U. S. ORDERS MEXICO TO ATONE

Presents Drastic Demand That Federals Who Shot American Official Be Punished.

WASHINGTON, July 28.—Ambassador Wilson's impending conference with President Wilson is overshadowed by America's demand for speedy punishment of the Federal soldiers who shot Charles B. Dixon, an American immigration officer at Juarez, and the immediate release of Charles Bissell and Bernard McDonald, who were arrested by Federals and thrown in jail at Chihuahua City for attempting to carry refugees from Parral.

Bissell and McDonald are said to be in danger of execution.

The American demands were couched in language more mandatory and drastic than any used by the United States Government since the beginning of President Wilson's administration. It is believed any other action by the Mexican Government except unconditional compliance will be considered an affront to the United States, which may lead to strong-arm measures.

Ambassador Wilson himself was so exorcised over the situation that he dictated telegrams to the American Embassy at Mexico City and the American Consul at Juarez. He declined to comment on his messages, except to say he was still working for a continuation of the friendly relations between the two governments.

The President and the Ambassador will confer at 2:30 o'clock.

Urges Bathing Skirts For 'Unshapely' Men

CHICAGO, July 28.—A legal fight was started to-day by Dr. Rosalie M. Ladova, who was arrested at a park bathing beach because she appeared in a Sunday afternoon crowd of swimmers in bloomers.

"Women can not swim well in skirts," said Dr. Ladova to-day. "Their figures are rounded so that they do not need as thoroughly covering as men. Men bathers go about almost naked. Their hideous figures should be covered from their necks to their toes. They should be compelled to wear the skirts."

Dead Rat Revived By Electric Current

LYNN, MASS., July 28.—Dr. G. Warren Eastman and John Van Sciver, a medical student, in experimenting to solve the problem of life brought a rat back to life with a high frequency current of 60,000 volts after its heart had been still for 180 seconds.

The rat had remained immersed in a pail of water five minutes when its body was removed and medical tests showed no spark of life. Returning life was noticed after its body had been in contact with the electric current just 60 seconds. It lived for 40 hours.

Appendix All Alone In London, Said Jack

SAN FRANCISCO, July 28.—Here is the latest joke Jack London, the famous author, is telling on himself:

London was operated on recently for appendicitis. After the ordeal the surgeon held up the severed appendix in his fingers for the patient to see. The author looked at it thoughtfully, then grinned and said:

"It was a case of all alone in London, wasn't it, doc?"

SHOT AT WIFE AND KILLED OFFICER

Reward Offered for Clem Poole, Slayer of Dalton Policeman. Posse Loses Trail.

DALTON, July 28.—At an early hour this morning the posse organized to hunt down Clem Poole, who near midnight shot and killed Policeman Harry Cook while the officer was attempting to arrest him, disbanded, the search being fruitless.

Poole last night shot twice at his wife as he followed her to the home of her parents on First avenue. There Policeman Cook met him. As the officer advanced, Poole fired, the bullet piercing the policeman's heart and bringing instant death. Henry Mitchell, accompanying the officer, grabbed the weapon from Poole, but he escaped. Bloodhounds trailed the fugitive for a time and then lost the scent.

The murder has greatly aroused Dalton, for Policeman Cook was a popular member of the force. He is survived by his wife. A reward of $100 has been offered by the city for Poole's capture.

PANKHURST GIRL LEADS WILD MOB

Several Policemen Are Injured in Battle With Militants Storming Asquith's Home.

Special Cable to The Georgian.

LONDON, July 28.—Twenty-four men and women to-day were fined or ordered to furnish bonds to keep the peace as the result of the riots of yesterday, when Sylvia Pankhurst, the daughter of the militant leader, led a mob to storm Premier Asquith's house.

A huge crowd followed in the wake of the suffragettes as they began the march to the Premier's house, but the police, aided by motor busses, blocked the way of the on-rushing mob.

In the fight that followed, several officers were injured, but the police dispersed the mob, after arresting the militant leader's daughter and some of her followers.

The police had been searching for Sylvia as her release license under the "cat-and-mouse" act had expired. She was removed to Halloway jail to continue her sentence for inciting to riot. Before being taken to jail Miss Pankhurst promised to lead a greater uprising than ever before upon her release.

Mrs. Pethick Lawrence, Lady Sybil Smith and Miss Evelyn Sharpe, who were sentenced to Halloway jail for rioting during the recent suffragette demonstration were released today. They had gone on a hunger strike immediately after being taken to jail.

Clarence H. Mackey Sued for $2,000,000

NEW YORK, July 28.—That Clarence H. Mackay, to keep up the pace of a millionaire's son, borrowed heavily in Wall Street and failed to pay back after he had inherited $40,000,000 from the estate of his father, is charged in a suit brought by W. L. Stow, a broker, for an accounting of more than $2,000,000.

The plaintiff was at the head of the firm of W. L. Stow & Co., which failed for $6,000,000 some years ago. He charges that Mr. Mackay is directly responsible for that failure by failing to meet obligations contracted in a pool organized to buy and control stocks and bonds of the Mexican Central Railway.

DUNBAR IS QUIET AFTER LYNCHING

MACON, July 28.—Reports from Dunbar, 15 miles south of here, where John Sake, a negro burglar, was lynched late Sunday night, indicate that everything is quiet following the excitement. The mob dispersed immediately after the lynching and not a clew remains for the officers of the law to work on.

The lynching followed the shooting of J. F. Hammock, a Dunbar merchant, who caught Shake in his store Saturday night. The negro loaded his shotgun while in the store and fired two charges into the body of Mr. Hammock. The wounded merchant was rushed to Macon, where he lies in a precarious condition.

Immediately following the shooting a posse of more than 100 citizens gathered and pursued the negro. Bloodhounds tracked Shake into a swamp near Weliston, about 15 miles from the scene of the crime. Members of the posse were forced to wade into the water, where they found the negro submerged up to his neck.

Dragging him out, members of the posse rushed the negro in an automobile back to the scene of the crime, where they strung him up to a pole and literally riddled his body with bullets.

DR. STARNES ENDS STAY IN ATLANTA

One-third of the seats in the Auditorium were filled Sunday afternoon for the farewell concert given by Dr. Percy Starnes and Mrs. Starnes.

A program in which Mozart's "Magic Flute" predominated, and which contained two compositions by the organist himself, was well received. The overture to Wagner's "Tannhauser," which was to have been the final number, was omitted because the organ got out of order. In its place, Dr. Starnes made a little speech of farewell. He said he would take away with him the pleasant recollection that his Atlanta audiences have been uniformly attentive and cordial.

Dr. Starnes' two compositions were "Improvisations Upon a Scotch Melody," the air being "Auld Lang Syne," and a song, "A Lake and a Fairy Boat," which Mrs. Starnes sang. Passages in the improvisations were particularly happy. The song was well wedded to Hood's fanciful poem.

Mrs. Starnes was best in an aria from the "Magic Flute," similar to the "Bell Song" in "Lakme," although she sang parts of "A'for'se lui" from Verdi's "La Traviata" very well.

The overture to the "Magic Flute" opened the recital. Gabriel-Marie's simple little "La Cinquaintaine" completed the program.

DRAWING OF JURY BEGUN; WIFE OF ACCUSED AT HIS SIDE; COURTROOM PACKED

Three months and a day after the body of little Mary Phagan was found in the cavernous depths of the National Pencil Factory, the trial of Leo M. Frank, accused of her murder, began before Judge L. S. Roan in the Criminal Court of Georgia with a packed courtroom and a deeply stirred city almost breathlessly awaiting the outcome.

There was a straining of necks as the young factory superintendent, calm, cool and collected, in the face of the terrible ordeal confronting him, was brought into the courtroom on the first floor of the old City Hall building to take his seat with his counsel.

Solicitor General Hugh Dorsey, chief of the prosecution, declared himself ready weeks ago and there was little time lost in beginning what promises to be the greatest legal battle over a man's life in the history of the South. Frank Hooper sat at the Solicitor's side.

Deputy Plennie Minor called the court to order at 9 o'clock. He called the roll of the jury for the first panel of twelve men.

J. H. Jones, deputy clerk, called the names. F. W. Stone, No. 82 East Linden street, was excused on account of illness. R. S. Shedden was refused on an excuse on military exemption. Only one man was excused from the first twelve men.

Mrs. Frank arrived at the courthouse shortly after the trial started, being summoned by a telephone call from Julian Boehm, a friend of the family.

Defense Not to Ask Delay.

Luther Z. Rosser, of counsel for the defense, stated to a Georgian reporter as he left his office for the scene of the trial that he defense would make no move for delay.

"We will not seek a change of venue or make any move of any kind to delay justice for our client," he said. "We are entirely confident that justice and truth will prevail, as it always must."

Reuben R. Arnold, of the defense, made the same kind of a statement.

"We will announce ready as soon as the case is called," he said.

One important witness for the defense was reported to be missing. He is a traveling salesman, and the defense was said to be confident of locating him.

Sentell in Navy Now.

Edgar L. Sentell, who testified that he saw Arthur Mullinax and Mary Phagan together at midnight of the day of the crime, has enlisted in the navy and will not be able to appear at the trial.

A great crowd gathered in front of the courthouse as the hour of the trial drew near, and when 9 o'clock arrived, Pryor street at Hunter was almost impassable. The corridors of the courthouse were a mass of humanity, through which a lane had to be cut by deputies to allow the passage of witnesses and lawyers and newspaper men.

The crowd was tense with curiosity, but to all appearances inclined to be orderly and apparently was moved only by the commonest of human motives—curiosity.

Frank Feeling Fine, He Says.

Frank was escorted from the Tower to the courthouse shortly after 6 o'clock in the morning, nearly three hours before the trial was scheduled to begin. This was done to avoid the curious crowd which it was expected would be about the courthouse and thronging the corridors at 9 o'clock.

Frank was up and dressed and freshly shaven when Deputy Sheriff Plennie Miner appeared before his cell at the early hour.

"How are you feeling this morning, Mr. Frank?" the deputy inquired.

"Tip top, only I'm mighty hungry," replied Frank.

Exhibiting the same poised confidence that has characterized him through three months since he was locked in a cell in the county jail, the young factory superintendent chatted freely with Miner on the way to the courthouse.

Sure He Will Be Freed.

He was attired in a natty light gray mohair suit and wore a fancy gray tie. His face was fuller and he appeared slightly heavier than when he was arrested shortly after the murder of the Phagan girl. He seemed cheerful and in the best of health.

"I am very sure of acquittal," he said, as he arrived at the courthouse. "I am glad that the trial is about to begin after this long wait. I have no fear of the outcome. I am not only innocent of the terrible crime, but I am innocent of any knowledge of it, save as the information had come to me since the officers came to my house that morning three months ago."

At this moment E. C. Essenbach, a relative of Frank, appeared with a tempting breakfast which was spread in the prisoners' room at the courthouse. Frank gave ocular proof that his appetite had not suffered from his long confinement as he proceeded to make way with the delicacies prepared for him.

Frank greeted his relative cheerfully and conversed with him for more than an hour. The topic seldom was on the crime or the trial which was about to begin. Long before the time set for the judge to take the bench other friends and relatives of the prisoner had appeared and some of them were permitted to talk to him.

Conley Ready For the Stand.

Jim Conley, Frank's accuser, was made ready for the trial early in the morning, although it was not probable that he would be called during the day.

He was given a shave and a new suit of clothes, as he had worn for the last three months the same shabby garments that he had on at the time he was arrested while washing a shirt at the National Pencil Factory.

Conley said that he was ready to go on the witness stand at an instant's notice. He declared that he would stick to the same story that he told in his last affidavit and which he has since repeated many times for the benefit of Solicitor Dorsey.

"If they had just let me face Mr. Frank, I could have made him tell the truth long before this," he asserted.

Less than half a hundred persons were waiting about the courthouse at 8 o'clock, an hour before the time set for the beginning of the trial. It was thought that not a large crowd would be clamoring for admission to the courtroom as it had become quite generally known that the small room would accommodate hardly more than the witnesses and the veniremen and that it would be necessary to exclude practically all spectators.

Much Preparation Made.

For no trial in the history of Georgia have such elaborate arrangements been made for the comfort of the comparatively small number of spectators who will gain admission, the attorneys who will handle the case, the jury and the newspaper men. Deputy Sheriff Plennie Miner has received much praise for the splendid preparations made.

Electric fans have been installed at every window and on the railing separating the spectators' seats from the bar, ozonators have been placed to keep the air purified. It probably will be the coolest and best ventilated place in Atlanta.

Not more than 250 spectators will be admitted. Approximately that number of chairs have been placed outside the inclosure. When they are filled the doors will be closed and no one else will be allowed in. No one will be permitted to occupy standing room.

The usual custom of permitting

CHOOSING OF JURY WILL BRING ON A BITTER FIGHT

FRANK TAKEN EARLY IN DAY TO COURTHOUSE; 'I FEEL FINE,' HE DECLARES

disinterested attorneys to occupy seats inside the bar will not be followed, and this particular part of the courtroom will be less crowded than during the average criminal trial.

How They Will Line Up.

Prosecuting Attorney Dorsey and at least five assistants will occupy a table directly in front of the bench and witness stand with the jury box close on the righthand side. Attorney Rosser with his assistants and the accused will be seated at a table to the left of the State's and farther away from the jury. The table for newspaper men is back of the State's table. The arrangements were agreed upon by the attorneys and the judge.

The table for the defense was selected by Attorney Rosser with a view to the number of persons who would wish to be near Frank during the trial. Seats have been arranged to the back of the table to accommodate at least 30 persons, friends and relatives of the accused, who have visited him constantly since he was confined at the Tower.

Deputy Sheriff Plennie Miner, who will have charge of the crowd and keeping order in court, will also have charge of the prisoners. Long before any crowd congregated around the courthouse Frank and Lee were brought from the Tower and placed in the room reserved for them. When court opened Frank took his place at the table reserved for his attorneys.

No Room For Spectators Now.

For the first day of the trial, or until the jury is selected and the hearing actually under way, it is extremely doubtful if any spectator will gain admission to the court. Seating arrangements have only been provided for about 250. The venire of 144 men will have to occupy that number of the seats when court is opened. The witnesses for the two sides will occupy the remaining seats and standing room until they are disposed of in some way, which may not be until after the jury is drawn.

The court rule to segregate the witnesses will, of course, be enforced, but it may not be until twelve men have qualified as jurors, which will hardly be before the middle of the week.

When the witnesses are segregated they will be kept in the large courtroom on the floor above the trial room. A bailiff will be placed in the hall and one on the door of the witness chamber, and as the names are called they will be brought from the floor above to the court.

It is probable some rule will be made to keep the witnesses for the State and the defense separated, in which event the third floor of the building would have to be used.

Jury Room Carefully Selected.

But if any great difficulty is anticipated in drawing a jury, and the judge thinks it impossible to finish this task during any one day, he will probably excuse the witnesses until the next day, and continue to do so until the jury is impaneled.

The jury room was selected with a great deal of care. It is almost inaccessible from the outside and large and airy. Its windows are about twenty feet above an alleyway that runs on either side. Deputies will be kept in the alley to keep anyone from getting this close to the room.

As each juror qualifies he will be escorted to the room and kept there until the full panel is drawn. Recess will be taken at 1 o'clock in the afternoon and the jury will be taken to luncheon at a restaurant almost directly across the street from the court. At night it will be quartered at the Kimball House under a heavy guard of deputies.

From the time a juror is acceptable to both sides until the conclusion of the case he will not be allowed to go to his home or communicate with anyone except a fellow juror.

The least of the deputies' troubles will not be in handling the crowd that will gain admission to the court, but in handling the crowd that will daily congregate on the outside and wait through the day for news of the proceedings in the trial. Ten deputies and as many members of the county police will be on duty on the streets around the building.

Trial to Surpass in Interest Any in Fulton County History

No murder tiral in Fulton County ever has approached the spectacular interest which is in prospect in the Frank case from the first, sharp skirmish between the opposing attorneys, through the long, bitter legal battle, and to the final pleas of the prosecution and the defense.

The presence of Luther Z. Rosser and Reuben R. Arnold in the brilliant array of legal talent at once made certain that the trial would be out of the ordinary. Neither has the reputation of making a half-hearted fight when there is anything at stake. This time it is a man's life that is depending upon their legal ability, their shrewdness and their eloquence.

Both have a disconcerting habit of carrying the fight to their opponents. In ring parlance, they do not give their courtroom rivals a chance to "get set." This is going to keep the spectators constantly on the edge of expectation, and will furnish a series of exciting incidents that will give the Frank trial a place by itself in the criminal annals of Georgia.

Crisis When Conley Is Grilled.

To describe Rosser's tactics as aggressive is expressing it euphemistically. If he were only aggressive, his name would not inspire the trepidation that now is felt by persons who have to face him in the witness box or by young lawyers who have to pit their strength against him.

Rosser and Arnold are at their best when they are cross-examining the witnesses called by the other side. This fact is expected to bring about the most thrilling situation of the entire trial in the witness box grilling of the negro Jim Conley. Not satisfied with seeking to prove the entire innocence of their client, the two lawyers propose to show that Conley himself is the man who attacked Mary Phagan in the National Pencil Factory and flung her dead body upon the trash heap in the basement.

From whom are they to get testimony of this startling nature?

Certainly from no one else than the negro, and from him they intend to get it. It is a bold plan, but one characteristic of the two-handed fighting methods of Rosser. Anyone who has seen a witness made the object of Rosser's attack knows that Jim Conley is in for a bad day when he is called to the stand to testify that Leo Frank had him assist in the disposal of Mary Phagan's body.

Chance Seen for Confession.

Only a Rosser would have the courage of his convictions to expect to break down the negro after he repeatedly had told the remarkable story of finding the girl's dead body on the second floor of the pencil factory and carrying her, at Frank's direction and with Frank's assistance, down the elevator into the basement.

Rosser's plan opens up the dramatic possibility of a courtroom confession from Conley. In the opinion of those who are convinced of Frank's innocence and the negro's guilt, it would not be a matter of great surprise if Conley, under the fire of questions directed at him by Rosser and Arnold, should collapse and confess he alone was concerned in the crime.

The cross-examination of Conley is certain to be one of the spectacular features of the trial. His vivid tale, under the lead of questions by Solicitor Dorsey and Attorney Frank A. Hooper, will be repeated to the courtroom full of spectators. It will lose none of its dramatic elements, in that its essential features already are well known to the public. They are waiting to hear it first hand from the negro's lips.

Raked Up His Past Life.

Then Conley will be turned over to the scarcely tender mercies of counsel for Frank. He probably will be on the rack for hours. Whether he will be able to stand the ordeal is problematical. No point in his history that could have any possible bearing on the case will be overlooked. The defense is in possession of a mass of information relating to Conley's conduct for years. He will be asked in regard to every one of these circumstances.

Before the events of the day of the tragedy are reached the negro will have undergone a searching examination of significant incidents in his past life. Then his story of his part in the crime will be attacked. The discrepancies will be brought out in the glare of the cross-examination. The falsehoods that he told for days after he was arrested will be resurrected. All of his affidavits will be ridiculed. The two attorneys will join in an effort to break down and utterly to discredit the story to which he now sticks. Whether or not they are successful, their attempt will be a dramatic feature of the trial.

A fight, scarcely less spectacular, will develop over the story of William H. Mincey. This time the attorneys for the prosecution will be in the role of scoffers. Mincey has declared that he heard Conley boasting of killing a girl.

Mincey, a quiet—almost diffident—type of the country pedagogue, will be made the target for the Solicitor's and Attorney Hooper's fire of questions. They will seek to show that Mincey never saw Conley the afternoon of April 26, when Mincey asserted he had the conversation with the negro.

Climax When Frank Is Called.

A hot fight also will be precipitated by the demand of the defense that the State make known the identity, at the beginning of the trial, of all the witnesses against Frank. Solicitor Dorsey has said that he will fight any demand of this sort.

The subpenas duces tecum issued by the defense will form another casus belli that is expected to provide a spirited skirmish between the attorneys at the beginning of the trial. The defense insists on having in court, for the purpose of comparison, all of the affidavits taken from Jim Conley, Newt Lee, Monteen Stover, W. M. Matthews and others. Dorsey declares this is a flimsy trick to discredit the State's witnesses, and proposes to resist to the extent of his ability any move to compel him to comply with the demand.

Leo Frank probably will take the stand in his own defense. It is regarded as not at all unlikely that Attorney Rosser will turn him over to the prosecution and give them the permission to question him as far as they like. If this be done, the trial, already invested with a host of dramatic possibilities, will reach its climax in interest.

Phagan Case of Peculiar And Enthralling Interest

As Leo Frank faces to-day the ordeal decreed by law that for man's life, man's life shall pay, interest in his case that has held Atlanta, Georgia and the South enthralled for three months has diminished not a whit since the Sunday morning the body of the little factory girl was found.

Wise judges of news, men who are paid thousands of dollars each year for their knowledge of the fickleness of the public, men who can time to the second the period when interest dies in one thing before the public eye to be born anew in another, have for years contended that no single item of news can sustain its interest longer than one brief week.

And yet for three months the public has read of Mary Phagan's death and the quest for her slayer and their demand for this news has been insatiable.

That the vaunted insight of these news experts is as shallow as the mirror reflection of a beauty of the stage is the thought that common logic first presents.

The insight of these experts has not been at fault. On the contrary, it has been sustained. For in the mystery veiling the death of Mary Phagan and the trial of Leo Frank as her slayer, a more varied array of things that interest, thrill, horrify, shock and make men think is presented than in any one case developed since typesetting machines made the modern newspaper possible.

Harry Thaw's case comes to mind, that tragedy of romance that presented in the same cast of characters the brilliant Lothario, the man of millions, and a woman as fair as the dawn. But there was never the element of mystery in the slaying of Stanford White. District Attorney Jerome described it pretty well as a commonplace tragedy of the tenderloin.

The only question that confronted the public was whether there was a law decreed by God that a man should take up arms and avenge his family honor that should nullify the law made by man that decreed that the courts of the country and the judgment of heaven could alone mete out reparation for personal injury.

But in the Phagan case, there is a mystery so deep, so impenetrable, that there are thousands in Atlanta who believe that Mary Phagan's slayer walks about to-day a free man as another battles for his life accused of his crime.

Victim Only a Child.

There was mystery in the famous case of Henry Clay Beattie, the Virginia aristocrat, who met death in the electric chair for slaying his wife after his infatuation for Beulah Binford.

But again, we have a feature of the Phagan case which was missing in the Beattie tragedy that makes the Atlanta mystery as grippingly pitiful as the Virginia problem was sordid.

For in the Phagan case a child is one of the principals. All the world may love a lover, but all the world loves a child more. And when the innocent, wistful, appealing face of the little factory girl first appeared in the public prints more heartstrings were touched than there were thrills caused in all the sinister revelations of the Virginia trial.

The child interest has made many a case appeal to the public interest more than struggles of statesmen, ravages of nature, or even the love of man for woman. The entire United States waited breathlessly for news of the capture of the kidnapers of little Billy Whitla, the sturdy Pennsylvania lad, in 1909.

But when the kidnapers were taken and Billy Whitla returned safe and sound and maybe a little happier from his thrilling experience to the home of his parents, the public forgot all about little Billy and to-day, in four short years, there are few who remember his case at all. For Billy Whitla lived. Mary Phagan died.

Lamana Case Was Absorbing.

In 1907 the hearts of every mother and father in the Southland bled for the wealthy father and mother of the little Lamana boy, who was taken from their New Orleans home by members of the Crescent City Mafia. Interest was intense at every period of the search and public sentiment was kindled near to the blazing point when the beheaded body of the boy was found in a Louisiana swamp.

But as thrilling as was the Lamana case, it did not have that quality that is so essential to make a case universally absorbing. The Lamanas were foreigners, the kidnapers were foreigners. And Americans want an American in their news stories.

Wife Swallows 100 Grains of Bichloride

ST. LOUIS, July 28.—Physicians to-day said there was no chance of recovery for Mrs. Carrie Dubois, 21, who swallowed 100 grains of bichloride of mercury.

She attempted suicide because her husband refused to allow her to accompany him on a picnic trip, which was a stag affair.

Work of Choosing Jurymen Is Likely To Be Difficult

In the selection of the twelve men to comprise the jury which will try Leo M. Frank for the murder of Mary Phagan, one of the bitterest contests of the great legal battle which begins Monday is anticipated.

That counsel for both the defense and State will probe deep into the character of each of the men drawn from the venire of 144 who take the stand for examination for jury service in this case is certain. The attorneys will endeavor to unearth in the character of the prospective juryman such traits as they may believe favorable or unfavorable to their case.

The slightest objection will be used to disqualify the man from becoming a member of the deciding tribunal. Under the cross-examination of such skilled lawyers as those who will appear in the Phagan case no iota of information which will tend to sway the verdict will remain concealed to be carried into the jury box and fight against the delivery of justice.

Every man of the twelve who will be chosen will be as an open book to the counsel of both sides. Not only will his mentality be shrewdly gauged with respect to the evidence to be presented, but his past life will be searched for a flaw in the man's make-up which may prove a weak link in governing his decisions.

Difficulty Expected.

In view of the widespread discussion which the lengthy investigation of the murder has aroused throughout Fulton County, great difficulty is expected in securing men of unbiased minds.

Probably the first question to be asked each venireman when he takes the stand, after being sworn, will be:

"Have you formed and expressed any opinion in regard to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner at the bar?"

The negative answer to this question will but begin the examination of the prospective juryman. Since the crime of which the pencil factory superintendent is accused is punishable by death, the next question in importance, especially to the prosecution will be:

"Are you conscientiously opposed to capital punishment?"

By an affirmative answer to either of the two questions above, the venireman undoubtedly will be disqualified from jury duty.

Owing to the vast importance of the Frank trial, given impetus by its wide publicity, the great weight which will necessarily be assumed with jury service will not be looked favorably upon by most men, it is declared, and the ease with which by one answer this duty can be avoided, much difficulty is anticipated in securing the twelve men.

Each Minutely Examined.

Upon each man, however, who passes satisfactorily the two challenging questions of opinion and capital punishment, the opposing counsel will center their fire of penetrating questions.

Taken from the criminal code of Georgia, the following questions and provisions will govern the questioning in the witness chair of the prospective juryman:

"Have you, from having seen the crime committed, or having heard any of the testimony delivered on oath, formed and expressed any opinion in regard to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner at the bar?".

"Have you any prejudice or bias resting on your mind either for or against the prisoner at the bar?"

"Is your mind perfectly impartial between the State and the accused?"

If he shall answer these questions satisfactorily, he shall be adjudged and held a competent juror in all cases where the offense does not involve the life of the accused, but when it does, the following additional question shall be put to him:

"Are you conscientiously opposed to capital punishment?"

Judge's Word Final.

If he shall answer this question in the negative, he shall be held a competent juror, provided, nevertheless, that either the State or the defendant shall have the right to introduce evidence before the judge to show that the answers, or any of them, are untrue; and it shall be the duty of the judge to determine upon the truth of such answers as may be thus questioned before the court.

If a juror shall answer any of these questions so as to render him incompetent, or he shall be so found by the judge, he shall be set aside for cause.

The State or the accused may make either of the following objections:

That he is not a citizen, resident of the county.

That he is over 60 or under 21 years of age.

That he is an idiot or lunatic, or intoxicated.

That he is so near of kindred to the prosecutor, or the accused, or the deceased, as to disqualify him by law from serving on the jury.

20 Challenges for the Defense.

Every person indicted for a crime or offense which may subject him to death, or four years' imprisonment, may peremptorily challenge twenty of the jurors impaneled to try him. The State shall be allowed one-half the peremptory challenges allowed the prisoner.

Here is the complete jury list:

NEW YORK, July 28.—Accused of driving a mule with a sore on its neck, Thomas Slater, freed himself by hitting the mule on the alleged sore. The mule did not move, and the jury acquitted Slater.

BURGLAR SLEUTH GIVES UP HIS CALLING

Man Who Trapped Reeves and Miller Says It Is Exciting, but Once Is Enough.

Playing burglar for six weeks in the interest of society is a "ticklish business," according to J. A. Harris, former railroad detective. He says he doesn't want to try it again.

Harris, whose identity has just been disclosed, is the man who caused the undoing of T. W. Reeves and R. W. Miller, accused as the leaders of a burglar band and who are now in the Tower facing numerous charges. Working as a pal side by side with Reeves and Miller in different jobs, Harris obtained information that enabled city detectives to run the alleged burglars to earth last week.

Detectives say Harris' feat is one of the most daring ever attempted in this section in an effort to bag criminals. Harris' own story in court of how he acted the role of burglar follows:

"My part in this affair has been solely to aid the detectives in rounding up these men, who I felt were a menace to society. I have known Reeves and Miller for some time. A few weeks ago I was approached by them to join in a plan to rob. They told me they were making lots of money, and making it easy, and that they were in no danger, that they were getting away with their game for the reason that they were both above suspicion. I saw that here was an opportunity to do a good turn, and I immediately took hold of it. I told them I would like to make some of this easy money, and fell for their game—at least, I convinced them I did.

"They seemed to trust me implicitly, and I was soon completely in their confidence.

"When I realized that they meant business and that I really could become a fake burglar, my next step was to report to Chief of Detectives Lanford. I assured the Chief I could trap this gang, and he told me to go ahead and work the game for all it was worth. I would meet with Reeves and Miller, we would discuss and frame up possible jobs, and I would report to Chief Lanford as quickly as possible.

"I made daily reports to the Chief, putting him wise to every move being made by the gang. Sometimes I would meet the Chief at his home and sometimes I would slip down to his office in the police station. But I would never risk the telephone.

"The night Reeves and Miller were captured in Gober's store in Carroll street I was along and made my escape from the store. Of course, the detectives let me get away. As I dashed away from the store I heard several pistol shots—the detectives were shooting into the air.

"But I've got enough now—I don't want another job like this."

Climate Failed; Medicine Effective

Rest, fresh air and well-cooked, nourishing food do help many persons suffering with Lung Trouble. But in many cases the disease is only temporarily "arrested," and something more is needed. Eckman's Alterative is a medicine for Throat and Lung Troubles and has brought about many complete recoveries—in many cases where the surroundings were not ideal. Judging by the many reports of recoveries received, we believe it should be used in every case of Lung Trouble. A remarkable case follows:

Weldon, Ill.

"My Dear Sir: Through your instrumentality I have been saved from a premature grave. On December 14, 1904, I was taken with Typhoid Pneumonia which developed into Consumption. In February, 1905, I went to Fort Worth, Texas, and later to Canon City, Colorado. After being there two weeks, my physician informed me that my case was hopeless. Three weeks later I returned home, weighing 104 pounds, the doctor having given me no assurance of reaching there alive.

"On July 14, 1905, I began taking Eckman's wonderful remedy for Consumption. To-day I weigh 156 pounds. I am stout and well and can do any kind of work about my grain elevator."

(Attested) ARTHUR WEBB.

Eckman's Alterative has been proven by many years' test to be most efficacious in cases of severe Throat and Lung Affections, Bronchitis, Bronchial Asthma, Stubborn Colds and in upbuilding the system. Does not contain narcotics, poisons or habit-forming drugs. For sale by all of Jacobs' Drug Stores and other leading druggists. Write the Eckman Laboratory, Philadelphia, Pa., for booklet telling of recoveries and additional evidence.

DANGEROUS CALOMEL GOING OUT OF USE

A Safer, More Reliable Remedy Has Taken Its Place in the Drug Store and in the Home.

A few years ago, men, women and children took calomel for a sluggish liver and for constipation. They took risks when they did so, for calomel is a dangerous drug. Your family doctor will be the first to tell this if he discovers you dosing yourself with calomel.

But the drug trade has found a safer, more pleasant remedy than calomel in Dodson's Liver Tone.

Dealers tell us that their drug store sells Dodson's Liver Tone in practically every case of biliousness and liver trouble where calomel used to be taken.

Dodson's Liver Tone is a vegetable liver tonic that is absolutely harmless for children and grown people. It sells for 50 cents a bottle and is guaranteed to be entirely satisfactory by all druggists who will refund your money with a smile if it does not give quick, gentle relief without any of calomel's unpleasant after-effects.

THE CRUISE OF THE "PIFFLE"!

Copyright, 1913, International News Service.

"Avast! If you don't care to avast then I insist that you either ahoy or belay, whichever you prefer!" This stirring maritime language was utttered by Admiral Juice, of the battleship "Piffle," as he stepped ashore on an island known as Jappo-Greaso! It was inhabited by two tribes of hostile natives called the Jappo and the Greaso tribes respectively! They may not have been quite the most disagreeable natives on earth but they were near it—very near it! The Greasos were always looking for trouble and the Jappos could live on two cents a week and save money! With fierce gestures they shouted "Down with honorable American laws!" "Viva la revolution!" and other coarse and impolite expressions! Advancing firmly toward them, followed by a sailor known as Professor Slick, Admiral Juice said, "My friends, if you will gather around me and produce two dollars apiece I will deliver a lecture "Peace, and How I Make It Pay!" after which the Professor here will read extracts from his "Life of Colonel Harvey!" There was intense silence for a moment and then with blanched faces and cries of terror the natives turned and fled! They were a tough lot but they had to draw the line somewhere! Suddenly a deep, hollow rumbling was—(To be continued before long).

SIDELIGHTS on GEORGIA POLITICS

By JAMES B. NEVIN

There seems to be little, if any, doubt that the Legislature is to hurry along the general tax act, just as it has hurried along the general appropriations bill.

There are, counting to-day, exactly fourteen working days left to the Legislature's credit. This does not include two Saturdays and two Sundays, however.

It, therefore, may be seen that the Legislature can, if it will, place both the appropriations bill and the tax acts—the general tax act, at least—in the hands of the Executive ten days ahead of adjournment, as he has requested.

If this is done—and it likely will be done—the present Legislature will have accomplished a record of speed never before equaled in the history of the State.

Despite all the complaining and criticism to the contrary, the present Legislature has been the most prompt, within the memory of any Georgian, in the matter of passing the two vitally big and necessary measures of the session—the general appropriations bill and the general tax act.

Credit must be awarded the committee heads, the committees and the Speaker for this remarkable achievement, and President Anderson has given his assurance that the promptness of the House shall be duplicated in the Senate this week and next.

Taken altogether, the record of the Legislature as made up for this session is all right and a credit.

It is, indeed, far better than usual.

Mr. Shuptrine, of Chatham, is very much opposed to the measure permitting the addition of a kindergarten system to the public schools of the State.

Mr. Shuptrine does not believe the Constitution of the State contemplates anything of the kind, and, moreover, he thinks it would be but the first step in the direction of greatly expanding the school fund, already smaller than the necessities of the State seem to warrant.

"If we permit this innovation, not warranted in the fundamental law at all, we shall have application made within the life of the present Legislature, perhaps, for more funds to meet the kindergarten requirements," said Mr. Shuptrine to-day.

"I know that it is proposed to add this feature to the school system without additional appropriations to cover it, but that is merely a sop to get the bill on the statute books. Once we inaugurate this system, we shall have to take care of it, and it will be argued that funds as now appropriated are not sufficient to handle the new department.

"Georgia already is dealing most generously with her schools—she is straining the limit to take care of them—and I am not complaining so much about that. But I do think it would be a sad mistake to add any further burdens to her budget—and certainly along the line of providing public education to tots from 4 to 6 years of age."

Senator M. C. Tarver has abandoned for the present his effort to get the Representatives and Senators of the various counties affected, interested in the proposed Chickamauga judicial circuit.

"The bill could not be passed at this session," said Mr. Tarver, "for several of the Representatives of the counties proposed for the new circuit are opposed to any change of the present arrangement. Others, while desiring a change, couldn't get together on an arrangement of counties that was mutually satisfactory."

Mr. Searcey's bill to make the buyer and the seller equally guilty in "blind tiger" cases, was killed in the Senate, upon the theory that it affords the "blind tiger" exactly the protection he desires, rather than retards him in the operation of his business.

"The one thing a 'blind tiger' dreads above all other things," said a Senator, discussing the bill, "is that among his numerous customers may be one who will tell.

"This bill removes that dread, for anybody who reported a 'tiger' under this measure would become a criminal himself. Besides, because of the law which excuses a man from incriminating himself in testifying, this man would become immediately incompetent as a witness.

"It is hard enough now to convict 'blind tigers', and it would be a thousand times harder under this law.

"Prohibitionists who seek to go the limits this bill proposes are to be commended for their zeal, perhaps, but surely not for their common sense. This bill is sound enough in theory, if you view it from a certain angle, but it falls to pieces as a practical measure and would defeat the very object its author had in mind when he framed it."

The Senate defeated the measure by a vote of 18 to 22, which was not such a wide margin of defeat, after all.

Turkey Trot Causes Fatal German Duel

Special Cable to The Georgian.

BERLIN, July 28.—The turkey trot caused a fatal duel at Landau between a Prussian general and a colonel, whose names are suppressed.

The general challenged the colonel because the latter criticised him for allowing his daughter to dance the turkey trot with an officer at a garrison ball.

After a desperate fight with swords the colonel died from his wounds.

$1,400 Guarantee Of Wedded Bliss

ROCHESTER, MINN., July 28.—That the son will make a model husband and the daughter a faithful and obedient wife are the pledges of the fathers of Cassian Bart and Elizabeth Blodi, members of well-known families near here, who are soon to be wedded.

A bond was signed by each father, Bart promising that his son will not loaf, gamble, drink, play pool or dance with young women, his pledge being a $700 farm.

The father of the bride-elect deposited a cash bond of $700 that his daughter will not gossip, run around with other men and will cook to her husband's satisfaction.

'Artificial' Wine Must Be Labeled

WASHINGTON, July 28.—Secretary of Agriculture Houston has informed the California members of Congress that he will require all artificial wine sold in interstate commerce to carry labels showing the compounds of which it is made.

He states that his department will not be able to control the wine which is shipped into States in bulk and there fraudulently re-bottled and labeled.

Kings to Send Costly Gifts to Miss Wilson

WASHINGTON, July 28.—Despite President Wilson's attitude in discouraging the gift of Baltimore Democrats to his daughter, Jessie, at her wedding next November to Francis B. Sayre, kings and princes of foreign nations will flood the White House with costly gifts.

The marriage of a President's son or daughter is the only occasion on which foreign governments can get around the American constitution, which forbids the President accepting personal gifts from rulers of foreign nations.

The gifts from foreign potentates, naturally, cannot be discouraged.

One of the Greatest Mystery Stories Ever Written

By ANNA KATHARINE GREEN

It is Dr. Cameron's Wedding Day. At 8 o'Clock He Is to Marry Genevieve Gretorex, a Beautiful Society Girl. At 4 o'Clock He Is Informed His Fiancee Has Disappeared.

Opening Installment

(Copyright, 1913, by Anna Katharine Green.)

An Unexpected Visitor.

IT was Dr. Cameron's wedding day. At 8 o'clock in the evening the ceremony of marriage between himself and Genevieve Gretorex was to be performed at the house of the bride's parents in St. Nicholas Place. It was now 4 o'clock.

Seated in his office, Dr. Cameron, who, for a young man, enjoyed a most enviable reputation as a physician, mused over his past and built castles for the future; for his bride was the daughter of one of the richest and most influential citizens of New York, and to such ambition as his this fact, implying, as it did, valuable connections in the present and a large and unincumbered fortune in the future, was one that lent luster to her beauty and attraction to their union. Not but what he loved her—or thought he did—would have loved her under any circumstances. Was she not handsome, and in that reserved and somewhat haughty way he especially admired? Had she not fine manners and would she not add increased honor to a name already well known, and, as he might add, respected?

Had Her Caprices.

To be sure, she had her caprices, as a woman so circumstanced had a right to have, and she esteemed rather than adored him, as many little events in their short courtship only too plainly betrayed. But then he would not have admired a gushing bride, and, being what he was, a man of taste and the son of a man of taste, he found a certain satisfaction in the calm propriety of a match that united equal interests, without jeopardizing that calmness of mind necessary to the successful practice of his exacting profession.

There was but one thing troubled him. Why had she refused to see him for the last seven days? She was not a woman of petty instincts. Indeed, he had sometimes suspected her of possessing latent energies which the round of a fashionable life had never called forth; and in her cool and somewhat languid gaze he had caught glimpses now and then of a spirit that only needed light and air to expand into something like greatness.

Why, then, this strange desire for seclusion at a time when a woman is usually supposed to desire the support of her lover's society? Had he displeased her? Not only had his presents been rich, they had been rare and of an order to gratify her refined taste. Was she ill? He was her physician as well as lover, and he had not been notified of any indisposition.

Besides the last time he had been so fortunate as to be received into her presence she had seemed well and looked blooming; more so, indeed, than he had seen her for some time, and, though somewhat nervous in manner, had exhibited an interest in his attentions which he had not always observed in her. It was not a long interview, but he remembered it well; saw again the almost timid look with which she greeted him, followed by the smile that was nearly a shock to him—it was so much warmer and brighter than usual. Then the few hurried words—for even that night she would not see him long—and the sudden coyness of her attitude as he took her hand in parting!—he recollected it all. He had not thought of it at the time, but now it seemed to him that there had been something strange in her whole bearing, an impalpable change from her former self that he could not analyze, but which had, nevertheless, left its impression upon him. The kiss he had received, for instance, had moved him. There had been warmth in it and her lips had almost returned the pressure of his own.

Was She Ill?

This was new in the history of their courtship and would have argued, perhaps, that she was beginning to recognize his appreciation of her if her after conduct had not given the lie to any such surmise. As it was, it rather seemed to show that she had been in an unnatural condition—suggestive of incipient fever, perhaps. She was ill; and they were trying to keep it from him! The butler's excuses, "Miss Gretorex is very much engaged, sir; Mrs. Gretorex's regrets, sir, but Miss Gretorex has gone out on important business," were but polite subterfuges to blind his eyes to the real truth. And yet to his calmer judgment how untenable was even this supposition. Had she been sick he could not have failed to have heard of it from some quarter. No, she was not sick. She was but indulging in a freak easily to be explained, perhaps, by her mother's over-exciting code of etiquette; and, as in a few hours, she was to be his wife and life-long companion, he would cease to think of it, and only remember that kiss.

He had reached this point in his musings when they were suddenly interrupted. A tap was heard on his office door.

With some irritation he arose. It was not time for his carriage and he had expressly ordered that no visitors or patients were to be received. Who could it be, then? A messenger from Miss Gretorex? He sprang to the door at the thought. But before he could touch the knob, the door opened, and to his surprise and possible relief there entered an unknown man of middle age and prepossessing appearance, whose errand seemed to be one of importance, though his manner was quiet and his voice startlingly gentle.

A Visitor.

"I hope I am not intruding," said he. "The boy below told me this was your wedding day, but he also told me that the ceremony was not to take place till 8 o'clock this evening, and as my business is peculiar and demands instant attention I ventured to come up."

"That is right," answered Dr. Cameron, feeling an unaccountable attraction toward the man, though he was not what you would perhaps call a gentleman, and had, as the doctor could not but notice even at this early stage of their acquaintance, a way of not meeting your eye when he spoke that was to say the least, lacking in ingenuousness. "Is it as a patient you come to me?"

"No," rejoined the stranger, fixing his glance on the white necktie and one or two other insignificant articles which lay on the table near by, with an air strangely like that of compassion. "My business is with you as a doctor—that is, partly—but I am not the patient. I almost wish I were," he added, in a troubled tone that awakened the other's interest notwithstanding the natural preoccupation of his thoughts.

"Let me hear," returned Dr. Cameron.

"You make my task easy," the stranger remarked. "And yet," he went on in a curter and more business-like tone, "you may be less willing to listen when I tell you that I have first a story to relate which, while not uninteresting in itself, is so out of accord with your present mood that I doubt if you will be able to sit through it with patience. Yet it is necessary for me to relate it and necessary for you to hear it, now, here, and without any interruption."

This was alarming; especially as the speaker did not seem like a man given to sentimentalities or even to exaggeration. On the contrary he gave the impression of a person accustomed to weigh his words with studious care, not allowing a sentence to escape him without a decided motive.

"Will you tell me your name?" requested Dr. Cameron.

The reply came quietly.

"I doubt if you will know it, and I had rather you had not asked it. But since it is important above all things that you should trust me, I will say that it is Gryce, Ebenezer Gryce, and add that I am a member of the police force; in short, a detective."

Dr. Cameron felt his apprehensions vanish. Whatever the other's errand, it could not be one that touched him or his; and this to a man on his wedding day was certainly a comforting thought.

"You undervalue your fame," he replied. "I know your name well. Can it be possible you desire my assistance in a professional way?"

The detective's gaze, which had been resting gloomily upon a laughing cherub on the mantelpiece, shifted, but he did not respond to the doctor's smile, and his manner remained unaltered.

"I will tell my story," said he. "It will be the quickest way to come to an understanding."

And without further pause or preliminary, he began in the following words:

The Dilemma.

"I am getting to be an old man, and I have my infirmities. But there are still cases which are given to no one but me. Among them are those which involve the honor of persons in a high station of life."

Mr. Gryce paused. Dr. Cameron felt his apprehensions return.

"You see," the detective slowly resumed, "I can keep a secret; that is, when the life and property of others are not endangered by my silence. I can do a detective's work and keep a detective's counsel, only speaking when and where necessity requires."

He paused again. Dr. Cameron moved uneasily.

"As in this case," added the other, gravely.

"This case?" repeated the doctor, now thoroughly alarmed. "What case? You excite me; tell me what you have to say, at once!"

But the detective was not to be hurried.

"I was, therefore, not at all surprised," he proceeded, as if no interruption had occurred, "when some three days ago I was requested to call upon—Mrs. A., let us say—on business of a strictly confidential character. Such summonses come frequently. Such a summons does not disturb an officer in the least. I nevertheless made haste to show myself at Mrs. A.'s house, for Mrs. A., whom you perhaps know is a woman of some consequence, and her husband is a man of widespread reputation and influence. I found her at home, anxiously awaiting my appearance. As soon as she saw me she told me her trouble: 'Mr. Gryce,' said she, 'I am in a great dilemma. Something has occurred in my family which may or may not lead to a lasting dishonor. What I wish from you is aid to determine whether our fears are well grounded. If they are not, you will forget that you were ever called to this house.' I bowed. I was already interested, for I saw that her anxiety was great, while I could not help being puzzled over its cause, for she had no son to disgrace her by his dissipations, and as for her husband, he was above reproach. She soon relieved my curiosity.

"'Mr. Gryce,' said she, 'I have a daughter.'

"'Yes,' I returned, inwardly startled. Miss A. and dishonor seemed so wide apart.

"Our Only Child."

"'She is our only child,' the mother went on. 'We love her, and have always cherished her, but though it is not generally known in this house'—and here the poor lady's eyes roamed about her as if she were afraid that her words would be overheard, 'she has left us; gone away without acquainting us where—suddenly, inexplicably, leaving only the most meager explanation behind her, and—and—'

"'But, madam,' I interrupted, 'if she left any explanation—'

"Mrs. A. took a small and crumpled note out of her pocket and handed it to me.

"'A letter,' she affirmed, 'sent through the mail. And I was in the house when she left, and would have listened to any reasonable request she had to make.'

"I had already read the four or five lines which the letter contained:

"'Dear Mother: I must have rest. I have gone away for a few days, but shall be back on the 27th. Don't worry.

"'Your affectionate ——.'

"'What is the matter with this?' I asked. 'She says she will be back on the 27th, and to-day is only the 24th.'

"'Sir,' was the answer, 'it is the only time in our experience when our daughter has left us without first gaining our permission. Besides, the time is especially inopportune. My daughter's wedding cards are out.'"

Mr. Gryce stopped suddenly, for Dr. Cameron had given an anxious start.

"Ah, that arouses your interest!" remarked the detective. "Your own wedding being so near, I am not surprised."

It was dryly said, and the doctor at once reseated himself. He had no wish to appear unduly moved, but he could not suppress every token of emotion, so he turned his head away from the light. Mr. Gryce let his gaze travel to a new object before proceeding.

Only One Conclusion.

"This avowal of Mrs. A. put a new aspect on affairs," said he, "but yet I saw no reason for the extreme anxiety displayed. 'And on what day does she expect to be married?' I asked.

"'On the 27th.'

"'But she says she will be back.'

"'That does not comfort me.'

"'You think she will not come.'

"'I have no hope that she will.'

"This acknowledgment was uttered with emphasis. There seemed to be but one conclusion to draw.

"'Your daughter wishes to escape her engagement?'

"The answer was less emphatic than before. In fact, it expressed doubt.

"'I do not know, sir; my daughter is not herself, has not been for some time. My husband and myself have both noticed it; but we never anticipated her taking any such extreme action as this. Where has she gone? What will become of her? How can we face the world? How can we tell her lover?'

"'Then you think——'

"'That she is laboring under a temporary aberration of mind, caused, perhaps, by the excitement of the last few weeks; that she is not responsible for her acts; that she may be anywhere, remote or near; and that we may wait till the hour set for her marriage is past without seeing her.'

"To this I could make but one reply: 'Then why not take her lover into your confidence, inform him of your fears, and gain the benefit of his experience in your search for her?'

A MOTHER'S FEARS.

"The answer will astonish you.

"'Because we are very proud and he is very proud. To explain our fears we should be obliged to say much that it would be humiliating for us to utter and for him to hear. Besides, we may overrate the situation. She may come back; as she says she will and, should this be the case, you can see for yourself what endless regret would follow any such confidences as you suggest.'

"'But'—I began.

"'It is this note that causes our dilemma,' she interposed. 'With these lines before me I can not act as if there were no hope of her returning in proper time to take her part in the ceremony. Yet I do not trust these lines, nor the promise she has made. Why, I can hardly say; for she has always been a woman of her word. But she is not herself, of that I am convinced.'

"This repetition of her former assertion made it easy for me to inquire what special change she had perceived in her daughter to lead to such a conclusion. She evidently found it difficult to reply.

"'I can not put it into words,' she declared. 'I feel the change.'

"'And how long have you felt it?'

"'Not long; since we began active preparations for her wedding, I think.'

"'And has no one else observed it?'

"'I can not say. I should think her lover would.'

"'Why?'

"'Because it has been in reference to him she has shown her peculiarities strongest. For weeks she has received him only on sufferance and for the last few days has more than once absolutely refused to see him.'

"'And what reason did she assign for this?'

Prepared for Wedding.

"'Follies, Fatigue, caprice, a letter to write, a dressmaker to see—anything that came into her head.'

"'Yet she went on preparing for her wedding?'

"'Certainly; her cards were out.'

"'The tone in which this was said caused me to reflect. Though affable, kindly and even philanthropic in her dealings toward the world at large, Mrs. A. is, as every one knows, a woman who would find it very difficult to infringe upon any of the laws of society. Having seen her daughter pledge herself to a man of suitable pretensions, she would consider such a pledge final if only because she could not face the talk and scandal that would follow a rupture. Influenced by this idea, I remarked:

"'You must be perfectly frank with me if you want me to help you at this crisis. Has your daughter, or has she not, expressed a wish to break her engagement?'

"'She asked me once if I thought it too late for her to do so. Of course there was but one reply to this, and she said no more. But,' the poor mother continued hastily, 'that was only a symptom of flightiness. She has nothing against her lover, does not pretend to have.'

"'Only against marriage?'

"'Only against marriage.'

"'Mrs. A.,' I now boldly asked, 'do you think she loves the man you expect her to marry?'

"The answer came hesitatingly. 'She accepted his attentions with pleasure when they were first offered.'

"'Do you think she loves any other man?'

The mother shrank back in dismay. "I am sure she does not. How could she? There is not another such gentleman in our circle of acquaintance."

"This was flattering to the gentleman, but not exactly satisfactory to me.

"'You know girls sometimes take strange whims.'

"'My daughter is not a girl, she is a woman.'

"This silenced me as it would you, sir, I have no doubt; and seeing the mother was really sincere in believing that her daughter's mind was temporarily affected, I inquired again as to what she had done or failed to do of late, and found that she had shunned the society of the members of her family as well as that of her lover, finding her sole interest seemingly in the preparation of her wardrobe. "To that she did attend,' said Mrs. A., 'and it was the only thing she did help me in. No hour was too late for her to see her dressmaker; no engagement too pressing for her to receive and fit on any of the new costumes that kept coming home. Indeed she showed more than a bride's usual interest in such matters; and it is the one reason I have for not disputing you utterly when you say she may come back. She will want to see her dresses.'

A Clew.

"'Then she did not take them with her?'

"'She took nothing.'

"'What! not a trunk?'

"'Nothing; that is, nothing but a little hand satchel.'

"'How do you know this?'

"'We all saw her go out; she was in shopping costume.'

"'But she had money?'

"'I can not say. Some, no doubt; but we found a large roll of bills in her drawer, and her father says it contains nearly all he had lately given her. I do not think her pocketbook held more than five dollars.'

"This was a point. Either the girl was going amongst friends, or she was really touched in her mind. To make sure that the first supposition was not true, I asked for a list of the houses which Miss A. was in the habit of visiting. Mrs. A. mentioned some half-dozen, but added that her daughter's most intimate companion was in Europe and that she did not think she cared enough for the others to go to them at this time.

"'And she positively carried no baggage with her?'

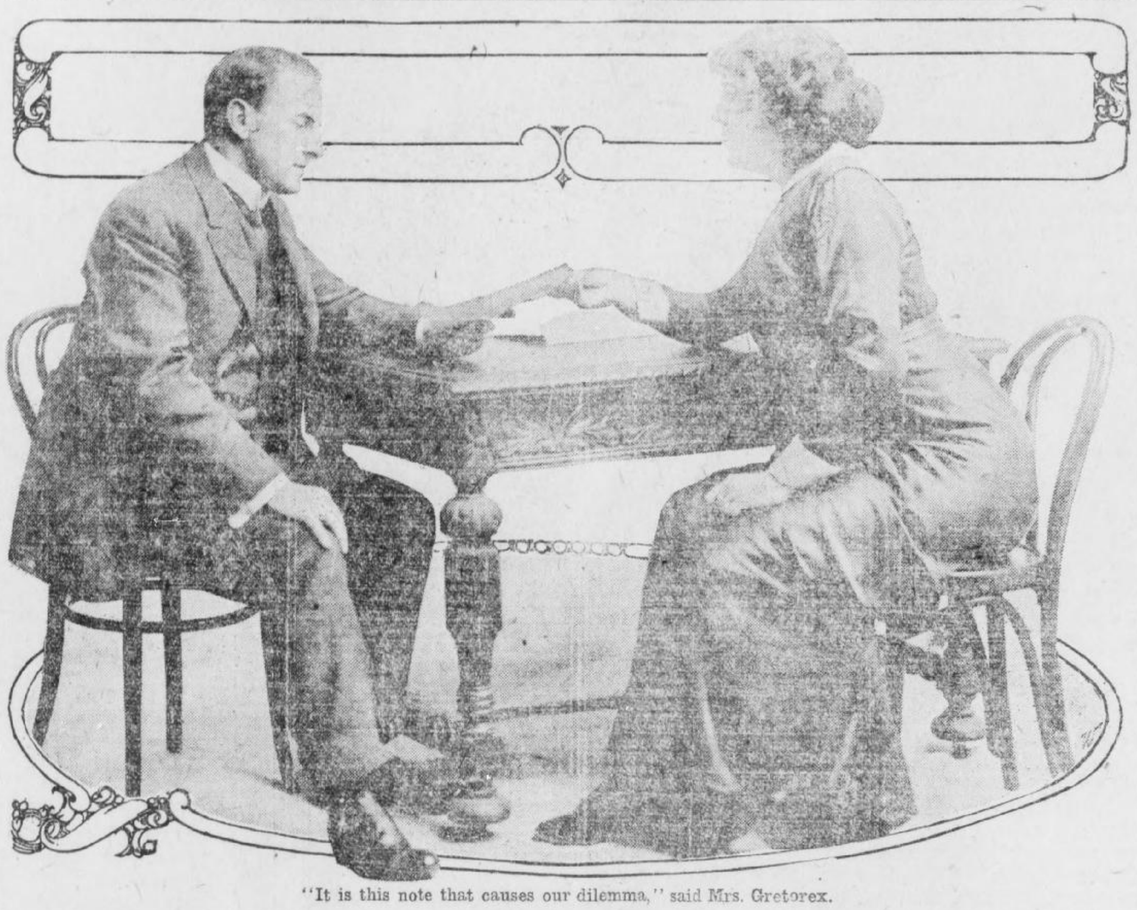

"'None. I have looked her things over carefully and find nothing missing. She did not even wear her diamonds.'

"'And her watch?'

"'Is left behind.'

To Be Continued To-morrow.

THEIR MARRIED LIFE

Helen's First Day in the Paris Shops Results in Very Few Purcheses

By MABEL HERBERT URNER.

IT was the morning of their third day in Paris that Helen started out to shop. She had read and heard so much of the big Parisian bazaars that she was athrill with eager expectation.

"Better take in the Galeries Lafayette first," suggested Warren as they left the hotel together. "You can take a bus from there for the Bon Marche."

"Dear, wouldn't you have time to go by the Lafayette with me—it's only half past 9," pleaded Helen, who dreaded starting out alone.

"All right," good naturedly, "that's not much out of my way. Hurry up—let's get this bus."

It was going to be another hot day. There was still no relief from the heat wave that had settled over Paris since their arrival. But as Helen climbed gleefully to the top of the bus, the thought of the day in the Paris shops made her unmindful of the heat.

"There you are," Warren pointed out a huge building just ahead. From the top fluttered white banners and flags lettered gayly in red, "Galeries Lafayette." It looked more like a great exposition building than a store.

But when they left the bus, Helen was astonished to find that all along the sidewalk in front of the store were stalls, piled high with the cheapest kind of merchandise.

She Is Lonely.

There were tables of crockery, kitchenware, cotton dresses and waists, and around each was a chattering crowd of Frenchwomen pulling over the goods. Large cardboard signs—"50 centimes," "1 franc," "2 francs"—were everywhere.

"Why, dear, would you think they'd allow these push-cart peddlers outside a reputable store? Why, it's like a cheap market place!"

"They're not push-cart peddlers," laughed Warren. "This is all part of the Galeries Lafayette—that's how they sell their cheap goods. Our stores have bargain basements—here they have stalls outside the shop. Now I've got to leave you. Don't overdo it and get too tired. Better not be on your feet too much this hot day."

Helen's interest in the scene about her soon banished the momentary feeling of loneliness as Warren disappeared in the crowd. For some time she stood on the sidewalk watching the stalls and the chattering, pushing crowd about them. Warren was right. Unquestionably this was part of the store, for bareheaded French floor-walkers, with frock coats and twisted mustaches, walked up and down the sidewalk.

Although Helen had often heard that the Galeries Lafayette was one of the best Paris shops, this street sale of goods made her most skeptical. But when she entered, she saw that it was really a very beautiful store. In the center was a great rotunda under a crystal dome. An imposing marble staircase with double escalators led to the upper galleries.

Everywhere was a lavish and seemingly haphazard display of goods. It was all very different from a New York shop. There seemed no aisles, only a vast labyrinth of tables piled with goods in chaotic disorder—the most tawdry heaped carelessly with the most expensive. The confusing display of the great quantities of merchandise, the riot of color, the crowd, the uproar and tumult were to Helen most bewildering.

Hoping that the upper galleries would be less crowded and tumultuous, Helen made her way to the long line of elevators. Glancing over the directory of the floors, she located "Lingerie" and "Trousseaux."

French lingerie is a luxury coveted by every American woman, and as Helen stepped from the elevator at the third gallery into what seemed a great exhibition of white goods, her heart beat with expectation.

On every side was a network of tables and counters heaped with white garments—chemisettes, jupons and robes de nuites. Over the tables were cards with "Occasion" or "Grand Occasion," the French phrase for bargains.

Almost everything was hand embroidered and mostly unlaundered, the blue penciled tracing of the patterns being still distinct.

Helen was surprised to find that while even the cheapest garment, those as low as six or seven francs, were embroidered by hand, the garment itself was made by machinery, the seams carelessly stitched, and the buttons half off. She thought of the poor women in the convents where most of this work is done. How poorly paid they must be to embroider such inferior goods!

She looked first for some dainty, low-necked night dresses with short butterfly sleeves, but she saw only ungainly garments with high necks and long sleeves. Was this the much-lauded lingerie?

At last, in some glass cases, where the most expensive models were displayed, she found some exquisite low-neck short-sleeved gowns.

"How much? Quel prix?" Helen demanded of a passing clerk, pointing to a garment in the case.

The girl opened the case and looked at the ticket. Helen could not understand her, but, stooping over, she read the ticket herself—90 francs. Eighteen dollars!

Helen tried to make her understand with a few words of French, much English and many gestures that she wanted to see some gowns of that cut, but much less expensive. The girl touched a loud gong, which was a signal for an English-speaking clerk, and one promptly appeared.

"Almost all of our low-neck and short-sleeved gowns are in the expensive models," the clerk explained. "But of course we have some for less than 90 francs. Now here is quite a pretty gown for 25 francs."

Seven dollars! Except for her trousseau, Helen had never paid $7 for a nightgown in her life. And she had no intention of paying it in Paris, where she had expected to get things ridiculously cheap.

Only One Purchase.

"Well, I'll let the nightgowns go for the present, but I'd like to see some combinations and skirts."

"About what price does madam wish to pay?" asked the clerk, with lessening cordiality, for she expected Americans not to object to prices.

"About three or four dollars—fifteen or twenty francs."

"They're all out on the tables, madam. We keep only the more expensive ones in this department."

"But I could never button these," exclaimed Helen, viewing with disfavor the combinations, which all opened in the back. "And they're all too large—I want 34."

"You won't find bust measures in Paris like you have in America, madam. We have only three sizes here. You see, they're marked with tickets—the green ticket is small, the pink ticket medium and the yellow ticket large."

Helen expressed her astonishment that in Paris, where fit and style were supposed to be perfected, they should have only three sizes instead of the eight—from 32 to 46—that are carried by every American store!

The intention to buy enough lingerie while in Paris to last her for the next two years was somewhat shaken. And she finally left the department, having made just one purchase—a white skirt with a hand-embroidered flounce. Even this she could not get the right length. It would have to be shortened when she got it home.

From the lingerie, Helen walked down the broad marble staircase to the gallery below. Just at the foot of the stairs were a dozen or more tables overburdened with parasols. She had never seen so many parasols together in her life. Most of them were brilliant in coloring and design, vivid reds, bright greens and startling blues.

Farther on was a gorgeous display of scarfs—the long chiffon scarfs that the French women wear with their evening gowns. They lay in careless glittering heaps, shimmering with gold and silver spangles and iridescent beadings.

Helen had thought the hues and fabrics in the shops at home particularly loud this year, but they were mild and subdued compared with the riotous coloring of everything here.

In spite of the whirring electric fans the heat was excessive, and before Helen had explored half the departments of the Galeries Lafayette she was exhausted.

Although she had spent most of the day there, her purchases were trivial, but she had a fair idea of what a big Paris shop was like.

It was good to get back to their rooms, to have time to bathe, rest and dress before Warren came.

"Well, how did you get along?" was his greeting when he got in a little after 6. "Buy out all the Paris shops?"

"Not quite. I left a few things in the Galeries Lafayette! That was the only place I went."

"How did you find things? Cheaper than at home?"

"Some things are. But, dear, the styles and colorings are so extreme. Do you know," thoughtfully, "I really believe I can find the things I want better in New York."

"Course you can! Nothing's more overrated than the French styles. They are made for French women—not for Americans. Affi fifteen-tenths of the Americans who come over here and buy a lot of truck are blamed sick of their bargains when they get 'em home."

The Finger of Death

A SPY has to take many risks, and if he is caught at the game during war time his career as a rule is then and there closed promptly, and in most cases in ignominious fashion.

It was the money aspect of the business which appealed to Morris Tyler, and induced him to engage in the work. He was a born spy. A good linguist, and cunning beyond belief, he was never one to assay a dangerous task for the sheer excitement of it. He did not like taking risks, though, of course, he had to take them occasionally; but always at these junctures he kept in mind the big pay and extras. It needed these to tune him up to concert pitch.

He was always cautious and successful. Having found it advisable to quit Europe for a time, he made his way to the South American Republic of Caldera which, at the date of his arrival, was just in the throes of one of its periodical revolutions.

He offered his services to the Government party at a rate of pay somewhat in excess of what he had been receiving in Europe, and President Blanco having heard of him, and finding that he could speak Spanish fluently, engaged him at once.

But in Caldera, Morris Tyler had to work under new and unfamiliar conditions. Hitherto, his spying had been carried on during times of peace. There had been no war in Europe since he had come to the front. Now he found himself in the thick of fighting of a savage character. When the insurgents took any prisoners, they gave them the option of changing sides or being shot. But when the Government troops captured any rebels, they did not permit them any choice. They were placed in a row with their backs against a wall and promptly finished off by a firing party. By the time he had been three weeks at the "great game" as played in this explosive South American State, Morris Tyler was inclined to regret that he had not remained a passive spectator of the revolution, instead of taking part in it. However, he fortified his courage with the thought of the pile of dollars he would add to his banking account when the fighting was over and the rebels beaten. He had seen enough to feel pretty certain they had no real chance of winning. And so far he had not encountered any special danger; his cunning always enabled him to evade it.

No Avail.

But the day came when he discovered that cunning was of no avail, and that courage would have been a far more desirable possession.

He had been sent for by Colonel Voruba, the chief of the Intelligence Department, to whom he usually made his reports.

"Some rare work for you, Senor Tyler," observed the Colonel cheerfully, "and it may be the last service we shall require you to perform, for the revolution must end soon. Still, much will depend on the informtaion you are able to obtain for us."

Morris Tyler nodded, and waited for his chief to go on.

"The rebels are massed in some force on the Hill of San Stefano," pursued the Colonel, "where it seems they are going to make a last desperate stand. They hold the old fort up there. That much we know. But we do not know the number of their guns, nor how they are placed. It is important that we have this information before we storm the position, and we look to you to obtain it for us."

"Can you give me any further particulars, Colonel?"

"There are no further particulars to give you," replied Colonel Voruba. "You know the road. The rest lies with you. I am instructed, however, to inform you that if you succeed in bringing us correct information, you will receive five hundred dollars over and above your pay. You must start at once.

By a curious freak of fate, there arrived at the headquarters of the Calderan army, twenty-four hours, later, a deserter from the rebel ranks, who was able to furnish the exact information which Colonel Voruba required.

Thereupon, an order was given for an immediate advance. This movement taking place so much sooner than was expected, would very likely put Morris Tyler in an extremely tight corner. But the life of one man was of small moment when so much was at stake. And a spy! Well, no one bothered much about a spy when he was not required. In the meantime, Tyler had contrived to get to the top of the Hill of San Stefano without being observed by the enemy's outposts or sentries.

He was, indeed, well within the circles of outposts when he reached an abandoned building, which at one time had been the boiler house of a sugar plantation. It seemed a safe hiding place, from the security of which he could observe what was going on in the rebels' camp without himself being seen. He crept inside and laid flat down upon the floor. About half a mile away he could see the camp fires glowing in the darkness, and nearer still the squat shape of the fort showing black against the night sky. Picturesque insurgents were passing to and fro, and a few were seated by the fires playing cards.

No Sleep.

After a time the camp became silent, even the card players giving up their games and stretching themselves out on the ground to sleep. Only sentries remained on the alert, but between him and the fort there were three. By no possibility could he get past them unseen, for it was open ground.

The night wore on. He was tired, but he dared not sleep. If he could only snatch a few minutes—just to rest his eyes——

He awoke with a start, and was about to spring to his feet when a harsh voice commanded him to remain still. At the other side of the chamber he saw an armed man—one of the rebels—standing with his rifle at the "ready."

"So! A spy!" exclaimed the man. "Bueno! It will be promotion for me for having discovered you. Don't move!" The rifle was raised threateningly. "If you so much as move a hand or a foot I will put a bullet through your brain. Yet I do not wish to waste ammunition. A rope is good enough for such as you."

He spat on the floor to typify his contempt for all spies. Then he called to the nearest sentry, telling him of his "find," and asking him to bring a rope. But the words had barely left his lips when there was a terrific crash overhead, a blinding flash of flame, the splitting of wood and the rattle of falling masonry.

A twelve-pound shell from a field gun had struck the building and reduced it to a ruin. It was the first shot fired by the Government artillery in their attack on the hill of San Stafano. The rebels were taken by surprise, became panic-stricken, and instead of shaping up to defend the position began a hasty retreat.

Moris Tyler was not immediately concerned with the running fight between the loyal troops and the rebels, for the sounds of strife drifted farther away each minute from the ruined boiler house. No other shot or shell came near it. But he was much concerned about himself. He could not move. He was pinned down by some timber from the fallen roof, and all around him was a wreck of shattered walls, broken planks and beams and debris which bore no likeness to anything in particular.

Fear!

"Luck's with me, after all," he murmured. "I am not hurt, and this beam is not too heavy for me to lift. I can raise it up and crawl."

He paused with a sort of gasp, for his eyes, roving around the place, had rested on a gleaming rifle barrel. It was pointed straight at his head, and there was a man's forefinger resting on the trigger. The man was the rebel who had captured him. He was lying on his face amidst the wreckage, and there was blood streaming from a terrible wound at the side of his head. A splinter of the bursting shell had killed him.

The spy gave a sigh of relief. For a moment he had thought that the man was alive, and was taking aim at him. But his relief was of short duration. He did not like that rifle pointing so steadily at him, even though it was only held in a dead man's hand; and when he saw that the lower end of the beam which was lying across his own body rested against the man's right forearm, he liked it still less. He could not move the beam upwards; he could only move it downwards or sideways. If he shifted it ever so little, it was bound to press more heavily on the dead rebel's arm, and that would cause his stiffened finger to press on the trigger, which would fire the rifle. The bullet would enter his—Tyler's—brain, because his head was so wedged that he could not move it to one side or the other. He could raise it a little, but that would be of no advantage. The bullet would take him then somewhere about the mouth and pass upwards through the base of his skull.

He shook with fear, like a man with the ague, and the sweat streamed down his face.

It was borne in upon the spy's mind that he might lie there until he died of starvation. There was the alternative of pushing the beam a little more, so that the dead man's finger should press harder on the trigger and thus end his misery with a bullet from the menacing rifle.

Then all at once something in his brain seemed to snap. A red curtain dropped before his eyes. The noise of a rushing wind howled in his ears—and then came black oblivion.

Early the next morning two mounted men reined up close by the ruined boiler house. They were Colonel Voruba and an orderly. The fight was over, and the rebels were beaten.

"Two men in there," said the Colonel. "They may have some life in them."

The orderly dismounted and peered in among the wreckage.

"One is a rebel," he reported. "The other is Senor Tyler. Both dead."

The Answer.

"The spy!" exclaimed the Colonel.

"It is strange," said Voruba, bending over Tyler's body, "there is not a mark upon him. He has received no wound, no hurt. He could easily have lifted this beam and extricated himself."

"Look at the expression on his face even now," replied the orderly. "It was sheer terror that killed him. I have heard of such a thing. Perhaps he had a weak heart."

"Terror!" Voruba raised his eyebrows. "Ah, yes, I perceive. The loaded rifle pointing at his head, which, at the slightest movement on his part would——"

Captain Berwick interrupted him. He had picked the rifle up and opened the breech.

"He was in no danger at any time from this weapon," he said. "It is not loaded!"

Did the Vicar Stop?

It was too much. Every Sunday old Adams, who blew the organ, would continue blowing after the music had stopped, thereby producing most undesirable sounds.

Time and again had the organist taken him to task for it.

"Right, mister," had been old Adams' invariable reply. "I forgits, you know."

One Sunday the organist could stand it no longer.

The congregation had been set tittering by the old man's forgetfulness, and during the sermon the organist seized the opportunity to write him a note on the matter, and handed it to a choir boy to deliver.

Misunderstanding the whispered directions, the lad handed the note straight up to the vicar, who astoundedly read the following:

"Will you stop when I tell you to? People come here to listen to my music, not to your horrible noise."

ON HER KITCHEN STOVE

It is interesting to note that the most successful remedy for woman's ills was originally prepared nearly forty years ago by Mrs. Lydia E. Pinkham, of Lynn, Mass., by steeping roots and herbs on her kitchen stove and supplied to friends and neighbors without cost. Its fame spread; the demand grew; until now many tons of roots and herbs are used each year in order to supply this famous remedy which has proved such a marvelous success in controlling diseases of women. Merit alone could have stood this test of time.

Lady Constance Stewart Richardson on How to Acquire a Beautiful Figure Through Dancing

Written Exclusively for the Readers of This Page.

In Poses Especially Adapted for the Accompanying Article.

A swaying exercise fully described by Lady Richardson's article brings about an easy control of the waist muscles.

Practice in this lesson will do more to reduce the waistline than any other fat-reducing method known to Lady Richardson.

Incidentally it produces naturally graceful movements when walking or running.

Figure 2 is a walking exercise that has a wonderfully beneficial effect upon the whole body.

Constant practice in this exercise makes it become as easy and natural to you as when a child skipping along the street.

It is Lady Richardson's claim that all these movements are but normal, simple, human expressions.

This style of dancing, says Lady Richardson, is good for the soul as well as the body.

This is the fourth of Lady Richardson's valuable articles on dancing as an aid to natural beauty.

Another will appear on this page next week, in which the student is carried along a little further, and into a trifle more difficult exercises.

This is the first time that any newspaper has presented a series of articles in which such expert instruction and advice are given on the value of practicing natural movements for the preservation of human grace and beauty.

By Lady Constance Stewart Richardson

Copyright, 1913, by International News Service.

DANCING is one of the most characteristic and characterful things I know. It expresses the individual and the nation in perfect accord with the feelings and customs that characterize him or it.

Take, for instance, the Hungarian Czardas, the Italian Tarantelle, or the Tango of Argentina—each is characteristic of its place and clime, and however well the peoples of another nation do the dance that is not their own they still must modify it to suit their own temperament.

A Perfect Outline.

If we take the best of the moderns and add to it the finest steps of the ancients and teach our result we will get as many variations as we have individual temperaments expressing the dance we have made.

If people will stop to think what a wonderful mode of expression the dance offers them, and will study it, its music and the effect of this expression on their own temperaments, they will no longer consider the dance and the body that expresses it as something to be despised, but they will give to the body, which is capable of beauty, its due of admiration and its right to beautiful expression, which will mean that one step toward lifting instead of degrading the human body will be definitely taken through the worship of loveliness.

To help you all make your bodies so perfect in outline, in strength and in power to respond to your desire to express emotion through the great safety valve of movement is my desire.

When dancing, look happy and as if you were dancing because you love to, and as if you were dancing because you love the particular step you are taking—not doing the fashionable thing some dancing teacher had assured you was the "proper way." Make one or two steps your own, and through them teach your body to express itself without shame or consciousness in perfect happiness and rhythm.

Figure One.

Dancing is a safe and sane form of self-expression, and it is good for body as well as soul.

In Figure 1 the body is poised on the ball of one foot, while the other is raised with the leg thrown slightly backward from the knee and the toes pointing downward. A straight line from flexed knee to the tip of the toes seems to be a favorite idea of grace, as depicted by the sculpture of the ancients, and as it adds to beauty of line the benefit of strengthening instep and ankle, it is one of the little separate movements that I often incorporate in my dancing steps.

To return to Figure 1—Bend slightly at the waist toward the uplifted leg and raise the arm above the head so there will be a continuous curve from elbow to toes. A flexible waist waits upon the earnest practice of this exercise.

From elbow to wrist the arm is bent above and toward the head, while the other arm, stretched lightly out from the shoulder and parallel with it, terminates in loosely flexed wrist and hand. Sway lightly from foot to foot, and see what easily controlled muscles of the waist result.

Figure Two.

Figure 2 pictures for you a walking exercise that has a wonderfully beneficial effect on the whole body. It is a natural bodily expression such as you have often seen little children drop into quite unconsciously.

Tiptoe along from foot to foot, with the raised limb flexed at the knee and held with down-pointing toe.

Bend the body well forward from the waist, and sway it toward the lifted foot, stretching the arm over this foot back and down and the other arm forward and as you would do in feeling your way along a solid surface in the dark.

Leg, arm and waist muscles are here brought into play—and when such simple, pretty, little exercises as this become indeed play you may feel sure that you are on your way to a body beautiful and graceful.

After all, just such dance movements as this are normal, simple, human expression, and out of them we can evolve natural grace of body and movement.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

LET YOUR HEART DECIDE.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am a girl of twenty. About two years ago I met a young man, and from that time until a month ago I loved him, but he did not return my love in the way I wanted, so I thought it would be best to forget him. I am now keeping company with another young man who is very serious. Two weeks ago the first young man wrote and told me he had found no girl he could love like me. DOROTHY.

You must take the one you love most, but before you make that decision be very fair with yourself. I know nothing of the merits of the two men, but it seems to me that the first is somewhat like the dog in the manger.

He did not seek your love till some other man's attentions made it desirable.

HE IS NOT SINCERE.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am nineteen, and in love with a man three years my senior. I am really crazy over him. I think the world of him, as I think he does the same of me.

It is nearly a year since we met and fell in love with each other. He asked me to be his bride. We were to be married in a short time, but now he has excuses for not getting married. He does not write as usual, but comes up as usual. P. G. Z.

The indications are he is trying to get out of it. Save your self-respect by breaking the engagement, for, believe me, it will never end in marriage. I am sorry, dear, but this course will save you greater pain later on.

THAT IS HIS PRIVILEGE.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am a young girl of seventeen and considered good looking. I have been keeping company with a young man for several months and at a dance one night I introduced a girl to him to whom he pays more attention than to me. NORAH.

There was no engagement. He was merely your friend. I hope, under the circumstances, you will be big enough, and broad enough, to be glad you were the means of introducing him to a girl whose company delights him. That's the way to look at it, my dear.

Handsome Mr. Slatte :: A SHORT STORY COMPLETE

"I SHOULD think you would read more," suggested the girl in the grass green linen gown as she came upon the porch.

"Oh, I don't know," responded the young woman in the wicker chair, who was busy embroidering. "This is just as satisfactory as most of the popular novels."

"It's every woman's duty to improve her mind," declared the girl in the green linen. "I feel that I have done so much since the corner drug store put in its circulating library. Mr. Slatte has been such a help!"

"Mr. Slatte?" queried her friend. "What has he to do with it?"

The girl in the green linen sighed faintly. "You know," she said, "I am not the sort of girl to rave over a man's good looks. I prefer brains any time. But, really, you never in your life saw any one who looked like Mr. Slatte! He——"

"He might look like anything with that name," commented the young woman who was embroidering. "Do you mean to say he is handsome?"

"More than that," said her friend. "He has the sort of eyes that pierce with their brilliance, and such a chin! My dear, every time I see him I am reminded of that stunning portrait of Lord Byron! I am certain there is a mystery about him! He has the most perfect manners!"

A Shock.

"Where——"

"Why, he's recently taken charge of the drug store," explained the girl in the green linen. "I had just picked out a book when he came up and said he couldn't bear to see me waste my time on such a tiresome story. He said he'd be only too glad to help me find something worth while that he knew I could appreciate. I thought it so kind——"

"Kind!" said the girl who was embroidering. "I think he was impertinent. I guess if I wanted a book I'd want what I wanted."

"You don't understand at all," exclaimed the girl in green linen, patiently. "Mr. Slatte is writing a novel himself, so of course he knows perfectly what—"

"My goodness! A drug clerk and a novelist!" said the girl who was embroidering.

Her friend bristled at this. "He's not a clerk!" she said. "He's a sort of—er—manager. People generally don't know he is so literary. You don't suppose that he wastes time on everybody who comes to get a book, do you? Not that he is especially interested in me, of course—only I suppose he realizes that I have more than average intelligence. I never saw such eyes in my life! Sometimes when he smiles in that slow, sad sort of way of his I——"

"Who puts up prescriptions while he is engaged in smiling sadly?" inquired the young woman who was embroidering.

"You are perfectly horrid!" said her friend. "If you knew Mr. Slatte you'd think differently. We have had some of the most inspiring talks since we met. He always drops whatever he is doing and helps me select my books. I'm a rapid reader and have to exchange books so often.

"I'm on my way there now to get another book. I do wish I could make you see what an opportunity it is, now that Mr. Slatte is there. He has such a cultivated mind—many times he has remarked what a treat it is to him to have someone come in who is different from the average careless reader."

A Rival.

"There comes Dorothy Maye," said the girl who was embroidering. "Come in, Dorothy," she called across the railing.

"I can't just now," said the girl in question, pausing at the steps. "I'm on my way to the drug store to take back a book. There's such a nice man in charge there now—perfectly stunning, and so kind. He's writing a book himself, too. He always stops whatever he is doing to come and help me pick out something good. He says it is a treat——"

"How nice!" enthusiastically interrupted the girl who was embroidering. "Alicia is here and she is going there, too——"

"No," said the girl in grass green linen shortly. "I am not going to the drug store! I am too busy to waste time over those trashy books and to hang around a silly clerk."

Untested.

"Yes, sir," said the successful manufacturer, "no man can sell his factory products these days unless they have been thoroughly tested."

"Oh, I don't know," replied another equally successful manufacturer: "We manage to sell our product without testing it."

"You do? What is your line?"

"Dynamite."

One Woman's Story

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

CHAPTER IX.

MARY smiled reassuringly into the anxious faces of her parents bending over her as she opened her eyes after a brief period of unconsciousness. She found herself lying upon the living room couch, her forehead wet from the water which her mother had applied in the effort to "bring her around." She struggled to a sitting posture, beginning at once to explain the attack of faintness which had seized her.

"I have been working a little too hard in this warm weather," she said. "I have not felt well lately, anyway, and this is but the culmination of the weariness and strain—nothing else."

She spoke no word of the news that had held her eyes waking far into the night, nor of the blessed relief of the knowledge that the man whom she had feared was injured or dead was alive and well.

"You won't try to go to school to-day, will you?" pleaded her mother.

The girl smiled.

"It is Saturday, mother," she reminded her. "But I must go down to the Public Library to look up some matters I want to be sure of before Monday. But I will take a cup of coffee first."

She drank this when her mother brought it to her, then arose with decision.

"I am ashamed of myself to be so weak and foolish," she exclaimed. "Please, dear people, try to forget it."

"Would you like to look over the morning paper?" asked her father, eyeing her keenly.

"No, thank you!" she said quickly. "Thank you, mother, for waiting so sweetly on your silly daughter. I will go to bed early to-night and not repeat this performance of fainting. I never did such a thing quite so causelessly and suddenly before in my life."

When she had left the living room, the father and mother gazed again into each other's faces.

"The fact that she avoids the subject that made her faint shows that she cares for this young man," declared the mother. "Well, he is a nice fellow, I guess."

"I don't care how nice he is," retorted the father, "he is not half good enough for my girl. Before I consent to any serious attentions from him I am going to write to his firm and find what his record is."

"That's all right, dear," agreed the wife indulgently. "I approve of your doing that. But if the Angel Gabriel—trumpet and all—were to ask you for Mary you would not think him good enough for her."

"And he wouldn't be!" asserted the father, without a smile.

The most tender mother is willing—even, at times, glad—to have her daughter marry an honorable, well-to-do gentleman; a fond father seldom looks with favor upon any suitor for his daughter's hand.

An hour later Mary appeared in her mother's room, her hat and gloves on, ready to go out. Mrs. Danforth looked solicitously at her, but, seeing that the color had returned to her lips, she forbore to utter any protest. If the child was restless it was better to let her go. In the library she might find the books she needed for her work, they might quiet her nerves, turning her thoughts from agitating subjects.

Mrs. Danforth would have been surprised could she have seen her daughter when she reached her destination, instead of going at once in search of the volumes in which she was to "look up" certain important subjects, she went direct to the reading room of the library and was in a few minutes immersed in the morning papers. A close observer would have noticed that the only columns she read were those dealing with the recent railroad wreck and the deeds of heroism of the various uninjured passengers—the most active and bravest of whom had evidently been "the young Texan, Gordon Craig by name." As the girl read, her cheeks glowed and a soft light came to her eyes. So absorbed was she in her dreams, that she was leaving the building before she remembered that in her wrist-bag she carried a list of books of reference which she must find this morning, and, with a start, went in search of these. Somehow all literature except the newspapers seemed very dull to-day.

As it was Saturday, Mr. Danforth came home at noontime, and was there when his daughter returned a little before the luncheon hour. He greeted her brightly.

"Well!" she said jocosely, "I saw our hero this morning! Craig was at my office. He ran in to tell me that he was all right and to ask if we had seen the account of the wreck. I told him that we had, but I did not flatter him by telling him we had been badly scared about him."

Mary drew a sigh of relief. She had feared her father might mention her evident anxiety, then she reminded herself that she might have known he would not. She waited for his next remark. Although she had read and reread the newspaper accounts of Craig's heroism, she hoped to hear more about it by word of mouth. Her father answered her unspoken thought.

"He said little about himself," he went on, "and I liked him better for that. When I said that I understood he had done some pretty fine work he turned as red as a lobster and said—'It was only what any man would have done under the circumstances,' and changed the subject. So I let it drop. I asked him to come up and see us before he goes back to Texas, and he said he would try to."

"Probably he will not find time to," said Mary with studied indifference. She began to talk vivaciously of her work, of the approaching school commencement, of anything and everything except of Gordon Craig. And her father and mother, watching her, understood.

That afternoon a messenger left at her door a note for her. It was short:

"Dear Miss Danforth: Will you give me the happiness of your company to the opera next Wednesday night? I will call for you at a quarter before eight. The performance is 'Aida.'

"Faithfully yours,
"GORDON CRAIG."

The reply that the messenger carried back to Craig was even more brief than the note he had brought:

"My Dear Mr. Craig: Thank you. I will be ready at 7.45 Wednesday night.

"Sincerely yours,
"MARY DANFORTH."

A Frank Talk on Typewriters

Somehow, the impression has gained ground that there isn't much difference between the various makes of typewriters on the market.

You may think the same thing. It would take a good, SOUND, LOGICAL argument to convince you that all typewriters do not have the same efficiency and that a stenographer cannot secure the same results on every machine.

We are ready to make that argument and to show you by actual demonstration that

The L. C. Smith & Bros. Typewriter

will do more work, better work, with less fatigue to the stenographer, than any writing machine ever made.

How is this possible?

Here are a few reasons:

1. It is ball bearing throughout—others are not.
2. All operations are controlled from the keyboard.
3. It is the lightest touch machine made.
4. It does not "smut" the carbon.
5. The ribbon reverses automatically.
6. The type is so protected that it is not battered by collision.
7. One motion of the hand returns the carriage and operates the line space.
8. It has an inbuilt biller and tabulator.
9. No trouble to write on paper as small as a postage stamp.
10. It is built for service.

FIVE TEAMS TO BATTLE IN RACE FOR 30 MINUTES

Big Thriller Slated for Motor Bugs at Prince's Saucer on Tuesday Night.

A HALF-HOUR team race is to be the big feature at the Motordrome to-morrow night, and for the really jammy excitement this should top anything that has been staged yet at Jack Prince's saucer.

Five teams will be in the long grind. And what a wrangle the ten riders had trying to get matched up! Finally Morty Graves suggested that the partners be found by a drawing. Manager Noon Hudson put all the numbers in his new straw lid and the result was:

Graves and McNeil, Schwartz and Lockner, Shields and Richards, Luther and Lewis, Renel and Glenn.

These teams appear to be very evenly matched. Graves and McNeil will probably rule favorites, with Richards and Shields second choice.

No rider will be allowed to remain on the track over twenty successive minutes. But each rider can call for his partner as often as he desires. The partners who are not racing will remain in front of the paddock. The partner riding must drop off the track and touch his teammate on the shoulder before the latter can take up the racing.

It sure will be a thrilling event if all goes well.

The Motordrome Sweepstakes is the second feature event. All the riders will start, five in each qualifying heat. The qualifying heats will be over a one-mile course, while the final will be two miles.

Harry Glenn, who defeated Schwartz the other night, will meet Luther in a match race. It will be the two best heats in three over a two-mile circuit. Glenn is a local boy and he will be backed heavily to down his worthy opponent.

* * *

FOLLOWING is the complete card for Tuesday night:

First Event.

First heat Motordrome Sweepstakes (One mile to qualify and two-mile final.) Starters—Graves, Shields, Richards, Renel, Lewis.

Second Event.

First heat of a match race between Glenn and Luther. (Race to be two best heats in three.) Distance—two miles.

Third Event.

Second heat of Motordrome Sweepstakes. Starters—Schwartz, Lockner, Luther, McNeil, Glenn.

Fourth Event.

Second heat of match race between Glenn and Luther.

Fifth Event.

Final heat of Motordrome Sweepstakes. (Winners of first and second heats and second man in fastest heat to start.)

Sixth Event.

Third heat of match race between Glenn and Luther, if necessary.

Seventh Event.

Half-hour team race. Teams—Graves and McNeil; Schwartz and Lockner; Shields and Richards; Luther and Lewis; Renel and Glenn. (No rider can remain on track over twenty consecutive minutes.)

Wolgast and Ritchie May Sign Articles

LOS ANGELES, July 28.—Eager to nail down Ad Wolgast to his offer—a $25,000 side bet for a return match—Willie Ritchie to-day is making a desperate effort to get the former titleholder to meet him to-day and sign articles. On Saturday, Wolgast posted with James J. Jeffries $1,000, part of a $25,000 side bet, in a twenty-round title contest with Ritchie. Wolgast specified that half is to go that he will from the title-holder in twenty rounds, the other half that he knocks out, stop or force Ritchie to uit inside of the limit.

Ritchie lost no time in accepting the offer when he learned that there was seriousness to Ad's movements, and he asked Jeffries to affect a meeting between he and Ad for this afternoon in the hope that articles might be signed. Ritchie leaves here for 'risco Wednesday afternoon and he would like to close the match before starting. Should the pair come together they will clash either September 1 or 9

Pelky in No Hurry to Fight Theatrical Tour Awaits Champ

By W. W. Naughton.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 28.—Arthur Pelky, the new white heavyweight champion, possesses most of the facial characteristics of the professional pugilist, but it can scarcely be said that he has a fighting eye.

Now, do not misunderstand me.

There is nothing in Pelky's look to suggest that he is lacking in courage, but, sizing him up as he sat in my den yesterday, I could not help thinking how different he was from other brand-new champions I had known. In most cases the eye of a freshly-fledged champ glints with a mixture of pride and defiance. If looks could be construed into words the look to which I refer would read, "I can lick anything that walks in two shoes."

Pelky's eyes are large and dark—the eyes of a man who broods. To me it almost seemed as if the shadow of that fearful experience he had in the ring at Calgary was still upon him. The suspicion was confirmed by his evident reluctance to talk about the recent past and his palpable inclination to talk about ringmen other than himself. To the majority of champions the recital of how they won their spurs gives unbounded pleasure. To Pelky the recollection brings a shudder.

* * *

PELKY is tall, squarely built and has a strong jaw and large, firmly-knit hands. He is big enough to tackle anything in human shape. He is here with Tommy Burns, once world's champion in his own right, but now fallen into flesh and quite content to be known as a connoisseur.

Tommy is Pelky's manager, and the manner in which Burns discovered that Pelky was worth managing was not the least interesting thing he had to tell. Pelky went to Calgary to box six rounds with Burns. While the affair was in progress the beauties of Pelky's character as a fighter unfolded to Tommy. At the end of the bout Tommy was all in, and an hour later Tommy was Pelky's manager.

"We are in no hurry to make matches," said Burns. "We have twelve weeks' work in the theaters, beginning at Pantages next week, and in the meantime the Gunboat Smith-Jim Flynn match will be decided and the winner will stand forth as a challenger of Pelky. If Smith wins, and I think he will——"

"Pardon me," said Pelky in a soft-voiced way. "I think Flynn will defeat Smith."

"Well, anyway, you'll be ready to sign with the winner," resumed Tommy.

"And if it is Smith you'll like it all the better. You have always wanted to box him, haven't you?"

Pelky nodded his approval.

* * *

BURNS and Pelky were reminded that Sam Langford, the negro pugilist, is back from Australia, and were asked how overtures for a Pelky-Langford match would be regarded.

"I want it to be understood that I will never box a colored man," said Pelky. "Some time ago when the promoters of the country decided to discourage the making of mixed matches and contests were arranged to decide who was the white heavyweight champion, I thought it one of the best moves ever made in pugilism. I am still of that way of thinking. I call myself the white champion, and feel that I have every right to do so, but if the public took the stand that I ought to accept matches with negroes, I'd be willing to drop out of the game entirely."

* * *

"I THINK he's right," said Burns. "Of course I fought a negro when I met Jack Johnson, but if I had my time to go over again he would wait a long time for a match. To tell the truth, I never wanted to fight Johnson. I was offered big money by the National Club of London, and I turned it down. When I went to Australia and the question came up again, I said that I wanted every cent of $30,000 before I'd go into the ring with Johnson. It was a lot of money, but McIntosh produced it, and then there was no getting out of it, so far as I was concerned.

"And talking of public opinion in such matters, I have lived to learn that a fighter should not lay too much stress upon public opinion. It shifts and veers too much. Before I boxed Johnson I used to receive letters taunting me with being afraid to meet the negro. After I went against him and lost my title the letters still came in. But their tone had changed. I was reviled for having given a negro a chance at the championship."

* * *

WHEN matchmaking is in order, it is just possible that a trip to Australia will be included in the Burns-Pelky itinerary. In response to a message from out yonder, Burns has cabled that Pelky will be willing to take the journey and engage in a series of three fights.

Tommy has named as possible opponents for Pelky: Jim Flynn, Jess Willard, Jim Coffey, Al Palzer and Gunboat Smith.

B. JOHNSON'S RAGE.
(In one week.)

FIRST DAY.

THE Magnate tore his seldom hair
And roared in fearsome rage:
"What's this? Ye gods; What this I lamp upon the sporting page?
Jake Stahl is canned—my own pick—Jake!
Oh, gimme room to cuss!
I'll show those Boston guys they can't
Make us ridiculous!"

THIRD DAY.

The Magnate speeded to the West—
The wild news speeded, too;
In Cleveland he was cornered by
Reporters quite a few.
"Ahem!" he said. "About Jake Stahl—
I do not care to state
My full conclusions at this time—
I must investigate."

SEVENTH DAY.

At last he makes his lakeside home;
And Fandom stands agog
To watch the mighty gaeswar put
Those ingrates on the hog!
And now the crushing sentence comes—
With quite some 'pshaw" and "pish"—
"In this I can not interfere.
E'en if I had the wish!"

* * *

JIM FLYNN says without a smile that he is "going to train" for his fight with Gunboat Smith.

THERE IS TALK OF PRE-serving Hans Wagner's uniform in a Pittsburg museum. Posterity's grasp of our national game would be safe if added to this were Ty Cobb's spikes, McGraw's vocabulary and the skull of the peanut butcher. Any fan will be glad to contribute the latter.

EVERS HAS BENCHED BRESnahan for disobedience, the only wonder being that in that combination someone was not benched or biffed long since.

BROWN COMES BACK, HURLS IN OLD-TIME FORM

MORDECAI BROWN is not through. In fact, it looks as if Manager Joe Tinker, of the Reds, said very true words when in the spring he claimed that the three-fingered wonder still had a lot of good baseball left in him. True, Brown is not hurling the kind of ball he did several seasons ago, but just the same, Johnny Evers could use him at present, and to good advantage.

After Brown had helped the Cubs to four pennants and two world's championships, his arm went to the bad in 1912. When the off season came, C. Webb Murphy thought he would not need the three-fingered boy any more, and shipped him to the minors.

But Joe Tinker, new manager of the Reds, thought different. Joe was with "Brownie" a long time, and when he was shipped to the A. A., he and Garry Herrmann arranged a deal whereby Miner would come back to the National League. And it looks as if they made no error in securing Brown.

Beats Old Mates Twice.

Maybe now C. Webb Murphy and Johnny Evers see they made a big mistake in releasing the former star of the Cubs. Recently when the Reds were playing the Bruins, the three-fingered hurler took a pair of games from Johnny Evers' gang, one of them being a shutout, in which only six base knocks were made off him.

When Tinker secured Brown, it was for the simple reason to use him as a coach for his young moundmen. He was carried until May 1 before he made his appearance on the firing line. Since the hot weather arrived, though, Brown's good right arm seems to be as good as ever, and he is taking his regular turn on the mound for his club.

Has Good Record.

Although Brown is not winning as regular or working quite as often as he did a few years back, he has a record which is far better than the one owned by his club.

Miner has won seven games and lost six this campaign. That's a percentage of .538. The Reds own a mark of .380, so it can be seen that Brownie is 158 points ahead of his team.

So far this season Brown has appeared in 22 games, being used as a relief hurler most of the time. In these 22 contests he has worked 95 innings.

The Dodgers are trying hard to get back in the first division. They shoved the Reds back twice yesterday and a victory to-day, plus a defeat for the Pirates, will put the teams on even terms at the foot of the leading four.

A report is in circulation here that Joe Tinker, manager of the Reds, will give up his position at shortstop and direct the fortunes of the club from the bench.

MAGNATE REFUSES TO OBEY COMMISSION'S RULING

LOS ANGELES, CAL., July 28.—Henry Berry, president of the Los Angeles baseball club of the Coast League, said to-day he would not obey the baseball law which forbids a class AA team to carry more than twenty players in the middle of the season.

"If the National Commission decided that I should pay a fine I will not do it," said Berry.

Charles Arbogast, a catcher, is expected to join the Los Angeles team to-morrow. This would make 21 players. Berry declared to-day he would not release any of the old men for the reason that three of his players were in the hospital.

Cross-Baldwin Battle To-morrow Matty Has Great Ring Record

By Harry Gilmore, Jr.

LOS ANGELES, CAL., July 28.—Next in line on the Vernon fistic slate is the twenty-round engagement to-morrow night between Matty Baldwin, of Boston, and Leach Cross, of New York City. What better fistic offering could be asked, barring an immediate championship encounter with Willie Ritchie as one of the principals, than those two crack Eastern lightweights?

Cross and Baldwin have long since been bitter rivals, and after repeated efforts on the part of Eastern promoters to bring them together without avail, they will now settle the old score with twenty rounds in which to bring about a result which should be decisive. Cross has forever found the Bostonian a thorn in his side, and carefully analyzing their respective records it seems he might well have found him a formidable foe.

* * *

BALDWIN has had in excess of 150 fights in the eleven years in which he has been in the ring, and has met the best of the lightweights of recent years, barring the old warrior, Battling Nelson. Baldwin won and lost a 12-round decision to Owen Moran in January and February, respectively, of 1910, when Moran was at his best. He had previously drawn in limited bouts with Tommy Murphy and Abe Attell in New York City, when the foxy Abe and the Harlem scrapper were at the zenith of their careers. He lost to Cross on a foul in eight rounds, May 13, 1910, in New York City, when, it is claimed, he had Cross beaten and practically out. Baldwin visited the coast just two years ago and took Freddie Welsh for twenty rounds at San Francisco, June 23, losing the decision after going the limit. Only two months later he was returned a winner in the twentieth round over the now present champion, Willie Ritchie. In April of 1911 he met Cross for ten rounds in New York, and although a no-decision affair, the press awarded Baldwin the verdict. Baldwin has since drawn with Joe Mandot, and is credited with a fairly even ten rounds just recently with Jack Britton, while best of all, his last engagement, a decisive win over Young Shugrue in New York, speaks his praises. Shugrue took a decision from Cross some months before the latter came West for the Anderson engagement, so on the dope the Boston boy figures very strongly against his Leaches.

* * *

MATTY has completed training for the bout, and shows a confidence that inspires some of the Cross adherents to believe that there is indeed a doubtful chance for their entry; and, from present indications the getting price will be a pretty even thing.

"I know Cross and his fighting style about as well as any one of the fighters who have met him," said Baldwin in discussing the match. "He knows that I have little fear of any of the wallops that he carries, and when it comes to the rough stuff that is where I have his number, and he knows it. When I took him on in New York I had him bad, and would have finished him had it been a longer bout. With twenty rounds to go, I am satisfied that I can land a decisive victory, and then I want the chance that I have hoped for to clash with Ritchie for the championship."

SWEENEY WILL GET $50 FOR LONG HIT SATURDAY

NEW YORK, July 28.—Ed Sweeney, the big catcher of the Yankees, who had been out of the game on account of injury, won $50 Saturday by hitting the "bull" sign in right field with a fairly batted fly ball. This is the first time the feat has been accomplished since the new Brush stadium was built.

CRACKERS FACE HARD FINISH AFTER GULLS

Five Games in Three Days at Home, Then the Final Road Trip.

By O. B. Keeler.

Oh, something's got into the eyes of the Crackers,
A-smoking the lamps of our sterling pill-whackers;
Long, agonized shrieks emanate from their backers
Far away in the distance a-viewing it;
We can't get a line on their recent futility;
We know they are scatters of sterling ability,
Who pepper the pill with excessive virility—
Butthehelofitistheyain'tdoingit!

* * *

DESPITE the charitable interference of the weather man on a number of occasions, our brave la-a-ads (tremolo stop) continue to skid recklessly toward the second division. Only the Barons remain betwixt them and the lid, which position is thinly occupied by the dejected Lookouts.

It would be entirely possible, depending on what happens to Birmingham and Chattanooga, for the Crackers to detrain in this town Thursday, installed as leaders of the basement quartet.

Of course, the Gulls and their doings cut the deepest into the calculations. They have been tough for the Crackers all season, and, with the race in its present scrambled condition, there is no reason to suspect they will suddenly become docile.

Passing over the Gulls with a respectful nod, then, it may be just as well to look over the remaining prospects of the season.

* * *

NO matter in what shape the Smithmen return Thursday, they will confront the proposition of taking on the Volunteers for five games in three days, the same being Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

The situation of the Vols in the league standing is not dignified enough to inspire much reverence. But it must be recalled that Schwariz has some raw material on hand which he naturally will be eager to shoot. And some of it may be loaded.

Then there is the question of twoply entertainments.

In the face of what happened recently in Montgomery, we insist that the conventional method of prorating a double bill is for each side to take one. And that is precisely what the Crackers do not require just now—and won't require the latter part of this week.

Five or six games back of the lead, Bill Smith's hands need two out of three from now on—and a shade more wouldn't hurt.

One double-header is regularly scheduled for Friday afternoon. The league program is responsible for that. Then there is a tie contest holding over from the last visit of the Vols. That probably will be shot off Thursday, by way of openers.

Anyway, if the sky can be caulked, there's a furious little series booked for the last three days in this week.

* * *

THEN the Crackers hit the "Trail of the Lonesome Nine" once more.

Chattanooga first, for three games, August 4, 5 and 6. Then the final visit to Nashville, which may witness the playing off of the well known disputed contest earlier in the season. The closing road games of the season of 1913 will be played in Birmingham, August 11, 12 and 13.

* * *

HOME again, for a little house party at which every club in the league will be on the guest list except Nashville.

There are 22 games scheduled for the grand finale, and four tied or postponed affairs. They will be played in this order: Chattanooga 4; Birmingham 3; New Orleans 6; Mobile 4; and Chattanooga again for one game, September 6.

But in the meantime, there is Mobile.

* * *

AND it is possible that Billy Smith was figuring on that long home wind-up, with the chance to land the flag in a grueling finish, when he signed the giant southpaw, Love, leading slabman of the Cotton States League.

Love will make the third forkhander on the Cracker firing line. With an equal number of right-handers, Billy can settle down on the home lot and dare all of 'em to knock off the chip. It won't make much difference whether the opposition sports a majority of portsiders or not. Bill will be loaded for both kinds of game.

* * *

THE new cock-eye is six and a half feet long and comes up with a savory reputation that includes 29 firsts out of 29 starts in the Cotton States. He has a no-hit, no-run game on his list, and four consecutive shut-outs, in the directing of which he issued only three bases on balls. Control is said to be his best bet.

That sounds encouraging, anyway.

POOR ABIE IS THROUGH; HAS LITTLE CLASS LEFT

NEW YORK, July 28.—Abie Attell had better give up the Queensberry pastime. Abe has something left in the ducking and the nodding of the head in getting away from some wicked punches, but that is about all.

His latest opponent was Willie Beecher, the well-known mitt man of the East Side, and the contest took place at the Atlantic Athletic Club of Rockaway. There was a rather good gathering of the fight fans. They were of the opinion that Abe would hand out some of that old championship stuff that made him famous in the days of long ago. The person who suffered the most at the bout was Referee Draycott. Abe's judgment of distance was bad in the fifth, sixth and eighth rounds, and he swinged the judge three times.

The winner of the bout was Beecher. The latter, after finding out that Attell was not there any more, chased Abe around the ring, and Beecher had a difficult time in catching his opponent. Beecher did his best work in the sixth and seventh rounds. From the fifth round to the finish, Beecher was the busy man and he had enough lead in the first five to give him the fight. All that Abe had was a bad lip as he came out of the ring.

How Fogel Will Wreck Majors

Dryden Makes Big "Discovery"

Charles Dryden.

HONORABLE HORACE FOGEL is getting ready to absorb both big circuits and put the magnates on the bum. He has said it, and what Horace says goes. As the present major leagues are a joke, Horace will start a lieutenant-colonel league for a change, grabbing off all the star talent now employed grinding out the national pastime.

The new organization should be accomplished without much trouble. Mr. Fogel talked himself out of the old league, and he is now engaged asking himself into the new one, or lieutenant-colonel league, to distinguish it from the old majors. Horace has his towns for the circuit booked out already yet once. They are New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Pittsburg, Cleveland, Chicago and St. Louis. That makes seven, and they need one more. The eighth city will be either Boston, Indianapolis or Kansas City. If Horace included both Boston and Kansas City, look what a fine jump the athletes would have from Boston to play a Sunday game at Kansas City.

Backers of New League Named.

The financial backers of the lieutenant-colonel league are said to be Otto Steifel, of St. Louis, and Jeff Livingston, the well-known pickle expert of Cincinnati. Mr. Steifel is behind the Federal League at St. Louis, and Mr. Livingston is in the pickle and tomato ketchup line at Cincy. They are to furnish the money, and Horace will supply the words. It is claimed that Horace has landed all the stars worth having in the two major circuits, but the statement is discredited, because Tom Needham has not been signed by the lieutenant-colonels. We are inclined to believe that if there were anything in the new organization, Mr. Needham would not have been overlooked. If Tom is not a star, where could they find one?

Be that as it may, the lieutenant-colonel league will be in full operation next spring, and the magnates of the two so-called major leagues will be begging for peanut concessions and hot dog stands in the parks of the new baseball body. They made a goat of Horace, and now he is getting back at them.

His Investigation Sidetracked.

His investigation of the trust was sidetracked, and just for that the National and American must get out of business for all time. By next Fourth of July we will hear of Pittsburg, New York and Cleveland selling their new steel stands for old iron. It is an awful picture to contemplate, but the magnates showed Horace no mercy, and he is determined not to spare them in the hour of retribution. Otherwise Horace is a mighty good fellow.

P. S.—Mr. Fogel has prepared an advance statement of 8,000 words in reference to the new league, which statement was to have been released simultaneously with a lot of papers on July 7.

Double P. S.—We do not know why the statement was not released on July 7.

VETERAN COACH GREAT HELP TO JOE BOEHLING

By Senator.

WASHINGTON, July 28.—Quiet, observing everything, but saying little, always ready with a cheering word for some youngster to turn a rebuke into a joke, Jack Ryan, the veteran backstop and scout, is one of the uplifting influences among the Washington Senators. He isn't going around with banners flying, proclaiming his deeds from every housetop, but he is the man who has made it possible for Joe Boehling to pitch winning ball.

After much haggling to no end, the writer succeeded in getting Ryan to explain the system he has taught Boehling and is now teaching Joe Engel. He belittled even that system, notwithstanding Boehling's success since he began following the veteran's advice.

"It's a simple thing," finally broke out Ryan. "I began teaching those two kids this spring at Charlottesville. They were wild as hawks and careless of following directions. I noticed that all they ever did when they went into the box was to wind up and let her go. They didn't take even enough time to see where the plate was.

* * *

"SO I said to Boehling one day: 'Take your time. Think about every ball you pitch. Try to do something with it. Aim at something. Pay the closest attention to your stride. Then you will get control, and that's all you need to ge a good pitcher.'

"Well, at first Boehling couldn't understand these directions. He would forget what he had to do. Griff kept me working with him constantly, however, and finally I got Joe where he could think of all these things at the same time. Immediately he began to pitch winning ball, and he will continue just so long as he follows those directions.

"It was the same way with Engel. He is fully equipped to be a winning pitcher. I never saw a better-looking youngster in baseball. But he didn't know anything about his job. He never considered what he had to do. He pitched into the stride used by the other pitcher, even if it were two feet short of his own. It was impossible for him to win that way. He couldn't get his 'stuff' on the ball. I kept insisting on his using proper stride and thinking about every ball that left his hand. That's all pitching amounts to, granting that you have speed and a curve ball. But it was hard for those kids to understand this, and it took a lot of time before they got it into their heads."

And this is all that Jack Ryan has to say about his making two good pitchers for the Climbers.

* * *

WHEN you think it over, Ryan ought to be a wise counselor for young fellows. He has been in baseball 28 years, starting when a mere kid. In all that time he has never learned to drink or smoke. His personal habits are irreproachable, his example for young players a thing for the gods. Manager Griffith could not have obtained a better coach for his youngsters. Seldom does he use a harsh word, never a profane. Never does he criticise a player on any other team.

Ryan's last active service was as manager of the Jersey City club of the Eastern, now the International League. There he worked behind the bat regularly, always maintaining a high average. He broke in with the Baltimore team when it was composed of thugsand knockout men. Always quiet, he had to fight to remain with the Orioles. And he fought and stayed. Later he saw several years of service under Frank Selee on the Boston club. He was captain of the Detroit American League team in 1902, finally drifting to the minors, where he managed several teams, ending with Jersey City.

YACHTING DE LUXE.

Oh, would I were a sailor
Upon the rolling seas,
And beat it hence from spot to spot
Upon my large and gilded yacht,
Nor cared for any breeze.

Oh, would I were a sailor
Upon the billows blest,
And I could say: "Come hither, Steve!
I have a thirst thou shouldst retrieve,"
And he would do the rest.

Oh, would—I were a sailor
And owned a yacht of steam.
But one must be a pirate bold
And trim the landsman of his gold
To realize that dream.

Every time a fight manager offers to bet $10,000 one is led to wonder whether Confederate money still is being used.

A doctor having discovered that no bones are broken in Heinie Zim's ankle, the inference is that his ankle bones are made of the same substance as his head.

An X-Ray examination of the Great Zim reveals the fact that his temperament is suffering from a malignant attack of gout.

When one learns that Hal Chase has made five boots in one game, one will not be surprised to hear that Joe Dunn has swiped five bases in the same interval.

The latest scandal in the Sport of Kings in England merely reflects the spirit of the times. A king these days is looked upon generally as a nine-spot.

It is claimed in England that the prevalence of foul riding there is due to the American style of wearing short stirrups. Even our English brethren have learned to pass the buck.

Bill Peet, a Washington scout, says he discovered Joe Boehling, and seven American League teams have discovered that Bill Peet is some discoverer.

Suggestion to Milwaukee sporting editors: Why not organize a few boxing clubs?

It still is early to pass judgment on Laverne Chappelle but up to date he has earned approximately $1.75 of his purchase price.

Members of Frank Chance's team wear black sweaters, but even that does not fill the bill. What they need is crepe.

On the theory that misery loves company, Boston and St. Louis baseball bugs may organize a Mutual Sympathy Society.

GULLS DRAW THOMPSON IN GAME TO-DAY

By Joe Agler.

MOBILE, ALA., July 28.—The Gulls, ably assisted by a person named Monk, who was not in uniform, managed to cop the jump game of this series yesterday in spite of a grand exhibition of pitching by Dent and plucky defensive play by a badly crippled Cracker team. Thompson and Dunn will be the battery to-day, and we are going to try to get even.

Dent pitched one of his best games since joining the Crackers, and deserved to win. But the attack of his mates was not sufficient to overcome a one-run lead, and Hogg, who also pitched excellent ball, finished in front, 2 to 1, the result setting the Crackers down another full game in the pennant chase, as Montgomery also won.

Bill Bailey was examined by an X-ray specialist here and it was shown that he is suffering from a fractured rib, which will keep him out of the line-up several days. Whitey Alperman was taken suddenly ill with what appeared to be a touch of appendicitis, and was unable to play yesterday, but probably will try to work in this afternoon's game.

The worst feature of the contest yesterday was the arrest of Joe Dunn, at the instance of a person named Monk, who is interested in the Mobile club, the way I understand the matter. Joe was charged with swearing while arguing with Umpire Wright about a hit Joe thought was foul. Wright says Joe didn't swear, Catcher Schmidt says the same thing and so do all the players who were in hearing of the argument. But Joe was lugged off the field and Chapman had to come in from right to take his place, while Gilbert Price went to the outer works.

Joe wasn't locked up. Friends promptly arranged for bond, and he will be back in the game this afternoon.

KILBANE WILL START WORLD TRIP NEXT JUNE

CLEVELAND, July 28.—Johnny Kilbane's long-promised trip back to the old sod in Ireland has now been extended into a trip around the world, and Manager Jimmie Dunn announced yesterday that it will start next June.

The globe-trotting plans were brought about by the receipt of an invitation for Johnny to bring his featherweight title to Australia and box the best boys. Cal Delaney will probably make the tour with Johnny.

"Kilbane will fight a few battles this winter," stated Dunn, "but he will not begin his next hard campaign till he gets to the other side of the water next summer. Then he will go after the best boys in England and Ireland, and will follow that with a campaign in France and any old continental European country where the inducements are right.

"After that it's around the globe to Australia. The offer there comes from Snowie Baker, the big fight promoter at Sydney, and will be accepted."

DODGE MAY GO TO VOLS; INDIANS SECURE NELSON

CINCINNATI, July 28.—Pitcher Albert Nelson, who was sold by the Reds to Nashville, but refused to report there, has been disposed of to Indianapolis. The Cincinnati club will send Nashville another player in place of Nelson, possibly Infielder Dodge, recently secured from the Phillies in exchange for Becker.

YOUNGSTERS FOR BLOOMINGTON.

BLOOMINGTON, ILL., July 28.—The Bloomington management, in an effort to check the losing streak of its club, has signed two promising youngsters. They are Outfielder Ralph Craig, of Sioux City, and Pitcher John Duggan, of the Southern League.

Atlanta Should Have Polo Club

Will Introduce Game August 6

THE most rabid poloist's appetite will be satisfied at Fort McPherson on Wednesday afternoon, August 6.

Here are some of the events carded by those interested in the plan to form the Atlanta Polo Club:

Polo match between the Fort McPherson quartet and an All-Southern team, which will consist of Tom Weaver, Lamar Hill, Dr. J. O. Seamans, local players, and experts from surrounding Southern clubs.

A tug-of-war on polo ponies.

A polo pony race.

A "polo pony" musical program furnished by the Fort McPherson military band.

A "polo pony" concert by Company M Glee Club.

And in hope of encouraging those who will be unable to attend to become interested in the game, moving pictures will be taken of the struggle and thrown on local screens a day or two after the match.

It will be the biggest society event ever held in Atlanta. It is to be hoped that the game will "take strong," for if it does, the Atlanta Polo Club will surely be formed.

A big tract of land will be purchased and a clubhouse erected. There are enough Atlantans who play the game to form an excellent team with very little coaching. Within a very few months the local club could arrange games with teams from all parts of the country, and not be afraid of defeat.

A worthy aim would be to develop players for the International Cup team. New Yorkers have had this all to themselves for some time, but Atlanta, like Camden, Augusta and Jacksonville, could in time probably develop some "big leaguers."

RINGSIDE NOTES

Jack White has finally secured a match with Johnny Dundee. Tom McCarey signed the pair yesterday to meet in a 20-round bout at his Vernon arena on August 12. They are to box at catch weights.

* * *

Coast fans are looking for Matty Baldwin to give Leach Cross a tough argument when the two lightweights get together at Los Angeles to-morrow night. Matty's great fights against Freddie Welsh and Willie Ritchie are still remembered by the Pacific coasters.

* * *

Ad Wolgast, Willie Ritchie, Johnny Dundee, Joe Rivers and Jack White will be at the ringside when Cross and Baldwin exchange blows. All these boys have big followers out West.

* * *

Sam Langford and Joe Jeannette have been matched to box twenty rounds at Los Angeles on September 29.

* * *

Johnny Kilbane, who has been holdfast to his title as featherweight champion, says that he is going to tour the world after visiting Ireland, and will meet all the good boys as he goes along. Perhaps he can find some amusement and some dollars scattered in his pathway.

* * *

Mike Saul is one fighter who thinks Kid Young can defeat Charlie Lee, providing the fighting newsboy gets into shape. Saul refereed the former scrap between the pair and says condition is all that kept Young from winning.

* * *

Spider Britt is walking the streets with a chip on his shoulders these days. Spider wants to know why the fighters around here are continually dodging a match with him. Britt is anxious to get on with Lee or Young and says he will give either of them a neat side bet.

* * *

Billy Lutz, manager of Eddie Hanlon, has a few words to say regarding Mike Saul. Lutz called at the Georgian Sporting department yesterday and said that he would gladly send his protege against Mike, if the latter will agree to let Eddie weigh 128 pounds at 3 o'clock. Billy is also prepared to put up $25 to go as a weight forfeit and side bet. Billy wants to meet Saul at this office this afternoon at 4 o'clock.

* * *

Jack Britton appears to be the easiest lightweight in the world to deal with when it comes to making a match. Britton is always ready to take on the best of them, while Billy Manager, Jimmy Morgan, stands by with a few nickels to wager on his protege's chances.

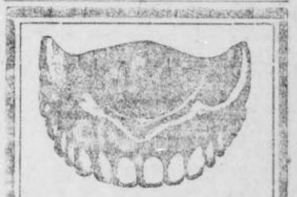

* * *

The proposed return scrap between Johnny Williams and Eddie Campi at Los Angeles has been called off and Williams, accompanied by his manager, Sammy Harris, has left for New York. Williams asked $3,000 for his services, a sum that McCarey refused to grant.

Carl Morris, the Oklahoma heavyweight, knocked out Al Benedict in the fifth round of a scheduled 15-round go the other night.

OHNE WINS RACE.

NEW YORK, July 28.—Paul Ohne, of Brooklyn, won the three-cornered match race at Brighton Motodrome last night, thereby earning the right to meet Arthur Chappelle, the champion motorcyclist.

Who Makes the "Criminals?"

Did This View of It Ever Occur to You?

(Copyright, 1913.)

Much interest just now in CRIMINALS.

Much horror aroused by depravity.

Many plans more or less appropriate for making the air pure.

Many good men, politicians, women and bishops who spend the summer at the seaside are willing to spend a few days wiping "CRIME" off the earth.

What is CRIME? Who are the CRIMINALS? Who makes the criminals?

Do criminals viciously and voluntarily arise among us, eager to lead hunted lives, eager to be jailed at intervals, eager to crawl in the dark, dodge policemen, work in stripes and die in shame? Hardly.

Will you kindly and patiently follow the lives, quickly sketched, of a boy and a girl?

THE GIRL.

Born poor, born in hard luck, her father, or mother, or both, victims of long hours, poor fare, bad air and little leisure.

As a baby she struggles against fate and manages to live while three or four little brothers and sisters die and go back to kind earth.

She crawls around the rooms of a small house, a good deal in the way. She is hunted here and chased there.

She is cold in winter, ill-fed in summer, never well cared for.

She gets a little so-called education. Ill-dressed and ashamed beside the other children, she is glad to escape the education. No one at home can help her on. No one away from home cares about her.

She grows up white, sickly, like a potato sprouting in a cellar. At the corner of a fine street she sees the automobiles passing with other girls in warm furs, or in fine, cool summer dresses.

With a poor shawl around her and with heels run down she peers in at the restaurant window, to see other women leading lives very different from hers.

Steadily she has impressed upon her the fact, absolutely undeniable, that as the world is organized there is no especial place for her—certainly no comfort for her.

She finds work, perhaps. Hours as long as the daylight.

Ten minutes late—half a day's fine.

At the end of the day aching feet, aching back, system ill-fed, not enough earned to live upon honestly—and that prospect stretches ahead farther than her poor eyes can see.

"WHAT'S THE CHARGE, OFFICER?"

"Disorderly conduct, Your Honor."

There's the criminal that Society is hunting so ardently.

THE BOY.

Same story, practically.

He plays ball in the street—cuffed, if caught by the policeman.

He swings on the awning poles, trying to exercise his stunted muscles—cuffed again.

In burning July, with shirt and trousers on, he goes swimming in private ponds—caught and cuffed and handed over to the police.

He tries for work.

"What do you know?"

"I don't know nothin'; nobody ever taught me."

He can not even endure the discipline of ten hours' daily shoveling—it takes education to instill discipline, if only the education of the early pick and shovel.

He has not been taught anything. He has been turned loose in a city full of temptation. He had no real start to begin with, and no effort was ever made to repair his evil beginning.

"WHAT'S THE CHARGE, OFFICER?"

"Attempted burglary; pleads guilty."

In prison he gets an education. They teach him how to be a good burglar and not get caught. Patiently the State boards him, and educates him to be a first-rate criminal.

There's your first-rate criminal, Messrs. Bishops, good men, politicians and benevolent women.

Dear bishops, noble women, good men and scheming politicians, listen to this story:

In the South Sea Islands they have for contagious diseases a horror as great as your horror of crime.

A man or woman stricken with a loathsome disease, such as smallpox, is seized, isolated, and the individual sores of the smallpox patient are earnestly scraped with sea shells—until the patient dies. It hurts the patient a good deal—without ever curing, of course—but it relieves the feelings of the outraged good ones who wield the sea shells.

You kind-hearted creatures, hunting "crime" in great cities, are like the South Sea Islanders in their treatment of smallpox.

You ardently wield your reforming sea shells and you scrape very earnestly at the sores so well developed.

No desire here to decry your earnest efforts.

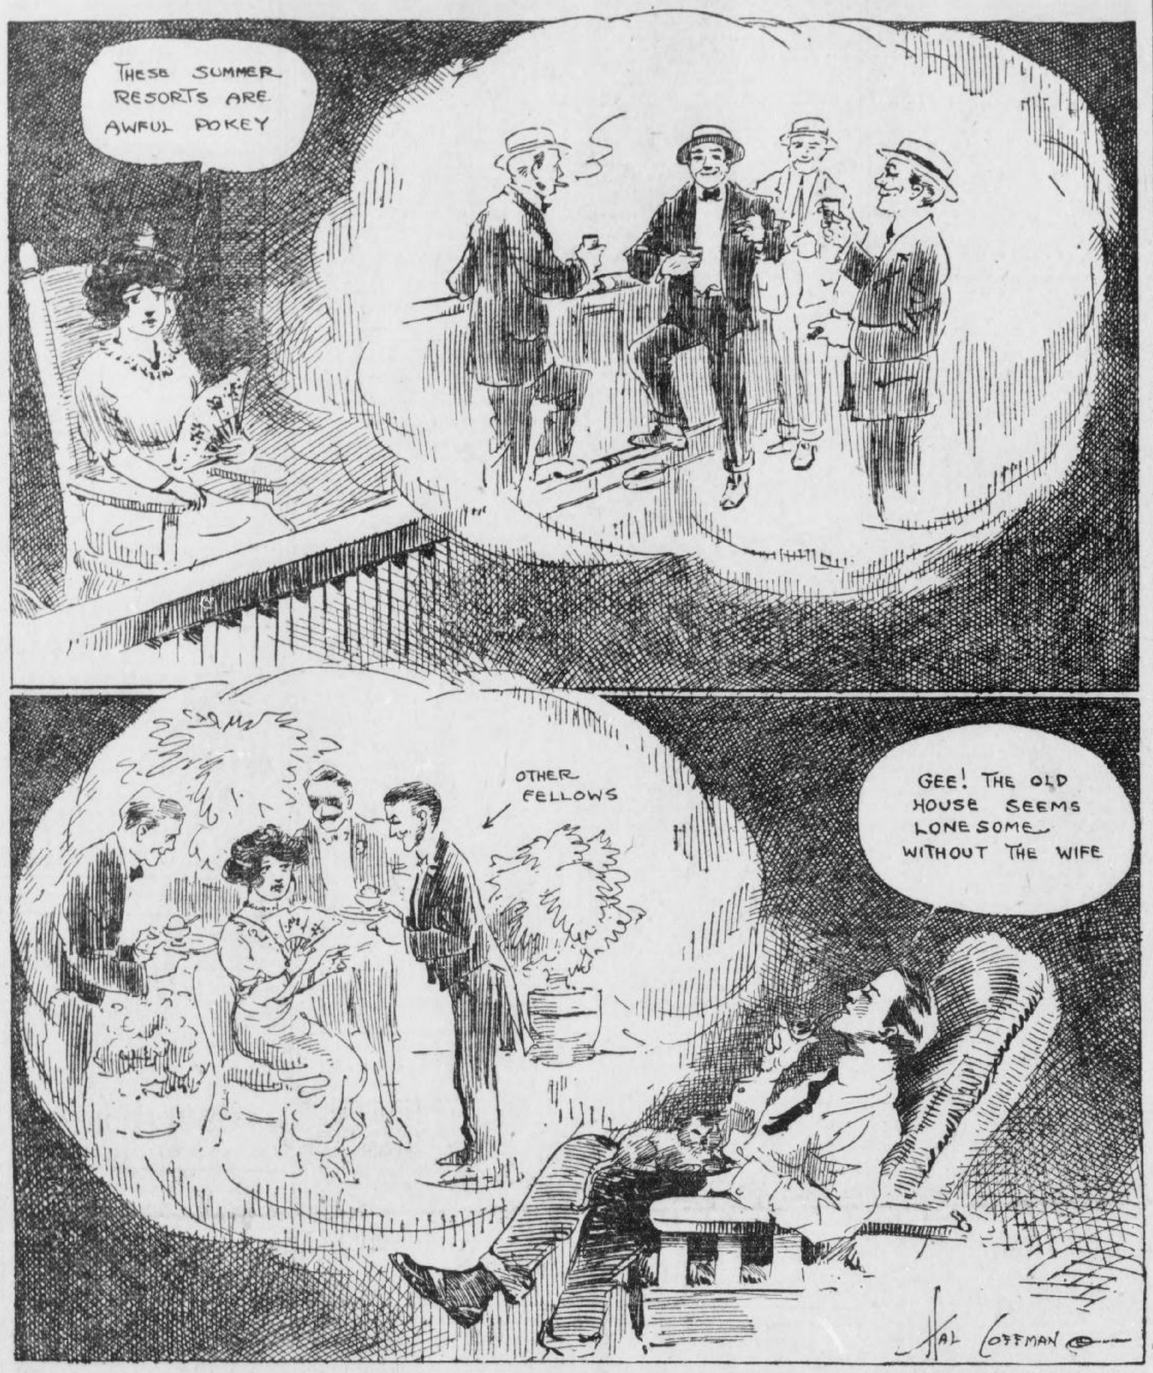

But if you ever get tired of scraping with sea shells, try vaccination, or, better still, try to take such care of youth, to give such chances and education to the young, as will save them from the least profitable of all careers—CRIME.

Scrape away with your sea shells, but try also to give a few more and a few better chances in youth to those whom you now hunt as criminals in their mature years.

God creates boys and girls, anxious to live decently.

YOUR SOCIAL SYSTEM makes criminals and fills jails.

Mysteries of Science and Nature

The Sun Is a Variable Star and Its Changes Affect the Price of a Man's Dinner---What Science's Latest Discovery Means.

By GARRETT P. SERVISS

THE recently announced conclusion of Professor Frost, the head of the Yerkes Observatory, that the sun is a variable star is in accord with what has been said repeatedly in these columns. It is a tremendously important fact, and its demonstration is mainly due to the labors of Messrs. C. G. Abbott and F. E. Fowle, of the Smithsonian Institution. Their statements have been confirmed by the observation of astronomers in Europe.

The sun has not suddenly become variable; it has been variable for ages, but not until now has any measurement of its variability been obtained. It has taken ten years to eliminate all the possible sources of error in the work, one of the principal difficulties being to discriminate between the effect of changing conditions of the earth's atmosphere affecting its ability to transmit the radiation from the sun to the surface of the globe, and changes occurring in the sun itself.

Minor Changes in the Sun Affect the Earth's Temperature.

It seems now to be certain that the intensity of the rays which the sun sends to the earth often vary at least as much as five per cent in periods of only a week or ten days. These variations, of course, directly affect the temperature and the character of the weather. Then there are variations of a much longer period, and of greater general extent, indicated by the waxing and waning of black spots on the sun's disk.

When there are many and large spots on the sun, its radiation is not diminished, but increased, and when they are few and small, as at the present time, the radiation, in general, falls off. But at all times, apparently, minor changes are going on in the sun, which produce quite sudden alterations in the temperature of the earth.

As has just been said, we are now at a period of minimum in the sun spots, but in about four years from now they will be numerous again, and then a general increase of the solar radiation is to be expected. It takes, on the average, about seven years for the sun spots to decline from a maximum to a minimum, and about four years for them to rise again from a minimum to a maximum. Meanwhile the radiation is not steady at any time, except for a few days.

The practical importance of the recent studies of these things is seen in Professor Frost's announcement that the time is near at hand when it will be possible to foretell the general character of the seasons long in advance.

He thinks that that may be achieved within about twenty-five years.

Then, if the present promise is kept, it will be possible for farmers and growers of all kinds of crops to know in advance what they have to expect, and to govern their sowings and plantings accordingly.

The sun will be recognized as the great dictator in agricultural affairs, and they will be the most successful cultivators who heed the hints which he gives of impending changes in his humor. They will watch his face, with the aid of the astronomers, as Nero's courtiers watched the play of their tyrant's features.

But the mere fact that those who have been conducting these researches think it possible to foretell the varying effects of the solar radiation upon the earth shows that even in his most variable moods the sun is subjected to a law which he cannot violate. It is what that law is and how it operates in order to forsee its effects. Much still depends upon a better knowledge of the earth's atmosphere, for when a sudden change takes place in the solar radiation the effect is not immediately felt on the earth. The atmosphere acts as a kind of buffer, and takes up the shock, afterward distributing it in a more gradual and gentle manner.

Change in Solar Radiation Might Bring About an Indian Famine.

A graphic illustration of the importance of this matter to every human being is given in a remark of Professor Langley's which Professor Frost has quoted:

"Though the most unformed nebula may hold the germs of future worlds, yet for us these possibilities are but interesting conjectures, for every nebula might be wiped out of the sky to-night without affecting the price of a laborer's dinner, while a small change in the solar radiation may conceivably cause the deaths of numberless men in an Indian famine."

Professor Langley's forecast has been fully justified by the recent investigations, and we may now say that the price of every man's dinner is affected by changes in the sun that had not been discovered ten years ago.

Time's Changes

By MINNA IRVING.

I CHANCED to meet old Father Time,
It does not matter where;
He wore a leather coat and cap,
And had a jaunty air.
A pair of goggles hid his eyes,
His boots were furred inside;
I viewed the change with much amaze,
"Where is your scythe?" I cried.

"It can not be that you at last
No longer mean to mow
Unhappy mortals like the grass
Before you as you go?"
"The scythe," the ancient spirit sighed,
"Is slow and out of date,
I use an aeroplane instead
To do the work of fate."

Divorce

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

Copyright, 1913, by Star Company.

THINKING of one thing all day long, at night
I fall asleep, brain weary and heart sore;
But only for a little while. At three,
Sometimes at two, o'clock I wake and lie,
Staring out into darkness; while my thoughts
Begin the weary treadmill-toil again,
From that white marriage morning of our youth
Down to this dreadful hour:
I see your face
Lit with the lovelight of the honeymoon;
I hear your voice, that lingered on my name
As if it loved each letter; and I feel
The clinging of your arms about my form,
Your kisses on my cheek—and long to break
The anguish of such memories with tears,
But cannot weep; the fountain has run dry.

We were so young, so happy, and so full
Of keen sheer joy of life. I had no wish
Outside your pleasure; and you loved me so
That when I sometimes felt a woman's need
For more serene expression of man's love
(The need of rest in calm affection's bay
And not sail ever on the stormy main),
Yet would I rouse myself to your desire;
Meet ardent kiss with kisses just as warm;
So nothing I could give should be denied.

And then our children came. Deep in my soul,
From the first hour of conscious motherhood,
I knew I should conserve myself for this
Most holy office; knew God meant it so.
Yet even then, I held your wishes first;
And by my double duties lost the bloom
And freshness of my beauty; and beheld
A look of disapproval in your eyes.

But with the coming of our precious child,
The lover's smile, tinged with the father's pride,
Returned again; and helped to make me strong;
And life was very sweet for both of us.

Another, and another birth, and twice
The little white hearse paused beside our door
And took away some portion of my youth
With my sweet babies. At the first you seemed
To suffer with me, standing very near;
But when I wept too long you turned away.
And I was hurt, not realizing then
My grief was selfish. I could see the change
Which motherhood and sorrow made in me;
And when I saw the change that came to you,
Saw how your eyes looked past me when you talked,
And when I missed the love tone from your voice,
I did that foolish thing that women do:
Complained and cried, accused you of neglect,
And made myself obnoxious in your sight.

And often, after you had left my side,
Alone I stood before my mirror, mad
With anger at my pallid cheeks, my dull
Unlightened eyes, my shrunken mother-breasts,
And wept, and wept, and faded more and more.
How could I hope to win back wandering love,
And make new flames in dying embers leap
By such ungracious means?

And then She came.
Firm bosomed, round of cheek, with such young eyes,
And all the ways of youth. I, who had died
A thousand deaths in waiting the return
Of that old love look to your face once more—
Died yet again and went straight into hell
When I beheld it come at her approach.

My God, my God, how have I borne it all!
Yet since she had the power to make that look—
The power to sweep the ashes from your heart
Of burned-out love for me, and light new fires,
One thing remained for me—to let you go.
I had no wish to keep the empty frame
From which the priceless picture had been wrenched.
Nor do I blame you; it was not your fault;
You gave me all that most men can give—love
Of youth, of beauty, and of passion; and
I gave you full return; my womanhood
Matched well your manhood. Yet had you grown ill,
Or old, and unattractive from some cause,
(Less close than was my service unto you)
I should have clung the tighter to you, dear;
And loved you, loved you, loved you more and more.

I grow so weary thinking of these things;
Day in, day out; and half the awful nights.

Solferino

By REV. THOMAS B. GREGORY.

THE battle of Solferino, won by Napoleon III and the Sardinian King from the Austrians fifty-four years ago, was one of the costliest of victories, a boomerang, the like of which is but seldom found on the pages of history.

Napoleon III, the Don Quixote of sovereigns, went far out of his way to interfere in the quarrel between Austria and Sardinia, and bitterly was he paid for it.

Within itself Solferino was a splendid triumph. Some 120,000 French and Sardinians beat to a finish some 170,000 Austrians, and the Emperor's cup of glory was sparkling to the brim! Solferino was well calculated to remind men of Austerlitz and Marengo and of the great captain whose genius had for so long led the soldiers of France from victory to victory as though they had been an army of demigods.

So far so good. But there was coming, all unseen by the victory of Solferino an aftermath of woe and misery.

Solferino precipitated a meeting between Napoleon and Joseph (July 11, at Villafranca), the result of which was the Treaty of Zurich, which, among other things, wrested Lombardy from Austria, thus materially weakening her among the family of European nations.

But the weakening of Austria carried along with it the strengthening of Prussia. If there was a time when Bismarck laughed more heartily than ever before, it was when the news came to him of that Lombardy matter. The great Chancellor must have laughed himself well-nigh mortal, for he saw just what it meant. He saw in advance the war of 1866, the struggle between Austria and Prussia for the leadership of the German States, the weakened state in which Austria would have to contend against the greatly improved condition of Prussia, and the final Prussian triumph at Konigratz.

But the clear-eyed Bismarck saw even farther than that. He saw Austria humbled and dismissed from the stage; he saw Prussia at the head of a united Germany; and, what was more to the point, he saw the Germans "marching all one way" on to Paris, to humble France much worse than France had humbled the Hapsburg.

PINKERTON CHIEF IS SCORED BY LANFORD

WILSON APPOINTMENT ANGERS SOUTHERNERS

FIGHT NEGRO AS FEDERAL OFFICIAL

Dixie Lawmakers Roused by Wilson's Selection of Oklahoma Lawyer as Treasury Register.

WASHINGTON, July 27.—The selection of Adam E. Patterson, a negro, of Muskogee, Okla., for Register of the Treasury by President Wilson has created a stir here among Southern Democrats, who declare they will fight the negro's confirmation to the last ditch.

Patterson, a lawyer and author of several treatises on the Democratic party, has received the indorsement of Senator Gore and Representative Carter, of Oklahoma; it is said. With these two exceptions, the Oklahoma delegation is solid against him.

Race Antagonism Seen.

Southern Democrats, including Representatives Davenport and Murray, of Oklahoma, condemn the selection of Patterson on the grounds that a negro should not be placed in a position where he will exert authority over white men and women, thus antagonizing the races.

Besides, they point out that Oklahoma's Constitution makes the negro a negligible factor in politics. The job for which Patterson has been selected pays $5,000 per year.

During the last three Republican administrations a negro has held this office. The first of the trio was Judson Lyons, of Augusta, Ga. Next came William T. Vernon, of Mississippi. The third and present negro Register is J. C. Napier, of Nashville, Tenn.

Believes Him Capable.

"While I believe this man to be capable," said Representative Davenport, "I do not believe any colored man should be placed in a position of authority over white men and white women. I don't think anything ought to be done to accentuate the race question."

Representative Murray, commonly known as "Alfalfa Bill," said he was surprised at the President's action in selecting Patterson, and believed it was a political mistake on the latter's part. The grandfather clause in the Oklahoma Constitution, he said, made the negro a negligible factor in politics.

Confirmation Is Opposed.

Other Southern Democrats, while not hesitating to express themselves, refused to be quoted in regard to the matter. That they will put their shoulders to the wheel and fight hard against the confirmation when it comes up in the Senate is certain, however, it is said.

Patterson was selected from a number of negro applicants, including W. K. Clements, of Charlotte, N. C., who had received the indorsement of several members of the State delegation.

Jules Vedrines Hurt In Aircraft Wreck

Special Cable to The Georgian.

PARIS, July 27.— Jules Vedrines, one of the leading aviators of France, was seriously hurt to-day when his monoplane was destroyed by an explosion near Bordeaux.

BASEL SWITZERLAND, July 27. Oscar Bider, a French aviator, to-day flew from Milan, Italy, across the Alps to this city, 160 miles, in 3 hours and 45 minutes. He made only one stop to replenish his fuel tank, and attained a height of 10,000 feet.

London Surprised When Suffragettes Parade Peacefully

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, July 27.—London was treated to a great surprise to-day. Four processions of peaceful suffragettes from all over England marched through the streets and were accorded a great demonstration.

The peaceful members of the "votes for women" cause then gathered at Hyde Park, where Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, president of the Woman Suffrage League, was the principal speaker. She urged her hearers to refrain from violence and declared more could be done for the cause by peaceful methods than by militant tactics.

Twenty platforms had been erected in the park and all the speakers were greeted with cheers.

The English suffragettes had copied the example of their American sisters and had hiked from all parts of the country. Some were on the march from June 18.

Speed Mania Robs Tetzlaff of His Wife

LOS ANGELES, July 27.—"It is necessary to get relief for my speed-racked nerves. My husband lives like he drives. I was born and bred in staid old Boston and I can't stand the speed."

This was the statement of Mrs. Teddy Tetzlaff to-day, when she announced that she was preparing to file a suit for divorce against her husband, the famous automobile race driver and holder of the world's speed record.

The Tetzlaffs have been separated for about a year, and the wife says she was forced to leave her husband to save little Teddy, their 9-year-old boy, from the speed craze.

Farmers 'Shoot Out' Grudge; Both Hurt

MOULTRIE, July 27.—Rufus Clark and Bill Cox, two prominent farmers, engaged in a pistol duel several miles west of here, and as a result both are possibly mortally wounded. Clark was shot four times, while Cox was wounded by three bullets.

The trouble was the culmination of bad feeling that has existed between the two men for some time. Both are alleged to have made threats against each other's life. The meeting occurred at Cox's store. Clark was in his buggy in the roadway. As soon as he approached the store the shooting began. Friends of each man claim the other fired first."

China Rebels Lose In Arsenal Attack

Special Cable to The Georgian.

SHANGHAI, July 27.—Reinforced by Cantonese and Hunanese, the southern rebels to-day again attacked the Shanghai arsenal. Repeated assaults were made on the northern army stronghold, but the rebels were driven back each time, suffering tremendous losses.

Commanders of foreign warships are still keeping a naval detachment ready to land at a moment's notice, but no action will be taken as long as the northern army is victorious. The Government is making a supreme effort to crush the rebellion.

Summer School Girl Attacked on Campus

BLOOMINGTON, IND., July 27.—Miss Helen Murphy, a student at the summer school at Indiana University, was attacked on the campus last night while a dance was in progress and beaten into unconsciousnes before her screams frightened her assailant away.

Thomas Stineburg was arrested to-day on a charge of assault and battery, with attempt at criminal assault, and held under $5,000 bond.

Wilson Plays Golf; Plans Motor Outing

WASHINGTON, July 27.—President Wilson enjoyed his usual Saturday morning round of golf to-day, and then returned to the White House for lunch.

He planned to spend the afternoon motoring, with a possibility of attending the Washington-St. Louis baseball game.

POLICE ROW TO END IN COURT

Jacksonville Mayor to File Suit to Determine Who Shall Control Force in Florida Town.

JACKSONVILLE, July 27.—Mayor Van C. Swearingen has announced that a bill will be filed in the Circuit Court early Monday to determine whether the Mayor or Board of Bond Trustees has the right to control the police force in Jacksonville.

The Mayor announced that he and his attorney were working on the bill and that he was preparing his charges against Chief of Police Fred Roach. He stated that the ball would be started in the big fight by Monday and that he expected an early determination of the case.

The Bond Trustees have made no move, but will go into court to fight the Mayor as soon as the suit is filed. The arbitration plan suggested by them was not accepted by the Mayor.

While the fight is going on the Mayor considers the Chief suspended and transmits his orders to Captain Harry Hall. On the other hand, the Bond Trustees recognize Chief Roach and allow him to control the force and pay him his full salary of $250 per month.

Rail Managers Drop Demand; Strike Off

NEW YORK, July 27.—The threatened strike of trainmen on the Eastern railroads virtually has been averted.

The railroad managers, after a meeting with the Board of Mediators, to-day waived their right to include their requests that their grievances also be taken up for arbitration.

The action of the railroads will mean that the entire matter will be quickly adjudicated, articles of arbitration drawn and signed by both sides and the matter submitted to the arbitration board, which will be selected just as soon as the mediators report to the President.

Committee Balked Wilson Unwittingly

WASHINGTON, July 27.—Democratic members of the House Banking and Currency Committee to-day expressed regret that President Wilson had attempted to straighten out the committee's troubles by inspiring a movement to send the currency bill to a Democratic caucus.

When the committee tabled Representative Wingo's motion to send the currency bill to a caucus, it was declared the members did not know Wingo was the President's spokesman.

Gen. Grant's Son, 56, Applies for Divorce

GOLDFIELD, NEV., July 27.—Jesse R. Grant, youngest son of General Ulysses S. Grant, filed suit for divorce from Elizabeth Chapman to-day, after 23 years of married life. Desertion is the only allegation.

He is now 56 years old, and married the daughter of W. S. Chapman, of San Francisco, in 1880. They have two children. One is Nellie Grant, who married Lieutenant Commander William Peggott Cronan, U. S. N., in San Francisco last May; the other is Chapman Grant, 27 years old.

Landowners Agree To Arbitrate Claims

MACON, July 27.—Practically the last obstacle in the way of the erection of the Union Passenger Station at Fifth and Cherry streets was removed yesterday when all but one of the property owners in that vicinity agreed to arbitrate their claims for damages expected to accrue from the closing of Cherry street.

The Railroad Commission has stated that the damage claims must be settled before it will authorize the building of the depot.

UNITED STATES WINS THIRD MATCH FOR INTERNATIONAL TENNIS CUP

Maurice E. McLoughlin at the finish of his sure.

Special Cable to The Georgian.

WIMBLEDON, ENG., July 27.—On the flaming red head of Maurice E. McLoughlin, the "California Comet," will rest the laurel for bringing the Davis cup back home after a ten years' stay abroad, providing either McLoughlin or Norris Williams wins his match Monday.

McLoughlin, assisted by the veteran Harold Hackett, to-day played rings around H. Roper Barrett and C. P. Dixon in the duobles and by a surprising victory put the American team in the lead in the international match. Yesterday McLoughlin was out of form. To-day he was a whirlwind and, while Hackett played a steady and dependable game, it was McLoughlin's terrific serve and invincible passing that gave the Americans a decisive victory over England's best doubles team. The score of the match was 5-7, 6-1, 2-6, 7-5 and 6-4.

The matches Monday will bring together McLoughlin and Dixon and R. Norris Williams, of Philadelphia, who defeated Dixon yesterday, and J. C. Parke. Thel atter surprised the American contingent by defeating McLoughlin yesterday.

Leaderless Convicts Fire Sing Sing Again

OSSINGTON, N. Y., July 27.—Not even the removal of the ringleaders of the Sing Sing prison disturbances has taken the danger from the convict mutiny. This was strongly indicated today when Warden Clancey began an investigation of the third fire that has marked the rebellion of the criminals. This fire was set ten hours after the removal of the ringleaders to Auburn.

The warden plans to move on Tuesday 65 more of the mutineers, believed to constitute the arson squad, to Auburn.

Help! Slit Trousers, Long Sox, Coming

PITTSBURG, PA., July 27.—Slit trousers for men similar to the slit skirts worn by women, soon will be here, according to a well-known tailor.

"This will mean that the men will have to take to wearing long stockings," said the tailor, "because the slit will likely go to the knee."

PATTERSON RAID STARTS FIGHT ON MAYOR

Arrest of Former Tennessee Governor Causes Judge Meeks to Oppose Howse.

NASHVILLE, July 27.—Indingant over the arrest of ex-Governor M. R. Patterson, who was caught in what is alleged to have been a "framed-up" raid on a house in the restricted district, M. H. Meeks, Circuit Court judge, to-day announced for Mayor of Nashville, to oppose Mayor Hillary Howse for re-election.

Governor Patterson, who parted company with Mayor Howse two years ago on account of the ex-Governor supporting Sheriff Borum, has been trying for some time to get Judge Meeks to announce. When Patterson was caught, the pressure was so great on Judge Meeks that he announced without further hesitation. Meeks and Howse are both Democrats.

Meeks being backed by Criminal Judge Neil and Howse having the police under him, the saloonmen are trembling and fearful that they will be ground in the factional fight, or that Noah W. Cooper, Independent, will win and close them up.

Meeks has five years to serve as judge.

Narrow Escape as Fire Ruins Garage

W. T. Edgar, of No. 164 Love street, had a narrow escape early Saturday morning when a "backfire" occurred in an automobile which he was cranking. The tank of the machine exploded, and the fire which resulted destroyed the garage, containing two big touring cars.

One of the machines belonged to Dr. Frank Edmondson, and the other was the property of J. L. Wright. The loss of the cars and the garage, of which Mr. Edgar is the owner, will amount to several thousand dollars.

Committee Favors Envoy Nominations

WASHINGTON, July 27.—The Senate Foreign Relations Committee today decided to report favorably the nominations of Frederick C. Penfield, of Pennsylvania, to be Ambassador to Austria; J. W. Gerard, of New York, to be Ambassador to Germany; Joseph E. Willard, of Virginia, to be Minister to Spain, and C. S. Hartman, of Montana, to be Minister to Ecuador.

ATLANTAN HURT IN WRECK ON SOUTHERN

Fireman Jones Has Rib Broken. Engineer Jennings, of Macon, Injured—Porter Is Killed.

MACON, July 27.—Southern passenger trains Nos. 13 (northbound) and No. 24 (southbound) had a head-on collision on a siding at Hilton, near Macon, this morning at 3:10 o'clock, resulting in the death of Will Jackson, the negro porter, who opened the switch, and injuring Engineer H. G. Jennings, of Macon, and Fireman W. E. Jones, of Atlanta, of train No. 24.

When train No. 24 was within 100 yards of the siding the porter became excited over the apprehension that he had not turned the switch properly. He turned it again, opening the siding to the approaching train. He was struck by the engine of train No. 24 and instantly killed.

Engineer Jennings sustained a bruised shoulder and sprained back, and Fireman Jones had a rib broken. None of the passengers was hurt, although all were severely jarred.

A delay of less than an hour was occasioned by the wreck, train No. 23 taking train No. 13 on to Atlanta, while the passengers from No. 24 were transferred and brought to Macon.

House Sets Record For Short Session

WASHINGTON, July 27.—The House was in session to-day exactly four minutes, the shortest session in the memory of old-time members of Congress. As soon as the chaplain read the prayer, Representative Gardiner, of Massachusetts, acting minority leader, made a point of no quorum, and Majority Leader Underwood immediately moved an adjournment.

Gardiner was following out the policy of filibustering which the Republicans are using to protest against being gagged in the discussion of the Caminetti case.

Transfusion Saves Starving Militant

Special Cable to The Georgian.

LONDON, July 27.—Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst, the militant suffragette leader, who was taken seriously ill after her release from prison Thursday evening, was reported to be more improved to-day. She passed a good night and slept well.

The physicians believe that the blood transfusion operation yesterday saved her life.

SAYS PIERCE BROKE HIS WORD TO POLICE

Detective Head Also Asserts Phagan Evidence Private Sleuth Unearthed Was Plant.

Chief of Detectives Lanford roundly scored H. B. Pierce, head of the Pinkerton Detective Agency in Atlanta, Saturday, for what he termed questionable procedure in connection with the Phagan murder investigation.

When application was made by the agency for permission to operate in Atlanta and the matter was under consideration by the Police Board, the promise was made that the Pinkertons would work in harmony with the city detective department and would co-operate in the apprehension of criminals.

This promise, according to Lanford, has been kept by all connected with the agency with the exception of Pierce. The Chief intimated that the Bolice Board would be asked to take action against Pierce personally.

Lanford Hints at "Plant."

"In the Phagan case Mr. Scott has reported to this department every day and has turned over all the evidence he has found," said Chief Lanford. "During his absence from the city a bloody stick and an envelope, supposed to have been that in which the money due Mary Phagan was placed, were turned over to the attorneys for the defense, and no mention of the fact made to the detective department.

"The place where these articles were reported to have been found had been sarched by officers so thoroughly that it was an absolute impossibility for them to have been overlooked. In fact, a search for ten feet around had been made for blood spots.

"In addition to this, the insurance company had all the rubbish removed from this part of the building and the floor scrubbed afterward and before the articles were said to have been found. They were not there at the time, and if they were found there, as Mr. Pierce claims, they were placed there for a purpose.

Charges Breach of Faith.

"Mr. Pierce has not made good his promise (or the promise of his company) to the Police Board, and if the matter is taken up by the board, I will give them the facts."

The Police Board probably will take the matter up at its next meeting.

Harry Scott, who has conducted the investigation into the Phagan murder mystery for the Pinkertons since the services of the agency were engaged, was subpenaed Saturday as a witness in behalf of Leo M. Frank by counsel for the factory superintendent. The detective previously had been served with a subpena from Solicitor Dorsey's office.

Inasmuch as Scott's attitude almost from the first has appeared to be distinctly unfavorable to Frank, this move on the part of the defense was generally unexpected and was the cause of considerable surprised comment. Scott, however, is known to be in possession of facts that seem on their face damaging to the negro Conley, as well as facts that are being used to bring about the conviction of Frank.

"I wish it understood that I am wholly neutral in this matter," said Scott Saturday afternoon in remarking on the subpena he received from the defense. "The investigation was made by the Pinkertons without fear or favor. We uncovered a large amount of evidence. Some of it was valuable. Some of it was worthless in the light of present developments. Some of it pointed strongly toward the guilt of Frank. Other evidence could be interpreted as very damaging to the negro.

"Our function is to present all of this evidence as it is called for in court, regardless of whom it may help or hurt. We may have our private opinion as to who is the guilty person, but this shall not be allowed to color the testimony as it is given in court. It is for the jury to make its interpretation of the evidence."

Defense Gets Copies of Notes.

Request was made Saturday by Attorney Rosser for photographic copies of the notes found beside the body of Mary Phagan. The copies were in the possession of Solicitor Dorsey, who readily acceded to the request. The defense will seek to show that Frank could have had no part in their composition or dictation.

The State's case is reported to be ready for immediate presentation. All of the witnesses have been summoned. All of the panel of 144 jurors, with the exception of six or seven who could not be found, have been notified to be on hand Monday.

Both Sides Getting Ready.

Prosecution and defense continued their preparations for the Frank trial, the last-hour hurry of interviewing new witnesses and gathering up the stray ends of evidence, giving a fair promise that the trial will start as scheduled next Monday forenoon.

That Solicitor Dorsey has nearly a score of important witnesses whose testimony has been carefully guarded from the defense and the general public is well known. These witnesses have come to his office from time to time, and the Solicitor has refused to give out the vaguest intimation of the line of testimony they would give at the trial.

The prosecution has reserved their evidence to spring as a surprise during the trial. On these persons the State depends to clinch its case against the young factory superintendent. Some of them will be called to bear out different portions of the negro Conley's affidavit, in which was told the story of the disposal of Mary Phagan's body. The Solicitor is understood to have witnesses who will corroborate portions of Conley's story which have been under the severest fire.

Thinks Conley Story True.

The Solicitor several times has announced that he believes Conley is telling the truth in the essential statements of his affidavit. He has strengthened his belief by interviewing many people who were in a position to know of different circumstances mentioned in Conley's story. The only possibility of an alteration in the State's theory is that the time element may be modified in certain respects.

Similar surprises may be expected from the defense. Attorney Rosser has not been communicative with the newspaper men. The few bits of his evidence that have become known to the public were obtained in spite of him. Except for the Mincey affidavit, published in The Georgian, most of the important evidence of the defense has been so carefully guarded as to make it still a matter of conjecture. The general plan of Frank's defense can be surmised, but the contents of the hundred or more affidavits in the possession of Attorney Rosser remain a deep mystery.

"Plant" Generally Suspected.

No one expects at this time that the pay envelope, the bloody club or the piece of rope found on the first floor will play any large part in the trial. Neither side is convinced of their genuineness. The suspicion of a "plant" has prevailed from the time of their discovery.

According to Bernard Chappelle, counsel for Newt Lee, the night watchman in the pencil factory, the negro Saturday denied in the presence of Reuben R. Arnold, attorney for Frank, that he had broken down and admitted catching Jim Conley with the body of Mary Phagan.

Chapelle had heard that Frank's counsel understood Lee had collapsed while being grilled with the sweeper and called up Mr. Arnold. At his suggestion, Arnold visited Lee at the jail and there Lee is said to have reaffirmed his previous statement that he did not see Conley the day of the murder.

ATLANTA GIRL PLEADS FOR SUMMER ROMANCE

MISS GLADYS WATKINS.

Only Reason Vacation Romances Do Not Last Is Because People Laugh, She Says.

If Miss Gladys Watkins, one of Atlanta's prettiest society girls, had her way, the good old summer time would no longer be an open season for flirtations; friendships formed under the spell of the full moon and the mountain breezes would be as lasting and as firm as friendships formed before an open fire, and sure-enough, honest-to-goodness romance would feel as much at home in a rowboat as it is in a sleigh.

"Is there any good reason," asked Miss Watkins, "why every romance that begins during summer should be greeted with skepticism and labeled a 'summer flirtation?' Why should not summer, the most beautiful season of the year, be as good a time as winter for forming everlasting friendships? I think it's a shame that every time a girl meets a man at a summer resort and speaks to him kindly once or twice, it is set down as a flirtation—when in reality they may like each other very much.

"A girl meets many nice men at the seashore, in the mountains or wherever people go to escape the heat. Yet if she likes one particular man and they go together much, people laugh and say, 'Oh, it's just another summer flirtation.' And that laugh has destroyed many a romance. Knowing that no one will take them seriously the man and maid are not apt to take themselves very seriously.

"Summer has simply gotten a bad name and can not get rid of it. A girl is not nearly so apt to believe the things a young man tells her in summer as she is to be lieve the same things in winter. And it is because she has heard all her life that summer friendships were just flirtations."

Sheriff and Force On Annual Outing

Sheriff C. W. Mangum and twelve deputies, with their families, are spending the day at Johnson's Ferry, on Roswell road, at their annual fish fry and barbecue. The pleasure-seeking officers left at 11 o'clock in automobiles, and do not expect to return until they have eaten all the fish they can and have delivered all their extemporaneous speeches.

Besides the Sheriff, those who made the trip were Deputies J. H. Owen, G. H. Broadnax, G. L. Poindexter, W. Lee Haygood, J. T. Golden, J. M. Suttles, Warren Knight, E. T. Stanley, Drew Liddell, T. A. Burdette, Foster L. Hunter and R. B. Deavers.

SPARTANBURG, S. C., July 27.—The Rev. Stephen A. Nettles, editor of The Southern Advocate, decided it would be far better for women to follow the custom of many African tribes, who are robed in nothing more than beads, than to wear the suggestive dresses which are so popular at present.

BILL TO PROVIDE TEACHERS PAY APPROVED

Appropriations Committee Recommends Passage of Senator Perry's Measure.

Senator Perry's bill providing that public school teachers be paid monthly, next to the eleemosyary institutions and the statehouse officers, has been indorsed by the Senate Appropriations Committee. The bill provides no special fund for the teachers, but it puts them on the same basis as the faculties of the University of Georgia, Georgia Tech and the Normal and Industrial School.

Senator Tyson introduced a bill authorizing county school boards to borrow sufficient funds to maintain their schools.

The following bills were recommended by the Senate Judiciary Committee:

To hold State elections at the same time as Congressional elections.

That tax collectors shall keep their books open until 90 days before elections instead of six, months.

To create a fourth superior court judgeship of the Atlanta district.

To empower the Governor to settle the dispute of certain parties with the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company.

52 Sunday Concerts Planned by Music Festival Association

Plans for an unbroken series of Sunday afternoon concerts at the Auditorium-Armory next year are now being prepared by the Atlanta Music Festival Association. It is the hope of the association to arrange with the Auditorium Committee of the General Council to secure the building for each Sunday during the year that there may be no break in the series of concerts.

A meeting of representatives of the association and of the Council committee was held in Mayor Woodward's office Friday afternoon. V. H. Kriegshaber declared that during the last year the association had paid $4,000 for an organist, but because other attractions were booked Sunday, it had been able to give only 35 concerts. He declared that a break in the series caused people to lose interest, and asked the committee for an arrangement whereby each of the 52 Sundays of the year could be used for concerts.

Teachers' Loan Is Favored by Report

The House was in session 35 minutes Saturday morning and disposed of some local bills. Under the rules of the House, only bills of a local nature may be taken up at the Saturday sessions, and consequently but few more than a quorum of the members were present.

A report by the Ways and Means Committee was favorable to House Resolution 96, which provides for borrowing money by the Governor on reasonable terms. This resolution is in line with the effort being made to relieve the deficit in the school-teachers' appropriation.

The House authorized the printing of 200 copies of House Bill No. 22, which provides for a text book commission. This is one of the bills tending toward publication of school books by the State.

Speaker Pro Tem McMichael, of Marion County, presided.

It was charged that Mattiford and Mrs. Barwick eloped with the children about three months ago. The principals have decided they will not return to Atlanta to live. Barwick is now in New York City with his children.

OLD CLAYT ROBSON IS GIVEN BIRTHDAY 'CUE

OLD CLAYT ROBSON.

State's Best Known Drummer Is Surprised by Friends Led by Old Joe Pottle.

Old Joe Pottle, Solicitor General of the Ocmulgee Circuit, aided and abetted by a dozen or more members of the Legislature and as many more well-known citizens of Atlanta, not to mention an additional dozen or so ordinary folks, surprised Old Clayt Robson, of the State at large, with a big barbecue party in the Kimball House Friday night, the occasion being Old Clayt Robson's thirty-fifth birthday.

Robson knows and is known by more people in Georgia than anybody. There isn't a town he hasn't visited many times in his rounds of commercial traveling, and there isn't a community in which he is not well acquainted.

It is said that he can use the long-distance phone in Atlanta and sell more goods than three or four ordinary salesmen put together. This may or may not be so, but Robson doesn't deny it.

Old Clayt Caught Napping.

Anyway, Old Joe Pottle loves Old Clayt Robson with a love that surpasseth understanding, and so he came up from Milledgeville Thursday, armed with a barbecued shoat, a lot of fine, fat tomatoes, and other approved barbecue trimmings, and he gumshoed around town collecting up a bunch of Robson's admirers, with a whispered word to meet at the Kimball at 7:30 in the evening, there to surprise Old Clayt and make merry for a time.

Just before the big "eats" was pulled off, everybody was wise but Robson. He was caught napping in the Kimball lobby about 7:15, and forthwith was rushed into the banquete hall, and things were explained.

He admitted that it was his thirty-fifth birthday, however, and that, therefore, he was a legitimate object of a surprise party, and, besides, he liked surprise parties first-rate, any way they came.

Presented With Umbrella.

In the meantime, a lot of Old Joe Pottle's guests had gumshoed around themselves during the afternoon, and during the progress of the festivities a handsome umbrella was presented to Mr. Robson as a token of everybody's good will and esteem, and as an evidence of their hopes for many happy returns of the day.

Mr. Robson's speech of acceptance was mostly smiles—his smiles constituting his biggest asset, anyway!

And Old Joe Pottle returned to Milledgeville to-day, a perfectly happy and contented man!

AD CONTEST IS GROWN-UPS' GAME, TOO

Fine Opportunity for Winning an Automobile by Work Among Business Men Uptown.

The American and Georgian's Want Ad Contest is opening up in great style. Contestants brought in a bunch of want ads yesterday afternoon, and they were just getting their hand in at that.

But the field is still open. There's a great opportunity for live, hustling young men and women.

Don't think this is just a "kids' game." It isn't every day that an automobile or a piano or a trip to California is given for a bit of light work. A young man or young woman with some business ability and some spare time can win a prize worth while by working uptown among the business men. Real estate firms, retail stores, every kind of business offers opportunity for want ads, and they count just the same as house-to-house business. Some of you people with lots of acquaintances uptown can get in now and win.

Contestants should let their friends know they are in the contest. If they will give the Want Ad Man a list of all their friends he will help them spread the news and assist them in rounding up the business and the votes. Some of the contestants have brought in these lists and others should do it at once. The Want Ad Man is planning a campaign to help the contestants.

One young man, in his teens, won big success on his first day out, reaping a harvest of want ads in one street. It's easy to get them if you'll just suggest want ad possibilities. Mrs. Jones may not think of needing something an ad would bring her, but a hint that she could rent that vacant room or hire a new cook or sell an old piece of furniture will always bring an idea and the idea brings the ad.

The coupon published on another will count 1,000 votes for a start-page will count 1,000 votes for a starter. Clip it out, take it to the Want Ad Man or your district manager nearest your home and start in to win. You may be driving your own motor car this autumn.

TAX ACTS TO BE PASSED ALONG WITH BUDGET

Appropriations Bill, as Framed, Pleases Governor—Needed Revenue To Be Provided.

The one disturbing element in the program of financial legislation as mapped out by Governor Slaton just prior to the assembling of the Legislature, and as outlined by him in his inaugural address, seems more than likely to be removed, thus avoiding either an Executive veto of the general appropriations bill or an extra session of the General Assembly.

The general appropriations bill, as framed up in the House and as likely to be amended in the Senate, will be entirely satisfactory to the Governor, provided sensible and necessary tax acts are passed to produce the revenue called for.

And it may be stated as a fact that the legislative skies have been steadily clearing for the past few days with respect to that.

Tax Acts Also Expected.

Not only does it now seem likely that the big appropriations bill will go to the Governor ten days ahead of adjournment as he has requested, but the tax acts will accompany it, in order that he may consider all at the same time and in their exact vital relations to one another.

The tax acts will provide the necessary increase in revenue to cover the appropriations called for, and this increased revenue will be distributed as equitably and as justly as possible. Chairman Aiken, Vice Chairman Cole and every member of the Ways and Means Committee, has been constantly at work upon the tax acts of late, to the exclusion of all other business.

May Raise Tax Limit.

No attempt will be made in the general legislative tax acts, however, to cover the deficit now existing in the State treasury. The Legislature seemingly inclines to propose a constitutional amendment of limited duration, providing for an increase in the tax limit of one mill for one year and one-half a mill for a second year, as recommended by the Governor.

This increase will raise something over $1,000,000, which will wipe out the deficit and leave something to spare for further necessities between this time and the date upon which the amendment, if ratified, can be put in operation.

The money thus extraordinarily raised will, of course, pay the common school teachers in full and start them off again with a clean slate against the State, and with no danger of a future situation of indebtedness such as now exists.

Expect Bill to Pass.

The bill providing for tax equalization will pass the Legislature. There is no doubt whatever of that in the minds of those members who have closely observed the trend of events lately.

It will not be the bill the Governor hoped for, but it will be a bill providing a plan of tax equalization that can be expanded and perfected by later Legislatures, if it seems to work to the people's satisfaction.

It will carry provisions for county boards of tax equalizers with a State board of limited powers to supervise the entire work. The State board will not be permitted to equalize the assessment of taxpayers, but it will have power to equalize the counties.

Measure To Be Compromise.

This measure will be a decided compromise between those who are advocating a State board of far-reaching authority and those who object to any State board at all.

Without some sort of State board it generally is agreed, however, that tax equalization would be a complete farce, and not worth while in any particular.

The Legislature has eighteen days of life to its credit after to-day. Compared with other Legislatures, the present one really has worked rapidly, particularly with respect to the appropriations bill and the tax acts.

Inasmuch, also, as there is no likelihood that it will lose any more time whatever from Monday forward, it looks as if its labors for the first session of its life will prove to be very satisfactory.

Scotch 'Brithers' to Meet Friday 'Nicht'

A meeting of the Atlanta Scottish Association has been called for Friday night, August 1, in the Kiser Building, at Hunter and South Pryor streets. Chief A. Cruickshank's call sent out to the brothers says:

AUGUSTA KILLINGS PROBED BY HOUSE

Widow of Victim Asserts That the Facts Were Suppressed to Protect the Military.

That she was not allowed to tell her story of the shooting before the military court-martial, and that soldiers shot at her brother-in-law after he had called to them not to fire again was the testimony given by Mrs. B. S. Dunbar before the Military Committee of the House Friday afternoon when the investigation into the Augusta killings of several months ago was taken up.

The investigation is being held under a resolution introduced by Representative Beck, of Carroll County. The other witnesses were Mrs. Robert Christie, widow of one of the men killed; Sheriff John W. Clark, of Richmond County; Palmer Christie and L. M. Dohme, of Augusta. They were represented by Clem E. Dunbar, former member of the House.

Mrs. Dunbar charged that one of the officers told her he had become excited during the shooting and ordered his men to shoot promiscuously, but that Major Claude Smith had refused to allow her to testify to this effect. When she asked Major Levy why she had not been allowed to tell her story correctly before the court-martial, she said he replied that the military must be protected.

"For God's sake, don't shoot. Don't you see I am trying to stop my machine?" are the words which she asserted Christie told her he said to the soldiers. "He was on his way to my home in his automobile to get his wife. He saw the soldiers, but thought nothing of it. They fired at him and he attempted to stop and called to them not to shoot again, but they fired another volley and wounded him in one of his lungs, which caused his death a short while afterward."

When the hearing is resumed Tuesday it probably will continue each afternoon through the week. Practically every military officer who was on duty in Augusta, as well as many privates, will be summoned to appear before the committee.

They Are Eating Off The Mantel in Philly

PHILADELPHIA, July 27.—Philadelphia has an epidemic of boils. At one Walnut street shop one-third of the girls are away with boils, while at another fashionable place one-half the employees are unable to sit down.

Physicians attribute the outbreak to the recent heated term.

BLALOCK FACES DEPUTY FAMINE

No Eligible List of Assistants to Recently Named Atlanta Internal Revenue Collector.

An unusual situation will arise upon the transfer of the office of Internal Revenue Collector, when a special agent arrives in Atlanta August 1. The retiring Collector, Henry S. Jackson, fears his successor, A. O. Blalock, of Fayetteville, will be placed in an embarrassing position.

"The Collector of Internal Revenue is the only office," said Mr. Jackson, "which really has no fixed term. All other appointive offices in the Government service are for four years, but the Collector's term is subject to the will of the President alone.

"When a Collector of Internal Revenue goes out of office, the terms of his deputies expire automatically, for they are appointed by him," said Mr. Jackson. "At present there is no eligible list, and when I go out of office, there will, therefore, be no deputies.

"If my successor, Mr. Blalock, sees fit, he may appoint my deputies, but after appointing them he can not discharge them without good cause, for a man is never dismissed from the Government service, after he qualifies by civil service examination, except for some disdemeanor.

"No civil service examination for deputies will be held until August 15, and it will be September before the results are known. In the meantime, I am sure the Government will not be content to let the Atlanta office run without deputies. I am sorry for Mr. Blalock and hope the matter can in some way be adjusted so his friends will not be disappointed."

Contest Editor Deluged With Pictures—Thought of Big Task Gives Him Nightmare.

Recently Governor Slaton refused to be the judge in the selection of 500 portraits of Atlanta youngsters for the Temple of Childhood at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, on the grounds that the job was too difficult because there were so many good-lookers.

The Beauty Contest Editor is keeping awake these nights, and when he has managed to get a bit of sleep, he has had nightmares, for fear that the same sort of thing is going to happen to his contest.

Honestly, there are just so many beauties being nominated every day that The Georgian photographers are actually scrapping among themselves to decide who shall make the picture.

The latest one submitted is that of Miss Elinor Macy, only daughter of Mrs. Grace Keefer, of 80 East Fourteenth street.

Miss Macy made her debut recently and is regarded as one of Atlanta's fairest. She has fair skin and dark blue eyes, with a wealth of rich dark brown hair. That she will get many votes is predicted by her friends.

Who's the next one?

"Watch Atlanta—she'll get you yet! 500,000 by 1920!"

ENVOY WILSON IN CAPITAL; TELLS BRYAN ALL

Conference on Mexican Situation Kept Secret — Ambassador Denies Interviews.

WASHINGTON, July 27.—Ambassador Henry Lane Wilson reached the office of Secretary of State Bryan to-day and expressed his views on the Mexican situation. The interview with Bryan was preliminary to the one which the envoy will hold with President Wilson.

The Ambassador's first act on his arrival here to-day was to repudiate almost entirely the interviews sent out from New York last night.

"Most of the statements attributed to me this morning are absolutely false," he said. "I did not call General Carranza a bandit or refer to the revolutionary movement as a campaign of bandits, nor did I say that all talk of mediation was rot.

No Chance for Mediation.

"I did say that a board of mediators going into Mexico at the present time would have as much chance as a board of arbitrators in the midst of strike conditions that prevailed in West Virginia some months ago. I am not to be placed in the attitude of being a mere press agent for Huerta."

The conference between Secretary Bryan and Ambassador Wilson lasted about 45 minutes. It will be resumed at 3 o'clock this afternoon. Mr. Bryan was forced to suspend the interview at 11 o'clock to keep an engagement with the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate to discuss the proposed Nicaraguan treaty and the Mexican situation.

Bryan stated that Ambassador Wilson would not see President Wilson before Monday. He declined to discuss the interview with the Ambassador.

Only One Real Revolt.

"There is only one bona fide revolution with high ideals in Mexico," continued the Ambassador. "That is the revolution in the State of Sonora, headed by Governor Pasquiera. They are fighting for states' rights and doing no looting."

The Ambassador said the Huerta government was "strong and virile," and that, if recognized by the United States, it could establish peace. He denied, however, that he ever said he favored recognition by this country.

"I am not here to advise the President on any course," he added, "but to make a first-hand report on conditions. Personally, I never recognized the Huerta government."

After Secretary Bryan left for the Capital, Ambassador Wilson started to work on a lengthy written report which he will present to President Wilson on Monday.

He declined to discuss the plans of mediation which it is proposed the United States shall undertake.

Has Prepared Policy.

Ambassador Wilson said he has prepared a "perfectly definite, complete policy, lined in memorandum form, which the United States should pursue in Mexican affairs."

The Ambassador indicated his displeasure at the sending to Mexico of special representatives.

"I might take this opportunity to say I resent any statement in any newspaper that I am to be interrogated during my stay in Washington in regard to my personal affairs," said Ambassador Wilson. "The President and Secretary of State have given me no indication of such a situation, and they have shown me the greatest consideration, except in one thing—the sending to Mexico, on behalf of the President, it is said, of William Bayard Hale, the magazine writer, and of Reginald H. DelVaille, on behalf of the Secretary of State, to make personal investigations.

"William Bayard Hale and Reginald H. VelVaille are equipped with secret copies of the State Department code. I know that assistance in the use of the code was sought from one of the secretaries of the American Embassy in Mexico City. I think if the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations knew of it there would be an investigation.

"William Bayard Hale got to Mexico City and gave his views on public questions the first day he was there. The Huerta Government people there say he came to Mexico with a brief of conditions from the Maderistas."

Legislature Praised By Governor Slaton

Words of praise for the work of the Legislature were spoken by Governor Slaton Friday night at a banquet given to the Ways and Means Committee of the House at the Capital City Club by Chairman L. R. Akin.

President J. Randolph Anderson, of the Senate, and Crawford Wheatley, chairman of the Appropriations Committee, spoke on the subject of tax reform.

M'KEE NOT TO BE OUSTED; QUITS IN JANUARY

Postmaster Says He Never Heard of Inefficiency Charges Except in Newspapers.

It was reported to-day that Postmaster Hugh McKee will not be outsed, but will be allowed to finish out his term, which expires some time between January 1 and 15, 1914.

This understanding is said to be the outcome of a visit of Postmaster McKee to Washington last week, at which time he conferred with Postmaster General Burleson and First Assistant Postmaster Roper.

"All New to Me," He Says.

Mr. McKee has arrived home from Washington, New York and other Eastern points in company with his daughter, Miss Jessie, whom he met at the steamer on her return from Paris, where she has been studying for the past year.

"I have read the published reports to the effect that I would be ousted," said Mr. McKee, "but the papers know more about it than I do and I haven't anything to say except that it's all Greek to me.

"My visit to Washington was most pleasant. I had a long talk with the First Assistant Postmaster. He was most courteous and showed me about the Capitol.

Says Atlanta Shall Judge.

"Of course, I do not know what the reports of the Postoffice Inspector contained. If they found inefficiency in the Atlanta office I never knew that it existed.

"So far as these inefficiency charges are concerned, and I am not sure that any were made officially, I will place myself before the citizens of Atlanta to be judged. They know whether they are getting good service or not and they are the only people really competent to judge."

One of the Greatest Mystery Stories Ever Written
By ANNA KATHARINE GREEN

It is Dr. Cameron's Wedding Day. At 8 o'Clock He Is to Marry Genevieve Gretorex, a Beautiful Society Girl. At 4 o'Clock He Is Informed His Fiancee Has Disappeared.

Opening Installment

(Copyright, 1913, by Anna Katharine Green.)

An Unexpected Visitor.

IT was Dr. Cameron's wedding day. At 8 o'clock in the evening the ceremony of marriage between himself and Genevieve Gretorex was to be performed at the house of the bride's parents in St. Nicholas Place. It was now 4 o'clock.

Seated in his office, Dr. Cameron, who, for a young man, enjoyed a most enviable reputation as a physician, mused over his past and built castles for the future; for his bride was the daughter of one of the richest and most influential citizens of New York, and to such ambition as his this fact, implying, as it did, valuable connections in the present and a large and unincumbered fortune in the future, was one that lent luster to her beauty and attraction to their union. Not but what he loved her—or thought he did—would have loved her under any circumstances. Was she not handsome, and in that reserved and somewhat haughty way he especially admired? Had she not fine manners and would she not add increased honor to a name already well known, and, as he might add, respected?

Had Her Caprices.

To be sure, she had her caprices, as a woman so circumstanced had a right to have, and she esteemed rather than adored him, as many little events in their short courtship only too plainly betrayed. But then he would not have admired a gushing bride, and, being what he was, a man of taste and the son of a man of taste, he found a certain satisfaction in the calm propriety of a match that united equal interests, without jeopardizing that calmness of mind necessary to the successful practice of his exacting profession.

There was but one thing troubled him. Why had she refused to see him for the last seven days? She was not a woman of petty instincts. Indeed, he had sometimes suspected her of possessing latent energies which the round of a fashionable life had never called forth; and in her cool and somewhat languid gaze he had caught glimpses now and then of a spirit that only needed light and air to expand into something like greatness.

Why, then, this strange desire for seclusion at a time when a woman is usually supposed to desire the support of her lover's society? Had he displeased her? Not only had his presents been rich, they had been rare and of an order to gratify her refined taste. Was she ill? He was her physician as well as lover, and he had not been notified of any indisposition.

Besides the last time he had been so fortunate as to be received into her presence she had seemed well and looked blooming; more so, indeed, than he had seen her for some time, and, though somewhat nervous in manner, had exhibited an interest in his attentions which he had not always observed in her. It was not a long interview, but he remembered it well; saw again the almost timid look with which she greeted him, followed by the smile that was nearly a shock to him—it was so much warmer and brighter than usual. Then the few hurried words—for even that night she would not see him long—and the sudden coyness of her attitude as he took her hand in parting!—he recollected it all. He had not thought of it at the time, but now it seemed to him that there had been something strange in her whole bearing, an impalpable change from her former self that he could not analyze, but which had, nevertheless, left its impression upon him. The kiss he had received, for instance, had moved him. There had been warmth in it and her lips had almost returned the pressure of his own.

Was She Ill?

This was new in the history of their courtship and would have argued, perhaps, that she was beginning to recognize his appreciation of her if her after conduct had not given the lie to any such surmise. As it was, it rather seemed to show that she had been in an unnatural condition—suggestive of incipient fever, perhaps. She was ill; and they were trying to keep it from him! The butler's excuses, "Miss Gretorex is very much engaged, sir; Mrs. Gretorex's regrets, sir, but Miss Gretorex has gone out on important business," were but polite subterfuges to blind his eyes to the real truth. And yet to his calmer judgment how untenable was even this supposition. Had she been sick he could not have failed to have heard of it from some quarter. No, she was not sick. She was but indulging in a freak easily to be explained, perhaps, by her mother's over-exciting code of etiquette; and, as in a few hours, she was to be his wife and life-long companion, he would cease to think of it, and only remember that kiss.

He had reached this point in his musings when they were suddenly interrupted. A tap was heard on his office door.

With some irritation he arose. It was not time for his carriage and he had expressly ordered that no visitors or patients were to be received. Who could it be, then? A messenger from Miss Gretorex? He sprang to the door at the thought. But before he could touch the knob, the door opened, and to his surprise and possible relief there entered an unknown man of middle age and prepossessing appearance, whose errand seemed to be one of importance, though his manner was quiet and his voice startlingly gentle.

A Visitor.

"I hope I am not intruding," said he. "The boy below told me this was your wedding day, but he also told me that the ceremony was not to take place till 8 o'clock this evening, and as my business is peculiar and demands instant attention I ventured to come up."

"That is right," answered Dr. Cameron, feeling an unaccountable attraction toward the man, though he was not what you would perhaps call a gentleman, and had, as the doctor could not but notice even at this early stage of their acquaintance, a way of not meeting your eye when he spoke that was to say the least, lacking in ingenuousness. "Is it as a patient you come to me?"

"No," rejoined the stranger, fixing his glance on the white necktie and one or two other insignificant articles which lay on the table near by, with an air strangely like that of compassion. "My business is with you as a doctor—that is, partly—but I am not the patient. I almost wish I were," he added, in a troubled tone that awakened the other's interest notwithstanding the natural preoccupation of his thoughts.

"Let me hear," returned Dr. Cameron.

"You make my task easy," the stranger remarked. "And yet," he went on in a curter and more business-like tone, "you may be less willing to listen when I tell you that I have first a story to relate which, while not uninteresting in itself, is so out of accord with your present mood that I doubt if you will be able to sit through it with patience. Yet it is necessary for me to relate it and necessary for you to hear it, now, here, and without any interruption."

This was alarming; especially as the speaker did not seem like a man given to sentimentalities or even to exaggeration. On the contrary he gave the impression of a person accustomed to weigh his words with studious care, not allowing a sentence to escape him without a decided motive.

"Will you tell me your name?" requested Dr. Cameron.

The reply came quietly.

"I doubt if you will know it, and I had rather you had not asked it. But since it is important above all things that you should trust me, I will say that it is Gryce, Ebenezer Gryce, and add that I am a member of the police force; in short, a detective."

Dr. Cameron felt his apprehensions vanish. Whatever the other's errand, it could not be one that touched him or his; and this to a man on his wedding day was certainly a comforting thought.

"You undervalue your fame," he replied. "I know your name well. Can it be possible you desire my assistance in a professional way?"

The detective's gaze, which had been resting gloomily upon a laughing cherub on the mantelpiece, shifted, but he did not respond to the doctor's smile, and his manner remained unaltered.

"I will tell my story," said he. "It will be the quickest way to come to an understanding."

And without further pause or preliminary, he began in the following words:

The Dilemma.

"I am getting to be an old man, and I have my infirmities. But there are still cases which are given to no one but me. Among them are those which involve the honor of persons in a high station of life."

Mr. Gryce paused. Dr. Cameron felt his apprehensions return.

"You see," the detective slowly resumed, "I can keep a secret; that is, when the life and property of others are not endangered by my silence. I can do a detective's work and keep a detective's counsel, only speaking when and where necessity requires."

He paused again. Dr. Cameron moved uneasily.

"As in this case," added the other, gravely.

"This case?" repeated the doctor, now thoroughly alarmed. "What case? You excite me; tell me what you have to say, at once!"

But the detective was not to be hurried.

"I was, therefore, not at all surprised," he proceeded, as if no interruption had occurred, "when some three days ago I was requested to call upon—Mrs. A., let us say—on business of a strictly confidential character. Such summonses come frequently. Such a summons does not disturb an officer in the least. I nevertheless made haste to show myself at Mrs. A.'s house, for Mrs. A., whom you perhaps know is a woman of some consequence, and her husband is a man of widespread reputation and influence. I found her at home, anxiously awaiting my appearance. As soon as she saw me she told me her trouble: 'Mr. Gryce,' said she, 'I am in a great dilemma. Something has occurred in my family which may or may not lead to a lasting dishonor. What I wish from you is aid to determine whether our fears are well grounded. If they are not, you will forget that you were ever called to this house.' I bowed. I was already interested, for I saw that her anxiety was great, while I could not help being puzzled over its cause, for she had no son to disgrace her by his dissipations, and as for her husband, he was above reproach. She soon relieved my curiosity.

"'Mr. Gryce,' said she, 'I have a daughter.'

"'Yes,' I returned, inwardly startled. Miss A. and dishonor seemed so wide apart.

"Our Only Child."

"'She is our only child,' the mother went on. 'We love her, and have always cherished her, but though it is not generally known in this house'—and here the poor lady's eyes roamed about her as if she were afraid that her words would be overheard, 'she has left us; gone away without acquainting us where—suddenly, inexplicably, leaving only the most meager explanation behind her, and—and—'

"'But, madam,' I interrupted, 'if she left any explanation—'

"Mrs. A. took a small and crumpled note out of her pocket and handed it to me.

"'A letter,' she affirmed, 'sent through the mail. And I was in the house when she left, and would have listened to any reasonable request she had to make.'

"I had already read the four or five lines which the letter contained:

"'Dear Mother; I must have rest. I have gone away for a few days, but shall be back on the 27th. Don't worry.

"'Your affectionate ——.'

"'What is the matter with this?' I asked. 'She says she will be back on the 27th, and to-day is only the 24th.'

"'Sir,' was the answer, 'it is the only time in our experience when our daughter has left us without first gaining our permission. Besides, the time is especially inopportune. My daughter's wedding cards are out.'"

Mr. Gryce stopped suddenly, for Dr. Cameron had given an anxious start.

"Ah, that arouses your interest!" remarked the detective. "Your own wedding being so near, I am not surprised."

It was dryly said, and the doctor at once reseated himself. He had no wish to appear unduly moved, but he could not suppress every token of emotion, so he turned his head away from the light. Mr. Gryce let his gaze travel to a new object before proceeding.

Only One Conclusion.

"This avowal of Mrs. A. put a new aspect on affairs," said he, "but yet I saw no reason for the extreme anxiety displayed. 'And on what day does she expect to be married?' I asked.

"'On the 27th.'

"'But she says she will be back.'

"'That does not comfort me.'

"'You think she will not come.'

"'I have no hope that she will.'

"This acknowledgment was uttered with emphasis. There seemed to be but one conclusion to draw.

"'Your daughter wishes to escape her engagement?'

"The answer was less emphatic than before. In fact, it expressed doubt.

"'I do not know, sir; my daughter is not herself, has not been for some time. My husband and myself have both noticed it; but we never anticipated her taking any such extreme action as this. Where has she gone? What will become of her? How can we face the world? How can we tell her lover?'

"'Then you think——'

"'That she is laboring under a temporary aberration of mind, caused, perhaps, by the excitement of the last few weeks; that she is not responsible for her acts; that she may be anywhere, remote or near; and that we may wait till the hour set for her marriage is past without seeing her.'

"'To this I could make but one reply: 'Then why not take her lover into your confidence, inform him of your fears, and gain the benefit of his experience in your search for her?'

A MOTHER'S FEARS.

"'The answer will astonish you.

"'Because we are very proud and he is very proud. To explain our fears we should be obliged to say much that it would be humiliating for us to utter and for him to hear. Besides, we may overrate the situation. She may come back; as she says she will and, should this be the case, you can see for yourself what endless regret would follow any such confidences as you suggest.'

"'But'—I began.

"'It is this note that causes our dilemma,' she interposed. 'With these lines before me I can not act as if there were no hope of her returning in proper time to take her part in the ceremony. Yet I do not trust these lines, nor the promise she has made. Why, I can hardly say; for she has always been a woman of her word. But she is not herself, of that I am convinced.'

"This repetition of her former assertion made it easy for me to inquire what special change she had perceived in her daughter to lead to such a conclusion. She evidently found it difficult to reply.

"'I can not put it into words,' she declared. 'I feel the change.'

"'And how long have you felt it?'

"'Not long; since we began active preparations for her wedding, I think.'

"'And has no one else observed it?'

"'I can not say. I should think her lover would.'

"'Why?'

"'Because it has been in reference to him she has shown her peculiarities strongest. For weeks she has received him only on sufferance and for the last few days has more than once absolutely refused to see him.'

"'And what reason did she assign for this?'

Prepared for Wedding.

"'Follies. Fatigue, caprice, a letter to write, a dressmaker to see—anything that came into her head.'

"'Yet she went on preparing for her wedding?'

"'Certainly; her cards were out.'

"The tone in which this was said caused me to reflect. Though affable, kindly and even philanthropic in her dealings toward the world at large, Mrs. A. is, as every one knows, a woman who would find it very difficult to infringe upon any of the laws of society. Having seen her daughter pledge herself to a man of suitable pretensions, she would consider such a pledge final if only because she could not face the talk and scandal that would follow a rupture. Influenced by his idea, I remarked:

"'You must be perfectly frank with me if you want me to help you at this crisis. Has your daughter, or has she not, expressed a wish to break her engagement?'

"'She asked me once if I thought it too late for her to do so. Of course there was but one reply to this, and she said no more. But,' the poor mother continued hastily, 'that was only a symptom of flightiness. She has nothing against her lover, does not pretend to have.'

"'Only against marriage?'

"'Only against marriage.'

"'Mrs. A.,' I now boldly asked, 'do you think she loves the man you expect her to marry?'

"The answer came hesitatingly. 'She accepted his attentions with pleasure when they were first offered.'

"'Do you think she loves any other man?'

The mother shrank back in dismay. "I am sure she does not. How could she? There is not another such gentleman in our circle of acquaintance."

"This was flattering to the gentleman, but not exactly satisfactory to me.

"'You know girls sometimes take strange whims.'

"'My daughter is not a girl, she is a woman.'

"This silenced me as it would you, sir, I have no doubt; and seeing the mother was really sincere in believing that her daughter's mind was temporarily affected, I inquired again as to what she had done or failed to do of late, and found that she had shunned the society of the members of her family as well as that of her lover, finding her sole interest seemingly in the preparation of her wardrobe. 'To that she did attend,' said Mrs. A., 'and it was the only thing she did help me in. No hour was too late for her to see her dressmaker; no engagement too pressing for her to receive and fit on any of the new costumes that kept coming home. Indeed she showed more than a bride's usual interest in such matters; and it is the one reason I have for not disputing you utterly when you say she may come back. She will want to see her dresses.'

A Clew.

"'Then she did not take them with her?'

"'She took nothing.'

"'What! not a trunk?'

"'Nothing; that is, nothing but a little hand satchel.'

"'How do you know this?'

"'We all saw her go out; she was in shopping costume.'

"'But she had money?'

"'I can not say. Some, no doubt; but we found a large roll of bills in her drawer, and her father says it contains nearly all he had lately given her. I do not think her pocketbook held more than five dollars.'

"This was a point. Either the girl was going amongst friends, or she was really touched in her mind. To make sure that the first supposition was not true, I asked for a list of the houses which Miss A. was in the habit of visiting. Mrs. A. mentioned some half-dozen, but added that her daughter's most intimate companion was in Europe and that she did not think she cared enough for the others to go to them at this time.

"'And she positively carried no baggage with her?'

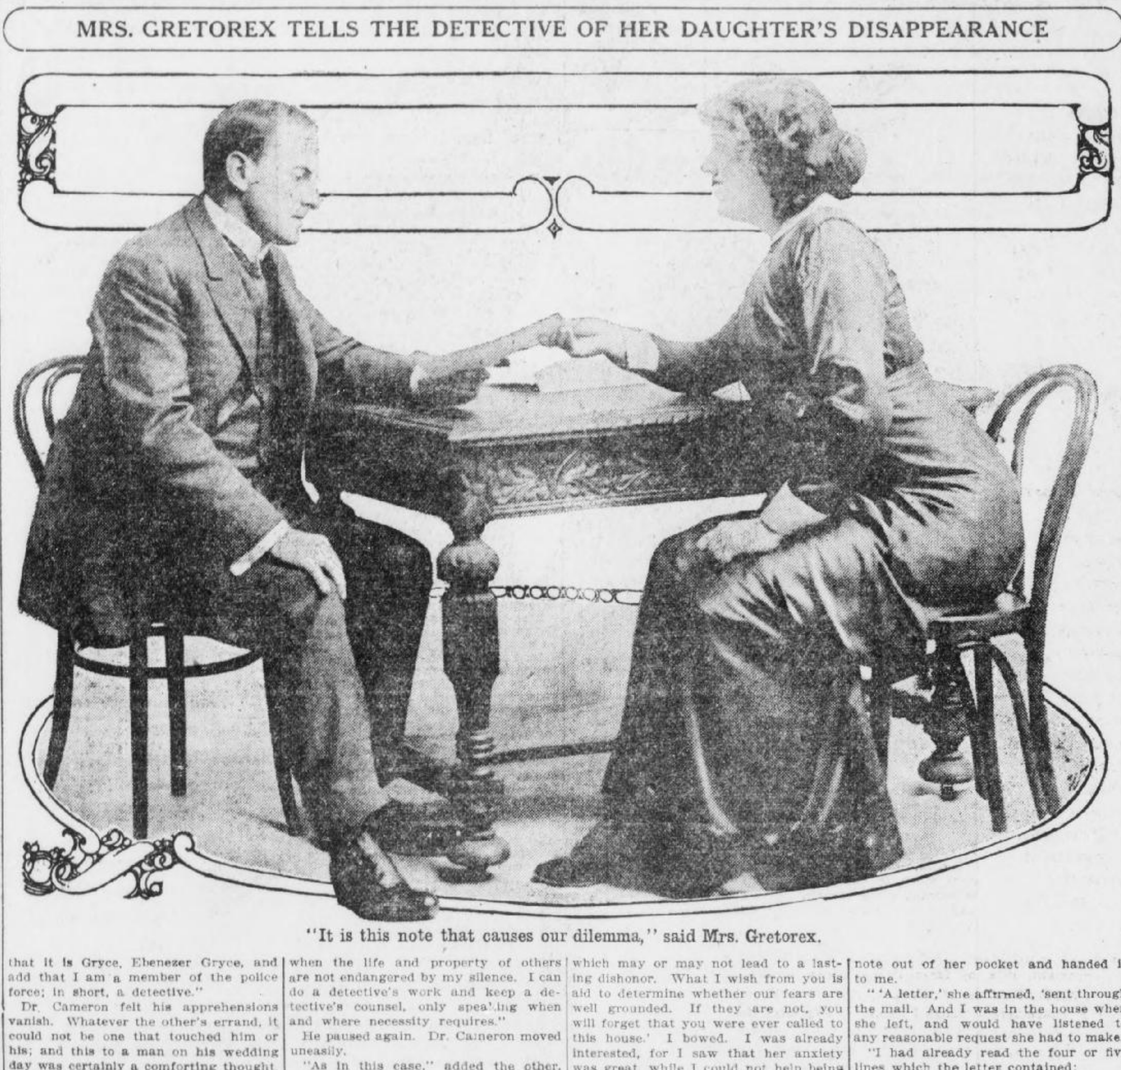

"'None. I have looked her things over carefully and find nothing missing. She did not even wear her diamonds.'

"'And her watch?'

"'Is left behind.'

To Be Continued To-morrow.

THEIR MARRIED LIFE

Helen's First Day in the Paris Shops Results in Very Few Purcheses

By MABEL HERBERT URNER.

IT was the morning of their third day in Paris that Helen started out to shop. She had read and heard so much of the big Parisian bazaars that she was athrill with eager expectation.

"Better take in the Galeries Lafayette first," suggested Warren as they left the hotel together. "You can take a bus from there for the Bon Marche."

"Dear, wouldn't you have time to go by the Lafayette with me—it's only half past 9," pleaded Helen, who dreaded starting out alone.

"All right," good naturedly, "that's not much out of my way. Hurry up—let's get this bus."

It was going to be another hot day. There was still no relief from the heat wave that had settled over Paris since their arrival. But as Helen climbed gleefully to the top of the bus, the thought of the day in the Paris shops made her unmindful of the heat.

"There you are." Warren pointed out a huge building just ahead. From the top fluttered white banners and flags lettered gayly in red, "Galeries Lafayette." It looked more like a great exposition building than a store.

But when they left the bus, Helen was astonished to find that all along the sidewalk in front of the store were stalls, piled high with the cheapest kind of merchandise.

She Is Lonely.

There were tables of crockery, kitchenware, cotton dresses and waists, and around each was a chattering crowd of Frenchwomen pulling over the goods. Large cardboard signs—"50 centimes," "1 franc," "2 francs"—were everywhere.

"Why, dear, would you think they'd allow these push-cart peddlers outside a reputable store? Why, it's like a cheap market place!"

"They're not push-cart peddlers," laughed Warren. "This is all part of the Galeries Lafayette—that's how they sell their cheap goods. Our stores have bargain basements—here they have stalls outside the shop. Now I've got to leave you. Don't overdo it and get too tired. Better not be on your feet too much this hot day."

Helen's interest in the scene about her soon banished the momentary feeling of loneliness as Warren disappeared in the crowd. For some time she stood on the sidewalk watching the stalls and the chattering, pushing crowd about them. Warren was right. Unquestionably this was part of the store, for bareheaded French floor-walkers, with frock coats and twisted mustaches, walked up and down the sidewalk.

Although Helen had often heard that the Galeries Lafayette was one of the best Paris shops, this street sale of goods made her most skeptical. But when she entered, she saw that it was really a very beautiful store. In the center was a great rotunda under a crystal dome. An imposing marble staircase with double escalators led to the upper galleries.

Everywhere was a lavish and seemingly haphazard display of goods. It was all very different from a New York shop. There seemed no aisles, only a vast labyrinth of tables piled with goods in chaotic disorder—the most tawdry heaped carelessly with the most expensive. The confusing display of the great quantities of merchandise, the riot of color, the crowd, the uproar and tumult were to Helen most bewildering.

Hoping that the upper galleries would be less crowded and tumultuous, Helen made her way to the long line of elevators. Glancing over the directory of the floors, she located "Lingerie" and "Trousseaux."

French lingerie is a luxury coveted by every American woman, and as Helen stepped from the elevator at the third gallery into what seemed a great exhibition of white goods, her heart beat with expectation.

On every side was a network of tables and counters heaped with white garments—chemisettes, jupons and robes de nuites. Over the tables were cards with "Occasion" or "Grand Occasion," the French phrase for bargains.

Almost everything was hand embroidered and mostly unlaundered, the blue pencilled tracing of the patterns being still distinct.

Helen was surprised to find that while even the cheapest garment, those as low as six or seven francs, were embroidered by hand, the garment itself was made by machinery, the seams carelessly stitched, and the buttons half off. She thought of the poor women in the convents where most of this work is done. How poorly paid they must be to embroider such inferior goods!

She looked first for some dainty, low-necked night dresses with short butterfly sleeves, but she saw only ungainly garments with high necks and long sleeves. Was this the much-lauded lingerie?

At last, in some glass cases, where the most expensive models were displayed, she found some exquisite low-neck short-sleeved gowns.

"How much? Quel prix?" Helen demanded of a passing clerk, pointing to a garment in the case.

The girl opened the case and looked at the ticket. Helen could not understand her, but, stooping over, she read the ticket herself—90 francs. Eighteen dollars!

Helen tried to make her understand with a few words of French, much English and many gestures that she wanted to see some gowns of that cut, but much less expensive. The girl touched a loud gong, which was a signal for an English-speaking clerk, and one promptly appeared.

"Almost all of our low-neck and short-sleeved gowns are in the expensive models," the clerk explained. "But of course we have some for less than 90 francs. Now here is quite a pretty gown for 35 francs."

Seven dollars! Except for her trousseau, Helen had never paid $7 for a nightgown in her life. And she had no intention of paying it in Paris, where she had expected to get things ridiculously cheap.

Only One Purchase.

"Well, I'll let the nightgowns go for the present, but I'd like to see some combinations and skirts."

"About what price does madam wish to pay?" asked the clerk, with lessening cordiality, for she expected Americans not to object to prices.

"About three or four dollars—fifteen or twenty francs."

"They're all out on the tables, madam. We keep only the more expensive ones in this department."

"But I could never button these," exclaimed Helen, viewing with disfavor the combinations, which all opened in the back. "And they're all too large—I want 34."

"You won't find bust measures in Paris like you have in America, madam. We have only three sizes here. You see, they're marked with tickets—the green ticket is small, the pink ticket medium and the yellow ticket large."

Helen expressed her astonishment that in Paris, where fit and style were supposed to be perfected, they should have only three sizes instead of the eight—from 32 to 46—that are carried by every American store!

The intention to buy enough lingerie while in Paris to last her for the next two years was somewhat shaken. And she finally left the department, having made just one purchase—a white skirt with a hand-embroidered flounce. Even this she could not get the right length. It would have to be shortened when she got it home.

From the lingerie, Helen walked down the broad marble staircase to the gallery below. Just at the foot of the stairs were a dozen or more tables overburdened with parasols. She had never seen so many parascls together in her life. Most of them were brilliant in coloring and design, vivid reds, bright greens and startling blues.

Farther on was a gorgeous display of scarfs—the long chiffon scarfs that the French women wear with their evening gowns. They lay in careless glittering heaps, shimmering with gold and silver spangles and iridescent beadings.

Helen had thought the hues and fabrics in the shops at home particularly loud this year, but they were mild and subdued compared with the riotous coloring of everything here.

In spite of the whirring electric fans the heat was excessive, and before Helen had explored half the departments of the Galeries Lafayette she was exhausted.

Although she had spent most of the day there, her purchases were trivial, but she had a fair idea of what a big Paris shop was like.

It was good to get back to their rooms, to have time to bathe, rest and dress before Warren came.

"Well, how did you get along?" was his greeting when he got in a little after 6. "Buy out all the Paris shops?"

"Not quite. I left a few things in the Galeries Lafayette! That was the only place I went."

"How did you find things? Cheaper than at home?"

"Some things are. But, dear, the styles and colorings are so extreme. Do you know," thoughtfully, "I really believe I can find the things I want better in New York."

"Course you can! Nothing's more overrated than the French styles. They are made for French women—not for Americans. And nine-tenths of the Americans who come over here and buy a lot of truck are blamed sick of their bargains when they get 'em home."

PIRATES STILL HOPE TO CATCH FLYING GIANTS

Barney Dreyfus Expects McGraw Men to Take Awful Slump Before Season Is Over.

PITTSBURG, PA., July 26.—Have the Pittsburg Pirates any chance for the 1913 pennant?

Will they be able to overcome the thirteen-game lead now enjoyed by the Giants?

Barney Dreyfuss, president of the Pittsburg club, maintains that as long as his players continue playing good ball, they have a chance to fetch. He doesn't believe New York is going to jog along sweeping everything before it.

The Giants have only about twenty games left to play on their own grounds; and while they have gone well on the road, they sure to goodness will experience somewhat of a slump. Said Mr. Dreyfus:

"Our players have at last rounded into form and are playing the ball of which they are capable. And it isn't a flash, either. I am of the opinion that the good work is going to continue and that New York will be forced to keep going in order to nose us out.

"Of course a lead of thirteen games is going to be hard to overcome, but I see where Manager Clark Griffith, of the Washington American League team, is claiming the pennant for his club, and if Griffith can win, so can we.

"The Pittsburg pitchers are going well and the team is hitting. The fielding is all that could be asked for—and we are getting some of the breaks. Butler is filling in well at short and while he isn't a Wagner, he is better than some shortfielders in the major leagues. The other departments are being well and ably cared for, and we are still hoping.

Giants Must Not Falter.

"I do not like to indulge in prophecies," continued the Pittsburg club owner, "but I wouldn't be surprised to see Fred Clarke and his bunch cop the flag.

"We will have a long stretch of games at Forbes Field and that is going to help some. New York will be on the road, and I believe that their slump is going to begin then."

Mr. Dreyfuss called attention to the National League race last season when New York got away to a big lead and then was forced to hustle all it knew how, in order to fetch. In 1906, the Chicago White Sox were seventh in the American League race, but still they won the pennant and subsequently the world's series.

Pitchers Are Right.

What really has started Clarke on the up-grade again is that his great staff of pitchers is finally beginning to live up to its press agent notices. Claude Hendrix, the leading pitcher of the National League last season; Babe Adams, the marvel of the 1909 world's series; Kentucky Rosebud Camnitz, Hank Robinson and Lefty Cooper have all started flipping their heads off, while George McQuillen, the former Phillie crack, is doing a successful come-back. Poor old Marty O'Toole was just beginning to come around nicely, too, when he got laid up for the season. The $22,500 beauty was the only Corsair gunner who succeeded in stopping the Giants the last time McGraw's men called on Barney Dreyfuss.

Clarke is getting his infield problem worked out, and Butler, who failed at second early in the season, is now doing nicely at shortstop, though Wagner may be in his old place soon. A rookie outfielder, named Kommers, is said to be a comer (no joke), and is said to have filled the gap in center field, which neither Mike Donlin, Artie Hofman, Booe or Mesnor filled to the satisfaction of Clarke or the Pirate bugs.

There Still Is Hope.

However, there have been ball clubs which have been as bad in the rut as the Pirates were this spring and have copped the gonfalon. In 1906 the Chicago White Sox flirted around seventh place until the end of June, when they suddenly took on a new lease of life and climbed to the top. They finished the season as champs of the universe. A winning streak 19 links long helped the Sox to pass the Yankees that year. It was the year that Clark Griffith almost won the pennant by taking three out of four on his last visit to Chicago, only to get nicked three in a row in Detroit and lose all the advantage gained in Chi. However, the betting is all against another New York team losing out by any sensational run such as the White Sox flashed in 1906, but the Chicago climb shows it can be done.

This splendid remedy is a marvel for salt rheum, eczema, lupus, psoriasis and scrofula. Ask at any drug store for a bottle of S. S. S. and you are then on the road to health. The action of this remarkable remedy is direct, positive, certain in its influence. It is one of those rare medical forces which act in the blood with the same degree of certainty that is found in all natural tendencies. The manner in which it dominates and controls the mysterious transference of the rich, red, pure arterial blood for the impaired blood is marvelous.

Out through every skin pore acids, germs and other blood impurities are forced in the form of invisible vapor. On the Level, I Don't Know What It's All About Myself :: :: :: By "Bud" Fisher

KRAZY KAT :: :: :: :: :: :: No, Mary Should Not Have Permitted It

GIANTS SURE TO WIN FLAG, AVERS FLOTO

DENVER, July 26.—As the Western end of the National League contingent swings toward home after its second jaunt of 1913 around the circuit, we find that the grand old Mandarin, John McGraw, has landed his band of Bulgarian Giants in front, and is fast widening the space that he made possible by his consecutive victories over the Philadelphia club. It was early in the race that McGraw said, "As soon as my boys get to playing real baseball it won't take long to pass the Philadelphia club and take the lead. I don't figure them dangerous, but rather feel scared at the Cubs and the Pirates cutting up some capers not in the cards."

That was the opinion that the leader of last year's National League champions had of the Phillies when Dooin's pets were burning up things and attempting to make a runaway of the race. Since that time McGraw's band has steadied in its fielding and improved in its hitting. They have passed the Quakers and taken the lead. It begins to look as if they'll be able to hold it from this time on. The four slabmen—Tesreau, Mathewson, Marquard and Demaree—are all going good and can take their regular turn on the mound. Then as wrecking crews "Muggsy" can send forth Fromme, Crandall and Wiltse. It's a tough combination for the opposition to batter down.

Team Has Courage.

We always find that the team that can battle its way from behind and come through in flying colors to the front is a team of courage, and once given the confidence that goes with success it is hard to shake out of the belief that all other teams are inferior to it. This forms a combination that is almost impossible to beat. For this reason we believe New York will be able to hold its present advantage and remain out in front until the end.

And while we are on the subject of New York, has it ever flashed across your base hit column that the National League championship is a sort of monopoly of late? In the last thirteen years only three different clubs have participated in the honor, Chicago, New York and Pittsburg. Each has won it four times, and it now looks as if New York would gather it for the fifth time. Chance, McGraw and Clarke have been the managers that have enjoyed the distinction of leading winners of late years.

Pirates Strong on Paper.

Just why Pittsburg failed to crowd Chicago out two years ago and New York last year and this year is what's puzzling all baseball fans. On paper it is the best team in the National, but on the field a miserable representative of what champions should look like. No one has been able to solve the poor showing of the Pirates. But we are rather inclined to think that McGraw could take the same team as constituted to-day and be right up in the thick of the fight. At any rate, that expresses the exalted opinion we have of the Pittsburg crew.

Wonders never cease. They do say that the Cincinnati fans have finally tired of knocking the many managers and teams that have represented them in the National League, that Tinker's berth is an easy one and that all the comedy remarks that were hurled at Clark Griffith and Hank O'Day no longer are heard. Instead, the fans seem to take it for granted that Cincinnati is justly entitled to the cellar championship honors and are happy and contented. Thus do even Cincinnati fans resign themselves to fate.

FLYNN TO GET ANOTHER TRY AT RING TITLE

By Ed W. Smith.

CHICAGO, ILL., July 26.—It takes a good bit of managerial skill to boost Jim Flynn, of Pueblo, from the depths into which he had been forced through successive defeats into a real match for a real belt which is to be emblematic of the lightweight championship of the boxing world. That skill has been shown by one J. Curley, Flynn's manager, and the Pueblo man is to get his second chance to win a title—or is it the fourth or fifth?—in a bout in New York early next month when he faces Gunboat Smith, of Philadelphia and San Francisco. And the winner will be given a belt to replace the one that went out of commission when Luther McCarty died in Alberta the latter part of May.

* * *

FLYNN'S peculiar position in the boxing world is brought to mind now and then by a dispatch from Missouri telling of the progress the boxer is making in his automobile trip from Pueblo to New York. The other day the wires bore the news that Jim had been pinched in a small town for speeding after having had his machine repaired. Flynn ever has been a thorn in the side of the aspirants for the white title, but unfortunately for the hardy fellow from the mountains he always has just failed of getting there. Jim is a trifle too small, in the general opinion of the critics, or rather he is too short to cope successfully with the tall men of the heavyweight division.

* * *

IF many of the fight fans do not like Jim for his brash ways and the overabundance of ego that he displays constantly they nevertheless must admire the man for his sterling fighting qualities. Gameness is Jim's middle name and he has proved in the last four or five years to be the grandest little trial horse the ring ever has known. As a matter of fact, a man never would be thoroughly tried in the ring until he had met Jim in a real encounter. If he could get by the Pueblo ringster his future would be pretty well assured.

* * *

AS a matter of cold fact, it was never demonstrated that the late Luther McCarty was a real fighter until he had sent Jim into a crushing defeat. Then we all knew that Luther was the real thing, a demonstration that the poor fellow strengthened a short time later by whaling the stuffin' out of Al Palzer, one of the behemoths of the ring. Flynn got his chance at McCarty out on the coast after he had demonstrated that he couldn't do much with Jack Johnson and figured that if he had whipped Luther he would have had little trouble with Al Palzer, who was sent in against the winner. But McCarty proved far too big and strong and lengthy in the reach for the squatty Flynn.

* * *

IN Gunboat Smith Flynn will meet a man much more to his own measurements, though the Gunboat is a long, rangy chap. But he hasn't the weight that most of Flynn's opponents have posseessed, and for that reason Flynn believes he has a royal chance of being returned the winner. The heavyweight class is a mysteriously weak division just now and almost anybody has a chance of dragging down the honors.

* * *

OUT in Los Angeles, where Flynn has done some of his best fighting, they like him. As a matter of fact, they like the rough, tough fellow pretty much out there without losing sight of and giving free credit for his cleverness and skill. Both Battling Nelson and Ad Wolgast, former lightweight champions, were great favorites there.

BY RIGHT CROSS

LANGFORD RETURNS.

THE shades of night were coming fast,
But, at that, the shades were passed
By a Hope who, in his rush,
Yelled as he lammed for the brush:
"Sam is back!"

His eyes were wild, his cheeks were pale,
He beat it like a frightened quail;
Whenever he could spare some wind
He feebly gasped to those behind:
"Sam is back!"

The Fight Commission begged him stay:
"We will protect you, anyway!
We need the coin—we'll stick by you"—
The Hope was headed for the blue—
"Sam is back!"

"Aw, stick!" his manager half sobbed.
"You ain't a-gonna see me robbed?
I've picked a soft guy for you here"—
He sprinted for the steamship pier.
"Sam is back!"

That night he lamped a cheering sight—
The sinking Fire Island Light;
And, as the ship plowed through the seas
He breathed from out his free heart's ease;
"Me to Europe!"

MOTHER ONLY MANAGER FOR INDIAN HURLER

GUTHRIE, OKLA., July 26.—Among the young Indian baseball pitchers of the present season in Oklahoma, Lariat White Bird, a young Cheyenne, has shown the most remarkable qualities. His work with the Watonga team has been sensational all season, including one no-hit game against the Oklahoma City All-Stars. He has proved a wonderful strike-out artist, and his fame in this line has spread among all the Cheyennes and Arapahoes, who live together in Western Oklahoma, and all of them are proud of their kinsman's prowess.

White Bird inherits the stoic and sometimes sullen temperament from his forefathers, and when things do not go just right on the diamond, he will balk, and it is a difficult matter at times to get him to proceed with the game. Something of this kind happened a few days ago when a game was being played between the long-time rivals, Watonga and Geary. There was a general melee for a time, and when it closed it was discovered that Lariat White Bird had "got on his war paint" and refused to continue in the box. A halt was called but no persuasion on the part of the management could induce Lariat to return to the box.

* * *

IT was at this stage that Lariat's squaw mother appeared on the diamond. It soon became evident that the Indian mother has influence over her children that is very potent. Wrapping her blanket around her, the squaw approached Lariat on the Watonga bench and then waiting until she caught the star twirler's eyes, she commanded:

"You must. You throw ball. White men no like you don't. Throw hard. Make white man throw down bat. White man no hit ball. You go!" and she motioned toward the pitcher's box.

Immediately Lariat started for the diamond's center and he pitched ball like a whirlwind, hanging baseballs like neckties around the necks of the Geary batsmen and winning his game 13 to 1.

* * *

PITCHER BEN TINCUP, the Cherkee Indian who is making a fine record this season with Sherman, Tex., in the Texas-Oklahoma League, is bound to go higher this fall by the draft route, if not purchased prior to that time. Several big league scouts have watched Tincup this season and offers have been made for him. Tincup lives near Muskogee, Okla., and saw his first league experience with Muskogee last year in the Oklahoma State League. When the season closed he was sold to Sherman. He is also one of the leading batsmen in the Texas-Oklahoma League. Detroit and Philadelphia scouts have also made offers for Pitcher Appleton, of the Sherman team, who pitched a no-hit game last Sunday against the Denison team.

Another Cheyenne Indian pitcher who is showing up well this season in independent ball is Lone Bear, a pitcher for the Caton team. In a recent game against Fountain, Lone Bear yielded but seven hits in sixteen innings, Canton winning, 2 to 1.

* * *

WINFIELD is leading the recently organized Oklahoma-Kansas League with nine wins and one defeat; Arkansas City is second with a .500 percentage, and Ponca City and Blackwell are tied with .300 each. Blackwell has the distinction of winning the only game from Winfield, and this was due to the masterful pitching of Johnson for the Oklahomans. He held Winfield to five hits and struck out sixteen of the players from Fred Clarke's town.

TRENDALL AND CROSS MAY BOX IN DENVER RING

By Ed W. Smith.

CHICAGO, ILL., July 26.—Like Butte and some of the other mountain cities, Denver threatens to take a prominent place in the boxing world. They are arranging a match there now for the early part of August between Leach Cross, of New York, and Harry Trendall, the St. Louis star, who long has been waiting a good chance to break in among the favored ones of the 133-pound division. Denver promoters are displaying a commendable bit of ginger and pep in their work so far, and are bound to get the results if they keep on going the way they have planned. "Reddy" Gallagher and Eddie Pitts appear to be the prominent ones in the Mountain City just now.

* * *

COLORADO'S Governor failed to sign a boxing bill that had been passed, and gave the very excellent reason that there already was a State law that permitted bouts upon the payment by a regularly organized athletic club of a certain license sum. The State's executive could not see why a new law was needed, and said so. Hence the athletic clubs of Denver are working along under the old statute. They have a dandy pavilion there, and the game seems to be in the best of hands, so that the boxers have a pretty good stopping place there. Many of them are fearful of the effects of the mile-high air, but many others have by actual test exploded this bugaboo.

* * *

CROSS and Trendall, they say, would draw the utmost capacity there, and should put up one of the best battles imaginable, as the St. Louis lad has been going at a terrific clip lately. None of them has any terrors for him right now, and even the much-discussed Cross punch isn't causing the Missouri man any wakeful nights.

* * *

CHARLEY SCULLY, a Chicago boxer, is in Denver now, and the other night put up a smashing battle of ten rounds with Red Butler, of Kansas City, that saved Eddie Pitts' show. It was billed as one of the minor events, but such a corking display of earnest work did the boys give that the fans voted it easily the feature of the night. It was called a draw. On the same show, Frank Whitney, the Cedar Rapids carpenter, and Phil Knight met in the main event, and Frank, who has met with a lot of misfortune lately, earned a clean-cut decision over Phil, who forgot to foul his man this time. Abey Pollock, the old-time Chicago referee, is acting in the battles out there, and as usual he is throwing a world of earnestness and care into his work.

* * *

MATTY M'CUE, Racine's sensational featherweight, is pluming himself for new conquests. Matty was rushed through a tremendous campaign late in the winter and spring, and wound up with disaster. They didn't lick Matty, but they put a terrible ear on him, and in addition he suffered a sprained wrist. He had these injuries when he tackled Patsy Brannigan, of Pittsburg, in Milwaukee, and while that doesn't detract at all from the game battle Patsy put up, it gives Matty a reasonable excuse to seek another match with the little Mick.

EMPIRE LEAGUE NOTES

Almost as fast as some teams in the Empire change players the league's staff of umpires changes. McAfee and Morton are the last ones to leave the staff. Their places have been filled by McLaughlin, formerly with the Cotton States, and Rehbein, who was threatened by a crowd of fans after a game in Waycross last week.

* * *

It appears that Cordele possesses in its pitching staff more than one wonder. Wilder is leading the league in point of games won, and Fillingen, a spitball artist, is climbing fast and pulling off stunts that are startling, to say the least of them.

* * *

The Brunswick team has gotten so recently that it loses an average of one game a week by a big score, then settles down and plays some of the prettiest games ever witnessed in the league.

* * *

Two of the castoffs of the Brunswick team were signed by Waycross, and like some of the Waycross castoffs, made good with a rush. Jones is playing first, Holliday, the Atlanta boy, having been benched for the present, and Clancey is at short doing well.

* * *

Jack Hawkins, well known in baseball circles in Atlanta, and a member of the Brunswick team in the Empire a part of the season, may don a Waycross uniform early next month.

* * *

Two triple plays during its first season is one of the records the Empire will hang up when the schedule closes in August. The first was made early in May while Waycross and Brunswick were playing in Brunswick, the Waycross players checking a rally by Brunswick by the triple. In a game at Cordele, the Valdosta team pulled off one that was started when Schwartz snagged a liner over short.

* * *

Manager Dudley, of the Thomasville team, is back in the game, after having been kept out for some time by an injury. His absence was felt by the team, but, according to the league standing, his players did their best to hold their own during his enforced absence.

* * *

"Doc" Fenton, playing center for Waycross, is regarded by all critics in the league as one of the most sensational fielders in the circuit. He has as many as eight put-outs to his credit for a single game, and an average of half of them would ordinarily count as hits.

* * *

Lloyd is the name of the latest addition to the Waycross team. He is an infielder, and calls Louisiana home.

* * *

Alperman, a brother of the Atlanta second baseman, has gone to his home in Pittsburg from Waycross. He has been in bad condition most of the season, and became so discouraged that he decided to quit for the balance of the season. He played in the field, and was a steady player.

* * *

Indications now point to Valdosta and Cordele battling it out in September for the pennant.

* * *

Medlock, a native Georgian, and one of the cleverest outfielders of the league, is now playing with Valdosta. He is hitting well, and his fielding up to date has been sensational. Medlock was with Waycross for some time.

* * *

The talked about deal whereby Pitcher Vanderlip would join the Valdosta team did not materialize. Vanderlip has returned to his home in Brooklyn.

* * *

Directors of the league will hold a meeting shortly to plan for the post-season series to determine the pennant winner in the league. Valdosta won the first half of the season easily, and the second half race is as yet unsettled.

* * *

There's an old saying that you never can tell what a ball player will do. Dacey, playing centerfield for Americus, jumped into the box not long ago and has won so far four straight games for his team. And Bitting, who joined the Charleston South Atlantic League team when he was turned loose by Waycross, caught two pretty games this week. Third base is his regular position.

* * *

The league record for consecutive wins will probably go to Gordon, a member of the Valdosta team. This fellow has won some of the prettiest games played in the league, and is going to make some higher league a marvel.

EVERGLADES CAN BE RECLAIMED, HALL SAYS

Geologist Has Just Completed Survey—Declares Vast Latent Wealth Is There.

Warren E. Hall, district engineer of the United States Geological Survey, returned to Atlanta Friday from the Florida Everglades, where, in company with E. T. Perkins, M. O. Leighton and Isham Randolph, he made a survey to determine the feasibility of draining the great swamps.

Mr. Hall is pleased with the result of the investigation and declares it will be possible to reclaim most of the water-covered area.

"There are," said Mr. Hall, "hundreds of square miles in the Everglades where no white man has ever set foot. I predict that just as soon as enough money can be appropriated and judiciously used this now useless territory can be turned into the most fertile farm land.

Canal To Be Built.

"The first great task to be undertaken will be the construction of a canal which will connect Miami and Fort Meyers, thus uniting the east and west coasts of Florida. This canal will be made navigable for the largest ships and will reduce the distance between these two points 165 miles.

"Florida some time ago made an appropriation for drainage work. Several million dollars were spent. The work was done without due consideration. The men engaged jumped at conclusions, and as a consequence the work done is lost time and money uselessly spent, for the water does not run the right way.

"An appropriation of $40,000 has been made recently for investigation alone to determine exactly what can be done. Our report has gone in and $6,000,000 will be appropriated at once.

Beauties of Okechobee.

"One place where the drainage work previously done proved a success—Zona, Fla., about eight miles west of Fort Lauderdale—a real estate company purchased 10,000 acres of land for $1 an acre. This company is selling this land at $80 an acre.

"The Everglades are about 20 feet above sea level and the water can be made to run easily into the ocean. Our scheme is to perfect a drainage system in the wet season and an irrigating system in the dry months. The soil is rich and black and the climate is ideal. No malaria is found in the center of the Everglades at Lake Okechobee—a beautiful lake about 30 miles square—a little inland sea, one might term it. There is not a minute in the day that huge black bass do not jump in the water. There are hundreds of them, and as you travel in a boat a continual splashing is heard.

Killed Some Alligators.

"There are very few mosquitoes. So far this summer the temperature in the Everglades has been cool. I think 92 degrees is the warmest day we had.

"We traveled many of the rivers, and, I tell you, I saw many strange and weird sights. We traveled in a combination sail and power yacht. In the evening, when the moon shone bright, we sat in our boat and fished. I caught many bass as large as seven pounds and shot a number of alligators—one over twelve feet in length escaped. His jaws were large enough to take a calf in his mouth.

"I enjoyed the trip every minute and can positively say that golden opportunity and fabulous wealth await investment in the Everglades of Florida."

House Seems Sure To Pass Drugs Bill

The Shuptrine drug bill has been made special order in the House for Tuesday. Indications are it will be passed. The bill provides for rigid enforcement of the laws against the sale of narcotics. It allows a limited supply of opium and cocaine to be kept in stores. Inspectors are provided for. A special tax of $10 on druggists will maintain the system.

Representative Shuptrine, who is head of a large drug firm in Savannah and who has been president of the Georgia Pharmaceutical Association, has worked hard for the passage of the bill. He has the personal indorsement of more than half the druggists in Georgia.

CHAPTER 5 IN PHAGAN CASE

The Negro Conley's Confession That He Was Frank's Accomplice and Events Leading Up to Trial.

CHAPTER VI.

"He (Leo Frank) told me that he had picked up a girl back there and had let her fall, and that her head had hit against something—he didn't know what it was—and for me to move her, and I hollered and told him the girl was dead!"

With this startling accusation Jim Conley introduced his third confession. Under the rack of a merciless third degree, continued through the long afternoon of May 29, he weakened or became desperate toward the last and came out with his remarkable affidavit, which laid the responsibility for the killing of Mary Phagan directly upon the shoulders of the young factory superintendent.

Either it was all true or all false. If it were true, the negro simply had wilted under the ceaseless fire of the detectives' questions and had decided to own up to his share in the crime and to seek to protect Frank no longer. If it were false, Conley, driven to bay, had, as a forlorn hope of saving his own neck, concocted the marvelous tale to thrust the suspicion of guilt upon the innocent Frank.

Defense Attacks Confession.

The latter is the theory of Frank's lawyers, and they will advance it and bring evidence to support it and argue in its favor with all the ability at their command when the trial, set for next Monday, is under way.

"Why, when the negro admittedly has told a long series of falsehoods and has perjured himself repeatedly since his arrest should this last weird tale of his be taken as the gospel truth?" is the question they ask, and apparently with some degree of reason.

True or false, the negro's story was wonderfully impressive to the thousands who read his damning accusations against the factory superintendent next day. If the affidavit were a fabrication of the negro's guilty mind, it was most cleverly and shrewdly conceived. There was just enough detail to his narration of how he had assisted Frank to dispose of the body to give the statement the color of naturalness and verity, and not such an overabundance as to lead to the suspicion that the incidents were being manufactured in the brain of the narrator.

Negro Sticks to Story.

If Conley's story of the alleged part he had in the killing of the little factory girl was dramatic, his re-enactment next day in the old factory building of every detail of his astounding story was infinitely more so.

While a group of police officials, detectives, factory attaches and newspaper men followed him closely about the second floor, down the elevator, into the basement and back again, listening, spellbound, to his every word, the negro reproduced, movement by movement, every detail of the grewsome work in which he said he had had only a part.

Unhesitatingly—almost unconcernedly—he started from the point where he said he came upon the body, in the rear of the second floor near the metal department. Except for an occasional question from Chief Beavers, Chief Lanford or Harry Scott, he told his story without prompting.

Re-enacts Ghastly March.

"There's where she laid," he said, pointing to a narrow passageway, and he dropped down on the floor to show exactly the position of Mary Phagan's body as he had said he found her. He lay partly on his face, with his right leg slightly drawn up.

"Why, this girl's stone dead!" he declared he yelled to Frank in the first fright of his discovery. "Mr. Frank was standing in the doorway right there. He told me to get a sack and put her body in that."

Then the negro showed where he found the crocus bagging in which his affidavit said he carried the body. He made as though he were carrying a heavy weight on his shoulders, and pointed out where the burden of the dead girl's body became too heavy for him. He said he called on Frank to help him. The superintendent, he said, came, cursing him for his clumsiness.

But Frank was nervous, Conley asserted, and himself dropped the feet of the little girl when they had proceeded but a few steps farther. The negro proceeded to the elevator, where he said he waited for Frank to get the key, described the trip to the basement and his carrying of the body to the trash heap at the rear while Frank, he said, watched at the little trapdoor to see that no one interrupted them.

Tells of Writing Notes.

Conley said that he ran the elevator returning, and that Frank go on at the first floor.

"Gee, that was a tiresome job," Frank said, according to the negro.

"Then Mr. Frank hops off the elevator before it gets to the second floor," he continued, "and he makes a stumble and he hits the floor and catches with both hands, and he went around to the sink to wash his hands, and I went and cut off the motor and I stood and waited for Mr. Frank to come from around there washing his hands, and then we went into his office, and Mr. Frank he couldn't hardly keep still."

Conley then described the writing of the notes, which he had maintained from the time of his first affidavit had been dictated to him by Frank.

Conley went through the grim drama with a realism that was convincing. His readiness, his unfaltering course from the second floor to the basement and back again, his prompt explanation of every puzzling point that arose, his quotations of alleged conversations that occurred between Frank and himself all quite erased from the memory the confessed fact that he had just been guilty in his two previous affidavits of the grosest falsehood. For the moment everyone was willing to believe the negro implicitly.

Suspicion Again Aroused.

But a sober second thought after the strange spell of his acting had passed away aroused the suspicion that there was a possibility of this third affidavit, too, being a perjury and this wonderful acting being a product of the black man's vivid imagination, spurred on by the shadow of the gallows across his path.

Since this dramatic event at the factory, the negro has not changed his story in any essential point, the detectives say. It is possible that the authorities are so sure of the truth of his tale that they are making no serious efforts to gain further admissions from him. They deny that this is a fact. They declare that when with the negro they have worked on the theory that he may be the actual criminal, and many times have put him through the third degree in an effort to get another confession out of him.

Many inconsistencies have been found in Conley's story. Many apparent deviations from truth have been pointed out. A number of statements conflicting with the testimony of other witnesses were made. But it remained for William H. Mincey, school teacher and insurance agent, to give the negro the lie direct and to charge him with the crime.

Mincey Affidavit a Bomb.

Next to the story of Jim Conley himself, the affidavit of Mincey, accusing the negro of the boast of killing a girl, was the most sensational of the entire Phagan mystery. In the point of direct accusation, it even surpassed the tale of Conley.

Events of importance have occurred in the case through June and July up to the present, but the statement of Mincey overshadowed them all.

Minola McKnight, negro cook, grilled in what Mrs. Frank, wife of the accused factory superintendent, was pleased to term "the detectives' torture chamber," signed her name to an affidavit which told of incriminating incidents at the home of Frank the night of the murder and the next morning. Within a few hours after she had been liberated from the police station she denied to a Georgian reporter that she ever had made the statements accredited to her in the so-called affidavit.

Foil Plan to Move Conley.

An effort was made to get Conley away from the detectives by having him removed to the Tower. This attempt was frustrated in a proceeding characterized by Attorney Rosser as farcical in the extreme. Frank's counsel charged that the detectives were afraid to let Conley talk.

Strength was added to the defense in June by the addition of Reuben Arnold, one of the city's noted criminal lawyers, to Frank's counsel. Arnold said in making the announcement that he was to aid in the defense declared that he had reviewed the evidence carefully and had become convinced that Frank could not be guilty of the crime.

Habeas corpus proceedings to obtain the freedom of Newt Lee, held in the Tower since his commitment soon after the murder, were brought by the attorneys for the negro, but failed, except in changing Lee's status and procuring for him more privileges.

Charges Death Boast.

On July 10 The Georgian published the startling charges of Mincey which were contained in an affidavit in possession of the defense. Four days later The Georgian got from Mincey, who was teaching school at Rising Faun, Ala., his own story of his conversation with Conley in which he declared the negro on the afternoon that Mary Phagan was slain had bragged of killing a girl.

Mincey for a short time was an agent for the American Insurance Company, of No. 115 1-2 North Pryor street. He was assigned a district west of the Terminal Station. He declared in his affidavit that he worked in the office until noon on April 26, and in the afternoon went on Peachtree street and saw the parade. Later he said he went over beyond Davis street on "back calls" and to make an effort to close some prospects.

Mincey saw Conley, he asserted, sitting by the house situated on the bluff at the junction of Electric avenue and Carter street. According to Mincey, the negro appeared to be asleep, but as the agent passed by Conley raised his head and shouted: "Who is that?"

"It's a 'policy man,'" said a negro woman who was going by at the time.

Says Conley Was Excited.

"I stopped and got into a conversation with the negro about insurance," said Mincey in his formal statement to The Georgian.

"He told me his name was Jim Conley. He told me that he lived at No. 172 Rhodes street. I saw there was something wrong with him. He was nervous and excited and tried to put me off by telling me to come to No. 172 Rhodes street next week and he would take insurance.

"He told me he was in trouble. I asked him if they had had him in the jail or stockade. He said no, but that he was expecting to be in jail and that right away. I asked him what for.

"He said: 'Murder; I killed a girl to-day!'

"I started down toward him.

"He said: 'I tell you not to come down here.'

"When he saw that I was coming anyway, he jumped up, and as he went around the corner of the house he said: 'I have killed one to-day and I don't want to kill another.'"

Believed It Idle Brag.

Mincey went on to relate that he had not attached much importance to the incident at the time, thinking that the negro was boasting of some negro scrape in which he had been involved. When he read the papers the next Monday, however, he was struck with the conviction that Conley was the man who committed the murder.

He said that he went to the factory the next day, but that everything was so confused and chaotic that no one would listen to his story, and he was almost chased out of the building along with a score of others who were offering the detectives and factory officials suggestions and clews.

Before he left he gained the ear of E. P. Holloway, day watchman, but Holloway told him that there were no negroes about the building before 4 o'clock, so far as he knew, and Mincey departed.

When Conley came out with his admission that he not only was in the factory the day of the crime, but that he was skulking in the shadows of the first floor when Mary Phagan and others entered the building, the tale of Mincey took on new importance. He was taken to the office of Attorney Rosser and there his statement was transcribed.

Story Causes Turmoil.

The publication of his accusations created great excitement in detective circles. Harry Scott, Pinkerton detective, rushed to the police station where he made the declaration that Mincey never told them a story of that sort when he came there to identify Conley. He added that Mincey had appeared far from confident that day that Conley was the man he had talked to Saturday afternoon, April 26.

Chief Lanford scouted the story and said he believed it to be a baseless fabrication. He hardly thought the defense would call Mincey to the witness stand when the trial actually began. Solicitor Dorsey set out at once to make an investigation of the story. He looked up Mincey's history in every place he had lived in Georgia. He also was the recipient of many letters concerning the insurance agent-teacher. At the end of a week he announced that he believed he would be able to discredit the affidavit.

Subsequent developments are recent history. June 30, the date originally set for the trial, approached, there were well-authenticated rumors that a postponement would be granted. Judge L. S. Roan, who will preside at the trial, was present at a conference of the attorneys June 24, and by agreement between counsel set the date for next Monday, July 28.

Conley Indictment Urged.

With the publication of the sensational charges of Mincey came a demand for an investigation of Conley's part in the crime by the Grand Jury. The demand was made on the ground that, if the negro were guilty, he should not go into the trial with the credibility of a free man, when it would be a natural supposition that the most natural thing for him to do would be to testify against Frank in order to shift the blame from his own shoulders, where it belonged. It was argued that Conley should have exactly the same status as Frank.

Solicitor Dorsey bitterly opposed a movement of this sort. He said that he would fight it to the last. He declared he had sufficient evidence to convict the factory superintendent and that he was confident of his guilt.

Over the Solicitor's head, Foreman W. D. Beatie called a meeting of the Grand Jury, on the request of many of its members. The Solicitor was asked to be present when the jurors met July 21. No other witnesses were called. The Solicitor for an hour and a half detailed his reasons for not desiring the indictment of Conley. At the conclusion of the session it was announced that no action would be taken on the negro's case at that time.

Dorsey Balks Postponement.

The next skirmish came on the proposal again to postpone the trial. The Solicitor again set himself in opposition to this plan, declaring that the State had been prepared to go ahead since June 30 and that there was no valid reason apparent why it could not go on when called July 28.

Frank will go on trial for his life next Monday if no motion for a continuance is successful. The present indications are that no effort will be made for a postponement. Witnesses are being summoned by both sides; the judge has expressed his opinion that the trial will proceed, and the venire has been drawn.

The young factory superintendent will go before the tribunal expressing confidence in his acquittal. Through the three months that he has been imprisoned in a cell at the Tower his optimism never has left him for a moment. He is one of the most remarkable prisoners ever in the county jail. He has been assured and confident. He has talked little of the crime, even among his friends. He has read the papers and magazines closely. When he has been visited by his wife and other relatives, the conversation invariably has been on cheerful subjects. He has refused to be drawn into a discussion of the mystery with the reporters.

"The guilty man should hang," the remark he made when told of Conley's third confession, is practically his sole comment on Atlanta's greatest murder mystery.

The Finger of Death

A SPY has to take many risks, and if he is caught at the game during war time his career as a rule is then and there closed promptly, and in most cases in ignominious fashion.

It was the money aspect of the business which appealed to Morris Tyler, and induced him to engage in the work. He was a born spy. A good linguist, and cunning beyond belief, he was never one to assay a dangerous task for the sheer excitement of it. He did not like taking risks, though, of course, he had to take them occasionally; but always at these junctures he kept in mind the big pay and extras. It needed these to tune him up to concert pitch.

He was always cautious and successful. Having found it advisable to quit Europe for a time, he made his way to the South American Republic of Caldera which, at the date of his arrival, was just in the throes of one of its periodical revolutions.

He offered his services to the Government party at a rate of pay somewhat in excess of what he had been receiving in Europe, and President Blance having heard of him, and finding that he could speak Spanish fluently, engaged him at once.

But in Caldera, Morris Tyler had to work under new and unfamiliar conditions. Hitherto, his spying had been carried on during times of peace. There had been no war in Europe since he had come to the front. Now he found himself in the thick of fighting of a savage character. When the insurgents took any prisoners, they gave them the option of changing sides or being shot. But when the Government troops captured any rebels, they did not permit them any choice. They were placed in a row with their backs against a wall and promptly finished off by a firing party. By the time he had been three weeks at the "great game" as played in this explosive South American State, Morris Tyler was inclined to regret that he had not remained a passive spectator of the revolution, instead of taking part in it. However, he fortified his courage with the thought of the pile of dollars he would add to his banking account when the fighting was over and the rebels beaten. He had seen enough to feel pretty certain they had no real chance of winning. And so far he had not encountered any special danger; his cunning always enabled him to evade it.

No Avail.

But the day came when he discovered that cunning was of no avail, and that courage would have been a far more desirable possession.

He had been sent for by Colonel Voruba, the chief of the Intelligence Department, to whom he usually made his reports.

"Some rare work for you, Senor Tyler," observed the Colonel cheerfully, "and it may be the last service we shall require you to perform, for the revolution must end soon. Still, much will depend on the informtaion you are able to obtain for us."

Morris Tyler nodded, and waited for his chief to go on.

"The rebels are massed in some force on the Hill of San Stefano," pursued the Colonel, "where it seems they are going to make a last desperate stand. They hold the old fort up there. That much we know. But we do not know the number of their guns, nor how they are placed. It is important that we have this information before we storm the position, and we look to you to obtain it for us."

"Can you give me any further particulars, Colonel?"

"There are no further particulars to give you," replied Colonel Yoruba. "You know the road. The rest lies with you. I am instructed, however, to inform you that if you succeed in bringing us correct information, you will receive five hundred dollars over and above your pay. You must start at once.

By a curious freak of fate, there arrived at the headquarters of the Calderan army, twenty-four hours, later, a deserter from the rebel ranks, who was able to furnish the exact information which Colonel Voruba required.

Thereupon, an order was given for an immediate advance. This movement taking place so much sooner than was expected, would very likely put Morris Tyler in an extremely tight corner. But the life of one man was of small moment when so much was at stake. And a spy! Well, no one bothered much about a spy when he was not required. In the meantime, Tyler had contrived to get to the top of the Hill of San Stefano without being observed by the enemy's outposts or sentries.

He was, indeed, well within the circles of outposts when he reached an abandoned building, which at one time had been the boiler house of a sugar plantation. It seemed a safe hiding place, from the security of which he could observe what was going on in the rebels' camp without himself being seen. He crept inside and laid flat down upon the floor. About half a mile away he could see the camp fires glowing in the darkness, and nearer still the squat shape of the fort showing black against the night sky. Picturesque insurgents were passing to and fro, and a few were seated by the fires playing cards.

No Sleep.

After a time the camp became silent, even the card players giving up their games and stretching themselves out on the ground to sleep. Only sentries remained on the alert, but between him and the fort there were three. By no possibility could he get past them unseen, for it was open ground.

The night wore on. He was tired, but he dared not sleep. If he could only snatch a few minutes—just to rest his eyes——

He awoke with a start, and was about to spring to his feet when a harsh voice commanded him to remain still. At the other side of the chamber he saw an armed man—one of the rebels—standing with his rifle at the "ready."

"So! A spy!" exclaimed the man. "Bueno! It will be promotion for me for having discovered you. Don't move!" The rifle was raised threateningly. "If you so much as move a hand or a foot I will put a bullet through your brain. Yet I do not wish to waste ammunition. A rope is good enough for such as you."

He spat on the floor to typify his contempt for all spies. Then he called to the nearest sentry, telling him of his "find," and asking him to bring a rope. But the words had barely left his lips when there was a terrific crash overhead, a blinding flash of flame, the splitting of wood and the rattle of falling masonry.

A twelve-pound-shell from a field gun had struck the building and reduced it to a ruin. It was the first shot fired by the Government artillery in their attack on the hill of San Stafano. The rebels were taken by surprise, became panic-stricken, and instead of shaping up to defend the position began a hasty retreat.

Moris Tyler was not immediately concerned with the running fight between the loyal troops and the rebels, for the sounds of strife drifted farther away each minute from the ruined boiler house. No other shot or shell came near it. But he was much concerned about himself. He could not move. He was pinned down by some timber from the fallen roof, and all around him was a wreck of shattered walls, broken planks and beams and debris which bore no likeness to anything in particular.

Fear!

"Luck's with me, after all," he murmured. "I am not hurt, and this beam is not too heavy for me to lift. I can raise it up and crawl."

He paused with a sort of gasp, for his eyes, roving around the place, had rested on a gleaming rifle barrel. It was pointed straight at his head, and there was a man's forefinger resting on the trigger. The man was the rebel who had captured him. He was lying on his face amidst the wreckage, and there was blood streaming from a terrible wound at the side of his head. A splinter of the bursting shell had killed him.

The spy gave a sigh of relief. For a moment he had thought that the man was alive, and was taking aim at him. But his relief was of short duration. He did not like that rifle pointing so steadily at him, even though it was only held in a dead man's hand; and when he saw that the lower end of the beam which was lying across his own body rested against the man's right forearm, he liked it still less. He could not move the beam upwards; he could only move it downwards or sideways. If he shifted it ever so little, it was bound to press more heavily on the dead rebel's arm, and that would cause his stiffened finger to press on the trigger, which would fire the rifle. The bullet would enter his—Tyler's—brain, because his head was so wedged that he could not move it to one side or the other. He could raise it a little, but that would be of no advantage. The bullet would take him then somewhere about the mouth and pass upwards through the base of his skull.

He shook with fear, like a man with the ague, and the sweat streamed down his face.

It was borne in upon the spy's mind that he might lie there until he died of starvation. There was the alternative of pushing the beam a little more, so that the dead man's finger should press harder on the trigger and thus end his misery with a bullet from the menacing rifle.

Then all at once something in his brain seemed to snap. A red curtain dropped before his eyes. The noise of a rushing wind howled in his ears—and then came black oblivion.

Early the next morning two mounted men reined up close by the ruined boiler house. They were Colonel Voruba and an orderly. The fight was over, and the rebels were beaten.

"Two men in there," said the Colonel. "They may have some life in them."

The orderly dismounted and peered in among the wreckage.

"One is a rebel," he reported. "The other is Senor Tyler. Both dead."

The Answer.

"The spy!" exclaimed the Colonel.

"It is strange," said Voruba, bending over Tyler's body, "there is not a mark upon him. He has received no wound, no hurt. He could easily have lifted this beam and extricated himself."

"Look at the expression on his face even now," replied the orderly. "It was sheer terror that killed him. I have heard of such a thing. Perhaps he had a weak heart."

"Terror!" Voruba raised his eyebrows. "Ah, yes, I perceive. The loaded rifle pointing at his head, which, at the slightest movement on his part would——"

Captain Berwick interrupted him. He had picked the rifle up and opened the breech.

"He was in no danger at any time from this weapon," he said. "It is not loaded!"

ON HER KITCHEN STOVE

It is interesting to note that the most successful remedy for woman's ills was originally prepared nearly forty years ago by Mrs. Lydia E. Pinkham, of Lynn, Mass., by steeping roots and herbs on her kitchen stove and supplied to friends and neighbors without cost. Its fame spread; the demand grew; until now many tons of roots and herbs are used each year in order to supply this famous remedy which has proved such a marvelous success in controlling diseases of women. Merit alone could have stood this test of time.

Did the Vicar Stop?

It was too much. Every Sunday old Adams, who blew the organ, would continue blowing after the music had stopped, thereby producing most undesirable sounds.

Time and again had the organist taken him to task for it.

"Right, mister," had been old Adams' invariable reply. "I forgits, you know."

One Sunday the organist could stand it no longer.

The congregation had been set tittering by the old man's forgetfulness, and during the sermon the organist seized the opportunity to write him a note on the matter, and handed it to a choir boy to deliver.

Misunderstanding the whispered directions, the lad handed the note straight up to the vicar, who astoundedly read the following:

"Will you stop when I tell you to? People come here to listen to my music, not to your horrible noise."

Lady Constance Stewart Richardson on How to Acquire a Beautiful Figure Through Dancing

Written Exclusively for the Readers of This Page.

In Poses Especially Adapted for the Accompanying Article.

A swaying exercise fully described by Lady Richardson's article brings about an easy control of the waist muscles.

Practice in this lesson will do more to reduce the waistline than any other fat-reducing method known to Lady Richardson.

Incidentally it produces naturally graceful movements when walking or running.

Figure 2 is a walking exercise that has a wonderfully beneficial effect upon the whole body.

Constant practice in this exercise makes it become as easy and natural to you as when a child skipping along the street.

It is Lady Richardson's claim that all these movements are but normal, simple, human expressions.

This style of dancing, says Lady Richardson, is good for the soul as well as the body.

This is the first time that any newspaper has presented a series of articles in which such expert instruction and advice are given on the value of practicing natural movements for the preservation of human grace and beauty.

THIS is the fourth of Lady Richardson's valuable articles on dancing as an aid to natural beauty.

Another will appear on this page next week, in which the student is carried along a little further, and into a trifle more difficult exercises.

By Lady Constance Stewart Richardson

DANCING is one of the most characteristic and characterful things I know. It expresses the individual and the nation in perfect accord with the feelings and customs that characterize him or it.

Take, for instance, the Hungarian Czardas, the Italian Tarantelle, or the Tango of Argentina—each is characteristic of its place and clime, and however well the peoples of another nation do the dance that is not their own they still must modify it to suit their own temperament.

A Perfect Outline.

If we take the best of the moderns and add to it the finest steps of the ancients and teach our result we will get as many variations as we have individual temperaments expressing the dance we have made.

If people will stop to think what a wonderful mode of expression the dance offers them, and will study it, its music and the effect of this expression on their own temperaments, they will no longer consider the dance and the body that expresses it as something to be despised, but they will give to the body, which is capable of beauty, its due of admiration and its right to beautiful expression, which will mean that one step toward lifting instead of degrading the human body will be definitely taken through the worship of loveliness.

To help you all make your bodies so perfect in outline, in strength and in power to respond to your desire to express emotion through the great safety valve of movement is my desire.

When dancing, look happy and as if you were dancing because you love to, and as if you were dancing because you love the particular step you are taking—not doing the fashionable thing some dancing teacher had assured you was the "proper way." Make one or two steps your own, and through them teach your body to express itself without shame or consciousness in perfect happiness and rhythm.

Figure One.

Dancing is a safe and sane form of self-expression, and it is good for body as well as soul.

In Figure 1 the body is poised on the ball of one foot, while the other is raised with the leg thrown slightly backward from the knee and the toes pointing downward. A straight line from flexed knee to the tip of the toes seems to be a favorite idea of grace, as depicted by the sculpture of the ancients, and as it adds to beauty of line the benefit of strengthening instep and ankle, it is one of the little separate movements that I often incorporate in my dancing steps.

To return to Figure 1—Bend slightly at the waist toward the uplifted leg and raise the arm above the head so there will be a continuous curve from elbow to toes. A flexible waist waits upon the earnest practice of this exercise.

From elbow to wrist the arm is bent above and toward the head, while the other arm, stretched lightly out from the shoulder and parallel with it, terminates in loosely flexed wrist and hand. Sway lightly from foot to foot, and see what easily controlled muscles of the waist result.

Figure Two.

Figure 2 pictures for you a walking exercise that has a wonderfully beneficial effect on the whole body. It is a natural bodily expression such as you have often seen little children drop into quite unconsciously.

Tiptoe along from foot to foot, with the raised limb flexed at the knee and held with down-pointing toe.

Bend the body well forward from the waist, and sway it toward the lifted foot, stretching the arm over this foot back and down and the other arm forward and as you would do in feeling your way along a solid surface in the dark.

Leg, arm and waist muscles are here brought into play—and when such simple, pretty, little exercises as this become indeed play you may feel sure that you are on your way to a body beautiful and graceful.

After all, just such dance movements as this are normal, simple, human expression, and out of them we can evolve natural grace of body and movement.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

LET YOUR HEART DECIDE.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am a girl of twenty. About two years ago I met a young man, and from that time until a month ago I loved him, but he did not return my love in the way I wanted, so I thought it would be best to forget him. I am now keeping company with another young man who is very serious. Two weeks ago the first young man wrote and told me he had found no girl he could love like me. DOROTHY.

You must take the one you love most, but before you make that decision be very fair with yourself. I know nothing of the merits of the two men, but it seems to me that the first is somewhat like the dog in the manger.

He did not seek your love till some other man's attentions made it desirable.

HE IS NOT SINCERE.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am nineteen, and in love with a man three years my senior. I am really crazy over him. I think the world of him, as I think he does the same of me.

It is nearly a year since we met and fell in love with each other. He asked me to be his bride. We were to be married in a short time, but now he has excuses for not getting married. He does not write as usual, but comes up as usual. P. G. Z.

The indications are he is trying to get out of it. Save your self-respect by breaking the engagement, for, believe me, it will never end in marriage. I am sorry, dear, but this course will save you greater pain later on.

THAT IS HIS PRIVILEGE.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am a young girl of seventeen and considered good looking. I have been keeping company with a young man for several months and at a dance one night I introduced a girl to him to whom he pays more attention than to me. NORAH.

There was no engagement. He was merely your friend. I hope, under the circumstances, you will be big enough, and broad enough, to be glad you were the means of introducing him to a girl whose company delights him. That's the way to look at it, my dear.

Handsome Mr. Slatte :: A SHORT STORY COMPLETE

"I SHOULD think you would read more," suggested the girl in the grass green linen gown as she came upon the porch.

"Oh, I don't know," responded the young woman in the wicker chair, who was busy embroidering. "This is just as satisfactory as most of the popular novels."

"It's every woman's duty to improve her mind," declared the girl in the green linen. "I feel that I have done so much since the corner drug store put in its circulating library, Mr. Slatte has been such a help!"

"Mr. Slatte?" queried her friend. "What has he to do with it?"

The girl in the green linen sighed faintly. "You know," she said, "I am not the sort of girl to rave over a man's good looks. I prefer brains any time. But, really, you never in your life saw any one who looked like Mr. Slatte! He——"

"He might look like anything with that name," commented the young woman who was embroidering. "Do you mean to say he is handsome?"

"More than that," said her friend. "He has the sort of eyes that pierce with their brilliance, and such a chin! My dear, every time I see him I am reminded of that stunning portrait of Lord Byron! I am certain there is a mystery about him! He has the most perfect manners!"

A Shock.

"Where——"

"Why, he's recently taken charge of the drug store," explained the girl in the green linen. "I had just picked out a book when he came up and said he couldn't bear to see me waste my time on such a tiresome story. He said he'd be only too glad to help me find something worth while that he knew I could appreciate. I thought it so kind——"

"Kind!" said the girl who was embroidering. "I think he was impertinent. I guess if I wanted a book I'd want what I wanted."

"You don't understand at all," exclaimed the girl in green linen, patiently. "Mr. Slatte is writing a novel himself, so of course he knows perfectly what—"

"My goodness! A drug clerk and a novelist!" said the girl who was embroidering.

Her friend bristled at this. "He's not a clerk!" she said. "He's a sort of—er—manager. People generally don't know he is so literary. You don't suppose that he wastes time on everybody who comes to get a book, do you? Not that he is especially interested in me, of course—only I suppose he realizes that I have more than average intelligence. I never saw such eyes in my life! Sometimes when he smiles in that slow, sad sort of way of his I——"

"Who puts up prescriptions while he is engaged in smiling sadly?" inquired the young woman who was embroidering.

"You are perfectly horrid!" said her friend. "If you knew Mr. Slatte you'd think differently. We have had some of the most inspiring talks since we met. He always drops whatever he is doing and helps me select my books. I'm a rapid reader and have to exchange books so often.

"I'm on my way there now to get another book. I do wish I could make you see what an opportunity it is, now that Mr. Slatte is there. He has such a cultivated mind—many times he has remarked what a treat it is to him to have someone come in who is different from the average careless reader."

A Rival.

"There comes Dorothy Maye," said the girl who was embroidering. "Come in, Dorothy," she called across the railing.

"I can't just now," said the girl in question, pausing at the steps. "I'm on my way to the drug store to take back a book. There's such a nice man in charge there now—perfectly stunning, and so kind. He's writing a book himself, too. He always stops whatever he is doing to come and help me pick out something good. He says it is a treat——"

"How nice!" enthusiastically interrupted the girl who was embroidering. "Alicia is here and she is going there, too——"

"No," said the girl in grass green linen shortly. "I am not going to the drug store! I am too busy to waste time over those trashy books and to hang around a silly clerk."

Untested.

"Yes, sir," said the successful manufacturer, "no man can sell his factory products these days unless they have been thoroughly tested."

"Oh, I don't know," replied another equally successful manufacturer. "We manage to sell our product without testing it."

"You do? What is your line?"

"Dynamite."

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

CHAPTER IX.

MARY smiled reassuringly into the anxious faces of her parents bending over her as she opened her eyes after a brief period of unconsciousness. She found herself lying upon the living room couch, her forehead wet from the water which her mother had applied in the effort to "bring her around." She struggled to a sitting posture, beginning at once to explain the attack of faintness which had seized her.

"I have been working a little too hard in this warm weather," she said. "I have not felt well lately, anyway, and this is but the culmination of the weariness and strain—nothing else."

She spoke no word of the news that had held her eyes waking far into the night, nor of the blessed relief of the knowledge that the man whom she had feared was injured or dead was alive and well.

"You won't try to go to school to-day, will you?" pleaded her mother.

The girl smiled.

"It is Saturday, mother," she reminded her. "But I must go down to the Public Library to look up some matters I want to be sure of before Monday. But I will take a cup of coffee first."

She drank this when her mother brought it to her, then arose with decision.

"I am ashamed of myself to be so weak and foolish," she exclaimed. "Please, dear people, try to forget it."

"Would you like to look over the morning paper?" asked her father, eyeing her keenly.

"No, thank you!" she said quickly. "Thank you, mother, for waiting so sweetly on your silly daughter. I will go to bed early to-night and not repeat this performance of fainting. I never did such a thing quite so causelessly and suddenly before in my life."

When she had left the living room, the father and mother gazed again into each other's faces.

"The fact that she avoids the subject that made her faint shows that she cares for this young man," declared the mother. "Well, he is a nice fellow, I guess."

"I don't care how nice he is," retorted the father, "he is not half good enough for my girl. Before I consent to any serious attentions from him I am going to write to his firm and find what his record is."

"That's all right, dear," agreed the wife indulgently. "I approve of your doing that. But if the Angel Gabriel—trumpet and all—were to ask you for Mary you would not think him good enough for her."

"And he wouldn't be!" asserted the father, without a smile.

The most tender mother is willing—even, at times, glad—to have her daughter marry an honorable, well-to-do gentleman; a fond father seldom looks with favor upon any suitor for his daughter's hand.

An hour later Mary appeared in her mother's room, her hat and gloves on, ready to go out. Mrs. Danforth looked solicitously at her, but, seeing that the color had returned to her lips, she forbore to utter any protest. If the child was restless it was better to let her go. In the library she might find the books she needed for her work, they might quiet her nerves, turning her thoughts from agitating subjects.

Mrs. Danforth would have been surprised could she have seen her daughter when she reached her destination. Instead of going at once in search of the volumes in which she was to "look up" certain important subjects, she went direct to the reading room of the library and was in a few minutes immersed in the morning papers. A close observer would have noticed that the only columns she read were those dealing with the recent railroad wreck and the deeds of heroism of the various uninjured passengers—the most active and bravest of whom had evidently been "the young Texan, Gordon Craig by name." As the girl read, her cheeks glowed and a soft light came to her eyes. So absorbed was she in her dreams, that she was leaving the building before she remembered that in her wrist-bag she carried a list of books of reference which she must find this morning, and, with a start, went in search of these. Somehow all literature except the newspapers seemed very dull to-day.

As it was Saturday, Mr. Danforth came home at noontime, and was there when his daughter returned a little before the luncheon hour. He greeted her brightly.

"Well!" she said jocosely, "I saw our hero this morning! Craig was at my office. He ran in to tell me that he was all right and to ask if we had seen the account of the wreck. I told him that we had, but I did not flatter him by telling him we had been badly scared about him."

Mary drew a sigh of relief. She had feared her father might mention her evident anxiety; then she reminded herself that she might have known he would not. She waited for his next remark. Although she had read and reread the newspaper accounts of Craig's heroism, she hoped to hear more about it by word of mouth. Her father answered her unspoken thought.

"He said little about himself," he went on, "and I liked him better for that. When I said that I understood he had done some pretty fine work he turned as red as a lobster and said—'It was only what any man would have done under the circumstances,' and changed the subject. So I let it drop. I asked him to come up and see us before he goes back to Texas, and he said he would try to."

"Probably he will not find time to," said Mary with studied indifference. She began to talk vivaciously of her work, of the approaching school commencement, of anything and everything except of Gordon Craig. And her father and mother, watching her, understood.

That afternoon a messenger left at her door a note for her. It was short:

"Dear Miss Danforth: Will you give me the happiness of your company to the opera next Wednesday night? I will call for you at a quarter before eight. The performance is 'Aida.'

"Faithfully yours,
"GORDON CRAIG."

The reply that the messenger carried back to Craig was even more brief than the note he had brought:

"My Dear Mr. Craig: Thank you. I will be ready at 7:45 Wednesday night.

"Sincerely yours,
"MARY DANFORTH."

A Frank Talk on Typewriters

Somehow, the impression has gained ground that there isn't much difference between the various makes of typewriters on the market.

You may think the same thing. It would take a good, SOUND, LOGICAL argument to convince you that all typewriters do not have the same efficiency and that a stenographer cannot secure the same results on every machine.

We are ready to make that argument and to show you by actual demonstration that

The L. C. Smith & Bros. Typewriter

will do more work, better work, with less fatigue to the stenographer, than any writing machine ever made.

How is this possible?

Here are a few reasons:

1. It is ball bearing throughout—others are not.
2. All operations are controlled from the keyboard.

DODGERS BUY ELMER BROWN; PRICE $7,000

ELMER BROWN, star right-hand slabman of the Montgomery Billikens, was sold yesterday for $7,000 to Charles Ebbets, president of the Brooklyn club. Delivery is to be made at the end of the Southern League season. Mr. Ebbets was in Montgomery personally to attend to the deal.

Brown has been much looked over by scouts from big league clubs. It is said both the Boston clubs wanted him; also, the Cubs, the Pirates, and the Yankees. Harry Sutton, of the Brooklyn club, recently offered $4,000 for the pitcher, which was refused. Then Sutton put up such a strong talk to Ebbets that the magnate took a personal interest in getting the prize.

Brown has been a very steady and dependable pitcher this season. He has won 16 and lost 5 games in all, and in his last twelve starts has won ten, tied one and lost one.

That $7,000 isn't all the Billiken management will realize from sales this year. The sale of Ernest Walker, outfielder, was announced yesterday, the St. Louis Browns paying $4,000 for him, and the same club exercised its option on Pitcher Manning, paying $2,500. Both are to report at the end of the Southern League season.

BASEBALL
Diamond News and Gossip

It took 13 innings and the best slugger in either league to defeat the Yankees, Jackson's double sending Chapman over the plate with the winning run. The Naps would not have won had Gossett slid home when trying to score on a wild pitch instead of going into the plate standing up.

* * *

Pinch hitters and pitchers galore were used in the Red Sox-White Sox game, but the speed boys won out in the slugging contest.

* * *

Two bingles, which bounded off Dubuc's glove, prevented the Detroit pitcher from holding the Athletics hitless. The scratch hits came in the seventh inning, but Mack's men took advantage of them and aided by errors piled up the only runs scored in the game.

* * *

Nine bases on balls, two hit batsmen, three wild pitches and eight hits enabled the Pirates to win an easy victory over the Phillies. Outfielder Carey did not get a hit in five times up, but scored five runs. He reached first for first time up on a fumble and was walked the other four times.

* * *

Even minor league teams are rubbing it on Brooklyn. The Dodgers dropped off at Troy to play an exhibition game and the State League, with a batting rally in the final inning, won out.

* * *

Pitcher Elmer Brown, of the Montgomery team, was sold to Brooklyn for $7,000. The money will be divided with the St. Louis Americans, who had an option on the player.

* * *

Another minor leaguer will be seen in fast company. The Cleveland team bought First Baseman Dick Staley from the Danville club for $2,500.

BIG TRADE ON BETWEEN BIRMINGHAM AND CHANCE

NEW YORK, July —Frank Chance, manager of the Yankees, and Manager Birmingham, of the Cleveland team, to-day may close a deal which will send a Yankee pitcher to the Naps in exchange for two Cleveland lads.

Chance, who is desperately in need of outfielders, asked Birmingham whom he would give for Pitcher George McConnell. The Cleveland manager, who has been trying to secure McConnell for some time, replied he would be willing to hand over Pitcher Kahler and Outfielder Ryan. Chance told Birmingham he would make a final answer to-day.

"POP BOY" SMITH EXCUSED BY NATIONAL COMMISSION

CHICAGO, July 2 .—Pitcher Smith, of the Chicago Americans, will not feel the heavy hand of the National Commission for masquerading last Sunday as a member of the Coulon Athletics, a semi-professional club.

President B. B. Johnson, of the American League, said last night that Smith was just a youngster, knew no better, and had been forgiven. He said that the players with Eastern clubs who were fined last year for playing with semi-professional teams on off days were veterans, and knew they were violating rules.

GEORGE BRICKLEY TO SEEK FAME IN MACK'S OUTFIELD

PHILADELPHIA, July 2 .—George Brickley, brother of Charles Brickley, the wonderful Harvard halfback, is expected here to-day and will at once don an Athletic uniform. Brickley is expected to be given a chance in Mack's outfield at an early date. He is said to be a good fielder and a slugger.

BALDWIN AND CROSS FINISH WORK FOR GO

By H. M. Walker.

LOS ANGELES, July —Leach Cross and Matty Baldwin have practically finished their work, but will stage extensive boxing programs to-morrow afternoon for the benefit of the hundreds of spectators who are expected to visit the Vernon and Venice quarters.

Cross and Baldwin meet next Tuesday night in a scheduled 20-round bout before the Pacific Coast Athletic Club at Vernon. Among the ring celebrities who will be present upon this occasion are Lightweight Champion Willie Ritchie, the former title holder, Ad Wolgast; Johnny Dundee, Jack White, Jess Willard and "Bud" Anderson. In the betting Cross rules a 10 to 8 favorite, with the indications that the ringside betting will be at even money.

* * *

IT is known that Promoter T. J. McCarey is figuring upon using Ritchie here on either Labor Day or Thanksgiving Day. Wolgast and Joe Rivers are named as the champion's opponents.

The proposed return match between Johnny Williams and Eddie Campi has been called off and Williams, accompanied by his manager, Sammy Harris, left for the East to-day. Williams asked $3,000 for his services, a sum that the promoter could not meet.

* * *

ARTHUR PELKY and Charley Miller may be matched to box here in September. Both the heavies have wired the local promoter asking for the date.

"BUBBLES" COVINGTON WINS FIRST CASE AS LAWYER

CARTERSVILLE, GA., July 2 .—"Bubbles" Covington, star third sacker for the University of Georgia ball team this season, and who also played professional ball with Cordele a short while, was admitted to the local bar this week and made good with his first case, securing an acquittal for a negro who was charged with a misdemeanor.

Covington has received numerous offers to play professional ball, but has turned them all down, preferring law as his vocation.

M'GUINNESS VS. COLEMAN.

NEW YORK, July 2 .—Fight fans are predicting a great future for Frank Guinness, champion of the British navy, who has won in his several bouts with white hopes here. The Irishman to-night will try conclusions with Jack Coleman. They are scheduled to box ten rounds.

What Winners Must Do--Meyers

Must Act and Think in Unison

By "Chief" Meyers.
Star Catcher of Champion Giants.

PROFESSIONAL baseball players are generally believed to be exceptionally superstitious. As a class, I do not consider them more prone than any of their fellow mortals to be influenced by what can not easily be understood. For superstition after all is little less than fear of what one can not satisfactorily analyze in his mind.

And we now find in the professional ranks of athletes as brawny, thoughtful and well-informed men as can be produced in any other walk of life.

Deep in the heart of man the element of superstition lurks. It is a scar of prehistoric nature, undoubtedly an instinct, if you will, like that first-born principle of self-preservation.

Show me a man who is absolutely without superstition and I will show you a man who is not normal.

Not Really Superstitious.

Seriously, I do not think that there are many players possessing brains enough to be in the big leagues who could be termed really superstitious. If the most of them were pinned right down to honest confession, I think it would be discovered that what supposedly superstitious traits are exhibited have been as much the result of habit as belief in charm for any spell.

It is a well-known fact that ball clubs in general often interpret certain conditions over which they have no control as omens of good or bad. A ball team is delighted to see a load of empty barrels or to pass a load of hay. Either is supposed to bring good luck. But no team likes to pass a funeral; that casts an evil spell. Crossed bats are supposed to typify ill fortune.

Conditions Inspire Confidence.

These things and many others of no more portentous nature may influence a club, but only psychologically. Any condition which inspires confidence of victory is beneficial just as every depressing influence is an agent of ill fortune. It is indeed surprising what insignificant things may often most seriously influence the general peace of mind of a baseball team.

It is a well-known fact that we Giants hit better on the road than we do at the Polo Grounds. The possible exceptions are Larry Doyle and myself. Somehow the pair of us manage to uphold our batting average at home. But the rest of the boys talked so much of the evil conditions that they actually influenced the work of Larry and myself.

We began to get it into our heads that we could not hit at our best because of the signs on the fences, and we did not hit as well as we should. Those signs were dressed over. We all started to hit better. Not because it was one whit easier to see the ball after the change, but just because the players convinced themselves that it must be.

All a Condition of Mind.

It is the simple proposition of making the possible impossible. The fellow who cannot hit as well on a certain field or against a certain pitcher has usually nobody but himself to blame. He just thinks he can not to begin with; he becomes convinced later, and establishes a certain condition of mind that can never be rectified.

Hans Wagner is one of the greatest hitters the game has ever known. He was always helpless before "Bugs" Raymond. From the first, somehow, Raymond impressed his mastery over the Dutchman, and Hans accepted the issue. I do not mean that Wagner quit trying. He is not of that stamp. But he tried without his accustomed confidence.

Space will not permit me to dwell on the myriad inexplicable conditions which tend to popular superstition. There was a time when the great Mathewson was unable to beat the Cubs with Miner Brown working. On the other hand, Mathewson could always trim Cincinnati by simply walking into the box.

Ty Cobb Takes Chances.

Ty Cobb is the great player that he is simply because he is always ready to take the most desperate chances. He always has the opposition more or less unnerved through apprehension. What Cobb represents as the individual, a championship team typifies as a collection. A club that is not well up in the race must necessarily play a conservative game. A team with a decided lead is able to gamble—to take long chances.

Such tactics, by upsetting the calculations of the opposition, often bear results that appear stamped in luck. But after all is said and done, luck favors the team that tempts it most. "Nothing ventured, nothing won" holds particularly true of baseball.

MRS. "LEFTY" FLYNN GIVEN DIVORCE FROM "GRID" STAR

SYRACUSE, N. Y., July 2 .—Mrs. "Lefty" Flynn, the former showgirl, has obtained a referee's decree in quiet divorce proceedings against "Lefty" Flynn, famous as a Yale football player, and a grandson of the late John Moore, of Syracuse.

Suit was brought several months ago, and from the beginning it was characterized by absolute secrecy. Mrs. Flynn named as co-respondent a New York chorus girl whose name all of the attorneys in the action refuse to make public.

NEW SUITS FOR CUBS.

CHICAGO, July 2 .—When the Chicago Nationals return to the West Side Park to-morrow they will appear spick and span in new uniforms. The old set was consumed in a fire which destroyed a laundry yesterday. It is a question whether the club, the players or the laundry will settle for the new raiment.

BOXING
News of the Ring Game

Promoter Tom McCarey has called off the twenty-round bout between Kid Williams, of Baltimore, and Eddie Campi, the coast sensation, at Vernon, Cal., on August 12. Williams demanded more money than the Western promoter was willing to give for such a match.

* * *

Kid Young has finally decided that condition is the main essential in the boxing game. The "fighting newsboy" is working out daily so as to be in the best of shape if called upon to meet Charley Lee in a return match. Meyer Pries, take notice!

* * *

Charley Ledoux, the French bantamweight, is satisfied that he must learn more about the boxing game in order to hold his end up against the American fighters. He made a poor showing in his recent bouts with "Kid" Williams and Eddie Campi.

* * *

Meyer Pries wishes to announce that he is still in the boxing game. The little Hebrew battler is after a scrap with either Spider Britt, Charley Lee or Kid Young.

* * *

Articles have been signed for a ten-round bout between Jimmy Clabby, middleweight, and Billy Papke, of Kewanee, Ill., to be held at Denver on August 11.

* * *

Lost, strayed or stolen—Terry Nelson. A letter is at the Georgian Sporting Department for the Greek battler.

* * *

In speaking of champions, Willie Ritchie seems to be the only undisputed title holder. Kid Williams is claiming Coulon's honors; Dundee has fought Johnny Kilbane a twenty-round draw, while the welterweight, middleweight and heavyweight divisions are all muddled up.

* * *

Billy Phelon, a Cincinnati scribe, says that Kid Mars is one of the grandest little boxers at present appearing before the public. He picks him to be the leader of his class before long.

* * *

Steve Ketchel, the Chicago lightweight, is anxious to box in Atlanta. Steve is a fighter on the Battling Nelson style, and usually gives the fans a run for their money. Ketchel is at present matched to meet Johnny Griffith at Akron, Ohio, some time next month.

* * *

Abe Attell donned the padded mitts last night and was held to a ten-round draw by Willie Beecher at New York. The ex-featherweight champion was outweighed by five pounds.

* * *

Kid Graves, of Milwaukee, and Tom Maloney will clash in a ten-round encounter at the Irving A. C., New York, on Saturday night.

* * *

The boxing card to be staged at Marietta Saturday has been completed. Young Seymour and Terry Nelson are to clash in the ten-round windup; Billy Whitney takes on Jack Rogers in the six-round semi-windup, while Kid Brooks and Jimmy Murphy exchange blows in the four-round preliminary.

* * *

Bombardier Wells, English heavyweight champion, has been signed to box Gunner Moir in a twenty-round go at the Canterbury Music Hall in London, September 3. Wells is also matched to box twenty rounds with Bandsman Rice, another Englishman, on September 17.

* * *

Abe Attell can't box for Tom McCarey on the coast, for the foxy Abe went a bit too strong in his demands for the mazuma. For this he has lost a battle with Jack White.

Tommy Burns Raps Jack Johnson

"He Is Poorest Ring Champion"

By W. W. Naughton.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 2 .—The iron which entered Tommy Burns' soul when Jack Johnson relieved him of his championship that warm summer day in Australia is still firmly wedged there. Tommy has grown portly and has divested himself of every shred of ambition in regard to a resumption of ring activities. He is now acting as guide, philosopher and friend to Arthur Pelky, the sad-eyed, soft-voiced white heavyweight champion, and he wants the whole world to know that so far as personal participation is concerned he is through, forever, with the frivolities of the ring.

But there is one thing that will cause Tommy to rise from his chair, bend his head, throw his arms into fighting position and crouch as far as his corpulence will permit. And that is when any reference is made to the bout which cost him the title. It is not sufficient for Tommy to tell you of the unfair manner in which Johnson fought. He has to furnish moving pictures of the occasion.

"It's all over now, and I have to sit quietly sometimes and hear people argue that Johnson was the greatest heavyweight of all times," said Tommy the other day. "Why, he was the poorest champion the game has known, and I am not saying it just because he licked me.

"Did anyone ever see Johnson start fighting briskly and keep it up as a fellow of his strength and size should? No, sir. He just crouches and waits, nails you with an uppercut and then grabs you and holds on. He swings around holding on like grim death, and showing his gold teeth as much as to say: 'Oh, this is easy.' But it takes all a referee's strength to split him out, and a few seconds later he is hanging on again.

"Yes, and it is the same round after round. Johnson's long suit is keeping his opponent from fighting. He does very little fighting himself, and anyone who recalls the bouts they have seen him in will admit I am right."

* * *

LIGHTWEIGHT CHAMPION WILLIE RITCHIE is quite willing to risk his laurels again. He says he is not particular who he is sent against as long as the price is right.

Ritchie is not naming the sum he should be paid. He wants each of the promoters to make a bid, and he will accept the highest offer. It is no use mentioning "percentage" to the champion. He has thrashed it all out and has discovered that flat offers are the best.

One of the charges Billy Nolan made against the champion was that Ritchie was "money mad." Nolan meant, of course, that money occupied Ritchie's thoughts to the exclusion of other things. There is nothing about Ritchie's actions, when money is in question, to suggest that his mind is unbalanced.

Having received something like $18,000 from Promoter Graney for the fight on July 4, Ritchie will probably expect as much, or more, when he boxes again. And the chances are very much against his getting it.

The fight between Ritchie and Rivers drew something over $29,000. As "houses" go nowadays it was a mighty good clean-up. But not for Graney, for if he broke even he is lucky.

It is easily enough reckoned if Ritchie got $18,000, Rivers $7,000, and it cost $1,500 to hire Coffroth's arena, Graney had little more than $2,500 to meet all the expenses of advertising and help, and the chances are he had to dig down into his jeans.

* * *

IT is an object lesson for fight promoters, and for such as think there is money in handling affairs of that kind. Graney worked like a beaver, and used every influence he could command to advertise his show. And when it came off the boxers received nearly 90 per cent of the takings, and the promoter found himself on the wrong side of the ledger.

This is a matter that will have to be regulated, although it is not easy to see how it will be done. As matters stand, all a champion, or a near-champion, has to do is set the promoters bidding against one another as Ritchie is doing right now, and prices will go soaring.

"What was I to do?" said Graney. "If I hadn't given Ritchie what he asked, some one else would have given it to him."

Probably. But now that it's all over Graney wishes he had not stood in the way of some other promoter. Of course, Graney will be chary of offering big money to Ritchie again, and this means that there will be one fool the less among the promoters.

It looks, indeed, as if this thing of paying the fighters more than they are worth will only stop when each and every promoter in the country has had his fingers burned.

LEIFIELD GOES TO COAST.

LANGFORD AND JEANNETTE SIGN FOR 20-ROUND BOUT

SAN FRANCISCO, July 2 .—Sam Langford and Joe Jeannette have been matched to box twenty rounds in Los Angeles on September 29. Langford, accompanied by his wife and baby, his manager, Joe Woodman, and Jack Read, the Australian lightweight, leave here to-day for the East. Langford wants to visit his relatives, whom he has not seen for several years, before starting to train for the Jeannette bout.

TIMBER LANDS

WE HAVE exclusive sale of 10,000 acres of land in a splendid Georgia county, covered with FINE TIMBER and with first-class railroad facilities. The timber rights alone will go far toward paying the price asked for the land. After the timber has been removed the land will be worth the price at which it can be bought for agricultural purposes. The soil is splendidly adapted to all crops raised in Georgia. We can deliver this land for $15 per acre, and we might be able to exchange it for good property in Atlanta. This is not cheap cut-over land, but high, level, well-timbered property. If you are interested, we advise you to communicate with us at once.

TIMBER LANDS

WE HAVE exclusive sale of 10,000 acres of land in a splendid Georgia county, covered with FINE TIMBER and with first-class railroad facilities. The timber rights alone will go far toward paying the price asked for the land. After the timber has been removed the land will be worth the price at which it can be bought for agricultural purposes. The soil is splendidly adapted to all crops raised in Georgia. We can deliver this land for $15 per acre, and we might be able to exchange it for good property in Atlanta. This is not cheap cut-over land, but high, level, well-timbered property. If you are interested, we advise you to communicate with us at once.

Who Makes the "Criminals?"

Did This View of It Ever Occur to You?

(Copyright, 1912.)

Much interest just now in CRIMINALS.

Much horror aroused by depravity.

Many plans more or less appropriate for making the air pure.

Many good men, politicians, women and bishops who spend the summer at the seaside are willing to spend a few days wiping "CRIME" off the earth.

What is CRIME? Who are the CRIMINALS? Who makes the criminals?

Do criminals viciously and voluntarily arise among us, eager to lead hunted lives, eager to be jailed at intervals, eager to crawl in the dark, dodge policemen, work in stripes and die in shame? Hardly.

Will you kindly and patiently follow the lives, quickly sketched, of a boy and a girl?

THE GIRL.

Born poor, born in hard luck, her father, or mother, or both, victims of long hours, poor fare, bad air and little leisure.

As a baby she struggles against fate and manages to live while three or four little brothers and sisters die and go back to kind earth.

She crawls around the rooms of a small house, a good deal in the way. She is hunted here and chased there.

She is cold in winter, ill-fed in summer, never well cared for.

She gets a little so-called education. Ill-dressed and ashamed beside the other children, she is glad to escape the education. No one at home can help her on. No one away from home cares about her.

She grows up white, sickly, like a potato sprouting in a cellar. At the corner of a fine street she sees the automobiles passing with other girls in warm furs, or in fine, cool summer dresses.

With a poor shawl around her and with heels run down she peers in at the restaurant window, to see other women leading lives very different from hers.

Steadily she has impressed upon her the fact, absolutely undeniable, that as the world is organized there is no especial place for her—certainly no comfort for her.

She finds work, perhaps. Hours as long as the daylight.

Ten minutes late—half a day's fine.

At the end of the day aching feet, aching back, system ill-fed, not enough earned to live upon honestly—and that prospect stretches ahead farther than her poor eyes can see.

"WHAT'S THE CHARGE, OFFICER?"

"Disorderly conduct, Your Honor."

There's the criminal that Society is hunting so ardently.

THE BOY.

Same story, practically.

He plays ball in the street—cuffed, if caught by the policeman.

He swings on the awning poles, trying to exercise his stunted muscles—cuffed again.

In burning July, with shirt and trousers on, he goes swimming in private ponds—caught and cuffed and handed over to the police.

He tries for work.

"What do you know?"

"I don't know nothin'; nobody ever taught me."

He can not even endure the discipline of ten hours' daily shoveling—it takes education to instill discipline, if only the education of the early pick and shovel.

He has not been taught anything. He has been turned loose in a city full of temptation. He had no real start to begin with, and no effort was ever made to repair his evil beginning.

"WHAT'S THE CHARGE, OFFICER?"

"Attempted burglary; pleads guilty."

In prison he gets an education. They teach him how to be a good burglar and not get caught. Patiently the State boards him, and educates him to be a first-rate criminal.

There's your first-rate criminal, Messrs. Bishops, good men, politicians and benevolent women.

Dear bishops, noble women, good men and scheming politicians, listen to this story:

In the South Sea Islands they have for contagious diseases a horror as great as your horror of crime.

A man or woman stricken with a loathsome disease, such as smallpox, is seized, isolated, and the individual sores of the smallpox patient are earnestly scraped with sea shells—until the patient dies. It hurts the patient a good deal—without ever curing, of course—but it relieves the feelings of the outraged good ones who wield the sea shells.

You kind-hearted creatures, hunting "crime" in great cities, are like the South Sea Islanders in their treatment of smallpox.

You ardently wield your reforming sea shells and you scrape very earnestly at the sores so well developed.

No desire here to decry your earnest efforts.

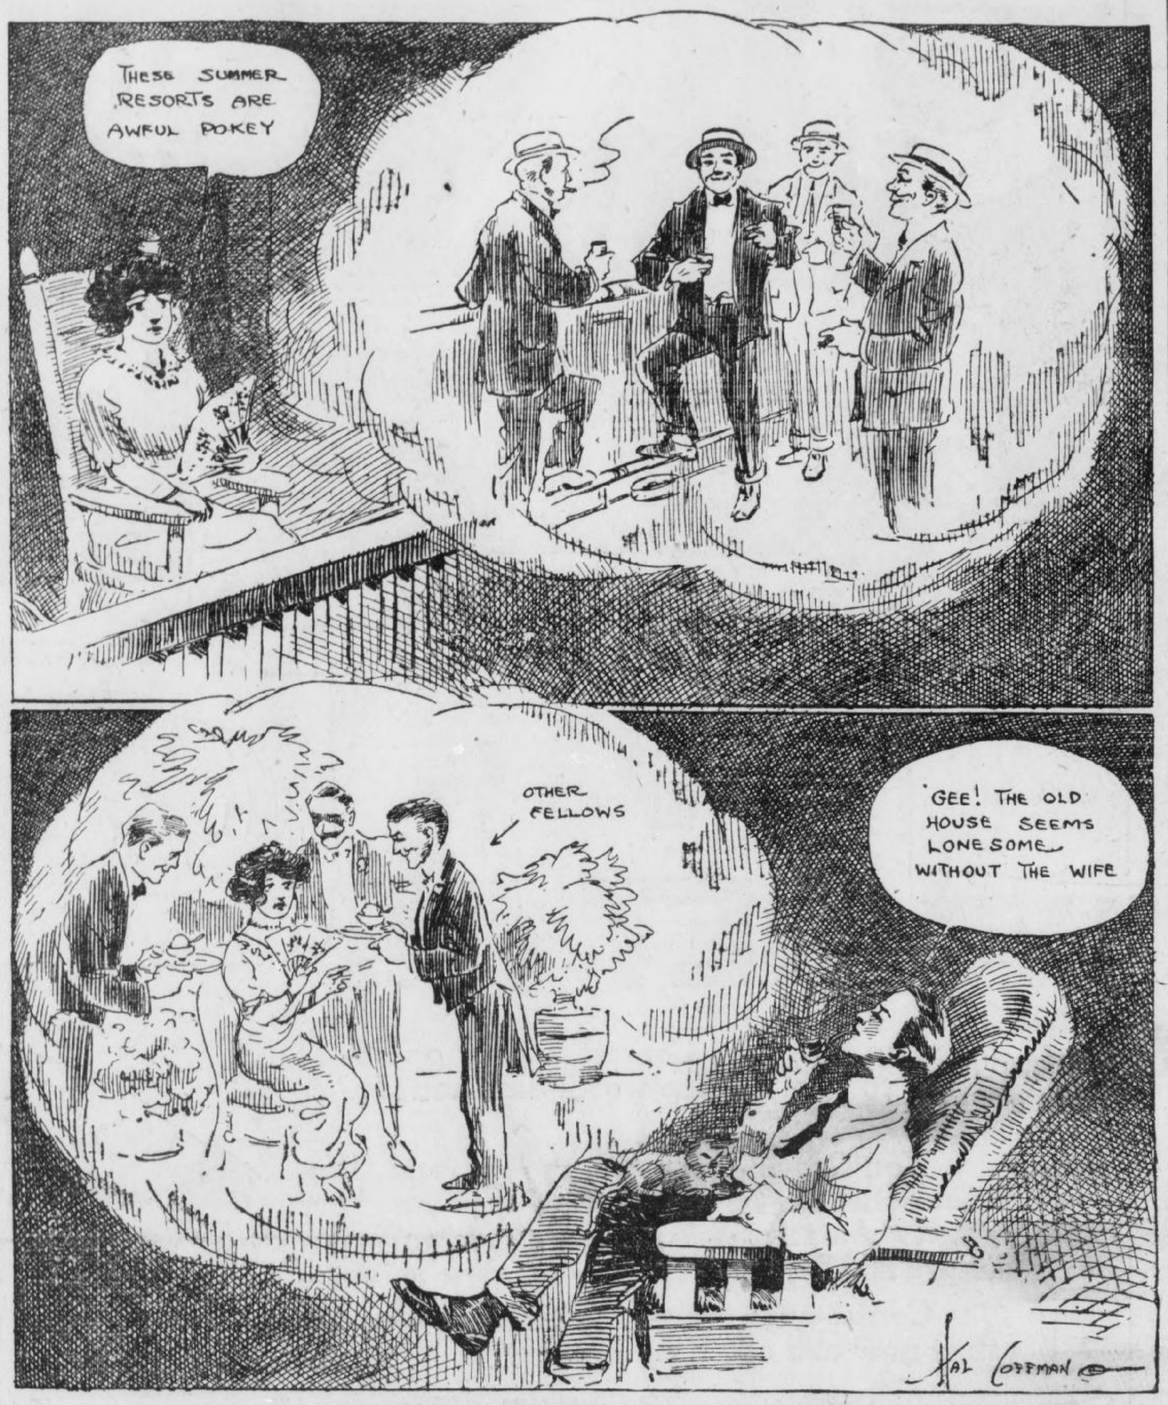

But if you ever get tired of scraping with sea shells, try vaccination, or, better still, try to take such care of youth, to give such chances and education to the young, as will save them from the least profitable of all careers—CRIME.

Scrape away with your sea shells, but try also to give a few more and a few better chances in youth to those whom you now hunt as criminals in their mature years.

God creates boys and girls, anxious to live decently.

YOUR SOCIAL SYSTEM makes criminals and fills jails.

Mysteries of Science and Nature

The Sun Is a Variable Star and Its Changes Affect the Price of a Man's Dinner---What Science's Latest Discovery Means.

By GARRETT P. SERVISS

THE recently announced conclusion of Professor Frost, the head of the Yerkes Observatory, that the sun is a variable star is in accord with what has been said repeatedly in these columns. It is a tremendously important fact, and its demonstration is mainly due to the labors of Messrs. C. G. Abbott and F. E. Fowle, of the Smithsonian Institution. Their statements have been confirmed by the observation of astronomers in Europe.

The sun has not suddenly become variable; it has been variable for ages, but not until now has any measurement of its variability been obtained. It has taken ten years to eliminate all the possible sources of error in the work, one of the principal difficulties being to discriminate between the effect of changing conditions of the earth's atmosphere affecting its ability to transmit the radiation from the sun to the surface of the globe, and changes occurring in the sun itself.

Minor Changes in the Sun Affect the Earth's Temperature.

It seems now to be certain that the intensity of the rays which the sun sends to the earth often vary at least as much as five per cent in periods of only a week or ten days. These variations, of course, directly affect the temperature and the character of the weather. Then there are variations of a much longer period, and of greater general extent, indicated by the waxing and waning of black spots on the sun's disk.

When there are many and large spots on the sun, its radiation is not diminished, but increased, and when they are few and small, as at the present time, the radiation, in general, falls off. But at all times, apparently, minor changes are going on in the sun, which produce quite sudden alterations in the temperature of the earth.

As has just been said, we are now at a period of minimum in the sun spots, but in about four years from now they will be numerous again, and then a general increase of the solar radiation is to be expected. It takes, on the average, about seven years for the sun spots to decline from a maximum to a minimum, and about four years for them to rise again from a minimum to a maximum. Meanwhile the radiation is not steady at any time, except for a few days.

The practical importance of the recent studies of these things is seen in Professor Frost's announcement that the time is near at hand when it will be possible to foretell the general character of the seasons long in advance.

He thinks that that may be achieved within about twenty-five years.

Then, if the present promise is kept, it will be possible for farmers and growers of all kinds of crops to know in advance what they have to expect, and to govern their sowings and plantings accordingly.

The sun will be recognized as the great dictator in agricultural affairs, and they will be the most successful cultivators who heed the hints which he gives of impending changes in his humor. They will watch his face, with the aid of the astronomers, as Nero's courtiers watched the play of their tyrant's features.

But the mere fact that those who have been conducting these researches think it possible to foretell the varying effects of the solar radiation upon the earth shows that even in his most variable moods the sun is subjected to a law which he cannot violate. It is what that law is and how it operates in order to forsee its effects. Much still depends upon a better knowledge of the earth's atmosphere, for when a sudden change takes place in the solar radiation the effect is not immediately felt on the earth. The atmosphere acts as a kind of buffer, and takes up the shock, afterward distributing it in a more gradual and gentle manner.

Change in Solar Radiation Might Bring About an Indian Famine.

A graphic illustration of the importance of this matter to every human being is given in a remark of Professor Langley's which Professor Frost has quoted:

"Though the most unformed nebula may hold the germs of future worlds, yet for us these possibilities are but interesting conjectures, for every nebula might be wiped out of the sky to-night without affecting the price of a laborer's dinner, while a small change in the solar radiation may conceivably cause the deaths of numberless men in an Indian famine."

Professor Langley's forecast has been fully justified by the recent investigations, and we may now say that the price of every man's dinner is affected by changes in the sun that had not been discovered ten years ago.

Time's Changes

By MINNA IRVING.

I CHANCED to meet old Father Time,
It does not matter where;
He wore a leather coat and cap,
And had a jaunty air.
A pair of goggles hid his eyes,
His boots were furred inside;
I viewed the change with much amaze,
"Where is your scythe?" I cried.

"It can not be that you at last
No longer mean to mow
Unhappy mortals like the grass
Before you as you go?"
"The scythe," the ancient spirit sighed,
"Is slow and out of date,
I use an aeroplane instead
To do the work of fate."

Divorce

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

Copyright, 1913, by Star Company.

THINKING of one thing all day long, at night
I fall asleep, brain weary and heart sore;
But only for a little while. At three,
Sometimes at two, o'clock I wake and lie,
Staring out into darkness; while my thoughts
Begin the weary treadmill-toil again,
From that white marriage morning of our youth
Down to this dreadful hour:
I see your face
Lit with the lovelight of the honeymoon;
I hear your voice, that lingered on my name
As if it loved each letter; and I feel
The clinging of your arms about my form,
Your kisses on my cheek—and long to break
The anguish of such memories with tears,
But cannot weep; the fountain has run dry.

We were so young, so happy, and so full
Of keen sheer joy of life. I had no wish
Outside your pleasure; and you loved me so
That when I sometimes felt a woman's need
For more serene expression of man's love
(The need of rest in calm affection's bay
And not sail ever on the stormy main),
Yet would I rouse myself to your desire;
Meet ardent kiss with kisses just as warm;
So nothing I could give should be denied.

And then our children came. Deep in my soul,
From the first hour of conscious motherhood,
I knew I should conserve myself for this
Most holy office; knew God meant it so.
Yet even then, I held your wishes first;
And by my double duties lost the bloom
And freshness of my beauty; and beheld
A look of disapproval in your eyes.

But with the coming of our precious child,
The lover's smile, tinged with the father's pride,
Returned again; and helped to make me strong;
And life was very sweet for both of us.

Another, and another birth, and twice
The little white hearse paused beside our door
And took away some portion of my youth
With my sweet babies. At the first you seemed
To suffer with me, standing very near;
But when I wept too long you turned away.
And I was hurt, not realizing then
My grief was selfish. I could see the change
Which motherhood and sorrow made in me;
And when I saw the change that came to you,
Saw how your eyes looked past me when you talked,
And when I missed the love tone from your voice,
I did that foolish thing that women do:
Complained and cried, accused you of neglect,
And made myself obnoxious in your sight.

And often, after you had left my side,
Alone I stood before my mirror, mad
With anger at my pallid cheeks, my dull
Unlightened eyes, my shrunken mother-breasts,
And wept, and wept, and faded more and more.
How could I hope to win back wandering love,
And make new flames in dying embers leap
By such ungracious means?

And then She came,
Firm bosomed, round of cheek, with such young eyes,
And all the ways of youth. I, who had died
A thousand deaths in waiting the return
Of that old love look to your face once more—
Died yet again and went straight into hell
When I beheld it come at her approach.

My God, my God, how have I borne it all!
Yet since she had the power to make that look—
The power to sweep the ashes from your heart
Of burned-out love for me, and light new fires,
One thing remained for me—to let you go.
I had no wish to keep the empty frame
From which the priceless picture had been wrenched.
Nor do I blame you; it was not your fault;
You gave me all that most men can give—love
Of youth, of beauty, and of passion; and
I gave you full return; my womanhood
Matched well your manhood. Yet had you grown ill,
Or old, and unattractive from some cause,
(Less close than was my service unto you)
I should have clung the tighter to you, dear;
And loved you, loved you, loved you more and more.

I grow so weary thinking of these things;
Day in, day out; and half the awful nights.

Solferino

By REV. THOMAS B. GREGORY.

THE battle of Solferino, won by Napoleon III and the Sardinian King from the Austrians fifty-four years ago, was one of the costliest of victories, a boomerang, the like of which is but seldom found on the pages of history.

Napoleon III, the Don Quixote of sovereigns, went far out of his way to interfere in the quarrel between Austria and Sardinia, and bitterly was he paid for it.

Within itself Solferino was a splendid triumph. Some 120,000 French and Sardinians beat to a finish some 170,000 Austrians, and the Emperor's cup of glory was sparkling to the brim! Solferino was well calculated to remind men of Austerlitz and Marengo and of the great captain whose genius had for so long led the soldiers of France from victory to victory as though they had been an army of demigods.

So far so good. But there was coming, all unseen by the victory of Solferino an aftermath of woe and misery.

Solferino precipitated a meeting between Napoleon and Joseph (July 11, at Villafranca), the result of which was the Treaty of Zurich, which, among other things, wrested Lombardy from Austria, thus materially weakening her among the family of European nations.

But the weakening of Austria carried along with it the strengthening of Prussia. If there was a time when Bismarck laughed more heartily than ever before, it was when the news came to him of that Lombardy matter. The great Chancellor must have laughed himself well-nigh mortal, for he saw just what it meant. He saw in advance the war of 1866, the struggle between Austria and Prussia for the leadership of the German States, the weakened state in which Austria would have to contend against the greatly improved condition of Prussia, and the final Prussian triumph at Konigratz.

But the clear-eyed Bismarck saw even farther than that. He saw Austria humbled and dismissed from the stage; he saw Prussia at the head of a united Germany; and, what was more to the point, he saw the Germans "marching all one way" on to Paris, to humble France much worse than France had humbled the Hapsburg.

RICH GEORGIA GIRL LOST 3 WEEKS

Lynette Awtrey, Acworth Heiress, Strangely Missing, Wires Plea for Help From Utah.

A dramatic story behind the mysterious disappearance of Miss Lynette Awtrey, 18-year-old daughter of wealthy Orlando Awtrey, one of the leading citizens of Acworth, Ga., and a member of one of Cobb County's most prominent families, who, after a tour of Europe, boarded a train in New York for Atlanta and then vanished as utterly as though she had left the earth, is expected to be bared this week when the girl arrives home from Ogden, Utah, where she has been located.

Miss Awtrey has been missing for nearly two weeks. Becoming homesick during her European trip, she returned to New York and wired her father to send her money to come home. Mr. Awtrey wired her $200 and the same day received a telegram asking him to meet her in Atlanta. Her trunk came on the train on which she was supposed to come, but there was no trace of the girl.

Since then her family has exhausted every means to locate the missing girl. The aid of the William J. Burns Detective Agency was enlisted and the operatives of the famous sleuth scoured the cities of the United States; the aid of police departments all over the country was invoked—but with no result. For all the detectives were able to ascertain to the contrary the girl had dissolved into thin air. After she boarded the train in New York absolutely no trace could be found of her.

Sends Mysterious Telegram.

With constant reports of failure being filed by America's most noted sleuths, Mr. Awtrey redoubled his efforts to find his missing daughter. More appeals were made to police departments, private detective agencies were enlisted in the search, and photographs of the young girl were sent out secretly by the Burns men in the hope that someone could be found who had seen her.

Sunday morning Miss Awtrey broke her silence of two weeks with a telegram from Ogden that intensified the mystery. It contained no explanation of her disappearance. The telegram was a piteous appeal for aid—a cry that she was alone and penniless in a strange land.

"Please help me," the telegram said. "I have no money. I am sorry I left home, but can not explain now. I will tell you about it when I get home."

The message was signed "Lynette," with no address in Ogden save the Western Union. Mr. Awtrey immediately wired his daughter money and a ticket to Acworth by way of the Union Pacific. It is probable that either he or one of the girl's brothers will meet her at Nashville or Chattanooga.

The disappearance of Miss Awtrey is almost identical with the case of Dorothy Arnold, the missing New York heiress, who still is being sought by detectives after a disappearance of more than a year, and has stirred and perplexed Cobb County more than any mystery of recent years.

Comes From Leading Family.

The fact that the girl comes from one of the leading families of North Georgia makes the interest in the mystery all the greater. Her father is president of the Acworth Cotton Mills Manufacturing Company of Acworth, and is interested largely in the commercial life of the town. She is a niece of Mrs. D. F. McClatchy, wife of the reading clerk of the Georgia House of Representatves, and a niece of John Awtrey, a prominent attorney of Marietta, and of Bernard Awtrey, editor of The Marietta News. She is also related to Mrs. R. M. Moon and a number of other prominent Marietta and Cobb County people.

Miss Awtrey is prominent in Ac-

ENGINEERS QUARREL; 1 KILLED

Sam Jackson Is Fatally Shot by Grover Cleveland Partee.

Sam Jackson, a freight engineer on the Georgia Railroad, was shot and fatally wounded by Grover Cleveland Partee, also an engineer, at the roundhouse in Inman Park about 3 o'clock Monday afternoon.

According to witnesses of the shooting, Jackson had just come in from a run, and on leaving his engine met Partee. It is said that there had been bad feling between the two men for some time, and after a few words, Partee drew a revolver and fired one time, the bullet striking Jackson in the neck.

The Grady ambulance was at once called, and the wounded man rushed to the hospital, but he died on the operating table without ever regaining consciousness.

Men at the roundhouse held Partee until the arrival of the police, when he was taken to the station. The cause of the murder is not yet known.

Dallas Girl Typist Slain at Her Desk

DALLAS, TEX., July 28.—Miss Florence T. Brown, a stenographer, was murdered to-day as she sat at her desk. Her throat was cut and her left arm was mangled, evidently by a man's teeth.

None of the members of the real estate firm who employed her were in the offices at the time she was attacked. Bruises on her body showed that the girl had fought hard for her life.

Twenty-five young men were arrested as suspects in connection with the girl's murder. The police the arrests were entirely precautionary, and that they have no strong evidence as yet. With so many persons jailed, it was further believed that danger of a lynching would be minimized.

WASHINGTON, July 28.—The Democrats of the House Banking and Currency Committee to-day voted to report the Glass currency bill to the Democratic caucus on August 11.

SLAIN GIRL'S MOTHER ON STAND; SURPRISING SPEED MARKS TRIAL

Here are the important developments in the trial of Leo M. Frank for the murder of Mary Phagan.

Jury chosen at 1:30 p. m.

Mrs. Coleman, girl's mother, takes stand after recess, at 3:15, and tells of Mary leaving for the factory 11:45 a. m. on April 26.

George W. Epps, boy companion of Mary Phagan, repeats his story that he had an engagement to meet her on the afternoon of the fatal day.

Newt Lee, night watchman at the factory, tells his story of the finding of the body and subsequent developments. He says Frank acted queerly the day of the crime, and is cross-examined by Luther Rosser.

Court adjourned at 5:15 after an interesting session.

Mrs. J. W. Coleman, mother of murdered Mary Phagan, was the first witness for the prosecution at the trial of Leo Frank Monday afternoon. After answering several questions she broke down completely when the solicitor exhibited the little lavender skirt worn by her daughter when she last saw her alive. She covered her face with a fan and for several minutes could not answer a question.

The first question asked her was:

"What is your name?"

"Mrs. J. W. Coleman."

"When did you last see Mary Phagan alive?"

"April 26 at 11:45."

"What was she going to do when she lfet home?"

"She was going to the pencil factory to draw her pay."

Not Yet 14 Years Old.

Q. What did she eat before leaving?—A. Cabbage and bread.

Q. What was the age?—A. Nearly 14 years.

Q. Was she pretty or an ugly girl?—She was very pretty.

At this point Mrs. Coleman's voice began faltering.

Q. Did she have dimples in her cheeks?—A. Two pretty ones.

Q. What did she wear when you saw her the last time?—A lavender dress trimmed in lace.

Shows Victim's Dress.

Here Solicitor Dorsey took a large suitcase from the floor and opened it, and laid before the witness the clothes taken from Mary Phagan's body. It was then that Mrs. Coleman broke down and no more questions were asked for several minutes.

Between sobs, Mrs. Coleman, identified the clothes of Mary Phagan, which were laid at her feet. Deputy Miner gave her a glass of water. Solicitor Dorsey closed his questioning and Mr. Rosser took up the cross-examination.

Q. What trimming was on Mary's hat?—A. Pale blue ribbon and some small pink flowers.

Q. How far do you live from the car line?—A. Two blocks.

Boy Accompanied Her.

Q. Is there a store there?—A. Yes.

Q. Who kept the store?—A. Mrs. Smith.

Q. Do you know that Mary caught a car immediately leaving home at 11:45 o'clock?—A. Yes, she caught a car in five or seven minutes.

Q. Do you know the boy who was with her?—A. Yes, Epps.

Solicitor Dorsey objected, desiring to know who the boy was and what about him.

"It is necessary for me to know the relation between little Mary Phagan and this boy," answered Mr. Rosser.

"I don't know what's on his mind," declared Dorsey. "We ought to know if he intends to endeavor to impeach this witness.

"We are simply trying to find how Mary Phagan regarded this boy."

The cross-examination was resumed.

State Objects Again.

Q. Isn't it true that Mary told you that she detested Epps—that she didn't like him?

Dorsey objected again and Attorney Rosser withdrew his question.

Q. Didn't you tell L. P. Whitfield that Mary told you she detested Epps?

Objection again by the State, claiming that the question was immaterial and was mere hearsay.

Rosser said: "I am going to show the improbability of Mary Phagan making an engagement to meet this boy Epps."

Objection was overruled.

Says Girl Made Remark.

Mrs. Coleman finally replied that she thought Mary had made that remark.

Mrs. Coleman was excused with the intimation that she might again be called to testify.

Following Mrs. Coleman, George Epps was called to the witness stand. Solicitor Dorsey opened the questioning.

Q. Where do you live?—A. No. 246 Rosa street.

Q. How old are you?—A. Fourteen.

Q. How long have you known Mary Phagan?—One year.

Q. When did you see her last alive?—A. Saturday morning, April 26.

Frank Said Not to Punch Clock.

Veniremen Keenly Watched.

They handcuffed me to a chair before he came. When he came, I told him it was mighty hard to be handcuffed to a chair about something I didn't know anything about. He said: "What's the difference." "Well," I s aid, "Mr. Frank, I don't know nothing about it, except finding the body." "Yes," he said, "if you keep that up, we both will go to hell."

Q. You have told this story many times, haven't you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you always told it the same way?—A. Yes, sir; I got a good recollection.

Mr. Rosser was here insistent to know if Lee told about Frank appearing frightened when he met Gantt. He asked the negro if he didn't say Frank had said he gave the pair of shoes to a boy. Lee maintained that there were no contradictions in his statement.

"No, sir," he said, "you got that wrong."

Q. How many Saturdays were you at the pencil factory?—A. Four.

Q. When you came back the last time, if Mr. Frank was in his office, could any one have gone anywhere in the factory without Mr. Frank seeing him or knowing him?—A. Yes, if he didn't hear him.

New Line of Questioning.

Q. If Mr. Frank was in his private office, and the front door locked, could anyone go over that whole factory without him knowing it?—A. I don't know, sir.

Q. Well, you did do it the Saturday before, didn't you?—A. Yes, sir, I did.

Q. There was a light burning on the second floor near the clock, was there not?—A. He told me to go there every little while to look after the fires.

Q. Mr. Frank thought you went there every half hour?

When Lee did not answer, Solicitor Dorsey interrupted, saying that he did not want the negro committed by silence.

Lawyers in Clash.

"We want silence some times," said Mr. Rosser; "sometimes its more powerful. I am asking these questions and silence is one of my privileges. For the prosecution to interrupt is deliberately obstructing the testimony without intending to."

"I will make him answer," said Solicitor Dorsey, "when I get him."

"Yes," said Mr. Rosser, "I know you will. Probably you can get him to answer better than I can."

"I want the truth," rejoined Solicitor Dorsey.

"Yes, we all do in our partisan way," replied Rosser.

Q. You watched Gantt get away and you knew Mr. Frank was uneasy about him being there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They had had a difficulty, hadn't they?—A. Mr. Frank told me he had discharged Mr. Gantt and he didn't want him around.

Q. That is why you thought Mr. Frank wa sfrightened when you met him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Gantt is a big fellow, isn't he?—A. Yes, about 7 feet.

Q. You went over the building every half hour and into the basement a few feet from the ladder?—A. Yes, sir, except in the basement. I went there every hour.

Q. If you wanted to find whether the door at the rear was closed, you would have passed the body?—A. It was shut when I found the body.

Q. Did the police find it open?—A. They said they did.

Solicitor Dorsey objected to the form of Mr. Rosser's questions and was sustained.

Q. The police got there in about eight minutes?—A. I don't know. I said all the time I didn't know how long it took them.

Light in Alley, He Says.

Q. You didn't get any closer to the basement door than the body was?—A. No, sir.

Q. Could you have seen out of the back door?—A. Yes, if it was open.

Q. Are you positive about the door being closed?—A. Yes. There was a light in the alley and I could have seen if the door had been open.

Q. Are you positive about the door being closed?—A. Yes; there was a light in the alley and I could have seen it if the door had been open.

Q. Did you go as far as the body before you found it that night?—A. Not until 3 o'clock, when I found the body.

Q. Why didn't you see the hat and shoes as you went along?—A. I don't know. I just didn't see them.

Court was then adjourned at 5:12 with Newt Lee still on the witness stand. He will be placed on the stand again when court opens at 9 o'clock Tuesday morning.

Leo M. Frank was back in the county jail twenty minutes after the conclusion of the first day's hearing in his trial. The calmness which had characterized his appearance all day was still with him and he smiled as he said good-bye to the friends who accompanied him to the Tower in company with Sheriff Mangum.

Newt Lee was returned to the county jail a few minutes before Frank. The negro has ben a model prisoner and while kept under the eyes of a special guard all day consideration was shown him in many little things.

All the force of attorneys at the table for the defense watched with keen eyes every man examined for the jury, and frequently referred to a voluminous record containing the names of all the veniremen and detailed statements of their history and associations so far as these might have a bearing on their desirability as jurors to pass on Leo Frank's guilt or innocence.

The keenest interest was manifested by those in the crowded little courtroom as the strategies of the brilliant lawyers were revealed during the examination.

State Had Veniremen's Records.

The thoroughness with which the Solicitor and his assistants had canvassed the history of every venireman and had investigated whether or not he had ever expressed an opinion on the guilt or innocence of the accused was demonstrated when W. W. Hemmett, a salesman for the Kingsbury Shoe Company, was being examined as to his qualifications.

"Have you ever said you thought Frank was guilty?" Mr. Dorsey inquired.

"No, I never have," replied Hemmett.

Here the Solicitor referred to some notes at hand and proceeded to call to Hemmett's recollection a certain talk he had with acquaintances at a certain time. Hemmett was forced to admit that he had talked of the case at that time, but declared that he had not expressed a definite opinion.

"I only said I would have to hear some evidence before I would believe Frank was guilty," he told Judge Roan.

He was rejected for cause.

Defense Equally Alert.

The defense showed that it was exactly as vigilant when the next venireman was examined. As soon as A. L. Bellingrath, of No. 91 Milledge avenue, arose from his seat, Attorney Arnold was on his feet prepared to state the objection of the defense. He pointed out that Bellingrath was the brother of Henry Bellingrath who has been employed in the Solicitor's office during the Phagan investigation and that he was reported to have expressed an opinion on the guilt of Frank.

A shrewd bit of strategy was used by Solicitor Dorsey and Attorney Hooper in accepting the two negroes whose names were among the veniremen.

By doing this they forced the defense to use up two of their twenty challenges if they did not desire to have negroes on the jury. With Jim Conley, a negro, likely to be indicted for the murder in the event that Frank is cleared, the defense had no intention of allowing them to pass on Frank's guilt and promptly struck them. The two negroes were Earl Davis and E. E. Hawkins.

May Summon Reporters.

When court opened for the afternoon session, Attorney Arnold announced:

"We may want to use some of the members of the press as witnesses. I don't want to put them under the court rule which would exclude them from the courtroom."

Solicitor Dorsey hereupon arose and said:

"All right, but I want to reserve the right to do so at a later date if necessary."

Defense Loses First Clash.

The attorneys for Leo M. Frank lost out in their first skirmish with the prosecution, being compelled to read their list of witnesses against their wishes and their vigorous protests.

They evened up matters by obtaining from Solicitor Dorsey the concession of honoring the subpenas lecus tecum issued by the defense and demanding the production in court of all the affidavits of Jim Conley. After a short passage between Attorney Arnold for Frank and Solicitor Dorsey that the list must be read, the judge ruled, and the list was read by Attorney Stiles Hopkins.

The list included employees of the National Pencil Factory, where the murdered girl worked; members of Frank's immediate family, and other relatives and associates of the accused man, members of the same fraternal orders, acquaintances who saw Frank on the day of the crime and classmates in college.

Jurymen Chosen.

The reading of the last names came as a complete surprise. It developed that the defense had scoured the country for persons who had known Frank when he was a student at Cornell. They were subpenaed to bring the character testimony in his behalf up to the time he began his business career.

The picking of the jury proved less difficult than anticipated, twelve men being obtained before 1:30.

List of Jurors.

Here are the jurors chosen:

A. H. Henslee, No. 74 Oak street, a traveling salesman for the Franklin Buggy Company; F. V. L. Smith, No. 481 Cherokee avenue, manufacturer's agent, with offices in the Empire Building; J. F. Higdon, a contractor, No. 108 Ormewood avenue; F. E. Winburn, No. 213 Lucile avenue, claim agent Atlanta and West Point Railroad; A. L. Wisby, No. 21 Hood street, cashier of the Buckeye Oil Company; W. M. Jeffries, a real estate man, with offices at 313 Empire Building; Marcellus Johnming, No. 161 James street, a machine shop foreman, with offices at No. 281 Marietta street; M. L. Woodward, cashier King Hardware Company, No. 183 Park avenue; J. T. Osburn, an optician for Hawkes', was chosen from the fifth panel to be the ninth juror;

DANGEROUS CALOMEL GOING OUT OF USE

A Safer, More Reliable Remedy Has Taken Its Place in the Drug Store and in the Home.

A few years ago, men, women and children took calomel for a sluggish liver and for constipation. They took risks when they did so, for calomel is a dangerous drug. Your family doctor will be the first to tell this if he discovers you dosing yourself with calomel.

But the drug trade has found a safer, more pleasant remedy than calomel in Dodson's Liver Tone.

Dealers tell us that their drug store sells Dodson's Liver Tone in practically every case of biliousness and liver trouble where calomel used to be taken.

Dodson's Liver Tone is a vegetable liver tonic that is absolutely harmless for children and grown people. It sells for 50 cents a bottle and is guaranteed to be entirely satisfactory by all druggists who will refund your money with a smile if it does not give quick, gentle relief without any of calomel's unpleasant after-effects.

THRONG AT THE COURTHOUSE DOORS AS THE TRIAL OPENED

FRANK, FEELING TIPTOP, SMILING AND CONFIDENT, IS UP LONG BEFORE TRIAL

Frank was escorted from the Tower to the courthouse shortly after 6 o'clock in the morning, nearly three hours before the trial was scheduled to begin. This was done to avoid the curious crowd which it was expected would be about the courthouse and thronging the corridors at 9 o'clock.

Frank was up and dressed and freshly shaven when Deputy Sheriff Plennie Miner appeared before his cell at the early hour.

"How are you feeling this morning, Mr. Frank?" the deputy inquired.

"Tip top, only I'm mighty hungry," replied Frank.

Exhibiting the same poised confidence that has characterized him through three months since he was locked in a cell in the county jail, the young factory superintendent chatted freely with Miner on the way to the courthouse.

Sure He Will Be Freed.

He was attired in a natty light gray mohair suit and wore a fancy gray tie. His face was fuller and he appeared slightly heavier than when he was arrested shortly after the murder of the Phagan girl. He seemed cheerful and in the best of health.

"I am very sure of acquittal," he said, as he arrived at the courthouse. "I am glad that the trial is about to begin after this long wait. I have no fear of the outcome. I am not only innocent of the terrible crime, but I am innocent of any knowledge of it, save as the information has come to me since the officers came to my house that morning three months ago."

At this moment E. C. Essenbach, a relative of Frank, appeared with a tempting breakfast which was spread in the prisoners' room at the courthouse. Frank gave ocular proof that his appetite had not suffered from his long confinement as he proceeded to make way with the delicacies prepared for him.

Frank greeted his relative cheerfully and conversed with him for more than an hour. The topic seldom was on the crime or the trial which was about to begin. Long before the time set for the judge to take the bench other friends and relatives of the prisoner had appeared and some of them were permitted to talk to him.

Conley Ready For the Stand.

Jim Conley, Frank's accuser, was made ready for the trial early in the morning, although it was not probable that he would be called during the day.

He was given a shave and a new suit of clothes, as he had worn for the last three months the same shabby garments that he had on at the time he was arrested while washing a shirt at the National Pencil Factory.

Conley said that he was ready to go on the witness stand at an instant's notice. He declared that he would stick to the same story that he told in his last affidavit and which he has since repeated many times for the benefit of Solicitor Dorsey.

"If they had just let me face Mr. Frank, I could have made him tell the truth long before this," he asserted.

Less than half a hundred persons were waiting about the courthouse at 8 o'clock, an hour before the time set for the beginning of the trial. It was thought that not a large crowd would be clamoring for admission to the courtroom as it had become quite generally known that the small room would accommodate hardly more than the witnesses and the veniremen and that it would be necessary to exclude practically all spectators.

Much Preparation Made.

For no trial in the history of Georgia have such elaborate arrangements been made for the comfort of the comparatively small number of spectators who will gain admission, the attorneys who will handle the case, the jury and the newspaper men. Deputy Sheriff Plennie Miner has received much praise for the splendid preparations made.

Electric fans have been installed at every window and oh the railing separating the spectators' seats from the bar, ozonators have been placed to keep the air purified. It probably will be the coolest and best ventilated place in Atlanta.

Not more than 250 spectators will be admitted. Approximately that number of chairs have been placed outside the inclosure. When they are filled the doors will be closed and no one else will be allowed in. No one will be permitted to occupy standing room.

The usual custom of permitting disinterested attorneys to occupy seats inside the bar will not be followed, and this particular part of the courtroom will be less crowded than during the average criminal trial.

How They Will Line Up.

Prosecuting Attorney Dorsey and at least five assistants will occupy a table directly in front of the bench and witness stand with the jury box close on the righthand side. Attorney Rosser with his assistants and the accused will be seated at a table to the left of the State's and farther away from the jury. The table for newspaper men is back of the State's table. The arrangements were agreed upon by the attorneys and the judge.

The table for the defense was selected by Attorney Rosser with a view to the number of persons who would wish to be near Frank during the trial. Seats have been arranged to the back of the table to accommodate at least 30 persons, friends and relatives of the accused, who have visited him constantly since he was confined at the Tower.

Deputy Sheriff Plennie Miner, who will have charge of the crowd and keeping order in court, will also have charge of the prisoners. Long before any crowd congregated around the courthouse Frank and Lee were brought from the Tower and placed in the room reserved for them. When court opened Frank took his place at the table reserved for his attorneys.

The court rule to segregate the witnesses will, of course, be enforced, but it may not be until twelve men have qualified as jurors, which will hardly be before the middle of the week.

When the witnesses are segregated they will be kept in the large courtroom on the floor above the trial room. A bailiff will be placed in the hall and one on the door of the witness chamber, and as the names are called they will be brought from the floor above to the court.

It is probable some rule will be made to keep the witnesses for the State and the defense separated, in which event the third floor of the building would have to be used.

The jury room was selected with a great deal of care. It is almost inaccessible from the outside and large and airy. Its windows are about twenty feet above an alleyway that runs on either side. Deputies will be kept in the alley to keep anyone from getting this close to the room.

From the time a juror is acceptable to both sides until the conclusion of the case he will not be allowed to go to his home or communicate with anyone except a fellow juror.

The least of the deputies' troubles will not be in handling the crowd that will gain admission to the court, but in handling the crowd that will daily congregate on the outside and wait through the day for news of the proceedings in the trial. Ten deputies and as many members of the county police will be on duty on the streets around the building.

Climate Failed; Medicine Effective

Rest, fresh air and well-cooked, nourishing food do help many persons suffering with Lung Trouble. But in many cases the disease is only temporarily "arrested," and something more is needed. Eckman's Alterative is a medicine for Throat and Lung Troubles and has brought about many complete recoveries in many cases where the surroundings were not ideal. Judging by the many reports of recoveries received, we believe it should be used in every case of Lung Trouble. A remarkable case follows:

Weldon, Ill.

"My Dear Sir: Through your instrumentality I have been saved from a premature grave. On December 14, 1904, I was taken with Typhoid Pneumonia which developed into Consumption. In February, 1905, I went to Fort Worth, Texas, and later to Canon City, Colorado. After being there two weeks, my physician informed me that my case was hopeless. Three weeks later I returned home, weighing 103 pounds, the doctor having given me no assurance of reaching there alive.

"On July 14, 1905, I began taking Eckman's wonderful remedy for Consumption. To-day I weigh 158 pounds. I am stout and well and can do any kind of work about my grain elevator."

(Affidavit) ARTHUR WEBB.

Eckman's Alterative has been proven by many years' test to be most efficacious in cases of severe Throat and Lung Affections, Bronchitis, Bronchial Asthma, Stubborn Colds and in upbuilding the system. Does not contain narcotics, poisons or habit-forming drugs. For sale by all of Jacobs' Drug Stores and other leading druggists. Write the Eckman Laboratory, Philadelphia, Pa., for booklet telling of recoveries and additional evidence.

Venire Whipped Into Shape Rapidly; Negro Is Eligible

Within a minute or two after Deputy Sheriff Plennie Minor had called the court to order the examination process was applied to the venire panel of 144 men. From each panel of twelve one or more men were excused after being asked the formal questions and furnished a sufficient reason to bar them.

J. H. Jones, Deputy Clerk, called the names. F. W. Stone, No. 82 East Linden street, was excused on account of illness. R. F. Shedden was refused on an excuse of military exemption. Only one man was excused from the first twelve men.

H. R. Calloway, of No. 691 Piedmont avenue, first of the second panel, was not served. F. A. Hull, No. 180 Grant street, was excused on account of his age, 20 years. T. J. Henderson, No. 25 Woodson street, was excused as opposed to capital punishment. J. A. McCreary, No. 78 East North street, was excused because of his residence in DeKalb County. J. F. Patterson, of College Park, was excused on account of deafness. Five were excused from the second panel.

Negro Declared Eligible.

W. H. Scott, No. 215 Gordon street, was excused on account of ill health. He had a doctor's certificate. W. H. Abbott, Record Clerk of the court, was refused excusal. Only one man was excused from the third panel.

The first surprise came with the questioning of the fourth panel, when Earl Davis, a negro, was not excused. He was ruled eligible to jury duty. There is little prospect that he will be drawn as one of the jurors.

George Mathieson, Assistant Chief of County Police, was excused on account of his duties. John W. Alexander, capitalist, of No. 439 South Pryor street, was excused because of illness. W. M. Donehoo, of Buckhead, was let out on account of the death of his mother. E. A. Massa, of No. 305 East Fair street, was over age. J. H. Gilbert, of South Bend, was let out because of illness. The jury panels were thus being revised and made into a compact venire by this process of elimination.

Joel Hurt Out of Town.

The following men were excused in the selection of the fifth panel: George R. Wall, No. 139 Hill street, on account of illness; F. M. York, No. 221 Cooper street, on account of the illness of his wife; W. I. Brooks, No. 224 East Fair street, on account of having removed from Fulton County. The following were excused in the selection of the sixth panel: H. Maness, No. 112 Jefferson street, account of deafness; Joel Hurt was out of town.

Lynette Awtrey Wires Piteous Plea From Utah to Father in Acworth, Ga.

worth and Marietta society, and is considered one of the most beautiful girls in the former town.

The circumstances surrounding the disappearance of the young girl are shrouded in mystery, owing to the unwillingness of her relatives to discuss the matter. According to her friends, however, this is all that is known of the case:

Early in June Miss Awtrey left New York to tour Europe under the care of Miss Olive Faw, of Marietta, who takes parties of Cobb County girls across the Atlantic each year. There were a number of Miss Awtrey's friends in the party, and she had been viewing the trip with pleasure. Her first letters from abroad were optimistic in tone. She declared she was having a glorious time. Suddenly there was a change. In her letters the girl reflected the homesickness that, she declared, was making Europe distasteful to her. She said she wanted to return home and see her friends.

Miss Faw conducts two tours during the summer, and Miss Awtrey had arranged to take both of them. When she reached London, on the second tour, however, she wrote to her parents that she was coming home. She was next heard of in New York, about two weeks ago. She wired her father that she was homesick and wanted to come home, and asked him to send her some money and a ticket. He wired her the $206. That same evening Mr. Awtrey received a telegram asking him to meet her in Atlanta a few days later.

Found Trunk—Not Daughter.

On the day mentioned Mr. Awtrey was at the Terminal Station to greet his daughter. The train pulled in, the father waited, but the girl did not appear. Thinking perhaps she had missed her train and would come on a later one, he stayed in Atlanta all day and met every train from New York. Miss Awtrey still did not come. Mr. Awtrey investigated and found that her baggage had been checked through from New York to Atlanta and had arrived on the first train he had met.

Mr. Awtrey then returned to his home. He waited several days, and when his daughter still failed to appear he asked the aid and advice of his brother, John Atwrey, of Marietta, and his brother-in-law, D. F. McClatchy. A few days later Mr. McClatchy came to Atlanta and enlisted the services of the Burns agency. Detective Chatham, attached to the Atlanta office, went to Marietta and Acworth to determine if any clews could be developed there. His quest was fruitless. The Burns agency then obtained a photograph from a photographer in Marietta, a relative of the missing girl, and it was scattered broadcast over the country.

Miss Awtrey's family has made every effort to keep the fact of her disappearance a secret, and her relatives and intimate friends have been sworn to secrecy. None of them will discuss the mystery, nor advance any theories to account for her disappearance.

"I'm sure I do not know what caused Lynette to run away," said Mrs. R. M. Moon, a distant relative of the girl. "It is as great a mystery to me as it is to anyone.

Elopement Is Rumored.

John Awtrey, the missing girl's uncle, refused to make any comment whatever on his niece's unexplained absence.

"All I know is that she started home from New York and didn't get here," he said.

The girl's father could not be seen when a Georgian reporter visited Acworth Sunday night. One of her brothers declared that the members of her family entertain no theories of foul play or of a love affair.

"We are satisfied with the situation," he said. "She has been located."

Despite the assertions of the members of the girl's family that her disappearance is not the culmination of a love affair, several of Miss Awtrey's friends, in discussing the case, persist in mentioning the name of a young man, whose home is in Atlanta, who has been an ardent suitor of Miss Awtrey's for the past year. The suit of the young Atlantan, it is said, has not met with the approval of the girl's family, and it is intimated that he has been forbidden to call on her.

The theory evolved out of these facts by Miss Awtrey's friends is that the girl really came to Atlanta from New York and that her admirer met her here and persuaded her to elope with him.

Giant Negro Hunted For White Slavery

WINCHESTER, VA., July 28.—Despite the fact that several hundred regulars of the various cavalry regiments camped near town at the maneuver grounds have searched for him, the giant negro Franklin, who, it is alleged, was engaged in a white slave traffic and whose place near the campgrounds was raided on Thursday night by the Sheriff, so far has eluded capture.

The white women who were found in the company of a number of negro troopers of the Tenth Cavalry at 2 o'clock in the morning, when Franklin's tent was surrounded, are still in jail.

Both wooers are about 21 years old and both are members of the senior class at Princeton University, which is in the town where Miss Cleveland has spent most of her life. The classmates have been friends for years.

OPENING CLASH IS LOST BY DEFENSE; FORCED AT START TO NAME ITS WITNESSES

At 9:58 o'clock Solicitor Dorsey announced that he was ready to open the case of the State against Leo M. Frank, charged with having killed Mary Phagan by strangulation. This was followed by the request of the defense that the State's witnesses be called, sworn and put under the rule.

The prosecution opened by announcing its readiness to go on with the trial and called the list of witnesses. Bailiffs brought them down from the second floor. In regular order called, their names were: Mrs. J. W. Coleman, mother of Mary Phagan; J. W. Coleman, the girl's stepfather; George Epps, newsboy; L. S. Dobbs, policeman; W. W. Rogers, bailiff for constable; L. S. Starnes, detective and also prosecutor on the indictment; Pat Campbell, detective; Grace Hicks, girl who identified Mary Phagan's body; J. M. Gantt, once held for inquiry, now supposed to be a star witness for the prosecution; Harry Scott, the Pinkerton detective; R. P. Barrett, pencil factory employee; B. P. Haslett, policeman; M. V. Darley, factory employee; W. A. Gheesling, undertaker that cared for the girl's body; Dr. Claude Smith, City Bacteriologist; Dr. H. F. Harris, member of the State Board of Health; Dr. J. W. Hurt, Coroner's physician; E. L. Parry, court stenographer; E. S. Smith, Monteen Stover, girl employee at pencil factory; Minola McKnight, cook at Frank's home; Albert McKnight, Minola's husband (McKnight did not appear in court); Helen Ferguson, Mrs. Arthur White, wife of factory employee, and L. Stanford.

Attorney Reuben Arnold asked concerning the duces tecum that he had served on the State's attorneys for the affidavits of Jim Conley and others. On the promise of Solicitor Dorsey that he would produce the affidavits whenever needed the duces tecum was waived.

Solicitor Dorsey said he did not concede the right of the defense to force a production of the affidavit. He, however, at the request of Mr. Arnold, dictated a statement giving the dates of each of the affidavits signed by Conley, saying they were all of the affidavits Conley had made and that he would produce them whenever necessary.

The Solicitor asked then that the defense's witnesses be called and sworn. This was met by strenuous objection on the part of Attorneys Rosser and Arnold, who claimed their list was fragmentary.

Solicitor Dorsey protested vehemently, declaring that it would be extremely unfair to the State not to swear the defense's witnesses at this time. Attorney Rosser said it would delay the trial to complete their list at this time.

Judge Roan ruled that he would give the defense time to get up the list. The defense capitulated and it took but five minutes for the list to be made up.

Witnesses for Defense.

Attorney Stiles Hopkins, at the table for the defense, called the names of the witnesses by whom they expect to clear Frank. They were Mary Burke, Dora Small, Ella Thomas, C. P. Gilbert, F. Payne, Eula Flowers, Josephine Stelker, Mattie Thompson, Mrs. L. J. Cohen, J. C. Lowe, M. H. Liebman, Miss Bessie White, Joe Williams, Fred Howell, Wade Campbell, J. A. Price, J. E. Lyon, Cora Lavender, M. O. Nix, J. C. Matthews, F. Jenkins, Mrs. Josephine Selig, E. Selig, J. H. Haas, W. H. Mincey, J. B. Spier, E. L. Skipper, E. L. Sentell, May Barrett, Rebecca Carson, C. H. Carson, Harry Denham, Corinthia Hall, Mattie Hall, J. L. Holloway, Mrs. George Jefferson, Jerome Michael, George W. Parrott, M. W. Morrow, Mrs. M. W. Morrow, Rabi David Marx, A. E. Mayo, Fred Weller, A. E. Marcus, Ed Montag, I. H. Haas, W. B. Owens, T. Y. Brent and Ossie Shields.

These were all of the witnesses whose names were called, but at least 100 more, who will be used mostly as character witnesses, were in the room on the second floor waiting to be called.

First Talesman Too Old.

After the venire had been sifted and many excused, W. S. Copeland was the first talesman examined. He was excused when he said that he had passed the 60-year mark. Solicitor Dorsey put the questions, using the formal ones ask in murder trials.

Being conscientiously opposed to capital punishment or conviction by circumstantial evidence was held not to disqualify a juror by Judge Roan. This was in connection with O. T. Camp, the second talesman.

"I am conscientiously opposed to capital punishment on certain grounds," said Camp.

"What are those grounds," asked Solicitor Dorsey.

"Circumstantial evidence," he replied.

Judge Sustains Defense.

"That disqualifies him, then," said Solicitor Dorsey.

Attorney Rosser objected, saying that such belief did not disqualify the juror. Judge Roan sustained the defense, but Solicitor Dorsey struck him.

A. W. Brewerton was disqualified because he was opposed to capital punishment.

W. H. Winn was struck. Solicitor Dorsey taking this action after looking over his record.

R. G. Elliott was struck by the defense.

L. A. Smith was struck for cause.

C. T. Hopkins, Jr., struck by State.

W. E. Cates, disqualified because opposed to capital punishment.

T. G. Young, struck by defense.

D. D. Hewey, struck because he did not believe in capital punishment.

That ended the first panel of talesmen and not a single juror was obtained. The State struck three and the defense two. Seven were disqualified for cause.

Four Jurymen Obtained.

Four jurors were obtained from the second panel. They are:

A. H. Henslee, No. 74 Oak street, a salesman.

F. V. L. Smith, No. 481 Cherokee avenue, a manufacturers agent.

J. F. Higdon, 108 Ormewood avenue, a contractor.

F. E. Winburn, No. 21 Lucile avenue, a claim agent.

On the second panel the following men were struck:

Howard Oliver, by the defense.

H. E. Luckey, for cause.

O. L. Spurlin, No. 156 Lawton street, struck by defense.

H. A. Hide, for cause.

E. E. Hawkins, No. 369 Edgewood avenue, a negro, who was accepted by the prosecution, but struck by the defense.

L. F. Davis, for cause.

David Woodward, for cause.

M. J. Sewell, for cause.

Third and Fourth Panels Go.

The following men were struck on the third panel: Charles Witherspoon, by defense; H. J. Kuglar, for cause; C. J. Hale, for cause; J. B. Hays, by defense; E. L. Winn, for cause; W. H. Abbott, for cause; K. P. Mayson, for cause; Boyd Perry, for cause.

The entire fourth panel was struck: Samuel Schoen, by the State; W. S. Singleton, by defense; Earle Davis, a negro, was accepted by the State, but struck by the defense; C. S. Cantrell, for cause; John W. Collier, for cause; W. W. Hammett, by the State; A. F. Bellingrath, by defense on ground that he was a brother to an employee Solicitor Dorsey's office and that he had expressed the opinion that Frank was guilty.

"I said it looked like he was guilty from what the newspapers said," declared Mr. Bellingrath. Solicitor Dorsey urged that the talesman was not disqualified by this. However, Judge Roan disqualified him for cause.

"I think he should be set aside for his own sake," ruled the judge.

D. Berger, for cause.

Two More Panels Struck.

The following men were struck from the fifth panel: W. C. Willis, for cause; H. C. Hasty, prejudice; C. H. Cook, by defense; C. H. Candler, in answer to a question from Solicitor Dorsey if he was impartial, said "No;" George R. Low, by the State; S. E. Owens, for cause; J. C. Henderson, for cause; C. M. Brown, opposed to capital punishment; C. A. Vaughn, prejudice.

The following men, comprising the entire sixth panel, were struck: Ben F. Willis, by defense; C. M. Petton, prejudice; W. H. Hudson, not impartial; G. R. Milner, by defense; John Head, age; Robert Smidt, opposed to capital punishment; V. N. Carroll, not impartial; C. H. Allen, opposed to capital punishment; P. F. Barber, opposed to capital punishment; O. Wingate, for cause; T. E. Winsow, by State; A. W. Wofford, by defense.

Every man on the seventh panel was struck, including H. H. Kelly, prejudice; N. A. Long, biased; C. W. Gittens, by defense; H. D. Ferguson, opposed to capital punishment; W. L. Merk, by defense; F. E. Walker, prejudice; P. B. Sale, prejudice; W. S. Gaston, biased; C. L. Asbury, biased; J. W. Chatham, prejudice; C. W. Seagroves, prejudice; Carl Weinmeister, opposed to capital punishment.

The last panel, from which the last juror was secured, was Panel No. 9. The following men were struck: S. L. Miller, by defense; H. L. Solomonson, biased; L. O. Hendon, by defense; H. C. Ashford, for cause; E. E. Wochendorff, prejudice; Nicholas Ittner, age; Bud Waites, prejudice; W. W. Sorrell, by defense; Soloman Benjamin, member of Grand Jury.

The buzz of conversation in the little courtroom instantly was hushed when Judge Roan appeared and Deputy Sheriff Plennie Miner called the court to order. The impaneling of jurors was begun at once.

Luther Z. Rosser, chief of counsel for Frank, pressed his way to the defense's table just as Deputy Miner rapped for order. Solicitor Dorsey and his associates were at their table busily arranging papers and documents several minutes before the swearing of the veniremen began.

An imposing array of legal talent was presented when the case was called. Heading counsel for Frank were Rosser and Reuben R. Arnold, two of the foremost lawyers of the South. At their table were Herbert J. Haas, a civil attorney, who has been engaged in looking up character witnesses in behalf of Frank; Styles Hopkins, of the Rosser & Brandon law firm; Oscar Simmons and Paul Goss, engaged especially to assist in picking the jury; George Cox, of Arnold & Arnold law firm, and Luther Z. Rosser, Jr.

Wife at Frank's Side.

With Solicitor Dorsey were Frank A. Hooper, the brilliant attorney who made his reputation as a prosecutor in criminal cases; E. A. Stephens, Assistant Solicitor, and detectives who have been working on the case. Jim Conley's attorney, W. M. Smith, also was in court.

A stir was created when Mrs. Frank, wife of the accused, made her way into the courtroom and hurried past the rows of spectators into the anteroom where her husband was confined. She bore herself bravely, and when she reached Frank, was seen to converse cheerfully with him.

The loyal woman, who insisted on being by the side of her husband until he was called into the courtroom with his attorneys, drew the attention away from the routine proceedings several minutes.

Judge Roan in Good Humor.

Judge Roan appeared in unusually radiant humor and enlivened the dull routine of the early proceedings with facetious remarks directed at the jurors who sought to evade duty on various pretexts.

To one who claimed deafness, Judge Roan said that he had heard his own name readily enough when it was called.

Another juror, Dr. E. L. Connally, well known capitalist, and gray haired veteran of the war, remarked, smiling rather slyly, that he thought he was over age.

"How do you know that?" inquired the judge.

"My mother says I am," was Dr. Connally's reply.

"Do you claim exemption on that account?" asked the court.

"I guess I do, judge," admitted the capitalist.

"Well, then, I guess I will excuse you," said the judge, amid a general laugh from the courtroom.

Dr. Connally left his place with a vigor that belied his years.

Old Dr. Stork was responsible for the excusing of several of the jurors. By the time the eighth panel of men had taken the oath three men had told of new arrivals at their homes and had been excused.

Defense Not to Ask Delay.

Luther Z. Rosser, of counsel for the defense, stated to a Georgian reporter as he left his office for the scene of the trial that he defense would make no move for delay.

"We will not seek a change of venue or make any move of any kind to delay justice for our client," he said. "We are entirely confident that justice and truth will prevail, as it always must."

Reuben R. Arnold, of the defense, made the same kind of a statement.

"We will announce ready as soon as the case is called," he said.

One important witness for the defense was reported to be missing. He is a traveling salesman, and the defense was said to be confident of locating him.

A great crowd gathered in front of the courthouse as the hour of the trial drew near, and when 9 o'clock arrived, Pryor street at Hunter was almost impassable. The corridors of the courthouse were a mass of humanity, through which a lane had to be cut by deputies to allow the passage of witnesses and lawyers and newspaper men.

The crowd was tense with curiosity, but to all appearances inclined to be orderly and apparently was moved only by the commonest of human motives—curiosity.

Judge Andrew Calhoun entered the courtroom when the court was about midway in its forenoon session and took a seat by Judge Roan. In the intervals when the proceedings were interrupted by conferences of the attorneys, he conversed with Judge Roan.

Newt Lee, who found Mary Phagan's body, was brought from the Tower in the middle of the forenoon in the custody of a deputy sheriff. He was placed in an anteroom adjoining the courtroom. It was expected that he would be one of the early witnesses, if not the first, to be called by the State. Lee testified before the Coroner's inquest that he found the body of the slain factory girl in the

WHOLE OF SOUTH ENTHRALLED BY PHAGAN CASE

Story of Pretty Little Girl's Death Gripped Public, Eager to Discover Her Slayer.

As Leo Frank faces to-day the ordeal decreed by law that for man's life, man's life shall pay, interest in his case that has held Atlanta, Georgia and the South enthralled for three months has diminished not a whit since the Sunday morning the body of the little factory girl was found.

Wise judges of news, men who are paid thousands of dollars each year for their knowledge of the fickleness of the public, men who can time to the second the period when interest dies in one thing before the public eye to be born anew in another, have for years contended that no single item of news can sustain its interest longer than one brief week.

And yet for three months the public has read of Mary Phagan's death and the quest for her slayer and their demand for this news has been insatiable.

That the vaunted insight of these news experts is as shallow as the mirror reflection of a beauty of the stage is the thought that common logic first presents

Insight of Experts Borne Out.

The insight of these experts has not been at fault. On the contrary, it has been sustained. For in the mystery veiling the death of Mary Phagan and the trial of Leo Frank as her slayer, a more varied array of things that interest, thrill, horrify, shock and make men think is presented than in any one case developed since typesetting machines made the modern newspaper possible.

Harry Thaw's case comes to mind, that tragedy of romance that presented in the same cast of characters the brilliant Lothario, the man of millions, and a woman as fair as the dawn. But there was never the element of mystery in the slaying of Stanford White. District Attorney Jerome described it pretty well as a commonplace tragedy of the tenderloin.

The only question that confronted the public was whether there was a law decreed by God that a man should take up arms and avenge his family honor that should nullify the law made by man that decreed that the courts of the country and the judgment of heaven could alone mete out reparation for personal injury.

But in the Phagan case, there is a mystery so deep, so impenetrable, that there are thousands in Atlanta who believe that Mary Phagan's slayer walks about to-day a free man as another battles for his life accused of his crime.

Victim Only a Child.

There was mystery in the famous case of Henry Clay Beattie, the Virginia aristocrat, who met death in the electric chair for slaying his wife after his infatuation for Beulah Binford.

But again, we have a feature of the Phagan case which was missing in the Beattie tragedy that makes the Atlanta mystery as grippingly pitiful as the Virginia problem was sordid.

For in the Phagan case a child is one of the principals. All the world may love a lover, but all the world loves a child more. And when the innocent, wistful, appealing face of the little factory girl first appeared in the public prints more heartstrings were touched than there were thrills caused in all the sinister revelations of the Virginia trial.

The child interest has made many a case appeal to the public interest more than struggles of statesmen, ravages of nature, or even the love of man for woman. The entire United States waited breathlessly for news of the capture of the kidnapers of little Billy Whitla, the sturdy Pennsylvania lad, in 1909.

But when the kidnapers were taken and Billy Whitla returned safe and sound and maybe a little happier from his thrilling experience to the home of his parents, the public forgot all about little Billy and to-day, in four short years, there are few who remember his case at all. For Billy Whitla lived. Mary Phagan died.

Lamana Case Was Absorbing.

In 1907 the hearts of every mother and father in the Southland bled for the wealthy father and mother of the little Lamana boy, who was taken from their New Orleans home by members of the Crescent City Mafia. Interest was intense at every period of the search and public sentiment was kindled near to the blazing point when the beheaded body of the boy was found in a Louisiana swamp.

But as thrilling as was the Lamana case, it did not have that quality that is so essential to make a case universally absorbing. The Lamanas were foreigners, the kidnapers were foreigners. And Americans want an American in their news stories.

And so on and on. Recall any case of thrilling interest to your mind, analyze it, and you will discover that the Phagan case has features which that case does not possess and any one of those features would make a story of breathless interest in itself.

TRIAL INTEREST SETS RECORD FOR COUNTY

Brilliant Array of Lawyers and the Dramatic Features of the Case Make Spectacular Clash.

No murder trial in Fulton County ever has approached the spectacular interest which is in prospect in the Frank case from the first, sharp skirmish between the opposing attorneys, through the long, bitter legal battle, and to the final pleas of the prosecution and the defense.

The presence of Luther Z. Rosser and Reuben R. Arnold in the brilliant array of legal talent at once made certain that the trial would be out of the ordinary. Neither has the reputation of making a half-hearted fight when there is anything at stake. This time it is a man's life that is depending upon their legal ability, their shrewdness and their eloquence.

Both have a disconcerting habit of carrying the fight to their opponents. In ring parlance, they do not give their courtroom rivals a chance to "get set." This is going to keep the spectators constantly on the edge of expectation, and will furnish a series of exciting incidents that will give the Frank trial a place by itself in the criminal annals of Georgia.

Crisis When Conley is Grilled.

To describe Rosser's tactics as aggressive is expressing it euphemistically. If he were only aggressive, his name would not inspire the trepidation that now is felt by persons who have to face him in the witness box or by young lawyers who have to pit their strength against his.

Rosser and Arnold are at their best when they are cross-examining the witnesses called by the other side. This fact is expected to bring about the most thrilling situation of the entire trial in the witness box grilling of the negro Jim Conley. Not satisfied with seeking to prove the entire innocence of their client, the two lawyers propose to show that Conley himself is the man who attacked Mary Phagan in the National Pencil Factory and flung her dead body upon the trash heap in the basement.

From whom are they to get testimony of this startling nature?

Certainly from no one else than the negro, and from him they intend to get it. It is a bold plan, but one characteristic of the two-handed fighting methods of Rosser. Anyone who has seen a witness made the object of Rosser's attack knows that Jim Conley is in for a bad day when he is called to the stand to testify that Leo Frank had him assist in the disposal of Mary Phagan's body.

Chance Seen for Confession.

Only a Rosser would have the courage of his convictions to expect to break down the negro after he repeatedly had told the remarkable story of finding the girl's dead body on the second floor of the pencil factory and carrying her, at Frank's direction and with Frank's assistance, down the elevator into the basement.

Rosser's plan opens up the dramatic possibility of a courtroom confession from Conley. In the opinion of those who are convinced of Frank's innocence and the negro's guilt, it would not be a matter of great surprise if Conley, under the fire of questions directed at him by Rosser and Arnold, should collapse and confess he alone was concerned in the crime.

The cross-examination of Conley is certain to be one of the spectacular features of the trial. His vivid tale, under the lead of questions by Solicitor Dorsey and Attorney Frank A. Hooper, will be repeated to the courtroom full of spectators. It will lose none of its dramatic elements, in that its essential features already are well known to the public. They are waiting to hear it first hand from the negro's lips.

Raked Up His Past Life.

Then Conley will be turned over to the scarcely tender mercies of counsel for Frank. He probably will be on the rack for hours. Whether he will be able to stand the ordeal is problematical. No point in his history that could have any possible bearing on the case will be overlooked. The defense is in possession of a mass of information relating to Conley's conduct for years. He will be asked in regard to every one of these circumstances.

Before the events of the day of the tragedy are reached the negro will have undergone a searching examination of significant incidents in his past life. Then his story of his part in the crime will be attacked. The discrepancies will be brought out in the glare of the cross-examination. The falsehoods that he told for days after he was arrested will be resurrected. All of his affidavits will be ridiculed. The two attorneys will join in an effort to break down and utterly to discredit the story to which he now sticks. Whether or not they are successful, their attempt will be a dramatic feature of the trial.

A fight, scarcely less spectacular, will develop over the story of William H. Mincey. This time the attorneys for the prosecution will be in the role of scoffers. Mincey has declared that he heard Conley boasting of killing a girl.

Mincey, a quiet—almost diffident—type of the country pedagogue, will be made the target for the Solicitor's and Attorney Hooper's fire of questions. They will seek to show that Mincey never saw Conley the afternoon of April 26, when Mincey asserted he had the conversation with the negro.

Climax When Frank Is Called.

A hot fight also will be precipitated by the demand of the defense that the State make known the identity, at the beginning of the trial, of all the witnesses against Frank. Solicitor Dorsey has said that he will fight any demand of this sort.

The subpenas duces tecum issued by the defense will form another casus belli that is expected to provide a spirited skirmish between the attorneys at the beginning of the trial. The defense insists on having in court, for the purpose of comparison, all of the affidavits taken from Jim Conley, Newt Lee, Monteen Stover, W. M. Matthews and others. Dorsey declares this is a flimsy trick to discredit the State's witnesses, and proposes to resist to the extent of his ability any move to compel him to comply with the demand.

STREET CAR HITS WAGON, KILLING DAIRYMAN

R. R. Gresham, Father of Ten, Dies Three Hours After Crash. Thrown Forty Feet.

R. R. Gresham, a dairyman residing in Wyman street, Kirkwood, was struck by an outbound Kirkwood car at Whitefoord avenue early Monday morning and received injuries from which he died three hours later without regaining consciousness.

Gresham's skull was fractured, his throat gashed and his ankle broken.

The accident occurred when the dairyman, driving his wagon into Atlanta, attempted to cross the car tracks in front of an approaching car. The wagon was smashed into splinters by the speeding car and its driver thrown 40 feet into a ditch. The horse was knocked over on its side amid the debris of the vehicle.

Gresham was picked up unconscious and hurried in an ambulance to the Atlanta Hospital. Physicians who attended him held out little hope for his recovery. He died three hours later.

Mr. Gresham was 52 years old, married and the father of ten children. But one member of the family, Herman Gresham, a son, reached the injured man before he died.

W. S. Medcalf, No. 136 Kirkwood avenue, circulation department of The Atlanta Journal.

C. J. Bosshardt, No. 216 Bryan street, pressman Foote & Davies.

Bosshardt, the twelfth juror chosen, was the last venireman in the last panel that had been called before the court at the opening of court in the morning. He was picked at exactly 1:26 o'clock and at 1:30 the recess was taken until 3 o'clock.

Attorney Rosser took very little part in the selection of the jury, except to interject a suggestion now and then. He evidently was reserving his strength for the real struggle to come.

Shortly before 2 o'clock Leo Frank was taken into a room adjoining the juryroom, where he was served with a special dinner provided for him by his relatives. Frank's mother and wife were allowed to converse with him while he ate the dinner. He will remain in this room until the court reconvenes at 3 o'clock.

Wife and Mother With Frank.

Frank, accompanied by his wife and his mother, was brought into the courtroom at 10:30 o'clock. The striking of the jury was begun at once.

A half dozen of Frank's friends interrupted the order of the court for several minutes by clustering about him and shaking hands with him.

If there was any fear in the heart of the young prisoner it did not show in his calm features. He seemed perfectly assured and self-possessed. He nodded pleasantly to the judge and greeted his friends with a smiles.

After the stir had subsided, covering the entrance of Frank, his wife and mother, the trio took seats in a semi-circle just below the bench.

Frank and his mother took a good look at the jurors in the first panel that was brought in. The prisoner scrutinized each one closely as he was quizzed by the prosecutor to determine his qualifications.

Wife Fixes Gaze on Dorsey.

Mrs. Frank displayed no sign of emotion until she suddenly found that she was facing Solicitor Dorsey. Then anger appeared to blaze from her eyes She seldom removed her gaze from the Solicitor's face during the forenoon. If Dorsey was aware of the young woman's scrutiny, he made no sign and proceeded with the case in rapid fashion.

Occasionally Mrs. Frank would turn to her husband and nod toward the Solicitor as though she was ridiculing the efforts to convict Frank. Mrs. Frank was attired in a becoming suit of black and wore a black hat trimmed with black chiffon; also a black veil was drawn up over her hat. A black and white ribbon led to her watch in the pocket of her white silk waist. Two brilliant diamonds shone on the engagement finger of her left hand.

Frank occupied a seat between his wife and mother. He conversed with them alternately, at no time appearing nervous or the least apprehensive. His attitude was noticeably even more calm than at the time when he appeared before the Coroner's jury.

Frank Aids Attorneys.

Frank spoke frequently to his attorneys, whom he was near, and made suggestions while the jurors were being qualified. When each new panel was brought in he looked intently into the face of each man, beginning at the upper row and shifting his gaze from man to man until he had scrutinized them all.

Not infrequently, when the Solicitor had closed his examination and had said, "Juror, look on prisoner; prisoner, look on juror," Frank would turn to Attorney Arnold and an instant later the announcement would be made, "Storuck by the defense." Frank evidently was playing a large part in the striking of jurors by the defense.

The dagger-like gaze of Mrs. Frank seldom was removed from the Solicitor's face. Frequently she embraced all those at Dorsey's table in her scornful glance.

Wife Caresses Prisoner.

Chief of Detectives Newport A. Lanford, whose department unearthed much of the evidence, happened to be sitting at her right. She turned to him while he was glancing over papers as if she were about to speak her mind to him, but thought better of it.

Once in a while she took her eyes from the Solicitor's table to lay her hand affectionately upon her husband's shoulder and draw him toward her to whisper in his ear. Once when she discovered the reporters eyeing her, she smiled mischievously and immediately whispered the information to Frank.

Frank's mother sat quietly through the routine of examining the veniremen. She spoke to her son frequently, directing her glance at the prospective jurors as though commenting on their fitness.

SIDELIGHTS on GEORGIA POLITICS

by JAMES B. NEVIN

There seems to be little, if any, doubt that the Legislature is to hurry along the general tax act, just as it has hurried along the general appropriations bill.

There are, counting to-day, exactly fourteen working days left to the Legislature's credit. This does not include two Saturdays and two Sundays, however.

It, therefore, may be seen that the Legislature can, if it will, place both the appropriations bill and the tax acts—the general tax act, at least—in the hands of the Executive ten days ahead of adjournment, as he has requested.

If this is done—and it likely will be done—the present Legislature will have accomplished a record of speed never before equaled in the history of the State.

Despite all the complaining and criticism to the contrary, the present Legislature has been the most prompt, within the memory of any Georgian, in the matter of passing the two vitally big and necessary measures of the session—the general appropriations bill and the general tax act.

Credit must be awarded the committee heads, the committees and the Speaker for this remarkable achievement, and President Anderson has given his assurance that the promptness of the House shall be duplicated in the Senate this week and next.

Taken altogether, the record of the Legislature as made up for this session is all right and a credit.

It is, indeed, far better than usual.

Mr. Shuptrine, of Chatham is very much opposed to the measure permitting the addition of a kindergarten system to the public schools of the State.

Mr. Shuptrine does not believe the Constitution of the State contemplates anything of the kind, and, moreover, he thinks it would be but the first step in the direction of greatly expanding the school fund, already smaller than the necessities of the State seem to warrant.

"If we permit this innovation, not warranted in the fundamental law at all, we shall have application made within the life of the present Legislature, perhaps, for more funds to meet the kindergarten requirements," said Mr. Shuptrine to-day.

"I know that it is proposed to add this feature to the school system without additional appropriations to cover it, but that is merely a sop to get the bill on the statute books. Once we inaugurate this system, we shall have to take care of it, and it will be argued that funds as now appropriated are not sufficient to handle the new department.

"Georgia already is dealing most generously with her schools—she is straining the limit to take care of them—and I am not complaining so much about that. But I do think it would be a sad mistake to add any further burdens to her budget—and certainly along the line of providing public education to tots from 4 to 6 years of age."

Senator M. C. Tarver has abandoned for the present his effort to get the Representatives and Senators of the various counties affected, interested in the proposed Chickamauga judicial circuit.

"The bill could not be passed at this session," said Mr. Tarver, "for several of the Representatives of the counties proposed for the new circuit are opposed to any change of the present arrangement. Others, while desiring a change, couldn't get together on an arrangement of counties that was mutually satisfactory."

Mr. Searcey's bill to make the buyer and the seller equally guilty in "blind tiger" cases, was killed in the Senate, upon the theory that it affords the "blind tiger" exactly the protection he desires, rather than retards him in the operation of his business.

"The one thing a 'blind tiger' dreads above all other things," said a Senator, discussing the bill, "is that among his numerous customers may be one who will tell.

"This bill removes that dread, for anybody who reported a 'tiger' under this measure would become a criminal himself. Besides, because of the law which excuses a man from incriminating himself in testifying, this man would become immediately incompetent as a witness.

"It is hard enough now to convict 'blind tigers', and it would be a thousand times harder under this law.

"Prohibitionists who seek to go the limits this bill proposes are to be commended for their zeal, perhaps, but surely not for their common sense. This bill is sound enough in theory, if you view it from a certain angle, but it falls to pieces as a practical measure and would defeat the very object its author had in mind when he framed it."

The Senate defeated the measure by a vote of 18 to 22, which was not such a wide margin of defeat, after all.

MAULS MAN FOR TALKING TO WIFE

W. M. Sexton, No. 18 Gaskill street, Monday morning remarked to Recorder Broyles that he had "cautioned this guy about talking to his wife," in explaining why he attacked W. L. Patterson, of No. 57 Powell street, Sunday night at the close of services in St. Luke's Methodist Church in Powell street.

Patterson told the court that Sexton is "insanely jealous."

Sexton, who is separated from his wife, attacked Patterson a short distance from the church after he had seen him talking to Mrs. Sexton inside of the church. Patterson said Mrs. Sexton called to him after the congregation had been dismissed, and that he meant no harm by conversing with her. He said Sexton lay in wait for him in a dark spot in Powell street and assailed him with metal knucks. Sexton denied this.

The two men were pummeling one another vigorously when interrupted by Detective Coker and Policeman Boggus, who were on their way home from the church service. Metal knucks were found on the ground. Patterson displayed an abrasion on his head, which he said was made by the knucks.

When Sexton told Judge Broyles he had warned his wife not to talk to other men, the Recorder informed him that as he was separated from his wife he had no right to beat up every person he saw talking to her."

The jealous husband was fined $25.75 and the case of Patterson was dismissed.

LISBON, July 28.—A delayed report filtered out of here to-day showing that an attempt to assassinate Premier Dr. Affonsa Costa was made Saturday. A man named Cunha Neves has been arrested. A strict censorship is being put on all messages.

Revolutionary activities are reported from many centers.

SEARCY'S LIQUOR BILL REVIVED IN SENATE

Resolution Providing for Its Reconsideration Adopted—Whitewashing of Soule Opposed.

The adoption of a resolution calling for the reconsideration of the Searcy prohibition bill, making the selling of liquor purchased from a "blind tiger" a misdemeanor, which was defeated in the Georgia Senate Friday, featured the session Monday. The bill probably will come up again this week under special order rule. A hot fight is expected.

Senators Foster and Hixon offered a resolution "whitewashing" the charges against President A. M. Soule, of the State Agricultural College. It sets forth that President Soule has rendered valuable service which should be recognized by the withdrawal of the charges now pending in the House. The resolution will be considered Tuesday.

That a bitter contest will take place when it is presented for adoption was indicated Monday by Senator McGregor, who declared he would fight the measure to the last ditch, on the grounds that it is a "complete 'whitewash' without any sort of investigation."

The most important new bill introduced in the Senate Monday was that by Senator McGregor, limiting the power of the Governor in calling out troops in case of disorder. The bill aims to take the State militia out of the so-called police jurisdiction, and requires affidavits by civil authorities before the Governor may call out troops.

Senator Tarver's bill providing for the appointment of a State commission to investigate conditions as regards drug users, with a view to establishing a State sanitarium for them, was passed by the Senate.

Senator Bush's bill making the State Superintendent of Education an ex-officio member of the eleven agricultural schools of the State was lost after President Randolph Anderson made a fight on the measure.

Senator McNeil's bill providing for a new Great Seal of State, changing the date 1799 to 1776, commemorating the Declaration of Independence, was sent back to the committee.

DR. STARNES BIDS ATLANTA GOODBYE

One-third of the seats in the Auditorium were filled Sunday afternoon for the farewell concert given by Dr. Percy Starnes and Mrs. Starnes.

A program in which Mozart's "Magic Flute" predominated, and which contained two compositions by the organist himself, was well received. The overture to Wagner's "Tannhauser," which was to have been the final number, was omitted because the organ got out of order. In its place, Dr. Starnes made a little speech of farewell. He said he would take away with him the pleasant recollection that his Atlanta audiences have been uniformly attentive and cordial.

Dr. Starnes' two compositions were "Improvisations Upon a Scotch Melody," the air being "Auld Lang Syne," and a song, "A Lake and a Fairy Boat," which Mrs. Starnes sang.

Clarence H. Mackay Sued for $2,000,000

NEW YORK, July 28.—That Clarence H. Mackay, to keep up the pace of a millionaire's son, borrowed heavily in Wall Street and failed to pay back after he had inherited $40,000,000 from the estate of his father, is charged in a suit brought by W. L. Stow, a broker, for an accounting of more than $2,000,000.

The plaintiff was at the head of the firm of W. L. Stow & Co., which failed for $6,000,000 some years ago. He charges that Mr. Mackay is directly responsible for that failure by failing to meet obligations contracted in a pool organized to buy and control stocks and bonds of the Mexican Central Railway.

Kings to Send Costly Gifts to Miss Wilson

WASHINGTON, July 28.—Despite President Wilson's attitude in discouraging the gift of Baltimore Democrats to his daughter, Jessie, at her wedding next November to Francis B. Sayre, kings and princes of foreign nations will flood the White House with costly gifts.

The marriage of a President's son or daughter is the only occasion on which foreign governments can get around the American constitution, which forbids the President accepting personal gifts from rulers of foreign nations.

The gifts from foreign potentates, naturally, cannot be discouraged.

Panama Has 'Noah;' Believers Build Ark

Special Cable to The Georgian.

PANAMA, July 28.—Word has been received from Penonome, a town in the interior of the republic, that Segundo Sanchez, a native, has proclaimed himself the Messiah and has issued a "prophecy" of the destruction of the world by a deluge in a short time.

Some of his 80 adherents are building an ark, while others are collecting pairs of animals of all species found in the region.

Gabrielle Ray Wins Suit Against Loder

LONDON, July 28.—Gabrielle Ray, the famous Gayety beauty, to-day won her suit against her husband, Eric Loder, for the restoration of her conjugal rights. Loder made no defense.

The actress and Loder, who is the son of the late Alfred Loder and grandson of the late Sir Robert Loder, were married March 1, 1912. The marriage was to have taken place the previous day, but Miss Ray kept Loder "waiting at the church."

Berlin Bars Organ Grinders; Must Toil

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

BERLIN, July 28.—The Berlin police have barred organ grinders, declaring that the majority of them are strong enough to work, and that there is too much good music to be heard to have one's nerves racked by hand-organs.

REMOVAL OF U. S. CONSUL ASKED BY TEXANS

American Envoy at Juarez Charged With Neglecting to Protect His Countrymen.

WASHINGTON, July 28.—The removal from office of Thomas Edwards, the American Consul at Juarez, Mex., was requested of the State Department to-day by Representative Smith, of Texas, who charges that Edwards has been negligent in relieving American refugees at Madera. Representative Smith acted on complaint of his constitutents in the El Paso district.

The Congressman also urged Secretary Bryan to stop the shipments of arms and ammunition from this country to the Huerta administration.

"I informed the Secretary of State," said Representative Smith, "that so long as we do not recognize the Huerta Government we should not favor it by allowing it to secure arms from this country. We deny that they have a constitutional government and yet they are allowed to get arms and ammunition. We ought to allow both factions to have war supplies or we ought to give the privilege to neither of them."

Smith says Bryan did not indicate what action would be taken regarding his complaints.

Smith received telegrams to-day from his constituents saying that 35 Americans are in peril at Madera among them a number of women and children.

U. S. to Hunt Down Dixon's Assailant.

WASHINGTON, July 28.—"Ambassador Wilson—2:30 o'clock."

This simple announcement, placed at the bottom of President Wilson's official list of callers to-day, was the only indication at the White House that the most momentous conference at the White House scheduled since President Roosevelt maneuvered the Russian-Japanese peace conclave was due to take place.

For the past 36 hours the President has had before him the lengthy report dictated by Ambassador Wilson detailing all the events of importance which have happened in Mexico from the time the Diaz regime first began to topple down to the attempted murder of Charles B. Dixon, the American immigration official, at Juarez on Saturday.

Bryan Studies Report.

Secretary Bryan, the first caller at the White House to-day, was closeted with the President for more than an hour, while he discussed the details of the Wilson report.

In discussing the Mexican situation with the newspaper cabinet to-day the President authorized the statement that nothing has happened within the past ten days to make matters better or worse.

The President further said that, as he has not yet conferred with Ambassador Wilson, he can not announce any future policy with respect to President Huerta or Mexico for the reason that he has not decided upon one.

Urges Bathing Skirts For 'Unshapely' Men

CHICAGO, July 28.—A legal fight was started to-day by Dr. Rosalie M. Ladova, who was arrested at a park bathing beach because she appeared in a Sunday afternoon crowd of swimmers in bloomers.

"Women can not swim well in skirts," said Dr. Ladova to-day. "Their figures are rounded so that they do not need as thorough covering as men. Men bathers go about almost naked. Their hideous figures should be covered from their necks to their toes. They should be compelled to wear the skirts."

MEN WELCOME MOTHER'S FRIEND

A Duty That Every Man Owes to Those Who Perpetuate the Race.

It is just as important that men should know of progressive methods in advance of motherhood. The suffering, pain and distress incident to child-bearing can be easily avoided by having at hand a bottle of Mother's Friend.

This is a wonderful penetrating, external application that relieves all tension upon the muscles and enables them to expand without the painful strain upon the ligaments. Thus there is avoided all those nervous spells; the tendency to nausea or morning sickness is counteracted, and a bright, sunny, happy disposition is preserved that reflects wonderfully upon the character and temperament of the little one soon to open its eyes in bewilderment at the joy of his arrival. You can obtain a bottle of "Mother's Friend" at any drug store at $1.00, and it will be the best dollar's worth you ever obtained. It preserves the mother's health, enables her to make a quick and complete recovery, and thus renewed strength she will eagerly devote herself to the care and attention which mean so much to the welfare of the child. Write to the Bradfield Regulator Co., 129 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga., for their valuable and instructive book of guidance for expectant mothers. Get a bottle of Mother's Friend to-day.

AMERICA WINS DAVIS TENNIS TROPHY

McLaughlin Brings Cup Back Home by Victory Over Dickson of England.

Special Cable to The Georgian.

WIMBLEDON, ENGLAND, July 28. The Davis trophy, the most sought-for cup in the tennis world, which has been away from the United States since 1903, will come back to America.

The United States team, after beating the Australians in the preliminary games in New York last June and working their way up to the challenge round by defeating the German and Canadian teams in England, today won the trophy for the United States by defeating the English defenders.

Maurice E. McLoughlin, the young Californian, brought victory to his country by defeating C. P. Dixon in three straight sets in the single match to-day. Although his service was faulty at the beginning of the match to-day, McLoughlin soon got into his stride.

He won the first set after a hard-fought set-to, the score being 8-6.

From then on the issue was never in doubt, the American proving himself the master of the Englishman at all stages of the second and third sets, winning the former 6-3 and the latter 6-2.

The match for the trophy began on Friday, when McLoughlin was defeated by J. C. Parke, the Irish champion. R. Norris Williams, of Philadelphia, evened up matters when he defeated Dixon in the other single match that day.

Saturday the Americans jumped into the foreground, when McLoughlin and Harold H. Hacket, the double team, defeated Dixon and H. Roper Barrett.

McLoughlin's play, which was a little off color on Friday, was much improved Saturday and to-day. His individual skill did much to bring the cup back to America.

In the semi-final game between Parks and Williams, the Englishman won after a hard match of five sets. The score: 6-2, 5-7, 5-7, 6-4, 6-2. This defeat did not have any bearing on the general result.

PONY RIVALS ARE HUSTLING IN 3 LAST DAYS

Standing Changes Fast—County Contestants Redouble Efforts. Shetlands To Be Exhibited.

Four yearly subscriptions, with Red Letter Ballots, counting in all 8,000 votes—were brought in by one contestant in The Georgian and American pony contest.

"Was it a rival in your district?" the contest manager asks the boys and girls. "You don't know. Very likely, it was. Nothing is more treacherous nowadays than over-confidence.

"Three days remain, after to-day. The strain soon will be over. There is not a boy or girl in the race who can not well afford to put every effort into the work for this brief, final spurt."

Some May Be Disappointed.

When the contestants come into the office, the contest manager gets an excellent line on their ideas. Sometimes they are amusing. There are several boys and girls who were leading a week ago by good margins. Strangely enough, in spite of repeated warnings, these youngsters will not believe that they are behind now. This is the attitude which will bring bitter disappointment when the final standings are published next Sunday, and the winners announced.

One feature of the contest upon which little stress has been put is the fact that the boy or girl who gets the greatest total of votes has first choice of all twenty-two ponies, and so on down the list. For the ambitious lad it is not enough to win in his district. He wants also to get one of the first selections from the herd of twenty-two Shetlands.

No Apathy in Country.

True, it may happen that the very last pony may suit the very last contestant to perfection. But, again, the chances are it will not.

There is no apathy in the country districts. The work done by the contestants outside of Atlanta is remarkable.

The ponies were to have been paraded Sunday, but the weather was not propitious. If the weather does not again interfere, the ponies will be shown in the business section of Atlanta Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock.

VICTIM OF NEGRO REGRETS HANGING

Wounded Dunbar Merchant Not in Sympathy With Houston County Mob's Action.

MACON, July 28.—When G. F. Hammock, a merchant of Dunbar, was told at a private hospital here to-day that John Shake, the negro who shot him Saturday night, had been lynched by a Houston County mob, he said:

"I am sorry the boys did that. Shake was a bad negro, all right, but it wasn't right to hang him."

Hammock is not seriously injured, though weak from loss of blood. He expects to return to his home this week.

Hammock detected the negro burglarizing his store about midnight. When he called on Shake to surrender, the negro fired a shotgun. The shot fractured Hammock's left wrist and also caused a painful wound in the chest.

The negro escaped and took refuge in the swamps below Wellston. A mob caught him late Sunday afternoon. After confessing that he did the shooting, the negro was hanged to a tree on the outskirts of Dunbar.

AUGUSTA BILL'S AUTHORS LOSE FIRST CLASH

Commission Government Act Denied to Friendly Committee. Lipscomb Act Up Tuesday

A fight for the reference of the bill giving Augusta the commission form of government, by members of the Richmond County delegation, featured Monday's session of the House, Judge Picquett winning in his efforts to have it referred to the Committee on Municipal Government, of which he is chairman.

The authors of the bill, Olive and Garlington, sought to have the bill referred to the General Judiciary Committee No. 1, of which both are members.

The Lipscomb taxation bill was set as a continuing order beginning Tuesday. This provides a tax of $50 on lobbyists; doubles the occupation tax of corporations; increases the tax on bottling plants; places an annual tax of $5 on automobiles; levies an inheritance tax and various other taxes to increase the revenue of 1915.

It is expected that this bill will occupy the House for several days. If it passes within this time limit it will be a record time for Georgia lawmakers to dispose of so important a matter.

Senator Kelley, of the Eighteenth District, introduced a bill in the Senate last Friday covering the same matter. This has not as yet been acted upon.

Considerable discussion resulted when the optometrist bill, providing for a board to examine opticians in Georgia before they be allowed to practice, was read. This bill previously had been adversely reported. Its author, Wallace Miller, of Bibb, urged that the bill be considered seriously.

Blacks Avenge Death Of One of Their Race

Before Beals was captured by deputies he wounded two negroes.

Rich Man a Negro; Death Bares Secret

CHICAGO, July 28.—William Henry Lee, wealthy publisher whose $200,000 estate will be taken by the State of Illinois because there were no relatives to claim it, was a negro. For nearly 50 years he kept the secret.

The secret of his being of negro blood was admitted by Fred C. Laird, for ten years his partner. Lee never married, Mr. Laird said, because he feared that in his children the secret of his negro ancestry might be revealed.

Appendix All Alone In London, Said Jack

SAN FRANCISCO, July 28.—Here's the latest joke Jack London, the famous author, is telling on himself:

London was operated on recently for appendicitis. After the ordeal the surgeon held up the severed appendix in his fingers for the patient to see. The author looked at it thoughtfully, then grinned and said:

"It was a case of all alone in London, wasn't it, doc?"

sane man will contend that the Augusta disturbance justified its enforcement. If in foreign invasion or civil war the courts are actually closed and it is impossible to administer criminal justice according to law, then, in the theater of active military operations, where war really prevails, there is a necessity to furnish a substitute for the civil authority, and as no power is left but the military, it is allowed to govern by martial rule until the laws can have their free course.

Constitution Paramount.

Martial rule is employed when force may expel the civil authorities from a part of the State, or when the civil law is unable to perform its functions, the military being on the spot to execute it where no civil authority exists. When it does exist the Constitution is imperative that it shall be paramount to the military.

The power of arrest in this case would have secured the alleged disturbers and law-breakers until the State was prepared for their trial and the courts were ready to try them.

The men responsible for this atrocity were tried by a court-martial and acquitted, but as the military was without jurisdiction, the conclusion reached is not binding upon the State.

Courts-martial may try offenses committed in violation of the military law, as above defined, but acts done in the caprice of tyranny under martial rule make the military commander and his subordinates accountable to the law of the land, both by prosecution in the criminal courts and by civil action at the instance of the parties aggrieved.

TRIES TO SHOOT HIS WIFE; KILLS AN OFFICER

Reward Offered for Clem Poole, Slayer of Dalton Policeman. Posse Loses Trail.

DALTON, July 28.—At an early hour this morning the posse organized to hunt down Clem Poole, who near midnight shot and killed Policeman Harry Cook while the officer was attempting to arrest him, disbanded, the search being fruitless.

Poole last night shot twice at his wife as he followed her to the home of her parents on First avenue. There Policeman Cook met him. As the officer advanced, Poole fired, the bullet piercing the policeman's heart and bringing instant death. Henry Mitchell, accompanying the officer, grabbed the weapon from Poole, but he escaped. Bloodhounds trailed the fugitive for a time and then lost the scent.

The murder has greatly aroused Dalton, for Policeman Cook was a popular member of the force. He is survived by his wife. A reward of $100 has been offered by the city for Poole's capture.

It is not believed that the Chalmette is in serious danger. Word received at the company's office in this city said that the captain and crew were safe.

One of the Greatest Mystery Stories Ever Written

By ANNA KATHARINE GREEN

It is Dr. Cameron's Wedding Day. At 8 o'Clock He Is to Marry Genevieve Gretorex, a Beautiful Society Girl. At 4 o'Clock He Is Informed His Fiancee Has Disappeared.

MRS. GRETOREX TELLS THE DETECTIVE OF HER DAUGHTER'S DISAPPEARANCE

"It is this note that causes our dilemma," said Mrs. Gretorex.

Scotland Yard Detectives at Once Begin a Search for the Missing Young Woman. Dr. Cameron Is Terribly Shocked by the Disappearance of the Lovely Genevieve.

Opening Installment

(Copyright, 1913, by Anna Katharine Green.)

An Unexpected Visitor.

IT was Dr. Cameron's wedding day. At 8 o'clock in the evening the ceremony of marriage between himself and Genevieve Gretorex was to be performed at the house of the bride's parents in St. Nicholas Place. It was now 4 o'clock.

Seated in his office, Dr. Cameron, who, for a young man, enjoyed a most enviable reputation as a physician, mused over his past and built castles for the future; for his bride was the daughter of one of the richest and most influential citizens of New York, and to such ambition as his this fact, implying, as it did, valuable connections in the present and a large and unincumbered fortune in the future, was one that lent luster to her beauty and attraction to their union. Not but what he loved her—or thought he did—would have loved her under any circumstances. Was she not handsome, and in that reserved and somewhat haughty way he especially admired? Had she not fine manners and would she not add increased honor to a name already well known, and, as he might add, respected?

Had Her Caprices.

To be sure, she had her caprices, as a woman so circumstanced had a right to have, and she esteemed rather than adored him, as many little events in their short courtship only too plainly betrayed. But then he would not have admired a gushing bride, and, being what he was, a man of taste and the son of a man of taste, he found a certain satisfaction in the calm propriety of a match that united equal interests, without jeopardizing that calmness of mind necessary to the successful practice of his exacting profession.

There was but one thing troubled him. Why had she refused to see him for the last seven days? She was not a woman of petty instincts. Indeed, he had sometimes suspected her of possessing latent energies which the round of a fashionable life had never called forth; and in her cool and somewhat languid gaze he had caught glimpses now and then of a spirit that only needed light and air to expand into something like greatness.

Why, then, this strange desire for seclusion at a time when a woman is usually supposed to desire the support of her lover's society? Had he displeased her? Not only had his presents been rich, they had been rare and of an order to gratify her refined taste. Was she ill? He was her physician as well as lover, and he had not been notified of any indisposition.

Besides the last time he had been so fortunate as to be received into her presence she had seemed well and looked blooming; more so, indeed, than he had seen her for some time, and, though somewhat nervous in manner, had exhibited an interest in his attentions which he had not always observed in her. It was not a long interview, but he remembered it well; saw again the almost timid look with which she greeted him, followed by the smile that was nearly a shock to him—it was so much warmer and brighter than usual. Then the few hurried words—for even that night she would not see him long—and the sudden coyness of her attitude as he took her hand in parting!—he recollected it all. He had not thought of it at the time, but now it seemed to him that there had been something strange in her whole bearing, an impalpable change from her former self that he could not analyze, but which had, nevertheless, left its impression upon him. The kiss he had received, for instance, had moved him. There had been warmth in it and her lips had almost returned the pressure of his own.

Was She Ill?

This was new in the history of their courtship and would have argued, perhaps, that she was beginning to recognize his appreciation of her if her after conduct had not given the lie to any such surmise. As it was, it rather seemed to show that she had been in an unnatural condition—suggestive of incipient fever, perhaps. She was ill; and they were trying to keep it from him! The butler's excuses, "Miss Gretorex is very much engaged, sir; Mrs. Gretorex's regrets, sir, but Miss Gretorex has gone out on important business," were but polite subterfuges to blind his eyes to the real truth. And yet to his calmer judgment how untenable was even this supposition. Had she been sick he could not have failed to have heard of it from some quarter. No, she was not sick. She was but indulging in a freak easily to be explained, perhaps, by her mother's over-exciting code of etiquette; and, as in a few hours, she was to be his wife and life-long companion, he would cease to think of it, and only remember that kiss.

He had reached this point in his musings when they were suddenly interrupted. A tap was heard on his office door.

With some irritation he arose. It was not time for his carriage and he had expressly ordered that no visitors or patients were to be received. Who could it be, then? A messenger from Miss Gretorex? He sprang to the door at the thought. But before he could touch the knob, the door opened, and to his surprise and possible relief there entered an unknown man of middle age and prepossessing appearance, whose errand seemed to be one of importance, though his manner was quiet and his voice startlingly gentle.

A Visitor.

"I hope I am not intruding," said he. "The boy below told me this was your wedding day, but he also told me that the ceremony was not to take place till 8 o'clock this evening, and as my business is peculiar and demands instant attention I ventured to come up."

"That is right," answered Dr. Cameron, feeling an unaccountable attraction toward the man, though he was not what you would perhaps call a gentleman, and had, as the doctor could not but notice even at this early stage of their acquaintance, a way of not meeting your eye when he spoke that was to say the least, lacking in ingenuousness. "Is it as a patient you come to me?"

"No," rejoined the stranger, fixing his glance on the white necktie and one or two other insignificant articles which lay on the table near by, with an air strangely like that of compassion. "My business is with you as a doctor—that is, partly—but I am not the patient. I almost wish I were," he added, in a troubled tone that awakened the other's interest notwithstanding the natural preoccupation of his thoughts.

"Let me hear," returned Dr. Cameron.

"You make my task easy," the stranger remarked. "And yet," he went on in a curter and more business-like tone, "you may be less willing to listen when I tell you that I have first a story to relate which, while not uninteresting in itself, is so out of accord with your present mood that I doubt if you will be able to sit through it with patience. Yet it is necessary for me to relate it and necessary for you to hear it, now, here, and without any interruption."

This was alarming; especially as the speaker did not seem like a man given to sentimentalities or even to exaggeration. On the contrary he gave the impression of a person accustomed to weigh his words with studious care, not allowing a sentence to escape him without a decided motive.

"Will you tell me your name?" requested Dr. Cameron.

The reply came quietly.

"I doubt if you will know it, and I had rather you had not asked it. But since it is important above all things that you should trust me, I will say that it is Gryce, Ebenezer Gryce, and add that I am a member of the police force; in short, a detective."

Dr. Cameron felt his apprehensions vanish. Whatever the other's errand, it could not be one that touched him or his; and this to a man on his wedding day was certainly a comforting thought.

"You undervalue your fame," he replied. "I know your name well. Can it be possible you desire my assistance in a professional way?"

The detective's gaze, which had been resting gloomily upon a laughing cherub on the mantelpiece, shifted, but he did not respond to the doctor's smile, and his manner remained unaltered.

"I will tell my story," said he. "It will be the quickest way to come to an understanding."

And without further pause or preliminary, he began in the following words:

The Dilemma.

"I am getting to be an old man, and I have my infirmities. But there are still cases which are given to no one but me. Among them are those which involve the honor of persons in a high station of life."

Mr. Gryce paused. Dr. Cameron felt his apprehensions return.

"You see," the detective slowly resumed. "I can keep a secret; that is, when the life and property of others are not endangered by my silence. I can do a detective's work and keep a detective's counsel, only speaking when and where necessity requires."

He paused again. Dr. Cameron moved uneasily.

"As in this case," added the other, gravely.

"This case?" repeated the doctor, now thoroughly alarmed. "What case? You excite me; tell me what you have to say, at once!"

But the detective was not to be hurried.

"I was, therefore, not at all surprised," he proceeded, as if no interruption had occurred, "when some three days ago I was requested to call upon—Mrs. A., let us say—on business of a strictly confidential character. Such summonses come frequently. Such a summons does not disturb an officer in the least. I nevertheless made haste to show myself at Mrs. A.'s house, for Mrs. A., whom you perhaps know is a woman of some consequence, and her husband is a man of widespread reputation and influence. I found her at home, anxiously awaiting my appearance. As soon as she saw me she told me her trouble: 'Mr. Gryce,' said she, 'I am in a great dilemma. Something has occurred in my family which may or may not lead to a lasting dishonor. What I wish from you is aid to determine whether our fears are well grounded. If they are not, you will forget that you were ever called to this house.' I bowed. I was already interested, for I saw that her anxiety was great, while I could not help being puzzled over its cause, for she had no son to disgrace her by his dissipations, and as for her husband, he was above reproach. She soon relieved my curiosity.

"'Mr. Gryce,' said she, 'I have a daughter.'

"'Yes,' I returned, inwardly startled. Miss A. and dishonor seemed so wide apart.

"Our Only Child."

"'She is our only child,' the mother went on. 'We love her, and have always cherished her, but though it is not generally known in this house'—and here the poor lady's eyes roamed about her as if she were afraid that her words would be overheard, 'she has left us; gone away without acquainting us where—suddenly, inexplicably, leaving only the most meager explanation behind her, and—and—'

"'But, madam,' I interrupted, 'if she left any explanation—'

"Mrs. A. took a small and crumpled note out of her pocket and handed it to me.

"'A letter,' she affirmed, 'sent through the mail. And I was in the house when she left, and would have listened to any reasonable request she had to make.'

"I had already read the four or five lines which the letter contained:

"'Dear Mother: I must have rest. I have gone away for a few days, but shall be back on the 27th. Don't worry.

"'Your affectionate ——.'

"'What is the matter with this?' I asked. 'She says she will be back on the 27th, and to-day is only the 24th.'

"'Sir,' was the answer, 'it is the only time in our experience when our daughter has left us without first gaining our permission. Besides, the time is especially inopportune. My daughter's wedding cards are out.'"

Mr. Gryce stopped suddenly, for Dr. Cameron had given an anxious start.

"Ah, that arouses your interest!" remarked the detective. "Your own wedding being so near, I am not surprised."

It was dryly said, and the doctor at once reseated himself. He had no wish to appear unduly moved, but he could not suppress every token of emotion, so he turned his head away from the light. Mr. Gryce let his gaze travel to a new object before proceeding.

Only One Conclusion.

"This avowal of Mrs. A. put a new aspect on affairs," said he, "but yet I saw no reason for the extreme anxiety displayed. 'And on what day does she expect to be married?' I asked.

"'On the 27th.'

"'But she says she will be back.'

"'That does not comfort me.'

"'You think she will not come.'

"'I have no hope that she will.'

"This acknowledgment was uttered with emphasis. There seemed to be but one conclusion to draw.

"'Your daughter wishes to escape her engagement?'

"The answer was less emphatic than before. In fact, it expressed doubt.

"'I do not know, sir; my daughter is not herself, has not been for some time. My husband and myself have both noticed it; but we never anticipated her taking any such extreme action as this. Where has she gone? What will become of her? How can we face the world? How can we tell her lover?'

"'Then you think——'

"'That she is laboring under a temporary aberration of mind, caused, perhaps, by the excitement of the last few weeks; that she is not responsible for her acts; that she may be anywhere, remote or near; and that we may wait till the hour set for her marriage is past without seeing her.'

"To this I could make but one reply: 'Then why not take her lover into your confidence, inform him of your fears, and gain the benefit of his experience in your search for her?'

A MOTHER'S FEARS.

"The answer will astonish you.

"'Because we are very proud and he is very proud. To explain our fears we should be obliged to say much that it would be humiliating for us to utter and for him to hear. Besides, we may overrate the situation. She may come back; as she says she will and, should this be the case, you can see for yourself what endless regret would follow any such confidences as you suggest.'

"'But'—I began.

"'It is this note that causes our dilemma,' she interposed. 'With these lines before me I can not act as if there were no hope of her returning in proper time to take her part in the ceremony. Yet I do not trust these lines, nor the promise she has made. Why, I can hardly say; for she has always been a woman of her word. But she is not herself, of that I am convinced.'

"This repetition of her former assertion made it easy for me to inquire what special change she had perceived in her daughter to lead to such a conclusion. She evidently found it difficult to reply.

"'I can not put it into words,' she declared. 'I feel the change.'

"'And how long have you felt it?'

"'Not long; since we began active preparations for her wedding, I think.'

"'And has no one else observed it?'

"'I can not say. I should think her lover would.'

"Why?'

"'Because it has been in reference to him she has shown her peculiarities strongest. For weeks she has received him only on sufferance and for the last few days has more than once absolutely refused to see him.'

"And what reason did she assign for this?'

Prepared for Wedding.

"'Follies. Fatigue, caprice, a letter to write, a dressmaker to see—anything that came into her head.'

"'Yet she went on preparing for her wedding?'

"'Certainly; her cards were out.'

"The tone in which this was said caused me to reflect. Though affable, kindly and even philanthropic in her dealings toward the world at large, Mrs. A. is, as every one knows, a woman who would find it very difficult to infringe upon any of the laws of society. Having seen her daughter pledge herself to a man of suitable pretensions, she would consider such a pledge final if only because she could not face the talk and scandal that would follow a rupture. Influenced by his idea, I remarked:

"'You must be perfectly frank with me if you want me to help you at this crisis. Has your daughter, or has she not, expressed a wish to break her engagement?'

"'She asked me once if I thought it too late for her to do so. Of course there was but one reply to this, and she said no more. But,' the poor mother continued hastily, 'that was only a symptom of flightiness. She has nothing against her lover, does not pretend to have.'

"'Only against marriage?'

"'Only against marriage.'

"'Mrs. A.,' I now boldly asked, 'do you think she loves the man you expect her to marry?'

"The answer came hesitatingly. 'She accepted his attentions with pleasure when they were first offered.'

"'Do you think she loves any other man?'

The mother shrank back in dismay. "I am sure she does not. How could she? There is not another such gentleman in our circle of acquaintance."

"This was flattering to the gentleman, but not exactly satisfactory to me.

"'You know girls sometimes take strange whims.'

"'My daughter is not a girl, she is a woman.'

"This silenced me as it would you, sir, I have no doubt; and seeing the mother was really sincere in believing that her daughter's mind was temporarily affected, I inquired again as to what she had done or failed to do of late, and found that she had shunned the society of the members of her family as well as that of her lover, finding her sole interest seemingly in the preparation of her wardrobe. "To that she did attend,' said Mrs. A., 'and it was the only thing she did help me in. No hour was too late for her to see her dressmaker; no engagement too pressing for her to receive and fit on any of the new costumes that kept coming home. Indeed she showed more than a bride's usual interest in such matters; and it is the one reason I have for not disputing you utterly when you say she may come back. She will want to see her dresses.'

A Clew.

"'Then she did not take them with her?'

"'She took nothing.'

"'What! not a trunk?'

"'Nothing; that is, nothing but a little hand satchel.'

"'How do you know this?'

"'We all saw her go out; she was in shopping costume.'

"'But she had money?'

"'I can not say. Some, no doubt; but we found a large roll of bills in her drawer, and her father says it contains nearly all he had lately given her. I do not think her pocketbook held more than five dollars.'

"'This was a point. Either the girl was going amongst friends, or she was really touched in her mind. To make sure that the first supposition was not true, I asked for a list of the houses which Miss A. was in the habit of visiting. Mrs. A. mentioned some half-dozen, but added that her daughter's most intimate companion was in Europe and that she did not think she cared enough for the others to go to them at this time.

"'And she positively carried no baggage with her?'

"'None. I have looked her things over carefully and find nothing missing. She did not even wear her diamonds.'

"'And her watch?'

"'Is left behind.'

THEIR MARRIED LIFE

Helen's First Day in the Paris Shops Results in Very Few Purcheses

By MABEL HERBERT URNER.

IT was the morning of their third day in Paris that Helen started out to shop. She had read and heard so much of the big Parisian bazaars that she was athrill with eager expectation.

"Better take in the Galeries Lafayette first," suggested Warren as they left the hotel together. "You can take a bus from there for the Bon Marche."

"Dear, wouldn't you have time to go by the Lafayette with me—it's only half past 9," pleaded Helen, who dreaded starting out alone.

"All right," good naturedly, "that's not much out of my way. Hurry up—let's get this bus."

It was going to be another hot day. There was still no relief from the heat wave that had settled over Paris since their arrival. But as Helen climbed gleefully to the top of the bus, the thought of the day in the Paris shops made her unmindful of the heat.

"There you are!" Warren pointed out a huge building just ahead. From the top fluttered white banners and flags lettered gayly in red, "Galeries Lafayette." It looked more like a great exposition building than a store.

But when they left the bus, Helen was astonished to find that all along the sidewalk in front of the store were stalls, piled high with the cheapest kind of merchandise.

She Is Lonely.

There were tables of crockery, kitchenware, cotton dresses and waists, and around each was a chattering crowd of Frenchwomen pulling over the goods. Large cardboard signs—"50 centimes," "1 franc," "2 francs"—were everywhere.

"Why, dear, would you think they'd allow these push-cart peddlers outside a reputable store? Why, it's like a cheap market place!"

"They're not push-cart peddlers," laughed Warren. "This is all part of the Galeries Lafayette—that's how they sell their cheap goods. Our stores have bargain basements—here they have stalls outside the shop. Now I've got to leave you. Don't overdo it and get too tired. Better not be on your feet too much this hot day."

Helen's interest in the scene about her soon banished the momentary feeling of loneliness as Warren disappeared in the crowd. For some time she stood on the sidewalk watching the stalls and the chattering, pushing crowd about them. Warren was right. Unquestionably this was part of the store, for bareheaded French floor-walkers, with frock coats and twisted mustaches, walked up and down the sidewalk.

Although Helen had often heard that the Galeries Lafayette was one of the best Paris shops, this street sale of goods made her most skeptical. But when she entered, she saw that it was really a very beautiful store. In the center was a great rotunda under a crystal dome. An imposing marble staircase with double escalators led to the upper galleries.

Everywhere was a lavish and seemingly haphazard display of goods. It was all very different from a New York shop. There seemed no aisles, only a vast labyrinth of tables piled with goods in chaotic disorder—the most tawdry heaped carelessly with the most expensive. The confusing display of the great quantities of merchandise, the riot of color, the crowd, the uproar and tumult were to Helen most bewildering.

Hoping that the upper galleries would be less crowded and tumultuous, Helen made her way to the long line of elevators. Glancing over the directory of the floors, she located "Lingerie" and "Trousseaux."

French lingerie is a luxury coveted by every American woman, and as Helen stepped from the elevator at the third gallery into what seemed a great exhibition of white goods, her heart beat with expectation.

On every side was a network of tables and counters heaped with white garments—chemisettes, jupons and robes de nuites. Over the tables were cards with "Occasion" or "Grand Occasion," the French phrase for bargains.

Almost everything was hand embroidered and mostly unlaundered, the blue penciled tracing of the patterns being still distinct.

Helen was surprised to find that while even the cheapest garment, those as low as six or seven francs, were embroidered by hand, the garment itself was made by machinery, the seams carelessly stitched, and the buttons half off. She thought of the poor women in the convents where most of this work is done. How poorly paid they must be to embroider such inferior goods!

She looked first for some dainty, low-necked night dresses with short butterfly sleeves, but she saw only ungainly garments with high necks and long sleeves. Was this the much-lauded lingerie?

At last, in some glass cases, where the most expensive models were displayed, she found some exquisite low-neck short-sleeved gowns.

"How much? Quel prix?" Helen demanded of a passing clerk, pointing to a garment in the case.

The girl opened the case and looked at the ticket. Helen could not understand her, but, stooping over, she read the ticket herself—90 francs. Eighteen dollars!

Helen tried to make her understand with a few words of French, much English and many gestures that she wanted to see some gowns of that cut, but much less expensive. The girl touched a loud gong, which was a signal for an English-speaking clerk, and one promptly appeared.

"Almost all of our low-neck and short-sleeved gowns are in the expensive models," the clerk explained. "But of course we have some for less than 90 francs. Now here is quite a pretty gown for 35 francs."

Seven dollars! Except for her trousseau, Helen had never paid $7 for a nightgown in her life. And she had no intention of paying it in Paris, where she had expected to get things ridiculously cheap.

Only One Purchase.

"Well, I'll let the nightgowns go for the present, but I'd like to see some combinations and skirts."

"About what price does madam wish to pay?" asked the clerk, with lessening cordiality, for she expected Americans not to object to prices.

"About three or four dollars—fifteen or twenty francs."

"They're all out on the tables, madam. We keep only the more expensive ones in this department."

"But I could never button these," exclaimed Helen, viewing with disfavor the combinations, which all opened in the back. "And they're all too large—I want 34."

"You won't find bust measures in Paris like you have in America, madam. We have only three sizes here. You see, they're marked with tickets—the green ticket is small, the pink ticket medium and the yellow ticket large."

Helen expressed her astonishment that in Paris, where fit and style were supposed to be perfected, they should have only three sizes instead of the eight—from 32 to 46—that are carried by every American store!

The intention to buy enough lingerie while in Paris to last her for the next two years was somewhat shaken. And she finally left the department, having made just one purchase—a white skirt with a hand-embroidered flounce. Even this she could not get the right length. It would have to be shortened when she got it home.

From the lingerie, Helen walked down the broad marble staircase to the gallery below. Just at the foot of the stairs were a dozen or more tables overburdened with parasols. She had never seen so many parasols together in her life. Most of them were brilliant in coloring and design, vivid reds, bright greens and startling blues.

Farther on was a gorgeous display of scarfs—the long chiffon scarfs that the French women wear with their evening gowns. They lay in careless glittering heaps, shimmering with gold and silver spangles and iridescent beadings.

Helen had thought the hues and fabrics in the shops at home particularly loud this year, but they were mild and subdued compared with the riotous coloring of everything here.

In spite of the whirring electric fans the heat was excesive, and before Helen had explored half the departments of the Galeries Lafayette she was exhausted.

Although she had spent most of the day there, her purchases were trivial, but she had a fair idea of what a big Paris shop was like.

It was good to get back to their rooms, to have time to bathe, rest and dress before Warren came.

"Well, how did you get along?" was his greeting when he got in a little after 6. "Buy out all the Paris shops?"

"Not quite. I left a few things in the Galeries Lafayette! That was the only place I went."

"How did you find things? Cheaper than at home?"

"Some things are. But, dear, the styles and colorings are so extreme. Do you know," thoughtfully, "I really believe I can find the things I want better in New York."

"Course you can! Nothing's more overrated than the French styles. They are made for French women—not for Americans. And nine-tenths of the Americans who come over here and buy a lot of truck are blamed sick of their bargains when they get 'em home."

THE GEORGIAN'S MAGAZINE PAGE

The Finger of Death

A SPY has to take many risks, and if he is caught at the game during war time his career as a rule is then and there closed promptly, and in most cases in ignominious fashion.

It was the money aspect of the business which appealed to Morris Tyler, and induced him to engage in the work. He was a born spy. A good linguist, and cunning beyond belief, he was never one to assay a dangerous task for the sheer excitement of it. He did not like taking risks, though, of course, he had to take them occasionally; but always at these junctures he kept in mind the big pay and extras. It needed these to tune him up to concert pitch.

He was always cautious and successful. Having found it advisable to quit Europe for a time, he made his way to the South American Republic of Caldera which, at the date of his arrival, was just in the throes of one of its periodical revolutions.

He offered his services to the Government party at a rate of pay somewhat in excess of what he had been receiving in Europe, and President Blance having heard of him, and finding that he could speak Spanish fluently, engaged him at once.

But in Caldera, Morris Tyler had to work under new and unfamiliar conditions. Hitherto, his spying had been carried on during times of peace. There had been no war in Europe since he had come to the front. Now he found himself in the thick of fighting of a savage character. When the insurgents took any prisoners, they gave them the option of changing sides or being shot. But when the Government troops captured any rebels, they did not permit them any choice. They were placed in a row with their backs against a wall and promptly finished off by a firing party. By the time he had been three weeks at the "great game" as played in this explosive South American State, Morris Tyler was inclined to regret that he had not remained a passive spectator of the revolution, instead of taking part in it. However, he fortified his courage with the thought of the pile of dollars he would add to his banking account when the fighting was over and the rebels beaten. He had seen enough to feel pretty certain they had no real chance of winning. And so far he had not encountered any special danger; his cunning always enabled him to evade it.

No Avail.

But the day came when he discovered that cunning was of no avail, and that courage would have been a far more desirable possession.

He had been sent for by Colonel Voruba, the chief of the Intelligence Department, to whom he usually made his reports.

"Some rare work for you, Senor Tyler," observed the Colonel cheerfully, "and it may be the last service we shall require you to perform, for the revolution must end soon. Still, much will depend on the informtaion you are able to obtain for us."

Morris Tyler nodded, and waited for his chief to go on.

"The rebels are massed in some force on the Hill of San Stefano," pursued the Colonel, "where it seems they are going to make a last desperate stand. They hold the old fort up there. That much we know. But we do not know the number of their guns, nor how they are placed. It is important that we have this information before we storm the position, and we look to you to obtain it for us."

"Can you give me any further particulars, Colonel?"

"There are no further particulars to give you," replied Colonel Voruba. "You know the road. The rest lies with you. I am instructed, however, to inform you that if you succeed in bringing us correct information, you will receive five hundred dollars over and above your pay. You must start at once."

By a curious freak of fate, there arrived at the headquarters of the Calderan army, twenty-four hours, later, a deserter from the rebel ranks, who was able to furnish the exact information which Colonel Voruba required.

Thereupon, an order was given for an immediate advance. This movement taking place so much sooner than was expected, would very likely put Morris Tyler in an extremely tight corner. But the life of one man was of small moment when so much was at stake. And a spy! Well, no one bothered much about a spy when he was not required. In the meantime, Tyler had contrived to get to the top of the Hill of San Stefano without being observed by the enemy's outposts or sentries.

He was, indeed, well within the circles of outposts when he reached an abandoned building, which at one time had been the boiler house of a sugar plantation. It seemed a safe hiding place, from the security of which he could observe what was going on in the rebels' camp without himself being seen. He crept inside and laid flat down upon the floor. About half a mile away he could see the camp fires glowing in the darkness, and nearer still the squat shape of the fort showing black against the night sky. Picturesque insurgents were passing to and fro, and a few were seated by the fires playing cards.

No Sleep.

After a time the camp became silent, even the card players giving up their games and stretching themselves out on the ground to sleep. Only sentries remained on the alert, but between him and the fort there were three. By no possibility could he get past them unseen, for it was open ground.

The night wore on. He was tired, but he dared not sleep. If he could only snatch a few minutes—just to rest his eyes——

He awoke with a start, and was about to spring to his feet when a harsh voice commanded him to remain still. At the other side of the chamber he saw an armed man—one of the rebels—standing with his rifle at the "ready."

"So! A spy!" exclaimed the man. "Bueno! It will be promotion for me for having discovered you. Don't move!" The rifle was raised threateningly. "If you so much as move a hand or a foot I will put a bullet through your brain. Yet I do not wish to waste ammunition. A rope is good enough for such as you."

He spat on the floor to typify his contempt for all spies. Then he called to the nearest sentry, telling him of his "find," and asking him to bring a rope. But the words had barely left his lips when there was a terrific crash overhead, a blinding flash of flame, the splitting of wood and the rattle of falling masonry.

A twelve-pound shell from a field gun had struck the building and reduced it to a ruin. It was the first shot fired by the Government artillery in their attack on the hill of San Stafano. The rebels were taken by surprise, became panic-stricken, and instead of shaping up to defend the position began a hasty retreat.

Moris Tyler was not immediately concerned with the running fight between the loyal troops and the rebels, for the sounds of strife drifted farther away each minute from the ruined boiler house. No other shot or shell came near it. But he was much concerned about himself. He could not move. He was pinned down by some timber from the fallen roof, and all around him was a wreck of shattered walls, broken planks and beams and debris which bore no likeness to anything in particular.

Fear!

"Luck's with me, after all," he murmured. "I am not hurt, and this beam is not too heavy for me to lift. I can raise it up and crawl."

He paused with a sort of gasp, for his eyes, roving around the place, had rested on a gleaming rifle barrel. It was pointed straight at his head, and there was a man's forefinger resting on the trigger. The man was the rebel who had captured him. He was lying on his face amidst the wreckage, and there was blood streaming from a terrible wound at the side of his head. A splinter of the bursting shell had killed him.

The spy gave a sigh of relief. For a moment he had thought that the man was alive, and was taking aim at him. But his relief was of short duration. He did not like that rifle pointing so steadily at him, even though it was only held in a dead man's hand; and when he saw that the lower end of the beam which was lying across his own body rested against the man's right forearm, he liked it still less. He could not move the beam upwards; he could only move it downwards or sideways. If he shifted it ever so little, it was bound to press more heavily on the dead rebel's arm, and that would cause his stiffened finger to press on the trigger, which would fire the rifle. The bullet would enter his—Tyler's—brain, because his head was so wedged that he could not move it to one side or the other. He could raise it a little, but that would be of no advantage. The bullet would take him then somewhere about the mouth and pass upwards through the base of his skull.

He shook with fear, like a man with the ague, and the sweat streamed down his face.

It was borne in upon the spy's mind that he might lie there until he died of starvation. There was the alternative of pushing the beam a little more, so that the dead man's finger should press harder on the trigger and thus end his misery with a bullet from the menacing rifle.

Then all at once something in his brain seemed to snap. A red curtain dropped before his eyes. The noise of a rushing wind howled in his ears—and then came black oblivion.

Early the next morning two mounted men reined up close by the ruined boiler house. They were Colonel Voruba and an orderly. The fight was over, and the rebels were beaten.

"Two men in there," said the Colonel, "They may have some life in them."

The orderly dismounted and peered in among the wreckage.

"One is a rebel," he reported. "The other is Senor Tyler. Both dead."

The Answer.

"The spy!" exclaimed the Colonel.

"It is strange," said Voruba, bending over Tyler's body, "there is not a mark upon him. He has received no wound, no hurt. He could easily have lifted this beam and extricated himself."

"Look at the expression on his face even now," replied the orderly. "It was sheer terror that killed him. I have heard of such a thing. Perhaps he had a weak heart."

"Terror!" Voruba raised his eyebrows. "Ah, yes, I perceive. The loaded rifle pointing at his head, which, at the slightest movement on his part would——"

Captain Berwick interrupted him. He had picked the rifle up and opened the breech.

"He was in no danger at any time from this weapon," he said. "It is not loaded!"

Did the Vicar Stop?

It was too much. Every Sunday old Adams, who blew the organ, would continue blowing after the music had stopped, thereby producing most undesirable sounds.

Time and again had the organist taken him to task for it.

"Right, mister," had been old Adams' invariable reply. "I forgits, you know."

One Sunday the organist could stand it no longer.

The congregation had been set tittering by the old man's forgetfulness, and during the sermon the organist seized the opportunity to write him a note on the matter, and handed it to a choir boy to deliver.

Misunderstanding the whispered directions, the lad handed the note straight up to the vicar, who astoundedly read the following:

"Will you stop when I tell you to? People come here to listen to my music, not to your horrible noise."

ON HER KITCHEN STOVE

It is interesting to note that the most successful remedy for woman's ills was originally prepared nearly forty years ago by Mrs. Lydia E. Pinkham, of Lynn, Mass., by steeping roots and herbs on her kitchen stove and supplied to friends and neighbors without cost. Its fame spread; the demand grew; until now many tons of roots and herbs are used each year in order to supply this famous remedy which has proved such a marvelous success in controlling diseases of women. Merit alone could have stood this test of time.

Lady Constance Stewart Richardson on How to Acquire a Beautiful Figure Through Dancing

Written Exclusively for the Readers of This Page.

In Poses Especially Adapted for the Accompanying Article.

A swaying exercise fully described by Lady Richardson's article brings about an easy control of the waist muscles.

Practice in this lesson will do more to reduce the waistline than any other fat-reducing method known to Lady Richardson.

Incidentally it produces naturally graceful movements when walking or running.

Figure 2 is a walking exercise that has a wonderfully beneficial effect upon the whole body.

Constant practice in this exercise makes it become as easy and natural to you as when a child skipping along the street.

It is Lady Richardson's claim that all these movements are but normal, simple, human expressions.

This style of dancing, says Lady Richardson, is good for the soul as well as the body.

This is the first time that any newspaper has presented a series of articles in which such expert instruction and advice are given on the value of practicing natural movements for the preservation of human grace and beauty.

THIS is the fourth of Lady Richardson's valuable articles on dancing as an aid to natural beauty.

Another will appear on this page next week, in which the student is carried along a little further, and into a trifle more difficult exercises.

By Lady Constance Stewart Richardson

Copyright, 1913, by International News Service.

DANCING is one of the most characteristic and characterful things I know. It expresses the individual and the nation in perfect accord with the feelings and customs that characterize him or it.

Take, for instance, the Hungarian Czardas, the Italian Tarantelle, or the Tango of Argentina—each is characteristic of its place and clime, and however well the peoples of another nation do the dance that is not their own they still must modify it to suit their own temperament.

A Perfect Outline.

If we take the best of the moderns and add to it the finest steps of the ancients and teach our result we will get as many variations as we have individual temperaments expressing the dance we have made.

If people will stop to think what a wonderful mode of expression the dance offers them, and will study it, its music and the effect of this expression on their own temperaments, they will no longer consider the dance and the body that expresses it as something to be despised, but they will give to the body, which is capable of beauty, its due of admiration and its right to beautiful expression, which will mean that one step toward lifting instead of degrading the human body will be definitely taken through the worship of loveliness.

To help you all make your bodies so perfect in outline, in strength and in power to respond to your desire to express emotion through the great safety valve of movement is my desire.

When dancing, look happy and as if you were dancing because you love to, and as if you were dancing because you love the particular step you are taking—not doing the fashionable thing some dancing teacher had assured you was the "proper way." Make one or two steps your own, and through them teach your body to express itself without shame or consciousness in perfect happiness and rhythm.

Figure One.

Dancing is a safe and sane form of self-expression, and it is good for body as well as soul.

In Figure 1 the body is poised on the ball of one foot, while the other is raised with the leg thrown slightly backward from the knee and the toes pointing downward. A straight line from flexed knee to the tip of the toes seems to be a favorite idea of grace, as depicted by the sculpture of the ancients, and as it adds to beauty of line the benefit of strengthening instep and ankle, it is one of the little separate movements that I often incorporate in my dancing steps.

To return to Figure 1—Bend slightly at the waist toward the uplifted leg and raise the arm above the head so there will be a continuous curve from elbow to toes. A flexible waist waits upon the earnest practice of this exercise.

From elbow to wrist the arm is bent above and toward the head, while the other arm, stretched lightly out from the shoulder and parallel with it, terminates in loosely flexed wrist and hand. Sway lightly from foot to foot, and see what easily controlled muscles of the waist result.

Figure Two.

Figure 2 pictures for you a walking exercise that has a wonderfully beneficial effect on the whole body. It is a natural bodily expression such as you have often seen little children drop into quite unconsciously.

Tiptoe along from foot to foot, with the raised limb flexed at the knee and held with down-pointing toe.

Bend the body well forward from the waist, and sway it toward the lifted foot, stretching the arm over this foot back and down and the other arm forward and as you would do in feeling your way along a solid surface in the dark.

Leg, arm and waist muscles are here brought into play—and when such simple, pretty, little exercises as this become indeed play you may feel sure that you are on your way to a body beautiful and graceful.

After all, just such dance movements as this are normal, simple, human expression, and out of them we can evolve natural grace of body and movement.

Handsome Mr. Slatte :: A SHORT STORY COMPLETE

"I SHOULD think you would read more," suggested the girl in the grass green linen gown as she came upon the porch.

"Oh, I don't know," responded the young woman in the wicker chair, who was busy embroidering. "This is just as satisfactory as most of the popular novels."

"It's every woman's duty to improve her mind," declared the girl in the green linen. "I feel that I have done so much since the corner drug store put in its circulating library. Mr. Slatte has been such a help!"

"Mr. Slatte?" queried her friend. "What has he to do with it?"

The girl in the green linen sighed faintly. "You know," she said, "I am not the sort of girl to rave over a man's good looks. I prefer brains any time. But, really, you never in your life saw any one who looked like Mr. Slatte! He——"

"He might look like anything with that name," commented the young woman who was embroidering. "Do you mean to say he is handsome?"

"More than that," said her friend. "He has the sort of eyes that pierce with their brilliance, and such a chin! My dear, every time I see him I am reminded of that stunning portrait of Lord Byron! I am certain there is a mystery about him! He has the most perfect manners!"

A Shock.

"Where——"

"Why, he's recently taken charge of the drug store," explained the girl in the green linen. "I had just picked out a book when he came up and said he couldn't bear to see me waste my time on such a tiresome story. He said he'd be only too glad to help me find something worth while that he knew I could appreciate. I thought it so kind——"

"Kind!" said the girl who was embroidering. "I think he was impertinent. I guess if I wanted a book I'd want what I wanted."

"You don't understand at all," exclaimed the girl in green linen, patiently. "Mr. Slatte is writing a novel himself, so of course he knows perfectly what—"

"My goodness! A drug clerk and a novelist!" said the girl who was embroidering.

Her friend bristled at this. "He's not a clerk!" she said. "He's a sort of—er—manager. People generally don't know he is so literary. You don't suppose that he wastes time on everybody who comes to get a book, do you? Not that he is especially interested in me, of course—only I suppose he realizes that I have more than average intelligence. I never saw such eyes in my life! Sometimes when he smiles in that slow, sad sort of way of his I——"

"Who puts up prescriptions while he is engaged in smiling sadly?" inquired the young woman who was embroidering.

"You are perfectly horrid!" said her friend. "If you knew Mr. Slatte you'd think differently. We have had some of the most inspiring talks since we met. He always drops whatever he is doing and helps me select my books. I'm a rapid reader and have to exchange books so often.

"I'm on my way there now to get another book. I do wish I could make you see what an opportunity it is, now that Mr. Slatte is there. He has such a cultivated mind—many times he has remarked what a treat it is to him to have someone come in who is different from the average careless reader."

A Rival.

"There comes Dorothy Maye," said the girl who was embroidering. "Come in, Dorothy," she called across the railing.

"I can't just now," said the girl in question, pausing at the steps. "I'm on my way to the drug store to take back a book. There's such a nice man in charge there now—perfectly stunning, and so kind. He's writing a book himself, too. He always stops whatever he is doing to come and help me pick out something good. He says it is a treat——"

"How nice!" enthusiastically interrupted the girl who was embroidering. "Alicia is here and she is going there, too——"

"No," said the girl in grass green linen shortly. "I am not going to the drug store! I am too busy to waste time over those trashy books and to hang around a silly clerk."

Untested.

"Yes, sir," said the successful manufacturer, "no man can sell his factory products these days unless they have been thoroughly tested."

"Oh, I don't know," replied another equally successful manufacturer. "We manage to sell our product without testing it."

"You do? What is your line?"

"Dynamite."

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

LET YOUR HEART DECIDE.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am a girl of twenty. About two years ago I met a young man, and from that time until a month ago I loved him, but he did not return my love in the way I wanted, so I thought it would be best to forget him. I am now keeping company with another young man who is very serious. Two weeks ago the first young man wrote and told me he had found no girl he could love like me. DOROTHY.

You must take the one you love most, but before you make that decision be very fair with yourself. I know nothing of the merits of the two men, but it seems to me that the first is somewhat like the dog in the manger.

He did not seek your love till some other man's attentions made it desirable.

HE IS NOT SINCERE.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am nineteen, and in love with a man three years my senior. I am really crazy over him. I think the world of him, as I think he does the same of me.

It is nearly a year since we met and fell in love with each other. He asked me to be his bride. We were to be married in a short time, but now he has excuses for not getting married. He does not write as usual, but comes up as usual. P. G. Z.

The indications are he is trying to get out of it. Save your self-respect by breaking the engagement, for, believe me, it will never end in marriage. I am sorry, dear, but this course will save you greater pain later on.

THAT IS HIS PRIVILEGE.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am a young girl of seventeen and considered good looking. I have been keeping company with a young man for several months and at a dance one night I introduced a girl to him to whom he pays more attention than to me. NORAH.

There was no engagement. He was merely your friend. I hope, under the circumstances, you will be big enough, and broad enough, to be glad you were the means of introducing him to a girl whose company delights him. That's the way to look at it, my dear.

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

CHAPTER IX.

MARY smiled reassuringly into the anxious faces of her parents bending over her as she opened her eyes after a brief period of unconsciousness. She found herself lying upon the living room couch, her forehead wet from the water which her mother had applied in the effort to "bring her around." She struggled to a sitting posture, beginning at once to explain the attack of faintness which had seized her.

"I have been working a little too hard in this warm weather," she said. "I have not felt well lately, anyway, and this is but the culmination of the weariness and strain—nothing else."

She spoke no word of the news that had held her eyes waking far into the night, nor of the blessed relief of the knowledge that the man whom she had feared was injured or dead was alive and well.

"You won't try to go to school to-day, will you?" pleaded her mother.

The girl smiled.

"It is Saturday, mother," she reminded her. "But I must go down to the Public Library to look up some matters I want to be sure of before Monday. But I will take a cup of coffee first."

She drank this when her mother brought it to her, then arose with decision.

"I am ashamed of myself to be so weak and foolish," she exclaimed. "Please, dear people, try to forget it."

"Would you like to look over the morning paper?" asked her father, eyeing her keenly.

"No, thank you!" she said quickly. "Thank you, mother, for waiting so sweetly on your silly daughter. I will go to bed early to-night and not repeat this performance of fainting. I never did such a thing quite so causelessly and suddenly before in my life."

When she had left the living room, the father and mother gazed again into each other's faces.

"The fact that she avoids the subject that made her faint shows that she cares for this young man," declared the mother. "Well, he is a nice fellow, I guess."

"I don't care how nice he is," retorted the father, "he is not half good enough for my girl. Before I consent to any serious attentions from him I am going to write to his firm and find what his record is."

"That's all right, dear," agreed the wife indulgently. "I approve of your doing that. But if the Angel Gabriel—trumpet and all—were to ask you for Mary you would not think him good enough for her."

"And he wouldn't be!" asserted the father, without a smile.

The most tender mother is willing—even, at times, glad—to have her daughter marry an honorable, well-to-do gentleman; a fond father seldom looks with favor upon any suitor for his daughter's hand.

An hour later Mary appeared in her mother's room, her hat and gloves on, ready to go out. Mrs. Danforth looked solicitously at her, but, seeing that the color had returned to her lips, she forbore to utter any protest. If the child was restless it was better to let her go. In the library she might find the books she needed for her work, they might quiet her nerves, turning her thoughts from agitating subjects.

Mrs. Danforth would have been surprised could she have seen her daughter when she reached her destination. Instead of going at once in search of the volumes in which she was to "look up" certain important subjects, she went direct to the reading room of the library and was in a few minutes immersed in the morning papers. A close observer would have noticed that the only columns she read were those dealing with the recent railroad wreck and the deeds of heroism of the various uninjured passengers—the most active and bravest of whom had evidently been "the young Texan, Gordon Craig by name." As the girl read, her cheeks glowed and a soft light came to her eyes. So absorbed was she in her dreams, that she was leaving the building before she remembered that in her wrist-bag she carried a list of books of reference which she must find this morning, and, with a start, went in search of these. Somehow all literature except the newspapers seemed very dull to-day.

As it was Saturday, Mr. Danforth came home at noontime, and was there when his daughter returned a little before the luncheon hour. He greeted her brightly.

"Well!" she said jocosely, "I saw our hero this morning! Craig was at my office. He ran in to tell me that he was all right and to ask if we had seen the account of the wreck. I told him that we had, but I did not flatter him by telling him we had been badly scared about him."

Mary drew a sigh of relief. She had feared her father might mention her evident anxiety, then she reminded herself that she might have known he would not. She waited for his next remark. Although she had read and reread the newspaper accounts of Craig's heroism, she hoped to hear more about it by word of mouth. Her father answered her unspoken thought.

"He said little about himself," he went on, "and I liked him better for that. When I said that I understood he had done some pretty fine work he turned as red as a lobster and said—'It was only what any man would have done under the circumstances,' and changed the subject. So I let it drop. I asked him to come up and see us before he goes back to Texas, and he said he would try to."

"Probably he will not find time to," said Mary with studied indifference. She began to talk vivaciously of her work, of the approaching school commencement, of anything and everything except of Gordon Craig. And her father and mother, watching her, understood.

That afternoon a messenger left at her door a note for her. It was short:

"Dear Miss Danforth: Will you give me the happiness of your company to the opera next Wednesday night? I will call for you at a quarter before eight. The performance is 'Aida.'

"Faithfully yours,
"GORDON CRAIG."

The reply that the messenger carried back to Craig was even more brief than the note he had brought:

"My Dear Mr. Craig: Thank you. I will be ready at 7:45 Wednesday night.

"Sincerely yours,
"MARY DANFORTH."

A Frank Talk on Typewriters

Somehow, the impression has gained ground that there isn't much difference between the various makes of typewriters on the market.

You may think the same thing. It would take a good, SOUND, LOGICAL argument to convince you that all typewriters do not have the same efficiency and that a stenographer cannot secure the same results on every machine.

We are ready to make that argument and to show you by actual demonstration that

The L. C. Smith & Bros. Typewriter

will do more work, better work, with less fatigue to the stenographer, than any writing machine ever made.

How is this possible?

Here are a few reasons:

1. It is ball bearing throughout—others are not.
2. All operations are controlled from the keyboard.
3. It is the lightest touch machine made.
4. It does not "smut" the carbon.
5. The ribbon reverses automatically.
6. The type is so protected that it is not battered by collision.
7. One motion of the hand returns the carriage and operates the line space.
8. It has an inbuilt biller and tabulator.
9. No trouble to write on paper as small as a postage stamp.
10. It is built for service.

FIVE TEAMS TO BATTLE IN RACE FOR 30 MINUTES

Big Thriller Slated for Motor Bugs at Prince's Saucer on Tuesday Night.

A HALF-HOUR team race is to be the big feature at the Motordrome to-morrow night, and for the really jammy excitement this should top anything that has been staged yet at Jack Prince's saucer.

Five teams will be in the long grind. And what a wrangle the ten riders had trying to get matched up! Finally Morty Graves suggested that the partners be found by a drawing. Manager Noon Hudson put all the numbers in his new straw lid and the result was:

Graves and McNeil, Schwartz and Lockner, Shields and Richards, Luther and Lewis, Renel and Glenn.

These teams appear to be very evenly matched. Graves and McNeil will probably rule favorites, with Richards and Shields second choice.

No rider will be allowed to remain on the track over twenty successive minutes. But each rider can call for his partner as often as he desires. The partners who are not racing will remain in front of the paddock. The partner riding must drop off the track and touch his teammate on the shoulder before the latter can take up the racing.

It sure will be a thrilling event if all goes well.

The Motordrome Sweepstakes is the second feature event. All the riders will start, five in each qualifying heat. The qualifying heats will be over a one-mile course, while the final will be two miles.

Harry Glenn, who defeated Schwartz the other night, will meet Luther in a match race. It will be the two best heats in three over a two-mile circuit. Glenn is a local boy and he will be backed heavily to down his worthy opponent.

* * *

FOLLOWING is the complete card for Tuesday night:

First Event.

First heat Motordrome Sweepstakes (One mile to qualify and two-mile final.) Starters—Graves, Shields, Richards, Renel, Lewis.

Second Event.

First heat of a match race between Glenn and Luther. (Race to be two best heats in three.) Distance—two miles.

Third Event.

Second heat of Motordrome Sweepstakes. Starters—Schwartz, Lockner, Luther, McNeil, Glenn.

Fourth Event.

Second heat of match race between Glenn and Luther.

Fifth Event.

Final heat of Motordrome Sweepstakes. (Winners of first and second heats and second man in fastest heat to start.)

Sixth Event.

Third heat of match race between Glenn and Luther, if necessary.

Seventh Event.

Half-hour team race. Teams—Graves and McNeil; Schwartz and Lockner; Shields and Richards; Luther and Lewis; Renel and Glenn. (No rider can remain on track over twenty consecutive minutes.)

Wolgast and Ritchie May Sign Articles

LOS ANGELES, July 28.—Eager to nail down Ad Wolgast to his offer—a $25,000 side bet for a return match—Willie Ritchie to-day is making a desperate effort to get the former titleholder to meet him to-day and sign articles. On Saturday, Wolgast posted with James J. Jeffries $1,000, part of a $25,000 side bet, in a twenty-round title contest with Ritchie. Wolgast specified that half is to go that he will from the title-holder in twenty rounds, the other half that he knocks out, stop or force Ritchie to uit inside of the limit.

Ritchie lost no time in accepting the offer when he learned that there was seriousness to Ad's movements, and he asked Jeffries to affect a meeting between he and Ad for this afternoon in the hope that articles might be signed. Ritchie leaves here for 'Frisco Wednesday afternoon and he would like to close the match before starting. Should the pair come together they will clash either September 1 or 9

By W. W. Naughton.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 28.—Arthur Pelky, the new white heavyweight champion, possesses most of the facial characteristics of the professional pugilist, but it can scarcely be said that he has a fighting eye.

Now, do not misunderstand me. There is nothing in Pelky's look to suggest that he is lacking in courage, but, sizing him up as he sat in my den yesterday, I could not help thinking how different he was from other brand-new champions I had known. In most cases the eye of a freshly-fledged champ glints with a mixture of pride and defiance. If looks could be construed into words the look to which I refer would read, "I can lick anything that walks in two shoes."

Pelky's eyes are large and dark—the eyes of a man who broods. To me it almost seemed as if the shadow of that fearful experience he had in the ring at Calgary was still upon him. The suspicion was confirmed by his evident reluctance to talk about the recent past and his palpable inclination to talk about anything other than himself. To the majority of champions the recital of how they won their spurs gives unbounded pleasure. To Pelky the recollection brings a shudder.

* * *

PELKY is tall, squarely built and has a strong jaw and large, firmly-knit hands. He is big enough to tackle anything in human shape. He is here with Tommy Burns, once world's champion in his own right, but now fallen into flesh and quite content to be known as a connoisseur.

Tommy is Pelky's manager, and the manner in which Burns discovered that Pelky was worth managing was not the least interesting thing he had to tell. Pelky went to Calgary to box six rounds with Burns. While the affair was in progress the beauties of Pelky's character as a fighter unfolded to Tommy. At the end of the bout Tommy was all in, and an hour later Tommy was Pelky's manager.

"We are in no hurry to make matches," said Burns. "We have twelve weeks' work in the theaters, beginning at Pantages next week, and in the meantime the Gunboat Smith-Jim Flynn match will be decided and the winner will stand forth as a challenger of Pelky. If Smith wins and I think he will——"

"Pardon me," said Pelky in a soft-voiced way. "I think Flynn will defeat Smith."

"Well, anyway, you'll be ready to sign with the winner," resumed Tommy.

"And if it is Smith you'll like it all the better. You have always wanted to box him, haven't you?"

Pelky nodded his approval.

* * *

BURNS and Pelky were reminded that Sam Langford, the negro pugilist, is back from Australia, and were asked how overtures for a Pelky-Langford match would be regarded.

"I want it to be understood that I will never box a colored man," said Pelky. "Some time ago, when the promoters of the country decided to discourage the making of mixed matches and contests were arranged to decide who was the white heavyweight champion, I thought it one of the best moves ever made in pugilism. I am still of that way of thinking. I call myself the white champion, and feel that I have every right to do so, but if the public took the stand that I ought to accept matches with negroes, I'd be willing to drop out of the game entirely."

* * *

"I THINK he's right," said Burns. "Of course I fought a negro when I met Jack Johnson, but if I had my time to go over again he would wait a long time for a match. To tell the truth, I never wanted to fight Johnson. I was offered big money by the National Club of London, and I turned it down. When I went to Australia and the question came up again, I said that I wanted every cent of $30,000 before I'd go into the ring with Johnson. It was a lot of money, but McIntosh produced it, and then there was no getting out of it, so far as I was concerned.

"And talking of public opinion in such matters, I have lived to learn that a fighter should not lay too much stress upon public opinion. It shifts and veers too much. Before I boxed Johnson I used to receive letters taunting me with being afraid to meet the negro. After I went against him and lost my title the letters still came in. But their tone had changed. I was reviled for having given a negro a chance at the championship."

* * *

WHEN matchmaking is in order, it is just possible that a trip to Australia will be included in the Burns-Pelky itinerary. In response to a message from out yonder, Burns has cabled that Pelky will be willing to take the journey and engage in a series of three fights.

Tommy has named as possible opponents for Pelky: Jim Flynn, Jess Willard, Jim Coffey, Al Palzer and Gunboat Smith.

(In one week.)

FIRST DAY.

THE Magnate tore his seldom hair
And roared in fearsome rage:
"What's this? Ye gods; What this
I lamp upon the sporting page?
Jake Stahl is canned—my own pick—Jake!
Oh, gimme room to cuss!
I'll show those Boston guys they can't
Make us ridiculous!"

THIRD DAY.

The Magnate speeded to the West—
The wild news speeded, too;
In Cleveland he was cornered by
Reporters quite a few.
"Ahem!" he said. "About Jake Stahl—
I do not care to state
My full conclusions at this time—
I must investigate."

SEVENTH DAY.

At last he makes his lakeside home;
And Fandom stands agog
To watch the mighty gaskwar put
Those ingrates on the hog!
And now the crushing sentence comes—
With quite some 'phsaw" and "pish"—
"In this I can not interfere.
E'en if I had the wish!"

BROWN COMES BACK, HURLS IN OLD-TIME FORM

MORDECAI BROWN is not through. In fact, it looks as if Manager Joe Tinker, of the Reds, said very true words when in the spring he claimed that the three-fingered wonder still had a lot of good baseball left in him. True, Brown is not hurling the kind of ball he did several seasons ago, but just the same, Johnny Evers could use him at present, and to good advantage.

After Brown had helped the Cubs to four pennants and two world's championships, his arm went to the bad in 1912. When the off season came, C. Webb Murphy thought he would not need the three-fingered boy any more, and shipped him to the minors.

But Joe Tinker, new manager of the Reds, thought different. Joe was with "Brownie" a long time, and when he was shipped to the A. A., he and Garry Herrmann arranged a deal whereby Miner would come back to the National League. And it looks as if they made no error in securing Brown.

Beats Old Mates Twice.

Maybe now C. Webb Murphy and Johnny Evers see they made a big mistake in releasing the former star of the Cubs. Recently when the Reds were playing the Bruins, the three-fingered hurler took a pair of games from Johnny Evers' gang, one of them being a shutout, in which only six base knocks were made off him.

When Tinker secured Brown, it was for the simple reason to use him as a coach for his young moundmen. He was carried until May 1 before he made his appearance on the firing line. Since the hot weather arrived, though, Brown's good right arm seems to be as good as ever, and he is taking his regular turn on the mound for his club.

Has Good Record.

Although Brown is not winning as regular or working quite as often as he did a few years back, he has a record which is far better than the one owned by his club.

Miner has won seven games and lost six this campaign. That's a percentage of .538. The Reds own a mark of .380, so it can be seen that Brownie is 158 points ahead of his team.

So far this season Brown has appeared in 22 games, being used as a relief hurler most of the time. In these 22 contests he has worked 95 innings.

The Dodgers are trying hard to get back in the first division. They shoved the Reds back twice yesterday and a victory to-day, with a defeat for the Pirates, will put the teams on even terms at the foot of the leading four.

* * *

Bert Garden, of the Roanoke club, established a Virginia League record when he pitched two shut-out games against Newport News. He is the first pitcher in the league to start and finish two full games.

* * *

The Cotton States League pennant race has been won by Jackson. The deciding of a number of protested games against Pensacola did not beat that team out of the pennant, as the club had the bunting cinched.

* * *

Catcher Agnew, of the St. Louis Americans, is rapidly improving from the effects of being hit by a pitched ball during one of the Washington games. He will be out of the game, however, for several weeks.

* * *

Hess' wildness and opportune hitting by the Cubs gave them a close victory over the Braves. Zimmerman returned to the game for the first time since his ankle was injured and displayed his old-time speed and hitting powers.

* * *

A report is in circulation here that Joe Tinker, manager of the Reds, will give up his position at shortstop and direct the fortunes of the club from the bench.

MAGNATE REFUSES TO OBEY COMMISSION'S RULING

LOS ANGELES, CAL., July 28.—Henry Berry, president of the Los Angeles baseball club of the Coast League, said to-day he would not obey the baseball law which forbids a class AA team to carry more than twenty players in the middle of the season.

"If the National Commission decided that I should pay a fine I will not do it," said Berry.

Charles Arbogast, a catcher, is expected to join the Los Angeles team to-morrow. This would make 21 players. Berry declared to-day he would not release any of the old men for the reason that three of his players were in the hospital.

Cross-Baldwin Battle To-morrow Matty Has Great Ring Record

By Harry Gilmore, Jr.

LOS ANGELES, CAL., July 28.—Next in line on the Vernon fistic slate is the twenty-round engagement to-morrow night between Matty Baldwin, of Boston, and Leach Cross, of New York City. What better fistic offering could be asked, barring an immediate championship encounter with Willie Ritchie as one of the principals, than those two crack Eastern lightweights?

Cross and Baldwin have long since been bitter rivals, and after repeated efforts on the part of Eastern promoters to bring them together without avail, they will now settle the old score with twenty rounds in which to bring about a result which should be decisive. Cross has forever found the Bostonian a thorn in his side, and carefully analyzing their respective records it seems he might well have found him a formidable foe.

* * *

BALDWIN has had in excess of 150 fights in the eleven years in which he has been in the ring, and has met the best of the lightweights of recent years, barring the old warrior, Bat Nelson. Baldwin won and lost a 12-round decision to Owen Moran in January and February, respectively, of 1910, when Moran was at his best. He had previously drawn in limited bouts with Tommy Murphy and Abe Attell in New York City, when the foxy Abe and the Harlem scrapper were at the zenith of their careers. He lost to Cross on a foul in eight rounds, May 13, 1910, in New York City, when, it is claimed, he had Cross beaten and practically out. Baldwin visited the coast just two years ago and took Freddie Welsh for twenty rounds at San Francisco, June 23, losing the decision after going the limit. Only two months later he was returned a winner in the twentieth round over the now present champion, Willie Ritchie. In April of 1911 he met Cross for ten rounds in New York, and although a no-decision affair, the press awarded Baldwin the verdict. Baldwin has since drawn with Joe Mandot, and is credited with a fairly even ten rounds just recently with Jack Britton, while best of all, his last engagement, a decisive win over Young Shugrue in New York, speaks his praises. Shugrue took a decision from Cross some months before the latter came West for the Anderson engagement, so on the dope the Boston boy figures very strongly against his Leaches.

* * *

MATTY has completed training for the bout, and shows a confidence that inspires some of the Cross adherents to believe that there is indeed a doubtful chance for their entry; and, from present indications, the getting price will be a pretty even thing.

"I know Cross and his fighting style about as well as any one of the fighters who have met him," said Baldwin in discussing the match. "He knows that I have little fear of any of the wallops that he carries, and when it comes to the rough stuff that is where I have his number, and he knows it. When I took him on in New York I had him bad, and would have finished him had it been a longer bout. With twenty rounds to go, I am satisfied that I can land a decisive victory, and then I want the chance that I have hoped for to clash with Ritchie for the championship."

SWEENEY WILL GET $50 FOR LONG HIT SATURDAY

NEW YORK, July 28.—Ed Sweeney, the big catcher of the Yankees, who had been out of the game on account of injury, won $50 Saturday by hitting the "bull" sign in right field with a fairly batted fly ball. This is the first time the feat has been accomplished since the new Brush stadium was built.

CRACKERS FACE HARD FINISH AFTER GULLS

Five Games in Three Days at Home, Then the Final Road Trip.

By O. B. Keeler.

SO, THERE YOU ARE!

Oh, something's got into the eyes of the Crackers,
A-smoking the lamps of our sterling pill-whackers;
Long, agonized shrieks emanate from their backers
Far away in the distance a-viewing it;
We can't get a line on their recent futility;
We know they are swatters of sterling ability,
Who pepper the pill with excessive virility—
Butthehelofitistheyain'tdoingit!

* * *

DESPITE the charitable interference of the weather man on a number of occasions, our brave la-a-ads (tremolo stop) continue to skid recklessly toward the second division. Only the Barons remain betwixt them and the lid, which position is thinly occupied by the dejected Lookouts.

It would be entirely possible, depending on what happens to Birmingham and Chattanooga, for the Crackers to detrain in this town Thursday, installed as leaders of the basement quartet.

Of course, the Gulls and their doings cut the deepest into the calculations. They have been tough for the Crackers all season, and, with the race in its present scrambled condition, there is no reason to suspect they will suddenly become docile.

Passing over the Gulls with a respectful nod, then, it may be just as well to look over the remaining prospects of the season.

* * *

NO matter in what shape the Smithmen return Thursday, they will confront the proposition of taking on the Volunteers for five games in three days, the same being Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

The situation of the Vols in the league standing is not dignified enough to inspire much reverence. But it must be recalled that Schwartz has some raw material on hand which he naturally will be eager to shoot. And some of it may be loaded.

Then there is the question of twoply entertainments.

In the face of what happened recently in Montgomery, we insist that the conventional method of prorating a double bill is for each side to take one. And that is precisely what the Crackers do not require just now—and won't require the latter part of this week.

Five or six games back of the lead, Bill Smith's hands need two out of three from now on—and a shade more wouldn't hurt.

One double-header is regularly scheduled for Friday afternoon. The league program is responsible for that. Then there is a tie contest holding over from the last visit of the Vols. That probably will be shot off Thursday, by way of openers.

Anyway, if the sky can be caulked, there's a furious little series booked for the last three days in this week.

* * *

THEN the Crackers hit the "Trail of the Lonesome Nine" once more.

Chattanooga first, for three games, August 4, 5 and 6. Then the final visit to Nashville, which may witness the playing off of the well known disputed contest earlier in the season. The closing road games of the season of 1913 will be played in Birmingham, August 11, 12 and 13.

* * *

HOME again, for a little house party at which every club in the league will be on the guest list except Nashville.

There are 22 games scheduled for the grand finale, and four tied or postponed affairs. They will be played in this order: Chattanooga 4; Birmingham 3; New Orleans 6; Mobile 4; and Chattanooga again for one game, September 6.

But in the meantime, there is Mobile.

* * *

AND it is possible that Billy Smith was figuring on that long home wind-up, with the chance to land the flag in a grueling finish, when he signed the giant southpaw, Love, leading slabman of the Cotton States League.

Love will make the third forkhander on the Cracker firing line. With an equal number of right-handers, Billy can settle down on the home lot and dare all of 'em to knock off the chip. It won't make much difference whether the opposition sports a majority of portsiders or not. Bill will be loaded for both kinds of game.

* * *

THE new cock-eye is six and a half feet long and comes up with a savory reputation that includes 20 firsts out of 29 starts in the Cotton States. He has a no-hit, no-run game on his list, and four consecutive shut-outs, in the directing of which he issued only three bases on balls. Control is said to be his best bet.

That sounds encouraging, anyway.

POOR ABIE IS THROUGH; HAS LITTLE CLASS LEFT

NEW YORK, July 28.—Abie Attell had better give up the Queensberry pastime. Abe has something left in the ducking and the nodding of the head in getting away from some wicked punches, but that is about all.

His latest opponent was Willie Beecher, the well-known mitt man of the East Side, and the contest took place at the Atlantic Athletic Club of Rockaway. There was a rather good gathering of the fight fans. They were of the opinion that Abe would hand out some of that old championship stuff that made him famous in the days of long ago. The person who suffered the most at the bout was Referee Draycott. Abe's judgment of distance was bad in the fifth, sixth and eighth rounds, and he whanged the judge three times.

The winner of the bout was Beecher. The latter, after finding out that Attell was not there any more, chased Abe around the ring, and Beecher had a difficult time in catching his opponent. Beecher did his best work in the sixth and seventh rounds. From the fifth round to the finish, Beecher was the busy man and he had enough lead in the first five to give him the fight. All that Abe had was a bad lip as he came out of the ring.

VETERAN COACH GREAT HELP TO JOE BOEHLING

By Senator.

WASHINGTON, July 28.—Quiet, observing everything, but saying little, always ready with a cheering word for some youngster to turn a rebuke into a joke, Jack Ryan, the veteran backstop and scout, is one of the uplifting influences among the Washington Senators. He isn't going around with banners flying, proclaiming his deeds from every housetop, but he is the man who has made it possible for Joe Boehling to pitch winning ball.

After much haggling to no end, the writer succeeded in getting Ryan to explain the system he has taught Boehling and is now teaching Joe Engel. He belittled even that system, notwithstanding Boehling's success since he began following the veteran's advice.

"It's a simple thing," finally broke out Ryan. "I began teaching those two kids this spring at Charlottesville. They were wild as hawks and careless of following directions. I noticed that all they ever did when they went into the box was to wind up and let her go. They didn't take even enough time to see where the plate was.

* * *

"SO I said to Boehling one day: 'Take your time. Think about every ball you pitch. Try to do something with it. Aim at something. Pay the closest attention to your stride. Then you will get control, and that's all you need to ge a good pitcher.'

"Well, at first Boehling couldn't understand these directions. He would forget what he had to do. Griff kept me working with him constantly however, and finally I got Joe where he could think of all these things at the same time. Immediately he began to pitch winning ball, and he will continue just so long as he follows those directions.

"It was the same way with Engel. He is fully equipped to be a winning pitcher. I never saw a betterlooking youngster in baseball. But he didn't know anything about his job. He never considered what he had to do. He pitched into the stride used by the other pitcher, even if it were two feet short of his own. It was impossible for him to win that way. He couldn't get his 'stuff' on the ball. I kept insisting on his using proper stride and thinking about every ball that left his hand. That's all pitching amounts to, granting that you have speed and a curve ball. But it was hard for those kids to understand this, and it took a lot of time before they got it into their heads.'

And this is all that Jack Ryan has to say about his making two good pitchers for the Climbers.

* * *

WHEN you think it over, Ryan ought to be a wise counselor for young fellows. He has been in baseball 28 years, starting when a mere kid. In all that time he has never learned to drink or smoke. His personal habits are irreproachable, his example for young players a thing for the gods. Manager Griffith could not have ogtained a better coach for his youngsters. Seldom does he use a harsh word, never a profane. Never does he criticise a player on any other team.

Ryan's last active service was as manager of the Jersey City club of the Eastern, now the International League. There he worked behind the bat regularly, always maintaining a high average. He broke in with the Baltimore team when it was composed of thugs and knockout men. Always quiet, he had to fight to remain with the Orioles. And he fought and stayed. Later he saw several years of service under Frank Selee on the Boston club. He was captain of the Detroit American League team in 1902, finally drifting to the minors, where he managed several teams, ending with Jersey City.

ALPERMAN HAS APPENDIX CUT; OUT FOR A YEAR

MOBILE, ALA., July 28.—Whitey Alperman, field captain and second baseman of the Crackers, was operated on this noon in a local hospital for appendicitis.

As a result of the operation, Alperman will not be able to play again this season. This is a severe blow to Manager Billy Smith, as it practically kills whatever chance the Atlanta team has of winning the pennant.

Alperman was out of the game yesterday. He complained of severe pains in his right side. Last night a local physician was called, but was unable to diagnose the case until this morning.

Manush will probably cover the keystone sack the remainder of the season.

YACHTING DE LUXE.

Oh, would I were a sailor
Upon the rolling seas,
And beat it hence from spot to spot
Upon my large and gilded yacht,
Nor cared for any breeze.

Oh, would I were a sailor
Upon the billows blest,
And I could say: "Come hither, Steve!
I have a thirst thou shouldst retrieve,"
And he would do the rest.

Oh, would I were a sailor
And owned a yacht of steam.
But one must be a pirate bold
And trim the landsman of his gold
To realize that dream.

Every time a fight manager offers to bet $10,000 one is led to wonder whether Confederate money still is being used.

A doctor having discovered that no bones are broken in Heinie Zim's ankle, the inference is that his ankle bones are made of the same substance as his head.

An X-Ray examination of the Great Zim reveals the fact that his temperament is suffering from a malignant attack of gout.

When one learns that Hal Chase has made five boots in one game, one will not be surprised to hear that Joe Dunn has swiped five bases in the same interval.

The latest scandal in the Sport of Kings in England merely reflects the spirit of the times. A king these days is looked upon generally as a nine-spot.

It is claimed in England that the prevalence of foul riding there is due to the American style of wearing short stirrups. Even our English brethren have learned to pass the buck.

Bill Peet, a Washington scout, says he discovered Joe Boehling, and seven American League teams have discovered that Bill Peet is some discoverer.

Suggestion to Milwaukee sporting editors: Why not organize a few boxing clubs?

It still is early to pass judgment on Laverne Chappelle, but up to date he has earned approximately $1.75 of his purchase price.

Members of Frank Chance's team wear black sweaters, but even that does not fill the bill. What they need is crepe.

On the theory that misery loves company, Boston and St. Louis baseball bugs may organize a Mutual Sympathy Society.

How Fogel Will Wreck Majors

Dryden Makes Big "Discovery"

Charles Dryden.

HONORABLE HORACE FOGEL is getting ready to absorb both big circuits and put the magnates on the bum. He has said it, and what Horace says goes. As the present major leagues are a joke, Horace will start a lieutenant-colonel league for a change, grabbing off all the star talent now employed grinding out the national pastime.

The new organization should be accomplished without much trouble. Mr. Fogel talked himself out of the old league, and he is now engaged asking himself into the new one, or lieutenant-colonel league, to distinguish it from the old majors. Horace has his towns for the circuit booked out already yet once. They are New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Pittsburg, Cleveland, Chicago and St. Louis. That makes seven, and they need one more. The eighth city will be either Boston, Indianapolis or Kansas City. If Horace included both Boston and Kansas City, look what a fine jump the athletes would have from Boston to play a Sunday game at Kansas City.

Backers of New League Named.

The financial backers of the lieutenant-colonel league are said to be Otto Steifel, of St. Louis, and Jeff Livingston, the well-known pickle expert of Cincinnati. Mr. Steifel is behind the Federal League at St. Louis, and Mr. Livingston is in the pickle and tomato ketchup line at Cincy. They are to furnish the money, and Horace will supply the words. It is claimed that Horace has landed all the stars worth having in the two major circuits, but the statement is discredited, because Tom Needham has not been signed by the lieutenant-colonels. We are inclined to believe that if there were anything in the new organization, Mr. Needham would not have been overlooked. If Tom is not a star, where could they find one?

Be that as it may, the lieutenant-colonel league will be in full operation next spring, and the magnates of the two so-called major leagues will be begging for peanut concessions and hot dog stands in the parks of the new baseball body. They made a goat of Horace, and now he is getting back at them.

His Investigation Sidetracked.

His investigation of the trust was sidetracked, and just for that the National and American must get out of business for all time. By next Fourth of July we will hear of Pittsburg, New York and Cleveland selling their new steel stands for old iron. It is an awful picture to contemplate, but the magnates showed Horace no mercy, and he is determined not to spare them in the hour of retribution. Otherwise Horace is a mighty good fellow.

P. S.—Mr. Fogel has prepared an advance statement of 8,000 words in reference to the new league, which statement was to have been released simultaneously with a lot of papers on July 7.

Double P. S.—We do not know why the statement was not released on July 7.

WELLS TO BOX MOIR.

NEW YORK, July 28.—Bombardier Wells, English heavyweight champion, has been signed to meet Gunner Moir in a twenty-round bout at the Canterbury Music Hall in London September 3. Wells is signed to box twenty rounds with Bandsman Rice, another English heavyweight, in London on September 17.

CLABBY VS. PAPKE.

DENVER, COLO., July 25.—Articles have been signed for a ten-round bout between Jimmy Clabby, the Milwaukee middleweight, and Billy Papke, of Kewanee, Ill., to be held at the Denver A. C. on August 2.

GULLS DRAW THOMPSON IN GAME TO-DAY

By Joe Agler.

MOBILE, ALA., July 28.—The Gulls, ably assisted by a person named Monk, who was not in uniform, managed to cop the jump game of this series yesterday in spite of a grand exhibition of pitching by Dent and plucky defensive play by a badly crippled Cracker team. Thompson and Dunn will be the battery to-day, and we are going to try to get even.

Dent pitched one of his best games since joining the Crackers, and deserved to win. But the attack of his mates was not sufficient to overcome a one-run lead, and Hogg, who also pitched excellent ball, finished in front, 2 to 1, the result setting the Crackers down another full game in the pennant chase, as Montgomery also won.

Bill Bailey was examined by an X-ray specialist here and it was shown that he is suffering from a fractured rib, which will keep him out of the line-up several days. Whitey Alperman was taken suddenly ill with what appeared to be a touch of appendicitis, and was unable to play yesterday, but probably will try to work in this afternoon's game.

The worst feature of the contest yesterday was the arrest of Joe Dunn, at the instance of a person named Monk, who is interested in the Mobile club, the way I understand the matter. Joe was charged with swearing while arguing with Umpire Wright about a hit Joe thought was foul. Wright says Joe didn't swear, Catcher Schmidt says the same thing and so do all the players who were in hearing of the argument. But Joe was lugged off the field and Chapman had to come in from right to take his place, while Gilbert Price went to the outer works.

Joe wasn't locked up. Friends promptly arranged for bond, and he will be back in the game this afternoon.

Dunn Fined $5 for "Cussing" Umpire

MOBILE, ALA., July 28.—Joe Dunn, the heavy backstop of the Crackers, who was arrested yesterday at the ball park during the game between Atlanta and Mobile clubs, on a charge of using profane language was fined $5 in the Recorder's Court here this morning. Joseph paid.

The Recorder gave Dunn the preference of spending ten days in the workhouse or paying $5. "It is too hot these days to stay indoors so long," said the catcher, as he passed the "five iron men" over. "But I guess the judge wanted me to coach the rock-pile team at that," added Joe.

DODGE MAY GO TO VOLS; INDIANS SECURE NELSON

CINCINNATI, July 28.—Pitcher Albert Nelson, who was sold by the Reds to Nashville, but refused to report there, has been disposed of to Indianapolis. The Cincinnati club will send Nashville another player in place of Nelson, possibly Infielder Dodge, recently secured from the Phillies in exchange for Becker.

YOUNGSTERS FOR BLOOMINGTON.

BLOOMINGTON, ILL., July 28.—The Bloomington management, in an effort to check the losing streak of its club, has signed two promising youngsters. They are Outfielder Ralph Craig, of Sioux City, and Pitcher John Duggan, of the Southern League.

DECATUR, ILL., July 28.—The sale is announced of Dick Staley, first baseman of the Danville baseball club, to the Cleveland Americans for $2,500.

Atlanta Should Have Polo Club

Will Introduce Game August 6

THE most rabid polo[ist]'s appetite will be satisfied at Fort McPherson on Wednesday afternoon, August 6.

Here are some of the events carded by those interested in the plan to form the Atlanta Polo Club:

Polo match between the Fort McPherson quartet and an All-Southern team, which will consist of Tom Weaver, Lamar Hill, Dr. J. O. Seamans, local players, and experts from surrounding Southern clubs.

A tug-of-war on polo ponies.

A polo pony race.

A "polo pony" musical program furnished by the Fort McPherson military band.

A "polo pony" concert by Company M Glee Club.

And in hope of encouraging those who will be unable to attend to become interested in the game, moving pictures will be taken of the struggle and thrown on local screens a day or two after the match.

It will be the biggest society event ever held in Atlanta. It is to be hoped that the game will "take strong," for if it does, the Atlanta Polo Club will surely be formed.

A big tract of land will be purchased and a clubhouse erected. There are enough Atlantans who play the game to form an excellent team with very little coaching. Within a very few months the local club could arrange games with teams from all parts of the country, and not be afraid of defeat.

A worthy aim would be to develop players for the International Cup team. New Yorkers have had this all to themselves for some time, but Atlanta, like Camden, Augusta and Jacksonville, could in time probably develop some "big leaguers."

RINGSIDE NOTES

Jack White has finally secured a match with Johnny Dundee. Tom McCarey signed the pair yesterday to meet in a 20-round bout at his Vernon arena on August 12. They are to box at catch weights.

* * *

Coast fans are looking for Matty Baldwin to give Leach Cross a tough argument when the two lightweights get together at Los Angeles to-morrow night. Matty's great fights against Freddie Welsh and Willie Ritchie are still remembered by the Pacific coasters.

* * *

Ad Wolgast, Willie Ritchie, Johnny Dundee, Joe Rivers and Jack White will be at the ringside when Cross and Baldwin exchange blows. All these boys have big followers out West.

* * *

Sam Langford and Joe Jeannette have been matched to box twenty rounds at Los Angeles on September 29.

* * *

Johnny Kilbane, who has been holdfast to his title as featherweight champion, says that he is going to tour the world after visiting Ireland, and will meet all the good boys as he goes along. Perhaps he can find some amusement and some dollars scattered in his pathway.

* * *

Mike Saul is one fighter who thinks Kid Young can defeat Charlie Lee, providing the fighting newsboy gets into shape. Saul refereed the former scrap between the pair and says condition is all that kept Young from winning.

* * *

Spider Britt is walking the streets with a chip on his shoulders these days. Spider wants to know why the fighters around here are continually dodging a match with him. Britt is anxious to get on with Lee or Young and says he will give either of them a neat side bet.

* * *

Billy Lutz, manager of Eddie Hanlon, has a few words to say regarding Mike Saul. Lutz called at the Georgian Sporting department yesterday and said that he would gladly send his protege against Mike, if the latter will agree to let Eddie weigh 138 pounds at 2 o'clock. Billy is also prepared to put up $25 to go as a weight forfeit and side bet. Billy wants to meet Saul at this office this afternoon at 4 o'clock.

* * *

Jack Britton appears to be the easiest lightweight in the world to deal with when it comes to making a match. Britton is always ready to take on the best of them, while his manager, Danny Morgan, stands by with a few nickels to wager on his protege's chances.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Total of $131,000 In New Dwellings

Druid Hills for Carroll Payne. Peachtree and Ansley Park Homes. West End Church.

Plans for three handsome dwellings in Druid Hills, costing more than $40,000, are in course of preparation by Hentz & Reid, architects in the Candler Building. These are for houses to be built in the spring by J. Carroll Payne, Alex W. Smith, Jr., and Charles T. Hopkins, Jr., on adjoining lots on Ponce DeLeon avenue east of the bridge near Lullwater road. They will be handsomely done in the New England colonial style.

Jobs now in the hands of the above firm of architects total $131,000, including, among a number of dwellings, a structure for the West End Presbyterian Church, on Gordon street, to cost $20,000; a refreshment pavilion in Grant Park, $10,000, and additions to the dining room of the Piedmont Driving Club, $4,000." Plans are being drawn for the following other residences:

Edgar Dunlap, Druid Hills, two-story brick veneer house of New England colonial style, $17,000.

E. W. More, Peachtree road, near Lakeview avenue, two-story Dutch colonial and shingle, $6,000.

E. Lee Worsham, Wesley avenue, near Clark Howell's country place, one-story English type of plaster and stone, $10,000.

E. L. Bishop, Peachtree road, at Brookhaven, two-story plaster house, $7,000.

Fred Stone, Fairview road, Druid Hills, two-story New England colonial frame or brick veneer, $8,000.

W. White, Prado, Asley Park, two-story Dutch colonial frame and stone, $9,000.

Ivy Street Car Tracks.

Work has been in progress several days laying the old car tracks on Ivy street, preparatory to the resumption of trolley traffic on that street. There was a plan to put these tracks on Piedmont avenue, but objection on the part of property owners caused the project to be abandoned. The idea was to relieve Peachtree congestion as much as possible by having all tracks and heavy wagons use Ivy street.

To Start on West Peachtree.

Materials for repaving West Peachtree and building retaining walls are being gathered together for work that will begin within a few days. The walls will go up first and then regrading will start. A number of interesting improvements are expected to be made as soon as the work has assumed definite shape.

Mr. Cochran's Measure.

Ralph O. Cochran, the well-known real estate man, introduced in the Legislature Monday a bill intended to make equities in property subject to levy and sale, as well as deeds. Eugene and Gordon Mitchell drew the measure. All outstanding notes against property must be paid up before a sale can be made under the present law.

It is also sought to repeal existing legislation which makes real estate men take out a license in every county where a sale is made.

Marietta Street Barbecue.

Marietta street property owners are beginning to whet their appetites for a mammoth barbecue which they will give next month or in September commemorating the completion of the Marietta street widening and repaving to the city limits and the Cobb County line. The place will be either the Chattahoochee River or Howell Station, according to W. Tom Winn, one of the first to urge the Marietta street improvement.

Invited to the barbecue will be the city officials, the County Commissioners, a number of prominent real estate men and others, probably 500 people.

This barbecue was first set for July 4, but a delay in the work made a postponement necessary. The job is due to be completed in a very short time, and Marietta street will take its place as the best crosstown street in the city.

New Apartment Houses.

The Lawrence, a new apartment house at Nos. 52 and 54 West Peachtree place, will be ready for occupancy September 1. J. L. Turner & Co. are the owners. Each room is outside and the two-room apartments have disappearing wall beds, which have only recently come to Atlanta. The Maryland, corner of Peachtree Circle and Seventeenth street, Ansley Park, will also be ready September 1. This contains four, five and six-room apartments.

Seeking More Floor Space.

A move for more floor space has been made by two Atlanta concerns located in the Empire Building. The Royal Insurance Company will soon leave the eleventh floor to take the entire twelfth floor of the Hurt building and the L. P. Bottenfield Real Estate Agency will take the offices of the insurance company, moving from the tenth floor. The Bottenfield Agency has leased this half floor for five years at a price which approximates $4,000 a year. This is the third move of the company. First in small offices on the second floor of the Empire, it moved to larger offices on the tenth, and now finds it necessary again to seek more floor space.

For Public Market.

Housewives of Atlanta have revived the interest of several years ago which was displayed in a public market. Committees are being formed and it is thought that within a comparatively short time there will be a place where women can buy direct and save half a dozen profits of middlemen. Should the Plaza project ever become a reality, it is possible that the market will be placed on the site of the Union Depot. It has been suggested that $250,000 be invested in a site and from another source that $500,000 in city bonds be issued.

To Purge Peachtree Creek.

Real estate men having subdivisions in the vicinity of Peachtree Creek have become greatly interested in the suggestion that the bed of the creek be cleared from the bridge at Peachtree to Howell Mill road, about two and one-half miles, in order to prevent overflows into the lowlands during the rainy seasons. Winds from Peachtree Creek blow mosquitoes into the city, it is claimed, and there are other reasons for wanting to remedy the conditions. The effect of Peachtree Creek on land can readily be understood when it is pointed out that Peachtree road frontage at $35 a front foot and less has not had an active market, whereas property has changed hands at nearly $100 a foot a mile farther to the north.

COTTON MARKET ACTIVE ALL DAY

Erratic Trading Holds Market in Narrow Rut—Cables Weak and Weather Good.

NEW YORK, July 28.—Weakness in Liverpool cables as a result of Southern and Continental selling, coupled with private reports of rains over Sunday in Texas and Oklahoma, resulted in the local cotton market opening barely steady to-day with first prices unchanged to 10 points from Saturday's final. At the end of 15 minutes the new crop positions were fairly steady.

The detailed weather reports did not disclose as much rainfall as earlier advices had suggested and a covering movement followed the establishment of new low levels. Losses were wiped out. Besides covering of shorts there was what observers thought was buying for fresh long account. Offerings became scarce and scattered. Larger spot houses were aggressive buyers of the old crops, but August seemed in greater demand, by rallying from 11.44 to 11.60 for a net gain of 16 points from the opening, while July only advanced 8 points. New crop were heavily purchased by strong sources, aggregating a gain of 5 to 11 points from the initial level. Liverpool continued to report bearish cables and at the close the English market was 7½ to 9 points lower.

During the late forenoon the market was steady with prices firmly maintained at the early high point.

The advance in some quarters was explained by the crumbling of new and old crop positions last week, which made new low levels for the month, when August went 70 points under the best price of the month, or $3.50 a bale. These offerings were absorbed by brokers said to be buying for Liverpool account against straddle sales there. The advance came in the face of a bearish condition report of The Memphis Commercial-Appeal, which gave condition of July 25, 82.1 per cent.

At the close the market was very steady with prices showing irregularity, being 5 points higher to 3 points lower than the closing quotations of Saturday.

Following are 11 a. m. bids in New York: July, 11.75; August, 11.50; October, 11.17; January, 11.05.

Following are 10 a. m. bids in New Orleans: August, 11.60; October, 11.21; January, 11.21.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, LA., July 28.—According to reliable private information further rains occurred Saturday night in north Texas and Oklahoma.

The map to-day shows generally fair weather in the western half; cloudy in the eastern half. No rain of consequence in the West, but general rainfall in Alabama and the Atlantics. Rising temperatures in the Western States, Arkansas and Tennessee; normal in the rest of the belt. Indications are for part cloudy to fair; rising temperatures in Texas, unsettled in Oklahoma, probably some rain in the northwestern portion. Part cloudy in the central and eastern States; some scattered showers.

The Shreveport Times says cotton made rapid progress during the past two weeks, due largely to the heavy rains of last week. The dry hot spell preceding the rains has practically solved the weevil problem and there is little complaint.

First trades here were at about unchanged figures, and the market showed remarkable steadiness from the start with a pronounced disposition to buy on depressions. This was undoubtedly based on the absence of rain in the lower half of Texas, rising temperatures in the West, anticipation of an unfavorable weekly weather report tomorrow in portions of Texas and the fear of a lower August Bureau report on Friday.

STOCK MAKRET

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, July 28.—There was a broadening in speculative interest at the opening of the stock market to-day. In the early trading, stocks joined in a brisk upward movement. During that period new high records were established in many issues.

New Haven was up 1½. Great Northern preferred 1 point, while the rest of the list ruled from fractions to nearly a point above Saturday's close.

There was a varying tendency in London, but American stocks were steady.

The curb market was dull.

Traders continuing to fight the bullish tendency caused slight recessions at intervals, but on the whole the market was steady and slight upturns during the forenoon were recorded. A gain of 1⅝ by Chesapeake and Ohio was the largest gain of the day, with Union Pacific and United States Steel both advancing ⅜. Southern Pacific declined ⅛. Great Northern preferred sold around 126⅝, a fractional loss since its opening. Call money loaned at 2¼.

Trading became dull in the afternoon, although the supply showed no increase. Selling by room traders was sufficient to cause reactions in a number of important issues.

Who Makes the "Criminals?"

Did This View of It Ever Occur to You?

(Copyright, 1913.)

Much interest just now in CRIMINALS.

Much horror aroused by depravity.

Many plans more or less appropriate for making the air pure.

Many good men, politicians, women and bishops who spend the summer at the seaside are willing to spend a few days wiping "CRIME" off the earth.

What is CRIME? Who are the CRIMINALS? Who makes the criminals?

Do criminals viciously and voluntarily arise among us, eager to lead hunted lives, eager to be jailed at intervals, eager to crawl in the dark, dodge policemen, work in stripes and die in shame? Hardly.

Will you kindly and patiently follow the lives, quickly sketched, of a boy and a girl?

THE GIRL.

Born poor, born in hard luck, her father, or mother, or both, victims of long hours, poor fare, bad air and little leisure.

As a baby she struggles against fate and manages to live while three or four little brothers and sisters die and go back to kind earth.

She crawls around the rooms of a small house, a good deal in the way. She is hunted here and chased there.

She is cold in winter, ill-fed in summer, never well cared for.

She gets a little so-called education. Ill-dressed and ashamed beside the other children, she is glad to escape the education. No one at home can help her on. No one away from home cares about her.

She grows up white, sickly, like a potato sprouting in a cellar. At the corner of a fine street she sees the automobiles passing with other girls in warm furs, or in fine, cool summer dresses.

With a poor shawl around her and with heels run down she peers in at the restaurant window, to see other women leading lives very different from hers.

Steadily she has impressed upon her the fact, absolutely undeniable, that as the world is organized there is no especial place for her—certainly no comfort for her.

She finds work, perhaps. Hours as long as the daylight.

Ten minutes late—half a day's fine.

At the end of the day aching feet, aching back, system ill-fed, not enough earned to live upon honestly—and that prospect stretches ahead farther than her poor eyes can see.

"WHAT'S THE CHARGE, OFFICER?"

"Disorderly conduct, Your Honor."

There's the criminal that Society is hunting so ardently.

THE BOY.

Same story, practically.

He plays ball in the street—cuffed, if caught by the policeman.

He swings on the awning poles, trying to exercise his stunted muscles—cuffed again.

In burning July, with shirt and trousers on, he goes swimming in private ponds—caught and cuffed and handed over to the police.

He tries for work.

"What do you know?"

"I don't know nothin'; nobody ever taught me."

He can not even endure the discipline of ten hours' daily shoveling—it takes education to instill discipline, if only the education of the early pick and shovel.

He has not been taught anything. He has been turned loose in a city full of temptation. He had no real start to begin with, and no effort was ever made to repair his evil beginning.

"WHAT'S THE CHARGE, OFFICER?"

"Attempted burglary; pleads guilty."

In prison he gets an education. They teach him how to be a good burglar and not get caught. Patiently the State boards him, and educates him to be a first-rate criminal.

There's your first-rate criminal, Messrs. Bishops, good men, politicians and benevolent women.

Dear bishops, noble women, good men and scheming politicians, listen to this story:

In the South Sea Islands they have for contagious diseases a horror as great as your horror of crime.

A man or woman stricken with a loathsome disease, such as smallpox, is seized, isolated, and the individual sores of the smallpox patient are earnestly scraped with sea shells—until the patient dies. It hurts the patient a good deal—without ever curing, of course—but it relieves the feelings of the outraged good ones who wield the sea shells.

You kind-hearted creatures, hunting "crime" in great cities, are like the South Sea Islanders in their treatment of smallpox.

You ardently wield your reforming sea shells and you scrape very earnestly at the sores so well developed.

No desire here to decry your earnest efforts.

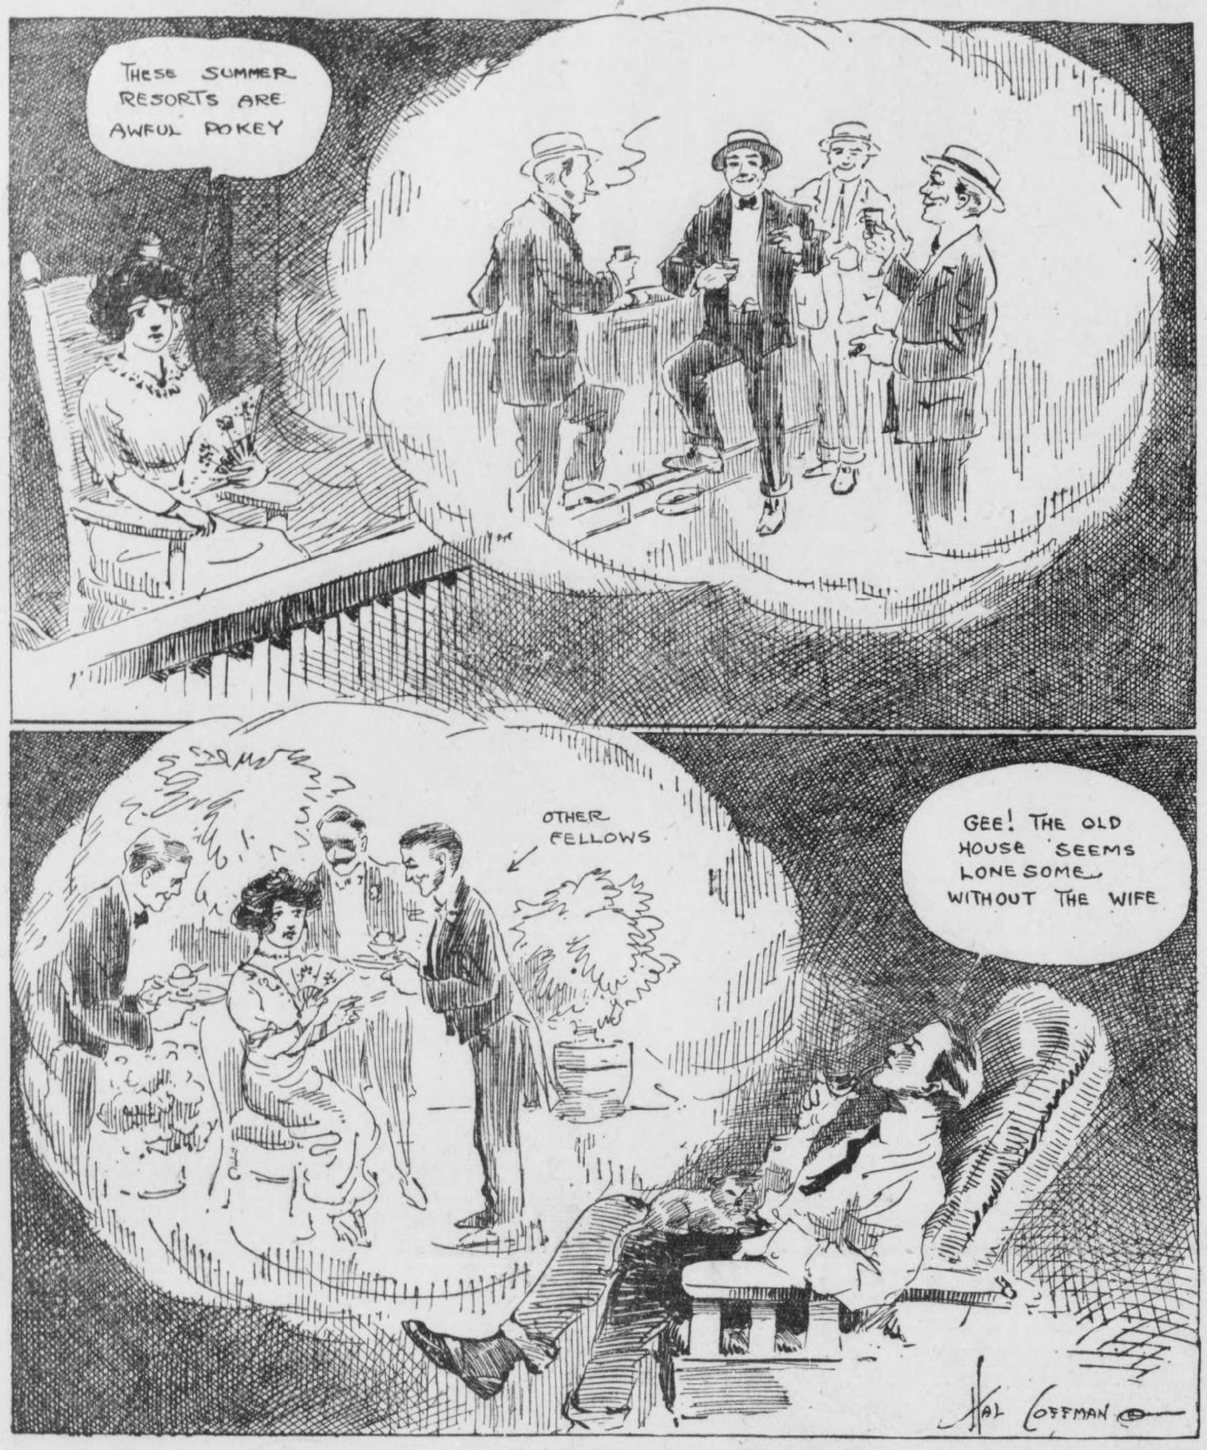

But if you ever get tired of scraping with sea shells, try vaccination, or, better still, try to take such care of youth, to give such chances and education to the young, as will save them from the least profitable of all careers—CRIME.

Scrape away with your sea shells, but try also to give a few more and a few better chances in youth to those whom you now hunt as criminals in their mature years.

God creates boys and girls, anxious to live decently.

YOUR SOCIAL SYSTEM makes criminals and fills jails.

Mysteries of Science and Nature

The Sun Is a Variable Star and Its Changes Affect the Price of a Man's Dinner---What Science's Latest Discovery Means.

By GARRETT P. SERVISS

THE recently announced conclusion of Professor Frost, the head of the Yerkes Observatory, that the sun is a variable star is in accord with what has been said repeatedly in these columns. It is a tremendously important fact, and its demonstration is mainly due to the labors of Messrs. C. G. Abbott and F. E. Fowle, of the Smithsonian Institution. Their statements have been confirmed by the observation of astronomers in Europe.

The sun has not suddenly become variable; it has been variable for ages, but not until now has any measurement of its variability been obtained. It has taken ten years to eliminate all the possible sources of error in the work, one of the principal difficulties being to discriminate between the effect of changing conditions of the earth's atmosphere affecting its ability to transmit the radiation from the sun to the surface of the globe, and changes occurring in the sun itself.

Minor Changes in the Sun Affect the Earth's Temperature.

It seems now to be certain that the intensity of the rays which the sun sends to the earth often vary at least as much as five per cent in periods of only a week or ten days. These variations, of course, directly affect the temperature and the character of the weather. Then there are variations of a much longer period, and of greater general extent, indicated by the waxing and waning of black spots on the sun's disk.

When there are many and large spots on the sun, its radiation is not diminished, but increased, and when they are few and small, as at the present time, the radiation, in general, falls off. But at all times, apparently, minor changes are going on in the sun, which produce quite sudden alterations in the temperature of the earth.

As has just been said, we are now at a period of minimum in the sun spots, but in about four years from now they will be numerous again, and then a general increase of the solar radiation is to be expected. It takes, on the average, about seven years for the sun spots to decline from a maximum to a minimum, and about four years for them to rise again from a minimum to a maximum. Meanwhile the radiation is not steady at any time, except for a few days.

The practical importance of the recent studies of these things is seen in Professor Frost's announcement that the time is near at hand when it will be possible to foretell the general character of the seasons long in advance.

He thinks that that may be achieved within about twenty-five years.

Then, if the present promise is kept, it will be possible for farmers and growers of all kinds of crops to know in advance what they have to expect, and to govern their sowings and plantings accordingly.

The sun will be recognized as the great dictator in agricultural affairs, and they will be the most successful cultivators who heed the hints which he gives of impending changes in his humor. They will watch his face, with the aid of the astronomers, as Nero's courtiers watched the play of their tyrant's features.

But the mere fact that those who have been conducting these researches think it possible to foretell the varying effects of the solar radiation upon the earth shows that even in his most variable moods the sun is subjected to a law which he cannot violate. It is what that law is and how it operates in order to forsee its effects. Much still depends upon a better knowledge of the earth's atmosphere, for when a sudden change takes place in the solar radiation the effect is not immediately felt on the earth. The atmosphere acts as a kind of buffer, and takes up the shock, afterward distributing it in a more gradual and gentle manner.

Change in Solar Radiation Might Bring About an Indian Famine.

A graphic illustration of the importance of this matter to every human being is given in a remark of Professor Langley's which Professor Frost has quoted:

"Though the most unformed nebula may hold the germs of future worlds, yet for us these possibilities are but interesting conjectures, for every nebula might be wiped out of the sky to-night without affecting the price of a laborer's dinner, while a small change in the solar radiation may conceivably cause the deaths of numberless men in an Indian famine."

Professor Langley's forecast has been fully justified by the recent investigations, and we may now say that the price of every man's dinner is affected by changes in the sun that had not been discovered ten years ago.

Time's Changes

By MINNA IRVING.

I CHANCED to meet old Father Time,
It does not matter where;
He wore a leather coat and cap,
And had a jaunty air.
A pair of goggles hid his eyes,
His boots were furred inside;
I viewed the change with much amaze,
"Where is your scythe?" I cried.

"It can not be that you at last
No longer mean to mow
Unhappy mortals like the grass
Before you as you go?"
"The scythe," the ancient spirit sighed,
"Is slow and out of date,
I use an aeroplane instead
To do the work of fate."

Divorce

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

Copyright, 1913, by Star Company.

THINKING of one thing all day long, at night
I fall asleep, brain weary and heart sore;
But only for a little while. At three,
Sometimes at two, o'clock I wake and lie,
Staring out into darkness; while my thoughts
Begin the weary treadmill-toil again,
From that white marriage morning of our youth
Down to this dreadful hour:
I see your face
Lit with the lovelight of the honeymoon;
I hear your voice, that lingered on my name
As if it loved each letter; and I feel
The clinging of your arms about my form,
Your kisses on my cheek—and long to break
The anguish of such memories with tears,
But cannot weep; the fountain has run dry.

We were so young, so happy, and so full
Of keen sheer joy of life. I had no wish
Outside your pleasure; and you loved me so
That when I sometimes felt a woman's need
For more serene expression of man's love
(The need of rest in calm affection's bay
And not sail ever on the stormy main),
Yet would I rouse myself to your desire;
Meet ardent kiss with kisses just as warm;
So nothing I could give should be denied.

And then our children came. Deep in my soul,
From the first hour of conscious motherhood,
I knew I should conserve myself for this
Most holy office; knew God meant it so.
Yet even then, I held your wishes first;
And by my double duties lost the bloom
And freshness of my beauty; and beheld
A look of disapproval in your eyes.

But with the coming of our precious child,
The lover's smile, tinged with the father's pride,
Returned again; and helped to make me strong;
And life was very sweet for both of us.

Another, and another birth, and twice
The little white hearse paused beside our door
And took away some portion of my youth
With my sweet babies. At the first you seemed
To suffer with me, standing very near;
But when I wept too long you turned away.
And I was hurt, not realizing then
My grief was selfish. I could see the change
Which motherhood and sorrow made in me;
And when I saw the change that came to you,
Saw how your eyes looked past me when you talked,
And when I missed the love tone from your voice,
I did that foolish thing that women do:
Complained and cried, accused you of neglect,
And made myself obnoxious in your sight.

And often, after you had left my side,
Alone I stood before my mirror, mad
With anger at my pallid cheeks, my dull
Unlightened eyes, my shrunken mother-breasts,
And wept, and wept, and faded more and more.
How could I hope to win back wandering love,
And make new flames in dying embers leap
By such ungracious means?

And then She came,
Firm bosomed, round of cheek, with such young eyes,
And all the ways of youth. I, who had died
A thousand deaths in waiting the return
Of that old love look to your face once more—
Died yet again and went straight into hell
When I beheld it come at her approach.

My God, my God, how have I borne it all!
Yet since she had the power to make that look—
The power to sweep the ashes from your heart
Of burned-out love for me, and light new fires,
One thing remained for me—to let you go.
I had no wish to keep the empty frame
From which the priceless picture had been wrenched.
Nor do I blame you; it was not your fault;
You gave me all that most men can give—love
Of youth, of beauty, and of passion; and
I gave you full return; my womanhood
Matched well your manhood. Yet had you grown ill,
Or old, and unattractive from some cause,
(Less close than was my service unto you)
I should have clung the tighter to you, dear;
And loved you, loved you, loved you more and more.

I grow so weary thinking of these things;
Day in, day out; and half the awful nights.

Solferino

By REV. THOMAS B. GREGORY.

THE battle of Solferino, won by Napoleon III and the Sardinian King from the Austrians fifty-four years ago, was one of the costliest of victories, a boomerang, the like of which is but seldom found on the pages of history.

Napoleon III, the Don Quixote of sovereigns, went far out of his way to interfere in the quarrel between Austria and Sardinia, and bitterly was he paid for it.

Within itself Solferino was a splendid triumph. Some 120,000 French and Sardinians beat to a finish some 170,000 Austrians, and the Emperor's cup of glory was sparkling to the brim! Solferino was well calculated to remind men of Austerlitz and Marengo and of the great captain whose genius had for so long led the soldiers of France from victory to victory as though they had been an army of demigods.

So far so good. But there was coming, all unseen by the victory of Solferino an aftermath of woe and misery.

Solferino precipitated a meeting between Napoleon and Joseph (July 11, at Villafranca), the result of which was the Treaty of Zurich, which, among other things, wrested Lombardy from Austria, thus materially weakening her among the family of European nations.

But the weakening of Austria carried along with it the strengthening of Prussia. If there was a time when Bismarck laughed more heartily than ever before, it was when the news came to him of that Lombardy matter. The great Chancellor must have laughed himself well-nigh mortal, for he saw just what it meant. He saw in advance the war of 1866, the struggle between Austria and Prussia for the leadership of the German States, the weakened state in which Austria would have to contend against the greatly improved condition of Prussia, and the final Prussian triumph at Konigratz.

But the clear-eyed Bismarck saw even farther than that. He saw Austria humbled and dismissed from the stage; he saw Prussia at the head of a united Germany; and, what was more to the point, he saw the Germans "marching all one way" on to Paris, to humble France much worse than France had humbled the Hapsburg.

NEGRO WATCHMAN SWEARS FRANK ACTED ODDLY DAY OF CRIME

Here are the important developments in the trial of Leo M. Frank for the murder of Mary Phagan.

Jury chosen at 1:30 p. m.

Mrs. Coleman, girl's mother, takes stand after recess, at 3:15, and tells of Mary leaving for the factory 11:45 a. m. on April 26.

George W. Epps, boy companion of Mary Phagan, repeats his story that he had an engagement to meet her on the afternoon of the fatal day.

Newt Lee, night watchman at the factory, tells his story of the finding of the body and subsequent developments. He says Frank acted queerly the day of the crime, and is cross-examined by Luther Rosser.

Court adjourned at 5:15 after an interesting session.

Mrs. J. W. Coleman, mother of murdered Mary Phagan, was the first witness for the prosecution at the trial of Leo Frank Monday afternoon. After answering several questions she broke down completely when the solicitor exhibited the little lavender skirt worn by her daughter when she last saw her alive. She covered her face with a fan and for several minutes could not answer a question.

The first question asked her was:

"What is your name?"

"Mrs. J. W. Coleman."

"When did you last see Mary Phagan alive?"

"April 26 at 11:45."

"What was she going to do when she lfet home?"

"She was going to the pencil factory to draw her pay."

Not Yet 14 Years Old.

Q. What did she eat before leaving?—A. Cabbage and bread.

Q. What was the age?—A. Nearly 14 years.

Q. Was she pretty or an ugly girl?—She was very pretty.

At this point Mrs. Coleman's voice began faltering.

Q. Did she have dimples in her cheeks?—A. Two pretty ones.

Q. What did she wear when you saw her the last time?—A lavender dress trimmed in lace.

Shows Victim's Dress.

Here Solicitor Dorsey took a large suitcase from the floor and opened it, and laid before the witness the clothes taken from Mary Phagan's body. It was then that Mrs. Coleman broke down and no more questions were asked for several minutes.

Between sobs, Mrs. Coleman, identified the clothes of Mary Phagan, which were laid at her feet. Deputy Miner gave her a glass of water. Solicitor Dorsey closed his questioning and Mr. Rosser took up the cross-examination.

Q. What trimming was on Mary's hat?—A. Pale blue ribbon and some small pink flowers.

Q. How far do you live from the car line?—A. Two blocks.

Boy Accompanied Her.

Q. Is there a store there?—A. Yes.

Q. Who kept the store?—A. Mrs. Smith.

Q. Do you know that Mary caught a car immediately leaving home at 11:45 o'clock?—A. Yes, she caught a car in five or seven minutes.

Q. Do you know the boy who was with her?—A. Yes, Epps.

Solicitor Dorsey objected, desiring to know who the boy was and what about him.

"It is necessary for me to know the relation between little Mary Phagan and this boy," answered Mr. Rosser.

"I don't know what's on his mind," declared Dorsey. "We ought to know if he intends to endeavor to impeach this witness.

"We are simply trying to find how Mary Phagan regarded this boy."

The cross-examination was resumed.

State Objects Again.

Q. Isn't it true that Mary told you that she detested Epps—that she didn't like him?

Dorsey objected again and Attorney Rosser withdrew his question.

Q. Didn't you tell L. P. Whitfield that Mary told you she detested Epps?

Objection again by the State, claiming that the question was immaterial and was mere hearsay.

Rosser said: "I am going to show the improbability of Mary Phagan making an engagement to meet this boy Epps."

Objection was overruled.

Says Girl Made Remark.

Mrs. Coleman finally replied that she thought Mary had made that remark.

Mrs. Coleman was excused with the intimation that she might again be called to testify.

Following Mrs. Coleman, George Epps was called to the witness stand. Solicitor Dorsey opened the questioning.

Q. Where do you live?—A. No. 246 Ross street.

Q. How old are you?—A. Fourteen.

Q. How long have you known Mary Phagan?—One year.

Q. When did you see her last alive?—A. Saturday morning, April 26.

Q. Where were you?—A. I came to town with her.

Q. Where did you catch the car?—A. At Lindsey street.

Q. What time?—A. Ten to twelve, before (exhibiting Mary Phagan's

AMERICA WINS DAVIS TENNIS TROPHY

McLaughlin Brings Cup Back Home by Victory Over Dickson of England.

Special Cable to The Georgian.

WIMBLEDON, ENGLAND, July 28. The Davis trophy, the most sought-for cup in the tennis world, which has been away from the United States since 1903, will come back to America.

The United States team, after beating the Australians in the preliminary games in New York last June and working their way up to the challenge round by defeating the German and Canadian teams in England, today won the trophy for the United States by defeating the English defenders.

Maurice E. McLoughlin, the young Californian, brought victory to his country by defeating C. P. Dixon in three straight sets in the single match to-day. Although his service was faulty at the beginning of the match to-day, McLoughlin soon got into his stride.

He won the first set after a hard-fought set-to, the score being 8-6.

From then on the issue was never in doubt, the American proving himself the master of the Englishman at all stages of the second and third sets, winning the former 6-3 and the latter 6-2.

The match for the trophy began on Friday, when McLoughlin was defeated by J. C. Parke, the Irish champion. R. Norris Williams, of Philadelphia, evened up matters when he defeated Dixon in the other single match that day.

Saturday the Americans jumped into the foreground, when McLoughlin and Harold H. Hacket, the double team, defeated Dixon and H. Roper Barrett.

McLoughlin's play, which was a little off color on Friday, was much improved Saturday and to-day. His individual skill did much to bring the cup back to America.

In the semi-final game between Parks and Williams, the Englishman won after a hard match of five sets. The score: 6-2, 5-7, 5-7, 6-4, 6-2. This defeat did not have any bearing on the general result.

ENGINEERS QUARREL; 1 KILLED

Sam Jackson Is Fatally Shot by Grover Cleveland Partee.

Sam Jackson, a freight engineer on the Georgia Railroad, was shot and fatally wounded by Grover Cleveland Partee, also an engineer, at the roundhouse in Inman Park about 3 o'clock Monday afternoon.

According to witnesses of the shooting, Jackson had just come in from a run, and on leaving his engine met Partee. It is said that there had been bad feling between the two men for some time, and after a few words, Partee drew a revolver and fired one time, the bullet striking Jackson in the neck.

The Grady ambulance was at once called, and the wounded man rushed to the hospital, but he died on the operating table without ever regaining consciousness.

Men at the roundhouse held Partee until the arrival of the police, when he was taken to the station. The cause of the murder is not yet known.

Dallas Girl Typist Slain at Her Desk

DALLAS, TEX., July 28.—Miss Florence T. Brown, a stenographer, was murdered to-day as she sat at her desk. Her throat was cut and her left arm was mangled, evidently by a man's teeth.

None of the members of the real estate firm who employed her were in the offices at the time she was attacked. Bruises on her body showed that the girl had fought hard for her life.

Twenty-five young men were arrested as suspects in connection with the girl's murder. The police the arrests were entirely precautionary, and that they have no strong evidence as yet. With so many persons jailed, it was further believed that danger of a lynching would be minimized.

Pyron, of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen; E. E. Skelton, of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, and J. F. Mayfield, of the Order of Railroad Telegraphers.

'Artificial' Wine Must Be Labeled

WASHINGTON, July 28.—Secretary of Agriculture Houston has informed the California members of Congress that he will require all artificial wins sold in interstate commerce to carry labels showing the compounds of which it is made.

He states that his department will not be able to control the wine which is shipped into States in bulk and there fraudulently re-bottled and labeled.

Shots Fired in War At Michigan Mines

CALUMET, MICH., July 28.—Shots fired over the heads of more than 100 striking copper miners who had gathered at the powder house of the Isle Royal mine near here to-day scattered the crowd and prevented the strikers driving away the men at the pumps.

Q. What did they say to each other? —A. Mr. Gantt said he wanted to get his shoes. Mr. Frank said he thought the boy had thrown them into the trash basket. Mr. Gantt asked what color they were. Mr. Frank said they were tan. Mr. Gantt said his were black.

Q. What did Mr. Frank do then?—A. He dropped his head and said for me to go up with Mr. Gantt to get the shoes.

Q. What did you find?—A. We found black shoes and tan shoes.

Frank Called Him.

Q. Did Mr. Frank call you over the 'phone that night?—A. Yes, he called me about 7 o'clock.

Q. What did he say?—A. He said: "How is everything?" I said everything was all right. He said "Goodbye."

Q. Did you hear from him any more?—A. Not until Sunday morning.

Solicitor Dorsey then exhibited a diagram of the scene of the crime, drawn by Bert Green, the Georgian staff artist. By this diagram Lee explained the lighting system of the building.

Veniremen Keenly Watched.

Q. What did Frank tell you about the lights?—A. Frank told me to keep the lights on the street floor burning bright so that officers could see in. I always lighted up on Saturday at 5 o'clock.

Q. What did he tell you about the basement lights?—A. He told me to keep it burning bright all the time.

Left Lights Burning Brightly.

Q. How did you leave it Saturday morning when you left the factory?—A. It was burning bright.

Q. How was it when you saw it again Saturday evening?—A. Have you ever seen a lightning bug when you knock him down in the grass? Well, it was just about like that.

Q. What did you do?—A. I went down and turned it up.

Q. What time did you make your rounds?—A. Regular on the hour and half hour.

Q. Did you make them regularly Saturday evening and night?—A. I never missed missed a one. I had a peg I put in the hole and I am sure I never missed a punch.

Knows Nothing of Elevator.

Q. What about the elevator?—A. I didn't know nothing about that.

Q. What about the street door and the office door?—A. They were closed.

Q. What kind of doors were they? —The kind you pull down.

Q. Was it your duty to close those doors if they were open?—A. Yes.

Solicitor Dorsey here asked Lee to tell the jury in his own words of going into the basement at 3 o'clock and telling what he found there.

Q. Just how did you get up to the body?—A. I couldn't tell you just how I did get up to that body, but I did get up there.

Q. What did you do there?—A. I called up the police after I tried to get Mr. Frank, who I was trying to get when the police came.

Tried to Call Frank.

Q. When was the last time you punched the clock?—A. At 3 o'clock, just before I found the body.

Q. When did you see Frank again? —A. Not until after the police had arrested him the next day.

Q. How long did you try to get Frank?—A. About eight minutes.

Q. How many times?—A. One time.

Q. Did it take long to get the police?—A. No, they answered as soon as I called.

Q. What time did you see him the next day?—A. I don't know just what time.

Q. Where were you?—A. At the factory.

Frank Said Nothing.

Q. What did Mr. Frank say?—A. He didn't say nothing, just hung his head.

Q. Was there an examination of the clock?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who examined it?—A. Mr. Frank did. Mr. Darley was standing there.

Q. What did he say?—A. He said it was all right.

Q. What did that mean?—A. That meant that I had made all the punches every half hour from 6 o'clock.

Q. Did you see a pencil in that clock?—A. Yes, I put it there the second Sunday night I come to work there so that I could punch right.

Q. Was the time slip all right?—A. I don't know.

Q. You have never been at liberty since, have you?—A. No, sir; they grabbed me and said I did it as soon as I showed them the body.

Q. When did you see Frank again after that?—A. We went to the station in the same automobile.

Q. Did you have a conversation with him the next Thursday night?—A. I don't know what night it was, but they took me out of my cell and said they were going to let me and Mr. Frank have it out. They handcuffed me to a chair before he came. When he came, I told him it was mighty hard to be handcuffed to a chair about something I didn't know anything about. He said: "What's the difference." "Well," I s aid, "Mr. Frank, I don't know nothing about it, except finding the body." "Yes," he said, "if you keep that up, we both will go to heil."

Q. What did you say then?—A. The police came in then.

Q. Were you willing to come back to the factory that Saturday at 4 o'clock?—A. I told Mr. Frank Saturday was my shortest day, but I agreed to come back early.

Q. What was Mr. Frank's manner when you came in that Saturday afternoon?—A. Well, I never noticed his face, but he was rubbing his hands like he was worried.

Rosser Takes Witness.

At this point the State rested their examination of Lee and he was turned over to the defense for cross-examination. Mr. Rosser lead with the questioning for counsel for Frank.

Q. Did you testify at the Coroner's inquest?—A. I testified before something.

Q. How many times have you told this to Mr. Dorsey?—A. One time.

Has "Good Recollection."

Q. How many times did Mr. Black go over this statement with you?—A. I don't know; there have been so many I don't know them all.

Q. You have told this story many times, haven't you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you always told it the same way?—A. Yes, sir; I got a good recollection.

Mr. Rosser was here insistent to know if Lee told about Frank appearing frightened when he met Gantt. He asked the negro if he didn't say Frank had said he gave the pair of shoes to a boy. Lee maintained that there were no contradictions in his statement.

"No, sir," he said, "you got that wrong."

Q. How many Saturdays were you at the pencil factory?—A. Four.

Q. What time did you usually get there on Saturday?—A. At 12 o'clock, to get paid.

Q. Did you stay there after that?—A. No, I got my keys and went away until 5.

Tells How He Called Frank.

Q. Your sleep was broken at 12 o'clock every Saturday except this one, was it not?—A. Yes.

Q. The first Saturday you were there what was Mr. Frank doing?—A. I don't know. I would have hollered to him, but he saw me and checked me in.

Q. How many times did you holler at him?—A. Three, Saturdays.

Q. What did you holler?—A. All right, Mr. Frank.

Q. What would he say?—A. He would just come out of the office.

Q. How far away?—A. About fifteen or sixteen feet.

Q. No closer than that?—A. It might have been a little closer.

Q. Isn't it true you told the Coroner that he had his head bound and was rubbing his hands?—A. I did.

Compares Former Testimony.

Q. Let's see if that is what you said. (Rosser examines testimony before Coroner.)—A. I can't tell what you got there.

Q. You said Frank told you to go out and have some fun.—A. That's wrong; he said have a good time.

Q. You never said anything before the Coroner about there being a place to sleep?—A. I told him there was, but they never asked me where it was.

Q. If the front door was locked, could you get into the basement from the first floor?—A. Yes.

Q. If the office door was locked, could you get into the basement without using the elevator?—A. No, sir.

Q. When you came back the last time, if Mr. Frank was in his office, could any one have gone anywhere in the factory without Mr. Frank seeing him or knowing him?—A. Yes, if he didn't hear him.

New Line of Questioning.

Q. If Mr. Frank was in his private office, and the front door locked, could anyone go over that whole factory without him knowing it?—A. I don't know, sir.

Q. Well, you did do it the Saturday before, didn't you?—A. Yes, sir, I did.

Q. All the shutters in the factory except a few on the first floor near the front were closed, were they not? —A. Yes, sir.

Q. There was a light burning on the second floor near the clock, was there not?—A. He told me to go there every little while to look after the fires.

Q. Mr. Frank thought you went there every half hour?

When Lee did not answer, Solicitor Dorsey interrupted, saying that he did not want the negro committed by silence.

Lawyers in Clash.

"We want silence some times," said Mr. Rosser; "sometimes its more powerful. I am asking these questions and silence is one of my privileges. For the prosecution to interrupt is deliberately obstructing the testimony without intending to."

"I will make him answer," said Solicitor Dorsey, "when I get him."

"Yes," said Mr. Rosser, "I know you will. Probably you can get him to answer better than I can."

"I want the truth," rejoined Solicitor Dorsey.

"Yes, we all do in our partisan way," replied Rosser.

All the force of attorneys at the table for the defense watched with keen eyes every man examined for the jury, and frequently referred to a voluminous record containing the names of all the veniremen and detailed statements of their history and associations so far as these might have a bearing on their desirability as jurors to pass on Leo Frank's guilt or innocence.

The keenest interest was manifested by those in the crowded little courtroom as the strategies of the brilliant lawyers were revealed during the examination.

State Had Veniremen's Records.

The thoroughness with which the Solicitor and his assistants had canvassed the history of every venireman and had investigated whether or not he had ever expressed an opinion on the guilt or innocence of the accused was demonstrated when W. W. Hemmett, a salesman for the Kingsbury Shoe Company, was being examined as to his qualifications.

"Have you ever said you thought Frank was guilty?" Mr. Dorsey inquired.

"No, I never have," replied Hemmett.

Here the Solicitor referred to some notes at hand and proceeded to call to Hemmett's recollection a certain talk he had with acquaintances at a certain time. Heminett was forced to admit that he had talked of the case at that time, but declared that he had not expressed a definite opinion.

"I only said I would have to hear some evidence before I would believe Frank was guilty," he told Judge Roan.

He was rejected for cause.

Defense Equally Alert.

The defense showed that it was exactly as vigilant when the next venireman was examined. As soon as A. L. Bellingrath, of No. 91 Milledge avenue, arose from his seat, Attorney Arnold was on his feet prepared to state the objection of the defense. He pointed out that Bellingrath was the brother of Henry Bellingrath who has been employed in the Solicitor's office during the Phagan investigation and that he was reported to have expressed an opinion on the guilt of Frank.

A shrewd bit of strategy was used by Solicitor Dorsey and Attorney Hooper in accepting the two negroes whose names were among the veniremen.

By doing this they forced the defense to use up two of their twenty challenges if they did not desire to have negroes on the jury. With Jim Conley, a negro, likely to be indicted for the murder in the event that Frank is cleared, the defense had no intention of allowing them to pass on Frank's guilt and promptly struck them. The two negroes were Earl Davis and E. E. Hawkins.

May Summon Reporters.

When court opened for the afternoon session, Attorney Arnold announced:

"We may want to use some of the members of the press as witnesses. I don't want to put them under the court rule which would exclude them from the courtroom."

Solicitor Dorsey hereupon arose and said:

"All right, but I want to reserve the right to do so at a later date if necessary."

Defense Loses First Clash.

The attorneys for Leo M. Frank lost out in their first skirmish with the prosecution, being compelled to read their list of witnesses against their wishes and their vigorous protests.

They evened up matters by obtaining from Solicitor Dorsey the concession of honoring the subpenas lecus tecum issued by the defense and demanding the production in court of all the affidavits of Jim Conley. After a short passage between Attorney Arnold for Frank and Solicitor Dorsey that the list must be read, the judge ruled, and the list was read by Attorney Stiles Hopkins.

The list included employees of the National Pencil Factory, where the murdered girl worked; members of Frank's immediate family, and other relatives and associates of the accused man, members of the same fraternal orders, acquaintances who saw Frank on the day of the crime and classmates in college.

Jurymen Chosen.

The reading of the last names came as a complete surprise. It developed that the defense had scoured the country for persons who had known Frank when he was a student at Cornell. They were subpenaed to bring the character testimony in his behalf up to the time he began his business career.

The picking of the jury proved less difficult than anticipated, twelve men being obtained before 1:30.

List of Jurors.

Here are the jurors chosen:

A. H. Henslee, No. 74 Oak street, a traveling salesman for the Franklin Buggy Company; F. V. L. Smith, No. 181 Cherokee avenue, manufacturer's agent, with offices in the Empire Building; J. F. Higdon, a contractor, No. 108 Ormewood avenue; F. E. Winburn, No. 213 Lucile avenue, claim agent Atlanta and West Point Railroad; A. L. Wisby, No. 31 Hood street, cashier of the Buckeye Oil Company; W. M. Jeffries, a real estate man, with offices at 318 Empire Building; Marcellus Johemming, No. 161 James street, a machine shop foreman, with offices at No. 281 Marietta street; M. L. Woodward, cashier King Hardware Company, No. 182 Park avenue; J. T. Osburn, an optician for Hawkes', was chosen from the fifth panel to be the ninth juror; D. Townsend, No. 84 Whitehall terrace, cashier Central Bank and Trust Corporation.

W. S. Medcalf, No. 136 Kirkwood avenue, circulation department of The Atlanta Journal.

C. J. Bosshardt, No. 216 Bryan street, pressman Foote & Davies.

Bosshardt, the twelfth juror chosen, was the last venireman in the last panel that had been called before the court at the opening of court in the morning. He was picked at exactly 1:25 o'clock and at 1:30 the recess was taken until 3 o'clock.

Attorney Rosser took very little part in the selection of the jury, except to interject a suggestion now and then. He evidently was reserving his strength for the real struggle to come.

Shortly before 2 o'clock Leo Frank was taken into a room adjoining the juryroom, where he was served with a special dinner provided for him by his relatives. Frank's mother and wife were allowed to converse with him while he ate the dinner. He will remain in this room until the court reconvenes at 3 o'clock.

Wife and Mother With Frank.

Frank, accompanied by his wife and his mother, was brought into the courtroom at 10:30 o'clock. The striking of the jury was begun at once.

A half dozen of Frank's friends interrupted the order of the court for several minutes by clustering about him and shaking hands with him.

If there was any fear in the heart of the young prisoner it did not show in his calm features. He seemed perfectly assured and self-possessed. He nodded pleasantly to the judge and greeted his friends with a smiles.

After the stir had subsided, covering the entrance of Frank, his wife and mother, the trio took seats in a semi-circle just below the bench.

Frank and his mother took a good look at the jurors in the first panel that was brought in. The prisoner scrutinized each one closely as he was quizzed by the prosecutor to determine his qualifications.

Wife Fixes Gaze on Dorsey.

Mrs. Frank displayed no sign of emotion until she suddenly found that she was facing Solicitor Dorsey. Then anger appeared to blaze from her eyes She seldom removed her gaze from the Solicitor's face during the forenoon. If Dorsey was aware of the young woman's scrutiny, he made no sign and proceeded with the case in rapid fashion.

DANGEROUS CALOMEL GOING OUT OF USE

A Safer, More Reliable Remedy Has Taken Its Place in the Drug Store and in the Home.

A few years ago, men, women and children took calomel for a sluggish liver and for constipation. They took risks when they did so, for calomel is a dangerous drug. Your family doctor will be the first to tell this if he discovers you dosing yourself with calomel.

But the drug trade has found a safer, more pleasant remedy than calomel in Dodson's Liver Tone.

Dealers tell us that their drug store sells Dodson's Liver Tone in practically every case of biliousness and liver trouble where calomel used to be taken.

Dodson's Liver Tone is a vegetable liver tonic that is absolutely harmless for children and grown people. It sells for 50 cents a bottle and is guaranteed to be entirely satisfactory by all druggists who will refund your money with a smile if it does not give quick, gentle relief without any of calomel's unpleasant after-effects.

THRONG AT THE COURTHOUSE DOORS AS THE TRIAL OPENED

FRANK, FEELING TIPTOP, SMILING AND CONFIDENT, IS UP LONG BEFORE TRIAL

Frank was escorted from the Tower to the courthouse shortly after 6 o'clock in the morning, nearly three hours before the trial was scheduled to begin. This was done to avoid the curious crowd which it was expected would be about the courthouse and thronging the corridors at 9 o'clock.

Frank was up and dressed and freshly shaven when Deputy Sheriff Plennie Miner appeared before his cell at the early hour.

"How are you feeling this morning, Mr. Frank?" the deputy inquired.

"Tip top, only I'm mighty hungry," replied Frank.

Exhibiting the same poised confidence that has characterized him through three months since he was locked in a cell in the county jail, the young factory superintendent chatted freely with Miner on the way to the courthouse.

Sure He Will Be Freed.

He was attired in a natty light gray mohair suit and wore a fancy gray tie. His face was fuller and he appeared slightly heavier than when he was arrested shortly after the murder of the Phagan girl. He seemed cheerful and in the best of health.

"I am very sure of acquittal," he said, as he arrived at the courthouse. "I am glad that the trial is about to begin after this long wait. I have no fear of the outcome. I am not only innocent of the terrible crime, but I am innocent of any knowledge of it, save as the information has come to me since the officers came to my house that morning three months ago."

At this moment E. C. Essenbach, a relative of Frank, appeared with a tempting breakfast which was spread in the prisoners' room at the courthouse. Frank gave ocular proof that his appetite had not suffered from his long confinement as he proceeded to make way with the delicacies prepared for him.

Frank greeted his relative cheerfully and conversed with him for more than an hour. The topic seldom was on the crime or the trial which was about to begin. Long before the time set for the judge to take the bench other friends and relatives of the prisoner had appeared and some of them were permitted to talk to him.

Conley Ready For the Stand.

Jim Conley, Frank's accuser, was made ready for the trial early in the morning, although it was not probable that he would be called during the day.

He was given a shave and a new suit of clothes, as he had worn for the last three months the same shabby garments that he had on at the time he was arrested while washing a shirt at the National Pencil Factory.

Conley said that he was ready to go on the witness stand at an instant's notice. He declared that he would stick to the same story that he told in his last affidavit and which he has since repeated many times for the benefit of Solicitor Dorsey.

"If they had just let me face Mr. Frank, I could have made him tell the truth long before this," he asserted.

Less than half a hundred persons were waiting about the courthouse at 8 o'clock, an hour before the time set for the beginning of the trial. It was thought that not a large crowd would be clamoring for admission to the courtroom as it had become quite generally known that the small room would accommodate hardly more than the witnesses and the veniremen and that it would be necessary to exclude practically all spectators.

Much Preparation Made.

For no trial in the history of Georgia have such elaborate arrangements been made for the comfort of the comparatively small number of spectators who will gain admission, the attorneys who will handle the case, the jury and the newspaper men. Deputy Sheriff Plennie Miner has received much praise for the splendid preparations made.

Electric fans have been installed at every window and on the railing separating the spectators' seats from the bar, ozonators have been placed to keep the air purified. It probably will be the coolest and best ventilated place in Atlanta.

Not more than 250 spectators will be admitted. Approximately that number of chairs have been placed outside the inclosure. When they are filled the doors will be closed and no one else will be allowed in. No one will be permitted to occupy standing room.

The usual custom of permitting disinterested attorneys to occupy seats inside the bar will not be followed, and this particular part of the courtroom will be less crowded than during the average criminal trial.

How They Will Line Up.

Prosecuting Attorney Dorsey and at least five assistants will occupy a table directly in front of the bench and witness stand with the jury box close on the righthand side. Attorney Rosser with his assistants and the accused will be seated at a table to the left of the State's and farther away from the jury. The table for newspaper men is back of the State's table. The arrangements were agreed upon by the attorneys and the judge.

The table for the defense was selected by Attorney Rosser with a view to the number of persons who would wish to be near Frank during the trial. Seats have been arranged to the back of the table to accommodate at least 30 persons, friends and relatives of the accused, who have visited him constantly since he was confined at the Tower.

Deputy Sheriff Plennie Miner, who will have charge of the crowd and keeping order in court, will also have charge of the prisoners. Long before any crowd congregated around the courthouse Frank and Lee were brought from the Tower and placed in the room reserved for them. When court opened Frank took his place at the table reserved for his attorneys.

The court rule to segregate the witnesses will, of course, be enforced, but it may not be until twelve men have qualified as jurors, which will hardly be before the middle of the week.

When the witnesses are segregated they will be kept in the large courtroom on the floor above the trial room. A bailiff will be placed in the hall and one on the door of the witness chamber, and as the names are called they will be brought from the floor above to the court.

It is probable some rule will be made to keep the witnesses for the State and the defense separated, in which event the third floor of the building would have to be used.

The jury room was selected with a great deal of care. It is almost inaccessible from the outside and large and airy. Its windows are about twenty feet above an alleyway that runs on either side. Deputies will be kept in the alley to keep anyone from getting this close to the room.

From the time a juror is acceptable to both sides until the conclusion of the case he will not be allowed to go to his home or communicate with anyone except a fellow juror.

The least of the deputies' troubles will not be in handling the crowd that will gain admission to the court, but in handling the crowd that will daily congregate on the outside and wait through the day for news of the proceedings in the trial. Ten deputies and as many members of the county police will be on duty on the streets around the building.

Climate Failed; Medicine Effective

Rest, fresh air and well-cooked, nourishing food do help many persons suffering with Lung Trouble. But in many cases the disease is only temporarily "arrested," and something more is needed. Eckman's Alterative is a medicine for Throat and Lung Troubles and has brought about many complete recoveries—in many cases where the surroundings were not ideal. Judging by the many reports of recoveries received, we believe it should be used in every case of Lung Trouble. A remarkable case follows:

Weldon, Ill.

"My Dear Sir: Through your instrumentality I have been saved from a premature grave. On December 14, 1904, I was taken with Typhoid Pneumonia which developed into Consumption. In February, 1905, I went to Fort Worth, Texas, and later to Canon City, Colorado. After being there two weeks, my physician informed me that my case was hopeless. Three weeks later I returned home, weighing 103 pounds, the doctor having given me no assurance of reaching there alive.

"On July 14, 1905, I began taking Eckman's wonderful remedy for Consumption. To-day I weigh 158 pounds. I am stout and well and can do any kind of work about my grain elevator."

ARTHUR WEBB.

(Affidavit)

Eckman's Alterative has been proven by many years' test to be most efficacious in cases of severe Throat and Lung Affections, Bronchitis, Bronchial Asthma, Stubborn Colds and in upbuilding the system. Does not contain narcotics, poisons or habit-forming drugs. For sale by all of Jacobs' Drug Stores and other leading druggists. Write the Eckman Laboratory, Philadelphia, Pa., for booklet telling of recoveries and additional evidence.

Venire Whipped Into Shape Rapidly; Negro Is Eligible

Within a minute or two after Deputy Sheriff Plennie Minor had called the court to order the examination process was applied to the venire panel of 144 men. From each panel of twelve one or more men were excused after being asked the formal questions and furnished a sufficient reason to bar them.

J. H. Jones, Deputy Clerk, called the names. F. W. Stone, No. 82 East Linden street, was excused on account of illness. R. F. Shedden was refused on an excuse of military exemption. Only one man was excused from the first twelve men.

H. R. Calloway, of No. 691 Piedmont avenue, first of the second panel, was not served. F. A. Hull, No. 180 Grant street, was excused on account of his age, 20 years. T. J. Henderson, No. 25 Woodson street, was excused as opposed to capital punishment. J. A. McCreary, No. 78 East North street, was excused because of his residence in DeKalb County. J. F. Patterson, of College Park, was excused on account of deafness. Five were excused from the second panel.

Negro Declared Eligible.

W. H. Scott, No. 215 Gordon street, was excused on account of ill health. He had a doctor's certificate. W. H. Abbott, Record Clerk of the court, was refused excusal. Only one man was excused from the third panel.

The first surprise came with the questioning of the fourth panel, when Earl Davis, a negro, was not excused. He was ruled eligible to jury duty. There is little prospect that he will be drawn as one of the jurors.

George Mathieson, Assistant Chief of County Police, was excused on account of his duties. John W. Alexander, capitalist, of No. 439 South Pryor street, was excused because of illness. W. M. Donehoo, of Buckhead, was let out on account of the death of his mother. E. A. Massa, of No. 305 East Fair street, was over age. J. H. Gilbert, of South Bend, was let out because of illness. The jury panels were thus being revised and made into a compact venire by this process of elimination.

Joel Hurt Out of Town.

The following men were excused in the selection of the fifth panel: George R. Wall, No. 139 Hill street, on account of illness; F. M. York, No. 221 Cooper street, on account of the illness of his wife; W. I. Brooks, No. 224 East Fair street, on account of having removed from Fulton County. The following were excused in the selection of the sixth panel: H. Maness, No. 112 Jefferson street, account of deafness; Joel Hurt was out of town.

Lynette Awtrey Wires Piteous Plea From Utah to Father in Acworth, Ga.

worth and Marietta society, and is considered one of the most beautiful girls in the former town.

The circumstances surrounding the disappearance of the young girl are shrouded in mystery, owing to the unwillingness of her relatives to discuss the matter. According to her friends, however, this is all that is known of the case:

Early in June Miss Awtrey left New York to tour Europe under the care of Miss Olive Faw, of Marietta, who takes parties of Cobb County girls across the Atlantic each year. There were a number of Miss Awtrey's friends in the party, and she had been viewing the trip with pleasure. Her first letters from abroad were optimistic in tone. She declared she was having a glorious time. Suddenly there was a change. In her letters the girl reflected the homesickness that, she declared, was making Europe distasteful to her. She said she wanted to return home and see her friends.

Miss Faw conducts two tours during the summer, and Miss Awtrey had arranged to take both of them. When she reached London, on the second tour, however, she wrote to her parents that she was coming home. She was next heard of in New York, about two weeks ago. She wired her father that she was homesick and wanted to come home, and asked him to send her some money and a ticket. He wired her the $200. That same evening Mr. Awtrey received a telegram asking him to meet her in Atlanta a few days later.

Found Trunk—Not Daughter.

On the day mentioned Mr. Awtrey was at the Terminal Station to greet his daughter. The train pulled in, the father waited, but the girl did not appear. Thinking perhaps she had missed her train and would come on a later one, he stayed in Atlanta all day and met every train from New York. Miss Awtrey still did not come. Mr. Awtrey investigated and found that her baggage had been checked through from New York to Atlanta and had arrived on the first train he had met.

Mr. Awtrey then returned to his home. He waited several days, and when his daughter still failed to appear, he asked the aid and advice of his brother, John Atwrey, of Marietta, and his brother-in-law, D. F. McClatchy. A few days later Mr. McClatchy came to Atlanta and enlisted the services of the Burns agency. Detective Chatham, attached to the Atlanta office, went to Marietta and Acworth to determine if any clews could be developed there. His quest was fruitless. The Burns agency then obtained a photograph from a photographer in Marietta, a relative of the missing girl, and it was scattered broadcast over the country.

Miss Awtrey's family has made every effort to keep the fact of her disappearance a secret, and her relatives and intimate friends have been sworn to secrecy. None of them will discuss the mystery, nor advance any theories to account for her disappearance.

"I'm sure I do not know what caused Lynette to run away," said Mrs. R. M. Moon, a distant relative of the girl. "It is as great a mystery to me as it is to anyone.

Elopement Is Rumored.

John Awtrey, the missing girl's uncle, refused to make any comment whatever on his niece's unexplained absence.

"All I know is that she started home from New York and didn't get here," he said.

The girl's father could not be seen when a Georgian reporter visited Acworth Sunday night. One of her brothers declared that the members of her family entertain no theories of foul play or of a love affair.

"We are satisfied with the situation," he said. "She has been located."

Despite the assertions of the members of the girl's family that her disappearance is not the culmination of a love affair, several of Miss Awtrey's friends, in discussing the case, persist in mentioning the name of a young man, whose home is in Atlanta, who has been an ardent suitor of Miss Awtrey's for the past year. The suit of the young Atlantan, it is said, has not met with the approval of the girl's family, and it is intimated that he has been forbidden to call on her.

The theory evolved out of these facts by Miss Awtrey's friends is that the girl really came to Atlanta from New York and that her admirer met her here and persuaded her to elope with him.

The white women who were found in the company of a number of negro troopers of the Tenth Cavalry at 2 o'clock in the morning, when Franklin's tent was surrounded, are still in jail.

OPENING CLASH IS LOST BY DEFENSE; FORCED AT START TO NAME ITS WITNESSES

At 9:58 o'clock Solicitor Dorsey announced that he was ready to open the case of the State against Leo M. Frank, charged with having killed Mary Phagan by strangulation. This was followed by the request of the defense that the State's witnesses be called, sworn and put under the rule.

The prosecution opened by announcing its readiness to go on with the trial and called the list of witnesses. Bailiffs brought them down from the second floor. In regular order called, their names were: Mrs. J. W. Coleman, mother of Mary Phagan; J. W. Coleman, the girl's stepfather; George Epps, newsboy; L. S. Dobbs, policeman; W. W. Rogers, bailiff for constable; L. S. Starnes, detective and also prosecutor on the indictment; Pat Campbell, detective; Grace Hicks, girl who identified Mary Phagan's body; J. M. Gantt, once held for inquiry, now supposed to be a star witness for the prosecution; Harry Scott, the Pinkerton detective; R. P. Barrett, pencil factory employee; B. P. Haslett, policeman; M. V. Darley, factory employee; W. A. Gheesling, undertaker that cared for the girl's body; Dr. Claude Smith, City Bacteriologist; Dr. H. F. Harris, member of the State Board of Health; Dr. J. W. Hurt, Coroner's physician; E. L. Parry, court stenographer; E. S. Smith, Monteen Stover, girl employee at pencil factory; Minola McKnight, cook at Frank's home; Albert McKnight, Minola's husband (McKnight did not appear in court); Helen Ferguson, Mrs. Arthur White, wife of factory employee, and L. Stanford.

Attorney Reuben Arnold asked concerning the duces tecum that he had served on the State's attorneys for the affidavits of Jim Conley and others. On the promise of Solicitor Dorsey that he would produce the affidavits whenever needed the duces tecum was waived.

Solicitor Dorsey said he did not concede the right of the defense to force a production of the affidavit. He, however, at the request of Mr. Arnold, dictated a statement giving the dates of each of the affidavits signed by Conley, saying they were all of the affidavits Conley had made and that he would produce them whenever necessary.

The Solicitor asked then that the defense's witnesses be called and sworn. This was met by strenuous objection on the part of Attorneys Rosser and Arnold, who claimed their list was fragmentary.

Solicitor Dorsey protested vehemently, declaring that it would be extremely unfair to the State not to swear the defense's witnesses at this time. Attorney Rosser said it would delay the trial to complete their list at this time.

Judge Roan ruled that he would give the defense time to get up the list. The defense capitulated and it took but five minutes for the list to be made up.

Witnesses for Defense.

Attorney Stiles Hopkins, at the table for the defense, called the names of the witnesses by whom they expect to clear Frank. They were Mary Burke, Dora Small, Ella Thomas, C. P. Gilbert, F. Payne, Eula Flowers, Josephine Steiker, Mattie Thompson, Mrs. L. J. Cohen, J. C. Lowe, M. H. Liebman, Miss Bessie White, Joe Williams, Fred Howell, Wade Campbell, J. A. Price, J. E. Lyon, Cora Lavender, M. O. Nix, J. C. Matthews, F. Jenkins, Mrs. Josephine Selig, E. Selig, J. H. Haas, W. H. Mincey, J. B. Spier, E. L. Skipper, E. L. Sentell, May Barrett, Rebecca Carson, C. H. Carson, Harry Denham, Corinthia Hall, Mattie Hall, J. L. Holloway, Mrs. George Jefferson, Jerome Michael, George W. Parrott, M. W. Morrow, Mrs. M. W. Morrow, Rabi David Marx, A. E. Mayo, Fred Weller, A. E. Marcus, Ed Montag, I. H. Haas, W. B. Owens, T. Y. Brent and Ossie Shields.

These were all of the witnesses whose names were called, but at least 100 more, who will be used mostly as character witnesses, were in the room on the second floor waiting to be called.

First Talesman Too Old.

After the venire had been sifted and many excused, W. S. Copeland was the first talesman examined. He was excused when he said that he had passed the 60-year mark. Solicitor Dorsey put the questions, using the formal ones ask in murder trials.

Being conscientiously opposed to capital punishment or conviction by circumstantial evidence was held not to disqualify a juror by Judge Roan. This was in connection with O. T. Camp, the second talesman.

"I am conscientiously opposed to capital punishment on certain grounds," said Camp.

"What are those grounds," asked Solicitor Dorsey.

"Circumstantial evidence," he replied.

Judge Sustains Defense.

"That disqualifies him, then," said Solicitor Dorsey.

Attorney Rosser objected, saying that such belief did not disqualify the juror. Judge Roan sustained the defense, but Solicitor Dorsey struck him.

A. W. Brewerton was disqualified because he was opposed to capital punishment.

W. H. Winn was struck, Solicitor Dorsey taking this action after looking over his record.

R. G. Elliott was struck by the defense.

L. A. Smith was struck for cause.

C. T. Hopkins, Jr., struck by State.

W. E. Cates, disqualified because opposed to capital punishment.

T. G. Young, struck by defense.

D. D. Hewey, struck because he did not believe in capital punishment.

That ended the first panel of talesmen and not a single juror was obtained. The State struck three and the defense two. Seven were disqualified for cause.

Four Jurymen Obtained.

Four jurors were obtained from the second panel. They are:

A. H. Henslee, No. 74 Oak street, a salesman.

F. V. L. Smith, No. 481 Cherokee avenue, a manufacturers agent.

J. F. Higdon, 108 Ormewood avenue, a contractor.

F. E. Winburn, No. 21 Lucile avenue, a claim agent.

On the second panel the following men were struck:

Howard Oliver, by the defense.

H. E. Luckey, for cause.

O. L. Spurlin, No. 156 Lawton street, struck by defense.

H. A. Slide, for cause.

E. E. Hawkins, No. 369 Edgewood avenue, a negro, who was accepted by the prosecution; but struck by the defense.

L. F. Davis, for cause.

David Woodward, for cause.

M. J. Sewell, for cause.

Third and Fourth Panels Go.

The following men were struck on the third panel: Charles Witherspoon, by defense; H. J. Kuglar, for cause; C. J. Hale, for cause; J. B. Hays, by defense; E. L. Winn, for cause; W. H. Abbott, for cause; K. P. Mayson, for cause; Boyd Perry, for cause.

The entire fourth panel was struck: Samuel Schoen, by the State; W. S. Singleton, by defense; Earle Davis, a negro, was accepted by the State, but struck by the defense; C. S. Cantrell, for cause; John W. Collier, for cause; W. W. Hammett, by the State; A. F. Bellingrath, by defense on ground that he was a brother to an employee Solicitor Dorsey's office and that he had expressed the opinion that Frank was guilty.

"I said it looked like he was guilty from what the newspapers said," declared Mr. Bellingrath. Solicitor Dorsey urged that the talesman was not disqualified by this. However, Judge Roan disqualified him for cause.

"I think he should be set aside for his own sake," ruled the judge.

D. Berger, for cause.

Two More Panels Struck.

The following men were struck from the fifth panel: W. C. Willis, for cause; H. C. Hasty, prejudice; C. H. Cook, by defense; C. H. Candler, in answer to a question from Solicitor Dorsey if he was impartial, said "No;" George R. Low, by the State; S. E. Owens, for cause; J. C. Henderson, for cause; C. M. Brown, opposed to capital punishment; C. A. Vaughn, prejudice.

The following men, comprising the entire sixth panel, were struck: Ben F. Willis, by defense; C. M. Petton, prejudice; W. H. Hudson, not impartial; G. R. Milner, by defense; John Head, age; Robert Smidt, opposed to capital punishment; V. N. Carroll, not impartial; C. H. Allen, opposed to capital punishment; P. F. Barber, opposed to capital punishment; O. Wingate, for cause; T. E. Winsow, by State; A. W. Wofford, by defense.

Every man on the seventh panel was struck, including H. H. Kelly, prejudice; N. A. Long, biased; C. W. Gittens, by defense; H. D. Ferguson, opposed to capital punishment; W. L. Merk, by defense; F. E. Walker, prejudice; P. B. Sale, prejudice; W. S. Gaston, biased; C. L. Asbury, biased; J. W. Chatham, prejudice; C. W. Seagroves, prejudice; Carl Weinmeister, opposed to capital punishment.

The last panel, from which the last juror was secured, was Panel No. 9. The following men were struck: S. L. Miller, by defense; H. L. Solomonson, biased; L. O. Hendon, by defense; H. C. Ashford, for cause; E. E. Wochendorff, prejudice; Nicholas Ittner, age; Bud Waites, prejudice; W. W. Sorrell, by defense; Soloman Benjamin, member of Grand Jury.

The buzz of conversation in the little courtroom instantly was hushed when Judge Roan appeared and Deputy Sheriff Plennie Miner called the court to order. The impaneling of jurors was begun at once.

Luther Z. Rosser, chief of counsel for Frank, pressed his way to the defense's table just as Deputy Miner rapped for order. Solicitor Dorsey and his associates were at their table busily arranging papers and documents several minutes before the swearing of the veniremen began.

An imposing array of legal talent was presented when the case was called. Heading counsel for Frank were Rosser and Reuben R. Arnold, two of the foremost lawyers of the South. At their table were Herbert J. Haas, a civil attorney, who has been engaged in looking up character witnesses in behalf of Frank; Styles Hopkins, of the Rosser & Brandon law firm; Oscar Simmons and Paul Goss, engaged especially to assist in picking the jury; George Cox, of Arnold & Arnold law firm, and Luther Z. Rosser, Jr.

Wife at Frank's Side.

With Solicitor Dorsey were Frank A. Hooper, the brilliant attorney who made his reputation as a prosecutor in criminal cases; E. A. Stephens, Assistant Solicitor, and detectives who have been working on the case. Jim Conley's attorney, W. M. Smith, also was in court.

A stir was created when Mrs. Frank, wife of the accused, made her way into the courtroom and hurried past the rows of spectators into the anteroom where her husband was confined. She bore herself bravely, and when she reached Frank, was seen to converse cheerfully with him.

The loyal woman, who insisted on being by the side of her husband until he was called into the courtroom with his attorneys, drew the attention away from the routine proceedings several minutes.

Judge Roan in Good Humor.

Judge Roan appeared in unusually radiant humor and enlivened the dull routine of the early proceedings with facetious remarks directed at the jurors who sought to evade duty on various pretexts.

To one who claimed deafness, Judge Roan said that he had heard his own name readily enough when it was called.

Another juror, Dr. E. L. Connally, well known capitalist, and gray haired veteran of the war, remarked, smiling rather slyly, that he thought he was over age.

"How do you know that?" inquired the judge.

"My mother says I am," was Dr. Connally's reply.

"Do you claim exemption on that account?" asked the court.

"I guess I do, judge," admitted the capitalist.

"Well, then, I guess I will excuse you," said the judge, amid a general laugh from the courtroom.

Dr. Connally left his place with a vigor that belied his years.

Old Dr. Stork was responsible for the excusing of several of the jurors. By the time the eighth panel of men had taken the oath three men had told of new arrivals at their homes and had been excused.

Defense Not to Ask Delay.

Luther Z. Rosser, of counsel for the defense, stated to a Georgian reporter as he left his office for the scene of the trial that he defense would make no move for delay.

"We will not seek a change of venue or make any move of any kind to delay justice for our client," he said. "We are entirely confident that justice and truth will prevail, as it always must."

Reuben R. Arnold, of the defense, made the same kind of a statement.

"We will announce ready as soon as the case is called," he said.

One important witness for the defense was reported to be missing. He is a traveling salesman, and the defense was said to be confident of locating him.

A great crowd gathered in front of the courthouse as the hour of the trial drew near, and when 9 o'clock arrived, Pryor street at Hunter was almost impassable. The corridors of the courthouse were a mass of humanity, through which a lane had to be cut by deputies to allow the passage of witnesses and lawyers and newspaper men.

The crowd was tense with curiosity, but to all appearances inclined to be orderly and apparently was moved only by the commonest of human motives—curiosity.

Judge Andrew Calhoun entered the courtroom when the court was about midway in its forenoon session and took a seat by Judge Roan. In the intervals when the proceedings were interrupted by conferences of the attorneys, he conversed with Judge Roan.

Newt Lee, who found Mary Phagan's body, was brought from the Tower in the middle of the forenoon in the custody of a deputy sheriff. He was placed in an anteroom adjoining the courtroom. It was expected that he would be one of the early witnesses if not the first, to be called by the State. Lee testified before the Coroner's inquest that he found the body of the slain factory girl in the

Story of Pretty Little Girl's Death Gripped Public, Eager to Discover Her Slayer.

As Leo Frank faces to-day the ordeal decreed by law that for man's life, man's life shall pay, interest in his case that has held Atlanta, Georgia and the South enthralled for three months has diminished not a whit since the Sunday morning the body of the little factory girl was found.

Wise judges of news, men who are paid thousands of dollars each year for their knowledge of the fickleness of the public, men who can time to the second the period when interest dies in one thing before the public eye to be born anew in another, have for years contended that no single item of news can sustain its interest longer than one brief week.

And yet for three months the public has read of Mary Phagan's death and the quest for her slayer and their demand for this news has been insatiable.

That the vaunted insight of these news experts is as shallow as the mirror reflection of a beauty of the stage is the thought that common logic first presents.

Insight of Experts Borne Out.

The insight of these experts has not been at fault. On the contrary, it has been sustained. For in the mystery veiling the death of Mary Phagan and the trial of Leo Frank as her slayer, a more varied array of things that interest, thrill, horrify, shock and make men think is presented than in any one case developed since typesetting machines made the modern newspaper possible.

Harry Thaw's case comes to mind, that tragedy of romance that presented in the same cast of characters the brilliant Lothario, the man of millions, and a woman as fair as the dawn. But there was never the element of mystery in the slaying of Stanford White. District Attorney Jerome described it pretty well as a commonplace tragedy of the tenderloin.

The only question that confronted the public was whether there was a law decreed by God that a man should take up arms and avenge his family honor that should nullify the law made by man that decreed that the courts of the country and the judgment of heaven could alone mete out reparation for personal injury.

But in the Phagan case, there is a mystery so deep, so impenetrable, that there are thousands in Atlanta who believe that Mary Phagan's slayer walks about to-day a free man as another battles for his life accused of his crime.

Victim Only a Child.

There was mystery in the famous case of Henry Clay Beattie, the Virginia aristocrat, who met death in the electric chair for slaying his wife after his infatuation for Beulah Binford.

But again, we have a feature of the Phagan case which was missing in the Beattie tragedy that makes the Atlanta mystery as grippingly pitiful as the Virginia problem was sordid.

For in the Phagan case a child is one of the principals. All the world may love a lover, but all the world loves a child more. And when the innocent, wistful, appealing face of the little factory girl first appeared in the public prints more heartstrings were touched than there were thrills caused in all the sinister revelations of the Virginia trial.

The child interest has made many a case appeal to the public interest more than struggles of statesmen, ravages of nature, or even the love of man for woman. The entire United States waited breathlessly for news of the capture of the kidnapers of little Billy Whitla, the sturdy Pennsylvania lad, in 1909.

But when the kidnapers were taken and Billy Whitla returned safe and sound and maybe a little happier from his thrilling experience to the home of his parents, the public forgot all about little Billy and to-day, in four short years, there are few who remember his case at all. For Billy Whitla lived. Mary Phagan died.

Lamana Case Was Absorbing.

In 1907 the hearts of every mother and father in the Southland bled for the wealthy father and mother of the little Lamana boy, who was taken from their New Orleans home by members of the Crescent City Mafia. Interest was intense at every period of the search and public sentiment was kindled near to the blazing point when the beheaded body of the boy was found in a Louisiana swamp.

But as thrilling as was the Lamana case, it did not have that quality that is so essential to make a case universally absorbing. The Lamanas were foreigners, the kidnapers were foreigners. And Americans want an American in their news stories.

And so on and on. Recall any case of thrilling interest to your mind, analyze it, and you will discover that the Phagan case has features which that case does not possess and any one of those features would make a story of breathless interest in itself.

TRIAL INTEREST SETS RECORD FOR COUNTY

Brilliant Array of Lawyers and the Dramatic Features of the Case Make Spectacular Clash.

No murder trial in Fulton County ever has approached the spectacular interest which is in prospect in the Frank case from the first, sharp skirmish between the opposing attorneys, through the long, bitter legal battle, and to the final pleas of the prosecution and the defense.

The presence of Luther Z. Rosser and Reuben R. Arnold in the brilliant array of legal talent at once made certain that the trial would be out of the ordinary. Neither has the reputation of making a half-hearted fight when there is anything at stake. This time it is a man's life that is depending upon their legal ability, their shrewdness and their eloquence.

Both have a disconcerting habit of carrying the fight to their opponents. In ring parlance, they do not give their courtroom rivals a chance to "get set." This is going to keep the spectators constantly on the edge of expectation, and will furnish a series of exciting incidents that will give the Frank trial a place by itself in the criminal annals of Georgia.

Crisis When Conley is Grilled.

To describe Rosser's tactics as aggressive is expressing it euphemistically. If he were only aggressive, his name would not inspire the trepidation that now is felt by persons who have to face him in the witness box or by young lawyers who have to pit their strength against him.

Rosser and Arnold are at their best when they are cross-examining the witnesses called by the other side. This fact is expected to bring about the most thrilling situation of the entire trial in the witness box grilling of the negro Jim Conley. Not satisfied with seeking to prove the entire innocence of their client, the two lawyers propose to show that Conley himself is the man who attacked Mary Phagan in the National Pencil Factory and flung her dead body upon the trash heap in the basement.

From whom are they to get testimony of this startling nature?

Certainly from no one else than the negro, and from him they intend to get it. It is a bold plan, but one characteristic of the two-handed fighting methods of Rosser. Anyone who has seen a witness made the object of Rosser's attack knows that Jim Conley is in for a bad day when he is called to the stand to testify that Leo Frank had him assist in the disposal of Mary Phagan's body.

Chance Seen for Confession.

Only a Rosser would have the courage of his convictions to expect to break down the negro after he repeatedly had told the remarkable story of finding the girl's dead body on the second floor of the pencil factory and carrying her, at Frank's direction and with Frank's assistance, down the elevator into the basement.

Rosser's plan opens up the dramatic possibility of a courtroom confession from Conley. In the opinion of those who are convinced of Frank's innocence and the negro's guilt, it would not be a matter of great surprise if Conley, under the fire of questions directed at him by Rosser and Arnold, should collapse and confess he alone was concerned in the crime.

The cross-examination of Conley is certain to be one of the spectacular features of the trial. His vivid tale, under the lead of questions by Solicitor Dorsey and Attorney Frank A. Hooper, will be repeated to the courtroom full of spectators. It will lose none of its dramatic elements, in that its essential features already are well known to the public. They are waiting to hear it first hand from the negro's lips.

Raked Up His Past Life.

Then Conley will be turned over to the scarcely tender mercies of counsel for Frank. He probably will be on the rack for hours. Whether he will be able to stand the ordeal is problematical. No point in his history that could have any possible bearing on the case will be overlooked. The defense is in possession of a mass of information relating to Conley's conduct for years. He will be asked in regard to every one of these circumstances.

Before the events of the day of the tragedy are reached the negro will have undergone a searching examination of significant incidents in his past life. Then his story of his part in the crime will be attacked. The discrepancies will be brought out in the glare of the cross-examination. The falsehoods that he told for days after he was arrested will be resurrected. All of his affidavits will be ridiculed. The two attorneys will join in an effort to break down and utterly to discredit the story to which he now sticks. Whether or not they are successful, their attempt will be a dramatic feature of the trial.

A fight, scarcely less spectacular, will develop over the story of William H. Mincey. This time the attorneys for the prosecution will be in the role of scoffers. Mincey has declared that he heard Conley boasting of killing a girl.

Mincey, a quiet—almost diffident—type of the country pedagogue, will be made the target for the Solicitor's and Attorney Hooper's fire of questions. They will seek to show that Mincey never saw Conley the afternoon of April 26, when Mincey asserted he had the conversation with the negro.

Climax When Frank Is Called.

A hot fight also will be precipitated by the demand of the defense that the State make known the identity, at the beginning of the trial, of all the witnesses against Frank. Solicitor Dorsey has said that he will fight any demand of this sort.

The subpenas duces tecum issued by the defense will form another casus belli that is expected to provide a spirited skirmish between the attorneys at the beginning of the trial. The defense insists on having in court, for the purpose of comparison, all of the affidavits taken from Jim Conley, Newt Lee, Monteen Stover, W. M. Matthews and others. Dorsey declares this is a flimsy trick to discredit the State's witnesses, and proposes to resist to the extent of his ability any move to compel him to comply with the demand.

STREET CAR HITS WAGON, KILLING DAIRYMAN

R. R. Gresham, Father of Ten, Dies Three Hours After Crash. Thrown Forty Feet.

R. R. Gresham, a dairyman residing in Wyman street, Kirkwood, was struck by an outbound Kirkwood car at Whitefoord avenue early Monday morning and received injuries from which he died three hours later without regaining consciousness.

Gresham's skull was fractured, his throat gashed and his ankle broken.

The accident occurred when the dairyman, driving his wagon into Atlanta, attempted to cross the car tracks in front of an approaching car. The wagon was smashed into splinters by the speeding car and its driver thrown 40 feet into a ditch. The horse was knocked over on its side amid the debris of the vehicle.

Gresham was picked up unconscious and hurried in an ambulance to the Atlanta Hospital. Physicians who attended him held out little hope for his recovery. He died three hours later.

Mr. Gresham was 52 years old, married and the father of ten children. But one member of the family, Herman Gresham, a son, reached the injured man before he died.

REMOVAL OF U. S. CONSUL ASKED BY TEXANS

American Envoy at Juarez Charged With Neglecting to Protect His Countrymen.

WASHINGTON, July 28.—The removal from office of Thomas Edwards, the American Consul at Juarez, Mex., was requested of the State Department to-day by Representative Smith, of Texas, who charges that Edwards has been negligent in relieving American refugees at Madera. Representative Smith acted on complaint of his constitutents in the El Paso district.

The Congressman also urged Secretary Bryan to stop the shipments of arms and ammunition from this country to the Huerta administration.

"I informed the Secretary of State," said Representative Smith, "that so long as we do not recognize the Huerta Government we should not favor it by allowing it to secure arms from this country. We deny that they have a constitutional government and yet they are allowed to get arms and ammunition. We ought to allow both factions to have war supplies or we ought to give the privilege to neither of them."

Smith says Bryan did not indicate what action would be taken regarding his complaints.

Smith received telegrams to-day from his constituents saying that 35 Americans are in peril at Madera among them a number of women and children.

U. S. to Hunt Down Dixon's Assailant.

WASHINGTON, July 28.—"Ambassador Wilson—2:30 o'clock."

This simple announcement, placed at the bottom of President Wilson's official list of callers to-day, was the only indication at the White House that the most momentous conference at the White House scheduled since President Roosevelt maneuvered the Russian-Japanese peace conclave was due to take place.

For the past 36 hours the President has had before him the lengthy report dictated by Ambassador Wilson detailing all the events of importance which have happened in Mexico from the time the Diaz regime first began to topple down to the attempted murder of Charles B. Dixon, the American immigration official, at Juarez on Saturday.

Bryan Studies Report.

Secretary Bryan, the first caller at the White House to-day, was closeted with the President for more than an hour, while he discussed the details of the Wilson report.

In discussing the Mexican situation with the newspaper cabinet to-day the President authorized the statement that nothing has happened within the past ten days to make matters better or worse.

The President further said that, as he has not yet conferred with Ambassador Wilson, he can not announce any future policy with respect to President Huerta or Mexico for the reason that he has not decided upon one.

To Hunt Dixon's Assailant.

The President begged to be excused from making any comment upon the attempted assassination of Charles B. Dixon, the American immigration official, who was shot at Juarez on Saturday because, he said, he did not have all the facts in the case before him as yet.

The President assured the correspondents, however, that he has ordered a rigid investigation of the matter and that the State Department will do everything possible to hunt down the guilty parties.

Mexican Consul Says Negroes Shot Dixon.

EL PASO, TEX., July 28.—Blame for the shooting of United States Immigration Inspector Charles B. Dixon was laid upon a Mexican negro lieutenant named Sainz, of General Salazar's army, and two American negroes, in a statement issued to-day by Mexican Consul Miranda.

According to Consul Miranda's version of the shooting, the two American negroes planned the attack upon Dixon on account of his activity in investigatig a "white slave" case and drew the Mexican negro into the scheme to do the shooting.

Federal investigators have reported to the Mexican Consul here that Dixon was seized by Salazar's soldiers without any orders.

Dixon was released without bond and brought to El Paso yesterday. He was pronounced out of danger by Dr. J. W. Tappan, immigration service surgeon.

The two American negroes who were arrested as plotters against Dixon were Arthur Walker and Harry Bell. They have been irregular soldiers in Salazar's command. Bell was said to have escaped into Mexico while awaiting trial on a charge of "white slavery." Walekr is also wanted on the same charge in the United States.

SIDELIGHTS on GEORGIA POLITICS

by JAMES B. NEVIN

There seems to be little, if any, doubt that the Legislature is to hurry along the general tax act, just as it has hurried along the general appropriations bill.

There are, counting to-day, exactly fourteen working days left to the Legislature's credit. This does not include two Saturdays and two Sundays, however.

It, therefore, may be seen that the Legislature can, if it will, place both the appropriations bill and the tax acts—the general tax act, at least—in the hands of the Executive ten days ahead of adjournment, as he has requested.

If this is done—and it likely will be done—the present Legislature will have accomplished a record of speed never before equaled in the history of the State.

Despite all the complaining and criticism to the contrary, the present Legislature has been the most prompt, within the memory of any Georgian, in the matter of passing the two vitally big and necessary measures of the session—the general appropriations bill and the general tax act.

Credit must be awarded the committee heads, the committees and the Speaker for this remarkable achievement, and President Anderson has given his assurance that the promptness of the House shall be duplicated in the Senate this week and next.

Taken altogether, the record of the Legislature as made up for this session is all right and a credit.

It is, indeed, far better than usual.

Mr. Shuptrine, of Chatham, is very much opposed to the measure permitting the addition of a kindergarten system to the public schools of the State.

Mr. Shuptrine does not believe the Constitution of the State contemplates anything of the kind, and, moreover, he thinks it would be but the first step in the direction of greatly expanding the school fund, already smaller than the necessities of the State seem to warrant.

"If we permit this innovation, not warranted in the fundamental law at all, we shall have application made within the life of the present Legislature, perhaps, for more funds to meet the kindergarten requirements," said Mr. Shuptrin, to-day.

"I know that it is proposed to add this feature to the school system without additional appropriations to cover it, but that is merely a sop to get the bill on the statute books. Once we inaugurate this system, we shall have to take care of it, and it will be argued that funds as now appropriated are not sufficient to handle the new department.

"Georgia already is dealing most generously with her schools—she is straining the limit to take care of them—and I am not complaining so much about that. But I do think it would be a sad mistake to add any further burdens to her budget—and certainly along the line of providing public education to tots from 4 to 6 years of age."

Senator M. C. Tarver has abandoned for the present his effort to get the Representatives and Senators of the various counties affected, interested in the proposed Chickamauga judicial circuit.

"The bill could not be passed at this session," said Mr. Tarver, "for several of the Representatives of the counties proposed for the new circuit are opposed to any change of the present arrangement. Others, while desiring a change, couldn't get together on an arrangement of counties that was mutually satisfactory."

Mr. Searcey's bill to make the buyer and the seller equally guilty in "blind tiger" cases, was killed in the Senate, upon the theory that it affords the "blind tiger" exactly the protection he desires, rather than retards him in the operation of his business.

"The one thing a 'blind tiger' dreads above all other things," said a Senator, discussing the bill, "is that among his numerous customers may be one who will tell.

"This bill removes that dread, for anybody who reported a 'tiger' under this measure would become a criminal himself. Besides, because of the law which excuses a man from incriminating himself in testifying, this man would become immediately incompetent as a witness.

"It is hard enough now to convict 'blind tigers', and it would be a thousand times harder under this law.

"Prohibitionists who seek to go the limits this bill proposes are to be commended for their zeal, perhaps, but surely not for their common sense. This bill is sound enough in theory, if you view it from a certain angle, but it falls to pieces as a practical measure and would defeat the very object its author had in mind when he framed it."

The Senate defeated the measure by a vote of 18 to 22, which was not such a wide margin of defeat, after all.

MAULS MAN FOR TALKING TO WIFE

W. M. Sexton, No. 18 Gaskill street, Monday morning remarked to Recorder Broyles that he had "cautioned this guy about talking to his wife," in explaining why he attacked W. L. Patterson, of No. 57 Powell street, Sunday night at the close of services in St. Luke's Methodist Church in Powell street.

Patterson told the court that Sexton is "insanely jealous."

Sexton, who is separated from his wife, attacked Patterson a short distance from the church after he had seen him talking to Mrs. Sexton inside of the church. Patterson said Mrs. Sexton called to him after the congregation had been dismissed, and that he meant no harm by conversing with her. He said Sexton lay in wait for him in a dark spot in Powell street and assailed him with metal knucks. Sexton denied this.

The two men were pummeling one another vigorously when interrupted by Detective Coker and Policeman Boggus, who were on their way home from the church service. Metal knucks were found on the ground. Patterson displayed an abrasion on his head, which he said was made by the knucks.

When Sexton told Judge Broyles he had warned his wife not to talk to other men, the Recorder informed him that as he was separated from his wife he had no right to beat up every person he saw talking to her."

The jealous husband was fined $25.75 and the case of Patterson was dismissed.

SEARCY'S LIQUOR BILL REVIVED IN SENATE

Resolution Providing for Its Reconsideration Adopted—Whitewashing of Soule Opposed.

The adoption of a resolution calling for the reconsideration of the Searcy prohibition bill, making the selling of liquor purchased from a "blind tiger" a misdemeanor, which was defeated in the Georgia Senate Friday, featured the session Monday. The bill probably will come up again this week under special order rule. A hot fight is expected.

Senators Foster and Hixon offered a resolution "whitewashing" the charges against President A. M. Soule, of the State Agricultural College. It sets forth that President Soule has rendered valuable service which should be recognized by the withdrawal of the charges, now pending in the House. The resolution will be considered Tuesday.

That a bitter contest will take place when it is presented for adoption was indicated Monday by Senator McGregor, who declared he would fight the measure to the last ditch, on the grounds that it is a "complete 'whitewash' without any sort of investigation."

The most important new bill introduced in the Senate Monday was that by Senator McGregor, limiting the power of the Governor in calling out troops in case of disorder. The bill aims to take the State militia out of the so-called police jurisdiction, and requires affidavits by civil authorities before the Governor may call out troops.

Senator Tarver's bill providing for the appointment of a State commission to investigate conditions as regards drug users, with a view to establishing a State sanitarium for them, was passed by the Senate.

Senator Bush's bill making the State Superintendent of Education an ex-officio member of the eleven agricultural schools of the State was lost after President Randolph Anderson made a fight on the measure.

Senator McNeil's bill providing for a new Great Seal of State, changing the date 1799 to 1776, commemorating the Declaration of Independence, was sent back to the committee.

DR. STARNES BIDS ATLANTA GOODBYE

One-third of the seats in the Auditorium were filled Sunday afternoon for the farewell concert given by Dr. Percy Starnes and Mrs. Starnes.

A program in which Mozart's "Magic Flute" predominated, and which contained two compositions by the organist himself, was well received. The overture to Wagner's "Tannhauser," which was to have been the final number, was omitted because the organ got out of order. In its place, Dr. Starnes made a little speech of farewell. He said he would take away with him the pleasant recollection that his Atlanta audiences have been uniformly attentive and cordial.

Dr. Starnes' two compositions were "Improvisations Upon a Scotch Melody," the air being "Auld Lang Syne," and a song, "A Lake and a Fairy Boat," which Mrs. Starnes sang.

SLATON WARNS OF BUDGET IN MESSAGE

Advises Assembly Appropriations Will Exceed Revenue if Care Is Not Taken.

A statement showing the general appropriation bill will carry $280,629 more than the revenue to be collected in 1914, estimating the latter on the 1913 basis, unless means for increasing the income are devised, featured Governor John M. Slaton's message to the General Assembly Monday.

Governor Slaton submits figures of the State Comptroller showing that fifteen counties suffered a loss of $130,015 in tax returns to date.

The Governor also calls attention to the present inadequacy of the election and appointment of United States Senators and calls for legislation along this line.

Under the present law, the Governor points out, the executive has no power of appointment in the case of the death of a Senator. The State may also be without a Senator from March, the time of expiration of the term, until June, when the Legislature convenes.

Governor Slaton therefore has recommended that the Secretary of State be empowered to canvass the vote for United States Senator immediately following the election. The Governor has corresponded with Senator Hoke Smith and Senator Bacon in regard to this.

A further recommendation by the Governor calls attention to an appropriation of $500 for expenses of the State Agricultural School.

MEN WELCOME MOTHER'S FRIEND

A Duty That Every Man Owes to Those Who Perpetuate the Race.

It is just as important that men should know of progressive methods in advance of motherhood. The suffering, pain and distress incident to child-bearing can be easily avoided by having at hand a bottle of Mother's Friend.

This is a wonderful penetrating, external application that relieves all tension upon the muscles and enables them to expand without the painful strain upon the ligaments. Thus there is avoided all those nervous spells; the tendency to nausea or morning sickness is counteracted, and a bright, sunny, happy disposition is preserved that reflects wonderfully upon the character and temperament of the little one soon to open its eyes in bewilderment at the joy of his arrival. You can obtain a bottle of "Mother's Friend" at any drug store at $1.00, and it will be the best dollar's worth you ever obtained. It preserves the mother's health, enables her to make a quick and complete recovery, and thus renewed strength she will eagerly devote herself to the care and attention which mean so much to the welfare of the child. Write to the Bradfield Regulator Co., 129 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga., for their valuable and instructive book of guidance for expectant mothers. Get a bottle of Mother's Friend to-day.

Urges Bathing Skirts For 'Unshapely' Men

PONY RIVALS ARE HUSTLING IN 3 LAST DAYS

Standing Changes Fast—County Contestants Redouble Efforts. Shetlands To Be Exhibited.

Four yearly subscriptions, with Red Letter Ballots, counting in all 8,000 votes—were brought in by one contestant in The Georgian and American pony contest.

"Was it a rival in your district?" the contest manager asks the boys and girls. "You don't know. Very likely, it was. Nothing is more treacherous nowadays than over-confidence.

"Three days remain, after Monday. The strain soon will be over. There is not a boy or girl in the race who can not well afford to put every effort into the work for this brief, final spurt."

Some May Be Disappointed.

When the contestants come into the office, the contest manager gets an excellent line on their ideas. Sometimes they are amusing. There are several boys and girls who were leading a week ago by good margins. Strangely enough, in spite of repeated warnings, these youngsters will not believe that they are behind now. This is the attitude which will bring bitter disappointment when the final standings are published next Sunday, and the winners announced.

One feature of the contest upon which little stress has been put is the fact that the boy or girl who gets the greatest total of votes has first choice of all twenty-two ponies, and so on down the list. For the ambitious lad it is not enough to win in his district. He wants also to get one of the first selections from the herd of twenty-two Shetlands.

No Apathy in Country.

True, it may happen that the very last pony may suit the very last contestant to perfection. But, again, the chances are it will not.

There is no apathy in the country districts. The work done by the contestants outside of Atlanta is remarkable.

The ponies were to have been paraded Sunday, but the weather was not propitious. If the weather does not again interfere the ponies will be shown in the business section of Atlanta Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock.

VICTIM OF NEGRO REGRETS HANGING

Wounded Dunbar Merchant Not in Sympathy With Houston County Mob's Action.

MACON, July 28.—When G. F. Hammock, a merchant of Dunbar, was told at a private hospital here to-day that John Shake, the negro who shot him Saturday night, had been lynched by a Houston County mob, he said:

"I am sorry the boys did that. Shake was a bad negro, all right, but it wasn't right to hang him."

Hammock is not seriously injured, though weak from loss of blood. He expects to return to his home this week.

Hammock detected the negro burglarizing his store about midnight. When he called on Shake to surrender, the negro fired a shotgun. The shot fractured Hammock's left wrist and also caused a painful wound in the chest.

The negro escaped and took refuge in the swamps below Wellston. A mob caught him late Sunday afternoon. After confessing that he did the shooting, the negro was hanged to a tree on the outskirts of Dunbar.

NEW AFFIDAVITS IN STRIKE QUIZ STARTLING

Sensational Stories Are Expected From Persons Who Saw Troops Shoot Citizens at Augusta.

Several startling affidavits from eyewitnesses, it is understood, will be introduced by Representative Beck when the legislative inquiry into the recent Augusta strike and the killing of three citizens is resumed Tuesday in the Capitol before the Committee on Military Affairs.

The committee also has summoned the officers and a number of privates who were present at the time of the shooting.

In the following article Attorney P. C. McDuffie, who is retained in the investigation, discusses "military law and martial rule in Georgia."

By P. C. McDUFFIE.

At the time of the Augusta strike the militia established an imaginary dead line. No physical obstruction, ropes, wires, red lights or danger signals warned the people of the military death-trap. It was simply an intangible nothing, beyond which the whim and caprice of the commander had determined the people of that city should not pass.

They did not set apart a certain place and say that anybody coming willfully and intentionally within its boundaries shall be arrested, but without previous notice drew an imaginary line and then without warning proceeded to riddle with bullets three unarmed, innocent men, who could not possibly have intended to commit violence of any sort, nor could they have been engaged in any riot, mob or other unlawful act.

Mr. R. G. Price, attorney, of Louisville, Ga., states that he was in Augusta at the time of the tragedy, and at the scene of the shooting with his brother, Dr. Price, of that city. He naturally thought that he and his brother owed the struggling men the duty of assistance after they were shot, but he says they were prevented from going to them by a volley of shots from the soldiers, narrowly escaping personal injury.

If these things can be done with impunity, surely the militia is paramount to civil authority, which heretofore has been shown, is in direct conflict both with the statutory law and the Constitution of Georgia.

"Martial" and "Military" Law.

Military law is the body of rules and regulations that have been prescribed for the government of the army and for the militia when called into active service. In Georgia the Articles of War governing the army of the United States have been adopted and are binding upon the militia. Military offense, within the meaning of the militia laws, is a violation of these rules and regulations—they are not criminal offenses, as defined in the several State Constitutions. Neglect of duty, non-attendance on drills, insubordination, general disorder are common examples. Martial rule or martial law, as it is frequently incorrectly expressed, is not synonymous with military law.

There are occasions when martial rule can be properly applied, but no sane man will contend that the Augusta disturbance justified its enforcement. If in foreign invasion or civil war the courts are actually closed and it is impossible to administer criminal justice according to law, then, in the theater of active military operations, where war really prevails, there is a necessity to furnish a substitute for the civil authority, and as no power is left but the military, it is allowed to govern by martial rule until the laws can have their free course.

Constitution Paramount.

Martial rule is employed when force may expel the civil authorities from a part of the State, or when the civil law is unable to perform its functions, the military being on the spot to execute it where no civil authority exists. When it does exist the Constitution is imperative that it shall be paramount to the military.

The power of arrest in this case would have secured the alleged disturbers and law-breakers until the State was prepared for their trial and the courts were ready to try them.

The men responsible for this atrocity were tried by a court-martial and acquitted, but as the military was without jurisdiction, the conclusion reached is not binding upon the State.

Courts-martial may try offenses committed in violation of the military law, as above defined, but acts done in the caprice of tyranny under martial rule make the military commander and his subordinates accountable to the law of the land, both by prosecution in the criminal courts and by civil action at the instance of the parties aggrieved.

Rich Man a Negro; Death Bares Secret

CHICAGO, July 28.—William Henry Lee, wealthy publisher whose $200,000 estate will be taken by the State of Illinois because there were no relatives to claim it, was a negro. For nearly 50 years he kept the secret.

The secret of his being of negro blood was admitted by Fred C. Laird, for ten years his partner. Lee never married, Mr. Laird said, because he feared that in his children the secret of his negro ancestry might be revealed.

Appendix All Alone In London, Said Jack

SAN FRANCISCO, July 28.—Here is the latest joke Jack London, the famous author, is telling on himself.

London was operated on recently for appendicitis. After the ordeal the surgeon held up the severed appendix in his fingers for the patient to see. The author looked at it thoughtfully, then grinned and said: "It was a case of all alone in London, wasn't it, doc?"

'CREMATORY BIG FIZZLE,' AVERS WOODWARD

"A test of the new crematory Monday morning proves my contention that the plant is inadequate and not worth the price," said Mayor James G. Woodward Monday.

"Councilman C. L. Ashley, chairman of the Sanitary Committee of Council, is a practical mechanical engineer, and it was he who made the test. He reports that the Destructor Company demands that the garbage must be separated before being placed in the furnaces, and, as the building only provides one receptacle for alle garbag, this will be almost an impossibility.

Milwaukee Has Three Bins.

"In the Milwaukee crematory there are provided separate bins for the garbage, and the wagons are emptied into these bins, where they are dumped directly into the furnace. That the company did not provide for the separation of the garbage is no concern of the city. They did it in order to reduce the cost of construction.

"Another matter is the petition for a change in the quality of glass used. The contract calls for fireproof glass, polished on both sides. The cost of this is $1,613. They ask that they be permitted to use glass polished on one side only and which is not transparent, which would cost them only $576. In exchange for this difference they agree to give the city the fire and plain brick left after completion, for which the city has no use.

Only One Furnace Working.

"Another thing is that only one furnace is in working order, and it is my opinion that it will not be completed before Christmas, when, on account of the difference in the water contained in the garbage, it will be too late to make the tests necessary for the disposal of garbage gathered in the summer months.

"If the City Council had backed me up in this crematory fight, I would have saved the city at least $75,000 and had a better crematory. A thorough test will convince the public that I was right in every contention, and that the city has been bunconed out of more than $100,000."

One of the Greatest Mystery Stories Ever Written

By ANNA KATHARINE GREEN

It is Dr. Cameron's Wedding Day. At 8 o'Clock He Is to Marry Genevieve Gretorex, a Beautiful Society Girl. At 4 o'Clock He Is Informed His Fiancee Has Disappeared.

Opening Installment

(Copyright, 1913, by Anna Katharine Green.)

An Unexpected Visitor.

IT was Dr. Cameron's wedding day. At 8 o'clock in the evening the ceremony of marriage between himself and Genevieve Gretorex was to be performed at the house of the bride's parents in St. Nicholas Place. It was now 4 o'clock.

Seated in his office, Dr. Cameron, who, for a young man, enjoyed a most enviable reputation as a physician, mused over his past and built castles for the future; for his bride was the daughter of one of the richest and most influential citizens of New York, and to such ambition as his this fact, implying, as it did, valuable connections in the present and a large and unincumbered fortune in the future, was one that lent luster to her beauty and attraction to their union. Not but what he loved her—or thought he did—would have loved her under any circumstances. Was she not handsome, and in that reserved and somewhat haughty way he especially admired? Had she not fine manners and would she not add increased honor to a name already well known, and, as he might add, respected?

Had Her Caprices.

To be sure, she had her caprices, as a woman so circumstanced had a right to have, and she esteemed rather than adored him, as many little events in their short courtship only too plainly betrayed. But then he would not have admired a gushing bride, and, being what he was, a man of taste and the son of a man of taste, he found a certain satisfaction in the calm propriety of a match that united equal interests, without jeopardizing that calmness of mind necessary to the successful practice of his exacting profession.

There was but one thing troubled him. Why had she refused to see him for the last seven days? She was not a woman of petty instincts. Indeed, he had sometimes suspected her of possessing latent energies which the round of a fashionable life had never called forth; and in her cool and somewhat languid gaze he had caught glimpses now and then of a spirit that only needed light and air to expand into something like greatness.

Why, then, this strange desire for seclusion at a time when a woman is usually supposed to desire the support of her lover's society? Had he displeased her? Not only had his presents been rich, they had been rare and of an order to gratify her refined taste. Was she ill? He was her physician as well as lover, and he had not been notified of any indisposition.

Besides the last time he had been so fortunate as to be received into her presence she had seemed well and looked blooming; more so, indeed, than he had seen her for some time, and, though somewhat nervous in manner, had exhibited an interest in his attentions which he had not always observed in her. It was not a long interview, but he remembered it well; saw again the almost timid look with which she greeted him, followed by the smile that was nearly a shock to him—it was so much warmer and brighter than usual. Then the few hurried words—for even that night she would not see him long—and the sudden coyness of her attitude as he took her hand in parting!—he recollected it all. He had not thought of it at the time, but now it seemed to him that there had been something strange in her whole bearing, an impalpable change from her former self that he could not analyze, but which had, nevertheless, left its impression upon him. The kiss he had received, for instance, had moved him. There had been warmth in it and her lips had almost returned the pressure of his own.

Was She Ill?

This was new in the history of their courtship and would have argued, perhaps, that she was beginning to recognize his appreciation of her if her after conduct had not given the lie to any such surmise. As it was, it rather seemed to show that she had been in an unnatural condition—suggestive of incipient fever, perhaps. She was ill; and they were trying to keep it from him! The butler's excuses, "Miss Gretorex is very much engaged, sir; Mrs. Gretorex's regrets, sir, but Miss Gretorex has gone out on important business," were but polite subterfuges to blind his eyes to the real truth. And yet to his calmer judgment how untenable was even this supposition. Had she been sick he could not have failed to have heard of it from some quarter. No, she was not sick. She was but indulging in a freak easily to be explained, perhaps, by her mother's over-exciting code of etiquette; and, as in a few hours, she was to be his wife and life-long companion, he would cease to think of it, and only remember that kiss.

He had reached this point in his musings when they were suddenly interrupted. A tap was heard on his office door.

With some irritation he arose. It was not time for his carriage and he had expressly ordered that no visitors or patients were to be received. Who could it be, then? A messenger from Miss Gretorex? He sprang to the door at the thought. But before he could touch the knob, the door opened, and to his surprise and possible relief there entered an unknown man of middle age and prepossessing appearance, whose errand seemed to be one of importance, though his manner was quiet and his voice startlingly gentle.

A Visitor.

"I hope I am not intruding," said he. "The boy below told me this was your wedding day, but he also told me that the ceremony was not to take place till 8 o'clock this evening, and as my business is peculiar and demands instant attention I ventured to come up."

"That is right," answered Dr. Cameron, feeling an unaccountable attraction toward the man, though he was not what you would perhaps call a gentleman, and had, as the doctor could not but notice even at this early stage of their acquaintance, a way of not meeting your eye when he spoke that was to say the least, lacking in ingenuousness. "Is it as a patient you come to me?"

"No," rejoined the stranger, fixing his glance on the white necktie and one or two other insignificant articles which lay on the table near by, with an air strangely like that of compassion. "My business is with you as a doctor—that is, partly—but I am not the patient. I almost wish I were," he added, in a troubled tone that awakened the other's interest notwithstanding the natural preoccupation of his thoughts.

"Let me hear," returned Dr. Cameron. "You make my task easy," the stranger remarked. "And yet," he went on in a curter and more business-like tone, "you may be less willing to listen when I tell you that I have first a story to relate which, while not uninteresting in itself, is so out of accord with your present mood that I doubt if you will be able to sit through it with patience. Yet it is necessary for me to relate it and necessary for you to hear it, now, here, and without any interruption."

This was alarming; especially as the speaker did not seem like a man given to sentimentalities or even to exaggeration. On the contrary he gave the impression of a person accustomed to weigh his words with studious care, not allowing a sentence to escape him without a decided motive.

"Will you tell me your name?" requested Dr. Cameron.

The reply came quietly.

"I doubt if you will know it, and I had rather you had not asked it. But since it is important above all things that you should trust me, I will say that it is Gryce, Ebenezer Gryce, and add that I am a member of the police force; in short, a detective."

Dr. Cameron felt his apprehensions vanish. Whatever the other's errand, it could not be one that touched him or his; and this to a man on his wedding day was certainly a comforting thought.

"You undervalue your fame," he replied. "I know your name well. Can it be possible you desire my assistance in a professional way?"

The detective's gaze, which had been resting gloomily upon a laughing cherub on the mantelpiece, shifted, but he did not respond to the doctor's smile, and his manner remained unaltered.

"I will tell my story," said he. "It will be the quickest way to come to an understanding."

And without further pause or preliminary, he began in the following words:

The Dilemma.

"I am getting to be an old man, and I have my infirmities. But there are still cases which are given to no one but me. Among them are those which involve the honor of persons in a high station of life."

Mr. Gryce paused. Dr. Cameron felt his apprehensions return.

"You see," the detective slowly resumed. "I can keep a secret; that is, when the life and property of others are not endangered by my silence. I can do a detective's work and keep a detective's counsel, only speaking when and where necessity requires."

He paused again. Dr. Cameron moved uneasily.

"As in this case," added the other, gravely.

"This case?" repeated the doctor, now thoroughly alarmed. "What case? You excite me; tell me what you have to say, at once!"

But the detective was not to be hurried.

"I was, therefore, not at all surprised," he proceeded, as if no interruption had occurred, "when some three days ago I was requested to call upon—Mrs. A., let us say—on business of a strictly confidential character. Such summonses come frequently. Such a summons does not disturb an officer in the least. I nevertheless made haste to show myself at Mrs. A.'s house, for Mrs. A., whom you perhaps know is a woman of some consequence, and her husband is a man of widespread reputation and influence. I found her at home, anxiously awaiting my appearance. As soon as she saw me she told me her trouble: 'Mr. Gryce,' said she, 'I am in a great dilemma. Something has occurred in my family which may or may not lead to a lasting dishonor. What I wish from you is aid to determine whether our fears are well grounded. If they are not, you will forget that you were ever called to this house.' I bowed. I was already interested, for I saw that her anxiety was great, while I could not help being puzzled over its cause, for she had no son to disgrace her by his dissipations, and as for her husband, he was above reproach. She soon relieved my curiosity.

"'Mr. Gryce,' said she, 'I have a daughter.'

"'Yes,' I returned, inwardly startled. Miss A. and dishonor seemed so wide apart.

"Our Only Child."

"'She is our only child,' the mother went on. 'We love her, and have always cherished her, but though it is not generally known in this house'—and here the poor lady's eyes roamed about her as if she were afraid that her words would be overheard, 'she has left us; gone away without acquainting us where—suddenly, inexplicably, leaving only the most meager explanation behind her, and—and—'

"'But, madam,' I interrupted, 'if she left any explanation—'

"Mrs. A. took a small and crumpled note out of her pocket and handed it to me.

"'A letter,' she affirmed, 'sent through the mail. And I was in the house when she left, and would have listened to any reasonable request she had to make.'

"I had already read the four or five lines which the letter contained:

"'Dear Mother: I must have rest. I have gone away for a few days, but shall be back on the 27th. Don't worry.

"'Your affectionate ——.'

"'What is the matter with this?' I asked. 'She says she will be back on the 27th, and to-day is only the 24th.'

"'Sir,' was the answer, 'it is the only time in our experience when our daughter has left us without first gaining our permission. Besides, the time is especially inopportune. My daughter's wedding cards are out.'"

Mr. Gryce stopped suddenly, for Dr. Cameron had given an anxious start.

"Ah, that arouses your interest!" remarked the detective. "Your own wedding being so near, I am not surprised."

It was dryly said, and the doctor at once reseated himself. He had no wish to appear unduly moved, but he could not suppress every token of emotion, so he turned his head away from the light. Mr. Gryce let his gaze travel to a new object before proceeding.

Only One Conclusion.

"This avowal of Mrs. A. put a new aspect on affairs," said he, "but yet I saw no reason for the extreme anxiety displayed. 'And on what day does she expect to be married?' I asked.

"'On the 27th.'

"'But she says she will be back.'

"'That does not comfort me.'

"'You think she will not come.'

"'I have no hope that she will.'

"This acknowledgment was uttered with emphasis. There seemed to be but one conclusion to draw.

"'Your daughter wishes to escape her engagement?'

"The answer was less emphatic than before. In fact, it expressed doubt.

"'I do not know, sir; my daughter is not herself, has not been for some time. My husband and myself have both noticed it; but we never anticipated her taking any such extreme action as this. Where has she gone? What will become of her? How can we face the world? How can we tell her lover?'

"'Then you think——'

"'That she is laboring under a temporary aberration of mind, caused, perhaps, by the excitement of the last few weeks; that she is not responsible for her acts; that she may be anywhere, remote or near; and that we may wait till the hour set for her marriage is past without seeing her.'

"To this I could make but one reply: 'Then why not take her lover into your confidence, inform him of your fears, and gain the benefit of his experience in your search for her?'

A MOTHER'S FEARS.

"The answer will astonish you.

"'Because we are very proud and he is very proud. To explain our fears we should be obliged to say much that it would be humiliating for us to utter and for him to hear. Besides, we may overrate the situation. She may come back; as she says she will and, should this be the case, you can see for yourself what endless regret would follow any such confidences as you suggest.'

"'But'—I began.

"'It is this note that causes our dilemma,' she interposed. 'With these lines before me I can not act as if there were no hope of her returning in proper time to take her part in the ceremony. Yet I do not trust these lines, nor the promise she has made. Why, I can hardly say; for she has always been a woman of her word. But she is not herself, of that I am convinced.'

"This repetition of her former assertion made it easy for me to inquire what special change she had perceived in her daughter to lead to such a conclusion. She evidently found it difficult to reply.

"'I can not put it into words,' she declared. 'I feel the change.'

"'And how long have you felt it?'

"'Not long; since we began active preparations for her wedding, I think.'

"'And has no one else observed it?'

"'I can not say. I should think her lover would.'

"'Why?'

"'Because it has been in reference to him she has shown her peculiarities strongest. For weeks she has received him only on sufferance and for the last few days has more than once absolutely refused to see him.'

"'And what reason did she assign for this?'

Prepared for Wedding.

"'Follies. Fatigue, caprice, a letter to write, a dressmaker to see—anything that came into her head.'

"'Yet she went on preparing for her wedding?'

"'Certainly; her cards were out.'

"The tone in which this was said caused me to reflect. Though affable, kindly and even philanthropic in her dealings toward the world at large, Mrs. A. is, as every one knows, a woman who would find it very difficult to infringe upon any of the laws of society. Having seen her daughter pledge herself to a man of suitable pretensions, she would consider such a pledge final if only because she could not face the talk and scandal that would follow a rupture. Influenced by his idea, I remarked:

"'You must be perfectly frank with me if you want me to help you at this crisis. Has your daughter, or has she not, expressed a wish to break her engagement?'

"'She asked me once if I thought it too late for her to do so. Of course there was but one reply to this, and she said no more. But,' the poor mother continued hastily, 'that was only a symptom of flightiness. She has nothing against her lover, does not pretend to have.'

"'Only against marriage?'

"'Only against marriage.'

"'Mrs. A.,' I now boldly asked, 'do you think she loves the man you expect her to marry?'

"The answer came hesitatingly. 'She accepted his attentions with pleasure when they were first offered.'

"'Do you think she loves any other man?'

The mother shrank back in dismay. "I am sure she does not. How could she? There is not another such gentleman in our circle of acquaintance."

"This was flattering to the gentleman, but not exactly satisfactory to me.

"'You know girls sometimes take strange whims.'

"'My daughter is not a girl, she is a woman.'

"This silenced me as it would you, sir, I have no doubt; and seeing the mother was really sincere in believing that her daughter's mind was temporarily affected, I inquired again as to what she had done or failed to do of late, and found that she had shunned the society of the members of her family as well as that of her lover, finding her sole interest seemingly in the preparation of her wardrobe. "To that she did attend,' said Mrs. A., 'and it was the only thing she did help me in. No hour was too late for her to see her dressmaker; no engagement too pressing for her to receive and fit on any of the new costumes that kept coming home. Indeed she showed more than a bride's usual interest in such matters; and it is the one reason I have for not disputing you utterly when you say she may come back. She will want to see her dresses.'

A Clew.

"'Then she did not take them with her?'

"'She took nothing.'

"'What! not a trunk?'

"'Nothing; that is, nothing but a little hand satchel.'

"'How do you know this?'

"'We all saw her go out; she was in shopping costume.'

"'But she had money?'

"'I can not say. Some, no doubt; but we found a large roll of bills in her drawer, and her father says it contains nearly all he had lately given her. I do not think her pocketbook held more than five dollars.'

"This was a point. Either the girl was going amongst friends, or she was really touched in her mind. To make sure that the first supposition was not true, I asked for a list of the houses which Miss A. was in the habit of visiting. Mrs. A. mentioned some half-dozen, but added that her daughter's most intimate companion was in Europe and that she did not think she cared enough for the others to go to them at this time.

"'And she positively carried no baggage with her?'

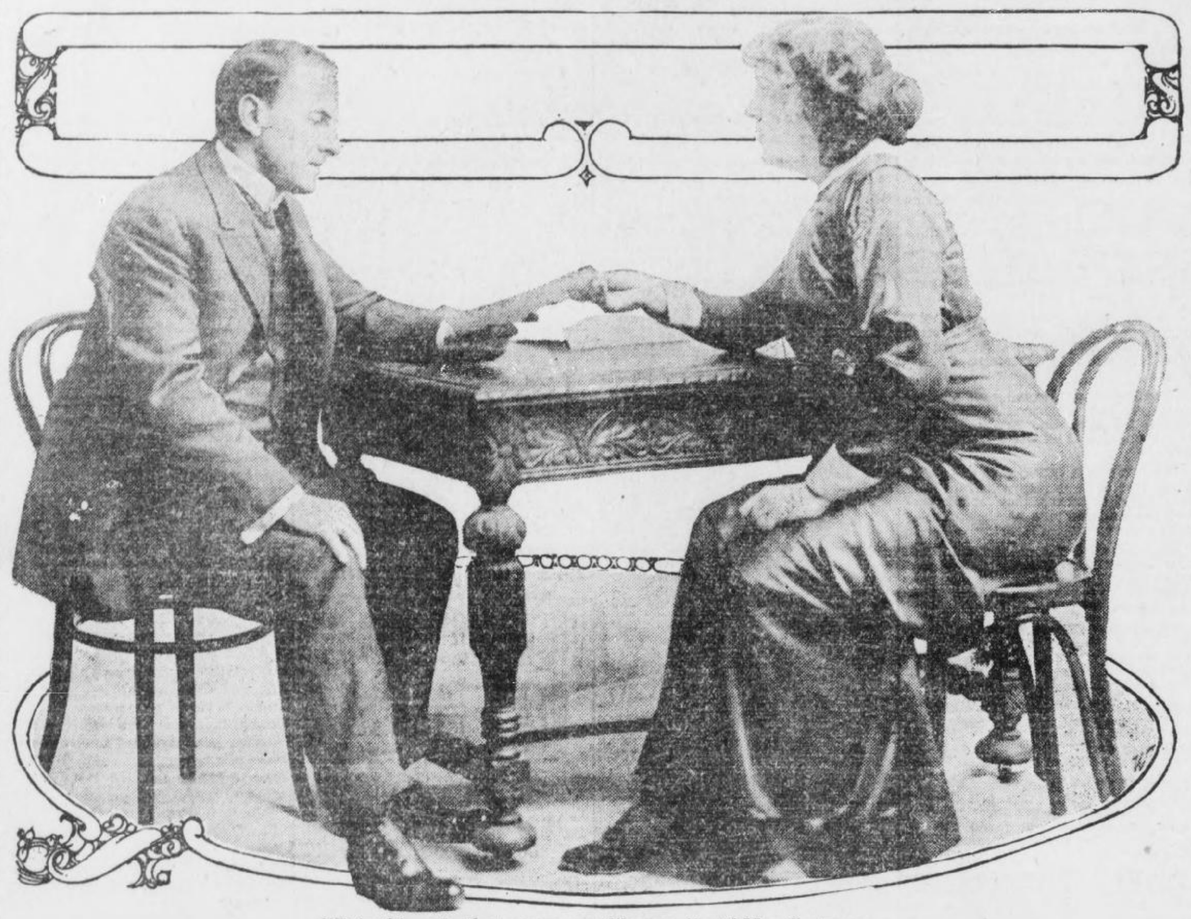

"'None. I have looked her things over carefully and find nothing missing. She did not even wear her diamonds.'

"'And her watch?'

"'Is left behind.'

THEIR MARRIED LIFE

Helen's First Day in the Paris Shops Results in Very Few Purcheses

By MABEL HERBERT URNER.

IT was the morning of their third day in Paris that Helen started out to shop. She had read and heard so much of the big Parisian bazaars that she was athrill with eager expectation.

"Better take in the Galeries Lafayette first," suggested Warren as they left the hotel together. "You can take a bus from there for the Bon Marche."

"Dear, wouldn't you have time to go by the Lafayette with me—it's only half past 9," pleaded Helen, who dreaded starting out alone.

"All right," good naturedly, "that's not much out of my way. Hurry up—let's get this bus."

It was going to be another hot day. There was still no relief from the heat wave that had settled over Paris since their arrival. But as Helen climbed gleefully to the top of the bus, the thought of the day in the Paris shops made her unmindful of the heat.

"There you are." Warren pointed out a huge building just ahead. From the top fluttered white banners and flags lettered gayly in red, "Galeries Lafayette." It looked more like a great exposition building than a store.

But when they left the bus, Helen was astonished to find that all along the sidewalk in front of the store were stalls, piled high with the cheapest kind of merchandise.

She Is Lonely.

There were tables of crockery, kitchenware, cotton dresses and waists, and around each was a chattering crowd of Frenchwomen pulling over the goods. Large cardboard signs—"50 centimes," "1 franc," "2 francs"—were everywhere.

"Why, dear, would you think they'd allow these push-cart peddlers outside a reputable store? Why, it's like a cheap market place!"

"They're not push-cart peddlers," laughed Warren. "This is all part of the Galeries Lafayette—that's how they sell their cheap goods. Our stores have bargain basements—here they have stalls outside the shop. Now I've got to leave you. Don't overdo it and get too tired. Better not be on your feet too much this hot day."

Helen's interest in the scene about her soon banished the momentary feeling of loneliness as Warren disappeared in the crowd. For some time she stood on the sidewalk watching the stalls and the chattering, pushing crowd about them. Warren was right. Unquestionably this was part of the store, for bareheaded French floor-walkers, with frock coats and twisted mustaches, walked up and down the sidewalk.

Although Helen had often heard that the Galeries Lafayette was one of the best Paris shops, this street sale of goods made her most skeptical. But when she entered, she saw that it was really a very beautiful store. In the center was a great rotunda under a crystal dome. An imposing marble staircase with double escalators led to the upper galleries.

Everywhere was a lavish and seemingly haphazard display of goods. It was all very different from a New York shop. There seemed no aisles, only a vast labyrinth of tables piled with goods in chaotic disorder—the most tawdry heaped carelessly with the most expensive. The confusing display of the great quantities of merchandise, the riot of color, the crowd, the uproar and tumult were to Helen most bewildering.

Hoping that the upper galleries would be less crowded and tumultuous, Helen made her way to the long line of elevators. Glancing over the directory of the floors, she located "Lingerie" and "Trousseaux."

French lingerie is a luxury coveted by every American woman, and as Helen stepped from the elevator at the third gallery into what seemed a great exhibition of white goods, her heart beat with expectation.

On every side was a network of tables and counters heaped with white garments—chemisettes, jupons and robes de nuites. Over the tables were cards with "Occasion" or "Grand Occasion," the French phrase for bargains.

Almost everything was hand embroidered and mostly unlaundered, the blue penciled tracing of the patterns being still distinct.

Helen was surprised to find that while even the cheapest garment, those as low as six or seven francs, were embroidered by hand, the garment itself was made by machinery, the seams carelessly stitched, and the buttons half off. She thought of the poor women in the convents where most of this work is done. How poorly paid they must be to embroider such inferior goods!

She looked first for some dainty low-necked night dresses with short butterfly sleeves, but she saw only ungainly garments with high necks and long sleeves. Was this the much-lauded lingerie?

At last, in some glass cases, where the most expensive models were displayed, she found some exquisite low-neck short-sleeved gowns.

"How much? Quel prix?" Helen demanded of a passing clerk, pointing to a garment in the case.

The girl opened the case and looked at the ticket. Helen could not understand her, but, stooping over, she read the ticket herself—90 francs. Eighteen dollars!

Helen tried to make her understand with a few words of French, much English and many gestures that she wanted to see some gowns of that cut, but much less expensive. The girl touched a loud gong, which was a signal for an English-speaking clerk, and one promptly appeared.

"Almost all of our low-neck and short-sleeved gowns are in the expensive models," the clerk explained. "But of course we have some for less than 90 francs. Now here is quite a pretty gown for 35 francs."

Seven dollars! Except for her trousseau, Helen had never paid $7 for a nightgown in her life. And she had no intention of paying it in Paris, where she had expected to get things ridiculously cheap.

Only One Purchase.

"Well, I'll let the nightgowns go for the present, but I'd like to see some combinations and skirts."

"About what price does madam wish to pay?" asked the clerk, with lessening cordiality, for she expected Americans not to object to prices.

"About three or four dollars—fifteen or twenty francs."

"They're all out on the tables, madam. We keep only the more expensive ones in this department."

"But I could never button these," exclaimed Helen, viewing with disfavor the combinations, which all opened in the back. "And they're all too large—I want 34."

"You won't find bust measures in Paris like you have in America, madam. We have only three sizes here. You see, they're marked with tickets—the green ticket is small, the pink ticket medium and the yellow ticket large."

Helen expressed her astonishment that in Paris, where fit and style were supposed to be perfected, they should have only three sizes instead of the eight—from 32 to 46—that are carried by every American store!

The intention to buy enough lingerie while in Paris to last her for the next two years was somewhat shaken. And she finally left the department, having made just one purchase—a white skirt with a hand-embroidered flounce. Even this she could not get the right length. It would have to be shortened when she got it home.

From the lingerie, Helen walked down the broad marble staircase to the gallery below. Just at the foot of the stairs were a dozen or more tables overburdened with parasols. She had never seen so many parasols together in her life. Most of them were brilliant in coloring and design, vivid reds, bright greens and startling blues.

Farther on was a gorgeous display of scarfs—the long chiffon scarfs that the French women wear with their evening gowns. They lay in careless glittering heaps, shimmering with gold and silver spangles and iridescent beadings.

Helen had thought the hues and fabrics in the shops at home particularly loud this year, but they were mild and subdued compared with the riotous coloring of everything here.

In spite of the whirring electric fans the heat was excessive, and before Helen had explored half the departments of the Galeries Lafayette she was exhausted.

Although she had spent most of the day there, her purchases were trivial, but she had a fair idea of what a big Paris shop was like.

It was good to get back to their rooms, to have time to bathe, rest and dress before Warren came.

"Well, how did you get along?" was his greeting when he got in a little after 6. "Buy out all the Paris shops?"

"Not quite. I left a few things in the Galeries Lafayette! That was the only place I went."

"How did you find things? Cheaper than at home?"

"Some things are. But, dear, the styles and colorings are so extreme. Do you know," thoughtfully, "I really believe I can find the things I want better in New York."

"Course you can! Nothing's more overrated than the French styles. They are made for French women—not for Americans. And nine-tenths of the Americans who come over here and buy a lot of truck are blamed sick of their bargains when they get 'em home."

THE GEORGIAN'S MAGAZINE PAGE

The Finger of Death

A SPY has to take many risks, and if he is caught at the game during war time his career as a rule is then and there closed promptly, and in most cases in ignominious fashion.

It was the money aspect of the business which appealed to Morris Tyler, and induced him to engage in the work. He was a born spy. A good linguist, and cunning beyond belief, he was never one to assay a dangerous task for the sheer excitement of it. He did not like taking risks, though, of course, he had to take them occasionally; but always at these junctures he kept in mind the big pay and extras. It needed these to tune him up to concert pitch.

He was always cautious and successful. Having found it advisable to quit Europe for a time, he made his way to the South American Republic of Caldera, which, at the date of his arrival, was just in the throes of one of its periodical revolutions.

He offered his services to the Government party at a rate of pay somewhat in excess of what he had been receiving in Europe, and President Blance having heard of him, and finding that he could speak Spanish fluently, engaged him at once.

But in Caldera, Morris Tyler had to work under new and unfamiliar conditions. Hitherto, his spying had been carried on during times of peace. There had been no war in Europe since he had come to the front. Now he found himself in the thick of fighting of a savage character. When the insurgents took any prisoners, they gave them the option of changing sides or being shot. But when the Government troops captured any rebels, they did not permit them any choice. They were placed in a row with their backs against a wall and promptly finished off by a firing party. By the time he had been three weeks at the "great game" as played in this explosive South American State, Morris Tyler was inclined to regret that he had not remained a passive spectator of the revolution, instead of taking part in it. However, he fortified his courage with the thought of the pile of dollars he would add to his banking account when the fighting was over and the rebels beaten. He had seen enough to feel pretty certain they had no real chance of winning. And so far he had not encountered any special danger; his cunning always enabled him to evade it.

No Avail.

But the day came when he discovered that cunning was of no avail, and that courage would have been a far more desirable possession.

He had been sent for by Colonel Voruba, the chief of the Intelligence Department, to whom he usually made his reports.

"Some rare work for you, Senor Tyler," observed the Colonel cheerfully, "and it may be the last service we shall require you to perform, for the revolution must end soon. Still, much will depend on the informtaion you are able to obtain for us."

Morris Tyler nodded, and waited for his chief to go on.

"The rebels are massed in some force on the Hill of San Stefano," pursued the Colonel, "where it seems they are going to make a last desperate stand. They hold the old fort up there. That much we know. But we do not know the number of their guns, nor how they are placed. It is important that we have this information before we storm the position, and we look to you to obtain it for us."

"Can you give me any further particulars, Colonel?"

"There are no further particulars to give you," replied Colonel Voruba. "You know the road. The rest lies with you. I am instructed, however, to inform you that if you succeed in bringing us correct information, you will receive five hundred dollars over and above your pay. You must start at once.

By a curious freak of fate, there arrived at the headquarters of the Calderan army, twenty-four hours, later, a deserter from the rebel ranks, who was able to furnish the exact information which Colonel Voruba required.

Thereupon, an order was given for an immediate advance. This movement taking place so much sooner than was expected, would very likely put Morris Tyler in an extremely tight corner. But the life of one man was of small moment when so much was at stake. And a spy! Well, no one bothered much about a spy when he was not required. In the meantime, Tyler had contrived to get to the top of the Hill of San Stefano without being observed by the enemy's outposts or sentries.

He was, indeed, well within the circles of outposts when he reached an abandoned building, which at one time had been the boiler house of a sugar plantation. It seemed a safe hiding place, from the security of which he could observe what was going on in the rebels' camp without himself being seen. He crept inside and laid flat down upon the floor. About half a mile away he could see the camp fires glowing in the darkness, and nearer still the squat shape of the fort showing black against the night sky. Picturesque insurgents were passing to and fro, and a few were seated by the fires playing cards.

No Sleep.

After a time the camp became silent, even the card players giving up their games and stretching themselves out on the ground to sleep. Only sentries remained on the alert, but between him and the fort there were three. By no possibility could he get past them unseen, for it was open ground.

The night wore on. He was tired, but he dared not sleep. If he could only snatch a few minutes—just to rest his eyes——

He awoke with a start, and was about to spring to his feet when a harsh voice commanded him to remain still. At the other side of the chamber he saw an armed man—one of the rebels—standing with his rifle at the "ready."

"So! A spy!" exclaimed the man. "Bueno! It will be promotion for me for having discovered you. Don't move!" The rifle was raised threateningly. "If you so much as move a hand or a foot I will put a bullet through your brain. Yet I do not wish to waste ammunition. A rope is good enough for such as you."

He spat on the floor to typify his contempt for all spies. Then he called to the nearest sentry, telling him of his "find," and asking him to bring a rope. But the words had barely left his lips when there was a terrific crash overhead, a blinding flash of flame, the splitting of wood and the rattle of falling masonry.

A twelve-pound shell from a field gun had struck the building and reduced it to a ruin. It was the first shot fired by the Government artillery in their attack on the hill of San Stafano. The rebels were taken by surprise, became panic-stricken, and instead of shaping up to defend the position began a hasty retreat.

Moris Tyler was not immediately concerned with the running fight between the loyal troops and the rebels, for the sounds of strife drifted farther away each minute from the ruined boiler house. No other shot or shell came near it. But he was much concerned about himself. He could not move. He was pinned down by some timber from the fallen roof, and all around him was a wreck of shattered walls, broken planks and beams and debris which bore no likeness to anything in particular.

Fear!

"Luck's with me, after all," he murmured. "I am not hurt, and this beam is not too heavy for me to lift. I can raise it up and crawl."

He paused with a sort of gasp, for his eyes, roving around the place, had rested on a gleaming rifle barrel. It was pointed straight at his head, and there was a man's forefinger resting on the trigger. The man was the rebel who had captured him. He was lying on his face amidst the wreckage, and there was blood streaming from a terrible wound at the side of his head. A splinter of the bursting shell had killed him.

The spy gave a sigh of relief. For a moment he had thought that the man was alive, and was taking aim at him. But his relief was of short duration. He did not like that rifle pointing so steadily at him, even though it was only held in a dead man's hand; and when he saw that the lower end of the beam which was lying across his own body rested against the man's right forearm, he liked it still less. He could not move the beam upwards; he could only move it downwards or sideways. If he shifted it ever so little, it was bound to press more heavily on the dead rebel's arm, and that would cause his stiffened finger to press on the trigger, which would fire the rifle. The bullet would enter his—Tyler's—brain, because his head was so wedged that he could not move it to one side or the other. He could raise it a little, but that would be of no advantage. The bullet would take him then somewhere about the mouth and pass upwards through the base of his skull.

He shook with fear, like a man with the ague, and the sweat streamed down his face.

It was borne in upon the spy's mind that he might lie there until he died of starvation. There was the alternative of pushing the beam a little more, so that the dead man's finger should press harder on the trigger and thus end his misery with a bullet from the menacing rifle.

Then all at once something in his brain seemed to snap. A red curtain dropped before his eyes. The noise of a rushing wind howled in his ears—and then came black oblivion.

Early the next morning two mounted men reined up close by the ruined boiler house. They were Colonel Voruba and an orderly. The fight was over, and the rebels were beaten.

"Two men in there," said the Colonel. "They may have some life in them."

The orderly dismounted and peered in among the wreckage.

"One is a rebel," he reported. "The other is Senor Tyler. Both dead."

The Answer.

"The spy!" exclaimed the Colonel.

"It is strange," said Voruba, bending over Tyler's body, "there is not a mark upon him. He has received no wound, no hurt. He could easily have lifted this beam and extricated himself."

"Look at the expression on his face even now," replied the orderly. "It was sheer terror that killed him. I have heard of such a thing. Perhaps he had a weak heart."

"Terror!" Voruba raised his eyebrows. "Ah, yes, I perceive. The loaded rifle pointing at his head, which, at the slightest movement on his part would——"

Captain Berwick interrupted him. He had picked the rifle up and opened the breech.

"He was in no danger at any time from this weapon," he said. "It is not loaded!"

Did the Vicar Stop?

It was too much. Every Sunday old Adams, who blew the organ, would continue blowing after the music had stopped, thereby producing most undesirable sounds.

Time and again had the organist taken him to task for it.

"Right, mister," had been old Adams' invariable reply. "I forgits, you know."

One Sunday the organist could stand it no longer.

The congregation had been set tittering by the old man's forgetfulness, and during the sermon the organist seized the opportunity to write him a note on the matter, and handed it to a choir boy to deliver.

Misunderstanding the whispered directions, the lad handed the note straight up to the vicar, who astoundedly read the following:

"Will you stop when I tell you to? People come here to listen to my music, not to your horrible noise."

ON HER KITCHEN STOVE

It is interesting to note that the most successful remedy for woman's ills was originally prepared nearly forty years ago by Mrs. Lydia E. Pinkham, of Lynn, Mass., by steeping roots and herbs on her kitchen stove and supplied to friends and neighbors without cost. Its fame spread; the demand grew; until now many tons of roots and herbs are used each year in order to supply this famous remedy which has proved such a marvelous success in controlling diseases of women. Merit alone could have stood this test of time.

Lady Constance Stewart Richardson on How to Acquire a Beautiful Figure Through Dancing

Written Exclusively for the Readers of This Page.

In Poses Especially Adapted for the Accompanying Article.

Figure 1, shown in the topmost picture, shows the body poised on one foot.

A swaying exercise fully described by Lady Richardson's article brings about an easy control of the waist muscles.

Practice in this lesson will do more to reduce the waistline than any other fat-reducing method known to Lady Richardson.

Incidentally it produces naturally graceful movements when walking or running.

Figure 2 is a walking exercise that has a wonderfully beneficial effect upon the whole body.

Constant practice in this exercise makes it become as easy and natural to you as when a child skipping along the street.

It is Lady Richardson's claim that all these movements are but normal, simple, human expressions.

This style of dancing, says Lady Richardson, is good for the soul as well as the body.

THIS is the fourth of Lady Richardson's valuable articles on dancing as an aid to natural beauty.

Another will appear on this page next week, in which the student is carried along a little further, and into a trifle more difficult exercises.

This is the first time that any newspaper has presented a series of articles in which such expert instruction and advice are given on the value of practicing natural movements for the preservation of human grace and beauty.

By Lady Constance Stewart Richardson

Copyright, 1913, by International News Service.

DANCING is one of the most characteristic and characterful things I know. It expresses the individual and the nation in perfect accord with the feelings and customs that characterize him or it.

Take, for instance, the Hungarian Czardas, the Italian Tarantelle, or the Tango of Argentina—each is characteristic of its place and clime, and however well the peoples of another nation do the dance that is not their own they still must modify it to suit their own temperament.

A Perfect Outline.

If we take the best of the moderns and add to it the finest steps of the ancients and teach our result we will get as many variations as we have individual temperaments expressing the dance we have made.

If people will stop to think what a wonderful mode of expression the dance offers them, and will study it, its music and the effect of this expression on their own temperaments, they will no longer consider the dance and the body that expresses it as something to be despised, but they will give to the body, which is capable of beauty, its due of admiration and its right to beautiful expression, which will mean that one step toward lifting instead of degrading the human body will be definitely taken through the worship of loveliness.

To help you all make your bodies so perfect in outline, in strength and in power to respond to your desire to express emotion through the great safety valve of movement is my desire.

When dancing, look happy and as if you were dancing because you love to, and as if you were dancing because you love the particular step you are taking—not doing the fashionable thing some dancing teacher had assured you was the "proper way." Make one or two steps your own, and through them teach your body to express itself without shame or consciousness in perfect happiness and rhythm.

Figure One.

Dancing is a safe and sane form of self-expression, and it is good for body as well as soul.

In Figure 1 the body is poised on the ball of one foot, while the other is raised with the leg thrown slightly backward from the knee and the toes pointing downward. A straight line from flexed knee to the tip of the toes seems to be a favorite idea of grace, as depicted by the sculpture of the ancients, and as it adds to beauty of line the benefit of strengthening instep and ankle, it is one of the little separate movements that I often incorporate in my dancing steps.

To return to Figure 1—Bend slightly at the waist toward the uplifted leg and raise the arm above the head so there will be a continuous curve from elbow to toes. A flexible waist waits upon the earnest practice of this exercise.

From elbow to wrist the arm is bent above and toward the head, while the other arm, stretched lightly out from the shoulder and parallel with it, terminates in loosely flexed wrist and hand. Sway lightly from foot to foot, and see what easily controlled muscles of the waist result.

Figure Two.

Figure 2 pictures for you a walking exercise that has a wonderfully beneficial effect on the whole body. It is a natural bodily expression such as you have often seen little children drop into quite unconsciously.

Tiptoe along from foot to foot, with the raised limb flexed at the knee and held with down-pointing toe.

Bend the body well forward from the waist, and sway it toward the lifted foot, stretching the arm over this foot back and down and the other arm forward and as you would do in feeling your way along a solid surface in the dark.

Leg, arm and waist muscles are here brought into play—and when such simple, pretty, little exercises as this become indeed play you may feel sure that you are on your way to a body beautiful and graceful.

After all, just such dance movements as this are normal, simple, human expression, and out of them we can evolve natural grace of body and movement.

Handsome Mr. Slatte :: A SHORT STORY COMPLETE

"I SHOULD think you would read more," suggested the girl in the grass green linen gown as she came upon the porch.

"Oh, I don't know," responded the young woman in the wicker chair, who was busy embroidering. "This is just as satisfactory as most of the popular novels."

"It's every woman's duty to improve her mind," declared the girl in the green linen. "I feel that I have done so much since the corner drug store put in its circulating library. Mr. Slatte has been such a help!"

"Mr. Slatte?" queried her friend. "What has he to do with it?"

The girl in the green linen sighed faintly. "You know," she said, "I am not the sort of girl to rave over a man's good looks. I prefer brains any time. But, really, you never in your life saw any one who looked like Mr. Slatte! He——"

"He might look like anything with that name," commented the young woman who was embroidering. "Do you mean to say he is handsome?"

"More than that," said her friend. "He has the sort of eyes that pierce with their brilliance, and such a chin! My dear, every time I see him I am reminded of that stunning portrait of Lord Byron! I am certain there is a mystery about him! He has the most perfect manners!"

A Shock.

"Where——"

"Why, he's recently taken charge of the drug store," explained the girl in the green linen. "I had just picked out a book when he came up and said he couldn't bear to see me waste my time on such a tiresome story. He said he'd be only too glad to help me find something worth while that he knew I could appreciate. I thought it so kind——"

"Kind!" said the girl who was embroidering. "I think he was impertinent. I guess if I wanted a book I'd want what I wanted."

"You don't understand at all," exclaimed the girl in green linen, patiently. "Mr. Slatte is writing a novel himself, so of course he knows perfectly what—"

"My goodness! A drug clerk and a novelist!" said the girl who was embroidering.

Her friend bristled at this. "He's not a clerk!" she said. "He's a sort of—er—manager. People generally don't know he is so literary. You don't suppose that he wastes time on everybody who comes to get a book, do you? Not that he is especially interested in me, of course—only I suppose he realizes that I have more than average intelligence. I never saw such eyes in my life! Sometimes when he smiles in that slow, sad sort of way of his I——"

"Who puts up prescriptions while he is engaged in smiling sadly?" inquired the young woman who was embroidering.

"You are perfectly horrid!" said her friend. "If you knew Mr. Slatte you'd think differently. We have had some of the most inspiring talks since we met. He always drops whatever he is doing and helps me select my books. I'm a rapid reader and have to exchange books so often.

"I'm on my way there now to get another book. I do wish I could make you see what an opportunity it is, now that Mr. Slatte is there. He has such a cultivated mind—many times he has remarked what a treat it is to him to have someone come in who is different from the average careless reader."

A Rival.

"There comes Dorothy Maye," said the girl who was embroidering. "Come in, Dorothy," she called across the railing.

"I can't just now," said the girl in question, pausing at the steps. "I'm on my way to the drug store to take back a book. There's such a nice man in charge there now—perfectly stunning, and so kind. He's writing a book himself, too. He always stops whatever he is doing to come and help me pick out something good. He says it is a treat——"

"How nice!" enthusiastically interrupted the girl who was embroidering. "Alicia is here and she is going there, too——"

"No," said the girl in grass green linen shortly. "I am not going to the drug store! I am too busy to waste time over those trashy books and to hang around a silly clerk."

Untested.

"Yes, sir," said the successful manufacturer, "no man can sell his factory products these days unless they have been thoroughly tested."

"Oh, I don't know," replied another equally successful manufacturer. "We manage to sell our product without testing it."

"You do? What is your line?"

"Dynamite."

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

LET YOUR HEART DECIDE.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am a girl of twenty. About two years ago I met a young man, and from that time until a month ago I loved him, but he did not return my love in the way I wanted, so I thought it would be best to forget him. I am now keeping company with another young man who is very serious. Two weeks ago the first young man wrote and told me he had found no girl he could love like me. DOROTHY.

You must take the one you love most, but before you make that decision be very fair with yourself. I know nothing of the merits of the two men, but it seems to me that the first is somewhat like the dog in the manger.

He did not seek your love till some other man's attentions made it desirable.

HE IS NOT SINCERE.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am nineteen, and in love with a man three years my senior. I am really crazy over him. I think the world of him, as I think he does the same of me.

It is nearly a year since we met and fell in love with each other. He asked me to be his bride. We were to be married in a short time, but now he has excuses for not getting married. He does not write as usual, but comes up as usual. P. G. Z.

The indications are he is trying to get out of it. Save your self-respect by breaking the engagement, for, believe me, it will never end in marriage. I am sorry, dear, but this course will save you greater pain later on.

THAT IS HIS PRIVILEGE.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am a young girl of seventeen and considered good looking. I have been keeping company with a young man for several months and at a dance one night I introduced a girl to him to whom he pays more attention than to me. NORAH.

There was no engagement. He was merely your friend. I hope, under the circumstances, you will be big enough, and broad enough, to be glad you were the means of introducing him to a girl whose company delights him. That's the way to look at it, my dear.

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

CHAPTER IX.

MARY smiled reassuringly into the anxious faces of her parents bending over her as she opened her eyes after a brief period of unconsciousness. She found herself lying upon the living room couch, her forehead wet from the water which her mother had applied in the effort to "bring her around." She struggled to a sitting posture, beginning at once to explain the attack of faintness which had seized her.

"I have been working a little too hard in this warm weather," she said. "I have not felt well lately, anyway, and this is but the culmination of the weariness and strain—nothing else."

She spoke no word of the news that had held her eyes waking far into the night, nor of the blessed relief of the knowledge that the man whom she had feared was injured or dead was alive and well.

"You won't try to go to school to-day, will you?" pleaded her mother.

The girl smiled.

"It is Saturday, mother," she reminded her. "But I must go down to the Public Library to look up some matters I want to be sure of before Monday. But I will take a cup of coffee first."

She drank this when her mother brought it to her, then arose with decision.

"I am ashamed of myself to be so weak and foolish," she exclaimed. "Please, dear people, try to forget it."

"Would you like to look over the morning paper?" asked her father, eyeing her keenly.

"No, thank you!" she said quickly. "Thank you, mother, for waiting so sweetly on your silly daughter. I will go to bed early to-night and not repeat this performance of fainting. I never did such a thing quite so causelessly and suddenly before in my life."

When she had left the living room, the father and mother gazed again into each other's faces.

"The fact that she avoids the subject that made her faint shows that she cares for this young man," declared the mother. "Well, he is a nice fellow, I guess."

"I don't care how nice he is," retorted the father, "he is not half good enough for my girl. Before I consent to any serious attentions from him I am going to write to his firm and find what his record is."

"That's all right, dear," agreed the wife indulgently. "I approve of your doing that. But if the Angel Gabriel—trumpet and all—were to ask you for Mary you would not think him good enough for her."

"And he wouldn't be!" asserted the father, without a smile.

The most tender mother is willing—even, at times, glad—to have her daughter marry an honorable, well-to-do gentleman; a fond father seldom looks with favor upon any suitor for his daughter's hand.

An hour later Mary appeared in her mother's room, her hat and gloves on, ready to go out. Mrs. Danforth looked solicitously at her, but, seeing that the color had returned to her lips, she forbore to utter any protest. If the child was restless it was better to let her go. In the library she might find the books she needed for her work, they might quiet her nerves, turning her thoughts from agitating subjects.

Mrs. Danforth would have been surprised could she have seen her daughter when she reached her destination. Instead of going at once in search of the volumes in which she was to "look up" certain important subjects, she went direct to the reading room of the library and was in a few minutes immersed in the morning papers. A close observer would have noticed that the only columns she read were those dealing with the recent railroad wreck and the deeds of heroism of the various uninjured passengers—the most active and bravest of whom had evidently been "the young Texan, Gordon Craig by name." As the girl read, her cheeks glowed and a soft light came to her eyes. So, absorbed was she in her dreams, that she was leaving the building before she remembered that in her wrist-bag she carried a list of books of reference which she must find this morning, and, with a start, went in search of these. Somehow all literature except the newspapers seemed very dull to-day.

As it was Saturday, Mr. Danforth came home at noontime, and was there when his daughter returned a little before the luncheon hour. He greeted her brightly.

"Well!" she said jocosely, "I saw our hero this morning! Craig was at my office. He ran in to tell me that he was all right and to ask if we had seen the account of the wreck. I told him that we had, but I did not flatter him by telling him we had been badly scared about him."

Mary drew a sigh of relief. She had feared her father might mention her evident anxiety, then she reminded herself that she might have known he would not. She waited for his next remark. Although she had read and reread the newspaper accounts of Craig's heroism, she hoped to hear more about it by word of mouth. Her father answered her unspoken thought.

"He said little about himself," he went on, "and I liked him better for that. When I said that I understood he had done some pretty fine work he turned as red as a lobster and said—'It was only what any man would have done under the circumstances,' and changed the subject. So I let it drop. I asked him to come up and see us before he goes back to Texas, and he said he would try to."

"Probably he will not find time to," said Mary with studied indifference. She began to talk vivaciously of her work, of the approaching school commencement, of anything and everything except of Gordon Craig. And her father and mother, watching her, understood.

That afternoon a messenger left at her door a note for her. It was short:

"Dear Miss Danforth: Will you give me the happiness of your company to the opera next Wednesday night? I will call for you at a quarter before eight. The performance is 'Aida.'

"Faithfully yours,
"GORDON CRAIG."

The reply that the messenger carried back to Craig was even more brief than the note he had brought:

"My Dear Mr. Craig: Thank you. I will be ready at 7:45 Wednesday night.
"Sincerely yours,
"MARY DANFORTH."

A Frank Talk on Typewriters

Somehow, the impression has gained ground that there isn't much difference between the various makes of typewriters on the market.

You may think the same thing. It would take a good, SOUND, LOGICAL argument to convince you that all typewriters do not have the same efficiency and that a stenographer cannot secure the same results on every machine.

We are ready to make that argument and to show you by actual demonstration that

The L. C. Smith & Bros. Typewriter

will do more work, better work, with less fatigue to the stenographer, than any writing machine ever made.

How is this possible?

Here are a few reasons:

1. It is ball bearing throughout—others are not.
2. All operations are controlled from the keyboard.
3. It is the lightest touch machine made.
4. It does not "smut" the carbon.
5. The ribbon reverses automatically.
6. The type is so protected that it is not battered by collision.
7. One motion of the hand returns the carriage and operates the line space.
8. It has an inbuilt biller and tabulator.
9. No trouble to write on paper as small as a postage stamp.
10. It is built for service.

FIVE TEAMS TO BATTLE IN RACE FOR 30 MINUTES

Big Thriller Slated for Motor Bugs at Prince's Saucer on Tuesday Night.

A HALF-HOUR team race is to be the big feature at the Motordrome to-morrow night, and for the really jammy excitement this should top anything that has been staged yet at Jack Prince's saucer.

Five teams will be in the long grind. And what a wrangle the ten riders had trying to get matched up! Finally Morty Graves suggested that the partners be found by a drawing. Manager Noon Hudson put all the numbers in his new straw lid and the result was:

Graves and McNeil, Schwartz and Lockner, Shields and Richards, Luther and Lewis, Renel and Glenn.

These teams appear to be very evenly matched. Graves and McNeil will probably rule favorites, with Richards and Shields second choice.

No rider will be allowed to remain on the track over twenty successive minutes. But each rider can call for his partner as often as he desires. The partners who are not racing will remain in front of the paddock. The partner riding must drop off the track and touch his teammate on the shoulder before the latter can take up the racing.

It sure will be a thrilling event if all goes well.

The Motordrome Sweepstakes is the second feature event. All the riders will start, five in each qualifying heat. The qualifying heats will be over a one-mile course, while the final will be two miles.

Harry Glenn, who defeated Schwartz the other night, will meet Luther in a match race. It will be the two best heats in three over a two-mile circuit. Glenn is a local boy and he will be backed heavily to down his worthy opponent.

* * *

FOLLOWING is the complete card for Tuesday night:

First Event.

First heat Motordrome Sweepstakes (One mile to qualify and two-mile final.) Starters—Graves, Shields, Richards, Renel, Lewis.

Second Event.

First heat of a match race between Glenn and Luther. (Race to be two best heats in three.) Distance—two miles.

Third Event.

Second heat of Motordrome Sweepstakes. Starters—Schwartz, Lockner, Luther, McNeil, Glenn.

Fourth Event.

Second heat of match race between Glenn and Luther.

Fifth Event.

Final heat of Motordrome Sweepstakes. (Winners of first and second heats and second man in fastest heat to start.)

Sixth Event.

Third heat of match race between Glenn and Luther, if necessary.

Seventh Event.

Half-hour team race. Teams—Graves and McNeil; Schwartz and Lockner; Shields and Richards; Luther and Lewis; Renel and Glenn. (No rider can remain on track over twenty consecutive minutes.)

Wolgast and Ritchie May Sign Articles

LOS ANGELES, July 28.—Eager to nail down Ad Wolgast to his offer—a $25,000 side bet for a return match—Willie Ritchie to-day is making a desperate effort to get the former title-holder to meet him to-day and sign articles. On Saturday, Wolgast posted with James J. Jeffries $1,000, part of a $25,000 side bet, in a twenty-round title contest with Ritchie. Wolgast specified that half is to go that he will from the title-holder in twenty rounds, the other half that he knocks out, stop or force Ritchie to quit inside of the limit.

Ritchie lost no time in accepting the offer when he learned that there was seriousness to Ad's movements, and he asked Jeffries to affect a meeting between he and Ad for this afternoon in the hope that articles might be signed. Ritchie leaves here for 'risco Wednesday afternoon and he would like to close the match before starting. Should the pair come together they will clash either September 1 or 9

By W. W. Naughton.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 28.—Arthur Pelky, the new white heavyweight champion, possesses most of the facial characteristics of the professional pugilist, but it can scarcely be said that he has a fighting eye.

Now, do not misunderstand me. There is nothing in Pelky's look to suggest that he is lacking in courage, but, sizing him up as he sat in my den yesterday, I could not help thinking how different he was from other brand-new champions I had known. In most cases the eye of a freshly-fledged champ glints with a mixture of pride and defiance. If looks could be construed into words the look to which I refer would read, "I can lick anything that walks in two shoes."

Pelky's eyes are large and dark—the eyes of a man who broods. To me it almost seemed as if the shadow of that fearful experience he had in the ring at Calgary was still upon him. The suspicion was confirmed by his evident reluctance to talk about the recent past and his palpable inclination to talk about ringmen other than himself. To the majority of champions the recital of how they won their spurs gives unbounded pleasure. To Pelky the recollection brings a shudder.

* * *

PELKY is tall, squarely built and has a strong jaw and large, firmly-knit hands. He is big enough to tackle anything in human shape. He is here with Tommy Burns, once world's champion in his own right, but now fallen into flesh and quite content to be known as a connoisseur.

Tommy is Pelky's manager, and the manner in which Burns discovered that Pelky was worth managing was not the least interesting thing he had to tell. Pelky went to Calgary to box six rounds with Burns. While the affair was in progress the beauties of Pelky's character as a fighter unfolded to Tommy. At the end of the bout Tommy was all in, and an hour later Tommy was Pelky's manager.

"We are in no hurry to make matches," said Burns. "We have twelve weeks' work in the theaters, beginning at Pantages next week, and in the meantime the Gunboat Smith-Jim Flynn match will be decided and the winner will stand forth as a challenger of Pelky. If Smith wins, and I think he will——"

"Pardon me," said Pelky in a soft-voiced way. "I think Flynn will defeat Smith."

"Well, anyway, you'll be ready to sign with the winner," resumed Tommy.

"And if it is Smith you'll like it all the better. You have always wanted to box him, haven't you?"

Pelky nodded his approval.

* * *

BURNS and Pelky were reminded that Sam Langford, the negro pugilist, is back from Australia, and were asked how overtures for a Pelky-Langford match would be regarded.

"I want it to be understood that I will never box a colored man," said Pelky. "Some time ago, when the promoters of the country decided to discourage the making of mixed matches and contests were arranged to decide who was the white heavyweight champion, I thought it one of the best moves ever made in pugilism. I am still of that way of thinking. I call myself the white champion, and feel that I have every right to do so, but if the public took the stand that I ought to accept matches with negroes, I'd be willing to drop out of the game entirely."

* * *

"I THINK he's right," said Burns. "Of course I fought a negro when I met Jack Johnson, but if I had my time to go over again he would wait a long time for a match. To tell the truth, I never wanted to fight Johnson. I was offered big money by the National Club of London, and I turned it down. When I went to Australia and the question came up again, I said that I wanted every cent of $30,000 before I'd go into the ring with Johnson. It was a lot of money, but McIntosh produced it, and then there was no getting out of it, so far as I was concerned.

"And talking of public opinion in such matters, I have lived to learn that a fighter should not lay too much stress upon public opinion. It shifts and veers too much. Before I boxed Johnson I used to receive letters taunting me with being afraid to meet the negro. After I went against him and lost my title the letters still came in. But their tone had changed. I was reviled for having given a negro a chance at the championship."

* * *

WHEN matchmaking is in order, it is just possible that a trip to Australia will be included in the Burns-Pelky itinerary. In response to a message from out yonder, Burns has cabled that Pelky will be willing to take the journey and engage in a series of three fights.

Tommy has named as possible opponents for Pelky: Jim Flynn, Jess Willard, Jim Coffey, Al Palzer and Gunboat Smith.

B. JOHNSON'S RAGE.

(In one week.)

FIRST DAY.

THE Magnate tore his seldom hair
And roared in fearsome rage:
"What's this? Ye gods; What this
I lamp upon the sporting page?
Jake Stahl is canned—my own pick—Jake!
Oh, gimme room to cuss!
I'll show those Boston guys they can't
Make us ridiculous!"

THIRD DAY.

The Magnate speeded to the West—
The wild news speeded, too;
In Cleveland he was cornered by
Reporters quite a few.
"Ahem!" he said. "About Jake Stahl—
I do not care to state
My full conclusions at this time—
I must investigate."

SEVENTH DAY.

At last he makes his lakeside home;
And Fandom stands agog
To watch the mighty gaekwar put
Those ingrates on the hog!
And now the crushing sentence comes—
With quite some 'phaw" and "pish"—
"In this I can not interfere.
E'en if I had the wish!"

* * *

JIM FLYNN says without a smile that he is "going to train" for his fight with Gunboat Smith.

THERE IS TALK OF PRESERVING Hans Wagner's uniform in a Pittsburg museum. Posterity's grasp of our national game would be safe if added to this were Ty Cobb's spikes, McGraw's vocabulary and the skull of the peanut butcher. Any fan will be glad to contribute the latter.

BROWN COMES BACK, HURLS IN OLD-TIME FORM

MORDECAI BROWN is not through. In fact, it looks as if Manager Joe Tinker, of the Reds, said very true words when in the spring he claimed that the three-fingered wonder still had a lot of good baseball left in him. True, Brown is not hurling the kind of ball he did several seasons ago, but just the same, Johnny Evers could use him at present, and to good advantage.

After Brown had helped the Cubs to four pennants and two world's championships, his arm went to the bad in 1912. When the off season came, C. Webb Murphy thought he would not need the three-fingered boy any more, and shipped him to the minors.

But Joe Tinker, new manager of the Reds, thought different. Joe was with "Brownie" a long time, and when he was shipped to the A. A., he and Garry Herrmann arranged a deal whereby Miner would come back to the National League. And it looks as if they made no error in securing Brown.

Beats Old Mates Twice.

Maybe now C. Webb Murphy and Johnny Evers see they made a big mistake in releasing the former star of the Cubs. Recently when the Reds were playing the Bruins, the three-fingered hurler took a pair of games from Johnny Evers' gang, one of them being a shutout, in which only six base knocks were made off him.

When Tinker secured Brown, it was for the simple reason to use him as a coach for his young moundmen. He was carried until May 1 before he made his appearance on the firing line. Since the hot weather arrived, though, Brown's good right arm seems to be as good as ever, and he is taking his regular turn on the mound for his club.

Has Good Record.

Although Brown is not winning as regular or working quite as often as he did a few years back, he has a record which is far better than the one owned by his club.

Miner has won seven games and lost six this campaign. That's a percentage of .538. The Reds own a mark of .380, so it can be seen that Brownie is 158 points ahead of his team.

So far this season Brown has appeared in 22 games, being used as a relief hurler most of the time. In these 22 contests he has worked 95 innings.

MAGNATE REFUSES TO OBEY COMMISSION'S RULING

LOS ANGELES, CAL., July 28.—Henry Berry, president of the Los Angeles baseball club of the Coast League, said to-day he would not obey the baseball law which forbids a class AA team to carry more than twenty players in the middle of the season.

"If the National Commission decided that I should pay a fine I will not do it," said Berry.

Charles Arbogast, a catcher, is expected to join the Los Angeles team to-morrow. This would make 21 players. Berry declared to-day he would not release any of the old men for the reason that three of his players were in the hospital.

Cross-Baldwin Battle To-morrow Matty Has Great Ring Record

By Harry Gilmore, Jr.

LOS ANGELES, CAL., July 28.—Next in line on the Vernon fistic slate is the twenty-round engagement to-morrow night between Matty Baldwin, of Boston, and Leach Cross, of New York City. What better fistic offering could be asked, barring an immediate championship encounter with Willie Ritchie as one of the principals, than those two crack Eastern lightweights?

Cross and Baldwin have long since been bitter rivals, and after repeated efforts on the part of Eastern promoters to bring them together without avail, they will now settle the old score with twenty rounds in which to bring about a result which should be decisive. Cross has forever found the Bostonian a thorn in his side, and carefully analyzing their respective records it seems he might well have found him a formidable foe.

* * *

BALDWIN has had in excess of 150 fights in the eleven years in which he has been in the ring, and has met the best of the lightweights of recent years, barring the old warrior, Bat Nelson. Baldwin won and lost a 12-round decision to Owen Moran in January and February, respectively, of 1910, when Moran was at his best. He had previously drawn in limited bouts with Tommy Murphy and Abe Attell in New York City, when the foxy Abe and the Harlem scrapper were at the zenith of their careers. He lost to Cross on a foul in eight rounds, May 13, 1910, in New York City, when, it is claimed, he had Cross beaten and practically out. Baldwin visited the coast just two years ago and took Freddie Welsh for twenty rounds at San Francisco, June 23, losing the decision after going the limit. Only two months later he was returned a winner in the twentieth round over the now present champion, Willie Ritchie. In April of 1911 he met Cross for ten rounds in New York, and although a no-decision affair, the press awarded Baldwin the verdict. Baldwin has since drawn with Joe Mandot, and is credited with a fairly even ten rounds just recently with Jack Britton, while best of all, his last engagement, a decisive win over Young Shugrue in New York, speaks his praises. Shugrue took a decision from Cross some months before the latter came West for the Anderson engagement, so on the dope the Boston boy figures very strongly against his Leaches.

* * *

MATTY has completed training for the bout, and shows a confidence that inspires some of the Cross adherents to believe that there is indeed a doubtful chance for their entry; and, from present indications, the getting price will be a pretty even thing.

"I know Cross and his fighting style about as well as any one of the fighters who have met him," said Baldwin in discussing the match. "He knows that I have little fear of any of the wallops that he carries, and when it comes to the rough stuff that is where I have his number, and he knows it. When I took him on in New York I had him bad, and would have finished him had it been a longer bout. With twenty rounds to go, I am satisfied that I can land a decisive victory, and then I want the chance that I have hoped for to clash with Ritchie for the championship."

SWEENEY WILL GET $50 FOR LONG HIT SATURDAY

NEW YORK, July 28.—Ed Sweeney, the big catcher of the Yankees, who had been out of the game on account of injury, won $50 Saturday by hitting the "bull" sign in right field with a fairly batted fly ball. This is the first time the feat has been accomplished since the new Brush stadium was built.

CRACKERS FACE HARD FINISH AFTER GULLS

Five Games in Three Days at Home, Then the Final Road Trip.

By O. B. Keeler.

SO, THERE YOU ARE!

Oh, something's got into the eyes of the Crackers,
A-smoking the lamps of our sterling pill-whackers;
Long, agonized shrieks emanate from their backers
Far away in the distance a-viewing it;
We can't get a line on their recent futility;
We know they are swatters of sterling ability,
Who pepper the pill with excessive virility—
Butthehelofitistheyain'tdoingit!

* * *

DESPITE the charitable interference of the weather man on a number of occasions, our brave la-a-ads (tremolo stop) continue to skid recklessly toward the second division. Only the Barons remain betwixt them and the lid, which position is thinly occupied by the dejected Lookouts.

It would be entirely possible, depending on what happens to Birmingham and Chattanooga, for the Crackers to detrain in this town Thursday, installed as leaders of the basement quartet.

Of course, the Gulls and their doings cut the deepest into the calculations. They have been tough for the Crackers all season, and, with the race in its present scrambled condition, there is no reason to suspect they will suddenly become docile.

Passing over the Gulls with a respectful nod, then, it may be just as well to look over the remaining prospects of the season.

* * *

NO matter in what shape the Smithmen return Thursday, they will confront the proposition of taking on the Volunteers for five games in three days, the same being Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

The situation of the Vols in the league standing is not dignified enough to inspire much reverence. But it must be recalled that Schwartz has some raw material on hand which he naturally will be eager to shoot. And some of it may be loaded.

Then there is the question of two-ply entertainments.

In the face of what happened recently in Montgomery, we insist that the conventional method of prorating a double bill is for each side to take one. And that is precisely what the Crackers do not require just now—and won't require the latter part of this week.

Five or six games back of the lead, Bill Smith's hands need two out of three from now on—and a shade more wouldn't hurt.

One double-header is regularly scheduled for Friday afternoon. The league program is responsible for that. Then there is a tie contest holding over from the last visit of the Vols. That probably will be shot off Thursday, by way of openers.

Anyway, if the sky can be caulked, there's a furious little series booked for the last three days in this week.

* * *

THEN the Crackers hit the "Trail of the Lonesome Nine" once more.

Chattanooga first, for three games, August 4, 5 and 6. Then the final visit to Nashville, which may witness the playing off of the well known disputed contest earlier in the season. The closing road games of the season of 1912 will be played in Birmingham, August 11, 12 and 13.

* * *

HOME again, for a little house party at which every club in the league will be on the guest list except Nashville.

There are 22 games scheduled for the grand finale, and four tied or postponed affairs. They will be played in this order: Chattanooga 4; Birmingham 3; New Orleans 6; Mobile 4; and Chattanooga again for one game, September 6.

But in the meantime, there is Mobile.

* * *

AND it is possible that Billy Smith was figuring on that long home wind-up, with the chance to land the flag in a grueling finish, when he signed the giant southpaw, Love, leading slabman of the Cotton States League.

Love will make the third fork-hander on the Cracker firing line. With an equal number of right-handers, Billy can settle down on the home lot and dare all of 'em to knock off the chip. It won't make much difference whether the opposition sports a majority of portsiders or not. Bill will be loaded for both kinds of game.

* * *

THE new cock-eye is six and a half feet long and comes up with a savory reputation that includes 20 firsts out of 29 starts in the Cotton States. He has a no-hit, no-run game on his list, and four consecutive shut-outs, in the directing of which he issued only three bases on balls. Control is said to be his best bet.

That sounds encouraging, anyway.

POOR ABIE IS THROUGH; HAS LITTLE CLASS LEFT

NEW YORK, July 28.—Abie Attell had better give up the Queensberry pastime. Abe has something left in the ducking and the nodding of the head in getting away from some wicked punches, but that is about all.

His latest opponent was Willie Beecher, the well-known mitt man of the East Side, and the contest took place at the Atlantic Athletic Club of Rockaway. There was a rather good gathering of the fight fans. They were of the opinion that Abe would hand out some of that old championship stuff that made him famous in the days of long ago. The person who suffered the most at the bout was Referee Draycott. Abe's judgment of distance was bad in the fifth, sixth and eighth rounds, and he whanged the judge three times.

The winner of the bout was Beecher. The latter, after finding out that Attell was not there any more, chased Abe around the ring, and Beecher had a difficult time in catching his opponent. Beecher did his best work in the sixth and seventh rounds. From the fifth round to the finish, Beecher was the busy man and he had enough lead in the first five to give him the fight. All that Abe had was a bad lip as he came out of the ring.

VETERAN COACH GREAT HELP TO JOE BOEHLING

By Senator.

WASHINGTON, July 28.—Quiet, observing everything, but saying little, always ready with a cheering word for some youngster to turn a rebuke into a joke, Jack Ryan, the veteran backstop and scout, is one of the uplifting influences among the Washington Senators. He isn't going around with banners flying, proclaiming his deeds from every housetop, but he is the man who has made it possible for Joe Boehling to pitch winning ball.

After much haggling to no end, the writer succeeded in getting Ryan to explain the system he has taught Boehling and is now teaching Joe Engel. He belittled even that system, notwithstanding Boehling's success since he began following the veteran's advice.

"It's a simple thing," finally broke out Ryan. "I began teaching those two kids this spring at Charlottesville. They were wild as hawks and careless of following directions. I noticed that all they ever did when they went into the box was to wind up and let her go. They didn't take even enough time to see where the plate was.

* * *

"SO I said to Boehling one day: 'Take your time. Think about every ball you pitch. Try to do something with it. Aim at something. Pay the closest attention to your stride. Then you will get control and that's all you need to ge a good pitcher.'

"Well, at first Boehling couldn't understand these directions. He would forget what he had to do. Griff kept me working with him constantly however, and finally I got Joe where he could think of all these things at the same time. Immediately he began to pitch winning ball, and he will continue just so long as he follows those directions.

"It was the same way with Engel. He is fully equipped to be a winning pitcher. I never saw a better-looking youngster in baseball. But he didn't know anything about his job. He never considered what he had to do. He pitched into the stride used by the other pitcher, even if it were two feet short of his own. It was impossible for him to win that way. He couldn't get his 'stuff' on the ball. I kept insisting on his using proper stride and thinking about every ball that left his hand. That's all pitching amounts to, granting that you have speed and a curve ball. But it was hard for those kids to understand this, and it took a lot of time before they got it into their heads.'

And this is all that Jack Ryan has to say about his making two good pitchers for the Climbers.

* * *

WHEN you think it over, Ryan ought to be a wise counselor for young fellows. He has been in baseball 28 years, starting when a mere kid. In all that time he has never learned to drink or smoke. His personal habits are irreproachable, his example for young players a thing for the gods. Manager Griffith could not have ogtained a better coach for his youngsters. Seldom does he use a harsh word, never a profane. Never does he criticise a player on any other team.

Ryan's last active service was as manager of the Jersey City club of the Eastern, now the International League. There he worked behind the bat regularly, always maintaining a high average. He broke in with the Baltimore team when it was composed of thugs and knockout men. Always quiet, he had to fight to remain with the Orioles. And he fought and stayed. Later he saw several years of service under Frank Selee on the Boston club. He was captain of the Detroit American League team in 1902, finally drifting to the minors, where he managed several teams, ending with Jersey City.

ALPERMAN HAS APPENDIX CUT; OUT FOR A YEAR

MOBILE, ALA., July 28.—Whitey Alperman, field captain and second baseman of the Crackers, was operated on this noon in a local hospital for appendicitis.

As a result of the operation, Alperman will not be able to play again this season. This is a severe blow to Manager Billy Smith, as it practically kills whatever chance the Atlanta team has of winning the pennant.

Alperman was out of the game yesterday. He complained of severe pains in his right side. Last night a local physician was called, but was unable to diagnose the case until this morning.

Manush will probably cover the keystone sack the remainder of the season.

Every time a fight manager offers to bet $10,000 one is led to wonder whether Confederate money still is being used.

The latest scandal in the Sport of Kings in England merely reflects the spirit of the times. A king these days is looked upon generally as a nine-spot.

It is claimed in England that the prevalence of foul riding there is due to the American style of wearing short stirrups. Even our English brethren have learned to pass the buck.

Bill Peet, a Washington scout, says he discovered Joe Boehling, and seven American League teams have discovered that Bill Peet is some discoverer.

How Fogel Will Wreck Majors

Dryden Makes Big "Discovery"

Charles Dryden.

HONORABLE HORACE FOGEL is getting ready to absorb both big circuits and put the magnates on the bum. He has said it, and what Horace says goes. As the present major leagues are a joke, Horace will start a lieutenant-colonel league for a change, grabbing off all the star talent now employed grinding out the national pastime.

The new organization should be accomplished without much trouble. Mr. Fogel talked himself out of the old league, and he is now engaged asking himself into the new one, or lieutenant-colonel league, to distinguish it from the old majors. Horace has his towns for the circuit booked out already yet once. They are New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Pittsburg, Cleveland, Chicago and St. Louis. That makes seven, and they need one more. The eighth city will be either Boston, Indianapolis or Kansas City. If Horace included both Boston and Kansas City, look what a fine jump the athletes would have from Boston to play a Sunday game at Kansas City.

Backers of New League Named.

The financial backers of the lieutenant-colonel league are said to be Otto Steifel, of St. Louis, and Jeff Livingston, the well-known pickle expert of Cincinnati. Mr. Steifel is behind the Federal League at St. Louis, and Mr. Livingston is in the pickle and tomato ketchup line at Cincy. They are to furnish the money, and Horace will supply the words. It is claimed that Horace has landed all the stars worth having in the two major circuits, but the statement is discredited, because Tom Needham has not been signed by the lieutenant-colonels. We are inclined to believe that if there were anything in the new organization, Mr. Needham would not have been overlooked. If Tom is not a star, where could they find one?

Be that as it may, the lieutenant-colonel league will be in full operation next spring, and the magnates of the two so-called major leagues will be begging for peanut concessions and hot dog stands in the parks of the new baseball body. They made a goat of Horace, and now he is getting back at them.

His Investigation Sidetracked.

His investigation of the trust was sidetracked, and just for that the National and American must get out of business for all time. By next Fourth of July we will hear of Pittsburg, New York and Cleveland selling their new steel stands for old iron. It is an awful picture to contemplate, but the magnates showed Horace no mercy, and he is determined not to spare them in the hour of retribution. Otherwise Horace is a mighty good fellow.

P. S.—Mr. Fogel has prepared an advance statement of 8,000 words in reference to the new league, which statement was to have been released simultaneously with a lot of papers on July 7.

Double P. S.—We do not know why the statement was not released on July 7.

WELLS TO BOX MOIR.

NEW YORK, July 28.—Bombardier Wells, English heavyweight champion, has been signed to meet Gunner Moir in a twenty-round bout at the Canterbury Music Hall in London September 3. Wells is signed to box twenty rounds with Bandsman Rice, another English heavyweight, in London on September 17.

CLABBY VS. PAPKE.

DENVER, COLO., July 25.—Articles have been signed for a ten-round bout between Jimmy Clabby, the Milwaukee middleweight, and Billy Papke, of Kewanee, Ill., to be held at the Denver A. C. on August 11.

GULLS DRAW THOMPSON IN GAME TO-DAY

By Joe Agler.

MOBILE, ALA., July 28.—The Gulls, ably assisted by a person named Monk, who was not in uniform, managed to cop the jump game of this series yesterday in spite of a grand exhibition of pitching by Dent and plucky defensive play by a badly crippled Cracker team. Thompson and Dunn will be the battery to-day, and we are going to try to get even.

Dent pitched one of his best games since joining the Crackers, and deserved to win. But the attack of his mates was not sufficient to overcome a one-run lead, and Hogg, who also pitched excellent ball, finished in front, 2 to 1, the result setting the Crackers down another full game in the pennant chase, as Montgomery also won.

Bill Bailey was examined by an X-ray specialist here and it was shown that he is suffering from a fractured rib, which will keep him out of the line-up several days. Whitey Alperman was taken suddenly ill with what appeared to be a touch of appendicitis, and was unable to play yesterday, but probably will try to work in this afternoon's game.

The worst feature of the contest yesterday was the arrest of Joe Dunn, at the instance of a person named Monk, who is interested in the Mobile club, the way I understand the matter. Joe was charged with swearing while arguing with Umpire Wright about a hit Joe thought was foul. Wright says Joe didn't swear, Catcher Schmidt says the same thing and so do all the players who were in hearing of the argument. But Joe was lugged off the field and Chapman had to come in from right to take his place, while Gilbert Price went to the outer works.

Joe wasn't locked up. Friends promptly arranged for bond, and he will be back in the game this afternoon.

Dunn Fined $5 for "Cussing" Umpire

MOBILE, ALA., July 28.—Joe Dunn, the heavy backstop of the Crackers, who was arrested yesterday at the ball park during the game between Atlanta and Mobile clubs, on a charge of using profane language was fined $5 in the Recorder's Court here this morning. Joseph paid.

The Recorder gave Dunn the preference of spending ten days in the workhouse or paying $5. "It is too hot these days to stay indoors so long," said the catcher, as he passed the "five iron men" over. "But I guess the judge wanted me to coach the rock-pile team at that," added Joe.

DODGE MAY GO TO VOLS; INDIANS SECURE NELSON

CINCINNATI, July 28.—Pitcher Albert Nelson, who was sold by the Reds to Nashville, but refused to report there, has been disposed of to Indianapolis. The Cincinnati club will send Nashville another player in place of Nelson, possibly Infielder Dodge, recently secured from the Phillies in exchange for Becker.

YOUNGSTERS FOR BLOOMINGTON.

BLOOMINGTON, ILL., July 28.—The Bloomington management, in an effort to check the losing streak of its club, has signed two promising youngsters. They are Outfielder Ralph Craig, of Sioux City, and Pitcher John Duggan, of the Southern League.

NAPS GET NEW PLAYER.

DECATUR, ILL., July 28.—The sale is announced of Dick Staley, first baseman of the Danville baseball club, to the Cleveland Americans for $2,500.

Atlanta Should Have Polo Club

Will Introduce Game August 6

THE most rabid polo[illegible]'s appetite will be satisfied at Fort McPherson on Wednesday afternoon, August 6.

Here are some of the events carded by those interested in the plan to form the Atlanta Polo Club:

Polo match between the Fort McPherson quartet and an All-Southern team, which will consist of Tom Weaver, Lamar Hill, Dr. J. O. Seamans, local players, and experts from surrounding Southern clubs.

A tug-of-war on polo ponies.

A polo pony race.

A "polo pony" musical program furnished by the Fort McPherson military band.

A "polo pony" concert by Company M Glee Club.

And in hope of encouraging those who will be unable to attend to become interested in the game, moving pictures will be taken of the struggle and thrown on local screens a day or two after the match.

It will be the biggest society event ever held in Atlanta. It is to be hoped that the game will "take strong," for if it does, the Atlanta Polo Club will surely be formed.

A big tract of land will be purchased and a clubhouse erected. There are enough Atlantans who play the game to form an excellent team with very little coaching. Within a very few months the local club could arrange games with teams from all parts of the country, and not be afraid of defeat.

A worthy aim would be to develop players for the International Cup team. New Yorkers have had this all to themselves for some time, but Atlanta, like Camden, Augusta and Jacksonville, could in time probably develop some "big leaguers."

RINGSIDE NOTES

Jack White has finally secured a match with Johnny Dundee. Tom McCarey signed the pair yesterday to meet in a 20-round bout at his Vernon arena on August 12. They are to box at catch weights.

* * *

Coast fans are looking for Matty Baldwin to give Leach Cross a tough argument when the two lightweights get together at Los Angeles to-morrow night. Matty's great fights against Freddie Welsh and Willie Ritchie are still remembered by the Pacific coasters.

* * *

Ad Wolgast, Willie Ritchie, Johnny Dundee, Joe Rivers and Jack White will be at the ringside when Cross and Baldwin exchange blows. All these boys have big followers out West.

* * *

Sam Langford and Joe Jeannette have been matched to box twenty rounds at Los Angeles on September 29.

* * *

Johnny Kilbane, who has been hold fast to his title as featherweight champion, says that he is going to tour the world after visiting Ireland, and will meet all the good boys as he goes along. Perhaps he can find some amusement and some dollars scattered in his pathway.

* * *

Mike Saul is one fighter who thinks Kid Young can defeat Charlie Lee, providing the fighting newsboy gets into shape. Saul refereed the former scrap between the pair and says condition is all that kept Young from winning.

* * *

Spider Britt is walking the streets with a chip on his shoulders these days. Spider wants to know why the fighters around here are continually dodging a match with him. Britt is anxious to get on with Lee or Young and says he will give either of them a neat side bet.

* * *

Billy Lutz, manager of Eddie Hanlon, has a few words to say regarding Mike Saul. Lutz called at the Georgian Sporting department yesterday and said that he would gladly send his protege against Mike, if the latter will agree to let Eddie weigh 138 pounds at 3 o'clock. Billy is also prepared to put up $25 to go as a weight forfeit and side bet. Billy wants to meet Saul at this office this afternoon at 4 o'clock.

* * *

Jack Britton appears to be the easiest lightweight in the world to deal with when it comes to making a match. Britton is always ready to take on the best of them, while his manager, Danny Morgan, stands by with a few nickels to wager on his protege's chances.

* * *

The proposed return scrap between Johnny Williams and Eddie Campi at Los Angeles has been called off and Williams, accompanied by his manager, Sammy Harris, has left for New York. Williams asked $2,000 for his services, a sum that McCarey refused to grant.

Carl Morris, the Oklahoma heavyweight, knocked out Al Benedict in the fifth round of a scheduled 15-round go the other night.

OHNE WINS RACE.

NEW YORK, July 28.—Paul Ohne, of Brooklyn, won the three-cornered match race at Brighton Motodrome last night, thereby earning the right to meet Arthur Chappelle, the champion motorcyclist.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Total of $131,000 In New Dwellings

Druid Hills for Carroll Payne. Peachtree and Ansley Park Homes. West End Church.

Plans for three handsome dwellings in Druid Hills, costing more than $40,000, are in course of preparation by Hentz & Reid, architects in the Candler Building. These are for houses to be built in the spring by J. Carroll Payne, Alex W. Smith, Jr., and Charles T. Hopkins, Jr., on adjoining lots on Ponce DeLeon avenue east of the bridge near Lullwater road. They will be handsomely done in the New England colonial style.

Jobs now in the hands of the above firm of architects total $131,000, including, among a number of dwellings, a structure for the West End Presbyterian Church, on Gordon street, to cost $20,000; a refreshment pavilion in Grant Park, $10,000, and additions to the dining room of the Piedmont Driving Club, $4,000. Plans are being drawn for the following other residences:

Edgar Dunlap, Druid Hills, two-story brick veneer house of New England colonial style, $17,000.

E. W. More, Peachtree road, near Lakeview avenue, two-story Dutch colonial and shingle, $6,000.

E. Lee Worsham, Wesley avenue, near Clark Howell's country place, one-story English type of plaster and stone, $10,000.

E. L. Bishop, Peachtree road, at Brookhaven, two-story plaster house, $7,000.

Fred Stone, Fairview road, Druid Hills, two-story New England colonial frame or brick veneer, $8,000.

W. White, Prado, Asley Park, two-story Dutch colonial frame and stone, $9,000.

Ivy Street Car Tracks.

Work has been in progress several days laying the old car tracks on Ivy street, preparatory to the resumption of trolley traffic on that street. There was a plan to put these tracks on Piedmont avenue, but objection on the part of property owners caused the project to be abandoned. The idea was to relieve Peachtree congestion as much as possible by having all tracks and heavy wagons use Ivy street.

To Start on West Peachtree.

Materials for repaving West Peachtree and building retaining walls are being gathered together for work that will begin within a few days. The walls will go up first and then regrading will start. A number of interesting improvements are expected to be made as soon as the work has assumed definite shape.

Mr. Cochran's Measure.

Ralph O. Cochran, the well-known real estate man, introduced in the Legislature Monday a bill intended to make equities in property subject to levy and sale, as well as deeds. Eugene and Gordon Mitchell drew the measure. All outstanding notes against property must be paid up before a sale can be made under the present law.

It is also sought to repeal existing legislation which makes real estate men take out a license in every county where a sale is made.

Marietta Street Barbecue.

Marietta street property owners are beginning to whet their appetites for a mammoth barbecue which they will give next month or in September commemorating the completion of the Marietta street widening and repaving to the city limits and the Cobb County line. The place will be either the Chattahoochee River or Howell Station, according to W. Tom Winn, one of the first to urge the Marietta street improvement.

Invited to the barbecue will be the city officials, the County Commissioners, a number of prominent real estate men and others, probably 500 people.

This barbecue was first set for July 4, but a delay in the work made a postponement necessary. The job is now completed in a very short time, and Marietta street will take its place as the best crosstown street in the city.

New Apartment Houses.

The Lawrence, a new apartment house at Nos. 52 and 54 West Peachtree place, will be ready for occupancy September 1. J. L. Turner & Co. are the owners. Each room is outside and the two-room apartments have disappearing wall beds, which have only recently come to Atlanta. The Maryland, corner of Peachtree Circle and Seventeenth street, Ansley Park, will also be ready September 1. This contains four, five and six-room apartments.

Seeking More Floor Space.

A move for more floor space has been made by two Atlanta concerns located in the Empire Building. The Royal Insurance Company will soon leave the eleventh floor to take the entire twelfth floor of the Hurt building and the L. P. Bottenfield Real Estate Agency will take the offices of the insurance company, moving from the tenth floor. The Bottenfield Agency has leased this half floor for five years at a price which approximates $4,000 a year. This is the third move of the company. First in small offices on the second floor of the Empire, it moved to larger offices on the tenth, and now finds it necessary again to seek more floor space.

For Public Market.

Housewives of Atlanta have revived the interest of several years ago which was displayed in a public market. Committees are being formed and it is thought that within a comparatively short time there will be a place where women can buy direct and save half a dozen profits of middlemen. Should the Plaza project ever become a reality, it is possible that the market will be placed on the site of the Union Depot. It has been suggested that $250,000 be invested in a site and from another source that $500,000 in city bonds be issued.

To Purge Peachtree Creek.

Real estate men having subdivisions in the vicinity of Peachtree Creek have become greatly interested in the suggestion that the bed of the creek be cleared from the bridge at Peachtree to Howell Mill road, about two and one-half miles, in order to prevent overflows into the lowlands during the rainy seasons. Winds from Peachtree Creek blow mosquitoes into the city, it is claimed, and there are other reasons for wanting to remedy the conditions. The effect of Peachtree Creek on land can readily be understood when it is pointed out that Peachtree road frontage at $35 a front foot and less has not had an active market, whereas property has changed hands at nearly $100 a foot a mile farther to the north.

COTTON MARKET ACTIVE ALL DAY

Erratic Trading Holds Market in Narrow Rut—Cables Weak and Weather Good.

NEW YORK, July 28.—Weakness in Liverpool cables as a result of Southern and Continental selling, coupled with private reports of rains over Sunday in Texas and Oklahoma, resulted in the local cotton market opening barely steady to-day with first prices unchanged to 10 points from Saturday's final. At the end of 15 minutes the new crop positions were fairly steady.

The detailed weather reports did not disclose as much rainfall as earlier advices had suggested and a covering movement followed the establishment of new low levels. Losses were wiped out. Besides covering of shorts there was what observers thought was buying for fresh long account. Offerings became scarce and scattered. Larger spot houses were aggressive buyers of the old crops, but August seemed in greater demand, by rallying from 11.44 to 11.60 for a net gain of 16 points from the opening, while July only advanced 8 points. New crop were heavily purchased by strong sources, aggregating a gain of 5 to 11 points from the initial level. Liverpool continued to report bearish cables and at the close the English market was 7½ to 5 points lower.

During the late forenoon the market was steady with prices firmly maintained at the early high point.

The advance in some quarters was explained by the crumbling of new and old crop positions last week, which made new low levels for the month, when August went 70 points under the best price of the month, or $3.50 a bale. These offerings were absorbed by brokers said to be buying for Liverpool account, against straddle sales there. The advance came in the face of a bearish condition report of The Memphis Commercial-Appeal, which gave condition of July 25, 82.1 per cent.

At the close the market was very steady with prices showing irregularity, being 5 points higher to 3 points lower than the closing quotations of Saturday.

Following are 11 a. m. bids in New York: July, 11.75; August, 11.50; October, 11.17; January, 11.05.

Following are 10 a. m. bids in New Orleans: August, 11.60; October, 11.21; January, 11.21.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, LA., July 28.—According to reliable private information further rains occurred Saturday night in north Texas and Oklahoma.

The map to-day shows generally fair weather in the western half; cloudy in the eastern half. No rain of consequence in the west, but general rainfall in Alabama and the Atlantics. Rising temperatures in the Western States, Arkansas and Tennessee; normal in the rest of the belt. Indications are for part cloudy to fair; rising temperatures in Texas; unsettled in Oklahoma, probably some rain in the northwestern portion. Part cloudy in the central and eastern States; some scattered showers.

The Shreveport Times says cotton made rapid progress during the past two weeks, due largely to the heavy rains of last week. The dry hot spell preceding the rains has practically solved the weevil problem and there is little complaint.

First trades here were at about unchanged figures, and the market showed remarkable steadiness from the start with a pronounced disposition to buy on depressions. This was undoubtedly based on the absence of rain in the lower half of Texas, rising temperatures in the West, anticipation of an unfavorable weekly weather report tomorrow in portions of Texas and the fear of a lower August Bureau report on Friday.

STOCK MAKRET

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, July 28.—There was a broadening in speculative interest at the opening of the stock market to-day. In the early trading, stocks joined in a brisk upward movement. During that period new high records were established in many issues.

New Haven was up 1½, Great Northern preferred 1 point, while the rest of the list ruled from fractions to nearly a point above Saturday's close.

There was a varying tendency in London, but American stocks were steady.

The curb market was dull.

Traders continuing to fight the bullish tendency caused slight recessions at intervals, but on the whole the market was steady and slight upturns during the forenoon were recorded. A gain of 1⅝ by Chesapake and Ohio was the largest gain of the day, with Union Pacific and United States Steel both advancing ⅜. Southern Pacific declined ⅛. Great Northern preferred sold around 126⅝, a fractional loss since its opening. Call money loaned at 2¼.

Trading became dull in the afternoon, although the supply showed no increase, selling by room traders was sufficient to cause reactions in a number of important issues.

Who Makes the "Criminals?"

Did This View of It Ever Occur to You?

(Copyright, 1913.)

Much interest just now in CRIMINALS.

Much horror aroused by depravity.

Many plans more or less appropriate for making the air pure.

Many good men, politicians, women and bishops who spend the summer at the seaside are willing to spend a few days wiping "CRIME" off the earth.

What is CRIME? Who are the CRIMINALS? Who makes the criminals?

Do criminals viciously and voluntarily arise among us, eager to lead hunted lives, eager to be jailed at intervals, eager to crawl in the dark, dodge policemen, work in stripes and die in shame? Hardly.

Will you kindly and patiently follow the lives, quickly sketched, of a boy and a girl?

THE GIRL.

Born poor, born in hard luck, her father, or mother, or both, victims of long hours, poor fare, bad air and little leisure.

As a baby she struggles against fate and manages to live while three or four little brothers and sisters die and go back to kind earth.

She crawls around the rooms of a small house, a good deal in the way. She is hunted here and chased there.

She is cold in winter, ill-fed in summer, never well cared for.

She gets a little so-called education. Ill-dressed and ashamed beside the other children, she is glad to escape the education. No one at home can help her on. No one away from home cares about her.

She grows up white, sickly, like a potato sprouting in a cellar. At the corner of a fine street she sees the automobiles passing with other girls in warm furs, or in fine, cool summer dresses.

With a poor shawl around her and with heels run down she peers in at the restaurant window, to see other women leading lives very different from hers.

Steadily she has impressed upon her the fact, absolutely undeniable, that as the world is organized there is no especial place for her—certainly no comfort for her.

She finds work, perhaps. Hours as long as the daylight.

Ten minutes late—half a day's fine.

At the end of the day aching feet, aching back, system ill-fed, not enough earned to live upon honestly—and that prospect stretches ahead farther than her poor eyes can see.

"WHAT'S THE CHARGE, OFFICER?"

"Disorderly conduct, Your Honor."

There's the criminal that Society is hunting so ardently.

THE BOY.

Same story, practically.

He plays ball in the street—cuffed, if caught by the policeman.

He swings on the awning poles, trying to exercise his stunted muscles—cuffed again.

In burning July, with shirt and trousers on, he goes swimming in private ponds—caught and cuffed and handed over to the police.

He tries for work.

"What do you know?"

"I don't know nothin'; nobody ever taught me."

He can not even endure the discipline of ten hours' daily shoveling—it takes education to instill discipline, if only the education of the early pick and shovel.

He has not been taught anything. He has been turned loose in a city full of temptation. He had no real start to begin with, and no effort was ever made to repair his evil beginning.

"WHAT'S THE CHARGE, OFFICER?"

"Attempted burglary; pleads guilty."

In prison he gets an education. They teach him how to be a good burglar and not get caught. Patiently the State boards him, and educates him to be a first-rate criminal.

There's your first-rate criminal, Messrs. Bishops, good men, politicians and benevolent women.

Dear bishops, noble women, good men and scheming politicians, listen to this story:

In the South Sea Islands they have for contagious diseases a horror as great as your horror of crime.

A man or woman stricken with a loathsome disease, such as smallpox, is seized, isolated, and the individual sores of the smallpox patient are earnestly scraped with sea shells—until the patient dies. It hurts the patient a good deal—without ever curing, of course—but it relieves the feelings of the outraged good ones who wield the sea shells.

You kind-hearted creatures, hunting "crime" in great cities, are like the South Sea Islanders in their treatment of smallpox.

You ardently wield your reforming sea shells and you scrape very earnestly at the sores so well developed.

No desire here to decry your earnest efforts.

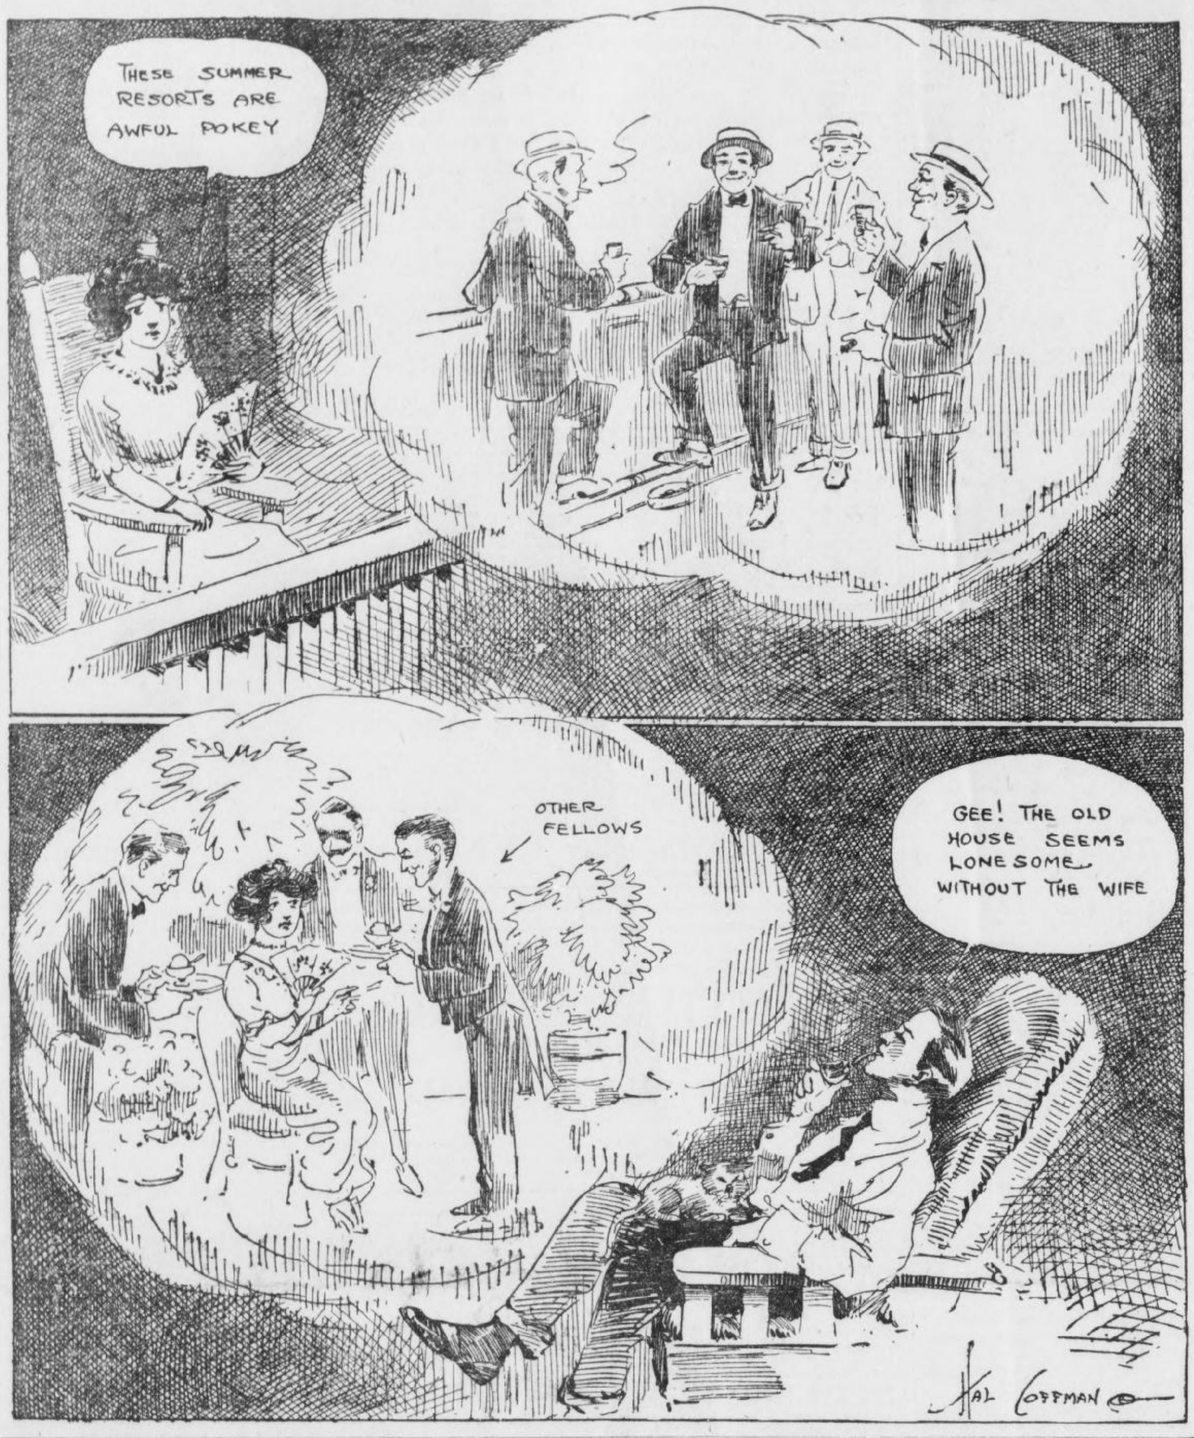

But if you ever get tired of scraping with sea shells, try vaccination, or, better still, try to take such care of youth, to give such chances and education to the young, as will save them from the least profitable of all careers—CRIME.

Scrape away with your sea shells, but try also to give a few more and a few better chances in youth to those whom you now hunt as criminals in their mature years.

God creates boys and girls, anxious to live decently.

YOUR SOCIAL SYSTEM makes criminals and fills jails.

Mysteries of Science and Nature

The Sun Is a Variable Star and Its Changes Affect the Price of a Man's Dinner---What Science's Latest Discovery Means.

By GARRETT P. SERVISS

THE recently announced conclusion of Professor Frost, the head of the Yerkes Observatory, that the sun is a variable star is in accord with what has been said repeatedly in these columns. It is a tremendously important fact, and its demonstration is mainly due to the labors of Messrs. C. G. Abbott and F. E. Fowle, of the Smithsonian Institution. Their statements have been confirmed by the observation of astronomers in Europe.

The sun has not suddenly become variable; it has been variable for ages, but not until now has any measurement of its variability been obtained. It has taken ten years to eliminate all the possible sources of error in the work, one of the principal difficulties being to discriminate between the effect of changing conditions of the earth's atmosphere affecting its ability to transmit the radiation from the sun to the surface of the globe, and changes occurring in the sun itself.

Minor Changes in the Sun Affect the Earth's Temperature.

It seems now to be certain that the intensity of the rays which the sun sends to the earth often vary at least as much as five per cent in periods of only a week or ten days. These variations, of course, directly affect the temperature and the character of the weather. Then there are variations of a much longer period, and of greater general extent, indicated by the waxing and waning of black spots on the sun's disk.

When there are many and large spots on the sun, its radiation is not diminished, but increased, and when they are few and small, as at the present time, the radiation, in general, falls off. But at all times, apparently, minor changes are going on in the sun, which produce quite sudden alterations in the temperature of the earth.

As has just been said, we are now at a period of minimum in the sun spots, but in about four years from now they will be numerous again, and then a general increase of the solar radiation is to be expected. It takes, on the average, about seven years for the sun spots to decline from a maximum to a minimum, and about four years for them to rise again from a minimum to a maximum. Meanwhile the radiation is not steady at any time, except for a few days.

The practical importance of the recent studies of these things is seen in Professor Frost's announcement that the time is near at hand when it will be possible to foretell the general character of the seasons long in advance.

He thinks that that may be achieved within about twenty-five years.

Then, if the present promise is kept, it will be possible for farmers and growers of all kinds of crops to know in advance what they have to expect, and to govern their sowings and plantings accordingly.

The sun will be recognized as the great dictator in agricultural affairs, and they will be the most successful cultivators who heed the hints which he gives of impending changes in his humor. They will watch his face, with the aid of the astronomers, as Nero's courtiers watched the play of their tyrant's features.

But the mere fact that those who have been conducting these researches think it possible to foretell the varying effects of the solar radiation upon the earth shows that even in his most variable moods the sun is subjected to a law which he cannot violate. It is what that law is and how it operates in order to forsee its effects. Much still depends upon a better knowledge of the earth's atmosphere, for when a sudden change takes place in the solar radiation the effect is not immediately felt on the earth. The atmosphere acts as a kind of buffer, and takes up the shock, afterward distributing it in a more gradual and gentle manner.

Change in Solar Radiation Might Bring About an Indian Famine.

A graphic illustration of the importance of this matter to every human being is given in a remark of Professor Langley's which Professor Frost has quoted:

"Though the most unformed nebula may hold the germs of future worlds, yet for us these possibilities are but interesting conjectures, for every nebula might be wiped out of the sky to-night without affecting the price of a laborer's dinner, while a small change in the solar radiation may conceivably cause the deaths of numberless men in an Indian famine."

Professor Langley's forecast has been fully justified by the recent investigations, and we may now say that the price of every man's dinner is affected by changes in the sun that had not been discovered ten years ago.

Time's Changes

By MINNA IRVING.

I CHANCED to meet old Father Time,
It does not matter where;
He wore a leather coat and cap,
And had a jaunty air.
A pair of goggles hid his eyes,
His boots were furred inside;
I viewed the change with much amaze,
"Where is your scythe?" I cried.

"It can not be that you at last
No longer mean to mow
Unhappy mortals like the grass
Before you as you go?"
"The scythe," the ancient spirit sighed,
"Is slow and out of date,
I use an aeroplane instead
To do the work of fate."

Divorce

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

Copyright, 1913, by Star Company.

THINKING of one thing all day long, at night
I fall asleep, brain weary and heart sore;
But only for a little while. At three,
Sometimes at two, o'clock I wake and lie,
Staring out into darkness; while my thoughts
Begin the weary treadmill-toil again,
From that white marriage morning of our youth
Down to this dreadful hour:
I see your face
Lit with the lovelight of the honeymoon;
I hear your voice, that lingered on my name
As if it loved each letter; and I feel
The clinging of your arms about my form,
Your kisses on my cheek—and long to break
The anguish of such memories with tears,
But cannot weep; the fountain has run dry.

We were so young, so happy, and so full
Of keen sheer joy of life. I had no wish
Outside your pleasure; and you loved me so
That when I sometimes felt a woman's need
For more serene expression of man's love
(The need of rest in calm affection's bay
And not sail ever on the stormy main),
Yet would I rouse myself to your desire;
Meet ardent kiss with kisses just as warm;
So nothing I could give should be denied.

And then our children came. Deep in my soul,
From the first hour of conscious motherhood,
I knew I should conserve myself for this
Most holy office; knew God meant it so.
Yet even then, I held your wishes first;
And by my double duties lost the bloom
And freshness of my beauty; and beheld
A look of disapproval in your eyes.

But with the coming of our precious child,
The lover's smile, tinged with the father's pride,
Returned again; and helped to make me strong;
And life was very sweet for both of us.

Another, and another birth, and twice
The little white hearse paused beside our door
And took away some portion of my youth
With my sweet babies. At the first you seemed
To suffer with me, standing very near;
But when I wept too long you turned away.
And I was hurt, not realizing then
My grief was selfish. I could see the change
Which motherhood and sorrow made in me;
And when I saw the change that came to you,
Saw how your eyes looked past me when you talked,
And when I missed the love tone from your voice,
I did that foolish thing that women do:
Complained and cried, accused you of neglect,
And made myself obnoxious in your sight.

And often, after you had left my side,
Alone I stood before my mirror, mad
With anger at my pallid cheeks, my dull
Unlightened eyes, my shrunken mother-breasts,
And wept, and wept, and faded more and more.
How could I hope to win back wandering love,
And make new flames in dying embers leap
By such ungracious means?

And then She came,
Firm bosomed, round of cheek, with such young eyes,
And all the ways of youth. I, who had died
A thousand deaths in waiting the return
Of that old love look to your face once more—
Died yet again and went straight into hell
When I beheld it come at her approach.

My God, my God, how have I borne it all!
Yet since she had the power to make that look—
The power to sweep the ashes from your heart
Of burned-out love for me, and light new fires,
One thing remained for me—to let you go.
I had no wish to keep the empty frame
From which the priceless picture had been wrenched.
Nor do I blame you; it was not your fault;
You gave me all that most men can give—love
Of youth, of beauty, and of passion: and
I gave you full return; my womanhood
Matched well your manhood. Yet had you grown ill,
Or old, and unattractive from some cause,
(Less close than was my service unto you)
I should have clung the tighter to you, dear;
And loved you, loved you, loved you more and more.

I grow so weary thinking of these things;
Day in, day out; and half the awful nights,

Solferino

By REV. THOMAS B. GREGORY.

THE battle of Solferino, won by Napoleon III and the Sardinian King from the Austrians fifty-four years ago, was one of the costliest of victories, a boomerang, the like of which is but seldom found on the pages of history.

Napoleon III, the Don Quixote of sovereigns, went far out of his way to interfere in the quarrel between Austria and Sardinia, and bitterly was he paid for it.

Within itself Solferino was a splendid triumph. Some 120,000 French and Sardinians beat to a finish some 170,000 Austrians, and the Emperor's cup of glory was sparkling to the brim! Solferino was well calculated to remind men of Austerlitz and Marengo and of the great captain whose genius had for so long led the soldiers of France from victory to victory as though they had been an army of demigods.

So far so good. But there was coming, all unseen by the victory of Solferino an aftermath of woe and misery.

Solferino precipitated a meeting between Napoleon and Joseph (July 11, at Villafranca), the result of which was the Treaty of Zurich, which, among other things, wrested Lombardy from Austria, thus materially weakening her among the family of European nations.

But the weakening of Austria carried along with it the strengthening of Prussia. If there was a time when Bismarck laughed more heartily than ever before, it was when the news came to him of that Lombardy matter. The great Chancellor must have laughed himself well-nigh mortal, for he saw just what it meant. He saw in advance the war of 1866, the struggle between Austria and Prussia for the leadership of the German States, the weakened state in which Austria would have to contend against the greatly improved condition of Prussia, and the final Prussian triumph at Konigratz.

But the clear-eyed Bismarck saw even farther than that. He saw Austria humbled and dismissed from the stage; he saw Prussia at the head of a united Germany; and, what was more to the point, he saw the Germans "marching all one way" on to Paris, to humble France much worse than France had humbled the Hapsburg.

Newt Lee Repeats His Story in Court Room

RICH GEORGIA GIRL LOST 3 WEEKS

Lynette Awtrey, Acworth Heiress, Strangely Missing, Wires Plea for Help From Utah.

A dramatic story behind the mysterious disappearance of Miss Lynette Awtrey, 18-year-old daughter of wealthy Orlando Awtrey, one of the leading citizens of Acworth, Ga., and a member of one of Cobb County's most prominent families, who, after a tour of Europe, boarded a train in New York for Atlanta and then vanished as utterly as though she had left the earth, is expected to be bared this week when the girl arrives home from Ogden, Utah, where she has been located.

Miss Awtrey has been missing for nearly two weeks. Becoming homesick during her European trip, she returned to New York and wired her father to send her money to come home. Mr. Awtrey wired her $200 and the same day received a telegram asking him to meet her in Atlanta. Her trunk came on the train on which she was supposed to come, but there was no trace of the girl.

Since then her family has exhausted every means to locate the missing girl. The aid of the William J. Burns Detective Agency was enlisted and the operatives of the famous sleuth secured the cities of the United States; the aid of police departments all over the country was invoked—but with no result. For all the detectives were able to ascertain to the contrary the girl had dissolved into thin air. After she boarded the train in New York absolutely no trace could be found of her.

Sends Mysterious Telegram.

With constant reports of failure being filed by America's most noted sleuths, Mr. Awtrey redoubled his efforts to find his missing daughter. More appeals were made to police departments, private detective agencies were enlisted in the search, and photographs of the young girl were sent out secretly by the Burns men in the hope that someone could be found who had seen her.

Sunday morning Miss Awtrey broke her silence of two weeks with a telegram from Ogden that intensified the mystery. It contained no explanation of her disappearance. The telegram was a piteous appeal for aid—a cry that she was alone and penniless in a strange land.

"Please help me," the telegram said. "I have no money. I am sorry I left home, but can not explain now. I will tell you about it when I get home."

The message was signed "Lynette," with no address in Ogden save the Western Union. Mr. Awtrey immediately wired his daughter money and a ticket to Acworth by way of the Union Pacific. It is probable that either he or one of the girl's brothers will meet her at Nashville or Chattanooga.

The disappearance of Miss Awtrey is almost identical with the case of Dorothy Arnold, the missing New York heiress, who still is being sought by detectives after a disappearance of more than a year, and has stirred and perplexed Cobb County more than any mystery of recent years.

Comes From Leading Family.

The fact that the girl comes from one of the leading families of North Georgia makes the interest in the mystery all the greater. Her father is president of the Acworth Cotton Mills Manufacturing Company of Acworth, and is interested largely in the commercial life of the town. She is a niece of Mrs. D. F. McClatchy, wife of the reading clerk of the Georgia House of Representatves, and a niece of John Awtrey, a prominent attorney of Marietta, and of Bernard Awtrey, editor of The Marietta News. She is also related to Mrs. R. M. Moon and a number of other prominent Marietta and Cobb County people.

Miss Awtrey is prominent in Ac-

AMERICA WINS DAVIS TENNIS TROPHY

McLaughlin Brings Cup Back Home by Victory Over Dickson of England.

Special Cable to The Georgian.

WIMBLEDON, ENGLAND, July 28. The Davis trophy, the most sought-for cup in the tennis world, which has been away from the United States since 1903, will come back to America.

The United States team, after beating the Australians in the preliminary games in New York last June and working their way up to the challenge round by defeating the German and Canadian teams in England, today won the trophy for the United States by defeating the English defenders.

Maurice E. McLoughlin, the young Californian, brought victory to his country by defeating C. P. Dixon in three straight sets in the single match to-day. Although his service was faulty at the beginning of the match to-day, McLoughlin soon got into his stride.

He won the first set after a hard-fought set-to, the score being 8-6.

From then on the issue was never in doubt, the American proving himself the master of the Englishman at all stages of the second and third sets, winning the former 6-3 and the latter 6-2.

The match for the trophy began on Friday, when McLoughlin was defeated by J. C. Parke, the Irish champion. R. Norris Williams, of Philadelphia, evened up matters when he defeated Dixon in the other single match that day.

Saturday the Americans jumped into the foreground, when McLoughlin and Harold H. Hacket, the double team, defeated Dixon and H. Roper Barrett.

McLoughlin's play, which was a little off color on Friday, was much improved Saturday and to-day. His individual skill did much to bring the cup back to America.

In the semi-final game between Parks and Williams, the Englishman won after a hard match of five sets. The score: 6-2, 5-7, 5-7, 6-4, 6-2. The defeat did not have any bearing on the general result.

Dallas Girl Typist Slain at Her Desk

DALLAS, TEX., July 28.—Miss Florence T. Brown, a stenographer, was murdered to-day as she sat at her desk. Her throat was cut and her left arm was mangled, evidently by a man's teeth.

None of the members of the real estate firm who employed her were in the offices at the time she was attacked. Bruises on her body showed that the girl had fought hard for her life.

Twenty-five young men were arrested as suspects in connection with the girl's murder. The police the arrests were entirely precautionary, and that they have no strong evidence as yet. With so many persons jailed, it was further believed that danger of a lynching would be minimized.

Sam Jackson Is Fatally Shot by Grover Cleveland Partee.

Sam Jackson, a freight engineer on the Georgia Railroad, was shot and fatally wounded by Grover Cleveland Partee, also an engineer, at the roundhouse in Inman Park about 3 o'clock Monday afternoon.

According to witnesses of the shooting, Jackson had just come in from a run, and on leaving his engine met Partee. It is said that there had been bad feling between the two men for some time, and after a few words, Partee drew a revolver and fired one time, the bullet striking Jackson in the neck.

The Grady ambulance was at once called, and the wounded man rushed to the hospital, but he died on the operating table without ever regaining consciousness.

Men at the roundhouse held Partee until the arrival of the police, when he was taken to the station. The cause of the murder is not yet known.

NEGRO WATCHMAN SWEARS FRANK ACTED ODDLY DAY OF CRIME

Here are the important developments in the trial of Leo M. Frank for the murder of Mary Phagan.

Jury chosen at 1:30 p. m.

Mrs. Coleman, girl's mother, takes stand after recess, at 3:15, and tells of Mary leaving for the factory 11:45 a. m. on April 26.

George W. Epps, boy companion of Mary Phagan, repeats his story that he had an engagement to meet her on the afternoon of the fatal day.

Newt Lee, night watchman at the factory, begins his story of the finding of the body and subsequent developments.

Mrs. J. W. Coleman, mother of murdered Mary Phagan, was the first witness for the prosecution at the trial of Leo Frank Monday afternoon. After answering several questions she broke down completely when the solicitor exhibited the little lavender skirt worn by her daughter when she last saw her alive. She covered her face with a fan and for several minutes could not answer a question.

The first question asked her was:

"What is your name?"

"Mrs. J. W. Coleman."

"When did you last see Mary Phagan alive?"

"April 26 at 11:45."

"What was she going to do when she lfet home?"

"She was going to the pencil factory to draw her pay."

Not Yet 14 Years Old.

Q. What did she eat before leaving?—A. Cabbage and bread.

Q. What was the age?—A. Nearly 14 years.

Q. Was she pretty or an ugly girl?—She was very pretty.

At this point Mrs. Coleman's voice began faltering.

Q. Did she have dimples in her cheeks?—A. Two pretty ones.

Q. What did she wear when you saw her the last time?—A lavender dress trimmed in lace.

Shows Victim's Dress.

Here Solicitor Dorsey took a large suitcase from the floor and opened it, and laid before the witness the clothes taken from Mary Phagan's body. It was then that Mrs. Coleman broke down and no more questions were asked for several minutes.

Between sobs, Mrs. Coleman, identified the clothes of Mary Phagan, which were laid at her feet. Deputy Miner gave her a glass of water. Solicitor Dorsey closed his questioning and Mr. Rosser took up the cross-examination.

Q. What trimming was on Mary's hat?—A. Pale blue ribbon and some small pink flowers.

Q. How far do you live from the car line?—A. Two blocks.

Boy Accompanied Her.

Q. Is there a store there?—A. Yes.

Q. Who kept the store?—A. Mrs. Smith.

Q. Do you know that Mary caught a car immediately leaving home at 11:45 o'clock?—A. Yes, she caught a car in five or seven minutes.

Q. Do you know the boy who was with her?—A. Yes, Epps.

Question About Boy Blocked.

Solicitor Dorsey objected, desiring to know who the boy was and what about him.

"It is necessary for me to know the relation between little Mary Phagan and this boy," answered Mr. Rosser.

"I don't know what's on his mind," declared Dorsey. "We ought to know if he intends to endeavor to impeach this witness.

"We are simply trying to find how Mary Phagan regarded this boy."

The cross-examination was resumed.

State Objects Again.

Q. Isn't it true that Mary told you that she detested Epps—that she didn't like him?

Dorsey objected again and Attorney Rosser withdrew his question.

Q. Didn't you tell L. P. Whitfield that Mary told you she detested Epps?

Objection again by the State, claiming that the question was immaterial and was mere hearsay.

Rosser said: "I am going to show the improbability of Mary Phagan making an engagement to meet this boy Epps."

Objection was overruled.

Says Girl Made Remark.

Mrs. Coleman finally replied that she thought Mary had made that remark.

Mrs. Coleman was excused with the intimation that she might again be called to testify.

Following Mrs. Coleman, George Epps was called to the witness stand. Solicitor Dorsey opened the questioning.

Q. Where do you live?—A. No. 246 Ross street.

Q. How old are you?—A. Fourteen.

Q. How long have you known Mary Phagan?—One year.

Q. When did you see her last alive?—A. Saturday morning, April 26.

Q. Where were you?—A. I came to town with her.

Q. Where did you catch the car?—A. At Lindsey street.

Q. What time?—A. Ten to twelve.

Q. What time did you leave her?—

Frank Said Not to Punch Clock.

Q. What was the appearance of his face?—A. I didn't pay much attention to his face. I offered him some bananas and went on out.

Q. How long did you stay?—A. I came back a few minutes before 6 o'clock.

Q. What did Mr. Frank say then?—A. H said: "Don't punch it yet, some of the workmen are still in." He said he wanted to change the slip.

Q. Did you ever see him fix the slip before?—A. Yes.

Q. When he changed the slip this time did he do it slower or quicker than before?—A. He sort of fumbled it.

Q. Do you know how to fix a time slip?—A. No, I never fixed one in my life.

Q. What did he say?—A. He said: "How is everything?" I said everything was all right. He said "Goodbye."

Q. Did you hear from him any more?—A. Not until Sunday morning.

Solicitor Dorsey then exhibited a diagram of the scene of the crime, drawn by Bert Green, the Georgian staff artist. By this diagram Lee explained the lighting system of the building.

Veniremen Keenly Watched.

All the force of attorneys at the table for the defense watched with keen eyes every man examined for the jury, and frequently referred to a voluminous record containing the names of all the veniremen and detailed statements of their history and associations so far as these might have a bearing on their desirability as jurors to pass on Leo Frank's guilt or innocence.

The keenest interest was manifested by those in the crowded little courtroom as the strategies of the brilliant lawyers were revealed during the examination.

State Had Veniremen's Records.

The thoroughness with which the Solicitor and his assistants had canvassed the history of every venireman and had investigated whether or not he had ever expressed an opinion on the guilt or innocence of the accused was demonstrated when W. W. Hemmett, a salesman for the Kingsbury Shoe Company, was being examined as to his qualifications.

"Have you ever said you thought Frank was guilty?" Mr. Dorsey inquired.

"No, I never have," replied Hemmett.

Here the Solicitor referred to some notes at hand and proceeded to call to Hemmett's recollection a certain talk he had with acquaintances at a certain time. Hemmett was forced to admit that he had talked of the case at that time, but declared that he had not expressed a definite opinion.

"I only said I would have to hear some evidence before I would believe Frank was guilty," he told Judge Roan.

He was rejected for cause.

Defense Equally Alert.

The defense showed that it was exactly as vigilant when the next venireman was examined. As soon as A. L. Bellingrath, of No. 91 Milledge avenue, arose from his seat, Attorney Arnold was on his feet prepared to state the objection of the defense. He pointed out that Bellingrath was the brother of Henry Bellingrath who has been employed in the Solicitor's office during the Phagan investigation and that he was reported to have expressed an opinion on the guilt of Frank.

A shrewd bit of strategy was used by Solicitor Dorsey and Attorney Hooper in accepting the two negroes whose names were among the veniremen.

By doing this they forced the defense to use up two of their twenty challenges if they did not desire to have negroes on the jury. With Jim Conley, a negro, likely to be indicted for the murder in the event that Frank is cleared, the defense had no intention of allowing them to pass on Frank's guilt and promptly struck them. The two negroes were Earl Davis and E. E. Hawkins.

May Summon Reporters.

When court opened for the afternoon session, Attorney Arnold announced:

"We may want to use some of the members of the press as witnesses. I don't want to put them under the court rule which would exclude them from the courtroom."

Solicitor Dorsey hereupon arose and said:

"All right, but I want to reserve the right to do so at a later date if necessary."

Defense Loses First Clash.

The attorneys for Leo M. Frank lost out in their first skirmish with the prosecution, being compelled to read their list of witnesses against their wishes and their vigorous protests.

They evened up matters by obtaining from Solicitor Dorsey the concession of honoring the subpenas lecus tecum issued by the defense and demanding the production in court of all the affidavits of Jim Conley. After a short passage between Attorney Arnold for Frank and Solicitor Dorsey that the list must be read, the judge ruled, and the list was read by Attorney Stiles Hopkins.

The list included employees of the National Pencil Factory, where the murdered girl worked; members of Frank's immediate family, and other relatives and associates of the accused man, members of the same fraternal orders, acquaintances who saw Frank on the day of the crime and classmates in college.

Jurymen Chosen.

The reading of the last names came as a complete surprise. It developed that the defense had scoured the country for persons who had known Frank when he was a student at Cornell. They were subpenaed to bring the character testimony in his behalf up to the time he began his business career.

The picking of the jury proved less difficult than anticipated, twelve men being obtained before 1:30.

List of Jurors.

Here are the jurors chosen:

A. H. Henslee, No. 74 Oak street, a traveling salesman for the Franklin Buggy Company; F. V. L. Smith, No. 481 Cherokee avenue, manufacturer's agent, with offices in the Empire Building; J. F. Higdon, a contractor, No. 108 Ormewood avenue. F. E. Winburn, No. 213 Lucile avenue, claim agent Atlanta and West Point Railroad; A. L. Wisby, No. 31 Hood street, cashier of the Buckeye Oil Company; W. M. Jeffries, a real estate man, with offices at 318 Empire Building; Marcellus Johemming, No. 161 James street, a machine shop foreman, with offices at No. 281 Marietta street; M. L. Woodward, cashier King Hardware Company, No. 182 Park avenue; J. T. Osburn, an optician for Hawkes', was chosen from the fifth panel to be the ninth juror; D. Townsend, No. 84 Whitehall terrace, cashier Central Bank and Trust Corporation.

W. S. Medcalf, No. 136 Kirkwood avenue, circulation department of The Atlanta Journal.

C. J. Bosshardt, No. 216 Bryan street, pressman Foote & Davies.

Bosshardt, the twelfth juror chosen, was the last venireman in the last panel that had been called before the court at the opening of court in the morning. He was picked at exactly 1:25 o'clock and at 1:30 the recess was taken until 3 o'clock.

Attorney Rosser took very little part in the selection of the jury, except to interject a suggestion now and then. He evidently was reserving his strength for the real struggle to come.

Shortly before 2 o'clock Leo Frank was taken into a room adjoining the juryroom, where he was served with a special dinner provided for him by his relatives. Frank's mother and wife were allowed to converse with him while he ate the dinner. He will remain in this room until the court reconvenes at 3 o'clock.

Wife and Mother With Frank.

Frank, accompanied by his wife and his mother, was brought into the courtroom at 10:30 o'clock. The striking of the jury was begun at once.

A half dozen of Frank's friends interrupted the order of the court for several minutes by clustering about him and shaking hands with him.

If there was any fear in the heart of the young prisoner it did not show in his calm features. He seemed perfectly assured and self-possessed. He nodded pleasantly to the judge and greeted his friends with a smiles.

After the stir had subsided, covering the entrance of Frank, his wife and mother, the trio took seats in a semi-circle just below the bench.

Frank and his mother took a good look at the jurors in the first panel that was brought in. The prisoner scrutinized each one closely as he was quizzed by the prosecutor to determine his qualifications.

Wife Fixes Gaze on Dorsey.

Mrs. Frank displayed no sign of emotion until she suddenly found that she was facing Solicitor Dorsey. Then anger appeared to blaze from her eyes She seldom removed her gaze from the Solicitor's face during the forenoon. If Dorsey was aware of the young woman's scrutiny, he made no sign and proceeded with the case in rapid fashion.

Occasionally Mrs. Frank would turn to her husband and nod toward the Solicitor as though she was ridiculing the efforts to convict Frank. Mrs. Frank was attired in a becoming suit of black and wore a black hat trimmed with black chiffon; also a black veil was drawn up over her hat. A black and white ribbon led to her watch in the pocket of her white silk waist. Two brilliant diamonds shone on the engagement finger of her left hand.

Frank occupied a seat between his wife and mother. He conversed with them alternately, at no time appearing nervous or the least apprehensive. His attitude was noticeably even more calm than at the time when he appeared before the Coroner's jury.

Frank Aids Attorneys.

Frank spoke frequently to his attorneys, whom he was near, and made suggestions while the jurors were being qualified. When each new panel was brought in he looked intently into the face of each man, beginning at the upper row and shifting his gaze from man to man until he had scrutinized them all.

Not infrequently, when the Solicitor had closed his examination and had said, "Juror, look on prisoner; prisoner, look on juror," Frank would turn to Attorney Arnold and an instant later the announcement would be made, "Storuck by the defense." Frank evidently was playing a large part in the striking of jurors by the defense.

The dagger-like gaze of Mrs. Frank seldom was removed from the Solicitor's face. Frequently she embraced all those at Dorsey's table in her scornful glance.

Wife Caresses Prisoner.

Chief of Detectives Newport A. Lanford, whose department unearthed much of the evidence, happened to be sitting at her right. She turned to him while he was glancing over papers as if she were about to speak her mind to him, but thought better of it.

Once in a while she took her eyes from the Solicitor's table to lay her hand affectionately upon her husband's shoulder and draw him toward her to whisper in his ear. Once when she discovered the reporters eyeing her, she smiled mischievously and immediately whispered the information to Frank.

Frank's mother sat quietly through the routine of examining the veniremen. She spoke to her son frequently, directing her glance at the prospective jurors as though commenting on their fitness.

TRIES TO SHOOT HIS WIFE; KILLS AN OFFICER

Reward Offered for Clem Poole, Slayer of Dalton Policeman. Posse Loses Trail.

DALTON, July 28.—At an early hour this morning the posse organized to hunt down Clem Poole, who near midnight shot and killed Policeman Harry Cook while the officer was attempting to arrest him, disbanded, the search being fruitless.

Poole last night shot twice at his wife as he followed her to the home of her parents on First avenue. There Policeman Cook met him. As the officer advanced, Poole fired, the bullet piercing the policeman's heart and bringing instant death. Henry Mitchell, accompanying the officer, grabbed the weapon from Poole, but he escaped. Bloodhounds trailed the fugitive for a time and then lost the scent.

The murder has greatly aroused Dalton; for Policeman Cook was a popular member of the force. He is survived by his wife. A reward of $100 has been offered by the city for Poole's capture.

Southern Urged As Solicitor General

WASHINGTON, July 28.—The Senate Judiciary Committee to-day ordered a favorable report on the nomination of Representative John W. Davis, of West Virginia, to be Solicitor General of the United States.

AUGUSTA BILL'S AUTHORS LOSE FIRST CLASH

Commission Government Act Denied to Friendly Committee. Lipscomb Act Up Tuesday

A fight for the reference of the bill giving Augusta the commission form of government, by members of the Richmond County delegation, featured Monday's session of the House, Judge Picquett winning in his efforts to have it referred to the Committee on Municipal Government, of which he is chairman.

The authors of the bill, Olive and Garlington, sought to have the bill referred to the General Judiciary Committee No. 1, of which both are members.

The Lipscomb taxation bill was set as a continuing order beginning Tuesday. This provides a tax of $50 on lobbyists; doubles the occupation tax of corporations; increases the tax on bottling plants; places an annual tax of $5 on automobiles; levies an inheritance tax and various other taxes to increase the revenue of 1915.

It is expected that this bill will occupy the House for several days. If it passes within this time limit it will be a record time for Georgia lawmakers to dispose of so important a matter.

Senator Kelley, of the Eighteenth District, introduced a bill in the Senate last Friday covering the same matter. This has not as yet been acted upon.

Considerable discussion resulted when the optometrist bill, providing for a board to examine opticians in Georgia before they be allowed to practice, was read. This bill previously had been adversely reported. Its author, Wallace Miller, of Bibb, urged that the bill be considered seriously.

Puts Ice in Bonnet And Goes to Church

ALTON, ILL., July 28.—Mrs. E. B. Clarkson, aged 28, of Alton, is using ice on her head to make the trip to and from the First Presbyterian Sunday School weekly, to keep up her record of fourteen years' consecutive attendance.

Mrs. Clarkson puts a small chunk of ice under her old-fashioned bonnet to prevent being overcome by the heat. In a paper carried at her side with her Bible she puts another piece. When the first piece melts, the second piece is substituted.

Fog Drives Steamer Chalmette Aground

NEW YORK, July 28.—The steamer Chalmette from New Orleans for New York went ashore early to-day in a thick fog while a mile and a half south of Barnegat.

It is not believed that the Chalmette is in serious danger. Word received at the company's office in this city said that the captain and crew were safe.

DANGEROUS CALOMEL GOING OUT OF USE

A Safer, More Reliable Remedy Has Taken Its Place in the Drug Store and in the Home.

A few years ago, men, women and children took calomel for a sluggish liver and for constipation. They took risks when they did so, for calomel is a dangerous drug. Your family doctor will be the first to tell this if he discovers you dosing yourself with calomel.

But the drug trade has found a safer, more pleasant remedy than calomel in Dodson's Liver Tone.

Dealers tell us that their drug store sells Dodson's Liver Tone in practically every case of biliousness and liver trouble where calomel used to be taken.

Dodson's Liver Tone is a vegetable liver tonic that is absolutely harmless for children and grown people. It sells for 50 cents a bottle and is guaranteed to be entirely satisfactory by all druggists who will refund your money with a smile if it does not give quick, gentle relief without any of calomel's unpleasant after-effects.

THRONG AT THE COURTHOUSE DOORS AS THE TRIAL OPENED

FRANK, FEELING TIPTOP, SMILING AND CONFIDENT, IS UP LONG BEFORE TRIAL

Frank was escorted from the Tower to the courthouse shortly after 6 o'clock in the morning, nearly three hours before the trial was scheduled to begin. This was done to avoid the curious crowd which it was expected would be about the courthouse and thronging the corridors at 9 o'clock.

Frank was up and dressed and freshly shaven when Deputy Sheriff Plennie Miner appeared before his cell at the early hour.

"How are you feeling this morning, Mr. Frank?" the deputy inquired.

"Tip top, only I'm mighty hungry," replied Frank.

Exhibiting the same poised confidence that has characterized him through three months since he was locked in a cell in the county jail, the young factory superintendent chatted freely with Miner on the way to the courthouse.

Sure He Will Be Freed.

He was attired in a natty light gray mohair suit and wore a fancy gray tie. His face was fuller and he appeared slightly heavier than when he was arrested shortly after the murder of the Phagan girl. He seemed cheerful and in the best of health.

"I am very sure of acquittal," he said, as he arrived at the courthouse. "I am glad that the trial is about to begin after this long wait. I have no fear of the outcome. I am not only innocent of the terrible crime, but I am innocent of any knowledge of it, save as the information has come to me since the officers came to my house that morning three months ago."

At this moment E. C. Essenbach, a relative of Frank, appeared with a tempting breakfast which was spread in the prisoners' room at the courthouse. Frank gave ocular proof that his appetite had not suffered from his long confinement as he proceeded to make way with the delicacies prepared for him.

Frank greeted his relative cheerfully and conversed with him for more than an hour. The topic seldom was on the crime or the trial which was about to begin. Long before the time set for the judge to take the bench other friends and relatives of the prisoner had appeared and some of them were permitted to talk to him.

Conley Ready For the Stand.

Jim Conley, Frank's accuser, was made ready for the trial early in the morning, although it was not probable that he would be called during the day.

He was given a shave and a new suit of clothes, as he had worn for the last three months the same shabby garments that he had on at the time he was arrested while washing a shirt at the National Pencil Factory.

Conley said that he was ready to go on the witness stand at an instant's notice. He declared that he would stick to the same story that he told in his last affidavit and which he has since repeated many times for the benefit of Solicitor Dorsey.

"If they had just let me face Mr. Frank, I could have made him tell the truth long before this," he asserted.

Less than half a hundred persons were waiting about the courthouse at 8 o'clock, an hour before the time set for the beginning of the trial. It was thought that not a large crowd would be clamoring for admission to the courtroom as it had become quite generally known that the small room would accommodate hardly more than the witnesses and the veniremen and that it would be necessary to exclude practically all spectators.

Much Preparation Made.

For no trial in the history of Georgia have such elaborate arrangements been made for the comfort of the comparatively small number of spectators who will gain admission, the attorneys who will handle the case, the jury and the newspaper men. Deputy Sheriff Plennie Miner has received much praise for the splendid preparations made.

Electric fans have been installed at every window and on the railing separating the spectators' seats from the bar, ozonators have been placed to keep the air purified. It probably will be the coolest and best ventilated place in Atlanta.

Not more than 250 spectators will be admitted. Approximately that number of chairs have been placed outside the inclosure. When they are filled the doors will be closed and no one else will be allowed in. No one will be permitted to occupy standing room.

The usual custom of permitting disinterested attorneys to occupy seats inside the bar will not be followed, and this particular part of the courtroom will be less crowded than during the average criminal trial.

How They Will Line Up.

Prosecuting Attorney Dorsey and at least five assistants will occupy a table directly in front of the bench and witness stand with the jury box close on the righthand side. Attorney Rosser with his assistants and the accused will be seated at a table to the left of the State's and farther away from the jury. The table for newspaper men is back of the State's table. The arrangements were agreed upon by the attorneys and the judge.

The table for the defense was selected by Attorney Rosser with a view to the number of persons who would wish to be near Frank during the trial. Seats have been arranged to the back of the table to accommodate at least 30 persons, friends and relatives of the accused, who have visited him constantly since he was confined at the Tower.

Deputy Sheriff Plennie Miner, who will have charge of the crowd and keeping order in court, will also have charge of the prisoners. Long before any crowd congregated around the courthouse Frank and Lee were brought from the Tower and placed in the room reserved for them. When court opened Frank took his place at the table reserved for his attorneys.

The court rule to segregate the witnesses will, of course, be enforced, but it may not be until twelve men have qualified as jurors, which will hardly be before the middle of the week.

When the witnesses are segregated they will be kept in the large courtroom on the floor above the trial room. A bailiff will be placed in the hall and one on the door of the witness chamber, and as the names are called they will be brought from the floor above to the court.

It is probable some rule will be made to keep the witnesses for the State and the defense separated, in which event the third floor of the building would have to be used.

The jury room was selected with a great deal of care. It is almost inaccessible from the outside and large and airy. Its windows are about twenty feet above an alleyway that runs on either side. Deputies will be kept in the alley to keep anyone from getting this close to the room.

From the time a juror is acceptable to both sides until the conclusion of the case he will not be allowed to go to his home or communicate with anyone except a fellow juror.

The least of the deputies' troubles will not be in handling the crowd that will gain admission to the court, but in handling the crowd that will daily congregate on the outside and wait through the day for news of the proceedings in the trial. Ten deputies and as many members of the county police will be on duty on the streets around the building.

Climate Failed; Medicine Effective

Rest, fresh air and well-cooked, nourishing food do help many persons suffering with Lung Trouble. But in many cases the disease is only temporarily "arrested," and something more is needed. Eckman's Alterative is a medicine for Throat and Lung Troubles and has brought about many complete recoveries—in many cases where the surroundings were not ideal. Judging by the many reports of recoveries received, we believe it should be used in every case of Lung Trouble. A remarkable case follows:

Weldon, Ill.

"My Dear Sir: Through your instrumentality I have been saved from a premature grave. On December 14, 1904, I was taken with Typhoid Pneumonia which developed into Consumption. In February, 1905, I went to Fort Worth, Texas, and later to Canon City, Colorado. After being there two weeks, my physician informed me that my case was hopeless. Three weeks later I returned home, weighing 103 pounds, the doctor having given me no assurance of reaching there alive.

"On July 14, 1905, I began taking Eckman's wonderful remedy for Consumption. To-day I weigh 158 pounds. I am stout and well and can do any kind of work about my grain elevator."

(Affidavit) ARTHUR WEBB.

Eckman's Alterative has been proven by many years' test to be most efficacious in cases of severe Throat and Lung Affections, Bronchitis, Bronchial Asthma, Stubborn Colds and in upbuilding the system. Does not contain narcotics, poisons or habit-forming drugs. For sale by all of Jacobs' Drug Stores and other leading druggists. Write the Eckman Laboratory, Philadelphia, Pa., for booklet telling of recoveries and additional evidence.

Venire Whipped Into Shape Rapidly; Negro Is Eligible

Within a minute or two after Deputy Sheriff Plennie Minor had called the court to order the examination process was applied to the venire panel of 144 men. From each panel of twelve one or more men were excused after being asked the formal questions and furnished a sufficient reason to bar them.

J. H. Jones, Deputy Clerk, called the names. F. W. Stone, No. 82 East Linden street, was excused on account of illness. R. F. Shedden was refused on an excuse of military exemption. Only one man was excused from the first twelve men.

H. R. Calloway, of No. 691 Piedmont avenue, first of the second panel, was not served. F. A. Hull, No. 180 Grant street, was excused on account of his age, 20 years. T. J. Henderson, No. 25 Woodson street, was excused as opposed to capital punishment. J. A. McCreary, No. 78 East North street, was excused because of his residence in DeKalb County. J. F. Patterson, of College Park, was excused on account of deafness. Five were excused from the second panel.

Negro Declared Eligible.

W. H. Scott, No. 215 Gordon street, was excused on account of ill health. He had a doctor's certificate. W. H. Abbott, Record Clerk of the court, was refused excusal. Only one man was excused from the third panel.

The first surprise came with the questioning of the fourth panel, when Earl Davis, a negro, was not excused. He was ruled eligible to jury duty. There is little prospect that he will be drawn as one of the jurors.

George Mathieson, Assistant Chief of County Police, was excused on account of his duties. John W. Alexander, capitalist, of No. 439 South Pryor street, was excused because of illness. W. M. Donehoo, of Buckhead, was let out on account of the death of his mother. E. A. Massa, of No. 305 East Fair street, was over age. J. H. Gilbert, of South Bend, was let out because of illness. The jury panels were thus being revised and made into a compact venire by this process of elimination.

Joel Hurt Out of Town.

The following men were excused in the selection of the fifth panel: George R. Wall, No. 139 Hill street, on account of illness; F. M. York, No. 221 Cooper street, on account of the illness of his wife; W. I. Brooks, No. 224 East Fair street, on account of having removed from Fulton County. The following were excused in the selection of the sixth panel: H. Maness, No. 112 Jefferson street, account of deafness; Joel Hurt was out of town.

worth and Marietta society, and is considered one of the most beautiful girls in the former town.

The circumstances surrounding the disappearance of the young girl are shrouded in mystery, owing to the unwillingness of her relatives to discuss the matter. According to her friends, however, this is all that is known of the case:

Early in June Miss Awtrey left New York to tour Europe under the care of Miss Olive Faw, of Marietta, who takes parties of Cobb County girls across the Atlantic each year. There were a number of Miss Awtrey's friends in the party, and she had been viewing the trip with pleasure. Her first letters from abroad were optimistic in tone. She declared she was having a glorious time. Suddenly there was a change. In her letters the girl reflected the homesickness that, she declared, was making Europe distasteful to her. She said she wanted to return home and see her friends.

Miss Faw conducts two tours during the summer, and Miss Awtrey had arranged to take both of them. When she reached London, on the second tour, however, she wrote to her parents that she was coming home. She was next heard of in New York, about two weeks ago. She wired her father that she was homesick and wanted to come home, and asked him to send her some money and a ticket. He wired her the $200. That same evening Mr. Awtrey received a telegram asking him to meet her in Atlanta a few days later.

Found Trunk—Not Daughter.

On the day mentioned Mr. Awtrey was at the Terminal Station to greet his daughter. The train pulled in, the father waited, but the girl did not appear. Thinking perhaps she had missed her train and would come on a later one, he stayed in Atlanta all day and met every train from New York. Miss Awtrey still did not come. Mr. Awtrey investigated and found that her baggage had been checked through from New York to Atlanta and had arrived on the first train he had met.

Mr. Awtrey then returned to his home. He waited several days, and when his daughter still failed to appear, he asked the aid and advice of his brother, John Atwrey, of Marietta, and his brother-in-law, D. F. McClatchy. A few days later Mr. McClatchy came to Atlanta and enlisted the services of the Burns agency. Detective Chatham, attached to the Atlanta office, went to Marietta and Acworth to determine if any clews could be developed there. His quest was fruitless. The Burns agency then obtained a photograph from a photographer in Marietta, a relative of the missing girl, and it was scattered broadcast over the country.

Miss Awtrey's family has made every effort to keep the fact of her disappearance a secret, and her relatives and intimate friends have been sworn to secrecy. None of them will discuss the mystery, nor advance any theories to account for her disappearance.

"I'm sure I do not know what caused Lynette to run away," said Mrs. R. M. Moon, a distant relative of the girl. "It is as great a mystery to me as it is to anyone.

Elopement Is Rumored.

John Awtrey, missing girl's uncle, refused to make any comment whatever on his niece's unexplained absence.

"All I know is that she started home from New York and didn't get here," he said.

The girl's father could not be seen when a Georgian reporter visited Acworth Sunday night. One of her brothers declared that the members of her family entertain no theories of foul play or of a love affair.

"We are satisfied with the situation," he said. "She has been located."

Despite the assertions of the members of the girl's family that her disappearance is not the culmination of a love affair, several of Miss Awtrey's friends, in discussing the case, persist in mentioning the name of a young man, whose home is in Atlanta, who has been an ardent suitor of Miss Awtrey's for the past year. The suit of the young Atlantan, it is said, has not met with the approval of the girl's family, and it is intimated that he has been forbidden to call on her.

The theory evolved out of these facts by Miss Awtrey's friends is that the girl really came to Atlanta from New York and that her admirer met her here and persuaded her to elope with him.

Giant Negro Hunted For White Slavery

WINCHESTER, VA., July 28.—Despite the fact that several hundred regulars of the various cavalry regiments camped near town at the maneuver grounds have searched for him, the giant negro Franklin, who, it is alleged, was engaged in a white slave traffic and whose place near the campgrounds was raided on Thursday night by the Sheriff, so far has eluded capture.

The white women who were found in the company of a number of negro troopers of the Tenth Cavalry at 2 o'clock in the morning, when Franklin's tent was surrounded, are still in jail.

OPENING CLASH IS LOST BY DEFENSE; FORCED AT START TO NAME ITS WITNESSES

At 9:58 o'clock Solicitor Dorsey announced that he was ready to open the case of the State against Leo M. Frank, charged with having killed Mary Phagan by strangulation. This was followed by the request of the defense that the State's witnesses be called, sworn and put under the rule.

The prosecution opened by announcing its readiness to go on with the trial and called the list of witnesses. Bailiffs brought them down from the second floor. In regular order called, their names were: Mrs. J. W. Coleman, mother of Mary Phagan; J. W. Coleman, the girl's stepfather; George Epps, newsboy; L. S. Dobbs, policeman; W. W. Rogers, bailiff for constable; L. S. Starnes, detective and also prosecutor on the indictment; Pat Campbell, detective; Grace Hicks, girl who identified Mary Phagan's body; J. M. Gantt, once held for inquiry, now supposed to be a star witness for the prosecution; Harry Scott, the Pinkerton detective; R. P. Barrett, pencil factory employee; B. P. Haslett, policeman; M. V. Darley, factory employee; W. A. Gheesling, undertaker that cared for the girl's body; Dr. Claude Smith, City Bacteriologist; Dr. H. F. Harris, member of the State Board of Health; Dr. J. W. Hurt, Coroner's physician; E. L. Parry, court stenographer; E. S. Smith, Monteen Stover, girl employee at pencil factory; Minola McKnight, cook at Frank's home; Albert McKnight, Minola's husband (McKnight did not appear in court); Helen Ferguson, Mrs. Arthur White, wife of factory employee, and L. Stanford.

Attorney Reuben Arnold asked concerning the duces tecum that he had served on the State's attorneys for the affidavits of Jim Conley and others. On the promise of Solicitor Dorsey that he would produce the affidavits whenever needed the duces tecum was waived.

Solicitor Dorsey said he did not concede the right of the defense to force a production of the affidavit. He, however, at the request of Mr. Arnold, dictated a statement giving the dates of each of the affidavits signed by Conley, saying they were all of the affidavits Conley had made and that he would produce them whenever necessary.

The Solicitor asked then that the defense's witnesses be called and sworn. This was met by strenuous objection on the part of Attorneys Rosser and Arnold, who claimed their list was fragmentary.

Solicitor Dorsey protested vehemently, declaring that it would be extremely unfair to the State not to swear the defense's witnesses at this time. Attorney Rosser said it would delay the trial to complete their list at this time.

Judge Roan ruled that he would give the defense time to get up the list. The defense capitulated and it took but five minutes for the list to be made up.

Witnesses for Defense.

Attorney Stiles Hopkins, at the table for the defense, called the names of the witnesses by whom they expect to clear Frank. They were Mary Burke, Dora Small, Ella Thomas, C. P. Gilbert, F. Payne, Eula Flowers, Josephine Stelker, Mattie Thompson, Mrs. L. J. Cohen, J. C. Lowe, M. H. Liebman, Miss Bessie White, Joe Williams, Fred Howell, Wade Campbell, J. A. Price, J. E. Lyon, Cora Lavender, M. O. Nix, J. C. Matthews, F. Jenkins, Mrs. Josephine Selig, E. Selig, J. H. Haas, W. H. Mincey, J. B. Spier, E. L. Skipper, E. L. Sentell, May Barrett, Rebecca Carson, C. H. Carson, Harry Denham, Corinthia Hall, Mattie Hall, J. L. Holloway, Mrs. George Jefferson, Jerome Michael, George W. Parrott, M. W. Morrow, Mrs. M. W. Morrow, Rabi David Marx, A. E. Mayo, Fred Weller, A. E. Marcus, Ed Montag, I. H. Haas, W. B. Owens, T. Y. Brent and Ossie Shields.

These were all of the witnesses whose names were called, but at least 100 more, who will be used mostly as character witnesses, were in the room on the second floor waiting to be called.

First Talesman Too Old.

After the venire had been sifted and many excused, W. S. Copeland was the first talesman examined. He was excused when he said that he had passed the 60-year mark. Solicitor Dorsey put the questions, using the formal ones ask in murder trials.

Being conscientiously opposed to capital punishment or conviction by circumstantial evidence was held not to disqualify a juror by Judge Roan. This was in connection with O. T. Camp, the second talesman.

"I am conscientiously opposed to capital punishment on certain grounds," said Camp.

"What are those grounds," asked Solicitor Dorsey.

"Circumstantial evidence," he replied.

Judge Sustains Defense.

"That disqualifies him, then," said Solicitor Dorsey.

Attorney Rosser objected, saying that such belief did not disqualify the juror. Judge Roan sustained the defense, but Solicitor Dorsey struck him.

A. W. Brewerton was disqualified because he was opposed to capital punishment.

W. H. Winn was struck. Solicitor Dorsey taking this action after looking over his record.

R. G. Elliott was struck by the defense.

L. A. Smith was struck for cause.

C. T. Hopkins, Jr., struck by State.

W. E. Cates, disqualified because opposed to capital punishment.

T. G. Young, struck by defense.

D. D. Hewey, struck because he did not believe in capital punishment.

That ended the first panel of talesmen and not a single juror was obtained. The State struck three and the defense two. Seven were disqualified for cause.

Four Jurymen Obtained.

Four jurors were obtained from the second panel. They are:

A. H. Henslee, No. 74 Oak street, a salesman.

F. V. L. Smith, No. 481 Cherokee avenue, a manufacturers agent.

J. F. Higdon, 108 Ormewood avenue, a contractor.

F. E. Winburn, No. 21 Lucile avenue, a claim agent.

On the second panel the following men were struck:

Howard Oliver, by the defense.

H. E. Luckey, for cause.

O. L. Spurlin, No. 156 Lawton street, struck by defense.

T. A. Slide, for cause.

E. E. Hawkins, No. 369 Edgewood avenue, a negro, who was accepted by the prosecution, but struck by the defense.

L. F. Davis, for cause.

David Woodward, for cause.

M. J. Sewell, for cause.

Third and Fourth Panels Go.

The following men were struck on the third panel: Charles Witherspoon, by defense; H. J. Kuglar, for cause; C. J. Hale, for cause; J. B. Hays, by defense; E. L. Winn, for cause; W. H. Abbott, for cause; K. P. Mayson, for cause; Boyd Perry, for cause.

The entire fourth panel was struck: Samuel Schoen, by the State; W. S. Singleton, by defense; Earle Davis, a negro, was accepted by the State, but struck by the defense; C. S. Cantrell, for cause; John W. Collier, for cause; W. W. Hammett, by the State; A. F. Bellingrath, by defense on ground that he was a brother to an employee Solicitor Dorsey's office and that he had expressed the opinion that Frank was guilty.

"I said it looked like he was guilty from what the newspapers said," declared Mr. Bellingrath. Solicitor Dorsey urged that the talesman was not disqualified by this. However, Judge Roan disqualified him for cause.

"I think he should be set aside for his own sake," ruled the judge.

D. Berger, for cause.

Two More Panels Struck.

The following men were struck from the fifth panel: W. C. Willis, for cause; H. C. Hasty, prejudice; C. H. Cook, by defense; C. H. Candler, in answer to a question from Solicitor Dorsey if he was impartial, said "No;" George R. Low, by the State; S. E. Owens, for cause; J. C. Henderson, for cause; C. M. Brown, opposed to capital punishment; C. A. Vaughn, prejudice.

The following men, comprising the entire sixth panel, were struck: Ben F. Willis, by defense; C. M. Petton, prejudice; W. H. Hudson, not impartial; G. R. Milner, by defense; John Head, age; Robert Smidt, opposed to capital punishment; V. N. Carroll, not impartial; C. H. Allen, opposed to capital punishment; P. F. Barber, opposed to capital punishment; O. Wingate, for cause; T. E. Winsow, by State; A. W. Wofford, by defense.

Every man on the seventh panel was struck, including H. H. Kelly, prejudice; N. A. Long, biased; C. W. Gittens, by defense; H. D. Ferguson, opposed to capital punishment; W. L. Merk, by defense; F. E. Walker, prejudice; P. B. Sale, prejudice; W. S. Gaston, biased; C. L. Asbury, biased; J. W. Chatham, prejudice; C. W. Seagroves, prejudice; Carl Weinmeister, opposed to capital punishment.

The last panel, from which the last juror was secured, was Panel No. 9. The following men were struck: S. L. Miller, by defense; H. L. Solomonson, biased; L. O. Hendon, by defense; H. C. Ashford, for cause; E. E. Wochendorff, prejudice; Nicholas Ittner, age; Bud Waites, prejudice; W. W. Sorrell, by defense; Soloman Benjamin, member of Grand Jury.

The buzz of conversation in the little courtroom instantly was hushed when Judge Roan appeared and Deputy Sheriff Plennie Miner called the court to order. The impaneling of jurors was begun at once.

Luther Z. Rosser, chief of counsel for Frank, pressed his way to the defense's table just as Deputy Miner rapped for order. Solicitor Dorsey and his associates were at their table busily arranging papers and documents several minutes before the swearing of the veniremen began.

An imposing array of legal talent was presented when the case was called. Heading counsel for Frank were Rosser and Reuben R. Arnold, two of the foremost lawyers of the South. At their table were Herbert J. Haas, a civil attorney, who has been engaged in looking up character witnesses in behalf of Frank; Styles Hopkins, of the Rosser & Brandon law firm; Oscar Simmons and Paul Goss, engaged especially to assist in picking the jury; George Cox, of Arnold & Arnold law firm, and Luther Z. Rosser, Jr.

Wife at Frank's Side.

With Solicitor Dorsey were Frank A. Hooper, the brilliant attorney who made his reputation as a prosecutor in criminal cases; E. A. Stephens, Assistant Solicitor, and detectives who have been working on the case. Jim Conley's attorney, W. M. Smith, also was in court.

A stir was created when Mrs. Frank, wife of the accused, made her way into the courtroom and hurried past the rows of spectators into the anteroom where her husband was confined. She bore herself bravely, and when she reached Frank, was seen to converse cheerfully with him.

The loyal woman, who insisted on being by the side of her husband until he was called into the courtroom with his attorneys, drew the attention away from the routine proceedings several minutes.

Judge Roan in Good Humor.

Judge Roan appeared in unusually radiant humor and enlivened the dull routine of the early proceedings with facetious remarks directed at the jurors who sought to evade duty on various pretexts.

To one who claimed deafness, Judge Roan said that he had heard his own name readily enough when it was called.

Another juror, Dr. E. L. Connally, well known capitalist, and gray haired veteran of the war, remarked, smiling rather slyly, that he thought he was over age.

"How do you know that?" inquired the judge.

"My mother says I am," was Dr. Connally's reply.

"Do you claim exemption on that account?" asked the court.

"I guess I do, judge," admitted the capitalist.

"Well, then, I guess I will excuse you," said the judge, amid a general laugh from the courtroom.

Dr. Connally left his place with a vigor that belied his years.

Old Dr. Stork was responsible for the excusing of several of the jurors. By the time the eighth panel of men had taken the oath three men had told of new arrivals at their homes and had been excused.

Defense Not to Ask Delay.

Luther Z. Rosser, of counsel for the defense, stated to a Georgian reporter as he left his office for the scene of the trial that he defense would make no move for delay.

"We will not seek a change of venue or make any move of any kind to delay justice for our client," he said. "We are entirely confident that justice and truth will prevail, as it always must."

Reuben R. Arnold, of the defense, made the same kind of a statement.

"We will announce ready as soon as the case is called," he said.

One important witness for the defense was reported to be missing. He is a traveling salesman, and the defense was said to be confident of locating him.

A great crowd gathered in front of the courthouse as the hour of the trial drew near, and when 9 o'clock arrived, Pryor street at Hunter was almost impassable. The corridors of the courthouse were a mass of humanity, through which a lane had to be cut by deputies to allow the passage of witnesses and lawyers and newspaper men.

The crowd was tense with curiosity, but to all appearances inclined to be orderly and apparently was moved only by the commonest of human motives—curiosity.

Judge Andrew Calhoun entered the courtroom when the court was about midway in its forenoon session and took a seat by Judge Roan. In the intervals when the proceedings were interrupted by conferences of the attorneys, he conversed with Judge Roan.

Newt Lee, who found Mary Phagan's body, was brought from the Tower in the middle of the forenoon in the custody of a deputy sheriff. He was placed in an anteroom adjoining the courtroom. It was expected that he would be one of the early witnesses, if not the first, to be called by the State. Lee testified before the Coroner's inquest that he found the body of the slain factory girl in the

Story of Pretty Little Girl's Death Gripped Public, Eager to Discover Her Slayer.

As Leo Frank faces to-day the ordeal decreed by law that for man's life, man's life shall pay, interest in his case that has held Atlanta, Georgia and the South enthralled for three months has diminished not a whit since the Sunday morning the body of the little factory girl was found.

Wise judges of news, men who are paid thousands of dollars each year for their knowledge of the fickleness of the public, men who can time to the second the period when interest dies in one thing before the public eye to be born anew in another, have for years contended that no single item of news can sustain its interest longer than one brief week.

And yet for three months the public has read of Mary Phagan's death and the quest for her slayer and their demand for this news has been insatiable.

That the vaunted insight of these news experts is as shallow as the mirror reflection of a beauty of the stage is the thought that common logic first presents

Insight of Experts Borne Out.

The insight of these experts has not been at fault. On the contrary, it has been sustained. For in the mystery veiling the death of Mary Phagan and the trial of Leo Frank as her slayer, a more varied array of things that interest, thrill, horrify, shock and make men think is presented than in any one case developed since typesetting machines made the modern newspaper possible.

Harry Thaw's case comes to mind, that tragedy of romance that presented in the same cast of characters the brilliant Lothario, the man of millions, and a woman as fair as the dawn. But there was never the element of mystery in the slaying of Stanford White. District Attorney Jerome described it pretty well as a commonplace tragedy of the tenderloin.

The only question that confronted the public was whether there was a law decreed by God that a man should take up arms and avenge his family honor that should nullify the law made by man that decreed that the courts of the country and the judgment of heaven could alone mete out reparation for personal injury.

But in the Phagan case, there is a mystery so deep, so impenetrable, that there are thousands in Atlanta who believe that Mary Phagan's slayer walks about to-day a free man as another battles for his life accused of his crime.

Victim Only a Child.

There was mystery in the famous case of Henry Clay Beattie, the Virginia aristocrat, who met death in the electric chair for slaying his wife after his infatuation for Beulah Binford.

But again, we have a feature of the Phagan case which was missing in the Beattie tragedy that makes the Atlanta mystery as grippingly pitiful as the Virginia problem was sordid.

For in the Phagan case a child is one of the principals. All the world may love a lover, but all the world loves a child more. And when the innocent, wistful, appealing face of the little factory girl first appeared in the public prints more heartstrings were touched than there were thrills caused in all the sinister revelations of the Virginia trial.

The child interest has made many a case appeal to the public interest more than struggles of statesmen, ravages of nature, or even the love of man for woman. The entire United States waited breathlessly for news of the capture of the kidnapers of little Billy Whitla, the sturdy Pennsylvania lad, in 1909.

But when the kidnapers were taken and Billy Whitla returned safe and sound and maybe a little happier from his thrilling experience to the home of his parents, the public forgot all about little Billy and to-day, in four short years, there are few who remember his case at all. For Billy Whitla lived. Mary Phagan died.

Lamana Case Was Absorbing.

In 1907 the hearts of every mother and father in the Southland bled for the wealthy father and mother of the little Lamana boy, who was taken from their New Orleans home by members of the Crescent City Mafia. Interest was intense at every period of the search and public sentiment was kindled near to the blazing point when the beheaded body of the boy was found in a Louisiana swamp.

But as thrilling as was the Lamana case, it did not have that quality that is so essential to make a case universally absorbing. The Lamanas were foreigners, the kidnapers were foreigners. And Americans want an American in their news stories.

And so on and on. Recall any case of thrilling interest to your mind, analyze it, and you will discover that the Phagan case has features which that case does not possess and any one of those features would make a story of breathless interest in itself.

TRIAL INTEREST SETS RECORD FOR COUNTY

Brilliant Array of Lawyers and the Dramatic Features of the Case Make Spectacular Clash.

No murder trial in Fulton County ever has approached the spectacular interest which is in prospect in the Frank case from the first, sharp skirmish between the opposing attorneys, through the long, bitter legal battle, and to the final pleas of the prosecution and the defense.

The presence of Luther Z. Rosser and Reuben R. Arnold in the brilliant array of legal talent at once made certain that the trial would be out of the ordinary. Neither has the reputation of making a half-hearted fight when there is anything at stake. This time it is a man's life that is depending upon their legal ability, their shrewdness and their eloquence.

Both have a disconcerting habit of carrying the fight to their opponents. In ring parlance, they do not give their courtroom rivals a chance to "get set." This is going to keep the spectators constantly on the edge of expectation, and will furnish a series of exciting incidents that will give the Frank trial a place by itself in the criminal annals of Georgia.

Crisis When Conley is Grilled.

To describe Rosser's tactics as aggressive is expressing it euphemistically. If he were only aggressive, his name would not inspire the trepidation that now is felt by persons who have to face him in the witness box or by young lawyers who have to pit their strength against him.

Rosser and Arnold are at their best when they are cross-examining the witnesses called by the other side. This fact is expected to bring about the most thrilling situation of the entire trial in the witness box grilling of the negro Jim Conley. Not satisfied with seeking to prove the entire innocence of their client, the two lawyers propose to show that Conley himself is the man who attacked Mary Phagan in the National Pencil Factory and flung her dead body upon the trash heap in the basement.

From whom are they to get testimony of this startling nature?

Certainly from no one else than the negro, and from him they intend to get it. It is a bold plan, but one characteristic of the two-handed fighting methods of Rosser. Anyone who has seen a witness made the object of Rosser's attack knows that Jim Conley is in for a bad day when he is called to the stand to testify that Leo Frank had him assist in the disposal of Mary Phagan's body.

Chance Seen for Confession.

Only a Rosser would have the courage of his convictions to expect to break down the negro after he repeatedly had told the remarkable story of finding the girl's dead body on the second floor of the pencil factory and carrying her, at Frank's direction and with Frank's assistance, down the elevator into the basement.

Rosser's plan opens up the dramatic possibility of a courtroom confession from Conley. In the opinion of those who are convinced of Frank's innocence and the negro's guilt, it would not be a matter of great surprise if Conley, under the fire of questions directed at him by Rosser and Arnold, should collapse and confess he alone was concerned in the crime.

The cross-examination of Conley is certain to be one of the spectacular features of the trial. His vivid tale, under the lead of questions by Solicitor Dorsey and Attorney Frank A. Hooper, will be repeated to the courtroom full of spectators. It will lose none of its dramatic elements, in that its essential features already are well known to the public. They are waiting to hear it first hand from the negro's lips.

Raked Up His Past Life.

Then Conley will be turned over to the scarcely tender mercies of counsel for Frank. He probably will be on the rack for hours. Whether he will be able to stand the ordeal is problematical. No point in his history that could have any possible bearing on the case will be overlooked. The defense is in possession of a mass of information relating to Conley's conduct for years. He will be asked in regard to every one of these circumstances.

Before the events of the day of the tragedy are reached the negro will have undergone a searching examination of significant incidents in his past life. Then his story of his part in the crime will be attacked. The discrepancies will be brought out in the glare of the cross-examination. The falsehoods that he told for days after he was arrested will be resurrected. All of his affidavits will be ridiculed. The two attorneys will join in an effort to break down and utterly to discredit the story to which he now sticks. Whether or not they are successful, their attempt will be a dramatic feature of the trial.

A fight, scarcely less spectacular, will develop over the story of William H. Mincey. This time the attorneys for the prosecution will be in the role of scoffers. Mincey has declared that he heard Conley boasting of killing a girl.

Mincey, a quiet—almost diffident—type of the country pedagogue, will be made the target for the Solicitor's and Attorney Hooper's fire of questions. They will seek to show that Mincey never saw Conley the afternoon of April 26, when Mincey asserted he had the conversation with the negro.

Climax When Frank Is Called.

A hot fight also will be precipitated by the demand of the defense that the State make known the identity, at the beginning of the trial, of all the witnesses against Frank. Solicitor Dorsey has said that he will fight any demand of this sort.

The subpenas duces tecum issued by the defense will form another casus belli that is expected to provide a spirited skirmish between the attorneys at the beginning of the trial. The defense insists on having in court, for the purpose of comparison, all of the affidavits taken from Jim Conley, Newt Lee, Monteen Stover, W. M. Matthews and others. Dorsey declares this is a flimsy trick to discredit the State's witnesses, and proposes to resist to the extent of his ability any move to compel him to comply with the demand.

STREET CAR HITS WAGON, KILLING DAIRYMAN

R. R. Gresham, Father of Ten, Dies Three Hours After Crash. Thrown Forty Feet.

R. R. Gresham, a dairyman residing in Wyman street, Kirkwood, was struck by an outbound Kirkwood car at Whitefoord avenue early Monday morning and received injuries from which he died three hours later without regaining consciousness.

Gresham's skull was fractured, his throat gashed and his ankle broken.

The accident occurred when the dairyman, driving his wagon into Atlanta, attempted to cross the car tracks in front of an approaching car. The wagon was smashed into splinters by the speeding car and its driver thrown 40 feet into a ditch. The horse was knocked over on its side amid the debris of the vehicle.

Gresham was picked up unconscious and hurried in an ambulance to the Atlanta Hospital. Physicians who attended him held out little hope for his recovery. He died three hours later.

Mr. Gresham was 52 years old, married and the father of ten children. But one member of the family, Herman Gresham, a son, reached the injured man before he died.

REMOVAL OF U. S. CONSUL ASKED BY TEXANS

American Envoy at Juarez Charged With Neglecting to Protect His Countrymen.

WASHINGTON, July 28.—The removal from office of Thomas Edwards, the American Consul at Juarez, Mex., was requested of the State Department to-day by Representative Smith, of Texas, who charges that Edwards has been negligent in relieving American refugees at Madera. Representative Smith acted on complaint of his constitutents in the El Paso district.

The Congressman also urged Secretary Bryan to stop the shipments of arms and ammunition from this country to the Huerta administration.

"I informed the Secretary of State," said Representative Smith, "that so long as we do not recognize the Huerta Government we should not favor it by allowing it to secure arms from this country. We deny that they have a constitutional government and yet they are allowed to get arms and ammunition. We ought to allow both factions to have war supplies or we ought to give the privilege to neither of them."

Smith says Bryan did not indicate what action would be taken regarding his complaints.

Smith received telegrams to-day from his constituents saying that 35 Americans are in peril at Madera among them a number of women and children.

U. S. to Hunt Down Dixon's Assailant.

WASHINGTON, July 28.—"Ambassador Wilson—2:30 o'clock."

This simple announcement, placed at the bottom of President Wilson's official list of callers to-day, was the only indication at the White House that the most momentous conference at the White House scheduled since President Roosevelt maneuvered the Russian-Japanese peace conclave was due to take place.

For the past 36 hours the President has had before him the lengthy report dictated by Ambassador Wilson detailing all the events of importance which have happened in Mexico from the time the Diaz regime first began to topple down to the attempted murder of Charles B. Dixon, the American immigration official, at Juarez on Saturday.

Bryan Studies Report.

Secretary Bryan, the first caller at the White House to-day, was closeted with the President for more than an hour, while he discussed the details of the Wilson report.

In discussing the Mexican situation with the newspaper cabinet to-day the President authorized the statement that nothing has happened within the past ten days to make matters better or worse.

The President further said that, as he has not yet conferred with Ambassador Wilson, he can not announce any future policy with respect to President Huerta or Mexico for the reason that he has not decided upon one.

To Hunt Dixon's Assailant.

The President begged to be excused from making any comment upon the attempted assassination of Charles B. Dixon, the American immigration official, who was shot at Juarez on Saturday because, he said, he did not have all the facts in the case before him as yet.

The President assured the correspondents, however, that he has ordered a rigid investigation of the matter and that the State Department will do everything possible to hunt down the guilty parties.

Mexican Consul Says Negroes Shot Dixon.

EL PASO, TEX., July 28.—Blame for the shooting of United States Immigration Inspector Charles B. Dixon was laid upon a Mexican negro lieutenant named Sainz, of General Salazar's army, and two American negroes, in a statement issued to-day by Mexican Consul Miranda.

According to Consul Miranda's version of the shooting, the two American negroes planned the attack upon Dixon on account of his activity in investigatig a "white slave" case and drew the Mexican negro into the scheme to do the shooting.

Federal investigators have reported to the Mexican Consul here that Dixon was seized by Salazar's soldiers without any orders.

Dixon was released without bond and brought to El Paso yesterday. He was pronounced out of danger by Dr. J. W. Tappan, immigration service surgeon.

The two American negroes who were arrested as plotters against Dixon were Arthur Walker and Harry Bell. They have been irregular soldiers in Salazar's command. Bell was said to have escaped into Mexico while awaiting trial on a charge of "white slavery." Walekr is also wanted on the same charge in the United States.

SIDELIGHTS on GEORGIA POLITICS

by JAMES B. NEVIN

There seems to be little, if any, doubt that the Legislature is to hurry along the general tax act, just as it has hurried along the general appropriations bill.

There are, counting to-day, exactly fourteen working days left to the Legislature's credit. This does not include two Saturdays and two Sundays, however.

It, therefore, may be seen that the Legislature can, if it will, place both the appropriations bill and the tax acts—the general tax act, at least—in the hands of the Executive ten days ahead of adjournment, as he has requested.

If this is done—and it likely will be done—the present Legislature will have accomplished a record of speed never before equaled in the history of the State.

Despite all the complaining and criticism to the contrary, the present Legislature has been the most prompt, within the memory of any Georgian, in the matter of passing the two vitally big and necessary measures of the session—the general appropriations bill and the general tax act.

Credit must be awarded the committee heads, the committees and the Speaker for this remarkable achievement, and President Anderson has given his assurance that the promptness of the House shall be duplicated in the Senate this week and next.

Taken altogether, the record of the Legislature as made up for this session is all right and a credit.

It is, indeed, far better than usual.

Mr. Shuptrine, of Chatham, is very much opposed to the measure permitting the addition of a kindergarten system to the public schools of the State.

Mr. Shuptrine does not believe the Constitution of the State contemplates anything of the kind, and, moreover, he thinks it would be but the first step in the direction of greatly expanding the school fund, already smaller than the necessities of the State seem to warrant.

"If we permit this innovation, not warranted in the fundamental law at all, we shall have application made within the life of the present Legislature, perhaps, for more funds to meet the kindergarten requirements," said Mr. Shuptrin to-day.

"I know that it is proposed to add this feature to the school system without additional appropriations to cover it, but that is merely a sop to get the bill on the statute books. Once we inaugurate this system, we shall have to take care of it, and it will be argued that funds as now appropriated are not sufficient to handle the new department.

"Georgia already is dealing most generously with her schools—she is straining the limit to take care of them—and I am not complaining so much about that. But I do think it would be a sad mistake to add any further burdens to her budget—and certainly along the line of providing public education to tots from 4 to 6 years of age."

Senator M. C. Tarver has abandoned for the present his effort to get the Representatives and Senators of the various counties affected, interested in the proposed Chickamauga judicial circuit.

"The bill could not be passed at this session," said Mr. Tarver, "for several of the Representatives of the counties proposed for the new circuit are opposed to any change of the present arrangement. Others, while desiring a change, couldn't get together on an arrangement of counties that was mutually satisfactory."

Mr. Searcey's bill to make the buyer and the seller equally guilty in "blind tiger" cases, was killed in the Senate, upon the theory that it affords the "blind tiger" exactly the protection he desires, rather than retards him in the operation of his business.

"The one thing a 'blind tiger' dreads above all other things," said a Senator, discussing the bill, "is that among his numerous customers may be one who will tell.

"This bill removes that dread, for anybody who reported a 'tiger' under this measure would become a criminal himself. Besides, because of the law which excuses a man from incriminating himself in testifying, this man would become immediately incompetent as a witness.

"It is hard enough now to convict 'blind tigers', and it would be a thousand times harder under this law.

"Prohibitionists who seek to go the limits this bill proposes are to be commended for their zeal, perhaps, but surely not for their common sense. This bill is sound enough in theory, if you view it from a certain angle, but it falls to pieces as a practical measure and would defeat the very object its author had in mind when he framed it."

The Senate defeated the measure by a vote of 18 to 22, which was not such a wide margin of defeat, after all.

SEARCY'S LIQUOR BILL REVIVED IN SENATE

Resolution Providing for Its Reconsideration Adopted—Whitewashing of Soule Opposed.

The adoption of a resolution calling for the reconsideration of the Searcy prohibition bill, making the selling of liquor purchased from a "blind tiger" a misdemeanor, which was defeated in the Georgia Senate Friday, featured the session Monday. The bill probably will come up again this week under special order rule. A hot fight is expected.

Senators Foster and Hixon offered a resolution "whitewashing" the charges against President A. M. Soule, of the State Agricultural College. It sets forth that President Soule has rendered valuable service which should be recognized by the withdrawal of the charges, now pending in the House. The resolution will be considered Tuesday.

That a bitter contest will take place when it is presented for adoption was indicated Monday by Senator McGregor, who declared he would fight the measure to the last ditch, on the grounds that it is a "complete 'whitewash' without any sort of investigation."

The most important new bill introduced in the Senate Monday was that by Senator McGregor, limiting the power of the Governor in calling out troops in case of disorder. The bill aims to take the State militia out of the so-called police jurisdiction, and requires affidavits by civil authorities before the Governor may call out troops.

Senator Tarver's bill providing for the appointment of a State commission to investigate conditions as regards drug users, with a view to establishing a State sanitarium for them, was passed by the Senate.

Senator Bush's bill making the State Superintendent of Education an ex-officio member of the eleven agricultural schools of the State was lost after President Randolph Anderson made a fight on the measure.

Senator McNeil's bill providing for a new Great Seal of State, changing the date 1799 to 1776, commemorating the Declaration of Independence, was sent back to the committee.

Clarence H. Mackay Sued for $2,000,000

NEW YORK, July 28.—That Clarence H. Mackay, to keep up the pace of a millionaire's son, borrowed heavily in Wall Street and failed to pay back after he had inherited $40,000,000 from the estate of his father, is charged in a suit brought by W. L. Stow, a broker, for an accounting of more than $2,000,000.

The plaintiff was at the head of the firm of W. L. Stow & Co., which failed for $6,000,000 some years ago. He charges that Mr. Mackay is directly responsible for that failure by failing to meet obligations contracted in a pool organized to buy and control stocks and bonds of the Mexican Central Railway.

Kings to Send Costly Gifts to Miss Wilson

WASHINGTON, July 28.—Despite President Wilson's attitude in discouraging the gift of Baltimore Democrats to his daughter, Jessie, at her wedding next November to Francis B. Sayre, kings and princes of foreign nations will flood the White House with costly gifts.

The marriage of a President's son or daughter is the only occasion on which foreign governments can get around the American constitution, which forbids the President accepting personal gifts from rulers of foreign nations.

The gifts from foreign potentates, naturally, cannot be discouraged.

Gabrielle Ray Wins Suit Against Loder

LONDON, July 28.—Gabrielle Ray, the famous Gayety beauty, to-day won her suit against her husband, Eric Loder, for the restoration of her conjugal rights. Loder made no defense.

The actress and Loder, who is the son of the late Alfred Loder and grandson of the late Sir Robert Loder, were married March 1, 1912. The marriage was to have taken place the previous day, but Miss Ray kept Loder "waiting at the church."

SLATON WARNS OF BUDGET IN MESSAGE

Advises Assembly Appropriations Will Exceed Revenue if Care Is Not Taken.

A statement showing the general appropriation bill will carry $280,629 more than the revenue to be collected in 1914, estimating the latter on the 1913 basis, unless means for increasing the income are devised, featured Governor John M. Slaton's message to the General Assembly Monday.

Governor Slaton submits figures of the State Comptroller showing that fifteen counties suffered a loss of $130,015 in tax returns to date.

The Governor also calls attention to the present inadequacy of the election and appointment of United States Senators and calls for legislation along this line.

Under the present law, the Governor points out, the executive has no power of appointment in the case of the death of a Senator. The State may also be without a Senator from March, the time of expiration of the term, until June, when the Legislature convenes.

Governor Slaton therefore has recommended that the Secretary of State be empowered to canvass the vote for United States Senator immediately following the election. The Governor has corresponded with Senator Hoke Smith and Senator Bacon in regard to this.

A further recommendation by the Governor calls attention to an appropriation of $500 for expenses of the State Agricultural School.

MAULS MAN FOR TALKING TO WIFE

W. M. Sexton, No. 18 Gaskill street, Monday morning remarked to Recorder Broyles that he had "cautioned this guy about talking to his wife," in explaining why he attacked W. L. Patterson, of No. 57 Powell street, Sunday night at the close of services in St. Luke's Methodist Church 'n Powell street.

Patterson told the court that Sexton is "insanely jealous."

Sexton, who is separated from his wife, attacked Patterson a short distance from the church after he had seen him talking to Mrs. Sexton inside of the church. Patterson said Mrs. Sexton called to him after the congregation had been dismissed, and that he meant no harm by conversing with her. He said Sexton lay in wait for him in a dark spot in Powell street and assailed him with metal knucks. Sexton denied this.

The two men were pummeling one another vigorously when interrupted by Detective Coker and Policeman Boggus, who were on their way home from the church service. Metal knucks were found on the ground. Patterson displayed an abrasion on his head, which he said was made by the knucks.

When Sexton told Judge Broyles he had warned his wife not to talk to other men, the Recorder informed him that as he was separated from his wife he had no right to beat up every person he saw talking to her."

The jealous husband was fined $25.75 and the case of Patterson was dismissed.

DR. STARNES BIDS ATLANTA GOODBYE

One-third of the seats in the Auditorium were filled Sunday afternoon for the farewell concert given by Dr. Percy Starnes and Mrs. Starnes.

A program in which Mozart's "Magic Flute" predominated, and which contained two compositions by the organist himself, was well received. The overture to Wagner's "Tannhauser," which was to have been the final number, was omitted because the organ got out of order. In its place, Dr. Starnes made a little speech of farewell. He said he would take away with him the pleasant recollection that his Atlanta audiences have been uniformly attentive and cordial.

Dr. Starnes' two compositions were "Improvisations Upon a Scotch Melody," the air being "Auld Lang Syne," and a song, "A Lake and a Fairy Boat," which Mrs. Starnes sang.

"Women can not swim well in skirts," said Dr. Ladova to-day. "Their figures are rounded so that they do not need as thorough covering as men. Men bathers go about almost naked. Their hideous figures should be covered from their necks to their toes. They should be compelled to wear the skirts."

MEN WELCOME MOTHER'S FRIEND

A Duty That Every Man Owes to Those Who Perpetuate the Race.

It is just as important that men should know of progressive methods in advance of motherhood. The suffering, pain and distress incident to child-bearing can be easily avoided by having at hand a bottle of Mother's Friend.

This is a wonderful penetrating, external application that relieves all tension upon the muscles and enables them to expand without the painful strain upon the ligaments. Thus there is avoided all those nervous spells; the tendency to nausea or morning sickness is counteracted, and a bright, sunny, happy disposition is preserved that reflects wonderfully upon the character and temperament of the little one soon to open its eyes in bewilderment at the joy of his arrival. You can obtain a bottle of "Mother's Friend" at any drug store at $1.00, and it will be the best dollar's worth you ever obtained. It preserves the mother's health, enables her to make a quick and complete recovery, and thus renewed strength she will eagerly devote herself to the care and attention which mean so much to the welfare of the child. Write to the Bradfield Regulator Co., 129 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga., for their valuable and instructive book of guidance for expectant mothers. Get a bottle of Mother's Friend to-day.

PONY RIVALS ARE HUSTLING IN 3 LAST DAYS

Standing Changes Fast—County Contestants Redouble Efforts. Shetlands To Be Exhibited.

Four yearly subscriptions, with Red Letter Ballots, counting in all 8,000 votes—were brought in by one contestant in The Georgian and American pony contest.

"Was it a rival in your district?" the contest manager asks the boys and girls. "You don't know. Very likely, it was. Nothing is more treacherous nowadays than over-confidence.

"Three days remain, after Monday. The strain soon will be over. There is not a boy or girl in the race who can not well afford to put every effort into the work for this brief, final spurt."

Some May Be Disappointed.

When the contestants come into the office, the contest manager gets an excellent line on their ideas. Sometimes they are amusing. There are several boys and girls who were leading a week ago by good margins. Strangely enough, in spite of repeated warnings, these youngsters will not believe that they are behind now. This is the attitude which will bring bitter disappointment when the final standings are published next Sunday, and the winners announced.

One feature of the contest upon which little stress has been put is the fact that the boy or girl who gets the greatest total of votes has first choice of all twenty-two ponies, and so on down the list. For the ambitious lad it is not enough to win in his district. He wants also to get one of the first selections from the herd of twenty-two Shetlands.

No Apathy in Country.

True, it may happen that the very last pony may suit the very last contestant to perfection. But, again, the chances are it will not.

There is no apathy in the country districts. The work done by the contestants outside of Atlanta is remarkable.

The ponies were to have been paraded Sunday, but the weather was not propitious. If the weather does not again interfere the ponies will be shown in the business section of Atlanta Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock.

VICTIM OF NEGRO REGRETS HANGING

Wounded Dunbar Merchant Not in Sympathy With Houston County Mob's Action.

MACON, July 28.—When G. F. Hammock, a merchant of Dunbar, was told at a private hospital here to-day that John Shake, the negro who shot him Saturday night, had been lynched by a Houston County mob, he said:

"I am sorry the boys did that. Shake was a bad negro, all right, but it wasn't right to hang him."

Hammock is not seriously injured, though weak from loss of blood. He expects to return to his home this week.

Hammock detected the negro burglarizing his store about midnight. When he called on Shake to surrender, the negro fired a shotgun. The shot fractured Hammock's left wrist and also caused a painful wound in the chest.

The negro escaped and took refuge in the swamps below Wellston. A mob caught him late Sunday afternoon. After confessing that he did the shooting, the negro was hanged to a tree on the outskirts of Dunbar.

NEW AFFIDAVITS IN STRIKE QUIZ STARTLING

Sensational Stories Are Expected From Persons Who Saw Troops Shoot Citizens at Augusta.

Several startling affidavits from eyewitnesses, it is understood, will be introduced by Representative Beck when the legislative inquiry into the recent Augusta strike and the killing of three citizens is resumed Tuesday in the Capitol before the Committee on Military Affairs.

The committee also has summoned the officers and a number of privates who were present at the time of the shooting.

In the following article Attorney P. C. McDuffie, who is retained in the investigation, discusses "military law and martial rule in Georgia."

By P. C. McDUFFIE.

At the time of the Augusta strike the militia established an imaginary dead line. No physical obstruction, ropes, wires, red lights or danger signals warned the people of the military death-trap. It was simply an intangible nothing, beyond which the whim and caprice of the commander had determined the people of that city should not pass.

They did not set apart a certain place and say that anybody coming willfully and intentionally within its boundaries shall be arrested, but without previous notice drew an imaginary line and then without warning proceeded to riddle with bullets three unarmed, innocent men, who could not possibly have intended to commit violence of any sort, nor could they have been engaged in any riot, mob or other unlawful act.

Mr. R. G. Price, attorney, of Louisville, Ga., states that he was in Augusta at the time of the tragedy, and at the scene of the shooting with his brother, Dr. Price, of that city. He naturally thought that he and his brother owed the struggling men the duty of assistance after they were shot, but he says they were prevented from going to them by a volley of shots from the soldiers, narrowly escaping personal injury.

If these things can be done with impunity, surely the militia is paramount to civil authority, which heretofore has been shown, is in direct conflict both with the statutory law and the Constitution of Georgia.

"Martial" and "Military" Law.

Military law is the body of rules and regulations that have been prescribed for the government of the army and for the militia when called into active service. In Georgia the Articles of War governing the army of the United States have been adopted and are binding upon the militia. Military offense, within the meaning of the militia laws, is a violation of these rules and regulations—they are not criminal offenses, as defined in the several State Constitutions. Neglect of duty, non-attendance on drills, insubordination, general disorder are common examples. Martial rule or martial law, as it is frequently incorrectly expressed, is not synonymous with military law.

There are occasions when martial rule can be properly applied, but no sane man will contend that the Augusta disturbance justified its enforcement. If in foreign invasion or civil war the courts are actually closed and it is impossible to administer criminal justice according to law, then, in the theater of active military operations, where war really prevails, there is a necessity to furnish a substitute for the civil authority, and as no power is left but the military, it is allowed to govern by martial rule until the laws can have their free course.

Constitution Paramount.

Martial rule is employed when force may expel the civil authorities from a part of the State, or when the civil law is unable to perform its functions, the military being on the spot to execute it where no civil authority exists. When it does exist the Constitution is imperative that it shall be paramount to the military.

The power of arrest in this case would have secured the alleged disturbers and law-breakers until the State was prepared for their trial and the courts were ready to try them.

The men responsible for this atrocity were tried by a court-martial and acquitted, but as the military was without jurisdiction, the conclusion reached is not binding upon the State.

Courts-martial may try offenses committed in violation of the military law, as above defined, but acts done in the caprice of tyranny under martial rule make the military commander and his subordinates accountable to the law of the land, both by prosecution in the criminal courts and by civil action at the instance of the parties aggrieved.

Rich Man a Negro; Death Bares Secret

CHICAGO, July 28.—William Henry Lee, wealthy publisher whose $200,000 estate will be taken by the State of Illinois because there were no relatives to claim it, was a negro. For nearly 50 years he kept the secret.

The secret of his being of negro blood was admitted by Fred C. Laird, for ten years his partner. Lee never married, Mr. Laird said, because he feared that in his children the secret of his negro ancestry might be revealed.

Appendix All Alone In London, Said Jack

SAN FRANCISCO, July 28.—Here is the latest joke Jack London, the famous author, is telling on himself.

London was operated on recently for appendicitis. After the ordeal the surgeon held up the severed appendix in his fingers for the patient to see. The author looked at it thoughtfully, then grinned and said:

"It was a case of all alone in London, wasn't it, doc?"

'CREMATORY BIG FIZZLE,' AVERS WOODWARD

"A test of the new crematory Monday morning proves my contention that the plant is inadequate and not worth the price," said Mayor James G. Woodward Monday.

"Councilman C. L. Ashley, chairman of the Sanitary Committee of Council, is a practical mechanical engineer, and it was he who made the test. He reports that the Destructor Company demands that the garbage must be separated before being placed in the furnaces, and, as the building only provides one receptacle for alle garbag, this will be almost an impossibility.

Milwaukee Has Three Bins.

"In the Milwaukee crematory there are provided separate bins for the garbage, and the wagons are emptied into these bins, where they are dumped directly into the furnace. That the company did not provide for the separation of the garbage is no concern of the city. They did it in order to reduce the cost of construction.

"Another matter is the petition for a change in the quality of glass used. The contract calls for fireproof glass, polished on both sides. The cost of this is $1,513. They ask that they be permitted to use glass polished on one side only and which is not transparent, which would cost them only $576. In exchange for this difference they agree to give the city the fire and plain brick left after completion, for which the city has no use.

Only One Furnace Working.

"Another thing is that only one furnace is in working order, and it is my opinion that it will not be completed before Christmas, when, on account of the difference in the water contained in the garbage, it will be too late to make the tests necessary for the disposal of garbage gathered in the summer months.

"If the City Council had backed me up in this crematory fight, I would have saved the city at least $75,000 and had a better crematory. A thorough test will convince the public that I was right in every contention, and that the city has been buncoed out of more than $100,000."

It is Dr. Cameron's Wedding Day. At 8 o'Clock He Is to Marry Genevieve Gretorex, a Beautiful Society Girl. At 4 o'Clock He Is Informed His Fiancee Has Disappeared.

Opening Installment

(Copyright, 1912, by Anna Katharine Green.)

An Unexpected Visitor.

IT was Dr. Cameron's wedding day. At 8 o'clock in the evening the ceremony of marriage between himself and Genevieve Gretorex was to be performed at the house of the bride's parents in St. Nicholas Place. It was now 4 o'clock.

Seated in his office, Dr. Cameron, who, for a young man, enjoyed a most enviable reputation as a physician, mused over his past and built castles for the future; for his bride was the daughter of one of the richest and most influential citizens of New York, and to such ambition as his this fact, implying, as it did, valuable connections in the present and a large and unincumbered fortune in the future, was one that lent luster to her beauty and attraction to their union. Not but what he loved her—or thought he did—would have loved her under any circumstances. Was she not handsome, and in that reserved and somewhat haughty way he especially admired? Had she not fine manners and would she not add increased honor to a name already well known, and, as he might add, respected?

Had Her Caprices.

To be sure, she had her caprices, as a woman so circumstanced had a right to have, and she esteemed rather than adored him, as many little events in their short courtship only too plainly betrayed. But then he would not have admired a gushing bride, and, being what he was, a man of taste and the son of a man of taste, he found a certain satisfaction in the calm propriety of a match that united equal interests, without jeopardizing that calmness of mind necessary to the successful practice of his exacting profession.

There was but one thing troubled him. Why had she refused to see him for the last seven days? She was not a woman of petty instincts. Indeed, he had sometimes suspected her of possessing latent energies which the round of a fashionable life had never called forth; and in her cool and somewhat languid gaze he had caught glimpses now and then of a spirit that only needed light and air to expand into something like greatness.

Why, then, this strange desire for seclusion at a time when a woman is usually supposed to desire the support of her lover's society? Had he displeased her? Not only had his presents been rich, they had been rare and of an order to gratify her refined taste. Was she ill? He was her physician as well as lover, and he had not been notified of any indisposition.

Besides the last time he had been so fortunate as to be received into her presence she had seemed well and looked blooming; more so, indeed, than he had seen her for some time, and, though somewhat nervous in manner, had exhibited an interest in his attentions which he had not always observed in her. It was not a long interview, but he remembered it well; saw again the almost timid look with which she greeted him, followed by the smile that was nearly a shock to him—it was so much warmer and brighter than usual. Then the few hurried words—for even that night she would not see him long—and the sudden coyness of her attitude as he took her hand in parting!—he recollected it all. He had not thought of it at the time, but now it seemed to him that there had been something strange in her whole bearing, an impalpable change from her former self that he could not analyze, but which had, nevertheless, left its impression upon him. The kiss he had received, for instance, had moved him. There had been warmth in it and her lips had almost returned the pressure of his own.

Was She Ill?

This was new in the history of their courtship and would have argued, perhaps, that she was beginning to recognize his appreciation of her if her after conduct had not given the lie to any such surmise. As it was, it rather seemed to show that she had been in an unnatural condition—suggestive of incipient fever, perhaps. She was ill; and they were trying to keep it from him! The butler's excuses, "Miss Gretorex is very much engaged, sir; Mrs. Gretorex's regrets, sir, but Miss Gretorex has gone out on important business," were but polite subterfuges to blind his eyes to the real truth. And yet to his calmer judgment how untenable was even this supposition. Had she been sick he could not have failed to have heard of it from some quarter. No, she was not sick. She was but indulging in a freak easily to be explained, perhaps, by her mother's over-exciting code of etiquette; and, as in a few hours, she was to be his wife and life-long companion, he would cease to think of it, and only remember that kiss.

He had reached this point in his musings when they were suddenly interrupted. A tap was heard on his office door.

With some irritation he arose. It was not time for his carriage and he had expressly ordered that no visitors or patients were to be received. Who could it be, then? A messenger from Miss Gretorex? He sprang to the door at the thought. But before he could touch the knob, the door opened, and to his surprise and possible relief there entered an unknown man of middle age and prepossessing appearance, whose errand seemed to be one of importance, though his manner was quiet and his voice startlingly gentle.

A Visitor.

"I hope I am not intruding," said he. "The boy below told me this was your wedding day, but he also told me that the ceremony was not to take place till 8 o'clock this evening, and as my business is peculiar and demands instant attention I ventured to come up."

"That is right," answered Dr. Cameron, feeling an unaccountable attraction toward the man, though he was not what you would perhaps call a gentleman, and had, as the doctor could not but notice even at this early stage of their acquaintance, a way of not meeting your eye when he spoke that was to say the least, lacking in ingenuousness. "Is it as a patient you come to me?"

"No," rejoined the stranger, fixing his glance on the white necktie and one or two other insignificant articles which lay on the table near by, with an air strangely like that of compassion. "My business is with you as a doctor—that is, partly—but I am not the patient. I almost wish I were," he added, in a troubled tone that awakened the other's interest notwithstanding the natural preoccupation of his thoughts.

"Let me hear," returned Dr. Cameron. "You make my task easy," the stranger remarked. "And yet," he went on in a curter and more business-like tone, "you may be less willing to listen when I tell you that I have first a story to relate which, while not uninteresting in itself, is so out of accord with your present mood that I doubt if you will be able to sit through it with patience. Yet it is necessary for me to relate it and necessary for you to hear it, now, here, and without any interruption."

This was alarming; especially as the speaker did not seem like a man given to sentimentalities or even to exaggeration. On the contrary he gave the impression of a person accustomed to weigh his words with studious care, not allowing a sentence to escape him without a decided motive.

"Will you tell me your name?" requested Dr. Cameron.

The reply came quietly.

"I doubt if you will know it, and I had rather you had not asked it. But since it is important above all things that you should trust me, I will say that it is Gryce, Ebenezer Gryce, and add that I am a member of the police force; in short, a detective."

Dr. Cameron felt his apprehensions vanish. Whatever the other's errand, it could not be one that touched him or his; and this to a man on his wedding day was certainly a comforting thought.

"You undervalue your fame," he replied. "I know your name well. Can it be possible you desire my assistance in a professional way?"

The detective's gaze, which had been resting gloomily upon a laughing cherub on the mantelpiece, shifted, but he did not respond to the doctor's smile, and his manner remained unaltered.

"I will tell my story," said he. "It will be the quickest way to come to an understanding."

And without further pause or preliminary, he began in the following words:

The Dilemma.

"I am getting to be an old man, and I have my infirmities. But there are still cases which are given to no one but me. Among them are those which involve the honor of persons in a high station of life."

Mr. Gryce paused. Dr. Cameron felt his apprehensions return.

"You see," the detective slowly resumed. "I can keep a secret; that is, when the life and property of others are not endangered by my silence. I can do a detective's work and keep a detective's counsel, only speaking when and where necessity requires."

He paused again. Dr. Cameron moved uneasily.

"As in this case," added the other, gravely.

"This case?" repeated the doctor, now thoroughly alarmed. "What case? You excite me; tell me what you have to say, at once!"

But the detective was not to be hurried.

"I was, therefore, not at all surprised," he proceeded, as if no interruption had occurred, "when some three days ago I was requested to call upon—Mrs. A., let us say—on business of a strictly confidential character. Such summonses come frequently. Such a summons does not disturb an officer in the least. I nevertheless made haste to show myself at Mrs. A.'s house, for Mrs. A., whom you perhaps know is a woman of some consequence, and her husband is a man of widespread reputation and influence. I found her at home, anxiously awaiting my appearance. As soon as she saw me she told me her trouble: 'Mr. Gryce,' said she, 'I am in a great dilemma. Something has occurred in my family which may or may not lead to a lasting dishonor. What I wish from you is aid to determine whether our fears are well grounded. If they are not, you will forget that you were ever called to this house.' I bowed. I was already interested, for I saw that her anxiety was great, while I could not help being puzzled over its cause, for she had no son to disgrace her by his dissipations, and as for her husband, he was above reproach. She soon relieved my curiosity.

"'Mr. Gryce,' said she, 'I have a daughter.'

"'Yes,' I returned, inwardly startled. Miss A. and dishonor seemed so wide apart.

"Our Only Child."

"'She is our only child,' the mother went on. 'We love her, and have always cherished her, but though it is not generally known in this house'—and here the poor lady's eyes roamed about her as if she were afraid that her words would be overheard, 'she has left us; gone away without acquainting us where—suddenly, inexplicably, leaving only the most meager explanation behind her, and—and—'

"'But, madam,' I interrupted, 'if she left any explanation—'

"Mrs. A. took a small and crumpled note out of her pocket and handed it to me.

"'A letter,' she affirmed, 'sent through the mail. And I was in the house when she left, and would have listened to any reasonable request she had to make.'

"I had already read the four or five lines which the letter contained:

"'Dear Mother: I must have rest. I have gone away for a few days, but shall be back on the 27th. Don't worry.

"'Your affectionate ——.'

"'What is the matter with this?' I asked. 'She says she will be back on the 27th, and to-day is only the 24th.'

"'Sir,' was the answer, 'it is the only time in our experience when our daughter has left us without first gaining our permission. Besides, the time is especially inopportune. My daughter's wedding cards are out.'"

Mr. Gryce stopped suddenly, for Dr. Cameron had given an anxious start.

"Ah, that arouses your interest!" remarked the detective. "Your own wedding being so near, I am not surprised."

It was dryly said, and the doctor at once reseated himself. He had no wish to appear unduly moved, but he could not suppress every token of emotion, so he turned his head away from the light. Mr. Gryce let his gaze travel to a new object before proceeding.

Only One Conclusion.

"This avowal of Mrs. A. put a new aspect on affairs," said he, "but yet I saw no reason for the extreme anxiety displayed. 'And on what day does she expect to be married?' I asked.

"'On the 27th.'

"'But she says she will be back.'

"'That does not comfort me.'

"'You think she will not come.'

"'I have no hope that she will.'

"This acknowledgment was uttered with emphasis. There seemed to be but one conclusion to draw.

"'Your daughter wishes to escape her engagement?'

"The answer was less emphatic than before. In fact, it expressed doubt.

"'I do not know, sir; my daughter is not herself, has not been for some time. My husband and myself have both noticed it; but we never anticipated her taking any such extreme action as this. Where has she gone? What will become of her? How can we face the world? How can we tell her lover?'

"'Then you think——'

"'That she is laboring under a temporary aberration of mind, caused, perhaps, by the excitement of the last few weeks; that she is not responsible for her acts; that she may be anywhere, remote or near; and that we may wait till the hour set for her marriage is past without seeing her.'

"'To this I could make but one reply: 'Then why not take her lover into your confidence, inform him of your fears, and gain the benefit of his experience in your search for her?'

A MOTHER'S FEARS.

"'The answer will astonish you.

"'Because we are very proud and he is very proud. To explain our fears we should be obliged to say much that it would be humiliating for us to utter and for him to hear. Besides, we may overrate the situation. She may come back; as she says she will and, should this be the case, you can see for yourself what endless regret would follow any such confidences as you suggest.'

"'But'—I began.

"'It is this note that causes our dilemma,' she interposed. 'With these lines before me I can not act as if there were no hope of her returning in proper time to take her part in the ceremony. Yet I do not trust these lines, nor the promise she has made. Why, I can hardly say; for she has always been a woman of her word. But she is not herself, of that I am convinced.'

"This repetition of her former assertion made it easy for me to inquire what special change she had perceived in her daughter to lead to such a conclusion. She evidently found it difficult to reply.

"'I can not put it into words,' she declared. 'I feel the change.'

"'And how long have you felt it?'

"'Not long; since we began active preparations for her wedding, I think.'

"'And has no one else observed it?'

"'I can not say. I should think her lover would.'

"'Why?'

"'Because it has been in reference to him she has shown her peculiarities strongest. For weeks she has received him only on sufferance and for the last few days has more than once absolutely refused to see him.'

"And what reason did she assign for this?'

Prepared for Wedding.

"'Follies. Fatigue, caprice, a letter to write, a dressmaker to see—anything that came into her head.'

"Yet she went on preparing for her wedding?'

"'Certainly; her cards were out.'

"The tone in which this was said caused me to reflect. Though affable, kindly and even philanthropic in her dealings toward the world at large, Mrs. A. is, as every one knows, a woman who would find it very difficult to infringe upon any of the laws of society. Having seen her daughter pledge herself to a man of suitable pretensions, she would consider such a pledge final if only because she could not face the talk and scandal that would follow a rupture. Influenced by this idea, I remarked:

"'You must be perfectly frank with me if you want me to help you at this crisis. Has your daughter, or has she not, expressed a wish to break her engagement?'

"'She asked me once if I thought it too late for her to do so. Of course there was but one reply to this, and she said no more. But,' the poor mother continued hastily, 'that was only a symptom of flightiness. She has nothing against her lover, does not pretend to have.'

"'Only against marriage?'

"'Only against marriage.'

"'Mrs. A.,' I now boldly asked, 'do you think she loves the man you expect her to marry?'

"The answer came hesitatingly. 'She accepted his attentions with pleasure when they were first offered.'

"'Do you think she loves any other man?'

The mother shrank back in dismay. "I am sure she does not. How could she? There is not another such gentleman in our circle of acquaintance."

"This was flattering to the gentleman, but not exactly satisfactory to me.

"'You know girls sometimes take strange whims.'

"'My daughter is not a girl, she is a woman.'

"'This silenced me as it would you, sir, I have no doubt; and seeing the mother was really sincere in believing that her daughter's mind was temporarily affected, I inquired again as to what she had done or failed to do of late, and found that she had shunned the society of the members of her family as well as that of her lover, finding her sole interest seemingly in the preparation of her wardrobe. "To that she did attend,' said Mrs. A., 'and it was the only thing she did help me in. No hour was too late for her to see her dressmaker; no engagement too pressing for her to receive and fit on any of the new costumes that kept coming home. Indeed she showed more than a bride's usual interest in such matters; and it is the one reason I have for not disputing you utterly when you say she may come back. She will want to see her dresses.'

A Clew.

"'Then she did not take them with her?'

"'She took nothing.'

"'What! not a trunk?'

"'Nothing; that is, nothing but a little hand satchel.'

"'How do you know this?'

"'We all saw her go out; she was in shopping costume.'

"'But she had money?'

"'I can not say. Some, no doubt; but we found a large roll of bills in her drawer, and her father says it contains nearly all he had lately given her. I do not think her pocketbook held more than five dollars.'

"'This was a point. Either the girl was going amongst friends, or she was really touched in her mind. To make sure that the first supposition was not true, I asked for a list of the houses which Miss A. was in the habit of visiting. Mrs. A. mentioned some half-dozen, but added that her daughter's most intimate companion was in Europe and that she did not think she cared enough for the others to go to them at this time.

"'And she positively carried no baggage with her?'

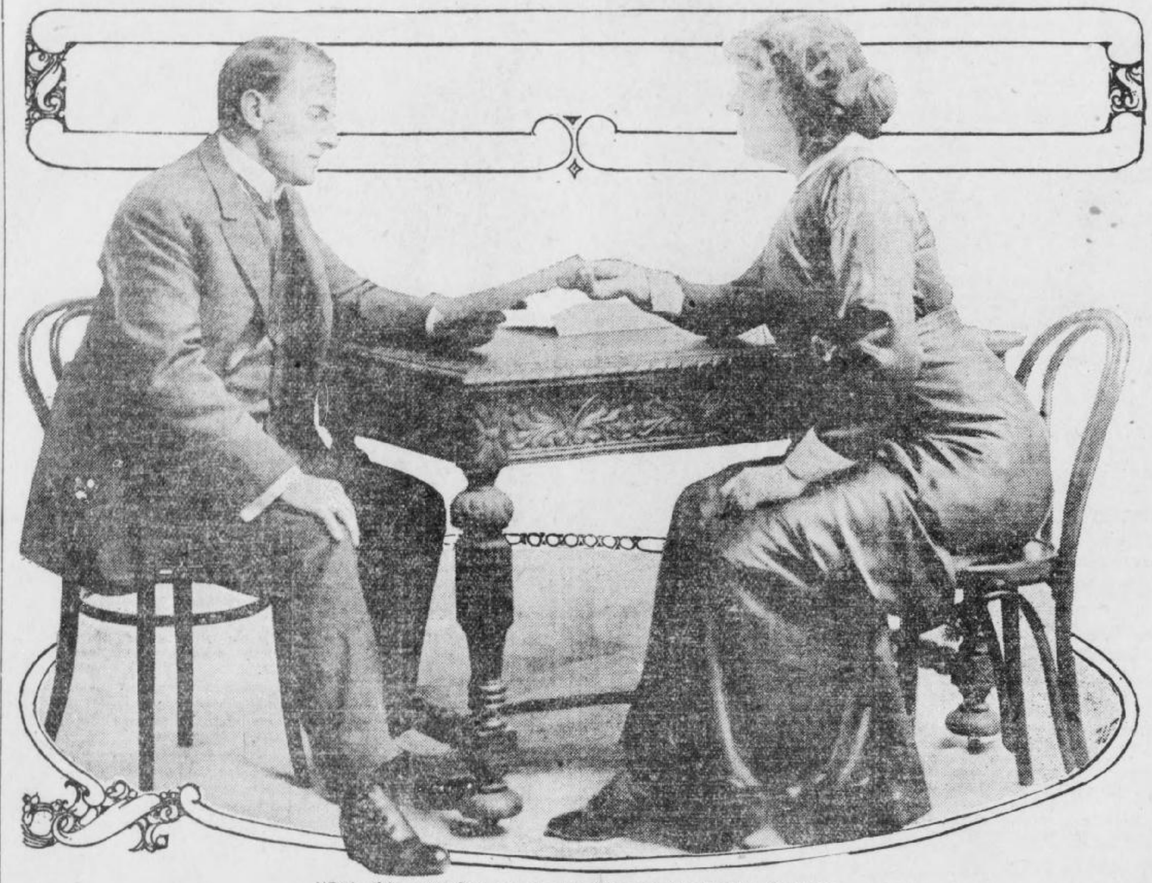

"'None. I have looked her things over carefully and find nothing missing. She did not even wear her diamonds.'

"'And her watch?'

"'Is left behind.'

THEIR MARRIED LIFE

Helen's First Day in the Paris Shops Results in Very Few Purcheses

By MABEL HERBERT URNER.

IT was the morning of their third day in Paris that Helen started out to shop. She had read and heard so much of the big Parisian bazaars that she was athrill with eager expectation.

"Better take in the Galeries Lafayette first," suggested Warren as they left the hotel together. "You can take a bus from there for the Bon Marche."

"Dear, wouldn't you have time to go by the Lafayette with me—it's only half past 9," pleaded Helen, who dreaded starting out alone.

"All right," good naturedly, "that's not much out of my way. Hurry up—let's get this bus."

It was going to be another hot day. There was still no relief from the heat wave that had settled over Paris since their arrival. But as Helen climbed gleefully to the top of the bus, the thought of the day in the Paris shops made her unmindful of the heat.

"There you are." Warren pointed out a huge building just ahead. From the top fluttered white banners and flags lettered gayly in red, "Galeries Lafayette." It looked more like a great exposition building than a store.

But when they left the bus, Helen was astonished to find that all along the sidewalk in front of the store were stalls, piled high with the cheapest kind of merchandise.

She Is Lonely.

There were tables of crockery, kitchenware, cotton dresses and waists, and around each was a chattering crowd of Frenchwomen pulling over the goods. Large cardboard signs—"50 centimes," "1 franc," "2 francs"—were everywhere.

"Why, dear, would you think they'd allow these push-cart peddlers outside a reputable store? Why, it's like a cheap market place!"

"They're not push-cart peddlers," laughed Warren. "This is all part of the Galeries Lafayette—that's how they sell their cheap goods. Our stores have bargain basements—here they have stalls outside the shop. Now I've got to leave you. Don't overdo it and get too tired. Better not be on your feet too much this hot day."

Helen's interest in the scene about her soon banished the momentary feeling of loneliness as Warren disappeared in the crowd. For some time she stood on the sidewalk watching the stalls and the chattering, pushing crowd about them. Warren was right. Unquestionably this was part of the store, for bareheaded French floor-walkers, with frock coats and twisted mustaches, walked up and down the sidewalk.

Although Helen had often heard that the Galeries Lafayette was one of the best Paris shops, this street sale of goods made her most skeptical. But when she entered, she saw that it was really a very beautiful store. In the center was a great rotunda under a crystal dome. An imposing marble staircase with double escalators led to the upper galleries.

Everywhere was a lavish and seemingly haphazard display of goods. It was all very different from a New York shop. There seemed no aisles, only a vast labyrinth of tables piled with goods in chaotic disorder—the most tawdry heaped carelessly with the most expensive. The confusing display of the great quantities of merchandise, the riot of color, the crowd, the uproar and tumult were to Helen most bewildering.

Hoping that the upper galleries would be less crowded and tumultuous, Helen made her way to the long line of elevators. Glancing over the directory of the floors, she located "Lingerie" and "Trousseaux."

French lingerie is a luxury coveted by every American woman, and as Helen stepped from the elevator at the third gallery into what seemed a great exhibition of white goods, her heart beat with expectation.

On every side was a network of tables and counters heaped with white garments—chemisettes, jupons and robes de nuites. Over the tables were cards with "Occasion" or "Grand Occasion," the French phrase for bargains.

Almost everything was hand embroidered and mostly unlaundered, the blue penciled tracing of the patterns being still distinct.

Helen was surprised to find that while even the cheapest garment, those as low as six or seven francs, were embroidered by hand, the garment itself was made by machinery, the seams carelessly stitched, and the buttons half off. She thought of the poor women in the convents where most of this work is done. How poorly paid they must be to embroider such inferior goods!

She looked first for some dainty, low-necked night dresses with short butterfly sleeves, but she saw only ungainly garments with high necks and long sleeves. Was this the much-lauded lingerie?

At last, in some glass cases, where the most expensive models were displayed, she found some exquisite low-neck short-sleeved gowns.

"How much? Quel prix?" Helen demanded of a passing clerk, pointing to a garment in the case.

The girl opened the case and looked at the ticket. Helen could not understand her, but, stooping over, she read the ticket herself—90 francs. Eighteen dollars!

Helen tried to make her understand with a few words of French, much English and many gestures that she wanted to see some gowns of that cut, but much less expensive. The girl touched a loud gong, which was a signal for an English-speaking clerk, and one promptly appeared.

"Almost all of our low-neck and short-sleeved gowns are in the expensive models," the clerk explained. "But of course we have some for less than 90 francs. Now here is quite a pretty gown for 35 francs."

Seven dollars! Except for her trousseau, Helen had never paid $7 for a nightgown in her life. And she had no intention of paying it in Paris, where she had expected to get things ridiculously cheap.

Only One Purchase.

"Well, I'll let the nightgowns go for the present, but I'd like to see some combinations and skirts."

"About what price does madam wish to pay?" asked the clerk, with lessening cordiality, for she expected Americans not to object to prices.

"About three or four dollars—fifteen or twenty francs."

"They're all out on the tables, madam. We keep only the more expensive ones in this department."

"But I could never button these," exclaimed Helen, viewing with disfavor the combinations, which all opened in the back. "And they're all too large—I want 34."

"You won't find bust measures in Paris like you have in America, madam. We have only three sizes here. You see, they're marked with tickets—the green ticket is small, the pink ticket medium and the yellow ticket large."

Helen expressed her astonishment that in Paris, where fit and style were supposed to be perfected, they should have only three sizes instead of the eight—from 32 to 46—that are carried by every American store!

The intention to buy enough lingerie while in Paris to last her for the next two years was somewhat shaken. And she finally left the department, having made just one purchase—a white skirt with a hand-embroidered flounce. Even this she could not get the right length. It would have to be shortened when she got it home.

From the lingerie, Helen walked down the broad marble staircase to the gallery below. Just at the foot of the stairs were a dozen or more tables overburdened with parasols. She had never seen so many parasols together in her life. Most of them were brilliant in coloring and design, vivid reds, bright greens and startling blues.

Farther on was a gorgeous display of scarfs—the long chiffon scarfs that the French women wear with their evening gowns. They lay in careless glittering heaps, shimmering with gold and silver spangles and iridescent beadings.

Helen had thought the hues and fabrics in the shops at home particularly loud this year, but they were mild and subdued compared with the riotous coloring of everything here.

In spite of the whirring electric fans the heat was excessive, and before Helen had explored half the departments of the Galeries Lafayette she was exhausted.

Although she had spent most of the day there, her purchases were trivial, but she had a fair idea of what a big Paris shop was like.

It was good to get back to their rooms, to have time to bathe, rest and dress before Warren came.

"Well, how did you get along?" was his greeting when he got in a little after 6. "Buy out all the Paris shops?"

"Not quite. I left a few things in the Galeries Lafayette! That was the only place I went."

"How did you find things? Cheaper than at home?"

"Some things are. But, dear, the styles and colorings are so extreme. Do you know," thoughtfully, "I really believe I can find the things I want better in New York."

"Course you can! Nothing's more overrated than the French styles. They are made for French women—not for Americans. And nine-tenths of the Americans who come over here and buy a lot of truck are blamed sick of their bargains when they get 'em home."

THE GEORGIAN'S MAGAZINE PAGE

The Finger of Death

A SPY has to take many risks, and if he is caught at the game during war time his career as a rule is then and there closed promptly, and in most cases in ignominious fashion.

It was the money aspect of the business which appealed to Morris Tyler, and induced him to engage in the work. He was a born spy. A good linguist, and cunning beyond belief, he was never one to assay a dangerous task for the sheer excitement of it. He did not like taking risks, though, of course, he had to take them occasionally; but always at these junctures he kept in mind the big pay and extras. It needed these to tune him up to concert pitch.

He was always cautious and successful. Having found it advisable to quit Europe for a time, he made his way to the South American Republic of Caldera which, at the date of his arrival, was just in the throes of one of its periodical revolutions.

He offered his services to the Government party at a rate of pay somewhat in excess of what he had been receiving in Europe, and President Blance having heard of him, and finding that he could speak Spanish fluently, engaged him at once.

But in Caldera, Morris Tyler had to work under new and unfamiliar conditions. Hitherto, his spying had been carried on during times of peace. There had been no war in Europe since he had come to the front. Now he found himself in the thick of fighting of a savage character. When the insurgents took any prisoners, they gave them the option of changing sides or being shot. But when the Government troops captured any rebels, they did not permit them any choice. They were placed in a row with their backs against a wall and promptly finished off by a firing party. By the time he had been three weeks at the "great game" as played in this explosive South American State, Morris Tyler was inclined to regret that he had not remained a passive spectator of the revolution, instead of taking part in it. However, he fortified his courage with the thought of the pile of dollars he would add to his banking account when the fighting was over and the rebels beaten. He had seen enough to feel pretty certain they had no real chance of winning. And so far he had not encountered any special danger; his cunning always enabled him to evade it.

No Avail.

But the day came when he discovered that cunning was of no avail, and that courage would have been a far more desirable possession.

He had been sent for by Colonel Voruba, the chief of the Intelligence Department, to whom he usually made his reports.

"Some rare work for you, Senor Tyler," observed the Colonel cheerfully, "and it may be the last service we shall require you to perform, for the revolution must end soon. Still, much will depend on the informtaion you are able to obtain for us."

Morris Tyler nodded, and waited for his chief to go on.

"The rebels are massed in some force on the Hill of San Stefano," pursued the Colonel, "where it seems they are going to make a last desperate stand. They hold the old fort up there. That much we know. But we do not know the number of their guns, nor how they are placed. It is important that we have this information before we storm the position, and we look to you to obtain it for us."

"Can you give me any further particulars, Colonel?"

"There are no further particulars to give you," replied Colonel Yoruba. "You know the road. The rest lies with you. I am instructed, however, to inform you that if you succeed in bringing us correct information, you will receive five hundred dollars over and above your pay. You must start at once.

By a curious freak of fate, there arrived at the headquarters of the Calderan army, twenty-four hours, later, a deserter from the rebel ranks, who was able to furnish the exact information which Colonel Voruba required.

Thereupon, an order was given for an immediate advance. This movement taking place so much sooner than was expected, would very likely put Morris Tyler in an extremely tight corner. But the life of one man was of small moment when so much was at stake. And a spy! Well, no one bothered much about a spy when he was not required. In the meantime, Tyler had contrived to get to the top of the Hill of San Stefano without being observed by the enemy's outposts or sentries.

He was, indeed, well within the circles of outposts when he reached an abandoned building, which at one time had been the boiler house of a sugar plantation. It seemed a safe hiding place, from the security of which he could observe what was going on in the rebels' camp without himself being seen. He crept inside and laid flat down upon the floor. About half a mile away he could see the camp fires glowing in the darkness, and nearer still the squat shape of the fort showing black against the night sky. Picturesque insurgents were passing to and fro, and a few were seated by the fires playing cards.

No Sleep.

After a time the camp became silent, even the card players giving up their games and stretching themselves out on the ground to sleep. Only sentries remained on the alert, but between him and the fort there were three. By no possibility could he get past them unseen, for it was open ground.

The night wore on. He was tired, but he dared not sleep. If he could only snatch a few minutes—just to rest his eyes——

He awoke with a start, and was about to spring to his feet when a harsh voice commanded him to remain still. At the other side of the chamber he saw an armed man—one of the rebels—standing with his rifle at the "ready."

"So! A spy!" exclaimed the man. "Bueno! It will be promotion for me for having discovered you. Don't move!" The rifle was raised threateningly. "If you so much as move a hand or a foot I will put a bullet through your brain. Yet I do not wish to waste ammunition. A rope is good enough for such as you."

He spat on the floor to typify his contempt for all spies. Then he called to the nearest sentry, telling him of his "find," and asking him to bring a rope. But the words had barely left his lips when there was a terrific crash overhead, a blinding flash of flame, the splitting of wood and the rattle of falling masonry.

A twelve-pound shell from a field gun had struck the building and reduced it to a ruin. It was the first shot fired by the Government artillery in their attack on the hill of San Stafano. The rebels were taken by surprise, became panic-stricken, and instead of shaping up to defend the position began a hasty retreat.

Moris Tyler was not immediately concerned with the running fight between the loyal troops and the rebels, for the sounds of strife drifted farther away each minute from the ruined boiler house. No other shot or shell came near it. But he was much concerned about himself. He could not move. He was pinned down by some timber from the fallen roof, and all around him was a wreck of shattered walls, broken planks and beams and debris which bore no likeness to anything in particular.

Fear!

"Luck's with me, after all," he murmured. "I am not hurt, and this beam is not too heavy for me to lift. I can raise it up and crawl."

He paused with a sort of gasp, for his eyes, roving around the place, had rested on a gleaming rifle barrel. It was pointed straight at his head, and there was a man's forefinger resting on the trigger. The man was the rebel who had captured him. He was lying on his face amidst the wreckage, and there was blood streaming from a terrible wound at the side of his head. A splinter of the bursting shell had killed him.

The spy gave a sigh of relief. For a moment he had thought that the man was alive, and was taking aim at him. But his relief was of short duration. He did not like that rifle pointing so steadily at him, even though it was only held in a dead man's hand; and when he saw that the lower end of the beam which was lying across his own body rested against the man's right forearm, he liked it still less. He could not move the beam upwards; he could only move it downwards or sideways. If he shifted it ever so little, it was bound to press more heavily on the dead rebel's arm, and that would cause his stiffened finger to press on the trigger, which would fire the rifle. The bullet would enter his—Tyler's—brain, because his head was so wedged that he could not move it to one side or the other. He could raise it a little, but that would be of no advantage. The bullet would take him then somewhere about the mouth and pass upwards through the base of his skull.

He shook with fear, like a man with the ague, and the sweat streamed down his face.

It was borne in upon the spy's mind that he might lie there until he died of starvation. There was the alternative of pushing the beam a little more, so that the dead man's finger should press harder on the trigger and thus end his misery with a bullet from the menacing rifle.

Then all at once something in his brain seemed to snap. A red curtain dropped before his eyes. The noise of a rushing wind howled in his ears—and then came black oblivion.

Early the next morning two mounted men reined up close by the ruined boiler house. They were Colonel Voruba and an orderly. The fight was over, and the rebels were beaten.

"Two men in there," said the Colonel. "They may have some life in them."

The orderly dismounted and peered in among the wreckage.

"One is a rebel," he reported. "The other is Senor Tyler. Both dead."

The Answer.

"The spy!" exclaimed the Colonel.

"It is strange," said Voruba, bending over Tyler's body, "there is not a mark upon him. He has received no wound, no hurt. He could easily have lifted this beam and extricated himself."

"Look at the expression on his face even now," replied the orderly. "It was sheer terror that killed him. I have heard of such a thing. Perhaps he had a weak heart."

"Terror!" Voruba raised his eyebrows. "Ah, yes, I perceive. The loaded rifle pointing at his head, which, at the slightest movement on his part would——"

Captain Berwick interrupted him. He had picked the rifle up and opened the breech.

"He was in no danger at any time from this weapon," he said. "It is not loaded!"

Did the Vicar Stop?

It was too much. Every Sunday old Adams, who blew the organ, would continue blowing after the music had stopped, thereby producing most undesirable sounds.

Time and again had the organist taken him to task for it.

"Right, mister," had been old Adams' invariable reply. "I forgits, you know."

One Sunday the organist could stand it no longer.

The congregation had been set tittering by the old man's forgetfulness, and during the sermon the organist seized the opportunity to write him a note on the matter, and handed it to a choir boy to deliver.

Misunderstanding the whispered directions, the lad handed the note straight up to the vicar, who astoundedly read the following:

"Will you stop when I tell you to? People come here to listen to my music, not to your horrible noise."

ON HER KITCHEN STOVE

It is interesting to note that the most successful remedy for woman's ills was originally prepared nearly forty years ago by Mrs. Lydia E. Pinkham, of Lynn, Mass., by steeping roots and herbs on her kitchen stove and supplied to friends and neighbors without cost. Its fame spread; the demand grew; until now many tons of roots and herbs are used each year in order to supply this famous remedy which has proved such a marvelous success in controlling diseases of women. Merit alone could have stood this test of time.

Lady Constance Stewart Richardson on How to Acquire a Beautiful Figure Through Dancing

Written Exclusively for the Readers of This Page.

In Poses Especially Adapted for the Accompanying Article.

Figure 1, shown in the topmost picture, shows the body poised on one foot.

A swaying exercise fully described by Lady Richardson's article brings about an easy control of the waist muscles.

Practice in this lesson will do more to reduce the waistline than any other fat-reducing method known to Lady Richardson.

Incidentally it produces naturally graceful movements when walking or running.

Figure 2 is a walking exercise that has a wonderfully beneficial effect upon the whole body.

Constant practice in this exercise makes it become as easy and natural to you as when a child skipping along the street.

It is Lady Richardson's claim that all these movements are but normal, simple, human expressions.

This style of dancing, says Lady Richardson, is good for the soul as well as the body.

This is the fourth of Lady Richardson's valuable articles on dancing as an aid to natural beauty.

Another will appear on this page next week, in which the student is carried along a little further, and into a trifle more difficult exercises.

This is the first time that any newspaper has presented a series of articles in which such expert instruction and advice are given on the value of practicing natural movements for the preservation of human grace and beauty.

By Lady Constance Stewart Richardson

Copyright, 1913, by International News Service.

DANCING is one of the most characteristic and characterful things I know. It expresses the individual and the nation in perfect accord with the feelings and customs that characterize him or it.

Take, for instance, the Hungarian Czardas, the Italian Tarantelle, or the Tango of Argentina—each is characteristic of its place and clime, and however well the peoples of another nation do the dance that is not their own they still must modify it to suit their own temperament.

A Perfect Outline.

If we take the best of the moderns and add to it the finest steps of the ancients and teach our result we will get as many variations as we have individual temperaments expressing the dance we have made.

If people will stop to think what a wonderful mode of expression the dance offers them, and will study it, its music and the effect of this expression on their own temperaments, they will no longer consider the dance and the body that expresses it as something to be despised, but they will give to the body, which is capable of beauty, its due of admiration and its right to beautiful expression, which will mean that one step toward lifting instead of degrading the human body will be definitely taken through the worship of loveliness.

To help you all make your bodies so perfect in outline, in strength and in power to respond to your desire to express emotion through the great safety valve of movement is my desire.

When dancing, look happy and as if you were dancing because you love to, and as if you were dancing because you love the particular step you are taking—not doing the fashionable thing some dancing teacher had assured you was the "proper way." Make one or two steps your own, and through them teach your body to express itself without shame or consciousness in perfect happiness and rhythm.

Figure One.

Dancing is a safe and sane form of self-expression, and it is good for body as well as soul.

In Figure 1 the body is poised on the ball of one foot, while the other is raised with the leg thrown slightly backward from the knee and the toes pointing downward. A straight line from flexed knee to the tip of the toes seems to be a favorite idea of grace, as depicted by the sculpture of the ancients, and as it adds to beauty of line the benefit of strengthening instep and ankle, it is one of the little separate movements that I often incorporate in my dancing steps.

To return to Figure 1—Bend slightly at the waist toward the uplifted leg and raise the arm above the head so there will be a continuous curve from elbow to toes. A flexible waist waits upon the earnest practice of this exercise.

From elbow to wrist the arm is bent above and toward the head, while the other arm, stretched lightly out from the shoulder and parallel with it, terminates in loosely flexed wrist and hand. Sway lightly from foot to foot, and see what easily controlled muscles of the waist result.

Figure Two.

Figure 2 pictures for you a walking exercise that has a wonderfully beneficial effect on the whole body. It is a natural bodily expression such as you have often seen little children drop into quite unconsciously.

Tiptoe along from foot to foot, with the raised limb flexed at the knee and held with down-pointing toe.

Bend the body well forward from the waist, and sway it toward the lifted foot, stretching the arm over this foot back and down and the other arm forward and as you would do in feeling your way along a solid surface in the dark.

Leg, arm and waist muscles are here brought into play—and when such simple, pretty, little exercises as this become indeed play you may feel sure that you are on your way to a body beautiful and graceful.

After all, just such dance movements as this are normal, simple, human expression, and out of them we can evolve natural grace of body and movement.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

LET YOUR HEART DECIDE.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am a girl of twenty. About two years ago I met a young man, and from that time until a month ago I loved him, but he did not return my love in the way I wanted, so I thought it would be best to forget him. I am now keeping company with another young man who is very serious. Two weeks ago the first young man wrote and told me he had found no girl he could love like me. DOROTHY.

You must take the one you love most, but before you make that decision be very fair with yourself. I know nothing of the merits of the two men, but it seems to me that the first is somewhat like the dog in the manger.

He did not seek your love till some other man's attentions made it desirable.

HE IS NOT SINCERE.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am nineteen, and in love with a man three years my senior. I am really crazy over him. I think the world of him, as I think he does the same of me.

It is nearly a year since we met and fell in love with each other. He asked me to be his bride. We were to be married in a short time, but now he has excuses for not getting married. He does not write as usual, but comes up as usual. P. G. Z.

The indications are he is trying to get out of it. Save your self-respect by breaking the engagement, for, believe me, it will never end in marriage. I am sorry, dear, but this course will save you greater pain later on.

THAT IS HIS PRIVILEGE.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am a young girl of seventeen and considered good looking. I have been keeping company with a young man for several months and at a dance one night I introduced a girl to him to whom he pays more attention than to me. NORAH.

There was no engagement. He was merely your friend. I hope, under the circumstances, you will be big enough, and broad enough, to be glad you were the means of introducing him to a girl whose company delights him. That's the way to look at it, my dear.

Handsome Mr. Slatte :: A SHORT STORY COMPLETE

"I SHOULD think you would read more," suggested the girl in the grass green linen gown as she came upon the porch.

"Oh, I don't know," responded the young woman in the wicker chair, who was busy embroidering. "This is just as satisfactory as most of the popular novels."

"It's every woman's duty to improve her mind," declared the girl in the green linen. "I feel that I have done so much since the corner drug store put in its circulating library. Mr. Slatte has been such a help!"

"Mr. Slatte?" queried her friend. "What has he to do with it?"

The girl in the green linen sighed faintly. "You know," she said, "I am not the sort of girl to rave over a man's good looks. I prefer brains any time. But, really, you never in your life saw any one who looked like Mr. Slatte! He——"

"He might look like anything with that name," commented the young woman who was embroidering. "Do you mean to say he is handsome?"

"More than that," said her friend. "He has the sort of eyes that pierce with their brilliance, and such a chin! My dear, every time I see him I am reminded of that stunning portrait of Lord Byron! I am certain there is a mystery about him! He has the most perfect manners!"

A Shock.

"Where——"

"Why, he's recently taken charge of the drug store," explained the girl in the green linen. "I had just picked out a book when he came up and said he couldn't bear to see me waste my time on such a tiresome story. He said he'd be only too glad to help me find something worth while that he knew I could appreciate. I thought it so kind——"

"Kind!" said the girl who was embroidering. "I think he was impertinent. I guess if I wanted a book I'd want what I wanted."

"You don't understand at all," exclaimed the girl in green linen, patiently. "Mr. Slatte is writing a novel himself, so of course he knows perfectly what—"

"My goodness! A drug clerk and a novelist!" said the girl who was embroidering.

Her friend bristled at this. "He's not a clerk!" she said. "He's a sort of—er—manager. People generally don't know he is so literary. You don't suppose that he wastes time on everybody who comes to get a book, do you? Not that he is especially interested in me, of course—only I suppose he realizes that I have more than average intelligence. I never saw such eyes in my life! Sometimes when he smiles in that slow, sad sort of way of his I——"

"Who puts up prescriptions while he is engaged in smiling sadly?" inquired the young woman who was embroidering.

"You are perfectly horrid!" said her friend. "If you knew Mr. Slatte you'd think differently. We have had some of the most inspiring talks since we met. He always drops whatever he is doing and helps me select my books. I'm a rapid reader and have to exchange books so often.

"I'm on my way there now to get another book. I do wish I could make you see what an opportunity it is, now that Mr. Slatte is there. He has such a cultivated mind—many times he has remarked what a treat it is to him to have someone come in who is different from the average careless reader."

A Rival.

"There comes Dorothy Maye," said the girl who was embroidering. "Come in, Dorothy," she called across the railing.

"I can't just now," said the girl in question, pausing at the steps. "I'm on my way to the drug store to take back a book. There's such a nice man in charge there now—perfectly stunning, and so kind. He's writing a book himself, too. He always stops whatever he is doing to come and help me pick out something good. He says it is a treat——"

"How nice!" enthusiastically interrupted the girl who was embroidering. "Alicia is here and she is going there, too——"

"No," said the girl in grass green linen shortly. "I am not going to the drug store! I am too busy to waste time over those trashy books and to hang around a silly clerk."

Untested.

"Yes, sir," said the successful manufacturer, "no man can sell his factory products these days unless they have been thoroughly tested."

"Oh, I don't know," replied another equally successful manufacturer. "We manage to sell our product without testing it."

"You do? What is your line?"

"Dynamite."

One Woman's Story

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

CHAPTER IX.

MARY smiled reassuringly into the anxious faces of her parents bending over her as she opened her eyes after a brief period of unconsciousness. She found herself lying upon the living room couch, her forehead wet from the water which her mother had applied in the effort to "bring her around." She struggled to a sitting posture, beginning at once to explain the attack of faintness which had seized her.

"I have been working a little too hard in this warm weather," she said. "I have not felt well lately, anyway, and this is but the culmination of the weariness and strain—nothing else."

She spoke no word of the news that had held her eyes waking far into the night, nor of the blessed relief of the knowledge that the man whom she had feared was injured or dead was alive and well.

"You won't try to go to school to-day, will you?" pleaded her mother.

The girl smiled.

"It is Saturday, mother," she reminded her. "But I must go down to the Public Library to look up some matters I want to be sure of before Monday. But I will take a cup of coffee first."

She drank this when her mother brought it to her, then arose with decision.

"I am ashamed of myself to be so weak and foolish," she exclaimed. "Please, dear people, try to forget it."

"Would you like to look over the morning paper?" asked her father, eyeing her keenly.

"No, thank you!" she said quickly. "Thank you, mother, for waiting so sweetly on your silly daughter. I will go to bed early to-night and not repeat this performance of fainting. I never did such a thing quite so causelessly and suddenly before in my life."

When she had left the living room, the father and mother gazed again into each other's faces.

"The fact that she avoids the subject that made her faint shows that she cares for this young man," declared the mother. "Well, he is a nice fellow, I guess."

"I don't care how nice he is," retorted the father, "he is not half good enough for my girl. Before I consent to any serious attentions from him I am going to write to his firm and find what his record is."

"That's all right, dear," agreed the wife indulgently. "I approve of your doing that. But if the Angel Gabriel—trumpet and all—were to ask you for Mary you would not think him good enough for her."

"And he wouldn't be!" asserted the father, without a smile.

The most tender mother is willing—even, at times, glad—to have her daughter marry an honorable, well-to-do gentleman; a fond father seldom looks with favor upon any suitor for his daughter's hand.

An hour later Mary appeared in her mother's room, her hat and gloves on, ready to go out. Mrs. Danforth looked solicitously at her, but, seeing that the color had returned to her lips, she forbore to utter any protest. If the child was restless it was better to let her go. In the library she might find the books she needed for her work, they might quiet her nerves, turning her thoughts from agitating subjects.

Mrs. Danforth would have been surprised could she have seen her daughter when she reached her destination. Instead of going at once in search of the volumes in which she was to "look up" certain important subjects, she went direct to the reading room of the library and was in a few minutes immersed in the morning papers. A close observer would have noticed that the only columns she read were those dealing with the recent railroad wreck and the deeds of heroism of the various uninjured passengers—the most active and bravest of whom had evidently been "the young Texan, Gordon Craig by name." As the girl read, her cheeks glowed and a soft light came to her eyes. So absorbed was she in her dreams, that she was leaving the building before she remembered that in her wrist-bag she carried a list of books of reference which she must find this morning, and, with a start, went in search of these. Somehow all literature except the newspapers seemed very dull to-day.

As it was Saturday, Mr. Danforth came home at noontime, and was there when his daughter returned a little before the luncheon hour. He greeted her brightly.

"Well!" she said jocosely, "I saw our hero this morning! Craig was at my office. He ran in to tell me that he was all right and to ask if we had seen the account of the wreck. I told him that we had, but I did not flatter him by telling him we had been badly scared about him."

Mary drew a sigh of relief. She had feared her father might mention her evident anxiety, then she reminded herself that she might have known he would not. She waited for his next remark. Although she had read and re-read the newspaper accounts of Craig's heroism, she hoped to hear more about it by word of mouth. Her father answered her unspoken thought.

"He said little about himself," he went on, "and I liked him better for that. When I said that I understood he had done some pretty fine work he turned as red as a lobster and said—'It was only what any man would have done under the circumstances,' and changed the subject. So I let it drop. I asked him to come up and see us before he goes back to Texas, and he said he would try to."

"Probably he will not find time to," said Mary with studied indifference. She began to talk vivaciously of her work, of the approaching school commencement, of anything and everything except of Gordon Craig. And her father and mother, watching her, understood.

That afternoon a messenger left at her door a note for her. It was short:

"Dear Miss Danforth: Will you give me the happiness of your company to the opera next Wednesday night? I will call for you at a quarter before eight. The performance is 'Aida.'

"Faithfully yours,
"GORDON CRAIG."

The reply that the messenger carried back to Craig was even more brief than the note he had brought:

"My Dear Mr. Craig: Thank you. I will be ready at 7:45 Wednesday night.
"Sincerely yours,
"MARY DANFORTH."

A Frank Talk on Typewriters

Somehow, the impression has gained ground that there isn't much difference between the various makes of typewriters on the market.

You may think the same thing. It would take a good, SOUND, LOGICAL argument to convince you that all typewriters do not have the same efficiency and that a stenographer cannot secure the same results on every machine.

We are ready to make that argument and to show you by actual demonstration that

The L. C. Smith & Bros. Typewriter

will do more work, better work, with less fatigue to the stenographer, than any writing machine ever made.

How is this possible?

Here are a few reasons:

1. It is ball bearing throughout—others are not.
2. All operations are controlled from the keyboard.
3. It is the lightest touch machine made.
4. It does not "smut" the carbon.
5. The ribbon reverses automatically.
6. The type is so protected that it is not battered by collision.
7. One motion of the hand returns the carriage and operates the line space.
8. It has an inbuilt biller and tabulator.
9. No trouble to write on paper as small as a postage stamp.
10. It is built for service.

FIVE TEAMS TO BATTLE IN RACE FOR 30 MINUTES

Big Thriller Slated for Motor Bugs at Prince's Saucer on Tuesday Night.

A HALF-HOUR team race is to be the big feature at the Motordrome to-morrow night, and for the really jammy excitement this should ton anything that has been staged yet at Jack Prince's saucer.

Five teams will be in the long grind. And what a wrangle the ten riders had trying to get matched up! Finally Morty Graves suggested that the partners be found by a drawing. Manager Noon Hudson put all the numbers in his new straw lid and the result was:

Graves and McNeil, Schwartz and Lockner, Shields and Richards, Luther and Lewis, Renel and Glenn.

These teams appear to be very evenly matched. Graves and McNeil will probably rule favorites, with Richards and Shields second choice.

No rider will be allowed to remain on the track over twenty successive minutes. But each rider can call for his partner as often as he desires. The partners who are not racing will remain in front of the paddock. The partner riding must drop off the track and touch his teammate on the shoulder before the latter can take up the racing.

It sure will be a thrilling event if all goes well.

The Motordrome Sweepstakes is the second feature event. All the riders will start, five in each qualifying heat. The qualifying heats will be over a one-mile course, while the final will be two miles.

Harry Glenn, who defeated Schwartz the other night, will meet Luther in a match race. It will be the two best heats in three over a two-mile circuit. Glenn is a local boy and he will be backed heavily to down his worthy opponent.

* * *

FOLLOWING is the complete card for Tuesday night:

First Event.

First heat Motordrome Sweepstakes (One mile to qualify and two-mile final.) Starters—Graves, Shields, Richards, Renel, Lewis.

Second Event.

First heat of a match race between Glenn and Luther. (Race to be two best heats in three.) Distance—two miles.

Third Event.

Second heat of Motordrome Sweepstakes. Starters—Schwartz, Lockner, Luther, McNeil, Glenn.

Fourth Event.

Second heat of match race between Glenn and Luther.

Fifth Event.

Final heat of Motordrome Sweepstakes. (Winners of first and second heats and second man in fastest heat to start.)

Sixth Event.

Third heat of match race between Glenn and Luther, if necessary.

Seventh Event.

Half-hour team race. Teams—Graves and McNeil; Schwartz and Lockner; Shields and Richards; Luther and Lewis; Renel and Glenn. (No rider can remain on track over twenty consecutive minutes.)

Wolgast and Ritchie May Sign Articles

LOS ANGELES, July 28.—Eager to nail down Ad Wolgast to his offer—a $25,000 side bet for a return match—Willie Ritchie to-day is making a desperate effort to get the former titleholder to meet him to-day and sign articles. On Saturday, Wolgast posted with James J. Jeffries $1,000, part of a $25,000 side bet, in a twenty-round title contest with Ritchie. Wolgast specified that half is to go that he will from the title-holder in twenty rounds, the other half that he knocks out, stop or force Ritchie to sit inside of the limit.

Ritchie lost no time in accepting the offer when he learned that there was seriousness to Ad's movements, and he asked Jeffries to affect a meeting between he and Ad for this afternoon in the hope that articles might be signed. Ritchie leaves here for 'risco Wednesday afternoon and he would like to close the match before starting. Should the pair come together they will clash either September 1 or 9

Pelky in No Hurry to Fight

Theatrical Tour Awaits Champ

By W. W. Naughton.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 28.—Arthur Pelky, the new white heavyweight champion, possesses most of the facial characteristics of the professional pugilist, but it can scarcely be said that he has a fighting eye.

Now, do not misunderstand me. There is nothing in Pelky's look to suggest that he is lacking in courage, but, sizing him up as he sat in my den yesterday, I could not help thinking how different he was from other brand-new champions I had known. In most cases the eye of a freshly-fledged champ glints with a mixture of pride and defiance. If looks could be construed into words the look to which I refer would read, "I can lick anything that walks in two shoes."

Pelky's eyes are large and dark—the eyes of a man who broods. To me it almost seemed as if the shadow of that fearful experience he had in the ring at Calgary was still upon him. The suspicion was confirmed by his evident reluctance to talk about the recent past and his palpable inclination to talk about ringmen other than himself. To the majority of champions the recital of how they won their spurs gives unbounded pleasure. To Pelky the recollection brings a shudder.

* * *

PELKY is tall, squarely built and has a strong jaw and large, firmly-knit hands. He is big enough to tackle anything in human shape. He is here with Tommy Burns, once world's champion in his own right, but now fallen into flesh and quite content to be known as a connoisseur.

Tommy is Pelky's manager, and the manner in which Burns discovered that Pelky was worth managing was not the least interesting thing he had to tell. Pelky went to Calgary to box six rounds with Burns. While the affair was in progress the beauties of Pelky's character as a fighter unfolded to Tommy. At the end of the bout Tommy was all in, and an hour later Tommy was Pelky's manager.

"We are in no hurry to make matches," said Burns. "We have twelve weeks' work in the theaters, beginning at Pantages next week, and in the meantime the Gunboat Smith-Jim Flynn match will be decided and the winner will stand forth as a challenger of Pelky. If Smith wins, and I think he will——"

"Pardon me," said Pelky in a soft-voiced way. "I think Flynn will defeat Smith."

"Well, anyway, you'll be ready to sign with the winner," resumed Tommy.

"And if it is Smith you'll like it all the better. You have always wanted to box him, haven't you?"

Pelky nodded his approval.

* * *

BURNS and Pelky were reminded that Sam Langford, the negro pugilist, is back from Australia, and were asked how overtures for a Pelky-Langford match would be regarded.

"I want it to be understood, that I will never box a colored man," said Pelky. "Some time ago, when the promoters of the country decided to discourage the making of mixed matches and contests were arranged to decide who was the white heavyweight champion, I thought it one of the best moves ever made in pugilism. I am still of that way of thinking. I call myself the white champion, and feel that I have every right to do so, but if the public took the stand that I ought to accept matches with negroes, I'd be willing to drop out of the game entirely."

* * *

"I THINK he's right," said Burns. "Of course I fought a negro when I met Jack Johnson, but if I had my time to go over again he would wait a long time for a match. To tell the truth, I never wanted to fight Johnson. I was offered big money by the National Club of London, and I turned it down. When I went to Australia and the question came up again, I said that I wanted every cent of $30,000 before I'd go into the ring with Johnson. It was a lot of money, but McIntosh produced it, and then there was no getting out of it, so far as I was concerned.

"And talking of public opinion in such matters, I have lived to learn that a fighter should not lay too much stress upon public opinion. It shifts and veers too much. Before I boxed Johnson I used to receive letters taunting me with being afraid to meet the negro. After I went against him and lost my title the letters still came in. But their tone had changed. I was reviled for having given a negro a chance at the championship."

* * *

WHEN matchmaking is in order, it is just possible that a trip to Australia will be included in the Burns-Pelky itinerary. In response to a message from out yonder, Burns has cabled that Pelky will be willing to take the journey and engage in a series of three fights.

Tommy has named as possible opponents for Pelky: Jim Flynn, Jess Willard, Jim Coffey, Al Palzer and Gunboat Smith.

B. JOHNSON'S RAGE.

(In one week.)

FIRST DAY.

THE Magnate tore his seldom hair
And roared in fearsome rage:
"What's this? Ye gods; What this I lamp upon the sporting page?
Jake Stahl is canned—my own pick—Jake!
Oh, gimme room to cuss!
I'll show those Boston guys they can't
Make us ridiculous!"

THIRD DAY.

The Magnate speeded to the West—
The wild news speeded, too;
In Cleveland he was cornered by Reporters quite a few.
"Ahem!" he said. "About Jake Stahl—
I do not care to state
My full conclusions at this time—
I must investigate."

SEVENTH DAY.

At last he makes his lakeside home;
And Fandom stands agog
To watch the mighty geewiz put
Those ingrates on the hog!
And now the crushing sentence comes—
With quite some 'pshaw" and "pish"—
"In this I can not interfere.
E'en if I had the wish!"

JIM FLYNN says without a smile that he is "going to train" for his fight with Gunboat Smith.

BROWN COMES BACK, HURLS IN OLD-TIME FORM

MORDECAI BROWN is not through. In fact, it looks as if Manager Joe Tinker, of the Reds, said very true words when in the spring he claimed that the three-fingered wonder still had a lot of good baseball left in him. True, Brown is not hurling the kind of ball he did several seasons ago, but just the same, Johnny Evers could use him at present, and to good advantage.

After Brown had helped the Cubs to four pennants and two world's championships, his arm went to the bad in 1912. When the off season came, C. Webb Murphy thought he would not need the three-fingered boy any more, and shipped him to the minors.

But Joe Tinker, new manager of the Reds, thought different. Joe was with "Brownie" a long time, and when he was shipped to the A. A., he and Garry Herrmann arranged a deal whereby Miner would come back to the National League. And it looks as if they made no error in securing Brown.

Beats Old Mates Twice.

Maybe now C. Webb Murphy and Johnny Evers see they made a big mistake in releasing the former star of the Cubs. Recently when the Reds were playing the Bruins, the three-fingered hurler took a pair of games from Johnny Evers' gang, one of them being a shutout, in which only six base knocks were made off him.

When Tinker secured Brown, it was for the simple reason to use him as a coach for his young moundmen. He was carried until May 1 before he made his appearance on the firing line. Since the hot weather arrived, though, Brown's good right arm seems to be as good as ever, and he is taking his regular turn on the mound for his club.

Has Good Record.

Although Brown is not winning as regular or working quite as often as he did a few years back, he has a record which is far better than the one owned by his club.

Miner has won seven games and lost six this campaign. That's a percentage of .538. The Reds own a mark of .380, so it can be seen that Brownie is 158 points ahead of his team.

So far this season Brown has appeared in 22 games, being used as a relief hurler most of the time. In these 22 contests he has worked 95 innings.

MAGNATE REFUSES TO OBEY COMMISSION'S RULING

LOS ANGELES, CAL., July 28.—Henry Berry, president of the Los Angeles baseball club of the Coast League, said to-day he would not obey the baseball law which forbids a class AA team to carry more than twenty players in the middle of the season.

"If the National Commission decided that I should pay a fine I will not do it," said Berry.

Charles Arbogast, a catcher, is expected to join the Los Angeles team to-morrow. This would make 21 players. Berry declared to-day he would not release any of the old men for the reason that three of his players were in the hospital.

Cross-Baldwin Battle To-morrow

Matty Has Great Ring Record

By Harry Gilmore, Jr.

LOS ANGELES, CAL., July 28.—Next in line on the Vernon fistic slate is the twenty-round engagement to-morrow night between Matty Baldwin, of Boston, and Leach Cross, of New York City. What better fistic offering could be asked, barring an immediate championship encounter with Willie Ritchie as one of the principals, than those two crack Eastern lightweights?

Cross and Baldwin have long since been bitter rivals, and after repeated efforts on the part of Eastern promoters to bring them together without avail, they will now settle the old score with twenty rounds in which to bring about a result which should be decisive. Cross has forever found the Bostonian a thorn in his side, and carefully analyzing their respective records it seems he might well have found him a formidable foe.

* * *

BALDWIN has had in excess of 150 fights in the eleven years in which he has been in the ring, and has met the best of the lightweights of recent years, barring the old warrior, Bat Nelson. Baldwin won and lost a 12-round decision to Owen Moran in January and February, respectively, of 1910, when Moran was at his best. He had previously drawn in limited bouts with Tommy Murphy and Abe Attell in New York City, when the foxy Abe and the Harlem scrapper were at the zenith of their careers. He lost to Cross on a foul, in eight rounds, May 13, 1910, in New York City, when, it is claimed, he had Cross beaten and practically out. Baldwin visited the coast just two years ago and took Freddie Welsh for twenty rounds at San Francisco, June 23, losing the decision after going the limit. Only two months later he was returned a winner, in the twentieth round over the now present champion, Willie Ritchie. In April of 1911 he met Cross for ten rounds in New York, and although a no-decision affair, the press awarded Baldwin the verdict. Baldwin has since drawn with Joe Mandot, and is credited with a fairly even ten rounds just recently with Jack Britton, while best of all, his last engagement, a decisive win over Young Shugrue in New York, speaks his praises. Shugrue took a decision from Cross some months before the latter came West for the Anderson engagement, so on the dope the Boston boy figures very strongly against his Leaches.

* * *

MATTY has completed training for the bout, and shows a confidence that inspires some of the Cross adherents to believe that there is indeed a doubtful chance for their entry; and, from present indications, the getting price will be a pretty even thing.

"I know Cross and his fighting style about as well as any one of the fighters who have met him," said Baldwin in discussing the match. "He knows that I have little fear of any of the wallops that he carries, and when it comes to the rough stuff that is where I have his number, and he knows it. When I took him on in New York I had him bad, and would have finished him had it been a longer bout. With twenty rounds to go, I am satisfied that I can land a decisive victory, and then I want the chance that I have hoped for to clash with Ritchie for the championship."

SWEENEY WILL GET $50 FOR LONG HIT SATURDAY

NEW YORK, July 28.—Ed Sweeney, the big catcher of the Yankees, who had been out of the game on account of injury, won $50 Saturday by hitting the "bull" sign in right field with a fairly batted fly ball. This is the first time the feat has been accomplished since the new Brush stadium was built.

CRACKERS FACE HARD FINISH AFTER GULLS

Five Games in Three Days at Home, Then the Final Road Trip.

By O. B. Keeler.

SO, THERE YOU ARE!

Oh, something's got into the eyes of the Crackers,
A-smoking the lamps of our sterling pill-whackers;
Long, agonized shrieks emanate from their backers
Far, away in the distance a-viewing it;
We can't get a line on their recent futility;
We know they are swatters of sterling ability,
Who pepper the pill with excessive virility—
Butthehelofitistheyain'tdoingit!

* * *

DESPITE the charitable interference of the weather man on a number of occasions, our brave la-a-ads (tremolo stop) continue to skid recklessly toward the second division. Only the Barons remain betwixt them and the lid, which position is thinly occupied by the dejected Lookouts.

It would be entirely possible, depending on what happens to Birmingham and Chattanooga, for the Crackers to detrain in this town Thursday, installed as leaders of the basement quartet.

Of course, the Gulls and their doings cut the deepest into the calculations. They have been tough for the Crackers all season, and, with the race in its present scrambled condition, there is no reason to suspect they will suddenly become docile.

Passing over the Gulls with a respectful nod, then, it may be just as well to look over the remaining prospects of the season.

* * *

NO matter in what shape the Smithmen return Thursday, they will confront the proposition of taking on the Volunteers for five games in three days, the same being Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

The situation of the Vols in the league standing is not dignified enough to inspire much reverence. But it must be recalled that Schwartz has some raw material on hand which he naturally will be eager to shoot. And some of it may be loaded.

Then there is the question of two-ply entertainments.

In the face of what happened recently in Montgomery, we insist that the conventional method of prorating a double bill is for each side to take one. And that is precisely what the Crackers do not require just now—and won't require the latter part of this week.

Five or six games back of the lead, Bill Smith's hands need two out of three from now on—and a shade more wouldn't hurt.

One double-header is regularly scheduled for Friday afternoon. The league program is responsible for that. Then there is a tie contest holding over from the last visit of the Vols. That probably will be shot off Thursday, by way of openers.

Anyway, if the sky can be caulked, there's a furious little series booked for the last three days in this week.

* * *

THEN the Crackers hit the "Trail of the Lonesome Nine" once more.

Chattanooga first, for three games, August 4, 5 and 6. Then the final visit to Nashville, which may witness the playing off of the well known disputed contest earlier in the season. The closing road games of the season of 1913 will be played in Birmingham, August 11, 12 and 13.

* * *

HOME again, for a little house party at which every club in the league will be on the guest list except Nashville.

There are 22 games scheduled for the grand finale, and four tied or postponed affairs. They will be played in this order: Chattanooga 4; Birmingham 3; New Orleans 6; Mobile 4; and Chattanooga again for one game, September 6.

But in the meantime, there is Mobile.

* * *

AND it is possible that Billy Smith was figuring on that long home wind-up, with the chance to land the flag in a grueling finish, when he signed the giant southpaw, Love, leading slabman of the Cotton States League.

Love will make the third fork-hander on the Cracker firing line. With an equal number of right-handers, Billy can settle down on the home lot and dare all of 'em to knock off the chip. It won't make much difference whether the opposition sports a majority of portsiders or not. Bill will be loaded for both kinds of game.

* * *

THE new cock-eye is six and a half feet long and comes up with a savory reputation that includes 20 firsts out of 29 starts in the Cotton States. He has a no-hit, no-run game on his list, and four consecutive shut-outs, in the directing of which he issued only three bases on balls. Control is said to be his best bet.

That sounds encouraging, anyway.

POOR ABIE IS THROUGH; HAS LITTLE CLASS LEFT

NEW YORK, July 28.—Abie Attell had better give up the Queensberry pastime. Abe has something left in the ducking and the nodding of the head in getting away from some wicked punches, but that is about all.

His latest opponent was Willie Beecher, the well-known mitt man of the East Side, and the contest took place at the Atlantic Athletic Club of Rockaway. There was a rather good gathering of the fight fans. They were of the opinion that Abe would hand out some of that old championship stuff that made him famous in the days of long ago. The person who suffered the most at the bout was Referee Draycott. Abe's judgment of distance was bad in the fifth, sixth and eighth rounds, and he whanged the judge three times.

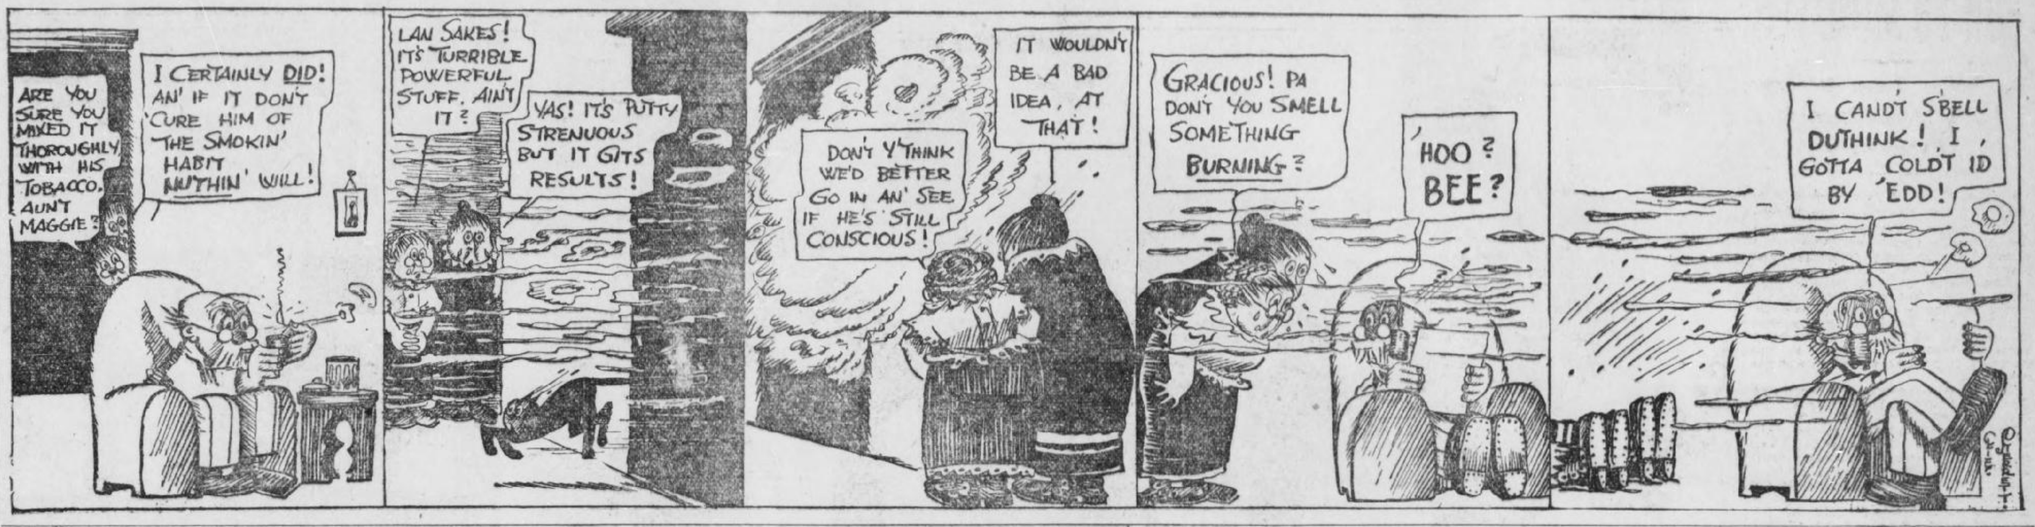

The winner of the bout was Beecher. The latter, after finding out that Attell was not there any more, chased Abe around the ring, and Beecher had a difficult time in catching his opponent. Beecher did his best work in the sixth and seventh rounds. From the fifth round to the finish, Beecher was the busy man and he had enough lead in the first five to give him the fight. All that Abe had was a bad lip as he came out of the ring.

VETERAN COACH GREAT HELP TO JOE BOEHLING

By Senator.

WASHINGTON, July 28.—Quiet, observing everything, but saying little, always ready with a cheering word for some youngster to turn a rebuke into a joke, Jack Ryan, the veteran backstop and scout, is one of the uplifting influences among the Washington Senators. He isn't going around with banners flying, proclaiming his deeds from every housetop, but he is the man who has made it possible for Joe Boehling to pitch winning ball.

After much haggling to no end, the writer succeeded in getting Ryan to explain the system he has taught Boehling and is now teaching Joe Engel. He belittled even that system, notwithstanding Boehling's success since he began following the veteran's advice.

"It's a simple thing," finally broke out Ryan. "I began teaching those two kids this spring at Charlottesville. They were wild as hawks and careless of following directions. I noticed that all they ever did when they went into the box was to wind up and let her go. They didn't take even enough time to see where the plate was.

* * *

"SO I said to Boehling one day: 'Take your time. Think about every ball you pitch. Try to do something with it. Aim at something. Pay the closest attention to your stride. Then you will get control, and that's all you need to ge a good pitcher.'

"Well, at first Boehling couldn't understand these directions. He would forget what he had to do. Griff kept me working with him constantly, however, and finally I got Joe where he could think of all these things at the same time. Immediately he began to pitch winning ball, and he will continue just so long as he follows those directions.

"It was the same way with Engel. He is fully equipped to be a winning pitcher. I never saw a better-looking youngster in baseball. But he didn't know anything about his job. He never considered what he had to do. He pitched into the stride used by the other pitcher, even if it were two feet short of his own. It was impossible for him to win that way. He couldn't get his 'stuff' on the ball. I kept insisting on his using proper stride and thinking about every ball that left his hand. That's all pitching amounts to, granting that you have speed and a curve ball. But it was hard for those kids to understand this, and it took a lot of time before they got it to their heads.'

And this is all that Jack Ryan has to say about his making two good pitchers for the Climbers.

* * *

WHEN you think it over, Ryan ought to be a wise counselor for young fellows. He has been in baseball 28 years, starting when a mere kid. In all that time he has never learned to drink or smoke. His personal habits are irreproachable, his example for young players a thing for the gods. Manager Griffith could not have ogtained a better coach for his youngsters. Seldom does he use a harsh word, never a profane. Never does he criticise a player on any other team.

Ryan's last active service was as manager of the Jersey City club of the Eastern, now the International League. There he worked behind the bat regularly, always maintaining a high average. He broke in with the Baltimore team when it was composed of thugs and knockout men. Always quiet, he had to fight to remain with the Orioles. And he fought and stayed. Later he saw several years of service under Frank Selee on the Boston club. He was captain of the Detroit American League team in 1902, finally drifting to the minors, where he managed several teams, ending with Jersey City.

ALPERMAN HAS APPENDIX CUT; OUT FOR A YEAR

MOBILE, ALA., July 28.—Whitey Alperman, field captain and second baseman of the Crackers, was operated on this noon in a local hospital for appendicitis.

As a result of the operation, Alperman will not be able to play again this season. This is a severe blow to Manager Billy Smith, as it practically kills whatever chance the Atlanta team has of winning the pennant.

Alperman was out of the game yesterday. He complained of severe pains in his right side. Last night a local physician was called, but was unable to diagnose the case until this morning.

Manush will probably cover the keystone sack the remainder of the season.

Every time a fight manager offers to bet $10,000 one is led to wonder whether Confederate money still is being used.

A doctor having discovered that no bones are broken in Heinie Zim's ankle, the inference is that his ankle bones are made of the same substance as his head.

An X-Ray examination of the Great Zim reveals the fact that his temperament is suffering from a malignant attack of gout.

The latest scandal in the Sport of Kings in England merely reflects the spirit of the times. A king these days is looked upon generally as a nine-spot.

It is claimed in England that the prevalence of foul riding there is due to the American style of wearing short stirrups. Even our English brethren have learned to pass the buck.

Bill Peet, a Washington scout, says he discovered Joe Boehling, and seven American League teams have discovered that Bill Peet is some discoverer.

Suggestion to Milwaukee sporting editors: Why not organize a few boxing clubs?

It still is early to pass judgment on Laverne Chappelle, but up to date he has earned approximately $1.75 of his purchase price.

How Fogel Will Wreck Majors

Dryden Makes Big "Discovery"

Charles Dryden.

HONORABLE HORACE FOGEL is getting ready to absorb both big circuits and put the magnates on the bum. He has said it, and what Horace says goes. As the present major leagues are a joke, Horace will start a lieutenant-colonel league for a change, grabbing off all the star talent now employed grinding out the national pastime.

The new organization should be accomplished without much trouble. Mr. Fogel talked himself out of the old league, and he is now engaged asking himself into the new one, or lieutenant-colonel league, to distinguish it from the old majors. Horace has his towns for the circuit booked out already yet once. They are New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Pittsburg, Cleveland, Chicago and St. Louis. That makes seven, and they need one more. The eighth city will be either Boston, Indianapolis or Kansas City. If Horace included both Boston and Kansas City, look what a fine jump the athletes would have from Boston to play a Sunday game at Kansas City.

Backers of New League Named.

The financial backers of the lieutenant-colonel league are said to be Otto Steifel, of St. Louis, and Jeff Livingston, the well-known pickle expert of Cincinnati. Mr. Steifel is behind the Federal League at St. Louis, and Mr. Livingston is in the pickle and tomato ketchup line at Cincy. They are to furnish the money, and Horace will supply the words. It is claimed that Horace has landed all the stars worth having in the two major circuits, but the statement is discredited, because Tom Needham has not been signed by the lieutenant-colonels. We are inclined to believe that if there were anything in the new organization, Mr. Needham would not have been overlooked. If Tom is not a star, where could they find one?

Be that as it may, the lieutenant-colonel league will be in full operation next spring, and the magnates of the two so-called major leagues will be begging for peanut concessions and hot dog stands in the parks of the new baseball body. They made a goat of Horace, and now he is getting back at them.

His Investigation Sidetracked.

His investigation of the trust was sidetracked, and just for that the National and American must get out of business for all time. By next Fourth of July we will hear of Pittsburg, New York and Cleveland selling their new steel stands for old iron. It is an awful picture to contemplate, but the magnates showed Horace no mercy, and he is determined not to spare them in the hour of retribution. Otherwise Horace is a mighty good fellow.

P. S.—Mr. Fogel has prepared an advance statement of 8,000 words in reference to the new league, which statement was to have been released simultaneously with a lot of papers on July 7.

Double P. S.—We do not know why the statement was not released on July 7.

WELLS TO BOX MOIR.

NEW YORK, July 28.—Bombardier Wells, English heavyweight champion, has been signed to meet Gunner Moir in a twenty-round bout at the Canterbury Music Hall in London September 3. Wells is signed to box twenty rounds with Bandsman Rice, another English heavyweight, in London on September 17.

CLABBY VS. PAPKE.

DENVER, COLO., July 25.—Articles have been signed for a ten-round bout between Jimmy Clabby, the Milwaukee middleweight, and Billy Papke, of Kewanee, Ill., to be held at the Denver A. C. on August 11.

GULLS DRAW THOMPSON IN GAME TO-DAY

By Joe Agler.

MOBILE, ALA., July 28.—The Gulls, ably assisted by a person named Monk, who was not in uniform, managed to cop the jump game of this series yesterday in spite of a grand exhibition of pitching by Dent and plucky defensive play by a badly crippled Cracker team. Thompson and Dunn will be the battery to-day, and we are going to try to get even.

Dent pitched one of his best games since joining the Crackers, and deserved to win. But the attack of his mates was not sufficient to overcome a one-run lead, and Hogg, who also pitched excellent ball, finished in front, 2 to 1, the result setting the Crackers down another full game in the pennant chase, as Montgomery also won.

Bill Bailey was examined by an X-ray specialist here and it was shown that he is suffering from a fractured rib, which will keep him out of the line-up several days. Whitey Alperman was taken suddenly ill with what appeared to be a touch of appendicitis, and was unable to play yesterday, but probably will try to work in this afternoon's game.

The worst feature of the contest yesterday was the arrest of Joe Dunn, at the instance of a person named Monk, who is interested in the Mobile club, the way I understand the matter. Joe was charged with swearing while arguing with Umpire Wright about a hit Joe thought was foul. Wright says Joe didn't swear, Catcher Schmidt says the same thing and so do all the players who were in hearing of the argument. But Joe was lugged off the field and Chapman had to come in from right to take his place, while Gilbert Price went to the outer works.

Joe wasn't locked up. Friends promptly arranged for bond, and he will be back in the game this afternoon.

Dunn Fined $5 for "Cussing" Umpire

MOBILE, ALA., July 28.—Joe Dunn, the heavy backstop of the Crackers, who was arrested yesterday at the ball park during the game between Atlanta and Mobile clubs, on a charge of using profane language was fined $5 in the Recorder's Court here this morning. Joseph paid.

The Recorder gave Dunn the preference of spending ten days in the workhouse or paying $5. "It is too hot these days to stay indoors so long," said the catcher, as he passed the "five iron men" over. "But I guess the judge wanted me to coach the rock-pile team at that," added Joe.

DODGE MAY GO TO VOLS; INDIANS SECURE NELSON

CINCINNATI, July 28.—Pitcher Albert Nelson, who was sold by the Reds to Nashville, but refused to report there, has been disposed of to Indianapolis. The Cincinnati club will send Nashville another player in place of Nelson, possibly Infielder Dodge, recently secured from the Phillies in exchange for Becker.

YOUNGSTERS FOR BLOOMINGTON.

BLOOMINGTON, ILL., July 28.—The Bloomington management, in an effort to check the losing streak of its club, has signed two promising youngsters. They are Outfielder Ralph Craig, of Sioux City, and Pitcher John Duggan, of the Southern League.

NAPS GET NEW PLAYER.

DECATUR, ILL., July 28.—The sale is announced of Dick Staley, first baseman of the Danville baseball club, to the Cleveland Americans for $2,500.

Atlanta Should Have Polo Club

Will Introduce Game August 6

THE most rabid polo[ist]'s appetite will be satisfied at Fort McPherson on Wednesday afternoon, August 6.

Here are some of the events carded by those interested in the plan to form the Atlanta Polo Club:

Polo match between the Fort McPherson quartet and an All-Southern team, which will consist of Tom Weaver, Lamar Hill, Dr. J. O. Seamans, local players, and experts from surrounding Southern clubs.

A tug-of-war on polo ponies.

A polo pony race.

A "polo pony" musical program furnished by the Fort McPherson military band.

A "polo pony" concert by Company M Glee Club.

And in hope of encouraging those who will be unable to attend to become interested in the game, moving pictures will be taken of the struggle and thrown on local screens a day or two after the match.

It will be the biggest society event ever held in Atlanta. It is to be hoped that the game will "take strong," for if it does, the Atlanta Polo Club will surely be formed.

A big tract of land will be purchased and a clubhouse erected. There are enough Atlantans who play the game to form an excellent team with very little coaching. Within a very few months the local club could arrange games with teams from all parts of the country, and not be afraid of defeat.

A worthy aim would be to develop players for the International Cup team. New Yorkers have had this all to themselves for some time, but Atlanta, like Camden, Augusta and Jacksonville, could in time probably develop some "big leaguers."

RINGSIDE NOTES

Jack White has finally secured a match with Johnny Dundee. Tom McCarey signed the pair yesterday to meet in a 20-round bout at his Vernon arena on August 12. They are to box at catch weights.

* * *

Coast fans are looking for Matty Baldwin to give Leach Cross a tough argument when the two lightweights get together at Los Angeles to-morrow night. Matty's great fights against Freddie Welsh and Willie Ritchie are still remembered by the Pacific coasters.

* * *

Ad Wolgast, Willie Ritchie, Johnny Dundee, Joe Rivers and Jack White will be at the ringside when Cross and Baldwin exchange blows. All these boys have big followers out West.

* * *

Sam Langford and Joe Jeannette have been matched to box twenty rounds at Los Angeles on September 29.

* * *

Johnny Kilbane, who has been holdfast to his title as featherweight champion, says that he is going to tour the world after visiting Ireland, and will meet all the good boys as he goes along. Perhaps he can find some amusement and some dollars scattered in his pathway.

* * *

Mike Saul is one fighter who thinks Kid Young can defeat Charlie Lee, providing the fighting newsboy gets into shape. Saul refereed the former scrap between the pair and says condition is all that kept Young from winning.

* * *

Spider Britt is walking the streets with a chip on his shoulders these days. Spider wants to know why the fighters around here are continually dodging a match with him. Britt is anxious to get on with Lee or Young and says he will give either of them a neat side bet.

* * *

Billy Lutz, manager of Eddie Hanlon, has a few words to say regarding Mike Saul. Lutz called at the Georgian Sporting department yesterday and said that he would gladly send his protege against Mike, if the latter will agree to let Eddie weigh 128 pounds at 3 o'clock. Billy is also prepared to put up $25 to go as a weight forfeit and side bet. Billy wants to meet Saul at this office this afternoon at 4 o'clock.

* * *

Jack Britton appears to be the easiest lightweight in the world to deal with when it comes to making a match. Britton is always ready to take on the best of them, while his manager, Danny Morgan, stands by with a few nickels to wager on his protege's chances.

* * *

The proposed return scrap between Johnny Williams and Eddie Campi at Los Angeles has been called off and Williams, accompanied by his manager, Sammy Harris, has left for New York. Williams asked $3,000 for his services, a sum that McCarey refused to grant.

Carl Morris, the Oklahoma heavyweight, knocked out Al Benedict in the fifth round of a scheduled 15-round go the other night.

OHNE WINS RACE.

NEW YORK, July 28.—Paul Ohne, of Brooklyn, won the three-cornered match race at Brighton Motodrome last night, thereby earning the right to meet Arthur Chappelle, the champion motorcyclist.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Total of $131,000 In New Dwellings

Druid Hills for Carroll Payne. Peachtree and Ansley Park Homes. West End Church.

Plans for three handsome dwellings in Druid Hills, costing more than $40,000, are in course of preparation by Hentz & Reid, architects in the Candler Building. These are for houses to be built in the spring by J. Carroll Payne, Alex W. Smith, Jr., and Charles T. Hopkins, Jr., on adjoining lots on Ponce DeLeon avenue east of the bridge near Lullwater road. They will be handsomely done in the New England colonial style.

Jobs now in the hands of the above firm of architects total $131,000, including, among a number of dwellings, a structure for the West End Presbyterian Church, on Gordon street, to cost $20,000; a refreshment pavilion in Grant Park, $10,000, and additions to the dining room of the Piedmont Driving Club, $4,000. Plans are being drawn for the following other residences:

Edgar Dunlap, Druid Hills, two-story brick veneer house of New England colonial style, $17,000.

E. W. More, Peachtree road, near Lakeview avenue, two-story Dutch colonial and shingle, $6,000.

E. Lee Worsham, Wesley avenue, near Clark Howell's country place, one-story English type of plaster and stone, $10,000.

E. L. Bishop, Peachtree road, at Brookhaven, two-story plaster house, $7,000.

Fred Stone, Fairview road, Druid Hills, two-story New England colonial frame or brick veneer, $8,000.

W. White, Prado, Asley Park, two-story Dutch colonial frame and stone, $9,000.

Ivy Street Car Tracks.

Work has been in progress several days laying the old car tracks on Ivy street, preparatory to the resumption of trolley traffic on that street. There was a plan to put these tracks on Piedmont avenue, but objection on the part of property owners caused the project to be abandoned. The idea was to relieve Peachtree congestion as much as possible by having all tracks and heavy wagons use Ivy street.

To Start on West Peachtree.

Materials for repaving West Peachtree and building retaining walls are being gathered together for work that will begin within a few days. The walls will go up first and then regrading will start. A number of interesting improvements are expected to be made as soon as the work has assumed definite shape.

Mr. Cochran's Measure.

Ralph O. Cochran, the well-known real estate man, introduced in the Legislature Monday a bill intended to make equities in property subject to levy and sale, as well as deeds. Eugene and Gordon Mitchell drew the measure. All outstanding notes against property must be paid up before a sale can be made under the present law.

It is also sought to repeal existing legislation which makes real estate men take out a license in every county where a sale is made.

Marietta Street Barbecue.

Marietta street property owners are beginning to whet their appetites for a mammoth barbecue which they will give next month or in September commemorating the completion of the Marietta street widening and repaving to the city limits and the Cobb County line. The place will be either the Chattahoochee River or Howell Station, according to W. Tom Winn, one of the first to urge the Marietta street improvement.

Invited to the barbecue will be the city officials, the County Commissioners, a number of prominent real estate men and others, probably 500 people.

This barbecue was first set for July 4, but a delay in the work made a postponement necessary. The job is due to be completed in a very short time, and Marietta street will take its place as the best crosstown street in the city.

New Apartment Houses.

The Lawrence, a new apartment house at Nos. 52 and 54 West Peachtree place, will be ready for occupancy September 1. J. L. Turner & Co. are the owners. Each room is outside and the two-room apartments have disappearing wall beds, which have only recently come to Atlanta. The Maryland, corner of Peachtree Circle and Seventeenth street, Ansley Park, will also be ready September 1. This contains four, five and six-room apartments.

Seeking More Floor Space.

A move for more floor space has been made by two Atlanta concerns located in the Empire Building. The Royal Insurance Company will soon leave the eleventh floor to take the entire twelfth floor of the Hurt building and the L. P. Bottenfield Real Estate Agency will take the offices of the insurance company, moving from the tenth floor. The Bottenfield Agency has leased this half floor for five years at a price which approximates $4,000 a year. This is the third move of the company. First in small offices on the second floor of the Empire, it moved to larger offices on the tenth, and now finds it necessary again to seek more floor space.

For Public Market.

Housewives of Atlanta have revived the interest of several years ago which was displayed in a public market. Committees are being formed and it is thought that within a comparatively short time there will be a place where women can buy direct and save half a dozen profits of middlemen. Should the Plaza project ever become a reality, it is possible that the market will be placed on the site of the Union Depot. It has been suggested that $250,000 be invested in a site and from another source that $500,000 in city bonds be issued.

To Purge Peachtree Creek.

Real estate men having subdivisions in the vicinity of Peachtree Creek have become greatly interested in the suggestion that the bed of the creek be cleared from the bridge at Peachtree to Howell Mill road, about two and one-half miles, in order to prevent overflows into the lowlands during the rainy seasons. Winds from Peachtree Creek blow mosquitoes into the city, it is claimed, and there are other reasons for wanting to remedy the conditions. The effect of Peachtree Creek on land can readily be understood when it is pointed out that Peachtree road frontage at $35 a front foot and less has not had an active market, whereas property has changed hands at nearly $100 a foot a mile farther to the north.

COTTON MARKET ACTIVE ALL DAY

Erratic Trading Holds Market in Narrow Rut—Cables Weak and Weather Good.

NEW YORK, July 28.—Weakness in Liverpool cables as a result of Southern and Continental selling, coupled with private reports of rains over Sunday in Texas and Oklahoma, resulted in the local cotton market opening barely steady to-day with first prices unchanged to 10 points from Saturday's final. At the end of 15 minutes the new crop positions were fairly steady.

The detailed weather reports did not disclose as much rainfall as earlier advices had suggested and a covering movement followed the establishment of new low levels. Losses were wiped out. Besides covering of shorts there was what observers thought was buying for fresh long account. Offerings became scarce and scattered. Larger spot houses were aggressive buyers of the old crops, but August seemed in greater demand, by rallying from 11.44 to 11.60 for a net gain of 16 points from the opening, while July only advanced 8 points. New crop were heavily purchased by strong sources, aggregating a gain of 5 to 11 points from the initial level. Liverpool continued to report bearish cables and at the close the English market was 7½ to 9 points lower.

During the late forenoon the market was steady with prices firmly maintained at the early high point.

The advance in some quarters was explained by the crumbling of new and old crop positions last week, which made new low levels for the month, when August went 70 points under the best price of the month, or $3.50 a bale. These offerings were absorbed by brokers said to be buying for Liverpool account against straddle sales there. The advance came in the face of a bearish condition report of The Memphis Commercial-Appeal, which gave condition of July 25, 82.1 per cent.

At the close the market was very steady with prices showing irregularity, being 5 points higher to 3 points lower than the closing quotations of Saturday.

Following are 11 a. m. bids in New York: July, 11.75; August, 11.50; October, 11.17; January, 11.05.

Following are 10 a. m. bids in New Orleans: August, 11.60; October, 11.21; January, 11.21.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, LA., July 28.—According to reliable private information further rains occurred Saturday night in north Texas and Oklahoma.

The map to-day shows generally fair weather in the western half; cloudy in the eastern half. No rain of consequence in the west, but general rainfall in Alabama and the Atlantics. Rising temperatures in the Western States, Arkansas and Tennessee; normal in the rest of the belt. Indications are for part cloudy to fair; rising temperatures in Texas; unsettled in Oklahoma, probably some rain in the northwestern portion. Part cloudy in the central and eastern States; some scattered showers.

The Shreveport Times says cotton made rapid progress during the past two weeks, due largely to the heavy rains of last week. The dry hot spell preceding the rains has practically solved the weevil problem and there is little complaint.

First trades here were at about unchanged figures, and the market showed remarkable steadiness from the start with a pronounced disposition to buy on depressions. This was undoubtedly based on the absence of rain in the lower half of Texas, rising temperatures in the West, anticipation of an unfavorable weekly weather report tomorrow in portions of Texas and the fear of a lower August Bureau report on Friday.

STOCK MAKRET

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, July 28.—There was a broadening in speculative interest at the opening of the stock market to-day. In the early trading, stocks joined in a brisk upward movement. During that period new high records were established in many issues.

New Haven was up 1½, Great Northern preferred 1 point, while the rest of the list ruled from fractions to nearly a point above Saturday's close.

There was a varying tendency in London, but American stocks were steady.

The curb market was dull.

Traders continuing to fight the bullish tendency caused slight recessions at intervals, but on the whole the market was steady and slight upturns during the forenoon were recorded. A gain of 1⅜ by Chesapake and Ohio was the largest gain of the day, with Union Pacific and United States Steel both advancing ⅜. Southern Pacific declined ⅛. Great Northern preferred sold around 126⅝, a fractional loss since its opening. Call money loaned at 2¼.

Trading became dull in the afternoon, though the supply showed no increase. Selling by room traders was sufficient to cause reactions in a number of important issues.

Who Makes the "Criminals?"

Did This View of It Ever Occur to You?

(Copyright, 1913.)

Much interest just now in CRIMINALS.

Much horror aroused by depravity.

Many plans more or less appropriate for making the air pure.

Many good men, politicians, women and bishops who spend the summer at the seaside are willing to spend a few days wiping "CRIME" off the earth.

What is CRIME? Who are the CRIMINALS? Who makes the criminals?

Do criminals viciously and voluntarily arise among us, eager to lead hunted lives, eager to be jailed at intervals, eager to crawl in the dark, dodge policemen, work in stripes and die in shame? Hardly.

Will you kindly and patiently follow the lives, quickly sketched, of a boy and a girl?

THE GIRL.

Born poor, born in hard luck, her father, or mother, or both, victims of long hours, poor fare, bad air and little leisure.

As a baby she struggles against fate and manages to live while three or four little brothers and sisters die and go back to kind earth.

She crawls around the rooms of a small house, a good deal in the way. She is hunted here and chased there.

She is cold in winter, ill-fed in summer, never well cared for.

She gets a little so-called education. Ill-dressed and ashamed beside the other children, she is glad to escape the education. No one at home can help her on. No one away from home cares about her.

She grows up white, sickly, like a potato sprouting in a cellar. At the corner of a fine street she sees the automobiles passing with other girls in warm furs, or in fine, cool summer dresses.

With a poor shawl around her and with heels run down she peers in at the restaurant window, to see other women leading lives very different from hers.

Steadily she has impressed upon her the fact, absolutely undeniable, that as the world is organized there is no especial place for her—certainly no comfort for her.

She finds work, perhaps. Hours as long as the daylight.

Ten minutes late—half a day's fine.

At the end of the day aching feet, aching back, system ill-fed, not enough earned to live upon honestly—and that prospect stretches ahead farther than her poor eyes can see.

"WHAT'S THE CHARGE, OFFICER?"

"Disorderly conduct, Your Honor."

There's the criminal that Society is hunting so ardently.

THE BOY.

Same story, practically.

He plays ball in the street—cuffed, if caught by the policeman.

He swings on the awning poles, trying to exercise his stunted muscles—cuffed again.

In burning July, with shirt and trousers on, he goes swimming in private ponds—caught and cuffed and handed over to the police.

He tries for work.

"What do you know?"

"I don't know nothin'; nobody ever taught me."

He can not even endure the discipline of ten hours' daily shoveling—it takes education to instill discipline, if only the education of the early pick and shovel.

He has not been taught anything. He has been turned loose in a city full of temptation. He had no real start to begin with, and no effort was ever made to repair his evil beginning.

"WHAT'S THE CHARGE, OFFICER?"

"Attempted burglary; pleads guilty."

In prison he gets an education. They teach him how to be a good burglar and not get caught. Patiently the State boards him, and educates him to be a first-rate criminal.

There's your first-rate criminal, Messrs. Bishops, good men, politicians and benevolent women.

Dear bishops, noble women, good men and scheming politicians, listen to this story:

In the South Sea Islands they have for contagious diseases a horror as great as your horror of crime.

A man or woman stricken with a loathsome disease, such as smallpox, is seized, isolated, and the individual sores of the smallpox patient are earnestly scraped with sea shells—until the patient dies. It hurts the patient a good deal—without ever curing, of course—but it relieves the feelings of the outraged good ones who wield the sea shells.

You kind-hearted creatures, hunting "crime" in great cities, are like the South Sea Islanders in their treatment of smallpox.

You ardently wield your reforming sea shells and you scrape very earnestly at the sores so well developed.

No desire here to decry your earnest efforts.

But if you ever get tired of scraping with sea shells, try vaccination, or, better still, try to take such care of youth, to give such chances and education to the young, as will save them from the least profitable of all careers—CRIME.

Scrape away with your sea shells, but try also to give a few more and a few better chances in youth to those whom you now hunt as criminals in their mature years.

God creates boys and girls, anxious to live decently.

YOUR SOCIAL SYSTEM makes criminals and fills jails.

Mysteries of Science and Nature

The Sun Is a Variable Star and Its Changes Affect the Price of a Man's Dinner---What Science's Latest Discovery Means.

By GARRETT P. SERVISS

THE recently announced conclusion of Professor Frost, the head of the Yerkes Observatory, that the sun is a variable star is in accord with what has been said repeatedly in these columns. It is a tremendously important fact, and its demonstration is mainly due to the labors of Messrs. C. G. Abbott and F. E. Fowle, of the Smithsonian Institution. Their statements have been confirmed by the observation of astronomers in Europe.

The sun has not suddenly become variable; it has been variable for ages, but not until now has any measurement of its variability been obtained. It has taken ten years to eliminate all the possible sources of error in the work, one of the principal difficulties being to discriminate between the effect of changing conditions of the earth's atmosphere affecting its ability to transmit the radiation from the sun to the surface of the globe, and changes occurring in the sun itself.

Minor Changes in the Sun Affect the Earth's Temperature.

It seems now to be certain that the intensity of the rays which the sun sends to the earth often vary at least as much as five per cent in periods of only a week or ten days. These variations, of course, directly affect the temperature and the character of the weather. Then there are variations of a much longer period, and of greater general extent, indicated by the waxing and waning of black spots on the sun's disk.

When there are many and large spots on the sun, its radiation is not diminished, but increased, and when they are few and small, as at the present time, the radiation, in general, falls off. But at all times, apparently, minor changes are going on in the sun, which produce quite sudden alterations in the temperature of the earth.

As has just been said, we are now at a period of minimum in the sun spots, but in about four years from now they will be numerous again, and then a general increase of the solar radiation is to be expected. It takes, on the average, about seven years for the sun spots to decline from a maximum to a minimum, and about four years for them to rise again from a minimum to a maximum. Meanwhile the radiation is not steady at any time, except for a few days.

The practical importance of the recent studies of these things is seen in Professor Frost's announcement that the time is near at hand when it will be possible to foretell the general character of the seasons long in advance.

He thinks that that may be achieved within about twenty-five years.

Then, if the present promise is kept, it will be possible for farmers and growers of all kinds of crops to know in advance what they have to expect, and to govern their sowings and plantings accordingly.

The sun will be recognized as the great dictator in agricultural affairs, and they will be the most successful cultivators who heed the hints which he gives of impending changes in his humor. They will watch his face, with the aid of the astronomers, as Nero's courtiers watched the play of their tyrant's features.

But the mere fact that those who have been conducting these researches think it possible to foretell the varying effects of the solar radiation upon the earth shows that even in his most variable moods the sun is subjected to a law which he cannot violate. It is what that law is and how it operates in order to forsee its effects. Much still depends upon a better knowledge of the earth's atmosphere, for when a sudden change takes place in the solar radiation the effect is not immediately felt on the earth. The atmosphere acts as a kind of buffer, and takes up the shock, afterward distributing it in a more gradual and gentle manner.

Change in Solar Radiation Might Bring About an Indian Famine.

A graphic illustration of the importance of this matter to every human being is given in a remark of Professor Langley's which Professor Frost has quoted:

"Though the most unformed nebula may hold the germs of future worlds, yet for us these possibilities are but interesting conjectures, for every nebula might be wiped out of the sky to-night without affecting the price of a laborer's dinner, while a small change in the solar radiation may conceivably cause the deaths of numberless men in an Indian famine."

Professor Langley's forecast has been fully justified by the recent investigations, and we may now say that the price of every man's dinner is affected by changes in the sun that had not been discovered ten years ago.

Time's Changes

By MINNA IRVING.

I CHANCED to meet old Father Time,
It does not matter where;
He wore a leather coat and cap,
And had a jaunty air.
A pair of goggles hid his eyes,
His boots were furred inside;
I viewed the change with much amaze,
"Where is your scythe?" I cried.

"It can not be that you at last
No longer mean to mow
Unhappy mortals like the grass
Before you as you go?"
"The scythe," the ancient spirit sighed,
"Is slow and out of date,
I use an aeroplane instead
To do the work of fate."

Divorce

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

Copyright, 1913, by Star Company.

THINKING of one thing all day long, at night
I fall asleep, brain weary and heart sore;
But only for a little while. At three,
Sometimes at two, o'clock I wake and lie,
Staring out into darkness; while my thoughts
Begin the weary treadmill-toil again,
From that white marriage morning of our youth
Down to this dreadful hour:
I see your face
Lit with the lovelight of the honeymoon;
I hear your voice, that lingered on my name
As if it loved each letter; and I feel
The clinging of your arms about my form,
Your kisses on my cheek—and long to break
The anguish of such memories with tears,
But cannot weep; the fountain has run dry.

We were so young, so happy, and so full
Of keen sheer joy of life. I had no wish
Outside your pleasure; and you loved me so
That when I sometimes felt a woman's need
For more serene expression of man's love
(The need of rest in calm affection's bay
And not sail ever on the stormy main),
Yet would I rouse myself to your desire;
Meet ardent kiss with kisses just as warm;
So nothing I could give should be denied.

And then our children came. Deep in my soul,
From the first hour of conscious motherhood,
I knew I should conserve myself for this
Most holy office; knew God meant it so.
Yet even then, I held your wishes first;
And by my double duties lost the bloom
And freshness of my beauty; and beheld
A look of disapproval in your eyes.

But with the coming of our precious child,
The lover's smile, tinged with the father's pride,
Returned again; and helped to make me strong;
And life was very sweet for both of us.

Another, and another birth, and twice
The little white hearse paused beside our door
And took away some portion of my youth
With my sweet babies. At the first you seemed
To suffer with me, standing very near;
But when I wept too long you turned away.
And I was hurt, not realizing then
My grief was selfish. I could see the change
Which motherhood and sorrow made in me;
And when I saw the change that came to you,
Saw how your eyes looked past me when you talked,
And when I missed the love tone from your voice,
I did that foolish thing that women do:
Complained and cried, accused you of neglect,
And made myself obnoxious in your sight.

And often, after you had left my side,
Alone I stood before my mirror, mad
With anger at my pallid cheeks, my dull
Unlightened eyes, my shrunken mother-breasts,
And wept, and wept, and faded more and more.
How could I hope to win back wandering love,
And make new flames in dying embers leap
By such ungracious means?

And then She came,
Firm bosomed, round of cheek, with such young eyes,
And all the ways of youth. I, who had died
A thousand deaths in waiting the return
Of that old love look to your face once more—
Died yet again and went straight into hell
When I beheld it come at her approach.

My God, my God, how have I borne it all!
Yet since she had the power to make that look—
The power to sweep the ashes from your heart
Of burned-out love for me, and light new fires,
One thing remained for me—to let you go.
I had no wish to keep the empty frame
From which the priceless picture had been wrenched.
Nor do I blame you; it was not your fault;
You gave me all that most men can give—love
Of youth, of beauty, and of passion; and
I gave you full return; my womanhood
Matched well your manhood. Yet had you grown ill,
Or old, and unattractive from some cause,
(Less close than was my service unto you)
I should have clung the tighter to you, dear;
And loved you, loved you, loved you more and more.

I grow so weary thinking of these things;
Day in, day out; and half the awful nights.

Solferino

By REV. THOMAS B. GREGORY.

THE battle of Solferino, won by Napoleon III and the Sardinian King from the Austrians fifty-four years ago, was one of the costliest of victories, a boomerang, the like of which is but seldom found on the pages of history.

Napoleon III, the Don Quixote of sovereigns, went far out of his way to interfere in the quarrel between Austria and Sardinia, and bitterly was he paid for it.

Within itself Solferino was a splendid triumph. Some 120,000 French and Sardinians beat to a finish some 170,000 Austrians, and the Emperor's cup of glory was sparkling to the brim! Solferino was well calculated to remind men of Austerlitz and Marengo and of the great captain whose genius had for so long led the soldiers of France from victory to victory as though they had been an army of demigods.

So far so good. But there was coming, all unseen by the victory of Solferino an aftermath of woe and misery.

Solferino precipitated a meeting between Napoleon and Joseph (July 11, at Villafranca), the result of which was the Treaty of Zurich, which, among other things, wrested Lombardy from Austria, thus materially weakening her among the family of European nations.

But the weakening of Austria carried along with it the strengthening of Prussia. If there was a time when Bismarck laughed more heartily than ever before, it was when the news came to him of that Lombardy matter. The great Chancellor must have laughed himself well-nigh mortal, for he saw just what it meant. He saw in advance the war of 1866, the struggle between Austria and Prussia for the leadership of the German States, the weakened state in which Austria would have to contend against the greatly improved condition of Prussia, and the final Prussian triumph at Konigratz.

But the clear-eyed Bismarck saw even farther than that. He saw Austria humbled and dismissed from the stage; he saw Prussia at the head of a united Germany; and, what was more to the point, he saw the Germans "marching all one way" on to Paris, to humble France much worse than France had humbled the Hapsburg.

JURY COMPLETE TO TRY FRANK

Wife Helps Prisoner Pick Men to Try Him

RICH GEORGIA GIRL LOST 3 WEEKS

Lynette Awtrey, Acworth Heiress, Strangely Missing, Wires Plea for Help From Utah.

A dramatic story behind the mysterious disappearance of Miss Lynette Awtrey, 18-year-old daughter of wealthy Orlando Awtrey, one of the leading citizens of Acworth, Ga., and a member of one of Cobb County's most prominent families, who, after a tour of Europe, boarded a train in New York for Atlanta and then vanished as utterly as though she had left the earth, is expected to be bared this week when the girl arrives home from Ogden, Utah, where she has been located.

Miss Awtrey has been missing for nearly two weeks. Becoming homesick during her European trip, she returned to New York and wired her father to send her money to come home. Mr. Awtrey wired her $200 and the same day received a telegram asking him to meet her in Atlanta. Her trunk came on the train on which she was supposed to come, but there was no trace of the girl.

Since then her family has exhausted every means to locate the missing girl. The aid of the William J. Burns Detective Agency was enlisted and the operatives of the famous sleuth scoured the cities of the United States; the aid of police departments all over the country was invoked—but with no result. For all the detectives were able to ascertain to the contrary the girl had dissolved into thin air. After she boarded the train in New York absolutely no trace could be found of her.

Sends Mysterious Telegram.

With constant reports of failure being filed by America's most noted sleuths, Mr. Awtrey redoubled his efforts to find his missing daughter. More appeals were made to police departments, private detective agencies were enlisted in the search, and photographs of the young girl were sent out secretly by the Burns men in the hope that someone could be found who had seen her.

Sunday morning Miss Awtrey broke her silence of two weeks with a telegram from Ogden that intensified the mystery. It contained no explanation of her disappearance. The telegram was a piteous appeal for aid—a cry that she was alone and penniless in a strange land.

"Please help me," the telegram said. "I have no money. I am sorry I left home, but can not explain now. I will tell you about it when I get home."

The message was signed "Lynette," with no address in Ogden save the Western Union. Mr. Awtrey immediately wired his daughter money and a ticket to Acworth by way of the Union Pacific. It is probable that either he or one of the girl's brothers will meet her at Nashville or Chattanooga.

The disappearance of Miss Awtrey is almost identical with the case of Dorothy Arnold, the missing New York heiress, who still is being sought by detectives after a disappearance of more than a year, and has stirred and perplexed Cobb County more than any mystery of recent years.

Comes From Leading Family.

The fact that the girl comes from one of the leading families of North Georgia makes the interest in the mystery all the greater. Her father is president of the Acworth Cotton Mills Manufacturing Company of Acworth, and is interested largely in the commercial life of the town. She is a niece of Mrs. D. F. McClatchy, wife of the reading clerk of the Georgia House of Representatves, and a niece of John Awtrey, a prominent attorney of Marietta, and of Bernard Awtrey, editor of The Marietta News. She is also related to Mrs. R. M. Moon and a number of other prominent Marietta and Cobb County people.

Miss Awtrey is prominent in Ac-

DAVIS TENNIS CUP COMES TO U. S.

McLoughlin's Brilliant Play Returns Trophy to United States After Ten Years.

Special Cable to The Georgian.

WIMBLEDON, ENGLAND, July 28. The Davis trophy, the most sought-for cup in the tennis world, which has been away from the United States since 1903, will come back to America.

The United States team, after beating the Australians in the preliminary games in New York last June and working their way up to the challenge round by defeating the German and Canadian teams in England, today won the trophy for the United States by defeating the English defenders.

Maurice E. McLoughlin, the young Californian, brought victory to his country by defeating C. P. Dixon in three straight sets in the single match today. Although his service was faulty at the beginning of the match today, McLoughlin soon got into his stride.

Last Two Sets Easy.

He won the first set after a hard-fought set-to, the score being 8-6.

From then on the issue was never in doubt, the American proving himself the master of the Englishman at all stages of the second and third sets, winning the former 6-3 and the latter 6-2.

The match for the trophy began on Friday, when McLoughlin was defeated by J. C. Parke, the Irish champion. R. Norris Williams, of Philadelphia, evened up matters when he defeated Dixon in the other single match that day.

Gets Back to Form.

Saturday the Americans jumped into the foreground, when McLoughlin and Harold H. Hacket, the double team, defeated Dixon and H. Roper Barrett.

McLoughlin's play, which was a little off color on Friday, was much improved Saturday and to-day. His individual skill did much to bring the cup back to America.

In the semi-final game between Parks and Williams, the Englishman won after a hard match of five sets. The score: 6-2, 5-7, 5-7, 6-4, 6-2. This defeat did not have any bearing on the general result.

Dallas Girl Typist Slain at Her Desk

DALLAS, TEX., July 28.—Miss Florence T. Brown, a stenographer, was murdered to-day as she sat at her desk. Her throat was cut and her left arm was mangled, evidently by a man's teeth.

None of the members of the real estate firm who employed her were in the offices at the time she was attacked. Bruises on her body showed that the girl had fought hard for her life.

Senate Notified of Re-election of Bacon

WASHINGTON, July 28.—The Senate to-day received formal notification from Governor John M. Slaton, of Georgia of the re-election to the Senate of Augustus O. Bacon.

Senator Bacon later took the oath of office, being escorted to the Vice President's rostrum by his colleague, Senator Hoke Smith, of Georgia.

FRANK SKETCHED IN COURT

The prisoner is apparently the calmest and most collected person in the crowded courtroom. He is in the best of health and is keenly alive to every proceeding in the trial.

The accused appeared to figure largely in the defense's acceptance or rejection of jurymen.

Hoke Smith Backs Negro U. S. Official

WASHINGTON, July 28.—Senators Gore of Oklahoma and Hoke Smith of Georgia called on President Wilson to-day to urge him to stand by his appointment of A. E. Patterson, of Muskogee, Okla., to be Register of the Treasury.

Much opposition has developed to Patterson, who is a negro.

WASHINGTON, July 28.—The House adjourned three minutes after its opening to-day. Gardner, of Massachusetts, continued the Republican filibuster.

ALL IN READINESS FOR REAL TRIAL TO BEGIN AFTER SHORT RECESS

Events on the opening day of the trial of Leo M. Frank, accused of the slaying of Mary Phagan in the National Pencil Factory, moved with such unexpected swiftness that it was apparent that the trial proper would be under way and the first witnesses called before the close of the first day's session. The jury had been completed by the time recess was taken at 1:30.

FRANK JURY.

Here is the Frank jury as it is being chosen:

A. H. Henslee, 74 Oak street, salesman.

F. V. L. Smith, 481 Cherokee avenue, manufacturers' agent.

J. F. Higdon, 108 Ormewood avenue.

F. E. Winburn, 213 Lucile avenue, claim agent.

A. L. Wisbey, 31 Hood street, cashier of the Buckeye Oil Company.

W. M. Jeffries, a real estate man, with offices at 318 Empire building.

Marcellus Johemming, 161 James street, a machine shop foreman with offices at 281 Marietta street.

M. L. Woodward, cashier King Hardware Company, 182 Park avenue.

J. T. Osburn, an optician for A. K. Hawkes, was chosen from the fifth panel to be the ninth juror.

D. Townsend, 84 Whitehall Terrace, cashier Central Bank and Trust Corporation, tenth juror.

W. S. Medcalf, 136 Kirkwood avenue, circulation department of The Atlanta Journal.

C. J. Bosshardt, pressman, employed by Foote & Davies, 216 Bryan street.

After a few preliminary clashes between the opposing attorneys which presaged a bitter struggle when the fight for Frank's life actually was begun, the court settled down to the selection of the jury. The whole morning session up to the recess was occupied with the examination of veniremen.

All the force of attorneys at the table for the defense watched with keen eyes every man examined and frequently referred to a voluminous rcord containing the names of all the veniremen and detailed statements of their history and associations so far as these might have a bearing on their desirability as jurors to pass on Leo Frank's guilt or innocence.

The keenest interest was manifested by those in the crowded little courtroom as the strategies of the brilliant lawyers were revealed during the examination.

State Had Veniremen's Records.

The thoroughness with which the Solicitor and his assistants had canvassed the history of every venireman and had investigated whether or not he had ever expressed an opinion on the guilt or innocence of the accused was demonstrated when W. W. Hemmett, a salesman for the Kingsbury Shoe Company, was being examined as to his qualifications.

"Have you ever said you thought Frank was guilty?" Mr. Dorsey inquired.

"No, I never have," replied Hemmett.

Here the Solicitor referred to some notes at hand and proceeded to call to Hemmett's recollection a certain talk he had with acquaintances at a certain time. Hemmett was forced to admit that he had talked of the case at that time, but declared that he had not expressed a definite opinion.

"I only said I would have to hear some evidence before I would believe Frank was guilty," he told Judge Roan.

He was rejected for cause.

Defense Equally Alert.

The defense showed that it was exactly as vigilant when the next venireman was examined. As soon as A. L. Bellingrath, of No. 91 Milledge avenue, arose from his seat, Attorney Arnold was on his feet prepared to state the objection of the defense. He pointed out that Bellingrath was the brother of Henry Bellingrath who has been employed in the Solicitor's office during the Phagan investigation and that he was reported to have expressed an opinion on the guilt of Frank.

A shrewd bit of strategy was used by Solicitor Dorsey and Attorney Hooper in accepting the two negroes whose names were among the veniremen.

By doing this they forced the defense to use up two of their twenty challenges if they did not desire to have negroes on the jury. With Jim Conley, a negro, likely to be indicted for the murder in the event that Frank is cleared, the defense had no intention of allowing them to pass on Frank's guilt and promptly struck them. The two negroes were Earl Davis and E. E. Hawkins.

Defense Loses First Clash.

The attorneys for Leo M. Frank lost out in their first skirmish with the prosecution, being compelled to read

The Rev. Crawford Jackson, secretary of the Juvenile Protective Association, who is charged with making improper advances to his young typist, has called a meeting of the trustees of the association to lay the case before them.

Although the Rev. Mr. Jackson has been bound over to the Grand Jury on the testimony of Miss Louvenia Durden, the typist, he declared that he would be fully vindicated.

NEW YORK, July 28.—Three men were drowned when the steamer City of Atlanta, of the Savannah Line, ran down and cut in half the tender of the Government lightship off Cape Lookout, N. C., last Friday. The accident was reported when the steamer arrived here to-day.

There was some delay in launching a lifeboat after the accident, and the remaining two of the crew on the tender were rescued in an exhausted condition.

their list of witnesses against their wishes and their vigorous protests.

They evened up matters by obtaining from Solicitor Dorsey the concession of honoring the subpenas lecus tecum issued by the defense and demanding the production in court of all the affidavits of Jim Conley. After a short passage between Attorney Arnold for Frank and Solicitor Dorsey that the list must be read, the judge ruled, and the list was read by Attorney Stiles Hopkins.

The list included employees of the National Pencil Factory, where the murdered girl worked; members of Frank's immediate family, and other relatives and associates of the accused man, members of the same fraternal orders, acquaintances who saw Frank on the day of the crime and classmates in college.

Jurymen Chosen.

The reading of the last names came as a complete surprise. It developed that the defense had scoured the country for persons who had known Frank when he was a student at Cornell. They were subpenaed to bring the character testimony in his behalf up to the time he began his business career.

The picking of the jury proved less difficult than anticipated, twelve men being obtained before 1:30.

List of Jurors.

Here are the jurors chosen:

A. H. Henslee, No. 74 Oak street, a traveling salesman for the Franklin Buggy Company; F. V. L. Smith, No. 481 Cherokee avenue, manufacturer's agent, with offices in the Empire Building; J. F. Higdon, a contractor, No. 108 Ormewood avenue; F. E. Winburn, No. 213 Lucile avenue, claim agent Atlanta and West Point Railroad; A. L. Wisby, No. 31 Hood street, cashier of the Buckeye Oil Company; W. M. Jeffries, a real estate man, with offices at 318 Empire Building; Marcellus Johemming, No. 161 James street, a machine shop foreman, with offices at No. 281 Marietta street; M. L. Woodward, cashier King Hardware Company, No. 182 Park avenue; J. T. Osburn, an optician for Hawkes', was chosen from the fifth panel to be the ninth juror; D. Townsend, No. 84 Whitehall terrace, cashier Central Bank and Trust Corporation.

W. S. Medcalf, No. 136 Kirkwood avenue, circulation department of The Atlanta Journal.

C. J. Bosshardt, No. 216 Bryan street, pressman Foote & Davies.

Bosshardt, the twelfth juror chosen, was the last venireman in the last panel that had been called before the court at the opening of court in the morning. He was picked at exactly 1:25 o'clock and at 1:30 the recess was taken until 3 o'clock.

Attorney Rosser took very little part in the selection of the jury, except to interject a suggestion now and then. He evidently was reserving his strength for the real struggle to come.

Shortly before 2 o'clock Leo Frank was taken into a room adjoining the juryroom, where he was served with a special dinner provided for him by his relatives. Frank's mother and wife were allowed to converse with him while he ate the dinner. He will remain in this room until the court reconvenes at 3 o'clock.

Wife and Mother With Frank.

Frank, accompanied by his wife and his mother, was brought into the courtroom at 10:30 o'clock. The striking of the jury was begun at once.

A half dozen of Frank's friends interrupted the order of the court for several minutes by clustering about him and shaking hands with him.

If there was any fear in the heart of the young prisoner it did not show in his calm features. He seemed perfectly assured and self-possessed. He nodded pleasantly to the judge and greeted his friends with a smiles.

After the stir had subsided, covering the entrance of Frank, his wife and mother, the trio took seats in a semi-circle just below the bench.

Frank and his mother took a good look at the jurors in the first panel that was brought in. The prisoner scrutinized each one closely as he was quizzed by the prosecutor to determine his qualifications.

Wife Fixes Gaze on Dorsey.

Mrs. Frank displayed no sign of emotion until she suddenly found that she was facing Solicitor Dorsey. Then anger appeared to blaze from her eyes and seeming scorn curled her lips. She seldom removed her gaze from the Solicitor's face during the forenoon. If Dorsey was aware of the young woman's scrutiny, he made no sign and proceeded with the case in rapid fashion.

Occasionally Mrs. Frank would turn to her husband and nod toward the Solicitor as though she was ridiculing the efforts to convict Frank. Mrs. Frank was attired in a becoming suit of black and wore a black hat trimmed with black chiffon; also a black veil was drawn up over her hat. A black and white ribbon led to her watch in the pocket of her white silk waist. Two brilliant diamonds shone on the engagement finger of her left hand.

Frank occupied a seat between his wife and mother. He conversed with them alternately, at no time appearing nervous or the least apprehensive. His attitude was noticeably even more calm than at the time when he appeared before the Coroner's jury.

Frank Aids Attorneys.

Frank spoke frequently to his attorneys, whom he was near, and made suggestions while the jurors were being qualified. When each new panel was brought in he looked intently into the face of each man, beginning at the upper row and shifting his gaze from man to man until he had scrutinized them all.

Not infrequently, when the Solicitor had closed his examination and had said, "Juror, look on prisoner; prisoner, look on juror," Frank would turn to Attorney Arnold and an instant later the announcement would be made, "Storuck by the defense." Frank evidently was playing a large part in the striking of jurors by the defense.

The dagger-like gaze of Mrs. Frank seldom was removed from the Solicitor's face. Frequently she embraced all those at Dorsey's table in her scornful glance.

Wife Caresses Prisoner.

Chief of Detectives Newport A. Lanford, whose department unearthed much of the evidence, happened to be sitting at her right. She turned to him while he was glancing over papers as if she were about to speak her mind to him, but thought better of it.

Once in a while she took her eyes from the Solicitor's table to lay her hand affectionately upon her husband's shoulder and draw him toward her to whisper in his ear. Once when she discovered the reporters eyeing her, she smiled mischievously and immediately whispered the information to Frank.

Frank's mother sat quietly through the routine of examining the veniremen. She spoke to her son frequently, directing her glance at the prospective jurors as though commenting on their fitness.

State Names Its Witnesses.

At 9:58 o'clock Solicitor Dorsey announced that he was ready to open the case of the State against Leo M. Frank, charged with having killed Mary Phagan by strangulation. This was followed by the request of the defense that the State's witnesses be called, sworn and put under the rule.

The prosecution opened by announcing its readiness to go on with the trial and called the list of witnesses. Bailiffs brought them down from the second floor. In regular order called, their names were: Mrs. J. W. Coleman, mother of Mary Phagan; J. W. Coleman, the girl's stepfather; George Epps, newsboy; L. S. Dobbs, policeman; W. W. Rogers, bailiff for constable; L. S. Starnes, detective and also prosecutor on the indictment; Pat Campbell, detective; Grace Hicks, girl who identified Mary Phagan's body; J. M. Gantt, once held for inquiry, now supposed to be a star witness for the prosecution; Harry Scott, the Pinkerton detective; R. P. Barrett, pencil factory employee; B. P. Haslett, policeman; M. V. Darley, factory employee; W. A. Gheesling, undertaker that cared for the girl's body; Dr. Claude Smith, City Bacteriologist; Dr. H. F. Harris, member of the State Board of Health; Dr. J. W. Hurt, Coroner's physician; E. L. Parry, court stenographer; E. S. Smith, Monteen Stover, girl employee at pencil factory; Minola McKnight, cook at Frank's home; Albert McKnight, Minola's husband (McKnight did not appear in court); Helen Ferguson, Mrs. Arthur White, wife of factory employee, and L. Stanford.

Attorney Reuben Arnold asked concerning the duces tecum that he had served on the State's attorneys for the affidavits of Jim Conley and others. On the promise of Solicitor Dorsey that he would produce the affidavits whenever needed the duces tecum was waived.

Solicitor Dorsey said he did not concede the right of the defense to force a production of the affidavit. He, however, at the request of Mr. Arnold, dictated a statement giving the dates of each of the affidavits signed by Conley, saying they were all of the affidavits Conley had made and that he would produce them whenever necessary.

The Solicitor asked then that the defense's witnesses be called and sworn. This was met by strenuous objection on the part of Attorneys Rosser and Arnold, who claimed their list was fragmentary.

Solicitor Dorsey protested vehemently, declaring that it would be extremely unfair to the State not to swear the defense's witnesses at this time. Attorney Rosser said it would delay the trial to complete their list at this time.

Judge Roan ruled that he would give the defense time to get up the list. The defense capitulated and it took but five minutes for the list to be made up.

Witnesses for Defense.

Attorney Stiles Hopkins, at the table for the defense, called the names of the witnesses by whom they expect to clear Frank. They were Mary Burke, Dora Small, Ella Thomas, C. P. Gilbert, F. Payne, Eula Flowers, Josephine Stelker, Mattie Thompson, Mrs. L. J. Cohen, J. C. Lowe, M. H. Liebman, Miss Bessie White, Joe Williams, Fred Howell, Wade Campbell, J. A. Price, J. E. Lyon, Cora Lavender, M. O. Nix, J. C. Matthews, F. Jenkins, Mrs. Josephine Selig, E. Selig, J. H. Haas, W. H. Mincey, J. B. Spier, E. L. Skipper, E. L. Sentell, May Barrett, Rebecca Carson, C. H. Carson, Harry Denham, Corinthia Hall, Mattie Hall, J. L. Holloway, Mrs. George Jefferson, Jerome Michael, George W. Parrott, M. W. Morrow, Mrs. M. W. Morrow, Rabi David Marx, A. E. Mayo, Fred Weller, A. E. Marcus, Ed Montag, I. H. Haas, W. B. Owens, T. Y. Brent and Ossie Shields.

These were all of the witnesses whose names were called, but at least 100 more, who will be used mostly as character witnesses, were in the room on the second floor waiting to be called.

First Talesman Too Old.

After the venire had been sifted and many excused, W. S. Copeland was the first talesman examined. He was excused when he said that he had passed the 60-year mark. Solicitor Dorsey put the questions, using the formal ones ask in murder trials.

Being conscientiously opposed to capital punishment or conviction by circumstantial evidence was held not to disqualify a juror by Judge Roan. This was in connection with O. T. Camp, the second talesman.

"I am conscientiously opposed to capital punishment on certain grounds," said Camp.

"What are those grounds," asked Solicitor Dorsey.

"Circumstantial evidence," he replied.

Judge Sustains Defense.

"That disqualifies him, then," said Solicitor Dorsey.

Attorney Rosser objected, saying that such belief did not disqualify the juror. Judge Roan sustained the defense, but Solicitor Dorsey struck him.

A. W. Brewerton was disqualified because he was opposed to capital punishment.

W. H. Winn was struck, Solicitor Dorsey taking this action after looking over his record.

R. G. Elliott was struck by the defense.

L. A. Smith was struck for cause.

C. T. Hopkins, Jr., struck by State.

Not One Is Obtained.

W. E. Cates, disqualified because opposed to capital punishment.

T. G. Young, struck by defense.

D. D. Hewey, struck because he did not believe in capital punishment.

That ended the first panel of talesmen and not a single juror was obtained. The State struck three and the defense two. Seven were disqualified for cause.

Four Jurymen Obtained.

Four jurors were obtained from the second panel. They are:

A. H. Henslee, No. 74 Oak street, a salesman.

F. V. L. Smith, No. 481 Cherokee avenue, a manufacturers agent.

J. F. Higdon, 108 Ormewood avenue, a contractor.

F. E. Winburn, No. 21 Lucile avenue, a claim agent.

On the second panel the following men were struck:

Howard Oliver, by the defense.

H. E. Luckey, for cause.

O. L. Spurlin, No. 156 Lawton street, struck by defense.

H. A. Shide, for cause.

E. E. Hawkins, No. 369 Edgewood avenue, a negro, who was accepted by the prosecution, but struck by the defense.

L. F. Davis, for cause.

David Woodward, for cause.

M. J. Sewell, for cause.

Imposing Array of Counsel. Third and Fourth Panels Go.

The following men were struck on the third panel: Charles Witherspoon, by defense; H. J. Kuglar, for cause; C. J. Hale, for cause; J. B. Hays, by defense; E. L. Winn, for cause; W. H. Abbott, for cause; K. P. Mayson, for cause; Boyd Perry, for cause.

The entire fourth panel was struck: Samuel Schoen, by the State; W. S. Singleton, by defense; Earle Davis, a negro, was accepted by the State, but struck by the defense; C. S. Cantrell, for cause; John W. Collier, for cause; W. W. Hammett, by the State; A. F. Bellingrath, by defense on ground that he was a brother to an employee of Solicitor Dorsey's office and that he had expressed the opinion that Frank was guilty.

"I said it looked like he was guilty from what the newspapers said," declared Mr. Bellingrath. Solicitor Dorsey urged that the talesman was not disqualified by this. However, Judge Roan disqualified him for cause.

"I think he should be set aside for his own sake," ruled the judge.

D. Berger, for cause.

Two More Panels Struck.

The following men were struck from the fifth panel: W. C. Willis, for cause; H. C. Hasty, prejudice; C. H. Cook, by defense; C. H. Candler, in answer to a question from Solicitor Dorsey if he was impartial, said "No;" George R. Low, by the State; S. E. Owens, for cause; J. C. Henderson, for cause; C. M. Brown, opposed to capital punishment; C. A. Vaughn, prejudice.

The following men, comprising the entire sixth panel, were struck: Ben F. Willis, by defense; C. M. Petton, prejudice; W. H. Hudson, not impartial; G. R. Milner, by defense; John Head, age; Robert Smidt, opposed to capital punishment; V. N. Carroll, not impartial; C. H. Allen, opposed to capital punishment; P. F. Barber, opposed to capital punishment; O. Wingate, for cause; T. E. Winsow, by State; A. W. Wofford, by defense.

Every man on the seventh panel was struck, including H. H. Kelly, prejudice; N. A. Long, biased; C. W. Gittens, by defense; H. D. Ferguson, opposed to capital punishment; W. L. Merk, by defense; F. E. Walker, prejudice; P. B. Sale, prejudice; W. S. Gaston, biased; C. L. Asbury, biased; J. W. Chatham, prejudice; C. W. Seagroves, prejudice; Carl Weinmeister, opposed to capital punishment.

The last panel, from which the last juror was secured, was Panel No. 9. The following men were struck: S. L. Miller, by defense; H. L. Solomonson, biased; L. O. Hendon, by defense; H. C. Ashford, for cause; E. E. Wochendorff, prejudice; Nicholas Ittner, age; Bud Waites, prejudice; W. W. Sorrell, by defense; Soloman Benjamin, member of Grand Jury.

The buzz of conversation in the little courtroom instantly was hushed when Judge Roan appeared and Deputy Sheriff Plennie Miner called the court to order. The impaneling of jurors was begun at once.

Luther Z. Rosser, chief of counsel for Frank, pressed his way to the defense's table just as Deputy Miner rapped for order. Solicitor Dorsey and his associates were at their table busily arranging papers and documents several minutes before the swearing of the veniremen began.

An imposing array of legal talent was presented when the case was called. Heading counsel for Frank were Rosser and Reuben R. Arnold, two of the foremost lawyers of the South. At their table were Herbert J. Haas, a civil attorney, who has been engaged in looking up character witnesses in behalf of Frank; Styles Hopkins, of the Rosser & Brandon law firm; Oscar Simmons and Paul Goss, engaged especially to assist in picking the jury; George Cox, of Arnold & Arnold law firm, and Luther Z. Rosser, Jr.

Wife at Frank's Side.

With Solicitor Dorsey were Frank A. Hooper, the brilliant attorney who made his reputation as a prosecutor in criminal cases; E. A. Stephens, Assistant Solicitor, and detectives who have been working on the case. Jim Conley's attorney, W. M. Smith, also was in court.

A stir was created when Mrs. Frank, wife of the accused, made her way into the courtroom and hurried past the rows of spectators into the anteroom where her husband was confined. She bore herself bravely, and when she reached Frank, was seen to converse cheerfully with him.

The loyal woman, who insisted on being by the side of her husband until he was called into the courtroom with his attorneys, drew the attention away from the routine proceedings several minutes.

Judge Roan in Good Humor.

Judge Roan appeared in unusually radiant humor and enlivened the dull routine of the early proceedings with facetious remarks directed at the jurors who sought to evade duty on various pretexts.

To one who claimed deafness, Judge Roan said that he had heard his own name readily enough when it was called.

Another juror, Dr. E. L. Connally, well known capitalist, and gray haired veteran of the war, remarked, smiling rather slyly, that he thought he was over age.

"How do you know that?" inquired the judge.

"My mother says I am," was Dr. Connally's reply.

"Do you claim exemption on that account?" asked the court.

"I guess I do, judge," admitted the capitalist.

"Well, then, I guess I will excuse you," said the judge, amid a general laugh from the courtroom.

Dr. Connally left his place with a vigor that belied his years.

Old Dr. Stork was responsible for the excusing of several of the jurors. By the time the eighth panel of men had taken the oath three men had told of new arrivals at their homes and had been excused.

Defense Not to Ask Delay.

Luther Z. Rosser, of counsel for the defense, stated to a Georgian reporter as he left his office for the scene of the trial that he defense would make no move for delay.

"We will not seek a change of venue or make any move of any kind to delay justice for our client," he said. "We are entirely confident that justice and truth will prevail, as it always must."

Reuben R. Arnold, of the defense, made the same kind of a statement.

"We will announce ready as soon as the case is called," he said.

One important witness for the defense was reported to be missing. He is a traveling salesman, and the defense was said to be confident of locating him.

A great crowd gathered in front of the courthouse as the hour of the trial drew near, and when 9 o'clock arrived, Pryor street at Hunter was almost impassable. The corridors of the courthouse were a mass of humanity, through which a lane had to be cut by deputies to allow the passage of witnesses and lawyers and newspaper men.

The crowd was tense with curiosity, but to all appearances inclined to be orderly and apparently was moved only by the commonest of human motives—curiosity.

Judge Andrew Calhoun entered the courtroom when the court was about midway in its forenoon session and took a seat by Judge Roan. In the intervals when the proceedings were interrupted by conferences of the attorneys, he conversed with Judge Roan.

Newt Lee, who found Mary Phagan's body, was brought from the Tower in the middle of the forenoon in the custody of a deputy sheriff. He was placed in an anteroom adjoining the courtroom. It was expected that he would be one of the early witnesses, if not the first, to be called by the State. Lee testified before the Coroner's inquest that he found the body of the slain factory girl in the

DANGEROUS CALOMEL. GOING OUT OF USE

A Safer, More Reliable Remedy Has Taken Its Place in the Drug Store and in the Home.

A few years ago, men, women and children took calomel for a sluggish liver and for constipation. They took risks when they did so, for calomel is a dangerous drug. Your family doctor will be the first to tell this if he discovers you dosing yourself with calomel.

But the drug trade has found a safer, more pleasant remedy than calomel in Dodson's Liver Tone.

Dealers tell us that their drug store sells Dodson's Liver Tone in practically every case of biliousness and liver trouble where calomel used to be taken.

Dodson's Liver Tone is a vegetable liver tonic that is absolutely harmless for children and grown people. It sells for 50 cents a bottle and is guaranteed to be entirely satisfactory by all druggists who will refund your money with a smile if it does not give quick, gentle relief without any of calomel's unpleasant after-effects.

THRONG AT THE COURTHOUSE DOORS AS THE TRIAL OPENED

FRANK, FEELING TIPTOP, SMILING AND CONFIDENT, IS UP LONG BEFORE TRIAL

Frank was escorted from the Tower to the courthouse shortly after 6 o'clock in the morning, nearly three hours before the trial was scheduled to begin. This was done to avoid the curious crowd which it was expected would be about the courthouse and thronging the corridors at 9 o'clock.

Frank was up and dressed and freshly shaven when Deputy Sheriff Plennie Miner appeared before his cell at the early hour.

"How are you feeling this morning Mr. Frank?" the deputy inquired.

"Tip top, only I'm mighty hungry," replied Frank.

Exhibiting the same poised confidence that has characterized him through three months since he was locked in a cell in the county jail, the young factory superintendent chatted freely with Miner on the way to the courthouse.

Sure He Will Be Freed.

He was attired in a natty light gray mohair suit and wore a fancy gray tie. His face was fuller and he appeared slightly heavier than when he was arrested shortly after the murder of the Phagan girl. He seemed cheerful and in the best of health.

"I am very sure of acquittal," he said, as he arrived at the courthouse. "I am glad that the trial is about to begin after this long wait. I have no fear of the outcome. I am not only innocent of the terrible crime, but I am innocent of any knowledge of it, save as the information has come to me since the officers came to my house that morning three months ago."

At this moment E. C. Essenbach, a relative of Frank, appeared with a tempting breakfast which was spread in the prisoners' room at the courthouse. Frank gave ocular proof that his appetite had not suffered from his long confinement as he proceeded to make way with the delicacies prepared for him.

Frank greeted his relative cheerfully and conversed with him for more than an hour. The topic seldom was on the crime or the trial which was about to begin. Long before the time set for the judge to take the bench other friends and relatives of the prisoner had appeared and some of them were permitted to talk to him.

Conley Ready For the Stand.

Jim Conley, Frank's accuser, was made ready for the trial early in the morning, although it was not probable that he would be called during the day.

He was given a shave and a new suit of clothes, as he had worn for the last three months the same shabby garments that he had on at the time he was arrested while washing a shirt at the National Pencil Factory.

Conley said that he was ready to go on the witness stand at an instant's notice. He declared that he would stick to the same story that he told in his last affidavit and which he has since repeated many times for the benefit of Solicitor Dorsey.

"If they had just let me face Mr. Frank, I could have made him tell the truth long before this," he asserted.

Less than half a hundred persons were waiting about the courthouse at 8 o'clock, an hour before the time set for the beginning of the trial. It was thought that not a large crowd would be clamoring for admission to the courtroom as it had become quite generally known that the small room would accommodate hardly more than the witnesses and the veniremen and that it would be necessary to exclude practically all spectators.

Much Preparation Made.

For no trial in the history of Georgia have such elaborate arrangements been made for the comfort of the comparatively small number of spectators who will gain admission, the attorneys who will handle the case, the jury and the newspaper men. Deputy Sheriff Plennie Miner has received much praise for the splendid preparations made.

Electric fans have been installed at every window and on the railing separating the spectators' seats from the bar, ozonators have been placed to keep the air purified. It probably will be the coolest and best ventilated place in Atlanta.

Not more than 250 spectators will be admitted. Approximately that number of chairs have been placed outside the inclosure. When they are filled the doors will be closed and no one else will be allowed in. No one will be permitted to occupy standing room.

The usual custom of permitting disinterested attorneys to occupy seats inside the bar will not be followed, and this particular part of the courtroom will be less crowded than during the average criminal trial.

How They Will Line Up.

Prosecuting Attorney Dorsey and at least five assistants will occupy a table directly in front of the bench and witness stand with the jury box close on the righthand side. Attorney Rosser with his assistants and the accused will be seated at a table to the left of the State's and farther away from the jury. The table for newspaper men is back of the State's table. The arrangements were agreed upon by the attorneys and the judge.

The table for the defense was selected by Attorney Rosser with a view to the number of persons who would wish to be near Frank during the trial. Seats have been arranged to the back of the table to accommodate at least 30 persons, friends and relatives of the accused, who have visited him constantly since he was confined at the Tower.

Deputy Sheriff Plennie Miner, who will have charge of the crowd and keeping order in court, will also have charge of the prisoners. Long before any crowd congregated around the courthouse Frank and Lee were brought from the Tower and placed in the room reserved for them. When court opened Frank took his place at the table reserved for his attorneys.

The court rule to segregate the witnesses will, of course, be enforced, but it may not be until twelve men have qualified as jurors, which will hardly be before the middle of the week.

When the witnesses are segregated they will be kept in the large courtroom on the floor above the trial room. A bailiff will be placed in the hall and one on the door of the witness chamber, and as the names are called they will be brought from the floor above to the court.

It is probable some rule will be made to keep the witnesses for the State and the defense separated, in which event the third floor of the building would have to be used.

The jury room was selected with a great deal of care. It is almost inaccessible from the outside and large and airy. Its windows are about twenty feet above an alleyway that runs on either side. Deputies will be kept in the alley to keep anyone from getting this close to the room.

From the time a juror is acceptable to both sides until the conclusion of the case he will not be allowed to go to his home or communicate with anyone except a fellow juror.

The least of the deputies' troubles will not be in handling the crowd that will gain admission to the court, but in handling the crowd that will daily congregate on the outside and wait through the day for news of the proceedings in the trial. Ten deputies and as many members of the county police will be on duty on the streets around the building.

Climate Failed; Medicine Effective

Rest, fresh air and well-cooked, nourishing food do help many persons suffering with Lung Trouble. But in many cases the disease is only temporarily "arrested," and something more is needed. Eckman's Alterative is a medicine for Throat and Lung Troubles and has brought about many complete recoveries—in many cases where the surroundings were not ideal. Judging by the many reports of recoveries received, we believe it should be used in every case of Lung Trouble. A remarkable case follows:

Weldon, Ill.

"My Dear Sir: Through your instrumentality I have been saved from a premature grave. On December 14, 1904, I was taken with Typhoid Pneumonia which developed into Consumption. In February, 1905, I went to Fort Worth, Texas, and later to Canon City, Colorado. After being there two weeks, my physician informed me that my case was hopeless. Three weeks later I returned home, weighing 103 pounds, the doctor having given me no assurance of reaching there alive.

"On July 14, 1905, I began taking Eckman's wonderful remedy for Consumption. To-day I weigh 158 pounds. I am stout and well and can do any kind of work about my grain elevator."

(Affidavit) ARTHUR WEBB.

Eckman's Alterative has been proven by many years' test to be most efficacious in cases of severe Throat and Lung Affections, Bronchitis, Bronchial Asthma, Stubborn Colds and in upbuilding the system. Does not contain narcotics, poisons or habit-forming drugs. For sale by all of Jacobs' Drug Stores and other leading druggists. Write the Eckman Laboratory, Philadelphia, Pa., for booklet telling of recoveries and additional evidence.

Venire Whipped Into Shape Rapidly; Negro Is Eligible

Within a minute or two after Deputy Sheriff Plennie Minor had called the court to order the examination process was applied to the venire panel of 144 men. From each panel of twelve one or more men were excused after being asked the formal questions and furnished a sufficient reason to bar them.

J. H. Jones, Deputy Clerk, called the names. F. W. Stone, No. 82 East Linden street, was excused on account of illness. R. F. Shedden was refused on an excuse of military exemption. Only one man was excused from the first twelve men.

H. R. Calloway, of No. 691 Piedmont avenue, first of the second panel, was not served. F. A. Hull, No. 180 Grant street, was excused on account of his age, 20 years. T. J. Henderson, No. 25 Woodson street, was excused as opposed to capital punishment. J. A. McCreary, No. 78 East North street, was excused because of his residence in DeKalb County. J. F. Patterson, of College Park, was excused on account of deafness. Five were excused from the second panel.

Negro Declared Eligible.

W. H. Scott, No. 215 Gordon street, was excused on account of ill health. He had a doctor's certificate. W. H. Abbott, Record Clerk of the court, was refused excusal. Only one man was excused from the third panel.

The first surprise came with the questioning of the fourth panel, when Earl Davis, a negro, was not excused. He was ruled eligible to jury duty. There is little prospect that he will be drawn as one of the jurors.

George Mathieson, Assistant Chief of County Police, was excused on account of his duties. John W. Alexander, capitalist, of No. 439 South Pryor street, was excused because of illness. W. M. Donehoo, of Buckhead, was let out on account of the death of his mother. E. A. Massa, of No. 305 East Fair street, was over age. J. H. Gilbert, of South Bend, was let out because of illness. The jury panels were thus being revised and made into a compact venire by this process of elimination.

Joel Hurt Out of Town.

The following men were excused in the selection of the fifth panel: George R. Wall, No. 139 Hill street, on account of illness; F. M. York, No. 221 Cooper street, on account of the illness of his wife; W. I. Brooks, No. 224 East Fair street, on account of having removed from Fulton County. The following were excused in the selection of the sixth panel: H. Maness, No. 112 Jefferson street, account of deafness; Joel Hurt was out of town.

Lynette Awtrey Wires Piteous Plea From Utah to Father in Acworth, Ga.

worth and Marietta society, and is considered one of the most beautiful girls in the former town.

The circumstances surrounding the disappearance of the young girl are shrouded in mystery, owing to the unwillingness of her relatives to discuss the matter. According to her friends, however, this is all that is known of the case:

Early in June Miss Awtrey left New York to tour Europe under the care of Miss Olive Faw, of Marietta, who takes parties of Cobb County girls across the Atlantic each year. There were a number of Miss Awtrey's friends in the party, and she had been viewing the trip with pleasure. Her first letters from abroad were optimistic in tone. She declared she was having a glorious time. Suddenly there was a change. In her letters the girl reflected the homesickness that, she declared, was making Europe distasteful to her. She said she wanted to return home and see her friends.

Miss Faw conducts two tours during the summer, and Miss Awtrey had arranged to take both of them. When she reached London, on the second tour, however, she wrote to her parents that she was coming home. She was next heard of in New York, about two weeks ago. She wired her father that she was homesick and wanted to come home, and asked him to send her some money and a ticket. He wired her the $200. That same evening Mr. Awtrey received a telegram asking him to meet her in Atlanta a few days later.

Found Trunk—Not Daughter.

On the day mentioned Mr. Awtrey was at the Terminal Station to greet his daughter. The train pulled in, the father waited, but the girl did not appear. Thinking perhaps she had missed her train and would come on a later one, he stayed in Atlanta all day and met every train from New York. Miss Awtrey still did not come. Mr. Awtrey investigated and found that her baggage had been checked through from New York to Atlanta and had arrived on the first train he had met.

Mr. Awtrey then returned to his home. He waited several days, and when his daughter still failed to appear, he asked the aid and advice of his brother, John Atwrey, of Marietta, and his brother-in-law, D. F. McClatchy. A few days later Mr. McClatchy came to Atlanta and enlisted the services of the Burns agency. Detective Chatham, attached to the Atlanta office, went to Marietta and Acworth to determine if any clews could be developed there. His quest was fruitless. The Burns agency then obtained a photograph from a photographer in Marietta, a relative of the missing girl, and it was scattered broadcast over the country.

Miss Awtrey's family has made every effort to keep the fact of her disappearance a secret, and her relatives and intimate friends have been sworn to secrecy. None of them will discuss the mystery, nor advance any theories to account for her disappearance.

"I'm sure I do not know what caused Lynette to run away," said Mrs. R. M. Moon, a distant relative of the girl. "It is as great a mystery to me as it is to anyone.

Elopement Is Rumored.

John Awtrey, missing girl's uncle, refused to make any comment whatever on his niece's unexplained absence.

"All I know is that she started home from New York and didn't get here," he said.

The girl's father could not be seen when a Georgian reporter visited Acworth Sunday night. One of her brothers declared that the members of her family entertain no theories of foul play or of a love affair.

"We are satisfied with the situation," he said. "She has been located."

Despite the assertions of the members of the girl's family that her disappearance is not the culmination of a love affair, several of Miss Awtrey's friends, in discussing the case, persist in mentioning the name of a young man, whose home is in Atlanta, who has been an ardent suitor of Miss Awtrey's for the past year. The suit of the young Atlantan, it is said, has not met with the approval of the girl's family, and it is intimated that he has been forbidden to call on her.

The theory evolved out of these facts by Miss Awtrey's friends is that the girl really came to Atlanta from New York and that her admirer met her here and persuaded her to elope with him.

Giant Negro Hunted For White Slavery

WINCHESTER, VA., July 28.—Despite the fact that several hundred regulars of the various cavalry regiments camped near town at the maneuver grounds have searched for him, the giant negro Franklin, who, it is alleged, was engaged in a white slave traffic and whose place near the campgrounds was raided on Thursday night by the Sheriff, so far has eluded capture.

The white women who were found in the company of a number of negro troopers of the Tenth Cavalry at 2 o'clock in the morning, when Franklin's tent was surrounded, are still in jail.

Both wooers are about 21 years old and both are members of the senior class at Princeton University, which is in the town where Miss Cleveland has spent most of her life. The classmates have been friends for years.

TRIAL INTEREST SETS RECORD FOR COUNTY

Brilliant Array of Lawyers and the Dramatic Features of the Case Make Spectacular Clash.

No murder trial in Fulton County ever has approached the spectacular interest which is in prospect in the Frank case from the first, sharp skirmish between the opposing attorneys, through the long, bitter legal battle, and to the final pleas of the prosecution and the defense.

The presence of Luther Z. Rosser and Reuben R. Arnold in the brilliant array of legal talent at once made certain that the trial would be out of the ordinary. Neither has the reputation of making a half-hearted fight when there is anything at stake. This time it is a man's life that is depending upon their legal ability, their shrewdness and their eloquence.

Both have a disconcerting habit of carrying the fight to their opponents. In ring parlance, they do not give their courtroom rivals a chance to "get set." This is going to keep the spectators constantly on the edge of expectation, and will furnish a series of exciting incidents that will give the Frank trial a place by itself in the criminal annals of Georgia.

Crisis When Conley Is Grilled.

To describe Rosser's tactics as aggressive is expressing it euphemistically. If he were only aggressive, his name would not inspire the trepidation that now is felt by persons who have to face him in the witness box or by young lawyers who have to pit their strength against him.

Rosser and Arnold are at their best when they are cross-examining the witnesses called by the other side. This fact is expected to bring about the most thrilling situation of the entire trial in the witness box grilling of the negro Jim Conley. Not satisfied with seeking to prove the entire innocence of their client, the two lawyers propose to show that Conley himself is the man who attacked Mary Phagan in the National Pencil Factory and flung her dead body upon the trash heap in the basement.

From whom are they to get testimony of this startling nature?

Certainly from no one else than the negro, and from him they intend to get it. It is a bold plan, but one characteristic of the two-handed fighting methods of Rosser. Anyone who has seen a witness made the object of Rosser's attack knows that Jim Conley is in for a bad day when he is called to the stand to testify that Leo Frank had him assist in the disposal of Mary Phagan's body.

Chance Seen for Confession.

Only a Rosser would have the courage of his convictions to expect to break down the negro after he repeatedly had told the remarkable story of finding the girl's dead body on the second floor of the pencil factory and carrying her, at Frank's direction and with Frank's assistance, down the elevator into the basement.

Rosser's plan opens up the dramatic possibility of a courtroom confession from Conley. In the opinion of those who are convinced of Frank's innocence and the negro's guilt, it would not be a matter of great surprise if Conley, under the fire of questions directed at him by Rosser and Arnold, should collapse and confess he alone was concerned in the crime.

The cross-examination of Conley is certain to be one of the spectacular features of the trial. His vivid tale, under the lead of questions by Solicitor Dorsey and Attorney Frank A. Hooper, will be repeated to the courtroom full of spectators. It will lose none of its dramatic elements, in that its essential features already are well known to the public. They are waiting to hear it first hand from the negro's lips.

Raked Up His Past Life.

Then Conley will be turned over to the scarcely tender mercies of counsel for Frank. He probably will be on the rack for hours. Whether he will be able to stand the ordeal is problematical. No point in his history that could have any possible bearing on the case will be overlooked. The defense is in possession of a mass of information relating to Conley's conduct for years. He will be asked in regard to every one of these circumstances.

Before the events of the day of the tragedy are reached the negro will have undergone a searching examination of significant incidents in his past life. Then his story of his part in the crime will be attacked. The discrepancies will be brought out in the glare of the cross-examination. The falsehoods that he told for days after he was arrested will be resurrected. All of his affidavits will be ridiculed. The two attorneys will join in an effort to break down and utterly to discredit the story to which he now sticks. Whether or not they are successful, their attempt will be a dramatic feature of the trial.

A fight, scarcely less spectacular, will develop over the story of William H. Mincey. This time the attorneys for the prosecution will be in the role of scoffers. Mincey has declared that he heard Conley boasting of killing a girl.

Mincey, a quiet—almost diffident—type of the country pedagogue, will be made the target for the Solicitor's and Attorney Hooper's fire of questions. They will seek to show that Mincey never saw Conley the afternoon of April 26, when Mincey asserted he had the conversation with the negro.

Climax When Frank Is Called.

A hot fight also will be precipitated by the demand of the defense that the State make known the identity, at the beginning of the trial, of all the witnesses against Frank. Solicitor Dorsey has said that he will fight any demand of this sort.

The subpenas duces tecum issued by the defense will form another casus belli that is expected to provide a spirited skirmish between the attorneys at the beginning of the trial. The defense insists on having in court, for the purpose of comparison, all of the affidavits taken from Jim Conley, Newt Lee, Monteen Stover, W. M. Matthews and others. Dorsey declares this is a flimsy trick to discredit the State's witnesses, and proposes to resist to the extent of his ability any move to compel him to comply with the demand.

Col. Brewster Denies Aiding Dorsey in Case

Colonel P. H. Brewster has written The Georgian a letter correcting a statement in The Sunday American. The letter quotes the report that Colonel Brewster had aided Mr. Dorsey and proceeds:

"Where such information could have been obtained I can not understand, since it is absolutely false.

"I have had nothing whatever to do with the Frank case. My advice has not been even sought as to any question inolved in the case, nor have I volunteered it, and I have prepared no briefs on any phase of the case. Mr Dorsey, the Solicitor General, is fully competent to meet every demand his office imposes on him, and I do not wish the impression to be made that he leans on me or others, nor that I am interested in any way in the prosecution of Mr. Frank.

"The statement made in your Sunday issue is unjust to me, to the prosecution and the defense, and therefore I trust you will at once correct this statement."

ROBBER'S ROLE TOO MUCH FOR DETECTIVE

Man Who Trapped Reeves and Miller Says It Is Exciting, but Once Is Enough.

Playing burglar for six weeks in the interest of society is a "ticklish business," according to J. A. Harris, former railroad detective. He says he doesn't want to try it again.

Harris, whose identity has just been disclosed, is the man who caused the undoing of T. W. Reeves and R. W. Miller, accused as the leaders of a burglar band and who are now in the Tower facing numerous charges. Working as a pal side by side with Reeves and Miller in different jobs, Harris obtained information that enabled city detectives to run the alleged burglars to earth last week.

Detectives say Harris' feat is one of the most daring ever attempted in this section in an effort to bag criminals. Harris' own story in court of how he acted the role of burglar follows:

"My part in this affair has been solely to aid the detectives in rounding up these men, who I felt were a menace to society. I have known Reeves and Miller for some time. A few weeks ago I was approached by them to join in a plan to rob. They told me they were making lots of money, and making it easy, and that they were in no danger; that they were getting away with their game for the reason that they were both above suspicion. I saw that here was an opportunity to do a good turn, and I immediately took hold of it. I told them I would like to make some of this easy money, and fell for their game—at least, I convinced them I did.

"They seemed to trust me implicitly, and I was soon completely in their confidence.

"When I realized that they meant business and that I really could become a fake burglar, my next step was to report to Chief of Detectives Lanford. I assured the Chief I could trap this gang, and he told me to go ahead and work the game for all it was worth. I would meet with Reeves and Miller, we would discuss and frame up possible jobs, and I would report to Chief Lanford as quickly as possible.

"I made daily reports to the Chief, putting him wise to every move being made by the gang. Sometimes I would meet the Chief at his home and sometimes I would slip down to his office in the police station. But I would never risk the telephone.

"The night Reeves and Miller were captured in Gober's store in Carroll street I was along and made my escape from the store. Of course, the detectives let me get away. As I dashed away from the store I heard several pistol shots—the detectives were shooting into the air.

"But I've got enough now—I don't want another job like this."

Committee Ready For Currency Bill

DR. DUBOSE TAKES RAP AT 'LIBERALS'

Noted Minister Says Nothing Is Cheaper or Easier Than So-Called "Advanced Thought."

Declaring that there is nothing cheaper and nothing easier than to assume the role of "heretic," Dr. H. M. DuBose, pastor of the First Methodist Church of Atlanta, and one of the most widely known ministers of the State, has issued a statement in which he sharply criticises the views of the so-called "liberals."

Dr. DuBose's statement was called forth by the recent utterances of Dr. J. B. Robins, pastor of Trinity Church, who declared that the "heretic of to-day is the preacher of to-morrow."

"My mature conviction," said Dr. DuBose, "is that in all the so-called 'liberal,' 'advanced' or 'new thought' of the day there is little that deserves serious criticism, for most of it is mere meaningless talk without a premise and reasoned to a sequence of thin air. Likewise the 'advanced ideas' and new thought' set forth, for the most part, are overworn and belated sophistries.

"As to the role of the heretic, there is no more overworked harlequinry in all the worldfi There is nothing cheaper and nothing easier. It is a business that is carried on with small capital."

The father of the brice-elect deposited a cash bond of $ 00 that his daughter will not gossip, run around with other men and will look to her husband's satisfaction.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS CONTINUE GROWTH

Central Presbyterian Sunday school stands second on the list, being outranked only by the First Christian. Other churches are forging rapidly to the front.

During the coming year it is planned to conduct a campaign which will interest the young people with a view to enhancing the increase in Sunday school attendance in Atlanta.

WHOLE OF SOUTH ENTHRALLED BY PHAGAN CASE

Story of Pretty Little Girl's Death Gripped Public, Eager to Discover Her Slayer.

As Leo Frank faces to-day the ordeal decreed by law that for man's life, man's life shall pay, interest in his case that has held Atlanta, Georgia and the South enthralled for three months has diminished not a whit since the Sunday morning the body of the little factory girl was found.

Wise judges of news, men who are paid thousands of dollars each year for their knowledge of the fickleness of the public, men who can time to the second the period when interest dies in one thing before the public eye to be born anew in another, have for years contended that no single item of news can sustain its interest longer than one brief week.

And yet for three months the public has read of Mary Phagan's death and the quest for her slayer and their demand for this news has been insatiable.

That the vaunted insight of these news experts is as shallow as the mirror reflection of a beauty of the stage is the thought that common logic first presents.

Insight of Experts Borne Out.

The insight of these experts has not been at fault. On the contrary, it has been sustained. For in the mystery veiling the death of Mary Phagan and the trial of Leo Frank as her slayer, a more varied array of things that interest, thrill, horrify, shock and make men think is presented than in any one case developed since typesetting machines made the modern newspaper possible.

Harry Thaw's case comes to mind, that tragedy of romance that presented in the same cast of characters the brilliant Lothario, the man of millions, and a woman as fair as the dawn. But there was never the element of mystery in the slaying of Stanford White. District Attorney Jerome described it pretty well as a commonplace tragedy of the tenderloin.

The only question that confronted the public was whether there was a law decreed by God that a man should take up arms and avenge his family honor that should nullify the law made by man that decreed that the courts of the country and the judgment of heaven could alone mete out reparation for personal injury.

But in the Phagan case, there is a mystery so deep, so impenetrable, that there are thousands in Atlanta who believe that Mary Phagan's slayer walks about to-day a free man as another battles for his life accused of his crime.

Victim Only a Child.

There was mystery in the famous case of Henry Clay Beattie, the Virginia aristocrat, who met death in the electric chair for slaying his wife after his infatuation for Beulah Binford.

But again, we have a feature of the Phagan case which was missing in the Beattie tragedy that makes the Atlanta mystery as grippingly pitiful as the Virginia problem was sordid.

For in the Phagan case a child is one of the principals. All the world may love a lover, but all the world loves a child more. And when the innocent, wistful, appealing face of the little factory girl first appeared in the public prints more heart-strings were touched than there were thrills caused in all the sinister revelations of the Virginia trial.

The child interest has made many a case appeal to the public interest more than struggles of statesmen, ravages of nature, or even the love of man for woman. The entire United States waited breathlessly for news of the capture of the kidnapers of little Billy Whitla, the sturdy Pennsylvania lad, in 1909.

But when the kidnapers were taken and Billy Whitla returned safe and sound and maybe a little happier from his thrilling experience to the home of his parents, the public forgot all about little Billy and to-day, in four short years, there are few who remember his case at all. For Billy Whitla lived. Mary Phagan died.

Lamana Case Was Absorbing.

In 1907 the hearts of every mother and father in the Southland bled for the wealthy father and mother of the little Lamana boy, who was taken from their New Orleans home by members of the Crescent City Mafia. Interest was intense at every period of the search and public sentiment was kindled near to the blazing point when the beheaded body of the boy was found in a Louisiana swamp.

But as thrilling as was the Lamana case, it did not have that quality that is so essential to make a case universally absorbing. The Lamanas were foreigners, the kidnapers were foreigners. And Americans want an American in their news stories.

And so on and on. Recall any case of thrilling interest to your mind, analyze it, and you will discover that the Phagan case has features which that case does not possess and any one of those features would make a story of breathless interest in itself.

STREET CAR HITS WAGON, KILLING DAIRYMAN

R. R. Gresham, Father of Ten, Dies Three Hours After Crash. Thrown Forty Feet.

R. R. Gresham, a dairyman residing in Wyman street, Kirkwood, was struck by an outbound Kirkwood car at Whitefoord avenue early Monday morning and received injuries from which he died three hours later without regaining consciousness.

Gresham's skull was fractured, his throat gashed and his ankle broken.

The accident occurred when the dairyman, driving his wagon into Atlanta, attempted to cross the car tracks in front of an approaching car. The wagon was smashed into splinters by the speeding car and its driver thrown 40 feet into a ditch. The horse was knocked over on its side amid the debris of the vehicle.

Gresham was picked up unconscious and hurried in an ambulance to the Atlanta Hospital. Physicians who attended him held out little hope for his recovery. He died three hours later.

Mr. Gresham was 52 years old, married and the father of ten children. But one member of the family, Herman Gresham, a son, reached the injured man before he died.

MISS PANKHURST LEADS ATTACK ON PREMIER

Several Policemen Are Injured in Battle With Militants Storming Asquith's Home.

Special Cable to The Georgian.

LONDON, July 28.—Twenty-four men and women to-day were fined or ordered to furnish bonds to keep the peace as the result of the riots of yesterday, when Sylvia Pankhurst, the daughter of the militant leader, led a mob to storm Premier Asquith's house.

A huge crowd followed in the wake of the suffragettes as they began the march to the Premier's house, but the police, aided by motor busses, blocked the way of the on-rushing mob.

In the fight that followed, several officers were injured, but the police dispersed the mob, after arresting the militant leader's daughter and some of her followers.

The police had been searching for Sylvia as her release license under the "cat-and-mouse" act had expired. She was removed to Halloway jail to continue her sentence for inciting to riot. Before being taken to jail Miss Pankhurst promised to lead a greater uprising than ever before upon her release.

Mrs. Pethick Lawrence, Lady Sybil Smith and Miss Evelyn Sharpe, who were sentenced to Halloway jail for rioting during the recent suffragette demonstration were released today. They had gone on a hunger strike immediately after being taken to jail.

REMOVAL OF U. S. CONSUL ASKED BY TEXANS

American Envoy at Juarez Charged With Neglecting to Protect His Countrymen.

WASHINGTON, July 28.—The removal from office of Thomas Edwards, the American Consul at Juarez, Mex., was requested of the State Department to-day by Representative Smith, of Texas, who charges that Edwards has been negligent in relieving American refugees at Madera. Representative Smith acted on complaint of his constitutents in the El Paso district.

The Congressman also urged Secretary Bryan to stop the shipments of arms and ammunition from this country to the Huerta administration.

"I informed the Secretary of State," said Representative Smith, "that so long as we do not recognize the Huerta Government we should not favor it by allowing it to secure arms from this country. We deny that they have a constitutional government and yet they are allowed to get arms and ammunition. We ought to allow both factions to have war supplies or we ought to give the privilege to neither of them."

Smith says Bryan did not indicate what action would be taken regarding his complaints.

Smith received telegrams to-day from his constituents saying that 35 Americans are in peril at Madera among them a number of women and children.

U. S. to Hunt Down Dixon's Assailant.

WASHINGTON, July 28.—"Ambassador Wilson—2:30 o'clock."

This simple announcement, placed at the bottom of President Wilson's official list of callers to-day, was the only indication at the White House that the most momentous conference at the White House scheduled since President Roosevelt maneuvered the Russian-Japanese peace conclave was due to take place.

For the past 36 hours the President has had before him the lengthy report dictated by Ambassador Wilson detailing all the events of importance which have happened in Mexico from the time the Diaz regime first began to topple down to the attempted murder of Charles B. Dixon, the American immigration official, at Juarez on Saturday.

Bryan Studies Report.

Secretary Bryan, the first caller at the White House to-day, was closeted with the President for more than an hour, while he discussed the details of the Wilson report.

In discussing the Mexican situation with the newspaper cabinet to-day the President authorized the statement that nothing has happened within the past ten days to make matters better or worse.

The President further said that, as he has not yet conferred with Ambassador Wilson, he can not announce any future policy with respect to President Huerta or Mexico for the reason that he has not decided upon one.

To Hunt Dixon's Assailant.

The President begged to be excused from making any comment upon the attempted assassination of Charles B. Dixon, the American immigration official, who was shot at Juarez on Saturday because, he said, he did not have all the facts in the case before him as yet.

The President assured the correspondents, however, that he has ordered a rigid investigation of the matter and that the State Department will do everything possible to hunt down the guilty parties.

Mexican Consul Says Negroes Shot Dixon.

EL PASO, TEX., July 28.—Blame for the shooting of United States Immigration Inspector Charles B. Dixon was laid upon a Mexican negro lieutenant named Sainz, of General Salazar's army, and two American negroes, in a statement issued to-day by Mexican Consul Miranda.

According to Consul Miranda's version of the shooting, the two American negroes planned the attack upon Dixon on account of his activity in investigatig a "white slave" case and drew the Mexican negro into the scheme to do the shooting.

Federal investigators have reported to the Mexican Consul here that Dixon was seized by Salazar's soldiers without any orders.

Dixon was released without bond and brought to El Paso yesterday. He was pronounced out of danger by Dr. J. W. Tappan, immigration service surgeon.

The two American negroes who were arrested as plotters against Dixon were Arthur Walker and Harry Bell. They have been irregular soldiers in Salazar's command. Bell was said to have escaped into Mexico while awaiting trial on a charge of "white slavery." Walekr is also wanted on the same charge in the United States.

SIDELIGHTS on GEORGIA POLITICS

by JAMES B. NEVIN

There seems to be little, if any, doubt that the Legislature is to hurry along the general tax act, just as it has hurried along the general appropriations bill.

There are, counting to-day, exactly fourteen working days left to the Legislature's credit. This does not include two Saturdays and two Sundays, however.

It, therefore, may be seen that the Legislature can, if it will, place both the appropriations bill and the tax acts—the general tax act, at least—in the hands of the Executive ten days ahead of adjournment, as he has requested.

If this is done—and it likely will be done—the present Legislature will have accomplished a record of speed never before equaled in the history of the State.

Despite all the complaining and criticism to the contrary, the present Legislature has been the most prompt, within the memory of any Georgian, in the matter of passing the two vitally big and necessary measures of the session—the general appropriations bill and the general tax act.

Credit must be awarded the committee heads, the committees and the Speaker for this remarkable achievement, and President Anderson has given his assurance that the promptness of the House shall be duplicated in the Senate this week and next.

Taken altogether, the record of the Legislature as made up for this session is all right and a credit.

It is, indeed, far better than usual.

Mr. Shuptrine, of Chatham is very much opposed to the measure permitting the addition of a kindergarten system to the public schools of the State.

Mr. Shuptrine does not believe the Constitution of the State contemplates anything of the kind, and, moreover, he thinks it would be but the first step in the direction of greatly expanding the school fund, already smaller than the necessities of the State seem to warrant.

"If we permit this innovation, not warranted in the fundamental law at all, we shall have application made within the life of the present Legislature, perhaps, for more funds to meet the kindergarten requirements," said Mr. Shuptrin to-day.

"I know that it is proposed to add this feature to the school system without additional appropriations to cover it, but that is merely a sop to get the bill on the statute books. Once we inaugurate this system, we shall have to take care of it, and it will be argued that funds as now appropriated are not sufficient to handle the new department.

"Georgia already is dealing most generously with her schools—she is straining the limit to take care of them—and I am not complaining so much about that. But I do think it would be a sad mistake to add any further burdens to her budget—and certainly along the line of providing public education to tots from 4 to 6 years of age."

Senator M. C. Tarver has abandoned for the present his effort to get the Representatives and Senators of the various counties affected, interested in the proposed Chickamauga judicial circuit.

"The bill could not be passed at this session," said Mr. Tarver, "for several of the Representatives of the counties proposed for the new circuit are opposed to any change of the present arrangement. Others, while desiring a change, couldn't get together on an arrangement of counties that was mutually satisfactory."

Mr. Searcey's bill to make the buyer and the seller equally guilty in "blind tiger" cases, was killed in the Senate, upon the theory that it affords the "blind tiger" exactly the protection he desires, rather than retards him in the operation of his business.

"The one thing a 'blind tiger' dreads above all other things," said a Senator, discussing the bill, "is that among his numerous customers may be one who will tell.

"This bill removes that dread, for anybody who reported a 'tiger' under this measure would become a criminal himself. Besides, because of the law which excuses a man from incriminating himself in testifying, this man would become immediately incompetent as a witness.

"It is hard enough now to convict 'blind tigers', and it would be a thousand times harder under this law.

"Prohibitionists who seek to go the limits this bill proposes are to be commended for their zeal, perhaps, but surely not for their common sense. This bill is sound enough in theory, if you view it from a certain angle, but it falls to pieces as a practical measure and would defeat the very object its author had in mind when he framed it."

The Senate defeated the measure by a vote of 18 to 22, which was not such a wide margin of defeat, after all.

MAULS MAN FOR TALKING TO WIFE

W. M. Sexton, No. 18 Gaskill street, Monday morning remarked to Recorder Broyles that he had "cautioned this guy about talking to his wife," in explaining why he attacked W. L. Patterson, of No. 57 Powell street, Sunday night at the close of services in St. Luke's Methodist Church in Powell street.

Patterson told the court that Sexton is "insanely jealous."

Sexton, who is separated from his wife, attacked Patterson a short distance from the church after he had seen him talking to Mrs. Sexton inside of the church. Patterson said Mrs. Sexton called to him after the congregation had been dismissed, and that he meant no harm by conversing with her. He said Sexton lay in wait for him in a dark spot in Powell street and assailed him with metal knucks. Sexton denied this.

The two men were pummeling one another vigorously when interrupted by Detective Coker and Policeman Boggus, who were on their way home from the church service. Metal knucks were found on the ground. Patterson displayed an abrasion on his head, which he said was made by the knucks.

When Sexton told Judge Broyles he had warned his wife not to talk to other men, the Recorder informed him that as he was separated from his wife he had no right to beat up every person he saw talking to her."

The jealous husband was fined $25.75 and the case of Patterson was dismissed.

To-day the delegates left Nish for the Roumanian capitol to begin their deliberations.

SEARCY'S LIQUOR BILL REVIVED IN SENATE

Resolution Providing for Its Reconsideration Adopted—Whitewashing of Soule Opposed.

The adoption of a resolution calling for the reconsideration of the Searcy prohibition bill, making the selling of liquor purchased from a "blind tiger" a misdemeanor, which was defeated in the Georgia Senate Friday, featured the session Monday. The bill probably will come up again this week under special order rule. A hot fight is expected.

Senators Foster and Hixon offered a resolution "whitewashing" the charges against President A. M. Soule, of the State Agricultural College. It sets forth that President Soule has rendered valuable service which should be recognized by the withdrawal of the charges, now pending in the House. The resolution will be considered Tuesday.

That a bitter contest will take place when it is presented for adoption was indicated Monday by Senator McGregor, who declared he would fight the measure to the last ditch, on the grounds that it is a "complete 'whitewash' without any sort of investigation."

The most important new bill introduced in the Senate Monday was that by Senator McGregor, limiting the power of the Governor in calling out troops in case of disorder. The bill aims to take the State militia out of the so-called police jurisdiction, and requires affidavits by civil authorities before the Governor may call out troops.

Senator Tarver's bill providing for the appointment of a State commission to investigate conditions as regards drug users, with a view to establishing a State sanitarium for them, was passed by the Senate.

Senator Bush's bill making the State Superintendent of Education an ex-officio member of the eleven agricultural schools of the State was lost after President Randolph Anderson made a fight on the measure.

Senator McNeil's bill providing for a new Great Seal of State, changing the date 1799 to 1776, commemorating the Declaration of Independence, was sent back to the committee.

DR. STARNES BIDS ATLANTA GOODBYE

One-third of the seats in the Auditorium were filled Sunday afternoon for the farewell concert given by Dr. Percy Starnes and Mrs. Starnes.

A program in which Mozart's "Magic Flute" predominated, and which contained two compositions by the organist himself, was well received. The overture to Wagner's "Tannhauser," which was to have been the final number, was omitted because the organ got out of order. In its place, Dr. Starnes made a little speech of farewell. He said he would take away with him the pleasant recollection that his Atlanta audiences have been uniformly attentive and cordial.

Dr. Starnes' two compositions were "Improvisations Upon a Scotch Melody," the air being "Auld Lang Syne," and a song, "A Lake and a Fairy Boat," which Mrs. Starnes sang.

Clarence H. Mackay Sued for $2,000,000

NEW YORK, July 28.—That Clarence H. Mackay, to keep up the pace of a millionaire's son, borrowed heavily in Wall Street and failed to pay back after he had inherited $40,000,000 from the estate of his father, is charged in a suit brought by W. L. Stow, a broker, for an accounting of more than $2,000,000.

The plaintiff was at the head of the firm of W. L. Stow & Co., which failed for $6,000,000 some years ago. He charges that Mr. Mackay is directly responsible for that failure by failing to meet obligations contracted in a pool organized to buy and control stocks and bonds of the Mexican Central Railway.

Kings to Send Costly Gifts to Miss Wilson

WASHINGTON, July 28.—Despite President Wilson's attitude in discouraging the gift of Baltimore Democrats to his daughter, Jessie, at her wedding next November to Francis B. Sayre, kings and princes of foreign nations will flood the White House with costly gifts.

The marriage of a President's son or daughter is the only occasion on which foreign governments can get around the American constitution, which forbids the President accepting personal gifts from rulers of foreign nations.

The gifts from foreign potentates, naturally, cannot be discouraged.

Panama Has 'Noah;' Believers Build Ark

Special Cable to The Georgian.

PANAMA, July 28.—Word has been received from Penonome, a town in the interior of the republic, that Segundo Sanchez, a native, has proclaimed himself the Messiah and has issued a "prophecy" of the destruction of the world by a deluge in a short time.

Some of his 80 adherents are building an ark, while others are collecting pairs of animals of all species found in the region.

Gabrielle Ray Wins Suit Against Loder

LONDON, July 28.—Gabrielle Ray, the famous Gayety beauty, to-day won her suit against her husband, Eric Loder, for the restoration of her conjugal rights. Loder made no defense.

The actress and Loder, who is the son of the late Alfred Loder and grandson of the late Sir Robert Loder, were married March 1, 1912. The marriage was to have taken place the previous day, but Miss Ray kept Loder "waiting at the church."

Berlin Bars Organ Grinders; Must Toil

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

BERLIN, July 28.—The Berlin police have barred organ grinders, declaring that the majority of them are strong enough to work, and that there is too much good music to be heard to have one's nerves racked by hand-organs.

SLATON WARNS OF BUDGET IN MESSAGE

Advises Assembly Appropriations Will Exceed Revenue if Care Is Not Taken.

A statement showing the general appropriation bill will carry $280,629 more than the revenue to be collected in 1914, estimating the latter on the 1913 basis, unless means for increasing the income are devised, featured Governor John M. Slaton's message to the General Assembly Monday.

Governor Slaton submits figures of the State Comptroller showing that fifteen counties suffered a loss of $130,615 in tax returns to date.

The Governor also calls attention to the present inadequacy of the election and appointment of United States Senators and calls for legislation along this line.

Under the present law, the Governor points out, the executive has no power of appointment in the case of the death of a Senator. The State may also be without a Senator from March, the time of expiration of the term, until June, when the Legislature convenes.

Governor Slaton therefore has recommended that the Secretary of State be empowered to canvass the vote for United States Senator immediately following the election. The Governor has corresponded with Senator Hoke Smith and Senator Bacon in regard to this.

A further recommendation by the Governor calls attention to an appropriation of $500 for expenses of the State Agricultural School.

State Lacks Rail and Utilities Body

HARRISBURG, PA., July 28.—Pennsylvania is without a State Railroad Commission or a Public Service Commission.

Governor Tener's approval of the act creating the new commission Saturday night abolished the State Railroad Commission, but as he did not name the new commission the office will be continued without any commissioners.

Urges Bathing Skirts For 'Unshapely' Men

CHICAGO, July 28.—A legal fight was started to-day by Dr. Rosalie M. Ladova, who was arrested at a park bathing beach because she appeared in a Sunday afternoon crowd of swimmers in bloomers.

"Women can not swim well in skirts," said Dr. Ladova to-day. "Their figures are rounded so that they do not need as thorough covering as men. Men bathers go about almost naked. Their hideous figures should be covered from their necks to their toes. They should be compelled to wear the skirts."

MEN WELCOME MOTHER'S FRIEND

A Duty That Every Man Owes to Those Who Perpetuate the Race.

It is just as important that men should know of progressive methods in advance of motherhood. The suffering, pain and distress incident to child-bearing can be easily avoided by having at hand a bottle of Mother's Friend.

This is a wonderful penetrating, external application that relieves all tension upon the muscles and enables them to expand without the painful strain upon the ligaments. Thus there is avoided all those nervous spells; the tendency to nausea or morning sickness is counteracted, and a bright, sunny, happy disposition is preserved that reflects wonderfully upon the character and temperament of the little one soon to open its eyes in bewilderment at the joy of his arrival. You can obtain a bottle of "Mother's Friend" at any drug store at $1.00, and it will be the best dollar's worth you ever obtained. It preserves the mother's health, enables her to make a quick and complete recovery, and thus renewed strength she will eagerly devote herself to the care and attention which mean so much to the welfare of the child. Write to the Bradfield Regulator Co., 129 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga., for their valuable and instructive book of guidance for expectant mothers. Get a bottle of Mother's Friend to-day.

PONY RIVALS ARE HUSTLING IN 3 LAST DAYS

Standing Changes Fast—County Contestants Redouble Efforts. Shetlands To Be Exhibited.

Four yearly subscriptions, with Red Letter Ballots, counting in all 8,000 votes—were brought in by one contestant in The Georgian and American pony contest.

"Was it a rival in your district?" the contest manager asks the boys and girls. "You don't know. Very likely, it was. Nothing is more treacherous nowadays than over-confidence.

"Three days remain, after Monday. The strain soon will be over. There is not a boy or girl in the race who can not well afford to put every effort into the work for this brief, final spurt."

Some May Be Disappointed.

When the contestants come into the office, the contest manager gets an excellent line on their ideas. Sometimes they are amusing. There are several boys and girls who were leading a week ago by good margins. Strangely enough, in spite of repeated warnings, these youngsters will not believe that they are behind now. This is the attitude which will bring bitter disappointment when the final standings are published next Sunday, and the winners announced.

One feature of the contest upon which little stress has been put is the fact that the boy or girl who gets the greatest total of votes has first choice of all twenty-two ponies, and so on down the list. For the ambitious lad it is not enough to win in his district. He wants also to get one of the first selections from the herd of twenty-two Shetlands.

No Apathy in Country.

True, it may happen that the very last pony may suit the very last contestant to perfection. But, again, the chances are it will not.

There is no apathy in the country districts. The work done by the contestants outside of Atlanta is remarkable.

The ponies were to have been paraded Sunday, but the weather was not propitious. If the weather does not agaic interfere the ponies will be shown in the business section of Atlanta Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock.

VICTIM OF NEGRO REGRETS HANGING

Wounded Dunbar Merchant Not in Sympathy With Houston County Mob's Action.

MACON, July 28.—When G. F. Hammock, a merchant of Dunbar, was told at a private hospital here to-day that John Shake, the negro who shot him Saturday night, had been lynched by a Houston County mob, he said:

"I am sorry the boys did that. Shake was a bad negro, all right, but it wasn't right to hang him."

Hammock is not seriously injured, though weak from loss of blood. He expects to return to his home this week.

Hammock detected the negro burglarizing his store about midnight. When he called on Shake to surrender, the negro fired a shotgun. The shot fractured Hammock's left wrist and also caused a painful wound in the chest.

The negro escaped and took refuge in the swamps below Wellston. A mob caught him late Sunday afternoon. After confessing that he did the shooting, the negro was hanged to a tree on the outskirts of Dunbar.

NEW AFFIDAVITS IN STRIKE QUIZ STARTLING

Sensational Stories Are Expected From Persons Who Saw Troops Shoot Citizens at Augusta.

Several startling affidavits from eyewitnesses, it is understood, will be introduced by Representative Beck when the legislative inquiry into the recent Augusta strike and the killing of three citizens is resumed Tuesday in the Capitol before the Committee on Military Affairs.

The committee also has summoned the officers and a number of privates who were present at the time of the shooting.

In the following article Attorney P. C. McDuffie, who is retained in the investigation, discusses "military law and martial rule in Georgia."

By P. C. McDUFFIE.

At the time of the Augusta strike the militia established an imaginary dead line. No physical obstruction, ropes, wires, red lights or danger signals warned the people of the military death-trap. It was simply an intangible nothing, beyond which the whim and caprice of the commander had determined the people of that city should not pass.

They did not set apart a certain place and say that anybody coming willfully and intentionally within its boundaries shall be arrested, but without previous notice drew an imaginary line and then without warning proceeded to riddle with bullets three unarmed, innocent men, who could not possibly have intended to commit violence of any sort, nor could they have been engaged in any riot, mob or other unlawful act.

Mr. R. G. Price, attorney, of Louisville, Ga., states that he was in Augusta at the time of the tragedy, and at the scene of the shooting with his brother, Dr. Price, of that city. He naturally thought that he and his brother owed the struggling men the duty of assistance after they were shot, but he says they were prevented from going to them by a volley of shots from the soldiers, narrowly escaping personal injury.

If these things can be done with impunity, surely the militia is paramount to civil authority, which heretofore has been shown, is in direct conflict both with the statutory law and the Constitution of Georgia.

"Martial" and "Military" Law.

Military law is the body of rules and regulations that have been prescribed for the government of the army and for the militia when called into active service. In Georgia the Articles of War governing the army of the United States have been adopted and are binding upon the militia. Military offense, within the meaning of the militia laws, is a violation of these rules and regulations—they are not criminal offenses, as defined in the several State Constitutions. Neglect of duty, non-attendance on drills, insubordination, general disorder are common examples. Martial rule or martial law, as it is frequently incorrectly expressed, is not synonymous with military law.

There are occasions when martial rule can be properly applied, but no sane man will contend that the Augusta disturbance justified its enforcement. If in foreign invasion or civil war the courts are actually closed and it is impossible to administer criminal justice according to law, then, in the theater of active military operations, where war really prevails, there is a necessity to furnish a substitute for the civil authority, and as no power is left but the military, it is allowed to govern by martial rule until the laws can have their free course.

Constitution Paramount.

Martial rule is employed when force may expel the civil authorities from a part of the State, or when the civil law is unable to perform its functions, the military being on the spot to execute it where no civil authority exists. When it does exist the Constitution is imperative that it shall be paramount to the military.

The power of arrest in this case would have secured the alleged disturbers and law-breakers until the State was prepared for their trial and the courts were ready to try them.

The men responsible for this atrocity were tried by a court-martial and acquitted, but as the military was without jurisdiction, the conclusion reached is not binding upon the State.

Courts-martial may try offenses committed in violation of the military law, as above defined, but acts done in the caprice of tyranny under martial rule make the military commander and his subordinates accountable to the law of the land, both by prosecution in the criminal courts and by civil action at the instance of the parties aggrieved.

Rich Man a Negro; Death Bares Secret

CHICAGO, July 28.—William Henry Lee, wealthy publisher whose $200,000 estate will be taken by the State of Illinois because there were no relatives to claim it, was a negro. For nearly 50 years he kept the secret.

The secret of his being of negro blood was admitted by Fred C. Laird, for ten years his partner. Lee never married, Mr. Laird said, because he feared that in his children the secret of his negro ancestry might be revealed.

Appendix All Alone In London, Said Jack

SAN FRANCISCO, July 28.—Here is the latest joke Jack London, the famous author, is telling on himself:

London was operated on recently for appendicitis. After the ordeal the surgeon held up the severed appendix in his fingers for the patient to see. The author looked at it thoughtfully, then grinned and said: "It was a case of all alone in London, wasn't it, doc?"

'CREMATORY BIG FIZZLE,' AVERS WOODWARD

"A test of the new crematory Monday morning proves my contention that the plant is inadequate and not worth the price," said Mayor James G. Woodward Monday.

"Councilman C. L. Ashley, chairman of the Sanitary Committee of Council, is a practical mechanical engineer, and it was he who made the test. He reports that the Destrctor Company demands that the garbage must be separated before being placed in the furnaces, and, as the building only provides one receptacle for alle garbag, this will be almost an impossibility.

Milwaukee Has Three Bins.

"In the Milwaukee crematory there are provided separate bins for the garbage, and the wagons are emptied into these bins, where they are dumped directly into the furnace. That the company did not provide for the separation of the garbage is no concern of the city. They did it in order to reduce the cost of construction.

"Another matter is the petition for a change in the quality of glass used. The contract calls for fireproof glass, polished on both sides. The cost of this is $1,513. They ask that they be permitted to use glass polished on one side only and which is not transparent, which would cost them only $576. In exchange for this difference they agree to give the city the fire and plain brick left after completion, for which the city has no use.

Only One Furnace Working.

"Another thing is that only one furnace is in working order, and it is my opinion that it will not be completed before Christmas, when, on account of the difference in the water contained in the garbage, it will be too late to make the tests necessary for the disposal of garbage gathered in the summer months.

"If the City Council had backed me up in this crematory fight, I would have saved the city at least $75,000 and had a better crematory. A thorough test will convince the public that I was right in every contention, and that the city has been buncoed out of more than $100,000."

One of the Greatest Mystery Stories Ever Written
By ANNA KATHARINE GREEN

It is Dr. Cameron's Wedding Day. At 8 o'Clock He Is to Marry Genevieve Gretorex, a Beautiful Society Girl. At 4 o'Clock He Is Informed His Fiancee Has Disappeared.

MRS. GRETOREX TELLS THE DETECTIVE OF HER DAUGHTER'S DISAPPEARANCE

"It is this note that causes our dilemma," said Mrs. Gretorex.

Scotland Yard Detectives at Once Begin a Search for the Missing Young Woman. Dr. Cameron Is Terribly Shocked by the Disappearance of the Lovely Genevieve.

Opening Installment

(Copyright, 1913, by Anna Katharine Green.)

An Unexpected Visitor.

IT was Dr. Cameron's wedding day. At 8 o'clock in the evening the ceremony of marriage between himself and Genevieve Gretorex was to be performed at the house of the bride's parents in St. Nicholas Place. It was now 4 o'clock.

Seated in his office, Dr. Cameron, who, for a young man, enjoyed a most enviable reputation as a physician, mused over his past and built castles for the future; for his bride was the daughter of one of the richest and most influential citizens of New York, and to such ambition as his this fact, implying, as it did, valuable connections in the present and a large and unincumbered fortune in the future, was one that lent luster to her beauty and attraction to their union. Not but what he loved her—or thought he did—would have loved her under any circumstances. Was she not handsome, and in that reserved and somewhat haughty way he especially admired? Had she not fine manners and would she not add increased honor to a name already well known, and, as he might add, respected?

Had Her Caprices.

To be sure, she had her caprices, as a woman so circumstanced had a right to have, and she esteemed rather than adored him, as many little events in their short courtship only too plainly betrayed. But then he would not have admired a gushing bride, and, being what he was, a man of taste and the son of a man of taste, he found a certain satisfaction in the calm propriety of a match that united equal interests, without jeopardizing that calmness of mind necessary to the successful practice of his exacting profession.

There was but one thing troubled him. Why had she refused to see him for the last seven days? She was not a woman of petty instincts. Indeed, he had sometimes suspected her of possessing latent energies which the round of a fashionable life had never called forth; and in her cool and somewhat languid gaze he had caught glimpses now and then of a spirit that only needed light and air to expand into something like greatness.

Why, then, this strange desire for seclusion at a time when a woman is usually supposed to desire the support of her lover's society? Had he displeased her? Not only had his presents been rich, they had been rare and of an order to gratify her refined taste. Was she ill? He was her physician as well as lover, and he had not been notified of any indisposition.

Besides the last time he had been so fortunate as to be received into her presence she had seemed well and looked blooming; more so, indeed, than he had seen her for some time, and, though somewhat nervous in manner, had exhibited an interest in his attentions which he had not always observed in her. It was not a long interview, but he remembered it well; saw again the almost timid look with which she greeted him, followed by the smile that was nearly a shock to him—it was so much warmer and brighter than usual. Then the few hurried words—for even that night she would not see him long—and the sudden coyness of her attitude as he took her hand in parting!—he recollected it all. He had not thought of it at the time, but now it seemed to him that there had been something strange in her whole bearing, an impalpable change from her former self that he could not analyze, but which had, nevertheless, left its impression upon him. The kiss he had received, for instance, had moved him. There had been warmth in it and her lips had almost returned the pressure of his own.

Was She Ill?

This was new in the history of their courtship and would have argued, perhaps, that she was beginning to recognize his appreciation of her if her after conduct had not given the lie to any such surmise. As it was, it rather seemed to show that she had been in an unnatural condition—suggestive of incipient fever, perhaps. She was ill; and they were trying to keep it from him! The butler's excuses, "Miss Gretorex is very much engaged, sir; Mrs. Gretorex's regrets, sir, but Miss Gretorex has gone out on important business," were but polite subterfuges to blind his eyes to the real truth. And yet to his calmer judgment how untenable was even this supposition. Had she been sick he could not have failed to have heard of it from some quarter. No, she was not sick. She was but indulging in a freak easily to be explained, perhaps, by her mother's over-exciting code of etiquette; and, as in a few hours, she was to be his wife and life-long companion, he would cease to think of it, and only remember that kiss.

He had reached this point in his musings when they were suddenly interrupted. A tap was heard on his office door.

With some irritation he arose. It was not time for his carriage and he had expressly ordered that no visitors or patients were to be received. Who could it be, then? A messenger from Miss Gretorex? He sprang to the door at the thought. But before he could touch the knob, the door opened, and to his surprise and possible relief there entered an unknown man of middle age and prepossessing appearance, whose errand seemed to be one of importance, though his manner was quiet and his voice startlingly gentle.

A Visitor.

"I hope I am not intruding," said he. "The boy below told me this was your wedding day, but he also told me that the ceremony was not to take place till 8 o'clock this evening, and as my business is peculiar and demands instant attention I ventured to come up."

"That is right," answered Dr. Cameron, feeling an unaccountable attraction toward the man, though he was not what you would perhaps call a gentleman, and had, as the doctor could not but notice even at this early stage of their acquaintance, a way of not meeting your eye when he spoke that was to say the least, lacking in ingenuousness. "Is it as a patient you come to me?"

"No," rejoined the stranger, fixing his glance on the white necktie and one or two other insignificant articles which lay on the table near by, with an air strangely like that of compassion. "My business is with you as a doctor—that is, partly—but I am not the patient. I almost wish I were," he added, in a troubled tone that awakened the other's interest notwithstanding the natural preoccupation of his thoughts.

"Let me hear," returned Dr. Cameron. "You make my task easy," the stranger remarked. "And yet," he went on in a curter and more business-like tone, "you may be less willing to listen when I tell you that I have first a story to relate which, while not uninteresting in itself, is so out of accord with your present mood that I doubt if you will be able to sit through it with patience. Yet it is necessary for me to relate it and necessary for you to hear it, now, here, and without any interruption."

This was alarming; especially as the speaker did not seem like a man given to sentimentalities or even to exaggeration. On the contrary he gave the impression of a person accustomed to weigh his words with studious care, not allowing a sentence to escape him without a decided motive.

"Will you tell me your name?" requested Dr. Cameron.

The reply came quietly.

"I doubt if you will know it, and I had rather you had not asked it. But since it is important above all things that you should trust me, I will say that it is Gryce, Ebenezer Gryce, and add that I am a member of the police force; in short, a detective."

Dr. Cameron felt his apprehensions vanish. Whatever the other's errand, it could not be one that touched him or his; and this to a man on his wedding day was certainly a comforting thought.

"You undervalue your fame," he replied. "I know your name well. Can it be possible you desire my assistance in a professional way?"

The detective's gaze, which had been resting gloomily upon a laughing cherub on the mantelpiece, shifted, but he did not respond to the doctor's smile, and his manner remained unaltered.

"I will tell my story," said he. "It will be the quickest way to come to an understanding."

And without further pause or preliminary, he began in the following words:

The Dilemma.

"I am getting to be an old man, and I have my infirmities. But there are still cases which are given to no one but me. Among them are those which involve the honor of persons in a high station of life."

Mr. Gryce paused. Dr. Cameron felt his apprehensions return.

"You see," the detective slowly resumed. "I can keep a secret; that is, when the life and property of others are not endangered by my silence. I can do a detective's work and keep a detective's counsel, only speaking when and where necessity requires."

He paused again. Dr. Cameron moved uneasily.

"As in this case," added the other, gravely.

"This case?" repeated the doctor, now thoroughly alarmed. "What case? You excite me; tell me what you have to say, at once!"

But the detective was not to be hurried.

"I was, therefore, not at all surprised," he proceeded, as if no interruption had occurred, "when some three days ago I was requested to call upon—Mrs. A., let us say—on business of a strictly confidential character. Such summonses come frequently. Such a summons does not disturb an officer in the least. I nevertheless made haste to show myself at Mrs. A.'s house, for Mrs. A., whom you perhaps know is a woman of some consequence, and her husband is a man of widespread reputation and influence. I found her at home, anxiously awaiting my appearance. As soon as she saw me she told me her trouble: 'Mr. Gryce,' said she, 'I am in a great dilemma. Something has occurred in my family which may or may not lead to a lasting dishonor. What I wish from you is aid to determine whether our fears are well grounded. If they are not, you will forget that you were ever called to this house.' I bowed. I was already interested, for I saw that her anxiety was great, while I could not help being puzzled over its cause, for she had no son to disgrace her by his dissipations, and as for her husband, he was above reproach. She soon relieved my curiosity.

"'Mr. Gryce,' said she, 'I have a daughter.'

"'Yes,' I returned, inwardly startled. Miss A. and dishonor seemed so wide apart.

"Our Only Child."

"'She is our only child,' the mother went on. 'We love her, and have always cherished her, but though it is not generally known in this house'—and here the poor lady's eyes roamed about her as if she were afraid that her words would be overheard, 'she has left us; gone away without acquainting us where—suddenly, inexplicably, leaving only the most meager explanation behind her, and—and—'

"'But, madam,' I interrupted, 'if she left any explanation—'

"Mrs. A. took a small and crumpled note out of her pocket and handed it to me.

"'A letter,' she affirmed, 'sent through the mail. And I was in the house when she left, and would have listened to any reasonable request she had to make.'

"I had already read the four or five lines which the letter contained:

"'Dear Mother: I must have rest. I have gone away for a few days, but shall be back on the 27th. Don't worry.

"'Your affectionate ——.'

"'What is the matter with this?' I asked. 'She says she will be back on the 27th, and to-day is only the 24th.'

"'Sir,' was the answer, 'it is the only time in our experience when our daughter has left us without first gaining our permission. Besides, the time is especially inopportune. My daughter's wedding cards are out.'"

Mr. Gryce stopped suddenly, for Dr. Cameron had given an anxious start.

"Ah, that arouses your interest!" remarked the detective. "Your own wedding being so near, I am not surprised."

It was dryly said, and the doctor at once reseated himself. He had no wish to appear unduly moved, but he could not suppress every token of emotion, so he turned his head away from the light. Mr. Gryce let his gaze travel to a new object before proceeding.

Only One Conclusion.

"This avowal of Mrs. A. put a new aspect on affairs," said he, "but yet I saw no reason for the extreme anxiety displayed. 'And on what day does she expect to be married?' I asked.

"'On the 27th.'

"'But she says she will be back.'

"'That does not comfort me.'

"'You think she will not come.'

"'I have no hope that she will.'

"This acknowledgment was uttered with emphasis. There seemed to be but one conclusion to draw.

"'Your daughter wishes to escape her engagement?'

"The answer was less emphatic than before. In fact, it expressed doubt.

"'I do not know, sir; my daughter is not herself, has not been for some time. My husband and myself have both noticed it; but we never anticipated her taking any such extreme action as this. Where has she gone? What will become of her? How can we face the world? How can we tell her lover?'

"'Then you think——'

"'That she is laboring under a temporary aberration of mind, caused, perhaps, by the excitement of the last few weeks; that she is not responsible for her acts; that she may be anywhere, remote or near; and that we may wait till the hour set for her marriage is past without seeing her.'

"To this I could make but one reply: 'Then why not take her lover into your confidence, inform him of your fears, and gain the benefit of his experience in your search for her?'

A MOTHER'S FEARS.

"'The answer will astonish you.

"'Because we are very proud and he is very proud. To explain our fears we should be obliged to say much that it would be humiliating for us to utter and for him to hear. Besides, we may overrate the situation. She may come back; as she says she will and, should this be the case, you can see for yourself what endless regret would follow any such confidences as you suggest.'

"'But'—I began.

"'It is this note that causes our dilemma,' she interposed. 'With these lines before me I can not act as if there were no hope of her returning in proper time to take her part in the ceremony. Yet I do not trust these lines, nor the promise she has made. Why, I can hardly say; for she has always been a woman of her word. But she is not herself, of that I am convinced.'

"This repetition of her former assertion made it easy for me to inquire what special change she had perceived in her daughter to lead to such a conclusion. She evidently found it difficult to reply.

"'I can not put it into words,' she declared. 'I feel the change.'

"'And how long have you felt it?'

"'Not long; since we began active preparations for her wedding, I think.'

"'And has no one else observed it?'

"'I can not say. I should think her lover would.'

"Why?'

"'Because it has been in reference to him she has shown her peculiarities strongest. For weeks she has received him only on sufferance and for the last few days has more than once absolutely refused to see him.'

"And what reason did she assign for this?'

Prepared for Wedding.

"'Follies. Fatigue, caprice, a letter to write, a dressmaker to see—anything that came into her head.'

"'Yet she went on preparing for her wedding?'

"'Certainly; her cards were out.'

"The tone in which this was said caused me to reflect. Though affable, kindly and even philanthropic in her dealings toward the world at large, Mrs. A. is, as every one knows, a woman who would find it very difficult to infringe upon any of the laws of society. Having seen her daughter pledge herself to a man of suitable pretensions, she would consider such a pledge final if only because she could not face the talk and scandal that would follow a rupture. Influenced by his idea, I remarked:

"'You must be perfectly frank with me if you want me to help you at this crisis. Has your daughter, or has she not, expressed a wish to break her engagement?'

"'She asked me once if I thought it too late for her to do so. Of course there was but one reply to this, and she said no more. But,' the poor mother continued hastily, 'that was only a symptom of flightiness. She has nothing against her lover, does not pretend to have.'

"'Only against marriage?'

"'Only against marriage.'

"'Mrs. A.,' I now boldly asked, 'do you think she loves the man you expect her to marry?'

"The answer came hesitatingly. 'She accepted his attentions with pleasure when they were first offered.'

"'Do you think she loves any other man?'

"The mother shrank back in dismay. "I am sure she does not. How could she? There is not another such gentleman in our circle of acquaintance."

"This was flattering to the gentleman, but not exactly satisfactory to me.

"'You know girls sometimes take strange whims.'

"'My daughter is not a girl, she is a woman.'

"This silenced me as it would you, sir, I have no doubt; and seeing the mother was really sincere in believing that her daughter's mind was temporarily affected, I inquired again as to what she had done or failed to do of late, and found that she had shunned the society of the members of her family as well as that of her lover, finding her sole interest seemingly in the preparation of her wardrobe. "To that she did attend,' said Mrs. A., 'and it was the only thing she did help me in. No hour was too late for her to see her dressmaker; no engagement too pressing for her to receive and fit on any of the new costumes that kept coming home. Indeed she showed more than a bride's usual interest in such matters; and it is the one reason I have for not disputing you utterly when you say she may come back. She will want to see her dresses.'

A Clew.

"'Then she did not take them with her?'

"'She took nothing.'

"'What! not a trunk?'

"'Nothing; that is, nothing but a little hand satchel.'

"'How do you know this?'

"'We all saw her go out; she was in shopping costume.'

"'But she had money?'

"'I can not say. Some, no doubt; but we found a large roll of bills in her drawer, and her father says it contains nearly all he had lately given her. I do not think her pocketbook held more than five dollars.'

"'This was a point. Either the girl was going amongst friends, or she was really touched in her mind. To make sure that the first supposition was not true, I asked for a list of the houses which Miss A. was in the habit of visiting. Mrs. A. mentioned some half-dozen, but added that her daughter's most intimate companion was in Europe and that she did not think she cared enough for the others to go to them at this time.

"'And she positively carried no baggage with her?'

"'None. I have looked her things over carefully and find nothing missing. She did not even wear her diamonds.'

"'And her watch?'

"'Is left behind.'

To Be Continued To-morrow.

THEIR MARRIED LIFE

Helen's First Day in the Paris Shops Results in Very Few Purcheses

By MABEL HERBERT URNER.

IT was the morning of their third day in Paris that Helen started out to shop. She had read and heard so much of the big Parisian bazaars that she was athrill with eager expectation.

"Better take in the Galeries Lafayette first," suggested Warren as they left the hotel together. "You can take a bus from there for the Bon Marche."

"Dear, wouldn't you have time to go by the Lafayette with me—it's only half past 8," pleaded Helen, who dreaded starting out alone.

"All right," good naturedly, "that's not much out of my way. Hurry up—let's get this bus."

It was going to be another hot day. There was still no relief from the heat wave that had settled over Paris since their arrival. But as Helen climbed gleefully to the top of the bus, the thought of the day in the Paris shops made her unmindful of the heat.

"There you are." Warren pointed out a huge building just ahead. From the top fluttered white banners and flags lettered gayly in red, "Galeries Lafayette." It looked more like a great exposition building than a store.

But when they left the bus, Helen was astonished to find that all along the sidewalk in front of the store were stalls, piled high with the cheapest kind of merchandise.

She Is Lonely.

There were tables of crockery, kitchenware, cotton dresses and waists, and around each was a chattering crowd of Frenchwomen pulling over the goods. Large cardboard signs—"50 centimes," "1 franc," "2 francs"—were everywhere.

"Why, dear, would you think they'd allow these push-cart peddlers outside a reputable store? Why, it's like a cheap market place!"

"They're not push-cart peddlers," laughed Warren. "This is all part of the Galeries Lafayette—that's how they sell their cheap goods. Our stores have bargain basements—here they have stalls outside the shop. Now I've got to leave you. Don't overdo it and get too tired. Better not be on your feet too much this hot day."

Helen's interest in the scene about her soon banished the momentary feeling of loneliness as Warren disappeared in the crowd. For some time she stood on the sidewalk watching the stalls and the chattering, pushing crowd about them. Warren was right. Unquestionably this was part of the store, for bareheaded French floor-walkers, with frock coats and twisted mustaches, walked up and down the sidewalk.

Although Helen had often heard that the Galeries Lafayette was one of the best Paris shops, this street sale of goods made her most skeptical. But when she entered, she saw that it was really a very beautiful store. In the center was a great rotunda under a crystal dome. An imposing marble staircase with double escalators led to the upper galleries.

Everywhere was a lavish and seemingly haphazard display of goods. It was all very different from a New York shop. There seemed no aisles, only a vast labyrinth of tables piled with goods in chaotic disorder—the most tawdry heaped carelessly with the most expensive. The confusing display of the great quantities of merchandise, the riot of color, the crowd, the uproar and tumult were to Helen most bewildering.

Hoping that the upper galleries would be less crowded and tumultuous, Helen made her way to the long line of elevators. Glancing over the directory of the floors, she located "Lingerie" and "Trousseaux."

French lingerie is a luxury coveted by every American woman, and as Helen stepped from the elevator at the third gallery into what seemed a great exhibition of white goods, her heart beat with expectation.

On every side was a network of tables and counters heaped with white garments—chemisettes, jupons and robes de nuites. Over the tables were cards with "Occasion" or "Grand Occasion," the French phrase for bargains.

Almost everything was hand embroidered and mostly unlaundered, the blue pencilled tracing of the patterns being still distinct.

Helen was surprised to find that while even the cheapest garment, those as low as six or seven francs, were embroidered by hand, the garment itself was made by machinery, the seams carelessly stitched, and the buttons half off. She thought of the poor women in the convents where most of this work is done. How poorly paid they must be to embroider such inferior goods!

She looked first for some dainty, low-necked night dresses with short butterfly sleeves, but she saw only ungainly garments with high necks and long sleeves. Was this the much-lauded lingerie?

At last, in some glass cases, where the most expensive models were displayed, she found some exquisite low-neck short-sleeved gowns.

"How much? Quel prix?" Helen demanded of a passing clerk, pointing to a garment in the case.

The girl opened the case and looked at the ticket. Helen could not understand her, but stooping over, she read the ticket herself—90 francs. Eighteen dollars!

Helen tried to make her understand with a few words of French, much English and many gestures that she wanted to see some gowns of that cut, but much less expensive. The girl touched a loud gong, which was a signal for an English-speaking clerk, and one promptly appeared.

"Almost all of our low-neck and short-sleeved gowns are in the expensive models," the clerk explained. "But of course we have some for less than 90 francs. Now here is quite a pretty gown for 35 francs."

Seven dollars! Except for her trousseau, Helen had never paid $7 for a nightgown in her life. And she had no intention of paying it in Paris, where she had expected to get things ridiculously cheap.

Only One Purchase.

"Well, I'll let the nightgowns go for the present, but I'd like to see some combinations and skirts."

"About what price does madam wish to pay?" asked the clerk, with lessening cordiality, for she expected Americans not to object to prices.

"About three or four dollars—fifteen or twenty francs."

"They're all out on the tables, madam. We keep only the more expensive ones in this department."

"But I could never button these," exclaimed Helen, viewing with disfavor the combinations, which all opened in the back. "And they're all too large—I want 34."

"You won't find bust measures in Paris like you have in America, madam. We have only three sizes here. You see, they're marked with tickets—the green ticket is small, the pink ticket medium and the yellow ticket large."

Helen expressed her astonishment that in Paris, where fit and style were supposed to be perfected, they should have only three sizes instead of the eight—from 32 to 46—that are carried by every American store!

The intention to buy enough lingerie while in Paris to last her for the next two years was somewhat shaken. And she finally left the department, having made just one purchase—a white skirt with a hand-embroidered flounce. Even this she could not get the right length. It would have to be shortened when she got it home.

From the lingerie, Helen walked down the broad marble staircase to the gallery below. Just at the foot of the stairs were a dozen or more tables overburdened with parasols. She had never seen so many parasols together in her life. Most of them were brilliant in coloring and design, vivid reds, bright greens and startling blues.

Farther on was a gorgeous display of scarfs—the long chiffon scarfs that the French women wear with their evening gowns. They lay in careless glittering heaps, shimmering with gold and silver spangles and iridescent beadings.

Helen had thought the hues and fabrics in the shops at home particularly loud this year, but they were mild and subdued compared with the riotous coloring of everything here.

In spite of the whirring electric fans the heat was excessive, and before Helen had explored half the departments of the Galeries Lafayette she was exhausted.

Although she had spent most of the day there, her purchases were trivial, but she had a fair idea of what a big Paris shop was like.

It was good to get back to their rooms, to have time to bathe, rest and dress before Warren came.

"Well, how did you get along?" was his greeting when he got in a little after 6. "Buy out all the Paris shops?"

"Not quite. I left a few things in the Galeries Lafayette! That was the only place I went."

"How did you find things? Cheaper than at home?"

"Some things are. But, dear, the styles and colorings are so extreme. Do you know," thoughtfully, "I really believe I can find the things I want better in New York."

"Course you can! Nothing's more overrated than the French styles. They are made for French women—not for Americans. And nine-tenths of the Americans who come over here and buy a lot of truck are blamed sick of their bargains when they get 'em home."

The Finger of Death

A SPY has to take many risks, and if he is caught at the game during war time his career as a rule is then and there closed promptly, and in most cases in ignominious fashion.

It was the money aspect of the business which appealed to Morris Tyler, and induced him to engage in the work. He was a born spy. A good linguist, and cunning beyond belief, he was never one to assay a dangerous task for the sheer excitement of it. He did not like taking risks, though, of course, he had to take them occasionally; but always at these junctures he kept in mind the big pay and extras. It needed these to tune him up to concert pitch.

He was always cautious and successful. Having found it advisable to quit Europe for a time, he made his way to the South American Republic of Caldera which, at the date of his arrival, was just in the throes of one of its periodical revolutions.

He offered his services to the Government party at a rate of pay somewhat in excess of what he had been receiving in Europe, and President Blance having heard of him, and finding that he could speak Spanish fluently, engaged him at once.

But in Caldera, Morris Tyler had to work under new and unfamiliar conditions. Hitherto, his spying had been carried on during times of peace. There had been no war in Europe since he had come to the front. Now he found himself in the thick of fighting of a savage character. When the insurgents took any prisoners, they gave them the option of changing sides or being shot. But when the Government troops captured any rebels, they did not permit them any choice. They were placed in a row with their backs against a wall and promptly finished off by a firing party. By the time he had been three weeks at the "great game!" as played in this explosive South American State, Morris Tyler was inclined to regret that he had not remained a passive spectator of the revolution, instead of taking part in it. However, he fortified his courage with the thought of the pile of dollars he would add to his banking account when the fighting was over and the rebels beaten. He had seen enough to feel pretty certain they had no real chance of winning. And so far he had not encountered any special danger; his cunning always enabled him to evade it.

No Avail.

But the day came when he discovered that cunning was of no avail, and that courage would have been a far more desirable possession.

He had been sent for by Colonel Voruba, the chief of the Intelligence Department, to whom he usually made his reports.

"Some rare work for you, Senor Tyler," observed the Colonel cheerfully, "and it may be the last service we shall require you to perform, for the revolution must end soon. Still, much will depend on the informtaion you are able to obtain for us."

Morris Tyler nodded, and waited for his chief to go on.

"The rebels are massed in some force on the Hill of San Stefano," pursued the Colonel, "where it seems they are going to make a last desperate stand. They hold the old fort up there. That much we know. But we do not know the number of their guns, nor how they are placed. It is important that we have this information before we storm the position, and we look to you to obtain it for us."

"Can you give me any further particulars, Colonel?"

"There are no further particulars to give you," replied Colonel Yoruba. "You know the road. The rest lies with you. I am instructed, however, to inform you that if you succeed in bringing us correct information, you will receive five hundred dollars over and above your pay. You must start at once."

By a curious freak of fate, there arrived at the headquarters of the Calderan army, twenty-four hours, later, a deserter from the rebel ranks, who was able to furnish the exact information which Colonel Voruba required.

Thereupon, an order was given for an immediate advance. This movement taking place so much sooner than was expected, would very likely put Morris Tyler in an extremely tight corner. But the life of one man was of small moment when so much was at stake. And a spy! Well, no one bothered much about a spy when he was not required. In the meantime, Tyler had contrived to get to the top of the Hill of San Stefano without being observed by the enemy's outposts or sentries.

He was, indeed, well within the circles of outposts when he reached an abandoned building, which at one time had been the boiler house of a sugar plantation. It seemed a safe hiding place, from the security of which he could observe what was going on in the rebels' camp without himself being seen. He crept inside and laid flat down upon the floor. About half a mile away he could see the camp fires glowing in the darkness, and nearer still the squat shape of the fort showing black against the night sky. Picturesque insurgents were passing to and fro, and a few were seated by the fires playing cards.

No Sleep.

After a time the camp became silent, even the card players giving up their games and stretching themselves out on the ground to sleep. Only sentries remained on the alert, but between him and the fort there were three. By no possibility could he get past them unseen, for it was open ground.

The night wore on. He was tired, but he dared not sleep. If he could only snatch a few minutes—just to rest his eyes——

He awoke with a start, and was about to spring to his feet when a harsh voice commanded him to remain still. At the other side of the chamber he saw an armed man—one of the rebels—standing with his rifle at the "ready."

"So! A spy!" exclaimed the man. "Bueno! It will be promotion for me for having discovered you. Don't move!" The rifle was raised threateningly. "If you so much as move a hand or a foot I will put a bullet through your brain. Yet I do not wish to waste ammunition. A rope is good enough for such as you."

He spat on the floor to typify his contempt for all spies. Then he called to the nearest sentry, telling him of his "find," and asking him to bring a rope. But the words had barely left his lips when there was a terrific crash overhead, a blinding flash of flame, the splitting of wood and the rattle of falling masonry.

A twelve-pound shell from a field gun had struck the building and reduced it to a ruin. It was the first shot fired by the Government artillery in their attack on the hill of San Stafano. The rebels were taken by surprise, became panic-stricken, and instead of shaping up to defend the position began a hasty retreat.

Moris Tyler was not immediately concerned with the running fight between the loyal troops and the rebels, for the sounds of strife drifted farther away each minute from the ruined boiler house. No other shot or shell came near it. But he was much concerned about himself. He could not move. He was pinned down by some timber from the fallen roof, and all around him was a wreck of shattered walls, broken planks and beams and debris which bore no likeness to anything in particular.

Fear!

"Luck's with me, after all," he murmured. "I am not hurt, and this beam is not too heavy for me to lift. I can raise it up and crawl."

He paused with a sort of gasp, for his eyes, roving around the place, had rested on a gleaming rifle barrel. It was pointed straight at his head, and there was a man's forefinger resting on the trigger. The man was the rebel who had captured him. He was lying on his face amidst the wreckage, and there was blood streaming from a terrible wound at the side of his head. A splinter of the bursting shell had killed him.

The spy gave a sigh of relief. For a moment he had thought that the man was alive, and was taking aim at him. But his relief was of short duration. He did not like that rifle pointing so steadily at him, even though it was only held in a dead man's hand; and when he saw that the lower end of the beam which was lying across his own body rested against the man's right forearm, he liked it still less. He could not move the beam upwards; he could only move it downwards or sideways. If he shifted it ever so little, it was bound to press more heavily on the dead rebel's arm, and that would cause his stiffened finger to press on the trigger, which would fire the rifle. The bullet would enter his—Tyler's—brain, because his head was so wedged that he could not move it to one side or the other. He could raise it a little, but that would be of no advantage. The bullet would take him then somewhere about the mouth and pass upwards through the base of his skull.

He shook with fear, like a man with the ague, and the sweat streamed down his face.

It was borne in upon the spy's mind that he might lie there until he died of starvation. There was the alternative of pushing the beam a little more, so that the dead man's finger should press harder on the trigger and thus end his misery with a bullet from the menacing rifle.

Then all at once something in his brain seemed to snap. A red curtain dropped before his eyes. The noise of a rushing wind howled in his ears—and then came black oblivion.

Early the next morning two mounted men reined up close by the ruined boiler house. They were Colonel Voruba and an orderly. The fight was over, and the rebels were beaten.

"Two men in there," said the Colonel. "They may have some life in them."

The orderly dismounted and peered in among the wreckage.

"One is a rebel," he reported. "The other is Senor Tyler. Both dead."

The Answer.

"The spy!" exclaimed the Colonel.

"It is strange," said Voruba, bending over Tyler's body, "there is not a mark upon him. He has received no wound, no hurt. He could easily have lifted this beam and extricated himself."

"Look at the expression on his face even now," replied the orderly. "It was sheer terror that killed him. I have heard of such a thing. Perhaps he had a weak heart."

"Terror!" Voruba raised his eyebrows. "Ah, yes, I perceive. The loaded rifle pointing at his head, which, at the slightest movement on his part would——"

Captain Berwick interrupted him. He had picked the rifle up and opened the breech.

"He was in no danger at any time from this weapon," he said. "It is not loaded!"

Did the Vicar Stop?

It was too much. Every Sunday old Adams, who blew the organ, would continue blowing after the music had stopped, thereby producing most undesirable sounds.

Time and again had the organist taken him to task for it.

"Right, mister," had been old Adams' invariable reply. "I forgits, you know."

One Sunday the organist could stand it no longer.

The congregation had been set tittering by the old man's forgetfulness, and during the sermon the organist seized the opportunity to write him a note on the matter, and handed it to a choir boy to deliver.

Misunderstanding the whispered directions, the lad handed the note straight up to the vicar, who astoundedly read the following:

"Will you stop when I tell you to? People come here to listen to my music, not to your horrible noise."

ON HER KITCHEN STOVE

It is interesting to note that the most successful remedy for woman's ills was originally prepared nearly forty years ago by Mrs. Lydia E. Pinkham, of Lynn, Mass., by steeping roots and herbs on her kitchen stove and supplied to friends and neighbors without cost. Its fame spread; the demand grew; until now many tons of roots and herbs are used each year in order to supply this famous remedy which has proved such a marvelous success in controlling diseases of women. Merit alone could have stood this test of time.

Lady Constance Stewart Richardson on How to Acquire a Beautiful Figure Through Dancing

Written Exclusively for the Readers of This Page.

In Poses Especially Adapted for the Accompanying Article.

Figure 1, shown in the topmost picture, shows the body poised on one foot.

A swaying exercise fully described by Lady Richardson's article brings about an easy control of the waist muscles.

Practice in this lesson will do more to reduce the waistline than any other fat-reducing method known to Lady Richardson.

Incidentally it produces naturally graceful movements when walking or running.

Figure 2 is a walking exercise that has a wonderfully beneficial effect upon the whole body.

Constant practice in this exercise makes it become as easy and natural to you as when a child skipping along the street.

It is Lady Richardson's claim that all these movements are but normal, simple, human expressions.

This style of dancing, says Lady Richardson, is good for the soul as well as the body.

This is the first time that any newspaper has presented a series of articles in which such expert instruction and advice are given on the value of practicing natural movements for the preservation of human grace and beauty.

THIS is the fourth of Lady Richardson's valuable articles on dancing as an aid to natural beauty.

Another will appear on this page next week, in which the student is carried along a little further, and into a trifle more difficult exercises.

DANCING is one of the most characteristic and characterful things I know. It expresses the individual and the nation in perfect accord with the feelings and customs that characterize him or it.

Take, for instance, the Hungarian Czardas, the Italian Tarantelle, or the Tango of Argentina—each is characteristic of its place and clime, and however well the peoples of another nation do the dance that is not their own they still must modify it to suit their own temperament.

A Perfect Outline.

If we take the best of the moderns and add to it the finest steps of the ancients and teach our result we will get as many variations as we have individual temperaments expressing the dance we have made.

If people will stop to think what a wonderful mode of expression the dance offers them, and will study it, its music and the effect of this expression on their own temperaments, they will no longer consider the dance and the body that expresses it as something to be despised, but they will give to the body, which is capable of beauty, its due of admiration and its right to beautiful expression, which will mean that one step toward lifting instead of degrading the human body will be definitely taken through the worship of loveliness.

To help you all make your bodies so perfect in outline, in strength and in power to respond to your desire to express emotion through the great safety valve of movement is my desire.

When dancing, look happy and as if you were dancing because you love to, and as if you were dancing because you love the particular step you are taking—not doing the fashionable thing some dancing teacher had assured you was the "proper way." Make one or two steps your own, and through them teach your body to express itself without shame or consciousness in perfect happiness and rhythm.

Figure One.

Dancing is a safe and sane form of self-expression, and it is good for body as well as soul.

In Figure 1 the body is poised on the ball of one foot, while the other is raised with the leg thrown slightly backward from the knee and the toes pointing downward. A straight line from flexed knee to the tip of the toes seems to be a favorite idea of grace, as depicted by the sculpture of the ancients, and as it adds to beauty of line the benefit of strengthening instep and ankle, it is one of the little separate movements that I often incorporate in my dancing steps.

To return to Figure 1—Bend slightly at the waist toward the uplifted leg and raise the arm above the head so there will be a continuous curve from elbow to toes. A flexible waist waits upon the earnest practice of this exercise.

From elbow to wrist the arm is bent above and toward the head, while the other arm, stretched lightly out from the shoulder and parallel with it, terminates in loosely flexed wrist and hand. Sway lightly from foot to foot, and see what easily controlled muscles of the waist result.

Figure Two.

Figure 2 pictures for you a walking exercise that has a wonderfully beneficial effect on the whole body. It is a natural bodily expression such as you have often seen little children drop into quite unconsciously.

Tiptoe along from foot to foot, with the raised limb flexed at the knee and held with down-pointing toe.

Bend the body well forward from the waist, and sway it toward the lifted foot, stretching the arm over this foot back and down and the other arm forward and as you would do in feeling your way along a solid surface in the dark.

Leg, arm and waist muscles are here brought into play—and when such simple, pretty, little exercises as this become indeed play you may feel sure that you are on your way to a body beautiful and graceful.

After all, just such dance movements as this are normal, simple, human expression, and out of them we can evolve natural grace of body and movement.

Handsome Mr. Slatte :: A SHORT STORY COMPLETE

"I SHOULD think you would read more," suggested the girl in the grass green linen gown as she came upon the porch.

"Oh, I don't know," responded the young woman in the wicker chair, who was busy embroidering. "This is just as satisfactory as most of the popular novels."

"It's every woman's duty to improve her mind," declared the girl in the green linen. "I feel that I have done so much since the corner drug store put in its circulating library. Mr. Slatte has been such a help!"

"Mr. Slatte?" queried her friend. "What has he to do with it?"

The girl in the green linen sighed faintly. "You know," she said, "I am not the sort of girl to rave over a man's good looks. I prefer brains any time. But, really, you never in your life saw any one who looked like Mr. Slatte! He——"

"He might look like anything with that name," commented the young woman who was embroidering. "Do you mean to say he is handsome?"

"More than that," said her friend. "He has the sort of eyes that pierce with their brilliance, and such a chin! My dear, every time I see him I am reminded of that stunning portrait of Lord Byron! I am certain there is a mystery about him! He has the most perfect manners!"

A Shock.

"Where——"

"Why, he's recently taken charge of the drug store," explained the girl in the green linen. "I had just picked out a book when he came up and said he couldn't bear to see me waste my time on such a tiresome story. He said he'd be only too glad to help me find something worth while that he knew I could appreciate. I thought it so kind——"

"Kind!" said the girl who was embroidering. "I think he was impertinent. I guess if I wanted a book I'd want what I wanted."

"You don't understand at all," exclaimed the girl in green linen, patiently. "Mr. Slatte is writing a novel himself, so of course he knows perfectly what——"

"My goodness! A drug clerk and a novelist!" said the girl who was embroidering.

Her friend bristled at this. "He's not a clerk!" she said. "He's a sort of—er—manager. People generally don't know he is so literary. You don't suppose that he wastes time on everybody who comes to get a book, do you? Not that he is especially interested in me, of course—only I suppose he realizes that I have more than average intelligence. I never saw such eyes in my life! Sometimes when he smiles in that slow, sad sort of way of his I——"

"Who puts up prescriptions while he is engaged in smiling sadly?" inquired the young woman who was embroidering.

"You are perfectly horrid!" said her friend. "If you knew Mr. Slatte you'd think differently. We have had some of the most inspiring talks since we met. He always drops whatever he is doing and helps me select my books. I'm a rapid reader and have to exchange books so often.

"I'm on my way there now to get another book. I do wish I could make you see what an opportunity it is, now that Mr. Slatte is there. He has such a cultivated mind—many times he has remarked what a treat it is to him to have someone come in who is different from the average careless reader."

A Rival.

"There comes Dorothy Maye," said the girl who was embroidering. "Come in, Dorothy," she called across the railing.

"I can't just now," said the girl in question, pausing at the steps. "I'm on my way to the drug store to take back a book. There's such a nice man in charge there now—perfectly stunning, and so kind. He's writing a book himself, too. He always stops whatever he is doing to come and help me pick out something good. He says it is a treat——"

"How nice!" enthusiastically interrupted the girl who was embroidering. "Alicia is here and she is going there, too——"

"No," said the girl in grass green linen shortly. "I am not going to the drug store! I am too busy to waste time over those trashy books and to hang around a silly clerk."

Untested.

"Yes, sir," said the successful manufacturer, "no man can sell his factory products these days unless they have been thoroughly tested."

"Oh, I don't know," replied another equally successful manufacturer. "We manage to sell our product without testing it."

"You do? What is your line?"

"Dynamite."

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

LET YOUR HEART DECIDE.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am a girl of twenty. About two years ago I met a young man, and from that time until a month ago I loved him, but he did not return my love in the way I wanted, so I thought it would be best to forget him. I am now keeping company with another young man who is very serious. Two weeks ago the first young man wrote and told me he had found no girl he could love like me. DOROTHY.

You must take the one you love most, but before you make that decision be very fair with yourself. I know nothing of the merits of the two men, but it seems to me that the first is somewhat like the dog in the manger.

He did not seek your love till some other man's attentions made it desirable.

HE IS NOT SINCERE.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am nineteen, and in love with a man three years my senior. I am really crazy over him. I think the world of him, as I think he does the same of me.

It is nearly a year since we met and fell in love with each other. He asked me to be his bride. We were to be married in a short time, but now he has excuses for not getting married. He does not write as usual, but comes up as usual. P. G. Z.

The indications are he is trying to get out of it. Save your self-respect by breaking the engagement, for, believe me, it will never end in marriage. I am sorry, dear, but this course will save you greater pain later on.

THAT IS HIS PRIVILEGE.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am a young girl of seventeen and considered good looking. I have been keeping company with a young man for several months and at a dance one night I introduced a girl to him to whom he pays more attention than to me. NORAH.

There was no engagement. He was merely your friend. I hope, under the circumstances, you will be big enough, and broad enough, to be glad you were the means of introducing him to a girl whose company delights him. That's the way to look at it, my dear.

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

CHAPTER IX.

MARY smiled reassuringly into the anxious faces of her parents bending over her as she opened her eyes after a brief period of unconsciousness. She found herself lying upon the living room couch, her forehead wet from the water which her mother had applied in the effort to "bring her around." She struggled to a sitting posture, beginning at once to explain the attack of faintness which had seized her.

"I have been working a little too hard in this warm weather," she said. "I have not felt well lately, anyway, and this is but the culmination of the weariness and strain—nothing else."

She spoke no word of the news that had held her eyes waking far into the night, nor of the blessed relief of the knowledge that the man whom she had feared was injured or dead was alive and well.

"You won't try to go to school to-day, will you?" pleaded her mother.

The girl smiled.

"It is Saturday, mother," she reminded her. "But I must go down to the Public Library to look up some matters I want to be sure of before Monday. But I will take a cup of coffee first."

She drank this when her mother brought it to her, then arose with decision.

"I am ashamed of myself to be so weak and foolish," she exclaimed. "Please, dear people, try to forget it."

"Would you like to look over the morning paper?" asked her father, eyeing her keenly.

"No, thank you!" she said quickly. "Thank you, mother, for waiting so sweetly on your silly daughter. I will go to bed early to-night and not repeat this performance of fainting. I never did such a thing quite so causelessly and suddenly before in my life."

When she had left the living room, the father and mother gazed again into each other's faces.

"The fact that she avoids the subject that made her faint shows that she cares for this young man," declared the mother. "Well, he is a nice fellow, I guess."

"I don't care how nice he is," retorted the father, "he is not half good enough for my girl. Before I consent to any serious attentions from him I am going to write to his firm and find what his record is."

"That's all right, dear," agreed the wife indulgently. "I approve of your doing that. But if the Angel Gabriel—trumpet and all—were to ask you for Mary you would not think him good enough for her."

"And he wouldn't be!" asserted the father, without a smile.

The most tender mother is willing—even, at times, glad—to have her daughter marry an honorable, well-to-do gentleman; a fond father seldom looks with favor upon any suitor for his daughter's hand.

An hour later Mary appeared in her mother's room, her hat and gloves on, ready to go out. Mrs. Danforth looked solicitously at her, but, seeing that the color had returned to her lips, she forbore to utter any protest. If the child was restless it was better to let her go. In the library she might find the books she needed for her work, they might quiet her nerves, turning her thoughts from agitating subjects.

Mrs. Danforth would have been surprised could she have seen her daughter when she reached her destination. Instead of going at once in search of the volumes in which she was to "look up" certain important subjects, she went direct to the reading room of the library and was in a few minutes immersed in the morning papers. A close observer would have noticed that the only columns she read were those dealing with the recent railroad wreck and the deeds of heroism of the various uninjured passengers—the most active and bravest of whom had evidently been "the young Texan, Gordon Craig by name." As the girl read, her cheeks glowed and a soft light came to her eyes. So absorbed was she in her dreams, that she was leaving the building before she remembered that in her wrist-bag she carried a list of books of reference which she must find this morning, and, with a start, went in search of these. Somehow all literature except the newspapers seemed very dull to-day.

As it was Saturday, Mr. Danforth came home at noontime, and was there when his daughter returned a little before the luncheon hour. He greeted her brightly.

"Well!" she said joocosely, "I saw our hero this morning! Craig was at my office. He ran in to tell me that he was all right and to ask if we had seen the account of the wreck. I told him that we had, but I did not flatter him by telling him we had been badly scared about him."

Mary drew a sigh of relief. She had feared her father might mention her evident anxiety, then she reminded herself that she might have known he would not. She waited for his next remark. Although she had read and reread the newspaper accounts of Craig's heroism, she hoped to hear more about it by word of mouth. Her father answered her unspoken thought.

"He said little about himself," he went on, "and I liked him better for that. When I said that I understood he had done some pretty fine work he turned as red as a lobster and said—'It was only what any man would have done under the circumstances,' and changed the subject. So I let it drop. I asked him to come up and see us before he goes back to Texas, and he said he would try to."

"Probably he will not find time to," said Mary with studied indifference. She began to talk vivaciously of her work, of the approaching school commencement, of anything and everything except of Gordon Craig. And her father and mother, watching her, understood.

That afternoon a messenger left at her door a note for her. It was short:

"Dear Miss Danforth: Will you give me the happiness of your company to the opera next Wednesday night? I will call for you at a quarter before eight. The performance is 'Aida.'

"Faithfully yours,
"GORDON CRAIG."

The reply that the messenger carried back to Craig was even more brief than the note he had brought:

"My Dear Mr. Craig: Thank you. I will be ready at 7:45 Wednesday night.
"Sincerely yours,
"MARY DANFORTH."

A Frank Talk on Typewriters

Somehow, the impression has gained ground that there isn't much difference between the various makes of typewriters on the market.

You may think the same thing. It would take a good, SOUND, LOGICAL argument to convince you that all typewriters do not have the same efficiency and that a stenographer cannot secure the same results on every machine.

We are ready to make that argument and to show you by actual demonstration that

The L. C. Smith & Bros. Typewriter

will do more work, better work, with less fatigue to the stenographer, than any writing machine ever made.

How is this possible?

Here are a few reasons:

1. It is ball bearing throughout—others are not.
2. All operations are controlled from the keyboard.
3. It is the lightest touch machine made.
4. It does not "smut" the carbon.
5. The ribbon reverses automatically.
6. The type is so protected that it is not battered by collision.
7. One motion of the hand returns the carriage and operates the line space.
8. It has an inbuilt biller and tabulator.
9. No trouble to write on paper as small as a postage stamp.
10. It is built for service.

FIVE TEAMS TO BATTLE IN RACE FOR 30 MINUTES

Big Thriller Slated for Motor Bugs at Prince's Saucer on Tuesday Night.

A HALF-HOUR team race is to be the big feature at the Motordrome to-morrow night, and for the really jammy excitement this should top anything that has been staged yet at Jack Prince's saucer.

Five teams will be in the long grind. And what a wrangle the ten riders had trying to get matched up! Finally Morty Graves suggested that the partners be found by a drawing. Manager Noon Hudson put all the numbers in his new straw lid and the result was:

Graves and McNeil, Schwartz and Lockner, Shields and Richards, Luther and Lewis, Renel and Glenn.

These teams appear to be very evenly matched. Graves and McNeil will probably rule favorites, with Richards and Shields second choice.

No rider will be allowed to remain on the track over twenty successive minutes. But each rider can call for his partner as often as he desires. The partners who are not racing will remain in front of the paddock. The partner riding must drop off the track and touch his teammate on the shoulder before the latter can take up the racing.

It sure will be a thrilling event if all goes well.

The Motordrome Sweepstakes is the second feature event. All the riders will start, five in each qualifying heat. The qualifying heats will be over a one-mile course, while the final will be two miles.

Harry Glenn, who defeated Schwartz the other night, will meet Luther in a match race. It will be the two best heats in three over a two-mile circuit. Glenn is a local boy and he will be backed heavily to down his worthy opponent.

* * *

FOLLOWING is the complete card for Tuesday night:

First Event.

First heat Motordrome Sweepstakes (One mile to qualify and two-mile final.) Starters—Graves, Shields, Richards, Renel, Lewis.

Second Event.

First heat of a match race between Glenn and Luther. (Race to be two best heats in three.) Distance—two miles.

Third Event.

Second heat of Motordrome Sweepstakes. Starters—Schwartz, Lockner, Luther, McNeil, Glenn.

Fourth Event.

Second heat of match race between Glenn and Luther.

Fifth Event.

Final heat of Motordrome Sweepstakes. (Winners of first and second heats and second man in fastest heat to start.)

Sixth Event.

Third heat of match race between Glenn and Luther, if necessary.

Seventh Event.

Half-hour team race. Teams—Graves and McNeil; Schwartz and Lockner; Shields and Richards; Luther and Lewis; Renel and Glenn. (No rider can remain on track over twenty consecutive minutes.)

Wolgast and Ritchie May Sign Articles

LOS ANGELES, July 28.—Eager to nail down Ad Wolgast to his offer—a $25,000 side bet for a return match—Willie Ritchie to-day is making a desperate effort to get the former titleholder to meet him to-day and sign articles. On Saturday, Wolgast posted with James J. Jeffries $1,000, part of a $25,000 side bet, in a twenty-round title contest with Ritchie. Wolgast specified that half is to go that he will from the title-holder in twenty rounds, the other half that he knocks out, stop or force Ritchie to uit inside of the limit.

Ritchie lost no time in accepting the offer when he learned that there was seriousness to Ad's movements, and he asked Jeffries to affect a meeting between he and Ad for this afternoon in the hope that articles might be signed. Ritchie leaves here for Frisco Wednesday afternoon and he would like to close the match before starting. Should the pair come together they will clash either September 1 or 2.

Pelky in No Hurry to Fight Theatrical Tour Awaits Champ

By W. W. Naughton.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 28.—Arthur Pelky, the new white heavyweight champion, possesses most of the facial characteristics of the professional pugilist, but it can scarcely be said that he has a fighting eye.

Now, do not misunderstand me.

There is nothing in Pelky's look to suggest that he is lacking in courage, but, sizing him up as he sat in my den yesterday, I could not help thinking how different he was from other brand-new champions I had known. In most cases the eye of a freshly-fledged champ glints with a mixture of pride and defiance. If looks could be construed into words the look to which I refer would read, "I can lick anything that walks in two shoes."

Pelky's eyes are large and dark—the eyes of a man who broods. To me it almost seemed as if the shadow of that fearful experience he had in the ring at Calgary was still upon him. The suspicion was confirmed by his evident reluctance to talk about the recent past and his palpable inclination to talk about ringmen other than himself. To the majority of champions the recital of how they won their spurs gives unbounded pleasure. To Pelky the recollection brings a shudder.

* * *

PELKY is tall, squarely built and has a strong jaw and large, firmly-knit hands. He is big enough to tackle anything in human shape. He is here with Tommy Burns, once world's champion in his own right, but now fallen into flesh and quite content to be known as a connoisseur.

Tommy is Pelky's manager, and the manner in which Burns discovered that Pelky was worth managing was not the least interesting thing he had to tell. Pelky went to Calgary to box six rounds with Burns. While the affair was in progress the beauties of Pelky's character as a fighter unfolded to Tommy. At the end of the bout Tommy was all in, and an hour later Tommy was Pelky's manager.

"We are in no hurry to make matches," said Burns. "We have twelve weeks' work in the theaters, beginning at Pantages next week, and in the meantime the Gunboat Smith-Jim Flynn match will be decided and the winner will stand forth as a challenger of Pelky. If Smith wins, and I think he will——"

"Pardon me," said Pelky in a soft-voiced way. "I think Flynn will defeat Smith."

"Well, anyway, you'll be ready to sign with the winner," resumed Tommy.

"And if it is Smith you'll like it all the better. You have always wanted to box him, haven't you?"

Pelky nodded his approval.

* * *

BURNS and Pelky were reminded that Sam Langford, the negro pugilist, is back from Australia, and were asked how overtures for a Pelky-Langford match would be regarded.

"I want it to be understood that I will never box a colored man," said Pelky. "Some time ago when the promoters of the country decided to discourage the making of mixed matches and contests were arranged to decide who was the white heavyweight champion, I thought it one of the best moves ever made in pugilism. I am still of that way of thinking. I call myself the white champion, and feel that I have every right to do so, but if the public took the stand that I ought to accept matches with negroes, I'd be willing to drop out of the game entirely."

* * *

"I THINK he's right," said Burns. "Of course I fought a negro when I met Jack Johnson, but if I had my time to go over again he would wait a long time for a match. To tell the truth, I never wanted to fight Johnson. I was offered big money by the National Club of London, and I turned it down. When I went to Australia and the question came up again, I said that I wanted every cent of $30,000 before I'd go into the ring with Johnson. It was a lot of money, but McIntosh produced it, and then there was no getting out of it, so far as I was concerned.

"And talking of public opinion in such matters, I have lived to learn that a fighter should not lay too much stress upon public opinion. It shifts and veers too much. Before I boxed Johnson I used to receive letters taunting me with being afraid to meet the negro. After I went against him and lost my title the letters still came in. But their tone had changed. I was reviled for having given a negro a chance at the championship."

* * *

WHEN matchmaking is in order, it is just possible that a trip to Australia will be included in the Burns-Pelky itinerary. In response to a message from out yonder, Burns has cabled that Pelky will be willing to take the journey and engage in a series of three fights.

Tommy has named as possible opponents for Pelky: Jim Flynn, Jess Willard, Jim Coffey, Al Palzer and Gunboat Smith.

B. JOHNSON'S RAGE.
(In one week.)

FIRST DAY.

THE Magnate tore his seldom hair
And roared in fearsome rage:
"What's this? Ye gods; What this I damp upon the sporting page?
Jake Stahl is canned—my own pick—Jake!
Oh, gimme room to cuss!
I'll show those Boston guys they can't
Make us ridiculous!"

THIRD DAY.

The Magnate speeded to the West—
The wild news speeded, too;
In Cleveland he was cornered by
Reporters quite a few.
"Ahem!" he said. "About Jake Stahl—
I do not care to state
My full conclusions at this time—
I must investigate."

SEVENTH DAY.

At last he makes his lakeside home;
And Fandom stands agog
To [illegible] quick car put
Those ingrates on the hog!
And now the crushing sentence comes—
With quite some "pshaw" and "pish"—
"In this I can not interfere.
E'en if I had the wish!"

BROWN COMES BACK, HURLS IN OLD-TIME FORM

MORDECAI BROWN is not through. In fact, it looks as if Manager Joe Tinker, of the Reds, said very true words when in the spring he claimed that the three-fingered wonder still had a lot of good baseball left in him. True, Brown is not hurling the kind of ball he did several seasons ago, but just the same, Johnny Evers could use him at present, and to good advantage.

After Brown had helped the Cubs to four pennants and two world's championships, his arm went to the bad in 1912. When the off season came, C. Webb Murphy thought he would not need the three-fingered boy any more, and shipped him to the minors.

But Joe Tinker, new manager of the Reds, thought different. Joe was with "Brownie" a long time, and when he was shipped to the A. A., he and Garry Herrmann arranged a deal whereby Miner would come back to the National League. And it looks as if they made no error in securing Brown.

Beats Old Mates Twice.

Maybe now C. Webb Murphy and Johnny Evers see they made a big mistake in releasing the former star of the Cubs. Recently when the Reds were playing the Bruins, the three-fingered hurler took a pair of games from Johnny Evers' gang, one of them being a shutout, in which only six base knocks were made off him.

When Tinker secured Brown, it was for the simple reason to use him as a coach for his young moundmen. He was carried until May 1 before he made his appearance on the firing line. Since the hot weather arrived, though, Brown's good right arm seems to be as good as ever, and he is taking his regular turn on the mound for his club.

Has Good Record.

Although Brown is not winning as regular or working quite as often as he did a few years back, he has a record which is far better than the one owned by his club.

Miner has won seven games and lost six this campaign. That's a percentage of .538. The Reds own a mark of .380, so it can be seen that Brownie is 158 points ahead of his team.

So far this season Brown has appeared in 22 games, being used as a relief hurler most of the time. In these 22 contests he has worked 95 innings.

It looks as if Rube Marquard is going to try to beat his record of nineteen straight games won, made last season. The $11,000 beauty annexed his ninth straight yesterday and is pitching in better from than he was a year ago.

In a sea of mud, the Giants and St. Louis battled for seven innings, with the Giants on the long side of the score. Then the deluge came and the game was called. The second part of the double-header also had to be called off.

The Dodgers are trying hard to get back in the first division. They shoved the Reds back twice yesterday and a victory to-day, with a defeat for the Pirates, will put the teams on even terms at the foot of the leading four.

Bert Garden, of the Roanoke club, established a Virginia League record when he pitched two shut-out games against Newport News. He is the first pitcher of the league to start and finish two full games.

The Cotton States League pennant race has been won by Jackson. The deciding of a number of protested games against Pensacola did not beat that team out of the pennant, as the club had the bunting cinched.

A report is in circulation here that Joe Tinker, manager of the Reds, will give up his position at shortstop and direct the fortunes of the club from the bench.

MAGNATE REFUSES TO OBEY COMMISSION'S RULING

LOS ANGELES, CAL., July 28.—Henry Berry, president of the Los Angeles baseball club of the Coast League, said to-day he would not obey the baseball law which forbids a class AA team to carry more than twenty players in the middle of the season.

"If the National Commission decided that I should pay a fine I will not do it," said Berry.

Charles Arbogast, a catcher, is expected to join the Los Angeles team to-morrow. This would make 21 players. Berry declared to-day he would not release any of the old men for the reason that three of his players were in the hospital.

Cross-Baldwin Battle To-morrow Matty Has Great Ring Record

By Harry Gilmore, Jr.

LOS ANGELES, CAL., July 28.—Next in line on the Vernon fistic slate is the twenty-round engagement to-morrow night between Matty Baldwin, of Boston, and Leach Cross, of New York City. What better fistic offering could be asked, barring an immediate championship encounter with Willie Ritchie as one of the principals, than those two crack Eastern lightweights?

Cross and Baldwin have long since been bitter rivals, and after repeated efforts on the part of Eastern promoters to bring them together without avail, they will now settle the old score with twenty rounds in which to bring about a result which should be decisive. Cross has forever found the Bostonian a thorn in his side, and carefully analyzing their respective records it seems he might well have found him a formidable foe.

* * *

BALDWIN has had in excess of 150 fights in the eleven years in which he has been in the ring, and has met the best of the lightweights of recent years, barring the old warrior, Bat Nelson. Baldwin won and lost a 12-round decision to Owen Moran in January and February, respectively, of 1910, when Moran was at his best. He had previously drawn in limited bouts with Tommy Murphy and Abe Attell in New York City, when the foxy Abe and the Harlem scrapper were at the zenith of their careers. He lost to Cross on a foul in eight rounds, May 13, 1910, in New York City, when, it is claimed, he had Cross beaten and practically out. Baldwin visited the coast just two years ago and took Freddie Welsh for twenty rounds at San Francisco, June 23, losing the decision after going the limit. Only two months later he was returned a winner in the twentieth round over the now present champion, Willie Ritchie. In April of 1911 he met Cross for ten rounds in New York, and although a no-decision affair, the press awarded Baldwin the verdict. Baldwin has since drawn with Joe Mandot, and is credited with a fairly even ten rounds just recently with Jack Britton, while best of all, his last engagement, a decisive win over Young Shugrue in New York, speaks his praises. Shugrue took a decision from Cross some months before the latter came West for the Anderson engagement, so on the dope the Boston boy figures very strongly against his Leaches.

* * *

MATTY has completed training for the bout, and shows a confidence that inspires some of the Cross adherents to believe that there is indeed a doubtful chance for their entry; and, from present indications, the getting price will be a pretty even thing.

"I know Cross and his fighting style about as well as any one of the fighters who have met him," said Baldwin in discussing the match. "He knows that I have little fear of any of the wallops that he carries, and when it comes to the rough stuff that is where I have his number, and he knows it. When I took him on in New York I had him bad, and would have finished him had it been a longer bout. With twenty rounds to go, I am satisfied that I can land a decisive victory, and then I want the chance that I have hoped for to clash with Ritchie for the championship."

SWEENEY WILL GET $50 FOR LONG HIT SATURDAY

NEW YORK, July 28.—Ed Sweeney, the big catcher of the Yankees, who had been out of the game on account of injury, won $50 Saturday by hitting the "bull" sign in right field with a fairly batted fly ball. This is the first time the feat has been accomplished since the new Brush stadium was built.

CRACKERS FACE HARD FINISH AFTER GULLS

Five Games in Three Days at Home, Then the Final Road Trip.

By O. B. Keeler.

SO, THERE YOU ARE!

Oh, something's got into the eyes of the Crackers,
A-smoking the lamps of our sterling pill-whackers;
Long, agonized shrieks emanate from their backers
Far away in the distance a-viewing it;
We can't get a line on their recent futility;
We know they are swatters of sterling ability,
Who pepper the pill with excessive virility—
But the hell of it is they ain't doing it!

* * *

DESPITE the charitable interference of the weather man on a number of occasions, our brave la-a-ads (tremolo stop) continue to skid recklessly toward the second division. Only the Barons remain betwixt them and the lid, which position is thinly occupied by the dejected Lookouts.

It would be entirely possible, depending on what happens to Birmingham and Chattanooga, for the Crackers to detrain in this town Thursday, installed as leaders of the basement quartet.

Of course, the Gulls and their doings cut the deepest into the calculations. They have been tough for the Crackers all season, and, with the race in its present scrambled condition, there is no reason to suspect they will suddenly become docile.

Passing over the Gulls with a respectful nod, then, it may be just as well to look over the remaining prospects of the season.

* * *

NO matter in what shape the Smithmen return Thursday, they will confront the proposition of taking on the Volunteers for five games in three days, the same being Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

The situation of the Vols in the league standing is not dignified enough to inspire much reverence. But it must be recalled that Schwarz has some raw material on hand which he naturally will be eager to shoot. And some of it may be loaded.

Then there is the question of two-ply entertainments.

In the face of what happened recently in Montgomery, we insist that the conventional method of prorating a double bill is for each side to take one. And that is precisely what the Crackers do not require just now—and won't require the latter part of this week.

Five or six games back of the lead, Bill Smith's hands need two out of three from now on—and a shade more wouldn't hurt.

One double-header is regularly scheduled for Friday afternoon. The league program is responsible for that. Then there is a tie contest holding over from the last visit of the Vols. That probably will be shot off Thursday, by way of openers.

Anyway, if the sky can be caulked, there's a furious little series booked for the last three days in this week.

* * *

THEN the Crackers hit the "Trail of the Lonesome Nine" once more.

Chattanooga first, for three games, August 4, 5 and 6. Then the final visit to Nashville, which may witness the playing off of the well known disputed contest earlier in the season. The closing road games of the season of 1913 will be played in Birmingham, August 11, 12 and 13.

* * *

HOME again, for a little house party at which every club in the league will be on the guest list except Nashville.

There are 22 games scheduled for the grand finale, and four tied or postponed affairs. They will be played in this order: Chattanooga 4; Birmingham 3; New Orleans 6; Mobile 4; and Chattanooga again for one game, September 6.

But in the meantime, there is Mobile.

* * *

AND it is possible that Billy Smith was figuring on that long home wind-up, with the chance to land the flag in a grueling finish, when he signed the giant southpaw, Love, leading slabman of the Cotton States League.

Love will make the third fork-hander on the Cracker firing line. With an equal number of right-handers, Billy can settle down on the home lot and dare all of 'em to knock off the chip. It won't make much difference whether the opposition sports a majority of portsiders or not. Bill will be loaded for both kinds of game.

* * *

THE new cock-eye is six and a half feet long and comes up with a savory reputation that includes 20 firsts out of 29 starts in the Cotton States. He has a no-hit, no-run game on his list, and four consecutive shut-outs, in the directing of which he issued only three bases on balls. Control is said to be his best bet.

That sounds encouraging, anyway.

POOR ABIE IS THROUGH; HAS LITTLE CLASS LEFT

NEW YORK, July 28.—Abie Attell had better give up the Queensberry pastime. Abe has something left in the ducking and the nodding of the head in getting away from some wicked punches, but that is about all.

His latest opponent was Willie Beecher, the well-known mitt man of the East Side, and the contest took place at the Atlantic Athletic Club of Rockaway. There was a rather good gathering of the fight fans. They were of the opinion that Abe would hand out some of that old championship stuff that made him famous in the days of long ago. The person who suffered the most at the bout was Referee Draycott. Abe's judgment of distance was bad in the fifth, sixth and eighth rounds, and he whanged the judge three times.

The winner of the bout was Beecher. The latter, after finding out that Attell was not there any more, chased Abe around the ring, and Beecher had a difficult time in catching his opponent. Beecher did his best work in the sixth and seventh rounds. From the fifth round to the finish, Beecher was the busy man, and he had enough lead in the first five to give him the fight. All that Abe had was a bad lip as he came out of the ring.

VETERAN COACH GREAT HELP TO JOE BOEHLING

By Senator.

WASHINGTON, July 28.—Quiet, observing everything, but saying little, always ready with a cheering word for some youngster to turn a rebuke into a joke, Jack Ryan, the veteran backstop and scout, is one of the uplifting influences among the Washington Senators. He isn't going around with banners flying, proclaiming his deeds from every housetop, but he is the man who has made it possible for Joe Boehling to pitch winning ball.

After much haggling to no end, the writer succeeded in getting Ryan to explain the system he has taught Boehling and is now teaching Joe Engel. He belittled even that system, notwithstanding Boehling's success since he began following the veteran's advice.

"It's a simple thing," finally broke out Ryan. "I began teaching those two kids this spring at Charlottesville. They were wild as hawks and careless of following directions. I noticed that all they ever did when they went into the box was to wind up and let her go. They didn't take even enough time to see where the plate was.

* * *

"SO I said to Boehling one day: 'Take your time. Think about every ball you pitch. Try to do something with it. Aim at something. Pay the closest attention to your stride. Then you will get control, and that's all you need to ge a good pitcher.'

"Well, at first Boehling couldn't understand these directions. He would forget what he had to do. Griff kept me working with him constantly, however, and finally I got Joe where he could think of all these things at the same time. Immediately he began to pitch winning ball, and he will continue just so long as he follows those directions.

"It was the same way with Engel. He is fully equipped to be a winning pitcher. I never saw a better-looking youngster in baseball. But he didn't know anything about his job. He never considered what he had to do. He pitched into the stride used by the other pitcher, even if it were two feet short of his own. It was impossible for him to win that way. He couldn't get his 'stuff' on the ball. I kept insisting on his using proper stride and thinking about every ball that left his hand. That's all pitching amounts to, granting that you have speed and a curve ball. But it was hard for those kids to understand this, and it took a lot of time before they got it into their heads.'

And this is all that Jack Ryan has to say about his making two good pitchers for the Climbers.

* * *

WHEN you think it over, Ryan ought to be a wise counselor for young fellows. He has been in baseball 28 years, starting when a mere kid. In all that time he has never learned to drink or smoke. His personal habits are irreproachable, his example for young players a thing for the gods. Manager Griffith could not have ogtained a better coach for his youngsters. Seldom does he use a harsh word, never a profane. Never does he criticise a player on any other team.

Ryan's last active service was as manager of the Jersey City club of the Eastern, now the International League. There he worked behind the bat regularly, always maintaining a high average. He broke in with the Baltimore team when it was composed of thugs and knockout men. Always quiet, he had to fight to remain with the Orioles. And he fought and stayed. Later he saw several years of service under Frank Selee on the Boston club. He was captain of the Detroit American League team in 1902, finally drifting to the minors, where he managed several teams, ending with Jersey City.

ALPERMAN HAS APPENDIX CUT; OUT FOR A YEAR

MOBILE, ALA., July 28.—Whitey Alperman, field captain and second baseman of the Crackers, was operated on this noon in a local hospital for appendicitis.

As a result of the operation, Alperman will not be able to play again this season. This is a severe blow to Manager Billy Smith, as it practically kills whatever chance the Atlanta team has of winning the pennant.

Alperman was out of the game yesterday. He complained of severe pains in his right side. Last night a local physician was called, but was unable to diagnose the case until this morning.

Manush will probably cover the keystone sack the remainder of the season.

YACHTING DE LUXE.

Oh, would I were a sailor
Upon the rolling seas,
And boat it hence from spot to spot
Upon my large and gilded yacht,
Nor cared for any breeze.

Oh, would I were a sailor
Upon the billows blest,
And I could say: "Come hither, Steve!
I have a thirst thou shouldst retrieve,"
And he would do the rest.

Oh, would I were a sailor
And owned a yacht of steam.
But one must be a pirate bold
And trim the landsman of his gold
To realize that dream.

Every time a fight manager offers to bet $10,000 one is led to wonder whether Confederate money still is being used.

A doctor having discovered that no bones are broken in Heinie Zim's ankle, the inference is that his ankle bones are made of the same substance as his head.

An X-Ray examination of the Great Zim reveals the fact that his temperament is suffering from a malignant attack of gout.

When one learns that Hal Chase has made five boots in one game, one will not be surprised to hear that Joe Dunn has swiped five bases in the same interval.

The latest scandal in the Sport of Kings in England merely reflects the spirit of the times. A king these days is looked upon generally as a nine-spot.

It is claimed in England that the prevalence of foul riding there is due to the American style of wearing short stirrups. Even our English brethren have learned to pass the buck.

Bill Peet, a Washington scout, says he discovered Joe Boehling, and seven American League teams have discovered that Bill Peet is some discoverer.

Suggestion to Milwaukee sporting editors: Why not organize a few boxing clubs?

It still is early to pass judgment on Laverne Chappelle but up to date he has earned approximately $1.75 of his purchase price.

Members of Frank Chance's team wear black sweaters, but even that does not fill the bill. What they need is crepe.

On the theory that misery loves company, Boston and St. Louis baseball bugs may organize a Mutual Sympathy Society.

How Fogel Will Wreck Majors

Dryden Makes Big "Discovery"

Charles Dryden.

HONORABLE HORACE FOGEL is getting ready to absorb both big circuits and put the magnates on the bum. He has said it, and what Horace says goes. As the present major leagues are a joke, Horace will start a lieutenant-colonel league for a change, grabbing off all the star talent now employed grinding out the national pastime.

The new organization should be accomplished without much trouble. Mr. Fogel talked himself out of the old league, and he is now engaged asking himself into the new one, or lieutenant-colonel league, to distinguish it from the old majors. Horace has his towns for the circuit booked out already yet once. They are New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Pittsburg, Cleveland, Chicago and St. Louis. That makes seven, and they need one more. The eighth city will be either Boston, Indianapolis or Kansas City. If Horace included both Boston and Kansas City, look what a fine jump the athletes would have from Boston to play a Sunday game at Kansas City.

Backers of New League Named.

The financial backers of the lieutenant-colonel league are said to be Otto Steifel, of St. Louis, and Jeff Livingston, the well-known pickle expert of Cincinnati. Mr. Steifel is behind the Federal League at St. Louis, and Mr. Livingston is in the pickle and tomato ketchup line at Cincy. They are to furnish the money, and Horace will supply the words. It is claimed that Horace has landed all the stars worth having in the two major circuits, but the statement is discredited, because Tom Needham has not been signed by the lieutenant-colonels. We are inclined to believe that if there were anything in the new organization, Mr. Needham would not have been overlooked. If Tom is not a star, where could they find one?

Be that as it may, the lieutenant-colonel league will be in full operation next spring, and the magnates of the two so-called major leagues will be begging for peanut concessions and hot dog stands in the parks of the new baseball body. They made a goat of Horace, and now he is getting back at them.

His Investigation Sidetracked.

His investigation of the trust was sidetracked, and just for that the National and American must get out of business for all time. By next Fourth of July we will hear of Pittsburg, New York and Cleveland selling their new steel stands for old iron. It is an awful picture to contemplate, but the magnates showed Horace no mercy, and he is determined not to spare them in the hour of retribution. Otherwise Horace is a mighty good fellow.

P. S.—Mr. Fogel has prepared an advance statement of 8,000 words in reference to the new league, which statement was to have been released simultaneously with a lot of papers on July 7.

Double P. S.—We do not know why the statement was not released on July 7.

WELLS TO BOX MOIR.

NEW YORK, July 28.—Bombardier Wells, English heavyweight champion, has been signed to meet Gunner Moir in a twenty-round bout at the Canterbury Music Hall in London September 3. Wells is signed to box twenty rounds with Bandsman Rice, another English heavyweight, in London on September 17.

CLABBY VS. PAPKE.

DENVER, COLO., July 25.—Articles have been signed for a ten-round bout between Jimmy Clabby, the Milwaukee middleweight, and Billy Papke, of Kewanee, Ill., to be held at the Denver A. C. on August 11.

GULLS DRAW THOMPSON IN GAME TO-DAY

By Joe Agler.

MOMILE, ALA., July 28.—The Gulls, ably assisted by a person named Monk, who was not in uniform, managed to cop the jump game of this series yesterday in spite of a grand exhibition of pitching by Dent and plucky defensive play by a badly crippled Cracker team. Thompson and Dunn will be the battery to-day, and we are going to try to get even.

Dent pitched one of his best games since joining the Crackers, and deserved to win. But the attack of his mates was not sufficient to overcome a one-run lead, and Hogg, who also pitched excellent ball, finished in front, 2 to 1, the result setting the Crackers down another full game in the pennant chase, as Montgomery also won.

Bill Bailey was examined by an X-ray specialist here and it was shown that he is suffering from a fractured rib, which will keep him out of the line-up several days. Whitey Alperman was taken suddenly ill with what appeared to be a touch of appendicitis, and was unable to play yesterday, but probably will try to work in this afternoon's game.

The worst feature of the contest yesterday was the arrest of Joe Dunn, at the instance of a person named Monk, who is interested in the Mobile club, the way I understand the matter. Joe was charged with swearing while arguing with Umpire Wright about a hit Joe thought was foul. Wright says Joe didn't swear, Catcher Schmidt says the same thing and so do all the players who were in hearing of the argument. But Joe was lugged off the field and Chapman had to come in from right to take his place, while Gilbert Price went to the outer works.

Joe wasn't locked up. Friends promptly arranged for bond, and he will be back in the game this afternoon.

Dunn Fined $5 for "Cussing" Umpire

MOBILE, ALA., July 28.—Joe Dunn, the heavy backstop of the Crackers, who was arrested yesterday at the ball park during the game between Atlanta and Mobile clubs, on a charge of using profane language was fined $5 in the Recorder's Court here this morning. Joseph paid.

The Recorder gave Dunn the preference of spending ten days in the workhouse or paying $5. "It is too hot these days to stay indoors so long," said the catcher, as he passed the "five iron men" over. "But I guess the judge wanted me to coach the rock-pile team at that," added Joe.

DODGE MAY GO TO VOLS; INDIANS SECURE NELSON

CINCINNATI, July 28.—Pitcher Albert Nelson, who was sold by the Reds to Nashville, but refused to report there, has been disposed of to Indianapolis. The Cincinnati club will send Nashville another player in place of Nelson, possibly Infielder Dodge, recently secured from the Phillies in exchange for Becker.

YOUNGSTERS FOR BLOOMINGTON.

BLOOMINGTON, ILL., July 28.—The Bloomington management, in an effort to check the losing streak of its club, has signed two promising youngsters. They are Outfielder Ralph Craig, of Sioux City, and Pitcher John Duggan, of the Southern League.

DECATUR, ILL., July 28.—The sale is announced of Dick Staley, first baseman of the Danville baseball club, to the Cleveland Americans for $2,500.

Atlanta Should Have Polo Club

Will Introduce Game August 6

THE most rabid polo'st's appetite will be satisfied at Fort McPherson on Wednesday afternoon, August 6.

Here are some of the events carded by those interested in the plan to form the Atlanta Polo Club:

Polo match between the Fort McPherson quartet and an All-Southern team, which will consist of Tom Weaver, Lamar Hill, Dr. J. O. Seamans, local players, and experts from surrounding Southern clubs.

A tug-of-war on polo ponies.

A polo pony race.

A "polo pony" musical program furnished by the Fort McPherson military band.

A "polo pony" concert by Company M Glee Club.

And in hope of encouraging those who will be unable to attend to become interested in the game, moving pictures will be taken of the struggle and thrown on local screens a day or two after the match.

It will be the biggest society event ever held in Atlanta. It is to be hoped that the game will "take strong," for if it does, the Atlanta Polo Club will surely be formed.

A big tract of land will be purchased and a clubhouse erected. There are enough Atlantans who play the game to form an excellent team with very little coaching. Within a very few months the local club could arrange games with teams from all parts of the country, and not be afraid of defeat.

A worthy aim would be to develop players for the International Cup team. New Yorkers have had this all to themselves for some time, but Atlanta, like Camden, Augusta and Jacksonville, could in time probably develop some "big leaguers."

RINGSIDE NOTES

Jack White has finally secured a match with Johnny Dundee. Tom McCarey signed the pair yesterday to meet in a 20-round bout at his Vernon arena on August 12. They are to box at catch weights.

* * *

Coast fans are looking for Matty Baldwin to give Leach Cross a tough argument when the two lightweights get together at Los Angeles to-morrow night. Matty's great fights against Freddie Welsh and Willie Ritchie are still remembered by the Pacific coasters.

* * *

Ad Wolgast, Willie Ritchie, Johnny Dundee, Joe Rivers and Jack White will be at the ringside when Cross and Baldwin exchange blows. All these boys have big followers out West.

* * *

Sam Langford and Joe Jeannette have been matched to box twenty rounds at Los Angeles on September 29.

* * *

Johnny Kilbane, who has been holdfast to his title as featherweight champion, says that he is going to tour the world after visiting Ireland, and will meet all the good boys as he goes along. Perhaps he can find some amusement and some dollars scattered in his pathway.

* * *

Mike Saul is one fighter who thinks Kid Young can defeat Charlie Lee, providing the fighting newsboy gets into shape. Saul refereed the former scrap between the pair and says condition is all that kept Young from winning.

* * *

Spider Britt is walking the streets with a chip on his shoulders these days. Spider wants to know why the fighters around here are continually dodging a match with him. Britt is anxious to get on with Lee or Young and says he will give either of them a neat side bet.

* * *

Billy Lutz, manager of Eddie Hanlon, has a few words to say regarding Mike Saul. Lutz called at the Georgian Sporting department yesterday and said that he would gladly send his protege against Mike, if the latter will agree to let Eddie weigh 138 pounds at 3 o'clock. Billy is also prepared to put up $25 to go as a weight forfeit and side bet. Billy wants to meet Saul at this office this afternoon at 4 o'clock.

* * *

Jack Britton appears to be the easiest lightweight in the world to deal with when it comes to making a match. Britton is always ready to take on the best of them, while his manager, Danny Morgan, stands by with a few nickels to wager on his protege's chances.

* * *

The proposed return scrap between Johnny Williams and Eddie Campi at Los Angeles has been called off and Williams, accompanied by his manager, Sammy Harris, has left for New York. Williams asked $3,000 for his services, a sum that McCarey refused to grant.

Carl Morris, the Oklahoma heavyweight, knocked out Al Benedict in the fifth round of a scheduled 15-round go the other night.

OHNE WINS RACE.

NEW YORK, July 28.—Paul Ohne, of Brooklyn, won the three-cornered match race at Brighton Motodrome last night, thereby earning the right to meet Arthur Chappelle, the champion motorcyclist.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Total of $131,000 In New Dwellings

Druid Hills for Carroll Payne. Peachtree and Ansley Park Homes. West End Church.

Plans for three handsome dwellings in Druid Hills, costing more than $40,000, are in course of preparation by Hentz & Reid, architects in the Candler Building. These are for houses to be built in the spring by J. Carroll Payne, Alex W. Smith, Jr., and Charles T. Hopkins, Jr., on adjoining lots on Ponce DeLeon avenue east of the bridge near Lullwater road. They will be handsomely done in the New England colonial style.

Jobs now in the hands of the above firm of architects total $131,000, including, among a number of dwellings, a structure for the West End Presbyterian Church, on Gordon street, to cost $20,000; a refreshment pavilion in Grant Park, $10,000, and additions to the dining room of the Piedmont Driving Club, $4,000. Plans are being drawn for the following other residences:

Edgar Dunlap, Druid Hills, two-story brick veneer house of New England colonial style, $17,000.

E. W. More, Peachtree road, near Lakeview avenue, two-story Dutch colonial and shingle, $6,000.

E. Lee Worsham, Wesley avenue, near Clark Howell's country place, one-story English type of plaster and stone, $10,000.

E. L. Bishop, Peachtree road, at Brookhaven, two-story plaster house, $7,000.

Fred Stone, Fairview road, Druid Hills, two-story New England colonial frame or brick veneer, $8,000.

W. White, Prado, Asley Park, two-story Dutch colonial frame and stone, $9,000.

Ivy Street Car Tracks.

Work has been in progress several days laying the old car tracks on Ivy street, preparatory to the resumption of trolley traffic on that street. There was a plan to put these tracks on Piedmont avenue, but objection on the part of property owners caused the project to be abandoned. The idea was to relieve Peachtree congestion as much as possible by having all tracks and heavy wagons use Ivy street.

To Start on West Peachtree.

Materials for repaving West Peachtree and building retaining walls are being gathered together for work that will begin within a few days. The walls will go up first and then regrading will start. A number of interesting improvements are expected to be made as soon as the work has assumed definite shape.

Mr. Cochran's Measure.

Ralph O. Cochran, the well-known real estate man, introduced in the Legislature Monday a bill intended to make equities in property subject to levy and sale, as well as deeds. Eugene and Gordon Mitchell drew the measure. All outstanding notes against property must be paid up before a sale can be made under the present law.

It is also sought to repeal existing legislation which makes real estate men take out a license in every county where a sale is made.

Marietta Street Barbecue.

Marietta street property owners are beginning to whet their appetites for a mammoth barbecue which they will give next month or in September commemorating the completion of the Marietta street widening and repaving to the city limits and the Cobb County line. The place will be either the Chattahoochee River or Howell Station, according to W. Tom Winn, one of the first to urge the Marietta street improvement.

Invited to the barbecue will be the city officials, the County Commissioners, a number of prominent real estate men and others, probably 500 people.

This barbecue was first set for July 4, but a delay in the work made a postponement necessary. The job is due to be completed in a very short time, and Marietta street will take its place as the best crosstown street in the city.

New Apartment Houses.

The Lawrence, a new apartment house at Nos. 52 and 54 West Peachtree place, will be ready for occupancy September 1. J. L. Turner & Co. are the owners. Each room is outside and the two-room apartments have disappearing wall beds, which have only recently come to Atlanta. The Maryland, corner of Peachtree Circle and Seventeenth street, Ansley Park, will also be ready September 1. This contains four, five and six-room apartments.

Seeking More Floor Space.

A move for more floor space has been made by two Atlanta concerns located in the Empire Building. The Royal Insurance Company will soon leave the eleventh floor to take the entire twelfth floor of the Hurt building and the L. P. Bottenfield Real Estate Agency will take the offices of the insurance company, moving from the tenth floor. The Bottenfield Agency has leased this half floor for five years at a price which approximates $4,000 a year. This is the third move of the company. First in small offices on the second floor of the Empire, it moved to larger offices on the tenth, and now finds it necessary again to seek more floor space.

For Public Market.

Housewives of Atlanta have revived the interest of several years ago which was displayed in a public market. Committees are being formed and it is thought that within a comparatively short time there will be a place where women can buy direct and save half a dozen profits of middlemen. Should the Plaza project ever become a reality, it is possible that the market will be placed on the site of the Union Depot. It has been suggested that $250,000 be invested in a site and from another source that $500,000 in city bonds be issued.

To Purge Peachtree Creek.

Real estate men having subdivisions in the vicinity of Peachtree Creek have become greatly interested in the suggestion that the bed of the creek be cleared from the bridge at Peachtree to Howell Mill road, about two and one-half miles, in order to prevent overflows into the lowlands during the rainy seasons. Winds from Peachtree Creek blow mosquitoes into the city, it is claimed, and there are other reasons for wanting to remedy the conditions. The effect of Peachtree Creek on land can readily be understood when it is pointed out that Peachtree road frontage at $35 a front foot and less has not had an active market, whereas property has changed hands at nearly $100 a foot a mile farther to the north.

COTTON MARKET ACTIVE ALL DAY

Erratic Trading Holds Market in Narrow Rut—Cables Weak and Weather Good.

NEW YORK, July 28.—Weakness in Liverpool cables as a result of Southern and Continental selling, coupled with private reports of rains over Sunday in Texas and Oklahoma, resulted in the local cotton market opening barely steady to-day with first prices unchanged to 10 points low from Saturday's final. At the end of 15 minutes the new crop positions were fairly steady.

The detailed weather reports did not disclose as much rainfall as earlier advices had suggested and a covering movement followed the establishment of new low levels. Losses were wiped out. Besides covering of shorts there was what observers thought was buying for fresh long account. Offerings became scarce and scattered. Larger spot houses were aggressive buyers of the old crops, but August seemed in greater demand, by rallying from 11.44 to 11.60 for a net gain of 16 points from the opening, while July only advanced 8 points. New crop were heavily purchased by strong sources, aggregating a gain of 5 to 11 points from the initial level. Liverpool continued to report bearish cables and at the close the English market was 7½ to 9 points lower.

During the late forenoon the market was steady with prices firmly maintained at the early high point.

The advance in some quarters was explained by the crumbling of new and old crop positions last week, which made new low levels for the month, when August went 70 points under the best price of the month, or $3.50 a bale. These offerings were absorbed by brokers said to be buying for Liverpool account, against straddle sales there. The advance came in the face of a bearish condition report of The Memphis Commercial-Appeal, which gave condition of July 25, 82.1 per cent.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, LA., July 28.—According to reliable information further rains occurred Saturday night in north Texas and Oklahoma.

The map to-day shows generally fair weather in the western half; cloudy in the eastern half. No rain of consequence in the West, but general rainfall in Alabama and the Atlantic States. Rising temperatures in the Western States, Arkansas and Tennessee; normal in the rest of the belt. Indications are for part cloudy to fair; rising temperatures in Texas; unsettled in Oklahoma, probably some rain in the northwestern portion. Part cloudy in the central and eastern States; some scattered showers.

The Shreveport Times says cotton made rapid progress during the past two weeks, due largely to the heavy rains of last week. The dry hot spell preceding the rains has practically solved the weevil problem and there is little complaint.

First trades here were at about unchanged figures, and the market showed remarkable steadiness from the start with a pronounced disposition to buy on depressions. This was undoubtedly caused by the absence of rain in the lower half of Texas, rising temperatures in the West, anticipation of an unfavorable weekly weather report tomorrow in portions of Texas and the fear of a lower August Bureau report on Friday.

COTTON SEED OIL.

NEW YORK, July 28.—The market was dull at the start, but a general trade developed later, mostly from shorts, with some speculative buying and by the firmness in cotton and light offerings of crude oil.

Local professionals were the best sellers.

STOCK MAKRET

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, July 28.—There was a broadening in speculative interest at the opening of the stock market to-day. In the early trading, stocks joined in a brisk upward movement. During that period new high records were established in many issues.

New Haven was up 1½. Great Northern preferred 1 point, while the rest of the list ruled from fractions to nearly a point above Saturday's close.

There was a varying tendency in London, but American stocks were steady.

The curb market was dull.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

IT WERE BETTER NOT.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

For the past year I have known a young lady three years my junior. As we live on the same street, we meet and converse very frequently. Now, I care very much for her and have tried to show this fact through my actions. As I am a student, much of my time is taken up by my studies, and so I have decided that unless she cares for me I would only be wasting time by meeting her whatsoever. Since her actions did not show whether or not she loves me, I wrote her a letter explaining my circumstances, including the fact that it would be five or six years before I would be through with my studies and asked that she write me a letter telling me whether or not she cares for me. Do you think that I was correct in taking that measure to find out her affection for me? "ME LIBERA."

You asked her to reveal her heart to you, at the same time telling her that you could offer nothing in return.

It was a little selfish in you, and I hope she refused to answer. Wait till in position to marry her before asking her if she loves you.

DON'T BE UNFAIR TO HER.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am a young man 20 years of age, and I am in business for myself and make out very good. I am in love with my friend's sister, whom I have known for over two years, and who is probably one year older than myself. Her people are of a very low class, and I am puzzled whether they will be agreeable to my parents. Her people think a great deal of me.

I have only taken her out twice, and I have not informed her of my love, for the reason that I know her people are very anxious to have her married. I do not intend to get married before the age of 25. I love her very much, and I am afraid that I might lose her.

YOUNG LOVER.

A five-year engageemnt is most unfair to the girl, and for her sake you must not consider it a moment.

Your problem lies with yourself. Unless you are sure her family is as good as yours, and her entry into it would cause her neither pain nor humiliation, you must let her alone, to be wooed and won by someone who has no such opinions.

THAT IS NOT ENOUGH.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 21 and am keeping company with a girl three years my junior. I am deeply in love with this girl, and no matter how I try to show her how much I love her I don't seem able to win her. My salary is $16 a week and good chances for advancement. S. B. C.

Sixteen a week is not enough to marry on, and prospects for more do not always materialize. I want you to win the girl's love, but I am glad it is not won under the present conditions. Wait, my boy; for you are only a boy, you know.

DON'T

DON'T forget when the trouble you fear most comes to you, it will be much easier to bear than you imagine.

If you have a strong point in your character, don't make it a weakness by admiring it too much.

Don't sit in idleness waiting for your ship to come in. You will be luckier than most people if, when it finally comes in, the Silent Boatman isn't in charge.

Don't keep a diary. Someone might produce it when your enemies are trying to prove you are insane.

Don't forget that every task you neglect that you may take a vacation will meet you at the station with all its relatives and friends when you get back.

If you are blessed with a good memory, don't weaken it by cherishing things against people.

Don't put so much hope on the New Thought that you slight the importance of the good old Second Thought.

Don't forget that if a little fairy should appear and make visible the burdens all are carrying on their backs, yours would seem small and trivial in comparison with most.

Don't put a barbed wire fence around your own sensitive spots and insist that others have bars down.

Don't tell little lies. If you must be untruthful, tell big ones and become known as a statistician.

Don't forget that next week you may be looking back with regret because you didn't show greater appreciation of to-day.

How "The Triple Tie" Was Broken

By MRS. LUCIE G. THURMAN.
375 S. Boulevard, Atlanta,
Winner of First Prize—$100.

In Mr. Mitchell's story of "The Triple Tie" interest in the hero, Gordon Kelly, was at a keen pitch when Chapter XLIII was printed in The Georgian on June 28. Readers had been informed of Kelly's capture by mountaineers. Then the scene shifted quickly to the Polo Grounds in New York where the Red Sox and White Sox were to play off the triple tie. Every reader was startled by the announcement that, with two men out and three on bases, Gordon Kelly would bat in place of Leonard for the Red Sox.

How did Kelly escape from the mountaineers, what happened to Mildred Deery, how did Gordon acquit himself in the famous game, how did he know baseball without ever having seen a game and what happened after the game were the problems which the contestants had to solve.

The judges awarded first prize of $100 to Mrs. Lucie G. Thurman, No. 375 South Boulevard, Atlanta.

"STEVE, this is Miss Mildred at the phone. I want you to get out the big car and meet Elmer and myself at the bridge, near the entrance of Mr. Gordon's place, where you have sometimes met us. Can you be there in an hour from now?"

"Yes, ma'am," said Steve quickly, remembering his master's injunction to do whater Miss Mildred told him. "I'll shore be there."

Mildred hung up the receiver and quickly got into her tan walking suit, with short skirt and leggins. Then she called Elmer to bring out the runabout and take her for a ride.

Delighted at the prospect of an outing with Mildred, Elmer hurried to do her bidding. In a few moments, after saying good-by to Mrs. Sheperd, telling her not to expect them back too early, they were off.

On the way to the bridge, Mildred confided to Elmer her plan, which was to try to see Gordon, and in some way communicate with him—at least to locate him, and if possible see him, if only for an instant. This plan filled the heart of the adventurous boy with delight, and had not his hands been busily engaged at the wheel at that moment, he would have hugged Mildred for sheer joy.

Steve met them at the bridge, and leaving the runabout inside the grounds, they got into the big car with Steve. Again on the main road they drove rapidly in the direction given by Gordon in his letters to Mildred.

It was now growing late in the afternoon; the October sunshine was bright and golden on the autumn leaves. The air was cool and crisp, bringing out most charmingly the roses in Mildred's cheeks. Her eyes sparkled brightly and her heart was happy with anticipation of again seeing Gordon.

Arriving at the bridge, where the road crosses Few Creek, about a mile from where Gordon was held a prisoner, Mildred and Elmer left the car, instructing Steve to be ready for the return trip at a moment's notice from them. They were now about fifteen miles from the Deery bungalow, as far as they could go on the main road. They must now follow the stream for a mile, where they would come into the clearing at the bottom of the hill spoken of by Gordon. The path was narrow and rough, and Mildred was glad she had worn her short skirt and leggins.

They Find Kelly.

The distance was soon covered by the two young people. They came to the clearing, and saw the hill which they must climb and then descend into the valley, where they felt sure the cabin must be hidden among the trees.

Silently they climbed the hill, more silently descended the other side, their hearts thumping hard all the while. At the same instant they saw the curling smoke issuing from the tree tops. Although the cabin could not be seen, they knew they were near the spot they sought. Not a sound reached their straining ears. Cautiously they advanced through the dense undergrowth, near the clearing about the cabin, getting down on all-fours in order to keep themselves hidden. With every nerve tense, they looked and listened, but no sound of human beings reached their ears. Whispering to Elmer to remain quiet, Mildred slowly arose. The sight which now greeted her eyes almost overwhelmed her. About 50 feet in front of her sat Gordon, his back against a tree, reading a newspaper. He seemed intensely interested, and did not stir. His left side and part of his back were turned toward her.

Her quick glance informed her that he was not alone. About fifteen feet in front of him, between Gordon and the cabin, sat a man on guard. His back was also toward Mildred, and she could not see his face, but the gun in his right hand pointed in Gordon's direction. The end of the cabin was toward the man, and there was no opening which she could see. With a stifled gasp Mildred sank down beside Elmer and whispered in his ear what she had seen. The tears flowed down her cheeks, and for a moment blinded her. In whispers they discussed how to attract Gordon's attention. Suddenly the bright sunshine fell full on something suspended on a slender chain from Mildred's neck. It was her vanity box. An inspiration she thought, and whispering to Elmer to be still, she again rose, opened the box, exposing a small mirror full in the sunshine. It cast a reflection on Gordon's paper, he moved slightly and raised his eyes to the man in front of him, who still sat with his eyes fixed on vacancy. At this moment another gleam fell across the paper.

Gordon lifted his paper to conceal his face and turned toward the place from whence came the gleam. A glad smile spread over his features as he saw Mildred's face peering from among the bushes so near him. Elmer too, stood by her side, for, boy-like, he could not be kept down. Instantly, and with the utmost caution, Gordon motioned them to lie down, then slowly rising and dropping his paper, he stretched himself and yawned lazily.

Going into the cabin he brought out his ball and bat and began practice. After batting the ball several times in other directions than the spot he was anxious to approach (all the while talking to himself, as he had formed this habit since these mountaineers were averse to talking to him), he finally batted the ball high into the air to fall near Mildred. Timing himself to the instant he was under the ball, catching it easily about three feet from Mildred.

"Is the car at the bridge?" he softly asked. She nodded an emphatic "Yes," and Mildred and Elmer sat down.

Gordon Escapes.

Glancing in the direction of his guard, Gordon saw the black-bearded man turn his face toward him. Without again looking toward Mildred, he said, as if speaking to the ball, "Get back to the car as fast as you can; when you get there I'll be there too," at the same time throwing the ball and running and making considerable noise to hold the attention of the guard.

Gordon kept to the far side of the clearing until he knew Mildred and Elmer had had time to climb the hill and descend to the creek on the other side. Then passing the cabin door, he saw one of the men bending over the fire, his back to the door, busy preparing supper. The other two were not to be seen.

Again the ball sped upward—this time toward the spot so lately occupied by Mildred and Elmer. The eyes of the guard followed the ball. After the ball went Gordon. As he neared the stump on which sat the guard with the gun, Gordon's arm suddenly was raised and the bat in his hand descended upon the man's head with such force that without a groan he fell to the ground, a helpless and inanimate mass.

Snatching up the guard's gun as it fell from his nerveless grasp, Gordon, without a backward glance, began a sprint, which had it been witnessed by his baseball friends, would have won him a pennant for life.

Ten minutes later the black-bearded guard slowly and painfully rose to a sitting posture. Rubbing the dust from his eyes at the same time the cobwebs from his addled brain, and gingerly feeling the side of his sore and swollen head, remarked to himself with characteristic brevity, "I reckon he's gone," and made no further move or comment until called in to supper.

As Mildred and Elmer were nearing the bridge, they heard someone crashing through the underbrush behind them; instinctively they hid themselves in the bushes at the side of the path. An instant later, Gordon's form loomed up big and black, and Mildred, with a glad cry, sprang into his outstretched arms, and Elmer was wholly forgotten in that blissful moment.

The Wedding.

The return trip to Gordon's home was quickly made. Steve was sent to Gordon's home to inform those there that he was safe and sound, and after seeing Mildred home would catch the first train for New York. Gordon had reached this decision after reading the baseball news that his services were needed by the Red Sox. Steve was instructed to pack his suit case and return with it to the bungalow.

When the big car reached its destination great was the surprise of its occupants to find that Mildred's parents had arrived during her absence. For a time everything was excitement, everybody talked at once, and it was difficult to make explanations.

Finally, Mildred and Gordon found themselves alone in a quiet corner of the porch, and after some necessary preliminaries they decided to ask the consent of Mr. and Mrs. Deery for a quiet home wedding at 10 o'clock next morning in Atlanta.

Mr. and Mrs. Deery had talked the matter over and were prepared to hear of an engagement before Gordon left for his train that night, but consternation reigned when the happy pair coolly announced their intention to be married next day.

After a hasty conversation over long distance telephone, there was a more hasty departure for Atlanta. A happy, although somewhat weary party alighted from the train at a very late hour at the Terminal Station where they were met by a big touring car and taken to the home of the Deerys.

At 10 o'clock next morning the parlors of the Deery home were thrown open to a few hastily invited friends to witness the marriage of Mildred and Gordon. At 11 o'clock the Southern train pulled out of Atlanta, and from a window in the private car of Mr. Deery could be seen the rosy, smiling faces of two young people waving "au revoir" to those left behind. They were the happy faces of Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Kelly.

How Kelly Learned.

Gordon Kelly was reared in the mountains, away from city temptations, and loving the outdoor and athletic life, was almost physically perfect. His father, fearing the old adage "like father, like son," kept Gordon in the mountains, and had tutors to instruct him at home. Great love existed between the parents and the boy, and the mother so exercised her loving influence over him that he was now formed in habits and character. He always was ready to reverently acknowledge that his rearing and progress was due to the influence of his mother.

Gordon Kelly had always been intensely interested in the national game, as was evidenced by his intimate knowledge of baseball players. Most men at Gordon's age prefer athletics to literature, so he used his knowledge and constructive ability to contrive and invent appliances that would furnish pleasure and excitement.

The gymnasium was complete in all its appointments. The idea of an electrical apparatus for timing speed on the track was also used between the bases. We have no evidence that Gordon engaged in pitching but that he did in batting, running bases and fielding.

In throwing an "out" curve, the pitcher in throwing the ball passes his fingers to the left and under the ball with a quick jerk just before it leaves his hand. The ball travels a certain distance in a straight line, then "breaks" to the left—from the batter. An "in" curve is made by letting the ball escape from the ends of the fingers—the hand being on the right side of the ball and the thumb on the left.

In the pitcher's box was a breech-loading mechanism for projecting the ball to a mechanical catcher. On the outside of the muzzle of the pitcher was a movable "curver," circular in form, and in size a little less than a fourth of the circumference of a baseball. Flanges—circular in form—held the curver in position, and when an "out" curve was desired, the "curver" was moved around to the left side of muzzle of the pitcher; for an "in" curve, to the right side, etc. With this device, and degree of curve "down and out," "down and in," etc., could be produced. This "curver" caused the necessary quickened revolution which caused the "break" before the plate was reached by the ball.

The mechanical catcher was an elliptically-shaped receptacle, the back of which was closed with loosely-hung canvas. This loose canvas did not break the speed of the ball too suddenly, and allowed the ball to drop into a large funnel, which deflected the ball into a tube, the ball now rolled down this declined tube to below and just back of the mechanical pitcher. Here the ball was raised and dropped into a hopper.

In the bottom of this hopper was a tube which deflected all the balls to a point just above the loading place in the breech. The breech was now projected forward, and four fingers of flexible steel, slightly bent outward, clutched and held the ball. The bore was of proper size to admit the steel fingers. The projection of the breech into the mechanism caused the powerful spring in same just back of the ball to be closed. This spring was spiral, and the ball end of it was closed over. Inside the spring was a small steel rod, with a trigger at its end—when the breech had entered the mechanism the proper distance, the jaws of the trigger automatically opened, holding the spring until it was released, thus again pitching the ball. Several balls might be used in this device so that too much time might not be consumed.

Mechanical Pitcher.

Electric signs are constructed to flash single letters, words, lines and then the whole sign. This might be termed loading. The mechanical pitcher was so constructed that its delivery could be "loaded," and Gordon would load it with curves and balls, of course, keenly—no memory record of same. The mechanism could be stopped at any moment by Gordon. Steve was there to retrieve balls batted to the field.

In the running of bases it must be remembered that Gordon was very fleet of foot. However, in sliding to bases, he had a mechanical arm constructed with a trigger, over which trigger he was compelled to slide. The body coming in contact with the trigger caused the arm to descend upon the slider. In this way Gordon became expert in the "fall-away" slide.

In fielding, a mechanical thrower would throw fly or ground balls, and Gordon being at a given distance would endeavor to field the ball. If the ball was fielded, Gordon would make the test harder. Practice brought proficiency. Thus Kelly LEARNED to bat, field, and run bases.

About the beginning of the ninth inning of the last game, which was to end the "triple tie," a beautiful Southern girl, handsomely gowned, smiling happily, and accompanied only by her maid, was seen to enter a box in the grand stand. Instantly her eyes were riveted upon the form of a tall, lithe man, who walked briskly and with the air of a victor to the batter's box.

"Gordon Kelly batting in place of Leonard."

Boston crowd goes wild—flags wave, rooters cheer, and the band plays "Dixie" as Gordon steps to the plate. He doffs his cap and bows toward the box where Mildred is seated. Silence prevails over the multitude, except for the coaching of Stahl. The runners are worrying Walsh as much as possible. Manager Callahan and Captain Lord shout encouragement to the White Sox. On the first pitch to Gordon Connelly calls loudly "one ball." Gordon fouls the second over the grandstand. Walsh tries to fool Gordon with an "out-shoot." "Two balls!" yells the umpire.

Kelly Slides Home.

Gordon fouls the fourth ball pitched over the scoreboard. "Strike two," calls Connelly. Chicago contingent now cheering wildly and throwing hats in the air. Walsh now presents Gordon with another ball.

"Three balls," says Connelly.

Two strikes and three balls.

Not a sound is to be heard.

"All the way around now, Gordon!" yells Stahl.

Walsh decides that he can fool Gordon with an "in" curve. CRACK! and the ball begins to soar and the runners are off at the sound of the bat and are racing for the plate. The great crowd is cheering, flags are waving, hats are thrown in the air. Three of the runners have crossed the plate—the White Sox rightfielder has recovered the ball and the players are ready to relay the ball to the plate, for if Gordon can be caught there the game will be tied. At the moment that the second baseman receives the ball Gordon is about twenty feet from the plate and going like the wind. The ball is snapped to the White Sox catcher at which moment Stahl, who has been coaching Gordon, roars, "slide, Kelly, slide"—down goes Gordon and under and outward from the catcher. Connelly spreads both hands palms downward signifying "safe." Red Sox win, four to three.

After the close of the wonderful game the beautiful Southern girl was joined by the man of the bat. Together they entered a waiting taxi which conveyed them to their hotel, from where began a wedding tour, which included a trip around the world, with the time unlimited.

One of the Greatest Mystery Stories Ever Written

The Newly Wed Mrs. Cameron Bids Her Mother Farewell.

By ANNA KATHARINE GREEN.

(Copyright, 1913, by Anna Katharine Green.)

What Has Gone Before.

It is the wedding day of Dr. Walter Cameron. He is to be married at 8 o'clock that evening to Genevieve Gretorex, a beautiful society girl. At 4 o'clock Dr. Cameron is called upon in his office by Ebenezer Gryce, a member of the Scotland Yard detective force. He astounds Dr. Cameron by telling him that Miss Gryce has been missing for several days. Gryce says that the girl's mother requested his services in the hunt for her daughter, and showed him a note in which Miss Gretorex declared she would be back in time for the ceremony. Dr. Cameron is greatly distressed. Gryce is continuing his story concerning his interview with Mrs. Gretorex.

Now go on with the story.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"I felt troubled. I looked at the mother to ascertain what her real fears were. But they did not seem to be any worse than those she had expressed. Was she blind to the possibilities? I felt it my duty to repeat a former question.

"'Mrs. A.,' said I, 'I will try to find your child. The fact that she had too little money to go far from home will facilitate matters. But first I must be sure that there is no third party mixed up in this case and that party a gentleman. You are certain she was not secretly interested in some unknown person?'

"'I can only repeat her words,' replied the poor mother. 'The very last time I saw her (it was day before yesterday evening) she looked so feverish and acted so unlike herself that I ventured to ask her if she were sure she would not fall sick before her wedding day. She said with an unnatural laugh I hear ringing yet, "I have no idea of falling ill and I shall certainly not do so till after I have married the doctor."'

"Did I say," inquired the detective, pausing, "that Miss A.'s lover was a doctor?"

This was too much for his uneasy auditor. Leaping to his feet, Dr. Cameron confronted the speaker and exclaimed hotly:

No Mood to Talk.

"You ar playing with me. It is of my intended wife you are speaking, and you are amusing yourself with a long-drawn-out tale, when all I want to know is, whether I am to find my bride at the altar when I go there, or whether I am to be made the victim of an outrageous scandal that will affect my whole future career. Don't you know that it is now half-past four and that at eight——"

"Softly," interrupted the other, "I am Ebenezer Gryce and I seldom go slow when I ought to go fast. If I take up your time by telling you a long-drawn-out tale it is because——"

But the doctor was in no mood for talk.

"Tell me," said he, "if Miss Gretorex has returned to her father's house."

"She has not."

"And they have not heard from her?"

The detective shook his head.

Dr. Cameron's mouth took a grim curve. "There is to be no wedding then, I see." Then as the other did not answer he broke out into a harsh laugh, and turned toward the window. "I will send and countermand the order for my carriage," he now dryly remarked.

Mr. Gryce advanced and touched him softly on the shoulder.

"On the contrary," said he, "you will send for it to come at once; there is use for it."

"I do not understand you."

"You have not heard my story out."

"Speak, then. If nothing but slow torture will answer, why I must summon up my courage and submit."

"Good! Meanwhile you will send for your carriage?"

"If you say I will 'equire it."

"I have already said so."

"Wait," cried the other, stopping him as he reached out his hand toward the electric bell. "Where am I expected to go?"

"To the C—— Hotel."

"A fine ride on my wedding day."

"A necessary one."

"And whom am I expected to see there?"

"A young woman who has registered herself as Mildred Farley, but who I think looks precisely like the original of that picture I see hanging over your fireplace."

Dr. Cameron shuddered.

A Resemblance.

"Don't you know whether it is the original or not?"

"No; if I did I should not need you. I should take Mrs. Gretorex with me instead."

"And why don't you do so as it is?"

"For two reasons: First, she is a woman and I wish to save her all the suffering I can; secondly, she is a marked person, and her appearance in a crowded hotel on the day of her daughter's anticipated wedding might awaken comment."

"And mine?"

"You are a doctor. You can go everywhere, at any time, without causing the least scandal."

"And the young lady? Have you thought how very agreeable to her my presence will probably be, if she is as you surmise the woman I am expected to marry in four hours?"

"I have thought of everything. The young lady shall not see you. You shall only see her."

"And if I find her the stranger her name implies?"

"You shall drive to Mr. Gretorex's house as fast as you can, confident that your bride will be there to welcome you."

Dr. Cameron no longer hesitated. The carriage was ordered. While they were waiting for it, the doctor asked for the remainder of the story he had before disdained to hear.

"I can listen now," he said. "I already know the worst."

With an enigmatical bend of the brows the detective continued.

Unlimited Confidence.

"Mrs. Gretorex has an unlimited confidence in the police. When she had told me that her daughter was missing, and that she had gone out of the house without baggage, and showed me the letter she had received, she evidently thought she had given me all the information necessary. But I thought differently. Having but three days in which to accomplish this task, it was necessary that no time should be lost in pursuing false clews; so, after asking for Miss A.'s—Miss Gretorex's—photograph, I put a few further questions, and, finding that she could really give me no added information, I followed out my usual course in these matters and asked leave to interrogate the servants.

"'But,' she exclaimed, 'they have no notion but that she has gone away with our full knowledge and consent. It would ruin everything to take them into our confidence; girls of that class can never keep a secret.'

"'I understand,' I replied, 'and I have no notion of taking them into our confidence. We have fifty ways of getting what we wish out of servants without their suspecting us or our motives.'

"I thought the lady looked peculiar.

"'Well,' said she, 'the only one who could give you any information has lately left the house. My daughter took a dislike to her and begged that she be dismissed. Not liking to cross Miss Gretorex in her present condition, I complied, though I knew nothing against the girl and liked her work well.'

Another Clew.

"This had the look of a clew. At all events, it was worth another question.

"'And what excuse did your daughter give for her dislike?'

"'Oh, none; thought the girl prying, I believe, meddled too much with her new things, I suppose.'

"I asked for the girl's address. That word prying gave me hope; it was the open sesame, perhaps, to the mystery before us. The mother gave it without hesitation, but also without any enthusiasm. That a servant should have picked up any information in regard to her proud daughter, of which she herself was ignorant, seemed absolutely incredible to her. But I know my business," asserted Mr. Gryce, "and after taking such measures as are usual with the police when a person like Miss Gretorex is missing, I went to see this girl.

"I will not try your patience by relating the interview. It was like a thousand others I have had, and ended very much as I expected it would. She talked, but was not conscious she talked. She told me all she knew about Miss Gretorex, and considerable that she did not. There was evidently reason for her mistress calling her prying, for she had a great deal to say about a girl who used to come there with sewing; trash which I was obliged to listen to in order to get at the one thing I wanted, which was that she had once surprised the young lady writing a letter she evidently did not wish seen, for she blushed with anger at the intrusion, calling the girl names and threatening her with the dismissal she afterward received."

The Manicure Lady

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

"I WAS listening to a fat gent coming down in the car this morning," said the Manicure Lady. "He was talking about how he had worked for years and years, and now he was rich and happy. He was telling how he had his fine country home and his city home and his automobiles and all the rest of the things that wealth brings, and how happy he was, and what a good world this is."

"He had a right to feel that way when everything was so easy for him," said the Head Barber.

"That ain't the way I figure it at all, George," declared the Manicure Lady. "I may be wrong, but it seems to me that if I was rich and fat, that would be just the time I would feel the saddest for all the millions of people that ain't rich and fat, and them that is fat and poor. I don't see how that man could be altogether happy when he knows that in the big cities there are thousands of hungry folks every day, folks that ain't able to buy nothing good to ratify or deplease their hunger.

"If I Had a Million."

"If I had a million dollars I would try to limit myself to just enough for a nice, comfortable living the rest of my life and scatter the rest of it where it would do the most good. I would care for all the needy I could, and every time I heard of a poor little shop girl trying to live right on $4 a week I would be one of them there Lady Bountifuls, and from that time on she would live happily until she was married. I often like to lie awake and dream of all the good things that I would do if I had money. I suppose I'm a kind of nut for wasting my time that way, but it makes me feel almost as happy sometimes as if I really had the money and was doing all them good deeds."

"I think you are a mighty good girl to have them dreams," said the Head Barber, "but, of course, dreaming don't do no good. You have to have the millions first before you can help the poor. There is so many of the poor, too many. Things ain't the way they ought to be in this world, kiddo. It makes me kind of sad a lot of times when I am on the way to the country and look at some of them little hovels not far from some of the handsome homes. In them hovels there must be misery and discomfort that you and me could never stand one week, and yet them people have to go along that way, not for a week or a month, but for all their lives. The trouble with you and me is that, like a lot of other good-hearted folks, we never have enough at one time to help the really poor. All I had this morning was carfare and lunch money, and the guy that just went out paid me $10 that I never expected to get in this world."

"Ain't That Queer?"

"Ain't that queer?" exclaimed the Manicure Lady. "Brother Wilfred paid me back ten dollars this morning that I had kissed good-bye to long ago. I felt so good about it that I went and bought me a new summer lid, which makes three bonnets I have all at one time. What are you going to do with your ten, George—give it to the poor?"

"It wouldn't go far enough," said the Head Barber, sheepishly. "I just sent out this minute to cover a bet on Cruel Cora in the fourth race. She's due to win, and I got three to one for my sawbuck. But just the same, kiddo, if there was more good-hearted folks like us, the poor would be happier."

Children and Their Influence

By JERE K. COOKE.

(It may be asked why I, of all men, should write upon questions affecting marriage and other relations. In reply, I would say that one who has gone through what I have, suffered as much as I have, and seen so much of the world and it's hard side, may possibly have something to say that will be of use to others. I hope so, at least.—JERE K. COOKE.)

An elevator apartment, a poodle dog and a married couple. The man is a grouch—the woman unhappy and the poodle dog is the recipient of their affection, caresses and consideration. But this is not a home! The home is an elevatorless flat.

It has no dog, but the companions of the man and the woman are a group of happy, curly-headed children whose ages suggest a pair of stairs. These are the joys of living. The happy voices, the running feet and the childish play, literally fill a home with sunshine and content.

It is said that most men of the criminal class are single men. The home life and love are so firmly gripped upon a married man's heart that he will hesitate long before he will bring his trustful wife and innocent children into the disgrace of his misconduct.

The curly-haired baby that lifts its chubby hands to be taken into his father's arms is a strong deterrent to wrongdoing. No happier welcome can come to a hard-working man than to be met at the gate at the end of the day by a smiling, home-loving wife with a squad of children clinging to her skirts. It takes the tiredness all out of his bones.

A Life Story.

Children hold a man and wife together. I once knew a man who had apparently everything that heart could desire—a beautiful home, a charming wife, a fine position, and was well-liked by a host of friends.

Only one thing was lacking.

Of their union there was no offspring.

He seemed happy, but there were times when the evening hour approached he had an undefined longing for something. After a while the twilight hour, or in other homes "the children's hour," became a lonesome void to him.

He would go down the street to the club, or anywhere to get away from himself. Little by little the husband and wife drifted apart.

She was angry at first that he sought pleasure away from her society, and then she got so she did not care. Had she only had one dear little curly headed toddler at her side to hold out chubby arms in unison with hers, how different it might have been.

Another came into her life who did not go to the club. The husband had an opportunity to make a lot of money by speculation. It was very risky, but he took the chance.

If the dear little baby eyes had looked into his that morning, would he have risked his all?

He lost! His wife, who had grown not to care, turned from him. They separated, and he, poor fellow, is working alone to win back something of all he had lost.

Two Stars.

There are two bright stars in the crown of womanhood—one is to be a wife of absolute fidelity, the other is to become the mother of a contented family.

Men seldom complain of the size of their households. Each little stranger brings its own welcome, no matter how undesirable they were thought to be. The children, too, seem to thrive just as well wearing the older children's outgrown clothes and are as robust under the limitations of a large family as though the mouths to feed were few. The "only sons" are generally spoiled, and in after life go wrong.

I once heard a fine specimen of a man remark: "I was one of a family of nine and was 11 years old before I knew a chicken had anything but a gizzard and a neck!"

If a man is naturally morally weak, his family do more to keep him straight than all else combined. It also goes a long way in making his penalty merciful rather than harsh if he does not keep within the law.

One of the most pathetic sights I ever saw was a young husband up for sentence in San Francisco and headed for San Quentin. Just before his doom was pronounced his wife, fragile and wan, came into the courtroom with her cooing infant in her arms.

She went right up to the manacled prisoner and kissed him. The child reached out for its father and the picture that little family presented was enough to turn the heart of any judge. Did his honor have mercy on him? No! But he had mercy on the faithful wife, who "for worse" rather than "for better" was yoked up to her mate.

He had mercy, too, on their innocent, helpless, crooning baby, whose after life would be so conditioned by the shackles on its father's wrists and by the stripes its father wore.

Women's Boons.

Marriage and maternity are the boons of women. Being a benedict is the boon for man, and children bring the benediction. "A little child shall lead them," so the Bible says, and is the "blessed tie that binds." Woe to the wife who has had her chance to have her baby and missed it. The ghost of that unborn child will toddle into her heart on lonely nights, and the feeble cry for its mother will bring anguish to her soul.

I know a woman in such a plight—I know nothing more desolate than a lonely woman who has not known the joy of motherhood. It would be better, infinitely better, for a mother to place the flowers that represent her affection on the grave of her little lost loved one than as a lonely wife to hear the ghostly voice of an unborn child calling her when it is too late, in her desolation and despair.

The Baseball Fan-nie

BY NELL BRINKLEY

Copyright, 1913, International News Service.

This is me and I'm with Him—and didn't he have to answer a lot of foolish questions, oh! But he never peeped once.

Here is a fat, pretty woman I saw at the game. Her hankie-hat looked like a postage stamp.

These two were at the game, too, but why I don't know—they hardly ever noticed it.

WHAT strikes you most about her is that she makes herself so "at home." Hat off—so the air can keep the top of her pretty head cool; her parasol leaned against the railing; her own self slouched down in the middle of her back, which health-preachers say is bad for us, but which is mighty comfortable; in one hand a fan fluttering hard like a butterfly—the only thing about her that works; in the other hand a tall, frosty glass, or a tall, cool bottle—the prickly liquid inside it going via a double straw to her lips that only stop drinking long enough to gurgle, "Good boy, Dent!"

Precociousness in Love

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

"Precociousness in love-making is a great mistake. It prevents the enjoyment of youthful years, which should be free from anxiety, and leads to entanglements and hasty attachments, which cause much distress."
E. J. HARDY.

WHEN a girl is between 12 and 16 she looks so much like a large-sized doll that those of the other sex treat her as such, taking into no account that in her little body there is a heart with a capacity for suffering greater than any woman's, and a soul that is like an untried instrument, waiting for the master's hand to strike the chords.

If he strikes it gently, evoking a melody that is sweet and pure, that melody becomes the keynote of her existence. If, thinking only of his own brutal passions, he strikes chords that should lie dormant, he wrecks the instrument and ruins her life.

If all the men, young and old, would only Stop, Look and Listen, what a tale of tragedies might remain untold! If they confined their love-making to women grown; if they observed in love the Golden Rule in sport, to fight only with those their own size, there would not be so many mothers and fathers weeping over premature graves to-day!

A Chance for Evil.

"The heart of a girl is the home of dreams." In her dreams the man who comes to her with a story of love is brave and noble and good and true. Her father has never deceived her; her mother is the spirit of truth; her friends are loyal; she doesn't know what deceit means. She is trusted, and she trusts. She has always believed what others tell her; how natural that she continues to believe when some dream hero assumes reality!

The trust and innocence of youth, which should be a bulwark of defence, becomes the drawbridge by which the enemy enters and takes possession.

An effort is making all over the civilized world to protect young girls with the armor of Knowledge. A good thing, but not enough. So long as there are young girls in the world there will be hearts with a woman's longing for love, accompanied by brains with only a child's capacity for reasoning. It is not enough to appeal to the girl; an appeal should be made to the man.

No Excuse.

Let him Stop, Look and Listen. Somewhere in the world every day some young girl who has made the discovery that her lover has been playing with her as if she were in reality the doll she resembles writes a tragic little note of good-bye to mother and lover, and ends her life.

He was amusing himself. She wasn't. To girls of this age love is real and awful.

Perhaps he meant no harm. Perhaps he committed no greater sin against the girl than to make love to her. But this will not lighten the weight on his conscience when she is driven to a desperate deed.

Youth is hopeful, but not as hopeful as it is morbid. Her little heart is broken, and since she can not touch his heart living, she finds consolation in the thought that her death will. It is a period of insanity that comes to all girls whose hearts are awakened before their brains are matured, a most dangerous period, and one which all men, young and old, should be warned against.

If they must make love, let them observe the golden rule of all sport, and select someone their own size and age.

Daysey Mayme and Her Folks

By FRANCES L. GARSIDE.

THERE never was a man who did not think he could throw eloquence into his voice as readily as a woman throws salt into a stew. This is such a pronounced weakness that to the two rules for catching a husband, "Feed the Brute" and "Laugh at His Jokes," there should be this addition, "Ask Him to Read Out Loud."

The sound of his voice is music in his ears when employed in ordinary conversation, and infinitely more like unto a grand, sweet song when engaged in reading the heroic sentiments of others.

Daysey Mayme Appleton had tucked eleven sofa cushions back of her caller, every cushion being an additional proof of his eligibility. She had fed him, she had laughed at his jokes. Getting a book from the table, she attacked his third vulnerable spot.

It was titled, "The Hunger of Her Soul," and Daysey Mayme had bought it that day.

"Read to me," she pleaded. "Your voice vibrates like the strings of a heavenly harp."

He had never heard a heavenly harp, but that made no difference. No man ever inspects the compliments paid him. This man didn't, and opening the book at random he began:

"The silence, so often intense it fairly pulsated, was broken by a sigh. Then his lips met hers. Warm, soft and fraught as the dew, his lips lingered and lingered till their two souls were as one."

The young man blushed. He felt as if he were approaching nearer and nearer a consuming fire.

"Read on," murmured Daysey Mayme.

"He gathered her closer to him; his nostrils were filled with the cloying sweetness of her hair; he——"

The young man reached for a fan. "Read on," murmured Daysey Mayme.

"He——" The young man got up and threw open a window. Then he began again.

"He felt her warm breath on his neck. He could resist, he would resist, no longer——"

The young man took a piece of ice out of a lemonade glass and pressed it to his brow.

"He——"

The young man looked doubtfully at Daysey Mayme. He was country bred and had been brought up by a mother who wouldn't wear anything peek-a-boo, not even a porous plaster.

"Read on," murmured Daysey Mayme.

"He lifted——"

There was a sudden flash of flame, an odor of burning flesh and bones and woolen, and Daysey Mayme was alone!

The country-bred young man's blushes had consumed him.

All But—

"Dear Mabel," he began, "do you love me?"

"O-h, George!"

"Don't you, Mabel? Just a little tiny bit?"

"Well, y-e-s, George."

"And if I married you would your father give us a separate establishment?"

"Yes, George."

"And take me into partnership?"

"Yes, George."

"And would your mother keep away from us except when I invited her?"

"She would, George."

"And your brothers and sisters, too?"

"Why, certainly, George."

"And, of course, the old gent would settle my debts?"

"Of course, George."

"And buy us an automobile and provide you with a handsome dowry?"

"Yes, George."

"Darling, will you marry me?"

"No, George!"

.:. I Understand You .:.

HE felt to happy that he wanted to take the whole world into his arms. Last night happiness had come to him, wonderful, indescribable happiness, surpassing all belief, showering upon him all its blessings, wrapping him in such a splendor of light that he was almost dazzled by its brightness.

He had met with his first success as a poet and playwright. For the first time he had felt the intoxicating charm of the storming, roaring applause of the hundred-headed audience. Yes, life is beautiful, especially when you are young and strong and full of passionate longings and desires. Then it is quite impossible to stay inside the close, stuffy rooms; then you must rush out into the streets and look into the eyes and souls of other people.

So he took his young fame out for a walk, confident that his new friend, Fortune, would give him a new proof of her benevolence, a proof which, of course, should be connected with some young and lovely maiden.

And there were maidens enough in the streets, for it was the month of May, the month of longings and desires for love.

But, strangely enough, he was not attracted by any of these fair, straight, slender beauties, though yesterday he admired them one and all. But to-day it must be something quite different, nothing less than a fairy princess, a woman who perhaps exists only in the dreams of a poet and not in reality. If he could only find a woman like that he knew that he had it in him to become the greatest poet the world had ever known.

Suddenly the young poet stopped as if hypnotized, for on the other side of the street she was coming toward him—the fairy princess of his fairest dreams, a vision of feminine beauty, grace and strength. The blood began to rush through his veins and he remained where he stood, rooted to the spot.

Then he picked up all his courage, and a moment later he was at her side. "Forgive my audacity, but——"

The young girl looked at him, not encouragingly, and still not reproachfully, with a strange, helpless expression in her eyes and an embarrassed movement of her hands. The young man still mumbled a few commonplace compliments, but no sign of understanding came into the young lady's eyes.

Her very features and figure ought to have told him that she was no German, but undoubtedly a Parisienne, charming, chic and graceful as she was. It was too stupid that he had not seen that at first glance. Thank God, he knew her language. He addressed her in French.

She smiled, a faint, pitiful smile, and shrugged her shoulders to indicate that she had not understood him.

The young man did not know what to do. Then she was no Frenchwoman either. What might she be, then? Perhaps an Englishwoman. But he ridiculed the thought when he remembered the lanky, angular daughters of Albion that he had seen. The idea was absurd. Should she be a Russian? If so, he was lost, for he did not know a single word of Russian.

But suddenly he heard her address him in his own native tongue:

"Don't try to find any more subjects of conversation, for I should not understand you. If you want anything, you will have to say it very loudly into my ear, for I am almost deaf."

So that was why. The young man was dumfounded. All his confidence of victory had left him and he felt something he had never known before.

Then he collected his wits. What was he to do? Should he shout his wish into her ear? No; that would never do. What he had to tell her could be told only in the softest whisper, and, silent and discouraged, he walked along at her side.

The streets with their crowds and noises lay far behind them and the mighty trees of the Tiergarten formed a green dome over their heads. Then he looked at her deeply and tenderly, with eyes so full of fervent, passionate adoration that it ran like red-hot lava through her young body.

And now she smiled, a tender, happy smile and, trembling with delight, her lips whispered: "Yes, I understand you."

Hand in hand they walked back to the city.

WOMAN'S ILLS DISAPPEARED

Like Magic After Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

NORTH BANGOR, N. Y.—"As I used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound with great benefit I feel it my duty to write and tell you about it. I was ailing from female weakness and had headache and backache nearly all the time. I was later every month than I should have been and so sick that I had to go to bed.

"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has made me well and these troubles have disappeared like magic. I have recommended the Compound to many women who have used it successfully."—Mrs. James J. Stacy, R. F. D. No. 3, North Bangor, N. Y.

Another Made Well

ANN ARBOR, MICH.—"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done wonders for me. For years I suffered terribly with hemorrhages and had pains so intense that sometimes I would faint away. I had female weakness so bad that I had to doctor all the time and never found relief until I took your remedies to please my husband. I recommend your wonderful medicine to all sufferers as I think it is a blessing for all women."—Mrs. L. E. Wyckoff, 112 S. Ashley St., Ann Arbor, Mich.

There need be no doubt about the ability of this grand old remedy, made from the roots and herbs of our fields, to remedy woman's diseases. We possess volumes of proof of this fact, enough to convince the most skeptical. Why don't you try it?

.:. A Woman Builder .:.

THE astonishing manner in which women of to-day are invading the fields of employment which a few years ago were considered the sole prerogatives of man is once more strikingly illustrated by the remarkable achievements of Miss Alice Durkin, New York's only master builder, who employs over 700 men, and who competes with the contractors of this city for skyscraping contracts.

For four years Miss Durkin has been numbered among the master builders of the city, and in that time she has erected buildings to the value of $2,000,000. She is the first and only woman member of the Building Trades Association of New York.

Her career is a veritable romance of industry. The daughter of a wealthy man who lost his money, she took a post when quite a young girl in the office of a leading New York builder fourteen years ago.

Business Qualities.

"I took a keen interest in the work," said Miss Durkin to a newspaper interviewer, "and I seized every opportunity of talking to carpenters, masons and plumbers, and learned a lot from them about materials, labor, construction and other things which have to be considered by the contractor. I attended classes at night and studied continually, and after I had been in the office a year I asked permission to figure on some alterations in a school contract. Afterward my employer began to secure contracts on figures I had prepared. Of course, it has been hard work, and there have been many details to overcome; but it has been very enjoyable. A knowledge of mathematics, a clear head and a great deal of tact are needed in this business."

It might have been thought that the contractors of New York would have looked with disfavor on Miss Durkin's invasion of their trade; but, as a matter of fact, they have acted in a most kindly and friendly way toward her. "In fact," she says 'they have been particularly courteous to me, because I am a woman competing with them on equal grounds."

A Remarkable Sight.

Public schools, nurses' homes and institutes are among the buildings which Miss Durkin has constructed, and it is a notable fact that shortly after she started business for herself she competed against eleven leading contractors for the New York Public Library, in which over $10,000,000 was represented, and she only lost by a hair's breadth. She has also built one or two Broadway skyscrapers.

Miss Durkin superintends every detail of her business, and it is a remarkable sight to see this dainty, charming member of the fair sex threading her way through scaffolding and piles of bricks and mortar, directing gangs of men during building operations.

Huge Demand for Them.

Salesman—Here you are, gentlemen; the greatest invention of the age!

Passer-by (stopping to listen)—What is it?

Salesman—A magnetized keyhole plate for front doors. It will attract an ordinary steel key from a distance of two feet. All you have to do to find the keyhole at night is to take out your key and hang on to it.

(Three men were injured in the crowd that rushed to buy.)

Do You Know That—

Gout is rarely known among the working classes of Ireland. Their immunity from this complaint is thought to be due to the fact that their food consists largely of potatoes.

There were 20,000 people in England and Wales without a birthday this year owing to the fact that February contained only twenty-eight days.

Spain has more sunshine than any other country in Europe. The yearly average is 3,000 hours. In England its is 1,400.

Germany is the greatest beer-producing country in the world. Of 51,000 breweries in the world, 25,000 are in Germany.

A lock of hair from the head of George Washington was bought at an auction sale in New York for $480.

On an average no fewer than two hundred people are killed by lightning every year.

More matches are used in the United Kingdom than in any other country in the world.

SMITH A DANE; IRISH MANAGER A PEEVED MAN

By W. W. Naughton.

IT would require considerable advertising to draw attention to a glove contest between white hopes Eckblad and Chiariglion, would it? But if you announced a bout between Gunboat Smith and Jim Flynn it would be different.

A glance at the record book will show that Andrew Chiariglion is Jim Flynn's rightful name, and according to reports from New York it has been discovered that Gunboat Smith is a Dane, and that he was christened Edward Eckblad.

They say Manager Jim Buckley is mad clear through over the disclosure. Jim has been parading Gunboat as a second crop Irishman, and he continues to insist that the blood of the ancient kings of Munster flows through Gunboat's veins.

But Dame Rumor is giving Jim the laugh. She says that Smith—or rather Eckblad—was born in Milica, Minn., and that his forbears hailed from Copenhagen.

Now that the secret is out, the average fan will have it that Gunboat looks more like a Dane than an Irishman, but the subject is a dangerous one to broach in Buckley's presence. He brands the report as a cruel canard, and asserts that the fellows who had the temerity to attack Smith's nationality will try to prove that Tommy Murphy is a Polish Jew before they are done.

Murphy, however, is better equipped with an alibi than Gunboat. Tommy's photograph would fit into its surroundings if published as a frontispiece to the song, "Where the River Shannon Flows."

* * *

IF Flynn is in fairly good shape, he is likely to make things interesting for Gunboat. The Flynn of a couple of years ago was one of the most dangerous of all the heavies over a short distance. He always fought under a full head of steam, and at the same time kept so close to his man that he was hard to reach with full arm swings.

It was by piling in and forcing his opponent to fight at short range that Flynn defeated Al Kaufman, Carl Morris and other men much bigger than himself. Gunboat, like Kaufman and Morris, is at his best when permitted to stand away and measure his man. It may be that Smith will catch Flynn with one of his knockout blows while Flynn boxes in his old-time style. Smith is in for as merry a quarter of an hour as he has ever had on a fighting platform.

The chances are, however, that Flynn is slower than he used to be. His defeat by Luther McCarty at Los Angeles tamed his stubborn pride and took much of the starch out of him. It was noticed in the affair referred to that Pueblo Jim did not assimilate punishment as in former fights, and the suspicion formed that long service had deprived him of his dash.

Four Hitters of 'Bull' Will Get Check Aug. 3

August the third, quite mild of the skies, has been duly immortalized by Mr. B. Harte, but the chances are that a certain four ball players in the Southern League will look forward to that day next month for reasons quite apart from the remarkable poem of the Heathen Chinee.

Four hitters of the well-known "Bull" signs in Southern League parks will be awarded their prizes on that day.

Here are the lucky riflemen:

Joe Ward, of the Memphis club, who hit the "Bull" in his home town April 26, thereby proving a swatsman is not without honor even in his own precinct; and Ernest Walker, Rudy Baerwald and R. H. Shanley, all of the Billikens. Walker hit the big sign at Memphis June 15, while the other two selected their home lot as the proper setting for their display of prowess, June 20 and 21, respectively.

Each batsman will receive a check for $50.

She Couldn't See Pa Anywhere Around

Joe Mandot Out for New Start

Believes He Has Chance at Title

By Ed W. Smith.

CHICAGO, July 29.—There may yet be a lightweight champion of the world hailing from south of the Mason and Dixon line. Joe Mandot, champion of the South, hasn't given up hope by a long way of yet attaining the coveted title and, if serious endeavor and some sparkling mills next winter will get what endeavor and seriousness are said in the story books to get, then Mandot has a grand chance. Joe doesn't believe so much in what is contained in story books, but he has pored over a lot of record books, and knows pretty well what they contain. That's why he knows it's going to be a mighty serious task ahead of him.

* * *

JOE wandered into town last evening. He had his pretty little wife and a huge smile with him, and had not been in the city more than a few minutes before he was joined by the indefatigable Tommy Walsh, and they began to lay plans for the fall campaign. Joe came through from Los Angeles by way of San Francisco and Denver, stopping off at San Francisco to see the Ritchie-Rivers battle, and making a halt at Denver to look over the situation there. He will remain in the city until to-night, and then intends to journey on to New Orleans and go to the Mandot ranch, but a short distance from that city, and rest there for a good many weeks. In addition, Joe's father, the big baker of the French Market in New Orleans, is not in good health, and Joe wants to see him.

* * *

ALONG in the fall some time Joe will be ready to start out on an entirely new campaign, the ultimate aim of which will be to land a crack at the lightweight title. Joe says his first battles in this campaign will be decided within easy reaching distance of Chicago and that he will take on several of the best men attainable. Long has he wanted to box around here and believes that not only can he make many friends here, but can pick up the change as well, which, after all, is the main thing in most businesses or professions. Joe has a lot of friends here now and expects to make more.

* * *

JOE doesn't think that Willie Ritchie is a great champion, because he has demonstrated that he can not, or will not, make the weight which has been recognized for a long time now as the real limit of the class. Listen to what the bright young Frenchman has to say of his impressions of the champion: "While Willie was training for the Rivers fight I paid him a visit, and he looked anything but good to me. He was terribly drawn and thin, and it was then but three days from fighting time. They asked me how he looked to me, and I told them he was all right if he didn't have to reduce any more. I certainly didn't like his chances after I saw him and figured that Rivers had a royal chance of whipping him. But it didn't turn out that way.

* * *

"WOULDN'T I like to have had the chance that Rivers did! He'll never get a better one of winning a title. No, I don't guess he quit. He was hit hard enough in the chin. It looked all right to me. Ritchie can hit, there isn't any question about that. I happen to be in a position to know, because he hit me once in New Orleans. That's why I don't think Rivers quit. But Willie is a big fellow and can not make 133 pounds at the ringside. Therefore he isn't a legitimate lightweight."

VITT IN BAD SHAPE.

DETROIT, MICH., July 29.—Oscar Vitt, second baseman of the Detroit league baseball club, is seriously ill with la grippe here. His physican said today his condition had not reached the critical stage and recovery is expected, but the player will probably be out of the game until fall at least.

GADSDEN TO RETAIN TEAM.

GADSDEN, ALA., July 29.—Gadsden's baseball team will not be transferred to Newnan, Ga., to play the remaining games scheduled. Local fans have secured contributions of $500 for the support of the team for the remainder of the season.

DISBROW IS WINNER.

GALVESTON, TEXAS, July 29.—The 200-mile sweepstake race, a free-for-all for a purse of $5,000, will be continued at the Galveston beach automobile course this afternoon. Louis Disbrow, driving a Simplex, won the first leg of the race yesterday, averaging 71.28 miles on hour for 100 miles.

POLO MATCH.

NARRAGANSETT PIER, R. I., July 29.—In one of the closest and hardest fought polo games played this year, the Cooperstown team defeated Rock-Away 6 1-2 goals to 5 1-4 in the first round of the senior championship matches game at the Point Judith polo field yesterday.

LEACH CROSS AND BALDWIN MIX TO-NIGHT

LOS ANGELES, July 29.—A small army of riding celebrities will be on hand at Vernon arena to-night to see Leach Cross-Matty Baldwin scheduled twenty-round bout. The affair appears to be one that the boxers themselves have long been wanting to see, as it is known that considerable bad blood exists between Leach and Matty.

Seat reservations have been made by Lightweight Champion Willie Ritchie, Ad Wolgast, Joe Rivers, Bud Anderson, Johnny Dundee, Jack White, Jess Willard, "Bull" Young and Harry Trendall, the latter having come all the way from St. Louis to challenge the winner of to-night's go.

Cross has faced Matty twice, and each time came away with second money and a sore jaw. Matty holds a twenty-round decision over Willie Ritchie, the present champion. But this victory was earned before Ritchie was considered to be of championship caliber.

The betting remains at 10 to 7, with Cross favorite. Charley Eyton will referee.

Here Is a Player With $4,000,000

SACRAMENTO, CAL., July 29.—Since Bill Kenworthy, the second-sacker of the Sacramento club, has been notified that he is heir to $4,000,00, there has been considerable speculation as to what his plans for the future will be.

There is really not much of a limit to what Kenny could do with such an amount of money, providing he desires to remain in baseball.

If he wished to play the game for an ordinary salary, he could be sure of reporting in condition by hiring an entire major league club to go South and train with him, or he could buy any franchise in organized baseball and be club owner, player and manager at the same time.

One thing is certain, he can have many run-ins with the umpires and not be broke on pay day.

Special trains for the trips around the circuit would easily be within his means, and he could buy a newspaper and publish his own press notices.

At any rate, it's a pretty good bet that the $4,000,00 ball player will lead Artie Shafer, of the Giants, when it comes to receiving perfumed notes from the fair fans.

COBB BATTLES CHENEY.

BALTIMORE, MD., July 29—Ty Cobb, the Philadelphia featherweight, is in Baltimore to-day and declares he is in condition to give George Cheney the time of his life in the ring at the Palace Theater here this evening, when the battle in the star bout carded for fifteen rounds.

Thirty-Minute Race On To-night

Glenn Says He'll Beat Luther

FOR 30 minutes to-night at the Motordrome five two-men teams will whirl around the wooden saucer at an 85-mile-an-hour clip. Barring accidents, this will be by far the most exciting event that has ever been staged here.

All ten of the riders spent the day tuning up their motors and each predicts a victory for their team. They also practiced relieving their partners. The man riding has to come off the track onto the flat space in front of the paddock and touch his partner on the shoulder before the latter can take up the sprinting.

The early arrivals to-night will grab the seats in front of the paddock as this will enable them to witness the "relieving."

Here is how the teams are made up: Graves and McNeil, Schwartz and Lockner, Shields and Richards, Luther and Lewis, Renel and Glenn.

* * *

BUT the 30-minute race is not the only event carded that is attracting attention. The Motordrome Sweepstakes ought to be a corker. There will be two qualifying heats. In the first the riders will be Graves, Shields, Richards, Renel and Lewis. In the second Schwartz, Lockner, Luther, McNeil and Glenn will start.

The final heat is almost sure to bring together Richards and McNeil.

McNeil and Richards are bitter enemies once they get hooked up in a race. Richards holds a couple of decisions over the little Scotchman, but Jock's machine is O. K. now and he is confident that to-night he will lead Tex to the wire.

Harry Glenn and Luther are going to battle in a two-mile match race, two best heats out of three. Glenn beat Schwartz the other night, and says he will surely down Luther. But the latter's motor is going immense these days and he predicts the local boy will have to be satisfied with second place.

* * *

FOLLOWING is the program for to-night:

First Event.

First heat Motordrome Sweepstakes (1 mile to qualify and 2-mile final). Starters—Graves, Shields, Richards, Renel, Lewis.

Second Event.

First heat of a match race between Glenn and Luther. (Race to be two best heats in three.) Distance, 2 miles.

Third Event.

Second heat of Motordrome Sweepstakes. Starters—Schwartz, Lockner, Luther, McNeil, Glenn.

Fourth Event.

Second heat of match race between Glenn and Luther.

Fifth Event.

Final heat of Motordrome Sweepstakes. (Winners of first and second heats and second man in fastest heat to start.)

Sixth Event.

Third heat of match race between Glenn and Luther, if necessary.

Seventh Event.

Half-hour team race. Teams—Graves and McNeil, Schwartz and Lockner, Shields and Richards, Luther and Lewis, Renel and Glenn. (No rider can remain on track over 20 consecutive minutes.)

MARTY O'TOOLE TO DON A UNIFORM ON FRIDAY

PITTSBURG July 29.—Marty O'Toole, pitcher of the Pittsburg National league team, who recently had to undergo an operation for appendicitis, is able to be out, although not yet fully recovered. He said to-day that in all probability he would don a uniform on Friday and begin a gradual course of exercise.

SPOKANE, WASH., July 29.—Jules Papa, a hard-hitting right-fielder on the Spokane, Northwestern League, baseball team, has been sold to the Pittsburg Nationals for $3,000. This is Pappa's first year in professional company. He will finish the season here.

YANKEES GET PLAYERS.

NEW YORK, July 29.—It was announced to-day that Manager Chance, of the New York Americans, had purchased Outfielder Cook, of the Austin club of the Texas League, and Pitcher Cooney, of the Butte, Mont., club of the Union Association. Cooney will join the New Yorks at once, but Cook will not report until fall.

BLOOMINGTON, ILL., July 29.—Bloomington (Three-I) owners have refused Sacramento's offer of $1,000 for Shortstop Bruce Hartford.

AMATEUR TEAMS TO PLAY FOR TITLE IN MACON

MACON, July 29.—The amateur baseball championship of Georgia will be settled in Macon this year, the first time than an elimination series of that nature ever has been arranged.

The Bibb Mills team of Macon, which claims the championship, will meet the Haddock, Ga., team the last three days of the week. The other claimants for the title are East Point, Wrightsville and Hawkinsville. Should the contest sift down to Macon and East Point, a series will be played in Atlanta.

BAT NELSON MAY FIGHT.

SARSATOGA, N. Y., July 29.—Local promoters are trying to arrange a number of boxing matches to be held under the auspices of the Saratoga Athletic Club during the racing season next month, and a bout between Battling Nelson, former lightweight champion, and Jimmy O'Haban, the Albany blacksmith, is practically assured.

AMOS RUSIE IN HOSPITAL; INJURED BY IRON BAR

SEATTLE, WASH., July 29.—Amos Rusie, once famous pitcher of the New York Giants, is in a local hospital today suffering from an injury to his arm. Rusie is now a plumber. A heavy iron bar fell and struck him on the arm while at work here yesterday.

LEAGUE HEAD TO DECIDE PROTESTED BALL GAMES

KEOKUK, IOWA, July 29.—To straighten out a tangle over protested games which Waterloo won and Keokuk and Burlington protested, alleging the player limit had been violated, President Justice, of the Central Association, has gone to Waterloo.

ED LEACH, OLD ATLANTA PITCHER, IN A HOSPITAL

RICHMOND, VA., July 29.—Ed Leach, who pitched for Atlanta several seasons back in the 90's, is in a hospital here with his right foot cut off. Tuberculosis of the bone rendered amputation necessary.

Leach also pitched two seasons for New Orleans, having been a contemporary and boon companion of "Cholly" Frank, present manager of the Pelicans. His last work in baseball was in the spring of 1912, when he helped Molesworth whip the Barons into shape at Birmingham.

CLARKE WILL TRY TO STOP GULLS TODAY

By Joe Agler.

MOBILE, ALA., July 29.—The Gulls seemed to have such a liking for right-hand dealing that Manager Smith decided last night to flip from the other side of the deck, so he turned up George Clarke, who will work this afternoon. Dunn will catch the game out, provided he can control his conversation.

The jinx still pursues us. Whitey Alperman's operation for appendicitis yesterday was said to have been just in time, and, at that, Whitey had about as close a call as possible. We hear he is resting well to-day, and that the chances are in his favor. But, of course, he won't be able to play ball any more this season.

The Crackers held a little meeting yesterday and Billy Smith appointed Wally Smith to be field captain in Whitey's place. Wally also will play second base, and Frank Manush will go to third. Bill Bailey's injury leaves an outfield job vacant, and Smith is going to try out a recruit from Selma in the Cotton States League; a big chap named Holz, who came along with Pitcher Love.

Holz pegs right handed and hits from the port side of the platter. He is said to be a good batter and a fast fielder, and we are hoping he will help to brace our crippled lineup.

There isn't much to say about the game yesterday. The Gulls got to Thompson for a big lead, and then we got to Pug Cavet and made it all square, only to lose out, 6 to 5, in the ninth inning. We did manage to deliver a kick or two, which is encouraging. Maybe we will win a ball game by one run some day, the way we have been losing them all lately.

BOXING
News of the Ring Game

Leach Cross is to have his final test for a bout with Willie Ritchie when he takes on Matty Baldwin in a twenty-round battle at Los Angeles to-night. Promoter Tom McCarey has promised the winner a match with the champion and Tom's word is usually as good as gold.

* * *

Abe Attell's pugilistic star has set. His recent defeat at the hands of Willie Beecher has killed him as a title contender.

* * *

Gotham fans are said to be warming up to the coming Jim Flynn-Gunboat Smith bout. The heavyweights are scheduled to meet in a ten-round go on August 3.

* * *

Once again Packy McFarland and Willie Ritchie are nearly matched. All this advance stuff leads up to the inevitable.

* * *

Jimmy Johnston, former manager of Owen Moran, and who at present is looking after George Rodel, plans to open a new boxing club in New York. He expects to put on his first show next week.

* * *

Patsy Brannigan, the tough Pittsburg featherweight, has been matched to box Benny Chavez, in a twenty-round set-to at Trinidad, Colo., on Labor Day. Both boys have been going good of late and should put up an interesting mill.

* * *

Jimmy Britt, ex-lightweight champion of the world, is in Denver at the present time to fill a theatrical engagement. Britt is of the opinion that Willie Ritchie is one of the greatest champions the game has had in years.

* * *

Young Abe Attell, local bantamweight, is anxious to meet some boy of his division. Attell is wild to get a return engagement with Tim Callahan.

* * *

Tom Jones, manager of Jess Willard, has signed his protege to meet Bull Young in a twenty-round go at Vernon, Cal., on August 22. The winner will probably meet Arthur Pelky or Gunboat Smith.

* * *

Ad Wolgast has offered to let Willie Ritchie $25,000 he can defeat him in a return scrap. Reports from the coast state that the champion has decided to make Ad put up or shut up.

* * *

Before Joe Jeannette and Sam Langford travel to the coast to clash in a twenty-round contest, they will probably meet in a ten-round affair at the St. Nicholas A. C., New York, on September 23. The McMahon brothers, matchmakers of the club, are awaiting Langford's arrival from Los Angeles.

* * *

"Special Delivery" Hirsch is another Chicago boxer who is anxious to show his wares here. Harry Thomas, manager of Hirsch, says he will let his boy box any one from 130 pounds to 133 at 3 o'clock.

How to Get Rid of Eczema

If you bruise your hand, you will notice that a scab forms, and when it falls off, new skin has formed. Did salve do it? No! Skin is the same as muscle, bone, sinew, ligament. All are made from the blood, from the materials that your stomach and intestines convert from food into what we call blood. And this blood circulates in the myriad of tiny blood vessels in the skin. Start from your stomach, where blood materials begin, and it won't be long before you are free of eczema. Use S. S. S. for a short time, and not only will eczema disappear, but the entire blood will be renewed.

There is one ingredient in S. S. S. which serves the active purpose of stimulating each cellular part of the body to the healthy, judicious selection of its own essential nutriment. That is why it regenerates the blood supply; why it has such a tremendous influence in overcoming eczema, rash, pimples and all skin afflictions.

Get a bottle of S. S. S. at any drug store, and you will not only feel bright and energetic, but you will be the picture of new life. S. S. S. is prepared only in the laboratory of The Swift Specific Co., 189 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga. Beware of any attempt to sell you something "just as good."

Crackers Slip Into Fourth Place
Don't Count G. Molesworth Out Yet

By O. B. Keeler.

ONE gleam penetrates the Stygian gloom of the situation.

The Crackers finally delivered a kick.

It may have been a dying kick. But a kick's a kick, for a' that.

With a shot-to-pieces line-up, with Alperman in the hospital minus an appendix, Bill Bailey carrying a couple of ribs in a sling, Wally Smith at second base, Manush at third and Chapman playing right field without his mitt, the disheveled Smithies collected themselves yesterday afternoon and landed a solid punch on the revered Pug Cavet.

The trouble was that the Gulls kicked Thompson first—and last.

And now the Town Boys are crouching on the rim of Lower Four, wondering how soon the porter will turn out the lights.

* * *

LITERARY TIP FROM WHITEY.

Believe me, boys, this is no nonsense:
When your tummy again and again kicks,
Don't fool with the Table of Contents—
Look it up in the blamed old Appendix!

* * *

TOUGH luck for Whitey Alpermann. And tough luck for the Crackers.

Whitey's wise old noodle and timely bat are bound to be sadly missed in the final drive. Not that Wally Smith isn't a good, heady player and a man who, as field captain, will keep his mates well on their toes. Wally is all of that.

But the combination, of necessity, will be unsettled for a bit. Bill Bailey also is out of the game and a Cotton States rookie, Holz, will appear in right field this afternoon. Manush will play third and Wally Smith second.

On the other hand, the shakeup may shift the breaks, which certainly haven't been coming our way lately.

Anyway, we're in for it. And instead of blubbering over the latest handicap for the Crackers, let's just cheer up over the report that good old Whitey, in a tough sprint against the Old Boy with the Sickle, is pulling ahead to-day.

* * *

TURNING the burglar-finder on the little club that has supplanted the Town Boys at the dizzy elevation of third place, we discern without much difficulty that odd equine anomaly, the Dark Horse.

Gladys Molesworth is up, and how d. h. can run at all is by us. Gladys' managerial worries seem to sit lightly on his embonpoint.

The real point, however, is that the Barons have bludgeoned their way upward from seventh place since June 8. That achievement was largely at the expense of Montgomery, Mobile, New Orleans and Memphis. The latter pair are thrown in merely as lagniappe, because any club that can trim the Billikens and the Gulls this year would find a pleasant relaxation playing the rest of the bunch.

* * *

THE Baronial collection is one that might be expected to speed up toward the shank of the season. No fewer than eleven of Molesworth's hands have worn the spangles of the big show at one time or another. Of these, Foxen, Mayer, Moley, McDonald and Kniseley moved for very respectable periods in select company.

And with the advent of the real hotness in weather circles and the time of year when the old strain begins to turn the edge of the younger generation's dash and daring, the old boys are rounding to.

We decline to count Gladys out yet.

* * *

SWITCHING to politics, it seems Colonel Robert Lee Hedges—sometimes known as the Sick Man of Baseball because he is unfortunate enough to be responsible for the St. Louis Browns—it seems Colonel Hedges is hedging.

The report persists that the Colonel is going to finance the Montgomery club of the Southern League. He is even accused of intending to buy the Billikens' franchise outright.

That is carrying things rather far.

But the Billies need help, and Colonel Hedges can afford it, in spite of the Browns.

On the whole, intimate diplomatic relations between Montgomery and the Browns mightn't be a bad idea at all.

If the Browns continue to evince a disposition to travel farther south than eighth place in the American League, Colonel Hedges might swap them for the Billikens.

* * *

NOW some statistician is trying to show that because New York bugs persist in packing the Polo Grounds to see the Giants clean up on the pop-eyed Cardinals, St. Louis is enabled by the cut in the "gate" to stick in the league with a club that is totally unable to give any pangs of joy to the wretched fans on the home lot.

It is said the Cardinals carried away $12,500 as their share of a recent series at the Polo Grounds.

McGraw should worry.

BASEBALL
Diamond News and Gossip

Another record-breaking performance was nipped when Joe Boehling lost his first game of the season after winning eleven straight. A base on balls, a single and a home run gave the Browns three runs in the first inning. After that Joe held them to two hits, but the Senators could not overcome the lead.

* * *

Not many teams have knocked out Cy Falkenberg, but the Cleveland pitcher was driven from the mound in the first inning by the Yankees. Then the rain came down in torrents and the efforts of Chance's men went for naught.

* * *

The Dodgers had a chance to work up in the first division, but Yingling, Allen and Stack could not stop the hard-hitting of the Reds.

* * *

Only one St. Louis player reached third base in the game with the Giants and he went there on a wild throw. Matty was at his best and smeared the whitewash.

* * *

The Pirates, outside of Carey, who cornered half of the hits, could do nothing with Seaton, and the Phillies scored another easy victory.

* * *

Earl Moore, released by the Phillies to St. Louis, and who refused to report to the Cardinals, is now the property of the Chicago Cubs, according to an announcement of Charles W. Murphy.

* * *

The Cubs pounded the ball hard in the game with Boston and the Braves trailed from the beginning.

* * *

William Lathrop, the Notre Dame University pitcher, will be seen in the uniform of the White Sox, having been signed up by Comiskey.

* * *

Rain prevented the Yankee-Naps, Tigers-Athletic and White Sox-Red Sox games yesterday.

ALPERMAN REPORTED ON ROAD TO RECOVERY

MOBILE, ALA., July 29.—A report from the Inge Bondurant Sanitarium to-day, where Captain Alperman, of the Atlanta Club, lies ill from an operation for appendicitis, was to the effect that he spent a restful night and was on the road to recovery. The request of Manager Smith for his technical suspension will be granted by the League in order to let Holtz get in he game. Pitcher Love worked out yesterday and looked like a real pitcher.

PRESSMEN AFTER GAME.

The Pressmen'sbaseball team would like to arrange a series of games with the Exposition team to be played at Ponce DeLeon or on the Fort McPherson diamond. The two teams played last Saturday with Exposition winning, 5 to 4. The Pressmen are now out after revenge, and will give their rivals a neat side bet.

GABBY STREET WON'T REMAIN IN SOUTHERN

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., July 29. Fans in this burg just at present are considerably worried over the possibility of Gabby Street not being with the Lookouts next season. The apparent removal of the Lookouts from the ranks of the 1913 pennant contenders has centered practically all local baseball interest on the prospects for the 1914 season.

Just at present there is no deal closed for Gabby's services for next season, nor are there any which are on the verge of consummation. This is encouraging in a way, and would remove to a great extent all qualms of the local fanatics, were it not for the fact that Gabby has stated repeatedly that he will not play another season for the sum of $300 per.

The present season has been an experimental one for the star receiver of the league, as he agreed to the stipend which he is receiving solely for the purpose of settling in his own mind the question of whether or not he was passed, so far as big league baseball is concerned.

Gabby's answer to the question is that he is not through with the big ring; that is, if ability can secure him a berth; and, as a result, he is practically decided to appear in the big show next season or not at all.

The one cause of Street's drop from the majors was the rheumatism in his system, and during the last few weeks he was with Washington he was forced to go to Nova Scotia for treatment. The malady stiffened his joints to a great degree.

One year in the Southern, however, beneath the direct and beneficial rays of the sun, has completely routed Street's arch enemy, and to-day he is as capable a receiver as ever he was in his career. Realizing this, Gabby is practically decided that it is the majors or nothing for him. A permanent minor league berth does not appear attractive to Charles where the maximum stipend is but $300 a month.

They are scading auto speeders to a cold and clammy cell,

Though a man deserves a sentence when he makes his motor whizz,
There are others who deserve a fate as cold and dark as his.

O, I would I were a jurist, and before the bar there stood
A gent who peddles crackerjack to earn his livelihood—
A loud and heartless merchant who infests the baseball park
And walks upon your aching corns from 3 o'clock till dark.
I would burn him with my eagle eye in spite of all his tears
And insert him in the hoose gow for a hundred thousand years.

Colonel Hedges, who perpetrates the Browns on an innocent public, avers that he has three of the greatest southpaws in captivity. All the Colonel needs now is a baseball team.

Giants Want Stiffer Ball Games
Must Be on Edge for Athletics

By Rube Marquard.

ST. LOUIS, July 29.—As I write these lines a feeling of exultation is upon me. I feel like shouting for very joy. I know deep down in my heart that the Giants are assured a third straight pennant, and I am not so well fortified financially that the spoils of a world's series fall to interest me.

I realize that the fight is not yet won. New York has a very advantageous lead, and should increase rather than lose this fine advantage as the season progresses. Yet there is nothing so uncertain as baseball, and until the title is won beyond possibility of refutation, I shall stand always ready to pitch my arm off, figuratively, for McGraw and our cause.

Personally, I am imbued with a desire to win as many games as possible while the enemy presents some form of rebuttal to our challenge. I think I reflect the sentiments of my teammates when I say that I would welcome even stiffer opposition than our club has encountered within the past six weeks.

Victories easily earned are not of a nature to develop the very best form for the classic struggle in October. And it is to the world's series, rather than a league championship, that McGraw and my fellows are bending every energy.

Some people may try to tell you that there is no sentiment in professional sport. I do not believe that this applies to baseball, at any rate. We all like to do well in our chosen profession. But I am certain as can be that the great majority of the Giants think more of the opportunity for a world's championship pennant than of the money entailed in the struggle for such.

Third Try at Title.

We just naturally feel that we owe it to McGraw and to our most enthusiastic supporters. The past two years we have been disappointments, even to ourselves. And the prospect of a third trial this fall has been one of the chief spurs to our ambition from the start of the season.

My club is so determined to annex the greatest honors of baseball this fall that the boys will be scarcely able to hold up their heads for shame if we are disappointed the third straight time. And, believe me, there is some consolation, in dollars and cents, for the losing end.

It might sound like braggadocio were I at this time to make any predictions as to the outcome of the world's series, especially as the Giants have not yet cinched their claim to the National League title. Yet I believe I may be pardoned a guess as to the ultimate winner in our set.

For six weeks we have set as rapid a pace as any major league club has shown within the past decade. And we have done this without the accustomed deadly hitting of our gallant captain, Larry Doyle. It strikes me as only a question of time before our sterling second baseman will come out of his slump, and then the team should be possessed of such additional power as to guarantee against any eleventh hour slip-up.

Have Score With Athletics.

New York, at least, has as good a chance to figure in the world's series as have the Athletics, and few at this moment are prepared to deny Connie Mack's claim to such distinction. From a financial aspect there might be more affable opposition, so far as we are concerned.

A New York-Chicago or a New York-Cleveland tilt would undoubtedly attract more gate money because Quaker Town has not only been pretty well glutted with Athletic triumphs, but is in addition at heart a 25-cent patronage. If the question were merely one of a straight pennant, and I had the selection of an opponent in the world's series, I should choose none other than Mack's Athletics.

All we Giants feel that we have a score to settle for our disappointment of the past two seasons. The sporting world conceded last fall that the Red Sox outlucked us. Circuit wallops by "Home Run" Baker turned the tide against us in 1911. We are curious to see if the Trappe, Md., slugger can cheat us out of our reward again.

I see that Jack Coombs expects to be back in harness about Labor Day. I sincerely hope that he may, though his presence might reasonably be supposed to work to our disadvantage if we happen to be lucky enough to tilt with Philadelphia in the great classic this fall.

Coombs is one of the finest pitchers in the business. If the Giants are to meet the Athletics, every one of us wishes Mack's men to be possessed of every possible strength. We have never offered an alibi, and if we win we wish to win against the very best that the foe can present.

TIGERS BUY PITCHER.

ASHEVILLE, N. C., July 29.—Russell Betsill, of Enoree, S. C., a member of the pitching staff of the Asheville club, of the North Carolina League, was sold to-day to the Detroit club, of the American League. The price paid for the player has not been given out.

Highest Government Officials
Protecting the Vilest Form of Crime
President Wilson and Mr. Bryan May Permit This—BUT THEY CAN'T EXCUSE IT.

(Copyright, 1913.)

This is "The Caminetti Story":

A man in California was accused of a serious crime against a young woman. There was no apparent hope of his escaping if properly and promptly tried. His chief hope was in delay, subterfuge and waning public interest, and, above all, DISHONEST OR INDIFFERENT PROSECUTION.

The man accused and guilty, Caminetti, happened to have a father who held public office under the Federal Government.

And this father was a friend of the Attorney General, McReynolds, appointed by Mr. Wilson TO ENFORCE THE LAWS THAT CAMINETTI WAS SEEKING TO EVADE, AND TO PUNISH THE CRIME OF WHICH CAMINETTI WAS ACCUSED.

There was delay in the Caminetti matter, and McNab, representing the Government as a prosecutor in California, resented the delay and denounced it.

He showed that the Attorney General, McReynolds, sworn to enforce the law and punish violators of law, had, at the request of the criminal's father, ACTUALLY DIRECTED THAT THE PROSECUTION BE PUT OFF. That is to say, that every opportunity be given to the criminal to escape the consequences of his crime.

This is a most shameful act on the part of McReynolds. It makes his dismissal from office a duty.

If a man, to oblige a friend whose son is accused of a serious crime, interferes with justice, what will that man do when bigger and other crimes are committed, not by individuals against individuals, but by corporations against the entire people?

If McReynolds, to oblige the father of Caminetti, interferes with justice, what will he do to oblige the father of some trust when the time comes?

Is such a man fit for office?

The amazing thing is that Mr. Wilson, instead of praising and thanking McNab, an honest official, who denounced the infamous delay and favoritism, actually rebuked that man and accepted his resignation from office.

And now, as Senator Ashurst earnestly and justly points out, comes the culminating outrage—THE APPOINTMENT OF HAYDEN, A FRIEND OF CAMINETTI'S TO ACT AS PROSECUTOR IN THE PLACE OF M'NAB, THE CONSCIENTIOUS OFFICIAL.

Senator Ashurst is to be thanked for his timely and vigorous protest against a shameful miscarriage of justice.

In the first place, we have Caminetti, who should long since have been tried, gaining delay, at the request of his father, who is a friend of McReynolds.

And now, when McNab, an honest man, is removed from the case, we have another friend of Caminetti, Hayden, put in as prosecutor.

No collection of fine words or platitudes from McReynolds, President Wilson or anybody else will explain away an action such as this.

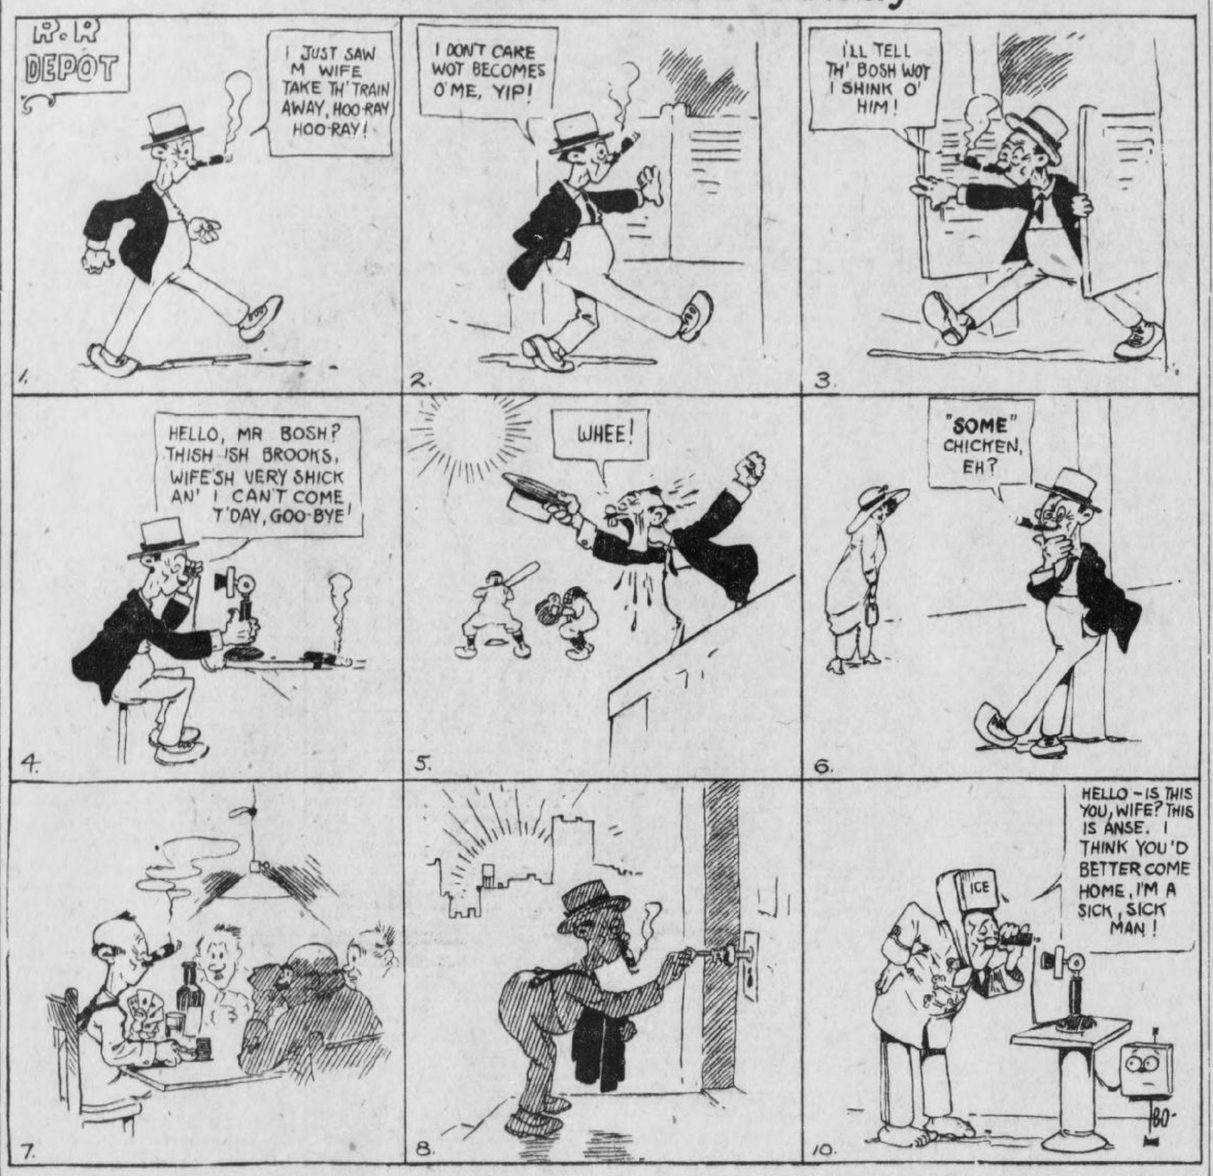

It is not a matter of politics, as Senator Ashurst proves. He is a Democrat, but he knows that there is nothing to be gained for any party by leaving such an outrageous state of affairs untouched. As well talk of helping a living body by leaving a cancer free from molestation in that body as to talk of helping a political party by leaving unrebuked such a shameful Government crime in the Caminetti case.

It is bad enough when "friends in the Government" are used by men of the Archbold type, with the aid of their checkbooks, to permit extortion and robbery of the public.

It is inconceivable and infamous that Government pull, the friendship of a papa Caminetti for an Attorney General McReynolds, should be used to delay and perhaps frustrate the prosecution of a man accused of an infamous crime against a young woman.

Such conduct by McReynolds and Caminetti, condoned apparently by President Wilson, does not fit in very well with the protestations that preceded the recent election.

When the Wife's Away

Courtesy a Virtue All Should Cultivate
It Is a Valuable Asset, No Matter What Position One Occupies in Life, and It Is One of the Greatest Factors in Success

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

Copyright, 1913, by Star Company.

A YOUNG man employed in one of the many places which contribute to the welfare of the public, in one of the greatest new railroad stations in the United States, was asked by a patron of his department whether certain trains went from the upper or lower level.

He answered brusquely that he did not know; that she could find out by going to the inquiry bureau on the floor above.

His department was separate from that, he said.

The patron turned and found an official within a few feet of the young man, who indicated the way.

"If I answered all the questions asked me in a day," the young man said, "I would have no time to attend to my own business."

But the man had taken more time and breath and energy in being disagreeable than he would have required in obtaining information about all the trains in the station.

There are two levels in that station, the upper and the lower.

A Correct Reply.

The train inquired about are an important line, and almost any youth of ordinary intellect, or less than ordinary, would naturally learn in a few days' time from which level they started, especially if his business was in sight of these trains.

Not to possess such information as his position betokened a lack of observation and interest in occurrences continually taking place about him that bespeaks failure for the young man in anything he undertakes; and if he knew and refused the information because he did not like to be questioned on subjects not pertaining to his business, then his disposition is one to attract failure, not success.

It took many words for him to tell the lady that he did not know and that it was not his business to know what she wished to know. It would have required just two words to answer her question, had he known, "upper level" or "lower level," and, with a smile added, the lady would have gone her way, thinking what a pleasant youth he was, instead of thinking what she did think about him.

In ten years' time this youth will be a man in his full prime—somewhere in his thirties—and he will be wondering why he has not got on in the world; and he will say he has had no "influence," no "pull," and that others have been advanced over him through "favoritism," and he will make a hundred excuses for his failure to arrive, when the real fault will lie entirely with himself.

He Had No Excuse.

The work this youth was doing required no great concentration. He was not absorbed in some difficult mathematical problem, and he had many moments when he was doing nothing at all save waiting for people to serve. Therefore he had no excuse for not using his eyes and ears to learn a small yet important fact about the big station; and he had no excuse for not imparting the information asked save a lack of development of kindnes and courtesy.

Courtesy a Great Factor.

No matter what may be one's position in life, from the most menial to the most lofty place, kindness and courtesy are most valuable assets for human beings to possess. They are great factors in success.

Observation is another factor; and the habit of using odd, unoccupied moments in learning something that will be of value to one's self or others later—that, too, is a habit which leads to the road of success.

It is a better habit than that of watching the clock for fear of working five minutes overtime.

And still another habit is of vast value on that road—the habit of smiling and speaking in an agreeable tone of voice in the small daily occurrences of life.

Each one of us is subject to annoyance by having people ask questions which it is not our province to answer; but when we fail to give the information desired we can give something better oftimes by the bestowal of a pleasant look and manner.

Letters From The Georgian's Readers

LABOR INDORSES EDITORIAL.

Editor The Georgian: The accompanying resolutions regarding a recent editorial appearing in your paper were unanimously adopted at the last session of the Atlanta Federation of Trades, and I was instructed to forward this copy to you. With best wishes, I am, respectfully,

J. F. BRADFIELD,
Secretary Atlanta Federation of Trades.

"Whereas there appeared on the editorial page of The Atlanta Georgian of July 22, 1913, an editorial making suggestions upon how to get the American who saves and the American who borrows closer together, without being robbed by the middleman with his interest, and

"Whereas this editorial voices sentiments and ideas long advocated and felt by the laboring people of the United States, be it

"Resolved, That the Atlanta Federation of Trades do go on record as indorsing said editorial and what it advocates, congratulates The Atlanta Georgian upon this masterful editorial, and be it further

"Resolved, That it is the hope of this organization that the people will soon find (as per the editorial) a leader big enough and able enough to hand the savings of the frugal workman in the shape of a loan to the equally frugal and valuable farmer and take from both of them s only enough to pay for the transaction."

BIBLE IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Editor The Georgian: Our thoughtful statesman introduces a bill to require or allow the Bible to be read in the public schools. Some have suggested that there are six different "Bibles," or six different versions of the Bible, and the law would have to specify the one to be read in the schools. This being the case we might expect differences of opinion. I for one think best of King James' version. "The State legislating righteousness into the child." "The parent giving over his duty of teaching his children the Scriptures" and other such expressions we see given as reasons against enacting such a law. We naturally expected opposition to such a law, but not from orthodox ministers of any church, and I am very much inclined to believe that their opposition to such a law will greatly weaken their claim before their church and the world of mankind that the Bible is the Book of Books and its teachings of the greatest moment. It is no use to say to the world, the church and to your children that the Bible is the greatest book, its teachings the most important of all, that it should be first in importance to all other books and then say it should not be read to the children in the schools. That is simply contradicting yourself. This very spirit of dissension and disagreement among Christian ministers and laymen is the greatest hindrance to the success of Christianity.

The Song of Joy and Pain
By LILIAN LAUFERTY.

O, I tasted of pleasure—and liked it,
For the flavor was sweet to my lip.
"Life is joy," then I cried, "and my sea's at full tide;
Life's a garden—each flower I'll sip."
But a sting lurked in every bright flower,
And the waves of Joy's sea broke in foam,
While the lure of gay Pleasure's fleet hour
Bore me wandering—far from my home.

Then I tasted of sorrow—'twas bitter,
And the talons of pain tore my heart.
"Life is torture," I cried. "Must I linger and bide
All my losses in Cruelty's mart?"
But a message was hid in the tangle
Of these noisome and bitter dark weeds;
From the sound of harsh bells all a-jangle
Pealed a chime for the doer of deeds.

"There's pleasure to taste, and there's sorrow—
Take from one, from the other you borrow;
Sun to-day may mean storm-clouds to-morrow;
All your life you must mark the measure
Of sorrow attuned unto pleasure—
The heart that is wise still will treasure
Its joys the more dear, for its sorrow,
Its pain as a wonderful measure
When joy brighter radiance shall borrow."

Mysteries of Science and Nature
The Mysterious Properties of Steel, Tin and Glass. If Cooled Slowly Steel Will Not Take a Cutting Edge; Cooled Suddenly It Becomes Hard and Tempered—Tin Will Crumble in Severely Cold Weather.

By GARRETT P. SERVISS

HERE is a fact, known to everybody, which is as mysterious as would be the actual appearance of a ghost, by which I mean that the fundamental explanation of the phenomenon is about as far beyond our reach in the one case as in the other.

The fact to which I refer is the production of tempered steel by quenching in cold water. If hot steel is cooled very slowly it becomes soft and can not take a cutting edge, but if it is cooled suddenly it becomes very hard and can be ground into keen swords, knives and cutting tools.

Now why the difference? Have you ever thought about that question? If you have not, many a man of science has, and has been greatly puzzled over it.

Here is another related mystery. If you heat an old Japanese sword, which for centuries has retained its capacity to slice off a head at a blow, or to open a swift passage for the soul of the victim of the hari-kari mania, to the temperature of boiling water it gradually softens and loses the keenness that once made it so formidable.

It Is the Same Steel.

It is the same steel, but it, too, seems to have lost its soul. At a temperature of 150 degrees Centigrade the hardened steel commits hari-kari in a few minutes. Surely there is something strange in that.

Then consider this: At zero temperature water changes from a liquid and suddenly becomes solid. But if you put the water in a vase and carefully protect it from dust, you may cool it as much as twenty degrees below zero, and yet it will not freeze! But now shake the vase or drop in a bit of ice, and the water immediately solidifies!

I owe the collection of these facts to a paper by Professor James H. Walton, Jr., of Wisconsin University. The explanation which he gives is that substances like the hardened steel and the unfreezing water are in a state of "suspended change." That accounts for the phenomena, but, in a certain sense, they remain mysterious, just as life is mysterious.

Many substances possess the same curious characteristics. Professor Walton says that if a flask containing sodium acetate, when has been cooled below its natural freezing point without solidifying, is opened in a room containing dust of the solid acetate, the fine particles of the latter dropping into the flask will cause the whole contents to solidify.

Tin is a very strange metal with regard to this state of suspended change or "metastability." A severe winter cold will sometimes cause it to lose its hardness and crumble.

Suffer From "Tin Discore."

Objects made of tin often undergo such change and are then said to be suffering from "the tin disease." The contact of "diseased" tin with bright, hard tin is capable of setting up the transformation.

Glass, Professor Walton informs us, is "an under-cooled substance"—that is, it is in a metastable condition. If old glass tubes through which water has frequently passed are heated, the glass crystallizes and loses its transparency.

All substances in this state are liable to change, and the change, under proper conditions, may be sudden. Hardened steel is in a similar category. If it were as perishable as tin, it could not be safely used for many purposes for which it is habitually employed. Fortunately, steel exhibits great resistance to change of state after it has been tempered. Transformation is retarded or arrested.

"Does steel slowly return to the stable form and thus grow softer?" asks Professor Walton, and then answers: "That we do not know; we can only say that if such a change does take place, hundreds of years are necessary to bring it about."

Heated Japanese Swords.

The same ancient Japanese swords, which, when heated, as before described, become soft, retain all their hardness if carefully preserved.

It is evidently of the highest importance to the practical world that science is investigating these things and discovering the way and the circumstances in which the changes come about, even if it has not unveiled the underlying mystery of their cause.

Peter the Great's Widow
By REV. THOMAS B. GREGORY.

TWO hundred and ten years ago Peter the Great began building the city of St. Petersburg, a piece of work that perhaps stands second to none as an illustration of what can be accomplished by indomitable Will Power.

The building of a city upon the miry delta of the Neva involved the overcoming of tremendous natural difficulties. Peter's engineers said it could not be done, but Peter said it could, and with characteristic grit the Czar went to work building his city, which, he said, should be the "Window from which he could look out upon Europe."

Thousands of peasants were ordered to the field of operations, and great piles were driven down into the marsh for a foundation. Masons were scarce, but Peter met the difficulty by an order forbidding the erection of stone buildings throughout the Empire. The imperial strong box ran low, but the indefatigable man taxed everything he could think of for the raising of the requisite funds. The men died like sheep at the shambles, but with a determination remorseless as fate the Czar kept at the task. Dividing the supervision of the work between himself and his lieutenants, he toiled away with the energy of a demon, and by 1712 sufficient advance had been made to permit of the transfer of the Court from Moscow.

But an imperial capital and a royal court required a considerable amount of polish in its setting, and so Peter issued a decree that all Russian proprietors who owned five hundred serfs or over should build residences in the new capital and spend at least the winters there. By 1800 the population was 220,000; by 1864, 500,000; by 1900, 1,200,000; and today it is 2,000,000—a wonderful monument to the will power and dogged resolution of one man—a man who never in his life took "no" for an answer. A giant in stature and in intellect, the founder of St. Petersburg and of modern Russia must always rank among the very greatest of the sons of men, a miracle of will power, one of the most amazing instances we have of the energy that does things.
