WOMAN CHARGES ARSON TO BOARDER

DORSEY RESISTS MOVE TO INDICT JIM CONLEY

'BEAR CAT RAG' IS FROWNED UPON BY THIS DAINTY ATLANTA DANCER

Miss Theordora Aline Warfield.

Which do you prefer—to do the "bear" or a classical dance?

An Atlanta girl who prefers classical dancing to the more modern rag is rather unusual, yet pretty Miss Theodora Aline Warfield, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William C. Warfield, of No. 29 West North avenue, declares that she can not see why people dance the graceless modern dances, when the Grecian and other classical dances are far more artistic and almost as easy to learn.

That is, they are easy to learn if you have talent.

Since Miss Warfield was two years old she has been dancing, and always she is evolving new steps. Her dancing is not like Isadora Duncan's or Maude Allan's, or any of the famous classical dancers. It is entirely her own, and her friends declare it is the prettiest and most graceful possible.

Miss Warfield has appeared on the stage in Atlanta. She was the premiere danseuse at the past two performances of the Kirmess, and won great applause. She was presented with a beautiful silver-incrusted vase by the Elks Lodge, in recognition of their appreciation of her talent. At various private entertainments Miss Warfield has danced also, and has always won admiration and praise by the beauty and grace of her dancing.

Every one who has seen her dance has urged that she go on the stage, and her parents intend to prepare her for the opera. In addition to being a dancer of rare grace and beauty, she has an attractive voice, and it is being cultivated with her dancing.

Two years ago Miss Warfield sang in Atlanta with Geraldine Farrar, and Miss Farrar was enthusiastic in her praise. After finishing a course at a school here, Miss Warfield will go abroad to study languages and advanced artistic dancing. A wonderful career is predicted for her. There is no doubt that she will add her name to Atlanta's already brilliant Hall of Fame.

Profile of S. Pryor Grade Is Prepared

A profile of the permanent grade of South Pryor street is being prepared by the city engineering department preparatory to the regrading of this street. According to the present plans, the street will be widened into a boulevard. The movement for the improvement of South Pryor is the result of several mass meetings and canvasses of property owners within the past few weeks.

GEN. EDWARD SALOMON DIES.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 19.—Brigadier General Edward Salomon, one of the leaders in the G. A. R., died last night, aged 76. He was ill a long time. He was born in Germany. He came to the United States at the age of 18. In 1861 he organized the Eighty-second Illinois Regiment.

Fire Alarm System Ready for Testing

Test of Atlanta's new fire alarm system will be made next week by the Okenite Company, of New York.

Installation of this apparatus has been made under the moral obligation system at a cost of $106,000, but while the Supreme Court has declared such contracts on the part of the city illegal, representatives of the company state they feel no doubt about being paid in full for the contract.

Charter Granted to New Bank at Alamo

The Wheeler County Bank, located at Alamo, Ga., and capitalized at $25,000, was granted a charter by Secretary of State Phil Cook Friday afternoon.

The incorporators include Charles W. Lancaster, of Davisboro, Ga.; I. Idelson, H. S. Hurewitz and Truitt H. Nelson, of Alamo.

Bibles in Schools To Be Theme of Sermon

A discussion of the bill to force the reading of the Bible in the public schools of Georgia now pending in the Legislature will feature the sermon of Dr. L. O. Bricker, of the First Christian Church, Sunday evening.

His subject will be "The Story of the Bible—Its Enemies, Its Friends, and Its Influence Upon Civilization.

Turner to Attend Electrical Meeting

R. C. Turner, City Electrician, will attend the convention of the International Association of Municipal Electricians at Watertown, N. Y., August 19 to 22.

"Municipal Regulation" will be the subject of an address delivered by Atlanta's electrical expert while there.

ARRESTED AS FIREBUG IN OWN ROOM

C. A. Vaughan Taken by Police When He Rushes in House to Save His Clothing.

As he rushed into the burning building to save his belongings, G. A. Vaughn, an employee of the Boston Trading Company, was arrested by Call Officer Watson Saturday morning, and is held on suspicion of having set fire to the home of Mrs. A. C. Klapper, of 256 East Hunter street, which was badly damaged by the flames at 7 o'clock Saturday morning.

The fire, the firemen state, started in a closet in Vaughn's room, on the second floor. The roof was burned off the building, causing a loss of about $500.

Vaughn was charged with trying to burn the building by Mrs. Klaper. According to the story she told the police, she quarreled with Vaughn before he went to work this morning, and Vaughn made threats and then went into his room.

Calls House Over Phone.

A few minutes later, she says, he hurried downstairs and went downtown. Half an hour later he called her on the telephone and asked if everything was all right, she says, and one of the other boarders who answered the phone told him the house was on fire. Vaughn immediately left his office and rushed to the scene of the fire. Mrs. Klapper was standing near the door wringing her hands, when Vaughn appeared and started into the house. She intercepted him.

"You've burned my house!" she screamed. "I'll have you arrested."

Mrs. Klapper began struggling with Vaughn, and Call Officer Watson came up. At the request of the woman, who declared she would prefer a formal charge against him, Vaughn was arrested and taken to police headquarters.

Tells of Vaughn's Thretas.

Mrs. Klapper declares that Vaughn has several times made threats against her and her property. He has been boarding with her for more than a year, she says. Mrs. Klapper says Vaughn gave her a fur coat for Christmas present and later wanted her to return it. He got mad and made threats when she refused, she says.

Vaughn denies the charges made by Mrs. Klapper. He says he called her over the phone this morning because he had promised to go with her to Ormewood Park, and when he got to the office, found that he could not get away. He had telephoned, he said, to tell her. He denied asking if "everything was all right."

Church He Founded To Hear Mr. Ellis

The Rev. Henry J. Ellis, the blind chaplain of the Georgia House of Representatives, will preach Sunday morning at the Walker Street Methodist Church, which he founded 25 years ago.

He served for a number of years as pastor of the church, and one of the largest congregations that ever assembled there is expected to hear him Sunday.

CHARLESTON, July 19.—W. S. Luckey, a Curtiss flier from New York city, who is spending a week at the Isle of Palms on Friday flew in a hydro-aeroplane from the Isle of Palms to Charleston, a distance of about 12 miles, by water, in 8 minutes, a speed of 90 miles an hour.

Luckey also skimmed across the harbor with his main float partly submerged at a rate of 45 miles an hour.

GERMAN AVIATOR KILLED.

Bell House Boys Hold Annual 'Cue At Club Grounds

The original Bell House boys, past and present, took the Cold Springs Club grounds by storm Saturday in their second annual barbecue. The fun began very early, and according to an "official" tip, it will last well along toward the wee sma' hours of Sunday morn.

Mrs. Emma Bell, the official head of the Bell House, chaperoned the party, but, unlike most chaperons, she didn't have the least bit of trouble handling the boys, for they are big enough and old enough to take care of themselves.

New Railway Mail Head Begins Duties

Henry M. Robinson, recently appointed Superintendent of Railway Mail Service, suceeding George W. Pepper, arrived in Atlanta Friday and visited the local railway mail bureau in the Federal Building Saturday morning, where he and Mr. Pepper completed the transfer of the Atlanta division.

Twenty-five years ago Mr. Robinson was a resident of Atlanta. Then he was a postal clerk between Atlanta and Charlotte. Later he became superintendent of the New Orleans division.

Proposed to Re-name Street Stirs Council

Council is being stirred by the attempt to change the name of Murphy avenue to Whitehall street. Councilman T. J. Kimbrough, of the Tenth Ward, made the suggestion. An attempt to have the question taken up Friday was made by Mr. Kimbrough, but objection by Chairman Orville Hall on the grounds that property owners should be given a hearing held up the proposition. It is planned to continue Whitehall street to the city limits.

The Street Committee has under advisement also the changing of the names of McDaniel, Exposition and Lowndes streets.

Cheshire Family's Reunion on July 23

All of the Cheshires, members of one of the oldest families in this section of the Southland, will gather for a big family reunion at Captain H. Cheshire's country home on the Johnson road on July 23. Scores of Cheshires are expected to be present, as the annual reunions have become more and more popular every year.

All Ready to Launch State Booster Body

Preparations are complete for the reception of delegates in Atlanta July 23 to organize a State Chamber of Commerce. The officials of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce have charge of the affair.

The first session will be held in the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce rooms at 10 o'clock in the morning. Delegates from every board of trade and every chamber of commerce in the State will be on hand.

CHINA, SPLIT BY POLITICS, NEAR WAR

North Arrayed Aaginst South. Foreigners in Danger—Rebels Theaten Public Buildings.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

CANTON, CHINA, July 19.—A complete severance of political relations between Northern and Southern China was proclaimed here to-day. Business is at a standstill. Revolutionary leaders are threatening to seize the Government buildings.

A British torpedo boat is proceeding to this port from Hong Kong to protect British lives and interests.

U. S. Aiding Revolt?

That United States diplomacy as well as Japanese is supporting the revolutionaries trying to overthrow President Yuan Shih Kai was claimed by leaders of the Southern rebellion.

The Pekin Government, headed by President Yuan, is receiving the support of England, Germany and France. Developments indicate that the question of the proposed $100,000,000 Chinese loan enters into the situation. England, Germany and France subscribed pro rata shares to the loan, but the United States financiers were not allowed by their Government to participate.

Dr. Sun Yat Sen, one of the leaders in the uprising which overthrew the Manchu Dynasty, and the firsct provisional President of China, and Dr. Wu Ting-fang, former Chinese Minister to the United States, are believed to be lukewarm to the rebel cause.

Rebels Lose a Battle.

Dr. Sun has left for Nanking, the provisional republican capital, where he may make open declaration of his loyalty to the southerners.

Wu Chang remains loyal, but revolutionary sentiment is fast growing there.

Four thousand rebels were decisively defeated by 2,000 Government forces at Hsu-Chow-Fu, north of Kiang Su.

Trolley Hits Truck; Passengers Get Jolt

A Pine street car was badly smashed up at 9 o'clock Saturday morning in a collision with a Coca-Cola truck at the corner of Peachtree road and Pine street.

The passengers on the car were shaken up, but none was injured. The collision occurred just as the car was rounding the curve into Peachtree road.

Augusta Shocked by Girl in Filmy Garb; Arrest Stops Riot

AUGUSTA, GA., July 19.—All Augusta is talking to-day of the arrest of Miss Edith Anderson, 1215 Jones street, Friday afternoon, because she appeared on Broad street, the main thoroughfare of the city, clad in a "transparent skirt," a dainty, filmy creation of lace through which twinkled stockings of a vivid green.

Miss Anderson appeared just as the afternoon dress parade was at its height. A stolid, unemotion copper stood swinging his stick on a busy corner of Broad street when Miss Anderson appeared. The coper saw the crow coming, he saw grown men fighting small boys for places in the forefront, and he looked up.

"Why—why!" he stammered, mopping his fevered face. "Why—er—why—because—er—dawgone it!" He pointed downward with his nightstick, "You can't wear things like that in Augusty."

Harry Thaw to Sue His Former Lawyer

PITTSBURG, July 19.—Roger O'Mara, trustee for the estate of Harry K. Thaw, bankrupt, was to-day authorized by Referee William R. Blair to begin legal proceedings against Clifford W. Hartridge, in the United States courts or in the State courts of New York, for the recovery of any funds that might be found or which might be due the estate of Thaw.

The purpose of the action is to try to recover the $21,000 which Hartridge, as attorney, is alleged to have claimed for expenses incident to the first trial of Thaw for the murder of Stanford White.

Cleveland's 'Golden Rule' in Scrap Heap

CLEVELAND, OHIO, July 19.—The Golden Rule policy in making arrests which made former Chief Kohler famous is a thing of the past. He who now imbibes too freely and obstructs traffic will help enrich the city's coffers instead of being escorted home by a policeman.

Chief Rowe declined to say he has relegated the Golden Rule to the scrap heap, but admits significantly: "One may draw his own conclusions from the figures."

The police blotter figures say there is no Golden Rule.

What, Woman Jury? 'No,' Says a Woman

CHICAGO, July 19.—A woman refused to-day to consent to a jury of twelve women, "tried and true," to try her case in court.

Mrs. Elizabeth Schank, a dressmaker, defendant in a suit over a $50 dress made for Mrs. R. Davenport, declared men, "who are the best judges of veracity," shall hear the case.

Action Deferred on New Refunding Bill

Action on the bill introduced by Representative Aiken, of Brunswick, to provide for the refunding of the bonded indebtedness of municipalities was postponed when the measure was given a hearing Friday afternoon by the House Committee on Constitutional Amendments.

Judge Harry F. Dunwody, of Brunswick, appeared in favor of the bill, while Attorney John D. Little, of Atlanta, opposed it.

GRAND JURY SPLIT BY LATEST MOVE

Public Opinion Forces Consideration of Move to Indict Conley for Phagan Slaying.

Solicitor Dorsey is fighting vigorously the movement in the Grand Jury to indict Jim Conley Monday for the murder of Mary Phagan, despite the bombardment of letters from many citizens and by the sentiment of some of its own members.

It is for the consideration of these letters and petitions, asking the reopening of the Phagan matter, that the meeting has been called. That it will result in the indictment of the negro is thought certain.

It was in the face of Solicitor Dorsey's bitterest opposition that the meeting was called at all. Foreman Beattie issued his defi after a previous Grand Jury had been defeated in its efforts to reopen the case with a view of indicting Jim Conley and after Dorsey explicitly had expressed his strongest disapproval of such a move.

Crucial Battle Coming.

With the first skirmish won ov those in favor of the indictment of Conley, the hottest battle is yet to be waged behind the closed doors of the jury room. The question first will be on whether the grand jurors consider it proper at this time to reopen the investigation whose first chapter resulted in the indictment of Leo M. Frank on the charge of slaying Mary Phagan. Solicitor Dorsey will lay before the body for the first time all of his reasons for desiring a postponement of all further investigation until after the trial of Frank.

Should the solicitor be driven back from this position by the Grand Jury again, disregarding his wishes and taking up the investigation, he will be forced to take refuge in the last ditch and make his fight against the indictment of Conley.

With all the weight of evidence which has piled up against the negro, it is regarded as beyond the realm of possibilities that he could persuade the jurors to return a "no bill" against Conley on the charge of murder. Dorsey's one remaining hope at this time would be, it is said, to induce the Grand Jury to waive definite action until after the trial of Frank, when it will be in a position to say whether an indictment shall be drawn against Conley as an accessory after the fact, to which he has confessed, or as the actual murderer.

Dorsey Refuses to Comply.

The Solicitor's attitude in the matter plainly was shown by his statement when Foreman Beattie went to him Friday seeking to have him call the meeting. Dorsey flatly refused and said:

"The meeting's only purpose will oe to exploit the evidence and embarrass the State, and I hope the Grand Jury when it meets will decide to leave the matter alone.

"The indictment of Conley at this time will be a useless procedure that will not stop the trial of Frank. It will only have a mild but undesirable effect on the State's case.

"Conley is in jail and is going to stay there for some time. He is where the authorities can put their hands on him, and he can be indicted much more properly after the Frank case has been disposed of than before, and by the delay there is no danger of a miscarriage of justice."

Position Called Unfair.

The Solicitor's position is attacked as palpably unfair by those who have been working to bring about the in-

ACCUSE BULGARS OF MASSACRE OF 20,000

Plains Near Kavala Strewn With Victims—Fear Felt for Safety of Foreigners.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

SALONIKA, July 19.—Twenty thousand Greeks and Mussulmans are reported to have been slaughtered by Bulgarian soldiers at Xanthi, 40 miles northeast of Kavala.

Fear is felt for the 71 foreigners in the city.

King to Lead Army Of Reprisal Into Sofia.

ATHENS, July 19.—A Salonika dispatch states that King Constantine probably will go to the front to lead the army which the Greeks, in cooperation with Servia and Roumania, will throw into Sofia.

"I intend to go to Sofia in person to avenge the atrocities of the Bulgarians," telegraphed the King to Foreign Minister Coromitas.

Minister of Marine Stratos estimates that 25,000 Greeks have been killed since the war with Bulgaria broke out. It is estimated that 75,000 innocents have been massacred by Bulgarian, Greek and Servian troops, for each government accuses the other, and there s documentary evidence to show bloody reprisals were made.

Two hundred thousand persons are homeless and starving. Five hundred towns and villages have been wiped out or depopulated. Reckoned from a commercial standpoint the damage from the second Balkan war in Macedonia and Thrace is $100,000,000.

Hospitals filled with wounded troops have been bombarded, men and women have been torn from limb to limb, while the blood-drunk soldiers danced about them. Mosques have been filled with women and children and burned while the army pipers played their instruments about the pyre.

St. Petersburg Protects Interests of Bulgaria.

ST. PETERSBURG, July 19.—Russia will not allow Bulgaria to be treated with extreme humiliation by either the allies or Turkey. A note to this effect was handed in to-day at Constantinople, Athens, Belgrade and Bucharest. Russia, it is reported, will attempt to hold Adrianople for Buigaria.

Adrianople Menaced by Invading Turkish Army.

CONSTANTINOPLE, July 19.—The vanguard of the Turkish army which is invading Thrace arrived in front of Adrianople to-day and an attack upon the city may be made next week, according to a dispatch received here to-day from the field.

The small Bulgarian force in the garrison at Adrianople has been busy strengthening the forts about the city.

Peace Advocates File Stories of Atrocities.

PARIS, July 19.—The most appalling horrors of war were pictured in dispatches received here to-day from points in the Balkans and from Athens. They will be compiled by the International Peace Society for use in its crusade for universal peace.

Corpses with the arms pulled out and the eyes gouged out are common sights. The Bulgars have taken a wanton delight in the torture of Greek Catholic priests. Cruelties of unimaginable horror have been invented.

DEBS AIDS 'MAGDALEN;' REBUKES PHARISEES

HELEN COX

TERRE HAUTE, IND., July 19.—Eugene V. Debs, the Socialist leader, has issued what he terms his "challenge to the Christianity of Terre Haute."

He has taken into his home in the Indiana city Helen Cox, the daughter of a Methodist preacher. She had eloped with a member of a prominent family who divorced her and took their child. She was arrested for immorality. Debs met her on a visit to the jail and, as an emergency probation officer, took her into his home.

"The girl has been persecuted," he announced publicly. "Will Terre Haute help her or will its organized force be used to drive her to desperation? Let Terre Haute ask 'What would Christ do?' Our family has opened our home to her.

"There is but one thing remarkable about opening our home to an unfortunate woman," he said later, when his action aroused widespread comment, "and it is that any one should consider it remarkable. This fact is significant. Persecution of these unfortunate girls is the rule, and so common that it attracts no attention. Kindness is so exceptional that it provokes widespread comment.

"The sinful woman is, as a rule, not a wicked woman, but a sick and suffering woman. As to our home, its door is open to the most sinful woman that was ever cast off by the Pharisees, who denied her while profiting by her shame. We believe, my wife and I ,that we are not only our brother's keeper, but our sister's keeper as well."

"Adam's Clay" has been pronounced the literary sensation of the year. It begins in Sunday's American, and Cosmo Hamilton tells a big, true-to-life story for the readers of The American.

DORSEY OPPOSES INDICTMENT OF JIM CONLEY

dictment of the negro. Dorsey would have the testimony of the negro accredited as that of any free and trustworthy citizen, while those opposing him declare it should be taken in the light of that of a possible murderer who is endeavoring to shift the blame on another's shoulders, they say.

They add that the evidence against Conley is far more direct and damning than any ever brought against Frank. They charge, on this account, that Conley has been protected and "coddled" when he should have been placed on the same basis as the other suspect in the case and should before the jury in that aspect.

General denials were entered Saturday to the story published Friday that the Pinkertons had changed their attitude in the murder mystery and were convinced of the innocence of Frank. Chief of Detectives Lanford declared that Harry Scott had reaffirmed his belief in the guilt of Frank and the innocence of Conleyfi except as accessory after the fact.

Scott was non-committal, but indicated that there had been no change in his theories of the crime. During the progress of the investigation he repeatedly asserted his belief that Conley was telling the truth regarding his part in the disposal of Mary Phagan's body.

NATURAL CRANK, MAYOR'S SHOT AT BROYLES

Mayor Woodward Saturday said he was finally dismissing Recorder Nash R. Broyles from his mind with the statement:

"He is a natural dyspeptic, crank and a fanatic. If he ever had a heart it has turned to stone. Therefore, it is natural that he should become a monomaniac over the subject of using his czar-like authority in his own petty sphere. I don't care anything more about him."

Mayor Woodward again went over the head of Recorder Broyles Friday when he reduced the sentence of George Poulos, a restaurant keeper on Alabama street, who had been fined $100 and sentenced to 30 days in the Stockade fo violating the prohibition law.

The Mayor said he was much surprised that the Recorder did not make the fine $49 and the sentence 29 days so as to stay outside the jurisdicition of the Mayor.

It was expected that Mayor Woodward would issue a full pardon but he didn't. He just reduced the fine to $49 and the sentence to 29 days.

SIDELIGHTS on GEORGIA POLITICS

By JAMES B. NEVIN

That the first contested appointment coming up for Governor Slaton's consideration should have been decided in favor of a Hoke Smith man—to use that ancient and honorable term in differentiating him from the other variety in Georgia—may be accepted, in all probability, as the first bit of evidence that Governor Slaton meant exactly what he said when he stated that he hoped to be, and would try to be, a Governor not of any faction in Georgia, but of all the people.

The Governor on Friday appointed Miller S. Bell, of Milledgeville, trustee of the Georgia Normal and Industrial School, situated there, notwithstanding the fact that Mr. Bell has been an adherent of the Smith factional end of Georgia politics in the past rather than of the Brown end.

There is no question whatever about the entire fitness of Mr. Bell for the position. Governor Slaton might have searched the State for months and not found a better man for the assignment.

These places on the boards of trustees of the State institutions—particularly the Georgia Normal and Industrial School—are considered positions of great honor and trust and are conferred upon the very best men that may be found. For that reason, while they are not sought with that degree of fervor characterizing the usual effort for office, they rarely are declined, and frequently there are warm contests for the same.

Mr. Bell, a Smith man, was aggressively backed by other Smith men before Governor Slaton. His opponent, a good man of the Brown persuasion, was pressed quite as aggressively by other Brown men.

The Governor, in this his first contested case, thought the Smith man the better fitted, for one reason and another, for the position, and the appointment was made accordingly.

And that looks like a fair and square beginning in the line of letting fitness and not faction control in the executive office under the new Governor.

"I wish," said Speaker Burwell today, "I had one thousand pages' jobs to give out.

"There are so many worthy and splendid young boys who come to me for appointments, and the number of appointments I have is so small that it is a continuous matter of embarrassment and regret to me that I am unable to gratify the very great majority of applicants.

"The pages of the House are mainly young fellows, and the experience they get during the sessions is very useful and well worth while to them. I wish I could give every boy who applies to me a job—but, of course, I cannot do that."

Not only that, he also is one of the best dressed men in either House. He effects very light clothing, both as to texture and color, and always looks as fresh and cool as one possibly may in such sizzling weather as that of late.

"If I could keep as cool as McNeil always looks," said Senator Parrish to-day, "I would be mighty happy, I tell you. But I fear no man can be as cool nowadays as McNeil seems to be eternally."

Governor Slaton was a very busy man all day Friday.

During his day or so absence in Brunswick, a very heavy mail piled up in the executive office, which had to be disposed of yesterday.

The Governor is more or less methodical and always tries—and usually succeeds—to get to-day's mail answered and put in charge of "Uncle Sam" to-day.

The proposed creation of the grand young county of Warner, to be whacked out of Talbot, Meriwether and Harris, has moved the poets of that vicinity to do their very worst.

Judge Henry Revill, editor of The Meriwether Vindicator, is very vehemently opposed to the new county of Warner, particularly in that it would cut pretty far into historic old Meriwether if set up.

A poet of Warner, viewing Judge Revill with evident and pronounced alarm, proposed over the initials C. M. W., recently this dainty quatrain in his honor's honor, the which has been published from one end of the new county to the other:

"Here's to the new county of Warner!
So good-bye to Greenville and Judge Revill.
When we get our new county and courthouse
They can go to the d——l."

The trouble about this, of course, is that few people will believe a person so whole-souled, companionable, good natured and altogether delightful as Judge Henry Revill ever will go to any such person, thing or state of mind as this poet suggests.

Unless the Legislature revoke the dies non declared Saturday, it will adjourn on Thursday, August 14. That will be the final day of the constitutionally limited 50.

Dies non has been declared in the past, time and again, only to be revoked before the end of the session. The great trouble about a dies non, of course, is that the members receive no pay for that day whatever, and it is consequently a dead expense to them. However, a day gets to be a mighty precious thing as the session draws near its end, and the one dies non declared this session likely will stay put.

Although there remain only three weeks ahead of the Legislature, there yet is no talk of afternoon or evening sessions. The afternoons are needed so badly for committee meetings that they can not be spared.

Before the end of the session, however, both afternoon and evening sessions will be held.

OBITUARY

The body of Mrs. Martha J. Roop, who died at a local sanitarium Friday, was sent to her home in Carrollton, Ga., Saturday for funeral and interment. Mrs. Roop was 68 years old, and is survived by her husband, the Rev. W. W. Roop, and one daughter, Mrs. Samuel Copeland, of Bremen, Ga.

The funeral of Leonard Kenny, 2-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. L. H. Kenny, of No. 101 Poplar street, who died at the residence at 1 o'clock Friday afternoon, was held from the chapel of Greenberg & Bond at 10 o'clock Saturday morning. Interment was at Westview.

J. R. Hunter, of the faculty of Georgia Tech, died at a local sanitarium at 4 o'clock Friday afternoon. He was 49 years old, is survived by a wife and had only recently come to Atlanta from Chattanooga. The body is at Patterson's chapel, pending the arrival of relatives.

The body of John C. Futtz, who died at the residence, No. 127 Pearl street, Friday afternoon, will be sent to Marietta Sunday afternoon for funeral and interment. Mr. Fultz was 71 years old and is survived by a wife, one daughter, Mrs. W. M. Edwards, and two sisters, Mrs. C. Monroe and Mrs. Worth Pace.

The body of Mrs. J. A. Dodgen, who died at the residence, No. 329 East Georgia avenue, Friday afternoon at 5 o'clock, will be sent Sunday morning to Alpharetta, Ga., for funeral and interment. Mrs. Dodgen was 61 years old and the wife of J. A. Dodgen, a well-known lawyer. Besides her husband, she is survived by three sons, B. L., C. M. and J. M. Dodgen, the latter an attorney also, and three daughters, Misses Flossie, Alice and Alma.

High Ad Standard Urged by Maxwell

M. C. MAXWELL

M. C. Maxwell, for seven years sales and advertising manager for several of the different stores operated by the Rhodes Syndicate, is now with the Rhodes-Wood Furniture Company, Whitehall and Mitchell streets, the Atlanta store.

Mr. Maxwell is one of the best advertising men in the furniture business, and his thorough knowledge of this line of work and his courtesy to customers have always made him a popular salesman. He is a firm believer in the standard of advertising as outlined in the Baltimore convention by the Associated Advertising Clubs of America and he believes the time is near when fraudulent advertisers and those who make misstatements in their advertising will not be tolerated.

Mr. Maxwell was president of the Charleston Ad Club for two years, and his capable and earnest administration contributed considerably toward making it one of the leading ad clubs of the South.

He has placed his application for membership in the Atlanta Ad Men's Club and has enrolled as a charter member of the "500,000-by-1920-Club" launched by The Georgian.

He has many friends who predict that his success in other cities will be duplicated in Atlanta and even increased.

BEAUTY CONTEST ENLIVENED BY NEW ENTRY

The beauty contest Saturday caught all eyes that hitherto have evaded its lure with the nomination of Miss Helen Goodrich, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Goodrich, of No. 801 Edgewood avenue, Inman Park.

The whole object of beauty, of course, is to attract the eye. The question of whose face is to adorn the "500,000 Club" booster buttons has come to dominate the talk of the town. Atlanta is famous for her pretty girls.

Miss Goodrich is a graceful, athletic girl with very rich brown hair and deep brown eyes. She is regarded as a fine type of Atlanta girl.

The beauty contest is to continue for some days yet. Who the prettiest girl is to be is as much a puzzle as it was at the beginning. Yet the question must be decided before the "500,000 Club" buttons can be ordered and the club actually organized.

DEMOCRATS TOO GENEROUS, SAYS FOSS

BOSTON, MASS., July 19.—"The trouble with the Republicans was that they were too selfish," said Governor Foss, when discussing the tariff today. Then he added: "The Democrats are going to the other extreme; they are giving away our markets and getting nothing in return.

"My statement to the effect that from three to five hundred millions of capital had gone from the United States into the financing of manufacturing plants in Canada has created considerable surprise. The fact is that the movement of American manufacturers and American money into Canada has been going on so quietly that it has not attracted much public attention. But when some concern of prominence moves into Canada, the news is broadcast.

"Thus, for example, it is well known that the General Electric Company has a very extensive plant in Canada; also the Westinghouse Electric Company, the Oliver Chilled Plow Company, the International Harvester Company, the American Locomotive Company, the American Blower Company, the Buffalo Forge Company, the Plymouth Cordage Works, and, in fact, nearly all the leading concerns of every industry have been compelled to establish branches in Canada.

Mistakes on Wool and Sugar.

"Now, Mr. Underwood proposes to make a serious blunder with reference to wool and sugar. Under the previous tariff bills the cane and beet sugar industries of the country have been fostered and built up, millions of capital have been invested and thousands of people are employed. It is now proposed to place sugar on the free list within three years, which, according to the best authorities, would result in practically wiping out the beet and cane sugar industry, and it is a question to what extent the cost of sugar to the consumer would be reduced. Further than this, the revenue fom the duty on sugar brings the Government $50,000,000.

"Again, by placing wool on the free list we are not only striking a blow at the wool growers of the North, West and Middle States, but we are opening up our markets for Australia and Argentina without securing, as Mr. Blaine puts it, 'the sale of a single additional barrel of pork or bag of flour for our producers.'

Reciprocity Better Plan.

"In my judgment, the country is not ready for such a drastic program, and a reduction in these tariff duties can better be effected through reciprocity, in which recognition of our best customers will be secured and a broader market established for the products of our own industries.

"In answer to your question as to how long this movement of American capital toward Canada is likely to continue, I believe that it will greatly increase from year to year under the present fiscal system of both countries."

Governor Foss says that he has received many letters and telegrams from men of both parties, who read his statement Monday, warmly applauding his position and commending him for making it public.

Pittsburg Bids the Slit Skirt Welcome

PITTSBURG, July 19.—"Why should I tell Pittsburg women what to wear? What do I know about it? Not on your life. Will I order any arrests? Well, I should say not! Are you trying to get me into trouble?"

With these words John P. Dailey, Director of the Department of Public Safety, disposed of the woman's dress question for Pittsburg.

"I think, for my part, the women are dressing all right," said the Director. "They know what they want to wear, and I believe in letting them wear it. At any rate, they'll do it, whether we like it or not."

Marshalls to Lose The 'Borrowed Baby'

WASHINGTON, July 19.—There is grief in the Marshall household and the Vice President has lost much of his accustomed cheerfulness, for the "borrowed baby," Thomas Marshall Sutherland, is going home.

The baby has been for two months the light and sunshine of the Vice Presidential apartment, but now he misses "mamma" and "mamma" misses him, so that, reluctantly, the Marshalls are going to return him to his parents, the Rev. Dr. and Mrs. A. D Sutherland, in Berkley Springs, Md.

U. S. Is Accused of Aiding China Revolt

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

SHANGHAI, July 19.—That United States diplomacy, as well as Japanese, is supporting the revolutionaries who are trying to overthrow President Yuan Shih Kai was claimed here to-day by leaders of the southern rebellion.

Developments indicate that the proposed $100,000,000 Chinese loan enters into the situation. England, Germany and France subscribed pro rata shares to the loan, but the United States financiers were not alowed by their governments to participate.

'Conscience' Takes His Savings of Years

WASHINGTON, July 19.—A veteran of the Civil War, now a poor farmer in Ireland, with a large family dependent upon him, has sent to the Treasury Department $150 as a "conscience contribution" for some fraud he perpetrated upon the Government while a soldier 50 years ago.

The contribution, representing the savings of years, was sent through a Catholic priest to satisfy the gnawings of a troubled conscience.

SOLONS INSPECT STATE COLLEGE AT AUGUSTA

The General Assembly of Georgia is the guest of the city of Augusta today.

The Legislature is in Augusta officially to look over the Georgia Medical College there, but a program of pleasure has been prepared.

Headed by the Richmond delegation, Representatives Olive, Garlington and Picquet, and the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House, the General Assembly, the clerks of the two Houses, the pages, and a number of newspaper men left Atlanta at 7 o'clock this morning on a special over the Georgia Railroad.

The special train was made up of six coaches and a baggage car. The party will return to Atlanta at midnight Saturday, leaving Augusta on the special about dark.

After the Medical College has been inspected a big basket dinner and fish fry will be enjoyed by the visitors at Carmichael's Fishing Club, a famous resort near Augusta. For the afternoon other pleasures have been planned for Legislators.

Notwithstanding the fact that the round trip from Atlanta to Augusta in one day, particularly at this season of the year, generally is looked upon as a strenuous undertaking, it was a jolly party. The baggage car was packed liberally with good things to eat and cold things to drink, while the smoking compartments were provided with everything the party could desire.

The Legislature, although it is on official business in a way, declared today a dies non, and the day will not count in the fifty days limit of sitting, nor will the members receive pay for it.

THE PLAYS THIS WEEK

"Les Miserables" at the Grand.

A strong interest is being manifested in the coming engagement of Victor Hugo's "Les Miserables" at the Grand next week. Since Thursday there has been almost a continual demand for reservations.

This picture, 12,000 feet of film made in France, is in nine reels and will consume two and one-half hours of time. It has been brought to America at a tremendous expense, and is being shown in the Southwest and Southeast prior to its Eastern exhibition.

Matinees will be given at 2:30 o'clock, admission 25 cents for reserved seats, and night performances at 8:30 o'clock, reserved seats 25 and 50 cents.

Forsyth's Big Success.

Another successful week has been recorded at Atlanta's busiest theater, and the Forsyth will go into another week commencing on Monday afternoon, presenting a bill of vaudeville that promises to eclipse the season's most brilliant success.

The principal act will be the contribution of John F. Conroy and his diving models. Conroy is the only life-saver in the country who has been awarded three medals for heroism—one awarded by the United States Congress, one by the State of Massachusetts and the other by the Carnegie Hero Commission.

Deiro, the Italian accordionist, will make his first appearance, and Lester, the famous ventriloquist, returns after an absence of three seasons.

There is the usual tremendous advance sale, and a very enthusiastic interest.

Comedy at the Bijou.

"Hotel a la Carte," as served up by the company at the Bijou all week, is an ideal summer amusement—frothy, full of fun, tuneful music, pretty girls.

Joe Scott, as the bellboy, has made a hit with his dancing, and Mamie Elmore, as Flossie Spearmint, has intrenched herself in the good will of Bijou patrons.

For the week beginning Monday afternoon the Bijou will offer that splendid comedy, "Good-morning, Judge." The cast will be headed by Pearl Brothers and Burns, and will include a number of well-known vaudeville entertainers and a beauty chorus.

HUSTLING MARKS LAST DAY FOR EXTRA VOTES

Pony Man Says Bonus Doubles Power of Subscriptions—Competitors Urged to Utmost.

Saturday night the special bonus vote offer for pony contestants striving for The Georgian and American prizes comes to a close. Reports show some great hustling is being done.

As has been explained, liberal allowances of extra votes will be made for every club of $35, $25 or $15 paid in for subscriptions. In most cases these bonuses are so liberal as almost to double the regular voting strength of that amount of subscriptions.

"Think of it!" said the contest manager. "Voting power of subscriptions just doubled! Why, if I were a contestant I'd stir heaven and earth to make up a club, and when that had been accomplished I'd stir things up again to get another club. Every contestant ought to turn in at least one $35 club a day, and should try to get two. Then if he falls short of two $35 clubs he can undoubtedly turn in a $35 club and a $25 club. And that means a good bunch of votes."

He means it, too! No acquaintance of his has been left unsolicited. So earnest is he in his desire to win one of the ponies that he is making the work almost his sole business.

This is the day of Miss Robert Harbour's birthday party. Many of her guests have told her they intend giving subscriptions to The Georgian and American as remembrances of her fifth anniversary. The celebration is at 340 Ponce DeLeon avenue.

Miss Lucile Keahle, of Brotherton Street.

Bank Bill Will Get Hearing on Thursday

The new banking bill introduced in the House and which has aroused interest among Georgia bankers will be given a hearing at 8:30 o'clock next Thursday morning before the Banks and Banking Committee, J. L. Cooper, of Ware, chairman.

One banking bill, introduced by Representative R. B. Blackburn, of Fulton, has already been favorably reported. This provides for twenty-five trustees of trust companies instead of fifteen.

$100,000,000 IN GOODS AWAIT NEW TARIFF

No Such Material Wealth as Now Is in Our Warehouses Ever Held in Nation's History.

NEW YORK, July 19.—More than $100,000,000 worth of merchandise is stored in the bonded warehouses of Greater New York to-day. Never on the face of the globe has there ever before been such an aggregation of everything that the soil yields and human industry produces.

The 56 great bonded warehouses are gorged almost to bursting with silks teas, coffees, spices, oils, rugs, carpets, toys, textile fabrics, knit goods, glassware and pottery, jute, hemp, wool, chemicals—with everything in which the merchants of the world trade.

More than 200,000 tons of sugar, worth over $12,000,000, are in bond. The New York Stock Company alone has 80,000 bags of coffee; its warehouses, with a capacity of 81,000,000 cubic feet, are filled.

Of this $100,000,000 worth of imports $70,000,000 is held pending changes in the tariff; $30,000,000 is made up of working stock which the great industrial plants must use immediately and of goods that come in free. The duties on the $70,000,000 worth that is being held deliberately in bond amount to $35,000,000 under the present tariff law. The owners are waiting to see how much of this $35,000,000 benevolent Uncle Sam will "knock off."

When the new bill becomes law millions of dollars a day will be paid into the Custom House and to railroads, and coasting vessels will be offered an enormous amount of freight. The importer who has his goods on hand will have a great advantage over competitors.

Mrs. Fish 'Queen of Fairies' at Big Ball

NEWPORT, July 19.—Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish will be "Queen of the Fairies" at the costume ball which she will give at Crossways August 1.

The costume is being made by four dressmakers. It will be all white, with spangles. She will carry a long white ivory wand studded with brilliants and tiny electric lights. Her long train will be carried by two little fairies.

THE SUNDAY AMERICAN'S GREAT BASEBALL TEAM

All the important leagues of baseball are now in action. So are tens of thousands of fans. So are also the men who write of the doings of the diamond stars for those same fans to read.

It is the newspaper with the STAR TEAM of writers that makes the strongest appeal to baseball enthusiasts.

BUT—to be stars, baseball players and writers about the diamond warriors must be fair and square. That is an essential part of KNOWING THE GAME.

Here Is The Hearst Sunday American Team for 1913

CHRISTY MATHEWSON—For years the famous pitcher for the New York Giants. Known everywhere as one of the brainiest players in the business and one of the squarest in whatever he writes about the game of which he is master.

JOE AGLER—The Crackers' sensational first-sacker. He is giving local fans all the "inside" news of Billy Smith's aggregation. His comments on plays are immense.

W. S. FARNSWORTH—His stories of the big league teams are right up to the minute. Having traveled with the New York Yankees, New York Giants and Boston Red Sox during the past seven years, he is able to tell of the "workings" of the major league clubs.

PERCY H. WHITING—For over seven years he has been writing Southern League baseball. He is the dean of Southern diamond experts and has the largest following this side of the Mason and Dixon line. He is fearless in his writings and always tells the truth.

SAM CRANE—A big league ball player for years and personally acquainted with all the major leaguers. For the past twenty years he has been writing baseball and is considered the greatest student of the game in the world. He travels with the National League Champion Giants.

DAMON RUNYON—The wittiest baseball writer in the East. He tells of the big league games in a manner that has a laugh in every line. But he never gets away from baseball like most of the humorous followers of the diamond warriors.

W. J. McBETH—His "inside" stories of big league games cannot be beaten. He sticks to facts and figures and his predictions are followed by thousands of fans. He has traveled as "war correspondent" with nearly every big league team during the past ten years.

CHARLEY DRYDEN—The Mark Twain of baseball. For years he has traveled with New York, Philadelphia and Chicago teams and his writings are baseball classics. He is personally acquainted with every big league player and probably has the largest following of any baseball expert in the country.

A. H. C. MITCHELL—Considered the greatest expert in the New England States. His stories of last fall's world's series were marvels. He roasts when a roast is coming and praises when praise is due. He has been writing baseball for twenty years.

ALLEN SANGREE—He is well known in the South, having been here with big league teams on training trips for the past fifteen years. He will travel with the New York Yankees this season, and his stories of Russell Ford and Ed Sweeney, former Crackers, will be of especial interest to local fandom.

J. W. McCONAUGHY—Popular with Eastern baseball fans because of his fearless writings. He never gets away from the truth, but tells a straight, readable story. He has been writing baseball in St. Louis and New York for twelve years.

J. W. HEISMAN—Considered the greatest college coach in the South. His college stories are copied by every paper in this part of the United States. His predictions are seldom wrong, and his weekly review of Southern college teams cannot be beaten.

JOE BEAN—As coach of Marist he has led all the other prep school coaches a merry chase. A few years ago he was the star shortstop of the New York Giants. His stories are bright and interesting.

INNIS BROWN—For four years he was considered one of the greatest athletes that ever attended Vanderbilt. His baseball stories of college teams are read by every undergraduate and graduate in the South.

In the General Sporting Field

As well as in baseball, The Sunday American scores an exceptionally large number of base hits in all other branches of sports.

Ben Adams, hero of the Olympic games, writes interesting stories about track and field athletics. The boxing world is well covered by Ed W. Smith, W. W. Naughton, H. M. Walker, Ed Curley and "Left Hook." Tick Tichenor takes care of the golf. He knows every golfer in the South and his stories are real live "bearcats." Tennis and automobiles are two other branches of sport that are covered thoroughly in The Sunday American.

TODAY'S COMPLETE SHORT STORY.

I.

The houses were tall and bleak and fronted with grim stucco, all in that manner which our forefathers found so desirable. Once they had been expensive houses, tenanted by people of wealth and social standing, but now The Gables, halfway down the road, struck the only firm note of resistance to the general air of decaying prosperity. Curtains always hung primly in its casements; the frills of the muslin window blinds always seemed newly starched, and the steps of the front door were always a marvel of whiteness.

People wondered why Miss Margaret Weston, who lived there in state with servants, did not move out of a locality which was deteriorating so rapidly. Some bolder spirits even asked her why she stayed on at The Gables instead of letting it, and departing to reside in a street more befitting her quality. To these Miss Weston answered gently that she had lived in The Gables most of her life, and had no desire to change now.

Miss Weston always answered everybody gently, for gentleness was the essence of her being. The neighbors referred to her as an "old maid," but, even as they used the phrase, they knew it was not the exact term by which to describe her. There was none of that sharpness about her which the epithet of "old maid" habitually implies.

Long ago, when she was a little orphan girl of 7, her uncle had adopted her and brought her to live in Penthorn Road. But now both her uncle and his wife were dead, and Miss Weston was left alone in the old home, save for the servants.

Rather a pitiful romance was Miss Weston's. It was simply the old story of the man who had not dared enough, the man who had leaped to false conclusions and had gone out of her life, to leave her alone.

Sometimes, when she tenderly took a packet of letters out of her bureau, there was one particular missive which she had not the heart to reread, for it was too sacred with poignant memories.

Her Dream.

But always she remembered the night when it was handed to her. She had only to close her eyes again to visualize the scene completely.

She saw herself, quite young, sitting before the fire on an autumn evening. She was trying to understand something. Why had her cousin, Harry Dutton, gone off to the Colonies without a word of farewell to her? He had made quite a sudden departure, though he had told her that he was going. And yet he had never said good-bye to her.

And while she was seeking to understand his attitude the small son of a neighbor had come into the room shamefacedly.

"I say, Miss Weston," he blurted out, "I'm awfully sorry, but I clean forgot."

"Forgot what?" she asked, puzzled.

"Why, this letter. Mr. Dutton gave it to me to give to you. He wanted to make sure you'd get it the same evening. I've just remembered it."

"When did he give it to you?" she whispered.

"Last Thursday. And I'm awfully sorry——"

"Last Thursday," she said to herself, when the small boy escaped from the room in relief. "That was two days before he sailed!"

She opened the letter and read its contents.

"Dearest Margaret," it ran—"As you know, I sail for South America the day after to-morrow. Before I go I want to ask you something, but I fear it will be too much to ask you. You must have guessed that I love you. I know it is presumption on my part to aspire to your hand, for you are the adopted daughter of a rich man and I am only the ne'er-do-well son of a poor brother. But I mean to make money in South America. I want to come home and marry you! There, I've blurted it out quite bravely! Will you marry me? I want you to wait for me.

"I suppose I'm asking too much, but I shall hope. If you reply to this note, I will come and say good-bye, but if you do not answer, I shall know what you mean. Yours, HARRY."

There was the explanation. She went to her uncle and showed him the note. He counseled cables and letters to Harry, but on the voyage Harry altered his plans, so that the messages lay waiting for him and never reached him. And he never wrote home; he just dropped out of everybody's life.

Would-be suitors dangled about Miss Weston for a time, but, receiving no encouragement, went off elsewhere. Friends married, acquaintances moved out of the neighborhood. Margaret grew from a girl to a woman, from a woman to an old maid.

And still she waited for Dutton in the house where last he had seen her, and where again he might seek her.

II.

Sometimes she pictured his return. She saw him whirling up to the door magnificently in a mortor car. She saw him on foot, tentatively examining the old house from the farther side of the road. Always she pictured him coming back, prosperous, to seek that bride whom mischance had so long withheld from him.

And then, one day, quite unexpectedly, she met him in the street, and he was woefully shabby and down-at-the-heel and his face bore lines of want and recklessness.

"Harry!" she faltered. "Harry!"

The light of recognition leaped into his eyes, but he shook his head.

"You're home again!" she exclaimed. "I—I've been expecting you. I've been waiting for you!"

"Expecting me? Waiting for me?" he muttered, astonished.

"Ever since you went away," she said, simply. "Waiting for you in the old house. There was a mistake—I never got your letter till it was too late. And then we never heard where you were. But I waited."

"You—you're making a mistake," he said, slowly. "I don't know you!"

He swung away from her at that. Miss Weston took a few steps after him, but a faintness came over her. And when she could see clearly again Dutton had gone.

But even now her simple faith in love did not abandon her.

"He'll come back to me one day," she said to herself, going slowly home. "He knows I'm waiting for him. He's ashamed of himself because he's poor. As if that mattered!"

Indeed, it was quite a cheery Miss Weston who arrived home at The Gables. And now every morning the thought was still stronger in her that that day her lover of long ago might call to see her in the house where last he had left her.

But the days slipped by, and, though often she glanced from her windows, she saw no sign of him in the street outside. And so a month, three months, another six months passed by.

III

"Gentleman to see you, Mum!"

"A gentleman to see me, Janet?" asked Miss Weston, in surprise. "How strange!"

Miss Weston rose from her chair. She was trying to persuade herself that it could not possibly be Dutton who had come to Penthorn Road after all these years. Although she had hoped for his coming every morning, it suddenly seemed to her that this was altogether too much to hope for. She went downstairs slowly, holding tightly on to the banisters, and steeling herself to meet disappointment.

But it was Dutton who awaited her in the room below—Dutton, far better dressed than when she had seen him last and now holding himself with a resolute bearing.

"Harry!" she exclaimed, holding out both her hands to him. "So you've come back? I knew you would—I knew you would!"

"I had to come back," he said slowly. "I wanted to see you just once more before I went abroad again."

"Abroad again?" she echoed faintly. "What's the good of my stopping in England?" he asked. "There's nothing to keep me here. Abroad I shall do better. I did not do well when I was there before, but that was because I had nothing to work for. I had lost you, and——"

He stopped for a moment.

"You thought you had lost me," amended Miss Weston softly.

"I—I knocked about a bit over there," he went on. "A rolling stone, you know. Then I had a whim to come back to England. I—it's no good disguising it—I was on the downward path. I'd lost interest in things—worse, I'd lost interest in myself. And then one day I met you in the street. You remember? The man you remembered as Harry Dutton was dead then," he said, "and in his place there was a mere shiftless ne'er-do-well. I felt utterly ashamed to find your eyes on me. I saw you still believed in me, long after I had lost faith or belief in myself. And—and I resolved to try again to live my life straight."

"And now?"

"For close on a year—ever since that day—I've struggled. I think I've left the wastrel behind. I'm trying hard to be the man you thought me to be, and I think I'm succeeding."

"And you've come back at last?"

"Yes, I wanted to see you again, not as I was that day you met me, but as I am now. I wanted to win back a little of your respect."

"And—and you're going abroad again?"

"Quite soon. I've no ties, no wife or family."

"There's me!" pointed out Miss Weston, with unprecednted boldness. "Have you forgotten me?"

"You?" he said in amazement. "You don't mean——"

"I've waited all these years for you to come back to me," she replied steadily. "We were parted by illchance, but I was loyal to the memory of you, for I knew you'd return one day!"

"And I," he said, "have been true to you in word and deed, because all my love was with you. Other women"—he dismised them with a gesture. "You were always the only woman in my thoughts."

"I knew it," she said simply, and told him how mischance had led their paths apart those many years ago.

"Ah, if the past could but come back again," he said. "If I only were younger! But now I can not ask you to marry me. I'm getting old, I'm poor. And you—you're rich, I suppose, and you haven't altered in the least."

Her Story.

Gently she smiled dissent.

"But I have something to tell you," she said. "Uncle George left me all his money, but he left this house to you. Nine years ago he died, and we inquired about you everywhere. We advertised in the papers, too, but could get no tidings of you."

"Nine years ago," he answered. "I was up-country, then. I stayed up-country three years. That was why I was undiscovered."

"Well, nine years' rent is yours," she told him. "I've been keeping it for you, waiting for you to come back. So you see, you're not quite so poor as you thought."

"And not quite so rich as I'd like to be," he sighed. "I'd like to be rich enough to——"

He paused.

"To what?" queried Miss Weston, anxiously. "Surely you're not going to balance riches against happiness?"

"I've got my pride," he said, stubbornly.

"And you've got your house," she said. "And I'm going to move out of it at once. You must come and live in your own house."

"No, no," he replied, uncomfortably.

"I shall go," she said, with firmness, and added, artfully, 'thought after all these years it'll break my heart to leave it."

"Then—then let me continue as your—your landlord. The house is far too big for me."

"I won't stay on as your tenant a day longer," she said. "And it's going to break my heart to go. Can't you see what I—what I'm trying to make clear?"

"No," he said, in perplexity. "I can't. And yet—but no, I'm too poor and ashamed to ask you to marry me."

"Rubbish!" retorted Miss Weston with the most asperity she had ever been known to show. "Either you're going to break my heart by making me leave the old house, or else you're going to let me stop on as your wife. Which is it to be?"

Her unwonted briskness gave way and she took a faltering step toward him.

"Harry, after all these years——" she quavered.

"My little sweetheart!" he whispered, and both he and she forgot that youth had left them.

Getting the Facts

MRS. Bickers sighed deeply as she regarded her son Willie, who was eating his dinner with suspicious propriety. Not once had he had to be reminded not to grab things and he had said "please" before every request. His hands were clean and his hair was brushed to a shiny smoothness. Altogether, Willie was so much a model child as to cause comment in the Bickers family. Even Willie's father had noticed it.

"I feel so sorry for Mrs. Gassmore," said Mrs. Bickers, after her introductory sigh.

"Anybody died?" asked Bickers.

"No," said Mrs. Bickers. "It's worse than that. There's nothing worse than to be deceived by those you love and trust—and I tell you, Mrs Gassmore felt so bad about it that there were tears in her eyes when she told me. Her son Tommy, had caused the tears."

"Huh?" said Willie Bickers, startled. He ceased buttering his hot biscuit.

"I knew you'd feel just as I did about it, Willie," said his mother kindly. "Although you are such a friend of Tommy's, I realize that you never would approve of certain things he has done. You have been brought up too well and you understand right and wrong.

"Why, Mrs. Gassmore,' I said to her, 'you went on Willie's father, 'if my Willie had acted that way I couldn't have been any more surprised! Tommy has such honest eyes'——"

What'd he do?" queried Willie huskily.

"Do?" echoed his mother. "Tommy Gassmore, after all his mother had told him, went swimming this afternoon: that's what he did! When he had been expressly forbidden to go near the place—just like you, Willie—let alone enter the water!"

"The young scamp!" said Bickers, emphatically. He regarded the sleek hair of his son with new interest.

"Yes, wasn't it dreadful?" asked Mrs. Bickers. "I suppose he thought his mother never would know it. That's what makes it so particularly sad—his trying to deceive his mother.

"But these things always get found out, and I presume he realizes that now. I considered him nearly as trustworthy a boy as our Willie and"——

"H-h-how'd they find out?" inquired Willie gruffly. "No, thanks—I don't want any more creamed potatoes. Nor sparagus."

"I hope you don't feel ill or anything, Willie," said his mother anxiously. "Usually you want so many helpings and you've had only one to-night. Why, Tommy must have cut his foot while swimming because when he got home it hurt him so he had to take off his shoe and his mother questioned him, and besides his hair was all wet."

"Awful git-away wet hair," said Bickers sternly. "Why are you fussing at your head, Willie? Let your hair alone—you'll muss it all up, and I notice you have brushed it unusually well this evening."

"Yes, I noticed it, too," said Mrs. Bickers. "I am so glad Willie is taking pride in his personal appearance. I hope Tommy Gassmore will realize some day how disgracefully he has acted. It is boys like that who start out by fibbing and deceiving who end by being criminals. I don't know that I want you to associate with Tommy any more, Willie. He might lead you into doing things that you shouldn't, and I should so hate to have you begin. Of course, I know that if you did anything wrong you would be man enough to come and tell us about it as soon as you had thought it over."

"D-did Tommy talk much?" asked Willie, in a slightly cracked voice. "Wh-when he told his mother, I mean?"

"Talk much?" echoed Mrs. Bickers. "Why, what do you mean, Willie? I suppose not. I suppose he felt too ashamed to say more than he had to! Why do you ask?"

"Nothin'," said Willie. He squirmed in his seat. "Jus' wondered."

His hand sought his head again and a look of alarm overspread his countenance as he drew it away from the extreme back and saw water shining on it. Apparently his obtuse parents saw nothing and were eating with perfect appetites.

"Say," Willie blurted out, in a mangled voice, "I went swimming with Tommy—when he did, you know. Mom-

CHILDLESS WOMEN

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

The girl drew herself up. "Nevertheless, Mr. Warren, in spite of prudence, wisdom or death itself, I shall go to my brother- to-night!"

There was a little pause; he looked down at the floor and thought swiftly.

"Very well," he said at last. "I yield to the force of your determination. You shall go to-night—but I insist on one concession."

"What is that?"

"You must let me go ahead and look over the ground. I will signal you when it is safe to follow."

The Signal.

"But how can you signal?"

"With a light." He crossed to the window and studied the forbidding mass of the castle for a few moments. "A light in one of those higher towers. You can see it from here. You won't have long to wait," he added earnestly. "It will shine within an hour."

"But"—the girl's voice faltered—"but if—it does not shine?"

He smiled upon her, lightly but tenderly.

"Well," he drawled, whimsically, "then I'll be too busy swapping lead for brimstone with Mr. Spook to stop and hang a lantern. I had expected," he went on seriously, "that your cousin would remain here with you, and I can not understand why he should desert you at such a crisis."

"Unless—what?" he inquired slowly, after an uncomfortable silence.

The girl made a sudden gesture of despair. "Oh, if I only knew!" she cried. "If I only knew! I'm so confused—I'm at my wits' end! My mind—I can't think!"

She pressed both hands to her head and staggered as she moved toward a seat. The next instant Jarvis was supporting her, both hands in his, and gazing intently into her face. Little quivers that were not all of love were rising up her spine, and even as he gazed into the waxed rose of the beautiful face he felt an all but overpowering desire to look over his shoulder. Seventh sense, premonition. The psychologists—those tedious dissectors—are still squabbling over the terminology, but young Jarvis felt the realness of the sensation. The sudden and menacing appearance of Robledo, the eerie palm-reading of the innkeeper's girl, the inexplicable desertion of the Duke—all these combined to give him an unshakable and growing sense of gathering danger. And all about him was the breathing still of the mountain night, like nature's cowering hush before the lash of the hurricane sweeps the land.

Herself Again.

The girl instantly responded to the best treatment for all superficial nervous troubles—a sharp, incisive voice. She opened her eyes, and with a wondering, startled look.

"You are holding something from me," he charged swiftly. "What happened on the boat that changed your manner? What worried you when the Duke drove ahead? I saw it again when he closed that door. What is it?"

He felt her shiver and her eyes, avoiding his, roamed wildly about the room.

"Oh, if I could only—if I were only sure I could trust you!"

Instantly she got the best answer in the world—the quick, unconscious setting of a man's muscles under the sting of insult. It was gone in a breath, but she felt and recognized it with joy.

"Too late for doubts now," he said crisply, as if the affront were of no importance in the face of graver things. "Your brother's life is at stake! We must stick together—you and I! It's your only chance. How can I help you unless I know everything? Don't you see that I am fighting in the dark—that I am up against a solid wall of mystery and this may be the key? Never mind what you think or fear—this is the time you've got to trust me!"

The girl was breathing quickly.

"You couldn't—" she began brokenly, and then, her voice rising: "Oh, I do believe in you! In my heart I have trusted you from the first. It's my heart; not my mind that trusts you now!" She paused a moment and drew a deep breath as he stared at her blankly. She gazed full into his face as if to watch for the slightest betraying tremor.

"The locket is gone."

The look of utter, dizzy amazement that came over his face was proof enough of his innocence. It hardly needed his mechanical:

"Gone—where?"

"I don't know," she cried miserably.

"But—when did you miss it?"

"Three days ago—on th steamer."

"And you have no idea now who has the plan that was in the locket?"

His tone was high and accusing, and she kept her eyes away from his.

"I suspect, of course," she admitted feebly, "but I can't be sure! I—"

"Your Highness," he broke in triumphantly, "I've got the first trail of the spook that's haunting your castle. Rusty, the horses!"

"Yes, sah; yes, sah!" came the servitor's voice from the yard.

"Quick now; we've got no time to lose."

THE LOCKET STOLEN

The girl was breathing quickly. "You couldn't"—she began brokenly, and then her voice rising. "Oh, I do believe in you! In my heart I have trusted you from the first. It's my heart, not my mind, that trusts you now!" She paused a moment and drew a deep breath as he stared at her blankly. She gazed full into his face as if to watch for the slightest betraying tremor. "The locket is gone!"

spoke, and now he picked up his hat.

"You think—" began the Princess, a little uncertainly.

"I think your cousin has not gone to Madrid. Time is everything now. I shall start at once and you must rest here until you get the signal."

"Your overcoat," she reminded him as he made for the door. "It's upstairs."

"Never mind that."

Before he could protest she ran lightly up the stairs. With a warm glow on him that no overcoat could have produced, Jarvis followed her halfway up.

As he did so, the figure of a man blotted out the moonlight that fell in the doorway. A man muffled in a big cloak stepped just inside, his right arm carried rigidly at his side. From this position he could command the foot of the stairs, but could not be seen from the stairway itself.

The Princess appeared at the top with the coat on her arm.

"Don't come down—I'll get it."

"You are sure you know the way?" she asked, tremulously, as he relieved her.

"North road, second turn to the right."

"Yes, that takes you to the postern gate."

"Thank you."

But still he lingered, though he had said time was precious. Their eyes met in a long look. Both colored and looked away. With a swift movement she took something off her neck and threw it about his shoulders.

"This little cross and chain," she said softly. "Wear it to-night for me, my knight!"

He gained possession of the hand for a moment.

"Only for to-night?" he whispered.

"You may never see to-morrow."

"If I never see to-morrow"—his voice sounded to his own ears like a stranger's and there was the beating of a whole drum corps in his ears—"you will forgive me for telling you that—I love you! Don't—don't rebuke me to-night. Wait until to-morrow—if tomorrow ever comes." He smiled and her eyes drooped before the light in his. "To-night your humble vassal goes forth in his lady's cause. While all Segura waits ghost and ghost-breaker shall stalk the halls."

He stooped and swiftly kissed her hand.

"Your Highness, you will see the light in the tower inside an hour!"

A Fight in the Dark.

"God be with you, my knight!" she prayed softly—and was gone.

He waited until the last sound of her footsteps had died and a door closed in the distance. Then his pulses leaping wildly, he turned and made one step down the stairs—and stopped.

A poet once asked, and left unanswered, "Upon what may life depend?" In this instance Warren Jarvis' life hung on the slender chance that he would wait until he could not longer hear the sound of his lady-love's footsteps. Light as they were they would have distracted his mind so that he would never have caught the faint but keen metallic click that was as clear as the spoken word to a man born in a country where the babies used to use a .45 revolver for a teething ring.

Survival largely depends on preparedness for the unexpected in the world of action. Warren Jarvis did not waste any time investigating. He did not care to make inquiries to be certain that the cocking of the pistol had a definite connection with his career in this world.

No; he began humming "Dixie" in the care-free, exultant manner of the successful lover, and swiftly took in the field of action. In a fraction of a second he had planned his battle. On the stair post at the foot of the stairs was an oil lamp, the only light in the room, for the fire had died down to a faint glow. He slung the overcoat across his right arm, with his left arm loosened something that hung under his coat and across his heart. Then, still humming "Dixie," he walked down the stairs without any attempt at concealment.

Just before he came within the range of vision of the doorway he leaned forward and dashed his coat against the lamp. At that same instant he whipped out his pistol, crouched and did a baseball slide out across the stone floor, on hip and shoulder, his eyes turned toward the door.

There was a flash and a roar and a man's figure outlined against the moonlight and then almost as quickly as the two shots had sounded in the hotel, the Kentuckian's revolver spoke twice.

There was an oath, a cry of "Sancta Maria!" and a heavy fall.

Laying the Ghost.

Desecrated by the bright Spanish sunlight, the old castle would have moved one to pity as would the sight of a broken-down warrior. In the rich moonlight, softened and hallowed, the stately sweep of its walls and the but stagnant wastes of the moat, and the long tendrils of vapor curled and crept out like the stealthy arms of cold and evil spirits, enfolding and chilling the heart and welcoming all who dared the walls to an embrace of death. And somewhere within an owl cried out an uncanny warning, like a tocsin summoning the legions of darkness to meet the rash invader.

"Jimminy!" muttered Jarvis, with a shiver, as they drew up at the postern gate. "It's no wonder those fat-headed boobies down there wouldn't come up to this place!"

THIS is a tip I give you, as it was given to me,
Right in the thick of the summer, with the mercury ninety-three,
Right in the thick of the summer, with everything sizzling hot,
And all of us looking crimson, like lobsters cooked in a pot.

Don't button it in the back, boys; the button in front will do.
The collar will stay where you put it, looking and feeling fine,
And there'll be no torturing button a-boring into your spine.

This is the tip I was given, and I pass it along as lore
To all of my husky brothers, with "seventeen" necks or more.
Try it, and all of the buttons that caused you worry and pain
Will land in back of the dresser, and never come out again.

Courting Death

LAST week I dined with Lord Evendale, the well-known English multi-millionaire, and Chamus, former chief of detectives, at the house of a mutual friend. Our host had imagined that these two men, the Englishman, with his blase paradoxes and strange whims, and the Frenchman, with his memories of a life rich in daring deeds, might amuse or at least interest us. Long before dinner was over the skirmishes between these two highly contrasting characters had begun and their conversation was exceedingly interesting to follow.

"You do your fellow men a mighty poor service," said Lord Evendale, in a tone of contempt, "when you use your intelligence and energy to protect their lives. Life, indeed, is worth next to nothing."

"Still, life is the only blessing we really possess," Chamus replied firmly, looking straight into the Englishman's eyes, "the only one we really control. I consider it our duty to live the time allotted us and to make it as useful as possible to ourselves and others."

"Oh, nonsense," exclaimed Lord Evendale. "At any other time perhaps life was worth living, but nowadays it is not. The progress of civilization makes it easy for us to enjoy all the joys of existence, leaving absolutely no room for further wishes. As for myself, all the wishes, that I could get fulfilled without any exertion whatever, were so disgusting to me already at the age of 25 that I turned away from them and longed only for one thing—death. I resolved to die."

Various Ways.

"There are different ways of committing suicide," remarked Chamus, whom this confession, with its immense egotism, annoyed. "The only difficulty is the choice, from poison to a hempen rope."

"I was religious," the Englishman went on unaffected, "and, besides, my mother suspected the spleen which poisoned my life, and made me take an oath never to commit suicide. I made this oath willingly, because I imagined it would be easy to find a way of being killed without doing it yourself, but I have found that to a man in my position it is the most difficult thing in the world. They had barely begun to suspect my fatal intentions before a host of friends and relatives began to watch me."

"You will pardon me if I refuse to believe you," said Chamus, "even a lord and a millionaire can manage as easily as anything to get killed if he really does want to get rid of his life. There are a thousand chances every day."

single lion, crocodile nor even a snake. At a lake in the heart of the Soudan I met a tribe of real savage natives, only to have them nurse me back when I got the fever. I went to the Transvaal and arrived there just as the peace had been signed. And now I have returned as safe and sound as ever, but full of despair, because I can not find death."

He Did Wrong.

"You need not despair," said Chamus, contemptuously, "but if you really did want to die you did wrong in leaving the big cities, where the struggle for existence has made men ten times more dangerous than all the wild beasts in the world. That at least is the experience I have had while hunting human beasts of prey for more than twenty years."

The two men had arisen and stood looking straight into one another's eyes.

Chamus continued: "If you are absolutely determined to die without committing suicide I am able to give you a prescription. At the utmost it will cost you no more than a couple of sous."

"Will you be kind enough to give it to me to-day?"

"With pleasure. What time is it?"

"Half-past ten."

"Then you have plenty of time. Take the train from Gare St. Lazare at 11:05. Get out at 11:45 at Point du Jour, or, better still, at Grenelle. Then walk slowly back and forth along the old fortifications, and if you return to Maison Blanche alive I shall apologize to you in the presence of our friends here."

"I understand; and, to tempt the apaches there to carry out their coup to the satisfaction of everybody, I shall fill my pockets with gold."

"I should not advise you to do that," said Chamus brutally. "If the booty is too rich it may tempt those fellows to attack peaceful people who are not passing the place simply because they are tired of living. I advise you to pay the fellows who do you the favor of taking your life the exact amount at which you value your life, no more and no less. In that way you will not be robbing your heirs."

Many Thanks.

"I thank you, sir. If everybody were like you I should not be disgusted with life. I shall follow your advice and keep in my pocket no more than the amount at which I value my life."

* * * * * * *

I thought no more of the matter, but when I opened my paper the next morning I was shocked to read the following paragraph:

"In the small hours of the morning a police patrol between Grenelle and Vaugirard found the body of a man who had been murdered by apaches with a lasso close to the fortifications. He was stylishly dressed and was easily identified, for in his left shoe was found the following note:

"'The Lord did me a poor favor when he let me be born into this world. At last I see an opportunity to get rid of my life without committing suicide, and I make use of it unhesitatingly. They will murder, but not rob me, for I have given the driver who drove me to the station all my valuables, keeping exactly ten sous to pay for my ticket to Grenelle. Low as was the valuation M. Chamus placed on my life, I value it even lower myself, for my murderers will kill me for the value I put on my life—nothing.'"

Up-to-Date Jokes

At a small country church a newly married couple were receiving some advice as to how they were to conduct themselves.

"You must never both get cross at once; it is the husband's duty to protect his wife whenever an occasion arises, and a wife must love and honor and obey her husband, and follow him wherever he goes."

"But, sir——" pleaded the young bride.

"I haven't finished yet," remarked the clergyman. "She must——"

"But, please, sir"—in desperation—"can't you alter that last part? My husband is a postman."

Two women who had not seen each other for many years met unexpectedly in the street.

"How do you do?" exclaimed one, effusively.

"Now, this is delightful!" said the other, who was the elder. "You have not seen me for eleven years, and yet you know me at once! I can not have changed so dreadfully in all that time. It flatters me."

"Oh, I recognized your bonnet!" said the first.

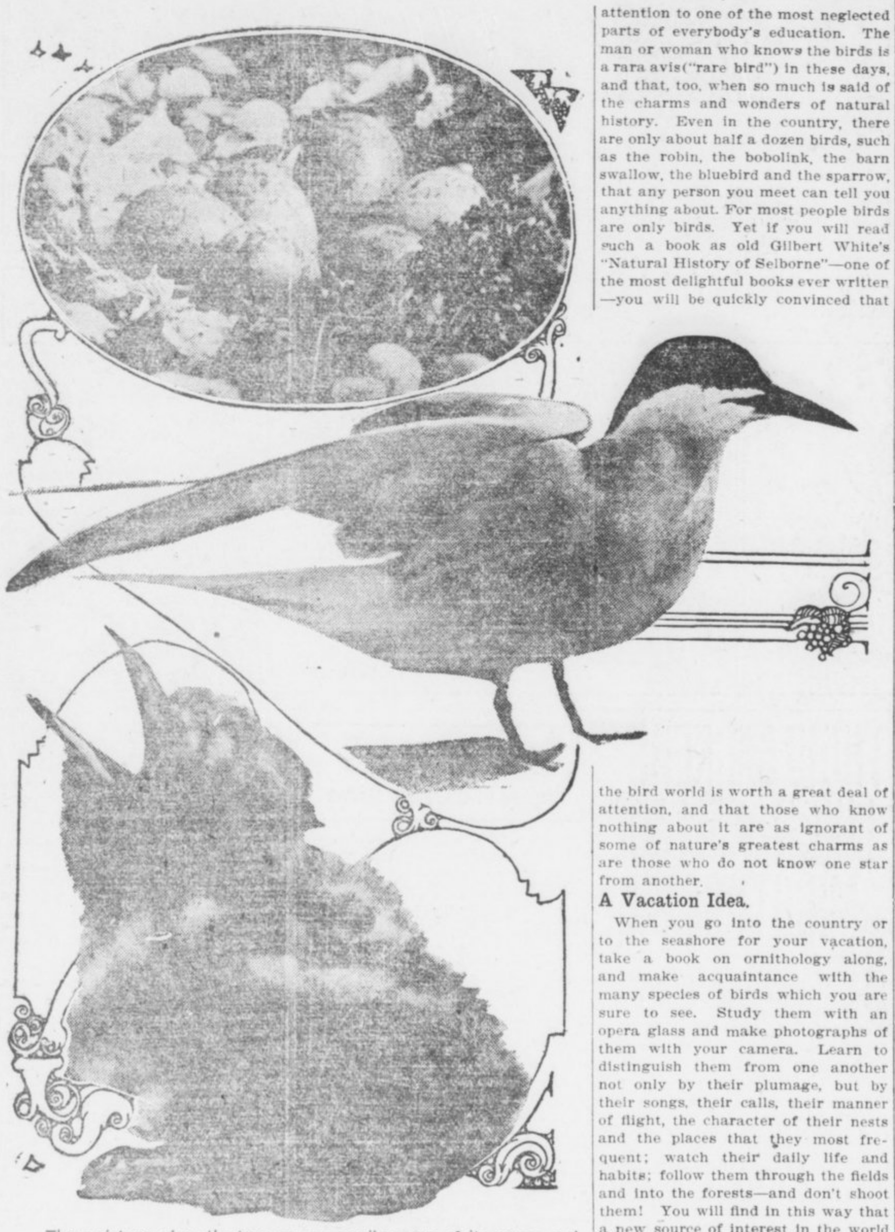
The Murder of the Birds

By GARRETT P. SERVISS.



These pictures show the tern, or sea swallow, one of its young and its eggs. This beautiful bird has been made nearly extinct by the ruthlessness of hunters.

AMONG the interesting animals that man has succeeded in more or less completely exterminating without any real benefit to himself is the tern, or sea swallow, some remarkable photographs of which, made in England, are shown herewith.

They belong to the gull tribe of birds, and get their popular name from their curious flight, which resembles that of a land swallow. Like the true gulls, they have great power of wing and often go far out to sea. Including the long tail, they are about 15 inches in length, and they present a very picturesque appearance as they skim along the surface of the waves, with their black heads, gray wings, white bellies and red legs, catching small fishes and mollusks without stopping, and sometimes diving after their prey.

They breed along the coasts and often follow rivers, and even reach inland lakes. Unfortunately for them, both their eggs and their plumes are attractive, and merciless hunting has almost driven them from the eastern shores of the United States, as well as from those of Western Europe and the British Isles.

A Knowing Bird.

But they know their enemy and in recent times they have chosen their breeding places in spots almost inaccessible to the hunters. Lately one of their concealed breeding places has been found on a lonely part of the coast of Norfolk, England, and the photographs were taken there by hunters who had no other aim than to increase our knowledge of the ways and peculiarities of animals which, as far as we know, have as good a right to enjoy the gifts of nature as we have.

One interesting fact about this home of English terns is that it is believed to be far older than the British Empire, there being evidence that they have inhabited it from a time anterior to that of the arrival of the conquering Normans.

The story of the terns serves to call attention to one of the most neglected parts of everybody's education. The man or woman who knows the birds is a rara avis ("rare bird") in these days, and that, too, when so much is said of the charms and wonders of natural history. Even in the country, there are only about half a dozen birds, such as the robin, the bobolink, the barn swallow, the bluebird and the sparrow, that any person you meet can tell you anything about. For most people birds are only birds. Yet if you will read such a book as old Gilbert White's "Natural History of Selborne"—one of the most delightful books ever written—you will be quickly convinced that the bird world is worth a great deal of attention, and that those who know nothing about it are as ignorant of some of nature's greatest charms as are those who do not know one star from another.

A Vacation Idea.

When you go into the country or to the seashore for your vacation, take a book on ornithology along, and make acquaintance with the many species of birds which you are sure to see. Study them with an opera glass and make photographs of them with your camera. Learn to distinguish them from one another not only by their plumage, but by their songs, their calls, their manner of flight, the character of their nests and the places that they most frequent; watch their daily life and habits; follow them through the fields and into the forests—and don't shoot them! You will find in this way that a new source of interest in the world you live in has been opened for you.

One of the recollections of childhood that I should most regret to lose is that of the wonderful song of a thrush that I used to hear at sundown, ringing across the fields from some far-away hidden place, the sweetest sound I ever heard! I would leave my play and stop to listen in simple wonder. It was long before I found out the name of the bird that sang that marvelous evening song, which fascinated everyone who listened to it, and I never caught sight of the bird itself, and yet it seems to me that I shall hear that melody as long as the cells of memory transmit their impressions!

And yet men endowed with the divine gift of human intelligence murder birds by wholesale; murder them for their plumage; murder them to get a new dainty for jaded appetites; murder them, most horrible of all, for the mere sake of killing; to see their delicate feathers fly from the impact of the shot, and their little bodies drop mangled upon the ground! And this is called—SPORT!

Smithson on the Continent

THEY were openly courting!

It was in the Continental train running down to Naples. Smithson, clerk in a London shipping office, on the most ambitious vacation of his life, was the chief spectator. The tall, dark Italian who was talking to the young couple in animated style did not seem at all embarrassed by their conduct.

Smithson shifted in his corner seat and tried not to look in their direction. But his glance repeatedly strayed to the olive-complexioned girl, jet-haired, brilliant-eyed, whose adorer, as young and sun-tinted as herself, embraced her neck with his right arm, and fondled her fingers with his other hand.

"Ah!"

Smithson had remembered he was in Italy—the country of romance. He felt more at ease. To show his tolerance he would beg a match. Ignorance of Italian was nothing to a man crossing the Continent to catch a German liner for the return Mediterranean trip—all to be achieved in a fortnight.

After several genial glances at the trio, which seemed to give great offense, he took out his pipe, and, fixing his eyes on the tall, dark man, he pointed to his empty bowl and struck an imaginary match on his trousers.

A direct insult could not have caused a more startling outburst. It came like a gunshot—

"Insulte!"

Bright Eyes.

A less steady eye would have quailed beneath the Italian's flashing gaze. But Smithson had noticed the curious, bewitching light in the orbs of the beautiful girl, which were directed toward his face, and he replied grandly:

"Not at all!"

Smithson might have used the single Italian word he knew, "apologia," but he recalled the advice given him by an uncle at Dover: "Nephew, if you get into a vocal dilemma with a foreigner, meet volubility with volubility—recite poetry, anything; but don't falter, and, above all, gesticulate and smile."

Sentence on sentence still stumbled from the dark man. A look of softness had come into the eyes of the girl opposite, but she clung to her lover as if the little clerk was a bold highwayman.

There was no longer any reassurance in the beautiful girl's face. When the little clerk sought it she cringed before his glance, and the tall man moved to screen her from view.

The train slowed down slightly. Occasionally the little clerk cast a furtive glance at the scenery flying by. He could think only of poetry as a means of stemming the other's tide of wrath. He leaned back, and with the smile of a seraph looked up at him and begin in pathetic, pacifying tones:

An Experiment.

"I am out of humanity's reach,
I must finish my journey alone,
Never hear the sweet music of speech,
I start at the sound of my own."

It was electrical. The Italian's face relaxed. The anger went out of his black eye. He bowed magnificently and stepped aside, and after voluble explanation to the lovers, sat down.

Smithson whistled mentally. "Phew! He thinks I've apologized."

Presently the tall man turned, and, pointing to Smithson's gold watch, stammered slowly: "You—haf—time?"

"A leetle," was the answer.

All four were now smiling. The beautiful girl, especially, seemed gratified at the calm after the storm. The train ran into the station.

"Naples?" Smithson exclaimed.

"Anpoli," the Italian answered. "You eat?"

"Rather!"

With a pleasant farewell the lovers departed in a carriage, and Smithson, casting after the beautiful girl a regretful glance, accompanied the tall man on foot to a restaurant. "An experience to tell the chaps at home," he told himself. "Can't stand a vacation without incident!"

But he grumbled when, after a meal of delicate dishes which he could scarcely swallow, the proprietor of the restaurant negligently placed before him a bill for two.

An Argument.

"No, no, you mistake," he said easily.

"Sir, our price," stammered the proprietor, reproachfully. And the dark man nodded assent.

"But I've not brought you—you brought me—you crook," Smithson expostulated. He offered five francs, half the sum claimed.

The proprietor rejected it with a torrent of protest, endless as the dark man's in the train.

Smiling, as before, Smithson repeated the verse which had then acted so soothingly. It had no effect. Finally he exploded: "I wish I knew 'Paradise Lost.' I'd recite the whole book at you!" As a last resort, with a forced smile he began:

"The boy stood on the burning deck——"

"Burnidek?" the proprietor interrupted. "What ess 'burnidek'?"

"Confound you!" Smithson thundered, "that's where the boy stood! Do you think I'm going to listen to you fellows yarning without saying a word?"

A passing gendarme entered. Protest was useless. As an alternative to accompanying the officer Smithson paid ten francs and stamped into the street—the gendarme accepting from the proprietor one franc for settling the dispute.

On his way to the landing stage, whither he went to inquire if his liner were in, Smithson felt for his watch. It was gone!

The Mistakes of Jennie

By HAL COFFMAN

Being a Series of Chapters in the Life of a Southern Girl in the Big City

They Would All Look at Jennie.

THINGS went along quietly with Jennie for three or four weeks. She had paid the $1.50 weekly installment on her clothes regularly, but she noticed everything was not quite right at the office. Her former girl friend would not speak to her, and Jennie often noticed her whispering to the other girls, and then they would all look at Jennie.

Jennie knew they were talking about her, but she could not find out what it was they said.

Usually, in the office during the dull season, they laid several of the girls off or let them go entirely, but they always kept the best ones—the ones that always did just a little MORE than the boss asked them to do.

Jennie had always been among these, for she worked hard and kept her mind on her work—that is, she used to before she got the foolish ideas about clothes and wanting to do like other girls she saw.

Of late Jennie had been thinking more of the good times she had, and wanted to have, than she had of her work, and had made several mistakes in her work, for which she was "called down" by the boss.

She felt and knew that the other girl was doing all she could to make Jennie lose her job, and what then of the $1.50 weekly installment on her clothes, and also the remainder of her $8.00 a week that was so badly needed at home.

Jennie had not seen the fellow since Tom met them at the door going to the hotel and had realized what a narrow escape she had when Tom told her what an awful place it was. One of the girls told Jennie that the boss wanted to see her, and with a dryness in her throat and fluttering heart she went slowly toward the private office of the boss.

Mild and Bitter

A Humorous Yarn

MR. POLLOCK, the landlord of the "Comfortable Gill," sat at his door looking out upon the dusty road and the stretch of meadow beyond and beyond that again at the line of pollard willows which marked the stream. He took from his pocket a large white handkerchief, upon which a crop of red spots had broken out very much as though it had had the measles, and wiped his forehead with it, careless of infection.

The morning was hot, and he had just been engaged in severe physical exertion, nothing less than the conveyance, with the help of the brewer's men, of a thirty-six gallon barrel of ale into the cellar. The feat had been safely accomplished, and he had cause for satisfaction. Yet all was not well with him. There was a slight frown upon his forehead and a thoughtful expression in his watery blue eyes as they roved across the meadows to a spot by the stream, where stood a figure of a man clad in Norfolk jacket and knee breeches and carrying a fishing rod. Mr. Pollock eyed him thoughtfully, and scratched his stubble on his chin—of which he had two.

"Been here three weeks," he muttered, "and I ain't seen the color of his money yet. Promises—yes! Settle when he goes! But then, he ain't a-going—and living on the fat of the land, too. Not overmuch baggage to speak of. Of course, he may be a gentleman. Very likely he is. But then, again, he mayn't be. No. It's no go. I'll have it out with him this very morning."

He stiffened in his determination as he saw the fisherman turn from the stream and come toward him across the meadows. It was evident that the morning's sport had not proved very satisfactory. As he came nearer he revealed himself as a slightly built man with dark hair, narrow black eyes and a humorous twist about the corners of his mouth. He greeted Mr. Pollock cheerfully, but the landlord, having made up his mind to an unpleasant duty, was not to be put off by blandishments.

He Speaks.

"Morning, Mr. Twigg," he said abruptly, in response to the fisherman's greetings. "No luck, I suppose? One can't do much when the sky's as bright as it is. There's a small matter I was wanting to speak to you about—that little account of mine."

He coughed and drew his stout form a little more upright. Mr. Twigg's dark eyes rested upon him a moment and then wandered away to the right, to where the little country station stood, neat and trim, amongst its flowery beds.

"I think I told you," he said, "that I promised to settle when I left."

"Exactly," answered Mr. Pollock eagerly, seeing an opening for effective argument. "And what I want to know is, when that's going to be, for, you see, supposing you was to stay here forever; then you wouldn't ever settle it. Now, as man to man, would you?"

Mr. Twigg laughed.

"Well, no," he admitted, pleasantly. "Since you put it that way, I shouldn't. But you needn't be afraid. Very nice place, this—pleasant, and quiet, and all that, but not quite the spot for a permanent residence. As a matter of fact, I was thinking of leaving this morning. There's a train in about a half hour, isn't there? And I've sent my trunks up to the station."

"Oh, you have, have you?" said Mr. Pollock, with a momentary suspicion. "Then you and me can settle up before you go—comfortable and pleasantlike."

"Certainly," answered Mr. Twigg, promptly. "I've just got to go upstairs and pack the small handbag, and then I'll come down and settle up."

"Very well, sir," said Mr. Pollock, becoming more respectful at the prospect of approaching payment. "You can't say no fairer than that."

His Account.

He went into the bar to add up the details of his account, putting on a few dollars for luck. When Mr. Twigg descended he presented him with the bill. The fisherman put down his handbag and thrust his hands into his trouser pockets, as though to produce the necessary coin. In the midst of the process he paused and looked abstractedly at the landlord.

"You've treated me very well," he said, "and I shall recommend this place to my friends. And in return, I can show you a tip that ought to be useful to a man in your line of business. If you'd like to know I can show you a way to get two kinds of beer out of one barrel."

"Two kinds of beer out of one barrel?" said Mr. Pollock, staring. "Why, it can't be done."

"Two kinds of beer," repeated Mr. Twigg. "Mild and bitter."

"Well, if you can do that," said Mr. Pollock, scratching his head, "you're a marvel."

"It's perfectly easy when you know how to do it," answered Mr. Twigg, nonchalantly. "I'll be glad to show it to you. You've got a barrel of beer in the cellar, I suppose?"

"Just got a new one this morning," answered Mr. Pollock. "Thirty-six gallons."

"Then that's the very thing," answered his guest. "If you've got such a thing as a large auger about the place I'll show you how to do it now."

In the excitement of watching this curious experiment Mr. Pollock forgot about the unsettled account. He rummaged in the bar and found an auger of the requisite size. Mr. Twigg inspected it with particular care. Armed with it and accompanied by his host he descended to the cellar where the mighty barrel stood upon its trestles. He eyed it carefully and tugged at his mustache—possibly to hide a smile.

The Experiment.

"No use knocking the spigot out," he said. "You need two holes—one for each kind of beer. The mild comes out at one hole, the bitter at the other. You'll find this tip so useful that you'll remember it all your life. So here goes."

He attacked the barrel with the augur, making the hole in the lower part of its face.

"Just stick your thumb in here whilst I make the other." Mr. Pollock complied, and he went on. "The beer which comes out of that hole will be mild," he explained as he bored, "and the beer which comes out of this one when I've finished it will be bitter, very bitter," he added, inaudibly. "Ah, there, it's done! Just stick your thumb in this one, then I'll show you."

Mr. Pollock hastily inserted his thumb into the second hole, and with both hands fully occupied waited for the miracle.

"And now," said Mr. Twigg, allowing his smile to broaden, "I'll just go along and catch my train. I've got five minutes and I can just do it. As I said, you've done me well while I've been here, and I think you'll admit that I've done you well in return. Good morning. Mild and bitter, remember, out of the same barrel. Don't forget."

He ran lightly up the cellar stairs and vanished into the stretch of sunlight beyond them. Mr. Pollock, with both thumbs stuck in the barrel, was busy employing a somewhat slow brain in calculation as to the choice between the loss of his account and the loss of 36 gallons of beer. He had not solved the problem by the time that Mr. Twigg stepped out of the little station on his way to town.

Accepted.

"Darling," whispered the ardent suitor, "I lay my fortune at your feet."

"Your fortune?" replied she in surprise. "I didn't know you had one."

"Well, it isn't much of a fortune, but it will look large beside those tiny feet."

Talked Through His Nose.

From America comes the story of a Scotsman who, while viewing a statue of George Washington, was approached by an interested American.

"I think you'll agree with me, sir," said the American, "that he was a great and good man. A lie never passed his lips."

"Weel," said the Scot, "I suppose he talked through his nose, like the rest o' ye."

The Fowler's Story

A Weird Tale, Complete

THE fowler's cottage stands at the edge of the fields where the estuary of the Whitewater joins the main, and if there be a more desolate spot in the Landshire coast I have yet to find it.

When I went down to the cottage the other night the weather, for all its roughness, seemed likely to favor fowling. When I reached the fowler's cottage I found its owner in strange mood. He was walking rapidly from kitchen to parlor, pausing every now and again to open the kitchen door and look out to seaward.

"I'm sorry ye've come down," he remarked as I reached the door, "for I can't come wi' ye to-night."

"Why not?" I asked. "Aren't you well? There is nothing the matter with wind or weather, and the tide'll bring a great many birds up."

"That's right enough," he replied; "and there's nothin' 'xactly wrong wi' me, but it is my unlucky night, and I dussn't go out."

"'Twere three years ago last night," he said; "chanced I were flight shootin' and didn't have no luck whatsomever. There was a shower of birds come out from the decoy pond, but blame me if they didn't keep out of range like, and I couldn't come near them nohow. An' as I walked back 'long the sea wall, a gre't ole owl came shrikkin' right past me, an' I thought, mebbe, she were a witch, an' i counted she'd driven the birds away from me; so I let fly and dropped her, and she were only an owl after all, for if so be she had been a witch she shot couldn't have stopped her. So I picked her up and carried her home for to stuff, and I count that were an unlucky thing to do. An' the very next night, three years ago to-night, with the wind just as you see it now, an' the moon in most the same quarter, I went out 'long the saltings for to hide behind a knoll, for I reckoned the duck were gettin' some shy of the sea wall.

"An' when I got down there and took me place just afore flight started, blame me if I didn't see another gre't old owl swoopin' down f'r the land; an' I dussn't shoot it, not knowin' when the flight would start, an' it come right past me, shrikkin' just like the one I'd shot the t'other night, and I knowed somethin' was wrong. Flight come late. It were ten minutes 'fore the first birds come over, and then they come all right and I got six or eight, and thought to myself I'd got skeered about nothin'. I forgot to tell ye that I 'adn't brought Spot wi' me 'cos she'd hurt her foot, an' I'd to leave her be'ind, so I 'ad to pick up me own birds, an' for to do that I kept all on turnin' round, and two was cripples an' ran; and when I'd got the lot and the light were most gone, blame me if I knew where the land was and where was the sea.

"I didn't know nowt about it at first startin' off. Seemed to me I were headin' towards the land right enough, and then I come to a place where the mud-bank stopped and there were deep water twenty yards wide comin' down with a rush from two sides at once. I looked for me landmarks, but couldn't see nothin' an' I knew there was somethin' wrong.

"I grew'd more an' more skeer'd like, an' begun to run forrard hard as ever I could, an' wherever I went the water kept all on chasin' arter me; an' blame me, if that gre't ole owl didn't pass agin in the dark, all white an' flutterin' an' screamin' at the top o' her voice. Then I know'd why it was I'd got caught, an' I just stood still, for I didn't know where to go no longer, an' then I see'd a light, sudden-like, right away from where I'd been a-runnin'. I didn't know what it might be, but I just started straight off for it, walkin' an' wadin' an' splashin' an' racin' like where the goin' was too soft; an' there was times when the water was up to me knees, but I kept all on goin' for the light, the only thing I could see."

"You must have known you were on the right road, then," I suggested.

"That I didn't," he replied, speaking as a man does when he has been running hard, "for I couldn't tell but that the light were a Jack o' lantern that would go out when I come nigh it an' leave me in th' worstapart of th' marsh, or that t'other old owl weren't a real witch what 'ad set it there for to drown'd me by. By anyway, the light were better than the darkness, an' so I run as best I could an' slipped twice an' dropped a brace o' me birds an' dussn't stop even for they, an' went on an' on till it seemed I'd never get to the end o' th' runnin'; but the light kept all on a-twinklin' an' so I kept all on a-runnin', an' at last I see'd a bit of the breakwater, an' then all the things shaped theirselves an' I know'd in a moment where I was. An' the light were in me own parlor, for it chanced 'that me brother Jack 'ad come along, an' bein' lonely like, 'ad just lit the lamp for to see by, an' if it 'adn't been for that I'd never 'ave seen land again. I count th' old owl would ha' had me drownded."

"That is three years ago, you tell me," I said. "I should have thought you would have forgotten the trouble by now."

"I 'ad forgotten it," he confessed, "but last night, when I were down on the wall at flight-time, t'other old owl came shrikkin' past me again, an' I know'd she wanted to get me back on the saltin's, for I count she's a witch, an' it's 'er night. An' that's why I 'ont goo.

"Do ye listen," he said in hushed tones. "Do ye listen."

I stirred the fire to a glow that lit the fowler's scared, white face. Something gray and silent sailed between the window and the faint light of a moon half hidden by a clouddrift—a big owl passed, hooting.

THOMPSON AND DUNN ATLANTA BATTERY TO-DAY

By Joe Agler.

NEW ORLEANS, July 19.—Thompson and Dunn will be the Cracker battery to-day, and the club is brim full of pep and confidence as a result of the easy victory of yesterday over the Pelicans.

Dent really worked about ball all the way. The only run New Orleans made was a gift to the visitors by way of a fielder's choice.

Billy Smith's clubs put up a great batting attack, with Welchonce and Alperman leading. Joe Dunn also contributed a most timely double that cleared up the tow-path when it was in a highly congested condition.

Walker, supposed to be the speed king of this circuit, was soft for the Crackers and the only question was to what length their attack would run the score.

The shake-up in the batting order proved a wise move, certainly for that game, at any rate. Wally Smith seems to be in a bit of a slump just now, but he is sure to hit his stride again, as he is one of those natural hitters who can't stay off the ball long at a time.

"King" Brady has left the team and Clarke has reported. The new hand is a big, raw-boned fork-hander and while he was warming up yesterday he showed a barrel of stuff. He pitches like Otto Hess and should held out a lot in the climb the Crackers now seem to have started for the top.

BASEBALL
Diamond News and Gossip

A crowd of Philadelphia fans tried to mob Umpire Byron, of the National League, for his decisions against the Phillies yesterday, and if it had not been for Umpire Rigler and some policemen the arbitrator with the poetic name might have had his hair mussed up.

* * *

* * *

Smokey "Joe" Wood had his thumb hurt fielding a grounder in the game with the Tigers yesterday and won't be able to pitch again for two weeks.

* * *

Right Fielder Jackson, of the Naps, had stage fright and dropped three flies yesterday. This enabled the Yankees to win.

* * *

Huggins managed the Cardinals for the first time since he was beaned by Pitcher Tyler two weeks ago, but he won't be able to play for some time.

* * *

The Cubs and the Pirates are tied for third place in the National League now. The Pirates are 66 points behind the Phillies, who are now second in the National League standing.

* * *

* * *

Umpire Klem had to run the Dodgers-Pirates game alone, but he did it to the satisfaction of all hands. His co-conspirator, Al Orth, was under the weather.

SANTA MONICA WILL GO AFTER SAVANNAH MARK

LOS ANGELES, July 19.—The Santa Monica road race, to be run on August 9, will be one event open for all cars of 600 cubic inches and under, covering the course 53 times for a total of 445 miles.

This announcement was made after a meeting of the Santa Monica road race committee, making a radical departure from previous runnings of the coast classic.

The most important reason advanced for making the change and increasing the distance by nearly 50 per cent was so that the contestants might go after the grand prize record for 400 miles made on the Savannah course.

Because the 120-horsepower Flat with which Teddy Tetzlaff won the last race and established a new world's record is above the displacement restriction, the car has been eliminated from this year's race.

$20,000 FOR RITCHIE FOR THREE N. D. BOUTS

NEW YORK, July 19.—A $20,000 guarantee for three no-decision fights of ten rounds each awaits Willie Ritchie. Jimmy Johnston, matchmaker of the St. Nicholas A. C., today is awaiting word from the champion as to whether he will accept or not. Joe Shugrue, Jack Britton and Packey McFarland are the men picked by Johnston. As there are no decisions rendered in this city, Ritchie can not lose his title unless he is knocked out.

Johnston is also willing to guarantee Ritchie $7,500 if he will box Freddie Welsh, the English lightweight champion.

WASHBURN AND LEROY QUALIFY FOR GOLF FINALS

NEW YORK, July 19.—Watson M. Washburn and Robert Reroy and Theo. R. Pell and Raymond D. Little will meet this afternoon in the final match of the Round Robin tennis doubles of the Westchester Country Club.

The Washburn-Leroy combination finished at the top of the first division yesterday by defeating Adee and Rawlins by the score of 6-3, 6-3. This victory gave the winners the right to play Pell and Little, leaders of the second division, for the trophies to-day.

GOLF TOURNEYS FOR JUNIORS IS NEEDED MOST

By "Chick" Evans.

CHICAGO, July 19. — The announcement of the age limit tournament at Skokie suggests another thought. There is an increasing number of age-limit tourneys in the golf world about Chicago and a decreasing number of open events for young golfers.

The age-limit events are excellent things, but the lack of junior events is hard upon the young golfers, who can only look forward to "coming of age" and the chance, in consequence, of bringing up future great golfers becomes smaller yearly.

Didn't Know Own Ability.

A player does not know his ability until he enters into competition with other players. In my own case, I did not know that I was a first flighter until my tournament scores disclosed the fact. The big championships, of course, are always open to players with a low handicap, but the field is usually large and the players' abilities closely matched. If the young players can only enter these tournaments he will soon quit competitive golf, for the champion is only made after years and years of hard work.

The beginner in the big tournaments would probably be so far surpassed that he would lose courage and drop out of the game, for the promising young player must be provided with an occasional victory to keep his heart up.

Youngsters Want Competition.

The business man enjoys golf as an exercise, but the youngster has hundreds of ways of getting exercise, and there is a chance that he may desert golf unless he has a better way of showing his skill. It is true that he will be sorry later on, but the average individual lives in the present.

Just now, there seem to be very few young golfers of exceptional promise, and this dearth may, in part, be attributed to lack of competitive opportunities. The championship next week may disclose some new lights, but the chances are that the old, familiar names will be seen at the top of the list of qualifiers and in the last four.

More Tournaments Needed.

There is no doubt we need more tournaments and of the less exclusive types in order to develop players of the first class. The old Westward, Ho, junior tournament was famous in its time; Shokie also had a good one, and there were open events at Chicago Golf, Onwentsia, Midlothian, Edgewater, Exmoor, etc., all of which have been discontinued.

Age-limit events are excellent things, there should be many of them, but I plead for an occasional chance for the youngster.

Wolgast and Dundee Will Clash Sept. 9

LOS ANGELES, July 19.—Tom Jones has finally accepted terms of Promoter McCarey, of the Pacific A. C., and Ad Wolgast and Johnny Dundee are again matched to box at Vernon. September 9 has been set as the day for the battle. Jones has been holding out for a guarantee and a percentage as had been agreed upon for their previous match which was called off because of an injury to the Dutchman's hand. The winner of the Cross-Baldwin bout is to be matched with Joe Rivers at Vernon on Labor Day unless Champion Willie Ritchie will agree to reasonable terms for a bout with the Mexican on that date.

LYNCH FINES TWO CARDINALS.

NEW YORK, July 19.—President Lynch, of the National League, has fined Fielder Cathers and Second Baseman McGee, of the St. Louis club, $25 each, for their fist fight at the Polo Grounds last Thursday.

WILLIE MEEHAN BEAT MANTELL

OAKLAND, CAL., July 19.—Willie Meehan, of San Francisco, won the decision over Frank Mantell, of Pawtucket, R. I., in a 10-round bout here last night.

NOW WHAT WILL CARRIGAN DO? ASK HUB FANS

By A. H. C. Mitchell.

BOSTON, July 19.—The question of the moment seems to be, "How will Bill Carrigan succeed as manager?" It is, of course, easier to ask the question than to answer it. In fact, it is impossible to answer it, because Bill has not had a chance to demonstrate his ability in a managerial capacity. However, it may be said that there is no good reason why he should not make a success of it. Ball players generally agree that Bill has baseball brains. He is a thinker, and as a catcher, he has to be a quick thinker or sit on the bench.

* * *

IT is the opinion of the writer that Wagner would not want the position if it were offered to him. He is perfectly content to be captain of the team. Wagner is really a very shy and diffident man. While he is a star ball player and a splendid captain, it is doubted if he would fit in well as a manager. Doubtless Wagner would say the same thing if he were asked about it.

* * *

WAGNER and Carrigan are the closest of friends and have been ever since they both became members of the squad. They are roommates. They comprised the "Board of Strategy" of the Red Sox organization last season when the team won the pennant. It is more than probable that this combination will resume business again now that Carrigan has been appointed manager. The meetings of the "Board" were discontinued during the world's series last fall, when Carrigan was not allowed to go behind the bat by Stahl, but was sent to the coaching line instead. It is asserted that Stahl was jealous of the publicity accorded the "Board" and decided to show all persons whom it might concern that he was the real, sole and only manager of the team. Of course, this report the writer has no first-hand information, but Stahl's actions in the series would seem to bear out the assertion.

* * *

IT is well that the change in managers is made when it is made. Carrigan will have the opportunity to become accustomed to his new duties. And if things go along all right he will have a chance to shape his team for next year. It is hardly within the range of possibilities for the Red Sox to win the pennant this year. It seems to be too late. But the team can make a good finish if properly handled, and that is the work cut out for Manager Bill. Carrigan has the respect and confidence of his players. Stahl was well liked, for that matter, but when the players realized that he was making wrong moves and not using the best judgment in the handling of his team it, no doubt, had a bad effect on them.

O'TOOLE BETTER, BUT CAN HARDLY WORK THIS YEAR

PITTSBURG, July 19.—Marty O'Toole, the Pirate $22,500 pitcher who was recently operated upon for appendicitis, has left St. Margaret's Hospital and is now at his home in Homewood.

Indications are that it will be many weeks before he takes his regular turn on the rubber again. Baseball men fear he will be of no further use to the team this season.

CARPENTER BESTS KNIGHT.

TURNS DOWN BIG PRICE.

LOS ANGELES, CAL., July 19.—Ed Maier, president of the Venice Coast League Baseball Club, to-day refused an offer of $200,000 for the team and franchise by a syndicate which included John McGraw, of the New York National League Club.

Troops Quell Leith Riots.

LEITH, SCOTLAND, July 19.—In fights here to-day between striking dock workers and soldiers and sailors many persons were badly hurt and thousands of dollars property damage was done.

White Stops Abel in Two Rounds

Kid Young Loses to Lee on Foul

SEVERAL days ago Jack Britton stated that Charley White was the hardest hitting lightweight before the public to-day. Last night White met Jake Abel at the Auditorium-Armory and put him out in the second round of a scheduled ten-round battle. The punches that put Abel away were aleft-hand hook that traveled about two inches, followed by a right cross.

The punches landed by White were the hardest ever struck by a lightweight in this city. And when it is taken into consideration that White weighed only 127 pounds when he stepped into the ring, one can not give White too much praise for his wonderful boxing and punching power.

Never once did the Chicago boy make a misstep. Not a blow did he start that failed to land. He certainly is the best lightweight seen around here and he is a real contender for the lightweight crown.

Charley is only 21 years of age and has stopped such boys as Owen Moran, Johnny Dundee, Joe Thomas twice and Pal Moore twice. All these boys were going goodwhen White met them, but they were no match for the boy from the Windy City.

As for Abel, he never had a chance. When Jake would start a left, Charley would beat him to it. When Abel rushed White would meet him with sharp-shooting uppercuts. In fact, Abel appeared to be but a baby in White's hands. After the fight Abel seemed dumbfounded. He stated that the blow White hit him was the hardest he ever received.

Eddie Hanlon and Charley Lee were the surprises in the other bouts. Hanlon defeated Terry Nelson in an eight round set-to but was fully eight pounds heavier than his Greek opponent. However, Hanlon put up a great bout and deserved much credit for his victory. He floored Nelson for the count of nine in the eighth round and nearly had the Greek out at the finish.

Lee sprung the surprise of the night by winning from Kid Young in six rounds on a foul. The battle was a hummer, full of excitement during the entire distance. Young hit Lee low twice in the sixth and was disqualified after an examination by a physician.

A small crowd witnessed the bouts.

CONNIE MACK PRESENTS OLD UNIFORMS TO INDIANS

PHILADELPHIA, PA., July 19.—The baseball fan frequently wonders what becomes of the old uniforms, bats and gloves discarded by big league clubs. Much of their paraphernalia is used until it is so worn or damaged as to be of no further value, but every club manager has on file applications for outfittings no longer suitable for the major circuits.

Just at present the Indian team of St. Mary's Mission School at Omak, Wash., is proudly playing in uniforms formerly worn by the Athletics when they held the title of world's champions.

Manager Connie Mack was appealed to for some discarded suits early this spring, and in answer to the request forwarded not only uniforms, but gloves, bats and balls as well.

THIRD SACKERS LIKE R. WALLACE MIGHTY SCARCE

ST. LOUIS, MO., July 19.—When the count of 10 is tolled on Rhoderick Wallace as a major league player, then baseball will lose one of its greatest stars. But from present indications, Bob Wallace is going to establish a record for perpetual service in the big arena.

When this season opened the Scot started out on his eighteenth consecutive year. As has been the custom for the past few years, the high boss of the Browns has been trying to find a youthful successor for Wallace. A kid of more speed, a better swatter, a better fielder and a better player all around has been sought.

But this spring has been the same as the others. The recruits have arrived and the recruits have gone, and Bob Wallace remains a member of the Browns, playing the same snappy and sensational infield that he did when he was in his prime.

Some Star at Third.

In the last three games at Sportsman's Park fans have seen Wallace operate at third base. That's the spot where the veteran really became a star when he was with the old Cleveland Spiders and when he came to St. Louis, when the franchises of Cleveland and St. Louis were transferred in 1899.

Suffering with a pair of bad legs and a sore right hip, Wallace has played as spectacularly as any third baseman who has been in the big circle.

The play de luxe executed by Wallace was in a recent conflict with the Yanks. It happened in the fifth inning. Fisher was on second, with one out, when Wolter bounded to Lavan. The shortstop made a high peg to Wallace, trying for Fisher.

No third baseman in the game would have completed the out. Wallace, stretching out, grabbed the high throw with his glove, and, with a quick swing, tagged Fisher as he slid into the bag.

Wallace didn't leap for the wild peg. Had he jumped he never could have made the swing to tag Fisher as he slid into the bag. It was a play that nobody but Wallace could have completed.

They Can't Get His Job.

Wallace started to slow up a few seasons ago. President Hedges, realizing this, instructed scouts to buy all the promising infielders. They did. Within the last few seasons, Roy Hartzell, Eddie Hallinan, Mike Balenti, Harry Shanley, Eddie Daley, Derrill Pratt, Dee Walsh, and now Johnny Lavan have been on the job.

There's a collection of eight trying to push Wallace back to the minors. Hallinan, Daley, Shanley, Walsh, Balenti, Pratt and Hartzell failed. The first four are in the minors, while judgment upon Lavan will be delayed a bit until the rah-rah recruit gets more time to show that he can hit.

Bob Wallace isn't the same spry kid he was a dozen years ago, still fans at Sportman's Park, or even Robison Field have yet to see the athlete who compared with the Scot when he was in his prime.

Wallace isn't ready to quit or go to the minors now. He isn't a regular with the Browns, but several major league owners have put in bids to Hedges for the marvel of marvels.

KEENE HORSES WILL BE SOLD AT GARDEN SEPT. 2

NEW YORK, July 19.—Solomon Hanford, executor of the estate of the late James R. Keene, announces the disposal sale of all horses, the property of James R. Keene, will be held in Madison Square Garden on September 2. Hanford's representatives have been sent to England to bring Colin and Peter Pan back to this country and they will arrive about the middle of August.

BOXING
News of the Ring Game

Willie Ritchie has been receiving so many offers for bouts from the different clubs all over the country that he has decided to inspect them all on August 4. The one that the champion considers the largest he will accept and will be ready to meet the opponent picked for him on Labor Day.

* * *

Packey McFarland, who does not believe in fighting during the hot months, has just made an announcement in Chicago to the effect that he has no intention of donning the mitts again until the second week in September. "I only hope that my next bout will be with Willie Ritchie," said Packey, "for I think that I can wrest his title from him."

* * *

Tommy Burns and his heavyweight, Arthur Pelky, are now in Frisco. Burns is trying to get his protege a match with Gunboat Smith on Labor Day. Pelky's chances of landing the mill, however, appear to be very small, as the lightweights are the big cards on the coast at the present time.

* * *

The Leach Cross-Matty Baldwin bout, scheduled to take place at Los Angeles on July 29, may be called off. McCarey refuses to give Leach more than $3,500 for his end of the purse, while Cross is holding out for $5,000.

* * *

* * *

Tommy Walsh, manager of George "Knockout" Brown, is a busy party these days getting his protege in shape for his engagement with Frank Klaus at Butte, Mont., next month. Brown is doing his training in Chicago. The middleweights are scheduled to go twelve rounds.

* * *

Coast fans are now touting Kid Williams as the bantamweight champion of the world. Tom McCarey handed the latter a belt for trimming Ledoux recently. Williams is to hold the belt until he is defeated by some boy of his weight.

* * *

Charlie White, the Chicago sensation, will make his next fight against Freddie Welch at Winnipeg. The pair are scheduled to meet in a 12-round set-to on August 15.

* * *

The middleweight division has another contender in Tim O'Neil, the Hammond, Ind., scrapper. The latter recently stopped Tom McMahon and is practically matched to meet Jim Clabby at Kenosha, Wis.

LANGFORD GETS MATCH.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 19.—Sam Langford arrived here from Australia Friday and before he went to bed last night Manager Woodman had matched him for a four-round go with big Charley Miller for next Friday night.

SOX BUY A. A. CATCHER.

MINNEAPOLIS, July 19.—Nick Allen, catcher, who last season was a member of the Minneapolis American Association team, has been sold to the Chicago American League club.

CHAPPELLE HAS NO PARTICULAR STAR FEATURE

By O. B. Keeler

NOW that it seems pretty definitely settled that Mr. Lawrence Chappelle, Milwaukee outfielder, cost the Chicago White Sox $18,000, or words to that effect, there may be some small curiosity as to the workings of a bit of baseball machinery that can get such an expensive rating in the big show.

That is to say, what sort of a new prize beauty is this Chappelle person.

Well, Chappy—as he was commonly known in the American Association—sports rather an odd distinctive feature. This is the fact that he hasn't any. He can hit; he can field and throw; he is no dub on the basss. But there is no one handle sticking out of Chappy's A. A. record that you can lay hold on and say, "Here is a wonder."

Chappy's best point probably is his hitting. That unquestionably was what attracted attention in the Callahan camp. Chappy did hit becomingly—in the A. A., which also developed Mr. Gavvy Cravath, of the Phillies. He is a big fellow—strong in the arms and shoulders, and able to take a free swing on a fast ball or a savage chop at a curve. He crowds the plate and worries the pitcher.

In the field he is a good, steady performer. He is a good judge of a fly ball and covers a fair territory. He can throw well, but hasn't the arm of Clarence Walker, of Kansas City. He is no speed demon, like Shelton, of Columbus, either in the field or on the towpath.

If Chappy turns out to be a paying investment for Comiskey, it will be because he is that really valuable thing in baseball—an all-round player.

BILLIKEN TEAM TO BE SHIFTED TO LITTLE ROCK

MONTGOMERY, July 19.—Col. Robert Lee Hedges, president of the St. Louis American League Baseball Club, spent last Tuesday in Little Rock. His trip there was for diplomatic and financial reasons, which concern the ultimate taking over of the Montgomery club of the Southern Association by the St. Louis American League Club, and a shift of base being made from Montgomery to Little Rock.

Will Shift the Franchise.

Montgomery has not been supporting the excellent team which Manager Johnny Dobbs has installed there with any spirit, and Colonel Hedges declared, as late as Monday, that if he did secure the Montgomery club —which he was not seeking—there probably would be a shift of the franchise to some other city.

Inferentially, the Colonel's trip to Little Rock Tuesday was for the specific consideration of this shift, though the taciturnity customary in times of baseball political action was maintained about the American League office.

Necessary as a "Feeder."

With the tremendous competition among major league teams for embryonic talent it is almost a necessity that each major league club have at least one AA minor league club under its control that can turn into the big ring players fairly well developed. That, of course, would be Hedges' patent purpose in financing the Montgomery club.

Colonel Hedges returned from Little Rock Wednesday morning and said his trip there had been merely to receive the assurance of President William M. Kavanaugh, of the Southern League that the players upon whom he has a string on the Montgomery club would be protected for the Browns in the event the Montgomery franchise was sold.

SEVERAL BIG LEAGUE TEAMS PLAN TO TRAIN IN FLORIDA

JACKSONVILLE, July 19.—Next spring several of the big league teams will do their spring training in Florida. The Chicago Cubs are to go to Tampa, the Philadelphia Americans are coming to this city, and Miami is raising a fund of $5,000 to secure the Cincinnati Reds.

The plan being employed at the Magic City to raise the necessary funds is that of having ten men to deposit notes for $500 in one of the banks. The gate receipts for the exhibition games will be used to reemburse these men at the end of the training season.

The Cincinnati team has been mentioned, but the Miami fans are willing to take care of any big league aggregation which will wend its way southward. All they want is a look at a real, live ball player of the highest type.

JOHNSON WILL DECIDE WHITE-SOX-YANKS ROW

DETROIT, MICH., July 19.—President Johnson, of the American League, will decide the question raised by the recent trade between the New York and Chicago American League clubs involving Hal Chase, Rollie Zeider and Borton.

It will not be necessary to take the questions involved in the New York-Chicago trade before the National Commission, according to President Johnson. "As soon as I get the official report of the whole affair, I'll take care of the matter myself," he said.

PHIL CROSS AFTER BRITTON.

LOS ANGELES, CAL., July 19.—Sam Wallach is after McCarey to stage a welterweight elimination contest here between Phil Cross and Jack Britton. If such a program can be carried out the winner would be matched with Packy McFarland in a final contest for the welterweight championship, a belt and title to go to the winner.

Makes Blotchy Skin Free of All Blemish

The Most Obstinate Skin Afflictions and Eruptions from Poisoned Blood Are Completely Cured Quickly.

This Picture Plainly Shows the Wonderful Change Wrought by S. S. S.

It is certainly remarkable how quickly the action of S. S. S., the famous blood purifier, shows itself in the skin. There is one ingredient in S. S. S. which peculiarly stimulates cellular or glandular activity to select from the blood, or from the fine net work of blood vessels in the skin, those elements which it requires for regeneration.

Thus pimples, acne, eczema, lupus, or any other blood condition that attacks the skin or seeks an outlet through the skin is met with the antidotal effect of S. S. S.

Under the influence of S. S. S. this fine net work of blood vessels in the skin is constantly selecting from the blood the nutrition required for healthy tissue and the cause of disease is just as constantly being removed, scattered and rendered harmless.

It is a great mistake to rely upon cathartics to cure pimples or other facial eruptions. Not only do cathartics cause chronic constipation, but they thin the blood of its valuable and essential preservatives.

Acne, or that condition of the skin known as pimples, often becomes so persistent that it will continue to old age if not checked by determined methods. And the same with blackheads. A knowledge of the skin and why it becomes the abiding place of so many eruptive conditions will show how futile it is to squeeze pimples or blackheads or put a coating over the skin with grease, powders or other external applications. To clear your skin and to make it stay so requires a stimulating influence in the corium, or the fine net work of tiny blood vessels below the outer and inner layers of skin.

You will be surprised and delighted at the quick change if you use S. S. S., the famous blood purifier. Its action in the skin is quite sensational. These facts are more fully explained in a book on skin troubles sent by The Swift Specific Co., 195 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga. You will find S. S. S. on sale at all drug stores. Get a bottle to-day and banish all skin afflictions.

When you ask for S. S. S., look out for the common trick of trying to sell you something else. Don't be misled.

Dixie Moguls to Make Changes

Many Will Have New Job in '14

By Percy H. Whiting.

THERE'LL be some managerial changes in the Southern League when next season rolls around. They are beginning to crop out already.

The managers who are bound to stick are Bill Smith, in Atlanta; Carleton Molesworth, at Birmingham, and quite probably, Mike Finn, at Mobile.

Bill Smith has a two-year contract, so he is sure of his berth for another term. Molesworth appears a fixture. Mike Finn can undoubtedly have the Mobile job again if he wants it, but he may not. It's a pretty discouraging job, and on his showing this year, and for many years past, Honorable Mique is entitled to something better.

* * *

Dobbs will go higher—maybe only to the American Association, more probably to the American League.

Charlie Frank will go—nobody knows where—but he will GO. That's a certainty. They are through with him in New Orleans. The Cleveland club owners, who own likewise the Pelican franchise, will send C. Frank sailing. Who will take his place nobody pretends to know. Maybe the Cleveland folks will come out in the open and admit the ownership by putting a Cleveland cast-off in as manager. Possibly they will play it safe by giving the job to Bill Bernhard, who was with Cleveland before he came to the Southern League. Or, maybe, they will play it safer still and put in some guy there who is game to tackle the tremendous task of cleaning up Pelicanville, running off the gamblers and putting the game there back in the position it belongs.

* * *

IN the rest of the cities there is uncertainty. It is to be expected that Elberfeld will be retained by Chattanooga. He has made good. But then, when two such explosive characters as O. B. Andrews, club president, and the Tabasco Kid are hooked up on any business deal, a split is always possible.

Presumably, Bill Schwartz can stick along at Nashville as long as he wants. But he isn't likely to stay a minute longer than it takes him to get a good job elsewhere. Bill is entitled to a better job than he has. He is a live guy.

The same goes for Bill Bernhard. He is hooked up with a dead crowd in a baseballically-speaking dead town. He would be tickled green to get a job somewhere else. He ought to do it. Continued association with that crowd of chronic losers—and losers through no fault of his—is robbing him of his pep, his "ambish," and his reputation. Bill is probably looking around for a job. He is entitled to one, too. He has done wonders with poor backing.

* * *

THIS seems to be a good year for the bench managers. Finn, Dobbs and Smith, who have ceased to be players, and do their hard work from the bench, have been making most of the race. But this does not necessarily prove anything.

As a rule, the only teams in this league which can afford bench managers can afford good ball clubs. There are too many exceptions this year, however, to make that rule worth a hang.

Really the two teams which have made the most marvelous showing—Mobile and Montgomery—are cheap teams. The Atlanta club and the Lookouts are the only high-priced aggregations that have caused a riffle this year.

CLARK JOINS CRACKERS; BRADY GIVEN RELEASE

NEW ORLEANS, July 19.—Pitcher George Clark, the left-hander turned over to Atlanta by Manager Clark Griffith, of the Washington Americans, joined the Crackers here yesterday.

Jim Brady, the veteran right-hander, was given his unconditional release and is now free to sign where he pleases. Every team in the league waived on him.

LOOKOUTS SECURE WALSH, SHORTSTOP, FROM BROWNS

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., July 19. President O. B. Andrews, of the local club, announced to-day that he had secured Shortstop Dee Walsh from the St. Louis American League Club. Walsh will report immediately.

GEO. SUGGS MAY FIGURE IN REDS-PHILLIES TRADE

PHILADELPHIA, July 19.—It was said here this afternoon that the Cincinnati and Philadelphia National League teams were negotiating for an exchange of players. It was reported that Pitcher Suggs, of Cincinnati, might come to Philadelphia in exchange for one of the utility men of the local club.

MORRIS MEETS BENEDICT.

JOPLIN, MO., July 19.—Negotiations have been completed for a fifteen-round bout between Carl Morris, of Sapulpa, Okla., and Al Benedict, of New York, to be fought in Joplin July 25.

LOOKOUTS GET WALSH.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., July 19.—Shortstop "Dee" Walsh, sensational fielder with Mobile last year, has been bought by Chattanooga from the St. Louis Browns.

THOMAS AND DALY MATCHED.

EVANSVILLE, IND., July 19.—Young Joe Thomas, of St. Louis, and Jack Daly, of Indianapolis, both welterweights, who fought here a few weeks ago, have been matched for a fight at McLean, Ky., on Labor Day.

Sports and Such

WELCOME.

How dear to my heart is that line of the races,
When again in the paper each morn it is spied,
And I think of the dough that my trust oft misplaces:
"Public Stung—Favorite Is Disqualified!"

* * *

TY COBB, EVERS AND Zimmerman are the best friends of the umpires. They keep down competition for those jobs.

* * *

FREDDIE WELCH IS going to take enough time away from his work at the typewriter proving that he is lightweight champion of the world, to fight Johnny Dundee, which is an unusual proceeding for a box-fighter. Most of them prefer to stand or fall by their press agents.

* * *

KID WILLIAMS, THE wonderful little Baltimore bantam, is persistently violating what the National Commission would probably call the "ethics" of the profession. He insists on knocking out some guy about once a week.

* * *

* * *

* * *

TOO MUCH.

The magnate spoke of "Ethics"—
It was his latest breath,
For he lay down on the carpet
And laughed himself to death.

* * *

MR. EBBETS TO THE contrary, baseball seems to be reaching the age of sophistication. The owners of the Boston club could see no more reason for keeping Jake Stahl than for treasuring the chopped-up tickets of the world's series games he won for them a few short months ago.

* * *

SPEAKING OF ETHICS, it is only about sixty hours ago that Ban Johnson and President McAleer solemnly avowed that there was not the slightest chance that Stahl would be ousted from the leadership of the world's champions.

* * *

THE CHIEF OBJECTION of the magnates to Ty Cobb is that he does not confine his running wild to the bases only.

* * *

LONG ISLAND MOTORISTS are threatening to appeal to the Game Warden against the practice of "planting" motor cops in artificial cover to nail them.

* * *

STAHL OUT, M'ALEER TO JOHNSON.

* * *

AS WAS EXPECTED, THERE is no sign of a movement toward the extradition of Jack Johnson. The Federal Government can not, in these skittish times, afford to antagonize the large White Hope vote.

IT HAS BEEN DISCOVERED that by jabbing a knife into a golf ball that contains an acid filler that game can be made nearly as interesting as motorcycling or aviation.

* * *

There was a guy in our town
(He had a family, too),
Who let his life insurance lapse,
And bought a sail-canoe.

WHY GET EXCITED OVER the report that the White Sox have paid $15,000 for a minor leaguer? That sum will be made up in two Saturdays by merely those spectators (?) who give up a dollar or so to sit behind a post.

ROLLIE ZEIDER'S FEET ARE wasted in baseball. Any members so useful in sidestepping real work ought to be attached to a box-fight champion.

NEXT EVENT AT DROME WILL BE 26-MILE RACE

THERE was excitement a plenty, all right, at the Atlanta Motordrome last night. But it isn't a simmering circumstance to what will be uncorked Tuesday night in the first Motordrome Marathon ever held in the Dixie States.

This race will go the full 26 miles, which makes it nearly four times as long as any race ever held thus far in Atlanta. Ten riders will start. You can readily realize the possibilities.

The racing last night had whiskers on it.

McNeil had his J. A. P. running like a real motorcycle and he trimmed Richards in the Motordrome Purse in a thrilling contest. In the Atlanta Sweepstakes Richards reversed the decision. The invitation race went to Henry Lewis. In the Handicap Renel one of the men with a lap handicap finished first.

The summary:

MOTORDROME PURSE.
(Heats and Final, Two Miles.)

First Heat—Georges Renel, Billy Shields and Morty Graves; time, 1:28 2-5.

Second Heat—Jock McNeil, George Lockner and Henry Lewis; time, 1:26.

Third Heat—"Tex" Richards, Harry Schwartz, Harry Glenn and Freddie Luther; time, 1:29 4-5.

Final—McNeil, Richards, Renel and Lockner; time, 1:27 2-5.

ATLANTA SWEEPSTAKES.
(Heats, 2 Miles; Final, 3 Miles.)

First Heat—McNeil, Schwartz, Luther and Lewis; time, 1:28.

Second Heat—Richards, Graves and Renel; time, 1:30.

Third Heat—Shields, Lockner and Glenn; time, 1:28.

Final—Richards, McNeil, Shields and Schwartz; time, 2:05.

INVITATION.
(Three Miles.)

Lewis, Graves and Luther; time, 2:13 3-5.

FOUR-MILE HANDICAP.

Renel, Shields, Lockner and McNeil; time, 2:55. The first three had a one-lap advantage over the Scotch rider and also over "Tex" Richards, who was forced out by engine trouble

BASEBALL CONTRACTS.

The word "contract" is derived from the Attic verb "con," meaning to heave the bull. The other half of the word was thrown in merely to disguise its real meaning.

A baseball contract is an agreement, duly signed and witnessed, whereby a helpless youth gives up his right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness until death do us part, or words to that effect. He does this voluntarily, even as the wayfarer gives up his goods and chattels to a perfect stranger who places the muzzle of a gatling gun athwart his heaving bosom.

A youth who has signed a baseball contract is perfectly free to do anything his manager orders. He is also free to resign whenever gives up his goods and chattels to a perfect stranger who places the muzzle of a gatling gun athwart his heaving bosom.

A youth who has signed a baseball contract is perfectly free to do anything his manager orders. He is also free to resign whenever he pleases, but resigning is not popular among athletes, owing to the general prejudice against starving to death.

Under the present system of peonage a ball player is fully as important as an insect. In some instances, as in the case of Tyrus R. Cobb, the insect turns out to be a little busy bee, improving the shining hour, and the magnate gets stung. These magnates never seem to get over the habit of approaching a bee at the wrong end.

The life of the athlete is a merry one. He is wafted hither and yon in cool and refreshing sleeping cars and given free bed and fodder, even as the noble truck horse.

And when he fails to draw the requisite amount of kale at the gate he is handed a swift kick and headed in the direction of the boneyard. It is then and not until then, that his contract becomes valuable, for, if he grows hungry he has the privilege of eating it.

My country, 'tis of thee,
Sweet land of liberty
(So it is said.)
Land where I sign to play
My youthful life away
Forever and a day
To earn my bread!

Land where magnates stand
Together hand in hand
And thus repeat:
"You low-browed gents are free
To work for none but me,
Unless you do, by gee,
You do not eat!"

While we have the profoundest respect for the power of the law, we fear that in order to separate the Cub owner from that $3,000 Artie Hofman will have to call in the aid of a jimmy.

Fielder Jones is one of the few men who can burst into print by offering himself a $25,000 job and then refusing it.

We all have something for which we may be thankful. For instance, Mr. Coulon may congratulate himself on the fact that he was not in the shoes of Mr. Ledoux.

Mr. McAleer is willing to concede that Jake Stahl is the greatest baseball manager in the banking business.

While there is a controversy in the East over Sunday baseball, it is safe to say that neither St. Louis team is in danger of being found guilty of playing ball on Sunday—or on week-days.

Although these baseball dedications are becoming tiresome, the public would gather in vast numbers to dedicate the execution of a few popcorn merchants.

STEIN SONG.

Oh, it's always wet weather
When club owners get together,
(Etc.)

Aside from taking money from a blind man, it is hard to think of a more cruel and unusual act than protesting a game against Frank Chance.

Tom Lynch arises to remark that he thinks well of his umpires. The amazing part of it is that he has seen them at work.

SOMETHING ELSE AGAIN.

Old King Cole is a wonderful soul
His work is a perfect dream.
He makes them whiff till their arms are stiff—
But not on a big league now.

Hub Perdue Has Won 11; Lost 7

Keeping Braves Out of Cellar

ALTHOUGH with a club that is now in sixth place, a good many points under the .500 mark, Hub Perdue, the former Nashville hurler, now with the Boston Braves, has won 11 and lost only 7 games this season. That's a percentage of .632 and is about 200 points ahead of that of his team.

The right-hander has won his last six contests, and has been returned the winner in nine of his last ten starts. That's a pretty good record for any pitcher, and it's no wonder that Johnny McGraw, of the Giants, was so anxious to get the big right-hander.

Perdue has been with the Braves a good many seasons, but it looks as if this would be the first time in his big league career that he will finish above the .500 mark. In order to do this, though, he must keep on pitching the kind of ball he has so far this campaign.

He Is a Giant Tamer.

Probably this is another reason that McGraw would like to get Perdue. Hub has faced the Giants four times this season. He has pitched twenty innings against the National League leaders, and in that time they have counted only seven tallies off him, while he owns two wins over them, and has not been beaten.

Winning six straight, the Braves' right-hander beat the Giants, Phillies, Cardinals, Pirates and the Superbas twice. He has been hit hard in a few of the games, but his teammates always came to the rescue and made more tallies than the other fellows could get off him.

Although he has won eleven and lost only six, Perdue has been hurling none too good ball. He has pitched 134 1-3 innings this campaign and in that time 63 tallies have been scored off him, while the opposition has batted his benders to places unoccupied 126 times. In other words, two hits off him have brought two tallies.

The best game Perdue has pitched was his first of the season, when, on the opening day of the National League season, he shut out the Giants, allowing them only two bingles. He has hurled only two shutouts this season, the other coming against the Pirates, who he let down with four bingles.

Perdue has been working in his regular turn for the Braves this year and it has been his good work that has kept the team from the bottom.

The only teams to beat him this season were the Cardinals, Cubs, Phillies and Superbas. The Cards and Phillies each own two wins over him. Perdue has beaten every club in the league with the exception of the Cubs. His record for the campaign follows:

RIVERS WANTS ANOTHER CRACK AT CHAMPIONSHIP

LOS ANGELES, July 19.—Joe Rivers, the Mexican lightweight, is today anxious to redeem himself in the eyes of the sporting public. Many fans accused Rivers of quitting in his recent fight with Ritchie, and the Mexican is willing to mingle with the champion again in order to wipe out the sting of ridicule.

Rivers will post $5,000 to go as a side bet if Ritchie will agree to battle within three months.

POULTRY, PET AND LIVE STOCK

Plan Now for Next Winter's Food Supply

By JUDGE F. J. MARSHALL.

If you are not already planning, I would advise you to begin now to get some of next winter's food supply for the chickens on the way. While few fowls are ever starved, there are a good many that do not get the good and wholesome variety that they are needing, especially in the cold months, when green stuff is rather scarce. Wheat, oats and corn make the bulk of the food supply for the average farm stock, and it is a good ration, if properly handled and heated up at times, such as parching the corn and browning the oats, etc., but it is the rough-and-ready foodstuff that we want to speak of. As I shall want to speak largely of the root crops, and they need to be kept in a cool place, I shall advise the use of a cellar. Throughout the Northern States, cellars are the rule, rather than the exceptions, under all houses built on the farms. These are usually divided into two compartments, one for the keeping of milk and the other for the storing of vegetables and root crops of various kinds. Upon large farms, where there is a lot of stock kept, the barn is often built upon a side hill with a cellar under a part of it for the storing of stock beets, cabbage and all kinds of vegetables that can be used for the stock in winter. These cellars keep them from freezing in winter and keep them cool in summer so they will not spoil. Of course, they are not put into the cellar until the latter part of the summer. Throughout the South these cellars are a novelty, as a rule. I wish they could become more common. Of course, it is not always practical to build them under the dwelling house after it is built, but one can fix up a very good one by using refuse stone, where it can be had, and digging into the side of a hill, walling with the stone, letting it set into the ground as much as possible to make it cooler; the door, or opening, to be on the low side of the cellar. All of it should be roofed with a good, double or lined roof, something that will keep out the great heat of the sun.

With a root cellar of this kind upon your place, you are in a position to take care of all kinds of good tubers and vegetables of various kinds that might otherwise go to waste and be of no benefit in any way. It is not too late to plant the large sugar or stock beets if the ground is well prepared; thoroughly fine and very deep, so that they can take right hold and grow without difficulty. Then there is the rutabaga turnip that will make a good crop late in the season, which is a good keeper as well as the heavy beet. Small heads of cabbage that are not marketable, when put into small hampers that will admit of a circulation of air, can be kept a long while in the cellar.

The short parts of clover or alfalfa, leaves, etc., should all be saved and stored in a dry place in the barn for the poultry in winter. A lot of large gunny sacks come in very handy for this work, as this stuff can be crowded into these sacks where they are easily handled and taken care of until wanted. With a good, rich piece of ground a nice crop of buckwheat can be raised, if planted right now; it matures quickly and makes a grain that the hens are very fond of late in the fall and winter when fed with corn. Plant a good variety of all the vegetable crops, for there are very few of them that the hens do not relish and are ready to take care of the surplus or refuse parts of them. Onions are another good crop, and one that will keep well in this root cellar, and they are a regular tonic for the hens in winter and are very much relished by them. Take care of every one of them. Let us wake up to the possibilities of these crops and the proper handling of them, as indicated. The taking care of these apparently insignificant things and turning them to account will be largely responsible for the per cent of profit that we will make from our poultry during the coming year. Others take advantage of these things to good account; why not you?

ON account of my health will sell for the bargain price of $4,250 my flour and lumber mills located at Dallas, Ga. This plant cost over $12,000 to build and is one of the best located and most complete and self-supporting plants in the South; equipped with four-stand Richmond City flouring system, two sets corn burrs, all in first-class condition, with plenty of warehouse room and as a custom mill it is almost without opposition. The planing mill is operated from same boilers, with separate engine. The planer house is 39x80 feet, two stories high, good room for cabinet workshop. On account of rapid decline in health I will sell this plant for $4,500, on easy terms; it is nicely located on Southern Railway sidetrack. Trestle for dumping coal at boiler. Shavings carried to boiler by exhaust fan. Address A. M. McMichem, Jr., Owner, Dallas, Ga. 7-17-5

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Permit Is Sought For Whitehall Plant

C. H. Johnson Will Build Manufactory—Small Sales Recorded—Crowd Due at Realty Election.

Signs point to early activity on Whitehall street as a wholesale and manufacturing thoroughfare south of Trinity avenue. Application was made Friday to Building Inspector Ed R. Hays by C. H. Johnson to construct a two-story reinforced concrete building at No. 757 Whitehall, to cost $10,000. May & Wimbish are the contractors. The ground floor dimensions are 75 by 100 feet.

Builders who expected to put wholesale houses on lower Whitehall are holding up somewhat because of the Whitehall regrading project, but the manufacturers seeking railroad frontage farther south are going ahead.

Interesting Deed Given.

John W. White, administrator of the estate of Charles M. White, has given an administrator's deed to W. D. White on an undivided five-sixths interest in valuable property in Atlanta. The figure is $16,600, and for the same amount W. D. White has made a warranty deed to Mrs. J. C. Clay, T. A. and J. M. White, of DeKalb County, and John W. White, Harvey and Katie Baker, the first four of whom get a one-sixth interest each and the latter two one-twelfth each.

The properties consist of the following:

The southwest corner of Linden way and a 10-foot alley 160 feet west of Spring street, 42 1-2 by 93 feet; on Linden way 202 1-2 feet west of Spring street, 42 1-2 by 100; on Spruce street 100 south of Dixie avenue 100 by 195; the northeast corner of Bell and Greene streets, 27 1-2 by 97 1-2; George street 75 feet north of East Fair street, 67 1-2 by 80; Old Wheat street 63 1-2 east of North Boulevard, 33 by 99, and Nos. 20 and 22 Raspberry street, 50 by 70, between Bell and Fort streets.

Pine Street Purchase.

Pierre M. Bealer has sold to Ralph J. McGruder the northeast corner of East Pine and North Jackson streets, 70 by 125, for $6,000. Four thousand was cash. For value received the parcel has been transferred to W. E. Treadwell and S. W. Carson.

West North Avenue Sale.

H. B. Watkins and D. J. Gunter have bought from Charles H. Sanford No. 164 West North avenue, 45 by 163 42 feet west of McAfee street, for $5,000.

Fourteenth Street Transfer.

Deeds have gone to record in the sale May 15 of No. 278 East Fourteenth street to Dowse B. Donaldson from Marvin Conway for $5,000. The lot is 50 by 128 feet and 558 feet west of North Jackson street.

Building Delay Overcome.

Some months ago J. B. Thompson started excavating for three stores on Poplar street due north of the postoffice. Work was delayed, but now Mr. Thompson has been granted a permit to go ahead. The stores will cost $10,000.

Plans for Winnipeg Convention.

At the annual meeting of the Atlanta Real Estate Board Friday evening at 6:30 o'clock at the Cafe Durand some definite plans for attending the Winnipeg convention will be discussed. The convention of the National Association of Real Estate Exchanges will be held July 28, 29 and 30, and twelve members of the local board are expected to go.

Atlanta is to compete for a cup presented by the Chicago Board in a report which Charles P. Glover and others will present. The attending cities will prepare these reports and the winner will be the city making the best showing. The judges have been named to decide the contest.

Return postal cards indicate to the officers of the local board that there will be a large attendance at Friday's dinner, inasmuch as the selection of officers for the ensuing year will be made. Charles P. Glover, retiring president, is expected to come in for encomiums at the hands of his fellow board members. Mr. Glover has served the board faithfully, and the real estate men have not forgotten the happy speech he made at the recent annual banquet.

College Park's Activity.

Spurred on by the struggles and successes of the Decatur Board of Trade and similar organizations, the citizens of College Park have decided to organize a citizens' committee-of-the-whole and to adopt a name suitable to such an organization. In this connection $25 has been offered to the public for a slogan. Anybody in the world, says the secretary of the board, can win $25 by revealing the secret that lies in a name. Suggestions must be in by July 31, because the board wants to get busy in its booster operations.

College Park is a town of 2,700 population, having jumped from 460 in 1900. It is the home of Cox College for women and the Georgia Military Academy. There are three public schools, five churches and plenty of nice places for people to live.

Save Unfortunate Women and Protect Society

That a majority of unfortunate women can be saved and society protected at the same time has been demonstrated beyond the question of a doubt. Therefore, it is essential that a bill now pending in the Georgia Legislature, which has been favorably reported by the Prisons Committee, looking to the construction of a reformatory for vicious women, should become a law, and that the Appropriations Committee, to which the bill has been referred, should report favorably.

The bill calls for an appropriation of $75,000 for the construction and maintenance of the institution, which is small indeed when the welfare of society and the saving of women is taken into consideration.

An exhaustive investigation has been made in many States as to the cause of prostitution of women—low wages, insanitary conditions in factories and stores, etc., have been given as a cause in a great many instances, and a correction of these conditions has been announced as a preventive, which is well and good, but what to do with those we have already is a question that is attracting the attention of good citizens in every State in the Union.

This question has been solved to such an extent that three-fourths of the inmates of the Bedford Reformatory in New York have been saved, while only one-fourth have returned to the old life after a stay of two years in this reformatory.

This method of treating vice has proven so successful that those good men and women who have been giving of their time and money for the cause of fallen women are encouraged, and will continue the work until satisfactory results are obtained.

As to the work and results at Bedford Reformatory, Lyman Abbott writes as follows:

"When a prostitute is brought before a New York judge, he may discharge her, with or without a fine; he may send her to the workhouse for a short term—I believe three months is the maximum—or he may send her to the Bedford Reformatory. The experience of the past indicates that the deterrent power of fear is very ineffective as a cure for crime, yet something may be said for the deterrent power of fear as a preventive, if not as a cure. But a fine or three months in the workhouse has no deterrent power. When the fine is paid or the three months have expired, the girl has no option but to take to the street and resume her vicious career. No home and no factory will or indeed can take her in and give her a chance for a better life. This is just what the Bedford Reformatory does. It brings her into an atmosphere not merely of cleanliness and of industry, but of hopefulness. It puts before the girl an open door. It inspires her with courage to believe that she can enter it if she chooses to do so. It inspires that wish in her, and, by training, gives her some measure of preparation for earning an honest livelihood. While practically every girl treated by the other method goes back to prey upon the community again, the figures show that less than one-quarter of those who are discharged from the Reformatory after a two years' imprisonment resume their vicious occupation."

Is not the establishment of an institution in Georgia that has been proven a success in another State worth trying?

The time to act is NOW. The good women and men of Georgia are giving their time and money in the cause of the unfortunates. If only one-fourth of the women imprisoned there are saved, it is worth the price.

Georgia should REFORM criminals, NOT MAKE THEM.

The City

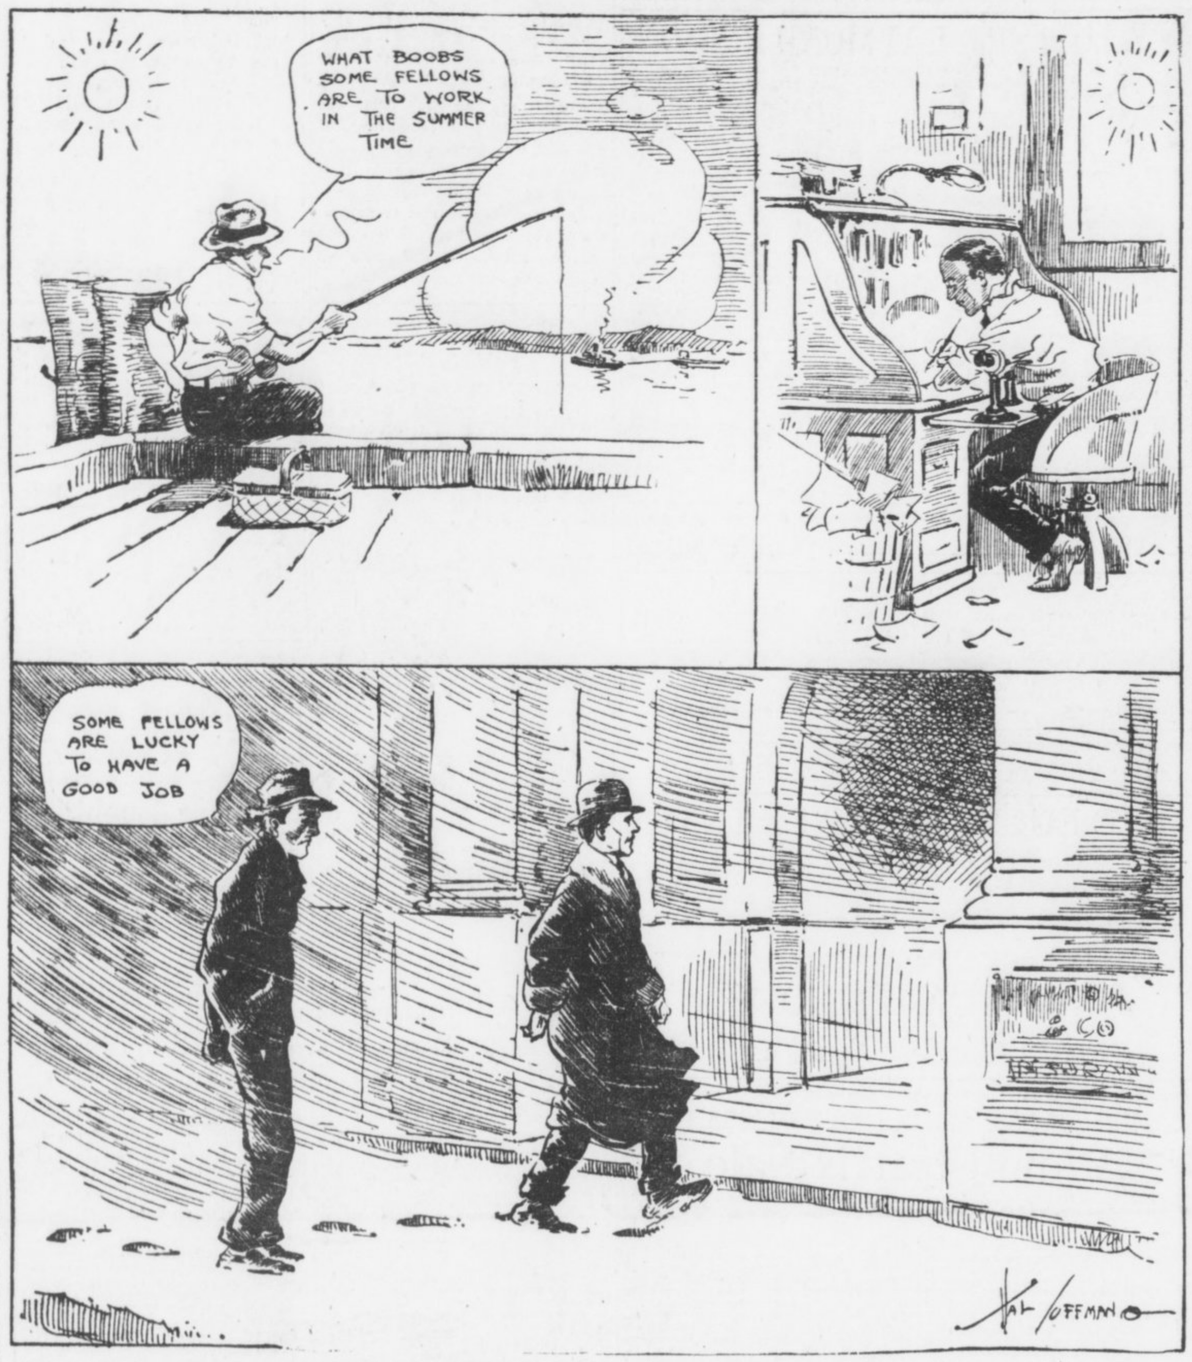
By Gordon Johnstone.

THERE'S a brave world I know called The Great Out-o'-Doors,
Where the wind and the wave lure our feet,
And the green o' the fields meets the wan, tired eyes
With the touch and the kiss o' a lost paradise;
Where the chickadee calls and the wild eagle soars,
And the lark trills his sweetest o' sweet;
But give me the city,
Its pain and its pity,
Its highways and byways o' heat.

Oh, a man may live off on a hilltop alone,
Where the days are a-wing on a song,
But he'll never sound depths that are human and deep
By running away from the herd o' the sheep,
By shutting his heart to the tear and the groan
O' the lovable suffering throng.
So give me the city,
Its grief and its pity,
Its spendthrift, its weak and its strong.

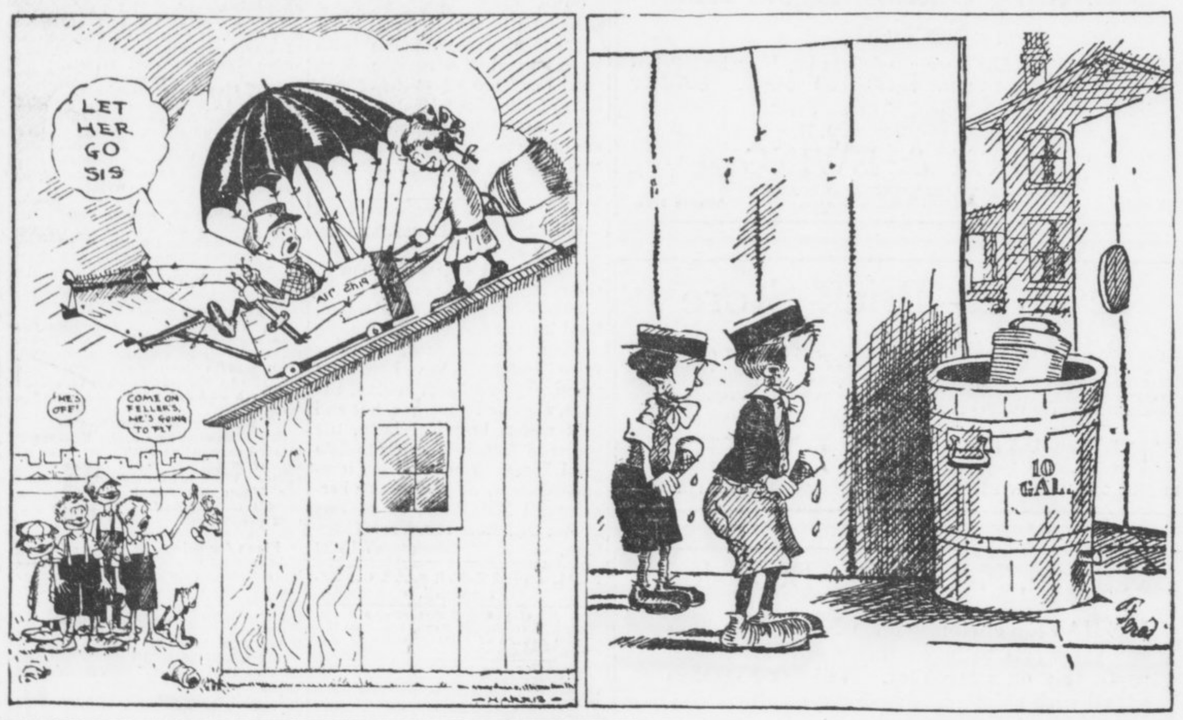
Oh, here is the Kingdom of Fair Worlds to Be
When the peace-riders come silver-shod,
For there isn't a cavil, when all's said and done,
That the Maker in making MEANT ALL TO BE ONE,
As the streams of the nations that merge in one sea
And move at the wind o' His nod.
So hail the World-City,
Its pride and its pity,
That's built on the high road o' God.

The Grasshopper and the Ant



The grasshopper, you know, sings all Summer while the ant toils away laying up a store for the Winter. When the cold pinches, the grasshopper thinks the ant lucky to have plenty of provisions. But a man should know better than to think that it's luck that keeps one in a good job.

The Young Aviator---And the Young Paupers



EDMUND BURKE

By Rev. Thomas B. Gregory

WHEN Edmund Burke died, one hundred and sixteen years ago, July 9, 1797, one of the greatest intellects and finest spirits of which the English-speaking world could boast passed out from the ways of men.

Old Dr. Sam Johnson said: "Burke is such a man that if you met him for the first time in the street, where you were stopped by a drove of oxen, and [illegible] he stepped aside to take shelter but for five minutes, he'd talk to you in such a manner that when you parted you would say, 'This is an extraordinary man.'" When the old doctor was asked for his opinion regarding the authorship of the Letters of Junius, he declared that if Burke was not the author of the famous letters he could not guess who might be, since Burke was the [illegible] who had the genius to write them.

Edmund Burke has often been called a paradox, a contradiction. A conservative of the Conservatives, he was at the same time an ardent progressive. A stanch champion of the ancient order, he was one of the greatest friends of the American revolt against King George. To add to the puzzling situation, while he said Godspeed to the American uprising, he emptied upon the heads of the French revolutionists the vials of his hottest wrath.

The explanation is not far to seek. Burke's ruling passion was for the thing known in these days as "Due Process of Law." Orderliness, in a word. In the American Revolution he saw nothing contrary to that idea; while the French Revolution, as it impressed Burke, was the very apotheosis of anarchy and chaos.

Parental Obligation

Primitive Habit of Looking on Father as Domestic Commissary Is Entirely Wrong--His Qualities and Teachings Necessary to Raise Male Child to Ideal Manhood.

Written For The Georgian

By the Rev. Dr. C. H. Parkhurst

WHAT is the extent of the parental obligation which a father owes to his children? The question deserves consideration because of its close bearing upon the purpose of domestic life, which is to produce children and make them serviceable to the interests of their times.

It has been pointed out that the terms "father" and "feeder" are but variable forms of one and the same word. So understood, the father is merely the one who provisions the family and stands to it in the relation of commissary.

In the more primitive forms of familyhood, when increasing the human breed, rather than improving it, met all recognized requirements, nothing more would naturally be demanded of the father than that the young of the family, like the young of the flock and herd, should be amply supplied with what will sustain life and promote growth. So that the faithful father would simply be he who was the attentive feeder, with no responsibility that looked beyond what the children needed as young and growing animals.

It is one of the features of more finished civilization that in some respects it continues to cherish customs and modes of thinking and feeling inherent in civilization of a more primitive type, but which we should suppose would have been outgrown and left behind with the process of time and the broadening and mellowing of sentiment.

Father as Commissary.

We have an example of this in the rather general continuance to the present time of the primitive habit of looking upon the father as the domestic commissary, and of considering that the obligations with which he has been especially charged have been fulfilled when his children have had furnished them all that is required by their creature necessities—housing, clothing and food.

He is reckoned a dutiful father if he keeps up the house and leaves it to the mother and her proxies to furnish education, morals, religion and all the finer accessories; he to take care of the child as an animal, and she to look after him as a person.

Without raising the question as to whether exclusive maternal influence will suffice for the successful upbringing of a family of girls, it is distinctly insufficient for the development of young masculine nature. There is a certain personal quality inherent in the normal man—but of which the normal woman is destitute—and without which no male child can become a perfectly constituted man; so that if he be submitted exclusively to maternal treatment, he has small chance of achieving an ideal manhood.

Of course, there are mannish women—a species of human freak with which our generation is being made painfully familiar—but freaks play no part in the economy of nature. Mannishness is a cheap counterfeit of manliness and can not render to the boy the office of masculine genuineness.

There is a certain special type of robustness and stability which the lad will gain by social contact with the father which only in rare instances will he acquire from his mother; and the unfortunate feature of our family life at present is that the father, as a rule, is so engaged and engrossed with what lies outside of the real inner life of the home that contact between father and son is reduced to a minimum.

Twofoldness of Parentage.

The twofoldness of parentage answers to the twin energies in nature by which its sterner and gentler forces combine with each other in the production of the finest forms of vegetable and animal life. The idea of duality runs through everything.

Everywhere there is the balancing and the co-operation of complementary forces.

The mother makes her contribution to the developing character of the child, a contribution full of wealth and tenderness, without which the lad, as he comes into mature years, would be destitute of charm and incapable of the finest effects of personality. But underneath the maternally conferred graces of character, and sustaining them, there requires to be a foundation made out of sterner stuff, exactly as the tree is unable to achieve the purposes of its existence by virtue of the foliage with which it is clad or the blossoms by which it is decorated except by the solidity of its anchorage in the firm soil in which it is planted.

Family life as it is maintained in these hurried days of business engrossment is such that fathers and their boys, in hosts of cases, hardly know each other.

The withholding of paternal influence is bound to leave its mark in the one-sided development of the boy; and it does leave its mark.

Masculine Impress Necessary.

The young fellow, as he leaves the warm home nest, commits himself to flight that lacks the sustaining power which can be secured only by the impress upon him of what is definitely and distinctly masculine.

It lies in the order of nature; beauty combined with stamina, grace married into grit.

We might go on and say that boyhood, and therefore manhood, is suffering from the fact that so much of our schoolroom training is furnished by women; but that would carry us into too wide a field.

In all the serious matters of life our only safe way is to keep close to the intentions of nature. The character of the individual depends upon it and so does the quality of civilization.

MEN UNDER SCRUTINY

By THOMAS TAPPER

WHEN the wag of a Western town mailed a letter to the ten principal citizens, saying, "All is discovered," the Ten immediately disappeared and no questions asked.

More men are being watched than ever dream of it.

Not an alarming situation, either, but a hopeful one.

An employer with a grain of common sense wants to intrust his business to capable men and women. In many cases even boys and girls are included.

As no man can run a big business alone, he is forced to find those who can help him.

Necessarily they all come to be tried upon these counts:

1. Loyalty.
2. Dependability.
3. Capacity.

The last, Capacity, shows itself at once. The first morning's work makes it evident that the worker equals 100 per cent of his job or less.

But the other two, Loyalty and Dependability, are NOT to be decided upon the first day or even the first YEAR.

IT TAKES TIME to try out a man's inner character. He must be left alone to the environment and the job until they have put all sorts of tests upon him.

Then someone begins to notice and say: "Well, this man stands the strain all right. When he speaks, he speaks for us; when we want him, he is where he should be."

"If this is the case," says the head of the business, "give him a chance.

"Try him out on something hard to do.

"See if he will weaken when it is put up to him good and strong."

And so on.

So they keep after him, watching his Loyalty and Dependability. Testing it as if it were a steel beam, to find if there be a weak spot in it.

By and by someone says: "This man rings true every time you strike him."

"In that case," the Boss says, "MAKE HIM ONE OF US."

ACID THROWN WHEN WOMEN CLASH

Will Not Indict Conley, Dorsey Declares

CROWD SEES ATTACK ON STREET

Dr. J. Robert Smith, house physician at the Kimball Hotel; Mrs. Smith and Mrs. Ina McNeil, of 299 Forrest avenue, a saleswoman at a downtown store, engaged in a struggle in front of the Parks-Chambers-Hardwick store on Peachtree street Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock, when Mrs. Smith found her husband with Mrs. McNeil.

In the melee Mrs. McNeil received a slight cut on her arm, and Mrs. Smith claims also she gave she a black eye. During the trouble a bottle of what is supposed to have been carbolic acid was thrown by one of the participants, but none of them will admit throwing it. Dr. Smith declares he did not see the acid thrown, and Mrs. Smith will not say whether she threw it or not.

Hundreds See Fray.

The triangular affray was witnessed by hundreds of Peachtree street pedestrians, and created considerable excitement. After the bottle of acid had crashed to the pavement and broken, Dr. Smith hustled his wife around to the corner, while Mrs. McNeil ran into the store and hurried to the second floor. From there she went out on Auburn street and Dr. Smith hurried to the Kimball. He went to his room and changed his light coat, which had acid spots on it, for a blue one. His white trousers also were covered with spots.

Mrs. Smith admits attacking Mrs. McNeil. She says she has several times asked her to keep away from Dr. Smith, and declares she became infuriated when she saw her husband meet Mrs. McNeill downtown to-day.

Says She Trailed Smith.

"Dr. Smith has been running around with Mrs. McNeil for more than a year now," said Mrs. Smith. "We have been separated for several years, but of late the doctor has asked me to return to him. He has offered to buy me an automobile if I would come back, but I told him I would have to test him. I asked him to keep away from Mrs. McNeil, and I've also asked Mrs. McNeil to keep away from Robert.

"I heard several weeks ago that he was going around with her again, and this morning I came to Atlanta from my home in Douglas. I trailed Dr. Smith to-day when he left the Kimball House, and I saw him meet the woman on Edgewood avenue. I followed them until they got in front of the store on Peachtree street, and then I got so mad that I stopped them.

"I admit I hit Mrs. McNeil, and I would do it again. I just got so mad that I walked up and struck her in the face. I gave her a black eye and scratched her on the arm, but she didn't hurt me. I don't know anything about the acid. Dr. Smith didn't do anything while we were fighting but act like he wanted to get away. After the bottle was thrown, he took me out of the place."

Doctor Tells His Story.

Dr. Smith tells an entirely different story from that of his wife. At first he denied that he was mixed up in the affair at all, but at length admitted his connection with it.

"I was walking up Peachtree street to Emmett Hight's office," he said. "Mrs. McNeil was standing in the doorway of the Parke store, and she spoke to me. I raised my hat and bowed, and then someon pushed me. That is all I'll tell."

Before Mrs. McNeil escaped through the rear entrance of the store she was questioned by a policeman. She said she did not want to prosecute, and no arrests have been made.

LEAHY TAKES POST AUGUST 1.

Wade Hampton Leahy, general passenger agent of the Atlanta, Birmingham and Atlantic Railroad will take office August 1, as head of the new bureau of industry and statistics of the Chamber of Commerce.

LATEST NEWS

LAREDO, TEX., July 19.—Two well-known Texas stock men, Jesse Hill and Morton Campbell, together with ten American cowboys and 200 head of cattle, were captured by Mexican rebels near Villadama, and held for $600 pesos ransom.

Hill and Campbell were released to secure the ransom, but the cattle and the cowboys were held.

WASHINGTON, July 19.—Senator Bristow's charge in the Senate that Senator Ashurst has spent $100 of public funds for private telegraph messages to-day was found to have sprung from a quiet investigation the Senate Committee on Contingent Expenses has been making into the use of the telegraph privilege by all members of the Senate.

SEATTLE, WASH., July 19.—As a result of disturbances today following the rioting last night in which sailors on shore leave attacked Socialists and members of the Industrial Workers of the World, Mayor Cotterill to-day suppressed publication of The Times. He assumed charge of the police, stopped street cars, and closed saloons. The town is virtually under martial law.

Mayor Cuts Pigeon Wing to Prove He Has Quit Fighting

Alderman J. H. Harwell, famed for his wit, Saturday asked Mayor Woodward if he ever expected to quit quarreling. Mayor Woodward replied that already he had quit. The bond commission was in session and proof of the change immediately was demanded.

Alderman Harwell patted his hands and kept time with his foot while Mayor Woodward cut a few fine capers across the committee room of the City Hall and the committeemen roared with laughter.

3 Hurt in $15,000 Fire at Waycross

WAYCROSS, July 19.—Three persons were injured, one seriously, and property worth $15,000 was destroyed in an early morning fire on Elizabeth street to-day which destroyed the boarding house operated by W. A. Jones. The boarders escaped in their night clothes.

L. B. Boggs, City Building Inspector, injured a foot; A. C. Monroe, a fireman, was hit on the head by a falling timber, and F. D. Rexler was badly burned about the face and arms.

J. W. Cox, a boarder, lost a $400 diamond ring and $130 in cash. L. B. Harriell, owner of the house, estimates his loss at $5,000, with partial insurance.

Harry Thaw to Sue His Former Lawyer

PITTSBURG, July 19.—Roger O'Mara, trustee for the estate of Harry K. Thaw, bankrupt, was to-day authorized by Referee William R. Blair to begin legal proceedings against Clifford W. Hartridge, in the United States courts or in the State courts of New York, for the recovery of any funds that might be found or which might be due the estate of Thaw.

The purpose of the action is to try to recover the $21,000 which Hartridge, as attorney, is alleged to have claimed for expenses incident to the first trial of Thaw for the murder of Stanford White.

American Team Wins Whack at Davis Cup

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

WIMBLEDON, ENG., July 19.—The American tennis team to-day won the right to play the English team for the Davis trophy.

After defeating the Canadians in the two single matches yesterday, Maurice McLoughlin, of San Francisco, and Harold Hackett, of New York, representing the United States, won from R. B. Powell and B. P. Schwengers, the Canadian runners-up, in the doubles to-day, the scores being 6-3, 6-3, 12-10.

BIG THEFT IN GEORGIA BANK

WASHINGTON, July 19.—Acting Comptroller of the Currency Kane today announced that the First National Bank, of Lafayette, Ga., has been closed by National Bank Examiner Thomas C. Dunlap, with the authority of the board of directors, on account of a large shortage which makes the bank insolvent.

Mr. Kane says he has not received a detailed report of the condition of the bank. Mr. Dunlap has been appointed receiver.

"We do not know how big the defalcation may be," said Mr. Kane, "but our preliminary examination has shown that it is not less than $30,000. This shortage has occurred since May 23, when the bank was last examined. Suspicion on the part of officers of the bank several days ago that a shortage existed caused them to call in Examiner Dunlap. Discovery of the embezzlement resulted.

"In his telegraphic advices to me Mr. Dunlap does not say to whom suspicion attaches. The last statement of the condition of the bank, issued on June 4, showed the bank to be in a proper state. The president of the bank is R. N. Dickerson, and S. A. Hunt, Jr., is cashier."

In a telegram from Mr. Dunlap Mr. Kane is advised that steps have been taken to make an arrest.

Depositors to Lose Little by Failure.

CHATTANOOGA, July 19.—Local bankers stated to-day that the liabilities of the First National Bank, of LaFayette, Ga., which was announced to-day by Acting Comptroller of Currency Kane, at Washington, to have failed, were approximately $240,000, but that depositors would be paid in full with but a slight loss to stockholders, as the assets would prove but slightly less.

An unsuccessful attempt was made this morning to obtain a schedule of the liabilities and assets of the institution. The officials are extremely reticent concerning the cause of the institution's embarrassment.

High Collar Kills Heat-Stricken Man

PITTSBURG, PA., July 19.—Harry D. Wingert, a graduate of Western Reserve College, was overcome by the heat while waiting in an office for a friend, and was strangled to death by a high collar he wore.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., July 19.—The Crackers scored two runs in the first inning of their game with the Pelicans here this afternoon. Timely singles by Agler, Bisland and Alperman helped in putting the two tallies over the pan. The Pels managed to score in the second inning.

Thompson and Brenton were selected to do slab duty. Dunn and Angermier were on the receiving ends.

FIRST INNING.

Agler opened for the Crackers with a clean single to center. Bisland also singled to center and Agler took third. Welchonce hit to Hendrix and was out to Kraft, Agler scored and Bisland took second. Long grounded out, Williams to Kraft, Bisland took third on the out. Alperman lifted a Texas leaguer back of second, Bisland scored and Alperman took second on the throw-in. Smith went out, Brenton to Kraft. THREE HITS, TWO RUNS.

Daley went out, Bisland to Agler. Kyle was called out on strikes. Hendrix popped up to Agler. NO HITS, NO RUNS.

SECOND INNING.

Bailey flied to Daley and on his muff Bailey took second. Dunn popped to Angermier. Thompson grounded to first and was out, Kraft to Brenton, who covered the bag. Bailey went to third on the out. Agler singled past third, Bailey scored and Agler went out trying to make second, Daley to Hendrix. ONE HIT, ONE RUN.

Bagby doubled to right. Kraft lined a Texas leaguer back of second and Bagby scored. Williams fanned. Kraft was out stealing, Dunn to Alperman. Clancy was called out on strikes. TWO HITS, ONE RUN.

Chauffeur Faints At Wheel From Effects of Heat

J. L. Walton, 38 years old, a chauffeur residing at 16 Ashby street, collapsed from effects of the heat while driving his automobile down Peachtree street shortly after noon Saturday.

Walton slid down in his seat, releasing the steering wheel. A pedestrian, passing, noticed the man's plight, and, jumping into the machine, brought it to a stop.

Walton was rushed to the Grady Hospital in a semi-conscious state.

Prompt Arbitration Urged by Trainmen

NEW YORK, July 19.—Prompt action by the United State Senate in confirming the appointees of President Wilson to the special board which is to arbitrate the difficulties between the 100,000 employees of the Eastern railroads and the railway managers were demanded to-day by William G. Lee, president of the Brotherhood of Trainmen, and A. B. Garretson, president of the Order of Railway Conductors.

"Delay or failure to confirm such appointments only makes it more impossible for us to control the situation," they asserted.

30,000 Strikers in Chicago Arbitrate

CHICAGO, July 19.—The two most serious labor difficulties in Chicago this year were cleared to-day when the Building Construction Employers' Association notified the Building Trades Council that the lock-out against 30,000 union men would end Monday, and suburban street car employees went back to work, satisfied that the new syndicate would grant their demands for higher wages.

Building operations amounting to more than $40,0000,000 will be resumed Monday when the building trades lock-out ends." An agreement was signed for a permanent arbitration board.

SOLICITOR IS CERTAIN NO MOVE WILL BE MADE

Attorneys for Defense Want Venire Drawn From Grand Jury Box.

Solicitor Dorsey expressed assurance Saturday afternoon that the Grand Jury never would indict Jim Conley before the trial of Leo M. Frank.

At the same time it became known that attorneys for the defense had made the unusual move of asking that the jurors to pass on the guilt or innocence of Frank be drawn from the Grand Jury box instead of the petit jury box.

"There is no more chance that Jim Conley will be indicted," said the Solicitor, "than that the judge will accede to the remarkable request of the defense for a jury picked from the Grand Jury box."

Has Filed a Protest.

The Solicitor already has filed a protest against the proposed procedure which the defense is said to have suggested.

"It is irregular in the extreme," said the Solicitor. "It never has been done before to my knowledge. I am not informed as to its legality. That matter I have not looked up, but I have protested against it and will fight any such move."

The Solicitor's assurance that no indictment would be brought against Conley was taken to mean that he was in possession of evidence which he believed would be sufficient effectively to deter the jurors from charging the negro with the crime.

Can't Predict "No Bill."

"I can not believe that any Grand Jury, with the knowledge of the facts before it, could bring an indictment against Conley," he said.

Asked if he thought that a "no bill" on the charge of murder would be brought out against the negro, the Solicitor refused to make further comment.

He intimated, however, that he would be present at the hearing and that he would fight every effort to lay the formal charge of murder against Conley.

Crucial Battle Coming.

With the first skirmish won by those in favor of the indictment of Conley, the hottest battle is yet to be waged behind the closed doors of the jury room. The question first will be on whether the grand jurors consider it proper at this time to reopen the investigation whose first chapter resulted in the indictment of Leo M. Frank on the charge of slaying Mary Phagan. Solicitor Dorsey will lay before the body for the first time all of his reasons for desiring a postponement of all further investigation until after the trial of Frank.

Should the solicitor be driven back from this position by the Grand Jury again disregarding his wishes and taking up the investigation, he will be forced to take refuge in the last ditch and make his fight against the indictment of Conley.

With all the weight of evidence which has piled up against the negro, it is regarded as beyond the realm of possibilities that he could persuade the jurors to return a "no bill" against Conley on the charge of murder. Dorsey's one remaining hope at this time would be, it is said, to induce the Grand Jury to waive definite action until after the trial of Frank, when it will be in a position to say whether an indictment shall be drawn against Conley as an accessory after the fact.

MEXICO STEALS UNITED STATES CIPHER CODE

WASHINGTON, July 19.—A copy of the official code of the State Department, containing information worth thousands of dollars to foreign governments, has fallen into the hands of the Mexican Administration.

It is being used to further the ends of the Huerta regime, it was asserted here to-day.

For some months State Department officials have suspected that the Government telegrams from Mexico City have been tampered with, it is declared, but this was not considered important, as all the dispatches were in code, and, therefore, theoretically illegible.

About three weeks ago, however, Government officials here had their first inkling that the Mexicans were obtaining the gist of the dispatches passing between the State Department and Ambassador Wilson.

At first it was suspected that an employee of the department in this city was to blame, but investigation proved this to be impossible. The telegrams were read only by three persons in Washington—the official telegrapher; Robert Rose, confidential secretary to Secretary of State Bryan, and the Secretary of State himself. All of these were above suspicion.

The agents of the almost unknown "secret service" of the State Department then were put on the trail and evidence was obtained that the Government dispatches had been "lifted" from the wires in Mexico and decoded, the information contained therein being transmitted to President Huerta and his Cabinet.

As this information was, at times, highly uncomplimentary to the present Government in Mexico, the matter at once took on an international aspect, and the efforts of the department's agents to discover the "leak" were redoubled, but in vain.

Every effort will be made to locate the copy of the State Department code and destroy it. It would prove of immense value if it fell into the hands of a hostile nation, as it would be impossible to print another code and to distribute it all over the world in less than six months.

Italy Orders Minister Home From Mexico City.

MEXICO CITY, July 19.—It was learned to-day that the Italian Minister to Mexico secretly left here last night for Vera Cruz. Significance is attached to his departure, as it is believed he was urgently ordered to Rome.

This action is doubly impressive on account of the fact that Francis Stronge, the British Minister, has been succeeded by another and will leave here for London in a few days.

Mexico is becoming the storm center of international diplomacy apparently because of the attitude of the United States and the condition of growing anarchy here.

Ambassador Thinks He Will Lose Post.

MEXICO CITY, July 19.—Despite the statement of United States Ambassador Wilson that he expects to return here in his official capacity following his conference at Washington, it was learned to-day that the Ambassador secretly believes his days in officialdom are numbered.

Before his departure he ordered the removal of a costly silver service and other valuables from the United States Embassy to a United States warship at Vera Cruz. The families of some of the American attaches of the embassy have been sent to Vera Cruz for safety.

Interest was aroused by the announcement that the Minister of the Interior is working up a plan to concede a big part of the State of Morelos to 50,000 Japanese colonists.

NEW ENTRY ENLIVENS BIG BEAUTY CONTEST

The beauty contest Saturday caught all eyes that hitherto have evaded its lure with the nomination of Miss Helen Goodrich, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Goodrich, of No. 801 Edgewood avenue, Inman Park.

The whole object of beauty, of course, is to attract the eye. The question of whose face is to adorn the "500,000 Club" booster buttons has come to dominate the talk of the town. Atlanta is famous for her pretty girls.

Miss Goodrich is a graceful, athletic girl with very rich brown hair and deep brown eyes. She is regarded as a fine type of Atlanta girl.

The beauty contest is to continue for some days yet. Who the prettiest girl is to be is as much a puzzle as it was at the beginning. Yet the question must be decided before the "500,000 Club" buttons can be ordered and the club actually organized.

Nominate your candidate at once and send in her photograph.

ARSON AND VAIN POISON RUSE CHARGED

Rooming House Keeper Accuses Boarder as Firebug—Alleges Jealousy and Threats.

Police investigation of the burning of the home of Mrs. A. C. Klapper, at No. 256 East Hunter street, Saturday morning, for which G. A. Vaughn, an employee of the Boston Trading Company and a roomer at the Klapper home, is held on suspicion of being the incendiary, took a new and unexpected turn Saturday afternoon.

Mrs. Klapper, when questioned by Detective Coker, declared that Vaughn tried to poison her one day last week.

"I was sick," Mrs. Klapper said, "and asked Vaughn to bring me a glass of water. He was very nervous when he brought it, and I became suspicious that something was wrong. I looked into the glass, and lying on the bottom were some white powders. I was sure they were poison, and refused to drink the water. Vaughn offered to bring me another glass, but I refused to have it.

Calls Boarder Jealous.

"I am sure Vaughn tried to poison me. He is insanely jealous of me, and he has several times threatened to hurt me and to destroy my property."

Vaughn was taken from his cell and grilled by Detective Coker and Chief of Detectives Lanford for more than an hour Saturday morning, in the hope of getting him to admit some connection with the burning of the Klapper home. He was also asked about Mrs. Klapper's assertion that he tried to poison her.

He admitted taking her the water, but denied that there were any powders in the glass.

Love Affair Alleged.

The police say that Vaughn was in love with Mrs. Klapper, and declare that she admitted that he had paid her attentions for the past year or more.

In addition to the police investigation, State Fire Marshal W. R. Joyner announced Saturday morning that he has started a probe of the fire which destroyed the roof of Mrs. Klapper's home, causing damage of $500. According to the firemen, the blaze started in a closet in Vaughn's room on the second floor.

Vaughn was charged with trying to burn the building by Mrs. Klapper. According to the story she told the police, she quarreled with Vaughn before he went to work this morning, and Vaughn made threats and then went into his room.

Calls House Over Phone.

A few minutes later, she says, he hurried downstairs and went downtown. Half an hour later he called her on the telephone and asked if everything was all right, she says, and one of the other boarders who answered the phone told him the house was on fire. Vaughn immediately left his office and rushed to the scene of the fire. Mrs. Klapper was standing near the door wringing her hands, when Vaughn appeared and started into the house. She intercepted him.

"You've burned my house!" she screamed. "I'll have you arrested."

Mrs. Klapper began struggling with Vaughn, and Call Officer Watson came up. At the request of the woman, who declared she would prefer a formal charge against him, Vaughn was arrested and taken to police headquarters.

Atlantan Asked to Hunt for Grandson

M. R. Russell No. 1 East Fair street, received a letter Saturday morning from his daughter, Mrs. L. E. Martin, of Carrollton, Ga., asking him to make an effort to locate her son, Rufus Martin, who has been missing eleven weeks. Martin, who is 27 years old, is a civil engineer for the Southern Bell Telephone Company, and when last heard of was at Birmingham, Ala. He is six feet one inch tall, has brown hair, blue eyes and weighs 175 pounds.

Cheshire Family's Reunion on July 23

All of the Cheshires, members of one of the oldest families in this section of the Southland, will gather for a big family reunion at Captain H. Cheshire's country home on the Johnson road on July 23. Scores of Cheshires are expected to be present, as the annual reunions have become more and more popular every year.

MERCURY RISES TO 98, HOTTEST OF SUMMER

All heat records for Atlanta this summer were broken Saturday when, at noon, the thermometer of the United States Weather Bureau registered 98 degrees. Indications were that before night the mercury would climb higher.

Thousands of Atlantans sought the parks Saturday for relief from the oppressive heat, and the cooling breeze they found there probably prevented hundreds of prostrations.

On the downtown streets the heat was intense.

Relief is promised Sunday, however, as the weather man states that a thundershower is due here in the early afternoon. More moderate weather will follow for several days, the summer.

Investigation Into Assay Office Likely

WASHINGTON, July 19.—D. P. Kingsford, Superintendent of the New York Assay Office, has placed his resignation in the hands of Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo. The annual examination of the assay office in New York was completed by July 1, and a report of it has been in the hands of Secretary McAdoo for some time.

It is understood a detailed specification is in the hands of Secretary McAdoo dealing with the system of management. This specification does not aim at any person in particular. It is believed a general investigation may follow. The criticism is based on laxity.

Cleveland's 'Golden Rule' in Scrap Heap

CLEVELAND, OHIO, July 19.—The Golden Rule policy in making arrests which made former Chief Kohler famous is a thing of the past. He who now imbibes too freely and obstructs traffic will help enrich the city's coffers instead of being escorted home by a policeman.

Chief Rowe declined to say he has relegated the Golden Rule to the scrap heap, but admits significantly: "One may draw his own conclusions from the figures."

The police blotter figures say there is no Golden Rule.

WANT ADS EASY, SAYS BOY IN CONTEST

"I've got more than a dozen want ads promised me right, in the block where I live, and I want to win one of those bicycles," said the first boy at The Georgian's business office Saturday morning. "I'm going to do it, too.

"I got a want-ad promise at every house I went to except one, and the lady wasn't at home there. It's going to be easy. When does the contest start?"

The youngster—he was just over the 14-year-age limit—was put down in the list of contestants and told to come back Monday morning and receive instructions. There will be quite a gathering at The Georgian's office then, for many young men and women have entered and are going out to win that automobile, a trip to California, the piano or one of the dozens of other prizes offered winners in the contest.

The boy's experience proves how easy it is to get want ads for a paper with a reputation for bringing results. There is no family without a want of some kind. The mere suggestion that an advertisement of a few lines in The American or Georgian will bring that maid or yardboy or sell that discarded furniture usually is met with ready response.

There's no guessing in this contest, either—no grinding day and night in a scheme where you have to invest a dollar or two for a bare chance to win a box of candy. It is a strictly business proposition. Contestants will visit their acquaintances on a business mission and they will accomplish definite results. The winner gets the automobile, the next the piano, and so on down the list.

But remember the contest begins in a few days, and it is absolutely necessary that contestants bring in their nomination blanks, receive their instructions and get ready for active work.

The Want Ad Man would like to see every contestant at his office, No. 7 Edgewood avenue, Monday some time during the day. He has something important to tell them.

All Ready to Launch State Booster Body

Preparations are complete for the reception of delegates in Atlanta July 23 to organize a State Chamber of Commerce. The officials of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce have charge of the affair.

The first session will be held in the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce rooms at 10 o'clock in the morning. Delegates from every board of trade and every chamber of commerce in the State will be on hand.

Profile of S. Pryor Grade Is Prepared

A profile of the permanent grade of South Pryor street is being prepared by the city engineering department preparatory to the regrading of this street. According to the present plans, the street will be widened into a boulevard. The movement for the improvement of South Pryor is the result of several mass meetings and canvasses of property owners within the past few weeks.

FIST FIGHT PUTS 'PEP' IN COURT'S PROCEEDINGS

A "near-fight" between W. A. Graham, a druggist of No. 354 Ponce DeLeon avenue, and B. W. Torrence, an automobile dealer of No. 350 Ponce DeLeon avenue, enlivened the proceedings of Judge Broyles' court Saturday morning.

The fight came during the trial of Graham, against whom Torrence had made two cases. In one Graham was charged with allowing a vicious dog to run at large; in the other he was charged with keeping an obnoxious stable. Graham, while making his statement, declared that Torrence's small son had sat for some hours Friday on the Graham fence.

Then Graham hit at Torrence and Torrence hit at Graham. Torrence missed, but Graham's fist raised a bump on the forehead of Policeman O. R. Jones, who was standing in front of Torrence. Before any more blows could be struck Chief Beavers separated the combatants.

Judge Broyles dismissed the dog case, but fined Graham $5.75 on the charge of maintaining a nuisance. He fined Torrence $5.75 for contempt of court in calling Graham a liar.

High Price Paid for Decatur Store Site

Ground has been broken for a two-story brick building at Decatur on McDonough street, adjoining the City Hall. It will be occupied by George Brothers with a wholesale and retail department store. The building will cost about $6,000.

The sale of the lot for this building set a new price for McDonough street property, the 50 feet bringing $3,000, or $60 per front foot.

Features Planned For Organ Recital

The barcarolle from "Tales of Hoffman" will be one of the features of the free organ concert Sunday afternoon at the Auditorium-Armory. The concert will begin at 4 o'clock under the auspices of the Atlanta Music Festival Association.

Dr. Starnes will render an improvisation on the tune of "My Old Kentucky Home." The concert will open with the brilliant Mozart overture to "Le Nozze di Figaro."

CHIEF UPHELD BY CITY FIRE BOARD

At the meeting of the City Board of Firemasters Friday afternoon Chief Cummings was sustained in his policy of discharging men who do not pay their debts.

A fireman had been discharged and he had complained to Mayor Woodward. The matter was brought to the attention of the board, but the fireman did not appear to defend himself.

The board decided to recommend to Council that the fire engine lot on Bellwood avenue in the Fifth Ward be exchanged for a lot on Marietta street.

The Marietta street lot is valued at $4,000, while the Bellwood avenue lot is worth only $2,500.

Bell House Boys Hold Annual 'Cue At Club Grounds

The original Bell House boys, past and present, took the Cold Springs Club grounds by storm Saturday in their second annual barbecue. The fun began very early, and according to an "official" tip, it will last well along toward the wee sma' hours of Sunday morn.

Mrs. Emma Bell, the official head of the Bell House, chaperoned the party, but, unlike most chaperons, she didn't have the least bit of trouble handling the boys, for they are big enough and old enough to take care of themselves.

A hasty count Saturday morning at the special trolley cars left Alabama and Forsyth streets indicated a crowd of

DORSEY OPPOSES INDICTING CONLEY

to which he has confessed, or as the actual murderer.

Dorsey Refuses to Comply.

The Solicitor's attitude in the matter plainly was shown by his statement when Foreman Beattie went to him Friday seeking to have him call the meeting. Dorsey flatly refused and said:

"The meeting's only purpose will be to exploit the evidence and embarrass the State, and I hope the Grand Jury when it meets will decide to leave the matter alone.

"The indictment of Conley at this time will be a useless procedure that will not stop the trial of Frank. It will only have a mild but undesirable effect on the State's case.

"Conley is in jail and is going to stay there for some time. He is where the authorities can put their hands on him, and he can be indicted much more properly after the Frank case has been disposed of than before, and by the delay there is no danger of a miscarriage of justice."

The Solicitor's position is attacked as palpably unfair by those who have been working to bring about the indictment of the negro. Dorsey would have the testimony of the negro accredited as that of any free and trustworthy citizen, while those opposing him declare it should be taken in the light of that of a possible murderer who is endeavoring to shift the blame on another's shoulders, they say.

They add that the evidence against Conley is far more direct and damning than any ever brought against Frank. They charge on this account, that Conley has been protected and "coddled" when he should have been placed on the same basis as the other suspect in the case and should go before the jury in that aspect.

General denials were entered Saturday to the story published Friday that the Pinkertons had changed their attitude in the murder mystery and were convinced of the innocence of Frank. Chief of Detectives Lanford declared that Harry Scott had reaffirmed his belief in the guilt of Frank and the innocence of Conley, except as accessory after the fact.

"Even, though Jim Conley should be indicted," Chief of Detectives Newport Lanford declared Saturday afternoon, "it will not hurt the State's case against Leo Frank. The evidence obtained against Frank is conclusive. We can convict him without the evidence of Jim Conley."

RETURN OF LUMB IS FOUGHT BY DEFENSE

That a strenuous fight is on between the attorneys for Mrs. Mary Belle Crawford and the heirs-at-law of the late Joshua B. Crawford to prevent the return to Georgia of Fred Lumb, the New York barber named as an accomplice of Mrs. Crawford in the alleged plot to poison her husband, became known Saturday morning.

Objections to the issuance of extradition papers before the indictment of Lumb have been filed with Governor Slaton by Attorney Reuben Arnold for Mrs. Crawford, and with Governor Sulzer of New York.

Attorney J. S. James, attorney for the Crawford heirs-at-law, declared Saturday morning that his future course in regard to bringing Lumb to Atlanta, in case he is apprehended by the New York police, would be governed by the results of an interview he expects to have with Governor Slaton Monday.

He intimated that should Governor Slaton refuse to issue extradition papers for Lumb before the indictment efforts would be made to have Lumb indicted at once as an accomplice.

He declared Governor Slaton would have to issue the papers if Lumb were under indictment.

"Despite Mrs. Crawford's assertions that she desires the return of Lumb, her attorneys are fighting us in our effort to bring him back," said James. "Colonel Arnold has filed a letter with Governor Slaton objecting to the issuance of the papers, and they also have filed objections with the Governor of New York."

5 Knoxville Men To Boost Exhibit

Five leading citizens of Knoxville, Tenn., will visit Atlanta next week to urge upon manufacturers, business men and the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce to participate in the National Conservation Exposition to be held in Knoxville soon.

The men who will visit Atlanta are T. Asbury Wright, William Goodman, G. L. Price, W. S. Shields and Colonel C. H. Harvey.

The Exposition, it is said, will be one of the largest manufacturing displays of Southern products in recent years.

Lad Wounded as He Robs Gum Machine

Will Davis, a 14-year-old negro, was wounded in the heel early Saturday morning when discovered by Plainclothesmen Allen and Gresham robbing a chewing gum slot machine at Houston and Hilliard streets. Two other negroes who were helping Davis escaped.

Woman's Body Tied To Fence Near Park

CHICAGO, July 19.—Finding of the body of a young and pretty woman, tied to the top of a rail fence near Finley Park, 15 miles from Chicago, presented a mystery to Coroner Hoffman to-day.

The woman was tied to the fence by a piece of white cloth, evidently torn from an underskirt and wrapped about her neck.

OBITUARY

The funeral of Leonard Kenny, 2-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. L. H. Kenny, of No. 101 Poplar street, who died at the residence at 1 o'clock Friday afternoon, was held from the chapel of Greenberg & Bond at 10 o'clock Saturday morning. Interment was at Westview.

J. R. Hunter, of the faculty of Georgia Tech, died at a local sanitarium at 4 o'clock Friday afternoon. He was 49 years old, is survived by a wife and had only recently come to Atlanta from Chattanooga. The body is at Patterson's chapel, pending the arrival of relatives.

The body of Mrs. Martha J. Roop, who died at a local sanitarium Friday, was sent to her home in Carrollton, Ga., Saturday for funeral and interment. Mrs. Roop was 68 years old, and is survived by her husband, the Rev. W. W. Roop, and one daughter, Mrs. Samuel Copeland, of Bremen, Ga.

The body of John C. Fultz, who died at the residence, No. 127 Pearl street, Friday afternoon, will be sent to Marietta Sunday afternoon for funeral and interment. Mr. Fultz was 71 years old and is survived by a wife, one daughter, Mrs. W. M. Edwards, and two sisters, Mrs. C. Monroe and Mrs. Worth Pace.

The body of Mrs. J. A. Dodgen, who died at the residence, No. 329 East Georgia avenue, Friday afternoon at 5 o'clock, will be sent Sunday morning to Alpharetta, Ga., for funeral and interment. Mrs. Dodgen was 61 years old and the wife of J. A. Dodgen, a well-known lawyer. Besides her husband, she is survived by three sons, B. L., C. M. and J. M. Dodgen, the latter an attorney also, and three daughters, Misses Flossie, Alice and Alma.

'BEAR CAT RAG' IS FROWNED UPON BY THIS DAINTY ATLANTA DANCER

Miss Theodora Aline Warfield.

Which do you prefer—to do the "bear" or a classical dance?

An Atlanta girl who prefers classical dancing to the more modern rag is rather unusual, yet pretty Miss Theodora Aline Warfield, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William C. Warfield, of No. 29 West North avenue, declares that she can not see why people dance the graceless modern dances, when the Grecian and other classical dances are far more artistic and almost as easy to learn.

That is, they are easy to learn if you have talent.

Since Miss Warfield was two years old she has been dancing, and always she is evolving new steps. Her dancing is not like Isadora Duncan's or Maude Allan's, or any of the famous classical dancers. It is entirely her own, and her friends declare it is the prettiest and most graceful possible.

Miss Warfield has appeared on the stage in Atlanta. She was the premiere danseuse at the past two performances of the Kirmess, and won great applause. She was presented with a beautiful silver-incrusted vase by the Elks Lodge, in recognition of their appreciation of her talent. At various private entertainments Miss Warfield has danced also, and has always won admiration and praise by the beauty and grace of her dancing.

Every one who has seen her dance has urged that she go on the stage, and her parents intend to prepare her for the opera. In addition to being a dancer of rare grace and beauty, she has an attractive voice, and it is being cultivated with her dancing.

Two years ago Miss Warfield sang in Atlanta with Geraldine Farrar, and Miss Farrar was enthusiastic in her praise. After finishing a course at a school here, Miss Warfield will go abroad to study languages and advanced artistic dancing. A wonderful career is predicted for her. There is no doubt that she will add her name to Atlanta's already brilliant Hall of Fame.

CUMMINS SAYS TARIFF WILL FAIL

WASHINGTON, July 19.—Progressive Republican opposition to the Underwood-Simmons tariff bill was expressed to-day in the Senate by Senator Cummins, of Iowa, who condemned many of its provisions.

The Senator announced himself in favor of the income tax amendment, substantially as written by the Democrats, "if it could not be changed to better suit the exigencies of the situation."

Senator Cummins criticised President Wilson for bringing to bear the "coerce" executive influence upon the framers of the measure, and he also was sharp in his criticisms of "legislation by secret caucus."

"The tariff will increase importation and diminish home production of a great many things, and will force into idleness many workingmen," Cummins asserted. "It puts the products of agriculture, in the main, on the free list. It probably is true some of these commodities need no protective duty, but many of them do, and to treat the farmer as an outlaw is manifestly wrong.

"Second, the bill proceeds on the theory that the manufacturer of the finished product is entitled to raw material free of duty. This is all very well if the raw material can be produced in this country as cheaply as abroad, but if that costs more here to produce it, then the raw material of the manufacturer should be dutiable.

"Its duties are, upon many commodities, destructively inadequate, and the lesser industries of the country will suffer."

AUGUSTA, GA., July 19.—All Augusta is talking to-day of the arrest of Miss Edith Anderson, 1215 Jones street, Friday afternoon, because she appeared on Broad street, the main thoroughfare of the city, clad in a "transparent skirt," a dainty, filmy creation of lace through which twinkled stockings of a vivid green.

Miss Anderson appeared just as the afternoon dress parade was at its height. A stolid, unemotional copper stood swinging his stick on a busy corner of Broad street when Miss Anderson appeared. The copper saw the crowd coming, he saw men fighting small boys for places in the forefront, and he looked up.

"Why—why!" he stammered, mopping his fevered face. "Why—er—why—because—er—dawgone it!" He pointed downward with his nightstick, "You can't wear things like that in Augusty."

First Auto Funeral Is Held in Atlanta

The first automobile funeral known to Georgia was conducted Friday afternoon by the Barclay & Brandon Company.

The company's new limousine hearse was used. This hearse is a magnificent model in French gray with hand-carved decorations. It cost $7,000 and represents the latest improvement in funeral directorship.

Air Map of World, Geographers' Plan

WASHINGTON, July 19.—Famous geographers from many countries soon are to meet to prepare an aeronautical map of the entire world.

That announcement was made by Rear Admiral Robert E. Peary in a report to the National Geographic Society on the results accomplished at the Tenth International Geographic Conference in Rome, which he attended as one of the American delegates.

Pittsburg Bids the Slit Skirt Welcome

PITTSBURG, July 19.—"Why should I tell Pittsburg women what to wear? What do I know about it? Not on your life. Will I order any arrests? Well, I should say not! Are you trying to get me into trouble?"

With these words John P. Dailey, Director of the Department of Public Safety, disposed of the woman's dress question for Pittsburg.

"I think, for my part, the women are dressing all right," said the Director. "They know what they want to wear, and I believe in letting them wear it. At any rate, they'll do it whether we like it or not."

GERMAN AVIATOR KILLED.

REVOLT IN CHINA SPLITS NATION; WAR NEAR

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

CANTON, CHINA, July 19.—A complete severance of political relations between Northern and Southern China was proclaimed here to-day. Business is at a standstill. Revolutionary leaders are threatening to seize the Government buildings.

A British torpedo boat is proceeding to this port from Hong Kong to protect British lives and interests.

The Governor General of Kwang Tung Province has proclaimed his territory independent of the Pekin Government and declares in the same proclamation that the Provincial Council has nominated him commander-in-chief of the revolutionary army.

U. S. Aiding Revolt?

That United States diplomacy as well as Japanese is supporting the revolutionaries trying to overthrow President Yuan Shih Kai was claimed by leaders of the Southern rebellion.

The Pekin Government, headed by President Yuan, is receiving the support of England, Germany and France. Developments indicate that the question of the proposed $100,000,000 Chinese loan enters into the situation. England, Germany and France subscribed pro rata shares to the loan, but the United States financiers were not allowed by their Government to participate.

Dr. Sun Yat Sen, one of the leaders in the uprising which overthrew the Manchu Dynasty, and the first provisional President of China, and Dr. Wu Ting-fang, former Chinese Minister to the United States, are believed to be lukewarm to the rebel cause.

Rebels Lose a Battle.

Dr. Sun has left for Nanking, the provisional republican capital, where he may make open declaration of his loyalty to the southerners.

Wu Chang remains loyal, but revolutionary sentiment is fast growing there.

Four thousand rebels were decisively defeated by 2,000 Government forces at Hsu-Chow-Fu, north of Kiang Su.

New Railway Mail Head Begins Duties

Henry M. Robinson, recently appointed Superintendent of Railway Mail Service, suceeding George W. Pepper, arrived in Atlanta Friday and visited the local railway mail bureau in the Federal Building Saturday morning, where he and Mr. Pepper completed the transfer of the Atlanta division.

Twenty-five years ago Mr. Robinson was a resident of Atlanta. Then he was a postal clerk between Atlanta and Charlotte. Later he became superintendent of the New Orleans division.

CHARLESTON July 19.—W. S. Luckey, a Curtiss flier from New York city, who is spending a week at the Isle of Palms on Friday flew in a hydro-aeroplane from the Isle of Palms to Charleston, a distance of about 12 miles, by water, in 8 minutes, a speed of 90 miles an hour.

Luckey also skimmed across the harbor with his main float partly submerged at a rate of 45 miles an hour.

Turner to Attend Electrical Meeting

R. C. Turner, City Electrician, will attend the convention of the International Association of Municipal Electricians at Watertown, N. Y., August 19 to 22.

"Municipal Regulation" will be the subject of an address delivered by Atlanta's electrical expert while there.

The SOCIAL WORLD

The country clubs around Atlanta are preparing for a happy observance of the week-end, the intense heat of the week having made the cool, delightful club houses more popular than ever.

One hundred guests are expected to attend the dinner dance at the Piedmont Driving Club Saturday evening. Dinner will be served on the terrace, and there will be a charming decoration of summer flowers. The ballroom will be open for dancing, and many others, in addition to those who go out for dinner, will motor out to spend the evening on the breeze-swept terrace.

The country club at East Lake will also have its usual week-end dinner dance. During the afternoon the tennis court and golf links are filled with those members who enjoy athletic sports, and later dinner will be served on the piazza overlooking the lake. The usual number of young people will go out for the dance.

Mrs. Ison Entertains.

Mrs. R. D. Ison entertained at bridge recently for Mrs. J. A. R. King, of Augusta, and Miss Virginia Williamson, of Highland, Ga. The prizes included a hand-painted olive dish and embroidered handkerchiefs. The guests included Misses Marie Watson, Minnie Jordan, Mrs. Spurgeon King, Mrs. J. C. Malsby, Mrs. Charles Dennis, Mrs. Frank Ison, Mrs. W. E. Raley, Mrs. J. W. Watson, Mrs. Fred Sutton, Mrs. James G. Butler, Mrs. R. A. Williams, Mrs. J. L. Watson, Mrs. J. R. Regnas, Mrs. James G. Ison, Mrs. Medlin, Mrs. A. R. King, Mrs. Robert Richardson and Mrs. J. H. Carl.

For Miss Robbins.

Miss Theodora Arline Warfield gave a swimming party and luncheon Friday at the Capital City Country Club in honor of Miss Dorothy Robbins, of Birmingham, Mrs. J. P. B. Allen's guest. The guests included Misses Marie Cobb, Frances Bailey, Helen Wilson, Lyndall Haddon, Teddy Thurmond, of New York; Mary Griffith, Helen Atkisson and Lucile Atkisson. Mrs. W. C. Warfield and Mrs. J. P. B. Allen were chaperones.

For Miss Weisiger.

Mrs. David J. Weisiger entertained at an informal tea Friday at her home on the Boulevard, in honor of her niece, Miss Margaret Beverly Weisiger, of Richmond., Va.

Mrs. Weisiger was assisted in entertaining by her daughter, Mrs. O. S. Lair, and Mrs. Cliff Key. Tea was served in the dining room by Mrs. Robert P. Miam and the punch bowl on the porch was presided over by Miss Virginia Parks and Miss Elise Brown.

Port-Frisch.

Mr. and Mrs. A. Port announce the marriage of their daughter, Minnie Janet, to Mr. Jesse Marcus Frisch, the ceremony having taken place Tuesday evening, July 15, at 6 o'clock at home, No. 149 Glennwood avenue.

Moonlight Picnic Given.

A moonlight picnic was given to Miss Marcia Whitaker by Miss Dorris Murray Friday. Those present were Misses Marcia Whitaker, Nina Mitchel, Ruth Knox, Cleo Whitaker, Dorris Murray, Nellie Apperson, Murray Adams and Lois Cook, of Columbus; Messrs. Paul Lee, Arthur Lynch, Randall Satterwhite, Dr. C. E. Jones, James Mangum, Park Brown, Ralph Dyer and John Whitaker.

The party was chaperoned by Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Crabtree and Mr. and Mrs. H. D. Adams.

Anniversary Dinner.

A dinner party was given Friday evening at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Howard McCutcheon, the occasion celebrating the wedding anniversaries of Mr. and Mrs. McCutcheon and Mr. and Mrs. Charles T. Mabry. Pink roses adorned the table, and a color scheme of green and white was carried out in the decorations of the other apartments.

After dinner auction bridge was played. The guests included Mr. and Mrs. Henry Allen Manning, Mr. and Mrs. T. H. Williams, Mr. and Mrs. Earle Zurline, Mr. and Mrs. D. J. Clarke, Mr. and Mrs. Cordin, Mr. William D. Ellington and Mr. Robert Winn.

Suffrage Discussion.

"To Vote or Not to Vote" is the title of a discussion to be held at Taft Hall Tuesday evening next at 8 o'clock, when the question of woman's suffrage will be discussed, pro and con. Mrs. William Lawson Peel, who is known to be entirely neutral, has kindly consented to preside at the meeting and a number of the most prominent men and women speakers in Georgia will take part.

There will be no formal program, but all will be heard who so desire. Inasmuch as this is one of the leading questions of the day, everybody is interested in the forthcoming discussion, especially as many people have not yet formed an opinion on the matter and will welcome a discussion whereby both sides will be presented.

On account of the limited capacity of the hall and the very large attendance expected, an admission fee of 25 cents will be charged.

Mrs. Allen Entertains.

A series of parties are being given for Miss Leila Daley, of Texarkana, Tex., and Miss Jennie Allen, of Greenville, S. C. A bridge party was tendered them Friday by Mrs. Harry Lee Allen. Yellow flowers were decorations, and a salad course was served.

Guests were Mrs. Neal Spencer, Mrs. Glynn Mickel, Mrs. A. J. Wilson, Mrs. John Hagony, Mrs. Clyde Stutlesman, Mrs. Sidney Johnson, Mrs. Youngener, Mrs. Harold Hinton, Mrs. Jackson, Mrs. Hal Stevens, Mrs. J. C. Peary, Mrs. R. Todd, Mrs. J. Prince Coyne, Mrs. James Russell Gresham, Mrs. Irby Bagwell, Misses Nora Ingram, Ellen Lyon and Ruth Gresham.

Parties for Visitors.

Mrs. A. J. Wilson entertained five tables of bridge Friday afternoon for Mrs. John Hagoney, of San Diego, Cal., and for Miss Leila Daley, of San Diego. Mrs. John Russell Gresham will give them a bridge party Tuesday, and Mrs. J. T. Peavy will entertain them on Thursday.

Freeman-McMichael.

The marriage of Miss Leona Freeman to Mr. O. B. McMichael took place Saturday afternoon, July 19, at Wesley Memorial Church, the Rev. W. R. Hendrix officiating.

Immediately after the ceremony the happy couple left for the Isle of Palms and other points of interest. After August 1 they will be at home in Atlanta.

PERSONALS.

Master Frank Norris, who has been ill, is better.

Miss Marie Dunlap left Friday to visit friends in Oklahoma City.

Mr. and Mrs. St. Elmo Massengale returned yesterday from Atlantic City and New York.

Mr. J. J. Logue has returned home, after submitting to an operation on his eyes at the Georgian Hospital.

Miss Annie Clyde Wright left Saturday for a trip East, visiting in Niagara, New York and Philadelphia before returning home.

Miss Marion Mullins, of Fort Worth, Texas, is the guest of Miss Jennie Knox for several days on her way home from the Kappa Delta convention at Asheville.

Miss Mary Butler will return home Sunday from Atlantic Beach, Fla. Miss Elizabeth Butler, who has been visiting Mrs. A. H. King in Jacksonville, returns Sunday also.

NEW APARTMENT HOUSE PROJECTS ON SIDEWALK

City Could Force Alteration of Ponce DeLeon's Front—Builders May Have to Pay $42,000.

An innocent little complaint made to Building Inspector Hays has brought about a complicated situation in the construction of the $500,000 Ponce DeLeon Apartments, at the southeast corner of Peachtree street and Ponce DeLeon avenue, and just south of the Georgian Terrace.

It has been found that the building has encroached four inches on the sidewalk space belonging to the city. The city has the right to demand that the ten-story building be made to conform to the line. This would necessitate a great deal of destruction and expense.

A probable solution lies in the fact that the city has the right to sell or give the strip to the builders.

Council To Be Petitioned.

Albert Howell, Jr., head of the Fulton Properties Company, which concern controls the Ponce DeLeon, was acquainted with the situation by the Building Inspector, and he declared that he would petition Council to let the building stand.

Last week C. J. Bowen, assistant building inspector, had the engineer survey the ground to determine whether or not a window on the Peachtree side projected 14 inches over the sidewalk in violation of the building code. It did, and a case was made. It was found also that through some mistake four inches of sidewalk had been taken for the building proper. The contractor has been instructed to make the alteration as to the window.

May Cost $42,000.

Mr. Howell expressed the belief that the city would let the building stand, and he is expected to have a resolution to this effect introduced soon.

Since there is a frontage of about 35 feet on Peachtree, the encroachment is over 11 2-3 square feet. Frontage at this point is worth about $1,200 for corners, which would figure about $17 a square foot.

The company owes the city by this calculation, therefore, about $192. S ould the city decide to ignore the depth, the price at $1,200 would be about $42,000.

An Old Maid's Romance

TODAY'S COMPLETE SHORT STORY.

I.

The houses were tall and bleak and fronted with grim stucco, all in that manner which our forefathers found so desirable. Once they had been expensive houses, tenanted by people of wealth and social standing, but now The Gables, halfway down the road, struck the only firm note of resistance to the general air of decaying prosperity. Curtains always hung primly in its casements; the frills of the muslin window blinds always seemed newly starched, and the steps of the front door were always a marvel of whiteness.

People wondered why Miss Margaret Weston, who lived there in state with servants, did not move out of a locality which was deteriorating so rapidly. Some bolder spirits even asked her why she stayed on at The Gables instead of letting it, and departing to reside in a street more befitting her quality. To these Miss Weston answered gently that she had lived in The Gables most of her life, and had no desire to change now.

Miss Weston always answered everybody gently, for gentleness was the essence of her being. The neighbors referred to her as an "old maid," but, even as they used the phrase, they knew it was not the exact term by which to describe her. There was none of that sharpness about her which the epithet of "old maid" habitually implies.

Long ago, when she was a little orphan girl of 7, her uncle had adopted her and brought her to live in Penthorn Road. But now both her uncle and his wife were dead, and Miss Weston was left alone in the old home, save for the servants.

Rather a pitiful romance was Miss Weston's. It was simply the old story of the man who had not dared enough, the man who had leaped to false conclusions and had gone out of her life, to leave her alone.

Sometimes, when she tenderly took a packet of letters out of her bureau, there was one particular missive which she had not the heart to reread, for it was too sacred with poignant memories.

Her Dream.

But always she remembered the night when it was handed to her. She had only to close her eyes again to visualize the scene completely.

She saw herself, quite young, sitting before the fire on an autumn evening. She was trying to understand something. Why had her cousin, Harry Dutton, gone off to the Colonies without a word of farewell to her? He had made quite a sudden departure, though he had told her that he was going. And yet he had never said good-bye to her.

And while she was seeking to understand his attitude the small son of a neighbor had come into the room shamefacedly.

"I say, Miss Weston," he blurted out, "I'm awfully sorry, but I clean forgot."

"Forgot what?" she asked, puzzled.

"Why, this letter. Mr. Dutton gave it to me to give to you. He wanted to make sure you'd get it the same evening. I've just remembered it."

"When did he give it to you?" she whispered.

"Last Thursday. And I'm awfully sorry——"

"Last Thursday," she said to herself, when the small boy escaped from the room in relief. "That was two days before he sailed!"

She opened the letter and read its contents.

"Dearest Margaret," it ran—"As you know, I sail for South America the day after to-morrow. Before I go I want to ask you something, but I fear it will be too much to ask you. You must have guessed that I love you. I know it is presumption on my part to aspire to your hand, for you are the adopted daughter of a rich man and I am only the ne'er-do-well son of a poor brother. But I mean to make money in South America. I want to come home and marry you! There, I've blurted it out quite bravely! Will you marry me? I want you to wait for me.

"I suppose I'm asking too much, but I shall hope. If you reply to this note, I will come and say good-bye, but if you do not answer, I shall know what you mean. Yours, HARRY."

There was the explanation. She went to her uncle and showed him the note. He counseled cables and letters to Harry, but on the voyage Harry altered his plans, so that the messages lay waiting for him and never reached him. And he never wrote home; he just dropped out of everybody's life.

Would-be suitors dangled about Miss Weston for a time, but, receiving no encouragement, went off elsewhere. Friends married, acquaintances moved out of the neighborhood. Margaret grew from a girl to a woman, from a woman to an old maid.

And still she waited for Dutton in the house where last he had seen her, and where again he might seek her.

II.

Sometimes she pictured his return. She saw him whirling up to the door magnificently in a mortor car. She saw him on foot, tentatively examining the old house from the farther side of the road. Always she pictured him coming back, prosperous, to seek that bride whom mischance had so long withheld from him.

And then, one day, quite unexpectedly, she met him in the street, and he was woefully shabby and down-at-the-heel and his face bore lines of want and recklessness.

"Harry!" she faltered. "Harry!"

The light of recognition leaped into his eyes, but he shook his head.

"You're home again!" she exclaimed. "I—I've been expecting you. I've been waiting for you!"

"Expecting me? Waiting for me?" he muttered, astonished.

"Ever since you went away," she said, simply. "Waiting for you in the old house. There was a mistake—I never got your letter till it was too late. And then we never heard where you were. But I waited."

"You—you're making a mistake," he said, slowly. "I don't know you!"

He swung away from her at that. Miss Weston took a few steps after him, but a faintness came over her. And when she could see clearly again Dutton had gone.

But even now her simple faith in love did not abandon her.

"He'll come back to me one day,' she said to herself, going slowly home. "He knows I'm waiting for him. He's ashamed of himself because he's poor. As if that mattered!"

Indeed, it was quite a cheery Miss Weston who arrived home at The Gables. And now every morning the thought was still stronger in her that that day her lover of long ago might call to see her in the house where last he had left her.

But the days slipped by, and, though often she glanced from her windows, she saw no sign of him in the street outside. And so a month, three months, another six months passed by.

III

"Gentleman to see you, Mum!"

"A gentleman to see me, Janet?" asked Miss Weston, in surprise. "How strange!"

Miss Weston rose from her chair. She was trying to persuade herself that it could not possibly be Dutton who had come to Penthorn Road after all these years. Although she had hoped for his coming every morning, it suddenly seemed to her that this was altogether too much to hope for. She went downstairs slowly, holding tightly on to the banisters, and steeling herself to meet disappointment.

But it was Dutton who awaited her in the room below—Dutton, far better dressed than when she had seen him last and now holding himself with a resolute bearing.

"Harry!" she exclaimed, holding out both her hands to him. "So you've come back? I knew you would—I knew you would!"

"I had to come back," he said slowly. "I wanted to see you just once more before I went abroad again."

"Abroad again?" she echoed faintly. "What's the good of my stopping in England?" he asked. "There's nothing to keep me here. Abroad I shall do better. I did not do well when I was there before, but that was because I had nothing to work for. I had lost you, and——"

He stopped for a moment.

"You thought you had lost me," amended Miss Weston softly.

"I—I knocked about a bit over there," he went on. "A rolling stone, you know. Then I had a whim to come back to England. I—it's no good disguising it—I was on the downward path. I'd lost interest in things—worse, I'd lost interest in myself. And then one day I met you in the street. You remember? The man you remembered as Harry Dutton was dead then," he said, "and in his place there was a mere shiftless ne'er-do-well. I felt utterly ashamed to find your eyes on me. I saw you still believed in me, long after I had lost faith or belief in myself. And—and I resolved to try again to live my life straight."

"And now?"

"For close on a year—ever since that day—I've struggled. I think I've left the wastrel behind. I'm trying hard to be the man you thought me to be, and I think I'm succeeding."

"And you've come back at last?"

"Yes, I wanted to see you again, not as I was that day you met me, but as I am now. I wanted to win back a little of your respect."

"And—and you're going abroad again?"

"Quite soon. I've no ties, no wife or family."

"There's me!" pointed out Miss Weston, with unprecednted boldness. "Have you forgotten me?"

"You?" he said in amazement. "You don't mean——"

"I've waited all these years for you to come back to me," she replied steadily. "We were parted by illchance, but I was loyal to the memory of you, for I knew you'd return one day!"

"And I," he said, "have been true to you in word and deed, because all my love was with you. Other women"—he dismised them with a gesture. "You were always the only woman in my thoughts."

"I knew it," she said simply, and told him how mischance had led their paths apart those many years ago.

"Ah, if the past could but come back again," he said. "If I only were younger! But now I can not ask you to marry me. I'm getting old, I'm poor. And you—you're rich, I suppose, and you haven't altered in the least.

Her Story.

Gently she smiled dissent.

"But I have something to tell you," she said. "Uncle George left me all his money, but he left this house to you. Nine years ago he died, and we inquired about you everywhere. We advertised in the papers, too, but could get no tidings of you."

"Nine years ago," he answered. "I was up-country, then. I stayed up-country three years. That was why I was undiscovered."

"Well, nine years' rent is yours," she told him. "I've been keeping it for you, waiting for you to come back. So you see, you're not quite so poor as you thought."

"And not quite so rich as I'd like to be," he sighed. "I'd like to be rich enough to——"

He paused.

"To what?" queried Miss Weston, anxiously. "Surely you're not going to balance riches against happiness?"

"I've got my pride," he said, stubbornly.

"And you've got your house," she said. "And I'm going to move out of it at once. You must come and live in your own house."

"No, no," he replied, uncomfortably.

"I shall go," she said, with firmness, and added, artfully, 'thought after all these years it'll break my heart to leave it."

"Then—then let me continue as your—your landlord. The house is far too big for me."

"I won't stay on as your tenant a day longer," she said. "And it's going to break my heart to go. Can't you see what I—what I'm trying to make clear?"

"No," he said, in perplexity. "I can't. And yet—but no, I'm too poor and ashamed to ask you to marry me."

"Rubbish!" retorted Miss Weston with the most asperity she had ever been known to show. "Either you're going to break my heart by making me leave the old house, or else you're going to let me stop on as your wife. Which is it to be?"

Her unwonted briskness gave way and she took a faltering step toward him.

"Harry, after all these years——" she quavered.

"My little sweetheart!" he whispered, and both he and she forgot that youth had left them.

Getting the Facts

MRS. Bickers sighed deeply as she regarded her son Willie, who was eating his dinner with suspicious propriety. Not once had he had to be reminded not to grab things and he had said "please" before every request. His hands were clean and his hair was brushed to a shiny smoothness. Altogether, Willie was so much a model child as to cause comment in the Bickers family. Even Willie's father had noticed it.

"I feel so sorry for Mrs. Gassmore," said Mrs. Bickers, after her introductory sigh.

"Anybody died?" asked Bickers.

"No," said Mrs. Bickers. "It's worse than that. There's nothing worse than to be deceived by those you love and trust—and I tell you, Mrs Gassmore felt so bad about it that there were tears in her eyes when she told me. Her son Tommy, had caused the tears."

"Huh?" said Willie Bickers, startled. He ceased buttering his hot biscuit.

"I knew you'd feel just as I did about it, Willie," said his mother kindly. "Although you are such a friend of Tommy's, I realize that you never would approve of certain things he has done. You have been brought up too well and you understand right and wrong.

"Why, Mrs. Gassmore, I said to her to-day," went on Willie's mother, "if my Willie had acted that way I couldn't have been any more surprised! Tommy has such honest eyes."

"What'd he do?" queried Willie huskily.

"Do?" echoed his mother. "Tommy Gassmore, after all his mother had told him, went swimming this afternoon; that's what he did! When he had been expressly forbidden to go near the place—just like you, Willie—let alone enter the water!"

"The young scamp!" said Bickers, emphatically. He regarded the sleek hair of his son with new interest.

"Yes, wasn't it dreadful?" asked Mrs. Bickers. "I suppose he thought his mother never would know it. That's what makes it so particularly sad—his trying to deceive his mother.

"But those things always get found out, and I presume he realizes that now. I was so surprised, because I had considered him nearly as trustworthy a boy as our Willie and"——

"H-h-how'd they find out?" inquired Willie gruffly. "No, thanks—I don't want any more creamed potatoes. Nor 'sparagus."

"I hope you don't feel ill or anything, Willie," said his mother anxiously. "Usually you want so many helpings and you've had only one to-night. Why, Tommy must have cut his foot while swimming, because when he got home it hurt him so he had to take off his shoe and his mother questioned him, and besides his hair was all wet."

"Awful give-away, wet hair," said Bickers sternly. "Why are you fussing at your head, Willie? Let your hair alone—you'll muss it all up, and I notice you have brushed it unusually well this evening."

"Yes, I noticed it, too," said Mrs. Bickers. "I am so glad Willie is taking pride in his personal appearance. I hope Tommy Gassmore will realize some day how disgracefully he has acted. It is boys like that who start out by fibbing and deceiving who end by being criminals. I don't know that I want you to associate with Tommy any more, Willie. He might lead you into doing things that you shouldn't, and I should so hate to have you begin. Of course, I know that if you did anything wrong you would be man enough to come and tell us about it as soon as you had thought it over."

"D-did Tommy talk much?" asked Willie, in a slightly cracked voice. "Wh-when he told his mother, I mean?"

"Talk much?" echoed Mrs. Bickers. "Why, what do you mean, Willie? I suppose not. I suppose he felt too ashamed to say more than he had to! Why do you ask?"

"Nothin'," said Willie. He squirmed in his seat. "I jus' wondered!"

His hand sought his head again and a look of alarm overspread his countenance as he drew it away from the extreme back and saw water shining on it. Apparently his obtuse parents saw nothing and were eating with perfect appetites.

"Say," Willie blurted out, in a mangled voice, "I went swimming with Tommy—when he did, you know. Honest, I forgot, ma; honest, I did!"

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

The girl drew herself up. "Nevertheless, Mr. Warren, in spite of prudence, wisdom or death itself, I shall go to my brother to-night!"

There was a little pause; he looked down at the floor and thought swiftly.

"Very well," he said at last. "I yield to the force of your determination. You shall go to-night—but I insist on one concession."

"What is that?"

"You must let me go ahead and look over the ground. I will signal you when it is safe to follow."

The Signal.

"But how can you signal?"

"With a light." He crossed to the window and studied the forbidding mass of the castle for a few moments. "A light in one of those higher towers. You can see it from here. You won't have long to wait," he added earnestly. "It will shine within an hour."

"But"—the girl's voice faltered—"but if—it does not shine?"

He smiled upon her, lightly but tenderly.

"Well," he drawled, whimsically, "then I'll be too busy swapping lead for brimstone with Mr. Spook to stop and hang a lantern. I had expected," he went on seriously, "that your cousin would remain here with you, and I can not understand why he should desert you at such a crisis."

"Unless—what?" he inquired slowly, after an uncomfortable silence.

The girl made a sudden gesture of despair. "Oh, if I only knew!" she cried. "If I only knew! I'm so confused—I'm at my wits' end! My mind—I can't think!"

She pressed both hands to her head and staggered as she moved toward a seat. The next instant Jarvis was supporting her, both hands in his, and gazing intently into her face. Little quivers that were not all of love were racing up her spine, and even as he gazed into the waxed rose of the beautiful face he felt an all but overpowering desire to look over his shoulder. Seventh sense, premonition. The psychologists—those tedious dissectors—are still squabbling over the terminology, but young Jarvis felt the realness of the sensation. The sudden and menacing appearance of Robledo, the eerie palm-reading of the innkeeper's girl, the inexplicable desertion of the Duke—all these combined to give him an unshakable and growing sense of gathering danger. And all about him was the breathing still of the mountain night, like nature's cowering hush before the lash of the hurricane sweeps the land.

His voice and the grip on the little hands grew tense.

Herself Again.

The girl instantly responded to the best treatment for all superficial nervous troubles—a sharp, incisive voice. She opened her eyes, and with a wondering, startled look.

"You are holding something from me," he charged swiftly. "What happened on the boat that changed your manner? What worried you when the Duke drove ahead? I saw it again when he closed that door. What is it?"

He felt her shiver and her eyes, avoiding his, roamed wildly about the room.

"Oh, if I could only—if I were only sure I could trust you!"

Instantly she got the best answer in the world—the quick, unconscious setting of a man's muscles under the sting of insult. It was gone in a breath, but she felt and recognized it with joy.

"Too late for doubts now," he said crisply, as if the affront were of no importance in the face of graver things. "Your brother's life is at stake! We must stick together—you and I! It's your only chance. How can I help you unless I know everything? Don't you see that I am fighting in the dark—that I am up against a solid wall of mystery and this may be the key? Never mind what you think or fear—this is the time you've got to trust me!"

The girl was breathing quickly.

"You couldn't—" she began brokenly, and then, her voice rising: "Oh, I do believe in you! In my heart I have trusted you from the first. It's my heart; not my mind that trusts you now!" She paused a moment and drew a deep breath as he stared at her blankly. She gazed full into his face as if to watch for the slightest betraying tremor.

"The locket is gone."

The look of utter, dizzy amazement that came over his face was proof enough of his innocence. It hardly needed his mechanical:

"Gone—where?"

"I don't know," she cried miserably.

"But—when did you miss it?"

"Three days ago—on th steamer."

"And you have no idea now who has the plan that was in the locket?"

His tone was high and accusing, and she kept her eyes away from his.

"I suspect, of course," she admitted feebly, "but I can't be sure! I—"

"Your Highness," he broke in triumphantly, "I've got the first trail of the spook that's haunting your castle. Rusty, the horses!"

"Yes, sah; yes, sah!" came the servitor's voice from the yard.

He was buttoning his coat as he spoke, and now he picked up his hat.

"You think—" began the Princess, a little uncertainly.

"I think your cousin has not gone to Madrid. Time is everything now. I shall start at once and you must rest here until you get the signal."

"Your overcoat," she reminded him as he made for the door. "It's upstairs."

"Never mind that."

Before he could protest she ran lightly up the stairs. With a warm glow on him that no overcoat could have produced, Jarvis followed her halfway up.

As he did so, the figure of a man blotted out the moonlight that fell in the doorway. A man muffled in a big cloak stepped just inside, his right arm carried rigidly at his side. From this position he could command the foot of the stairs, but could not be seen from the stairway itself.

The Princess appeared at the top with the coat on her arm.

"Don't come down—I'll get it."

"You are sure you know the way?" she asked, tremulously, as he relieved her.

"North road, second turn to the right."

"Yes, that takes you to the postern gate."

"Thank you."

But still he lingered, though he had said time was precious. Their eyes met in a long look. Both colored and looked away. With a swift movement she took something off her neck and threw it about his shoulders.

"This little cross and chain," she said softly. "Wear it to-night for me, my knight!"

He gained possession of the hand for a moment.

"Only for to-night?" he whispered.

"You may never see to-morrow."

"If I never see to-morrow"—his voice sounded to his own ears like a stranger's and there was the beating of a whole drum corps in his ears—"you will forgive me for telling you that—I love you! Don't—don't rebuke me to-night. Wait until to-morrow—if tomorrow ever comes." He smiled and her eyes drooped before the light in his. "To-night your humble vassal goes forth in his lady's cause. While all Segura waits ghost and ghost-breaker shall stalk the halls."

He stooped and swiftly kissed her hand.

"Your Highness, you will see the light in the tower inside an hour!"

A Fight in the Dark.

"God be with you, my knight!" she prayed softly—and was gone.

He waited until the last sound of her footsteps had died and a door closed in the distance. Then his pulses leaping wildly, he turned and made one step down the stairs—and stopped.

A poet once asked, and left unanswered, "Upon what may life depend?" In this instance Warren Jarvis' life hung on the slender chance that he would wait until he could not longer hear the sound of his lady-love's footsteps. Light as they were they would have distracted his mind so that he would never have caught the faint but keen metallic click that was as clear as the spoken word to a man born in a country where the babies used to use a .45 revolver for a teething ring.

Survival largely depends on preparedness for the unexpected in the world of action. Warren Jarvis did not waste any time investigating. He did not care to make inquiries to be certain that the cocking of the pistol had a definite connection with his career in this world.

No; he began humming "Dixie" in the care-free, exultant manner of the successful lover, and swiftly took in the field of action. In a fraction of a second he had planned his battle. On the stair post at the foot of the stairs was an oil lamp, the only light in the room, for the fire had died down to a faint glow. He slung the overcoat across his right arm, with his left arm loosened something that hung under his coat and across his heart. Then, still humming "Dixie," he walked down the stairs without any attempt at concealment.

Just before he came within the range of vision of the doorway he leaned forward and dashed his coat against the lamp. At that same instant he whipped out his pistol, crouched and did a baseball slide out across the stone floor, on hip and shoulder, his eyes turned toward the door.

There was a flash and a roar and a man's figure outlined against the moonlight and then almost as quickly as the two shots had sounded in the hotel, the Kentuckian's revolver spoke twice.

There was an oath, a cry of "Sancta Maria!" and a heavy fall.

Laying the Ghost.

Desecrated by the bright Spanish sunlight, the old castle would have moved one to pity as would the sight of a broken-down warrior. In the rich moonlight, softened and hallowed, the stately sweep of its walls and the but stagnant wastes of the moat, and the long tendrils of vapor curled and crept out like the stealthy arms of cold and evil spirits, enfolding and chilling the heart and welcoming all who dared the walls to an embrace of death. And somewhere within an owl cried out an uncanny warning, like a tocsin summoning the legions of darkness to meet the rash invader.

"Jimminy!" muttered Jarvis, with a shiver, as they drew up at the postern gate. "It's no wonder those fat-headed boobies down there wouldn't come up to this place!"

To Be Continued Monday.

THE LOCKET STOLEN

The girl was breathing quickly. "You couldn't"—she began brokenly, and then her voice rising. "Oh, I do believe in you! In my heart I have trusted you from the first. It's my heart, not my mind, that trusts you now!" She paused a moment and drew a deep breath as he stared at her blankly. She gazed full into his face as if to watch for the slightest betraying tremor. "The locket is gone!"

For Fat Men Only

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

THIS is a tip I give you, as it was given to me,
Right in the thick of the summer, with the mercury ninety-three,
Right in the thick of the summer, with everything sizzling hot,
And all of us looking crimson, like lobsters cooked in a pot.

Don't button it in the back, boys; the button in front will do.
The collar will stay where you put it, looking and feeling fine,
And there'll be no torturing button a-boring into your spine.

This is the tip I was given, and I pass it along as lore
To all of my husky brothers, with "seventeen" necks or more.
Try it, and all of the buttons that caused you worry and pain
Will land in back of the dresser, and never come out again.

Courting Death

LAST week I dined with Lord Evendale, the well-known English multi-millionaire, and Chamus, former chief of detectives, at the house of a mutual friend. Our host had imagined that these two men, the Englishman, with his blase paradoxes and strange whims, and the Frenchman, with his memories of a life rich in daring deeds, might amuse or at least interest us. Long before dinner was over the skirmishes between these two highly contrasting characters had begun and their conversation was exceedingly interesting to follow.

"You do your fellow men a mighty poor service," said Lord Evendale, in a tone of contempt, "when you use your intelligence and energy to protect their lives. Life, indeed, is worth next to nothing."

"Still, life is the only blessing we really possess," Chamus replied firmly, looking straight into the Englishman's eyes, "the only one we really control. I consider it our duty to live the time allotted us and to make it as useful as possible to ourselves and others."

"Oh, nonsense," exclaimed Lord Evendale. "At any other time perhaps life was worth living, but nowadays it is not. The progress of civilization makes it easy for us to enjoy all the joys of existence, leaving absolutely no room for further wishes. As for myself, all the wishes, that I could get fulfilled without any exertion whatever, were so disgusting to me already at the age of 25 that I turned away from them and longed only for one thing—death. I resolved to die."

Various Ways.

"There are different ways of committing suicide," remarked Chamus, whom this confession, with its immense egotism, annoyed. "The only difficulty is the choice, from poison to a hempen rope."

"I was religious," the Englishman went on unaffected, "and, besides, my mother suspected the spleen which poisoned my life, and made me take an oath never to commit suicide. I made this oath willingly, because I imagined it would be easy to find a way of being killed without doing it yourself, but I have found that to a man in my position it is the most difficult thing in the world. They had barely begun to suspect my fatal intentions before a host of friends and relatives began to watch me."

"You will pardon me if I refuse to believe you," said Chamus, "even a lord and a millionaire can manage as easily as anything to get killed if he really does want to get rid of his life. There are a thousand chances every day."

single lion, crocodile nor even a snake. At a lake in the heart of the Soudan I met a tribe of real savage natives, only to have them nurse me back when I got the fever. I went to the Transvaal and arrived there just as the peace had been signed. And now I have returned as safe and sound as ever, but full of despair, because I can not find death."

He Did Wrong.

"You need not despair," said Chamus, contemptuously, "but if you really did want to die you did wrong in leaving the big cities, where the struggle for existence has made men ten times more dangerous than all the wild beasts in the world. That at least is the experience I have had while hunting human beasts of prey for more than twenty years."

The two men had arisen and stood looking straight into one another's eyes.

Chamus continued: "If you are absolutely determined to die without committing suicide I am able to give you a prescription. At the utmost it will cost you no more than a couple of sous."

"Will you be kind enough to give it to me to-day?"

"With pleasure. What time is it?"

"Half-past ten."

"Then you have plenty of time. Take the train from Gare St. Lazare, at 11:05. Get out at 11:45 at Point du Jour, or, better still, at Grenelle. Then walk slowly back and forth along the old fortifications, and if you return to Maison Blanche alive I shall apologize to you in the presence of our friends here."

"I understand; and, to tempt the apaches there to carry out their coup to the satisfaction of everybody, I shall fill my pockets with gold."

"I should not advise you to do that," said Chamus brutally. "If the booty is too rich it may tempt those fellows to attack peaceful people who are not passing the place simply because they are tired of living. I advise you to pay the fellows who do you the favor of taking your life the exact amount at which you value your life, no more and no less. In that way you will not be robbing your heirs."

Many Thanks.

"I thank you, sir. If everybody were like you I should not be disgusted with life. I shall follow your advice and keep in my pocket no more than the amount at which I value my life."

* * * * * * *

I thought no more of the matter, but when I opened my paper the next morning I was shocked to read the following paragraph:

"In the small hours of the morning a police patrol between Grenelle and Vaugirard found the body of a man who had been murdered by apaches with a lasso close to the fortifications. He was stylishly dressed and was easily identified, for in his left shoe was found the following note:

"'The Lord did me a poor favor when he let me be born into this world. At last I see an opportunity to get rid of my life without committing suicide, and I make use of it unhesitatingly. They will murder, but not rob me, for I have given the driver who drove me to the station all my valuables, keeping exactly ten sous to pay for my ticket to Grenelle. Low as was the valuation M. Chamus placed on my life, I value it even lower myself, for my murderers will kill me for the value I put on my life—nothing.'"

Up-to-Date Jokes

At a small country church a newly married couple were receiving some advice as to how they were to conduct themselves.

"You must never both get cross at once; it is the husband's duty to protect his wife whenever an occasion arises, and a wife must love and honor and obey her husband, and follow him wherever he goes."

"But, sir——" pleaded the young bride.

"I haven't finished yet," remarked the clergyman. "She must——"

"But, please, sir"—in desperation—"can't you alter that last part? My husband is a postman."

Two women who had not seen each other for many years met unexpectedly in the street.

"How do you do?" exclaimed one, effusively.

"Now, this is delightful!" said the other, who was the elder. "You have not seen me for eleven years, and yet you know me at once! I can not have changed so dreadfully in all that time. It flatters me."

"Oh, I recognized your bonnet!" said the first.

The Murder of the Birds

By GARRETT P. SERVISS.

These pictures show the tern, or sea swallow, one of its young and its eggs. This beautiful bird has been made nearly extinct by the ruthlessness of hunters.

AMONG the interesting animals that man has succeeded in more or less completely exterminating without any real benefit to himself is the tern, or sea swallow, some remarkable photographs of which, made in England, are shown herewith.

They belong to the gull tribe of birds, and get their popular name from their curious flight, which resembles that of a land swallow. Like the true gulls, they have great power of wing and often go far out to sea. Including the long tail, they are about 15 inches in length, and they present a very picturesque appearance as they skim along the surface of the waves, with their black heads, gray wings, white bellies and red legs, catching small fishes and mollusks without stopping, and sometimes diving after their prey.

They breed along the coasts and often follow rivers, and even reach inland lakes. Unfortunately for them, both their eggs and their plumes are attractive, and merciless hunting has almost driven them from the eastern shores of the United States, as well as from those of Western Europe and the British Isles.

A Knowing Bird.

But they know their enemy and in recent times they have chosen their breeding places in spots almost inaccessible to the hunters. Lately one of their concealed breeding places has been found on a lonely part of the coast of Norfolk, England, and the photographs were taken there by hunters who had no other aim than to increase our knowledge of the ways and peculiarities of animals which, as far as we know, have as good a right to enjoy the gifts of nature as we have.

One interesting fact about this home of English terns is that it is believed to be far older than the British Empire, there being evidence that they have inhabited it from a time anterior to that of the arrival of the conquering Normans.

The story of the terns serves to call attention to one of the most neglected parts of everybody's education. The man or woman who knows the birds is a rara avis ("rare bird") in these days, and that, too, when so much is said of the charms and wonders of natural history. Even in the country, there are only about half a dozen birds, such as the robin, the bobolink, the barn swallow, the bluebird and the sparrow, that any person you meet can tell you anything about. For most people birds are only birds. Yet if you will read such a book as old Gilbert White's "Natural History of Selborne"—one of the most delightful books ever written—you will be quickly convinced that the bird world is worth a great deal of attention, and that those who know nothing about it are as ignorant of some of nature's greatest charms as are those who do not know one star from another.

A Vacation Idea.

When you go into the country or to the seashore for your vacation, take a book on ornithology along, and make acquaintance with the many species of birds which you are sure to see. Study them with an opera glass and make photographs of them with your camera. Learn to distinguish them from one another not only by their plumage, but by their songs, their calls, their manner of flight, the character of their nests and the places that they most frequent; watch their daily life and habits; follow them through the fields and into the forests—and don't shoot them! You will find in this way that a new source of interest in the world you live in has been opened for you.

One of the recollections of childhood that I should most regret to lose is that of the wonderful song of a thrush that I used to hear at sundown, ringing across the fields from some far-away hidden place, the sweetest sound I ever heard! I would leave my play and stop to listen in simple wonder. It was long before I found out the name of the bird that sang that marvelous evening song, which fascinated everyone who listened to it, and I never caught sight of the bird itself, and yet it seems to me that I shall hear that melody as long as the cells of memory transmit their impressions!

And yet men endowed with the divine gift of human intelligence murder birds by wholesale; murder them for their plumage; murder them to get a new dainty for jaded appetites; murder them, most horrible of all, for the mere sake of killing; to see their delicate feathers fly from the impact of the shot, and their little bodies drop mangled upon the ground! And this is called—SPORT!

Smithson on the Continent

THEY were openly courting!

It was in the Continental train running down to Naples. Smithson, clerk in a London shipping office, on the most ambitious vacation of his life, was the chief spectator. The tall, dark Italian who was talking to the young couple in animated style did not seem at all embarrassed by their conduct.

Smithson shifted in his corner seat and tried not to look in their direction. But his glance repeatedly strayed to the olive-complexioned girl, jet-haired, brilliant-eyed, whose adorer, as young and sun-tinted as herself, embraced her neck with his right arm, and fondled her fingers with his other hand.

"Ah!"

Smithson had remembered he was in Italy—the country of romance. He felt more at ease. To show his tolerance he would beg a match. Ignorance of Italian was nothing to a man crossing the Continent to catch a German liner for the return Mediterranean trip—all to be achieved in a fortnight.

After several genial glances at the trio, which seemed to give great offense, he took out his pipe, and, fixing his eyes on the tall, dark man, he pointed to his empty bowl and struck an imaginary match on his trousers.

A direct insult could not have caused a more startling outburst. It came like a gunshot—

"Insulte!"

Bright Eyes.

A less steady eye would have quailed beneath the Italian's flashing gaze. But Smithson had noticed the curious, bewitching light in the orbs of the beautiful girl, which were directed toward his face, and he replied grandly:

"Not at all!"

Smithson might have used the single Italian word he knew, "apologia," but he recalled the advice given him by an uncle at Dover: "Nephew, if you get into a vocal dilemma with a foreigner, meet volubility with volubility—recite poetry, anything; but don't falter, and, above all, gesticulate and smile."

Sentence on sentence still stumbled from the dark man. A look of softness had come into the eyes of the girl opposite, but she clung to her lover as if the little clerk was a bold highwayman.

There was no longer any reassurance in the beautiful girl's face. When the little clerk sought it she cringed before his glance, and the tall man moved to screen her from view.

The train slowed down slightly. Occasionally the little clerk cast a furtive glance at the scenery flying by. He could think only of poetry as a means of stemming the other's tide of wrath. He leaned back, and with the smile of a seraph looked up at him and begin in pathetic, pacifying tones:

An Experiment.

"I am out of humanity's reach,
I must finish my journey alone,
Never hear the sweet music of speech,
I start at the sound of my own."

It was electrical. The Italian's face relaxed. The anger went out of his black eye. He bowed magnificently and stepped aside, and after voluble explanation to the lovers, sat down.

Smithson whistled mentally. "Phew! He thinks I've apologized."

Presently the tall man turned, and, pointing to Smithson's gold watch, stammered slowly: "You—haf—time?"

"A leetle," was the answer.

All four were now smiling. The beautiful girl, especially, seemed gratified at the calm after the storm. The train ran into the station.

"Naples?" Smithson exclaimed.

"Anpoli," the Italian answered. "You eat?"

"Rather!"

With a pleasant farewell the lovers departed in a carriage, and Smithson, casting after the beautiful girl a regretful glance, accompanied the tall man on foot to a restaurant. "An experience to tell the chaps at home," he told himself. "Can't stand a vacation without incident!"

But he grumbled when, after a meal of delicate dishes which he could scarcely swallow, the proprietor of the restaurant negligently placed before him a bill for two.

An Argument.

"No, no, you mistake," he said easily.

"Sir, our price," stammered the proprietor, reproachfully. And the dark man nodded assent.

"But I've not brought you—you brought me—you crook," Smithson expostulated. He offered five francs, half the sum claimed.

Smiling, as before, Smithson repeated the verse which had then acted so soothingly. It had no effect. Finally he exploded: "I wish I knew 'Paradise Lost.' I'd recite the whole book at you!" As a last resort, with a forced smile he began: "The boy stood on the burning deck——"

"Burnidek?" the proprietor interrupted. "What ess 'burnidek'?"

"Confound you!" Smithson thundered, "that's where the boy stood! Do you think I'm going to listen to you fellows yarning without saying a word?"

A passing gendarme entered. Protest was useless. As an alternative to accompanying the officer Smithson paid ten francs and stamped into the street—the gendarme accepting from the proprietor one franc for settling the dispute.

On his way to the landing stage, whither he went to inquire if his liner were in, Smithson felt for his watch.

It was gone!

The Mistakes of Jennie

By HAL COFFMAN

Being a Series of Chapters in the Life of a Southern Girl in the Big City

They Would All Look at Jennie.

THINGS went along quietly with Jennie for three or four weeks. She had paid the $1.50 weekly installment on her clothes regularly, but she noticed everything was not quite right at the office. Her former girl friend would not speak to her, and Jennie often noticed her whispering to the other girls, and then they would all look at Jennie.

Jennie knew they were talking about her, but she could not find out what it was they said.

Usually, in the office during the dull season, they laid several of the girls off or let them go entirely, but they always kept the best ones—the ones that always did just a little MORE than the boss asked them to do.

Jennie had always been among these, for she worked hard and kept her mind on her work—that is, she used to before she got the foolish ideas about clothes and wanting to do like other girls she saw.

Of late Jennie had been thinking more of the good times she had, and wanted to have, than she had of her work, and had made several mistakes in her work, for which she was "called down" by the boss.

She felt and knew that the other girl was doing all she could to make Jennie lose her job, and what then of the $1.50 weekly installment on her clothes, and also the remainder of her $8.00 a week that was so badly needed at home.

Jennie had not seen the fellow since Tom met them at the door going to the hotel and had realized what a narrow escape she had when Tom told her what an awful place it was. One of the girls told Jennie that the boss wanted to see her, and with a dryness in her throat and fluttering heart she went slowly toward the private office of the boss.

Mild and Bitter

A Humorous Yarn

MR. POLLOCK, the landlord of the "Comfortable Gill," sat at his door looking out upon the dusty road and the stretch of meadow beyond and beyond that again at the line of pollard willows which marked the stream. He took from his pocket a large white handkerchief, upon which a crop of red spots had broken out very much as though it had had the measles, and wiped his forehead with it, careless of infection.

The morning was hot, and he had just been engaged in severe physical exertion, nothing less than the conveyance, with the help of the brewer's men, of a thirty-six gallon barrel of ale into the cellar. The feat had been safely accomplished, and he had cause for satisfaction. Yet all was not well with him. There was a slight frown upon his forehead and a thoughtful expression in his watery blue eyes as they roved across the meadows to a spot by the stream, where stood a figure of a man clad in Norfolk jacket and knee breeches and carrying a fishing rod. Mr. Pollock eyed him thoughtfully, and scratched his stubble on his chin—of which he had two.

"Been here three weeks," he muttered, "and I ain't seen the color of his money yet. Promises—yes! Settle when he goes! But then, he ain't a-going—and living on the fat of the land, too. Not overmuch baggage to speak of. Of course, he may be a gentleman. Very likely he is. But then, again, he mayn't be. No. It's no go. I'll have it out with him this very morning."

He stiffened in his determination as he saw the fisherman turn from the stream and come toward him across the meadows. It was evident that the morning's sport had not proved very satisfactory. As he came nearer he revealed himself as a slightly built man with dark hair, narrow black eyes and a humorous twist about the corners of his mouth. He greeted Mr. Pollock cheerfully, but the landlord, having made up his mind to an unpleasant duty, was not to be put off by blandishments.

He Speaks.

"Morning, Mr. Twigg," he said abruptly, in response to the fisherman's greetings. "No luck, I suppose? One can't do much when the sky's as bright as it is. There's a small matter I was wanting to speak to you about—that little account of mine."

He coughed and drew his stout form a little more upright. Mr. Twigg's dark eyes rested upon him a moment and then wandered away to the right, to where the little country station stood, neat and trim, amongst its flowery beds.

"I think I told you," he said, "that I proposed to settle when I left."

"Exactly," answered Mr. Pollock eagerly, seeing an opening for effective argument. "And what I want to know is, when that's going to be, for, you see, supposing you was to stay here forever; then you wouldn't ever settle it. Now, as man to man, would you?"

Mr. Twigg laughed.

"Well, no," he admitted, pleasantly. "Since you put it that way, I shouldn't. But you needn't be afraid. Very nice place, this—pleasant, and quiet, and all that, but not quite the spot for a permanent residence. As a matter of fact, I was thinking of leaving this morning. There's a train in about a half hour, isn't there? And I've sent my trunks up to the station."

"Oh, you have, have you?" said Mr. Pollock, with a momentary suspicion. "Then you and me can settle up before you go—comfortable and pleasantlike."

"Certainly," answered Mr. Twigg, promptly. "I've just got to go upstairs and pack the small handbag, and then I'll come down and settle up."

"Very well, sir," said Mr. Pollock, becoming more respectful at the prospect of approaching payment. "You can't say no fairer than that."

His Account.

He went into the bar to add up the details of his account, putting on a few dollars for luck. When Mr. Twigg descended he presented him with the bill. The fisherman put down his handbag and thrust his hands into his trouser pockets, as though to produce the necessary coin. In the midst of the process he paused and looked abstractedly at the landlord.

"You've treated me very well," he said, "and I shall recommend this place to my friends. And in return, I can show you a tip that ought to be useful to a man in your line of business. If you'd like to know I can show you a way to get two kinds of beer out of one barrel."

"Two kinds of beer out of one barrel?" said Mr. Pollock, staring. "Why, it can't be done."

"Well, if you can do that," said Mr. Pollock, scratching his head, "you're a marvel."

"It's perfectly easy when you know how to do it," answered Mr. Twigg, nonchalantly. "I'll be glad to show it to you. You've got a barrel of beer in the cellar, I suppose?"

"Just got a new one this morning," answered Mr. Pollock. "Thirty-six gallons."

"Then that's the very thing," answered his guest. "If you've got such a thing as a large auger about the place I'll show you how to do it now."

In the excitement of watching this curious experiment Mr. Pollock forgot about the unsettled account. He rummaged in the bar and found an auger of the requisite size. Mr. Twigg inspected it with particular care. Armed with it and accompanied by his host he descended to the cellar where the mighty barrel stood upon its trestles. He eyed it carefully and tugged at his mustache—possibly to hide a smile.

The Experiment.

"No use knocking the spigot out," he said. "You need two holes—one for each kind of beer. The mild comes out at one hole, the bitter at the other. You'll find this tip so useful that you'll remember it all your life. So here goes."

He attacked the barrel with the augur, making the hole in the lower part of its face.

"Just stick your thumb in here whilst I make the other." Mr. Pollock complied, and he went on. "The beer which comes out of that hole will be mild," he explained as he bored, "and the beer which comes out of this one when I've finished it will be bitter, very bitter," he added, inaudibly. "Ah, there, it's done! Just stick your thumb in this one, then I'll show you."

Mr. Pollock hastily inserted his thumb into the second hole, and with both hands fully occupied waited for the miracle.

"And now," said Mr. Twigg, allowing his smile to broaden, "I'll just go along and catch my train. I've got five minutes and I can just do it. As I said, you've done me well while I've been here, and I think you'll admit that I've done you well in return. Good morning. Mild and bitter, remember, out of the same barrel. Don't forget."

He ran lightly up the cellar stairs and vanished into the stretch of sunlight beyond them. Mr. Pollock, with both thumbs stuck in the barrel, was busy employing a somewhat slow brain in calculation as to the choice between the loss of his account and the loss of 36 gallons of beer. He had not solved the problem by the time that Mr. Twigg stepped out of the little station on his way to town.

Accepted.

"Darling," whispered the ardent suitor, "I lay my fortune at your feet."

"Your fortune?" replied she in surprise. "I didn't know you had one."

"Well, it isn't much of a fortune, but it will look large beside those tiny feet."

Talked Through His Nose.

From America comes the story of a Scotsman who, while viewing a statue of George Washington, was approached by an interested American.

"I think you'll agree with me, sir," said the American, "that he was a great and good man. A lie never passed his lips."

"Weel," said the Scot, "I suppose he talked through his nose, like the rest o' ye."

The Fowler's Story

A Weird Tale, Complete

THE fowler's cottage stands at the edge of the fields where the estuary of the Whitewater joins the main, and if there be a more desolate spot in the Landshire coast I have yet to find it.

When I went down to the cottage the other night the weather, for all its roughness, seemed likely to favor fowling. When I reached the fowler's cottage I found its owner in strange mood. He was walking rapidly from kitchen to parlor, pausing every now and again to open the kitchen door and look out to seaward.

"I'm sorry ye've come down," he remarked as I reached the door, "for I can't come wi' ye to-night."

"Why not?" I asked. "Aren't you well? There is nothing the matter with wind or weather, and the tide'll bring a great many birds up."

"That's right enough," he replied; "and there's nothin' 'xactly wrong wi' me, but it is my unlucky night, and I dussn't go out."

"'Twere three years ago last night," he said; "chanced I were flight shootin' and didn't have no luck whatsomever. There was a shower of birds come out from the decoy pond, but blame me if they didn't keep out of range like, and I couldn't come near them nohow. An' as I walked back 'long the sea wall, a gre't ole owl came shrikkin' right past me, an' I thought, mebbe, she were a witch, an' I counted she'd driven the birds away from me; so I let fly and dropped her, and she were only an owl after all, for if so be she had been a witch the shot couldn't have stopped her. So I picked her up and carried her home for to stuff, and I count that were an unlucky thing to do. An' the very next night, three years ago to-night, with the wind just as you see it now, an' the moon in most the same quarter, I went out 'long the saltings for to hide behind a knoll, for I reckoned the duck were gettin' some shy of the sea wall.

"An' when I got down there and took me place just afore flight started, blame me if I didn't see another gre't old owl swoopin' down fr the land; an' I dussn't shoot it, not knowin' when the flight would start, an' it come right past me, shrikkin' just like the one I'd shot the t'other night, and I knowed somethin' was wrong. Flight come late. It were ten minutes 'fore the first birds come over, and then they come all right and I got six or eight, and thought to myself I'd got skeered about nothin'. I forgot to tell ye that I 'adn't brought Spot wi' me 'cos she'd hurt her foot, an' I'd to leave her be'ind, so I 'ad to pick up me own birds, an' for to do that I kept all on turnin' round, and two was cripples an' ran; and when I'd got the lot and the light were most gone, blame me if I knew where the land was and where was the sea.

"I didn't know nowt about it at first startin' off. Seemed to me I were headin' towards the land right enough, and then I come to a place where the mud-bank stopped and there were deep water twenty yards wide comin' down with a rush from two sides at once. I looked for me landmarks, but couldn't see nothin' an' I knew there was somethin' wrong.

"I grew'd more an' more skeer'd like, an' begun to run forrard hard as ever I could, an' wherever I went the water kept all on chasin' arter me; an' blame me, if that gre't ole owl didn't pass agin in the dark, all white an' flutterin' an' screamin' at the top o' her voice. Then I know'd why it was I'd got caught, an' I just stood still, for I didn't know where to go no longer, an' then I see'd a light, suddén-like, right away from where I'd been a-runnin'. I didn't know what it might be, but I just started straight off for it, walkin' an' wadin' an' splashin' an' racin' like where the goin' was too soft; an' there was times when the water was up to me knees, but I kept all on goin' for the light, the only thing I could see."

"You must have known you were on the right road, then," I suggested.

"That I didn't," he replied, speaking as a man does when he has been running hard, "for I couldn't tell but that the light were a Jack o' lantern that would go out when I come nigh it an' leave me in th' worstapart of th' marsh, or that t'other old owl weren't a real witch what 'ad set it there for to drown'd me by. By anyway, the light were better than the darkness, an' so I run as best I could an' slipped twice an' dropped a brace o' me birds an' dussn't stop even for they, an' went on an' on till it seemed I'd never get to the end o' th' runnin'; but the light kept all on a-twinklin' an' so I kept all on a-runnin', an' at last I seed a bit of the breakwater, an' then all the things shaped theirselves an' I know'd in a moment where I was. An' the light were in me own parlor, for it chanced that me brother Jack 'ad come along, an' bein' lonely like, 'ad just lit the lamp for to see by, an' if it 'adn't been for that I'd never 'ave seen land again. I count th' old owl would ha' had me drownded."

"That is three years ago, you tell me," I said. "I should have thought you would have forgotten the trouble by now."

The old fowler stirred uneasily in his chair.

"I 'ad forgotten it," he confessed, "but last night, when I were down on the wall at flight-time, t'other old owl came shrikkin' past me again, an' I know'd she wanted to get me back on the saltin's, for I count she's a witch, an' it's 'er night. An' that's why I 'ont goo.

I stirred the fire to a glow that lit the fowler's scared, white face. Something gray and silent sailed between the window and the faint light of a moon half hidden by a clouddrift—a big owl passed, hooting.

THOMPSON AND DUNN ATLANTA BATTERY TO-DAY

By Joe Agler.

NEW ORLEANS, July 19.—Thompson and Dunn will be the Cracker battery to-day, and the club is brim full of pep and confidence as a result of the easy victory of yesterday over the Pelicans.

Dent really worked shout ball all the way. The only run New Orleans made was a gift to the visitors by way of a fielder's choice.

Billy Smith's clubs put up a great batting attack, with Welchonce and Alperman leading. Joe Dunn also contributed a most timely double that cleared up the tow-path when it was in a highly congested condition.

Walker, supposed to be the speed king of this circuit, was soft for the Crackers and the only question was to what length their attack would run the score.

The shake-up in the batting order proved a wise move, certainly for that game, at any rate. Wally Smith seems to be in a bit of a slump just now, but he is sure to hit his stride again, as he is one of those natural hitters who can't stay off the ball long at a time.

"King" Brady has left the team and Clarke has reported. The new hand is a big, raw-boned fork-hander and while he was warming up yesterday he showed a barrel of stuff. He pitches like Otto Hess and should held out a lot in the climb the Crackers now seem to have started for the top.

BASEBALL
Diamond News and Gossip

A crowd of Philadelphia fans tried to mob Umpire Byron, of the National League, for his decisions against the Phillies yesterday, and if it had not been for Umpire Rigler and some policemen the arbitrator with the poetic name might have had his hair mussed up.

* * *

* * *

Smokey "Joe" Wood had his thumb hurt fielding a grounder in the game with the Tigers yesterday and won't be able to pitch again for two weeks.

* * *

Right Fielder Jackson, of the Naps, had stage fright and dropped three flies yesterday. This enabled the Yankees to win.

* * *

Huggins managed the Cardinals for the first time since he was beaned by Pitcher Tyler two weeks ago, but he won't be able to play for some time.

* * *

The Cubs and the Pirates are tied for third place in the National League now. The Pirates are 66 points behind the Phillies, who are now second in the National League standing.

* * *

* * *

Umpire Klem had to run the Dodgers-Pirates game alone, but he did it to the satisfaction of all hands. His co-conspirator, Al Orth, was under the weather.

SANTA MONICA WILL GO AFTER SAVANNAH MARK

LOS ANGELES, July 19.—The Santa Monica road race, to be run on August 9, will be one event open for all cars of 600 cubic inches and under, covering the course 53 times for a total of 445 miles.

This announcement was made after a meeting of the Santa Monica road race committee, making a radical departure from previous runnings of the coast classic.

The most important reason advanced for making the change and increasing the distance by nearly 50 per cent was so that the contestants might go after the grand prize record for 400 miles made on the Savannah course.

Because the 120-horsepower Fiat with which Teddy Tetzlaff won the last race and established a new world's record is above the displacement restriction, the car has been eliminated from this year's race.

$20,000 FOR RITCHIE FOR THREE N. D. BOUTS

NEW YORK, July 19.—A $20,000 guarantee for three no-decision fights of ten rounds each awaits Willie Ritchie. Jimmy Johnston, matchmaker of the St. Nicholas A. C., today is awaiting word from the champion as to whether he will accept or not. Joe Shugrue, Jack Britton and Packey McFarland are the men picked by Johnston. As there are no decisions rendered in this city, Ritchie can not lose his title unless he is knocked out.

Johnston is also willing to guarantee Ritchie $7,500 if he will box Freddie Welsh, the English lightweight champion.

WASHBURN AND LEROY QUALIFY FOR GOLF FINALS

NEW YORK, July 19.—Watson M. Washburn and Robert Reroy and Theo. R. Pell and Raymond D. Little will meet this afternoon in the final match of the Round Robin tennis doubles of the Westchester Country Club.

The Washburn-Leroy combination finished at the top of the first division yesterday by defeating Adee and Rawlins by the score of 6-3, 6-3. This victory gave the winners the right to play Pell and Little, leaders of the second division, for the trophies to-day.

GOLF TOURNEYS FOR JUNIORS IS NEEDED MOST

By "Chick" Evans.

CHICAGO, July 19. — The announcement of the age limit tournament at Shokie suggests another thought. There is an increasing number of age-limit tourneys in the golf world about Chicago and a decreasing number of open events for young golfers.

The age-limit events are excellent things, but the lack of junior events is hard upon the young golfers, who can only look forward to "coming of age" and the chance, in consequence, of bringing up future great golfers becomes smaller yearly.

Didn't Know Own Ability.

A player does not know his ability until he enters into competition with other players. In my own case, I did not know that I was a first flighter until my tournament scores disclosed the fact. The big championships, of course, are always open to players with a low handicap, but the field is usually large and the players' abilities closely matched. If the young players can only enter these tournaments he will soon quit competitive golf, for the champion is only made after years and years of hard work.

The beginner in the big tournaments would probably be so far surpassed that he would lose courage and drop out of the game, for the promising young player must be provided with an occasional victory to keep his heart up.

Youngsters Want Competition.

The business man enjoys golf as an exercise, but the youngster has hundreds of ways of getting exercise, and there is a chance that he may desert golf unless he has a better way of showing his skill. It is true that he will be sorry later on, but the average individual lives in the present.

Just now, there seem to be very few young golfers of exceptional promise, and this dearth may, in part, be attributed to lack of competitive opportunities. The championship next week may disclose some new lights, but the chances are that the old, familiar names will be seen at the top of the list of qualifiers and in the last four.

More Tournaments Needed.

There is no doubt we need more tournaments and of the less exclusive types in order to develop players of the first class. The old Westward Ho, junior tournament was famous in its time; Shokie also had a good one, and there were open events at Chicago Golf, Onwentsia, Midlothian, Edgewater, Exmoor, etc., all of which have been discontinued.

Age-limit events are excellent things, there should be many of them, but I plead for an occasional chance for the youngster.

Wolgast and Dundee Will Clash Sept. 9

LOS ANGELES, July 19.—Tom Jones has finally accepted terms of Promoter McCarey, of the Pacific A. C., and Ad Wolgast and Johnny Dundee are again matched to box at Vernon. September 9 has been set as the day for the battle. Jones has been holding out for a guarantee and a percentage as had been agreed upon for their previous match which was called off because of an injury to the Dutchman's hand. The winner of the Cross-Baldwin bout is to be matched with Joe Rivers at Vernon on Labor Day unless Champion Willie Ritchie will agree to reasonable terms for a bout with the Mexican on that date.

Cross started training to-day for his fight with Baldwin.

LYNCH FINES TWO CARDINALS.

NEW YORK, July 19.—President Lynch, of the National League, has fined Fielder Cathers and Second Baseman McGee, of the St. Louis club, $25 each, for their fist fight at the Polo Grounds last Thursday.

WILLIE MEEHAN BEAT MANTELL

OAKLAND, CAL., July 19.—Willie Meehan, of San Francisco, won the decision over Frank Mantell, of Pawtucket, R. I., in a 10-round bout here last night.

NOW WHAT WILL CARRIGAN DO? ASK HUB FANS

By A. H. C. Mitchell.

BOSTON, July 19.—The question of the moment seems to be, "How will Bill Carrigan succeed as manager?" It is, of course, easier to ask the question than to answer it. In fact, it is impossible to answer it, because Bill has not had a chance to demonstrate his ability in a managerial capacity. However, it may be said that there is no good reason why he should not make a success of it. Ball players generally agree that Bill has baseball brains. He is a thinker, and as a catcher, he has to be a quick thinker or sit on the bench.

* * *

IT is the opinion of the writer that Wagner would not want the position if it were offered to him. He is perfectly content to be captain of the team. Wagner is really a very shy and diffident man. While he is a star ball player and a splendid captain, it is doubted if he would fit in well as a manager. Doubtless Wagner would say the same thing if he were asked about it.

* * *

WAGNER and Carrigan are the closest of friends and have been ever since they both became members of the squad. They are roommates. They comprised the "Board of Strategy" of the Red Sox organization last season when the team won the pennant. It is more than probable that this combination will resume business again now that Carrigan has been appointed manager. The meetings of the "Board" were discontinued during the world's series last fall, when Carrigan was not allowed to go behind the bat by Stahl, but was sent to the coaching line instead. It is asserted that Stahl was jealous of the publicity accorded the "Board" and decided to show all persons whom it might concern that he was the real, sole and only manager of the team. Of course, this report the writer has no first-hand information, but Stahl's actions in the series would seem to bear out the assertion.

* * *

IT is well that the change in managers is made when it is made. Carrigan will have the opportunity to become accustomed to his new duties. And if things go along all right he will have a chance to shape his team for next year. It is hardly within the range of possibilities for the Red Sox to win the pennant this wear. It seems to be too late. But the team can make a good finish if properly handled, and that is the work cut out for Manager Bill. Carrigan has the respect and confidence of his players. Stahl was well liked, for that matter, but when the players realized that he was making wrong moves and not using the best judgment in the handling of his team it, no doubt, had a bad effect on them.

O'TOOLE BETTER, BUT CAN HARDLY WORK THIS YEAR

PITTSBURG, July 19.—Marty O'Toole, the Pirate $22,500 pitcher who was recently operated upon for appendicitis, has left St. Margaret's Hospital and is now at his home in Homewood.

Indications are that it will be many weeks before he takes his regular turn on the rubber again. Baseball men fear he will be of no further use to the team this season.

CARPENTER BESTS KNIGHT.

DENVER, COLO., July 19.—Frank Whitney, the fighting carpenter, beat Phil Knight here last night in ten rounds.

TURNS DOWN BIG PRICE.

LOS ANGELES, CAL., July 19.—Ed Maier, president of the Venice Coast League Baseball Club, to-day refused an offer of $200,000 for the team and franchise by a syndicate which included John McGraw, of the New York National League Club.

Troops Quell Leith Riots.

LEITH, SCOTLAND, July 19.—In fights here to-day between striking dock workers and soldiers and sailors many persons were badly hurt and thousands of dollars property damage was done.

White Stops Abel in Two Rounds

Kid Young Loses to Lee on Foul

SEVERAL days ago Jack Britton stated that Charley White was the hardest hitting lightweight before the public to-day. Last night White met Jake Abel at the Auditorium-Armory and put him out in the second round of a scheduled ten-round battle. The punches that put Abel away were aleft-hand hook that traveled about two inches, followed by a right cross.

The punches landed by White were the hardest ever struck by a lightweight in this city. And when it is taken into consideration that White weighed only 127 pounds when he stepped into the ring, one can not give White too much praise for his wonderful boxing and punching power.

Never once did the Chicago boy make a misstep. Not a blow did he start that failed to land. He certainly is the best lightweight seen around here and he is a real contender for the lightweight crown.

Charley is only 21 years of age and has stopped such boys as Owen Moran, Johnny Dundee, Joe Thomas twice and Pal Moore twice. All these boys were going goodwhen White met them, but they were no match for the boy from the Windy City.

As for Abel, he never had a chance. When Jake would start a left, Charley would beat him to it. When Abel rushed White would meet him with sharp-shooting uppercuts. In fact, Abel appeared to be but a baby in White's hands. After the fight Abel seemed dumbfounded. He stated that the blow White hit him was the hardest he ever received.

Eddie Hanlon and Charley Lee were the surprises in the other bouts. Hanlon defeated Terry Nelson in an eight round set-to, but was fully eight pounds heavier than his Greek opponent. However, Hanlon put up a great bout and deserved much credit for his victory. He floored Nelson for the count of nine in the eighth round and nearly had the Greek out at the finish.

Lee sprung the surprise of the night by winning from Kid Young in six rounds on a foul. The battle was a hummer, full of excitement during the entire distance. Young hit Lee low twice in the sixth and was disqualified after an examination by a physician.

A small crowd witnessed the bouts.

CONNIE MACK PRESENTS OLD UNIFORMS TO INDIANS

PHILADELPHIA, PA., July 19.—The baseball fan frequently wonders what becomes of the old uniforms, bats and gloves discarded by big league clubs. Much of their paraphernalia is used until it is so worn or damaged as to be of no further value, but every club manager has on file applications for outfittings no longer suitable for the major circuits.

Just at present the Indian team of St. Mary's Mission School at Omak, Wash., is proudly playing in uniforms formerly worn by the Athletics when they held the title of world's champions.

Manager Connie Mack was appealed to for some discarded suits early this spring, and in answer to the request forwarded not only uniforms, but gloves, bats and balls as well.

THIRD SACKERS LIKE R. WALLACE MIGHTY SCARCE

ST. LOUIS, MO., July 19.—When the count of 10 is tolled on Rhoderick Wallace as a major league player, then baseball will lose one of its greatest stars. But from present indications, Bob Wallace is going to establish a record for perpetual service in the big arena.

When this season opened the Scot started out on his eighteenth consecutive year. As has been the custom for the past few years, the high boss of the Browns has been trying to find a youthful successor for Wallace. A kid of more speed, a better swatter, a better fielder and a better player all around has been sought.

But this spring has been the same as the others. The recruits have arrived and the recruits have gone, and Bob Wallace remains a member of the Browns, playing the same snappy and sensational infield that he did when he was in his prime.

Some Star at Third.

In the last three games at Sportsman's Park fans have seen Wallace operate at third base. That's the spot where the veteran really became a star when he was with the old Cleveland Spiders and when he came to St. Louis, when the franchises of Cleveland and St. Louis were transferred in 1899.

Suffering with a pair of bad legs and a sore right hip, Wallace has played as spectacularly as any third baseman who has been in the big circle.

The play de luxe executed by Wallace was in a recent conflict with the Yanks. It happened in the fifth inning. Fisher was on second, with one out, when Wolter bounded to Lavan. The shortstop made a high peg to Wallace, trying for Fisher.

No third baseman in the game would have completed the out. Wallace, stretching out, grabbed the high throw with his glove, and, with a quick swing, tagged Fisher as he slid into the bag.

Wallace didn't leap for the wild peg. Had he jumped he never could have made the swing to tag Fisher as he slid into the bag. It was a play that nobody but Wallace could have completed.

They Can't Get His Job.

Wallace started to slow up a few seasons ago. President Hedges, realizing this, instructed scouts to buy all the promising infielders. They did. Within the last few seasons, Roy Hartzell, Eddie Hallihan, Mike Balenti, Harry Shanley, Eddie Daley, Derrill Pratt, Dee Walsh, and now Johnny Lavan have been on the job.

There's a collection of eight trying to push Wallace back to the minors. Hallinan, Daley, Shanley, Walsh, Balenti, Pratt and Hartzell failed. The first four are in the minors, while judgment upon Lavan will be delayed a bit until the rah-rah recruit gets more time to show that he can hit.

Bob Wallace isn't the same spry kid he was a dozen years ago, still fans at Sportman's Park, or even Robison Field have yet to see the athlete who compared with the Scot when he was in his prime.

Wallace isn't ready to quit or go to the minors now. He isn't a regular with the Browns, but several major league owners have put in bids to Hedges for the marvel of marvels.

KEENE HORSES WILL BE SOLD AT GARDEN SEPT. 2

NEW YORK, July 19.—Solomon Hanford, executor of the estate of the late James R. Keene, announces the disposal sale of all horses, the property of James R. Keene, will be held in Madison Square Garden on September 2. Hanford's representatives have been sent to England to bring Colin and Peter Pan back to this country and they will arrive about the middle of August.

BOXING
News of the Ring Game

Willie Ritchie has been receiving so many offers for bouts from the different clubs all over the country that he has decided to inspect them all on August 4. The one that the champion considers the largest he will accept and will be ready to meet the opponent picked for him on Labor Day.

* * *

Packey McFarland, who does not believe in fighting during the hot months, has just made an announcement in Chicago to the effect that he has no intention of donning the mitts again until the second week in September. "I only hope that my next bout will be with Willie Ritchie," said Packey, "for I think that I can wrest his title from him."

* * *

Tommy Burns and his heavyweight, Arthur Pelky, are now in Frisco. Burns is trying to get his protege a match with Gunboat Smith on Labor Day. Pelky's chances of landing the mill, however, appear to be very small, as the lightweights are the big cards on the coast at the present time.

* * *

The Leach Cross-Matty Baldwin bout, scheduled to take place at Los Angeles on July 29, may be called off. McCarey refuses to give Leach more than $3,500 for his end of the purse, while Cross is holding out for $5,000.

* * *

* * *

Tommy Walsh, manager of George "Knockout" Brown, is a busy party these days getting his protege in shape for his engagement with Frank Klaus at Butte, Mont., next month. Brown is doing his training in Chicago. The middleweights are scheduled to go twelve rounds.

* * *

Coast fans are now touting Kid Williams as the bantamweight champion of the world. Tom McCarey handed the latter a belt for trimming Ledoux recently. Williams is to hold the belt until he is defeated by some boy of his weight.

* * *

Charlie White, the Chicago sensation, will make his next fight against Freddie Welch at Winnipeg. The pair are scheduled to meet in a 12-round set-to on August 15.

* * *

The middleweight division has another contender in Tim O'Neil, the Hammond, Ind., scrapper. The latter recently stopped Tom McMahon and is practically matched to meet Jim Clabby at Kenosha, Wis.

LANGFORD GETS MATCH.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 19.—Sam Langford arrived here from Australia Friday and before he went to bed last night Manager Woodman had matched him for a four-round go with big Charley Miller for next Friday night.

SOX BUY A. A. CATCHER.

MINNEAPOLIS, July 19.—Nick Allen, catcher, who last season was a member of the Minneapolis American Association team, has been sold to the Chicago American League club.

CHAPPELLE HAS NO PARTICULAR STAR FEATURE

By O. B. Keeler

NOW that it seems pretty definitely settled that Mr. Lawrence Chappelle, Milwaukee outfielder, cost the Chicago White Sox $18,000, or words to that effect, there may be some small curiosity as to the workings of a bit of baseball machinery that can get such an expensive rating in the big show.

That is to say, what sort of a new prize beauty is this Chappelle person.

Well, Chappy—as he was commonly known in the American Association—sports rather an odd distinctive feature. This is the fact that he hasn't any. He can hit; he can field and throw; he is no dub on the bases. But there is no one handle sticking out of Chappy's A. A. record that you can lay hold on and say, "Here is a wonder."

Chappy's best point probably is his hitting. That unquestionably was what attracted attention in the Callahan camp. Chappy did hit becomingly—in the A. A., which also developed Mr. Gavvy Cravath, of the Phillies. He is a big fellow—strong in the arms and shoulders, and able to take a free swing on a fast ball or a savage chop at a curve. He crowds the plate and worries the pitcher.

In the field he is a good, steady performer. He is a good judge of a fly ball and covers a fair territory. He can throw well, but hasn't the arm of Clarence Walker, of Kansas City. He is no speed demon, like Shelton, of Columbus, either in the field or on the towpath.

If Chappy turns out to be a paying investment for Comiskey, it will be because he is that really valuable thing in baseball—an all-round player.

BILLIKEN TEAM TO BE SHIFTED TO LITTLE ROCK

MONTGOMERY, July 19.—Col. Robert Lee Hedges, president of the St. Louis American League Baseball Club, spent last Tuesday in Little Rock. His trip there was for diplomatic and financial reasons, which concern the ultimate taking over of the Montgomery club of the Southern Association by the St. Louis American League Club, and a shift of base being made from Montgomery to Little Rock.

Will Shift the Franchise.

Montgomery has not been supporting the excellent team which Manager Johnny Dobbs has installed there with any spirit, and Colonel Hedges declared, as late as Monday, that if he did secure the Montgomery club —which he was not seeking—there probably would be a shift of the franchise to some other city.

Inferentially, the Colonel's trip to Little Rock Tuesday was for the specific consideration of this shift, though the taciturnity customary in times of baseball political action was maintained about the American League office.

With the tremendous competition among major league teams for embryonic talent it is almost a necessity that each major league club have at least one AA minor league club under its control that can turn into the big ring players fairly well developed. That, of course, would be Hedges' patent purpose in financing the Montgomery club.

Colonel Hedges returned from Little Rock Wednesday morning and said his trip there had been merely to receive the assurance of President William M. Kavanaugh, of the Southern League that the players upon whom he has a string on the Montgomery club would be protected for the Browns in the event the Montgomery franchise was sold.

SEVERAL BIG LEAGUE TEAMS PLAN TO TRAIN IN FLORIDA

JACKSONVILLE, July 19.—Next spring several of the big league teams will do their spring training in Florida. The Chicago Cubs are to go to Tampa, the Philadelphia Americans are coming to this city, and Miami is raising a fund of $5,000 to secure the Cincinnati Reds.

The plan being employed at the Magic City to raise the necessary funds is that of having ten men to deposit notes for $500 in one of the banks. The gate receipts for the exhibition games will be used to reemburse these men at the end of the training season.

The Cincinnati team has been mentioned, but the Miami fans are willing to take care of any big league aggregation which will wend its way southward. All they want is a look at a real, live ball player of the highest type.

JOHNSON WILL DECIDE WHITE-SOX-YANKS ROW

DETROIT, MICH., July 19.—President Johnson, of the American League, will decide the question raised by the recent trade between the New York and Chicago American League clubs involving Hal Chase, Rollie Zeider and Borton.

It will not be necessary to take the questions involved in the New York-Chicago trade before the National Commission, according to President Johnson. "As soon as I get the official report of the whole affair, I'll take care of the matter myself," he said.

PHIL CROSS AFTER BRITTON.

LOS ANGELES, CAL., July 19.—Sam Wallach is after McCarey to stage a welterweight elimination contest here between Phil Cross and Jack Britton. If such a program can be carried out the winner would be matched with Packy McFarland in a final contest for the welterweight championship, a belt and title to go to the winner.

Makes Blotchy Skin Free of All Blemish

The Most Obstinate Skin Afflictions and Eruptions from Poisoned Blood Are Completely Cured Quickly.

This Picture Plainly Shows the Wonderful Change Wrought by S. S. S.

It is certainly remarkable how quickly the action of S. S. S., the famous blood purifier, shows itself in the skin. There is one ingredient in S. S. S. which peculiarly stimulates cellular or glandular activity to select from the blood, or from the fine net work of blood vessels in the skin, those elements which it requires for regeneration.

Thus pimples, acne, eczema, lupus, or any other blood condition that attacks the skin or seeks an outlet through the skin is met with the antidotal effect of S. S. S.

Under the influence of S. S. S. this fine net work of blood vessels in the skin is constantly selecting from the blood the nutrition required for healthy tissue and the cause of disease is just as constantly being removed, scattered and rendered harmless.

It is a great mistake to rely upon cathartics to cure pimples or other facial eruptions. Not only do cathartics cause chronic constipation, but they thin the blood of its valuable and essantial preservatives.

Acne, or that condition of the skin known as pimples, often becomes so persistent that it will continue to old age if not checked by determined methods. And the same with blackheads. A knowledge of the skin and why it becomes the abiding place of so many eruptive conditions will show how futile it is to squeeze pimples or blackheads or put a coating over the skin with grease, powders or other external applications. To clear your skin and to make it stay so requires a stimulating influence in the corium, or the fine net work of tiny blood vessels below the outer and inner layers of skin.

You will be surprised and delighted at the quick change if you use S. S. S., the famous blood purifier. Its action in the skin is quite sensational. These facts are more fully explained in a book on skin troubles sent by The Swift Specific Co., 185 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga. You will find S. S. S. on sale at all drug stores. Get a bottle to-day and banish all skin afflictions.

When you ask for S. S. S., look out for the common trick of trying to sell you something else. Don't be misled.

Dixie Moguls to Make Changes

Many Will Have New Job in '14

By Percy H. Whiting.

THERE'LL be some managerial changes in the Southern League when next season rolls around. They are beginning to crop out already.

The managers who are bound to stick are Bill Smith, in Atlanta; Carleton Molesworth, at Birmingham, and quite probably, Mike Finn, at Mobile.

Bill Smith has a two-year contract, so he is sure of his berth for another term. Molesworth appears a fixture. Mike Finn can undoubtedly have the Mobile job again if he wants it, but he may not. It's a pretty discouraging job, and on his showing this year, and for many years past, Honorable Mique is entitled to something better.

* * *

Dobbs will go higher—maybe only to the American Association, more probably to the American League.

Charlie Frank will go—nobody knows where—but he will GO. That's a certainty. They are through with him in New Orleans. The Cleveland club owners, who own likewise the Pelican franchise, will send C. Frank sailing. Who will take his place nobody pretends to know. Maybe the Cleveland folks will come out in the open and admit the ownership by putting a Cleveland cast-off in as manager. Possibly they will play it safe by giving the job to Bill Bernhard, who was with Cleveland before he came to the Southern League. Or, maybe, they will play it safer still and put in some guy there who is game to tackle the tremendous task of cleaning up Pelicanville, running off the gamblers and putting the game there back in the position it belongs.

* * *

IN the rest of the cities there is uncertainty. It is to be expected that Elberfeld will be retained by Chattanooga. He has made good. But then, when two such explosive characters as O. B. Andrews, club president, and the Tabasco Kid are hooked up on any business deal, a split is always possible.

Presumably, Bill Schwartz can stick along at Nashville as long as he wants. But he isn't likely to stay a minute longer than it takes him to get a good job elsewhere. Bill is entitled to a better job than he has. He is a live guy.

The same goes for Bill Bernhard. He is hooked up with a dead crowd in a baseballically-speaking dead town. He would be tickled green to get a job somewhere else. He ought to do it. Continued association with that crowd of chronic losers—and losers through no fault of his—is robbing him of his pep, his "ambish," and his reputation. Bill is probably looking around for a job. He is entitled to one, too. He has done wonders with poor backing.

* * *

THIS seems to be a good year for the bench managers. Finn, Dobbs and Smith, who have ceased to be players, and do their hard work from the bench, have been making most of the race. But this does not necessarily prove anything.

As a rule, the only teams in this league which can afford bench managers can afford good ball clubs. There are too many exceptions this year, however, to make that rule worth a hang.

Really the two teams which have made the most marvelous showing—Mobile and Montgomery—are cheap teams. The Atlanta club and the Lookouts are the only high-priced aggregations that have caused a riffle this year.

CLARK JOINS CRACKERS; BRADY GIVEN RELEASE

NEW ORLEANS, July 19.—Pitcher George Clark, the left-hander turned over to Atlanta by Manager Clark Griffith, of the Washington Americans, joined the Crackers here yesterday.

Jim Brady, the veteran right-hander, was given his unconditional release and is now free to sign where he pleases. Every team in the league waived on him.

LOOKOUTS SECURE WALSH, SHORTSTOP, FROM BROWNS

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., July 19. President O. B. Andrews, of the local club, announced to-day that he had secured Shortstop Dee Walsh from the St. Louis American League Club. Walsh will report immediately.

GEO. SUGGS MAY FIGURE IN REDS-PHILLIES TRADE

PHILADELPHIA, July 19.—It was said here this afternoon that the Cincinnati and Philadelphia National League teams were negotiating for an exchange of players. It was reported that Pitcher Suggs, of Cincinnati, might come to Philadelphia in exchange for one of the utility men of the local club.

MORRIS MEETS BENEDICT.

JOPLIN, MO., July 19.—Negotiations have been completed for a fifteen-round bout between Carl Morris, of Sapulpa, Okla., and Al Benedict, of New York, to be fought in Joplin July 25.

LOOKOUTS GET WALSH.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., July 19.—Shortstop "Dee" Walsh, sensational fielder with Mobile last year, has been bought by Chattanooga from the St. Louis Browns.

THOMAS AND DALY MATCHED.

EVANSVILLE, IND., July 19.—Young Joe Thomas, of St. Louis, and Jack Daly, of Indianapolis, both welterweights, who fought here a few weeks ago, have been matched for a fight at McLean, Ky., on Labor Day.

Sports and Such

WELCOME.

How dear to my heart is that line of the races,
When again in the paper each morn it is spied,
And I think of the dough that my trust oft misplaces:
"Public Stung—Favorite Is Disqualified!"

* * *

TY COBB, EVERS AND Zimmerman are the best friends of the umpires. They keep down competition for those jobs.

* * *

FREDDIE WELCH IS going to take enough time away from his work at the typewriter proving that he is lightweight champion of the world, to fight Johnny Dundee, which is an unusual proceeding for a box-fighter. Most of them prefer to stand or fall by their press agents.

* * *

KID WILLIAMS, THE wonderful little Baltimore bantam, is persistently violating what the National Commission would probably call the "ethics" of the profession. He insists on knocking out some guy about once a week.

* * *

* * *

* * *

TOO MUCH.

The magnate spoke of "Ethics"—
It was his latest breath,
For he lay down on the carpet
And laughed himself to death.

* * *

MR. EBBETS TO THE contrary, baseball seems to be reaching the age of sophistication. The owners of the Boston club could see no more reason for keeping Jake Stahl than for treasuring the chopped-up tickets of the world's series games he won for them a few short months ago.

* * *

SPEAKING OF ETHICS, it is only about sixty hours ago that Ban Johnson and President McAleer solemnly avowed that there was not the slightest chance that Stahl would be ousted from the leadership of the world's champions.

* * *

THE CHIEF OBJECTION of the magnates to Ty Cobb is that he does not confine his running wild to the bases only.

* * *

LONG ISLAND MOTORISTS are threatening to appeal to the Game Warden against the practice of "planting" motor cops in artificial cover to nail them.

* * *

STAHL OUT, M'ALEER TO JOHNSON.

* * *

AS WAS EXPECTED, THERE is no sign of a movement toward the extradition of Jack Johnson. The Federal Government can not, in these skittish times, afford to antagonize the large White Hope vote.

* * *

IT HAS BEEN DISCOVERED that by jabbing a knife into a golf ball that contains an acid filler that game can be made nearly as interesting as motorcycling or aviation.

* * *

SELFISH.

There was a guy in our town
(He had a family, too),
Who let his life insurance lapse,
And bought a sail-canoe.

* * *

WHY GET EXCITED OVER the report that the White Sox have paid $15,000 for a minor leaguer? That sum will be made up in two Saturdays by merely those spectators (?) who give up a dollar or so to sit behind a post.

* * *

ROLLIE ZEIDER'S FEET ARE wasted in baseball. Any members so useful in sidestepping real work ought to be attached to a boxfight champion.

NEXT EVENT AT DROME WILL BE 26-MILE RACE

THERE was excitement a plenty, all right, at the Atlanta Motordrome last night. But it isn't a simmering circumstance to what will be uncorked Tuesday night in the first Motordrome Marathon ever held in the Dixie States.

This race will go the full 26 miles, which makes it nearly four times as long as any race ever held thus far in Atlanta. Ten riders will start. You can readily realize the possibilities.

The racing last night had whiskers on it.

McNeil had his J. A. P. running like a real motorcycle and he trimmed Richards in the Motordrome Purse in a thrilling contest. In the Atlanta Sweepstakes Richards reversed the decision. The invitation race went to Henry Lewis. In the Handicap Renel one of the men with a lap handicap finished first.

The summary:

MOTORDROME PURSE.
(Heats and Final, Two Miles.)

First Heat—Georges Renel, Billy Shields and Morty Graves; time, 1:28 2-5.

Second Heat—Jock McNeil, George Lockner and Henry Lewis; time, 1:26.

Third Heat—"Tex" Richards, Harry Schwartz, Harry Glenn and Freddie Luther; time, 1:29 4-5.

Final—McNeil, Richards, Renel and Lockner; time, 1:27 2-5.

who was forced out by engine trouble.

ATLANTA SWEEPSTAKES.
(Heats, 2 Miles; Final, 3 Miles.)

First Heat—McNeil, Schwartz, Luther and Lewis; time, 1:28.

Second Heat—Richards, Graves and Renel; time, 1:30.

Third Heat—Shields, Lockner and Glenn; time, 1:28.

Final—Richards, McNeil, Shields and Schwartz; time, 2:05.

INVITATION.
(Three Miles.)

Lewis, Graves and Luther; time, 2:13 3-5.

FOUR-MILE HANDICAP.

Renel, Shields, Lockner and McNeil; time, 2:55. The first three had a one-lap advantage over the Scotch rider and also over "Tex" Richards, who was forced out by engine trouble

BASEBALL CONTRACTS.

The word "contract" is derived from the Attic verb "con," meaning to heave the bull. The other half of the word was thrown in merely to disguise its real meaning.

A baseball contract is an agreement, duly signed and witnessed, whereby a helpless youth gives up his right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness until death do us part, or words to that effect. He does this voluntarily, even as the wayfarer gives up his goods and chattels to a perfect stranger who places the muzzle of a gatling gun athwart his heaving bosom.

A youth who has signed a baseball contract is perfectly free to do anything his manager orders. He is also free to resign whenever he pleases, but resigning is not popular among athletes, owing to the general prejudice against starving to death.

Under the present system of peonage a ball player is fully as important as an insect. In some instances, as in the case of Tyrus R. Cobb, the insect turns out to be a little busy bee, improving the shining hour, and the magnate gets stung. These magnates never seem to get over the habit of approaching a bee at the wrong end.

The life of the athlete is a merry one. He is wafted hither and yon in cool and refreshing sleeping cars and given free bed and fodder, even as the noble truck horse.

And when he fails to draw the requisite amount of kale at the gate he is handed a swift kick and headed in the direction of the boneyard. It is then, and not until then, that his contract becomes valuable, for, if he grows hungry he has the privilege of eating it.

My country, 'tis of thee,
Sweet land of liberty
(So it is said.)
Land where I sign to play
My youthful life away
Forever and a day
To earn my bread!

Land where magnates stand
Together hand in hand
And thus repeat:
"You low-browed gents are free
To work for none but me,
Unless you do, by gee,
You do not eat!"

While we have the profoundest respect for the power of the law, we fear that in order to separate the Cub owner from that $3,000 Artie Hofman will have to call in the aid of a jimmy.

Fielder Jones is one of the few men who can burst into print by offering himself a $25,000 job and then refusing it.

We all have something for which we may be thankful. For instance, Mr. Coulon may congratulate himself on the fact that he was not in the shoes of Mr. Ledoux.

Mr. McAleer is willing to concede that Jake Stahl is the greatest baseball manager in the banking business.

While there is a controversy in the East over Sunday baseball, it is safe to say that neither St. Louis team is in danger of being found guilty of playing ball on Sunday—or on week-days.

STEIN SONG.

Oh, it's always wet weather
When club owners get together.
(Etc.)

Aside from taking money from a blind man, it is hard to think of a more cruel and unusual act than protesting a game against Frank Chance.

Tom Lynch arises to remark that he thinks well of his umpires. The amazing part of it is that he has seen them at work.

SOMETHING ELSE AGAIN.

Old King Cole is a wonderful soul
His work is a perfect dream.
He makes them whiff till their arms are stiff
But not on a big league now.

Hub Perdue Has Won 11; Lost 7

Keeping Braves Out of Cellar

ALTHOUGH with a club that is now in sixth place, a good many points under the .500 mark, Hub Perdue, the former Nashville hurler, now with the Boston Braves, has won 11 and lost only 7 games this season. That's a percentage of .632 and is about 200 points ahead of that of his team.

The right-hander has won his last six contests, and has been returned the winner in nine of his last ten starts. That's a pretty good record for any pitcher, and it's no wonder that Johnny McGraw, of the Giants, was so anxious to get the big right-hander.

Perdue has been with the Braves a good many seasons, but it looks as if this would be the first time in his big league career that he will finish above the .500 mark. In order to do this, though, he must keep on pitching the kind of ball he has so far this campaign.

He is a Giant Tamer.

Probably this is another reason that McGraw would like to get Perdue. Hub has faced the Giants four times this season. He has pitched twenty innings against the National League leaders, and in that time they have counted only seven tallies off him, while he owns two wins over them, and has not been beaten.

Winning six straight, the Braves' right-hander beat the Giants, Phillies, Cardinals, Pirates and the Superbas twice. He has been hit hard in a few of the games, but his teammates always came to the rescue and made more tallies than the other fellows could get off him.

Although he has won eleven and lost only six, Perdue has been hurling none too good ball. He has pitched 134 1-3 innings this campaign and in that time 63 tallies have been scored off him, while the opposition has batted his benders to places unoccupied 126 times. In other words, two hits off him have brought two tallies.

The best game Perdue has pitched was his first of the season, when, on the opening day of the National League season, he shut out the Giants, allowing them only two bingles. He has hurled only two shutouts this season, the other coming against the Pirates, who he let down with four bingles.

Perdue has been working in his regular turn for the Braves this year and it has been his good work that has kept the team from the bottom.

The only teams to beat him this season were the Cardinals, Cubs, Phillies and Superbas. The Cards and Phillies each own two wins over him. Perdue has beaten every club in the league with the exception of the Cubs. His record for the campaign follows:

RIVERS WANTS ANOTHER CRACK AT CHAMPIONSHIP

LOS ANGELES, July 19.—Joe Rivers, the Mexican lightweight, is today anxious to redeem himself in the eyes of the sporting public. Many fans accused Rivers of quitting in his recent fight with Ritchie, and the Mexican is willing to mingle with the champion again in order to wipe out the sting of ridicule.

Rivers will post $5,000 to go as a side bet if Ritchie will agree to battle within three months.

HUSTLING MARKS LAST DAY FOR EXTRA VOTES

Pony Man Says Bonus Doubles Power of Subscriptions—Competitors Urged to Utmost.

Saturday night the special bonus vote offer for pony contestants striving for The Georgian and American prizes comes to a close. Reports show some great hustling is being done.

As has been explained, liberal allowances of extra votes will be made for every club of $35, $25 or $15 paid in for subscriptions. In most cases these bonuses are so liberal as almost to double the regular voting strength of that amount of subscriptions.

"Think of it!" said the contest manager. "Voting power of subscriptions just doubled! Why, if I were a contestant I'd stir heaven and earth to make up a club, and when that had been accomplished I'd stir things up again to get another club. Every contestant ought to turn in at least one $35 club a day, and should try to get two. Then if he falls short of two $35 clubs he can undoubtedly turn in a $35 club and a $25 club. And that means a good bunch of votes."

He means it, too! No acquaintance of his has been left unsolicited. So earnest is he in his desire to win one of the ponies that he is making the work almost his sole business.

This is the day of Miss Robert Harbour's birthday party. Many of her guests have told her they intend giving subscriptions to The Georgian and American as remembrances of her fifth anniversary. The celebration is at 340 Ponce DeLeon avenue.

SIDELIGHTS ON POLITICS

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

That the first contested appointment coming up for Governor Slaton's consideration should have been decided in favor of a Hoke Smith man—to use that ancient and honorable term in differentiating him from the other variety in Georgia—may be accepted, in all probability, as the first bit of evidence that Governor Slaton meant exactly what he said when he stated that he hoped to be, and would try to be, a Governor not of any faction in Georgia, but of all the people.

The Governor on Friday appointed Miller S. Bell, of Milledgeville, trustee of the Georgia Normal and Industrial School, situated there, notwithstanding the fact that Mr. Bell has been an adherent of the Smith factional end of Georgia politics in the past rather than of the Brown end.

There is no question whatever about the entire fitness of Mr. Bell for the position. Governor Slaton might have searched the State for months and not found a better man for the assignment.

These places on the boards of trustees of the State institutions—particularly the Georgia Normal and Industrial School—are considered positions of great honor and trust and are conferred upon the very best men that may be found. For that reason, while they are not sought with that degree of fervor characterizing the usual effort for office, they rarely are declined, and frequently there are warm contests for the same.

Mr. Bell, a Smith man, was aggressively backed by other Smith men before Governor Slaton. His opponent, a good man of the Brown persuasion, was pressed quite as aggressively by other Brown men.

The Governor, in this his first contested case, thought the Smith man the better fitted, for one reason and another, for the position, and the appointment was made accordingly.

And that looks like a fair and square beginning in the line of letting fitness and not faction control in the executive office under the new Governor.

"I wish," said Speaker Burwell today, "I had one thousand pages' jobs to give out.

"There are so many worthy and splendid young boys who come to me for appointments, and the number of appointments I have is so small that it is a continuous matter of embarrassment and regret to me that I am unable to gratify the very great majority of applicants.

"The pages of the House are mainly young fellows, and the experience they get during the sessions is very useful and well worth while to them. I wish I could give every boy who applies to me a job—but, of course, I cannot do that."

Not only that, he also is one of the best dressed men in either House. He effects very light clothing, both as to texture and color, and always looks as fresh and cool as one possibly may in such sizzling weather as that of late.

"If I could keep as cool as McNeil always looks," said Senator Parrish to-day, "I would be mighty happy, I tell you. But I fear no man can be as cool nowadays as McNeil seems to be eternally."

Governor Slaton was a very busy man all day Friday.

During his day or so absence in Brunswick, a very heavy mail piled up in the executive office, which had to be disposed of yesterday.

The Governor is more or less methodical and always tries—and usually succeeds—to get to-day's mail answered and put in charge of 'Uncle Sam" to-day.

The proposed creation of the grand young county of Warner, to be whacked out of Talbot, Meriwether and Harris, has moved the poets of that vicinity to do their very worst.

Judge Henry Revill, editor of The Meriwether Vindicator, is very vehemently opposed to the new county of Warner, particularly in that it would cut pretty far into historic old Meriwether if set up.

A poet of Warner, viewing Judge Revill with evident and pronounced alarm, proposed over the initials C. M. W., recently this dainty quatrain in his honor's honor, the which has been published from one end of the new county to the other:

"Here's to the new county of Warner!
So good-bye to Greenville and Judge Revill.
When we get our new county and courthouse
They can go to the d——l."

The trouble about this, of course, is that few people will believe a person so whole-souled, companionable, good natured and altogether delightful as Judge Henry Revill ever will go to any such person, thing or state of mind as this poet suggests.

Unless the Legislature revoke the dies non declared Saturday, it will adjourn on Thursday, August 14. That will be the final day of the constitutionally limited 50.

Dies non has been declared in the past, time and again, only to be revoked before the end of the session. The great trouble about a dies non, of course, is that the members receive no pay for that day whatever, and it is consequently a dead expense to them. However, a day gets to be a mighty precious thing as the session draws near its end, and the one dies non declared this session likely will stay put.

Although there remain only three weeks ahead of the Legislature, there yet is no talk of afternoon or evening sessions. The afternoons are needed so badly for committee meetings that they can not be spared.

Before the end of the session, however, both afternoon and evening sessions will be held.

Second Georgia Men Enjoy Island Camp

ST. SIMONS ISLAND, July 19.—Routine duties began this morning in the Second Georgia Infantry camp, following the tedious work Friday of pitching tents after making the transfer on lighters from Brunswick. A dip in the surf just before supper and a dance at night dispelled their gloom. Strict regulations are maintained to prevent accidents in the surf.

Under Captain J. M. Kimbrough, companies are consolidated to full war strength of 108 men each, and officers are required to drill under as near actual war conditions as possible. These drills are preliminary to the maneuvers to take place next week.

NEW ORLEANS, July 19.—Hayward Clark: Reliable Texas advices promise abundant early cotton in four weeks, therefore, bull interests are concentrating their efforts to advance the market in the next two weeks before the supply of new cotton checks or destroys their control. Texas advices say dry spell is most favorable. The idea of damaging drouth is manufactured in New York.

* * *

The weather map shows part cloudy in lower Central belt; Tennessee and Florida no rain. High temperatures in several districts in Central and Eastern belts. Normal temperatures in Texas and Oklahoma. Indications are for cooler weather in Northwestern quarter, with probably some showers in Oklahoma and West Texas. Cooler also in the Central belt but continued fair and warm in the Atlantics.

* * *

There were several telegrams in circulation during the late session yesterday to the effect that the crop in sections of the Western belt was deteriorating.

* * *

Around the close Gwathmey, Rosenberg, Rait, Henneman, Hartcorn, McGhee, Riordan, Hicks, Parrott and Holmes were the leading buyers, while Clearman, Shearson, Schill, Rice, Ingersoll, Hubbard, Montgomery and Flynn were the principal sellers.

Hester's Weekly Cotton Statistics

Secretary Hester's weekly New Orleans Cotton Exchange statement of the movement of cotton, issued before the close of business Friday, shows an increase in the movement into sight compared with the seven days ending this date last year in round numbers 7,000, an increase over the same days year before last of 19,000, and a decrease under the same time in 1910 of 14,000.

For the seven days of July, the totals show an increase over last year of 8,000, an increase over the same period year before last of 42,000, and an increase over the same time in 1910 of 6,000.

For the 321 days of the season that have elapsed the aggregate is behind the 321 days of last year 2,177,000, and ahead of the same days year before last 1,782,000 and ahead of 1910 3,252,000.

The amount brought into sight during the past week has been 32,951 bales, against 25,460 for the seven days ending this date last year, 13,704 the year before last and 46,472 same time in 1910; and for the eighteen days of July it has been 79,798, against 71,329 last year, 50,660 year before last and 73,312 same time in 1910.

The movement since September 1 shows receipts at all United States ports 9,757,710, against 11,911,989 last year, 8,537,708 year before last, and 7,252,542 same time in 1910. Overland across the Mississippi, Ohio and Potomac Rivers to Northern mills and Canada 9,736,635, against 1,253,179 last year, 920,929 year before last and 820,056 same time in 1910; interior stocks in excess of those held at the close of the commercial year 73,703, against 31,860 last year, 5,789 year before last and 1,057 same time in 1910; Southern mill takings 2,-452,000, against 2,447,426 last year, 2,-153,496 year before last, and 2,141,701 same time in 1910.

These make the total movement for the 321 days of the season from September 1 to date 13,476,141, against 15,544,-454 last year, 11,684,931 year before last and 10,215,556 same time in 1910.

Foreign exports for the week have been 28,361, against 31,953 last year, making the total thus far for the season 8,402,628, against 10,324,465 last year, a decrease of 1,922,237.

Southern mills takings and Canada during the past seven days show an increase of 2,031, as compared with the corresponding period last year, and their total takings since September 1 have decreased 81,423. The total takings of American mills, North, South and Canada thus far for the season have been 5,087,219, against 5,239,702 last year. This include 2,345,437 by Northern spinners, against 2,726,859.

Stocks at the seaboard and the 29 leading Southern interior centers have decreased during the week 40,409 bales, against a decrease during the corresponding period last season of 47,521 and are now 38,022 smaller than at this date in 1912.

Including stocks left over at ports and interior towns from the last crop and the number of bales brought into sight thus far from the new crop, the supply to date is 10,831,854, against 15,-931,428 for the same period last year.

World's Visible Supply.

The world's visible supply of cotton shows a decrease for the week just closed of 173,539, a decrease of 147,782 last year and a decrease of 128,526 year before last.

The total visible is 2,921,387, against 3,094,926 last week, 2,828,787 last year and 4,958,768 year before last. Of this the total of American cotton is 1,582,-387, against 1,741,926 last week, 1,880,787 last year and 1,004,768 year before last, and of all other kinds, including Egypt, Brazil, India, etc., 1,339,000, against 1,-353,000 last week, 948,000 last year and 954,000 year before last.

The total world's visible supply of cotton, as above, shows a decrease as compared with last week of 173,539, an increase compared with last year of 92,-600, and an increase compared with year before last of 962,619.

Of the world's visible supply of cotton, as above, there is now afloat and held in Great Britain and continental Europe 1,645,000, against 1,813,000 last year and 1,126,000 year before last; in Egypt 101,000, against 70,000 last year and 79,000 year before last; and in the United States 241,000, against 376,000 last year and 244,000 year before last.

World's Spinners' Takings.

This week 193,000 this year, against 163,000 last year, 132,000 year before last.

Total since September 1, this year, 13,237,000, against 14,551,000 last year, and 11,458,000 the year before.

Of this Northern spinners and Canada took 2,345,000 bales this year, against 2,727,000 last year, and 2,032,000 the year before; Southern spinners 2,742,000, against 2,494,000 last year, and 2,228,000 the year before; and foreign spinners 8,150,000, against 9,330,000 last year, and 7,168,000 the year before.

COTTON REGAINS INITIAL DECLINE

NEW YORK, July 19.—Weather conditions had a strong bearing on the cotton market at the opening to-day, and, except for a decline of 3 points in July and August unchanged, the list ruled 1 to 4 points higher. Cables were poor. According to private advices cables were affected by unloading. There was considerable profit-taking at the early advance and eventually prices fell almost to last night's final.

Although trading was very light after the call the market developed a firm tone, through week-end short covering and good buying by the larger spot houses. High temperatures over the belt were the principal cause for the buying, there was talk of hot winds increasing uneasiness of bears, who were predicting a lower market on reports to the effect that temperatures were lower in the Northwest. Later Dallas, Tex. wired that the crop was deteriorating by shedding and boll weevils were damaging the plants considerably.

At the close the market was firm with prices at a net gain of 1 to 8 points from the final quotations of Friday.

GAINS AND LOSSES IN STOCKS BALANCE

California Petroleum Makes New Low Record at Opening, Later It Gains Fractionally.

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, July 19.—California Petroleum made a new low record at the opening of the stock market today, declining 1 point to 19. Later it rallied fractionally, but not sufficiently to be of any importance. The list showed irregularity, the gains and losses being pretty evenly divided.

Amalgamated Copper opened unchanged, then lost a half. Union Pacific, after opening unchanged, shaded fractionally. United States Steel common failed to respond to its strength in the London market. It opened 1-8 up, but soon lost this gain and scored a net decline of 1-4. Lehigh Valley began 1-4 higher, then lost its gain. Canadian Pacific was 1-2 off. Among the gains were Southern Pacific, 1-8; New York, New Haven and Hartford, 2; Mexican Petroleum, 1-8; Great Northern preferred, 1-8; American Smelting, 3-8, and Atchison, 1-4.

Southern Pacific soon lost its gain and went to 92 3-8 for a net loss of 3-8.

New York, New Haven and Hartford showed a continuation of the strength which has manifested itself since Charles S. Mellen resigned as president.

The curb was quiet. Americans in London were steady, with Steel in demand. Canadian Pacific in London was up.

BAR SILVER.

LONDON, July 19.—Bar silver steady at 27¼d.

CHICAGO, July 19.—Wheat showed early losses of ¼ to ⅜ on favorable weather throughout the winter and spring wheat belt and the desire on the part of scattered longs to dispose of their holdings over Sunday. Northwestern receipts were smaller than a year ago, where Winnipeg were large.

Corn was ½ to ⅝c lower. Longs were sellers.

Oats were off ¼ to ½c.

Provisions were lower.

HOG RECEIPTS LARGE.

CHICAGO, July 19.—Omaha reported 16,000 hogs and Sioux City 8,500 to-day. A big week-end run at "the river" usually means easy picking here on Monday. Light shipping grades were strong to 5c higher, 9.65 being bid for seven sorts. Other grades held about steady. A spread of 9.15@9.50 took the bulk.

Steer trade closed steady, but the butcher market was slumpy and the worst case of demoralization this season was reported in the sheep houses.

LEGAL NOTICES.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES, FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF OHIO, IN EQUITY.

Continental and Commercial National Bank vs. Searchlight Gas Company. No. 170.

Public notice is hereby given that, pursuant to a decree entered in the above entitled cause on the 11th day of June, A. D. 1913, and pursuant to the ancillary decree entered on the —— day of ———, 1913, in the District Court of the United States, for the Northern District of Georgia, all of the assets of the Searchlight Gas Company in the possession and control of the undersigned, as receiver of said Searchlight Gas Company, except cash in bank, will be sold at public sale at the premises of the Searchlight Gas Company, at Warren, Ohio, at 12 o'clock noon on the 14th day of August, A. D. 1913. Said sale will be made subject to the following terms and conditions, as provided for in said decree and said ancillary decree:

The successful bidder shall pay to the undersigned receiver at the time of such sale the sum of five thousand dollars ($5,000) on account of his bid, in a certified check, payable to the order of the undersigned, and the balance shall be paid immediately upon confirmation of the sale by the court, and if the bidder shall fail to make good his bid upon its acceptance by the undersigned, or shall fail to comply with the terms of purchase, then such sum shall be forfeited as a penalty for such failure; such sale shall be subject to confirmation by the court, and if the court shall not confirm the sale, for which the deposit has been made, such deposit shall be returned to the bidder, and the court reserves the right to resell the property upon such notice as the court directs.

The purchaser shall be entitled to a conveyance and delivery of the property within ten (10) days after the confirmation of the sale, and a report of the sale shall be made to the court within thirty (30) days from the date of the sale.

A summary of the property and articles to be sold, based upon the last inventory and appraisement of the undersigned, is as follows:

BANKRUPT SALE.

In Re: Horine Development Company, Bankrupt.

Pursuant to an order passed on July 2, 1913, by the Hon. P. H. Adams, a Referee in Bankruptcy for the United States District Court for the Northern District of Georgia, the undersigned, as Trustee, will sell before the Court House door of Walker County, Georgia, in the town of LaFayette, Ga., on the 5th day of August, 1913, between the hours of 11 a. m. and 2 p. m. o'clock, the following described assets, belonging to said bankrupt estate, consisting of realty and personalty, on the terms stated hereinafter. Said property to be sold as an entirety. The following described real estate in Walker County, Georgia, to-wit:

All of Land Lot 284, containing 160 acres, more or less; 53 acres more or less of Land Lot 285, said tract bounded by the cliff of the mountain until said cliff strikes the road across Dug Gap, thence with said road to the west line of said lot, being all of said lot south and west of said cliff and road as described in deed from W. N. Carmony to D. W. Lawrence, dated September 11, 1889; all of Land Lot 292, except that part of said lot conveyed to Henrietta Woods by J. E. Shaw; 53 1-3 acres, more or less, in the northern part of Land Lot 293, and also all that part of Land Lot 293, lying west of the Chattanooga Southern Railroad Company's tracks, purchased by John H. Hill from J. F. Andrews, and by J. F. Andrews from D. W. Lawrence; all of Land Lot 320, lying west of the Chattanooga Southern Railroad Company's tracks, containing 50 acres, more or less; all of Land Lot 321, except two (2) acres lying on the east side of said Land Lot 321, known as the School House property, and one-fourth (¼) of an acre, more or less, on the east side of said lot enclosed and used as a cemetery, and two (2) acres and a fraction where the barn and horse lot is, the line running west to the west bank of a deep gulley, thence following the gulley or ditch to the original line. All of the aforesaid described land being in the eighth (8th) District and fourth (4th) Section of said Walker County, Georgia.

Also the following lots and parcels of land in the seventh (7th) District and Fourth (4th) Section of said Walker County, Georgia, being all of Land Lots Three (3), Four (4) and Five (5), lying west of the Chattanooga Southern Railroad Company's tracks, except so much of said lots as were formerly owned by W. N. and J. H. Herndon and Theodore Parker; also Land Lots Thirty-four (34), Thirty-eight (38) and Thirty-nine (39); and all that part of Land Lots Thirty-three (33), Sixty-nine (69) and Seventy (70), lying west of the Chattanooga Southern Railroad Company's tracks. The property above described containing One Thousand Five Hundred and Sixty-three (1,563) acres, more or less, and being the same property described in a bond for title between John H. Hill and E. M. Horine, dated September 11, 1911, and recorded in Deed Book 24, on page 457, in the office of the Clerk of the Superior Court of Walker County, Georgia.

Also the following tracts or parcels of land described as follows: Land Lots One (1), Two (2) and Thirty-five (35), in the Seventh (7th) District and Fourth (4th) Section of said Walker County, Georgia; also lot of land No. 323, and one hundred and forty (140) acres, more or less, of Land Lot 324, it being all of said lot, except about twenty (20) acres lying on the branch in the west of said lot; also all of Land Lot No. 322, except twenty (20) acres, lying in the southwest corner of said land lot, said twenty (20) acres being now owned by O. T. and W. C. Andrews; also one hundred and forty (140) acres, more or less, of Land Lot No. 290, it being all of said land lot, except twenty (20) acres lying in the northwest corner of said lot; also twenty (20) acres, more or less, lying in the northwest corner of Land Lot No. 291, all being in the Eighth (8th) District and Fourth (4th) Section of said Walker County Georgia. The property described in this paragraph containing One Thousand Two Hundred (1,200) acres, more or less, and being the same property described in a certain bond for title, dated September 11, 1911, and recorded in Deed Book 24, on page 459, in the office of the Clerk of the Superior Court of Walker County, Georgia.

All of the above and foregoing described lands subject to certain reservations, as shown in the conveyance made to E. M. Horine by John H. Hill by deed dated the 17th day of August, 1912, and recorded in the office of the Clerk of Superior Court of Walker County, Georgia, on the 21st day of August, 1912, in Book of Deeds 25, on pages 511 et. seq.

Also, the following tracts and parcels of land, lying and being in Walker County, Georgia, and more particularly described as follows:

Twelfth Tract. Fifteen (15) acres, more or less, of lot of land No. 70 in said Seventh District and fourth section of Walker County, Georgia, it being all that part of said lot lying east of said Tennessee, Alabama and Georgia Railroad.

Thirteenth Tract. Eighty (80) acres, more or less, being the north half of lot of land No. 74; also one hundred and sixty ((160) acres, more or less, of lot of land number seventy-five (75); and also seventy-three (73) acres, more or less, being the west part of lot of land No. 76; all in the Seventh District and fourth section of Walker County, Georgia, the same being the lands conveyed by W. L. Shattuck and T. E. Shaw to John H. Hill.

Fourteenth Tract. Eleven hundred (1,100) acres, more or less, being lots of land Nos. 73, 108, 109, 110, 106, 107, 111 and No. 142, all in the Seventh District and fourth section of Walker County, Georgia, the same being lands conveyed to John H. Hill by G. W. Ransom.

The above fourteen tracts and parcels of land, containing in all two thousand and five hundred (2,500) acres, more or less, and being the same properties conveyed to E. M. Horine by John H. Hill by deed dated the 9th day of December, 1911, and recorded in the office of Clerk of Superior Court of Walker County, Georgia, in deed book No. 25, page 440, on the 16th day of July, 1912. Said tracts and parcels of land are conveyed subject to the following exceptions and reservations, to-wit: All the iron ore, other minerals and petroleum, with the right to enter upon said land, mine and remove the same from any and all parts of said tracts of land.

Also, all that tract or parcel of land lying and being in the Seventh District of the fourth section of the County of Walker, in the State of Georgia, bounded and described as follows: Sixty-five (65) acres, more or less, of lot of land No. 3, it being all that part of the north eighty-five (85) acres of said lot No. 3, except twenty (20) acres, more or less, of the west part of said eighty-five (85) acres, formerly owned by D. H. Styles, the line running from the original north line of said lot at a stone corner, south to the made line between said 85 acres and the seventy-five (75) acres of said lot recently owned by W. H. Shaw to a stone corner on said line.

Also sixty-three (63) acres, more or less, of lot of land No. 4, in said district and section, bounded and described as follows: Beginning at the public road, where the land recently owned by W. H. Wardlaw corners on the original east line of said lot No. 4 and running west to the original west line of said lot; thence south with the original line to a point due west of the lane running east and west through said lot of land; thence east with said lane and line, to the Chattanooga Southern Railroad, now called the Tennessee, Alabama and Georgia Railroad; thence north with said railroad to the beginning point, containing altogether one hundred and twenty-eight (128) acres, more or less. Iron ore and minerals reserved, with mining rights reserved. And being the same property conveyed to Edward M. Horine by John H. Hill, by deed dated the 9th day of December, 1911, and recorded in the office of the Clerk of the Superior Court, Walker County, Georgia, on the 16th day of July, 1912, in deed book 25, page 436.

Also all that tract or parcel of land lying and being in Walker County, in the State of Georgia, and known, distinguished and described as follows: Lots of land Nos. 36, 37, 71 and 72, all in the Seventh (7th) District and fourth (4th) section, each of said lots containing one hundred and sixty (160) acres, more or less, except lot thirty-six (36) which contains one hundred and eighty (180) acres, more or less.

Also lot of land No. 342, in the Eleventh (11th) District and fourth (4th) section, containing sixty (60) acres, more or less.

Also lot of land No. 324 in the Twelfth (12th) District of the fourth (4th) section, containing one hundred and sixty (160) acres, more or less.

Said lots containing in the aggregate eight hundred and eighty ((880) acres, more or less. Reserving all the iron ore in the above described lots of land, together with the right to mine and remove the same. And being the same property conveyed to Edward M. Horine by Shinbone Red Ore Company, by deed dated 11th day of September, 1911, and recorded in office of the Clerk of the Superior Court, Walker County, Georgia, on the 16th day of July, 1912, in deed book 25, page 437. And all of the foregoing several tracts of land, with the reservations set forth, being the same property conveyed to Horine Development Company by Edward M. Horine by deed dated 9th day of January, 1913, and recorded in the office of the Clerk of the Superior Court of Walker County, Georgia, on the 26th day of March, 1913, in book of deeds 26, page 423 et seq.

Also, all the iron ore and all other minerals and petroleum that may be in and upon the following tracts and parcels of land, to-wit:

First Tract. Eleven hundred (1,100) acres, more or less, of lots of land Nos. 73, 74, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 142, all in the Seventh (7th) District and fourth (4th) section of Walker County, Georgia, and being the land conveyed by G. W. Ransom to John H. Hill.

Second Tract. Eighty (80) acres, more or less, the north half of lot of land No. 74; one hundred and sixty (160) acres, more or less, of lot of land No. 75; and seventy-three (73) acres, more or less, west part of lot No. 76; all in the Seventh (7th) District and fourth (4th) section of Walker County, Georgia, the same being the land conveyed by W. L. Shattuck and T. E. Shaw to John H. Hill.

Third Tract. Lot of land No. 70, in said Seventh (7th) District and fourth (4th) section of Walker County, Georgia, containing one hundred and sixty (160) acres, more or less.

Fourth Tract. Lot of land No. 69, in the Seventh (7th) District and fourth (4th) section of Walker County, Georgia, containing one hundred and sixty (160) acres, more or less.

Fifth Tract. Lots of land Nos. 38, 39, in said Seventh (7th) District and fourth (4th) section of Walker County, Georgia, said lots containing one hundred and sixty (160) acres each, and being the land conveyed by J. M. Ransom to John H. Hill.

And all of said five tracts of land being the same property conveyed to E. M. Horine by John H. Hill, by deed dated the 9th day of December, 1911, and recorded in office of Clerk of the Superior Court of Walker County, Georgia, on the 16th day of July, 1912, in book No. 25 of deeds, on page 439.

And being the same property conveyed to Horine Development Company by Edward M. Horine, by deed dated the 9th day of January, 1913, and recorded in office of the Clerk of the Superior Court of Walker County, Georgia, on the 26th day of March, 1913, in book of deeds No. 26, page 422.

Said sale to be to the highest bidder. A certified check for $6,000 shall be deposited by each bidder with the trustee before any bid shall be received from such bidder or be considered from such bidder. Checks shall be immediately returned to the unsuccessful bidders.

Such checks so deposited with the trustee shall be delivered to him, as a pledge that such bidder will make good his bid in the event of its acceptance. The deposit made by the successful bidder will be applied on account of the purchase price. In the event the bidder shall fail, after acceptance of said bid, to comply with the requirements of his said bid, then such amount so deposited shall be forfeited as a penalty for such failure. The purchaser or purchasers on the confirmation of the sale by the court shall pay in cash such further sum on account of the purchase price as the court may direct and as may be necessary to satisfy the claims of creditors whose claims shall have been or may hereafter be allowed by the court. So much of the purchase price as shall not be required to be paid in cash may be satisfied by the purchaser turning in and applying to the payment of the residue of his bid, in whole or in part, any claim against the bankrupt estate which has been or which may hereafter be allowed as a provable claim, and that upon such claims so turned in as aforesaid, the purchaser shall be credited on his bid with such sum as would have been paid on account of such claim out of the net proceeds of sale, if the whole amount of the purchase price were to be paid in cash.

The court reserves the right to order a resale, and to resell the property upon such notice as it might direct, at the risk and the cost of the purchaser thereof, in case such purchaser shall fail or omit to make any payment on account of the purchase price pursuant to an order of court requiring such payment.

The court may reject any bid and may retake and resell the property, if the court shall deem such bid inadequate, or upon the failure of the purchaser to comply with the terms of sale. The sale shall be confirmed by the court.

Full information and property can be seen upon application to undersigned.

POULTRY, PET AND LIVE STOCK

Read With Care; Facts to Know

Each One Means Success in Handling Your Fowls.

The decaying carcass of one dead fowl will cause you enough trouble in the shape of cholera or limberneck to make you wish you had never seen a chicken. Avoid all this trouble by looking after the little things about the poultry yards and runs. Clean up the premises. Many a thing in the shape of filth can be endured in cold weather that will not do at all when the weather gets hot.

Never throw soft feed upon the ground to be trampled under foot and become sour and filthy, to say nothing of the waste.

When you see the setting hen inclined to stand up on her nest, you can just bet your best money that she is covered with mites, and the nest, too, has a full supply. A good plan is to investigate all the setters a number of times during the incubating period in order to get rid of the mites before they get the best of you and the hen, too.

During the hot, dry months it is a good plan to set hens upon the ground, or, if this can not be done conveniently, cover the bottom of the nest with a piece of damp sod, upon which place the nesting material. At this season, when everything is so dry, and the air has so little moisture in it, good eggs often fail to hatch on account of this lack of moisture. This is why one can help matters along so by the use of sod in the nest. It can be kept damp by pouring water over it about once a week.

No code or set rules can be secured that will fit your place well enough for you to adopt them verbatim. Conditions vary so much that the best thing to do is to accept any good thing that has been satisfactorily worked out, adapting it to your own conditions and surroundings. This applies in all branches of the poultry business.

Whitewash is a good thing about the poultry yards and houses. Whitewash everything but your methods, let them stand for just what they are worth. If you are not doing all you should or can to make your business a success, do not whitewash it by trying to make others believe, and yourself as well, that you are doing great things.

And still the question comes, which is the best breed for me to adopt that I may make a success in the poultry business? It depends very much upon which plan you prefer to pursue. Whether you want to raise broilers alone or a combination of broilers and egg production, or stock strictly for an egg farm. For broilers or broilers and eggs, the American breeds, such as the Plymouth Rock, Wyandottes and Rhode Island Reds, are the best that can be obtained and will not disappoint. For stocking an egg farm where large numbers are kept, the Leghorn—White or Brown—with the preference rather in favor of the Whites, are used most extensively with the greatest success. Black Minorcas do not seem to thrive so well as the Leghorns, when kept in large numbers, but, as they lay a very large egg, they are very satisfactory to breed to keep for eggs for family supply.

Take care of the poultry house droppings; it is worth money to you as a fertilizer. We would advise a roomy compost pen, under cover, where the droppings can be kept and mixed with leaves or soil as it is thrown in. If you have not shed suitable for such a pen, set four posts at a suitable distance to support a cheap board or tarred paper roof. If you have never properly cared for them before you will be surprised how much valuable fertilizing material you will secure from a hundred hens. If you are arranging for new poultry yards, locate them permanently, and in the fall, set them with fruit trees—plums, pears, ets. Poultry and fruit of these kinds seem to work hand in hand. The trees will furnish shade for the chickens, while the chickens will gather the insects which ordinarily injure the fruit.

Feed your fowls judiciously that they may not eat up all the profits. Feed them enough, but do not allow the feed to be wasted. Fowls, when gorged with food, will not lay as well as those that have just enough to make them active and healthy. Cutting the corners is where the profit comes in, as a rule.

Do not go to killing off all your hens that do not lay up to the 250-a-year standard. Work off as high an average in your flock as you can, but do not insist upon the impossible. You read a good deal about the wonderful record of some individual hen has made, but the money-makers are the good, all-around, average flocks, giving us about 150 eggs to the hen. Let the good work go on.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Brown Estate Lots Are Sold by Foster

Certain properties in the estate of the late Julius L. Brown are gradually being disposed of through the administrator, ex-Governor Joseph M. Brown, and Atlanta real estate agents. Some time ago a tract was sold on Decatur street, semi-central property, at a good price, and the Julius Brown home on Washington street was put on the market.

The latest sale is of fifteen vacant lots fronting 800 feet on Little and Crew streets to a client of the Foster & Robson Agency, and of an adjoining lot for the Exchange Bank to Victor L. Smith. The prices are withheld. The sales were made by W. A. Foster, of the above agency.

The Joseph E. Brown property near the Soldiers' Home has been placed with an agency for subdivision.

Lots of Cash for Property.

Cash sales are again coming to the front. Judge W. R. Hammond has sold to Edward England through I. W. Harrell, of the George P. Moore Agency, the two-story frame house at No. 218 North Jackson street, between Adams street and East avenue, for $6,600 cash. This property is 55 by 200 feet and is on the north side of the street. Mr. England will make his home there.

Paul Nuckols has sold to Mrs. S. W. Goode a parcel on Auburn avenue just east of Piedmont, 25 by 112 feet, for $11,000 cash. The transaction was handled through A. S. Hook, of the Foster & Robson Agency. The property is improved with a two-story brick building.

Encroachment of Building.

An encroachment of four inches on the city's sidewalk by the Ponce DeLeon apartments at the southeast corner of Peachtree and Ponce DeLeon avenue has been reported to Building Inspector Hays by Assistant Inspector C. J. Bowen, and the matter will be taken before the City Council.

Frontage at this point is worth about $1,200 a foot. An effort was made to widen Peachtree here, it will be recalled, before the apartments were started, but the project fell through.

Ansley Park Car Line.

A quiet movement has been on foot for several weeks to get a car line through Ansley Park, and those who are interested in the project are hoping for success. The idea is to extend the Piedmont avenue line, which stops just a few hundred yards south of the city limits, through to Polo drive, over that thoroughfare's stone bridge and thence to Rock Springs.

The people of the Rock Springs section have been seeking a car line many months, and it seems to be simply a question of which route to choose to their neighborhood. The line, they have been assured, will be extended to Rock Springs, either through Ansley Park or by way of Piedmont avenue. Realizing what Edwin P. Ansley has done for the city, heavy owners in the Rock Springs section have felt inclined to pull for the Ansley Park route. The other way, however, would make it possible to widen Piedmont avenue.

"Ansley Park must soon have its car line," declared a well-known real estate dealer. "There are too many nickels for the street car company."

Sell Property for Taxes.

People who are accustomed to hunt real estate bargains in Atlanta will soon find their opportunity, although there won't be any chance to buy central or semi-central property at a reduction. Charles W. Smith, chairman of the Council Tax Committee, has discovered that the city holds overdue tax liens against $41,000 worth of property, mostly vacant lots, and he has ordered that they be sold. The date and the place of the sale will be announced later. Some of the property is improved with small buildings.

To Discuss Realty Loans.

An important meeting of the members of the Atlanta Real Estate Board will be held Tuesday afternoon at 3 o'clock in room 314 of the State Capitol to urge the passage of the sinking fund investment bill, which provides for investing State reserve funds in real estate as a first lien as well as in bonds.

On the committee to see the proper authorities about this legislation are Harris G. White, president of the board; S. B. Turman, second vice president, and W. A. Foster, of the Foster & Robson Agency, and a director of the board. They will not only appear before a legislative committee, but will use every effort between now and Tuesday to get all the real estate men to attend the meeting.

Representatives Field and Smith, of DeKalb, are the authors of the bill to repeal the measure of 1910, which restricts such loans to bonds. Real estate constitutes about 69 per cent of the taxable values in Fulton County and about 54 per cent in the State, and because of this it is held that such discrimination should not exist.

Results of Realty Elections.

"There is plenty of work before the Atlanta Real Estate Board in the next year," declared Harris G. White Friday night at the Cafe Durand, in accepting the position of president to succeed Charles P. Glover. "For some time I have been in close touch with the affairs of the board, and I know what it means to run this organization. I want all of you to make suggestions and take an active interest, and we are sure to demonstrate the need for the organization."

Mr. White's talk followed an impromptu parade around the room, escorted by Mr. Glover and S. B. Turman, with the land brokers singing "He's a jolly good fellow!" and things like that. Charles P. Glover spoke briefly on the duties of the past year and predicted success under President White. A vote of thanks was given him, S. B. Turman eulogized him and the members voted thanks to all the retiring officers.

Others elected were John J. Woodside, vice president; S. B. Turman, second vice president; Van B. Smith, secretary, and H. W. Dews, treasurer.

The following six directors were elected to serve until 1914: Forrest Adair, W. A. Foster, S. L. Dallas, G. M. McKinnon, J. H. Ewing and J. W. Dobbins. The following six will serve until 1915: Charles P. Glover, A. S. Hook, Edgar Morris, T. B. Gay, A. J. West and S. E. Davidson. The following were elected to serve as the appraisement committee R. O. Cochran, T. C. Holmes, W. L. DuPree, H. W. Dillin, Fitzhugh Knox, R. R. Otis. One more will be appointed by the president owing to the resignation of Walker Dunson.

A change in the by-laws was effected, allowing six directors to be elected each year to serve for the ensuing two years. This will allow six members of the twelve to end their terms every year, and will facilitate the work of the board.

The appraisement committee was raised from five to seven, and the board of directors from eleven to twelve.

Realty Men's Good Luck—Oil.

The Atlanta real estate fraternity has received with more than ordinary interest the news that four of its members—B. M. Grant, T. J. Cheshire, Myron Freeman and J. M. Fraser, all of the Grant Agency—have struck oil on a 160-acre tract which they bought some time ago near Oklahoma City, Okla. For a time the prospect looked hopeless, but while Mr. Grant was at Toxaway this week he received a telegram that the well was flowing 150 barrels a day. Mr. Grant and D. C. Lyle, of the Georgia Realty Company, a stockholder in the developing concern, the Huguely Company, went immediately to the scene.

Good Demand for Homes.

The demand for Atlanta homes, especially on the North Side, holds up steady. A leading real estate agency has a client, for instance, who wants to put $10,000 cash into a North Side residence. This office had a number of inquiries Saturday.

A citizen wants to exchange a piece of semi-central property within the half-mile circle for a North Side home worth $12,000 to $16,500, paying the difference.

Another agency has customers for a ten-room home that can be used for two families, and for a twelve-room home for boarding house purposes. The latter are wanted on the North Side.

Significant to people renting houses is the fact that there are very few "for rent" cards out in West End, Decatur and other suburbs.

Save Unfortunate Women and Protect Society

That a majority of unfortunate women can be saved and society protected at the same time has been demonstrated beyond the question of a doubt. Therefore, it is essential that a bill now pending in the Georgia Legislature, which has been favorably reported by the Prisons Committee, looking to the construction of a reformatory for vicious women, should become a law, and that the Appropriations Committee, to which the bill has been referred, should report favorably.

The bill calls for an appropriation of $75,000 for the construction and maintenance of the institution, which is small indeed when the welfare of society and the saving of women is taken into consideration.

An exhaustive investigation has been made in many States as to the cause of prostitution of women—low wages, insanitary conditions in factories and stores, etc., have been given as a cause in a great many instances, and a correction of these conditions has been announced as a preventive, which is well and good, but what to do with those we have already is a question that is attracting the attention of good citizens in every State in the Union.

This question has been solved to such an extent that three-fourths of the inmates of the Bedford Reformatory in New York have been saved, while only one-fourth have returned to the old life after a stay of two years in this reformatory.

This method of treating vice has proven so successful that those good men and women who have been giving of their time and money for the cause of fallen women are encouraged, and will continue the work until satisfactory results are obtained.

As to the work and results at Bedford Reformatory, Lyman Abbott writes as follows:

"When a prostitute is brought before a New York judge, he may discharge her, with or without a fine; he may send her to the workhouse for a short term—I believe three months is the maximum—or he may send her to the Bedford Reformatory. The experience of the past indicates that the deterrent power of fear is very ineffective as a cure for crime, yet something may be said for the deterrent power of fear as a preventive, if not as a cure. But a fine or three months in the workhouse has no deterrent power. When the fine is paid or the three months have expired, the girl has no option but to take to the street and resume her vicious career. No home and no factory will or indeed can take her in and give her a chance for a better life. This is just what the Bedford Reformatory does. It brings her into an atmosphere not merely of cleanliness and of industry, but of hopefulness. It puts before the girl an open door. It inspires her with courage to believe that she can enter it if she chooses to do so. It inspires that wish in her, and, by training, gives her some measure of preparation for earning an honest livelihood. While practically every girl treated by the other method goes back to prey upon the community again, the figures show that less than one-quarter of those who are discharged from the Reformatory after a two years' imprisonment resume their vicious occupation."

Is not the establishment of an institution in Georgia that has been proven a success in another State worth trying?

The time to act is NOW. The good women and men of Georgia are giving their time and money in the cause of the unfortunates. If only one-fourth of the women imprisoned there are saved, it is worth the price.

Georgia should REFORM criminals, NOT MAKE THEM.

The City

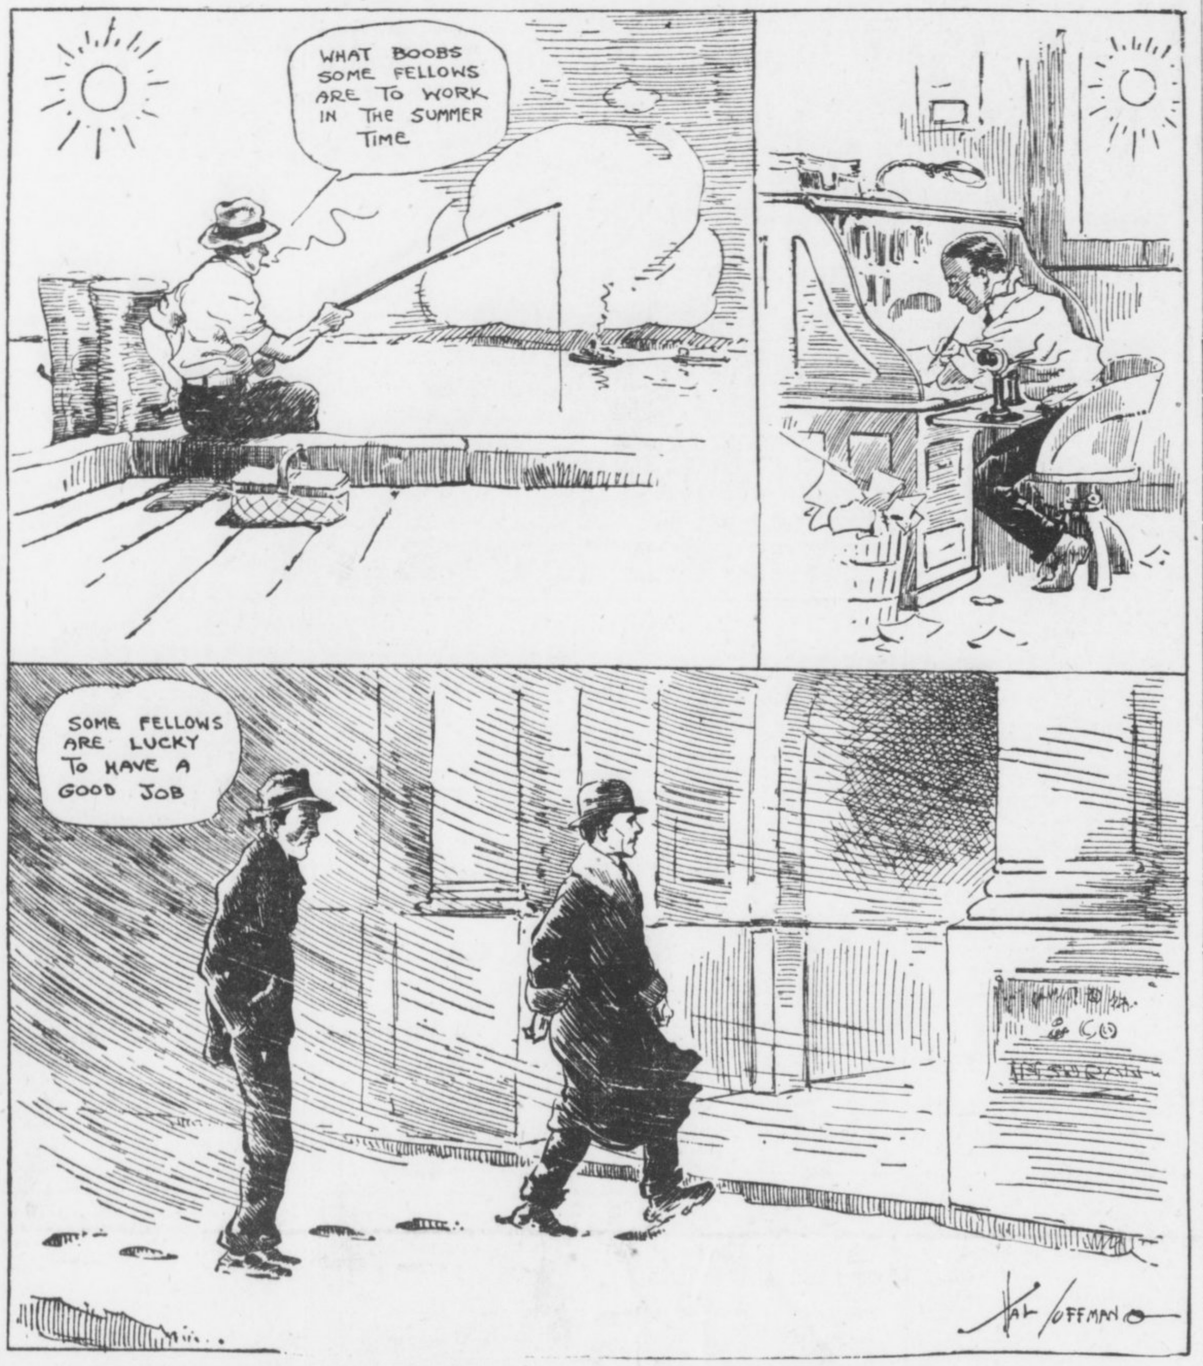
By Gordon Johnstone.

THERE'S a brave world I know called The Great Out-o'-Doors,
Where the wind and the wave lure our feet,
And the green o' the fields meets the wan, tired eyes
With the touch and the kiss o' a lost paradise;
Where the chickadee calls and the wild eagle soars,
And the lark trills his sweetest o' sweet;
But give me the city,
Its pain and its pity,
Its highways and byways o' heat.

Oh, a man may live off on a hilltop alone,
Where the days are a-wing on a song,
But he'll never sound depths that are human and deep
By running away from the herd o' the sheep,
By shutting his heart to the tear and the groan
O' the lovable suffering throng.
So give me the city,
Its grief and its pity,
Its spendthrift, its weak and its strong.

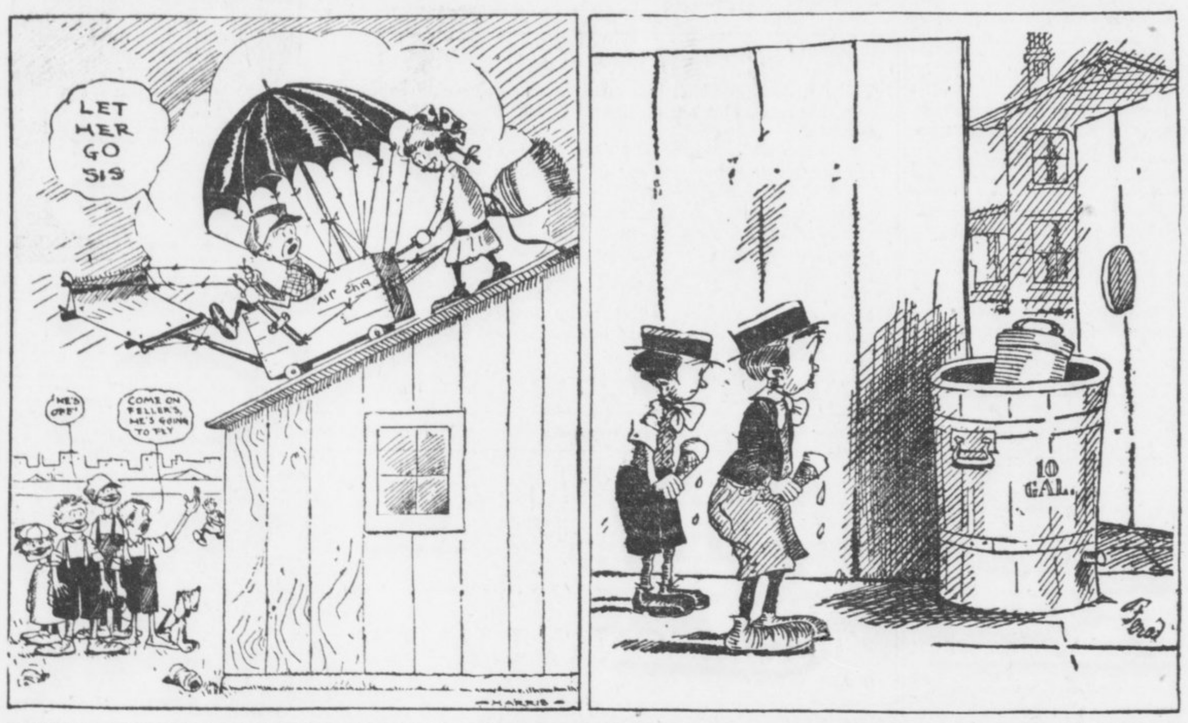
Oh, here is the Kingdom of Fair Worlds to Be
When the peace-riders come silver-shod,
For there isn't a cavil, when all's said and done,
That the Maker in making MEANT ALL TO BE ONE,
As the streams of the nations that merge in one sea
And move at the wind o' His nod.
So hail the World-City,
Its pride and its pity,
That's built on the high road o' God.

The Grasshopper and the Ant



The grasshopper, you know, sings all Summer while the ant toils away laying up a store for the Winter. When the cold pinches, the grasshopper thinks the ant lucky to have plenty of provisions. But a man should know better than to think that it's luck that keeps one in a good job.

The Young Aviator---And the Young Paupers



EDMUND BURKE

By Rev. Thomas B. Gregory

WHEN Edmund Burke died, one hundred and sixteen years ago, July 9, 1797, one of the greatest intellects and finest spirits of which the English-speaking world could boast passed out from the ways of men.

Old Dr. Sam Johnson said: "Burke is such a man that if you met him for the first time in the street, where you were stopped by a drove of oxen, and you and he stepped aside to take shelter but for five minutes, he'd talk to you in such a manner that when you parted you would say, 'This is an extraordinary man.'" When the old doctor was asked for his opinion regarding the authorship of the Letters of Junius, he declared that if Burke was not the author of the famous letters he could not guess who might be, since Burke was the only man then living in England who had the genius to write them.

Edmund Burke has often been called a paradox, a contradiction. A conservative of the Conservatives, he was at the same time an ardent progressive. A stanch champion of the ancient order, he was one of the greatest friends of the American revolt against King George. To add to the puzzling situation, while he said Godspeed to the American uprising, he emptied upon the heads of the French revolutionists the vials of his hottest wrath.

The explanation is not far to seek. Burke's ruling passion was for the thing known in these days as "Due Process of Law." Orderliness, in a word. In the American Revolution he saw nothing contrary to that idea; while the French Revolution, as it impressed Burke, was the very apotheosis of anarchy and chaos.

Parental Obligation

Primitive Habit of Looking on Father as Domestic Commissary Is Entirely Wrong--His Qualities and Teachings Necessary to Raise Male Child to Ideal Manhood.

Written For The Georgian

By the Rev. Dr. C. H. Parkhurst

WHAT is the extent of the parental obligation which a father owes to his children? The question deserves consideration because of its close bearing upon the purpose of domestic life, which is to produce children and make them serviceable to the interests of their times.

It has been pointed out that the terms "father" and "feeder" are but variable forms of one and the same word. So understood, the father is merely the one who provisions the family and stands to it in the relation of commissary.

In the more primitive forms of familyhood, when increasing the human breed, rather than improving it, met all recognized requirements, nothing more would naturally be demanded of the father than that the young of the family, like the young of the flock and herd, should be amply supplied with what will sustain life and promote growth. So that the faithful father would simply be he who was the attentive feeder, with no responsibility that looked beyond what the children needed as young and growing animals.

It is one of the features of more finished civilization that in some respects it continues to cherish customs and modes of thinking and feeling inherent in civilization of a more primitive type, but which we should suppose would have been outgrown and left behind with the process of time and the broadening and mellowing of sentiment.

Father as Commissary.

We have an example of this in the rather general continuance to the present time of the primitive habit of looking upon the father as the domestic commissary, and of considering that the obligations with which he has been especially charged have been fulfilled when his children have had furnished them all that is required by their creature necessities—housing, clothing and food.

He is reckoned a dutiful father if he keeps up the house and leaves it to the mother and her proxies to furnish education, morals, religion and all the finer accessories; he to take care of the child as an animal, and she to look after him as a person.

Without raising the question as to whether exclusive maternal influence will suffice for the successful upbringing of a family of girls, it is distinctly insufficient for the development of young masculine nature. There is a certain personal quality inherent in the normal man—but of which the normal woman is destitute—and without which no male child can become a perfectly constituted man; so that if he be submitted exclusively to maternal treatment, he has small chance of achieving an ideal manhood.

Of course, there are mannish women—a species of human freak with which our generation is being made painfully familiar—but freaks play no part in the economy of nature. Mannishness is a cheap counterfeit of manliness and can not render to the boy the office of masculine genuineness.

There is a certain special type of robustness and stability which the lad will gain by social contact with the father which only in rare instances will he acquire from his mother; and the unfortunate feature of our family life at present is that the father, as a rule, is so engaged and engrossed with what lies outside of the real inner life of the home that contact between father and son is reduced to a minimum.

Twofoldness of Parentage.

The twofoldness of parentage answers to the twin energies in nature by which its sterner and gentler forces combine with each other in the production of the finest forms of vegetable and animal life. The idea of duality runs through everything.

Everywhere there is the balancing and the co-operation of complementary forces.

The mother makes her contribution to the developing character of the child, a contribution full of wealth and tenderness, without which the lad, as he comes into mature years, would be destitute of charm and incapable of the finest effects of personality. But underneath the maternally conferred graces of character, and sustaining them, there requires to be a foundation made out of sterner stuff, exactly as the tree is unable to achieve the purposes of its existence by virtue of the foliage with which it is clad or the blossoms by which it is decorated except by the solidity of its anchorage in the firm soil in which it is planted.

Family life as it is maintained in these hurried days of business engrossment is such that fathers and their boys, in hosts of cases, hardly know each other.

The withholding of paternal influence is bound to leave its mark in the one-sided development of the boy; and it does leave its mark.

Masculine Impress Necessary.

The young fellow, as he leaves the warm home nest, commits himself to flight that lacks the sustaining power which can be secured only by the impress upon him of what is definitely and distinctly masculine.

It lies in the order of nature; beauty combined with stamina, grace married into grit.

We might go on and say that boyhood, and therefore manhood, is suffering from the fact that so much of our schoolroom training is furnished by women; but that would carry us into too wide a field.

In all the serious matters of life our only safe way is to keep close to the intentions of nature. The character of the individual depends upon it and so does the quality of civilization.

MEN UNDER SCRUTINY

By THOMAS TAPPER

WHEN the wag of a Western town mailed a letter to the ten principal citizens, saying, "All is discovered," the Ten immediately disappeared and no questions asked.

More men are being watched than ever dream of it.

Not an alarming situation, either, but a hopeful one.

An employer with a grain of common sense wants to intrust his business to capable men and women. In many cases even boys and girls are included.

As no man can run a big business alone, he is forced to find those who can help him.

Necessarily they all come to be tried upon these counts:

1. Loyalty.
2. Dependability.
3. Capacity.

The last, Capacity, shows itself at once. The first morning's work makes it evident that the worker equals 100 per cent of his job or less.

But the other two, Loyalty and Dependability, are NOT to be decided upon the first day or even the first YEAR.

IT TAKES TIME to try out a man's inner character. He must be left alone to the environment and the job until they have put all sorts of tests upon him.

Then someone begins to notice and say: "Well, this man stands the strain all right. When he speaks, he speaks for us; when we want him, he is where he should be."

"If this is the case," says the head of the business, "give him a chance.

"Try him out on something hard to do.

"See if he will weaken when it is put up to him good and strong."

And so on.

So they keep after him, watching his Loyalty and Dependability. Testing it as if it were a steel beam, to find if there be a weak spot in it.

By and by someone says: "This man rings true every time you strike him."

"In that case," the Boss says: "MAKE HIM ONE OF US."

ACID THROWN WHEN WOMEN CLASH

CROWD SEES ATTACK ON STREET

Dr. J. Robert Smith, house physician at the Kimball Hotel; Mrs. Smith and Mrs. Ina McNeil, of 299 Forrest avenue, a saleswoman at a downtown store, engaged in a struggle in front of the Parks-Chambers-Hardwick store on Peachtree street Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock, when Mrs. Smith found her husband with Mrs. McNeil.

In the melee Mrs. McNeil received a slight cut on her arm, and Mrs. Smith claims also she gave she a black eye. During the trouble a bottle of what is supposed to have been carbolic acid was thrown by one of the participants, but none of them will admit throwing it. Dr. Smith declares he did not see the acid thrown, and Mrs. Smith will not say whether she threw it or not.

Hundreds See Fray.

The triangular affray was witnessed by hundreds of Peachtree street pedestrians, and created considerable excitement. After the bottle of acid had crashed to the pavement and broken, Dr. Smith hustled his wife around to the corner, while Mrs. McNeil ran into the store and hurried to the second floor. From there she went out on Auburn street and Dr. Smith hurried to the Kimball. He went to his room and changed his light coat, which had acid spots on it, for a blue one. His white trousers also were covered with spots.

Mrs. Smith admits attacking Mrs. McNeil. She says she has several times asked her to keep away from Dr. Smith, and declares she became infuriated when she saw her husband meet Mrs. McNeil downtown to-day.

Says She Trailed Smith.

"Dr. Smith has been running around with Mrs. McNeil for more than a year now," said Mrs. Smith. "We have been separated for several years, but of late the doctor has asked me to return to him. He has offered to buy me an automobile if I would come back, but I told him I would have to test him. I asked him to keep away from Mrs. McNeil, and I've also asked Mrs. McNeil to keep away from Robert.

"I heard several weeks ago that he was going around with her again, and this morning I came to Atlanta from my home in Douglas. I trailed Dr. Smith to-day when he left the Kimball House, and I saw him meet the woman on Edgewood avenue. I followed them until they got in front of the store on Peachtree street, and then I got so mad that I stopped them.

"I admit I hit Mrs. McNeil, and I would do it again. I just got so mad that I walked up and struck her in the face. I gave her a black eye and scratched her on the arm, but she didn't hurt me. I don't know anything about the acid. Dr. Smith didn't do anything while we were fighting but act like he wanted to get away. After the bottle was thrown, he took me out of the place."

Doctor Tells His Story.

Dr. Smith tells an entirely different story from that of his wife. At first he denied that he was mixed up in the affair at all, but at length admitted his connection with it.

"I was walking up Peachtree street to Emmett Hight's office," he said. "Mrs. McNeil was standing in the doorway of the Parks store, and she spoke to me. I raised my hat and bowed, and then someon pushed me. That is all I'll tell."

Before Mrs. McNeil escaped through the rear entrance of the store she was questioned by a policeman. She said she did not want to prosecute, and no arrests have been made.

BIG THEFT IN GEORGIA BANK

WASHINGTON, July 19.—Acting Comptroller of the Currency Kane today announced that the First National Bank, of Lafayette, Ga., has been closed by National Bank Examiner Thomas C. Dunlap, with the authority of the board of directors, on account of a large shortage which makes the bank insolvent.

Mr. Kane says he has not received a detailed report of the condition of the bank. Mr. Dunlap has been appointed receiver.

"We do not know how big the defalcation may be," said Mr. Kane, "but our preliminary examination has shown that it is not less than $30,000. This shortage has occurred since May 23, when the bank was last examined. Suspicion on the part of officers of the bank several days ago that a shortage existed caused them to call in Examiner Dunlap. Discovery of the embezzlement resulted.

"In his telegraphic advices to me Mr. Dunlap does not say to whom suspicion attaches. The last statement of the condition of the bank, issued on June 4, showed the bank to be in a proper state. The president of the bank is R. N. Dickerson, and S. A. Hunt, Jr., is cashier."

In a telegram from Mr. Dunlap Mr. Kane is advised that steps have been taken to make an arrest.

Depositors to Lose Little by Failure.

CHATTANOOGA, July 19.—Local bankers stated to-day that the liabilities of the First National Bank, of LaFayette, Ga., which was announced to-day by Acting Comptroller of Currency Kane, at Washington, to have failed, were approximately $240,000, but that depositors would be paid in full with but a slight loss to stockholders, as the assets would prove but slightly less.

An unsuccessful attempt was made this morning to obtain a schedule of the liabilities and assets of the institution. The officials are extremely reticent concerning the cause of the institution's embarrassment.

DORSEY SURE OF NO BILL ON CONLEY

Solicitor Dorsey expressed assurance Saturday afternoon that the Grand Jury never would indict Jim Conley before the trial of Leo M. Frank.

At the same time it became known that attorneys for the defense had made the usual move of asking that the jurors to pass on the guilt or innocence of Frank be drawn from the Grand Jury box instead of the petit jury box.

"There is no more chance that Jim Conley will be indicted," said the Solicitor, "than that the judge will accede to the remarkable request of the defense for a jury picked from the Grand Jury box."

Has Filed a Protest.

The Solicitor already has filed a protest against the proposed procedure which the defense is said to have suggested.

"It is irregular in the extreme," said the Solicitor. "It never has been done before to my knowledge. I am not informed as to its legality. That matter I have not looked up, but I have protested against it and will fight any such move."

The Solicitor's assurance that no indictment would be brought against Conley was taken to mean that he was in possession of evidence which he believed would be sufficient effectively to deter the jurors from charging the negro with the crime.

Can't Predict "No Bill."

"I can not believe that any Grand Jury, with the knowledge of the facts before it, could bring an indictment against Conley," he said.

Asked if he thought that a "no bill" on the charge of murder would be brought out against the negro, the Solicitor refused to make further comment.

He intimated, however, that he would be present at the hearing and that he would fight every effort to lay the formal charge of murder against Conley.

Crucial Battle Coming.

With the first skirmish won by those in favor of the indictment of Conley, the hottest battle is yet to be waged behind the closed doors of the jury room. The question first will be on whether the grand jurors consider it proper at this time to reopen the investigation whose first chapter resulted in the indictment of Leo M. Frank on the charge of slaying Mary Phagan. Solicitor Dorsey will lay before the body for the first time all of his reasons for desiring a postponement of all further investigation until after the trial of Frank.

Should the solicitor be driven back from this position by the Grand Jury again disregarding his wishes and taking up the investigation, he will be forced to take refuge in the last ditch and make his fight against the indictment of Conley.

With all the weight of evidence which has piled up against the negro, it is regarded as beyond the realm of possibilities that he could persuade the jurors to return a "no bill" against Conley on the charge of murder. Dorsey's one remaining hope at this time would be, it is said, to induce the Grand Jury to waive definite action until after the trial of Frank, when it will be in a position to say whether an indictment shall be drawn against Conley as an accessory after the fact, to which he has confessed, or as the actual murderer.

The Solicitor's attitude in the matter plainly was shown by his statement when Foreman Beattie went to him Friday seeking to have him call the meeting. Dorsey flatly refused and said:

"The meeting's only purpose will be

2 RUNS FOR CRACKERS IN FIRST

Smith's Men Get Early Lead Over Pelican's; Thompson and Brenton on Mound.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., July 19.—The Crackers scored two runs in the first inning of their game with the Pelicans here this afternoon. Timely singles by Agler, Bisland and Alperman helped in putting the two tallies over the pan. The Pels managed to score in the second inning.

Thompson and Brenton were selected to do slab duty. Dunn and Angermier were on the receiving ends.

FIRST INNING.

Agler opened for the Crackers with a clean single to center. Bisland also singled to center and Agler took third. Welchonce hit to Hendrix and was out to Kraft, Agler scored and Bisland took second. Long grounded out, Williams to Kraft, Bisland took third on the out. Alperman lifted a Texas leaguer back of second, Bisland scored and Alperman took second on the throw-in. Smith went out, Brenton to Kraft. THREE HITS, TWO RUNS.

Daley went out, Bisland to Agler. Kyle was called out on strikes. Hendrix popped up to Agler. NO HITS, NO RUNS.

SECOND INNING.

Bailey flied to Daley and on his muff Bailey took second. Dunn popped to Angermier. Thompson grounded to first and was out, Kraft to Brenton, who covered the bag. Bailey went to third on the out. Agler singled past third, Bailey scored and Agler went out trying to make second, Daley to Hendrix. ONE HIT, ONE RUN.

Bagby doubled to right, Kraft lined a Texas leaguer back of second and Bagby scored. Williams fanned. Kraft was out stealing, Dunn to Alperman. Clancy was called out on strikes. TWO HITS, ONE RUN.

THIRD INNING.

Bisland hit a liner drive over second base for one bag. Welchonce got a life on Kraft's fumble of his easy grounder and Bisland took second. Long popped to Williams, who threw to Hendrix, doubling Bisland off second. Alperman tripled to left, scoring Welchonce. Smith went out, Brenton to Kraft. TWO HITS, ONE RUN.

Angermier singled past first. Brenton hit to Thompson, who threw Angermier out at second to Alperman. Daley walked. Kyle fanned. Hendrix also fanned. ONE HIT, NO RUNS.

FOURTH INNING.

Bailey popped to Hendrix. Dunn went out, Williams to Kraft. Thompson was safe when Kyle dropped his fly to left field. Agler lined to Hendrix. NO HITS, NO RUNS.

Bagby went out, Thompson to Agler. Kraft hit one to Bisland too hot to handle, which went for a hit. Williams lifted a Texas leaguer over second and Kraft moved up to second. Clancy hit to Bisland, forcing Williams at second to Alperman. Kraft went to third on the out. Angermier also hit to Bisland, forcing Clancy at second to Alperman. TWO HITS, NO RUNS.

FIFTH INNING.

Bisland flied out to Hendrix. Welchonce was walked. Long flied out to Bagby. Alperman went out, Williams to Kraft. NO HITS, NO RUNS.

Brenton hit a long drive to right field for three bags. Daley singled over second, scoring Brenton. Daley was out stealing, Dunn to Alperman. Kyle went out to Agler to Thompson, who covered first. Hendrix flied to Long. TWO HITS, ONE RUN.

SIXTH INNING.

Smith singled past second. Bailey walked. Dunn grounded to Clancy, forcing Bailey at second to Hendrix. Smith went to third on the out. Thompson went out, Williams to Kraft. Smith scored on the out. Agler grounded out, Clancy to Kraft. ONE HIT, ONE RUN.

Bagby went out, Thompson to Agler. Kraft singled to right. Williams singled over second, Clancy flied out to Welchonce. Angermier went out, Alperman to Agler. TWO HITS, NO RUNS.

SEVENTH INNING.

MEXICO STEALS UNITED STATES CIPHER CODE

WASHINGTON, July 19.—A copy of the official code of the State Department, containing information worth thousands of dollars to foreign governments, has fallen into the hands of the Mexican Administration.

It is being used to further the ends of the Huerta regime, it was asserted here to-day.

For some months State Department officials have suspected that the Government telegrams from Mexico City have been tampered with, it is declared, but this was not considered important, as all the dispatches were in code, and, therefore, theoretically illegible.

About three weeks ago, however, Government officials here had their first inkling that the Mexicans were obtaining the gist of the dispatches passing between the State Department and Ambassador Wilson.

At first it was suspected that an employee of the department in this city was to blame, but investigation proved this to be impossible. The telegrams were read only by three persons in Washington—the official telegrapher; Robert Rose, confidential secretary to Secretary of State Bryan, and the Secretary of State himself. All of these were above suspicion.

The agents of the almost unknown "secret service" of the State Department then were put on the trail and evidence was obtained that the Government dispatches had been "lifted" from the wires in Mexico and decoded, the information contained therein being transmitted to President Huerta and his Cabinet.

As this information was, at times, highly uncomplimentary to the present Government in Mexico, the matter at once took on an international aspect, and the efforts of the department's agents to discover the "leak" were redoubled, but in vain.

Every effort will be made to locate the copy of the State Department code and destroy it. It would prove of immense value if it fell into the hands of a hostile nation, as it would be impossible to print another code and to distribute it all over the world in less than six months.

Italy Orders Minister Home From Mexico City.

MEXICO CITY, July 19.—It was learned to-day that the Italian Minister to Mexico secretly left here last night for Vera Cruz. Significance is attached to his departure, as it is believed he was urgently ordered to Rome.

This action is doubly impressive on account of the fact that Francis Stronge, the British Minister, has been succeeded by another and will leave here for London in a few days.

Mexico is becoming the storm center of international diplomacy apparently because of the attitude of the United States and the condition of growing anarchy here.

Ambassador Thinks He Will Lose Post.

MEXICO CITY, July 19.—Despite the statement of United States Ambassador Wilson that he expects to return here in his official capacity following his conference at Washington, it was learned to-day that the Ambassador secretly believes his days in officialdom are numbered.

Before his departure he ordered the removal of a costly silver service and other valuables from the United States Embassy to a United States warship at Vera Cruz. The families of some of the American attaches of the embassy have been sent to Vera Cruz for safety.

Interest was aroused by the announcement that the Minister of the Interior is working up a plan to concede a big part of the State of Morelos to 50,000 Japanese colonists.

Fire Alarm System Ready for Testing

Test of Atlanta's new fire alarm system will be made next week by the Okenite Company, of New York.

Installation of this apparatus has been made under the moral obligation system at a cost of $106,000, but while the Supreme Court has declared such contracts on the part of the city illegal, representatives of the company state they feel no doubt about being paid in full for the contract.

NEW ENTRY ENLIVENS BIG BEAUTY CONTEST

The beauty contest Saturday caught all eyes that hitherto have evaded its lure with the nomination of Miss Helen Goodrich, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Goodrich, of No. 801 Edgewood avenue, Inman Park.

The whole object of beauty, of course, is to attract the eye. The question of whose face is to adorn the "500,000 Club" booster buttons has come to dominate the talk of the town. Atlanta is famous for her pretty girls.

Miss Goodrich is a graceful, athletic girl with very rich brown hair and deep brown eyes. She is regarded as a fine type of Atlanta girl.

The beauty contest is to continue for some days yet. Who the prettiest girl is to be is as much a puzzle as it was at the beginning. Yet the question must be decided before the "500,000 Club" buttons can be ordered and the club actually organized.

Nominate your candidate at once and send in her photograph.

CHIEF UPHELD BY CITY FIRE BOARD

At the meeting of the City Board of Firemasters Friday afternoon Chief Cummings was sustained in his policy of discharging men who do not pay their debts.

A fireman had been discharged and he had complained to Mayor Woodward. The matter was brought to the attention of the board, but the fireman did not appear to defend himself.

The board decided to recommend to Council that the fire engine lot on Bellwood avenue in the Fifth Ward be exchanged for a lot on Marietta street.

The Marietta street lot is valued at $4,000, while the Bellwood avenue lot is worth only $2,500.

Bell House Boys Hold Annual 'Cue At Club Grounds

The original Bell House boys, past and present, took the Cold Springs Club grounds by storm Saturday in their second annual barbecue. The fun began very early, and according to an "official" tip, it will last well along toward the wee sma' hours of Sunday morn.

Mrs. Emma Bell, the official head of the Bell House, chaperoned the party, but, unlike most chaperons, she didn't have the least bit of trouble handling the boys, for they are big enough and old enough to take care of themselves. A hasty count Saturday morning as the special trolley cars left Alabama and Forsyth streets indicated a crowd of to exploit the evidence and embarrass the State, and I hope the Grand Jury when it meets will decide to leave the matter alone.

"The indictment of Conley at this time will be a useless procedure that will not stop the trial of Frank. It will only have a mild but undesirable effect on the State's case.

"Conley is in jail and is going to stay there for some time. He is where the authorities can put their hands on him, and he can be indicted much more properly after the Frank case has been disposed of than before, and by the delay there is no danger of a miscarriage of justice."

The Solicitor's position is attacked as palpably untair by those who have been working to bring about the indictment of the negro. Dorsey would have the testimony of the negro accredited as that of any free and trustworthy citizen, while those opposing him declare it should be taken in the light of that of a possible murderer who is endeavoring to shift the blame on another's shoulders, they say.

They add that the evidence against Conley is far more direct and damning than any ever brought against Frank. They charge, on this account, that Conley has been protected and "coddled" when he should have been placed on the same basis as the other suspect in the case and should go before the jury in that aspect.

General denials were entered Saturday to the story published Friday that the Pinkertons had changed their attitude in the murder mystery and were convinced of the innocence of Frank. Chief of Detectives Lanford declared that Harry Scott had reaffirmed his belief in the guilt of Frank and the innocence of Conley, except as accessory after the fact.

"Even though Jim Conley should be indicted," Chief of Detectives Newport Lanford declared Saturday afternoon, "it will not hurt the State's case against Leo Frank. The evidence obtained against Frank is conclusive. We can convict him without the evidence of Jim Conley."

$12,000 Plenty for Secretary Wilson

WASHINGTON, July 19.—While Secretary of State Bryan is reported to be having a hard time to live on $12,000 a year, Secretary of Labor Wilson to-day arranged to purchase a seven-passenger touring car.

ARSON AND VAIN POISON RUSE CHARGED

Rooming House Keeper Accuses Boarder as Firebug—Alleges Jealousy and Threats.

Police investigation of the burning of the home of Mrs. A. C. Klapper, at No. 256 East Hunter street, Saturday morning, for which G. A. Vaughn, an employee of the Boston Trading Company and a roomer at the Klapper home, is held on suspicion of being the incendiary, took a new and unexpected turn Saturday afternoon.

Mrs. Klapper, when questioned by Detective Coker, declared that Vaughn tried to poison her one day last week.

"I was sick," Mrs. Klapper said, "and asked Vaughn to bring me a glass of water. He was very nervous when he brought it, and I became suspicious that something was wrong. I looked into the glass, and lying on the bottom were some white powders. I was sure they were poison, and refused to drink the water. Vaughn offered to bring me another glass, but I refused to have it.

Calls Boarder Jealous.

"I am sure Vaughn tried to poison me. He is insanely jealous of me, and he has several times threatened to hurt me and to destroy my property."

Vaughn was taken from his cell and grilled by Detective Coker and Chief of Detectives Lanford for more than an hour Saturday morning, in the hope of getting him to admit some connection with the burning of the Klapper home. He was also asked about Mrs. Klapper's assertion that he tried to poison her.

He admitted taking her the water, but denied that there were any powders in the glass.

Love Affair Alleged.

The police say that Vaughn was in love with Mrs. Klapper, and declare that she admitted that he had paid her attentions for the past year or more.

In addition to the police investigation, State Fire Marshal W. R. Joyner announced Saturday morning that he has started a probe of the fire which destroyed the roof of Mrs. Klapper's home, causing damage of $500. According to the firemen, the blaze started in a closet in Vaughn's room on the second floor.

Vaughn was charged with trying to burn the building by Mrs. Klapper. According to the story she told the police, she quarreled with Vaughn before he went to work this morning, and Vaughn made threats and then went into his room.

Calls House Over Phone.

A few minutes later, she says, he hurried downstairs and went downtown. Half an hour later he called her on the telephone and asked if everything was all right, she says, and one of the other boarders who answered the phone told him the house was on fire. Vaughn immediately left his office and rushed to the scene of the fire. Mrs. Klapper was standing near the door wringing her hands, when Vaughn appeared and started into the house. She intercepted him.

"You've burned my house!" she screamed. "I'll have you arrested."

Mrs. Klapper began struggling with Vaughn, and Call Officer Watson came up. At the request of the woman, who declared she would prefer a formal charge against him, Vaughn was arrested and taken to police headquarters.

Atlantan Asked to Hunt for Grandson

MERCURY RISES TO 98, HOTTEST OF SUMMER

All heat records for Atlanta this summer were broken Saturday when, at noon, the thermometer of the United States Weather Bureau registered 98 degrees. Indications were that before night the mercury would climb higher.

Thousands of Atlantans sought the parks Saturday for relief from the oppressive heat, and the cooling breeze they found there probably prevented hundreds of prostrations.

On the downtown streets the heat was intense.

Relief is promised Sunday, however, as the weather man states that a thundershower is due here in the early afternoon. More moderate weather will follow for several days, the summer.

Investigation Into Assay Office Likely

WASHINGTON, July 19.—D. P. Kingsford, Superintendent of the New York Assay Office, has placed his resignation in the hands of Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo. The annual examination of the assay office in New York was completed by July 1, and a report of it has been in the hands of Secretary McAdoo for some time.

It is understood a detailed specification is in the hands of Secretary McAdoo dealing with the system of management. This specification does not aim at any person in particular. It is believed a general investigation may follow. The criticism is based on laxity.

WANT ADS EASY, SAYS BOY IN CONTEST

"I've got more than a dozen want ads promised me right in the block where I live, and I want to win one of those bicycles," said the first boy at The Georgian's business office Saturday morning. "I'm going to do it, too.

"I got a want-ad promise at every house I went to except one, and the lady wasn't at home there. It's going to be easy. When does the contest start?"

The youngster—he was just over the 14-year-age limit—was put down in the list of contestants and told to come back Monday morning and receive instructions. There will be quite a gathering at The Georgian's office then, for many young men and women have entered and are going out to win that automobile, a trip to California, the piano or one of the dozens of other prizes offered winners in the contest.

The boy's experience proves how easy it is to get want ads for a paper with a reputation for bringing results. There is no family without a want of some kind. The mere suggestion that an advertisement of a few lines in The American or Georgian will bring that maid or yardboy or sell that discarded furniture usually is met with ready response.

There's no guessing in this contest, either—no grinding day and night in a scheme where you have to invest a dollar or two for a bare chance to win a box of candy. It is a strictly business proposition. Contestants will visit their acquaintances on a business mission and they will accomplish definite results. The winner gets the automobile, the next the piano, and so on down the list.

But remember the contest begins in a few days, and it is absolutely necessary that contestants bring in their nomination blanks, receive their instructions and get ready for active work.

The Want Ad Man would like to see every contestant at his office, No. 7 Edgewood avenue, Monday some time during the day. He has something important to tell them.

The movement for the improvement of South Pryor is the result of several mass meetings and canvasses of property owners within the past few weeks.

FIST FIGHT PUTS 'PEP' IN COURT'S PROCEEDINGS

A "near-fight" between W. A. Graham, a druggist of No. 354 Ponce DeLeon avenue, and B. W. Torrence, an automobile dealer of No. 350 Ponce DeLeon avenue, enlivened the proceedings of Judge Broyles' court Saturday morning.

The fight came during the trial of Graham, against whom Torrence had made two cases. In one Graham was charged with allowing a vicious dog to run at large; in the other he was charged with keeping an obnoxious stable. Graham, while making his statement, declared that Torrence's small son had sat for some hours Friday on the Graham fence.

"You are a liar!" emphatically declared Torrence.

Then Graham hit at Torrence and Torrence hit at Graham. Torrence missed, but Graham's fist raised a bump on the forehead of Policeman O. R. Jones, who was standing in front of Torrence. Before any more blows could be struck Chief Beavers separated the combatants.

Judge Broyles dismissed the dog case, but fined Graham $5.75 on the charge of maintaining a nuisance. He fined Torrence $5.75 for contempt of court in calling Graham a liar.

High Price Paid for Decatur Store Site

Ground has been broken for a two-story brick building at Decatur on McDonough street, adjoining the City Hall. It will be occupied by George Brothers with a wholesale and retail department store. The building will cost about $6,000.

The sale of the lot for this building set a new price for McDonough street property, the 50 feet bringing $3,000, or $60 per front foot.

Features Planned For Organ Recital

The barcarolle from "Tales of Hoffman" will be one of the features of the free organ concert Sunday afternoon at the Auditorium-Armory. The concert will begin at 4 o'clock under the auspices of the Atlanta Music Festival Association.

Dr. Starnes will render an improvisation on the tune of "My Old Kentucky Home." The concert will open with the brilliant Mozart overture to "Le Nozze di Figaro."

POLICE DIG INTO GAME.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, July 19.—Police dug through a two-foot wall and raided a gambling house on Woodland avenue early to-day. Six men were arrested.

RETURN OF LUMB IS FOUGHT BY DEFENSE

That a strenuous fight is on between the attorneys for Mrs. Mary Belle Crawford and the heirs-at-law of the late Joshua B. Crawford to prevent the return to Georgia of Fred Lumb, the New York barber named as an accomplice of Mrs. Crawford in the alleged plot to poison her husband, became known Saturday morning.

Objections to the issuance of extradition papers before the indictment of Lumb have been filed with Governor Slaton by Attorney Reuben Arnold for Mrs. Crawford, and with Governor Sulzer of New York.

Attorney J. S. James, attorney for the Crawford heirs-at-law, declared Saturday morning that his future course in regard to bringing Lumb to Atlanta, in case he is apprehended by the New York police, would be governed by the results of an interview he expects to have with Governor Slaton Monday.

He intimated that should Governor Slaton refuse to issue extradition papers for Lumb before the indictment efforts would be made to have Lumb indicted at once as an accomplice.

He declared Governor Slaton would have to issue the papers if Lumb were under indictment.

"Despite Mrs. Crawford's assertions that she desires the return of Lumb, her attorneys are fighting us in our effort to bring him back," said James. "Colonel Arnold has filed a letter with Governor Slaton objecting to the issuance of the papers, and they also have filed objections with the Governor of New York."

5 Knoxville Men To Boost Exhibit

Five leading citizens of Knoxville, Tenn., will visit Atlanta next week to urge upon manufacturers, business men and the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce to participate in the National Conservation Exposition to be held in Knoxville soon.

The men who will visit Atlanta are T. Asbury Wright, William Goodman, G. L. Price, W. S. Shields and Colonel C. H. Harvey.

The Exposition, it is said, will be one of the largest manufacturing displays of Southern products in recent years.

Lad Wounded as He Robs Gum Machine

Will Davis, a 14-year-old negro, was wounded in the heel early Saturday morning when discovered by Plainclothesmen Allen and Gresham robbing a chewing gum slot machine at Houston and Hilliard streets. Two other negroes who were helping Davis escaped.

Woman's Body Tied To Fence Near Park

CHICAGO, July 19.—Finding of the body of a young and pretty woman, tied to the top of a rail fence near Finley Park, 15 miles from Chicago, presented a mystery to Coroner Hoffman to-day.

The woman was tied to the fence by a piece of white cloth, evidently torn from an underskirt and wrapped about her neck.

OBITUARY

The funeral of Leonard Kenny, 2-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. L. H. Kenny, of No. 101 Poplar street, who died at the residence at 1 o'clock Friday afternoon, was held from the chapel of Greenberg & Bond at 10 o'clock Saturday morning. Interment was at Westview.

J. R. Hunter, of the faculty of Georgia Tech, died at a local sanitarium at 4 o'clock Friday afternoon. He was 49 years old, is survived by a wife and had only recently come to Atlanta from Chattanooga. The body is at Patterson's chapel, pending the arrival of relatives.

The body of Mrs. Martha J. Roop, who died at a local sanitarium Friday, was sent to her home in Carrollton, Ga., Saturday for funeral and interment. Mrs. Roop was 68 years old, and is survived by her husband, the Rev. W. W. Roop, and one daughter, Mrs. Samuel Copeland, of Bremen, Ga.

The body of John C. Fultz, who died at the residence, No. 127 Pearl street, Friday afternoon, will be sent to Marietta Sunday afternoon for funeral and interment. Mr. Fultz was 71 years old and is survived by a wife, one daughter, Mrs. W. M. Edwards, and two sisters, Mrs. C. Monroe and Mrs. Worth Pace.

The body of Mrs. J. A. Dodgen, who died at the residence, No. 329 East Georgia avenue, Friday afternoon at 5 o'clock, will be sent Sunday morning to Alpharetta, Ga., for funeral and interment. Mrs. Dodgen was 61 years old and the wife of J. A. Dodgen, a well-known lawyer. Besides her husband, she is survived by three sons, B. L., C. M. and J. M. Dodgen, the latter an attorney also, and three daughters, Misses Flossie, Alice and Alma.

'BEAR CAT RAG' IS FROWNED UPON BY THIS DAINTY ATLANTA DANCER

Miss Theodora Aline Warfield.

Which do you prefer—to do the "bear" or a classical dance?

An Atlanta girl who prefers classical dancing to the more modern rag is rather unusual, yet pretty Miss Theodora Aline Warfield, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William C. Warfield, of No. 29 West North avenue, declares that she can not see why people dance the graceless modern dances, when the Grecian and other classical dances are far more artistic and almost as easy to learn.

That is, they are easy to learn if you have talent.

Since Miss Warfield was two years old she has been dancing, and always she is evolving new steps. Her dancing is not like Isadora Duncan's or Maude Allan's, or any of the famous classical dancers. It is entirely her own, and her friends declare it is the prettiest and most graceful possible.

Miss Warfield has appeared on the stage in Atlanta. She was the premiere danseuse at the past two performances of the Kirmess, and won great applause. She was presented with a beautiful silver-incrusted vase by the Elks Lodge, in recognition of their appreciation of her talent. At various private entertainments Miss Warfield has danced also, and has always won admiration and praise by the beauty and grace of her dancing.

Every one who has seen her dance has urged that she go on the stage, and her parents intend to prepare her for the opera. In addition to being a dancer of rare grace and beauty, she has an attractive voice, and it is being cultivated with her dancing.

Two years ago Miss Warfield sang in Atlanta with Geraldine Farrar, and Miss Farrar was enthusiastic in her praise. After finishing a course at a school here, Miss Warfield will go abroad to study languages and advanced artistic dancing. A wonderful career is predicted for her. There is no doubt that she will add her name to Atlanta's already brilliant Hall of Fame.

CUMMINS SAYS TARIFF WILL FAIL

WASHINGTON, July 19.—Progressive Republican opposition to the Underwood-Simmons tariff bill was expressed to-day in the Senate by Senator Cummins, of Iowa, who condemned many of its provisions.

The Senator announced himself in favor of the income tax amendment, substantially as written by the Democrats, "if it could not be changed to better suit the exigencies of the situation."

Senator Cummins criticised President Wilson for bringing to bear the "coerce" executive influence upon the framers of the measure, and he also was sharp in his criticisms of "legislation by secret caucus."

"The tariff will increase importation and diminish home production of a great many things, and will force into idleness many workingmen," Cummins asserted. "It puts the products of agriculture, in the main, on the free list. It probably is true some of these commodities need no protective duty, but many of them do, and to treat the farmer as an outlaw is manifestly wrong.

"Second, the bill proceeds on the theory that the manufacturer of the finished product is entitled to raw material free of duty. This is all very well if the raw material can be produced in this country as cheaply as abroad, but if that costs more here to produce it, then the raw material of the manufacturer should be dutiable.

"Its duties are, upon many commodities, destructively inadequate, and the lesser industries of the country will suffer."

Augusta Shocked by Girl in Filmy Garb; Arrest Stops Riot

AUGUSTA, GA., July 19.—All Augusta is talking to-day of the arrest of Miss Edith Anderson, 1215 Jones street, Friday afternoon, because she appeared on Broad street, the main thoroughfare of the city, clad in a "transparent skirt," a dainty, filmy creation of lace through which twinkled stockings of a vivid green.

Miss Anderson appeared just as the afternoon dress parade was at its height. A stolid, unemotional copper stood swinging his stick on a busy corner of Broad street when Miss Anderson appeared. The copper saw the crowd coming, he saw men fighting small boys for places in the forefront, and he looked up.

"Why—why!" he stammered, mopping his fevered face. "Why—er—why—because—er—dawgone it!" He pointed downward with his nightstick, "You can't wear things like that in Augusty."

First Auto Funeral Is Held in Atlanta

The first automobile funeral known to Georgia was conducted Friday afternoon by the Barclay & Brandon Company.

The company's new limousine hearse was used. This hearse is a magnificent model in French gray with hand-carved decorations. It cost $7,000 and represents the latest improvement in funeral directorship.

Air Map of World, Geographers' Plan

WASHINGTON, July 19.—Famous geographers from many countries soon are to meet to prepare an aeronautical map of the entire world.

That announcement was made by Rear Admiral Robert E. Peary in a report to the National Geographic Society on the results accomplished at the Tenth International Geographic Conference in Rome, which he attended as one of the American delegates.

Pittsburg Bids the Slit Skirt Welcome

PITTSBURG, July 19.—"Why should I tell Pittsburg women what to wear? What do I know about it? Not on your life. Will I order any arrests? Well, I should say not! Are you trying to get me into trouble?"

With these words John P. Dailey, Director of the Department of Public Safety, disposed of the woman's dress question for Pittsburg.

"I think, for my part, the women are dressing all right," said the Director. "They know what they want to wear, and I believe in letting them wear it. At any rate, they'll do it whether we like it or not."

GERMAN AVIATOR KILLED.

FRANKFORT, July 19.—Aviator Westphal, of the German army, was killed here yesterday. His is the 299th death resulting from aviator tragedies.

REVOLT IN CHINA SPLITS NATION; WAR NEAR

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

CANTON, CHINA, July 19.—A complete severance of political relations between Northern and Southern China was proclaimed here to-day. Business is at a standstill. Revolutionary leaders are threatening to seize the Government buildings.

A British torpedo boat is proceeding to this port from Hong Kong to protect British lives and interests.

The Governor General of Kwang Tung Province has proclaimed his territory independent of the Pekin Government and declares in the same proclamation that the Provincial Council has nominated him commander-in-chief of the revolutionary army.

U. S. Aiding Revolt?

That United States diplomacy as well as Japanese is supporting the revolutionaries trying to overthrow President Yuan Shih Kai was claimed by leaders of the Southern rebellion.

The Pekin Government, headed by President Yuan, is receiving the support of England, Germany and France. Developments indicate that the question of the proposed $100,000,000 Chinese loan enters into the situation. England, Germany and France subscribed pro rata shares to the loan, but the United States financiers were not allowed by their Government to participate.

Dr. Sun Yat Sen, one of the leaders in the uprising which overthrew the Manchu Dynasty, and the first provisional President of China, and Dr. Wu Ting-fang, former Chinese Minister to the United States, are believed to be lukewarm to the rebel cause.

Rebels Lose a Battle.

Dr. Sun has left for Nanking, the provisional republican capital, where he may make open declaration of his loyalty to the southerners.

President Yuan is suspected of being an imperialist at heart. The southerners want a democrat.

Wu Chang remains loyal, but revolutionary sentiment is fast growing there.

Four thousand rebels were decisively defeated by 2,000 Government forces at Hsu-Chow-Fu, north of Kiang Su.

New Railway Mail Head Begins Duties

Henry M. Robinson, recently appointed Superintendent of Railway Mail Service, suceeding George W. Pepper, arrived in Atlanta Friday and visited the local railway mail bureau in the Federal Building Saturday morning, where he and Mr. Pepper completed the transfer of the Atlanta division.

Twenty-five years ago Mr. Robinson was a resident of Atlanta. Then he was a postal clerk between Atlanta and Charlotte. Later he became superintendent of the New Orleans division.

Flier at Charleston Goes at 90-mile Gait

CHARLESTON, July 19.—W. S. Luckey, a Curtiss flier from New York city, who is spending a week at the Isle of Palms on Friday flew in a hydro-aeroplane from the Isle of Palms to Charleston, a distance of about 12 miles, by water, in 8 minutes, a speed of 90 miles an hour.

Luckey also skimmed across the harbor with his main float partly submerged at a rate of 45 miles an hour.

Turner to Attend Electrical Meeting

R. C. Turner, City Electrician, will attend the convention of the International Association of Municipal Electricians at Watertown, N. Y., August 19 to 22.

"Municipal Regulation" will be the subject of an address delivered by Atlanta's electrical expert while there.

The SOCIAL WORLD

The country clubs around Atlanta are preparing for a happy observance of the week-end, the intense heat of the week having made the cool, delightful club houses more popular than ever.

One hundred guests are expected to attend the dinner dance at the Piedmont Driving Club Saturday evening. Dinner will be served on the terrace, and there will be a charming decoration of summer flowers. The ballroom will be open for dancing, and many others, in addition to those who go out for dinner, will motor out to spend the evening on the breeze-swept terrace.

The country club at East Lake will also have its usual week-end dinner dance. During the afternoon the tennis court and golf links are filled with those members who enjoy athletic sports, and later dinner will be served on the piazza overlooking the lake. The usual number of young people will go out for the dance.

Mrs. Ison Entertains.

Mrs. R. D. Ison entertained at bridge recently for Mrs. J. A. R. King, of Augusta, and Miss Virginia Williamson, of Highland, Ga. The prizes included a hand-painted olive dish and embroidered handkerchiefs. The guests included Misses Marie Watson, Minnie Jordan, Mrs. Spurgeon King, Mrs. J. C. Malsby, Mrs. Charles Dennis, Mrs. Frank Ison, Mrs. W. E. Raley, Mrs. J. W. Watson, Mrs. Fred Sutton, Mrs. James G. Butler, Mrs. R. A. Williams, Mrs. J. L. Watson, Mrs. J. R. Regnas, Mrs. James G. Ison, Mrs. Medlin, Mrs. A. R. King, Mrs. Robert Richardson and Mrs. J. H. Carl.

For Miss Robbins.

Miss Theodora Arline Warfield gave a swimming party and luncheon Friday at the Capital City Country Club in honor of Miss Dorothy Robbins, of Birmingham, Mrs. J. P. B. Allen's guest. The guests included Misses Marie Cobb, Frances Bailey, Helen Wilson, Lyndall Haddon, Teddy Thurmond, of New York; Mary Griffith, Helen Atkisson and Lucile Atkisson. Mrs. W. C. Warfield and Mrs. J. P. B. Allen were chaperones.

For Miss Weisiger.

Mrs. David J. Weisiger entertained at an informal tea Friday at her home on the Boulevard, in honor of her niece, Miss Margaret Beverly Weisiger, of Richmond., Va.

Mrs. Weisiger was assisted in entertaining by her daughter, Mrs. O. S. Lair, and Mrs. Cliff Key. Tea was served in the dining room by Mrs. Robert P. Milam and the punch bowl on the porch was presided over by Miss Virginia Parks and Miss Elise Brown.

Port-Frisch.

Mr. and Mrs. A. Port announce the marriage of their daughter, Minnie Janet, to Mr. Jesse Marcus Frisch, the ceremony having taken place Tuesday evening, July 15, at 6 o'clock at home, No. 149 Glennwood avenue.

Moonlight Picnic Given.

A moonlight picnic was given to Miss Marcia Whitaker by Miss Dorris Murray Friday. Those present were Misses Marcia Whitaker, Nina Mitchel, Ruth Knox, Cleo Whitaker, Dorris Murray, Nellie Apperson, Murray Adams and Lois Cook, of Columbus; Messrs. Paul Lee, Arthur Lynch, Randall Satterwhite, Dr. C. E. Jones, James Mangum, Park Brown, Ralph Dyer and John Whitaker.

The party was chaperoned by Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Crabtree and Mr. and Mrs. H. D. Adams.

Anniversary Dinner.

A dinner party was given Friday evening at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Howard McCutcheon, the occasion celebrating the wedding anniversaries of Mr. and Mrs. McCutcheon and Mr. and Mrs. Charles T. Mabry. Pink roses adorned the table, and a color scheme of green and white was carried out in the decorations of the other apartments.

After dinner auction bridge was played. The guests included Mr. and Mrs. Henry Allen Manning, Mr. and Mrs. T. H. Williams, Mr. and Mrs. Earle Zurline, Mr. and Mrs. D. I. Clarke, Mr. and Mrs. Cordin, Mr. William D. Ellington and Mr. Robert Winn.

Suffrage Discussion.

"To Vote or Not to Vote" is the title of a discussion to be held at Taft Hall Tuesday evening next at 8 o'clock, when the question of woman's suffrage will be discussed, pro and con. Mrs. William Lawson Peel, who is known to be entirely neutral, has kindly consented to preside at the meeting and a number of the most prominent men and women speakers in Georgia will take part.

There will be no formal program, but all will be heard who so desire. Inasmuch as this is one of the leading questions of the day, everybody is interested in the forthcoming discussion, especially as many people have not yet formed an opinion on the matter and will welcome a discussion whereby both sides will be presented.

On account of the limited capacity of the hall and the very large attendance expected, an admission fee of 25 cents will be charged.

Mrs. Allen Entertains.

A series of parties are being given for Miss Leila Daley, of Texarkana, Tex., and Miss Jennie Allen, of Greenville, S. C. A bridge party was tendered them Friday by Mrs. Harry Lee Allen. Yellow flowers were decorations, and a salad course was served.

Guests were Mrs. Neal Spencer, Mrs. Glynn Mickel, Mrs. A. J. Wilson, Mrs. John Hagony, Mrs. Clyde Stutesman, Mrs. Sidney Johnson, Mrs. Youngener, Mrs. Harold Hinton, Mrs. Jackson, Mrs. Hal Stevens, Mrs. J. C. Peary, Mrs. R. Todd, Mrs. J. Prince Coyne, Mrs. James Russell Gresham, Mrs. Irby Bagwell, Misses Nora Ingram, Ellen Lyon and Ruth Gresham.

Parties for Visitors.

Mrs. A. J. Wilson entertained five tables of bridge Friday afternoon for Mrs. John Hagoney, of San Diego, Cal., and for Miss Leila Daley, of San Diego. Mrs. John Russell Gresham will give them a bridge party Tuesday, and Mrs. J. T. Peavy will entertain them on Thursday.

Freeman-McMichael.

The marriage of Miss Leona Freeman to Mr. O. B. McMichael took place Saturday afternoon, July 19, at Wesley Memorial Church, the Rev. W. R. Hendrix officiating.

Immediately after the ceremony the happy couple left for the Isle of Palms and other points of interest. After August 1 they will be at home in Atlanta.

PERSONALS.

Master Frank Norris, who has been ill, is better.

Miss Marie Dunlap left Friday to visit friends in Oklahoma City.

Mr. and Mrs. St. Elmo Massengale returned yesterday from Atlantic City and New York.

Mr. J. J. Logue has returned home, after submitting to an operation on his eyes at the Georgian Hospital.

Mrs. S. H. Marcus, No. 436 South Pryor street, left Saturday for New York, Atlantic City and other points East.

Miss Annie Clyde Wright left Saturday for a trip East, visiting in Niagara, New York and Philadelphia before returning home.

Miss Marion Mullins, of Fort Worth, Texas, is the guest of Miss Jennie Knox for several days on her way home from the Kappa Delta convention at Asheville.

Miss Mary Butler will return home Sunday from Atlantic Beach, Fla. Miss Elizabeth Butler, who has been visiting Mrs. A. H. King in Jacksonville, returns Sunday also.

NEW APARTMENT HOUSE PROJECTS ON SIDEWALK

City Could Force Alteration of Ponce DeLeon's Front—Builders May Have to Pay $42,000.

An innocent little complaint made to Building Inspector Hays has brought about a complicated situation in the construction of the $500,000 Ponce DeLeon Apartments, at the southeast corner of Peachtree street and Ponce DeLeon avenue, and just south of the Georgian Terrace.

It has been found that the building has encroached four inches on the sidewalk space belonging to the city. The city has the right to demand that the ten-story building be made to conform to the line. This would necessitate a great deal of destruction and expense.

A probable solution lies in the fact that the city has the right to sell or give the strip to the builders.

Council To Be Petitioned.

Albert Howell, Jr., head of the Fulton Properties Company, which concern controls the Ponce DeLeon, was acquainted with the situation by the Building Inspector, and he declared that he would petition Council to let the building stand.

Last week C. J. Bowen, assistant building inspector, had the engineer survey the ground to determine whether or not a window on the Peachtree side projected 14 inches over the sidewalk in violation of the building code. It did, and a case was made. It was found also that through some mistake four inches of sidewalk had been taken for the building proper. The contractor has been instructed to make the alteration as to the window.

May Cost $42,000.

Mr. Howell expressed the belief that the city would let the building stand, and he is expected to have a resolution to this effect introduced soon.

Since there is a frontage of about 35 feet on Peachtree, the encroachment is over 11 2-3 square feet. Frontage at this point is worth about $1,200 for corners, which would figure about $17 a square foot.

The company owes the city by this calculation, therefore, about $192. S ould the city decide to ignore the depth, the price at $1,200 would be about $42,000.

An Old Maid's Romance

TODAY'S COMPLETE SHORT STORY.

I.

The houses were tall and bleak and fronted with grim stucco, all in that manner which our forefathers found so desirable. Once they had been expensive houses, tenanted by people of wealth and social standing, but now The Gables, halfway down the road, struck the only firm note of resistance to the general air of decaying prosperity. Curtains always hung primly in its casements; the frills of the muslin window blinds always seemed newly starched, and the steps of the front door were always a marvel of whiteness.

People wondered why Miss Margaret Weston, who lived there in state with servants, did not move out of a locality which was deteriorating so rapidly. Some bolder spirits even asked her why she stayed on at The Gables instead of letting it, and departing to reside in a street more befitting her quality. To these Miss Weston answered gently that she had lived in The Gables most of her life, and had no desire to change now.

Miss Weston always answered everybody gently, for gentleness was the essence of her being. The neighbors referred to her as an "old maid," but, even as they used the phrase, they knew it was not the exact term by which to describe her. There was none of that sharpness about her which the epithet of "old maid" habitually implies.

Long ago, when she was a little orphan girl of 7, her uncle had adopted her and brought her to live in Penthorn Road. But now both her uncle and his wife were dead, and Miss Weston was left alone in the old home, save for the servants.

Rather a pitiful romance was Miss Weston's. It was simply the old story of the man who had not dared enough, the man who had leaped to false conclusions and had gone out of her life, to leave her alone.

Sometimes, when she tenderly took a packet of letters out of her bureau, there was one particular missive which she had not the heart to reread, for it was too sacred with poignant memories.

Her Dream.

But always she remembered the night when it was handed to her. She had only to close her eyes again to visualize the scene completely.

She saw herself, quite young, sitting before the fire on an autumn evening. She was trying to understand something. Why had her cousin, Harry Dutton, gone off to the Colonies without a word of farewell to her? He had made quite a sudden departure, though he had told her that he was going. And yet he had never said good-bye to her.

And while she was seeking to understand his attitude the small son of a neighbor had come into the room shamefacedly.

"I say, Miss Weston," he blurted out, "I'm awfully sorry, but I clean forgot."

"Forgot what?" she asked, puzzled.

"Why, this letter. Mr. Dutton gave it to me to give to you. He wanted to make sure you'd get it the same evening. I've just remembered it."

"When did he give it to you?" she whispered.

"Last Thursday. And I'm awfully sorry——"

"Last Thursday," she said to herself, when the small boy escaped from the room in relief. "That was two days before he sailed!"

She opened the letter and read its contents.

"Dearest Margaret," it ran—"As you know, I sail for South America the day after to-morrow. Before I go I want to ask you something, but I fear it will be too much to ask you. You must have guessed that I love you. I know it is presumption on my part to aspire to your hand, for you are the adopted daughter of a rich man and I am only the ne'er-do-well son of a poor brother. But I mean to make money in South America. I want to come home and marry you! There, I've blurted it out quite bravely! Will you marry me? I want you to wait for me.

"I suppose I'm asking too much, but I shall hope. If you reply to this note, I will come and say good-bye, but if you do not answer, I shall know what you mean. Yours, HARRY."

There was the explanation. She went to her uncle and showed him the note. He counseled cables and letters to Harry, but on the voyage Harry altered his plans, so that the messages lay waiting for him and never reached him. And he never wrote home; he just dropped out of everybody's life.

Would-be suitors dangled about Miss Weston for a time, but, receiving no encouragement, went off elsewhere. Friends married, acquaintances moved out of the neighborhood. Margaret grew from a girl to a woman, from a woman to an old maid.

And still she waited for Dutton in the house where last he had seen her, and where again he might seek her.

II.

Sometimes she pictured his return. She saw him whirling up to the door magnificently in a mortor car. She saw him on foot, tentatively examining the old house from the farther side of the road. Always she pictured him coming back, prosperous, to seek that bride whom mischance had so long withheld from him.

And then, one day, quite unexpectedly, she met him in the street, and he was woefully shabby and down-at-the-heel and his face bore lines of want and recklessness.

"Harry!" she faltered. "Harry!"

The light of recognition leaped into his eyes, but he shook his head.

"You're home again!" she exclaimed. "I—I've been expecting you. I've been waiting for you!"

"Expecting me? Waiting for me?" he muttered, astonished.

"Ever since you went away," she said, simply. "Waiting for you in the old house. There was a mistake—I never got your letter till it was too late. And then we never heard where you were. But I waited."

"You—you're making a mistake," he said, slowly. "I don't know you!"

He swung away from her at that. Miss Weston took a few steps after him, but a faintness came over her. And when she could see clearly again Dutton had gone.

But even now her simple faith in love did not abandon her.

"He'll come back to me one day,' she said to herself, going slowly home. "He knows I'm waiting for him. He's ashamed of himself because he's poor. As if that mattered!"

Indeed, it was quite a cheery Miss Weston who arrived home at The Gables. And now every morning the thought was still stronger in her that that day her lover of long ago might call to see her in the house where last he had left her.

But the days slipped by, and, though often she glanced from her windows, she saw no sign of him in the street outside. And so a month, three months, another six months passed by.

III

"Gentleman to see you, Mum!"

"A gentleman to see me, Janet?" asked Miss Weston, in surprise. "How strange!"

Miss Weston rose from her chair. She was trying to persuade herself that it could not possibly be Dutton who had come to Penthorn Road after all these years. Although she had hoped for his coming every morning, it suddenly seemed to her that this was altogether too much to hope for. She went downstairs slowly, holding tightly on to the banisters, and steeling herself to meet disappointment.

But it was Dutton who awaited her in the room below—Dutton, far better dressed than when she had seen him last and now holding himself with a resolute bearing.

"Harry!" she exclaimed, holding out both her hands to him. "So you've come back? I knew you would—I knew you would!"

"I had to come back," he said slowly. "I wanted to see you just once more before I went abroad again."

"Abroad again?" she echoed faintly.

"What's the good of my stopping in England?" he asked. "There's nothing to keep me here. Abroad I shall do better. I did not do well when I was there before, but that was because I had nothing to work for. I had lost you, and——"

He stopped for a moment.

"You thought you had lost me," amended Miss Weston softly.

"I—I knocked about a bit over there," he went on. "A rolling stone, you know. Then I had a whim to come back to England. I—it's no good disguising it—I was on the downward path. I'd lost interest in things—worse, I'd lost interest in myself. And then one day I met you in the street. You remember? The man you remembered as Harry Dutton was dead then," he said, "and in his place there was a mere shiftless ne'er-do-well. I felt utterly ashamed to find your eyes on me. I saw you still believed in me, long after I had lost faith or belief in myself. And—and I resolved to try again to live my life straight."

"And now?"

"For close on a year—ever since that day—I've struggled. I think I've left the wastrel behind. I'm trying hard to be the man you thought me to be, and I think I'm succeeding."

"And you've come back at last?"

"Yes, I wanted to see you again, not as I was that day you met me, but as I am now. I wanted to win back a little of your respect."

"And—and you're going abroad again?"

"Quite soon. I've no ties, no wife or family."

"There's me!" pointed out Miss Weston, with unprecednted boldness. "Have you forgotten me?"

"You?" he said in amazement. "You don't mean——"

"I've waited all these years for you to come back to me," she replied steadily. "We were parted by illchance, but I was loyal to the memory of you, for I knew you'd return one day!"

"And I," he said, "have been true to you in word and deed, because all my love was with you. Other women"—he dismissed them with a gesture. "You were always the only woman in my thoughts."

"I knew it," she said simply, and told him how mischance had led their paths apart those many years ago.

"Ah, if the past could but come back again," he said. "If I only were younger! But now I can not ask you to marry me. I'm getting old, I'm poor. And you—you're rich, I suppose, and you haven't altered in the least."

Her Story.

Gently she smiled dissent.

"But I have something to tell you," she said. "Uncle George left me all his money, but he left this house to you. Nine years ago he died, and we inquired about you everywhere. We advertised in the papers, too, but could get no tidings of you."

"Nine years ago," he answered. "I was up-country, then. I stayed up-country three years. That was why I was undiscovered."

"Well, nine years' rent is yours," she told him. "I've been keeping it for you, waiting for you to come back. So you see, you're not quite so poor as you thought."

"And not quite so rich as I'd like to be," he sighed. "I'd like to be rich enough to——"

He paused.

"To what?" queried Miss Weston, anxiously. "Surely you're not going to balance riches against happiness?"

"I've got my pride," he said, stubbornly.

"And you've got your house," she said. "And I'm going to move out of it at once. You must come and live in your own house."

"No, no," he replied, uncomfortably.

"I shall go," she said, with firmness, and added, artfully, 'thought after all these years it'll break my heart to leave it."

"Then—then let me continue as your—your landlord. The house is far too big for me."

"I won't stay on as your tenant a day longer," she said. "And it's going to break my heart to go. Can't you see what I—what I'm trying to make clear?"

"No," he said, in perplexity. "I can't. And yet—but no, I'm too poor and ashamed to ask you to marry me."

"Rubbish!" retorted Miss Weston with the most asperity she had ever been known to show. "Either you're going to break my heart by making me leave the old house, or else you're going to let me stop on as your wife. Which is it to be?"

Her unwonted briskness gave way and she took a faltering step toward him.

"Harry, after all these years——" she quavered.

"My little sweetheart!" he whispered, and both he and she forgot that youth had left them.

Getting the Facts

MRS. Bickers sighed deeply as she regarded her son Willie, who was eating his dinner with suspicious propriety. Not once had he had to be reminded not to grab things and he had said "please" before every request. His hands were clean and his hair was brushed to a shiny smoothness. Altogether, Willie was so much a model child as to cause comment in the Bickers family. Even Willie's father had noticed it.

"I feel so sorry for Mrs. Gassmore," said Mrs. Bickers, after her introductory sigh.

"Anybody died?" asked Bickers.

"No," said Mrs. Bickers. "It's worse than that. There's nothing worse than to be deceived by those you love and trust—and I tell you, Mrs Gassmore felt so bad about it that there were tears in her eyes when she told me. Her son Tommy, had caused the tears."

"Huh?" said Willie Bickers, startled. He ceased buttering his hot biscuit.

"I knew you'd feel just as I did about it, Willie," said his mother kindly. "Although you are such a friend of Tommy's, I realize that you never would approve of certain things he has done. You have been brought up too well and you understand right and wrong."

"Why, Mrs. Gassmore," I said to her to-day," went on Willie's mother, "if my Willie had acted that way I couldn't have been any more surprised! Tommy has such honest eyes"

What'd he do?" queried Willie huskily.

"Do?" echoed his mother. "Tommy Gassmore, after all his mother had told him, went swimming this afternoon, that's what he did! When he had been expressly forbidden to go near the place—just like you, Willie—let alone enter the water!"

"The young scamp!" said Bickers, emphatically. He regarded the sleek hair of his son with new interest.

"Yes, wasn't it dreadful?" asked Mrs. Bickers. "I suppose he thought his mother never would know it. That's what makes it so particularly sad—his trying to deceive his mother.

"But those things always get found out, and I presume he realizes that now. I was so surprised, because I had considered him nearly as trustworthy a boy as our Willie and"——

"H-h-how'd they find out?" inquired Willie gruffly. "No, thanks—I don't want any more creamed potatoes. Nor 'sparagus."

"I hope you don't feel ill or anything, Willie," said his mother anxiously. "Usually you want so many helpings and you've had only one to-night. Why, Tommy must have cut his foot while swimming, because when he got home it hurt him so he had to take off his shoe and his mother questioned him, and besides his hair was all wet."

"Awful give-away, wet hair," said Bickers sternly. "Why are you fussing at your head, Willie? Let your hair alone—you'll muss it all up, and I notice you have brushed it unusually well this evening."

"Yes, I noticed it, too," said Mrs. Bickers. "I am so glad Willie is taking pride in his personal appearance. I hope Tommy Gassmore will realize some day how disgracefully he has acted. It is boys like that who start out by fibbing and deceiving who end by being criminals. I don't know that I want you to associate with Tommy any more, Willie. He might lead you into doing things that you shouldn't, and I should so hate to have you begin. Of course, I know that if you did anything wrong you would be man enough to come and tell us about it as soon as you had thought it over."

"D-did Tommy talk much?" asked Willie, in a slightly cracked voice. "Wh-when he told his mother, I mean?"

"Talk much?" echoed Mrs. Bickers. "Why, what do you mean, Willie? I suppose not. I suppose he felt too ashamed to say more than he had to! Why do you ask?"

"Nothin'," said Willie. He squirmed in his seat. "I jus' wondered!"

His hand sought his head again and a look of alarm overspread his countenance as he drew it away from the extreme back and saw water shining on it. Apparently his obtuse parents saw nothing and were eating with perfect appetites.

"Say," Willie blurted out, in a mangled voice, "I went swimming with Tommy—when he did, you know. Honest, I forgot, ma; honest, I did!"

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

The girl drew herself up. "Nevertheless, Mr. Warren, in spite of prudence, wisdom or death itself, I shall go to my brother to-night!"

There was a little pause; he looked down at the floor and thought swiftly.

"Very well," he said at last. "I yield to the force of your determination. You shall go to-night—but I insist on one concession."

"What is that?"

"You must let me go ahead and look over the ground. I will signal you when it is safe to follow."

The Signal.

"But how can you signal?"

"With a light." He crossed to the window and studied the forbidding mass of the castle for a few moments. "A light in one of those higher towers. You can see it from here. You won't have long to wait," he added earnestly. "It will shine within an hour."

"But"—the girl's voice faltered—"but if—it does not shine?"

He smiled upon her, lightly but tenderly.

"Well," he drawled, whimsically, "then I'll be too busy swapping lead for brimstone with Mr. Spook to stop and hang a lantern. I had expected," he went on seriously, "that your cousin would remain here with you, and I can not understand why he should desert you at such a crisis."

"Unless—what?" he inquired slowly, after an uncomfortable silence.

The girl made a sudden gesture of despair. "Oh, if I only knew!" she cried. "If I only knew! I'm so confused—I'm at my wits' end! My mind—I can't think!"

She pressed both hands to her head and staggered as she moved toward a seat. The next instant Jarvis was supporting her, both hands in his, and gazing intently into her face. Little quivers that were not all of love were racing up her spine, and even as he gazed into the waxed rose of the beautiful face he felt an all but overpowering desire to look over his shoulder. Seventh sense, premonition. The psychologists—those tedious dissectors—are still squabbling over the terminology, but young Jarvis felt the realness of the sensation. The sudden and menacing appearance of Robledo, the eerie palm-reading of the innkeeper's girl, the inexplicable desertion of the Duke—all these combined to give him an unshakable and growing sense of gathering danger. And all about him was the breathing still of the mountain night, like nature's cowering hush before the lash of the hurricane sweeps the land.

His voice and the grip on the little hands grew tense.

Herself Again.

The girl instantly responded to the best treatment for all superficial nervous troubles—a sharp, incisive voice. She opened her eyes, and with a wondering, startled look.

"You are holding something from me," he charged swiftly. "What happened on the boat that changed your manner? What worried you when the Duke drove ahead? I saw it again when he closed that door. What is it?"

He felt her shiver and her eyes, avoiding his, roamed wildly about the room.

"Oh, if I could only—if I were only sure I could trust you!"

Instantly she got the best answer in the world—the quick, unconscious setting of a man's muscles under the sting of insult. It was gone in a breath, but she felt and recognized it with joy.

"Too late for doubts now," he said crisply, as if the affront were of no importance in the face of graver things. "Your brother's life is at stake! We must stick together—you and I! It's your only chance. How can I help you unless I know everything? Don't you see that I am fighting in the dark—that I am up against a solid wall of mystery and this may be the key? Never mind what you think or fear—this is the time you've got to trust me!"

The girl was breathing quickly.

"You couldn't"—she began brokenly, and then, her voice rising: "Oh, I do believe in you! In my heart I have trusted you from the first. It's my heart; not my mind that trusts you now!" She paused a moment and drew a deep breath as he stared at her blankly. She gazed full into his face as if to watch for the slightest betraying tremor.

"The locket is gone."

The look of utter, dizzy amazement that came over his face was proof enough of his innocence. It hardly needed his mechanical:

"Gone—where?"

"I don't know," she cried miserably.

"But—when did you miss it?"

"Three days ago—on th steamer."

"And you have no idea now who has the plan that was in the locket?"

His tone was high and accusing, and she kept her eyes away from his.

"I suspect, of course," she admitted feebly, "but I can't be sure! I—"

"Your Highness," he broke in triumphantly, "I've got the first trail of the spook that's haunting your castle. Rusty, the horses!"

"Yes, sah; yes, sah!" came the servitor's voice from the yard.

"Quick now; we've got no time to lose."

He was buttoning his coat as he spoke, and now he picked up his hat.

"You think—" began the Princess, a little uncertainly.

"I think your cousin has not gone to Madrid. Time is everything now. I shall start at once and you must rest here until you get the signal."

"Your overcoat," she reminded him as he made for the door. "It's upstairs."

"Never mind that."

Before he could protest she ran lightly up the stairs. With a warm glow on him that no overcoat could have produced, Jarvis followed her halfway up.

As he did so, the figure of a man blotted out the moonlight that fell in the doorway. A man muffled in a big cloak stepped just inside, his right arm carried rigidly at his side. From this position he could command the foot of the stairs, but could not be seen from the stairway itself.

The Princess appeared at the top with the coat on her arm.

"Don't come down—I'll get it."

"You are sure you know the way?" she asked, tremulously, as he relieved her.

"North road, second turn to the right."

"Yes, that takes you to the postern gate."

"Thank you."

But still he lingered, though he had said time was precious. Their eyes met in a long look. Both colored and looked away. With a swift movement she took something off her neck and threw it about his shoulders.

"This little cross and chain," she said softly. "Wear it to-night for me, my knight!"

He gained possession of the hand for a moment.

"Only for to-night?" he whispered.

"You may never see to-morrow."

Something seemed to interfere with the workings of Jarvis' throat.

"If I never see to-morrow"—his voice sounded to his own ears like a stranger's and there was the beating of a whole drum corps in his ears—"you will forgive me for telling you that—I love you! Don't—don't rebuke me to-night. Wait until to-morrow—if tomorrow ever comes." He smiled and her eyes drooped before the light in his. "To-night your humble vassal goes forth in his lady's cause. While all Segura waits ghost and ghost-breaker shall stalk the halls."

He stooped and swiftly kissed her hand.

"Your Highness, you will see the light in the tower inside an houfr!"

A Fight in the Dark.

"God be with you, my knight!" she prayed softly—and was gone.

He waited until the last sound of her footsteps had died and a door closed in the distance. Then his pulses leaping wildly, he turned and made one step down the stairs—and stopped.

A poet once asked, and left unanswered, "Upon what may life depend?" In this instance Warren Jarvis' life hung on the slender chance that he would wait until he could not longer hear the sound of his lady-love's footsteps. Light as they were they would have distracted his mind so that he would never have caught the faint but keen metallic click that was as clear as the spoken word to a man born in a country where the babies used to use a .45 revolver for a teething ring.

Survival largely depends on preparedness for the unexpected in the world of action. Warren Jarvis did not waste any time investigating. He did not care to make inquiries to be certain that the cocking of the pistol had a definite connection with his career in this world.

No; he began humming "Dixie" in the care-free, exultant manner of the successful lover, and swiftly took in the field of action. In a fraction of a second he had planned his battle. On the stair post at the foot of the stairs was an oil lamp, the only light in the room, for the fire had died down to a faint glow. He slung the overcoat across his right arm, with his left arm loosened something that hung under his coat and across his heart. Then, still humming "Dixie," he walked down the stairs without any attempt at concealment.

Just before he came within the range of vision of the doorway he leaned forward and dashed his coat against the lamp. At that same instant he whipped out his pistol, crouched and did a baseball slide out across the stone floor, on hip and shoulder, his eyes turned toward the door.

There was a flash and a roar and a man's figure outlined against the moonlight and then almost as quickly as the two shots had sounded in the hotel, the Kentuckian's revolver spoke twice.

There was an oath, a cry of "Sancta Maria!" and a heavy fall.

Laying the Ghost.

Desecrated by the bright Spanish sunlight, the old castle would have moved one to pity as would the sight of a broken-down warrior. In the rich moonlight, softened and hallowed, the stately sweep of its walls and the but stagnant wastes of the moat, and the long tendrils of vapor curled and crept out like the stealthy arms of cold and evil spirits, enfolding and chilling the heart and welcoming all who dared the walls to an embrace of death. And somewhere within an owl cried out an uncanny warning, like a tocsin summoning the legions of darkness to meet the rash invader.

"Jimminy!" muttered Jarvis, with a shiver, as they drew up at the postern gate. "It's no wonder those fat-headed boobies down there wouldn't come up to this place!"

To Be Continued Monday.

THE LOCKET STOLEN

The girl was breathing quickly. "You couldn't"—she began brokenly, and then her voice rising. "Oh, I do believe in you! In my heart I have trusted you from the first. It's my heart, not my mind, that trusts you now!" She paused a moment and drew a deep breath as he stared at her blankly. She gazed full into his face as if to watch for the slightest betraying tremor. "The locket is gone!"

For Fat Men Only

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

THIS is a tip I give you, as it was given to me,
Right in the thick of the summer, with the mercury ninety-three,
Right in the thick of the summer, with everything sizzling hot,
And all of us looking crimson, like lobsters cooked in a pot.

Don't button it in the back, boys; the button in front will do.
The collar will stay where you put it, looking and feeling fine,
And there'll be no torturing button a-boring into your spine.

This is the tip I was given, and I pass it along as lore
To all of my husky brothers, with "seventeen" necks or more.
Try it, and all of the buttons that caused you worry and pain
Will land in back of the dresser, and never come out again.

Courting Death

LAST week I dined with Lord Evendale, the well-known English multi-millionaire, and Chamus, former chief of detectives, at the house of a mutual friend. Our host had imagined that these two men, the Englishman, with his blase paradoxes and strange whims, and the Frenchman, with his memories of a life rich in daring deeds, might amuse or at least interest us. Long before dinner was over the skirmishes between these two highly contrasting characters had begun and their conversation was exceedingly interesting to follow.

"You do your fellow men a mighty poor service," said Lord Evendale, in a tone of contempt, "when you use your intelligence and energy to protect their lives. Life, indeed, is worth next to nothing."

"Still, life is the only blessing we really possess," Chamus replied firmly, looking straight into the Englishman's eyes, "the only one we really control. I consider it our duty to live the time allotted us and to make it as useful as possible to ourselves and others."

"Oh, nonsense," exclaimed Lord Evendale. "At any other time perhaps life was worth living, but nowadays it is not. The progress of civilization makes it easy for us to enjoy all the joys of existence, leaving absolutely no room for further wishes. As for myself, all the wishes, that I could get fulfilled without any exertion whatever, were so disgusting to me already at the age of 25 that I turned away from them and longed only for one thing—death. I resolved to die."

Various Ways.

"There are different ways of committing suicide," remarked Chamus, whom this confession, with its immense egotism, annoyed. "The only difficulty is the choice, from poison to a hempen rope."

"I was religious," the Englishman went on unaffected, "and, besides, my mother suspected the spleen which poisoned my life, and made me take an oath never to commit suicide. I made this oath willingly, because I imagined it would be easy to find a way of being killed without doing it yourself, but I have found that to a man in my position it is the most difficult thing in the world. They had barely begun to suspect my fatal intentions before a host of friends and relatives began to watch me."

"You will pardon me if I refuse to believe you," said Chamus, "even a lord and a millionaire can manage as easily as anything to get killed if he really does want to get rid of his life. There are a thousand chances every day."

single lion, crocodile nor even a snake. At a lake in the heart of the Soudan I met a tribe of real savage natives, only to have them nurse me back when I got the fever. I went to the Transvaal and arrived there just as the peace had been signed. And now I have returned as safe and sound as ever, but full of despair, because I can not find death."

He Did Wrong.

"You need not despair," said Chamus, contemptuously, "but if you really did want to die you did wrong in leaving the big cities, where the struggle for existence has made men ten times more dangerous than all the wild beasts in the world. That at least is the experience I have had while hunting human beasts of prey for more than twenty years."

The two men had arisen and stood looking straight into one another's eyes.

Chamus continued: "If you are absolutely determined to die without committing suicide I am able to give you a prescription. At the utmost it will cost you no more than a couple of sous."

"Will you be kind enough to give it to me to-day?"

"With pleasure. What time is it?"

"Half-past ten."

"Then you have plenty of time. Take the train from Gare St. Lazare at 11:05. Get out at 11:45 at Point du Jour, or, better still, at Grenelle. Then walk slowly back and forth along the old fortifications, and if you return to Maison Blanche alive I shall apologize to you in the presence of our friends here."

"I understand; and, to tempt the apaches there to carry out their coup to the satisfaction of everybody, I shall fill my pockets with gold."

"I should not advise you to do that," said Chamus brutally. "If the booty is too rich it may tempt those fellows to attack peaceful people who are not passing the place simply because they are tired of living. I advise you to pay the fellows who do you the favor of taking your life the exact amount at which you value your life, no more and no less. In that way you will not be robbing your heirs."

Many Thanks.

"I thank you, sir. If everybody were like you I should not be disgusted with life. I shall follow your advice and keep in my pocket no more than the amount at which I value my life."

* * * * * * *

I thought no more of the matter, but when I opened my paper the next morning I was shocked to read the following paragraph:

"In the small hours of the morning a police patrol between Grenelle and Vaugirard found the body of a man who had been murdered by apaches with a lasso close to the fortifications. He was stylishly dressed and was easily identified, for in his left shoe was found the following note:

"'The Lord did me a poor favor when he let me be born into this world. At last I see an opportunity to get rid of my life without committing suicide, and I make use of it unhesitatingly. They will murder, but not rob me, for I have given the driver who drove me to the station all my valuables, keeping exactly ten sous to pay for my ticket to Grenelle. Low as was the valuation M. Chamus placed on my life, I value it even lower myself, for my murderers will kill me for the value I put on my life—nothing.'"

Up-to-Date Jokes

At a small country church a newly married couple were receiving some advice as to how they were to conduct themselves.

"You must never both get cross at once; it is the husband's duty to protect his wife whenever an occasion arises, and a wife must love and honor and obey her husband, and follow him wherever he goes."

"But, sir——" pleaded the young bride.

"I haven't finished yet," remarked the clergyman. "She must——"

"But, please, sir"—in desperation—"can't you alter that last part? My husband is a postman."

Two women who had not seen each other for many years met unexpectedly in the street.

"How do you do?" exclaimed one, effusively.

"Now, this is delightful!" said the other, who was the elder. "You have not seen me for eleven years, and yet you know me at once! I can not have changed so dreadfully in all that time. It flatters me."

"Oh, I recognized your bonnet!" said the first.

The Murder of the Birds

By GARRETT P. SERVISS.

These pictures show the tern, or sea swallow, one of its young and its eggs. This beautiful bird has been made nearly extinct by the ruthlessness of hunters.

AMONG the interesting animals that man has succeeded in more or less completely exterminating without any real benefit to himself is the tern, or sea swallow, some remarkable photographs of which, made in England, are shown herewith.

They belong to the gull tribe of birds, and get their popular name from their curious flight, which resembles that of a land swallow. Like the true gulls, they have great power of wing and often go far out to sea. Including the long tail, they are about 15 inches in length, and they present a very picturesque appearance as they skim along the surface of the waves, with their black heads, gray wings, white bellies and red legs, catching small fishes and mollusks without stopping, and sometimes diving after their prey.

They breed along the coasts and often follow rivers, and even reach inland lakes. Unfortunately for them, both their eggs and their plumes are attractive, and merciless hunting has almost driven them from the eastern shores of the United States, as well as from those of Western Europe and the British Isles.

A Knowing Bird.

But they know their enemy and in recent times they have chosen their breeding places in spots almost inaccessible to the hunters. Lately one of their concealed breeding places has been found on a lonely part of the coast of Norfolk, England, and the photographs were taken there by hunters who had no other aim than to increase our knowledge of the ways and peculiarities of animals which, as far as we know, have as good a right to enjoy the gifts of nature as we have.

One interesting fact about this home of English terns is that it is believed to be far older than the British Empire, there being evidence that they have inhabited it from a time anterior to that of the arrival of the conquering Normans.

The story of the terns serves to call attention to one of the most neglected parts of everybody's education. The man or woman who knows the birds is a rara avis("rare bird") in these days, and that, too, when so much is said of the charms and wonders of natural history. Even in the country, there are only about half a dozen birds, such as the robin, the bobolink, the barn swallow, the bluebird and the sparrow, that any person you meet can tell you anything about. For most people birds are only birds. Yet if you will read such a book as old Gilbert White's "Natural History of Selborne"—one of the most delightful books ever written—you will be quickly convinced that the bird world is worth a great deal of attention, and that those who know nothing about it are as ignorant of some of nature's greatest charms as are those who do not know one star from another.

A Vacation Idea.

When you go into the country or to the seashore for your vacation, take a book on ornithology along, and make acquaintance with the many species of birds which you are sure to see. Study them with an opera glass and make photographs of them with your camera. Learn to distinguish them from one another not only by their plumage, but by their songs, their calls, their manner of flight, the character of their nests and the places that they most frequent; watch their daily life and habits; follow them through the fields and into the forests—and don't shoot them! You will find in this way that a new source of interest in the world you live in has been opened for you.

One of the recollections of childhood that I should most regret to lose is that of the wonderful song of a thrush that I used to hear at sundown, ringing across the fields from some far-away hidden place, the sweetest sound I ever heard! I would leave my play and stop to listen in simple wonder. It was long before I found out the name of the bird that sang that marvelous evening song, which fascinated everyone who listened to it, and I never caught sight of the bird itself, and yet it seems to me that I shall hear that melody as long as the cells of memory transmit their impressions!

And yet men endowed with the divine gift of human intelligence murder birds by wholesale; murder them for their plumage; murder them to get a new dainty for jaded appetites; murder them, most horrible of all, for the mere sake of killing; to see their delicate feathers fly from the impact of the shot, and their little bodies drop mangled upon the ground! And this is called—SPORT!

Smithson on the Continent

THEY were openly courting!

It was in the Continental train running down to Naples. Smithson, clerk in a London shipping office, on the most ambitious vacation of his life, was the chief spectator. The tall, dark Italian who was talking to the young couple in animated style did not seem at all embarrassed by their conduct.

Smithson shifted in his corner seat and tried not to look in their direction. But his glance repeatedly strayed to the olive-complexioned girl, jet-haired, brilliant-eyed, whose adorer, as young and sun-tinted as herself, embraced her neck with his right arm, and fondled her fingers with his other hand.

"Ah!"

Smithson had remembered he was in Italy—the country of romance. He felt more at ease. To show his tolerance he would beg a match. Ignorance of Italian was nothing to a man crossing the Continent to catch a German liner for the return Mediterranean trip—all to be achieved in a fortnight.

After several genial glances at the trio, which seemed to give great offense, he took out his pipe, and, fixing his eyes on the tall, dark man, he pointed to his empty bowl and struck an imaginary match on his trousers.

A direct insult could not have caused a more startling outburst. It came like a gunshot—

"Insulte!"

Bright Eyes.

A less steady eye would have quailed beneath the Italian's flashing gaze. But Smithson had noticed the curious bewitching light in the orbs of the beautiful girl, which were directed toward his face, and he replied grandly:

"Not at all!"

Smithson might have used the single Italian word he knew, "apologia," but he recalled the advice given him by an uncle at Dover: "Nephew, if you get into a vocal dilemma with a foreigner, meet volubility with volubility—recite poetry, anything; but don't falter, and, above all, gesticulate and smile."

Sentence on sentence still stumbled from the dark man. A look of softness had come into the eyes of the girl opposite, but she clung to her lover as if the little clerk was a bold highwayman.

There was no longer any reassurance in the beautiful girl's face. When the little clerk sought it she cringed before his glance, and the tall man moved to screen her from view.

The train slowed down slightly. Occasionally the little clerk cast a furtive glance at the scenery flying by. He could think only of poetry as a means of stemming the other's tide of wrath. He leaned back, and with the smile of a seraph looked up at him and began in pathetic, pacifying tones:

An Experiment.

"I am out of humanity's reach,
I must finish my journey alone,
Never hear the sweet music of speech,
I start at the sound of my own."

It was electrical. The Italian's face relaxed. The anger went out of his black eye. He bowed magnificently and stepped aside, and after voluble explanation to the lovers, sat down.

Smithson whistled mentally. "Phew! He thinks I've apologized."

Presently the tall man turned, and, pointing to Smithson's gold watch, stammered slowly: "You—haf—time?"

"What! You speak English?" Smithson proudly exposed to view the face of the watch.

"A leetle," was the answer.

All four were now smiling. The beautiful girl, especially, seemed gratified at the calm after the storm. The train ran into the station.

"Naples?" Smithson exclaimed.

"Anpoli," the Italian answered. "You eat?"

"Rather!"

With a pleasant farewell the lovers departed in a carriage, and Smithson, casting after the beautiful girl a regretful glance, accompanied the tall man on foot to a restaurant. "An experience to tell the chaps at home," he told himself. "Can't stand a vacation without incident!"

But he grumbled when, after a meal of delicate dishes which he could scarcely swallow, the proprietor of the restaurant negligently placed before him a bill for two.

An Argument.

"No, no, you mistake," he said easily.

"Sir, our price," stammered the proprietor, reproachfully. And the dark man nodded assent.

"But I've not brought you—you brought me—you crook," Smithson expostulated. He offered five francs, half the sum claimed.

Smiling, as before, Smithson repeated the verse which had then acted so soothingly. It had no effect. Finally he exploded: "I wish I knew 'Paradise Lost.' I'd recite the whole book at you!" As a last resort, with a forced smile he began:

"The boy stood on the burning deck——"

"Burnidek?" the proprietor interrupted. "What ess 'burnidek'?"

"Confound you!" Smithson thundered, "that's where the boy stood! Do you think I'm going to listen to you fellows yarning without saying a word?"

A passing gendarme entered. Protest was useless. As an alternative to accompanying the officer Smithson paid ten francs and stamped into the street—the gendarme accepting from the proprietor one franc for settling the dispute.

On his way to the landing stage, whither he went to inquire if his liner were in, Smithson felt for his watch. It was gone!

The Mistakes of Jennie

By HAL COFFMAN

Being a Series of Chapters in the Life of a Southern Girl in the Big City

They Would All Look at Jennie.

THINGS went along quietly with Jennie for three or four weeks. She had paid the $1.50 weekly installment on her clothes regularly, but she noticed everything was not quite right at the office. Her former girl friend would not speak to her, and Jennie often noticed her whispering to the other girls, and then they would all look at Jennie.

Jennie knew they were talking about her, but she could not find out what it was they said.

Usually, in the office during the dull season, they laid several of the girls off or let them go entirely, but they always kept the best ones—the ones that always did just a little MORE than the boss asked them to do.

Jennie had always been among these, for she worked hard and kept her mind on her work—that is, she used to before she got the foolish ideas about clothes and wanting to do like other girls she saw.

Of late Jennie had been thinking more of the good times she had, and wanted to have, than she had of her work, and had made several mistakes in her work, for which she was "called down" by the boss.

She felt and knew that the other girl was doing all she could to make Jennie lose her job, and what then of the $1.50 weekly installment on her clothes, and also the remainder of her $8.00 a week that was so badly needed at home.

Jennie had not seen the fellow since Tom met them at the door going to the hotel and had realized what a narrow escape she had when Tom told her what an awful place it was. One of the girls told Jennie that the boss wanted to see her, and with a dryness in her throat and fluttering heart she went slowly toward the private office of the boss.

Mild and Bitter :-: A Humorous Yarn

MR. POLLOCK, the landlord of the "Comfortable Gill," sat at his door looking out upon the dusty road and the stretch of meadow beyond and beyond that again at the line of pollard willows which marked the stream. He took from his pocket a large white handkerchief, upon which a crop of red spots had broken out very much as though it had had the measles, and wiped his forehead with it, careless of infection.

The morning was hot, and he had just been engaged in severe physical exertion, nothing less than the conveyance, with the help of the brewer's men, of a thirty-six gallon barrel of ale into the cellar. The feat had been safely accomplished, and he had cause for satisfaction. Yet all was not well with him. There was a slight frown upon his forehead and a thoughtful expression in his watery blue eyes as they roved across the meadows to a spot by the stream, where stood a figure of a man clad in Norfolk jacket and knee breeches and carrying a fishing rod. Mr. Pollock eyed him thoughtfully, and scratched his stubble on his chin—of which he had two.

"Been here three weeks," he muttered, "and I ain't seen the color of his money yet. Promises—yes! Settle when he goes! But then, he ain't a-going—and living on the fat of the land, too. Not overmuch baggage to speak of. Of course, he may be a gentleman. Very likely he is. But then, again, he mayn't be. No. It's no go. I'll have it out with him this very morning."

He stiffened in his determination as he saw the fisherman turn from the stream and come toward him across the meadows. It was evident that the morning's sport had not proved very satisfactory. As he came nearer he revealed himself as a slightly built man with dark hair, narrow black eyes and a humorous twist about the corners of his mouth. He greeted Mr. Pollock cheerfully, but the landlord, having made up his mind to an unpleasant duty, was not to be put off by blandishments.

He Speaks.

"Morning, Mr. Twigg," he said abruptly, in response to the fisherman's greetings. "No luck, I suppose? One can't do much when the sky's as bright as it is. There's a small matter I was wanting to speak to you about—that little account of mine."

He coughed and drew his stout form a little more upright. Mr. Twigg's dark eyes rested upon him a moment and then wandered away to the right, to where the little country station stood, neat and trim, amongst its flowery beds.

"I think I told you," he said, "that I proposed to settle when I left."

"Exactly," answered Mr. Pollock eagerly, seeing an opening for effective argument. "And what I want to know is, when that's going to be, for, you see, supposing you was to stay here forever; then you wouldn't ever settle it. Now, as man to man, would you?"

Mr. Twigg laughed.

"Well, no," he admitted, pleasantly. "Since you put it that way, I shouldn't. But you needn't be afraid. Very nice place, this—pleasant; and quiet, and all that, but not quite the spot for a permanent residence. As a matter of fact, I was thinking of leaving this morning. There's a train in about a half hour, isn't there? And I've sent my trunks up to the station."

"Oh, you have, have you?" said Mr. Pollock, with a momentary suspicion. "Then you and me can settle up before you go—comfortable and pleasantlike."

"Certainly," answered Mr. Twigg, promptly. "I've just got to go upstairs and pack the small handbag, and then I'll come down and settle up."

"Very well, sir," said Mr. Pollock, becoming more respectful at the prospect of approaching payment. "You can't say no fairer than that."

His Account.

He went into the bar to add up the details of his account, putting on a few dollars for luck. When Mr. Twigg descended he presented him with the bill. The fisherman put down his handbag and thrust his hands into his trouser pockets, as though to produce the necessary coin. In the midst of the process he paused and looked abstractedly at the landlord.

"You've treated me very well," he said, "and I shall recommend this place to my friends. And in return, I can show you a tip that ought to be useful to a man in your line of business. If you'd like to know I can show you a way to get two kinds of beer out of one barrel."

"Two kinds of beer out of one barrel?" said Mr. Pollock, staring. "Why, it can't be done."

"Two kinds of beer," repeated Mr. Twigg. "Mild and bitter."

"Well, if you can do that," said Mr. Pollock, scratching his head, "you're a marvel."

"It's perfectly easy when you know how to do it," answered Mr. Twigg, nonchalantly. "I'll be glad to show it to you. You've got a barrel of beer in the cellar, I suppose?"

"Just got a new one this morning," answered Mr. Pollock. "Thirty-six gallons."

"Then that's the very thing," answered his guest. "If you've got such a thing as a large auger about the place I'll show you how to do it now."

In the excitement of watching this curious experiment Mr. Pollock forgot about the unsettled account. He rummaged in the bar and found an auger of the requisite size. Mr. Twigg inspected it with particular care. Armed with it and accompanied by his host he descended to the cellar where the mighty barrel stood upon its trestles. He eyed it carefully and tugged at his mustache—possibly to hide a smile.

The Experiment.

"No use knocking the spigot out," he said. "You need two holes—one for each kind of beer. The mild comes out at one hole, the bitter at the other. You'll find this tip so useful that you'll remember it all your life. So here goes."

He attacked the barrel with the augur, making the hole in the lower part of its face.

"Just stick your thumb in here whilst I make the other." Mr. Pollock complied, and he went on. "The beer which comes out of that hole will be mild," he explained as he bored, "and the beer which comes out of this one when I've finished it will be bitter, very bitter," he added, inaudibly. "Ah, there, it's done! Just stick your thumb in this one, then I'll show you."

Mr. Pollock hastily inserted his thumb into the second hole, and with both hands fully occupied waited for the miracle.

"And now," said Mr. Twigg, allowing his smile to broaden, "I'll just go along and catch my train. I've got five minutes and I can just do it. As I said, you've done me well while I've been here, and I think you'll admit that I've done you well in return. Good morning. Mild and bitter, remember, out of the same barrel. Don't forget."

He ran lightly up the cellar stairs and vanished into the stretch of sunlight beyond them. Mr. Pollock, with both thumbs stuck in the barrel, was busy employing a somewhat slow brain in calculation as to the choice between the loss of his account and the loss of 36 gallons of beer. He had not solved the problem by the time that Mr. Twigg stepped out of the little station on his way to town.

Accepted.

"Darling," whispered the ardent suitor, "I lay my fortune at your feet."

"Your fortune?" replied she in surprise. "I didn't know you had one."

"Well, it isn't much of a fortune, but it will look large beside those tiny feet."

Talked Through His Nose.

From America comes the story of a Scotsman who, while viewing a statue of George Washington, was approached by an interested American.

"I think you'll agree with me, sir," said the American, "that he was a great and good man. A lie never passed his lips."

"Weel," said the Scot, "I suppose he talked through his nose, like the rest o' ye."

The Fowler's Story :-: A Weird Tale, Complete

THE fowler's cottage stands at the edge of the fields where the estuary of the Whitewater joins the main, and if there be a more desolate spot in the Landshire coast I have yet to find it.

When I went down to the cottage the other night the weather, for all its roughness, seemed likely to favor fowling. When I reached the fowler's cottage I found its owner in strange mood. He was walking rapidly from kitchen to parlor, pausing every now and again to open the kitchen door and look out to seaward.

"I'm sorry ye've come down," he remarked as I reached the door, "for I can't come wi' ye to-night."

"Why not?" I asked. "Aren't you well? There is nothing the matter with wind or weather, and the tide'll bring a great many birds up."

"That's right enough," he replied; "and there's nothin' 'xactly wrong wi' me, but it is my unlucky night, and I dussn't go out."

"'Twere three years ago last night," he said; "chanced I were flight shootin' and didn't have no luck whatsomever. There was a shower of birds come out from the decoy pond, but blame me if they didn't keep out of range like, and I couldn't come near them nohow. An' as I walked back 'long the sea wall, a gre't ole owl came shrikkin' right past me, an' I thought, mebbe, she were a witch, an' I counted she'd driven the birds away from me; so I let fly and dropped her, and she were only an owl after all, for if so be she had been a witch the shot couldn't have stopped her. So I picked her up and carried her home for to stuff, and I count that were an unlucky thing to do. An' the very next night, three years ago to-night, with the wind just as you see it now, an' the moon in most the same quarter, I went out 'long the saltings for to hide behind a knoll, for I reckoned the duck were gettin some shy of the sea wall.

"An' when I got down there and took me place just afore flight started, blame me if I didn't see another gre't old owl swoopin' down f'r the land; an' I dussn't shoot it, not knowin' when the flight would start, an' it come right past me, shrikkin' just like the one I'd shot the t'other night, and I knowed somethin' was wrong. Flight come late. It were ten minutes 'fore the first birds come over, and then they come all right and I got six or eight, and thought to myself I'd got skeered about nothin'. I forgot to tell ye that I 'adn't brought Spot wi' me 'cos she'd hurt her foot, an' I'd to leave her be'ind, so I 'ad to pick up me own birds, an' for to do that I kept all on turnin' round, and two was cripples an' ran; and when I'd got the lot and the light were most gone, blame me if I knew where the land was and where was the sea. I didn't know nowt about it at first startin' off. Seemed to me I were headin' towards the land right enough, and then I come to a place where the mud-bank stopped and there were deep water twenty yards wide comin' down with a rush from two sides at once. I looked for me landmarks, but couldn't see nothin' an' I knew there was somethin' wrong.

"I grew'd more an' more skeer'd like, an' begun to run forrard hard as ever I could, an' wherever I went the water kept all on chasin' arter me; an' blame me, if that gre't ole owl didn't pass agin in the dark, all white an' flutterin' an' screamin' at the top o' her voice. Then I know'd why it was I'd got caught, an' I just stood still, for I didn't know where to go no longer, an' then I see'd a light, sudden-like, right away from where I'd been a-runnin'. I didn't know what it might be, but I just started straight off for it, walkin' an' wadin' an' splashin' an' racin' like where the goin' was 'too soft; an' there was times when the water was up to me knees, but I kept all on goin' for the light, the only thing I could see."

"You must have known you were on the right road, then," I suggested.

"That I didn't," he replied, speaking as a man does when he has been running hard, "for I couldn't tell but that the light were a Jack o' lantern that would go out when I come nigh it an' leave me in th' worstapart of th' marsh, or that t'other old owl weren't a real witch what 'ad set it there for to drown'd me by. By anyway, the light were better than the darkness, an' so I run as best I could an' slipped twice an' dropped a brace o' me birds an' dussn't stop even for they, an' went on an' on till it seemed I'd never get to the end o' th' runnin'; but the light kept all on a-twinklin' an' so I kept all on a-runnin', an' at last I seed a bit of the breakwater, an' then all the things shaped theirselves an' I know'd in a moment where I was. An' the light were in me own parlor, for it chanced that me brother Jack 'ad come along, an' bein' lonely like, 'ad just lit the lamp for to see by, an' if it 'adn't been for that I'd never 'ave seen land again. I count th' old owl would ha' had me drownded."

"That is three years ago, you tell me," I said. "I should have thought you would have forgotten the trouble by now."

The old fowler stirred uneasily in his chair.

"I 'ad forgotten it," he confessed, "but last night, when I were down on the wall at flight-time, t'other old owl came shrikkin' past me again, an' I know'd she wanted to get me back on the saltin's, for I count she's a witch, an' it's 'er night. An' that's why I 'ont goo.

I stirred the fire to a glow that lit the fowler's scared, white face. Something gray and silent sailed between the window and the faint light of a moon half hidden by a clouddrift—a big owl passed, hooting.

THOMPSON AND DUNN ATLANTA BATTERY TO-DAY

By Joe Agler.

NEW ORLEANS, July 19.—Thompson and Dunn will be the Cracker battery to-day, and the club is brim full of pep and confidence as a result of the easy victory of yesterday over the Pelicans.

Dent really worked shout ball all the way. The only run New Orleans made was a gift to the visitors by way of a fielder's choice.

Billy Smith's clubs put up a great batting attack, with Welchonce and Alperman leading. Joe Dunn also contributed a most timely double that cleared up the tow-path when it was in a highly congested condition.

Walker, supposed to be the speed king of this circuit, was soft for the Crackers and the only question was to what length their attack would run the score.

The shake-up in the batting order proved a wise move, certainly for that game, at any rate. Wally Smith seems to be in a bit of a slump just now, but he is sure to hit his stride again, as he is one of those natural hitters who can't stay off the ball long at a time.

"King" Brady has left the team and Clarke has reported. The new hand is a big, raw-boned fork-hander and while he was warming up yesterday he showed a barrel of stuff. He pitches like Otto Hess and should held out a lot in the climb the Crackers now seem to have started for the top.

BASEBALL
Diamond News and Gossip

A crowd of Philadelphia fans tried to mob Umpire Byron, of the National League, for his decisions against the Phillies yesterday, and if it had not been for Umpire Rigler and some policemen the arbitrator with the poetic name might have had his hair mussed up.

* * *

* * *

Smokey "Joe" Wood had his thumb hurt fielding a grounder in the game with the Tigers yesterday and won't be able to pitch again for two weeks.

* * *

Right Fielder Jackson, of the Naps, had stage fright and dropped three flies yesterday. This enabled the Yankees to win.

* * *

Huggins managed the Cardinals for the first time since he was beaned by Pitcher Tyler two weeks ago, but he won't be able to play for some time.

Umpire Klem had to run the Dodgers-Pirates game alone, but he did it to the satisfaction of all hands. His co-conspirator, Al Orth, was under the weather.

SANTA MONICA WILL GO AFTER SAVANNAH MARK

LOS ANGELES, July 19.—The Santa Monica road race, to be run on August 9, will be one event open for all cars of 600 cubic inches and under, covering the course 53 times for a total of 445 miles.

This announcement was made after a meeting of the Santa Monica road race committee, making a radical departure from previous runnings of the coast classic.

The most important reason advanced for making the change and increasing the distance by nearly 50 per cent was so that the contestants might go after the grand prize record for 400 miles made on the Savannah course.

Because the 120-horsepower Fiat with which Teddy Tetzlaff won the last race and established a new world's record is above the displacement restriction, the car has been eliminated from this year's race.

$20,000 FOR RITCHIE FOR THREE N. D. BOUTS

NEW YORK, July 19.—A $20,000 guarantee for three no-decision fights of ten rounds each awaits Willie Ritchie. Jimmy Johnston, matchmaker of the St. Nicholas A. C., today is awaiting word from the champion as to whether he will accept or not. Joe Shugrue, Jack Britton and Packey McFarland are the men picked by Johnston. As there are no decisions rendered in this city, Ritchie can not lose his title unless he is knocked out.

Johnston is also willing to guarantee Ritchie $7,500 if he will box Freddie Welsh, the English lightweight champion.

WASHBURN AND LEROY QUALIFY FOR GOLF FINALS

NEW YORK, July 19.—Watson M. Washburn and Robert Reroy and Theo. R. Pell and Raymond D. Little will meet this afternoon in the final match of the Round Robin tennis doubles of the Westchester Country Club.

The Washburn-Leroy combination finished at the top of the first division yesterday by defeating Adee and Rawlins by the score of 6-3, 6-3. This victory gave the winners the right to play Pell and Little, leaders of the second division, for the trophies to-day.

GOLF TOURNEYS FOR JUNIORS IS NEEDED MOST

By "Chick" Evans.

CHICAGO, July 19. — The announcement of the age limit tournament at Shokie suggests another thought. There is an increasing number of age-limit tourneys in the golf world about Chicago and a decreasing number of open events for young golfers.

The age-limit events are excellent things, but the lack of junior events is hard upon the young golfers, who can only look forward to "coming of age" and the chance, in consequence, of bringing up future great golfers becomes smaller yearly.

Didn't Know Own Ability.

A player does not know his ability until he enters into competition with other players. In my own case, I did not know that I was a first flighter until my tournament scores disclosed the fact. The big championships, of course, are always open to players with a low handicap, but the field is usually large and the players' abilities closely matched. If the young players can only enter these tournaments he will soon quit competitive golf, for the champion is only made after years and years of hard work.

The beginner in the big tournaments would probably be so far surpassed that he would lose courage and drop out of the game, for the promising young player must be provided with an occasional victory to keep his heart up.

Youngsters Want Competition.

The business man enjoys golf as an exercise, but the youngster has hundreds of ways of getting exercise, and there is a chance that he may desert golf unless he has a better way of showing his skill. It is true that he will be sorry later on, but the average individual lives in the present.

Just now, there seem to be very few young golfers of exceptional promise, and this dearth may, in part, be attributed to lack of competitive opportunities. The championship next week may disclose some new lights, but the chances are that the old, familiar names will be seen at the top of the list of qualifiers and in the last four.

More Tournaments Needed.

There is no doubt we need more tournaments and of the less exclusive types in order to develop players of the first class. The old Westward, Ho, junior tournament was famous in its time; Shokie also had a good one, and there were open events at Chicago Golf, Onwentsia, Midlothian, Edgewater, Exmoor, etc., all of which have been discontinued.

Age-limit events are excellent things, there should be many of them, but I plead for an occasional chance for the youngster.

Wolgast and Dundee Will Clash Sept. 9

LOS ANGELES, July 19.—Tom Jones has finally accepted terms of Promoter McCarey, of the Pacific A. C., and Ad Wolgast and Johnny Dundee are again matched to box at Vernon. September 9 has been set as the day for the battle. Jones has been holding out for a guarantee and a percentage as had been agreed upon for their previous match which was called off because of an injury to the Dutchman's hand. The winner of the Cross-Baldwin bout is to be matched with Joe Rivers at Vernon on Labor Day unless Champion Willie Ritchie will agree to reasonable terms for a bout with the Mexican on that date.

Cross started training to-day for his fight with Baldwin.

LYNCH FINES TWO CARDINALS.

NEW YORK, July 19.—President Lynch, of the National League, has fined Fielder Cathers and Second Baseman McGee, of the St. Louis club, $28 each, for their fist fight at the Polo Grounds last Thursday.

WILLIE MEEHAN BEAT MANTELL

OAKLAND, CAL., July 19.—Willie Meehan, of San Francisco, won the decision over Frank Mantell, of Pawtucket, R. I., in a 10-round bout here last night.

NOW WHAT WILL CARRIGAN DO? ASK HUB FANS

By A. H. C. Mitchell.

BOSTON, July 19.—The question of the moment seems to be, "How will Bill Carrigan succeed as manager?" It is, of course, easier to ask the question than to answer it. In fact, it is impossible to answer it, because Bill has not had a chance to demonstrate his ability in a managerial capacity. However, it may be said that there is no good reason why he should not make a success of it. Ball players generally agree that Bill has baseball brains. He is a thinker, and as a catcher, he has to be a quick thinker or sit on the bench.

* * *

IT is the opinion of the writer that Wagner would not want the position if it were offered to him. He is perfectly content to be captain of the team. Wagner is really a very shy and diffident man. While he is a star ball player and a splendid captain, it is doubted if he would fit in well as a manager. Doubtless Wagner would say the same thing if he were asked about it.

* * *

WAGNER and Carrigan are the closest of friends and have been ever since they both became members of the squad. They are roommates. They comprised the "Board of Strategy" of the Red Sox organization last season when the team won the pennant. It is more than probable that this combination will resume business again now that Carrigan has been appointed manager. The meetings of the "Board" were discontinued during the world's series last fall, when Carrigan was not allowed to go behind the bat by Stahl, but was sent to the coaching line instead. It is asserted that Stahl was jealous of the publicity accorded the "Board" and decided to show all persons whom it might concern that he was the real, sole and only manager of the team. Of course, this report the writer has no first-hand information, but Stahl's actions in the series would seem to bear out the assertion.

* * *

IT is well that the change in managers is made when it is made. Carrigan will have the opportunity to become accustomed to his new duties. And if things go along all right he will have a chance to shape his team for next year. It is hardly within the range of possibilities for the Red Sox to win the pennant this wear. It seems to be too late. But the team can make a good finish if properly handled, and that is the work cut out for Manager Bill. Carrigan has the respect and confidence of his players. Stahl was well liked, for that matter, but when the players realized that he was making wrong moves and not using the best judgment in the handling of his team it, no doubt, had a bad effect on them.

O'TOOLE BETTER, BUT CAN HARDLY WORK THIS YEAR

PITTSBURG, July 19.—Marty O'Toole, the Pirate $22,500 pitcher who was recently operated upon for appendicitis, has left St. Margaret's Hospital and is now at his home in Homewood.

Indications are that it will be many weeks before he takes his regular turn on the rubber again. Baseball men fear he will be of no further use to the team this season.

CARPENTER BESTS KNIGHT.

DENVER, COLO., July 19.—Frank Whitney, the fighting carpenter, beat Phil Knight here last night in ten rounds.

TURNS DOWN BIG PRICE.

LOS ANGELES, CAL., July 19.—Ed Maier, president of the Venice Coast League Baseball Club, to-day refused an offer of $200,000 for the team and franchise by a syndicate which included John McGraw, of the New York National League Club.

Troops Quell Leith Riots.

LEITH, SCOTLAND, July 19.—In fights here to-day between striking dock workers and soldiers and sailors many persons were badly hurt and thousands of dollars property damage was done.

White Stops Abel in Two Rounds

Kid Young Loses to Lee on Foul

SEVERAL days ago Jack Britton stated that Charley White was the hardest hitting lightweight before the public to-day. Last night White met Jake Abel at the Auditorium-Armory and put him out in the second round of a scheduled ten-round battle. The punches that put Abel away were aleft-hand hook that traveled about two inches, followed by a right cross.

The punches landed by White were the hardest ever struck by a lightweight in this city. And when it is taken into consideration that White weighed only 127 pounds when he stepped into the ring, one can not give White too much praise for his wonderful boxing and punching power.

Never once did the Chicago boy make a misstep. Not a blow did he start that failed to land. He certainly is the best lightweight seen around here and he is a real contender for the lightweight crown.

Charley is only 21 years of age and has stopped such boys as Owen Moran, Johnny Dundee, Joe Thomas twice and Pal Moore twice. All these boys were going goodwhen White met them, but they were no match for the boy from the Windy City.

As for Abel, he never had a chance. When Jake would start a left, Charley would beat him to it. When Abel rushed White would meet him with sharp-shooting uppercuts. In fact, Abel appeared to be but a baby in White's hands. After the fight Abel seemed dumbfounded. He stated that the blow White hit him was the hardest he ever received.

Eddie Hanlon and Charley Lee were the surprises in the other bouts. Hanlon defeated Terry Nelson in an eight round set-to, but was fully eight pounds heavier than his Greek opponent. However, Hanlon put up a great bout and deserved much credit for his victory. He floored Nelson for the count of nine in the eighth round and nearly had the Greek out at the finish.

Lee sprung the surprise of the night by winning from Kid Young in six rounds on a foul. The battle was a hummer, full of excitement during the entire distance. Young hit Lee low twice in the sixth and was disqualified after an examination by a physician.

In the other match Tim Callahan won a four-round decision over Young Abe Attell.

A small crowd witnessed the bouts.

CONNIE MACK PRESENTS OLD UNIFORMS TO INDIANS

PHILADELPHIA, PA., July 19.—The baseball fan frequently wonders what becomes of the old uniforms, bats and gloves discarded by big league clubs. Much of their paraphernalia is used until it is so worn or damaged as to be of no further value, but every club manager has on file applications for outfittings no longer suitable for the major circuits.

Just at present the Indian team of St. Mary's Mission School at Omak, Wash., is proudly playing in uniforms formerly worn by the Athletics when they held the title of world's champions.

Manager Connie Mack was appealed to for some discarded suits early this spring, and in answer to the request forwarded not only uniforms, but gloves, bats and balls as well.

THIRD SACKERS LIKE R. WALLACE MIGHTY SCARCE

ST. LOUIS, MO., July 19.—When the count of 10 is tolled on Rhoderick Wallace as a major league player, then baseball will lose one of its greatest stars. But from present indications, Bob Wallace is going to establish a record for perpetual service in the big arena.

When this season opened the Scot started out on his eighteenth consecutive year. As has been the custom for the past few years, the high boss of the Browns has been trying to find a youthful successor for Wallace. A kid of more speed, a better batter, a better fielder and a better player all around has been sought.

But this spring has been the same as the others. The recruits have arrived and the recruits have gone, and Bob Wallace remains a member of the Browns, playing the same snappy and sensational infield that he did when he was in his prime.

Some Star at Third.

In the last three games at Sportsman's Park fans have seen Wallace operate at third base. That's the spot where the veteran really became a star when he was with the old Cleveland Spiders and when he came to St. Louis, when the franchises of Cleveland and St. Louis were transferred in 1899.

Suffering with a pair of bad legs and a sore right hip, Wallace has played as spectacularly as any third baseman who has been in the big circle.

The play de luxe executed by Wallace was in a recent conflict with the Yanks. It happened in the fifth inning. Fisher was on second, with one out, when Wolter bounded to Lavan. The shortstop made a high peg to Wallace, trying for Fisher.

No third baseman in the game would have completed the out. Wallace, stretching out, grabbed the high throw with his glove, and with a quick swing, tagged Fisher as he slid into the bag.

Wallace didn't leap for the wild peg. Had he jumped he never could have made the swing to tag Fisher as he slid into the bag. It was a play that nobody but Wallace could have completed.

They Can't Get His Job.

Wallace started to slow up a few seasons ago. President Hedges, realizing this, instructed scouts to buy all the promising infielders. They did. Within the last few seasons, Roy Hartzell, Eddie Hallinan, Mike Balenti, Harry Shanley, Eddie Daley, Derrill Pratt, Dee Walsh, and now Johnny Lavan have been on the job.

There's a collection of eight trying to push Wallace back to the minors. Hallinan, Daley, Shanley, Walsh, Balenti, Pratt and Hartzell failed. The first four are in the minors, while judgment upon Lavan will be delayed a bit until the rah-rah recruit gets more time to show that he can hit.

Bob Wallace isn't the same spry kid he was a dozen years ago, still fans at Sportman's Park, or even Robison Field have yet to see the athlete who compared with the Scot when he was in his prime.

Wallace isn't ready to quit or go to the minors now. He isn't a regular with the Browns, but several major league owners have put in bids to Hedges for the marvel of marvels.

KEENE HORSES WILL BE SOLD AT GARDEN SEPT. 2

NEW YORK, July 19.—Solomon Hanford, executor of the estate of the late James R. Keene, announces the disposal sale of all horses, the property of James R. Keene, will be held in Madison Square Garden on September 2. Hanford's representatives have been sent to England to bring Colin and Peter Pan back to this country and they will arrive about the middle of August.

BOXING
News of the Ring Game

Willie Ritchie has been receiving so many offers for bouts from the different clubs all over the country that he has decided to inspect them all on August 4. The one that the champion considers the largest he will accept and will be ready to meet the opponent picked for him on Labor Day.

* * *

Packey McFarland, who does not believe in fighting during the hot months, has just made an announcement in Chicago to the effect that he has no intention of donning the mitts again until the second week in September. "I only hope that my next bout will be with Willie Ritchie," said Packey, "for I think that I can wrest his title from him."

* * *

Tommy Burns and his heavyweight, Arthur Pelky, are now in Frisco. Burns is trying to get his protege a match with Gunboat Smith on Labor Day. Pelky's chances of landing the mill, however, appear to be very small, as the lightweights are the big cards on the coast at the present time.

* * *

The Leach Cross-Matty Baldwin bout, scheduled to take place at Los Angeles on July 29, may be called off. McCarey refuses to give Leach more than $3,500 for his end of the purse, while Cross is holding out for $5,000.

* * *

* * *

Tommy Walsh, manager of George "Knockout" Brown, is a busy party these days getting his protege in shape for his engagement with Frank Klaus at Butte, Mont., next month. Brown is doing his training in Chicago. The middleweights are scheduled to go twelve rounds.

* * *

Coast fans are now touting Kid Williams as the bantamweight champion of the world. Tom McCarey handed the latter a belt for trimming Ledoux recently. Williams is to hold the belt until he is defeated by some boy of his weight.

* * *

Charlie White, the Chicago sensation, will make his next fight against Freddie Welch at Winnipeg. The pair are scheduled to meet in a 12-round set-to on August 15.

* * *

The middleweight division has another contender in Tim O'Neil, the Hammond, Ind., scrapper. The latter recently stopped Tom McMahon and is practically matched to meet Jim Clabby at Kenosha, Wis.

LANGFORD GETS MATCH.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 19.—Sam Langford arrived here from Australia Friday and before he went to bed last night Manager Woodman had matched him for a four-round go with big Charley Miller for next Friday night.

SOX BUY A. A. CATCHER.

MINNEAPOLIS, July 19.—Nick Allen, catcher, who last season was a member of the Minneapolis American Association team, has been sold to the Chicago American League club.

CHAPPELLE HAS NO PARTICULAR STAR FEATURE

By O. B. Keeler

NOW that it seems pretty definitely settled that Mr. Lawrence Chappelle, Milwaukee outfielder, cost the Chicago White Sox $18,000, or words to that effect, there may be some small curiosity as to the workings of a bit of baseball machinery that can get such an expensive rating in the big show.

That is to say, what sort of a new prize beauty is this Chappelle person.

Well, Chappy—as he was commonly known in the American Association—sports rather an odd distinctive feature. This is the fact that he hasn't any. He can hit; he can field and throw; he is no dub on the bases. But there is no one handle sticking out of Chappy's A. A. record that you can lay hold on and say, "Here is a wonder."

Chappy's best point probably is his hitting. That unquestionably was what attracted attention in the Callahan camp. Chappy did hit becomingly—in the A. A., which also developed Mr. Gavvy Cravath, of the Phillies. He is a big fellow—strong in the arms and shoulders, and able to take a free swing on a fast ball or a savage chop at a curve. He crowds the plate and worries the pitcher.

In the field he is a good, steady performer. He is a good judge of a fly ball and covers a fair territory. He can throw well, but hasn't the arm of Clarence Walker, of Kansas City. He is no speed demon, like Shelton, of Columbus, either in the field or on the towpath.

If Chappy turns out to be a paying investment for Comiskey, it will be because he is that really valuable thing in baseball—an all-round player.

BILLIKEN TEAM TO BE SHIFTED TO LITTLE ROCK

MONTGOMERY, July 19.—Col. Robert Lee Hedges, president of the St. Louis American League Baseball Club, spent last Tuesday in Little Rock. His trip there was for diplomatic and financial reasons, which concern the ultimate taking over of the Montgomery club of the Southern Association by the St. Louis American League Club, and a shift of base being made from Montgomery to Little Rock.

Will Shift the Franchise.

Montgomery has not been supporting the excellent team which Manager Johnny Dobbs has installed there with any spirit, and Colonel Hedges declared, as late as Monday, that if he did secure the Montgomery club —which he was not seeking—there probably would be a shift of the franchise to some other city.

Inferentially, the Colonel's trip to Little Rock Tuesday was for the specific consideration of this shift, though the taciturnity customary in times of baseball political action was maintained about the American League office.

Necessary as a "Feeder."

With the tremendous competition among major league teams for embryonic talent it is almost a necessity that each major league club have at least one AA minor league club under its control that can turn into the big ring players fairly well developed. That, of course, would be Hedges' patent purpose in financing the Montgomery club.

Colonel Hedges returned from Little Rock Wednesday morning and said his trip there had been merely to receive the assurance of President William M. Kavanaugh, of the Southern League that the players upon whom he has a string on the Montgomery club would be protected for the Browns in the event the Montgomery franchise was sold.

SEVERAL BIG LEAGUE TEAMS PLAN TO TRAIN IN FLORIDA

JACKSONVILLE, July 19.—Next spring several of the big league teams will do their spring training in Florida. The Chicago Cubs are to go to Tampa, the Philadelphia Americans are coming to this city, and Miami is raising a fund of $5,000 to secure the Cincinnati Reds.

The plan being employed at the Magic City to raise the necessary funds is that of having ten men to deposit notes for $500 in one of the banks. The gate receipts for the exhibition games will be used to reemburse these men at the end of the training season.

The Cincinnati team has been mentioned, but the Miami fans are willing to take care of any big league aggregation which will wend its way southward. All they want is a look at a real, live ball player of the highest type.

JOHNSON WILL DECIDE WHITE-SOX-YANKS ROW

DETROIT, MICH., July 19.—President Johnson, of the American League, will decide the question raised by the recent trade between the New York and Chicago American League clubs involving Hal Chase, Rollie Zeider and Borton.

It will not be necessary to take the questions involved in the New York-Chicago trade before the National Commission, according to President Johnson. "As soon as I get the official report of the whole affair, I'll take care of the matter myself," he said.

PHIL CROSS AFTER BRITTON.

LOS ANGELES, CAL., July 19.—Sam Wallach is after McCarey to stage a welterweight elimination contest here between Phil Cross and Jack Britton. If such a program can be carried out the winner would be matched with Packy McFarland in a final contest for the welterweight championship, a belt and title to go to the winner.

Makes Blotchy Skin Free of All Blemish

The Most Obstinate Skin Afflictions and Eruptions from Poisoned Blood Are Completely Cured Quickly.

This Picture Plainly Shows the Wonderful Change Wrought by S. S. S.

It is certainly remarkable how quickly the action of S. S. S., the famous blood purifier, shows itself in the skin. There is one ingredient in S. S. S. which peculiarly stimulates cellular or glandular activity to select from the blood, or from the fine net work of blood vessels in the skin, those elements which it requires for regeneration.

Thus pimples, acne, eczema, lupus, or any other blood condition that attacks the skin or seeks an outlet through the skin is met with the antidotal effect of S. S. S.

Under the influence of S. S. S. this fine net work of blood vessels in the skin is constantly selecting from the blood the nutrition required for healthy tissue and the cause of disease is just as constantly being removed, scattered and rendered harmless.

It is a great mistake to rely upon cathartics to cure pimples or other facial eruptions. Not only do cathartics cause chronic constipation, but they ruin the blood of its valuable and essential preservatives.

Acne, or that condition of the skin known as pimples, often becomes so persistent that it will continue to old age if not checked by determined methods. And the same with blackheads. A knowledge of the skin and why it becomes the abiding place of so many eruptive conditions will show how futile it is to squeeze pimples or blackheads or put a coating over the skin with grease, powders or other external applications. To clear your skin and to make it stay so requires a stimulating influence in the corium, or the fine net work of tiny blood vessels below the outer and inner layers of skin.

You will be surprised and delighted at the quick change if you use S. S. S., the famous blood purifier. Its action in the skin is quite sensational. These facts are more fully explained in a book on skin troubles sent by The Swift Specific Co., 195 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga. You will find S. S. S. on sale at all drug stores. Get a bottle to-day and banish all skin afflictions.

When you ask for S. S. S., look out for the common trick of trying to sell you something else. Don't be misled.

Dixie Moguls to Make Changes

Many Will Have New Job in '14

By Percy H. Whiting.

THERE'LL be some managerial changes in the Southern League when next season rolls around. They are beginning to crop out already.

The managers who are bound to stick are Bill Smith, in Atlanta; Carleton Molesworth, at Birmingham, and quite probably, Mike Finn, at Mobile.

Bill Smith has a two-year contract, so he is sure of his berth for another term. Molesworth appears a fixture. Mike Finn can undoubtedly have the Mobile job again if he wants it, but he may not. It's a pretty discouraging job, and on his showing this year, and for many years past, Honorable Mique is entitled to something better.

* * *

Dobbs will go higher—maybe only to the American Association, more probably to the American League.

Charlie Frank will go—nobody knows where—but he will GO. That's a certainty. They are through with him in New Orleans. The Cleveland club owners, who own likewise the Pelican franchise, will send C. Frank sailing. Who will take his place nobody pretends to know. Maybe the Cleveland folks will come out in the open and admit the ownership by putting a Cleveland cast-off in as manager. Possibly they will play it safe by giving the job to Bill Bernhard, who was with Cleveland before he came to the Southern League. Or, maybe, they will play it safer still and put in some guy there who is game to tackle the tremendous task of cleaning up Pelicanville, running off the gamblers and putting the game there back in the position it belongs.

* * *

IN the rest of the cities there is uncertainty. It is to be expected that Elberfeld will be retained by Chattanooga. He has made good. But then, when two such explosive characters as O. B. Andrews, club president, and the Tabasco Kid are hooked up on any business deal, a split is always possible.

Presumably, Bill Schwartz can stick along at Nashville as long as he wants. But he isn't likely to stay a minute longer than it takes him to get a good job elsewhere. Bill is entitled to a better job than he has. He is a live guy.

The same goes for Bill Bernhard. He is hooked up with a dead crowd in a baseballically-speaking dead town. He would be tickled green to get a job somewhere else. He ought to do it. Continued association with that crowd of chronic losers—and losers through no fault of his—is robbing him of his pep, his "ambish," and his reputation. Bill is probably looking around for a job. He is entitled to one, too. He has done wonders with poor backing.

* * *

THIS seems to be a good year for the bench managers. Finn, Dobbs and Smith, who have ceased to be players, and do their hard work from the bench, have been making most of the race. But this does not necessarily prove anything.

As a rule, the only teams in this league which can afford bench managers can afford good ball clubs. There are too many exceptions this year, however, to make that rule worth a hang.

Really the two teams which have made the most marvelous showing—Mobile and Montgomery—are cheap teams. The Atlanta club and the Lookouts are the only high-priced aggregations that have caused a riffle this year.

CLARK JOINS CRACKERS; BRADY GIVEN RELEASE

NEW ORLEANS, July 19.—Pitcher George Clark, the left-hander turned over to Atlanta by Manager Clark Griffith, of the Washington Americans, joined the Crackers here yesterday.

Jim Brady, the veteran right-hander, was given his unconditional release and is now free to sign where he pleases. Every team in the league waived on him.

LOOKOUTS SECURE WALSH, SHORTSTOP, FROM BROWNS

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., July 19. President O. B. Andrews, of the local club, announced to-day that he had secured Shortstop Dee Walsh from the St. Louis American League Club. Walsh will report immediately.

GEO. SUGGS MAY FIGURE IN REDS-PHILLIES TRADE

PHILADELPHIA, July 19.—It was said here this afternoon that the Cincinnati and Philadelphia National League teams were negotiating for an exchange of players. It was reported that Pitcher Suggs, of Cincinnati, might come to Philadelphia in exchange for one of the utility men of the local club.

MORRIS MEETS BENEDICT.

JOPLIN, MO., July 19.—Negotiations have been completed for a fifteen-round bout between Carl Morris, of Sapulpa, Okla., and Al Benedict, of New York, to be fought in Joplin July 25.

LOOKOUTS GET WALSH.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., July 19.—Shortstop "Dee" Walsh, sensational fielder with Mobile last year, has been bought by Chattanooga from the St. Louis Browns.

THOMAS AND DALY MATCHED.

EVANSVILLE, IND., July 19.—Young Joe Thomas, of St. Louis, and Jack Daly, of Indianapolis, both welterweights, who fought here a few weeks ago, have been matched for a fight at McLean, Ky., on Labor Day.

Sports and Such

WELCOME.

How dear to my heart is that line of the races,
When again in the paper each morn it is spied,
And I think of the dough that my trust oft misplaces:
"Public Stung—Favorite Is Disqualified!"

TY COBB, EVERS AND Zimmerman are the best friends of the umpires. They keep down competition for those jobs.

FREDDIE WELCH IS going to take enough time away from his work at the typewriter proving that he is lightweight champion of the world, to fight Johnny Dundee, which is an unusual proceeding for a box-fighter. Most of them prefer to stand or fall by their press agents.

KID WILLIAMS, THE wonderful little Baltimore bantam, is persistently violating what the National Commission would probably call the "ethics" of the profession. He insists on knocking out some guy about once a week.

* * *

* * *

THE PASTIME OF WALLOPing Joe Platts promises to become as popular as the grand old sport of lamming his fellow-countryman, B. Wells.

TOO MUCH.

The magnate spoke of "Ethics"—
It was his latest breath,
For he lay down on the carpet
And laughed himself to death.

* * *

MR. EBBETS TO THE contrary, baseball seems to be reaching the age of sophistication. The owners of the Boston club could see no more reason for keeping Jake Stahl than for treasuring the chopped-up tickets of the world's series games he won for them a few short months ago.

SPEAKING OF ETHICS, it is only about sixty hours ago that Ban Johnson and President McAleer solemnly avowed that there was not the slightest chance that Stahl would be ousted from the leadership of the world's champions.

THE CHIEF OBJECTION of the magnates to Ty Cobb is that he does not confine his running wild to the bases only.

NEXT EVENT AT DROME WILL BE 26-MILE RACE

THERE was excitement a plenty, all right, at the Atlanta Motordrome last night. But it isn't a simmering circumstance to what will be uncorked Tuesday night in the first Motordrome Marathon ever held in the Dixie States.

This race will go the full 26 miles, which makes it nearly four times as long as any race ever held thus far in Atlanta. Ten riders will start. You can readily realize the possibilities.

The racing last night had whiskers on it.

McNeil had his J. A. P. running like a real motorcycle and he trimmed Richards in the Motordrome Purse in a thrilling contest. In the Atlanta Sweepstakes Richards reversed the decision. The invitation race went to Henry Lewis. In the Handicap Renel one of the men with a lap handicap finished first.

The summary:

MOTORDROME PURSE.
(Heats and Final, Two Miles.)

First Heat—Georges Renel, Billy Shields and Morty Graves; time, 1:28 2-5.

Second Heat—Jock McNeil, George Lockner and Henry Lewis; time, 1:26.

Third Heat—"Tex" Richards, Harry Schwartz, Harry Glenn and Freddie Luther; time, 1:29 4-5.

Final—McNeil, Richards, Renel and Lockner; time, 1:27 2-5.

who was forced out by engine trouble.

ATLANTA SWEEPSTAKES.
(Heats, 2 Miles; Final, 3 Miles.)

First Heat—McNeil, Schwartz, Luther and Lewis; time, 1:28.

Second Heat—Richards, Graves and Renel; time, 1:30.

Third Heat—Shields, Lockner and Glenn; time, 1:28.

Final—Richards, McNeil, Shields and Schwartz; time, 2:05.

INVITATION.
(Three Miles.)

Lewis, Graves and Luther; time, 2:13 3-5.

FOUR-MILE HANDICAP.

Renel, Shields, Lockner and McNeil; time, 2:55. The first three had a one-lap advantage over the Scotch rider and also over "Tex" Richards, who was forced out by engine trouble

NO MATCHES FOR SAMMY.

BASEBALL CONTRACTS.

The word "contract" is derived from the Attic verb "con," meaning to heave the bull. The other half of the word was thrown in merely to disguise its real meaning.

A baseball contract is an agreement, duly signed and witnessed, whereby a helpless youth gives up his right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness until death do us part, or words to that effect. He does this voluntarily, even as the wayfarer gives up his goods and chattels to a perfect stranger who places the muzzle of a gatling gun athwart his heaving bosom.

A youth who has signed a baseball contract is perfectly free to do anything his manager orders. He is also free to resign whenever he pleases, but resigning is not popular among athletes, owing to the general prejudice against starving to death.

Under the present system of peonage a ball player is fully as important as an insect. In some instances, as in the case of Tyrus R. Cobb, the insect turns out to be a little busy bee, improving the shining hour, and the magnate gets stung. These magnates never seem to get over the habit of approaching a bee at the wrong end.

The life of the athlete is a merry one. He is wafted hither and yon in cool and refreshing sleeping cars and given free bed and fodder, even as the noble truck horse.

And when he fails to draw the requisite amount of kale at the gate he is handed a swift kick and headed in the direction of the boneyard. It is then, and not until then, that his contract becomes valuable, for, if he grows hungry he has the privilege of eating it.

Well might the athlete sing this national anthem:

My country, 'tis of thee,
Sweet land of liberty
(So it is said)
Land where I sign to play
My youthful life away
Forever and a day
To earn my bread!

Land where magnates stand
Together hand in hand
And thus repeat:
"You low-browed gents are free
To work for none but me,
Unless you do, by gee,
You do not eat!"

While we have the profoundest respect for the power of the law, we fear that in order to separate the Cub owner from that $3,000 Artie Hofman will have to call in the aid of a jimmy.

Fielder Jones is one of the few men who can burst into print by offering himself a $25,000 job and then refusing it.

We all have something for which we may be thankful. For instance, Mr. Coulon may congratulate himself on the fact that he was not in the shoes of Mr. Ledoux.

Mr. McAleer is willing to concede that Jake Stahl is the greatest baseball manager in the banking business.

Whole there is a controversy in the East over Sunday baseball, it is safe to say that neither St. Louis team is in danger of being found guilty of playing ball on Sunday—or on week-days.

STEIN SONG.

Oh, it's always wet weather
When club owners get together,
(Etc.)

Aside from taking money from a blind man, it is hard to think of a more cruel and unusual act than protesting a game against Frank Chance.

Tom Lynch arises to remark that he thinks well of his umpires. The amazing part of it is that he has seen them at work.

SOMETHING ELSE AGAIN.

Old King Cole is a wonderful soul
His work is a perfect dream.
He makes them whiff till their arms are stiff—
But not on a big league now.

Hub Perdue Has Won 11; Lost 7

Keeping Braves Out of Cellar

ALTHOUGH with a club that is now in sixth place, a good many points under the .500 mark, Hub Perdue, the former Nashville hurler, now with the Boston Braves, has won 11 and lost only 7 games this season. That's a percentage of .632 and is about 200 points ahead of that of his team.

The right-hander has won his last six contests, and has been returned the winner in nine of his last ten starts. That's a pretty good record for any pitcher, and it's no wonder that Johnny McGraw, of the Giants, was so anxious to get the big right-hander.

Perdue has been with the Braves a good many seasons, but it looks as if this would be the first time in his big league career that he will finish above the .500 mark. In order to do this, though, he must keep on pitching the kind of ball he has so far this campaign.

He Is a Giant Tamer.

Probably this is another reason that McGraw would like to get Perdue. Hub has faced the Giants four times this season. He has pitched twenty innings against the National League leaders, and in that time they have counted only seven tallies off him, while he owns two wins over them, and has not been beaten.

Winning six straight, the Braves' right-hander beat the Giants, Phillies, Cardinals, Pirates and the Superbas twice. He has been hit hard in a few of the games, but his teammates always came to the rescue and made more tallies than the other fellows could get off him.

Although he has won eleven and lost only six, Perdue has been hurling none too good ball. He has pitched 134 1-3 innings this campaign and in that time 63 tallies have been scored off him, while the opposition has batted his benders to places unoccupied 126 times. In other words, two hits off him have brought two tallies.

The best game Perdue has pitched was his first of the season, when, on the opening day of the National League season, he shut out the Giants, allowing them only two bingles. He has hurled only two shutouts this season, the other coming against the Pirates, who he let down with four bingles.

Perdue has been working in his regular turn for the Braves this year and it has been his good work that has kept the team from the bottom.

The only teams to beat him this season were the Cardinals, Cubs, Phillies and Superbas. The Cards and Phillies each own two wins over him. Perdue has beaten every club in the league with the exception of the Cubs. His record for the campaign follows:

RIVERS WANTS ANOTHER CRACK AT CHAMPIONSHIP

LOS ANGELES, July 19.—Joe Rivers, the Mexican lightweight, is today anxious to redeem himself in the eyes of the sporting public. Many fans accused Rivers of quitting in his recent fight with Ritchie, and the Mexican is willing to mingle with the champion again in order to wipe out the sting of ridicule.

Rivers will post $5,000 to go as a side bet if Ritchie will agree to battle within three months.

HUSTLING MARKS LAST DAY FOR EXTRA VOTES

Pony Man Says Bonus Doubles Power of Subscriptions—Competitors Urged to Utmost.

Saturday night the special bonus vote offer for pony contestants striving for The Georgian and American prizes comes to a close. Reports show some great hustling is being done.

As has been explained, liberal allowances of extra votes will be made for every club of $35, $25 or $15 paid in for subscriptions. In most cases these bonuses are so liberal as almost to double the regular voting strength of that amount of subscriptions.

"Think of it!" said the contest manager. "Voting power of subscriptions just doubled! Why, if I were a contestant I'd stir heaven and earth to make up a club, and when that had been accomplished I'd stir things up again to get another club. Every contestant ought to turn in at least one $35 club a day, and should try to get two. Then if he falls short of two $35 clubs he can undoubtedly turn in a $35 club and a $25 club. And that means a good bunch of votes."

He means it, too! No acquaintance of his has been left unsolicited. So earnest is he in his desire to win one of the ponies that he is making the work almost his sole business.

This is the day of Miss Robert Harbour's birthday party. Many of her guests have told her they intend giving subscriptions to The Georgian and American as remembrances of her fifth anniversary. The celebration is at 340 Ponce DeLeon avenue.

SIDELIGHTS ON POLITICS

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

That the first contested appointment coming up for Governor Slaton's consideration should have been decided in favor of a Hoke Smith man—to use that ancient and honorable term in differentiating him from the other variety in Georgia—may be accepted, in all probability, as the first bit of evidence that Governor Slaton meant exactly what he said when he stated that he hoped to be, and would try to be, a Governor not of any faction in Georgia, but of all the people.

The Governor on Friday appointed Miller S. Bell, of Milledgeville, trustee of the Georgia Normal and Industrial School, situated there, notwithstanding the fact that Mr. Bell has been an adherent of the Smith factional end of Georgia politics in the past rather than of the Brown end.

There is no question whatever about the entire fitness of Mr. Bell for the position. Governor Slaton might have searched the State for months and not found a better man for the assignment.

These places on the boards of trustees of the State institutions—particularly the Georgia Normal and Industrial School—are considered positions of great honor and trust and are conferred upon the very best men that may be found. For that reason, while they are not sought with that degree of fervor characterizing the usual effort for office, they rarely are declined, and frequently there are warm contests for the same.

Mr. Bell, a Smith man, was aggressively backed by other Smith men before Governor Slaton. His opponent, a good man of the Brown persuasion, was pressed quite as aggressively by other Brown men.

The Governor, in this his first contested case, thought the Smith man the better fitted, for one reason and another, for the position, and the appointment was made accordingly.

And that looks like a fair and square beginning in the line of letting fitness and not faction control in the executive office under the new Governor.

"I wish," said Speaker Burwell today, "I had one thousand pages' jobs to give out.

"There are so many worthy and splendid young boys who come to me for appointments, and the number of appointments I have is so small that it is a continuous matter of embarrassment and regret to me that I am unable to gratify the very great majority of applicants.

"The pages of the House are mainly young fellows, and the experience they get during the sessions is very useful and well worth while to them. I wish I could give every boy who applies to me a job—but, of course, I cannot do that."

Senator McNeil, of Bibb County, is a very graceful speaker, and one of the substantial men of the Senate.

Not only that, he also is one of the best dressed men in either House. He effects very light clothing, both as to texture and color, and always looks as fresh and cool as one possibly may in such sizzling weather as that of late.

"If I could keep as cool as McNeil always looks," said Senator Parrish to-day, "I would be mighty happy, I tell you. But I fear no man can be as cool nowadays as McNeil seems to be eternally."

Governor Slaton was a very busy man all day Friday.

During his day or so absence in Brunswick, a very heavy mail piled up in the executive office, which had to be disposed of yesterday.

The Governor is more or less methodical and always tries—and usually succeeds—to get to-day's mail answered and put in charge of 'Uncle Sam" to-day.

The proposed creation of the grand young county of Warner, to be whacked out of Talbot, Meriwether and Harris, has moved the poets of that vicinity to do their very worst.

Judge Henry Revill, editor of The Meriwether Vindicator, is very vehemently opposed to the new county of Warner, particularly in that it would cut pretty far into historic old Meriwether if set up.

A poet of Warner, viewing Judge Revill with evident and pronounced alarm, proposed over the initials C. M. W., recently this dainty quatrain in his honor's honor, the which has been published from one end of the new county to the other:

"Here's to the new county of Warner!
So good-bye to Greenville and Judge Revill.
When we get our new county and courthouse
They can go to the d——l."

The trouble about this, of course, is that few people will believe a person so whole-souled, companionable, good natured and altogether delightful as Judge Henry Revill ever will go to any such person, thing or state of mind as this poet suggests.

Unless the Legislature revoke the dies non declared Saturday, it will adjourn on Thursday, August 14. That will be the final day of the constitutionally limited 50.

Dies non has been declared in the past, time and again, only to be revoked before the end of the session. The great trouble about a dies non, of course, is that the members receive no pay for that day whatever, and it is consequently a dead expense to them. However, a day gets to be a mighty precious thing as the session draws near its end, and the one dies non declared this session likely will stay put.

Although there remain only three weeks ahead of the Legislature, there yet is no talk of afternoon or evening sessions. The afternoons are needed so badly for committee meetings that they can not be spared.

Before the end of the session, however, both afternoon and evening sessions will be held.

Second Georgia Men Enjoy Island Camp

ST. SIMONS ISLAND, July 19.—Routine duties began this morning in the Second Georgia Infantry camp, following the tedious work Friday of pitching tents after making the transfer on lighters from Brunswick. A dip in the surf just before supper and a dance at night dispelled the gloom. Strict regulations are maintained to prevent accidents in the surf.

Under Captain J. M. Kimbrough, companies are consolidated to full war strength of 108 men each, and officers are required to drill under as near actual war conditions as possible. These drills are preliminary to the maneuvers to take place next week.

NEW ORLEANS, July 19.—Hayward Clark: Reliable Texas advices promise abundant early cotton in four weeks, therefore, bull interests are concentrating their efforts to advance the market in the next two weeks before the supply of new cotton checks or destroys their control. Texas advices say dry spell is most favorable. The idea of damaging drouth is manufactured in New York.

* * *

The weather map shows part cloudy in lower Central belt; Tennessee and Florida no rain. Slight temperatures in several districts in Central and Eastern belts. Normal temperatures in Texas and Oklahoma. Indications are for cooler weather in Northwestern quarter, with probably some showers in Oklahoma and West Texas. Cooler also in the Central belt, but continued fair and warm in the Atlantics.

* * *

There were several telegrams in circulation during the late session yesterday to the effect that the crop in sections of the Western belt was deteriorating.

* * *

Around the close Gwathmey, Rosenberg, Raft, Henneman, Harteorn, McGhee, Riordan, Hicks, Parrott and Holmes were the leading buyers, while Clearman, Shearson, Schill, Rice, Ingersoll, Hubbard, Montgomery and Flynn were the principal sellers.

Hester's Weekly Cotton Statistics

Secretary Hester's weekly New Orleans Cotton Exchange statement of the movement of cotton, issued before the close of business Friday, shows an increase in the movement into sight compared with the seven days ending this date last year in round numbers 19,000, an increase over the same days year before last of 19,000, and a decrease under the same time in 1910 of 14,000.

For the eighteen days of July, the totals show an increase over last year of 8,000, an increase over the same period year before last of 42,000, and an increase over the same time in 1910 of 6,000.

For the 321 days of the season that have elapsed the aggregate is behind the 321 days of last year 2,177,000, and ahead of the same days year before last 1,782,000 and ahead of 1910 3,252,000.

The amount brought into sight during the past week has been 32,951 bales, against 25,460 for the seven days ending this date last year, 13,704 year before last and 46,472 same time in 1910; and for the eighteen days of July it has been 79,798, against 71,329 last year, 50,660 year before last and 73,312 same time in 1910.

The movement since September 1 shows receipts at all United States ports 9,757,710, against 11,911,989 last year, 8,537,708 year before last, and 7,252,542 same time in 1910. Overland across the Mississippi, Ohio and Potomac Rivers to northern mills and Canada 9,736,635, against 1,253,179 last year, 920,929 year before last and 820,056 same time in 1910; interior stocks in excess of those held at the close of the commercial year 73,703, against 31,860 last year, 5,789 year before last and 1,057 same time in 1910; Southern mill takings 2,-92,000, against 2,447,426 last year, 2,-183,496 year before last, and 2,141,701 same time in 1910.

These make the total movement for the 321 days of the season from September 1 to date 13,476,141, against 15,544,-454 last year, 11,584,931 year before last and 10,215,356 same time in 1910.

Foreign exports for the week have been 28,361, against 31,953 last year, making the total thus far for the season 3,402,628, against 10,324,465 last year, a decrease of 1,922,237.

Southern mills takings and Canada during the past seven days show an increase of 3,031, as compared with the corresponding period last year, and their total takings since September 1 have decreased 81,423. The total takings of American mills, North, South and Canada, thus far for the season have been 5,087,219, against 5,229,707 last year. These include 2,345,437 by Northern spinners, against 2,726,859.

Stocks at the seaboard and the 29 leading Southern interior centers have decreased during the week 40,409 bales, against a decrease during the corresponding period last season of 47,521 and are now 38,022 smaller than at this date in 1912.

Including stocks left over at ports and interior towns from the last crop and the number of bales brought into sight thus far from the new crop, the supply to date is 13,831,854, against 15,-931,428 for the same period last year.

World's Visible Supply.

The world's visible supply of cotton shows a decrease for the week just closed of 173,539, a decrease of 147,782 last year and a decrease of 128,526 year before last.

The total visible is 2,921,387, against 3,094,926 last week, 2,828,787 last year and 4,958,768 year before last. Of this the total of American cotton is 1,582,-787, against 1,741,926 last week, 1,880,787 last year and 1,004,768 year before last, and of all other kinds, including Egypt, Brazil, India, etc., 1,339,000, against 1,-353,000 last week, 948,000 last year and 954,000 year before last.

The total world's visible supply of cotton, as above, shows a decrease as compared with last week of 173,539, an increase compared with last year of 92,-600, and an increase compared with year before last of 962,619.

Of the world's visible supply of cotton, as above, there is now afloat and held in Great Britain and continental Europe 1,645,000, against 1,813,000 last year and 1,126,000 year before last; in Egypt 101,000, against 70,000 last year and 79,000 year before last; and in the United States 241,000, against 376,000 last year and 244,000 year before last.

World's Spinners' Takings.

This week 193,000 this year, against 163,000 last year, 132,000 year before last.

Total since September 1, this year, 13,237,000, against 14,551,000 last year, and 11,458,000 the year before.

Of this Northern spinners and Canada took 2,345,000 bales this year, against 2,727,000 last year, and 2,032,000 the year before; Southern spinners 2,742,000, against 2,494,000 last year, and 2,228,000 the year before; and foreign spinners 8,150,000, against 9,330,000 last year, and 7,168,000 the year before.

COTTON REGAINS INITIAL DECLINE

NEW YORK, July 19.—Weather conditions had a strong bearing on the cotton market at the opening to-day, and, except for a decline of 3 points in July and August unchanged, the list ruled 1 to 4 points higher. Cables were poor. According to private advices cables were affected by unloading. There was considerable profit-taking at the early advance and eventually prices fell almost to last night's final.

Although trading was very light after the call the market developed a firm tone, through week-end short covering and good buying by the larger spot houses. High temperatures over the belt were the principal cause for the buying, there was talk of hot winds increasing uneasiness of bears, who were predicting a lower market on reports to the effect that temperatures were lower in the Northwest. Later Dallas, Tex. wired that the crop was deteriorating by shedding and boll weevils were damaging the plants considerably.

At the close the market was firm with prices at a net gain of 1 to 8 points from the final quotations of Friday.

GAINS AND LOSSES IN STOCKS BALANCE

California Petroleum Makes New Low Record at Opening, Later It Gains Fractionally.

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, July 19.—California Petroleum made a new low record at the opening of the stock market to-day, declining 1 point to 19. Later it rallied fractionally, but not sufficiently to be of any importance. The list showed irregularity, the gains and losses being pretty evenly divided.

Amalgamated Copper opened unchanged, then lost a half. Union Pacific, after opening unchanged, shaded fractionally. United States Steel common failed to respond to its strength in the London market. It opened 1-8 up, but soon lost this gain and scored a net decline of 1-4. Lehigh Valley began 1-4 higher, then lost its gain. Canadian Pacific was 1-2 off. Among the gains were Southern Pacific, 1-8; New York, New Haven and Hartford, 2; Mexican Petroleum, 1-8; Great Northern preferred, 1-8; American Smelting, 3-8, and Atchison, 1-4.

Southern Pacific soon lost its gain and went to 92 3-8 for a net loss of 3-8.

New York, New Haven and Hartford showed a continuation of the strength which has manifested itself since Charles S. Mellen resigned as president.

At the end of half an hour the list was weak.

The curb was quiet. Americans in London were steady, with Steel in demand. Canadian Pacific in London was up.

HOG RECEIPTS LARGE.

CHICAGO, July 19.—Omaha reported 16,000 hogs and Sioux City 8,500 to-day. A big week-end run at "the river" usually means easy picking here on Monday. Light shipping grades were strong to 5c higher, 9.65 being bid for seven sorts. Other grades held about steady. A spread of 15@50 took the bulk.

Steer trade closed steady, but the butcher market was slumpy and the worst case of demoralization this season was reported in the sheep houses.

BANKRUPT SALE.

In Re: Horine Development Company, Bankrupt.

Pursuant to an order passed on July 2, 1913, by the Hon. P. H. Adams, a Referee in Bankruptcy for the United States District Court for the Northern District of Georgia, the undersigned, as Trustee, will sell before the Court House door of Walker County, Georgia, in the town of LaFayette, Ga., on the 5th day of August, 1913, between the hours of 11 a. m. and 2 p. m. o'clock the following described assets, belonging to said bankrupt estate, consisting of realty and personalty, on the terms stated hereinafter. Said property to be sold as an entirety. The following described real estate in Walker County, Georgia, to-wit:

All of Land Lot 284, containing 160 acres, more or less; 53 acres more or less of Land Lot 285, said tract bounded by the cliff of the mountain until said cliff strikes the road across Dug Gap, thence with said road to the west line of said lot, being all of said lot south and west of said cliff and road as described in deed from W. N. Carmony to D. W. Lawrence, dated September 11, 1889; all of Land Lot 292, except that part of said lot conveyed to Henrietta Woods by J. E. Shaw; 53 1-3 acres, more or less, in the northern part of Land Lot 293, and also all that part of Land Lot 293, lying west of the Chattanooga Southern Railroad Company's tracks, purchased by John H. Hill from J. F. Andrews, and by J. F. Andrews from D. W. Lawrence; all of Land Lot 320, lying west of the Chattanooga Southern Railroad Company's tracks, containing 50 acres, more or less; all of Land Lot 321, except two (2) acres lying on the east side of said Land Lot 321, known as the School House property, and one-fourth (¼) of an acre, more or less, on the east side of said lot enclosed and used as a cemetery, and two (2) acres and a fraction where the barn and horse lot is, the line running west to the west bank of a deep gulley, thence following the gulley or ditch to the original line. All of the aforesaid described land being in the eighth (8th) District and fourth (4th) Section of said Walker County, Georgia.

Also the following lots and parcels of land in the seventh (7th) District and Fourth (4th) Section of said Walker County, Georgia, being all of Land Lots Three (3), Four (4) and Five (5), lying west of the Chattanooga Southern Railroad Company's tracks, except so much of said lots as were formerly owned by W. N. and J. H. Herndon and Theodore Parker; also Land Lots Thirty-four (34), Thirty-eight (38) and Thirty-nine (39); and all that part of Land Lots Thirty-three (33), Sixty-nine (69) and Seventy (70), lying west of the Chattanooga Southern Railroad Company's tracks. The property above described containing One Thousand Five Hundred and Sixty-three (1,563) acres, more or less, and being the same property described in a bond for title between John H. Hill and E. M. Horine, dated September 11, 1911, and recorded in Deed Book 24, on page 457, in the office of the Clerk of the Superior Court of Walker County, Georgia.

Also the following tracts or parcels of land described as follows: Land Lots One (1), Two (2) and Thirty-five (35), in the Seventh (7th) District and Fourth (4th) Section of said Walker County, Georgia; also lot of land No. 323, and one hundred and forty (140) acres, more or less, of Land Lot 324, it being all of said lot, except about twenty (20) acres lying on the branch in the west of said lot; also all of Land Lot No. 322, except twenty (20) acres, lying in the southwest corner of said land lot, said twenty (20) acres being now owned by O. T. and W. C. Andrews; also one hundred and forty (140) acres, more or less, of Land Lot No. 290, it being all of said land lot, except twenty (20) acres lying in the northwest corner of said lot; also twenty (20) acres, more or less, lying in the northwest corner of Land Lot No. 291, all being in the Eighth (8th) District and Fourth (4th) Section of said Walker County, Georgia. The property described in this paragraph containing One Thousand Two Hundred (1,200) acres, more or less, and being the same property described in a certain bond for title, dated September 11, 1911, and recorded in Deed Book 24, on page 459, in the office of the Clerk of the Superior Court of Walker County, Georgia.

All of the above and foregoing described lands subject to certain reservations, as shown in the conveyance made to E. M. Horine by John H. Hill by deed dated the 17th day of August, 1912, and recorded in the office of the Clerk of Superior Court of Walker County, Georgia, on the 21st day of August, 1912, in Book of Deeds 25, on pages 511 et. seq.

Also, the following tracts and parcels of land, lying and being in Walker County, Georgia, and more particularly described as follows:

Sixth Tract. Five and thirty-six one-hundredths (5.36) acres, more or less, it being all that part of lot of land number four (4) in said Seventh (7th) District and fourth (4th) section of Walker County, Georgia, lying east of said Tennessee, Alabama and Georgia Railroad.

Seventh Tract. Sixty-two (62) acres, more or less, of lot of land No. 33, in said Seventh District and fourth section of Walker County, Georgia, it being all that part of said lot lying east of said Tennessee, Alabama and Georgia Railroad.

Eighth Tract. Lot of land No. 32 in said Seventh District and fourth section of Walker County, Georgia, containing one hundred and sixty (160) acres, more or less.

Ninth Tract. Twenty (20) acres, more or less, it being all that part of lot of land No. 40, in said Seventh District and fourth section of Walker County, Georgia, lying north and east of Duck Creek, running through lots number thirty-three (33) and number forty (40).

Tenth Tract. Seventy (70) acres, more or less, it being all that part of lot of land number forty-one (41), in said Seventh District and fourth section of Walker County, Georgia, described as follows: Beginning at the northwest corner of said lot; thence north with the original line to the railroad leading to Hillsdale; thence with said railroad to where it crosses the public road east of Burnt Mill Ford, on Duck Creek; thence from said public road crossing in a northeasterly course to the northeast corner of said land lot No. 41.

Eleventh Tract. One hundred and fifty-seven (157) acres, more or less, of lot of land No. 69 in said Seventh District and fourth section of Walker County, Georgia, it being all that part of said lot lying east of said Tennessee, Alabama and Georgia Railroad.

Twelfth Tract. Fifteen (15) acres, more or less, of lot of land No. 70 in said Seventh District and fourth section of Walker County, Georgia, it being all that part of said lot lying east of said Tennessee, Alabama and Georgia Railroad.

Thirteenth Tract. Eighty (80) acres, more or less, being the north half of lot of land No. 74; also one hundred and sixty ((160) acres, more or less, of lot of land number seventy-five (75); and also seventy-three (73) acres, more or less, being the west part of lot of land No. 76; all in the Seventh District and fourth section of Walker County, Georgia, the same being the lands conveyed by W. L. Shattuck and T. E. Shaw to John H. Hill.

Fourteenth Tract. Eleven hundred (1,100) acres, more or less, being lots of land Nos. 73, 108, 109, 110, 106, 107, 111 and No. 142, all in the Seventh District and fourth section of Walker County, Georgia, the same being lands conveyed to John H. Hill by G. W. Ransom.

The above fourteen tracts and parcels of land, containing in all two thousand and five hundred (2,500) acres, more or less, and being the same properties conveyed to E. M. Horine by John H. Hill by deed dated the 9th day of December, 1911, and recorded in the office of Clerk of Superior Court of Walker County, Georgia, in deed book No. 25, page 440, on the 16th day of July, 1912. Said tracts and parcels of land are conveyed subject to the following exceptions and reservations, to-wit: All the iron ore, other minerals and petroleum, with the right to enter upon said land, mine and remove the same from any and all parts of said tracts of land.

Also, all that tract or parcel of land lying and being in the Seventh District of the fourth section of the County of Walker, in the State of Georgia, bounded and described as follows: Sixty-five (65) acres, more or less, of lot of land No. 3, it being all that part of the north eighty-five (85) acres of said lot No. 3, except twenty (20) acres, more or less, of the west part of said eighty-five (85) acres, formerly owned by D. H. Styles, the line running from the original north line of said lot at a stone corner, south to the made line between said 85 acres and the seventy-five (75) acres of said lot recently owned by W. H. Shaw to a stone corner on said line.

Also sixty-three (63) acres, more or less, of lot of land No. 4, in said district and section, bounded and described as follows: Beginning at the public road, where the land recently owned by W. H. Wardlaw corners on the original east line of said lot No. 4 and running west to the original west line of said lot; thence south with the original line to a point due west of the lane running east and west through said lot of land; thence east with said lane and line, to the Chattanooga Southern Railroad, now called the Tennessee, Alabama and Georgia Railroad; thence north with said railroad to the beginning point, containing altogether one hundred and twenty-eight (128) acres, more or less. Iron ore and minerals reserved, with mining rights reserved. And being the same property conveyed to Edward M. Horine by John H. Hill, by deed dated the 9th day of December, 1911, and recorded in the office of the Clerk of the Superior Court, Walker County, Georgia, on the 16th day of July, 1912, in deed book 25, page 436.

Also all that tract or parcel of land lying and being in Walker County, in the State of Georgia, and known, distinguished and described as follows: Lots of land Nos. 36, 37, 71 and 72, all in the Seventh (7th) District and fourth (4th) section, each of said lots containing one hundred and sixty (160) acres, more or less, except lot thirty-six (36) which contains one hundred and eighty (180) acres, more or less.

Also lot of land No. 342, in the Eleventh (11th) District and fourth (4th) section, containing sixty (60) acres, more or less.

Also lot of land No. 324 in the Twelfth (12th) District of the fourth (4th) section, containing one hundred and sixty (160) acres, more or less.

Said lots containing in the aggregate eight hundred and eighty ((880) acres, more or less. Reserving all the iron ore in the above described lots of land, together with the right to mine and remove the same. And being the same property conveyed to Edward M. Horine by Shinbone Red Ore Company, by deed dated 11th day of September, 1911, and recorded in office of the Clerk of the Superior Court, Walker County, Georgia, on the 16th day of July, 1912, in deed book 25, page 437. And all of the foregoing several tracts of land, with the reservations set forth, being the same property conveyed to Horine Development Company by Edward M. Horine by deed dated 9th day of January, 1913, and recorded in the office of the Clerk of the Superior Court of Walker County, Georgia, on the 26th day of March, 1913, in book of deeds 26, page 423 et seq.

Also, all the iron ore and all other minerals and petroleum that may be in and upon the following tracts and parcels of land, to-wit:

Two 220-H. P. water tube boilers, complete with all fittings.

One suspended bin for No. 6 crusher.

One steel "A" frame for No. 21 crusher; also 3 rock drills, 2 air hammers, 1 12-H. P. gasoline engine, 2 50-ton Norton jacks, 6 wheel scraps, 3 railroad plows, 1 5-ton chain hoist, 2 Gardner pumps, 1 14x15 air compressor.

Also pulleys, shaftings, beltings, bearings, machine bolts, hose pipe, test kilns, blacksmithing tools, dump carts, guy wire, rope, axes, mattocks, picks, shovels, wheelbarrows, coal scoops, crosscut saws, Fairbanks scales, bulldog stocks and dies and generally all the supplies consisting of a multitude of small articles.

Said sale to be to the highest bidder. A certified check for $6,000 shall be deposited by each bidder with the trustee before any bid shall be received from such bidder or be considered from such bidder. Checks shall be immediately returned to the unsuccessful bidders.

Such checks so deposited with the trustee shall be delivered to him, as a pledge that such bidder will make good his bid in the event of its acceptance. The deposit made by the successful bidder will be applied on account of the purchase price. In the event the bidder shall fail, after acceptance of said bid, to comply with the requirements of his said bid, then such amount so deposited shall be forfeited as a penalty for such failure. The purchaser or purchasers on the confirmation of the sale by the court shall pay in cash such further sum on account of the purchase price as the court may direct and as may be necessary to satisfy the claims of creditors whose claims shall have been or may hereafter be allowed by the court. So much of the purchase price as shall not be required to be paid in cash may be satisfied by the purchaser turning in and applying to the payment of the residue of his bid, in whole or in part, any claim against the bankrupt estate which has been or which may hereafter be allowed as a provable claim, and that upon such claims so turned in as aforesaid, the purchaser shall be credited on his bid with such sum as would have been paid on account of such claim out of the net proceeds of sale, if the whole amount of the purchase price were to be paid in cash.

The court reserves the right to order a resale, and to resell the property upon such notice as it might direct, at the risk and the cost of the purchaser thereof, in case such purchaser shall fail or omit to make any payment on account of the purchase price pursuant to an order of court requiring such payment.

The court may reject any bid and may retake and resell the property, if the court shall deem such bid inadequate, or upon the failure of the purchaser to comply with the terms of sale. The sale shall be confirmed by the court.

Full information and property can be seen upon application to undersigned.

POULTRY, PET AND LIVE STOCK

Read With Care; Facts to Know

Each One Means Success in Handling Your Fowls.

The decaying carcass of one dead fowl will cause you enough trouble in the shape of cholera or limberneck to make you wish you had never seen a chicken. Avoid all this trouble by looking after the little things about the poultry yards and runs. Clean up the premises. Many a thing in the shape of filth can be endured in cold weather that will not do at all when the weather gets hot.

Never throw soft feed upon the ground to be trampled under foot and become sour and filthy, to say nothing of the waste.

When you see the setting hen inclined to stand up on her nest, you can just bet your best money that she is covered with mites, and the nest, too, has a full supply. A good plan is to investigate all the setters a number of times during the incubating period in order to get rid of the mites before they get the best of you and the hen, too.

During the hot, dry months it is a good plan to set hens upon the ground, or, if this can not be done conveniently, cover the bottom of the nest with a piece of damp sod, upon which place the nesting material. At this season, when everything is so dry, and the air has so little moisture in it, good eggs often fail to hatch on account of this lack of moisture. This is why one can help matters along so by the use of sod in the nest. It can be kept damp by pouring water over it about once a week.

No code or set rules can be secured that will fit your place well enough for you to adopt them verbatim. Conditions vary so much that the best thing to do is to accept any good thing that has been satisfactorily worked out, adapting it to your own conditions and surroundings. This applies in all branches of the poultry business.

Whitewash is a good thing about the poultry yards and houses. Whitewash everything but your methods, let them stand for just what they are worth. If you are not doing all you should or can to make your business a success, do not whitewash it by trying to make others believe, and yourself as well, that you are doing great things.

And still the question comes, which is the best breed for me to adopt that I may make a success in the poultry business? It depends very much upon which plan you prefer to pursue. Whether you want to raise broilers alone or a combination of broilers and egg production, or stock strictly for an egg farm. For broilers or broilers and eggs, the American breeds, such as the Plymouth Rock, Wyandottes and Rhode Island Reds, are the best that can be obtained and will not disappoint. For stocking an egg farm where large numbers are kept, the Leghorn—White or Brown—with the preference rather in favor of the Whites, are used most extensively with the greatest success. Black Minorcas do not seem to thrive so well as the Leghorns, when kept in large numbers, but, as they lay a very large egg, they are very satisfactory to breed to keep for eggs for family supply.

Take care of the poultry house droppings; it is worth money to you as a fertilizer. We would advise a roomy compost pen, under cover, where the droppings can be kept and mixed with leaves or soil as it is thrown in. If you have not shed suitable for such a pen, set four posts at a suitable distance to support a cheap board or tarred paper roof. If you have never properly cared for them before you will be surprised how much valuable fertilizing material you will secure from a hundred hens. If you are arranging for new poultry yards, locate them permanently, and in the fall, set them with fruit trees—plums, pears, ets. Poultry and fruit of these kinds seem to work hand in hand. The trees will furnish shade for the chickens, while the chickens will gather the insects which ordinarily injure the fruit.

Feed your fowls judiciously that they may not eat up all the profits. Feed them enough, but do not allow the feed to be wasted. Fowls, when gorged with food, will not lay as well as those that have just enough to make them active and healthy. Cutting the corners is where the profit comes in, as a rule.

Do not go to killing off all your hens that do not lay up to the 250-a-year standard. Work off as high an average in your flock as you can, but do not insist upon the impossible. You read a good deal about the wonderful record of some individual hen has made, but the money-makers are the good, all-around, average flocks, giving us about 150 eggs to the hen. Let the good work go on.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Brown Estate Lots Are Sold by Foster

Certain properties in the estate of the late Julius L. Brown are gradually being disposed of through the administrator, ex-Governor Joseph M. Brown, and Atlanta real estate agents. Some time ago a tract was sold on Decatur street, semi-central property, at a good price, and the Julius Brown home on Washington street was put on the market.

The latest sale is of fifteen vacant lots fronting 800 feet on Little and Crew streets to a client of the Foster & Robson Agency, and of an adjoining lot for the Exchange Bank to Victor L. Smith. The prices are withheld. The sales were made by W. A. Foster, of the above agency.

The Joseph E. Brown property near the Soldiers' Home has been placed with an agency for subdivision.

Lots of Cash for Property.

Cash sales are again coming to the front. Judge W. R. Hammond has sold to Edward England through I. W. Harrell, of the George P. Moore Agency, the two-story frame house at No. 218 North Jackson street, between Adams street and East avenue, for $6,600 cash. This property is 55 by 200 feet and is on the north side of the street. Mr. England will make his home there.

Paul Nuckols has sold to Mrs. S. W. Goode a parcel on Auburn avenue just east of Piedmont, 25 by 112 feet, for $11,000 cash. The transaction was handled through A. S. Hook, of the Foster & Robson Agency. The property is improved with a two-story brick building.

Encroachment of Building.

An encroachment of four inches on the city's sidewalk by the Ponce DeLeon apartments at the southeast corner of Peachtree and Ponce DeLeon avenue has been reported to Building Inspector Hays by Assistant Inspector C. J. Bowen, and the matter will be taken before the City Council.

Frontage at this point is worth about $1,200 a foot. An effort was made to widen Peachtree here, it will be recalled, before the apartments were started, but the project fell through.

Ansley Park Car Line.

A quiet movement has been on foot for several weeks to get a car line through Ansley Park, and those who are interested in the project are hoping for success. The idea is to extend the Piedmont avenue line, which stops just a few hundred yards south of the city limits, through to Polo drive, over that thoroughfare's stone bridge and thence to Rock Springs.

The people of the Rock Springs section have been seeking a car line many months, and it seems to be simply a question of which route to choose to their neighborhood. The line, they have been assured, will be extended to Rock Springs, either through Ansley Park or by way of Piedmont avenue. Realizing what Edwin P. Ansley has done for the city, heavy owners in the Rock Springs section have felt inclined to pull for the Ansley Park route. The other way, however, would make it possible to widen Piedmont avenue.

"Ansley Park must soon have its car line," declared a well-known real estate dealer. "There are too many nickels for the street car company."

Sell Property for Taxes.

People who are accustomed to hunt real estate bargains in Atlanta will soon find their opportunity, although there won't be any chance to buy central or semi-central property at a reduction. Charles W. Smith, chairman of the Council Tax Committee, has discovered that the city holds overdue tax liens against $41,000 worth of property, mostly vacant lots, and he has ordered that they be sold. The date and the place of the sale will be announced later. Some of the property is improved with small buildings.

To Discuss Realty Loans.

An important meeting of the members of the Atlanta Real Estate Board will be held Tuesday afternoon at 3 o'clock in room 314 of the State Capitol to urge the passage of the sinking fund investment bill, which provides for investing State reserve funds in real estate as a first lien as well as in bonds.

On the committee to see the proper authorities about this legislation are Harris G. White, president of the board; S. B. Turman, second vice president, and W. A. Foster, of the Foster & Robson Agency, and a director of the board. They will not only appear before a legislative committee, but will use every effort between now and Tuesday to get all the real estate men to attend the meeting.

Representatives Field and Smith, of DeKalb, are the authors of the bill to repeal the measure of 1910, which restricts such loans to bonds. Real estate constitutes about 69 per cent of the taxable values in Fulton County and about 54 per cent in the State, and because of this it is held that such discrimination should not exist.

Results of Realty Elections.

"There is plenty of work before the Atlanta Real Estate Board in the next year," declared Harris G. White Friday night at the Cafe Durand, in accepting the position of president to succeed Charles P. Glover. "For some time I have been in close touch with the affairs of the board, and I know what it means to run this organization. I want all of you to make suggestions and take an active interest, and we are sure to demonstrate the need for the organization."

Mr. White's talk followed an impromptu parade around the room, escorted by Mr. Glover and S. B. Turman, with the land brokers singing "He's a jolly good fellow!" and things like that. Charles P. Glover spoke briefly on the duties of the past year and predicted success under President White. A vote of thanks was given him, S. B. Turman eulogized him and the members voted thanks to all the retiring officers.

Others elected were John J. Woodside, vice president; S. B. Turman, second vice president; Van B. Smith, secretary, and H. W. Dews, treasurer.

The following six directors were elected to serve until 1914: Forrest Adair, W. A. Foster, S. L. Dallas, G. M. McKinnon, J. H. Ewing and J. W. Dobbins. The following six will serve until 1915: Charles P. Glover, A. S. Hook, Edgar Morris, T. B. Gay, A. J. West and S. E. Davidson. The following were elected to serve as the appraisement committee R. O. Cochran, T. C. Holmes, W. L. DuPree, H. W. Dillin, Fitzhugh Knox, R. R. Otis. One more will be appointed by the president owing to the resignation of Walker Dunson.

A change in the by-laws was effected, allowing six directors to be elected each year to serve for the ensuing two years. This will allow six members of the twelve to end their terms every year, and will facilitate the work of the board.

The appraisement committee was raised from five to seven, and the board of directors from eleven to twelve.

Realty Men's Good Luck—Oil.

The Atlanta real estate fraternity has received with more than ordinary interest the news that four of its members—B. M. Grant, T. J. Cheshire, Myron Freeman and J. M. Fraser, all of the Grant Agency—have struck oil on a 160-acre tract which they bought some time ago near Oklahoma City, Okla. For a time the prospect looked hopeless, but while Mr. Grant was at Toxaway this week he received a telegram that the well was flowing 150 barrels a day. Mr. Grant and D. C. Lyle, of the Georgia Realty Company, a stockholder in the developing concern, the Huguely Company, went immediately to the scene.

Good Demand for Homes.

The demand for Atlanta homes, especially on the North Side, holds up steady. A leading real estate agency has a client, for instance, who wants to put $10,000 cash into a North Side residence. This office had a number of inquiries Saturday.

A citizen wants to exchange a piece of semi-central property within the half-mile circle for a North Side home worth $12,000 to $16,500, paying the difference.

Another agency has customers for a ten-room home that can be used for two families, and for a twelve-room home for boarding house purposes. The latter are wanted on the North Side.

Significant to people renting houses is the fact that there are very few "for rent" cards out in West End, Decatur and other suburbs.

G. T. R. Fraser's New Location.

G. T. R. Fraser, the well known real estate agent formerly located in the Y. M. C. A. Building on Auburn avenue, has moved his office to No. 406 Equitable Building. Mr. Fraser makes a specialty of East Lake lots, with which he has had much success. He was forced out of the Y. M. C. A. Building when the Chamber of Commerce took it over recently for renovation. The Lochridge-McClain-Moon Company went to No. 4 North Pryor street, Kimball House.

New House for West Peachtree.

A handsome new two-story frame house is in the course of erection on the west side of West Peachtree street, about 200 feet north of West Fourteenth street. This house comes as a welcome addition to this particular neighborhood, since the 150 feet of frontage adjoining this, which the Crawford estate owns, is built up with small stores and houses. Once the Crawford estate is settled, the frontage is expected to be improved in keeping with the rest of the neighborhood.

E. G. Willingham & Sons have the contract for the lumber and mill work on the above house.

Six Bungalows Rushed.

Several of the six bungalows which A. B. Buehl is building in West Peachtree Park (West Thirteenth street) are practically finished, and the tenants will shortly move in. These houses are east of the home which Mr. Buehl built as a residence at the northwest corner of West Peachtree and Thirteenth streets.

Building Permits.

Save Unfortunate Women and Protect Society

That a majority of unfortunate women can be saved and society protected at the same time has been demonstrated beyond the question of a doubt. Therefore, it is essential that a bill now pending in the Georgia Legislature, which has been favorably reported by the Prisons Committee, looking to the construction of a reformatory for vicious women, should become a law, and that the Appropriations Committee, to which the bill has been referred, should report favorably.

The bill calls for an appropriation of $75,000 for the construction and maintenance of the institution, which is small indeed when the welfare of society and the saving of women is taken into consideration.

An exhaustive investigation has been made in many States as to the cause of prostitution of women—low wages, insanitary conditions in factories and stores, etc., have been given as a cause in a great many instances, and a correction of these conditions has been announced as a preventive, which is well and good, but what to do with those we have already is a question that is attracting the attention of good citizens in every State in the Union.

This question has been solved to such an extent that three-fourths of the inmates of the Bedford Reformatory in New York have been saved, while only one-fourth have returned to the old life after a stay of two years in this reformatory.

This method of treating vice has proven so successful that those good men and women who have been giving of their time and money for the cause of fallen women are encouraged, and will continue the work until satisfactory results are obtained.

As to the work and results at Bedford Reformatory, Lyman Abbott writes as follows:

"When a prostitute is brought before a New York judge, he may discharge her, with or without a fine; he may send her to the workhouse for a short term—I believe three months is the maximum—or he may send her to the Bedford Reformatory. The experience of the past indicates that the deterrent power of fear is very ineffective as a cure for crime, yet something may be said for the deterrent power of fear as a preventive, if not as a cure. But a fine or three months in the workhouse has no deterrent power. When the fine is paid or the three months have expired, the girl has no option but to take to the street and resume her vicious career. No home and no factory will or indeed can take her in and give her a chance for a better life. This is just what the Bedford Reformatory does. It brings her into an atmosphere not merely of cleanliness and of industry, but of hopefulness. It puts before the girl an open door. It inspires her with courage to believe that she can enter it if she chooses to do so. It inspires that wish in her, and, by training, gives her some measure of preparation for earning an honest livelihood. While practically every girl treated by the other method goes back to prey upon the community again, the figures show that less than one-quarter of those who are discharged from the Reformatory after a two years' imprisonment resume their vicious occupation."

Is not the establishment of an institution in Georgia that has been proven a success in another State worth trying?

The time to act is NOW. The good women and men of Georgia are giving their time and money in the cause of the unfortunates. If only one-fourth of the women imprisoned there are saved, it is worth the price.

Georgia should REFORM criminals, NOT MAKE THEM.

The City

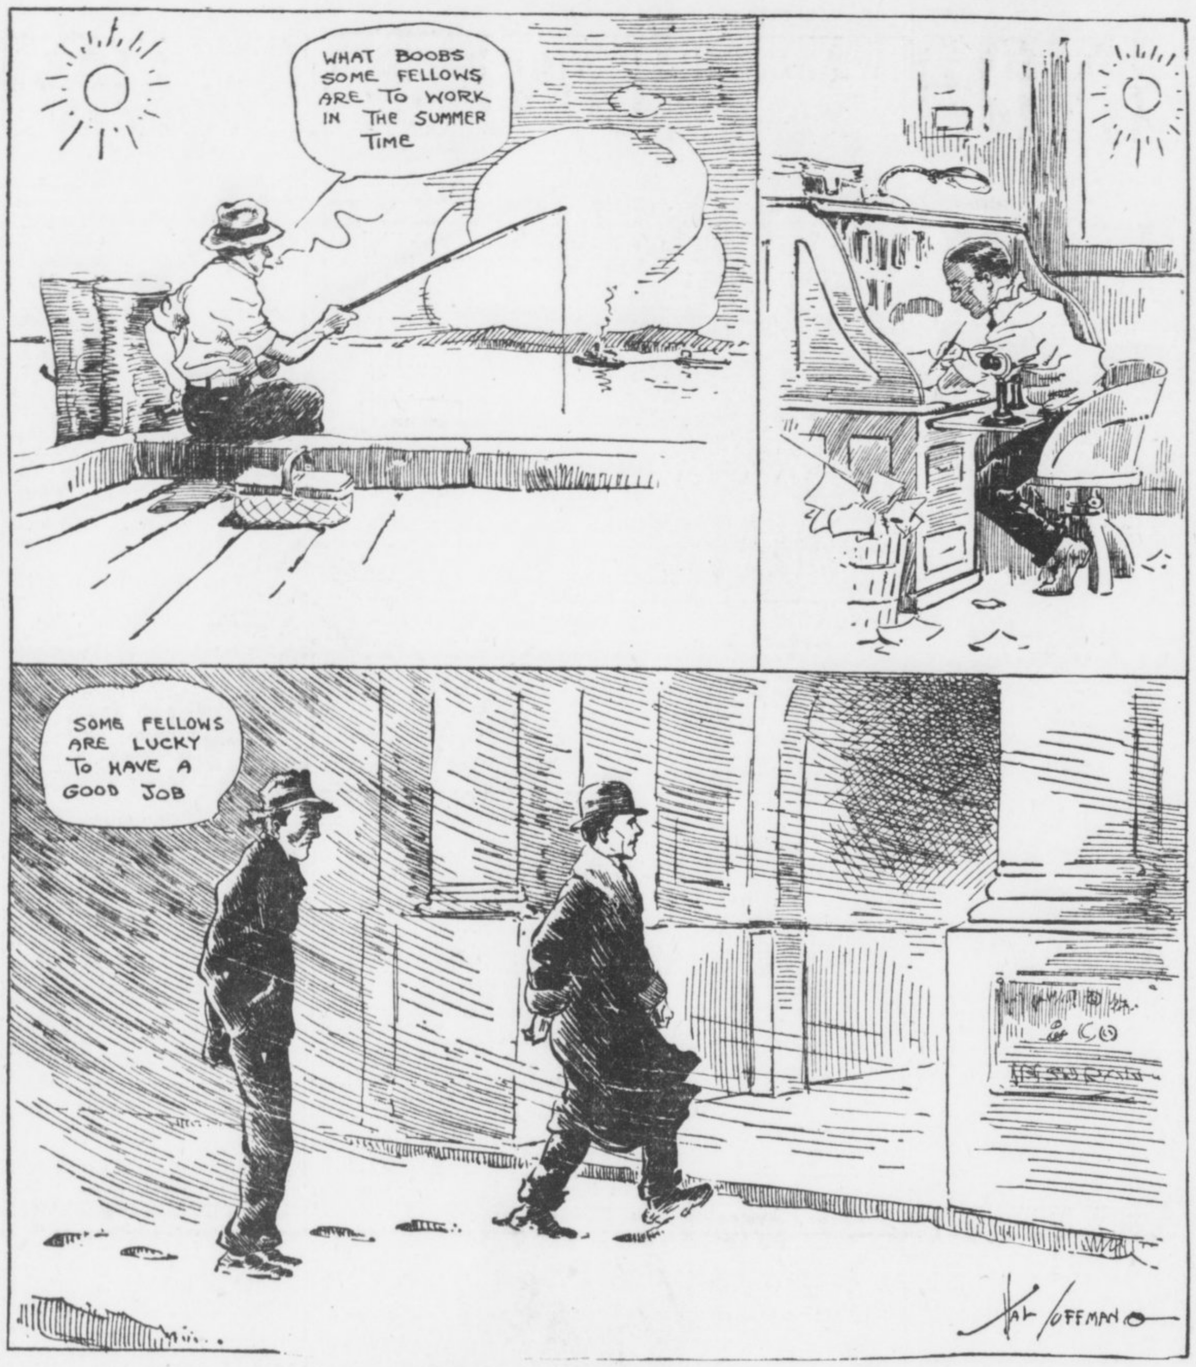
By Gordon Johnstone.

THERE'S a brave world I know called The Great Out-o'-Doors,
Where the wind and the wave lure our feet,
And the green o' the fields meets the wan, tired eyes
With the touch and the kiss o' a lost paradise;
Where the chickadee calls and the wild eagle soars,
And the lark trills his sweetest o' sweet;
But give me the city,
Its pain and its pity,
Its highways and byways o' heat.

Oh, a man may live off on a hilltop alone,
Where the days are a-wing on a song,
But he'll never sound depths that are human and deep
By running away from the herd o' the sheep,
By shutting his heart to the tear and the groan
O' the lovable suffering throng.
So give me the city,
Its grief and its pity,
Its spendthrift, its weak and its strong.

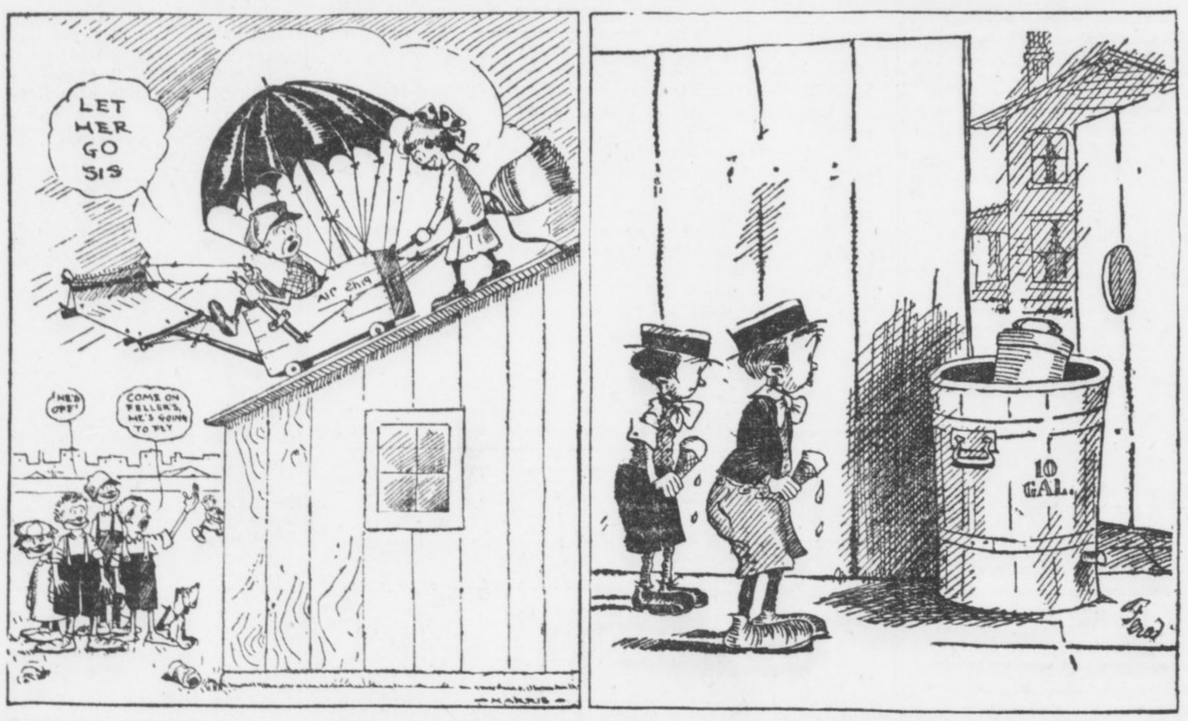
Oh, here is the Kingdom of Fair Worlds to Be
When the peace-riders come silver-shod,
For there isn't a cavil, when all's said and done,
That the Maker in making MEANT ALL TO BE ONE,
As the streams of the nations that merge in one sea
And move at the wind o' His nod.
So hail the World-City,
Its pride and its pity,
That's built on the high road o' God.

The Grasshopper and the Ant



The grasshopper, you know, sings all Summer while the ant toils away laying up a store for the Winter. When the cold pinches, the grasshopper thinks the ant lucky to have plenty of provisions. But a man should know better than to think that it's luck that keeps one in a good job.

The Young Aviator---And the Young Paupers



EDMUND BURKE

By Rev. Thomas B. Gregory

WHEN Edmund Burke died, one hundred and sixteen years ago, July 9, 1797, one of the greatest intellects and finest spirits of which the English-speaking world could boast passed out from the ways of men.

Old Dr. Sam Johnson said: "Burke is such a man that if you met him for the first time in the street, where you were stopped by a drove of oxen, and you and he stepped aside to take shelter but for five minutes, he'd talk to you in such a manner that when you parted you would say, 'This is an extraordinary man.'" When the old doctor was asked for his opinion regarding the authorship of the Letters of Junius, he declared that if Burke was not the author of the famous letters he could not guess who might be, since Burke was the only man then living in England who had the genius to write them.

Edmund Burke has often been called a paradox, a contradiction. A conservative of the Conservatives, he was at the same time an ardent progressive. A stanch champion of the ancient order, he was one of the greatest friends of the American revolt against King George. To add to the puzzling situation, while he said Godspeed to the American uprising, he emptied upon the heads of the French revolutionists the vials of his hottest wrath.

The explanation is not far to seek. Burke's ruling passion was for the thing known in these days as "Due Process of Law." Orderliness, in a word. In the American Revolution he saw nothing contrary to that idea; while the French Revolution, as it impressed Burke, was the very apotheosis of anarchy and chaos.

Parental Obligation

Primitive Habit of Looking on Father as Domestic Commissary Is Entirely Wrong--His Qualities and Teachings Necessary to Raise Male Child to Ideal Manhood.

Written For The Georgian

By the Rev. Dr. C. H. Parkhurst

WHAT is the extent of the parental obligation which a father owes to his children? The question deserves consideration because of its close bearing upon the purpose of domestic life, which is to produce children and make them serviceable to the interests of their times.

It has been pointed out that the terms "father" and "feeder" are but variable forms of one and the same word. So understood, the father is merely the one who provisions the family and stands to it in the relation of commissary.

In the more primitive forms of familyhood, when increasing the human breed, rather than improving it, met all recognized requirements, nothing more would naturally be demanded of the father than that the young of the family, like the young of the flock and herd, should be amply supplied with what will sustain life and promote growth. So that the faithful father would simply be he who was the attentive feeder, with no responsibility that looked beyond what the children needed as young and growing animals.

It is one of the features of more finished civilization that in some respects it continues to cherish customs and modes of thinking and feeling inherent in civilization of a more primitive type, but which we should suppose would have been outgrown and left behind with the process of time and the broadening and mellowing of sentiment.

Father as Commissary.

We have an example of this in the rather general continuance to the present time of the primitive habit of looking upon the father as the domestic commissary, and of considering that the obligations with which he has been especially charged have been fulfilled when his children have had furnished them all that is required by their creature necessities—housing, clothing and food.

He is reckoned a dutiful father if he keeps up the house and leaves it to the mother and her proxies to furnish education, morals, religion and all the finer accessories; he to take care of the child as an animal, and she to look after him as a person.

Without raising the question as to whether exclusive maternal influence will suffice for the successful upbringing of a family of girls, it is distinctly insufficient for the development of young masculine nature. There is a certain personal quality inherent in the normal man—but of which the normal woman is destitute—and without which no male child can become a perfectly constituted man; so that if he be submitted exclusively to maternal treatment, he has small chance of achieving an ideal manhood.

Of course, there are mannish women—a species of human freak with which our generation is being made painfully familiar—but freaks play no part in the economy of nature. Mannishness is a cheap counterfeit of manliness and can not render to the boy the office of masculine genuineness.

There is a certain special type of robustness and stability which the lad will gain by social contact with the father which only in rare instances will he acquire from his mother; and the unfortunate feature of our family life at present is that the father, as a rule, is so engaged and engrossed with what lies outside of the real inner life of the home that contact between father and son is reduced to a minimum.

Twofoldness of Parentage.

The twofoldness of parentage answers to the twin energies in nature by which its sterner and gentler forces combine with each other in the production of the finest forms of vegetable and animal life. The idea of duality runs through everything.

Everywhere there is the balancing and the co-operation of complementary forces.

The mother makes her contribution to the developing character of the child, a contribution full of wealth and tenderness, without which the lad, as he comes into mature years, would be destitute of charm and incapable of the finest effects of personality. But underneath the maternally conferred graces of character, and sustaining them, there requires to be a foundation made out of sterner stuff, exactly as the tree is unable to achieve the purposes of its existence by virtue of the foliage with which it is clad or the blossoms by which it is decorated except by the solidity of its anchorage in the firm soil in which it is planted.

Family life as it is maintained in these hurried days of business engrossment is such that fathers and their boys, in hosts of cases, hardly know each other.

The withholding of paternal influence is bound to leave its mark in the one-sided development of the boy; and it does leave its mark.

Masculine Impress Necessary.

The young fellow, as he leaves the warm home nest, commits himself to flight that lacks the sustaining power which can be secured only by the impress upon him of what is definitely and distinctly masculine.

It lies in the order of nature; beauty combined with stamina, grace married into grit.

We might go on and say that boyhood, and therefore manhood, is suffering from the fact that so much of our schoolroom training is furnished by women; but that would carry us into too wide a field.

In all the serious matters of life our only safe way is to keep close to the intentions of nature. The character of the individual depends upon it and so does the quality of civilization.

MEN UNDER SCRUTINY

By THOMAS TAPPER

WHEN the wag of a Western town mailed a letter to the ten principal citizens, saying, "All is discovered," the Ten immediately disappeared and no questions asked.

More men are being watched than ever dream of it.

Not an alarming situation, either, but a hopeful one.

An employer with a grain of common sense wants to intrust his business to capable men and women. In many cases even boys and girls are included.

As no man can run a big business alone, he is forced to find those who can help him.

Necessarily they all come to be tried upon these counts:

1. Loyalty.
2. Dependability.
3. Capacity.

The last, Capacity, shows itself at once. The first morning's work makes it evident that the worker equals 100 per cent of his job or less.

But the other two, Loyalty and Dependability, are NOT to be decided upon the first day or even the first YEAR.

IT TAKES TIME to try out a man's inner character. He must be left alone to the environment and the job until they have put all sorts of tests upon him.

Then someone begins to notice and say: "Well, this man stands the strain all right. When he speaks, he speaks for us; when we want him, he is where he should be."

"If this is the case," says the head of the business, "give him a chance.

"Try him out on something hard to do.

"See if he will weaken when it is put up to him good and strong."

And so on.

So they keep after him, watching his Loyalty and Dependability. Testing it as if it were a steel beam, to find if there be a weak spot in it.

By and by someone says: "This man rings true every time you strike him."

"In that case," the Boss says: "MAKE HIM ONE OF US."

THROWS ACID AT WOMAN WITH HER HUSBAND

CROWD SEES ATTACK ON STREET

Peachtree Throng Sees Woman Tussle With Rival—Principals Make Escape.

Two women and a man who was said to be the husband of one engaged in a struggle before hundreds of pedestrians on Peachtree street in front of Parks-Chambers-Hardwick Company's store at 2 o'clock Saturday afternoon and fled before their names or the cause of the trouble could be discovered.

"Dr. Smith," shouted the second woman, who rushed up to the man and the woman in the store.

"Mrs. McRae again—"

The woman hurled a bottle of brownish liquid at her enemy. They clinched as they tussled toward the door, and those around said carbolic acid was used in the encounter.

As a crowd rushed up the woman called Mrs. McRae hurried into the store and caught the elevator. She went to the third floor and hurried down the back stairs.

"Dr. Smith" and the woman who had made the attack hurried around the corner.

A policeman who was on the corner had rushed up. He said he talked with the woman called Mrs. McRae. She said her opponent was the divorced wife of Dr. Smith and that they had been separated for five years.

No Arrests Made.

The policeman said he noticed a little blood on the woman's arm. As all participants hurried away and no one who was present who desired a prosecution the policeman said he would make no arrest.

Clerks in the store said they did not recognize any of the principals with the possible exception of the man. They were not sure about him, but thought he lived in a downtown hotel.

All they knew of the affair was what they saw and the exclamations of the woman said to be the divorced wife of the man.

The man, they said, seemed so bewildered by the fury of the woman who had attacked his companion that his only thought seemed to be to get away.

Chauffeur Faints At Wheel From Effects of Heat

J. L. Walton, 38 years old, a chauffeur residing at 16 Ashby street, collapsed from effects of the heat while driving his automobile down Peachtree street shortly after noon Saturday.

Walton slid down in his seat, releasing the steering wheel. A pedestrian, passing, noticed the man's plight, and, jumping into the machine, brought it to a stop.

Walton was rushed to the Grady Hospital in a semi-conscious state.

Mayor Cuts Pigeon Wing to Prove He Has Quit Fighting

Alderman J. H. Harwell, famed for his wit, Saturday asked Mayor Woodward if he ever expected to quit quarreling. Mayor Woodward replied that already he had quit. The bond commission was in session and proof of the change immediately was demanded.

"If you mean that, Jim, dance a jig while I pat," said Alderman Harwell.

Alderman Harwell patted his hands and kept time with his foot while Mayor Woodward cut a few fine capers across the committee room of the City Hall and the committeemen roared with laughter.

3 Hurt in $15,000 Fire at Waycross

WAYCROSS, July 19.—Three persons were injured, one seriously, and property worth $15,000 was destroyed in an early morning fire on Elizabeth street to-day which destroyed the boarding house operated by W. A. Jones. The boarders escaped in their night clothes.

L. B. Boggs, City Building Inspector, injured a foot; A. C. Monroe, a fireman, was hit on the head by a falling timber, and F. D. Rexler was badly burned about the face and arms.

J. W. Cox, a boarder, lost a $400 diamond ring and $130 in cash. L. B. Harriell, owner of the house, estimates his loss at $5,000, with partial insurance.

After defeating the Canadians in the two single matches yesterday, Maurice McLoughlin, of San Francisco, and Harold Hackett, of New York, representing the United States, won from R. B. Powell and B. P. Schwengers, the Canadian runners-up, in the doubles to-day, the scores being 6-3, 6-3, 12-10.

30,000 Strikers in Chicago Arbitrate

CHICAGO, July 19.—The two most serious labor difficulties in Chicago this year were cleared to-day when the Building Construction Employers' Association notified the Building Trades Council that the lock-out against 30,000 union men would end Monday, and suburban street car employees went back to work, satisfied that the new syndicate would grant their demands for higher wages.

Building operations amounting to more than $40,0000,000 will be resumed Monday when the building trades lock-out ends. An agreement was signed for a permanent arbitration board.

BOARDER IS ACCUSED OF ARSON

Rooming House Keeper Also Says Man Tried to Poison Her. Jealous, Police Say.

Police investigation of the burning of the home of Mrs. A. C. Klapper, at No. 256 East Hunter street, Saturday morning, for which G. A. Vaughn, an employee of the Boston Trading Company and a roomer at the Klapper home, is held on suspicion of being the incendiary, took a new and unexpected turn Saturday afternoon.

Mrs. Klapper, when questioned by Detective Coker, declared that Vaughn tried to poison her one day last week.

"I was sick," Mrs. Klapper said, "and asked Vaughn to bring me a glass of water. He was very nervous when he brought it, and I became suspicious that something was wrong. I looked into the glass, and lying on the bottom were some white powders. I was sure they were poison, and refused to drink the water. Vaughn offered to bring me another glass, but I refused to have it.

Calls Boarder Jealous.

"I am sure Vaughn tried to poison me. He is insanely jealous of me, and he has several times threatened to hurt me and to destroy my property."

Vaughn was taken from his cell and grilled by Detective Coker and Chief of Detectives Lanford for more than an hour Saturday morning, in the hope of getting him to admit some connection with the burning of the Klapper home. He was also asked about Mrs. Klapper's assertion that he tried to poison her.

He admitted taking her the water, but denied that there were any powders in the glass.

Love Affair Alleged.

The police say that Vaughn was in love with Mrs. Klapper, and declare that she admitted that he had paid her attentions for the past year or more.

In addition to the police investigation, State Fire Marshal W. R. Joyner announced Saturday morning that he has started a probe of the fire which destroyed the roof of Mrs. Klapper's home, causing damage of $500. According to the firemen, the blaze started in a closet in Vaughn's room on the second floor.

Vaughn was charged with trying to burn the building by Mrs. Klapper. According to the story she told the police, she quarreled with Vaughn before he went to work this morning, and Vaughn made threats and then went into his room.

Calls House Over Phone.

A few minutes later, she says, he hurried downstairs and went downtown. Half an hour later he called her on the telephone and asked if everything was all right, she says, and one of the other boarders who answered the phone told him the house was on fire. Vaughn immediately left his office and rushed to the scene of the fire. Mrs. Klapper was standing near the door wringing her hands, when Vaughn appeared and started into the house. She intercepted him.

"You've burned my house!" she screamed. "I'll have you arrested."

Mrs. Klapper began struggling with Vaughn, and Call Officer Watson came up. At the request of the woman, who declared she would prefer a formal charge against him, Vaughn was arrested and taken to police headquarters.

Slit Skirts Only for Old Folks, Says Judge

LEXINGTON, KY., July 19.—"Grown-up folks may wear slit gowns, but the young shall not," declared Judge J. P. Scott, of the Juvenile Court, here in sending Margaret Murphy, 16, to a convent for having improper guardianship. The girl was arrested while "joy riding" with a young man. She was dressed in a smart slit gown.

BIG THEFT IN GEORGIA BANK

WASHINGTON, July 19.—Acting Comptroller of the Currency Kane today announced that the First National Bank, of Lafayette, Ga., has been closed by National Bank Examiner Thomas C. Dunlap, with the authority of the board of directors, on account of a large shortage which makes the bank insolvent.

Mr. Kane says he has not received a detailed report of the condition of the bank. Mr. Dunlap has been appointed receiver.

"We do not know how big the defalcation may be," said Mr. Kane, "but our preliminary examination has shown that it is not less than $30,000. This shortage has occurred since May 23, when the bank was last examined. Suspicion on the part of officers of the bank several days ago that a shortage existed caused them to call in Examiner Dunlap. Discovery of the embezzlement resulted.

"In his telegraphic advices to me Mr. Dunlap does not say to whom suspicion attaches. The last statement of the condition of the bank, issued on June 4, showed the bank to be in a proper state. The president of the bank is R. N. Dickerson, and S. A. Hunt, Jr., is cashier."

In a telegram from Mr. Dunlap Mr. Kane is advised that steps have been taken to make an arrest.

Depositors to Lose Little by Failure.

CHATTANOOGA, July 19.—Local bankers stated to-day that the liabilities of the First National Bank, of LaFayette, Ga., which was announced to-day by Acting Comptroller of Currency Kane, at Washington, to have failed, were approximately $240,000, but that depositors would be paid in full with but a slight loss to stockholders, as the assets would prove but slightly less.

An unsuccessful attempt was made this morning to obtain a schedule of the liabilities and assets of the institution. The officials are extremely reticent concerning the cause of the institution's embarrassment.

Marshalls to Lose The 'Borrowed Baby'

WASHINGTON, July 19.—There is grief in the Marshall household and the Vice President has lost much of his accustomed cheerfulness, for the "borrowed baby," Thomas Marshall Sutherland, is going home.

The baby has been for two months the light and sunshine of the Vice Presidential apartment, but now he misses "mamma" and "mamma" misses him, so that, reluctantly, the Marshalls are going to return him to his parents, the Rev. Dr. and Mrs. A. D Sutherland, in Berkley Springs, Md.

Brass Band to Lure Drowsy to Church

A brass band playing in front of a church for an hour will be used Sunday by the Baptist Tabernacle to attract people to the services.

Sunday will be primary day at the Tabernacle and it has been determined to get everyone for several blocks to attend church for this occasion. The band will play with the aim of waking up everyone in that neighborhood.

Following the concert the primary day exercises will begin, being reviewed by Professor E. M. Poteat, of Furman University.

NEW ENTRY ENLIVENS BIG BEAUTY CONTEST

Athletic girl whose face friends say should adorn Booster Button

Search for Atlanta's prettiest is talk of the town.

The beauty contest Saturday caught all eyes that hitherto have evaded its lure with the nomination of Miss Helen Goodrich, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Goodrich, of No. 801 Edgewood avenue, Inman Park.

The whole object of beauty, of course, is to attract the eye. The question of whose face is to adorn the "500,000 Club" booster buttons has come to dominate the talk of the town. Atlanta is famous for her pretty girls.

Miss Goodrich is a graceful, athletic girl with very rich brown hair and deep brown eyes. She is regarded as a fine type of Atlanta girl.

The beauty contest is to continue for some days yet. Who the prettiest girl is to be is as much a puzzle as it was at the beginning. Yet the question must be decided before the "500,000 Club" buttons can be ordered and the club actually organized.

Nominate your candidate at once and send in her photograph.

Two Near Death in Auto-Trolley Crash

W. E. Jones, driver of a Coca-Cola auto truck, and the motorman of a Courtland street car had a narrow escape from death Saturday morning when truck and car collided at the corner of Courtland and Pine streets. The truck escaped damage, while the front of the car was wrecked.

Both Jones and the motorman jumped for their lives when they saw a collision was unavoidable. Passengers on the car were thrown about, but no injuries were reported.

Charges have been filed against Jones for reckless driving. He will be given a hearing in Recorder's Court Monday.

MERCURY RISES TO 98, HOTTEST OF SUMMER

All heat records for Atlanta this summer were broken Saturday when, at noon, the thermometer of the United States Weather Bureau registered 98 degrees. Indications were that before night the mercury would climb higher.

Thousands of Atlantans sought the parks Saturday for relief from the oppressive heat, and the cooling breeze they found there probably prevented hundreds of prostrations.

On the downtown streets the heat was intense.

Relief is promised Sunday, however, as the weather man states that a thundershower is due here in the early afternoon. More moderate weather will follow for several days. the summer. The minimum temperature during Friday night was 78, which is very high for Atlanta.

Bank Bill Will Get Hearing on Thursday

The new banking bill introduced in the House and which has aroused interest among Georgia bankers will be given a hearing at 2:30 o'clock next Thursday morning before the Banks and Banking Committee, J. L. Cooper, of Ware, chairman.

One banking bill, introduced by Representative R. B. Blackburn, of Fulton, has already been favorably reported. This provides for twenty-five trustees of trust companies instead of fifteen.

SOLICITOR IS CERTAIN NO BILL WILL BE FOUND

Attorneys for Defense Want Venire Drawn From Grand Jury Box.

Solicitor Dorsey expressed assurance Saturday afternoon that the Grand Jury never would indict Jim Conley before the trial of Leo M. Frank.

At the same time it became known that attorneys for the defense had made the usual move of asking that the jurors to pass on the guilt or innocence of Frank be drawn from the Grand Jury box instead of the petit jury box.

"There is no more chance that Jim Conley will be indicted," said the Solicitor, "than that the judge will accede to the remarkable request of the defense for a jury picked from the Grand Jury box."

Has Filed a Protest.

The Solicitor already has filed a protest against the proposed procedure which the defense is said to have suggested.

"It is irregular in the extreme," said the Solicitor. "It never has been done before to my knowledge. I am not informed as to its legality. That matter I have not looked up, but I have protested against it and will fight any such move."

The Solicitor's assurance that no indictment would be brought against Conley was taken to mean that he was in possession of evidence which he believed would be sufficient effectively to deter the jurors from charging the negro with the crime.

Can't Predict "No Bill."

"I can not believe that any Grand Jury, with the knowledge of the facts before it, could bring an indictment against Conley," he said.

Asked if he thought that a "no bill" on the charge of murder would be brought out against the negro, the Solicitor refused to make further comment.

He intimated, however, that he would be present at the hearing and that he would fight every effort to lay the formal charge of murder against Conley.

Crucial Battle Coming.

With the first skirmish won by those in favor of the indictment of Conley, the hottest battle is yet to be waged behind the closed doors of the jury room. The question first will be on whether the grand jurors consider it proper at this time to reopen the investigation whose first chapter resulted in the indictment of Leo M. Frank on the charge of slaying Mary Phagan. Solicitor Dorsey will lay before the body for the first time all of his reasons for desiring a postponement of all further investigation until after the trial of Frank.

Should the solicitor be driven back from this position by the Grand Jury again disregarding his wishes and taking up the investigation, he will be forced to take refuge in the last ditch and make his fight against the indictment of Conley.

With all the weight of evidence which has piled up against the negro, it is regarded as beyond the realm of possibilities that he could persuade the jurors to return a "no bill" against Conley on the charge of murder. Dorsey's one remaining hope at this time would be, it is said, to induce the Grand Jury to waive definite action until after the trial of Frank, when it will be in a position to say whether an indictment shall be drawn against Conley as an accessory after the fact, to which he has confessed, or as the actual murderer.

Dorsey Refuses to Comply.

The Solicitor's attitude in the matter plainly was shown by his statement when Foreman Beattie went to

MEXICO STEALS UNITED STATES CIPHER CODE

State Secrets in Envoy Wilson's Messages to Washington Bared. Powers Recall Ministers.

WASHINGTON, July 19.—A copy of the official code of the State Department, containing information worth thousands of dollars to foreign governments, has fallen into the hands of the Mexican Administration.

It is being used to further the ends of the Huerta regime, it was asserted here to-day.

For some months State Department officials have suspected that the Government telegrams from Mexico City have been tampered with, it is declared, but this was not considered important, as all the dispatches were in code, and, therefore, theoretically illegible.

About three weeks ago, however, Government officials here had their first inkling that the Mexicans were obtaining the gist of the dispatches passing between the State Department and Ambassador Wilson.

At first it was suspected that an employee of the department in this city was to blame, but investigation proved this to be impossible. The telegrams were read only by three persons in Washington—the official telegrapher; Robert Rose, confidential secretary to Secretary of State Bryan, and the Secretary of State himself. All of these were above suspicion.

The agents of the almost unknown "secret service" of the State Department then were put on the trail and evidence was obtained that the Government dispatches had been "lifted" from the wires in Mexico and decoded, the information contained therein being transmitted to President Huerta and his Cabinet.

As this information was, at times, highly uncomplimentary to the present Government in Mexico, the matter at once took on an international aspect, and the efforts of the department's agents to discover the "leak" were redoubled, but in vain.

Every effort will be made to locate the copy of the State Department code and destroy it. It would prove of immense value if it fell into the hands of a hostile nation, as it would be impossible to print another code and to distribute it all over the world in less than six months.

Italy Orders Minister Home From Mexico City.

MEXICO CITY, July 19.—It was learned to-day that the Italian Minister to Mexico secretly left here last night for Vera Cruz. Significance is attached to his departure, as it is believed he was urgently ordered to Rome.

This action is doubly impressive on account of the fact that Francis Stronge, the British Minister, has been succeeded by another and will leave here for London in a few days.

Mexico is becoming the storm center of international diplomacy apparently because of the attitude of the United States and the condition of growing anarchy here.

Ambassador Thinks He Will Lose Post.

MEXICO CITY, July 19.—Despite the statement of United States Ambassador Wilson that he expects to return here in his official capacity following his conference at Washington, it was learned to-day that the Ambassador secretly believes his days in officialdom are numbered.

Before his departure he ordered the removal of a costly silver service and other valuables from the United States Embassy to a United States warship at Vera Cruz. The families of some of the American attaches of the embassy have been sent to Vera Cruz for safety.

Interest was aroused by the announcement that the Minister of the Interior is working up a plan to concede a big part of the State of Morelos to 50,000 Japanese colonists.

Socialist Leader Takes Into His Home Disgraced Daughter of a Mehtodist Minister.

TERRE HAUTE, IND., July 19.—Eugene V. Debs, the Socialist leader, has issued what he terms his "challenge to the Christianity of Terre Haute."

He has taken into his home in the Indiana city Helen Cox, the daughter of a Methodist preacher. She had eloped with a member of a prominent family who divorced her and took their child. She was arrested for immorality. Debs met her on a visit to the jail and, as an emergency probation officer, took her into his home.

"The girl has been persecuted," he announced publicly. "Will Terre Haute help her or will its organized force be used to drive her to desperation? Let Terre Haute ask 'What would Christ do? Our family has opened our home to her.

"There is but one thing remarkable about opening our home to an unfortunate woman," he said later, when his action aroused widespread comment, "and it is that any one should consider it remarkable. This fact is significant. Persecution of these unfortunate girls is the rule, and so common that it attracts no attention. Kindness is so exceptional that it provokes widespread comment.

"The sinful woman is, as a rule, not a wicked woman, but a sick and suffering woman. As to our home, its door is open to the most sinful woman that was ever cast off by the Pharisees, who denied her while profiting by her shame. We believe, my wife and I ,that we are not only our brother's keeper, but our sister's keeper as well."

CHIEF UPHELD BY CITY FIRE BOARD

At the meeting of the City Board of Firemasters Friday afternoon Chief Cummings was sustained in his policy of discharging men who do not pay their debts.

A fireman had been discharged and he had complained to Mayor Woodward. The matter was brought to the attention of the board, but the fireman did not appear to defend himself.

The board decided to recommend to Council that the fire engine lot on Bellwood avenue in the Fifth Ward be exchanged for a lot on Marietta street.

The Marietta street lot is valued at $4,000, while the Bellwood avenue lot is worth only $2,500.

DORSEY OPPOSES INDICTING CONLEY

him Friday seeking to have him call the meeting. Dorsey flatly refused and said:

"The meeting's only purpose will be to exploit the evidence and embarrass the State, and I hope the Grand Jury when it meets will decide to leave the matter alone.

"The indictment of Conley at this time will be a useless procedure that will not stop the trial of Frank. It will only have a mild but undesirable effect on the State's case.

"Conley is in jail and is going to stay there for some time. He is where the authorities can put their hands on him, and he can be indicted much more properly after the Frank case has been disposed of than before, and by the delay there is no danger of a miscarriage of justice."

The Solicitor's position is attacked as palpably unfair by those who have been working to bring about the indictment of the negro. Dorsey would have the testimony of the negro accredited as that of any free and trustworthy citizen, while those opposing him declare it should be taken in the light of that of a possible murderer who is endeavoring to shift the blame on another's shoulders, they say.

They add that the evidence against Conley is far more direct and damning than any ever brought against Frank. They charge, on this account, that Conley has been protected and "coddled" when he should have been placed on the same basis as the other suspect in the case and should go before the jury in that aspect.

General denials were entered Saturday to the story published Friday that the Pinkertons had changed their attitude in the murder mystery and were convinced of the innocence of Frank. Chief of Detectives Lanford declared that Harry Scott had reaffirmed his belief in the guilt of Frank and the innocence of Conley, except as accessory after the fact.

"Even though Jim Conley should be indicted," Chief of Detectives Newsort Lanford declared Saturday afternoon, "it will not hurt the State's case against Leo Frank. The evidence obtained against Frank is conclusive. We can convict him without the evidence of Jim Conley."

NEW APARTMENT HOUSE PROJECTS ON SIDEWALK

City Could Force Alteration of Ponce DeLeon's Front—Builders May Have to Pay $42,000.

An innocent little complaint made to Building Inspector Hays has brought about a complicated situation in the construction of the $500,000 Ponce DeLeon Apartments, at the southeast corner of Peachtree street and Ponce DeLeon avenue, and just south of the Georgian Terrace.

It has been found that the building has encroached four inches on the sidewalk space belonging to the city. The city has the right to demand that the ten-story building be made to conform to the line. This would necessitate a great deal of destruction and expense.

A probable solution lies in the fact that the city has the right to sell or give the strip to the builders.

Council To Be Petitioned.

Albert Howell, Jr., head of the Fulton Properties Company, which concern controls the Ponce DeLeon, was acquainted with the situation by the Building Inspector, and he declared that he would petition Council to let the building stand.

Last week C. J. Bowen, assistant building inspector, had the engineer survey the ground to determine whether or not a window on the Peachtree side projected 14 inches over the sidewalk in violation of the building code. It did, and a case was made. It was found also that through some mistake four inches of sidewalk had been taken for the building proper. The contractor has been instructed to make the alteration as to the window.

May Cost $42,000.

Mr. Howell expressed the belief that the city would let the building stand, and he is expected to have a resolution to this effect introduced soon.

Since there is a frontage of about 35 feet on Peachtree, the encroachment is over 11 2-3 square feet. Frontage at this point is worth about $1,200 for corners, which would figure about $17 a square foot.

The company owes the city by this calculation, therefore, about $192. S ould the city decide to ignore the depth, the price at $1,200 would be about $42,000.

High Price Paid for Decatur Store Site

Ground has been broken for a two-story brick building at Decatur on McDonough street, adjoining the City Hall. It will be occupied by George Brothers with a wholesale and retail department store. The building will cost about $6,000.

The sale of the lot for this building set a new price for McDonough street property, the 50 feet bringing $3,000, or $60 per front foot.

Fire Alarm System Ready for Testing

Test of Atlanta's new fire alarm system will be made next week by the Okenite Company, of New York.

Installation of this apparatus has been made under the moral obligation system at a cost of $106,000, but while the Supreme Court has declared such contracts on the part of the city illegal, representatives of the company state they feel no doubt about being paid in full for the contract.

WANT ADS EASY, SAYS BOY IN CONTEST

Important to Enter Now—Bring in Nomination Blank Early Monday.

"I've got more than a dozen want ads promised me right in the block where I live, and I want to win one of those bicycles," said the first boy at The Georgian's business office Saturday morning. "I'm going to do it, too.

"I got a want-ad promise at every house I went to except one, and the lady wasn't at home there. It's going to be easy. When does the contest start?"

The youngster—he was just over the 14-year-age limit—was put down in the list of contestants and told to come back Monday morning and receive instructions. There will be quite a gathering at The Georgian's office then, for many young men and women have entered and are going out to win that automobile, a trip to California, the piano or one of the dozens of other prizes offered winners in the contest.

The boy's experience proves how easy it is to get want ads for a paper with a reputation for bringing results. There is no family without a want of some kind. The mere suggestion that an advertisement of a few lines in The American or Georgian will bring that maid or yardboy or sell that discarded furniture usually is met with ready response.

There's no guessing in this contest, either—no grinding day and night in a scheme where you have to invest a dollar or two for a bare chance to win a box of candy. It is a strictly business proposition. Contestants will visit their acquaintances on a business mission and they will accomplish definite results. The winner gets the automobile, the next the piano, and so on down the list.

But remember the contest begins in a few days, and it is absolutely necessary that contestants bring in their nomination blanks, receive their instructions and get ready for active work.

The Want Ad Man would like to see every contestant at his office, No. 7 Edgewood avenue, Monday some time during the day. He has something important to tell them.

SOLONS INSPECT STATE COLLEGE AT AUGUSTA

AUGUSTA, July 19.—The special train bearing Governor and Mrs. John M. Slaton, President Randolph Anderson, of the Senate; Speaker W. H. Burwell, of the House, and a majority of the members of the General Assembly arrived in Augusta at 1 o'clock Saturday afternoon. The special made its run on schedule time. As soon as it reached Augusta it was backed into the yards of the medical college and those on board detrained. The trip from Atlanta was not an unpleasant one, although the weather was extremely hot.

Meeting the train was a large number of Augustans, including Mayor L. C. Haynie and members of the City Council, Judge E. H. Callaway, president of the board of trustees of the medical college; Dr. W. H. Doughty, dean of the college, and members of the faculty.

The first visit of the Legislature to Augusta in more than a hundred years is no ordinary event, and the interest of the people in the medical college and in the lawmakers of Georgia was evidenced by the great crowd on hand. The members showed plainly their surprise and pleasure at what they saw. The former Orphan Asylum Building has been transformed into one of the most commodious and best equipped medical schools in the South. The equipment cost $40,000. This was raised in Augusta by popular subscription. Judge Callaway, Dr. Doughty and others showed the visitors over the buildings and grounds and the new university hospitals which are being erected.

After the inspection, lasting about an hour, the visitors were taken to Carmichael's Club for a barbecue dinner. During the afternoon they will be shown about the city and at 7 o'clock to-night their special will leave for Atlanta on the return trip.

$100,000,000 IN GOODS AWAIT NEW TARIFF

No Such Material Wealth as Now Is in Our Warehouses Ever Held in Nation's History.

NEW YORK, July 19.—More than $100,000,000 worth of merchandise is stored in the bonded warehouses of Greater New York to-day. Never on the face of the globe has there ever before been such an aggregation of everything that the soil yields and human industry produces.

The 56 great bonded warehouses are gorged almost to bursting with silks teas, coffees, spices, oils, rugs, carpets, toys, textile fabrics, knit goods, glassware and pottery, jute, hemp, wool, chemicals—with everything in which the merchants of the world trade.

More than 200,000 tons of sugar, worth over $12,000,000, are in bond. The New York Stock Company alone has 80,000 bags of coffee; its warehouses, with a capacity of $1,000,000 cubic feet, are filled.

Of this $100,000,000 worth of imports $70,000,000 is held pending changes in the tariff; $30,000,000 is made up of working stock which the great industrial plants must use immediately and of goods that come in free. The duties on the $70,000,000 worth that is being held deliberately in bond amount to $35,000,000 under the present tariff law. The owners are waiting to see how much of this $35,000,000 benevolent Uncle Sam will "knock off."

When the new bill becomes law millions of dollars a day will be paid into the Custom House and to railroads, and coasting vessels will be offered an enormous amount of freight. The importer who has his goods on hand will have a great advantage over competitors.

FIST FIGHT PUTS 'PEP' IN COURT'S PROCEEDINGS

A "near-fight" between W. A. Graham, a druggist of No. 354 Ponce DeLeon avenue, and B. W. Torrence, an automobile dealer of No. 350 Ponce DeLeon avenue, enlivened the proceedings of Judge Broyles' court Saturday morning.

The fight came during the trial of Graham, against whom Torrence had made two cases. In one Graham was charged with allowing a vicious dog to run at large; in the other he was charged with keeping an obnoxious stable. Graham, while making his statement, declared that Torrence's small son had sat for some hours Friday on the Graham fence.

"You are a liar!" emphatically declared Torrence.

Then Graham hit at Torrence and Torrence hit at Graham. Torrence missed, but Graham's fist raised a bump on the forehead of Policeman O. R. Jones, who was standing in front of Torrence. Before any more blows could be struck Chief Beavers separated the combatants.

Judge Broyles dismissed the dog case, but fined Graham $5.75 on the charge of maintaining a nuisance. He fined Torrence $5.75 for contempt of court in calling Graham a liar.

RETURN OF LUMB IS FOUGHT BY DEFENSE

Crawford Lawyers Ask Delay in Extradition Till Indictment of Alleged Accomplice.

That a strenuous fight is on between the attorneys for Mrs. Mary Belle Crawford and the heirs-at-law of the late Joshua B. Crawford to prevent the return to Georgia of Fred Lumb, the New York barber named as an accomplice of Mrs. Crawford in the alleged plot to poison her husband, became known Saturday morning.

Objections to the issuance of extradition papers before the indictment of Lumb have been filed with Governor Slaton by Attorney Reuben Arnold for Mrs. Crawford, and with Governor Sulzer of New York.

Attorney J. S. James, attorney for the Crawford heirs-at-law, declared Saturday morning that his future course in regard to bringing Lumb to Atlanta, in case he is apprenended by the New York police, would be governed by the results of an interview he expects to have with Governor Slaton Monday.

He intimated that should Governor Slaton refuse to issue extradition papers for Lumb before the indictment efforts would be made to have Lumb indicted at once as an accomplice.

He declared Governor Slaton would have to issue the papers if Lumb were under indictment.

"Despite Mrs. Crawford's assertions that she desires the return of Lumb, her attorneys are fighting us in our effort to bring him back," said James. "Colonel Arnold has filed a letter with Governor Slaton objecting to the issuance of the papers, and they also have filed objections with the Governor of New York."

5 Knoxville Men To Boost Exhibit

Five leading citizens of Knoxville, Tenn., will visit Atlanta next week to urge upon manufacturers, business men and the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce to participate in the National Conservation Exposition to be held in Knoxville soon.

The men who will visit Atlanta are T. Asbury Wright, William Goodman, G. L. Price, W. S. Shields and Colonel C. H. Harvey.

The Exposition, it is said, will be one of the largest manufacturing displays of Southern products in recent years.

Lad Wounded as He Robs Gum Machine

Will Davis, a 14-year-old negro, was wounded in the heel early Saturday morning when discovered by Plainclothesmen Allen and Gresham robbing a chewing gum slot machine at Houston and Hilliard streets. Two other negroes who were helping Davis escaped.

Allen and Gresham fired their pistols to half the negroes and one of the bullets struck Davis.

Barbecue and Ball Game for Auto Men

Local automobile men promise a great game Saturday when the Atlanta auto men and the Accessory men meet on the Poncy diamond at 11 o'clock.

George Hanson is captain of the automobile men and H. A. Pierce will boss the Accessory men on the field.

After the game a barbecue will be served.

OBITUARY.

The funeral of Leonard Kenny, 2-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. L. H. Kenny, of No. 101 Poplar street, who died at the residence at 1 o'clock Friday afternoon, was held from the chapel of Greenberg & Bond at 10 o'clock Saturday morning. Interment was at Westview.

J. R. Hunter, of the faculty of Georgia Tech, died at a local sanitarium at 4 o'clock Friday afternoon. He was 49 years old, is survived by a wife and had only recently come to Atlanta from Chattanooga. The body is at Patterson's chapel, pending the arrival of relatives.

The body of Mrs. Martha J. Roop, who died at a local sanitarium Friday, was sent to her home in Carrollton, Ga., Saturday for funeral and interment. Mrs. Roop was 68 years old, and is survived by her husband, the Rev. W. W. Roop, and one daughter, Mrs. Samuel Copeland, of Bremen, Ga.

The body of John C. Fultz, who died at the residence, No. 127 Pearl street, Friday afternoon, will be sent to Marietta Sunday afternoon for funeral and interment. Mr. Fultz was 71 years old and is survived by a wife, one daughter, Mrs. W. M. Edwards, and two sisters, Mrs. C. Monroe and Mrs. Worth Pace.

The body of Mrs. J. A. Dodgen, who died at the residence, No. 329 East Georgia avenue, Friday afternoon at 5 o'clock, will be sent Sunday morning to Alpharetta, Ga., for funeral and interment. Mrs. Dodgen was 61 years old and the wife of J. A. Dodgen, a well-known lawyer. Besides her husband, she is survived by three sons, B. L., C. M. and J. M. Dodgen, the latter an attorney also, and three daughters, Misses Flossie, Alice and Alma.

'BEAR CAT RAG' IS FROWNED UPON BY THIS DAINTY ATLANTA DANCER

Miss Theodora Aline Warfield.

She appeared in classical poses with Geraldine Farrar and won local fame.

Successful Operatic Career Is Predicted for Gate City's Premiere Danseuse.

Which do you prefer—to do the "bear" or a classical dance?

An Atlanta girl who prefers classical dancing to the more modern rag is rather unusual, yet pretty Miss Theodora Aline Warfield, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William C. Warfield, of No. 29 West North avenue, declares that she can not see why people dance the graceless modern dances, when the Grecian and other classical dances are far more artistic and almost as easy to learn.

That is, they are easy to learn if you have talent.

Since Miss Warfield was two years old she has been dancing, and always she is evolving new steps. Her dancing is not like Isadora Duncan's or Maude Allan's, or any of the famous classical dancers. It is entirely her own, and her friends declare it is the prettiest and most graceful possible.

Miss Warfield has appeared on the stage in Atlanta. She was the premiere danseuse at the past two performances of the Kirmess, and won great applause. She was presented with a beautiful silver-incrusted vase by the Elks Lodge, in recognition of their appreciation of her talent. At various private entertainments Miss Warfield has danced also, and has always won admiration and praise by the beauty and grace of her dancing.

Every one who has seen her dance has urged that she go on the stage, and her parents intend to prepare her for the opera. In addition to being a dancer of rare grace and beauty, she has an attractive voice, and it is being cultivated with her dancing.

Two years ago Miss Warfield sang in Atlanta with Geraldine Farrar, and Miss Farrar was enthusiastic in her praise. After finishing a course at a school here, Miss Warfield will go abroad to study languages and advanced artistic dancing. A wonderful career is predicted for her. There is no doubt that she will add her name to Atlanta's already brilliant Hall of Fame.

CUMMINS SAYS TARIFF WILL FAIL

Senator Scores 'Coercive' Methods by Wilson and Secret Caucus in Attack on Bill.

WASHINGTON, July 19.—Progressive Republican opposition to the Underwood-Simmons tariff bill was expressed to-day in the Senate by Senator Cummins, of Iowa, who condemned many of its provisions.

The Senator announced himself in favor of the income tax amendment, substantially as written by the Democrats, "if it could not be changed to better suit the exigencies of the situation."

Senator Cummins criticised President Wilson for bringing to bear the "coerce" executive influence upon the framers of the measure, and he also was sharp in his criticisms of "legislation by secret caucus."

"The tariff will increase importation and diminish home production of a great many things, and will force into idleness many workingmen," Cummins asserted. "It puts the products of agriculture, in the main, on the free list. It probably is true some of these commodities need no protective duty, but many of them do, and to treat the farmer as an outlaw is manifestly wrong.

"Second, the bill proceeds on the theory that the manufacturer of the finished product is entitled to raw material free of duty. This is all very well if the raw material can be produced in this country as cheaply as abroad, but if that costs more here to produce it, then the raw material of the manufacturer should be dutiable.

"Its duties are, upon many commodities, destructively inadequate, and the lesser industries of the country will suffer."

Augusta Shocked by Girl in Filmy Garb; Arrest Stops Riot

AUGUSTA, GA., July 19.—All Augusta is talking to-day of the arrest of Miss Edith Anderson, 1215 Jones street, Friday afternoon, because she appeared on Broad street, the main thoroughfare of the city, clad in a "transparent skirt," a dainty, filmy creation of lace through which twinkled stockings of a vivid green.

Miss Anderson appeared just as the afternoon dress parade was at its height. A stolid, unemotional copper stood swinging his stick on a busy corner of Broad street when Miss Anderson appeared. The copper saw the crowd coming, he saw men fighting small boys for places in the forefront, and he looked up.

"Why—why!" he stammered, mopping his fevered face. "Why—er—why—because—er—dawgone it!" He pointed downward with his nightstick, "You can't wear things like that in Augusty."

Miss Anderson smiled pityingly upon the officer, but accompanied him to headquarters.

Church He Founded To Hear Mr. Ellis

The Rev. Henry J. Ellis, the blind chaplain of the Georgia House of Representatives, will preach Sunday morning at the Walker Street Methodist Church, which he founded 25 years ago.

He served for a number of years as pastor of the church, and one of the largest congregations that ever assembled there is expected to hear him Sunday.

Air Map of World, Geographers' Plan

WASHINGTON, July 19.—Famous geographers from many countries soon are to meet to prepare an aeronautical map of the entire world.

That announcement was made by Rear Admiral Robert E. Peary in a report to the National Geographic Society on the results accomplished at the Tenth International Geographic Conference in Rome, which he attended as one of the American delegates.

Pittsburg Bids the Slit Skirt Welcome

PITTSBURG, July 19.—"Why should I tell Pittsburg women what to wear? What do I know about it? Not on your life. Will I order any arrests? Well, I should say not! Are you trying to get me into trouble?"

With these words John P. Dailey, Director of the Department of Public Safety, disposed of the woman's dress question for Pittsburg.

"I think, for my part, the women are dressing all right," said the Director. "They know what they want to wear, and I believe in letting them wear it. At any rate, they'll do it whether we like it or not."

GERMAN AVIATOR KILLED.

FRANKFORT, July 19.—Aviator Westphal, of the German army, was killed here yesterday. His is the 299th death resulting from aviator tragedies.

REVOLT IN CHINA SPLITS NATION; WAR NEAR

North Arrayed Against South. Foreigners in Danger—Rebels Threaten Public Buildings.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

CANTON, CHINA, July 19.—A complete severance of political relations between Northern and Southern China was proclaimed here to-day. Business is at a standstill. Revolutionary leaders are threatening to seize the Government buildings.

A British torpedo boat is proceeding to this port from Hong Kong to protect British lives and interests.

The Governor General of Kwang Tung Province has proclaimed his territory independent of the Pekin Government and declares in the same proclamation that the Provincial Council has nominated him commander-in-chief of the revolutionary army.

U. S. Aiding Revolt?

That United States diplomacy as well as Japanese is supporting the revolutionaries trying to overthrow President Yuan Shih Kai was claimed by leaders of the Southern rebellion.

The Pekin Government, headed by President Yuan, is receiving the support of England, Germany and France. Developments indicate that the question of the proposed $100,000,000 Chinese loan enters into the situation. England, Germany and France subscribed pro rata shares to the loan, but the United States financiers were not allowed by their Government to participate.

Dr. Sun Yat Sen, one of the leaders in the uprising which overthrew the Manchu Dynasty, and the first provisional President of China, and Dr. Wu Ting-fang, former Chinese Minister to the United States, are believed to be lukewarm to the rebel cause.

Rebels Lose a Battle.

Dr. Sun has left for Nanking, the provisional republican capital, where he may make open declaration of his loyalty to the southerners.

President Yuan is suspected of being an imperialist at heart. The southerners want a democrat.

Wu Chang remains loyal, but revolutionary sentiment is fast growing there.

Four thousand rebels were decisively defeated by 2,000 Government forces at Hsu-Chow-Fu, north of Kiang Su.

New Railway Mail Head Begins Duties

Henry M. Robinson, recently appointed Superintendent of Railway Mail Service, suceeding George W. Pepper, arrived in Atlanta Friday and visited the local railway mail bureau in the Federal Building Saturday morning, where he and Mr. Pepper completed the transfer of the Atlanta division.

Twenty-five years ago Mr. Robinson was a resident of Atlanta. Then he was a postal clerk between Atlanta and Charlotte. Later he became superintendent of the New Orleans division.

Flier at Charleston Goes at 90-mile Gait

CHARLESTON, July 19.—W. S. Luckey, a Curtiss flier from New York city, who is spending a week at the Isle of Palms on Friday flew in a hydro-aeroplane from the Isle of Palms to Charleston, a distance of about 12 miles, by water, in 8 minutes, a speed of 90 miles an hour.

Luckey also skimmed across the harbor with his main float partly submerged at a rate of 45 miles an hour.

Turner to Attend Electrical Meeting

R. C. Turner, City Electrician, will attend the convention of the International Association of Municipal Electricians at Watertown, N. Y., August 19 to 22.

"Municipal Regulation" will be the subject of an address delivered by Atlanta's electrical expert while there.

The SOCIAL WORLD

The country clubs around Atlanta are preparing for a happy observance of the week-end, the intense heat of the week having made the cool, delightful club houses more popular than ever.

One hundred guests are expected to attend the dinner dance at the Piedmont Driving Club Saturday evening. Dinner will be served on the terrace, and there will be a charming decoration of summer flowers. The ballroom will be open for dancing, and many others, in addition to those who go out for dinner, will motor out to spend the evening on the breeze-swept terrace.

The country club at East Lake will also have its usual week-end dinner dance. During the afternoon the tennis court and golf links are filled with those members who enjoy athletic sports, and later dinner will be served on the piazza overlooking the lake. The usual number of young people will go out for the dance.

Mrs. Ison Entertains.

Mrs. R. D. Ison entertained at bridge recently for Mrs. J. A. R. King, of Augusta, and Miss Virginia Williamson, of Highland, Ga. The prizes included a hand-painted olive dish and embroidered handkerchiefs. The guests included Misses Marie Watson, Minnie Jordan, Mrs. Spurgeon King, Mrs. J. C. Maisby, Mrs. Charles Dennis, Mrs. Frank Ison, Mrs. W. E. Raley, Mrs. J. W. Watson, Mrs. Fred Sutton, Mrs. James G. Butler, Mrs. R. A. Williams, Mrs. J. L. Watson, Mrs. J. R. Regnas, Mrs. James G. Ison, Mrs. Medlin, Mrs. A. R. King, Mrs. Robert Richardson and Mrs. J. H. Carl.

For Miss Robbins.

Miss Theodora Arline Warfield gave a swimming party and luncheon Friday at the Capital City Country Club in honor of Miss Dorothy Robbins, of Birmingham, Mrs. J. P. B. Allen's guest. The guests included Misses Marie Cobb, Frances Bailey, Helen Wilson, Lyndall Haddon, Teddy Thurmond, of New York; Mary Griffith, Helen Atkisson and Lucile Atkisson. Mrs. W. C. Warfield and Mrs. J. P. B. Allen were chaperones.

For Miss Weisiger.

Mrs. David J. Weisiger entertained at an informal tea Friday at her home on the Boulevard, in honor of her niece, Miss Margaret Beverly Weisiger, of Richmond., Va.

Mrs. Weisiger was assisted in entertaining by her daughter, Mrs. O. S. Lair, and Mrs. Cliff Key. Tea was served in the dining room by Mrs. Robert P. Milam and the punch bowl on the porch was presided over by Miss Virginia Parks and Miss Elise Brown.

Port-Frisch.

Mr. and Mrs. A. Port announce the marriage of their daughter, Minnie Janet, to Mr. Jesse Marcus Frisch, the ceremony having taken place Tuesday evening, July 15, at 6 o'clock at home, No. 149 Glennwood avenue.

Moonlight Picnic Given.

A moonlight picnic was given to Miss Marcia Whitaker by Miss Dorris Murray Friday. Those present were Misses Marcia Whitaker, Nina Mitchel, Ruth Knox, Cleo Whitaker, Dorris Murray, Nellie Apperson, Murray Adams and Lois Cook, of Columbus; Messrs. Paul Lee, Arthur Lynch, Randall Satterwhite, Dr. C. E. Jones, James Mangum, Park Brown, Ralph Dyer and John Whitaker.

The party was chaperoned by Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Crabtree and Mr. and Mrs. H. D. Adams.

Anniversary Dinner.

A dinner party was given Friday evening at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Howard McCutcheon, the occasion celebrating the wedding anniversaries of Mr. and Mrs. McCutcheon and Mr. and Mrs. Charles T. Mabry. Pink roses adorned the table, and a color scheme of green and white was carried out in the decorations of the other apartments.

After dinner auction bridge was played. The guests included Mr. and Mrs. Henry Allen Manning, Mr. and Mrs. T. H. Williams, Mr. and Mrs. Earle Zurline, Mr. and Mrs. D. I. Clarke, Mr. and Mrs. Cordin, Mr. William D. Ellington and Mr. Robert Winn.

Suffrage Discussion.

"To Vote or Not to Vote" is the title of a discussion to be held at Taft Hall Tuesday evening next at 8 o'clock, when the question of woman's suffrage will be discussed, pro and con. Mrs. William Lawson Peel, who is known to be entirely neutral, has kindly consented to preside at the meeting and a number of the most prominent men and women speakers in Georgia will take part.

There will be no formal program, but all will be heard who so desire. Inasmuch as this is one of the leading questions of the day, everybody is interested in the forthcoming discussion, especially as many people have not yet formed an opinion on the matter and will welcome a discussion whereby both sides will be presented.

On account of the limited capacity of the hall and the very large attendance expected, an admission fee of 25 cents will be charged.

Mrs. Allen Entertains.

A series of parties are being given for Miss Leila Daley, of Texarkana, Tex., and Miss Jennie Allen, of Greenville, S. C. A bridge party was tendered them Friday by Mrs. Harry Lee Allen. Yellow flowers were decorations, and a salad course was served.

Guests were Mrs. Neal Spencer, Mrs. Glynn Mickel, Mrs. A. J. Wilson, Mrs. John Hagony, Mrs. Clyde Stutesman, Mrs. Sidney Johnson, Mrs. Youngener, Mrs. Harold Hinton, Mrs. Jackson, Mrs. Hal Stevens, Mrs. J. C. Peary, Mrs. R. Todd, Mrs. J. Prince Coyne, Mrs. James Russell Gresham, Mrs. Irby Bagwell, Misses Nora Ingram, Ellen Lyon and Ruth Gresham.

Parties for Visitors.

Mrs. A. J. Wilson entertained five tables of bridge Friday afternoon for Mrs. John Hagoney, of San Diego, Cal., and for Miss Leila Daley, of San Diego. Mrs. John Russell Gresham will give them a bridge party Tuesday, and Mrs. J. T. Peavy will entertain them on Thursday.

Freeman-McMichael.

The marriage of Miss Leona Freeman to Mr. O. B. McMichael took place Saturday afternoon, July 19, at Wesley Memorial Church, the Rev. W. R. Hendrix officiating.

Immediately after the ceremony the happy couple left for the Isle of Palms and other points of interest. After August 1 they will be at home in Atlanta.

PERSONALS.

Master Frank Norris, who has been ill, is better.

Miss Marie Dunlap left Friday to visit friends in Oklahoma City.

Mr. and Mrs. St. Elmo Massengale returned yesterday from Atlantic City and New York.

Mr. J. J. Logue has returned home, after submitting to an operation on his eyes at the Georgian Hospital.

Mrs. S. H. Marcus, No. 436 South Pryor street, left Saturday for New York, Atlantic City and other points East.

Miss Annie Clyde Wright left Saturday for a trip East, visiting in Niagara, New York and Philadelphia before returning home.

Miss Marion Mullins, of Fort Worth, Texas, is the guest of Miss Jennie Knox for several days on her way home from the Kappa Delta convention at Asheville.

Miss Mary Butler will return home Sunday from Atlantic Beach, Fla. Miss Elizabeth Butler, who has been visiting Mrs. A. H. King in Jacksonville, returns Sunday also.

NATURAL CRANK, MAYOR'S SHOT AT BROYLES

Mayor Woodward Saturday said he was finally dismissing Recorder Nash R. Broyles from his mind with the statement:

"He is a natural dyspeptic, crank and a fanatic. If he ever had a heart it has turned to stone. Therefore, it is natural that he should become a monomaniac over the subject of using his czar-like authority in his own petty sphere. I don't care anything more about him."

Mayor Woodward again went over the head of Recorder Broyles Friday when he reduced the sentence of George Poulos, a restaurant keeper on Alabama street, who had been fined $100 and sentenced to 30 days in the Stockade fo violating the prohibition law.

The Mayor said he was much surprised that the Recorder did not make the fine $49 and the sentence 29 days so as to stay outside the jurisdicition of the Mayor.

It was expected that Mayor Woodward would issue a full pardon but he didn't. He just reduced the fine to $49 and the sentence to 29 days.

'Conscience' Takes His Savings of Years

WASHINGTON, July 19.—A veteran of the Civil War, now a poor farmer in Ireland, with a large family dependent upon him, has sent to the Treasury Department $150 as a "conscience contribution" for some fraud he perpetrated upon the Government while a soldier 50 years ago.

The contribution, representing the savings of years, was sent through a Catholic priest to satisfy the gnawings of a troubled conscience.

Bibles in Schools To Be Theme of Sermon

A discussion of the bill to force the reading of the Bible in the public schools of Georgia now pending in the Legislature will feature the sermon of Dr. L. O. Bricker, of the First Christian Church, Sunday evening.

His subject will be "The Story of the Bible—Its Enemies, Its Friends, and Its Influence Upon Civilization."

An Old Maid's Romance

TODAY'S COMPLETE SHORT STORY.

I.

The houses were tall and bleak and fronted with grim stucco, all in that manner which our forefathers found so desirable. Once they had been expensive houses, tenanted by people of wealth and social standing, but now The Gables, halfway down the road, struck the only firm note of resistance to the general air of decaying prosperity. Curtains always hung primly in its casements; the frills of the muslin window blinds always seemed newly starched, and the steps of the front door were always a marvel of whiteness.

People wondered why Miss Margaret Weston, who lived there in state with servants, did not move out of a locality which was deteriorating so rapidly. Some bolder spirits even asked her why she stayed on at The Gables instead of letting it, and departing to reside in a street more befitting her quality. To these Miss Weston answered gently that she had lived in The Gables most of her life, and had no desire to change now.

Miss Weston always answered everybody gently, for gentleness was the essence of her being. The neighbors referred to her as an "old maid," but, even as they used the phrase, they knew it was not the exact term by which to describe her. There was none of that sharpness about her which the epithet of "old maid" habitually implies.

Long ago, when she was a little orphan girl of 7, her uncle had adopted her and brought her to live in Penthorn Road. But now both her uncle and his wife were dead, and Miss Weston was left alone in the old home, save for the servants.

Rather a pitiful romance was Miss Weston's. It was simply the old story of the man who had not dared enough, the man who had leaped to false conclusions and had gone out of her life, to leave her alone.

Sometimes, when she tenderly took a packet of letters out of her bureau, there was one particular missive which she had not the heart to reread, for it was too sacred with poignant memories.

Her Dream.

But always she remembered the night when it was handed to her. She had only to close her eyes again to visualize the scene completely.

She saw herself, quite young, sitting before the fire on an autumn evening. She was trying to understand something. Why had her cousin, Harry Dutton, gone off to the Colonies without a word of farewell to her? He had made quite a sudden departure, though he had told her that he was going. And yet he had never said good-bye to her.

And while she was seeking to understand his attitude the small son of a neighbor had come into the room shamefacedly.

"I say, Miss Weston," he blurted out, "I'm awfully sorry, but I clean forgot."

"Forgot what?" she asked, puzzled.

"Why, this letter. Mr. Dutton gave it to me to give to you. He wanted to make sure you'd get it the same evening. I've just remembered it."

"When did he give it to you?" she whispered.

"Last Thursday. And I'm awfully sorry——"

"Last Thursday," she said to herself, when the small boy escaped from the room in relief. "That was two days before he sailed!"

She opened the letter and read its contents.

"Dearest Margaret," it ran—"As you know, I sail for South America the day after to-morrow. Before I go I want to ask you something, but I fear it will be too much to ask you. You must have guessed that I love you. I know it is presumption on my part to aspire to your hand, for you are the adopted daughter of a rich man and I am only the ne'er-do-well son of a poor brother. But I mean to make money in South America. I want to come home and marry you! There, I've blurted it out quite bravely! Will you marry me? I want you to wait for me.

"I suppose I'm asking too much, but I shall hope. If you reply to this note, I will come and say good-bye, but if you do not answer, I shall know what you mean. Yours, HARRY."

There was the explanation. She went to her uncle and showed him the note. He counseled cables and letters to Harry, but on the voyage Harry altered his plans, so that the messages lay waiting for him and never reached him. And he never wrote home; he just dropped out of everybody's life.

Would-be suitors dangled about Miss Weston for a time, but, receiving no encouragement, went off elsewhere. Friends married, acquaintances moved out of the neighborhood. Margaret grew from a girl to a woman, from a woman to an old maid.

And still she waited for Dutton in the house where last he had seen her, and where again he might seek her.

II.

Sometimes she pictured his return. She saw him whirling up to the door magnificently in a mortor car. She saw him on foot, tentatively examining the old house from the farther side of the road. Always she pictured him coming back, prosperous, to seek that bride whom mischance had so long withheld from him.

And then, one day, quite unexpectedly, she met him in the street, and he was woefully shabby and down-at-the-heel and his face bore lines of want and recklessness.

"Harry!" she faltered. "Harry!"

The light of recognition leaped into his eyes, but he shook his head.

"You're home again!" she exclaimed. "I—I've been expecting you. I've been waiting for you!"

"Expecting me? Waiting for me?" he muttered, astonished.

"Ever since you went away," she said, simply. "Waiting for you in the old house. There was a mistake—I never got your letter till it was too late. And then we never heard where you were. But I waited."

"You—you're making a mistake," he said, slowly. "I don't know you!"

He swung away from her at that. Miss Weston took a few steps after him, but a faintness came over her. And when she could see clearly again Dutton had gone.

But even now her simple faith in love did not abandon her.

"He'll come back to me one day," she said to herself, going slowly home. "He knows I'm waiting for him. He's ashamed of himself because he's poor. As if that mattered!"

Indeed, it was quite a cheery Miss Weston who arrived home at The Gables. And now every morning the thought was still stronger in her that that day her lover of long ago might call to see her in the house where last he had left her.

But the days slipped by, and, though often she glanced from her windows, she saw no sign of him in the street outside. And so a month, three months, another six months passed by.

III

"Gentleman to see you, Mum!"

"A gentleman to see me, Janet?" asked Miss Weston, in surprise. "How strange!"

A caller of any sort was indeed a rarity at The Gables.

Miss Weston rose from her chair. She was trying to persuade herself that it could not possibly be Dutton who had come to Penthorn Road after all these years. Although she had hoped for his coming every morning, it suddenly seemed to her that this was altogether too much to hope for. She went downstairs slowly, holding tightly on to the banisters, and steeling herself to meet disappointment.

But it was Dutton who awaited her in the room below—Dutton, far better dressed than when she had seen him last and now holding himself with a resolute bearing.

"Harry!" she exclaimed, holding out both her hands to him. "So you've come back? I knew you would—I knew you would!"

"I had to come back," he said slowly. "I wanted to see you just once more before I went abroad again."

"Abroad again?" she echoed faintly.

"What's the good of my stopping in England?" he asked. "There's nothing to keep me here. Abroad I shall do better. I did not do well when I was there before, but that was because I had nothing to work for. I had lost you, and——"

He stopped for a moment.

"You thought you had lost me," amended Miss Weston softly.

"I—I knocked about a bit over there," he went on. "A rolling stone, you know. Then I had a whim to come back to England. I—it's no good disguising it—I was on the downward path. I'd lost interest in things—worse, I'd lost interest in myself. And then one day I met you in the street. You remember? The man you remembered as Harry Dutton was dead then," he said, "and in his place there was a mere shiftless ne'er-do-well. I felt utterly ashamed to find your eyes on me. I saw you still believed in me, long after I had lost faith or belief in myself. And—and I resolved to try again to live my life straight."

"And now?"

"For close on a year—ever since that day—I've struggled. I think I've left the wastrel behind. I'm trying hard to be the man you thought me to be, and I think I'm succeeding."

"And you've come back at last?"

"Yes, I wanted to see you again, not as I was that day you met me, but as I am now. I wanted to win back a little of your respect."

"And—and you're going abroad again?"

"Quite soon. I've no ties, no wife or family."

"There's me!" pointed out Miss Weston, with unprecednted boldness. "Have you forgotten me?"

"You?" he said in amazement. "You don't mean——"

"I've waited all these years for you to come back to me," she replied steadily. "We were parted by illchance, but I was loyal to the memory of you, for I knew you'd return one day!"

"And I," he said, "have been true to you in word and deed, because all my love was with you. Other women"—he dismissed them with a gesture. "You were always the only woman in my thoughts."

"I knew it," she said simply, and told him how mischance had led their paths apart those many years ago.

"Ah, if the past could but come back again," he said. "If I only were younger! But now I can not ask you to marry me. I'm getting old, I'm poor. And you—you're rich, I suppose, and you haven't altered in the least."

Her Story.

Gently she smiled dissent.

"But I have something to tell you," she said. "Uncle George left me all his money, but he left this house to you. Nine years ago he died, and we inquired about you everywhere. We advertised in the papers, too, but could get no tidings of you."

"Nine years ago," he answered, "I was up-country, then. I stayed up-country three years. That was why I was undiscovered."

"Well, nine years' rent is yours," she told him. "I've been keeping it for you, waiting for you to come back. So you see, you're not quite so poor as you thought."

"And not quite so rich as I'd like to be," he sighed. "I'd like to be rich enough to——"

He paused.

"To what?" queried Miss Weston, anxiously. "Surely you're not going to balance riches against happiness?"

"I've got my pride," he said, stubbornly.

"And you've got your house," she said. "And I'm going to move out of it at once. You must come and live in your own house."

"No, no," he replied, uncomfortably.

"I shall go," she said, with firmness, and added, artfully, 'thought after all these years it'll break my heart to leave it."

"Then—then let me continue as your—your landlord. The house is far too big for me."

"I won't stay on as your tenant a day longer," she said. "And it's going to break my heart to go. Can't you see what I—what I'm trying to make clear?"

"No," he said, in perplexity. "I can't. And yet—but no, I'm too poor and ashamed to ask you to marry me."

"Rubbish!" retorted Miss Weston with the most asperity she had ever been known to show. "Either you're going to break my heart by making me leave the old house, or else you're going to let me stop on as your wife. Which is it to be?"

Her unwonted briskness gave way and she took a faltering step toward him.

"Harry, after all these years——" she quavered.

"My little sweetheart!" he whispered, and both he and she forgot that youth had left them.

Getting the Facts

MRS. Bickers sighed deeply as she regarded her son Willie, who was eating his dinner with suspicious propriety. Not once had he had to be reminded not to grab things and he had said "please" before every request. His hands were clean and his hair was brushed to a shiny smoothness. Altogether, Willie was so much a model child as to cause comment in the Bickers family. Even Willie's father had noticed it.

"I feel so sorry for Mrs. Gassmore," said Mrs. Bickers, after her introductory sigh.

"Anybody died?" asked Bickers.

"No," said Mrs. Bickers. "It's worse than that. There's nothing worse than to be deceived by those you love and trust—and I tell you, Mrs. Gassmore felt so bad about it that there were tears in her eyes when she told me. Her son Tommy, had caused the tears."

"Huh?" said Willie Bickers, startled. He ceased buttering his hot biscuit.

"I knew you'd feel just as I did about it, Willie," said his mother kindly. "Although you are such a friend of Tommy's, I realize that you never would approve of certain things he has done. You have been brought up too well and you understand right and wrong."

"Why, Mrs. Gassmore," I said to her to-day," went on Willie's mother, "if my Willie had acted that way I couldn't have been any more surprised! Tommy has such honest eyes"——

What'd he do?" queried Willie huskily.

"Do?" echoed his mother. "Tommy Gassmore, after all his mother had told him, went swimming this afternoon; that's what he did! When he had been expressly forbidden to go near the place—just like you, Willie—let alone enter the water!"

"The young scamp!" said Bickers, emphatically. He regarded the sleek hair of his son with new interest.

"Yes, wasn't it dreadful?" asked Mrs. Bickers. "I suppose he thought his mother never would know it. That's what makes it so particularly sad—his trying to deceive his mother.

"But those things always get found out, and I presume he realizes that now. I was so surprised, because I had considered him nearly as trustworthy a boy as our Willie and"——

"H-h-how'd they find out?" inquired Willie gruffly. "No, thanks—I don't want any more creamed potatoes. Nor sparagus."

"I hope you don't feel ill or anything, Willie," said his mother anxiously. "Usually you want so many helpings and you've had only one to-night. Why, Tommy must have cut his foot while swimming because when he got home it hurt him so he had to take off his shoe and his mother questioned him, and besides his hair was all wet."

"Awful wet—away, wet hair," said Bickers sternly. "Why are you fussing at your head, Willie? Let your hair alone—you'll muss it all up, and I notice you have brushed it unusually well this evening."

"Yes, I noticed it, too," said Mrs. Bickers. "I am so glad Willie is taking pride in his personal appearance. I hope Tommy Gassmore will realize some day how disgracefully he has acted. It is boys like that who start out by fibbing and deceiving who end by being criminals. I don't know that I want you to associate with Tommy any more, Willie. He might lead you into doing things that you shouldn't, and I should so hate to have you begin. Of course, I know that if you did anything wrong you would be man enough to come and tell us about it as soon as you had thought it over."

"D-did Tommy talk much?" asked Willie, in a slightly cracked voice. "Wh-when he told his mother, I mean?"

"Talk much?" echoed Mrs. Bickers. "Why, what do you mean, Willie? I suppose not. I suppose he felt too ashamed to say more than he had to! Why do you ask?"

"Nothin'," said Willie. He squirmed in his seat. "I just wondered."

His hand sought his head again and a look of alarm overspread his countenance as he drew it away from the extreme back and saw water shining on it. Apparently his obtuse parents saw nothing and were eating with perfect appetites.

"Say," Willie blurted out, in a mangled voice, "I went swimming with Tommy—when he did, you know. Honest, I forgot, ma; honest, I did!"

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

The girl drew herself up. "Nevertheless, Mr. Warren, in spite of prudence, wisdom or death itself, I shall go to my brother to-night!"

There was a little pause; he looked down at the floor and thought swiftly.

"Very well," he said at last. "I yield to the force of your determination. You shall go to-night—but I insist on one concession."

"What is that?"

"You must let me go ahead and look over the ground. I will signal you when it is safe to follow."

The Signal.

"But how can you signal?"

"With a light." He crossed to the window and studied the forbidding mass of the castle for a few moments. "A light in one of those higher towers. You can see it from here. You won't have long to wait," he added earnestly. "It will shine within an hour."

"But"—the girl's voice faltered—"but if—it does not shine?"

He smiled upon her, lightly but tenderly.

"Well," he drawled, whimsically, "then I'll be too busy swapping lead for brimstone with Mr. Spook to stop and hang a lantern. I had expected," he went on seriously, "that your cousin would remain here with you, and I can not understand why he should desert you at such a crisis."

She broke off abruptly and bit her lip, looking down at the floor.

The Princess looked stern. "Nor can I—unless——"

"Unless—what?" he inquired slowly, after an uncomfortable silence.

The girl made a sudden gesture of despair. "Oh, if I only knew!" she cried. "If I only knew! I'm so confused—I'm at my wits' end! My mind—I can't think!"

She pressed both hands to her head and staggered as she moved toward a seat. The next instant Jarvis was supporting her, both hands in his, and gazing intently into her face. Little quivers that were not all of love were racing up her spine, and even as he gazed into the waxed rose of the beautiful face he felt an all but overpowering desire to look over his shoulder. Seventh sense, premonition. The psychologists—those tedious dissectors—are still squabbling over the terminology, but young Jarvis felt the realness of the sensation. The sudden and menacing appearance of Robledo, the eerie palm-reading of the innkeeper's girl, the inexplicable desertion of the Duke—all these combined to give him an unshakable and growing sense of gathering danger. And all about him was the breathing still of the mountain night, like nature's cowering hush before the lash of the hurricane sweeps the land.

His voice and the grip on the little hands grew tense.

"You've got to think! Don't let go now! Here—quick! Get hold of yourself!"

Herself Again.

The girl instantly responded to the best treatment for all superficial nervous troubles—a sharp, incisive voice. She opened her eyes, and with a wondering, startled look.

"You are holding something from me," he charged swiftly. "What happened on the boat that changed your manner? What worried you when the Duke drove ahead? I saw it again when he closed that door. What is it?"

He felt her shiver and her eyes, avoiding his, roamed wildly about the room.

"Oh, if I could only—if I were only sure I could trust you!"

Instantly she got the best answer in the world—the quick, unconscious setting of a man's muscles under the sting of insult. It was gone in a breath, but she felt and recognized it with joy.

"Too late for doubts now," he said crisply, as if the affront were of no importance in the face of graver things. "Your brother's life is at stake! We must stick together—you and I! It's your only chance. How can I help you unless I know everything? Don't you see that I am fighting in the dark—that I am up against a solid wall of mystery and this may be the key? Never mind what you think or fear—this is the time you've got to trust me!"

The girl was breathing quickly.

"You couldn't—" she began brokenly, and then, her voice rising: "Oh, I do believe in you! In my heart I have trusted you from the first. It's my heart; not my mind that trusts you now!" She paused a moment and drew a deep breath as he stared at her blankly. She gazed full into his face as if to watch for the slightest betraying tremor.

"The locket is gone."

The look of utter, dizzy amazement that came over his face was proof enough of his innocence. It hardly needed his mechanical:

"Gone—where?"

"I don't know," she cried miserably.

"But—when did you miss it?"

"Three days ago—on th steamer."

"And you have no idea now who has the plan that was in the locket?"

His tone was high and accusing, and she kept her eyes away from his.

"I suspect, of course," she admitted feebly, "but I can't be sure! I—"

"Your Highness," he broke in triumphantly, "I've got the first trail of the spook that's haunting your castle. Rusty, the horses!"

"Yes, sah; yes, sah!" came the servitor's voice from the yard.

"Quick now; we've got no time to lose."

He was buttoning his coat as he spoke, and now he picked up his hat.

"You think—" began the Princess, a little uncertainly.

"I think your cousin has not gone to Madrid. Time is everything now. I shall start at once and you must rest here until you get the signal."

"Your overcoat," she reminded him as he made for the door. "It's upstairs."

"Never mind that."

"You'll need it," she insisted. "It's cold. Nita—Nita! Wait—I'll get it."

Before he could protest she ran lightly up the stairs. With a warm glow on him that no overcoat could have produced, Jarvis followed her halfway up.

As he did so, the figure of a man blotted out the moonlight that fell in the doorway. A man muffled in a big cloak stepped just inside, his right arm carried rigidly at his side. From this position he could command the foot of the stairs, but could not be seen from the stairway itself.

The Princess appeared at the top with the coat on her arm.

"Don't come down—I'll get it."

"You are sure you know the way?" she asked, tremulously, as he relieved her.

"North road, second turn to the right."

"Yes, that takes you to the postern gate."

"Thank you."

But still he lingered, though he had said time was precious. Their eyes met in a long look. Both colored and looked away. With a swift movement she took something off her neck and threw it about his shoulders.

"This little cross and chain," she said softly. "Wear it to-night for me, my knight!"

He gained possession of the hand for a moment.

"Only for to-night?" he whispered.

"You may never see to-morrow."

Something seemed to interfere with the workings of Jarvis' throat.

"If I never see to-morrow"—his voice sounded to his own ears like a stranger's and there was the beating of a whole drum corps in his ears—"you will forgive me for telling you that—I love you! Don't—don't rebuke me to-night. Wait until to-morrow—if tomorrow ever comes." He smiled and her eyes drooped before the light in his. "To-night your humble vassal goes forth in his lady's cause. While all Segura waits ghost and ghost-breaker shall stalk the halls."

He stooped and swiftly kissed her hand.

"Your Highness, you will see the light in the tower inside an hour!"

A Fight in the Dark.

"God be with you, my knight!" she prayed softly—and was gone.

He waited until the last sound of her footsteps had died and a door closed in the distance. Then his pulses leaping wildly, he turned and made one step down the stairs—and stopped.

A poet once asked, and left unanswered, "Upon what may life depend?" In this instance Warren Jarvis' life hung on the slender chance that he would wait until he could not longer hear the sound of his lady-love's footsteps. Light as they were they would have distracted his mind so that he would never have caught the faint but keen metallic click that was as clear as the spoken word to a man born in a country where the babies used to use a .45 revolver for a teething ring.

Survival largely depends on preparedness for the unexpected in the world of action. Warren Jarvis did not waste any time investigating. He did not care to make inquiries to be certain that the cocking of the pistol had a definite connection with his career in this world.

No; he began humming "Dixie" in the care-free, exultant manner of the successful lover, and swiftly took in the field of action. In a fraction of a second he had planned his battle. On the stair post at the foot of the stairs was an oil lamp, the only light in the room, for the fire had died down to a faint glow. He slung the overcoat across his right arm, with his left arm loosened something that hung under his coat and across his heart. Then, still humming "Dixie," he walked down the stairs without any attempt at concealment.

Just before he came within the range of vision of the doorway he leaned forward and dashed his coat against the lamp. At that same instant he whipped out his pistol, crouched and did a baseball slide out across the stone floor, on hip and shoulder, his eyes turned toward the door.

There was a flash and a roar and a man's figure outlined against the moonlight and then almost as quickly as the two shots had sounded in the hotel, the Kentuckian's revolver spoke twice.

There was an oath, a cry of "Sancta Maria!" and a heavy fall.

Laying the Ghost.

The moon had sunk just below the rim of the mountain wall when Jarvis and Rusty, the latter groaning at every jump, clattered up that last reach of the old road to the castle.

Desecrated by the bright Spanish sunlight, the old castle would have moved one to pity as would the sight of a broken-down warrior. In the rich moonlight, softened and hallowed, the stately sweep of its walls and the but stagnant wastes of the moat, and the long tendrils of vapor curled and crept out like the stealthy arms of cold and evil spirits, enfolding and chilling the heart and welcoming all who dared the walls to an embrace of death. And somewhere within an owl cried out an uncanny warning, like a tocsin summoning the legions of darkness to meet the rash invader.

"Jimminy!" muttered Jarvis, with a shiver, as they drew up at the postern gate. "It's no wonder those fat-headed boobies down there wouldn't come up to this place!"

For Fat Men Only

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

THIS is a tip I give you, as it was given to me,
Right in the thick of the summer, with the mercury ninety-three,
Right in the thick of the summer, with everything sizzling hot,
And all of us looking crimson, like lobsters cooked in a pot.

When you slowly dress in the morning and reach for a collar new,
Don't button it in the back, boys; the button in front will do.
The collar will stay where you put it, looking and feeling fine,
And there'll be no torturing button a-boring into your spine.

This is the tip I was given, and I pass it along as lore
To all of my husky brothers, with "seventeen" necks or more.
Try it, and all of the buttons that caused you worry and pain
Will land in back of the dresser, and never come out again.

Courting Death

LAST week I dined with Lord Evendale, the well-known English multi-millionaire, and Chamus, former chief of detectives, at the house of a mutual friend. Our host had imagined that these two men, the Englishman, with his blase paradoxes and strange whims, and the Frenchman, with his memories of a life rich in daring deeds, might amuse or at least interest us. Long before dinner was over the skirmishes between these two highly contrasting characters had begun and their conversation was exceedingly interesting to follow.

"You do your fellow men a mighty poor service," said Lord Evendale, in a tone of contempt, "when you use your intelligence and energy to protect their lives. Life, indeed, is worth next to nothing."

"Still, life is the only blessing we really possess," Chamus replied firmly, looking straight into the Englishman's eyes, "the only one we really control. I consider it our duty to live the time allotted us and to make it as useful as possible to ourselves and others."

"Oh, nonsense," exclaimed Lord Evendale. "At any other time perhaps life was worth living, but nowadays it is not. The progress of civilization makes it easy for us to enjoy all the joys of existence, leaving absolutely no room for further wishes. As for myself, all the wishes, that I could get fulfilled without any exertion whatever, were so disgusting to me already at the age of 25 that I turned away from them and longed only for one thing—death. I resolved to die."

Various Ways.

"There are different ways of committing suicide," remarked Chamus, whom this confession, with its immense egotism, annoyed. "The only difficulty is the choice, from poison to a hempen rope."

"I was religious," the Englishman went on unaffected, "and, besides, my mother suspected the spleen which poisoned my life, and made me take an oath never to commit suicide. I made this oath willingly, because I imagined it would be easy to find a way of being killed without doing it yourself, but I have found that to a man in my position it is the most difficult thing in the world. They had barely begun to suspect my fatal intentions before a host of friends and relatives began to watch me."

"You will pardon me if I refuse to believe you," said Chamus, "even a lord and a millionaire can manage as easily as anything to get killed if he really does want to get rid of his life. There are a thousand chances every day."

single lion, crocodile nor even a snake. At a lake in the heart of the Soudan I met a tribe of real savage natives, only to have them nurse me back when I got the fever. I went to the Transvaal and arrived there just as the peace had been signed. And now I have returned as safe and sound as ever, but full of despair, because I can not find death."

He Did Wrong.

"You need not despair," said Chamus, contemptuously, "but if you really did want to die you did wrong in leaving the big cities, where the struggle for existence has made men ten times more dangerous than all the wild beasts in the world. That at least is the experience I have had while hunting human beasts of prey for more than twenty years."

The two men had arisen and stood looking straight into one another's eyes.

Chamus continued: "If you are absolutely determined to die without committing suicide I am able to give you a prescription. At the utmost it will cost you no more than a couple of sous."

"Will you be kind enough to give it to me to-day?"

"With pleasure. What time is it?"

"Half-past ten."

"Then you have plenty of time. Take the train from Gare St. Lazare at 11:05. Get out at 11:45 at Point du Jour, or, better still, at Grenelle. Then walk slowly back and forth along the old fortifications, and if you return to Maison Blanche alive I shall apologize to you in the presence of our friends here."

"I understand; and, to tempt the apaches there to carry out their coup to the satisfaction of everybody, I shall fill my pockets with gold."

"I should not advise you to do that," said Chamus brutally. "If the booty is too rich it may tempt those fellows to attack peaceful people who are not passing the place simply because they are tired of living. I advise you to pay the fellows who do you the favor of taking your life the exact amount at which you value your life, no more and no less. In that way you will not be robbing your heirs."

Many Thanks.

"I thank you, sir. If everybody were like you I should not be disgusted with life. I shall follow your advice and keep in my pocket no more than the amount at which I value my life."

* * * * * * *

I thought no more of the matter, but when I opened my paper the next morning I was shocked to read the following paragraph:

"In the small hours of the morning a police patrol between Grenelle and Vaugirard found the body of a man who had been murdered by apaches with a lasso close to the fortifications. He was stylishly dressed and was easily identified, for in his left shoe was found the following note:

"'The Lord did me a poor favor when he let me be born into this world. At last I see an opportunity to get rid of my life without committing suicide, and I make use of it unhesitatingly. They will murder, but not rob me, for I have given the driver who drove me to the station all my valuables, keeping exactly ten sous to pay for my ticket to Grenelle. Low as was the valuation M. Chamus placed on my life, I value it even lower myself, for my murderers will kill me for the value I put on my life—nothing.'"

Up-to-Date Jokes

At a small country church a newly married couple were receiving some advice as to how they were to conduct themselves.

"You must never both get cross at once; it is the husband's duty to protect his wife whenever an occasion arises, and a wife must love and honor and obey her husband, and follow him wherever he goes."

"But, sir——" pleaded the young bride.

"I haven't finished yet," remarked the clergyman. "She must——"

"But, please, sir"—in desperation—"can't you alter that last part? My husband is a postman."

Two women who had not seen each other for many years met unexpectedly in the street.

"How do you do?" exclaimed one, effusively.

"Now, this is delightful!" said the other, who was the elder. "You have not seen me for eleven years, and yet you know me at once! I can not have changed so dreadfully in all that time. It flatters me."

"Oh, I recognized your bonnet!" said the first.

The Murder of the Birds

By GARRETT P. SERVISS.

These pictures show the tern, or sea swallow, one of its young and its eggs. This beautiful bird has been made nearly extinct by the ruthlessness of hunters.

AMONG the interesting animals that man has succeeded in more or less completely exterminating without any real benefit to himself is the tern, or sea swallow, some remarkable photographs of which, made in England, are shown herewith.

They belong to the gull tribe of birds, and get their popular name from their curious flight, which resembles that of a land swallow. Like the true gulls, they have great power of wing and often go far out to sea. Including the long tail, they are about 15 inches in length, and they present a very picturesque appearance as they skim along the surface of the waves, with their black heads, gray wings, white bellies and red legs, catching small fishes and mollusks without stopping, and sometimes diving after their prey.

They breed along the coasts and often follow rivers, and even reach inland lakes. Unfortunately for them, both their eggs and their plumes are attractive, and merciless hunting has almost driven them from the eastern shores of the United States, as well as from those of Western Europe and the British Isles.

A Knowing Bird.

But they know their enemy and in recent times they have chosen their breeding places in spots almost inaccessible to the hunters. Lately one of their concealed breeding places has been found on a lonely part of the coast of Norfolk, England, and the photographs were taken there by hunters who had no other aim than to increase our knowledge of the ways and peculiarities of animals which, as far as we know, have as good a right to enjoy the gifts of nature as we have.

One interesting fact about this home of English terns is that it is believed to be far older than the British Empire, there being evidence that they have inhabited it from a time anterior to that of the arrival of the conquering Normans.

The story of the terns serves to call attention to one of the most neglected parts of everybody's education. The man or woman who knows the birds is a rara avis("rare bird") in these days, and that, too, when so much is said of the charms and wonders of natural history. Even in the country, there are only about half a dozen birds, such as the robin, the bobolink, the barn swallow, the bluebird and the sparrow, that any person you meet can tell you anything about. For most people birds are only birds. Yet if you will read such a book as old Gilbert White's "Natural History of Selborne"—one of the most delightful books ever written—you will be quickly convinced that the bird world is worth a great deal of attention, and that those who know nothing about it are as ignorant of some of nature's greatest charms as are those who do not know one star from another.

A Vacation Idea.

When you go into the country or to the seashore for your vacation, take a book on ornithology along, and make acquaintance with the many species of birds which you are sure to see. Study them with an opera glass and make photographs of them with your camera. Learn to distinguish them from one another not only by their plumage, but by their songs, their calls, their manner of flight, the character of their nests and the places that they most frequent; watch their daily life and habits; follow them through the fields and into the forests—and don't shoot them! You will find in this way that a new source of interest in the world you live in has been opened for you.

One of the recollections of childhood that I should most regret to lose is that of the wonderful song of a thrush that I used to hear at sundown, ringing across the fields from some far-away hidden place, the sweetest sound I ever heard! I would leave my play and stop to listen in simple wonder. It was long before I found out the name of the bird that sang that marvelous evening song, which fascinated everyone who listened to it, and I never caught sight of the bird itself, and yet it seems to me that I shall hear that melody as long as the cells of memory transmit their impressions!

And yet men endowed with the divine gift of human intelligence murder birds by wholesale; murder them for their plumage; murder them to get a new dainty for jaded appetites; murder them, most horrible of all, for the mere sake of killing; to see their delicate feathers fly from the impact of the shot, and their little bodies drop mangled upon the ground! And this is called—SPORT!

Smithson on the Continent

THEY were openly courting!

It was in the Continental train running down to Naples. Smithson, clerk in a London shipping office, on the most ambitious vacation of his life, was the chief spectator. The tall, dark Italian who was talking to the young couple in animated style did not seem at all embarrassed by their conduct.

Smithson shifted in his corner seat and tried not to look in their direction. But his glance repeatedly strayed to the olive-complexioned girl, jet-haired, brilliant-eyed, whose adorer, as young and sun-tinted as herself, embraced her neck with his right arm, and fondled her fingers with his other hand.

"Ah!"

Smithson had remembered he was in Italy—the country of romance. He felt more at ease. To show his tolerance he would beg a match. Ignorance of Italian was nothing to a man crossing the Continent to catch a German liner for the return Mediterranean trip—all to be achieved in a fortnight.

After several genial glances at the trio, which seemed to give great offense, he took out his pipe, and, fixing his eyes on the tall, dark man, he pointed to his empty bowl and struck an imaginary match on his trousers.

A direct insult could not have caused a more startling outburst. It came like a gunshot—

"Insulte!"

Bright Eyes.

A less steady eye would have quailed beneath the Italian's flashing gaze. But Smithson had noticed the curious, bewitching light in the orbs of the beautiful girl, which were directed toward his face, and he replied grandly:

"Not at all!"

The dark man retorted with a torrent of sentences.

Smithson might have used the single Italian word he knew, "apologia," but he recalled the advice given him by an uncle at Dover: "Nephew, if you get into a vocal dilemma with a foreigner, meet volubility with volubility—recite poetry, anything; but don't falter, and, above all, gesticulate and smile."

Sentence on sentence still stumbled from the dark man. A look of softness had come into the eyes of the girl opposite, but she clung to her lover as if the little clerk was a bold highwayman.

There was no longer any reassurance in the beautiful girl's face. When the little clerk sought it she cringed before his glance, and the tall man moved to screen her from view.

The train slowed down slightly. Occasionally the little clerk cast a furtive glance at the scenery flying by. He could think only of poetry as a means of stemming the other's tide of wrath. He leaned back, and with the smile of a seraph looked up at him and begin in pathetic, pacifying tones:

An Experiment.

"I am out of humanity's reach,
I must finish my journey alone,
Never hear the sweet music of speech,
I start at the sound of my own."

It was electrical. The Italian's face relaxed. The anger went out of his black eye. He bowed magnificently and stepped aside, and after voluble explanation to the lovers, sat down.

Smithson whistled mentally. "Phew! He thinks I've apologized."

Presently the tall man turned, and, pointing to Smithson's gold watch, stammered slowly: "You—haf—time?"

"What! You speak English?" Smithson proudly exposed to view the face of the watch.

"A leetle," was the answer.

All four were now smiling. The beautiful girl, especially, seemed gratified at the calm after the storm. The train ran into the station.

"Naples?" Smithson exclaimed.

"Anpoli," the Italian answered. "You eat?"

"Rather!"

With a pleasant farewell the lovers departed in a carriage, and Smithson, casting after the beautiful girl a regretful glance, accompanied the tall man on foot to a restaurant. "An experience to tell the chaps at home," he told himself. "Can't stand a vacation without incident!"

But he grumbled when, after a meal of delicate dishes which he could scarcely swallow, the proprietor of the restaurant negligently placed before him a bill for two.

An Argument.

"No, no, you mistake," he said easily.

"Sir, our price," stammered the proprietor, reproachfully. And the dark man nodded assent.

"But I've not brought you—you brought me—you crook," Smithson expostulated. He offered five francs, half the sum claimed.

The proprietor rejected it with a torrent of protest, endless as the dark man's in the train.

Smiling, as before, Smithson repeated the verse which had then acted so soothingly. It had no effect. Finally he exploded: "I wish I knew 'Paradise Lost.' I'd recite the whole book at you!" As a last resort, with a forced smile he began:

"The boy stood on the burning deck——"

"Burnidek?" the proprietor interrupted. "What ess 'burnidek'?"

"Confound you!" Smithson thundered, "that's where the boy stood! Do you think I'm going to listen to you fellows yarning without saying a word?"

A passing gendarme entered. Protest was useless. As an alternative to accompanying the officer Smithson paid ten francs and stamped into the street—the gendarme accepting from the proprietor one franc for settling the dispute.

On his way to the landing stage, whither he went to inquire if his liner were in, Smithson felt for his watch.

It was gone!

The Mistakes of Jennie

By HAL COFFMAN

Being a Series of Chapters in the Life of a Southern Girl in the Big City

They Would All Look at Jennie.

THINGS went along quietly with Jennie for three or four weeks. She had paid the $1.50 weekly installment on her clothes regularly, but she noticed everything was not quite right at the office. Her former girl friend would not speak to her, and Jennie often noticed her whispering to the other girls, and then they would all look at Jennie.

Jennie knew they were talking about her, but she could not find out what it was they said.

Usually, in the office during the dull season, they laid several of the girls off or let them go entirely, but they always kept the best ones—the ones that always did just a little MORE than the boss asked them to do.

Jennie had always been among these, for she worked hard and kept her mind on her work—that is, she used to before she got the foolish ideas about clothes and wanting to do like other girls she saw.

Of late Jennie had been thinking more of the good times she had, and wanted to have, than she had of her work, and had made several mistakes in her work, for which she was "called down" by the boss.

She felt and knew that the other girl was doing all she could to make Jennie lose her job, and what then of the $1.50 weekly installment on her clothes, and also the remainder of her $8.00 a week that was so badly needed at home.

Jennie had not seen the fellow since Tom met them at the door going to the hotel and had realized what a narrow escape she had when Tom told her what an awful place it was. One of the girls told Jennie that the boss wanted to see her, and with a dryness in her throat and fluttering heart she went slowly toward the private office of the boss.

Mild and Bitter

A Humorous Yarn

MR. POLLOCK, the landlord of the "Comfortable Gill," sat at his door looking out upon the dusty road and the stretch of meadow beyond and beyond that again at the line of pollard willows which marked the stream. He took from his pocket a large white handkerchief, upon which a crop of red spots had broken out very much as though it had had the measles, and wiped his forehead with it, careless of infection.

The morning was hot, and he had just been engaged in severe physical exertion, nothing less than the conveyance, with the help of the brewer's men, of a thirty-six gallon barrel of ale into the cellar. The feat had been safely accomplished, and he had cause for satisfaction. Yet all was not well with him. There was a slight frown upon his forehead and a thoughtful expression in his watery blue eyes as they roved across the meadows to a spot by the stream, where stood a figure of a man clad in Norfolk jacket and knee breeches and carrying a fishing rod. Mr. Pollock eyed him thoughtfully, and scratched his stubble on his chin—of which he had two.

"Been here three weeks," he muttered, "and I ain't seen the color of his money yet. Promises—yes! Settle when he goes! But then, he ain't a-going—and living on the fat of the land, too. Not overmuch baggage to speak of. Of course, he may be a gentleman. Very likely he is. But then, again, he mayn't be. No. It's no go. I'll have it out with him this very morning."

He stiffened in his determination as he saw the fisherman turn from the stream and come toward him across the meadows. It was evident that the morning's sport had not proved very satisfactory. As he came nearer he revealed himself as a slightly built man with dark hair, narrow black eyes and a humorous twist about the corners of his mouth. He greeted Mr. Pollock cheerfully, but the landlord, having made up his mind to an unpleasant duty, was not to be put off by blandishments.

He Speaks.

"Morning, Mr. Twigg," he said abruptly, in response to the fisherman's greetings. "No luck, I suppose? One can't do much when the sky's as bright as it is. There's a small matter I was wanting to speak to you about—that little account of mine."

He coughed and drew his stout form a little more upright. Mr. Twigg's dark eyes rested upon him a moment and then wandered away to the right, to where the little country station stood, neat and trim, amongst its flowery beds.

"I think I told you," he said, "that I proposed to settle when I left."

"Exactly," answered Mr. Pollock eagerly, seeing an opening for effective argument. "And what I want to know is, when that's going to be, for, you see, supposing you was to stay here forever; then you wouldn't ever settle it. Now, as man to man, would you?"

Mr. Twigg laughed.

"Well, no," he admitted, pleasantly. "Since you put it that way, I shouldn't. But you needn't be afraid. Very nice place, this—pleasant, and quiet, and all that, but not quite the spot for a permanent residence. As a matter of fact, I was thinking of leaving this morning. There's a train in about a half hour, isn't there? And I've sent my trunks up to the station."

"Oh, you have, have you?" said Mr. Pollock, with a momentary suspicion. "Then you and me can settle up before you go—comfortable and pleasantlike."

"Certainly," answered Mr. Twigg, promptly. "I've just got to go upstairs and pack the small handbag, and then I'll come down and settle up."

"Very well, sir," said Mr. Pollock, becoming more respectful at the prospect of approaching payment. "You can't say no fairer than that."

His Account.

He went into the bar to add up the details of his account, putting on a few dollars for luck. When Mr. Twigg descended he presented him with the bill. The fisherman put down his handbag and thrust his hands into his trouser pockets, as though to produce the necessary coin. In the midst of the process he paused and looked abstractedly at the landlord.

"You've treated me very well," he said, "and I shall recommend this place to my friends. And in return, I can show you a tip that ought to be useful to a man in your line of business. If you'd like to know I can show you a way to get two kinds of beer out of one barrel."

"Two kinds of beer out of one barrel?" said Mr. Pollock, staring. "Why, it can't be done."

"Two kinds of beer," repeated Mr. Twigg. "Mild and bitter."

"Well, if you can do that," said Mr. Pollock, scratching his head, "you're a marvel."

"It's perfectly easy when you know how to do it," answered Mr. Twigg, nonchalantly. "I'll be glad to show it to you. You've got a barrel of beer in the cellar, I suppose?"

"Just got a new one this morning," answered Mr. Pollock. "Thirty-six gallons."

"Then that's the very thing," answered his guest. "If you've got such a thing as a large auger about the place I'll show you how to do it now."

In the excitement of watching this curious experiment Mr. Pollock forgot about the unsettled account. He rummaged in the bar and found an auger of the requisite size. Mr. Twigg inspected it with particular care. Armed with it and accompanied by his host he descended to the cellar where the mighty barrel stood upon its trestles. He eyed it carefully and tugged at his mustache—possibly to hide a smile.

The Experiment.

"No use knocking the spigot out," he said. "You need two holes—one for each kind of beer. The mild comes out at one hole, the bitter at the other. You'll find this tip so useful that you'll remember it all your life. So here goes."

He attacked the barrel with the augur, making the hole in the lower part of its face.

"Just stick your thumb in here whilst I make the other." Mr. Pollock complied, and he went on. "The beer which comes out of that hole will be mild," he explained as he bored, "and the beer which comes out of this one when I've finished it will be bitter, very bitter," he added, inaudibly. "Ah, there, it's done! Just stick your thumb in this one, then I'll show you."

Mr. Pollock hastily inserted his thumb into the second hole, and with both hands fully occupied waited for the miracle.

"And now," said Mr. Twigg, allowing his smile to broaden, "I'll just go along and catch my train. I've got five minutes and I can just do it. As I said, you've done me well while I've been here, and I think you'll admit that I've done you well in return. Good morning. Mild and bitter, remember, out of the same barrel. Don't forget."

He ran lightly up the cellar stairs and vanished into the stretch of sunlight beyond them. Mr. Pollock, with both thumbs stuck in the barrel, was busy employing a somewhat slow brain in calculation as to the choice between the loss of his account and the loss of 36 gallons of beer. He had not solved the problem by the time that Mr. Twigg stepped out of the little station on his way to town.

Accepted.

"Darling," whispered the ardent suitor, "I lay my fortune at your feet."

"Your fortune?" replied she in surprise. "I didn't know you had one."

"Well, it isn't much of a fortune, but it will look large beside those tiny feet."

Talked Through His Nose.

From America comes the story of a Scotsman who, while viewing a statue of George Washington, was approached by an interested American.

"I think you'll agree with me, sir," said the American, "that he was a great and good man. A lie never passed his lips."

"Weel," said the Scot, "I suppose he talked through his nose, like the rest o' ye."

The Fowler's Story

A Weird Tale, Complete

THE fowler's cottage stands at the edge of the fields where the estuary of the Whitewater joins the main, and if there be a more desolate spot in the Landshire coast I have yet to find it.

When I went down to the cottage the other night the weather, for all its roughness, seemed likely to favor fowling. When I reached the fowler's cottage I found its owner in strange mood. He was walking rapidly from kitchen to parlor, pausing every now and again to open the kitchen door and look out to seaward.

"I'm sorry ye've come down," he remarked as I reached the door, "for I can't come wi' ye to-night."

"Why not?" I asked. "Aren't you well? There is nothing the matter with wind or weather, and the tide'll bring a great many birds up."

"That's right enough," he replied; "and there's nothin' 'xactly wrong wi' me, but it is my unlucky night, and I dussn't go out."

"'Twere three years ago last night," he said; "chanced I were flight shootin' and didn't have no luck whatsomever. There was a shower of birds come out from the decoy pond, but blame me if they didn't keep out of range like, and I couldn't come near them nohow. An' as I walked back 'long the sea wall, a gre't ole owl came shrikkin' right past me, an' I thought, mebbe, she were a witch, an' I counted she'd driven the birds away from me; so I let fly and dropped her, and she were only an owl after all, for if so be she had been a witch the shot couldn't have stopped her. So I picked her up and carried her home for to stuff, and I count that were an unlucky thing to do. An' the very next night, three years ago to-night, with the wind just as you see it now, an' the moon in most the same quarter, I went out 'long the saltings for to hide behind a knoll, for I reckoned the duck were gettin' some shy of the sea wall.

"An' when I got down there and took me place just afore flight started, blame me if I didn't see another gre't old owl swoopin' down fr the land; an' I dussn't shoot it, not knowin' when the flight would start, an' it come right past me, shrikkin' just like the one I'd shot the t'other night, and I knowed somethin' was wrong. Flight come late. It were ten minutes 'fore the first birds come over, and then they come all right and I got six or eight, and thought to myself I'd got skeered about nothin'. I forgot to tell ye that I 'adn't brought Spot wi' me 'cos she'd hurt her foot, an' I'd to leave her be'ind, so I 'ad to pick up me own birds, an' for to do that I kept all on turnin' round, and two was cripples an' ran; and when I'd got the lot and the light were most gone, blame me if I knew where the land was and where was the sea.

"I didn't know nowt about it at first startin' off. Seemed to me I were headin' towards the land right enough, and then I come to a place where the mud-bank stopped and there were deep water twenty yards wide comin' down with a rush from two sides at once. I looked for me landmarks, but couldn't see nothin' an' I knew there was somethin' wrong.

"I grew'd more an' more skeer'd like, an' begun to run forrard hard as ever I could, an' wherever I went the water kept all on chasin' arter me; an' blame me, if that gre't ole owl didn't pass agin in the dark, all white an' flutterin' an' screamin' at the top o' her voice. Then I know'd why it was I'd got caught, an' I just stood still, for I didn't know where to go no longer, an' then I see'd a light, sudden-like, right away from where I'd been a-runnin'. I didn't know what it might be, but I just started straight off for it, walkin' an' wadin' an' splashin' an' racin' like where the goin' was too soft; an' there was times when the water was up to me knees, but I kept all on goin' for the light, the only thing I could see."

"You must have known you were on the right road, then," I suggested.

"That I didn't," he replied, speaking as a man does when he has been running hard, "for I couldn't tell but that the light were a Jack o' lantern that would go out when I come nigh it an' leave me in th' worstapart of th' marsh, or that t'other old owl weren't a real witch what 'ad set it there for to drown'd me by. By anyway, the light were better than the darkness, an' so I run as best I could an' slipped twice an' dropped a brace o' me birds an' dussn't stop even for they, an' went on an' on till it seemed I'd never get to the end o' th' runnin'; but the light kept all on a-twinklin' an' so I kept all on a-runnin', an' at last I seed a bit of the breakwater, an' then all the things shaped theirselves an' I know'd in a moment where I was. An' the light were in me own parlor, for it chanced that me brother Jack 'ad come along, an' bein' lonely like, 'ad just lit the lamp for to see by, an' if it 'adn't been for that I'd never 'ave seen land again. I count th' old owl would ha' had me drownded."

"That is three years ago, you tell me," I said. "I should have thought you would have forgotten the trouble by now."

The old fowler stirred uneasily in his chair.

"I 'ad forgotten it," he confessed, "but last night, when I were down on the wall at flight-time, t'other old owl came shriklin' past me again, an' I know'd she wanted to get me back on the saltin's, for I count she's a witch, an' it's 'er night. An' that's why I 'ont goo.

"Do ye listen," he said in hushed tones. "Do ye listen."

I stirred the fire to a glow that lit the fowler's scared, white face. Something gray and silent sailed between the window and the faint light of a moon half hidden by a clouddrift—a big owl passed, hooting.

THOMPSON AND DUNN ATLANTA BATTERY TO-DAY

By Joe Agler.

NEW ORLEANS, July 19.—Thompson and Dunn will be the Cracker battery to-day, and the club is brim full of pep and confidence as a result of the easy victory of yesterday over the Pelicans.

Dent really worked about ball all the way. The only run New Orleans made was a gift to the visitors by way of a fielder's choice.

Billy Smith's clubs put up a great batting attack, with Welchonce and Alperman leading. Joe Dunn also contributed a most timely double that cleared up the tow-path when it was in a highly congested condition.

Walker, supposed to be the speed king of this circuit, was soft for the Crackers and the only question was to what length their attack would run the score.

The shake-up in the batting order proved a wise move, certainly for that game, at any rate. Wally Smith seems to be in a bit of a slump just now, but he is sure to hit his stride again, as he is one of those natural hitters who can't stay off the ball long at a time.

"King" Brady has left the team and Clarke has reported. The new hand is a big, raw-boned fork-hander and while he was warming up yesterday he showed a barrel of stuff. He pitches like Otto Hess and should held out a lot in the climb the Crackers now seem to have started for the top.

SANTA MONICA WILL GO AFTER SAVANNAH MARK

LOS ANGELES, July 19.—The Santa Monica road race, to be run on August 9, will be one event open for all cars of 600 cubic inches and under, covering the course 53 times for a total of 445 miles.

This announcement was made after a meeting of the Santa Monica road race committee, making a radical departure from previous runnings of the coast classic.

The most important reason advanced for making the change and increasing the distance by nearly 50 per cent was so that the contestants might go after the grand prize record for 400 miles made on the Savannah course.

Because the 120-horsepower Fiat with which Teddy Tetzlaff won the last race and established a new world's record is above the displacement restriction, the car has been eliminated from this year's race.

$20,000 FOR RITCHIE FOR THREE N. D. BOUTS

NEW YORK, July 19.—A $20,000 guarantee for three no-decision fights of ten rounds each awaits Willie Ritchie. Jimmy Johnston, matchmaker of the St. Nicholas A. C., today is awaiting word from the champion as to whether he will accept or not. Joe Shugrue, Jack Britton and Packey McFarland are the men picked by Johnston. As there are no decisions rendered in this city, Ritchie can not lose his title unless he is knocked out.

Johnston is also willing to guarantee Ritchie $7,500 if he will box Freddie Welsh, the English lightweight champion.

WASHBURN AND LEROY QUALIFY FOR GOLF FINALS

NEW YORK, July 19.—Watson M. Washburn and Robert Reroy and Theo. R. Pell and Raymond D. Little will meet this afternoon in the final match of the Round Robin tennis doubles of the Westchester Country Club.

The Washburn-Leroy combination finished at the top of the first division yesterday by defeating Adee and Rawlins by the score of 6-2, 6-3. This victory gave the winners the right to play Pell and Little, leaders of the second division, for the trophies to-day.

GOLF TOURNEYS FOR JUNIORS IS NEEDED MOST

By "Chick" Evans.

CHICAGO, July 19. — The announcement of the age limit tournament at Shokie suggests another thought. There is an increasing number of age-limit tourneys in the golf world about Chicago and a decreasing number of open events for young golfers.

The age-limit events are excellent things, but the lack of junior events is hard upon the young golfers, who can only look forward to "coming of age" and the chance, in consequence, of bringing up future great golfers becomes smaller yearly.

Didn't Know Own Ability.

A player does not know his ability until he enters into competition with other players. In my own case, I did not know that I was a first flighter until my tournament scores disclosed the fact. The big championships, of course, are always open to players with a low handicap, but the field is usually large and the players' abilities closely matched. If the young players can only enter these tournaments he will soon quit competitive golf, for the champion is only made after years and years of hard work.

The beginner in the big tournaments would probably be so far surpassed that he would lose courage and drop out of the game, for the promising young player must be provided with an occasional victory to keep his heart up.

Youngsters Want Competition.

The business man enjoys golf as an exercise, but the youngster has hundreds of ways of getting exercise, and there is a chance that he may desert golf unless he has a better way of showing his skill. It is true that he will be sorry later on, but the average individual lives in the present.

Just now, there seem to be very few young golfers of exceptional promise, and this dearth may, in part, be attributed to lack of competitive opportunities. The championship next week may disclose some new lights, but the chances are that the old, familiar names will be seen at the top of the list of qualifiers and in the last four.

More Tournaments Needed.

There is no doubt we need more tournaments and of the less exclusive types in order to develop players of the first class. The old Westward Ho, junior tournament was famous in its time; Shokie also had a good one, and there were open events at Chicago Golf, Onwentsia, Midlothian, Edgewater, Exmoor, etc., all of which have been discontinued.

Age-limit events are excellent things, there should be many of them, but I plead for an occasional chance for the youngster.

Wolgast and Dundee Will Clash Sept. 9

LOS ANGELES, July 19.—Tom Jones has finally accepted terms of Promoter McCarey, of the Pacific A. C., and Ad Wolgast and Johnny Dundee are again matched to box at Vernon. September 9 has been set as the day for the battle. Jones has been holding out for a guarantee and a percentage as had been agreed upon for their previous match which was called off because of an injury to the Dutchman's hand. The winner of the Cross-Baldwin bout is to be matched with Joe Rivers at Vernon on Labor Day unless Champion Willie Ritchie will agree to reasonable terms for a bout with the Mexican on that date.

Cross started training to-day for his fight with Baldwin.

LYNCH FINES TWO CARDINALS.

NEW YORK, July 19.—President Lynch, of the National League, has fined Fielder Cathers and Second Baseman McGee, of the St. Louis club, $25 each, for their fist fight at the Polo Grounds last Thursday.

WILLIE MEEHAN BEAT MANTELL

OAKLAND, CAL., July 19.—Willie Meehan, of San Francisco, won the decision over Frank Mantell, of Pawtucket, R. I., in a 10-round bout here last night.

NOW WHAT WILL CARRIGAN DO? ASK HUB FANS

By A. H. C. Mitchell.

BOSTON, July 19.—The question of the moment seems to be, "How will Bill Carrigan succeed as manager?" It is, of course, easier to ask the question than to answer it. In fact, it is impossible to answer it, because Bill has not had a chance to demonstrate his ability in a managerial capacity. However, it may be said that there is no good reason why he should not make a success of it. Ball players generally agree that Bill has baseball brains. He is a thinker, and as a catcher, he has to be a quick thinker or sit on the bench.

* * *

IT is the opinion of the writer that Wagner would not want the position if it were offered to him. He is perfectly content to be captain of the team. Wagner is really a very shy and diffident man. While he is a star ball player and a splendid captain, it is doubted if he would fit in well as a manager. Doubtless Wagner would say the same thing if he were asked about it.

* * *

WAGNER and Carrigan are the closest of friends and have been ever since they both became members of the squad. They are roommates. They comprised the "Board of Strategy" of the Red Sox organization last season when the team won the pennant. It is more than probable that this combination will resume business again now that Carrigan has been appointed manager. The meetings of the "Board" were discontinued during the world's series last fall, when Carrigan was not allowed to go behind the bat by Stahl, but was sent to the coaching line instead. It is asserted that Stahl was jealous of the publicity accorded the "Board" and decided to show all persons whom it might concern that he was the real, sole and only manager of the team. Of course, this report the writer has no first-hand information, but Stahl's actions in the series would seem to bear out the assertion.

* * *

IT is well that the change in managers is made when it is made. Carrigan will have the opportunity to become accustomed to his new duties. And if things go along all right he will have a chance to shape his team for next year. It is hardly within the range of possibilities for the Red Sox to win the pennant this year. It seems to be too late. But the team can make a good finish if properly handled, and that is the work cut out for Manager Bill. Carrigan has the respect and confidence of his players. Stahl was well liked, for that matter, but when the players realized that he was making wrong moves and not using the best judgment in the handling of his team it, no doubt, had a bad effect on them.

O'TOOLE BETTER, BUT CAN HARDLY WORK THIS YEAR

PITTSBURG, July 19.—Marty O'Toole, the Pirate $22,500 pitcher who was recently operated upon for appendicitis, has left St. Margaret's Hospital and is now at his home in Homewood.

Indications are that it will be many weeks before he takes his regular turn on the rubber again. Baseball men fear he will be of no further use to the team this season.

CARPENTER BESTS KNIGHT.

DENVER, COLO., July 19.—Frank Whitney, the fighting carpenter, beat Phil Knight here last night in ten rounds.

TURNS DOWN BIG PRICE.

LOS ANGELES, CAL., July 19.—Ed Maier, president of the Venice Coast League Baseball Club, to-day refused an offer of $200,000 for the team and franchise by a syndicate which included John McGraw, of the New York National League Club.

Troops Quell Leith Riots.

LEITH, SCOTLAND, July 19.—In fights here to-day between striking dock workers and soldiers and sailors many persons were badly hurt and thousands of dollars property damage was done.

White Stops Abel in Two Rounds

Kid Young Loses to Lee on Foul

SEVERAL days ago Jack Britton stated that Charley White was the hardest hitting lightweight before the public to-day. Last night White met Jake Abel at the Auditorium-Armory and put him out in the second round of a scheduled ten-round battle. The punches that put Abel away were aleft-hand hook that traveled about two inches, followed by a right cross.

The punches landed by White were the hardest ever struck by a lightweight in this city. And when it is taken into consideration that White weighed only 127 pounds when he stepped into the ring, one can not give White too much praise for his wonderful boxing and punching power.

Never once did the Chicago boy make a misstep. Not a blow did he start that failed to land. He certainly is the best lightweight seen around here and he is a real contender for the lightweight crown.

Charley is only 21 years of age and has stopped such boys as Owen Moran, Johnny Dundee, Joe Thomas twice and Pal Moore twice. All these boys were going goodwhen White met them, but they were no match for the boy from the Windy City.

As for Abel, he never had a chance. When Jake would start a left, Charley would beat him to it. When Abel rushed White would meet him with sharp-shooting uppercuts. In fact, Abel appeared to be but a baby in White's hands. After the fight Abel seemed dumbfounded. He stated that the blow White hit him was the hardest he ever received.

Eddie Hanlon and Charley Lee were the surprises in the other bouts. Hanlon defeated Terry Nelson in an eight round set-to, but was fully eight pounds heavier than his Greek opponent. However, Hanlon put up a great bout and deserved much credit for his victory. He floored Nelson for the count of nine in the eighth round and nearly had the Greek out at the finish.

Lee sprung the surprise of the night by winning from Kid Young in six rounds on a foul. The battle was a hummer, full of excitement during the entire distance. Young hit Lee low twice in the sixth and was disqualified after an examination by a physician.

In the other match Tim Callahan won a four-round decision over Young Abe Attell.

A small crowd witnessed the bouts.

CONNIE MACK PRESENTS OLD UNIFORMS TO INDIANS

PHILADELPHIA, PA., July 19.—The baseball fan frequently wonders what becomes of the old uniforms, bats and gloves discarded by big league clubs. Much of their paraphernalia is used until it is so worn or damaged as to be of no further value, but every club manager has on file applications for outfittings no longer suitable for the major circuits.

Just at present the Indian team of St. Mary's Mission School at Omak, Wash., is proudly playing in uniforms formerly worn by the Athletics when they held the title of world's champions.

Manager Connie Mack was appealed to for some discarded suits early this spring, and in answer to the request forwarded not only uniforms, but gloves, bats and balls as well.

THIRD SACKERS LIKE R. WALLACE MIGHTY SCARCE

ST. LOUIS, MO., July 19.—When the count of 10 is tolled on Rhoderick Wallace as a major league player, then baseball will lose one of its greatest stars. But from present indications, Bob Wallace is going to establish a record for perpetual service in the big arena.

When this season opened the Scot started out on his eighteenth consecutive year. As has been the custom for the past few years, the high boss of the Browns has been trying to find a youthful successor for Wallace. A kid of more speed, a better swatter, a better fielder and a better player all around has been sought.

But this spring has been the same as the others. The recruits have arrived and the recruits have gone, and Bob Wallace remains a member of the Browns, playing the same snappy and sensational infield that he did when he was in his prime.

Some Star at Third.

In the last three games at Sportsman's Park fans have seen Wallace operate at third base. That's the spot where the veteran really became a star when he was with the old Cleveland Spiders and when he came to St. Louis, when the franchises of Cleveland and St. Louis were transferred in 1899.

Suffering with a pair of bad legs and a sore right hip, Wallace has played as spectacularly as any third baseman who has been in the big circle.

The play de luxe executed by Wallace was in a recent conflict with the Yanks. It happened in the fifth inning. Fisher was on second, with one out, when Wolter bounded to Lavan. The shortstop made a high peg to Wallace, trying for Fisher.

No third baseman in the game would have completed the out. Wallace, stretching out, grabbed the high throw with his glove, and, with a quick swing, tagged Fisher as he slid into the bag.

Wallace didn't leap for the wild peg. Had he jumped he never could have made the swing to tag Fisher as he slid into the bag. It was a play that nobody but Wallace could have completed.

They Can't Get His Job.

Wallace started to slow up a few seasons ago. President Hedges, realizing this, instructed scouts to buy all the promising infielders. They did. Within the last few seasons, Roy Hartzell, Eddie Hallinan, Mike Balenti, Harry Shanley, Eddie Daley, Derrill Pratt, Dee Walsh, and now Johnny Lavan have been on the job.

There's a collection of eight trying to push Wallace back to the minors. Hallinan, Daley, Shanley, Walsh, Balenti, Pratt and Hartzell failed. The first four are in the minors, while judgment upon Lavan will be delayed a bit until the rah-rah recruit gets more time to show that he can hit.

Bob Wallace isn't the same spry kid he was a dozen years ago, still fans at Sportman's Park, or even Robison Field have yet to see the athlete who compared with the Scot when he was in his prime.

Wallace isn't ready to quit or go to the minors now. He isn't a regular with the Browns, but several major league owners have put in bids to Hedges for the marvel of marvels.

KEENE HORSES WILL BE SOLD AT GARDEN SEPT. 2

NEW YORK, July 19.—Solomon Hanford, executor of the estate of the late James R. Keene, announces the disposal sale of all horses, the property of James R. Keene, will be held in Madison Square Garden on September 2. Hanford's representatives have been sent to England to bring Colin and Peter Pan back to this country and they will arrive about the middle of August.

BOXING
News of the Ring Game

Willie Ritchie has been receiving so many offers for bouts from the different clubs all over the country that he has decided to inspect them all on August 4. The one that the champion considers the largest he will accept and will be ready to meet the opponent picked for him on Labor Day.

* * *

Packey McFarland, who does not believe in fighting during the hot months, has just made an announcement in Chicago to the effect that he has no intention of donning the mitts again until the second week in September. "I only hope that my next bout will be with Willie Ritchie," said Packey, "for I think that I can wrest his title from him."

* * *

Tommy Burns and his heavyweight, Arthur Pelky, are now in Frisco. Burns is trying to get his protege a match with Gunboat Smith on Labor Day. Pelky's chances of landing the mill, however, appear to be very small, as the lightweights are the big cards on the coast at the present time.

* * *

The Leach Cross-Matty Baldwin bout, scheduled to take place at Los Angeles on July 29, may be called off. McCarey refuses to give Leach more than $3,500 for his end of the purse, while Cross is holding out for $5,000.

* * *

* * *

Tommy Walsh, manager of George "Knockout" Brown, is a busy party these days getting his protege in shape for his engagement with Frank Klaus at Butte, Mont., next month. Brown is doing his training in Chicago. The middleweights are scheduled to go twelve rounds.

* * *

Coast fans are now touting Kid Williams as the bantamweight champion of the world. Tom McCarey handed the latter a belt for trimming Ledoux recently. Williams is to hold the belt until he is defeated by some boy of his weight.

* * *

Charlie White, the Chicago sensation, will make his next fight against Freddie Welch at Winnipeg. The pair are scheduled to meet in a 12-round set-to on August 15.

* * *

The middleweight division has another contender in Tim O'Neil, the Hammond, Ind., scrapper. The latter recently stopped Tom McMahon and is practically matched to meet Jim Clabby at Kenosha, Wis.

LANGFORD GETS MATCH.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 19.—Sam Langford arrived here from Australia Friday and before he went to bed last night Manager Woodman had matched him for a four-round go with big Charley Miller for next Friday night.

SOX BUY A. A. CATCHER.

MINNEAPOLIS, July 19.—Nick Allen, catcher, who last season was a member of the Minneapolis American Association team, has been sold to the Chicago American League club.

CHAPPELLE HAS NO PARTICULAR STAR FEATURE

By O. B. Keeler

NOW that it seems pretty definitely settled that Mr. Lawrence Chappelle, Milwaukee outfielder, cost the Chicago White Sox $18,000, or words to that effect, there may be some small curiosity as to the workings of a bit of baseball machinery that can get such an expensive rating in the big show.

That is to say, what sort of a new prize beauty is this Chappelle person.

Well, Chappy—as he was commonly known in the American Association—sports rather an odd distinctive feature. This is the fact that he hasn't any. He can hit; he can field and throw; he is no dub on the bases. But there is no one handle sticking out of Chappy's A. A. record that you can lay hold on and say, "Here is a wonder."

Chappy's best point probably is his hitting. That unquestionably was what attracted attention in the Callahan camp. Chappy did hit becomingly—in the A. A., which also developed Mr. Gavvy Cravath, of the Phillies. He is a big fellow—strong in the arms and shoulders, and able to take a free swing on a fast ball or a savage chop at a curve. He crowds the plate and worries the pitcher.

In the field he is a good, steady performer. He is a good judge of a fly ball and covers a fair territory. He can throw well, but hasn't the arm of Clarence Walker, of Kansas City. He is no speed demon, like Shelton, of Columbus, either in the field or on the towpath.

If Chappy turns out to be a paying investment for Comiskey, it will be because he is that really valuable thing in baseball—an all-round player.

BILLIKEN TEAM TO BE SHIFTED TO LITTLE ROCK

MONTGOMERY, July 19.—Col. Robert Lee Hedges, president of the St. Louis American League Baseball Club, spent last Tuesday in Little Rock. His trip there was for diplomatic and financial reasons, which concern the ultimate taking over of the Montgomery club of the Southern Association by the St. Louis American League Club, and a shift of base being made from Montgomery to Little Rock.

Will Shift the Franchise.

Montgomery has not been supporting the excellent team which Manager Johnny Dobbs has installed there with any spirit, and Colonel Hedges declared, as late as Monday, that if he did secure the Montgomery club—which he was not seeking—there probably would be a shift of the franchise to some other city.

Inferentially, the Colonel's trip to Little Rock Tuesday was for the specific consideration of this shift, though the taciturnity customary in times of baseball political action was maintained about the American League office.

Necessary as a "Feeder."

With the tremendous competition among major league teams for embryonic talent it is almost a necessity that each major league club have at least one AA minor league club under its control that can turn into the big ring players fairly well developed. That, of course, would be Hedges' patent purpose in financing the Montgomery club.

Colonel Hedges returned from Little Rock Wednesday morning and said his trip there had been merely to receive the assurance of President William M. Kavanaugh, of the Southern League that the players upon whom he has a string on the Montgomery club would be protected for the Browns in the event the Montgomery franchise was sold.

SEVERAL BIG LEAGUE TEAMS PLAN TO TRAIN IN FLORIDA

JACKSONVILLE, July 19.—Next spring several of the big league teams will do their spring training in Florida. The Chicago Cubs are to go to Tampa, the Philadelphia Americans are coming to this city, and Miami is raising a fund of $5,000 to secure the Cincinnati Reds.

The plan being employed at the Magic City to raise the necessary funds is that of having ten men to deposit notes for $500 in one of the banks. The gate receipts for the exhibition games will be used to reemburse these men at the end of the training season.

The Cincinnati team has been mentioned, but the Miami fans are willing to take care of any big league aggregation which will wend its way southward. All they want is a look at a real, live ball player of the highest type.

JOHNSON WILL DECIDE WHITE-SOX-YANKS ROW

DETROIT, MICH., July 19.—President Johnson, of the American League, will decide the question raised by the recent trade between the New York and Chicago American League clubs involving Hal Chase, Rollie Zeider and Borton.

It will not be necessary to take the questions involved in the New York-Chicago trade before the National Commission, according to President Johnson. "As soon as I get the official report of the whole affair, I'll take care of the matter myself," he said.

PHIL CROSS AFTER BRITTON.

LOS ANGELES, CAL., July 19.—Sam Wallach is after McCarey to stage a welterweight elimination contest here between Phil Cross and Jack Britton. If such a program can be carried out the winner would be matched with Packy McFarland in a final contest for the welterweight championship, a belt and title to go to the winner.

Makes Blotchy Skin Free of All Blemish

The Most Obstinate Skin Afflictions and Eruptions from Poisoned Blood Are Completely Cured Quickly.

This Picture Plainly Shows the Wonderful Change Wrought by S. S. S.

It is certainly remarkable how quickly the action of S. S. S., the famous blood purifier, shows itself in the skin. There is one ingredient in S. S. S. which peculiarly stimulates cellular or glandular activity to select from the blood, or from the fine net work of blood vessels in the skin, those elements which it requires for regeneration.

Thus pimples, acne, eczema, lupus, or any other blood condition that attacks the skin or seeks an outlet through the skin is met with the antidotal effect of S. S. S.

This is why skin troubles vanish so readily and why they do not return.

Under the influence of S. S. S. this fine net work of blood vessels in the skin is constantly selecting from the blood the nutrition required for healthy tissue and the cause of disease is just as constantly being removed, scattered and rendered harmless.

It is a great mistake to rely upon catharties to cure pimples or other facial eruptions. Not only do catharties cause chronic constipation, but they ... the blood of its valuable and es... al preservatives.

Acne, or that condition of the skin known as pimples, often becomes so persistent that it will continue to old age if not checked by determined methods. And the same with blackheads. A knowledge of the skin and why it becomes the abiding place of so many eruptive conditions will show how futile it is to squeeze pimples or blackheads or put all coating over the skin with grease, powders or other external applications. To clear your skin and to make it stay so requires a stimulating influence in the corium, or the fine net work of tiny blood vessels below the outer and inner layers of skin.

You will be surprised and delighted at the quick change if you use S. S. S., the famous blood purifier. Its action in the skin is quite sensational. These facts are more fully explained in a book on skin troubles sent by The Swift Specific Co., 195 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga. You will find S. S. S. on sale at all drug stores. Get a bottle to-day and banish all skin afflictions.

When you ask for S. S. S., look out for the common trick of trying to sell you something else. Don't be misled.

Dixie Moguls to Make Changes

Many Will Have New Job in '14

By Percy H. Whiting.

THERE'LL be some managerial changes in the Southern League when next season rolls around. They are beginning to crop out already.

The managers who are bound to stick are Bill Smith, in Atlanta; Carleton Molesworth, at Birmingham, and quite probably, Mike Finn, at Mobile.

Bill Smith has a two-year contract, so he is sure of his berth for another term. Molesworth appears a fixture. Mike Finn can undoubtedly have the Mobile job again if he wants it, but he may not. It's a pretty discouraging job, and on his showing this year, and for many years past, Honorable Mique is entitled to something better.

* * *

Dobbs will go higher—maybe only to the American Association, more probably to the American League.

Charlie Frank will go—nobody knows where—but he will GO. That's a certainty. They are through with him in New Orleans. The Cleveland club owners, who own likewise the Pelican franchise, will send C. Frank sailing. Who will take his place nobody pretends to know. Maybe the Cleveland folks will come out in the open and admit the ownership by putting a Cleveland cast-off in as manager. Possibly they will play it safe by giving the job to Bill Bernhard, who was with Cleveland before he came to the Southern League. Or, maybe, they will play it safer still and put in some guy there who is game to tackle the tremendous task of cleaning up Pelicanville, running off the gamblers and putting the game there back in the position it belongs.

* * *

IN the rest of the cities there is uncertainty. It is to be expected that Elberfeld will be retained by Chattanooga. He has made good. But then, when two such explosive characters as O. B. Andrews, club president, and the Tabasco Kid are hooked up on any business deal, a split is always possible.

Presumably, Bill Schwartz can stick along at Nashville as long as he wants. But he isn't likely to stay a minute longer than it takes him to get a good job elsewhere. Bill is entitled to a better job than he has. He is a live guy.

The same goes for Bill Bernhard. He is hooked up with a dead crowd in a baseballically-speaking dead town. He would be tickled green to get a job somewhere else. He ought to do it. Continued association with that crowd of chronic losers—and losers through no fault of his—is robbing him of his pep, his "ambish," and his reputation. Bill is probably looking around for a job. He is entitled to one, too. He has done wonders with poor backing.

* * *

THIS seems to be a good year for the bench managers. Finn, Dobbs and Smith, who have ceased to be players, and do their hard work from the bench, have been making most of the race. But this does not necessarily prove anything.

As a rule, the only teams in this league which can afford bench managers can afford good ball clubs. There are too many exceptions this year, however, to make that rule worth a hang.

Really the two teams which have made the most marvelous showing—Mobile and Montgomery—are cheap teams. The Atlanta club and the Lookouts are the only high-priced aggregations that have caused a riffle this year.

CLARK JOINS CRACKERS; BRADY GIVEN RELEASE

NEW ORLEANS, July 19.—Pitcher George Clark, the left-hander turned over to Atlanta by Manager Clark Griffith, of the Washington Americans, joined the Crackers here yesterday.

Jim Brady, the veteran right-hander, was given his unconditional release and is now free to sign where he pleases. Every team in the league waived on him.

LOOKOUTS SECURE WALSH, SHORTSTOP, FROM BROWNS

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., July 19. President O. B. Andrews, of the local club, announced to-day that he had secured Shortstop Dee Walsh from the St. Louis American League Club. Walsh will report immediately.

GEO. SUGGS MAY FIGURE IN REDS-PHILLIES TRADE

PHILADELPHIA, July 19.—It was said here this afternoon that the Cincinnati and Philadelphia National League teams were negotiating for an exchange of players. It was reported that Pitcher Suggs, of Cincinnati, might come to Philadelphia in exchange for one of the utility men of the local club.

MORRIS MEETS BENEDICT.

JOPLIN, MO., July 19.—Negotiations have been completed for a fifteen-round bout between Carl Morris, of Sapulpa, Okla., and Al Benedict, of New York, to be fought in Joplin July 25.

LOOKOUTS GET WALSH.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., July 19.—Shortstop "Dee" Walsh, sensational fielder with Mobile last year, has been bought by Chattanooga from the St. Louis Browns.

THOMAS AND DALY MATCHED.

EVANSVILLE, IND., July 19.—Young Joe Thomas, of St. Louis, and Jack Daly, of Indianapolis, both welterweights, who fought here a few weeks ago, have been matched for a fight at McLean, Ky., on Labor Day.

Sports and Such

WELCOME.

How dear to my heart is that line of the races,
When again in the paper each morn it is spied,
And I think of the dough that my trust oft misplaces:
"Public Stung—Favorite Is Disqualified!"

TY COBB, EVERS AND Zimmerman are the best friends of the umpires. They keep down competition for those jobs.

FREDDIE WELCH IS going to take enough time away from his work at the typewriter proving that he is lightweight champion of the world, to fight Johnny Dundee, which is an unusual proceeding for a box-fighter. Most of them prefer to stand or fall by their press agents.

KID WILLIAMS, THE wonderful little Baltimore bantam, is persistently violating what the National Commission would probably call the "ethics" of the profession. He insists on knocking out some guy about once a week.

THE SIGNING OF JOE JUDGE by McGraw is to be regretted, as it opens the way for some hardy jokesmith to say something about the need of a judge of ball players on the team.

* * *

THE PASTIME OF WALLOPing Joe Platts promises to become as popular as the grand old sport of lamming his fellow-countryman, B. Wells.

TOO MUCH.

The magnate spoke of "Ethics"—
It was his latest breath,
For he lay down on the carpet
And laughed himself to death.

MR. EBBETS TO THE contrary, baseball seems to be reaching the age of sophistication. The owners of the Boston club could see no more reason for keeping Jake Stahl than for treasuring the chopped-up tickets of the world's series games he won for them a few short months ago.

SPEAKING OF ETHICS, it is only about sixty hours ago that Ban Johnson and President McAleer solemnly avowed that there was not the slightest chance that Stahl would be ousted from the leadership of the world's champions.

THE CHIEF OBJECTION of the magnates to Ty Cobb is that he does not confine his running wild to the bases only.

NEXT EVENT AT DROME WILL BE 26-MILE RACE

THERE was excitement a plenty, all right, at the Atlanta Motordrome last night. But it isn't a simmering circumstance to what will be uncorked Tuesday night in the first Motordrome Marathon ever held in the Dixie States.

This race will go the full 26 miles, which makes it nearly four times as long as any race ever held thus far in Atlanta. Ten riders will start. You can readily realize the possibilities.

The racing last night had whiskers on it.

McNeil had his J. A. P. running like a real motorcycle and he trimmed Richards in the Motordrome Purse in a thrilling contest. In the Atlanta Sweepstakes Richards reversed the decision. The invitation race went to Henry Lewis. In the Handicap Renel one of the men with a lap handicap finished first.

The summary:

MOTORDROME PURSE.

(Heats and Final, Two Miles.)

First Heat—Georges Renel, Billy Shields and Morty Graves; time, 1:28 2-5.

Second Heat—Jock McNeil, George Lockner and Henry Lewis; time, 1:26.

Third Heat—"Tex" Richards, Harry Schwartz, Harry Glenn and Freddie Luther; time, 1:29 4-5.

Final—McNeil, Richards, Renel and Lockner; time, 1:27 2-5.

who was forced out by engine trouble.

ATLANTA SWEEPSTAKES.

(Heats, 2 Miles; Final, 3 Miles.)

First Heat—McNeil, Schwartz, Luther and Lewis; time, 1:28.

Second Heat—Richards, Graves and Renel; time, 1:30.

Third Heat—Shields, Lockner and Glenn; time, 1:28.

Final—Richards, McNeil, Shields and Schwartz; time, 2:05.

INVITATION.

(Three Miles.)

Lewis, Graves and Luther; time, 2:13 3-5.

FOUR-MILE HANDICAP.

Renel, Shields, Lockner and McNeil; time, 2:55. The first three had a one-lap advantage over the Scotch rider and also over "Tex" Richards, who was forced out by engine trouble

NO MATCHES FOR SAMMY.

BASEBALL CONTRACTS.

The word "contract" is derived from the Attic verb "con," meaning to heave the bull. The other half of the word was thrown in merely to disguise its real meaning.

A baseball contract is an agreement, duly signed and witnessed, whereby a helpless youth gives up his right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness until death do us part, or words to that effect. He does this voluntarily, even as the wayfarer gives up his goods and chattels to a perfect stranger who places the muzzle of a gatling gun athwart his heaving bosom.

A youth who has signed a baseball contract is perfectly free to do anything he likes. Players are also free to resign whenever he pleases, but resigning is not popular among athletes, owing to the general prejudice against starving to death.

Under the present system of peonage a ball player is fully as important as an insect. In some instances, as in the case of Tyrus R. Cobb, the insect turns out to be a little busy bee, improving the shining hour, and the magnate gets stung. These magnates never seem to get over the habit of approaching a bee at the wrong end.

The life of the athlete is a merry one. He is wafted hither and yon in cool and refreshing sleeping cars and given free bed and fodder, even as the noble truck horse.

And when he fails to draw the requisite amount of kale at the gate he is handed a swift kick and headed in the direction of the boneyard. It is then, and not until then, that his contract becomes valuable, for, if he grows hungry he has the privilege of eating it.

Well might the athlete sing this national anthem:

My country, 'tis of thee,
Sweet land of liberty
(So it is said.)
Land where I sign to play
My youthful life away
Forever and a day
To earn my bread!

Land where magnates stand
Together hand in hand
And thus repeat:
"You low-browed gents are free
To work for none but me,
Unless you do, by gee,
You do not eat!"

While we have the profoundest respect for the power of the law, we fear that in order to separate the Cub owner from that $3,000 Artie Hofman will have to call in the aid of a jimmy.

Fielder Jones is one of the few men who can burst into print by offering himself a $25,000 job and then refusing it.

We all have something for which we may be thankful. For instance, Mr. Coulon may congratulate himself on the fact that he was not in the shoes of Mr. Ledoux.

Mr. McAleer is willing to concede that Jake Stahl is the greatest baseball manager in the banking business.

While there is a controversy in the East over Sunday baseball, it is safe to say that neither St. Louis team is in danger of being found guilty of playing ball on Sunday—or on week-days.

Although these baseball dedications are becoming tiresome, the public would gather in vast numbers to dedicate the execution of a few popcorn merchants.

STEIN SONG.

Oh, it's always wet weather
When club owners get together,
(Etc.)

Aside from taking money from a blind man, it is hard to think of a more cruel and unusual act than protesting a game against Frank Chance.

Tom Lynch arises to remark that he thinks well of his umpires. The amazing part of it is that he has seen them at work.

SOMETHING ELSE AGAIN.

Old King Cole is a wonderful soul
His work is a perfect dream.
He makes them whiff till their arms are stiff—
But not on a big league now.

Hub Perdue Has Won 11; Lost 7

Keeping Braves Out of Cellar

ALTHOUGH with a club that is now in sixth place, a good many points under the .500 mark, Hub Perdue, the former Nashville hurler, now with the Boston Braves, has won 11 and lost only 7 games this season. That's a percentage of .632 and is about 200 points ahead of that of his team.

The right-hander has won his last six contests, and has been returned the winner in nine of his last ten starts. That's a pretty good record for any pitcher, and it's no wonder that Johnny McGraw, of the Giants, was so anxious to get the big right-hander.

Perdue has been with the Braves a good many seasons, but it looks as if this would be the first time in his big league career that he will finish above the .500 mark. In order to do this, though, he must keep on pitching the kind of ball he has so far this campaign.

He Is a Giant Tamer.

Probably this is another reason that McGraw would like to get Perdue. Hub has faced the Giants four times this season. He has pitched twenty innings against the National League leaders, and in that time they have counted only seven tallies off him, while he owns two wins over them, and has not been beaten.

Winning six straight, the Braves' right-hander beat the Giants, Phillies, Cardinals, Pirates and the Superbas twice. He has been hit hard in a few of the games, but his teammates always came to the rescue and made more tallies than the other fellows could get off him.

Although he has won eleven and lost only six, Perdue has been hurling none too good ball. He has pitched 134 1-3 innings this campaign and in that time 63 tallies have been scored off him, while the opposition has batted his benders to places unoccupied 126 times. In other words, two hits off him have brought two tallies.

Keeps Team Above Bottom.

The best game Perdue has pitched was his first of the season, when, on the opening day of the National League season, he shut out the Giants, allowing them only two bingles. He has hurled only two shutouts this season, the other coming against the Pirates, who he let down with four bingles.

Perdue has been working in his regular turn for the Braves this year and it has been his good work that has kept the team from the bottom.

The only teams to beat him this season were the Cardinals, Cubs, Phillies and Superbas. The Cards and Phillies each own two wins over him. Perdue has beaten every club in the league with the exception of the Cubs. His record for the campaign follows:

RIVERS WANTS ANOTHER CRACK AT CHAMPIONSHIP

LOS ANGELES, July 19.—Joe Rivers, the Mexican lightweight, is today anxious to redeem himself in the eyes of the sporting public. Many fans accused Rivers of quitting in his recent fight with Ritchie, and the Mexican is willing to mingle with the champion again in order to wipe out the sting of ridicule.

Rivers will post $5,000 to go as a side bet if Ritchie will agree to battle within three months.

HUSTLING MARKS LAST DAY FOR EXTRA VOTES

Pony Man Says Bonus Doubles Power of Subscriptions—Competitors Urged to Utmost.

Saturday night the special bonus vote offer for pony contestants striving for The Georgian and American prizes comes to a close. Reports show some great hustling is being done.

As has been explained, liberal allowances of extra votes will be made for every club of $35, $25 or $15 paid in for subscriptions. In most cases these bonuses are so liberal as almost to double the regular voting strength of that amount of subscriptions.

"Think of it!" said the contest manager. "Voting power of subscriptions just doubled! Why, if I were a contestant I'd stir heaven and earth to make up a club, and when that had been accomplished I'd stir things up again to get another club. Every contestant ought to turn in at least one $35 club a day, and should try to get two. Then if he falls short of two $35 clubs he can undoubtedly turn in a $35 club and a $25 club. And that means a good bunch of votes."

"They can't keep me from it," said one of the hardest workers."

He means it, too! No acquaintance of his has been left unsolicited. So earnest is he in his desire to win one of the ponies that he is making the work almost his sole business.

This is the day of Miss Robert Harbour's birthday party. Many of her guests have told her they intend giving subscriptions to The Georgian and American as remembrances of her fifth anniversary. The celebration is at 340 Ponce DeLeon avenue.

SIDELIGHTS ON POLITICS

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

That the first contested appointment coming up for Governor Slaton's consideration should have been decided in favor of a Hoke Smith man—to use that ancient and honorable term in differentiating him from the other variety in Georgia—may be accepted, in all probability, as the first bit of evidence that Governor Slaton meant exactly what he said when he stated that he hoped to be, and would try to be, a Governor not of any faction in Georgia, but of all the people.

The Governor on Friday appointed Miller S. Bell, of Milledgeville, trustee of the Georgia Normal and Industrial School, situated there, notwithstanding the fact that Mr. Bell has been an adherent of the Smith factional end of Georgia politics in the past rather than of the Brown end.

There is no question whatever about the entire fitness of Mr. Bell for the position. Governor Slaton might have searched the State for months and not found a better man for the assignment.

These places on the boards of trustees of the State institutions—particularly the Georgia Normal and Industrial School—are considered positions of great honor and trust and are conferred upon the very best men that may be found. For that reason, while they are not sought with that degree of fervor characterizing the usual effort for office, they rarely are declined, and frequently there are warm contests for the same.

Mr. Bell, a Smith man, was aggressively backed by other Smith men before Governor Slaton. His opponent, a good man of the Brown persuasion, was pressed quite as aggressively by other Brown men.

The Governor, in this his first contested case, thought the Smith man the better fitted, for one reason and another, for the position, and the appointment was made accordingly.

And that looks like a fair and square beginning in the line of letting fitness and not faction control in the executive office under the new Governor.

"I wish," said Speaker Burwell today, "I had one thousand pages' jobs to give out.

"There are so many worthy and splendid young boys who come to me for appointments, and the number of appointments I have is so small that it is a continuous matter of embarrassment and regret to me that I am unable to gratify the very great majority of applicants.

"The pages of the House are mainly young fellows, and the experience they get during the sessions is very useful and well worth while to them. I wish I could give every boy who applies to me a job—but, of course, I cannot do that."

Senator McNeil, of Bibb County, is a very graceful speaker, and one of the substantial men of the Senate.

Not only that, he also is one of the best dressed men in either House. He effects very light clothing, both as to texture and color, and always looks as fresh and cool as one possibly may in such sizzling weather as that of late.

"If I could keep as cool as McNeil always looks," said Senator Parrish to-day, "I would be mighty happy, I tell you. But I fear no man can be as cool nowadays as McNeil seems to be eternally."

Governor Slaton was a very busy man all day Friday.

During his day or so absence in Brunswick, a very heavy mail piled up in the executive office, which had to be disposed of yesterday.

The Governor is more or less methodical and always tries—and usually succeeds—to get to-day's mail answered and put in charge of "Uncle Sam" to-day.

The proposed creation of the grand young county of Warner, to be whacked out of Talbot, Meriwether and Harris, has moved the poets of that vicinity to do their very worst.

Judge Henry Revill, editor of The Meriwether Vindicator, is very vehemently opposed to the new county of Warner, particularly in that it would cut pretty far into historic old Meriwether if set up.

A poet of Warner, viewing Judge Revill with evident and pronounced alarm, proposed over the initials C. M. W., recently this dainty quatrain in his honor's honor, the which has been published from one end of the new county to the other:

"Here's to the new county of Warner!
So good-bye to Greenville and Judge Revill.
When we get our new county and courthouse
They can go to the d——l."

The trouble about this, of course, is that few people will believe a person so whole-souled, companionable, good natured and altogether delightful as Judge Henry Revill ever will go to any such person, thing or state of mind as this poet suggests.

Unless the Legislature revoke the dies non declared Saturday, it will adjourn on Thursday, August 14. That will be the final day of the constitutionally limited 50.

Dies non has been declared in the past, time and again, only to be revoked before the end of the session. The great trouble about a dies non, of course, is that the members receive no pay for that day whatever, and it is consequently a dead expense to them. However, a day gets to be a mighty precious thing as the session draws near its end, and the one dies non declared this session likely will stay put.

Although there remain only three weeks ahead of the Legislature, there yet is no talk of afternoon or evening sessions. The afternoons are needed so badly for committee meetings that they can not be spared.

Before the end of the session, however, both afternoon and evening sessions will be held.

Second Georgia Men Enjoy Island Camp

ST. SIMONS ISLAND, July 19.—Routine duties began this morning in the Second Georgia Infantry camp, following the tedious work Friday of pitching tents after making the transfer on lighters from Brunswick. A dip in the surf just before supper and a dance at night dispelled their gloom. Strict regulations are maintained to prevent accidents in the surf.

Under Captain J. M. Kimbrough, companies are consolidated to full war strength of 108 men each, and officers are required to drill under as near actual war conditions as possible. These drills are preliminary to the maneuvers to take place next week.

NEW ORLEANS, July 19.—Hayward Clark: Reliable Texas advices promise abundant early cotton in four weeks, therefore, bull interests are concentrating their efforts to advance the market in the next two weeks before the supply of new cotton checks or destroys their control. Texas advices say dry spell is most favorable. The idea of damaging drouth is manufactured in New York.

The weather map shows part cloudy in lower Central belt; Tennessee and Florida no rain. High temperatures in several districts in Central and Eastern belts. Normal temperatures in Texas and Oklahoma. Indications are for cooler weather in Northwestern quarter, with probably some showers in Oklahoma and West Texas. Cooler also in the Central belt, but continued fair and warm in the Atlantics.

Hester's Weekly Cotton Statistics

Secretary Hester's weekly New Orleans Cotton Exchange statement of the movement of cotton, issued before the close of business Friday, shows an increase in the movement into sight compared with the seven days ending this date last year in round numbers 7,000, an increase over the same days year before last of 19,000, and a decrease under the same time in 1910 of 14,000.

For the eighteen days of July, the totals show an increase over last year of 8,000, an increase over the same period year before last of 42,000, and an increase over the same time in 1910 of 6,000.

For the 321 days of the season that have elapsed the aggregate is behind the 321 days of last year 2,177,000, and ahead of the same days year before last 1,782,000 and ahead of 1910 3,252,000.

The amount brought into sight during the past week has been 32,951 bales, against 25,460 for the seven days ending this date last year, 13,704 year before last and 46,472 same time in 1910; and for the eighteen days of July it has been 79,798, against 71,329 last year, 57,660 year before last and 73,312 same time in 1910.

The movement since September 1 shows receipts at all United States ports 9,757,710, against 11,911,989 last year, 8,537,708 year before last, and 7,252,542 same time in 1910. Overland across the Mississippi, Ohio and Potomac Rivers to Northern mills and Canada 9,736,635, against 1,253,179 last year, 920,929 year before last and 950,056 same time in 1910; interior stocks in excess of those held at the close of the commercial year 73,703, against 31,860 last year, 54,789 year before last and 1,057 same time in 1910; Southern mill takings 2,-062,000, against 2,447,426 last year, 2,-133,496 year before last, and 2,141,701 same time in 1910.

These make the total movement for the 321 days of the season from September 1 to date 13,476,141, against 15,644,-454 last year, 11,684,931 year before last and 10,215,356 same time in 1910.

Foreign exports for the week have been 28,361, against 31,953 last year, making the total thus far for the season 8,402,628, against 10,324,465 last year, a decrease of 1,922,237.

Southern mills takings and Canada during the past seven days show an increase of 3,031, as compared with the corresponding period last year, and their total takings since September 1 have decreased 81,423. The total takings of American mills, North, South and Canada thus far for the season have been 5,087,219, against 5,220,702 last year. These include 2,345,437 by Northern spinners, against 2,726,859.

Stocks at the seaboard and the 29 leading Southern interior centers have decreased during the week 40,409 bales, against a decrease during the corresponding period last season of 47,521 and are now 38,022 smaller than at this date in 1912.

Including stocks left over at ports and interior towns from the last crop and the number of bales brought into sight thus far from the new crop, the supply to date is 13,831,854, against 15,-931,428 for the same period last year.

World's Visible Supply.

The world's visible supply of cotton shows a decrease for the week just closed of 173,539, a decrease of 147,782 last year and a decrease of 128,526 year before last.

The total visible is 2,921,387, against 3,094,926 last week, 2,828,787 last year and 4,958,768 year before last. Of this the total of American cotton is 1,582,-387, against 1,741,926 last week, 1,580,787 last year and 1,904,768 year before last, and of all other kinds, including Egypt, Brazil, India, etc., 1,339,000, against 1,-353,000 last week, 948,000 last year and 954,000 year before last.

The total world's visible supply of cotton, as above, shows decrease as compared with last week of 173,539, an increase compared with last year of 92,-600, and an increase compared with year before last of 962,619.

Of the world's visible supply of cotton, as above, there is now afloat and held in Great Britain and continental Europe 1,645,000, against 1,815,000 last year and 1,126,000 year before last; in Egypt 101,000, against 70,000 last year and 79,000 year before last; and in the United States 241,000, against 376,000 last year and 244,000 year before last.

World's Spinners' Takings.

This week 193,000 this year, against 163,000 last year, 132,000 year before last.

Total since September 1, this year, 13,237,000, against 14,551,000 last year, and 11,458,000 the year before.

Of this Northern spinners and Canada took 2,345,000 bales this year, against 2,727,000 last year, and 2,062,000 the year before; Southern spinners 2,742,000, against 2,494,000 last year, and 2,228,000 the year before; and foreign spinners 8,150,000, against 9,330,000 last year, and 7,168,000 the year before.

COTTON REGAINS INITIAL DECLINE

NEW YORK, July 19.—Weather conditions had a strong bearing on the cotton market at the opening to-day, and, except for a decline of 3 points in July and August unchanged, the list ruled 1 to 4 points higher. Cables were poor. According to private advices cables were affected by unloading. There was considerable profit-taking at the early advance and eventually prices fell almost to last night's final.

Although trading was very light after the call the market developed a firm tone, through week-end short covering and good buying by the larger spot houses. High temperatures over the belt were the principal cause for the buying, there was talk of hot winds increasing uneasiness of bears, who were predicting a lower market on reports to the effect that temperatures were lower in the Northwest. Later Dallas, Tex., wired that the crop was deteriorating by shedding and boll weevils were damaging the plants considerably.

At the close the market was firm with prices at a net gain of 1 to 8 points from the final quotations of Friday.

GAINS AND LOSSES IN STOCKS BALANCE

California Petroleum Makes New Low Record at Opening, Later It Gains Fractionally.

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, July 19.—California Petroleum made a new low record at the opening of the stock market today, declining 1 point to 19. Later it rallied fractionally, but not sufficiently to be of any importance. The list showed irregularity, the gains and losses being pretty evenly divided.

Amalgamated Copper opened unchanged, then lost a half. Union Pacific, after opening unchanged, shaded fractionally. United States Steel common failed to respond to its strength in the London market. It opened 1-8 up, but soon lost this gain and scored a net decline of 1-4. Lehigh Valley began 1-4 higher, then lost its gain. Canadian Pacific was 1-2 off. Among the gains were Southern Pacific, 1-8; New York, New Haven and Hartford, 2; Mexican Petroleum, 1-8; Great Northern preferred, 1-8; American Smelting, 3-8, and Atchison, 1-4.

Southern Pacific soon lost its gain and went to 92 3-8 for a net loss of 3-8.

New York, New Haven and Hartford showed a continuation of the strength which has manifested itself since Charles S. Mellen resigned as president.

At the end of half an hour the list was weak.

The curb was quiet. Americans in London were steady, with Steel in demand. Canadian Pacific in London was up.

BAR SILVER.

LONDON, July 19.—Bar silver steady at 27¼d.

Bullish Circular of B. W. Snow Causes Fractional Advance in Corn and Oats.

CHICAGO, July 19.—Wheat showed early losses of ⅛ to ⅜ on favorable weather throughout the winter and spring wheat belt and the desire on the part of scattered longs to dispose of their holdings over Sunday. Northwestern receipts were smaller than a year ago, where Winnipeg were large.

Corn was ½ to ¾c lower. Longs were sellers.

Oats were off ¼ to ⅜c.

Provisions were lower.

HOG RECEIPTS LARGE.

CHICAGO, July 19.—Omaha reported 16,000 hogs and Sioux City 8,500 to-day. A big week-end run at "the river" usually means easy picking here on Monday. Light shipping grades were strong to 5c higher, 9.65 being bid for seven sorts. Other grades held about steady. A spread of 9.15@9.50 took the bulk.

Steer trade closed steady, but the butcher market was slumpy and the worst case of demoralization this season was reported in the sheep houses.

BANKRUPT SALE.

In Re: Horine Development Company, Bankrupt.

Pursuant to an order passed on July 2, 1913, by the Hon. P. H. Adams, a Referee in Bankruptcy for the United States District Court for the Northern District of Georgia, the undersigned, as Trustee, will sell before the Court House door of Walker County, Georgia, in the town of LaFayette, Ga., on the 5th day of August, 1913, between the hours of 11 a. m. and 2 p. m. o'clock, the following described assets, belonging to said bankrupt estate, consisting of realty and personalty, on the terms stated hereinafter. Said property to be sold as an entirety. The following described real estate in Walker County, Georgia, to-wit:

All of Land Lot 284, containing 160 acres, more or less; 53 acres more or less of Land Lot 285, said tract bounded by the cliff of the mountain until said cliff strikes the road across Dug Gap, thence with said road to the west line of said lot, being all of said lot south and west of said cliff and road as described in deed from W. N. Carmony to D. W. Lawrence, dated September 11, 1889; all of Land Lot 292, except that part of said lot conveyed to Henrietta Woods by J. E. Shaw; 53 1-3 acres, more or less, in the northern part of Land Lot 293, and also all that part of Land Lot 293, lying west of the Chattanooga Southern Railroad Company's tracks, purchased by John H. Hill from J. F. Andrews, and by J. F. Andrews from D. W. Lawrence; all of Land Lot 320, lying west of the Chattanooga Southern Railroad Company's tracks, containing 50 acres, more or less; all of Land Lot 321, except two (2) acres lying on the east side of said Land Lot 321, known as the School House property, and one-fourth (¼) of an acre, more or less, on the east side of said lot enclosed and used as a cemetery, and two (2) acres and a fraction where the barn and horse lot is, the line running west to the west bank of a deep gulley, thence following the gulley or ditch to the original line. All of the aforesaid described land being in the eighth (8th) District and fourth (4th) Section of said Walker County, Georgia.

Also the following lots and parcels of land in the seventh (7th) District and Fourth (4th) Section of said Walker County, Georgia, being all of Land Lots Three (3), Four (4) and Five (5), lying west of the Chattanooga Southern Railroad Company's tracks, except so much of said lots as were formerly owned by W. N. and J. H. Herndon and Theodore Parker; also Land Lots Thirty-four (34), Thirty-eight (38) and Thirty-nine (39); and all that part of Land Lots Thirty-three (33), Sixty-nine (69) and Seventy (70), lying west of the Chattanooga Southern Railroad Company's tracks. The property above described containing One Thousand Five Hundred and Sixty-three (1,563) acres, more or less, and being the same property described in a bond for title between John H. Hill and E. M. Horine, dated September 11, 1911, and recorded in Deed Book 24, on page 457, in the office of the Clerk of the Superior Court of Walker County, Georgia.

Also the following tracts or parcels of land described as follows: Land Lots One (1), Two (2) and Thirty-five (35), in the Seventh (7th) District and Fourth (4th) Section of said Walker County, Georgia; also lot of land No. 323, and one hundred and forty (140) acres, more or less, of Land Lot 324, it being all of said lot, except about twenty (20) acres lying on the branch in the west of said lot; also all of Land Lot No. 322, except twenty (20) acres, lying in the southwest corner of said land lot, said twenty (20) acres being now owned by O. T. and W. C. Andrews; also one hundred and forty (140) acres, more or less, of Land Lot No. 290, it being all of said land lot, except twenty (20) acres lying in the northwest corner of said lot; also twenty (20) acres, more or less, lying in the northwest corner of Land Lot No. 291; all being in the Eighth (8th) District and Fourth (4th) Section of said Walker County Georgia. The property described in this paragraph containing One Thousand Two Hundred (1,200) acres, more or less, and being the same property described in a certain bond for title, dated September 11, 1911, and recorded in Deed Book 24, on page 459, in the office of the Clerk of the Superior Court of Walker County, Georgia.

All of the above and foregoing described lands subject to certain reservations, as shown in the conveyance made to E. M. Horine by John H. Hill by deed dated the 17th day of August, 1912, and recorded in the office of the Clerk of Superior Court of Walker County, Georgia, on the 21st day of August, 1912, in Book of Deeds 25, on pages 511 et. seq.

Also, the following tracts and parcels of land, lying and being in Walker County, Georgia, and more particularly described as follows:

Such checks so deposited with the trustee shall be delivered to him, as a pledge that such bidder will make good his bid in the event of its acceptance. The deposit made by the successful bidder will be applied on account of the purchase price. In the event the bidder shall fail, after acceptance of said bid, to comply with the requirements of his said bid, then such amount so deposited shall be forfeited as a penalty for such failure. The purchaser or purchasers on the confirmation of the sale by the court shall pay in cash such further sum on account of the purchase price as the court may direct and as may be necessary to satisfy the claims of creditors whose claims shall have been or may hereafter be allowed by the court. So much of the purchase price as shall not be required to be paid in cash may be satisfied by the purchaser turning in and applying to the payment of the residue of his bid, in whole or in part, any claim against the bankrupt estate which has been or which may hereafter be allowed as a provable claim, and that upon such claims so turned in as aforesaid, the purchaser shall be credited on his bid with such sum as would have been paid on account of such claim out of the net proceeds of sale, if the whole amount of the purchase price were to be paid in cash.

The court reserves the right to order a resale, and to resell the property upon such notice as it might direct, at the risk and the cost of the purchaser thereof, in case such purchaser shall fail or omit to make any payment on account of the purchase price pursuant to an order of court requiring such payment.

The court may reject any bid and may retake and resell the property, if the court shall deem such bid inadequate, or upon the failure of the purchaser to comply with the terms of sale. The sale shall be confirmed by the court.

Full information and property can be seen upon application to undersigned.

POULTRY, PET AND LIVE STOCK

Read With Care; Facts to Know

Each One Means Success in Handling Your Fowls.

The decaying carcass of one dead fowl will cause you enough trouble in the shape of cholera or limberneck to make you wish you had never seen a chicken. Avoid all this trouble by looking after the little things about the poultry yards and runs. Clean up the premises. Many a thing in the shape of filth can be endured in cold weather that will not do at all when the weather gets hot.

Never throw soft feed upon the ground to be trampled under foot and become sour and filthy, to say nothing of the waste.

When you see the setting hen inclined to stand up on her nest, you can just bet your best money that she is covered with mites, and the nest, too, has a full supply. A good plan is to investigate all the setters a number of times during the incubating period in order to get rid of the mites before they get the best of you and the hen, too.

During the hot, dry months it is a good plan to set hens upon the ground, or, if this can not be done conveniently, cover the bottom of the nest with a piece of damp sod, upon which place the nesting material. At this season, when everything is so dry, and the air has so little moisture in it, good eggs often fail to hatch on account of this lack of moisture. This is why one can help matters along so by the use of sod in the nest. It can be kept damp by pouring water over it about once a week.

No code or set rules can be secured that will fit your place well enough for you to adopt them verbatim. Conditions vary so much that the best thing to do is to accept any good thing that has been satisfactorily worked out, adapting it to your own conditions and surroundings. This applies in all branches of the poultry business.

Whitewash is a good thing about the poultry yards and houses. Whitewash everything but your methods, let them stand for just what they are worth. If you are not doing all you should or can to make your business a success, do not whitewash it by trying to make others believe, and yourself as well, that you are doing great things.

And still the question comes, which is the best breed for me to adopt that I may make a success in the poultry business? It depends very much upon which plan you prefer to pursue. Whether you want to raise broilers alone or a combination of broilers and egg production, or stock strictly for an egg farm. For broilers or broilers and eggs, the American breeds, such as the Plymouth Rock, Wyandottes and Rhode Island Reds, are the best that can be obtained and will not disappoint. For stocking an egg farm where large numbers are kept, the Leghorn—White or Brown—with the preference rather in favor of the Whites, are used most extensively with the greatest success. Black Minorcas do not seem to thrive so well as the Leghorns, when kept in large numbers, but, as they lay a very large egg, they are very satisfactory to breed to keep for eggs for family supply.

Take care of the poultry house droppings; it is worth money to you as a fertilizer. We would advise a roomy compost pen, under cover, where the droppings can be kept and mixed with leaves or soil as it is thrown in. If you have not shed suitable for such a pen, set four posts at a suitable distance to support a cheap board or tarred paper roof. If you have never properly cared for them before you will be surprised how much valuable fertilizing material you will secure from a hundred hens. If you are arranging for new poultry yards, locate them permanently, and in the fall, set them with fruit trees—plums, pears, etc. Poultry and fruit of these kinds seem to work hand in hand. The trees will furnish shade for the chickens, while the chickens will gather the insects which ordinarily injure the fruit.

Feed your fowls judiciously that they may not eat up all the profits. Feed them enough, but do not allow the feed to be wasted. Fowls, when gorged with food, will not lay as well as those that have just enough to make them active and healthy. Cutting the corners is where the profit comes in, as a rule.

Do not go to killing off all your hens that do not lay up to the 250-a-year standard. Work off as high an average in your flock as you can, but do not insist upon the impossible. You read a good deal about the wonderful record of some individual hen has made, but the money-makers are the good, all-around, average flocks, giving us about 150 eggs to the hen. Let the good work go on.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Brown Estate Lots Are Sold by Foster

Frontage of 800 Feet Changes Hands. Apartment Encroachment—Realty Election—Cash Sales.

Certain properties in the estate of the late Julius L. Brown are gradually being disposed of through the administrator, ex-Governor Joseph M. Brown, and Atlanta real estate agents. Some time ago a tract was sold on Decatur street, semi-central property, at a good price, and the Julius Brown home on Washington street was put on the market.

The latest sale is of fifteen vacant lots fronting 800 feet on Little and Crew streets to a client of the Foster & Robson Agency, and of an adjoining lot for the Exchange Bank to Victor L. Smith. The prices are withheld. The sales were made by W. A. Foster, of the above agency.

The Joseph E. Brown property near the Soldiers' Home has been placed with an agency for subdivision.

Lots of Cash for Property.

Cash sales are again coming to the front. Judge W. R. Hammond has sold to Edward England through I. W. Harrell, of the George P. Moore Agency, the two-story frame house at No. 218 North Jackson street, between Adams street and East avenue, for $6,600 cash. This property is 55 by 200 feet and is on the north side of the street. Mr. England will make his home there.

Paul Nuckols has sold to Mrs. S. W. Goode a parcel on Auburn avenue just east of Piedmont, 25 by 112 feet, for $11,000 cash. The transaction was handled through A. S. Hook, of the Foster & Robson Agency. The property is improved with a two-story brick building.

Encroachment of Building.

An encroachment of four inches on the city's sidewalk by the Ponce DeLeon apartments at the southeast corner of Peachtree and Ponce DeLeon avenue has been reported to Building Inspector Hays by Assistant Inspector C. J. Bowen, and the matter will be taken before the City Council.

Frontage at this point is worth about $1,200 a foot. An effort was made to widen Peachtree here, it will be recalled, before the apartments were started, but the project fell through.

Ansley Park Car Line.

A quiet movement has been on foot for several weeks to get a car line through Ansley Park, and those who are interested in the project are hoping for success. The idea is to extend the Piedmont avenue line, which stops just a few hundred yards south of the city limits, through to Polo drive, over that thoroughfare's stone bridge and thence to Rock Springs.

The people of the Rock Springs section have been seeking a car line many months, and it seems to be simply a question of which route to choose to their neighborhood. The line, they have been assured, will be extended to Rock Springs, either through Ansley Park or by way of Piedmont avenue. Realizing what Edwin P. Ansley has done for the city, heavy owners in the Rock Springs section have felt inclined to pull for the Ansley Park route. The other way, however, would make it possible to widen Piedmont avenue.

"Ansley Park must soon have its car line," declared a well-known real estate dealer. "There are too many nickels for the street car company."

Sell Property for Taxes.

People who are accustomed to hunt real estate bargains in Atlanta will soon find their opportunity, although there won't be any chance to buy central or semi-central property at a reduction. Charles W. Smith, chairman of the Council Tax Committee, has discovered that the city holds overdue tax liens against $41,000 worth of property, mostly vacant lots, and he has ordered that they be sold. The date and the place of the sale will be announced later. Some of the property is improved with small buildings.

To Discuss Realty Loans.

An important meeting of the members of the Atlanta Real Estate Board will be held Tuesday afternoon at 3 o'clock in room 314 of the State Capitol to urge the passage of the sinking fund investment bill, which provides for investing State reserve funds in real estate as a first lien as well as in bonds.

On the committee to see the proper authorities about this legislation are Harris G. White, president of the board; S. B. Turman, second vice president, and W. A. Foster, of the Foster & Robson Agency, and a director of the board. They will not only appear before a legislative committee, but will use every effort between now and Tuesday to get all the real estate men to attend the meeting.

Representatives Field and Smith, of DeKalb, are the authors of the bill to repeal the measure of 1910, which restricts such loans to bonds. Real estate constitutes about 69 per cent of the taxable values in Fulton County and about 54 per cent in the State, and because of this it is held that such discrimination should not exist.

Results of Realty Elections.

"There is plenty of work before the Atlanta Real Estate Board in the next year," declared Harris G. White Friday night at the Cafe Durand, in accepting the position of president to succeed Charles P. Glover. "For some time I have been in close touch with the affairs of the board, and I know what it means to run this organization. I want all of you to make suggestions and take an active interest, and we are sure to demonstrate the need for the organization."

Mr. White's talk followed an impromptu parade around the room, escorted by Mr. Glover and S. B. Turman, with the land brokers singing "He's a jolly good fellow!" and things like that. Charles P. Glover spoke briefly on the duties of the past year and predicted success under President White. A vote of thanks was given him, S. B. Turman eulogized him and the members voted thanks to all the retiring officers.

Others elected were John J. Woodside, vice president; S. B. Turman, second vice president; Van B. Smith, secretary, and H. W. Dews, treasurer.

The following six directors were elected to serve until 1914: Forrest Adair, W. A. Foster, S. L. Dallas, G. M. McKinnon, J. H. Ewing and J. W. Dobbins. The following six will serve until 1915: Charles P. Glover, A. S. Hook, Edgar Morris, T. B. Gay, A. J. West and S. E. Davidson. The following were elected to serve as the appraisement committee: R. O. Cochran, T. C. Holmes, W. L. DuPree, H. W. Dillin, Fitzhugh Knox, R. R. Otis. One more will be appointed by the president owing to the resignation of Walker Dunson.

A change in the by-laws was effected, allowing six directors to be elected each year to serve for the ensuing two years. This will allow six members of the twelve to end their terms every year, and will facilitate the work of the board.

The appraisement committee was raised from five to seven, and the board of directors from eleven to twelve.

Realty Men's Good Luck—Oil.

The Atlanta real estate fraternity has received with more than ordinary interest the news that four of its members—B. M. Grant, T. J. Cheshire, Myron Freeman and J. M. Fraser, all of the Grant Agency—have struck oil on a 160-acre tract which they bought some time ago near Oklahoma City, Okla. For a time the prospect looked hopeless, but while Mr. Grant was at Toxaway this week he received a telegram that the well was flowing 150 barrels a day. Mr. Grant and D. C. Lyle, of the Georgia Realty Company, a stockholder in the developing concern, the Huguely Company, went immediately to the scene.

Good Demand for Homes.

The demand for Atlanta homes, especially on the North Side, holds up steady. A leading real estate agency has a client, for instance, who wants to put $10,000 cash into a North Side residence. This office had a number of inquiries Saturday.

A citizen wants to exchange a piece of semi-central property within the half-mile circle for a North Side home worth $12,000 to $16,500, paying the difference.

Another agency has customers for a ten-room home that can be used for two families, and for a twelve-room home for boarding house purposes. The latter are wanted on the North Side.

Significant to people renting houses is the fact that there are very few "for rent" cards out in West End, Decatur and other suburbs.

G. T. R. Fraser's New Location.

G. T. R. Fraser, the well known real estate agent formerly located in the Y. M. C. A. Building on Auburn avenue, has moved his office to No. 406 Equitable Building. Mr. Fraser makes a specialty of East Lake lots, with which he has had much success. He was forced out of the Y. M. C. A. Building when the Chamber of Commerce took it over recently for renovation. Save Unfortunate Women and Protect Society

That a majority of unfortunate women can be saved and society protected at the same time has been demonstrated beyond the question of a doubt. Therefore, it is essential that a bill now pending in the Georgia Legislature, which has been favorably reported by the Prisons Committee, looking to the construction of a reformatory for vicious women, should become a law, and that the Appropriations Committee, to which the bill has been referred, should report favorably.

The bill calls for an appropriation of $75,000 for the construction and maintenance of the institution, which is small indeed when the welfare of society and the saving of women is taken into consideration.

An exhaustive investigation has been made in many States as to the cause of prostitution of women—low wages, insanitary conditions in factories and stores, etc., have been given as a cause in a great many instances, and a correction of these conditions has been announced as a preventive, which is well and good, but what to do with those we have already is a question that is attracting the attention of good citizens in every State in the Union.

This question has been solved to such an extent that three-fourths of the inmates of the Bedford Reformatory in New York have been saved, while only one-fourth have returned to the old life after a stay of two years in this reformatory.

This method of treating vice has proven so successful that those good men and women who have been giving of their time and money for the cause of fallen women are encouraged, and will continue the work until satisfactory results are obtained.

As to the work and results at Bedford Reformatory, Lyman Abbott writes as follows:

"When a prostitute is brought before a New York judge, he may discharge her, with or without a fine; he may send her to the workhouse for a short term—I believe three months is the maximum—or he may send her to the Bedford Reformatory. The experience of the past indicates that the deterrent power of fear is very ineffective as a cure for crime, yet something may be said for the deterrent power of fear as a preventive, if not as a cure. But a fine or three months in the workhouse has no deterrent power. When the fine is paid or the three months have expired, the girl has no option but to take to the street and resume her vicious career. No home and no factory will or indeed can take her in and give her a chance for a better life. This is just what the Bedford Reformatory does. It brings her into an atmosphere not merely of cleanliness and of industry, but of hopefulness. It puts before the girl an open door. It inspires her with courage to believe that she can enter it if she chooses to do so. It inspires that wish in her, and, by training, gives her some measure of preparation for earning an honest livelihood. While practically every girl treated by the other method goes back to prey upon the community again, the figures show that less than one-quarter of those who are discharged from the Reformatory after a two years' imprisonment resume their vicious occupation."

Is not the establishment of an institution in Georgia that has been proven a success in another State worth trying?

The time to act is NOW. The good women and men of Georgia are giving their time and money in the cause of the unfortunates. If only one-fourth of the women imprisoned there are saved, it is worth the price.

Georgia should REFORM criminals, NOT MAKE THEM.

The City

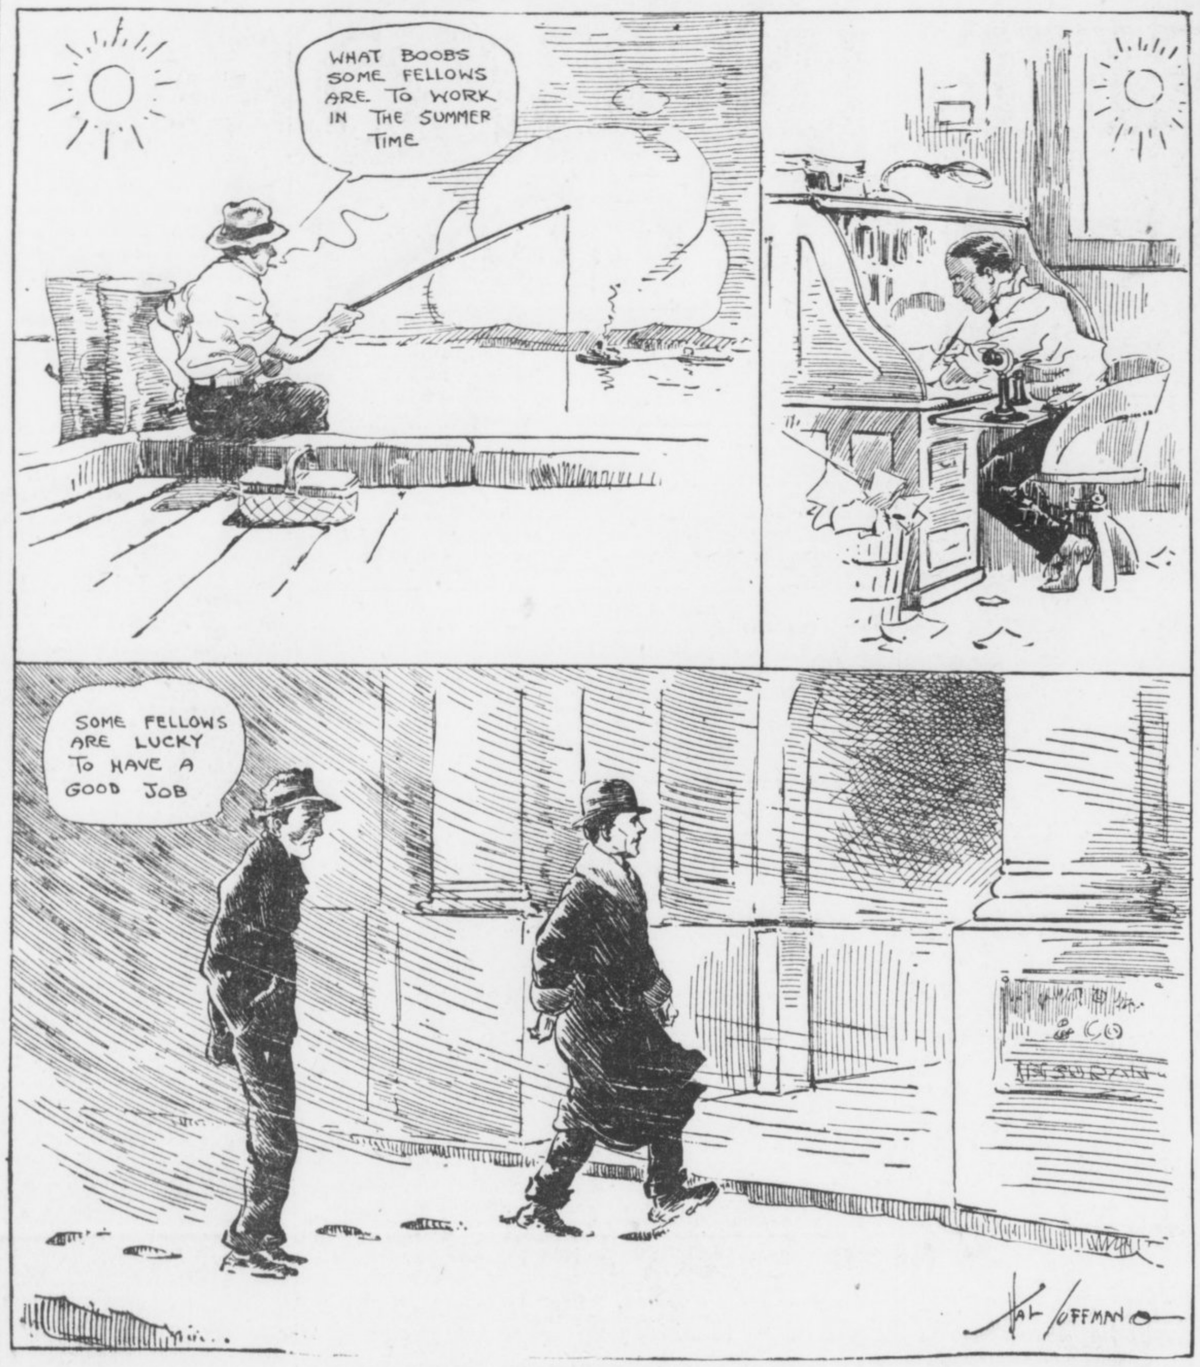
By Gordon Johnstone.

THERE'S a brave world I know called The Great Out-o'-Doors,
Where the wind and the wave lure our feet,
And the green o' the fields meets the wan, tired eyes
With the touch and the kiss o' a lost paradise;
Where the chickadee calls and the wild eagle soars,
And the lark trills his sweetest o' sweet;
But give me the city,
Its pain and its pity,
Its highways and byways o' heat.

Oh, a man may live off on a hilltop alone,
Where the days are a-wing on a song,
But he'll never sound depths that are human and deep
By running away from the herd o' the sheep,
By shutting his heart to the tear and the groan
O' the lovable suffering throng.
So give me the city,
Its grief and its pity,
Its spendthrift, its weak and its strong.

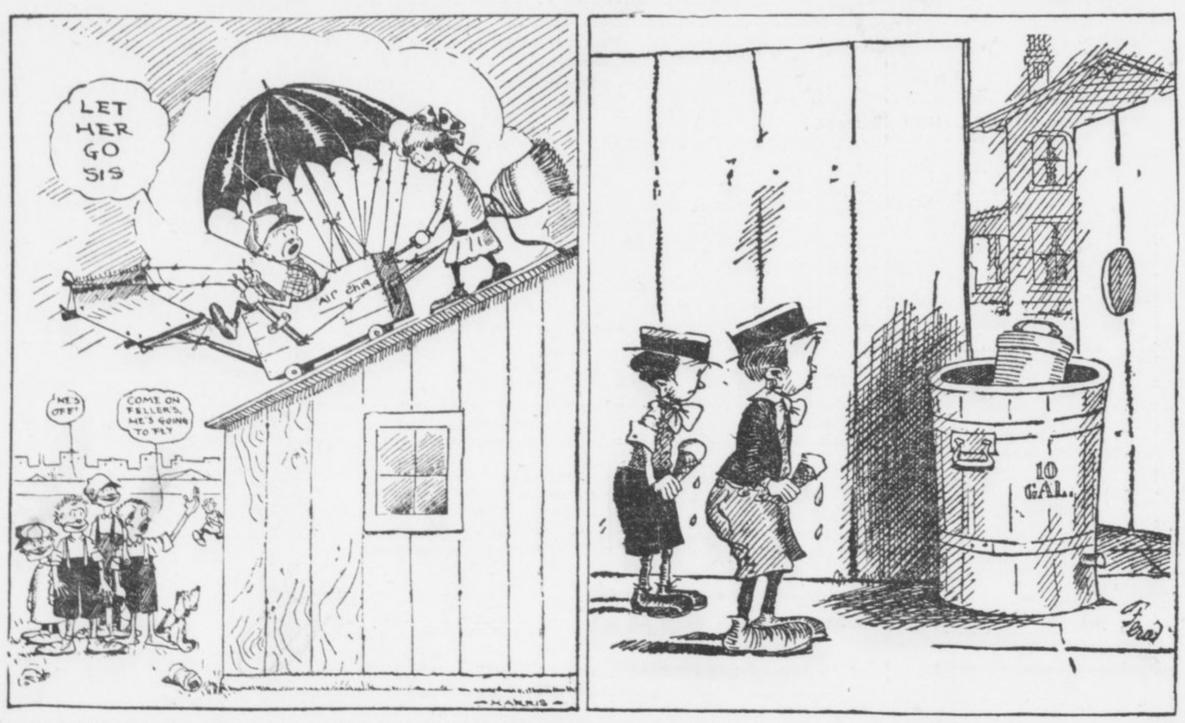
Oh, here is the Kingdom of Fair Worlds to Be
When the peace-riders come silver-shod,
For there isn't a cavil, when all's said and done,
That the Maker in making MEANT ALL TO BE ONE,
As the streams of the nations that merge in one sea
And move at the wind o' His nod.
So hail the World-City,
Its pride and its pity,
That's built on the high road o' God.

The Grasshopper and the Ant



The grasshopper, you know, sings all Summer while the ant toils away laying up a store for the Winter. When the cold pinches, the grasshopper thinks the ant lucky to have plenty of provisions. But a man should know better than to think that it's luck that keeps one in a good job.

The Young Aviator---And the Young Paupers



EDMUND BURKE

By Rev. Thomas B. Gregory

WHEN Edmund Burke died, one hundred and sixteen years ago, July 9, 1797, one of the greatest intellects and finest spirits of which the English-speaking world could boast passed out from the ways of men.

Old Dr. Sam Johnson said: "Burke is such a man that if you met him for the first time in the street, where you were stopped by a drove of oxen, and you and he stepped aside to take shelter but for five minutes, he'd talk to you in such a manner that when you parted you would say, 'This is an extraordinary man.'" When the old doctor was asked for his opinion regarding the authorship of the Letters of Junius, he declared that if Burke was not the author of the famous letters he could not guess who might be, since Burke was the only man then living in England who had the genius to write them.

Edmund Burke has often been called a paradox, a contradiction. A conservative of the Conservatives, he was at the same time an ardent progressive. A stanch champion of the ancient order, he was one of the greatest friends of the American revolt against King George. To add to the puzzling situation, while he said Godspeed to the American uprising, he emptied upon the heads of the French revolutionists the vials of his hottest wrath.

The explanation is not far to seek. Burke's ruling passion was for the thing known in these days as "Due Process of Law." Orderliness, in a word. In the American Revolution he saw nothing contrary to that idea; while the French Revolution, as it impressed Burke, was the very apotheosis of anarchy and chaos.

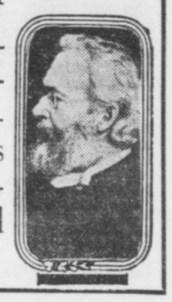
Parental Obligation

Primitive Habit of Looking on Father as Domestic Commissary Is Entirely Wrong--His Qualities and Teachings Necessary to Raise Male Child to Ideal Manhood.



Written For The Georgian

By the Rev. Dr. C. H. Parkhurst

WHAT is the extent of the parental obligation which a father owes to his children? The question deserves consideration because of its close bearing upon the purpose of domestic life, which is to produce children and make them serviceable to the interests of their times.

It has been pointed out that the terms "father" and "feeder" are but variable forms of one and the same word. So understood, the father is merely the one who provisions the family and stands to it in the relation of commissary.

In the more primitive forms of familyhood, when increasing the human breed, rather than improving it, met all recognized requirements, nothing more would naturally be demanded of the father than that the young of the family, like the young of the flock and herd, should be amply supplied with what will sustain life and promote growth. So that the faithful father would simply be he who was the attentive feeder, with no responsibility that looked beyond what the children needed as young and growing animals.

It is one of the features of more finished civilization that in some respects it continues to cherish customs and modes of thinking and feeling inherent in civilization of a more primitive type, but which we should suppose would have been outgrown and left behind with the process of time and the broadening and mellowing of sentiment.

Father as Commissary.

We have an example of this in the rather general continuance to the present time of the primitive habit of looking upon the father as the domestic commissary, and of considering that the obligations with which he has been especially charged have been fulfilled when his children have had furnished them all that is required by their creature necessities—housing, clothing and food.

He is reckoned a dutiful father if he keeps up the house and leaves it to the mother and her proxies to furnish education, morals, religion and all the finer accessories; he to take care of the child as an animal, and she to look after him as a person.

Without raising the question as to whether exclusive maternal influence will suffice for the successful upbringing of a family of girls, it is distinctly insufficient for the development of young masculine nature. There is a certain personal quality inherent in the normal man—but of which the normal woman is destitute—and without which no male child can become a perfectly constituted man; so that if he be submitted exclusively to maternal treatment, he has small chance of achieving an ideal manhood.

Of course, there are mannish women—a species of human freak with which our generation is being made painfully familiar—but freaks play no part in the economy of nature. Mannishness is a cheap counterfeit of manliness and can not render to the boy the office of masculine genuineness.

There is a certain special type of robustness and stability which the lad will gain by social contact with the father which only in rare instances will he acquire from his mother; and the unfortunate feature of our family life at present is that the father, as a rule, is so engaged and engrossed with what lies outside of the real inner life of the home that contact between father and son is reduced to a minimum.

Twofoldness of Parentage.

The twofoldness of parentage answers to the twin energies in nature by which its sterner and gentler forces combine with each other in the production of the finest forms of vegetable and animal life. The idea of duality runs through everything.

Everywhere there is the balancing and the co-operation of complementary forces.

The mother makes her contribution to the developing character of the child, a contribution full of wealth and tenderness, without which the lad, as he comes into mature years, would be destitute of charm and incapable of the finest effects of personality. But underneath the maternally conferred graces of character, and sustaining them, there requires to be a foundation made out of sterner stuff, exactly as the tree is unable to achieve the purposes of its existence by virtue of the foliage with which it is clad or the blossoms by which it is decorated, except by the solidity of its anchorage in the firm soil in which it is planted.

Family life as it is maintained in these hurried days of business engrossment is such that fathers and their boys, in hosts of cases, hardly know each other.

The withholding of paternal influence is bound to leave its mark in the one-sided development of the boy; and it does leave its mark.

Masculine Impress Necessary.

The young fellow, as he leaves the warm home nest, commits himself to flight that lacks the sustaining power which can be secured only by the impress upon him of what is definitely and distinctly masculine.

It lies in the order of nature; beauty combined with stamina, grace married into grit.

We might go on and say that boyhood, and therefore manhood, is suffering from the fact that so much of our schoolroom training is furnished by women; but that would carry us into too wide a field.

In all the serious matters of life our only safe way is to keep close to the intentions of nature. The character of the individual depends upon it and so does the quality of civilization.

MEN UNDER SCRUTINY

By THOMAS TAPPER

WHEN the wag of a Western town mailed a letter to the ten principal citizens, saying, "All is discovered," the Ten immediately disappeared and no questions asked.

More men are being watched than ever dream of it.

Not an alarming situation, either, but a hopeful one.

An employer with a grain of common sense wants to intrust his business to capable men and women. In many cases even boys and girls are included.

As no man can run a big business alone, he is forced to find those who can help him.

Necessarily they all come to be tried upon these counts:

1. Loyalty.
2. Dependability.
3. Capacity.

The last, Capacity, shows itself at once. The first morning's work makes it evident that the worker equals 100 per cent of his job or less.

But the other two, Loyalty and Dependability, are NOT to be decided upon the first day or even the first YEAR.

IT TAKES TIME to try out a man's inner character. He must be left alone to the environment and the job until they have put all sorts of tests upon him.

Then someone begins to notice and say: "Well, this man stands the strain all right. When he speaks, he speaks for us; when we want him, he is where he should be."

"If this is the case," says the head of the business, "give him a chance.

"Try him out on something hard to do.

"See if he will weaken when it is put up to him good and strong."

And so on.

So they keep after him, watching his Loyalty and Dependability. Testing it as if it were a steel beam, to find if there be a weak spot in it.

By and by someone says: "This man rings true every time you strike him."

"In that case," the Boss says, "MAKE HIM ONE OF US."

Arson and Attempt to Poison Charged to Boarder

JEALOUSY IS SAID TO BE MOTIVE

Alleged Firebug Denies Charge of Rooming House Keeper—Police Claim Love Affair.

Police investigation of the burning of the home of Mrs. A. C. Klapper, at No. 256 East Hunter street, Saturday morning, for which G. A. Vaughn, an employee of the Boston Trading Company and a roomer at the Klapper home, is held on suspicion of being the incendiary, took a new and unexpected turn Saturday afternoon.

Mrs. Klapper, when questioned by Detective Coker, declared that Vaughn tried to poison her one day last week.

"I was sick," Mrs. Klapper said, "and asked Vaughn to bring me a glass of water. He was very nervous when he brought it, and I became suspicious that something was wrong. I looked into the glass, and lying on the bottom were some white powders. I was sure they were poison, and refused to drink the water. Vaughn offered to bring me another glass, but I refused to have it.

Calls Boarder Jealous.

"I am sure Vaughn tried to poison me. He is insanely jealous of me, and he has several times threatened to hurt me and to destroy by property."

Vaughn was taken from his cell and grilled by Detective Coker and Chief of Detectives Lanford for more than an hour Saturday morning, in the hope of getting him to admit some connection with the burning of the Klapper home. He was also asked about Mrs. Klapper's assertion that he tried to poison her.

He admitted taking her the water, but denied that there were any powders in the glass.

Love Affair Alleged.

The police say that Vaughn was in love with Mrs. Klapper, and declare that she admitted that he had paid her attentions for the past year or more.

In addition to the police investigation, State Fire Marshal W. R. Joyner announced Saturday morning that he has started a probe of the fire which destroyed the roof of Mrs. Klapper's home, causing damage of $500. According to the firemen, the blaze started in a closet in Vaughn's room on the second floor.

Vaughn was charged with trying to burn the building by Mrs. Klapper. According to the story she told the police, she quarreled with Vaughn before he went to work this morning, and Vaughn made threats and then went into his room.

Calls House Over Phone.

A few minutes later, she says, he hurried downstairs and went downtown. Half an hour later he called her on the telephone and asked if everything was all right, she says, and one of the other boarders who answered the phone told him the house was on fire. Vaughn immediately left his office and rushed to the scene of the fire. Mrs. Klapper was standing near the door wringing her hands, when Vaughn appeared and started into the house. She intercepted him.

"You've burned my house!" she screamed. "I'll have you arrested."

Mrs. Klapper began struggling with Vaughn, and Call Officer Watson came up. At the request of the woman, who declared she would prefer a formal charge against him, Vaughn was arrested and taken to police headquarters.

Plaster Over Mouth In Sleep Guards Voice

SAN FRANCISCO, July 19.—A common sticking plaster placed over the mouth during sleep preserves the voice, according to Professor Robert Irving Fulton, of Wesleyan, lecturing at the University of California.

SNEEZES SHOT FROM HEAD.

NEW YORK, July 19.—Mrs. Barbara Vaughn, of this city, who was shot in the forehead 39 years ago, was seized with a violent fit of sneezing at her home and the bullet dropped out of her nose.

Two Near Death in Auto-Trolley Crash

W. E. Jones, driver of a Coca-Cola auto truck, and the motorman of a Courtland street car had a narrow escape from death Saturday morning when truck and car collided at the corner of Courtland and Pine streets. The truck escaped damage, while the front of the car was wrecked.

Both Jones and the motorman jumped for their lives when they saw a collision was unavoidable. Passengers on the car were thrown about, but no injuries were reported.

Charges have been filed against Jones for reckless driving. He will be given a hearing in Recorder's Court Monday.

30,000 Strikers in Chicago Arbitrate

CHICAGO, July 19.—The two most serious labor difficulties in Chicago this year were cleared to-day when the Building Construction Employers' Association notified the Building Trades Council that the lock-out against 30,000 union men would end Monday, and suburban street car employees went back to work, satisfied that the new syndicate would grant their demands for higher wages.

Building operations amounting to more than $40,0000,000 will be resumed Monday when the building trades lock-out ends. An agreement was signed for a permanent arbitration board.

Marshalls to Lose The 'Borrowed Baby'

WASHINGTON, July 19.—There is grief in the Marshall household and the Vice President has lost much of his accustomed cheerfulness, for the "borrowed baby," Thomas Marshall Sutherland, is going home.

The baby has been for two months the light and sunshine of the Vice Presidential apartment, but now he misses "mamma" and "mamma" misses him, so that, reluctantly, the Marshalls are going to return him to his parents, the Rev. Dr. and Mrs. A. D Sutherland, in Berkley Springs, Md.

War Chiefs Inspect Memphis Shaft Site

MEMPHIS, TENN., July 19.—Secretary of War Garrison, Major General Wood, chief of staff of the army, and Major James B. Aleshire, chief of the quartermaster's department, arrived in Memphis to-day and were met by an entertainment committee headed by General Luke E. Wright, former Secretary of War, and Mayor E. H. Crump.

They inspected the site for the statue of DeSoto and left for Little Rock, Ark.

Lad Wounded as He Robs Gum Machine

Will Davis, a 14-year-old negro, was wounded in the heel early Saturday morning when discovered by Plainclothesmen Allen and Gresham robbing a chewing gum slot machine at Houston and Hilliard streets. Two other negroes who were helping Davis escaped.

Allen and Gresham fired their pistols to half the negroes and one of the bullets struck Davis.

GRAND JURY SPLIT ON CONLEY

Public Opinion Forces Consideration of Move to Indict Conley for Phagan Slaying.

Solicitor Dorsey is fighting vigorously the movement in the Grand Jury to indict Jim Conley Monday for the murder of Mary Phagan, despite the bombardment of letters from many citizens and by the sentiment of some of its own members.

It is for the consideration of these letters and petitions, asking the reopening of the Phagan matter, that the meeting has been called.

It was in the face of Solicitor Dorsey's bitterest opposition that the meeting was called at all. Foreman Beattie issued his defi after a previous Grand Jury had been defeated in its efforts to reopen the case with a view of indicting Jim Conley and after Dorsey explicitly had expressed his strongest disapproval of such a move.

Crucial Battle Coming.

With the first skirmish won by those in favor of the indictment of Conley, the hottest battle is yet to be waged behind the closed doors of the jury room. The question first will be on whether the grand jurors consider it proper at this time to reopen the investigation whose first chapter resulted in the indictment of Leo M. Frank on the charge of slaying Mary Phagan. Solicitor Dorsey will lay before the body for the first time all of his reasons for desiring a postponement of all further investigation until after the trial of Frank.

Should the solicitor be driven back from this position by the Grand Jury again disregarding his wishes and taking up the investigation, he will be forced to take refuge in the last ditch and make his fight against the indictment of Conley.

With all the weight of evidence which has piled up against the negro, it is regarded as beyond the realm of possibilities that he could persuade the jurors to return a "no bill" against Conley on the charge of murder. Dorsey's one remaining hope at this time would be, it is said, to induce the Grand Jury to waive definite action until after the trial of Frank, when it will be in a position to say whether an indictment shall be drawn against Conley as an accessory after the fact, to which he has confessed, or as the actual murderer.

Dorsey Refuses to Comply.

The Solicitor's attitude in the matter plainly was shown by his statement when Foreman Beattie went to him Friday seeking to have him call the meeting. Dorsey flatly refused and said:

"The meeting's only purpose will be to exploit the evidence and embarrass the State, and I hope the Grand Jury when it meets will decide to leave the matter alone.

"The indictment of Conley at this

Mercury Hits 96, But Cooling Rain Is Promised City

With the thermometer at 96 at 11 o'clock Saturday morning, Atlanta is still sweltering in the hottest spell of the summer. Relief is promised Sunday, however, as the weather man states that a thundershower is due here in the early afternoon. More moderate weather will follow for several days.

The minimum temperature during Friday night was 78, which is very high for Atlanta. The mercury began to rise along with the sun, and is expected to break the summer's record of 97 by 3 o'clock.

The constant breezes keep the heat from being so severely felt, except in the downtown business sections.

Boosters to Invite Photo Men in 114

A delegation of Atlanta boosters, headed by Fred Houser, of the Atlanta Convention Bureau, will leave over the Western and Atlantic Railroad at 4:50 o'clock Saturday afternoon for Kansas City to attend the 1913 convention of the National Photographers' Association of America, which opens there July 21.

Other members of the delegation include E. H. Goodhart, president of the Ad Club; L. D. Hicks, of The Southern Ruralist, and several local photographers.

They will be joined at Chattanooga by a delegation of Chattanoogans, who are going to boost for Atlanta, and also by a number from Macon. They will be armed with souvenirs telling of the beauties of Atlanta, and will work hard to capture the 1914 convention for the Gate City.

3 Hurt in $15,000 Fire at Waycross

WAYCROSS, July 19.—Three persons were injured, one seriously, and property worth $15,000 was destroyed in an early morning fire on Elizabeth street to-day which destroyed the boarding house operated by W. A. Jones. The boarders escaped in their night clothes.

L. B. Boggs, City Building Inspector, injured a foot; A. C. Monroe, a fireman, was hit on the head by a falling timber, and F. D. Rexler was badly burned about the face and arms.

J. W. Cox, a boarder, lost a $400 diamond ring and $130 in cash. L. B. Harriell, owner of the house, estimates his loss at $5,000, with partial insurance.

American Team Wins Whack at Davis Cup

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

WIMBLEDON, ENG., July 19.—The American tennis team to-day won the right to play the English team for the Davis trophy.

After defeating the Canadians in the two single matches yesterday, Maurice McLoughlin, of San Francisco, and Harold Hackett, of New York, representing the United States, won from R. B. Powell and B. P. Schwengers, the Canadian runners-up, in the doubles to-day, the scores being 6-3, 6-3, 12-10.

Action Deferred on New Refunding Bill

Action on the bill introduced by Representative Aiken, of Brunswick, to provide for the refunding of the bonded indebtedness of municipalities was postponed when the measure was given a hearing Friday afternoon by the House Committee on Constitutional Amendments.

Judge Harry F. Dunwody, of Brunswick, appeared in favor of the bill, while Attorney John D. Little, of Atlanta, opposed it.

$12,000 Plenty for Secretary Wilson

WASHINGTON, July 19.—While Secretary of State Bryan is reported to be having a hard time to live on $12,000 a year, Secretary of Labor Wilson to-day arranged to purchase a seven-passenger touring car.

The Secretary of Labor declares he can live with ease on his salary as a Cabinet officer.

POLICE DIG INTO GAME.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, July 19.—Police dug through a two-foot wall and raided a gambling house on Woodland avenue early to-day. Six men were arrested.

U. S. CODE IS STOLEN BY MEXICO

State Secrets in Envoy Wilson's Messages to Washington Bared. Powers Recall Ministers.

WASHINGTON, July 19.—A copy of the official code of the State Department, containing information worth thousands of dollars to foreign governments, has fallen into the hands of the Mexican Administration.

It is being used to further the ends of the Huerta regime, it was asserted here to-day.

For some months State Department officials have suspected that the Government telegrams from Mexico City have been tampered with, it is declared, but this was not considered important, as all the dispatches were in code, and, therefore, theoretically illegible.

Employee First Suspected.

About three weeks ago, however, Government officials here had their first inkling that the Mexicans were obtaining the gist of the dispatches passing between the State Department and Ambassador Wilson.

At first it was suspected that an employee of the department in this city was to blame, but investigation proved this to be impossible. The telegrams were read only by three persons in Washington—the official telegrapher; Robert Rose, confidential secretary to Secretary of State Bryan, and the Secretary of State himself. All of these were above suspicion.

The agents of the almost unknown "secret service" of the State Department then were put on the trail and evidence was obtained thta the Government dispatches had been "lifted" from the wires in Mexico and decoded, the information contained therein being transmitted to President Huerta and his Cabinet.

Made International Issue.

As this information was, at times, highly uncomplimentary to the present Government in Mexico, the matter at once tok on an international aspect, and the efforts of the department's agents to discover the "leak" were redoubled, but in vain.

Every effort will be made to locate the copy of the State Department code and destroy it. It would prove of immense value if it fell into the hands of a hostile nation, as it would be impossible to print another code and to distribute it all over the world in less than six months.

Italy Orders Minister Home From Mexico City.

MEXICO CITY, July 19.—It was learned to-day that the Italian Minister to Mexico secretly left here last night for Vera Cruz. Significance is attached to his departure, as it is believed he was urgently ordered to Rome.

This action is doubly impressive on account of the fact that Francis Stronge, the British Minister, has been succeeded by another and will leave here for London in a few days.

Mexico is becoming the storm center of international diplomacy apparently because of the attitude of the United States and the condition of growing anarchy here.

Ambassador Thinks He Will Lose Post.

MEXICO CITY, July 19.—Despite the statement of United States Ambassador Wilson that he expects to return here in his official capacity following his conference at Washington, it was learned to-day that the Ambassador secretly believes his days in officialdom are numbered.

Before his departure he ordered the removal of a costly silver service and other valuables from the United States Embassy to a United States warship at Vera Cruz. The families of some of the American attaches of the embassy have been sent to Vera Cruz for safety.

Interest was aroused by the announcement that the Minister of the Interior is working up a plan to concede a big part of the State of Morelos to 50,000 Japanese colonists.

DEBS AIDS 'MAGDALEN;' REBUKES PHARISEES

HELEN COX

Socialist Leader Takes Into His Home Disgraced Daughter of a Mehtodist Minister.

TERRE HAUTE, IND., July 19.—Eugene V. Debs, the Socialist leader, has issued what he terms his "challenge to the Christianity of Terre Haute."

He has taken into his home in the Indiana city Helen Cox, the daughter of a Methodist preacher. She had eloped with a member of a prominent family who divorced her and took their child. She was arrested for immorality. Debs met her on a visit to the jail and, as an emergency probation officer, took her into his home.

"The girl has been persecuted," he announced publicly. "Will Terre Haute help her or will its organized force be used to drive her to desperation? Let Terre Haute ask 'What would Christ do? Our family has opened our home to her.

"There is but one thing remarkable about opening our home to an unfortunate woman," he said later, when his action aroused widespread comment, "and it is that any one should consider it remarkable. This fact is significant. Persecution of these unfortunate girls is the rule, and so common that it attracts no attention. Kindness is so exceptional that it provokes widespread comment.

"The sinful woman is, as a rule, not a wicked woman, but a sick and suffering woman. As to our home, its door is open to the most sinful woman that was ever cast off by the Pharisees, who denied her while profiting by her shame. We believe, my wife and I ,that we are not only our brother's keeper, but our sister's keeper as well."

Brass Band to Lure Drowsy to Church

A brass band playing in front of a church for an hour will be used Sunday by the Baptist Tabernacle to attract people to the services.

Sunday will be primary day at the Tabernacle and it has been determined to get everyone for several blocks to attend church for this occasion. The band will play with the aim of waking up everyone in that neighborhood.

Following the concert the primary day exercises will begin, being reviewed by Professor E. M. Poteat, of Furman University.

Militants Put Torch To $25,000 Mansion

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, July 19.—Militant suffragettes resumed their "votes for women" warfare to-day. A mansion at Torrance, in Lancashire, was destroyed by fire, with a loss of $25,000.

The mansion was situated near the ruins of Ballikinrain Castle, which was burned by militants recently.

Slit Skirts Only for Old Folks, Says Judge

LEXINGTON, KY., July 19.—"Grown-up folks may wear slit gowns, but the young shall not," declared Judge J. P. Scott, of the Juvenile Court, here in sending Margaret Murphy, 16, to a convent for having improper guardianship. The girl was arrested while "joy riding" with a young man. She was dressed in a smart slit gown.

SHORTAGE AT LA FAYETTE TO EXCEED $30,000

First National Closed by Order of Federal Comptroller of Currency.

WASHINGTON, July 19.—Acting Comptroller of the Currency Kane to-day announced that the First National Bank, of Lafayette, Ga., has been closed by National Bank Examiner Thomas C. Dunlap, with the authority of the board of directors, on account of a large shortage which makes the bank involvent.

Mr. Kane says he has not received a detailed report of the condition of the bank. Mr. Dunlap has been appointed receiver.

"We do not know how big the defalcation may be," said Mr. Kane, "but our preliminary examination has shown that it is not less than $30,000. This shortage has occurred since May 23, when the bank was last examined. Suspicion on the part of officers of the bank several days ago that a shortage existed caused them to call in Examiner Dunlap. Discovery of the embezzlement resulted.

"In his telegraphic advices to me Mr. Dunlap does not say to whom suspicion attaches. The last statement of the condition of the bank, issued on June 4, showed the bank to be in a proper state. The president of the bank is R. N. Dickerson, and S. A. Hunt, Jr., is cashier."

In a telegram from Mr. Dunlap Mr. Kane is advised that steps have been taken to make an arrest.

Depositors to Lose Little by Failure.

CHATTANOOGA, July 19.—Local bankers stated to-day that the liabilities of the First National Bank, of LaFayette, Ga., which was announced to-day by Acting Comptroller of Currency Kane, at Washington, to have failed, were approximately $240,000, but that depositors would be paid in full with but a slight loss to stockholders, as the assets would prove but slightly less.

An unsuccessful attempt was made this morning to obtain schedule of the liabilities and assets of the institution. The officials are extremely reticent concerning the cause of the institution's embarrassment.

Proposal to Rename Street Stirs Council

Council is being stirred by the attempt to change the name of Murphy avenue to Whitehall street. Councilman T. J. Kimbrough, of the Tenth Ward, made the suggestion. An attempt to have the question taken up Friday was made by Mr. Kimbrough, but objection by Chairman Orville Hall on the grounds that property owners should be given a hearing held up the proposition. It is planned to continue Whitehall street to the city limits.

The Street Committee has under advisement also the changing of the names of McDaniel, Exposition and Lowndes streets.

What, Woman Jury? 'No,' Says a Woman

CHICAGO, July 19.—A woman refused to-day to consent to a jury of twelve women, "tried and true," to try her case in court.

Mrs. Elizabeth Schank, a dressmaker, defendant in a suit over a $50 dress made for Mrs. R. Davenport, declared men, "who are the best judges of veracity," shall hear the case.

"What! a woman jury?" exclaimed Mrs. Schank, after talking with her lawyer. "Not on your life!"

SOLONS INSPECT STATE COLLEGE AT AUGUSTA

Legislators Mix Business and Pleasure—Governor and Mrs. Slaton Guests of Honor.

The General Assembly of Georgia is the guest of the city of Augusta today.

The Legislature is in Augusta officially to look over the Georgia Medical College there, but a program of pleasure has been prepared.

Headed by the Richmond delegation, Representatives Olive, Garlington and Picquet, and the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House, the General Assembly, the clerks of the two Houses, the pages, and a number of newspaper men left Atlanta at 7 o'clock this morning on a special over the Georgia Railroad.

Governor and Mrs. Slaton accompanied the Legislative party as guests of honor.

The special train was made up of six coaches and a baggage car. The party will return to Atlanta at midnight Saturday, leaving Augusta on the special about dark.

After the Medical College has been inspected a big basket dinner and fish fry will be enjoyed by the visitors at Carmichael's Fishing Club, a famous resort near Augusta. For the afternoon other pleasures have been planned for Legislators.

Notwithstanding the fact that the round trip from Atlanta to Augusta in one day, particularly at this season of the year, generally is looked upon as a strenuous undertaking, it was a jolly party. The baggage car was packed liberally with good things to eat and cold things to drink, while the smoking compartments were provided with everything the party could desire.

The Legislature, although it is on official business in a way, declared today a dies non, and the day will not count in the fifty days limit of sitting, nor will the members receive pay for it.

Profile of S. Pryor Grade Is Prepared

A profile of the permanent grade of South Pryor street is being prepared by the city engineering department preparatory to the regrading of this street. According to the present plans, the street will be widened into a boulevard. The movement for the improvement of South Pryor is the result of several mass meetings and canvasses of property owners within the past few weeks.

All Ready to Launch State Booster Body

Preparations are complete for the reception of delegates in Atlanta July 23 to organize a State Chamber of Commerce. The officials of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce have charge of the affair.

The first session will be held in the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce rooms at 10 o'clock in the morning. Delegates from every board of trade and every chamber of commerce in the State will be on hand.

Mrs. Fish 'Queen of Fairies' at Big Ball

NEWPORT, July 19.—Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish will be "Queen of the Fairies" at the costume ball which she will give at Crossways August 1.

The costume is being made by four dressmakers. It will be all white, with spangles. She will carry a long white ivory wand studded with brilliants and tiny electric lights. Her long train will be carried by two little fairies.

Barbecue and Ball Game for Auto Men

Local automobile men promise a great game Saturday when the Atlanta auto men and the Accessory men meet on the Poncy diamond at 11 o'clock.

George Hanson is captain of the automobile men and H. A. Pierce will boss the Accessory men on the field.

After the game a barbecue will be served.

NEW ENTRY ENLIVENS BIG BEAUTY CONTEST

Athletic girl whose face friends say should adorn Booster Button

Search for Atlanta's prettiest is talk of the town.

The beauty contest Saturday caught all eyes that hitherto have evaded its lure with the nomination of Miss Helen Goodrich, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Goodrich, of No. 801 Edgewood avenue, Inman Park.

The whole object of beauty, of course, is to attract the eye. The question of whose face is to adorn the "500,000 Club" booster buttons has come to dominate the talk of the town. Atlanta is famous for her pretty girls.

Miss Goodrich is a graceful, athletic girl with very rich brown hair and deep brown eyes. She is regarded as a fine type of Atlanta girl.

The beauty contest is to continue for some days yet. Who the prettiest girl is to be is as much a puzzle as it was at the beginning. Yet the question must be decided before the "500,000 Club" buttons can be ordered and the club actually organized.

Nominate your candidate at once and send in her photograph.

Bell House Boys Hold Annual 'Cue At Club Grounds

The original Bell House boys, past and present, took the Cold Springs Club grounds by storm Saturday in their second annual barbecue. The fun began very early, and according to an "official" tip, it will last well along toward the wee sma' hours of Sunday morn.

Mrs. Emma Bell, the official head of the Bell House, chaperoned the party, but, unlike most chaperons, she didn't have the least bit of trouble handling the boys, for they are big enough and old enough to take care of themselves.

First Auto Funeral Is Held in Atlanta

The first automobile funeral known to Georgia was conducted Friday afternoon by the Barclay & Brandon Company.

The company's new limousine hearse was used. This hearse is a magnificent model in French gray with hand-carved decorations. It cost $7,000 and represents the latest improvement in funeral directorship.

Urge Smith to Run Again for Council

Mr. Smith has not yet announced his decision, but it is generally understood that he will accede to the request of the voters of his ward.

DORSEY OPPOSES INDICTING CONLEY

time will be a useless procedure that will not stop the trial of Frank. It will only have a mild but undesirable effect on the State's case.

"Conley is in jail and is going to stay there for some time. He is where the authorities can put their hands on him, and he can be indicted much more properly after the Frank case has been disposed of than before, and by the delay there is no danger of a miscarriage of justice."

The Solicitor's position is attacked as palpably unfair by those who have been working to bring about the indictment of the negro. Dorsey would have the testimony of the negro accredited as that of any free and trustworthy citizen, while those opposing him declare it should be taken in the light of that of a possible murderer who is endeavoring to shift the blame on another's shoulders, they say.

They add that the evidence against Conley is far more direct and damning than any ever brought against Frank. They charge, on this account, that Conley has been protected and "coddled" when he should have been placed on the same basis as the other suspect in the case and should go before the jury in that aspect.

General denials were entered Saturday to the story published Friday that the Pinkertons had changed their attitude in the murder mystery and were convinced of the innocence of Frank. Chief of Detectives Lanford declared that Harry Scott had reaffirmed his belief in the guilt of Frank and the innocence of Conley, except as accessory after the fact.

Scott was non-committal, but indicated that there had been no change in his theories of the crime. During the progress of the investigation he repeatedly asserted his belief that Conley was telling the truth regarding his part in the disposal of Mary Phagan's body.

Electricians Name National Officers

CHATTANOOGA, July 19.—The National Electrical Contractors' Association has elected the following officers: President, Ernest Freeman, Chicago; First Vice President, J. C. Hatzel, New York; Second Vice President, W. L. Hutchison Kansas City; Third Vice President, J. C. Rendler, Los Angeles; Treasurer, John R. Galloway, Washington; Secretary, W. H. Morton, Utica; Sergeant-at-Arms, J. C. Sterns, Buffalo.

The next meeting will be held in Detroit.

Harry Thaw to Sue His Former Lawyer

PITTSBURG, July 19.—Roger O'Mara, trustee for the estate of Harry K. Thaw, bankrupt, was to-day authorized by Referee William R. Blair to begin legal proceedings against Clifford W. Hartridge, in the United States courts or in the State courts of New York, for the recovery of any funds that might be found or which might be due the estate of Thaw.

The purpose of the action is to try to recover the $21,000 which Hartridge, as attorney, is alleged to have claimed for expenses incident to the first trial of Thaw for the murder of Stanford White.

Charter Granted to New Bank at Alamo

The Wheeler County Bank, located at Alamo, Ga., and capitalized at $25,000, was granted a charter by Secretary of State Phil Cook Friday afternoon.

The incorporators include Charles W. Lancaster, of Davisboro, Ga.; I. Idelson, H. S. Hurewitz and Truitt H. Nelson, of Alamo.

LEAHY TAKES POST AUGUST 1.

WANT ADS EASY, SAYS BOY IN CONTEST

Important to Enter Now—Bring in Nomination Blank Early Monday.

"I've got more than a dozen want ads promised me right in the block where I live, and I want to win one of those bicycles," said the first boy at The Georgian's business office Saturday morning. "I'm going to do it, too.

"I got a want-ad promise at every house I went to except one, and the lady wasn't at home there. It's going to be easy. When does the contest start?"

The youngster—he was just over the 14-year-age limit—was put down in the list of contestants and told to come back Monday morning and receive instructions. There will be quite a gathering at The Georgian's office then, for many young men and women have entered and are going out to win that automobile, a trip to California, the piano or one of the dozens of other prizes offered winners in the contest.

The boy's experience proves how easy it is to get want ads for a paper with a reputation for bringing results. There is no family without a want of some kind. The mere suggestion that an advertisement of a few lines in The American or Georgian will bring that maid or yardboy or sell that discarded furniture usually is met with ready response.

There's no guessing in this contest, either—no grinding day and night in a scheme where you have to invest a dollar or two for a bare chance to win a box of candy. It is a strictly business proposition. Contestants will visit their acquaintances on a business mission and they will accomplish definite results. The winner gets the automobile, the next the piano, and so on down the list.

But remember the contest begins in a few days, and it is absolutely necessary that contestants bring in their nomination blanks, receive their instructions and get ready for active work.

The Want Ad Man would like to see every contestant at his office, No. 7 Edgewood avenue, Monday some time during the day. He has something important to tell them.

Investigation Into Assay Office Likely

WASHINGTON, July 19.—D. P. Kingsford, Superintendent of the New York Assay Office, has placed his resignation in the hands of Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo. The annual examination of the assay office in New York was completed by July 1, and a report of it has been in the hands of Secretary McAdoo for some time.

It is understood a detailed specification is in the hands of Secretary McAdoo dealing with the system of management. This specification does not aim at any person in particular. It is believed a general investigation may follow. The criticism is based on laxity.

Cleveland's 'Golden Rule' in Scrap Heap

CLEVELAND, OHIO, July 19.—The Golden Rule policy in making arrests which made former Chief Kohler famous is a thing of the past. He who now imbibes too freely and obstructs traffic will help enrich the city's coffers instead of being escorted home by a policeman.

Chief Rowe declined to say he has relegated the Golden Rule to the scrap heap, but admits significantly: "One may draw his own conclusions from the figures."

The police blotter figures say there is no Golden Rule.

Atlantan Asked to Hunt for Grandson

M. R. Russell No. 1 East Fair street, received a letter Saturday morning from his daughter, Mrs. L. E. Martin, of Carrollton, Ga., asking him to make an effort to locate her son, Rufus Martin, who has been missing eleven weeks. Martin, who is 27 years old, is a civil engineer for the Southern Bell Telephone Company, and when last heard of was at Birmingham, Ala.

He is six feet one inch tall, has brown hair, blue eyes and weighs 175 pounds.

REUTRN OF LUMB IS FOUGHT BY DEFENSE

Crawford Lawyers Ask Delay in Extradition Till Indictment of Alleged Accomplice.

That a strenuous fight is on between the attorneys for Mrs. Mary Belle Crawford and the heirs-at-law of the late Joshua B. Crawford to prevent the return to Georgia of Fred Lumb, the New York barber named as an accomplice of Mrs. Crawford in the alleged plot to poison her husband, became known Saturday morning.

Objections to the issuance of extradition papers before the indictment of Lumb have been filed with Governor Slaton by Attorney Reuben Arnold for Mrs. Crawford, and with Governor Sulzer of New York.

Attorney J. S. James, attorney for the Crawford heirs-at-law, declared Saturday morning that his future course in regard to bringing Lumb to Atlanta, in case he is apprehended by the New York police, would be governed by the results of an interview he expects to have with Governor Slaton Monday.

He intimated that should Governor Slaton refuse to issue extradition papers for Lumb before the indictment efforts would be made to have Lumb indicted at once as an accomplice.

He declared Governor Slaton would have to issue the papers if Lumb were under indictment.

"Despite Mrs. Crawford's assertions that she desires the return of Lumb, her attorneys are fighting us in our effort to bring him back," said James. "Colonel Arnold has filed a letter with Governor Slaton objecting to the issuance of the papers, and they also have filed objections with the Governor of New York."

Colonel James said detectives in New York have failed to locate Lumb.

Prompt Arbitration Urged by Trainmen

NEW YORK, July 19.—Prompt action by the United State Senate in confirming the appointees of President Wilson to the special board which is to arbitrate the difficulties between the 100,000 employees of the Eastern railroads and the railway managers were demanded to-day by William G. Lee, president of the Brotherhood of Trainmen, and A. B. Garretson, president of the Order of Railway Conductors.

"Delay or failure to confirm such appointments only makes it more impossible for us to control the situation," they asserted.

Bank Bill Will Get Hearing on Thursday

The new banking bill introduced in the House and which has aroused interest among Georgia bankers will be given a hearing at 8:30 o'clock next Thursday morning before the Banks and Banking Committee, J. L. Cooper, of Ware, chairman.

One banking bill, introduced by Representative R. B. Blackburn, of Fulton, has already been favorably reported. This provides for twenty-five trustees of trust companies instead of fifteen.

GEN. EDWARD SALOMON DIES.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 19.—Brigadier General Edward Salomon, one of the leaders in the G. A. R., died last night, aged 76. He was ill a long time. He was born in Germany. He came to the United States at the age of 18. In 1861 he organized the Eighty-second Illinois Regiment.

$100,000,000 IN GOODS AWAIT NEW TARIFF

No Such Material Wealth as Now Is in Our Warehouses Ever Held in Nation's History.

NEW YORK, July 19.—More than $100,000,000 worth of merchandise is stored in the bonded warehouses of Greater New York to-day. Never on the face of the globe has there ever before been such an aggregation of everything that the soil yields and human industry produces.

The 56 great bonded warehouses are gorged almost to bursting with silks teas, coffees, spices, oils, rugs, carpets, toys, textile fabrics, knit goods, glassware and pottery, jute, hemp, wool, chemicals—with everything in which the merchants of the world trade.

More than 200,000 tons of sugar, worth over $12,000,000, are in bond. The New York Stock Company alone has 80,000 bags of coffee; its warehouses, with a capacity of $1,000,000 cubic feet, are filled.

Of this $100,000,000 worth of imports $70,000,000 is held pending changes in the tariff; $30,000,000 is made up of working stock which the great industrial plants must use immediately and of goods that come in free. The duties on the $70,000,000 worth that is being held deliberately in bond amount to $35,000,000 under the present tariff law. The owners are waiting to see how much of this $35,000,000 benevolent Uncle Sam will "knock off."

When the new bill becomes law millions of dollars a day will be paid into the Custom House and to railroads, and coasting vessels will be offered an enormous amount of freight. The importer who has his goods on hand will have a great advantage over competitors.

FIST FIGHT PUTS 'PEP' IN COURT'S PROCEEDINGS

A "near-fight" between W. A. Graham, a druggist of No. 354 Ponce DeLeon avenue, and B. W. Torrence, an automobile dealer of No. 350 Ponce DeLeon avenue, enlivened the proceedings of Judge Broyles' court Saturday morning.

The fight came during the trial of Graham, against whom Torrence had made two cases. In one Graham was charged with allowing a vicious dog to run at large; in the other he was charged with keeping an obnoxious stable. Graham, while making his statement, declared that Torrence's small son had sat for some hours Friday on the Graham fence.

"You are a liar!" emphatically declared Torrence.

Then Graham hit at Torrence and Torrence hit at Graham. Torrence missed, but Graham's fist raised a bump on the forehead of Policeman O. R. Jones, who was standing in front of Torrence. Before any more blows could be struck Chief Beavers separated the combatants.

Judge Broyles dismissed the dog case, but fined Graham $5.75 on the charge of maintaining a nuisance. He fined Torrence $5.75 for contempt of court in calling Graham a liar.

ACCUSE BULGARS OF MASSACRE OF 20,000

Plains Near Kavala Strewn With Victims—Fear Felt for Safety of Foreigners.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

SALONIKA, July 19.—Twenty thousand Greeks and Mussulmans are reported to have been slaughtered by Bulgarian soldiers at Xanthi, 40 miles northeast of Kavala.

The Bulgarians, on their retreat, surrounded the town and, after bombarding it, set it on fire.

Fear is felt for the 71 foreigners in the city.

King to Lead Army Of Reprisal Into Sofia.

ATHENS, July 19.—A Salonika dispatch states that King Constantine probably will go to the front to lead the army which the Greeks, in cooperation with Servia and Roumania, will throw into Sofia.

"I intend to go to Sofia in person to avenge the atrocities of the Bulgarians," telegraphed the King to Foreign Minister Coromitas.

Czar Ferdinand of Bulgaria is personally exonerated of blame for barbarities of Bulgar soldiers in Macedonia and Thrace by King Constantine in a report of a fresh atrocity. After the Bulgarians took the town of Doxa, he said, they massacred all the 3,000 inhabitants except 130. Blame for the outrages is laid upon the Bulgarian army officers by the Greek King.

The Greek army is 62 miles from Sofia, the Servians are 40 and the Roumanians only 25 miles away.

Minister of Marine Stratos estimates that 25,000 Greeks have been killed since the war with Bulgaria broke out. It is estimated that 75,000 innocents have been massacred by Bulgarian, Greek and Servian troops, for each government accuses the other, and there's documentary evidence to show bloody reprisals were made.

Two hundred thousand persons are homeless and starving. Five hundred towns and villages have been wiped out or depopulated. Reckoned from a commercial standpoint the damage from the second Balkan war in Macedonia and Thrace is $100,000,000.

Hospitals filled with wounded troops have been bombarded, men and women have been torn from limb to limb, while the blood-drunk soldiers danced about them. Mosques have been filled with women and children and burned while the army pipers played their instruments about the pyre.

Mutilated dead bodies are found in the deserted villages. Many of the victims are officers.

St. Petersburg Protects Interests of Bulgaria.

ST. PETERSBURG, July 19.—Russia will not allow Bulgaria to be treated with extreme humiliation by either the allies or Turkey. A note to this effect was handed in to-day at Constantinople, Athens, Belgrade and Bucharest. Russia, it is reported, will attempt to hold Adrianople for Bulgaria.

The Bulgarian Minister to Russia denied that Czar Ferdinand had fled from Sofia before an infuriated mob, accompanied by Crown Prince Boris.

Adrianople Menaced by Invading Turkish Army.

CONSTANTINOPLE, July 19.—The vanguard of the Turkish army which is invading Thrace arrived in front of Adrianople to-day and an attack upon the city may be made next week, according to a dispatch received here to-day from the field.

The small Bulgarian force in the garrison at Adrianople has been busy strengthening the forts about the city.

Peace Advocates File Stories of Atrocities.

PARIS, July 19.—The most appalling horrors of war were pictured in dispatches received here to-day from points in the Balkans and from Athens. They will be compiled by the International Peace Society for use in its crusade for universal peace.

Corpses with the arms pulled out and the eyes gouged out are common sights. The Bulgars have taken a wanton delight in the torture of Greek Catholic priests. Cruelties of unimaginable horror have been invented.

Bulgaria's Foes Reported Ready to Treat for Peace.

VIENNA, July 19.—The Neue Freie Presse stated to-day that as a result of the recent conference at Uskub the belligerent Balkan states and Greece are prepared to enter into direct peace negotiations with Bulgaria. Montenegro will participate.

5 Knoxville Men To Boost Exhibit

Five leading citizens of Knoxville, Tenn., will visit Atlanta next week to urge upon manufacturers, business men and the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce to participate in the National Conservation Exposition to be held in Knoxville soon.

The men who will visit Atlanta are T. Asbury Wright, William Goodman, G. L. Price, W. S. Shields and Colonel C. H. Harvey.

The Exposition, it is said, will be one of the largest manufacturing displays of Southern products in recent years.

Wants Excess Fares Returned.

CHARLESTON, W. VA., July 19.—Governor Hatfield to-day urged that excess fares collected by the Chesapeake and Ohio Railway in the last two years be turned over to the State Public Service Commission for disbursement to the coupon holders.

'BEAR CAT RAG' IS FROWNED UPON BY THIS DAINTY ATLANTA DANCER

Miss Theodora Aline Warfield.

She appeared in classical poses with Geraldine Farrar and won local fame.

Successful Operatic Career Is Predicted for Gate City's Premiere Danseuse.

Which do you prefer—to do the "bear" or a classical dance?

An Atlanta girl who prefers classical dancing to the more modern rag is rather unusual, yet pretty Miss Theodora Aline Warfield, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William C. Warfield, of No. 29 West North avenue, declares that she can not see why people dance the graceless modern dances, when the Grecian and other classical dances are far more artistic and almost as easy to learn.

That is, they are easy to learn if you have talent.

Since Miss Warfield was two years old she has been dancing, and always she is evolving new steps. Her dancing is not like Isadora Duncan's or Maude Allan's, or any of the famous classical dancers. It is entirely her own, and her friends declare it is the prettiest and most graceful possible.

Miss Warfield has appeared on the stage in Atlanta. She was the premiere danseuse at the past two performances of the Kirmess, and won great applause. She was presented with a beautiful silver-incrusted vase by the Elks Lodge, in recognition of their appreciation of her talent. At various private entertainments Miss Warfield has danced also, and has always won admiration and praise by the beauty and grace of her dancing.

Every one who has seen her dance has urged that she go on the stage, and her parents intend to prepare her for the opera. In addition to being a dancer of rare grace and beauty, she has an attractive voice, and it is being cultivated with her dancing.

Two years ago Miss Warfield sang in Atlanta with Geraldine Farrar, and Miss Farrar was enthusiastic in her praise. After finishing a course at a school here, Miss Warfield will go abroad to study languages and advanced artistic dancing. A wonderful career is predicted for her. There is no doubt that she will add her name to Atlanta's already brilliant Hall of Fame.

CUMMINS SAYS TARIFF WILL FAIL

Senator Scores 'Coercive' Methods by Wilson and Secret Caucus in Attack on Bill.

WASHINGTON, July 19.—Progressive Republican opposition to the Underwood-Simmons tariff bill was expressed to-day in the Senate by Senator Cummins, of Iowa, who condemned many of its provisions.

The Senator announced himself in favor of the income tax amendment, substantially as written by the Democrats, "if it could not be changed to better suit the exigencies of the situation."

Senator Cummins criticised President Wilson for bringing to bear the "coerce" executive influence upon the framers of the measure, and he also was sharp in his criticisms of "legislation by secret caucus."

"The tariff will increase importation and diminish home production of a great many things, and will force into idleness many workingmen," Cummins asserted. "It puts the products of agriculture, in the main, on the free list. It probably is true some of these commodities need no protective duty, but many of them do, and to treat the farmer as an outlaw is manifestly wrong.

"Second, the bill proceeds on the theory that the manufacturer of the finished product is entitled to raw material free of duty. This is all very well if the raw material can be produced in this country as cheaply as abroad, but if that costs more here to produce it, then the raw material of the manufacturer should be dutiable.

"Its duties are, upon many commodities, destructively inadequate, and the lesser industries of the country will suffer."

Augusta Shocked by Girl in Filmy Garb; Arrest Stops Riot

AUGUSTA, GA., July 19.—All Augusta is talking to-day of the arrest of Miss Edith Anderson, 1215 Jones street, Friday afternoon, because she appeared on Broad street, the main thoroughfare of the city, clad in a "transparent skirt," a dainty, filmy creation of lace through which twinkled stockings of a vivid green.

Miss Anderson appeared just as the afternoon dress parade was at its height. A stolid, unemotional copper stood swinging his stick on a busy corner of Broad street when Miss Anderson appeared. The copper saw the crowd coming, he saw men fighting small boys for places in the forefront, and he looked up.

"Why—why!" he stammered, mopping his fevered face. "Why—er—why—because—er—dawgone it!" He pointed downward with his nightstick, "You can't wear things like that in Augusty."

Miss Anderson smiled pityingly upon the officer, but accompanied him to headquarters.

Church He Founded To Hear Mr. Ellis

The Rev. Henry J. Ellis, the blind chaplain of the Georgia House of Representatives, will preach Sunday morning at the Walker Street Methodist Church, which he founded 25 years ago.

He served for a number of years as pastor of the church, and one of the largest congregations that ever assembled there is expected to hear him Sunday.

Air Map of World, Geographers' Plan

WASHINGTON, July 19.—Famous geographers from many countries soon are to meet to prepare an aeronautical map of the entire world.

That announcement was made by Rear Admiral Robert E. Peary in a report to the National Geographic Society on the results accomplished at the Tenth International Geographic Conference in Rome, which he attended as one of the American delegates.

Pittsburg Bids the Slit Skirt Welcome

PITTSBURG, July 19.—"Why should I tell Pittsburg women what to wear? What do I know about it? Not on your life. Will I order any arrests? Well, I should say not! Are you trying to get me into trouble?"

With these words John P. Dailey, Director of the Department of Public Safety, disposed of the woman's dress question for Pittsburg.

"I think, for my part, the women are dressing all right," said the Director. "They know what they want to wear, and I believe in letting them wear it. At any rate, they'll do it whether we like it or not."

GERMAN AVIATOR KILLED.

FRANKFORT, July 19.—Aviator Westphal, of the German army, was killed here yesterday. His is the 299th death resulting from aviator tragedies.

REVOLT IN CHINA SPLITS NATION; WAR NEAR

North Arrayed Against South. Foreigners in Danger—Rebels Threaten Public Buildings.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

CANTON, CHINA, July 19.—A complete severance of political relations between Northern and Southern China was proclaimed here to-day. Business is at a standstill. Revolutionary leaders are threatening to seize the Government buildings.

A British torpedo boat is proceeding to this port from Hong Kong to protect British lives and interests.

The Governor General of Kwang Tung Province has proclaimed his territory independent of the Pekin Government and declares in the same proclamation that the Provincial Council has nominated him commander-in-chief of the revolutionary army.

U. S. Aiding Revolt?

That United States diplomacy as well as Japanese is supporting the revolutionaries trying to overthrow President Yuan Shih Kai was claimed by leaders of the Southern rebellion.

The Pekin Government, headed by President Yuan, is receiving the support of England, Germany and France. Developments indicate that the question of the proposed $100,000,000 Chinese loan enters into the situation. England, Germany and France subscribed pro rata shares to the loan, but the United States financiers were not allowed by their Government to participate.

Dr. Sun Yat Sen, one of the leaders in the uprising which overthrew the Manchu Dynasty, and the first provisional President of China, and Dr. Wu Ting-fang, former Chinese Minister to the United States, are believed to be lukewarm to the rebel cause.

Rebels Lose a Battle.

Dr. Sun has left for Nanking, the provisional republican capital, where he may make open declaration of his loyalty to the southerners.

President Yuan is suspected of being an imperialist at heart. The southerners want a democrat.

Wu Chang remains loyal, but revolutionary sentiment is fast growing there.

Four thousand rebels were decisively defeated by 2,000 Government forces at Hsu-Chow-Fu, north of Kiang Su.

New Railway Mail Head Begins Duties

Henry M. Robinson, recently appointed Superintendent of Railway Mail Service, suceeding George W. Pepper, arrived in Atlanta Friday and visited the local railway mail bureau in the Federal Building Saturday morning, where he and Mr. Pepper completed the transfer of the Atlanta division.

Twenty-five years ago Mr. Robinson was a resident of Atlanta. Then he was a postal clerk between Atlanta and Charlotte. Later he became superintendent of the New Orleans division.

Flier at Charleston Goes at 90-mile Gait

CHARLESTON, July 19.—W. S. Luckey, a Curtiss flier from New York city, who is spending a week at the Isle of Palms on Friday flew in a hydro-aeroplane from the Isle of Palms to Charleston, a distance of about 12 miles, by water, in 8 minutes, a speed of 90 miles an hour.

Luckey also skimmed across the harbor with his main float partly submerged at a rate of 45 miles an hour.

Turner to Attend Electrical Meeting

R. C. Turner, City Electrician, will attend the convention of the International Association of Municipal Electricians at Watertown, N. Y., August 19 to 22.

"Municipal Regulation" will be the subject of an address delivered by Atlanta's electrical expert while there.

SIDELIGHTS on GEORGIA POLITICS

by JAMES B. NEVIN

That the first contested appointment coming up for Governor Slaton's consideration should have been decided in favor of a Hoke Smith man—to use that ancient and honorable term in differentiating him from the other variety in Georgia—may be accepted, in all probability, as the first bit of evidence that Governor Slaton meant exactly what he said when he stated that he hoped to be, and would try to be, a Governor not of any faction in Georgia, but of all the people.

The Governor on Friday appointed Miller S. Bell, of Milledgeville, trustee of the Georgia Normal and Industrial School, situated there, notwithstanding the fact that Mr. Bell has been an adherent of the Smith factional end of Georgia politics in the past rather than of the Brown end.

There is no question whatever about the entire fitness of Mr. Bell for the position. Governor Slaton might have searched the State for months and not found a better man for the assignment.

These places on the boards of trustees of the State institutions—particularly the Georgia Normal and Industrial School—are considered positions of great honor and trust and are conferred upon the very best men that may be found. For that reason, while they are not sought with that degree of fervor characterizing the usual effort for office, they rarely are declined, and frequently there are warm contests for the same.

Mr. Bell, a Smith man, was aggressively backed by other Smith men before Governor Slaton. His opponent, a good man of the Brown persuasion, was pressed quite as aggressively by other Brown men.

The Governor, in this his first contested case, thought the Smith man the better fitted, for one reason and another, for the position, and the appointment was made accordingly.

And that looks like a fair and square beginning in the line of letting fitness and not faction control in the executive office under the new Governor.

"I wish," said Speaker Burwell today, "I had one thousand pages' jobs to give out.

"There are so many worthy and splendid young boys who come to me for appointments, and the number of appointments I have is so small that it is a continuous matter of embarrassment and regret to me that I am unable to gratify the very great majority of applicants.

"The pages of the House are mainly young fellows, and the experience they get during the sessions is very useful and well worth while to them. I wish I could give every boy who applies to me a job—but, of course, I cannot do that."

Senator McNeil, of Bibb County, is a very graceful speaker, and one of the substantial men of the Senate.

Not only that, he also is one of the best dressed men in either House. He effects very light clothing, both as to texture and color, and always looks as fresh and cool as one possibly may in such sizzling weather as that of late.

"If I could keep as cool as McNeil always looks," said Senator Parrish to-day, "I would be mighty happy, I tell you. But I fear no man can be as cool nowadays as McNeil seems to be eternally."

Governor Slaton was a very busy man all day Friday.

During his day or so absence in Brunswick, a very heavy mail piled up in the executive office, which had to be disposed of yesterday.

The Governor is more or less methodical and always tries—and usually succeeds—to get to-day's mail answered and put in charge of "Uncle Sam" to-day.

The proposed creation of the grand young county of Warner, to be whacked out of Talbot, Meriwether and Harris, has moved the poets of that vicinity to do their very worst.

Judge Henry Revill, editor of The Meriwether Vindicator, is very vehemently opposed to the new county of Warner, particularly in that it would cut pretty far into historic old Meriwether if set up.

A poet of Warner, viewing Judge Revill with evident and pronounced alarm, proposed over the initials C. M. W., recently this dainty quatrain in his honor's honor, the which has been published from one end of the new county to the other:

"Here's to the new county of Warner!
So good-bye to Greenville and Judge Revill.
When we get our new county and courthouse
They can go to the d——l."

The trouble about this, of course, is that few people will believe a person so whole-souled, companionable, good natured and altogether delightful as Judge Henry Revill ever will go to any such person, thing or state of mind as this poet suggests.

Unless the Legislature revoke the dies non declared Saturday, it will adjourn on Thursday, August 14. That will be the final day of the constitutionally limited 50.

Dies non has been declared in the past, time and again, only to be revoked before the end of the session. The great trouble about a dies non, of course, is that the members receive no pay for that day whatever, and it is consequently a dead expense to them. However, a day gets to be a mighty precious thing as the session draws near its end, and the one dies non declared this session likely will stay put.

Although there remain only three weeks ahead of the Legislature, there yet is no talk of afternoon or evening sessions. The afternoons are needed so badly for committee meetings that they can not be spared.

Before the end of the session, however, both afternoon and evening sessions will be held.

Woman's Body Tied To Fence Near Park

CHICAGO, July 19.—Finding of the body of a young and pretty woman, tied to the top of a rail fence near Finley Park, 15 miles from Chicago, presented a mystery to Coroner Hoffman to-day.

The woman was tied to the fence by a piece of white cloth, evidently torn from an underskirt and wrapped about her neck.

OBITUARY

The funeral of Leonard Kenny, 2-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. L. H. Kenny, of No. 101 Poplar street, who died at the residence at 1 o'clock Friday afternoon, was held from the chapel of Greenberg & Bond at 10 o'clock Saturday morning. Interment was at Westview.

J. R. Hunter, of the faculty of Georgia Tech, died at a local sanitarium at 4 o'clock Friday afternoon. He was 49 years old, is survived by a wife and had only recently come to Atlanta from Chattanooga. The body is at Patterson's chapel, pending the arrival of relatives.

The body of Mrs. Martha J. Roop, who died at a local sanitarium Friday, was sent to her home in Carrollton, Ga., Saturday for funeral and interment. Mrs. Roop was 68 years old, and is survived by her husband, the Rev. W. W. Roop, and one daughter, Mrs. Samuel Copeland, of Bremen, Ga.

The body of John C. Fultz, who died at the residence, No. 127 Pearl street, Friday afternoon, will be sent to Marietta Sunday afternoon for funeral and interment. Mr. Fultz was 71 years old and is survived by a wife, one daughter, Mrs. W. M. Edwards, and two sisters, Mrs. C. Monroe and Mrs. Worth Pace.

The body of Mrs. J. A. Dodgen, who died at the residence, No. 329 East Georgia avenue, Friday afternoon at 5 o'clock, will be sent Sunday morning to Alpharetta, Ga., for funeral and interment. Mrs. Dodgen was 61 years old and the wife of J. A. Dodgen, a well-known lawyer. Besides her husband, she is survived by three sons, B. L., C. M. and J. M. Dodgen, the latter an attorney also, and three daughters, Misses Flossie, Alice and Alma.

NATURAL CRANK, MAYOR'S SHOT AT BROYLES

"Dyspeptic, Fanatic, Stoneheart, Monomaniac" Are Other Terms in "Final" Retort.

Mayor Woodward Saturday said he was finally dismissing Recorder Nash R. Broyles from his mind with the statement:

"He is a natural dyspeptic, crank and a fanatic. If he ever had a heart it has turned to stone. Therefore, it is natural that he should become a monomaniac over the subject of using his czar-like authority in his own petty sphere. I don't care anything more about him."

Mayor Woodward again went over the head of Recorder Broyles Friday when he reduced the sentence of George Poulos, a restaurant keeper on Alabama street, who had been fined $100 and sentenced to 30 days in the Stockade fo violating the prohibition law.

The Mayor said he was much surprised that the Recorder did not make the fine $49 and the sentence 29 days so as to stay outside the jurisdiction of the Mayor.

It was expected that Mayor Woodward would issue a full pardon but he didn't. He just reduced the fine to $49 and the sentence to 29 days.

'Conscience' Takes His Savings of Years

WASHINGTON, July 19.—A veteran of the Civil War, now a poor farmer in Ireland, with a large family dependent upon him, has sent to the Treasury Department $150 as a "conscience contribution" for some fraud he perpetrated upon the Government while a soldier 50 years ago.

The contribution, representing the savings of years, was sent through a Catholic priest to satisfy the gnawings of a troubled conscience.

Bibles in Schools To Be Theme of Sermon

A discussion of the bill to force the reading of the Bible in the public schools of Georgia now pending in the Legislature will feature the sermon of Dr. L. O. Bricker, of the First Christian Church, Sunday evening.

His subject will be "The Story of the Bible—Its Enemies, Its Friends, and Its Influence Upon Civilization.

An Old Maid's Romance

TODAY'S COMPLETE SHORT STORY.

I.

PENTHORN ROAD was one of those thoroughfares which have gradually come to a state of shabby gentility after a period of affluence.

The houses were tall and bleak and fronted with grim stucco, all in that manner which our forefathers found so desirable. Once they had been expensive houses, tenanted by people of wealth and social standing, but now The Gables, halfway down the road, struck the only firm note of resistance to the general air of decaying prosperity. Curtains always hung primly in its casements; the frills of the muslin window blinds always seemed newly starched, and the steps of the front door were always a marvel of whiteness.

People wondered why Miss Margaret Weston, who lived there in state with servants, did not move out of a locality which was deteriorating so rapidly. Some bolder spirits even asked her why she stayed on at The Gables instead of letting it, and departing to reside in a street more befitting her quality. To these Miss Weston answered gently that she had lived in The Gables most of her life, and had no desire to change now.

Miss Weston always answered everybody gently, for gentleness was the essence of her being. The neighbors referred to her as an "old maid," but, even as they used the phrase, they knew it was not the exact term by which to describe her. There was none of that sharpness about her which the epithet of "old maid" habitually implies.

Long ago, when she was a little orphan girl of 7, her uncle had adopted her and brought her to live in Penthorn Road. But now both her uncle and his wife were dead, and Miss Weston was left alone in the old home, save for the servants.

Rather a pitiful romance was Miss Weston's. It was simply the old story of the man who had not dared enough, the man who had leaped to false conclusions and had gone out of her life, to leave her alone.

Sometimes, when she tenderly took a packet of letters out of her bureau, there was one particular missive which she had not the heart to re-read, for it was too sacred with poignant memories.

Her Dream.

But always she remembered the night when it was handed to her. She had only to close her eyes again to visualize the scene completely.

She saw herself, quite young, sitting before the fire on an autumn evening. She was trying to understand something. Why had her cousin, Harry Dutton, gone off to the Colonies without a word of farewell to her? He had made quite a sudden departure, though he had told her that he was going. And yet he had never said good-bye to her.

And while she was seeking to understand his attitude the small son of a neighbor had come into the room shamefacedly.

"I say, Miss Weston," he blurted out, "I'm awfully sorry, but I clean forgot."

"Forgot what?" she asked, puzzled.

"Why, this letter. Mr. Dutton gave it to me to give to you. He wanted to make sure you'd get it the same evening. I've just remembered it."

"When did he give it to you?" she whispered.

"Last Thursday. And I'm awfully sorry——"

"Last Thursday," she said to herself, when the small boy escaped from the room in relief. "That was two days before he sailed!"

She opened the letter and read its contents.

"Dearest Margaret," it ran—"As you know, I sail for South America the day after to-morrow. Before I go I want to ask you something, but I fear it will be too much to ask you. You must have guessed that I love you. I know it is presumption on my part to aspire to your hand, for you are the adopted daughter of a rich man and I am only the ne'er-do-well son of a poor brother. But I mean to make money in South America. I want to come home and marry you! There, I've blurted it out quite bravely! Will you marry me? I want you to wait for me.

"I suppose I'm asking too much, but I shall hope. If you reply to this note, I will come and say good-bye, but if you do not answer, I shall know what you mean. Yours, HARRY."

There was the explanation. She went to her uncle and showed him the note. He counseled cables and letters to Harry, but on the voyage Harry altered his plans, so that the messages lay waiting for him and never reached him. And he never wrote home; he just dropped out of everybody's life.

Would-be suitors dangled about Miss Weston for a time, but, receiving no encouragement, went off elsewhere. Friends married, acquaintances moved out of the neighborhood. Margaret grew from a girl to a woman, from a woman to an old maid.

And still she waited for Dutton in the house where last he had seen her, and where again he might seek her.

II.

Sometimes she pictured his return. She saw him whirling up to the door magnificently in a mortor car. She saw him on foot, tentatively examining the old house from the farther side of the road. Always she pictured him coming back, prosperous, to seek that bride whom mischance had so long withheld from him.

And then, one day, quite unexpectedly, she met him in the street, and he was woefully shabby and down-at-the-heel and his face bore lines of want and recklessness.

"Harry!" she faltered. "Harry!"

The light of recognition leaped into his eyes, but he shook his head.

"You're home again!" she exclaimed. "I—I've been expecting you. I've been waiting for you!"

"Expecting me? Waiting for me?" he muttered, astonished.

"Ever since you went away," she said, simply. "Waiting for you in the old house. There was a mistake—I never got your letter till it was too late. And then we never heard where you were. But I waited."

"You—you're making a mistake," he said, slowly. "I don't know you!"

He swung away from her at that. Miss Weston took a few steps after him, but a faintness came over her. And when she could see clearly again Dutton had gone.

But even now her simple faith in love did not abandon her.

"He'll come back to me one day,' she said to herself, going slowly home. 'He knows I'm waiting for him. He's ashamed of himself because he's poor. As if that mattered!"

Indeed, it was quite a cheery Miss Weston who arrived home at The Gables. And now every morning the thought was still stronger in her that that day her lover of long ago might call to see her in the house where last he had left her.

But the days slipped by, and, though often she glanced from her windows, she saw no sign of him in the street outside. And so a month, three months, another six months passed by.

III

"Gentleman to see you, Mum!"

"A gentleman to see me, Janet?" asked Miss Weston, in surprise. "How strange!"

A caller of any sort was indeed a rarity at The Gables.

Miss Weston rose from her chair. She was trying to persuade herself that it could not possibly be Dutton who had come to Penthorn Road after all these years. Although she had hoped for his coming every morning it suddenly seemed to her that this was altogether too much to hope for. She went downstairs slowly, holding tightly on to the banisters, and steeling herself to meet disappointment.

But it was Dutton who awaited her in the room below—Dutton, far better dressed than when she had seen him last and now holding himself with a resolute bearing.

"Harry!" she exclaimed, holding out both her hands to him. "So you've come back? I knew you would—I knew you would!"

"I had to come back," he said slowly. "I wanted to see you just once more before I went abroad again."

"Abroad again?" she echoed faintly.

"What's the good of my stopping in England?" he asked. "There's nothing to keep me here. Abroad I shall do better. I did not do well when I was there before, but that was because I had nothing to work for. I had lost you, and——"

He stopped for a moment.

"You thought you had lost me," amended Miss Weston softly.

"I—I knocked about a bit over there," he went on. "A rolling stone, you know. Then I had a whim to come back to England. I—it's no good disguising it—I was on the downward path. I'd lost interest in things—worse, I'd lost interest in myself. And then one day I met you in the street. You remember? The man you remembered as Harry Dutton was dead then," he said, "and in his place there was a mere shiftless ne'er-do-well. I felt utterly ashamed to find your eyes on me. I saw you still believed in me, long after I had lost faith or belief in myself. And—and I resolved to try again to live my life straight."

"And now?"

"For close on a year—ever since that day—I've struggled. I think I've left the wastrel behind. I'm trying hard to be the man you thought me to be, and I think I'm succeeding."

"And you've come back at last?"

"Yes, I wanted to see you again, not as I was that day you met me, but as I am now. I wanted to win back a little of your respect."

"And—and you're going abroad again?"

"Quite soon. I've no ties, no wife or family."

"There's me!" pointed out Miss Weston, with unprecednted boldness. "Have you forgotten me?"

"You?" he said in amazement. "You don't mean——"

"I've waited all these years for you to come back to me," she replied steadily. "We were parted by illchance, but I was loyal to the memory of you, for I knew you'd return one day!"

"And I," he said, "have been true to you in word and deed, because all my love was with you. Other women"—he dismised them with a gesture. "You were always the only woman in my thoughts."

"I knew it," she said simply, and told him how mischance had led their paths apart those many years ago.

"Ah, if the past could but come back again," he said. "If I only were younger! But now I can not ask you to marry me. I'm getting old, I'm poor. And you—you're rich, I suppose, and you haven't altered in the least."

Her Story.

Gently she smiled dissent.

"But I have something to tell you," she said. "Uncle George left me all his money, but he left this house to you. Nine years ago he died, and we inquired about you everywhere. We advertised in the papers, too, but could get no tidings of you."

"Nine years ago," he answered. "I was up-country, then. I stayed up-country three years. That was why I was undiscovered."

"Well, nine years' rent is yours," she told him. "I've been keeping it for you, waiting for you to come back. So you see, you're not quite so poor as you thought."

"And not quite so rich as I'd like to be," he sighed. "I'd like to be rich enough to——"

He paused.

"To what?" queried Miss Weston, anxiously. "Surely you're not going to balance riches against happiness?"

"I've got my pride," he said, stubbornly.

"And you've got your house," she said. "And I'm going to move out of it at once. You must come and live in your own house."

"No, no," he replied, uncomfortably.

"I shall go," she said, with firmness, and added, artfully, 'thought after all these years it'll break my heart to leave it."

"Then—then let me continue as your—your landlord. The house is far too big for me."

"I won't stay on as your tenant a day longer," she said. "And it's going to break my heart to go. Can't you see what I—what I'm trying to make clear?"

"No," he said, in perplexity. "I can't. And yet—but no, I'm too poor and ashamed to ask you to marry me."

"Rubbish!" retorted Miss Weston with the most asperity she had ever been known to show. "Either you're going to break my heart by making me leave the old house, or else you're going to let me stop on as your wife. Which is it to be?"

Her unwonted briskness gave way and she took a faltering step toward him.

"Harry, after all these years——" she quavered.

"My little sweetheart!" he whispered, and both he and she forgot that youth had left them.

CHILDLESS WOMEN

These women, once childless, now happy and physically well, with healthy children, will tell how Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound made all this possible. Here are the names and correct addresses—write them if you want to, and learn for yourself. They are only a few out of many thousands.

"I have a fine strong baby daughter now."—Mrs. A. A. GILES, Dewittville, N. Y., Route 44.

"I have a big, fat, healthy boy."—Mrs. A. A. BALENGER, R. F. D. No. 1, Baltimore, Ohio.

Getting the Facts

MRS. Bickers sighed deeply as she regarded her son Willie, who was eating his dinner with suspicious propriety. Not once had he had to be reminded not to grab things and he had said "please" before every request. His hands were clean and his hair was brushed to a shiny smoothness. Altogether, Willie was so much a model child as to cause comment in the Bickers family. Even Willie's father had noticed it.

"I feel so sorry for Mrs. Gassmore," said Mrs. Bickers, after her introductory sigh.

"Anybody died?" asked Bickers.

"No," said Mrs. Bickers. "It's worse than that. There's nothing worse than to be deceived by those you love and trust—and I tell you, Mrs Gassmore felt so bad about it that there were tears in her eyes when she told me. Her son Tommy, had caused the tears."

"Huh?" said Willie Bickers, startled. He ceased buttering his hot biscuit.

"I knew you'd feel just as I did about it, Willie," said his mother kindly. "Although you are such a friend of Tommy's, I realize that you never would approve of certain things he has done. You have been brought up too well and you understand right-and wrong."

"Why, Mrs. Gassmore," I said to her to-day," went on Willie's mother, "if my Willie had acted that way I couldn't have been any more surprised! Tommy has such honest eyes"——

What'd he do?" queried Willie huskily.

"Do?" echoed his mother. "Tommy Gassmore, after all his mother had told him, went swimming this afternoon, that's what he did! When he had been expressly forbidden to go near the place—just like you, Willie—let alone enter the water!"

"The young scamp!" said Bickers, emphatically. He regarded the sleek hair of his son with new interest.

"Yes, wasn't it dreadful?" asked Mrs. Bickers. "I suppose he thought his mother never would know it. That's what makes it so particularly sad—his trying to deceive his mother.

"But those things always get found out, and I presume he realizes that now. I was so surprised, because I had considered him nearly as trustworthy a boy as our Willie and"——

"H-h-how'd they find out?" inquired Willie gruffly. "No, thanks—I don't want any more creamed potatoes. Nor 'sparagus."

"I hope you don't feel ill or anything, Willie," said his mother anxiously.

"Usually you want so many helpings and you've had only one to-night. Why, Tommy must have cut his foot while swimming, because when he got home it hurt him so he had to take off his shoe and his mother questioned him, and besides his hair was all wet."

"Awful give-away, wet hair," said Bickers sternly. "Why are you fussing at your head, Willie? Let your hair alone—you'll muss it all up, and I notice you have brushed it unusually well this evening."

"Yes, I noticed it, too," said Mrs. Bickers. "I am so glad Willie is taking pride in his personal appearance. I hope Tommy Gassmore will realize some day how disgracefully he has acted. It is boys like that who start out by fibbing and deceiving who end by being criminals. I don't know that I want you to associate with Tommy any more, Willie. He might lead you into doing things that you shouldn't, and I should so hate to have you begin. Of course, I know that if you did anything wrong you would be man enough to come and tell us about it as soon as you had thought it over."

"D-did Tommy talk much?" asked Willie, in a slightly cracked voice. "Wh-when he told his mother, I mean?"

"Talk much?" echoed Mrs. Bickers. "Why, what do you mean, Willie? I suppose not. I suppose he felt too ashamed to say more than he had to! Why do you ask?"

"Nothin'," said Willie. He squirmed in his seat. "I jus' wondered!"

His hand sought his head again and a look of alarm overspread his countenance as he drew it away from the extreme back and saw water shining on it. Apparently his obtuse parents saw nothing and were eating with perfect appetites.

"Say," Willie blurted out, in a mangled voice, "I went swimming with Tommy—when he did, you know. Honest, I forgot, ma; honest, I did!"

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

The girl drew herself up. "Nevertheless, Mr. Warren, in spite of prudence, wisdom or death itself, I shall go to my brother to-night!"

There was a little pause; he looked down at the floor and thought swiftly.

"Very well," he said at last. "I yield to the force of your determination. You shall go to-night—but I insist on one concession."

"What is that?"

"You must let me go ahead and look over the ground. I will signal you when it is safe to follow."

The Signal.

"But how can you signal?"

"With a light." He crossed to the window and studied the forbidding mass of the castle for a few moments. "A light in one of those higher towers. You can see it from here. You won't have long to wait," he added earnestly. "It will shine within an hour."

"But"—the girl's voice faltered—"but if—it does not shine?"

He smiled upon her, lightly but tenderly.

"Well," he drawled, whimsically, "then I'll be too busy swapping lead for brimstone with Mr. Spook to stop and hang a lantern. I had expected," he went on seriously, "that your cousin would remain here with you, and I can not understand why he should desert you at such a crisis."

She broke off abruptly and bit her lip, looking down at the floor.

The Princess looked stern. "Nor can I—unless——"

"Unless—what?" he inquired slowly, after an uncomfortable silence.

The girl made a sudden gesture of despair. "Oh, if I only knew!" she cried. "If I only knew! I'm so confused—I'm at my wits' end! My mind—I can't think!"

She pressed both hands to her head and staggered as she moved toward a seat. The next instant Jarvis was supporting her, both hands in his, and gazing intently into her face. Little quivers that were not all of love were icing up her spine, and even as he gazed into the waxed rose of the beautiful face he felt an all but overpowering desire to look over his shoulder. Seventh sense, premonition. The psychologists—those tedious dissectors—are still squabbling over the terminology, but young Jarvis felt the realness of the sensation. The sudden and menacing appearance of Robledo, the eerie palm-reading of the innkeeper's girl, the inexplicable desertion of the Duke—all these combined to give him an unshakable and growing sense of gathering danger. And all about him was the breathing still of the mountain night, like nature's cowering hush before the lash of the hurricane sweeps the land.

His voice and the grip on the little hands grew tense.

"You've got to think! Don't let go now! Here—quick! Get hold of yourself!"

Herself Again.

The girl instantly responded to the best treatment for all superficial nervous troubles—a sharp, incisive voice. She opened her eyes, and with a wondering, startled look.

"You are holding something from me," he charged swiftly. "What happened on the boat that changed your manner? What worried you when the Duke drove ahead? I saw it again when he closed that door. What is it?"

He felt her shiver and her eyes, avoiding his, roamed wildly about the room.

"Oh, if I could only—if I were only sure I could trust you!"

Instantly she got the best answer in the world—the quick, unconscious setting of a man's muscles under the sting of insult. It was gone in a breath, but she felt and recognized it with joy.

"Too late for doubts now," he said crisply, as if the affront were of no importance in the face of graver things. "Your brother's life is at stake! We must stick together—you and I! It's your only chance. How can I help you unless I know everything? Don't you see that I am fighting in the dark—that I am up against a solid wall of mystery and this may be the key? Never mind what you think or fear—this is the time you've got to trust me!"

The girl was breathing quickly.

"You couldn't—" she began brokenly, and then, her voice rising: "Oh, I do believe in you! In my heart I have trusted you from the first. It's my heart; not my mind that trusts you now!" She paused a moment and drew a deep breath as he stared at her blankly. She gazed full into his face as if to watch for the slightest betraying tremor.

"The locket is gone."

The look of utter, dizzy amazement that came over his face was proof enough of his innocence. It hardly needed his mechanical:

"Gone—where?"

"I don't know," she cried miserably.

"But—when did you miss it?"

"Three days ago—on th steamer."

"And you have no idea now who has the plan that was in the locket?"

His tone was high and accusing, and she kept her eyes away from his.

"I suspect, of course," she admitted feebly, "but I can't be sure! I—"

"Your Highness," he broke in triumphantly, "I've got the first trail of the spook that's haunting your castle. Rusty, the horses!"

"Yes, sah; yes, sah!" came the servitor's voice from the yard.

"Quick now; we've got no time to lose."

He was buttoning his coat as he spoke, and now he picked up his hat.

"You think—" began the Princess, a little uncertainly.

"I think your cousin has not gone to Madrid. Time is everything now. I shall start at once and you must rest here until you get the signal."

"Your overcoat," she reminded him as he made for the door. "It's upstairs."

"Never mind that."

"You'll need it," she insisted. "It's cold. Nita—Nita! Wait—I'll get it."

Before he could protest she ran lightly up the stairs. With a warm glow on him that no overcoat could have produced, Jarvis followed her halfway up.

As he did so, the figure of a man blotted out the moonlight that fell in the doorway. A man muffled in a big cloak stepped just inside, his right arm carried rigidly at his side. From this position he could command the foot of the stairs, but could not be seen from the stairway itself.

The Princess appeared at the top with the coat on her arm.

"Don't come down—I'll get it."

"You are sure you know the way?" she asked, tremulously, as he relieved her.

"North road, second turn to the right."

"Yes, that takes you to the postern gate."

"Thank you."

But still he lingered, though he had said time was precious. Their eyes met in a long look. Both colored and looked away. With a swift movement she took something off her neck and threw it about his shoulders.

"This little cross and chain," she said softly. "Wear it to-night for me, my knight!"

He gained possession of the hand for a moment.

"Only for to-night?" he whispered.

"You may never see to-morrow."

Something seemed to interfere with the workings of Jarvis' throat.

"If I never see to-morrow"—his voice sounded to his own ears like a stranger's and there was the beating of a whole drum corps in his ears—"you will forgive me for telling you that—I love you! Don't—don't rebuke me to-night. Wait until to-morrow—if tomorrow ever comes." He smiled and her eyes drooped before the light in his. "To-night your humble vassal goes forth in his lady's cause. While all Segura waits ghost and ghost-breaker shall stalk the halls."

He stooped and swiftly kissed her hand.

"Your Highness, you will see the light in the tower inside an hour!"

A Fight in the Dark.

"God be with you, my knight!" she prayed softly—and was gone.

He waited until the last sound of her footsteps had died and a door closed in the distance. Then his pulses leaping wildly, he turned and made one step down the stairs—and stopped.

A poet once asked, and left unanswered, "Upon what may life depend?" In this instance Warren Jarvis' life hung on the slender chance that he would wait until he could not longer hear the sound of his lady-love's footsteps. Light as they were they would have distracted his mind so that he would never have caught the faint but keen metallic click that was as clear as the spoken word to a man born in a country where the babies used to use a .45 revolver for a teething ring.

Survival largely depends on preparedness for the unexpected in the world of action. Warren Jarvis did not waste any time investigating. He did not care to make inquiries to be certain that the cocking of the pistol had a definite connection with his career in this world.

No; he began humming "Dixie" in the care-free, exultant manner of the successful lover, and swiftly took in the field of action. In a fraction of a second he had planned his battle. On the stair post at the foot of the stairs was an oil lamp, the only light in the room, for the fire had died down to a faint glow. He slung the overcoat across his right arm, with his left arm loosened something that hung under his coat and across his heart. Then, still humming "Dixie," he walked down the stairs without any attempt at concealment.

Just before he came within the range of vision of the doorway he leaned forward and dashed his coat against the lamp. At that same instant he whipped out his pistol, crouched and did a baseball slide out across the stone floor, on hip and shoulder, his eyes turned toward the door.

There was a flash and a roar and a man's figure outlined against the moonlight and then almost as quickly as the two shots had sounded in the hotel, the Kentuckian's revolver spoke twice.

There was an oath, a cry of "Sancta Maria!" and a heavy fall.

Laying the Ghost.

The moon had sunk just below the rim of the mountain wall when Jarvis and Rusty, the latter groaning at every jump, clattered up that last reach of the old road to the castle.

Desecrated by the bright Spanish sunlight, the old castle would have moved one to pity as would the sight of a broken-down warrior. In the rich moonlight, softened and hallowed, the stately sweep of its walls and the but stagnant wastes of the moat, and the long tendrils of vapor curled and crept out like the stealthy arms of cold and evil spirits, enfolding and chilling the heart and welcoming all who dared the walls to an embrace of death. And somewhere within an owl cried out an uncanny warning, like a tocsin summoning the legions of darkness to meet the rash invader.

"Jimminy!" muttered Jarvis, with a shiver, as they drew up at the postern gate. "It's no wonder those fat-headed boobies down there wouldn't come up to this place!"

To Be Continued Monday.

THE LOCKET STOLEN

The girl was breathing quickly. "You couldn't"—she began brokenly, and then her voice rising. "Oh, I do believe in you! In my heart I have trusted you from the first. It's my heart, not my mind, that trusts you now!" She paused a moment and drew a deep breath as he stared at her blankly. She gazed full into his face as if to watch for the slightest betraying tremor. "The locket is gone!"

For Fat Men Only

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

THIS is a tip I give you, as it was given to me,
Right in the thick of the summer, with the mercury ninety-three,
Right in the thick of the summer, with everything sizzling hot,
And all of us looking crimson, like lobsters cooked in a pot.

When you slowly dress in the morning and reach for a collar new,
Don't button it in the back, boys; the button in front will do.
The collar will stay where you put it, looking and feeling fine,
And there'll be no torturing button a-boring into your spine.

This is the tip I was given, and I pass it along as lore
To all of my husky brothers, with "seventeen" necks or more.
Try it, and all of the buttons that caused you worry and pain
Will land in back of the dresser, and never come out again.

Courting Death

LAST week I dined with Lord Evendale, the well-known English multi-millionaire, and Chamus, former chief of detectives, at the house of a mutual friend. Our host had imagined that these two men, the Englishman, with his blase paradoxes and strange whims, and the Frenchman, with his memories of a life rich in daring deeds, might amuse or at least interest us. Long before dinner was over the skirmishes between these two highly contrasting characters had begun and their conversation was exceedingly interesting to follow.

"You do your fellow men a mighty poor service," said Lord Evendale, in a tone of contempt, "when you use your intelligence and energy to protect their lives. Life, indeed, is worth next to nothing."

"Still, life is the only blessing we really possess," Chamus replied firmly, looking straight into the Englishman's eyes, "the only one we really control. I consider it our duty to live the time allotted us and to make it as useful as possible to ourselves and others."

"Oh, nonsense," exclaimed Lord Evendale. "At any other time perhaps life was worth living, but nowadays it is not. The progress of civilization makes it easy for us to enjoy all the joys of existence, leaving absolutely no room for further wishes. As for myself, all the wishes, that I could get fulfilled without any exertion whatever, were so disgusting to me already at the age of 25 that I turned away from them and longed only for one thing—death. I resolved to die."

Various Ways.

"There are different ways of committing suicide," remarked Chamus, whom this confession, with its immense egotism, annoyed. "The only difficulty is the choice, from poison to a hempen rope."

"I was religious," the Englishman went on unaffected, "and, besides, my mother suspected the spleen which poisoned my life, and made me take an oath never to commit suicide. I made this oath willingly, because I imagined it would be easy to find a way of being killed without doing it yourself, but I have found that to a man in my position it is the most difficult thing in the world. They had barely begun to suspect my fatal intentions before a host of friends and relatives began to watch me."

"You will pardon me if I refuse to believe you," said Chamus, "even a lord and a millionaire can manage as easily as anything to get killed if he really does want to get rid of his life. There are a thousand chances every day."

single lion, crocodile nor even a snake. At a lake in the heart of the Soudan I met a tribe of real savage natives, only to have them nurse me back when I got the fever. I went to the Transvaal and arrived there just as the peace had been signed. And now I have returned as safe and sound as ever, but full of despair, because I can not find death."

He Did Wrong.

"You need not despair," said Chamus, contemptuously, "but if you really did want to die you did wrong in leaving the big cities, where the struggle for existence has made men ten times more dangerous than all the wild beasts in the world. That at least is the experience I have had while hunting human beasts of prey for more than twenty years."

The two men had arisen and stood looking straight into one another's eyes.

Chamus continued: "If you are absolutely determined to die without committing suicide I am able to give you a prescription. At the utmost it will cost you no more than a couple of sous."

"Will you be kind enough to give it to me to-day?"

"With pleasure. What time is it?"

"Half-past ten."

"Then you have plenty of time. Take the train from Gare St. Lazare at 11:05. Get out at 11:45 at Point du Jour, or, better still, at Grenelle. Then walk slowly back and forth along the old fortifications, and if you return to Maison Blanche alive I shall apologize to you in the presence of our friends here."

"I understand; and, to tempt the apaches there to carry out their coup to the satisfaction of everybody, I shall fill my pockets with gold."

"I should not advise you to do that," said Chamus brutally. "If the booty is too rich it may tempt those fellows to attack peaceful people who are not passing the place simply because they are tired of living. I advise you to pay the fellows who do you the favor of taking your life the exact amount at which you value your life, no more and no less. In that way you will not be robbing your heirs."

Many Thanks.

"I thank you, sir. If everybody were like you I should not be disgusted with life. I shall follow your advice and keep in my pocket no more than the amount at which I value my life."

* * * * * * *

I thought no more of the matter, but when I opened my paper the next morning I was shocked to read the following paragraph:

"In the small hours of the morning a police patrol between Grenelle and Vaugirard found the body of a man who had been murdered by apaches with a lasso close to the fortifications. He was stylishly dressed and was easily identified, for in his left shoe was found the following note:

"'The Lord did me a poor favor when he let me be born into this world. At last I see an opportunity to get rid of my life without committing suicide, and I make use of it unhesitatingly. They will murder, but not rob me, for I have given the driver who drove me to the station all my valuables, keeping exactly ten sous to pay for my ticket to Grenelle. Low as was the valuation M. Chamus placed on my life, I value it even lower myself, for my murderers will kill me for the value I put on my life—nothing.'"

Up-to-Date Jokes

At a small country church a newly married couple were receiving some advice as to how they were to conduct themselves.

"You must never both get cross at once; it is the husband's duty to protect his wife whenever an occasion arises, and a wife must love and honor and obey her husband, and follow him wherever he goes."

"But, sir——" pleaded the young bride.

"I haven't finished yet," remarked the clergyman. "She must——"

"But, please, sir"—in desperation—"can't you alter that last part? My husband is a postman."

Two women who had not seen each other for many years met unexpectedly in the street.

"How do you do?" exclaimed one, effusively.

"Now, this is delightful!" said the other, who was the elder. "You have not seen me for eleven years, and yet you know me at once! I can not have changed so dreadfully in all that time. It flatters me."

"Oh, I recognized your bonnet!" said the first.

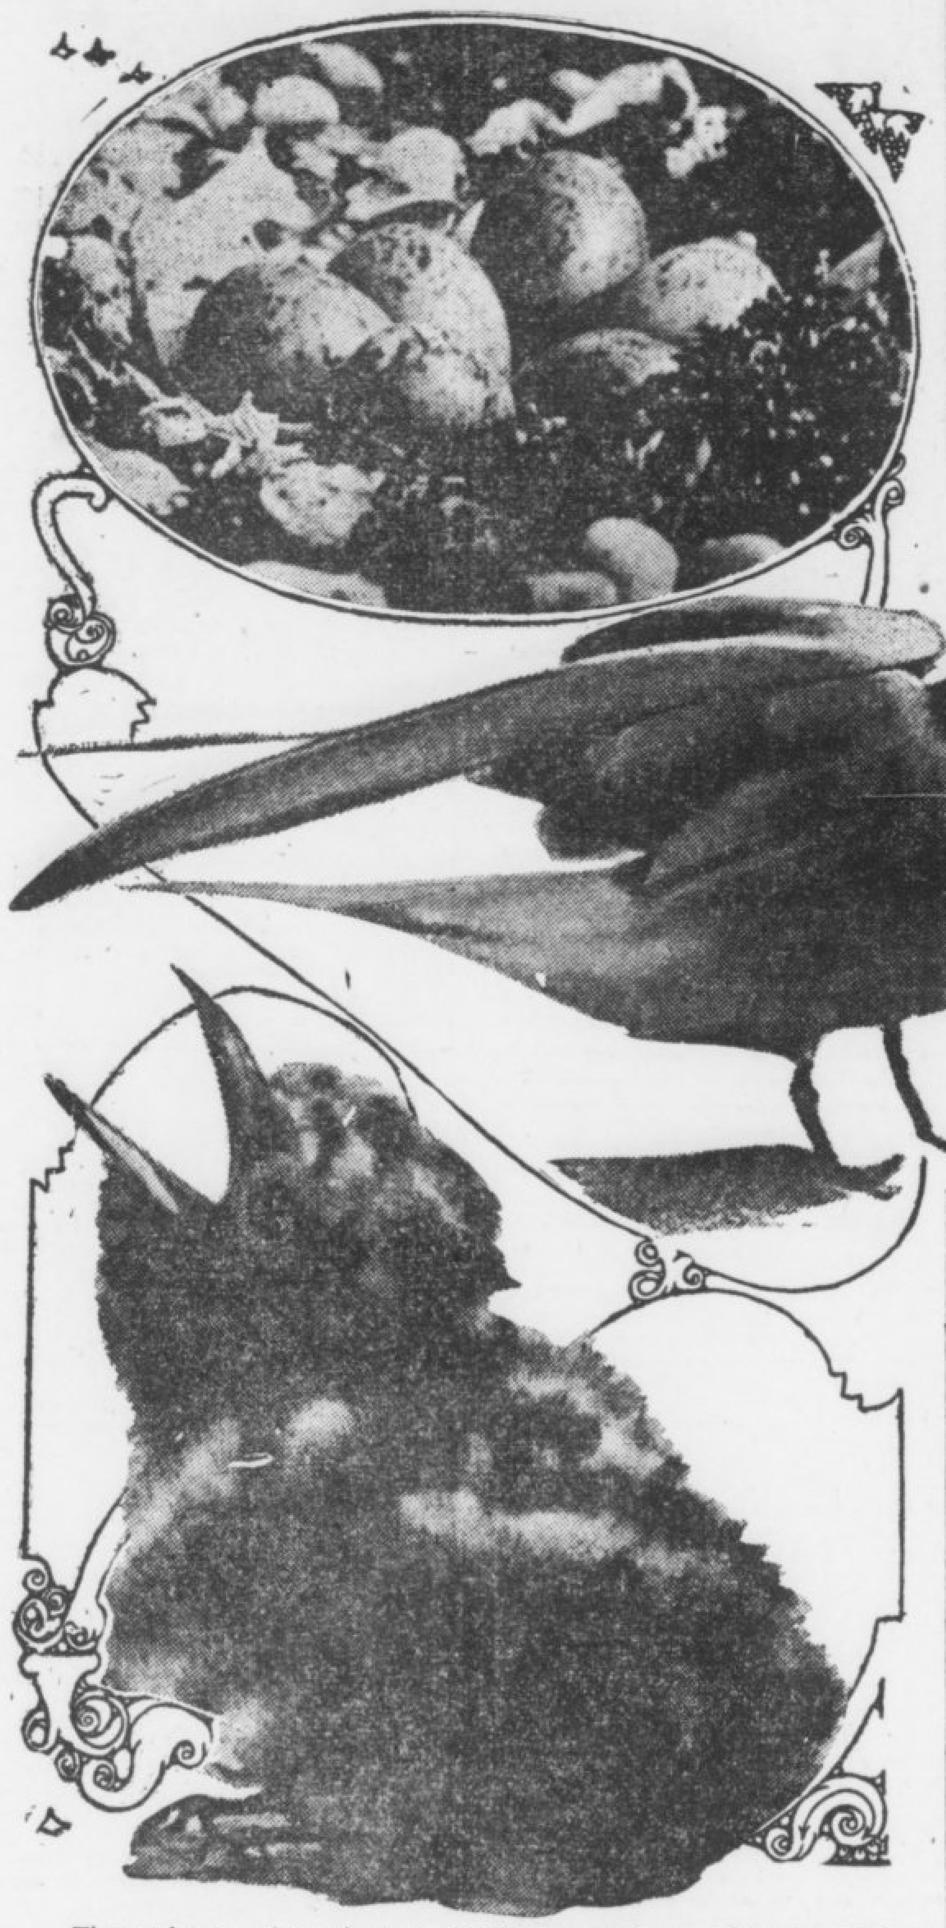
The Murder of the Birds

By GARRETT P. SERVISS.



These pictures show the tern, or sea swallow, one of its young and its eggs. This beautiful bird has been made nearly extinct by the ruthlessness of hunters.

AMONG the interesting animals that man has succeeded in more or less completely exterminating without any real benefit to himself is the tern, or sea swallow, some remarkable photographs of which, made in England, are shown herewith.

They belong to the gull tribe of birds, and get their popular name from their curious flight, which resembles that of a land swallow. Like the true gulls, they have great power of wing and often go far out to sea. Including the long tail, they are about 15 inches in length, and they present a very picturesque appearance as they skim along the surface of the waves, with their black heads, gray wings, white bellies and red legs, catching small fishes and mollusks without stopping, and sometimes diving after their prey.

They breed along the coasts and often follow rivers, and even reach inland lakes. Unfortunately for them, both their eggs and their plumes are attractive, and merciless hunting has almost driven them from the eastern shores of the United States, as well as from those of Western Europe and the British Isles.

A Knowing Bird.

But they know their enemy and in recent times they have chosen their breeding places in spots almost inaccessible to the hunters. Lately one of their concealed breeding places has been found on a lonely part of the coast of Norfolk, England, and the photographs were taken there by hunters who had no other aim than to increase our knowledge of the ways and peculiarities of animals which, as far as we know, have as good a right to enjoy the gifts of nature as we have.

One interesting fact about this home of English terns is that it is believed to be far older than the British Empire, there being evidence that they have inhabited it from a time anterior to that of the arrival of the conquering Normans.

The story of the terns serves to call attention to one of the most neglected parts of everybody's education. The man or woman who knows the birds is a rara avis("rare bird") in these days, and that, too, when so much is said of the charms and wonders of natural history. Even in the country, there are only about half a dozen birds, such as the robin, the bobolink, the barn swallow, the bluebird and the sparrow, that any person you meet can tell you anything about. For most people birds are only birds. Yet if you will read such a book as old Gilbert White's "Natural History of Selborne"—one of the most delightful books ever written—you will be quickly convinced that the bird world is worth a great deal of attention, and that those who know nothing about it are as ignorant of some of nature's greatest charms as are those who do not know one star from another.

A Vacation Idea.

When you go into the country or to the seashore for your vacation, take a book on ornithology along, and make acquaintance with the many species of birds which you are sure to see. Study them with an opera glass and make photographs of them with your camera. Learn to distinguish them from one another not only by their plumage, but by their songs, their calls, their manner of flight, the character of their nests and the places that they most frequent; watch their daily life and habits; follow them through the fields and into the forests—and don't shoot them! You will find in this way that a new source of interest in the world you live in has been opened for you.

One of the recollections of childhood that I should most regret to lose is that of the wonderful song of a thrush that I used to hear at sundown, ringing across the fields from some far-away hidden place, the sweetest sound I ever heard! I would leave my play and stop to listen in simple wonder. It was long before I found out the name of the bird that sang that marvelous evening song, which fascinated everyone who listened to it, and I never caught sight of the bird itself, and yet it seems to me that I shall hear that melody as long as the cells of memory transmit their impressions!

And yet men endowed with the divine gift of human intelligence murder birds by wholesale; murder them for their plumage; murder them to get a new dainty for jaded appetites; murder them, most horrible of all, for the mere sake of killing; to see their delicate feathers fly from the impact of the shot, and their little bodies drop mangled upon the ground! And this is called—SPORT!

Smithson on the Continent

THEY were openly courting!

It was in the Continental train running down to Naples. Smithson, clerk in a London shipping office, on the most ambitious vacation of his life, was the chief spectator. The tall, dark Italian who was talking to the young couple in animated style did not seem at all embarrassed by their conduct.

Smithson shifted in his corner seat and tried not to look in their direction. But his glance repeatedly strayed to the olive-complexioned girl, jet-haired, brilliant-eyed, whose adorer, as young and sun-tinted as herself, embraced her neck with his right arm, and fondled her fingers with his other hand.

"Ah!"

Smithson had remembered he was in Italy—the country of romance. He felt more at ease. To show his tolerance he would beg a match. Ignorance of Italian was nothing to a man crossing the Continent to catch a German liner for the return Mediterranean trip—all to be achieved in a fortnight.

After several genial glances at the trio, which seemed to give great offense, he took out his pipe, and, fixing his eyes on the tall, dark man, he pointed to his empty bowl and struck an imaginary match on his trousers.

A direct insult could not have caused a more startling outburst. It came like a gunshot—

"Insulte!"

Bright Eyes.

A less steady eye would have quailed beneath the Italian's flashing gaze. But Smithson had noticed the curious, bewitching fight in the orbs of the beautiful girl, which were directed toward his face, and he replied grandly:

"Not at all!"

The dark man retorted with a torrent of sentences.

Smithson might have used the single Italian word he knew, "apologia," but he recalled the advice given him by an uncle at Dover: "Nephew, if you get into a vocal dilemma with a foreigner, meet volubility with volubility—recite poetry, anything; but don't falter, and, above all, gesticulate and smile."

Sentence on sentence still stumbled from the dark man. A look of softness had come into the eyes of the girl opposite, but she clung to her lover as if the little clerk was a bold highwayman.

There was no longer any reassurance in the beautiful girl's face. When the little clerk sought it she cringed before his glance, and the tall man moved to screen her from view.

The train slowed down slightly. Occasionally the little clerk cast a furtive glance at the scenery flying by. He could think only of poetry as a means of stemming the other's tide of wrath. He leaned back, and with the smile of a seraph looked up at him and begin in pathetic, pacifying tones:

An Experiment.

"I am out of humanity's reach,
I must finish my journey alone,
Never hear the sweet music of speech,
I start at the sound of my own."

It was electrical. The Italian's face relaxed. The anger went out of his black eye. He bowed magnificently and stepped aside, and after voluble explanation to the lovers, sat down.

Smithson whistled mentally. "Phew! He thinks I've apologized."

Presently the tall man turned, and, pointing to Smithson's gold watch, stammered slowly: "You—haf—time?"

"What! You speak English?" Smithson proudly exposed to view the face of the watch.

"A leetle," was the answer.

All four were now smiling. The beautiful girl, especially, seemed gratified at the calm after the storm. The train ran into the station.

"Naples?" Smithson exclaimed.

"Anpoli," the Italian answered. "You eat?"

"Rather!"

With a pleasant farewell the lovers departed in a carriage, and Smithson, casting after the beautiful girl a regretful glance, accompanied the tall man on foot to a restaurant. "An experience to tell the chaps at home," he told himself. "Can't stand a vacation without incident!"

But he grumbled when, after a meal of delicate dishes which he could scarcely swallow, the proprietor of the restaurant negligently placed before him a bill for two.

An Argument.

"No, no, you mistake," he said easily.

"Sir, our price," stammered the proprietor, reproachfully. And the dark man nodded assent.

"But I've not brought you—you brought me—you crook," Smithson expostulated. He offered five francs, half the sum claimed.

The proprietor rejected it with a torrent of protest, endless as the dark man's in the train.

Smiling, as before, Smithson repeated the verse which had then acted so soothingly. It had no effect. Finally he exploded: "I wish I knew 'Paradise Lost.' I'd recite the whole book at you!" As a last resort, with a forced smile he began:

"The boy stood on the burning deck——"

"Burnidek?" the proprietor interrupted. "What ess 'burnidek'?"

"Confound you!" Smithson thundered, "that's where the boy stood! Do you think I'm going to listen to you fellows yarning without saying a word?"

A passing gendarme entered. Protest was useless. As an alternative to accompanying the officer Smithson paid ten francs and stamped into the street—the gendarme accepting from the proprietor one franc for settling the dispute.

On his way to the landing stage, whither he went to inquire if his liner were in, Smithson felt for his watch.

It was gone!

The Mistakes of Jennie :.: By HAL COFFMAN

Being a Series of Chapters in the Life of a Southern Girl in the Big City

They Would All Look at Jennie.

THINGS went along quietly with Jennie for three or four weeks. She had paid the $1.50 weekly installment on her clothes regularly, but she noticed everything was not quite right at the office. Her former girl friend would not speak to her, and Jennie often noticed her whispering to the other girls, and then they would all look at Jennie.

Jennie knew they were talking about her, but she could not find out what it was they said.

Usually, in the office during the dull season, they laid several of the girls off or let them go entirely, but they always kept the best ones—the ones that always did just a little MORE than the boss asked them to do.

Jennie had always been among these, for she worked hard and kept her mind on her work—that is, she used to before she got the foolish ideas about clothes and wanting to do like other girls she saw.

Of late Jennie had been thinking more of the good times she had, and wanted to have, than she had of her work, and had made several mistakes in her work, for which she was "called down" by the boss.

She felt and knew that the other girl was doing all she could to make Jennie lose her job, and what then of the $1.50 weekly installment on her clothes, and also the remainder of her $8.00 a week that was so badly needed at home.

Jennie had not seen the fellow since Tom met them at the door going to the hotel and had realized what a narrow escape she had when Tom told her what an awful place it was. One of the girls told Jennie that the boss wanted to see her, and with a dryness in her throat and fluttering heart she went slowly toward the private office of the boss.

Mild and Bitter :-: A Humorous Yarn

MR. POLLOCK, the landlord of the "Comfortable Gill," sat at his door looking out upon the dusty road and the stretch of meadow beyond and beyond that again at the line of pollard willows which marked the stream. He took from his pocket a large white handkerchief, upon which a crop of red spots had broken out very much as though it had had the measles, and wiped his forehead with it, careless of infection.

The morning was hot, and he had just been engaged in severe physical exertion, nothing less than the conveyance, with the help of the brewer's men, of a thirty-six gallon barrel of ale into the cellar. The feat had been safely accomplished, and he had cause for satisfaction. Yet all was not well with him. There was a slight frown upon his forehead and a thoughtful expression in his watery blue eyes as they roved across the meadows to a spot by the stream, where stood a figure of a man clad in Norfolk jacket and knee breeches and carrying a fishing rod. Mr. Pollock eyed him thoughtfully, and scratched his stubble on his chin—of which he had two.

"Been here three weeks," he muttered, "and I ain't seen the color of his money yet. Promises—yes! Settle when he goes! But then, he ain't a-going—and living on the fat of the land, too. Not overmuch baggage to speak of. Of course, he may be a gentleman. Very likely he is. But then, again, he mayn't be. No. It's no go. I'll have it out with him this very morning."

He stiffened in his determination as he saw the fisherman turn from the stream and come toward him across the meadows. It was evident that the morning's sport had not proved very satisfactory. As he came nearer he revealed himself as a slightly built man with dark hair, narrow black eyes and a humorous twist about the corners of his mouth. He greeted Mr. Pollock cheerfully, but the landlord, having made up his mind to an unpleasant duty, was not to be put off by blandishments.

He Speaks.

"Morning, Mr. Twigg," he said abruptly, in response to the fisherman's greetings. "No luck, I suppose? One can't do much when the sky's as bright as it is. There's a small matter I was wanting to speak to you about—that little account of mine."

He coughed and drew his stout form a little more upright. Mr. Twigg's dark eyes rested upon him a moment and then wandered away to the right, to where the little country station stood, neat and trim, amongst its flowery beds.

"I think I told you," he said, "that I proposed to settle when I left."

"Exactly," answered Mr. Pollock eagerly, seeing an opening for effective argument. "And what I want to know is, when that's going to be, for, you see, supposing you was to stay here forever; then you wouldn't ever settle it. Now, as man to man, would you?"

Mr. Twigg laughed.

"Well, no," he admitted, pleasantly. "Since you put it that way, I shouldn't. But you needn't be afraid. Very nice place, this—pleasant, and quiet, and all that, but not quite the spot for a permanent residence. As a matter of fact, I was thinking of leaving this morning. There's a train in about a half hour, isn't there? And I've sent my trunks up to the station."

"Oh, you have, have you?" said Mr. Pollock, with a momentary suspicion. "Then you and me can settle up before you go—comfortable and pleasantlike."

"Certainly," answered Mr. Twigg, promptly. "I've just got to go upstairs and pack the small handbag, and then I'll come down and settle up."

"Very well, sir," said Mr. Pollock, becoming more respectful at the prospect of approaching payment. "You can't say no fairer than that."

His Account.

He went into the bar to add up the details of his account, putting on a few dollars for luck. When Mr. Twigg descended he presented him with the bill. The fisherman put down his handbag and thrust his hands into his trouser pockets, as though to produce the necessary coin. In the midst of the process he paused and looked abstractedly at the landlord.

"You've treated me very well," he said, "and I shall recommend this place to my friends. And in return, I can show you a tip that ought to be useful to a man in your line of business. If you'd like to know I can show you a way to get two kinds of beer out of one barrel."

"Two kinds of beer out of one barrel?" said Mr. Pollock, staring. "Why, it can't be done."

"Two kinds of beer," repeated Mr. Twigg. "Mild and bitter."

"Well, if you can do that," said Mr. Pollock, scratching his head, "you're a marvel."

"It's perfectly easy when you know how to do it," answered Mr. Twigg, nonchalantly. "I'll be glad to snow it to you. You've got a barrel of beer in the cellar, I suppose?"

"Just got a new one this morning," answered Mr. Pollock. "Thirty-six gallons."

"Then that's the very thing," answered his guest. "If you've got such a thing as a large auger about the place I'll show you how to do it now."

In the excitement of watching this curious experiment Mr. Pollock forgot about the unsettled account. He rummaged in the bar and found an auger of the requisite size. Mr. Twigg inspected it with particular care. Armed with it and accompanied by his host he descended to the cellar where the mighty barrel stood upon its trestles. He eyed it carefully and tugged at his mustache—possibly to hide a smile.

The Experiment.

"No use knocking the spigot out," he said. "You need two holes—one for each kind of beer. The mild comes out at one hole, the bitter at the other. You'll find this tip so useful that you'll remember it all your life. So here goes."

He attacked the barrel with the augur, making the hole in the lower part of its face.

"Just stick your thumb in here whilst I make the other." Mr. Pollock complied, and he went on. "The beer which comes out of that hole will be mild," he explained as he bored, "and the beer which comes out of this one when I've finished it will be bitter, very bitter," he added, inaudibly. "Ah, there, it's done! Just stick your thumb in this one, then I'll show you."

Mr. Pollock hastily inserted his thumb into the second hole, and with both hands fully occupied waited for the miracle.

"And now," said Mr. Twigg, allowing his smile to broaden, "I'll just go along and catch my train. I've got five minutes and I can just do it. As I said, you've done me well while I've been here, and I think you'll admit that I've done you well in return. Good morning. Mild and bitter, remember, out of the same barrel. Don't forget."

He ran lightly up the cellar stairs and vanished into the stretch of sunlight beyond them. Mr. Pollock, with both thumbs stuck in the barrel, was busy employing a somewhat slow brain in calculation as to the choice between the loss of his account and the loss of 36 gallons of beer. He had not solved the problem by the time that Mr. Twigg stepped out of the little station on his way to town.

Accepted.

"Darling," whispered the ardent suitor, "I lay my fortune at your feet."

"Your fortune?" replied she in surprise. "I didn't know you had one."

"Well, it isn't much of a fortune, but it will look large beside those tiny feet."

Talked Through His Nose.

From America comes the story of a Scotsman who, while viewing a statue of George Washington, was approached by an interested American.

"I think you'll agree with me, sir," said the American, "that he was a great and good man. A lie never passed his lips."

"Weel," said the Scot, "I suppose he talked through his nose, like the rest o' ye."

The Fowler's Story :-: A Weird Tale, Complete

THE fowler's cottage stands at the edge of the fields where the estuary of the Whitewater joins the main, and if there be a more desolate spot in the Landshire coast I have yet to find it.

When I went down to the cottage the other night the weather, for all its roughness, seemed likely to favor fowling. When I reached the fowler's cottage I found its owner in strange mood. He was walking rapidly from kitchen to parlor, pausing every now and again to open the kitchen door and look out to seaward.

"I'm sorry ye've come down," he remarked as I reached the door, "for I can't come wi' ye to-night."

"Why not?" I asked. "Aren't you well? There is nothing the matter with wind or weather, and the tide'll bring a great many birds up."

"That's right enough," he replied; "and there's nothin' 'xactly wrong wi' me, but it is my unlucky night, and I dussn't go out."

"'Twere three years ago last night," he said; "chanced I were flight shootin' and didn't have no luck whatsomever. There was a shower of birds come out from the decoy pond, but blame me if they didn't keep out of range like, and I couldn't come near them nohow. An' as I walked back 'long the sea wall, a gre't ole owl came shrikkin' right past me, an' I thought, mebbe, she were a witch, an' I counted she'd driven the birds away from me; so I let fly and dropped her, and she were only an owl after all, for if so be she had been a witch the shot couldn't have stopped her. So I picked her up and carried her home for to stuff, and I count that were an unlucky thing to do. An' the very next night, three years ago to-night, with the wind just as you see it now, an' the moon in most the same quarter, I went out 'long the saltings for to hide behind a knoll, for I reckoned the duck were gettin' some shy of the sea wall.

"An' when I got down there and took me place just afore flight started, blame me if I didn't see another gre't old owl swoopin' down f'r the land; an' I dussn't shoot it, not knowin' when the flight would start, an' it come right past me, shrikkin' just like the one I'd shot the t'other night, and I knowed somethin' was wrong. Flight come late. It were ten minutes 'fore the first birds come over, and then they come all right and I got six or eight, and thought to myself I'd got skeered about nothin'. I forgot to tell ye that I 'adn't brought Spot wi' me 'cos she'd hurt her foot, an' I'd to leave her be'ind, so I 'ad to pick up me own birds, an' for to do that I kept all on turnin' round, and two was cripples an' ran; and when I'd got the lot and the light were most gone, blame me if I knew where the land was and where was the sea.

"I didn't know nowt about it at first startin' off. Seemed to me I were headin' towards the land right enough, and then I come to a place where the mud-bank stopped and there were deep water twenty yards wide comin' down with a rush from two sides at once. I looked for me landmarks, but couldn't see nothin' an' I knew there was somethin' wrong.

"I grew'd more an' more skeer'd like, an' begun to run forrard hard as ever I could, an' wherever I went the water kept all on chasin' arter me; an' blame me, if that gre't ole owl didn't pass agin in the dark, all white an' flutterin' an' screamin' at the top o' her voice. Then I know'd why it was I'd got caught, an' I just stood still, for I didn't know where to go no longer, an' then I see'd a light, sudden-like, right away from where I'd been a-runnin'. I didn't know what it might be, but I just started straight off for it, walkin' an' wadin' an' splashin' an' racin' like where the goin' was too soft; an' there was times when the water was up to me knees, but I kept all on goin' for the light, the only thing I could see."

"You must have known you were on the right road, then," I suggested.

"That I didn't," he replied, speaking as a man does when he has been running hard, "for I couldn't tell but that the light were a Jack o' lantern that would go out when I come nigh it an' leave me in th' worstapart of th' marsh, or that t'other old owl weren't a real witch what 'ad set it there for to drown'd me by. By anyway, the light were better than the darkness, an' so I run as best I could an' slipped twice an' dropped a brace o' me birds an' dussn't stop even for they, an' went on an' on till it seemed I'd never get to the end o' th' runnin'; but the light kept all on a-twinklin' an' so I kept all on a-runnin', an' at last I seed a bit of the breakwater, an' then all the things shaped theirselves an' I know'd in a moment where I was. An' the light were in me own parlor, for it chanced that me brother Jack 'ad come along, an' bein' lonely like, 'ad just lit the lamp for to see by, an' if it 'adn't been for that I'd never 'ave seen land again. I count th' old owl would ha' had me drownded."

"That is three years ago, you tell me," I said. "I should have thought you would have forgotten the trouble by now."

The old fowler stirred uneasily in his chair.

"I 'ad forgotten it," he confessed, "but last night, when I were down on the wall at flight-time, t'other old owl came shrikkin' past me again, an' I know'd she wanted to get me back on the saltin's, for I count she's a witch, an' it's 'er night. An' that's why I 'ont goo.

"Do ye listen," he said in hushed tones. "Do ye listen."

I stirred the fire to a glow that lit the fowler's scared, white face. Something gray and silent sailed between the window and the faint light of a moon half hidden by a clouddrift—a big owl passed, hooting.

THOMPSON AND DUNN ATLANTA BATTERY TO-DAY

By Joe Agler.

NEW ORLEANS, July 19.—Thompson and Dunn will be the Cracker battery to-day, and the club is brim full of pep and confidence as a result of the easy victory of yesterday over the Pelicans.

Dent really worked about ball all the way. The only run New Orleans made was a gift to the visitors by way of a fielder's choice.

Billy Smith's clubs put up a great batting attack, with Welchonce and Alperman leading. Joe Dunn also contributed a most timely double that cleared up the tow-path when it was in a highly congested condition.

Walker, supposed to be the speed king of this circuit, was soft for the Crackers and the only question was to what length their attack would run the score.

The shake-up in the batting order proved a wise move, certainly for that game, at any rate. Wally Smith seems to be in a bit of a slump just now, but he is sure to hit his stride again, as he is one of those natural hitters who can't stay off the ball long at a time.

"King" Brady has left the team and Clarke has reported. The new hand is a big, raw-boned fork-hander and while he was warming up yesterday he showed a barrel of stuff. He pitches like Otto Hess and should held out a lot in the climb the Crackers now seem to have started for the top.

BASEBALL
Diamond News and Gossip

A crowd of Philadelphia fans tried to mob Umpire Byron, of the National League, for his decisions against the Phillies yesterday, and if it had not been for Umpire Rigler and some policemen the arbitrator with the poetic name might have had his hair mussed up.

* * *

* * *

Smokey "Joe" Wood had his thumb hurt fielding a grounder in the game with the Tigers yesterday and won't be able to pitch again for two weeks.

* * *

Right Fielder Jackson, of the Naps, had stage fright and dropped three flies yesterday. This enabled the Yankees to win.

* * *

Huggins managed the Cardinals for the first time since he was beaned by Pitcher Tyler two weeks ago, but he won't be able to play for some time.

* * *

The Cubs and the Pirates are tied for third place in the National League now. The Pirates are 6½ points behind the Phillies, who are now second in the National League standing.

Umpire Klem had to run the Dodgers-Pirates game alone, but he did it to the satisfaction of all hands. His coconspirator, Al Orth, was under the weather.

SANTA MONICA WILL GO AFTER SAVANNAH MARK

LOS ANGELES, July 19.—The Santa Monica road race, to be run on August 9, will be one event open for all cars of 600 cubic inches and under, covering the course 53 times for a total of 445 miles.

This announcement was made after a meeting of the Santa Monica road race committee, making a radical departure from previous runnings of the coast classic.

The most important reason advanced for making the change and increasing the distance by nearly 50 per cent was so that the contestants might go after the grand prize record for 400 miles made on the Savannah course.

Because the 120-horsepower Flat with which Teddy Tetzlaff won the last race and established a new world's record is above the displacement restriction, the car has been eliminated from this year's race.

$20,000 FOR RITCHIE FOR THREE N. D. BOUTS

NEW YORK, July 19.—A $20,000 guarantee for three no-decision fights of ten rounds each awaits Willie Ritchie. Jimmy Johnston, matchmaker of the St. Nicholas A. C., today is awaiting word from the champion as to whether he will accept or not. Joe Shugrue, Jack Britton and Packey McFarland are the men picked by Johnston. As there are no decisions rendered in this city, Ritchie can not lose his title unless he is knocked out.

Johnston is also willing to guarantee Ritchie $7,500 if he will box Freddie Welsh, the English lightweight champion.

WASHBURN AND LEROY QUALIFY FOR GOLF FINALS

NEW YORK, July 19.—Watson M. Washburn and Robert Reroy and Theo. R. Pell and Raymond D. Little will meet this afternoon in the final match of the Round Robin tennis doubles of the Westchester Country Club.

The Washburn-Leroy combination finished at the top of the first division yesterday by defeating Adee and Rawlins by the score of 6-3, 6-3. This victory gave the winners the right to play Pell and Little, leaders of the second division, for the trophies to-day.

GOLF TOURNEYS FOR JUNIORS IS NEEDED MOST

By "Chick" Evans.

CHICAGO, July 19. — The announcement of the age limit tournament at Shokie suggests another thought. There is an increasing number of age-limit tourneys in the golf world about Chicago and a decreasing number of open events for young golfers.

The age-limit events are excellent things, but the lack of junior events is hard upon the young golfers, who can only look forward to "coming of age" and the chance, in consequence, of bringing up future great golfers becomes smaller yearly.

Didn't Know Own Ability.

A player does not know his ability until he enters into competition with other players. In my own case, I did not know that I was a first flighter until my tournament scores disclosed the fact. The big championships, of course, are always open to players with a low handicap, but the field is usually large and the players' abilities closely matched. If the young players can only enter these tournaments he will soon quit competitive golf, for the champion is only made after years and years of hard work.

The beginner in the big tournaments would probably be so far surpassed that he would lose courage and drop out of the game, for the promising young player must be provided with an occasional victory to keep his heart up.

Youngsters Want Competition.

The business man enjoys golf as an exercise, but the youngster has hundreds of ways of getting exercise, and there is a chance that he may desert golf unless he has a better way of showing his skill. It is true that he will be sorry later on, but the average individual lives in the present.

Just now, there seem to be very few young golfers of exceptional promise, and this dearth may, in part, be attributed to lack of competitive opportunities. The championship next week may disclose some new lights, but the chances are that the old, familiar names will be seen at the top of the list of qualifiers and in the last four.

More Tournaments Needed.

There is no doubt we need more tournaments and of the less exclusive types in order to develop players of the first class. The old Westward, Ho, junior tournament was famous in its time; Shokie also had a good one, and there were open events at Chicago Golf, Onwentsia, Midlothian, Edgewater, Exmoor, etc., all of which have been discontinued.

Age-limit events are excellent things, there should be many of them, but I plead for an occasional chance for the youngster.

Wolgast and Dundee Will Clash Sept. 9

LOS ANGELES, July 19.—Tom Jones has finally accepted terms of Promoter McCarey, of the Pacific A. C., and Ad Wolgast and Johnny Dundee are again matched to box at Vernon. September 9 has been set as the day for the battle. Jones has been holding out for a guarantee and a percentage as had been agreed upon for their previous match which was called off because of an injury to the Dutchman's hand. The winner of the Cross-Baldwin bout is to be matched with Joe Rivers at Vernon on Labor Day unless Champion Willie Ritchie will agree to reasonable terms for a bout with the Mexican on that date.

Cross started training to-day for his fight with Baldwin.

LYNCH FINES TWO CARDINALS.

NEW YORK, July 19.—President Lynch, of the National League, has fined Fielder Cathers and Second Baseman McGee of the St. Louis club, $25 each, for their fist fight at the Polo Grounds last Thursday.

WILLIE MEEHAN BEAT MANTELL

OAKLAND, CAL., July 19.—Willie Meehan, of San Francisco, won the decision over Frank Mantell, of Pawtucket, R. I., in a 10-round bout here last night.

NOW WHAT WILL CARRIGAN DO? ASK HUB FANS

By A. H. C. Mitchell.

BOSTON, July 19.—The question of the moment seems to be, "How will Bill Carrigan succeed as manager?" It is, of course, easier to ask the question than to answer it. In fact, it is impossible to answer it, because Bill has not had a chance to demonstrate his ability in a managerial capacity. However, it may be said that there is no good reason why he should not make a success of it. Ball players generally agree that Bill has baseball brains. He is a thinker, and as a catcher, he has to be a quick thinker or sit on the bench.

* * *

IT is the opinion of the writer that Wagner would not want the position if it were offered to him. He is perfectly content to be captain of the team. Wagner is really a very shy and diffident man. While he is a star ball player and a splendid captain, it is doubted if he would fit in well as a manager. Doubtless Wagner would say the same thing if he were asked about it.

* * *

WAGNER and Carrigan are the closest of friends and have been ever since they both became members of the squad. They are roommates. They comprised the "Board of Strategy" of the Red Sox organization last season when the team won the pennant. It is more than probable that this combination will resume business again now that Carrigan has been appointed manager. The meetings of the "Board" were discontinued during the world's series last fall, when Carrigan was not allowed to go behind the bat by Stahl, but was sent to the coaching line instead. It is asserted that Stahl was jealous of the publicity accorded the "Board" and decided to show all persons whom it might concern that he was the real, sole and only manager of the team. Of course, this report the writer has no first-hand information, but Stahl's actions in the series would seem to bear out the assertion.

* * *

IT is well that the change in managers is made when it is made. Carrigan will have the opportunity to become accustomed to his new duties. And if things go along all right he will have a chance to shape his team for next year. It is hardly within the range of possibilities for the Red Sox to win the pennant this wear. It seems to be too late. But the team can make a good finish if properly handled, and that is the work cut out for Manager Bill. Carrigan has the respect and confidence of his players. Stahl was well liked, for that matter, but when the players realized that he was making wrong moves and not using the best judgment in the handling of his team it, no doubt, had a bad effect on them.

O'TOOLE BETTER, BUT CAN HARDLY WORK THIS YEAR

PITTSBURG, July 19.—Marty O'Toole, the Pirate $22,500 pitcher who was recently operated upon for appendicitis, has left St. Margaret's Hospital and is now at his home in Homewood.

Indications are that it will be many weeks before he takes his regular turn on the rubber again. Baseball men fear he will be of no further use to the team this season.

CARPENTER BESTS KNIGHT.

DENVER, COLO., July 19.—Frank Whitney, the fighting carpenter, beat Phil Knight here last night in ten rounds.

TURNS DOWN BIG PRICE.

LOS ANGELES, CAL., July 19.—Ed Maier, president of the Venice Coast League Baseball Club, to-day refused an offer of $200,000 for the team and franchise by a syndicate which included John McGraw, of the New York National League Club.

Troops Quell Leith Riots.

LEITH, SCOTLAND, July 19.—In fights here to-day between striking dock workers and soldiers and sailors many persons were badly hurt and thousands of dollars property damage was done.

White Stops Abel in Two Rounds

Kid Young Loses to Lee on Foul

SEVERAL days ago Jack Britton stated that Charley White was the hardest hitting lightweight before the public to-day. Last night White met Jake Abel at the Auditorium-Armory and put him out in the second round of a scheduled ten-round battle. The punches that put Abel away were aleft-hand hook that traveled about two inches, followed by a right cross.

The punches landed by White were the hardest ever struck by a lightweight in this city. And when it is taken into consideration that White weighed only 127 pounds when he stepped into the ring, one can not give White too much praise for his wonderful boxing and punching power.

Never once did the Chicago boy make a misstep. Not a blow did he start that failed to land. He certainly is the best lightweight seen around here and he is a real contender for the lightweight crown.

Charley is only 21 years of age and has stopped such boys as Owen Moran, Johnny Dundee, Joe Thomas twice and Pal Moore twice. All these boys were going goodwhen White met them, but they were no match for the boy from the Windy City.

As for Abel, he never had a chance. When Jake would start a left, Charley would beat him to it. When Abel rushed White would meet him with sharp-shooting uppercuts. In fact, Abel appeared to be but a baby in White's hands. After the fight Abel seemed dumbfounded. He stated that the blow White hit him was the hardest he ever received.

Eddie Hanlon and Charley Lee were the surprises in the other bouts. Hanlon defeated Terry Nelson in an eight round set-to, but was fully eight pounds heavier than his Greek opponent. However, Hanlon put up a great bout and deserved much credit for his victory. He floored Nelson for the count of nine in the eighth round and nearly had the Greek out at the finish.

Lee sprung the surprise of the night by winning from Kid Young in six rounds on a foul. The battle was a hummer, full of excitement during the entire distance. Young hit Lee low twice in the sixth and was disqualified after an examination by a physician.

In the other match Tim Callahan won a four-round decision over Young Abe Attell.

A small crowd witnessed the bouts.

CONNIE MACK PRESENTS OLD UNIFORMS TO INDIANS

PHILADELPHIA, PA., July 19.—The baseball fan frequently wonders what becomes of the old uniforms, bats and gloves discarded by big league clubs. Much of their paraphernalia is used until it is so worn or damaged as to be of no further value, but every club manager has on file applications for outfittings no longer suitable for the major circuits.

Just at present the Indian team of St. Mary's Mission School at Omak, Wash., is proudly playing in uniforms formerly worn by the Athletics when they held the title of world's champions.

Manager Connie Mack was appealed to for some discarded suits early this spring, and in answer to the request forwarded not only uniforms, but gloves, bats and balls as well.

THIRD SACKERS LIKE R. WALLACE MIGHTY SCARCE

ST. LOUIS, MO., July 19.—When the count of 10 is tolled on Rhoderick Wallace as a major league player, then baseball will lose one of its greatest stars. But from present indications, Bob Wallace is going to establish a record for perpetual service in the big arena.

When this season opened the Scot started out on his eighteenth consecutive year. As has been the custom for the past few years, the high boss of the Browns has been trying to find a youthful successor for Wallace. A kid of more speed, a better swatter, a better fielder and a better player all around has been sought.

But this spring has been the same as the others. The recruits have arrived and the recruits have gone, and Bob Wallace remains a member of the Browns, playing the same snappy and sensational infield that he did when he was in his prime.

Some Star at Third.

In the last three games at Sportsman's Park fans have seen Wallace operate at third base. That's the spot where the veteran really became a star when he was with the old Cleveland Spiders and when he came to St. Louis, when the franchises of Cleveland and St. Louis were transferred in 1899.

Suffering with a pair of bad legs and a sore right hip, Wallace has played as spectacularly as any third baseman who has been in the big circle.

The play de luxe executed by Wallace was in a recent conflict with the Yanks. It happened in the fifth inning. Fisher was on second, with one out, when Wolter bounded to Lavan. The shortstop made a high peg to Wallace, trying for Fisher. No third baseman in the game would have completed the out. Wallace, stretching out, grabbed the high throw with his glove, and, with a quick swing, tagged Fisher as he slid into the bag.

Wallace didn't leap for the wild peg. Had he jumped he never could have made the swing to tag Fisher as he slid into the bag. It was a play that nobody but Wallace could have completed.

They Can't Get His Job.

Wallace started to slow up a few seasons ago. President Hedges, realizing this, instructed scouts to buy all the promising infielders. They did. Within the last few seasons Roy Hartzell, Eddie Hallinan, Mike Balenti, Harry Shanley, Eddie Daley, Derrill Pratt, Dee Walsh, and now Johnny Lavan have been on the job.

There's a collection of eight trying to push Wallace back to the minors. Hallinan, Daley, Shanley, Walsh, Balenti, Pratt and Hartzell failed. The first four are in the minors, while judgment upon Lavan will be delayed a bit until the rah-rah recruit gets more time to show that he can hit.

Bob Wallace isn't the same spry kid he was a dozen years ago, still fans at Sportman's Park, or even Robison Field have yet to see the athlete who compared with the Scot when he was in his prime.

Wallace isn't ready to quit or go to the minors now. He isn't a regular with the Browns, but several major league owners have put in bids to Hedges for the marvel of marvels.

KEENE HORSES WILL BE SOLD AT GARDEN SEPT. 2

NEW YORK, July 19.—Solomon Hanford, executor of the estate of the late James R. Keene, announces the disposal sale of all horses, the property of James R. Keene, will be held in Madison Square Garden on September 2. Hanford's representatives have been sent to England to bring Colin and Peter Pan back to this country and they will arrive about the middle of August.

BOXING
News of the Ring Game

Willie Ritchie has been receiving so many offers for bouts from the different clubs all over the country that he has decided to inspect them all on August 4. The one that the champion considers the largest he will accept and will be ready to meet the opponent picked for him on Labor Day.

* * *

Packey McFarland, who does not believe in fighting during the hot months, has just made an announcement in Chicago to the effect that he has no intention of donning the mitts again until the second week in September. "I only hope that my next bout will be with Willie Ritchie," said Packey, "for I think that I can wrest his title from him."

* * *

Tommy Burns and his heavyweight, Arthur Pelky, are now in Frisco. Burns is trying to get his protege a match with Gunboat Smith on Labor Day. Pelky's chances of landing the mill, however, appear to be very small, as the lightweights are the big cards on the coast at the present time.

* * *

The Leach Cross-Matty Baldwin bout, scheduled to take place at Los Angeles on July 29, may be called off. McCarey refuses to give Leach more than $3,500 for his end of the purse, while Cross is holding out for $5,000.

* * *

* * *

Tommy Walsh, manager of George "Knockout" Brown, is a busy party these days getting his protege in shape for his engagement with Frank Klaus at Butte, Mont., next month. Brown is doing his training in Chicago. The middleweights are scheduled to go twelve rounds.

* * *

Coast fans are now touting Kid Williams as the bantamweight champion of the world. Tom McCarey handed the latter a belt for trimming Ledoux recently. Williams is to hold the belt until he is defeated by some boy of his weight.

* * *

Charlie White, the Chicago sensation, will make his next fight against Freddie Welch at Winnipeg. The pair are scheduled to meet in a 12-round set-to on August 15.

* * *

The middleweight division has another contender in Tim O'Neil, the Hammond, Ind., scrapper. The latter recently stopped Tom McMahon and is practically matched to meet Jim Clabby at Kenosha, Wis.

LANGFORD GETS MATCH.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 19.—Sam Langford arrived here from Australia Friday and before he went to bed last night Manager Woodman had matched him for a four-round go with big Charley Miller for next Friday night.

SOX BUY A. A. CATCHER.

MINNEAPOLIS, July 19.—Nick Allen, catcher, who last season was a member of the Minneapolis American Association team, has been sold to the Chicago American League club.

CHAPPELLE HAS NO PARTICULAR STAR FEATURE

By O. B. Keeler

NOW that it seems pretty definitely settled that Mr. Lawrence Chappelle, Milwaukee outfielder, cost the Chicago White Sox $18,000, or words to that effect, there may be some small curiosity as to the workings of a bit of baseball machinery that can get such an expensive rating in the big show.

That is to say, what sort of a new prize beauty is this Chappelle person.

Well, Chappy—as he was commonly known in the American Association—sports rather an odd distinctive feature. This is the fact that he hasn't any. He can hit; he can field and throw; he is no dub on the bases. But there is no one handle sticking out of Chappy's A. A. record that you can lay hold on and say, "Here is a wonder."

Chappy's best point probably is his hitting. That unquestionably was what attracted attention in the Callahan camp. Chappy did hit beomingly—in the A. A., which also developed Mr. Gavvy Cravath, of the Phillies. He is a big fellow—strong in the arms and shoulders, and able to take a free swing on a fast ball or a savage chop at a curve. He crowds the plate and worries the pitcher.

In the field he is a good, steady performer. He is a good judge of a fly ball and covers a fair territory. He can throw well, but hasn't the arm of Clarence Walker, of Kansas City. He is no speed demon, like Shelton, of Columbus, either in the field or on the towpath.

If Chappy turns out to be a paying investment for Comiskey, it will be because he is that really valuable thing in baseball—an all-round player.

BILLIKEN TEAM TO BE SHIFTED TO LITTLE ROCK

MONTGOMERY, July 19.—Col. Robert Lee Hedges, president of the St. Louis American League Baseball Club, spent last Tuesday in Little Rock. His trip there was for diplomatic and financial reasons, which concern the ultimate taking over of the Montgomery club of the Southern Association by the St. Louis American League Club, and a shift of base being made from Montgomery to Little Rock.

Will Shift the Franchise.

Montgomery has not been supporting the excellent team which Manager Johnny Dobbs has installed there with any spirit, and Colonel Hedges declared, as late as Monday, that if he did secure the Montgomery club —which he was not seeking—there probably would be a shift of the franchise to some other city.

Inferentially, the Colonel's trip to Little Rock Tuesday was for the specific consideration of this shift, though the taciturnity customary in times of baseball political action was maintained about the American League office.

Necessary as a "Feeder."

With the tremendous competition among major league teams for embryonic talent it is almost a necessity that each major league club have at least one AA minor league club under its control that can turn into the big ring players fairly well developed. That, of course, would be Hedges' patent purpose in financing the Montgomery club.

Colonel Hedges returned from Little Rock Wednesday morning and said his trip there had been merely to receive the assurance of President William M. Kavanaugh, of the Southern League that the players upon whom he has a string on the Montgomery club would be protected for the Browns in the event the Montgomery franchise was sold.

SEVERAL BIG LEAGUE TEAMS PLAN TO TRAIN IN FLORIDA

JACKSONVILLE, July 19.—Next spring several of the big league teams will do their spring training in Florida. The Chicago Cubs are to go to Tampa, the Philadelphia Americans are coming to this city, and Miami is raising a fund of $5,000 to secure the Cincinnati Reds.

The plan being employed at the Magic City to raise the necessary funds is that of having ten men to deposit notes for $500 in one of the banks. The gate receipts for the exhibition games will be used to reemburse these men at the end of the training season.

The Cincinnati team has been mentioned, but the Miami fans are willing to take care of any big league aggregation which will wend its way southward. All they want is a look at a real, live ball player of the highest type.

JOHNSON WILL DECIDE WHITE-SOX-YANKS ROW

DETROIT, MICH., July 19.—President Johnson, of the American League, will decide the question raised by the recent trade between the New York and Chicago American League clubs involving Hal Chase, Rollie Zeider and Borton.

It will not be necessary to take the questions involved in the New York-Chicago trade before the National Commission, according to President Johnson. "As soon as I get the official report of the whole affair, I'll take care of the matter myself," he said.

PHIL CROSS AFTER BRITTON.

LOS ANGELES, CAL., July 19.—Sam Wallach is after McCarey to stage a welterweight elimination contest here between Phil Cross and Jack Britton. If such a program can be carried out the winner would be matched with Packy McFarland in a final contest for the welterweight championship, a belt and title to go to the winner.

Dixie Moguls to Make Changes

Many Will Have New Job in '14

By Percy H. Whiting.

THERE'LL be some managerial changes in the Southern League when next season rolls around. They are beginning to crop out already.

The managers who are bound to stick are Bill Smith, in Atlanta; Carleton Molesworth, at Birmingham, and quite probably, Mike Finn, at Mobile.

Bill Smith has a two-year contract, so he is sure of his berth for another term. Molesworth appears a fixture. Mike Finn can undoubtedly have the Mobile job again if he wants it, but he may not. It's a pretty discouraging job, and on his showing this year, and for many years past, Honorable Mique is entitled to something better.

* * *

Dobbs will go higher—maybe only to the American Association, more probably to the American League.

Charlie Frank will go—nobody knows where—but he will GO. That's a certainty. They are through with him in New Orleans. The Cleveland club owners, who own likewise the Pelican franchise, will send C. Frank sailing. Who will take his place nobody pretends to know. Maybe the Cleveland folks will come out in the open and admit the ownership by putting a Cleveland cast-off in as manager. Possibly they will play it safe by giving the job to Bill Bernhard, who was with Cleveland before he came to the Southern League. Or, maybe, they will play it safer still and put in some guy there who is game to tackle the tremendous task of cleaning up Pelicanville, running off the gamblers and putting the game there back in the position it belongs.

* * *

IN the rest of the cities there is uncertainty. It is to be expected that Elberfeld will be retained by Chattanooga. He has made good. But then, when two such explosive characters as O. B. Andrews, club president, and the Tabasco Kid are hooked up on any business deal, a split is always possible.

Presumably, Bill Schwartz can stick along at Nashville as long as he wants. But he isn't likely to stay a minute longer than it takes him to get a good job elsewhere. Bill is entitled to a better job than he has. He is a live guy.

The same goes for Bill Bernhard. He is hooked up with a dead crowd in a baseballically-speaking dead town. He would be tickled green to get a job somewhere else. He ought to do it. Continued association with that crowd of chronic losers—and losers through no fault of his—is robbing him of his pep, his "ambish," and his reputation. Bill is probably looking around for a job. He is entitled to one, too. He has done wonders with poor backing.

* * *

THIS seems to be a good year for the bench managers. Finn, Dobbs and Smith, who have ceased to be players, and do their hard work from the bench, have been making most of the race. But this does not necessarily prove anything.

As a rule, the only teams in this league which can afford bench managers can afford good ball clubs. There are too many exceptions this year, however, to make that rule worth a hang.

Really the two teams which have made the most marvelous showing—Mobile and Montgomery—are cheap teams. The Atlanta club and the Lookouts are the only high-priced aggregations that have caused a riffle this year.

CLARK JOINS CRACKERS; BRADY GIVEN RELEASE

NEW ORLEANS, July 19.—Pitcher George Clark, the left-hander turned over to Atlanta by Manager Clark Griffith, of the Washington Americans, joined the Crackers here yesterday.

Jim Brady, the veteran right-hander, was given his unconditional release and is now free to sign where he pleases. Every team in the league waived on him.

LOOKOUTS SECURE WALSH, SHORTSTOP, FROM BROWNS

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., July 19. President O. B. Andrews, of the local club, announced to-day that he had secured Shortstop Dee Walsh from the St. Louis American League Club. Walsh will report immediately.

GEO. SUGGS MAY FIGURE IN REDS-PHILLIES TRADE

PHILADELPHIA, July 19.—It was said here this afternoon that the Cincinnati and Philadelphia National League teams were negotiating for an exchange of players. It was reported that Pitcher Suggs, of Cincinnati, might come to Philadelphia in exchange for one of the utility men of the local club.

MORRIS MEETS BENEDICT.

JOPLIN, MO., July 19.—Negotiations have been completed for a fifteen-round bout between Carl Morris, of Sapulpa, Okla., and Al Benedict, of New York, to be fought in Joplin July 25.

LOOKOUTS GET WALSH.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., July 19.—Shortstop "Dee" Walsh, sensational fielder with Mobile last year, has been bought by Chattanooga from the St. Louis Browns.

THOMAS AND DALY MATCHED.

EVANSVILLE, IND., July 19.—Young Joe Thomas, of St. Louis, and Jack Daly, of Indianapolis, both welterweights, who fought here a few weeks ago, have been matched for a fight at McLean, Ky., on Labor Day.

When again in the paper each morn it is spied,
And I think of the dough that my trust oft misplaces:

FREDDIE WELCH IS going to take enough time away from his work at the typewriter proving that he is lightweight champion of the world, to fight Johnny Dundee, which is an unusual proceeding for a box-fighter. Most of them prefer to stand or fall by their press agents.

* * *

KID WILLIAMS, THE wonderful little Baltimore bantam, is persistently violating what the National Commission would probably call the "ethics" of the profession. He insists on knocking out some guy about once a week.

* * *

* * *

THE PASTIME OF WALLOPing Joe Platts promises to become as popular as the grand old sport of lamming his fellow-countryman, B. Wells.

* * *

TOO MUCH.

The magnate spoke of "Ethics"—
It was his latest breath,
For he lay down on the carpet
And laughed himself to death.

* * *

MR. EBBETS TO THE contrary, baseball seems to be reaching the age of sophistication. The owners of the Boston club could see no more reason for keeping Jake Stahl than for treasuring the chopped-up tickets of the world's series games he won for them a few short months ago.

* * *

SPEAKING OF ETHICS, it is only about sixty hours ago that Ban Johnson and President McAleer solemnly avowed that there was not the slightest chance that Stahl would be ousted from the leadership of the world's champions.

* * *

THE CHIEF OBJECTION of the magnates to Ty Cobb is that he does not confine his running wild to the bases only.

STAHL OUT, M'ALEER TO JOHNSON.

AS WAS EXPECTED, THERE is no sign of a movement toward the extradition of Jack Johnson. The Federal Government can not, in these skittish times, afford to antagonize the large White Hope vote.

IT HAS BEEN DISCOVERED that by jabbing a knife into a golf ball that contains an acid filler that game can be made nearly as interesting as motorcycling or aviation.

Who let his life insurance lapse,
And bought a sail-canoe.

NEXT EVENT AT DROME WILL BE 26-MILE RACE

THERE was excitement a plenty, all right, at the Atlanta Motordrome last night. But it isn't a simmering circumstance to what will be uncorked Tuesday night in the first Motordrome Marathon ever held in the Dixie States.

This race will go the full 26 miles, which makes it nearly four times as long as any race ever held thus far in Atlanta. Ten riders will start. You can readily realize the possibilities.

The racing last night had whiskers on it.

McNeil had his J. A. P. running like a real motorcycle and he trimmed Richards in the Motordrome Purse in a thrilling contest. In the Atlanta Sweepstakes Richards reversed the decision. The invitation race went to Henry Lewis. In the Handican Renel one of the men with a lap handicap finished first.

The summary:

MOTORDROME PURSE.
(Heats and Final, Two Miles.)

First Heat—Georges Renel, Billy Shields and Morty Graves; time, 1:28 2-5.

Second Heat—Jock McNeil, George Lockner and Henry Lewis; time, 1:26.

Third Heat—"Tex" Richards, Harry Schwartz, Harry Glenn and Freddie Luther; time, 1:29 4-5.

Final—McNeil, Richards, Renel and Lockner; time, 1:27 2-5.

who was forced out by engine trouble.

ATLANTA SWEEPSTAKES.
(Heats, 2 Miles; Final, 3 Miles.)

First Heat—McNeil, Schwartz, Luther and Lewis; time, 1:28.

Second Heat—Richards, Graves and Renel; time, 1:30.

Third Heat—Shields, Lockner and Glenn; time, 1:28.

Final—Richards, McNeil, Shields and Schwartz; time, 2:05.

INVITATION.
(Three Miles.)

Lewis, Graves and Luther; time, 2:13 3-5.

FOUR-MILE HANDICAP.

Renel, Shields, Lockner and McNeil; time, 2:55. The first three had a one-lap advantage over the Scotch rider and also over "Tex" Richards, who was forced out by engine trouble

NO MATCHES FOR SAMMY.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 19.—Sam Langford, negro pugilist, arrived here yesterday from Australia after an absence of nearly two years. Matches were hard for him to find when he left and they look no more plentiful now.

BASEBALL CONTRACTS.

The word "contract" is derived from the Attic verb "con," meaning to heave the bull. The other half of the word was thrown in merely to disguise its real meaning.

A baseball contract is an agreement, duly signed and witnessed, whereby a helpless youth gives up his right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness until death do us part, or words to that effect. He does this voluntarily, even as the wayfarer gives up his goods and chattels to a perfect stranger who places the muzzle of a gatling gun athwart his heaving bosom.

A youth who has signed a baseball contract is perfectly free to do anything his manager orders. He is also free to resign whenever he pleases, but resigning is not popular among athletes, owing to the general prejudice against starving to death.

Under the present system of peonage a ball player is fully as important as an insect. In some instances, as in the case of Tyrus R. Cobb, the insect turns out to be a little busy bee, improving the shining hour, and the magnate gets stung. These magnates never seem to get over the habit of approaching a bee at the wrong end.

The life of the athlete is a merry one. He is wafted hither and yon in cool and refreshing sleeping cars and given free bed and fodder, even as the noble truck horse.

And when he fails to draw the requisite amount of kale at the gate he is handed a swift kick and headed in the direction of the boneyard. It is then, and not until then, that his contract becomes valuable, for, if he grows hungry he has the privilege of eating it.

Well might the athlete sing this national anthem:

My country, 'tis of thee,
Sweet land of liberty
(So it is said)
Land where I sign to play
My youthful life away
Forever and a day
To earn my bread!

Land where magnates stand
Together hand in hand
And thus repeat:
"You low-browed gents are free
To work for none but me,
Unless you do, by gee,
You do not eat!"

While we have the profoundest respect for the power of the law, we fear that in order to separate the Cub owner from that $3,000 Artie Hofman will have to call in the aid of a jimmy.

Fielder Jones is one of the few men who can burst into print by offering himself a $25,000 job and then refusing it.

We all have something for which we may be thankful. For instance, Mr. Coulon may congratulate himself on the fact that he was not in the shoes of Mr. Ledoux.

Mr. McAleer is willing to concede that Jake Stahl is the greatest baseball manager in the banking business.

While there is a controversy in the East over Sunday baseball, it is safe to say that neither St. Louis team is in danger of being found guilty of playing ball on Sunday—or on week-days.

Although these baseball dedications are becoming tiresome, the public would gather in vast numbers to dedicate the execution of a few popcorn merchants.

STEIN SONG.

Oh, it's always wet weather
When club owners get together,
(Etc.)

Aside from taking money from a blind man, it is hard to think of a more cruel and unusual act than protesting a game against Frank Chance.

Tom Lynch arises to remark that he thinks well of his umpires. The amazing part of it is that he has seen them at work.

SOMETHING ELSE AGAIN.

Old King Cole is a wonderful soul
His work is a perfect dream.
He makes them whiff till their arms are stiff—
But not on a big league now.

TENNIS TOURNEY TO-DAY.

ANNISTON, ALA., July 19.—A tennis tourney will be played at the Anniston Country Club this afternoon, for which several persons have entered. A dinner dance will be given in the evening in honor of the winners of the tourney.

Hub Perdue Has Won 11; Lost 7

Keeping Braves Out of Cellar

ALTHOUGH with a club that is now in sixth place, a good many points under the .500 mark, Hub Perdue, the former Nashville hurler, now with the Boston Braves, has won 11 and lost only 7 games this season. That's a percentage of .632 and is about 200 points ahead of that of his team.

The right-hander has won his last six contests, and has been returned the winner in nine of his last ten starts. That's a pretty good record for any pitcher, and it's no wonder that Johnny McGraw, of the Giants, was so anxious to get the big right-hander.

Perdue has been with the Braves a good many seasons, but it looks as if this would be the first time in his big league career that he will finish above the .500 mark. In order to do this, though, he must keep on pitching the kind of ball he has so far this campaign.

He Is a Giant Tamer.

Probably this is another reason that McGraw would like to get Perdue. Hub has faced the Giants four times this season. He has pitched twenty innings against the National League leaders, and in that time they have counted only seven tallies off him, while he owns two wins over them, and has not been beaten.

Winning six straight, the Braves' right-hander beat the Giants, Phillies, Cardinals, Pirates and the Superbas twice. He has been hit hard in a few of the games, but his teammates always came to the rescue and made more tallies than the other fellows could get off him.

Although he has won eleven and lost only six, Perdue has been hurling none too good ball. He has pitched 134 1-3 innings this campaign and in that time 63 tallies have been scored off him, while the opposition has batted his benders to places unoccupied 126 times. In other words, two hits off him have brought two tallies.

Keeps Team Above Bottom.

The best game Perdue has pitched was his first of the season, when, on the opening day of the National League season, he shut out the Giants, allowing them only two bingles. He has hurled only two shutouts this season, the other coming against the Pirates, who he let down with four bingles.

Perdue has been working in his regular turn for the Braves this year and it has been his good work that has kept the team from the bottom.

The only teams to beat him this season were the Cardinals, Cubs, Phillies and Superbas. The Cards and Phillies each own two wins over him. Perdue has beaten every club in the league with the exception of the Cubs. His record for the campaign follows:

RIVERS WANTS ANOTHER CRACK AT CHAMPIONSHIP

LOS ANGELES, July 19.—Joe Rivers, the Mexican lightweight, is today anxious to redeem himself in the eyes of the sporting public. Many fans accused Rivers of quitting in his recent fight with Ritchie, and the Mexican is willing to mingle with the champion again in order to wipe out the sting of ridicule.

Rivers will post $5,000 to go as a side bet if Ritchie will agree to battle within three months.

Makes Blotchy Skin Free of All Blemish

The Most Obstinate Skin Afflictions and Eruptions from Poisoned Blood Are Completely Cured Quickly.

This Picture Plainly Shows the Wonderful Change Wrought by S. S. S.

It is certainly remarkable how quickly the action of S. S. S. the famous blood purifier, shows itself in the skin. There is one ingredient in S. S. S. which peculiarly stimulates cellular or glandular activity to select from the blood, or from the fine net work of blood vessels in the skin, those elements which it requires for regeneration.

Thus pimples, acne, eczema, lupus, or any other blood condition that attacks the skin or seeks an outlet through the skin is met with the antidotal effect of S. S. S.

This is why skin troubles vanish so readily and why they do not return.

Under the influence of S. S. S. this fine net work of blood vessels in the skin is constantly selecting from the blood the nutrition required for healthy tissue and the cause of disease is just as constantly being removed, scattered and rendered harmless.

It is a great mistake to rely upon cathartics to cure pimples or other facial eruptions. Not only do cathartics cause chronic constipation, but they ... the blood of its valuable and es... nal preservatives.

Acne, or that condition of the skin known as pimples, often becomes so persistent that it will continue to old age if not checked by determined methods. And the same with blackheads. A knowledge of the skin and why it becomes the abiding place of so many eruptive conditions will show how futile it is to squeeze pimples or blackheads or put a coating over the skin with grease, powders or other external applications. To clear your skin and to make it stay so requires a stimulating influence in the corium, or the fine net work of tiny blood vessels below the outer and inner layers of skin.

You will be surprised and delighted at the quick change if you use S. S. S., the famous blood purifier. Its action in the skin is quite sensational. These facts are more fully explained in a book on skin troubles sent by The Swift Specific Co., 195 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga. You will find S. S. S. on sale at all drug stores. Get a bottle to-day and banish all skin afflictions.

When you ask for S. S. S., look out for the common trick of trying to sell you something else. Don't be misled.

HUSTLING MARKS LAST DAY FOR EXTRA VOTES

Pony Man Says Bonus Doubles Power of Subscriptions—Competitors Urged to Utmost.

Saturday night the special bonus vote offer for pony contestants striving for The Georgian and American prizes comes to a close. Reports show some great hustling is being done.

As has been explained, liberal allowances of extra votes will be made for every club of $35, $25 or $15 paid in for subscriptions. In most cases these bonuses are so liberal as almost to double the regular voting strength of that amount of subscriptions.

"Think of it!" said the contest manager. "Voting power of subscriptions just doubled! Why, if I were a contestant I'd stir heaven and earth to make up a club, and when that had been accomplished I'd stir things up again to get another club. Every contestant ought to turn in at least one $35 club a day, and should try to get two. Then if he falls short of two $35 clubs he can undoubtedly turn in a $35 club and a $25 club. And that means a good bunch of votes."

"They can't keep me from it," said one of the hardest workers."

He means it, too! No acquaintance of his has been left unsolicited. So earnest is he in his desire to win one of the ponies that he is making the work almost his sole business.

This is the day of Miss Robert Harbour's birthday party. Many of her guests have told her they intend giving subscriptions to The Georgian and American as remembrances of her fifth anniversary. The celebration is at 340 Ponce DeLeon avenue.

THE PLAYS THIS WEEK

"Les Miserables" at the Grand.

A strong interest is being manifested in the coming engagement of Victor Hugo's "Les Miserables" at the Grand next week. Since Thursday there has been almost a continual demand for reservations.

This picture, 12,000 feet of film made in France, is in nine reels and will consume two and one-half hours of time. It has been brought to America at a tremendous expense, and is being shown in the Southwest and Southeast prior to its Eastern exhibition.

Matinees will be given at 2:30 o'clock, admission 25 cents for reserved seats, and night performances at 8:30 o'clock, reserved seats 25 and 50 cents.

Forsyth's Big Success.

Another successful week has been recorded at Atlanta's busiest theater, and the Forsyth will go into another week commencing on Monday afternoon, presenting a bill of vaudeville that promises to eclipse the season's most brilliant success.

The principal act will be the contribution of John F. Conroy and his diving models. Conroy is the only life-saver in the country who has been awarded three medals for heroism—one awarded by the United States Congress, one by the State of Massachusetts and the other by the Carnegie Hero Commission.

Deiro, the Italian accordionist, will make his first appearance, and Lester, the famous ventriloquist, returns after an absence of three seasons.

There is the usual tremendous advance sale, and a very enthusiastic interest.

Comedy at the Bijou.

"Hotel a la Carte," as served up by the company at the Bijou all week, is an ideal summer amusement—frothy, full of fun, tuneful music, pretty girls.

Joe Scott, as the bellboy, has made a hit with his dancing, and Mamie Elmore, as Flossie Spearmint, has intrenched herself in the good will of Bijou patrons.

For the week beginning Monday afternoon the Bijou will offer that splendid comedy, "Good-morning, Judge." The cast will be headed by Pearl Brothers and Burns, and will include a number of well-known vaudeville entertainers and a beauty chorus.

Second Georgia Men Enjoy Island Camp

ST. SIMONS ISLAND, July 19.—Routine duties began this morning in the Second Georgia Infantry camp, following the tedious work Friday of pitching tents after making the transfer on lighters from Brunswick. A dip in the surf just before supper and a dance at night dispelled their gloom. Strict regulations are maintained to prevent accidents in the surf.

Under Captain J. M. Kimbrough, companies are consolidated to full war strength of 108 men each, and officers are required to drill under as near actual war conditions as possible. These drills are preliminary to the maneuvers to take place next week.

Hester's Weekly Cotton Statistics

Secretary Hester's weekly New Orleans Cotton Exchange statement of the movement of cotton, issued before the close of business Friday, shows an increase in the movement into sight compared with the seven days ending this date last year in round numbers 7,000, an increase over the same days year before last of 19,000, and a decrease under the same time in 1910 of 14,000.

For the eighteen days of July, the totals show an increase over last year of 8,000, an increase over the same period year before last of 42,000, and an increase over the same time in 1910 of 6,000.

For the 321 days of the season that have elapsed the aggregate is behind the 321 days of last year 2,177,000, and ahead of the same days year before last 1,782,000 and ahead of 1910 3,252,000.

The amount brought into sight during the past week has been 32,951 bales, against 25,460 for the seven days ending this date last year, 13,704 year before last and 46,472 same time in 1910; and for the eighteen days of July it has been 79,798, against 71,329 last year, 57,660 year before last and 73,312 same time in 1910.

The movement since September 1 shows receipts at all United States ports 9,757,710, against 11,911,989 last year, 8,537,708 year before last, and 7,252,542 same time in 1910. Overland across the Mississippi, Ohio and Potomac Rivers to Northern mills and Canada 9,736,635, against 1,253,179 last year, 920,929 year before last and 820,056 same time in 1910; interior stocks in excess of those held at the close of the commercial year 73,703, against 31,860 last year, 53,789 year before last and 1,057 same time in 1910; Southern mill takings 2,662,000, against 2,447,426 last year, 2,183,496 year before last, and 2,141,701 same time in 1910.

These make the total movement for the 321 days of the season from September 1 to date 13,476,141, against 15,644,454 last year, 11,684,931 year before last and 10,215,356 same time in 1910.

Foreign exports for the week have been 28,361, against 31,953 last year, making the total thus far for the season 8,402,628, against 10,324,465 last year, a decrease of 1,922,237.

Southern mills takings and Canada during the past seven days show an increase of 3,031, as compared with the corresponding period last year, and their total takings since September 1 have decreased 81,423. The total takings of American mills, North, South and Canada thus far for the season have been 5,087,219, against 5,220,702 last year. These include 2,345,437 by Northern spinners, against 2,726,859.

Stocks at the seaboard and the 29 leading Southern interior centers have decreased during the week 40,409 bales, against a decrease during the corresponding period last season of 47,521 and are now 38,022 smaller than at this date in 1912.

Including stocks left over at ports and interior towns from the last crop and the number of bales brought into sight thus far from the new crop, the supply to date is 13,831,854, against 15,931,428 for the same period last year.

World's Visible Supply.

The world's visible supply of cotton shows a decrease for the week just closed of 173,539, a decrease of 147,782 last year and a decrease of 128,526 year before last.

The total visible is 2,921,387, against 3,094,926 last week, 2,828,787 last year and 4,958,768 year before last. Of this the total of American cotton is 1,582,387, against 1,741,926 last week, 1,880,787 last year and 1,004,768 year before last, and of all other kinds, including Egypt, Brazil, India, etc., 1,339,000, against 1,353,000 last week, 948,000 last year and 954,000 year before last.

The total world's visible supply of cotton, as above, shows a decrease as compared with last week of 173,539, an increase compared with last year of 92,600, and an increase compared with year before last of 962,619.

Of the world's visible supply of cotton, as above, there is now afloat and held in Great Britain and continental Europe 1,645,000, against 1,813,000 last year and 1,126,000 year before last; in Egypt 101,000, against 70,000 last year and 79,000 year before last; and in the United States 241,000, against 376,000 last year and 244,000 year before last.

World's Spinners' Takings.

This week 193,000 this year, against 163,000 last year, 132,000 year before last.

Total since September 1, this year, 13,237,000, against 14,551,000 last year, and 11,458,000 the year before.

Of this Northern spinners and Canada took 2,345,000 bales this year, against 2,727,000 last year, and 2,032,000 the year before; Southern spinners 2,742,000, against 2,494,000 last year, and 2,228,000 the year before; and foreign spinners 8,150,000, against 9,330,000 last year, and 7,168,000 the year before.

COTTON GOSSIP

Market active.

The market was sold early by the ring crowd on prospect of lower temperatures over the western belt, but when the detailed weather report was issued showing twenty-two stations in Georgia with temperatures at 100 to 108, and eleven stations in Texas showing temperatures from 100 to 105, caused a wave of buying, some of which was short covering by those who sold early. The bulls were also buyers and there was little cotton for sale. It is believed if such temperatures continue over Sunday a further advance is probable, as it is believed there is still some large short lines on the market that would cover on further advance. There are several wires in circulation from Texas to the eeffct that there is considerable deterioration in many parts of that State. Sentiment to-night is more bullish.

The advance in the afternoon yesterday was the result of heavy buying by Hicks, followed by Gwathmey, which brought about a general wave of buying. The ring apparently had sold short early, and were nervous over the high temperatures and the absence of rains, which are needed. There was very little cotton for sale and no special interest seemed to be offering any large blocks. The feeling is more bullish and a higher level is expected, as the bulls contend that any change in conditions must be unfavorable.

* * *

There were several telegrams in circulation during the late session yesterday to the effect that the crop in sections of the Western belt was deteriorating.

* * *

Around the close Gwathmey, Rosenberg, Rait, Henneman, Hartcorn, McGhee, Riordan, Hicks, Parrott and Holmes were the leading buyers, while Clearman, Shearson, Schill, Rice, Ingersoll, Hubbard, Montgomery and Flynn were the principal sellers.

NEW ORLEANS, July 19.—Hayward & Clark: Reliable Texas advices promise abundant early cotton in four weeks, therefore, bull interests are concentrating their efforts to advance the market in the next two weeks before the supply of new cotton checks or destroys their control. Texas advices say dry spell is most favorable. The idea of damaging drouth is manufactured in New York.

* * *

The weather map shows part cloudy in lower Central belt; Tennessee and Florida no rain. High temperatures in several districts in Central and Eastern belts. Normal temperatures in Texas and Oklahoma. Indications are for cooler weather in Northwestern quarter, with probably some showers in Oklahoma and West Texas. Cooler also in the Central belt, but continued fair and warm in the Atlantics.

* * *

The New Orleans Times-Democrat says: "One lone report of hot winds, not in Texas but in Oklahoma, was sufficient to set the talent by the ears. The rings awakened from their Rip Van Winkle sleep of the past several weeks; shorts stood not upon the order of covering, but covered at once. Buying orders poured into the market from all points of the compass, and brokers, in the pleasurable excitement of executing real business, forgot their worries over the Clarke bill, and the local ring fairly hummed with activity. Recently fluctuations in the market have ranged between 11.40 and 11.60 for October. Ring traders had noticed this tendency on the part of the market to halt at 11.60, and it was becoming a matter of habit with them to buy around 11.40 for October and to sell around 11.60.

"The rule failed to work in yesterday's market, because, with all the selling indulged in early in the day on the strength of a bearish crop report by a prominent authority, prices went only a few points under 11.50 and on the rebound did not stop at 11.60 for October, but shot above that market, bringing out stop loss orders and "hooking" not a few of the ring crowd."

COTTON REGAINS INITIAL DECLINE

High Temperatures Over Georgia and Texas Causes Heavy Buying by Shorts.

NEW YORK, July 19.—Weather conditions had a strong bearing on the cotton market at the opening to-day, and, except for a decline of 3 points in July and August unchanged, the list ruled 1 to 4 points higher. Cables were poor. According to private advices cables were affected by unloading. There was considerable profit-taking at the early advance and eventually prices fell almost to last night's final.

Although trading was very light after the call the market developed a firm tone, through week-end short covering and good buying by the larger spot houses. High temperatures over the belt were the principal cause for the buying, there was talk of hot winds increasing uneasiness of bears, who were predicting a lower market on reports to the effect that temperatures were lower in the Northwest. Later Dallas, Tex., wired that the crop was deteriorating by shedding and boll weevils were damaging the plants considerably.

At the close the market was firm with prices at a net gain of 1 to 8 points from the final quotations of Friday.

GAINS AND LOSSES IN STOCKS BALANCE

California Petroleum Makes New Low Record at Opening, Later It Gains Fractionally.

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, July 19.—California Petroleum made a new low record at the opening of the stock market to-day, declining 1 point to 19. Later it rallied fractionally, but not sufficiently to be of any importance. The list showed irregularity, the gains and losses being pretty evenly divided.

Amalgamated Copper opened unchanged, then lost a half. Union Pacific, after opening unchanged, shaded fractionally. United States Steel common failed to respond to its strength in the London market. It opened 1-8 up, but soon lost this gain and scored a net decline of 1-4. Lehigh Valley began 1-4 higher, then lost its gain. Canadian Pacific was 1-2 off. Among the gains were Southern Pacific, 1-8; New York, New Haven and Hartford, 2; Mexican Petroleum, 1-8; Great Northern preferred, 1-8; American Smelting, 3-8, and Atchison, 1-4.

Southern Pacific soon lost its gain and went to 92 3-8 for a net loss of 3-8.

New York, New Haven and Hartford showed a continuation of the strength which has manifested itself since Charles S. Mellen resigned as president.

At the end of half an hour the list was weak.

The curb was quiet. Americans in London were steady, with Steel in demand. Canadian Pacific in London was up.

BAR SILVER.

LONDON, July 19.—Bar silver steady at 27¼d.

EASIER CABLES WEAKEN WHEAT

Bullish Circular of B. W. Snow Causes Fractional Advance in Corn and Oats.

CHICAGO, July 19.—Wheat showed early losses of ¼ to ⅜ on favorable weather throughout the winter and spring wheat belt and the desire on the part of scattered longs to dispose of their holdings over Sunday. Northwestern receipts were smaller than a year ago, where Winnipeg were large.

Corn was ½ to ⅝c lower. Longs were sellers.

Oats were off ¼ to ½c.

Provisions were lower.

HOG RECEIPTS LARGE.

CHICAGO, July 19.—Omaha reported 16,000 hogs and Sioux City 8,500 to-day. A big week-end run at "the river" usually means easy picking here on Monday. Light shipping grades were strong to 5c higher, 9.65 being bid for seven sorts. Other grades held about steady. A spread of 9.15@9.50 took the bulk.

Steer trade closed steady, but the butcher market was slumpy and the worst case of demoralization this season was reported in the sheep houses.

POULTRY, PET AND LIVE STOCK

Plan Now for Next Winter's Food Supply

By JUDGE F. J. MARSHALL.

If you are not already planning, I would advise you to begin now to get some of next winter's food supply for the chickens on the way. While few fowls are ever starved, there are a good many that do not get the good and wholesome variety that they are needing, especially in the cold months, when green stuff is rather scarce. Wheat, oats and corn make the bulk of the food supply for the average farm stock, and it is a good ration, if properly handled and heated up at times, such as parching the corn and browning the oats, etc., but it is the rough-and-ready foodstuff that we want to speak of. As I shall want to speak largely of the root crops, and they need to be kept in a cool place, I shall advise the use of a cellar. Throughout the Northern States, cellars are the rule, rather than the exceptions, under all houses built on the farms. These are usually divided into two compartments, one for the keeping of milk and the other for the storing of vegetables and root crops of various kinds. Upon large farms, where there is a lot of stock kept, the barn is often built upon a side hill with a cellar under a part of it for the storing of stock beets, cabbage and all kinds of vegetables that can be used for the stock in winter. These cellars keep them from freezing in winter and keep them cool in summer so they will not spoil. Of course, they are not put into the cellar until the latter part of the summer. Throughout the South these cellars are a novelty, as a rule. I wish they could become more common. Of course, it is not always practical to build them under the dwelling house after it is built, but one can fix up a very good one by using refuse stone, where it can be had, and digging into the side of a hill, walling with the stone, letting it set into the ground as much as possible to make it cooler; the door, or opening, to be on the low side of the cellar. All of it should be roofed with a good, double or lined roof, something that will keep out the great heat of the sun.

With a root cellar of this kind upon your place, you are in a position to take care of all kinds of good tubers and vegetables of various kinds that might otherwise go to waste and be of no benefit in any way. It is not too late to plant the large sugar or stock beets if the ground is well prepared; thoroughly fine and very deep, so that they can take right hold and grow without difficulty. Then there is the rutabaga turnip that will make a good crop late in the season, which is a good keeper as well as the heavy beet. Small heads of cabbage that are not marketable, when put into small hampers that will admit of a circulation of air, can be kept a long while in the cellar.

The short parts of clover or alfalfa, leaves, etc., should all be saved and stored in a dry place in the barn for the poultry in winter. A lot of large gunny sacks come in very handy for this work, as this stuff can be crowded into these sacks where they are easily handled and taken care of until wanted. With a good, rich piece of ground a nice crop of buckwheat can be raised, if planted right now; it matures quickly and makes a grain that the hens are very fond of late in the fall and winter when fed with corn. Plant a good variety of all the vegetable crops, for there are very few of them that the hens do not relish and are ready to take care of the surplus or refuse parts of them. Onions are another good crop, and one that will keep well in this root cellar, and they are a regular tonic for the hens in winter and are very much relished by them. Take care of every one of them. Let us wake up to the possibilities of these crops and the proper handling of them, as indicated. The taking care of these apparently insignificant things and turning them to account will be largely responsible for the per cent of profit that we will make from our poultry during the coming year. Others take advantage of these things to good account; why not you?

ON account of my health will sell for the bargain price of $4,250 my flour and lumber mills located at Dallas, Ga. This plant cost over $12,000 to build and is one of the best located and most complete and self-supporting plants in the South; equipped with four-stand Richmond City flouring system, two sets corn burrs, all in first-class condition, with plenty of warehouse room and as a custom mill it is almost without opposition. The planing mill is operated from same boilers, with separate engine. The planer house is 39x80 feet, two stories high, good room for cabinet workshop. On account of rapid decline in health I will sell this plant for $4,500, on easy terms; it is nicely located on Southern Railway sidetrack. Trestle for dumping coal at boiler. Shavings carried to boiler by exhaust fan. Address A. M. McMichem, Jr., Owner, Dallas, Ga. 7-17-5

Permit Is Sought For Whitehall Plant

C. H. Johnson Will Build Manufactory—Small Sales Recorded—Crowd Due at Realty Election.

Signs point to early activity on Whitehall street as a wholesale and manufacturing thoroughfare south of Trinity avenue. Application was made Friday to Building Inspector Ed R. Hays by C. H. Johnson to construct a two-story reinforced concrete building at No. 757 Whitehall, to cost $10,000. May & Wimbish are the contractors. The ground floor dimensions are 75 by 100 feet.

Builders who expected to put wholesale houses on lower Whitehall are holding up somewhat because of the Whitehall regrading project, but the manufacturers seeking railroad frontage farther south are going ahead.

Interesting Deed Given.

John W. White, administrator of the estate of Charles M. White, has given an administrator's deed to W. D. White on an undivided five-sixths interest in valuable property in Atlanta. The figure is $16,600, and for the same amount W. D. White has made a warranty deed to Mrs. J. C. Clay, T. A. and J. M. White, of DeKalb County, and John W. White, Harvey and Katie Baker, the first four of whom get a one-sixth interest each and the latter two one-twelfth each.

The properties consist of the following:

The southwest corner of Linden way and a 10-foot alley 160 feet west of Spring street, 42 1-2 by 93 feet; on Linden way 202 1-2 feet west of Spring street, 42 1-2 by 100; on Spruce street 100 south of Dixie avenue 100 by 195; the northeast corner of Bell and Greene streets, 37 1-2 by 97 1-2; George street 75 feet north of East Fair street, 67 1-2 by 80; Old Wheat street 63 1-2 east of North Boulevard, 33 by 99, and Nos. 20 and 22 Raspberry street, 50 by 70, between Bell and Fort streets.

Pine Street Purchase.

Pierre M. Bealer has sold to Ralph J. McGruder the northeast corner of East Pine and North Jackson streets, 70 by 125, for $6,000. Four thousand was cash. For value received the parcel has been transferred to W. E. Treadwell and S. W. Carson.

West North Avenue Sale.

H. B. Watkins and D. J. Gunter have bought from Charles H. Sanford No. 164 West North avenue, 45 by 163.42 feet west of McAfee street, for $5,000.

Fourteenth Street Transfer.

Deeds have gone to record in the sale May 15 of No. 278 East Fourteenth street to Dowse B. Donaldson from Marvin Conway for $5,000. The lot is 50 by 128 feet and 558 feet west of North Jackson street.

Building Delay Overcome.

Some months ago J. B. Thompson started excavating for three stores on Poplar street due north of the postoffice. Work was delayed, but now Mr. Thompson has been granted a permit to go ahead. The stores will cost $10,000.

Plans for Winnipeg Convention.

At the annual meeting of the Atlanta Real Estate Board Friday evening at 6:30 o'clock at the Cafe Durand some definite plans for attending the Winnipeg convention will be discussed. The convention of the National Association of Real Estate Exchanges will be held July 28, 29 and 30, and twelve members of the local board are expected to go.

Atlanta is to compete for a cup presented by the Chicago Board in a report which Charles P. Glover and others will present. The attending cities will prepare these reports and the winner will be the city making the best showing. The judges have been named to decide the contest.

Return postal cards indicate to the officers of the local board that there will be a large attendance at Friday's dinner, inasmuch as the selection of officers for the ensuing year will be made. Charles P. Glover, retiring president, is expected to come in for encomiums at the hands of his fellow board members. Mr. Glover has served the board faithfully, and the real estate men have not forgotten the happy speech he made at the recent annual banquet.

College Park's Activity.

Spurred on by the struggles and successes of the Decatur Board of Trade and similar organizations, the citizens of College Park have decided to organize a citizens' committee-of-the-whole and to adopt a name suitable to such an organization. In this connection $25 has been offered to the public for a slogan. Anybody in the world, says the secretary of the board, can win $25 by revealing the secret that lies in a name. Suggestions must be in by July 31, because the board wants to get busy in its booster operations.

College Park is a town of 2,700 population, having jumped from 450 in 1900. It is the home of Cox College for women and the Georgia Military Academy. There are three public schools, five churches and plenty of nice places for people to live.

Save Unfortunate Women and Protect Society

That a majority of unfortunate women can be saved and society protected at the same time has been demonstrated beyond the question of a doubt. Therefore, it is essential that a bill now pending in the Georgia Legislature, which has been favorably reported by the Prisons Committee, looking to the construction of a reformatory for vicious women, should become a law, and that the Appropriations Committee, to which the bill has been referred, should report favorably.

The bill calls for an appropriation of $75,000 for the construction and maintenance of the institution, which is small indeed when the welfare of society and the saving of women is taken into consideration.

An exhaustive investigation has been made in many States as to the cause of prostitution of women—low wages, insanitary conditions in factories and stores, etc., have been given as a cause in a great many instances, and a correction of these conditions has been announced as a preventive, which is well and good, but what to do with those we have already is a question that is attracting the attention of good citizens in every State in the Union.

This question has been solved to such an extent that three-fourths of the inmates of the Bedford Reformatory in New York have been saved, while only one-fourth have returned to the old life after a stay of two years in this reformatory.

This method of treating vice has proven so successful that those good men and women who have been giving of their time and money for the cause of fallen women are encouraged, and will continue the work until satisfactory results are obtained.

As to the work and results at Bedford Reformatory, Lyman Abbott writes as follows:

"When a prostitute is brought before a New York judge, he may discharge her, with or without a fine; he may send her to the workhouse for a short term—I believe three months is the maximum—or he may send her to the Bedford Reformatory. The experience of the past indicates that the deterrent power of fear is very ineffective as a cure for crime, yet something may be said for the deterrent power of fear as a preventive, if not as a cure. But a fine or three months in the workhouse has no deterrent power. When the fine is paid or the three months have expired, the girl has no option but to take to the street and resume her vicious career. No home and no factory will or indeed can take her in and give her a chance for a better life. This is just what the Bedford Reformatory does. It brings her into an atmosphere not merely of cleanliness and of industry, but of hopefulness. It puts before the girl an open door. It inspires her with courage to believe that she can enter it if she chooses to do so. It inspires that wish in her, and, by training, gives her some measure of preparation for earning an honest livelihood. While practically every girl treated by the other method goes back to prey upon the community again, the figures show that less than one-quarter of those who are discharged from the Reformatory after a two years' imprisonment resume their vicious occupation."

Is not the establishment of an institution in Georgia that has been proven a success in another State worth trying?

The time to act is NOW. The good women and men of Georgia are giving their time and money in the cause of the unfortunates. If only one-fourth of the women imprisoned there are saved, it is worth the price.

Georgia should REFORM criminals, NOT MAKE THEM.

The City

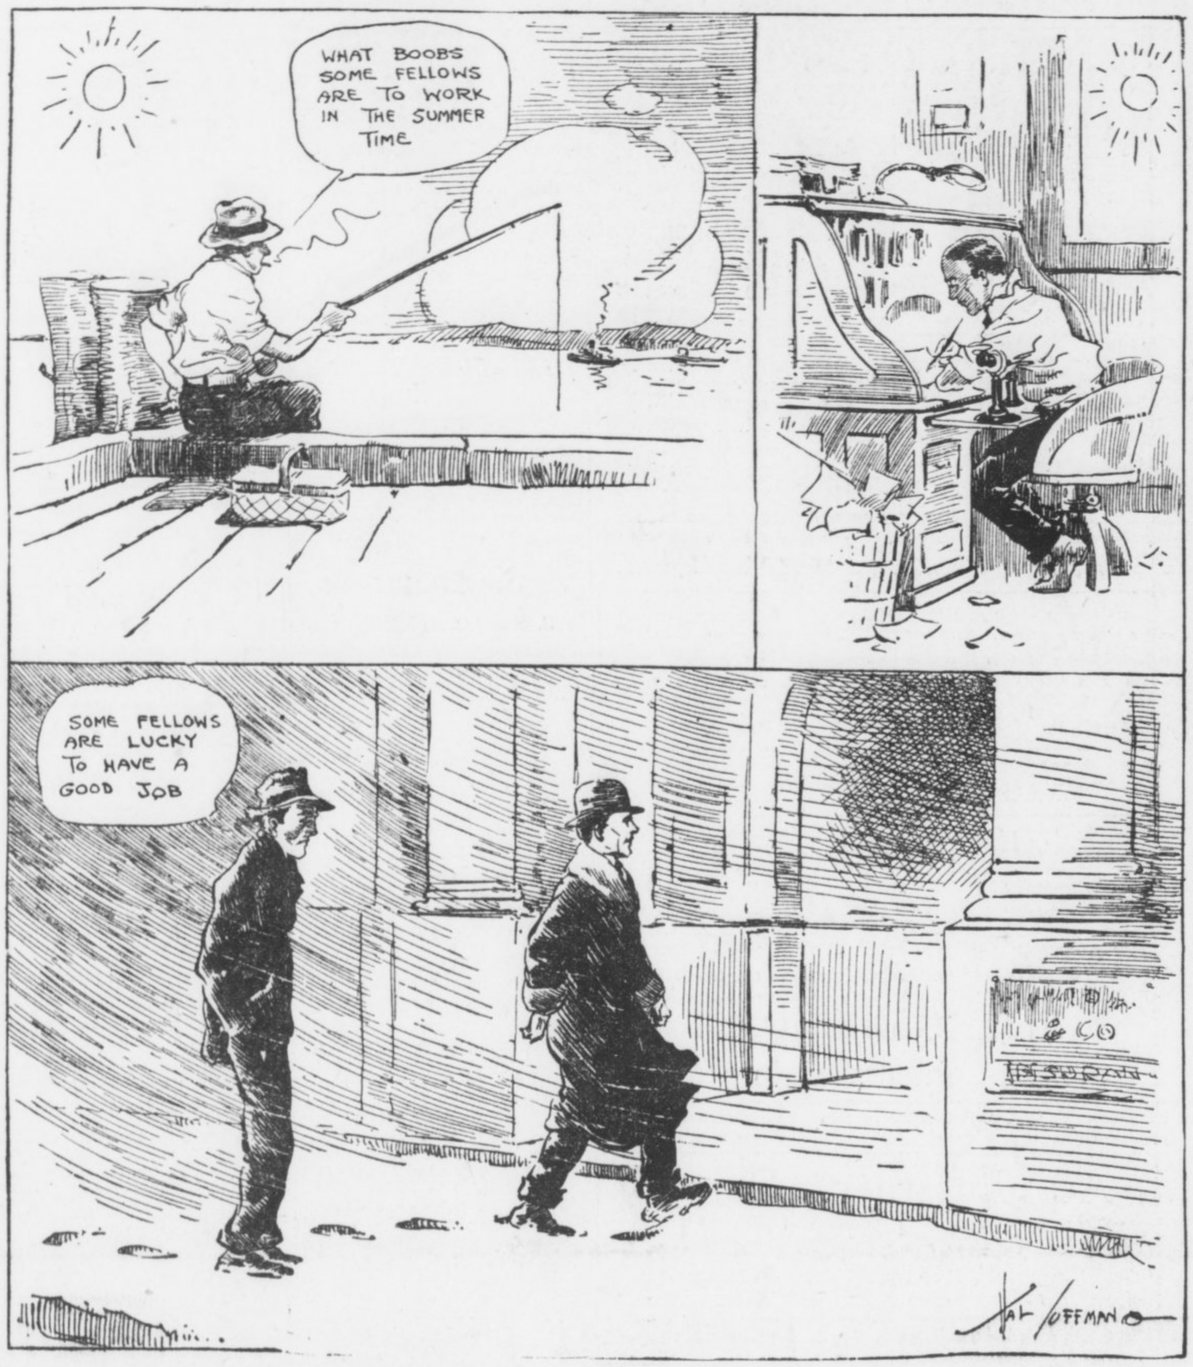
By Gordon Johnstone.

THERE'S a brave world I know called The Great Out-o'-Doors,
Where the wind and the wave lure our feet,
And the green o' the fields meets the wan, tired eyes
With the touch and the kiss o' a lost paradise;
Where the chickadee calls and the wild eagle soars,
And the lark trills his sweetest o' sweet;
But give me the city,
Its pain and its pity,
Its highways and byways o' heat.

Oh, a man may live off on a hilltop alone,
Where the days are a-wing on a song,
But he'll never sound depths that are human and deep
By running away from the herd o' the sheep,
By shutting his heart to the tear and the groan
O' the lovable suffering throng.
So give me the city,
Its grief and its pity,
Its spendthrift, its weak and its strong.

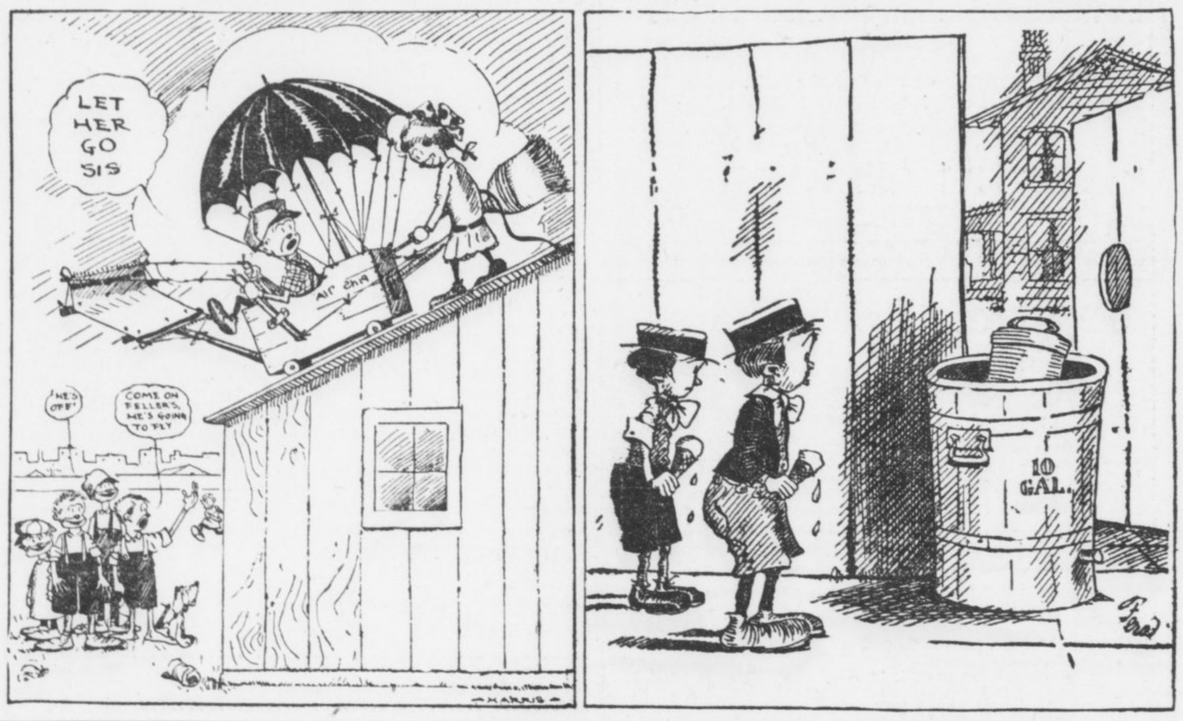
Oh, here is the Kingdom of Fair Worlds to Be
When the peace-riders come silver-shod,
For there isn't a cavil, when all's said and done,
That the Maker in making MEANT ALL TO BE ONE,
As the streams of the nations that merge in one sea
And move at the wind o' His nod.
So hail the World-City,
Its pride and its pity,
That's built on the high road o' God.

The Grasshopper and the Ant



The grasshopper, you know, sings all Summer while the ant toils away laying up a store for the Winter. When the cold pinches, the grasshopper thinks the ant lucky to have plenty of provisions. But a man should know better than to think that it's luck that keeps one in a good job.

The Young Aviator---And the Young Paupers



EDMUND BURKE

By Rev. Thomas B. Gregory

WHEN Edmund Burke died, one hundred and sixteen years ago, July 9, 1797, one of the greatest intellects and finest spirits of which the English-speaking world could boast passed out from the ways of men.

Old Dr. Sam Johnson said: "Burke is such a man that if you met him for the first time in the street, where you were stopped by a drove of oxen, and you and he stepped aside to take shelter but for five minutes, he'd talk to you in such a manner that when you parted you would say, 'This is an extraordinary man.'" When the old doctor was asked for his opinion regarding the authorship of the Letters of Junius, he declared that if Burke was not the author of the famous letters he could not guess who might be, since Burke was the only man then living in England who had the genius to write them.

Edmund Burke has often been called a paradox, a contradiction. A conservative of the Conservatives, he was at the same time an ardent progressive. A stanch champion of the ancient order, he was one of the greatest friends of the American revolt against King George. To add to the puzzling situation, while he said Godspeed to the American uprising, he emptied upon the heads of the French revolutionists the vials of his hottest wrath.

The explanation is not far to seek. Burke's ruling passion was for the thing known in these days as "Due Process of Law." Orderliness, in a word. In the American Revolution he saw nothing contrary to that idea; while the French Revolution, as it impressed Burke, was the very apotheosis of anarchy and chaos.

Parental Obligation

Primitive Habit of Looking on Father as Domestic Commissary Is Entirely Wrong--His Qualities and Teachings Necessary to Raise Male Child to Ideal Manhood.

Written For The Georgian

By the Rev. Dr. C. H. Parkhurst

WHAT is the extent of the parental obligation which a father owes to his children? The question deserves consideration because of its close bearing upon the purpose of domestic life, which is to produce children and make them serviceable to the interests of their times.

It has been pointed out that the terms "father" and "feeder" are but variable forms of one and the same word. So understood, the father is merely the one who provisions the family and stands to it in the relation of commissary.

In the more primitive forms of familyhood, when increasing the human breed, rather than improving it, met all recognized requirements, nothing more would naturally be demanded of the father than that the young of the family, like the young of the flock and herd, should be amply supplied with what will sustain life and promote growth. So that the faithful father would simply be he who was the attentive feeder, with no responsibility that looked beyond what the children needed as young and growing animals.

It is one of the features of more finished civilization that in some respects it continues to cherish customs and modes of thinking and feeling inherent in civilization of a more primitive type, but which we should suppose would have been outgrown and left behind with the process of time and the broadening and mellowing of sentiment.

Father as Commissary.

We have an example of this in the rather general continuance to the present time of the primitive habit of looking upon the father as the domestic commissary, and of considering that the obligations with which he has been especially charged have been fulfilled when his children have had furnished them all that is required by their creature necessities—housing, clothing and food.

He is reckoned a dutiful father if he keeps up the house and leaves it to the mother and her proxies to furnish education, morals, religion and all the finer accessories; he to take care of the child as an animal, and she to look after him as a person.

Without raising the question as to whether exclusive maternal influence will suffice for the successful upbringing of a family of girls, it is distinctly insufficient for the development of young masculine nature. There is a certain personal quality inherent in the normal man—but of which the normal woman is destitute—and without which no male child can become a perfectly constituted man; so that if he be submitted exclusively to maternal treatment, he has small chance of achieving an ideal manhood.

Of course, there are mannish women—a species of human freak with which our generation is being made painfully familiar—but freaks play no part in the economy of nature. Mannishness is a cheap counterfeit of manliness and can not render to the boy the office of masculine genuineness.

There is a certain special type of robustness and stability which the lad will gain by social contact with the father which only in rare instances will he acquire from his mother; and the unfortunate feature of our family life at present is that the father, as a rule, is so engaged and engrossed with what lies outside of the real inner life of the home that contact between father and son is reduced to a minimum.

Twofoldness of Parentage.

The twofoldness of parentage answers to the twin energies in nature by which its sterner and gentler forces combine with each other in the production of the finest forms of vegetable and animal life. The idea of duality runs through everything.

Everywhere there is the balancing and the co-operation of complementary forces.

The mother makes her contribution to the developing character of the child, a contribution full of wealth and tenderness, without which the lad, as he comes into mature years, would be destitute of charm and incapable of the finest effects of personality. But underneath the maternally conferred graces of character, and sustaining them, there requires to be a foundation made out of sterner stuff, exactly as the tree is unable to achieve the purposes of its existence by virtue of the foliage with which it is clad or the blossoms by which it is decorated except by the solidity of its anchorage in the firm soil in which it is planted.

Family life as it is maintained in these hurried days of business engrossment is such that fathers and their boys, in hosts of cases, hardly know each other.

The withholding of paternal influence is bound to leave its mark in the one-sided development of the boy; and it does leave its mark.

Masculine Impress Necessary.

The young fellow, as he leaves the warm home nest, commits himself to flight that lacks the sustaining power which can be secured only by the impress upon him of what is definitely and distinctly masculine.

It lies in the order of nature; beauty combined with stamina, grace married into grit.

We might go on and say that boyhood, and therefore manhood, is suffering from the fact that so much of our schoolroom training is furnished by women; but that would carry us into too wide a field.

In all the serious matters of life our only safe way is to keep close to the intentions of nature. The character of the individual depends upon it and so does the quality of civilization.

MEN UNDER SCRUTINY

By THOMAS TAPPER

WHEN the wag of a Western town mailed a letter to the ten principal citizens, saying, "All is discovered," the Ten immediately disappeared and no questions asked.

More men are being watched than ever dream of it.

Not an alarming situation, either, but a hopeful one.

An employer with a grain of common sense wants to intrust his business to capable men and women. In many cases even boys and girls are included.

As no man can run a big business alone, he is forced to find those who can help him.

Necessarily they all come to be tried upon these counts:

1. Loyalty.
2. Dependability.
3. Capacity.

The last, Capacity, shows itself at once. The first morning's work makes it evident that the worker equals 100 per cent of his job or less.

But the other two, Loyalty and Dependability, are NOT to be decided upon the first day or even the first YEAR.

IT TAKES TIME to try out a man's inner character. He must be left alone to the environment and the job until they have put all sorts of tests upon him.

Then someone begins to notice and say: "Well, this man stands the strain all right. When he speaks, he speaks for us; when we want him, he is where he should be."

"If this is the case," says the head of the business, "give him a chance.

"Try him out on something hard to do.

"See if he will weaken when it is put up to him good and strong."

And so on.

So they keep after him, watching his Loyalty and Dependability. Testing it as if it were a steel beam, to find if there be a weak spot in it.

By and by someone says: "This man rings true every time you strike him."

"In that case," the Boss says, "MAKE HIM ONE OF US."

NEW TYPE OF BEAUTY ENTERED IN SLOGAN BUTTON PICTURE CONTEST

Miss Helen McCullough, the newest entrant in the booster emblem beauty contest.

Latest Nominee for Booster Emblem Honors Is Miss Helen McCullough of Peachtree Road.

Miss Helen McCullough, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. N. McCullough, 1110 Peachtree road, is the latest nominee in the "beauty button" contest. She is regarded by many as easily the prettiest girl in Atlanta and in the voting to name the girl whose face shall adorn the "500,000 club" buttons she promises to always be near the top if not at the top itself.

She is the third to be entered in the race, the nominations of Miss Mert Hancock, Ponce DeLeon avenue, and Miss Mary Carl Hurst, 62 West Twelfth street, having already been announced. The three make a bevy of beauty that is a marvel, each quite different from the other, but each striking examples of their opposite types.

Miss Hancock's beauty is dominated by the glow of her wonderful auburn hair. Miss Hurst is a vivacious brunette. Miss McCullough is a petite blonde.

Every day brings more life into the contest. The end of this contest will bring to a climax the movement to organize the "500,000 booster club." When the "prettiest" girl is selected the buttons for the club members will be ordered and the organization formally completed.

Who is this prettiest girl?

That is for the readers of The Georgian and Hearst's Sunday American to decide. The voting coupons are run each day. If your favorite has not been mentioned nominate her and send in her photograph.

BUILDING TRADES PLAN FIGHT ON OPEN SHOP

A fight against the open shop in the building trades section of the Federation of Labor that promises to be the hardest in the history of organized labor in Atlanta will be the outcome of the strike on the Healey Building unless a settlement is reached shortly.

International officers representing the fourteen organizations composing the Building Trades Council are either in Atlanta or on their way here. A meeting of the Building Trades Council will be held Friday night, when steps looking to a settlement of the differences or to arrange for a finish fight will be taken.

Officers of the building trades concerned in the controversy state that wages in Atlanta are 30 per cent lower than in other Southern cities, and they attribute this to the fact that in Atlanta alone is the open shop permitted.

The open shop as operated in Atlanta, according to the officers of the building trades, is that only that class of work requiring the greatest skill and which can alone be done by members of the organization is done by union men, while all other work is put in the hands of non-union men. In this way, the results to the contractor can be attained and the unions get the worst of it.

The strike precipitated by the contractors putting non-union men working on the cutting of the pipe for the electrical contract will mean a finish fight between the Building Trades Council and the contractors against the open shop, and may tie up work in Atlanta for some time.

DESERTS FIANCE TO ELOPE WITH HIS RIVAL

Leaving in her wake the bruised heart of a young man, an employee of a downtown shoe store, to whom she was engaged to be married Sunday night, pretty Miss Dollie Lumpkin, No. 456 Houston street, went to Augusta Thursday night and became the bride of B. D. Gunter, employed in a Whitehall street shop. It is said by friends of the bridegroom that the young woman's original fiance was en route to the Ordinary's office to obtain a marriage license late yesterday afternoon when he heard of the elopement of his bride-to-be.

Miss Lumpkin had been engaged to the shoe clerk for several months, her friends declare, and the date of the wedding had been set for next Sunday night. About two months ago Miss Lumpkin met Gunter and he fell in love with her.

From then on it was a race between Mr. Gunter and the other young man for the heart and hand of Miss Lumpkin. Gunter, being a strenuous young man, decided it was up to him to hurry matters along, so on July 16 he secured a marriage license from the Ordinary, and that night, it is said, he showed it to Miss Lumpkin and pleaded with her to elope with him. She consented. Thursday morning, therefore, Miss Lumpkin left her home, telling her mother, Mrs. P. C. Lumpkin, that she was going downtown to do some shopping.

Shortly before noon Gunter asked his employer for a day off. He said he was sick, but his smiles as he left the store nearly gave him away. He met Miss Lumpkin at Alabama and Whitehall streets, it is said, and they went to Augusta and were married there.

SWEARINGEN TAKES FIGHT TO BOARD

Played Poker During Strike and Bet on Races, Declares Jacksonville Mayor.

JACKSONVILLE, July 18.—Mayor Van C. Swearingen has prepared his charges against Chief of Police Fred Roach and will file them Saturday with the Board of Bond Trustees if a meeting is called. If no meeting is called, they will be filed with W. M. Bostwick, Jr., chairman of the board.

The charges accuse Chief Roach of playing poker in the police station with some of his men last winter, during the street car strike. He also is accused of not having arrested strike-breakers for playing poker in the car barns during the same trouble.

Another charge is that when horse racing was legal in this county Chief Roach went to the track and bet on the results and did not try to prevent other members of the department from doing likewise. He also is charged with having refused to obey the orders of the Mayor.

No conflict of authority developed to-day, but a clash is expected at any time. The bond trustees are awaiting developments before taking further action.

House Fumes Over Woes of Ducktown

The House made but little headway Friday morning, the discussion of the Ducktown copper district troubles consuming more than an hour of the two-hour session.

The Ducktown issue was brought before the House by Barry Wright, of Floyd. Much complaint has been made during the past few years by farmers along the Tennessee border that their crops were being ruined by the fumes from the copper plants in Ducktown, Tenn. The Wright bill provides for the appointment of a committee to meet with attorneys of the copper companies and attempt to settle the differences.

Maniac Causes Panic In Chicago Grain Pit

CHICAGO, July 18.—Members of the Board of Trade to-day were thrown into a panic when a negro employee went insane.

Shouting and threatening to kill anyone who tried to stop him, the wild negro rushed through the corridors waving a revolver. A squad of policemen arrived after three brokers had overpowered the maniac.

London Laughs at Secretary Bryan's Plea of Poverty

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, July 18.—The Standard prints an editorial on "Politicians and Their Pay" this morning, in which it refers to the statement of William Jennings Bryan, the American Secretary of State, that he can not live on his salary of $12,000 a year. The Standard says:

"The poor man's champion has discovered that he can not subsist satisfactorily on $12,000 a year. A good many people in a good many countries manage to be comfortable on less than that amount, but since Mr. Bryan first took up socialism as a profession he has done well on the lecture platform.

"He has been making $15,000 every year by denouncing the idle rich. If the Union can not pay the same scale he proposes to increase his emoluments by private exertions, so he will go on tour again."

Ashley Has Plan to Block 'Pigeonholing'

Councilman Claude L. Ashley announced Friday he would introduce a resolution in Council Monday to prevent the "pigeonholing" of legislation in committees by requiring that all matters referred to committees be reported to Council at the next meeting.

"We have no rules in Council," said Councilman Ashley. "Some Mayor Pro Tem abandoned all the rules several years ago. Some of the committees have taken it on themselves to kill all legislation they are unfavorable to by refusing to report on it. This is what I want to stop.

U. S. Tennis Stars Defeat Canadians

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

WIMBLEDON, ENGLAND, July 18. R. Morris Williams, of Philadelphia, to-day defeated B. P. Schwenger, of Canada, in the first match of the final lawn tennis play between the United States and Canada for the selection of a team to challenge England for the Davis cup. The scores were 6-4, 6-2, 6-4.

In the second match Maurice McLoughlin, of San Francisco, beat R. B. Powell, captain of the Canadian team, three straight sets, 10-8, 6-1 and 6-4.

60 Insurance Men Ill After Banquet

MILWAUKEE, July 18.—Sixty men, all prominent in the insurance business, from all parts of the country, were ill to-day following a banquet given during an insurance convention here.

Three varieties of cold fish—pike, salmon and white—were served at the banquet, and it was believed that one of these caused ptomaine poisoning.

CRAWFORD'S SANITY NOW ATTACKED

Expert Declares Capitalist Was Not in His Right Mind When He Married.

That Joshua B. Crawford was insane at the time he married Mrs. Mary Belle Crawford and had been entirely irresponsible for several months prior to that time, was the testimony of Dr. R. R. Kimes, expert on insanity and abdominal surgery, introduced by Attorney Joe S. James Friday morning in his effort to have the marriage annulled and the $250,000 estate revert to the heirs-at-law.

Dr. Kimes rendered his opinion in reply to a long hypothetical question and was excused without cross-examination.

During the taking of testimony another clash in the courtroom was narrowly averted. George W. Bolden, a character witness for Mrs. Crawford, threatened to thrash Attorney James unless he apologized for what the witness considered an insulting question. Colonel James declined to apologize and order was only restored when Colonel Anderson ordered the witness from the stand, and he was escorted from the courtroom by the lawyers.

"How do you know that Mrs. Crawford is a lady?" interrogated Attorney James.

Lawyers in War of Words.

"I demand that you apologize immediately for asking such a question," exclaimed Bolden.

"I will not apologize. I do not intend to take back anything that I say."

"You will take it back or I will make you, if I have to beat you to do it."

"You are at liberty to try that at any time you see fit."

Colonel Anderson, who had rapped several times for order, stepped between the attorney and the witness just as the latter got from his seat and started toward the attorney.

The Crawford heirs-at-law got to their feet and rushed to aid their attorney. Reuben Arnold stepped between them and with Colonel Anderson helped escort the witness from the room.

Anxious to Tell All.

Mrs. Crawford was anxious to go on the stand Friday and see the evidence from her side of the case go into the minutes of the hearing.

"I want to tell everything I know about the affair when I go on the stand," she said. "The other side has had everything its way so far, because all of the witnesses were for the heirs-at-law. It will be altogether a different story when Mr. Arnold and Mr. Smith introduce the witnesses we have. It will then be conclusively proved that there was nothing irregular anywhere except the groundless accusations that have been made against me."

Attorney James said Friday morning that he had been entirely too busy to take any official action toward having Fred Lump, the New York barber who is charged with being an accessory in the alleged poisoning, brought back to Atlanta.

"I will then get him back here in plenty of time if he remains in America," said Attorney James. "He would be of no particular use in this civil hearing, and that was why I didn't take steps earlier to get him back.

"At the first opportunity I will ask the Governor to give me requisition papers, and I will send a deputy to New York for him."

DIES FROM OVERWORK.

Search Begun for Estranged Husband In Drugging Case

Detectives working on the mysterious chloroforming of six members of the family of Mrs. Archibald Duncan, of 318 South Boulevard, and the clubbing of one of her daughters, have begun a search for M. A. Deal, husband of Mrs. Ruby Deal, one of the women drugged.

They are working on the theory that Deal drugged the entire family in an attempt to kidnap his daughter, Marguerite Deal, aged 3 years.

Chief Lanford Friday morning virtually admitted his activity in the case had narrowed to a search for Deal.

The members of Mrs. Duncan's family have recovered from the drugging. Miss Pearl Hildebrand, the daughter who was slugged, has returned to her work.

Passenger Agents Meet at the Ansley

General passenger agents of nine Southern railroads—in body identified as the Southeastern Passenger Association—met at noon Friday in the parlors of the New Ansley Hotel.

W. H. Howard, secretary of the association, presided.

The next meeting of the association will be held some time in August in Chicago.

Members of the association in attendance were H. F. Carey, Southern Railway; R. D. Pusey, Louisville and Nashville; W. L. Danley, Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis; J. C. Haile, Central of Georgia; C. E. Harmon, Western and Atlantic; George H. Smith, Queen and Crescent; J. A. Higgins, West Point; T. C. White, Atlantic Coast Line; H. H. Rauth, Mobile and Ohio.

Stanley's Son Dying, Tells His Life Secret

SAULT STE MARIE, July 18.—Jack Stanley, 39, son of the famous explorer, Sir Henry M. Stanley, died here to-day in a lodging house from tuberculosis.

As death hovered near the dying man, he whispered a secret which he had shared only with his wife, formerly Mrs. Violet Lancaster, of Detroit, whom he married on the stage of the Odean Theater, Clarksburg, W. Va., four years ago.

"I am the son of Sir Henry M. Stanley, the famous explorer. Tell mother." With these words he sank into subconsciousness.

Fire Truck Joy Ride Lands Love in Cell

INDIANAPOLIS, July 18.—Following an alleged joy ride in an automobile hook and ladder truck belonging to the Indianapolis fire department, Lieutenant Harold Love and Chauffeur Ralph Aldrich, of the fire department, were arrested to-day and taken to Shelbyville for trial.

Officers of Shelbyville lodged a charge of excessive speed while the joy riders were passing through that city.

REVERSAL OF VERDICTS IS DENIED BY JUDGE

Apologizes Also to Porcine Family for Likening Woodward's Legal Knowledge to Theirs.

Recorder Nash Broyles penned a polite note of apology to the whole hog family Friday.

With the same hand he picked up the cudgels with which again to belabor his honor, Mayor Woodward.

The Mayor, quoth the recorder, was the author of a ridiculous and absurd falsehood and it was a regrettable libel upon Mr. Hog to have to submit to a comparison with Atlanta's Mayor.

As for the Mayor, he declared he was tired of wasting verbiage on the Recorder and that he would have nothing more to say in their quarrel. He intimated, however, that he had it in his mind to override the Recorder again by pardoning another prisoner.

Apologizes to Porcine Family.

"I care nothing for the Mayor's abuse. Condemnation from such a character should be considered praise. But when he says that he Court of Appeals on May 23, 1913, reversed me in ten cases and sustained me in seven, he tells such a ridiculous and absurd falsehood that I now apologize to the hog to which I referred yesterday when I said the Mayor knew less about law than a hog does about political economy.

"The idea of the Court of Appeals passing one day upon seventeen cases appealed from the Recorder's Court of Atlanta!

"The records of that court will show that on an average there are not seventeen cases a year carried to the Court of Appeals, and they will also show that that court has sustained me in ten cases where it has reversed me in one.

Sees Attempt to Evade Issue.

"But the Mayor is, as usual, trying to sidetrack the issue between us. That issue is not my ability as a lawyer or a judge. I am content to let my record speak for me, but the issue is that the Mayor is protecting and pardoning the habitual and confirmed criminals of our city; is obstructing and defeating justice in our courts and impeding the officers of the law in their attempt to check crime in our city.

"And this is the issue on which the people at the next election will call him to account."

Mayor Woodward retorted that he had concluded his comments on Recorder Broyles, but that he practically had decided again to overrule the Recorder and issue another pardon.

Plans to Give New Pardon.

The situation is possible only because Judge Broyles made a mistake and imposed a sentence of 30 instead of 29 days, which puts the case in the jurisdiction of the Mayor.

G. Poulus, who runs a restaurant on Alabama street, was fined $100 and sentenced to 30 days in the stockade. The story that has reached Mayor Woodward is that Poulus discharged a negro boy and that the negro boy, being angry, reported Poulus to the police as selling beer. Poulos says he only orders beer from adjoining saloons and keeps it in his ice box for his customers.

'LOBBY' CHARGED WITH SWINGING SALOON VOTE

Manufacturers Lined Up Brewers for Watson in Indiana, According to Mulhall.

WASHINGTON, July 18.—How the National Association of Manufacturers lined up the brewers and saloon men of Indiana for the Republicans and Representative James E. Watson in his campaign for Governor was told in a letter written by Colonel Mulhall to F. C. Schwedtman, secretary to President Van Cleave, and read before the Overman lobby investigating committee to-day.

Watson, according to Mulhall's letter, was not so much afraid of the 20,000 votes the brewers could swing against him as he was of the $250,000 they would put into the last part of the campaign.

Accordinf to another letter Mulhall, the field agent of the "invisible government," assured "Uncle Joe Cannon that reports that the association was fighting him were false, and that the association was firmly supporting him.

Hines' Name Brought In.

Mulhall declared he helped Representatives Henry C. Coudrey and Richard Bartholdt, of Missouri, who were re-elected by narrow margins, and also asserted he thought the association deserved the credit for their victories.

Edward Hines, of Chicago, said to have boasted that he "put Lorimer over," came in for notice in connection with a telegram to Mulhall in which he appealed for $1,000 to aid Representative Jenkins, of Wisconsin and offered to supervise the spending of this sum.

"I don't consider Teddy, nor Taft, nor Sherman, nor Foraker equal to VanCleave, Parry, Kirby and the others who have given freely of their energy and their money to the great cause expressed in the principles of the National Association of Manufacturers," wrote Schwedtman to Mulhall August 28.

"Like John the Baptist."

"There will come a time when the world will know that the Parrys and the VanCleaves of to-day are like John the Baptist of old, speaking thoughtfully of events to come and condemning fearlessly the present wrongs, clearing the way for righteousness and honesty."

In an effort to prevent an enormous waste of time, the committee assigned clerks to examine the 123,000 letters in the file the association turned over to the committee, to cull out those letters which have the greatest bearing on the inquiry. It is proposed to keep Mulhall on the stand until all of the material correspondence has become a part of the record.

ATLANTANS PREFER A CAMP NEAR THE CITY TO MORE FASHIONABLE SUMMER RESORTS

Miss Jean Douglas at the oars.

Douglas Family Enjoys Outing in Pine Woods, With All Joys of Outdoor Life.

The summertime resorts at mountain and seaside are claiming fewer Atlanta people this year than ever before. And the reason is Atlanta people have learned that the best and most pleasant summer resort in the whole land is right here in the country surrounding the city.

In every direction are to be found summer camps where the business or professional man is enjoying all the pleasures and comforts of a summer resort, and at the same time is able to get into town every day to attend to business affairs.

One of the most attractive camps is that of Hamilton Douglas, president of the Atlanta School of Law and of the Atlanta Bar Association. It is located on the grounds of the Capital City Country Club, about one-fifth of a mile from the clubhouse, in a charming bit of pine woods. The camp is called "The Camp by the Side of the Road," and the Douglas family, and many visiting friends, are spending the summer months just as cool and as comfortable as if they were in the most perfectly appointed mountain resort hotel.

There are four tents; one for Mr. and Mrs. Douglas, one for Misses Jean, Helen and Dorothy Douglas and their girl friends, one for Hamilton Douglas, Jr., and for the various members of the Boy Scouts, which he organized in Atlanta, who come out to the camp from time to time. Then there is the cook tent, which is presided over by "the best cook in the State," to quote Mr. Douglas.

"We get up at 5:30 every morning," he declared, "run down to the lake for a cool plunge, and after a hearty breakfast, Hamilton, Jr., and I catch the 8:15 car for town. We come back to our camp early in the afternoon, and I tell you it is a relief to get the fresh air, cooled by the constant breezes, and redolent of the pine woods, after a hot day in town. Every night it is so cool that we sleep under a double blanket. Give me this camp life every summer hereafter."

The young women at the camp find many ways to make the days attractive and void of dull moments. All of them are expert swimmers and divers, and Miss Helen is a golf enthusiast besides. Boating on the lake is one of Miss Jean's hobbies. The tennis courts of the country club are only a short distance away, and every morning and late afternoon tennis sets are played. There are many charming walks to be found in the country also.

A big camp fire is a nightly feature of the camp, and the family and guests sit around it and tell stories, sing or listen to Misses Helen and Jean play on the mandolin and guitar. A Victrola provides cheerful music also, and the birds and squirrels must wonder greatly when they hear Caruso open up with his "Sob Song," or Collins and Harlan render one of their characteristic rags.

"I'm not going back to the mountains another summer," says pretty Miss Jean. "This camp just suits me exactly, and we don't have to be separated from father and brother, either. They can be right here to enjoy it with us, and that makes it all the more enjoyable. I think everybody in Atlanta should camp out in the summer, and I know they would if they knew how grand it is."

Second Regiment Reaches Brunswick

BRUNSWICK, July 18.—The Second Regiment, under command of Colonel J. A. Thomas, Jr., arrived in Brunswick this morning in three divisions, the last one detraining at 8 a. m. The task of transferring men and equipment to St. Simons Island began immediately. It is expected that the regiment, more than 600 strong, will be at the camp by noon.

BILL AIDS GRAND JURIES.

A bill giving grand juries the right to employ stenographers to transcribe evidence has been introduced by Representative Suggs. The bill also provides this evidence may be used as competent testimony in Superior Courts.

Clyde Prince, the four-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. C. P. Prince, No. 109 Main street, died at the residence Friday morning. Funeral announcements will be made later.

Severe Cough Led To Lung Trouble

Sufferers with Lung Trouble are rarely willing to acknowledge the fact. If you have a so-called "cold" that has long persisted; or a cough that keeps you anxious; or any of the symptoms of Lung Trouble, such as fever or night sweats, weakness, loss of appetite, or perhaps some raising of mucus, take Eckman's Alterative—as Mr. Bettersworth did:

Bowling Green, Ky., R. No. 4.

"Gentlemen: The spring of 1908 I had a severe cough for six months. I tried all the medicine that my doctors recommended to me, but no results came for the better. I had night sweats, and would cough and spit until I got so weak I could hardly do anything. But, at last, James Deering, of Glasgow Junction, insisted that I try your medicine. In one week's time there was quite an improvement in my condition, and after I had taken several bottles I felt as well as ever in my life. I desire the world to know that I firmly believe that your Eckman's Alterative will cure any case of lung trouble if taken before the last stage."

(Affidavit) A. C. BETTERSWORTH.

Eckman's Alterative has been proven by many years' test to be most efficacious in cases of severe Throat and Lung Affections, Bronchitis, Bronchial Asthma, Stubborn Colds and in upbuilding the system. Does not contain narcotics, poisons or habit-forming drugs. For sale by all Jacobs' Drug Stores and other leading druggists. Write the Eckman Laboratory, Philadelphia, Pa., for booklet telling of recoveries and additional evidence.

Dougherty Should Worry; He Was Cool

INDIANAPOLIS, July 18.—Not even a smile covered John Dougherty early to-day as he sat in the rear of 233 East Washington street, a square from police headquarters.

He didn't seem to realize that he was shocking the neighborhood. He sat on a box swinging his heels. It might have been the Garden of Eden and he might have been Adam, without even a fig leaf.

In a covering of wrapper paper he was taken to police headquarters charged with "loitering."

It was a hot night.

Tax Sales Ordered; First in Many Years

Through an investigation directed by Chairman Charles W. Smith, of the Council tax committee, it has been discovered that the city holds overdue tax liens on $41,000 worth of real estate in Atlanta. Chairman Smith has directed that this property be sold.

It has been many years since a sale of property for taxes was held in Atlanta. Much of the $41,000 covers small vacant lots, but some of the property involved is bringing rent.

HOKE SMITH, IN SPEECH TO GEORGIA ASSEMBLY, DEFENDS CUTS IN TARIFF

United States Senator Hoke Smith addressed the two bodies of the Georgia Legislature in joint session at noon Friday in the house.

Conspicuous throughout his address was the strong defense of the national administration, the keynote of which was prophetic of a period of unequaled prosperity throughout the Wilson regime.

Senator Smith declared that the Democrats to-day have enough votes in the Senate to pass the tariff bill. He said that nothwithstanding the cuts made by the national House, the Senate had cut still deeper, and made additions to the free list.

"For the first time in fifty years," declared the Senator, "legislation intended to take the burden off the masses of the people has found no resistance in the Democratic Senate. It must be conceded by all that the Senate Democrats have made the tariff bill more Democratic than it was when it reached the Senate."

Mr. Smith attacked the present vogue of vast distribution of charity by the wealthy men of the nation.

Prefers Taxation to Charity.

"I would rather see the National Government raise the money by income taxes and spend it for such causes than to leave the people indebted to men for great charities," he declared.

The Senator advocated States' rights in handling State problems. While his reference was to the California-Japanese situation, he made its application general by saying: "From the Californians' troubles the whole country is realizing the difficulties with which we have had to contend, and they are helping us make converts to the doctrine that we must be left to handle our troubles ourselves."

Senator Smith brought up for strong arraignment the Sherwood bill for an increase of United States pensions.

"The startling truth is demonstrated that the eleven Southern States have paid to Union pensioners of the War Between the States the entire value, in 1870, of their agricultural lands and all improvements thereon, together with their agricultural implements and live stock," he said. "I believe it to be the duty of your Senators to resist in every proper way an increase in the now already enormous payments for pensions of the Civil War."

The speaker also attacked the workmen's compensation act, now pending, declaring it to be a bill to save the railroad corporations from their just liabilities to injured employees.

Urges U. S. Road Building.

In advocating the excise tax bill, Senator Smith declared strongly for constitutional authority to pass an income tax which would proportion equally among the entire citizenship the expense of Government.

The Senator advocated national aid to road building throughout the country. He said the road-building question was at present before the Post-office and Postroads Committee of the Senate, and that his every effort, personally, would be to bring it through successfully.

Senator Smith went into the plan of tariff reduction fully. He said, in part:

"The Democratic party has undertaken to reform the tariff downward for the purpose of stopping, as far as possible, this system of legalized robbery. The plan of the Democratic tariff bill involves several different propositions.

Taxes on Luxuries.

"First. The raising of revenues.

"Second. The production of legitimate competition, to the end that fair prices shall be charged consumers.

"Third. No taxes, or the lowest possible taxes, upon the necessaries of life and those things used by the great body of the people.

"Fourth. High taxes upon luxuries.

"With the fullest praise for what the Democrats of the House did, I wish to say that the Democrats of the Senate sustained the reductions made by the House, and after investigations, made additional reductions of great importance.

"The House Democrats put flour upon the free list, but taxed wheat. The Senate Democrats put both upon the free list.

"The House Democrats put meat upon the free list, but taxed cattle. The Senate Democrats put meat and cattle both upon the free list.

"The House Democrats left a tax of 25 per cent upon cheap woolen blankets. The Democrats of the Senate put them upon the free list. The House taxed wool of the angora goat and alpaca. The Senate Democrats put it on the free list.

"The House Democrats taxed flax and hemp; the Senate Democrats put them upon the free list.

Schoolbooks Duty Free.

"The House Democrats taxed pig iron, and steel billets, and ferro manganese. The Senate Democrats put them on the free list.

"The House Democrats taxed textbooks. The Senate Democrats placed them on the free list.

"It is impossible to say just when we will vote upon the tariff bill in the Senate. I believe we will certainly vote before the end of six weeks, possibly in much less time. I do not think any considerable delay will take place in conference. I believe the differences between the two houses will readily be adjusted by the Democrats in the two bodies and the measure be soon passed with the approval of the Democrats of both houses."

On currency legislation Senator Smith said:

"The currency bill which has been introduced both in the Senate and in the House will free the country from dependence upon Wall Street. It will facilitate an increase of currency to meet especial demands for same. It will make a currency panic impossible. There are many features in the bill which I thoroughly approve. There are others which I believe should be changed. I think the Democrats of the House and Senate should make it as nearly perfect as possible, and then support it.

"There are features in the tariff bill against which I voted in the committee, but there comes a time when individual opinion must yield to the majority.

"Both the House and Senate Democrats placed jute bagging and cotton ties on the free list. Both placed wire fencing on the free list. Both placed agricultural implements on the free list, and what has been known as the farmers' free list, so much discussed two years ago, when passed by the House and rejected by the Senate, is now contained in the tariff bill which passed the House and which has been approved by the Democratic caucus of the Senate without a dissenting vote. And what I wish to say to you to-day is we have the votes in the Senate to pass the bill.

"Our farmers have been overcharged for the things which they are compelled to buy because of excessive prices maintained by the exclusion of foreign competition. It has been conceded that, while the government collected three hundred millions of dollars each year from the tariff, the industries in the United States, which the high tariff was intended to help, collected over a billion of dollars more from the people than they could have charged but for the exclusion of foreign competition. These burdens fell upon all the people of our State, but were especially heavy upon the farming classes, who in no respect receive any benefit.

Sees Era of Prosperity.

"I believe that the adoption of our new tariff bill will mark an era of prosperity throughout the country. The industries heretofore protected will not lose in the long run by competition, but, spurred through it to greater efforts they will seek their profits by broader trade; dependent not alone upon taking the dollars of their neighbors, they will reach into the markets of the world for the sale of their commodities.

Lauds the President.

"No currency system would be complete that did not take into consideration the importance of farm credits. Thorough study is now being given to this subject, and I believe in the near future action will be had by which rates of interest charged to farmers may be reduced and increased facilities given for farm loans.

"In conclusion, let me remind you that the last time I spoke in Georgia was at the Auditorium when I presented Governor Wilson to the people of the State. I assured the audience of his purpose and ability to serve, and of his strength as a candidate. We made no mistake when we nominated him. We won the fight for the Democratic party.

"The people of the country made no mistake when they elected him."

Stocks' Funeral To Be Held from Home

Interment will be at Oakland Cemetery.

ACCUSED WIFE IS RIDDEN ON RAIL BY WOMEN

Victim Then Is Ducked in Mud Puddle and Forced to Flee Illinois Village.

POLO, ILL., July 18.—Suspicious that Mrs. Minnie Richardson, wife of the crippled keeper of a general store here, was more than friendly with her brother-in-law, Will Dunnill, the village stonemason, a band of women of the village kidnaped Mrs. Richardson from her home, rode her on a rail through the town and dumped her in a mud puddle.

After the mud bath they gave her 24 hours to leave the village. Richardson mortgaged his store for $1,500 and gave her money to pay her railroad fare.

When the men of the town went to Dunnill's home, he was not there and his wife said he had left the town. She had mortgaged her home to get money for him.

Mrs. Peter Stansfield, wife of the blacksmith, who was captain of the women "vigilantes," said that the conduct of Mrs. Richardson and Dunnill had been the subject of comment for nearly a year.

The women planned to capture Mrs. Richardson and the men were to take Dunnill, and the rail-riding party was to be a "double-header." The men failed to find their victim and Mrs. Richardson rode alone. The men stood on the sidewalks and cheered.

For ten years Richardson, who is a paralytic, has gone about in a wheel chair. He said to-day:

"They were pretty rough on my wife, but I guess she had not done right. I don't believe she will ever come back."

LEAVE TO WED IS DENIED COUPLE IN VICE NET

Joe North Held to Grand Jury as Slaver—Girl Is Sent to Martha Home.

Despite the pleadings of his aged mother and of Effie Drummond, the girl in the case, who asked that she be allowed to marry him, Joe North, caught by Chief Beavers' vice squad in a raid on the boarding house of Mrs. Lulu Bell at Fair and Peters streets, was held to the Grand Jury by Judge Broyles Thursday, in the sum of $200. The charge, which from the first story told by the Drummond woman, promised to develop into white slavery, was changed to disorderly conduct.

The girl, who when first arrested told her story freely to Chief Beavers and Recorder Broyles, testified against North Thursday afternoon with reluctance. She at first denied that she knew North, and the next moment admitted having lived with him as his wife, both at his mother's home and at Mrs. Bell's, to which latter place she says he induced her to go.

"You say you don't know him, and yet you admit that you lived with him?" demanded Recorder Broyles.

"Well," the girl stammered, "I guess I 'kinda' know him!"

Both North and the girl asked that they be allowed to marry. The girl told Judge Broyles she had been married once before, in South Carolina, but had got a divorce in that State.

"You didn't get a divorce in South Carolina," said the Recorder. "The laws of that State do not permit divorces."

"Well," the girl hesitated, "I think my husband's dead, anyway."

"You only hope he is dead," retorted Recorder Broyles. "You can't marry this man until you get a divorce."

North's mother pleaded that her son be placed on probation, but Judge Broyles refused. The girl was sent to the Martha Home.

Church Folks at War On Clubs in Macon

MACON, July 18.—The Law Enforcement League has begun a campaign looking to the extinction of the saloon and the social club in Macon. Three test cases have been made against two saloons and a club, charging them with being nuisances in that they are "blind tigers."

If Judge Mathews grants petitions for injunctions, which will be heard on August 1, similar proceedings will be instituted against every saloon and club in the city. Petitions for injunctions were signed by 45 citizens, including the Revs. W. N. Ainsworth, J. L. White and C. B. Currie, representing the Methodist, Baptist and Presbyterian Churches.

Papal Guards' Wine Supply Cut; Mutiny

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

ROME, July 18.—A mutiny among the Vatican Swiss guards—the second within four days—occurred to-day. Upon orders from Pope Plus X the soldiers were seized, disarmed and placed under arrest. They were replaced by gendarmes who may remain as the permanent military police at the Vatican.

Attempts to curtail the wine supply of the Swiss guards led to the disaffection. Hitherto the guardsmen were allowed an unlimited supply of wine.

Dies at Auto Wheel; Wife Averts Crash

KENOSHA, WIS., July 18.—Mrs. Frank J. Eaton, while riding with her husband, felt the automobile turn from the roadway as they were going 25 miles an hour. She saw her husband was not holding the wheel. Catching it as the car was on the edge of an embankment, she brought the machine back into the roadway and stopped it.

Her husband had died of heart disease.

TO BUILD BIG RESERVOIR.

COLUMBUS.—The Columbus Water Supply Company announces that it has purchased land on Factory Hill, north of Columbus, where it will construct a 5,000,000-gallon storage reservoir, a filtering plant, settling basin and pumping station.

2 BUSINESS MEN POLICE NABBED PLAN FIGHT

M. F. Smith and B. F. Glenn Likely to Make Charges Against Officer Milam to Board.

M. F. Smith, vice president and secretary of the Eagle Stamp Works, and B. T. Glenn, manager of the Old Mill Theater, Whitehall street, who were taken to headquarters by the police Wednesday night after they had carried Miss Mabel Parker, a chorus girl, to Grady Hospital, in a semi-conscious condition, probably will appear before Chief Beavers Friday and ask that the Chief and the Police Commission investigate their arrest.

Smith and Glenn deny that they were responsible for the girl's condition. They declare the woman went into convulsions when she received a telegram that her brother was dying. They say they called a physician, who administered chloroform to quiet her, and left. The woman's hysteria continued, and Smith and Glenn then took her to Grady in a cab.

Officer Milam was at the hospital when the girl was brought in and he took Smith and Glenn to headquarters, where they were released after being questioned by Assistant Chief Jett and Captain Terry. In his report Officer Milam states that the girl was clad only in a thin gauze nightdress.

Chief Beavers stated that he will investigate the case, and it probably will be brought before the Police Commission at the next meeting. Police officials declare that Milam only did his duty.

America Gets 94,176 From British Isles

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, July 18.—The emigration statistics for the United Kingdom for the year ended March 31 last show that 656,855 emigrants went to non-European countries, an increase of 22,000 over the previous highest total, which was that for the year 1907.

The number of those who went to the United States was 94,176. The immigration from America in the same period was 16,819.

New Haven Accepts Mellen Resignation

NEW YORK, July 18.—At a meeting of the directors of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad to-day the resignation of President Charles Mellen was accepted formally. A committee of three members of the board was appointed to negotiate with any proposed successor.

It was stated that any name mentioned as Mellen's successor at the present time purely is guesswork.

FACTS IN MEXICO DEMANDED BY PRESIDENT

Ambassador Scored for Incomplete Reports to U. S.—Mystery in Diaz's Trip to Japan.

WASHINGTON, July 18.—In preparation for the arrival of Ambassador Henry Lane Wilson, now on his way from Mexico, President Wilson today requested the State Department to furnish him with all the information relative to the troubles in Mexico from the beginning of the Madero revolt.

This mass of material the President intends to read thoroughly, so he will be informed as to all the developments of the Mexican situation before the arrival of Ambassador Wilson.

Secretary Bryan, who returned from the first lap of his Chautauqua lecture tour this morning, called on the President, bringing a large bundle of telegrams and correspondence.

Hale Sends Information.

They included dispatches from William Bayard Hale, President Wilson's personal representative in Mexico City, who does not consider the Huerta regime stable, and has advised against recognition.

Suspicions of the sincerity of the representations made by several European nations have been raised in Washington by the trail of high finance running through them all. Allegations are made that the crisis is nothing more nor less than a "bondholders' conspiracy" engineered from Paris.

Diaz May Visit Japan.

The President does not hesitate to criticise Ambassador Wilson for failing to sustain any fixed or definite conclusions in his dispatches to the State Department. Other consular and special agents of the United States in Mexico have been equally indefinite in the information they have sent to the State Department.

A proposed trip of Felix Diaz to Japan is causing speculation at the State Department. At this time his presence in Japan would serve to renew the efforts of the jingoes to create a strong anti-American feeling there. The proposed trip has renewed reports that Japan is negotiating for a naval base on the western coast of Mexico.

Secretary of State Bryan announced that he had canceled his lecture engagements for the greater part of next week and would be in Washington all the time that Ambassador Wilson is here.

Following the Cabinet session several members of the President's official family stated that the Cabinet is a unit in supporting the chief executive's policy concerning Mexico, particularly as regards the non-recognition of President Huerta's Government.

Arsenal Stores at U. S. Forts on Gulf Increased.

MOBILE, July 18.—Large shipments of projectiles and ammunition are being unloaded at Fort Morgan, at the entrance of Mobile Bay, and at Fort Barrancas, Fla., ccordaing to reports brought to Mobile by artillerymen.

Drilling with the big guns has been going on steadily at both of these important naval bases.

Nothing Succeeds Like Success

Mr. J. E. Greene says the secret of his success is in good health, and the secret of his good health is in Nuxcara. He like every big-hearted, successful man, delights in telling the world about Nuxcara, the only cure known for indigestion, dyspepsia and catarrh.

J. E. GREENE.

Atlanta, Ga., June 6, 1913.

Dr. Kelly, Atlanta, Ga.:

Dear Sir:

Some months ago I had what I thought was heart trouble. My heart would skip for an hour or more, and often every third beat. This was especially noticeable after eating. I consulted several physicians, but got no permanent relief. I chanced to pick up one of Dr. Kelly's books on "Nuxcara," and soon found I had been treating the wrong complaint. I bought a bottle of Nuxcara, and got some better, and, after taking about half a dozen bottles, I was entirely relieved of all heart troubles, as well as indigestion. I have not had a return of this since, and I consider Nuxcara one of the greatest achievements in medicine for the troubles it is recommended to cure.

Yours very truly,
J. E. GREENE,

CHIEF, WITH HAMMER, SMASHES SEIZED GUNS

Beavers Pounds Away in Broiling Sun Until He Has Destroyed Seventy-five Pistols.

Chief Beavers, faithfully following the ordinance passed recently by Council, smashed away in the hot sun Friday with a sledge hammer until he had destroyed more than 75 unclaimed revolvers and pistols which have collected at police headquarters during the last few months.

The Chief chose for the ceremony a time when the mercury was flirting with the 95 mark. Perspiration poured down his cheeks before he had swung the heavy hammer a half dozen times, but he kept on until every weapon had been converted into scrap.

The revolver smashing is one of the methods by which the authorities are waging war against the "pistol toters," and is designed to break the endless chain by which criminals are supplied with weapons. Formerly the weapons taken from prisoners were saved for a few months and then sold at low prices to the pawnshop proprietorsw, who in turn sold them back to the criminals.

The first smashing Friday resulted in the destruction of nearly $1,000 worth of weapons. Chief Beavers carefully examined all of the revolvers for cartridges before undertaking his task. When done, he mopped his face and became the auctioneer in the "ole hoss" sale of knives, bicycles, umbrellas and an accumulation of other unclaimed articles.

$2,400,000 an Ounce Is Paid for Radium

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, July 18.—It is reported that the German emissaries who came to London seeking radium have bought every available gramme of the British supply, which is only an eighth of the quantity wanted. They paid cash down.

The present price of radium is equivalent to $2,400,000 an ounce.

Boy Badly Bitten as He Falls Over Dog

Crawford Mitchell, 7-year-old son of R. M. Mitchell, No. 974 Highland avenue, was bitten badly by a pet dog Thursday afternoon and is in a serious condition. A large strip of flesh was torn from the child's arm and he was otherwise lacerated.

The child was playing in a vacant lot near his home, when he stumbled over the dog, which was gnawing upon a bone. The dog sprang at the child and bit him several times before his playmates could drive him away.

RECTOR OPPOSES BIBLE IN SCHOOLS

Dr. Wilmer Tells Committee Some of Its Chapters Are Unfit for Public Reading.

Declaring "there are lots of chapters in the Bible unfit for public reading," Dr. C. B. Wilmer, rector of St. Luke's Episcopal Church, opened the fight against the proposed bill requiring the reading of the Bible in the schools of Georgia in the Senate Education Committee hearing Friday morning.

Following the debate which was listened to by scores of persons other than Senators, a motion for a further hearing next Tuesdayafternoon at 3 o'clock was adopted.

Dr. Wilmer, who spoke for twenty minutes, followed other speakers representing both sides, including Dr. Dunbar Ogden and Dr. Little of the Presbyterian Church, favoring the measure with an amendment, and Carlyle Haynes, a representative of the Georgia Religious Liberty Association, opposing it.

Other ministers present who will speak next Tuesday, it is understood, were Dr. John E. White of the Second Baptist, Dr. H. M. DuBose of the First Methodist, Dr. C. W. Daniels of the First Baptist, Father Rappier of the Roman Catholic Church, Rabbi David Marx, Dr. Lovejoy of the Methodist Church, and others. The Rev. Mr. Daniel declared he would preach on the subject next Sunday morning.

HOUSE RATES SLASHED IN TARIFF ACT REPORTED TO SENATE; TRUSTS HARD HIT

WASHINGTON, July 18.—The report to Senator Simmons, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee on the Underwood-Simmons tariff bill as amended by the Senate, was placed before the Upper House at noon to-day, and debate on the measure immediately was begun.

The report is largely devoted to defense of the Senate Democrats' action in reducing rates under the original House measure and to extensive tables showing the percentage and effect of these rates.

In a brief introduction, Senator Simmons declares that the Senate bill, if enacted into law, "will result in an equitable distribution of burdens and incidental benefits of the Payne-Aldrich system of customs taxation that will tend to disintegrate monopolies built up under a protective tariff; that will reduce the cost of living; that will increase the opportunities of the individual citizen and relieve the people from the burdens of a former scheme of taxation."

Rich Trusts Only Hit.

The Senator points out that the interests hit by the reduction of duties under the House bill are in almost every instance trusts which have grown rich under a high protective tariff. Among these are the steel, aluminum, cement, callera, asphalt, Standard Oil, sugar, wool and paper trusts.

To counteract the millions in import revenue lost to the Government through the admission of foreign markets under a free list or reduced rate of tariff, taxes have been placed upon bananas solely controlled by a trust, upon gambling in cotton futures, upon the incomes of the rich, upon brandies used in fortifying wines and upon luxuries in general.

The total outcome of the Senate tariff labors is a decrease of 27.64 per cent under the Payne-Aldrich tariff rates and of 4.22 per cent under the House tariff rates. Nevertheless, the report predicts that the business of the Government will be run at a profit.

Total Revenue $996,810,000.

The official figures, based upon compilations of Treasury experts for the fiscal year 1913, place the total revenue, exclusive of the possible revenue from the Panama Canal, the sinking fund and the national bank note redemption fund, at $996,810,000, against an estimated disbursement of $994,790,000 for the same period. This would leave a surplus of $2,020,000.

Concerning the steel schedule the report says:

"Judged by all available tests, the American iron and steel industry is fully able to sustain itself without Government aid. It has unrivaled supplies of raw material; it has the use of abundant capital; it is able to export in competition with foreign countries; and the industry has the advantage of low costs. For all these reasons it may be regarded as well fitted as an industry, capable of standing tariff rates figured on a strict revenue-producing basis."

Keynote of Its Defense.

This summarizes the keynote of the Senate tariff reductions in almost every case where they affect trust-controlled products.

A slight reduction has been made in the cotton schedule where the commodities so treated are in common use. The reclassification of this schedule does not affect the House rates materially. The report says that "inasmuch as silk is a luxury, it is liable to the highest possible duties." This policy was maintained in treating luxuries.

The income tax amendment is explained at length, the report giving specific quotations from the text of the bill relating to the change from a flat income assessment based on $4,000, to a sliding scale, which would make the unencumbered single man liable to assessment on an income in excess of $3,000, while the married man or woman with a dependent wife or husband shall have his income exempted up to $4,000 if he have minor dependent children.

House Tax Called Unfair.

The report characterized the House income tax as "unfair to a large class of moderately wealthy people."

The many changes made in the administration feature of the bill were explained on the ground that the clauses of the Underwood measure were "somewhat confusing" and that it was thought best to leave the administrative features substantially as they were in the Payne-Aldrich measure until a joint committee of the two Houses "could revise, codify and simplify" this section of the bill. This is to be done by January 1, 1914.

The changes in the administration section include the omission of the 5 per cent reduction of goods imported in American bottoms; the inspection clause and the unit dumping clause.

Scores Gambling in Futures.

With regard to the revenue raising tax on gambling in cotton futures the report characterized this practice as an "evil," and said the tax was imposed to deter, in some measure, the activities of those who resort to cotton exchanges for the sole purpose of speculation.

Inasmuch as the tax is refundable, where an actual delivery of cotton is made, it is not thought that it will seriously affect legitimate trade.

The report predicts that the retaliatory clause in the Senate bill "will effectually put in the hands of the President a weapon with which to bring about equable arrangements with countries which do not afford the United States fair treatment."

Senate's Changes In Tariff Measure

Reduction under the Payne-Aldrich duties, 27.64 per cent.

Reduction under House tariff bill, 4.22 per cent.

Estimated revenue from Senate measure during fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, to be $2,020,000 over estimated disbursements for same period.

The customs duties from the Senate bill for fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, less sugar, are estimated at $173,250,000.

Duties on imports under the Payne bill for two months, exclusive of sugar and wool, $40,650,000.

Duties on sugar eight months under Payne bill and four months under Senate bill, $47,000,000.

Duties on wool under Payne bill for five months, $5,830,000.

Revenue from tax on cotton future gambling, $5,000,000.

Revenue from wines, brandies, six months, $750,000.

Revenue from income tax, ten months, $58,330,000.

Total revenue from Senate bill, $330,810,000.

Free listed products in Senate bill amount to $147,367,000 in imports, as against $103,000,000 in House measure.

Following market basket products added to House free list: Wheat, eggs, lard compounds and lard products and domestic animals used for food.

Among the trusts hit are those controlling steel, aluminum, cement, cameras, Standard Oil, asphalt, sugar, wool, bananas and paper.

The provisions of the income tax are figured as dating from March 1, 1913, instead of January 1, 1913. The operation of the brandy tax was also deferred.

Macon Man Chosen Head of Veterans

BRUNSWICK, July 18.—At the final session of the Georgia Confederate Veterans' reunion here, Colonel J. W. Preston, of Macon, was elected commander of the Georgia Division.

Brigade commanders elected are: Northern Brigade, M. C. Martin, Atlanta; Eastern Brigade, J. A. Thomas, Dublin; Western Brigade, L. W. Mobley, Vienna; Southern Brigade, W. J. Horster, Dublin; cavalry commander, E. Gilmore.

No Georgia city having extended an invitation for 1914, the meeting place for next year was left to a committee. The time of meeting will be named by the new commander.

Marshall Will Lay Moose Cornerstone

CHICAGO, July 18.—Vice President Marshall will be the chief speaker July 27 at the laying of the cornerstone of the $2,000,000 vocational university to be erected at Mooseheart, near Aurora, Ill., by the Loyal Order of Moose.

The new school will be the only one of its kind in the country and will be supported by an assessment of $1 a year from every member of the Moose Order.

POULTRY AND CORN SHOW.

COLUMBUS.—Through the co-operation of the Columbus Board of Trade, with the other interests, it has practically been decided to hold a poultry show and corn club exhibition in Columbus next fall.

Baby Cabs Watched In Chicago Vice War

CHICAGO, July 18.—Mayor Harrison to-day ordered city detectives and policemen to take a look into all baby carriages being pushed about by women and see if there is a real baby in each of them.

The order was the result of a new plan adopted by women of the streets. The baby carriages they push contain rag dolls, but they have succeeded in giving the police the impression that they were respectable mothers, taking their infants for an airing.

Boy Says He Was Lured to Aid Thief

Frank Houseman, 17 years old, who has been living at a Decatur street hotel, is held at police headquarters charged with the robbery of Sweeney's saloon, No. 46 Wall street, which was entered Thursday night.

The police say Houseman has confessed to aiding another man, whose name he says he does not know. The stranger, he said, persuaded him to serve as "lookout."

Detectives are also investigating the robbery of the Williams & Johnson market, Nos. 238-240 Edgewood avenue. The glass in the front door was broken and a small sum taken from the money drawers.

Los Angeles Will Quit Being 'Pure'

LOS ANGELES, July 18.—"I do not want a 'chemically pure' Los Angeles; what I want is a straightcut, really clean and upright city.

"Do not depend on the other officer, or the man higher than you in doing the work on your beat. Do it yourself and do it right, and see that your beat is taken care of."

This was the statement of Mayor H. H. Rose to 400 policement regarding what he expected of them during his administration.

Seeks $10,000 for State Fair Prizes

A plea for a $10,000 appropriation for prizes at the Georgia State Fair at Macon was made before the Appropriations Committee of the House Thursday afternoon by John T. Williams, president of the State Agricultural Society.

"Agriculture is our vital and pivotal industry," he declared. "Every dollar of this appropriation will be spent within the State and will repay the State a thousandfold."

Committee Favors Income Tax Measure

By a vote of 9 to 5 the income tax bill of Representative Stovall, of Elbert, was recommended for passage Thursday.

The author said his bill would add $160,000 to the revenues of the State from public service corporations alone. It provides for a tax of 1 per cent on incomes of individuals and corporations in excess of $4,000. Living expenses of individuals are exempted.

Leaps in Ball Gown Into Ocean on a Bet

ATLANTIC CITY, July 18.—A pretty girl visitor late last night jumped from the steel pier into the ocean. She was attired in ballroom costume. She was hauled out of the water and whisked away in a waiting automobile.

After an all-day investigation, the police have learned that the girl made a bet on the beach with members of her "crowd" that she would make the leap. The forfeit was a theater party and champagne supper if she didn't do it before midnight. She won.

S. A. Eliot, Jr., Seeks Career on the Stage

CAMBRIDGE, MASS., July 18.—Harvard circles received a surprise to-day when it became known that President Emeritus Eliot's favorite grandson, Samuel A. Eliot, Jr., had decided upon the stage as a career. He is now installed in an English dramatic company, appearing in Manchester, England.

Young Eliot, whose father is president of the Unitarian Ministers' Association, writes that he is much pleased with his stage work. He graduated from Harvard in June and immediately went abroad.

Science Seeks New Light on Numbers

PHILADELPHIA, July 18.—"What is number?" the mathematicians of the University of Pennsylvania want to know.

"Where does number begin and end?"

In an effort to answer this all-important question the university will send an expedition to the headwaters of the Amazon to learn what the aborigines know of No. 1. This for a starter.

FRAUD USED NAME OF GEORGIA MAN

Government Accuses New York Promoter of "Wallingford" Operation in the South.

NEW YORK, July 18.—Edmund Willcox, accused by the Government as a "get-rich-quick Wallingford" in real life, but who claims he has reformed and has been leading a new life with his wife and three children in a modest East Side apartment, was arrested to-day by postoffice inspectors.

Until two years ago Willcox had an office in the Metropolitan Tower, where he posed as a promoter of railroads, banks and mills. When he learned that any new company was being formed, he wrote to the promoters offering to float the stock. After obtaining a retaining fee, it is alleged, nothing more was heard from him.

The specific charge against him is that he obtained $1,000 from Comer L. Peck, of Starke, Fla., who operated a 38-mile railroad line between his home town and Jacksonville.

Willcox claimed, according to the Government charges, that one of his clients, Colonel James M. Smith, of Smithonia, Ga., who owns 100,000 acres of land in Florida, had been persuaded by him to buy 20,000 shares of stock of the Central Bank and Trust Company of Georgia, at $102 a share. Colonel Smith denied that he knew Willcox, and the Government began an investigation.

DR. MERRITT NOT ASKED TO RESIGN

Expressed Desire, However, to Leave Battle Hill—Change in Management Expected.

Dr. S. W. Merritt, superintendent of the Battle Hill Tuberculosis Sanitarium, has not been asked to resign, according to statements made Friday by the city officials who are over him. But Dr. Merritt has expressed a desire to leave the institution, and a change in management is anticipated about September 1.

The matter reached a climax when Jesse Shelton, a patient, complained that he had received rough treatment. Mayor Woodward asked Dr. J. P. Kennedy and Dr. Claude A. Smith to investigate the case. It was then that Dr. Merritt declared he did not like the situation, and it was tentatively agreed that a change be made in superintendents.

The committee, however, did not override Dr. Merritt in his discipline of Shelton.

PRISON CONDITIONS SCORED BY CHURCH

Episcopal Social Service Commission Calls Georgia Penal System Degrading.

The social service commission appointed by the Episcopal Diocese of Georgia at its annual convention to consider social and economic questions in this State has framed and submitted the following formal report on prison conditions:

Resolved, That the prison system of the State of Georgia and the methods of punishment now in use, and as commonly administered, are degrading and not worthy of an enlightened and progressive State.

Resolved, That we hereby indorse the splendid efforts of the Prison Reform Association of this State, and offer to them our hearty co-operation in securing needed reforms.

Resolved, That we also urge upon our Representatives their support of the child labor bill advocated and indorsed by the National Child Labor Association.

The Rev. G. S. Whitney, of Augusta, Ga., is chairman of the commission.

To The Young Expectant Mother

Women of Experience Advise the Use of Mother's Friend.

There is a certain degree of trepidation in the minds of most women in regard to the subject of motherhood. The longing to possess is often contradicted by the inherent fear of a period of distress.

But there need be no such dread in view of the fact that we have a most noble remedy in what is known as Mother's Friend. This is an external application that has a wonderful influence and control over the muscular tissues of the abdomen. By its daily use the muscles, cords, tendons and ligaments all gently expand without the slightest strain; there is no pain, no nausea, no nervousness; what was dreaded as a severe physical ordeal becomes a calm, serene, joyful anticipation that has its impress such as our foremost teachers of Eugenics are striving to drill into the minds of the present generation.

In almost every community there are women who have used Mother's Friend, and they are the ones that recovered quickly, conserved their health and strength to thus preside over families destined by every rule of physiology and the history of successful men and women to repeat the story of greater achievement.

Mother's Friend is prepared after the formula of a noted family doctor by the Bradfield Regulator Co., 128 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.

Write them for their instructive book to expectant mothers. You will find Mother's Friend on sale by all drug stores at $1.00 a bottle.

A Half Day for Shopping Saturday---Store Closes at One

A half day in point of time; a full day in point of service. For stocks of summer apparel for women and children are full and comprehensive, permitting satisfactory last-minute selection. Prompt, cheerful, efficient service will be maintained up to closing time. Come or telephone before 1 o'clock to-morrow.

These Items of Special Interest:

Most Every Dress Calls for Dainty Rufflings

A new supply has arrived just in time for the usual Saturday demand. These are unusually dainty and pretty, too. Many styles, many widths, in white, cream, ecru, black, also white-and-black effects; 1 to 4 1-2 inches wide; priced 25c to $1.00 yard.

Chiffon Motor Veils at $1.00

They are the $1.50 quality, and you may expect to find the chiffon of good weight and weave, of generous size, and in such good colors as light blue, pink, lavender, cream, champagne, Nell rose and white.

The "Storm Queen" very heavy quality chiffon veils, large size—1 by 2 yards—hemstitched hem; all colors and black; $2.50 each.

Coolest Underwear for Hot Weather

Such a difference in Knit Underwear—we mean in service-giving. And to be fully comfortable it must fit—room where needed, and no bagginess anywhere.

Underwear that fits is sold here.

Combinations, for instance—they are so satisfactory that, once you have worn them, nothing else suffices.

Sheer, cool, cotton combinations are 50c suit.

Lisle-thread Combinations, $1.00 and $1.50 suit.

Silk-lisle Combinations, $1.75 and $2.00 suit.

Italian silk Combinations at $3.50 and $4.00 suit.

New White Petticoats Cut With Slim Lines

Narrow skirts demand them, so they are cut with the greatest care to eliminate fullness, but to leave them dainty as possible.

Newly-arrived styles are here—styles you will like particularly. Beautiful embroideries and laces are artistically applied, and some are trimmed with ribbons and wide embroidery beading heading the flounce. Priced at $1.00.

Beautiful Gowns at $1.00

Very lacy, elaborately trimmed Night Gowns, a variety of the most fascinating styles. Some have yoke and sleeves formed entirely of lace, garnished with ribbons and wee rosebuds. There are plenty of plainer styles for those who prefer them. We believe they are the best Gowns we have ever had for $1.

WAR CHIEF SAYS M'PHERSON IS VITAL POST

Atlanta Army Men Elated Over the Favorable Impression Fort Made on Garrison.

Local army officers are jubilant over the praise bestowed upon Fort McPherson by Secretary of War Jindley M. Garrison Thursday, when, with Major General Leonard Wood and Major General J. B. Aleshire, he made an inspection of the post. It is regarded as practically certain that Secretary Garrison will repeat the recommendation of a year ago that the local post be made a brigade headquarters, which would mean several additional regiments of soldiers would be quartered at Fort McPherson.

"Everything at Fort McPherson is admirably conducted," declared the Secretary. "Such a post is a credit to our country. The strategic position of the Atlanta post is valuable."

Both Secretary Garrison and General Wood said they could not state definitely whether the local post would be made a brigade post, but intimated such a step is likely.

"Nothing definite will be given out until after Secretary Garrison has completed his tour of the 49 posts of the country," said General Wood. "However, we have always regarded the Atlanta territory as important because of its strategic position."

Secretary Garrison's party, including General R. K. Evans, Colonel Barth, Lieutenant Tucker, Colonel VanOrsdale and others, were entertained at the home of Clark Howell and the Piedmont Driving Club Thursday afternoon. Secretary Garrison left Atlanta at 5:10 o'clock, and to-day is inspecting Fort Oglethorpe, near Chattanooga.

Garrison Inspects Fort Oglethorpe.

CHATTANOOGA, July 18.—Secretary of War Garrison, accompanied by Major General Aleshire, quartermaster general, inspected the quarters of the Eleventh Cavalry at Fort Oglethorpe this morning and visited the site of the proposede brigade post at Chickamauga Park.

Secretary Garrison and his party arrived from Atlanta last night and will leave to-night for Little Rock. An open-air dinner will be tendered the distinguished guests to-night at Signal Mountain Inn, on Waldens Ridge, by the Chamber of Commerce. A breakfast was tendered early this morning at the Commercial Club.

Lunatic's Bequest To Alfonso Upheld

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, July 18.—The civil court at St. Gaudens upheld to-day the validity of the will of Albert Sapene, formerly Mayor of a small town near Toulon, who bequeathed $500,000 to King Alfonso of Spain.

Sapene, who was an ardent royalist and a great admirer of the Spanish King, died in an asylum. His sister sought to have the will set aside on the ground that Sapene was insane when he made it.

Senators' Swimming Match in Demand

WASHINGTON, July 18.—When Senator Pomerene challenged Senator Owen to a swimming match and the latter accepted they did not realize that so many persons were interested in Congressional aquatic sports. Enterprising persons have sought to induce the Senatorial swimmers to make it a national event.

One offer came from the manager of a resort near New York, who assured Senator Owen "he would have a crowd of spectators larger than could be gathered anywhere else in the world."

GEORGIA'S PEACH CROP SHORT, BUT 'PEACHERINOS' STILL ARE PLENTIFUL

Crop Now Moving (Via Railroads and Up and Down Peachtree) Sets Quality Record.

Miss Danese Milhous and another peach.

The movement of what is reported as the best crop of peaches ever grown in Georgia is now in full swing up and down Peachtree street and via railroad to the East.

H. B. Marks, secretary-manager of the Georgia Fruit Exchange, who claims to know all about peaches—that is, the edible kind—declared Thursday that the crop, while a light one, was bringing the highest prices ever known.

"Peaches are selling at from $2.30 to $2.50 f. o. b.," said Mr. Marks. "More than 1,000 cars have already been shipped, most of them going to New York, being divided between New York, Philadelphia and Boston. 'Georgia Belles' and 'Elbertas' form the bulk of the shipments.

"A sharp frost caused a short yield, but the high prices which the peaches are bringing more than make up for this."

The "peachy" girls are here in abundance, however, and even the hot weather is not driving all the Atlanta beauties to the cooler summer resorts. Miss Danese Milhous, one of the prettiest of the younger Atlanta girls, was snapped just as she was beginning to eat one of the first of the North Georgia grown peaches to arrive in the city.

THE PLAYS THIS WEEK

Forsyth Cool.

There are two wonderfully popular things about the Forsyth these days—a mighty inviting and cool place of recreation and the bill for the week is of exceptional value.

Valerie Bergere proves every right to the claim that she is the star of all dramatic artists that have adopted vaudeville. She is presenting a new playlet that deals with the crook idea. She appeals to a judge to save her husband, who has been convicted on circumstantial evidence, and convinces the judge, by a keen trick, that circumstantial evidence is a mighty bad thing to count too much on.

Britt Wood, the Rube comedian, is scoring the hit of his young life, and the Metropolitan Minstrels prove to be one of the best drawing cards the Forsyth has had. There are pretty girls and clever boys in this act.

John F. Conroy, the world-famous lifesaver, and his diving models will be the star attraction for next week, presenting what is claimed to be the greatest swimming and diving act in vaudeville. Deiro, the piano-accordionist, and the Great Lester, ventriloquist, are on the bill.

Grand Offers Treat.

A wonderful motion picture will be shown at the Grand all of next week. It is the supreme masterpiece of modern photo-plays, and is nothing less than Victor Hugo's "Les Miserables." There are more than 12,000 feet of film in the nine reels that represent the nine books in the wonderful story written more than a half century ago by the famous French author.

The greatest actors in France volunteered their services in making the picture and every place that is described in the book has been visited and used by the actors for their stage in producing the great work.

This week the Grand is attracting large attendance with a daily change of program of high-class first-run motion pictures.

Bijou Show Catchy.

Brimful of catchy features, pretty musical numbers, entertaining specialties and laughable comedy, this week's Bijou attraction, "Hotel a la Carte," is drawing splendid audiences to the popular theater. Every principal in the cast is clever in his or her line of work and some excellent specialties are introduced, not to mention a dozen musical numbers in which the big chorus takes part.

For next week the management announces another corking musical comedy, entitled "Good Morning, Judge," a musical cocktail with Pearl Brothers and Burns and twenty others.

Broken Neck Mended; Ice Cream Kills Him

MARINETTE, WIS., July 18.—After surprising the medical world by recovering, after his neck was broken in a runaway accident several weeks ago, Hiram Reeves, head of a rural telephone company at Oconto, is dying of ptomaine poisoning from eating ice cream.

Mailing Letter, He Pulled Fire Alarm

CHICAGO, July 18.—Leon Wells, of Berlin, Mich., attempted to mail a letter to his mother in his home town. The result was the hasty arrival of two battalions of fire-fighting apparatus and a large crowd at the busiest corner in Chicago, that of the Masonic Temple. Traffic was tied up for several minutes before four fire department officials, 100 firemen, ten pieces of apparatus, a patrol wagon containing ten policemen and an ambulance with three doctors, returned to their stations.

"I thought it was a mail box," explained Leon. "I never saw a fire alarm like that. In our town we have a bell in the steeple."

SIDELIGHTS on GEORGIA POLITICS

By JAMES B. NEVIN

You never can tell!

The grand young county of Candler on Thursday morning looked to be as good a bet as one might stake his coin upon—and to-day, like Caesar dead, there are none so poor as to do it reverence!

Perhaps that isn't quite fair to Candler, for there is a good chance that it may be reconsidered, and go over to next year, when, in forgetfulness of the bitterness of Thursday's fight on the floor of the House, Candler yet may come into its own.

Unquestionably, a serious tactical error was made when the friends of Candler, even without intending anything arbitrary, perhaps, moved the previous question, and thereby closed debate save from their own point of view.

It requires a two-thirds vote of the House to pass a Constitutional amendment, whereas it only requires a majority to order the previous question. The previous question, having been ordered by that majority, however, it immediately gave the minority opposition the right to raise the cry of "Gag rule," which cry said minority promptly proceeded to raise—vociferously and with deadly effect upon Candler!

The majority, seeing its blunder, undertook to right things—but too late.

Burwell, as fair and impartial a presiding officer as ever held the gavel, plainly was anxious to relieve the House of its embarrassment if he could, but under the rules, he could not. The House had tied his hands. Several virtuous gentlemen, who had not even called for a division on the vote for the previous question, were very much outraged that the previous question had been ordered, nevertheless—and their expressions upon the floor with respect to that feeling of outrage evidently impressed the House profoundly, as the House proceeded to sustain said outraged point of view.

Altogether, the fight on Candler was as pretty a piece of claptrap as ever was slipped over—but it was slipped, all right, and that is what hurt Candler's feelings!

Moral: Never be too sure your enemy can not throw straight, even if he is left-handed!

Undoubtedly there is genuine merit in the Candler County proposal, and there hardly is a doubt that eventually a new county will be created there.

And the Candlerites may get some consolation from that, after all!

The many friends—as they would say in the Springplace Jimplecute, no doubt—of the well-known Georgian mentioned, will read the following paragraphic gem from The Thomasville Times-Enterprise with mingled feelings of melancholy and joy:

Jim Nevin is more truthful and lots more interesting writing about Governor Brown's gold pen than he was penning that conglomerate mess about the Thomasville cow.

Now, what do you know about that?

The Legislature is looking forward to its forthcoming visit to Augusta with genuine delight.

A great time is being framed up for the Solons, and there will be "doings" from the time the train arrives in Augusta Saturday about noon, until it leaves that night.

Many members are anticipating particularly a visit to Carmichael's famous fishing club with rare pleasure.

This place has been made famous by dozens of distinguished visitors, among them being President Taft, Andrew Carnegie, John D. Rockefeller and others.

The House roll call rarely develops anybody absent, although it frequently is insisted upon.

Thursday an attempt was made to dispense with the roll call, but it was objected to. Nobody was absent, however—which shows what a fine system of looking after the membership is in vogue about the clerk's desk.

It remained for Mr. Moss, of Cobb, rather to hit the nail squarely on the head in explaining his Candler County vote Thursday, when he said:

"I do not indorse this call for the previous question and the shutting off of debate, but I shall not, merely because of that, refuse to do that which under my oath I agreed to do—that is, vote for that which I think best for the State.

"Because a tactical blunder may have been made by the floor leaders in charge of this measure, I shall not, therefore, visit my wrath upon the good people of the South Georgia territory asking to be made into this new county, who come here sincerely and honestly knocking at the doors of the union of counties.

"I can not understand how members can get up here and say they had intended voting for this measure, and would do so, but for the fact that a parliamentary blunder has been made in this House. It impresses me as rather mean and below the belt thus to hit the unoffending Candler County citizens, many of them good farmers, who are here asking a perfectly legitimate thing.

"If a man be sincerely against this measure, all right—he should so vote. But to make a mere mistake in parliamentary procedure an excuse for striking down an admitted meritorious proposition—that is all wrong. I believe this proposition is good, therefore, I shall vote aye!"

Mr. Moss is not inclined to the creation of new counties particularly, but the proposed county of Candler he had picked as one of the two deserving to win—and he voted accordingly.

His little speech in explaining his vote made a distinctly favorable impression on the House.

Easy to Get Rid of Corns

When you know HOW. But you can't do it by peeling, paring, gouging or picking at them. These barbarous methods are cruelly painful and seriously dangerous, for frequently the corn bleeds and then there is always the possibility of blood poisoning. Furthermore, these methods do not remove the corn completely, for the root usually goes deep into the toe to the bone.

Jacobs' Magic Corn Liquid is a scientific formula from our own laboratory, which we have thoroughly tested and guarantee to be successful with any corn, whether hard or soft, and no matter how stubborn or how deep the growth. It removes the corn completely and positively without pain or danger. The first application instantly stops the corn from hurting you. Use it to-night and end your agony. 20c, by mail 22c. —(Advt.)

The Social World

Mrs. Samuel K. Dick, who was Miss Ruth Tribble, of Athens, before her recent marriage, was the honor guest at an informal tea given Friday afternoon by Miss Jennie D. Harris.

A group of 30 young matrons were invited to meet Mrs. Dick, who is a charming acquisition to the married set. The guests were received in the drawing room, where vases of zinnias, Shasta daisies and summer roses formed the decorations. In the dining room a prettily appoined tea table had for a centerpiece a silver vase of crimson gladioli.

Miss Harris was charming in white lingerie, draped over pink silk, with a deep border of pink crepe de chine finishing the skirt. Knots of tiny French roses were caught amid the laces of the corsage and a pink sash and girdle completed the costume.

Mrs. Dick wore a beautiful gown of white crepe, combined with French cobweb lace, draped on the skirt and confined at one side with a large pink rose. A hat of pink tulle and a corsage bouquet of pink roses completed the modish toilet.

Mrs. Clem Harris, who assisted in entertaining, wore black crepe de chine.

Miss Weathers Hostess.

Miss Leslie Weathers entertained at a "5 o'clock" tea Friday afternoon in compliment to Miss Nellie Boyce, of Columbus, and Miss Lillian Daniel, of Hogansville. Sixty guests were present.

For Miss Brittain.

Miss Dorothy Smith will entertain at a progressive "Old Maid" party Friday evening at her home in Inman Park. The guest of honor will be Miss Pauline Brittain, of St. Louis, who is visiting Miss Frances Dudley.

The party will include Misses Frances Dudley, Pauline Brittain, Elizabeth Clanton, Adelaide Clayton, Winnie Davis Farnsworth, Messrs. Alex Maddox, John Brooks, Lamar Trotter, Henry Bonney, Arthur Branch and Candler Andrew.

Mr. and Mrs. Adair to Entertain.

Mr. and Mrs. Forrest Adair will entertain a number of their friends at a swimming party Tuesday evening at their home in Druid Hills.

For Mr. and Mrs. Martin.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarke Howell will entertain informally at dinner Saturday evening at their country home, in honor of Mr. and Mrs. William Martin, of Augusta, who are guests of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Howell.

For Mrs. Dunbar.

Mrs. Hinton J. Baker, of Augusta, who is visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Robinson, on Piedmont Avenue, will give a matinee party at the Forsyth next Monday afternoon in compliment to Mrs. B. S. Dunbar, of Augusta, the guest of Mrs. George Boynton.

Miss Warfield Hostess.

Miss Theodora Warfield entertained at a spend-the-day party at the Capital City Country Club Friday in compliment to Miss Dorothy Robbins, of Birmingham, the guest of Mrs. J. P. B. Allan. Tennis and swimming were enjoyed after a luncheon served on the veranda.

Informal at Home.

Mrs. Arthur Glenn Mickel and Mrs. Harold Hilton will be at home Saturday from 4 to 6 o'clock to meet Mrs. John H. Hageny, of San Diego, Cal., formerly Miss Laura Conwell, of Atlanta, and Miss Leila Daley, of Texarkana, Tex.

Mrs. S. C. Johnson, Mrs. Neal Spencer and Mrs. A. J. Wilson will assist in entertaining.

Williams-Chambers.

T. Cleon Chambers, of Fitzgerald, Ga., and Miss Dorothy Mae Williams, of Argyle, Ga., were united in marriage on Wednesday afternoon at 4 o'clock by the Rev. Arthur Hale Gordon, of this city.

Mr. Chambers was formerly principal of the Union high schools at Argyle, Ga., and Miss Williams assistant principal. Miss Williams has for the past six weeks been the guest of her aunt, Mrs. J. B. Wilson, No. 367 Whitehall street. Among their intimate friends it had been known for some time they were engaged, but their marriage of yesterday afternoon came quite in the nature of a surprise to their many friends, the wedding being anticipated to take place in the fall. They left Atlanta last night at 8 o'clock to visit Tybee.

Pen and Brush Club.

The regular meeting of the Pen and Brush Club will be held at the Carnegie Library on Saturday evening at 8 o'clock.

For Mrs. Ellis.

Mrs. David Woodward entertained informally at bridge Friday morning in honor of Mrs. Prioleau Ellis, of Springfield, Mass., the guest of Mrs. William D. Ellis.

Dinner Dance at Driving Club.

Reservations are being made for the dinner dance at the Piedmont Driving Club Saturday evening. These dances are increasing in popularity every week.

Among those who will entertain parties are Mr. and Mrs. John D. Little, Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Hawkins, Dr. and Mrs. Willis Westmoreland, Mr. and Mrs. Milton Dargan, Captain Robert Carter, Mr. and Mrs. Jack Lewis, Messrs. James H. Nunnally, Milton Dargan, Jr., Clarence Knowles, James O. Harris, Lauren Foreman.

An al fresco dinner will be served and the club will be gayly decorated for the occasion. An orchestra will play during the evening, and after dinner there will be dancing.

Informal Dinner at Country Club.

One hundred and fifty guests attended the Thursday evening dinner dance at the Capital City Country Club. Several large parties were entertained, among them one given by Mr. and Mrs. Clark Howell for their neighbors among the Pace's Ferry colony.

Among those entertaining parties were Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Spalding, Mr. and Mrs. Hughes Spalding, Mr. and Mrs. Walter P. Andrews, Mr. and Mrs. Russell Porter, Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Goodhart, Mr. and Mrs. Jack Cohen and others.

CALIFORNIA TRIP FOR WINNER IN 'AD' CONTEST

"Salesmanship Experience Alone Worth $1,000 to My Son," Says Business Man.

When the business office of The Georgian opened its doors early Friday morning a prominent business man was there with his 16-year-old son.

"I want Charley to enter the want ad contest," he said. "Put him down and start him to work."

The young man's nomination blank was accepted and he was given instructions for securing want ads. His father turned to the want ad man.

"I believe Charley will go out and win," he said. "He has it in him. But even if he doesn't win, I want him to try. I know a few weeks of actual experience in this contest will give him a thousand dollars' worth of education in the most highly-paid work on earth—practical salesmanship. That's why I put him in."

Girls Enter Contest.

And Charley wasn't the only entrant of the morning. A dozen others, several of them young women, brought in their nomination blanks, saw themselves credited with 1,000 votes each for a starter, and had a chat with the want ad man.

They were told how to go to their friends and neighbors and secure want ads for The Georgian, and shown how to roll up a list of votes in the contest for an automobile, a trip to California, a piano, or any one of the dozens of prizes.

"There isn't a family in Atlanta which hasn't a want," said the want ad man. "We have proved that by going to see them and getting results. You next-door neighbor wants a new cook or a man to trim the hedge or is ready to swap a stove for a bedstead or desires to sell his or her house. If you'll go to see him or her and make a suggestion you're sure to get the want ad.

Expert Aids Workers.

"You will be given careful instructions and practical help by an experienced district manager. He will show you how to get the ads. He will give you every bit of assistance you desire. You will have a real course in practical salesmanship, and instead of paying for the training you will be handsomely paid for your efforts."

Persons who wish to enter should clip out the coupon in the big advertisement, fill it out and bring it to the want ad man at No. 7 Edgewood avenue. They will be given full details of the contest and shown how to go out and win.

BIRTHDAY PARTY GIFTS WILL BE PONY VOTES

Girl's Guests Will Bring Her Subscriptions—New Way Found To Aid Contestant.

Newest among the developments in The Georgian and American pony contest is a birthday party. Miss Robert Harbour, of No. 340 Ponce DeLeon avenue, will give the party Saturday afternoon.

This is to be Miss Harbour's fifth birthday anniversary. In honor of the event there will be a "regular party," with the difference from the ordinary celebration that many of the guests have told her in advance what their presents will be.

They will give her subscriptions to The Georgian and Sunday American, which count liberally in votes in the contest. This is an instance where the givers get as much as the recipient, little Miss Harbour gets the votes and the donors get the papers.

John Trimble, of Lithonia, and his father came to Atlanta Thursday to see the ponies. John Trimble is making a good race for the pony to be awarded to the Georgia boy or girl getting the most votes.

One more day remains of the special bonus offer, which gives extra ballots for clubs of $35, $25 and $15 in subscriptions. From all indications, Saturday will be one of the

ATLANTA EXHIBIT FOR KNOXVILLE FAIR URGED

Tennessee Business Men in Person Will Attempt to Interest Manufacturers and Jobbers.

Within the next few days a determined effort will be made by business men of Knoxville, Tenn., to interest Atlanta manufacturers and jobbers in the National Conservation Exposition to be held in that city from September 1 to November 1 of the present year.

A delegation of Knoxville men will come to Atlanta to take up the matter of an exhibit of Atlanta-made goods at the exposition with members of the Chamber of Commerce and the Manufacturers' Association.

This was the word brought to Atlanta to-day by James B. Young, director of publicity for the exposition, who was in the city on business connected with the exposition.

Incomplete Without Atlanta.

"The feeling in Knoxville is," said Mr. Young, "that the National Conservation Exposition would not be complete without Atlanta represented, and the directors of the exposition company hope to be able to show Atlanta men wherein it will be to their advantage to come to Knoxville in force.

"The position in so far as we have been able to figure it out is like this: Knoxville during September and October will be something of a battleground between the commercial interests of the North and those of the New South.

"Cincinnati in particular is engaged in a trade expansion movement; Louisville is another city in the same class. Baltimore and several other places north of us already have reserved space for big commercial exhibits at the Knoxville show.

One Means to Invade South.

"The idea of these business men—and I believe they have the right idea—is that the National Conservation Exposition is going to be the one big place this year in which to advance their interests along the lines of an increased Southern trade.

"Every indication is that we will have enormous crowds in Knoxville for the exposition, and one of the most gratifying features is the advices we get showing that travel from the North will be heavy.

"It is for these reasons and others that the men of Knoxville hope to be able to show to Atlanta why it is to the interest of this great city of the South to be represented at our exposition. The matter will be gone into at length and in detail when the Knoxville men come to Atlanta. This probably will be next week."

Canada Regulates Christmas Stamps

The Canadian Government has notified the United States Postoffice Department that articles bearing Christmas stamps or other charity labels are not admissible to the mails of Canada unless the stickers are affixed to the reverse side of the packages.

This is the substance of a communication received by Atlanta postoffice officials Friday from Postmaster General Burleson.

DR. DELAMATER CRIES HE 'HAS ENOUGH'

Druggist Rearrested on Complaint of Estranged Wife Declares He Has "Learned a Lesson."

Dr. Ira Delamater, following his release from the clutches of the police under a fine of $10.75, late Thursday afternoon was arrested by Constable W. W. Rogers, from the court of Justice of the Peace C. H. Girardeau, on a peace warrant sworn out by his wife.

The druggist was released under a heavy bond to appear at noon Friday, when an attempt will be made to have him placed under a prohibitive bond that will be forfeited if he even speaks to his wife again.

"I've got enough," cried Delamater, when Constable Rogers took him in tow. "I won't ever do it again, and there is not any use of all this. I learned a lesson Wednesday night (he rubbed an enlarged optic), and I will never bother her again. I will help her get the divorce and pay her alimony regularly."

The druggist was arrested at a Turkish bathhouse in Decatur street. When Constable Rogers found him he was having a badly swollen and darkened eye and severe bruises on his body massaged. They were inflicted by W. T. Cammack, a railroad man, who interfered when Delamater visited Mrs. Delamater, who is seeking a divorce from him, Wednesday night.

The Half Day Brings---

At 98c Junior $2.00 and $2.25 Dresses

These in size fifteen years only. Fact is that because there is only one size, the price has been brought to less than half—for a quick disposal. They are of percales, neatly figured and in plain colors—as attractive patterns as $2.00 and $2.25 usually buy here.

At 39c Children's 50c Dresses

Sizes one to six years. These are dresses that we claim are unusual values at 50c. We know that the comparison of these with dresses around town at 65c is in their favor—the quality of the percales, ginghams and linens is better, the patterns are prettier.

At 89c For $1.50 Balkan Blouses

Sizes 12 to 18 years. All white and white trimmed with red and navy. And being the Balkan style, fitting close about the hips, with the fullness at the waist, they are the style the young folks like best this season. With these are the $1.00 Balkan Blouses at 59c—all-white, white with red and navy trimmings.

Early in the Morning for These=====

At 98c $3.00 to $5.00 Corsets

These are the few remaining odd corsets that we would clear away quickly—so, 98c. There are not all sizes, but certainly every one is a prize. Some of the best makes we carry. Coutils, four and six hose supporters, medium bust and medium length.

At 48c $1.00 and $1.50 Brassieres

Neatly fashioned and neatly trimmed—with laces and embroideries. The reason for the 48c price is because they are an odd few that must go. You will buy them in twos and threes when you see how fine they are.

An Old Maid's Romance

TODAY'S COMPLETE SHORT STORY.

I.

PENTHORN ROAD was one of those thoroughfares which have gradually come to a state of shabby gentility after a period of affluence.

The houses were tall and bleak and fronted with grim stucco, all in that manner which our forefathers found so desirable. Once they had been expensive houses, tenanted by people of wealth and social standing, but now The Gables, halfway down the road, struck the only firm note of resistance to the general air of decaying prosperity. Curtains always hung primly in its casements; the frills of the muslin window blinds always seemed newly starched, and the steps of the front door were always a marvel of whiteness.

People wondered why Miss Margaret Weston, who lived there in state with servants, did not move out of a locality which was deteriorating so rapidly. Some bolder spirits even asked her why she stayed on at The Gables instead of letting it, and departing to reside in a street more befitting her quality. To these Miss Weston answered gently that she had lived in The Gables most of her life, and had no desire to change now.

Miss Weston always answered everybody gently, for gentleness was the essence of her being. The neighbors referred to her as an "old maid," but, even as they used the phrase, they knew it was not the exact term by which to describe her. There was none of that sharpness about her which the epithet of "old maid" habitually implies.

Long ago, when she was a little orphan girl of 7, her uncle had adopted her and brought her to live in Penthorn Road. But now both her uncle and his wife were dead, and Miss Weston was left alone in the old home, save for the servants.

Rather a pitiful romance was Miss Weston's. It was simply the old story of the man who had not dared enough, the man who had leaped to false conclusions and had gone out of her life, to leave her alone.

Sometimes, when she tenderly took a packet of letters out of her bureau, there was one particular missive which she had not the heart to reread, for it was too sacred with poignant memories.

Her Dream.

But always she remembered the night when it was handed to her. She had only to close her eyes again to visualize the scene completely.

She saw herself, quite young, sitting before the fire on an autumn evening. She was trying to understand something. Why had her cousin, Harry Dutton, gone off to the Colonies without a word of farewell to her? He had made quite a sudden departure, though he had told her that he was going. And yet he had never said good-bye to her.

And while she was seeking to understand his attitude the small son of a neighbor had come into the room shamefacedly.

"I say, Miss Weston," he blurted out, "I'm awfully sorry, but I clean forgot."

"Forgot what?" she asked, puzzled.

"Why, this letter. Mr. Dutton gave it to me to give to you. He wanted to make sure you'd get it the same evening. I've just remembered it."

"When did he give it to you?" she whispered.

"Last Thursday. And I'm awfully sorry——"

"Last Thursday," she said to herself, when the small boy escaped from the room in relief. "That was two days before he sailed!"

She opened the letter and read its contents.

"Dearest Margaret," it ran—"As you know, I sail for South America the day after to-morrow. Before I go I want to ask you something, but I fear it will be too much to ask you. You must have guessed that I love you. I know it is presumption on my part to aspire to your hand, for you are the adopted daughter of a rich man and I am only the ne'er-do-well son of a poor brother. But I mean to make money in South America. I want to come home and marry you! There, I've blurted it out quite bravely! Will you marry me? I want you to wait for me.

"I suppose I'm asking too much, but I shall hope. If you reply to this note, I will come and say good-bye, but if you do not answer, I shall know what you mean. Yours, HARRY."

There was the explanation. She went to her uncle and showed him the note. He counseled cables and letters to Harry, but on the voyage Harry altered his plans, so that the messages lay waiting for him and never reached him. And he never wrote home; he just dropped out of everybody's life.

Would-be suitors dangled about Miss Weston for a time, but, receiving no encouragement, went off elsewhere. Friends married, acquaintances moved out of the neighborhood. Margaret grew from a girl to a woman, from a woman to an old maid.

And still she waited for Dutton in the house where last he had seen her, and where again he might seek her.

II.

Sometimes she pictured his return. She saw him whirling up to the door magnificently in a mortor car. She saw him on foot, tentatively examining the old house from the farther side of the road. Always she pictured him coming back, prosperous, to seek that bride whom mischance had so long withheld from him.

And then, one day, quite unexpectedly, she met him in the street, and he was woefully shabby and down-at-the-heel and his face bore lines of want and recklessness.

"Harry!" she faltered. "Harry!"

The light of recognition leaped into his eyes, but he shook his head.

"You're home again!" she exclaimed. "I—I've been expecting you. I've been waiting for you!"

"Expecting me? Waiting for me?" he muttered, astonished.

"Ever since you went away," she said, simply. "Waiting for you in the old house. There was a mistake—I never got your letter till it was too late. And then we never heard where you were. But I waited."

"You—you're making a mistake," he said, slowly. "I don't know you!"

He swung away from her at that. Miss Weston took a few steps after him, but a faintness came over her. And when she could see clearly again Dutton had gone.

But even now her simple faith in love did not abandon her.

"He'll come back to me one day," she said to herself, going slowly home. "He knows I'm waiting for him. He's ashamed of himself because he's poor. As if that mattered!"

Indeed, it was quite a cheery Miss Weston who arrived home at The Gables. And now every morning the thought was still stronger in her that that day her lover of long ago might call to see her in the house where last he had left her.

But the days slipped by, and, though often she glanced from her windows, she saw no sign of him in the street outside. And so a month, three months, another six months passed by.

III

"Gentleman to see you, Mum!"

"A gentleman to see me, Janet?" asked Miss Weston, in surprise. "How strange!"

A caller of any sort was indeed a rarity at The Gables.

Miss Weston rose from her chair. She was trying to persuade herself that it could not possibly be Dutton who had come to Penthorn Road after all these years. Although she had hoped for his coming every morning, it suddenly seemed to her that this was altogether too much to hope for. She went downstairs slowly, holding tightly on to the banisters, and steeling herself to meet disappointment.

But it was Dutton who awaited her in the room below—Dutton, far better dressed than when she had seen him last and now holding himself with a resolute bearing.

"Harry!" she exclaimed, holding out both her hands to him. "So you've come back? I knew you would—I knew you would!"

"I had to come back," he said slowly. "I wanted to see you just once more before I went abroad again."

"Abroad again?" she echoed faintly.

"What's the good of my stopping in England?" he asked. "There's nothing to keep me here. Abroad I shall do better. I did not do well when I was there before, but that was because I had nothing to work for. I had lost you, and——"

He stopped for a moment.

"You thought you had lost me," amended Miss Weston softly.

"I—I knocked about a bit over there," he went on. "A rolling stone, you know. Then I had a whim to come back to England. I—it's no good disguising it—I was on the downward path. I'd lost interest in things—worse, I'd lost interest in myself. And then one day I met you in the street. You remember? The man you remembered as Harry Dutton was dead then," he said, "and in his place there was a mere shiftless ne'er-do-well. I felt utterly ashamed to find your eyes on me. I saw you still believed in me, long after I had lost faith or belief in myself. And—and I resolved to try again to live my life straight."

"And now?"

"For close on a year—ever since that day—I've struggled. I think I've left the wastrel behind. I'm trying hard to be the man you thought me to be, and I think I'm succeeding."

"And you've come back at last?"

"Yes, I wanted to see you again, not as I was that day you met me, but as I am now. I wanted to win back a little of your respect."

"And—and you're going abroad again?"

"Quite soon. I've no ties, no wife or family."

"There's me!" pointed out Miss Weston, with unprecednted boldness. 'Have you forgotten me?"

"You?" he said in amazement. "You don't mean——"

"I've waited all these years for you to come back to me," she replied steadily. "We were parted by illchance, but I was loyal to the memory of you, for I knew you'd return one day!"

"And I," he said, "have been true to you in word and deed, because all my love was with you. Other women"—he dismised them with a gesture. "You were always the only woman in my thoughts."

"I knew it," she said simply, and told him how mischance had led their paths apart those many years ago.

"Ah, if the past could but come back again," he said. "If I only were younger! But now I can not ask you to marry me. I'm getting old, I'm poor. And you—you're rich, I suppose, and you haven't altered in the least."

Her Story.

Gently she smiled dissent.

"But I have something to tell you," she said. "Uncle George left me all his money, but he left this house to you. Nine years ago he died, and we inquired about you everywhere. We advertised in the papers, too, but could get no tidings of you."

"Nine years ago," he answered. "I was up-country, then. I stayed up-country three years. That was why I was undiscovered."

"Well, nine years' rent is yours," she told him. "I've been keeping it for you, waiting for you to come back. So you see, you're not quite so poor as you thought."

"And not quite so rich as I'd like to be," he sighed. "I'd like to be rich enough to——"

He paused.

"To what?" queried Miss Weston, anxiously. "Surely you're not going to balance riches against happiness?"

"I've got my pride," he said, stubbornly.

"And you've got your house," she said. "And I'm going to move out of it at once. You must come and live in your own house."

"No, no," he replied, uncomfortably.

"I shall go," she said, with firmness, and added, artfully, 'thought after all these years it'll break my heart to leave it."

"Then—then let me continue as your—your landlord. The house is far too big for me."

"I won't stay on as your tenant a day longer," she said. "And it's going to break my heart to go. Can't you see what I—what I'm trying to make clear?"

"No," he said, in perplexity. "I can't. And yet—but no, I'm too poor and ashamed to ask you to marry me."

"Rubbish!" retorted Miss Weston with the most asperity she had ever been known to show. "Either you're going to break my heart by making me leave the old house, or else you're going to let me stop on as your wife. Which is it to be?"

Her unwonted briskness gave way and she took a faltering step toward him.

"Harry, after all these years——" she quavered.

"My little sweetheart!" he whispered, and both he and she forgot that youth had left them.

Getting the Facts

MRS. Bickers sighed deeply as she regarded her son Willie, who was eating his dinner with suspicious propriety. Not once had he had to be reminded not to grab things and he had said "please" before every request. His hands were clean and his hair was brushed to a shiny smoothness. Altogether, Willie was so much a model child as to cause comment in the Bickers family. Even Willie's father had noticed it.

"I feel so sorry for Mrs. Gassmore," said Mrs. Bickers, after her introductory sigh.

"Anybody died?" asked Bickers.

"No," said Mrs. Bickers. "It's worse than that. There's nothing worse than to be deceived by those you love and trust—and I tell you, Mrs. Gassmore felt so bad about it that there were tears in her eyes when she told me. Her son Tommy, had caused the tears."

"Huh?" said Willie Bickers, startled. He ceased buttering his hot biscuit.

"I knew you'd feel just as I did about it, Willie," said his mother kindly. "Although you are such a friend of Tommy's, I realize that you never would approve of certain things he has done. You have been brought up too well and you understand right and wrong.

"Why, Mrs. Gassmore,' I said to her to-day, 'I'm sure Willie's mother, if my Willie had acted that way I couldn't have been any more surprised! Tommy has such honest eyes'"——

What'd he do?" queried Willie huskily.

"Do?" echoed his mother. "Tommy Gassmore, after all his mother had told him, went swimming this afternoon; that's what he did! When he had been expressly forbidden to go near the place—just like you, Willie—let alone enter the water!"

"The young scamp!" said Bickers, emphatically. He regarded the sleek hair of his son with new interest.

"Yes, wasn't it dreadful?" asked Mrs. Bickers. "I suppose he thought his mother never would know it. That's what makes it so particularly sad—his trying to deceive his mother.

"But these things always get found out, and I presume he realizes that now. I considered him nearly as trustworthy a boy as our Willie and"——

"H-h-how'd they find out?" inquired Willie gruffly. "No, thanks—I don't want any more creamed potatoes. Nor 'sparagus."

"I hope you don't feel ill or anything, Willie," said his mother anxiously. "Usually you want so many helpings and you've had only one to-night. Why, Tommy must have cut his foot while swimming because when he got home it hurt him so he had to take off his shoe and his mother questioned him, and besides his hair was all wet."

"Awful give-away, wet hair," said Bickers sternly. "Why are you fussing at your head, Willie? Let your hair alone—you'll muss it all up, and I notice you have brushed it unusually well this evening."

"Yes, I noticed it, too," said Mrs. Bickers. "I am so glad Willie is taking pride in his personal appearance. I hope Tommy Gassmore will realize some day how disgracefully he has acted. It is boys like that who start out by fibbing and deceiving who end by being criminals. I don't know that I want you to associate with Tommy any more, Willie. He might lead you into doing things that you shouldn't, and I should so hate to have you begin. Of course, I know that if you did anything wrong you would be man enough to come and tell us about it as soon as you had thought it over."

"D-did Tommy talk much?" asked Willie, in a slightly cracked voice. "Wh-when he told his mother, I mean?"

"Talk much?" echoed Mrs. Bickers. "Why, what do you mean, Willie? I suppose not. I suppose he felt too ashamed to say more than he had to! Why do you ask?"

"Nothin'," said Willie. He squirmed in his seat. "I jus' wondered?"

His hand sought his head again and a look of alarm overspread his countenance as he drew it away from the extreme back and saw water shining on it. Apparently his obtuse parents saw nothing and were eating with perfect appetites.

"Say," Willie blurted out, in a mangled voice, "I went swimming with Tommy—when he did, you know. Honest, I forgot, may honest I did!"

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

The girl drew herself up. "Nevertheless, Mr. Warren, in spite of prudence, wisdom or death itself, I shall go to my brother to-night!"

There was a little pause; he looked down at the floor and thought swiftly.

"Very well," he said at last. "I yield to the force of your determination. You shall go to-night—but I insist on one concession."

"What is that?"

"You must let me go ahead and look over the ground. I will signal you when it is safe to follow."

The Signal.

"But how can you signal?"

"With a light." He crossed to the window and studied the forbidding mass of the castle for a few moments. "A light in one of those higher towers. You can see it from here. You won't have long to wait," he added earnestly. "It will shine within an hour."

"But"—the girl's voice faltered—"but if—it does not shine?"

He smiled upon her, lightly, but tenderly.

"Well," he drawled, whimsically, "then I'll be too busy swapping lead for brimstone with Mr. Spook to stop and hang a lantern. I had expected," he went on seriously, "that your cousin would remain here with you, and I can not understand why he should desert you at such a crisis."

She broke off abruptly and bit her lip, looking down at the floor.

The Princess looked stern. "Nor can I—unless——"

"Unless—what?" he inquired slowly, after an uncomfortable silence.

The girl made a sudden gesture of despair. "Oh, if I only knew!" she cried. "If I only knew! I'm so confused—I'm at my wits' end! My mind—I can't think!"

She pressed both hands to her head and staggered as she moved toward a seat. The next instant Jarvis was supporting her, both hands in his, and gazing intently into her face. Little quivers that were not all of love were creeping up her spine, and even as he gazed into the waxed rose of the beautiful face he felt an all but overpowering desire to look over his shoulder. Seventh sense, premonition. The psychologists—those tedious dissectors—are still squabbling over the terminology, but young Jarvis felt the realness of the sensation. The sudden and menacing appearance of Robledo, the eerie palm-reading of the innkeeper's girl, the inexplicable desertion of the Duke—all these combined to give him an unshakable and growing sense of gathering danger. And all about him was the breathing still of the mountain night, like nature's cowering hush before the lash of the hurricane sweeps the land.

His voice and the grip on the little hands grew tense.

"You've got to think! Don't let go now! Here—quick! Get hold of yourself!"

Herself Again.

The girl instantly responded to the best treatment for all superficial nervous troubles—a sharp, incisive voice. She opened her eyes, and with a wondering, startled look.

"You are holding something from me," he charged swiftly. "What happened on the boat that changed your manner? What worried you when the Duke drove ahead? I saw it again when he closed that door. What is it?"

He felt her shiver and her eyes, avoiding his, roamed wildly about the room.

"Oh, if I could only—if I were only sure I could trust you!"

Instantly she got the best answer in the world—the quick, unconscious setting of a man's muscles under the sting of insult. It was gone in a breath, but she felt and recognized it with joy.

"Too late for doubts now," he said crisply, as if the affront were of no importance in the face of graver things. "Your brother's life is at stake! We must stick together—you and I! It's your only chance. How can I help you unless I know everything? Don't you see that I am fighting in the dark—that I am up against a solid wall of mystery and this may be the key? Never mind what you think or fear—this is the time you've got to trust me!"

The girl was breathing quickly.

"You couldn't—" she began brokenly, and then, her voice rising: "Oh, I do believe in you! In my heart I have trusted you from the first. It's my heart; not my mind that trusts you now!" She paused a moment and drew a deep breath as he stared at her blankly. She gazed full into his face as if to watch for the slightest betraying tremor.

"The locket is gone."

The look of utter, dizzy amazement that came over his face was proof enough of his innocence. It hardly needed his mechanical:

"Gone—where?"

"I don't know," she cried miserably.

"But—when did you miss it?"

"Three days ago—on th steamer."

"And you have no idea now who has the plan that was in the locket?"

His tone was high and accusing, and she kept her eyes away from his.

"I suspect, of course," she admitted feebly, "but I can't be sure! I—"

"Your Highness," he broke in triumphantly, "I've got the first trail of the spook that's haunting your castle. Rusty, the horses!"

"Yes, sah; yes, sah!" came the servitor's voice from the yard.

"Quick now; we've got no time to lose."

THE LOCKET STOLEN

The girl was breathing quickly. "You couldn't"—she began brokenly, and then her voice rising. "Oh, I do believe in you! In my heart I have trusted you from the first. It's my heart, not my mind, that trusts you now!" She paused a moment and drew a deep breath as he stared at her blankly. She gazed full into his face as if to watch for the slightest betraying tremor. "The locket is gone!"

spoke, and now he picked up his hat.

"You think—" began the Princess, a little uncertainly.

"I think your cousin has not gone to Madrid. Time is everything now. I shall start at once and you must rest here until you get the signal."

"Your overcoat," she reminded him as he made for the door. "It's upstairs."

"Never mind that."

"You'll need it," she insisted. "It's cold. Nita—Nita! Wait—I'll get it."

Before he could protest she ran lightly up the stairs. With a warm glow on him that no overcoat could have produced, Jarvis followed her halfway up.

As he did so, the figure of a man blotted out the moonlight that fell in the doorway. A man muffled in a big cloak stepped just inside, his right arm carried rigidly at his side. From this position he could command the foot of the stairs, but could not be seen from the stairway itself.

The Princess appeared at the top with the coat on her arm.

"Don't come down—I'll get it."

"You are sure you know the way?" she asked, tremulously, as he relieved her.

"North road, second turn to the right."

"Yes, that takes you to the postern gate."

"Thank you."

But still he lingered, though he had said time was precious. Their eyes met in a long look. Both colored and looked away. With a swift movement she took something off her neck and threw it about his shoulders.

"This little cross and chain," she said softly. "Wear it to-night for me, my knight!"

He gained possession of the hand for a moment.

"Only for to-night?" he whispered.

"You may never see to-morrow."

Something seemed to interfere with the workings of Jarvis' throat.

"If I never see to-morrow"—his voice sounded to his own ears like a stranger's and there was the beating of a whole drum corps in his ears—"you will forgive me for telling you that—I love you! Don't—don't rebuke me to-night. Wait until to-morrow—if tomorrow ever comes." He smiled and her eyes drooped before the light in his. "To-night your humble vassal goes forth in his lady's cause. While all Segura waits ghost and ghost-breaker shall stalk the halls."

He stooped and swiftly kissed her hand.

"Your Highness, you will see the light in the tower inside an hour!"

A Fight in the Dark.

"God be with you, my knight!" she prayed softly—and was gone.

He waited until the last sound of her footsteps had died and a door closed in the distance. Then his pulses leaping wildly, he turned and made one step down the stairs—and stopped.

A poet once asked, and left unanswered, "Upon what may life depend?" In this instance Warren Jarvis' life hung on the slender chance that he would wait until he could not longer hear the sound of his lady-love's footsteps. Light as they were they would have distracted his mind so that he would never have caught the faint but keen metallic click that was as clear as the spoken word to a man born in a country where the babies used to use a .45 revolver for a teething ring.

Survival largely depends on preparedness for the unexpected in the world of action. Warren Jarvis did not waste any time investigating. He did not care to make inquiries to be certain that the cocking of the pistol had a definite connection with his career in this world.

No; he began humming "Dixie" in the care-free, exultant manner of the successful lover, and swiftly took in the field of action. In a fraction of a second he had planned his battle. On the stair post at the foot of the stairs was an oil lamp, the only light in the room, for the fire had died down to a faint glow. He slung the overcoat across his right arm, with his left arm loosened something that hung under his coat and across his heart. Then, still humming "Dixie," he walked down the stairs without any attempt at concealment.

Just before he came within the range of vision of the doorway he leaned forward and dashed his coat against the lamp. At that same instant he whipped out his pistol, crouched and did a baseball slide out across the stone floor, on hip and shoulder, his eyes turned toward the door.

There was a flash and a roar and a man's figure outlined against the moonlight and then almost as quickly as the two shots had sounded in the hotel, the Kentuckian's revolver spoke twice.

There was an oath, a cry of "Sancta Maria!" and a heavy fall.

Laying the Ghost.

The moon had sunk just below the rim of the mountain wall when Jarvis and Rusty, the latter groaning at every jump, clattered up that last reach of the old road to the castle.

Desecrated by the bright Spanish sunlight, the old castle would have moved one to pity as would the sight of a broken-down warrior. In the rich moonlight, softened and hallowed, the stately sweep of its walls and the but stagnant wastes of the moat, and the long tendrils of vapor curled and crept out like the stealthy arms of cold and evil spirits, enfolding and chilling the heart and welcoming all who dared the walls to an embrace of death. And somewhere within an owl cried out an uncanny warning, like a tocsin summoning the legions of darkness to meet the rash invader.

"Jimminy!" muttered Jarvis, with a shiver, as they drew up at the postern gate. "It's no wonder those fat-headed boobies down there wouldn't come up to this place!"

For Fat Men Only

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

THIS is a tip I give you, as it was given to me,
Right in the thick of the summer, with the mercury ninety-three,
Right in the thick of the summer, with everything sizzling hot,
And all of us looking crimson, like lobsters cooked in a pot.

When you slowly dress in the morning and reach for a collar new,
Don't button it in the back, boys; the button in front will do.
The collar will stay where you put it, looking and feeling fine,
And there'll be no torturing button a-boring into your spine.

This is the tip I was given, and I pass it along as lore
To all of my husky brothers, with "seventeen" necks or more.
Try it, and all of the buttons that caused you worry and pain
Will land in back of the dresser, and never come out again.

Courting Death

LAST week I dined with Lord Evendale, the well-known English multi-millionaire, and Chamus, former chief of detectives, at the house of a mutual friend. Our host had imagined that these two men, the Englishman, with his blase paradoxes and strange whims, and the Frenchman, with his memories of a life rich in daring deeds, might amuse or at least interest us. Long before dinner was over the skirmishes between these two highly contrasting characters had begun and their conversation was exceedingly interesting to follow.

"You do your fellow men a mighty poor service," said Lord Evendale, in a tone of contempt, "when you use your intelligence and energy to protect their lives. Life, indeed, is worth next to nothing."

"Still, life is the only blessing we really possess," Chamus replied firmly, looking straight into the Englishman's eyes, "the only one we really control. I consider it our duty to live the time allotted us and to make it as useful as possible to ourselves and others."

"Oh, nonsense," exclaimed Lord Evendale. "At any other time perhaps life was worth living, but nowadays it is not. The progress of civilization makes it easy for us to enjoy all the joys of existence, leaving absolutely no room for further wishes. As for myself, all the wishes, that I could get fulfilled without any exertion whatever, were so disgusting to me already at the age of 25 that I turned away from them and longed only for one thing—death. I resolved to die."

Various Ways.

"There are different ways of committing suicide," remarked Chamus, whom this confession, with its immense egotism, annoyed. "The only difficulty is the choice, from poison to a hempen rope."

"I was religious," the Englishman went on unaffected, "and, besides, my mother suspected the spleen which poisoned my life, and made me take an oath never to commit suicide. I made this oath willingly, because I imagined it would be easy to find a way of being killed without doing it yourself, but I have found that to a man in my position it is the most difficult thing in the world. They had barely begun to suspect my fatal intentions before a host of friends and relatives began to watch me."

"You will pardon me if I refuse to believe you," said Chamus, "even a lord and a millionaire can manage as easily as anything to get killed if he really does want to get rid of his life. There are a thousand chances every day."

single lion, crocodile nor even a snake. At a lake in the heart of the Soudan I met a tribe of real savage natives, only to have them nurse me back when I got the fever. I went to the Transvaal and arrived there just as the peace had been signed. And now I have returned as safe and sound as ever, but full of despair, because I can not find death."

He Did Wrong.

"You need not despair," said Chamus, contemptuously, "but if you really did want to die you did wrong in leaving the big cities, where the struggle for existence has made men ten times more dangerous than all the wild beasts in the world. That at least is the experience I have had while hunting human beasts of prey for more than twenty years."

The two men had arisen and stood looking straight into one another's eyes.

Chamus continued: "If you are absolutely determined to die without committing suicide I am able to give you a prescription. At the utmost it will cost you no more than a couple of sous."

"Will you be kind enough to give it to me to-day?"

"With pleasure. What time is it?"

"Half-past ten."

"Then you have plenty of time. Take the train from Gare St. Lazare at 11:05. Get out at 11:43 at Point du Jour, or, better still, at Grenelle. Then walk slowly back and forth along the old fortifications, and if you return to Maison Blanche alive I shall apologize to you in the presence of our friends here."

"I understand; and, to tempt the apaches there to carry out their coup to the satisfaction of everybody, I shall fill my pockets with gold."

"I should not advise you to do that," said Chamus brutally. "If the booty is too rich it may tempt those fellows to attack peaceful people who are not passing the place simply because they are tired of living. I advise you to pay the fellows who do you the favor of taking your life the exact amount at which you value your life, no more and no less. In that way you will not be robbing your heirs."

Many Thanks.

"I thank you, sir. If everybody were like you I should not be disgusted with life. I shall follow your advice and keep in my pocket no more than the amount at which I value my life."

* * * * * * *

I thought no more of the matter, but when I opened my paper the next morning I was shocked to read the following paragraph:

"In the small hours of the morning a police patrol between Grenelle and Vaugirard found the body of a man who had been murdered by apaches with a lasso close to the fortifications. He was stylishly dressed and was easily identified, for in his left shoe was found the following note:

"'The Lord did me a poor favor when he let me be born into this world. At last I see an opportunity to get rid of my life without committing suicide, and I make use of it unhesitatingly. They will murder, but not rob me, for I have given the driver who drove me to the station all my valuables, keeping exactly ten sous to pay for my ticket to Grenelle. Low as was the valuation M. Chamus placed on my life, I value it even lower myself, for my murderers will kill me for the value I put on my life—nothing.'"

Up-to-Date Jokes

At a small country church a newly married couple were receiving some advice as to how they were to conduct themselves.

"You must never both get cross at once; it is the husband's duty to protect his wife whenever an occasion arises, and a wife must love and honor and obey her husband, and follow him wherever he goes."

"But, sir——" pleaded the young bride.

"I haven't finished yet," remarked the clergyman. "She must——"

"But, please, sir"—in desperation—"can't you alter that last part? My husband is a postman."

Two women who had not seen each other for many years met unexpectedly in the street.

"How do you do?" exclaimed one, effusively.

"Now, this is delightful!" said the other, who was the elder. "You have not seen me for eleven years, and yet you know me at once! I can not have changed so dreadfully in all that time. It flatters me."

"Oh, I recognized your bonnet!" said the first.

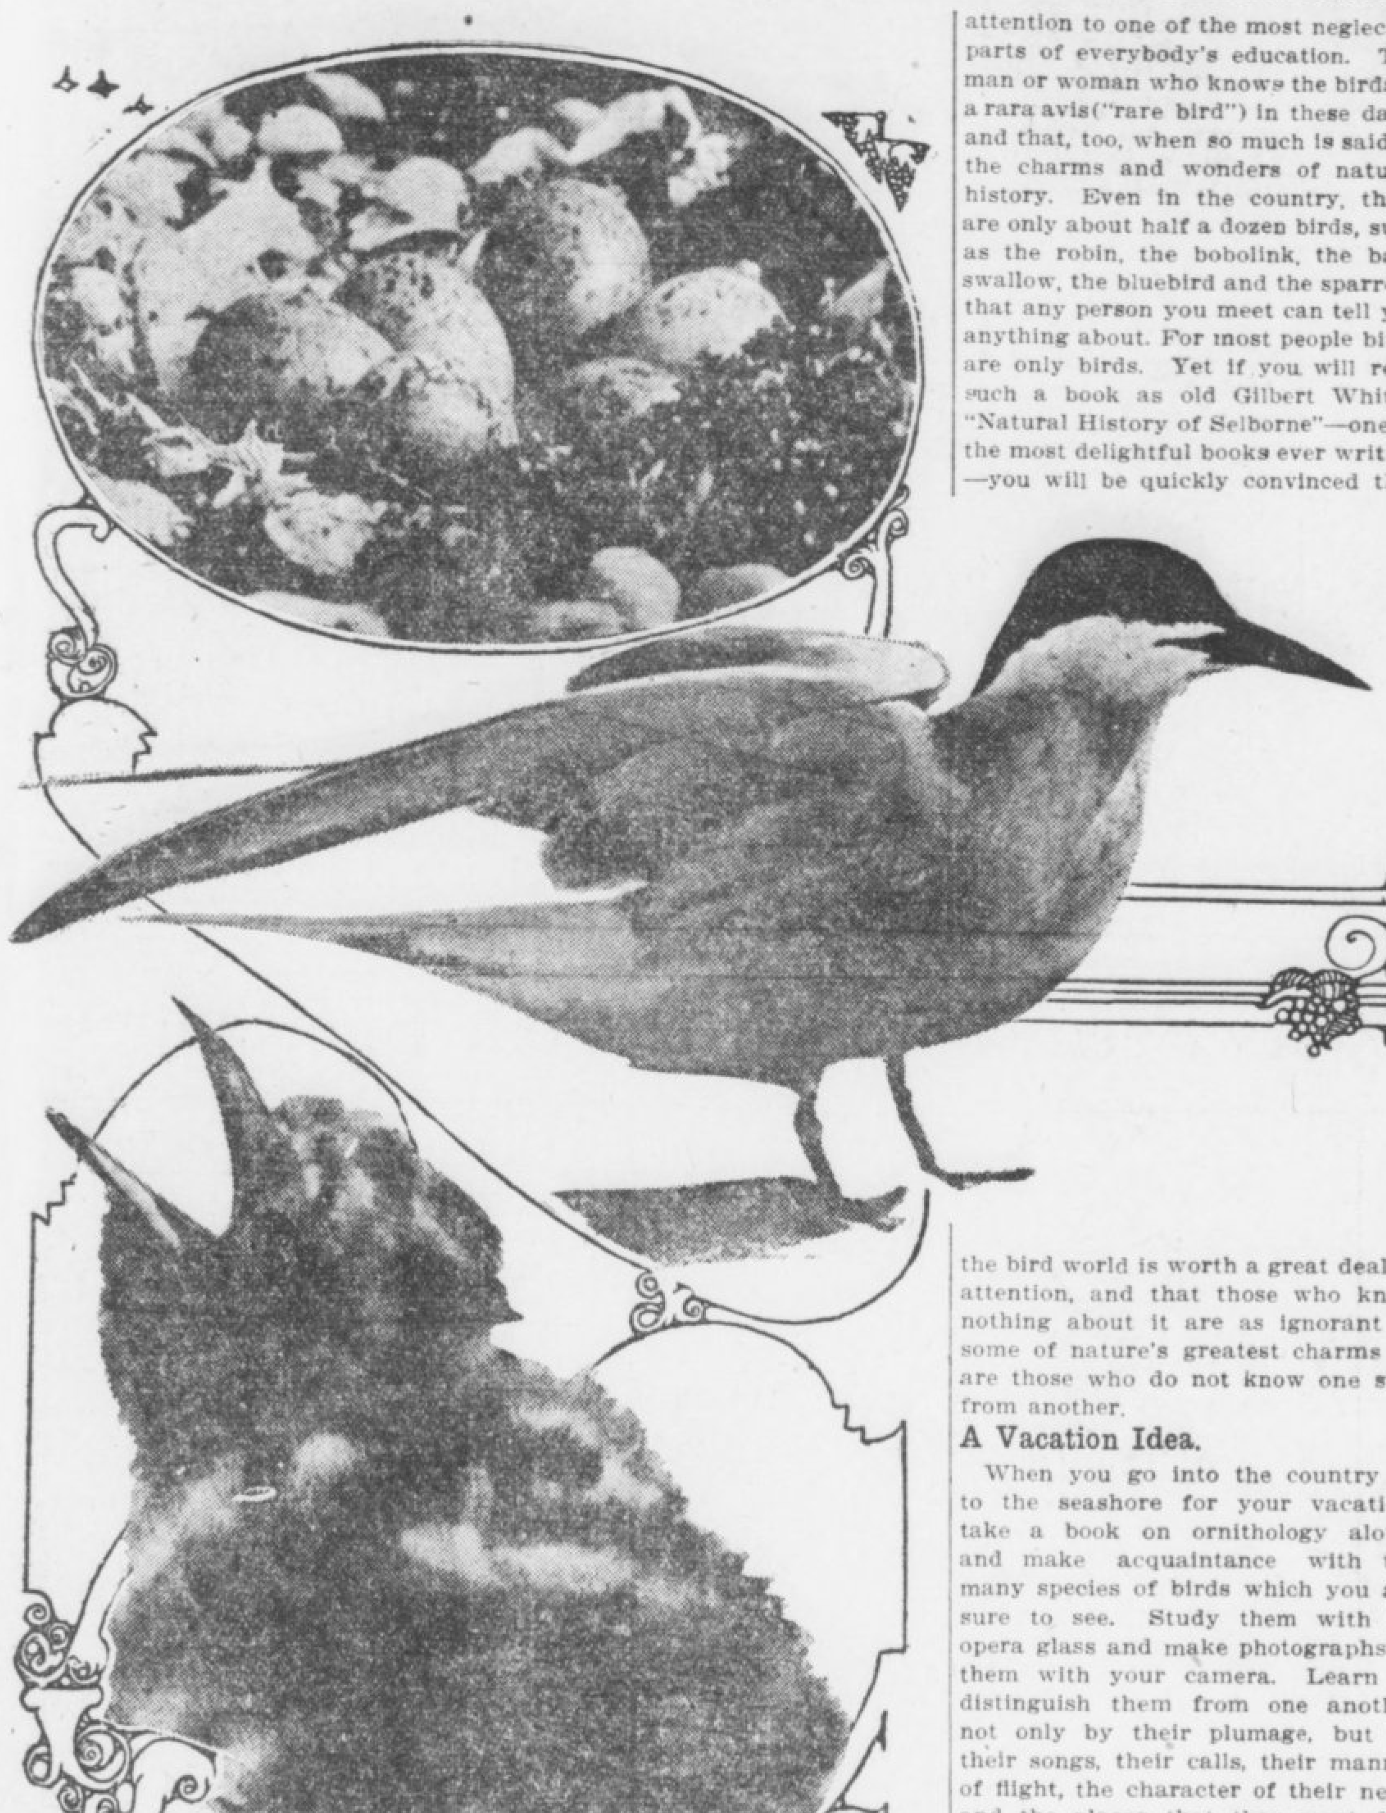
The Murder of the Birds

By GARRETT P. SERVISS.



These pictures show the tern, or sea swallow, one of its young and its eggs. This beautiful bird has been made nearly extinct by the ruthlessness of hunters.

AMONG the interesting animals that man has succeeded in more or less completely exterminating without any real benefit to himself is the tern, or sea swallow, some remarkable photographs of which, made in England, are shown herewith.

They belong to the gull tribe of birds, and get their popular name from their curious flight, which resembles that of a land swallow. Like the true gulls, they have great power of wing and often go far out to sea. Including the long tail, they are about 15 inches in length, and they present a very picturesque appearance as they skim along the surface of the waves, with their black heads, gray wings, white bellies and red legs, catching small fishes and mollusks without stopping, and sometimes diving after their prey.

They breed along the coasts and often follow rivers, and even reach inland lakes. Unfortunately for them, both their eggs and their plumes are attractive, and merciless hunting has almost driven them from the eastern shores of the United States, as well as from those of Western Europe and the British Isles.

A Knowing Bird.

But they know their enemy and in recent times they have chosen their breeding places in spots almost inaccessible to the hunters. Lately one of their concealed breeding places has been found on a lonely part of the coast of Norfolk, England, and the photographs were taken there by hunters who had no other aim than to increase our knowledge of the ways and peculiarities of animals which, as far as we know, have as good a right to enjoy the gifts of nature as we have.

One interesting fact about this home of English terns is that it is believed to be far older than the British Empire, there being evidence that they have inhabited it from a time anterior to that of the arrival of the conquering Normans.

The story of the terns serves to call attention to one of the most neglected parts of everybody's education. The man or woman who knows the birds is a rara avis("rare bird") in these days, and that, too, when so much is said of the charms and wonders of natural history. Even in the country, there are only about half a dozen birds, such as the robin, the bobolink, the barn swallow, the bluebird and the sparrow, that any person you meet can tell you anything about. For most people birds are only birds. Yet if you will read such a book as old Gilbert White's "Natural History of Selborne"—one of the most delightful books ever written—you will be quickly convinced that the bird world is worth a great deal of attention, and that those who know nothing about it are as ignorant of some of nature's greatest charms as are those who do not know one star from another.

A Vacation Idea.

When you go into the country or to the seashore for your vacation, take a book on ornithology along, and make acquaintance with the many species of birds which you are sure to see. Study them with an opera glass and make photographs of them with your camera. Learn to distinguish them from one another not only by their plumage, but by their songs, their calls, their manner of flight, the character of their nests and the places that they most frequent; watch their daily life and habits; follow them through the fields and into the forests—and don't shoot them! You will find in this way that a new source of interest in the world you live in has been opened for you.

One of the recollections of childhood that I should most regret to lose is that of the wonderful song of a thrush that I used to hear at sundown, ringing across the fields from some far-away hidden place, the sweetest sound I ever heard! I would leave my play and stop to listen in simple wonder. It was long before I found out the name of the bird that sang that marvelous evening song, which fascinated everyone who listened to it, and I never caught sight of the bird itself, and yet it seems to me that I shall hear that melody as long as the cells of memory transmit their impressions!

And yet men endowed with the divine gift of human intelligence murder birds by wholesale; murder them for their plumage; murder them to get a new dainty for jaded appetites; murder them, most horrible of all, for the mere sake of killing; to see their delicate feathers fly from the impact of the shot, and their little bodies drop mangled upon the ground! And this is called—SPORT!

Smithson on the Continent

THEY were openly courting!

It was in the Continental train running down to Naples. Smithson, clerk in a London shipping office, on the most ambitious vacation of his life, was the chief spectator. The tall, dark Italian who was talking to the young couple in animated style did not seem at all embarrassed by their conduct.

Smithson shifted in his corner seat and tried not to look in their direction. But his glance repeatedly strayed to the olive-complexioned girl, jet-haired, brilliant-eyed, whose adorer, as young and sun-tinted as herself, embraced her neck with his right arm, and fondled her fingers with his other hand.

"Ah!"

Smithson had remembered he was in Italy—the country of romance. He felt more at ease. To show his tolerance he would beg a match. Ignorance of Italian was nothing to a man crossing the Continent to catch a German liner for the return Mediterranean trip—all to be achieved in a fortnight.

After several genial glances at the trio, which seemed to give great offense, he took out his pipe, and, fixing his eyes on the tall, dark man, he pointed to his empty bowl and struck an imaginary match on his trousers.

A direct insult could not have caused a more startling outburst. It came like a gunshot—

"Insulte!"

Bright Eyes.

A less steady eye would have quailed beneath the Italian's flashing gaze. But Smithson had noticed the curious, bewitching light in the orbs of the beautiful girl, which were directed toward his face, and he replied grandly:

"Not at all!"

The dark man retorted with a torrent of sentences.

Smithson might have used the single Italian word he knew, "apologia," but he recalled the advice given him by an uncle at Dover: "Nephew, if you get into a vocal dilemma with a foreigner, meet volubility with volubility—recite poetry, anything; but don't falter, and, above all, gesticulate and smile."

Sentence on sentence still stumbled from the dark man. A look of softness had come into the eyes of the girl opposite, out she clung to her lover as if the little clerk was a bold highwayman.

There was no longer any reassurance in the beautiful girl's face. When the little clerk sought it she cringed before his glance, and the tall man moved to screen her from view.

The train slowed down slightly. Occasionally the little clerk cast a furtive glance at the scenery flying by. He could think only of poetry as a means of stemming the other's tide of wrath. He leaned back, and with the smile of a seraph looked up at him and begin in pathetic, pacifying tones:

An Experiment.

"I am out of humanity's reach,
I must finish my journey alone,
Never hear the sweet music of speech,
I start at the sound of my own."

It was electrical. The Italian's face relaxed. The anger went out of his black eye. He bowed magnificently and stepped aside, and after voluble explanation to the lovers, sat down.

Smithson whistled mentally. "Phew! He thinks I've apologized."

Presently the tall man turned, and, pointing to Smithson's gold watch, stammered slowly: "You—haf—time?"

"What! You speak English?" Smithson proudly exposed to view the face of the watch.

"A leetle," was the answer.

All four were now smiling. The beautiful girl, especially, seemed gratified at the calm after the storm. The train ran into the station.

"Naples?" Smithson exclaimed.

"Anpoli," the Italian answered. "You eat?"

"Rather!"

With a pleasant farewell the lovers departed in a carriage, and Smithson, casting after the beautiful girl a regretful glance, accompanied the tall man on foot to a restaurant. "An experience to tell the chaps at home," he told himself. "Can't stand a vacation without incident!"

But he grumbled when, after a meal of delicate dishes which he could scarcely swallow, the proprietor of the restaurant negligently placed before him a bill for two.

An Argument.

"No, no, you mistake," he said easily.

"Sir, our price," stammered the proprietor, reproachfully. And the dark man nodded assent.

"But I've not brought you—you brought me—you crook," Smithson expostulated. He offered five francs, half the sum claimed.

The proprietor rejected it with a torrent of protest, endless as the dark man's in the train.

Smiling, as before, Smithson repeated the verse which had then acted so soothingly. It had no effect. Finally he exploded: "I wish I knew 'Paradise Lost.' I'd recite the whole book at you!" As a last resort, with a forced smile he began:

"The boy stood on the burning deck——"

"Burnidek?" the proprietor interrupted. "What ess 'burnidek'?"

"Confound you!" Smithson thundered, "that's where the boy stood! Do you think I'm going to listen to you fellows yarning without saying a word?"

A passing gendarme entered. Protest was useless. As an alternative to accompanying the officer Smithson paid ten francs and stamped into the street—the gendarme accepting from the proprietor one franc for settling the dispute.

On his way to the landing stage, whither he went to inquire if his liner were in, Smithson felt for his watch.

It was gone!

The Mistakes of Jennie :.: By HAL COFFMAN

Being a Series of Chapters in the Life of a Southern Girl in the Big City

They Would All Look at Jennie.

THINGS went along quietly with Jennie for three or four weeks. She had paid the $1.50 weekly installment on her clothes regularly, but she noticed everything was not quite right at the office. Her former girl friend would not speak to her, and Jennie often noticed her whispering to the other girls, and then they would all look at Jennie.

Jennie knew they were talking about her, but she could not find out what it was they said.

Usually, in the office during the dull season, they laid several of the girls off or let them go entirely, but they always kept the best ones—the ones that always did just a little MORE than the boss asked them to do.

Jennie had always been among these, for she worked hard and kept her mind on her work—that is, she used to before she got the foolish ideas about clothes and wanting to do like other girls she saw.

Of late Jennie had been thinking more of the good times she had, and wanted to have, than she had of her work, and had made several mistakes in her work, for which she was "called down" by the boss.

She felt and knew that the other girl was doing all she could to make Jennie lose her job, and what then of the $1.50 weekly installment on her clothes, and also the remainder of her $8.00 a week that was so badly needed at home.

Jennie had not seen the fellow since Tom met them at the door going to the hotel and had realized what a narrow escape she had when Tom told her what an awful place it was. One of the girls told Jennie that the boss wanted to see her, and with a dryness in her throat and fluttering heart she went slowly toward the private office of the boss. —HAL COFFMAN.

Mild and Bitter :-: A Humorous Yarn

MR. POLLOCK, the landlord of the "Comfortable Gill," sat at his door looking out upon the dusty road and the stretch of meadow beyond and beyond that again at the line of pollard willows which marked the stream. He took from his pocket a large white handkerchief, upon which a crop of red spots had broken out very much as though it had had the measles, and wiped his forehead with it, careless of infection.

The morning was hot, and he had just been engaged in severe physical exertion, nothing less than the conveyance, with the help of the brewer's men, of a thirty-six gallon barrel of ale into the cellar. The feat had been safely accomplished, and he had cause for satisfaction. Yet all was not well with him. There was a slight frown upon his forehead and a thoughtful expression in his watery blue eyes as they roved across the meadows to a spot by the stream, where stood a figure of a man clad in Norfolk jacket and knee breeches and carrying a fishing rod. Mr. Pollock eyed him thoughtfully, and scratched his stubble on his chin—of which he had two.

"Been here three weeks," he muttered, "and I ain't seen the color of his money yet. Promises—yes! Settle when he goes! But then, he ain't a-going—and living on the fat of the land, too. Not overmuch baggage to speak of. Of course, he may be a gentleman. Very likely he is. But then, again, he mayn't be. No. It's no go. I'll have it out with him this very morning."

He stiffened in his determination as he saw the fisherman turn from the stream and come toward him across the meadows. It was evident that the morning's sport had not proved very satisfactory. As he came nearer he revealed himself as a slightly built man with dark hair, narrow black eyes and a humorous twist about the corners of his mouth. He greeted Mr. Pollock cheerfully, but the landlord, having made up his mind to an unpleasant duty, was not to be put off by blandishments.

He Speaks.

"Morning, Mr. Twigg," he said abruptly, in response to the fisherman's greetings. "No luck, I suppose? One can't do much when the sky's as bright as it is. There's a small matter I was wanting to speak to you about—that little account of mine."

He coughed and drew his stout form a little more upright. Mr. Twigg's dark eyes rested upon him a moment and then wandered away to the right, to where the little country station stood, neat and trim, amongst its flowery beds.

"I think I told you," he said, "that I proposed to settle when I left."

"Exactly," answered Mr. Pollock eagerly, seeing an opening for effective argument. "And what I want to know is, when that's going to be, for, you see, supposing you was to stay here forever; then you wouldn't ever settle it. Now, as man to man, would you?"

Mr. Twigg laughed.

"Well, no," he admitted, pleasantly. "Since you put it that way, I shouldn't. But you needn't be afraid. Very nice place, this—pleasant, and quiet, and all that, but not quite the spot for a permanent residence. As a matter of fact, I was thinking of leaving this morning. There's a train in about a half hour, isn't there? And I've sent my trunks up to the station."

"Oh, you have, have you?" said Mr. Pollock, with a momentary suspicion. "Then you and me can settle up before you go—comfortable and pleasantlike."

"Certainly," answered Mr. Twigg, promptly. "I've just got to go upstairs and pack the small handbag, and then I'll come down and settle up."

"Very well, sir," said Mr. Pollock, becoming more respectful at the prospect of approaching payment. "You can't say no fairer than that."

His Account.

He went into the bar to add up the details of his account, putting on a few dollars for luck. When Mr. Twigg descended he presented him with the bill. The fisherman put down his handbag and thrust his hands into his trouser pockets, as though to produce the necessary coin. In the midst of the process he paused and looked abstractedly at the landlord.

"You've treated me very well," he said, "and I shall recommend this place to my friends. And in return, I can show you a tip that ought to be useful to a man in your line of business. If you'd like to know I can show you a way to get two kinds of beer out of one barrel."

"Two kinds of beer out of one barrel?" said Mr. Pollock, staring. "Why, it can't be done."

"Two kinds of beer," repeated Mr. Twigg. "Mild and bitter."

"Well, if you can do that," said Mr. Pollock, scratching his head, "you're a marvel."

"It's perfectly easy when you know how to do it," answered Mr. Twigg, nonchalantly. "I'll be glad to show it to you. You've got a barrel of beer in the cellar, I suppose?"

"Just got a new one this morning," answered Mr. Pollock. "Thirty-six gallons."

"Then that's the very thing," answered his guest. "If you've got such a thing as a large auger about the place I'll show you how to do it now."

In the excitement of watching this curious experiment Mr. Pollock forgot about the unsettled account. He rummaged in the bar and found an auger of the requisite size. Mr. Twigg inspected it with particular care. Armed with it and accompanied by his host he descended to the cellar where the mighty barrel stood upon its trestles. He eyed it carefully and tugged at his mustache—possibly to hide a smile.

The Experiment.

"No use knocking the spigot out," he said. "You need two holes—one for each kind of beer. The mild comes out at one hole, the bitter at the other. You'll find this tip so useful that you'll remember it all your life. So here goes."

He attacked the barrel with the augur, making the hole in the lower part of its face.

"Just stick your thumb in here whilst I make the other." Mr. Pollock complied, and he went on. "The beer which comes out of that hole will be mild," he explained as he bored, "and the beer which comes out of this one when I've finished it will be bitter, very bitter," he added, inaudibly. "Ah, there, it's done! Just stick your thumb in this one, then I'll show you."

Mr. Pollock hastily inserted his thumb into the second hole, and with both hands fully occupied waited for the miracle.

"And now," said Mr. Twigg, allowing his smile to broaden, "I'll just go along and catch my train. I've got five minutes and I can just do it. As I said, you've done me well while I've been here, and I think you'll admit that I've done you well in return. 'Good morning. Mild and bitter, remember, out of the same barrel. Don't forget."

He ran lightly up the cellar stairs and vanished into the stretch of sunlight beyond them. Mr. Pollock, with both thumbs stuck in the barrel, was busy employing a somewhat slow brain in calculation as to the choice between the loss of his account and the loss of 36 gallons of beer. He had not solved the problem by the time that Mr. Twigg stepped out of the little station on his way to town.

Accepted.

"Darling," whispered the ardent suitor, "I lay my fortune at your feet."

"Your fortune?" replied she in surprise. "I didn't know you had one."

"Well, it isn't much of a fortune, but it will look large beside those tiny feet."

Talked Through His Nose.

From America comes the story of a Scotsman who, while viewing a statue of George Washington, was approached by an interested American.

"I think you'll agree with me, sir," said the American, "that he was a great and good man. A lie never passed his lips."

"Weel," said the Scot, "I suppose he talked through his nose, like the rest o' ye."

The Fowler's Story :-: A Weird Tale, Complete

THE fowler's cottage stands at the edge of the fields where the estuary of the Whitewater joins the main, and if there be a more desolate spot in the Landshire coast I have yet to find it.

When I went down to the cottage the other night the weather, for all its roughness, seemed likely to favor fowling. When I reached the fowler's cottage I found its owner in strange mood. He was walking rapidly from kitchen to parlor, pausing every now and again to open the kitchen door and look out to seaward.

"I'm sorry ye've come down," he remarked as I reached the door, "for I can't come wi' ye to-night."

"Why not?" I asked. "Aren't you well? There is nothing the matter with wind or weather, and the tide'll bring a great many birds up."

"That's right enough," he replied; "and there's nothin' 'xactly wrong wi' me, but it is my unlucky night, and I dussn't go out."

"'Twere three years ago last night," he said; "chanced I were flight shootin' and didn't have no luck whatsomever. There was a shower of birds come out from the decoy pond, but blame me if they didn't keep out of range like, and I couldn't come near them nohow. An' as I walked back 'long the sea wall, a gre't ole owl came shrikkin' right past me, an' I thought, mebbe, she were a witch, an' I counted she'd driven the birds away from me; so I let fly and dropped her, and she were only an owl after all, for if so be she had been a witch the shot couldn't have stopped her. So I picked her up and carried her home for to stuff, and I count that were an unlucky thing to do. An' the very next night, three years ago to-night, with the wind just as you see it now, an' the moon in most the same quarter, I went out 'long the saltings for to hide behind a knoll, for I reckoned the duck were gettin' some shy of the sea wall.

"An' when I got down there and took me place just afore flight started, blame me if I didn't see another gre't old owl swoopin' down f'r the land; an' I dussn't shoot it, not knowin' when the flight would start, an' it come right past me, shrikkin' just like the one I'd shot the t'other night, and I knowed somethin' was wrong. Flight come late. It were ten minutes 'fore the first birds come over, and then they come all right and I got six or eight, and thought to myself I'd got skeered about nothin'. I forgot to tell ye that I 'adn't brought Spot wi' me 'cos she'd hurt her foot, an' I'd to leave her be'ind, so I 'ad to pick up me own birds, an' for to do that I kept all on turnin' round, and two was cripples an' ran; and when I'd got the lot and the light were most gone, blame me if I knew where the land was and where was the sea.

"I didn't know nowt about it at first startin' off. Seemed to me I were headin' towards the land right enough, and then I come to a place where the mud-bank stopped and there were deep water twenty yards wide comin' down with a rush from two sides at once. I looked for me landmarks, but couldn't see nothin' an' I knew there was somethin' wrong.

"I grew'd more an' more skeer'd like, an' begun to run forrard hard as ever I could, an' wherever I went the water kept all on chasin' arter me; an' blame me, if that gre't ole owl didn't pass agin in the dark, all white an' flutterin' an' screamin' at the top o' her voice. Then I know'd why it was I'd got caught, an' I just stood still, for I didn't know where to go no longer, an' then I see'd a light, sudden-like, right away from where I'd been a-runnin'. I didn't know what it might be, but I just started straight off for it, walkin' an' wadin' an' splashin' an' racin' like where the goin' was too soft; an' there was times when the water was up to me knees, but I kept all on goin' for the light, the only thing I could see."

"You must have known you were on the right road, then," I suggested.

"That I didn't," he replied, speaking as a man does when he has been running hard, "for I couldn't tell but that the light were a Jack o' lantern that would go out when I come nigh it an' leave me in th' worstapart of th' marsh, or that t'other old owl weren't a real witch what 'ad set it there for to drown'd me by. By anyway, the light were better than the darkness, an' so I run as best I could an' slipped twice an' dropped a brace o' me birds an' dussn't stop even for they, an' went on an' on till it seemed I'd never get to the end o' th' runnin'; but the light kept all on a-twinklin' an' so I kept all on a-runnin', an' at last I seed a bit of the breakwater, an' then all the things shaped theirselves an' I know'd in a moment where I was. An' the light were in me own parlor, for it chanced that me brother Jack 'ad come along, an' bein' lonely like, 'ad just lit the lamp for to see by, an' if it 'adn't been for that I'd never 'ave seen land again. I count th' old owl would ha' had me drownded."

"That is three years ago, you tell me," I said. "I should have thought you would have forgotten the trouble by now."

The old fowler stirred uneasily in his chair.

"I 'ad forgotten it," he confessed, "but last night, when I were down on the wall at flight-time, t'other old owl came shrikkin' past me again, an' I know'd she wanted to get me back on the saltin's, for I count she's a witch, an' it's 'er night. An' that's why I 'ont goo.

"Do ye listen," he said in hushed tones. "Do ye listen."

I stirred the fire to a glow that lit the fowler's scared, white face. Something gray and silent sailed between the window and the faint light of a moon half hidden by a clouddrift—a big owl passed, hooting.

Welchonce singled to right and Bisland went to second. Long hit a long drive to right field fence for three bags. Bisland and Welchonce scored. On a wi'd pitch Long scored. Alperman hit to short and on a wild throw he went to second. Smith fanned. Bailey popped up to Kraft. FOUR HITS, FOUR RUNS.

Kraft went out, Dent to Agler. Williams also went out, Dent to Agler. Clancey hit one in front of the plate and was out, Dunn to Agler. NO HITS, NO RUNS.

SIXTH INNING.

Dunn went out, Walker to Kraft. Dent popped up a weak one just over Walker's head, which fell safe for a hit. Ag er walked. Bisland hit onto a double play, Hendrix to Clancey to Kraft. ONE HIT, NO RUNS.

Angermier grounded to Agler and was out to Dent who covered first. Walker went out, Alperman to Agler. Daley flied out to Welchonce. NO HITS, NO RUNS.

SEVENTH INNING.

Welchonce popped to Daley. Long got a life on Clancy's high throw to first of his easy grounder. Long stole second. Alperman lifted a Texas leaguer just back of third, but Long was held on second. Smith flied to Kyle. Bailey walked, filling the bases. Dunn doubled to left, scoring Long, Alperman and Bailey. Dent went out to Kraft, unassisted. TWO HITS, THREE RUNS.

Kyle fanned. Hendrix lined one to Smith too hot to handle, which went for a hit. Bagby went out, Alperman to Agler. Kraft walked. Williams popped to Smith. ONE HIT, NO RUNS.

EIGHTH INNING.

Agler lined to Hendrix. Bisland was safe on Hendrix's fumble. Welchonce singled past third, Bisland was out at third, Daley to Williams, Welchonce went to second on the out. Long popped to Hendrix. ONE HIT, NO RUNS.

Clancy went out, Smith to Agler. Angermier went out, Bisland to Agler. Walker fanned. NO HITS, NO RUNS.

NINTH INNING.

Alperman doubled to right. Smith out, Clancey to Kraft, Alperman going to third. Bailey singled to right scoring Alperman. Bailey stoled second. Dunn fanned. Dent singled to right, scoring Bailey. Dent went to second on the throw in and scored on a wild pitch. Agler was safe on Hendrix's fumble. Bisland hit to Hendrix who tagged out Agler. THREE HITS, THREE RUNS.

Daley singled to right. Bisland threw out Kyle. Daley going to second on the out. While Bisland was throwing out Hendrix, Daley scored. Bagby popped to Smith. ONE HIT, ONE RUN.

HOW TO ATTAIN GOLF BENEFITS TOLD BY EVANS

By "Chick" Evans.

IT is no doubt true that the majority of the golfers play simply for the exercise the game affords. Certainly golf furnishes an excellent opportunity for exercise, but it also supplies one of the finest studies in the world, and he who plays only for exercise misses half the pleasure. One can get a good deal of fun and exercise by just batting the ball around, yet surely much additional enjoyment can be found in attempting to discover the reasons that lie back of good or poor shots.

D. R. Forgan has said that "golf is the study of a lifetime," and this is undeniably true if one wishes to attain excellence. Every day the careful player can learn something about it and at the same time discover new obstacles to be overcome. It may be argued that the business man has no time to study a new game, but a little more care in playing would require but little more time.

There is a great pleasure in knowing how a thing is done, and no great progress can be made unless the underlying reasons for success are understood. Accidents happen, of course, and fortune is proverbially fickle, but she, like providence, is a little more inclined to help those who help themselves.

There is a great deal of good golf literature to be obtained at present, and I have no doubt a great deal of information can be obtained in that way. Personally, I have never read a book on golf except in the most casual manner, but I grew up on a golf links, and, at the observing age, learned my golf from observation. I believe strongly in books, however, and I think, if they are closely followed, they can be of much assistance to the beginner. This fall I intend to read as many golf books as I can lay my hands on, and I hope thereby to improve my game.

BRITTON REAL OPPONENT FOR TITLE HOLDER

By Ed W. Smith.

CHICAGO, July 18.—Not since the days when Frank Garrard and Martin Duffy, of this city, looked to be pretty fair championship material in the lightweight class have the local fight fans been so anxious to see a Chicagoan get a crack at the title. Neither Garrard nor Duffy ever made good in their day, but they were just as highly regarded along in the late 90s as are Jack Britton and Packey McFarland, present-day Chicago champions. Both Jack and Packey have a world of friends right here, and to say that they have their ears to the ground listening for some sort of a favorable report from the champion on the different propositions that have been hurled at him is putting it mildly.

• • •

PACKEY, while not issuing any direct challenges, has let it be made known to Ritchie that nothing would delight him more than to take him on in a 20-round contest, providing the weight bars be lowered just a little more, say another pound, letting the stock yards favorite in at 135 pounds, with the scaling done several hours in advance of the battle's start. With a foe of the McFarland caliber it is not likely that the champion will consent at all to any such an arrangement. He insisted upon 134 pounds for Rivers, and then trimmed the Los Angeles lad to the queen's taste, if queens have any particular taste in such matters. But from 134 pounds three hours or so before to 135 pounds five or six hours before is a vast gap that even the keen Ritchie eye is not likely to measure lightly.

• • •

BUT the Britton case is hugely different. Here is a boy who boldly flaunts this offer in the champion's face: "Make the weight, any figure that you choose," and then awaits the answer. Now, that leaves absolutely no loopholes for excuse or room for a single argument. Britton simply does not care what the poundage is, says so, and there rests his case. What will the answer be, to say nothing of the harvest?

• • •

NO sane man could ever accuse Willie Ritchie of cowardice. The man who jumped into the breach with Freddie Welch when Ad Wolgast was taken to the hospital and fought the English star almost to a standstill with but a few hours' notice, then whaled Ad Wolgast out of his title and went in and slugged with Joe Rivers at the latter's own game, is possessed, as Bill Naughton says, of a lion's heart. But Willie is a financier along with his other accomplishments and is not likely to enter into any contracts that do not promise the brightest of monetary returns. There isn't a doubt that if some promoter can see his way clear to offering the right sort of a prize for the champion he will lend himself to the match. Then we will see a real old-time battle between two of the greatest men that ever drew on a pair of gloves.

Pelky-Smith Battle For Sept. 1—Maybe

SAN FRANCISCO, July 18.—Arthur Pelky and his manager, Tommy Burns, are in town. Pelky came here in quest of ring battles, and picked as his choice for first battle "Gunboat" Smith. Burns and his fighter held a long conference with Jimmy Coffroth, and if arrangements can be made Pelky and Smith will furnish the Labor Day card in this city. Pelky had little to say, Burns doing all the talking.

"There will be a general disposition to look upon Pelky as a ring accident, just as the people tagged Willie Ritchie as a false alarm," said Burns.

"This is a mistake. My man has had 33 fights without having had a decision given against him. He made Jess Willard quit cold, and he stopped Jim Barry in five rounds. All that he needs is the opportunity to prove that he is the best heavyweight boxer in the game to-day."

WISCONSIN BOXING BILL IS SIGNED BY GOVERNOR

MILWAUKEE, WIS., July 18.—Governor Francis McGovern has signed the Hedding boxing bill and the sport becomes legalized in Wisconsin the same as in New York State.

Governor McGovern had protests from many sources, but stated that he considered that in view of thousands of petitions in favor of the sport it was only just to the majority that they should be given a chance to show that boxing under proper conditions is much better than under no law at all.

It will now be up to the Governor to appoint a commission to handle the boxing game in the State.

BUSINESS.

Win, win, win,
At the job you have, Jake Stahl,
Nor ever a soul to mutter,
Nor ever a voice to bawl.

Oh, well for the guys who lose!
They are only a bunch of dubs.
They get the hook and a vicious look
Like the manager of the Cubs.

And the gate receipts go on,
Though the manager may be nil,
And the magnates cry for a winning guy,
As they hark to the sound of the till.

Win, win, win,
At the job you have, Jake Stahl,
Or the friends you have, though they hand you salve,
Will hammer you to the wall.

Despite the fact that the Tigers whopped a few wallops into the Athletics, there is a deep suspicion that whopping the Athletics is not going to become a popular pastime.

Looking over the sport pages, we note that Larry Chappelle may or may not be a sensation in the big leagues. This is a great truth. Mr. Chappelle may or may not be a sensation in the big leagues.

The fact that Messrs. McAleer and Stahl have split reminds us that both denied it. The only conclusion to be drawn is that they were prevaricating, or didn't know it was loaded.

Reading over the papers, one notes that there are bulky fields at Porter. But as for bulky purses that's something else again.

ODE TO A FIRST BASEMAN.

In the days of old
Jack Knight was sold,
As though he were a dub.
You cannot buy
That selfsame guy
While I am on this club.

The St. Louis Browns have protested a game won from them by the Yanks. If you are looking for nothing to worry about, this is it.

SUNDAY SCHOOL TEAMS PLAY SATURDAY AT PONCE

At Ponce DeLeon park Saturday afternoon the two leading clubs of the Sunday School League will meet in a double-header. In the absence of Billy Smith's Crackers, fans in large numbers are expected to provide the best crowd of the Sunday school season for the Saturday afternoon games.

The First Baptist team, leading the league with twelve straight victories and no defeats, has been playing such ball as to attract sidewise glances from the pennant races of the larger leagues, and is determined to add two more wins Saturday. The S. V. D. club, in second place, with seven victories and three defeats, is equally determined to break up the winning streak of the Baptists. Both teams will be in classiest condition for the double-header Saturday, which is scheduled to begin at 3 o'clock.

"I DIDN'T RESIGN, I WAS FIRED," SAYS JAKE STAHL

BOSTON, July 18.—"I didn't resign from the Red Sox; I was fired," declared Jake Stahl, when he arrived in Boston. "I gave the Red Sox the best of the baseball that was in me. I was with them heart and soul. That club was the only one which I was ever really interested in. And I wish them all the best of success," continued Stahl.

FAN SENDS IN 106 VOTES FOR D. MANCHESTER

Popularity Race Is Now Closer Than Ever—Four Players Bunched for Third.

"PAT" Murphy, Otto Jordan, Dick Manchester and "Goat" Holliday are now having a merry four-cornered race for the leadership in the Popularity Baseball Contest being run by Hhe Hearst Sunday American and Atlanta Georgian to decide the most popular player in the Empire State League.

Holliday, the fourth man in the race, is just 150 votes behind "aPt" Murphy, the Thomasville shortstop, who is on top. Otto Jordan, second, is 50 votes behind Murphy, while Manchester leads Holliday for third place by just ten votes.

It was Manchester's turn to take a spurt yesterday, and his friends certainly came to his aid. Dick has been playing great ball for Americus and the fans are all rooting for him to cop the prize.

Popularity Editor,
Atlanta Georgian,
Atlanta, Ga.

Dear Sir—Inclosed please find 106 coupons, which I hope you will credit to Dick Manchester, the popular Americus player. Yours truly,
JOHN D. SULLIVAN.

Wilder and Champlin In Race.

Baby Wilder, the Cordele twirler, and H. Champlin, of Thomasville, are also coming to the front fast. Votes piled in for both players yesterday, and if their admirers keep up their great work for a few more days they are bound to be struggling for the leadership with the first four.

Although Pat Murphy still holds the lead, it would not be surprising to see him ousted by to-morrow. The fans in the Empire State League have taken to this contest with a vengeance and new players are now entering the contest daily.

Clip Coupons.

The coupon the fans are to send in appear in this paper daily. Clip it out, fill it in and mail to the Baseball Popularity Editor, Atlanta Georgian, Atlanta, Ga. Now is the time, as a little hustling might put your player in the race for the beautiful cup being donated by this paper to the winner. Vote to-day.

SOUTH MICHIGAN TEAMS PLAY 20-INNING GAME

ADRIAN, MICH., July 18.—Battle Creek and Adrian, the leading teams in the Southern Michigan League, yesterday played twenty innings to a tie, each scoring one run before darkness ended the struggle. Manager Jenkins, of Adrian, in the fourth inning, singled, and advancing on a sacrifice hit and a passed ball, was scored on a sacrifice fly. Pitcher McDonald, of Battle Creek, tripled in the sixth and scored on an error. Loomis, Adrian's pitcher, struck out nineteen batters and issued one pass, purposely, in the twentieth inning. McDonald fanned sixteen and passed none.

TEN-ROUND GO SCHEDULED.

Charley White, of Chicago, is scheduled to meet Jake Abel, of Chattanooga, in a ten-round fight at the Auditorium-Armory to-night. Abel is in the city. White, it is said, will arrive to-day. The fighters have agreed to make 133 pounds at 6 p. m. White says he will not fight if Abel is one ounce over weight.

COACH J. W. HEISMAN, OF YELLOW JACKETS, WRITES ABOUT:

Ball Players That Tech Has Turned Out

By J. W. Heisman.

SO many college players are breaking into professional ball these days, and so many of them with great success, that the thing no longer occasions the surprise and comment that used to ensue. Something like 25 years ago, when I was attending a New England college, I can remember with what dumbfoundment we learned one day that one of our varsity players had received an offer from Boston. It tickled us nearly to death!

• • •

Among Southern colleges, Tech early took the lead in this respect by sending the great Henley straight to the big show. Unless my memory fails me badly, it was to the Athletics that Henley went, and it was about thirteen years ago. Even at that early date, when hardly any other professional managers would look at a college player, Connie Mack had his eyes wide open as to their possible usefulness.

When Henley first went to Tech he played first base, and he played it well. He was about 6 feet 1 inch tall, but very slender. His arms were very strong, and he had a fine free shoulder swing. Rather a handsome chap, this Henley, and a good, jovial fellow. Came from the little hamlet of Jasper, I believe, in North Georgia, the section that also sent Craig Day and DeWitt Poole to Tech—two other awfully good players and pitchers, who, however, never went into professional ball.

After seevral years of usefulness in the big league Henley was sent to the Rochester club, where he put in a couple more years of good work. But for some reason, his health was steadily failing him and finally he had to give it up. Just where he is to-to-day, I can not say. I know he went to Florida for a while in search of improved health, and perhaps he found it; at least we all hope so.

At the time Weldon was at the zenith of his glory as a college pitcher, Mercer was turning out some exceedingly strong teams. Their mainstay on the mound was the unforgotten Will Gunn, now a successful architect in Macon. It will have to be given up that Gunn was some gun himself when it came to making a noise like a pitcher, and endless were the arguments of that day in rah rah circles as to which was the better. I am not going into a history of the friendly feud, but it is worth observing that when the two teams finally did face each other at old Brisbine Park, with their respective stars down on the score card to do the hurling, there was some crowd present to witness the ceremonies, and some little excitement was had. The game was won by Tech; score, 30 to 0.

• • •

ANOTHER great picher that Tech turned out about the same time that Henley was absorbing all the limelight, was little Jimmy Lavendar, now with the Chicago Cubs. It would perhaps be more correct to say that Tech turned Jimmy out, or that it turned out an engineer, not that it turned out another pitcher, for at that time, Jimmy didn't play ball at all, at least he never went out for the varsity; and so it is merely an accident that his youthful career was in any way associated with Tech's.

Lavendar was born and reared in South Georgia. He had seen a picture or two of a baseball before coming to Tech, but didn't care enough for the game to even come out and try for the team. It was after leaving Tech that his acquaintance with the pellet grew into a thing of beauty; and, after slamming the sphere around corner lots for a short time, it was found that Jimmy had the makings of a really, truly pitcher.

It was while doing stellar work with the Providence team of the Eastern League that Lavendar attracted Chicago's attention. Now, Jimmy is one of the "its" of the Cubs, and promises to remain one for some years yet.

• • •

TWO Atlanta boys attending Tech were the next to break into the professional class, and they both made good from the jump. One of these was Sam Woodward, the other, Jim Ison. The former was captain and catcher of my 1904 Tech team, while Jim was official first-sacker of the same aggregation.

Woodward was rather small for a catcher, but he had plenty of nerve, heaps of judgment, always kept cool, had a fine arm, was quick as a cat, and made a fine lead-off man, as he batted from the port side. Sam's favorite word of encouragement to his pitchers—Poole, Day and Butler—was "Beauty" after every pitched ball, but each time in a different intonation and with varying inflection and accents—and this quite regardless, in my opinion, of whether the ball was really a beauty or a pumpkin.

Sam went to the Cotton States with Bernie McCay, where he played fine ball; but a blow on the head by a pitched ball came near to putting out his light. It took him quite a long time to recover. Later, Sam went to the Carolina League, and for several seasons managed the Anderson, S. C. club with signal success. He is now engaged in business in Atlanta and is making a success of life as president of the Woodward Electric Company.

By the way, during the college season of 1904, Sam caught every inning of every game without making a single error, and I gave him All-Southern catcher for it.

Jim Isom was one of the hardest-hitting first basemen I ever saw in college ranks. He was a godd, willing, cheery, all-around player and my clean-up man, which was some distinction with a team that had five men on its roster all batting over 400.

I forget what professional team Jim first joined, but he never had any trouble holding his berth right from the jump. He played several very successful seasons with Macon, where he again stung the pill hard, and he also starred in the Virginia League at second base for the Richmond club. Here he was an even better fielder than at first base.

Jimmy found an opportunity to go into a lucrative business here in Atlanta several years ago and decided to give up the game for good, though it cost him a pang or two to do so. Now, he is fat, happy and making money in the Gate City.

Later, I will tell of some other players Tech has turned out.

HAUSER GOES TO HOSPITAL.

BALTIMORE, MD., July 18.—Shortstop Hauser, of the St. Louis National baseball team, is on his way to Baltimore, where he will be operated on by Dr. William S. Baer, of Johns Hopkins Hospital. It is said that the player has a misplaced cartilage in his right knee.

MEEHAN BESTS MANTELL.

OAKLAND, CAL., July 18.—Willie Meehan, of San Francisco, won the decision over Frank Mantell, of Pawtucket, R. I., in a 10-round bout here. By constant clinching in the last round Mantell saved himself from being knocked out.

COBB BACK TO-DAY.

DETROIT, MICH., July 18.—President Ban Johnson announced that Ty Cobb, suspended recently for an argument with Umpire Hildebrand, will be back in the game to-day.

Best Bet Is to Play Champions

Title Holders Have Big Shade

By Left Hook.

HERE'S a little tip for the men who bet good con on the results of encounters in the boxing arena. Never stop betting on a champion of any class until he has been beaten. The suggestion of such a theme for a little fighting story is brought up by the manner in which the Joe Rivers supporters lost so heavily on the Los Angeles boy in his battle with Willie Ritchie, in San Francisco, July 4. Incidentally, the idea of it was brought out forcibly by some remarks that Battling Nelson made the day after the holiday while the famous iron man of the lightweight class was discussing results and congratulating himself on having picked six out of seven winners after having bet personally on three of them and failing to get down on the one loser that he picked.

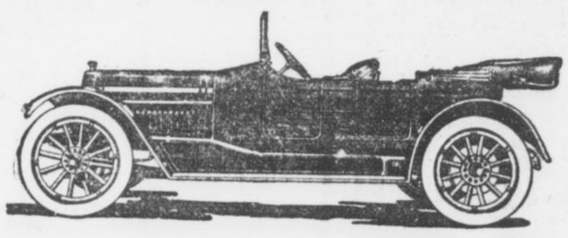
• • •

IT is a foolish thing to bet against a champion, even if you don't like him personally and haven't such a high opinion of his fistic merits, because, according to Bat Nelson, champions always win a lot of battles in a row after they attain the title and have a big natural shade in all of their contests. The argument is a sound one, because champions, after annexing titles, do not make the kind of matches that they can not win—and they know they can win them when they make them. Mind you, this is not an intimation that there is anything wrong or any skulduggery practiced by any of them. But the average champion is a pretty wise sort of a gink. He knows that to keep a title is to make plenty of money. Hence, he figures with the greatest of care, and when finally he signs to battle, it's about 3 to 1 that he is going to win.

• • •

AND another thing worth figuring is that referees have natural leanings toward champions and don't take titles away from them without the very best of cause. Which is a mighty strong point in favor of the champion when he starts into action. But, of course, the strongest point of all is the fact, borne out by many a precedent, that champions almost always win a bunch of fights before being compelled to resign the top rung of the ladder.

Mitchell



AN automobile that proves itself all its makers claim for it is certainly worth your consideration.

The Mitchell is just such a car. Its makers know when they pronounce it the greatest value offered to automobile buyers to-day that the car will bear them out in every detail.

This value is caused by many reasons, some of which are:

The proved excellence of material and workmanship throughout the entire car;
A design which makes for simple elegance in appearance; for comfort and safety in riding.
Long stroke T-head motor—the best known development for power, speed and silence;
Electric self-starter and electric lighting system;
Left drive with center control—a great advance in the convenience of automobile operation;

NEW 'JIM CROW' LAW OFFERED IN SENATE

Provides Separate Cars in Cities of Over 20,000—Smith Verdict Bill Passed.

By a vote of 28 to 12 the Georgia Senate Friday morning passed Senator Smith's bill providing for verdicts and judgments at the appearance term of city and superior courts upon suits on unconditional contracts and verified accounts.

When President Anderson called for an yea-and-nay vote Senator Watts of the Eleventh, proposed an amendment providing that "should the boll weevil strike Georgia no debt of any kind shall be collected within ten years thereafter." The amendment was thrown out amid laughter.

The most important bill introduced in the Senate Friday morning was one by Senator Kea of the Sixteenth, requiring all street railway companiese in cities of more than 20.000 inhabitants to furnish separate cars for white and negro passengers and in cities of less than 20,000 inhabitants to furnish separate compartments.

Nominations Confirmed.

Senator Sweat of the Fifth introduced a bill providing for the authorization of the execution of a lost or destroyed deed to be proved as to land in any county in which recorded.

The Senate in executive session concurred unanimously in the following nominations by the Governor:

Miller S. Bell to be a member of the board of directors of the Georgia Normal and Industrial College for six years, from January 6, 1914, for Baldwin County.

Ben M. Turnipseed to be judge of the City Court of Fort Gaines for two years, from August 29, 1913.

P. S. King to be Solicitor of the City Court of Fort Gaines for two years, from August 27, 1913.

S. H. Sibley to be judge of the City Court of Greensboro for four years, from September 17, 1913.

S. L. Drawdy to be judge of the County Court of Clinch County for four years, from October 28, 1913.

W. T. Dickerson to be Solicitor of the County Court of Clinch County for two years, from October 28, 1913.

Local Bills Are Passed.

Local bills were passed by the Senate as follows:

By Elkins of the Fifteenth, amending an act creating the charter of the City Court of Fitzgerald.

By Bush of the Eighth, amending an act incorporating the town of Colquitt.

By Sweat of the Fifth, amending an act creating a Board of Road Commissioners for Ware County.

By Parrish of the Seventh, amending an act creating the City Code of Statesboro.

The Educational Committee reported favorably on the free kindergarten bill, which probably will come up for passage in the House Monday.

12 HURT IN TRAIN CRASH.

CLEVELAND, July 18.—Twelve persons were injured, eight seriously, when a fast express train telescoped a standing passenger train on the Lake Shore Railway near Perry, Ohio, to-day.

PLAN POSTAL ORGANIZATION.

MACON.—The assistant postmasters of Georgia will meet in Albany on July 26 and perfect the organization of the Georgia Assistant Postmasters' Association.

Mediation Board Head a Georgian; Well Known Here

WASHINGTON, July 18.—President Wilson has selected William L. Chambers, of the District of Columbia, to be commissioner of mediation and counciliation, under the Newlands act, and G. W. Hanger as his assistant. Their names will be sent to the Senate to-day.

The other two members of the new board will be Judge Martin Knapp, of the United States Commerce Court, and Louis F. Post, Assistant Secretary of Labor.

William Lea Chambers is a native Georgian and well remembered in Atlanta as presiding judge last fall in the arbitration under the Erdman act of the Georgia Railroad strike.

Judge Chambers was born at Columbus March 4, 1852, and received his education at Emory College, Oxford, from which institution he received an honorary LL.D. degree in 1909 in recognition of diplomatic and scholarly attainments. He taught school two years and was admitted to the bar in 1873. He married Laura Ligon Clopton, daughter of Justice David Clopton, of the Supreme Court of Alabama.

In 1888 Judge Chambers was president of the First National Bank of Montgomery, Ala., when he removed to Northern Alabama to head the association which founded Sheffield.

Judge Chambers was the American member of the commission under the Berlin treaty of 1890 between Germany, England and the United States; Chief Justice of the International Court of Samoa; was on the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission, and is a member of the Alabama Historical Society, the Archaeological Institute of America and the National Geographic Society, etc.

Battle for Painter Organs Continues

BALTIMORE, July 18.—Today's session of the fight in the Circuit Court for the possession of the viscera of the late E. O. Painter, of Jacksonville, was taken up by efforts by employees of the United States Fidelity and Guaranty Company, to show that representatives of that company had not been permitted to be present when the analysis of the organs of Painter was made.

It is likely that the case will continue for some time before Judge Duffy can hand down a decision on the petition of the guaranty company, in which the deceased was insured for $20,000, that a receiver be appointed for his vital organs.

DIES OF APPENDICITIS.

MILLEDGEVILLE—Garrard Minor, aged 21, died at Sandersville, where he went for an operation for appendicitis. He was the son of William E. Minor. He was only ill two days before his death. He is survived by two brothers, four sisters and other relatives.

CANNING DEMONSTRATIONS.

COLUMBUS.—The canning club demonstrations conducted by Miss Mary E. Creswell in Columbus were highly successful, being attended by large numbers of girls and women. Mrs. J. L. Bond is in charge of the work in Muscogee County.

HUNGER STRIKE FREES GIRL.

LONDON, July 18.—Miss Annie Kenney, militant suffragette, who was sentenced on June 17 to eighteen months for malicious destruction of property and conspiracy, was released to-day because of illness induced by a food and water strike.

CARBUNCLE CAUSES DEATH.

E. R. Carswell, tax collector of Pike County, died at St. Joseph's Infirmary, where he was brought for treatment for a carbuncle on his neck. He was one of the foremost citizens of Barnesville.

SMALL INVESTOR CAN BUY FIRM BONDS NOW

B. C. Forbes Points Out Advantage Paper in Denomination of $10 Gives to All.

By B. C. FORBES.

The small investor of to-day, if wisely guided, will be a larger investor to-morrow, since Money makes money.

* * *

In America poor people have lost shamefully through being allured into gilded traps by unscrupulous promoters and "brokers." Swindling has cost the unwary upward of $200,000,000 in one year. It has been checked to some extent. The dissemination of correct information by newspapers and magazines has helped. The postal authorities have queered a good many clever games. In some States laws have been passed to severely punish stock swindlers and their kind.

* * *

The issuance of high-grade securities in small denominations has contributed invaluably to driving out fake stuff. There is to-day no need for even the smallest investor turning to worthless stocks and bonds, for he or she can buy the best in as low as $10 quantities. This development is of far-reaching importance.

* * *

Discussing the investment opportunities now within reach in the current issue of Hearst's Magazine, I point out:

"You can now buy $10 bonds.

"New York City has taken the lead in bringing the highest grade of security within reach of the most modest purse. The results that will flow from this innovation can not be fully grasped. It should, and probably will, mean that Americans, like the French, will become a nation of thrifty investors. In France the peasants can buy safe bonds of very small denomination, but in lordly, opulent, big-scale America nothing less than $1,000 bonds used to be issued, so indifferent to small investors were our railroads, our industrial corporations and our other large borrowers.

* * *

"So keen, however, has become the struggle for capital all over the world that even the proudest applicants for funds—governments, States, municipalities, railroad systems and trusts—are anxious to cater to those who have saved, not thousands, but hundreds or even tens of dollars. Of late $100 bonds have come into vogue.

* * *

"And now New York City is making a specialty of $10 bonds. Their yield is about 4 1-2 per cent.

* * *

"Now, 4 1-2 per cent is more than savings banks pay, and the risk is absolutely negligible. While those whose nestegg is very tiny can not do better than place it in a strong, carefully managed savings bank, the advisability of buying a good bond should be seriously considered by those who have accumulated several hundred dollars or more. On $1,000 the difference between 3 1-2 per cent and 4 1-2 per cent is $10 every year Not much, do you say?

* * *

"The difference in twenty years, at compound interest, would lav the foundation for a nice savings account for your son or daughter. One thousand dollars at 4 1-2 per cent compound interest become $2,000 in less than sixteen years, whereas money at 3 1-2 per cent takes more than twenty years to double itself. And remember that thrift begets thrift. Just as 'nothing succeeds like success,' nothing stimulates saving like saving. You can not begin a day too soon. The Government one day may imitate European nations by adopting old age pensions, but what self-respecting, healthy person would compare the satisfaction to be derived from his own savings with the feeling that would accompany a dole from the national purse?

* * *

"The buyer of one bond wants to obtain another as soon as he possibly can. Two $100 bonds paying 3 1-2 per cent bring $9 a year. Five paying 5 per cent—as many sound bonds do—net $25 each year, and, of course, this $25 interest helps to get another bond.

* * *

"The investor buys for income.

"The speculator buys for fluctuations in quotations.

"The investor seeks to avoid risk.

"The speculator 'takes a chance.'

"The investor in a safe bond is not hurt by temporary declines in the market price; his income is sure as long as the bond runs, and he can get full face value for it when it matures.

"The speculator's profits are not limited. He buys for possibilities and changes.

"Investment should be practiced by all persons of ordinary means.

* * *

"Speculation should be left to those who can afford to incur risks and to lose money, to those who have special opportunities for gathering and analyzing basic information, to those whose regular duties do not call for much time or thought—for speculation is insidious; it excites, it enervates, it distracts attention from other matters, it often unbalances judgment, it sometimes develops into a mania and ends in disaster. 'There are two classes of people who should not speculate,' said a wise man—'those who can afford it and those who can't.'"

Slays Rich Husband By Light of Match

SAN FRANCISCO, July 18.—The mystery in the death of Manuel E. DeValle, wealthy ranch owner, who was found dead in bed Wednesday, was cleared to-day. Mrs. Mary E. DeValle confessed that she killed her husband. She said:

"My husband lay on the bed jabbering in a drunken stupor. I could see him faintly by the half light of the moon. I lighted a match and walked until I was within a foot of him. Then I lighted another match, aimed my revolver and fired."

House Kills Inquiry Into Caminetti Case

WASHINGTON, July 18.—By a vote of 133 to 84, the House to-day tabled the Kahn resolution for an inquiry into the postponement of the Diggs-Caminetti white slave cases without allowing debate.

On a vote by tellers, the House favored tabling the Kahn resolution, 99 to 75, but Minority Leader Mann, starting a filibuster, secured a roll call.

Thursday's 97 Mark For Heat Threatened

With a record temperature of 83 degrees at 8 o'clock, as registered by he official thermometer, Friday promises to go Thursday one better along heat lines. According to all signs, Thursday's high mark of 97 degrees probably will be broken by at least one degree.

The weather man says there is little prospect of rain for several days.

War Veteran Sued For Balm by Girl, 16

PATERSON, N. J., July 18.—Miss Emma Mahanney, 16, has sued John Wolf, 70, a war veteran, for breach of promise.

Miss Mahanney's counsel said the couple became engaged and were making arrangements for the wedding when Wolf changed his mind. Miss Mahanney asks for $25,000.

Grain Notes

The Chicago Inter Ocean says: Wheat traders regarded the market last night as a sale on all bulges. Speculation has dropped off some, however, and many traders think the market is in no condition to stand any heavy selling. Many of the local speculators are bullish on oats and bearish on corn. It was noticeable, however, that comparatively little new outside buying is coming into oats because of their recent slump when the trade was long, forcing out a large number of holders.

"Specialists believe that oats at present prices have merit."

* * *

Chicago drizzling rain, 68 degrees; Minneapolis clear, 68; Peoria clear, 76; no rain; Terre Haute clear, 80; Springfield clear, 78; no rain; Omaha drizzling, 70; half-hour good rain this morning; Kansas City, St. Louis, 85.

* * *

St. Paul wires: "The Pioneer Press, of St. Paul, this morning says prospects in Minnesota for abundant harvest of all grains are excellent, according to D. A. Woods, of the Minnesota State University. He says the crops were not injured by the recent rains. He thinks the crop yield as a whole will average up about same as last year. Corn crop will be much larger."

* * *

Bartlett, Frazier & Co., says:

"Wheat—Map shows further rains in spring wheat country, with temperatures about the same as yesterday. It looks as though we might have a little lower market to-day.

"Corn—Temperatures east of the River are generally lower, but no rains reported in Illinois, except immediate vicinity of Chicago. Kansas City and St. Louis again show high temperatures, but it is cooler in Nebraska, with light rain at Omaha this morning. Look for lower market to-day, but would not press sales on decline.

"Oats—Market is showing steadier undertone, with moderate increase in outside buying.

"Provisions—Commission houses seem to have more buying orders, the selling being chiefly in way of profit-taking. Market continues very firm."

* * *

B. W. Snow says: "Corn prospects along Illinois Central, Chicago to St. Louis, very much mixed, but general average is poor. Kankakee to Farmer City good; thence to Springfield spotted, and south of Springfield poor; plenty of moisture to Farmer City, but from there south alternate streaks of rain and drouth.

"Tassel just beginning to show in few earliest fields, but growth will not average more than hip high, and south of Springfield there are thousands of acres not knee high. Oats harvest begun; best fields below average and crop is poorest in years."

* * *

The market was oversold and local crowd is covering short wheat. Slaughtee cable reports political complications in Austria and Russia and bad crops from England.

* * *

Carmi, Ill., to St. Louis, country very dry. Average corn promise in the poor counties and very good near St. Louis.

* * *

The thrashing reports on oats coming pretty bad and we believe it would be good judgment to at least cover and stay off the short side for a while.—Bartlett, Frazier & Co.

PAY $9.60 FOR HOGS.

CHICAGO, July 18.—Another rung of the ladder was mounted by the hog market when $9.60 was paid for shipping grades. The stereotyped 5 to 10c advance was recorded and only trash had to sell under the 9c line. Eastern demand is setting the pace. Eleven markets had 68,000, against 66,000 last week. Cattle trade was nominally steady on a light run, but trade in the sheep house was demoralized, owing to heavy receipts direct to packers from the Ohio River.

Report of Deterioration in Texas and Bullish Mill Takings Frighten Shorts.

NEW YORK, July 18.—Influenced by weak cables and a bearish report by Cordill concerning conditions in Southwest Texas, the cotton market opened easy to-day, and first prices were unchanged to 3 points lower than Thursday's final. There was some covering on the decline by board room traders who went short on continued dry weather in Texas. This class of buying caused prices to advance 1 to 7 points from the initial level, with the exception of July and August, which increased their decline 2 to 4 points.

After the call, however, the entire list steadied with prices firmly maintained at the early high point. The strength of the market was chiefly attributed to some private reports from Texas indicating some deterioration in the crop; also Habersham King's review for the week, saying the crop was favorable over 80 per cent of the area and unfavorable over 10 per cent and injurious as to the remaining 10 per cent. The circular was more bearish than bullish, but the local shorts covered.

During the late forenoon the market was quiet and featureless.

The talk around the floor to-day reflected a decidedly more cheerful feeling with reference to legislative prospects. The weather map was considered favorable.

At the close the market was very steady with new crop positions at a net gain of 11 to 12 points; August 5 and July unchanged from the final quotations of Thursday.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, July 18.—Liverpool is droopy in futures and spots, the latter being quoted 3 points lower; sales only 6,000 bales.

Some scattered showers occurred over night in the lower central States, and the Atlantic Coast districts had some good rains; generally fair weather prevailed elsewhere, with little change in the range of temperatures. Indications are more favorable for some precipitation in West Texas, while increasing cloudiness and scattered showers are indicated for the territory east of the Mississippi River.

Several private reports from Texas say that old holdings are showing up on platforms, but that holders are not yet selling, owing to New York promises of high July-August squeeze prices. In respect to the present anxiety in regard to dry weather in Texas; it will be found interesting to know that Government records show that last year Texas had practically no rain from June 29 to August 29, whereas this year, Texas had a fine general rainfall up to July 5.

First trades here were at a decline of 3 points, but advices from New York of large buying by McFadden brokers soon rallied the market to 11.53 for October. There was a rumor that Fall River had cotton ready for delivery in New York and that a block of cotton was being shipped from Memphis for delivery here, but neither rumor has been confirmed so far.

The market is very steady with an eye on the weather in the West.

MILLER-COTTER COTTON LETTER.

MEMPHIS, July 18.—Dry map seems responsible for the advance to-day. Central Texas reports no damage from drouth, but that rain is beginning to be needed, which seems sufficient in present limited market to cause small advance. Liverpool for the past two days was less active in spot sales and lower on futures, but American trade seems fearful that after so much good weather something is likely to happen.

Wool Beginning to Move More Freely

BOSTON, July 18.—New territory wools are beginning to move a little more freely both in and out of this market. Total sales the past week have been well over a million pounds, involving Territory and Texas wools, with a little California and foreign grades.

Fleeces remain very quiet, both here and in the country. Most of the Western buying is being done in Montana, where the bulk of the unsold Territory wool is now to be found. The London auction sales closed firm on fine wools and easy on crossbreeds. Indications are that England and the Continent are to have less active markets in the near future.

Until something more definite is known as to the terms of the new tariff bill when finally passed, no material improvement in sentiment or volume of sales is likely.

Receipts of wool in pounds for the week ended and including Wednesday were as follows:

	1913.	1912.
Domestic	9,751,818	11,515,366
Foreign	395,150	1,151,350
Totals	10,146,968	12,666,716

Total receipts of 10,146,968 pounds, compared with 5,473,847 the preceding week, of which 5,042,642 were domestic wools.

Receipts in pounds from and including January 1, 1913, as compared with the corresponding period in 1912, were as follows:

COTTON GOSSIP

Market dormant.

* * *

The volume of business transacted yesterday was perhaps the smallest of any day this year. Both elements are afraid to push their commitments in such a quiet market.

* * *

Boll weevil and the small stock of cotton is still discussed by the bulls.

* * *

Spot brokers are quoted with saying that the fear of a cotton tax is already diverting hedging business from this market to Liverpool.

* * *

Valdosta, Ga.: "Lowndes County has had good weather all along and crops are in the best condition they have ever been at this season of the year. Reports from some of the counties indicate that the drouth has done much damage to corn, but the cotton crop is in very good condition."

* * *

Texas City, Tex.: "Preparations are under way for the handling through Texas City next season of the largest movement of cotton the new port has ever enjoyed. It is conservatively estimated that in view of the large crop in prospect Texas City will handle in excess of 1,000,000 bales. This season to date 666,851 bales have been received and receipts to August 31, the end of the present cotton year, will probably bring the total near to 750,000 bales."

* * *

Taylor, Tex.: "With only a hundred or more bales of the 1912-1913 season's crop of cotton still remaining in the hands of producers of this section of Williamson County, the total local receipts of cotton at Taylor to date are 35,209 bales since the first day of last August. Ginners are overhauling their plants for the opening of the new season, beginning August 1. The first bales of the new crop are expected here about that time."

* * *

Reports to The Montgomery Advertiser last week indicated that as a whole the crop in Alabama looks well. Some sections report lack of rain. Where there has been rainfall, and there has been rain over the greater part of the State, cotton is reported in excellent condition, although the plant is reported late and much behind the growth expected for this time of the year.

* * *

NEW ORLEANS, July 18.—Hayward & Clark: The weather map shows generally fair, except cloudy in lower central belt, parts of Alabama, Atlantic Coast. Scattered showers in Alabama and Mississippi and some good rains in Atlantic Coast districts. No rain in west. Temperatures about normal. Indications are far more favorable to a break in the dry spell in the west over Sunday. Increasing cloudiness, with some showers over the central and eastern belt.

Fort Worth, Tex., wires: "Our San Antonio agency says, 'Boll weevil danger minimized by heat spell. Little actual damage done. Crop looks splendid. Movement starts August 1, unless rain interferes.'"

GENERAL BUYING PUTS STOCKS UP

Possibilities of Big Advance in Near Future on Crop Prospects Causes Buying.

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, July 18.—Canadian Pacific and New York, New Haven and Hartford were leaders of an upturn which involved a number of issues at the opening of the stock market to-day. Each scored a gain of 1⅞, although Canadian Pacific shaded at the end of half an hour.

Announcement of the resignation of President Mellen, of the New York, New Haven and Hartford, apparently imparted strength to the stock instead of detracting from it.

The Mexican situation and continued hostilities in the Balkans furnished the bears with ammunition and a considerable section of the list was lower.

Among the advances were Amalgamated Copper, ⅜; American Can, ½; Union Pacific, ⅜; Southern Pacific, ⅝; Reading, ⅞; Pennsylvania ⅜, and American Smelting ⅝. The losses include New York Central, ⅛; Lehigh Valley, ⅛; Chino Copper ⅛, and Great Northern preferred ⅛. United States Steel common was strong, opening at 54¾ for a gain of ¾. Half an hour after the opening the list was strong, and an unusually large number of buying orders being executed. Later there was some profit-taking.

California and Mexican Petroleum were weak. California Petroleum sustained a loss of 3½ on reports that the dividends would be interrupted. Mexican Petroleum lost 2½ on account of the uncertainty surrounding conditions in Mexico.

The curb was steady.

Americans in London were steady.

After the first fifteen minutes trading became similar to Thursday's dealings, most of the business being on the buying side.

Steel moved up more than 1 point and Southern Pacific rose 1 point to 93. Union Pacific, although the heaviest seller, lost its early gain of 1 point. Copper was up 1 point to 66⅞, and the same advances were recorded in Utah, Canadian Pacific and Lehigh Valley. California Petroleum experienced another decline, yielding 1¾ to 21¾. Call money loaned at 2¼.

The tone was steady in the last hour. A number of issues advanced over their noon level. California Petroleum held around 21¼ after being hammered by professionals. The bearish activity in this stock is regarded as a campaign on the part of the interested persons.

Union Pacific went to 148 for a net gain of 1⅞ on the day. Steel crossed 56. Amalgamated Copper was in active demand, selling around 67½ for a net gain of 1⅝.

The market closed firm. Governments unchanged; other bonds firm.

MODERN MILLER CROP REVIEW.

ST. LOUIS, July 18.—The winter wheat harvest is rapidly nearing completion under most favorable weather conditions. Reports of delayed harvesting are fewer than usual, and with the exception of occasional complaints of smut the quality of the wheat is practically perfect. The grain generally is of high order, not only as far as condition is concerned, but also in regard to flour-making qualities, the soft wheat especially yielding well. Fields in the hard wheat territory

CHICAGO, July 18.—A big export demand in wheat resulted in a reaction and an advance of nearly 1c from the bottom prices reached. Final gains for the day were ⅛c to ½c. Only fifteen boat loads were reported by the Atlantic seaboard.

St. Louis reported a re-sale there of 110,000 bushels by an exporter, but the particulars were not given. Shorts were the principal buyers as the day wore away and there was a noticeable sprinkling of investment buying as well. Clearances from the seaboard were 307,000 bushels. World's shipments will be 10,000,000 bushels for the week, which is 700,000 bushels smaller than a year ago. Clearances for the week, 3,600,000 bushels of wheat, against less than half that amount a year ago.

Corn closed with advances of ⅛c to ⅜c and oats were up ⅛c to ⅜c.

Provisions were 5c to 10c higher.

POULTRY, PET AND LIVE STOCK

Plan Now for Next Winter's Food Supply

By JUDGE F. J. MARSHALL.

If you are not already planning, I would advise you to begin now to get some of next winter's food supply for the chickens on the way. While few fowls are ever starved, there are a good many that do not get the good and wholesome variety that they are needing, especially in the cold months, when green stuff is rather scarce. Wheat, oats and corn make the bulk of the food supply for the average farm stock, and it is a good ration, if properly handled and heated up at times, such as parching the corn and browning the oats, etc., but it is the rough-and-ready foodstuff that we want to speak of. As I shall want to speak largely of the root crops, and they need to be kept in a cool place, I shall advise the use of a cellar. Throughout the Northern States, cellars are the rule, rather than the exceptions, under all houses built on the farms. These are usually divided into two compartments, one for the keeping of milk and the other for the storing of vegetables and root crops of various kinds. Upon large farms, where there is a lot of stock kept, the barn is often built upon a side hill with a cellar under a part of it for the storing of stock beets, cabbage and all kinds of vegetables that can be used for the stock in winter. These cellars keep them from freezing in winter and keep them cool in summer so they will not spoil. Of course, they are not put into the cellar until the latter part of the summer. Throughout the South these cellars are a novelty, as a rule. I wish they could become more common. Of course, it is not always practical to build them under the dwelling house after it is built, but one can fix up a very good one by using refuse stone, where it can be had, and digging into the side of a hill, walling with the stone, letting it set into the ground as much as possible to make it cooler; the door, or opening, to be on the low side of the cellar. All of it should be roofed with a good, double or lined roof, something that will keep out the great heat of the sun.

With a root cellar of this kind upon your place, you are in a position to take care of all kinds of good tubers and vegetables of various kinds that might otherwise go to waste and be of no benefit in any way. It is not too late to plant the large sugar or stock beets if the ground is well prepared; thoroughly fine and very deep, so that they can take right hold and grow without difficulty. Then there is the rutabaga turnip that will make a good crop late in the season, which is a good keeper as well as the heavy beet. Small heads of cabbage that are not marketable, when put into small hampers that will admit of a circulation of air, can be kept a long while in the cellar.

The short parts of clover or alfalfa, leaves, etc., should all be saved and stored in a dry place in the barn for the poultry in winter. A lot of large gunny sacks come in very handy for this work, as this stuff can be crowded into these sacks where they are easily handled and taken care of until wanted. With a good, rich piece of ground a nice crop of buckwheat can be raised, if planted right now; it matures quickly and makes a grain that the hens are very fond of late in the fall and winter when fed with corn. Plant a good variety of all the vegetable crops, for there are very few of them that the hens do not relish and are ready to take care of the surplus or refuse parts of them. Onions are another good crop, and one that will keep well in this root cellar, and they are a regular tonic for the hens in winter and are very much relished by them. Take care of every one of them. Let us wake up to the possibilities of these crops and the proper handling of them, as indicated. The taking care of these apparently insignificant things and turning them to account will be largely responsible for the per cent of profit that we will make from our poultry during the coming year. Others take advantage of these things to good account; why not you?

ON account of my health will sell for the bargain price of $4,250 my flour and lumber mills located at Dallas, Ga. This plant cost over $12,000 to build and is one of the best equipped and most complete and self-supporting plants in the South; equipped with four-stand Richmond City flouring system, two sets corn burrs, all in first-class condition, with plenty of warehouse room and as a custom mill it is almost without opposition. The planing mill is operated from same boilers, with separate engine. The planer house is 39x80 feet, two stories high, good room for cabinet workshop. On account of rapid decline in health I will sell this plant for $4,500, on easy terms; it is nicely located on Southern Railway sidetrack. Trestle for dumping coal at boiler. Shavings carried to boiler by exhaust fan. Address A. M. McMichem, Jr., Owner, Dallas, Ga. 7-17-5

Permit Is Sought For Whitehall Plant

C. H. Johnson Will Build Manufactory—Small Sales Recorded—Crowd Due at Realty Election.

Signs point to early activity on Whitehall street as a wholesale and manufacturing thoroughfare south of Trinity avenue. Application was made Friday to Building Inspector Ed R. Hays by C. H. Johnson to construct a two-story reinforced concrete building at No. 757 Whitehall, to cost $10,000. May & Wimbish are the contractors. The ground floor dimensions are 75 by 100 feet.

Builders who expected to put wholesale houses on lower Whitehall are holding up somewhat because of the Whitehall regrading project, but the manufacturers seeking railroad frontage farther south are going ahead.

Interesting Deed Given.

John W. White, administrator of the estate of Charles M. White, has given an administrator's deed to W. D. White on an undivided five-sixths interest in valuable property in Atlanta. The figure is $16,600, and for the same amount W. D. White has made a warranty deed to Mrs. J. C. Clay, T. A. and J. M. White, of DeKalb County, and John W. White, Harvey and Katie Baker, the first four of whom get a one-sixth interest each and the latter two one-twelfth each.

The properties consist of the following:

The southwest corner of Linden way and a 10-foot alley 160 feet west of Spring street, 42 1-2 by 93 feet; on Linden way 202 1-2 feet west of Spring street, 42 1-2 by 100; on Spruce street 100 south of Dixie avenue 100 by 195; the northeast corner of Bell and Greene streets, 37 1-2 by 97 1-2; George street 75 feet north of East Fair street, 67 1-2 by 80; Old Wheat street 63 1-2 east of North Boulevard, 33 by 99, and Nos. 20 and 22 Raspberry street, 50 by 70, between Bell and Fort streets.

Pine Street Purchase.

Pierre M. Bealer has sold to Ralph J. McGruder the northeast corner of East Pine and North Jackson streets, 70 by 125, for $6,000. Four thousand was cash. For value received the parcel has been transferred to W. E. Treadwell and S. W. Carson.

West North Avenue Sale.

H. B. Watkins and D. J. Gunter have bought from Charles H. Sanford No. 164 West North avenue, 45 by 163.42 feet west of McAfee street, for $5,000.

Fourteenth Street Transfer.

Deeds have gone to record in the sale May 15 of No. 278 East Fourteenth street to Dowse B. Donaldson from Marvin Conway for $5,000. The lot is 50 by 128 feet and 558 feet west of North Jackson street.

Building Delay Overcome.

Some months ago J. B. Thompson started excavating for three stores on Poplar street due north of the postoffice. Work was delayed, but now Mr. Thompson has been granted a permit to go ahead. The stores will cost $10,000.

Plans for Winnipeg Convention.

At the annual meeting of the Atlanta Real Estate Board Friday evening at 6:30 o'clock at the Cafe Durand some definite plans for attending the Winnipeg convention will be discussed. The convention of the National Association of Real Estate Exchanges will be held July 28, 29 and 30, and twelve members of the local board are expected to go.

Atlanta is to compete for a cup presented by the Chicago Board in a report which Charles P. Glover and others will present. The attending cities will prepare these reports and the winner will be the city making the best showing. The judges have been named to decide the contest.

Return postal cards indicate to the officers of the local board that there will be a large attendance at Friday's dinner, inasmuch as the selection of officers for the ensuing year will be made. Charles P. Glover, retiring president, is expected to come in for encomiums at the hands of his fellow board members. Mr. Glover has served the board faithfully, and the real estate men have not forgotten the happy speech he made at the recent annual banquet.

College Park's Activity.

Spurred on by the struggles and successes of the Decatur Board of Trade and similar organizations, the citizens of College Park have decided to organize a citizens' committee-of-the-whole and to adopt a name suitable to such an organization. In this connection $25 has been offered to the public for a slogan. Anybody in the world, says the secretary of the board, can win $25 by revealing the secret that lies in a name. Suggestions must be in by July 31, because the board wants to get busy in its booster operations.

College Park is a town of 2,700 population, having jumped from 450 in 1900. It is the home of Cox College for women and the Georgia Military Academy. There are three public schools, five churches and plenty of nice places for people to live.

Save Unfortunate Women and Protect Society

That a majority of unfortunate women can be saved and society protected at the same time has been demonstrated beyond the question of a doubt. Therefore, it is essential that a bill now pending in the Georgia Legislature, which has been favorably reported by the Prisons Committee, looking to the construction of a reformatory for vicious women, should become a law, and that the Appropriations Committee, to which the bill has been referred, should report favorably.

The bill calls for an appropriation of $75,000 for the construction and maintenance of the institution, which is small indeed when the welfare of society and the saving of women is taken into consideration.

An exhaustive investigation has been made in many States as to the cause of prostitution of women—low wages, insanitary conditions in factories and stores, etc., have been given as a cause in a great many instances, and a correction of these conditions has been announced as a preventive, which is well and good, but what to do with those we have already is a question that is attracting the attention of good citizens in every State in the Union.

This question has been solved to such an extent that three-fourths of the inmates of the Bedford Reformatory in New York have been saved, while only one-fourth have returned to the old life after a stay of two years in this reformatory.

This method of treating vice has proven so successful that those good men and women who have been giving of their time and money for the cause of fallen women are encouraged, and will continue the work until satisfactory results are obtained.

As to the work and results at Bedford Reformatory, Lyman Abbott writes as follows:

"When a prostitute is brought before a New York judge, he may discharge her, with or without a fine; he may send her to the workhouse for a short term—I believe three months is the maximum—or he may send her to the Bedford Reformatory. The experience of the past indicates that the deterrent power of fear is very ineffective as a cure for crime, yet something may be said for the deterrent power of fear as a preventive, if not as a cure. But a fine or three months in the workhouse has no deterrent power. When the fine is paid or the three months have expired, the girl has no option but to take to the street and resume her vicious career. No home and no factory will or indeed can take her in and give her a chance for a better life. This is just what the Bedford Reformatory does. It brings her into an atmosphere not merely of cleanliness and of industry, but of hopefulness. It puts before the girl an open door. It inspires her with courage to believe that she can enter it if she chooses to do so. It inspires that wish in her, and, by training, gives her some measure of preparation for earning an honest livelihood. While practically every girl treated by the other method goes back to prey upon the community again, the figures show that less than one-quarter of those who are discharged from the Reformatory after a two years' imprisonment resume their vicious occupation."

Is not the establishment of an institution in Georgia that has been proven a success in another State worth trying?

The time to act is NOW. The good women and men of Georgia are giving their time and money in the cause of the unfortunates. If only one-fourth of the women imprisoned there are saved, it is worth the price.

Georgia should REFORM criminals, NOT MAKE THEM.

The City

By Gordon Johnstone.

THERE'S a brave world I know called The Great Out-o'-Doors,
Where the wind and the wave lure our feet,
And the green o' the fields meets the wan, tired eyes
With the touch and the kiss o' a lost paradise;
Where the chickadee calls and the wild eagle soars,
And the lark trills his sweetest o' sweet;
But give me the city,
Its pain and its pity,
Its highways and byways o' heat.

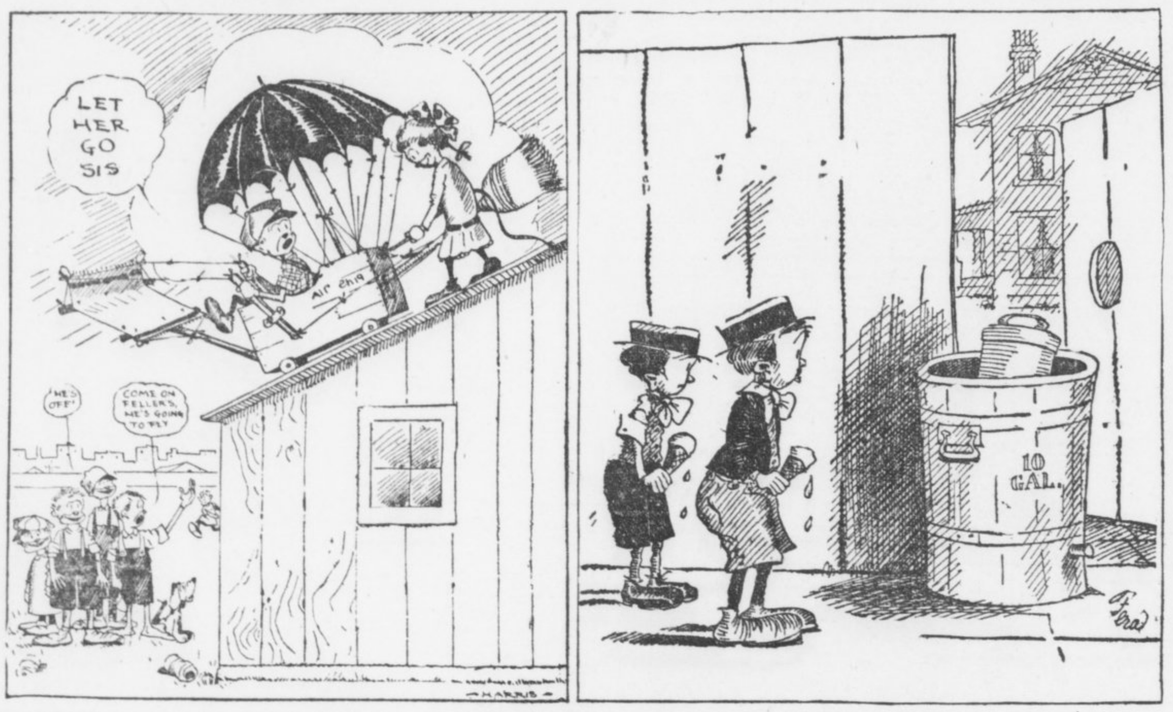
Oh, a man may live off on a hilltop alone,
Where the days are a-wing on a song,
But he'll never sound depths that are human and deep
By running away from the herd o' the sheep,
By shutting his heart to the tear and the groan
O' the lovable suffering throng.
So give me the city,
Its grief and its pity,
Its spendthrift, its weak and its strong.

Oh, here is the Kingdom of Fair Worlds to Be
When the peace-riders come silver-shod,
For there isn't a cavil, when all's said and done,
That the Maker in making MEANT ALL TO BE ONE,
As the streams of the nations that merge in one sea
And move at the wind o' His nod.
So hail the World-City,
Its pride and its pity,
That's built on the high road o' God.

The Grasshopper and the Ant

The grasshopper, you know, sings all Summer while the ant toils away laying up a store for the Winter. When the cold pinches, the grasshopper thinks the ant lucky to have plenty of provisions. But a man should know better than to think that it's luck that keeps one in a good job.

The Young Aviator---And the Young Paupers



EDMUND BURKE

By Rev. Thomas B. Gregory

WHEN Edmund Burke died, one hundred and sixteen years ago, July 9, 1797, one of the greatest intellects and finest spirits of which the English-speaking world could boast passed out from the ways of men.

Old Dr. Sam Johnson said: "Burke is such a man that if you met him for the first time in the street, where you were stopped by a drove of oxen, and you and he stepped aside to take shelter but for five minutes, he'd talk to you in such a manner that when you parted you would say, 'This is an extraordinary man.'" When the old doctor was asked for his opinion regarding the authorship of the Letters of Junius, he declared that if Burke was not the author of the famous letters he could not guess who might be, since Burke was the only man then living in England who had the genius to write them.

Edmund Burke has often been called a paradox, a contradiction. A conservative of the Conservatives, he was at the same time an ardent progressive. A stanch champion of the ancient order, he was one of the greatest friends of the American revolt against King George. To add to the puzzling situation, while he said Godspeed to the American uprising, he emptied upon the heads of the French revolutionists the vials of his hottest wrath.

The explanation is not far to seek. Burke's ruling passion was for the thing known in these days as "Due Process of Law." Orderliness, in a word. In the American Revolution he saw nothing contrary to that idea; while the French Revolution, as it impressed Burke, was the very apotheosis of anarchy and chaos.

Parental Obligation

Primitive Habit of Looking on Father as Domestic Commissary Is Entirely Wrong--His Qualities and Teachings Necessary to Raise Male Child to Ideal Manhood.

Written For The Georgian

By the Rev. Dr. C. H. Parkhurst

WHAT is the extent of the parental obligation which a father owes to his children? The question deserves consideration because of its close bearing upon the purpose of domestic life, which is to produce children and make them serviceable to the interests of their times.

It has been pointed out that the terms "father" and "feeder" are but variable forms of one and the same word. So understood, the father is merely the one who provisions the family and stands to it in the relation of commissary.

In the more primitive forms of familyhood, when increasing the human breed, rather than improving it, met all recognized requirements, nothing more would naturally be demanded of the father than that the young of the family, like the young of the flock and herd, should be amply supplied with what will sustain life and promote growth. So that the faithful father would simply be he who was the attentive feeder, with no responsibility that looked beyond what the children needed as young and growing animals.

It is one of the features of more finished civilization that in some respects it continues to cherish customs and modes of thinking and feeling inherent in civilization of a more primitive type, but which we should suppose would have been outgrown and left behind with the process of time and the broadening and mellowing of sentiment.

Father as Commissary.

We have an example of this in the rather general continuance to the present time of the primitive habit of looking upon the father as the domestic commissary, and of considering that the obligations with which he has been especially charged have been fulfilled when his children have had furnished them all that is required by their creature necessities—housing, clothing and food.

He is reckoned a dutiful father if he keeps up the house and leaves it to the mother and her proxies to furnish education, morals, religion and all the finer accessories; he to take care of the child as an animal, and she to look after him as a person.

Without raising the question as to whether exclusive maternal influence will suffice for the successful upbringing of a family of girls, it is distinctly insufficient for the development of young masculine nature. There is a certain personal quality inherent in the normal man—but of which the normal woman is destitute—and without which no male child can become a perfectly constituted man; so that if he be submitted exclusively to maternal treatment, he has small chance of achieving an ideal manhood.

Of course, there are mannish women—a species of human freak with which our generation is being made painfully familiar—but freaks play no part in the economy of nature. Mannishness is a cheap counterfeit of manliness and can not render to the boy the office of masculine genuineness.

There is a certain special type of robustness and stability which the lad will gain by social contact with the father which only in rare instances will he acquire from his mother; and the unfortunate feature of our family life at present is that the father, as a rule, is so engaged and engrossed with what lies outside of the real inner life of the home that contact between father and son is reduced to a minimum.

Twofoldness of Parentage.

The twofoldness of parentage answers to the twin energies in nature by which its sterner and gentler forces combine with each other in the production of the finest forms of vegetable and animal life. The idea of duality runs through everything.

Everywhere there is the balancing and the co-operation of complementary forces.

The mother makes her contribution to the developing character of the child, a contribution full of wealth and tenderness, without which the lad, as he comes into mature years, would be destitute of charm and incapable of the finest effects of personality. But underneath the maternally conferred graces of character, and sustaining them, there requires to be a foundation made out of sterner stuff, exactly as the tree is unable to achieve the purposes of its existence by virtue of the foliage with which it is clad or the blossoms by which it is decorated except by the solidity of its anchorage in the firm soil in which it is planted.

Family life as it is maintained in these hurried days of business engrossment is such that fathers and their boys, in hosts of cases, hardly know each other.

The withholding of paternal influence is bound to leave its mark in the one-sided development of the boy; and it does leave its mark.

Masculine Impress Necessary.

The young fellow, as he leaves the warm home nest, commits himself to flight that lacks the sustaining power which can be secured only by the impress upon him of what is definitely and distinctly masculine.

It lies in the order of nature; beauty combined with stamina, grace married into grit.

We might go on and say that boyhood, and therefore manhood is suffering from the fact that so much of our schoolroom training is furnished by women; but that would carry us into too wide a field.

In all the serious matters of life our only safe way is to keep close to the intentions of nature. The character of the individual depends upon it and so does the quality of civilization.

MEN UNDER SCRUTINY

By THOMAS TAPPER

WHEN the wag of a Western town mailed a letter to the ten principal citizens, saying, "All is discovered," the Ten immediately disappeared and no questions asked.

More men are being watched than ever dream of it.

Not an alarming situation, either, but a hopeful one.

An employer with a grain of common sense wants to intrust his business to capable men and women. In many cases even boys and girls are included.

As no man can run a big business alone, he is forced to find those who can help him.

Necessarily they all come to be tried upon these counts:

1. Loyalty.
2. Dependability.
3. Capacity.

The last, Capacity, shows itself at once. The first morning's work makes it evident that the worker equals 100 per cent of his job or less.

But the other two, Loyalty and Dependability, are NOT to be decided upon the first day or even the first YEAR.

IT TAKES TIME to try out a man's inner character. He must be left alone to the environment and the job until they have put all sorts of tests upon him.

Then someone begins to notice and say: "Well, this man stands the strain all right. When he speaks, he speaks for us; when we want him, he is where he should be."

"If this is the case," says the head of the business, "give him a chance.

"Try him out on something hard to do.

"See if he will weaken when it is put up to him good and strong."

And so on.

So they keep after him, watching his Loyalty and Dependability. Testing it as if it were a steel beam, to find if there be a weak spot in it.

By and by someone says: "This man rings true every time you strike him."

"In that case," the Boss says: "MAKE HIM ONE OF US."
