FINANCIERS' WOES ARE NOT FELT HERE

Business in Atlanta and the South is good, according to Atlanta business men. In some cases it is above last year's level

There is some stringency of money, but well-established business houses, carrying on conservative operations, are getting their usual accommodations from the banks. The country banks in Atlanta territory have been supplied to the limits of their needs by their city agents.

The cotton crop promises well, and it will be made cheaper than any previous Georgia crop. A good crop means remarkable prosperity this fall.

These are the conclusions of Atlanta bankers, who, unwilling that the public should accept Wall Street's view of the situation as final, express their opinion of local conditions.

Colonel Lowry Optimistic.

"Conditions in the South are all right. Business is good, and the demand for money is no greater than it usually is at this season of the year. From, say October, I look for great prosperity," says Colonel Robert J. Lowry, president of the Lowry National Bank.

"The information which reaches us is that the corp is in excellent shape. I talked with one well-informed man yesterday from a section in Georgia which grows a great deal of cotton, and he says he never saw a better crop, since the late rains.

"There is some nervousness, of course, with the tariff and the money reform questions unsettled. I am, as you know, a protectionist. I suppose, though, there are some things which need regulating. Some modification no doubt is desirable. The manufacturers are prepared to meet reductions to some extent.

"I believe it is more important to have the matter cleared up than it is to argue over the exact amount of the changes. It is the unrest, the uncertainty, which causes the nervousness. When the thing is determined one way or another, trade can proceed. Just now textile mills, for instance, can not make trades, because they do not know just what the future basis will be.

Urges Moderate Revision.

"Things are going to turn out all right. As I said, although I am and always have been a protectionist, I believe we could stand a moderate revision downward of the tariff. I believe in the income tax, too. I would make no exceptions, though. To my mind, the man who makes $100 ought to be willing to give his dollar to the Government, and the man who makes $100,000 ought to be willing to give his $1,000 for the benefits of the Government which he enjoys.

"I have known President Wilson since he was a young lawyer in Atlanta. He is a splendid American. I want to see him upheld.

"Those fellows in New York are a little too blue, I think. We of the South have no cause to fret. No man who is doing a conservative business is going ot be hurt in the least."

Frank Hawkins, president of the Third National Bank, thinks the present conditions are good for the future welfare of the South.

Sees Too Much Trading.

"We have been trading too much in my opinion," says Mr. Hawkins. "Some little tightness of money is not

POLICE HOLD CONLEY BY COURT'S ORDER

Judge Roan Gives Suspect Chance to Show Why He Should Not Be Released.

The Phagan case took a queer turn Wednesday afternoon when Judge Roan, apparently stirred by Luther Z. Rosser's araignment of the way Jim Conley has been "petted" by the police, issued notice to suspects in the mystery that they will be given opportunity Friday to show cause why the negro should not be released from custody as a suspect.

However, the move is strictly legal in character. Conley, through his attorney, W. M. Smith, having signed a written statement to stay in the custody of the police as a principal witness if previous orders are vacated and he is legally freed as a suspect.

Agrees to Remain.

Judge Roan informed Solicitor General Hugh M. Dorsey that he wanted to withdraw his previous order committing Conley to the police station so that the negro's status could be definitely fixed and so that he could perhaps be sent back to the county jail. Both Conley and his attorney announced that the prisoner wanted to stay at police headquarters.

Smith also came forward with the agreement that Conley would remain in custody of the chief of police.

Sensations Ahead.

Judge Roan then issued what is known as a rule nisi, informing Frank, Gordon Bailey, an elevator boy, and ..ewt Lee, the negro night watchman, that they could be given a chance Friday to show why Conley should not be released.

Sensational developments may follow Friday if the Frank defense is allowed to present facts against Conley for Attorney Rosser is firmly convinced that the negro is the guilty man and has so announced.

Whether the negro shall be indicted as an accessory after or to the fact, or be continued to be held as a witness, will then be determined.

Napier Analyzes The Phagan Case.

The Georgian publishes the following letter written by George M. Napier, the well-known lawyer, on the Phagan case, as it gives for the first time a legal analysis of the case for and against Frank:

To the Editor of The Georgian:

This section of our country has held very few criminal cases so profoundly interesting as the Phagan case. Indeed, it is questionable whether the entire South has ever had enacted within it a crime which has created such intense and widespread interest.

Personally, I have no concern in the case, save as a citizen of the State, desiring that the guilty party or parties may receive condign punishment.

Profoundly Interested.

As a lawyer, being interested more intimately perhaps than those not of that profession, certain aspects of the case—the procedure taken in the efforts of those immediately charged with ferreting out the facts of the crime, and the varied and swiftly changing developments in connection with it—I find these to be of profound interest.

One thing has been made evident: The people generally are disposed to ascribe guilt to one who has the opportunity to commit crime. This was shown by the widely-accepted conclusion that Leo Frank and Newt Lee, colored, were guilty of the murder of the Phagan girl, as soon as it became known that they had been at the pencil factory on the day of the homicide.

This conclusion was fixed in the minds of many by reason of the evident inclination of the detectives to

Suffragettes Win The Ballot in Illinois

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., June 11.--By a vote of 83 to 58, woman's suffrage carried in the lower house of the Legislature this afternoon. The suffrage bill had previously passed the Senate and now goes to Governor Dunne for his signature. The Governor will sign the measure.

The law will become effective with the other measures adopted by the present General Assembly. Submission to the people for ratification is not necessary.

It is estimated that the passage of the law will add 3,512,640 votes at the next general election.

PHAGAN CASE IS ANALYZED BY NAPIER

Letter by Lawyer Gives Legal Facts as They Concern Leo M. Frank and Conley.

believe Frank guilty. And there is little doubt that if the two men had been imprisoned in an unprotected town jail they would have been lynched while suspicion and excitement were at their height.

Praises Newspaper.

This mental state of the community did not last, however. The remarkable success of the local press in obtaining and publishing every detail of the evidence of the detectives enabled the reading public to weigh the testimony by piecemeal. It is safe to say that there lately have been many accessions to those who from the first hesitated to accept the theory of the guilt of Frank, or of the night watchman who found the body, upon the sole basis of their opportunity to commit the crime, and with all the circumstances going to negative motive to kill the young girl, especially on the part of the white man.

The zeal of the secret service men in trailing to cover criminals who effect getaways is to be commended, but the work of building a successful prosecution upon a mere case of suspicion will, in many instances, fail.

The testimony of Frank before the Coroner's jury, in which he gave, with conspicuous consistency and openness, an account of his actions and whereabouts on the day of the killing, created a favorable impression on the public mind.

Strengthened by Witnesses.

This was strengthened by the corroboration of his statements as to the time of his movements by impartial witnesses of unquestioned veracity.

The indictment of Frank by the Grand Jury seems to have been seized upon as the psychological opportunity for the negro Conley to admit that he wrote the notes found by the dead girl's body, and the comparison of his handwriting with that of the notes proves that fact beyond peradventure. But the network of lies in which Conley has become enmeshed seems not to have given the forces conducting the prosecution any serious impression as to his own guilt as the actual murderer of Mary Phagan.

Two things, it seems to me, would be sufficient to clear Frank of the crime, in the absence of any proved motive to commit it. The first is the work done by him on his books at the pencil factory on the afternoon of the killing and subsequent to the time which is assigned by common consent for the occurrence of the deed.

How Could He Have Done Work?

That a man could go to the delicate and intricate task of spreading upon account books the record and figures of a week's transactions of a factory employing a large number of hands, and involving numerous financial dealings, and requiring four or more hours of steady work; and that he could do this with his usual accuracy and celerity staggers belief.

The other fact is a piece of testimony by the negro Conley himself. He has made the statement that when he was assisting Frank in the disposal of the dead girl's body he noticed the time clock in the factory and saw that it lacked four minutes of 1 o'clock. At that moment, he says, Miss Corinthia Hall and Mrs. Emma Clark Freeman, two employees, came into the factory and Frank told him to hide in a cupboard in the office.

But Miss Hall and Mrs. Freeman testified that they were at the factory one hour and eleven minutes earlier than that, and that they left the factory at 11:45 and did not return that day. The conversation they had with Mr. Frank is the same that the negro says he heard.

Discrepancy in Time.

The murdered girl reached the city by street car at 12:04. This has been definitely proved. She reached the factory and received her pay envelope at 12:10 or 12:15, so far as is known. Thus the negro adds this to his many other admitted lies—and if the girl was dead at the time he heard Frank talking to Miss Hall and Mrs. Freeman, she was murdered before she left her home.

To one who is sufficiently interested to look over the scene of the crime several things worth noting will be revealed. Coming down from the office in the pencil factory, a young girl, unprotected, might well glance with nervous dread at the pile of large boxes under the stairway near the elevator shaft. In daytime the corner under the staircase is in semi-darkness. It is an ideal place for a would-be criminal to screen himself.

If the girl left the factory after receiving her pay and came down the stairs, this dark corner was behind her as she walked down the steps. A woman who testified, but whose name I do not now recall, saw a negro lurking in this corner. Conley has admitted that he sat for some time near the elevator.

He had the opportunity to spring upon the poor girl as a spider would upon a fly. If robbery was his motive, an assault with a stick might have felled her. She could have been thrown down the elevator shaft or through the opening near the elevator, which has a ladder under it leading down to the dirt floor of the basement.

The place on the second floor where Conley says he picked up the body of the girl shows no trace of blood. Every circumstance indicates that she received the blow on her head before she died—and he says she was dead when he saw her there—so if she bled anywhere the strong probability is that the bloodstains would have been found where she had been picked up.

Even the mystifying fact that the staple of the rear door, leading out of the basement to the street, had been pulled from the inside could be easily explained on the theory that the criminal took the precaution to pull that staple so as to be able to run down the ladder and make his exit safely by the back street in the event any outcry was made by his victim.

Much emphasis is placed upon the dramatic manner with which Conley re-enacted the supposed work of carrying the body from the second floor to the basement that fatal day.

Might Not He Swear Falsely?

Does it tax our credulity greatly to believe that a cunning negro, who has been proved to have had unobstructed opportunity to commit the crime, and who admits having secreted the body, is capable of swearing that another man was with him when the crime was committed—a man behind whom he can hide from the law?

Would a drinking, irresponsible, perhaps criminal man of a low order of life be incapable of swearing away the life of any man if by so doing he could save himself from the gallows?

What is called the "humanity of the law" invests every person charged with crime with the presumption of innocence until his guilt has been proved, and proved to the extent of being irreconcilable with every hypothesis of his innocence. Guilt must be established beyond a reasonable doubt.

And the reasonableness of a doubt on the minds of the jury trying a given case might depend largely upon the state of the public mind regarding that case.

For this reason, if for no other, the people in a community where a crime has been committed should be reluctant to reach a conclusion of the guilt of any one, where only circumstantial evidence is adducible.

It would be a remarkable termination of the Phagan case, which is not now so mysterious as it once seemed, if Frank, the first man suspected by the detectives, should be acquitted, and his accuser, the negro Conley, should be brought to trial and convicted.

But stranger things have happened.

And if the evidence against Conley is as strong as it now seems assured it will be, will not the prosecution be greatly handicapped in the necessity of prosecuting Conley by reason of having put forth such strenuous and hopeful efforts to convict Leo Frank?

How Rewards Would Be Shared.

Rich rewards will recompense the discovery of evidence to convict the slayer in this case. If Frank should be found guilty, the division of the large sums offered for evidence to convict will go to certain secret service men who first called attention to the opportunity of Frank to commit the crime, and who have directed their energies in the investigation of it on the theory of his guilt.

If Conley should be proved guilty, one of the foremen of the factory who saw the negro washing a shirt under suspicious circumstances, and who directed his arrest, will likely get the coin. But with the public it is not a question of rewards to be distributed; but it is the vital, the supreme question, who is the real murderer?

The law, if rightly followed, is a noble instrument of protection to society, including the ignorant, the weak, and those of little understanding. It points the finger of suspicion at no man, but demands evidence before guilt can be determined—either the clear and unmistakable proof of eyewitnesses, or an array of circumstances which excludes every reasonable hypothesis of innocence.

Lauds Frank's Character.

In determining motive to commit crime, we have reason to regard the character and reputation of the individual. In the case under consideration, the man who protests his entire innocence and ignorance of the crime, but who now stands indicted as a criminal, has been for six years an exemplary citizen of this community, and the trusted manager of an important manufacturing enterprise.

He has sustained well the confidence reposed in him. A leader in the community life of his race, he has been highly honored for one of his years. The attachment of his friends to him in the weeks of his imprisonment has been rarely significant of an unshaken confidence in his complete innocence.

The high character of a large majority of his friends, who are men incapable of the desire to shield the perpetrator of so heinous a crime, removes the suggestion of a clannish defense of racial bias.

Is not the case against Leo Frank so far presented against him palpably weak? And does not the far greater weight of evidence now point unmistakably to the negro Conley as the sole perpetrator of the crime?

Lanford Lauds Sleuths' Work in Phagan Mystery.

The extra labor falling on the detective department because of the Phagan mystery received special reference in the monthly report of Chief of Detectives Lanford, sent to Chief of Police Beavers for submission to the Police Commission. Chief Lanford also commends several detectives for their untiring work on the case. He said:

"It has been a very hard and laborious month on account of the Phagan case, and I wish to state that the men have been very vigilant and untiring in their efforts to run down this case. I wish especially to commend Officers Starnes and Campbell for their untiring, faithful and able work. I feel that the public will feel thoroughly satisfied with the results when wound up.

"I wish to thank each and every man, and especially yourself, for the services and valuable assistance rendered my department during the month."

With the remark that she had been away on business of her own as the only explanation of her mysterious disappearance of two days, Minola McKnight, negro cook at the Selig residence, returned to her work Monday. To every inquiry she replied:

"I'se jus' been away on some business of my own," and with this meager enlightenment Mrs. Frank and other members of the household were forced to be content. The negro woman was as positive on her return as she was before she mysteriously dropped out of sight for 48 hours that she had told the detectives nothing of the nature of that contained in the document purporting to be her affidavit.

Attempt to Remove Jim Conley Reported.

There were unconfirmed reports Wednesday that an effort would be made to have Jim Conley, the negro sweeper who made three conflicting affidavits accusing Leo M. Frank of the murder of Mary Phagan, removed from the police station to the county jail.

Solicitor Hugh M. Dorsey held a hurried conference with Superior Court Judge Roan and the negro's attorney, W. M. Smith, but would tell nothing about the conference.

Just what was to be gained by the transfer was not plain unless it was to get the negro out of the reach of persons who may be interested in drilling him in his story. The police consistently have denied that Conley was drilled in his narrative.

The reports were evidently the result of the announcement made Tuesday by Luther Z. Rosser, who charged that the police had made no real effort to get the entire truth from the negro. He pointed out that after the negro had made two conflicting affidavits the police announced themselves satisfied with the third, which was just as patently unsatisfactory in the things it left unexplained.

Slain Girl's Parents Subpenaed by Dorsey.

Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Coleman, parents of Mary Phagan, were subpenaed by Solicitor Dorsey Wednesday and appeared at the court house shortly after noon. The solicitor would not say for what purpose they had been summoned. It was, however, expected that they would be called before the trial of Frank.

DAUGHTER HEAD OF PAINTER COMPANY

JACKSONVILLE, June 11.—Miss Okle Painter, daughter of the late E. O. Painter, was elected president of the E. O. Painter Fertilizer Company at a meeting of the stockholders held last night. At the same time it was decided to increase the capital stock of the company from $250,000 to $500,000, with the privilege of increasing the liabilities to an equal amount.

Reports submitted at the meeting declared the condition of the business of the company to be flourishing. A 10 per cent annual dividend was declared.

Miss Painter announced, after the meeting, that the business of the company would be conducted upon the same plans as heretofore under the presidency of her father, who was drowned in the St. Johns River May 22, the cause of which is still a mystery.

Trained for Place.

No one is better able to carry on the work of the dead man than Miss Painter. Since finishing school she has occupied a place in her father's office. Having no son on whom to depend, he trained his daughter to take his place. She is familiar with every detail of the business, both administrative and manufacturing. She has spent much of her time at the fertilizer plant, directing affairs for her father.

Another reason why the daughter is the logical person for president of the company is that she controls the major portion of the stock. Her father held $190,000 of the outstanding $250,000 issue. Under his will all of this, except $26,000 distributed in special bequests, goes equally to Miss Painter and her mother, Mrs. Martha Painter. The daughter retains the exclusive voting power of the $26,000, the beneficiaries to receive only the income therefrom. This $26,000 will eventually revert to Miss Painter or her heirs. She also represents her mother in the estate.

Painter Planned Increase.

The action of the stockholders in doubling the capital stock is simply carrying out the plans made by Painter. He had worked out the details whereby small blocks of the stock would be sold to planters in Florida and South Georgia, who in turn would buy their fertilizer from the Painter company, thus increasing the volume of business done and give the planter-stockholders small rebates in the form of dividends.

And at the same time Painter saw how he could add to his own holdings by declaring a stock dividend, giving the old stockholders proportionate shares of the new issue. Painter, of course, planned to secure enough of the new stock to still give him a majority of the combined issue and retain full control of the business. Now the widow and daughter will come in on that distribution, making the daughter probably the only young woman in the South as the head and absolute dictator of a half-million-dollar corporation, doing an annual business said to exceed $750,000.

Since the death of Painter, State Senator J. B. Conrad, of Glenwood, has been nominally acting president of the company, but he spent two weeks of the time at Tallahassee attending the final days' sessions of the Florida Legislature, leaving the Painter business actually in the hands of Miss Painter, D. A. Morrison, Jr., secretary of the company, and G. C. Hamlin, general counsel.

Fine Cotton Crop Prospects Promise Great Year for All Lines Throughout the South.

a bad thing under such conditions. It makes for conservatism and economy.

"One good effect already is seen. This will be the cheapest produced cotton crop Georgia has grown in many a year. Nothing could be more healthy than this economy by the country bank and by the farmer.

"By the way, the crop looks good. It is perfectly clean and, while not large, is healthy and properly cultivated.

"Underlying conditions in the South are sound. Business holds up well. The New Yorkers who are emitting gloom are extremists. No man, no matter how cheerful he is, can remain long in the atmosphere of Wall Street, with stocks where they are now, and keep free from the blue tinge. But this is not a community interested in stocks and bonds. Let the New York man come here for ten days and he will begin to look more cheerful at once.

Looks for Good Times.

"We need a good crop. It looks as if we are about to get it. When it is in I look for excellent times."

Captain James W. English, president of the Fourth National Bank, is most optimistic.

"We have not refused a legitimate demand for money this year. We have not turned a customer down. We have taken care of the country banks up to the limit of their demands," he says.

"Manufacturers, jobbers and retailers in Atlanta who are our customers are doing a good business, as we can tell from their accounts. We hear no complaint from them.

"There is considerable building going on in the city, one of the best indications of business conditions.

"The volume of loans varies very little from last year's figures. There has been no unusual demand for money.

"This is not a time for undertaking great expansion. We have found that business men also take this view of the matter. We have not been called upon to check overambitious tendencies save in one or two cases.

"Country banks have not borrowed heavily. It has been their policy to enforce moderate expenditures among their customers. This will be reflected in great prosperity when the present excellent crop prospect is fulfilled.

Hysteria in New York.

"If a man would set off a cannon cracker in a New York bank nowadays, the officers would seize their hats and jump over the tops of their desks. That is hysteria.

"But no ripple of unrest has reached us. Wait until September, when the well-worked, thoroughly-cultivated crop begins to move. Then you will see things blossom forth."

"Business is moving along very well," says Charles E. Currier, president of the Atlanta National Bank. "Retail and wholesale merchants tell us in many instances that their sales are ahead of last year. Stable business does not move by fits and starts from season to season. The volume of trade this season is satisfactory.

"Much, of course, depends upon the growing cotton crop. Just now perhaps the plant is a little small and a little droopy. But give us a few weeks of sunshine and see how it grows.

"The tariff uncertainty is causing some hesitation, but it will be cleared up soon. The South, as I see it, is in good shape."

VIZIER OF TURKS ASSASSINATED IN REVENGE

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, June 11.—Mahmud Shevket Pasha, Grand Vizier of Turkey, and his military aide were shot to death to-day by two assassins in the streets of Constantinople. News of the double assassination was first received here in private dispatches. Later it was officially confirmed.

Mahmud Pasha and his aide were automobiling to the Sublime Porte when the murderers, who stood near the entrance of the building, fired upon the motor car with deadly aim.

Mahmud Shevket Pasha, who came into power in February, has been exercising the prerogatives of military dictator. He was one of the chief leaders of the Young Turk party, and the closet adviser of Enver Bey, the commander-in-chief of the Turkish army.

The Grand Vizier was undoubtedly slain in revenge for the murder of Nazim Pasha, War Minister and commander-in-chief of the Ottoman army, who was shot down by Enver Bey last winter.

He says if he had been sober at the time he would not have accused his wife of having someone in the room with her, and that as soon as he regained his proper senses he realized his mistake.

LET THE GRAND JURY INVESTIGATE DICTOGRAPH RECORDS

FROM the moment the famous, or infamous, dictograph records were made public, it has been clear to every right-thinking person that the only way to get at the truth was to have an investigation by the Grand Jury.

Charges and counter charges have been made, until the public is so bewildered that the real issues have been lost sight of. What is wanted is THE TRUTH. Are there any GENUINE dictograph records? Are there any records that will bear LEGAL analysis? If so, whom do they involve?

If the charges, as published, are crooked, or padded, the public has a right to know it. If the records are genuine, the public has a right to know that also.

It is time to STOP this scandal mongering. The Grand Jury is the proper body to investigate, so that the truth may be known.

At the moment Atlanta is being made ridiculous to all the rest of the world, and it is not unlikely that injustice may have been done to some of our officials, and perhaps private citizens also.

It is time to stop muck-raking and establish the truth!

FELDER RETURNS PHAGAN FUND TO GIVERS

Attorney Explains Disposition of Money Subscribed to Secure Burns' Services.

Colonel Thomas B. Felder Wednesday issued an itemized statement of the funds subscribed by Atlanta citizens, to secure the employment of the Burns Detective Agency to investigate the Phagan mystery, to show that these funds had been returned to the donors.

According to Mr. Felder's statement, but $102 was actually subscribed. This amount was placed in the hands of Curtis N. Anderson, a member and treasurer of the law firm of Felder, Anderson, Dillon & Whitman. In a letetr to Colonel Felder, dated June 9, Mr. Anderson gives the following disposition of the fund:

"I have received from contributions to the Burns fund $102. Several of the contributions were anonymously made; in the majority of other cases contributors requested that their names be withheld, and in some cases the addresses of the parties making the donations are unknown to me. Under your direction, I am returning to the contributors the several amounts sent in by them, where the names and addresses of the contributors are known, and I am directed by you to return the balance upon their request.

Felder Pays Extra Expense.

"I also desire to say that you have directed me to charge whatever disbursements have been made, which, by the way, are several times over larger than the contributions that have come in, to your personal account. This I have done."

The following amounts in chronological order were received by Mr. Anderson, according to his report:

Along with Mr. Anderson's itemized account of the funds, Mr. Felder makes the following statesment, which he addresses to the public:

"Mr. Charles I. Ryan, who was designated as custodian of the fund without his knowledge or consent, informs me that he has already returned to the contributors whatever money was paid in to him.

"The Atlanta Journal, The Atlanta Constitution and The Atlanta Georgian subscribed $100 each, and I am informed that certain subscriptions were made to them. They have not been paid in and are not expected, and the three newspapers are hereby requested to return to the contributors any sums that they have received.

"In addition to the above and foregoing, permit me to say in conclusion that additional sums aggregating several hundred dollars were subscribed by the public, but were not paid, and payment has not been and will not be requested."

Mr. Felder further stated that he would ask the Bar Association to pass upon the regularity of his employment in the Phagan case and make a report upon it. He also declared his connection with the controversy as ended.

Fain Demands a Speedy Hearing

Denies Charges of Rowdyism

Indicted, He Defies His Enemies

W. P. Fain, accused Police Commissioner, above, and J. A. Skaggs, who told story of alleged rowdyism.

Police Commissioner W. P. Fain was indicted on two counts by the Fulton County Grand Jury, according to the announcement of the jury's findings made public Wednesday morning.

In one bill Mr. Fain is indicted jointly with M. T. Cantrell, of the tailoring firm of Cantrell & McHugh, charged with running a disorderly house at 40 Harris Street, the home of Mr. Cantrell. The other indictment charges Mr. Fain with committing assault and battery upon a woman whose name is unknown to the Grand Jury.

Commisisoner Fain, when he learned of the indictment on Wednesday morning, protested his innocence, and asked that judgment by the public be suspended until the case is tried. His statement follows:

"As is known by everyone familiar with the procedure of the court, it is comparatively easy to secure an indictment before the Grand Jury, as they only hear one side of the case. I have no apprehension as to the outcome of the trial, as I know I can prove my innocence beyond a question of a doubt. All that I ask is a speedy trial and that the public will suspend judgment until the facts are known."

Mr. Fain's case is said to have resulted in an indictment by the Grand Jury following close on its investigation of the charge made against him on Tuesday. Two witnesses testified yesterday. They are said to have told of the fight and general disorder in the Harris Street house, and charged Fain with being one of the principals in the fray.

Claim Fain "Fiexd" It.

They testified that while the disorder was in progress Call Officer W. F. Anderson, of the police department, went to the house, but Commissioner Fain arranged matters by telephone with the police headquarters, thereby escaping arrest. These witnesses were Allen Young, a real estate man, and J. A. Skaggs, agent of the Southern Express Company.

HARRISON TELLS SOCIAL NEEDS OF ATLANTA

This was the statement made by Shelby M. Harrison Wednesday, who is here with Franz Schneider, Jr., and Zenas L. Potter, at the request of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce to make an investigation of the city's social and commercial needs. All are experts from the department of surveys and exhibits of the Russell Sage Foundation.

"I am basing my observation, not on what I have seen of Atlanta, but on what I have seen in practically every city in which I have been in the United States," added Mr. Harrison.

"In the past cities have grown in a haphazard, aimless manner. They have leaped into importance through their natural advantages, but their growth in many instances has not been symmetrical. They have ignored and neglected certain features they are coming to-day to realize are absolutely essential to their well-being and continued progress.

Playgrounds Overlooked.

"Sometimes it has been playgrounds and other provisions for the happiness and health of the children that have been overlooked in the breathless race for wealth. Or it may be that the sanitation has not been cared for during the years of the cities' mushroom growth.

"Whatever the situation is, it is the purpose of these social surveys to discover the causes that have retarded a city's progress, that have lowered its health conditions, that have deprived it of the commerce that is its due, and to pick out any other deficiencies that have crept into the administration of what may be termed its social activities.

"Of Atlanta we know very little as yet. Tuesday we spent in getting our geographical locations. We interviewed a few persons, but mostly we busied ourselves with getting a general idea of the 'lay' of the city. We were struck with the evident spirit of progress and prosperity.

Work Is Preliminary Diagnosis.

"Atlanta has fine business buildings. In this respect she compares favorably with any city of her size in the country. And almost wherever I went Tuesday in the business section I could hear the sounds of the builders putting up new structures.

"Our task in Atlanta can hardly be dignified by the term of 'social survey.' It is rather a preliminary diagnosis. A thorough social survey would occupy a force of half a dozen men for five or six months in Atlanta, I should judge.

"We will be here not much longer than ten days. After one or two days we may give most of our attention to certain phases of the city's methods which appear to us to require the most radical changes.

"At the close of our work we will return to New York and after thoroughly reviewing the results of our investigation we will frame recommendations and submit them to the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce. The Chamber of Commerce then will decide whether or not it wishes to continue the work and accept the recommendations.

"To my mind the chamber has taken a very important step in the ordering of this preliminary investigation. The majority of the cities of the country are being awakened to the fact that they can not outstrip their sister cities by the mere force of their natural advantages or by the unmethodical and sometimes unwarranted 'boosting.' They must have a safe city, a healthful city, a clean city morally and physically. They must have playgrounds for the children and a hundred other things that were hardly thought of a score of years ago.

"It is the purpose of these surveys, where a program is included, to map out scientific methods for the administration of the varied departments of city life and to furnish a scientific check on the results of every activity. It is the purpose to look out for the individual well-being of the inhabitant as well as the commercial prosperity of the city."

ASKS BEAVERS TO INVESTIGATE AFFIDAVIT

Chief of Detectives Newport Lanford telegraphed Chief of Police Beavers in Washington, D. C., Wednesday morning to investigate the origin of the affidavit bearing the signature of George M. Gentry in connection with the dictograph plot.

The detective chief asked Chief Beavers to find Jeannette Henning, the notary in the national capital who swore Gentry to his statement, and ascertain if the stenographer signed the affidavit which was brought to Atlanta by Detective E. O. Miles. The telegram asked that a minute investigation of the statement be made and the conditions under which it was made be wired to him immediately.

Chief Lanford's action was taken following his declaration that he did not believe the affidavit genuine. Lanford stated as his belief that the stenographer's name had either been forged or that Gentry had been coerced into signing the document.

Police officials have also conducted a rigid investigation into the standing of Detective Miles. Miles, the investigation showed, is at the head of the Reed Detective Agency.

Thomas B. Felder was at one time one of the largest stockholders in the agency, Carl Hutcheson being also a stockholder and attorney. He it was who appeared before the Police Commission and urged that body to grant the permit for the agency's operation in Atlanta.

Negro Fined, Despite Scripture Recitation

Calvin Williams, a negro preacher living in College Park, Wednesday morning recited Scripture to Recorder Broyles in making a vigorous protestation that he is a "law-abiding citizen." He explained that he is a graduate of the Tuskegee Institute.

Williams was arraigned as the result of a clash with a conductor on the College Park trolley line when the conductor asked him to move his seat. Judge Broyles imposed a fine of $3.75.

World Morally Ill, Cardinal Gibbons Tells Graduates

WASHINGTON, June 11.—Cardinal Gibbons told the graduates of the Immaculate Seminary at their commencement exercises here that the world has awakened to the fact that it is morally sick.

"Despite the warnings of the church," the Cardinal said, "it continued to ignore its sickness until the cancer of open vice spread to such an extent that the realization of the seriousness of its condition had to come, and we see the result in the present general warfare being waged against white slavery and its allied vices.

"But with the awakening of the public conscience has come a better order of things and the world is advancing along moral lines that each day makes it a better world to live in."

Presbyterian Picnic Postponed by Cold

After planning an all-day excursion to Powder Springs, Ga., for their annual picnic, and issuing a large number of tickets to the Sunday school scholars for Thursday of this week, the members of the Central Presbyterian Sunday School have postponed their picnic for one week on account of—"cold weather."

The tickets that were issued for this Thursday will be honored the same day next week instead. The Central Presbyterian is one of the largest Sunday schools in Atlanta, having present 600 or 700 practically every Sunday morning, and the annual picnic is always a big event.

C. O. D. PARCEL POST AFTER JULY FIRST

New Department of U. S. Postal Service Offers Many Advantages to Citizens.

On July 1 the C. O. D. parcel post law will go into effect. Manufacturers, retail merchants and farmers will be greatly benefited, as they will be able to send wares to any domestic point with the Government to act as collector.

A distinctive C. O. D. parcel post tag has been issued and will be attached to each package. The tag has three coupons affixed to it. The first will serve as a receipt to the sender, the second will be retained at the mailing office, and the third will be attached to the parcel.

On the first tag the sender files as many items as possible, including the item showing the amount due him, and places his name and address on the back. All tags are numbered, and this will serve as a double check and eliminate chances of mistake.

C. O. D. parcels may be accepted by rural carriers and the receipt to be given the sender will be sent after the parcels are numbered at the postoffice. The C. O. D. parcels will be delivered by city and rural carriers and special delivery messengers.

C. O. D. parcels will not be accepted when addressed to either the Philippine Islands or the Canal Zone until later.

Court Costs Fought In Bankruptcy Case

A contest over the costs in the bankruptcy case of the Driver Hardware Company, of East Point, was before Judge Newman in United States District Court Wednesday.

A petition in bankruptcy was filed by the company. After paying all bills there were no liabilities. Subsequently the company took back the business.

Judge George F. Gober, representing the company, said all questions regarding the bankruptcy proceedings were settled, the only point at issue being the costs in the case.

BRITON PRAISES U. S. POLO TEAM

Captain of Englishmen Says the Game Was Fastest He Ever Played—Odds Change.

NEW YORK, June 11.—The brilliant 5 1-2 to 3 goals victory of the American polo team over the British challengers yesterday has filled the American supporters with extreme confidence of ultimate victory, and the betting fraternity is now offering big odds on the Americans' chances.

Captain R. G. Ritson, of the English team, commenting to-day, said:

"It was a fast game—the fastest I've ever taken part in. The Americans have a wonderful team. We did our best—but we lost. But we hope to have better luck Saturday."

Captain Harry Payne Whitney, of the American team, declared to-day it was "a bully good game" and "we hope to win again Saturday and keep the trophy on this side of the Atlantic."

The fine teamwork by Americans and their seeming all-round superiority over the Britons is causing American polo enthusiasts to predict an overwhelming victory when the teams meet again on Saturday.

Society leaders from all parts of the country, who turned out nearly 10,000 strong for yesterday's game, will remain in New York for Saturday's contest. The hotel corridors are thronged with polo lovers, the sole topic of conversation to-day being polo.

GRADUATED AUTO TAX IS PLAN OF LAWMAKERS

Legislature Also May Instruct Collectors to Stop Evasion of Ad Valorem Tariff.

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

In seeking to reform the tax laws f Georgia, it is likely that the automobile will be taken into most serious consideration by the new Legislature.

There are now more than 20,000 machines in the State, averaging in value about $1,200 each. These machines pay a flat license tax to the State of $2 a machine, and that is about all the State gets out of them. Not more than 10 per cent of the automobiles licensed are returned for taxation upon an ad valorem basis.

Secretary of State Phil Cook says nine machine owners in every ten believe the flat license tax of $2 per machine is all the State requires of them, and that many owners, not now paying taxes according to the value of their machines, are not so much intentional tax-dodgers as they are ignorant of the fact that an automobile is as much property subject to general taxation as anything else.

It is likely that the license tax will be graded according to the value of the machine registered hereafter. It is figured that it is not quite fair to charge an owner of a $500 runabout the same license tax that is charged against the owner of a $10,000 limousine. Moreover, tax collectors doubtless will be instructed by legislative direction strictly to require the return of all automobiles for taxation, according to their value.

If these two reforms are inaugurated they unquestionably will bring a fine revenue into the State Treasury.

It seems to be realized generally among members of the incoming Legislature that Georgia must increase its revenues in every direction hereafter, in order that the State may meet its absolutely necessary expense bills, and that the only way to do it is through tax reform and not through a higher tax rate.

There is a great deal of enthusiasm manifested among the citizens of Winder over the question of the new county of Barrow, and it is certain this proposition will be one of the livest to come before the new Legislature.

A well-known citizen of that city, talking of its present unfavorable location at the "corners" of three counties—Gwinnette, Jackson and Walton—cited the following circumstances to show how much confusion and annoyance arises from the same.

"A well-known citizen of Winder passed away recently and left property in several sections of the city. His widow had to take out administration papers in three separate counties in order to handle his estate legally and properly," said he.

"Winder gets its school fund from three counties, with a different pro rata in every diraction. One county pays $2.75 a pupil per annum, while another pays only $2.40. The children of both attend the public schools of Winder, with the same advantages—but it isn't fair.

"Persons with things to sell in Winder requiring a State license generally don't try to sell them. They are required to obtain a license in all three counties centering in the town.

"Winder is some 20 miles from the county seat of every one of the three counties meeting there. That's a big nuisance, and rankly unjust to Winder and the surrounding territory.

The statement that United States Senator James Hamilton Lewis may shave off his scintillant whiskers has been accepted with great reserve by his Georgia friends.

When the junior Senator from Illinois lived in Georgia his whiskers were his pride. He looked upon them much after the fashion of a good Mohammedan, whose most sacred oath is taken "by the beard of the prophet."

"Jim Ham" may shave those roseate whiskers from off his handsome countenance, of course, but Georgians never will believe it until they see it an accomplished fact.

Representative Robert Blackburn, of Fulton, is looked on generally as one of the leaders in the next House.

Blackburn is a veteran in the House, although he has been out for several years. He is one of the ablest parliamentarians in the State, and is more than well qualified to take care of himself either in the running debate of the floor or in the committee rooms.

The gentleman from Fulton is rather small of stature, but he is loud in voice and sonorous enough to be pleasing when under full steam ahead in argument.

There will be few men in the next Legislature who know their way around better than "Bob" Blackburn.

A bill to require all railroads operating in Georgia to provide underpasses or overpasses at all grade crossings, when so directed by the Railroad Commission, is now being prepared by a well-known member of the House, and will be introduced soon after the Legislature meets.

It is designed to be fair to the roads, and will require the counties affected, in such instances as the commission may undertake to regulate, to bear a reasonable part of the expense of construction.

This bill likely will have considerable support in the Legislature, as there is a growing sentiment throughout the State that such legislation is needed.

Whether the bill will pass is problematical, but it will be earnestly and aggressively urged, nevertheless.

ENGLISH CARTOONIST DRESSES AMBASSADOR PAGE IN COURT FRILLS

On sailing to take up his duties as American Ambassador to the Court of St. James Walter H. Page declared that he would never appear in court dress during any of the social affairs at Buckingham Palace. Recent cablegrams from London contained the information that Mr. Page would live up to this declaration. The cartoonist of the London Bystander, however, didn't take the Ambassador at his word and has pictured him as he would look if he did bow to the custom of foreign representatives in appearing at these functions in full court costume.

DR. STONE GOES ABROAD TO REST

New Moderator of Northern Presbyterian Church Overcome by His Heavy Duties.

CHICAGO, June 11.—Overwork has sent the Rev. John Timothy Stone, Moderator of the Northern Presbyterian General Assembly, to Europe for a long vacation. With Mrs. Stone and his three daughters he will lose himself somewhere on the Cornish coast for most of the summer. Later the Moderator will tour the Continent, returning in October.

The Rev. Mr. Stone was made Moderator in May when the Assembly met at Atlanta, Ga. This added greatly to his duties as pastor of a rapidly growing congregation. His church—the Fourth Presbyterian, on the North Side—has been replaced by a beautiful new building on Lincoln Parkway.

In the three years that Dr. Stone has lived here he has filled every seat in his church, the congregation of which had sadly dwindled. His efforts also have secured funds for the new church from his parishioners, among whom are all the McCormicks, the Willings, the Skinners, the Wentworths, Highs, Bentleys, Pomeroys, Philo Kings and many wealthy families.

Moderator Dr. Stone will go direct to Scotland to meet the Scotch Presbyterians at Glasgow. From there he will go to the Cornish coast.

HOW PLAIN GIRLS CAN WIN HUSBANDS

CHICAGO, June 11.—Dr. C. Franklin Leavitt has made public a lesson in winning a husband by suggestion.

"We must visualize our desires before one can expect to realize them," he said. "A girl should picture the sort of woman she wishes to become, and then impress this picture on her subconscious mind so it is ever with her.

"A woman may turn herself into a hag by depressing thoughts. A wise woman creates within herself conditions which attract. The subconscious mind is under direct control of the conscious mind and can be impressed through repeated strong suggestions.

"When a girl who is not attracting men comes to me I ask her to look herself over for her weaknesses. If her cheeks are hollow I insist on her exercising the muscles of the face.

"The girl should give a handshake as if she had not a friend, and in limp fashion. Thus she will emanate suggestions of love and harmony and not of condemnation an apprehension.

"A woman has two weapons—thought and action. When she is possessed of a 'going mind' she is almost irresistible. A woman with power wins the man she wants.

"The first lesson to all unattractive women should be to picture themselves in a receptive attitude toward men. From childhood they should be taught to meet the opposite sex without fear and bashfulness.

"Thoughts properly directed can change the physical being. From concentration on a subject fifteen minutes a day women have become beautiful. They should suggest to themselves at intervals that they are beautiful.

"Married women should take 'treatments' to retain the affections of their husbands. Going back to the old days of honeymoon attraction she is able to keep her husband interested."

WIRE IS FLASHED FROM SEA BOTTOM

AT THE BOTTOM OF THE SEA, LONG BEACH, CAL., June 11.—The cage submarine at the bottom of the Pacific Ocean, Long Beach, Cal., sends greetings to the world as being the only submarine boat that can run its engines under water:

"We have been submerged since 5 a. m. Tuesday, June 10, and will stay down until 5 p. m. Wednesday, June 11, 1913, thus breaking by twelve hours the record of the submarine Octopus, which remained submerged 24 hours in 1907.

"The running of our gasoline engines keeps our air so pure we could stay down a week if desired. Our submarine will break all records for speed and maneuvering, because our propellers are at the prow instead of at the stern of the boat.

"The crew of six men have quarters in the engine room, and there is not a trace of gasoline fumes in the boat. We are sending the message by a telegraph wire connected to our boat and that by means of a cable in the ocean.

Beautiful Birds With Odd Names Compose Queer Window Group

A collection of South Sea Island birds, valued at $1,500, on exhibition at the French Dry Cleaning Company, Joseph May & Son, forms one of the most unique exhibitions of its kind ever shown in Atlanta. The collection comprises about fifteen varieties, including a number of the so-called Paradise birds, which, when weary of life, commit suicide by strangling themselves with the fine, long "stranglers" which extend from the body.

Mr. May's collection includes also such rare species as the Kepeng, Kalona, the Black Bird of Isop, the Pate Boenga, the Nge, valued at $30; the Tempot Tail and the Bolontron. The Black Bird of Isop species is particularly interesting, as the body feathers of this bird are as soft as the finest velvet. The entire collection was made originally for the Parisian Plume Company by the hunters of Mikel Merkes Company.

MARION JACKSON AND HOTEL MAN SET RIGHT

John Edmondson, Lessee of Empire, Denies Statements Made Public by Carl Hutcheson.

The following letters given to The Georgian in reply to charges made by Carl Hutcheson explain themselves:

Editor The Georgian:

Attacks upon myself personally are immaterial.

They were expected. Others will be made. But protected vice can not revive itself in Atlanta by slandering me or any other individual. I am only one of a committee, which committee represents 90 per cent, if not all, of the Protestant churches of Atlanta.

Therefore, if the attacks injured only me, I should ignore them.

But when these attacks hit and hurt not me, but innocent third parties, as is known to those who make the attacks, the public should be informed.

John Edmondson is known in Atlanta and throughout the State of Georgia. He needs no defense from me, as his friends and acquaintances know that he would not operate a questionable house. The Hotel Empire, in the Jackson Building, was leased to him a year or more ago for a period of five years.

Whether or not Mr. Edmondson makes money from his lease, he has to pay the rent, for the simple reason that he is financially responsible, independent of his connection with this hotel. Therefore, on strictly business principles, temporarily, it is immaterial to the owners of the building whether or not he makes money from the hotel.

At present he is losing money through no fault of his, but through attacks of members of the underworld and its defenders made upon me personally. The continued slanders deter decent people from going to the hotel. The other kind do not frequent it for two reasons.

First, Edmondson will not tolerate it.

The second is that I have requested the chief of police if anything is wrong in the Jackson Building to "pull it" before any other place.

At the outset of the campaign against protected vice I made this request of Chief Beavers in the presence of several newspaper men. I repeat the request to-day.

Furthermore, I have asked individuals, and I now ask them and all others, regardless of their motives, to have the Hotel Empire "pulled" if there is anything wrong with it. I will gladly pay the fee of any lawyer who will convict any bellboy, clerk or proprietor in the place of sanctioning any immorality. And I shall consider the showing up of the place not as an attack upon me, but as a personal favor.

What is more, Mr. Edmondson will consider it as a favor.

The Jackson Building is owned by five persons, the heirs of my father's estate. These also will thank the individual that puts an end to anything wrong upon their property.

And in future the public will appraise at their proper value the men who, in seeking to discredit a work of the churches of Atlanta, make attacks upon me which do not hurt me, but injure others who have done them no harm.

I have only pity for the blindness of these men and their tools.

Since these attacks have reached the public through your columns I would appreciate your giving the same publicity to this letter.

Respectfully,
MARION W. JACKSON.

Here is a statement by Edmondson:

Atlanta, Ga., June 10, 1913.

"My attention has just been called to an article in Sunday's American wherein Carl Hutcheson states in substance that Mr. Marion Jackson is a party to the keeping of a disreputable house in the Empire Hotel in the city of Atlanta.

I beg to state that I have leased from the Jackson estate, of which Mr. Marion Jackson is one of the heirs, a hotel known as the Empire Hotel, in the city of Atlanta, having been in possession of the same since August, 1912, and that any imputation that this hotel has not been conducted in a proper manner is slanderous and untrue.

If Mr. Hutcheson can establish that one of my clerks has ever greeted a guest who was about to register with the language, "With or without?" I will give him $1,000, and if he can not establish this, if there is any manly instinct in him he will at once make a public apology, withdrawing this language or any reflection since my management of the Empire Hotel.

For the benefit of the public, I wish to state that I am conducting the Empire Hotel in a first-class manner and catering to the best trade, and that no vice of any character is permitted in that hotel with my knowledge, and if the same was going on I believe I would know of it.

It is unfair to me to be drawn into the unfortunate controversy that is now being conducted through the public press, and my hotel be made to suffer on account of the infamous charges about its management, simply because Mr. Marion Jackson happens to be one of the heirs at law owning the hotel.

J. L. EDMONDSON.

Frank T. Reynolds made the following statement:

Atlanta, Ga., June 10, 1913.

Occupying the position of general manager of the Empire Hotel from October 27, 1912, to April 27, 1913, when I became connected with the Hotel Ansley in Atlanta, I beg to state that while at the Empire Hotel I did not countenance or allow any improper persons to stop at said hotel, and when I discovered, which I occasionally did, that suspicious persons were trying to take an advantage of the hotel, I at once ordered them to leave.

I received positive instructions from John Edmondson not to allow vice of any kind to exist in the hotel, and enforced these instructions to the letter, and so long as I was general manager of the Empire Hotel I feel sure that no hotel in Atlanta or in the country was more cleanly conducted or freer from vice.

There is not a word of truth in the charges made by Carl Hutcheson in last Sunday's American, if his allusions referred to the Empire Hotel as the hotel owned by Marion Jackson, since and during my management of said hotel, and such a publication as he made concerning said hotel is a vile and infamous slander.

Before an immense throng in the Grand Opera House at 11 o'clock Wednesday morning, the Tech celebration of its quarter-centenary reached a climax with the graduation of the senior class.

The event marked the close of the most successful year in the history of the institution and the graduation of its largest class.

In classic caps and gowns the young men formed into line at Peachtree and Harris Streets and marched to the theater, headed by members of the faculty and an orchestra. Passing solemnly down Peachtree Street the procession filed into the theater and to the stage, where speakers and graduates seated themselves in half circle facing the audience. A roar of applause shook the building as the senior appeared.

Dr. Bigelow Speaker.

The program before the award of degrees included addresses by many prominent men. The Rev. Lyman Hood, president of the Atlanta Theological Seminary, pronounced the invocation. The annual address was made by Dr. Herbert S. Bigelow, of Cincinnati. Dr. Bigelow spoke on "Old Institutions and New Ideas." He invoked the young men who were being sent out into the world by the Technological School to build upward and onward on the foundation laid for them by their professors.

Colonel N. E. Harris, one of the founders of Tech, spoke briefly of the advances made by the school in its quarter of a century's existence. It has increased its roll from 130 pupils to 825. Colonel Harris declared the year just closing was considered by the board of trustees of the institution as the most successful of any before.

University Head Talks.

Chancellor David Barrow, below head of the University of Georgia, made the closing address. Taking as his subject "Caps and Gowns," he pointed out to the graduates the vast significance of those robes.

"The caps and gowns are evidences of your training, boys," said the Chancellor. "They should prove constant reminders of your missions in the world. Never forget that you have worn those honored robes."

Dr. K. G. Matheson, president of the Tech, delivered the diplomas. Curator T. P. Branch read the honor roll, after which Governor Brown presented the scholarship trophies to nine men of the junior class, including Waldo M. Slaton, D. B. Wright, R. A. Shackelford, F. L. Shackelford, J. F. Woodruff, T. A. Gibson, D. S. Howell, E. Eberhart and R. A. Leinbach.

Medals presented by Dr. S. S. Wallace included the Yellow Jacket cup for the best conribution to the school periodical, which went to L. C. Boland; declamation medal, to H. L. Hardy, and medal for debate, to S. D. Frankel.

Following the close of the exercises, the graduated class was entertained at luncheon at the Capital City Club by the faculty of the school.

COURT RULES JURY CAN'T BE HURRIED

Magistrate's Time Limit of Thirty Minutes for Verdict Called Error in Laurens County Case.

Giving a jury a specified time in which to settle a case is an error, according to a decision handed down by the Court of Appeals Wednesday. The decision is in a case in the Dublin City Court, Haywood against Kitchens, in which the justice gave the jury 30 minutes in which to return a verdict. The decision reads:

"In the trial of a case on appeal in a justice court, it was error for the magistrate to inform the jury that he desired to take the train in 30 minutes; that he wanted a verdict one way or the other within that time, in order to permit him to take the train; and that he would get rid of the case some way in that time. While the amount involved was small, the evidence was sharply conflicting and somewhat voluminous, and the conduct of the justice tended to hasten the consideration of the case."

Another interesting decision was made when the court ruled in favor of damages for an arrest for cutting down telephone poles placed upon certain property without the consent of the owner or through the medium of condemnation proceedings. In the case of Holliday against Coleman, the plaintiff sued for damages for false arrest, charging he was detained by a constable for an hour and a half. Evidence showed he had cut down poles a gang of workmen had erected on his property.

6-MINUTE LIMIT SOUGHT FOR SMOKE

Commissioners Ask Council to Amend Ordinance, Cutting Time in Half.

Six minutes an hour for dense black smoke is the limit sought by the Smoke Commisisoners of Atlanta. A resolution requesting the General Council to amend the smoke ordinance, reducing the time allowed from twelve to six minutes, was passed by the board yesterday at its semi-monthly meeting. The board was a unit in making the request.

"We have tried the twelve-minute law a year now, and great good has been accomplished," said J. M. VanHarlingen, chairman of the board, today.

30 Plants Observe Law.

"Thirty plants have put the law in effect, but we feel that other plants should know the time limit will be reduced. We feel sure the General Council will act upon our suggestion. The Chamber of Commerce will take the question up in a few days, and work in harmony with the board.

"The present law is violated if dense smoke issues from any one stack a total of more than twelve minutes in an hour. This is a good law, but still if smoke came out of every stack in Atlanta twelve minutes every hour we would have a smoky city. This time limit must be reduced, and we have asked the General Council to cut it in half.

Effective Next Year.

"Some people are preparing to bring their plants within the twelve-minute limit, but we feel they should know even this limit will be made shorter. We therefore suggest that factory people and others with boilers arrange their plants so that not more than six minutes of smoke will be made in one hour."

The amendment requested by the board, Mr. VanHarlingen says, will work no hardships, since it will not go into effect until April 1, 1914.

DANGER IN MEAT EATING

The death rate of Typhoid has been 10 per cent for many years. Even if patient recovers, there is danger. Weakened constitution, languidness, loss of energy and other after effects.

In a majority of cases typhoid fever is directly traceable to an inactive liver which has refused to clear away the masses of meat particles left undigested in the alimentary canal. This mass putrefies and sends out death-dealing poisons, to result in typhoid fever.

JACOBS' LIVER SALT is the greatest known liver stimulant. Its action is gentle, yet effective. It draws water to the alimentary tract, flushes the stomach and bowels, washes away the undigested meat particles and removes the danger of fermentation. The blood is purified through the renewed activity of the liver.

JACOBS' LIVER SALT does not cause nausea and vomiting, and there are no dangerous after-effects as with calomel. Don't take an inferior substitute; many imitate the name but can not produce the same natural, flushing action of the genuine JACOBS' LIVER SALT. At all druggists, 25c. If your druggist cannot supply you we will mail full size jar upon receipt of price, postage free. Made and guaranteed by Jacobs' Pharmacy Co., Atlanta.—(Advt.)

'MEND PEACHTREE, PAVE NEXT YEAR'

If plans to be submitted in a resolution to the public work committee of the County Commission by Chairman Shelby Smith Wednesday, are adopted the work of improving Peachtree Street from Fifteenth Street to Buckhead will be begun within 30 days.

While admitting that the street needs a new pavement, Chairman Smith's plans provide merely for the repairing of the thoroughfare, with the proviso that the new pavement be laid next year.

A number of Peachtree residents have petitioned for a new pavement this year, but because of numerous other improvements planned before the Peachtree proposition was broached this was found to be impossible.

It is understood that property owners and residents will be satisfied with a temporary improvement, if they are assured the street will be repaved next year.

College Praised for Students' Record

Dr. F. H. Gaines, president of Agnes Scott College, is receiving congratulations on behalf of that college for the record made by Miss Lucile Alexander, of Atlanta, a B. A. graduate, who has just received her M. A. degree from Columbia College, after one year of study.

In 1912 the specialist in higher education of the United States Bureau of Education made a grouping of the leading colleges for women in the United States. Fifty-nine colleges were placed in the first group. The chief ground upon which a college was placed in group 1 was the ability of a B. SUBPENA IS WIRED IN LOBBY INQUIRY

WASHINGTON, June 11.—A. Warren Moore, a publisher, and M. Baker, publisher of The Courier-News, of Fargo, N. Dak., were subpenaed today by wire by the Overman lobby inquiry committee, at the request of Senator Gronna. This paper ridiculed Senator Kenyon's suggestion about the presence of an organized lobby in Washington.

"But it is not the theater tickets nor the lobster a la Newburg which gets his goat. It is the coin of the realm and nothing else. He has probably heard about it, although he testified that he knew nothing about an existing lobby."

This Senator Gronna understood to refer to himself, and went on the witness stand at his own request to demand an investigation.

Misses' and Children's Coats in a Sale

Junior Department---Third Floor

The weather of the past few days argues strongly the necessity of a light-weight coat even when we are "knee-deep in June."

It is rather fortunate, then, that just such coats as the young folk will be glad to wear are marked at saving-prices. Smart, trim affairs, styled this season at these prices. None of these coats subject to exchange or return.

Values to $12.50 At $5.95 Junior long coats in brown plaids and mixtures. Not too heavy to be comfortable, nor too light—splendid for traveling, for automobiling. Neatly tailored and trimmed—of graceful lines for youthful figures.

Values to $20.00 At $12.50 Junior long coats, novel styles, showing the smartest little touches of tailoring that specialists in Misses' coats could give them. Choose from navy, black and white shepherd checks, tan coverts and red and green.

Values to $6.50 At $3.75 Children's Coats in sizes six to fourteen years. Splendid choice here, the variety of styles is about as great as you would have it, they are very pretty little affairs, in red, navy and mixture weaves——and besides these are all the finer coats for children now half-price, which brings the price range to $5.00 to $7.50, instead of from $10.00 to $15.00.

For Boys' $2.25 to $2.50 Suits

$1.50 Boys' Wash Suits in sizes two to six years; white and colored madras, crepes, linens, trimmed with colored pipings and bands. Regulation bloomer or beach pants. These for Thursday only.

A Millinery "Occasion"

Hats That Were $8.50 to $15 Hats That Were $12.50 to $25

Of those that are now $2.50 there are forty-nine. They remain, the greater part of them, from a recent sale in which they were $5.00. Of those that are now $5.00, there are thirty-five, now reduced for the first time.

There are hemps, milans and Belgian splits and Neapolitans, in about as many shapes as there are hats. The trimmings are wings, feathers, ribbons, flowers, malines. There are a few white and light tan hats among those at $5.00. As a rule, however, they are in reds, blues, greens and browns—hats that travelers will want, hats for wear with coat suits.

And how quickly they should go! The prices are but nominal figures, in no way representative of worth. But it is the final clearance and so—$2.50 and $5.00.

A Sale of Oriental China

One That Will Be Long Remembered by Those Who Share Its Remarkable Values

Lovers of these quaint and beautiful and colorful wares that typify the Orient have in this sale an opportunity that undoubtedly beggars comparison with any sale Atlanta has ever known.

Prices are not halved, they are not even cut into thirds, they are fractioned to smaller fractions than halves and thirds represent. However, you may easily see the price-treatment below.

But the china---you will never see why it has been so priced. It is that richly decorated ware of fine quality that every housekeeper would own, and in such a variety that the selection of complete sets will be an easy matter.

It is a clearaway with us, we have disregarded the beauty of the china, and as is customary with Chamberlin-Johnson-DuBose Co., made prices that will indeed clear the china away.

The sale begins with the opening of the store, and the sooner thereafter you arrive the greater the variety will be.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

SHE IS RIGHT.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
I am keeping company with a young lady who is 20 years of age and I am 27, and I have known this girl for the past five years. Lately I notice she keeps company with one of my friends. Do you think that I should give her up? She told me that she loves me, but she made an appointment with me and went out with my friend.
WALLACE.

It seems to me that if you have been devoted to her so long and have not asked her to marry you she does right to accept invitations from others.

Make her a proposal of marriage and if she accepts this will give you the right of objection.

THAT DEPENDS.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
Is it proper for a girl to begin the correspondence with a man?
If a girl gets an invitation to a dance or party, is it proper for her to ask a man to go with her if it is a pay affair? E. M. F.

The answer to your first question can not be decisive for the reason that you tell so little.

It is never proper for a girl to write to a man she does not know, and it is for her best good that she write rarely to those she knows.

To your second question: Most decidedly no.

GOOD BEHAVIOR HELPS.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
I have been calling on a young lady for some time and find that her father does not seem to fancy me. Kindly advise me what I should do to win his fancy. T. C. A. B.

You ask for something difficult to give. Often a father's objections originate in the very natural desire to keep a daughter at home. Perhaps she is too young to receive attentions. Or—and the remedy for this lies in your own hands—perhaps you are not the character a man would welcome in a son-in-law.

HE LIKES YOU.

DEAR MIS FAIRFAX:
I am 17 and care very much for a young man of 20, with whom I work. When he sees me talking to other boys he gets very jealous, but still when he meets me he never says more than "Hello." e Jokes with the other girls, but he never gets jealous of them. Now, do you think he cares for me and is too bashful to say so, or that he doesn't care for me, and therefore thinks the others should not? ROSE.

He likes you very much. That is plainly evident.

But you are too young, my dear, to bother your little head about love. Try to be happy and heart-free a few years longer. I am sure you will never regret it.

"ALL'S FAIR IN LOVE."

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
Is it proper for a young man who has been calling on a young lady for six months and confessed his love for her, and she never makes any encouraging remarks of her love for him, to stop calling without any explanation? I asked for her love, but all I got was "I'll tell you some other time" for my answer.
LONESOME.

It is the only thing you can do if you are a man of any spirit, and unless you are a man of spirit she will never accept it.

Stay away a month. I am sure she will send for you, and when you return demand a decisive answer.

The Head Waitress

By HANK.

"I'M sure gettin' to be some popular with all the advertising you're giving me," said the Head Waitress to the Steady Customer in the Cafe d'Enfant.

"Yes," he replied. "a newspaper man, Louise, is a good friend to have. I am glad you appreciate that fact."

"I don't know whether I do or not," replied the Head Waitress. "I'd like to know what your object is. There ain't nobody now-a-days that does anything without an object. Every kindly word has its sting in these parlor times."

What She Calls Them.

"Parlous times," corrected the Steady Customer.

"If you knew what I meant you didn't have to correct me," snapped the Head Waitress. "You newspaper guys are always showing off. And let me tell you something. Marie, the cashier, is gettin' sore at you. You had her in the paper saying 'bloke' the other day. She don't call no guy a bloke. She comes from Indiana, where they don't use them kind of expressions."

"What does she call them?" asked the Steady Customer.

"Fellers," said the Head Waitress, "and that's proper, too. You wouldn't say, 'I'm going out with my best bloke, to-night,' would you. No, you'd say 'my best feller.'"

"I am duly crushed and chastised," replied the Steady Customer. "Anything else?"

"Yes, me and Marie would like to know where you and your dark friend go every day after lunch," said the Head Waitress. "You don't go right back to your office, because me and her seen you walk the other way every day."

"Why, we go to a moving picture show," explained the Steady Customer. "We find that gazing at stirring Western scenes or reckless deeds of daring takes our minds off the violent efforts of our stomachs that are protesting against the sinkers that you hand us in here."

"Hm-m," sniffed the Head Waitress. "I can't see how you can go to such places."

The Truth.

"Well, to be truthful," said the Steady Customer, "I like to go there because it's all dark and I can close my eyes and think of your sweet faces."

"Some time you'll close your eyes in the dark," said the Head Waitress, "and when you wake up you won't be able to see your watch any more, you poor simp."

House Cleaning

By MAY IRWIN.

THE first step in the campaign against the gathered dust and grime is to get the men out of the house, by some pretext. Not that it isn't possible to clean house without the men of the house knowing it. I have done it. But a woman isn't looking her best when she cleans house, and the remnant of vanity left in us in these reconstructive days rebels against the men seeing us with smudges on cheek and nose, and our hands are not pretty things during the orgies with dust and discord.

To make the house habitable during housecleaning be systematic. Take one part at a time. There is absolutely no reason for having the whole house or flat looking as though a cyclone had visited it. Cleaning should be progressive. Take two rooms at a time.

A golden rule of housecleaning is: "Don't try to do it all in a day." If you overwork the first day you will be worn out and unfit for the task of the second day, and the work becomes slavery. Housecleaning need not be drudgery unless you make it so.

Take two front rooms, say, as a beginning. Carry all the room belongings in room A into room B. Close the door opening into room B so that room A shall take care of its own dust. Thoroughly sweep the floor, giving careful attention to neglected corners. With a long-handled wall brush dust the wall and ceiling. For plain woodwork and hard floors use a large wooden bucket of warm water in which two pounds of oxalic acid have been dissolved. Wipe off the floors and woodwork with this, using an orange-wood stick inside of the cloth for boring out difficult chinks and corners of dust. While room A is drying from its cleansing, go to room B. Throw open all the windows and attack the furniture of room A. When room A is dry, move that furniture back into place and carry the furniture of room B into room A.

Carry the plan of cleaning two by two, twin cleansing, through the house, and you will be pleased with the result.

To Wash Curtains.

To clean your blankets, don't begin by soaking them. Wash them in warm water and with soap. Do not rub, but push them into and draw them out of the water. Pound them with a heavy and clean potato masher, a new one, of an age not to have acquired "slivers." Rinse them in warm, clean water. If they are not yet clean, put them through a second water—a third, fourth, even a fifth or sixth—until clean. Keep all the waters through which the blankets are put at the same temperature. Don't wring blankets. Put them on the line in a hot sun.

To wash lace curtains, soak them in cold water for two days. Then put them into hot water, into which enough soap has been shaved, an amount according to their condition. Do not rub them. Dip them up and down vigorously in the suds. Change the water three or more times. Rinse in warm water. Then rinse in cold water with a tiny bit of indigo. Then put them, one at a time, gently through a wringer and dry them on a curtain frame.

And So It Goes.

"What a ducky little place!" said the happy bride to be, as her sweetheart showed her over her prospective home. But I am afraid, Harold, everything is so small. Now, look at this litle pigeonhole. Surely you don't call it a shoe cupboard, dear?"

"Darling," sweetly answered the young man, "that little pigeonhole, as you call it, will hold a hundred pairs of shoes of the size you wear."

The pucker in her pretty brows quickly disappeared.

"Perhaps you're right, Harold," she remarked. And all was well.

Beauty Secrets of Beautiful Women

By LILLIAN LAUFERTY.

ONCE upon a time a clever woman said: "Stays make waists." Just now waists are out of fashion; but another clever woman has told me how to produce the highest type of modern figure—all lissome, swaying curves, shading gracefully into a free, beautiful whole. And in her creed there are neither "stays" nor "waist."

As a first step toward a good figure learn to stand," said Sophye Barnard, a recent recruit from comic opera to vaudeville, under the B. F. Keith management. "And as a regular promenade in the direction of a figure good enough to go on its own merits without help from corsets and artificial first aids to of correct standing and breathing?" I asked.

"A girl works pretty hard to get a beautiful voice, or just to cultivate a fairly pleasing one—but it pays—even in unexpected ways, for she suddenly finds a good figure thrown in as a premium, and a good figure is a rather attractive thing to possess, isn't it?" added Miss Barnard, ingenuously.

Lightly Poised.

The actress learns to be lightly poised on her feet," said Miss Barnard. "She learns to stand so that she may spring instantly into action; she never slouches or lounges or falls into ungraceful lines of abandon into which her figure, with a little unfortunate practice, might easily come to arrange itself naturally. She is poised, tense, alert. That keys her up to look and feel vividly alive, and it trains her figure into the right lines. It is just as important to keep your figure from sagging as to keep your mouth dropping at the corners.

"In singing, you learn to hold the muscles of the abdomen tense, to keep the chest high and filled with an ever-changing supply of clean air as you ventilate your lungs at each deep breath."

"Won't you give me a little exhibition in caricature of its flowing curves. Then she advanced her right foot and stood tensely alert, with the weight of her body swung forward onto the ball of that foot. She took a deep breath, beginning at the firmly held abdominal walls, and pulling the air up into full white chest. Throat, shoulders and chest pulsed into firm contours, and shoulders and throat like Sophye Barnard's became in themselves beauties worth emulating.

"I think your first beauty secret is too good to stay a secret long" said I. "Now won't you tell me what rules of hygiene and diet you bring to be its lieutenants?"

"My rules are all very simple—anyone can put them into practice," said the charming singer. "Simple foods, with no ices or sodas or pastries, are my idea of the correct diet—although I can eat what I like without falling prey to indigestion; but I take no advantage of that ability, and I suppose the reason I can combine a welsh rarebit and broiled live lobster and strawberry ice cream is because I don't!

"I lead a very regular life too—though the popular fancy does not picture an actress doing that. I always am in bed by 12; scarcely ever visit cafes, but have my after-theater parties at home, where I am sure of simple, wholesome food, of pure air to breathe, and of getting to bed in due season. People who dine in cafes on rich, heavy foods; and breathe the heavy, artificial air of the restaurant the while they do it are sure to get fat—or indigestion—or both."

"You lay great stress on simple food and correct poise. The inner woman seems well taken care of in your rules of the game," said I. Now will you tell all of us how to have smooth, satiny hair and skin?"

"Do you consider me qualified to give advice on those subjects?" asked Miss Barnard in the pleased tone of a good child who has been praised.

I did, and I do.

The Hair.

"You wash your hair more times than the old-fashioned theories taught you to—you brush it all the time, whenever you get a chance, and you don't curl it any of the time, and then when it is brushed and washed into a clean fresh mass you dress it as smoothly and gracefully as possible, and keep it in its proper place as background for your face.

"And as for skin, when you have observed the rules of keeping your internal system sweet and clean, you do the same by externals. Keep the skin clean and unclogged and free to do some correct breathing of its own, and then make it soft and flexible by the constant use of good cold cream."

Perhaps all this sounds like constant, unceasing hard work. If you feel discouraged before ever you begin—look earnestly at Miss Barnard's beautiful arms and shoulders, at the perfect symmetry of her graceful figure. To approach "a consummation so devoutly to be desired" who will not sacrifice a bit of old and some lazy habits?

Secrets of Good Looks

By MME. LINA CAVALIERI.

The Distinguished Grand Opera Prima Donna and World Famous Beauty.

DO not take offense. Simply consider my suggestion and investigate.

No face is clean unless it is as absolutely free from dust as a newly washed window. No face is clean unless its pores are as free from obstruction as a freshly cleaned sieve from grit.

Have you freckles or liver spots? Your face is not clean. Indeed, the clean face is the exception instead of the rule. Yet, if there were more clean faces there would be more good complexions. The mottled skin is the index of a defective sewerage system.

Cleanse your face with oils and creams. But also use water. Many experiments have taught me that washing the face is a process of several stages. To remove the roughest dirt, use oils or creams. Spread these liberally on the face with the fingers or a piece of absorbent cotton. Be careful to reach every crevice or corner of the face with the oil or cream. Leave the oil or cream on the skin for at least five minutes. If the skin has been exposed to much dust or wind, leave these cleansers on for a quarter of an hour to search out every particle of dust and soften it. Then, with more cotton or with an old linen or silk handkerchief, gently wipe it off. You will be surprised at the grimy deposit on the cloth.

When this has been done, if you are not going out of doors, bathe the face gently in a bowlful of warm water softened with a pinch of borax or a half dozen drops of benzoin. Spread almond meal on the palms. Dip them into the water, and press them upon the face, rubbing the muscles upward. Do this until you have passed the almond meal covered palms all over the face. Then rinse the face with handfuls of cool water.

Lastly, if the facial muscles are loose and sagging, iron the face with ice, pressing the muscles firmly upward. After this careful face washing you will be surprised to see how white your face looks, and it will mortify you to realize how far from clean your visage had been before.

Pure cocoanut oil is one of the best skin cleansers and skin foods. Olive oil, into which one drop of benzoin to an ounce of the oil as a whitener has been dropped, is to be recommended.

A Gentle Hint.

A little girl made a call at the house of a neighbor. She saw some apple parings on a plate, and said: "I smell apples."

"Yes," the lady replied, "I guess you smell those apple parings on the table."

"No, no," said the little miss, smacking her lips, "'taint them I smell. I smell whole apples."

"But there wasn't any shot," the perplexed and alarmed detective expostulated. He fairly stuttered in the earnestness of his self-defense. "I tell you, Chief, there hasn't been a sound."

Burke rose to his feet. His heavy face was set in its sternest mold.

"You could drive a hearse through the hole they've made in him," he rumbled. He wheeled on Mary and Dick. "So!" he shouted, "now it's murder! * * * Well, hand it over. Where's the gun?"

Followed a moment's pause. Then the Inspector spoke harshly to Cassidy. He still felt himself somewhat dazed by this extraordinary event, but he was able to cope with the situation. He nodded toward Dick as he gave his order. "Search him!"

Dick Took the Revolver.

Before the detective could obey the direction, Dick took the revolver from his pocket where he had bestowed it, and held it out.

And so it chanced that at this incriminating crisis for the son, the father hastily strode within the library. He had been aroused by the Inspector's shouting, and was evidently greatly perturbed. His usual dignified air was marred by a patent alarm.

"What's all this?" he exclaimed, as he halted and started doubtfully on the scene before him.

Burke, in a moment like this, was no respecter of persons, for all his judicious attentions on other occasions to those whose influence might serve him well for benefits received.

"You can see for yourself," he said grimly to the dumfounded magnate. Then he fixed sinister eyes on the son. "So," he went on, with somber menace in his voice, "you did it, young man." He nodded toward the detective. "Well, Cassidy, you can take 'em both downtown. * * * That's all."

The command aroused Dick to remonstrate against such indignity toward the woman whom he loved.

"Not her!" he cried, imploringly. "You don't want her, Inspector! This is all wrong!"

Now at last, Mary interposed with a new spirit. She had regained, in some measure at least, her poise. She was speaking again with that mental clarity which was distinctive in her.

"Dick," she advised quietly, but with underlying urgency in her gentle spoken words, "don't talk, please."

Burke laughed harshly.

"What do you expect?" he inquired truculently. "As a matter of fact, the thing's simple enough, young man. Either you killed Griggs, or she did."

The Inspector, with his charge, made a careless gesture toward the corpse of the murdered stool-pigeon. For the first time, Edward Gilder, as his glance unconsciously followed the officer's movement, looked and saw the ghastly inanimate heap of flesh and bone that had once been a man. He fairly reeled at the grewsome spectable, then fumbled with an outstretched hand as he moved stumblingly until he laid hold on a chair, into which he sank helplessly. It suddenly smote upon his consciousness that he felt very old and broken. He marveled dully over the sensation—it was wholly new to him. Then, soon, from a long way off, he heard the strident voice of the Inspector remorselessly continuing in the vile, the impossible accusation. * * * And that grotesque accusation was hurled against his only son—the boy whom he so loved. The thing was monstrous, a thing incredible. This whole seeming was no more than a chimera of the night, a phantom of bad dreams, with no truth under it. * * * Yet the stern voice of the official came with a strange semblance of reality.

"Either you killed him," the voice repeated, gratingly, "or she did. Well, then, young man, did she kill him?"

"Good God, no!" Dick shouted, aghast.

"Then it was you!" Such was the Inspector's summary of the case.

Mary's words came frantically. Once again she was become desperate over the course of events in this night of fearful happenings.

"No, no! He didn't!"

Burke's rasping voice reiterated the accusation with a certain complacency in the inevitability of the dilemma.

"One of you killed Griggs. Which one of you did it?" He scowled at Dick. "Did she kill him?"

Again the husband's cry came with the fierceness of despair over the fate of the woman.

"I told you, no!"

The Inspector, always savagely impressive, now in voice and look and gesture, faced the girl with saturnine persistence.

"Well, then," he blustered, "did he kill him?"

The nod of his head was toward Dick. Then, as she remained silent: "I'm talking to you!" he snapped. "Did he kill him?"

The reply came with a soft distinctness that was like a crash of destiny.

"Yes."

Dick turned to his wife in reproachful amazement.

"Mary!" he cried, incredulously. This betrayal was something inconceivable from her, since he believed that now at last he knew her heart.

Burke, however, as usual, paid no heed to the niceties of sentiment. They had small place in his concerns as an official of police. His sole ambition just now was to fix the crime definitely on the perpetrator.

"You'll swear he killed him?" he asked, briskly, well content with this concrete result of the entanglement.

Be Wise! Make Your Own Ice Cream

Of course, you know that home-made ice creams, sherbets or ices are superior from every viewpoint. They are always sweet, pure and wholesome; there is a flavor and genuine goodness about them that is not found in the general run of factory products. Besides that, when you make your own preparations you know that the ingredients are always pure, and that the can is clean and sanitary. The main reason why ice cream is made in but comparatively few homes, is the work and bother connected with the old-fashioned crank freezer. That is one reason why the arrival of

will be hailed with delight by every one who is fond of ice creams, etc., because it eliminates the tedious turning of the crank entirely, and produces creams, sherbets and ices that will make your mouth water. That is one reason, but there are many others.

DON'T YOU KNOW that the enjoyment of a dish largely depends upon the manner in which it is served? Could you imagine a daintier and more appetizing manner of serving ice creams than provided for by the "Ice-Kist?"

A Story for Baseball Fans That Will Interest Every Lover of the National Game

SYNOPSIS

Gordon Kelly, a mountain boy of Georgia, goes to Atlanta. He becomes the sensation of the baseball world through his marvelous playing, although he said that he had never played a game before arriving in Atlanta. He is bought by the Boston American League Club for $50,000. Kelly incurs the enmity of Forrest Cain, a wealthy ne'er-do-well, at the same time winning the friendship and love of Mildred Deery, daughter of an Atlanta banker. Kelly is hurt in a game and Mildred runs to his assistance. He recovers, leaves the hospital and mysteriously disappears. He is not heard from for months. Mildred admits to herself that she loves Kelly. Her father dislikes the publicity given Mildred's assistance to Kelly on the baseball field. He gets Mildred to agree to go to the mountains. Cain follows Mildred and calls upon her. While Mildred is fishing she suddenly comes upon Gordon Kelly.

Now go on with the story.

CHAPTER XXIV.

GORDON KELLY held Mildred Deery in his embrace a full minute, maybe. Her head rested on his breast and she felt his heart beating like a triphammer. At last she sighed happily and, raising her head, she smiled faintly in his serious face.

"Gordon," she murmured, "won't you say something?"

Gordon gulped once or twice convulsively. He tried to talk, but his voice broke on the first syllable. He tried again.

"Mildred, dear," he said, hoarsely, "can it be you? I can't believe it. I have been thinking of you and only you for six long weeks. I tried to find you and"——

"How hard did you try?" Mildred interrupted. She released herself from his arms. She was beginning to recover herself.

"Why, Mildred, I called up your house just as soon as they would let me. I called up every day for more than a week and then every other day and then every three or four days and I always received the same answer. You had gone away and they didn't know where you were or when you would return. I did all I could. I couldn't move for some time and I"——

"And you finally stopped" calling up altogether. Well, I don't think you made much of an effort. Didn't it occur to you to call up my father or my mother, if you were so much interested?"

Oh, the perversity of women. If Mildred Deery were to confess it, her thoughts had been on Gordon Kelly almost constantly for the six weeks since last she had seen him. Here he was in flesh and blood standing before her, and she was now apparently trying to fret him.

"I—I—don't know much about these things," he stammered. "What have I done, Mildred? I only——"

An Interruption.

"I got him, Mildred! I got him!" yelled the voice of Elmer Shepard in the distance. "I knew there was a big fellow in there. Where are you, Mildred?"

They could hear him crashing through the underbrush. Mildred moved a few paces away from Gordon. Presently Elmer bounded over a boulder and came into view on the other side of the brook. He stopped short at seeing the stranger.

"Keep right on, Elmer, and we will meet you in the road and then we will go to the oaks and have luncheon," said Mildred. She had forgotten all about the lad, but now, mischievously enough, she welcomed his presence. Gordon, too felt the tension relax. The lad, coming on the scene, would give him a breathing spell and allow him time to collect his wits that Mildred had so ruthlessly scattered.

Picking up her fishing tackle, Gordon assisted Mildred up the embankment that bordered the road. Elmer was there before them. He held a large fish by the gills on one finger and proudly displayed his catch.

"Elmer," said Mildred, "this is my friend, Mr. Kelly. We met in the most"——

"Gordon Kelly. Gee whiz!" exclaimed Elmer, jumping up and down in his excitement. He was a little fellow for his age, whole souled and outspoken. Mildred laughed and so did Gordon.

The Cat Out of the Bag.

"Aren't you going to shake hands with Mr. Kelly?" asked Mildred, for Elmer in the sensations of the moment, had not seen Gordon's outstretched hand. The lad dropped the fish he held and put his small hand in that of the tall young man. There was only five years' difference in the ages of the two, yet one was a little boy and the other a full grown man.

"I am glad to meet you," said Gordon, pleasantly. "But how did you know my first name?"

"Oh, I read all about you in the papers and I have seen your picture dozens of times. Besides, Mildred and I have talked about you."

"Elmer!" exclaimed Mildred blushing furiously.

"We did, too, just as we were starting out this morning. You know we did."

"You did the talking about Mr. Kelly, if I'm not mistaken," returned Mildred. "However, I guess there was no harm done, and, as I'm getting hungry, I suggest we change the subject and have something to eat. Won't you join us, Mr. Kelly?"

"Thank you, but I'm afraid I have fallen into the ball players' habit of two meals a day—a late breakfast and hearty dinner at night."

"We will allow you to sit with us and watch us eat, then," said Mildred. "Or would you prefer to resume your fishing?"

"I guess not," laughed Gordon. He knew he would have to begin all over again with Mildred, but he felt sure of himself now. "I'll just gather up my rod and net, however," he added. "I had a fish nearly landed when I saw you, but forgot all about him."

They were soon comfortably seated under a huge oak tree. Mildred, with a shy glance at Gordon, pulled her short skirt down as far as it would go, leaned back against the trunk of a tree, and, selecting a sandwich from the napkin that held them, bit into it daintily.

"Now, then, Mr. Gordon Kelly, give an account of yourself," she said. "What are you doing up here?"

"They had no further use for me at the hospital, so I just came up; that's all," replied Gordon.

"Why did you come here?"

"Because I had no other place to go. I live here."

"Live here!" exclaimed Mildred. "Live where?"

"Right here," replied Gordon, with an amused smile. "We are sitting on my property now."

"Goodness gracious, I didn't know that," said Mildred, as though she was doing something she ought not to do.

"Certainly, that bridge that crosses the brook is at the southern boundary line."

"Oh, I know, I know," Elmer broke in, excitedly. "That road that goes through the big granite posts leads to your house, doesn't it?"

"Youve guessed it, Elmer," replied Gordon.

"Well, I declare," said Mildred. "Tell us all about it, Mr. Kelly."

"With pleasure, Miss Deery," laughed Gordon, emphasizing the last two words as though to recall to her mind that she had called him by his first name not many minutes ago. "There's not much to tell. The road leads to a house and I live in the house. Now, please allow me to ask a few questions. What are you doing up here?"

"Because I had no other place to go. I live here." She smiled mischievously.

Elmer rolled on his back and kicked up his heels.

"Ha ha, I guess she's got you there, Mr. Kelly," he said. He had been feasting his eyes on the great Gordon Kelly all the while. Mildred watched him with a smile.

"You're right, Elmer." Then, turning to Mildred, Gordon said:

"But just where do you live; I am very much interested in my neighbors."

"Oh, just on the other side of the brook; on my father's property."

That can't be your father's property. It is owned by the Southern Land & Development Company."

"Galen Deery is the Southern Land & Development Company," replied Mildred with a little toss of her head.

"Oh, I see," mused Gordon.

"And I guess you don't own this property, either," declared Elmer, who would stick up for Mildred if it came to a question. "Dad's got a map and it says this land is owned by the Prescott Trust Company."

Gordon laughed.

"You win all the arguments, Elmer," he said. "You are right. It was a whim of my father's to put all his land in a company's name. But now that we've found each other out I hope it won't make bad neighbors of us."

"We will have to see about that," replied Mildred, with a sly look.

Mildred Blushes.

"Now I begin to understand," exclaimed Gordon. "You live in that house they were finishing when I went to Atlanta."

"Say, Mr. Kelly, you didn't do a thing to them down there, did you?" broke in Elmer. "Say that last hit you made was a corker, wasn't it? You remember, Mildred, you were there."

Mildred's face grew crimson.

"You little turncoat, you were on my side a minute ago," was all she could say in her embarrassment.

"That's all right, I'm with you now," said the lad. "But it was mighty good of her, wasn't it, Mr. Kelly, to run out on the field to help you?"

"Indeed it was, Elmer," replied Gordon, soberly. He had meant to tell her so at the right time, but now he noted Mildred's confusion and turned the subject quickly by asking:

"What luck did you have this morning?"

That gave the lad a chance to tell all about the morning's sport. He found Kelly knew all the best pools, as he had fished every rod of the stream year after year. Gordon told them tales of his hunting in the mountains that made Elmer's eyes glisten. Mildred listened dreamily. There was no intimate conversation such as she secretly wished there could be if the lad was not present. But that would come. She longed to have Gordon tell her all about himself, but the pleasure of anticipation is always great.

A Surprising Young Man.

The time passed all too quickly, and it was after 4 o'clock before they realized it. Mildred spoke of going home. Gordon jumped to his feet and helped her to arise.

"You will let me see you again soon?" he said.

"Oh, yes," she replied, and then paused a moment. "But not for a day or two. I will let you know. Have you a telephone. Ring three times? I will remember. Please don't call me up; you will hear from me. Well, good-by." She held out her hand.

"Wait a minute," said Gordon. "I'll be right back." He disappeared through the trees on the run and returned in three or four minutes. "Now we can walk to the bridge if you like."

They walked slowly and lingered on the bridge for a while, as if loath to part. Gordon looked at his watch.

"Give me two minutes more," he said. Even as he spoke there was the sound of a vehicle coming rapidly down the road and presently a high-powered automobile of the latest model, driven by a negro lad, slowed down and stopped at the bridge.

"I'll drive my friends home, Steve," said Gordon to the negro boy. "You wait here until I return."

"Is this your automobile?" cried Mildred in surprise. "Where in the world did it come from?"

"I telephoned for it," replied Gordon, smiling. "Another whim of my father's. He had telephones strung to every corner of the property."

"Gee whiz, that's going some," observed Elmer.

Mildred said nothing. She was thinking of the strange Gordon Kelly, a ball player, who owned a vast estate in the mountains and had servants at his beck and call who brought automobiles to him as if by magic.

CHAPTER XXV.

WHEN Gordon Kelly jumped on the tail of the express wagon in Atlanta, he told the driver to go to the Terminal Station. On the way there he decided to effectually conceal his movements, if it were possible to do so. He wanted more time to think. It is true he had had several weeks in which he did hardly anything else than think, but with his problem still unsolved he wanted to devote some more time to it, or get it off his mind altogether. The problem, of course, was Mildred Deery.

On the way to the Terminal he got a check for his trunk from the driver and told him to take the trunk to the baggage room. He paid the driver and got off the wagon a quarter of a mile from the terminal, leaving it to go on and deliver the trunk as ordered. Then he went to an express office, delivered his check and arranged to have the trunk forwarded to Steve Jackson, Pew Creek, Ga. After this was done he went to the freight office and after a good deal of trouble succeeded in geeting permission to ride in the caboose of the night freight to Chattanooga. One is sometimes able to arrange these things under proper persuasion.

It was in the gray of the morning that he dropped off the train, without being noticed, when it stopped at Pew Creek. It was all of a 12-mile walk to his home, but he started off, and it was not until he reached the bridge where later he met Mildred that he was able to make use of one of the telephones on his property and order an automobile to take him the rest of the way. Steve Jackson, his negro boy, quickly answered the summons, and that is the way Gordon Kelly reached his mountain home without anyone being the wiser. An hour later he had Judge Barbee on the telephone.

"This is Gordon," he said, "I am up home and I want particularly to ask you not to tell a soul where I am. You can reach me any time you wish but if you should call please ask for Mr. Gordon. I don't want anyone to know where I am for a while. Yes, everything is all right but I am trying to avoid a lot of annoyance. Goodbye."

With that off his mind Gordon proceeded to settle down to his old mode of life; that is as much as his troubled thoughts would allow him to.

The news that Gordon Kelly had left the hospital, packed his trunk and departed from Atlanta, presumably for Boston to join the Red Sox, was flashed over the wires, but as the days passed and nothing was heard of him, the Boston management began to get worried. Telegrams were sent to Atlanta, asking for information, but there was no information to impart. More telegrams came asking the Atlanta club officials to locate Kelly's home and see if he was there, but no one could be found who knew where his home was. Bill Smith was appealed to, but all he could say was that Kelly had told him he came from the Georgia mountains. This clew, vague as it was, led to nothing.

Two weeks passed and then the Boston club went at the matter in earnest. It had $50,000 tied up in Gordon Kelly, and that was a mighty pile of money to put out for a ball player and not have the use of his services. At the end of the third week the case was put in the hands of private detectives, and these professionals began a systematic hunt for the missing man. They traced his trunk to the terminal baggage room. They interviewed the expressman who had taken it there. But that is as far as they got in that direction. The trunk itself was like hundreds of others and the baggage men, who handled nothing else, could not place it. There was not enough for them to go on, and three weeks is a long time to remember a trunk that is like hundreds of others.

The detectives then went to the mountains but it was like hunting for a needle in a haystack. Many persons in the uplands had heard of Gordon Kelly, the ball player, but they were positive he didn't live anywhere in their section. The detectives searched the county tax lists. There was not a Kelly on them. They began to believe that Gordon Kelly was a fictitious name. If that were so, hunting for a needle in a haystack would be easy in comparison with their task.

Never Heard of Him.

The sleuths even stopped at Pew Creek between trains, but those persons of whom they inquired truthfully told them they had never heard of a Gordon Kelly and they were positive no such man lived in that vicinity. The detectives then went back to Atlanta to make a fresh start. There they hunted up Galen Deery, but that gentleman informed them that he hadn't the faintest idea where Gordon Kelly was; that he had never seen him but twice in his life and had no interest in him whatever. Deery was still smarting over that episode of the ball field in which his daughter figured. As the detectives knew of no connection between Gordon Kelly and Judge Barbee, the latter was not troubled with a visit from the sleuths.

There was one man who could, at least, have told where Gordon Kelly's home was, had he felt so inclined. That man was Forrest Cain, but he kept his mouth shut for reasons of his own. The cards were running badly for that young man and he was playing a waiting game, as gamblers do, hoping for a change of luck.

At the end of a month, or seven weeks after Gordon Kelly disappeared, the Boston club called in their detectives and abandoned the search. On the first and fifteenth of each month, however, a check for Kelly's salary was drawn and mailed to his last known address in Atlanta. They were all "returned to writer at the end of five days." The checks were saved in the safe of the Boston club, remaining unopened in the envelopes they were mailed in. The club, having a fortune invested in the player, was taking no chances in losing him on a technicality of baseball law if any question should ever arise.

If ever the Red Sox needed Gordon Kelly it was in the period in which the detectives searched for him high and low. They were "going bad," as the baseball phrase has it. Joe Wood, the champion pitcher, was injured early in the season and was out of the game for several weeks. Their first Western trip was disastrous, and toward the close of it Larry Gardner, their star third baseman, sprained his ankle and went around on crutches for a long time, his ankle in a cast. At the close of the Western trip they were sixth in the American League pennant race, a sorry showing for world's champions. The Philadelphia Athletics were out in the lead, with the Cleveland and Washington teams next. If the Red Sox were to do anything it was time to be up and doing. Jake Stahl, the manager, stayed at home during the trip. An operation on his foot kept him away from the ball field for many days. Altogether they were sorry days for the Red Sox, and their supporters began to lose heart.

But in spite of the fact that the Boston club had withdrawn its detectives from the search for Gordon Kelly, interest in that young man's mysterious disappearance did not abate. There was always some fresh clew to start the ball a-rolling again. These were run down, one after another. Every few days a dispatch would come out of some town in Texas, or Colorado, or Wyoming or Maine that no one had ever heard of, containing the information that Gordon Kelly had been found. Sometimes he was in a staggering condition, sometimes he was working as a farm hand or in a factory. Investigation proved in every case that the wrong man had been found.

Mark Twain's story of Horace Greeley's handwriting has a parallel in this, from a railway conductor in Missouri to the president of the road. The conductor wrote:

"A farmer has been riding on this pass for about a year. Do you want him to continue to use it?"

The president put on his glasses, looked the paper over carefully, and said:

"Why, this is not a pass. It is a receipt I gave the fellow for a load of wood about a year ago!"

.:. Wedding Gifts .:.

By MRS. FRANK LEARNED

THE question of sending a wedding gift must be decided by friendship or obligation. In the first instance there is the natural wish to please a friend, and in the other case one may be indebted to the bride or bridegroom or to their families for kindnesses or hospitalities. Those who are invited to a home wedding or a wedding reception usually send gifts, although there is no absolute rule to be followed as to this. As it is supposed to be a special compliment to be bidden to a home ceremony, a guest likes to return the courtesy by a gift, however simple it may be.

A gift is sent invariably to the bride, even though she may not be known personally to the giver. The custom is to send a gift directly from the place where it is purchased. The visiting card of the giver is enclosed in a small envelope and placed inside of the box containing the present. A brief line expressive of good wishes may be written across the top of the card, if the giver is a friend specially interested.

Wedding gifts are marked with the initials of the bride's maiden name.

In regard to the display of wedding presents there is a division of opinion. Some persons consider it ostentatious to show the gifts, or that it destroys sentiment to have critical eyes examining these offerings, others prefer to share their pleasure with their friends and are glad to give evidence of the good-will and the generous attention they have received.

When a wedding takes place in the country and friends are expected from a distance, the custom is to show the presents on the wedding day, or if the wedding is an informal one, with only relatives and intimate friends present, the gifts are shown.

The preferred custom is to show the presents a few days before the wedding. The bride-elect, or her mother, may write informal notes asking intimate friends and all those who have sent gifts to come in on a certain afternoon, during hours designated, to see the presents. It is allowable to write on one's visiting card, "Will you come in on Saturday afternoon, between four and six o'clock, to see the presents?"

The gifts are arranged on tables which are covered with white damask tablecloths. Here and there are vases of flowers. Great care is taken to place each article at its best advantage, especially the small and simple gifts which should be among the more beautiful ones, so that the givers may feel that the bride has truly appreciated their thoughtfulness.

The cards of the givers are usually placed with the gifts.

The informal serving of tea finishes the afternoon.

A bride-elect is careful to write a note of appreciation to every one who sends a gift. When she sees those who have sent presents, she remembers to repeat her thanks in person. The best rule is to write without delay and to mention the gift definitely, so that the note may not ne a duplicate of others.

The Faster They Go

Professor Barry once amused Judge Ball by an application on behalf of a man who was a dealer in horses and sugar sticks. The incongruity of his avocations struck the judge, who remarked:

"What a strange combination of trades."

"I see a close resemblance between horses and sugar sticks," said the witty barrister.

"In what way?" inquired his lordship.

"The more you lick them the faster they go," was the reply.

CRACKERS TRY AGAIN TO PLAY DOUBLE BILL

By Joe Agler.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., June 11.—We're off this afternoon on another double-header with Manager Molesworth's Barons. And when we grab those two, we shall beat it to Chattanooga, where we will be the guests for the remainder of the week of Kid Elberfeld's Look-outs.

Smith is figuring on Musser and Price to-day. Paul started the second game yesterday, but did not get far enough to get very tired over it. So I guess he'll go back for more to-day.

It is going to be pretty tough on Joe Dunn if the double-headers pile up on us, for he's the only catcher we have who is in running order. However, Joe is pretty chipper to-day and looks good for about six weeks of double-headers.

I take it that Molesworth will use Prough and Thompson, with Mayer to do the catching.

We won a hot game yesterday. It started out to be a double-header and a pennant raising combined, and we got away with everything but the second game. Darkness stopped that.

It took twelve good innings to finish the opening game. "King" Brady started for us and seemed to have the battle won, but went to pieces in the sixth. Dent relieved him.

Dent was good. He had everything and his hit started the rally in the twelfth that brought home the bacon.

After we got the first game out of the way, we marched over with the Barons to the pennant pole and ran up the pennant won in 1912 by the Barons.

The second game lasted only two innings and was then called on account of darkness.

Ritchie-Rivers Bout Still Up in the Air

SAN FRANCISCO, June 11.—Though articles of agreement have been signed, all is not well with the scheduled bout between Willie Ritchie and Joe Rivers on July 4. Manager Nolan was incensed last night because Joe Levy, who looks after the interests of Rivers, had not posted the forfeits agreed upon, and declared if Levy did not come through to-day he would call the bout off and take on Freddie Welsh in Vancouver on July 1.

"Levy agreed to put up his forfeits immediately after the articles had been signed," declared Nolan. "When I spoke to him about it, he said he would be back in an hour or so with the money. He did not return and I haven't heard anything further from him."

Nolan is said to be a trifle put out at the manner in which Levy dictated to him during the negotiations for the Ritchie-Rivers match. Rivers' manager won practically every point he held out for and Nolan is not accustomed to being beaten in this kind of a game.

FRED CLARKE MAY RETURN TO OLD POSITION AGAIN

PITTSBURG, June 11.—Associates of Fred Clarke said to-day that the veteran player and manager of the Pirates is about to put his determination aside and return to the outfield. Clarke has neither admitted nor denied the report, but it is expected both by players and his intimate friends that he will trot back into left field, perhaps in a few days. According to his usual method, he will probably announce his return a few minutes before he puts on his glove.

KILBANE TOO MUCH FOR JIMMY FOX OF OAKLAND

OAKLAND, CAL., June 11.—Johnny Kilbane, of Cleveland, featherweight champion, defeated Jimmy Fox, of this city, last night in the sixth round of their scheduled ten-round bout. Fox's seconds threw a sponge in the ring when their man was on the verge of a knock-out.

Lou Castro to Referee Battles

Sailor White May Stop Savage

By Left Hook.

COUNT LOUIS CASTRO, famed over the United States as ball player, manager and referee, has been secured to referee the Sailor White-Jim Savage bout at the Auditorium-Armory on Friday night, June 13.

It is believed that Castro will be satisfactory to both managers and scrappers, and surely no better man could be secured. Castro knows the boxing game, has a lot of "pep" in the ring and is known to be perfectly fair.

The engagement of Castro as referee makes it certain that the handling of the men in the ring will be on the same high plane as the rest of the show. The Auditorium-Armory bouts have established a reputation for good order, good crowds and good bouts, and the contest Friday night is not likely to do any damage to the reputation.

BEYOND any question of a doubt, the Savage-White bout is of more national importance and of greater promise than any ever staged in Atlanta before. The man who goes back to New York the victor has gained a material advantage in the contest for white hope supremacy. He can have almost any bout he wants.

Since the experts have had time to dope it out, they are inclined to believe that White will give Jim Savage a lot more than he counted on getting. Any man who could whip Pelky and stop Jim Barry in four rounds is likely to be heard from in any heavyweight bout. Combine this with the fact that White weighs 210 pounds, is 6 feet 2 inches tall, has a long reach and a willing disposition and you have a pretty strong scrapping machine.

It is going to take all of Jim Savage's cleverness to keep from getting knocked cold. White will be on top of him every minute, plugging away. With Savage's well-known cleverness, combined with that punch he has just discovered and which he used to put away Whitey Allen, the Bronx terror, he will be able to keep Sailor White at arm's length. If he can keep White away he has a chance to win by a big margin. If the Sailor can close right in he will give Savage one of the warmest little evening's entertainments that he ever had.

"I am much of Bob Fitzsimmons' way of thinking about White," he said to-day. "The Sailor is coming fast. It is something to have his great weight, strength and reach. But besides that he has the aggressiveness of a terrier. He is after his man all the time. He is very fast for a heavyweight. I shouldn't exactly call him clever, not the way Savage is, at any rate, but he can look out for himself. He has learned a lot in the couple of years he has been out, and he is picking up something new every day.

"White doesn't know anything but the ring game. But he sure is enthusiastic about that. He wallows in scrapping. He gets so interested a couple of days before a scrap that he forgets to eat his meals. When he gets into the ring he is all impatience and as nervous as a kid. But when the bell taps he quiets down and is ready. A second or two later he is after his man. From that time on it is give and take to the finish. I'll say this—I'll bet every man who sees the go takes his hat off to Sailor White before it is over; that is, if a good rushing, slugging, aggressive heavyweight makes a hit in this town."

FODDER FOR FANS

The Cubs tied up the score in the ninth inning yesterday and then won out in the tenth in their game with the Giants.

The Phillies came from behind in the ninth inning yesterday, batted out two runs and scored another victory over the hapless Reds.

"Big Ed" Konetchy, the star second sacker of the Cardinals, punched two singles, a triple and a homer out of six times up yesterday. Magee, the Cardinal left fielder, got four singles.

The Cardinals amassed sixteen hits yesterday, yet had to use five pitchers and go into the eleventh inning to win the game, 8 to 7, from the Braves.

The Athletics experienced little difficulty yesterday in defeating the Browns and thereby annexing their fifteenth straight victory.

The Yanks' "winning streak" of two games was shattered yesterday when the White Sox jumped upon a couple of the New York pitchers and swatted out enough runs to win the game.

The Red Sox scored five runs off Vean Gregg, the Naps' star twirler, in the first inning yesterday, which were quite sufficient to win them the second straight game from the Clevelanders.

The victory of the Athletics and the defeat of the Naps yesterday gave the Quakertown players a lead of four full games, or 93 points, over the Naps.

Joe Jackson, of the Naps, got three hits out of four times up yesterday and made a big gain over Ty Cobb, his batting rival, who went hitless after three efforts at Walter Johnson's slants and shoots.

* * *

The Senators got only one hit off the combined twirling efforts of Clauss and House, yet were able to win the game from the Tigers, who were shut out with two hits off Walter Johnson.

Manager Fred Clarke, of the Pirates, batting in a pinch in the ninth, delivered a two-bagger and paved the way for a 5 to 4 victory for his team over the Dodgers.

TENNESSEE BOY FIND OF SEASON IN BIG LEAGUES

By W. J. O'Connor.

ST. LOUIS, June 11.—It's time somebody should print a life-size picture o. Daniel Griner, the Tennessee blonde, under a bold, black caption: "The find of 1913."

Griner has made good with a vengeance. A year ago the massive Cardinal pitcher was a plunging fullback on the Tennessee eleven. After being graduat l he broke into baseball as a curvist for the Cleveland (Tenn.) Club. His stay in the minors was brief and although his big league life is yet very young, he has been tagged). K. by the railbirds.

Griner has a unique record with the Cardinals. He's the only pitcher on Hug's team who has been able to go the full route in a majority of his games. With one exception Griner has finished every game he started. He was knocked out by the Cubs on April 21, after Evers' team had made 12 hits a d 5 runs in 5 1-3 innings. In all his other games Griner went through from the first to the last round.

Veterans Not Going Well.

This is something Harmon, Sallee and Steele have not been able to do. Harmon has pitched only two full games this season. Sallee has gone the route three times. Indeed, out of 44 games played, Huggins has been forced to change pitchers no less than 26 times. Of the 18 games that a pitcher has gone the route, Griner has been on the hillock in 10 of them. Here's his record:

Date.	Opp. Team.	W.	L.	Ings.
April 13	Cubs	4—3	....	9
April 17	Cubs	....	7—1	9
April 21	Pirates	....	8—5	5 1-3
April 27	Reds	2—1	....	9
May 1	Pirates	....	5—4	9
May 7	Phillies	....	4—3	10
May 13	Braves	4—3	....	9
May 19	Superbas	....	2—1	11
May 24	Reds	12—4	....	*6
May 28	Cubs	x	....	....
May 31	Reds	....	6—2	9
June 4	Giants	6—4	....	9

*Taken out after game won.
xTaken out in eighth, score tie, 7—7.

Tennesseean's Percentage .500.

Griner has won five and lost five games. His percentage of .500 is better than his club's standing in the league race. However, it will be noted that Griner has lost three games by one-run margins, two of those extra-inning bouts. He has won three tight games by a margin of one run.

Griner was "found" by Scout Bill Armour who now is business manager of the Milwaukee (American Association) Club. Dan had had only one year's experience in baseball when he reported here, but he made good from the jump. He's now touted as the best bet among the young National League twirlers. He has the frame to last a long time, being a frugal liver to boot.

Crackers Are Puzzle of Season

Ought to Be Leading League Now

By Percy H. Whiting.

BILL SMITH won two pennants in Atlanta with weak-hitting teams. Can he win a third with a strong-hitting team? The question agitates local fans.

Ponder the figures:

Smith won in 1909 with a team that hit..... .222
The Crackers now are third, and hitting..... .272

With a team fifty points weaker in hitting than he has this year Smith romped in 1909, winning by such a margin that it wasn't interesting.

Glance at some more figures:

Batters over .300 mark on Cracker team:

In 1907..... 0 In 1909..... 0 In 1913..... 3

Regulars (exclusive of pitchers) who batted over .250 mark:

In 1907..... 5 In 1909..... 2 In 1913..... 6

In 1909, when Smith won the pennant by forty rods, every player on his club, except one catcher, one outfielder and one pitcher, was hitting worse than .250. Eleven of them were hitting .225 or worse.

Verily, if hitting is worth anything, the Crackers should win this year.

1907—Fox, Jordan, Castro and Dyer.
1909—Rohn, Jordan, Newton, Walker.
1913—Agler, Alperman, Bisland, W. Smith.

Agler is as good as Fox, better than Rohn. Alperman is about as good as Jordan. Bisland is as good as Castro in fielding and better in hitting, while he has a mile on Newton. Wally Smith is worth sixteen Dyers and a better man than Walker.

* * *

COMPARE the outfields, just for fun, considering the men from their ability to cover ground, hit the ball, run bases and think. Here they are:

1907—Paskert, Becker and Winters.
1909—Bayless, Moran, Winters.
1913—Long, Welchonce, Bailey.

REMEMBER that the same man is managing the club now that won the pennants in 1907 and 1909, and that he has had the advantage of several years of experience since then.

And after you have figured all these things you will wonder more than ever why the Crackers aren't out in front and leading the pennant chasers by a full mile.

THIS much is sure about the Cracker team. Though the end of the second month of the season, which was Tuesday, found the Crackers moderately removed from the leadership, there has not been a second this season when it has not appeared likely that the club would turn loose at any minute and start out for the pennant.

A club of sluggers, which can field moderately well, is liable to set sail any old moment.

The Crackers have kept in a comfortable position all the season. They have not been dangerously close to the front in a good while, but they haven't been so far toward the rear as to make it embarrassing.

Watch out for a smashing spurt to begin before so very long.

PLAY STARTS SATURDAY FOR PERRY ADAIR TROPHY

Play begins Saturday for the Perry Adair trophy over the East Lake course of the Atlanta Athletic Club. The conditions under which this trophy was offered have been charged, and instead of taking three wins to cop, it goes outright to the winner of the coming tournament.

The affair will be from scratch and the qualifying round will be played Saturday. The first and second rounds must be completed by June 19, the third by June 21, and the final round before June 23.

HANS WAGNER OBSTACLE IN GIANTS' WAY

—CHIEF MEYERS.

By John ("Chief") Meyers

NEW YORK, June 11.—Hans Wagner looms larger and larger each day as the possible stumbling block to a third successive pennant for the Giants. I am as confident now as when the season opened that my club will eventually be returned the winner. Class usually tells in the long run of any competitive sport, and I think my club has finally begun to display the real merit that won two straight pennants.

Every one figured this spring that the Pirates were destined to argue the case with us right to the end of the campaign. Pittsburg, like New York, has an exceptionally strong club. Like New York, it got off to a disappointing start, but, like New York, also, it appears to have found itself with hot weather and is prepared to fight to the finish.

Wherefore I say that Hans Wagner looms more and more ominously in our pathway. Wagner is so much more vital to his team's success than any other player in organized baseball is to another team that he may be considered pretty nearly the whole team.

I do not mean by this that Clarke has no other players. He has a well balanced organization, embracing one of the strongest pitching departments in the circuit. But Pittsburg, without Wagner, is a second division outfit.

Still Valuable Asset.

Wagner is one of the most remarkable characters the game has ever known. I very much doubt if at any time in his brilliant career of the past seventeen years he was of greater playing value than he is to-day. Certainly within the past five years he never approached his present form.

Most players are spectacular at times. Once in a while even the average athlete may pull some sensational fielding feat that will make the stands wild with enthusiasm. But Wagner shows so much enthusiasm on defense that to get a "hand" he has to do the practically impossible.

Wagner is an awkward—even clumsy—appearing fellow in his mannerisms. He lacks the grace of Lajoie. Yet he carries his burden of years on the diamond as easily as the youngest colt. No man in baseball is more agile than Hans, and none is so sure with his hands. He is possessed of every requisite of greatness; strong sure hands, exceptional reach, agility, a powerful, accurate arm and an exceptionally fast thinking brain.

Sometimes it seems almost uncanny the way Wagner handles a ball. He lowers his great hand (the gloved one the size of a scoop shovel, almost) and it seems as if the ball is attracted like a piece of steel to a magnet. Of course, that is fancy. It is the fine skill with which he plays the ball. He always plays the ball; he never lets the ball play him.

Wagner Greatest Fielder.

Wagner is the greatest fielder I have ever seen. Twice in the recent series at the Polo Grounds I saw him make plays which I am firmly convinced would have been absolutely impossible for any other living player.

One was on a faulty throw to second base to stop a stealer. This runner, the ball and Wagner all reached the cushion just about the same time. The ball was high; Hans had to leap in the air for it. In doing this he had to protect himself, as a collision might have seriously injured him. Wagner not only did protect himself, but he made a one-handed catch and tagged his man for a put-out while still in the air so quickly that the eye could scarcely follow his motion.

On the other occasion he started back into left for a difficult Texas leaguer. For such a fly no one is so sure. But somehow there was a misunderstanding with Carey. Each thought the other was going to take the ball, which either might have done very handily had he not stopped. The ball had almost settled to the ground when Wagner realized that Carey was depending upon him. With a lightning spring that combined the grace and power of a tiger's leap Wagner threw himself along the ground and scooped up the ball just before it settled on the grass.

Is Most Feared Hitter.

Wagner's wonderful batting ability has endeared his memory to every nook and cranny of the old earth where the great summer sport is known. Years have come and gone bringing with them their periodic phenoms. But none has dimmed the glory of the mighty Hans. To-day he stands at the head of the class, the most feared hitter in the National League. He has not always led the procession; but he has never been very far behind. And he has shown such great consistency that he will rank forever as one of the greatest figures of baseball history.

Entries Coming Fast For Joe Bean's Meet

Joe Bean, who is promoting the set of athletic games to be held at Piedmont Park on the morning of July 4, is greatly pleased these days. Entries are pouring in fast, thereby causing Smiling Joe to smile more than usual. Some of the entries follow:

Hugh Mauck, Fifth Regiment, shot-put and hammer; Charles Allen, Marist, 100-yard dash and 440-yard run; Walter Locke, Athletic Club, 880-yard run and steeplechase; Walter Dubard, Athletic Club, shot-put and hammer; Judge Fowler, Marist, 880-yard run and steeplechase; John Roberts, Marist, pole vault.

Contestants wishing to receive special instructions can communicate with Joe Bean, who is only too glad to help the young athletes along.

BUFFALO HAS NEW STAR IN JIMMY DUFFY

By Ed W. Smith.

CHICAGO, ILL., June 11.—They have a young lightweight boxing star down near Buffalo who is regarded as one of the real comers of the country in the 133-pound division. His name is Jimmy Duffy and he hails from Lockport, N. Y., where they think there is nobody quite as good. Jimmy and his prowess are brought before Chicagoans with a great deal of sharpness because he recently got a foul decision over Jack Britton, the North Sider, who is so highly regarded around this man's town. Britton and Duffy had a corking good battle in the ring at Buffalo, but in the sixth round Jack was told to go to his corner because of what the referee termed persistent fouling.

UP to that time the milling had been about as pretty as anybody could wish to see and of course the Lockport and Buffalo friends of Duffy were yelling madly for their favorite because he appeared to be holding Jack to about an even break despite the fact that he had been upset in the second round for an eight count with a corking rap on the chin. Duffy got over that blow easily and fought back so well that many figured that had the battle gone the full ten rounds Jimmy would have been returned the winner.

EVIDENTLY the dispatches that were sent out after the contest did Duffy a rank injustice, for several of them accused Duffy of quitting and laying down on the job. Nothing was further from the truth unless all of the Buffalo papers are badly fooled in Duffy, because not one of them mentions such a thing. Britton himself says Duffy must be a game lad to get up the way he did and fight back after getting a stunning crack on the chin early in the battle. The men have been rematched for the 16th and then we shall see.

BERT FINCH, who is handling Duffy's business affairs, claims his man is the real comer of the division and that his even contest recently with Packey McFarland stamps him as one of the best of the new crop of lightweights. In addition to this feat Jimmy held his own over ten rounds with Freddie Welsh, the English champion, and is reported to have bested such good fighting material as Ray Temple, Harry Thomas, the English star, and Young Jack O'Brien. Further, it is small wonder that Jimmy is a red hot favorite around his own town, because he is a clean, likable young fellow with all the earmarks of popularity.

ALAS for the traditions and precedents of recent making in the lightweight division! Willie Ritchie will not make 133 pounds at the ringside for Jose Rivers or any of the rest of them! Joe Gans, thought by many to be the greatest of all of them when he was right, never minded doing the weight, and his immediate successor to the crown, Battling Nelson, insisted upon all dangerous opponents doing ringside weight for him, and not an ounce over 133 pounds either. Then Ad Wolgast, who never was anything but a 128-pounder at his best, followed suit. But Willie, who took the title away from Ad on a foul, puts himself on record in the Rivers negotiations as being against the precedent, and evidently for quite consequential reasons.

THUS are changes wrought in the fighting game. Weight limits are only what a champion may choose to make them. Ritchie can name 135 pounds as the lightweight limit and will have as much basis for his claims as did Gans, Nelson and Wolgast when they insisted upon 133. Verily, it is the champion's last say in all things.

* * *

WE surely thought Harry Pollok was going to make a lot of fuss out on the coast by slapping Freddie Welsh, English champion, at them out there. But Pollok evidently doesn't see much chance at this time of getting on a match with Ritchie, for he is content to let Freddie go along and battle a lot of second-raters up in the Canadian Northwest. Welsh is in grand form right now and going like the department to a 4-11 fire. Certainly Harry's stand is a peculiar one.

BASEBALL FRAPPE.

An oil stove underneath my frigid feet,
Another stove beside me on the seat,
A pair of earmuffs and a coat of fur,
And what care I how fierce the tempests beat?

Knee deep in June, as calendars will show,
And through our frame the chills run to and fro,
How sweet 'twould be to watch a game in June
If one were only like an Eskimo.

We palpitate with every passing gust,
We quake as though our very bones would bust,
And wonder if the blokes who run the game
Are working for the Undertakers' Trust.

F. Schulte, after the fashion of F. Chance, complains of severe headaches, but H. Zim rests happy in the knowledge that he is immune.

Polo may be surrounded by money, glamour and social prestige, but when we examine it closely we find it is nothing but shinny with a university training.

A. Wolgast, pugilist, reports an injured thumb. This puts him at a great disadvantage when beating up the typewriter.

Whenever we hear of a schoolboy running the hundred in 9 4-5, we are reminded that a simple snap of the thumb can break a world's record.

There are various things that overpower us with profound lethargy, one of which is the question of a successor to the late L. McCarty.

The more we think of polo, the more we are impressed by the safety and sanity of football.

SPORT.

Lives of poloists remind us
We can cause a lot of thrills,
And, departing, leave behind us
Naught but undertakers' bills.

Yes, Rollo; one might say without fear of contradiction that it was a horse on Foxhall Keene.

J. McGraw avers that some of his athletes have to be driven to eat, demonstrating that there is a vast abyss between a ball player and a pugilist.

In view of Mr. McGraw's sentiments on the eats question, it is rumored that Rudy Unholz will ask for a tryout with the Giants.

GOOD NIGHT.

She was a phantom of delight,
A chicken wondrous fair.
Her smile was bright, her step was light
As if she walked on air.

And as I lamped her azure eye
It made my bosom throb.
"Some squab!" quoth I while passing by;
"Considerable squab!"

The justly celebrated rose
Is there with many a thorn;
My pulses froze from head to toes
Upon the morrow morn.

A motorbike came tearing by
And she was on the rear.
"Good night!" quoth I and heaved a sigh
And wiped away a tear.

'Tis true it matters not to me;
Perchance she knows her mind.
And yet, if she could only see
The way she looks behind!

CHRISTY MATHEWSON'S BIG LEAGUE GOSSIP

NEW YORK, June 11.—Fans all over the country have been discussing the Cincinnati Reds. Also when this team is mentioned, Joe Tinker's name is usually brought into the argument. Personally, I am strong for Joe at all times. He is a great friend of mine, and I consider him one of the greatest shortstops the game has ever known. As a leader of men, Joe must prove his worth. He has a hard task before him, but is made of the right stuff to make good. Let me state right here that the Reds are a rejuvenated outfit. They look more like the "Tinkers" every day, and I do not expect to see them finish last by any means. They will give any club a good battle now, because the pitching staff has been tightened up, and the rest of the team never did have so very many kinks in it. Tinker is busy ironing them out, and he is the boy who can iron.

BENTON and Suggs have always been good pitchers, but neither struck form in the early part of the race. Tinker said to me in Cincinnati a week ago:

"Every time I sent a man to the box in the first part of the season, I sent a prayer with him, and usually it did no good."

The theory that a team can win with bad pitching was long ago disproved in baseball. The best club in the world cannot. The addition of Ames, Devore and Groh has put new life into the "Tinkers." This may sound like a criticism of McGraw's judgment in making the trade, but, in reality, it is a boost. A change of venue, as the lawyers say, often benefits a ball player for many reasons, the same as a change of climate will help the health of a sickly person. Sometimes the fans "get on" a man, and he becomes discouraged in the city. He will go somewhere else and play his head off. Then the traded player always wants to impress on his old boss the fact he has made a mistake in letting him go.

NEITHER Devore nor Groh was good enough to play regularly on the Giants this year, in McGraw's opinion, and his judgment of a ball player has been confirmed by his record. This does not mean that McGraw thought either one was a poor performer, but he believed he had better men to put in the game every day. Players sitting on the bench are of small benefit to any manager. The Giants needed a pitcher for the coming double-headers. McGraw liked Fromme and got him. Wait until he has had a fair chance, and he will vindicate McGraw.

Devore has always been a fast, game ball player, and, confidentially, McGraw hated to let him pass along, but Tinker insisted and refused to accept anyone else. "Josh" has been going great guns since he joined out with the "Tinkers," and I hope he keeps it up. Ames has always had hard luck in New York. He has shown real stuff in Cincinnati, and will doubtless build up a reputation for himself there. New York is the hardest city in the country for a ball player to make good in, because everybody is always out to beat the Big Town boys.

THE trade will probably work out in the same way with Hal Chase, who was passed along to the Chicago White Sox by Frank Chance. It won't be two weeks before fans will be saying that Chance was crazy to let a player like Chase go, because Hal will get his back up and play for his life. But the Yankees were in last place, and Chase was not getting them out of it. He will want to make a hit with his new following of fans, and just watch him go.

* * *

IN St. Louis the Philadelphia club will strike no soft spot, particularly if it meets the mercury at the place we found it. The Cardinals are accustomed to playing in that heat. They are a great in-and-out bunch. One day they will act like champions and the next like a flock of dubs. It is not a steady team. If the Phillies catch them in a championship spell, they want to watch out. Griner, Harmon and Sallee are moving very smoothly in the pitcher's box right now. Let me conclude by saying that I do not fear the Phillies for the pennant. Maybe the St. Louis club looks better to me, because it has always been a hard crowd for the Giants to beat.

RINGSIDE NOTES

Jim Savage and Sailor White, the two husky heavyweights, who battle at the Auditorium-Armory on Friday night will arrive in Atlanta to-day. Danny Morgan will accompany Savage, while McKetrick will be Savage's partner.

Both boxers will continue training here until Friday, so as to be in great shape at ring time. The two heavyweights have been doing hard work in New York for the past ten days and will need but light work to fit them for the fray.

George Carpentier is after another match with Frank Klaus. George Engle, manager of the Pittsburg middleweight, has received a wire from the Frenchman asking them to cross the ocean again. Klaus and Carpentier met in Dieppe, France, June 24, 1912, and the steel-ribbed Pittsburger with the 60-horse power punch stopped the Frenchman in eighteen rounds.

Engle also has a few words to say regarding Klaus' recent mill against Jack Dillon. Engle says that Klaus was given the worse deal of his career, and should have at least been handed a draw. "We will gladly battle Dillon again, but would much prefer a bout over the 20-round route," says Engle.

Rivers has finally landed the Willie Ritchie go. After much dickering the pair finally came together yesterday and agreed on terms. Welsh, Tommy Murphy, Leach Cross and Bud Anderson are all ready to step in and take Rivers' place in case the Mexican failed to reach terms with the title holder.

New York fans are picking Cross to trim Anderson when the two battle on the coast. They point to the fact that a slugger has never defeated the Eastern lightweight and Bud is a typical mixer. Leach's deadly wallop is expected to put the coast sensation away.

Johnny Coulon does not intend to box Kid Williams at Baltimore and have a Baltimore man act as referee. The fans at the Maryland city refuse to stand for an out-of-town official, which means that the pair of bantamweights will probably clash on the coast. Tom McCarey is wild after the match.

Mike Gibbons is certainly keeping himself busy these days. The St. Paul sensation was matched yesterday to take on Young Ahearn at New York on Thursday night, and has practically to take on Young Denny at New Orleans.

Harry Trendall has refused to meet Charlie White at St. Louis. This makes the third scrapper who has turned down offers to meet the Chicago boy in the last two weeks. Tommy Murphy turned down an offer from Kenosha, Wis., Johnny Lore dodged a bout with the Chicagoan at New Orleans and Trendall turned his head from the St. Louis promoters.

Buffalo fans are going wild over the Britton-Duffy go to be staged there on June 16. They are boosting Duffy as the next lightweight champion and are anxious to see him down Danny Morgan's speed marvel.

Spider Britt threatens to quit the ring forever if he fails to defeat Meyer Pries at the Auditorium-Armory on Friday night. Britt has worked hard for this bout and looks to be in great shape. He is anxious to prove that his former victory over Pries was far from a fluke.

Kid Williams is another boxer, who is rapidly gathering in the dough. The Baltimore boy will take on Jem Kenrick in a fifteen-round affair at Baltimore to-night and is practically assured of a meeting with Johnny Coulon, July 4. Ever since Williams defeated Eddie Campi on the coast last year he has been a big card.

* * *

MRS. SULLIVAN PLAYS WELL IN VIRGINIA TOURNEY

RICHMOND, VA., June 11.—Mrs. Willard Sullivan, former woman champion of the South, again showed championship form Tuesday afternoon when she defeated Miss Martha Robinson, 6-0, 6-1, in the women's singles in the second day's matches of the Old Dominion Tennis Club tourney.

It is now practically certain that she will compete with Mrs. Saunders Taylor, of Norfolk, for possession of the Challenge Cup. Each has won the cup twice.

Nat Thornton, of Atlanta, got into play for the first time Tuesday afternoon with Shaner, of Lynchburg, for his partner. The pair easily defeated Donan and Mullen, 6-1, 6-0. It looks as if Thornton will have but little trouble retaining the cup which he won last year.

COULON INJURES HAND; BURNS BOUT POSTPONED

CHICAGO, June 11.—Johnny Coulon has gone and jammed up his right hand on a training partner. So the championship fight with Frankie Burns, originally scheduled for next Monday night in Kenosha, has been postponed one week.

NASHVILLE GETS MORE FROM CHATTANOOGA CLUB

NASHVILLE, TENN., June 11.—President Hirsig, of the local ball club, has purchased Pitcher Forest More from the Chattanooga club. The price was not made public.

More in 1912 was rated as one of the leading twirlers in the league, but his work this season has not been up to his usual standard. Schwartz believes, however, that he will prove of great value to the Vols on account of his experience.

Waivers have been asked on Pitcher McManus to make room for More.

GRIFFITH STOPS BROCK IN NINTH ROUND AT AKRON

AKRON, OHIO, June 11.—Johnny Griffith, of Akron, fought his first battle last night as a lightweight and won from Phil Brock, of Cleveland, in the ninth round of a scheduled 12-round bout by the knockout route.

Phillies Lead All in Home Runs

Magee Sets Hot Pace With Five

ONE of the reasons why the Phillies, after reaching the top rung of the championship ladder on May 4, have managed to keep possession of it has been the ability of the players to punch out four-baggers. The Quakers easily are the home run kings of the major league world, and to May 24, inclusive, had made sixteen of the sixty-eight circuit clouts manufactured in Tom Lynch's organization.

To the same date in the American League twenty-eight four-bag blows had been struck, so Dooin's Daisies have to their credit one-sixth of the major league home run output of 1913.

Sherwood Magee, Luderus and Cravath are the dangerous athletes on the Quaker combination. These three men have whaled out twelve four-baggers and have broken up many a combat. Magee has five homers to his credit, of which three were secured off right handers and two off left handers. Sherwood obtained his first loop-the-loop swat on April 26, off Hub Perdue, of the Braves; his second and third off Rube Marquard, of the Giants, on May 5; his fourth off Marty O'Toole, of the Pirates, on May 12, and his fifth off Howard Camnitz, of the same combination, on the following day.

Luderus Has Four Homers.

Fred Luderus has poled four homers, his first hit of this kind being made at the Polo Grounds off Jeff Tesreau and the next three wallops being manufactured in Philadelphia. The pitchers "Ludy" maltreated at home were Steele, of St. Louis, and Harter and Brown, of Cincinnati. Luderus has had the happy faculty of making his four-baggers at opportune moments, for the hits off Steele and Brown won games for the Doolnites.

Cravath a Great Hitter.

Cravath, who, if he could field as well as he can hit, would stand an excellent chance of winning the car offered by Hugh Chalmers, of Detroit, for the National League's most valuable player, has three homers to his credit. He gained the first while acting as a pinch-hitter, smiting the first ball served him by Christy Mathewson and promptly driving it out of the lot. Rube Marquard and Howard Camnitz are the other flingers whom Cravath has jarred for homers.

Three Players Set Mark.

No Quaker has as yet turned the trick accomplished by Joe Jackson, Lee Magee and Joe Connelly this year—that of hammering out a four-bagger when all the bases had occupants—but the season still is in its infancy, as Charles Hercules Ebbets would say. Cravath has to share with Alva Williams, of the Senators, the distinction of having smote for the circuit when acting as a sub swatter and Sherwood Magee has to share with Charley Stengel, of the Superbas, the honor of having contributed two four-baggers in the same controversy. Stengel, like Magee, got his brace of four-baggers off a southpaw, Otto Hess, of the Braves, being the man whom the Brooklynite stung. The number of home runs made by the Phillies this year and the pitchers off whom they were made will be found below:

Magee—5.

April 26—Off Perdue, Boston.
May 5—Off Marquard, New York.
May 12—Off O'Toole, Pittsburg.
May 13—Off Camnitz, Pittsburg.

Luderus—4.

April 22—Off Tesreau, New York.
May 9—Off Steele, St. Louis, game resulting 3 to 1 in Phillies' favor and victory being due to homer, made with man on base.
May 21—Off Harter, Cincinnati.
May 23—Off Brown, Cincinnati, game resulting 4 to 1 in Phillies' favor and victory being due to homer made with man on base.

Cravath—3.

May 3—Off Mathewson, New York, "Cactus" made this four-bagger while pinch-hitting for Killifer in the eighth inning and when the score was 2 to 0 in the Giants' favor. He hit the first ball pitched Phillies, and the Phillies eventually won out 3 to 2.
May 5—Off Marquard, New York.
May 13—Off Camnitz, Pittsburg.

Knabe—1.

May 12—Off O'Toole, Pittsburg. F. Otto chose a psychological moment for his homer, inserting it into the ninth inning when the Pirates were one run ahead and when a defeat would have tumbled the Phillies into second place. The hit tied the score and in the eleventh the Phillies won out.

Paskert—1.

May 8—Off Harmon, St. Louis. "Dode" made this homer in the first inning and on the first ball pitched.

May 16—Off Toney, Chicago.

Seaton—1.

May 21—Off Harter, Cincinnati.

LOOK IN THE GLASS TO-DAY

Be Honest With Yourself. Study the Cause for Your Looks.

"Be honest with yourself," says the Quaker Health Teacher. "What is it that gives you that sallow complexion, those lusterless eyes and furrows on your face which should be smooth? Probably you think your health is good, but there must be some reason, and more often than not your troubles are caused by a sluggish liver and disordered stomach. A good complexion, a clear skin, a good appetite and a feeling of health and strength are every person's desire, and there is no reason why he should not have them all.

"A well-known lady living in this city, who does not wish her name published, told me: 'I thought I was in fair health, but kept getting thinner and thinner. I was so yellow that I thought my complexion must be gone forever; I was troubled with pimples on my face and was told that the life and sparkle had left my eyes; felt dull and listless; getting up in the morning more tired than when I lay down at night. I am a mother and believe I love my family as much as anyone can, but I found I was getting cross with my children and snappy with my husband. It took me some time to realize this, but when I did I thought there must be a cause, and I must cure that cause. I had been reading of the cures that the Quaker Extract had been making, and some people I am acquainted with concluded to give it a trial. Now, in less than three weeks my husband and children are once more glad to meet me with kisses and my friends exclaim when I meet them: "How well you look!" You may rest assured that I will always speak well of the Quaker Extract. It has done so much for me.'"

Don't put it off any longer, but get started on the road to health to-day. The Quaker Remedies can be obtained at Coursey & Munn's drug store, 29 Marietta Street. If you suffer with rheumatism, catarrh, kidney, liver, stomach, bladder or blood troubles, indigestion, constipation, start to-day and get well. The Quaker Extract will cure you the same as it has cured hundreds of others. Call to-day and obtain Quaker Extract, 3 for $2.50, 6 for $5.00. Oil of Balm, 25c, or 5 for $1.00. GOOD FOR 1,000 VOTES.

Since the original announcement of the contest, nothing has aroused interest among the boys and girls of Atlanta and the State as did the news that The Georgian and American are to give many more prizes to the youngsters besides the twelve pony outfits.

And second only to this piece of information was the announcement of several bargain offers—inducements to quick action.

There is an offer of 50,000 extra votes for the first $30 turned in by each contestant within a specified and brief time.

There are extraordinary offers of extra votes for clubs of five subscriptions for yearly, half yearly and three-months subscriptions.

NO LIMIT PUT ON CLUGS.

No limit is put on the number of clubs which may be brought in by any contestant—the more the better for the contestant and for us. Each club brings the same number of extra votes, besides the regular vote schedule allowed for the subscriptions.

All of these things have put new life into the contest.

There is a standing invitation to the contestants, their parents, their relatives and friends to call at the contest department and talk it over. Many are availing themselves of this invitation. Ordinarily, children are seen but infrequently in a newspaper office. But of late in The Georgian and American offices they have become such frequent callers that they attract no notice except from the contest managers, who always find time to talk to them.

One thing which should be emphasized is that it is not too late for any child to enter the contest and win. No leader in any of the eleven districts has an insuperable advantage. All of them can be passed, and this with the cost only of a little energetic work.

EASY TO EXTEND SUBSCRIPTIONS.

"But everyone I know takes The Georgian and American," said one little fellow the other day.

"How can I get new subscriptions?"

The answer is that while the subscribers to The Georgian and American in Atlanta would by themselves make up a large city, and while doubtless most of the contestants' friends do read these papers, still this very friendship for the publications makes it easy to induce them to subscribe for a definite term instead of from week to week, and to get them to pay in advance for a year or half year.

No contestant need fear; votes are to be had for the asking.

Jury Trial Allowed In Bankruptcy Case

MACON, June 11.—In allowing the demand for a jury trial for the Beach Manufacturing Company, of Appling County, a $500,000 lumber firm charged with insolvency, Judge Emory Speer, in the United States Court, reminded the attorneys he still had the privilege of either expressing his opinion to the jury or of directing a verdict.

Judge Speer said this is the first instance of a demand being made before him for a jury trial in a bankruptcy case.

J. O. Beach, president of the company, is a brother-in-law of Representative C. G. Edwards, of Savannah.

SUPREME COURT ADJOURNS DESPITE STATE RATE CASES

WASHINGTON, June 11.—At 1:35 o'clock and without announcing any additional decisions in the State rate cases, the Supreme Court adjourned until Monday, June 16, which will be its final decision day for this term.

SILVER SERVICE PRESENTED TO GOVERNOR

National Guard of State Gives One Thousand Dollars as Token of Its Love and Esteem.

Governor Joseph M. Brown was tendered a genuine "surprise party" by the National Guard of Georgia last night.

The State military organizations, through a few chosen officers, slipped up on their commander-in-chief at the Executive Mansion, where he was giving a reception to the Georgia Tech graduating class, and presented his excellency with about $1,000 worth of solid silver as a token of their respect and esteeme.

The Governor was expecting some of his officers last night, for they had been especially invited to the reception. He likes to have them present at all his receptions.

When the big gathering was called to order, Chief of Staff Frederic J. Paxon told the Governor how much the military boys of the State love him and appreciate his attitude toward them, and that it was the military's desire to present him a substantial token of its high regard.

After Colonel Paxen had finished his speech, the most gorgeous display of silverware ever shown in the mansion was uncovered in an adjoining room.

Governor Brown was quite overcome. He found it difficult to gather himself sufficiently to respond. Finally, in a very happy speech, he paid high tribute to the militia and its importance to the State.

The magnificent gift was paid for by voluntary subscriptions from members of the National Guard all over the State. The idea of presenting the Governor the silver was conceived in Atlanta a month ago. Subscriptions of from $1 to $20 were sent in by 200 or more members of the State military.

The matter was kept a secret among the military. Outside the Adjutant General's office in Atlanta, the only persons in on the secret were Mrs. Brown and the Governor's private secretary, Colonel Jesse Perry.

City Sunday Schools Headed by Dr. Hull

Dr. Marion McH. Hull, superintendent of the North Avenue Presbyterian Sunday School, was elected president of the Atlanta Association of Sunday School Superintendents at the monthly meeting of the association at Wesley Memorial Church Tuesday night. John S. Spalding, superintendent of the Second Baptist Sunday School, was elected secretary.

Among those who spoke Tuesday night were George Hinman, retiring president; John S. Spalding, J. W. Awtry, Dr. Hull and C. V. Lecraw. The next meeting will be held July 15 at the North Avenue Presbyterian Church.

Helen Keller Not to Teach Alfonso's Son

BOSTON, June 11.—Miss Helen Keller's instructor and friend, Mrs. J. A. Macy, in reply to cabled rumors that she would go to Spain to teach a son of King Alfonso, who is afflicted as she was, said to-day:

"Miss Keller will not go to Spain. She will stay at my home here in Wrentham to rest and gain strength till August, when she will go to Bay View, Mich., to lecture at the chautauqua there. Then she will return here and stay till October, when her winter lecture tour begins."

Dr. E. J. Dennis, of St. Louis, Mo., says: "I have used and prescribed your Castoria in my sanitarium and outside practice for a number of years and find it to be an excellent remedy for children."

Dr. S. A. Buchanan, of Philadelphia, Pa., says: "I have used your Castoria in the case of my own baby and find it pleasant to take, and have obtained excellent results from its use."

Dr. J. E. Simpson, of Chicago, Ill., says: "I have used your Castoria in cases of colic in children and have found it the best medicine of its kind on the market."

Dr. L. R. Robinson, of Kansas City, Mo., says: "Your Castoria certainly has merit. Is not its age, its continued use by mothers through all these years, and the many attempts to imitate it, sufficient recommendation? What can a physician add? Leave it to the mothers."

Dr. Edwin F. Pardee, of New York City, says: "For several years I have recommended your Castoria and shall always continue to do so, as it has invariably produced beneficial results."

Dr. N. B. Sizer, of Brooklyn, N. Y., says: "I object to what are called patent medicines, where maker alone knows what ingredients are put in them, but I know the formula of your Castoria and advise its use."

SEQUEL TO LOVE FOR DOLL

Maternal Instinct Greatly Developed by Teaching Children to Love Their Dolls.

The little child's doll is mother to the most romantic fairy. And in the years that pass, the doll fades into the petals of a June rose, to evolve the most wondrous of all transformations.

And now comes a more serious period when the joy of real motherhood should be as tranquil as best effort can provide.

This is accomplished with a wonderful remedy known as Mother's Friend, an external application so penetrating in its nature as to thoroughly lubricate every cord, nerve, muscle and tendon involved.

There will be no pain, none of that nausea or morning sickness, no sensation of distress or strain of expanding muscles. The nerves, too, will be calm, thus making the period one of restful days, of peaceful nights and a source of happiest anticipation.

The young, expectant mother must be carefully watchful lest she become absorbed in those mental distresses which fit prepare her for the most important event in her life.

Mother's Friend enables her to avoid all sensation of dread, worry or pain, and thus she is preserved in health and strength to take up the joyful task of motherhood.

You will find Mother's Friend on sale at all drug stores at $1 a bottle. Do not fail to use it regularly as directed. Write to-day to Bradfield Regulator Company, 135 Lamar Building, Atlanta, Ga., for their most valuable little guide book for expectant mothers.

FINES POOR WAY TO ENFORCE DISCIPLINE

Employers Have No Right to Dock Girls, Then Work Them Overtime, Says Forbes.

By B. C. FORBES.

Do you call this honest?

In certain places of employment, notably stores, workers are severely fined for being late in the morning, yet whenever necessary these same workers are forced to stay overtime without receiving one cent of extra pay—not even the return of the morning fine.

I am told that in one store employees getting only a few dollars a week are fined twenty-five cents for being one minute late, and if they are late twice in one week the rate of the penalty is doubled—that is to say, fifty cents is docked each morning. Yet this same store often orders its help at certain counters to stay after regular hours, but pays them nothing for such additional service.

* * *

Mr. Employer, is that fair? Because you are on top, have you any right to act so arbitrarily? You can do it with poor, unorganized shop girls, but you know you would not dare attempt it with members of a strong union.

All a worker has to sell is his or her labor. If you take that, are you not stealing from him or her? If one of these workers were to adopt your principle—rather, lack of principle—and steal goods in payment of the extra service rendered, you would brand him or her a thief, wouldn't you? Well, what are you when you fine a six-dollar-a-week worker twenty-five cents or fifty cents for being a little late in the morning and then compel the same worker to stay twice or six times as long overtime in the evening without payment?

We hear a lot about unreasonable action by labor unions, but are they guilty of anything more unreasonable, more unfair, more unjust than this?

Employers cannot expect to be allowed to continue to browbeat workers. The pendulum of justice may swing slowly, but it does swing. All over the world there is an uprising against unjust autocracy. There is a revolt against every form of tyranny. The "privileged class" is to lose its privileges. Justice between man and man, between class and mass, is to be enforced. The movement has made almost unimaginable progress—we have seen it in Russia, in China, in the Balkans, in Great Britain, in the United States. Right cannot be trampled under foot forever. The eternal scheme of things decrees that justice must triumph in the end.

Taking advantage of poorly-paid, unprotected help is not a small matter. It has far-reaching, incendiary consequences. It breeds discontent—and justly so. It arouses antagonism to employers and to capital—as it ought. In the fulness of time this discontent, this antagonism will vent itself in the form of legislation which may deal none too gently with employers and capital. Those who pay wages are rapidly losing hold of the machinery of legislation—glance at Britan, at Germany at Belgium, at Britain, at Germany, at Australia, at New Zealand, at South Africa.

Employers who have dealt inconsiderately with their workers simply because there was nobody to say "Nay" cannot hope to receive scrupulous consideration when these workers climb into the saddle. One foot is already in the stirrup.

This may seem an unnecessarily deep dissertation upon so apparently small a matter as fining workers for being late in the morning and forcing them to work late in the evening without compensation. But the principle involved is not small, it is not unimportant, it is not transient. It is of the eternal verities. To conduct a business on such lines is disgraceful.

Oh, yes; I know discipline must be strictly enforced. I know it would never do to let thoughtless girls and boys or irresponsible grown-ups come sauntering in to work at any old hour they saw fit. Stores must pull up their shades and factories must open their doors promptly at specified hours and it is imperative that every man, woman and youth be on hand at the prescribed minute. But to deduct an hour's wages for being five minutes late and then steal an extra hour's work from everybody or anybody is not a proper way to insure discipline. It undermines discipline. It begets righteous indignation and disloyalty. What's sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. The employer must play fair. He must do as he would be done by.

* * *

Let every employer digest this truth: If he will not act justly voluntarily he will be COMPELLED to be just before the world is very much older. The graver the sin now, the worse the punishment by and by.

COTTON GOSSIP

There was a big "jumble" of trade in July yesterday, with the buying and selling so mixed that nobody could tell what the leading Liverpool interests did for the day by balance. One thing is certain, Wall Street and Southern shorts covered freely, much of it on stop orders, and as nobody dared to go short of it, the contracts presumably came from both leading and trailing longs.

* * *

Many traders think the worst is over in July and that commission houses accounts booked up to last night are pretty well evened up.

* * *

New crops' strength yesterday was due mostly to July, although some kicks from Georgia played their part.

When the flurry in July carried that option to 12.25 yesterday, which was started by Wall Street covering, the selling at this point became general and a 20-point reaction followed quickly. It was reported that the larger spot interests were principal sellers.

It is generally believed that the short interest in July has been reduced to a great extent.

"It was rumored yesterday afternoon that there had been a settlement in July, but this was not considered seriously as there is no reason at this time to expect such a move," says J. M. Anderson.

NEW ORLEANS, June 11.—Hayward & Clark: The map shows favorable weather; further rains in South Texas; clearing elsewhere. Temperatures are too low in eastern and northern belt, but this will be quickly remedied. The most important development is that fair weather has set in.

The New Orleans Times-Democrat says: "The talent danced attendance on the speculative rings all day long. Cotton played havoc with shorts and stocks played havoc with longs. Professionals seem to have lost the power of perception and seem to have got in bad all along the line. The same people appeared to be short of cotton and long of stocks. Theoretically speculators were covering short cotton lines in order to protect stock holdings. It was a gay old session and one the talent will not soon forget.

"The weather map barometer lines formed a series of circles, wheels within wheels, like the market. All sections of the belt with the exception of Southwest Texas have been adequately soaked, with more rain promised. Southwest Texas will probably have received rain by to-night. Amateur weather men, however, say no more hard rains are likely to fall anywhere in the belt at this time. At the close the cotton contract market question remaining to be answered was, Did New York July shorts effect a settlement? Rumor said they did. The commission men in closest touch with the position said they did not. In the absence of a July sentiment, higher prices for the midsummer position are practically inevitable.

"Yesterday's reaction in the cotton market followed close on the heels of cabled reports of actual fighting among the Balkan allies, weather and crops now being ignored, and the bear talent having lost confidence in its own judgment. Heavy sales of the actual at Liverpool day after day, and the relative as well as the actual strength of the Savannah spot market, which is the nearest source of supply to New York, have within a day or two done about as much to disturb professional equilibrium as the controlled July position has done in a week. Bears have simply lost all courage of conviction. Until they regain their stamina, the market will be one-sided."

COTTON GOSSIP.

NEW YORK, June 11.—N. L. Carpenter & Co.: The market opened steady, but the ring was inclined to sell on the favorable weather map. Gwathmey and Schill were the leading sellers. Cone bought at the outset, but quickly switched his transactions and sold July after the call.

There was some scattered short covering early on low temperature through some portions of the belt.

PROFIT-TAKING LOWERS COTTON

NEW YORK, June 11.—The cotton market opened easier to-day, first prices 1 to 6 points higher. There were prospects for clearing weather over the belt and cables were not as good as have been expected or local prices would have been higher. Old crops showed the most loss over night.

During the forenoon the market became easier. Schill offered large blocks of October at 11.31. Favorable weather conditions also aided, except for low temperatures in some sections, which caused scattered short covering. The ring, however, was inclined to sell, resulting in prices shading sharply from the initial level, being 3 to 4 points lower.

It is generally believed among conservatives that the short interest has been largely eliminated during the past few days.

The map indicates fair weather generally, except possibly more rain in south and west Texas; slowly rising temperatures, except stationary and continued cool weather in certain sections.

The market ruled steady during the late forenoon. There was a scattered demand for July, which was attributed mainly to shorts. The principal selling came mostly from spot houses. Prices, however, held steady around the early high point. Later the ring renewed their attack by selling freely on a bearish report from Cordill, resulting in a sharp decline from the opening range.

Hallenbeck King has also out with a bearish report. He says the recent cold wave in Oklahoma and Arkansas, while showing unseasonably low temperatures, was not severe enough to do any damage and has now moderated materially. Also wet conditions of the fields are not considered as injurious, though very threatening.

At the close the market was steady at a net decline of 7 to 13 points from the final quotations of Tuesday.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER.

NEW ORLEANS, June 11.—The map shows favorable developments over night. Fair weather in the north central belt. Partly cloudy to cloudy elsewhere. Precipitation very light, except that moderate rains fell over the Atlantic coast districts and south Texas. Temperatures rose in the western States, but dropped somewhat in the eastern half of the belt. Indications are for generally clearing weather, except possibly more rain in south and west Texas. Rising temperatures, except stationary in the northeastern quarter of the belt, where it will continue cool. The cool wave has greatly diminished in intensity, and warm, normal weather will prevail in a few days. The most important development is the change to fair weather and the slight check caused by cool weather will soon be remedied.

Liverpool came in poor on futures, which were about 4 points lower than due, but spot prices are quoted 4 points higher; sales, 12,000 bales.

London reports hostilities commenced between Servia and Bulgaria. The London market is gloomy on fear of war in Balkans in consequence of the collapse of the peace conference. Political tension is high throughout Europe.

Our market opened unchanged with trading held in abeyance by the traders waiting for a cue from July in New York. As this option shows no life and eased a few points, the market gave way to 12.19 for July and 11.34 for October up to noon. The advance worked through July in New York during the past two days has naturally made new crop shorts very nervous and the cool spell ceased undue apprehension of damage. This feeling, however, was relieved by a Government forecast of fair, warmer weather for the central and eastern States.

MILLER-CARTER COTTON LETTER.

MEMPHIS, June 11.—It is evident from the action of the market that short interest has been eliminated or greatly reduced. Even July acts heavy and Liverpool is said to be selling some. Some early buying on low temperatures east, but warmer weather is on the way, which, following recent general rains, must greatly stimulate growth.

It is always possible to twist summer contracts when New York stock is small, but barring fresh manipulation of this sort the market should gradually seek lower levels.

The Sunday American goes everywhere all over the South. If you have anything to sell The Sunday American is "The Market Place of the South." The Sunday American is the best advertising medium.

CANADIAN PACIFIC LEADS BIG SLUMP

Upturn of Morning Gives Ground Before Great Bear Onslaught Near Close of Day.

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, June 11.—The invariable upturn which follows a slump in the stock market presented itself at the opening to-day and material gains ranging well over a point were scored.

London was a good buyer and many who were on the bear side of the market yesterday covered to-day.

Among the gains were Amalgamated Copper 1½, Utah Copper ½, Colorado Fuel and Iron 1, Lehigh Valley 1¼, Union Pacific 1¼, Atchison ¼, Baltimore and Ohio 1⅜, Great Northern preferred 1.

The tone was strong. Chesapeake and Ohio, which was keenly watched because of the mysterious pressure which has been exerted against it on the present movement, opened at 56, or 1⅜ over Tuesday's final. Chicago and Northwestern was up ½. Louisville and Nashville was one of the few stocks which did not respond to the sympathetic wave of strength, losing ½. Frisco second preferred lost ⅜.

At 10:30 Union Pacific had sold up to 141 for a net gain of 1½. Southern Pacific sold at 90⅝ for a gain of ½. Missouri Pacific, which yesterday sold down to the lowest level since the death of Jay Gould, opened ½ higher.

The curb was steady.

Americans and Canadian Pacific in London were firm.

The only important recession in the late forenoon was in Great Northern preferred, which reacted 1¼ to 117¾, with fractional losses in Steel, Copper and Lehigh Valley. Canadian advanced 1 point to 217¼. Union Pacific lost ⅛ since its opening. Pennsylvania and Missouri Pacific 1½ and Atlantic Coast Line gained 1 point. Steel unchanged. The tone in the last few minutes of the morning session was weak.

Call money loaning at 2½.

After a period of dullness the market again turned weak in the last hour and under assaults from the bears prices were forced away below the morning level. Canadian Pacific led in the slump, selling around 211¼ for a net loss of 5 points.

A battle raged around Steel with two big rival forces in the Street pitted against each other. Steel fluctuated between 51⅞ and 50¼ for a loss of about 1 point. Bear cliques in London and Berlin hammered the international issues, especially Canadian Pacific, in an evident attempt to weaken the whole list. Many orders, carrying the condition that they be placed in the market a few minutes before the close, were received during the early afternoon.

St. Paul broke through par for a loss of a point. There was a heavy selling of Reading, which sold 1¾ under the midday level. Union Pacific was off ⅜. Amalgamated Copper lost all its gain and droped ⅜ under last night's final. The tine was weak.

The market closed dull. Government bonds unchanged; other bonds steady.

Child Eats Core of Baseball and Dies

PHILADELPHIA, June 11.—Six-year-old Annie MacAntee, who lived near Shibe Park, is dead at her home from inflammation of the stomach from eating the rubber core of an American League baseball that had been knocked over the fence.

So many balls have been knocked over the fences recently that the children have grown tired of preserving them as trophies and the child cut it open and chewed the rubber that is placed around the cork-centered sphere.

POULTRY, PET AND LIVE STOCK

EDITED BY JUDGE F. J. MARSHALL

Pay More Attention To Mating Birds Of Health and Vigor

See That Breeding Stock of Both Parents Are Strong and Vigorous.

It is a mighty good time of the year to think and talk a little about our breeding stock. It is all mighty nice to fix a pen of breeders in the winter or early spring that are fancy in color and look trim and nice, without regard to the real strength as breeders which they may possess. When you thing about it, it is a good deal of a game of chance the way many poultry keepers do their mating. It is such a common thing to go ahead paying but little, if any, attention to health and vigor. Of course, we all try to have our breeders look healthy, but we do not go quite far enough and see that they are possessed with sufficient strength to impart good health to the youngsters. At this season or time of year, when we have a lot of young stock on hand, we can readily see, if we are at all observing, which pens, or for that matter which hens, are giving us the strong, vigorous chicks—the kind that get up and grow from start to finish—or the other kind that will not grow with any degree of satisfaction, if they live over the critical period of the first two weeks of their lives. Such things are the ones we do not want to overlook in the mating plans. Just to illustrate what we are trying to impress upon our readers, we so often hear the warning note of the breeder of experience against hatching late chicks. That is all right in a general way, because these late chicks are hatched from eggs laid by hens that are literally worn out by continued egg production, and breeding cockerels in these pens that are on the verge of collapse from service that has been more than they should be called upon to stand. Such a warning is all right for that kind of breeding, and such breeding is in the majority, too. We are experimenting in a small way and have been for years along all such lines, and we find that it takes a good, strong-bodied hen, carrying plenty of surplus fat, to be able to continue egg production that will give you chicks that can be hatched late in the season, live and grow.

At this writing we have a brood of ten chicks hatched from a two-year-old R. I. Red hen that is a strong, vigorous, great big fat hen. Her eggs are larger than the average; to her is mated a two-year-old cock equally vigorous. This hen is a great layer, having laid almost constantly since February. These ten chicks are about three weeks old and they are a marvel to look at. They are large and long in body, strong, healthy looking legs, broad in breast and back, with an eye like a great big bead. They show great vigor in every line of their makeup, and are at least one-fourth larger than the general run of chicks of that age. Then we have another brood that was hatched from young stock of a different variety that look like an entirely different proposition.

Four of them have died from sheer lack of vitality. They have always looked like they had more load than they had the strength to carry. They run about with their heads low and wing tips down almost trailing the ground. We may be able to raise the majority of those that are now living, but it will be a hard pull for them, and the growth that they will make will be more than half of that made by the old hen's chickens.

Right here is where we should stick a pin that we may profit by it when it comes time to do our mating next winter or spring.

We want to be able to put together such stock as will give us the very best of results. If we must use pullets for breeding, they should be of an early hatch and well developed. Do not feed them for very early fall egg production. Let them grow in every possible way that they may gain strength for the spring egg season, when you will want to use their eggs for hatching. If your pullets are not all strong and vigorous, cull them out, using the good ones for breeders and the culls for market eggs.

Mate with these best pullets a strong, vigorous and healthy cock two years old. Be sure that he is healthy and not too old. There is no question but what if we would take the trouble and go to the expense, if need be, to use nothing but hens and cocks that are two years old as breeders and keep it up for a few years we would have twice the vitality in our stock of chickens that we now have. We would hear so much less about chicks dying in the shell, white diarrhoea, general debility and all such ills that are now so much talked of. We must recognize the importance of the hen that lays the egg. It is equally important as the male that we all seem to take so much pride in. How many of us have prided ourselves in the grand cock or cockerel that heads the pen of perhaps a great variety of females, particularly in shape and type.

Let us try to insert a new rule that the hens must be as strong and vigorous as the cock and as uniform in their makeup as it is possible to get them. It is a good plan to mate a small yard of extra strong fowls for getting eggs for our own hatching, if for nothing else, marking them and keeping up the line of females from them to mate each year for this same purpose. Look over your this year prospect and see if you do not think you need it.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Railroad Extension On West Side of City

A., B. & A. to Use Terminal?—North Ave. at $500—Loan Deeds $100,000—Chamber's New Home.

Of considerable significance in real estate circles was the announcement of Tuesday that the Georgia Terminal Company would, in the near future, build a branch road connecting the A., B. & A. and the Southern at a point near Magnolia Street, inasmuch as $25,000 or more has been spent buying property for a right-of-way, and because the presence of the branch is expected to boost property values greatly. J. H. Ewing, of the J. R. Smith & J. H. Ewing real estate agency, has been buying parcels for several months, and now his work is practically complete, and the company is waiting for permission from the United States District Court to amend its charter. Much railroad development and many manufacturing establishments are now expected on the west side.

At a recent meeting the Georgia Terminal Company passed the following resolution, signed by E. T. Lamb, president:

"Resolved, That it is to the interest of the Georgia Terminal Company that it should build a branch road or an extension of its present railroad running from a point on its main line in the city of Atlanta, Ga., between Thurmond and Newton Streets, in a general southeasterly direction across Mangum Street, Newton Street, Foundry Street and Elliott Street, to a connection with the Southern Railway Company's track near Magnolia Street, and that the officers, agents and attorneys of this company be and they are hereby authorized to take all steps necessary for the purpose of building such branch or extension."

It has been rumored that this extension will enable the A., B. & A. to enter the Terminal Station, and that this road will eventually abandon the Union Depot.

North Avenue at $500 a Foot.

North Avenue, considered a good cross-town street for present and future business enterprises, got into the realty market again Wednesday and more sales are expected soon.

Frank M. Swift, of New York, bought from W. B. Matthews and E. G. Black, through the Porter & Swift real estate agency, the property formerly occupied by the Ivy Exchange of the Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Company, for a consideration said to have been about $500 a foot, or approximately $14,000. The lot is 28' by 128 feet, on the north side of the street, and is improved with the one-story brick building once known as the Ivy Exchange. Adjoining the property is one of the city fire engine houses, and near by is the former location of Washington Seminary. Several automobile shops are directly to the east.

$100,000 in Loan Deeds.

An interesting loan deed has gone to record and it indicates, by the way, that plenty of outside capital is at the disposal of Atlanta people to be loaned on local property. Forrest & George Adair have borrowed from the New York Life Insurance Company $65,000 on 55 Whitehall Street and $35,000 on one of the northern corners of Broad and Alabama Streets. The size of the latter lot is 33 by 100 feet and of the former 80 by 94 by 48 by 73.

New Home for Chamber.

In a few days the Chamber of Commerce is expected to apply for a building permit to remodel the old Y. M. C. A. building at the southeast corner of North Pryor Street and Auburn Avenue, at a cost of $125,000 to $150,000. Tenants have been given notice to get out by July 1, and work will start about then.

Bank Deposits Hold Firm.

Although there is supposed to be less local money than for some time, bank deposits are practically what they were two months ago. Figures of six national banks in Atlanta on June 4 show a total of $26,500,543, while on April 4 the figures were $26,561,031. This condition is taken to indicate a great deal of confidence among depositors. Surplus shows a satisfactory increase, and loans were kept down to normal. Cash on hand in the banks was but a trifle less on June 4 than on April 4.

Inasmuch as the condition of the banks has a direct bearing on real estate, the report is particularly interesting.

Working for Electric Line.

The proposal to extend from Anderson, S. C., to Atlanta the electric railroad of James B. Duke, the tobacco king, has awakened a generous response in Athens, Clarke County, through which the line would pass. Leading Athens citizens have indorsed the project and will lend their financial as well as their moral support. Other towns along the right-of-way are expected to take similar action, and the chance of a successful consummation is considered unusually good. It has been estimated that property values along the route would be increased 50 per cent.

Three Ships at a Time As An Example

They Would No More Think of Dilly-Dallying With Their Navy in Great Britain Than A MERCHANT WOULD THINK OF LETTING HIS INSURANCE LAPSE ON A GREAT STORE Filled With Millions of Dollars' Worth of Merchandise.

It did not require any extra session of Parliament to elicit from the British First Lord of the Admiralty the prompt announcement that three battleships that were to have been laid down next March for the British Navy will, instead, be laid down at once on account of the rejection by the Canadian Senate of the naval bill.

The United Kingdom had hoped that Canada would relieve it of at least a small part of the vast expense of naval construction. But, as that is not yet to be, the Admiralty goes at it thoroughly and without a day's loss of time.

Whether Great Britain has the merchandise, the broad, world-wide trade, because she has the battleships, the insurance fully paid up, it would be hard to determine. But this much is certain: She DID have the sea power before she had the trade.

Three new battleships, mark you, not one! There is economy and speed of construction in three. Every smallest part is made in triple, and the three can be ready almost as soon as one.

THAT IS WHAT JAPAN IS DOING. FOUR ships of a class are being built for her simultaneously in English yards, THREE more in her home yards. One of the four is already afloat in English waters.

We lag behind with ONE laid down this year! There is gathering evidence that Congress has had its lesson and is now willing to vote for two more this year. Why not THREE? That is the economical and up-to-date way of building navies. For a nation that does things on such a wholesale scale as the United States, WHY SINGLE OUT THE NAVY, OF ALL THINGS, AND HANDLE THAT ON A BANANA-STAND SCALE?

The other day there was printed a remarkable story from a very authoritative source of the frank after-dinner talk of the predecessor of the present Japanese Ambassador to the United States.

He was quoted as confessing that what the Japanese would have to fear, if anything, in a war with this country, would be, not OUR navy, nor OUR army, nor anything WE could do, but RUSSIA. No doubt he was polite. No doubt he gilded the humiliating truth he was honest enough to state. But did he tell ALL the truth? Supposing Japan had previously made its terms with Russia! Or supposing that the Japanese mind should change!

The moral is startlingly plain. Let this newspaper again repeat the truth that REAL PATRIOTISM IS EVEN MORE NECESSARY IN TIME OF PEACE THAN IN TIME OF WAR.

A Terrapin Patch With Every Lot

Wrought to a high pitch of indignation by the high cost of terrapin, the Bureau of Fisheries has determined to place these delicate little creatures within the reach of all. A brochure on the rearing and care of terrapin will soon be obtainable by all who have "pulls" with Congressmen, and thereafter terrapin farms will spring up like dandelion patches in every quarter of the land. No longer the market man will coldly inform the timid housewife that diamond backs are two dollars and fifty cents each, for they will be shovelled into bins like coal by the newly instructed farmers, and if they bring ten cents a dozen it will only be on a strong market.

This, of course, will lower the public veneration for the terrapin and lose him his high place on the banquet menu, but it will bring him once more into the lowly cottage of the tired business man and supply an agreeable change in his daily diet of roast beef medium.

The Bureau of Fisheries is to be congratulated. Having left its strictly legitimate domain to deal with these amphibians, which are only constructive fish at best, perhaps it can find a way to classify steers and sheep as fish, and by teaching how they may be cheaply brought to maturity bring about real downward revision of the butchers' schedules.

Tom Casey

By WILLIAM F. KIRK

I WAS walking in a pasture not so very long ago,
When I came upon a brooklet and I stopped to watch its flow;
A silvery little brooklet, winding in and twisting out
Through growing beds of watercress that sheltered tiny trout.
The robins with their singing and the brooklet purling by
Made a sort of mystic music, half a laugh and half a sigh.
Then I swallowed something aching and brushed a tear away,
For I seemed to hear the music poor Tom Casey used to play.

For an instant I could see him in a sort of misty dream
As he sat at his piano on a bank across the stream;
But his face was even whiter than the face we used to know
And his great dark eyes were brighter than the eyes that used to glow.
When I heard the rippling tinkle I could close my eyes and see
All the boys that Casey played for ere his spirit floated free.
Then I saw the pasture only, for the vision died away,
Just as Casey faded from us with the things he used to play.

Flatter Your Own Folks

Praise Is the Lever by Which Each of Us Can Move Our Little World, She Declares.

By DOROTHY DIX.

CONSIDERING that vanity is the most prominent and universal human attribute, and that we are all brother and sister to the donkey who can be cajoled along anywhere, but can not be driven a step, isn't it queer that we have never found out how much more efficacious a weapon praise is than blame?

Personally, we all know in our secret souls that we are easy marks in the hands of the flatterer, and that we may be twisted around the finger of the jollier, and yet we are so stupid that we never think of applying to those about us the means by which we are ourselves so easily worked. It's the greased hinge that swings to our lightest touch, not the rusty one that we batter at with a sledgehammer.

Poor Johnnie.

Of course, we should put in our best effort, and time, and thought in correcting our faults and strengthening our weak performances. As a matter of fact, we do just the opposite. It's our virtues that we magnify, and the things that we do well, and that we know we are going to be praised for, that we strive to do better and better.

It's the people who give us the glad hand that influence us, not those who use a club on us, and the surest way to develop the characteristic you want in anyone about you is to keep a rosy spotlight turned upon it.

For instance!

Every mother is anxious for her children to be courteous, and to have good manners. In order to achieve this the average mother is just one incarnate "don't." It's Johnnie, don't come in the room with your hat on; Johnnie, don't sit still in your chair while a lady stands; Johnnie, don't do this; Johnnie, don't do that, and Johnnie gets his back up, and says to himself that he isn't going to be bothered with all that foolish nonsense and he's going to do exactly as he pleases.

I know one mother with two boys who, observing the futility of blaming children for their bad manners, decided to try what praising them for their good manners would do. She would remark where her Johnnie could hear it upon his exquisite courtesy to women, and thereupon Johnnie would break his neck to open doors, and pick up handkerchiefs for ladies, and you couldn't have kept him in his seat on the trolley while a woman stood if you had nailed him to it. Johnnie's mother also casually remarked to him how gratifying it was to her that he had such good table manners, and from there on Johnnie ceased to be a "spotter" and became a connoisseur among the which-is-which of the forks and spoons on the dinner table.

A Bad Temper.

I knew a little girl who had a terrific temper. Her mother tried in every way to teach her to control it. She pointed out to Sallie how unlovely and unattractive a shrewish woman was, and how everybody would hate her and avoid her if she gave way to tantrums. All in vain. Sally was insensible to that view of the subject.

Finally one day her mother said to her, "You have a brilliant mind, and a wonderfully strong will. I wonder that any one with your intelligence and your determination of character should be dominated by a weakness." That appealed to Sally's vanity, and just to show that she was stronger than her temper she conquered it so that to-day she has a reputation for amiability.

And if you can do more with soft words than with hard ones with children, how very, very more efficacious in flattery than knocks in the family circle! Believe me, it is soft soap that makes the domestic machinery revolve without a hitch.

Who is the woman who spends hours and days joyously over the kitchen stove, concocting toothsome dishes for her lord and master? Is it the wife of the man who is always batting her because she can't make bread like mother used to make? Nay, verily. The woman who knows that her best culinary efforts are going to be growled over, anyway, stops on the way home from her bridge whist, and buys an unsavory mess at the delicatessen store, which she sets before the grouch she is tied to.

It is the wise husband who praises his wife's handiwork as he eats who fares sumptuously every day, for there's some encouragement to a woman to make a burnt offering of herself if she is going to receive the proper appreciation for it. But nobody wants to be an unsung martyr.

The Secret.

Who is the woman who pares, and scrimps, and economizes, and makes over her old clothes and retrims her hats? Is it the wife whose husband is always beratting her for her extravagance? Not much. She feels that inasmuch as she is going to be blamed anyway, she had as well have good clothes by way of consolation. The woman who squeezes a nickel until the buffalo on it howls with pain is the one whose husband is always boasting that she is such a financier that if she had her due she would be Secretary of the Treasury.

Also, you may observe, that the husbands who are nailed to their own firesides are the men whose wives are always telling about how entertaining John is, and how big and strong and handsome and wise he is. Keeping flattery on tap at home is like keeping Scotch on the sideboard. A man doesn't have to run around the corner to get it. Also it's generally a better brand and not so expensive.

The moral of all of which is that praise is the lever by which each of us can move our little world. And the more fools we, that we haven't sense enough to use it oftener.

The Delhi Magazine

By REV. THOMAS B. GREGORY.

THE defense and explosion of the great magazine at Delhi 56 years ago—May 13, 1857—deserves to rank along with the great achievements of history, not excepting even Leonidas at Thermopylae or the immortal three who held the bridge across the Tiber against Lars Porsena.

The magazine was a huge building packed with arms and ammunition, and was in charge of Lieutenant Willoughby and eight subordinates. It was nine men against a great city. Knowing that they could not hold their ground against such odds, a fuse was run into the magazine and at its outer end a man was stationed with portfire in hand.

Presently came a summons to surrender, which was, of course, refused, and then on came the swarms of Sepoys, Willoughby's eight guns the meanwhile (each worked by a single man), pouring death into them. But on came the swaying mass of Sepoys; a rain of death falls upon the little band from the walls and in another moment will come the rush of bayonet. Willoughby raises his hand, Scully applies the portfire to the fuse and the mighty magazine goes up in one huge thunderclap! The whole city seems to shake with the concussion, and a great pillar of smoke rises in the sky. "It is the signal to heaven and earth of how the nine Britons who kept the great magazine had fulfilled their trust."

Of the gallant nine, Scully, who fired the fuse, and four others, vanished along with hundreds of the mutineers, but strange to say, Willoughby and three others escaped death.

FINANCIERS' WOES ARE NOT FELT HERE

Business in Atlanta and the South is good, according to Atlanta business men. In some cases it is above last year's level

There is some stringency of money, but well-established business houses, carrying on conservative operations, are getting their usual accommodations from the banks. The country banks in Atlanta territory have been supplied to the limits of their needs by their city agents.

The cotton crop promises well, and it will be made cheaper than any previous Georgia crop. A good crop means remarkable prosperity this fall.

These are the conclusions of Atlanta bankers, who, unwilling that the public should accept Wall Street's view of the situation as final, express their opinion of local conditions.

Colonel Lowry Optimistic.

"Conditions in the South are all right. Business is good, and the demand for money is no greater than it usually is at this season of the year. From, say October, I look for great prosperity," says Colonel Robert J. Lowry, president of the Lowry National Bank.

"The information which reaches us is that the corp is in excellent shape. I talked with one well-informed man yesterday from a section in Georgia which grows a great deal of cotton, and he says he never saw a better crop, since the late rains.

"There is some nervousness, of course, with the tariff and the money reform questions unsettled. I am, as you know, a protectionist. I suppose, though, there are some things which need regulating. Some modification no doubt is desirable. The manufacturers are prepared to meet reductions to some extent.

"I believe it is more important to have the matter cleared up than it is to argue over the exact amount of the changes. It is the unrest, the uncertainty, which causes the nervousness. When the thing is determined one way or another, trade can proceed. Just now textile mills, for instance, can not make trades, because they do not know just what the future basis will be.

Urges Moderate Revision.

"Things are going to turn out all right. As I said, although I am and always have been a protectionist, I believe we could stand a moderate revision downward of the tariff. I believe in the income tax, too. I would make no exceptions, though. To my mind, the man who makes $100 ought to be willing to give his dollar to the Government, and the man who makes $100,000 ought to be willing to give his $1,000 for the benefits of the Government which he enjoys.

"I have known President Wilson since he was a young lawyer in Atlanta. He is a splendid American. I want to see him upheld.

"Those fellows in New York are a little too blue, I think. We of the South have no cause to fret. No man who is doing a conservative business is going ot be hurt in the least."

Frank Hawkins, president of the Third National Bank, thinks the present conditions are good for the future welfare of the South.

Sees Too Much Trading.

"We have been trading too much, in my opinion," says Mr. Hawkins. "Some little tightness of money is not

Weather Man Says Cold Snap Is Over; Low Record Is 49

After smashing all low records for June 11 in Atlanta with a minimum temperature of 49 degrees Wednesday morning, the mercury left off its frenzied acrobatics and started on a slow and dignified climb to more sane and seasonable levels.

Winter is over on the word of Weather Forecaster VonHerrmann. He promised the mercury would continue its ascent through Wednesday, and Thursday would be still warmer.

The lowest temperature on June 11 of any previous year was in 1885 when the mercury dropped to 57 degrees. Tuesday's high temperature was 56 degrees, the lowest maximum June 10 temperature recorded in Atlanta. June 10, 1891, recorded the lowest maximum temperature previously, 72 degrees.

The temperature Wednesday had reached 56 degrees by 10 o'clock and by noon was in the 60's. The forecast for Thursday is fair with slowly rising temperature.

Daughter of Banker Takes Dare; Elopes

TAMPA, June 11.—Miss Ruth Trice, daughter of John Trice, president of the Citizens' Bank and Trust Company and one of the wealthiest men in South Florida, eloped with George Booker, of the Sims Lumber Company, to-day. Rev. W. W. Dehart married them at the rectory.

The couple attended the wedding of Miss Helen Gunn and Paul Cameron Lindley, of Greensboro, Ga., last night and were joked by their friends about getting married. They took the dare.

Crematory Contract Up Before Council

The crematory contract between the Destructor Company of New York and the City of Atlanta was taken to the office of the City Clerk Wednesday for submission to Council in the afternoon. Council is expected to ratify the contract forthwith.

The first draft of the contract was unsatisfactory to Mayor Woodward because it was dependent in part, he thought, upon the original agreement, nullified by the Supreme Court.

The second contract, it is believed, will receive the Mayor's approval.

Deaf Mute Apologizes For Mistreating Wife

MACON, June 11.—A. H. Weininger, deaf-mute, who created a disturbance at his home on Forsyth Street Sunday morning because his wife was slow in responding to his knock on their room door, upon his return from work, has made an apology through the newspapers for the way he treated her.

He says if he had been sober at the time he would not have accused his wife of having someone in the room with her, and that as soon as he regained his proper senses he realized his mistake.

GRAND VIZIER OF TURKEY SLAIN IN AUTO

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, June 11.—Mahmud Shevket Pasha, Grand Vizier of Turkey, and his military aide were shot to death to-day by two assassins in the streets of Constantinople. News of the double assassination was first received here in private dispatches. Later it was officially confirmed.

Mahmud Pasha and his aide were automobiling to the Sublime Porte when the murderers, who stood near the entrance of the building, fired upon the motor car with deadly aim.

Mahmud Shevket Pasha, who came into power in February, has been exercising the prerogatives of military dictator. He was one of the chief leaders of the Young Turk party, and the closet adviser of Enver Bey, the commander-in-chief of the Turkish army.

The Grand Vizier was undoubtedly slain in revenge for the murder of Nazim Pasha, War Minister and commander-in-chief of the Ottoman army, who was shot down by Enver Bey last winter.

Climax in Balkan Crisis in 48 Hours

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

VIENNA, June 11.—A climax in the dispute between Servia and Greece and Bulgaria is expected within 48 hours. Czar Nicholas has given a conditional offer to arbitrate the quarrel between Servia and Bulgaria, but he is believed to be too late. Russia is charged with secretly encouraging Servia.

Although no official statement has been given out, it may be taken as a fact that Governor John M. Slaton will retain all of Governor Brown's immediate official family, with one exception.

Colonel Jesse Perry will continue as private secretary and Hardy Ulm as executive secretary. Miss Alma Norris, of Marietta, will continue as official stenographer.

Dr. I. S. Hopkins, of Atlanta, will replace W. R. Power, of Marietta, as warrant and requisition clerk.

'Fleet Can Use Canal By Oct. 1'-Goethals

NEW YORK, June 11.—"If the United States were confronted with war in the Pacific we could float the Atlantic fleet across the Isthmus of Panama by October," declared Colonel George Goethals on his arrival from the Canal Zone.

Colonel Goethals has been summoned to Washington to confer with the Secretary of War. The work on the fortifications is proceeding rapidly; it is on that subject that he will confer with Secretary Garrison.

Mississippi to Raise Million for Levees

JACKSON, MISS., June 11.—The Mississippi Legislature convened in extra session yesterday to enact legislation enabling the Mississippi levee board to float bonds for improvement work made necessary by overflows.

The levee board asked for authority to float a $2,000,000 bond issue and to increase the cotton and ad valorem taxes, but a compromise was accepted reducing the bond issue to $1,000,000 and eliminating the tax increases

G. M. NAPIER ANALYZES PHAGAN CASE

In a Brilliant Letter He Arrays Facts as They Affect Leo M. Frank and Conley.

The Georgian publishes the following letter written by George M. Napier, the well-known lawyer, on the Phagan case, as it gives for the first time a legal analysis of the case for and against Frank:

To the Editor of The Georgian:

This section of our country has held very few criminal cases so profoundly interesting as the Phagan case. Indeed, it is questionable whether the entire South has ever had enacted within it a crime which has created such intense and widespread interest.

Personally, I have no concern in the case, save as a citizen of the State, desiring that the guilty party or parties may receive condign punishment.

Profoundly Interested.

As a lawyer, being interested more intimately perhaps than those not of that profession, certain aspects of the case—the procedure taken in the efforts of those immediately charged with ferreting out the facts of the crime, and the varied and swiftly changing developments in connection with it—I find these to be of profound interest.

One thing has been made evident: The people generally are disposed to ascribe guilt to one who has the opportunity to commit crime. This was shown by the widely-accepted conclusion that Leo Frank and Newt Lee, colored, were guilty of the murder of the Phagan girl, as soon as it became known that they had been at the pencil factory on the day of the homicide.

This conclusion was fixed in the minds of many by reason of the evident inclination of the detectives to believe Frank guilty. And there is little doubt that if the two men had been imprisoned in an unprotected town jail they would have been lynched while suspicion and excitement were at their height.

Praises Newspaper.

This mental state of the community did not last, however. The remarkable success of the local press in obtaining and publishing every detail of the evidence of the detectives enabled the reading public to weigh the testimony by piecemeal. It is safe to say that there lately have been many accessions to those who from the first hesitated to accept the theory of the guilt of Frank, or of the night watchman who found the body, upon the sole basis of their opportunity to commit the crime, and with all the circumstances going to negative motive to kill the young girl, especially on the part of the white man.

The zeal of the secret service men in trailing to cover criminals who effect getaways is to be commended, but the work of building a successful prosecution upon a mere case of suspicion will, in many instances, fail.

The testimony of Frank before the Coroner's jury, in which he gave, with conspicuous consistency and openness, an account of his actions and whereabouts on the day of the killing, created a favorable impression on the public mind.

Strengthened by Witnesses.

This was strengthened by the corroboration of his statements as to the time of his movements by impartial witnesses of unquestioned veracity.

The indictment of Frank by the Grand Jury seems to have been seized upon as the psychological opportunity for the negro Conley to admit that he wrote the notes found by the dead girl's body, and the comparison of his handwriting with that of the notes proves that fact beyond peradventure. But the network of lies in which Conley has become enmeshed seems not to have given the forces conducting

Miss Wilson Gives Stinging Rebuke to Street Car Boors

WASHINGTON, June 11.—Miss Eleanor Wilson gave a lesson in street car politeness to-day to three Washington men when she gave up her seat to an old womar.

Miss Wilson, accompanied by Dr. Cary Grayson, White House aide, boarded the car at Connecticut and Florida Avenues. Two old women in shabby black got on at the next corner. Dr. Grayson immediately yielded his seat, but three other men were not as gallant. Miss Wilson, with an indignant look at the men, arose and pilotted the other old woman to her seat, while she swung on a strap the remainder of the way to the White House.

Boom Mrs. Burleson For Next D.A.R. Head

WASHINGTON, June 11.—It is known to-day on good authority that members of the minority party of the D. A. R., which was so overwhelmingly defeated in the election of Mrs. William Cummins Story, of New York, as President General, are planning to oppose the re-election of Mrs. Story two years hence, by making Mrs. A. S. Burleson, wife of the Postmaster-General, a candidate for President-General.

The campaign to elect Mrs. Burleson has already begun.

Dr. Horace Grant said Wednesday he was ready to go before the Grand Jury and tell all he knew about the Felder-Lanford near-fight in the court house.

Half Ton Bad Meat 'Oiled' in Columbus

COLUMBUS, Ga., June 11.—A thousand pounds of meat in local markets has been condemned by pure food inspectors. They say the meat did not measure up to standard of purity set by State law.

The city's slaughter house was found to be in good condition. The inspectors poured kerosene oil on the meat they had condemned to keep the butchers from disposing of it.

Maid of Honor to Queen a 'Militant'

LONDON, June 11.—The Honorable Mabel Gye, one of Queen Mary's maids of honor and a keen sympathizer with the militant suffragettes, has presented a petition to the Queen purporting to represent the views of eight other ladies in the royal household, praying her majesty to cancel the rule recently made by the Queen that no member of her household must belong to the Women's Social and Political Union, the militant suffragette organization.

The Queen, who is strongly opposed to the militants, has sent no reply to the petition, and Miss Gye has offered to resign her position in the royal household, but her resignation has not yet been accepted.

Dr. Blue Says Love Will Control Eugenics

WASHINGTON, June 11.—Even in eugenic marriages love will be the principal factor, according to Surgeon General Rupert Blue. He feels that marriages with both love and health insured will be better for the race than those involving love without health.

A national society of eugenics will be organized here this week, and one of its tenets will be for laws in every State to force the presentation of health certificates before marriage licenses are signed.

'Move-the-Capital' Plan Rouses Macon

MACON, June 11.—The "move-the-capital" movement was renewed here last night at a special meeting of the Chamber of Commerce, when a working committee, headed by C. R. Pendleton, was appointed. The Chamber of Commerce appropriated $500, and a similar sum is promised by the city, to defray the initial expenses of the committee. Other contributions will be solicited among the citizens.

Efforts will be directed toward securing a vote in the Legislature on the bill to submit the proposition to the people.

PHAGAN CASE IS ANALYZED BY NAPIER

Letter by Lawyer Gives Legal Facts as They Concern Leo M. Frank and Conley.

the prosecution any serious impression as to his own guilt as the actual murderer of Mary Phagan.

Two things, it seems to me, would be sufficient to clear Frank of the crime, in the absence of any proved motive to commit it. The first is the work done by him on his books at the pencil factory on the afternoon of the killing and subsequent to the time which is assigned by common consent for the occurrence of the deed.

How Could He Have Done Work?

That a man could go to the delicate and intricate task of spreading upon account books the record and figures of a week's transactions of a factory employing a large number of hands, and involving numerous financial dealings, and requiring four or more hours of steady work; and that he could do this with his usual accuracy and celerity staggers belief.

The other fact is a piece of testimony by the negro Conley himself. He has made the statement that when he was assisting Frank in the disposal of the dead girl's body he noticed the time clock in the factory and saw that it lacked four minutes of 1 o'clock. At that moment, he says, Miss Corinthia Hall and Mrs. Emma Clark Freeman, two employees, came into the factory and Frank told him to hide in a cupboard in the office.

But Miss Hall and Mrs. Freeman testified that they were at the factory one hour and eleven minutes earlier than that, and that they left the factory at 11:45 and did not return that day. The conversation they had with Mr. Frank is the same that the negro says he heard.

Discrepancy in Time.

The murdered girl reached the city by street car at 12:04. This has been definitely proved. She reached the factory and received her pay envelope at 12:10 or 12:15, so far as is known. Thus the negro adds this to his many other admitted lies—and if the girl was dead at the time he heard Frank talking to Miss Hall and Mrs. Freeman, she was murdered before she left her home.

To one who is sufficiently interested to look over the scene of the crime several things worth noting will be revealed. Coming down from the office in the pencil factory, a young girl, unprotected, might well glance with nervous dread at the pile of large boxes under the stairway near the elevator shaft. In daytime the corner under the staircase is in semi-darkness. It is an ideal place for a would-be criminal to screen himself.

If the girl left the factory after receiving her pay and came down the stairs, this dark corner was behind her as she walked down the steps. A woman who testified, but whose name I do not now recall, saw a negro lurking in this corner. Conley has admitted that he sat for some time near the elevator.

Negro Had Opportunity.

He had the opportunity to spring upon the poor girl as a spider would upon a fly. If robbery was his motive, an assault with a stick might have felled her. She could have been thrown down the elevator shaft or through the opening near the elevator, which has a ladder under it leading down to the dirt floor of the basement.

The place on the second floor where Conley says he picked up the body of the girl shows no trace of blood. Every circumstance indicates that she received the blow on her head before she died—and he says she was dead when he saw her there—so if she bled anywhere the strong probability is that the bloodstains would have been found where she had been picked up.

Even the mystifying fact that the staple of the rear door, leading out of the basement to the street, had been pulled from the inside could be easily explained on the theory that the criminal took the precaution to pull that staple so as to be able to run down the ladder and make his exit safely by the back street in the event any outcry was made by his victim.

Much emphasis is placed upon the dramatic manner with which Conley re-enacted the supposed work of carrying the body from the second floor to the basement that fatal day.

Might Not He Swear Falsely?

Does it tax our credulity greatly to believe that a cunning negro, who has been proved to have had unobstructed opportunity to commit the crime, and who admits having secreted the body, is capable of swearing that another man was with him when the crime was committed—a man behind whom he can hide from the law?

Would a drinking, irresponsible, perhaps criminal man of a low order of life be incapable of swearing away the life of any man if by so doing he could save himself from the gallows?

What is called the "humanity of the law" invests every person charged with crime with the presumption of innocence until his guilt has been proved, and proved to the extent of being irreconcilable with every hypothesis of his innocence. Guilt must be established beyond a reasonable doubt.

And the reasonableness of a doubt on the minds of the jury trying a given case might depend largely upon the state of the public mind regarding that case.

For this reason, if for no other, the people in a community where a crime has been committed should be reluctant to reach a conclusion of the guilt of any one, where only circumstantial evidence is adducible.

It would be a remarkable termination of the Phagan case, which is not now so mysterious as it once seemed, if Frank, the first man suspected by the detectives, should be acquitted, and his accuser, the negro Conley, should be brought to trial and convicted.

But stranger things have happened.

And if the evidence against Conley is as strong as it now seems assured it will be, will not the prosecution be greatly handicapped in the necessity of prosecuting Conley by reason of having put forth such strenuous and hopeful efforts to convict Leo Frank?

How Rewards Would Be Shared.

Rich rewards will recompense the discovery of evidence to convict the slayer in this case. If Frank should be found guilty, the division of the large sums offered for evidence to convict will go to certain secret service men who first called attention to the opportunity of Frank to commit the crime, and who have directed their energies in the investigation of it on the theory of his guilt.

If Conley should be proved guilty, one of the foremen of the factory who saw the negro washing a shirt under suspicious circumstances, and who directed his arrest, will likely get the coin. But with the public it is not a question of rewards to be distributed; but it is the vital, the supreme question, who is the real murderer?

The law, if rightly followed, is a noble instrument of protection to society, including the ignorant, the weak, and those of little understanding. It points the finger of suspicion at no man, but demands evidence before guilt can be determined—either the clear and unmistakable proof of eyewitnesses, or an array of circumstances which excludes every reasonable hypothesis of innocence.

Lauds Frank's Character.

In determining motive to commit crime, we have reason to regard the character and reputation of the individual. In the case under consideration, the man who protests his entire innocence and ignorance of the crime, but who now stands indicted as a criminal, has been for six years an exemplary citizen of this community, and the trusted manager of an important manufacturing enterprise.

He has sustained well the confidence reposed in him. A leader in the community life of his race, he has been highly honored for one of his years. The attachment of his friends to him in the weeks of his imprisonment has been rarely significant of an unshaken confidence in his complete innocence.

The high character of a large majority of his friends, who are men incapable of the desire to shield the perpetrator of so heinous a crime, removes the suggestion of a clannish defense of racial bias.

Is not the case against Leo Frank so far presented against him palpably weak? And does not the far greater weight of evidence now point unmistakably to the negro Conley as the sole perpetrator of the crime?

GEORGE M. NAPIER.

Lanford Lauds Sleuths' Work in Phagan Mystery.

The extra labor falling on the detective department because of the Phagan mystery received special reference in the monthly report of Chief of Detectives Lanford, sent to Chief of Police Beavers for submission to the Police Commission. Chief Lanford also commends several detectives for their untiring work on the case. He said:

"It has been a very hard and laborious month on account of the Phagan case, and I wish to state that the men have been very vigilant and untiring in their efforts to run down this case. I wish especially to commend Officers Starnes and Campbell for their untiring, faithful and able work. I feel that the public will feel thoroughly satisfied with the results when wound up.

"I wish to thank each and every man, and especially yourself, for the services and valuable assistance rendered my department during the month."

With the remark that she had been away on business of her own as the only explanation of her mysterious disappearance of two days, Minola McKnight, negro cook at the Selig residence, returned to her work Monday. To every inquiry she replied:

"Tse jus' been away on some business of my own," and with this meager enlightenment Mrs. Frank and other members of the household were forced to be content. The negro woman was as positive on her return as she was before she mysteriously dropped out of sight for 48 hours that she had told the detectives nothing of the nature of that contained in the document purporting to be her affidavit.

Attempt to Remove Jim Conley Reported.

There were unconfirmed reports Wednesday that an effort would be made to have Jim Conley, the negro sweeper who made three conflicting affidavits accusing Leo M. Frank of the murder of Mary Phagan, removed from the police station to the county jail.

Solicitor Hugh M. Dorsey held a hurried conference with Superior Court Judge Roan and the negro's attorney, W. M. Smith, but would tell nothing about the conference.

Just what was to be gained by the transfer was not plain unless it was to get the negro out of the reach of persons who may be interested in drilling him in his story. The police consistently have denied that Conley was drilled in his narrative.

The reports were evidently the result of the announcement made Tuesday by Luther Z. Rosser, who charged that the police had made no real effort to get the entire truth from the negro. He pointed out that after the negro had made two conflicting affidavits the police announced themselves satisfied with the third, which was just as patently unsatisfactory in the things it left unexplained.

Slain Girl's Parents Subpenaed by Dorsey.

Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Coleman, parents of Mary Phagan, were subpenaed by Solicitor Dorsey Wednesday and appeared at the court house shortly after noon. The solicitor would not say for what purpose they had been summoned. It was, however, expected that they would be called before the trial of Frank.

Quiz Militants for Secret War Chest

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, June 11.—High interest continues to be shown in the trial of the six suffragette leaders and their male adherent, E. A. Clayton, chemist, alleged to have mixed explosives for the militants. A number of women tried to make a demonstration outside of Old Bailey Court by crying, "God bless the memory of Emily Davison."

Counsel for the Government made searching inquiries to learn if the union has any secret war chest. Recently it was reported that the organization is practically bankrupt.

Reporter Attacked By Alleged Gambler

AUGUSTA, June 11.—Jim Randall, a barber and former policeman, charged with gambling, is now charged also with assault and battery because he attacked M. J. Mabry, a newspaper reporter, in the City Court room.

Mabry accompanied the police on a gambling raid in which Randall, seven other white men and twenty negroes were arrested. The attack on Mabry grew out of this raid.

DAUGHTER HEAD OF PAINTER COMPANY

JACKSONVILLE, June 11.—Miss Olde Painter, daughter of the late E. O. Painter, was elected president of the E. O. Painter Fertilizer Company at a meeting of the stockholders held last night. At the same time it was decided to increase the capital stock of the company from $250,000 to $500,000, with the privilege of increasing the liabilities to an equal amount.

Reports submitted at the meeting declared the condition of the business of the company to be flourishing. A 10 per cent annual dividend was declared.

Miss Painter announced, after the meeting, that the business of the company would be conducted upon the same plans as heretofore under the presidency of her father, who was drowned in the St. Johns River May 22, the cause of which is still a mystery.

Trained for Place.

No one is better able to carry on the work of the dead man than Miss Painter. Since finishing school she has occupied a place in her father's office. Having no son on whom to depend, he trained his daughter to take his place. She is familiar with every detail of the business, both administrative and manufacturing. She has spent much of her time at the fertilizer plant, directing affairs for her father.

Another reason why the daughter is the logical person for president of the company is that she controls the major portion of the stock. Her father held $190,000 of the outstanding $250,000 issue. Under his will all of this, except $26,000 distributed in special bequests, goes equally to Miss Painter and her mother, Mrs. Martha Painter. The daughter retains the exclusive voting power of the $26,000, the beneficiaries to receive only the income therefrom. This $26,000 will eventually revert to Miss Painter or her heirs. She also represents her mother in the estate.

Painter Planned Increase.

The action of the stockholders in doubling the capital stock is simply carrying out the plans made by Painter. He had worked out the details whereby small blocks of the stock would be sold to planters in Florida and South Georgia, who in turn would buy their fertilizer from the Painter company, thus increasing the volume of business done and give the planter-stockholders small rebates in the form of dividends.

And at the same time Painter saw how he could add to his own holdings by declaring a stock dividend, giving the old stockholders proportionate shares of the new issue. Painter, of course, planned to secure enough of the new stock to still give him a majority of the combined issue and retain full control of the business. Now the widow and daughter will come in on that distribution, making the daughter probably the only young woman in the South as the head and absolute dictator of a half-million-dollar corporation, doing an annual business said to exceed $750,000.

Since the death of Painter, State Senator J. B. Conrad, of Glenwood, has been nominally acting president of the company, but he spent two weeks of the time at Tallahassee attending the final days' sessions of the Florida Legislature, leaving the Painter business actually in the hands of Miss Painter, D. A. Morrison, Jr., secretary of the company, and G. C. Hamlin, general counsel.

Macon Man Head of Georgia Gridironers

ATHENS, June 11.—At the annual closing banquet of the year the Gridiron Club of the University of Georgia elected ten new members for the coming year. A. O. Sparks, of Macon, heads the organization for 1914. The newly elected members are George Harrison, Atlanta; George Barrett, Augusta; John D. Wade, Montezuma; Sam Cann, Savannah; Rucker Ginn, Royston; Timon Bowden, McDonough; Fred Jordan, Monticello; Bob McWhorter, Athens; Aaron Bernd, Macon, and H. D. Russell, McDonough.

Relative Going Home To Plan Diaz's Return

PARIS, June 11.—A brother-in-law of ex-President Diaz started for Mexico to-day to discuss with the government there the question of the return of the former dictator.

General Diaz, replying to a delegation of Mexican friends who had come to request him to return to Mexico to assist by his counsel in the restoration of tranquility to that country, said:

"I should be pleased to return to reside in my country, but I am determined not to participate in its politics."

TOWN SWEPT BY FIRE.

JOHNSTOWN, PA., June 11.—The business section of Cassandra, a small town 15 miles from here, was wiped out by fire to-day. The loss was estimated at $150,000.

BANKERS HERE PREDICT BIG BUSINESS

a bad thing under such conditions. It makes for conservatism and economy.

"One good effect already is seen. This will be the cheapest produced cotton crop Georgia has grown in many a year. Nothing could be more healthy than this economy by the country bank and by the farmer.

"By the way, the crop looks good. It is perfectly clean and, while not large, is healthy and properly cultivated.

"Underlying conditions in the South are sound. Business holds up well. The New Yorkers who are emitting gloom are extremists. No man, no matter how cheerful he is, can remain long in the atmosphere of Wall Street, with stocks where they are now, and keep free from the blue tinge. But this is not a community interested in stocks and bonds. Let the New York man come here for ten days and he will begin to look more cheerful at once.

Looks for Good Times.

"We need a good crop. It looks as if we are about to get it. When it is in I look for excellent times."

Captain James W. English, president of the Fourth National Bank, is most optimistic.

"We have not refused a legitimate demand for money this year. We have not turned a customer down. We have taken care of the country banks up to the limit of their demands," he says.

"Manufacturers, jobbers and retailers in Atlanta who are our customers are doing a good business, as we can tell from their accounts. We hear no complaint from them.

"There is considerable building going on in the city, one of the best indications of business conditions.

"The volume of loans varies very little from last year's figures. There has been no unusual demand for money.

"This is not a time for undertaking great expansion. We have found that business men also take this view of the matter. We have not been called upon to check overambitious tendencies save in one or two cases.

"Country banks have not borrowed heavily. It has been their policy to enforce moderate expenditures among their customers. This will be reflected in great prosperity when the present excellent crop prospect is fulfilled.

Hysteria in New York.

"If a man would set off a cannon cracker in a New York bank nowadays, the officers would seize their hats and jump over the tops of their desks. That is hysteria.

"But no ripple of unrest has reached us. Wait until September, when the well-worked, thoroughly-cultivated crop begins to move. Then you will see things blossom forth."

"Business is moving along very well," says Charles E. Currier, president of the Atlanta National Bank. "Retail and wholesale merchants tell us in many instances that their sales are ahead of last year. Stable business does not move by fits and starts from season to season. The volume of trade this season is satisfactory.

"Much, of course, depends upon the growing cotton crop. Just now perhaps the plant is a little small and a little droopy. But give us a few weeks of sunshine and see how it grows.

"The tariff uncertainty is causing some hesitation, but it will be cleared up soon. The South, as I see it, is in good shape."

MAN BOMBARDS COMMONS WITH FLOUR SHELLS

Suffrage Sympathizer Keeps Up Pelting From Gallery Fifteen Minutes Till Subdued.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, June 11.—A man sympathizer with the woman suffrage cause created a wild scene in the House of Commons this afternoon and was arrested after a struggle.

Armed with a number of "bombs" composed of paper bags filled with flour and a great sheaf of suffragette pamphlets, the man gained access to the spectators' gallery. He remained quiet until Premier Asquith started an address. Then he stood up and hurled an armful of pamphlets from the gallery.

The members of the House looked up in alarm at the cloudburst of literature, but while they were still open-mouthed the suffrage adherent threw a "bomb" at Mr. Asquith. The missile missed its mark but struck a parliamentary clerk in the face. He fell to the floor and arose like a ghost.

A member sitting near the ministerial bench shouted a protest. A bag of flour struck him in the mouth and he dashed, gasping and choking, to get a drink of water. By this time members were running toward the stairway to the gallery, screaming to the police to arrest the miscreant.

Flour bombs were dropping and popping all about. Premier Asquith was the target of the bombardment, but was not hit. Several others near him were nearly smothered by the deluge of flour.

Policemen rushed into the gallery and tried to arrest the "bomb" thrower, but it was over fifteen minutes before he submitted. He was put outside and warned not to enter the Parliament Building again.

LET THE GRAND JURY INVESTIGATE DICTOGRAPH RECORDS

FROM the moment the famous, or infamous, dictograph records were made public, it has been clear to every right-thinking person that the only way to get at the truth was to have an investigation by the Grand Jury.

Charges and counter charges have been made, until the public is so bewildered that the real issues have been lost sight of. What is wanted is THE TRUTH. Are there any GENUINE dictograph records? Are there any records that will bear LEGAL analysis? If so, whom do they involve?

If the charges, as published, are crooked, or padded, the public has a right to know it. If the records are genuine, the public has a right to know that also.

It is time to STOP this scandal mongering. The Grand Jury is the proper body to investigate, so that the truth may be known.

At the moment Atlanta is being made ridiculous to all the rest of the world, and it is not unlikely that injustice may have been done to some of our officials, and perhaps private citizens also.

It is time to stop muck-raking and establish the truth!

FELDER RETURNS PHAGAN FUND TO GIVERS

Attorney Explains Disposition of Money Subscribed to Secure Burns' Services.

Colonel Thomas B. Felder Wednesday issued an itemized statement of the funds subscribed by Atlanta citizens, to secure the employment of the Burns Detective Agency to investigate the Phagan mystery, to show that these funds had been returned to the donors.

According to Mr. Felder's statement, but $102 was actually subscribed. This amount was placed in the hands of Curtis N. Anderson, a member and treasurer of the law firm of Felder, Anderson, Dillon & Whitman. In a letetr to Colonel Felder, dated June 9, Mr. Anderson gives the following disposition of the fund:

"I have received from contributions to the Burns fund $102. Several of the contributions were anonymously made; in the majority of other cases contributors requested that their names be withheld, and in some cases the addresses of the parties making the donations are unknown to me. Under your direction, I am returning to the contributors the several amounts sent in by them, where the names and addresses of the contributors are known, and I am directed by you to return the balance upon their request.

Felder Pays Extra Expense.

"I also desire to say that you have directed me to charge whatever disbursements have been made, which, by the way, are several times over larger than the contributions that have come in, to your personal account. This I have done."

The following amounts in chronological order were received by Mr. Anderson, according to his report:

May 15—Check, Joseph Hirsch..	$ 25
May 15—Check, Anonymous	30
May 16—Check, Anonymous	5
May 16—Check, Anonymous	1
May 17—Check, not authorized to give name	1
May 17—Check, not authorized to give name	1
May 17—Check, not authorized to give name	25
May 17—Check, not authorized to give name	5
May 23—Check, not authorized to give name	1
May 25—Check,not authorized to give name	5
May 26—Check, not authorized to give name	3
	$102

Along with Mr. Anderson's itemized account of the funds, Mr. Felder makes the following statesment, which he addresses to the public:

"Mr. Charles I. Ryan, who was designated as custodian of the fund without his knowledge or consent, informs me that he has already returned to the contributors whatever money was paid in to him.

"The Atlanta Journal, The Atlanta Constitution and The Atlanta Georgian subscribed $100 each, and I am informed that certain subscriptions were made to them. They have not been paid in and are not expected, and the three newspapers are hereby requested to return to the contributors any sums that they have received.

"In addition to the above and foregoing, permit me to say in conclusion that additional sums aggregating several hundred dollars were subscribed by the public, but were not paid, and payment has not been and will not be requested."

Mr. Felder further stated that he would ask the Bar Association to pass upon the regularity of his employment in the Phagan case and make a report upon it. He also declared his connection with the controversy as ended.

Fain Demands a Speedy Hearing Denies Charges of Rowdyism Indicted, He Defies His Enemies

W. P. Fain, accused Police Commissioner, above, and J. A. Skaggs, who told story of alleged rowdyism.

Police Commissioner W. P. Fain was indicted on two counts by the Fulton County Grand Jury, according to the announcement of the jury's findings made public Wednesday morning.

In one bill Mr. Fain is indicted jointly with M. T. Cantrell, of the tailoring firm of Cantrell & McHugh, charged with running a disorderly house at 40 Harris Street, the home of Mr. Cantrell. The other indictment charges Mr. Fain with committing assault and battery upon a woman whose name is unknown to the Grand Jury.

Commissioner Fain, when he learned of the indictment on Wednesday morning, protested his innocence, and asked that judgment by the public be suspended until the case is tried. His statement follows:

"As is known by everyone familiar with the procedure of the court, it is comparatively easy to secure an indictment before the Grand Jury, as they only hear one side of the case. I have no apprehension as to the outcome of the trial, as I know I can prove my innocence beyond a question of a doubt. All that I ask is a speedy trial and that the public will suspend judgment until the facts are known."

Mr. Fain's case is said to have resulted in an indictment by the Grand Jury following close on its investigation of the charge made against him on Tuesday. Two witnesses testified yesterday. They are said to have told of the fight and general disorder in the Harris Street house, and charged Fain with being one of the principals in the fray.

Claim Fain "Fiexd" It.

They testified that while the disorder was in progress Call Officer W. F. Anderson, of the police department, went to the house, but Commissioner Fain arranged matters by telephone with the ponce headquarters, thereby escaping arrest. These witnesses were Allen Young, a real estate man, and J. A. Skaggs, agent of the Southern Express Company.

HARRISON TELLS SOCIAL NEEDS OF ATLANTA

This was the statement made by Shelby M. Harrison Wednesday, who is here with Franz Schneider, Jr., and Zenas L. Potter, at the request of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce to make an investigation of the city's social and commercial needs. All are experts from the department of surveys and exhibits of the Russell Sage Foundation.

"I am basing my observation, not on what I have seen of Atlanta, but on what I have seen in practically every city in which I have been in the United States," added Mr. Harrison.

"In the past cities have grown in a haphazard, aimless manner. They have leaped into importance through their natural advantages, but their growth in many instances has not been symmetrical. They have ignored and neglected certain features they are coming to-day to realize are absolutely essential to their well-being and continued progress.

Playgrounds Overlooked.

"Sometimes it has been playgrounds and other provisions for the happiness and health of the children that have been overlooked in the breathless race for wealth. Or it may be that the sanitation has not been cared for during the years of the cities' mushroom growth.

"Whatever the situation is, it is the purpose of these social surveys to discover the causes that have retarded a city's progress, that have lowered its health conditions, that have deprived it of the commerce that is its due, and to pick out any other deficiencies that have crept into the administration of what may be termed its social activities.

"Of Atlanta we know very little as yet. Tuesday we spent in getting our geographical locations. We interviewed a few persons, but mostly we busied ourselves with getting a general idea of the 'lay' of the city. We were struck with the evident spirit of progress and prosperity.

Work Is Preliminary Diagnosis.

"Atlanta has fine business buildings. In this respect she compares favorably with any city of her size in the country. And almost wherever I went Tuesday in the business section I could hear the sounds of the builders putting up new structures.

"Our task in Atlanta can hardly be dignified by the term of 'social survey.' It is rather a preliminary diagnosis. A thorough social survey would occupy a force of half a dozen men for five or six months in Atlanta, I should judge.

"We will be here not much longer than ten days. After one or two days we may give most of our attention to certain phases of the city's methods which appear to us to require the most radical changes.

"At the close of our work we will return to New York and after thoroughly reviewing the results of our investigation we will frame recommendations and submit them to the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce. The Chamber of Commerce then will decide whether or not it wishes to continue the work and accept the recommendations.

"To my mind the chamber has taken a very important step in the ordering of this preliminary investigation. The majority of the cities of the country are being awakened to the fact that they can not outstrip their sister cities by the mere force of their natural advantages or by the unmethodical and sometimes unwarranted 'boosting.' They must have a safe city, a healthful city, a clean city morally and physically. They must have playgrounds for the children and a hundred other things that were hardly thought of a score of years ago.

"It is the purpose of these surveys, where a program is included, to map out scientific methods for the administration of the varied departments of city life and to furnish a scientific check on the results of every activity. It is the purpose to look out for the individual well-being of the inhabitant as well as the commercial prosperity of the city."

ASKS BEAVERS TO INVESTIGATE AFFIDAVIT

Chief of Detectives Newport Lanford telegraphed Chief of Police Beavers in Washington, D. C., Wednesday morning to investigate the origin of the affidavit bearing the signature of George M. Gentry in connection with the dictograph plot.

The detective chief asked Chief Beavers to find Jeannette Henning, the notary in the national capital who swore Gentry to his statement, and ascertain if the stenographer signed the affidavit which was brought to Atlanta by Detective E. O. Miles. The telegram asked that a minute investigation of the statement be made and the conditions under which it was made be wired to him immediately.

Chief Lanford's action was taken following his declaration that he did not believe the affidavit genuine. Lanford stated as his belief that the stenographer's name had either been forged or that Gentry had been coerced into signing the document.

Police officials have also conducted a rigid investigation into the standing of Detective Miles. Miles, the investigation showed, is at the head of the Reed Detective Agency.

Thomas B. Felder was at one time one of the largest stockholders in the agency, Carl Hutcheson being also a stockholder and attorney. He it was who appeared before the Police Commission and urged that body to grant the permit for the agency's operation in Atlanta.

Negro Fined, Despite Scripture Recitation

Calvin Williams, a negro preacher living in College Park, Wednesday morning recited Scripture to Recorder Broyles in making a vigorous protestation that he is a "law-abiding citizen." He explained that he is a graduate of the Tuskegee Institute.

Williams was arraigned as the result of a clash with a conductor on the College Park trolley line when the conductor asked him to move his seat. Judge Broyles imposed a fine of $3.75.

World Morally Ill, Cardinal Gibbons Tells Graduates

WASHINGTON, June 11.—Cardinal Gibbons told the graduates of the Immaculate Seminary at their commencement exercises here that the world has awakened to the fact that it is morally sick.

"Despite the warnings of the church," the Cardinal said, "it continued to ignore its sickness until the cancer of open vice spread to such an extent that the realization of the seriousness of its condition had to come, and we see the result in the present general warfare being waged against white slavery and its allied vices.

"But with the awakening of the public conscience has come a better order of things and the world is advancing along moral lines that each day makes it a better world to live in."

C. O. D. PARCEL POST AFTER JULY FIRST

New Department of U. S. Postal Service Offers Many Advantages to Citizens.

On July 1 the C. O. D. parcel post law will go into effect. Manufacturers, retail merchants and farmers will be greatly benefited, as they will be able to send wares to any domestic point with the Government to act as collector.

A distinctive C. O. D. parcel post tag has been issued and will be attached to each package. The tag has three coupons affixed to it. The first will serve as a receipt to the sender, the second will be retained at the mailing office, and the third will be attached to the parcel.

On the first tag the sender files as many items as possible, including the item showing the amount due him, and places his name and address on the back. All tags are numbered, and this will serve as a double check and eliminate chances of mistake.

C. O. D. parcels may be accepted by rural carriers and the receipt to be given the sender will be sent after the parcels are numbered at the postoffice. The C. O. D. parcels will be delivered by city and rural carriers and special delivery messengers.

C. O. D. parcels will not be accepted when addressed to either the Philippine Islands or the Canal Zone until later.

Court Costs Fought In Bankruptcy Case

A contest over the costs in the bankruptcy case of the Driver Hardware Company, of East Point, was before Judge Newman in United States District Court Wednesday.

A petition in bankruptcy was filed by the company. After paying all bills there were no liabilities. Subsequently the company took back the business.

Judge George F. Gober, representing the company, said all questions regarding the bankruptcy proceedings were settled, the only point at issue being the costs in the case.

BRITON PRAISES U. S. POLO TEAM

Captain of Englishmen Says the Game Was Fastest He Ever Played—Odds Change.

NEW YORK, June 11.—The brilliant 5 1-2 to 3 goals victory of the American polo team over the British challengers yesterday has filled the American supporters with extreme confidence of ultimate victory, and the betting fraternity is now offering big odds on the Americans' chances.

Captain R. G. Ritson, of the English team, commenting to-day, said:

"It was a fast game—the fastest I've ever taken part in. The Americans have a wonderful team. We did our best—but we lost. But we hope to have better luck Saturday."

Captain Harry Payne Whitney, of the American team, declared to-day it was "a bully good game" and "we hope to win again Saturday and keep the trophy on this side of the Atlantic."

The fine teamwork by Americans and their seeming all-round superiority over the Britons is causing American polo enthusiasts to predict an overwhelming victory when the teams meet again on Saturday.

Society leaders from all parts of the country, who turned out nearly 10,000 strong for yesterday's game, will remain in New York for Saturday's contest. The hotel corridors are thronged with polo lovers, the sole topic of conversation to-day being polo.

GRADUATED AUTO TAX IS PLAN OF LAWMAKERS

Legislature Also May Instruct Collectors to Stop Evasion of Ad Valorem Tariff.

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

In seeking to reform the tax laws f Georgia, it is likely that the automobile will be taken into most serious consideration by the new Legislature.

There are now more than 20,000 machines in the State, averaging in value about $1,200 each. These machines pay a flat license tax to the State of $2 a machine, and that is about all the State gets out of them. Not more than 10 per cent of the automobiles licensed are returned for taxation upon an ad valorem basis.

Secretary of State Phil Cook says nine machine owners in every ten believe the flat license tax of $2 per machine is all the State requires of them, and that many owners, not now paying taxes according to the value of their machines, are not so much intentional tax-dodgers as they are ignorant of the fact that an automobile is as much property subject to general taxation as anything else.

It is likely that the license tax will be graded according to the value of the machine registered hereafter. It is figured that it is not quite fair to charge an owner of a $500 runabout the same license tax that is charged against the owner of a $10,000 limousine. Moreover, tax collectors doubtless will be instructed by legislative direction strictly to require the return of all automobiles for taxation, according to their value.

If these two reforms are inaugurated they unquestionably will bring a fine revenue into the State Treasury.

It seems to be realized generally among members of the incoming Legislature that Georgia must increase its revenues in every direction hereafter, in order that the State may meet its absolutely necessary expense bills, and that the only way to do it is through tax reform and not through a higher tax rate.

There is a great deal of enthusiasm manifested among the citizens of Winder over the question of the new county of Barrow, and it is certain this proposition will be one of the livest to come before the new Legislature.

A well-known citizen of that city, talking of its present unfavorable location at the "corners" of three counties—Gwinnette, Jackson and Walton—cited the following circumstances to show how much confusion and annoyance arises from the same.

"A well-known citizen of Winder passed away recently and left property in several sections of the city. His widow had to take out administration papers in three separate counties in order to handle his estate legally and properly," said he.

"Winder gets its school fund from three counties, with a different pro rata in every direction. One county pays $2.75 a pupil per annum, while another pays only $2.40. The children of both attend the public schools of Winder, with the same advantages—but it isn't fair.

"Persons with things to sell in Winder requiring a State license generally don't try to sell them. They are required to obtain a license in all three counties centering in the town.

"Wider is some 20 miles from the county seat of every one of the three counties meeting there. That's a big nuisance, and rankly unjust to Winder and the surrounding territory.

The statement that United States Senator James Hamilton Lewis may shave off his scintillant whiskers has been accepted with great reserve by his Georgia friends.

When the junior Senator from Illinois lived in Georgia his whiskers were his pride. He looked upon them much after the fashion of a good Mohammedan, whose most sacred oath is taken "by the beard of the prophet."

"Jim Ham" may shave those roseate whiskers from off his handsome countenance, of course, but Georgians never will believe it until they see it an accomplished fact.

Representative Robert Blackburn, of Fulton, is looked on generally as one of the leaders in the next House.

Blackburn is a veteran in the House, although he has been out for several years. He is one of the ablest parliamentarians in the State, and is more than well qualified to take care of himself either in the running debate of the floor or in the committee rooms.

The gentleman from Fulton is rather small of stature, but he is loud in voice and sonorous enough to be pleasing when under full steam ahead in argument.

There will be few men in the next Legislature who know their way around better than "Bob" Blackburn.

A bill to require all railroads operating in Georgia to provide underpasses or overpasses at all grade crossings, when so directed by the Railroad Commission, is now being prepared by a well-known member of the House, and will be introduced soon after the Legislature meets.

It is designed to be fair to the roads, and will require the counties affected, in such instances as the commission may undertake to regulate, to bear a reasonable part of the expense of construction.

This bill likely will have considerable support in the Legislature, as there is a growing sentiment throughout the State that such legislation is needed.

Whether the bill will pass is problematical, but it will be earnestly and aggressively urged, nevertheless.

CAMBRIDGE, June 11.—Harvard is to train actors for the professional stage. "Workshop 47" will serve a twofold purpose in future.

In the past its efforts have been toward turning out efficient playwrights. Its future endeavors will embody a course in training young men for professional stage life.

ENGLISH CARTOONIST DRESSES AMBASSADOR PAGE IN COURT FRILLS

On sailing to take up his duties as American Ambassador to the Court of St. James Walter H. Page declared that he would never appear in court dress during any of the social affairs at Buckingham Palace. Recent cablegrams from London contained the information that Mr. Page would live up to this declaration. The cartoonist of the London Bystander, however, didn't take the Ambassador at his word and has pictured him as he would look if he did bow to the custom of foreign representatives in appearing at these functions in full court costume.

DR. STONE GOES ABROAD TO REST

New Moderator of Northern Presbyterian Church Overcome by His Heavy Duties.

CHICAGO, June 11.—Overwork has sent the Rev. John Timothy Stone, Moderator of the Northern Presbyterian General Assembly, to Europe for a long vacation. With Mrs. Stone and his three daughters he will lose himself somewhere on the Cornish coast for most of the summer. Later the Moderator will tour the Continent, returning in October.

The Rev. Mr. Stone was made Moderator in May when the Assembly met at Atlanta, Ga. This added greatly to his duties as pastor of a rapidly growing congregation. His church—the Fourth Presbyterian, on the North Side—has been replaced by a beautiful new building on Lincoln Parkway.

In the three years that Dr. Stone has lived here he has filled every seat in his church, the congregation of which had sadly dwindled. His efforts also have secured funds for the new church from his parishioners, among whom are all the McCormicks, the Willings, the Skinners, the Wentworths, Highs, Bentleys, Pomeroys, Philo Kings and many wealthy families.

Moderator Dr. Stone will go direct to Scotland to meet the Scotch Presbyterians at Glasgow. From there he will go to the Cornish coast.

HOW PLAIN GIRLS CAN WIN HUSBANDS

CHICAGO, June 11.—Dr. C. Franklin Leavitt has made public a lesson in winning a husband by suggestion.

"We must visualize our desires before one can expect to realize them," he said. "A girl should picture the sort of woman she wishes to become, and then impress this picture on her subconscious mind so it is ever with her.

"A woman may turn herself into a hag by depressing thoughts. A wise woman creates within herself conditions which attract. The subconscious mind is under direct control of the conscious mind and can be impressed through repeated strong suggestions.

"When a girl who is not attracting men comes to me I ask her to look herself over for her weaknesses. If her cheeks are hollaw I insist on her exercising the muscles of the face.

"The girl should give a handshake as if she had not a friend, and in limp fashion. Thus she will emanate suggestions of love and harmony and not of condemnation an apprehension.

"A woman has two weapons—thought and action. When she is possessed of a 'going mind' she is almost irresistible. A woman with power wins the man she wants.

"The first lesson to all unattractive women should be to picture themselves in a receptive attitude toward men. From childhood they should be taught to meet the opposite sex without fear and bashfulness.

"Thoughts properly directed can change the physical being. From concentration ... a subject fifteen minutes a day women have become beautiful. They should suggest to themselves at intervals that they are beautiful.

"Married women should take 'treatments' to retain the affections of their husbands. Going back to 'the old days of honeymoon attraction she is able to keep her husband interested."

WIRE IS FLASHED FROM SEA BOTTOM

AT THE BOTTOM OF THE SEA, LONG BEACH, CAL., June 11.—The cage submarine at the bottom of the Pacific Ocean, Long Beach, Cal., sends greetings to the world as being the only submarine boat that can run its engines under water:

"We have been submerged since 5 a. m. Tuesday, June 10, and will stay down until 5 p. m. Wednesday, June 11, 1913, thus breaking by twelve hours the record of the submarine Octopus, which remained submerged 24 hours in 1907.

"The running of our gasoline engines keeps our air so pure we could stay down a week if desired. Our submarine will break all records for speed and maneuvering, because our propellers are at the prow instead of at the stern of the boat.

"The crew of six men have quarters in the engine room, and there is not a trace of gasoline fumes in the boat. We are sending the message by a telegraph wire connected to our boat and that by means of a cable in the ocean.

Beautiful Birds With Odd Names Compose Queer Window Group

A collection of South Sea Island birds, valued at $1,500, on exhibition at the French Dry Cleaning Company, Joseph May & Son, forms one of the most unique exhibitions of its kind ever shown in Atlanta. The collection comprises about fifteen varieties, including a number of the so-called Paradise birds, which, when weary of life, commit suicide by strangling themselves with the fine, long "stranglers" which extend from the body.

Mr. May's collection includes also such rare species as the Kepeng, Kalona, the Black Bird of Isop, the Pato Boenga, the Nge, valued at $30; the Tempot Tail and the Bolontron. The Black Bird of Isop species is particularly interesting, as the body feathers of this bird are as soft as the finest velvet. The entire collection was made originally for the Parisian Plume Company by the hunters of Mikel Merkes Company.

MARION JACKSON AND HOTEL MAN SET RIGHT

The following letters given to The Georgian in reply to charges made by Carl Hutcheson explain themselves:

Editor The Georgian:

Attacks upon myself personally are immaterial.

They were expected. Others will be made. But protected vice can not revive itself in Atlanta by slandering me or any other individual. I am only one of a committee, which committee represents 90 per cent, if not all, of the Protestant churches of Atlanta.

Therefore, if the attacks injured only me, I should ignore them.

But when these attacks hit and hurt not me, but innocent third parties, as is known to those who make the attacks, the public should be informed.

John Edmondson is known in Atlanta and throughout the State of Georgia. He needs no defense from me, as his friends and acquaintances know that he would not operate a questionable house. The Hotel Empire, in the Jackson Building, was leased to him a year or more ago for a period of five years.

Whether or not Mr. Edmondson makes money from his lease, he has to pay the rent, for the simple reason that he is financially responsible, independent of his connection with this hotel. Therefore, on strictly business principles, temporarily, it is immaterial to the owners of the building whether or not he makes money from the hotel.

At present he is losing money through no fault of his, but through attacks of members of the underworld and its defenders made upon me personally. The continued slanders deter decent people from going to the hotel. The other kind do not frequent it for two reasons.

First, Edmondson will not tolerate it.

The second is that I have requested the chief of police if anything is wrong in the Jackson Building to "pull it" before any other place.

At the outset of the campaign against protected vice I made this request of Chief Beavers in the presence of several newspaper men. I repeat the request to-day.

Furthermore, I have asked individuals, and I now ask them and all others, regardless of their motives, to have the Hotel Empire "pulled" if there is anything wrong with it. I will gladly pay the fee of any lawyer who will convict any bellboy, clerk or proprietor in the place of sanctioning any immorality. And I shall consider the showing up of the place not as an attack upon me, but as a personal favor.

What is more, Mr. Edmondson will consider it as a favor.

The Jackson Building is owned by five persons, the heirs of my father's estate. These also will thank the individual that puts an end to anything wrong upon their property.

And in future the public will appraise at their proper value the men who, in seeking to discredit a work of the churches of Atlanta, make attacks upon me which do not hurt me, but injure others who have done them no harm.

I have only pity for the blindness of these men and their tools.

Since these attacks have reached the public through your columns I would appreciate your giving the same publicity to this letter.

Respectfully,
MARION W. JACKSON.

Here is a statement by Edmondson:

Atlanta, Ga., June 10, 1913.

My attention has just been called to an article in Sunday's American wherein Carl Hutcheson states in substance that Mr. Marion Jackson is a party to the keeping of a disreputable house in the Empire Hotel in the city of Atlanta.

I beg to state that I have leased from the Jackson estate, of which Mr. Marion Jackson is one of the heirs, a hotel known as the Empire Hotel, in the city of Atlanta, having been in possession of the same since August, 1912, and that any imputation that this hotel has not been conducted in a proper manner is slanderous and untrue.

If Mr. Hutcheson can establish that one of my clerks has ever greeted a guest who was about to register with the language, "With or without?" I will give him $1,000, and if he can not establish this, if there is any manly instinct in him he will at once make a public apology, withdrawing this language or any reflection since my management of the Empire Hotel.

For the benefit of the public, I wish to state that I am conducting the Empire Hotel in a first-class manner and catering to the best trade, and that no vice of any character is permitted in that hotel with my knowledge, and if the same was going on I believe I would know of it.

It is unfair to me to be drawn into the unfortunate controversy that is now being conducted through the public press, and my hotel be made to suffer on account of the infamous charges about its management, simply because Mr. Marion Jackson happens to be one of the heirs at law owning the hotel.

J. L. EDMONDSON.

Frank T. Reynolds made the following statement:

Atlanta, Ga., June 10, 1913.

Occupying the position of general manager of the Empire Hotel from October 27, 1912, to April 27, 1913, when I became connected with the Hotel Ansley in Atlanta, I beg to state that while at the Empire Hotel I did not countenance or allow any improper persons to stop at said hotel, and when I discovered, which I occasionally did, that suspicious persons were trying to take an advantage of the hotel, I at once ordered them to leave.

I received positive instructions from John Edmondson not to allow vice of any kind to exist in the hotel, and enforced these instructions to the letter, and so long as I was general manager of the Empire Hotel I feel sure that no hotel in Atlanta or in the country was more cleanly conducted or freer from vice.

There is not a word of truth in the charges made by Carl Hutcheson in last Sunday's American, if his allusions referred to the Empire Hotel as the hotel owned by Marion Jackson, since and during my management of said hotel, and such a publication as he made concerning said hotel is a vile and infamous slander.

Before an immense throng in the Grand Opera House at 11 o'clock Wednesday morning, the Tech celebration of its quarter-centenary reached a climax with the graduation of the senior class.

The event marked the close of the most successful year in the history of the institution and the graduation of its largest class.

In classic caps and gowns the young men formed into line at Peachtree and Harris Streets and marched to the theater, headed by members of the faculty and an orchestra. Passing solemnly down Peachtree Street the procession filed into the theater and to the stage, where speakers and graduates seated themselves in half circle facing the audience. A roar of applause shook the building as the senior appeared.

Dr. Bigelow Speaker.

The program before the award of degrees included addresses by many prominent men. The Rev. Lyman Hood, president of the Atlanta Theological Seminary, pronounced the invocation. The annual address was made by Dr. Herbert S. Bigelow, of Cincinnati. Dr. Bigelow spoke on "Old Institutions and New Ideas." He invoked the young men who were being sent out into the world by the Technological School to build upward and onward on the foundation laid for them by their professors.

Colonel N. E. Harris, one of the founders of Tech, spoke briefly of the advances made by the school in its quarter of a century's existence. It has increased its roll from 136 pupils to 825. Colonel Harris declared the year just closing was considered by the board of trustees of the institution as the most successful of any before.

University Head Talks.

Chancellor David Barrow, below head of the University of Georgia, made the closing address. Taking as his subject "Caps and Gowns," he pointed out to the graduates the vast significance of those robes.

"The caps and gowns are evidences of your training, boys," said the Chancellor. "They should prove constant reminders of your missions in the world. Never forget that you have worn those honored robes."

Dr. K. G. Matheson, president of the Tech, delivered the diplomas. Curator T. P. Branch read the honor roll, after which Governor Brown presented the scholarship trophies to nine men of the junior class, including Waldo M. Slaton, D. B. Wright, R. A. Shackelford, F. L. Shackelford, J. F. Woodruff, T. A. Gibson, D. S. Howell, E. Eberhart and R. A. Leinbach.

Medals presented by Dr. S. S. Wallace included the Yellow Jacket cup for the best contribution to the school periodical, which went to L. C. Boland; declamation medal, to H. L. Hardy, and medal for debate, to S. D. Frankel.

Followist is the list of the graduates:

DANGER IN MEAT EATING

The death rate of Typhoid has been 10 per cent for many years. Even if patient recovers, there is danger. Weakened constitution, languidness, loss of energy and other after effects.

In a majority of cases typhoid fever is directly traceable to an inactive liver which has refused to clear away the masses of meat particles left undigested in the alimentary canal. This mass putrefies and sends out death-dealing poisons, to result in typhoid fever.

JACOBS' LIVER SALT is the greatest known liver stimulant. Its action is gentle, yet effective. It draws water to the alimentary tract, flushes the stomach and bowels, washes away the undigested meat particles and removes the danger of fermentation. The blood is purified through the renewed activity of the liver.

JACOBS' LIVER SALT does not cause nausea and vomiting, and there are no dangerous after-effects as with calomel. Don't take an inferior substitute; many imitate the name but can not produce the same natural, flushing action of the genuine JACOBS' LIVER SALT. At all druggists, 25c. If your druggist cannot supply you we will mail full size jar upon receipt of price, postage free. Made and guaranteed by Jacobs' Pharmacy Co., Atlanta.—(Advt.)

6-MINUTE LIMIT SOUGHT FOR SMOKE

Commissioners Ask Council to Amend Ordinance, Cutting Time in Half.

Six minutes an hour for dense black smoke is the limit sought by the Smoke Commisisoners of Atlanta. A resolution requesting the General Council to amend the smoke ordinance, reducing the time allowed from twelve to six minutes, was passed by the board yesterday at its semi-monthly meeting. The board was a unit in making the request.

"We have tried the twelve-minute law a year now, and great good has been accomplished," said J. M. VanHarlingen, chairman of the board, today.

30 Plants Observe Law.

"Thirty plants have put the law in effect, but we feel that other plants should know the time limit will be reduced. We feel sure the General Council will act upon our suggestion. The Chamber of Commerce will take the question up in a few days, and work in harmony with the board.

"The present law is violated if dense smoke issues from any one stack a total of more than twelve minutes in an hour. This is a good law, but still if smoke came out of every stack in Atlanta twelve minutes every hour we would have a smoky city. This time limit must be reduced, and we have asked the General Council to cut it in half.

Effective Next Year.

"Some people are preparing to bring their plants within the twelve-minute limit, but we feel they should know even this limit will be made shorter. We therefore suggest that factory people and others with boilers arrange their plants so that not more than six minutes of smoke will be made in one hour."

The amendment requested by the board, Mr. VanHarlingen says, will work no hardships, since it will not go into effect until April 1, 1914.

State Shoot Opens; High Score Expected

The nanual rifle shoot of the Georgia National Guard began to-day at the Camp Evans rifle range. Despite the wind, the first shooters showed well. Indications are that unusually high scores will be made.

The largest number of men to participate in a State shoot are competing in the meet, Adjutant General J. VanHolt Nash having taken unusual interest in making it a success. Each year the National Guardsmen of Georgia have shown increasing efficiency in handling of the rifle.

Prominent National Guardsmen from all parts of Georgia are attending the meet. Social affairs have been arranged for them.

COURT RULES JURY CAN'T BE HURRIED

Magistrate's Time Limit of Thirty Minutes for Verdict Called Error in Laurens County Case.

Giving a jury a specified time in which to settle a case is an error, according to a decision handed down by the Court of Appeals Wednesday. The decision is in a case in the Dublin City Court, Haywood against Kitchens, in which the justice gave the jury 30 minutes in which to return a verdict. The decision reads:

"In the trial of a case on appeal in a justice court, it was error for the magistrate to inform the jury that he desired to take the train in 30 minutes; that he wanted a verdict one way or the other within that time, in order to permit him to take the train; and that he would get rid of the case some way in that time. While the amount involved was small, the evidence was sharply conflicting and somewhat voluminous, and the conduct of the justice tended to hasten the consideration of the case."

Another interesting decision was made when the court ruled in favor of damages for an arrest for cutting down telephone poles placed upon certain property without the consent of the owner or through the medium of condemnation proceedings. In the case of Hollfday against Coleman, the plaintiff sued for damages for false arrest, charging he was detained by a constable for an hour and a half. Evidence showed he had cut down poles a gang of workmen had erected on his property.

If plans, to be submitted in a resolution to the public work committee of the County Commission by Chairman Shelby Smith Wednesday, are adopted the work of improving Peachtree Street from Fifteenth Street to Buckhead will be begun within 30 days.

While admitting that the street needs a new pavement, Chairman Smith's plans provide merely for the repairing of the thoroughfare, with the proviso that the new pavement be laid next year.

A number of Peachtree residents have petitioned for a new pavement this year, but because of numerous other improvements planned before the Peachtree proposition was broached this was found to be impossible.

It is understood that property owners and residents will be satisfied with a temporary improvement, if they are assured the street will be repaved next year.

Peripatetic Pirate Ends Cruise in Jail

Out of a turbulent sea of intoxication, Charlie Jackson was steered into a harbor of safety—the stockade—Wednesday when he came up for trial before the head navigator, Judge Broyles.

74-YEAR-OLD MAN GIVEN $6,000 JOB

WASHINGTON, June 11.—President Wilson to-day nominated Major J. C. French as postmaster at Memphis, Tenn. This is the best Federal office in Tennessee, paying $6,000 per year salary.

Major French is 74 years of age. His appointment was favored by Congressman K. D. McKellar, of the Tenth Tennessee (Memphis) District, but more or less opposition was manifested in Memphis on account of Major French's age.

As this developed, it was proposed to give the office to Hubert Fisher, State Senator from Shelby County, who is a personal friend of President Wilson and a graduate of Princeton.

College Praised for Students' Record

Dr. F. H. Gaines, president of Agnes Scott College, is receiving congratulations on behalf of that college for the record made by Miss Lucile Alexander, of Atlanta, a B. A. graduate, who has just received her M. A. degree from Columbia College, after one year of study.

In 1912 the specialist in higher education of the United States Bureau of Education made a grouping of the leading colleges for women in the United States. Fifty-nine colleges were placed in the first group. The chief ground upon which a college was placed in group 1 was the ability of a B. A. gradaute "to take the master's degree in one year in any of the large schools."

SUBPENA IS WIRED IN LOBBY INQUIRY

WASHINGTON, June 11.—A. Warren Moore, a publisher, and M. Baker, publisher of The Courier-News, of Fargo, N. Dak., were subpenaed today by wire by the Overman lobby inquiry committee, at the request of Senator Gronna. This paper ridiculed Senator Kenyon's suggestion about the presence of an organized lobby in Washington.

"But it is not the theater tickets nor the lobster a la Newburg which gets his goat. It is the coin of the realm and nothing else. He has probably heard about it, although he testified that he knew nothing about an existing lobby."

This Senator Gronna understood to refer to himself, and went on the witness stand at his own request to demand an investigation.

A Sale of Oriental China

One That Will Be Long Remembered by Those Who Share Its Remarkable Values

Lovers of these quaint and beautiful and colorful wares that typify the Orient have in this sale an opportunity that undoubtedly beggars comparison with any sale Atlanta has ever known.

Prices are not halved, they are not even cut into thirds, they are fractioned to smaller fractions than halves and thirds represent. However, you may easily see the price-treatment below.

But the china---you will never see why it has been so priced. It is that richly decorated ware of fine quality that every housekeeper would own, and in such a variety that the selection of complete sets will be an easy matter.

It is a clearaway with us, we have disregarded the beauty of the china, and as is customary with Chamberlin-Johnson-DuBose Co., made prices that will indeed clear the china away.

The sale begins with the opening of the store, and the sooner thereafter you arrive the greater the variety will be.

Splendid choice here, the variety of styles is about as great as you would have it, they are very pretty little affairs, in red, navy and mixture weaves——and besides these are all the finer coats for children now half-price, which brings the price range to $5.00 to $7.50, instead of from $10.00 to $15.00.

For Boys' $2.25 to $2.50 Suits

A Millinery "Occasion"

Hats That Were $8.50 to $15 — $2.50

Hats That Were $12.50 to $25 — $5.00

Of those that are now $2.50 there are forty-nine. They remain, the greater part of them, from a recent sale in which they were $5.00. Of those that are now $5.00, there are thirty-five, now reduced for the first time.

There are hemps, milans and Belgian splits and Neapolitans, in about as many shapes as there are hats. The trimmings are wings, feathers, ribbons, flowers, malines. There are a few white and light tan hats among those at $5.00. As a rule, however, they are in reds, blues, greens and browns—hats that travelers will want, hats for wear with coat suits.

And how quickly they should go! The prices are but nominal figures, in no way representative of worth. But it is the final clearance and so—$2.50 and $5.00.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

SHE IS RIGHT.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
I am keeping company with a young lady who is 20 years of age and I am 27, and I have known this girl for the past five years. Lately I notice she keeps company with one of my friends. Do you think that I should give her up? She told me that she loves me, but she made an appointment with me and went out with my friend.
WALLACE.

It seems to me that if you have been devoted to her so long and have not asked her to marry you she does right to accept invitations from others.

Make her a proposal of marriage and if she accepts this will give you the right of objection.

THAT DEPENDS.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
Is it proper for a girl to begin the correspondence with a man?
If a girl gets an invitation to a dance or party, is it proper for her to ask a man to go with her if it is a pay affair? E. M. F.

The answer to your first question can not be decisive for the reason that you tell so little.

It is never proper for a girl to write to a man she does not know, and it is for her best good that she write rarely to those she knows.

To your second question: Most decidedly no.

GOOD BEHAVIOR HELPS.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
I have been calling on a young lady for some time and find that her father does not seem to fancy me. Kindly advise me what I should do to win his fancy. T. C. A. B.

You ask for something difficult to give. Often a father's objections originate in the very natural desire to keep a daughter at home. Perhaps she is too young to receive attentions. Or—and the remedy for this lies in your own hands—perhaps you are not the character a man would welcome in a son-in-law.

HE LIKES YOU.

DEAR MIS FAIRFAX:
I am 17 and care very much for a young man of 20, with whom I work. When he sees me talking to other boys he gets very jealous, but still when he meets me he never says more than "Hello." e Jokes with the other girls, but he never gets jealous of them. Now, do you think he cares for me and is too bashful to say so, or that he doesn't care for me, and therefore thinks the others should not? ROSE.

He likes you very much. That is plainly evident.

But you are too young, my dear, to bother your little head about love. Try to be happy and heart-free a few years longer. I am sure you will never regret it.

"ALL'S FAIR IN LOVE."

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
Is it proper for a young man who has been calling on a young lady for six months and confessed his love for her, and she never makes any encouraging remarks of her love for him, to stop calling without any explanation? I asked for her love, but all I got was "I'll tell you some other time" for my answer.
LONESOME.

It is the only thing you can do if you are a man of any spirit, and unless you are a man of spirit she will never accept it.

Stay away a month. I am sure she will send for you, and when you return demand a decisive answer.

Beauty Secrets of Beautiful Women

By LILLIAN LAUFERTY.

ONCE upon a time a clever woman said: "Stays make waists." Just now waists are out of fashion; but another clever woman has told me how to produce the highest type of modern figure—all lissome, swaying curves, shading gracefully into a free, beautiful whole. And in her creed there are neither "stays" nor "waist."

As a first step toward a good figure learn to stand," said Sophye Barnard, a recent recruit from comic opera to vaudeville, under the B. F. Keith management. "And as a regular promenade in the direction of a figure good enough to go on its own merits without help from corsets and artificial first aids to of correct standing and breathing?" I asked.

"A girl works pretty hard to get a beautiful voice, or just to cultivate a fairly pleasing one—but it pays—even in unexpected ways, for she suddenly finds a good figure thrown in as a premium, and a good figure is a rather attractive thing to possess, isn't it?" added Miss Barnard, ingenuously.

Lightly Poised.

The actress learns to be lightly poised on her feet," said Miss Barnard. "She learns to stand so that she may spring instantly into action; she never slouches or lounges or falls into ungraceful lines of abandon into which her figure, with a little unfortunate practice, might easily come to arrange itself naturally. She is poised, tense, alert. That keys her up to look and feel vividly alive, and it trains her figure into the right lines. It is just as important to keep your figure from sagging as to keep your mouth dropping at the corners.

"In singing, you learn to hold the muscles of the abdomen tense, to keep the chest high and filled with an ever-changing supply of clean air as you ventilate your lungs at each deep breath."

"Won't you give me a little exhibition in caricature of its flowing curves. Then she advanced her right foot and stood tensely alert, with the weight of her body swung forward onto the ball of that foot. She took a deep breath, beginning at the firmly held abdominal walls, and pulling the air up into full white chest. Throat, shoulders and chest pulsed into firm contours, and shoulders and throat like Sophye Barnard's became in themselves beauties worth emulating.

"I think your first beauty secret is too good to stay a secret long" said I. "Now won't you tell me what rules of hygiene and diet you bring to be its lieutenants?"

"My rules are all very simple—anyone can put them into practice," said the charming singer. "Simple foods, with no ices or sodas or pastries, are my idea of the correct diet—although I can eat what I like without falling prey to indigestion; but I take no advantage of that ability, and I suppose the reason I can combine a welsh rarebit and broiled live lobster and strawberry ice cream is because I don't!

"I lead a very regular life too—though the popular fancy does not picture an actress doing that. I always am in bed by 12; scarcely ever visit cafes, but have my after-theater parties at home, where I am sure of simple, wholesome food, of pure air to breathe, and of getting to bed in due season. People who dine in cafes on rich, heavy foods; and breathe the heavy, artificial air of the restaurant the while they do it are sure to get fat—or indigestion—or both."

"You lay great stress on simple food and correct poise. The inner woman seems well taken care of in your rules of the game," said I. Now will you tell all of us how to have smooth, satiny hair and skin?"

"Do you consider me qualified to give advice on those subjects?" asked Miss Barnard in the pleased tone of a good child who has been praised.

I did, and I do.

The Hair.

"You wash your hair more times than the old-fashioned theories taught you to—you brush it all the time, whenever you get a chance, and you don't curl it any of the time, and then when it is brushed and washed into a clean fresh mass you dress it as smoothly and gracefully as possible, and keep it in its proper place as background for your face.

"And as for skin, when you have observed the rules of keeping your internal system sweet and clean, you do the same by externals. Keep the skin clean and unclogged and free to do some correct breathing of its own, and then make it soft and flexible by the constant use of good cold cream."

Perhaps all this sounds like constant, unceasing hard work. If you feel discouraged before ever you begin—look earnestly at Miss Barnard's beautiful arms and shoulders, at the perfect symmetry of her graceful figure. To approach "a consummation so devoutly to be desired" who will not sacrifice a bit of old and some lazy habits?

Little Bobbie's Pa

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

BOBBIE, sed Ma to me yesterday afternoon, you have prubly noticed that yure father has been a littel cross & cut of sorts laitly. I doant know if he reelizes how littel sunshine he radi-ates these days, but he is deevelopping into a moody old dort, & I doant want yure father, my deer husband, to git cross grained.

He has been a littel grouchy laitly, I sed to Ma, but I guess it is sumthing like sum bizness worry that he has on his mind. I know that he will git oaver that & cum back sum of these days into his old form.

Well, I hoap so, sed Ma, but in the meentime I am going to try a littel skeem on him that I was reeding about in the ladies' Hoam Comfort. A vary brite woman wich rites for the Comfort sed that wen she noticed her husband gitting moody & abstracted she always acted as if the wurld was cumming to a end. She says in her artikel that she is naturally sunny & sweet tempered, but that wen her husband gits blue she gits twice as blue & rays sad peeces of poetry & talks about the Grave & the inevitabel end of man. Then her husband wud always git cheerful so that thare cud be a littel sunshine in the fambly. You watch me tonite wen your father cums hoam, Bobbie, sed Ma. If you doant see him start gitting cheerful rite away this woman has the wrong idee.

Pa wasent vary cheerful wen he got hoam, that is one sure thing. Sumthing must have gone wrong at the offis or sumware, beekaus his face was as long as a sack of flour & wen he got in the house & was hanging up his rain coat he sighed hard, like one of them sirens on a ottmbeel.

Pa Recites.

Then Pa sighed aggenn & jest wen he was going to beegin to talk Ma sighed, too. She sighed harder than Pa & reesited:

The day is coald & dark & dreery,
It rains & the wind is nevver weary.
The vine still clings to the moldering wall
& at every gust the ded leeves fall,
The day is dark & dreery.
Into eech life sum rain must fall,
Sum days must be dark & dreery

Pa looked at Ma kind of su-prised. Ma is always so cheerful wen Pa cums hoam, espeshully Saterday nites, that Pa cuddent understand why she looked so sad. I am the only one wich knew & I wasent saying anything.

What in the wurld has gone wrong, deer? sed Pa.

Oh, everything, sed Ma. Life at best seems to me like the monotonous beeting of a lot of sullen waives on a barren shore, restless, whimpering waives that go groaning at last into the tideles sea of Eternity.

More Poetry.

Rattel his bones
Over the stones,
He's only a pauper whom nobody owns.

For hevings saik, deer, sed Pa, cheer up. Why, you doant know how sorry I am to see my littel song bird sitting with her fethers drooping. Cum & smile for me a littel, deerest. Then Pa kissed Ma & sed, Here is fifty dollars, deerest. I got a hundred to-day that I nevver expected to get back, & you can have half of it. The man owed me a other hundred, Pa sed, besides this, wich I will nevver git, & that made me kind of grouchy on the way hoam, but after all things cud be much worse. Then Pa sang Missus McCorley's Twins for Ma. Pa sings it so bad that it is good, & it always maiks Ma laff. The fifty dollars made Ma laff moar, tho. Then she hugged Pa & sed he was her littel ray of sunshine. I guess she called him that beekaus the fifty-dollar bill that he gave her was yellow like a ray of sunshine.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"But there wasn't any shot," the perplexed and alarmed detective expostulated. He fairly stuttered in the earnestness of his self-defense. "I tell you, Chief, there hasn't been a sound."

Burke rose to his feet. His heavy face was set in its sternest mold.

"You could drive a hearse through the hole they've made in him," he rumbled. He wheeled on Mary and Dick. "So!" he shouted, "now it's murder! * * * Well, hand it over. Where's the gun?"

Followed a moment's pause. Then the Inspector spoke harshly to Cassidy. He still felt himself somewhat dazed by this extraordinary event, but he was able to cope with the situation. He nodded toward Dick as he gave his order. "Search him!"

Dick Took the Revolver.

Before the detective could obey the direction, Dick took the revolver from his pocket where he had bestowed it, and held it out.

And so it chanced that at this incriminating crisis for the son, the father hastily strode within the library. He had been aroused by the Inspector's shouting, and was evidently greatly perturbed. His usual dignified air was marred by a patent alarm.

"What's all this?" he exclaimed, as he halted and started doubtfully on the scene before him.

Burke, in a moment like this, was no respecter of persons, for all his judicious attentions on other occasions to those whose influence might serve him well for benefits received.

"You can see for yourself," he said grimly to the dumfounded magnate. Then he fixed sinister eyes on the son. "So," he went on, with somber menace in his voice, "you did it, young man." He nodded toward the detective. "Well, Cassidy, you can take 'em both downtown. * * * That's all."

The command aroused Dick to remonstrate against such indignity toward the woman whom he loved.

"Not her!" he cried, imploringly. "You don't want her, Inspector! This is all wrong!"

Now,at last, Mary interposed with a new spirit. She had regained, in some measure at least, her poise. She was speaking again with that mental clarity which was distinctive in her.

"Dick," she advised quietly, but with underlying urgency in her gentle spoken words, "don't talk, please."

Burke laughed harshly.

"What do you expect?" he inquired truculently. "As a matter of fact, the thing's simple enough, young man. Either you killed Griggs, or she did."

The Inspector, with his charge, made a careless gesture toward the corpse of the murdered stool-pigeon. For the first time, Edward Gilder, as his glance unconsciously followed the officer's movement, looked and saw the ghastly inanimate heap of flesh and bone that had once been a man. He fairly reeled at the grewsome spectable, then fumbled with an outstretched hand as he moved stumblingly until he laid hold on a chair, into which he sank helplessly. It suddenly smote upon his consciousness that he felt very old and broken. He marveled dully over the sensation—it was wholly new to him. Then, soon, from a long way off, he heard the strident voice of the Inspector remorselessly continuing in the vile, the impossible accusation. * * * And that grotesque accusation was hurled against his only son—the boy whom he so loved. The thing was monstrous, a thing incredible. This whole seeming was no more than a chimera of the night, a phantom of bad dreams, with no truth under it. * * * Yet the stern voice of the official came with a strange semblance of reality.

"Either you killed him," the voice repeated, gratingly, "or she did. Well, then, young man, did she kill him?"

"Good God, no!" Dick shouted, aghast.

"Then it was you!" Such was the Inspector's summary of the case.

Mary's words came frantically. Once again she was become desperate over the course of events in this night of fearful happenings.

"No, no! He didn't!"

Burke's rasping voice reiterated the accusation with a certain complacency in the inevitability of the dilemma.

"One of you killed Griggs. Which one of you did it?" He scowled at Dick. "Did she kill him?"

Again the husband's cry came with the fierceness of despair over the fate of the woman.

"I told you, no!"

The Inspector, always savagely impressive, now in voice and look and gesture, faced the girl with saturnine persistence.

"Well, then," he blustered, "did he kill him?"

The nod of his head was toward Dick. Then, as she remained silent: "I'm talking to you!" he snapped. "Did he kill him?"

The reply came with a soft distinctness that was like a crash of destiny.

"Yes."

Dick turned to his wife in reproachful amazement.

"Mary!" he cried, incredulously. This betrayal was something inconceivable from her, since he believed that now at last he knew her heart.

Burke, however, as usual, paid no heed to the niceties of sentiment. They had small place in his concerns as an official of police. His sole ambition just now was to fix the crime definitely on the perpetrator.

"You'll swear he killed him?" he asked, briskly, well content with the concrete result of the entanglement.

The Head Waitress

By HANK.

"I'M sure gettin' to be some popular with all the advertising you're giving me," said the Head Waitress to the Steady Customer in the Cafe d'Enfant.

"Yes," he replied. "a newspaper man, Louise, is a good friend to have. I am glad you appreciate that fact."

"I don't know whether I do or not," replied the Head Waitress. "I'd like to know what your object is. There ain't nobody now-a-days that does anything without an object. Every kindly word has its sting in these parlor times."

What She Calls Them.

"Parlous times," corrected the Steady Customer.

"If you knew what I meant you didn't have to correct me," snapped the Head Waitress. "You newspaper guys are always showing off. And let me tell you something. Marie, the cashier, is gettin' sore at you. You had her in the paper saying 'bloke' the other day. She don't call no guy a bloke. She comes from Indiana, where they don't use them kind of expressions."

"What does she call them?" asked the Steady Customer.

"Fellers," said the Head Waitress, "and that's proper, too. You wouldn't say, 'I'm going out with my best bloke, to-night,' would you. No, you'd say 'my best feller.'"

"I am duly crushed and chastised," replied the Steady Customer. "Anything else?"

"Yes, me and Marie would like to know where you and your dark friend go every day after lunch," said the Head Waitress. "You don't go right back to your office, because me and her seen you walk the other way every day."

"Why, we go to a moving picture show," explained the Steady Customer. "We find that gazing at stirring Western scenes or reckless deeds of daring takes our minds off the violent efforts of our stomachs that are protesting against the sinkers that you hand us in here."

"Hm-m," sniffed the Head Waitress. "I can't see how you can go to such places."

The Truth.

"Well, to be truthful," said the Steady Customer, "I like to go there because it's all dark and I can close my eyes and think of your sweet face."

"Some time you'll close your eyes in the dark," said the Head Waitress, "and when you wake up you won't be able to see your watch any more, you poor simp."

House Cleaning

By MAY IRWIN.

THE first step in the campaign against the gathered dust and grime is to get the men out of the house, by some pretext. Not that it isn't possible to clean house without the men of the house knowing it. I have done it. But a woman isn't looking her best when she cleans house, and the remnant of vanity left in us in these reconstructive days rebels against the men seeing us with smudges on cheek and nose, and our hands are not pretty things during the orgies with dust and discord.

To make the house habitable during housecleaning be systematic. Take one part at a time. There is absolutely no reason for having the whole house or flat looking as though a cyclone had visited it. Cleaning should be progressive. Take two rooms at a time.

A golden rule of housecleaning is: "Don't try to do it all in a day." If you overwork the first day you will be worn out and unfit for the task of the second day, and the work becomes slavery. Housecleaning need not be drudgery unless you make it so.

Take two front rooms, say, as a beginning. Carry all the room belongings in room A into room B. Close the door opening into room B so that room A shall take care of its own dust. Thoroughly sweep the floor, giving careful attention to neglected corners. With a long-handled wall brush dust the wall and ceiling. For plain woodwork and hard floors use a large wooden bucket of warm water in which two pounds of oxalic acid have been dissolved. Wipe off the floors and woodwork with this, using an orange-wood stick inside of the cloth for boring out difficult chinks and corners of dust. While room A is drying from its cleansing, go to room B. Throw open all the windows and attack the furniture of room A. When room A is dry, move that furniture back into place and carry the furniture of room B into room A.

Carry the plan of cleaning two by two, twin cleansing, through the house, and you will be pleased with the result.

To Wash Curtains.

To clean your blankets, don't begin by soaking them. Wash them in warm water and with soap. Do not rub, but push them into and draw them out of the water. Pound them with a heavy and clean potato masher, a new one, of an age not to have acquired "slivers." Rinse them in warm, clean water. If they are not yet clean, put them through a second water—a third, fourth, even a fifth or sixth—until clean. Keep all the waters through which the blankets are put at the same temperature. Don't wring blankets. Put them on the line in a hot sun.

To wash lace curtains, soak them in cold water for two days. Then put them into hot water, into which enough soap has been shaved, an amount according to their condition. Do not rub them. Dip them up and down vigorously in the suds. Change the water three or more times. Rinse in warm water. Then rinse in cold water with a tiny bit of indigo. Then put them, one at a time, gently through a wringer and dry them on a curtain frame.

And So It Goes.

"What a ducky little place!" said the happy bride to be, as her sweetheart showed her over her prospective home. But I am afraid, Harold, everything is so small. Now, look at this litle pigeonhole. Surely you don't call it a shoe cupboard, dear?"

"Darling," sweetly answered the young man, "that little pigeonhole, as you call it, will hold a hundred pairs of shoes of the size you wear."

The pucker in her pretty brows quickly disappeared.

"Perhaps you're right, Harold," she remarked. And all was well.

Secrets of Good Looks

By MME. LINA CAVALIERI.

The Distinguished Grand Opera Prima Donna and World Famous Beauty.

DO not take offense. Simply consider my suggestion and investigate.

No face is clean unless it is as absolutely free from dust as a newly washed window. No face is clean unless its pores are as free from obstruction as a freshly cleaned sieve from grit.

Have you freckles or liver spots? Your face is not clean. Indeed, the clean face is the exception instead of the rule. Yet, if there were more clean faces there would be more good complexions. The mottled skin is the index of a defective sewerage system.

Cleanse your face with oils and creams. But also use water. Many experiments have taught me that washing the face is a process of several stages. To remove the roughest dirt, use oils or creams. Spread these liberally on the face with the fingers or a piece of absorbent cotton. Be careful to reach every crevice or corner of the face with the oil or cream. Leave the oil or cream on the skin for at least five minutes. If the skin has been exposed to much dust or wind, leave these cleansers on for a quarter of an hour to search out every particle of dust and soften it. Then, with more cotton or with an old linen or silk handkerchief, gently wipe it off. You will be surprised at the grimy deposit on the cloth.

When this has been done, if you are not going out of doors, bathe the face gently in a bowiful of warm water softened with a pinch of borax or a half dozen drops of benzoin. Spread almond meal on the palms. Dip them into the water, and press them upon the face, rubbing the muscles upward. Do this until you have passed the almond meal covered palms all over the face. Then rinse the face with handfuls of cool water.

Lastly, if the facial muscles are loose and sagging, iron the face with ice, pressing the muscles firmly upward. After this careful face washing you will be surprised to see how white your face looks, and it will mortify you to realize how far from clean your visage had been before.

Pure cocoanut oil is one of the best skin cleansers and skin foods. Olive oil, into which one drop of benzoin to an ounce of the oil as a whitener has been dropped, is to be recommended.

A Gentle Hint.

A little girl made a call at the house of a neighbor. She saw some apple parings on a plate, and said: "I smell apples."

"Yes," the lady replied, "I guess you smell those apple parings on the table."

"No, no," said the little miss, smacking her lips, "'taint them I smell. I smell whole apples."

Be Wise! Make Your Own Ice Cream

Of course, you know that home-made ice creams, sherbets or ices are superior from every viewpoint. They are always sweet, pure and wholesome; there is a flavor and genuine goodness about them that is not found in the general run of factory products. Besides that, when you make your own preparations you know that the ingredients are always pure, and that the can is clean and sanitary. The main reason why ice cream is made in but comparatively few homes, is the work and bother connected with the old-fashioned crank freezer. That is one reason why the arrival of

will be hailed with delight by every one who is fond of ice creams, etc., because it eliminates the tedious turning of the crank entirely, and produces creams, sherbets and ices that will make your mouth water. That is one reason, but there are many others.

DON'T YOU KNOW that the enjoyment of a dish largely depends upon the manner in which it is served? Could you imagine a daintier and more appetizing manner of serving ice creams than provided for by the "Ice-Kist?"

A Story for Baseball Fans That Will Interest Every Lover of the National Game

SYNOPSIS

Gordon Kelly, a mountain boy of Georgia, goes to Atlanta. He becomes the sensation of the baseball world through his marvelous playing, although he said that he had never played a game before arriving in Atlanta. He is bought by the Boston American League Club for $50,000. Kelly incurs the enmity of Forrest Cain, a wealthy ne'er-do-well, at the same time winning the friendship and love of Mildred Deery, daughter of an Atlanta banker. Kelly is hurt in a game and Mildred runs to his assistance. He recovers, leaves the hospital and mysteriously disappears. He is not heard from for months. Mildred admits to herself that she loves Kelly. Her father dislikes the publicity given Mildred's assistance to Kelly on the baseball field. He gets Mildred to agree to go to the mountains. Cain follows Mildred and calls upon her. While Mildred is fishing she suddenly comes upon Gordon Kelly.

Now go on with the story.

CHAPTER XXIV.

GORDON KELLY held Mildred Deery in his embrace a full minute, maybe. Her head rested on his breast and she felt his heart beating like a triphammer. At last she sighed happily and, raising her head, she smiled faintly in his serious face.

"Gordon," she murmured, "won't you say something?"

Gordon gulped once or twice convulsively. He tried to talk, but his voice broke on the first syllable. He tried again.

"Mildred, dear," he said, hoarsely, "can it be you? I can't believe it. I have been thinking of you and only you for six long weeks. I tried to find you and"——

"How hard did you try?" Mildred interrupted. She released herself from his arms. She was beginning to recover herself.

"Why, Mildred, I called up your house just as soon as they would let me. I called up every day for more than a week and then every other day and then every three or four days and I always received the same answer. You had gone away and they didn't know where you were or when you would return. I did all I could. I couldn't move for some time and I"——

"And you finally stopped" calling up altogether. Well, I don't think you made much of an effort. Didn't it occur to you to call up my father or my mother, if you were so much interested?"

Oh, the perversity of women. If Mildred Deery were to confess it, her thoughts had been on Gordon Kelly almost constantly for the six weeks since last she had seen him. Here he was in flesh and blood standing before her, and she was now apparently trying to fret him.

"I—I—don't know much about these things," he stammered. "What have I done, Mildred? I only——"

An Interruption.

"I got him, Mildred! I got him!" yelled the voice of Elmer Shepard in the distance. "I knew there was a big fellow in there. Where are you, Mildred?"

They could hear him crashing through the underbrush. Mildred moved a few paces away from Gordon. Presently Elmer bounded over a boulder and came into view on the other side of the brook. He stopped short at seeing the stranger.

"Keep right on, Elmer, and we will meet you in the road and then we will go to the oaks and have luncheon," said Mildred. She had forgotten all about the lad, but now, mischievously enough, she welcomed his presence. Gordon, too felt the tension relax. The lad, coming on the scene, would give him a breathing spell and allow him time to collect his wits that Mildred had so ruthlessly scattered.

Picking up her fishing tackle, Gordon assisted Mildred up the embankment that bordered the road. Elmer was there before them. He held a large fish by the gills on one finger and proudly displayed his catch.

"Elmer," said Mildred, "this is my friend, Mr. Kelly. We met in the most"——

"Gordon Kelly. Gee whiz!" exclaimed Elmer, jumping up and down in his excitement. He was a little fellow for his age, whole souled and outspoken. Mildred laughed and so did Gordon.

Gordon Folded Mildred in his arms.

The Cat Out of the Bag.

"Aren't you going to shake hands with Mr. Kelly?" asked Mildred, for Elmer in the sensations of the moment, had not seen Gordon's outstretched hand. The lad dropped the fish he held and put his small hand in that of the tall young man. There was only five years' difference in the ages of the two, yet one was a little boy and the other a full grown man.

"I am glad to meet you," said Gordon, pleasantly. "But how did you know my first name?"

"Oh, I read all about you in the papers and I have seen your picture dozens of times. Besides, Mildred and I have talked about you."

"Elmer!" exclaimed Mildred blushing furiously.

"We did, too, just as we were starting out this morning. You know we did."

"You did the talking about Mr. Kelly, if I'm not mistaken," returned Mildred. "However, I guess there was no harm done, and, as I'm getting hungry, I suggest we change the subject and have something to eat. Won't you join us, Mr. Kelly?"

"Thank you, but I'm afraid I have fallen into the ball players' habit of two meals a day—a late breakfast and a hearty dinner at night."

"We will allow you to sit with us and watch us eat, then," said Mildred. "Or would you prefer to resume your fishing?"

"I guess not," laughed Gordon. He knew he would have to begin all over again with Mildred, but he felt sure of himself now. "I'll just gather up my rod and net, however," he added. "I had a fish nearly landed when I saw you, but I forgot all about him."

They were soon comfortably seated under a huge oak tree. Mildred, with a shy glance at Gordon, pulled her short skirt down as far as it would go, leaned back against the trunk of a tree, and, selecting a sandwich from the napkin that held them, bit into it daintily.

"Now, then, Mr. Gordon Kelly, give an account of yourself," she said. "What are you doing up here?"

"They had no further use for me at the hospital, so I just came up; that's all," replied Gordon.

"Why did you come here?"

"Because I had no other place to go. I live here."

"Live here!" exclaimed Mildred. "Live where?"

"Right here," replied Gordon, with an amused smile. "We are sitting on my property now."

"Goodness gracious, I didn't know that," said Mildred, as though she was doing something she ought not to do.

"Certainly, that bridge that crosses the brook is at the southern boundary line."

"Oh, I know, I know," Elmer broke in, excitedly. "That road that goes through the big granite posts leads to your house, doesn't it?"

"Youve guessed it, Elmer," replied Gordon.

"Well, I declare," said Mildred. "Tell us all about it, Mr. Kelly."

"With pleasure, Miss Deery," laughed Gordon, emphasizing the last two words as though to recall to her mind that she had called him by his first name not many minutes ago. "There's not much to tell. The road leads to a house and I live in the house. Now, please allow me to ask a few questions. What are you doing up here?"

"Because I had no other place to go. I live here." She smiled mischievously.

Elmer rolled on his back and kicked up his heels.

"Ha ha, I guess she's got you there, Mr. Kelly," he said. He had been feasting his eyes on the great Gordon Kelly all the while. Mildred watched him with a smile.

"You're right, Elmer." Then, turning to Mildred, Gordon said:

"But just where do you live; I am very much interested in my neighbors."

"Oh, just on the other side of the brook; on my father's property."

That can't be your father's property. It is owned by the Southern Land & Development Company."

"Oh, I see," mused Gordon.

"And I guess you don't own this property, either," declared Elmer, who would stick up for Mildred if it came to a question. "Dad's got a map and it says this land is owned by the Prescott Trust Company."

Gordon laughed.

"You win all the arguments, Elmer," he said. "You are right. It was a whim of my father's to put all his land in a company's name. But now that we've found each other out I hope it won't make bad neighbors of us."

"We will have to see about that," replied Mildred, with a sly look.

Mildred Blushes.

"Now I begin to understand," exclaimed Gordon. "You live in that house they were finishing when I went to Atlanta."

"Say, Mr. Kelly, you didn't do a thing to them down there, did you?" broke in Elmer. "Say that last hit you made was a corker, wasn't it? You remember, Mildred, you were there."

Mildred's face grew crimson.

"You little turncoat, you were on my side a minute ago," was all she could say in her embarrassment.

"That's all right, I'm with you now," said the lad. "But it was mighty good of her, wasn't it, Mr. Kelly, to run out on the field to help you?"

"Indeed it was, Elmer," replied Gordon, soberly. He had meant to tell her so at the right time, but now he noted Mildred's confusion and turned the subject quickly by asking:

"What luck did you have this morning?"

That gave the lad a chance to tell all about the morning's sport. He found Kelly knew all the best pools, as he had fished every rod of the stream year after year. Gordon told them tales of his hunting in the mountains that made Elmer's eyes glisten. Mildred listened dreamily. There was no intimate conversation such as she secretly wished there could be if the lad was not present. But that would come. She longed to have Gordon tell her all about himself, but the pleasure of anticipation is always great.

A Surprising Young Man.

The time passed all too quickly, and it was after 4 o'clock before they realized it. Mildred spoke of going home. Gordon jumped to his feet and helped her to arise.

"You will let me see you again soon?" he said.

"Oh, yes," she replied, and then paused a moment. "But not for a day or two. I will let you know. Have you a telephone. Ring three times? I will remember. Please don't call me up; you will hear from me. Well, good-by." She held out her hand.

"Wait a minute," said Gordon. "I'll be right back." He disappeared through the trees on the run and returned in three or four minutes. "Now we can walk to the bridge if you like."

They walked slowly and lingered on the bridge for a while, as if loath to part. Gordon looked at his watch.

"Give me two minutes more," he said. Even as he spoke there was the sound of a vehicle coming rapidly down the road and presently a high-powered automobile of the latest model, driven by a negro lad, slowed down and stopped at the bridge.

"I'll drive my friends home, Steve," said Gordon to the negro boy. "You wait here until I return."

"Is this your automobile?" cried Mildred in surprise. "Where in the world did it come from?"

"I telephoned for it," replied Gordon, smiling. "Another whim of my father's. He had telephones strung to every corner of the property."

"Gee whiz, that's going some," observed Elmer.

Mildred said nothing. She was thinking of the strange Gordon Kelly, a ball player, who owned a vast estate in the mountains and had servants at his beck and call who brought automobiles to him as if by magic.

CHAPTER XXV.

WHEN Gordon Kelly jumped on the tail of the express wagon in Atlanta, he told the driver to go to the Terminal Station. On the way there he decided to effectually conceal his movements, if it were possible to do so. He wanted more time to think. It is true he had had several weeks in which he did hardly anything else than think, but with his problem still unsolved he wanted to devote some more time to it, or get it off his mind altogether. The problem, of course, was Mildred Deery.

On the way to the Terminal he got a check for his trunk from the driver and told him to take the trunk to the baggage room. He paid the driver and got off the wagon a quarter of a mile from the terminal, leaving it to go on and deliver the trunk as ordered. Then he went to an express office, delivered his check and arranged to have the trunk forwarded to Steve Jackson, Pew Creek, Ga. After this was done he went to the freight office and after a good deal of trouble succeeded in geeting permission to ride in the caboose of the night freight to Chattanooga. One is sometimes able to arrange these things under proper persuasion.

It was in the gray of the morning that he dropped off the train, without being noticed, when it stopped at Pew Creek. It was all of a 12-mile walk to his home, but he started off, and it was not until he reached the bridge where later he met Mildred that he was able to make use of one of the telephones on his property and order an automobile to take him the rest of the way. Steve Jackson, his negro boy, quickly answered the summons, and that is the way Gordon Kelly reached his mountain home without anyone being the wiser. An hour later he had Judge Barbee on the telephone.

"This is Gordon," he said, "I am up home and I want particularly to ask you not to tell a soul where I am. You can reach me any time you wish but if you should call please ask for Mr. Gordon. I don't want anyone to know where I am for a while. Yes, everything is all right but I am trying to avoid a lot of annoyance. Goodbye."

With that off his mind Gordon proceeded to settle down to his old mode of life; that is as much as his troubled thoughts would allow him to.

The news that Gordon Kelly had left the hospital, packed his trunk and departed from Atlanta, presumably for Boston to join the Red Sox, was flashed over the wires, but as the days passed and nothing was heard of him, the Boston management began to get worried. Telegrams were sent to Atlanta, asking for information, but there was no information to impart. More telegrams came asking the Atlanta club officials to locate Kelly's home and see if he was there, but no one could be found who knew where his home was. Bill Smith was appealed to, but all he could say was that Kelly had told him he came from the Georgia mountains. This clew, vague as it was, led to nothing.

Two weeks passed and then the Boston club went at the matter in earnest. It had $50,000 tied up in Gordon Kelly, and that was a mighty pile of money to put out for a ball player and not have the use of his services. At the end of the third week the case was put in the hands of private detectives, and these professionals began a systematic hunt for the missing man. They traced his trunk to the terminal baggage room. They interviewed the expressman who had taken it there. But that is as far as they got in that direction. The trunk itself was like hundreds of others and the baggage men, who handled nothing else, could not place it. There was not enough for them to go on, and three weeks is a long time to remember a trunk that is like hundreds of others.

The detectives then went to the mountains but it was like hunting for a needle in a haystack. Many persons in the uplands had heard of Gordon Kelly, the ball player, but they were positive he didn't live anywhere in their section. The detectives searched the county tax lists. There was not a Kelly on them. They began to believe that Gordon Kelly was a fictitious name. If that were so, hunting for a needle in a haystack would be easy in comparison with their task.

"Now then, Mr. Gordon Kelly, give an account of yourself," said Mildred.

Never Heard of Him.

The sleuths even stopped at Pew Creek between trains, but those persons of whom they inquired truthfully told them they had never heard of a Gordon Kelly and they were positive no such man lived in that vicinity. The detectives then went back to Atlanta to make a fresh start. There they hunted up Galen Deery, but that gentleman informed them that he hadn't the faintest idea where Gordon Kelly was; that he had never seen him but twice in his life and had no interest in him whatever. Deery was still smarting over that episode of the ball field in which his daughter figured. As the detectives knew of no connection between Gordon Kelly and Judge Barbee, the latter was not troubled with a visit from the sleuths.

There was one man who could, at least, have told where Gordon Kelly's home was, had he felt so inclined. That man was Forrest Cain, but he kept his mouth shut for reasons of his own. The cards were running badly for that young man and he was playing a waiting game, as gamblers do, hoping for a change of luck.

At the end of a month, or seven weeks after Gordon Kelly disappeared, the Boston club called in their detectives and abandoned the search. On the first and fifteenth of each month, however, a check for Kelly's salary was drawn and mailed to his last known address in Atlanta. They were all "returned to writer at the end of five days." The checks were saved in the safe of the Boston club, remaining unopened in the envelopes they were mailed in. The club, having a fortune invested in the player, was taking no chances in losing him on a technicality of baseball law if any question should ever arise.

If ever the Red Sox needed Gordon Kelly it was in the period in which the detectives searched for him high and low. They were "going bad," as the baseball phrase has it. Joe Wood, the champion pitcher, was injured early in the season and was out of the game for several weeks. Their first Western trip was disastrous, and toward the close of it Larry Gardner, their star third baseman, sprained his ankle and went around on crutches for a long time, his ankle in a cast. At the close of the Western trip they were sixth in the American League pennant race, a sorry showing for world's champions. The Philadelphia Athletics were out in the lead, with the Cleveland and Washington teams next. If the Red Sox were to do anything it was time to be up and doing. Jake Stahl, the manager, stayed at home during the trip. An operation on his foot kept him away from the ball field for many days. Altogether they were sorry days for the Red Sox, and their supporters began to lose heart.

But in spite of the fact that the Boston club had withdrawn its detectives from the search for Gordon Kelly, interest in that young man's mysterious disappearance did not abate. There was always some fresh clew to start the ball a-rolling again. These were run down, one after another. Every few days a dispatch would come out of some town in Texas, or Colorado, or Wyoming or Maine that no one had ever heard of, containing the information that Gordon Kelly had been found. Sometimes he was in a starving condition, sometimes he was working as a farm hand or in a factory. Investigation proved in every case that the wrong man had been found.

To Be Continued To-morrow.

Riding on a Receipt

Mark Twain's story of Horace Greeley's handwriting has a parallel in this, from a railway conductor in Missouri to the president of the road. The conductor wrote:

"A farmer has been riding on this pass for about a year. Do you want him to continue to use it?"

The president put on his glasses, looked the paper over carefully, and said:

"Why, this is not a pass. It is a receipt I gave the fellow for a load of wood about a year ago!"

Wedding Gifts

By MRS. FRANK LEARNED

THE question of sending a wedding gift must be decided by friendship or obligation. In the first instance there is the natural wish to please a friend, and in the other case one may be indebted to the bride or bridegroom or to their families for kindnesses or hospitalities. Those who are invited to a home wedding or a wedding reception usually send gifts, a'though there is no absolute rule to be followed as to this. As it is supposed to be a special compliment to be bidden to a home ceremony, a guest likes to return the courtesy by a gift, however simple it may be.

A gift is sent invariably to the bride, even though she may not be known personally to the giver. The custom is to send a gift directly from the place where it is purchased. The visiting card of the giver is enclosed in a small envelope and placed inside of the box containing the present. A brief line expressive of good wishes may be written across the top of the card, if the giver is a friend specially interested.

In regard to the display of wedding presents there is a division of opinion. Some persons consider it ostentatious to show the gifts, or that it destroys sentiment to have critical eyes examining these offerings, others prefer to share their pleasure with their friends and are glad to give evidence of the good-will and the generous attention they have received.

When a wedding takes place in the country and friends are expected from a distance, the custom is to show the presents on the wedding day; or if the wedding is an informal one, with only relatives and intimate friends present, the gifts are shown.

The preferred custom is to show the presents a few days before the wedding. The bride-elect, or her mother, may write informal notes asking intimate friends and all those who have sent gifts to come in on a certain afternoon, during hours designated, to see the presents. It is allowable to write on one's visiting card, "Will you come in on Saturday afternoon, between four and six o'clock, to see the presents?"

The gifts are arranged on tables which are covered with white damask tablecloths. Here and there are vases of flowers. Great care is taken to place each article at its best advantage, especially the small and simple gifts which should be among the more beautiful ones, so that the givers may feel that the bride has truly appreciated their thoughtfulness.

The cards of the givers are usually placed with the gifts.

The informal serving of tea finishes the afternoon.

A bride-elect is careful to write a note of appreciation to every one who sends a gift. When she sees those who have sent presents, she remembers to repeat her thanks in person. The best rule is to write without delay and to mention the gift definitely, so that the note may not ne a duplicate of others.

The Faster They Go

Professor Barry once amused Judge Ball by an application on behalf of a man who was a dealer in horses and sugar sticks. The incongruity of his avocations struck the judge, who remarked:

"What a strange combination of trades."

"I see a close resemblance between horses and sugar sticks," said the witty barrister.

"In what way?" inquired his lordship.

"The more you lick them the faster they go," was the reply.

TENNESSEE BOY FIND OF SEASON IN BIG LEAGUES

By W. J. O'Connor.

ST. LOUIS, June 11.—It's time somebody should print a life-size picture of Daniel Griner, the Tennessee blonde, under a bold, black caption: "The find of 1913."

Griner has made good with a vengeance. A year ago the massive Cardinal pitcher was a plunging fullback on the Tennessee eleven. After being graduated he broke into baseball as a curvist for the Cleveland (Tenn.) Club. His stay in the minors was brief and although his big league life is yet very young, he has been tagged O. K. by the railbirds.

Griner has a unique record with the Cardinals. He's the only pitcher on Hug's team who has been able to go the full route in a majority of his games. With one exception Griner has finished every game he started. He was knocked out by the Cubs on April 21, after Evers' team had made 12 hits and 5 runs in 5 1-3 innings. In all his other games Griner went through from the first to the last round.

Veterans Not Going Well.

This is something Harmon, Sallee and Steele have not been able to do. Harmon has pitched only two full games this season. Sallee has gone the route three times. Indeed, out of 44 games played, Huggins has been forced to change pitchers no less than 26 times. Of the 18 games that a pitcher has gone the route, Griner has been on the hillock in 10 of them. Here's his record:

Date.	Opp.	Team.	W.	L.	Ings.
April 12	Cubs		4—3	....	9
April 17	Cubs		....	7—1	9
April 21	Pirates		....	8—5	5 1-3
April 27	Reds		2—1	....	9
May 1	Pirates		....	5—4	9
May 7	Phillies		....	4—3	10
May 13	Braves		4—3	....	9
May 19	Superbas		....	2—1	11
May 24	Reds		12—4	....	*6
May 28	Cubs		x....	....	....
May 31	Reds		....	0—2	9
June 4	Giants		6—4	....	9

xTaken out in eighth, score tie, 7—7.

Tennessean's Percentage .500.

Griner has won five and lost five games. His percentage of .500 is better than his club's standing in the league race. However, it will be noted that Griner has lost three games by one-run margins, two of those extra-inning bouts. He has won three tight games by a margin of one run.

Griner was "found" by Scout Bill Armour who now is business manager of the Milwaukee (American Association) Club. Dan had had only one year's experience in baseball when he reported here, but he made good from the jump. He's now touted as the best bet among the young National League twirlers. He has the frame to last a long time, being a frugal liver to boot.

Ritchie-Rivers Bout Still Up in the Air

SAN FRANCISCO, June 11.—Though articles of agreement have been signed, all is not well with the scheduled bout between Willie Ritchie and Joe Rivers on July 4. Manager Nolan was incensed last night because Joe Levy, who looks after the interests of Rivers, had not posted the forfeits agreed upon, and declared if Levy did not come through today he would call the bout off and take on Freddie Welsh in Vancouver on July 1.

"Levy agreed to put up his forfeits immediately after the articles had been signed," declared Nolan. "When I spoke to him about it, he said he would be back in an hour or so with the money. He did not return and I haven't heard anything further from him."

Nolan is said to be a trifle put out at the manner in which Levy dictated to him during the negotiations for the Ritchie-Rivers match. Rivers' manager won practically every point he held out for and Nolan is not accustomed to being beaten in this kind of a game.

Lou Castro to Referee Battles

COUNT LOUIS CASTRO, famed over the United States as ball player, manager and referee, has been secured to referee the Sailor White-Jim Savage bout at the Auditorium-Armory on Friday night, June 13.

It is believed that Castro will be satisfactory to both managers and scrappers, and surely no better man could be secured. Castro knows the boxing game, has a lot of "pep" in the ring and is known to be perfectly fair.

The engagement of Castro as referee makes it certain that the handling of the men in the ring will be on the same high plane as the rest of the show. The Auditorium-Armory bouts have established a reputation for good order, good crowds and good bouts, and the contest Friday night is not likely to do any damage to the reputation.

BEYOND any question of a doubt, the Savage-White bout is of more national importance and of greater promise than any ever staged in Atlanta before. The man who goes back to New York the victor has gained a material advantage in the contest for white hope supremacy. He can have almost any bout he wants.

Since the experts have had time to dope it out, they are inclined to believe that White will give Jim Savage a lot more than he counted on getting. Any man who could whip Pelky and stop Jim Barry in four rounds is likely to be heard from in any heavyweight bout. Combine this with the fact that White weighs 210 pounds, is 6 feet 2 inches tall, has a long reach and a willing disposition and you have a pretty strong scrapping machine.

It is going to take all of Jim Savage's cleverness to keep from getting knocked cold. White will be on top of him every minute, plugging away. With Savage's well-known cleverness, combined with that punch he has just discovered and which he used to put away Whitey Allen, the Bronx terror, he will be able to keep Sailor White at arm's length. If he can keep White away he has a chance to win by a big margin. If the Sailor can close right in he will give Savage one of the warmest little evening's entertainments that he ever had.

"I am much of Bob Fitzsimmons' way of thinking about White," he said to-day. "The Sailor is coming fast. It is something to have his great weight, strength and reach. But besides that he has the aggressiveness of a terrier. He is after his man all the time. He is very fast for a heavyweight. I shouldn't exactly call him clever, not the way Savage is, at any rate, but he can look out for himself. He has learned a lot in the couple of years he has been out, and he is picking up something new every day.

"White doesn't know anything but the ring game. But he sure is enthusiastic about that. He wallows in scrapping. He gets so interested a couple of days before a scrap that he forgets to eat his meals. When he gets into the ring he is all impatience and as nervous as a kid. But when the bell taps he quiets down and is ready. A second or two later he is after his man. From that time on it is give and take to the finish. I'll say this—I'll bet every man who sees the go takes his hat off to Sailor White before it is over; that is, if a good rushing, slugging, aggressive heavyweight makes a hit in this town."

FODDER FOR FANS

The Cubs tied up the score in the ninth inning yesterday and then won out in the tenth in their game with the Giants.

The Phillies came from behind in the ninth inning yesterday, batted out two runs and scored another victory over the hapless Reds.

"Big Ed" Konetchy, the star second sacker of the Cardinals, punched two singles, a triple and a homer out of six times up yesterday. Magee, the Cardinal left fielder, got four singles.

The Cardinals amassed sixteen hits yesterday, yet had to use five pitchers and go into the eleventh inning to win the game, 8 to 7, from the Braves.

The Athletics experienced little difficulty yesterday in defeating the Browns and thereby annexing their fifteenth straight victory.

The Yanks' "winning streak" of two games was shattered yesterday when the White Sox jumped upon a couple of the New York pitchers and swatted out enough runs to win the game.

The Red Sox scored five runs off Vean Gregg, the Naps' star twirler, in the first inning yesterday, which were quite sufficient to win them the second straight game from the Clevelanders.

The victory of the Athletics and the defeat of the Naps yesterday gave the Quakertown players a lead of four full games, or 52 points, over the Naps.

Joe Jackson, of the Naps, got three hits out of four times up yesterday and made a big gain over Ty Cobb, his batting rival, who went hitless after three efforts at Walter Johnson's slants and shoots.

* * *

The Senators got only one hit off the combined twirling efforts of Clauss and House, yet were able to win the game from the Tigers, who were shut out with two hits off Walter Johnson.

Manager Fred Clarke, of the Pirates, batting in a pinch in the ninth, delivered a two-bagger and paved the way for a 5 to 4 victory for his team over the Dodgers.

CRACKERS TRY AGAIN TO PLAY DOUBLE BILL

By Joe Agler.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., June 11.—We're off this afternoon on another double-header with Manager Molesworth's Barons. And when we grab those two, we shall beat it to Chattanooga, where we will be the guests for the remainder of the week of Kid Elberfeld's Lookouts.

Smith is figuring on Musser and Price to-day. Paul started the second game yesterday, but did not get far enough to get very tired over it. So I guess he'll go back for more to-day.

It is going to be pretty tough on Joe Dunn if the double-headers pile up on us, for he's the only catcher we have who is in running order. However, Joe is pretty chipper to-day and looks good for about six weeks of double-headers.

I take it that Molesworth will use Prough and Thompson, with Mayer to do the catching.

We won a hot game yesterday. It started out to be a double-header and a pennant raising combined, and we got away with everything but the second game. Darkness stopped that.

It took twelve good innings to finish the opening game. "King" Brady started for us and seemed to have the battle won, but went to pieces in the sixth. Dent relieved him.

Dent was good. He had everything and his hit started the rally in the twelfth, that brought home the bacon.

After we got the first game out of the way, we marched over with the Barons to the pennant pole and ran up the pennant won in 1912 by the Barons.

The second game lasted only two innings and was then called on account of darkness.

FRED CLARKE MAY RETURN TO OLD POSITION AGAIN

PITTSBURG, June 11.—Associates of Fred Clarke said to-day that the veteran player and manager of the Pirates is about to put his determination aside and return to the outfield. Clarke has neither admitted nor denied the report, but it is expected both by players and his intimate friends that he will trot back into left field, perhaps in a few days. According to his usual method, he will probably announce his return a few minutes before he puts on his glove.

KILBANE TOO MUCH FOR JIMMY FOX OF OAKLAND

OAKLAND, CAL., June 11.—Johnny Kilbane, of Cleveland, featherweight champion, defeated Jimmy Fox, of this city, last night in the sixth round of their scheduled ten-round bout. Fox's seconds threw a sponge in the ring when their man was on the verge of a knockout.

Crackers Are Puzzle of Season

Ought to Be Leading League Now

By Percy H. Whiting.

BILL SMITH won two pennants in Atlanta with weak-hitting teams. Can he win a third with a strong-hitting team? The question agitates local fans.

Ponder the figures:

Smith won in 1907 with a team that batted..... .253
Smith won in 1909 with a team that hit..... .222
The Crackers now are third, and hitting..... .272

With a team fifty points weaker in hitting than he has this year Smith romped in 1909, winning by such a margin that it wasn't interesting.

Glance at some more figures:

Batters over .300 mark on Cracker team:
In 1907..... 0 In 1909..... 0 In 1913..... 3

Regulars (exclusive of pitchers) who batted over .250 mark:
In 1907..... 5 In 1909..... 2 In 1913..... 6

In 1909, when Smith won the pennant by forty rods, every player on his club, except one catcher, one outfielder and one pitcher, was hitting worse than .250. Eleven of them were hitting .225 or worse.

Verily, if hitting is worth anything, the Crackers should win this year.

1907—Fox, Jordan, Castro and Dyer.
1909—Rohn, Jordan, Newton, Walker.
1913—Agler, Alperman, Bisland, W. Smith.

Agler is as good as Fox, better than Rohn. Alperman is about as good as Jordan. Bisland is as good as Castro in fielding and better in hitting, while he has a mile on Newton. Wally Smith is worth sixteen Dyers and a better man than Walker.

* * *

COMPARE the outfields, just for fun, considering the men from their ability to cover ground, hit the ball, run bases and think. Here they are:

1907—Paskert, Becker and Winters.
1909—Bayless, Moran, Winters.
1913—Long, Welchonce, Bailey.

REMEMBER that the same man is managing the club now that won the pennants in 1907 and 1909, and that he has had the advantage of several years of experience since then.

And after you have figured all these things you will wonder more than ever why the Crackers aren't out in front and leading the pennant chasers by a full mile.

THIS much is sure about the Cracker team. Though the end of the second month of the season, which was Tuesday, found the Crackers moderately removed from the leadership, there has not been a second this season when it has not appeared likely that the club would turn loose at any minute and start out for the pennant.

A club of sluggers, which can field moderately well, is liable to set sail any old moment.

The Crackers have kept in a comfortable position all the season. They have not been dangerously close to the front in a good while, but they haven't been so far toward the rear as to make it embarrassing.

Watch out for a smashing spurt to begin before so very long.

PLAY STARTS SATURDAY FOR PERRY ADAIR TROPHY

Play begins Saturday for the Perry Adair trophy over the East Lake course of the Atlanta Athletic Club. The conditions under which this trophy was offered have been charged, and instead of taking three wins to cop, it goes outright to the winner of the coming tournament.

The affair will be from scratch and the qualifying round will be played Saturday. The first and second rounds must be completed by June 19, the third by June 21, and the final round before June 23.

HANS WAGNER OBSTACLE IN GIANTS' WAY

By John ("Chief") Meyers

NEW YORK, June 11.—Hans Wagner looms larger and larger each day as the possible stumbling block to a third successive pennant for the Giants. I am as confident now as when the season opened that my club will eventually be returned the winner. Class usually tells in the long run of any competitive sport, and I think my club has finally begun to display the real merit that won two straight pennants.

Every one figured this spring that the Pirates were destined to argue the case with us right to the end of the campaign. Pittsburg, like New York, has an exceptionally strong club. Like New York, it got off to a disappointing start, but, like New York, also, it appears to have found itself with hot weather and is prepared to fight to the finish.

Wherefore I say that Hans Wagner looms more and more ominously in our pathway. Wagner is so much more vital to his team's success than any other player in organized baseball is to another team that he may be considered pretty nearly the whole team.

I do not mean by this that Clarke has no other players. He has a well balanced organization, embracing one of the strongest pitching departments in the circuit. But Pittsburg, without Wagner, is a second division outfit.

Still Valuable Asset.

Wagner is one of the most remarkable characters the game has ever known. I very much doubt if at any time in his brilliant career of the past seventeen years he was of greater playing value than he is to-day. Certainly within the past five years he never approached his present form.

Most players are spectacular at times. Once in a while even the average athlete may pull some sensational fielding feat that will make the stands wild with enthusiasm. But Wagner shows so much enthusiasm on defense that to get a "hand" he has to do the practically impossible.

Wagner is an awkward—even clumsy—appearing fellow in his mannerisms. He lacks the grace of Lajoie. Yet he carries his burden of years on the diamond as easily as the youngest colt. No man in baseball is more agile than Hans, and none is so sure with his hands. He is possessed of every requisite of greatness; strong sure hands, exceptional reach, agility, a powerful, accurate arm and an exceptionally fast thinking brain.

Sometimes it seems almost uncanny the way Wagner handles a ball. He lowers his great hand (the gloved one the size of a scoop shovel, almost) and it seems as if the ball is attracted like a piece of steel to a magnet. Of course, that is fancy. It is the fine skill with which he plays the ball. He always plays the ball; he never lets the ball play him.

Wagner Greatest Fielder.

Wagner is the greatest fielder I have ever seen. Twice in the recent series at the Polo Grounds I saw him make plays which I am firmly convinced would have been absolutely impossible for any other living player.

One was on a faulty throw to second base to stop a stealer. This runner, the ball and Wagner all reached the cushion just about the same time. The ball was high; Hans had to leap in the air for it. In doing this he had to protect himself, as a collision might have seriously injured him. Wagner not only did protect himself, but he made a one-handed catch and tagged his man for a put-out while still in the air so quickly that the eye could scarcely follow his motion.

On the other occasion he started back into left for a difficult Texas leaguer. For such a fly no one is so sure. But somehow there was a misunderstanding with Carey. Each thought the other was going to take the ball, which either might have done very handily had he not stopped. The ball had almost settled to the ground when Wagner realized that Carey was depending upon him. With a lightning spring that combined the grace and power of a tiger's leap Wagner threw himself along the ground and scooped up the ball just before it settled on the grass.

Is Most Feared Hitter.

Wagner's wonderful batting ability has endeared his memory to every nook and cranny of the old earth where the great summer sport is known. Years have come and gone bringing with them their periodic phenoms. But none has dimmed the glory of the mighty Hans. To-day he stands at the head of the class, the most feared hitter in the National League. He has not always led the procession; but he has never been very far behind. And he has shown such great consistency that he will rank forever as one of the greatest figures of baseball history.

BUFFALO HAS NEW STAR IN JIMMY DUFFY

By Ed W. Smith.

CHICAGO, ILL., June 11.—They have a young lightweight boxing star down near Buffalo who is regarded as one of the real comers of the country in the 133-pound division. His name is Jimmy Duffy and he hails from Lockport, N. Y., where they think there is nobody quite as good. Jimmy and his prowess are brought before Chicagoans with a great deal of sharpness because he recently got a foul decision over Jack Britton, the North Sider, who is so highly regarded around this man's town. Britton and Duffy had a corking good battle in the ring at Buffalo, but in the sixth round Jack was told to go to his corner because of what the referee termed persistent fouling.

UP to that time the milling had been about as pretty as anybody could wish to see and of course the Lockport and Buffalo friends of Duffy were yelling madly for their favorite because he appeared to be holding Jack to about an even break despite the fact that he had been upset in the second round for an eight count with a corking rap on the chin. Duffy got over that blow easily and fought back so well that many figured that had the battle gone the full ten rounds Jimmy would have been returned the winner.

EVIDENTLY the dispatches that were sent out after the contest did Duffy a rank injustice, for several of them accused Duffy of quitting and laying down on the job. Nothing was further from the truth unless all of the Buffalo papers are badly fooled in Duffy, because not one of them mentions such a thing. Britton himself says Duffy must be a game lad to get up the way he did and fight back after getting a stunning crack on the chin early in the battle. The men have been rematched for the 16th and then we shall see.

BERT FINCH, who is handling Duffy's business affairs, claims his man is the real comer of the division and that his even contest recently with Packey McFarland stamps him as one of the best of the new crop of lightweights. In addition to this feat Jimmy held his own over ten rounds with Freddie Welsh, the English champion, and is reported to have bested such good fighting material as Ray Temple, Harry Thomas, the English star, and Young Jack O'Brien. Further, it is small wonder that Jimmy is a red hot favorite around his own town, because he is a clean, likable young fellow with all the earmarks of popularity.

ALAS for the traditions and precedents of recent making in the lightweight division! Willie Ritchie will not make 133 pounds at the ringside for Jose Rivers or any of the rest of them! Joe Gans, thought by many to be the greatest of all of them when he was right, never minded doing the weight, and his immediate successor to the crown, Battling Nelson, insisted upon all dangerous opponents doing ringside weight for him, and not an ounce over 133 pounds either. Then Ad Wolgast, who never was anything but a 128-pounder at his best, followed suit. But Willie, who took the title away from Ad on a foul, puts himself on record in the Rivers negotiations as being against the precedent, and evidently for quite consequential reasons.

THUS are changes wrought in the fighting game. Weight limits are only what a champion may choose to make them. Ritchie can name 135 pounds as the lightweight limit and will have as much basis for his claims as did Gans, Nelson and Wolgast when they insisted upon 133. Verily, it is the champion's last say in all things.

* * *

WE surely thought Harry Pollok was going to make a lot of fuss out on the coast by slapping Freddie Welsh, English champion, at them out there. But Pollok evidently doesn't see much chance at this time of getting on a match with Ritchie, for he is content to let Freddie go along and battle a lot of second-raters up in the Canadian Northwest. Welsh is in grand form right now and going like the department to a 4-11 fire. Certainly Harry's stand is a peculiar one.

Sporting Food

By GEORGE E. PHAIR

BASEBALL FRAPPE.

An oil stove underneath my frigid feet,
Another stove beside me on the seat,
A pair of carmuffs and a coat of fur,
And what care I how fierce the tempests beat?

Knee deep in June, as calendars will show,
And through our frame the chills run to and fro,
How sweet 'twould be to watch a game in June
If one were only like an Eskimo.

We palpitate with every passing gust,
We quake as though our very bones would bust,
And wonder if the blokes who run the game
Are working for the Undertakers' Trust.

F. Schulte, after the fashion of F. Chance, complains of severe headaches, but H. Zim rests happy in the knowledge that he is immune.

Polo may be surrounded by money, glamour and social prestige, but when we examine it closely we find it is nothing but shinny with a university training.

Still, Connie Mack does not consider it an ill omen when his athletes win thirteen pastimes in a row.

A. Wolgast, pugilist, reports an injured thumb. This puts him at a great disadvantage when beating up the typewriter.

Whenever we hear of a schoolboy running the hundred in 9 4-5, we are reminded that a simple snap of the thumb can break a world's record.

There are various things that overpower us with profound lethargy, one of which is the question of a successor to the late L. McCarty.

The more we think of polo, the more we are impressed by the safety and sanity of football.

SPORT.

Lives of poloists remind us
We can cause a lot of thrills,
And, departing, leave behind us
Naught but undertakers' bills.

Yes, Rollo; one might say without fear of contradiction that it was a horse on Foxhall Keene.

J. McGraw avers that some of his athletes have to be driven to eat, demonstrating that there is a vast abyss between a ball player and a pugilist.

In view of Mr. McGraw's sentiments on the eats question, it is rumored that Rudy Unholz will ask for a tryout with the Giants.

GOOD NIGHT.

She was a phantom of delight,
A chicken wondrous fair.
Her smile was bright, her step was light
As if she walked on air.

And as I lamped her azure eye
It made my bosom throb.
"Some squab!" quoth I while passing by;
"Considerable squab!"

The justly celebrated rose
Is there with many a thorn;
My pulses froze from head to toes
Upon the morrow morn.

A motorbike came tearing by
And she was on the rear.
"Good night!" quoth I and heaved a sigh
And wiped away a tear.

'Tis true it matters not to me;
Perchance she knows her mind.
And yet, if she could only see
The way she looks behind!

YANKEES AFTER TWIRLER.

CHRISTY MATHEWSON'S BIG LEAGUE GOSSIP

NEW YORK, June 11.—Fans all over the country have been discussing the Cincinnati Reds. Also when this team is mentioned, Joe Tinker's name is usually brought into the argument. Personally, I am strong for Joe at all times. He is a great friend of mine, and I consider him one of the greatest shortstops the game has ever known. As a leader of men, Joe must prove his worth. He has a hard task before him, but is made of the right stuff to make good. Let me state right here that the Reds are a rejuvenated outfit. They look more like the "Tinkers" every day, and I do not expect to see them finish last by any means. They will give any club a good battle now, because the pitching staff has been tightened up, and the rest of the team never did have so very many kinks in it. Tinker is busy ironing them out, and he is the boy who can iron.

BENTON and Suggs have always been good pitchers, but neither struck form in the early part of the race. Tinker said to me in Cincinnati a week ago:

"Every time I sent a man to the box in the first part of the season, I sent a prayer with him, and usually it did no good."

The theory that a team can win with bad pitching was long ago disproved in baseball. The best club in the world cannot. The addition of Ames, Devore and Groh has put new life into the "Tinkers." This may sound like a criticism of McGraw's judgment in making the trade, but, in reality, it is a boost. A change of venue, as the lawyers say, often benefits a ball player for many reasons, the same as a change of climate will help the health of a sickly person. Sometimes the fans "get on" a man, and he becomes discouraged in the city. He will go somewhere else and play his head off. Then the traded player always wants to impress on his old boss the fact he has made a mistake in letting him go.

NEITHER Devore nor Groh was good enough to play regularly on the Giants this year, in McGraw's opinion, and his judgment of a ball player has been confirmed by his record. This does not mean that McGraw thought either one was a poor performer, but he believed he had better men to put in the game every day. Players sitting on the bench are of small benefit to any manager. The Giants needed a pitcher for the coming double-headers. McGraw liked Fromme and got him. Wait until he has had a fair chance, and he will vindicate McGraw.

Devore has always been a fast, game ball player, and, confidentially, McGraw hated to let him pass along, but Tinker insisted and refused to accept anyone else. "Josh" has been going great guns since he joined out with the "Tinkers," and I hope he keeps it up. Ames has always had hard luck in New York. He has shown real stuff in Cincinnati, and will doubtless build up a reputation for himself there. New York is the hardest city in the country for a ball player to make good in, because everybody is always out to beat the Big Town boys.

THE trade will probably work out in the same way with Hal Chase, who was passed along to the Chicago White Sox by Frank Chance. It won't be two weeks before fans will be saying that Chance was crazy to let a player like Chase go, because Hal will get his back up and play for his life. But the Yankees were in last place, and Chase was not getting them out of it. He will want to make a hit with his new following of fans, and just watch him go.

* * *

IN St. Louis the Philadelphia club will strike no soft spot, particularly if it meets the mercury at the place we found it. The Cardinals are accustomed to playing in that heat. They are a great in-and-out bunch. One day they will act like champions and the next like a flock of dubs. It is not a steady team. If the Phillies catch them in a championship spell, they want to watch out. Griner, Harmon and Sallee are moving very smoothly in the pitcher's box right now. Let me conclude by saying that I do not fear the Phillies for the pennant. Maybe the St. Louis club looks better to me, because it has always been a hard crowd for the Giants to beat.

RINGSIDE NOTES

Jim Savage and Sailor White, the two husky heavyweights, who battle at the Auditorium-Armory on Friday night will arrive in Atlanta to-day. Danny Morgan will accompany Savage, while McKetrick will be Savage's partner.

* * *

Both boxers will continue training here until Friday, so as to be in great shape at ring time. The two heavyweights have been doing hard work in New York for the past ten days and will need but light work to fit them for the fray.

George Carpentier is after another match with Frank Klaus. George Engle, manager of the Pittsburg middleweight, has received a wire from the Frenchman asking them to cross the ocean again. Klaus and Carpentier met in Dieppe, France, June 24, 1912, and the steel-ribbed Pittsburger with the 60-horse power punch stopped the Frenchman in eighteen rounds.

Engle also has a few words to say regarding Klaus' recent mill against Jack Dillon. Engle says that Klaus was given the worse deal of his career, and should have at least been handed a draw. "We will gladly battle Dillon again, but would much prefer a bout over the 20-round route," says Engle.

Rivers has finally landed the Willie Ritchie go. After much dickering the pair finally came together yesterday and agreed on terms. Weibe Tommy Murphy, Leach Cross and Bud Anderson were all ready to step in and take Rivers' place in case the Mexican failed to reach terms with the title holder.

New York fans are picking Cross to trim Anderson when the two battle on the coast. They point to the fact that a slugger has never defeated the Eastern lightweight and Bud is a typical mixer. Leach's deadly wallop is expected to put the coast sensation away.

Johnny Coulon does not intend to box Kid Williams at Baltimore and have a Baltimore man act as referee. The fans at the Maryland city refuse to stand for an out-of-town official, which means that the pair of bantamweights will probably clash on the coast. Tom McCarey is wild after the match.

* * *

Mike Gibbons is certainly keeping himself busy these days. The St. Paul sensation was matched yesterday to take on Young Ahearn at New York on Thursday night, and has practically to take on Young Denny at New Orleans.

Harry Trendall has refused to meet Charlie White at St. Louis. This makes the third scrapper who has turned down offers to meet the Chicago boy in the last two weeks. Tommy Murphy turned down an offer from Kenosha, Wis., Johnny Lore dodged a bout with the Chicagoan at New Orleans and Trendall turned his head from the St. Louis promoters.

Buffalo fans are going wild over the Britton-Duffy go to be staged there on June 16. They are boosting Duffy as the next lightweight champion and are anxious to see him down Danny Morgan's speed marvel.

Spider Britt threatens to quit the ring forever if he fails to defeat Meyer Pries at the Auditorium-Armory on Friday night. Britt has worked hard for this bout and looks to be in great shape. He is anxious to prove that his former victory over Pries was far from a fluke.

Kid Williams is another boxer, who is rapidly gathering in the dough. The Baltimore boy will take on Jem Kenrick in a fifteen-round affair at Baltimore to-night and is practically assured of a meeting with Johnny Coulon July 4. Ever since Williams defeated Eddie Campi on the coast last year he has been a big card.

* * *

MRS. SULLIVAN PLAYS WELL IN VIRGINIA TOURNEY

RICHMOND, VA., June 11.—Mrs. Willard Sullivan, former woman champion of the South, again showed championship form Tuesday afternoon when she defeated Miss Martha Robinson, 6-0, 6-1, in the women's singles in the second day's matches of the Old Dominion Tennis Club tourney.

It is now practically certain that she will compete with Mrs. Saunders Taylor, of Norfolk, for possession of the Challenge Cup. Each has won the cup twice.

Nat Thornton, of Atlanta, got into play for the first time Tuesday afternoon with Shaner, of Lynchburg, for his partner. The pair easily defeated Donan and Mullen, 6-1, 6-0. It looks as if Thornton will have but little trouble retaining the cup which he won last year.

COULON INJURES HAND; BURNS BOUT POSTPONED

CHICAGO, June 11.—Johnny Coulon has gone and jammed up his right hand on a training partner. So the championship fight with Frankie Burns, originally scheduled for next Monday night in Kenosha, has been postponed one week.

The Coulon-Williams match for Baltimore July 4 is definitely off.

NASHVILLE GETS MORE FROM CHATTANOOGA CLUB

NASHVILLE, TENN., June 11.—President Hirsig, of the local ball club, has purchased Pitcher Forest More from the Chattanooga club. The price was not made public.

More in 1912 was rated as one of the leading twirlers in the league, but his work this season has not been up to his usual standard. Schwartz believes, however, that he will prove of great value to the Vols on account of his experience.

Walvers have been asked on Pitcher McManus to make room for More.

GRIFFITH STOPS BROCK IN NINTH ROUND AT AKRON

Phillies Lead All in Home Runs

Magee Sets Hot Pace With Five

ONE of the reasons why the Phillies, after reaching the top rung of the championship ladder on May 4, have managed to keep possession of it has been the ability of the players to punch out four-baggers. The Quakers easily are the home run kings of the major league world, and to May 24, inclusive, had made sixteen of the sixty-eight circuit clouts manufactured in Tom Lynch's organization.

To the same date in the American League twenty-eight four-bag blows had been struck, so Dooin's Daisies have to their credit one-sixth of the major league home run output of 1913.

Sherwood Magee, Luderus and Cravath are the dangerous athletes on the Quaker combination. These three men have whaled out twelve four-baggers and have broken up many a combat. Magee has five homers to his credit, of which three were secured off right handers and two off left handers. Sherwood obtained his first loop-the-loop swat on April 26, off Hub Perdue, of the Braves; his second and third off Rube Marquard, of the Giants, on May 5; his fourth off Marty O'Toole, of the Pirates, on May 12, and his fifth off Howard Camnitz, of the same combination, on the following day.

Luderus Has Four Homers.

Fred Luderus has poled four homers, his first hit of this kind being made at the Polo Grounds off Jeff Tesreau and the next three wallops being manufactured in Philadelphia. The pitchers "Ludy" maltreated at home were Steele, of St. Louis, and Harter and Brown, of Cincinnati. Luderus has had the happy faculty of making his four-baggers at opportune moments, for the hits off Steele and Brown won games for the Doolnites.

Cravath a Great Hitter.

Cravath, who, if he could field as well as he can hit, would stand an excellent chance of winning the car offered by Hugh Chalmers, of Detroit, for the National League's most valuable player, has three homers to his credit. He gained the first while acting as a pinch-hitter, smiting the first ball served him by Christy Mathewson and promptly driving it out of the lot. Rube Marquard and Howard Camnitz are the other flingers whom Cravath has jarred for homers.

Three Players Set Mark.

No Quaker has as yet turned the trick accomplished by Joe Jackson, Lee Magee and Joe Connelly this year—that of hammering out a four-bagger when all the bases had occupants—but the season still is in its infancy, as Charles Hercules Ebbets would say. Cravath has to share with Alva Williams, of the Senators, the distinction of having smote for the circuit when acting as a sub swatter and Sherwood Magee has to share with Charley Stengel, of the Superbas, the honor of having contributed two four-baggers in the same controversy. Stengel, like Magee, got his brace of four-baggers off a southpaw, Otto Hess, of the Braves, being the man whom the Brooklynite stung. The number of home runs made by the Phillies this year and the pitchers off whom they were made will be found below:

Magee—5.

April 26—Off Perdue, Boston.
May 5—Off Marquard, New York.
May 12—Off O'Toole, Pittsburg.
May 13—Off Camnitz, Pittsburg.

Luderus—4.

April 22—Off Tesreau, New York.
May 9—Off Steele, St. Louis, game resulting 3 to 1 in Phillies' favor and victory being due to homer, made with man on base.
May 21—Off Harter, Cincinnati.
May 23—Off Brown, Cincinnati, game resulting 4 to 1 in Phillies' favor and victory being due to homer made with man on base.

Cravath—3.

May 3—Off Mathewson, New York. "Cactus" made this four-bagger while pinch-hitting for Killifer in the eighth inning and when the score was 2 to 0 in the Giants' favor. He hit the first ball pitched Phillies, and the Phillies eventually won out 3 to 2.
May 5—Off Marquard, New York.
May 13—Off Camnitz, Pittsburg.

Knabe—1.

May 12—Off O'Toole, Pittsburg. F. Otto chose a psychological moment for his homer, inserting it into the ninth inning when the Pirates were one run ahead and when a defeat would have tumbled the Phillies into second place. The hit tied the score and in the eleventh the Phillies won out.

Paskert—1.

May 8—Off Harmon, St. Louis. "Dode" made this homer in the first inning and on the first ball pitched.

Doolan—1.

May 16—Off Toney, Chicago.

Seaton—1.

May 21—Off Harter, Cincinnati.

White City Park Now Open

LOOK IN THE GLASS TO-DAY

Be Honest With Yourself. Study the Cause for Your Looks.

"Be honest with yourself," says the Quaker Health Teacher. "What is it that gives you that sallow complexion, those lusterless eyes and furrows on your face which should be smooth? Probably you think your health is good, but there must be some reason, and more often than not your troubles are caused by a sluggish liver and disordered stomach. A good complexion, a clear skin, a good appetite and a feeling of health and strength are every person's desire, and there is no reason why he should not have them all.

"A well-known lady living in this city, who does not wish her name published, told me: 'I thought I was in fair health, but kept getting thinner and thinner. I was so yellow that I thought my complexion must be gone forever; I was troubled with pimples on my face and was told that the life and sparkle had left my eyes; felt dull and listless; getting up in the morning more tired than when I lay down at night. I am a mother and believe I love my family as much as anyone can, but I found I was getting cross with my children and snappy with my husband. It took me some time to realize this, but when I did I thought there must be a cause, and I must cure that cause. I had been reading of the cures that the Quaker Extract had been making, and some people I am acquainted with concluded to give it a trial. Now, in less than three weeks my husband and children are once more glad to meet me with kisses and my friends exclaim when I meet them: "How well you look!" You may rest assured that I will always speak well of the Quaker Extract. It has done so much for me.'"

Don't put it off any longer, but get started on the road to health to-day. The Quaker Remedies can be obtained at Coursey & Munn's drug store, 29 Marietta Street. If you suffer with rheumatism, catarrh, kidney, liver, stomach, bladder or blood troubles, indigestion, constipation, start to-day and get well. The Quaker Extract will cure you the same as it has cured hundreds of others. Call to-day and obtain Quaker Extract, 3 for $2.50, 6 for $5.00. Oil of Balm, 25c, or 5 for $1.00. We prepay all express charges on all orders of $2.00 or over.

NEW PRIZES IN PONY CONTEST ROUSE BOYS AND GIRLS OF GEORGIA

I nominate, as a candidate in The Hearst's Sunday American and Atlanta Georgian Pony Outfit Contest:

Name .....

Address .....

Nominated by .....

Address .....

GOOD FOR 1,000 VOTES.

Only One Nomination Blank Can be Voted for Any Contestant.

Since the original announcement of the contest, nothing has aroused interest among the boys and girls of Atlanta and the State as did the news that The Georgian and American are to give many more prizes to the youngsters besides the twelve pony outfits.

And second only to this piece of information was the announcement of several bargain offers—inducements to quick action.

There is an offer of 50,000 extra votes for the first $30 turned in by each contestant within a specified and brief time.

There are extraordinary offers of extra votes for clubs of five subscriptions for yearly, half yearly and three-months subscriptions.

NO LIMIT PUT ON CLUGS.

No limit is put on the number of clubs which may be brought in by any contestant—the more the better for the contestant and for us. Each club brings the same number of extra votes, besides the regular vote schedule allowed for the subscriptions.

All of these things have put new life into the contest.

There is a standing invitation to the contestants, their parents, their relatives and friends to call at the contest department and talk it over. Many are availing themselves of this invitation. Ordinarily, children are seen but infrequently in a newspaper office. But of late in The Georgian and American offices they have become such frequent callers that they attract no notice except from the contest managers, who always find time to talk to them.

One thing which should be emphasized is that it is not too late for any child to enter the contest and win. No leader in any of the eleven districts has an insuperable advantage. All of them can be passed, and this with the cost only of a little energetic work.

EASY TO EXTEND SUBSCRIPTIONS.

"But everyone I know takes The Georgian and American," said one little fellow the other day.

"How can I get new subscriptions?"

The answer is that while the subscribers to The Georgian and American in Atlanta would by themselves make up a large city, and while doubtless most of the contestants' friends do read these papers, still this very friendship for the publications makes it easy to induce them to subscribe for a definite term instead of from week to week, and to get them to pay in advance for a year or half year.

No contestant need fear; votes are to be had for the asking.

Jury Trial Allowed In Bankruptcy Case

MACON, June 11.—In allowing the demand for a jury trial for the Beach Manufacturing Company, of Appling County, a $500,000 lumber firm charged with insolvency, Judge Emory Speer, in the United States Court, reminded the attorneys he still had the privilege of either expressing his opinion to the jury or of directing a verdict.

Judge Speer said this is the first instance of a demand being made before him for a jury trial in a bankruptcy case.

J. O. Beach, president of the company, is a brother-in-law of Representative C. G. Edwards, of Savannah.

SUPREME COURT ADJOURNS DESPITE STATE RATE CASES

SILVER SERVICE PRESENTED TO GOVERNOR

Governor Joseph M. Brown was tendered a genuine "surprise party" by the National Guard of Georgia last night.

The State military organizations, through a few chosen officers, slipped up on their commander-in-chief at the Executive Mansion, where he was giving a reception to the Georgia Tech graduating class, and presented his excellency with about $1,000 worth of solid silver as a token of their respect and esteeme.

The Governor was expecting some of his officers last night, for they had been especially invited to the reception. He likes to have them present at all his receptions.

When the big gathering was called to order, Chief of Staff Frederic J. Paxon told the Governor how much the military boys of the State love him and appreciate his attitude toward them, and that it was the military's desire to present him a substantial token of its nigh regard.

After Colonel Paxon had finished his speech, the most gorgeous display of silverware ever shown in the mansion was uncovered in an adjoining room.

Governor Brown was quite overcome. He found it difficult to gather himself sufficiently to respond. Finally, in a very happy speech, he paid high tribute to the militia and its importance to the State.

The magnificent gift was paid for by voluntary subscriptions from members of the National Guard all over the State. The idea of presenting the Governor the silver was conceived in Atlanta a month ago. Subscriptions of from $1 to $20 were sent in by 200 or more members of the State military.

The matter was kept a secret among the military. Outside the Adjutant General's office in Atlanta, the only persons in on the secret were Mrs. Brown and the Governor's private secretary, Colonel Jesse Perry.

City Sunday Schools Headed by Dr. Hull

Dr. Marion McH. Hull, superintendent of the North Avenue Presbyterian Sunday School, was elected president of the Atlanta Association of Sunday School Superintendents at the monthly meeting of the association at Wesley Memorial Church Tuesday night. John S. Spalding, superintendent of the Second Baptist Sunday School, was elected secretary.

Among those who spoke Tuesday night were George Hinman, retiring president; John S. Spalding, J. W. Awtry, Dr. Hull and C. V. Lecraw. The next meeting will be held July 15 at the North Avenue Presbyterian Church.

"Miss Keller will not go to Spain. She will stay at my home here in Wrentham to rest and gain strength till August, when she will go to Bay View, Mich., to lecture at the chautauqua there. Then she will return here and stay till October, when her winter lecture tour begins."

SEQUEL TO LOVE FOR DOLL

Maternal Instinct Greatly Developed by Teaching Children to Love Their Dolls.

The little child's doll is mother to the most romantic fairy. And in the years that pass, the doll fades into the petals of a June rose, to evolve the most wondrous of all transformations.

And now comes a more serious period when the joy of real motherhood should be as tranquil as best effort can provide.

This is accomplished with a wonderful remedy known as Mother's Friend, an external application so penetrating in its nature as to thoroughly lubricate every cord, nerve, muscle and tendon involved.

There will be no pain, none of that nausea or morning sickness, no sensation of distress or strain of expanding muscles. The nerves, too, will be calm, thus making the period one of restful days, of peaceful nights and a source of happiest anticipation.

The young, expectant mother must be carefully watchful lest she become absorbed in those mental distresses which fly prepare her for the most important event in her life.

Mother's Friend enables her to avoid all sensation of dread, worry or pain, and thus she is preserved in health and strength to take up the joyful task of motherhood.

You will find Mother's Friend on sale at all drug stores at $1 a bottle. Do not fail to use it regularly as directed. Write to-day to Bradfield Regulator Company, 135 Lamar Building, Atlanta, Ga., for their most valuable little guide book for expectant mothers.

FINES POOR WAY TO ENFORCE DISCIPLINE

Employers Have No Right to Dock Girls, Then Work Them Overtime, Says Forbes.

By B. C. FORBES.

Do you call this honest?

In certain places of employment, notably stores, workers are severely fined for being late in the morning, yet whenever necessary these same workers are forced to stay overtime without receiving one cent of extra pay—not even the return of the morning fine.

* * *

I am told that in one store employees getting only a few dollars a week are fined twenty-five cents for being one minute late, and if they are late twice in one week the rate of the penalty is doubled—that is to say, fifty cents is docked each morning. Yet this same store often orders its help at certain counters to stay after regular hours, but pays them nothing for such additional service.

* * *

Mr. Employer, is that fair? Because you are on top, have you any right to act so arbitrarily? You can do it with poor, unorganized shop girls, but you know you would not dare attempt it with members of a strong union.

All a worker has to sell is his or her labor. If you take that, are you not stealing from him or her? If one of these workers were to adopt your principle—rather, lack of principle—and steal goods in payment of the extra service rendered, you would brand him or her a thief, wouldn't you? Well, what are you when you fine a six-dollar-a-week worker twenty-five cents or fifty cents for being a little late in the morning and then compel the same worker to stay twice or six times as long overtime in the evening without payment?

We hear a lot about unreasonable action by labor unions, but are they guilty of anything more unreasonable, more unfair, more unjust than this?

Employers cannot expect to be allowed to continue to browbeat workers. The pendulum of justice may swing slowly, but it does swing. All over the world there is an uprising against unjust autocracy. There is a revolt against every form of tyranny. The "privileged class" is to lose its privileges. Justice between man and man, between class and mass, is to be enforced. The movement has made almost unimaginable progress—we have seen it in Russia, in China, in the Balkans, in Great Britain, in the United States. Right cannot be trampled under foot forever. The eternal scheme of things decrees that justice must triumph in the end.

Taking advantage of poorly-paid, unprotected help is not a small matter. It has far-reaching, incendiary consequences. It breeds discontent—and justly so. It arouses antagonism to employers and to capital—as it ought. In the fulness of time this discontent, this antagonism will vent itself in the form of legislation which may deal none too gently with employers and capital. Those who pay wages are rapidly losing hold of the machinery of legislation—glance at Britan, at Germany at Belgium, at Britain, at Germany, at Australia, at New Zealand, at South Africa.

Employers who have dealt inconsiderately with their workers simply because there was nobody to say "Nay" cannot hope to receive scrupulous consideration when these workers climb into the saddle. One foot is already in the stirrup.

* * *

This may seem an unnecessarily deep dissertation upon so apparently small a matter as fining workers for being late in the morning and forcing them to work late in the evening without compensation. But the principle involved is not small, it is not unimportant, it is not transient. It is of the eternal verities. To conduct a business on such lines is disgraceful.

Oh, yes; I know discipline must be strictly enforced. I know it would never do to let thoughtless girls and boys or irresponsible grown-ups come sauntering in to work at any old hour they saw fit. Stores must pull up their shades and factories must open their doors promptly at specified hours and it is imperative that every man, woman and youth be on hand at the prescribed minute. But to deduct an hour's wages for being five minutes late and then steal an extra hour's work from everybody or anybody is not a proper way to insure discipline. It undermines discipline. It begets righteous indignation and disloyalty. What's sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. The employer must play fair. He must do as he would be done by.

* * *

Let every employer digest this truth: If he will not act justly voluntarily he will be COMPELLED to be just before the world is very much older. The graver the sin now, the worse the punishment by and by.

COTTON GOSSIP

There was a big "jumble" of trade in July yesterday, with the buying and selling so mixed that nobody could tell what the leading Liverpool interests did for the day by balance. One thing is certain, Wall Street and Southern shorts covered freely, much of it on stop orders, and as nobody dared to go short of it, the contracts presumably came from both leading and trailing longs.

* * *

Many traders think the worst is over in July and that commission houses accounts booked up to last night are pretty well evened up.

* * *

New crops' strength yesterday was due mostly to July, although some kicks from Georgia played their part.

When the flurry in July carried that option to 12.25 yesterday, which was started by Wall Street covering, the selling at this point became general and a 20-point reaction followed quickly. It was reported that the larger spot interests were principal sellers.

* * *

It is generally believed that the short interest in July has been reduced to a great extent.

"It was rumored yesterday afternoon that there had been a settlement in July, but this was not considered seriously as there is no reason at this time to expect such a move," says J. M. Anderson.

NEW ORLEANS, June 11.—Hayward & Clark: The map shows favorable weather; further rains in South Texas; clearing elsewhere. Temperatures are too low in eastern and northern belt, but this will be quickly remedied. The most important development is that fair weather has set in.

Liverpool cables: "American middling fair, 7.32d; good middling, 6.98d; middling, 6.74d; low middling, 6.58d; good ordinary, 6.22d; ordinary, 5.88d."

The New Orleans Times-Democrat says: "The talent danced attendance on the speculative rings all day long. Cotton played havoc with shorts and stocks played havoc with longs. Professionals seem to have lost the power of perception and seem to have got in bad all along the line. The same people appeared to be short of cotton and long of stocks. Theoretically speculators were covering short cotton lines in order to protect stock holdings. It was a gay old session and one the talent will not soon forget.

"The weather map barometer lines formed a series of circles, wheels within wheels, like the market. All sections of the belt with the exception of Southwest Texas have been adequately soaked, with more rain promised. Southwest Texas will probably have received rain by to-night. Amateur weather men, however, say no more hard rains are likely to fall anywhere in the belt at this time. At the close the cotton contract market question remaining to be answered was, Did New York July shorts effect a settlement? Rumor said they did. The commission men in closest touch with the position said they did not. In the absence of a July sentiment, higher prices for the midsummer position are practically inevitable.

"Yesterday's reaction in the cotton market followed close on the heels of cabled reports of actual fighting among the Balkan allies, weather and crops now being ignored, and the bear talent having lost confidence in its own judgment. Heavy sales of the actual at Liverpool day after day, and the relative as well as the actual strength of the Savannah spot market, which is the nearest source of supply to New York, have within a day or two done about as much to disturb professional equilibrium as the controlled July position has done in a week. Bears have simply lost all courage of conviction. Until they regain their stamina, the market will be one-sided."

COTTON GOSSIP.

NEW YORK, June 11.—N. L. Carpenter & Co.: The market opened steady, but the ring was inclined to sell on the favorable weather map. Gwathmey and Schill were the leading sellers. Cone bought at the outset, but quickly switched his transactions and sold July after the call.

There was some scattered short covering early on low temperature through some portions of the belt.

PROFIT-TAKING LOWERS COTTON

NEW YORK, June 11.—The cotton market opened easier to-day, first prices 1 to 6 points higher. There were prospects for clearing weather over the belt and cables were not as good as have been expected or local prices would have been higher. Old crops showed the most loss over night.

Spot houses sold July freely after the call.

During the forenoon the market became easier. Schill offered large blocks of October at 11.31. Favorable weather conditions also aided, except for low temperatures in some sections, which caused scattered short covering. The ring, however, was inclined to sell, resulting in prices shading sharply from the initial level, being 3 to 4 points lower.

It is generally believed among conservatives that the short interest has been largely eliminated during the past few days.

The map indicates fair weather generally, except possibly more rain in south and west Texas; slowly rising temperatures, except stationary and continued cool weather in certain sections.

The market ruled steady during the late forenoon. There was a scattered demand for July, which was attributed mainly to shorts. The principal selling came mostly from spot houses. Prices, however, held steady around the early high point. Later the ring renewed their attack by selling freely on a bearish report from Cordill, resulting in a sharp decline from the opening range.

Habersham King was also out with a bearish report. He says the recent cold wave in Oklahoma and Arkansas, while showing unseasonably low temperatures, was not severe enough to do any damage and has now moderated materially. Also wet conditions of the fields are not considered as injurious, though very threatening.

At the close the market was steady at a net decline of 7 to 13 points from the final quotations of Tuesday.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, June 11.—The map shows favorable developments over night. Fair weather in the north central belt. Partly cloudy to cloudy elsewhere. Precipitation very light, except that moderate rains fell over the Atlantic coast districts and south Texas. Temperatures rose in the western States, but dropped somewhat in the eastern half of the belt. Indications are for generally clearing weather, except possibly more rain in south and west Texas. Rising temperatures, except stationary in the northeastern quarter of the belt, where it will continue cool. The cool wave has greatly diminished in intensity, and warm, normal weather will prevail in a few days. The most important development is the change to fair weather and the slight check caused by cool weather will soon be remedied.

Liverpool came in poor on futures, which were about 4 points lower than due, but spot prices are quoted 4 points higher; sales, 12,000 bales.

London reports hostilities commenced between Servia and Bulgaria. The London market is gloomy on fear of war in Balkans in consequence of the collapse of the peace conference. Political tension is high throughout Europe.

Our market opened unchanged with trading held in abeyance by the traders waiting for a cue from July in New York. As this option shows no life and eased a few points, the market gave way to 12.19 for July and 11.34 for October up to noon. The advance worked through July in New York during the past two days has naturally made new crop shorts very nervous and the cool spell ceased undue apprehension of damage. This feeling, however, was relieved by a Government forecast of fair, warmer weather for the central and eastern States.

MILLER-CARTER COTTON LETTER.

MEMPHIS, June 11.—It is evident from the action of the market that short interest has been eliminated or greatly reduced. Even July acts heavy and Liverpool is said to be selling some. Some early buying on low temperatures east, but warmer weather is on the way, which, following recent general rains, must greatly stimulate growth.

It is always possible to twist summer contracts when New York stock is small, but barring fresh manipulation of this sort the market should gradually seek lower levels.

CANADIAN PACIFIC LEADS BIG SLUMP

Upturn of Morning Gives Ground Before Great Bear Onslaught Near Close of Day.

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, June 11.—The invariable upturn which follows a slump in the stock market presented itself at the opening to-day and material gains ranging well over a point were scored.

London was a good buyer and many who were on the bear side of the market yesterday covered to-day.

Among the gains were Amalgamated Copper 1½, Utah Copper ½, Colorado Fuel and Iron 1, Lehigh Valley 1¼, Union Pacific 1¼, Atchison ¼, Baltimore and Ohio 1⅜, Great Northern preferred 1, United States Steel common ¾, Southern Railway ⅝, Reading ¾, Chino Copper ⅜, and California Petroleum ½.

The tone was strong. Chesapeake and Ohio, which was keenly watched because of the mysterious pressure which has been exerted against it on the present movement, opened at 56, or 1⅜ over Tuesday's final. Chicago and Northwestern was up ½. Louisville and Nashville was one of the few stocks which did not respond to the sympathetic wave of strength, losing ½. Frisco second preferred lost ¼.

At 10:30 Union Pacific had sold up to 141 for a net gain of 1½. Southern Pacific sold at 90⅝ for a gain of ⅛. Missouri Pacific, which yesterday sold down to the lowest level since the death of Jay Gould, opened ½ higher.

The curb was steady.

Americans and Canadian Pacific in London were firm.

The only important recession in the late forenoon was in Great Northern preferred, which reacted 1¼ to 117¾, with fractional losses in Steel, Copper and Lehigh Valley. Canadian advanced 1 point to 217¼. Union Pacific lost ⅛ since its opening. Pennsylvania and Missouri Pacific 1⅛ and Atlantic Coast Line gained 1 point. Steel unchanged. The tone in the last few minutes of the morning session was weak.

Call money loaning at 2½.

After a period of dullness the market again turned weak in the last hour and under assaults from the bears prices were forced away below the morning level. Canadian Pacific led in the slump, selling around 211¼ for a net loss of 5 points.

A battle raged around Steel with two big rival forces in the Street pitted against each other. Steel fluctuated between 61⅞ and 60¼ for a loss of about 1 point. Bear cliques in London and Berlin hammered the international issues, especially Canadian Pacific, in an evident attempt to weaken the whole list. Many orders, carrying the condition that they be placed in the market a few minutes before the close, were received during the early afternoon hours.

St. Paul broke through par for a loss of a point. There was a heavy selling of Reading, which sold 1⅜ under the midday level. Union Pacific was off ¾. Amalgamated Copper lost all its gain and droped ⅜ under last night's final. The tone was weak.

The market closed dull. Government bonds unchanged; other bonds steady.

Child Eats Core of Baseball and Dies

PHILADELPHIA, June 11.—Six-year-old Annie MacAntee, who lived near Shibe Park, is dead at her home from inflammation of the stomach from eating the rubber core of an American League baseball that had been knocked over the fence.

So many balls have been knocked over the fences recently that the children have grown tired of preserving them as trophies and the child cut it open and chewed the rubber that is placed around the cork-centered sphere.

LET THE GRAND JURY INVESTIGATE DICTOGRAPH RECORDS

FROM the moment the famous, or infamous, dictograph records were made public, it has been clear to every right-thinking person that the only way to get at the truth was to have an investigation by the Grand Jury.

Charges and counter charges have been made, until the public is so bewildered that the real issues have been lost sight of. What is wanted is THE TRUTH. Are there any GENUINE dictograph records? Are there any records that will bear LEGAL analysis? If so, whom do they involve?

If the charges, as published, are crooked, or padded, the public has a right to know it. If the records are genuine, the public has a right to know that also.

It is time to STOP this scandal mongering. The Grand Jury is the proper body to investigate, so that the truth may be known.

At the moment Atlanta is being made ridiculous to all the rest of the world, and it is not unlikely that injustice may have been done to some of our officials, and perhaps private citizens also.

It is time to stop muck-raking and establish the truth!

FINANCIERS' WOES ARE NOT FELT HERE

Business in Atlanta and the South is good, according to Atlanta business men. In some cases it is above last year's level.

There is some stringency of money, but well-established business houses, carrying on conservative operations, are getting their usual accommodations from the banks. The country banks in Atlanta territory have been supplied to the limits of their needs by their city agents.

The cotton crop promises well, and it will be made cheaper than any previous Georgia crop. A good crop means remarkable prosperity this fall.

These are the conclusions of Atlanta bankers, who, unwilling that the public should accept Wall Street's view of the situation as final, express their opinion of local conditions.

Colonel Lowry Optimistic.

"Conditions in the South are all right. Business is good, and the demand for money is no greater than it usually is at this season of the year. From, say October, I look for great prosperity," says Colonel Robert J. Lowry, president of the Lowry National Bank.

"The information which reaches us is that the corp is in excellent shape. I talked with one well-informed man yesterday from a section in Georgia which grows a great deal of cotton, and he says he never saw a better crop, since the late rains.

"There is some nervousness, of course, with the tariff and the money reform questions unsettled. I am, as you know, a protectionist. I suppose, though, there are some things which need regulating. Some modification no doubt is desirable. The manufacturers are prepared to meet reductions to some extent.

"I believe it is more important to have the matter cleared up than it is to argue over the exact amount of the changes. It is the unrest, the uncertainty, which causes the nervousness. When the thing is determined one way or another, trade can proceed. Just now textile mills, for instance, can not make trades, because they do not know just what the future basis will be.

Urges Moderate Revision.

"Things are going to turn out all right. As I said, although I am and always have been a protectionist, I believe we could stand a moderate revision downward of the tariff. I believe in the income tax, too. I would make no exceptions, though. To my mind, the man who makes $100 ought to be willing to give his dollar to the Government, and the man who makes $100,000 ought to be willing to give his $1,000 for the benefits of the Government which he enjoys.

"I have known President Wilson since he was a young lawyer in Atlanta. He is a splendid American. I want to see him upheld.

"Those fellows in New York are a little too blue, I think. We of the South have no cause to fret. No man who is doing a conservative business is going ot be hurt in the least."

Frank Hawkins, president of the Third National Bank, thinks the present conditions are good for the future welfare of the South.

Sees Too Much Trading.

"We have been trading too much, in my opinion," says Mr. Hawkins. "Some little tightness of money is not

Weather Man Says Cold Snap Is Over; Low Record Is 49

After smashing all low records for June 11 in Atlanta with a minimum temperature of 49 degrees Wednesday morning, the mercury left off its frenzied acrobatics and started on a slow and dignified climb to more sane and seasonable levels.

Winter is over on the word of Weather Forecaster VonHerrmann. He promised the mercury would continue its ascent through Wednesday, and Thursday would be still warmer.

The lowest temperature on June 11 of any previous year was in 1885 when the mercury dropped to 57 degrees. Tuesday's high temperature was 56 degrees, the lowest maximum June 10 temperature recorded in Atlanta. June 10, 1891, recorded the lowest maximum temperature previously, 72 degrees.

The temperature Wednesday had reached 56 degrees by 10 o'clock and by noon was in the 60's. The forecast for Thursday is fair with slowly rising temperature.

Daughter of Banker Takes Dare; Elopes

TAMPA, June 11.—Miss Ruth Trice, daughter of John Trice, president of the Citizens' Bank and Trust Company and one of the wealthiest men in South Florida, eloped with George Booker, of the Sims Lumber Company, to-day. Rev. W. W. Dehart married them at the rectory.

The couple attended the wedding of Miss Helen Gunn and Paul Cameron Lindley, of Greensboro, Ga., last night and were joked by their friends about getting married. They took the dare.

Crematory Contract Up Before Council

The crematory contract between the Destructor Company of New York and the City of Atlanta was taken to the office of the City Clerk Wednesday for submission to Council in the afternoon. Council is expected to ratify the contract forthwith.

The first draft of the contract was unsatisfactory to Mayor Woodward because it was dependent in part, he thought, upon the original agreement, nullified by the Supreme Court.

The second contract, it is believed, will receive the Mayor's approval.

Grant Ready to Tell Of Courthouse Row

Dr. Horace Grant said Wednesday he was ready to go before the Grand Jury and tell all he knew about the Felder-Lanford near-fight in the court house.

He was subpenaed for June 12, which, he said, accounted for his not being on hand Tuesday when reports were circulated that he was missing.

GRAND VIZIER OF TURKEY SLAIN IN AUTO

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, June 11.—Mahmud Shevket Pasha, Grand Vizier of Turkey, and his military aide were shot to death to-day by two assassins in the streets of Constantinople. News of the double assassination was first received here in private dispatches. Later it was officially confirmed.

Mahmud Pasha and his aide were automobiling to the Sublime Porte when the murderers, who stood near the entrance of the building, fired upon the motor car with deadly aim.

Mahmud Shevket Pasha, who came into power in February, has been exercising the prerogatives of military dictator. He was one of the chief leaders of the Young Turk party, and the closet adviser of Enver Bey, the commander-in-chief of the Turkish army.

The Grand Vizier was undoubtedly slain in revenge for the murder of Nazim Pasha, War Minister and commander-in-chief of the Ottoman army, who was shot down by Enver Bey last winter.

World Morally Ill, Cardinal Gibbons Tells Graduates

WASHINGTON, June 11.—Cardinal Gibbons told the graduates of the Immaculate Seminary at their commencement exercises here that the world has awakened to the fact that it is morally sick.

"Despite the warnings of the church," the Cardinal said, "it continued to ignore its sickness until the cancer of open vice spread to such an extent that the realization of the seriousness of its condition had to come, and we see the result in the present general warfare being waged against white slavery and its allied vices.

"But with the awakening of the public conscience has come a better order of things and the world is advancing along moral lines that each day makes it a better world to live in."

Climax in Balkan Crisis in 48 Hours

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

VIENNA, June 11.—A climax in the dispute between Servia and Greece and Bulgaria is expected within 48 hours. Czar Nicholas has given a conditional offer to arbitrate the quarrel between Servia and Bulgaria, but he is believed to be too late. Russia is charged with secretly encouraging Servia.

Diplomats here are pessimistic. Dr. Daneff's Cabinet in Sofia is working for peace against great odds.

Slaton to Keep All Brown's Aids but 1

Although no official statement has been given out, it may be taken as a fact that Governor John M. Slaton will retain all of Governor Brown's immediate official family, with one exception.

Colonel Jesse Perry will continue as private secretary and Hardy Ulm as executive secretary. Miss Alma Norris, of Marietta, will continue as official stenographer.

Dr. I. S. Hopkins, of Atlanta, will replace W. R. Power, of Marietta, as warrant and requisition clerk.

Miss Wilson Gives Stinging Rebuke to Street Car Boors

WASHINGTON, June 11.—Miss Eleanor Wilson gave a lesson in street car politeness to-day to three Washington men when she gave up her seat to an old woman.

Miss Wilson, accompanied by Dr. Cary Grayson, White House aide, boarded the car at Connecticut and Florida Avenues. Two old women in shabby black got on at the next corner. Dr. Grayson immediately yielded his seat, but three other men were not as gallant. Miss Wilson, with an indignant look at the men, arose and pilotted the other old woman to her seat, while she swung on a strap the remainder of the way to the White House.

Boom Mrs. Burleson For Next D.A.R. Head

WASHINGTON, June 11.—It is known to-day on good authority that members of the minority party of the D. A. R., which was so overwhelmingly defeated in the election of Mrs. William Cummins Story, of New York, as President General, are planning to oppose the re-election of Mrs. Story two years hence, by making Mrs. A. S. Burleson, wife of the Postmaster-General, a candidate for President-General.

The campaign to elect Mrs. Burleson has already begun.

Deaf Mute Apologizes For Mistreating Wife

MACON, June 11.—A. H. Weininger, deaf-mute, who created a disturbance at his home on Forsyth Street Sunday morning because his wife was slow in responding to his knock on their room door, upon his return from work, has made an apology through the newspapers for the way he treated her.

He says if he had been sober at the time he would not have accused his wife of having someone in the room with her, and that as soon as he regained his proper senses he realized his mistake.

Mississippi to Raise Million for Levees

JACKSON, MISS., June 11.—The Mississippi Legislature convened in extra session yesterday to enact legislation enabling the Mississippi levee board to float bonds for improvement work made necessary by overflows.

The levee board asked for authority to float a $3,000,000 bond issue and to increase the cotton and ad valorem taxes, but a compromise was accepted reducing the bond issue to $1,000,000, and eliminating the tax increases.

'Fleet Can Use Canal By Oct. 1'-Goethals

NEW YORK, June 11.—"If the United States were confronted with war in the Pacific we could float the Atlantic fleet across the Isthmus of Panama by October," declared Colonel George Goethals on his arrival from the Canal Zone.

Colonel Goethals has been summoned to Washington to confer with the Secretary of War. The work on the fortifications is proceeding rapidly; it is on that subject that he will confer with Secretary Garrison.

FUND RAISED TO SECURE BURNS IS UNUSED

Attorney Felder Shows Money Has Been Returned to Donors Wherever Known.

Colonel Thomas B. Felder Wednesday issued an itemized statement of the funds subscribed by Atlanta citizens, to secure the employment of the Burns Detective Agency to investigate the Phagan mystery, to show that these funds had been returned to the donors.

According to Mr. Felder's statement, but $102 was actually subscribed. This amount was placed in the hands of Curtis N. Anderson, a member and treasurer of the law firm of Felder, Anderson, Dillon & Whitman. In a letetr to Colonel Felder, dated June 9, Mr. Anderson gives the following disposition of the fund:

"I have received from contributions to the Burns fund $102. Several of the contributions were anonymously made; in the majority of other cases contributors requested that their names be withheld, and in some cases the addresses of the parties making the donations are unknown to me. Under your direction, I am returning to the contributors the several amounts sent in by them, where the names and addresses of the contributors are known, and I am directed by you to return the balance upon their request.

Felder Pays Extra Expense.

"I also desire to say that you have directed me to charge whatever disbursements have been made, which, by the way, are several times over larger than the contributions that have come in, to your personal account. This I have done."

The following amounts in chronological order were received by Mr. Anderson, according to his report:

May 15—Check, Joseph Hirsch..	$ 25
May 15—Check, Anonymous	30
May 16—Check, Anonymous	5
May 16—Check, Anonymous	1
May 17—Check, not authorized to give name	1
May 17—Check, not authorized to give name	1
May 17—Check, not authorized to give name	25
May 17—Check, not authorized to give name	5
May 23—Check, not authorized to give name	1
May 26—Check,not authorized to give name	5
May 26—Check, not authorized to give name	3
	$102

Along with Mr. Anderson's itemized account of the funds, Mr. Felder makes the following statesment, which he addresses to the public:

"Mr. Charles I. Ryan, who was designated as custodian of the fund without his knowledge or consent, informs me that he has already returned to the contributors whatever money was paid in to him.

"The Atlanta Journal, The Atlanta Constitution and The Atlanta Georgian subscribed $100 each, and I am informed that certain subscriptions were made to them. They have not been paid in and are not expected, and the three newspapers are hereby requested to return to the contributors any sums that they have received.

"In addition to the above and foregoing, permit me to say in conclusion that additional sums aggregating several hundred dollars were subscribed by the public, but were not paid, and payment has not been and will not be requested."

Mr. Felder further stated that he would ask the Bar Association to pass upon the regularity of his employment in the Phagan case and make a report upon it. He also declared his connection with the controversy as ended.

Fain Demands a Speedy Hearing Denies Charges of Rowdyism

Indicted, He Defies His Enemies

W. P. Fain, accused Police Commissioner, above, and J. A. Skaggs, who told story of alleged rowdyism.

Asks Public to Suspend Judgment Until He Can Prove Innocence.

Police Commissioner W. P. Fain was indicted on two counts by the Fulton County Grand Jury, according to the announcement of the jury's findings made public Wednesday morning.

In one bill Mr. Fain is indicted jointly with M. T. Cantrell, of the tailoring firm of Cantrell & McHugh, charged with running a disorderly house at 40 Harris Street, the home of Mr. Cantrell. The other indictment charges Mr. Fain with committing assault and battery upon a woman whose name is unknown to the Grand Jury.

Commissioner Fain, when he learned of the indictment on Wednesday morning, protested his innocence, and asked that judgment by the public be suspended until the case is tried. His statement follows:

"As is known by everyone familiar with the procedure of the court, it is comparatively easy to secure an indictment before the Grand Jury, as they only hear one side of the case. I have no apprehension as to the outcome of the trial, as I know I can prove my innocence beyond a question of a doubt. All that I ask is a speedy trial and that the public will suspend judgment until the facts are known."

Mr. Fain's case is said to have resulted in an indictment by the Grand Jury following close on its investigation of the charge made against him on Tuesday. Two witnesses testified yesterday. They are said to have told of the fight and general disorder in the Harris Street house, and charged Fain with being one of the principals in the fray.

Claim Fain "Fiexd" It.

They testified that while the disorder was in progress Call Officer W. F. Anderson, of the police department, went to the house, but Commissioner Fain arranged matters by telephone with the police headquarters, thereby escaping arrest. These witnesses were Allen Young, a real estate man, and J. A. Skaggs, agent of the Southern Express Company.

G. M. NAPIER ANALYZES PHAGAN CASE

In a Brilliant Letter He Arrays Facts as They Affect Leo M. Frank and Conley.

The Georgian publishes the following letter written by George M. Napier, the well-known lawyer, on the Phagan case, as it gives for the first time a legal analysis of the case for and against Frank:

To the Editor of The Georgian:

This section of our country has held very few criminal cases so profoundly interesting as the Phagan case. Indeed, it is questionable whether the entire South has ever had enacted within it a crime which has created such intense and widespread interest.

Personally, I have no concern in the case, save as a citizen of the State, desiring that the guilty party or parties may receive condign punishment.

Profoundly Interested.

As a lawyer, being interested more intimately perhaps than those not of that profession, certain aspects of the case—the procedure taken in the efforts of those immediately charged with ferreting out the facts of the crime, and the varied and swiftly changing developments in connection with it—I find these to be of profound interest.

One thing has been made evident: The people generally are disposed to ascribe guilt to one who has the opportunity to commit crime. This was shown by the widely-accepted conclusion that Leo Frank and Newt Lee, colored, were guilty of the murder of the Phagan girl, as soon as it became known that they had been at the pencil factory on the day of the homicide.

This conclusion was fixed in the minds of many by reason of the evident inclination of the detectives to believe Frank guilty. And there is little doubt that if the two men had been imprisoned in an unprotected town jail they would have been lynched while suspicion and excitement were at their height.

Praises Newspaper.

This mental state of the community did not last, however. The remarkable success of the local press in obtaining and publishing every detail of the evidence of the detectives enabled the reading public to weigh the testimony by piecemeal. It is safe to say that there lately have been many accessions to those who from the first hesitated to accept the theory of the guilt of Frank, or of the night watchman who found the body, upon the sole basis of their opportunity to commit the crime, and with all the circumstances going to negative motive to kill the young girl, especially on the part of the white man.

The zeal of the secret service men in trailing to cover criminals who effect getaways is to be commended, but the work of building a successful prosecution upon a mere case of suspicion will, in many instances, fail.

The testimony of Frank before the Coroner's jury, in which he gave, with conspicuous consistency and openness, an account of his actions and whereabouts on the day of the killing, created a favorable impression on the public mind.

Strengthened by Witnesses.

This was strengthened by the corroboration of his statements as to the time of his movements by impartial witnesses of unquestioned veracity.

The indictment of Frank by the Grand Jury seems to have been seized upon as the psychological opportunity for the negro Conley to admit that he wrote the notes found by the dead girl's body, and the comparison of his handwriting with that of the notes proves that fact beyond peradventure. But the network of lies in which Conley has become enmeshed seems not to have given the forces engineering the prosecution any serious impression as to his own guilt as the actual murderer of Mary Phagan.

Letter by Lawyer Gives Legal Facts as They Concern Leo M. Frank and Conley.

Two things, it seems to me, would be sufficient to clear Frank of the crime, in the absence of any proved motive to commit it. The first is the work done by him on his books at the pencil factory on the afternoon of the killing and subsequent to the time which is assigned by common consent for the occurrence of the deed.

How Could He Have Done Work?

That a man could go to the delicate and intricate task of spreading upon account books the record and figures of a week's transactions of a factory employing a large number of hands, and involving numerous financial dealings, and requiring four or more hours of steady work; and that he could do this with his usual accuracy and celerity staggers belief.

The other fact is a piece of testimony by the negro Conley himself. He has made the statement that when he was assisting Frank in the disposal of the dead girl's body he noticed the time clock in the factory and saw that it lacked four minutes of 1 o'clock. At that moment, he says, Miss Corinthia Hall and Mrs. Emma Clark Freeman, two employees, came into the factory and Frank told him to hide in a cupboard in the office.

But Miss Hall and Mrs. Freeman testified that they were at the factory one hour and eleven minutes earlier than that, and that they left the factory at 11:45 and did not return that day. The conversation they had with Mr. Frank is the same that the negro says he heard.

Discrepancy in Time.

The murdered girl reached the city by street car at 12:04. This has been definitely proved. She reached the factory and received her pay envelope at 12:10 or 12:15, so far as is known. Thus the negro adds this to his many other admitted lies—and if the girl was dead at the time he heard Frank talking to Miss Hall and Mrs. Freeman, she was murdered before she left her home.

To one who is sufficiently interested to look over the scene of the crime several things worth noting will be revealed. Coming down from the office in the pencil factory, a young girl, unprotected, might well glance with nervous dread at the pile of large boxes under the stairway near the elevator shaft. In daytime the corner under the staircase is in semi-darkness. It is an ideal place for a would-be criminal to screen himself.

If the girl left the factory after receiving her pay and came down the stairs, this dark corner was behind her as she walked down the steps. A woman who testified, but whose name I do not now recall, saw a negro lurking in this corner. Conley has admitted that he sat for some time near the elevator.

Negro Had Opportunity.

He had the opportunity to spring upon the poor girl as a spider would upon a fly. If robbery was his motive, an assault with a stick might have felled her. She could have been thrown down the elevator shaft or through the opening near the elevator, which has a ladder under it leading down to the dirt floor of the basement.

The place on the second floor where Conley says he picked up the body of the girl shows no trace of blood. Every circumstance indicates that she received the blow on her head before she died—and he says she was dead when he saw her there—so if she bled anywhere the strong probability is that the bloodstains would have been found where she had been picked up.

Even the mystifying fact that the staple of the rear door, leading out of the basement to the street, had been pulled from the inside could be easily explained on the theory that the criminal took the precaution to pull that staple so as to be able to run down the ladder and make his exit safely by the back street in the event any outcry was made by his victim.

Much emphasis is placed upon the dramatic manner with which Conley re-enacted the supposed work of carrying the body from the second floor to the basement that fatal day.

Might Not He Swear Falsely?

Does it tax our credulity greatly to believe that a cunning negro, who has been proved to have had unobstructed opportunity to commit the crime, and who admits having secreted the body, is capable of swearing that another man was with him when the crime was committed—a man behind whom he can hide from the law?

Would a drinking, irresponsible, perhaps criminal man of a low order of life be incapable of swearing away the life of any man if by so doing he could save himself from the gallows?

What is called the "humanity of the law" invests every person charged with crime with the presumption of innocence until his guilt has been proved, and proved to the extent of being irreconcilable with every hypothesis of his innocence. Guilt must be established beyond a reasonable doubt.

And the reasonableness of a doubt on the minds of the jury trying a given case might depend largely upon the state of the public mind regarding that case.

For this reason, if for no other, the people in a community where a crime has been committed should be reluctant to reach a conclusion of the guilt of any one, where only circumstantial evidence is adducible.

It would be a remarkable termination of the Phagan case, which is not now so mysterious as it once seemed, if Frank, the first man suspected by the detectives, should be acquitted, and his accuser, the negro Conley, should be brought to trial and convicted.

But stranger things have happened.

And if the evidence against Conley is as strong as it now seems assured it will be, will not the prosecution be greatly handicapped in the necessity of prosecuting Conley by reason of having put forth such strenuous and hopeful efforts to convict Leo Frank?

How Rewards Would Be Shared.

Rich rewards will recompense the discovery of evidence to convict the slayer in this case. If Frank should be found guilty, the division of the large sums offered for evidence to convict will go to certain secret service men who first called attention to the opportunity of Frank to commit the crime, and who have directed their energies in the investigation of it on the theory of his guilt.

If Conley should be proved guilty, one of the foremen of the factory who saw the negro washing a shirt under suspicious circumstances, and who directed his arrest, will likely get the coin. But with the public it is not a question of rewards to be distributed; but it is the vital, the supreme question, who is the real murderer?

The law, if rightly followed, is a noble instrument of protection to society, including the ignorant, the weak, and those of little understanding. It points the finger of suspicion at no man, but demands evidence before guilt can be determined—either the clear and unmistakable proof of eyewitnesses, or an array of circumstances which excludes every reasonable hypothesis of innocence.

Lauds Frank's Character.

In determining motive to commit crime, we have reason to regard the character and reputation of the individual. In the case under consideration, the man who protests his entire innocence and ignorance of the crime, but who now stands indicted as a criminal, has been for six years an exemplary citizen of this community, and the trusted manager of an important manufacturing enterprise.

He has sustained well the confidence reposed in him. A leader in the community life of his race, he has been highly honored for one of his years. The attachment of his friends to him in the weeks of his imprisonment has been rarely significant of an unshaken confidence in his complete innocence.

The high character of a large majority of his friends, who are men incapable of the desire to shield the perpetrator of so heinous a crime, removes the suggestion of a clannish defense of racial bias.

Is not the case against Leo Frank so far presented against him palpably weak? And does not the far greater weight of evidence now point unmistakably to the negro Conley as the sole perpetrator of the crime?

GEORGE M. NAPIER.

Lanford Lauds Sleuths' Work in Phagan Mystery.

The extra labor falling on the detective department because of the Phagan mystery received special reference in the monthly report of Chief of Detectives Lanford, sent to Chief of Police Beavers for submission to the Police Commission. Chief Lanford also commends several detectives for their untiring work on the case. He said:

"It has been a very hard and laborious month on account of the Phagan case, and I wish to state that the men have been very vigilant and untiring in their efforts to run down this case. I wish especially to commend Officers Starnes and Campbell for their untiring, faithful and able work. I feel that the public will feel thoroughly satisfied with the results when wound up.

"I wish to thank each and every man, and especially yourself, for the services and valuable assistance rendered my department during the month."

With the remark that she had been away on business of her own as the only explanation of her mysterious disappearance of two days, Minola McKnight, negro cook at the Selig residence, returned to her work Monday. To every inquiry she replied:

"Tse jus' been away on some business of my own," and with this meager enlightenment Mrs. Frank and other members of the household were forced to be content. The negro woman was as positive on her return as she was before she mysteriously dropped out of sight for 48 hours that she had told the detectives nothing of the nature of that contained in the document purporting to be her affidavit.

Attempt to Remove Jim Conley Reported.

There were unconfirmed reports Wednesday that an effort would be made to have Jim Conley, the negro sweeper who made three conflicting affidavits accusing Leo M. Frank of the murder of Mary Phagan, removed from the police station to the county jail.

Solicitor Hugh M. Dorsey held a hurried conference with Superior Court Judge Roan and the negro's attorney, W. M. Smith, but would tell nothing about the conference.

Just what was to be gained by the transfer was not plain unless it was to get the negro out of the reach of persons who may be interested in drilling him in his story. The police consistently have denied that Conley was drilled in his narrative.

The reports were evidently the result of the announcement made Tuesday by Luther Z. Rosser, who charged that the police had made no real effort to get the entire truth from the negro. He pointed out that after the negro had made two conflicting affidavits the police announced themselves satisfied with the third, which was just as patently unsatisfactory in the things it left unexplained.

SUES MRS. DUKE FOR $150,000 AS LOVE THIEF

NEW YORK, June 11.--Mrs. Catherine Soper Pence, wife of former Congressman Pence, of Colorado, today filed papers in a suit for separation, alleging extreme cruelty and abandonment and naming Mrs. Lillian N. Duke, divorced wife of J. B. Duke, multi-millionaire tobacco magnate, as co-respondent.

Mrs. Pence also has instructed her attorney, Clark L. Jordan, to bring suit for $150,000 against Mrs. Duke on a charge of alienating the affections of Mr. Pence. Mrs. Duke is said to be worth close to $1,000,000 in her own right.

Mrs. Pence charges that detectives in her employ obtained the information that Pence and Mrs. Duke were living together in a fashionable Broadway apartment house. The defendant and co-respondent, Mrs. Pence also alleges, lived together at the Ebbett House in Washington and traveled to Cuba together. Mrs. Pence refused to ask for a divorce in order to keep her husband from marrying Mrs. Duke.

Mrs. Pence before her marriage was a Kentucky belle, being the daughter of Colonel Robert Soper, of Georgetown, Ky. Mr. Pence was formerly a resident of Denver, where he served four years in the Colorado Legislature. He is a lawyer of brilliant ability. Recently he has been mentioned as a possible ambassador.

The Pences were married 25 years ago.

DAUGHTER HEAD OF PAINTER COMPANY

JACKSONVILLE, June 11.—Miss Okle Painter, daughter of the late E. O. Painter, was elected president of the E. O. Painter Fertilizer Company at a meeting of the stockholders held last night. At the same time it was decided to increase the capital stock of the company from $250,000 to $500,000, with the privilege of increasing the liabilities to an equal amount.

Reports submitted at the meeting declared the condition of the business of the company to be flourishing. A 10 per cent annual dividend was declared.

Miss Painter announced, after the meeting, that the business of the company would be conducted upon the same plans as heretofore under the presidency of her father, who was drowned in the St. Johns River May 22, the cause of which is still a mystery.

Trained for Place.

No one is better able to carry on the work of the dead man than Miss Painter. Since finishing school she has occupied a place in her father's office. Having no son on whom to depend, he trained his daughter to take his place. She is familiar with every detail of the business, both administrative and manufacturing. She has spent much of her time at the fertilizer plant, directing affairs for her father.

Another reason why the daughter is the logical person for president of the company is that she controls the major portion of the stock. Her father held $190,000 of the outstanding $250,000 issue. Under his will all of this, except $26,000 distributed in special bequests, goes equally to Miss Painter and her mother, Mrs. Martha Painter. The daughter retains the exclusive voting power of the $26,000, the beneficiaries to receive only the income therefrom. This $26,000 will eventually revert to Miss Painter or her heirs. She also represents her mother in the estate.

Painter Planned Increase.

The action of the stockholders in doubling the capital stock is simply carrying out the plans made by Painter. He had worked out the details whereby small blocks of the stock would be sold to planters in Florida and South Georgia, who in turn would buy their fertilizer from the Painter company, thus increasing the volume of business done and give the planter-stockholders small rebates in the form of dividends.

And at the same time Painter saw how he could add to his own holdings by declaring a stock dividend, giving the old stockholders proportionate shares of the new issue. Painter, of course, planned to secure enough of the new stock to still give him a majority of the combined issue and retain full control of the business. Now the widow and daughter will come in on that distribution, making the daughter probably the only young woman in the South as the head and absolute dictator of a half-million-dollar corporation, doing an annual business said to exceed $750,000.

Since the death of Painter, State Senator J. B. Conrad, of Glenwood, has been nominally acting president of the company, but he spent two weeks of the time at Tallahassee attending the final days' sessions of the Florida Legislature, leaving the Painter business actually in the hands of Miss Painter, D. A. Morrison, Jr., secretary of the company, and G. C. Hamlin, general counsel.

Fine Cotton Crop Prospects Promise Great Year for All Lines Throughout the South.

a bad thing under such conditions. It makes for conservatism and economy.

"One good effect already is seen. This will be the cheapest produced cotton crop Georgia has grown in many a year. Nothing could be more healthy than this economy by the country bank and by the farmer.

"By the way, the crop looks good. It is perfectly clean and, while not large, is healthy and properly cultivated.

"Underlying conditions in the South are sound. Business holds up well. The New Yorkers who are emitting gloom are extremists. No man, no matter how cheerful he is, can remain long in the atmosphere of Wall Street, with stocks where they are now, and keep free from the blue tinge. But this is not a community interested in stocks and bonds. Let the New York man come here for ten days and he will begin to look more cheerful at once.

Looks for Good Times.

"We need a good crop. It looks as if we are about to get it. When it is in I look for excellent times."

Captain James W. English, president of the Fourth National Bank, is most optimistic.

"We have not refused a legitimate demand for money this year. We have not turned a customer down. We have taken care of the country banks up to the limit of their demands," he says.

"Manufacturers, jobbers and retailers in Atlanta who are our customers are doing a good business, as we can tell from their accounts. We hear no complaint from them.

"There is considerable building going on in the city, one of the best indications of business conditions.

"The volume of loans varies very little from last year's figures. There has been no unusual demand for money.

"This is not a time for undertaking great expansion. We have found that business men also take this view of the matter. We have not been called upon to check overambitious tendencies save in one or two cases.

"Country banks have not borrowed heavily. It has been their policy to enforce moderate expenditures among their customers. This will be reflected in great prosperity when the present excellent crop prospect is fulfilled.

Hysteria in New York.

"If a man would set off a cannon cracker in a New York bank nowadays, the officers would seize their hats and jump over the tops of their desks. That is hysteria.

"But no ripple of unrest has reached us. Wait until September, when the well-worked, thoroughly-cultivated crop begins to move. Then you will see things blossom forth."

"Business is moving along very well," says Charles E. Currier, president of the Atlanta National Bank. "Retail and wholesale merchants tell us in many instances that their sales are ahead of last year. Stable business does not move by fits and starts from season to season. The volume of trade this season is satisfactory.

"Much, of course, depends upon the growing cotton crop. Just now perhaps the plant is a little small and a little droopy. But give us a few weeks of sunshine and see how it grows.

"The tariff uncertainty is causing some hesitation, but it will be cleared up soon. The South, as I see it, is in good shape."

MAN BOMBARDS COMMONS WITH FLOUR SHELLS

Suffrage Sympathizer Keeps Up Pelting From Gallery Fifteen Minutes Till Subdued.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, June 11.--A man sympathizer with the woman suffrage cause created a wild scene in the House of Commons this afternoon and was arrested after a struggle.

Armed with a number of "bombs" composed of paper bags filled with flour and a great sheaf of suffragette pamphlets, the man gained access to the spectators' gallery. He remained quiet until Premier Asquith started an address. Then he stood up and hurled an armful of pamphlets from the gallery.

The members of the House looked up in alarm at the cloudburst of literature, but while they were still open-mouthed the suffrage adherent threw a "bomb" at Mr. Asquith. The missile missed its mark but struck a parliamentary clerk in the face. He fell to the floor and arose like a ghost.

A member sitting near the ministerial bench shouted a protest. A bag of flour struck him in the mouth and he dashed, gasping and choking, to get a drink of water. By this time members were running toward the stairway to the gallery, screaming to the police to arrest the miscreant.

Flour bombs were dropping and popping all about. Premier Asquith was the target of the bombardment, but was not hit. Several others near him were nearly smothered by the deluge of flour.

Policemen rushed into the gallery and tried to arrest the "bomb" thrower, but it was over fifteen minutes before he submitted. He was put outside and warned not to enter the Parliamen. Building again.

Gentry Now Swears That Dictograph Records Were 'Doctored'

Chief Lanford Doubts Genuineness of Stenographer's Affidavit

Colyer Accused by Youth of Changing Transcribed Copy of Conversations.

Here is Stenographer George Gentry's new affidavit, as given out by Detective E. O. Miles, declaring that the famous dictograph records were padded:

District of Columbia, City of Washington—Personally appeared before me, the undersigned, a Notary Public, of the District of Columbia, George M. Gentry, who on oath states that:

On Wednesday, May 21, 1913, at or about 10 o'clock in the morning, Mr. Gay C. Febuary called me over the telephone and desired to know if I would do some stenographic work for him. I told him I would, but that I couldn't get off until noon. He said that they were in a hurry for it and he would like for me to come at once, so I arranged to get off and went down to his office. He took me into the Chief's office and the Chief told me he wanted me to take down some testimony, and he asked me if I could write very fast. Mr. Febuary assured Chief Lanford that I was a good stenographer and could do the work all right. The Chief then told me that the work he wanted done required somebody that could be trusted all right, and I assured him that I always treated all stenographic work I did as confidential. Chief Lanford told me then that what he wanted me to do was to take down a conversation that would take place in a hotel, and he asked me if I thought I could take it over a dictograph. (Mr. Surles coming in at that time with a satchel, which he opened and which contained wires and other paraphernalia in connection with a dictograph outfit.)

Watched Dictograph Installation.

After a few minutes, during which time Mr. Febuary was absent, we went over to the Williams House No. 2 on North Forsyth Street, Atlanta, Fulton County, Georgia (Mr. Febuary and I), and I was instructed to go into room No. 21 of this hotel. Mr. Surles and Mr. Colyar were there and they probably had to make arrangements for adjoining rooms, as Mr. Surles commented to me that they hadn't decided just what to do with the dictographs. After a time Colyar came in and instructed Surles to follow him, and gave me instructions to await his wishes. Later on Mr. Febuary came in and I told him that if I had to wait much longer by myself I was going back to the office. I was then allowed to come into the room, where they were installing the dictographs (one on each end of the bottom board of the bureau just under the bottom drawer on the back of the board), the wires being run through the keyhole of the door between room 31 and room 32. The bureau was then screwed against the door facing. At about 12:30 I started getting accustomed to Febuary's and Colyar's voice.

Went Through Rehearsal.

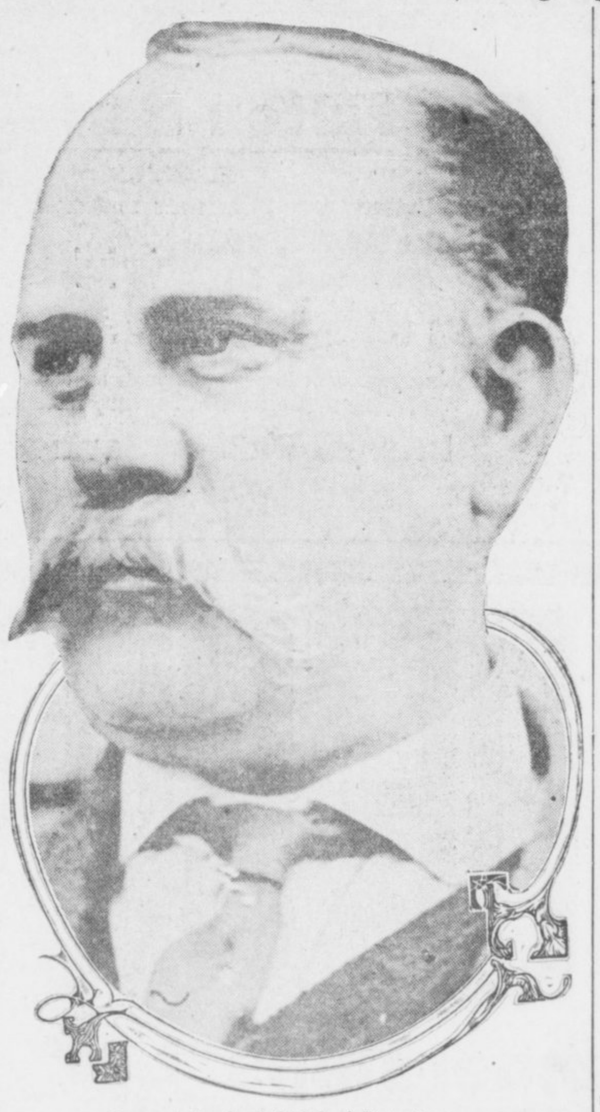
At first I could not hear at all, but gradually I was able to hear more distinctly and after an hour or two of diligent practice I was able to use the dictograph and to distinguish voices very clearly. Right at the beginning I found that I would not be able to hear anything with the windows up. When they were closed it became rather stuffy and this, coupled with the strain I was under, added to my distraction. I stopped practicing at 2:45 that afternoon and went downstairs to the office of the hotel, where I awaited Mr. Felder's arrival. I saw him cross Forsyth Street, and after he, Febuary and Colyar went upstairs, or were just about at the top of the stairs, I started up and saw the three enter room 31 of the Williams House, located as mentioned previously. I then immediately went into room 32 and closed the door, partly, but did not lock it. The windows were down and so I went directly to the table and placed the receiver over my head and started writing what I heard. I took down all the conferences that took place. At somewhere around 5 that afternoon I left the hotel and went to Mr. R. B. Bliss' house and took some dictation. From there I went home and changed my collar.

I returned to the office of the General Fire Extinguisher Company, 276 Marietta Street, where I wrote the dictation he had given me, signed his letters and then met Mr. Febuary there at the office. We went to the Candler restaurant to supper and from there we returned to the Williams House to keep an appointment with Colyar at about 7:30. At about 8 o'clock Mr. Miles and Mr. C. C. Jones and Colyar went up to the "conference room" and Mr. Febuary and I to the "information reception room."

Conference Lasted Half Hour.

I placed the receiver over my head, and in order to be sure that I would hear everything, Mr. Febuary stood behind me and held them pressed tightly to my ears. This conference lasted about 30 minutes. Between 8:30 and 9:15 Wednesday night Mr. Febuary loafed about town, as we had an appointment with Mr. Branch and Mr. Paschal at 9:30 at the Williams House, and as they were not in The Journal office, we had to kill time until they showed up. I left Mr. Febuary and Mr. Colyar at The Journal office at 9:15 and went over to the Williams House to wait for the arrival of The Journal reporters mentioned above. They came in shortly and we went over to The Journal office and all of us (Colyard, Febuary, Branch, Paschal and myself) went up to the editorial department, where a machine was selected, and I then went to work transcribing what I had heard.

Right at the start I made Colyard angry, because when I did not hear what was said I put dashes and so I allowed him to dictate several answers and questions, which do not appear in my notebook and which I am not positive that I heard. I did not hear Mayor Woodward mention Chief Beavers or Chief Lanford during the whole conversation, nor did I write it in the transcription of my notes, these names being evidently added by other parties. At 4:30 Thursday morning, May 22, I finished transcribing my notes and turned the papers over to Mr. Febuary. Later on during the morning he came down to the office, bringing an affidavit which I had written for me to sign before a notary public. He told me that they had made only a few minor changes in the transcription and that all I had to do was to sign the affidavit, which I did. However, I noticed that some interlineations had been made in my copy, or rather in Chief Lanford's copy, as I had no copy.



Newport Lanford, Chief of Detectives.

Refused Gentry Copy.

Colyar and the reporters, just before I started to transcribe my notes, argued as to the number of copies that should be made. They agreed that one copy should be made for the Chief, one for Colyar and one for The Journal, and that no more should be made. This kept me from having a copy. I had my notebook, however, and it was the comparison of my notes with the published articles that led to my discovery that in addition to the several answers and questions which Colyar had personally dictated, other changes had been made, namely, the insertion of the names of Chief Beavers and Chief Lanford, in the conference with Mayor Woodward; also many other variations occurred, changing the sense of the statement, and since they had my affidavit attached to the papers, I felt that I had been duped.

As to the remuneration for my services, will say that The Journal reporters, Branch and Paschal, agreed to pay me $5 to get the work written Wednesday night, so it could be published in Thursday's paper. Saturday morning, after the appearance of the article in Friday's Journal, The Georgian reporter came to the office and offered me either $25 or $45, I do not recollect which, for a copy of the conference with Mayor Woodward, Febuary, Miles and Colyar, and Miles, Jones and Colyar's conference. I declined the offer. I then went to see The Journal's reporters and told them that The Georgian had offered me money for a copy of the conference, and they agreed to pay me $50 to hold my notebook from Saturday until Monday. I turned my notebook over to Mr. Brice, who gave it to his stenographer to keep until Monday. Later during the day the reporters told me that The Georgian had gotten a copy, and so I was too late. I then went down to Mr. Brice's office and asked Miss M——, Mr. Brice's stenographer, for my notebook, and I took it home and locked it up. Monday, when I went up to see Major Cohen about the $50 he went down to look for Mr. Brice, whom he was unable to find. Later we went back upstairs together and Branch and Paschal explained to him their promise to pay me $50 for allowing The Journal to retain my notebook. However, some argument arose over the fact that I took my notebook out of The Journal's office Saturday night. I told them that they had agreed to give me $50 not to make a copy for The Georgian, and that I had not made the copy for The Georgian, and had, therefore, carried out my part of the compact. They then told me to come back later on and see Mr. Brice about it. I returned after awhile, I believe it was around 1 o'clock, and Mr. Brice paid me the amount in currency and took my receipt.

Lanford Hasn't Paid.

Chief Lanford has not as yet paid me for my services, from the fact that I have not rendered a bill.

Saturday morning, before the publication of the Woodward conference, held at 4 o'clock Wednesday, May 21, as previously mentioned, and the Jones conference, held at 8 o'clock the same night, I went to the editorial depart of The Journal and requested a proof of what they were going to print. Colyar, who had one reading it, declined to allow me to have a proof, and so I left The Journal Building, suspicious.

Saturday afternoon I went down to the office, carrying with me my original notebook and a copy of Friday's and Saturday's Journal. I compared them all the way through and upon seeing the many variations in what was printed and what I had in my notes, I realized that my transcriptions had been tampered with and that I had just cause for the suspicions which were aroused by their refusal to allow me to read the proofs Saturday morning.

Fears Arrest When Tricked.

Having signed the affidavits, at Mr. Febuary's request, in which I swore to what I had heard, and seeing something entirely different published, I became very nervous and uneasy. Saturday night, when I went home, a reporter called up and said he was one of The Journal reporters and wanted to see me a few minutes. I told him to come over. He came in and introduced himself to me as Mr. Starr, of The Journal. My mother and aunt recognized his voice as that of a reporter who had called shortly before I came home, and said he was from The Georgian. They both rushed into the sitting room and told me that he was not with The Journal, but was the same fellow that came a few minutes ago and said he was from The Georgian. He denied that he had said he was from The Journal, although he had told both myself and my grandfather, who went to answer the door bell, that he was from The Journal. Just before he left he informed me that a warrant had been sworn out for Febuary's, Colyar's and my arrest, and upon my directing him as to where the door out could be found, he departed, saying that he had got the information he wanted.

Sunday afternoon, at the office, someone called me up and informed me that I would probably be arrested Monday. I did not recognize the voice, and so am unable to say who it was. They also informed me that I would have to make bond in order to be released. I asked who it was, and they hung up or were cut off.

Effort to Obtain Notes.

Monday morning Colyar requested that I turn my notebook over to The Journal, and said he would give me $5 if I would show him a receipt from The Journal for the notebook. I came near allowing The Journal to have the notebook, but instead gave it to my brother to take home, and instructed him to allow no one to have it.

Developments later showed me the character of some of the people connected with this transaction, and it made me so ashamed of my connection with it that I was afraid I could not face the humiliation that I thought would naturally ensue, and also the fact that they had changed my transcription showed to me very clearly that I was mixed up with a bunch of crooks.

I am prepared to read my notes whenever it becomes necessary. These notes will show exactly what I heard.

The foregoing affidavit is made by me voluntarily, unsolicited, and no money or the promise of any remuneration whatever was offered to me for making it, my sole motive being to give the straight history of my connection with the now "infamous" dictograph affair.

Negro Fined, Despite Scripture Recitation

Calvin Williams, a negro preacher living in College Park, Wednesday morning recited Scripture to Recorder Broyles in making a vigorous protestation that he is a "law-abiding citizen." He explained that he is a graduate of the Tuskegee Institute.

Williams was arraigned as the result of a clash with a conductor on the College Park trolley line when the conductor asked him to move his seat. Judge Broyles imposed a fine of $3.75.

MAYOR AGREES WITH GENTRY'S AFFIDAVIT

Mayor James G. Woodward said today his recollection of the conversation in room No. 21 at Williams House No. 2 on May 21, when he was dictographed by A. S. Colyar and associate "investigators," coincided exactly with the ajdavit of George M. Gentry, the stenographer, charging interpolations in the dictograph records.

Gentry's affidavit was obtained without suggestion from the Mayor, who said he dismissed the whole matter from his mind immediately after publication of the alleged dictograph records and thought no more about it until Gentry's affidavit made its appearance. From the beginning the Mayor regarded the dictograph "trap" as "dirty" but unimportant, and the record as untrue. He lost interest in the whole affair and his confidence in the practical value of the dictograph at the same time.

"Gentry's affidavit is just about right, as I remember it," the Mayor said to-day. "I don't remember that the name of Beavers or Lanford was mentioned while I was in the room at the Williams House. I am sure I did not mention either of them. I had no more and no less interest in catching Beavers or Lanford in anything crooked than I did in catching anybody else in any department of the city government."

Taking up the charge that interpolations were printed along with the actual conversation which took place in the Williams House, Mayor Woodward said:

"I said then, and I say now, that my confidence in dictographs was very much shaken. I have always thought a great deal of them, but after that I said they should be in the hands of mighty high-toned people, or else they would be susceptible of great harm."

How lightly the Mayor regarded the printed conversation, with its inaccuracies and additions, and how seriously young Gentry and his mother looked upon them, may be gleaned from the following statement of the Mayor:

"Gentry and his mother came to me right after those dictograph records were printed. They were troubled about it, and wanted to know what to do, and what I would do. I told them they had gotten themselves into this and it was up to them to get themselves out of it, for I certainly would not do anything about it. I dismissed it from my mind absolutely.

"I proceeded to forget about the whole thing, and didn't think any more about it till I read this affidavit. But I didn't have anything to do with getting the affidavit, because I still don't care anything about it."

As the Mayor continued talking, his ire was roused by recollection of certain incidents. Recalling the circumstances connected with the dictographing, he talked in caustic manner, saying:

"The whole thing was dirty. I told young Gentry and his mother somebody had lied. The whole thing was gotten up by this ring I've been fighting, trying to discredit me. It's the same ring that controls the majority of the boards of Atlanta and the General Council, the same ring I fought last year. The people have got to rise up and put them out—I can't do it.

"Practically a third of the published conversation never occurred," said the Mayor. "Most of the last part of the dictograph report certainly did not occur while I was there. At least that much of it was wrong, but I don't care anything about it."

"I am told," the Mayor continued, "that Colyar and others made a great effort to get Gentry's notes. Colyar and somebody else, I am told, went out to Gentry's house to get those notes. Now, mind you, I don't know whether this is so or not—I only say I have been told this. They tried to frighten the women there into surrendering the notes. One of them—I believe it was Colyar—threatened to search the house. Gentry's mother said she didn't think they'd search her house without a warrant, and Colyar replied such things had been done and might be done again. What a pass things have come to when such people can go out and frighten poor women half to death that way.

"But they didn't get the notebook, for it is now in a vault."

AFFIDAVIT CLEARS ME, AVERS FELDER

Colonel Thomas B. Felder on Wednesday morning declared the Gentry affidavit was a complete vindication for himself. The attorney stated that the explanation contained in the stenographer's sworn statement on its face showed that Colyar and Chief of Detectives Lanford had been in a miserable conspiracy to ruin his (Felder's) reputation by seeking to prove him guilty of attempted bribery.

"It bears out my contention that the entire matter was a frame-up on the part of Lanford and his hirelings," declared Colonel Felder. "Gentry's affidavit is a complete vindication. Everyone agrees with me now that I was the innocent victim of a dirty conspiracy.

Calls Incident Closed.

"So far as I am personally concerned, the incident is closed with this vindication. Gentry will return to Atlanta within the next week or ten days, and may have something additional to say."

Colonel Felder said quite frankly that he had engaged Detective Miles to find Gentry. He said he had asked the Burns Agency in every city to locate the young stenographer as soon as the youth disappeared after the dictograph episode. The attorney added, however, that an error had crept into an interview which purported to quote him as saying that he had the key to the safe deposit vault in which the new Gentry's stenographic notes now repose.

Denies He Scored Jury.

Colonel Felder denied that he had in any way ever reflected upon the Grand Jury.

"A more honorable and capable body of men I have never known," he said. "They are a distinguished body of citizens, doing their full duty well and faithfully. They can be depended upon to handle this situation as it should be handled."

Presbyterian Picnic Postponed by Cold

After planning an all-day excursion to Powder Springs, Ga., for their annual picnic, and issuing a large number of tickets to the Sunday school scholars for Thursday of this week, the members of the Central Presbyterian Sunday School have postponed their picnic for one week on account of—"cold weather."

The tickets that were issued for this Thursday will be honored the same day next week instead. The Central Presbyterian is one of the largest Sunday schools in Atlanta, having present 600 or 700 practically every Sunday morning, and the annual picnic is always a big event.

C.O.D. PARCEL POST AFTER JULY FIRST

New Department of U. S. Postal Service Offers Many Advantages to Citizens.

On July 1 the C. O. D. parcel post law will go into effect. Manufacturers, retail merchants and farmers will be greatly benefited, as they will be able to send wares to any domestic point with the Government to act as collector.

Postmaster McKee Wednesday explained some features of the new law.

A distinctive C. O. D. parcel post tag has been issued and will be attached to each package. The tag has three coupons affixed to it. The first will serve as a receipt to the sender, the second will be retained at the mailing office, and the third will be attached to the parcel.

On the first tag the sender files as many items as possible, including the item showing the amount due him, and places his name and address on the back. All tags are numbered, and this will serve as a double check and eliminate chances of mistake.

C. O. D. parcels may be accepted by rural carriers and the receipt to be given the sender will be sent after the parcels are numbered at the postoffice. The C. O. D. parcels will be delivered by city and rural carriers and special delivery messengers.

C. O. D. parcels will not be accepted when addressed to either the Philippine Islands or the Canal Zone until later.

ASKS BEAVERS TO INVESTIGATE AFFIDAVIT

Chief of Detectives Newport Lanford telegraphed Chief of Police Beavers in Washington, D. C., Wednesday morning to investigate the origin of the affidavit bearing the signature of George M. Gentry in connection with the dictograph plot.

The detective chief asked Chief Beavers to find Jeannette Henning, the notary in the national capital who swore Gentry to his statement, and ascertain if the stenographer signed the affidavit which was brought to Atlanta by Detective E. O. Miles. The telegram asked that a minute investigation of the statement be made and the conditions under which it was made be wired to him immediately.

Chief Lanford's action was taken following his declaration that he did not believe the affidavit genuine. Lanford stated as his belief that the stenographer's name had either been forged or that Gentry had been coerced into signing the document.

Police officials have also conducted a rigid investigation into the standing of Detective Miles. Miles, the investigation showed, is at the head of the Reed Detective Agency.

Thomas B. Felder was at one time one of the largest stockholders in the agency, Carl Hutcheson being also a stockholder and attorney. He it was who appeared before the Police Commission and urged that body to grant the permit for the agency's operation in Atlanta.

Court Costs Fought In Bankruptcy Case

A contest over the costs in the bankruptcy case of the Driver Hardware Company, of East Point, was before Judge Newman in United States District Court Wednesday.

A petition in bankruptcy was filed by the company. After paying all bills there were no liabilities. Subsequently the company took back the business.

Judge George F. Gober, representing the company, said all questions regarding the bankruptcy proceedings were settled, the only point at issue being the costs in the case.

GRADUATED AUTO TAX IS PLAN OF LAWMAKERS

Legislature Also May Instruct Collectors to Stop Evasion of Ad Valorem Tariff.

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

In seeking to reform the tax laws of Georgia, it is likely that the automobile will be taken into most serious consideration by the new Legislature.

There are now more than 20,000 machines in the State, averaging in value about $1,200 each. These machines pay a flat license tax to the State of $2 a machine, and that is about all the State gets out of them. Not more than 10 per cent of the automobiles licensed are returned for taxation upon an ad valorem basis.

Secretary of State Phil Cook says nine machine owners in every ten believe the flat license tax of $2 per machine is all the State requires of them, and that many owners, not now paying taxes according to the value of their machines, are not so much intentional tax-dodgers as they are ignorant of the fact that an automobile is as much property subject to general taxation as anything else.

It is likely that the license tax will be graded according to the value of the machine registered hereafter. It is figured that it is not quite fair to charge an owner of a $500 runabout the same license tax that is charged against the owner of a $10,000 limousine. Moreover, tax collectors doubtless will be instructed by legislative direction strictly to require the return of all automobiles for taxation, according to their value.

If these two reforms are inaugurated they unquestionably will bring a fine revenue into the State Treasury.

It seems to be realized generally among members of the incoming Legislature that Georgia must increase its revenues in every direction hereafter, in order that the State may meet its absolutely necessary expense bills, and that the only way to do it is through tax reform and not through a higher tax rate.

There is a great deal of enthusiasm manifested among the citizens of Winder over the question of the new county of Barrow, and it is certain this proposition will be one of the livest to come before the new Legislature.

A well-known citizen of that city, talking of its present unfavorable location at the "corners" of three counties—Gwinnette, Jackson and Walton—cited the following circumstances to show how much confusion and annoyance arises from the same.

"A well-known citizen of Winder passed away recently and left property in several sections of the city. His widow had to take out administration papers in three separate counties in order to handle his estate legally and properly," said he.

"Winder gets its school fund from three counties, with a different pro rata in every direction. One county pays $2.75 a pupil per annum, while another pays only $2.40. The children of both attend the public schools of Winder, with the same advantages—but it isn't fair.

"Persons with things to sell in Winder requiring a State license generally don't try to sell them. They are required to obtain a license in all three counties centering in the town.

"Winder is some 20 miles from the county seat of every one of the three counties meeting there. That's a big nuisance, and rankly unjust to Winder and the surrounding territory.

The statement that United States Senator James Hamilton Lewis may shave off his scintillant whiskers has been accepted with great reserve by his Georgia friends.

When the junior Senator from Illinois lived in Georgia his whiskers were his pride. He looked upon them much after the fashion of a good Mohammedan, whose most sacred oath is taken "by the beard of the prophet."

"Jim Ham" may shave those roseate whiskers from off his handsome countenance, of course, but Georgians never will believe it until they see it an accomplished fact.

Representative Robert Blackburn, of Fulton, is looked on generally as one of the leaders in the next House.

Blackburn is a veteran in the House, although he has been out for several years. He is one of the ablest parliamentarians in the State, and is more than well qualified to take care of himself either in the running debate of the floor or in the committee rooms.

The gentleman from Fulton is rather small of stature, but he is loud in voice and sonorous enough to be pleasing when under full steam ahead in argument.

There will be few men in the next Legislature who know their way around better than "Bob" Blackburn.

A bill to require all railroads operating in Georgia to provide underpasses or overpasses at all grade crossings, when so directed by the Railroad Commission, is now being prepared by a well-known member of the House, and will be introduced soon after the Legislature meets.

It is designed to be fair to the roads, and will require the counties affected, in such instances as the commission may undertake to regulate, to bear a reasonable part of the expense of construction.

This bill likely will have considerable support in the Legislature, as there is a growing sentiment throughout the State that such legislation is needed.

Whether the bill will pass is problematical, but it will be earnestly and aggressively urged, nevertheless.

ENGLISH CARTOONIST DRESSES AMBASSADOR PAGE IN COURT FRILLS

On sailing to take up his duties as American Ambassador to the Court of St. James Walter H. Page declared that he would never appear in court dress during any of the social affairs at Buckingham Palace. Recent cablegrams from London contained the information that Mr. Page would live up to this declaration. The cartoonist of the London Bystander, however, didn't take the Ambassador at his word and has pictured him as he would look if he did bow to the custom of foreign representatives in appearing at these functions in full court costume.

DR. STONE GOES ABROAD TO REST

New Moderator of Northern Presbyterian Church Overcome by His Heavy Duties.

CHICAGO, June 11.—Overwork has sent the Rev. John Timothy Stone, Moderator of the Northern Presbyterian General Assembly, to Europe for a long vacation. With Mrs. Stone and his three daughters he will lose himself somewhere on the Cornish coast for most of the summer. Later the Moderator will tour the Continent, returning in October.

The Rev. Mr. Stone was made Moderator in May when the Assembly met at Atlanta, Ga. This added greatly to his duties as pastor of a rapidly growing congregation. His church—the Fourth Presbyterian, on the North Side—has been replaced by a beautiful new building on Lincoln Parkway.

In the three years that Dr. Stone has lived here he has filled every seat in his church, the congregation of which had sadly dwindled. His efforts also have secured funds for the new church from his parishioners, among whom are all the McCormicks, the Willings, the Skinners, the Wentworths, Highs, Bentleys, Pomeroys, Philo Kings and many wealthy families.

Moderator Dr. Stone will go direct to Scotland to meet the Scotch Presbyterians at Glasgow. From there he will go to the Cornish coast.

HOW PLAIN GIRLS CAN WIN HUSBANDS

CHICAGO, June 11.—Dr. C. Franklin Leavitt has made public a lesson in winning a husband by suggestion.

"We must visualize our desires before one can expect to realize them," he said. "A girl should picture the sort of woman she wishes to become, and then impress this picture on her subconscious mind so it is ever with her.

"A woman may turn herself into a hag by depressing thoughts. A wise woman creates within herself conditions which attract. The subconscious mind is under direct control of the conscious mind and can be impressed through repeated strong suggestions.

"When a girl who is not attracting men comes to me I ask her to look herself over for her weaknesses. If her cheeks are hollow I insist on her exercising the muscles of the face.

"The girl should give a handshake as if she had not a friend, and in limp fashion. Thus she will emanate suggestions of love and harmony and not of condemnation an apprehension.

"A woman has two weapons—thought and action. When she is possessed of a 'going mind' she is almost irresistible. A woman with power wins the man she wants.

"The first lesson to all unattractive women should be to picture themselves in a receptive attitude toward men. From childhood they should be taught to meet the opposite sex without fear and bashfulness.

"Thoughts properly directed can change the physical being. From concentration on a subject fifteen minutes a day women have become beautiful. They should suggest to themselves at intervals that they are beautiful.

"Married women should take 'treatments' to retain the affections of their husbands. Going back to the old days of honeymoon attraction she is able to keep her husband interested."

WIRE IS FLASHED FROM SEA BOTTOM

Submarine, Submerged for Record, in Message to World Tells of Success of Trial.

AT THE BOTTOM OF THE SEA, LONG BEACH, CAL., June 11.—The cage submarine at the bottom of the Pacific Ocean, Long Beach, Cal., sends greetings to the world as being the only submarine boat that can run its engines under water:

"We have been submerged since 5 a. m. Tuesday, June 10, and will stay down until 5 p. m. Wednesday, June 11, 1913, thus breaking by twelve hours the record of the submarine Octopus, which remained submerged 24 hours in 1907.

"The running of our gasoline engines keeps our air so pure we could stay down a week if desired. Our submarine will break all records for speed and maneuvering, because our propellers are at the prow instead of at the stern of the boat.

"The crew of six men have quarters in the engine room, and there is not a trace of gasoline fumes in the boat. We are sending the message by a telegraph wire connected to our boat and that by means of a cable in the ocean.

Beautiful Birds With Odd Names Compose Queer Window Group

A collection of South Sea Island birds, valued at $1,500, on exhibition at the French Dry Cleaning Company, Joseph May & Son, forms one of the most unique exhibitions of its kind ever shown in Atlanta. The collection comprises about fifteen varieties, including a number of the so-called Paradise birds, which, when weary of life, commit suicide by strangling themselves with the fine, long "strangiers" which extend from the body.

Mr. May's collection includes also such rare species as the Kepeng, Kalona, the Black Bird of Isop, the Pate Boenga, the Nge, valued at $30; the Tempot Tail and the Bolontron. The Black Bird of Isop species is particularly interesting, as the body feathers of this bird are as soft as the finest velvet. The entire collection was made originally for the Parisian Plume Company by the hunters of Mikel Merkes Company.

MARION JACKSON AND HOTEL MAN SET RIGHT

John Edmondson, Lessee of Empire, Denies Statements Made Public by Carl Hutcheson.

The following letters given to The Georgian in reply to charges made by Carl Hutcheson explain themselves:

Editor The Georgian:

Attacks upon myself personally are immaterial.

They were expected. Others will be made. But protected vice can not revive itself in Atlanta by slandering me or any other individual. I am only one of a committee, which committee represents 90 per cent, if not all, of the Protestant churches of Atlanta.

Therefore, if the attacks injured only me, I should ignore them.

But when these attacks hit and hurt not me, but innocent third parties, as is known to those who make the attacks, the public should be informed.

John Edmondson is known in Atlanta and throughout the State of Georgia. He needs no defense from me, as his friends and acquaintances know that he would not operate a questionable house. The Hotel Empire, in the Jackson Building, was leased to him a year or more ago for a period of five years.

Whether or not Mr. Edmondson makes money from his lease, he has to pay the rent, for the simple reason that he is financially responsible, independent of his connection with this hotel. Therefore, on strictly business principles, temporarily, it is immaterial to the owners of the building whether or not he makes money from the hotel.

At present he is losing money through no fault of his, but through attacks of members of the underworld and its defenders made upon me personally. The continued slanders deter decent people from going to the hotel. The other kind do not frequent it for two reasons.

First, Edmondson will not tolerate it.

The second is that I have requested the chief of police if anything is wrong in the Jackson Building to "pull it" before any other place.

At the outset of the campaign against protected vice I made this request of Chief Beavers in the presence of several newspaper men. I repeat the request to-day.

Furthermore, I have asked individuals, and I now ask them and all others, regardless of their motives, to have the Hotel Empire "pulled" if there is anything wrong with it. I will gladly pay the fee of any lawyer who will convict any bellboy, clerk or proprietor in the place of sanctioning any immorality. And I shall consider the showing up of the place not as an attack upon me, but as a personal favor.

What is more, Mr. Edmondson will consider it as a favor.

The Jackson Building is owned by five persons, the heirs of my father's estate. These also will thank the individual that puts an end to anything wrong upon their property.

And in future the public will appraise at their proper value the men who, in seeking to discredit a work of the churches of Atlanta, make attacks upon me which do not hurt me, but injure others who have done them no harm.

I have only pity for the blindness of these men and their tools.

Since these attacks have reached the public through your columns I would appreciate your giving the same publicity to this letter.

Respectfully,
MARION W. JACKSON.

Here is a statement by Edmondson:

Atlanta, Ga., June 10, 1913.

My attention has just been called to an article in Sunday's American wherein Carl Hutcheson states in substance that Mr. Marion Jackson is a party to the keeping of a disreputable house in the Empire Hotel in the city of Atlanta.

I beg to state that I have leased from the Jackson estate, of which Mr. Marion Jackson is one of the heirs, a hotel known as the Empire Hotel, in the city of Atlanta, having been in possession of the same since August, 1912, and that any imputation that this hotel has not been conducted in a proper manner is slanderous and untrue.

If Mr. Hutcheson can establish that one of my clerks has ever greeted a guest who was about to register with the language, "With or without?" I will give him $1,000, and if he can not establish this, if there is any manly instinct in him he will at once make a public apology, withdrawing this language or any reflection since my management of the Empire Hotel.

For the benefit of the public, I wish to state that I am conducting the Empire Hotel in a first-class manner and catering to the best trade, and that no vice of any character is permitted in that hotel with my knowledge, and if the same was going on I believe I would know of it.

It is unfair to me to be drawn into the unfortunate controversy that is now being conducted through the public press, and my hotel be made to suffer on account of the infamous charges about its management, simply because Mr. Marion Jackson happens to be one of the heirs at law owning the hotel.

J. L. EDMONDSON.

Frank T. Reynolds made the following statement:

Atlanta, Ga., June 10, 1913.

Occupying the position of general manager of the Empire Hotel from October 27, 1912, to April 27, 1913, when I became connected with the Hotel Ansley in Atlanta, I beg to state that while at the Empire Hotel I did not countenance or allow any improper persons to stop at said hotel, and when I discovered, which I occasionally did, that suspicious persons were trying to take an advantage of the hotel, I at once ordered them to leave.

I received positive instructions from John Edmondson not to allow vice of any kind to exist in the hotel, and enforced these instructions to the letter, and so long as I was general manager of the Empire Hotel I feel sure that no hotel in Atlanta or in the country was more cleanly conducted or freer from vice.

There is not a word of truth in the charges made by Carl Hutcheson in last Sunday's American, if his allusions referred to the Empire Hotel as the hotel owned by Marion Jackson, since and during my management of said hotel, and such a publication as he made concerning said hotel is a vile and infamous [illegible]acer.

Growth of School in 25 Years of Its Existence Is Told at Commencement Exercises.

Before an immense throng in the Grand Opera House at 11 o'clock Wednesday morning, the Tech celebration of its quarter-centenary reached a climax with the graduation of the senior class.

The event marked the close of the most successful year in the history of the institution and the graduation of its largest class.

In classic caps and gowns the young men formed into line at Peachtree and Harris Streets and marched to the theater, headed by members of the faculty and an orchestra. Passing solemnly down Peachtree Street the procession filed into the theater and to the stage, where speakers and graduates seated themselves in half circle facing the audience. A roar of applause shook the building as the senior appeared.

Dr. Bigelow Speaker.

The program before the award of degrees included addresses by many prominent men. The Rev. Lyman Hood, president of the Atlanta Theological Seminary, pronounced the invocation. The annual address was made by Dr. Herbert S. Bigelow, of Cincinnati. Dr. Bigelow spoke on "Old Institutions and New Ideas." He invoked the young men who were being sent out into the world by the Technological School to build upward and onward on the foundation laid for them by their professors.

Colonel N. E. Harris, one of the founders of Tech, spoke briefly of the advances made by the school in its quarter of a century's existence. It has increased its roll from 130 pupils to 825. Colonel Harris declared the year just closing was considered by the board of trustees of the institution as the most successful of any before.

University Head Talks.

Chancellor David Barrow, below head of the University of Georgia, made the closing address. Taking as his subject "Caps and Gowns," he pointed out to the graduates the vast significance of those robes.

"The caps and gowns are evidences of your training, boys," said the Chancellor. "They should prove constant reminders of your missions in the world. Never forget that you have worn those honored robes."

Dr. K. G. Matheson, president of the Tech, delivered the diplomas. Curator T. P. Branch read the honor roll, after which Governor Brown presented the scholarship trophies to nine men of the junior class, including Waldo M. Slaton, D. B. Wright, R. A. Shackelford, F. L. Shackelford, J. F. Woodruff, T. A. Gibson, D. S. Howell, E. Eberhart and R. A. Leimbach.

Medals presented by Dr. S. S. Wallace included the Yellow Jacket cup for the best conribution to the school periodical, which went to L. C. Boland; declamation medal, to H. L. Hardy, and medal for debate, to S. D. Frankel.

Followist is the list of the graduates:

A. C. Adair, A. S. Goebel, J. Phinizy, J. A. Roby, W. G. Miller, R. W. Reynolds, F. H. Lanham, J. T. L. Brown, E. K. Thomason, A. C. Matthews, Jr., M. A. Jamison, G. W. Laine, Jr., G. H. COURT RULES JURY CAN'T BE HURRIED

Magistrate's Time Limit of Thirty Minutes for Verdict Called Error in Laurens County Case.

Giving a jury a specified time in which to settle a case is an error, according to a decision handed down by the Court of Appeals Wednesday. The decision is in a case in the Dublin City Court, Haywood against Kitchens, in which the justice gave the jury 30 minutes in which to return a verdict. The decision reads:

"In the trial of a case on appeal in a justice court, it was error for the magistrate to inform the jury that he desired to take the train in 30 minutes; that he wanted a verdict one way or the other within that time, in order to permit him to take the train; and that he would get rid of the case some way in that time. While the amount involved was small, the evidence was sharply conflicting and somewhat voluminous, and the conduct of the justice tended to hasten the consideration of the case."

Another interesting decision was made when the court ruled in favor of damages for an arrest for cutting down telephone poles placed upon certain property without the consent of the owner or through the medium of condemnation proceedings. In the case of Holliday against Coleman, the plaintiff sued for damages for false arrest, charging he was detained by a constable for an hour and a half. Evidence showed he had cut down poles a gang of workmen had erected on his property.

6-MINUTE LIMIT SOUGHT FOR SMOKE

Commissioners Ask Council to Amend Ordinance, Cutting Time in Half.

Six minutes an hour for dense black smoke is the limit sought by the Smoke Commisioners of Atlanta. A resolution requesting the General Council to amend the smoke ordinance, reducing the time allowed from twelve to six minutes, was passed by the board yesterday at its semi-monthly meeting. The board was a unit in making the request.

"We have tried the twelve-minute law a year now, and great good has been accomplished," said J. M. VanHarlingen, chairman of the board, today.

30 Plants Observe Law.

"Thirty plants have put the law in effect, but we feel that other plants should know the time limit will be reduced. We feel sure the General Council will act upon our suggestion. The Chamber of Commerce will take the question up in a few days, and work in harmony with the board.

"The present law is violated if dense smoke issues from any one stack a total of more than twelve minutes in an hour. This is a good law, but still if smoke came out of every stack in Atlanta twelve minutes every hour we would have a smoky city. This time limit must be reduced, and we have asked the General Council to cut it in half.

Effective Next Year.

"Some people are preparing to bring their plants within the twelve-minute limit, but we feel they should know even this limit will be made shorter. We therefore suggest that factory people and others with boilers arrange their plants so that not more than six minutes of smoke will be made in one hour."

The amendment requested by the board, Mr. VanHarlingen says, will work no hardships, since it will not go into effect until April 1, 1914.

State Shoot Opens; High Score Expected

The annual rifle shoot of the Georgia National Guard began to-day at the Camp Evans rifle range. Despite the wind, the first shooters showed well. Indications are that unusually high scores will be made.

The largest number of men to participate in a State shoot are competing in the meet, Adjutant General J. VanHolt Nash having taken unusual interest in making it a success. Each year the National Guardsmen of Georgia have shown increasing efficiency in handling of the rifle.

Prominent National Guardsmen from all parts of Georgia are attending the meet. Social affairs have been arranged for them.

DANGER IN MEAT EATING

The death rate of Typhoid has been 19 per cent for many years. Even if patient recovers, there is danger. Weakened constitution, languidness, loss of energy and other after effects.

In a majority of cases typhoid fever is directly traceable to an inactive liver which has refused to clear away the masses of meat particles left undigested in the alimentary canal. This mass putrefies and sends out death-dealing poisons, to result in typhoid fever.

JACOBS' LIVER SALT is the greatest known liver stimulant. Its action is gentle, yet effective. It draws water to the alimentary tract, flushes the stomach and bowels, washes away the undigested meat particles and removes the danger of fermentation. The blood is purified through the renewed activity of the liver.

JACOBS' LIVER SALT does not cause nausea and vomiting, and there are no dangerous after-effects as with calomel. 'MEND PEACHTREE, PAVE NEXT YEAR'

If plans, to be submitted in a resolution to the public work committee of the County Commission by Chairman Shelby Smith Wednesday, are adopted the work of improving Peachtree Street from Fifteenth Street to Buckhead will be begun within 30 days.

While admitting that the street needs a new pavement, Chairman Smith's plans provide merely for the repairing of the thoroughfare, with the proviso that the new pavement be laid next year.

A number of Peachtree residents have petitioned for a new pavement this year, but because of numerous other improvements planned before the Peachtree proposition was breached this was found to be impossible.

It is understood that property owners and residents will be satisfied with a temporary improvement, if they are assured the street will be repaved next year.

Out of a turbulent sea of intoxication, Charlie Jackson was steered into a harbor of safety—the stockade—Wednesday when he came up for trial before the head navigator, Judge Broyles.

Charlie, a negro, anchored off a Thirteenth Street residence and delivered a broadside of nautical oaths.

74-YEAR-OLD MAN GIVEN $6,000 JOB

WASHINGTON, June 11.—President Wilson to-day nominated Major J. C. French as postmaster at Memphis, Tenn. This is the best Federal office in Tennessee, paying $6,000 per year salary.

Major French is 74 years of age. His appointment was favored by Congressman K. D. McKellar, of the Tenth Tennessee (Memphis) District, but more serious opposition was manifested in Memphis on account of Major French's age.

As this developed, it was proposed to give the office to Hubert Fisher, State Senator from Shelby County, who is a personal friend of President Wilson and a graduate of Princeton.

College Praised for Students' Record

Dr. F. H. Gaines, president of Agnes Scott College, is receiving congratulations on behalf of that college for the record made by Miss Lucile Alexander, of Atlanta, a B. A. graduate, who has just received her M. A. degree from Columbia College, after one year of study.

In 1912 the specialist in higher education of the United States Bureau of Education made a grouping of the leading colleges for women in the United States. Fifty-nine colleges were placed in the first group. The chief ground upon which a college was placed in group 1 was the ability of a B. A. graduate "to take the master's degree in one year in any of the large schools."

SUBPENA IS WIRED IN LOBBY INQUIRY

WASHINGTON, June 11.—A. Warren Moore, a publisher, and M. Baker, publisher of The Courier-News, of Fargo, N. Dak., were subpenaed today by wire by the Overman lobby inquiry committee, at the request of Senator Gronna. This paper ridiculed Senator Kenyon's suggestion about the presence of an organized lobby in Washington.

"But it is not the theater tickets nor the lobster a la Newburg which gets his goat. It is the coin of the realm and nothing else. He has probably heard about it, although he testified that he knew nothing about an existing lobby."

This Senator Gronna understood to refer to himself, and went on the witness stand at his own request to demand an investigation.

A Sale of Oriental China

One That Will Be Long Remembered by Those Who Share Its Remarkable Values

Lovers of these quaint and beautiful and colorful wares that typify the Orient have in this sale an opportunity that undoubtedly beggars comparison with any sale Atlanta has ever known.

Prices are not halved, they are not even cut into thirds, they are fractioned to smaller fractions than halves and thirds represent. However, you may easily see the price-treatment below.

But the china---you will never see why it has been so priced. It is that richly decorated ware of fine quality that every housekeeper would own, and in such a variety that the selection of complete sets will be an easy matter.

It is a clearaway with us, we have disregarded the beauty of the china, and as is customary with Chamberlin-Johnson-DuBose Co., made prices that will indeed clear the china away.

The sale begins with the opening of the store, and the sooner thereafter you arrive the greater the variety will be.

Values to $20.00
At $12.50

Values to $6.50
At $3.75
Children's Coats in sizes six to fourteen years. Splendid choice here, the variety of styles is about as great as you would have it, they are very pretty little affairs, in red, navy and mixture weaves——and besides these are all the finer coats for children now half-price, which brings the price range to $5.00 to $7.50, instead of from $10.00 to $15.00.

For Boys' $2.25 to $2.50 Suits

$1.50 Boys' Wash Suits in sizes two to six years; white and colored madras, crepes, linens, trimmed with colored pipings and bands. Regulation bloomer or beach pants. These for Thursday only.

For Girls' $3.25 Dresses

$1.79 Girls' Wash Dresses, sizes six to fourteen years. The materials are linens and percales. Long waisted plaited skirts, some few Norfolk Suits, and with these in the same sizes are $2.25 to $2.50 dresses at $1.29.

A Millinery "Occasion"

Hats That Were $8.50 to $15 — $2.50

Hats That Were $12.50 to $25 — $5.00

Of those that are now $2.50 there are forty-nine. They remain, the greater part of them, from a recent sale in which they were $5.00. Of those that are now $5.00, there are thirty-five, now reduced for the first time.

There are hemps, milans and Belgian splits and Neapolitans, in about as many shapes as there are hats. The trimmings are wings, feathers, ribbons, flowers, malines. There are a few white and light tan hats among those at $5.00. As a rule, however, they are in reds, blues, greens and browns—hats that travelers will want, hats for wear with coat suits.

And how quickly they should go! The prices are but nominal figures, in no way representative of worth. But it is the final clearance and so—$2.50 and $5.00.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

SHE IS RIGHT.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am keeping company with a young lady who is 20 years of age and I am 27, and I have known this girl for the past five years. Lately I notice she keeps company with one of my friends. Do you think that I should give her up? She told me that she loves me, but she made an appointment with me and went out with my friend.

WALLACE.

It seems to me that if you have been devoted to her so long and have not asked her to marry you she does right to accept invitations from others.

Make her a proposal of marriage and if she accepts this will give you the right of objection.

THAT DEPENDS.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

Is it proper for a girl to begin the correspondence with a man?

If a girl gets an invitation to a dance or party, is it proper for her to ask a man to go with her if it is a pay affair? E. M. F.

The answer to your first question can not be decisive for the reason that you tell so little.

It is never proper for a girl to write to a man she does not know, and it is for her best good that she write rarely to those she knows.

To your second question: Most decidedly no.

GOOD BEHAVIOR HELPS.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I have been calling on a young lady for some time and find that her father does not seem to fancy me. Kindly advise me what I should do to win his fancy. T. C. A. B.

You ask for something difficult to give. Often a father's objections originate in the very natural desire to keep a daughter at home. Perhaps she is too young to receive attentions. Or—and the remedy for this lies in your own hands—perhaps you are not the character a man would welcome in a son-in-law.

HE LIKES YOU.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am 17 and care very much for a young man of 20, with whom I work. When he sees me talking to other boys he gets very jealous, but still when he meets me he never says more than "Hello." e Jokes with the other girls, but he never gets jealous of them. Now, do you think he cares for me and is too bashful to say so, or that he doesn't care for me, and therefore thinks the others should not? ROSE.

He likes you very much. That is plainly evident.

But you are too young, my dear, to bother your little head about love. Try to be happy and heart-free a few years longer. I am sure you will never regret it.

"ALL'S FAIR IN LOVE."

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

Is it proper for a young man who has been calling on a young lady for six months and confessed his love for her, and she never makes any encouraging remarks of her love for him, to stop calling without any explanation? I asked for her love, but all I got was "I'll tell you some other time" for my answer.

LONESOME.

It is the only thing you can do if you are a man of any spirit, and unless you are a man of spirit she will never accept it.

Stay away a month. I am sure she will send for you, and when you return demand a decisive answer.

"I don't know whether I do or not," replied the Head Waitress. "I'd like to know what your object is. There ain't nobody now-a-days that does anything without an object. Every kindly word has its sting in these parlor times."

What She Calls Them.

"Parlous times," corrected the Steady Customer.

"If you knew what I meant you didn't have to correct me," snapped the Head Waitress. "You newspaper guys are always showing off. And let me tell you something. Marie, the cashier, is gettin' sore at you. You had her in the paper saying 'bloke' the other day. She don't call no guy a bloke. She comes from Indiana, where they don't use them kind of expressions."

"What does she call them?" asked the Steady Customer.

"Fellers," said the Head Waitress, "and that's proper, too. You wouldn't say, 'I'm going out with my best bloke, to-night,' would you. No, you'd say 'my best feller.'"

"I am duly crushed and chastised," replied the Steady Customer. "Anything else?"

"Yes, me and Marie would like to know where you and your dark friend go every day after lunch," said the Head Waitress. "You don't go right back to your office, because me and her seen you walk the other way every day."

"Why, we go to a moving picture show," explained the Steady Customer. "We find that gazing at stirring Western scenes or reckless deeds of daring takes our minds off the violent efforts of our stomachs that are protesting against the sinkers that you hand us in here."

"Hm-m," sniffed the Head Waitress. "I can't see how you can go to such places."

The Truth.

"Well, to be truthful," said the Steady Customer, "I like to go there because it's all dark and I can close my eyes and think of your sweet faces."

"Some time you'll close your eyes in the dark," said the Head Waitress, "and when you wake up you won't be able to see your watch any more, you poor simp."

.:. .:. House Cleaning .:. .:.

By MAY IRWIN.

THE first step in the campaign against the gathered dust and grime is to get the men out of the house, by some pretext. Not that it isn't possible to clean house without the men of the house knowing it. I have done it. But a woman isn't looking her best when she cleans house, and the remnant of vanity left in us in these reconstructive days rebels against the men seeing us with smudges on cheek and nose, and our hands are not pretty things during the orgies with dust and discord.

To make the house habitable during housecleaning be systematic. Take one part at a time. There is absolutely no reason for having the whole house or flat looking as though a cyclone had visited it. Cleaning should be progressive. Take two rooms at a time.

A golden rule of housecleaning is: "Don't try to do it all in a day." If you overwork the first day you will be worn out and unfit for the task of the second day, and the work becomes slavery. Housecleaning need not be drudgery unless you make it so.

Take two front rooms, say, as a beginning. Carry all the room belongings in room A into room B. Close the door opening into room B so that room A shall take care of its own dust. Thoroughly sweep the floor, giving careful attention to neglected corners. With a long-handled wall brush dust the wall and ceiling. For plain woodwork and hard floors use a large wooden bucket of warm water in which two pounds of oxalic acid have been dissolved. Wipe off the floors and woodwork with this, using an orange-wood stick inside of the cloth for boring out difficult chinks and corners of dust. While room A is drying from its cleansing, go to room B. Throw open all the windows and attack the furniture of room A. When room A is dry, move that furniture back into place and carry the furniture of room B into room A.

Carry the plan of cleaning two by two, twin cleansing, through the house, and you will be pleased with the result.

To Wash Curtains.

To clean your blankets, don't begin by soaking them. Wash them in warm water and with soap. Do not rub, but push them into and draw them out of the water. Pound them with a heavy and clean potato masher, a new one, of an age not to have acquired "slivers." Rinse them in warm, clean water. If they are not yet clean, put them through a second water—a third, fourth, even a fifth or sixth—until clean. Keep all the waters through which the blankets are put at the same temperature. Don't wring blankets. Put them on the line in a hot sun.

To wash lace curtains, soak them in cold water for two days. Then put them into hot water, into which enough soap has been shaved, an amount according to their condition. Do not rub them. Dip them up and down vigorously in the suds. Change the water three or more times. Rinse in warm water. Then rinse in cold water with a tiny bit of indigo. Then put them, one at a time, gently through a wringer and dry them on a curtain frame.

And So It Goes.

"What a ducky little place!" said the happy bride to be, as her sweetheart showed her over her prospective home. "But I am afraid, Harold, everything is so small. Now, look at this little pigeonhole. Surely you don't call it a shoe cupboard, dear?"

"Darling," sweetly answered the young man, "that little pigeonhole, as you call it, will hold a hundred pairs of shoes of the size you wear."

The pucker in her pretty brows quickly disappeared.

"Perhaps you're right, Harold," she remarked. And all was well.

Beauty Secrets of Beautiful Women

By LILLIAN LAUFERTY.

ONCE upon a time a clever woman said: "Stays make waists."

Just now waists are out of fashion; but another clever woman has told me how to produce the highest type of modern figure—all lissome, swaying curves, shading gracefully into a free, beautiful whole. And in her creed there are neither "stays" nor "waist."

As a first step toward a good figure learn to stand," said Sophye Barnard, a recent recruit from comic opera to vaudeville, under the B. F. Keith management. "And as a regular promenade in the direction of a figure good enough to go on its own merits without help from corsets and artificial first aids to of correct standing and breathing?" I asked.

the figure-seeker. Just try a course of singing lessons.

"A girl works pretty hard to get a beautiful voice, or just to cultivate a fairly pleasing one—but it pays—even in unexpected ways, for she suddenly finds a good figure thrown in as a premium, and a good figure is a rather attractive thing to possess, isn't it?" added Miss Barnard, ingenuously.

Rarely does one see a more beautiful figure than Miss Barnard's, which is made of absolutely the most graceful possible combinations of slender curves. I think her theories may be taken as the last word on how to make perfect poise bring out every good point in your own natural figure.

Lightly Poised.

The actress learns to be lightly poised on her feet," said Miss Barnard. "She learns to stand so that she may spring instantly into action; she never slouches or lounges or falls into ungraceful lines of abandon into which her figure, with a little unfortunate practice, might easily come to arrange itself naturally. She is poised, tense, alert. That keys her up to look and feel vividly alive, and it trains her figure into the right lines. It is just as important to keep your figure from sagging as to keep your mouth dropping at the corners.

"In singing, you learn to hold the muscles of the abdomen tense, to keep the chest high and filled with an ever-changing supply of clean air as you ventilate your lungs at each deep breath."

"Won't you give me a little exhibition in caricature of its flowing curves. Then she advanced her right foot and stood tensely alert, with the weight of her body swung forward onto the ball of that foot. She took a deep breath, beginning at the firmly held abdominal walls, and pulling the air up into full white chest. Throat, shoulders and chest pulsed into firm contours, and shoulders and throat like Sophye Barnard's became in themselves beauties worth emulating.

"I think your first beauty secret is too good to stay a secret long" said I. "Now won't you tell me what rules of hygiene and diet you bring to be its lieutenants?"

"My rules are all very simple—anyone can put them into practice," said the charming singer. "Simple foods, with no ices or godas or pastries, are my idea of the correct diet—although I can eat what I like without falling prey to indigestion; but I take no advantage of that ability, and I suppose the reason I can combine a welsh rarebit and broiled live lobster and strawberry ice cream is because I don't!

"I lead a very regular life too—though the popular fancy does not picture an actress doing that. I always am in bed by 12; scarcely ever visit cafes, but have my after-theater parties at home, where I am sure of simple, wholesome food, of pure air to breathe, and of getting to bed in due season. People who dine in cafes on rich, heavy foods; and breathe the heavy, artificial air of the restaurant the while they do it are sure to get fat—or indigestion—or both."

"You lay great stress on simple food and correct poise. The inner woman seems well taken care of in your rules of the game," said I. Now will you tell all of us how to have smooth, satiny hair and skin?"

"Do you consider me qualified to give advice on those subjects?" asked Miss Barnard in the pleased tone of a good child who has been praised.

I did, and I do.

The Hair.

"You wash your hair more times than the old-fashioned theories taught you to—you brush it all the time, whenever you get a chance, and you don't curl it any of the time, and then when it is brushed and washed into a clean fresh mass you dress it as smoothly and gracefully as possible, and keep it in its proper place as background for your face.

"And as for skin, when you have observed the rules of keeping your internal system sweet and clean, you do the same by externals. Keep the skin clean and unclogged and free to do some correct breathing of its own, and then make it soft and flexible by the constant use of good cold cream."

Perhaps all this sounds like constant, unceasing hard work. If you feel discouraged before ever you begin—look earnestly at Miss Barnard's beautiful arms and shoulders, at the perfect symmetry of her graceful figure. To approach "a consummation so devoutly to be desired" who will not sacrifice a bit of old and some lazy habits?

.:. Secrets of Good Looks .:.

By MME. LINA CAVALIERI.

The Distinguished Grand Opera Prima Donna and World Famous Beauty.

DO not take offense. Simply consider my suggestion and investigate.

No face is clean unless it is as absolutely free from dust as a newly washed window. No face is clean unless its pores are as free from obstruction as a freshly cleaned sieve from grit.

Have you freckles or liver spots? Your face is not clean. Indeed, the clean face is the exception instead of the rule. Yet, if there were more clean faces there would be more good complexions. The mottled skin is the index of a defective sewerage system.

Cleanse your face with oils and creams. But also use water. Many experiments have taught me that washing the face is a process of several stages. To remove the roughest dirt, use oils or creams. Spread these liberally on the face with the fingers or a piece of absorbent cotton. Be careful to reach every crevice or corner of the face with the oil or cream. Leave the oil or cream on the skin for at least five minutes. If the skin has been exposed to much dust or wind, leave these cleansers on for a quarter of an hour to search out every particle of dust and soften it. Then, with more cotton or with an old linen or silk handkerchief, gently wipe it off. You will be surprised at the grimy deposit on the cloth.

When this has been done, if you are not going out of doors, bathe the face gently in a bowlful of warm water softened with a pinch of borax or a half dozen drops of benzoin. Spread almond meal on the palms. Dip them into the water, and press them upon the face, rubbing the muscles upward. Do this until you have passed the almond meal covered palms all over the face. Then rinse the face with handfuls of cool water.

Lastly, if the facial muscles are loose and sagging, iron the face with ice, pressing the muscles firmly upward. After this careful face washing you will be surprised to see how white your face looks, and it will mortify you to realize how far from clean your visage had been before.

Pure cocoanut oil is one of the best skin cleansers and skin foods. Olive oil, into which one drop of benzoin to an ounce of the oil as a whitener has been dropped, is to be recommended.

A Gentle Hint.

A little girl made a call at the house of a neighbor. She saw some apple parings on a plate, and said: "I smell apples."

"Yes," the lady replied, "I guess you smell those apple parings on the table."

"No, no," said the little miss, smacking her lips, "'taint them I smell. I smell whole apples."

Little Bobbie's Pa

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

BOBBIE, sed Ma to me yesterday afternoon, you have prubly noticed that yure father has been a littel cross & out of sorts laitly. I doant know if he reelizes how littel sunshine he radi-ates these days, but he is deevelopping into a moody old dort, & I doant want yure father, my deer husband, to git cross grained.

He has been a littel grouchy laitly, I sed to Ma, but I guess it is sumthing like sum bizness worry that he has on his mind. I know that he will git oaver that & cum back sum of these days into his old form.

Well, I hoap so, sed Ma, but in the meentime I am going to try a littel skeem on him that I was reeding about in the ladies' Hoam Comfort. A vary brite woman wich rites for the Comfort sed that wen she noticed her husband gitting moody & abstracted she always acted as if the wurld was cumming to a end. She says in her artikel that she is naturally sunny & sweet tempered, but that wen her husband gits blue she gits twice as blue & says sad peeces of poetry & talks about the Grave & the inevitabel end of man. Then her husband wud always git cheerful so that thare cud be a littel sunshine in the fambly. You watch me tonite wen your father cums hoam, Bobbie, sed Ma. If you doant see him start gitting cheerful rite away this woman has the wrong idee.

Pa wasent vary cheerful wen he got hoam, that is one sure thing. Sumthing must have gone wrong at the offis or sumware, beekaus his face was as long as a sack of flour & wen he got in the house & was hanging up his rain coat he sighed hard, like one of them sirens on a ottmbeel.

Pa Recites.

Then Pa sighed aggenn & jest wen he was going to beegin to talk Ma sighed, too. She sighed harder than Pa & recsited:

The day is coald & dark & dreery,
It rains & the wind is nevver weery.
The vine still clings to the moldering wall
& at every gust the ded leeves fall,
The day is dark & dreery.
Into eech life sum rain must fall,
Sum days must be dark & dreery

Pa looked at Ma kind of su-prised. Ma is always so cheerful wen Pa cums hoam, espeshully Saterday nites, that Pa cuddent understand why she looked so sad. I am the only one wich knew & I wasent saying anything.

What in the wurld has gone wrong, deer? sed Pa.

Oh, everything, sed Ma. Life at best seems to me like the monotonous beeting of a lot of sullen waives on a barren shore, restless, whimpering waives that go groaning at last into the tideles sea of Eternity.

More Poetry.

Rattel his bones
Over the stones,
He's only a pauper whom nobody owns.

For hevings saik, deer, sed Pa, cheer up. Why, you doant know how sorry I am to see my littel song bird sitting with her fethers drooping. Cum & smile for me a littel, deerest. Then Pa kissed Ma & sed, Here is fifty dollars, deerest. I got a hundred to-day that I nevver expected to get back, & you can have half of it. The man owed me a other hundred, Pa sed, besides this, wich I will nevver git, & that made me kind of grouchy on the way hoam, but after all things cud be much worse. Then Pa sang Missus McCorley's Twins for Ma. Pa sings it so bad that it is good, & it always maiks Ma laff. The fifty dollars made Ma laff moar, tho. Then she hugged Pa & sed he was her little ray of sunshine. I guess she called him that beekaus the fifty-dollar bill that he gave her was yellow like a ray of sunshine.

"But there wasn't any shot," the perplexed and alarmed detective expostulated. He fairly stuttered in the earnestness of his self-defense. "I tell you, Chief, there hasn't been a sound."

Burke rose to his feet. His heavy face was set in its sternest mold.

"You could drive a hearse through the hole they've made in him," he rumbled. He wheeled on Mary and Dick. "So!" he shouted, "now it's murder! * * * Well, hand it over. Where's the gun?"

Followed a moment's pause. Then the Inspector spoke harshly to Cassidy. He still felt himself somewhat dazed by this extraordinary event, but he was able to cope with the situation. He nodded toward Dick as he gave his order. "Search him!"

Dick Took the Revolver.

Before the detective could obey the direction, Dick took the revolver from his pocket where he had bestowed it, and held it out.

And so it chanced that at this incriminating crisis for the son, the father hastily strode within the library. He had been aroused by the Inspector's shouting, and was evidently greatly perturbed. His usual dignified air was marred by a patent alarm.

"What's all this?" he exclaimed, as he halted and started doubtfully on the scene before him.

Burke, in a moment like this, was no respecter of persons, for all his judicious attentions on other occasions to those whose influence might serve him well for benefits received.

"You can see for yourself," he said grimly to the dumfounded magnate. Then he fixed sinister eyes on the son. "So," he went on, with somber menace in his voice, "you did it, young man." He nodded toward the detective. "Well, Cassidy, you can take 'em both downtown. * * * That's all."

The command aroused Dick to remonstrate against such indignity toward the woman whom he loved.

"Not her!" he cried, imploringly. "You don't want her, Inspector! This is all wrong!"

Now at last, Mary interposed with a new spirit. She had regained, in some measure at least, her poise. She was speaking again with that mental clarity which was distinctive in her.

"Dick," she advised quietly, but with underlying urgency in her gentle spoken words, "don't talk, please."

Burke laughed harshly.

"What do you expect?" he inquired truculently. "As a matter of fact, the thing's simple enough, young man. Either you killed Griggs, or she did."

The Inspector, with his charge, made a careless gesture toward the corpse of the murdered stool-pigeon. For the first time, Edward Gilder, as his glance unconsciously followed the officer's movement, looked and saw the ghastly inanimate heap of flesh and bone that had once been a man. He fairly reeled at the grewsome spectable, then fumbled with an outstretched hand as he moved stumblingly until he laid hold on a chair, into which he sank helplessly. It suddenly smote upon his consciousness that he felt very old and broken. He marveled dully over the sensation—it was wholly new to him. Then, soor from a long way off, he heard the strident voice of the Inspector remorselessly continuing in the vile, the impossible accusation. * * * And that grotesque accusation was hurled against his only son—the boy whom he so loved. The thing was monstrous, a thing incredible. This whole seeming was no more than a chimera of the night, a phantom of bad dreams, with no truth under it. * * * Yet the stern voice of the official came with a strange semblance of reality.

"Either you killed him," the voice repeated, gratingly, "or she did. Well, then, young man, did she kill him?"

"Good God, no!" Dick shouted, aghast.

"Then it was you!" Such was the Inspector's summary of the case.

Mary's words came frantically. Once again she was become desperate over the course of events in this night of fearful happenings.

"No, no! He didn't!"

Burke's rasping voice reiterated the accusation with a certain complacency in the inevitability of the dilemma.

"One of you killed Griggs. Which one of you did it?" He scowled at Dick. "Did she kill him?"

Again the husband's cry came with the fierceness of despair over the fate of the woman.

"I told you, no!"

The Inspector, always savagely impressive, now in voice and look and gesture, faced the girl with saturnine persistence.

"Well, then," he blustered, "did he kill him?"

The nod of his head was toward Dick. Then, as she remained silent: "I'm talking to you!" he snapped. "Did he kill him?"

The reply came with a soft distinctness that was like a crash of destiny.

"Yes."

Dick turned to his wife in reproachful amazement.

"Mary!" he cried, incredulously. This betrayal was something inconceivable from her, since he believed that now at last he knew her heart.

Burke, however, as usual, paid no heed to the niceties of sentiment. They had small place in his concerns as an official of police. His sole ambition just now was to fix the crime definitely on the perpetrator.

"You'll swear he killed him?" he asked, briskly, well content with this concrete result of the entanglement.

Be Wise! Make Your Own Ice Cream

Of course, you know that home-made ice creams, sherbets or ices are superior from every viewpoint. They are always sweet, pure and wholesome; there is a flavor and genuine goodness about them that is not found in the general run of factory products. Besides that, when you make your own preparations you know that the ingredients are always pure, and that the can is clean and sanitary. The main reason why ice cream is made in but comparatively few homes, is the work and bother connected with the old-fashioned crank freezer. That is one reason why the arrival of

will be hailed with delight by every one who is fond of ice creams, etc., because it eliminates the tedious turning of the crank entirely, and produces creams, sherbets and ices that will make your mouth water. That is one reason, but there are many others.

A Story for Baseball Fans That Will Interest Every Lover of the National Game

SYNOPSIS

Gordon Kelly, a mountain boy of Georgia, goes to Atlanta. He becomes the sensation of the baseball world through his marvelous playing, although he said that he had never played a game before arriving in Atlanta. He is bought by the Boston American League Club for $50,000. Kelly incurs the enmity of Forrest Cain, a wealthy ne'er-do-well, at the same time winning the friendship and love of Mildred Deery, daughter of an Atlanta banker. Kelly is hurt in a game and Mildred runs to his assistance. He recovers, leaves the hospital and mysteriously disappears. He is not heard from for months. Mildred admits to herself that she loves Kelly. Her father dislikes the publicity given Mildred's assistance to Kelly on the baseball field. He gets Mildred to agree to go to the mountains. Cain follows Mildred and calls upon her. While Mildred is fishing she suddenly comes upon Gordon Kelly.

Now go on with the story.

CHAPTER XXIV.

GORDON KELLY held Mildred Deery in his embrace a full minute, maybe. Her head rested on his breast and she felt his heart beating like a triphammer. At last she sighed happily and, raising her head, she smiled faintly in his serious face.

"Gordon," she murmured, "won't you say something?"

Gordon gulped once or twice convulsively. He tried to talk, but his voice broke on the first syllable. He tried again.

"Mildred, dear," he said, hoarsely, "can it be you? I can't believe it. I have been thinking of you and only you for six long weeks. I tried to find you and"——

"How hard did you try?" Mildred interrupted. She released herself from his arms. She was beginning to recover herself.

"Why, Mildred, I called up your house just as soon as they would let me. I called up every day for more than a week and then every other day and then every three or four days and I always received the same answer. You had gone away and they didn't know where you were or when you would return. I did all I could. I couldn't move for some time and I"——

"And you finally stopped" calling up altogether. Well, I don't think you made much of an effort. Didn't it occur to you to call up my father or my mother, if you were so much interested?"

Oh, the perversity of women. If Mildred Deery were to confess it, her thoughts had been on Gordon Kelly almost constantly for the six weeks since last she had seen him. Here he was in flesh and blood standing before her, and she was now apparently trying to fret him.

"I—I—don't know much about these things," he stammered. "What have I done, Mildred? I only——"

An Interruption.

"I got him, Mildred! I got him!" yelled the voice of Elmer Shepard in the distance. "I knew there was a big fellow in there. Where are you, Mildred?"

They could hear him crashing through the underbrush. Mildred moved a few paces away from Gordon. Presently Elmer bounded over a boulder and came into view on the other side of the brook. He stopped short at seeing the stranger.

"Keep right on, Elmer, and we will meet you in the road and then we will go to the oaks and have luncheon," said Mildred. She had forgotten all about the lad, but now, mischievously enough, she welcomed his presence. Gordon, too felt the tension relax. The lad, coming on the scene, would give him a breathing spell and allow him time to collect his wits that Mildred had so ruthlessly scattered.

Picking up her fishing tackle, Gordon assisted Mildred up the embankment that bordered the road. Elmer was there before them. He held a large fish by the gills on one finger and proudly displayed his catch.

"Elmer," said Mildred, "this is my friend, Mr. Kelly. We met in the most"——

"Gordon Kelly. Gee whiz!" exclaimed Elmer, jumping up and down in his excitement. He was a little fellow for his age, whole souled and outspoken. Mildred laughed and so did Gordon.

Gordon Folded Mildred in his arms.

The Cat Out of the Bag.

"Aren't you going to shake hands with Mr. Kelly?" asked Mildred, for Elmer in the sensations of the moment, had not seen Gordon's outstretched hand. The lad dropped the fish he held and put his small hand in that of the tall young man. There was only five years' difference in the ages of the two, yet one was a little boy and the other a full grown man.

"I am glad to meet you," said Gordon, pleasantly. "But how did you know my first name?"

"Oh, I read all about you in the papers and I have seen your picture dozens of times. Besides, Mildred and I have talked about you."

"Elmer!" exclaimed Mildred blushing furiously.

"We did, too, just as we were starting out this morning. You know we did."

"You did the talking about Mr. Kelly, if I'm not mistaken," returned Mildred. "However, I guess there was no harm done, and, as I'm getting hungry, I suggest we change the subject and have something to eat. Won't you join us, Mr. Kelly?"

"Thank you, but I'm afraid I have fallen into the ball players' habit of two meals a day—a late breakfast and hearty dinner at night."

"We will allow you to sit with us and watch us eat, then," said Mildred. "Or would you prefer to resume your fishing?"

"I guess not," laughed Gordon. He knew he would have to begin all over again with Mildred, but he felt sure of himself now. "I'll just gather up my rod and net, however," he added. "I had a fish nearly landed when I saw you, but I forgot all about him."

They were soon comfortably seated under a huge oak tree, Mildred, with a shy glance at Gordon, pulled her short skirt down as far as it would go, leaned back against the trunk of a tree, and selecting a sandwich from the napkin that held them, bit into it daintily.

"Now, then, Mr. Gordon Kelly, give an account of yourself," she said. "What are you doing up here?"

"They had no further use for me at the hospital, so I just came up; that's all," replied Gordon.

"Why did you come here?"

"Because I had no other place to go. I live here."

"Live here!" exclaimed Mildred. "Live where?"

"Right here," replied Gordon, with an amused smile. "We are sitting on my property now."

"Goodness gracious, I didn't know that," said Mildred, as though she was doing something she ought not to do.

"Certainly, that bridge that crosses the brook is at the southern boundary line."

"Oh, I know, I know," Elmer broke in, excitedly. "That road that goes through the big granite posts leads to your house, doesn't it?"

"Youve guessed it, Elmer," replied Gordon.

"Well, I declare," said Mildred. "Tell us all about it, Mr. Kelly."

"With pleasure, Miss Deery," laughed Gordon, emphasizing the last two words as though to recall to her mind that she had called him by his first name not many minutes ago. "There's not much to tell. The road leads to a house and I live in the house. Now, please allow me to ask a few questions. What are you doing up here?"

"Because I had no other place to go. I live here." She smiled mischievously.

Elmer rolled on his back and kicked up his heels.

"Ha ha, I guess she's got you there, Mr. Kelly," he said. He had been feasting his eyes on the great Gordon Kelly all the while. Mildred watched him with a smile.

"You're right, Elmer." Then, turning to Mildred, Gordon said:

"But just where do you live; I am very much interested in my neighbors."

"Oh, just on the other side of the brook; on my father's property."

That can't be your father's property. It is owned by the Southern Land & Development Company."

"Galen Deery is the Southern Land & Development Company," replied Mildred with a little toss of her head. with a little toss of her head.

"Oh, I see," mused Gordon.

"And I guess you don't own this property, either," declared Elmer, who would stick up for Mildred if it came to a question. "Dad's got a map and it says this land is owned by the Prescott Trust Company."

Gordon laughed.

"You win all the arguments, Elmer," he said. "You are right. It was a whim of my father's to put all his land in a company's name. But now that we've found each other out I hope it won't make bad neighbors of us."

"We will have to see about that," replied Mildred, with a sly look.

Mildred Blushes.

"Now I begin to understand," exclaimed Gordon. "You live in that house they were finishing when I went to Atlanta."

"Say, Mr. Kelly, you didn't do a thing to them down there, did you?" broke in Elmer. "Say that last hit you made was a corker, wasn't it? You remember, Mildred, you were there."

Mildred's face grew crimson.

"You little turncoat, you were on my side a minute ago," was all she could say in her embarrassment.

"That's all right, I'm with you now," said the lad. "But it was mighty good of her, wasn't it, Mr. Kelly, to run out on the field to help you?"

"Indeed it was, Elmer," replied Gordon, soberly. He had meant to tell her so at the right time, but now he noted Mildred's confusion and turned the subject quickly by asking:

"What luck did you have this morning?"

That gave the lad a chance to tell all about the morning's sport. He found Kelly knew all the best pools, as he had fished every rod of the stream year after year. Gordon told them tales of his hunting in the mountains that made Elmer's eyes glisten. Mildred listened dreamily. There was no intimate conversation such as she secretly wished there could be if the lad was not present. But that would come. She longed to have Gordon tell her all about himself, but the pleasure of anticipation is always great.

A Surprising Young Man.

The time passed all too quickly, and it was after 4 o'clock before they realized it. Mildred spoke of going home. Gordon jumped to his feet and helped her to arise.

"You will let me see you again soon?" he said.

"Oh, yes," she replied, and then paused a moment. "But not for a day or two. I will let you know. Have you a telephone. Ring three times? I will remember. Please don't call me up; you will hear from me. Well, good-by." She held out her hand.

"Wait a minute," said Gordon. "I'll be right back." He disappeared through the trees on the run and returned in three or four minutes. "Now we can walk to the bridge, if you like."

They walked slowly and lingered on the bridge for a while, as if loath to part. Gordon looked at his watch.

"Give me two minutes more," he said. Even as he spoke there was the sound of a vehicle coming rapidly down the road and presently a high-powered automobile of the latest model, driven by a negro lad, slowed down and stopped at the bridge.

"I'll drive my friends home, Steve," said Gordon to the negro boy. "You wait here until I return."

"Is this your automobile?" cried Mildred in surprise. "Where in the world did it come from?"

"I telephoned for it," replied Gordon, smiling. "Another whim of my father's. He had telephones strung to every corner of the property."

"Gee whiz, that's going some," observed Elmer.

Mildred said nothing. She was thinking of the strange Gordon Kelly, a ball player, who owned a vast estate in the mountains and had servants at his beck and call who brought automobiles to him as if by magic.

CHAPTER XXV.

WHEN Gordon Kelly jumped on the tail of the express wagon in Atlanta, he told the driver to go to the Terminal Station. On the way there he decided to effectually conceal his movements, if it were possible to do so. He wanted more time to think. It is true he had had several weeks in which he did hardly anything else than think, but with his problem still unsolved he wanted to devote some more time to it, or get it off his mind altogether. The problem, of course, was Mildred Deery.

On the way to the Terminal he got a check for his trunk from the driver and told him to take the trunk to the baggage room. He paid the driver and got off the wagon a quarter of a mile from the terminal, leaving it to go on and deliver the trunk as ordered. Then he went to an express office, delivered his check and arranged to have the trunk forwarded to Steve Jackson, Pew Creek, Ga. After this was done he went to the freight office and after a good deal of trouble succeeded in geeting permission to ride in the caboose of the night freight to Chattanooga. One is sometimes able to arrange these things under proper persuasion.

It was in the gray of the morning that he dropped off the train, without being noticed, when it stopped at Pew Creek. It was all of a 12-mile walk to his home, but he started off, and it was not until he reached the bridge where later he met Mildred that he was able to make use of one of the telephones on his property and order an automobile to take him the rest of the way. Steve Jackson, his negro boy, quickly answered the summons, and that is the way Gordon Kelly reached his mountain home without anyone being the wiser. An hour later he had Judge Barbee on the telephone.

"This is Gordon," he said, "I am up home and I want particularly to ask you not to tell a soul where I am. You can reach me any time you wish but if you should call please ask for Mr. Gordon. I don't want anyone to know where I am for a while. Yes, everything is all right but I am trying to avoid a lot of annoyance. Goodbye."

With that off his mind Gordon proceeded to settle down to his old mode of life; that is as much as his troubled thoughts would allow him to.

The news that Gordon Kelly had left the hospital, packed his trunk and departed from Atlanta, presumably for Boston to join the Red Sox, was flashed over the wires, but as the days passed and nothing was heard of him, the Boston management began to get worried. Telegrams were sent to Atlanta, asking for information, but there was no information to impart. More telegrams came asking the Atlanta club officials to locate Kelly's home and see if he was there, but no one could be found who knew where his home was. Bill Smith was appealed to, but all he could say was that Kelly had told him he came from the Georgia mountains. This clew, vague as it was, led to nothing.

Two weeks passed and then the Boston club went at the matter in earnest. It had $50,000 tied up in Gordon Kelly, and that was a mighty pile of money to put out for a ball player and not have the use of his services. At the end of the third week the case was put in the hands of private detectives, and these professionals began a systematic hunt for the missing man. They traced his trunk to the terminal baggage room. They interviewed the expressman who had taken it there. But that is as far as they got in that direction. The trunk itself was like hundreds of others and the baggage men, who handled nothing else, could not place it. There was not enough for them to go on, and three weeks is a long time to remember a trunk that is like hundreds of others.

The detectives then went to the mountains but it was like hunting for a needle in a haystack. Many persons in the uplands had heard of Gordon Kelly, the ball player, but they were positive he didn't live anywhere in their section. The detectives searched the county tax lists. There was not a Kelly on them. They began to believe that Gordon Kelly was a fictitious name. If that were so, hunting for a needle in a haystack would be easy in comparison with their task.

"Now then, Mr. Gordon Kelly, give an account of yourself," said Mildred.

Never Heard of Him.

The sleuths even stopped at Pew Creek between trains, but those persons of whom they inquired truthfully told them they had never heard of a Gordon Kelly and they were positive no such man lived in that vicinity. The detectives then went back to Atlanta to make a fresh start. There they hunted up Galen Deery, but that gentleman informed them that he hadn't the faintest idea where Gordon Kelly was; that he had never seen him but twice in his life and had no interest in him whatever. Deery was still smarting over that episode of the ball field in which his daughter figured. As the detectives knew of no connection between Gordon Kelly and Judge Barbee, the latter was not troubled with a visit from the sleuths.

There was one man who could, at least, have told where Gordon Kelly's home was, had he felt so inclined. That man was Forrest Cain, but he kept his mouth shut for reasons of his own. The cards were running badly for that young man and he was playing a waiting game, as gamblers do, hoping for a change of luck.

At the end of a month, or seven weeks after Gordon Kelly disappeared, the Boston club called in their detectives and abandoned the search. On the first and fifteenth of each month, however, a check for Kelly's salary was drawn and mailed to his last known address in Atlanta. They were all "returned to writer at the end of five days." The checks were saved in the safe of the Boston club, remaining unopened in the envelopes they were mailed in. The club, having a fortune invested in the player, was taking no chances in losing him on a technicality of baseball law if any question should ever arise.

If ever the Red Sox needed Gordon Kelly it was in the period in which the detectives searched for him high and low. They were "going bad," as the baseball phrase has it. Joe Wood, the champion pitcher, was injured early in the season and was out of the game for several weeks. Their first Western trip was disastrous, and toward the close of it Larry Gardner, their star third baseman, sprained his ankle and went around on crutches for a long time, his ankle in a cast. At the close of the Western trip they were sixth in the American League pennant race, a sorry showing for world's champions. The Philadelphia Athletics were out in the lead, with the Cleveland and Washington teams next. If the Red Sox were to do anything it was time to be up and doing. Jake Stahl, the manager, stayed at home during the trip. An operation on his foot kept him away from the ball field for many days. Altogether they were sorry days for the Red Sox, and their supporters began to lose heart.

But in spite of the fact that the Boston club had withdrawn its detectives from the search for Gordon Kelly, interest in that young man's mysterious disappearance did not abate. There was always some fresh clew to start the ball a-rolling again. These were run down, one after another. Every few days a dispatch would come out of some town in Texas, or Colorado, or Wyoming or Maine that no one had ever heard of, containing the information that Gordon Kelly had been found. Sometimes he was in a starving condition, sometimes he was working as a farm hand or in a factory. Investigation proved in every case that the wrong man had been found.

To Be Continued To-morrow.

Riding on a Receipt

Mark Twain's story of Horace Greeley's handwriting has a parallel in this, from a railway conductor in Missouri to the president of the road. The conductor wrote:

"A farmer has been riding on this pass for about a year. Do you want him to continue to use it?"

The president put on his glasses, looked the paper over carefully, and said:

"Why, this is not a pass. It is a receipt I gave the fellow for a load of wood about a year ago!"

Wedding Gifts

By MRS. FRANK LEARNED

THE question of sending a wedding gift must be decided by friendship or obligation. In the first instance there is the natural wish to please a friend, and in the other case one may be indebted to the bride or bridegroom or to their families for kindnesses or hospitalities. Those who are invited to a home wedding or a wedding reception usually send gifts, although there is no absolute rule to be followed as to this. As it is supposed to be a special compliment to be bidden to a home ceremony, a guest likes to return the courtesy by a gift, however simple it may be.

A gift is sent invariably to the bride, even though she may not be known personally to the giver. The custom is to send a gift directly from the place where it is purchased. The visiting card of the giver is enclosed in a small envelope and placed inside of the box containing the present. A brief line expressive of good wishes may be written across the top of the card, if the giver is a friend specially interested.

Wedding gifts are marked with the initials of the bride's maiden name.

In regard to the display of wedding presents there is a division of opinion. Some persons consider it ostentatious to show the gifts, or that it destroys sentiment to have critical eyes examining these offerings, others prefer to share their pleasure with their friends and are glad to give evidence of the good-will and the generous attention they have received.

When a wedding takes place in the country and friends are expected from a distance, the custom is to show the presents on the wedding day; or if the wedding is an informal one, with only relatives and intimate friends present, the gifts are shown.

The preferred custom is to show the presents a few days before the wedding. The bride-elect, or her mother, may write informal notes asking intimate friends and all those who have sent gifts to come in on a certain afternoon, during hours designated, to see the presents. It is allowable to write on one's visiting card, "Will you come in on Saturday afternoon, between four and six o'clock, to see the presents?"

The gifts are arranged on tables which are covered with white damask tablecloths. Here and there are vases of flowers. Great care is taken to place each article at its best advantage, especially the small and simple gifts which should be among the more beautiful ones, so that the givers may feel that the bride has truly appreciated their thoughtfulness.

The cards of the givers are usually placed with the gifts.

The informal serving of tea finishes the afternoon.

A bride-elect is careful to write a note of appreciation to every one who sends a gift. When she sees those who have sent presents, she remembers to repeat her thanks in person. The best rule is to write without delay and to mention the gift definitely, so that the note may not be a duplicate of others.

The Faster They Go

Professor Barry once amused Judge Ball by an application on behalf of a man who was a dealer in horses and sugar sticks. The incongruity of his avocations struck the judge, who remarked:

"What a strange combination of trades."

"I see a close resemblance between horses and sugar sticks," said the witty barrister.

"In what way?" inquired his lordship.

"The more you lick them the faster they go," was the reply.

TENNESSEE BOY FIND OF SEASON IN BIG LEAGUES

By W. J. O'Connor.

ST. LOUIS, June 11.—It's time somebody should print a life-size picture o: Daniel Griner, the Tennessee blonde, under a bold, black caption: "The find of 1913."

Griner has made good with a vengeance. A year ago the massive Cardinal pitcher was a plunging fullback on the Tennessee eleven. After being graduat d he broke into baseball as a curvist for the Cleveland (Tenn.) Club. His stay in the minors was brief and although his big league life is yet very young, he has been tagged O. K. by the rail-birds.

Griner has a unique record with the Cardinals. He's the only pitcher on Hug's team who has been able to go the full route in a majority of his games. With one exception Griner has finished every game he started. He was knocked out by the Cubs on April 21, after Evers' team had made 12 hits a d 5 runs in 5 1-3 innings. In all his other games Griner went through from the first to the last round.

Veterans Not Going Well.

This is something Harmon, Sallee and Steele have not been able to do. Harmon has pitched only two full games this season Sallee has gone the route three times. Indeed, out of 44 games played, Huggins has been forced to change pitchers no less than 26 times. Of the 18 games that a pitcher has gone the route, Griner has been on the hillock in 10 of them. Here's his record:

Date.	Opp. Team.	W.	L.	Ings.
April 13	Cubs	4—3	....	9
April 17	Cubs	....	7—1	9
April 21	Pirates	....	8—5	5 1-3
April 27	Reds	2—1	....	9
May 1	Pirates	....	5—4	9
May 7	Phillies	....	4—3	10
May 13	Braves	4—3	....	9
May 19	Superbas	....	2—1	11
May 24	Reds	12—4	....	*6
May 28	Cubs	x...	....	.....
May 31	Reds	....	6—2	9
June 4	Giants	6—4	....	9

xTaken out in eighth, score tie, 7—7.

Tennesseean's Percentage .500.

Griner has won five and lost five games. His percentage of .500 is better than his club's standing in the league race. However, it will be noted that Griner has lost three games by one-run margins, two of those extra-inning bouts. He has won three tight games by a margin of one run.

Griner was "found" by Scout Bill Armour who now is business manager of the Milwaukee (American Association) Club. Dan had had only one year's experience in baseball when he reported here, but he made good from the jump. He's now touted as the best bet among the young National League twirlers. He has the frame to last a long time, being a frugal liver to boot.

Ritchie-Rivers Bout Still Up in the Air

SAN FRANCISCO, June 11.—Though articles of agreement have been signed, all is not well with the scheduled bout between Willie Ritchie and Joe Rivers on July 4. Manager Nolan was incensed last night because Joe Levy, who looks after the interests of Rivers, had not posted the forfeits agreed upon, and declared if Levy did not come through today he would call the bout off and take on Freddie Welsh in Vancouver on July 1.

"Levy agreed to put up his forfeits immediately after the articles had been signed," declared Nolan. "When I spoke to him about it, he said he would be back in an hour or so with the money. He did not return and I haven't heard anything further from him."

Nolan is said to be a trifle put out at the manner in which Levy dictated to him during the negotiations for the Ritchie-Rivers match. Rivers' manager won practically every point he held out for and Nolan is not accustomed to being beaten in this kind of a game.

Lou Castro to Referee Battles

Sailor White May Stop Savage

By Left Hook.

COUNT LOUIS CASTRO, famed over the United States as ball player, manager and referee, has been secured to referee the Sailor White-Jim Savage bout at the Auditorium-Armory on Friday night, June 13.

It is believed that Castro will be satisfactory to both managers and scrappers, and surely no better man could be secured. Castro knows the boxing game, has a lot of "pep" in the ring and is known to be perfectly fair.

The engagement of Castro as referee makes it certain that the handling of the men in the ring will be on the same high plane as the rest of the show. The Auditorium-Armory bouts have established a reputation for good order, good crowds and good bouts, and the contest Friday night is not likely to do any damage to the reputation.

BEYOND any question of a doubt, the Savage-White bout is of more national importance and of greater promise than any ever staged in Atlanta before. The man who goes back to New York the victor has gained a material advantage in the contest for white hope supremacy. He can have almost any bout he wants.

Since the experts have had time to dope it out, they are inclined to believe that White will give Jim Savage a lot more than he counted on getting. Any man who could whip Pelky and stop Jim Barry in four rounds is likely to be heard from in any heavyweight bout. Combine this with the fact that White weighs 210 pounds, is 6 feet 2 inches tall, has a long reach and a willing disposition and you have a pretty strong scrapping machine.

It is going to take all of Jim Savage's cleverness to keep from getting knocked cold. White will be on top of him every minute, plugging away. With Savage's well-known cleverness, combined with that punch he has just discovered and which he used to put away Whitey Allen, the Bronx terror, he will be able to keep Sailor White at arm's length. If he can keep White away he has a chance to win by a big margin. If the Sailor can close right in he will give Savage one of the warmest little evening's entertainments that he ever had.

A NEWSPAPER MAN who has just blown in from New York hands out a warm line of praise for Sailor White.

"I am much of Bob Fitzsimmons' way of thinking about White," he said to-day. "The Sailor is coming fast. It is something to have his great weight, strength and reach. But besides that he has the aggressiveness of a terrier. He is after his man all the time. He is very fast for a heavyweight. I shouldn't exactly call him clever, not the way Savage is, at any rate, but he can look out for himself. He has learned a lot in the couple of years he has been out, and he is picking up something new every day.

"White doesn't know anything but the ring game. But he sure is enthusiastic about that. He wallows in scrapping. He gets so interested a couple of days before a scrap that he forgets to eat his meals. When he gets into the ring he is all impatience and as nervous as a kid. But when the bell taps he quiets down and is ready. A second or two later he is after his man. From that time on it is give and take to the finish. I'll say this—I'll bet every man who sees the go takes his hat off to Sailor White before it is over; that is, if a good rushing, slugging, aggressive heavyweight makes a hit in this town."

FODDER FOR FANS

The Cubs tied up the score in the ninth inning yesterday and then won out in the tenth in their game with the Giants.

* * *

The Phillies came from behind in the ninth inning yesterday, batted out two runs and scored another victory over the hapless Reds.

* * *

"Big Ed" Konetchy, the star second sacker of the Cardinals, punched two singles, a triple and a homer out of six times up yesterday. Magee, the Cardinal left fielder, got four singles.

The Cardinals amassed sixteen hits yesterday, yet had to use five pitchers and go into the eleventh inning to win the game, 8 to 7, from the Braves.

* * *

The Athletics experienced little difficulty yesterday in defeating the Browns and thereby annexing their fifteenth straight victory.

The Yanks' "winning streak" of two games was shattered yesterday when the White Sox jumped upon a couple of the New York pitchers and swatted out enough runs to win the game.

* * *

The Red Sox scored five runs off Vean Gregg, the Naps' star twirler, in the first inning yesterday, which were quite sufficient to win them the second straight game from the Clevelanders.

The victory of the Athletics and the defeat of the Naps yesterday gave the Quakertown players a lead of four full games, or 93 points, over the Naps.

* * *

Joe Jackson, of the Naps, got three hits out of four times up yesterday and made a big gain over Ty Cobb, his batting rival, who went hitless after three efforts at Walter Johnson's slants and shoots.

* * *

The Senators got only one hit off the combined twirling efforts of Clauss and House, yet were able to win the game from the Tigers, who were shut out with two hits off Walter Johnson.

* * *

Manager Fred Clarke, of the Pirates, batting in a pinch in the ninth, delivered a two-bagger and paved the way for a 5 to 4 victory for his team over the Dodgers.

CRACKERS TRY AGAIN TO PLAY DOUBLE BILL

By Joe Agler.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., June 11.—We're off this afternoon on another double-header with Manager Molesworth's Barons. And when we grab those two, we shall beat it to Chattanooga, where we will be the guests for the remainder of the week of Kid Elberfeld's Lookouts

Smith is figuring on Musser and Price to-day. Paul started the second game yesterday, but did not get far enough to get very tired over it. So I guess he'll go back for more to-day.

It is going to be pretty tough on Joe Dunn if the double-headers pile up on us, for he's the only catcher we have who is in running order. However, Joe is pretty chipper to-day and looks good for about six weeks of double-headers.

I take it that Molesworth will use Prough and Thompson, with Mayer to do the catching.

We won a hot game yesterday. It started out to be a double-header and a pennant raising combined, and we got away with everything but the second game. Darkness stopped that.

It took twelve good innings to finish the opening game. "King" Brady started for us and seemed to have the battle won, but went to pieces in the sixth. Dent relieved him.

Dent was good. He had everything and his hit started the rally in the twelfth that brought home the bacon.

After we got the first game out of the way, we marched over with the Barons to the pennant pole and ran up the pennant won in 1912 by the Barons.

The second game lasted only two innings and was then called on account of darkness.

FRED CLARKE MAY RETURN TO OLD POSITION AGAIN

PITTSBURG, June 11.—Associates of Fred Clarke said to-day that the veteran player and manager of the Pirates is about to put his determination aside and return to the outfield. Clarke has neither admitted nor denied the report, but it is expected both by players and his intimate friends that he will trot back into left field, perhaps in a few days. According to his usual method, he will probably announce his return a few minutes before he puts on his glove.

KILBANE TOO MUCH FOR JIMMY FOX OF OAKLAND

OAKLAND, CAL., June 11.—Johnny Kilbane, of Cleveland, featherweight champion, defeated Jimmy Fox, of this city, last night in the sixth round of their scheduled ten-round bout. Fox's seconds threw a sponge in the ring when their man was on the verge of a knockout.

Crackers Are Puzzle of Season

Ought to Be Leading League Now

By Percy H. Whiting.

BILL SMITH won two pennants in Atlanta with weak-hitting teams. Can he win a third with a strong-hitting team? The question agitates local fans.

Ponder the figures:

Smith won in 1907 with a team that batted .... .253
Smith won in 1909 with a team that hit .... .222
The Crackers now are third, and hitting .... .272

With a team fifty points weaker in hitting than he has this year Smith romped in 1909, winning by such a margin that it wasn't interesting.

Glance at some more figures:

Batters over .300 mark on Cracker team:
In 1907.......... 0 In 1909.......... 0 In 1913.......... 3

Regulars (exclusive of pitchers) who batted over .250 mark:
In 1907.......... 5 In 1909.......... 2 In 1913.......... 6

In 1909, when Smith won the pennant by forty rods, every player on his club, except one catcher, one outfielder and one pitcher, was hitting worse than .250. Eleven of them were hitting .225 or worse.

Verily, if hitting is worth anything, the Crackers should win this year.

1907—Fox, Jordan, Castro and Dyer.
1909—Rohn, Jordan, Newton, Walker.
1913—Agler, Alperman, Bisland, W. Smith.

Agler is as good as Fox, better than Rohn. Alperman is about as good as Jordan. Bisland is as good as Castro in fielding and better in hitting, while he has a mile on Newton. Wally Smith is worth sixteen Dyers and a better man than Walker.

* * *

COMPARE the outfields, just for fun, considering the men from their ability to cover ground, hit the ball, run bases and think. Here they are:

1907—Paskert, Becker and Winters.
1909—Bayless, Moran, Winters.
1913—Long, Welchonce, Bailey.

REMEMBER that the same man is managing the club now that won the pennants in 1907 and 1909, and that he has had the advantage of several years of experience since then.

And after you have figured all these things you will wonder more than ever why the Crackers aren't out in front and leading the pennant chasers by a full mile.

THIS much is sure about the Cracker team. Though the end of the second month of the season, which was Tuesday, found the Crackers moderately removed from the leadership, there has not been a second this season when it has not appeared likely that the club would turn loose at any minute and start out for the pennant.

A club of sluggers, which can field moderately well, is liable to set sail any old moment.

The Crackers have kept in a comfortable position all the season. They have not been dangerously close to the front in a good while, but they haven't been so far toward the rear as to make it embarrassing.

Watch out for a smashing spurt to begin before so very long.

HANS WAGNER OBSTACLE IN GIANTS' WAY

By John ("Chief") Meyers

NEW YORK, June 11.—Hans Wagner looms larger and larger each day as the possible stumbling block to a third successive pennant for the Giants. I am as confident now as when the season opened that my club will eventually be returned the winner. Class usually tells in the long run of any competitive sport, and I think my club has finally begun to display the real merit that won two straight pennants.

Every one figured this spring that the Pirates were destined to argue the case with us right to the end of the campaign. Pittsburg, like New York, has an exceptionally strong club. Like New York, it got off to a disappointing start, but, like New York, also, it appears to have found itself with hot weather and is prepared to fight to the finish.

Wherefore I say that Hans Wagner looms more and more ominously in our pathway. Wagner is so much more vital to his team's success than any other player in organized baseball is to another team that he may be considered pretty nearly the whole team.

I do not mean by this that Clarke has no other players. He has a well balanced organization, embracing one of the strongest pitching departments in the circuit. But Pittsburg, without Wagner, is a second division outfit.

Still Valuable Asset.

Wagner is one of the most remarkable characters the game has ever known. I very much doubt if at any time in his brilliant career of the past seventeen years he was of greater playing value than he is to-day. Certainly within the past five years he never approached his present form.

Most players are spectacular at times. Once in a while even the average athlete may pull some sensational fielding feat that will make the stands wild with enthusiasm. But Wagner shows so much enthusiasm on defense that to get a "hand" he has to do the practically impossible.

Wagner is an awkward—even clumsy—appearing fellow in his mannerisms. He lacks the grace of Lajoie. Yet he carries his burden of years on the diamond as easily as the youngest colt. No man in baseball is more agile than Hans, and none is so sure with his hands. He is possessed of every requisite of greatness; strong sure hands, exceptional reach, agility, a powerful, accurate arm and an exceptionally fast thinking brain.

Sometimes it seems almost uncanny the way Wagner handles a ball. He lowers his great hand (the gloved one the size of a scoop shovel, almost) and it seems as if the ball is attracted like a piece of steel to a magnet. Of course, that is fancy. It is the fine skill with which he plays the ball. He always plays the ball; he never lets the ball play him.

Wagner Greatest Fielder.

Wagner is the greatest fielder I have ever seen. Twice in the recent series at the Polo Grounds I saw him make plays which I am firmly convinced would have been absolutely impossible for any other living player.

One was on a faulty throw to second base to stop a stealer. This runner, the ball and Wagner all reached the cushion just about the same time. The ball was high; Hans had to leap in the air for it. In doing this he had to protect himself, as a collision might have seriously injured him. Wagner not only did protect himself, but he made a one-handed catch and tagged his man for a put-out while still in the air so quickly that the eye could scarcely follow his motion.

On the other occasion he started back into left for a difficult Texas leaguer. For such a fly no one is so sure. But somehow there was a misunderstanding with Carey. Each thought the other was going to take the ball, which either might have done very handily had he not stopped. The ball had almost settled to the ground when Wagner realized that Carey was depending upon him. With a lightning spring that combined the grace and power of a tiger's leap Wagner threw himself along the ground and scooped up the ball just before it settled on the grass.

Is Most Feared Hitter.

Wagner's wonderful batting ability has endeared his memory to every nook and cranny of the old earth where the great summer sport is known. Years have come and gone bringing with them their periodic phenoms. But none has dimmed the glory of the mighty Hans. To-day he stands at the head of the class, the most feared hitter in the National League. He has not always led the procession; but he has never been very far behind. And he has shown such great consistency that he will rank forever as one of the greatest figures of baseball history.

BUFFALO HAS NEW STAR IN JIMMY DUFFY

By Ed W. Smith.

CHICAGO, ILL., June 11.—They have a young lightweight boxing star down near Buffalo who is regarded as one of the real comers of the country in the 133-pound division. His name is Jimmy Duffy and he hails from Lockport, N. Y., where they think there is nobody quite as good. Jimmy and his prowess are brought before Chicagoans with a great deal of sharpness because he recently got a foul decision over Jack Britton, the North Sider, who is so highly regarded around this man's town. Britton and Duffy had a corking good battle in the ring at Buffalo, but in the sixth round Jack was told to go to his corner because of what the referee termed persistent fouling.

UP to that time the milling had been about as pretty as anybody could wish to see and of course the Lockport and Buffalo friends of Duffy are selling madly for their favorite because he appeared to be holding Jack to about an even break, despite the fact that he had been upset in the second round for an eight count with a corking rap on the chin. Duffy got over that blow easily and fought back so well that many figured that had the battle gone the full ten rounds Jimmy would have been returned the winner.

EVIDENTLY the dispatches that were sent out after the contest did Duffy a rank injustice, for several of them accused Duffy of quitting and laying down on the job. Nothing was further from the truth unless all of the Buffalo papers are badly fooled in Duffy, because not one of them mentions such a thing. Britton himself says Duffy must be a game lad to get up the way he did and fight back after getting a stunning crack on the chin early in the battle. The men have been rematched for the 16th and then we shall see.

BERT FINCH, who is handling Duffy's business affairs, claims the man is the real comer of the division and that his ever contest recently with Packer McFarland stamps him as one of the best of the new crop of lightweights. In addition to this feat Jimmy held his own over ten rounds with Freddie Welsh, the English champion, and is reported to have hosted such good fighting material as Ray Temple, Harry Thomas, the English star, and Young Jack O'Brien. Further, it is small wonder that Jimmy is a red hot favorite around his own town, because he is a clean, likable young fellow with all the earmarks of popularity.

ALAS for the traditions and precedents of recent making in the lightweight division! Willie Ritchie will not make 122 rounds at the ringside for Joe Rivers or any of the rest of them! Joe Gans, thought by many to be the greatest of all of them when he was right, never minded doing the weight, and his immediate successor to the crown, Battling Nelson, insisted upon all dangerous opponents doing fourteen weight for him, and not an ounce over 133 pounds, either. Then Ad Wolgast, who never was anything but a 133-pounder at his best, followed suit. But Willie, he of the look the fight away from Ad on a foul, cuts three of on record in the Rivers negotiations as being against the precedent, and evidently for quite consequential reasons.

THUS are changes wrought in the fighting game. Weight limits are only what a champion may choose to make them. Willie can name 133 pounds and the Dundee-Kaufman bout will have as much right to be claimed as did Gans, Nelson and Wolgast when they insisted upon 133. Verily, it is the champion's last say in all things.

* * *

WE surely thought Harry Pollok was going to make a lot of fuss out on the coast by slugging Freddie Welsh, English champion, at them. But Pollok evidently doesn't see much chance at this time of getting on a match with Ritchie, for he is content to let Freddie go along and battle a lot of second-raters up in the Canadian Northwest. Welsh is in grand form right now and going like the department to a 4-11 race. Certainly Harry's stand is a peculiar one.

BASEBALL FRAPPE.

An oil stove underneath my frigid feet,
Another stove beside me on the seat,
A pair of earmuffs and a coat of fur,
And what care I how fierce the tempests beat?

Knee deep in June, as calendars will show,
And through our frame the chills run to and fro,
How sweet 'twould be to watch a game in June
If one were only like an Eskimo.

We palpitate with every passing gust,
We quake as though our very bones would bust,
And wonder if the blokes who run the game
Are working for the Undertakers' Trust.

F. Schutte, after the fashion of F. Chance, complains of severe headaches, but H. Zim rests happy in the knowledge that he is immune.

Polo may be surrounded by money, glamour and social prestige, but when we examine it closely we find it is nothing but skinny with a university training.

Still, Connie Mack does not consider it an ill omen when his athletes win thirteen pastimes in a row.

A. Weigast, pugilist, reports an inbred thrown. This puts him at a great disadvantage when beating up the typewriter.

Whenever we hear of a schoolboy running the hundred in 9 4-5, we are reminded that a single snap of the thumb can break a world's record.

There are various things that overpower us with profound lethargy, one of which is the question of a successor to the late L. McCarty.

The more we think of polo, the more we are impressed by the safety and sanity of football.

SPORT.

Lips of polonists remind us
We can cause a lot of thrills,
And, departing, leave behind us
Naught but sudorifferous bills.

Yes, Roller one might say without fear of contradiction that it was a horse on Foxhall Keene.

J. McGraw avers that some of his athletes have to be driven to get demonstrating that there is a vast abyss between a ball player and a pugilist.

In view of Mr. McGraw's sentiments on the auto question, it is rumored that Rudy Unholz will ask for a tryout with the Giants.

GOOD NIGHT.

She was a phantom of delight,
A chicken broadcross fair,
Her smile was bright, her step was light
As if she walked on air.

And as I lamped her azure eye
It made my bosom throb.
"Some squab!" quoth I while passing by;
"Considerable squab!"

The justly celebrated rose
Is there with many a thorn;
My pulses froze from head to toes
Upon the morrow morn.

A motorbike came tearing by
And she was on the rear.
"Good night!" quoth I and heaved a sigh
And waved away a tear.

'Tis true it matters not to me;
Forchance she knows her mind.
And yet, if she could only see
The way she looks behind!

CHRISTY MATHEWSON'S BIG LEAGUE GOSSIP

NEW YORK, June 11.—Fans all over the country have been discussing the Cincinnati Reds. Also when this team is mentioned, Joe Tinker's name is usually brought into the argument. Personally, I am strong for Joe at all times. He is a great friend of mine, and I consider him one of the greatest shortstops the game has ever known. As a leader of men, Joe must prove his worth. He has a hard task before him, but is made of the right stuff to make good. Let me state right here that the Reds are a rejuvenated outfit. They look more like the "Tinkers" every day, and I do not expect to see them finish last by any means. They will give any club a good battle now, because the pitching staff has been tightened up, and the rest of the team never did have so very many kinks in it. Tinker is busy ironing them out, and he is the boy who can iron.

BENTON and Suggs have always been good pitchers, but neither struck form in the early part of the race. Tinker said to me in Cincinnati a week ago:

"Every time I sent a man to the box in the first part of the season, I sent a prayer with him, and usually it did no good."

The theory that a team can win with bad pitching was long ago disproved in baseball. The best club in the world cannot. The addition of Ames, Devore and Groh has put new life into the "Tinkers." This may sound like a criticism of McGraw's judgment in making the trade, but, in reality, it is a boost. A change of venue, as the lawyers say, often benefits a ball player for many reasons, the same as a change of climate will help the health of a sickly person. Sometimes the fans "get on" a man, and he becomes discouraged in the city. He will go somewhere else and play his head off. Then the traded player always wants to impress on his old boss the fact he has made a mistake in letting him go.

NEITHER Devore nor Groh was good enough to play regularly on the Giants this year, in McGraw's opinion, and his judgment of a ball player has been confirmed by his record. This does not mean that McGraw thought either one was a poor performer, but he believed he had better men to put in the game every day. Players sitting on the bench are of small benefit to any manager. The Giants needed a pitcher for the coming double-headers. McGraw liked Fromme and got him. Wait until he has had a fair chance, and he will vindicate McGraw.

Devore has always been a fast, game ball player, and, confidentially, McGraw hated to let him pass along, but Tinker insisted and refused to accept anyone else. "Josh" has been going great guns since he joined out with the "Tinkers," and I hope he keeps it up. Ames has always had hard luck in New York. He has shown real stuff in Cincinnati, and will doubtless build up a reputation for himself there. New York is the hardest city in the country for a ball player to make good in, because everybody is always out to beat the Big Town boys.

THE trade will probably work out in the same way with Hal Chase, who was passed along to the Chicago White Sox by Frank Chance. It won't be two weeks before fans will be saying that Chance was crazy to let a player like Chase go, because Hal will get his back up and play for his life. But the Yankees were in last place, and Chase was not getting them out of it. He will want to make a hit with his new following of fans, and just watch him go.

IN St. Louis the Philadelphia club will strike no soft spot, particularly if it meets the mercury at the pace we found it. The Cardinals are accustomed to playing in that heat. They are a great in-and-out bunch. One day they will act like champions and the next like a flock of dubs. It is not a steady team. If the Phillies catch them in a championship spell, they want to watch out. Griner, Harmon and Sallee are moving very smoothly in the pitcher's box right now. Let me conclude by saying that I do not fear the Phillies for the pennant. Maybe the St. Louis club looks better to me, because it has always been a hard crowd for the Giants to beat.

Jim Savage and Sailor White, the two husky heavyweights, who battle at the Auditorium-Armory on Friday night will arrive in Atlanta to-day. Danny Morgan will accompany Savage, while McKetrick will be Savage's partner.

Both boxers will continue training here until Friday, so as to be in great shape at ring time. The two heavyweights have been doing hard work in New York the past ten days and will need but light work to fit them for the fray.

George Carpentier is after another match with Frank Klaus. George Engle, manager of the Pittsburg middleweight, has received a wire from the Frenchman asking that they sign to meet again. Klaus and Carpentier met in Dieppe, France, June 24, 1912, and the steel-ribbed Pittsburger with the 60-horse power punch stopped the Frenchman in eighteen rounds.

Engle also has a few words to say regarding Klaus' recent mill against Jack Dillon. Engle says that Klaus was given the worse deal of his career, and should have at least been handed a draw. "We will gladly battle Dillon again, but would much prefer a bout over the 20-round route," says Engle.

Rivers has finally landed the Willie Ritchie go. After much dickering the pair finally came together yesterday and agreed on terms. Welsh, Tommy Murphy, Leach Cross and Bud Anderson were all ready to step in and take Rivers' place in case the Mexican failed to reach terms with the title holder.

New York fans are picking Cross to trim Anderson when the two battle on the coast. They point to the fact that a slugger has never defeated the Eastern lightweight and Bud is a typical mixer. Leach's deadly wallop is expected to put the coast sensation away.

* * *

Johnny Coulon does not intend to box Kid Williams at Baltimore and have a Baltimore man act as referee. The fans at the Maryland city refuse to stand for an out-of-town official, which means that the pair of bantamweights will probably clash on the coast. Tom McCarey is to wield the mitts.

* * *

Mike Gibbons is certainly keeping himself busy these days. The St. Paul sensation was matched yesterday to take on Young Ahearn at New York on Thursday night, and has practically to take on Young Denny at New Orleans.

* * *

Harry Trendall has refused to meet Charlie White at St. Louis. This makes the third scrapper who has turned down offers to meet the Chicago boy in the last two weeks. Tommy Murphy turned down an offer from Kenosha, Wis. Johnny Lore dodged a bout with the Chicagoan at New Orleans and Trendall turned his head from the St. Louis promoters.

* * *

Buffalo fans are going wild over the Britton-Duffy go to be staged there on June 16. They are boosting Duffy as the next lightweight champion and are anxious to see him down Danny Morgan's speed marvel.

* * *

Spider Britt threatens to quit the ring forever if he fails to defeat Meyer Pries at the Auditorium-Armory on Friday night. Britt has worked hard for this bout and looks to be in great shape. He is anxious to prove that his former victory over Pries was far from a fluke.

* * *

Kid Williams is another boxer, who is rapidly gathering in the dough. The Baltimore boy will take on Jem Kenrick in a fifteen-round affair at Baltimore to-night and is practically assured of a meeting with Johnny Coulon July 4. Ever since Williams defeated Eddie Campi on the coast last year he has been a big card.

* * *

Harry Pollok, manager of Freddie Welsh, will send his protege against Ray Campbell in a fifteen-round battle at Vancouver, British Columbia, to-night.

MRS. SULLIVAN PLAYS WELL IN VIRGINIA TOURNEY

RICHMOND, VA., June 11.—Mrs. Willard Sullivan, former woman champion of the South, again showed championship form Tuesday afternoon when she defeated Miss Martha Robinson, 6-0, 6-1, in the women's singles in the second day's matches of the Old Dominion Tennis Club tourney.

It is now practically certain that she will compete with Mrs. Saunders Taylor, of Norfolk, for possession of the Challenge Cup. Each has won the cup twice.

Nat Thornton, of Atlanta, got into play for the first time Tuesday afternoon with Shaner, of Lynchburg, for his partner. The pair easily defeated Donan and Mullen, 6-1, 6-0. It looks as if Thornton will have but little trouble retaining the cup which he won last year.

COULON INJURES HAND; BURNS BOUT POSTPONED

CHICAGO, June 11.—Johnny Coulon has gone and jammed up his right hand on a training partner. So the championship fight with Frankie Burns, originally scheduled for next Monday night in Kenosha, has been postponed one week.

The Coulon-Williams match for Baltimore July 4 is definitely off.

NASHVILLE GETS MORE FROM CHATTANOOGA CLUB

NASHVILLE, TENN., June 11.—President Hirsig, of the local ball club, has purchased Pitcher Forest More from the Chattanooga club. The price was not made public.

More in 1912 was rated as one of the leading twirlers in the league, but his work this season has not been up to his usual standard. Schwartz believes, however, that he will prove of great value to the Vols on account of his experience.

Waivers have been asked on Pitcher McManus to make room for More.

GRIFFITH STOPS BROCK IN NINTH ROUND AT AKRON

AKRON, OHIO, June 11.—Johnny Griffith, of Akron, fought his first battle last night as a lightweight and won from Phil Brock, of Cleveland, in the ninth round of a scheduled 12-round bout by the knockout route.

Phillies Lead All in Home Runs

Magee Sets Hot Pace With Five

ONE of the reasons why the Phillies, after reaching the top rung of the championship ladder on May 4, have managed to keep possession of it has been the ability of the players to punch out four-baggers. The Quakers easily are the home run kings of the major league world, and to May 24, inclusive, had made sixteen of the sixty-eight circuit clouts manufactured in Tom Lynch's organization.

To the same date in the American League twenty-eight four-bag blows had been struck, so Doofin's Daisies have to their credit one-sixth of the major league home run output of 1913.

Sherwood Magee, Luderus and Cravath are the dangerous athletes on the Quaker combination. These three men have whaled out twelve four-baggers and have broken up many a combat. Magee has five homers to his credit, of which three were secured off right handers and two off left handers. Sherwood obtained his first loop-the-loop swat on April 26, off Hub Perdue, of the Braves; his second and third off Rube Marquard, of the Giants, on May 5; his fourth off Marty O'Toole, of the Pirates, on May 12, and his fifth off Howard Camnitz, of the same combination, on the following day.

Luderus Has Four Homers.

Fred Luderus has poled four homers, his first hit of this kind being made at the Polo Grounds off Jeff Tesreau and the next three walops being manufactured in Philadelphia. The pitchers "Ludy" maltreated at home were Steele, of St. Louis, and Harter and Brown, of Cincinnati. Luderus has had the happy faculty of making his four-baggers at opportune moments, for the hits off Steele and Brown won games for the Doointites.

Cravath a Great Hitter.

Cravath, who, if he could field as well as he can hit, would stand an excellent chance of winning the car offered by Hugh Chalmers, of Detroit, for the National League's most valuable player, has three homers to his credit. He gained the first while acting as a pinch-hitter, smiting the first ball served him by Christy Mathewson and promptly driving it out of the lot. Rube Marquard and Howard Camnitz are the other flingers whom Cravath has jarred for homers.

Three Players Set Mark.

No Quaker has as yet turned the trick accomplished by Joe Jackson, Lee Magee and Joe Connelly this year—that of hammering out a four-bagger when all the bases had occupants—but the season still is in its infancy, as Charles Hercules Ebbets would say. Cravath has to share with Alva Williams, of the Senators, the distinction of having smote for the circuit when acting as a sub swatter and Sherwood Magee has to share with Charley Stengel, of the Superbas, the honor of having contributed two four-baggers in the same controversy. Stengel, like Magee, got his brace of four-baggers off a southpaw, Otto Hess, of the Braves, being the man whom the Brooklynite stung. The number of home runs made by the Phillies this year and the pitchers off whom they were made will be found below:

Magee—5.

April 26—Off Perdue, Boston.
May 5—Off Marquard, New York.
May 12—Off O'Toole, Pittsburg.
May 13—Off Camnitz, Pittsburg.

Luderus—4.

April 22—Off Tesreau, New York.
May 9—Off Steele, St. Louis, game resulting 3 to 1 in Phillies' favor and victory being due to homer, made with man on base.
May 21—Off Harter, Cincinnati.
May 22—Off Brown, Cincinnati, game resulting 4 to 1 in Phillies' favor and victory being due to homer made with man on base.

Cravath—3.

May 3—Off Mathewson, New York. "Cactus" made this four-bagger while pinch-hitting for Killifer in the eighth inning and when the score was 2 to 0 in the Giants' favor. He hit the first ball pitched Phillies, and the Phillies eventually won out 3 to 2.
May 5—Off Marquard, New York.
May 13—Off Camnitz, Pittsburg.

Knabe—1.

May 12—Off O'Toole, Pittsburg. F. Otto chose a psychological moment for his homer, inserting it into the ninth inning when the Pirates were one run ahead and when a defeat would have tumbled the Phillies into second place. The hit tied the score and in the eleventh the Phillies won out.

Paskert—1.

May 8—Off Harmon, St. Louis. "Dode" made this homer in the first inning and on the first ball pitched.

Doolan—1.

May 16—Off Toney, Chicago.

Seaton—1.

May 21—Off Harter, Cincinnati.

LOOK IN THE GLASS TO-DAY

Be Honest With Yourself. Study the Cause for Your Looks.

"Be honest with yourself," says the Quaker Health Teacher. "What is it that gives you that sallow complexion, those lusterless eyes and furrows on your face which should be smooth? Probably you think your health is good, but there must be some reason, and more often than not your troubles are caused by a sluggish liver and disordered stomach. A good complexion, a clear skin, a good appetite and a feeling of health and strength are every person's desire, and there is no reason why he should not have them all.

"A well-known lady living in this city, who does not wish her name published, told me: 'I thought I was in fair health, but kept getting thinner and thinner. I was so yellow that I thought my complexion must be gone forever; I was troubled with pimples on my face and was told that the life and sparkle had left my eyes; felt dull and listless; getting up in the morning more tired than when I lay down at night. I am a mother and believe I love my family as much as anyone can, but I found I was getting cross with my children and snappy with my husband. It took me some time to realize this, but when I did I thought there must be a cause, and I must cure that cause. I had been reading of the cures that the Quaker Extract had been making, and some people I am acquainted with concluded to give it a trial. Now, in less than three weeks my husband and children are once more glad to meet me with kisses and my friends exclaim when I meet them: 'How well you look!' You may rest assured that I will always speak well of the Quaker Extract. It has done so much for me.'"

Don't put it off any longer, but get started on the road to health to-day. The Quaker Remedies can be obtained at Coursey & Munn's drug store, 29 Marietta Street. If you suffer with rheumatism, catarrh, kidney, liver, stomach, bladder or blood troubles, indigestion, constipation, start to-day and get well. The Quaker Extract will cure you the same as it has cured hundreds of others. Call to-day and obtain Quaker Extract, 3 for $2.50, 6 for $5.00. Oil of Balm, 25c, or 5 for $1.00. We prepay all express charges on all orders of $3.00 or over.

NEW PRIZES IN PONY CONTEST ROUSE BOYS AND GIRLS OF GEORGIA

I nominate, as a candidate in The Hearst's Sunday American and Atlanta Georgian Pony Outfit Contest:

Name .....

Address .....

GOOD FOR 1,000 VOTES.

Only One Nomination Blank Can be Voted for Any Contestant.

Since the original announcement of the contest, nothing has aroused interest among the boys and girls of Atlanta and the State as did the news that The Georgian and American are to give many more prizes to the youngsters besides the twelve pony outfits.

And second only to this piece of information was the announcement of several bargain offers—inducements to quick action.

There is an offer of 50,000 extra votes for the first $30 turned in by each contestant within a specified and brief time.

There are extraordinary offers of extra votes for clubs of five subscriptions for yearly, half yearly and three-months subscriptions.

NO LIMIT PUT ON CLUGS.

No limit is put on the number of clubs which may be brought in by any contestant—the more the better for the contestant and for us. Each club brings the same number of extra votes, besides the regular vote schedule allowed for the subscriptions.

All of these things have put new life into the contest.

There is a standing invitation to the contestants, their parents, their relatives and friends to call at the contest department and talk it over. Many are availing themselves of this invitation. Ordinarily, children are seen but infrequently in a newspaper office. But of late in The Georgian and American offices they have become such frequent callers that they attract no notice except from the contest managers, who always find time to talk to them.

One thing which should be emphasized is that it is not too late for any child to enter the contest and win. No leader in any of the eleven districts has an insuperable advantage. All of them can be passed, and this with the cost only of a little energetic work.

EASY TO EXTEND SUBSCRIPTIONS.

"But everyone I know takes The Georgian and American," said one little fellow the other day.

"How can I get new subscriptions?"

The answer is that while the subscribers to The Georgian and American in Atlanta would by themselves make up a large city, and while doubtless most of the contestants' friends do read these papers, still this very friendship for the publications makes it easy to induce them to subscribe for a definite term instead of from week to week, and to get them to pay in advance for a year or half year.

No contestant need fear; votes are to be had for the asking.

Jury Trial Allowed In Bankruptcy Case

MACON, June 11.—In allowing the demand for a jury trial for the Beach Manufacturing Company, of Appling County, a $500,000 lumber firm charged with insolvency, Judge Emory Speer, in the United States Court, reminded the attorneys he still had the privilege of either expressing his opinion to the jury or of directing a verdict.

Judge Speer said this is the first instance of a demand being made before him for a jury trial in a bankruptcy case.

J. O. Beach, president of the company, is a brother-in-law of Representative C. G. Edwards, of Savannah.

SUPREME COURT ADJOURNS DESPITE STATE RATE CASES

SILVER SERVICE PRESENTED TO GOVERNOR

National Guard of State Gives One Thousand Dollars as Token of Its Love and Esteem.

Governor Joseph M. Brown was tendered a genuine "surprise party" by the National Guard of Georgia last night.

The State military organizations, through a few chosen officers, slipped up on their commander-in-chief at the Executive Mansion, where he was giving a reception to the Georgia Tech graduating class, and presented his excellency with about $1,000 worth of solid silver as a token of their respect and esteeme.

The Governor was expecting some of his officers last night, for they had been especially invited to the reception. He likes to have them present at all his receptions.

When the big gathering was called to order, Chief of Staff Frederic J. Paxon told the Governor how much the military boys of the State love him and appreciate his attitude toward them, and that it was the military's desire to present him a substantial token of its nigh regard.

After Colonel Paxon had finished his speech, the most gorgeous display of silverware ever shown in the mansion was uncovered in an adjoining room.

Governor Brown was quite overcome. He found it difficult to gather himself sufficiently to respond. Finally, in a very happy speech, he paid high tribute to the militia and its importance to the State.

The magnificent gift was paid for by voluntary subscriptions from members of the National Guard all over the State. The idea of presenting the Governor the silver was conceived in Atlanta a month ago. Subscriptions of from $1 to $20 were sent in by 200 or more members of the State military.

The matter was kept a secret among the military. Outside the Adjutant General's office in Atlanta, the only persons in on the secret were Mrs. Brown and the Governor's private secretary, Colonel Jesse Perry.

Hull, superintendent of the North Avenue Presbyterian Sunday School, was elected president of the Atlanta Association of Sunday School Superintendents at the monthly meeting of the association at Wesley Memorial Church Tuesday night. Among those who spoke Tuesday night were George Hinman, retiring president; John S. Spalding, J. W. Awtry, Dr. Hull and C. V. Lecraw. The next meeting will be held July 15 at the North Avenue Presbyterian Church.

"Miss Keller will not go to Spain. She will stay at my home here in Wrentham to rest and gain strength till August, when she will go to Bay View, Mich., to lecture at the chautauqua there. Then she will return here and stay till October, when her winter lecture tour begins."

SEQUEL TO LOVE FOR DOLL

Maternal Instinct Greatly Developed by Teaching Children to Love Their Dolls.

The little child's doll is mother to the most romantic fairy. And in the years that pass, the doll fades into the petals of a June rose, to evolve the most wondrous of all transformation.

This is accomplished with a wonderful remedy known as Mother's Friend, an external application so penetrating in its nature as to thoroughly lubricate every cord, nerve, muscle and tendon involved.

There will be no pain, none of that nausea or morning sickness, no sensation of distress or strain of expanding muscles. The nerves, too, will be calm, thus making the period one of restful days, of peaceful nights and a source of happiest anticipation.

The young, expectant mother must be carefully watchful lest she become absorbed in those mental distresses which fly prepare her for the most important event in her life.

FINES POOR WAY TO ENFORCE DISCIPLINE

Employers Have No Right to Dock Girls, Then Work Them Overtime, Says Forbes.

By B. C. FORBES.

Do you call this honest?

* * *

In certain places of employment, notably stores, workers are severely fined for being late in the morning, yet whenever necessary these same workers are forced to stay overtime without receiving one cent of extra pay—not even the return of the morning fine.

* * *

I am told that in one store employees getting only a few dollars a week are fined twenty-five cents for being one minute late, and if they are late twice in one week the rate of the penalty is doubled—that is to say, fifty cents is docked each morning. Yet this same store often orders its help at certain counters to stay after regular hours, but pays them nothing for such additional service.

* * *

Mr. Employer, is that fair? Because you are on top, have you any right to act so arbitrarily? You can do it with poor, unorganized shop girls, but you know you would not dare attempt it with members of a strong union.

* * *

All a worker has to sell is his or her labor. If you take that, are you not stealing from him or her? If one of these workers were to adopt your principle—rather, lack of principle—and steal goods in payment of the extra service rendered, you would brand him or her a thief, wouldn't you? Well, what are you when you fine a six-dollar-a-week worker twenty-five cents or fifty cents for being a little late in the morning and then compel the same worker to stay twice or six times as long overtime in the evening without payment?

We hear a lot about unreasonable action by labor unions, but are they guilty of anything more unreasonable, more unfair, more unjust than this?

Employers cannot expect to be allowed to continue to browbeat workers. The pendulum of justice may swing slowly, but it does swing. All over the world there is an uprising against unjust autocracy. There is a revolt against every form of tyranny. The "privileged class" is to lose its privileges. Justice between man and man, between class and mass, is to be enforced. The movement has made almost unimaginable progress—we have seen it in Russia, in China, in the Balkans, in Great Britain, in the United States. Right cannot be trampled under foot forever. The eternal scheme of things decrees that justice must triumph in the end.

Taking advantage of poorly-paid, unprotected help is not a small matter. It has far-reaching, incendiary consequences. It breeds discontent—and justly so. It arouses antagonism to employers and to capital—as it ought. In the fulness of time this discontent, this antagonism will vent itself in the form of legislation which may deal none too gently with employers and capital. Those who pay wages are rapidly losing hold of the machinery of legislation—glance at Britan, at Germany at Belgium, at Britain, at Germany, at Australia, at New Zealand, at South Africa.

* * *

Employers who have dealt inconsiderately with their workers simply because there was nobody to say "Nay" cannot hope to receive scrupulous consideration when these workers climb into the saddle. One foot is already in the stirrup.

* * *

This may seem an unnecessarily deep dissertation upon so apparently small a matter as fining workers for being late in the morning and forcing them to work late in the evening without compensation. But the principle involved is not small, it is not unimportant, it is not transient. It is of the eternal verities. To conduct a business on such lines is disgraceful.

* * *

Oh, yes; I know discipline must be strictly enforced. I know it would never do to let thoughtless girls and boys or irresponsible grown-ups come sauntering in to work at any old hour they saw fit. Stores must pull up their shades and factories must open their doors promptly at specified hours and it is imperative that every man, woman and youth be on hand at the prescribed minute. But to deduct an hour's wages for being five minutes late and then steal an extra hour's work from everybody or anybody is not a proper way to insure discipline. It undermines discipline. It begets righteous indignation and disloyalty. What's sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. The employer must play fair. He must do as he would be done by.

* * *

Let every employer digest this truth: If he will not act justly voluntarily he will be COMPELLED to be just before the world is very much older. The graver the sin now, the worse the punishment by and by.

PROFIT-TAKING LOWERS COTTON

NEW YORK, June 11.—The cotton market opened easier to-day, first prices 1 to 6 points higher. There were prospects for clearing weather over the belt and cables were not as good as have been expected or local prices would have been higher. Old crops showed the most loss over night.

Spot houses sold July freely after the call.

During the forenoon the market became easier. Schill offered large blocks of October at 11.31. Favorable weather conditions also aided, except for low temperatures in some sections, which caused scattered short covering. The ring, however, was inclined to sell, resulting in prices shading sharply from the initial level, being 3 to 4 points lower.

It is generally believed among conservatives that the short interest has been largely eliminated during the past few days.

The map indicates fair weather generally, except possibly more rain in south and west Texas; slowly rising temperatures, except stationary and continued cool weather in certain sections.

Following are 11 a. m. bids in New York: July, 11.97; August, 11.84; October, 11.31; January, 11.24.

Following are 10 a. m. bids in New Orleans: July, 12.23; August, 11.90; October, 11.37; January, 11.39.

Estimated cotton receipts:

	Thursday.	1912.
New Orleans	1,400 to 1,500	178
Galveston	600 to 1,000	717

The market ruled steady during the late forenoon. There was a scattered demand for July, which was attributed mainly to shorts. The principal selling came mostly from spot houses. Prices, however, held steady around the early high point. Later the ring renewed their attack by selling freely on a bearish report from Cordill, resulting in a sharp decline from the opening range.

Habersham King was also out with a bearish report. He says the recent cold wave in Oklahoma and Arkansas, while showing unseasonably low temperatures, was not severe enough to do any damage and has now moderated materially. Also wet conditions of the fields are not considered as injurious, though very threatening.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, June 11.—The map shows favorable developments over night. Fair weather in the north central belt. Partly cloudy to cloudy elsewhere. Precipitation very light, except that moderate rains fell over the Atlantic coast districts and south Texas. Temperatures rose in the western States, but dropped somewhat in the eastern half of the belt. Indications are for generally clearing weather, except possibly more rain in south and west Texas. Rising temperatures, except stationary in the northeastern quarter of the belt, where it will continue cool.

The cool wave has greatly diminished in intensity, and warm, normal weather will prevail in a few days. The most important development is the change to fair weather and the slight check caused by cool weather will soon be remedied.

Liverpool came in poor on futures, which were about 4 points lower than due, but spot prices are quoted 4 points higher; sales, 12,000 bales.

London reports hostilities commenced between Servia and Bulgaria. The London market is gloomy on fear of war in Balkans in consequence of the collapse of the peace conference. Political tension is high throughout Europe.

Our market opened unchanged with trading held in abeyance by the traders waiting for a cue from July in New York. As this option shows no life and caused a few points, the market gave way to 12.19 for July and 11.34 for October up to noon. The advance worked through July in New York during the past two days has naturally made new crop shorts very nervous and the cool spell ceased undue apprehension of damage. This feeling, however, was relieved by a Government forecast of fair, warmer weather for the central and eastern States.

STOCKS GO OFF AFTER EARLY RISE

U. P.-S. P. Plan Comes Up Tomorrow—Balkan War News Causes General Selling.

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, June 11.—The invariable upturn which follows a slump in the stock market presented itself at the opening to-day and material gains ranging well over a point were scored.

London was a good buyer and many who were on the bear side of the market yesterday covered to-day.

Among the gains were Amalgamated Copper 1¼, Utah Copper ½, Colorado Fuel and Iron 1, Lehigh Valley 1¼, Union Pacific 1¾, Atchison ¾, Baltimore and Ohio 1¾, Great Northern preferred 1, United States Steel common ⅜, Southern Railway ⅝, Reading ¾, Chino Copper ¾ and California Petroleum ½.

The tone was strong. Chesapeake and Ohio, which was keenly watched because of the mysterious pressure which has been exerted against it on the present movement, opened at 56, or 1⅜ over Tuesday's final. Chicago and Northwestern was up ½. Louisville and Nashville was one of the few stocks which did not respond to the sympathetic wave of strength, losing ½. Frisco second preferred lost ¼.

At 10:30 Union Pacific had sold up to 141 for a net gain of 1½. Southern Pacific sold at 90⅞ for a gain of ½. Missouri Pacific, which yesterday sold down to the lowest level since the death of Jay Gould, opened ½ higher.

The curb was steady.

Americans and Canadian Pacific in London were firm.

The only important recession in the late forenoon was in Great Northern preferred, which reacted 1¼ to 117⅜, with fractional losses in Steel, Copper and Lehigh Valley. Canadian advanced 1 point to 217¼. Union Pacific lost ⅛ since its opening. Pennsylvania and Missouri Pacific 1½ and Atlantic Coast Line gained 1 point. Steel unchanged. The tone in the last few minutes of the morning session was weak.

Call money loaning at 2½.

MILLER-CARTER COTTON LETTER.

MEMPHIS, June 11.—It is evident from the action of the market that short interest has been eliminated or greatly reduced. Even July acts heavy and Liverpool is said to be selling some. Some early buying on low temperatures east, but warmer weather is on the way, which, following recent general rains, must greatly stimulate growth.

It is always possible to twist summer contracts when New York stock is small, but barring fresh manipulation of this sort the market should gradually seek lower levels.

THE WEATHER.

Conditions.

WASHINGTON, June 11.—With the exception of rains along the South Atlantic coast, the weather will be generally fair to-night and Thursday east of the Mississippi river.

Temperatures will rise gradually to-night and Thursday in the region of the Great Lakes, the Ohio Valley, Tennessee, the East Gulf and the Middle and Southern Atlantic States, except the Florida Peninsula.

FORECAST BY STATES.

Forecast until 7 p. m. Thursday:

Georgia—Local rains to-night, Thursday probably fair with rising temperature.

Virginia—Generally fair, except showers in southeast portion to-night or Thursday; slowly rising temperature in the interior.

North Carolina—Cloudy in west, probably rain in east portion to-night; Thursday probably fair with rising temperature.

South Carolina—Rain to-night; cloudy Thursday with rising temperature.

Florida—Local rains to-night or on Thursday; slightly cooler in south and central portions; tonight and Thursday rising temperature in extreme north portion Thursday.

Alabama and Mississippi—Probably fair to-night and Thursday with rising temperature.

Tennessee—Fair to-night and Thursday; rising temperature.

Louisiana—Fair to-night and Thursday.

East Texas—Scattered showers to-night or Thursday.

West Texas—Scattered showers to-night or Thursday; warmer in north portion.

COTTON GOSSIP

There was a big "jumble" of trade in July yesterday, with the buying and selling so mixed that nobody could tell what the leading Liverpool interests did for the day by balance. One thing is certain, Wall Street and Southern shorts covered freely, much of it on stop orders, and as nobody dared to go short of it, the contracts presumably came from both leading and trailing longs.

* * *

Many traders think the worst is over in July and that commission houses accounts booked up to last night are pretty well evened up.

* * *

New crops' strength yesterday was due mostly to July, although some kicks from Georgia played their part.

* * *

When the flurry in July carried that option to 12.25 yesterday, which was started by Wall Street covering, the selling at this point became general and a 20-point reaction followed quickly. It was reported that the larger spot interests were principal sellers.

* * *

It is generally believed that the short interest in July has been reduced to a great extent.

"It was rumored yesterday afternoon that there had been a settlement in July, but this was not considered seriously as there is no reason at this time to expect such a move," says J. M. Anderson.

* * *

NEW ORLEANS, June 11.—Hayward & Clark: The map shows favorable weather; further rains in South Texas; clearing elsewhere. Temperatures are too low in eastern and northern belt, but this will be quickly remedied. The most important development is that fair weather has set in.

Liverpool cables: "American middling fair, 7.32d; good middling, 6.98d; middling, 6.74d; low middling, 6.58d; good ordinary, 6.22d; ordinary, 5.88d."

The New Orleans Times-Democrat says: "The talent danced attendance on the speculative rings all day long. Cotton played havoc with shorts and stocks played havoc with longs. Professionals seem to have lost the power of perception and seem to have got in bad all along the line. The same people appeared to be short of cotton and long of stocks. Theoretically speculators were covering short cotton lines in order to protect stock holdings. It was a gay old session and one the talent will not soon forget.

"The weather map barometer lines formed a series of circles, wheels within wheels, like the market. All sections of the belt with the exception of Southwest Texas have been adequately soaked, with more rain promised. Southwest Texas will probably have received rain by to-night. Amateur weather men, however, say no more hard rains are likely to fall anywhere in the belt at this time. At the close the cotton contract market question remaining to be answered was, Did New York July shorts effect a settlement? Rumor said they did. The commission men in closest touch with the position said they did not. In the absence of a July sentiment, higher prices for the midsummer position are practically inevitable.

"Yesterday's reaction in the cotton market followed close on the heels of cabled reports of actual fighting among the Balkan allies, weather and crops now being ignored, and the bear talent having lost confidence in its own judgment. Heavy sales of the actual at Liverpool day after day, and the relative as well as the actual strength of the Savannah spot market, which is the nearest source of supply to New York, have within a day or two done about as much to disturb professional equilibrium as the controlled July position has done in a week. Bears have simply lost all courage of conviction. Until they regain their stamina, the market will be one-sided."

COTTON SEED OIL.

NEW YORK, June 11.—The cotton seed oil market advanced several points during the early trading on renewed buying of July for account of refiners, scattered commission houses buying on firmness in lard and advance of bear pressure.

GENERAL BUYING SENDS GRAINS UP

Shorts Become Nervous and Buy Freely as European Political Complications Get Worse.

CHICAGO, June 11.—The reported taking of 1,000,000 bushels of wheat at Duluth late yesterday by exporters, coupled with some unfavorable news from the spring wheat country, caused many of the shorts to take to the buying side with a friendly hand this morning and there was also an investment demand.

Prices were up ½ to ⅞, with the July the strongest spot. That month is tied up tightly and a large open interest is likely to prove a dangerous one for the shorts. Northwestern receipts exceeded those of a year ago, while Winnipeg receipts were less than one-third those of a year ago. Cables were a shade lower.

Corn sympathized with wheat and was up ¼ to ½c.

Oats were a shade better on smaller offerings.

Provisions hardened in the early market on higher hog market at the yard.

WHEAT CONDITION IMPROVING.

CHICAGO, June 11.—Atchison crop report of condition in territory covered by Atchison throughout Kansas, Oklahoma and Colorado shows rapid development, owing to good rains during the past week—wheat in particular, although some sections are beyond help. Other's are good, the rains coming in time for favorable filling of heads. In Texas, moisture badly needed and crops have suffered.

RECENT SELLERS BUYING WHEAT.

CHICAGO, June 11.—The Inter Ocean says:

"It was the gossip of the wheat trade that houses which were the largest sellers of wheat around 91c recently were the best buyers yesterday under 90c, picking up everything the crowd had to sell and turning to the buying side later.

"Conservative people said that from the recent action of the market July appears to be a good purchase for a turn every time it gets below 90c. The grain Dealers' Association of Texas estimates the corn crop at 200,000,000 bushels, wheat at 9,000,000 bushels, oats 80,000,000 to 25,000,000 bushels. Yields of small grain under last year."

POULTRY, PET AND LIVE STOCK

Pay More Attention To Mating Birds Of Health and Vigor

See That Breeding Stock of Both Parents Are Strong and Vigorous.

EDITED BY JUDGE F. J. MARSHALL

It is a mighty good time of the year to think and talk a little about our breeding stock. It is all mighty nice to fix a pen of breeders in the winter or early spring that are fancy in color and look trim and nice, without regard to the real strength as breeders which they may possess. When you thing about it, it is a good deal of a game of chance the way many poultry keepers do their mating. It is such a common thing to go ahead paying but little, if any, attention to health and vigor. Of course, we all try to have our breeders look healthy, but we do not go quite far enough and see that they are possessed with sufficient strength to impart good health to the youngsters. At this season or time of year, when we have a lot of young stock on hand, we can readily see, if we are at all observing, which pens, or for that matter which hens, are giving us the strong, vigorous chicks—the kind that get up and grow from start to finish—or the other kind that will not grow with any degree of satisfaction, if they live over the critical period of the first two weeks of their lives. Such things are the ones we do not want to overlook in the mating plans. Just to illustrate what we are trying to impress upon our readers, we so often hear the warning note of the breeder of experience against hatching late chicks. That is all right in a general way, because these late chks are hatched from eggs laid by hens that are literally worn out by continued egg production, and breeding cockerels in these pens that are on the verge of collapse from service that has been more than they should be called upon to stand. Such a warning is all right for that kind of breeding, and such breeding is in the majority, too. We are experimenting in a small way and have been for years along all such lines, and we find that it takes a good, strong-bodied hen, carrying plenty of surplus fat, to be able to continue egg production that will give you chicks that can be hatched late in the season, live and grow.

At this writing we have a brood of ten chicks hatched from a two-year-old R. I. Red hen that is a strong, vigorous, great big fat hen. Her eggs are larger than the average; to her is mated a two-year-old cock equally vigorous. This hen is a great layer, having laid almost constantly since February. These ten chicks are about three weeks old and they are a marvel to look at. They are large and long in body, strong, healthy looking legs, broad in breast and back, with an eye like a great big bead. They show great vigor in every line of their makeup, and are at least one-fourth larger than the general run of chicks of that age. Then we have another brood that was hatched from young stock of a different variety that look like an entirely different proposition.

Four of them have died from sheer lack of vitality. They have always looked like they had more load than they had the strength to carry. They run about with their heads low and wing tips down almost trailing the ground. We may be able to raise the majority of those that are now living, but it will be a hard pull for them, and the growth that they will make will be more than half of that made by the old hen's chickens.

Right here is where we should stick a pin that we may profit by it when it comes time to do our mating next winter or spring.

We want to be able to put together such stock as will give us the very best of results. If we must use pullets for breeding, they should be of an early hatch and well developed. Do not feed them for very early fall egg production. Let them grow "in every possible way that they may gain strength for the spring egg season, when you will want to use their eggs for hatching. If your pullets are not all strong and vigorous, cull them out, using the good ones for breeders and the culls for market eggs.

Mate with these best pullets a strong, vigorous and healthy cock two years old. Be sure that he is healthy and not too old. There is no question but what if we would take the trouble and go to the expense, if need be, to use nothing but hens and cocks that are two years old as breeders and keep it up for a few years we would have twice the vitality in our stock of chickens that we now have. We would hear so much less about chicks dying in the shell, white diarrhoea, general debility and all such ills that are now so much talked of. We must recognize the importance of the hen that lays the egg. It is equally important as the male that we all seem to take so much pride in. How many of us have prided ourselves in the grand cock or cockerel that heads the pen of perhaps a great variety of females, particularly in shape and type.

Let us try to insert a new rule that the hens must be as strong and vigorous as the cock and as uniform in their makeup as it is possible to get them. It is a good plan to mate a small yard of extra strong fowls for getting eggs for our own hatching, if for nothing else, marking them and keeping up the line of females from them to mate each year for this same purpose. Look over your this year prospect and see if you do not think you need it.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Railroad Extension On West Side of City

A., B. & A. to Use Terminal?—North Ave. at $500—Loan Deeds $100,000—Chamber's New Home.

Of considerable significance in real estate circles was the announcement of Tuesday that the Georgia Terminal Company would, in the near future, build a branch road connecting the A., B. & A. and the Southern at a point near Magnolia Street, inasmuch as $25,000 or more has been spent buying property for a right-of-way, and because the presence of the branch is expected to boost property values greatly. J. H. Ewing, of the J. R. Smith & J. H. Ewing real estate agency, has been buying parcels for several months, and now his work is practically complete, and the company is waiting for permission from the United States District Court to amend its charter. Much railroad development and many manufacturing establishments are now expected on the west side.

At a recent meeting the Georgia Terminal Company passed the following resolution, signed by E. T. Lamb, president:

"Resolved, That it is to the interest of the Georgia Terminal Company that it should build a branch road or an extension of its present railroad running from a point on its main line in the city of Atlanta, Ga., between Thurmond and Newton Streets, in a general southeasterly direction across Mangum Street, Newton Street, Foundry Street and Elliott Street, to a connection with the Southern Railway Company's track near Magnolia Street, and that the officers, agents and attorneys of this company be and they are hereby authorized to take all steps necessary for the purpose of building such branch or extension."

It has ben rumored that this extension will enable the A., B. & A. to enter the Terminal Station, and that this road will eventually abandon the Union Depot.

North Avenue at $500 a Foot.

North Avenue, considered a good cross-town street for present and future business enterprises, got into the realty market again Wednesday and more sales are expected soon.

Frank M. Swift, of New York, bought from W. B. Matthews and E. G. Black, through the Porter & Swift real estate agency, the property formerly occupied by the Ivy Exchange of the Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Company, for a consideration said to have been about $500 a foot, or approximately $14,000. The lot is 28 by 128 feet, on the north side of the street, and is improved with the one-story brick building once known as the Ivy Exchange. Adjoining the property is one of the city fire engine houses, and near by is the former location of Washington Seminary. Several automobile shops are directly to the east.

$100,000 in Loan Deeds.

An interesting loan deed has gone to record and it indicates, by the way, that plenty of outside capital is at the disposal of Atlanta people to be loaned on local property. Forrest & George Adair have borrowed from the New York Life Insurance Company $65,000 on 55 Whitehall Street and $35,000 on one of the northern corners of Broad and Alabama Streets. The size of the latter lot is 33 by 100 feet and of the former 80 by 94 by 48 by 73.

New Home for Chamber.

In a few days the Chamber of Commerce is expected to apply for a building permit to remodel the old Y. M. C. A. building at the southeast corner of North Pryor Street and Auburn Avenue, at a cost of $125,000 to $150,000. Tenants have been given notice to get out by July 1, and work will start about then.

Bank Deposits Hold Firm.

Although there is supposed to be less local money than for some time, bank deposits are practically what they were two months ago. Figures of six national banks in Atlanta on June 4 show a total of $26,500,543, while on April 4 the figures were $26,561,031. This condition is taken to indicate a great deal of confidence among depositors. Surplus shows a satisfactory increase, and loans were kept down to normal. Cash on hand in the banks was but a trifle less on June 4 than on April 4.

Inasmuch as the condition of the banks has a direct bearing on real estate, the report is particularly interesting.

Working for Electric Line.

The proposal to extend from Anderson, S. C., to Atlanta the electric railroad of James B. Duke, the tobacco king, has awakened a generous response in Athens, Clarke County, through which the line would pass. Leading Athens citizens have indorsed the project and will lend their financial as well as their moral support. Other towns along the right-of-way are expected to take similar action, and the chance of a successful consummation is considered unusually good. It has been estimated that property values along the route would be increased 50 per cent.

Three Ships at a Time As An Example

They Would No More Think of Dilly-Dallying With Their Navy in Great Britain Than A MERCHANT WOULD THINK OF LETTING HIS INSURANCE LAPSE ON A GREAT STORE Filled With Millions of Dollars' Worth of Merchandise.

It did not require any extra session of Parliament to elicit from the British First Lord of the Admiralty the prompt announcement that three battleships that were to have been laid down next March for the British Navy will, instead, be laid down at once on account of the rejection by the Canadian Senate of the naval bill.

The United Kingdom had hoped that Canada would relieve it of at least a small part of the vast expense of naval construction. But, as that is not yet to be, the Admiralty goes at it thoroughly and without a day's loss of time.

They would no more think of dilly-dallying with their navy in Great Britain THAN A MERCHANT WOULD THINK OF LETTING HIS INSURANCE LAPSE ON A GREAT STORE filled with millions of dollars' worth of merchandise.

Whether Great Britain has the merchandise, the broad, world-wide trade, because she has the battleships, the insurance fully paid up, it would be hard to determine. But this much is certain: She DID have the sea power before she had the trade.

Three new battleships, mark you, not one! There is economy and speed of construction in three. Every smallest part is made in triple, and the three can be ready almost as soon as one.

THAT IS WHAT JAPAN IS DOING. FOUR ships of a class are being built for her simultaneously in English yards, THREE more in her home yards. One of the four is already afloat in English waters.

We lag behind with ONE laid down this year! There is gathering evidence that Congress has had its lesson and is now willing to vote for two more this year. Why not THREE? That is the economical and up-to-date way of building navies. For a nation that does things on such a wholesale scale as the United States, WHY SINGLE OUT THE NAVY, OF ALL THINGS, AND HANDLE THAT ON A BANANA-STAND SCALE?

The other day there was printed a remarkable story from a very authoritative source of the frank after-dinner talk of the predecessor of the present Japanese Ambassador to the United States.

He was quoted as confessing that what the Japanese would have to fear, if anything, in a war with this country, would be, not OUR navy, nor OUR army, nor anything WE could do, but RUSSIA. No doubt he was polite. No doubt he gilded the humiliating truth he was honest enough to state. But did he tell ALL the truth? Supposing Japan had previously made its terms with Russia! Or supposing that the Japanese mind should change!

The moral is startlingly plain. Let this newspaper again repeat the truth that REAL PATRIOTISM IS EVEN MORE NECESSARY IN TIME OF PEACE THAN IN TIME OF WAR.

A Terrapin Patch With Every Lot

Wrought to a high pitch of indignation by the high cost of terrapin, the Bureau of Fisheries has determined to place these delicate little creatures within the reach of all. A brochure on the rearing and care of terrapin will soon be obtainable by all who have "pulls" with Congressmen, and thereafter terrapin farms will spring up like dandelion patches in every quarter of the land. No longer the market man will coldly inform the timid housewife that diamond backs are two dollars and fifty cents each, for they will be shovelled into bins like coal by the newly instructed farmers, and if they bring ten cents a dozen it will only be on a strong market.

This, of course, will lower the public veneration for the terrapin and lose him his high place on the banquet menu, but it will bring him once more into the lowly cottage of the tired business man and supply an agreeable change in his daily diet of roast beef medium.

The Bureau of Fisheries is to be congratulated. Having left its strictly legitimate domain to deal with these amphibians, which are only constructive fish at best, perhaps it can find a way to classify steers and sheep as fish, and by teaching how they may be cheaply brought to maturity bring about real downward revision of the butchers' schedules.

.:. Tom Casey .:.

By WILLIAM F. KIRK

I WAS walking in a pasture not so very long ago,
When I came upon a brooklet and I stopped to watch its flow;
A silvery little brooklet, winding in and twisting out
Through growing beds of watercress that sheltered tiny trout.
The robins with their singing and the brooklet purling by
Made a sort of mystic music, half a laugh and half a sigh.
Then I swallowed something aching and brushed a tear away,
For I seemed to hear the music poor Tom Casey used to play.

For an instant I could see him in a sort of misty dream
As he sat at his piano on a bank across the stream;
But his face was even whiter than the face we used to know
And his great dark eyes were brighter than the eyes that used to glow.
When I heard the rippling tinkle I could close my eyes and see
All the boys that Casey played for ere his spirit floated free.
Then I saw the pasture only, for the vision died away,
Just as Casey faded from us with the things he used to play.

Flatter Your Own Folks

Praise Is the Lever by Which Each of Us Can Move Our Little World, She Declares.

By DOROTHY DIX.

CONSIDERING that vanity is the most prominent and universal human attribute, and that we are all brother and sister to the donkey who can be cajoled along anywhere, but can not be driven a step, isn't it queer that we have never found out how much more efficacious a weapon praise is than blame?

Personally, we all know in our secret souls that we are easy marks in the hands of the flatterer, and that we may be twisted around the finger of the jollier, and yet we are so stupid that we never think of applying to those about us the means by which we are ourselves so easily worked. It's the greased hinge that swings to our lightest touch, not the rusty one that we batter at with a sledgehammer.

Poor Johnnie.

Of course, we should put in our best effort, and time, and thought in correcting our faults and strengthening our weak performances. As a matter of fact, we do just the opposite. It's our virtues that we magnify, and the things that we do well, and that we know we are going to be praised for, that we strive to do better and better.

It's the people who give us the glad hand that influence us, not those who use a club on us, and the surest way to develop the characteristic you want in anyone about you is to keep a rosy spotlight turned upon it.

For instance:

Every mother is anxious for her children to be courteous, and to have good manners. In order to achieve this the average mother is just one incarnate "don't." It's Johnnie, don't come in the room with your hat on; Johnnie, don't sit still in your chair while a lady stands; Johnnie, don't do this; Johnnie, don't do that, and Johnnie gets his back up, and says to himself that he isn't going to be bothered with all that foolish nonsense and he's going to do exactly as he pleases.

I know one mother with two boys who, observing the futility of blaming children for their bad manners, decided to try what praising them for their good manners would do. She would remark where her Johnnie could hear it upon his exquisite courtesy to women, and thereupon Johnnie would break his neck to open doors, and pick up handkerchiefs for ladies, and you couldn't have kept him in his seat on the trolley while a woman stood if you had nailed him to it. Johnnie's mother also casually remarked to him how gratifying it was to her that he had such good table manners, and from there on Johnnie ceased to be a "spotter" and became a connoisseur among the which-is-which of the forks and spoons on the dinner table.

A Bad Temper.

I knew a little girl who had a terrific temper. Her mother tried in every way to teach her to control it. She pointed out to Sallie how unlovely and unattractive a shrewish woman was, and how everybody would hate her and avoid her if she gave way to tantrums. All in vain. Sally was insensible to that view of the subject.

Finally one day her mother said to her, "You have a brilliant mind, and a wonderfully strong will. I wonder that any one with your intelligence and your determination of character should be dominated by a weakness." That appealed to Sally's vanity, and just to show that she was stronger than her temper she conquered it so that to-day she has a reputation for amiability.

And if you can do more with soft words than with hard ones with children, how very, very more efficacious in flattery than knocks in the family circle! Believe me, it is soft soap that makes the domestic machinery revolve without a hitch.

Who is the woman who spends hours and days joyously over the kitchen stove, concocting toothsome dishes for her lord and master? Is it the wife of the man who is always batting her because she can't make bread like mother used to make? Nay, verily. The woman who knows that her best culinary efforts are going to be growled over, anyway, stops on the way home from her bridge whist, and buys an unsavory mess at the delicatessen store, which she sets before the grouch she is tied to.

It is the wise husband who praises his wife's handiwork as he eats who fares sumptuously every day, for there's some encouragement to a woman to make a burnt offering of herself if she is going to receive the proper appreciation for it. But nobody wants to be an unsung martyr.

The Secret.

Who is the woman who pares, and scrimps, and economizes, and makes over her old clothes and retrims her hats? Is it the wife whose husband is always berating her for her extravagance? Not much. She feels that inasmuch as she is going to be blamed anyway, she had as well have good clothes by way of consolation. The woman who squeezes a nickel until the buffalo on it howls with pain is the one whose husband is always boasting that she is such a financier that if she had her due she would be Secretary of the Treasury.

Also, you may observe, that the husbands who are nailed to their own firesides are the men whose wives are always telling about how entertaining John is, and how big and strong and handsome and wise he is. Keeping flattery on tap at home is like keeping Scotch on the sideboard. A man doesn't have to run around the corner to get it. Also it's generally a better brand and not so expensive.

The moral of all of which is that praise is the lever by which each of us can move our little world. And the more fools we, that we haven't sense enough to use it oftener.

The Delhi Magazine

By REV. THOMAS B. GREGORY.

THE defense and explosion of the great magazine at Delhi 56 years ago—May 13, 1857—deserves to rank along with the great achievements of history, not excepting even Leonidas at Thermopylae or the immortal three who held the bridge across the Tiber against Lars Porsena.

The magazine was a huge building packed with arms and ammunition, and was in charge of Lieutenant Willoughby and eight subordinates. It was nine men against a great city. Knowing that they could not hold their ground against such odds, a fuse was run into the magazine and at its outer end a man was stationed with portfire in hand.

Presently came a summons to surrender, which was, of course, refused, and then on came the swarms of Sepoys, Willoughby's eight guns the meanwhile (each worked by a single man), pouring death into them. But on came the swaying mass of Sepoys; a rain of death falls upon the little band from the walls and in another moment will come the rush of bayonet. Willoughby raises his hand, Scully applies the portfire to the fuse and the mighty magazine goes up in one huge thunderclap! The whole city seems to shake with the concussion, and a great pillar of smoke rises in the sky! "It is the signal to heaven and earth of how the nine Britons who kept the great magazine had fulfilled their trust."

Of the gallant nine, Scully, who fired the fuse, and four others, vanished along with hundreds of the mutineers, but strange to say Willoughby and three others escaped death.

G. M. NAPIER ANALYZES PHAGAN CASE

In a Brilliant Letter He Arrays Facts as They Affect Leo M. Frank and Conley.

The Georgian publishes the following letter written by George M. Napier, the well-known lawyer, on the Phagan case, as it gives for the first time a legal analysis of the case for and against Frank:

"To the Editor of The Georgian:

This section of our country has held very few criminal cases so profoundly interesting as the Phagan case. Indeed, it is questionable whether the entire South has ever had enacted within it a crime which has created such intense and widespread interest.

Personally, I have no concern in the case, save as a citizen of the State, desiring that the guilty party or parties may receive condign punishment.

Profoundly Interested.

As a lawyer, being interested more intimately perhaps than those not of that profession, certain aspects of the case—the procedure taken in the efforts of those immediately charged with ferreting out the facts of the crime, and the varied and swiftly changing developments in connection with it—I find these to be of profound interest.

One thing has been made evident: The people generally are disposed to ascribe guilt to one who has the opportunity to commit crime. This was shown by the widely-accepted conclusion that Leo Frank and Newt Lee, colored, were guilty of the murder of the Phagan girl, as soon as it became known that they had been at the pencil factory on the day of the homicide.

This conclusion was fixed in the minds of many by reason of the evident inclination of the detectives to believe Frank guilty. And there is little doubt that if the two men had been imprisoned in an unprotected town jail they would have been lynched while suspicion and excitement were at their height.

Praises Newspaper.

This mental state of the community did not last, however. The remarkable success of the local press in obtaining and publishing every detail of the evidence of the detectives enabled the reading public to weigh the testimony by piecemeal. It is safe to say that there lately have been many accessions to those who from the first hesitated to accept the theory of the guilt of Frank, or of the night watchman who found the body, upon the sole basis of their opportunity to commit the crime, and with all the circumstances going to negative motive to kill the young girl, especially on the part of the white man.

The zeal of the secret service men in trailing to cover criminals who effect getaways is to be commended, but the work of building a successful prosecution upon a mere case of suspicion will, in many instances, fail.

The testimony of Frank before the Coroner's jury, in which he gave, with conspicuous consistency and openness, an account of his actions and whereabouts on the day of the killing, created a favorable impression on the public mind.

Strengthened by Witnesses.

This was strengthened by the corroboration of his statements as to the time of his movements by impartial witnesses of unquestioned veracity.

The indictment of Frank by the Grand Jury seems to have been seized upon as the psychological opportunity for the negro Conley to admit that he wrote the notes found by the dead girl's body, and the comparison of his handwriting with that of the notes proves that fact beyond peradventure. But the network of lies in which Conley has become enmeshed seems not to have given the forces conducting the prosecution any serious impres-

Quiz Militants for Secret War Chest

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, June 11.—High interest continues to be shown in the trial of the six suffragette leaders and their male adherent, E. A. Clayton, chemist, alleged to have mixed explosives for the militants. A number of women tried to make a demonstration outside of Old Bailey Court by crying, "God bless the memory of Emily Davison."

Counsel for the Government made searching inquiries to learn if the union has any secret war chest. Recently it was reported that the organization is practically bankrupt.

PAINTER GIRL FERTILIZER COMPANY HEAD

Stockholders Elect the Drowned Man's Daughter as President of $500,000 Concern.

JACKSONVILLE, June 11.—Miss Okie Painter, daughter of the late E. O. Painter, was elected president of the E. O. Painter Fertilizer Company at a meeting of the stockholders held last night. At the same time it was decided to increase the capital stock of the company from $250,000 to $500,000, with the privilege of increasing the liabilities to an equal amount.

Reports submitted at the meeting declared the condition of the business of the company to be flourishing. A 10 per cent annual dividend was declared.

Miss Painter announced, after the meeting, that the business of the company would be conducted upon the same plans as heretofore under the presidency of her father, who was drowned in the St. Johns River May 22, the cause of which is still a mystery.

Trained for Place.

No one is better able to carry on the work of the dead man than Miss Painter. Since finishing school she has occupied a place in her father's office. Having no son on whom to depend, he trained his daughter to take his place. She is familiar with every detail of the business, both administrative and manufacturing. She has spent much of her time at the fertilizer plant, directing affairs for her father.

Another reason why the daughter is the logical person for president of the company is that she controls the major portion of the stock. Her father held $190,000 of the outstanding $250,000 issue. Under his will all of this, except $26,000 distributed in special bequests, goes equally to Miss Painter and her mother, Mrs. Martha Painter. The daughter retains the exclusive voting power of the $26,000, the beneficiaries to receive only the income therefrom. This $26,000 will eventually revert to Miss Painter or her heirs. She also represents her mother in the estate.

Painter Planned Increase.

The action of the stockholders in doubling the capital stock is simply carrying out the plans made by Painter. He had worked out the details whereby small blocks of the stock would be sold to planters in Florida and South Georgia, who in turn would buy their fertilizer from the Painter company, thus increasing the volume of business done and give the planter-stockholders small rebates in the form of dividends.

And at the same time Painter saw how he could add to his own holdings by declaring a stock dividend, giving the old stockholders proportionate shares of the new issue. Painter, of course, planned to secure enough of the new stock to still give him a majority of the combined issue and retain full control of the business. Now the widow and daughter will come in on that distribution, making the daughter probably the only young woman in the South as the head and absolute dictator of a half-million-dollar corporation, doing an annual business said to exceed $750,000.

Since the death of Painter, State Senator J. B. Conrad, of Glenwood, has been nominally acting president of the company, but he spent two weeks of the time at Tallahassee attending the final days' sessions of the Florida Legislature, leaving the Painter business actually in the hands of Miss Painter, D. A. Morrison, Jr., secretary of the company, and G. C. Hamlin, general counsel.

Fain Demands a Speedy Hearing

Denies Charges of Rowdyism

Reported Indicted, Defies Foes

W. P. Fain, accused Police Commissioner, above, and J. A. Skaggs, who told story of alleged rowdyism.

Commissioner Asks Public to Suspend Judgment Until He Can Prove His Innocence.

W. P. Fain was indicted on two counts by the Grand Jury, according to report Wednesday morning.

In the face of the indictments, on the charge of rowdyism in a house at 40 East Harris Street, the Police Commissioner reiterated his declaration of innocence Wednesday morning, and, in a statement given to the press, asked that the public suspend judgment of him until the case had come to trial.

Mr. Fain's statement in reply is as follows:

"As is known by everyone familiar with the procedure of the court, it is comparatively easy to secure an indictment before the Grand Jury, as they only hear one side of the case. I have no apprehension as to the outcome of the trial, as I know I can prove my innocence beyond a question of a doubt. All that I ask is a speedy trial and that the public will suspend judgment until the facts are known."

Mr. Fain's case is said to have resulted in an indictment by the Grand Jury following close on its investigation of the charge made against him on Tuesday. Two witnesses testified yesterday. They are said to have told of the fight and general disorder in the Harris Street house, and charged Fain with being one of the principals in the fray.

Claim Fain "Flexd" It.

They testified that while the disorder was in progress Call Officer W. F. Anderson, of the police department, went to the house, but Commissioner Fain arranged matters by telephone with the police headquarters, thereby escaping arrest. These witnesses but repeated the stories first told by Allen Young, a real estate man, and J. A. Skaggs, agent of the Southern Express Company.

Mr. Fain stated that, since the report of his indictment, he had received many calls from police officials and other persons offering to go on his bond in case the report was proved to be true.

"This in itself," said Mr. Fain, "proves that my friends do not believe the charges that have been made against me."

PLOT EXPOSED, SAYS FELDER, BUT LANFORD DOUBTS AFFIDAVIT

In New Sworn Statement Gentry Declares He Came to Realize He Was Dealing with "Bunch of Crooks"---Charges Lanford and Beavers Names Were Inserted.

That the dictograph conversations in which it was plotted to trap Colonel Thomas B. Felder, Mayor Woodward and C. C. Jones were padded and altered in meaning is the sensational charge brought back to Atlanta in an affidavit sworn to by George M. Gentry, who fled to Washington after the conversations, in their alleged garbled form, had been offered for publication by A. S. Colyar, Jr., and printed.

Gentry's charges appear to substantiate in a large measure, if not entirely, the repeated statements of Colonel Felder and Mayor Woodward that an attempt had been made to make them the victims of a conspiracy.

Gentry said in making his affidavit: "I came to the realizatio nthat I had been dealing with a bunch of crooks, and decided that the best thing for me was to tell the whole story."

Cleared, Says Felder.

Colonel Felder said that he regarded the affidavit of Gentry as a complete invidication for himself. He declared that he explanation contained in the sworn statement of Gentry on the face of it showed hat Colyar and Chief of Detectives Lanford had been in a miserable conspiracy to ruin his (Felder's) reputation by seeking to prove him guilty of attempted bribery.

Mayor Woodward said that the affidavit bore out his previous statements that he never had mentioned the names of Chief Beavers or Chief Lanford in his conversation in room 32 of Williams House No. 2, where the trap was sprung.

"The whole thing was a frame-up. I was suspicious the moment I entered the room. I knew that something was wrong, and I was on my guard. In spite of that, they twisted and turned my statements around, as the original notes taken by young Gentry will show."

Chief Lanford said he did not believe Gentry had signed the new affidavit.

Colonel Felder said:

A Dirty Plot.

"Gentry's affidavit is a complete vindication. It bears out my statement that the whole thing was a frame-up on the part of Newport Lanford and his hirelings. Everyone agrees with me now that I was the innocent victim of a dirty, contemptible plot.

"The notebook is not in the hands of Gentry's brother. It was at the time he left Atlanta, but it is now in a safe deposit vault and I have the key.

"I have given Mayor Woodward a copy of the affidavit, and I expect he will ask the Grand Jury to look into the matter.

Incident Closed.

"So far as I am personally concerned, the incident is closed with this vindication. Gentry will return to Atlanta within the next week or ten days, and he may have something additional to say.

"As to the Grand Jury scouring the country for witnesses to find out whether I was carrying a concealed weapon on the day Lanford attempted to assault me, the matter could have been facilitated by them calling on me. I am a truthful man and would have told them.

"As a matter of fact, instead of seeking to indict me the jury should have been imprisoning Lanford for contempt of court. Never before since the early colonial days has a man assaulted, or attempted to assault, a witness before the Grand Jury without that body taking some decisive action.

Lanford Angry.

Chief Lanford was angered at the developments and said that he did not believe that Gentry signed the affidavit.

The affidavit was brought to Atlanta Tuesday night by E. O. Miles, a private detective, and given to Mayor Woodward. It was sworn to in Washington before Jeannette Henning, a notary public. Gentry said that he had fled to Washington on being informed that his arrest was imminent and that he would not be allowed to make bond.

Miles said that Gentry was willing to return to Atlanta and that he promised to complete the month at his work in Washington and then come back voluntarily.

Besides charging that the dictograph conversations were padded and altered in meaning, Gentry alleged that Colyar had made an endeavor to buy the original notes.

Gentry's affidavit in full, as given out, follows:

District of Columbia, City of Washington—Personally appeared before me, the undersigned, a Notary Public, of the District of Columbia, George M. Gentry, who on oath states that:

On Wednesday, May 21, 1913, at or about 10 o'clock in the morning, Mr. Gay C. Febuary called me over the telephone and desired to know if I would do some stenographic work for him. I told him I would, but that I couldn't get off until noon. He said that they were in a hurry for it and he would like for me to come at once, so I arranged to get off and went down to his office. He took me into the Chief's office and the Chief told me he wanted me to take down some testimony, and he asked me if I could write very fast. Mr. Febuary assured Chief Lanford that I was a good stenographer and could do the work all right. The Chief then told me that the work he wanted done required somebody that could be trusted all right, and I assured him that I always treated all stenographic work I did as confidential. Chief Lanford told me then that what he wanted me to do was to take down a conversation that would take place in a hotel, and he asked me if I thought I could take it over a dictograph. (Mr. Surles coming in at that time with a satchel, which he opened and which contained wires and other paraphernalia in connection with a dictograph outfit.)

Watched Dictograph Installation.

After a few minutes, during which time Mr. Febuary was absent, we went over to the Williams House No. 2 on North Forsyth Street, Atlanta, Fulton County, Georgia (Mr. Febuary and I), and I was instructed to go into room No. 21 of this hotel. Mr. Surles and Mr. Colyar were there and they probably had to make arrangements for adjoining rooms, as Mr. Surles commented to me that they hadn't decided just what to do with the dictographs. After a time Colyar came in and instructed Surles to follow him, and gave me instructions to await his wishes. Later on Mr. Febuary came in and I told him that if I had to wait much longer by myself I was going back to the office. I was then allowed to come into the room, where they were installing the dictographs (one on each end of the bottom board of the bureau just under the bottom drawer on the back of the board), the wires being run through the keyhole of the door between room 31 and room 32. The bureau was then screwed against the door facing. At about 12:30 I started getting accustomed to Febuary's and Colyar's voice.

Went Through Rehearsal.

At first I could not hear at all, but gradually I was able to hear more distinctly and after an hour or two of diligent practice I was able to use the dictograph and to distinguish voices very clearly. Right at the beginning I found that I would not be able to hear anything with the windows up. When they were closed it became rather stuffy and this, coupled with the strain I was under, added to my distraction. I stopped practicing at 2:45 that afternoon and went downstairs to the office of the hotel, where I awaited Mr. Felder's arrival. I saw him cross Forsyth Street, and after he, Febuary and Colyar went upstairs, or were just about at the top of the stairs, I started up and saw the three enter room 31 of the Williams House, located as mentioned previously. I then immediately went into room 32 and closed the door, partly, but did not lock it. The windows were down and so I went directly to the table and placed the receiver over my head and started writing what I heard. I took down all the conferences that took place. At somewhere around 5 that afternoon I left the hotel and went to Mr. R. B. Bliss' house and took some dictation. From there I went home and changed my collar.

I returned to the office of the General Fire Extinguisher Company, 276 Marietta Street, where I wrote the dictation he had given me, signed his letters and then met Mr. Febuary there at the office. We went to the Candler restaurant to supper and from there we returned to the Williams House to keep an appointment with Colyar at about 7:30. At about 8 o'clock Mr. Miles and Mr. C. C. Jones and Colyar went up to the "conference room" and Mr. Febuary and I to the "information reception room."

Conference Lasted Half Hour.

I placed the receiver over my head, and in order to be sure that I would hear everything, Mr. Febuary stood behind me and held them pressed tightly to my ears. This conference lasted about 30 minutes. Between 8:30 and 9:15 Wednesday night Mr. Febuary loafed about town, as we had an appointment with Mr. Branch and Mr. Paschal at 9:30 at the Williams House, and as they were not in The Journal office, we had to kill time until they showed up. I left Mr. Febuary and Mr. Colyar at The Journal office at 9:15 and went over to the Williams House to wait for the arrival of The Journal reporters mentioned above. They came in shortly and we went over to The Journal office and all of us (Colyard, Febuary, Branch, Paschal and myself) went up to the editorial department, where a machine was selected, and I then went to work transcribing what I had heard.

Right at the start I made Colyard angry, because when I did not hear what was said I put dashes and so I allowed him to dictate several answers and questions, which do not appear in my notebook and which I am not positive that I heard. I did not hear Mayor Woodward mention Chief Beavers or Chief Lanford during the whole conversation, nor did I write it in the transcription of my notes, these names being evidently added by other parties. At 4:30 Thursday morning, May 22, I finished transcribing my notes and turned the papers over to Mr. Febuary. Later on during the morning he came down to the office, bringing an affidavit which I had written for me to sign before a notary public. He told me that they had made only a few minor changes in the transcription and that all I had to do was to sign the affidavit, which I did. However, I noticed that some interlineations had been made in my copy, or rather in Chief Lanford's copy, as I had no copy.

Refused Gentry Copy.

Colyar and the reporters, just before I started to transcribe my notes, argued as to the number of copies that should be made. They agreed that one copy should be made for the Chief, one for Colyar and one for The Journal, and that no more should be made. This kept me from having a copy. I had my notebook, however, and it was the comparison of my notes with the published articles that led to my discovery that in addition to the several answers and questions which Colyar had personally dictated, other changes had been made, namely, the insertion of the names of Chief Beavers and Chief Lanford, in the conference with Mayor Woodward; also many other variations occurred, changing the sense of the statement, and since they had my affidavit attached to the papers, I felt that I had been duped.

As to the remuneration for my services, will say that The Journal reporters, Branch and Paschal, agreed to pay me $5 to get the work written Wednesday night, so it could be published in Thursday's paper. Saturday morning, after the appearance of the article in Friday's Journal, The Georgian reporter came to the office and offered me either $25 or $45, I do not recollect which, for a copy of the conference with Mayor Woodward, Febuary, Miles and Colyar, and Miles, Jones and Colyar's conference. I declined the offer. I then went to see The Journal's reporters and told them that The Georgian had offered me money for a copy of the conference, and they agreed to pay me $50 to hold my notebook from Saturday until Monday. I turned my notebook over to Mr. Brice, who gave it to his stenographer to keep until Monday. Later during the day the reporters told me that The Georgian had gotten a copy, and so I was too late. I then went down to Mr. Brice's office and asked Miss M——, Mr. Brice's stenographer, for my notebook, and I took it home and locked it up. Monday, when I went up to see Major Cohen about the $50 he went down to look for Mr. Brice, whom he was unable to find. Later we went back upstairs together and Branch and Paschal explained to him their promise to pay me $50 for allowing The Journal to retain my notebook. However, some argument arose over the fact that I took my notebook out of The Journal's office Saturday night. I told them that they had agreed to give me $50 not to make a copy for The Georgian, and that I had not made the copy for The Georgian, and had, therefore, carried out my part of the compact. They then told me to come back later on and see Mr. Brice about it. I returned after awhile, I believe it was around 1 o'clock, and Mr. Brice paid me the amount in currency and took my receipt.

Lanford Hasn't Paid.

Chief Lanford has not as yet paid me for my services, from the fact that I have not rendered a bill.

Saturday morning, before the publication of the Woodward conference, held at 4 o'clock Wednesday, May 21, as previously mentioned, and the Jones conference, held at 8 o'clock the same night, I went to the editorial depart of The Journal and requested a proof of what they were going to print. Colyar, who had one reading it, declined to allow me to have a proof, and so I left The Journal Building, suspicious.

Saturday afternoon I went down to the office, carrying with me my original notebook and a copy of Friday's and Saturday's Journal. I compared them all the way through and upon seeing the many variations in what was printed and what I had in my notes, I realized that my transcriptions had been tampered with and that I had just cause for the suspicions which were aroused by their refusal to allow me to read the proofs Saturday morning.

Fears Arrest When Tricked.

Having signed the affidavits, at Mr. Febuary's request, in which I swore to what I had heard, and seeing something entirely different published, I became very nervous and uneasy. Saturday night, when I went home, a reporter called up and said he was one of The Journal reporters and wanted to see me a few minutes. I told him to come over. He came in and introduced himself to me as Mr. Starr, of The Journal. My mother and aunt recognized his voice as that of a reporter who had called shortly before I came home, and said he was from The Georgian. They both rushed into the sitting room and told me that he was not with The Journal, but was the same fellow that came a few minutes ago and said he was from The Georgian. He denied that he had said he was from The Journal, although he had told both myself and my grandfather, who went to answer the door bell, that he was from The Journal. Just before he left he informed me that a warrant had been sworn out for Febuary's, Colyar's and my arrest, and upon my directing him as to where the door out could be found, he departed, saying that he had got the information he wanted.

Sunday afternoon, at the office, someone called me up and informed me that I would probably be arrested Monday. I did not recognize the voice, and so am unable to say who it was. They also informed me that I would have to make bond in order to be released. I asked who it was, and they hung up or were cut off.

Effort to Obtain Notes.

Monday morning Colyar requested that I turn my notebook over to The Journal, and said he would give me $5 if I would show him a receipt from The Journal for the notebook. I came near allowing The Journal to have the notebook, but instead gave it to my brother to take home, and instructed him to allow no one to have it.

Developments later showed me the character of some of the people connected with this transaction, and it made me so ashamed of my connection with it that I was afraid I could not face the humiliation that I thought would naturally ensue, and also the fact that they had changed my transcription showed to me very clearly that I was mixed up with a bunch of crooks.

I am prepared to read my notes whenever it becomes necessary. These notes will show exactly what I heard.

The foregoing affidavit is made by me voluntarily, unsolicited, and no money or the promise of any remuneration whatever was offered to me for making it, my sole motive being to give the straight history of my connection with the now "infamous" dictograph affair.

SILVER SERVICE PRESENTED TO GOVERNOR

National Guard of State Gives One Thousand Dollars as Token of Its Love and Esteem.

Governor Joseph M. Brown was tendered a genuine "surprise party" by the National Guard of Georgia last night.

The State military organizations, through a few chosen officers, slipped up on their commander-in-chief at the Executive Mansion, where he was giving a reception to the Georgia Tech graduating class, and presented his excellency with about $1,000 worth of solid silver as a token of their respect and esteeme.

The Governor was expecting some of his officers last night, for they had been especially invited to the reception. He likes to have them present at all his receptions.

When the big gathering was called to order, Chief of Staff Frederic J. Paxon told the Governor how much the military boys of the State love him and appreciate his attitude toward them, and that it was the military's desire to present him a substantial token of its high regard.

After Colonel Paxon had finished his speech, the most gorgeous display of silverware ever shown in the mansion was uncovered in an adjoining room.

Governor Brown was quite overcome. He found it difficult to gather himself sufficiently to respond. Finally, in a very happy speech, he paid high tribute to the militia and its importance to the State.

The magnificent gift was paid for by voluntary subscriptions from members of the National Guard all over the State. The idea of presenting the Governor the silver was conceived in Atlanta a month ago. Subscriptions of from $1 to $20 were sent in by 200 or more members of the State military.

The matter was kept a secret among the military. Outside the Adjutant General's office in Atlanta, the only persons in on the secret were Mrs. Brown and the Governor's private secretary, Colonel Jesse Perry.

Beautiful Birds With Odd Names Compose Queer Window Group

A collection of South Sea Island birds, valued at $1,500, on exhibition at the French Dry Cleaning Company, Joseph May & Son, forms one of the most unique exhibitions of its kind ever shown in Atlanta. The collection comprises about fifteen varieties, including a number of the so-called Paradise birds, which, when weary of life, commit suicide by strangling themselves with the fine, long "stranglers" which extend from the body.

Mr. May's collection includes also such rare species as the Kepeng, Kalona, the Black Bird of Isop, the Pate Boenga, the Nge, valued at $30; the Tempot Tail and the Bolontron. The Black Bird of Isop species is particularly interesting, as the body feathers of this bird are as soft as the finest velvet. The entire collection was made originally for the Parisian Plume Company by the hunters of Mikel Merkes Company.

Wealthy Macon Man Succumbs to Malady

MACON, GA., June 11.—Ed Weishselbaum, one of Macon's wealthiest citizens, died this morning after a long illness from cancer. He spent thousands of dollars and underwent numerous operations in an unsuccessful effort to check the malady.

Mr. Weishselbaum leaves a wife and one child. His estate is estimated to be worth $400,000.

sion as to his own guilt as the actual murderer of Mary Phagan.

Two things, it seems to me, would be sufficient to clear Frank of the crime, in the absence of any proved motive to commit it. The first is the work done by him on his books at the pencil factory on the afternoon of the killing and subsequent to the time which is assigned by common consent for the occurrence of the deed.

How Could He Have Done Work?

That a man could go to the delicate and intricate task of spreading upon account books the record and figures of a week's transactions of a factory employing a large number of hands, and involving numerous financial dealings, and requiring four or more hours of steady work; and that he could do this with his usual accuracy and celerity staggers belief.

The other fact is a piece of testimony by the negro Conley himself. He has made the statement that when he was assisting Frank in the disposal of the dead girl's body he noticed the time clock in the factory and saw that it lacked four minutes of 1 o'clock. At that moment, he says, Miss Corinthia Hall and Mrs. Emma Clark Freeman, two employees, came into the factory and Frank told him to hide in a cupboard in the office.

But Miss Hall and Mrs. Freeman testified that they were at the factory one hour and eleven minutes earlier than that, and that they left the factory at 11:45 and did not return that day. The conversation they had with Mr. Frank is the same that the negro says he heard.

Discrepancy in Time.

The murdered girl reached the city by street car at 12:04. This has been definitely proved. She reached the factory and received her pay envelope at 12:10 or 12:15, so far as is known. Thus the negro adds this to his many other admitted lies—and if the girl was dead at the time he heard Frank talking to Miss Hall and Mrs. Freeman, she was murdered before she left her home.

To one who is sufficiently interested to look over the scene of the crime several things worth noting will be revealed. Coming down from the office in the pencil factory, a young girl, unprotected might well glance with nervous dread at the pile of large boxes under the stairway near the elevator shaft. In daytime the corner under the staircase is in semi-darkness. It is an ideal place for a would-be criminal to screen himself.

If the girl left the factory after receiving her pay and came down the stairs, this dark corner was behind her as she walked down the steps. A woman who testified, but whose name I do not now recall, saw a negro lurking in this corner. Conley has admitted that he sat for some time near the elevator.

Negro Had Opportunity.

He had the opportunity to spring upon the poor girl as a spider would upon a fly. If robbery was his motive, an assault with a stick might have felled her. She could have been thrown down the elevator shaft or through the opening near the elevator, which has a ladder under it leading down to the dirt floor of the basement.

The place on the second floor where Conley says he picked up the body of the girl shows no trace of blood. Every circumstance indicates that she received the blow on her head before she died—and he says she was dead when he saw her there—so if she bled anywhere the strong probability is that the bloodstains would have been found where she had been picked up.

Even the mystifying fact that the staple of the rear door, leading out of the basement to the street, had been pulled from the inside could be easily explained on the theory that the criminal took the precaution to pull that staple so as to be able to run down the ladder and make his exit safely by the back street in the event any outcry was made by his victim.

Much emphasis is placed upon the dramatic manner with which Conley re-enacted the supposed work of carrying the body from the second floor to the basement that fatal day.

Might Not He Swear Falsely?

Does it tax our credulity greatly to believe that a cunning negro, who has been proved to have had unobstructed opportunity to commit the crime, and who admits having secreted the body, is capable of swearing that another man was with him when the crime was committed—a man behind whom he can hide from the law?

Would a drinking, irresponsible, perhaps criminal man of a low order of life be incapable of swearing away the life of any man if by so doing he could save himself from the gallows?

What is called the "humanity of the law" invests every person charged with crime with the presumption of innocence until his guilt has been proved, and proved to the extent of being irreconcilable with every hypothesis of his innocence. Guilt must be established beyond a reasonable doubt.

And the reasonableness of a doubt on the minds of the jury trying a given case might depend largely upon the state of the public mind regarding that case.

Warns Against Haste.

For this reason, if for no other, the people in a community where a crime has been committed should be reluctant to reach a conclusion of the guilt of any one, where only circumstantial evidence is adducible.

It would be a remarkable termination of the Phagan case, which is not now so mysterious as it once seemed, if Frank, the first man suspected by the detectives, should be acquitted, and his accuser, the negro Conley, should be brought to trial and convicted.

But stranger things have happened. And if the evidence against Conley is as strong as it now seems assured it will be, will not the prosecution be greatly handicapped in the necessity of prosecuting Conley by reason of having put forth such strenuous and hopeful efforts to convict Leo Frank?

How Rewards Would Be Shared.

Rich rewards will recompense the discovery of evidence to convict the slayer in this case. If Frank should be found guilty, the division of the large sums offered for evidence to convict will go to certain secret service men who first called attention to the opportunity of Frank to commit the crime, and who have directed their energies in the investigation of it on the theory of his guilt.

If Conley should be proved guilty, one of the foremen of the factory who saw the negro washing a shirt under suspicious circumstances, and who directed his arrest, will likely get the coin. But with the public it is not a question of rewards to be distributed; but it is the vital, the supreme question, who is the real murderer?

The law, if rightly followed, is a noble instrument of protection to society, including the ignorant, the weak, and those of little understanding. It points the finger of suspicion at no man, but demands evidence before guilt can be determined—either the clear and unmistakable proof of eyewitnesses, or an array of circumstances which excludes every reasonable hypothesis of innocence.

Lauds Frank's Character.

In determining motive to commit crime, we have reason to regard the character and reputation of the individual. In the case under consideration, the man who protests his entire innocence and ignorance of the crime, but who now stands indicted as a criminal, has been for six years an exemplary citizen of this community, and the trusted manager of an important manufacturing enterprise.

He has sustained well the confidence reposed in him. A leader in the community life of his race, he has been highly honored for one of his years. The attachment of his friends to him in the weeks of his imprisonment has been rarely significant of an unshaken confidence in his complete innocence.

The high character of a large majority of his friends, who are men incapable of the desire to shield the perpetrator of so heinous a crime, removes the suggestion of a clannish defense of racial bias.

Is not the case against Leo Frank so far presented against him palpably weak? And does not the far greater weight of evidence now point unmistakably to the negro Conley as the sole perpetrator of the crime?

Georgia Peaches in New York; Prices Fair

NEW YORK, June 11.—The first carload of 1913 Georgia peaches has reached New York. They were of the Greensboro variety, and some of the best marks brought $3.50 a carrier. The bulk of the sales were made at $3.25, though some of the fruit sold as low as $2.25. The quality of the offerings was irregular, and the size only fair.

The total Georgia crop for this year is estimated at 1,500 to 1,700 carloads

Adele Richie to Wed for Money

Stage Beauty Declares So Herself

She and Husband to Live on Farm

ADELE RITCHIE.

Pretty Actress and Charles Nelson Bell, New York Importer, Fix Thirteenth as Date.

NEW YORK, June 11.—Jay Williams, who has spent a year or more gardening around the farm in New Greenwich which Adele Richie leases from J. K. Berry, came into Greenwich a bit pale. He sought the Chief of Police and Prosecutor White and told them that he had been scared out of his job. Moreover, he declared, he wanted protection because, according to Williams, there was no telling just what Charles Nelson Bell, the New York importer, was likely to do.

"And who," demanded the police chief and the prosecutor, "is Charles Nelson Bell?"

"Well," reflected Williams, "besides being the man that threatened to kill me if he saw me on Miss Richie's farm again, he is the man who is going to marry her."

Then and there did Williams' danger drop into minor importance. Miss Adele Richie was going to be married! Everybody decided to take the trolley out to the farm and ask about it.

"Yes, It's True," She Admits.

The actress was found in a fetching green morning gown and poring over a new Burbank. She was a bit put out at first, but finally admitted that on the thirteenth hour of Friday, June 13, 1913, she was to become Mrs. Bell, and that she intended buying Apple Jack Farm and there, with Mr. Bell, rusticate. She was all frankness.

"I am marrying for money," said she. She paused to note the effect. "Moreover, I shall not quit the stage altogether. Marian King, my adopted daughter, will be maid of honor; William Allcox, of Newark, will be best man. My parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jacob B. Pultz, of Philadelphia, and my sister, Mrs. Charles Boyd, and Mr. Bell's parents will be present. Who else I shall invite I do not know yet.

"I shall blush appropriately when I tell the Town Clerk that I am thirty-six years old, and I shall cast my eyes down circumspectly while the clergyman is officiating. I shall throw myself tearfully upon the bosoms of my friends like a sweet June bride should and look trustingly into the eyes of my hero. Now, what else would you know?"

Pierce Rescue Recalled.

Miss Richie is quite as pretty—some say a bit prettier—than ever. Besides being an exceptionally clever actress, she is recalled vividly as the heroine of the rescue of her friend, Mrs. "Tom" Pierce from a New England sanitarium. She and Mrs. Pierce never lacked for inspiration, and their names were coupled in several thrilling episodes.

Williams, it was said, was dismissed for insubordination, and just what Bell said to him was not learned.

3-TIER SKIRT IS LATEST MODE FROM PARIS

Walking in Them Difficult, Sitting Impossible—Big Hats Coming In.

PARIS, June 11.—The latest fashions, as exemplified in the gorgeous array of costly gowns in the inclosure at Chantilly on the occasion of the French Oaks appear to be mostly in favor of the tall women. The long folds from the waist and even from the shoulders downward, so popular early in the season, are now giving place to horizontal draperies, or festoons, which, unless the wearer is very slim and tall, have the disadvantage of imparting a stumpy appearance.

The same fault may be found with the great novelty of the day, namely, the three-story skirt, which is in three distinct sections, each separated by a pleated flounce projecting stiffly from four to six or eight inches, the narrowest being inverted cones. The narrowness of the hem makes walking very difficult, and sitting an impossibility, as it crumples up the flounces.

Tulle Gowns Grow in Favor.

It is now certain that tulle will be the most fashionable material for summer gowns. An infinite variety was shown both in coloring and thickness. Close-mesh open net is used in any case. The tulle generally has a rather dark background with a small Pompadour pattern of tiny bunches of flowers in natural colors. The softness of the material lends itself to charming draperies and mingles well with lace.

The folds of the one most admired to-day were composed of soft tulle and exquisite hand-made Bohemian lace of the most delicate pattern. The bodice consisted of Nattier blue net over white chiffon, lace being used for the bolero. The short sleeves had frillings of malines, the same lace appearing on the front of the bodice as well as around the neck.

The ruffled skirt had an elegant but simple draping of Nattier blue close-mesh tulle, over which fell a second drapery of Bohemian lace, forming a short tunic. The lace continued around to the back of the skirt, where it appeared from under the draperies, giving the effect of a deep flounce.

Big Hats Sure Coming In.

Among the tailor-mades preference was given to rough tweeds, while the old tight-fitting costumes were utterly discarded in favor of loose Norfolk coats.

The vogue of tiny hats, according to indications, is on the wane. The brim of the average hat is considerably larger than has been seen before this year. The smartest women expressed the view that the large hat may be expected to return to favor.

A welcome diversion in footgear was the decided inclination of many of the smartest show girls to adopt heeless shoes. These are especially worn by those affecting the 1913 fashionable stoop.

BUSINESS FINE; BANKERS SEE BIG YEAR FOR SOUTH

Money Plentiful for Legitimate Projects---Cotton to Bring Prosperity Flood, They Declare.

Business in Atlanta and the South is good, according to Atlanta business men. In some cases it is above last year's level.

There is some stringency of money, but well-established business houses, carrying on conservative operations, are getting their usual accommodations from the banks. The country banks in Atlanta territory have been supplied to the limits of their needs by their city agents.

Woes of Wall Street, while very real to New York, seem rather shadowy viewed from this distance. Wall Street is the bluest spot on the map, and Atlanta one of the brightest.

The cotton crop promises well, and it will be made cheaper than any previous Georgia crop. A good crop means remarkable prosperity this fall.

These are the conclusions of Atlanta bankers, who, unwilling that the public should accept Wall Street's view of the situation as final, express their opinion of local conditions.

Colonel Lowry Optimistic.

"Conditions in the South are all right. Business is good, and the demand for money is no greater than it usually is at this season of the year. From, say October, I look for great prosperity," says Colonel Robert J. Lowry, president of the Lowry National Bank.

"The information which reaches us is that the corp is in excellent shape. I talked with one well-informed man yesterday from a section in Georgia which grows a great deal of cotton, and he says he never saw a better crop, since the late rains.

"There is some nervousness, of course, with the tariff and the money reform questions unsettled. I am, as you know, a protectionist. I suppose, though, there are some things which need regulating. Some modification no doubt is desirable. The manufacturers are prepared to meet reductions to some extent.

"I believe it is more important to have the matter cleared up than it is to argue over the exact amount of the changes. It is the unrest, the uncertainty, which causes the nervousness. When the thing is determined one way or another, trade can proceed. Just now textile mills, for instance, can not make trades, because they do not know just what the future basis will be.

Urges Moderate Revision.

"Things are going to turn out all right. As I said, although I am and always have been a protectionist, I believe we could stand a moderate revision downward of the tariff. I believe in the income tax, too. I would make no exceptions, though.

To my mind, the man who makes $100 ought to be willing to give his dollar to the Government, and the man who makes $100,000 ought to be willing to give his $1,000 for the benefits of the Government which he enjoys.

"I have known President Wilson since he was a young lawyer in Atlanta. He is a splendid American. I want to see him upheld.

"Those fellows in New York are a little too blue, I think. We of the South have no cause to fret. No man who is doing a conservative business is going ot be hurt in the least."

Frank Hawkins, president of the Third National Bank, thinks the present conditions are good for the future welfare of the South.

Sees Too Much Trading.

"We have been trading too much. In my opinion," says Mr. Hawkins, "Some little tightness of money is not a bad thing under such conditions. It makes for conservatism and economy.

"One good effect already is seen. This will be the cheapest produced cotton crop Georgia has grown in many a year. Nothing could be more healthy than this economy by the country bank and by the farmer.

"By the way, the crop looks good. It is perfectly clean and, while not large, is healthy and properly cultivated.

"Underlying conditions in the South are sound. Business holds up well. The New Yorkers who are emitting gloom are extremists. No man, no matter how cheerful he is, can remain long in the atmosphere of Wall Street, with stocks where they are now, and keep free from the blue tinge. But this is not a community interested in stocks and bonds. Let the New York man come here for ten days and he will begin to look more cheerful at once.

Looks for Good Times.

"We need a good crop. It looks as if we are about to get it. When it is in I look for excellent times."

Captain James W. English, president of the Fourth National Bank, is most optimistic.

"We have not refused a legitimate demand for money this year. We have not turned a customer down. We have taken care of the country banks up to the limit of their demands," he says.

"Manufacturers, jobbers and retailers in Atlanta who are our customers are doing a good business, as we can tell from their accounts. We hear no complaint from them.

"There is considerable building going on in the city, one of the best indications of business conditions.

"The volume of loans varies very little from last year's figures. There has been no unusual demand for money.

"This is not a time for undertaking great expansion. We have found that business men also take this view of the matter. We have not been called upon to check overambitious tendencies save in one or two cases.

"Country banks have not borrowed heavily. It has been their policy to enforce moderate expenditures among their customers. This will be reflected in great prosperity when the present excellent crop prospect is fulfilled.

Hysteria in New York.

"If a man would set off a cannon cracker in a New York bank nowadays, the officers would seize their hats and jump over the tops of their desks. That is hysteria.

"But no ripple of unrest has reached us. Wait until September, when the well-worked, thoroughly-cultivated crop begins to move. Then you will see things blossom forth."

"Business is moving along very well," says Charles E. Currier, president of the Atlanta National Bank. "Retail and wholesale merchants tell us in many instances that their sales are ahead of last year. Stable business does not move by fits and starts from season to season. The volume of trade this season is satisfactory.

Commencement Is Climax of Tech Celebration

Unique Pageant Ends Day of Fun and Frolic

Founders' Day Observance Draws Hundreds of Alumni to Hear Addresses of Notables.

With commencement exercises in the Grand at 10:30 o'clock, Tech's celebration of its quarter centenary reached its climax Wednesday.

Graduates, undergraduates and alumni, together with the faculty and founders, joined together Tuesday in making the celebration an occasion for great festivity. Actual closing exercises were held Tuesday. Yesterday was the day for fun and frolic.

Headed by a big brass band, seniors and undergraduates brought Monday's festivitels to a climax by giving a burlesque pageant over the principal streets of Atlanta between 4 and 6 o'clock in the afternoon. Nearly 500 students, dressed in gaudy and fanciful garb, started from the campus on North Avenue down Peachtree, Whitehall and Mitchell Streets to the Terminal Station and back again. The celebration was entirely unique and different from anything of previous years. Traffic and business was temporarily halted as the pageant progressed from one part of the city to another.

Following the brass band, composed of students in varicolored clothes, came the senior class, the only sober looking segment of the whole pageant. Following closely was Diogenes, clad in ruddy complexion and a barrel.

Unique Figures Presented.

Bling policemen, cannibals, pill doctors, "ham-fat" actors, ballet girls smoking cigarettes and suffragettes carrying signs reading "No votes—no babies," all had their places in the pageant. There were rubes, ministers, prizefighters with exaggerated muscles, politicians and barbarians. The whole Dam family, with the Dam Parson, Mamma Dam, Papa Dam, the Dam kid and the Dam dog, was in the line of march, preceded by Zulus, Mexicans, Japanese, two-faced creatures and three-headed hydras.

The white slave question of to-day was portrayed in tableau fashion by Uncle Sam, the negro pugilist, and half a dozen "slaves." Clowns, negroes and prohibitionists spent their time running about the streets. Fifteen convicts, wearing stripes and marching to the lockstep, brought up the rear.

On the return march to the campus the burlesquers dropped down Alabama Street to The Georgian office, gave a serenade, held up street car traffic and created a confusion generally. Several of the most fanciful buffoons posed for photographs.

Before the pageant started news leaked out that it was coming, with the result that hundreds of Tech admirers, particularly women, were waiting downtown. Girls in automobiles met the march near North Avenue, followed a few blocks, then ran ahead to Five Points, where they reviewed the procession.

Founders' Day Observed.

The Founders' Day celebration began with a meeting of the alumni at the Tech Y. M. C. A. auditorium at 9 o'clock in the morning, where the principal events were the election of officers and a symposium of addresses. Dr. W. M. Fambrough, '03, was chosen president of the alumni; Robert Gregg, '05, vice president; B. F. Market, '03, secretary and treasurer. J. W. Heisman, athletic coach, roused the alumni to a high pitch of enthusiasm by predicting future success for all of Tech's teams. A. R. Colcord, Robert Gregg, President Fambrough and others made brief addresses. Through resolution, the alumni authorized the presentation of loving cups to Dr. I. C. Hopkins, first president of the school, and Nat Harris, president of the board of directors. An alumni committee was appointed, consisting of Robert L. Maddox, '08; L. W. Roberts, '08, and C. L. Emerson, '08. Robert Gregg and L. W. Roberts were appointed alumni members of the athletic advisory board.

Founders' Day exercises were held at 10:30 o'clock in the Y. M. C. A. Auditorium on the campus. The first speaker was Dr. I. S. Hopkins, the first president of the Georgia School of Technology. Dr. Hopkins reviewed the history of Tech, from the little shop at Emory down through the following 25 years.

College Founder Speaker.

Judge E. E. Harris, president of the board of trustees, who introduced the legislative measure founding the college, spoke on the financial support given the institution and the remarkable success attained by its graduates. S. M. Inman recalled events connected with the founding of the school, and Dean W. H. Emerson eulogized the first president, Dr. Hopkins.

Dr. J. S. Coon, a member of the faculty for 25 years, discussed faculty problems. Hal Nowell, '93, discussed the value of technically trained men to the South. Wilmer L. Moore, president of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce; Professor Edward Holmes and the Rev. E. Lyman Hood also made brief addresses.

Class day exercises were held in the afternoon.

WIRE IS FLASHED FROM SEA BOTTOM

Submarine, Submerged for Record, in Message to World Tells of Success of Trial.

AT THE BOTTOM OF THE SEA, LONG BEACH, CAL., June 11.—The cage submarine at the bottom of the Pacific Ocean, Long Beach, Cal., sends greetings to the world as being the only submarine boat that can run its engines under water:

"We have been submerged since 5 a. m. Tuesday, June 10, and will stay down until 5 p. m. Wednesday, June 11, 1913, thus breaking by twelve hours the record of the submarine Octopus, which remained submerged 24 hours in 1907.

"The running of our gasoline engines keeps our air so pure we could stay down a week if desired. Our submarine will break all records for speed and maneuvering, because our propellers are at the prow instead of at the stern of the boat.

"The crew of six men have quarters in the engine room, and there is not a trace of gasoline fumes in the boat. We are sending the message by a telegraph wire connected to our boat and that by means of a cable in the ocean.

DANGER IN MEAT EATING

Medical Reports Show That People Who Eat Much Meat Are Susceptible to Typhoid Fever.

The death rate of Typhoid has been 10 per cent for many years. Even if patient recovers, there is danger. Weakened constitution, languidness, loss of energy and other after effects.

In a majority of cases typhoid fever is directly traceable to an inactive liver which has refused fo clear away the masses of meat particles left undigested in the alimentary canal. This mass putrefies and sends out death-dealing poisons, to result in typhoid fever.

JACOBS' LIVER SALT is the greatest known liver stimulant. Its action is gentle, yet effective. It draws water to the alimentary tract, flushes the stomach and bowels, washes away the undigested meat particles and removes the danger of fermentation. The blood is purified through the renewed activity of the liver.

JACOBS' LIVER SALT does not cause nausea and vomiting, and there are no dangerous after-effects as with calomel. Don't take an inferior substitute; many imitate the name but can not produce the same natural, flushing action of the genuine JACOBS' LIVER SALT. At all druggists, 25c. If your druggist cannot supply you we will mail full size jar upon receipt of price, postage free. Made and guaranteed by Jacobs' Pharmacy Co., Atlanta.—(Advt.)

HARRISON TELLS SOCIAL NEEDS OF ATLANTA

Expert in Charge of Social Survey Says Scientific Methods Are Neceessary.

"What Atlanta needs is a scientific direction of all its social activities."

This was the statement made by Shelby M. Harrison Wednesday, who is here with Franz Schneider, Jr., and Zenas L. Potter, at the request of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce to make an investigation of the city's social and commercial needs. All are experts from the department of surveys and exhibits of the Russell Sage Foundation.

"I am basing my observation, not on what I have seen of Atlanta, but on what I have seen in practically every city in which I have been in the United States," added Mr. Harrison.

"In the past cities have grown in a haphazard, aimless manner. They have leaped into importance through their natural advantages, but their growth in many instances has not been symmetrical. They have ignored and neglected certain features they are coming to-day to realize are absolutely essential to their well-being and continued progress.

Playgrounds Overlooked.

"Sometimes it has been playgrounds and other provisions for the happiness and health of the children that have been overlooked in the breathless race for wealth. Or it may be that the sanitation has not been cared for during the years of the cities' mushroom growth.

"Whatever the situation is, it is the purpose of these social surveys to discover the causes that have retarded a city's progress, that have lowered its health conditions, that have deprived it of the commerce that is its due, and to pick out any other deficiencies that have crept into the administration of what may be termed its social activities.

"Of Atlanta we know very little as yet. Tuesday we spent in getting our geographical locations. We interviewed a few persons, but mostly we busied ourselves with getting a general idea of the 'lay' of the city. We were struck with the evident spirit of progress and prosperity.

Work Is Preliminary Diagnosis.

"Atlanta has fine business buildings. In this respect she compares favorably with any city of her size in the country. And almost wherever I went Tuesday in the business section I could hear the sounds of the builders putting up new structures.

"Our task in Atlanta can hardly be dignified by the term of 'social survey.' It is rather a preliminary diagnosis. A thorough social survey would occupy a force of half a dozen men for five or six months in Atlanta, I should judge.

"We will be here not much longer than ten days. After one or two days we may give most of our attention to certain phases of the city's methods which appear to us to require the most radical changes.

"At the close of our work we will return to New York and after thoroughly reviewing the results of our investigation we will frame recommendations and submit them to the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce. The Chamber of Commerce then will decide whether or not it wishes to continue the work and accept the recommendations.

Survey Is an Important Step.

"To my mind the chamber has taken a very important step in the ordering of this preliminary investigation. The majority of the cities of the country are being awakened to the fact that they can not outstrip their sister cities by the mere force of their natural advantages or by the unmethodical and sometimes unwarranted 'boosting.' They must have a safe city, a healthful city, a clean city morally and physically. They must have playgrounds for the children and a hundred other things that were hardly thought of a score of years ago.

"It is the purpose of these surveys, where a program is included, to map out scientific methods for the administration of the varied departments of city life and to furnish a scientific check on the results of every activity. It is the purpose to look out for the individual well-being of the inhabitant as well as the commercial prosperity of the city."

'MEND PEACHTREE, PAVE NEXT YEAR'

Shelby Smith Says Improvements From Fifteenth to Buckhead Will Start in Thirty Days.

If plans, to be submitted in a resolution to the public work committee of the County Commission by Chairman Shelby Smith Wednesday, are adopted the work of improving Peachtree Street from Fifteenth Street to Buckhead will be begun within 30 days.

While admitting that the street needs a new pavement, Chairman Smith's plans provide merely for the repairing of the thoroughfare, with the proviso that the new pavement be laid next year.

A number of Peachtree residents have petitioned for a new pavement this year, but because of numerous other improvements planned before the Peachtree proposition was broached this was found to be impossible.

It is understood that property owners and residents will be satisfied with a temporary improvement, if they are assured the street will be repaved next year.

HOME RULE AGAIN PASSES COMMONS

Second Approval of Bill Brings Hints of Rebellion—Beresford Says He Would Aid Irish.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, June 11.—After the House of Commons had passed second reading of the Irish home rule bill Tuesday Lord Charles Beresford, first lord of the admiralty, and other leaders in Parliament gave out statements they consider called for by the fiery debate against the bill by the opposition.

"If the Government sends troops to Ireland I shall offer my services, poor as they may be, to my fellow countrymen," Lord Beresford said.

The vote on the bill was 368 to 270. At its announcement the Liberals and Nationalists cheered. Sir Edward Carson, Irish Unionist leader, shouted: "I will continue to support the Ulster men. You may seize their arms or send troops, but you will not settle the Irish question." He said the Unionist members would refuse to take part in further discussion.

Hints at war between the Irish and English were bandied about freely then, and Sir John Redmond said the Ulster leader took grave responsibility, and really did not represent Ulster opinion.

An amendment by Mr. Balfour for the rejection of the bill was defeated. The bill now enters the suggestive stage before its inevitable rejection by the lords.

GRADUATED AUTO TAX IS PLAN OF LAWMAKERS

Legislature Also May Instruct Collectors to Stop Evasion of Ad Valorem Tariff.

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

In seeking to reform the tax laws of Georgia, it is likely that the automobile will be taken into most serious consideration by the new Legislature.

There are now more than 20,000 machines in the State, averaging in value about $1,200 each. These machines pay a flat license tax to the State of $2 a machine, and that is about all the State gets out of them. Not more than 10 per cent of the automobiles licensed are returned for taxation upon an ad valorem basis.

Secretary of State Phil Cook says nine machine owners in every ten believe the flat license tax of $2 per machine is all the State requires of them, and that many owners, not now paying taxes according to the value of their machines, are not so much intentional tax-dodgers as they are ignorant of the fact that an automobile is as much property subject to general taxation as anything else.

It is likely that the license tax will be graded according to the value of the machine registered hereafter. It is figured that it is not quite fair to charge an owner of a $500 runabout the same license tax that is charged against the owner of a $10,000 limousine. Moreover, tax collectors doubtless will be instructed by legislative direction strictly to require the return of all automobiles for taxation, according to their value.

If these two reforms are inaugurated they unquestionably will bring a fine revenue into the State Treasury.

It seems to be realized generally among members of the incoming Legislature that Georgia must increase its revenues in every direction hereafter, in order that the State may meet its absolutely necessary expense bills, and that the only way to do it is through tax reform and not through a higher tax rate.

There is a great deal of enthusiasm manifested among the citizens of Winder over the question of the new county of Barrow, and it is certain this proposition will be one of the livest to come before the new Legislature.

A well-known citizen of that city, talking of its present unfavorable location at the "corners" of three counties—Gwinnette, Jackson and Walton—cited the following circumstances to show how much confusion and annoyance arises from the same.

"A well-known citizen of Winder passed away recently and left property in several sections of the city. His widow had to take out administration papers in three separate counties in order to handle his estate legally and properly," said he.

"Winder gets its school fund from three counties, with a different pro rata in every direction. One county paye $2.75 a pupil per annum, while another pays only $2.40. The children of both attend the public schools of Winder, with the same advantages—but it isn't fair.

"Persons with things to sell in Winder requiring a State license generally don't try to sell them. They are required to obtain a license in all three counties centering in the town.

"Wider is some 20 miles from the county seat of every one of the three counties meeting there. That's a big nuisance, and rankly unjust to Winder and the surrounding territory.

"If any new county proposition is a good one, the Bartow proposition is."

The statement that United States Senator James Hamilton Lewis may shave off his scintillant whiskers has been accepted with great reserve by his Georgia friends.

When the junior Senator from Illinois lived in Georgia his whiskers were his pride. He looked upon them much after the fashion of a good Mohammedan, whose most sacred oath is taken "by the beard of the prophet."

"Jim Ham" may shave those roseate whiskers from off his handsome countenance, of course, but Georgians never will believe it until they see it an accomplished fact.

Representative Robert Blackburn, of Fulton, is looked on generally as one of the leaders in the next House.

Blackburn is a veteran in the House, although he has been out for several years. He is one of the ablest parliamentarians in the State, and is more than well qualified to take care of himself either in the running debate of the floor or in the committee rooms.

The gentleman from Fulton is rather small of stature, but he is loud in voice and sonorous enough to be pleasing when under full steam ahead in argument.

There will be few men in the next Legislature who know their way around better than "Bob" Blackburn.

A bill to require all railroads operating in Georgia to provide underpasses or overpasses at all grade crossings, when so directed by the Railroad Commission, is now being prepared by a well-known member of the House, and will be introduced soon after the Legislature meets.

It is designed to be fair to the roads, and will require the counties affected, in such instances as the commission may undertake to regulate, to bear a reasonable part of the expense of construction.

This bill likely will have considerable support in the Legislature, as there is a growing sentiment throughout the State that such legislation is needed.

Whether the bill will pass is problematical, but it will be earnestly and aggressively urged, nevertheless.

Senate Votes Probe Of Frisco Merger

WASHINGTON, June 11.—The Senate passed without debate Senator Kenyon's resolution directing the Interstate Commerce Commission to investigate the receivership of the St. Louis and San Francisco Railroad.

ENGLISH CARTOONIST DRESSES AMBASSADOR PAGE IN COURT FRILLS

On sailing to take up his duties as American Ambassador to the Court of St. James Walter H. Page declared that he would never appear in court dress during any of the social affairs at Buckingham Palace. Recent cablegrams from London contained the information that Mr. Page would live up to this declaration. The cartoonist of the London Bystander, however, didn't take the Ambassador at his word and has pictured him as he would look if he did bow to the custom of foreign representatives in appearing at these functions in full court costume.

LITTLE STORIES of the TOWN

Knew Their Standing by Price of Bonnet.

Two young women went into a shop one day last week for hats.

"We would like to look at some cheap hats," one of them said.

"Yes, madame."

Two or three hats priced at $30 were shown to them.

"But we said cheap hats. Have you nothing for less than $30?"

"Certainly, madame," and the saleswoman appeared with a $25 creation.

"But," returned one of the young women, "I don't call a hat cheap unless it is under $8."

When the saleswoman brought out with a condescending smile a hat marked $5.98 she said:

"Say, girls, ain't it awful to be poor?"

Starts Parcel Post but Uses Express.

While the new parcel post has taken away much of the business of the express companies so far as small packages are concerned, the law of compensation that Ralph Waldo Emerson wrote about so delightfully has come to give them a measure of relief. Since the first of the year Uncle Sam has been a steady and well paying customer of the express companies. The mail bags have gone out from the big cities at a rate that must have made a shortage had they waited their turn to come back in the ordinary course of business filled with return mail. The empty mail bags in packages heavy enough to bear charges of from $1 to $2 are returned to the city postoffice every day by express. It would cost too much to return them by mail.

HOW PLAIN GIRLS CAN WIN HUSBANDS

CHICAGO, June 11.—Dr. C. Franklin Leavitt has made public a lesson in winning a husband by suggestion.

"We must visualize our desires before one can expect to realize them," he said. "A girl should picture the sort of woman she wishes to become, and then impress this picture on her subconscious mind so it is ever with her.

"A woman may turn herself into a hag by depressing thoughts. A wise woman creates within herself conditions which attract. The subconscious mind is under direct control of the conscious mind and can be impressed through repeated strong suggestions.

"When a girl who is not attracting men comes to me I ask her to look herself over for her weaknesses. If her cheeks are hollaw I insist on her exercising the muscles of the face.

"The girl should give a handshake as if she had not a friend, and in limp fashion. Thus she will emanate suggestions of love and harmony and not of condemnation an apprehension.

"A woman has two weapons—thought and action. When she is possessed of a 'going mind' she is almost irresistible. A woman with power wins the man she wants.

"The first lesson to all unattractive women should be to picture themselves in a receptive attitude toward men. From childhood they should be taught to meet the opposite sex without fear and bashfulness.

"Thoughts properly directed can change the physical being. From concentration on a subject fifteen minutes a day women have become beautiful. They should suggest to themselves at intervals that they are beautiful.

"Married women should take 'treatments' to retain the affections of their husbands. Going back to the old days of honeymoon attraction she is able to keep her husband interested."

Boom Mrs. Burleson For Next D.A.R. Head

WASHINGTON, June 11.—It is known to-day on good authority that members of the minority party of the D. A. R., which was so overwhelmingly defeated in the election of Mrs. William Cummins Story, of New York, as President-General, are planning to oppose the re-election of Mrs. Story two years hence, by making Mrs. A. S. Burleson, wife of the Postmaster-General, a candidate for President-General.

The campaign to elect Mrs. Burleson has already begun.

DR. STONE GOES ABROAD TO REST

New Moderator of Northern Presbyterian Church Overcome by His Heavy Duties.

CHICAGO, June 11.—Overwork has sent the Rev. John Timothy Stone, Moderator of the Northern Presbyterian General Assembly, to Europe for a long vacation. With Mrs. Stone and his three daughters he will lose himself somewhere on the Cornish coast for most of the summer. Later the Moderator will tour the Continent, returning in October.

The Rev. Mr. Stone was made Moderator in May when the Assembly met at Atlanta, Ga. This added greatly to his duties as pastor of a rapidly growing congregation. His church—the Fourth Presbyterian, on the North Side—has been replaced by a beautiful new building on Lincoln Parkway.

In the three years that Dr. Stone has lived here he has filled every seat in his church, the congregation of which had sadly dwindled. His efforts also have secured funds for the new church from his parishioners, among whom are all the McCormicks, the Willings, the Skinners, the Wentworths, Highs, Bentleys, Pomeroys, Philo Kings and many wealthy families.

Moderator Dr. Stone will go direct to Scotland to meet the Scotch Presbyterians at Glasgow. From there he will go to the Cornish coast.

MAKERS CLEARED OF OLEO CHARGE

Grand Jury Denounces Government Officials for Compromise of Alleged Frauds.

CHICAGO, June 11.—The compromise of the alleged oleomargarine frauds, the last act of the Taft administration, was bitterly denounced in a report of a grand jury written into the records of Judge Landis' Federal Court to-day.

The grand jury exonerated the manufacturers of oleomargarine of the charge of criminal conspiracy to defraud the Government, and placed all the blame on the Internal Revenue and Treasury Departments.

The grand jury reported to Judge Landis that it had found that artificially colored cotton seed had been used in coloring oleomargarine, making it subject to a tax of 10 cents a pound; that the alleged frauds amounted to $2,000,000 instead of $1,200,000, the amount on which the compromise was based, and that the manufacturers were not parties to a scheme to defraud, but that R. E. Cabell, former Commissioner of Internal Revenue, did not attempt to get at the facts in the cases.

Child Eats Core of Baseball and Dies

PHILADELPHIA, June 11.—Six-year-old Annie MacAntee, who lived near Shibe Park, is dead at her home from inflammation of the stomach from eating the rubber core of an American League baseball that had been knocked over the fence.

So many balls have been knocked over the fences recently that the children have grown tired of preserving them as trophies and the child cut it open and chewed the rubber that is placed around the cork-centered sphere.

Diplomas Given to Babies by Church

CINCINNATI, June 11.—Eight babies received diplomas at the Lincoln Park Baptist Church this morning.

When a child is born in the home of one of the congregation the pastor is notified. Then the name of the child is enrolled on the baby charter.

On the first anniversary of its birth the child receives a handsome birthday card, and when the little one has attained three years of age it receives a diploma.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

SHE IS RIGHT.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am keeping company with a young lady who is 20 years of age and I am 27, and I have known this girl for the past five years. Lately I notice she keeps company with one of my friends. Do you think that I should give her up? She told me that she loves me, but she made an appointment with me and went out with my friend.

WALLACE.

It seems to me that if you have been devoted to her so long and have not asked her to marry you she does right to accept invitations from others.

Make her a proposal of marriage and if she accepts this will give you the right of objection.

THAT DEPENDS.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

Is it proper for a girl to begin the correspondence with a man?

If a girl gets an invitation to a dance or party, is it proper for her to ask a man to go with her if it is a pay affair? E. M. F.

The answer to your first question can not be decisive for the reason that you tell so little.

It is never proper for a girl to write to a man she does not know, and it is for her best good that she write rarely to those she knows.

To your second question: Most decidedly no.

GOOD BEHAVIOR HELPS.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I have been calling on a young lady for some time and find that her father does not seem to fancy me. Kindly advise me what I should do to win his fancy. T. C. A. B.

You ask for something difficult to give. Often a father's objections originate in the very natural desire to keep a daughter at home. Perhaps she is too young to receive attentions. Or—and the remedy for this lies in your own hands—perhaps you are not the character a man would welcome in a son-in-law.

HE LIKES YOU.

DEAR MIS FAIRFAX:

I am 17 and care very much for a young man of 20, with whom I work. When he sees me talking to other boys he gets very jealous, but still when he meets me he never says more than "Hello." e Jokes with the other girls, but he never gets jealous of them. Now, do you think he cares for me and is too bashful to say so, or that he doesn't care for me, and therefore thinks the others should not? ROSE.

He likes you very much. That is plainly evident.

But you are too young, my dear, to bother your little head about love. Try to be happy and heart-free a few years longer. I am sure you will never regret it.

"ALL'S FAIR IN LOVE."

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

Is it proper for a young man who has been calling on a young lady for six months and confessed his love for her, and she never makes any encouraging remarks of her love for him, to stop calling without any explanation? I asked for her love, but all I got was "I'll tell you some other time" for my answer.

LONESOME.

It is the only thing you can do if you are a man of any spirit, and unless you are a man of spirit she will never accept it.

Stay away a month. I am sure she will send for you, and when you return demand a decisive answer.

Beauty Secrets of Beautiful Women

Sophye Barnard Talks on Beautiful Arms and Shoulders

By LILLIAN LAUFERTY.

ONCE upon a time a clever woman said: "Stays make waists."

Just now waists are out of fashion; but another clever woman has told me how to produce the highest type of modern figure—all lissome, swaying curves, shading gracefully into a free, beautiful whole. And in her creed there are neither "stays" nor "waist."

As a first step toward a good figure learn to stand," said Sophye Barnard, a recent recruit from comic opera to vaudeville, under the B. F. Keith management. "And as a regular promenade in the direction of a figure good enough to go on its own merits without help from corsets and artificial first aids to correct standing and breathing?" I asked.

"A girl works pretty hard to get a beautiful voice, or just to cultivate a fairly pleasing one—but it pays—even in unexpected ways, for she suddenly finds a good figure thrown in as a premium, and a good figure is a rather attractive thing to possess, isn't it?" added Miss Barnard, ingenuously.

Rarely does one see a more beautiful figure than Miss Barnard's, which is made of absolutely the most graceful possible combinations of slender curves. I think her theories may be taken as the last word on how to make perfect poise bring out every good point in your own natural figure.

Lightly Poised.

The actress learns to be lightly poised on her feet," said Miss Barnard. "She learns to stand so that she may spring instantly into action; she never slouches or lounges or falls into ungraceful lines of abandon into which her figure, with a little unfortunate practice, might easily come to arrange itself naturally. She is poised, tense, alert. That keys her up to look and feel vividly alive, and it trains her figure into the right lines. It is just as important to keep your figure from sagging as to keep your mouth dropping at the corners.

"In singing, you learn to hold the muscles of the abdomen tense, to keep the chest high and filled with an ever-changing supply of clean air as you ventilate your lungs at each deep breath."

"Won't you give me a little exhibition in caricature of its flowing curves. Then she advanced her right foot and stood tensely alert, with the weight of her body swung forward onto the ball of that foot. She took a deep breath, beginning at the firmly held abdominal walls, and pulling the air up into full white chest. Throat, shoulders and chest pulsed into firm contours, and shoulders and throat like Sophye Barnard's became in themselves beauties worth emulating.

"I think your first beauty secret is too good to stay a secret long" said I. "Now won't you tell me what rules of hygiene and diet you bring to be its lieutenants?"

"My rules are all very simple—anyone can put them into practice," said the charming singer. "Simple foods, with no ices or sodas or pastries, are my idea of the correct diet—although I can eat what I like without falling prey to indigestion; but I take no advantage of that ability, and I suppose the reason I can combine a welsh rarebit and broiled live lobster and strawberry ice cream is because I don't!

"I lead a very regular life too—though the popular fancy does not picture an actress doing that. I always am in bed by 12; scarcely ever visit cafes, but have my after-theater parties at home, where I am sure of simple, wholesome food, of pure air to breathe, and of getting to bed in due season. People who dine in cafes on rich, heavy foods; and breathe the heavy, artificial air of the restaurant the while they do it are sure to get fat—or indigestion—or both."

"Your lay great stress on simple food and correct poise. The inner woman seems well taken care of in your rules of the game," said I. Now will you tell all of us how to have smooth, satiny hair and skin?"

"Do you consider me qualified to give advice on those subjects?" asked Miss Barnard in the pleased tone of a good child who has been praised.

I did, and I do.

The Hair.

"You wash your hair more times than the old-fashioned theories taught you to—you brush it all the time, whenever you get a chance, and you don't curl it any of the time, and then when it is brushed and washed into a clean fresh mass you dress it as smoothly and gracefully as possible, and keep it in its proper place as background for your face.

"And as for skin, when you have observed the rules of keeping your internal system sweet and clean, you do the same by externals. Keep the skin clean and unclogged and free to do some correct breathing of its own, and then make it soft and flexible by the constant use of good cold cream."

Perhaps all this sounds like constant, unceasing hard work. If you feel discouraged before ever you begin—look earnestly at Miss Barnard's beautiful arms and shoulders, at the perfect symmetry of her graceful figure. To approach "a consummation so devoutly to be desired" who will not sacrifice a bit of old and some lazy habits?

The Head Waitress

By HANK.

"I'M sure gettin' to be some popular with all the advertising you're giving me," said the Head Waitress to the Steady Customer in the Cafe d'Enfant.

"Yes," he replied. "a newspaper man, Louise, is a good friend to have. I am glad you appreciate that fact."

"I don't know whether I do or not," replied the Head Waitress. "I'd like to know what your object is. There ain't nobody now-a-days that does anything without an object. Every kindly word has its sting in these parlor times."

What She Calls Them.

"Parlous times," corrected the Steady Customer.

"If you knew what I meant you didn't have to correct me," snapped the Head Waitress. "You newspaper guys are always showing off. And let me tell you something. Marie, the cashier, is gettin' more at you. You had her in the paper saying 'bloke' the other day. She don't call no guy a bloke. She comes from Indiana, where they don't use them kind of expressions."

"What does she call them?" asked the Steady Customer.

"Fellers," said the Head Waitress, "and that's proper, too. You wouldn't say, 'I'm going out with my best bloke, to-night,' would you. No, you'd say 'my best feller.'"

"I am duly crushed and chastised," replied the Steady Customer. "Anything else?"

"Yes, me and Marie would like to know where you and your dark friend go every day after lunch," said the Head Waitress. "You don't go right back to your office, because me and her seen you walk the other way every day."

"Why, we go to a moving picture show," explained the Steady Customer. "We find that gazing at stirring Western scenes or reckless deeds of daring takes our minds off the violent efforts of our stomachs that are protesting against the sinkers that you hand us in here."

"Hm-m," sniffed the Head Waitress. "I can't see how you can go to such places."

The Truth.

"Well, to be truthful," said the Steady Customer, "I like to go there because it's all dark and I can close my eyes and think of your sweet faces."

"Some time you'll close your eyes in the dark," said the Head Waitress, "and when you wake up you won't be able to see your watch any more, you poor simp."

House Cleaning

By MAY IRWIN.

THE first step in the campaign against the gathered dust and grime is to get the men out of the house, by some pretext. Not that it isn't possible to clean house without the men of the house knowing it. I have done it. But a woman isn't looking her best when she cleans house, and the remnant of vanity left in us in these reconstructive days rebels against the men seeing us with smudges on cheek and nose, and our hands are not pretty things during the orgies with dust and discord.

To make the house habitable during housecleaning be systematic. Take one part at a time. There is absolutely no reason for having the whole house or flat looking as though a cyclone had visited it. Cleaning should be progressive. Take two rooms at a time.

A golden rule of housecleaning is: "Don't try to do it all in a day." If you overwork the first day you will be worn out and unfit for the task of the second day, and the work becomes slavery. Housecleaning need not be drudgery unless you make it so.

Take two front rooms, say, as a beginning. Carry all the room belongings in room A into room B. Close the door opening into room B so that room A shall take care of its own dust. Thoroughly sweep the floor, giving careful attention to neglected corners. With a long-handled wall brush dust the wall and ceiling. For plain woodwork and hard floors use a large wooden bucket of warm water in which two pounds of oxalic acid have been dissolved. Wipe off the floors and woodwork with this, using an orange-wood stick inside of the cloth for boring out difficult chinks and corners of dust. While room A is drying from its cleansing, go to room B. Throw open all the windows and attack the furniture of room A. When room A is dry, move that furniture back into place and carry the furniture of room B into room A.

Carry the plan of cleaning two by two, twin cleansing, through the house, and you will be pleased with the result.

To Wash Curtains.

To clean your blankets, don't begin by soaking them. Wash them in warm water and with soap. Do not rub, but push them into and draw them out of the water. Pound them with a heavy and clean potato masher, a new one, of an age not to have acquired "slivers." Rinse them in warm, clean water. If they are not yet clean, put them through a second water—a third, fourth, even a fifth or sixth—until clean. Keep all the waters through which the blankets are put at the same temperature. Don't wring blankets. Put them on the line in a hot sun.

To wash lace curtains, soak them in cold water for two days. Then put them into hot water, into which enough soap has been shaved, an amount according to their condition. Do not rub them. Dip them up and down vigorously in the suds. Change the water three or more times. Rinse in warm water. Then rinse in cold water with a tiny bit of indigo. Then put them, one at a time, gently through a wringer and dry them on a curtain frame.

And So It Goes.

"What a ducky little place!" said the happy bride to be, as her sweetheart showed her over her prospective home. But I am afraid, Harold, everything is so small. Now, look at this litle pigeonhole. Surely you don't call it a shoe cupboard, dear?"

"Darling," sweetly answered the young man, "that little pigeonhole, as you call it, will hold a hundred pairs of shoes of the size you wear."

The pucker in her pretty brows quickly disappeared.

"Perhaps you're right, Harold," she remarked. And all was well.

Secrets of Good Looks

By MME. LINA CAVALIERI.

The Distinguished Grand Opera Prima Donna and World Famous Beauty.

DO not take offense. Simply consider my suggestion and investigate.

No face is clean unless it is as absolutely free from dust as a newly washed window. No face is clean unless its pores are as free from obstruction as a freshly cleaned sieve from grit.

Have you freckles or liver spots? Your face is not clean. Indeed, the clean face is the exception instead of the rule. Yet, if there were more clean faces there would be more good complexions. The mottled skin is the index of a defective sewerage system.

Cleanse your face with oils and creams. But also use water. Many experiments have taught me that washing the face is a process of several stages. To remove the roughest dirt, use oils or creams. Spread these liberally on the face with the fingers or a piece of absorbent cotton. Be careful to reach every crevice or corner of the face with the oil or cream. Leave the oil or cream on the skin for at least five minutes. If the skin has been exposed to much dust or wind, leave these cleansers on for a quarter of an hour to search out every particle of dust and soften it. Then, with more cotton or with an old linen or silk handkerchief, gently wipe it off. You will be surprised at the grimy deposit on the cloth.

When this has been done, if you are not going out of doors, bathe the face gently in a bowlful of warm water softened with a pinch of borax or a half dozen drops of benzoin. Spread almond meal on the palms. Dip them into the water, and press them upon the face, rubbing the muscles upward. Do this until you have passed the almond meal covered palms all over the face. Then rinse the face with handfuls of cool water.

Lastly, if the facial muscles are loose and sagging, iron the face with ice, pressing the muscles firmly upward. After this careful face washing you will be surprised to see how white your face looks, and it will mortify you to realize how far from clean your visage had been before.

Pure cocoanut oil is one of the best skin cleansers and skin foods. Olive oil, into which one drop of benzoin to an ounce of the oil as a whitener has been dropped, is to be recommended.

A Gentle Hint.

A little girl made a call at the house of a neighbor. She saw some apple parings on a plate, and said: "I smell apples."

"Yes," the lady replied, "I guess you smell those apple parings on the table."

"No, no," said the little miss, smacking her lips, "'taint them I smell. I smell whole apples."

Little Bobbie's Pa

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

BOBBIE, sed Ma to me yesterday afternoon, you have prubly noticed that yure father has been a littel cross & out of sorts laitly. I doant know if he reelizes how littel sunshine he radi-ates these days, but he is deeveloping into a moody old dort, & I doant want yure father, my deer husband, to git cross grained.

He has been a littel grouchy laitly, I sed to Ma, but I guess it is sumthing like sum bizness worry that he has on his mind. I know that he will git oaver that & cum back sum of these days into his old form.

Well, I hoap so, sed Ma, but in the meentime I am going to try a littel skeem on him that I was reeding about in the ladies' Hoam Comfort. A vary brite woman wich rites for the Comfort sed that wen she noticed her husband gitting moody & abstracted she always acted as if the wurld was cumming to a end. She says in her artikel that she is naturally sunny & sweet tempered, but that wen her husband gits blue she gits twice as blue & says sad peeces of poetry & talks about the Grave & the inevitabel end of man. Then her husband wud always git cheerful so that thare cud be a littel sunshine in the fambly. You watch me tonite wen your father cums hoam, Bobbie, sed Ma. If you doant see him start gitting cheerful rite away this woman has the wrong idee.

Pa wasent vary cheerful wen he got hoam, that is one sure thing. Sumthing must have gone wrong at the offis or sumware, beekaus his face was as long as a sack of flour & wen he got in the house & was hanging up his rain coat he sighed hard, like one of them sirens on a ottmbeel.

Pa Recites.

Then Pa sighed aggenn & jest wen he was going to beegin to talk Ma sighed, too. She sighed harder than Pa & reesited:

The day is coald & dark & dreery,
It rains & the wind is nevver weery.
The vine still clings to the moldering wall
& at every gust the ded leeves fall.
The day is dark & dreery.
Into eech life sum rain must fall,
Sum days must be dark & dreery

Pa looked at Ma kind of su-prised. Ma is always so cheerful wen Pa cums hoam, espeshully Saterday nites, that Pa cuddent understand why she looked so sad. I am the only one wich knew & I wasent saying anything.

What in the wurld has gone wrong, deer? sed Pa.

Oh, everything, sed Ma. Life at best seems to me like the monotonous beeting of a lot of sullen waives on a barren shore, restless, whimpering waives that go groaning at last into the tideles sea of Eternity.

More Poetry.

Rattel his bones
Over the stones,
He's only a pauper whom nobody owns.

For hevings saik, deer, sed Pa, cheer up. Why, you doant know how sorry I am to see my littel song bird sitting with her fethers drooping. Cum & smile for me a littel, deerest. Then Pa kissed Ma & sed, Here is fifty dollars, deerest. I got a hundred to-day that I nevver expected to get back, & you can have half of it. The man owed me a other hundred, Pa sed, besides this, wich I will nevver git, & that made me kind of grouchy on the way hoam, but after all things cud be much worse. Then Pa sang Missus McCorley's Twins for Ma. Pa sings it so bad that it is good, & it always maiks Ma laff. The fifty dollars made Ma laff moar, tho. Then she hugged Pa & sed he was her little ray of sunshine. I guess she called him that beekaus the fifty-dollar bill that he gave her was yellow like a ray of sunshine.

"But there wasn't any shot," the perplexed and alarmed detective expostulated. He fairly stuttered in the earnestness of his self-defense. "I tell you, Chief, there hasn't been a sound."

Burke rose to his feet. His heavy face was set in its sternest mold.

"You could drive a hearse through the hole they've made in him," he rumbled. He wheeled on Mary and Dick. "So!" he shouted, "now it's murder! * * * Well, hand it over. Where's the gun?"

Followed a moment's pause. Then the Inspector spoke harshly to Cassidy. He still felt himself somewhat dazed by this extraordinary event, but he was able to cope with the situation. He nodded toward Dick as he gave his order. "Search him!"

Dick Took the Revolver.

Before the detective could obey the direction, Dick took the revolver from his pocket where he had bestowed it, and held it out.

And so it chanced that at this incriminating crisis for the son, the father hastily strode within the library. He had been aroused by the Inspector's shouting, and was evidently greatly perturbed. His usual dignified air was marred by a patent alarm.

"What's all this?" he exclaimed, as he halted and started doubtfully on the scene before him.

Burke, in a moment like this, was no respecter of persons, for all his judicious attentions on other occasions to those whose influence might serve him well for benefits received.

"You can see for yourself," he said grimly to the dumfounded magnate. Then he fixed sinister eyes on the son. "So," he went on, with somber menace in his voice, "you did it, young man." He nodded toward the detective. "Well, Cassidy, you can take 'em both downtown. * * * That's all."

The command aroused Dick to remonstrate against such indignity toward the woman whom he loved.

"Not her!" he cried, imploringly. "You don't want her, Inspector! This is all wrong!"

Now, at last, Mary interposed with a new spirit. She had regained, in some measure at least, her poise. She was speaking again with that mental clarity which was distinctive in her.

"Dick," she advised quietly, but with underlying urgency in her gentle spoken words, "don't talk, please."

Burke laughed harshly.

"What do you expect?" he inquired truculently. "As a matter of fact, the thing's simple enough, young man. Either you killed Griggs, or she did."

The Inspector, with his charge, made a careless gesture toward the corpse of the murdered stool-pigeon. For the first time, Edward Gilder, as his glance unconsciously followed the officer's movement, looked and saw the ghastly inanimate heap of flesh and bone that had once been a man. He fairly reeled at the grewsome spectable, then fumbled with an outstretched hand as he moved stumblingly until he laid hold on a chair, into which he sank helplessly. It suddenly smote upon his consciousness that he felt very old and broken. He marveled dully over the sensation—it was wholly new to him. Then, soon, from a long way off, he heard the strident voice of the Inspector remorselessly continuing in the vile, the impossible accusation. * * * And that grotesque accusation was hurled against his only son—the boy whom he so loved. The thing was monstrous, a thing incredible. This whole seeming was no more than a chimera of the night, a phantom of bad dreams, with no truth under it. * * * Yet the stern voice of the official came with a strange semblance of reality.

"Either you killed him," the voice repeated, gratingly, "or she did. Well, then, young man, did she kill him?"

"Good God, no!" Dick shouted, aghast.

"Then it was you!" Such was the Inspector's summary of the case.

Mary's words came frantically. Once again she was become desperate over the course of events in this night of fearful happenings.

"No, no! He didn't!"

Burke's rasping voice reiterated the accusation with a certain complacency in the inevitability of the dilemma.

"One of you killed Griggs. Which one of you did it?" He scowled at Dick. "Did she kill him?"

Again the husband's cry came with the fierceness of despair over the fate of the woman.

"I told you, no!"

The Inspector, always savagely impressive, now in voice and look and gesture, faced the girl with saturnine persistence.

"Well, then," he blustered, "did he kill him?"

The nod of his head was toward Dick. Then, as she remained silent: "I'm talking to you!" he snapped. "Did he kill him?"

The reply came with a soft distinctness that was like a crash of destiny.

"Yes."

Dick turned to his wife in reproachful amazement.

"Mary!" he cried, incredulously. This betrayal was something inconceivable from her, since he believed that now at last he knew her heart.

Burke, however, as usual, paid no heed to the niceties of sentiment. They had small place in his concerns as an official of police. His sole ambition just now was to fix the crime definitely on the perpetrator.

"You'll swear he killed him?" he asked, briskly, well content with this concrete result of the entanglement.

Mary subtly evaded the question, while seeming to give unqualified assent.

CHAPTER XXIV.

GORDON KELLY held Mildred Deery in his embrace a full minute, maybe. Her head rested on his breast and she felt his heart beating like a triphammer. At last she sighed happily and, raising her head, she smiled faintly in his serious face.

"Gordon," she murmured, "won't you say something?"

Gordon gulped once or twice convulsively. He tried to talk, but his voice broke on the first syllable. He tried again.

"Mildred, dear," he said, hoarsely, "can it be you? I can't believe it. I have been thinking of you and only you for six long weeks. I tried to find you and"——

"How hard did you try?" Mildred interrupted. She released herself from his arms. She was beginning to recover herself.

"Why, Mildred, I called up your house just as soon as they would let me. I called up every day for more than a week and then every other day and then every three or four days and I always received the same answer. You had gone away and they didn't know where you were or when you would return. I did all I could. I couldn't move for some time and I"——

"And you finally stopped" calling up altogether. Well, I don't think you made much of an effort. Didn't it occur to you to call up my father or my mother, if you were so much interested?"

"Oh, the perversity of women. If Mildred Deery were to confess it, her thoughts had been on Gordon Kelly almost constantly for the six weeks since last she had seen him. Here he was in flesh and blood standing before her, and she was now apparently trying to fret him.

"I—I—don't know much about these things," he stammered. "What have I done, Mildred? I only——"

An Interruption.

"I got him, Mildred! I got him!" yelled the voice of Elmer Shepard in the distance. "I knew there was a big fellow in there. Where are you, Mildred?"

They could hear him crashing through the underbrush. Mildred moved a few paces away from Gordon. Presently Elmer bounded over a boulder and came into view on the other side of the brook. He stopped short at seeing the stranger.

"Keep right on, Elmer, and we will meet you in the road and then we will go to the oaks and have luncheon," said Mildred. She had forgotten all about the lad, but now, mischievously enough, she welcomed his presence. Gordon, too felt the tension relax. The lad, coming on the scene, would give him a breathing spell and allow him time to collect his wits that Mildred had so ruthlessly scattered.

Picking up her fishing tackle, Gordon assisted Mildred up the embankment that bordered the road. Elmer was there before them. He held a large fish by the gills on one finger and proudly displayed his catch.

"Elmer," said Mildred, "this is my friend, Mr. Kelly. We met in the most"——

"Gordon Kelly. Gee whiz!" exclaimed

Gordon Folded Mildred in his arms.

Elmer, jumping up and down in his excitement. He was a little fellow for his age, whole souled and outspoken. Mildred laughed and so did Gordon.

The Cat Out of the Bag.

"Aren't you going to shake hands with Mr. Kelly?" asked Mildred, for Elmer in the sensations of the moment, had not seen Gordon's outstretched hand. The lad dropped the fish he held and put his small hand in that of the tall young man. There was only five years' difference in the ages of the two, yet one was a little boy and the other a full grown man.

"I am glad to meet you," said Gordon, pleasantly. "But how did you know my first name?"

"Oh, I read all about you in the papers and I have seen your picture dozens of times. Besides, Mildred and I have talked about you."

"Elmer!" exclaimed Mildred blushing furiously

"We did, too, just as we were starting out this morning. You know we did."

"You did the talking about Mr. Kelly, if I'm not mistaken," returned Mildred. "However, I guess there was no harm done, and, as I'm getting hungry, I suggest we change the subject and have something to eat. Won't you join us, Mr. Kelly?"

"Thank you, but I'm afraid I have fallen into the ball players' habit of two meals a day—a late breakfast and hearty dinner at night."

"We will allow you to sit with us and watch us eat, then," said Mildred. "Or would you prefer to resume your fishing?"

"I guess not," laughed Gordon. He knew he would have to begin all over again with Mildred, but he felt sure of himself now. "I'll just gather up my rod and net, however," he added. "I had a fish nearly landed when I saw you, but I forgot all about him."

They were soon comfortably seated under a huge oak tree. Mildred, with a shy glance at Gordon, pulled her short skirt down as far as it would go, leaned back against the trunk of a tree, and, selecting a sandwich from the napkin that held them, bit into it daintily.

"Now, then, Mr. Gordon Kelly, give an account of yourself," she said. "What are you doing up here?"

"They had no further use for me at the hospital, so I just came up; that's all," replied Gordon.

"Why did you come here?"

"Because I had no other place to go I live here."

"Live here!" exclaimed Mildred. "Live where?"

"Right here," replied Gordon, with an amused smile. "We are sitting on my property now."

"Goodness gracious, I didn't know that," said Mildred, as though she was doing something she ought not to do.

"Certainly, that bridge that crosses the brook is at the southern boundary line."

"Oh, I know, I know," Elmer broke in, excitedly. "That road that goes through the big granite posts leads to your house, doesn't it?"

"Youve guessed it, Elmer," replied Gordon.

"Well, I declare," said Mildred. "Tell us all about it, Mr. Kelly."

"With pleasure, Miss Deery," laughed Gordon, emphasizing the last two words as though to recall to her mind that she had called him by his first name not many minutes ago. "There's not much to tell. The road leads to a house and I live in the house. Now, please allow me to ask a few questions. What are you doing up here?"

"Because I had no other place to go. I live here." She smiled mischievously.

Elmer rolled on his back and kicked up his heels.

"Ha ha, I guess she's got you there, Mr. Kelly," he said. He had been feasting his eyes on the great Gordon Kelly all the while. Mildred watched him with a smile.

"You're right, Elmer." Then, turning to Mildred, Gordon said:

"But just where do you live; I am very much interested in my neighbors."

"Oh, just on the other side of the brook; on my father's property."

"That can't be your father's property. It is owned by the Southern Land & Development Company."

"Galen Deery is the Southern Land & Development Company," replied Mildred with a little toss of her head.

with a little toss of her head.

"Oh, I see," mused Gordon.

"And I guess you don't own this property, either," declared Elmer, who would stick up for Mildred if it came to a question. "Dad's got a map and it says this land is owned by the Prescott Trust Company."

Gordon laughed.

"You win all the arguments, Elmer," he said. "You are right. It was a whim of my father's to put all his land in a company's name. But now that we've found each other out I hope it won't make bad neighbors of us."

"We will have to see about that," replied Mildred, with a sly look.

Mildred Blushes.

"Now I begin to understand," exclaimed Gordon. "You live in that house they were finishing when I went to Atlanta."

"Say, Mr. Kelly, you didn't do a thing to them down there, did you?" broke in Elmer. "Say that last hit you made was a corker, wasn't it? You remember, Mildred, you were there."

Mildred's face grew crimson.

"You little turncoat, you were on my side a minute ago," was all she could say in her embarrassment.

"That's all right, I'm with you now," said the lad. "But it was mighty good of her, wasn't it, Mr. Kelly, to run out on the field to help you?"

"Indeed it was, Elmer," replied Gordon, soberly. He had meant to tell her so at the right time, but now he noted Mildred's confusion and turned the subject quickly by asking:

"What luck did you have this morning?"

That gave the lad a chance to tell all about the morning's sport. He found Kelly knew all the best pools, as he had fished every rod of the stream year after year. Gordon told them tales of his hunting in the mountains that made Elmer's eyes glisten. Mildred listened dreamily. There was no intimate conversation such as she secretly wished there could be if the lad was not present. But that would come. She longed to have Gordon tell her all about himself, but the pleasure of anticipation is always great.

A Surprising Young Man.

The time passed all too quickly, and it was after 4 o'clock before they realized it. Mildred spoke of going home. Gordon jumped to his feet and helped her to arise.

"You will let me see you again soon?" he said

"Oh, yes," she replied, and then paused a moment. "But not for a day or two. I will let you know. Have you a telephone. Ring three times? I will remember. Please don't call me up; you will hear from me. Well, good-by." She held out her hand.

"Wait a minute," said Gordon. "I'll be right back." He disappeared through the trees on the run and returned in three or four minutes. "Now we can walk to the bridge if you like."

They walked slowly and lingered on the bridge for a while, as if loath to part. Gordon looked at his watch.

"Give me two minutes more," he said. Even as he spoke there was the sound of a vehicle coming rapidly down the road and presently a high-powered automobile of the latest model, driven by a negro lad, slowed down and stopped at the bridge.

"I'll drive my friends home, Steve," said Gordon to the negro boy. "You wait here until I return."

"Is this your automobile?" cried Mildred in surprise. "Where in the world did it come from?"

"I telephoned for it," replied Gordon, smiling. "Another whim of my father's. He had telephones strung to every corner of the property."

"Gee whiz, that's going some," observed Elmer.

Mildred said nothing. She was thinking of the strange Gordon Kelly, a ball player, who owned a vast estate in the mountains and had servants at his beck and call who brought automobiles to him as if by magic.

CHAPTER XXV.

WHEN Gordon Kelly jumped on the tail of the express wagon in Atlanta, he told the driver to go to the Terminal Station. On the way there he decided to effectually conceal his movements, if it were possible to do so. He wanted more time to think. It is true he had had several weeks in which he did hardly anything else than think, but with his problem still unsolved he wanted to devote some more time to it, or get it off his mind altogether. The problem, of course, was Mildred Deery.

On the way to the Terminal he got a check for his trunk from the driver and told him to take the trunk to the baggage room. He paid the driver and got off the wagon a quarter of a mile from the terminal, leaving it to go on and deliver the trunk as ordered. Then he went to an express office, delivered his check and arranged to have the trunk forwarded to Steve Jackson, Pew Creek, Ga. After this was done he went to the freight office and after a good deal of trouble succeeded in geeting permission to ride in the caboose of the night freight to Chattanooga. One is sometimes able to arrange these things under proper persuasion.

It was in the gray of the morning that he dropped off the train, without being noticed, when it stopped at Pew Creek. It was all of a 12-mile walk to his home, but he started off, and it was not until he reached the bridge where later he met Mildred that he was able to make use of one of the telephones on his property and order an automobile to take him the rest of the way. Steve Jackson, his negro boy, quickly answered the summons, and that is the way Gordon Kelly reached his mountain home without anyone being the wiser. An hour later he had Judge Barbee on the telephone.

"This is Gordon," he said, "I am up home and I want particularly to ask you not to tell a soul where I am. You can reach me any time you wish but if you should call please ask for Mr. Gordon. I don't want anyone to know where I am for a while. Yes, everything is all right but I am trying to avoid a lot of annoyance. Goodbye."

With that off his mind Gordon proceeded to settle down to his old mode of life; that is as much as his troubled thoughts would allow him to.

The news that Gordon Kelly had left the hospital, packed his trunk and departed from Atlanta, presumably for Boston to join the Red Sox, was flashed over the wires, but as the days passed and nothing was heard of him, the Boston management began to get worried. Telegrams were sent to Atlanta, asking for information, but there was no information to impart. More telegrams came asking the Atlanta club officials to locate Kelly's home and see if he was there, but no one could be found who knew where his home was. Bill Smith was appealed to, but all he could say was that Kelly had told him he came from the Georgia mountains. This clew, vague as it was, led to nothing.

Two weeks passed and then the Boston club went at the matter in earnest. It had $50,000 tied up in Gordon Kelly, and that was a mighty pile of money to put out for a ball player and not have the use of his services. At the end of the third week the case was put in the hands of private detectives, and these professionals began a systematic hunt for the missing man. They traced his trunk to the terminal baggage room. They interviewed the expressman who had taken it there. But that is as far as they got in that direction. The trunk itself was like hundreds of others and the baggage men, who handled nothing else, could not place it. There was not enough for them to go on, and three weeks is a long time to remember a trunk that is like hundreds of others.

The detectives then went to the mountains but it was like hunting for a needle in a haystack. Many persons in the uplands had heard of Gordon Kelly, the ball player, but they were positive he didn't live anywhere in their section. The detectives searched the county tax lists. There was not a Kelly on them. They began to believe that Gordon Kelly was a fictitious name. If that were so, hunting for a needle in a haystack would be easy in comparison with their task.

Never Heard of Him.

The sleuths even stopped at Pew Creek between trains, but those persons of whom they inquired truthfully told them they had never heard of a Gordon Kelly and they were positive no such man lived in that vicinity. The detectives then went back to Atlanta to make a fresh start. There they hunted up Galen Deery, but that gentleman informed them that he hadn't the faintest idea where Gordon Kelly was; that he had never seen him but twice in his life and had no interest in him whatever. Deery was still smarting over that episode of the ball field in which his daughter figured. As the detectives knew of no connection between Gordon Kelly and Judge Barbee, the latter was not troubled with a visit from the sleuths.

There was one man who could, at least, have told where Gordon Kelly's home was, had he felt so inclined. That man was Forrest Cain, but he kept his mouth shut for reasons of his own. The cards were running badly for that young man and he was playing a waiting game, as gamblers do, hoping for a change of luck.

At the end of a month, or seven weeks after Gordon Kelly disappeared, the Boston club called in their detectives and abandoned the search. On the first and fifteenth of each month, however, a check for Kelly's salary was drawn and mailed to his last known address in Atlanta. They were all "returned to writer at the end of five days." The checks were saved in the safe of the Boston club, remaining unopened in the envelopes they were mailed in. The club, having a fortune invested in the player, was taking no chances in losing him on a technicality of baseball law if any question should ever arise.

If ever the Red Sox needed Gordon Kelly it was in the period in which the detectives searched for him high and low. They were "going bad," as the baseball phrase has it. Joe Wood, the champion pitcher, was injured early in the season and was out of the game for several weeks. Their first Western trip was disastrous, and toward the close of it Larry Gardner, their star third baseman, sprained his ankle and went around on crutches for a long time, his ankle in a cast. At the close of the Western trip they were sixth in the American League pennant race, a sorry showing for world's champions. The Philadelphia Athletics were out in the lead, with the Cleveland and Washington teams next. If the Red Sox were to do anything it was time to be up and doing. Jake Stahl, the manager, stayed at home during the trip. An operation on his foot kept him away from the ball field for many days. Altogether they were sorry days for the Red Sox, and their supporters began to lose heart.

But in spite of the fact that the Boston club had withdrawn its detectives from the search for Gordon Kelly, interest in that young man's mysterious disappearance did not abate. There was always some fresh clew to start the ball a-rolling again. These were run down, one after another. Every few days a dispatch would come out of some town in Texas, or Colorado, or Wyoming or Maine that no one had ever heard of, containing the information that Gordon Kelly had been found. Sometimes he was in a starving condition, sometimes he was working as a farm hand or in a factory. Investigation proved in every case that the wrong man had been found.

To Be Continued To-morrow.

Riding on a Receipt

Mark Twain's story of Horace Greeley's handwriting has a parallel in this, from a railway conductor in Missouri to the president of the road. The conductor wrote:

"A farmer has been riding on this pass for about a year. Do you want him to continue to use it?"

The president put on his glasses, looked the paper over carefully, and said:

"Why, this is not a pass. It is a receipt I gave the fellow for a load of wood about a year ago!"

Wedding Gifts

By MRS. FRANK LEARNED

THE question of sending a wedding gift must be decided by friendship or obligation. In the first instance there is the natural wish to please a friend, and in the other case one may be indebted to the bride or bridegroom or to their families for kindnesses or hospitalities. Those who are invited to a home wedding or a wedding reception usually send gifts, although there is no absolute rule to be followed as to this. As it is supposed to be a special compliment to be bidden to a home ceremony, a guest likes to return the courtesy by a gift, however simple it may be.

A gift is sent invariably to the bride, even though she may not be known personally to the giver. The custom is to send a gift directly from the place where it is purchased. The visiting card of the giver is enclosed in a small envelope and placed inside of the box containing the present. A brief line expressive of good wishes may be written across the top of the card, if the giver is a friend specially interested.

Wedding gifts are marked with the initials of the bride's maiden name.

In regard to the display of wedding presents there is a division of opinion. Some persons consider it ostentatious to show the gifts, or that it destroys sentiment to have critical eyes examining these offerings, others prefer to share their pleasure with their friends and are glad to give evidence of the good-will and the generous attention they have received.

When a wedding takes place in the country and friends are expected from a distance, the custom is to show the presents on the wedding days or if the wedding is an informal one, with only relatives and intimate friends present, the gifts are shown.

The preferred custom is to show the presents a few days before the wedding. The bride-elect, or her mother, may write informal notes asking intimate friends and all those who have sent gifts to come in on a certain afternon, during hours designated, to see the presents. It is allowable to write on one's visiting card, "Will you come in on Saturday afternoon, between four and six o'clock, to see the presents?"

The gifts are arranged on tables which are covered with white damask tablecloths. Here and there are vases of flowers. Great care is taken to place each article at its best advantage, especially the small and simple gifts which should be among the more beautiful ones, so that the givers may feel that the bride has truly appreciated their thoughtfulness.

The cards of the givers are usually placed with the gifts.

The informal serving of tea finishes the afternoon.

A bride-elect is careful to write a note of appreciation to every one who sends a gift. When she sees those who have sent presents, she remembers to repeat her thanks in person. The best rule is to write without delay and to mention the gift definitely, so that the note may not ne a duplicate of others.

The Faster They Go

Professor Barry once amused Judge Ball by an application on behalf of a man who was a dealer in horses and sugar sticks. The incongruity of his avocations struck the judge, who remarked:

"What a strange combination of trades."

"I see a close resemblance between horses and sugar sticks," said the witty barrister.

"In what way?" inquired his lordship.

"The more you lick them the faster they go," was the reply.

TENNESSEE BOY FIND OF SEASON IN BIG LEAGUES

By W. J. O'Connor.

ST. LOUIS, June 11.—It's time somebody should print a life-size picture of Daniel Griner, the Tennessee blonde, under a bold, black caption: "The find of 1913."

Griner has made good with a vengeance. A year ago the massive Cardinal pitcher was a plunging fullback on the Tennessee eleven. After being graduat d he broke into baseball as a curvist for the Cleveland (Tenn.) Club. His stay in the minors was brief and although his big league life is yet very young, he has been tagged O. K. by the rail-birds.

Griner has a unique record with the Cardinals. He's the only pitcher on Hug's team who has been able to go the full route in a majority of his games. With one exception Griner has finished every game he started. He was knocked out by the Cubs on April 21, after Evers' team had made 12 hits a d 5 runs in 5 1-3 innings. In all his other games Griner went through from the first to the last round.

Veterans Not Going Well.

This is something Harmon, Sallee and Steele have not been able to do. Harmon has pitched only two full games this season. Sallee has gone the route three times. Indeed, out of 44 games played, Huggins has been forced to change pitchers no less than 26 times. Of the 18 games that a pitcher has gone the route, Griner has been on the hillock in 10 of them. Here's his record:

Date	Opp.	Team.	W.	L.	Ings.
April 13	Cubs		4—3	....	9
April 17	Cubs		7—1	9
April 21	Pirates		8—5	5	1-3
April 27	Reds		2—1	....	9
May 1	Pirates		5—4	9
May 7	Phillies		4—2	10
May 12	Braves		4—3	....	9
May 19	Superbas		....	2—1	11
May 24	Reds		12—4	....	*6
May 28	Cubs		x...	....	.....
May 31	Reds		....	0—2	9
June 4	Giants		6—4	....	9

*Taken out after game won.
xTaken out in eighth, score tie, 7—7.

Tennessean's Percentage .500.

Griner has won five and lost five games. His percentage of .500 is better than his club's standing in the league race. However, it will be noted that Griner has lost three games by one-run margins, two of those extra-inning bouts. He has won three tight games by a margin of one run.

Griner was "found" by Scout Bill Armour who now is business manager of the Milwaukee (American Association) Club. Dan had had only one year's experience in baseball when he reported here, but he made good from the jump. He's now touted as the best bet among the young National League twirlers. He has the frame to last a long time, being a frugal liver to boot.

EVERS ACCUSES MANAGER OF TAMPERING WITH "ZIM"

CHICAGO, June 14.—Manager John Evers of the Chicago Cubs is angry over reports that rival managers have attempted to create dissatisfaction among his men and threatened to-day to take the matter up with National League officials.

The report reached Evers that the manager of another club approached Heine Zimmerman, star swatsman, on the recent Eastern trip and told him he ought to be getting more money. Baseball critics here attributed Zimmerman's poor showing in the opening of the season to dissatisfaction with his salary.

Lou Castro to Referee Battles

Sailor White May Stop Savage

By Left Hook.

COUNT LOUIS CASTRO, famed over the United States as ball player, manager and referee, has been secured to referee the Sailor White-Jim Savage bout at the Auditorium-Armory on Friday night, June 13.

It is believed that Castro will be satisfactory to both managers and scrappers, and surely no better man could be secured. Castro knows the boxing game, has a lot of "pep" in the ring and is known to be perfectly fair.

The engagement of Castro as referee makes it certain that the handling of the men in the ring will be on the same high plane as the rest of the show. The Auditorium-Armory bouts have established a reputation for good order, good crowds and good bouts, and the contest Friday night is not likely to do any damage to the reputation.

BEYOND any question of a doubt, the Savage-White bout is of more national importance and of greater promise than any ever staged in Atlanta before. The man who goes back to New York the victor has gained a material advantage in the contest for white hope supremacy. He can have almost any bout he wants.

Since the experts have had time to dope it out, they are inclined to believe that White will give Jim Savage a lot more than he counted on getting. Any man who could whip Pelky and stop Jim Barry in four rounds is likely to be heard from in any heavyweight bout. Combine this with the fact that White weighs 210 pounds, is 6 feet 2 inches tall, has a long reach and a willing disposition and you have a pretty strong scrapping machine.

It is going to take all of Jim Savage's cleverness to keep from getting knocked cold. White will be on top of him every minute, plugging away. With Savage's well-known cleverness, combined with that punch he has just discovered and which he used to put away Whitey Allen, the Bronx terror, he will be able to keep Sailor White at arm's length. If he can keep White away he has a chance to win by a big margin. If the Sailor can close right in he will give Savage one of the warmest little evening's entertainments that he ever had.

A NEWSPAPER MAN who has just blown in from New York hands out a warm line of praise for Sailor White.

"I am much of Bob Fitzsimmons' way of thinking about White," he said to-day. "The Sailor is coming fast. It is something to have his great weight, strength and reach. But besides that he has the aggressiveness of a terrier. He is after his man all the time. He is very fast for a heavyweight. I shouldn't exactly call him clever, not the way Savage is, at any rate, but he can look out for himself. He has learned a lot in the couple of years he has been out, and he is picking up something new every day.

"White doesn't know anything but the ring game. But he sure is enthusiastic about that. He wallows in scrapping. He gets so interested a couple of days before a scrap that he forgets to eat his meals. When he gets into the ring he is all impatience and as nervous as a kid. But when the bell taps he quiets down and is ready. A second or two later he is after his man. From that time on it is give and take to the finish. I'll say this—I'll bet every man who sees the go takes his hat off to Sailor White before it is over; that is, if a good rushing, slugging, aggressive heavyweight makes a hit in this town."

FODDER FOR FANS

The Cubs tied up the score in the ninth inning yesterday and then won out in the tenth in their game with the Giants.

* * *

The Phillies came from behind in the ninth inning yesterday, batted out two runs and scored another victory over the hapless Reds.

* * *

"Big Ed" Konetchy, the star second sacker of the Cardinals, punched two singles, a triple and a homer out of six times up yesterday. Magee, the Cardinal left fielder, got four singles.

* * *

The Cardinals amassed sixteen hits yesterday, yet had to use five pitchers and go into the eleventh inning to win the game, 8 to 7, from the Braves.

* * *

The Athletics experienced little difficulty yesterday in defeating the Browns and thereby annexing their fifteenth straight victory.

* * *

The Yanks' "winning streak" of two games was shattered yesterday when the White Sox jumped upon a couple of the New York pitchers and swatted out enough runs to win the game.

* * *

The Red Sox scored five runs off Vean Gregg, the Naps' star twirler, in the first inning yesterday, which were quite sufficient to win them the second straight game from the Clevelanders.

* * *

The victory of the Athletics and the defeat of the Naps yesterday gave the Quakertown players a lead of four full games, or 92 points, over the Naps.

* * *

Joe Jackson, of the Naps, got three hits out of four times up yesterday and made a big gain over Ty Cobb, his batting rival, who went hitless after three efforts at Walter Johnson's slants and shoots.

* * *

The Senators got only one hit off the combined twirling efforts of Clauss and House, yet were able to win the game from the Tigers, who were shut out with two hits off Walter Johnson.

* * *

Manager Fred Clarke, of the Pirates, batting in a pinch in the ninth, delivered a two-bagger and paved the way for a 5 to 4 victory for his team over the Dodgers.

Ritchie-Rivers Bout Still Up in the Air

SAN FRANCISCO, June 11.—Though articles of agreement have been signed, all is not well with the scheduled bout between Willie Ritchie and Joe Rivers on July 4. Manager Nolan was incensed last night because Joe Levy, who looks after the interests of Rivers, had not posted the forfeits agreed upon, and declared if Levy did not come through to-day he would call the bout off and take on Freddie Welsh in Vancouver on July 1.

"Levy agreed to put up his forfeits immediately after the articles had been signed," declared Nolan. "When I spoke to him about it, he said he would be back in an hour or so with the money. He did not return and I haven't heard anything further from him."

Nolan is said to be a trifle put out at the manner in which Levy dictated to him during the negotiations for the Ritchie-Rivers match. Rivers' manager won practically every point he held out for and Nolan is not accustomed to being beaten in this kind of a game.

CARDS AFTER BAUMGARDNER.

CHICAGO, June 11.—The Cardinals are trying to sign Pitcher Baumgardner. Not the Browns' clever right-hander, but a youngster with the University of Chicago team, who is creating quite a sensation in "Big Nine" circles. One of Huggins' silent scouts recommended Baumgardner.

CRACKERS TRY AGAIN TO PLAY DOUBLE BILL

By Joe Agler.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., June 11.—We're off this afternoon on another double-header with Manager Molesworth's Barons. And when we grab those two, we shall beat it to Chattanooga, where we will be the guests for the remainder of the week of Kid Elberfeld's Look-outs.

Smith is figuring on Musser and Price to-day. Paul started the second game yesterday, but did not get far enough to get very tired over it. So I guess he'll go back for more to-day.

It is going to be pretty tough on Joe Dunn if the double-headers pile up on us, for he's the only catcher we have who is in running order. However, Joe is pretty chipper to-day and looks good for about six weeks of double-headers.

I take it that Molesworth will use Prough and Thompson, with Mayer to do the catching.

We won a hot game yesterday. It started out to be a double-header and a pennant raising combined, and we got away with everything but the second game. Darkness stopped that.

It took twelve good innings to finish the opening game. "King" Brady started for us and seemed to have the battle won, but went to pieces in the sixth. Dent relieved him.

Dent was good. He had everything and his hit started the rally in the twelfth that brought home the bacon.

After we got the first game out of the way, we marched over with the Barons to the pennant pole and ran up the pennant won in 1912 by the Barons.

The second game lasted only two innings and was then called on account of darkness.

FEDERAL TRIED TO RAID WISCONSIN-ILL. LEAGUE

MILWAUKEE, June 11.—President Powers, of the Federal League, is here to-day trying to secure a couple of players from the Wisconsin-Illinois League. He would not give out any names, but stated that he was willing to pay a fair price for their release.

President Powers stated that the business men of Toledo were endeavoring to buy the Cleveland franchise in the Federal League in order to shift it to Toledo in opposition to the American Association club, controlled by Charles Sommers. The price offered was $2,000.

MAHONEY GETS MILWAUKEE BOUT WITH BRANNIGAN

MILWAUKEE, WIS., June 11.—Patsy Brannigan will make his second appearance in this city, June 16, when he clashes with Kid Mahoney, Racine, in a ten-round bout at the South Side A. C. show. The two boys will weigh in at 116 pounds at 3 o'clock. The bout was closed this morning and should furnish the fans with a rattling good bout.

LATHROP, COLLEGE STAR, GRABBED BY WHITE SOX

CHICAGO, June 11.—Ban Johnson's office to-day gave out the announcement that William Lathrop, the sensational young pitcher of the Notre Dame College team, has accepted terms to pitch for the Chicago White Sox. New York, Philadelphia and Cincinnati were hot after the youngster, Manager announcing several days ago that he had signed Lathrop.

KILBANE TOO MUCH FOR JIMMY FOX OF OAKLAND

OAKLAND, CAL., June 11.—Johnny Kilbane, of Cleveland, featherweight champion, defeated Jimmy Fox, of this city, last night in the sixth round of their scheduled ten-round bout. Fox's seconds threw a sponge in the ring when their man was on the verge of a knock-out.

DUNDEE AND WHITE MATCHED.

LOS ANGELES, June 11.—Johnny Dundee, of New York, featherweight, and Jack White, of Chicago, were matched to-day for a twenty-round fight here June 17.

LEDOUX AND M'GOVERN DRAW.

BOSTON, June 11.—Charles Ledoux, bantamweight champion of France, fought Phil McGovern, of Brooklyn, ten rounds to a draw here last night.

White City Park Now Open

'NOTHING BUT BOOBS KILLED IN CONTESTS'

—JACK PRINCE.

MANAGER NOON HUDSON is planning to install a riding instructor at the Motordrome, in order to break in local riders in the motor racing game.

There is not any great trick to riding in the big "washtub," after you learn how. But it takes a little time to learn.

"I don't want any boy in a race on my track who hasn't been riding a month," says Jack Prince. "There hasn't been a boy killed at the racing game this year but dubs and boobs. Give me a lot of good riders and I'll guarantee not to get a man killed once in twenty years.

"We started off a boy here the other day," continued Jack, "great dirt track rider, expert and all that. He went around bloody murder. When he came back his eyes were sticking out a mile. Now that boy is going to be a great rider. But it will take a month of riding.

How They Are Trained.

"The way I train 'em," said Jack, "is to put 'em on for a week to ride and do nothing else. I have 'em try to keep the pole and not go too fast. Then the next week they can let out. The third week I put on another rider with them. That's the test.

"It's easy enough to stick on when you have the track all to yourself. But it is something else again to hear a fellow come popping along behind you, ninety miles an hour; and have him graze by you, just scraping a little bit—well, if you don't run off in the grass then you're getting to be a rider.

Then Turn 'Em Loose.

"The final stage is to turn a man loose on the track with three others and let them ride rings around him. By that time he ought to be ready for anything. After he has had a few days of that nothing will ever get him in trouble but a blow out and he will have a chance to come clean through that.

"The trouble about a lot of meets is that they haven't got enough riders to go around. So they put on a lot of green lads and stick them in races before they know how to ride by themselves. Then there's trouble. That's the reason I've brought a lot of experienced riders here for the summer season. I don't want to take any chances. Every boy I have here could ride along the edge of the moon without falling off. If the tires will stand up I don't look for any bad accidents."

Crackers Are Puzzle of Season

Ought to Be Leading League Now

By Percy H. Whiting.

BILL SMITH won two pennants in Atlanta with weak-hitting teams. Can he win a third with a strong-hitting team? The question agitates local fans.

Ponder the figures:

Smith won in 1907 with a team that batted	.253
Smith won in 1909 with a team that hit	.222
The Crackers now are third, and hitting	.272

With a team fifty points weaker in hitting than he has this year Smith romped in 1909, winning by such a margin that it wasn't interesting.

Glance at some more figures:

Batters over .300 mark on Cracker team.:

In 1907	0	In 1909	0	In 1913	3

Regulars (exclusive of pitchers) who batted over .250 mark:

In 1907	5	In 1909	2	In 1913	6

In 1909, when Smith won the pennant by forty rods, every player on his club, except one catcher, one outfielder and one pitcher, was hitting worse than .250. Eleven of them were hitting .225 or worse.

Verily, if hitting is worth anything, the Crackers should win this year.

1907—Fox, Jordan, Castro and Dyer.
1909—Rohn, Jordan, Newton, Walker.
1913—Agler, Alperman, Bisland, W. Smith.

Agler is as good as Fox, better than Rohn. Alperman is about as good as Jordan. Bisland is as good as Castro in fielding and better in hitting, while he has a mile on Newton. Wally Smith is worth sixteen Dyers and a better man than Walker.

* * *

COMPARE the outfields, just for fun, considering the men from their ability to cover ground, hit the ball, run bases and think. Here they are:

1907—Paskert, Becker and Winters.
1909—Bayless, Moran, Winters.
1913—Long, Welchonce, Bailey.

REMEMBER that the same man is managing the club now that won the pennants in 1907 and 1909, and that he has had the advantage of several years of experience since then.

And after you have figured all these things you will wonder more than ever why the Crackers aren't out in front and leading the pennant chasers by a full mile.

* * *

THIS much is sure about the Cracker team. Though the end of the second month of the season, which was Tuesday, found the Crackers moderately removed from the leadership, there has not been a second this season when it has not appeared likely that the club would turn loose at any minute and start out for the pennant.

A club of sluggers, which can field moderately well, is liable to set sail any old moment.

The Crackers have kept in a comfortable position all the season. They have not been dangerously close to the front in a good while, but they haven't been so far toward the rear as to make it embarrassing.

Watch out for a smashing spurt to begin before so very long.

FRED CLARKE MAY RETURN TO OLD POSITION AGAIN

PITTSBURG, June 11.—Associates of Fred Clarke said to-day that the veteran player and manager of the Pirates is about to put his determination aside and return to the outfield. Clarke has neither admitted nor denied the report, but it is expected both by players and his intimate friends that he will trot back into left field, perhaps in a few days. According to his usual method, he will probably announce his return a few minutes before he puts on his glove.

INJURED ARM MAY KEEP CASHION OUT OF GAME

WASHINGTON, June 11.—Carl Cashion, the Nationals' huge twirler, may be out of the game for good from the injury he received in Cleveland last month. The pitcher wrenched a muscle loose in his elbow, and despite continued treatment cannot yet throw a curve ball.

Cashion was slow in rounding into shape this year, and at the time of his injury had just begun to show the form he attained last year when he won 11 out of 17 games. Griffith has a specialist treating the refractory arm.

CONNIE MACK DENIES HE IS AFTER CY MORGAN

PHILADELPHIA, June 11.—Notwithstanding the Athletics have two of their first-rate twirlers on the hospital list, Manager Mack insisted to-day he would take on no more recruits. He denied he was after Cy Morgan, of the Kansas City Club, who is just now being sought by half a dozen big league teams. Even with the prospect of Jack Coombs being out of the game for the season and Herbert Pennock probably for several weeks, Connie declares he has a full complement and cannot afford to let any of them go for the purpose of taking on additional pitchers.

HANS WAGNER OBSTACLE IN GIANTS' WAY

—CHIEF MEYERS.

By John ("Chief") Meyers

NEW YORK, June 11.—Hans Wagner looms larger and larger each day as the possible stumbling block to a third successive pennant for the Giants. I am as confident now as when the season opened that my club will eventually be returned the winner. Class usually tells in the long run of any competitive sport, and I think my club has finally begun to display the real merit that won two straight pennants.

Every one figured this spring that the Pirates were destined to argue the case with us right to the end of the campaign. Pittsburg, like New York, has an exceptionally strong club. Like New York, it got off to a disappointing start, but, like New York, also, it appears to have found itself with hot weather and is prepared to fight to the finish.

Wherefore I say that Hans Wagner looms more and more ominously in our pathway. Wagner is so much more vital to his team's success than any other player in organized baseball is to another team that he may be considered pretty nearly the whole team.

I do not mean by this that Clarke has no other players. He has a well balanced organization, embracing one of the strongest pitching departments in the circuit. But Pittsburg, without Wagner, is a second division outfit.

Still Valuable Asset.

Wagner is one of the most remarkable characters the game has ever known. I very much doubt if at any time in his brilliant career of the past seventeen years he was of greater playing value than he is to-day. Certainly within the past five years he never approached his present form.

Most players are spectacular at times. Once in a while even the average athlete may pull some sensational fielding feat that will make the stands wild with enthusiasm. But Wagner shows so much enthusiasm on defense that to get a "hand" he has to do the practically impossible.

Wagner is an awkward—even clumsy—appearing fellow in his mannerisms. He lacks the grace of Lajoie. Yet he carries his burden of years on the diamond as easily as the youngest colt. No man in baseball is more agile than Hans, and none is so sure with his hands. He is possessed of every requisite of greatness; strong sure hands, exceptional reach, agility, a powerful, accurate arm and an exceptionally fast thinking brain.

Sometimes it seems almost uncanny the way Wagner handles a ball. He lowers his great hand (the gloved one the size of a scoop shovel, almost) and it seems as if the ball is attracted like a piece of steel to a magnet. Of course, that is fancy. It is the fine skill with which he plays the ball. He always plays the ball; he never lets the ball play him.

Wagner Greatest Fielder.

Wagner is the greatest fielder I have ever seen. Twice in the recent series at the Polo Grounds I saw him make plays which I am firmly convinced would have been absolutely impossible for any other living player.

One was on a faulty throw to second base to stop a stealer. This runner, the ball and Wagner all reached the cushion just about the same time. The ball was high; Hans had to leap in the air for it. In doing this he had to protect himself, as a collision might have seriously injured him. Wagner not only did protect himself, but he made a one-handed catch and tagged his man for a put-out while still in the air so quickly that the eye could scarcely follow his motion.

On the other occasion he started back into left for a difficult Texas leaguer. For such a fly no one is so sure. But somehow there was a misunderstanding with Carey. Each thought the other was going to take the ball, which either might have done very handily had he not stopped. The ball had almost settled to the ground when Wagner realized that Carey was depending upon him. With a lightning spring that combined the grace and power of a tiger's leap Wagner threw himself along the ground and scooped up the ball just before it settled on the grass.

Is Most Feared Hitter.

Wagner's wonderful batting ability has endeared his memory to every nook and cranny of the old earth where the great summer sport is known. Years have come and gone bringing with them their periodic phenoms. But none has dimmed the glory of the mighty Hans. To-day he stands at the head of the class, the most feared hitter in the National League. He has not always led the procession; but he has never been very far behind. And he has shown such great consistency that he will rank forever as one of the greatest figures of baseball history.

BUFFALO HAS NEW STAR IN JIMMY DUFFY

By Ed W. Smith.

CHICAGO, ILL., June 11.—They have a young lightweight boxing star down near Buffalo who is regarded as one of the real comers of the country in the 133-pound division. His name is Jimmy Duffy and he hails from Lockport, N. Y., where they think there is nobody quite as good. Jimmy and his prowess are brought before Chicagoans with a great deal of sharpness because he recently got a foul decision over Jack Britton, the North Sider, who is so highly regarded around this man's town. Britton and Duffy had a corking good battle in the ring at Buffalo, but in the sixth round Jack was told to go to his corner because of what the referee termed persistent fouling.

UP to that time the milling had been about as pretty as anybody could wish to see and of course the Lockport and Buffalo friends of Duffy were yelling madly for their favorite because he appeared to be holding Jack to about an even break despite the fact that he had been upset in the second round for an eight count with a corking rap on the chin. Duffy got over that blow easily and fought back so well that many figured that had the battle gone the full ten rounds Jimmy would have been returned the winner.

* * *

EVIDENTLY the dispatches that were sent out after the contest did Duffy a rank injustice, for several of them accused Duffy of quitting and laying down on the job. Nothing was further from the truth unless all of the Buffalo papers are badly fooled in Duffy, because not one of them mentions such a thing. Britton himself says Duffy must be a game lad to get up the way he did and fight back after getting a stunning crack on the chin early in the battle. The men have been rematched for the 16th and then we shall see.

* * *

BERT FINCH, who is handling Duffy's business affairs, claims his man is the real comer of the division and that his even contest recently with Packey McFarland stamps him as one of the best of the new crop of lightweights. In addition to this feat Jimmy held his own over ten rounds with Freddie Welsh, the English champion, and is reported to have bested such good fighting material as Ray Temple, Harry Thomas, the English star, and Young Jack O'Brien. Further, it is small wonder that Jimmy is a red hot favorite around his own town, because he is a clean, likable young fellow with all the earmarks of popularity.

ALAS for the traditions and precedents of recent making in the lightweight division! Willie Ritchie will not make 133 pounds at the ringside for Jose Rivers or any of the rest of them! Joe Gans, thought by many to be the greatest of all of them when he was right, never minded doing the weight, and his immediate successor to the crown, Battling Nelson, insisted upon all dangerous opponents doing ringside weight for him, and not an ounce over 133 pounds either. Then Ad Wolgast, who never was anything but a 128-pounder at his best, followed suit. But Willie, who took the title away from Ad on a foul, puts himself on record in the Rivers negotiations as being against the precedent, and evidently for quite consequential reasons.

THUS are changes wrought in the fighting game. Weight limits are only what a champion may choose to make them. Ritchie can name 135 pounds as the lightweight limit and will have as much basis for his claims as did Gans, Nelson and Wolgast when they insisted upon 133. Verily, it is the champion's last say in all things.

* * *

WE surely thought Harry Pollok was going to make a lot of fuss out on the coast by slapping Freddie Welsh, English champion, at them out there. But Pollok evidently doesn't see much chance at this time of getting on a match with Ritchie, for he is content to let Freddie go along and battle a lot of second-raters up in the Canadian Northwest. Welsh is in grand form right now and going like the department to a 4-11 fire. Certainly Harry's stand is a peculiar one.

BASEBALL FRAPPE.

An oil stove underneath my frigid feet,
Another stove beside me on the seat,
A pair of earmuffs and a coat of fur,
And what care I how fierce the tempests beat?

Knee deep in June, as calendars will show,
And through our frame the chills run to and fro,
How sweet 'twould be to watch a game in June
If one were only like an Eskimo.

We palpitate with every passing gust,
We quake as though our very bones would bust,
And wonder if the blokes who run the game
Are working for the Undertakers' Trust.

F. Schulte, after the fashion of F. Chance, complains of severe headaches, but H. Zim rests happy in the knowledge that he is immune.

Polo may be surrounded by money, glamour and social prestige, but when we examine it closely we find it is nothing but shinny with a university training.

Still, Connie Mack does not consider it an ill omen when his athletes win thirteen pastimes in a row.

A. Wolgast, pugilist, reports an injured thumb. This puts him at a great disadvantage when beating up the typewriter.

Whenever we hear of a schoolboy running the hundred in 9 4-5, we are reminded that a simple snap of the thumb can break a world's record.

There are various things that overpower us with profound lethargy, one of which is the question of a successor to the late L. McCarty.

The more we think of polo, the more we are impressed by the safety and sanity of football.

SPORT.

Lives of poloists remind us
We can cause a lot of thrills,
And, departing, leave behind us
Naught but undertakers' bills.

Yes, Rollo; one might say without fear of contradiction that it was a horse on Foxhall Keene.

J. McGraw avers that some of his athletes have to be driven to eat, demonstrating that there is a vast abyss between a ball player and a pugilist.

In view of Mr. McGraw's sentiments on the eats question, it is rumored that Rudy Unholz will ask for a tryout with the Giants.

GOOD NIGHT.

She was a phantom of delight,
A chicken wondrous fair.
Her smile was bright, her step was light
As if she walked on air.

And as I lamped her azure eye
It made my bosom throb.
"Some squab!" quoth I while passing by;
"Considerable squab!"

The justly celebrated rose
Is there with many a thorn;
My pulses froze from head to toes
Upon the morrow morn.

A motorbike came tearing by
And she was on the rear.
"Good night!" quoth I and heaved a sigh
And wiped away a tear.

'Tis true it matters not to me;
Perchance she knows her mind.
And yet, if she could only see
The way she looks behind!

YANKEES AFTER TWIRLER.

TERRE HAUTE, IND., June 11.—Arthur Irwin, business agent of the Yankees, has offered $5,000 for Southpaw Gilbert, turned over by the Cubs after the spring training trip. He has won ten straight for Terre Haute. It is believed the Cubs have a string on him.

FLAHERTY TO UMPIRE.

CHRISTY MATHEWSON'S BIG LEAGUE GOSSIP

NEW YORK, June 11.—Fans all over the country have been discussing the Cincinnati Reds. Also when this team is mentioned, Joe Tinker's name is usually brought into the argument. Personally, I am strong for Joe at all times. He is a great friend of mine, and I consider him one of the greatest shortstops the game has ever known. As a leader of men, Joe must prove his worth. He has a hard task before him, but is made of the right stuff to make good. Let me state right here that the Reds are a rejuvenated outfit. They look more like the "Tinkers" every day, and I do not expect to see them finish last by any means. They will give any club a good battle now, because the pitching staff has been tightened up, and the rest of the team never did have so very many kinks in it. Tinker is busy ironing them out, and he is the boy who can iron.

BENTON and Suggs have always been good pitchers, but neither struck form in the early part of the race. Tinker said to me in Cincinnati a week ago:

"Every time I sent a man to the box in the first part of the season, I sent a prayer with him, and usually it did no good."

The theory that a team can win with bad pitching was long ago disproved in baseball. The best club in the world cannot. The addition of Ames, Devore and Groh has put new life into the "Tinkers." This may sound like a criticism of McGraw's judgment in making the trade, but, in reality, it is a boost. A change of venue, as the lawyers say, often benefits a ball player for many reasons, the same as a change of climate will help the health of a sickly person. Sometimes the fans "get on" a man, and he becomes discouraged in the city. He will go somewhere else and play his head off. Then the traded player always wants to impress on his old boss the fact he has made a mistake in letting him go.

NEITHER Devore nor Groh was good enough to play regularly on the Giants this year, in McGraw's opinion, and his judgment of a ball player has been confirmed by his record. This does not mean that McGraw thought either one was a poor performer, but he believed he had better men to put in the game every day. Players sitting on the bench are of small benefit to any manager. The Giants needed a pitcher for the coming double-headers. McGraw liked Fromme and got him. Wait until he has had a fair chance, and he will vindicate McGraw.

Devore has always been a fast, game ball player, and, confidentially, McGraw hated to let him pass along, but Tinker insisted and refused to accept anyone else. "Josh" has been going great guns since he joined out with the "Tinkers," and I hope he keeps it up. Ames has always had hard luck in New York. He has shown real stuff in Cincinnati, and will doubtless build up a reputation for himself there. New York is the hardest city in the country for a ball player to make good in, because everybody is always out to beat the Big Town boys.

THE trade will probably work out in the same way with Hal Chase, who was passed along to the Chicago White Sox by Frank Chance. It won't be two weeks before fans will be saying that Chance was crazy to let a player like Chase go, because Hal will get his back up and play for his life. But the Yankees were in last place, and Chase was not getting them out of it. He will want to make a hit with his new following of fans, and just watch him go.

* * *

IN St. Louis the Philadelphia club will strike no soft spot, particularly if it meets the mercury at the place we found it. The Cardinals are accustomed to playing in that heat. They are a great in-and-out bunch. One day they will act like champions and the next like a flock of dubs. It is not a steady team. If the Phillies catch them in a championship spell, they want to watch out. Griner, Harmon and Sallee are moving very smoothly in the pitcher's box right now. Let me conclude by saying that I do not fear the Phillies for the pennant. Maybe the St. Louis club looks better to me, because it has always been a hard crowd for the Giants to beat.

RINGSIDE NOTES

Jim Savage and Sailor White, the two husky heavyweights, who battle at the Auditorium-Armory on Friday night will arrive in Atlanta to-day. Danny Morgan will accompany Savage, while McKetrick will be Savage's partner.

* * *

Both boxers will continue training here until Friday, so as to be in great shape at ring time. The two heavyweights have been doing hard work in New York for the past ten days and will need but light work to fit them for the fray.

* * *

George Carpentier is after another match with Frank Klaus. George Engle, manager of the Pittsburg middleweight, has received a wire from the Frenchman asking them to cross the ocean again. Klaus and Carpentier met in Dieppe, France, June 24, 1912, and the steel-ribbed Pittsburger with the 60-horse power punch stopped the Frenchman in eighteen rounds.

* * *

Engle also has a few words to say regarding Klaus' recent mill against Jack Dillon. Engle says that Klaus was given the worse deal of his career, and should have at least been handed a draw. "We will gladly battle Dillon again, but would much prefer a bout over the 20-round route," says Engle.

* * *

Rivers has finally landed the Willie Ritchie go. After much dickering the pair finally came together yesterday and agreed on terms. Welsh, Tommy Murphy, Leach Cross and Bud Anderson were all ready to step in and take Rivers' place in case the Mexican failed to reach terms with the title holder.

* * *

New York fans are picking Cross to trim Anderson when the two battle on the coast. They point to the fact that a slugger has never defeated the Eastern lightweight and Bud is a typical mixer. Leach's deadly wallop is expected to put the coast sensation away.

* * *

Johnny Coulon does not intend to box Kid Williams at Baltimore and have a Baltimore man act as referee. The fans at the Maryland city refuse to stand for an out-of-town official, which means that the pair of bantamweights will probably clash on the coast. Tom McCarey is wild after the match.

* * *

Mike Gibbons is certainly keeping himself busy these days. The St. Paul sensation was matched yesterday to take on Young Ahearn at New York on Thursday night, and has practically to take on Young Denny at New Orleans.

* * *

Harry Trendall has refused to meet Charlie White at St. Louis. This makes the third scrapper who has turned down offers to meet the Chicago boy in the last two weeks. Tommy Murphy turned down an offer from Kenosha, Wis., Johnny Lore dodged a bout with the Chicagoan at New Orleans and Trendall turned his head from the St. Louis promoters.

* * *

Buffalo fans are going wild over the Britton-Duffy go to be staged there on June 16. They are boosting Duffy as the next lightweight champion and are anxious to see him down Danny Morgan's speed marvel.

* * *

Spider Britt threatens to quit the ring forever if he fails to defeat Meyer Pries at the Auditorium-Armory on Friday night. Britt has worked hard for this bout and looks to be in great shape. He is anxious to prove that his former victory over Pries was far from a fluke.

* * *

Kid Williams is another boxer, who is rapidly gathering in the dough. The Baltimore boy will take on Jem Kendrick in a fifteen-round affair at Baltimore to-night and is practically assured of a meeting with Johnny Coulon July 4. Ever since Williams defeated Eddie Campi on the coast last year he has been a big card.

* * *

Harry Pollok, manager of Freddie Welsh, will send his protege against Ray Campbell in a fifteen-round battle at Vancouver, British Columbia, to-night.

MRS. SULLIVAN PLAYS WELL IN VIRGINIA TOURNEY

RICHMOND, VA., June 11.—Mrs. Willard Sullivan, former woman champion of the South, again showed championship form Tuesday afternoon when she defeated Miss Martha Robinson, 6-0, 6-1, in the women's singles in the second day's matches of the Old Dominion Tennis Club tourney.

It is now practically certain that she will compete with Mrs. Saunders Taylor, of Norfolk, for possession of the Challenge Cup. Each has won the cup twice.

Nat Thornton, of Atlanta, got into play for the first time Tuesday afternoon with Shaner, of Lynchburg, for his partner. The pair easily defeated Donan and Mullen, 6-1, 6-0. It looks as if Thornton will have but little trouble retaining the cup which he won last year.

COULON INJURES HAND; BURNS BOUT POSTPONED

CHICAGO, June 11.—Johnny Coulon has gone and jammed up his right hand on a training partner. So the championship fight with Frankie Burns, originally scheduled for next Monday night in Kenosha, has been postponed one week.

The Coulon-Williams match for Baltimore July 4 is definitely off.

NASHVILLE GETS MORE FROM CHATTANOOGA CLUB

NASHVILLE, TENN., June 11.—President Hirsig, of the local ball club, has purchased Pitcher Forest More from the Chattanooga club. The price was not made public.

More in 1912 was rated as one of the leading twirlers in the league, but his work this season has not been up to his usual standard. Schwartz believes, however, that he will prove of great value to the Vols on account of his experience.

Waivers have been asked on Pitcher McManus to make room for More.

GRIFFITH STOPS BROCK IN NINTH ROUND AT AKRON

AKRON, OHIO, June 11.—Johnny Griffith, of Akron, fought his first battle last night as a lightweight and won from Phil Brock, of Cleveland in the ninth round of a scheduled 12-round bout by the knockout route.

Phillies Lead All in Home Runs

Magee Sets Hot Pace With Five

ONE of the reasons why the Phillies, after reaching the top rung of the championship ladder on May 4, have managed to keep possession of it has been the ability of the players to punch out four-baggers. The Quakers easily are the home run kings of the major league world, and to May 24, inclusive, had made sixteen of the sixty-eight circuit clouts manufactured in Tom Lynch's organization.

To the same date in the American League twenty-eight four-bag blows had been struck, so Dooin's Daisies have to their credit one-sixth of the major league home run output of 1913.

Sherwood Magee, Luderus and Cravath are the dangerous athletes on the Quaker combination. These three men have whaled out twelve four-baggers and have broken up many a combat. Magee has five homers to his credit, of which three were secured off right handers and two off left handers. Sherwood obtained his first loop-the-loop swat on April 26, off Hub Perdue, of the Braves; his second and third off Rube Marquard, of the Giants, on May 5; his fourth off Marty O'Toole, of the Pirates, on May 12, and his fifth off Howard Camnitz, of the same combination, on the following day.

Luderus Has Four Homers.

Fred Luderus has poled four homers, his first hit of this kind being made at the Polo Grounds off Jeff Tesreau and the next three wallops being manufactured in Philadelphia. The pitchers "Ludy" maltreated at home were Steele, of St. Louis, and Harter and Brown, of Cincinnati. Luderus has had the happy faculty of making his four-baggers at opportune moments, for the hits off Steele and Brown won games for the Dooinites.

Cravath a Great Hitter.

Cravath, who, if he could field as well as he can hit, would stand an excellent chance of winning the car offered by Hugh Chalmers, of Detroit, for the National League's most valuable player, has three homers to his credit. He gained the first while acting as a pinch-hitter, smiting the first ball served him by Christy Mathewson and promptly driving it out of the lot. Rube Marquard and Howard Camnitz are the other flingers whom Cravath has jarred for homers.

Three Players Set Mark.

No Quaker has as yet turned the trick accomplished by Joe Jackson, Lee Magee and Joe Connelly this year—that of hammering out a four-bagger when all the bases had occupants—but the season still is in its infancy, as Charles Hercules Ebbets would say. Cravath has to share with Alva Williams, of the Senators, the distinction of having smote for the circuit when acting as a sub swatter and Sherwood Magee has to share with Charley Stengel, of the Superbas, the honor of having contributed two four-baggers in the same controversy. Stengel, like Magee, got his brace of four-baggers off a southpaw, Otto Hess, of the Braves, being the man whom the Brooklynite stung. The number of home runs made by the Phillies this year and the pitchers off whom they were made will be found below:

Magee—5.

April 26—Off Perdue, Boston.
May 5—Off Marquard, New York.
May 12—Off O'Toole, Pittsburg.
May 13—Off Camnitz, Pittsburg.

Luderus—4.

April 22—Off Tesreau, New York.
May 9—Off Steele, St. Louis, game resulting 3 to 1 in Phillies' favor and victory being due to homer, made with man on base.
May 21—Off Harter, Cincinnati.
May 23—Off Brown, Cincinnati, game resulting 4 to 1 in Phillies' favor and victory being due to homer made with man on base.

Cravath—3.

May 3—Off Mathewson, New York. "Cactus" made this four-bagger while pinch-hitting for Killifer in the eighth inning and when the score was 2 to 0 in the Giants' favor. He hit the first ball pitched Phillies, and the Phillies eventually won out 3 to 2.
May 5—Off Marquard, New York.
May 13—Off Camnitz, Pittsburg.

Knabe—1.

May 12—Off O'Toole, Pittsburg. F. Otto chose a psychological moment for his homer, inserting it into the ninth inning when the Pirates were one run ahead and when a defeat would have tumbled the Phillies into second place. The hit tied the score and in the eleventh the Phillies won out.

Paskert—1.

May 8—Off Harmon, St. Louis. "Dode" made this homer in the first inning and on the first ball pitched.

Doolan—1.

May 16—Off Toney, Chicago.

Seaton—1.

May 21—Off Harter, Cincinnati.

LOOK IN THE GLASS TO-DAY

Be Honest With Yourself. Study the Cause for Your Looks.

"Be honest with yourself," says the Quaker Health Teacher. "What is it that gives you that sallow complexion, those lusterless eyes and furrows on your face which should be smooth? Probably you think your health is good, but there must be some reason, and more often than not your troubles are caused by a sluggish liver and disordered stomach. A good complexion, a clear skin, a good appetite and a feeling of health and strength are every person's desire, and there is no reason why he should not have them all.

"A well-known lady living in this city, who does not wish her name published, told me: 'I thought I was in fair health, but kept getting thinner and thinner. I was so yellow that I thought my complexion must be gone forever; I was troubled with pimples on my face and was told that the life and sparkle had left my eyes; felt dull and listless; getting up in the morning more tired than when I lay down at night. I am a mother and believe I love my family as much as anyone can, but I found I was getting cross with my children and snappy with my husband. It took me some time to realize this, but when I did I thought there must be a cause, and I must cure that cause. I had been reading of the cures that the Quaker Extract had been making, and some people I am acquainted with concluded to give it a trial. Now, in less than three weeks my husband and children are once more glad to meet me with kisses and my friends exclaim when I meet them: "How well you look!" You may rest assured that I will always speak well of the Quaker Extract. It has done so much for me.'"

Don't put it off any longer, but get started on the road to health to-day. The Quaker Remedies can be obtained at Coursey & Munn's drug store, 29 Marietta Street. If you suffer with rheumatism, catarrh, kidney, liver, stomach, bladder or blood troubles, indigestion, constipation, start to-day and get well. The Quaker Extract will cure you the same as it has cured hundreds of others. Call to-day and obtain Quaker Extract, 3 for $2.50, 6 for $5.00. Oil of Balm, 25c, or 5 for $1.00. We prepay all express charges on all orders of $3.00 or over.

POULTRY, PET AND LIVE STOCK

Birds of Quality Bring Good Sales

Low Grade Stock Causes Dissatisfaction and Means Disaster to Shipper.

EDITED BY JUDGE F. J. MARSHALL

Quality should be the aim of the poultry raiser at all times, whether he is producing eggs for stock or for the market. A low grade breeding stock will not sell well, especially if it is seen before it is purchased and when it is sent out upon mail orders it will cause dissatisfaction, and this means disaster for the shipper nearly every time. Every dissatisfied customer means a strong advertisement of the wrong kind. Also a dissatisfied customer is a hard proposition to buck against. Such a customer always takes special pains to tell his friends and acquaintances how shabbily he has been treated and never loses an opportunity to throw a brick in your path. A business carried on in such a manner requires an ever-increasing amount of advertising to keep one's trade up to the same level, which is not a very paying business. The really successful poultryman is the one who works for quality first, last and all the time. He gives his customer just a little more quality each time than he is looking for. The result is, the customer takes delight in singing the praises of the fair-dealing poultryman to all comers. Quality in the show room counts. It counts as nothing else can count. The breeder who places a dozen fairly good cockerels in the show room in hopes of winning first stands but little more show to get this prize than does the party who shows but one. One really tip-top bird in the show room is worth as much as a whole carload of fair specimens. It is good enough to win, and that is what it is put there for. It is but little less important in the breeding yard, where it will produce stock running 60 to 75 per cent good specimens, while the progeny from common stock would not be near up to standard and would not reproduce this kind. If you have not the room to care for successfully more than 100 growing chicks and have 300 on hand, you had better cull them out now and not wait too late when sickness overtakes them. Kill and eat those that are not good ones. Get them on the market as soon as possible, so as to give the better ones a chance to develop more rapidly, which is very essential to quality. Who cares to look at 300 or 400 half-cared-for, ill-shaped chickens when they can just as easily have 50 or 100 plump ones? Uniform quality in poultry and eggs for market is what counts. That is the reason a good strain of thoroughbred stock is so much better than the everlasting scrub. You can get uniformity. Better raise 100 chickens weighing 600 pounds than 150 mongrels weighing the same amount. Did you ever think along this line?

Judge Marshall: We have a lot of hens that stand around under the trees and pluck the weathers out of each others' necks. They did this some time before I found out what the trouble was, and I could not imagine what was making them so bare around the head and neck. Can you tell me what starts them to doing this? Also, what will cure them of the habit?

We get a lot of good from The Georgian poultry column, and will thank you very much for a reply.

MRS. S. S. M.

Madison Fla.

Answer: This pernicious habit is usually formed by idleness, crowding ing, lack of green food and insects or meat of some kind. It is usually started by some one meddlesome old hen that starts in one the male gird of the flock, and then others get at it from seeing her, until soon many of them are at it. If you will make a close study of their habits you may find that one is doing all the mischief. If so, she can either be sent to the pot or put in a pen by herself for a while, at the same time trimming off the curved point of the upper mandible so that it will not close down on anything closely. In this way you can almost entirely stop her operations, even when left with the flock all the time. Yet it is best to put her to herself for a while and then back into her regular pen. Some recommend rubbing the neck feathers with some bitter ointment like aloes and vaseline or lard. This bitter dose will sometimes get them to desist. But the best treatment is to trim the offender as indicated and then keep them busy working for their food, which should be well balanced, including meat in some way and soft food once a day into which a little salt and pepper has been added. Beef lungs secured fresh from the butcher and nailed to the side of the roosting house so high that they will have to jump up to get a bit off of it will serve to satisfy their craving for blood.

$100,000 Outlay For New Concern

Georgia Lead Works to Build in Suburbs—Many Realty Transfers—Business Good.

Another large commercial industry has come to Atlanta and will begin operations with an investment of $100,000. This is the Georgia Lead Works, located at the Southern Railway belt line, East and Bishop Streets, near the Atlanta Steel Works. Within a week H. J. Carr & Co., engineers and contractors, will start work on a $25,000 steel frame building for this concern. The building will be 50 by 200 feet.

The Georgia Lead Works is said to be a branch of the United Lead Company, with main offices in New York and branch offices in various sections of the country.

Mr. Carr also has the contract for the new $205,000 commission merchants' building on Produce Row and Central Avenue, and ground for this work was broken Tuesday. Sixteen produce merchants have signed up for space. The building is to be one of the largest concrete structures in the country.

West Peachtree Work Starts.

Members of the committee of the West Peachtree Improvement Club met Monday to talk over a final plan for regrading West Peachtree, and were informed Tuesday morning that the County Commissioners would decide at the regular meeting Saturday morning at 10 o'clock on the date when the work should actually start. The opinion exists that retaining walls will be put up within 30 days.

The committee is composed of Judge Spencer R. Atkinson, James T. Wright, Frank P. Rice, Dr. William Owens and Judge E. W. Born.

Many Realty Transfers.

A glance at the records at the county court house is sufficient to indicate the activity with which realty transfers are being negotiated. In Monday's list, for instance, there were 36 warranty deeds, which is unusual.

The bonds for title show some interesting small sales, among them being the following:

R. H. Williamson to John D. Muldrew, on Highland View, 265 feet west of Highland Avenue, 50 by 150, $6,500.

James Luther Campbell to John D. Muldrew, on Piedmont Place, 568 feet east of Peachtree, 33 by 135, $6,250.

D. D. Henry to Mrs. W. R. Fullerton, on Maiden Lane, 95 feet north of Yale Avenue, College Park, 47 1-2 by 200, $2,500, and transferred to Mrs. Maude Muldrew for a valuable consideration.

The Bradstreet Forecast.

Prediction by the Bradstreet agents' meeting in Atlanta that the South will soon undergo a great commercial change, with immediate signs of greater prosperity than ever before, has attracted a great deal of attention among local real estate men. This prediction has been made from time to time by the dealers in land, who have long been known to be among the most optimistic of Atlanta's business men. Realty dealers expect good crops to bring a great deal of activity in all lines.

To Build Apartment.

Robert E. Riley expects to build a $30,000 apartment house on the site which he recently purchased from the Raoul estate. He said so Tuesday morning. The site is on the west side of Piedmont Avenue, just north of West Fourteenth Street. Mr. Riley's apartment will be similar in design to the Connerat apartment at the northwest corner of West Peachtree and West Peachtree Place.

Healey Building Active.

Steel work for the Healey Building has mounted to the second floor, and the gang of workmen attending to this part of the structure are rushing the work. During the past week flooring has been laid on the ground floor of the building and the two monster derricks, which at first rested on the ground, have been raised to the street level. These derricks, by the way, are the finest pair ever brought into the South, according to Mr. Healey. They are nearly 100 feet high.

Steel girders on the Hurt Building are about placed. They have reached the top, which is seventeen stories.

Building Remains Active.

The erection of local residences maintains a good pace, judging from figures at the Building Inspector's office. Monday a permit was issued to Mrs. M. A. O'Donnell to build a two-story brick veneer dwelling at 606 Ponce DeLeon Avenue, to cost $10,000. H. W. Nicholes is the contractor.

A permit has been issued for the construction of a $5,000, two-story frame at 8 Severn Avenue by the owner, Mrs. Lillie L. Skinner, and to John S. Owens to build for $4,750 at 350 Greenwood Avenue a one-story frame, and to James L. Wright to install a heating plant in the $60,000 Wright apartments at North Avenue and Willow Street, at a cost of $3,750.

For Peachtree Paving.

Peachtree paving from Fifteenth Street to Buckhead will be discussed by the County Commissioners at an early meeting, the date to be announced later. Leading property owners are expected to appear and suggest a plan for raising the money for this needed improvement.

Profit in Sale Is $8,000.

Three sales in thirteen months of the three-story mill-constructed building at the southwest corner of Haynes and Hunter Streets, has netted a total profit of $8,000. Judges L. S. Roan and C. S. Reid, the latter of Palmetto, have bought the parcel from N. H. Bullock for $35,000. The lot is 58 by 110 feet. W. S. McBride, of the Clark & McBride Agency, sold it three times, first for A. A. Rayles, Jr., to Mrs. Ora B. Mangum for $27,000, and later for Mrs. Mangum to Mr. Bullock for $28,500. The building is occupied by Sullivan & Co., furniture dealers, on a long lease at $200 a month.

Three Ships at a Time As An Example

They Would No More Think of Dilly-Dallying With Their Navy in Great Britain Than A MERCHANT WOULD THINK OF LETTING HIS INSURANCE LAPSE ON A GREAT STORE Filled With Millions of Dollars' Worth of Merchandise.

It did not require any extra session of Parliament to elicit from the British First Lord of the Admiralty the prompt announcement that three battleships that were to have been laid down next March for the British Navy will, instead, be laid down at once on account of the rejection by the Canadian Senate of the naval bill.

The United Kingdom had hoped that Canada would relieve it of at least a small part of the vast expense of naval construction. But, as that is not yet to be, the Admiralty goes at it thoroughly and without a day's loss of time.

They would no more think of dilly-dallying with their navy in Great Britain THAN A MERCHANT WOULD THINK OF LETTING HIS INSURANCE LAPSE ON A GREAT STORE filled with millions of dollars' worth of merchandise.

Whether Great Britain has the merchandise, the broad, world-wide trade, because she has the battleships, the insurance fully paid up, it would be hard to determine. But this much is certain: She DID have the sea power before she had the trade.

Three new battleships, mark you, not one! There is economy and speed of construction in three. Every smallest part is made in triple, and the three can be ready almost as soon as one.

THAT IS WHAT JAPAN IS DOING. FOUR ships of a class are being built for her simultaneously in English yards, THREE more in her home yards. One of the four is already afloat in English waters.

We lag behind with ONE laid down this year! There is gathering evidence that Congress has had its lesson and is now willing to vote for two more this year. Why not THREE? That is the economical and up-to-date way of building navies. For a nation that does things on such a wholesale scale as the United States, WHY SINGLE OUT THE NAVY, OF ALL THINGS, AND HANDLE THAT ON A BANANA-STAND SCALE?

The other day there was printed a remarkable story from a very authoritative source of the frank after-dinner talk of the predecessor of the present Japanese Ambassador to the United States.

He was quoted as confessing that what the Japanese would have to fear, if anything, in a war with this country, would be, not OUR navy, nor OUR army, nor anything WE could do, but RUSSIA. No doubt he was polite. No doubt he gilded the humiliating truth he was honest enough to state. But did he tell ALL the truth? Supposing Japan had previously made its terms with Russia! Or supposing that the Japanese mind should change!

The moral is startlingly plain. Let this newspaper again repeat the truth that REAL PATRIOTISM IS EVEN MORE NECESSARY IN TIME OF PEACE THAN IN TIME OF WAR.

A Terrapin Patch With Every Lot

Wrought to a high pitch of indignation by the high cost of terrapin, the Bureau of Fisheries has determined to place these delicate little creatures within the reach of all. A brochure on the rearing and care of terrapin will soon be obtainable by all who have "pulls" with Congressmen, and thereafter terrapin farms will spring up like dandelion patches in every quarter of the land. No longer the market man will coldly inform the timid housewife that diamond backs are two dollars and fifty cents each, for they will be shovelled into bins like coal by the newly instructed farmers, and if they bring ten cents a dozen it will only be on a strong market.

This, of course, will lower the public veneration for the terrapin and lose him his high place on the banquet menu, but it will bring him once more into the lowly cottage of the tired business man and supply an agreeable change in his daily diet of roast beef medium.

The Bureau of Fisheries is to be congratulated. Having left its strictly legitimate domain to deal with these amphibians, which are only constructive fish at best, perhaps it can find a way to classify steers and sheep as fish, and by teaching how they may be cheaply brought to maturity bring about real downward revision of the butchers' schedules.

.:. Tom Casey .:.

By WILLIAM F. KIRK

I WAS walking in a pasture not so very long ago,
When I came upon a brooklet and I stopped to watch its flow:
A silvery little brooklet, winding in and twisting out
Through growing beds of watercress that sheltered tiny trout.
The robins with their singing and the brooklet purling by
Made a sort of mystic music, half a laugh and half a sigh.
Then I swallowed something aching and brushed a tear away,
For I seemed to hear the music poor Tom Casey used to play.

For an instant I could see him in a sort of misty dream
As he sat at his piano on a bank across the stream;
But his face was even whiter than the face we used to know
And his great dark eyes were brighter than the eyes that used to glow.
When I heard the rippling tinkle I could close my eyes and see
All the boys that Casey played for ere his spirit floated free.
Then I saw the pasture only, for the vision died away,
Just as Casey faded from us with the things he used to play.

Flatter Your Own Folks

Praise Is the Lever by Which Each of Us Can Move Our Little World, She Declares.

By DOROTHY DIX.

CONSIDERING that vanity is the most prominent and universal human attribute, and that we are all brother and sister to the donkey who can be cajoled along anywhere, but can not be driven a step, isn't it queer that we have never found out how much more efficacious a weapon praise is than blame?

Personally, we all know in our secret souls that we are easy marks in the hands of the flatterer, and that we may be twisted around the finger of the jollier, and yet we are so stupid that we never think of applying to those about us the means by which we are ourselves so easily worked. It's the greased hinge that swings to our lightest touch, not the rusty one that we batter at with a sledgehammer.

Poor Johnnie.

Of course, we should put in our best effort, and time, and thought in correcting our faults and strengthening our weak performances. As a matter of fact, we do just the opposite. It's our virtues that we magnify, and the things that we do well, and that we know we are going to be praised for, that we strive to do better and better.

It's the people who give us the glad hand that influence us, not those who use a club on us, and the surest way to develop the characteristic you want in anyone about you is to keep a rosy spotlight turned upon it.

For instance!

Every mother is anxious for her children to be courteous, and to have good manners. In order to achieve this the average mother is just one incarnate "don't." It's Johnnie, don't come in the room with your hat on; Johnnie, don't sit still in your chair while a lady stands; Johnnie, don't do this; Johnnie, don't do that, and Johnnie gets his back up, and says to himself that he isn't going to be bothered with all that foolish nonsense and he's going to do exactly as he pleases.

I know one mother with two boys who, observing the futility of blaming children for their bad manners, decided to try what praising them for their good manners would do. She would remark where her Johnnie could hear it upon his exquisite courtesy to women, and thereupon Johnnie would break his neck to open doors, and pick up handkerchiefs for ladies, and you couldn't have kept him in his seat on the trolley while a woman stood if you had nailed him to it. Johnnie's mother also casually remarked to him how gratifying it was to her that he had such good table manners, and from there on Johnnie ceased to be a "spotter" and became a connoisseur among the which-is-which of the forks and spoons on the dinner table.

A Bad Temper.

I knew a little girl who had a terrific temper. Her mother tried in every way to teach her to control it. She pointed out to Sallie how unlovely and unattractive a shrewish woman was, and how everybody would hate her and avoid her if she gave way to tantrums. All in vain. Sally was insensible to that view of the subject.

Finally one day her mother said to her, "You have a brilliant mind, and a wonderfully strong will. I wonder that any one with your intelligence and your determination of character should be dominated by a weakness." That appealed to Sally's vanity, and just to show that she was stronger than her temper she conquered it so that to-day she has a reputation for amiability.

And if you can do more with soft words than with hard ones with children, how very, very more efficacious in flattery than knocks in the family circle! Believe me, it is soft soap that makes the domestic machinery revolve without a hitch.

Who is the woman who spends hours and days joyously over the kitchen stove, concocting toothsome dishes for her lord and master? Is it the wife of the man who is always batting her because she can't make bread like mother used to make? Nay, verily. The woman who knows that her best culinary efforts are going to be growled over, anyway, stops on the way home from her bridge whist, and buys an unsavory mess at the delicatessen store, which she sets before the grouch she is tied to.

It is the wise husband who praises his wife's handiwork as he eats who fares sumptuously every day, for there's some encouragement to a woman to make a burnt offering of herself if she is going to receive the proper appreciation for it. But nobody wants to be an unsung martyr.

The Secret.

Who is the woman who pares, and scrimps, and economizes, and makes over her old clothes and retrims her hats? Is it the wife whose husband is always berating her for her extravagance? Not much. She feels that inasmuch as she is going to be blamed anyway, she had as well have good clothes by way of consolation. The woman who squeezes a nickel until the buffalo on it howls with pain is the one whose husband is always boasting that she is such a financier that if she had her due she would be Secretary of the Treasury.

Also, you may observe, that the husbands who are nailed to their own firesides are the men whose wives are always telling about how entertaining John is, and how big and strong and handsome and wise he is. Keeping flattery on tap at home is like keeping Scotch on the sideboard. A man doesn't have to run around the corner to get it. Also it's generally a better brand and not so expensive.

The moral of all of which is that praise is the lever by which each of us can move our little world. And the more fools we, that we haven't sense enough to use it oftener.

The Delhi Magazine

By REV. THOMAS B. GREGORY.

THE defense and explosion of the great magazine at Delhi 56 years ago—May 13, 1857—deserves to rank along with the great achievements of history, not excepting even Leonidas at Thermopylae or the immortal three who held the bridge across the Tiber against Lars Porsena.

The magazine was a huge building packed with arms and ammunition, and was in charge of Lieutenant Willoughby and eight subordinates. It was nine men against a great city. Knowing that they could not hold their ground against such odds, a fuse was run into the magazine and at its outer end a man was stationed with portfire in hand.

Presently came a summons to surrender, which was, of course, refused, and then on came the swarms of Sepoys. Willoughby's eight guns the meanwhile (each worked by a single man), pouring death into them. But on came the swaying mass of Sepoys; a rain of death falls upon the little band from the walls and in another moment will come the rush of bayonet. Willoughby raises his hand, Scully applies the portfire to the fuse and the mighty magazine goes up in one huge thunderclap! The whole city seems to shake with the concussion, and a great pillar of smoke rises in the sky. "It is the signal to heaven and earth of how the nine Britons who kept the great magazine had fulfilled their trust."

Of the gallant nine, Scully, who fired the fuse, and four others, vanished along with hundreds of the mutineers, but strange to say Willoughby and three others escaped death.

M'REYNOLDS MAY QUIT IN ROW WITH WILSON

Attorney General's Split With President Open Secret at Capital—Resignation Expected.

WASHINGTON, June 10.—The first sign of the anticipated friction in President Wilson's Cabinet has made its appearance, and as a result Washington to-day confidently awaits the news that a member of the President's official family is preparing to resign. Attorney General J. C. McReynolds is the man who, rumor says, is getting ready to quit the Cabinet because of troubles with his chief.

The friction between the President and the Attorney General dates back almost to the inauguration. The President considers that the work of the Department of Justice should be kept entirely secret. "Pitiless publicity," according to the President, is intended to apply to the operations of all of the governmental branches except the Departments of State and Justice—the former because international politics is not thought to be fit matters for exploitation in the public prints, the latter because of the danger of warning those about to be prosecuted when the Government agents are on their trail.

Leaks in Department.

The Attorney General had other ideas, which he did not hesitate to express to his chief, who, as unhesitatingly, disagreed. Nevertheless, there were a number of "leaks" in the Department of Justice. The details of the proposed prosecution of the tobacco trust and a number of other legal steps which the Government intended to take against the violators of the Sherman anti-trust law found their way into the newspapers.

President Wilson objected. The Attorney General replied that he was running his department, and intimated that should the President find fault with the manner in which the trust prosecutions are being conducted that he would step down and let some one else handle the cases.

Break an Open Secret.

The President held several private conferences with his prosecutor last week. To-day he called him into the White House early in the morning, and after several maneuvers designed to keep the interview private, finally consulted with the Attorney General in his study, after McReynolds had informed the newspaper men that he was leaving the White House "for the day."

That there is a breach between the President and his Attorney General is an open secret. Official Washington is waiting only to see how long it will last before widening to the extent of forcing a change in the Cabinet.

Infant Is Slain by Poisoned Needles

NEW YORK, June 10.—The disclosure by an autopsy that poisoned needles in the liver and stomach had caused the death of Anna, the infant child of Mr. and Mrs. Herman Sorenson, Long Island, set the police to-day on the trail of a young woman formerly employed in the Sorenson house as nurse.

The young woman was discharged after acting in an erratic manner.

Ten Postmasters Named in Georgia

WASHINGTON, June 10.—President Wilson to-day nominated the following Georgia postmasters: A. J. Lovelady, Ball Ground; John S. McKenzie, Comer; L. F. Maxwell, Cornelia; Martha E. Court Holds Negro Is a Burglar for Stealing Own Shoes

Charley Tate, negro, is in the toils of the law, charged with burglary, because he stole his own shoes from a shoe shop on Peters Street, where he had taken them to be repaired.

Charley admitted the theft when he was brought before Judge Broyles on Tuesday morning, but said he was forced to steal the shoes, as he did not have the money to pay for the repairs and get them out. It is supposed that Charley's act was the result of the drop in temperature Monday night.

Since the law fails to take the weather into account, Charley was bound over on the charge of burglary.

Jim Ham Lewis to Speak at Athens

The invitation was extended to him through Senators Smith and Bacon, of Georgia.

Senator Lewis and Senator Smith are old friends, the latter having presented Lewis' credentials to the Senate when he was received as a member.

The searching parties are being organized under the direction of the Lima Geographical Society.

Couldn't Find Gems, So Steals Laundry

A daring burglar forced a window at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence May, 157 Myrtle Street, Monday night between 8:30 and 9:30 o'clock, lighted the house, which was vacant, and ransacked every drawer in a search for money or jewels. A basket of freshly laundered clothes was taken, but nothing else of value seemed to be missing.

Mr. and Mrs. May are out of the city at present, but are expected home Tuesday.

INDICTMENT OF FELDER AND FAIN ASKED

Attorney Accused of Carrying Gun and Police Commissioner of Resort Brawl.

With blank bills of indictment against Attorney Thomas B. Felder and Police Commissioner W. F. Fain under consideration, the vice probe by the Fulton County Grand Jury took a sensational turn Tuesday.

Two witnesses told of disorder and rowdyism in a house at 40 East Harris Street, in which the Police Commissioner was said to have been involved.

The disorder, they said, occurred first just after the Christmas holidays, and when a call officer went to investigate, the Police Commissioner escaped arrest by getting in telephone communication with the department.

The witnesses said a repetition of the orgies occurred in April, with Commissioner Fain as a participant, and that although the disorder was of an aggravated form, the Commissioner again escaped arrest.

Felder Witness Missing.

When the Grand Jury began consideration of the charge against Colonel Felder for carrying concealed weapons, one witness gave the attorney a clean bill of health and the other and most important one could not be found.

Circumstances on which the bill of indictment was predicated transpired about a week ago in the Grand Jury waiting room, when hot words passed between Colonel Felder and Newport Lanford, chief of detectives.

Trouble between the attorney and the detective was averted by the timely interference of friends. Later the charge was advanced that Colonel Felder attempted to draw a weapon, and this morning the Grand Jury began consideration of a blanket indictment to that effect.

Dr. Horace Grant, who stepped between Felder and Lanford and ended the threatened fray, was sought as the principal witness, but when the Grand Jury wanted him to-day he was not there. A most rigid search of all places where he could likely be found proved fruitless.

Says He Saw No Weapon.

Henry Bellingrath, the one witness examined by the Grand Jury in the Felder case, said he saw no weapon either before, during or after the altercation between Felder and Lanford. He then was asked if some of Colonel Felder's friends had not retired with him to an ante-room and relieved him of a pistol, and he replied in the negative.

Since Dr. Horace Grant can not be found, and the only other witness gives Colonel Felder a clean bill, it looks as if no indictment against the attorney will be returned.

The Grand Jury then plunged into the vice problem. Carl Hutcheson, a legal attache of Colonel Felder's office, who attacked the competency of Chief of Police Beavers, was the first witness. He was first questioned about the house at 95 Spring Street.

The Grand Jury was trying to obtain new evidence in the case of Mrs. N. P. Powell, who was given a four months' sentence. Police Chief Beavers charged the courts for many months blocked his closing of the place.

No Specific Accusation.

It also was understood that Hutcheson gave no evidence against any particular party, but that he gave much general information and furnished the Grand Jury a list of witnesses who, he said, could aid in making cases against specific individuals.

The two witnesses testifying in the case of Police Commissioner Fain were J. A. Skaggs, an agent of the Southern Express Company, and Allen Young, a real estate man. Both told similar stories to the Grand Jury.

Just after the Christmas holidays Skaggs and Young said, they complained to the Police Commission of a fight and general disorder in the house at 40 East Harris Street, charging Police Commissioner Fain with being a principal. While the disorder was in progress, they testified,

SUMMER TO REPULSE WINTER'S ATTACK

Weather Man Admits Tuesday Broke All Sorts of Records, but Denies Snow Fell.

Br-r-r-r! These chilly June blasts do shiver one's timbers—and they will continue, too, until Wednesday, for Weather Man VonHerrmann says so, after a most careful observation of clouds, barometers, maps and things peculiar to the profession.

The fun began along toward midnight Monday, when the mercury dropped down, down, down until it reached the 52 mark about 7 o'clock. Blankets and coverlets, relegated to the shelf weeks ago, were hauled out all during the wee sma' hours and some folks with temperate dispositions actually started fires.

"Snow" Is Not Official.

Shortly after 8 o'clock many Atlantans, with keen optics, "saw" snow—at least they said they did, with some emphasis, but Chief VonHerrmann, of the Weather Bureau, set all such talk aside with the statement that snow was impossible with a temperature of only 52 degrees. The "snow," he said, probably was the scattered contents of some chamber maid's ash pan. At any rate, "officially" there hasn't been and isn't any snow.

Chief VonHerrmann admits, however, that, snow or no snow, it's cool—cold for June. The same weather conditions, he says, prevail throughout the South, North and East, with heavy frost in many sections.

"Mean" Record Is Broken.

Perhaps the most interesting thing locally, however, from a strictly scientific viewpoint, is the fact that Tuesday's minimum record of 52 degrees, registered at 7 a. m., smashes all existing records for June 10. The only 10th day of June which comes anywhere near to-day's record was that of the good year 1912, when a minimum of 56 degrees was registered.

But this is not all by any means—another record, which Mr. VonHerrmann calls the "mean," has been torn into smithereens for a period of 34 years by the good big margin of 10 degrees. In other words, Tuesday's "mean" will be something like 58 degrees; while the lowest "mean" on record, that of 1885 and 1891, hovered well above the 65 mark.

Other Junes Were Colder.

However chilly, disagreeable and soggy Tuesday's brand of weather may be, it isn't the worst on record for June, by any means, for the old records, exhibited by Mr. VonHerrmann Tuesday morning, indicate that the people of Atlanta had good big fires on June 1, 1889, when the mercury dropped to 39 degrees. June 13, 1903, was also a cold one with a minimum record of 46 degrees.

Nevertheless, Tuesday, June 10, 1913, is in a class by itself, and, if Mr. VonHerrmann's predictions come true, it will remain so for a long time.

Farmers Might Suffer.

Commissioner of Agriculture J. J. Connor, in his office at the Capitol Tuesday morning, declared that if the cold continued farmers would suffer damage to their crops.

"Of course, cotton can not stand very much cold," declared the Commissioner, "and if the cold weather continues it will be badly damaged."

Dispatches from Washington, D. C., say the Middle Atlantic and New England States are suffering the coldest June weather ever known in those parts. "A high barometric pressure of great magnitude" is the official reason. Frosts are reported in Vermont, New York, New England, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan and Wisconsin.

Michigan Fruit Crop Is Damaged by Cold.

DETROIT, June 10.—Reports today from the fruit growing sections of Michigan indicated that heavy damage to growing crops had been inflicted by the cold weather of the last few days. In some places the mercury has descended as low as 29 degrees and frosts are reported.

Judge Speer to Quit Court Bench in 1918

MACON, GA., June 10.—Judge Emory Speer will retire from the bench of the United States Court for the Southern District of Georgia in 1918. He will then be 70 years of age, and will have served 33 years on the bench, thus being eligible for retirement on full salary. It is partly because of this that he is opposed to the proposed division of the territory of his district.

Judge Speer was appointed to the judiciary in 1885. He was district attorney for the two preceding years, and before that he was in Congress for four years.

Boys Voted More Apt Music Pupils

CHICAGO, June 10.—Boys are more worthy of a musical education than girls.

LOBBYIST FOUND WHO ADMITS IT

Ex-Governor of Hawaii, Fighting Free Sugar, Calls It "Philanthropic Work."

WASHINGTON, June 10.—In the presence of a small army of alleged lobbyists, the Senate lobby committee to-day heard former Governor Carter of Hawaii, here from the Hawaiian Islands to urge the retention of a duty on sugar.

Mr. Carter defended the nature of his work and told the committee that he was engaged in "philanthropic work."

He claimed he received no remuneration and had been sent here by the Hawaiian Board of Trade and various business interests. He said there were 54 corporations, representing 9,000 individuals, in the sugar business in the islands, and their capital was $82,000,000.

Mr. Carter said he refused to present his case before the sub-committee of the Senate Finance Committee handling the sugar schedule because he thought that committee adverse to his interest.

Carter admitted the sugar campaign was waged with the intent to "influence Congressmen." He regarded the campaign as perfectly legitimate, and in no sense open to serious criticism.

Mrs. Hudson Can Wed Again

Suit by Former Wife of Rich Kentuckian Starts Rumor of "Another Suitor."

Pretty Mrs. Willie Hudson, divorced wife of Lynn W. Hudson, scion of a wealthy Kentucky family, may now remarry with the sanction of the Georgia law, according to a decision of Judge Ellis in the Superior Court Tuesday morning.

This permission was the culmination of a suit brought by Mrs. Hudson to have the disability to remarry placed upon her at the settlement of her sensational divorce two years ago removed. She was represented in court by Colonel T. B. Felder.

Mrs. Hudson's action has given origin to a report among her friends that she is to marry again. Despite this, however, the talented divorcee has been studying for the stage for several months, and announced recently she would go to New York this fall to make her debut in vaudeville.

'ROMANCE DEAD,' SAYS DIXIE BRIDE

Birmingham Beauty, Back From Europe, "Just Got Married." No Honeymoon at All.

NEW YORK, June 10.—"Is romance dead in America?" is a question that has been asked frequently of late.

"It is," is the reply of Mrs. Joseph Walker, of Birmingham, Ala., bride, who is back in this country to-day after a trip abroad with her husband. "Honeymoon" would not be the right word to use, because Mrs. Walker insists that there was absolutely no sentiment attached to her marriage.

Mrs. Walker, who is a striking example of the Southern type of beauty, "just got married," according to her statement to the ship news reporters.

"There wasn't any romance connected with my romance," she said. "I just decided to get married and that was all there was to it. I liked Mr. Walker, he liked me and we got married. Then we went for a little vacation trip. Please don't call it a honeymoon."

ROSSER ASKS GRAND JURY GRILL FOR CONLEY

Why Has Negro Been Protected From Questioning by Impartial Body?

Luther Z. Rosser, chief of counsel for Leo M. Frank, issued the first public statement Tuesday that he has made since the arrest of the factory superintendent six weeks ago on the suspicion of being the murderer of Mary Phagan.

He took occasion to point out many of the absurdities in the stories of the negro Jim Conley, and paid his respects in a forcible manner both to Chief of Detectives Lanford and Colonel Thomas B. Felder, who have been accusing each other of trying to protect Frank.

Mr. Rosser explained the violation of his invariable custom of maintaining absolute silence in regard to a case in which he was interested by calling attention to the prejudice that had been aroused in the public mind against Frank by the controversy between Lanford and Colonel Felder.

His statement, in full, follows:

Mr. Rosser's Statement.

Editor Atlanta Georgian:

Felder and Lanford, in an effort to make progress in their feud, charge each the other with giving aid to Leo Frank. Lanford charges that Felder was employed by Frank and is seeking for that reason to shield him. Felder charges that Lanford and his associates are also seeking, for some reason, to shield and protect Frank.

Both charges are untrue, and, at a time when no harm could come to an innocent man, might well be treated as antidotes to monotony.

Unfortunately, however, the present situation is such that fair-minded citizens may be misled by these counter charges.

Felder does not, nor has he at any time, directly or indirectly, represented Frank. For Lanford to charge the contrary does Frank a serious injustice.

Felder Against Frank.

If Chief Lanford had been in a sane, normal mood, he would have known that every act of Felder has been against Frank. The engagement of the Burns Agency ought to have satisfied Lanford. No detective agency of half prudence would have double-crossed the Atlanta Department in the Phagan case. Nor did Felder have excuse for suspicion against Lanford. There was reason to suspect his fairness, his accuracy and the soundness of his methods, but not his reckless zeal against Frank.

Had Felder been in a calm mood I am sure he would never have charged the Chief and his associates with intention to help Frank.

Lanford at once, as soon as Felder charged him with favoring Frank, settled in his mind the guilt of Frank, and from that moment has bent every energy of his department, not in finding the murderer, but in trying to prove to the public that Felder was wrong in charging him with trying to shield Frank.

Frank Found Clean.

His department has exhausted itself in an effort to fix upon Frank an immoral life, on the theory that a violator of the Seventh Commandment was likewise a murderer. This effort has failed. No man in Atlanta has had his moral character subjected to such a test, and there is not in the whole city of Atlanta a half-dozen men who could have more successfully stood the test.

His employees, without a single exception, have made affidavits to his uprightness. Lanford's department subpenaed every one of them before the Coroner's jury, and after keeping them more than two days, did not dare to swear a single one of them.

Before and after the Coroner's verdict this whole city has been combed with a fine-tooth comb and a like combing has been applied to Brooklyn, the city of his birth, to find something against his moral character. With what result? The silence of the detective department gives the answer.

"Drivel and Nonsense."

Lanford's conduct in connection with the woman Formby and the negro Conley shows that he was stung by Felder's charge that he was favoring Frank, or that for some other reason he was temporarily out of his head.

He swallowed whole the statements of this Formby woman, bearing upon their face the clear proof that they were by no means to be believed.

This woman was not unknown to Lanford. She did not entrap him by appearing under the guise of a truthful, sober, virtuous woman. But so absorbed was he, either in trying to disprove Felder's charge or in the foolish pride of opinion, that he accepted without doubt or fair investigation the drivel and nonsense of this woman.

So far beside himself did he become that he had the folly to furnish to the papers, based upon this woman's statement, the theory that Frank, during the night of the murder, wishing to rid himself of the body, was seeking to do so in a room rented from this woman.

The folly and difficulties of the theory did not disturb Lanford. They would have disturbed anybody but Lanford. His insane desire to justify himself cleared the matter of all difficulties and follies.

Conley's Actions.

If the case of the Fomby woman did not clear, Lanford of Felder's charge, that of the Conley negro ought to have done so.

Conley is a very ordinary, ignorant, brutal negro, not unacquainted with the stockade. His actions immediately after the crime were suspicious. So much so that they attracted the attention of the employees of the factory and occasioned general comment. In spite of these facts, Conley was not taken into custody until several days after the crime, and not then until the employees of the factory caught him suspiciously washing a shirt and as a result reported him to the police. He was not brought before the Coroner's Jury, and practically no notice was taken of him in that investigation. So swiftly were Lanford and his associates pursuing Frank that they ran over this negro standing in their path with the marks of guilt clearly upon him.

Finally the pressure of public suspicion brought this negro to Lanford's attention. Conley began to talk, and negro-like, to talk so as to protect himself, and as a means thereto to cast suspicion upon some one else. Ordinarily the detectives could be trusted not to aid the negro in an effort to clear himself by placing the crime on a white man, but in this case it is to be feared that the negro was not discouraged. Lanford had finally banked all his sense, all his reputation as a man and a policeman upon Frank's guilt, and it would be remarkable if he discouraged this negro from involving Frank. If Lanford and his followers had acted wisely, and kept open minds seeking only the murderer and not seeking to vindicate their announced opinions, the negro would have by this time told the whole truth.

Varying Affidavits.

Conley made one statement. It did not meet the announced opinions of Lanford. He made another. This second was not up to the mark; it did not sufficiently show Frank's guilt. Another was made, which was supposed to be nearer the mark. Whereupon there was great rejoicing. Forgetting all others, this last statement—reached through such great tribulations—was proclaimed the truth, the last truth, and that there would be no other statement.

The detectives had at last got the statement which they thought sustained their views, saved their reputations and insured their places.

But what a statement! So full of contradictions, so evidently made for self-protection and wherein was so easily apparent the guiding hand of detective. If Lanford meant to be fair, if he was only seeking the truth, why did he rush into print with the assertion that this statement was the truth and therefore of necessity the last? Might he not in decency have left this negro to his own will, unbiased by the opinion that the statement was true and the last to be given? Who knows but that this negro might have given numerous other statements if he had not been so heavily handicapped by Lanford's opinion.

The truth is, this negro is not to give any other or further statement if the detective department can prevent, unless made under their supervision and direction. He must, at all times, be under the influence and control of Lanford. He must have Lanford's sucking bottle at all times to his lips, sucking Lanford's views and theories of this case. The ragged places in his statement must be darned, the torn places patched, and no one but the detective department could be trusted to do that.

Demands Fairness.

No one has been rude enough to bring this negro before the Grand Jury, nor, indeed, to make any charge against him.

After the statement of this negro and in view of all the evidence which so strongly points to him as the slayer of little Mary Phagan, is the Grand Jury to leave him without charge or investigation to be wet-nursed by Lanford until Frank's trial?

Or is it the purpose to keep the negro's case from the Grand Jury in the nature of an offered reward to spur him on to swear his worst against the white man?

Would it not be just and decent to bring this negro's case before the Grand Jury and let that body hear his confession, so that it can then decide whether the negro should then be indicted?

In the shadow of this great crime let there be no thimble-rigging; let no single fact be concealed; let no man's place or reputation stand in the way of the fullest, fairest investigation.

Respectfully,
(Signed) LUTHER Z. ROSSER.

Eyewitnesses to Slaying Sought.

Jim Conley, whose sensational story has made him an accessory after the fact in the murder of Mary Phagan, is sticking closely to the details he unfolded in his remarkable affidavit, according to his attorney, William M. Smith.

Mr. Smith said Tuesday morning that Conley has varied in no essential particular from the original tale of his part in the disposal of the body of the strangled girl, under the direction of Leo Frank. To Mr. Smith and others who have interviewed the negro in the last few days he has begun at the moment when he says he saw the little form lying limp and inert at the rear of the second floor, until he declares he wrote the mysterious notes at Frank's dictation in the National Pencil factory office.

In all his story there has been practically no conflict or contradiction with the affidavit to which he swore before the detectives after a half day's grilling. Mr. Smith said he believed his client was telling the whole truth.

Actual Witness Sought.

Despite the unshakable story of Conley, as he told it after making previous statements admittedly lies, a rumor has been in persistent circulation since last week that the detectives were seeking an actual witness to the crime. It is said such a person exists, and that he is a negro who shot craps with Conley in the basement of the factory on the day of the murder.

The rumor has it that this negro won all of Conley's money, and that he saw Conley in a half-drunken fury strike down the little Phagan girl when she came down the stairs of the factory with her silver mesh bag in her hands.

Although it is reported that this negro has been apprehended and is even now in custody in Atlanta, the authorities deny any knowledge of such a person. Attorneys for Frank will admit only that they have heard of such rumors, but they assert that they have no definite knowledge of the arrest of a negro who is said to have been an actual witness of the killing. It is understood, however, that they believe there is such a person. They are confident that Conley committed the horrible deed and that he had a witness or accomplice.

Leo Frank Still Silent.

Through all of the conflicting stories to which the excitement of the hunt for the slayer have given rise, Leo Frank has remained silent, his original story told before the Coroner's jury undisturbed and uncontradicted in any detail. While the detectives have torn Conley's first stories to shreds, they have been unable, so far as the public knows, to find a single misstatement in the story made by Frank at the inquest.

Since then, on the injunction of his counsel, Frank has had no comment to make. Stories have been spread that were most damaging to his general character, but he has remained mute. He has told his friends that he will have a story to tell at the proper time and that it will be so fully substantiated that there will be no doubt of his innocence.

Frank has made no public announcement of the fact, but it is known that he privately has signified his willingness to confront Conley and listen to the negro's story, and to repeat his own, if desired. His only stipulation is that the meeting shall not be in the nature of one of the star chamber sessions at police headquarters, at which the detectives only are present. Frank would insist that certain public officers be present so that there would be no opportunity for the manufacture of evidence colored in any particular. With these men present, he has said that he would be willing to be questioned as freely as he was at the Coroner's inquest.

STOCK EXCHANGE IS STIRRED BY RATE RULING

NEW YORK, June 10.—Stocks made sensational declines to-day and the Exchange became a scene of much excitement. Selling orders poured in from Europe, from the West and from the East. In the face of practically no demand, quotations dropped whole points at a time. By 1 o'clock, 680,000 shares had been traded in, and the selling orders were far from carried out.

The excuse was the Minnesota rate case decision handed down by the United States Supreme Court yesterday, a decision which Wall Street, after overnight deliberation, construed as disastrous to the railroads, particularly as it governs several more important cases of like nature now before the court, and will affect the earnings of many of the great systems.

Northern Pacific and Great Northern preferred were hardest hit, because they traverse the territory immediately affected.

Northern Pacific lost 6 1-4 points, and Great Northern preferred 5 points.

Great banking houses, vitally interested because of mortgage interests, tried to stem the tide. Kuhn, Loeb & Co. hurled big blocks of buying orders on the floor, trying to save Union Pacific, Southern Pacific and Pennsylvania. The First National was another heavy buyer.

J. P. Morgan & Co. purchased Steel common and preferred in large quantities.

CHARLTON MUST STAND TRIAL IN ITALY

WASHINGTON, June 10.—The application for the writ of habeas in behalf of Porter Charlton, who was arrested for the murder of his wife at Laka Como, Italy, two years ago, was denied by the Supreme Court of the United States to-day.

The decree of the lower court was affirmed. Charlton will be turned over to Italy to answer for his crime.

The writ of habeas can not be used as a writ of error, Justice Lurton said, delivering the opinion.

Evidence of insanity was not improperly excluded by the lower court, the Supreme Court found. The court concludes that the examining magistrate did not exceed his authority in this respect. The question of insanity could not be heard, it was held, at the time of trial.

Other Objections Turned Down.

The further objection that the application for Charlton was not made within 40 days also was rejected. The formal demand was made, it was declared, upon the Secretary of State.

As to the treaty with Italy, the court held it contained no reservation as to the citizens of one or the other country.

The fact that Italy has refused to extradite its own citizens, the court held, did not operate to prevent the United States from extraditing Charlton.

CARNEGIE FUNDS CRUSH ATLANTA SCHOOL

Sewanee Alumni Say Medical College Is One of 34 Victims of Educational Trust.

At least one Atlanta institution has felt the almost resistless force of Carnegie millions and has crumbled beneath it. That institution was the Hospital College of Medicine of Atlanta and the secretary of the Carnegie Foundation calls attention to its absence from the medical educational field in a recent interview given out in New York in which he points to this college's demise as an example for the efficiency of the foundation's work.

Now open war has been declared on the same foundation and the recent gift of $1,000,000 to Vanderbilt University by Carnegie by the powerful alumni of the University of the South (Sewanee) throughout the United States. The Sewanee men say that even as Carnegie has crushed out 34 small medical colleges, now he is trying to stifle in its infancy the medical department which Sewanee had planned to start at Nashville by his enormous gift to Vanderbilt. They go further and declare that the steel master's action is a direct blow at denominational education throughout the land.

The Hospital School of Medicine was never a large Atlanta college, but physicians say it was doing as good work as many institutions, but six months ago it died. In explanation of this demise, Secretary Furst, of the Carnegie Foundation, says that this college was among 34 that had been weeded out by the foundation in the past ten years.

Dr. John H. P. Hodgson, a prominent physician of New York and an alumnus of Sewanee, said recently that the activity of what he calls the "Educational Trust" threatens to blot Sewanee's Medical College from the map.

Last January, in response to word from Chancellor Hall, of Sewanee University, telling of the purpose to establish a medical school, the Rev. Dr. Henry S. Pritchett, head of the Carnegie Foundation, wrote to the Chancellor, showing that the Carnegie Corporation intended to use its influence against Sewanee.

Dr. Pritchett urged that Sewanee, which is controlled by the Episcopal Church, abandon its Nashville project, saying the corporation intended to support Vanderbilt University. At that time Vanderbilt, under Methodist control, was in the throes of a dispute over a proposal to throw off its religious restraint.

Asks Rating for Sewanee.

Dr. Pritchett declared Nashville could not maintain two such institutions, and that Vanderbilt suited the Carnegie Corporation's idea.

Soon after this Dr. Hodgson called upon Abraham Flexner, general manager of the General Education Board, at 17 Battery Place, asking him what rating Sewanee's medical college might expect when it opened. Under an agreement with the American Medical Association the General Education Board's judgment in college ratings is always accepted as final.

Hazer Scars Titanic Survivor; Expelled

GRANVILLE, OHIO, June 10.—Kent Pfeiffer, a junior at Denison University here, has been thrown out of school and ordered from town because he has been found guilty of leading six student hazers who branded Stuart Collet on the forehead with nitrate of silver, disfiguring him for life.

Collet would not mix with other students. Collet, who is a clergyman of the Church of England, survived the Titanic disaster.

Infant Is Slain by Poisoned Needles

NEW YORK, June 10.—The disclosure by an autopsy that poisoned needles in the liver and stomach had caused the death of Anna, the infant child of Mr. and Mrs. Herman Sorenson, Long Island, set the police to-day on the trail of a young woman formerly employed in the Sorenson house as nurse.

The young woman was discharged after acting in an erratic manner.

Ministers Unable to Block Sunday Ball

BINGHAMTON, N. Y., June 10.—Although the voters of Lestershire decided in favor of Sunday baseball on the referendum suggested by the opposing clergymen, the Ministerial Association of this city tried to prevent the State League game.

They appealed to Governor Sulzer and made an unsuccessful effort to get an injunction.

Anonymous Letters Sent Pastor Dargan

MACON, June 10.—The Rev. E. C. Dargan, pastor of the First Baptist Church, and president of the Southern Baptist Association, has received anonymous letters, telling him that his preaching is unsatisfactory and his work as pastor not acceptable to the congregation. He states, however, that he will not be influenced by the communications, believing that they were written by irresponsible parties.

INDICTMENT OF WILLIAM FAIN IS ASKED

Call Officer W. F. Anderson went to the Harris Street address, but Commissioner Fain telephoned to the police station and fixed matters up, so that no arrest followed.

Assistant Chief E. L. Jett and Police Captain W. M. Mayo were on the desk. With these facts before them, so Skaggs and Young told the Grand Jury, the Police Commissioners promised such things would not happen again if they would refrain from making a case against Fain.

In April, however, Skaggs and Young testified to-day, disorder in a more aggravated form occurred at the same address, with Fain as a principal, and a police call officer was sent to investigate. He found Fain and a woman alone in the house, the woman being drunk and badly beaten up; but again no arrests were made.

Assistant Chief E. L. Jett and Captain W. M. Mayo, who were in charge at headquarters each time Fain was said to have been at the Harris Street address, were the next witnesses called.

A blank bill of indictment, charging Colonel T. B. Felder with a misdemeanor in the carrying of concealed weapons, was presented to the Grand Jury when it met Tuesday morning in the Thrower Building.

The indictment is another chapter in the sensational Felder-Lanford controversy, which had its beginning in the publication of the details of a dictograph plot to obtain bribery evidence against Colonel Felder.

A personal clash between Chief of Detectives Lanford and Colonel Felder during the Grand Jury hearing gave rise to the present action. Criminations and recriminations were flying back and forth when the two men leaped from their chairs in an anteroom and started toward one another.

Felder's hand is said to have reached toward his hip pocket. Dr. Horace Grant, who stepped between the angry men, has been subpenaed as the principal witness, and it is understood that he will testify he saw the weapon exposed when Felder reached toward his pocket.

The Vice Probe.

That the vice probe will be conducted with unabated vigor by the Grand Jury was indicated by the drawing of a blank bill of indictment against Mrs. N. P. Powell, convicted last week as the proprietor of a disorderly house and sentenced to twelve months in jail.

Many witnesses were on hand to testify against Mrs. Powell, and it is understood that many others will be named for indictment by the Grand Jury before the session is concluded. It is the intention of the Grand Jury to make the most thorough and sweeping sort of an investigation of the reports of widespread immorality in the city.

Exception was taken to the statement of Chief Beavers that he was prevented from closing of the most notorious resort in the city through an injunction of the Superior Court. It will be the purpose of the Grand Jury to show that the courts are not interfering in the closing of the immoral resorts.

Fain Also Accused.

Another blank indictment in the wholesale vice probe was drawn against W. F. Fain, a member of the Police Commission, the tale of whose alleged conduct in an Ivy Street resort startled the Grand Jury last week. Fain was charged with a misdemeanor in the bill, and it is understood that the alleged occurrence in this resort was the basis.

J. A. Skaggs, of the Southern Express Company, and Allen Young, a real estate agent, were subpenaed as witnesses. Fain's case was on the calendar after that of Colonel Felder.

All Witnesses Resummoned.

Practically every witness who had testified was summoned again late Monday afternoon. Although neither Foreman L. H. Beck nor Solicitor Hugh M. Dorsey would discuss the meeting, witnesses themselves were certain the jury had reached an eleventh-hour decision to make an exhaustive investigation of alleged vice conditions.

Chief of Police James L. Beavers, A. S. Colyar, Jr., and Colonel Thomas B. Felder were the only witnesses not subpenaed.

Carl Hutcheson, the young attorney who furnished the jury with a list of alleged "houses in our midst," and who agitated a more thorough probe when the jury announced last week its investigation had been concluded, was one of the first to receive a summons.

Allen Young, real estate man, who was called before the jury to tell of an alleged fight in a disorderly house in which a man high up in police circles was said to have figured, was summoned to appear before the jury Wednesday. While a deputy was in his office with the subpena the Solicitor's office telephoned him to appear before the jury Tuesday and again Wednesday.

J. E. Skaggs, agent for the Southern Express Company; Chief of Detectives Lanford, Assistant Chief of Police Ewell L. Jett, three other police officers and several women whose names have been handed Foreman L. H. Beck as being willing to tell of the existence of alleged disorderly houses, were other witnesses summoned.

One of the witnesses summoned was said to be Mrs. N. P. Powell, a pretty young woman who recently was sentenced to four months' imprisonment for running a disorderly house at 95 Spring Street. When sentence was pronounced she expressed a willingness to testify before the Grand Jury. Her name was furnished the foreman in a letter urging him to have her come before the body.

Whether the foreman intends to make a further and more exhaustive probe of conditions in Atlanta with a view to making a comprehensive presentment, or the Solicitor summoned the witnesses with a view of getting indictments, could not be learned.

Former Burns Man Called.

A new figure in the Felder-Colyar-Lanford dictograph controversy, whose name had never been mentioned, was summoned on Tuesday morning to appear before the Fulton County Grand Jury.

He is G. C. Carson, formerly a Burns detective and now in the employ of an Atlanta law firm. According to statements he made Tuesday afternoon, he will tell the Grand Jury that he was present at an interview between Thomas B. Felder and G. C. Febuary shortly after the publication of the alleged dictograph records, in which Febuary told Colonel Felder that the dictograph affair was a frame-up and promised to come to Felder's office and make an affidavit to that effect.

Carson, who says he is an intimate friend of Febuary, declares that the latter never went to Felder's office.

Carson declares also that if asked to do so by the Grand Jury, he can shed more light on the vice situation. He claims to know of the existence of gambling houses in Atlanta, and claims he has visited them in company with city detectives, and that he has seen detectives in the places drinking with women.

Hotels Asked to Aid Vice War.

Recorder Broyles has called on small hotel keepers to aid Chief Beavers in suppressing vice in Atlanta. In a statement from the bench he said co-operation of hotel proprietors would result not only in accomplishing great good, but would deprive "Carl Hutcheson and that Philadelphia preacher" of so much to talk about.

Carl Hutcheson recently attracted attention by charging the chief with failure to suppress vice, later testifying before the Grand Jury, where he was supposed to have divulged a list of immoral houses.

The "Philadelphia preacher" is the Rev. Zane Batten, who was reported having declared nineteen women accosted him in one night in Atlanta, but who afterward said it was two friends of his who had been solicited.

Recorder Broyles' observations from the bench were made late Monday afternoon in the trial of J. T. Mangum, manager of the Albian Hotel, charged with running a disorderly house. He was bound over under $250 bond. Two couples arrested in the hotel were fined $15.75 each.

Recorder Broyles said:

"You hotel proprietors, particularly the small ones, could aid us in cleaning up Atlanta if you only would. If the hotel proprietors would do their part it would be of the greatest assistance to Chief Beavers in his great work of keeping Atlanta clean."

2 Children Enough; Wife Seeks Decree

NEW YORK, June 10.—Mrs. Grace F. Goodheart filed suit in the Supreme Court to-day asking for a separation from Robert H. Goodheart, the elder head of the firm of R. M. Goodheart & Co., manufacturers of flavoring extracts, because, according to the supporting affidavits in the case, Mr. Goodheart wanted children of his own, while she was perfectly content with two by her first husband.

MAN POSING AS PRIEST IS SENT TO PRISON

Swindler Who Duped Many Catholics Gievn Three Years by Judge Newman.

Judge Newman Tuesday sentenced Thomas Kirby, alias Brother James, alias Rev. Brother James Brady and alias Father Kelley, a fictitious priest who defrauded many prominent Catholics of Atlanta and other Southern cities, to three years in the Federal prison and imposed a fine of $1,000 for using the United States mails to defraud.

Kirby was sentenced on two counts to 18 months and a fine of $500 on each count. His Atlanta victims are G. P. Docker, of 316 Peachtree Street, and Fred Kuhn, an employee of the Atlanta Brewery.

Under the name of Father James, Kirby communicated in person and through the mails with G. P. Docker, stating that he was soliciting funds for the purpose of building a school at St. Leo, Fla.

On March 17 Kirby wrote Docker a very cleverly worded letter in which he set himself up as a Catholic priest and signed himself "Yours through Christ, Rev. Brother James, Order St. Benedict." This letter netted Kirby $5.

Atlantan Swindled.

From Griffin, Ga., Kirby wrote Fred Kuhn, of Atlanta, and succeeded in getting $5 from him. This time Kirby was going to build a church at Lavonia, Ga., and he stated in his letter to Kuhn that there were only a few Catholics in that section and that they were having a hard time keeping the "holy faith." It afterward developed that the only Catholic in Lavonia, J. R. Dortch, was also swindled. Dortch is a brother of Mrs. Helen D. Longstreet, former postmistress of Gainesville, Ga.

Kirby communicated with a number of persons in the principal cities of the South and had great success taking subscriptions for a Catholic publication which he claimed to represent.

At this time United States Postoffice Inspector Charles E. Kelley, of Atlanta, was put on the trail of Kirby. Kelley traced the impostor to Camden, S. C.; Columbia, S. C.; Spartanburg and then to Charleston.

Caught in Charleston.

In Charleston Inspector Kelley met a man in clerical garb, answering the description of Kirby, on Main Street.

"It seems to me that I have seen you before," said Kelley. "Aren't you Father James?"

"Yes," said the impostor, delighted at his popularity, "and I know you, too, for I've certainly seen you in church or some place."

"No," said Kelley, "I don't believe you know me or ever saw me before, but I have a warrant for your arrest for using the United States mails to defraud."

Kirby at first protested his innocence. He was brought to Athens, where he was indicted by the Grand Jury, and his trial came off this morning in this city.

Catholics in Atlanta are elated at the conviction of the impostor. Several weeks ago Father Rapier denounced the fraud from his pulpit.

ATLANTA AD MAN QUITS SICK BED TO SPEAK

Delegates to Baltimore Convention Display City's Spirit at Every Turn.

BALTIMORE, June 10.—Illustrating the determination and energy of Atlanta, Will Parkhurst, chairman of the vigilance committee of the Atlanta Ad Men's Club, got out of a sick bed to-day to address the members of the Associated Advertising Clubs of America in convention here.

Mr. Parkhurst has been ill since his arrival in Baltimore, and was unable to take part in last night's parade, when the Atlanta ad men covered themselves with glory. To-day he insisted on arising from his bed at the hotel where the Atlantans are quartered and going to the convention hall to fulfill his portion of the program.

In last night's advertising pageant the Atlanta men shared honors with the Toronto Ad Club for presenting the best appearance in the long line. The Canucks, in their Scottish costumes, with kilts and buckled shoes, were in wide contrast to the Atlantans, in natty gray suits, blue silk stockings and ties, black shoes and straw sailor hats with bright blue bands, on which was inscribed "Atlanta."

Over their left shoulders the Atlanta ad men carried white umbrellas, and in their right hands red, white and blue electric torches, on which were emblazoned the legend, "Atlanta Always Ahead." At the head of the band which led the Atlantans marched W. S. Lounsbury, of the Gate City Guards, in the full regalia of the Old Guard, bearskin shako and all. Back with the boys, Fred Houser and other convivial spirits managed to whoop things up along the line of march.

At 5:30 o'clock this afternoon the officers of the Atlanta club will be the guests of Mayor Preston at a reception at his home, and at 11 o'clock to-night, after the business meeting in the convention hall, they will be the guests of the Advertising Club of Baltimore at a banquet.

Negro's Odd Appeal Wins Him Cut in Fine

Zack Harris' statement in Recorder's Court Tuesday morning that he wished he had tuberculosis resulted in reducing his fine for violating the traffic laws from $3.75 to $1.75.

Jack, a big negro, made his unusual appeal following reduction of a similar fine in the case of Sam Labnivitz, who told Judge Broyles he was suffering from tuberculosis.

Zack saw his chance immediately when Samm's fine was reduced, and in characteristic fashion brought his wit into play when Judge Broyles asked him if he, too, had the white plague.

"I sho do wish I had it to-day, judge," said Zack, in all seriousness, whereupon Judge Broyles proceeded to reduce Zack's fine also. Zack and Sam looked happy when they emerged from Recorder's Court.

Death Sentence of Negro Is Commuted

New lease on life was granted by Governor Brown Tuesday when he commuted the death sentence of Wash Dean, negro, to life in the penitentiary. The commutation followed the granting of a respite. Date of the hanging was to-day and the respite was for two days, so the Governor could make an investigation.

Dean was convicted in the Houston County Superior Court for killing Tom Johnson, another negro. Both the Judge and the Solicitor General recommended commutation of the death sentence.

FEAR OF NEGRO INVASION STIRS FOURTH WARD

Citizens Plan Demonstration in Support of Ashley Segregation Ordinance.

Aroused by threatened invasion of white residence districts by negroes, a big delegation of Fourth Ward citizens is planning to attend a hearing by the Police Committee of Council Thursday of the Ashley ordinance segregating the negroes in Atlanta.

Citizens of the Fourth Ward especially are expected to be there, a recent sale of property to a negro in a purely white section being the cause. A cottage in Houston Street, between North Jackson and North Boulevard, has been sold to negroes, and it is reported they are moving into the house.

Councilman Ashley is pushing his ordinance, and he is apprehensive as to the outcome unless something is done to stem the tide. When questioned, he said:

"I believe the ordinance will pass Council and become a law, and I also believe it is constitutional, as does City Attorney James L. Mayson. This ordinance has worked admirably in Richmond, Va., and in Baltimore, Md., so why shouldn't it work in Atlanta?

"I have seen one of the prettiest sections in Atlanta from North Jackson Street east from Edgewood Avenue to Houston Street gradually taken by negroes, and unless some effective action is taken whole sections are doomed.

"Boulevard School, which, when erected, was in the very heart of a white section, is at present completely surrounded by negroes, Morris Brown College having been erected on the adjoining lot.

Hilliard Was Best.

"Hilliard Street, from Irwin to Highland Avenue, was one of the best streets in the Fourth Ward a few years ago. To-day there is not a single white resident of this street. It began when a negro a little above his class bought a home on the corner of Hilliard and Cain Streets. The white neighbor next door moved out. The house stood vacant for a time and eventually was sold to negroes, and it went until the street was [illegible] by them.

"Cain Street, another section where a majority of the residents owned their little homes, was the next to go. A piece of property with a title not [illegible] was put on the market. No person would take the chance, a negro did, and to-day there is not a white resident on this street. Among those who were forced to vacate on account of the negroes was a widow who owned her home and the one adjoining.

"Johnson Avenue, running from North Boulevard to Randolph Street, was populated three years ago entirely by whites. A majority of the residents owned their homes, and it was thought the negro would never molest them. Some distant owner sold to a negro and the whites have been forced out until not one remains.

Same Story of Many Streets.

"This story can be repeated of a hundred streets in this section. Property values have reduced until the income to the city for taxes is not more than half that ten years ago.

"A meeting of the white citizens of the Fourth Ward—an indignation meeting, if you would—probably will be called at once; certainly if my ordinance is not given a favorable report by the Police Committee, and I predict that unless something is done to relieve the situation a clash between the races is inevitable.

"The purchase of Morris Brown College by the city would go far to relieve the situation, and the investment would be a good one."

Begs for Sentence In Atlanta Prison

CHARLESTON, S. C., June 10.—When Judge Smith, in Federal Court here, had sentenced Charley Williams, a negro, to six months in the Berkeley County jail for depot-breaking, he begged to be sent to the Atlanta penitentiary.

Judge Smith told him the sentence would have to be made a year and a day if he went to Atlanta, and Williams begged the judge to give him the extra time, so that he could serve his time in the Georgia prison. It was done.

Alumni Meeting Features Gala Day of Celebration at Tech

Dr. Alphonso Smith Will Make Founders' Address Tuesday Night

Class Exercises Are Declared the Most Brilliant School Has Ever Seen.

Men past the meridian of life and men with the snows of many years upon their heads displaced the rollicking young students as the central figures in the Tech quarter-centenary celebration Tuesday.

The day was set apart as a tribute to the founders of the institution and to those who had supported it and encouraged it from the early days when it was struggling for life against the opposition of many hostile forces as well as the natural obstacles which an educational institution is bound to encounter.

Gray-haired Dr. I. S. Hopkins, the first president of the Georgia School of Technology, was one of the principal speakers of the day. He related the difficulties he and others met in their efforts to give the young men of the State an opportunity for a technical education. He pictured the little shop he had at Emory and the two or three young men who came to him, asking if he could not give them some instruction. He aided them as best he could with the limited facilities. From this small start grew the school, which is now one of the foremost in the country. When the movement for a regularly organized school was started in 1885, Dr. Hopkins was the one man mentioned as its president. With the movement consummated in 1888, he was chosen without opposition.

Speaking of the early history of the institution, Judge N. E. Harris, president of the board of trustees and the man who introduced into the Legislature the bill founding the school, made most eulogistic reference to the ambitious students who, without means and without moneyed friends had entered the portals of the school and had worked and fought their way through to graduation. To this sort of young men, the school owed its success almost as much as to the men who had contributed their time and money to its support, declared Judge Harris.

Other speakers were S. M. Inman, Dr. W. H. Emerson, dean of the school; Dr. James S. Coon, head of the mechanical engineering department, who has been with the school since its beginning; A. L. Colcord, president of the alumni association; Attorney W. L. Moore, Prof Edward Holmes, Rev. E. Lyman Hood and Dr. K. G. Matheson, president of the School of Technology.

The election of Dr. W. M. Fambrough, of the class of '03, as president of the Tech Alumni Association featured the annual meeting of the association Tuesday morning. Dr. Fambrough succeeds A. R. Colcord, who called the meeting to order.

The meeting was a rousing success in every way, as nearly 200 Tech grads, the greatest number on record at any gathering, took part.

After Dr. Fambrough's election, Robert Gregg, '05, was made vice president, and B. F. Market, '03, secretary and treasurer. The president announced that the executive committee would be appointed later.

A further feature was the adoption of a resolution for the presentation of loving cups by the alumni and faculty to Nat Harris, chairman of the board of trustees, and to Dr. I. C. Hopkins, first president of Tech.

Heisman on Athletics.

Following the election of officers, an open discussion "For the Good of Tech" was held. Coach J. W. Heisman told Tech men of the bright prospects for future athletics. Mr. Heisman said next year's teams would be as strong as any teams in the history of the college. President Colford and Mr. Gregg also spoke.

The discussion evoked much favorable comment on the present relations between members of the alumni and between the alumni and the faculty of the college. Great praise was given to those who have made possible the new athletic playground, Grant Field, which, when completed, will be second to none in the South.

Prior to adjournment, President Fambrough appointed a committee to take charge of the general alumni advance. It comprises Robert L. Mattox, '08; C. L. Emerson, '08, and L. W. (Chip) Roberts, '08. Mr. Gregg and Mr. Roberts were appointed alumni members of the advisory board of the Athletic Association. The association adjourned at 10:30 o'clock to attend the Founders' Day ceremonies in the Y. M. C. A. building.

Tuesday Gala Day.

Their ardor undampened by the rain and the cold weather, nearly a thousand students, alumni and visitors, crowded the building and the campus for the gala day of the twenty-fifth anniversary celebration.

The day's exercises formed the most elaborate college celebration ever held in Georgia.

Beginning with the annual meeting of the Alumni Association at 9:30 o'clock, at which A. R. Colcord, of Atlanta, welcomed the visitors, interesting events will follow one after the other until the late hours of the night. The day will be brought to a fitting close with a reception at the Governor's Mansion, when Governor and Mrs. Joseph M. Brown will be hosts to the members of the graduating class, the faculty and the distinguished visitors.

Oration at Grand To-night.

While reminiscence held the stage at the morning exercises, things that the future holds for the school will be told at the Grand Theater to-night, when C. Alphonso Smith, LL. D., Ph. D., will deliver the Founders' Day oration. Dr. Smith is one of the foremost educators of the country, and is now professor of English at the University of Virginia. He has always drawn large audiences in previous lectures in the South, and the message he will bring to the students at Tech to-night is awaited with eagerness.

The eyes of the student body were turned to the Tuesday afternoon program as the really big time of the celebration, the time when their boyish enthusiasm breaks the bonds of restraint and they take possession of the school and run it their own way. The annual class day exercises, always a source of amusement and joy to the students, began in the early afternoon and will continue until dusk. Many features were planned which the seniors fondly hope will make the class day of '13 go down in Tech history as the most brilliant the school has ever known.

PRINCETON MEN CONFESS THEY KISS GIRLS

One Writes to 16 Sweethearts and Nineteen Consider Dancing Morally Wrong.

PRINCETON, N. J., June 10.—So much has been written about the likes and dislikes of the college youth, and so many dry statistics have been furnished the public regarding the means of livelihood of the "Rah! Rah! boy" that statistics in a lighter vein, concerning the graduating class of Princeton University made public just before the commencement exercises here to-day, are exceptionally interesting.

Here are some of the questions that were put to the members of the graduating class:

Do you smoke?

Have you stopped smoking since entering college or have you adopted the habit since entering?

Are you engaged?

Have you ever kissed a girl?

Do you correspond with any young woman or women? How many?

Do you consider dancing morally wrong?

Do you regard card playing as immoral?

Have you ever attended a dance?

Answers to these questions showed that the number of men in the class who smoke totals 184, of which 76 began in college, while 51 stopped the use of the weed after they entered the university. Two hundred and six of the 300 members of the class confessed to corresponding with 579 members of the fair sex, an average of more than two each.

One bold youth frankly declared that he writes letters to 16 young women.

Almost the entire class admitted having kissed some member of the fair sex outside of their immediate families. Nineteen members of the class asserted that they considered dancing morally wrong, and 16 entertain the same views toward card playing. All but 12 of them have attended dances. Nine men admitted being engaged, while 24 said that they had had their tender hearts bruised by rejections.

Princeton Diplomas to 300. Southerner Star of Class.

PRINCETON, N. J., June 10.—Three hundred members of the senior class at Princeton University received their diplomas this morning from the hands of President John Grier Hibben. The impressive ceremonies in connection with the granting of degrees and the awarding of diplomas forms a contrast with the celebration in full swing on the Princeton campus this afternoon. Many old graduates have returned for the class reunions, which are an annual event at graduation time. Costume parades and "stunts" of various kinds, all tending to bring back memories of undergraduate days and typifying the eternal youth of the college man are the order of the afternoon.

The annual sophomore reception and dance was held last night in the gymnasium. A concert by the combined musical clubs of the university preceded the dancing in the gymnasium, which began about 10 o'clock. Over 1,500 persons tripped the light fantastic to music furnished by a band and an orchestra, the two sources of music being supplied so as to cause no waits between dances. The program of 30 numbers kept the dancers until an early hour this morning. The gymnasium had been beautifully decorated for the occasion and around the sides were constructed the boxes for the visitors and freshmen, who are not allowed to participate in the gala event.

The class of 1913 has the distinction of graduating a member this year who has obtained the highest marks of any Princeton graduate in the history of the university during his college career. He is Charles W. Hendel, of Reading, Pa., and was made Latin salutatorian of his class. A. S. Richardson, of Murfreesboro, Tenn., was the valedictorian of the class.

NEW PRIZES ARE IN SIGHT FOR HUSTLERS

Interest In Pony Contest Increased Thereby—Rule Made For Publishing Standing.

Additional prizes are in sight for contestants striving for The Georgian and American pony outfits. In next Sunday's issue of The American the announcement will be made.

Also, to give the boys and girls a good start, a special offer is on whereby the first $30 in subscriptions turned in brings 50,000 votes in addition to the regular vote scale. This offer will remain open but a short time. In order to make it fair, all those who already have turned in $30 will get the 50,000 votes.

Incidentally, a new rule will be in effect governing the publication of standings. Names and standings of contestants up to Monday night of each week will be published in Wednesday afternoon's Georgian. Standings up to Thursday night will be published every Sunday. As the pace of contestants becomes faster, it is a harder task to compile the standings, and this rule is the result.

Interest is incerasing. Many boys and girls who have been hesitating now are working. The extra prizes, too, are likely to be an inducement to those who want to win something, even if they are a few votes short of the leader in their district.

Bargain days are at hand. Here are some of the special offers:

For every club of five one-year daily and Sunday subscriptions, 20,000 extra votes will be given; for every club of five six-months' subscriptions, 8,500 extra votes will be given; for clubs of five three-months' subscriptions, 3,000 extra votes. For the daily only, clubs of five for a year, six months and three months, will be given 12,500, 6,000 and 2,500 extra votes, respectively.

This offer will be open until July 5. No offer better, and none so good will be made after that date.

PARKS REMOVED FROM U. S. JOB

A decree in the case of the Chandler Land Corporation vs. the Georgia Land and Timber Company, in which the former alleges that the land company, W. B. Ellington, J. L. Sweat, J. D. Blalock and J. M. Parks, defendants, conspired to seize 3,000 acres of land in Ware County belonging to the plaintiff, has been received by the clerk of the United States District Court.

The decree, which is signed by Judge Pardee, sustains the contention of the plaintiff that the defendants obtained possession of the lands by the misuse of certain deeds, and orders the surrender of the papers.

The decree also removes J. M. Parks, who had the custody of the deeds, as a commissioner of the Federal Court, and appoints O. C. Fuller in his place.

The case was brought up by the Chandler Corporation several months ago, and is a part of the celebrated case of Baker et al. vs. McKee et al., filed fifteen years ago and involving lands worth $1,500,000, still pending in the courts.

RATE FIGHT GETS IMPETUS FROM DECISION

Railroad Inclined to Believe the Minnesota Ruling Brings Issue Directly to Congress.

NEW YORK, June 10.—The belief existed in railroad circles and in Wall Street to-day that instead of ending the fight of railroads against the right of State railway commissions to fix intrastate rates, the United States Supreme Court decision yesterday upholding the present right of such commissions to fix passenger and freight rates within the borders of respective States is only the beginning of a fiercer battle to come.

The inevitable result of the decision, many pointed out, will be to bring the question of federal control of railways directly before Congress. This will involve political issues and a hot contest is expected.

As the decision read by Associate Justice Hughes stated explicitly that the present method of rate fixing in such States as have railway commissions shall go on "until Congress shall determine otherwise by direct provision of law," the matter seems to be put directly up to Congress for a final decision.

Best Lawyers Scan Decision.

The brainiest corporation lawyers in America, representing great railway systems, to-day have the decision under scrutiny looking for loopholes in it.

Samuel Untermyer, special counsel for the Government in the money trust investigation, took the stand that the decision is a victory for the Government. He said:

"I regard the decision as a complete vindication of the Federal authority over the interstate railroads wherever Congress chooses to exercise that power.

"It seems that the continued existence of the State rate-making power in so far as it may conflict with interstate rates rests upon sufferance and may be done away with at any time by Congress. That is the logical and necessary rule. Without it there could be no effective Federal regulation."

Railroad Men Disappointed.

Railroad men were disappointed in the failure of the Supreme Court to come out and state the actual relation or difference of powers between the Federal Interstate Commerce Commission and the various State railroad commissions which exercise rate-making powers in more than twenty commonwealths.

The distinction has been left to Congress. The next move of the railroads in fighting the decision of the Supreme Court is problematical.

It is believed that the railroad counselors will endeavor to attack the decision in the same court that handed it down.

Railroad Officials Withhold Comment.

NEW YORK, June 10.—Railroad officials are reluctant to express an opinion as to the effect of the Supreme Court's decision in the Minnesota rate case upon the broad issues involved on the plea that they had not received sufficiently comprehensive advices to enable them to grasp its full significance. Justice Hughes had not completed reading the decision until long after most railroad men had left their offices. Those who remained to await abstracts of the decision said that until they had opportunity to study the full text they could make no comment.

The first flash from Washington of the decision reached the financial district more than an hour after the stock market closed. Wall Street had formed its own conclusions as to the probable action of the Supreme Court and it had been generally expected that the decision would be against the State of Minnesota.

Stock Exchange brokers with foreign connections are in active communication are with their correspondents abroad and the effect of the decision is expected to find clear reflection in the London stock market early to-day and later in the local market.

$3,000,000 Overcharges to Be Refunded to Shippers.

ST. PAUL, June 10.—Victory for the State was the unanimous declaration of jubilant State officials and others connected with the long-drawn-out Minnesota rate case when the decision was received. Several railroads operating in Minnesota will pay into the State treasury approximately $3,000,000 in the shape of overcharges.

The Legislature passed a law requiring all roads to "keep books" covering all freight charges made and to file the same monthly with the State. This was done to allow persons overcharged to collect the difference should the State win.

In order that shippers might not be hampered by annoying litigation, the Legislature directed that when the case was settled, if in favor of the State, the money in controversy should be turned over to the State and returned to persons overcharged.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 10.—Stricken with convulsions at the lonely cable station on Fanning Island, Dr. Herbert Metcalfe, resident surgeon, died in three days, in spite of the cabled prescriptions of the nearest physician, 2,000 miles away, at Fiji.

Employees of the cable company, returning to-day on the steamer Sierra, brought news of the surgeon's death. Only a score of Europeans live on Fanning Island, and none knew how to treat the invalid. For three days hourly bulletins of Dr. Metcalfe's condition were cabled to Fiji, and the doctor there cabled back instructions.

COUNCIL PREPARES FOR BUDGET VETO

Measure to Pass Regardless of Action Mayor Will Take—Crematory Made Certain.

The June budget, carrying the $260,000 crematory appropriation, had not reached Mayor James G. Woodward's office Tuesday morning, and the executive said he would not make any statement of approval or disapproval until he saw the measure. Council will meet Wednesday and pass the budget over the Mayor's veto if he fails to approve it, since the four days' time limit in which he can either approve or veto expires by that time.

The Mayor's chief objection to the budget, providing he finds any objection, will lie in the possible failure of Council to dissociate the new crematory contract with the old agreement. The Mayor takes the ground that court proceedings have completely nullified the first contract, and the new one must cover all phases without reference to the original contract.

After reading the proposed specifications for the crematory, Mayor Woodward intimated parts of the latest agreement were dependent on the invalidated contract. Unless these objectionable features are removed or the Mayor's interpretation of them is changed, he may disapprove the budget.

25 JAPS WANT TO SETTLE IN GEORGIA

Washington Colonizer Writes to Governor to Learn if State Law Prevents Land Owning.

Acocrding to information received in the Governor's office Monday, a party of 25 Japanese are to colonize in Georgia, and several thousand more probably will be located if there is no obstacle to prevent them from becoming landowners.

This information was contained in a letter from B. F. Johnson, of Johnson's American and Foreign Real Estate Exchange, Washington, D. C. It said a party of 25 Japanese were ready to remove to Georgia from California and requested information regarding the law. The writer said he already had been in communication with a Georgia property owner, and that everything was ready for the establishment of the colony.

"If there is nothing to prevent them from holding property, I am sure several thousand Japanese could be induced to settle in Georgia, now that the California alien land bill has legislated so much against them," the letter read.

The query sent Colonel Jesse Perry, the Governor's secretary, delving into the laws of Georgia, and his conclusion is that no law exists which would prevent the Japanese from becoming citizens of Georgia. He wrote this opinion to Mr. Johnson, but referred him to Attorney General Felder. Mr. Felder was away from Atlanta Monday morning, and his opinion in the matter will come later.

Morning Baths Cut Paris Water Supply

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, June 10.—The unexpected disclosure has been made that the shortage of water in Paris, which is always slightly felt in the hot days, may be due in no small measure to the new French custom of taking a morning bath.

Since Parisian men and women adopted the English custom of a morning tub ten years ago, every new house built in Paris has been furnished with several bathrooms, while all the hotels have made installations.

WOMAN MYSTIFIES BROYLES' COURT

Held on Suspicion, She Resists All Efforts to Uncloak Identity, Ordered Out of Town.

Dressed plainly, but neatly, a young woman giving her name as Mrs. Ella Wolford, Monday morning successfully resisted every effort of Recorder Broyles to penetrate the veil of mystery that cloaked her identity. For half an hour she sparred with the court, cleverly evading question after question.

When the Recorder gave the "woman of mystery" the alternative of immediately leaving the city or going to jail she accepted the first.

As to her home, Mrs. Wolford said she had lived in Augusta, Jacksonville and other places. She had been here but a short time.

The woman was taken into custody because she had converted the Terminal Station into a boarding house. Matron Payne, of the Terminal, said she came in there daily, changing her clothing there, making her toilet in the ladies' rest room and generally making herself at home. Several small articles, she said, had vanished from the station.

Mrs. J. Gabriel, of 31 Markham Street, also told the court that the mysterious woman "beat" her out of a night's lodging, and the next morning asked her for 20 cents.

"I told her I was expecting pay from her—that I didn't pay people to sleep in my house—but I didn't get it," said Mrs. Gabriel. She said she missed some articles from her home.

WOMEN IN FIGHT AGAINST BIRD SLAUGHTER

Miss Nina Hornady Leads Georgia War on Amending Game Law on Plumage Fowl.

A campaign against the passage of the amendment to the national game law introduced by Senator Clapp is being waged in Atlanta by the women's organizations. Though it was undertaken but a few days ago the response has been spontaneous.

An effort is being made to have every woman in Georgia write to the members of the Georgia delegation in Washington urging them to take the side of the bird lovers. Senator Hoke Smith is chairman of the committee to which the amendment has been referred, and every woman is being urged to write to him.

The amendment, it is said, would so change the law regarding the importation of plumage as to render it void. It makes an exception to the "feathers or plumes of game birds usually killed for food purposes and birds which are killed as pests." This would allow of the killing of many birds of rare plumage, according to the bird lovers.

Miss Hornady Leader.

Georgia's fight is being led by Miss Nina Hornady, one of Atlanta's most beloved school teachers, who comes from one of the oldest families and is prominently connected throughout the State.

The organizations which have joined in the fight are the Bird Lovers' Association, Daughters of the American Revolution, United Daughters of 1812, Daughters of the Confederacy, Colonial Dames, Uncle Remus Memorial Association, Ladies' Memorial Association, Federation of Women's Clubs and the Atlanta Musical Association.

Miss Hornady was drawn into the undertaking by her cousin, William T. Hornady, secretary of the New York Zoological Society, the organization which has been backed by many notable multi-millionaires, and which was instrumental in having the present national game law passed by Congress.

Atlanta Women Aid.

Miss Hornady is assisted by many leading women in Atlanta. Backed by the action of John Wanamaker, they will endeavor to win over the operators of large stores in Atlanta. Wanamaker has come out against the usage of birds as hat decorations, despite the immense volume of business handled by him.

"We are waging the hottest kind of a fight," said Miss Hornady to a Georgian reporter. She was busy at her home writing letters and calling up her friends, urging them to write to Senator Smith. "That we will get results is our sincere belief, and we are letting Senator Hoke Smith know just where the women of Georgia stand. The response has been gratifying and many prominent women are working hard for it. We shall flood Senator Smith with letters, and possibly he may grumble a little bit. But we must protect the birds. We expect to have the work going on splendidly by the end of the week."

Kaiser Wilhelm Celebrates 25th Anniversary of His Accession to the Throne

Thousands of Americans Are in Berlin This Week to Witness the Festivities

The War Lord of Germany, really the Peace Lord, who ascended the throne of Prussia on June 15, 1888, when he was twenty-nine years old. These photographs show him at various stages of his interesting career. The anniversary of the Kaiser's accession is marked by general rejoicing throughout the Empire.

At ten years. At twenty years.

The Kaiser as he appears to-day at the age of fifty-four.

At the age of thirty. At the age of forty.

Magnificent Gifts From All Over the World---Twenty-five Kings Pay Honor to German Emperor.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

BERLIN, June 10.—Military events, musical festivals and fetes of a hundred sorts are featuring the celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the accession of Emperor William to the throne. Twenty-five rulers of German States are here to pay homage. More than 3,000 Americans are crowding the hotels and watching the festivities.

The dedication of the $500,000 Olympic stadium when 25,000 athletes took part has been the chief feature of the program thus far.

Berlin will virtually take a holiday of a month. One week will be devoted to prize events, one week to musical festivals and another to grand opera with Olympic games intermingling.

In addition to the 25 rulers of German States, including the Kings of Saxony, Bavaria and Wurtemberg, special embassies from the United States and all European countries are here.

Great interest is being displayed by Berliners in Andrew Carnegie, the American peace advocate, who is a guest. Archduke Francis Ferdinand is to represent Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria.

Carnegie Slated for Order.

The Kaiser will raise many prominent Germans to the nobility, bestowing many titles and innumerable orders and decorations. It is whispered that Andrew Carnegie is to be presented with an order.

All of the cities of Germany have combined to present the Kaiser with a magnificent personal present. After it had been announced that this testimonial would be presented to the Emperor, the latter forbade further gifts, but said if Germans desired to evidence their esteem, they might present gifts to educational and charitable institutions of a local character.

The present which the German cities are to make the Kaiser is a gold and silver set of tablets bearing his armorial escutcheons and arms. It cost more than $20,000. The text is of pure gold with the arms of the Kaiser in enamelled and gilded silver, with engraved ivory and mother of pearl. Thousands of Germans gave 2 1-2 cents apiece to pay for it.

From St. Petersburg, Kasta, in Hungary, and Ulm in Wurtemberg, three notable delegations are here. They are detachments of ranking officers and headquarters troops of the Russian Imperial Life Guards (Kaiser Frederick William III's regiment), William I's Hungarian Infantry Guards and Kaiser William II's Wurtemberg Infantry. The Kaiser is colonel-in-chief of all three.

Count von Eulenberg, chief court marshal, and General von Plessen, commanding general of the headquarters army, aided by many court dignitaries, have had charge of the arrangements for the jubilee.

$300,000 in Decorations.

Berlin has outdone itself in its decorations. Even the recent wedding of the only daughter of the Kaiser, the Princess Victoria Luise, and Prince Ernst August of Cumberland, did not arouse such enthusiasm.

More than $300,000 have been spent in decorating the main streets, such as Unter der Linden, Friederichas Unter der Linden, Friederichstrasse, Leipzigerstrasse, Pariser Platz, Potsdamer Platz and the Brandenburg Gate under the direction of such famous artists as Professors Schulte Bruno, Paul and Behrens.

The climax of the festivities will be reached on June 16, when the Kings of Saxony and Wurtemberg, the Regent of Bavaria and other German monarchs will congratulate the Kaiser, surrounded by 25 German rulers, and will attend a gala performance of the third act of "Die Walkuere," in which Putnam Griswold an American, has been invited to sing.

Goat Saves Family From Death by Fire

CHICAGO, June 10.—Lazarus, a pet goat, lost his whiskers, but saved seven persons from death in a fire that did $175,000 damage to-day. Lazarus is a pet in the family of James Fitzgerald, stable manager, who lives above a shavings and sawdust company's plant.

When the plant started burning Lazarus, with horns and hoofs, awakened Fitzgerald, his wife and their five children.

The portrait is life size and is to be exhibited next spring in the Paris Salon. It shows the President at his desk in his private office dictating to his secretary.

M. Dube has the distinction of being a gold medalist in the Salon.

TRUST CO.'S SUIT TO BREAK RECORD

Guarantee Banking Audit Is Complete—Case Will Be Resumed Next Thursday.

Trial of the suit against the Guarantee Trust and Banking Company promises to break all records for time consumed in the Superior Courts, when, after two weeks' interruption, it is resumed before Judge Pendleton Thursday.

The interruption was to permit an auditor appointed by the court to examine the company's books. C. J. Metz made the audit and presented his report Monday.

One of the principal points in contention was the status of the old organization to the new, at the time of sale, November 30, 1907. The total amount collected from bondholders to this date was $483,902.52, according to the audit, against which is an item of $233,949.40 of coupons paid. Cash surrender value of the bonds at that time is given as $76,944.38.

The liability to-day of the Guarantee Trust and Banking Company, according to the report given the defendants' attorneys, is $300,127.26.

THE PLAYS THIS WEEK

STAR VAUDEVILLE AT FORSYTH.

Chick Sales, cleverest of character entertainers, heads an excellent bill at the Forsyth. He has been seen in Atlanta before, but his act this year is different and won great favor at the opening performances. Sales gives his conception of "last day" at a country school and gets volleys of laughs with every type he impersonates.

Travato, a violinist, takes second honors. Playing everything from classics to ragtime he scores with all parts of the house. His "faking" is in a class by itself and his eccentricities enliven his turn.

Other good numbers are John and May Burke, comedy singers; Gordon Pickens and Company in a novel sketch; Roehm's Athletic Girls, who box, fence, wrestle and punch the bag cleverly, and the Steiner Trio, exceptionally good bar gymnasts.

Tabloid Popular at Bijou.

"Hiram at the Cabaret," this week's offering at the Bijou, made a decided hit with yesterday's audiences when the tabloid musical comedy—interspersed with vaudeville—was presented for the first time at the Marietta Street playhouse.

There's no plot to brag about in "Hiram at the Cabaret," but nobody minds that fact. The whole affair is arranged to give the dancing and singing girls and the comedians a chance, and that they take advantage of the occasion was proved by the hearty applause which greeted their efforts.

Jimmy Hunter became a favorite at the start. He is a dancer of ability.

ACQUITTED OF MAIL THEFT.

CHARLESTON, S. C., June 10.—Henry Eckstorm and George H. Hill, tried here in the Federal Court on charges of robbing a mail car at Hardeeville, Ga., in December, 1912, were acquitted.

SEES HARD FIGHT IN PAINTER CASE

Baltimore Chemist Makes Significant Admission—Complications Delay Completion of Analysis.

BALTIMORE, June 10.—"They may have a hard fight to collect that," said Dr. Charles Glaser to-day, after reading a tabulated list of the million dollars new insurance taken out by E. O. Painter, the wealthy Jacksonville fertilizer manufacturer, who drowned in the St. John's River at Jacksonville under suspicious circumstances on May 22. He would make no other statement.

Dr. Glaser is the chemist in charge of the chemical and pathological analysis of Painter's vital organs. Unforeseen complications have prevented the completion of the analysis in the time expected. According to the chemist, it may be some time before he is able to make his report to C. D. Abbott, the Coroner at Jacksonville, under whose directions he is working.

JACKSONVILLE, June 10.—Information was received here to-day that the analysis of E. O. Painter's vital organs, supposed to have been finished last week, in Baltimore, has not been completed and it will probably be the last of the week before Coroner C. D. Abbott receives the report of Dr. Charles Glaser, who is conducting the tests.

In the meantime there is to-day no new development in the Painter insurance mystery.

New U. S. Submarine In Trial for Record

LONG BEACH, CAL., June 10.—In an effort to break the 24 hours' record of the United States submarine Octopus and to demonstrate that the new type is superior to the old, a "cage submarine," owned by the Los Angeles Submarine Company, went down in the harbor here to-day for experiments.

The "cage submarine" was sunk at 5 o'clock a. m. to stay under water long enough to break the Octopus' record. At 7:30 she was still beneath the surface.

WOMEN DEMAND VOICE IN RULE OF CHURCH

Leaders in M. E., South, Declare They Do the Work, but Men Do the Voting.

Failure of Southern Methodist women to have a voice in the laity affairs of the church, which is being agitated just now by the publication of The Laity Advocate, is simply the old, old story of "taxation without representation," declares Mrs. W. F. Trenary, second vice president, and Mrs. J. N. McEachern, corresponding secretary of the home department of the North Georgia Conference. In substance, the views of Mrs. R. P. Milam and Mrs. R. K. Rambo, two other prominent Methodist workers, are the same.

All four of these women declare that the Methodist Church women deserve more rights than they now have in laity church affairs, since they do most of the work. The men, they say, sit idly by in a great many cases, while the women do the work, and yet when the time comes to put through big issues it is for the men to say "yes" or "no."

This, each one of these women church workers declares, is manifestly unfair, and sooner or later will be a thing of the past. The reformation will not be as easy, however, as some think, for the next general conference two years hence, according to all indications, will seek to down the measure. To head off this pronounced opposition The Laity Advocate, a quarterly magazine, is being published.

Not in the Church.

"The organization behind The Laity Advocate," said Mrs. McEachern, "is entirely outside of the church and is composed of men and women who want to see the women have more rights within the church. The movement, in my opinion, is a good one and ultimately will be successful. The whole thing is a matter of education, and when the people see it they will cease to oppose it—in fact, they will actually favor it.

"And it should be distinctly understood that the movement is not being planned simply to give women office. This is not what we are working for. What we do want is a voice in the laity affairs of the church."

Mrs. W. F. Trenary, second vice president of the North Georgia Conference, lined up with Mrs. McEachern. Said she:

"The question is similar in many respects to the equal suffrage movement. The women do most of the work and yet they have no voice in affairs—in other words, it's a case of taxation without representation. I have stood for the laity movement and was keenly disappointed that it failed of passage two years ago before the general conference."

Mrs. R. P. Milam was very emphatic in her statement that she favored the laity movement. The women, she said, do most of the work, and therefore they should have representation on the general laity boards of the conference. The woman's council, according to Mrs. Milam, is a body of highly intelligent women who deserve a voice in the affairs of the church.

Mrs. Rambo Conservative.

Mrs. R. K. Rambo declared herself to be more or less conservative, but at the same time highly in favor of better representation. The present representation in the General Council, she said, is more a matter of courtesy than anything else.

While no organized movement in favor of the laity matter has been launched in Atlanta, much individual work by advocates of the measure will be done before the General Conference, it is said. The majority of Atlanta Methodist Church women are in favor of the measure, according to the leaders, and will leave no stone unturned to get equal rights for women in the church.

For Miss Ripley.

Misses Tommie and Marion Perdue entertained Tuesday morning at bridge for Miss Louise Ripley, a bride-elect. Sweetpeas decorated the living and reception rooms, where the game was played. The prizes were blue silk hose, embroidered handkerchiefs and to the bride was given a dainty piece of lingerie. Miss Tommie Perdue wore pink mull and lace and Miss Marion Perdue was gowned in lavender. Miss Ripley was in acid blue silk, with plumed hat to match. The guests included Misses Louise Ripley, Laura Ripley, Frances Ansley, Flora Crowe, Julia MacIntyre and her guests, Margaret Roberts, of Valdosta, and Cena Whitehead, of Albany, and Mrs. Homer McAfee.

Following the morning bridge Miss Ripley was tendered an afternoon bridge by Mrs. Frank Winecoff at the Winecoff residence in Ansley Park. Miss Aline Fielder, who has just returned from school at Winston-Salem, N. C., shared the honors. Sweetpeas and garden flowers formed the decorations and prizes were embroidered silk hose, a silver perfume bottle and a boudoir cap. The hostess wore accordion-pleated chiffon over pink satin. Assisting in entertaining were Mrs. W. F. Winecoff, Mrs. S. C. Prim, Mrs. Fleming Winecoff and Mrs. F. L. Jackson.

Mrs. Asa Candler, Jr., entertained at a reception for Miss Ripley and for Mrs. William Candler, a recent bride, following Mrs. Winecoff's bridge party. Palms, ferns and foliage plants formed the decorations, with red roses in the living room and vases of feverfew in the library. The tea table was decorated with pink roses, all minor details being in pink and white.

Mrs. Candler wore pale blue brocade crepe and chiffon. Assisting in entertaining were Mrs. Asa Candler, Sr., Mrs. T. J. Ripley, Miss Martha Holland and the young girls of Miss Ripley's wedding party. Misses Allie Candler and Marie Bailey, of Fernandina, Fla., served punch.

Tech Reception.

One of the most interesting social events of the week was the reception given Monday afternoon by Dr. Kenneth G. Matheson, president of the Georgia School of Technology, and Mrs. Matheson. Guests included members of the faculty, alumni, trustees of the Tech and of the Y. M. C. A., members of the graduating class and a number of young girls.

College pennants and flags, with vases of yellow and white flowers, formed the decorations. The Tech colors of white and gold were observed in detail. The table in the dining room was decorated with yellow and white flowers. Music by the Tech band was a bright feature of the afternoon.

Receiving with Dr. and Mrs. Matheson were Governor and Mrs. Joseph M. Brown, Colonel and Mrs. N. L. Harris, Macon; Dr. and Mrs. Coon, Dr. and Mrs. Samuel Stewart Wallace, Professor and Mrs. Branch and Mr. and Mrs. Colcord.

Punch was served by little Misses Belle and Mary Matheson, who wore white lingerie frocks with blue ribbons. Mrs. Matheson wore white embroidered net, lace trimmed.

The annual germ.n of the sophomore class was given Monday morning. Juniors gave their annual promenade Monday evening at 8 o'clock, followed by the junior dance at 10 o'clock. Both affairs were largely attended by members of the younger set.

BACK TO PETTICOATS FOR SLIT-SKIRT "FANS"

Women of Indianapolis cannot promenade in split skirts unless they wear petticoats. Instructions to this effect are to-day in the hands of the members of the Police Department. Superintendent of Police Hyland's action, it was said, followed a note received from an Indianapolis woman, who protested against the split skirts unless they were accompanied by a petticoat. Most of the Indianapolis women had been wearing the slitted skirt without the under- garment and, well, there has been a "stary" disease of the eyes afflicting most Indianapolis men.—NEWS NOTE.

Indianapolis is a long way from Atlanta, ladies, so don't worry.

War Sec.'s Order To Railroad Voided

WASHINGTON, June 10.—The United States Supreme Court held in the case of the Government against the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad that Congress had not the authority to require the railroad to raise its bridge at Parkersburg, W. Va.

An indictment rested against the railroad for failure to alter its bridge across the river, as ordered by the Secretary of War.

State Exemption Tax Of Corporations Valid

WASHINGTON, June 10.—The Michigan law imposing an ad valorem tax upon the property of corporations in excess of a certain amount was declared valid by the Supreme Court of the United States to-day.

The plaintiffs contended that the law discriminated against the larger concerns in favor of smaller ones, exempting those with gross receipts less than $500.

CANVASSERS HIT BY LICENSE COST

Council Raises the Fee to $100. Auto Drivers Must Pass Inspection.

The photograph canvasser, the man who for fifty cents sells you a ticket entitling you to one picture and the privilege of purchasing a dozen others at reduced rates, is no more. He is the latest victim of high license, for the last tax measure enacted by the general council effectually squelched him.

Until the last Council meeting, photograph canvassers paid a license of $10 a year. There were many of them, so many that regular photographers with established offices made protests. Some of these photographers wrote to aldermen and councilmen for relief. The general Council heeded and raised the license to $100 per canvasser.

Just to make sure no one escaped, the general Council put in a clause making the employing photographer liable for the $100, instead of the solicitor, and requiring the license to be taken out for a full year. Even an unscrupulous employer would hesitate to hire a canvasser for a few days, because in the end his tickets would be found.

Automobile and cab drivers also were hit, to a lesser degree, by the last tax measure. Beginning July 1 every applicant for license to drive an automobile or cab for hire must present a police inspection certificate. Heretofore no such inspection obtained.

Licenses will be issued only to drivers with good records, safe machines and good-looking machines. The chief of police will hold the first inspection during the first week of July. If driver and machine pass muster, the license will be issued upon payment of $25 or $50, according to the machine's seating capacity.

Elks Plan Booster Campaign at Supper

Exalted Ruler Al Dunne, other officers and members of committees of Atlanta B. P. O. E., No. 78, held a get-together Dutch supper at the home on East Ellis Street last night at which various plans for advancing the interests of the lodge were discussed.

Among other things a big barbeque to be held in the near future was broached and plans announced by Bob Cheshire, head of the entertainment committee, for the biggest event of its kind in Elk history.

Reports made indicated that the Flag Day celebration Saturday will be a success and a great attendance is expected, as the public has been invited.

Store Thief Shows Taste for Fine Ham

The familiar store odor of ham is lacking at Kamper's Peachtree Street store, which was robbed Monday night by persons who evidently are fond of country pork.

The burglars succeeded in getting in through a smashed window and carried away seven country hams. Detectives working on the case say they have the scent and will land the man if not the ham.

Street Car Wrecks Hearse and Coffin

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., June 10.—Two men were badly injured, a hearse demolished and the casket containing the body of Mrs. Mary Goetker, 32, was broken open when a street car to-day collided, with terrific force, with the undertaker's funeral conveyance.

The hearse was thrown clear across the street.

TARIFF TINKERS DEBATE CHANGES

Appears Certain Measure Will Go to Caucus With Free Wool and Sugar Schedules.

WASHINGTON, June 10.—Reductions in the metal, agricultural and sundry schedules, increases in the cotton and pottery schedules and an enlargement of the free list were considered to-day by Democrats of the Senate Finance Committee. In most cases the changes suggested by the sub-committees were expected to meet the approval of the majority members.

Some problems the sub-committees have been unable to settle and they will be left to the full majority membership to solve. These include income tax provisions affecting certain classes of bonds, administrative provisions affecting foreign governments and the proposal to give the Secretary of the Treasury authority to proclaim valuation of imports.

Other proposals are to change ad valorem rates on silks to specific duties and the suggestion that countervailing duties be placed on live stock and grain, making them free of duty only from countries that do not tax their entry from the United States.

The bill is certain to go to caucus with free raw wool and sugar schedules. There seems to be little prospect that they will be changed by the caucus.

NO DULL PERIOD IN U. S. BANKS HERE

Statements of the six national banks in Atlanta, showing conditions at the close of business June 4, make a remarkable display of strength.

Loans and discounts have increased but a trifle over the statement made April 4. Surplus account shows a satisfactory increase. Cash items are about stationary, as are deposits.

The remarkable holding up of deposits is one of the surprises. Midyear, with the old crop out of the way, and everyone waiting on the new crop, usually is a time when deposits dwindle, to leap up again in the autumn.

Principal items in the six statements total as follows:

	April 4.	June 4.
Loans	$25,516,416	$25,779,337
Surplus	5,027,058	5,157,567
Cash	7,859,013	7,681,356

Keeping Stocks Bright and Fresh Keeps the Silk Section an Interesting Spot

No lagging, no resting on our oars here. There is a cheerful air of "busy-ness" about the silk section that always accompanies new and bright merchandise. For new silks are arriving with splendid regularity, which doubtless will prove to be a matter of much satisfaction to the woman who wants another dress, waist or the like. She will not, as is too often the case in some stores at this season, have to choose from the tag ends of silks selected months ago.

Right now of particular merit are

New Silk Serges

One of the most serviceable and wanted silks for summer, they weather the weather, they are cool, they shed dust, they tailor beautiful, they may be had here in about any color you might want—including navy, brown, taupe and black 36 inches wide at $1.50 yard.

New Silk Poplins

The call for corded silks seems to grow louder. Our answer is new silk poplins—that drape most gracefully — in navy, Copenhagen, wistaria, brown, tan, green, apricot and rose. And they have that fine sheen that betrays the fact that the fabric is all pure silk. Width 44 inches, price $1.50 a yard.

New Crepe de Chines

An unusually fine quality—heavy and soft—of black crepe de chine, has just come in and is marked at $1.50 a yard. It is 40 inches wide. And while we are told that crepe de chines are very scarce, it would seem that a woman would have little trouble finding what she wants with all these colors to choose from—navy, light blue, pigeon blue, king's blue, taupe, lilac, wistaria, pink, taupe, yellow, white and black—width 40 inches, price $1.75 a yard.

New Crepe Meteors

Of fine texture and that rich, lustrous finish that every woman likes—these in a range of colors that would do credit to the first spring announcement. Widths 42 and 44 inches, priced from $2.00 to $3.00 a yard.

$1.00 Silk Shirtings... 79c

Thirty-three inches wide, white grounds with gray, tan, black and navy, stripes of various widths across them. A woman will hardly have to be told they are $1.00 silks, nor that such a quality is sure to return from the tub unfaded. Also the 85c quality, 33 inches wide, is 69c.

WIVES SHIRKING DUTIES CAUSE OF DIVORCES

Avoidance of Motherhood Among American Women Denounced by Judge Exculpating Atlantan.

A remarkable arraignment of the tendency of modern women to avoid motherhood was delivered by Judge N. Charles Burke, of Baltimore, in dismissing the bill filed by Mrs. Laura F. Outlaw for permanent alimony from her husband, Charles W. Outlaw, who is in Atlanta on a regular business trip.

Mr. Outlaw is a former Atlantan and at one time made his home in the southern part of the State. He said last night that his case, because of the circumstances involved and the striking language of Judge Burke in rendering his decision, had attracted attention all over the country. The decision, which constituted a complete vindication of the husband, said in part:

Wife Shirks Duties.

"I can not escape the conviction from a careful consideration of all the evidence in this case, that the really great cause of the trouble between these young people was the failure of the wife to appreciate the duties and responsibilities of the married life and to face them with a proper spirit. She shrunk from them. She was unwilling to assume them. Her child, as stated in one of her letters, 'stunned' her. She had an ever-present fear of again becoming a mother. This dread was a great source of unhappiness to her. If she had met her obligations in the right spirit and the right sense of duty and discharged well and faithfully all her duties as a mother, her character would have been strengthened, her affections broadened and refined, and for all the cares and trials she might have endured in the rearing and training of her children she would have been compensated a thousandfold. Unfortunately, she had false notions on this question."

Motherhood a Crown.

In conclusion, Judge Burke says:

"Motherhood is woman's highest crown."

Mr. Ferald, in his book, "The New Womanhood," has said:

"An education of destruction is sweeping wide and deep below the surface of our social life. Fine houses, fine furniture, fine raiment are purchased by the slaughter of the innocents, and the fact is a matter not of shame, but of boasting. The advanced American stalks about, proud as a Modoc chief in feathers and war paint, but the scalps at her girdle are those of her own unborn offspring. When whole communities regard a house full of children, however winsome and happy, as a matter of gibe and censure, and when reduction of family becomes a great domestic ambition, it ought to be said and known that the desire and fact are among the surest indications of the decline of races and of nations. If the wife is not willing to discharge, with a brave heart and in a right spirit, all of the duties of the married life, or if she has lost all love and all respect for her husband, she had better remain separated from him. But if she retains some affection and respect for him and is prepared to do her full duty as wife and mother, and he is willing to exhibit toward her some of the old love, attention, consideration and respect, and treat her kindly and to provide for her a reasonably comfortable home, it is infinitely better that they should let all the unhappiness of the past be forgotten and begin their married life anew."

A suit filed for a divorce previously by Mrs. Outlaw was dismissed.

On the announcement of Judge Burke's decision, Mr. Outlaw at once began suit for $50,000 damages for alienation of his wife's affections against his wife's mother, on whom he laid much of the blame for his domestic troubles.

LITTLE STORIES of the TOWN

Not What He Wanted, At Least, Not Then.

A well-known Atlantan wore a pair of button shoes to church last Sunday, and after he got comfortably seated his great toe began to itch. He earnestly desired to scratch the toe. So, unostentatiously he removed the shoe, toyed with the toe for a moment or two as if it were a fox terrier pup, and then all was well. He replaced his shoe.

Then a new problem confronted him. It was a button shoe and he had no buttonhook. He looked about him trying to locate someone who wore button shoes, and was rewarded by finding that a man in the same pew was wearing the buttoned kind.

"Lend me your buttonhook," whispered the man with the itching toe.

"Sure," replied the other, and he reached in his pocket.

The itching toe man looked at the article the other man gave him and handed it back.

"You've made a slight error," said he; "what I want is a buttonhook. That is no buttonhook."

"So it isn't," replied the Good Samaritan, and he looked at the little article critically.

It was a corkscrew.

Ah, Ha, and That's What They Did to the Vilyun!

The enraged populace seized the cringing wretch and tore his clothing into shreds. Then he was given a coat of hot tar and rolled in a mass of feathers. Eager hands placed a rope about his neck and he was dragged over many streets until unconsciousness stilled his shrieks. One member of the mob climbed a telegraph pole and tossed the end of the rope over a cross-arm. The victim was hoisted high in the air and left hanging as a terrible warning.

"What has this man done?" we asked.

"He is the guy who invented the phrase 'I should worry,'" replied the leader of the mob.

Told His Wife Secret of Lodge.

Having been initiated into the lodge, the man came home to his wife, considerably later than midnight. But his wife was awake.

"Now tell me everything that happened," she cried.

"I can't, dear," answered the man, wondering whether he could find his shoestring in the dark. "It's a secret."

"Didn't you ride the goat?"

"I sure did!"

"What's the secret, then?"

"Wontchatell?"

"Cross my heart!"

"Well—the goat died!"

Set of Steps Given Tech By 1913 Class

The class of 1913 of Georgia Tech has perpetuated its name by presenting to the college a beautiful set of stone steps leading up to the Academic Building. The movement to present the steps was mentioned first at a class meeting early this year, and a committee to get subscriptions from the members of the class was appointed.

More than $300 was raised, and a contractor was commissioned to build the steps. For various reasons the work has been delayed, but a formal presentation will take place Tuesday morning.

The steps will be of fine white stone, with the class numerals carved on each side. They will be finished by the last of June.

Brummell's Grave in Vanderbilt's Care

CAEN, NORMANDY, FRANCE, June 10.—William K. Vanderbilt, Sr., maintains and decorates the grave of the famous Beau Brummell here.

The grave of the dandy who once asked as the Prince of Wales (afterward George IV.) passed him, "Who is your fat friend?" is kept in perfect condition.

For many years visitors here could not learn from the officials who paid for the splendid up-keep of the Beau's grave. Mr. Vanderbilt possesses a wonderful collection of Brummell relics.

1912 Pottery Sales In U. S. $46,059,694

WASHINGTON, June 10.—Pottery to the value of $46,059,694 was manufactured and sold in the United States in 1912, according to a statement issued by the Geological Survey to-day. This represents an increase of $1,989,064 over the preceding year. Of this amount $36,504,164 worth was made in this country and $9,555,530 imported.

The effect of the wave of hygienic education which has swept the country is felt in a $870,797 increase in the production and sale of sanitary ware.

Chicago Scorns Spud At 16 1-2 Cents Bu.

CHICAGO, June 10.—Potatoes at 16 1-2 cents a bushel were offered to Chicago residents to-day, and there were no takers. Grocers were selling "spuds" at 20 cents a peck. The cheap potatoes came from Minnesota. When they arrived here the local grocers were charging 90 cents a bushel.

The Minnesota shipment did not find favor with the housewives and the price was lowered to less than one-fifth the retail price of other potatoes.

ANARCHIST BAND OF MILITANTS UNEARTHED

Secret Society, Which Will Dare Anything for "Cause," Alleged at Suffragettes' Trial.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, June 10.—The existence of a secret society among the militant suffragettes, who are members of the woman's Social and Political Union, was hinted at to-day when the trial of the six woman leaders and one male adherent, all charged with malicious damage to property, was resumed in Old Bailey Court.

The court room was thronged with women, nearly all of whom wore bands of crepe upon the arm in mourning for Emily Wilding Davison, who died from injuries received when she tried to break up the Derby.

According to the Public Prosecutor, evidence was gathered by Scotland Yard to show that a little band of daring women had pledged themselves to go to any length for the "cause." Detectives are alleged to have secured documentary evidence showing the existence of this secret organization.

The union has charge of the funeral arrangements for Miss Davison, who is denominated in The Suffragette as the "first martyr of the cause." Hundreds of dollars' worth of flowers are being bought. An official inquest into the death of Miss Davison was brought at Epsom to-day.

Kitty Marcon and Clara Giveen, described by the police as members of the suffragettes' "arson squad," were arrested and arraigned, charged with complicity in the burning of the grandstand at the Hurst Park race course.

Russia Tries to Pacify Balkan States, but Daneff Says Serbs Never Will Yield.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

SOFIA, June 10.—A situation bordering on a state of war exists between Bulgaria and Servia. Europe, notably Russia, is trying to prevent a formal declaration of hostilities between the two Balkan states, but the indications to-day favored war.

Dr. S. Daneff, a leading Bulgarian stateman and chief of the Bulgarian peace envoys, said Bulgaria would never give way to Servia.

"Servia has violated the covenant which was drawn up before the war with Turkey began," said Dr. Daneff, "and must abide by the consequences. Bulgaria will never consent to allow Servia to occupy all the territory her troops occupied when concentrated at Adrianople and Chatalja."

Russia has recalled all her officers with the Servian army because of the dangerous outlook, for Russia, on account of her Slavic attachments, wants to remain friendly with all the states in Southeastern Europe.

THREE FORWARD STEPS. NO BACKWARD STEP WILL BE TAKEN

The man had an unclean spirit.

Fetters and chains he broke.

No man could tame him.

Night and day he raged and cut himself with stones.

When he saw Jesus, he cried:

"What have I to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of the Most High God? I adjure thee by God, torment me not."

Left to himself, he would have been hopelessly lost.

A torture to himself—a terror to others until the end he would have remained, had Jesus heeded him.

Against his will, he was cured.

Friday, a girl stood in Court in Atlanta.

She had sinned.

Offered the choice between the effort to reform and prison, she chose prison.

Jane Addams says of another girl:

"Such demoralization is, of course, most valuable to the white slave trader, for when a girl has become thoroughly accustomed to the life and testifies that she is in it of her own free will, she puts herself beyond the protection of the law.

"She belongs to a legally degraded class without redress in courts of justice for personal outrages.

"It is easy to see why it thus becomes PART OF THE BUSINESS to break down a girl's moral nature by all those horrible devices which are constantly used by the owner of a white slave.

"A girl thus rendered more useful to her owner will thereafter fail to touch the chivalry of men or the tenderness of women because good men and women have become convinced of her innate degeneracy, a word we have learned to use with the conviction formerly placed upon original sin.

"The very revolt of society against such girls is used by their owners as a protection to the business."

Reflect!

That woman was not born unclean.

God created her for motherhood.

But man defiled and enslaved her.

You will not approve this.

Moreover, when you once understand the truth—THAT A FALLEN WOMAN IS ONLY A GIRL WITH A MURDERED SOUL—you will sicken at the thought; you will help her; you will join in preventing others from falling into the same wretched trap.

Not all refuse help.

When the houses were closed, a girl, crying, begged to be taken home. Those who carried her there found her mother praying that God would find and bring back her daughter.

But some have been so mangled and marred that they must be protected from themselves and THE MEN WHO PREY UPON THEM.

And society must be protected.

For these—the incorrigibles—the County Commissioners are now preparing a home.

This will answer in Atlanta and Fulton County the question:

"What is to be done with the woman who can not or will not reform?"

She will be schooled under gentle but firm hands, backed by authority of the law, until she learns again the true meaning of womanhood.

She will not be put in the chaingang. She will not be dismissed with a fine. She will be saved from herself and owners.

While she is at large—

While the white slaver is encouraged to make others like her by the tolerated brothel—

Little can be done in solving the problem of the social evil.

The closing of the segregated district was the first step.

Martha's Home, for those willing to be helped, was the second.

The County Commissioners are now taking the third in preparing the Home for the Incorrigibles.

No backward step will be taken.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

SHE IS RIGHT.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
I am keeping company with a young lady who is 20 years of age and I am 27, and I have known this girl for the past five years. Lately I notice she keeps company with one of my friends. Do you think that I should give her up? She told me that she loves me, but she made an appointment with me and went out with my friend.

WALLACE.

It seems to me that if you have been devoted to her so long and have not asked her to marry you she does right to accept invitations from others.

Make her a proposal of marriage and if she accepts this will give you the right of objection.

THAT DEPENDS.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
Is it proper for a girl to begin the correspondence with a man?

If a girl gets an invitation to a dance or party, is it proper for her to ask a man to go with her if it is a pay affair? E. M. F.

The answer to your first question can not be decisive for the reason that you tell so little.

It is never proper for a girl to write to a man she does not know, and it is for her best good that she write rarely to those she knows.

To your second question: Most decidedly no.

GOOD BEHAVIOR HELPS.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
I have been calling on a young lady for some time and find that her father does not seem to fancy me. Kindly advise me what I should do to win his fancy. T. C. A. B.

You ask for something difficult to give. Often a father's objections originate in the very natural desire to keep a daughter at home. Perhaps she is too young to receive attentions. Or—and the remedy for this lies in your own hands—perhaps you are not the character a man would welcome in a son-in-law.

HE LIKES YOU.

DEAR MIS FAIRFAX:
I am 17 and care very much for a young man of 20, with whom I work. When he sees me talking to other boys he gets very jealous, but still when he meets me he never says more than "Hello." e Jokes with the other girls, but he never gets jealous of them. Now, do you think he cares for me and is too bashful to say so, or that he doesn't care for me, and therefore thinks the others should not? ROSE.

He likes you very much. That is plainly evident.

But you are too young, my dear, to bother your little head about love. Try to be happy and heart-free a few years longer. I am sure you will never regret it.

"ALL'S FAIR IN LOVE."

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
Is it proper for a young man who has been calling on a young lady for six months and confessed his love for her, and she never makes any encouraging remarks of her love for him, to stop calling without any explanation? I asked for her love, but all I got was "I'll tell you some other time" for my answer.

LONESOME.

It is the only thing you can do if you are a man of any spirit, and unless you are a man of spirit she will never accept it.

Stay away a month. I am sure she will send for you, and when you return demand a decisive answer.

By HANK.

"I'M sure gettin' to be some popular with all the advertising you're giving me," said the Head Waitress to the Steady Customer in the Cafe d'Enfant.

"Yes," he replied, "a newspaper man, Louise, is a good friend to have. I am glad you appreciate that fact."

"I don't know whether I do or not," replied the Head Waitress. "I'd like to know what your object is. There ain't nobody now-a-days that does anything without an object. Every kindly word has its sting in these parlor times."

What She Calls Them.

"Parlous times," corrected the Steady Customer.

"If you knew what I meant you didn't have to correct me," snapped the Head Waitress. "You newspaper guys are always showing off. And let me tell you something. Marie, the cashier, is gettin' sore at you. You had her in the paper saying 'bloke' the other day. She don't call no guy a bloke. She comes from Indiana, where they don't use them kind of expressions."

"What does she call them?" asked the Steady Customer.

"Feilers," said the Head Waitress, "and that's proper, too. You wouldn't say, 'I'm going out with my best bloke, to-night,' would you. No, you'd say 'my best feller.'"

"I am duly crushed and chastised," replied the Steady Customer. "Anything else?"

"Yes, me and Marie would like to know where you and your dark friend go every day after lunch," said the Head Waitress. "You don't go right back to your office, because me and her seen you walk the other way every day."

"Why, we go to a moving picture show," explained the Steady Customer. "We find that gazing at stirring Western scenes or reckless deeds of daring takes our minds off the violent efforts of our stomachs that are protesting against the sinkers that you hand us in here."

"Hm-m," sniffed the Head Waitress. "I can't see how you can go to such places."

The Truth.

"Well, to be truthful," said the Steady Customer, "I like to go there because it's all dark and I can close my eyes and think of your sweet faces."

"Some time you'll close your eyes in the dark," said the Head Waitress, "and when you wake up you won't be able to see your watch any more, you poor simp."

.:. .:. House Cleaning .:. .:.

By MAY IRWIN.

THE first step in the campaign against the gathered dust and grime is to get the men out of the house, by some pretext. Not that it isn't possible to clean house without the men of the house knowing it. I have done it. But a woman isn't looking her best when she cleans house, and the remnant of vanity left in us in these reconstructive days rebels against the men seeing us with smudges on cheek and nose, and our hands are not pretty things during the orgies with dust and discord.

To make the house habitable during housecleaning be systematic. Take one part at a time. There is absolutely no reason for having the whole house or flat looking as though a cyclone had visited it. Cleaning should be progressive. Take two rooms at a time.

A golden rule of housecleaning is: "Don't try to do it all in a day." If you overwork the first day you will be worn out and unfit for the task of the second day, and the work becomes slavery. Housecleaning need not be drudgery unless you make it so.

Take two front rooms, say, as a beginning. Carry all the room belongings in room A into room B. Close the door opening into room B so that room A shall take care of its own dust. Thoroughly sweep the floor, giving careful attention to neglected corners. With a long-handled wall brush dust the wall and ceiling. For plain woodwork and hard floors use a large wooden bucket of warm water in which two pounds of oxalic acid have been dissolved. Wipe off the floors and woodwork with this, using an orange-wood stick inside of the cloth for boring out difficult chinks and corners of dust. While room A is drying from its cleansing, go to room B. Throw open all the windows and attack the furniture of room A. When room A is dry, move that furniture back into place and carry the furniture of room B into room A.

Carry the plan of cleaning two by two, twin cleansing, through the house, and you will be pleased with the result.

To Wash Curtains.

To clean your blankets, don't begin by soaking them. Wash them in warm water and with soap. Do not rub, but push them into and draw them out of the water. Pound them with a heavy and clean potato masher, a new one, of an age not to have acquired "slivers." Rinse them in warm, clean water. If they are not yet clean, put them through a second water—a third, fourth, even a fifth or sixth—until clean. Keep all the waters through which the blankets are put at the same temperature. Don't wring blankets. Put them on the line in a hot sun.

To wash lace curtains, soak them in cold water for two days. Then put them into hot water, into which enough soap has been shaved, an amount according to their condition. Do not rub them. Dip them up and down vigorously in the suds. Change the water three or more times. Rinse in warm water. Then rinse in cold water with a tiny bit of indigo. Then put them, one at a time, gently through a wringer and dry them on a curtain frame.

And So It Goes.

"What a ducky little place!" said the happy bride to be, as her sweetheart showed her over her prospective home. But I am afraid, Harold, everything is so small. Now, look at this litle pigeonhole. Surely you don't call it a shoe cupboard, dear?"

"Darling," sweetly answered the young man, "that little pigeonhole, as you call it, will hold a hundred pairs of shoes of the size you wear."

The pucker in her pretty brows quickly disappeared.

"Perhaps you're right, Harold," she remarked. And all was well.

Beauty Secrets of Beautiful Women

Sophye Barnard Talks on Beautiful Arms and Shoulders

By LILLIAN LAUFERTY.

ONCE upon a time a clever woman said: "Stays make waists."

Just now waists are out of fashion; but another clever woman has told me how to produce the highest type of modern figure—all lissome, swaying curves, shading gracefully into a free, beautiful whole. And in her creed there are neither "stays" nor "waist."

As a first step toward a good figure learn to stand," said Sophye Barnard, a recent recruit from comic opera to vaudeville, under the B. F. Keith management. "And as a regular promenade in the direction of a figure good enough to go on its own merits without help from corsets and artificial first aids to correct standing and breathing?" I asked.

"A girl works pretty hard to get a beautiful voice, or just to cultivate a fairly pleasing one—but it pays—even in unexpected ways, for she suddenly finds a good figure thrown in as a premium. nd a good figure is a rather attractive thing to possess, isn't it?" added Miss Barnard, ingenuously.

Rarely does one see a more beautiful figure than Miss Barnard's, which is made of absolutely the most graceful possible combinations of slender curves. I think her theories may be taken as the last word on how to make perfect poise bring out every good point in your own natural figure.

Lightly Poised.

The actress learns to be lightly poised on her feet," said Miss Barnard. "She learns to stand so that she may spring instantly into action; she never slouches or lounges or falls into ungraceful lines of abandon into which her figure, with a little unfortunate practice, might easily come to arrange itself naturally. She is poised, tense, alert. That keys her up to look and feel vividly alive, and it trains her figure into the right lines. It is just as important to keep your figure from sagging as to keep your mouth dropping at the corners.

"In singing, you learn to hold the muscles of the abdomen tense, to keep the chest high and filled with an ever-changing supply of clean air as you ventilate your lungs at each deep breath."

"Won't you give me a little exhibition in caricature of its flowing curves. Then she advanced her right foot and stood tensely alert, with the weight of her body swung forward onto the ball of hat foot. She took a deep breath, beginning at the firmly held abdominal walls, and pulling the air up into full white chest. Throat, shoulders and chest pulsed into firm contours, and shoulders and throat like Sophye Barnard's became in themselves beauties worth emulating.

"I think your first beauty secret is too good to stay a secret long" said I. "Now won't you tell me what rules of hygiene and diet you bring to be its lieutenants?"

"My rules are all very simple—anyone can put them into practice," said the charming singer. "Simple foods, with no ices or sodas or pastries, are my idea of the correct diet—although I can eat what I like without falling prey to indigestion; but I take no advantage of that ability, and I suppose the reason I can combine a welsh rarebit and broiled live lobster and strawberry ice cream is because I don't!

"I lead a very regular life too—though the popular fancy does not picture an actress doing that. I always am in bed by 12; scarcely ever visit cafes, but have my after-theater parties at home, where I am sure of simple, wholesome food, of pure air to breathe, and of getting to bed in due season. People who dine in cafes on rich, heavy foods; and breathe the heavy, artificial air of the restaurant the while they do it are sure to get fat—or indigestion—or both."

"You lay great stress on simple food and correct poise. The inner woman seems well taken care of in your rules of the game," said I. Now will you tell all of us how to have smooth, satiny hair and skin?"

"Do you consider me qualified to give advice on those subjects?" asked Miss Barnard in the pleased tone of a good child who has been praised.

I did, and I do.

The Hair.

"You wash your hair more times than the old-fashioned theories taught you to—you brush it all the time, whenever you get a chance, and you don't curl it any of the time, and then when it is brushed and washed into a clean fresh mass you dress it as smoothly and gracefully as possible, and keep it in its proper place as background for your face.

"And as for skin, when you have observed the rules of keeping your internal system sweet and clean, you do the same by externals. Keep the skin clean and unclogged and free to do some correct breathing of its own, and then make it soft and flexible by the constant use of good cold cream."

Perhaps all this sounds like constant, unceasing hard work. If you feel discouraged before ever you begin—look earnestly at Miss Barnard's beautiful arms and shoulders, at the perfect symmetry of her graceful figure. To approach "a consummation so devoutly to be desired" who will not sacrifice a bit of old and some lazy habits?

.:. Secrets of Good Looks .:.

By MME. LINA CAVALIERI.

The Distinguished Grand Opera Prima Donna and World Famous Beauty.

DO not take offense. Simply consider my suggestion and investigate.

No face is clean unless it is as absolutely free from dust as a newly washed window. No face is clean unless its pores are as free from obstruction as a freshly cleaned sieve from grit.

Have you freckles or liver spots? Your face is not clean. Indeed, the clean face is the exception instead of the rule. Yet, if there were more clean faces there would be more good complexions. The mottled skin is the index of a defective sewerage system.

Cleanse your face with oils and creams. But also use water. Many experiments have taught me that washing the face is a process of several stages. To remove the roughest dirt, use oils or creams. Spread these liberally on the face with the fingers or a piece of absorbent cotton. Be careful to reach every crevice or corner of the face with the oil or cream. Leave the oil or cream on the skin for at least five minutes. If the skin has been exposed to much dust or wind, leave these cleansers on for a quarter of an hour to search out every particle of dust and soften it. Then, with more cotton or with an old linen or silk handkerchief, gently wipe it off. You will be surprised at the grimy deposit on the cloth.

When this has been done, if you are not going out of doors, bathe the face gently in a bowlful of warm water softened with a pinch of borax or a half dozen drops of benzoin. Spread almond meal on the palms. Dip them into the water, and press them upon the face, rubbing the muscles upward. Do this until you have passed the almond meal covered palms all over the face. Then rinse the face with handfuls of cool water.

Lastly, if the facial muscles are loose and sagging, iron the face with ice, pressing the muscles firmly upward. After this careful face washing you will be surprised to see how white your face looks, and it will mortify you to realize how far from clean your visage had been before.

Pure cocoanut oil is one of the best skin cleansers and skin foods. Olive oil, into which one drop of benzoin to an ounce of the oil as a whitener has been dropped, is to be recommended.

A Gentle Hint.

A little girl made a call at the house of a neighbor. She saw some apple parings on a plate, and said: "I smell apples."

"Yes," the lady replied, "I guess you smell those apple parings on the table."

"No, no," said the little miss, smacking her lips, "'taint them I smell. I smell whole apples."

Little Bobbie's Pa

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

BOBBIE, sed Ma to me yesterday afternoon, you have prubly noticed that yure father has been a littel cross & out of sorts laitly. I doant know if he reelizes how littel sunshine he radi-ates these days, but he is deeveloping into a moody old dort, & I doant want yure father, my deer husband, to git cross grained.

He has been a littel grouchy laitly, I sed to Ma, but I guess it is sumthing like sum bizness worry that ne has on his mind. I know that he will git oaver that & cum back sum of these days into his old form.

Well, I hoap so, sed Ma, but in the meentime I am going to try a littel skeem on him that I was reeding about in the ladies' Hoam Comfort. A vary brite woman wich rites for the Comfort sed that wen she noticed her husband gitting moody & abstracted she always acted as if the wurld was cumming to a end. She says in her artikel that she is naturally sunny & sweet tempered, but that wen her husband gits blue she gits twice as blue & says sad peeces of poetry & talks about the Grave & the inevitabel end of man. Then her husband wud always git cheerful so that thare cud be a littel sunshine in the fambly. You watch me tonite wen your father cums hoam, Bobbie, sed Ma. If you doant see him start gitting cheerful rite away this woman has the wrong idee.

Pa wasent vary cheerful wen he got hoam, that is one sure thing. Sumthing must have gone wrong at the offis or sumware, beekaus his face was as long as a sack of flour & wen he got in the house & was hanging up his rain coat he sighed hard, like one of them sirens on a ottmbeel.

Pa Recites.

Then Pa sighed aggenn & jest wen he was going to beegin to talk Ma sighed, too. She sighed harder than Pa & recsited:

The day is coald & dark & dreery,
It rains & the wind is nevver weary.
The vine still clings to the moldering wall
& at every gust the ded leeves fall,
The day is dark & dreery.
Into eech life sum rain must fall,
Sum days must be dark & dreery

Pa looked at Ma kind of su-prised. Ma is always so cheerful wen Pa cums hoam, espeshully Saterday nites, that Pa cuddent understand why she looked so sad. I am the only one wich knew & I wasent saying anything.

What in the wurld has gone wrong, deer? sed Pa.

Oh, everything, sed Ma. Life at best seems to me like the monotonous beeting of a lot of sullen waives on a barren shore, restless, whimpering waives that go groaning at last into the tideles sea of Eternity.

More Poetry.

Rattel his bones
Over the stones,
He's only a pauper whom nobody owns.

For hevings saik, deer, sed Pa, cheer up. Why, you doant know how sorry I am to see my littel song bird sitting with her fethers drooping. Cum & smile for me a littel, deerest. Then Pa kissed Ma & sed, Here is fifty dollars, deerest. I got a hundred to-day that I nevver expected to get back, & you can have half of it. The man owed me a other hundred, Pa sed, besides this, wich I will nevver git, & that made me kind of grouchy on the way hoam, but after all things cud be much worse. Then Pa sang Missus McCorley's Twins for Ma. Pa sings it so bad that it is good, & it always maiks Ma laff. The fifty dollars made Ma laff moar, tho. Then she hugged Pa & sed he was her little ray of sunshine. I guess she called him that beekaus the fifty-dollar bill that he gave her was yellow like a ray of sunshine.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"But there wasn't any shot," the perplexed and alarmed detective expostulated. He fairly stuttered in the earnestness of his self-defense. "I tell you, Chief, there hasn't been a sound."

Burke rose to his feet. His heavy face was set in its sternest mold.

"You could drive a hearse through the hole they've made in him," he rumbled. He wheeled on Mary and Dick. "So!" he shouted, "now it's murder! * * * Well, hand it over. Where's the gun?"

Followed a moment's pause. Then the Inspector spoke harshly to Cassidy. He still felt himself somewhat dazed by this extraordinary event, but he was able to cope with the situation. He nodded toward Dick as he gave his order. "Search him!"

Dick Took the Revolver.

Before the detective could obey the direction, Dick took the revolver from his pocket where he had bestowed it, and held it out.

And so it chanced that at this incriminating crisis for the son, the father hastily strode within the library. He had been aroused by the Inspector's shouting, and was evidently greatly perturbed. His usual dignified air was marred by a patent alarm.

"What's all this?" he exclaimed, as he halted and started doubtfully on the scene before him.

Burke, in a moment like this, was no respecter of persons, for all his judicious attentions on other occasions to those whose influence might serve him well for benefits received.

"You can see for yourself," he said grimly to the dumfounded magnate. Then he fixed sinister eyes on the son. "So," he went on, with somber menace in his voice, "you did it, young man." He nodded toward the detective. "Well, Cassidy, you can take 'em both downtown. * * * That's all."

The command aroused Dick to remonstrate against such indignity toward the woman whom he loved.

"Not her!" he cried, imploringly. "You don't want her, Inspector! This is all wrong!"

Now,at last, Mary interposed with a new spirit. She had regained, in some measure at least, her poise. She was speaking again with that mental clarity which was distinctive in her.

"Dick," she advised quietly, but with underlying urgency in her gentle spoken words, "don't talk, please."

Burke laughed harshly.

"What do you expect?" he inquired truculently. "As a matter of fact, the thing's simple enough, young man. Either you killed Griggs, or she did."

The Inspector, with his charge, made a careless gesture toward the corpse of the murdered stool-pigeon. For the first time, Edward Gilder, as his glance unconsciously followed the officer's movement, looked and saw the ghastly inanimate heap of flesh and bone that had once been a man. He fairly reeled at the grewsoms spectable, then fumbled with an outstretched hand as he moved stumblingly until he laid hold on a chair, into which he sank helplessly. It suddenly smote upon his consciousness that he felt very old and broken. He marveled dully over the sensation—it was wholly new to him. Then, soon, from a long way off, he heard the strident voice of the Inspector remorselessly continuing in the vile, the impossible accusation. * * * And that grotesque accusation was hurled against his only son—the boy whom he so loved. The thing was monstrous, a thing incredible. This whole seeming was no more than a chimera of the night, a phantom of bad dreams, with no truth under it. * * * Yet the stern voice of the official came with a strange semblance of reality.

"Either you killed him," the voice repeated, gratingly, "or she did. Well, then, young man, did she kill him?"

"Good God, no!" Dick shouted, aghast.

"Then it was you!" Such was the Inspector's summary of the case.

Mary's words came frantically. Once again she was become desperate over the course of events in this night of fearful happenings.

"No, no! He didn't!"

Burke's rasping voice reiterated the accusation with a certain complacency in the inevitability of the dilemma.

"One of you killed Griggs. Which one of you did it?" He scowled at Dick. "Did she kill him?"

Again the husband's cry came with the fierceness of despair over the fate of the woman.

"I told you, no!"

The Inspector, always savagely impressive, now in voice and look and gesture, faced the girl with saturnine persistence.

"Well, then," he blustered, "did he kill him?"

The nod of his head was toward Dick. Then, as she remained silent: "I'm talking to you!" he snapped. "Did he kill him?"

The reply came with a soft distinctness that was like a crash of destiny.

"Yes."

Dick turned to his wife in reproachful amazement.

"Mary!" he cried, incredulously. This betrayal was something inconceivable from her, since he believed that now at last he knew her heart.

Burke, however, as usual, paid no heed to the niceties of sentiment. They had small place in his concerns as an official of police. His sole ambition just now was to fix the crime definitely on the perpetrator.

"You'll swear he killed him?" he asked, briskly, well content with this concrete result of the entanglement.

Be Wise! Make Your Own Ice Cream

Of course, you know that home-made ice creams, sherbets or ices are superior from every viewpoint. They are always sweet, pure and wholesome; there is a flavor and genuine goodness about them that is not found in the general run of factory products. Besides that, when you make your own preparations you know that the ingredients are always pure, and that the can is clean and sanitary. The main reason why ice cream is made in but comparatively few homes, is the work and bother connected with the old-fashioned crank freezer. That is one reason why the arrival of

will be hailed with delight by every one who is fond of ice creams, etc., because it eliminates the tedious turning of the crank entirely, and produces creams, sherbets and ices that will make your mouth water. That is one reason, but there are many others.

DON'T YOU KNOW that the enjoyment of a dish largely depends upon the manner in which it is served? Could you imagine a daintier and more appetizing manner of serving ice creams than provided for by the "Ice-Kist?"

A Story for Baseball Fans That Will Interest Every Lover of the National Game

SYNOPSIS

Gordon Kelly, a mountain boy of Georgia, goes to Atlanta. He becomes the sensation of the baseball world through his marvelous playing, although he said that he had never played a game before arriving in Atlanta. He is bought by the Boston American League Club for $50,000. Kelly incurs the enmity of Forrest Cain, a wealthy ne'er-do-well, at the same time winning the friendship and love of Mildred Deery, daughter of an Atlanta banker. Kelly is hurt in a game and Mildred runs to his assistance. He recovers, leaves the hospital and mysteriously disappears. He is not heard from for months. Mildred admits to herself that she loves Kelly. Her father dislikes the publicity given Mildred's assistance to Kelly on the baseball field. He gets Mildred to agree to go to the mountains. Cain follows Mildred and calls upon her. While Mildred is fishing she suddenly comes upon Gordon Kelly.

Now go on with the story.

CHAPTER XXIV.

GORDON KELLY held Mildred Deery in his embrace a full minute, maybe. Her head rested on his breast and she felt his heart beating like a triphammer. At last she sighed happily and, raising her head, she smiled faintly in his serious face.

"Gordon," she murmured, "won't you say something?"

Gordon gulped once or twice convulsively. He tried to talk, but his voice broke on the first syllable. He tried again.

"Mildred, dear," he said, hoarsely, "can it be you? I can't believe it. I have been thinking of you and only you for six long weeks. I tried to find you and"——

"How hard did you try?" Mildred interrupted. She released herself from his arms. She was beginning to recover herself.

"Why, Mildred, I called up your house just as soon as they would let me. I called up every day for more than a week and then every other day and then every three or four days and I always received the same answer. You had gone away and they didn't know where you were or when you would return. I did all I could. I couldn't move for some time and I"——

"And you finally stopped" calling up altogether. Well, I don't think you made much of an effort. Didn't it occur to you to call up my father or my mother, if you were so much interested?"

Oh, the perversity of women. If Mildred Deery were to confess it, her thoughts had been on Gordon Kelly almost constantly for the six weeks since last she had seen him. Here he was in flesh and blood standing before her, and she was now apparently trying to fret him.

"I—I—don't know much about these things," he stammered. "What have I done, Mildred? I only——"

An Interruption.

"I got him, Mildred! I got him!" yelled the voice of Elmer Shepard in the distance. "I knew there was a big fellow in there. Where are you, Mildred?"

They could hear him crashing through the underbrush. Mildred moved a few paces away from Gordon. Presently Elmer bounded over a boulder and came into view on the other side of the brook. He stopped short at seeing the stranger.

"Keep right on, Elmer, and we will meet you in the road and then we will go to the oaks and have luncheon," said Mildred. She had forgotten all about the lad, but now, mischievously enough, she welcomed his presence. Gordon, too felt the tension relax. The lad, coming on the scene, would give him a breathing spell and allow him time to collect his wits that Mildred had so ruthlessly scattered.

Picking up her fishing tackle, Gordon assisted Mildred up the embankment that bordered the road. Elmer was there before them. He held a large fish by the gills on one finger and proudly displayed his catch.

"Elmer," said Mildred, "this is my friend, Mr. Kelly. We met in the most"——

"Gordon Kelly. Gee whiz!" exclaimed Elmer, jumping up and down in his excitement. He was a little fellow for his age, whole souled and outspoken. Mildred laughed and so did Gordon.

Gordon Folded Mildred in his arms.

The Cat Out of the Bag.

"Aren't you going to shake hands with Mr. Kelly?" asked Mildred, for Elmer in the sensations of the moment, had not seen Gordon's outstretched hand. The lad dropped the fish he held and put his small hand in that of the tall young man. There was only five years' difference in the ages of the two, yet one was a little boy and the other a full grown man.

"I am glad to meet you," said Gordon, pleasantly. "But how did you know my first name?"

"Oh, I read all about you in the papers and I have seen your picture dozens of times. Besides, Mildred and I have talked about you."

"Elmer!" exclaimed Mildred blushing furiously.

"We did, too, just as we were starting out this morning. You know we did."

"You did the talking about Mr. Kelly, if I'm not mistaken," returned Mildred. "However, I guess there was no harm done, and, as I'm getting hungry, I suggest we change the subject and have something to eat. Won't you join us, Mr. Kelly?"

"Thank you, but I'm afraid I have fallen into the ball players' habit of two meals a day—a late breakfast and a hearty dinner at night."

"We will allow you to sit with us and watch us eat, then," said Mildred. "Or would you prefer to resume your fishing?"

"I guess not," laughed Gordon. He knew he would have to begin all over again with Mildred, but he felt sure of homself now. "I'll just gather up my rod and net, however," he added. "I had a fish nearly landed when I saw you, but I forgot all about him."

They were soon comfortably seated under a huge oak tree. Mildred, with a shy glance at Gordon, pulled her short skirt down as far as it would go, leaned back against the trunk of a tree, and, selecting a sandwich from the napkin that held them, bit into it daintily.

"Now, then, Mr. Gordon Kelly, give an account of yourself," she said. "What are you doing up here?"

"They had no further use for me at the hospital, so I just came up; that's all," replied Gordon.

"Why did you come here?"

"Because I had no other place to go. I live here."

"Live here!" exclaimed Mildred. "Live where?"

"Right here," replied Gordon, with an amused smile. "We are sitting on my property now."

"Goodness gracious, I didn't know that," said Mildred, as though she was doing something she ought not to do.

"Certainly, that bridge that crosses the brook is at the southern boundary line."

"Oh, I know, I know," Elmer broke in, excitedly. "That road that goes through the big granite posts leads to your house, doesn't it?"

"Youve guessed it, Elmer," replied Gordon.

"Well, I declare," said Mildred. "Tell us all about it, Mr. Kelly."

"With pleasure, Miss Deery," laughed Gordon, emphasizing the last two words as though to recall to her mind that she had called him by his first name not many minutes ago. "There's not much to tell. The road leads to a house and I live in the house. Now, please allow me to ask a few questions. What are you doing up here?"

"Because I had no other place to go. I live here." She smiled mischievously.

Elmer rolled on his back and kicked up his heels.

"Ha ha, I guess she's got you there, Mr. Kelly," he said. He had been feasting his eyes on the great Gordon Kelly all the while. Mildred watched him with a smile.

"You're right, Elmer." Then, turning to Mildred, Gordon said:

"But just where do you live; I am very much interested in my neighbors."

"Oh, just on the other side of the brook; on my father's property."

"That can't be your father's property.

It is owned by the Southern Land & Development Company."

"Galen Deery is the Southern Land & Development Company," replied Mildred with a little toss of her head.

with a little toss of her head.

"Oh, I see," mused Gordon.

"And I guess you don't own this property, either," declared Elmer, who would stick up for Mildred if it came to a question. "Dad's got a map and it says this land is owned by the Prescott Trust Company."

Gordon laughed.

"You win all the arguments, Elmer," he said. "You are right. It was a whim of my father's to put all his land in a company's name. But now that we've found each other out I hope it won't make bad neighbors of us."

"We will have to see about that," replied Mildred, with a sly look.

Mildred Blushes.

"Now I begin to understand," exclaimed Gordon. "You live in that house they were finishing when I went to Atlanta."

"Say, Mr. Kelly, you didn't do a thing to them down there, did you?" broke in Elmer. "Say that last hit you made was a corker, wasn't it? You remember, Mildred, you were there."

Mildred's face grew crimson.

"You little turncoat, you were on my side 'a minute ago," was all she could say in her embarrassment.

"That's all right, I'm with you now," said the lad. "But it was mighty good of her, wasn't it, Mr. Kelly, to run out on the field to help you?"

"Indeed it was, Elmer," replied Gordon, soberly. He had meant to tell her so at the right time, but now he noted Mildred's confusion and turned the subject quickly by asking:

"What luck did you have this morning?"

That gave the lad a chance to tell all about the morning's sport. He found Kelly knew all the best pools, as he had fished every rod of the stream year after year. Gordon told them tales of his hunting in the mountains that made Elmer's eyes glisten. Mildred listened dreamily. There was no intimate conversation such as she secretly wished there could be if the lad was not present. But that would come. She longed to have Gordon tell her all about himself, but the pleasure of anticipation is always great.

A Surprising Young Man.

The time passed all too quickly, and it was after 4 o'clock before they realized it. Mildred spoke of going home. Gordon jumped to his feet and helped her to arise.

"You will let me see you again soon?" he said.

"Oh, yes," she replied, and then paused a moment. "But not for a day or two. I will let you know. Have you a telephone. Ring three times? I will remember. Please don't call me up; you will hear from me. Well, good-by." She held out her hand.

"Wait a minute," said Gordon. "I'll be right back." He disappeared through the trees on the run and returned in three or four minutes. "Now we can walk to the bridge if you like."

They walked slowly and lingered on the bridge for a while, as if loath to part. Gordon looked at his watch.

"Give me two minutes more," he said. Even as he spoke there was the sound of a vehicle coming rapidly down the road and presently a high-powered automobile of the latest model, driven by a negro lad, slowed down and stopped at the bridge.

"I'll drive my friends home, Steve," said Gordon to the negro boy. "You wait here until I return."

"Is this your automobile?" cried Mildred in surprise. "Where in the world did it come from?"

"I telephoned for it," replied Gordon, smiling. "Another whim of my father's. He had telephones strung to every corner of the property."

"Gee whiz, that's going some," observed Elmer.

Mildred said nothing. She was thinking of the strange Gordon Kelly, a ball player, who owned a vast estate in the mountains and had servants at his beck and call who brought automobiles to him as if by magic.

CHAPTER XXV.

WHEN Gordon Kelly jumped on the tail of the express wagon in Atlanta, he told the driver to go to the Terminal Station. On the way there he decided to effectually conceal his movements, if it were possible to do so. He wanted more time to think. It is true he had had several weeks in which he did hardly anything else than think, but with his problem still unsolved he wanted to devote some more time to it, or get it off his mind altogether. The problem, of course, was Mildred Deery.

On the way to the Terminal he got a check for his trunk from the driver and told him to take the trunk to the baggage room. He paid the driver and got off the wagon a quarter of a mile from the terminal, leaving it to go on and deliver the trunk as ordered. Then he went to an express office, delivered his check and arranged to have the trunk forwarded to Steve Jackson, Pew Creek, Ga. After this was done he went to the freight office and after a good deal of trouble succeeded in geeting permission to ride in the caboose of the night freight to Chattanooga. One is sometimes able to arrange these things under proper persuasion.

It was in the gray of the morning that he dropped off the train, without being noticed, when it stopped at Pew Creek. It was all of a 12-mile walk to his home, but he started off, and it was not until he reached the bridge where later he met Mildred that he was able to make use of one of the telephones on his property and order an automobile to take him the rest of the way. Steve Jackson, his negro boy, quickly answered the summons, and that is the way Gordon Kelly reached his mountain home without anyone being the wiser. An hour later he had Judge Barbee on the telephone.

"This is Gordon," he said, "I am up home and I want particularly to ask you not to tell a soul where I am. You can reach me any time you wish but if you should call please ask for Mr. Gordon. I don't want anyone to know where I am for a while. Yes, everything is all right but I am trying to avoid a lot of annoyance. Goodbye."

With that off his mind Gordon proceeded to settle down to his old mode of life; that is as much as his troubled thoughts would allow him to.

The news that Gordon Kelly had left the hospital, packed his trunk and departed from Atlanta, presumably for Boston to join the Red Sox, was flashed over the wires, but as the days passed and nothing was heard of him, the Boston management began to get worried. Telegrams were sent to Atlanta, asking for information, but there was no information to impart. More telegrams came asking the Atlanta club officials to locate Kelly's home and see if he was there, but no one could be found who knew where his home was. Bill Smith was appealed to, but all he could say was that Kelly had told him he came from the Georgia mountains. This clew, vague as it was, led to nothing.

Two weeks passed and then the Boston club went at the matter in earnest. It had $50,000 tied up in Gordon Kelly, and that was a mighty pile of money to put out for a ball player and not have the use of his services. At the end of the third week the case was put in the hands of private detectives, and these professionals began a systematic hunt for the missing man. They traced his trunk to the terminal baggage room. They interviewed the expressman who had taken it there. But that is as far as they got in that direction. The trunk itself was like hundreds of others and the baggage men, who handled nothing else, could not place it. There was not enough for them to go on, and three weeks is a long time to remember a trunk that is like hundreds of others.

The detectives then went to the mountains but it was like hunting for a needle in a haystack. Many persons in the uplands had heard of Gordon Kelly, the ball player, but they were positive he didn't live anywhere in their section. The detectives searched the county tax lists. There was not a Kelly on them. They began to believe that Gordon Kelly was a fictitious name. If that were so, hunting for a needle in a haystack would be easy in comparison with their task.

"Now then, Mr. Gordon Kelly, give an account of yourself." said Mildred.

Never Heard of Him.

The sleuths even stopped at Pew Creek between trains, but those persons of whom they inquired truthfully told them they had never heard of a Gordon Kelly and they were positive no such man lived in that vicinity. The detectives then went back to Atlanta to make a fresh start. There they hunted up Galen Deery, but that gentleman informed them that he hadn't the faintest idea where Gordon Kelly was; that he had never seen him but twice in his life and had no interest in him whatever. Deery was still smarting over that episode of the ball field in which his daughter figured. As the detectives knew of no connection between Gordon Kelly and Judge Barbee, the latter was not troubled with a visit from the sleuths.

There was one man who could, at least, have told where Gordon Kelly's home was, had he felt so inclined. That man was Forrest Cain, but he kept his mouth shut for reasons of his own. The cards were running badly for that young man and he was playing a waiting game, as gamblers do, hoping for a change of luck.

At the end of a month, or seven weeks after Gordon Kelly disappeared, the Boston club called in their detectives and abandoned the search. On the first and fifteenth of each month, however, a check for Kelly's salary was drawn and mailed to his last known address in Atlanta. They were all "returned to writer at the end of five days." The checks were saved in the safe of the Boston club, remaining unopened in the envelopes they were mailed in. The club, having a fortune invested in the player, was taking no chances in losing him on a technicality of baseball law if any question should ever arise.

If ever the Red Sox needed Gordon Kelly it was in the period in which the detectives searched for him high and low. They were "going bad," as the baseball phrase has it. Joe Wood, the champion pitcher, was injured early in the season and was out of the game for several weeks. Their first Western trip was disastrous, and toward the close of it Larry Gardner, their star third baseman, sprained his ankle and went around on crutches for a long time, his ankle in a cast. At the close of the Western trip they were sixth in the American League pennant race, a sorry showing for world's champions. The Philadelphia Athletics were out in the lead, with the Cleveland and Washington teams next. If the Red Sox were to do anything it was time to be up and doing. Jake Stahl, the manager, stayed at home during the trip. An operation on his foot kept him away from the ball field for many days. Altogether they were sorry days for the Red Sox, and their supporters began to lose heart.

But in spite of the fact that the Boston club had withdrawn its detectives from the search for Gordon Kelly, interest in that young man's mysterious disappearance did not abate. There was always some fresh clew to start the ball a-rolling again. These were run down, one after another. Every few days a dispatch would come out of some town in Texas, or Colorado, or Wyoming or Maine that no one had ever heard of, containing the information that Gordon Kelly had been found. Sometimes he was in a starving condition, sometimes he was working as a farm hand or in a factory. Investigation proved in every case that the wrong man had been found.

Mark Twain's story of Horace Greeley's handwriting has a parallel in this, from a railway conductor in Missouri to the president of the road. The conductor wrote:

"A farmer has been riding on this pass for about a year. Do you want him to continue to use it?"

The president put on his glasses, looked the paper over carefully, and said:

"Why, this is not a pass. It is a receipt I gave the fellow for a load of wood about a year ago!"

Wedding Gifts

By MRS. FRANK LEARNED

THE question of sending a wedding gift must be decided by friendship or obligation. In the first instance there is the natural wish to please a friend, and in the other case one may be indebted to the bride or bridegroom or to their families for kindnesses or hospitalities. Those who are invited to a home wedding or a wedding reception usually send gifts, although there is no absolute rule to be followed as to this. As it is supposed to be a special compliment to be bidden to a home ceremony, a guest likes to return the courtesy by a gift, however simple it may be.

A gift is sent invariably to the bride, even though she may not be known personally to the giver. The custom is to send a gift directly from the place where it is purchased. The visiting card of the giver is enclosed in a small envelope and placed inside of the box containing the present. A brief line expressive of good wishes may be written across the top of the card, if the giver is a friend specially interested.

Wedding gifts are marked with the initials of the bride's maiden name.

In regard to the display of wedding presents there is a division of opinion. Some persons consider it ostentatious to show the gifts, or that it destroys sentiment to have critical eyes examining these offerings, others prefer to share their pleasure with their friends and are glad to give evidence of the good-will and the generous attention they have received.

When a wedding takes place in the country and friends are expected from a distance, the custom is to show the presents on the wedding day, or if the wedding is an informal one, with only relatives and intimate friends present, the gifts are shown.

The preferred custom is to show the presents a few days before the wedding. The bride-elect, or her mother, may write informal notes asking intimate friends and all those who have sent gifts to come in on a certain afternon, during hours designated, to see the presents. It is allowable to write on one's visiting card, "Will you come in on Saturday afternoon, between four and six o'clock, to see the presents?"

The gifts are arranged on tables which are covered with white damask tablecloths. Here and there are vases of flowers. Great care is taken to place each article at its best advantage, especially the small and simple gifts which should be among the more beautiful ones, so that the givers may feel that the bride has truly appreciated their thoughtfulness.

The cards of the givers are usually placed with the gifts.

The informal serving of tea finishes the afternoon.

A bride-elect is careful to write a note of appreciation to every one who sends a gift. When she sees those who have sent presents, she remembers to repeat her thanks in person. The best rule is to write without delay and to mention the gift definitely, so that the note may not ne a duplicate of others.

The Faster They Go

Professor Barry once amused Judge Ball by an application on behalf of a man who was a dealer in horses and sugar sticks. The incongruity of his avocations struck the judge, who remarked:

"What a strange combination of trades."

"I see a close resemblance between horses and sugar sticks," said the witty barrister.

"In what way?" inquired his lordship.

"The more you lick them the faster they go," was the reply.

YANKEES WIPE UP ENGLISH POLOISTS

MEADOWBROOK, N. Y., June 10.—The American Polo team beat the English team here this afternoon in their first series, after a hard fight, by a score of 5 1-2 to 3.

It was a gay and brilliant assemblage that gathered here under ideal weather conditions for the opening contest between the American and English teams for the polo championship.

The West stands that housed the social leaders from nearly every city in the country, were ablaze with color contributed by the vari-colored dresses worn by the women and by the bunting drapped around the posts and many American and British flags that snapped in the breeze.

The East stands was well filled an hour before the game was called at 4:30, and there also was a big gathering of bleacherites who paid 50 cents to stand near the railing to watch four American and four English millionaires risk their lives and limbs in their desperate pursuit of a little white ball.

The line-up:

Position.	England	America.
No. 1.	Capt. L. C. Cheape	L. Waterbury
No. 2.	Capt. A. N. Edwards	J. M. Waterbury,
No. 3.	Capt. R. G. Ritson,	D. Milburn,
Back	Capt. V. Lookett,	H. P. Whitney.

Captain Edwards, of the English team, was the first to take the field. He galloped out, driving a white ball before him and was greeted with a real American yell. Two of the other invaders followed. Then Devereaux Milburn, of the defenders, appeared in a roar of applause.

FIRST PERIOD.

Milburn hooked the ball out of the mess and drove it toward the south goal. The Englishmen brought it back and Larry Waterbury broke into a combination and drove the ball back again. There was a hot mix-up before the Englishmen's goal and again the ball was driven back, Captain Edwards driving the ball far up the field. Here Larry Waterbury smashed through the English defense and slammed it through the English goal.

Score: America, 1; England, 0.

England had the better of the face-off scrimmage, but the strong play of the Americans forced the ball back to the center of the field, where Monty Waterbury drove it toward the English goal for a long, hard drive. A second later the Americans carried the ball through.

Score: America, 2; England, 0.

In the next scrimmage, the English team worked their combination plays and had the Americans fighting hoof and hand to guard their goal until Milburn's swing drove the ball into English territory, with Milburn and the Waterburys in full gallop behind. Another scrimmage, in which the English were forced to score a safety and Captain Whitney broke his malet, followed. Milburn ploughed through center of the melee and hammered the ball through for the gird goal.

Score: America, 3; England, 0.

SECOND PERIOD.

In the second period the defenders swept the play up to the English goal in irresistible charges. Two difficult shots for goal were essayed. The Americans made for the English goal post for a third time, but Captain Whitney missed an easy shot. The invaders, on the knock-in, drove out to the middle of the field and carried the play to the American goal. Captain Edwards made a beautiful shot from a quarter way up the field and the ball just rolled through for a goal. On the next play Captain Ritson took the ball from Larry Waterbury and, making a beautiful drive half the distance of the field, just missed the goal post. A minute later Larry Waterbury had his revenge when his brother rode over half of the English team to make a hole for him and he slammmed the ball through for the American's fourth goal. Score: American, 4; English, 1.

A minute later time was called.

The team play of the Englishmen was manifestly superior to that of the Americans in many fine points of the game, but the defenders who raced up and down the field were reckless and broke up the invaders' combination through dash and daring play.

THIRD PERIOD.

The Americans got a goal in the first few minutes play, but they were penalized half a point for fouling, making the score: America, 4½; English, 1.

The Englishmen rallied and play was resumed entirely around the American goal during the rest of the period. Once Captain Cheape got the ball at the middle of the field with no one between him and the goal and carried it down to within easy striking distance, but made a clean miss.

Score: America, 4½; English, 1.

FOURTH PERIOD.

The game swept up and down the field and finally centered at the English goal where Monty Waterbury missed an easy shot for goal. On the next scrimage the American team brought the ball down to the English goal but Milburn drove it outside the goal posts. The next concerted charge of the Americans on the invaders' defense was successful. Never was coler or cleaner team work or more daring riding seen until Larry Waterbury walloped the ball between the posts from a way off to one side, the prettiest shot of the day. At the end of the fourth chucker, the halfway mark of the game, the score stood, America 5; England 1. The Americans were penalized half goal each for two fouls which eliminated one of their six goals from the score.

FIFTH PERIOD.

The invaders rushed upon the American goal at the beginning of the fifth period and kept the play there until Captain Ritson hit the ball a mighty wallop, high up between the posts, bringing a second goal, making the Score, America 5; England 2.

Captain Cheape made a nice play half of the field, the ball just going between the posts, making the score America 5; England 3. Time was called just as the Americans were finding their stride again.

SIXTH PERIOD.

Monty Waterbury broke his finger in the midst of a scrimmage in front of the English and L. E. Stoddard took his place.

In a hot mix-up at the English goal Captain Edwards was thrown from his horse. The Americans bombarded the goal with long hits, but their shots were inaccurate. The period ended without a score.

SEVENTH PERIOD.

Captain Whitney was hurt on the hand, but stayed in the game.

The Americans were penalized half a point, which brought the score down to 4 1-2 to 3. The play was now entirely against the American goal and two chances to score were lost by very poor shots by Captain Edwards and Captain Cheape.

A desperate rally swept the English back and America had a chance to get another needed goal, but Stoddard missed a perfectly easy shot and a few moments later time was called.

EIGHTH PERIOD.

The game was pretty well in the middle of the field at the opening of the period. In a hot scrimmage over on the east side Larry Waterbury was unhorsed. His pony ran back to the stable and he had to walk about 200 yards to get a new mount.

The new horse seemed to do him a lot of good, for he tore into the English team and after a desperate mix-up around the goal smashed the ball through, giving the Americans another point.

Savage Best White Hope--Morgan Jim Has Won Last Seven Battles

By Left Hook.

A CHANCE to let in light on the question of the heavyweight championship of the world is not often given to an Atlanta boxing club. Until Jim Savage and Sailor White were matched here such a thing had never happened before. But that scrap is going to have a bearing, and an important bearing, on deciding the title holder.

Jim Corbett says Gunboat Smith is the logical white hope. Bob Fitzsimmons says that Jess Willard is the only genuine article, and that all others are spurious.

Dan Morgan says that Jim Savage is the only original Caucassian possibility, which is of course natural. But then Dan goes further and is willing to back his opinion in each battle with coin of the realm. And to date Danny is a few thousand to the good in his recent operations on Savage. For James has just finished winning seven battles in a row.

ONE after the other Savage has disposed of Dan Daly, Al Kubiak, Bearcat MacMahon, of Pittsburg; Jack Keating, of Montana; Sailor Tom Logan, of Philadelphia; Jack Fitzgerald, of the same burg, and Whitey Allen, the Bronx terror.

Sailor Tom Logan, disposed of by Savage after a terrific engagement, boxed a draw with Luther McCarty not so long before and was regarded by the experts as every inch as good a man as McCarty. He was easy money for Savage, however.

Whitey Allen, the Bronx guy who was the last man tucked away by Savage, was supposed to ve a corker. He had developed from an unknown into a metropolitan celebrity in almost no time. And he came by his honors honestly, too, for up to the Savage ruction he had knocked out his last seven opponents in succession.

Savage fairly made hash of Allen and in the second round put him out for the count.

Just how strong Dan Morgan believes in his man can be determined from the fact that when he was matched with Flynn, Danny lost no time in piking over to Jack Curley's place and placing $500 on Savage's chances. Of course the bet did not stick when Flynn crawled, but it was a very good evidence of Morgan's confidence in his man.

Savage is expected from New York Tuesday and Sailor White Wednesday. They will work here briskly until Friday. That night they meet for ten rounds at the Auditorium-Armory.

THE coming of some more scrappers will be as welcome as the flowers in May to one man in this burg, said man being Mike Saul. For Mike has clean run out of sparring partners.

Mike had an excellent crop of sparring partners when he went into training for Terry Nelson about three weeks ago. They were an assortment of welters, middles, heavies and such. And they gave Mike a lot of practice. At the end of the first week two welters and three heavies dropped out. By the end of the second two middleweights and the last heavyweight was gone. Monday afternoon a playful tap on the jaw put the last welterweight, who was the last sparring partner, down and out for the count of 837. And now Mike hasn't any more sparring partner than a Jack Rabbit.

Thornton Plays in Dominion Tourney

RICHMOND, VA., June 10.—The Old Dominion tennis tourney got under way yesterday with a good representation of players on hand, including several celebrated Georgians.

Monday afternoon in the preliminary round Preston defeated Gary, of Augusta, 8-6, 2-6, 6-4. In the same round A. H. Allen defeated Grant, of Atlanta, by default.

In the ladies' singles Mrs. Willard Sullivan defeated Miss Martha Robinson 6-0, 6-1. Mrs. Sullivan is playing in championship form, and is a favorite to win the cup now held by Mrs. Saunders Taylor, of Norfolk.

Nat Thornton, of Atlanta, and partner yet to be chosen, are matched against Donnan and W. Miller in the men's doubles, and will play Tuesday afternoon. In the same event Garrett and Gary, of Augusta, will play L. H. Blair and Preston.

ELLIS GOES TO LOUISVILLE.

WICHITA, KANS., June 10.—W. E. Ellis, of the Wichita pitching staff, was sold to Louisville to-day for a cash consideration and Pitcher Nick Maddox. Both pitchers are to report at once.

Yankee Tennis Team Plays Germans Next

NEW YORK, June 10.—The tennis team representing the United States, consisting of Maurice E. McLoughlin, R. Norris Williams, II, H. N. Hackett and W. F. Johnson, will leave in a few days for England to compete with the German team in the semi-final round of the competition for the Davis trophy and the tennis championship of the world.

The German team won its preliminary round by defeating the French team. The team representing the United States qualified yesterday by winning both of its matches against the Australasians. This gave the decision to the United States, four matches to one.

McLoughlin defeated Stanley N. Doust in straight sets by scores of 6-4, 6-4, 6-3, and R. Norris Williams, II, won from H. M. Rice, 1-6, 4-6, 6-1, 9-7, 6-2.

Either victory was sufficient to clinch the series. When the rival players in the first of the day's singles resumed the battle on the turfed court, surrounded by a gallery of 5,000 spectators, the score of matches was two to one in favor of the United States team.

McLoughlin swung into his speedy and masterful play at once, and, although the invading team captain fought back valiantly, the outcome was not long left in doubt. Unable to handle the terrific service and returns of the United States champion, the Antipodean was gradually worn down and placed on the defensive.

Williams opened against Rice in a weak and erratic manner, but he came from behind in an impressive manner and won the match in the final three sets.

Baltimore May Lose Williams-Coulon Bout

CHICAGO, June 10.—Johnny Coulon, bantamweight champion, is not going to Baltimore to battle Kid Williams on July 4—not with a Baltimore referee in the ring.

Johnny received a long letter from Sammy Harris, Williams' manager, who is promoting the proposed contest there, in which the information was given that the police authorities there would not stand for an out-of-town referee, since Billy Joh made what they thought was a bad decision there in favor of Abe Attell. Hence, if Coulon boxes Williams at all it would have to be with a Baltimore man the third person in the ring.

Coulon is not willing to risk his title and reputation in this manner, and has so advised Harris.

In the meantime Tom McCarey, of Los Angeles, is bidding frantically for the match, and offers Coulon as much as he is to get in Baltimore—a guarantee of $5,000.

MANY ATHLETES ATTEND MIKE MURPHY'S FUNERAL

PHILADELPHIA, June 10.—One of the largest crowds of athletes and followers of college athletics that ever gathered in this city assembled at St. James Roman Catholic Church in West Philadelphia yesterday to pay the last tribute to Michael C. Murphy, the noted trainer, who died last Monday.

After the services the body was taken to Hopkinton, Mass., where it was interred.

KILBANE AND FOX MEET IN 10-ROUND GO TUESDAY

OAKLAND, CAL., June 10.—Johnny Kilbane, featherweight champion, and Johnny Fox, of San Francisco, have completed training for their ten-round bout here to-night. Kilbane is a big betting favorite.

BOXING
News of the Ring Game

Local fans should see a corking bout when Sailor White and Jim Savage clash in a ten-round battle at the Auditorium-Armory Friday night. White has defeated Arthur Pelky and has also fought a ten-round draw with Gunboat Smith. Savage needs no introduction to Atlanta fans. He is without a doubt the cleverest heavyweight before the public today.

* * *

Two other ten-round battles will be staged. Mike Saul, the tough Hebrew lightweight, meets Terry Nelson, while Meyer Pries takes on Spider Britt. Both scraps are grudge affairs.

* * *

Frankie Burns, the New Orleans bantamweight, has taken unto himself a new manager. Billy Roche, former referee and manager of Pal Moore, will hereafter look after Burns' interests. Tommy Walsh was the Southern boy's former pilot.

* * *

Ad Wolgast and Johnny Dundee will not box Tuesday night. Ad injured his thumb and Tom McCarey has been forced to cancel the go. Nate Lewis, manager of White, has wired McCarey, agreeing to take on Dundee on a week's notice.

* * *

Charlie met Dundee at New York about a year ago and handed the Eastern lightweight a terrible lacing. Dundee probably remembers that affair and would do well to steer clear of the Chicago boy.

* * *

Johnny Coulon has finally decided to defend his title against a worthy foe. The bantamweight champion has agreed to take on Frankie Burns in a ten-round affair at Kenosha, Wis., Tuesday, June 17. Coulon won a twenty-round decision over Burns a few years ago, but Frankie has always claimed he was entitled to a draw in that engagement.

* * *

Patsy Brannigan and Kid Mahoney are two other bantamweights, who are to get busy soon. The pair were matched yesterday to meet in a ten-round battle at Milwaukee, Wis., on June 16. Brannigan is a big card in the Wisconsin city ever since he defeated Matty McCue.

* * *

Harry Trendall, the St. Louis lightweight, may make a trip to the coast before many weeks pass by. Tommy McCarey is anxious to secure the St. Louis boy for his lightweight tournament which he expects to stage in July or August.

* * *

Many fans are pulling for Joe Rivers to defeat Willie Ritchie when the two clash on July 4. They are clamoring for a champion of the Battling Nelson and Ad Wolgast type, one who will fight instead of tour the world on a stage campaign. Rivers is one of the few present day fighters willing to risk his laurels.

* * *

Pittsburg fans are clamoring loud for a Frank Klaus-Jack Dillon bout. The "Smoky City" fans cannot realize how the Indianapolis boy ever defeated their idol. Dillon recently handed Klaus a neat lacing at Indianapolis.

* * *

Meyer Pries says he will have plenty of money to wager on his chances against Spider Britt at the Auditorium Friday. Meyer has been saving his extra pennies for the past few weeks and says his bank roll will make the Britt backers look dizzy when the boys enter the ring.

* * *

Eddie McGoorty and Jimmy Clabby are on edge for their ten-round engagement at Butte, Mont., on Friday. This is the second meeting between the pair. The former go was called a draw.

'Drome Races Called Off Again Nothing Doing Until Tuesday

DISGUSTED with the weather and certain that there is not much chance for an improvement in the immediate future, the backers of Atlanta's new Motordrome have postponed their opening meeting until next Tuesday night, June 17. It is believed that by then the weather will have turned honest and that at least it will not be snowing.

THAT motorcycle racing on a wet track is almost sure death for the riders can easily be seen. To ride at a mile-and-a-half-a-minute gait around the inside of a washtub track is awfully ticklish business when it is dry. It is straight suicide when it is wet.

The following excerpt from the Brooklyn Eagle, giving a description of the racing on a slippery night at the Brighton Beach Motordrome, gives a pretty good idea of the homicidal possibilities of night racing on a wet track.

THERE was plenty of excitement at the Brighton Motordrome, with spills occurring every few minutes.

The first spill of the night came in the second heat of the three-mile novice race. The riders had completed the distance and were riding around once before shutting off power when suddenly the lights on the west side of the track went out and left them in absolute darkness. Coming from the glare of the arc lights into utter darkness, the contestants became confused and the spectators were peering into the darkness looking for the riders. Instead of the riders appearing, an overturned machine hove into view, the sparks flying and the engine pounding away. One of the riders in the paddock rushed out and turned off the gasoline, preventing an explosion of the motorcycle.

It was some time before figures could be distinguished on the track, and then several men were carrying Will Gibson, the winner of the heat, off the track. Gibson had tried to reach the bottom of the track in the darkness, but had misjudged the distance and had slipped off his machine. He was only partially stunned and quickly revived. In falling Gibson had taken two other riders with him, and Bert Sayre, an added starter, was the only one to escape the mix-up.

The next event was the 25-mile Brighton Derby, and the spills became so frequent in this race that it was a hard matter to keep track of them all. Before the race started George Mercier slipped off his machine and narrowly escaped being run over by the rest of the field.

After the race had gone about two miles, Martin Kessler, the post favorite, fell heavily and the momentum carried him into the paddock, where he quickly mounted another wheel and set out in pursuit of the field. After traveling about fifteen miles, Franz Krebs crashed to the bottom of the track near the subway, and his machine was wrecked, the rider suffering a wrenched left ankle.

The race developed into a two-man affair between Billy Hagan, of Flatbush, and Hartley Thomas, of Philadelphia, and the former won. They were the only men who finished of the six who started.

FODDER FOR FANS

Hal Chase, who was on the Yankee payroll for eight years, and who now is playing with the White Sox in the Yankees' ballwick, is being made the object of jeers from the New York fans. If Chase makes a good play the New Yorkers, who once idolized him, loosen a few jeers, asserting that Chase "laid down" when playing with the Yankees; if he makes an error he is greeted with howls and jeers: "You're playing in your natural form now."

* * *

The Athletics defeated the Browns yesterday and registered their fourteenth straight victory.

* * *

The defeat of the Naps yesterday and victory for the Athletics widened the gap between the American Leaguers and the runners-up to three full games, a matter of 85 points.

* * *

The Dodgers, by a great ninth inning rally, during which they made six runs, ambled home winners over the Pirates yesterday.

* * *

Falkenberg, of the Naps, after amassing a record of ten straights, went up against the Red Sox yesterday and suffered his first defeat of the season.

* * *

The Phillies gathered together two home runs, two triples, three doubles and six singles yesterday, which enabled them to take an easy victory from the Reds.

* * *

The Cardinals wore their swatting attire yesterday in the game against the Braves, with the result that they badly battered four Boston pitchers and romped home with a 12 to 6 victory.

* * *

The Yankees must have contracted a ravenous victory appetite following Saturday's victory over the White Sox—their first on their home grounds this season—for yesterday they again jumped upon the Chicago folk and snatched away another game.

* * *

Jack Coombs, the star athletic twirler, who has been ill for more than a month, is almost well now, and may resume his regular position in the box the latter part of the month.

* * *

Aided and abetted by a home run and a single by Cobb, the Tigers yesterday defeated the Senators.

* * *

"Silent" Hummell, of the Dodgers, faced the Pirate twirlers four times yesterday and added a single, two doubles and a triple to his collection.

* * *

Shortstop Pecklnpaugh, who went from the Naps to the Yanks with the reputation of being a very poor batter, has been hammering the ball for an average around .500 since donning a New York uniform, in addition to fielding in fine style.

* * *

Ever since Joe Jackson, of the Naps, knocked a ball over the top of the right field grandstand at the Polo Grounds joke artists are declaring that he can make a dollar and a quarter (the value of the ball) go farther than any man playing baseball.

* * *

Jim Thorpe, the Indian Olympic hero, made his first major league appearance in Chicago yesterday and delivered a safety, batting in place of Mathewson, of the Giants.

* * *

The Giants garnered 13 hits and 11 runs off the delivery of four Cub pitchers yesterday and took an easy game.

* * *

Frank Schulte, Cub outfielder, successfully underwent an operation for removal of a growth from his forehead which has caused the terrific headaches to which he has been subjected during the past few weeks and which is said to have affected his batting eye.

SCHULTE OPERATED ON.

CHICAGO, June 10.—Frank Schulte, right fielder of the Chicago Nationals, underwent an operation yesterday for the removal of a growth from his forehead.

Banish All Skin Troubles

A Remarkable Remedy That Works Wonders Against Even Weeping Eczema.

Get a Bottle of S. S. S. To-day. It Is Certainly a Wonder.

If you have been fighting some blood trouble, some skin disease, call it eczema, lupus, psoriasis, malaria or what you will, there is but one sure, safe way to cure it. Ask at any drug store for a $1 bottle of S. S. S. and you are then on the road to health. The action of this remarkable remedy is just as direct, just as positive, just as certain in its influence as that the sun rises in the East. It is one of those rare medical forces which act in the blood with the same degree of certainty that is found in all natural tendencies. The manner in which it dominates and controls the mysterious transference of rich, red, pure arterial blood for the diseased venous blood is marvelous.

Out through every skin pore acids, germs and other blood impurities are forced in the form of invisible vapor. The lungs breathe it out, the liver is stimulated to consume a great proportion of impurities, the stomach and intestines cease to convey into the blood stream the catarrhal, malarial germs; the bowels, kidneys, bladder and all emunctories of the body are marshaled into a fighting force to expel every vestige of eruptive disease.

There is scarcely a community anywhere but what has its living example of the wonderful curative effects of S. S. S. Get a bottle of this famous remedy to-day, and if your case is stubborn or peculiar, write to The Swift Specific Company, 137 Swift Building, Atlanta, Ga. Their medical laboratory is famous and is conducted by renowned experts in blood and skin diseases. Their advice is entirely free and always strictly personal.

Empire League Notes

BY BERT DENNIE.

Otto Jordan broke into the league like a house afire and the way he injected the old "pep" into the Valdosta youngsters was a caution. He took practically the same team that had been losing steadily and with himself in the line-up and with very few changes, made a winning combination. That isn't all. Stick a pin in this prediction: Valdosta will net more money out of its ball team investment than any other town in the circuit.

* * *

Leininger, third baseman, is a beauty and nothing can keep him out of faster company. He is big and fast; fields cleanly and hits well. I never saw him offer at a bad ball. With the benefit of Jordan's coaching, he ought to be ready by the end of the season.

* * *

VanLandingham in center is another player destined to go up and there is no limit to the route this bird can travel. Right now he is good enough for any company. He is all over the outfield, hitting like a madman and hasn't a weakness.

* * *

One of the best and brainiest ball players down there is Jack Hawkins, an Atlanta boy, who is starring in left field for Brunswick. Jack is hitting close to .400 and is the bright particular star of the league. He is hitting all the pitchers well, and when he gets on, "good night."

* * *

Manchester, a catcher for Americus, is awfully good. He has more "pepper" than all his team put together, and has won lots of games with his heady work behind the plate.

* * *

Brunswick has a peachy left-hand pitcher in Cates. This fellow is the most feared hurler in the league and deserved to win every game he pitched before his illness. He's the class of minor league pitchers this year and will bring a nice price in the fall.

* * *

Among the winning pitchers who will go up are "Rube" Zellers and "Baby" Wilder, portsiders and Clarke, Winges and Elrod, right-handers.

* * *

Day, of Cordele, a first baseman, is going to develop fast. Right now he is the smoothest first sacker in the league and one of the best I've looked at in many a day.

* * *

Believe me, the Appalachian League won't be 1-2-6 with the Empire developing promising material for fast company this year.

* * *

If Kite, the Brunswick manager, was wise to his job, he would keep Hawkins out of the box and let him star in the outfield. Jack is only a mediocre hurler at best, while as an outfielder he looks the class of the circuit.

WELLS OFFERS CARPENTIER $5,000 BET FOR RETURN GO

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, June 10.—London to-day continues to shower her favors upon George Carpentier, the French heavyweight, who knocked out Bombardier Wells, the English heavyweight, about two weeks ago. Carpentier was given a tremendous ovation when he appeared on the stage of the London Opera House last night, where he is billed to do a vaudeville turn.

Wells hopped upon the stage while Carpentier was doing a little boxing stunt and announced that he would like to meet the Frenchman again for a side bet of $5,000.

FOX MUST BEHAVE OR BE BANISHED FOR SEASON

MACON, GA., June 10.—Jim Fox, manager of the Columbus team, has been notified by President N. P. Corish, of the South Atlantic League, that another rupture with the umpires will mean suspension for the remainder of the season. Incidentally, Mr. Corish announces that any other manager who curses an umpire will be severely handled. President Corish has sustained the fine of $15 put on Manager Fox by Umpire Barrs, and has also levied an additional fine of $50. This latter fine was meted out because Fox struck the umpire at Macon.

REAL TROUBLE IN JULY JUST BEGUN

Spot People and Shorts Struggle for Old Crop—July Goes to 12.25, August 12.04.

NEW YORK, June 10.—A firm tone prevailed in the cotton market at the opening to-day, first prices being 4 to 11 points higher than the previous close. The trading was very active. A number of traders who have been operating on the bear side switched over on crop and weather news from the South and West. Cables were also better than expected, which helped the advance along.

Detail weather reports show heavy rains over the entire State of Oklahoma and Texas. The same applies to the South, but not quite so heavy. Extremely low temperatures is causing increased bullish activities. These inclined to the long side refuse to eliminate their holdings to any great extent and their sales are of limited character.

After the call the market displayed phenomenal strength as well as activity. Spot houses and shorts bid aggressively for the entire list. Old crop positions were apparently in best demand. July, after opening at 11.95, was carried to 12 cents, the highest it has been since the middle of April, when the last bull campaign was on. August advanced from 11.87, opening quotation, to 11.89. September showed the greatest strength by advancing 8 points from the opening to 11.50. The entire list at the end of half an hour aggregated a net gain of 2 to 8 points from the initial level. Later the market shaded a few points, but maintained the steady tone. Price movement during the forenoon was 8 to 18 points above the previous close.

Continuation of buying by the larger spot houses and Wall Street shorts covering sent July to 12.15, for a net gain of 27 points over last night's close. August followed the advance for 25 points, going to 12.01. Not only old crop months rallied, but new ones as well. New crops advanced 18 to 19 points. Offerings were extremely light and scattered.

After July had worked to 12.15 and August 12.04 through heavy short covering, a sudden realizing movement dominated the market during the closing hour, resulting in a rapid decline of about 22 points from the high level. The selling was based upon a rumor that war had been renewed in the Balkans. Early buyers ffooded the market with offerings, pulling down fancy profits. Offerings, however, were readily absorbed by strong interests and prices worked a shade higher.

At the close the market was teady with prices showing a net gain of 8 to 18 points from the closing quotations of Monday.

Following are 11 a. m. bids in New York: July, 11.99; August, 11.82; October, 11.29; January, 11.21.

Following are 10 a. m. bids in New Orleans: July, 12.23; August, 11.89; October, 11.36; January, 11.38.

COTTON GOSSIP

"Keep your eye pasted on July-August," remarked a trader, who is following his own advice.

* * *

* * *

Now that the drouth in Oklahoma and Texas is entirely eliminated, what will the bulls rely on to maintain the upward movement of the market? Small stock of cotton in the warehouse and talk of heavy shipment out of it is about the only bullish factor in the market at present. Sentiment among the locals continues bearish, as well as weather and crop reports.

* * *

Dallas wires: "Texas and Oklahoma generally good rains covering nearly every inch of both States; still cloudy and threatening."

* * *

The Journal of Commerce says: "The gossip is that there is a long interest in one quarter of 100,000 bales of July-August."

* * *

Rainfall in Texas: Alice, .14; Beeville, .96; Brenham, .14; Brownsville, .48; Brownwood, .48; Clarendon, .30; Corpus Christi, .26; Corsicana, .70; Cuero, .14; Dallas, .54; Dublin, .04; Eastland, .90; Fort Worth, .40; Galveston, .50; Greenville, 1.34; Henrietta, .94; Huntsville, .14; Koppert, .80; Lampassas, .10; Longview, .06; Llano, 1.14; Luling, .44; Marble Falls, 1.34; Nacogdoches, .22; Palestine, .80; Paris, .02; Price, .02; Riverside, .20; San Antonio, .02; Sherman, .64; Snyder, .64; Taylor, .06; Temple, .24; Valley Junction, 1.56; Waco, .30; Waxahachie, 1.24; Weatherford, .26.

NEW ORLEANS, June 10.—Hayward & Clark: The weather map indicates partly cloudy to fair over the entire belt; probably light sprinkles, except more rain in south and west Texas, where it will be beneficial. Continued cool in north central and northeastern belt. Map shows cloudy with rain general over belt, but only light except Oklahoma, Atlantic coast and in south Texas, where it was heavier. General rains in south Texas most beneficial. Temperatures below normal over the northern half of the belt, but crop too far advanced and only result will be a little handicap to growth.

Memphis wires: "Scattered light and occasional heavy rains are reported heaviest in Oklahoma and along Atlantic coast. Light fall in Southern Texas. Low temperatures will continue for another 24 hours over most sections followed by warmer and somewhat unsettled weather. Generally favorable map with excessive rain in localities, but not damaging."

New Orleans Times-Democrat says: "Bear talent generally seems fully convinced to cotton crop is making wonderfully favorable progress and the yield promised is getting larger and larger.

"Bull talent generally seems convinced that potential trade factors, in addition to the New York July position, are supplying cotton market strength. The bear quite naturally asks what the bull will do when July has ceased to play a part in market affairs, and the bull retorts with a query as to what the bear will do when the dream of a sixteen or seventeen-million-bale crop shall have been destroyed by subsequent Government reports. Europe believes in a moderate crop promise, but the big yield man promptly tells the rings that Europe is far removed from the cotton belt, therefore, the American bear is the best judge of the condition of affairs."

STOCKS SHOW BIG DROP ON DECISION

Northern Pacific Leader in Downward Movement—Others Ride Toboggan Entire Session.

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, June 10.—Throughout the day the bears continued assaults upon the stock market, hammering it down fraction by fraction, because of the decision of the United States Supreme Court yesterday in the Minnesota rate case, upholding the right of State Railway Commissions to regulate rates within their borders.

By 1 o'clock this afternoon 680,000 shares of stock had been traded in and the flood of selling orders still deluged the market. They came from Europe, the West and the East. Northern Pacific and Great Northern preferred were hardest hit, because of their geographical locations. Northern Pacific sold down to 103 for a loss of 6 1-4 on the day; Great Northern preferred lost 5 points, going to 117 1-2.

Big banking houses tried to stem the tide of liquidation in which they were vitally interested through mortgage or bond interests. Kuhn, Loeb & Co. went to the rescue of Union Pacific, Southern Pacific and Pennsylvania, hurling buying orders in big blocks into the market. The First National Bank was another heavy buyer. J. P. Morgan & Co. was accredited with big purchases of United States Steel common and preferred. Steel sold around 50 1-4, the lowest price it touched this year.

Union Pacific went to 139 1-4 for the loss of 4 1-8 on the day. Reading crumbled to 152 1-2 for a decline of 2 3-8.

There was practically no demand. The market closed firm. Governments unchanged; other bonds dull.

There was some talk late of good export business having been consummated at New York and there were sales at Chicago of 165,000 bushels No. 1 Northern at ⅛@¾c over the July future. Duluth reported five loads of wheat there for export and 200,000 bushels No. 1 Northern for Eastern shipment. There was talk of a small lot of flour having been sold at Minneapolis for export.

Corn closed ⅛@¼c higher and oats were ¼@⅜c lower.

Provisions were unchanged to a shade better.

CONDITION OF WHEAT WORSE THAN REPORTED BY BUREAU

CHICAGO, June 10.—The Inter Ocean says:

"A bearish construction put upon the Government crop report by the trade in general. Those who were inclined to be bullish on wheat called attention to the fact that the condition of winter wheat in Kansas and Oklahoma is lower now than when the Government's figures were made up and that they showed a loss of 32,000,000 bushels from last month. The position of the bears is that conditions are not right for a bull movement in anything at present.

"It was noticeable yesterday by the pit element in corn that comparatively little hedging business was done and that shorts were the best sellers.

"Oats traders as a rule consider the price high enough and that figures on the basis is 1,249,000,000 bushels. The greatest surprise was the increase of 1.1 per cent in the acreage when a reduction of 5 per cent was expected."

Elsewhere over the cotton region they ranged from nearly normal to 4 above, the greatest excess being in northwestern Arkansas and Louisiana. Weekly mean temperatures ranged from 70 to 80 over the eastern, from 74 to 82 over central, and from 76 to 80 over the western part of the cotton growing States. The lowest mean temperature, 70, occurred at Asheville, N. C., and the highest, 82, at Shreveport. No precipitation occurred over a large part of eastern Texas and over scattered localities in Louisiana. Elsewhere over the cotton region precipitation was general, but it was very unevenly distributed.

The total amounts were small in some localities, while in other localities rainfall was quite heavy. Generally speaking the heaviest precipitation occurred in the eastern part of the belt. More than 2 inches occurred in parts of Oklahoma, Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Florida, Georgia and the Carolinas.

OPINION ON GRAIN.

CHICAGO, June 10.—Bartlett, Frazier & Co.: Wheat—Whatever selling pressure comes on the market is from shorts. We feel that the market is not high.

Corn—Speculative trade is light with the temper generally bearish. The market, however, can not be called weak.

Oats—The effect of the Government figures on prices is likely to cause an easier market for the time being.

Provisions—Current arrivals seem to meet with a good demand and the general undertone is firm.

JAP TOLD HOW NIPPON WOULD MAKE WAR ON U. S.

Mr. Graves Narrates Remarkable Story Told Him by American Statesman.

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES.

WASHINGTON, June 10.—A remarkable story has come to me from an authoritative source in the last Congress.

The American statesman to whom I refer was closely associated with the foreign affairs of our Government. He was a particularly intimate friend of Baron Uchida, the Japanese Ambassador preceding Baron Chinda.

One night after dinner with Baron Uchida, the American drifted into frank discussion of future conditions that might make trouble between this country and Japan.

Turning to Uchida, he said: "Baron, I am well aware from my official closeness to our foreign affairs that in case of war between our countries all the preliminary advantages would be on the side of your people.

"I do not hesitate to say, which I am sure you know, that we of America are shamefully unprepared, in the conditions and equipment of our navy, in our naval bases and our coast defenses, and even in our small and inadequate army, to cope with the splendid preparedness of your trained and disciplined navy and of your veteran soldiers.

"Does my estimate of conditions agree with yours?"

Frank Talks.

Ambassador Uchida, runs the story, got up from his chair, and with evidence of intense interest and feeling replied:

"You are a frank, square man, Mr. ————, I like you, I trust you and I will talk to you frankly.

"All that you say is true, and much more than what you say is true. Japan knows just exactly what it could do with America in case of war. Every official of the Japanese Government knows. We are prepared and have long been prepared, fully prepared. Since the Russian war ended we have had in our minds the possibility of a conflict with the United States and have carefully and specifically gotten ready for it.

"We know every detail of your defenses on land and sea, every bay, inlet and sounding on your coast from Seattle to San Diego and down to Mexico. We know the weak spots in your five great transcontinental railways between the Pacific and the Rocky Mountains. We know the defendable passes, the destructible bridges.

"In case of war, Japan could undoubtedly take the Philippines without great expenditure of money or blood. We could take the Hawaiian Islands and Guam. We could batter the defenses of your Panama Canal and destroy the work of years in a few days. Moreover, we could undoubtedly occupy the State of California and your entire Pacific Coast and hold it against all comers for a year or more.

Within Three Years.

"But after this, what? Japan would be bankrupt, and we know it.

"Moreover, Russia in the North—with the knowledge of this fact, and with the engagement of our armies and navies on the American coasts—Russia would take advantage of the fact, drive us out of Manchuria, and, sweeping down upon Nippon, might drive our people out of Japan into the sea.

"Moreover, the boundless resources and energies of your people, which I know as well as you do, would rally and in the sheer might of numbers drive our armies from the Pacific Coast into the Pacific Ocean.

"Within three years there would be no Japan."

While the story was being told, however, there sat beside me an American soldier and a diplomat.

"It will not do to trust too much to the assurance of Uchida, even in the friendly atmosphere in which he spoke. The Japanese are wily even between drinks."

Japan is seeking now to negotiate a treaty with Russia to hold hands off.

If Japan could do this, then we may expect an immediate change in its attitude.

THE STORY HAS FOR ME BUT A SINGLE MORAL:

"BUILD MORE BATTLESHIPS, STRENGTHEN OUR NAVY AND MAKE OUR COAST DEFENSES ADEQUATE FOR ALL EMERGENCIES."

SECOND BATTLE IN POWER SUIT ON JUNE 28

Rehearing of Tallulah Case To Be Urged Before Judge Jones This Month.

Considerable interest is felt throughout the State in the hearing of the motion for a new trial of the the Tallulah Falls suit against the Georgia Railway and Power Company, but when the motion comes up for argument at Gainesville June 28 it will lack the picturesque features of the first trial.

The State will probably be represented at this hearing by Attorney General T. S. Felder and Edgar Watkins, while it is likely that H. H. Dean and Alex C. King will represent the power company. Judge Jones, who presided at the first trial, will decide as to the justification for a new trial.

It is doubtful if ever in the legal history of Georgia there has been a court trial of the magnitude of the first trial of the water power suit at Clayton.

The setting of the trial was extremely picturesque. Clayton is a small mountain town, typical of its kind.

Rabun Farmers on Jury.

The jury was composed of eleven Rabun farmers and one school teacher, and everyone interested in the case—judge, jury, attorneys, witnesses, even the spectators—seemed to feel the importance of the case being tried. Millions of dollars were involved, and the highest principles of law and equity and the destiny of an enterprise closely related to the industrial and domestic lives of over half a million people of Georgia were at stake. The details were already familiar to every person in the court room. The lawyers on both sides had been busy preparing their case ever since it was set for a hearing last February. The newspapers had been full of the matter for months, and it had been generally discussed all over the State.

Every person who knew anything at all about the case had been brought to the trial as a witness, about 20 in all being summoned for the State. The attorneys for the power company had thoroughly searched the archives of the State for original surveys, plats and grants of the land in question. Three Governors had been interested in the case and a skilled corps of engineers had been brought over from the University of Georgia to resurvey the land in dispute and to check the surveys of 1818, ordered by the Legislature of that time.

Brilliant Legal Array.

Representing the State was a coterie of noted lawyers, including Attorney General Felder, Edgar Watkins, R. C. Ellis, of Tifton, Ga.; W. S. Paris, of Clayton, and Walter Hunnicutt, vice president of the Tallulah Falls Conservation and Parking Association. For the power company appeared Alex C. King, Luther Z. Rosser, Charles T. Hopkins and Preston S. Arkwright, president of the Georgia Railway and Power Company, all well-known members of the Georgia bar.

The trial was marked by many unusual incidents. Judge Jones was evidently determined to arrive at a fair and impartial decision in the weighty problem, and he kept the jury together from the time it was organized until it rendered its verdict.

The arguments of the brilliant array of counsel formed one of the main features of the trial. The concluding speech of the Attorney General was probably the most impressive; in it he reviewed and ridiculed the reasoning and logic of the opposition.

Messrs. Watson and King confined their arguments to the literal law in the case, and Mr. Dean attempted to impress upon the mind of the jury the local situation. Luther Rosser had Attorney Ellis for his opponent, and at the conclusion of his argument he pictured Judge Logan Bleckley, the patriarch of Rabun, sadly contemplating the spectacle of "Rabun County citizens being urged by the great State of Georgia to take away from honest men lands they had honestly acquired and paid for."

Choose your children

Do you know that you can do so? A new science brings us the glad tidings. You can have strong, vigorous, normal children free from hereditary taint, even though in your own family there may be consumption, epilepsy or some other dread disease.

Disease can be bred out of the blood

That this cheering statement is a fact has recently been proven with almost mathematical exactness. The scientific study of heredity has explained how healthy parents are sometimes saddened by sickly, feeble-minded children; how bright, robust boys and girls are sometimes born to parents who are weak, unintelligent or depraved.

This new science gives you one simple, all-comprising rule for protecting your offspring from hereditary disease; the scourge which has wrecked the lives of so many helpless babies.

POULTRY, PET AND LIVE STOCK

Birds of Quality Bring Good Sales

Low Grade Stock Causes Dissatisfaction and Means Disaster to Shipper.

EDITED BY JUDGE F. J. MARSHALL

Quality should be the aim of the poultry raiser at all times, whether he is producing eggs for stock or for the market. A low grade breeding stock will not sell well, especially if it is seen before it is purchased and when it is sent out upon mail orders it will cause dissatisfaction, and this means disaster for the shipper nearly every time. Every dissatisfied customer means a strong advertisement of the wrong kind. Also a dissatisfied customer is a hard proposition to buck against. Such a customer always takes special pains to tell his friends and acquaintances how shabbily he has been treated and never loses an opportunity to throw a brick in your path. A business carried on in such a manner requires an ever-increasing amount of advertising to keep one's trade up to the same level, which is not a very paying business. The really successful poultryman is the one who works for quality first, last and all the time. He gives his customer just a little more quality each time than he is looking for. The result is, the customer takes delight in singing the praises of the fair-dealing poultryman to all comers. Quality in the show room counts. It counts as nothing else can count. The breeder who places a dozen fairly good cockerels in the show room in hopes of winning first stands but little more show to get this prize than does the party who shows but one. One really tiptop bird in the show room is worth as much as a whole carload of fair specimens. It is good enough to win, and that is what it is put there for. It is but little less important in the breeding yard, where it will produce stock running 60 to 75 per cent good specimens, while the progeny from common stock would not be near up to standard and would not reproduce this kind. If you have not the room to care for successfully more than 100 growing chicks and have 300 on hand, you had better cull them out now and not wait until too late when sickness overtakes them. Kill and eat those that are not good ones. Get them on the market as soon as possible, so as to give the better ones a chance to develop more rapidly, which is very essential to quality. Who cares to look at 300 or 400 half-cared-for, ill-shaped chickens when they can just as easily have 50 or 100 plump ones? Uniform quality in poultry and eggs for market is what counts. That is the reason a good strain of thoroughbred stock is so much better than the everlasting scrub. You can get uniformity. Better raise 100 chickens weighing 600 pounds than 150 mongrels weighing the same amount. Did you ever think along this line?

Judge Marshall: We have a lot of hens that stand around under the trees and pluck the weathers out of each others' necks. They did this some time before I found out what the trouble was, and I could not imagine what was making them so bare around the head and neck. Can you tell me what starts them to doing this? Also, what will cure them of the habit?

We get a lot of good from The Georgian poultry column, and will thank you very much for a reply.

MRS. S. S. M.

Madison Fla.

Answer: This pernicious habit is usually formed by idleness, crowding, lack of green food and insects or meat of some kind. It is usually started by some one meddlesome old hen that starts in one the male gird of the flock, and then others get at it from seeing her, until soon many of them are at it. If you will make a close study of their habits you may find that one is doing all the mischief. If so, she can either be sent to the pot or put in a pen by herself for a while, at the same time trimming off the curved point of the upper mandible so that it will not close down on anything closely. In this way you can almost entirely stop her operations, even when left with the flock all the time. Yet it is best to put her to herself for a while and then back into her regular pen. Some recommend rubbing the neck feathers with some bitter ointment like aloes and vaseline or lard. This bitter dose will sometimes get them to desist. But the best treatment is to trim the offender as indicated and then keep them busy working for their food, which should be well balanced, including meat in some way and soft food once a day into which a little salt and pepper has been added. Beef lungs secured fresh from the butcher and nailed to the side of the roosting house so high that they will have to jump up to get a bit off of it will serve to satisfy their craving for blood.

Georgia Lead Works to Build in Suburbs—Many Realty Transfers—Business Good.

Another large commercial industry has come to Atlanta and will begin operations with an investment of $100,000. This is the Georgia Lead Works, located at the Southern Railway belt line, East and Bishop Streets, near the Atlanta Steel Works. Within a week H. J. Carr & Co., engineers and contractors, will start work on a $25,000 steel frame building for this concern. The building will be 50 by 200 feet.

The Georgia Lead Works is said to be a branch of the United Lead Company, with main offices in New York and branch offices in various sections of the country.

Mr. Carr also has the contract for the new $265,000 commission merchants' building on Produce Row and Central Avenue, and ground for this work was broken Tuesday. Sixteen produce merchants have signed up for space. The building is to be one of the largest concrete structures in the country.

West Peachtree Work Starts.

Members of the committee of the West Peachtree Improvement Club met Monday to talk over a final plan for regrading West Peachtree, and were informed Tuesday morning that the County Commissioners would decide at the regular meeting Saturday morning at 10 o'clock on the date when the work should actually start. The opinion exists that retaining walls will be put up within 30 days.

The committee is composed of Judge Spencer R. Atkinson, James T. Wright, Frank P. Rice, Dr. William Owens and Judge E. W. Born.

Many Realty Transfers.

A glance at the records at the county court house is sufficient to indicate the activity with which realty transfers are being negotiated. In Monday's list, for instance, there were 36 warranty deeds, which is unusual.

The bonds for title show some interesting small sales, among them being the following:

R. H. Williamson to John D. Muldrew, on Highland View, 265 feet west of Highland Avenue, 50 by 150, $6,500.

James Luther Campbell to John D. Muldrew, on Piedmont Place, 568 feet east of Peachtree, 33 by 135, $6,250.

D. D. Henry to Mrs. W. R. Fullerton, on Malden Lane, 95 feet north of Yale Avenue, College Park, 47 1-2 by 200, $2,500, and transferred to Mrs. Maude Muldrew for a valuable consideration.

The Bradstreet Forecast.

Prediction by the Bradstreet agents' meeting in Atlanta that the South will soon undergo a great commercial change, with immediate signs of greater prosperity than ever before, has attracted a great deal of attention among local real estate men. This prediction has been made from time to time by the dealers in land, who have long been known to be among the most optimistic of Atlanta's business men. Realty dealers expect good crops to bring a great deal of activity in all lines.

To Build Apartment.

Robert E. Riley expects to build a $30,000 apartment house on the site which he recently purchased from the Raoul estate. He said so Tuesday morning. The site is on the west side of Piedmont Avenue, just north of West Fourteenth Street. Mr. Riley's apartment will be similar in design to the Conner at apartment at the northwest corner of West Peachtree and West Peachtree Place.

Healey Building Active.

Steel work for the Healey Building has mounted to the second floor, and the gang of workmen attending to this part of the structure are rushing the work. During the past week flooring has been laid on the ground floor of the building and the two monster derricks, which at first rested on the ground, have been raised to the street level. These derricks, by the way, are the finest pair ever brought into the South, according to Mr. Healey. They are nearly 100 feet high.

Steel girders on the Hurt Building are about placed. They have reached the top, which is seventeen stories.

Building Remains Active.

The erection of local residences maintains a good pace, judging from figures at the Building Inspector's office. Monday a permit was issued to Mrs. M. A. O'Donnell to build a two-story brick veneer dwelling at 606 Ponce DeLeon Avenue, to cost $10,000. H. W. Nicholes is the contractor.

A permit has been issued for the construction of a $5,000, two-story frame at 8 Severn Avenue by the owner, Mrs. Lillie L. Skinner, and to John S. Owens to build for $4,750 at 350 Greenwood Avenue a one-story frame, and to James L. Wright to install a heating plant in the $60,000 Wright apartments at North Avenue and Willow Street, at a cost of $3,750.

For Peachtree Paving.

Peachtree paving from Fifteenth Street to Buckhead will be discussed by the County Commissioners at an early meeting, the date to be announced later. Leading property owners are expected to appear and suggest a plan for raising the money for this needed improvement.

Profit in Sale Is $8,000.

Three sales in thirteen months of the three-story mill-constructed building at the southwest corner of Haynes and Hunter Streets, has netted a total profit of $8,000. Judges L. S. Roan and C. S. Reid, the latter of Palmetto, have bought the parcel from N. H. Bullock for $35,000. The lot is 58 by 110 feet. W. S. McBride, of the Clark & McBride Agency, sold it three times, first for A. A. Rayles, Jr., to Mrs. Ora B. Mangum for $27,000, and later for Mrs. Mangum to Mr. Bullock for $28,500. The building is occupied by Sullivan & Co., furniture dealers, on a long lease at $200 a month.

Three Ships at a Time As An Example

They Would No More Think of Dilly-Dallying With Their Navy in Great Britain Than A MERCHANT WOULD THINK OF LETTING HIS INSURANCE LAPSE ON A GREAT STORE Filled With Millions of Dollars' Worth of Merchandise.

It did not require any extra session of Parliament to elicit from the British First Lord of the Admiralty the prompt announcement that three battleships that were to have been laid down next March for the British Navy will, instead, be laid down at once on account of the rejection by the Canadian Senate of the naval bill.

The United Kingdom had hoped that Canada would relieve it of at least a small part of the vast expense of naval construction. But, as that is not yet to be, the Admiralty goes at it thoroughly and without a day's loss of time.

They would no more think of dilly-dallying with their navy in Great Britain THAN A MERCHANT WOULD THINK OF LETTING HIS INSURANCE LAPSE ON A GREAT STORE filled with millions of dollars' worth of merchandise.

Whether Great Britain has the merchandise, the broad, world-wide trade, because she has the battleships, the insurance fully paid up, it would be hard to determine. But this much is certain: She DID have the sea power before she had the trade.

Three new battleships, mark you, not one! There is economy and speed of construction in three. Every smallest part is made in triple, and the three can be ready almost as soon as one.

THAT IS WHAT JAPAN IS DOING. FOUR ships of a class are being built for her simultaneously in English yards, THREE more in her home yards. One of the four is already afloat in English waters.

We lag behind with ONE laid down this year! There is gathering evidence that Congress has had its lesson and is now willing to vote for two more this year. Why not THREE? That is the economical and up-to-date way of building navies. For a nation that does things on such a wholesale scale as the United States, WHY SINGLE OUT THE NAVY, OF ALL THINGS, AND HANDLE THAT ON A BANANA-STAND SCALE?

The other day there was printed a remarkable story from a very authoritative source of the frank after-dinner talk of the predecessor of the present Japanese Ambassador to the United States.

He was quoted as confessing that what the Japanese would have to fear, if anything, in a war with this country, would be, not OUR navy, nor OUR army, nor anything WE could do, but RUSSIA. No doubt he was polite. No doubt he gilded the humiliating truth he was honest enough to state. But did he tell ALL the truth? Supposing Japan had previously made its terms with Russia! Or supposing that the Japanese mind should change!

The moral is startlingly plain. Let this newspaper again repeat the truth that REAL PATRIOTISM IS EVEN MORE NECESSARY IN TIME OF PEACE THAN IN TIME OF WAR.

A Terrapin Patch With Every Lot

Wrought to a high pitch of indignation by the high cost of terrapin, the Bureau of Fisheries has determined to place these delicate little creatures within the reach of all. A brochure on the rearing and care of terrapin will soon be obtainable by all who have "pulls" with Congressmen, and thereafter terrapin farms will spring up like dandelion patches in every quarter of the land. No longer the market man will coldly inform the timid housewife that diamond backs are two dollars and fifty cents each, for they will be shovelled into bins like coal by the newly instructed farmers, and if they bring ten cents a dozen it will only be on a strong market.

This, of course, will lower the public veneration for the terrapin and lose him his high place on the banquet menu, but it will bring him once more into the lowly cottage of the tired business man and supply an agreeable change in his daily diet of roast beef medium.

The Bureau of Fisheries is to be congratulated. Having left its strictly legitimate domain to deal with these amphibians, which are only constructive fish at best, perhaps it can find a way to classify steers and sheep as fish, and by teaching how they may be cheaply brought to maturity bring about real downward revision of the butchers' schedules.

.:. Tom Casey .:.

By WILLIAM F. KIRK

I WAS walking in a pasture not so very long ago,
When I came upon a brooklet and I stopped to watch its flow;
A silvery little brooklet, winding in and twisting out
Through growing beds of watercress that sheltered tiny trout.
The robins with their singing and the brooklet purling by
Made a sort of mystic music, half a laugh and half a sigh.
Then I swallowed something aching and brushed a tear away,
For I seemed to hear the music poor Tom Casey used to play.

For an instant I could see him in a sort of misty dream
As he sat at his piano on a bank across the stream:
But his face was even whiter than the face we used to know
And his great dark eyes were brighter than the eyes that used to glow.
When I heard the rippling tinkle I could close my eyes and see
All the boys that Casey played for ere his spirit floated free.
Then I saw the pasture only, for the vision died away,
Just as Casey faded from us with the things he used to play.

Flatter Your Own Folks

Praise Is the Lever by Which Each of Us Can Move Our Little World, She Declares.

By DOROTHY DIX.

CONSIDERING that vanity is the most prominent and universal human attribute, and that we are all brother and sister to the donkey who can be cajoled along anywhere, but can not be driven a step, isn't it queer that we have never found out how much more efficacious a weapon praise is than blame?

Personally, we all know in our secret souls that we are easy marks in the hands of the flatterer, and that we may be twisted around the finger of the jollier, and yet we are so stupid that we never think of applying to those about us the means by which we are ourselves so easily worked. It's the greased hinge that swings to our lightest touch, not the rusty one that we batter at with a sledgehammer.

Poor Johnnie.

Of course, we should put in our best effort, and time, and thought in correcting our faults and strengthening our weak performances. As a matter of fact, we do just the opposite. It's our virtues that we magnify, and the things that we do well, and that we know we are going to be praised for, that we strive to do better and better.

It's the people who give us the glad hand that influence us, not those who use a club on us, and the surest way to develop the characteristic you want in anyone about you is to keep a rosy spotlight turned upon it.

For instance!

Every mother is anxious for her children to be courteous, and to have good manners. In order to achieve this the average mother is just one incarnate "don't." It's Johnnie, don't come in the room with your hat on; Johnnie, don't sit still in your chair while a lady stands; Johnnie, don't do this; Johnnie, don't do that, and Johnnie gets his back up, and says to himself that he isn't going to be bothered with all that foolish nonsense and he's going to do exactly as he pleases.

I know one mother with two boys who, observing the futility of blaming children for their bad manners, decided to try what praising them for their good manners would do. She would remark where her Johnnie could hear it upon his exquisite courtesy to women, and thereupon Johnnie would break his neck to open doors, and pick up handkerchiefs for ladies, and you couldn't have kept him in his seat on the trolley while a woman stood if you had nailed him to it. Johnnie's mother also casually remarked to him how gratifying it was to her that he had such good table manners, and from there on Johnnie ceased to be a "spotter" and became a connoisseur among the which-is-which of the forks and spoons on the dinner table.

A Bad Temper.

I knew a little girl who had a terrific temper. Her mother tried in every way to teach her to control it. She pointed out to Sallie how unlovely and unattractive a shrewish woman was, and how everybody would hate her and avoid her if she gave way to tantrums. All in vain. Sally was insensible to that view of the subject.

Finally one day her mother said to her, "You have a brilliant mind, and a wonderfully strong will. I wonder that any one with your intelligence and your determination of character should be dominated by a weakness." That appealed to Sally's vanity, and just to show that she was stronger than her temper she conquered it so that to-day she has a reputation for amiability.

And if you can do more with soft words than with hard ones with children, how very, very more efficacious in flattery than knocks in the family circle! Believe me, it is soft soap that makes the domestic machinery revolve without a hitch.

Who is the woman who spends hours and days joyously over the kitchen stove, concocting toothsome dishes for her lord and master? Is it the wife of the man who is always batting her because she can't make bread like mother used to make? Nay, verily. The woman who knows that her best culinary efforts are going to be growled over, anyway, stops on the way home from her bridge whist, and buys an unsavory mess at the delicatessen store, which she sets before the grouch she is tied to.

It is the wise husband who praises his wife's handiwork as he eats who fares sumptuously every day, for there's some encouragement to a woman to make a burnt offering of herself if she is going to receive the proper appreciation for it. But nobody wants to be an unsung martyr.

The Secret.

Who is the woman who pares, and scrimps, and economizes, and makes over her old clothes and retrims her hats? Is it the wife whose husband is always berating her for her extravagance? Not much. She feels that inasmuch as she is going to be blamed anyway, she had as well have good clothes by way of consolation. The woman who squeezes a nickel until the buffalo on it howls with pain is the one whose husband is always boasting that she is such a financier that if she had her due she would be Secretary of the Treasury.

Also, you may observe, that the husbands who are nailed to their own firesides are the men whose wives are always telling about how entertaining John is, and how big and strong and handsome and wise he is. Keeping flattery on tap at home is like keeping Scotch on the sideboard. A man doesn't have to run around the corner to get it. Also it's generally a better brand and not so expensive.

The moral of all of which is that praise is the lever by which each of us can move our little world. And the more fools we, that we haven't sense enough to use it oftener.

The Delhi Magazine

By REV. THOMAS B. GREGORY.

THE defense and explosion of the great magazine at Delhi 56 years ago—May 13, 1857—deserves to rank along with the great achievements of history, not excepting even Leonidas at Thermopylae or the immortal three who held the bridge across the Tiber against Lars Porsena.

The magazine was a huge building packed with arms and ammunition, and was in charge of Lieutenant Willoughby and eight subordinates. It was nine men against a great city. Knowing that they could not hold their ground against such odds, a fuse was run into the magazine and at its outer end a man was stationed with portfire in hand.

Presently came a summons to surrender, which was, of course, refused, and then on came the swarms of Sepoys, Willoughby's eight guns the meanwhile (each worked by a single man), pouring death into them. But on came the swaying mass of Sepoys; a rain of death falls upon the little band from the walls and in another moment will come the rush of bayonet. Willoughby raises his hand, Scully applies the portfire to the fuse and the mighty magazine goes up in one huge thunderclap! The whole city seems to shake with the concussion, and a great pillar of smoke rises in the sky. "It is the signal to heaven and earth of how the nine Britons who kept the great magazine had fulfilled their trust."

Of the gallant nine, Scully, who fired the fuse, and four others, vanished along with hundreds of the mutineers, but strange to say Willoughby and three others escaped death.

POULTRY, PET AND LIVE STOCK

Birds of Quality Bring Good Sales

Low Grade Stock Causes Dissatisfaction and Means Disaster to Shipper.

EDITED BY JUDGE F. J. MARSHALL

Quality should be the aim of the poultry raiser at all times, whether he is producing eggs for stock or for the market. A low grade breeding stock will not sell well, especially if it is seen before it is purchased and when it is sent out upon mail orders it will cause dissatisfaction, and this means disaster for the shipper nearly every time. Every dissatisfied customer means a strong advertisement of the wrong kind. Also a dissatisfied customer is a hard proposition to buck against. Such a customer always takes special pains to tell his friends and acquaintances how shabbily he has been treated and never loses an opportunity to throw a brick in your path. A business carried on in such a manner requires an ever-increasing amount of advertising to keep one's trade up to the same level, which is not a very paying business. The really successful poultryman is the one who works for quality first, last and all the time. He gives his customer just a little more quality each time than he is looking for. The result is, the customer takes delight in singing the praises of the fair-dealing poultryman to all comers. Quality in the show room counts. It counts as nothing else can count. The breeder who places a dozen fairly good cockerels in the show room in hopes of winning first stands but little more show to get this prize than does the party who shows but one. One really tiptop bird in the show room is worth as much as a whole carload of fair specimens. It is good enough to win, and that is what it is put there for. It is but little less important in the breeding yard, where it will produce stock running 60 to 75 per cent good specimens, while the progeny from common stock would not be near up to standard and would not reproduce this kind. If you have not the room to care for successfully more than 100 growing chicks and have 300 on hand, you had better cull them out now and not wait until too late when sickness overtakes them. Kill and eat those that are not good ones. Get them on the market as soon as possible, so as to give the better ones a chance to develop more rapidly, which is very essential to quality. Who cares to look at 300 or 400 half-cared-for, ill-shaped chickens when they can just as easily have 50 or 100 plump ones? Uniform quality in poultry and eggs for market is what counts. That is the reason a good strain of thoroughbred stock is so much better than the everlasting scrub. You can get uniformity. Better raise 100 chickens weighing 600 pounds than 150 mongrels weighing the same amount. Did you ever think along this line?

Judge Marshall: We have a lot of hens that stand around under the trees and pluck the weathers out of each others' necks. They did this some time before I found out what the trouble was, and I could not imagine what was making them so bare around the head and neck. Can you tell me what starts them to doing this? Also, what will cure them of the habit?

We get a lot of good from The Georgian poultry column, and will thank you very much for a reply.

MRS. S. S. M.

Madison Fla.

Answer: This pernicious habit is usually formed by idleness, crowding, lack of green food and insects or meat of some kind. It is usually started by some one meddlesome old hen that starts in one the male gird of the flock, and then others get at it from seeing her, until soon many of them are at it. If you will make a close study of their habits you may find that one is doing all the mischief. If so, she can either be sent to the pot or put in a pen by herself for a while, at the same time trimming off the curved point of the upper mandible so that it will not close down on anything closely. In this way you can almost entirely stop her operations, even when left with the flock all the time. Yet it is best to put her to herself for a while and then back into her regular pen. Some recommend rubbing the neck feathers with some bitter ointment like aloes and vaseline or lard. This bitter dose will sometimes get them to desist. But the best treatment is to trim the offender as indicated and then keep them busy working for their food, which should be well balanced, including meat in some way and soft food once a day into which a little salt and pepper has been added. Beef lungs secured fresh from the butcher and nailed to the side of the roosting house so high that they will have to jump up to get a bit off of it will serve to satisfy their craving for blood.

$100,000 Outlay For New Concern

Georgia Lead Works to Build in Suburbs—Many Realty Transfers—Business Good.

Another large commercial industry has come to Atlanta and will begin operations with an investment of $100,000. This is the Georgia Lead Works, located at the Southern Railway belt line, East and Bishop Streets, near the Atlanta Steel Works. Within a week H. J. Carr & Co., engineers and contractors, will start work on a $25,000 steel frame building for this concern. The building will be 50 by 200 feet.

The Georgia Lead Works is said to be a branch of the United Lead Company, with main offices in New York and branch offices in various sections of the country.

Mr. Carr also has the contract for the new $265,000 commission merchants' building on Produce Row and Central Avenue, and ground for this work was broken Tuesday. Sixteen produce merchants have signed up for space. The building is to be one of the largest concrete structures in the country.

West Peachtree Work Starts.

Members of the committee of the West Peachtree Improvement Club met Monday to talk over a final plan for regrading West Peachtree, and were informed Tuesday morning that the County Commissioners would decide at the regular meeting Saturday morning at 10 o'clock on the date when the work should actually start. The opinion exists that retaining walls will be put up within 30 days.

The committee is composed of Judge Spencer R. Atkinson, James T. Wright, Frank P. Rice, Dr. William Owens and Judge E. W. Born.

Many Realty Transfers.

A glance at the records at the county court house is sufficient to indicate the activity with which realty transfers are being negotiated. In Monday's list, for instance, there were 36 warranty deeds, which is unusual.

The bonds for title show some interesting small sales, among them being the following:

R. H. Williamson to John D. Muldrew, on Highland View, 265 feet west of Highland Avenue, 50 by 150, $6,500.

James Luther Campbell to John D. Muldrew, on Piedmont Place, 568 feet east of Peachtree, 33 by 135, $6,250.

D. D. Henry to Mrs. W. R. Fullerton, on Malden Lane, 95 feet north of Yale Avenue, College Park, 47 1-2 by 200, $2,500, and transferred to Mrs. Maude Muldrew for a valuable consideration.

The Bradstreet Forecast.

Prediction by the Bradstreet agents' meeting in Atlanta that the South will soon undergo a great commercial change, with immediate signs of greater prosperity than ever before, has attracted a great deal of attention among local real estate men. This prediction has been made from time to time by the dealers in land, who have long been known to be among the most optimistic of Atlanta's business men. Realty dealers expect good crops to bring a great deal of activity in all lines.

To Build Apartment.

Robert E. Riley expects to build a $30,000 apartment house on the site which he recently purchased from the Raoul estate. He said so Tuesday morning. The site is on the west side of Piedmont Avenue, just north of West Fourteenth Street. Mr. Riley's apartment will be similar in design to the Conner at apartment at the northwest corner of West Peachtree and West Peachtree Place.

Healey Building Active.

Steel work for the Healey Building has mounted to the second floor, and the gang of workmen attending to this part of the structure are rushing the work. During the past week flooring has been laid on the ground floor of the building and the two monster derricks, which at first rested on the ground, have been raised to the street level. These derricks, by the way, are the finest pair ever brought into the South, according to Mr. Healey. They are nearly 100 feet high.

Steel girders on the Hurt Building are about placed. They have reached the top, which is seventeen stories.

Building Remains Active.

The erection of local residences maintains a good pace, judging from figures at the Building Inspector's office. Monday a permit was issued to Mrs. M. A. O'Donnell to build a two-story brick veneer dwelling at 606 Ponce DeLeon Avenue, to cost $10,000. H. W. Nicholes is the contractor.

A permit has been issued for the construction of a $5,000, two-story frame at 8 Severn Avenue by the owner, Mrs. Lillie L. Skinner, and to John S. Owens to build for $4,750 at 350 Greenwood Avenue a one-story frame, and to James L. Wright to install a heating plant in the $60,000 Wright apartments at North Avenue and Willow Street, at a cost of $3,750.

For Peachtree Paving.

Peachtree paving from Fifteenth Street to Buckhead will be discussed by the County Commissioners at an early meeting, the date to be announced later. Leading property owners are expected to appear and suggest a plan for raising the money for this needed improvement.

Profit in Sale Is $8,000.

Three sales in thirteen months of the three-story mill-constructed building at the southwest corner of Haynes and Hunter Streets, has netted a total profit of $8,000. Judges L. S. Roan and C. S. Reid, the latter of Palmetto, have bought the parcel from N. H. Bullock for $35,000. The lot is 58 by 110 feet. W. S. McBride, of the Clark & McBride Agency, sold it three times, first for A. A. Rayles, Jr., to Mrs. Ora B. Mangum for $27,000, and later for Mrs. Mangum to Mr. Bullock for $28,500. The building is occupied by Sullivan & Co., furniture dealers, on a long lease at $200 a month.

Three Ships at a Time As An Example

They Would No More Think of Dilly-Dallying With Their Navy in Great Britain Than A MERCHANT WOULD THINK OF LETTING HIS INSURANCE LAPSE ON A GREAT STORE Filled With Millions of Dollars' Worth of Merchandise.

It did not require any extra session of Parliament to elicit from the British First Lord of the Admiralty the prompt announcement that three battleships that were to have been laid down next March for the British Navy will, instead, be laid down at once on account of the rejection by the Canadian Senate of the naval bill.

The United Kingdom had hoped that Canada would relieve it of at least a small part of the vast expense of naval construction. But, as that is not yet to be, the Admiralty goes at it thoroughly and without a day's loss of time.

They would no more think of dilly-dallying with their navy in Great Britain THAN A MERCHANT WOULD THINK OF LETTING HIS INSURANCE LAPSE ON A GREAT STORE filled with millions of dollars' worth of merchandise.

Whether Great Britain has the merchandise, the broad, world-wide trade, because she has the battleships, the insurance fully paid up, it would be hard to determine. But this much is certain: She DID have the sea power before she had the trade.

Three new battleships, mark you, not one! There is economy and speed of construction in three. Every smallest part is made in triple, and the three can be ready almost as soon as one.

THAT IS WHAT JAPAN IS DOING. FOUR ships of a class are being built for her simultaneously in English yards, THREE more in her home yards. One of the four is already afloat in English waters.

We lag behind with ONE laid down this year! There is gathering evidence that Congress has had its lesson and is now willing to vote for two more this year. Why not THREE? That is the economical and up-to-date way of building navies. For a nation that does things on such a wholesale scale as the United States, WHY SINGLE OUT THE NAVY, OF ALL THINGS, AND HANDLE THAT ON A BANANA-STAND SCALE?

The other day there was printed a remarkable story from a very authoritative source of the frank after-dinner talk of the predecessor of the present Japanese Ambassador to the United States.

He was quoted as confessing that what the Japanese would have to fear, if anything, in a war with this country, would be, not OUR navy, nor OUR army, nor anything WE could do, but RUSSIA. No doubt he was polite. No doubt he gilded the humiliating truth he was honest enough to state. But did he tell ALL the truth? Supposing Japan had previously made its terms with Russia! Or supposing that the Japanese mind should change!

The moral is startlingly plain. Let this newspaper again repeat the truth that REAL PATRIOTISM IS EVEN MORE NECESSARY IN TIME OF PEACE THAN IN TIME OF WAR.

A Terrapin Patch With Every Lot

Wrought to a high pitch of indignation by the high cost of terrapin, the Bureau of Fisheries has determined to place these delicate little creatures within the reach of all. A brochure on the rearing and care of terrapin will soon be obtainable by all who have "pulls" with Congressmen, and thereafter terrapin farms will spring up like dandelion patches in every quarter of the land. No longer the market man will coldly inform the timid housewife that diamond backs are two dollars and fifty cents each, for they will be shovelled into bins like coal by the newly instructed farmers, and if they bring ten cents a dozen it will only be on a strong market.

This, of course, will lower the public veneration for the terrapin and lose him his high place on the banquet menu, but it will bring him once more into the lowly cottage of the tired business man and supply an agreeable change in his daily diet of roast beef medium.

The Bureau of Fisheries is to be congratulated. Having left its strictly legitimate domain to deal with these amphibians, which are only constructive fish at best, perhaps it can find a way to classify steers and sheep as fish, and by teaching how they may be cheaply brought to maturity bring about real downward revision of the butchers' schedules.

.:. Tom Casey .:.

By WILLIAM F. KIRK

I WAS walking in a pasture not so very long ago,
When I came upon a brooklet and I stopped to watch its flow;
A silvery little brooklet, winding in and twisting out
Through growing beds of watercress that sheltered tiny trout.
The robins with their singing and the brooklet purling by
Made a sort of mystic music, half a laugh and half a sigh.
Then I swallowed something aching and brushed a tear away,
For I seemed to hear the music poor Tom Casey used to play.

For an instant I could see him in a sort of misty dream
As he sat at his piano on a bank across the stream:
But his face was even whiter than the face we used to know
And his great dark eyes were brighter than the eyes that used to glow.
When I heard the rippling tinkle I could close my eyes and see
All the boys that Casey played for ere his spirit floated free.
Then I saw the pasture only, for the vision died away,
Just as Casey faded from us with the things he used to play.

Flatter Your Own Folks

Praise Is the Lever by Which Each of Us Can Move Our Little World, She Declares.

By DOROTHY DIX.

CONSIDERING that vanity is the most prominent and universal human attribute, and that we are all brother and sister to the donkey who can be cajoled along anywhere, but can not be driven a step, isn't it queer that we have never found out how much more efficacious a weapon praise is than blame?

Personally, we all know in our secret souls that we are easy marks in the hands of the flatterer, and that we may be twisted around the finger of the jollier, and yet we are so stupid that we never think of applying to those about us the means by which we are ourselves so easily worked. It's the greased hinge that swings to our lightest touch, not the rusty one that we batter at with a sledgehammer.

Poor Johnnie.

Of course, we should put in our best effort, and time, and thought in correcting our faults and strengthening our weak performances. As a matter of fact, we do just the opposite. It's our virtues that we magnify, and the things that we do well, and that we know we are going to be praised for, that we strive to do better and better.

It's the people who give us the glad hand that influence us, not those who use a club on us, and the surest way to develop the characteristic you want in anyone about you is to keep a rosy spotlight turned upon it.

For instance!

Every mother is anxious for her children to be courteous, and to have good manners. In order to achieve this the average mother is just one incarnate "don't." It's Johnnie, don't come in the room with your hat on; Johnnie, don't sit still in your chair while a lady stands; Johnnie, don't do this; Johnnie, don't do that, and Johnnie gets his back up, and says to himself that he isn't going to be bothered with all that foolish nonsense and he's going to do exactly as he pleases.

I know one mother with two boys who, observing the futility of blaming children for their bad manners, decided to try what praising them for their good manners would do. She would remark where her Johnnie could hear it upon his exquisite courtesy to women, and thereupon Johnnie would break his neck to open doors, and pick up handkerchiefs for ladies, and you couldn't have kept him in his seat on the trolley while a woman stood if you had nailed him to it. Johnnie's mother also casually remarked to him how gratifying it was to her that he had such good table manners, and from there on Johnnie ceased to be a "spotter" and became a connoisseur among the which-is-which of the forks and spoons on the dinner table.

A Bad Temper.

I knew a little girl who had a terrific temper. Her mother tried in every way to teach her to control it. She pointed out to Sallie how unlovely and unattractive a shrewish woman was, and how everybody would hate her and avoid her if she gave way to tantrums. All in vain. Sally was insensible to that view of the subject.

Finally one day her mother said to her, "You have a brilliant mind, and a wonderfully strong will. I wonder that any one with your intelligence and your determination of character should be dominated by a weakness." That appealed to Sally's vanity, and just to show that she was stronger than her temper she conquered it so that to-day she has a reputation for amiability.

And if you can do more with soft words than with hard ones with children, how very, very more efficacious in flattery than knocks in the family circle! Believe me, it is soft soap that makes the domestic machinery revolve without a hitch.

Who is the woman who spends hours and days joyously over the kitchen stove, concocting toothsome dishes for her lord and master? Is it the wife of the man who is always batting her because she can't make bread like mother used to make? Nay, verily. The woman who knows that her best culinary efforts are going to be growled over, anyway, stops on the way home from her bridge whist, and buys an unsavory mess at the delicatessen store, which she sets before the grouch she is tied to.

It is the wise husband who praises his wife's handiwork as he eats who fares sumptuously every day, for there's some encouragement to a woman to make a burnt offering of herself if she is going to receive the proper appreciation for it. But nobody wants to be an unsung martyr.

The Secret.

Who is the woman who pares, and scrimps, and economizes, and makes over her old clothes and retrims her hats? Is it the wife whose husband is always berating her for her extravagance? Not much. She feels that inasmuch as she is going to be blamed anyway, she had as well have good clothes by way of consolation. The woman who squeezes a nickel until the buffalo on it howls with pain is the one whose husband is always boasting that she is such a financier that if she had her due she would be Secretary of the Treasury.

Also, you may observe, that the husbands who are nailed to their own firesides are the men whose wives are always telling about how entertaining John is, and how big and strong and handsome and wise he is. Keeping flattery on tap at home is like keeping Scotch on the sideboard. A man doesn't have to run around the corner to get it. Also it's generally a better brand and not so expensive.

The moral of all of which is that praise is the lever by which each of us can move our little world. And the more fools we, that we haven't sense enough to use it oftener.

The Delhi Magazine

By REV. THOMAS B. GREGORY.

THE defense and explosion of the great magazine at Delhi 56 years ago—May 13, 1857—deserves to rank along with the great achievements of history, not excepting even Leonidas at Thermopylae or the immortal three who held the bridge across the Tiber against Lars Porsena.

The magazine was a huge building packed with arms and ammunition, and was in charge of Lieutenant Willoughby and eight subordinates. It was nine men against a great city. Knowing that they could not hold their ground against such odds, a fuse was run into the magazine and at its outer end a man was stationed with portfire in hand.

Presently came a summons to surrender, which was, of course, refused, and then on came the swarms of Sepoys, Willoughby's eight guns the meanwhile (each worked by a single man), pouring death into them. But on came the swaying mass of Sepoys; a rain of death falls upon the little band from the walls and in another moment will come the rush of bayonet. Willoughby raises his hand, Scully applies the portfire to the fuse and the mighty magazine goes up in one huge thunderclap! The whole city seems to shake with the concussion, and a great pillar of smoke rises in the sky. "It is the signal to heaven and earth of how the nine Britons who kept the great magazine had fulfilled their trust."

Of the gallant nine, Scully, who fired the fuse, and four others, vanished along with hundreds of the mutineers, but strange to say Willoughby and three others escaped death.
