled Tournaments.

Glen View, for a long time, had an unfortunate reputation for rainy tournaments, big events there being almost invariably attended by terrific downpours. In the National of 1904, the river overflowed the second nine holes, and only the first nine were playable in the finals. None of the Western players can forget the deluge at Denver, and I also recall vividly a four-day tournament at Chicago Golf when it rained practically during the whole competition.

These incidents merely teach us, as old fables say, that the real golfer must be a bit of a philosopher. He accepts the weather cheerily and makes the best of it.

MANY MANAGERS ON COAST IN INTEREST OF BOXERS

LOS ANGELES, CAL., July 12.—With six managers on the ground anxious to arrange matches for their boxers, ther is no danger that Promoter McCarey will not be able to keep his fight program filled.

Among those who are here in the interest of high-class boys are Joe Levy, manager of Joe Rivers and Jack White; Sam Wallach, manager of Leach and Phil Cross; Frank Galvin, manager of Charley Ledoux; Sam Harris, manager of Kid Williams; Scotty Monteith, manager of Johnny Dundee, and Dick Donald, manager of Bud Anderson.

Good Time Now For Blood Health

Blood Disorders Gone to Stay.

A few doses of that wonderful blood purifier, S. S. S., will start activities in the cellular tissues of the body and soon show decided changes in the skin. The skin is but a fine network of tiny blood vessels, and the specific action of S. S. S. is declared to be a pronounced stimulation of the activity of these cells. Certain it is that in a surprisingly short time any skin eruption shows a most remarkable change: it begins to dry up; the skin scales off in tiny flecks, and soon a layer of clear, healthy and firm tissue results.

The reason for this is in the peculiar stimulation of S. S. S., which enables the cells in the skin to select from the blood the nutriment it requires for regeneration.

You can obtain S. S. S. at any well stocked drug store, if you insist upon it, but be sure you are not talked into something "just as good."

S. S. S. is prepared by the Swift Specific Company, 180 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga. Write for their illustrated book on skin diseases.

MEET AT DROME GOES OVER TO TUESDAY NIGHT

THE Motordrome meet set for decision last night is off until Tuesday night. The rain knocked it out last night and the managers, of which there are three, all with varying views on all subjects, decided to postpone it until Tuesday.

In the face of the announcement by Noon Hudson, manager of the local track, and Jack Prince, manager of the Dixie Circuit, that all meets postponed one night would go over to the next, the public would have had a kick coming to-day if the weather had been fair.

However, the rain of the morning knocked out all chance of a meet to-night, and the public will have to be content now to wait until Tuesday night.

GRAND CIRCUIT HORSES MOVE ON TO PITTSBURG

CLEVELAND, OHIO., July 12.—The entire "works" of the Grand Circuit is on the move to-day over to Pittsburg, where the second Grand Circuit meet of the season will be held.

The first one came to a close at North Randall tracks yesterday with four trotting events that brought out a fine quality of sport. Outsiders shared honors with the favorites. The Tavern "Steak," though previously conceded to Dago F., was won by Eulabel, an outsider.

The 2:00 trot went to Jean Arion, although Eve Cord, driven by Geers, had been expected to win easily.

The championship trotting sweepstakes was taken by Anvil, a heavy favorite, because he trotted the two fastest miles of theye ar. The veteran driver, Ed Geers, pushed Anvil around the oval in the remarkably fast time of 2:04 1-4 in the first heat, and came right back in the next and concluding heat with a mark of 2:04 3-4.

KETCHEL MEETS TROUT.

CHICAGO, July 12.—Steve Ketchel, the local lightweight, has been matched to box twelve rounds with Sammy Trout at Winnipeg on August 5.

Again Hogg Beats Crackers 6-0

Rain May Stop To-day's Game

By Percy H. Whiting.

THE Gulls and the Crackers meet in the final tangle this afternoon—that is, if the weather is even half-way decent. And, for a pleasing change, even if it is Saturday afternoon, the game will be called at the usual time and will go to a decision.

The fates forbid that it be another knock-out.

One fan sized up yesterday's game pretty well when he said:

"Well, that's my idea of a WHITEWASH."

It was all of that and more besides.

The Gulls won, 6 to 0, and they did it with such ease that they made the Crackers look like the tail-enders of a Class D league.

* * *

IT'S a hard matter not to acquire a grouch over a game like that. No matter how one attempts to wax flippant and facetious, the waxing isn't any good at all.

It was a gloomy contest.

At that, there were fielding spots of amazing brilliancy.

Wally Smith fielded like a world's champion. Bisland, despite two errors, almost evened up by some brilliant work. Stock had a brilliant day, and he did it in spite of the fact that Chapman nearly took his head off with a batted ball, which would have taken the "pep" out of an ordinary player.

Hogg pitched another grand game for Mobile.

The last time he was here he beat Atlanta 6 to 0.

Yesterday he won, 6 to 0.

However, he must be getting better, for the last time he allowed six hits, while this time, he gave up only three.

And it was an awful day for Atlanta's records, for Chapman made two out of the three hits, while the big batting stars, Long, Welchonce and Smith, went hitless.

* * *

OF course, it would hurt to be beaten by the Mobile at any time. But it hurts, especially now that the Gulls are crippled and very much weakened.

If the Crackers can't win from them now, what chance have they when the Gulls get back in condition, as they are bound to do soon? This is what the fans are asking themselves, and it's a serious question.

* * *

THE pitching of Dent was a bright feature. After Brady was knocked out Dent took up the burden and carried it well. The Gulls' only run after he went in resulted from a hit and an error.

This chap also made a nice play at the plate when Stock tried to score on what looked like a passed ball. Chapman fielded it and Dent received the throw and tagged Stock out, risking his legs and his neck in doing it. It was a game, clever piece of work.

* * *

ONLY three more games will be played at home after the Gulls depart. The Montgomery team is to be here Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. Then the Crackers beat it away for a long journey.

WILLIE RITCHIE WILLING TO BATTLE JACK BRITTON

SAN FRANCISCO, July 12.—Ritchie says that he never received the offer of Promoter Tortorich, of New Orleans, to box Britton for a $20,000 purse, though such an offer had been made through the press.

Regarding such a bout in September, Ritchie says that Tortorich would be treated the same as the other promoters and if he hands in the highest bid he will gladly box in New Orleans. If he does so, Jack Britton, who is a heavy lightfeight, will have to make 133 pounds ringside.

Willie is confident that he can make this weight and be at his best. When Ritchie and Britton boxed four rounds in this city they milled at catch weights.

BROWN PRAISES THE GEORGIAN TO FARMERS

Former Assistant Commissioner of Agriculture Tells Them This Paper Is Best of All.

DUBLIN, July 12.—"I want every farmer in Laurens County—every farmer in Georgia—to read The Atlanta Georgian," said J. J. Brown, former Assistant Commissioner of Agriculture for Georgia, in an address at a great rally of the Farmers' Union, seven miles from Dublin, Friday.

"It is the best and fairest paper I have ever read," he continued. "It is our friend and we should read it. Of course, there are other great papers, but there is none in the class of The Atlanta Georgian."

This statement was made while discussing rural free delivery, and was received with enthusiasm by the great crowd present.

Mr. Brown joined Charles S. Barrett and L. M. Rhodes at Dublin Friday, and is a great addition to the team, for he is a great speaker.

Rhodes and Barrett Speak.

Mr. Rhodes, that great big Tennessee farmer, who has statistics, facts and figures to prove his assertions, who knows what the farmers need and who is making their cause his life work, fairly took the big crowd by storm. He is a natural orator and is making friends and converts to the Farmers' Union.

President Barrett made his speech of this tour, and created more enthusiasm than any speaker ever heard in the county. He is the idol of the farmers, and they have faith in him.

Farmers Drive 15 Miles.

More than 200 vehicles surrounded the place of the rally, many of the farmers coming across the country for a distance of fifteen miles, showing their interest in the Farmers' Union. It is the impression of Mr. Rhodes and Mr. Brown that the number of members of the Farmers' Union in Georgia will be increased to 75,000 before another year shall have passed.

Crops in this section of the State are good, and from the appearance of the farmers they have been good for several years.

The speaking lasted more than three hours, and not a single person left, which shows how the farmers feel in regard to unionism.

After the speechmaking a great picnic dinner of fried chiken, potato pie and watermelon was enjoyed.

It is expected that fully 5,000 persons will gather at Waycross on Saturday, where the campaign closes.

Farmers Rally At Douglasville.

DOUGLASVILLE, July 12.—An agricultural rally was held here to-day under the auspices of the State Agricultural College, with a large attendance. The movement was fathered by the Farmers' Union in this county and by the local Commercial Club.

JUDGES DECIDE WHO IS BUTTON PRIZE WINNER

Submitted by W. Mae Jones, 1428 Candler Building.

Submitted by W. T. Wilson, 388 North Jackson street.

Hearst's Sunday American Will Announce Best Slogan—Many Submitted Saturday.

Judges Saturday took charge of all the "500,000 club" slogans submitted in the $25 prize contest. They are John W. Grant, Wilmer L. Moore and Walter C. Taylor. At The Georgian office they began a careful study of the hundreds of suggestions submitted.

Hearst's Sunday American will announce the winner.

The last day of the contest brought in the largest number of submissions of any other day. Many are beautiful designs by well-known artists. Others are striking for their literary merit. All bespeak the wonderful Atlanta spirit—save one.

That came in anonymously from a cynical humorist. He went to the trouble of drawing a large picture burlesquing Atlanta from the City Hall to the last garbage dump beyond "Pittsburg."

The Cynic's Slogan.

In one corner was a large building marked "Hot Air Factory." Next to it was the City Hall, called "The House of Mystery," and on top of the building sat a doubtful bird marked "Graft." The bottom of the picture showed three stragglers passing out of a gate with the remark:

"Griffin ain't so bad after all."

It's a cinch this design won't get the prize.

One of the best of the last suggestions was a map of Georgia with a star marking Atlanta, its capital. The slogan, offered by George L. Taylor, No. 152 Courtland street, is:

"Hitch your wagon to the star. Half million by 1920."

Here are many scintillating with enthusiasm:

WAR OF WORDS NEXT TARIFF BILL FIGHT

LaFollette to Lead Republican Attack With Seven-Day Speech. Defense Prepares.

WASHINGTON, July 12.—A new record in sustained speech-making will be made by Republicans when the Underwood-Simmons tariff bill comes up for debate Wednesday, according to leaders of the Senate minority to-day.

At the head of the Republicans who will blast the Democratic tariff and its makers stands Senator LaFollette, of Wisconsin, who is scheduled to wage a wordy war lasting seven days.

Next in line is Senator Reed Smoot, of Utah, who has estimated the length of his diatribe against Democratic inquiry at five days. Smoot once was the superintendent of a Mormon wool mill. He has charge of the wool schedule.

Senator William Alden Smith, of Michigan, will lead the Republican fight against Democratic free sugar with a dissertation running three days.

Senator Ransdell will cry out against the destruction of the cane-sugar industry in Louisiana in a 30,000-word speech.

Other Republicans will content themselves with speeches running along from a day to two days in length, while the rank and file have announced that hey will be on hand to offer 10,000 and 20,000 word "attacks" should the generals of debate at any time become weary.

Many long speeches are scheduled from the Democratic ranks. Senators Shafroth, Newlands and Hitchcock have served notice that they will talk at length.

Georgian in West Tricks 5 Women

DENVER, COLO., July 12.—Five young women of this city to-day are wondering how it all happened, while C. F. Thompson, of Macon, Ga., is in prison contemplating the danger of a too vivid imagination.

Three weeks ago Thompson landed in Denver, it is said, with just $20 in a pocket of his one and only suit. Within the course of a few days he had become engaged to four women, had picked out costly trousseaus for each and had made arrangements to purchase two high-priced automobiles.

Thursday he became engaged to the fifth young woman, after pawning a phonograph which he had obtained under false pretenses. This put the detectives on his trail. Now he is in jail, with prospects of a later trip to Canon City Penitentiary.

DON'T TIRE AS END OF PONY CONTEST NEARS

Every Incentive Is Offered Candidates in the Race for the Beautiful Shetlands.

Ginger for Contestants.

Shetland ponies never tire. Neither must you if you want one.

It is a half-hearted youngster who tires near the finish.

Watch your receipt book, and go after renewals just before the short-term subscriptions expire.

Remember, you are asking people to do themselves a favor when you ask them to subscribe to The Georgian and American.

Aim for a pony and cart; you may get a pony and saddle. Aim for a pony and saddle, and you may get a gold watch. Aim for a gold watch, and you may get a silver watch, and very likely you will get—left.

John Trimble, No. 4015 Boulevard avenue.

Miss Idell Shaw, No. 179 Pine street.

Every incentive is being offered contestants to make the last few weeks of The Georgian and American pony contest the liveliest of the entire struggle.

There is a generous extra-vote offer, with its only condition the turning in of $35, $25 or $15 for subscriptions. The subscriptions may be for any length of time, from a month up.

Sunday afternoon, at Grant Park, the ponies will be seen, harnessed and saddled, for the enjoyment of the contestants. There is inspiration for any youngster in driving or riding one of these little animals. Just to enjoy one of them for a few minutes stimulates a desire to own it. Never were more intelligent, kinder or better-trained animals seen in Atlanta.

Parents are particularly invited to be at the Park, when the contest manager will talk with them as to means of helping the children.

Mercury Stationary At 71 as Rain Falls

For three hours Saturday morning the temperature was stationary at 71 degrees. So far as is known, this is a record. At 5 o'clock the mercury dropped to 71, which was the lowest mark of the preceding night. At 6, 7 and 8 o'clock the mark was exactly the same, variations between the even hours being inconsiderable.

Rainfall for the 24 hours ending Saturday morning totaled only .06 of an inch. Very little rain fell during the night, but shortly after 6 o'clock, when the 24-hour period ended, heavy showers began and continued intermittently for two hours.

THE PLAYS THIS WEEK

At the Bijou.

The four performances of to-day will close a successful week's engagement of "Along Broadway," at the Bijou. This attraction, which is a remarkable offering at popular prices, made the biggest kind of a hit with Bijou patrons, and those who are looking for an ideal warm weather attraction will do well to visit the Bijou before the close of the engagement.

For next week another splendid musical attraction is announced. "Hotel a la Carte" comes to the Bijou with the very strongest praise from the press of the cities where it has appeared, and indications point to one of the very best offerings of the season.

As the name implies, the action takes place in a modern hotel, and the situations and complications that arise furnish a thread of plot on which to hang lots of tuneful songs, some graceful dances, presented by a company containing plenty of pretty girls.

Mabel Taliaferro Is Wed in Daisy Field

ST. LOUIS, July 12.—After keeping her marriage to Thomas J. Carrigan, of La Peer, Mich., a secret for more than a month, Mabel Taliaferro, of Chicago, the actress, formerly wife of Frederic Thompson, New York theatrical promoter, admitted here to-day she had been married June 1 in the Michigan city.

The marriage took place before a Justice of the Peace, in a field of daisies that edged down to a river bank just outside of La Peer, in order that all possible secrecy might be maintained.

A Sustaining Diet.

These are the enervating days, when, as somebody has said, men drop by the sunstroke as if the Day of Fire had dawned. They are fraught with danger to people whose systems are poorly sustained; and this leads us to say, in the interest of the less robust of our readers, that the full effect of Hood's Sarsaparilla is such as to suggest the propriety of calling this medicine something besides a blood purifier and tonic—say, a sustaining diet. It makes it much easier to bear the heat, assures refreshing sleep, and will without any doubt avert much sickness at this time of year.

SOFIA IN TERROR OF ATTACK BY ROUMANIA

Bulgar Capital Expected to Fall Within Week—Czar Ferdinand Ready to Flee.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

SOFIA, July 12.—A Roumanian army is marching upon Sofia and unless there is a peaceful settlement in the meantime the Bulgarian capital will be occupied next week.

The residents of the city are panic-stricken and in a hostile mood against the government for suppressing newspapers during the fighting between Bulgarians and Servians and Greeks in Macedonia. It was not until to-day that the people learned that the Bulgars have been crushed at every point.

An attempt was made to assassinate Dr. Daneff, former Premier, as he was on his way to confer with President Guechoff.

Czar Ferdinand is reported to be preparing to evacuate the city.

So far as Servia and Greece are concerned the Balkan war is believed to be over, but Roumanian troops continue to pour into the eastern part of Bulgaria. These troops are fresh and fully equipped for fighting and are eager to clash with the Bulgarians. The shattered Bulgarian forces are no match for the Roumanians.

The Roumanians have occupied the Bulgarian towns of Turtukai, Dobridsh and Baltchik. There is no resistance to the advance of the Roumanian forces.

Bulgars, Routed, Massacre 200 Greeks; Foes Pursue.

ATHENS, July 12.—Greek and Servian forces in Central Macedonia have now joined, making a mighty army of 150,000 men. Two hundred Greeks, both men and women, have been massacred near Serres by the retreating Bulgarians. The Bulgarians have fled from Serres in a panic at the approach of the Greek soldiers.

The powers have advised Greece to make peace with Bulgaria. Mr. Coromilas, the Greek Foreign Minister, received a note from the European states advising Greece to join with Servia in ceasing hostilities. France will probably become the "protector" of Greece, now that the Balkan league has become shattered by war.

Outcast White Deer Herds With Horses

LIBBY, MONT., July 11.—Henry Wegner, who has a ranch on the upper Yakt, says that a pure white deer has become associated with his the horses and follows them into the horses and follows them into the corral. Mr. Wegner said it was a doe and had pink eyes, so he named it Albino.

Old hunters here say that on account of its freakish apearance it had become an outcast, and in such cases the animal always will go to a herd of cattle or horses if possible.

ATTORNEYS PASS LIE AND BLOWS IN MACON

Solicitor General Ross and Lawyer Harris Clash Over Trial of Vice Cases.

MACON, July 12.—Attorney Jesse C. Harris brought about a sudden adjournment of the special criminal session of the Bibb Superior Court yesterday afternoon by calling Solicitor John P. Ross a liar and striking him in the face in the courtroom. Harris was fined $50 for contempt of court and also censured by Judge Mathews for his conduct.

Harris represented fifteen women of the restricted district who are charged with operating disorderly houses. In moving for a continuance of these cases, he declared that Solicitor Ross would not call the cases represented by any other lawyers, but was seeking solely to prosecute those represented by him (Harris).

"That's a falsehood, your honor," interposed the Solicitor.

"You're a liar," shouted Attorney Harris, striking the Solicitor in the face.

Deputies seized both men immediately.

"He's a dirty little scoundrel; let me hit him once," shouted Solicitor Ross, but was restrained.

Judge Mathews held that the jury was prejudiced in the matter of trying any of the defendants represented by Harris, and as Solicitor Ross refused to call any other cases, though stating that he was prepared for trial in all of them, the court was adjourned for the term and all parties discharged. The Solicitor stated that Harris represented all of the prominent defendants, and that he did not propose to try the lesser and weaker defendants first. "There are 'stars' of varying magnitude in Tybee (the vice district) as well as in glory," he said.

SHORT COVERING STEADIES COTTON

Buying of Old Crops by Spot Houses Principal Feature—Offerings General.

NEW YORK, July 12.—The cotton market was quiet at the opening of the cotton market to-day and first prices were 1 to 5 points higher than Friday's final. The demand from shorts who desired to even up for the week-end. When this was supplied prices eased off a few points. T he Liverpool market was closed and was responsible to some extent for the quiet market here.

Spot houses again purchased summer positions quite freely. One large spot broker started the market on an upward scale shortly after the call by bidding aggressively for large blocks of new crops, but bought little. The selling was mainly attributed to Wall Street and the uptown crowd.

The weather map was favorable, showing rains over the greater part of the belt, with lower temperatures and sentiment against the market.

Two of the largest local operators have covered since Tuesday about 50,000 bales of short cotton, and now the market has reached the point where it is practically in the hands of certain big interests, who are trading this and that way merely for small turns for scalping operations, pending further developments in connection with the ultimate outcome of the bull deal in July-August. These two options for the past two weeks have governed new crop positions as well as operations. The outcome of the Clarke amendment is also killing off business.

At the close the market was steady with prices at a net gain of 1 to 5 points from the final quotations of Friday.

Warehouse stocks in New York to-day is 37,301 bales; certificated, 31,199 bales.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, July 12.—Further good and rather general rains occurred during the past 48 hours in the eastern half of the belt. Precipitation was heaviest in Tennessee and North Alabama. Temperatures were lower in North Texas.

European political news was a little more cheerful, expressing the hope of early peace, but financial views continue pessimistic, owing to fear of heavy financial losses in connection with the Balkan war.

Our market was inclined to ease at the start on the favorable weather prospects, but open bidding for July by the controlling interests checked selling on the belief that screws might be turned on July. The bidding by these interests reflects the view that it is getting too late to bring cotton here to spoil the July squeeze by tenders.

The Times-Democrat's monthly report will appear Monday. It is expected to be favorable except for a tendency to give special prominence to the weevil danger.

The market ruled steady during the early session around 11.45 for December.

COTTON GOSSIP

The principal feature of the market to-day was the buying of old crop by spot interests. Wall Street and uptown crowd are thought to have sold new crop. Market took the selling well and ruled rather steady all day. Riordan was good seller of new crop around the close.—Anderson.

* * *

The several bearish reports issued yesterday has caused some change in sentiment and the feeling this morning was more bearish.

* * *

There are predictions for favorable weather over the belt for the next few days.

* * *

Around the close yesterday Geer, Shearson, McEnany, Hubbard, Flinn, Hartcorn and Seldenberg were among the leading buyers. Riordan, Parrott, Hicks, Cone and Montgomery were the principal sellers.

* * *

Senator Smith, of South Carolina, has introduced a bill providing for Governmental standard for grades of cotton and requiring futures contracts to be filled by grade specified in contract. The bill was ordered favorably reported by the Senate's sub-committee. The bill aims to overcome objections of Cotton Exchange to the proposed tax on future transactions and does not fix a penalty for failure to deliver actual cotton.

NEW ORLEANS, July 13.—Hayward & Clark: The weather map was very favorable, cloudy over entire belt, with general rains in eastern half, heaviest in Tennessee and North Alabama, where most needed. Cooler in west. Indications are for partly cloudy to fair in the Atlantics; possibly some scattered showers. Cloudy in central and western States, with cooler weather and showers coming on Texas over Sunday. Clearing and cooler in Oklahoma and Arkansas.

* * *

J. B. Turner, of Memphis, has the following on the condition of the cotton crop for the week ending July 11:

"The week was a normal and hence a favorable one for the season. Temperatures were quite high over a great part of the belt, but toward the end were materially moderated. Generally speaking, there was an abundance of moisture in the soil, and hence the cultivation was near perfect. The plant stood the excess of temperatures quite well and continued its growth and fruiting in a satisfactory manner. There is no striking change from the conditions of one week ago and this of itself is a favorable item.

"Little or no rain fell in Texas and Oklahoma, where already the supply of moisture was abundant, while down the Mississippi Valley there were many showers and locally heavy rains, which relieved an incipient drouth and set the cotton to growing rapidly. Showers fell also in the eastern States and were of benefit. As a whole, more rain in Alabama and States eastward would be desirable, though not necessary at this time.

"In Eastern Texas, Louisiana and Mississippi, weevils are more numerous than in several years, and their appearance has aroused the planters' alarm. As yet their depredations have been quite limited."

* * *

The Times-Democrat monthly crop report is expected Monday. We think it will be favorable except for giving the boll weevil danger the usual prominence.

* * *

Official Texas records show an average for the State of 98 degrees; three stations show 100; nine stations 102; one station 104; and one station 106. The maximum average for Oklahoma is 102.

* * *

Galveston will get a new bale to-day from Patricio, Texas, the same date as last year. New bale here from San Benito, consigned to John M. Parker & Co., will be sold at auction to-day.

* * *

The Government advises Corpus Christi, Texas: "Small craft warning. Disturbance over Southern New Mexico moving eastward; will cause brisk to high northerly winds to-day and probably Sunday."

* * *

The first new bale was sold here at auction for 16 cents; it was bought by E. Christ.

Grain Notes

The Chicago Inter Ocean says: "The wheat bears have the best of it. Hedging business is coming into the market, making it safer for the short seller than at any time within a year. Sentiment has become excessively bearish, and it would not be surprising to a majority to see lower prices, although the best traders are looking for irregular declines.

"Corn specialists attributed the break of 1⅜ on September yesterday, making a drop of almost 4 cents from the recent high point to unloading by longs. It is noticeable that sharp traders, who were long, have unloaded their purchases on bids. Traders said they would not be surprised to see a rally some day, but believe corn should be sold on all bulges.

"September oats dropped below 40 cents yesterday with stop orders selling sufficient to carry prices to 39¼. Those who have watched the market closely for two weeks say there has been a steady unloading by longs and a decrease in the outside buying. The liquidation, however, is not regarded as over."

* * *

Bartlett, Frazier & Co. says: "Wheat—Offerings from the country are somewhat lighter, but local sentiment is bearish and new speculative buying from the outside does not come in.

"Corn—The rains this morning are likely to cause further selling, although liquidation was on a liberal scale yesterday. Cash prices do not show as much weakness as the future, owing to moderate receipts and scarcity of offerings from first hands.

"Oats—There is nothing new in the situation, except that receipts are somewhat smaller and cash inquiry a shade better. Sentiment is very bearish, and, as in the other grains, outside buying is extremely limited.

"Provisions—Hogs under estimates with hog prices at yards steady to 5c higher."

Rainfall and Temperatures in Grain Region: Canadian Northwest cloudy, .42 to .58; Fernonton, Swift Current, Winnipeg, .06; Calgary, .94; Battleford, .42; Regina, raining, 1.10; Northwest, part cloudy, .48 to .64; Williston, Huron, .08; Devils Lake, Bismark, .01; Moosehead, .20; Duluth, 1.20; West generally cloudy, .54 to .70; Omaha, Davenport, .02; Sioux City, .04; Des Moines, .86; Charles City, .96; Dubuque, 1.08; Springfield, .14; Southwest part cloudy, .62 to .76; Dodge City, .10; Wichita, .01; Kansas City, .58; Springfield, .84; St. Louis, .50; Ohio Valley cloudy, .70 to .76; Cairo, .07; Evansville, .34; Cincinnati, .42; Indianapolis, .16; Columbus raining; Louisville raining, .36.

Think wheat, corn and oats all have had break enough. Would cover shorts and wait for a rally before selling again.—Roycroft.

IRREGULARITY IN PRICE OF STOCKS

Good Crop Advices and Easier Feeling Abroad Encourages Better Active Bidding.

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, July 12.—A higher range of prices was established at the opening of the stock market, although business was very quiet. Canadian Pacific began 2⅛ higher at 213½, but afterward shaded.

There was no change in speculative conditions and the gains which were recorded were chiefly due to a change in position on the part of the speculative element. Finding bear operations fruitless, the professionals turned bullish.

Union Pacific advanced ⅝ and some of the other gains were: Amalgamated Copper, ¼; United States Steel, ¼; Reading, ⅜; Lehigh Valley, ⅛; Erie, ½; American Can ¼, and Chesapeake and Ohio, ⅛.

The curb was quiet.

Americans in London were dull, but ruled above New York parity.

The market closed strong. Governments unchanged; other bonds steady.

WHEAT LEADER IN CEREAL DECLINE

General Rains and Absence of Speculative Buying Cause of Heavy Liquidation.

CHICAGO, July 12.—Wheat was ¾c lower at the opening this morning on further fine rains which covered the entire spring wheat country in the Northwest. There were some rains in the winter wheat belt, which possibly may delay the movement for a day or two. The official report on wheat crop of France shows the condition to be 3 points higher for winter and 2 higher for spring than July 1 a year ago. Northwestern receipts were moderate.

Corn was ⅜c to ⅝c lower on rains where needed throughout the belt.

Oats were off ⅝c to ½c in sympathy with the other grains.

Provisions were firmer and higher.

EAST WANTS LIGHT HOGS.

CHICAGO, July 12.—Eastern orders for light hogs were in excess of week-end supply and a 10 to 12c higher market for everything fit for that outlet resulted. Shipping hogs sold largely at 9.10@9.25. Packing grades were little if any higher, as that branch was without competition. There were 35,000 at eleven markets, against 45,000 a year ago, and not to exceed 40,000 are expected here Monday. Shipping demand is coming back in emphatic manner, that outlet having absorbed 20,000 this week. Both in cattle and sheep the finish was nominally strong at the best prices of the week. Monday's expectancy is for about 20,000 cattle and 35,000 hogs.

Study to Know the Profitable From the Unprofitable Hen

Follow Advice and Eliminate the Drones From Your Flock.

It seems to me we can not overestimate the importance of finding out whether our hens are paying a good profit or not; and which ones are the drones and cutting down the profit. The only way to do this is to keep a record. Under present conditions, when almost everything that goes to help produce a dozen eggs, comes the necessity for stricter economy and the knowing of what it takes to produce the eggs. We must turn over a new leaf and open an account with the hens. We must charge them with what they consume, and at the same time give them credit for all eggs laid at the market price, whether they are sold or consumed by the family. It is not much work, if you but have a little account book in which to keep it. Five minutes a day will do it. It may pay you to go to the little extra trouble in ascertaining just where you stand.

The owner who has, by the use of the trap-nest, found out the egg-producing abilities of his flock, has taken the first step toward separating the unprofitable hen from the profitable one, a thing that every one who keeps hens should be able to tell or know.

We are often asked the question as to what constitutes a profitable hen? It is one that will pay for her feed, interest on the investment of roosting house, labor taken to care for her, and a profit besides. Of course, the cost of feeding a hen will vary quite a little, owing to the different sections of the country in which it is kept. Feed is quite a little cheaper in some places than others. It is but little trouble to count the cost of feeding ten or twenty hens. If you buy the feed, it is easily put down. If you are raising your own feed, simply measure out a barrel or two of it, putting down the price it is worth, then go to work feeding it.

Farmers are beginning to appreciate the worth of the really laying hen. They are beginning to find out that it does not pay to even harbor one that is too old to lay well or that never did lay much. All such should be cut right out of the game. And there is no way so good to determine that fact as by the trap-nest and the little record book.

With the ever and rapidly-increasing values of farm lands it is but natural that the farmer should look about him for some plan by which he can increase his income without greatly increasing his farm expenses, or investing in more land to do it with. The farmer has this very factor in the hen, if she is a good one. And there are good ones if we will but take the trouble to get acquainted with her. There are but few farms in the country but what have from one to three acres of land going to waste, or rather that are not being utilized. This is about the house and outbuildings. If this could be fenced and subdivided and a lot of good hens located therein it would soon begin to give revenue rather than be an expense to keep free from weeds and trash. I do not think it advisable for the farmer to try to run all to poultry, but just a hint to them that may help them to raise money for the taxes and various odds and ends that take the cash, leaving the regular farm crops in tact for other purposes. Tests show us that hens have made a record of 200 eggs per year; some have done even better than that, but a good many have done that well. Now it is an old saying that what has been done can be done again, so let us not fool away our time keeping hens that will only give us the old farm average of 75 eggs per year. That kind just about pays for its keep, so that if we get rid of them and keep the 150 to 200-egg kind then we get the profit that is due us. A flock of good, thoroughbred hens, say 300, should give us a profit of $400 to $500. Of course, you read of people making $500 from ten hens and a rooster, but that is from real fancy stock in which there is all kinds of possibilities, but on the other hand, there is the chance that you will not make anything from them. We have reference to the commercial kind, well managed; but it can not be done with the hit-or-miss scrub kind. They are too much like the Irishman's flea, you get your finger on them and they are not there.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Wide Range Is Shown In Realty Transfers

Announcements Include $85,750 Exchange, Sales of Land Lots in Fulton and DeKalb, Peachtree Buys.

An exchange involving 42 North Side city lots, a 1,750-acre farm in South Georgia and $85,750 in money, the purchase of 206 1-4 acres in North Fulton County and 203 acres in DeKalb, a transfer of business property at Buckhead and announcement of a $25,000 building on South Forsyth Street featured Friday's real estate news.

John H. Maddox, of the Smith & Ewing real estate agency, effected an exchange of properties between Dr. Joel T. Daves, of that agency, and George L. Patterson, of Valdosta, whereby the former gave 42 residence lots, beginning at the southeast corner of State and West Tenth Streets, and valued at $42,000, for a 1,750-acre farm in Lowndes County, valued at $43,700, or $25 an acre, and paid the differences, $1,750, in cash.

The North Side lots comprise about four blocks and front on Tenth, Eighth and State Streets, Peachtree Place and Ridge Avenue. Mr. Patterson has placed them with Mr. Maddox for resale, and Dr. Daves will cut his South Georgia farm into 100-acre tracts and offer them to immigrants. The sale indicates that South Georgians are willing to trust Atlanta real estate investments, and that, on the other hand, Atlantans recognize the opportunity in South Georgia colonization.

North Fulton Acreage Bought.

C. C. Foster and S. Y. Stribling, of Cobb County, and G. B. Thomason, of Jeff Davis, have sold to Morris Brandon and Ben J. Conyers three separate acreage tracts, aggregating 206 1-2 acres, in the upper portion of North Fulton County, north of Oak Grove, for $10,312, or at the rate of $50 an acre. This is in land lots 86 and 127 of the Seventeenth District, and is known as lots 1, 2 and 3 of the William E. Brightwell subdivision. A parcel 14 by 16 feet in lot 1 was reserved.

DeKalb Acreage Transfer.

Another large acreage deal has been consummated. Mrs. S. E. L. Ivey, of DeKalb, has sold to M. W. Reid and others, executors of the estate of the late J. D. Kilpatrick, 40 acres on the east side of land lot 15, Seventeenth District, and also 40 acres in DeKalb County; and W. T. Ivey, of DeKalb, has sold to same 23 acres in land lot 15, on the north line of said land lot 799 feet west of the east line thereof, and 54 acres in the southeast corner of land lot 16, and 46 acres in DeKalb County.

The total is 203 acres. That conveyed by Mrs. Ivey was sold for $3,800, and that by Mr. Ivey, $5,800.

Buckhead Transfer.

John G. Burckhardt has conveyed to B. F. and A. C. Burdett the triangle at the intersection of the Peachtree and Roswell Roads, for $15,000. The transaction was handled by George P. Moore and is understood to have been in the nature of a swap.

The frontage on Peachtree is 152 feet, on Roswell Road 150 and the base line is 72. Mr. Burckhardt bought this some months ago from Mrs. Lena Swift Huntley for about $12,000.

To Erect $25,000 Building.

There will be no nine-story business building for the present on the property of the D. Greenfield estate on South Forsyth Street, between Mitchell and Hunter Streets. A change of plans calls for a one-story and basement building to cost $25,000. Permit to build was issued Friday by Building Inspector Ed R. Hays.

The building has a foundation for nine stories, however, and it is probable that the estate will add to it later. Moise DeLeon is the contractor.

Interesting Loan Deed.

Joseph Loewus has given a loan deed to the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Company of Massachusetts for $37,500, borrowed on the Bass Dry Goods Company property at 18 West Mitchell Street, 48 1-2x140 feet. The Bass concern adjoins the McCroskey property at the northwest corner and was bought from the D. Greenfield estate some months ago by Mr. Loewus.

Lot Sales Total $9,000.

Fitzhugh Knox has announced the sale of six residence lots in his subdivision on South Moreland Avenue at an aggregate of $9,000. These sales have taken place since Mr. Knox started his fourteen bungalows in this section. The subdivision originally contained 41 lots, all but five of which have been sold.

Morris Brandon Sells.

J. B. Thompson has bought from Morris Brandon and others through the Smith & Ewing Real Estate Agency the northeast corner of Pine and Lovejoy Streets for $1,900 cash.

To Sell at Courthouse.

The Greene Realty Company will sell before the courthouse door Tuesday, August 5, the southwest corner of East Fair and Fraser Streets, 68 by 90 feet, for the estate of the late Dominico Gussi. The terms will be half cash and one and two years.

Not in Druid Hills.

In an account Thursday of the sale of 510 Briarcliff Road it was stated that this property was in Druid Hills. Briarcliff Road is in the Druid Hills section, but not in Druid Hills proper.

Buy on Peachtree.

Mrs. R. G. Warner has given E. A. Bancker, Jr., a warranty deed on a Peachtree property 162 feet north of Sixteenth Street for $10,500, 50 by 290 feet, this being lot 11, block 3, of Ansley Park, and Mr. Bancker has placed a $10,000 loan on it through the Home Life Insurance Company of New York. The place is described as 1096 Peachtree.

Interest in Electric Line.

A meeting of people interested in the proposed electric trunk line from Anderson, S. C., to Atlanta is expected to be called soon by the officials of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce, which body has received overtures from the Anderson Chamber. This road would connect up Atlanta with Greensboro, Winston-Salem, Anderson and Norfolk, if the plans of the Duke interests and the Anderson officials are carried out.

Real estate men are watching this development because of its possibilities in opening up new territory to the north of Atlanta and bringing in settlers from the other States.

Finish Peachtree in Three Weeks.

Repairs to Peachtree will be completed within three weeks, according to a statement of Shelby Smith, chairman of the Board of County Commissioners. The convicts have reached Peachtree Creek on their southward tour from Buckhead and have turned back to complete that part of the job. After finishing both sides they will begin at Peachtree Creek and work southward.

Chairman Smith declared that the machines now being used are capable of doing the work of 100 men, and that another labor-saving device, in the shape of a pulverizer, had been bought to break up the soil and road material. Hand labor is now being employed to do the pulverizing, and the work is necessarily slow.

Completing Healey Steel.

United States flags have been run up on the steel frame of the Healey Building, denoting that the first girders of the sixteenth and last above-ground story have been installed. This is a favorite performance among construction gangs—to hold an informal celebration when the last floor is reached.

Not only is the Healey Building going up fast in steel, but Stone Mountain granite has made its appearance at the base and soon will rise above the fences that inclose the structure. It will go 15 feet, where terra cotta will begin. Two stories are under ground.

William T. Healey, the owner, declares that although the building was two months late in starting, he is satisfied with the progress made.

Hurt Building's Arcade.

The unique entrance arcade of the Hurt Building is rapidly taking place. This is to be two stories high and is located in the apex of the triangular lot on which the structure stands, at the junction of Edgewood Avenue and Exchange Place. Handsome stone slabs are being put in place around the sides of the arcade. As for the rest of the building, it is progressing nicely. The exterior is almost completed, and soon the workmen will go inside to put on finishing touches.

Although the Hurt Building is not due to be opened before October 1, it is declared that leases have been signed for most of the space and that there will be no trouble filling the structure. The same is true of the Healey Building, which will not be completed until some time after January 1, 1914.

Some Day Babies Will Be Born Wise.

In Ages to Come Human Beings at Birth Will Know More Than Any Man Knows Now.

(Copyright, 1913.)

The most helpless and ignorant thing in the world is a new-born human being.

The most independent and wise thing in the world—in proportion to its ability—is a new-born mud wasp, or newly fledged sparrow.

That is because the human being is just in the beginning of its development, whereas the mud wasp, the ant and other insects have reached the highest development of which they are capable.

The saddest thing in the education of human beings is the fact that each child must begin at the beginning and learn everything for itself.

Each little baby learns to walk, learns to avoid the fire, learns to talk. The mind starts its life as a blank page, and everything must be written upon it. The child can not even learn by hearing from the father and mother of their mistakes. Each child must make its own mistakes, and can be taught only by experience.

But will that last forever?

When you see the lower forms of animal life giving birth to creatures fully equipped and independent, can you not believe that when the human race, practically just born on this planet, shall have lived here for a few hundreds of thousands or millions of years, that the human child will be born with all the material knowledge stored away, and have no work to do except the discovering of unknown truths, working in new fields?

We base this editorial upon an article by Sir William Ramsay, in the current number of Hearst's Magazine. We advise intelligent, thoughtful readers to get the magazine this month and every month. It is published for those who are interested in realities, those who are capable of thought.

In the article referred to, Sir William Ramsay describes both in the animal world and among human beings indications of a certain power of mind, of knowledge born in the newly created animal, apart from all teaching or experience.

He says, concerning the inhabitants of Burmah:

"Cases are known where a child, born of parents living in a village not their own, to which they had migrated, was able to recognize people, and to 'remember' events which had taken place in the native village of his parents, of which he could have had no direct knowledge. Is it possible that a memory for particular events is sometimes inherited?"

Then he says, of certain observations made upon swallows:

"Their nest was under the eaves; and for long, the parents fed and attended to their young brood. The day arrived for them to leave their nest; and without any practice, each fledgling dropped out of the nest, flew backward and forward, and without the least hesitation entered the nest, just like an old bird. The wonderful power of control of muscles, of guiding motion, and of correlation of brain and eye must have lain in the germ of these birds until the time for their use arrived. Examples of the sort might be given by the thousand; although the one mentioned is perhaps particularly striking."

It is extremely likely that the little boy of Burmah, a child bred for ages along the same limited line of thought, should have certain ideas and associations before birth strongly impressed upon it, and that these should be transmitted and appear in the child without any teaching.

There is no doubt that the children of savages recognize of their own accord the danger in poisonous reptiles and other animals to which the civilized child would be indifferent, except after the experience of a bite.

In the animal world the fact that the brain of the new animal is born with exact, wonderful knowledge is not disputed. And that fact is of intense interest to human beings who hope that the human race itself may develop one day in such a way as to have the children born with a ready-made education in excess of that which they now possess after years of schooling.

Suppose that a child could come into this world wise in proportion to its possibilities, as does the child of the mud wasp.

No baby mud wasp ever saw its own mother. The eggs are laid, and the mother who lays the eggs dies before they hatch.

Each new mud wasp begins its career as did Adam in the Garden of Eden, with nobody back of him so far as he knows.

When the mud wasp is ready she selects a good place to lay her eggs. Then she goes off and selects a fat caterpillar.

She intends that the caterpillar shall feed her young wasps when the latter hatch out. She puts that caterpillar beside the eggs that she has laid, covers up the eggs and the caterpillar, and goes away, leaving food for the young, unborn wasps, as some human mother might go out for a day's work leaving bread and butter on the table and saying, "Johnny, eat that when you get hungry."

The wonderful thing is that the mother wasp does not KILL the caterpillar. If she killed it, it would be decayed and useless by the time the young wasps arrived.

The mother wasp seizes the caterpillar and carefully stings it just back of the head, between two of the little rings that form the caterpillar's body.

This stuns the caterpillar, makes it impossible for it to move or struggle, but does not kill it.

And while the wasp eggs are hatching, the caterpillar, rendered helpless, but not killed by the poison, lies there ALIVE waiting for the little wasps to hatch out and eat it.

Presently they hatch, they eat it, and scatter.

The wonderful thing is that each of these wasps, never having seen the thing done, never having had lessons from its mother, or from any school-teacher, goes out when the time comes, lays her eggs, finds a fat caterpillar, stings it exactly in the same scientific way, and puts it away with the eggs, never having been told how to do it.

What a fine thing it would be for the children of human beings if they could be born with knowledge of that kind. Some of them are born WITH UNUSUAL KNOWLEDGE.

Some have musical power, which means that the brain before birth developed knowledge of harmony.

Some children can compose music correctly when they are almost too young to read.

Other children have a phenomenal mathematical faculty and can do "sums" that would puzzle their elders.

So far, man's brain is really too big for his body.

He was a timid, frightened monkey-man, running away from everything, developing his brain rapidly in order to make up for physical weakness. He has been a thinking man only

A Woman Next Door

You Choose Your Friends, She Says, Because You Like Them, and Like Their Kind, Not Because Somebody Else Thinks You Ought to Like Them.

By WINIFRED BLACK.

I READ a brilliant story by a brilliant writer the other day.

Did you happen to read it, too?

It was about a woman who lived down "behind the tracks," in a country town. She was a woman who flaunted the streets in a gorgeous hat and expensive gowns. She wore bangle bracelets that jingled and rings that sparkled, and high-heeled slippers and "open-worked" stockings, and the men grinned sheepishly when she passed, and nudged each other, and the women looked the other way and pretended they didn't even see her.

One day the woman from "behind the tracks" bought a house uptown and moved into it—a neat, pretty little house, with a garden and trees, and she dug in the flower beds and watered the lawn and put out hanging baskets, and she went to market in a little checked gingham, and she looked wistfully over the fence when the neighbors went by, but nobody ever spoke to her at all.

One night a baby was taken sick in the neighborhood and the woman from "behind the tracks" saved its life. The next day she stood out on her porch and waited to see the baby's mother go by. And the baby's mother went by—and did not see the woman from "behind the tracks" at all, and the woman from "behind the tracks" went and sold her little new house and the garden and all, and went back "behind the tracks" to live—and all the people in the village pursed their lips and said, "She's gone back—they always do."

What Did She Expect?

Good story, wasn't it, and a good slap at the narrow-minded little mother, who wouldn't make friends with the woman who had saved her baby's life?

We need a few such slaps as that, we women; and yet——

I wonder what the woman from "behind the tracks" expected when she bought the pretty little house and the garden, and went to live among decent people?

Did she think they would get out the band and meet and greet her at the doorsteps, or what?

You choose your friends because you like them, and like their kind—not because somebody else thinks you ought to like them.

If the woman from "behind the tracks" had come to the village from somewhere else and nobody knew a thing about her, do you think the neighbor women would have liked her anyhow? I don't.

She wasn't their kind; never was, never could be. She belonged to a different world, and every time she turned her over-blonded head and every time she opened her good-humored, too easily-pleased mouth, and every time she laughed her rather coarse laugh, she would have told what she was, and no woman of any fineness of perception could have been mistaken in her for a minute.

No, I don't mean what she had been. That isn't what would concern a kindly woman who was trying to decide whether she wanted her for a neighbor or not. I mean what she is. A gingham dress doesn't change the beat of a woman's heart; a garden hoe doesn't turn her from a coarse, easy-going, blunt-hearted person to a gentle, delicate, lovely woman, does it? I don't believe it.

A Lesson From Home.

Once I had a maid—a strange, silent, stubborn girl with blue eyes, so hard that they were like a flint. She had a strange, measured walk and a strange, controlled voice, and she always acted as if she thought some one was watching her.

One day I saw her in a blue print dress, of peculiar cut and shade, and I knew—she was a reformatory girl. I'd seen her before, at the reformatory.

I didn't say a word. I treated her exactly as I had always treated her, but one day she was gone and she left a letter for me. In it she said many things. One of them was this: "You know me; don't you? I believe you do. I thought I could be different, but I can't. You've been good to me, but I ain't happy here. I ain't comfortable, so I'm going," and gone she was, back to the people with whom she was "comfortable," poor thing. Back to the people who were like her and who had her ways and her point of view. I was sorry, but I didn't go after her or try in any way to reach her.

Perhaps I should have—I've often wondered—and yet there were the children. Would it have been exactly safe?"

Selfish—protecting my children at the expense of a poor thing who was trying to make herself over.

Perhaps; but those children are mine. They are my business. It is my affair to keep them safe as long as I can. My own doorstep I must keep clean, and then if I have time and strength I may help my neighbor about her's. That's the way it looks to me. I wonder if I am right or wrong?

What You Really Are.

The poor thing from "behind the tracks" didn't belong in the neat little street uptown. She was no more in place there with her loud laugh and her bleached hair than the timid little woman who lived beside her would be in place in the ranks of a marching army. I don't blame the neighbor women for looking the other way. Honestly, now, I don't.

And the high-heeled, expensive slippers and the open-worked stockings and the gorgeous hats and the flashing rings—she had had all these things while little neighbor turned her blue cashmere and trimmed it with black velvet one year and with cream-colored lace the next, trying to make herself look pretty to the one man she loved. How could the poor thing from "behind the tracks" think she would never have to pay for all that?

After all, though, it isn't what you used to be that counts. It isn't what you would like to be, either; but what you really are, and no change in dress or in housing or anything else will change that. I wish it would. How pitifully I wish it would.

Some Day Babies Will Be Born Wise

for a short time—probably not more than two or three hundred thousand years.

Unlike the ants, the wasps, and the swallows, he has not had time yet to develop knowledge, make it thoroughly his own, and TRANSMIT it.

But there is every reason to believe that in time to come the baby will be born with all the practical knowledge that it requires, just as the young swallow and the young wasps begin life thoroughly educated.

When the time comes, each individual will have a highly interesting career—each being born knowing everything that is generally known, and each being able to devote the whole of life to acquiring NEW knowledge and making original research.

The difference between the mud-wasp and the human baby now is that the wasp is born knowing everything that it needs to know—and never learns anything more.

The baby of the human kind is born knowing nothing, and learns a good deal.

In days to come, when the baby is born with knowledge, there will still be a difference between it and the wasp, the ant, and the swallow, for born with the things that it must know in order to live comfortably, the human baby, unlike its animal associates on the earth, will start out ADDING to human knowledge—which, in turn, by slow processes that go on within us, will be handed down to the new generation.
