"September Morn'" the famous painting which caused New York and Chicago to blush and finally had to be draped with trapezes, stirred up some talk on Atlanta Saturday when H. S. Cole, of the Cole Book Company, Whitehall Street, defied the sudden edict of the police that the beautiful maiden must not be exposed to the vulgar gaze of downtown shoppers.

Weather conditions were ideal, the ponies were in excellent condition, and to-day's game furnished even more thrills than did Tuesday's, which was won by the Americans by the score of 1-2 goals to 4.

When played up and down the field, the English were not so strong, and then the game was called. The Americans won the toss for position and chose the north end.

When the game was called, the Americans won the toss for position and chose the north end. There was a brilliant play back and forth around the field, and finally L. Waterbury carried the ball near the English goal, but missed an unguarded shot, and the Englishmen carried the ball by great team play to the American goal, where it was kicked out of bounds.

At the first minute of play the English nearly got in another goal, as Stoddard failed to watch Coyle closely enough and the gallant Englishman missed the goal by only a few inches.

A moment later the Americans had another chance to score, as Stoddard got the ball and carried it down to the English goal, but Eberfeld's brilliant play spoiled his shot. The English attack was working in splendid shape and in a few moments they made their first goal. Stoddard took the ball and in a few moments he nearly played again near his missed goal, but missed it by a hair's breadth.

STRIVE TO SHOW SHERIFF MANGUM BAD FAITH BY PRESIDENT

Washington, June 14.—Over the protest of Senator Reed, P. R. Hearst, secretary of the Michigan Beet Sugar Company made public before the Overman lobby in the Michigan state house, a letter from A. J. Douglas, treasurer of the company, to W. H. Wallace, general manager, following an address by Woodrow Wilson in Detroit during the presidential campaign.

After Mr. Wilson's address in the city of Detroit, the president's opponent of Michigan interested in the beet sugar industry stood ready to invest millions of dollars more in this industry, had before doing so wanted to know the truth about the case.

Mr. Wilson's statement was that the evidence in this case was purely circumstantial, and that it was not his duty to accept any of the negro's statements as accurate, as he had no way of knowing if he was the killing of the girl, she was dead, and she had no body.

After the developments of Friday it became evident that the prosecution, while it is buying itself out of the worst, is buying itself against the arrival of any evidence which might tend to find all of the evidence in the hands of the state and then has in the meantime shifted every available resource directly upon the state's case.

"Absolutely nothing of a suspicious nature has been brought against the negro... The negro's conviction is based upon the evidence that he had the opportunity. On the other hand, the state has no evidence that he had the opportunity."

SEPTEMBER MORNINGS BY POLICE DEFIED

H. S. Cole Refuses to Take Copies of Famous Nude Painting From Store Window.

"September Morn." the famous painting which caused New York and Chicago to blush and finally had to be draped with trowels, stirred up a tempest in Atlanta Saturday when H. S. Cole, of the Cole Book Company, Whitehall Street, defied the order of the police that the beautiful maiden must not be exposed to the vulgar gaze of downtown shoppers.

For some days now the shy, lass-like damsel has lured the eyes of passers-by to the book shop window a score or more distant. It should be made for copies hung everywhere make of the window a regular tower of Babel.

Revere and untroubled the charming young woman, brought into a crowd by the magic brush of Paul Chabas, the famous French artist, has passed through her city or more eyes into the hustle and bustle of Atlanta with a penance gaze that seemed to expunge long for some good book in place of Britanny.

Woman Gazing Tells Police. All unsuspecting, then, the maid blushed when, unexpectedly, the blow fell. A woman shopper passing the store took a glance at the fair form gazed in horror and notified the police.

Detective Shaw, who has an eye for art as well as for crime, was dispatched to the scene. He viewed the canvas with cold, calculating eyes. It was very beautiful, but the "but" assailed the lady's face as far as the police were concerned.

Chief Zett ordered her libeled. Mr. Cole referred her to Willis Everett, chairman of the Carnegie library, Mr. Cole that M. Chabas had performed an immortal feat when he gave Miss September Life, but—there you are.

Grand Jury to Go Into Charge Again Tuesday, Taking Up Dictograph Records.

It was practically certain Saturday that the Grand Jury had determined to investigate the vice and dictograph charges when its next session Tuesday.

While names of witnesses have been furnished in anonymous communications, almost every person who has testified before the Grand Jury in its investigation thus far has furnished the names of persons who would testify to substantiate charges on the other side in the controversy.

In This Weather--GIVE YOUR BABY A DRINK OFTEN

It Cries for Water Oftener Than for Food Copyright, 1912.

Warm weather means, unhappily, the usual dangerous and unnecessary deaths of children. White hoarses come out in this weather, with the little white coffins lined with satin. And the poor mothers that have suffered to bring their children into the world suffer more intensely as they see them die. And then they use the money that might save the other children to pay for an expensive funeral which our false ideas of respect for the dead impose upon us.

Thousands of children in the big cities are killed every year. In New York, for instance, because tenement house owners have more influence with politicians than mothers and children, and because dangerous, diseased milk is sold in spite of all warnings and Health Board regulations--money again more important than life.

And children die all over the country, because the lesson of pasteurization has not been thoroughly taught and doctors that ought to know better are stupid enough to oppose it, for reasons which they best understand.

There are a few things for mothers to remember. If you are worried about your baby, have a doctor see it, A GOOD DOCTOR. If you can not get a good doctor, go to the Department of Health, get the advice of a doctor at a free dispensary.

Don't wean the baby, when the weather is very hot, if you can possibly help it, or when it is ill. The change in food upsets the digestion and may be fatal at a critical moment.

FEED YOUR BABY REGULARLY. Sacrifice everything to this important point. The child's stomach gets used to food at certain times, and digests it easily at those times, if the food is regular.

Get a doctor's advice about feeding a baby if it is delicate. Every two hours in the daytime, and every four hours at night will do for a healthy child.

Don't dress your baby warmly, HAVE NOTHING TIGHT AROUND ITS NECK OR STOMACH, KEEP EVERYTHING LOOSE AND AIRY EVERYWHERE.

Have your windows open day and night. Keep the baby off the dirty floor, where it gets germs on its little hands and puts them in its mouth.

Remember that in the really hot weather the thinnest possible clothing is all that a child needs. One little, thin, cotton shirt, low-necked and without sleeves, will do while the baby is indoors.

Avoid strong draughts. But better a draught than not enough air.

Above all, give your baby enough to drink. If the baby cries in hot weather, give it two or three spoonfuls of water, COOL, BUT NOT ICE.

Boil the water that you give your baby. And KEEP THE BOILED WATER TIGHTLY COVERED IN A CLEAN BOTTLE so that germs won't get into it.

Feed it with a spoon dipped in hot water, A CLEAN SPOON.

Dangerous signs of disease that carry off children suddenly are vomiting and diarrhea. Notify your doctor, or the Health Department, AT ONCE.

Let your baby REST. KEEP THE FLIES AWAY FROM IT, THEY BRING DISEASE.

A young baby, washed clean in the morning, with cool but not cold water, put on its back almost naked on a bed with a mosquito netting thrown over the top of the bed (but not touching the child)--such a baby, fed regularly, with water to drink when it wants it, will be happy in hot weather.

Don't let the children tease the baby. Don't let grownup people play with it and tire it. Remember that it is GROWING UP AND DOING NOTHING ELSE. Don't try to awaken its intelligence or make it laugh.

If you strain up the little brain you disturb the little stomach.

Remember, WHENEVER A BABY CRIES SOMETHING IS WRONG.

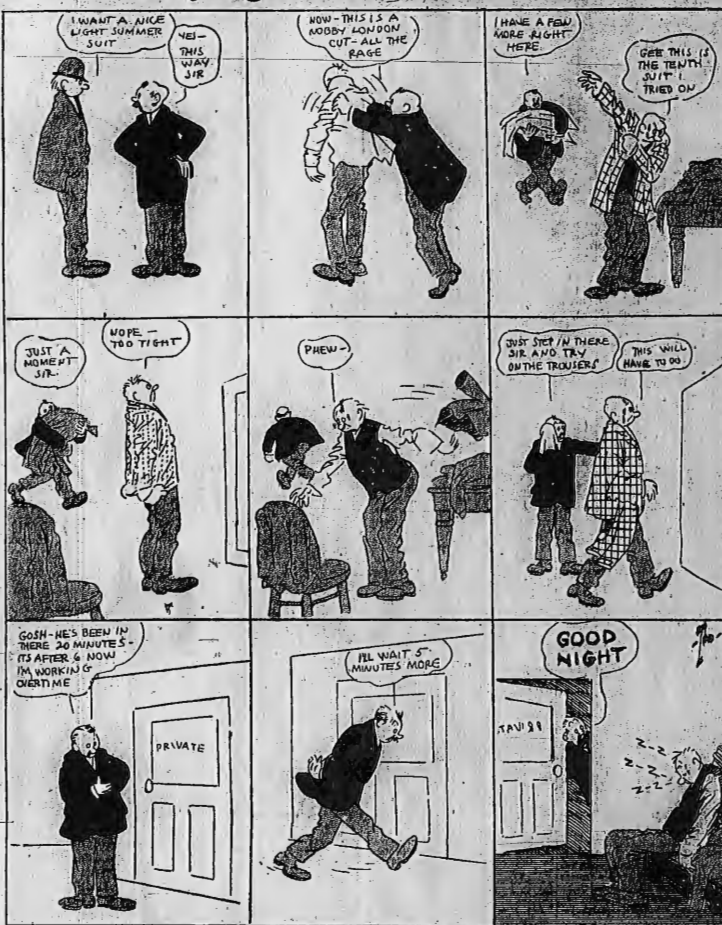

Don't get cross; FIND OUT WHAT'S THE MATTER! That's your business. It may be a tight string, a bandage drawn too closely around the legs, need a change of linen, or it may be thirst.

Don't feed the baby every time it cries. Give it water, Remember that.

If you offer to nurse a baby when it is thirsty it will take the breast as the bottle TO RELIEVE ITS THIRST, and thus YOU FORCE IT TO OVEREAT.

Incidentally vote and work for better conditions in this rotten world, which allows tens of thousands of children to die every year needlessly, because of poverty and official neglect.

The Dead Hand

Young Men Are To Be Advised, He Says, to Cut Off the Dead Hands of Their Grandfathers Who Hold Them Back, and Listen for the Applause of Grandfathers Who Cheer Them On.

WRITTEN FOR THE GEORGIAN BY REV. DR. JOHN E. WHITE Pastor Second Baptist Church

In Sir Walter Scott's novel, "Old Mortality," the central figure is an aged man obsessed with the idea that "What people die they ought to die and be forgotten." He therefore made it his business to travel from churchyard to churchyard laboriously chiseling off the names on the tombstones.

The genius of Sir Walter discerned in human nature a ground for "Old Mortality's" mad fancy. To cut the names off the tombstones was the romantic way of protesting the clutch of the past upon the present--the senseless grip of the dead hand.

The apocryphal of progress in every age have made that protest. Mankind advancing discovers its most formidable foe belied. The great obstacles of humanity are not in the path before, but in the path behind--not the hardship of new difficulties, but the handicap of old weaknesses.

Sir Walter Lanier's famous lines are the best poetry on the subject: "Old Past, let go and drop into the Tull's infamous waters covered there. For I am living and thou art dead. Thou drizzeled back while I forge ahead. The day to find."

The young man in trouble. The problem of the dead hand is prominently asserted in the new Science of Heredity. Formerly it was believed that every man started life a fresh and new creation, with a fair field before him. We know now that every man is a perpetuation of forces physical, mental and moral, which have long existed and which are persistent in him.

Some time ago a picture was sent to me by a friend. It was the picture of a young man--a typical young American. Before him lay the glittering heights of fame. He is making a desperate effort to climb them. Evidently something retards his progress. There is an agony of effort, but also an agony of difficulty.

Looking closely at the picture, you discover that the young man is in trouble with a mass of newspaper clippings about his limbs and body, which are holding him back. Then the genius of the artist appears. These clippings are the handicaps of heredity.

In the rear is the shadowy form of an old grandfather, looking on a goblet of wine; not far away is an old grandmother jauntily dealing a pack of cards; in the central distance behind him is another ancestor, a miser, clutching a bag of gold; in the equality area farther off is one of his

Song of the Little Americans in Congress

By JAMES J. MONTAGUE

GIVE us public buildings! Pass around the pork! Every hungry Congressman wants to load his fork! Right and wrong, right and wrong! That is what we're for! Bileucus the foolish chap that proposes a war! Bilepus! We wouldn't give a rap for all the ships afloat. We're the sons of battlefields, Bilepus can't get. Let the navy rot and rust! What gives US a berth? In joining in the "YEAS" that pass a public building bill.

Most of us get dreadful sick upon the bribe deep. It takes a new stone potato to make OUR pants leap! We've put 'em up in our home towns from Yuma clear to Maine. And how they help us each two years to make a stroke campaign! Oh! we are smart, all right, we are; we make no foolish slips-- There isn't any politics in voting battlefields!

All this talk of training men, and getting stores of coal. Grievous a politician, to the very soul. You're that's what we're after, you're--the sentimental fools! About the nation's dignity does not appeal to US! Let other nations if they like put fists upon the sea. We're Congressmen and we will spend our money, as we please! We've got a few good ships, we've heard, and every now and then we built another just to please the navy gentlemen. But all this talk of adequate defenses for the nation. We built ourselves look upon with marstoned disapprobation.

What's that! The Japs Ains't threatened us? We Ains't Ains't enough! Well, better not offend them now--Just let 'em make their bug. Comply with all of their demands, get 'em, and give 'em more. It's Ains't our battleships and we're afraid of war.
