SUSPICION TORPEDOED CONLEY; ACCUSED BY FACTORY FOREMAN

Negro, Whose Story That He Wrote
Notes at Frank's Dictation Is Generally Disbelieved, Was Often Drunk,
Mrs. White Can Not Identify Him

Suspicion upon James Conley, the negro whose unexpected arrival last week that he had written the notes found beside the body of Mary Phagan, at the dictation of Leo M. Frank, was followed by a speedy indictment of the pencil factory superintendent.

In the opinion of E. P. Holloway, timekeeper and foreman in the factory, Conley is the guilty man.

Careful study of the negro's story has revealed many absurdities in its structure, wherein evidences of childish cunning are in an effort to throw the blame onto Frank. It is this which has served to bring the deed to Conley's door.

However, Mrs. Arthur White, wife of a machanic at the factory, who testified that she saw a negro lurking in the building between 12 noon and 2 o'clock on the afternoon of the murder, denied the published report in an afternoon paper that she had identified Conley as the one. Mrs. White stated Tuesday morning that she had secured only a glimpse of the man. It may have been Conley, or another negro. Mrs. White was asked to pick Conley out of a crowd of twelve negroes some time ago, but her identification was a second choice.

The police, in spite of bending every effort to show that Frank is guilty, therefore, have resorted to a dissection of Conley's story. One of its weakest links, they believe, is the negro's quotation of Frank's statement to him "Why should I hang?" That the superintendent should place this confidence in the negro sweeper appears absurd.

Another damaging point against Conley lies in the declaration of Holloway, timekeeper of the factory, that the negro had appeared for duty infrequently on several occasions, but his duties as sweeper brought him in contact with the girls, who feared him.

Where Was Conley?

According to Conley's story, he was on Peters Street from 10 o'clock until 11 in the afternoon of the murder, which investigation of this has failed to prove the statement. Conley admits that he can not remember any incident whom he saw during that time to wear up his statement. From 2 o'clock until 5 Conley was at his home. This has been proven. Conley declares that from 5 until 8 o'clock that night he was down town; that he has not been established. Conley states he loved there the remainder of the night.

According to the new theory of Conley's implication, the negro wrote the notes on Saturday night, Friday, as he claims, and not on Sunday's dictation. It is further argued that, in order to ingratiate himself with the law, he made his confession when he thought that the case against Frank was clinched--that his story was the product of his own imagination.

Conley's claim in making this confession, said Frank's lawyer, seemed likely is another link against him.

This detailed account of the incident of the note writing, in which he even went so far as to attempt a quotation of what Frank said to him, shows a premeditation on the negro's part; it is argued, and further that the story was conceived by Conley while he was in prison. However, the negro's childish brain was not capable of making up a story, enough to withstand a lawyer's investigation.

E. P. Holloway, timekeeper and foreman of the factory, seen to-day by a Georgian reporter, said he was convinced that the negro, under arrest, had written the notes at Frank's dictation. Holloway told the reporter...

The good name of the city is involved. The good name of public servants is involved. Trials in newspapers are never effective.

There is no reason to believe that the charges against Beavers are true. Even the bitterest enemies of Beavers admit his honesty.

Whether Beavers' attitude is right in putting an end to the segregated district is not an issue. The law does not permit any choice in the matter.

It is not improbable that a little more liberality in some of the laws would be a good thing for the city and all concerned.

Beavers has no alternative but to enforce the law as he sees it, and he has no alternative but to compel those who accuse his department to go into court and try the case there instead of in the columns of the newspapers.

SUSPICION TURBULENCE CONLEY; ACCUSED FACTORY FOREMAN

Negro, Whose Story That He Wrote Notes at Frank's Dictation Is Generally Disbelieved, Was Often Drunk, Mrs. White Can't Identify Him.

Suspicion in the Phagan case was Tuesday morning turned full-blown upon James Conley, the negro whose unexpected assertion last week that he had written the notes found beside the body of Mary Phagan, at the dictation of Leo M. Frank, was followed by a speedy indictment of the pencil factory superintendent.

In the opinion of E. F. Holliday, timekeeper and foreman in the factory, Conley is the guilty man.

Careful study of the negro's story has revealed many absurdities in its structure, wherein evidences of childish cunning are a-rife in an effort to throw the blame onto Frank. It is this which has served to bring the doubt to Conley's door.

However, Mrs. Arthur White, wife of a machinist at the factory, who testified that she saw a negro lurking in the building between 12 noon and 2 o'clock on the afternoon of the murder, denied the published report in an afternoon paper that she had identified Conley as the one. Mrs. White stated Tuesday morning that she had secured only a glimpse of the man, it may be Conley, or another negro. One of its weakest links, they believe, is the negro's quotation of Frank's statement to him: "Why should I hang?" That the superintendent should place this confidence in the negro sweeper appears absurd.

Another damaging point against Conley's story is that it is contradicted on several occasions by his duties as foreman brought him in contact with the girls, who feared him.

Where Was Conley?

According to Conley's story, he was on Peters Street from 10 o'clock until 2 in the afternoon of the murder. Police investigation of this has failed to prove the statement. Conley admits that he can't remember any one whom he saw during that time, but by his statement, from 2 o'clock until 6 Conley was at his home. This has been proven. Conley declares that he had a outlook that night in his down town, this also has been established. Conley claims to have stayed there the remainder of the night.

According to a new theory of Conley's implication, the negro wrote the notes on Saturday instead of Friday as he claims, and not on anybody's clock. It is further argued that, in order to ingratiate himself with the law, he claimed to have been at the factory. It was there that Frank was attacked--that is, Conley's story is the product of his own imagination.

Conley's delay in making this confession until Frank's indictment seemed likely to another link against him.

The detailed account of the incident is on Page 8.

FOREMAN OF FACTORY ACCUSES NEGRO COILEY

State Faces Big Task in Trial of Frank as Slayer

What will be the defense of Leo M. Frank when he is called upon next month to answer to the charge of slaying little Miss Phagan? With the confident announcement of the police attorney that a completed case against the factory superintendent that was of conclusive value as to the guilt of the accused, this question naturally is being asked today by every citizen who has any interest in the mystery, and that makes progress every day in Atlanta.

The police possibly would never have known that Frank was the factory superintendent if it were not for his own free admission. As far as is known, had it not been for his own free admission, the body that was the girl he killed would have been found in the building at that time, and the evidence, revealed, Frank did not have to tell of his deed, even if he had.

The defense, therefore, will be in a position to ask: "Should not this admission be regarded as an indication of innocence rather than as an admission of guilt, as the detectives have considered it up to this time?" It is to be expected that the officers as soon as they are likely to tell the story as it is approached that he saw the girl and talked with her, when there is no need of such an admission. It should be noted that the fact that the murder was committed between 12 and 1 a. m. is not an admission, as one of the theories contends, that there were several other people in the building at that time, and that the way to the argument that if it had been a murder committed at that time would not have been Frank who did it.

Should the State seek to prove that the murder was committed between 12 and 1 a. m., as the affidavits obtained from Mrs. Mima Pombly indicate, the defense will be able to establish that the girl was not in the building at that time, and that she was not in the building at that time, and that she was not in the building at that time.

Frank's friends deny connection. Frank's friends deny connection. Frank's friends deny connection. Frank's friends deny connection. Frank's friends deny connection.

At the police station ten negroes were brought before me. I picked out one with a green derby and said that he looked considerably like the man I had seen. They told me to look again, and I saw another man. I never made any positive identification, and I told the detectives in the first place that I would not be able to identify the man I had seen.

The detectives now say they have much more to say. They say that they have much more to say. They say that they have much more to say. They say that they have much more to say.

With the confident announcement of the police attorney that a completed case against the factory superintendent that was of conclusive value as to the guilt of the accused, this question naturally is being asked today by every citizen who has any interest in the mystery, and that makes progress every day in Atlanta.

The police possibly would never have known that Frank was the factory superintendent if it were not for his own free admission. As far as is known, had it not been for his own free admission, the body that was the girl he killed would have been found in the building at that time, and the evidence, revealed, Frank did not have to tell of his deed, even if he had.

The defense, therefore, will be in a position to ask: "Should not this admission be regarded as an indication of innocence rather than as an admission of guilt, as the detectives have considered it up to this time?" It is to be expected that the officers as soon as they are likely to tell the story as it is approached that he saw the girl and talked with her, when there is no need of such an admission. It should be noted that the fact that the murder was committed between 12 and 1 a. m. is not an admission, as one of the theories contends, that there were several other people in the building at that time, and that the way to the argument that if it had been a murder committed at that time would not have been Frank who did it.

Should the State seek to prove that the murder was committed between 12 and 1 a. m., as the affidavits obtained from Mrs. Mima Pombly indicate, the defense will be able to establish that the girl was not in the building at that time, and that she was not in the building at that time, and that she was not in the building at that time.

small amount might prove an incentive to state persons. The defense very likely will argue. And it is not at all certain that the negroes who were the motive, had any idea that the small amount would be so small.

It is probable that Frank would have taken the trouble to hide the girl's purse when it could not have been identified in any way. The defense also will fight against the introduction of much of the character testimony that was permitted to go before the coroner's jury. Frank's attorneys will attack every identification of Frank made by Officer House of Inaud Hills Park, on the grounds of its utter improbability.

Will Attack Officer. They will question the ability of House to identify a man he has seen only once and after a lapse of two years. They will attack the probability of a man of Frank's standing permitting himself to be seen in company with a girl in short skirts.

They will question the probability of his admitting his identity to the coroner and saying "I am Leo Frank, superintendent of the National Pencil Factory," when his main concern naturally would have been to keep his name out of the case. They will bound to play a large part in the trial, and they will be a source of mystery for it is very much on a question of probability that the police are basing their expectations of conviction.

Even should the State be able to prove beyond a doubt that it was Frank whom the jury heard described in company with a young girl two years ago, the defense will be able to say that this fact no more connects Frank with the murder than it does hundreds of other persons who were in the factory at that time. The announcement of the detectives themselves that they do not place implicit confidence in the so-called confession of the negroes who were the motive, makes it unlikely that the trial will have anything to do with the statement that he wrote notes at the direction of Frank the day before the murder.

Sanelli, May, Yet Be Witness. Lawyer adds the possibility of a premeditated murder, which no one has ever suggested, and which would make it unlikely that the trial will have anything to do with the statement that he wrote notes at the direction of Frank the day before the murder.

It is rumored that E. L. Sanelli will figure in the case again. Sanelli is the man who declared positively before the coroner's jury that he saw Mary Phagan shortly before midnight the night of the murder. Sanelli knew Mary Phagan from infancy. He said that he could not be mistaken in her identification. He testified that he had met her on the street in company with some man and that she had said "Hello, Mary," and that she had replied "Hello, Ed."

The Duty of the Grand Jury-- Investigate All the Charges of Graft and Bribery!

The Georgian repeats its suggestion that the Grand Jury MUST TAKE UP AND INVESTIGATE THOROUGHLY the charges of graft and bribery that have been made in the newspapers during the past few days.

And the matter should not end with the Grand Jury. It should be taken into a court of law.

Colonel Thomas B. Felder has made some accusations that merit immediate attention.

If there is graft in the police department or bribery anywhere, the public has a right to know about it...

The good name of the city is involved. The good name of public servants is involved.

Trials in newspapers are never effective. They lead nowhere. The public is still unconvinced.

Trials by judges and juries are final and conclusive. THE PUBLIC WANTS FACTS.

There is no reason to believe that the charges against Beavers are true. Even the bitterest enemies of Beavers admit his honesty.

Whether Beavers' attitude is right in putting an end to this segregated district is not an issue.

It is not improbable that a little more liberality in some of the laws would be a good thing for the city and all concerned.

Beavers has no alternative but to enforce the law as he sees it, and he has no alternative but to compel those who accuse his department to go into court and try the case there instead of in the columns of the newspapers.

SUSPICION THROWN TO CONLEY; ACCUSED BY FACTORY FOREMAN

Negro, Whose Story That He Wrote Notes at Frank's Dictation Is Generally Disbelieved, Was Often Drunk; Mrs. White Can Not Identify Him.

Suspicion in the Phagan case was Tuesday morning turned full force upon James Conley, the negro whose unexpected confession last week that he had written the notes found beside the body of Mary Phagan, at the dictation of Leo M. Frank, was followed by a speedy indictment of the pencil factory superintendent.

In the opinion of B. F. Holloway, tinsmith and foreman in the factory, Conley is the guilty man.

Careful study of the negro's story has revealed many absurdities in its structure, wherein evidence of childish cunning appears in an effort to throw the blame onto Frank. It is this which has served to bring the dead to Conley's door.

However, Mrs. Arthur White, wife of a machinist at the factory, who testified that she saw a negro lurking in the building between 12 noon and 2 o'clock on the afternoon of the murder, denied the published report in an afternoon paper that she had identified Conley as the one.

The police, in spite of bending every effort to show that Frank is guilty, therefore, have resorted to an examination of Conley's story. One of its weakest links, they believe, is the negro's quotation of Frank's statement to him: "Why should I hang?"

Another damning point against Conley lies in the declaration of Holloway, foreman of the factory, that the negro had appeared for duty intoxicated on several occasions; that his duties as sweeper brought him in contact with the night, who feared him.

According to Conley's story, he was on Peters Street from 10 o'clock until 11, in the afternoon of the murder. Police investigation of the law failed to prove the statement. Conley admits that he can not remember anyone whom he saw during that time to use up his statement.

strangled Mary Phagan when about half drunk. Conley said that he had three months that Conley was here in a suspicion of doing and that he had watched him as closely as possible, for a place upon which he depended. He became indifferent about his work and activities.

Mrs. White Denies Identification.

Mrs. J. Arthur White, of 49 North Bree street, made positive denial to the Solicitor General's office Tuesday that she ever had made any identification of James Conley, the negro charged with the murder of Mary Phagan, as published in an afternoon paper.

The first floor of the factory as I left there about 11 o'clock in the afternoon of the murder. I did not get a good look at his face. I got just a general impression of his color and of his size.

small amount might prove an incentive to such persons. He probably would like to see the body. And it is not at all certain that the body is there. The motive had any idea that the person who would do this would be so small.

connects Frank with the murder than 2000 hundred of other persons. The announcement of the detective that they do not know the person who committed the crime in the public confession in the so-called confession of Frank and James Conley makes it unlikely that the trial will have anything to do with the identification of Frank with the body of the murder.

State Faces Big Task in Trial of Frank as Slayer

What will be the defense of Leo M. Frank when he is called upon next Monday to answer to a charge of strangling little Mary Phagan? The confident announcement of the police Monday that they had completed a case against the factory superintendent that was as complete as a case against the factory superintendent in the testimony of actual eyewitnesses to the crime, this week has given rise to a possibility that the trial that is being asked to-day by everyone who has any interest in the case will not open in Atlanta.

The people will not get their answer from Luther Z. Ross, the attorney and also attorney of Frank, until the trial actually begins. But even in this early date, there are a number of vague hints being given as to the course that will be followed in the battle to free Frank from all suspicion. It is expected that many openings offered the defense for the purpose of the trial.

Burden of Proof on State.

The burden of the state's duty develops in Atlanta's battling mystery and who venture to predict the line of defense that will be offered at the trial. In the first place, the great burden of proof is upon the prosecution not upon the defense.

Frank's Friends Drive Connection.

Those interested in the defense of Frank appear both optimistic and pessimistic in the negative. Not one thing has been found, they declare, that connects Frank directly with the mysterious strangling. Nor do they regard the circumstantial evidence as certain beyond reasonable doubt.

STATE FACES BIG TASK IN TRIAL OF FRANK

Prosecution, in Evidence Made Public, Has Not Directly Connected Him With Slaying.

What will be the defense of Leo M. Frank when he is called upon next month to answer to the charge of strangling little Mary Phagan?

With the counting down of the minutes of the trial which they had completed a case against the factory superintendent that was an encyclopaedia of facts as it possibly could be without the testimony of actual witnesses.

The people will not get their answer from Luther Z. Rosser, the distinguished and able attorney of Frank, until the trial actually begins.

It is absolutely necessary, due to the protection with which the law is judged under stipulation of crime that the State in some manner, by some piece of evidence, connect Frank directly with the crime.

Until the State is able to do this, Leo Frank may rest on his laurels. He has no need to be concerned in this momentous trial.

Continued From Page 1. spoke to him except in connection with her work. Nothing was found to point the finger of accusation directly at Frank, so far as the public has been informed.

Own Admission Caused Arrest. The police possibly would never have known that Frank was the last person to see Mary Phagan, so far as is known, had it not been for the free admission. He told the officers that the man he identified as his. None of the personal belongings were found near the residence.

Should the State seek to prove that the murder was committed at this time, it need not have been Frank who did it, and to another argument that Frank would have been very unlikely in Atlanta at the time he was in the city.

Another Motive Possible. The defense also will be in a position to suggest that there might have been another motive for the crime than the one generally accepted. No physician has stated positively that he was certain of any conclusions from his examination of the body.

WHO ARE THE BRIBERS AND GRAFTERS? FELDER MUST PROVE CHARGES

The charges of bribery and graft made by Thomas B. Felder are so important they can not be ignored. Statements by Chief Beavers and Chief of Detectives Lanford make it clear that some persons of influence are trying to use their "pull" to bring about a condition of affairs in the city that the majority of people are opposed to.

Jury is now in session, and the investigation should be started at once. The public is entitled to know all the facts, know the names of those giving or receiving bribes, and if Felder has seen a "graft list," as he says he has, he should be made to tell about it.

Investigation quick and relentless must be begun at once! The Grand

The public is not willing to believe anything against Beavers. He is regarded as honest and efficient. Felder must be made to prove his charges!
