Both sides are taking elaborate precautions to guard against a trick. Throughout the night armed guards stood watch over each State department, while lawyers and legislators involved in the struggle were trailed by private detectives. Mr. Sulzer was in retirement planning a new legal move with his counsel. Messenger boys with Washington and New York city telegrams could not find the Governor, but members of the "inner circle" took charge of the dispatches, saying they would find the Governor.

Leaders of the anti-Sulzer faction made the threat that Mr. Glynn, now having control of the State Military Department, would actually invade the executive chamber.

"He will get a mighty warm reception," declared Sulzer adherents, who are few, but courageous.

Some Fear Martial Law.

Some residents of this city, realizing the intense seriousness of the situation, fear that conditions may become so grave that martial law will have to be declared.

It was assumed that Governor Sulzer to-day would reply to the second note from Lieutenant Governor Glynn, demanding the unconditional surrender of all prerogatives by Mr. Sulzer and the abdication of the Governor. Counsel were with the Governor at the beginning of the official day, and it was reported that the Governor was urged to take a fling at Tammany Hall.

Charlton at Last in Italy's Grasp

Wife Slayer Loses 3-Year Fight

Now on Ocean on Way to Trial

Porter Charlton, young American, who killed beautiful wife and is now on way to face trial in Italy.

Young Prisoner Is Confident He Will Escape Spending Life in Solitary Confinement.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Porter Charlton, after three years' fight against extradition from America, is in the clutches of the Italian Government and to-day is on the high seas, bound for Italy and for trial on the charge of killing his beautiful young wife and sinking her body in Lake Como in June, 1910.

In spite of the ordeal that faces him, Charlton left New York as cheerful as a schoolboy. Three years in close confinement had repressed his natural buoyancy, but the prospect of a sea voyage, even with a trial for murder awaiting him at his journey's end, restored it to a considerable degree.

"I'll be back for Christmas!" he cried, waving a good-bye from the liner as it pulled out. All the time he has declared that he will be acquitted, in spite of the fact that he confessed to killing his wife on their honeymoon. Extenuating circumstances, his friends declare, will have their weight on the Italian jury.

Charlton's quarters on the liner are isolated, and he is not permitted to mingle with the other passengers. He travels third class, as the Italian Government does not provide first-class accommodations for prisoners.

Faces Living Death.

Unless the contention of his insanity can be proved, a living death surely will be the fate of Porter Charlton, a hideous confinement that is far worse than death on the gallows.

Extenuating circumstances, it is expected, can not be revealed of sufficient strength to obtain his acquittal, and unless his defense prove insanity, he must go to prison. There is no death sentence in Italy.

And imprisonment in Italy is a dreadful punishment, feared far more than the electric chair, the gallows, or the garrote. It is invested with mental torture of such degree that few who live through it more than a few years are sound of mind.

Charlton is known to have a sensitive, nervous temperament. His behavior toward his wife proves him high-strung. To a person of his psychological make-up incarceration under the Italian system would be certainly destructive of mental balance.

For the first ten years of a life sentence the prisoner may be kept in utter darkness and in the strictest solitude, with nothing to eat and drink but plain bread and water. A few weeks of this treatment generally is sufficient to reduce the most unemotional criminal to a state of nervous collapse.

Insanity Practically Only Hope.

His attorneys hope to present in the Italian courts the great mass of evidence brought to bear in the United States Supreme Court to prove him insane. Justice Lurton, in the opinion which declared that Charlton must go back to Italy to stand trial, admitted that the evidence to substantiate the insanity plea was preponderous.

The opinion of the Supreme Court brought to an end the three years' unsuccessful fight of Charlton and his family against extradition to Italy. It was in June, 1910, that he killed his wife, according to his own confession. After the crime he fled, but was caught at Hoboken, N. J., when the liner landed there. The brother of the slain wife there met him, and caused him to be placed under arrest.

The first night of his imprisonment in New Jersey a confession was produced, bearing his name, and generally supposed to be authentic.

"My wife and I lived happily together, but she had an uncontrollable temper," read the confession. "So had I. On the night of the murder she had the worst outbreak of temper I ever saw.

"I told her to keep quiet or I would make her quiet. Then she had another outbreak. I took up a wooden mallet, with which I had been repairing a table, and hit her on the head and body two or three times. At midnight I put the body in a trunk, dragged it to a small pier near the house, and threw it overboard."

His wife was a beautiful young woman, although eight years older than he, who was only 21. The two were on their honeymoon when the murder occurred.

Mrs. Charlton was the divorced wife of Neville H. Castle, a San Francisco lawyer. Charlton is the

Court Frees 'Old Maid' Who Resents Epithet

Judge Rules Spinster Was Right in Smiting Married Woman With Chair.

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—Unmarried women of mature years who are subjected to ridicule as "old maids" have won a victory in court. Miss Minnie Flatley, of the Colonial Hotel, is 31, and Mrs. Lizzie Varley, of the same address, has been calling her an "old maid."

Miss Flatley resented the sarcasm by smiting Mrs. Varley with a chair and punishing her seriously. When she was arraigned in court Judge Gemmill, after hearing the story, said "Discharged."

"I think this sort of provocation justifies any assault up to murder," said the judge. "It is despicable to humiliate a woman."

Nitrate King Hands Man Ten Cents for Returning Lost Pocketbook.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Senor E. E. Ossio, the Nitrate King of Chili, who has declared John D. Rockefeller a pauper in comparison with himself, overwhelmed a steward on the United Fruit steamer Pastores yesterday by the size of a tip.

The steward had picked up the Nitrate King's wallet and, running after him, bowed low and handed over the pocketbook. Opening it, Senor Ossio pulled out a dollar bill, then changed his mind, and, taking a dime from his pocket, handed it to the steward.

Hidden Pistol Seen As Girl Lifts Dress

Young Woman Is Arrested When Masked Battery Is Exposed as She Crosses Street.

UNIONTOWN, PA., Aug. 16.—Holding her dress a little too high to avoid the water as she crossed Main street to-day, Mattie Pearce was arrested when she revealed a large revolver in a holster fastened around her leg at the knee.

She was taken to the police station, where she showed the officers the new mode of carrying a gun. Strapped to a leg was the holster in which she carried the revolver.

The girl explained that there were "bad men" at Uniontown and she was not taking any chances with them. She stated that she had worn the revolver in that position for some time.

Mattie said she did not know she was holding her dress quite as high as she was, and that she had forgotten for a moment about the masked battery. She was released on bail.

St. Louis Matron Does Remarkable Work She Calls 'A Young Girl's Love."

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 16.—One of the most-talked-of works of art in St. Louis hangs in the home of Dr. Robert E. Wilson and was painted by Mrs. Wilson. The canvas is called "The Story of a Young Girl's Love," and covers the entire wall space in the parlor of this magnificent Colonial home. Two years were devoted to the work.

The painting is divided into panels, the size of each picture depending on the amount of space to be covered. Artists pronounce the canvas a masterpiece. Mrs. Wilson's friends say that the painting illustrates her blissful married state.

FRAUD USED TO BEAT HEARST, SAYS MULHALL

Lobbyist Declares He Obtained Confidence of Democratic Leader in Campaign for Governor.

GAVE REPUBLICANS SECRET

Letter Was Forged to Give Him Introduction to Up-State Committeeman.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—Colonel Martin M. Mulhall, self-confessed lobbyist of the National Association of Manufacturers, testified before the Garrett Lobby Investigating Committee that his political lines crossed those of William Randolph Hearst in 1906, and that he helped to defeat Mr. Hearst for the New York Governorship.

Introduced by a letter forged upon the letterhead of the Hearst campaign headquarters, Mulhall said that he went into Congressman Fairchild's district, the Twenty-fourth New York, an upstate district, and gained the confidence of a local campaign manager for Mr. Hearst.

Tells Plans to Republicans.

Learning from the latter the plans of campaign in the district, Mulhall reported them to Fairchild, and Republican plans to checkmate them and defeat their object were perfected. Mulhall was employed for a week on this work with the approval, he says, of Fairchild.

Mulhall told a few days ago how he started to work for Senator Foraker in Ohio. He was prepared to make his report to Foraker when the Hearst Standard Oil disclosure letters were first made public. Foraker admitted to the Senate committee that these letters defeated him for re-election to the Unied Staes Senate.

Unconcernedly, Mulhall told how he had taken his "fake letters" of introduction to Fairchild and got his instructions for political detective work. He met Mr .Hearst's friends, including a clergyman, at a hotel, entertained them and worked his way into their confidence. He ascertained that the Republican district committee chairman was not friendly to Fairchild.

Letter Was Faked.

"Whose signature did this fake letter of introduction bear?" asked Representative Stafford.

"It was that of some member of the Democratic State Committee."

"Who were you represented to be?"

"I was supposed to be connected with Mr. Hearst, and so represented myself to Mr. Scott, the candidate, I think, opposing Fairchild."

"It was your first meeting with him, and you won his confidence to the extent of getting from him his campaign plans?" said Stafford.

"Yes."

"Who signed this fake letter?"

"The letter was given to me by Marshall Cushing, and I can not say who signed it. Mr. Cushing was a very good letter writer. He told me it was a fake letter. I knew that Cushing was not connected with the Hearst organization."

Mr. Stafford—He was connected in the way of using the letterhead of the Hearst organization to good effect.

"Mr. Cushing thought it was a smart political trick, and I guess that was his system of working," replied Mulhall.

Scott Well Deceived.

"Mr. Scott's confidence was so complete," continued Mulhall, "that he told me Mr. Hearst had sent him a number of workers and quite an amount of money, and I believe in this letter the latter stated that they were ready to send at that time more workers and more money."

"Scott swallowed everything, hook, line and all, as far as you represented it," commented Stafford.

"Yes."

"Did Mr. Fairchild know all about this arrangement?" asked Representative Kline.

"Yes, he knew about hte letter, and I had Mr. Fairchild's advice in presenting it. He has spoken to me since about that clever piece of work."

PARIS, Aug. 16.—Colonel Joseph H. Degrange, of New Orleans, is ill in the American Hospital at Neuilly. Mr. Degrange's illness developed first on board a steamer on his way to Europe early in the summer.

On July 22 he was taken to the hospital for an operation for the removal of the carbuncle on the back of his neck. A second operation became necessary on Tuesday of this week. The operations, while painful, were not dangerous, and the attending physicians say that he will be able to be about within a few days.

Papers Have Right To Refuse Advertising

Court Rules That Objectionable Matter May Be Declined, Despite Previous Contract.

ST. PAUL, Aug. 16.—That newspapers have a right to decline advertising when they deem it objectionable, even if it is submitted to them under a yearly contract, is the effect of a decision handed down today in the District Court here. The case came up when a local department store was sued by a local paper to recover money due under a yearly contract, which the store management had declared void because certain portions of its advertising copy had been rejected by the paper.

Joy Rider Compelled To Pension Victim

In Lieu of Jail Sentence, Speeder Must Pay Girl $30 a Month Until Recovery.

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 16.—Instead of sending J. S. McNutt, a convicted joy rider, to prison, Judge Wilbur, of the Superior Court, suspended a five-year sentence over him to-day, on condition that he pay $30 a month until she recovers to Miss Olive Davis, a young woman injured when McNutt's machine was wrecked. Physicians say Miss Davis' injuries are permanent.

The girl, in a plaster cast, testified to-day that McNutt was speeding while intoxicated.

Creepy Glide Brings New York Team Applications to Teach New Dance.

ONSET, MASS., Aug. 16.—The "tangoes," "hugs," "trots," "grapevine" and other similar dances have been cast into darkness by the creation introduced this afternoon at the local dancing casino by a New York couple. It is called the "pussy sneak," and is danced with the rubber-soled shoes commonly worn at the seaside.

The "pussy sneak" is a creepy sort of dance, with a few glides, but catchy and the New York team that "put the stunt on" had several applications tonight to teach it.

SUPREME TEST COMES AS STATE TRAINS GUNS ON FRANK'S CHARACTER

Defendant Will Take the Stand Early in Week to Give His Account of His Movements on Day Mary Phagan Was Killed.

ATTORNEYS SEEKING TO PROVE A COMPLETE ALIBI

Believed That Case Will Stand or Fall on Efforts of Prosecution to Prove Its Charge of Immorality Against the Accused.

BY AN OLD POLICE REPORTER.

The third week of the Frank trial came to an end at noon Saturday.

The defense has not yet concluded its case, but confidently expects to finish within the next day or two.

Its last card, and one of its biggest, will be the defendant's statement. This statement is scheduled for the early part of this week.

It will mark the climax of the defense's case, just as Conley's story marked the climax of the State's.

It became more and more evident as the case progressed during the past week that the defense is pitting Frank squarely against Conley—that it is to be Frank's life or Conley's life for little Mary Phagan's, snuffed out cruelly nearly four months ago in the National Pencil Factory.

Frank's statement on the stand, which the law permits him to make, but not under oath, and which may be accepted by the jury, either in whole or in part, in preference to all the sworn testimony, will be matched against the story the negro told so dramatically and with such frightful emphasis soon after the case got under way.

Into the negro's story, moreover, was injected the question of Frank's general character, particularly in one unmentionable direction, and this the defense will undertake to offset completely and finally.

More than a hundred witnesses have been summoned to testify to Frank's good character, and these include men and women from every walk of life, where it could be shown that such witnesses had come in contact with Frank from time to time in such wise as to be competent judges of his general character.

DALTON'S TESTIMONY IMPEACHED.

Already, the one witness (Dalton) so far introduced by the State to corroborate Conley has been successfully impeached by the defense, and it is likely that others introduced to uphold the negro also will be subjected to impeachment proceedings, if the defense suspects that it may successfully inaugurate the same.

The defense seemingly has realized fully the heavy necessity of breaking down Conley's awful story, not only in direct connection with the murder, but in every phase of it that bears upon the character of the defendant.

As a primary proposition, the advantage in the situation thus set up dwells within the defense.

In the first place, Frank goes to the jury with the presumption of innocence in his favor. The burden is not upon him to make out a case in behalf of himself. It is upon the State to make out a case against him.

Moreover, the only right of appeal attaching to persons indicted for felonies is within the defense. Once the State loses, it is lost forever.

The State must allege and prove the guilt of the defendant "beyond a reasonable doubt," and fight right up to that limit.

If there remains a reasonable doubt of Frank's guilt, after the last word has been said to the jury, Frank, under the law, is entitled to it, and if the trial jury fails to award it, a court of review will remedy the legal wrong thus inflicted upon him.

ALL STATE TESTIMONY SWORN.

The State, moreover, must submit every bit of its evidence, to the last shred or patch, under oath.

The defense, on the contrary, may clear itself upon testimony not one word of which is sworn to.

The State's star witness, Conley, also comes into court a confessed accessory after the fact of the murder, a confessed falsifier in numerous conflicting statements as to his knowledge of and connection with the crime, and accompanied by a well established jail record fearfully and wonderfully made up.

His is a much harder story to hold up than Frank's, viewing the two stories generally and in their broader personal aspects.

Even without Conley, to be sure, the State still has a circumstantial case against Frank that might compel considerable attention and respect, but there are few people who seemingly believe that it alone would be sufficiently strong to convict.

It probably is a realization of the State's tremendous task, involved in the holding together of Conley's story, that has caused the defense to train its every gun squarely upon it, for upon Conley's story will the State be forced to stand or fall eventually.

One of the curious things about the Frank case is the way the question of his general character got into the pleadings.

Theoretically, the defense alone may put the defendant's character in issue—it being contemplated by the law that no man shall be required, without his own consent, to answer more than one charge at one and the same time.

And so far as legal strategy and astuteness is concerned, the State ouegenera lthe defense in the matter of getting Frank's character before the jury.

Had Conley, the State's star witness, ben a man, even a negro, of respectability and approximately good previous record, the necessity of attaching to Frank the charge of utter depravity might not have seemed so pressing. But Frank's previous good record seemed so well established, and his standing generally was thought to be so high, that it contrasted rather painfully with the record of the main witness of all others (Conley) set up for the defndant's undoing.

The State doubtless knew that the unspeakable portion of Conley's evidence was primarily inadmissible, but it also knew that the defense would be taking rather a long chance to move its rejection when tendered.

In that event, a sinister and certainly dangerous impression would have been left upon the mind of the jury.

So the State deliberately drew out of Conley the unmentionable charge, which, in addition to the murder charge, undoubtedly made absolutely necessary the injection of Frank's character in issue.

The defense, in not objecting to the admission of the evidence last cited when it was first offered, may have been moved by the idea that it would, in the cross-examination of Conley, so break him down that it still might save itself the necessity of pleading Frank's good character—that it would even be able to make the frightful charge of perversion act as a boomerang on Conley!

Defense Objects too Late.

Seemingly, that idea, if it ever existed, was dissipated as the Conley cross-examination proceeded, however, for eventually the defense DID move to strike out the evidence, but at that time it was too late.

Having walked into the trap set by the State, if it indeed was a trap, the defense could not very well extricate itself save by pleading Frank's complete good character, and thus in a sweeping way dispose of the specific charge lodged against Frank by Conley, in addition to the murder charge.

Once committed to the necessity of establishing Frank's good character, however, the defense went at it in no half-hearted way.

It summoned indiscriminately every employee of the National Pencil Factory, male and female, old and new, and with unanimous voice they testified willingly and thoroughly that the defendant's general character is good.

In addition to these witnesses, business men, former college professors and classmates, and dozens of others fell into line with the same line of evidence.

The State now stands, therefore, where it must close up the gap between its primary allegation, dependent alone upon Conley's word so far, and the absolute proof of his sinister story.

If the State in rebuttal is able to prove conclusively that Frank is the thing Conley has labeled him, the State's case will go to the jury dangerously formidable.

If it fails to substantiate and corroborate Conley, it will go to the jury greatly weakened.

To overcome the fine showing as to Frank's good character made by the defense the State must bring forth witnesses in rebuttal that can not be impeached.

The impression throughout Atlanta that to fail in the establishment and corroboration of Conley's story by witnesses of integrity and standing will be to fail in a crisis heavily important to the State now.

Liability Becomes Asset.

Strange to say—there are so many strange things to say in this surpassingly strange Phagan story—one of the State's apparent weaknesses is proving, in one direction, to be one of its greatest elements of strength.

The deefnse's strenuous insistence that Conley's remarkable story is impossible is one reason why a lot of people are saying that it is impossible. Conley may have manufactured it out of the whole cloth.

If it is a lie, it is a lie too devilishly cunning for a negro of Conley's limited mentality to conjure or carry in his own mind in such remarkable detail, these people hold. If the negro were only less sure of everything, if he had wabbled dangerously under the terrific grilling administered by Luther Z. Rosser, if he had broken down or contradicted himself in any essential detail once he got to the witness stand, it now would be an easier thing for many people, fair-minded enough, too, to believe the negro's tale a mass of lies from start to finish!

And the danger to the defense here is that if Conley's story sticks in the minds of the jury, even in fractional part, it probably just as well stick in its entirety, so far as the hope of acquittal upon this trial is concerned.

In other words, many people are arguing to themselves that the negro, no matter how hard he tried and no matter how generously he was coached, still neevr could have framed up a story like the one he told, unless there was somewhere in it some foundation in fact.

And if there remains the impression of even a little foundation in fact, the defense is damaged beyond repair.

And so it gets back to where it started, and to where it will end—it is Conley pitted against Frank!

The State, with the burden of proof to carry, appears to have considerably more of an uphill fight on its hands than the deefnse has, and yet the very nature of both fights—uncompromising, and neither asking nor giving quarter—makes it something of a toss-up, really, as to which actually, and as a matter of fact, has the harder task to perform.

Undoubtedly, the defense expects to profit much through its insistence that the time element as set up in Conley's story, constitutes a most vital and compelling factor in determining the truth or falsity of the entire story.

Rely on State Witnesses.

It is rather odd, too, that the defense should be relying upon the State's witnesses in this matter quite as much as upon its own. It will seek to use generously the State's witnesses to the State's embarrassment—through the discrediting of Conley's story—in several different directions.

The deefnse is seeking to show how utterly absurd Conley's story is from Frank's point of view, by setting up these incompatible things:

That Mary Phagan (Conley's testimony) reached the pencil factory sufficiently well in advance of Monteen Stover (Conley's testimony) to go up to Frank's office, get her pay, be lured to a room in the rear and killed, notwithstanding the fact that Miss Stover (Conley's and Miss Stover's testimony) reached the factory at 12:05. And this despite the fact that Mary Phagan could not have been in the factory before 12:12, in any event, as shown by Mrs. Coleman (Mary's mother), George Epps, a motorman, and a conductor.

To get around this state of things, set up for the most part by the State's own witnesses, the State already has suggested, by a line of examination probably to be amplified, that the car upon which Mary Phagan came into town on Saturday, April 26, was running AHEAD of scheduled time, and that the litle girl did, as a matter of fact, reach the factory before 12:12, and that the clock in the factory, by which both Miss Stover and Conley testified as to the time, was running SLOW on the day of the crime.

In other words, to meet its own witnesses' statements, the State will move backward the time of the street car and move forward the time of the office clock!

If the State can do that, which looks like a big job, it will eliminate the dangerous time element in one direction, at least; but if it can not do that, it will find itself in a most trying position.

And whether it now can get away from its own established time element is one of the very prettiest problems involved in the entire case thus far!

Again, the defense will insist that the time element cuts in another direction most favorably in Frank's behalf, when it will show by Conley's evidence that the disposing of Mary Phagan's body began at 12:56, but that Frank was seen at the corner of Alabama and Whitehall streets at 1:10, waiting for a car. The latter fact is testified to by Miss Helen Curran positively, and she is unimpeachable.

The defense contends that the body of Mary Phagan could not have been disposed of, and the things done that Conley alleges were done, within the fourteen minutes of time thus allowed, between the beginning of the work, according to Conley, and the time of Frank's presence two blocks and a half away.

Conley would have been obliged to dispose of the body in the remarkable way he says he did, have written the notes, remained in the wardrobe eight minutes or more, all within the fourteen minutes.

According to the State's own witnesses, Conley was in the wardrobe eight minutes and used six minutes framing the notes. This would have consumed the entire fourteen minutes, without the dead girl's body ever having been touched.

It is admitted among lawyers generally that there is no defense so completely effective as a sustained alibi—which means that the crime alleged was committed in the absence and without the knowledge of the alleged principal to it, or, more properly stated, perhaps, that the crime could not have been committed by the defendant because it would have been a physical impossibility for him to have effected it, in the circumstances of it.

The past week, of course, was the defense's day in court, and it is but fair to say that it made good use of it.

Challenge to State.

It has frankly and aggressively urged Frank's character as a vital fact in his favor, and it thereby challenged the State to do its very worst by way of breaking that character down, if it can.

This attitude upon the part of the defense undoubtedly has had a steadying effect upon the public, too, for it seems at least to have suspended judgment pending the State's rebuttal.

In addition to its insistence upon Frank's good character, the defense unquestionably has given the State serious concern in the way it has brought forward the time element, and that in two separate and distinct directions.

If it successfully maintains either one of its time theories, it will have greatly discredited Conley's story. If it successfully maintains both theories, it will have about discredited the Conley story to the point of complete collapse.

As it was out of order to conclude at the end of the second week of the Frank trial, however, that the State had made out a case that could not be broken down, so it now is out of order to conclude that the defense has broken down the State.

The State for one thing does not appear to be particularly alarmed, either by the injection of Frank's character or by the turning of the time element against the Conley story.

The State, it must be remembered, has not yet entered or disclosed its rebuttal, either of the character evidence or the undermining of its own witnesses as to the time elements stated.

State Seems Confident.

It is perfectly confident of its ability to show that Frank's character is not good, despite the opinions of his friends, business associates and acquaintances; and it will insist, indeed, that as in other depraved characters of the sort it claims Frank to be, his business acquaintances, his relatives and his social intimates would be the very last people of all to discover the truth concerning him.

The State, in seeking to prove Frank a dissolute character, may be forced to the summoning of dissolute characters, with whom he is alleged to have been associated in degrading practices, in order to prove its contention.

Thus witnesses brought out by the State to establish Frank's depravity are apt to be easier marks for impeachment proceedings than witnesses of the ordinary sort, and to that extent the breaking down of Frank's character is pregnant with difficulty.

Nevertheless, the State proposes to establish the fact of Frank's degeneracy by witnesses of sufficient credibility, particularly in the nature of the charge sought to be proved, to get by at least in sufficient numbers to overwhelm the defendant.

If the State can put up even one or two witnesses that can weather the gale of the defense's rights of impeachment, it will have put Frank in a most unenviable position before the jury. If, therefore, it puts up 50 witnesses, and 48 of them get knocked out, there still will remain the two that stood the test!

Here, then, is another pretty problem to be thrashed out: Can the State, in sustaining a charge of degeneracy against Frank, bring forth witnesses to prove it absolutely, and at the same time not bring forth witnesses so much a party to Frank's offense that they will run serious risks in testifying themselves?

A witness who is willing to swear that he saw Frank do thus and so, or was a party to Frank's doing thus and so, if the thus and so is particularly reprehensible, is apt to get in pretty thin ice himself, if he isn't very careful!

The State says it can and will rebut Frank's good character. If it does, Frank is in unutterably bad shape; but if it doesn't, Frank's cause must be helped tremendously.

Employee of Pencil Factory Furnishes Dramatic Incident of Day—Dressing Room Evidence Is Brought Out.

More than one hundred witnesses had been called to testify in defense of Leo M. Frank's character when the third week of the factory superintendent's trial concluded shortly after 1 o'clock Saturday.

Character witnesses occupied most of the time during the four hours of Saturday's session. They displayed a remarkable loyalty to their employer, who is being tried on the charge of being the murderer of little Mary Phagan. Only one of the number, Miss Irene Jackson, gave testimoney in any way prejudicial to the case of Frank.

The character testimony, the tale of the finding of Mary Phagan's envelope and other so-called clews on the first floor of the factory by W. D. McWorth, Pinkerton operative, and the return of Mrs. Rae Frank, mother of the defendant, formed the important features of the day.

Girl Furnishes Incident.

A spectacular incident, which would have been even more amusing than it proved had it not been for the evident sincerity and profound earnestness of the witness, came in the testimony of Miss Sarah Barnes, one of the pencil factory employees.

"I'd die for Mr. Frank if they'd let me!" she exclaimed almost the instant she had composed herself in the witness chair. Attorney Arnold had only time to ask her the formal question: "Do you know Leo M. Frank, the defendant in this case?" before she launched into a eulogistic description of the young factory superintendent that left her breathless at the end of five minutes.

The attorney sought to interject another of the formal questions prescribed by law, but by the time she had caught her breath and was engaged in telling her willingness to lay down her life, if need be, to prove the guiltlessness of Frank.

Attorney Arnold could not stop her. The court could not dam the flood of words. She had a mind to speak and she was determined to speak without check and without interruption.

"I know Frank couldn't have committed such a terrible deed," she cried, accompanying her declaration with an emphatic brandishing of her folded fan. "I have known him ever since I have been in the pencil factory. He has always been kind to all of the employees and to the girls in particular. He never has done any of these things that have been told about him. He has always been a gentleman.

Willing to Die for Him.

"I've had to fight for him, almost, a number of times since these awful charges have been made against him. I'm willing to fight for him again. I am willing to die in his place."

At this point she turned toward the jury and said:

"You can give me any sort of a death you want. I know he is an innocent man. I just wish that I could make everyone believe in his innocence."

Attorney Arnold succeeded in the brief space of one of the moments when she paused for a fresh start to ask the remainder of the questions he desired, and then gave her to Solicitor Dorsey.

Dorsey met with the same trouble. He tried to get her to say with whom she had talked about the testimony to which she was to swear. Disregarding his question as though if never had been asked, she continued in her encomiums of Frank until the courtroom spectators were convulsed with laughter and the Solicitor filed with disgust at his inability to get the sort of answer he wanted from the girl.

Miss Irene Jackson, daughter of County Policeman A. W. Jackson, was called by the defense as a character witness, but gave testimony on her cross-examination in regard to conduct by Franak which the State has construed as highly improper.

Looked in Dressing Room.

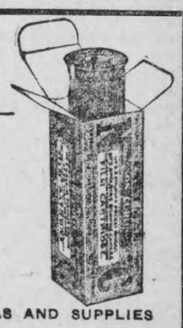
Miss Jackson said that so far as she knew the character of Frank was good and that she never had known him to attempt any liberties with the factory girls. To the Solicitor she admitted, however, that she three times had been in the girls' dressing room when Frank had pushed open the door and looked in.

Once Emmeline Mayfield had been in the room with her, she said; once Mamie Kitchen and once her own sister. Her sister had threatentod to quit on this last occasion, she testified, but had been persuaded against it.

She said that Frank merely pushed the door open, looked in, one one occasion smiled toward Miss Kitchen, and then turned around and walked away. She testified that the girls never were any further in a condition of undress than lacking their overskirt.

Solicitor Dorsey inquired of her in regard to a reported remark of N. V. Darley, general manager, that "if the girls stay with us through this, they will not lose by it." She said she had overheard Darley say this.

Many Employees Called.



The following pencil company employees were called as character witnesses during the day:

Misses Mollie Blair, Ethel Stewart, Sarah Barnes, Corinthia Hall, Ina Hayes, Eula May Flowers, Elma Hayes, Minnie Foster, Obie Dickerson, Gussie Wallace, Annie Osman, Bessie Thrailkill, Allie Denham, Rebecca Carson, Maude Wright, Irene Jackson, and Mesdames Emma Freeman and Ella Thomas.

LEO FRANK IS READY TO REVEAL HIS STORY

Accused Superintendent to Appeal to Reason of the Men Who Will Decide His Fate

COUNSEL FOR DEFENSE DECLARE HE ALONE HAS PREPARED STATEMENT

Defendant Will in No Way Try to Stir Emotion of Jurors, But Will Simply Outline His Contention as to Tragedy.

Leo M. Frank's statement to the jury, delayed from last week by the swarm of character witnesses brought in at the last moment, is the main factor of interest remaining in the trial of the National Pencil Factory superintendent before the rebuttal is taken up by the two attorneys representing the State.

What this statement will be the defendant's lawyers themselves profess not to know. They have had little or no part in framing it, they say. All they know is that he proposes to make one, and that he has been preparing it piecemeal as the trial has progressed and one point after another has arisen.

Whether it will be a formal statement read verbatim, no one knows except the prisoner and possibly his immediate relatives.

If the lawyers know they are keeping it darkly a secret. They believe, they have ventured to say, that it will be more or less informal and that it will be in the nature of an address to the jury and the court based upon the notes that Frank has made from time to time during the trial.

Appeal To Reason.

That there will be little appeal to the emotions of the jurors is practically a foregone conclusion. It is the purpose of Frank, it is understood, to appeal directly to the reason and common sense of the twelve men—to outline to them as he has outlined to his own attorneys the weak points or improbabilities in the negro Conley's story.

As well as this, it is his intention to picture to them his every movement during the entire day and to represent the physical impossibility of his having committed the crime and disposed of the body as Conley describes, if his alibi as set up by a score of witnesses is accepted by the jury.

The statement will embrace much to which he testified at the Coroner's inquest. But there will be much more. He will go into some things on which his own lawyers have not touched. The statement practically is certain to form a most remarkable and most important portion of the record of the trial's proceedings.

What promised to provide a sensation during the presentation of the defendant's case may collapse into nothing. This is W. H. Mincey and his startling declaration that he saw Jim Conley on the afternoon of the murder, and that Jim bragged to him that he had killed a girl that afternoon and didn't want to kill anyone else.

Appear to Doubt Mincey.

The attorneys for the defense have not been willing to say whether or not they would call Mincey. They have appeared to entertain some doubts of Mincey's credibility. Reuben Arnold said Saturday that he was not prepared to say that he would or would not call Mincey.

If Mincey's story could be corroborated it would furnish a most effective weapon in winning the battle for Frank's life. Granting its truthfulness, it is the most definite and direct evidence of the entire case, embracing as it does a virtual confession of murder on the part of the negro.

Mincey said he met Conley at Electric avenue and Carter street Saturday afternoon, April 26. Conley was partially intoxicated and becoming angered at Mincey's insistence that he take out an insurance policy threatened the agent and boasted of killing a girl shortly before, according to the affidavit made by Mincey.

If Mincey goes on the stand his testimony will become the target for some of the State's strongest rebuttal. That and the character of Frank will divide the attention of the Solicitor. He will not bother about much else. He is content to let Conley's story, as bolstered and strengthened by the testimony of detectives and other witnesses, stand as a sufficient rebuttal for practically all of the evidence that the defense has brought out in favor of Frank. The Solicitor believes that when the arguments go before the jury the members will be willing to accept the story of the negro as against that of Frank.

After Frank's Character.

Dorsey, however, has been unceasing in his efforts to wreck Frank's character. He has branded him as a degenerate and a criminal of the worst type. The introduction of character witnesses by the defense has given him a new opening, and he proposes to take every advantage of it. His attitude is shown in a colloquy between himself and Judge Roan.

"How far do you intend to go in that line of testimony?" inquired the judge.

"Just exactly as far as your honor will let me," Dorsey replied.

Judge Roan remonstrated that the Solicitor General should not seek to introduce evidence that he knew was illegal. The Solicitor smiled.

Dorsey has about twenty witnesses he will use in an effort to destroy all of the favorable impression created by the 100 character witnesses who have testified for Frank so far in the trial. From some of them he has promised to produce testimony of the most sensational sort.

One young girl, Dewey Hewell, not yet out of her teens, was brought all the way from Cincinnati last Friday for the express purpose of testifying against the young factory superintendent.

Confusion in Study Of Grammar Dispelled

Committee's Report on Standardizing Nomenclature Makes Good Impression.

COLORADO SPRINGS, Aug. 16.—Standardization of grammatical nomenclature, which will do away with the confusion in the study of English, as well as other languages, in American schools, has been effected by a committee of fifteen, of which Professor Hills, of Colorado College, was a member.

The committee made a report to the National Education Association in convention at Salt Lake City and its adoption without amendment virtually insures the following of the committee's recommendations in all schools and colleges.

According to Professor Hills, it was found that in the sentence "John is good," the word "good" was called by nine different names in 25 grammars; the word "John" in "This is John," was called by nineteen terms, and in "We made John president," the word "president" was given eighteen different names in the textbooks examined.

American Girl Tells Of 'Walloping' Prince

"I Kicked Radziwill Out of His Auto for Kissing My Hand too Rapturously," She Says.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Miss Elizabeth Frewen, of Philadelphia, arrived from London to-day on the Oceanic with a Pekinese named Bo Sing, a gift from Prince Albert Radziwill, who married Miss Dorothy Deacon, a Boston society girl, some years ago.

"Just because I tell you the Prince gave me Bo Sing," said Miss Frewen, "don't think he is a friend of mine. Just before I left London I walloped him on the jaw and kicked him out of his automobile for kissing my hand too rapturously."

Miss Frewen is six feet tall. She was met at the pier by Joseph Daley, of Boston, to whom she is to be married next month.

Father Sells Girl at Auction in Detroit

Authorities Take Steps to Have Marriage of Syrian Child to Turk Annulled.

DETROIT, MICH., Aug. 16.—The marriage license department of the County Clerk's office has taken steps to nullify an auction sale of Marie Aman, a Syrian girl, only 15 years old. Her father made the sale. There were half a dozen bidders.

The girl had been in the country only seven weeks, and was brought here by her father expressly to be sold. A Turk, Mehammed Haj Seleem, was the successful bidder.

The bargain was sealed immediately by the reading of an Oriental marriage service. The girl had a sweetheart who could not bid high enough to win her.

Triplets in Home Where 6 Twins Live

President Wilson Is Honored Three Times in the Naming of the Babies.

LAONIA, WIS., Aug. 16.—Three pairs of twins and a set of triplets is the record that Mrs. Joseph Checota, of this town, boasts. The triplets will be named Woodrow, Wilson and W. W. Joseph, in honor of the President.

The father believes this is a record that will stand for a long time to come.

Mr. and Mrs. Checota have been married six years and in that time have had nine children. All but one are living.

Custom Officers Seize Davis Trophy

International Tennis Cup, Just Won by America Is Held Up for Duty.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—The Davis cup, International tennis trophy, recently won in England by the American team, was seized by customs officials when it reached here to-day on the liner Mauretania, but Collector of the Port Mitchell intimated to-night that the prize would probably be released within a short time.

The basis of the seizure was the officials claim that although the trophy was originally American property, it had been abroad so long that the payment of duty might be necessary.

Woman Not Man's Equal, Says Prelate

Archbishop Says He Wouldn't Dare Say Suffrage Agitation Is Against Church Rules.

MILWAUKEE, Aug. 16.—"I do not believe the Creator intended the position of woman in the world should be the same as that of man," said Archbishop Sebastian G. Messmer, of this city, in an address to the Catholic Press Association to-day.

"But I would not dare make the positive statement that agitation for woman suffrage is against the rules of the church. The church has not taken any definite stand and until it does each individual has a right to think, talk and act as he sees fit."

Weds Model; Loses Home; Goes to Work

'I Should Worry,' Remarks Rich Retired Merchant's Son When Disowned.

WORCESTER, MASS., Aug. 16.—Because William A. Lyttle, Jr., son of Colonel W. A. Lyttle, a wealthy retired merchant and erstwhile member of the Governor's Council, eloped with Miss Thyra Linea Johnson, a 19-year-old artist's model of this city, to Putnam., Conn., he has been disowned by his father.

Colonel Lyttle has ordered his son to give the girl up. Disregarding that mandate, young Lyttle brought matters to a crisis by quietly slipping out of town a few days ago with his sweeaheart and having the matrimonial knot tied.

"I should worry," said young Lyttle when he was told of his father's decision, and then he promptly started with his bride to Detroit, where he will learn the automobile business.

HOMESTEADER IS BLOWN FROM HIS BED BY STORM

PIERRE, S. DAK., Aug. 16.—Otto Everhardt, a young bachelor homesteader, arrived at the home of a neighbor dressed only in a two-foot piece of blanket, which he said was all that remained of his household property as a result of the storm which swept this section. Everhardt said that the tornado struck his shack while he was in bed, carried away the shan'y and bed and left him uninjured. Other homesteaders suffered heavy losses, reports indicate.

Grape Juice vs. Milk

Secretary Bryan Does Not Have Undivided Support of Cabinet in Choice of Beverage.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—Grape juice as a Cabinet beverage has gone into eclipse, in spite of the prominence given to it by Ciceronian eloquence as being the only nectar of the gods.

A canvass of the preferences of other members of the Cabinet beside that of Mr. Bryan, whose favorite beverage is well known, disclosed the fact that plain old milk, sweet and buttermilk, is ahead in the race. President Wilson prefers orange juice to that of the luscious grape.

Secretary of the Navy Daniels is one of the sweet milk champions and has a fellow champion in Secretary of Labor William B. Wilson.

Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo leans toward buttermilk.

Attorney General McReynolds and Secretary of War Garrison are said to be ardent milk advocates.

Secretary of Agriculture David Houston is one of the two members that find enjoyment in pure unfermented grape juice.

Secretary of the Interior Lane prefers hot tea, while Secretary of Commerce Redfield likes his tea cold.

Charges Sister Stole Her Husband's Love

California Woman Names Beautiful Relative In Her Plea for a Divorce.

SUSANVILLE, CAL., Aug. 16.—Charging that her younger and prettier sister had stolen her husband's love, Mrs. Celia Rundquist Schaefer asked Judge Monroe for a divorce from Marin Schaefer, a fruit grower and rancher. Miss Rose Rundquist, sister of the plaintiff, was named as co-respondent.

Mrs. Schaefer testified that her sister admitted that her husband was a "grand man," and that he showered attentions upon the sister and admitted making love to her. The plaintiff also claimed that she had to support both for two years.

Judge Monroe held that there was insufficient corroborating evidence and instructed the applicant for divorce to get more witnesses.

AUTO AS MATADOR SAVES FARMER FROM MAD BULL

ELGIN, ILL., Aug. 16.—Matadors may be succeeded by automobiles as bullfighters. This was proven when Peter Green, a farmer, 60 years old, of Huntley, was being gored by a bull in one of his pastures. His screams attracted an automobile party of three men, who were in the road. They witnessed the attack for a moment, then the driver of the big touring car made a dash into the pasture and after the bull.

The horn was tooted and tooted, and the bull finally was driven away from the helpless farmer. Three of Green's ribs were broken, but he will recover.

GIRLS BARE SECRETS OF FLIGHT WITH DIGGS AND CAMINETTI

Blushing and With Downcast Eyes They Tell Jury Pitiful Story of Their Downfall

FEAR OF EXPOSURE OF THEIR RELATIONS WITH MEN LED TO ELOPEMENT

Marsha Warrington Declares Both She and Lola Norris Had Promises of Marriage When They Embarked on Trip---Firm Under Cross-Fire.

MARSHA WARRINGTON and Maury T. Diggs, whom she accuses on a white slavery charge, as they appeared in court. Below is Lola Norris, the other girl witness in noted case.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 16.—The case of Maury I. Diggs, formerly State Architect of California, charged before the United States Court under the Mann white slavery act because he took pretty, dainty Marsha Warrington, of Sacramento, to Reno, Nev., leaving behind a beautiful wife and a little daughter, has passed the stage of revelation and disclosure and now has come to the technicalities of defense.

It will be recalled that on March 10 last the tea tables of the West were rattled by the tale that Diggs had run away with Miss Warrington, daughter of a general agent of the Santa Fe, and that F. Drew Caminetti, son of the Commissioner General of Immigration of the United States, had fled from his wife's children at the same time, taking with him Miss Lola Norris, the prettiest girl in the State Library, daughter of one of the oldest and most respected families in the Capital of the State.

Caught in a bungalow at Reno, the United States authorities took over the prosecution.

Becomes National Incident.

Then came the effort at Washington to postpone and suppress that prosecution, with the explosion and resignation of United State District Attorney John L. McNab, the forcing of Cabinet consideration and the administrative fake of sustaining Attorney General McReynolds in theory and rebuking him in fact and procedure. An escapade of love and champagne had been dignified into an event of national importance.

After a struggle that exhausted the entire panel and required a special venire, a jury was sworn, and on Tuesday of this week came the long-expected sacrifice—the appearance of Miss Marsha Warrington before her shearers.

She appeared, a pretty, plump, frightened little thing, 20 years of age, who kept her eyes in her lap and slowly and painfully told, detail on detail, of her meeting with Diggs of the making up of a joy-hunting party of four with Miss Norris and Caminetti; of her yielding to her lover's importunities in his office; of trips that extended near and far, joy riding to destruction.

Then she told of how Diggs and Caminetti had, playing upon their fears of arrest and exposure, induced and coerced her and Miss Norris to fly with them to Nevada. There was no relation, however intimate, no situation, however delicate, that the pretty miss was not forced to disclose.

Terrified Into Trips.

Next came Miss Norris, tall, willowy and prepossessing, and she, too, clearly, distinctly, compellingly, told how she had loved not wisely and how she and Miss Warrington had been cajoled, persuaded and terrified into accompanying Diggs and Caminetti to Reno, where her own downfall was completed.

There has been something of corroboration of the love tale and the completion of a hard case under the letter of the Mann law, which punishes those who take women from one State to another for the purpose of making them mistresses and concubines.

And now the defense has stated its case. It does not intend to deny the stories of the two girls, but will rest its hopes on the theory that there was "no persuasion" to leave California, or "intent" to force the young women into concubinage in Nevada; but that all fled Sacrameto in the same fear of exposure of their liaison and arrest and disgrace following the exposure.

Both Miss Warrington and Miss Norris had to submit to the most searching questions during their appearance on the witness stand. The two girls occupied the stand from Tuesday to Friday. The transcript of their testimony virtually tells the complete story of the escapade that led to the indictment of Diggs and Caminetti and made the flight to Reno eventually result in a crisis in the Cabinet of President Wilson. On it the Government proposes to convict the two defendants.

Love for Wife Forgotten.

"How often during the two weeks prior to your departure to Reno did Mr. Diggs discuss with you his relations with his wife?" was one of the first questions asked Miss Warrington by Special Prosecutor Roche.

"Several times," replied Miss Warrington, giving the answer in such a low voice that Judge VanFleet had to tell her to speak up louder.

Q. Did he say anything concerning himself and yourself in the future?—A. Yes.

Q. How often did he refer to his regard for you?—A. He spoke of it very often and said that he cared more for me than he did for his wife.

Q. Did you believe what he said?—A. I did.

Q. Did Diggs demonstrate his affection—I mean did he ever kiss you?—A. Yes, he did.

Q. Did he discuss marriage with you?—A. He did.

Q. What did he say about marriage?—A. He said he would divorce his wife and marry me.

Q. How often did he discuss marriage with you?—A. I don't know.

Q. More than once?—A. Yes.

Best to Leave City.

Q. Now, tell the jury what the defendant said that resulted in your decision to leave Sacramento.—A. Well, he said his father was coming up from Berkeley to prosecute us; that there was talk about us all over town; that it was best for all of us to leave the city, and that it was the advice of his attorney. He said he had paid an attorney large sums for his advice on the situation.

Talks of Reform School.

Q. Now go on and state what you said and what the others said, starting with the first discussion.—A. Well, Mr. Diggs said we would be sent to the reform school; that there was going to be something published in the papers; that we would be tried in the juvenile court and there was a warrant out for our arrest, and if we did not go we would be put through the third degree.

Q. By whom?—A. He didn't say. The policeman, I suppose.

Q. What did Caminetti say?—A. He didn't say much. He just agreed.

Q. What did you and Lola Norris say?—A. We said we couldn't go.

Q. What part of the time of your meetings was taken up with these discussions?—A. Most all of the time.

Q. Did you agree to leave for Reno before Saturday, March 9?—A. No.

Q. Did Miss Norris?—A. No.

Q. Did you make any statement as to the effect of your leaving on your father or mother?—A. I said I couldn't go and leave my father; it would simply kill him. He said it would all come out in the papers anyway, and I might as well go.

Would Kill Her Mother.

Q. What did Miss Norris say about her mother?—A. She said it would kill her if she left.

Q. Did the men say anything about that?—A. Diggs said her mother would get over it.

Q. How soon did they say you should get away?—A. Right away.

Q. Did they say that each time you discussed going?—A. Yes; they said we had to go immediately every time.

Q. What time did you meet Diggs and Caminetti at the Saddle Rock restaurant the evening you left for Reno?—A. About 8:30 o'clock.

Q. Did Diggs say anything about marrying you there?—A. He said he would get a divorce from his wife and marry me.

Q. Did he say anything about any action his wife might take?—A. Regarding a divorce, do you mean? He didn't say he would get a divorce.

Q. Did Diggs say what Caminetti would do?—A. He said Mr. Caminetti was going to get a divorce from his wife and marry Miss Norris.

Q. Who did the talking?—A. Mr. Diggs. He said we might go to Salt Lake City, Reno or Los Angeles. He finally decided Reno.

Q. Was anything said about what would happen if you didn't go?—A. He said we had to go; that we couldn't back out now.

Q. Did you protest?—A. We said we would stay there and take our chances, and he repeated it was too late to back out then.

Q. What was said about tickets?—A. First we talked about buying them ourselves. Mr. Caminetti said it would be better to have the girls buy them. Finally Diggs said he would get them.

Q. Was any more money giver, to anybody by one of the four?—A. Mr. Caminetti gave Miss Norris some money.

Q. How much?—A. I don't know.

Girl Kept Money.

Q. To buy tickets with? What did he say when he gave her the money?—A. He told her to keep it.

Q. How long after Caminetti left did you stay in the restaurant?—A. About an hour.

Q. What did you talk about?—A. About Mr. Caminetti and whether he would get the money, and our destination.

Q. How were the berths occupied?—A. Miss Norris and Mr. Caminetti had the upper and Mr. Diggs and myself had the lower berth.

Q. What baggage did the party have?—A. Mr. Diggs had a suitcase and I had a grip.

Q. Was the baggage checked?—A. No.

Q. Did you see the tickets?—A. I saw Mr. Diggs give them to the conductor.

Q. Where did you go from the restaurant?—A. The depot.

Q. Did you wait in the depot for Caminetti?—A. No; he was to return to the restaurant. There was some talk about going on an earlier train. We waited in a little street car waiting room near the depot. Miss Norris stayed in there when the train came in. I walked out with Mr. Diggs and told him to go and I would stay there. He said, "No," that he thought too much of me to have me stay there. The train finally left.

Caminetti Gets Money.

Q. Then Mr. Diggs went to the waiting room and telephoned?—A. Yes, to Mr. Caminetti, I think.

Q. Then what did you do?—A. We returned to the Saddle Rock and waited half an hour for Mr. Caminetti. When he came, he said he had the money and would go on the next train.

Q. Then you did what?—A. We went to the depot.

Q. What was said about tickets?—A. Mr. Diggs said to wait while he got the tickets.

Q. Whom did you wait with?—A. With Lola Norris and Mr. Caminetti.

Q. Then what?—A. When the train came, we got on.

Q. What kind of a car did you get in?—A. A Pullman sleeper.

Q. What part did you go into first?—A. We stood in the car while Mr. Diggs got a drawing room.

Q. Who paid for the drawing room?—A. Mr. Diggs.

Q. Who ordered the porter to make up the berths?—A. Mr. Diggs.

Q. Did the four of you enter the room together?—A. Yes.

Q. How many beds were there in the drawing room?—A. Two berths and the little side bed.

Q. Did you go to bed?—A. Yes.

Q. Right away?—A. Yes.

Tried to Rent House.

Q. Miss Warrington, you recall, do you, going to the Riverside Hotel on the 10th day of March, 1913?—A. I do.

Q. Was that after or before the four of you had your lunch at the cafe?—A. After.

Q. Upon leaving the cafe in Reno, just state to what place the two men went, that is, Mr. Caminetti and Mr. Diggs?—A. They said we could go to the hotel and wait for them and they would try to rent a house.

Q. During the time that you were in Reno with Mr. Diggs and Mr. Caminetti and Miss Norris, were any further statements made by Mr. Diggs as to what he intended to do so far as you were concerned?—A. I don't understand.

Q. Well, I mean so far as marriage was concerned?—A. Yes.

Q. What, if anything, did he say?—A. He said he would get a divorce from his wife and marry me.

Q. And what, if anything, did Mr. Caminetti say in your presence to Miss Norris regarding that subject?—A. He said the same thing.

Q. What room in that bungalow was occupied by you?—A. The front room.

Q. Who else occupied that room with you?—A. Mr. Diggs.

Q. Who occupied the rear room, that is, the north bedroom?—A. Miss Norris and Mr. Caminetti.

Miss Warrington was subjected to a gruelling cross-examination by Nat Coghlan, counsel for Diggs and Caminetti.

Replying to his questions, Miss Warrington explained she was working for her father, general agent of the Santa Fe Railroad at Sacramento, as a stenographer at the time she went to Reno.

"Under what circumstances did you meet Mr. Diggs?" she was asked.

"He was introduced to me by a friend of mine, Mr. Monte Austin," was the girl's reply.

Q. Were you not introduced to Mr. Diggs as Miss Williamson?—A. I could not say?

Q. Did Mr. Austin give you the name of Mr. Diggs?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you at that time know who Mr. Diggs was?—A. I did not.

Q. You did not know whether he was a married or a single man?—A. Mr. Austin told me that he was not living with his wife at that time.

Pair Met Frequently.

Q. When was it that you met Mr. Diggs the next time?—A. The last of October.

Q. Did you meet him frequently after the second time?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember visiting Mr. Diggs and Mr. Caminetti in the city of San Francisco and going to the Grand Hotel during the month of ary, 1913, I will ask you if you, in company with Mr. Caminetti and Mr. Diggs and Miss Norris, did not go in an automobile from San Francisco to San Jose?—A. Yes.

Q. You stopped, did you not, at the New Montgomery Hotel, at San Jose?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember, Miss Warrington, going to Stockton upon a certain Sunday in January, 1913, with Mr. Diggs?—A. Yes.

Q. Didn't you go to the Old Heidelberg there and hire a cottage for the afternoon?—A. I don't remember.

M. Coghlan—I will ask you if you do not remember going to Jackson with Mr. Diggs and Miss Norris in the auto of Mr. Diggs upon election night for the purpose of getting Mr. Caminetti—that is to say, election night in November, 1912?—A. Yes, I remember.

Q. Where did you stop at Jackson that night?—A. We didn't stay there. We came right back.

Q. During that trip did you and the other three members of that party drink any intoxicating liquors?—A. Yes, a little.

Q. Is it not a matter of fact that you arrived home on that night about 3 o'clock—I mean the next morning, on the morning of November 4, I believe it was or, at any rate, the morning after election—and that you had been drinking considerably upon the trip?—A. I do not remember what time we returned home; I do not think it was so late as that.

Wanted to Leave Town.

Q. Is it not a matter of fact that you wanted to leave Sacramento by reason of the fact of your condition?—A. No.

Q. And you were frightened at that time, were you?—A. Yes.

Q. Afraid that you might be arrested? Is that correct?—A. That is what Mr. Diggs said, that we were to be arrested the next day.

Q. I am asking you now if you were afraid or were not afraid you would be arrested.—A. Certainly.

Miss Lola Norris made an even better witness for the Government than Miss Warrington, although much of her testimony was simply in corroboration of the testimony of her chum.

"How old are you?" she was asked by Prosecutor Roche upon taking the stand.

"I was 20 the 3d of last August," she replied.

Q. Do you know Maury I. Diggs?—A. Yes.

Q. From when does your acquaintance with him date?—A. Since about the latter part of October, 1912.

Q. At that time where were you employed?—A. In the State Library, Sacramento.

Q. You are acquainted with Drew Caminetti?—A. Yes.

Q. How long have you been acquainted with him?—A. A little over a year.

Knew He Was Married.

Q. Did you know he was a married man?—A. I did.

Q. And did you know Mr. Diggs was a married man?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, Miss Norris, you remember the trip you took to Reno with Mr. Caminetti and Miss Warrington and Mr. Diggs. How many timss were you in the habit of meeting together before that time?—A. Three or four times each week.

Q. Did Diggs say anything about his relations with his wife during these meetings?—A. Yes; he said he was not happy with his wife.

Q. How often did he say this?—A. A number of times.

Q. And did Mr. Caminetti say anything about his relations with his wife?—A. Yes.

Q. What did he say?—A. He told me he was not living happily with her.

Q. Did Diggs ever tell you that his relations with his wife were about to be served? What, if anything, did he say upon this subject?—A. Well, I remember on one occasion that I received a telephone message saying that he and Mrs. Diggs had agreed to separate and that she was to apply for a divorce in a few days.

Promised to Marry Her.

Q. Did Mr. Caminetti say anything about his wife and what his plans were respecting her after he went away?—A He said that he would get a divorce from her and marry me.

A. He said that he would get a divorce from her and marry me.

Mr. Roche:

Q. Go on and state what occurred in the drawing room after you entered it?—A. There were two berths on one side, an upper and a lower, and a couch on the other side. I lay down on the couch for a while.

Q. What became of Mr. Diggs and Miss Warrington?—A. They went into a lower berth?

Q. What became of Mr. Caminetti?—A. He entered the upper berth.

Q. You were still lying on the couch?—A. Yes.

Q. How long did you remain there?—A. About half an hour.

Q. Then what did you do?—A. I got into the upper berth.

Q. At whose request?—A. Mr. Caminetti's.

Reached Reno in Morning.

Q. Do you recall what time it was when you reached Reno?—A. It might have been 8 or 9 o'clock the next morning.

Q. Now coming back to the trip to Reno, did you shed any tears on the train?—A. Yes, because I was very unhappy.

Q. How were the rooms occupied at the bungalow you finally rented at Reno?—A. Mr. Diggs and Miss Warrington occupied the front rooms and Mr. Caminetti and I the back room.

Q. At this time had Mr. Caminetti made any declarations of his intention to marry you?—A. Yes; he promised that he would marry me.

Q. When the officer finally arrived, with Mr. Martin Beasley, what did you and Miss Warrington do?—A. We cried, but he told us not to worry—that everything would be all right when we returned to our homes and parents.

Q. Was any hilarity indulged in by either Miss Warrington or yourself on this occasion?—A. No. We couldn't laugh, because we were both very unhappy.

Q. Now, Miss Norris, prior to this trip to Reno, had you ever been intimate with any man besides Mr. Caminetti?—A. I had not, and Mr. Caminetti knew it.

—A. I had not, and Mr. Caminetti knew it.

Q. And when you entered into these relations with Mr. Caminetti, you believed that he would marry you?—A. Yes, sir.

Miss Norris was cross-examined by Attorney Robert Devlin, of the defense, former United States District Attorney here.

"Now, Miss Norris, on the trip you took to San Francisco and San Jose," was one of Attorney Devlin's questions, "did not Mr. Caminetti at first object to going, saying his wife was ill in the hospital, and didn't Miss Warrington say, 'You're a piker. We girls have framed this up and you must go along'?"

"I dbn't remember any such thing," Miss Norris answered.

Q. Did you have anything to drink on this trip?—A. I think I had some lemonade.

Q. Don't you remember that there was considerable drinking done in the party, and that you girls took part in some auto racing with another machine containing theatrical people, members of David Warfield's company?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you remember that when you finally returned to the Grand Hotel it was very late—about 4 o'clock in the morning?—A. No, sir. I had no idea what time it was.

Q. You said you rapped on Miss Warrington's door after you had reached the hotel and that you tried to enter her room. Did she hear you knocking?

Objection interposed by Mr. Roche.

Q. Did you stay in the room all night with Mr. Caminetti after you left the Grand Hotel and went to San Jose—at the hotel in San Jose?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At that time did you rap on Miss Warrington's door?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, after the trip to Jackson did you make another trip to Stockton—you four?—A. Yes, sir.

Registered as His Wife.

Q. Do you remember on this occasion that Mr. Diggs and Miss Warrington retired to a room and were gone for two hours, and that you and Mr. Caminetti retired to another room?—A. I don't remember.

Q. Upon your arrival in Reno, Mr. Caminetti registered at the Riverside Hotel as Mr. Ross and you as Mrs. Ross?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Mr. Diggs as Mr. Enright and Miss Warrington as Mrs. Enright?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, after leaving the hotel and going to the cottage that you occupied, do you remember Mr. Diggs and Miss Warrington going downtown and buying you a night gown?—A. Yes; they returned with one, but I don't know who bought it.

Q. Do you remember after the Reno incident that Miss Warrington heard that Mr. Diggs and his wife were reconciled, and that she remarked: "If I can't get him, he'll go to the penitentiary?"—A. She never said that to me.

Q. Do you remember on one occasion entering the private office of Mr. Diggs in Sacramento when he was alone with Miss Warrington? Do you remember on this occasion Miss Warrington remarked, "What do you think this is—a private show, and why don't you buy tickets?"—A. No, sir.

ENTERS RACE FOR COUNCIL FIFTH WARD

JESSE B. LEE

Well Known Business Man Who Announces His Candidacy for Council.

Atlanta, Ga., Aug. 16, 1913.

To the Voters of the Fifth Ward:

I hereby respectfully announce myself a candidate for Councilman to succeed Hon. J. J. Greer, whose term expires with this year, subject to the action of the city primary.

I was born in the Fifth Ward and have lived in its boundaries all my life. I am reasonably well informed about city affairs and feel that I am in position to render you efficient and intelligent service.

I am the candidate of no clique or faction, and shall always vote for and advocate those measures in Council which, in my opinion, are for the best interests of the people of the city and my ward, regardless of where they come from or who supports them.

I shall not be content to support measures introduced by other people, but shall endeavor to introduce and advocate measures which I have originated for the good of the people.

On all such questions as charter reform, etc., I shall endeavor to ascertain the wishes of my constituents, and then support their will, whether it coincides with my own private and personal views or not.

I shall do my best as your representative, if elected, to render you capable and satisfactory service, always standing for the best thing to be had for the city as a whole and my own section and ward in particular.

I will appreciate the vote and influence of my many friends and the voters generally of the Fifth Ward.—Adv.

'COURAGE' IS MESSAGE SENT BY HAWTHORNE

Distinguished Prisoner Writes Poem When Told That Attorney General Denied Him Parole.

CONVICTS ARE SYMPATHETIC

Author Gives No Outward Sign of Keen Disappointment, Declares Penitentiary Inmates.

Julian Hawthorne, novelist, poet, philosopher, in the Atlanta Federal prison, was a very characteristic Julian Hawthorne at the moment when he learned that Attorney General McReynolds had denied him the freedom which the parole board recommended and which he had frankly anticipated.

Hawthorne read a newspaper account of the official action. For a long time he stared at the story, which was a very short story. Then, without a word to the men near him, he went into his cellroom, and lay on his cot.

For half an hour he meditated. Then he arose, and wrote a poem that will be published in the next issue of Good words, the prison paper.

The poem is entitled "Courage."

It is a short verse of Hawthorne's typical pentameter style, and chock full of Hawthorne's typical philosophy of optimism.

Hawthorne Keeps Silent.

All this is the story that Hawthorne's fellow prisoners tell of the incident two weeks ago, when the news first came to the prison that the Attorney General had blasted the hopes of the distinguished prisoner. Hawthorne himself would say nothing of it, maintaining a consistent silence concerning his personal affairs, as he has since he first came to the prison.

It is generally considered among the prisoners who have come to know Hawthorne well that he was keenly disappointed at the action of the Attorney General, especially after friends in Washington had assured him that freedom was forthcoming, and after the parole board had acted favorably on his petition for release. It was believed that he had even laid plans for the period of freedom that seemed to be near.

"It hurt him," said one of the prisoners Saturday. "But he has kept it to himself. He never mentions the subject, and it looks as if he resents the mention of it by others. When they say anything about it, he usually laughs, and says nothing.

Prisoners Sympathetic.

"Well, it was only the newspapers who were sure I would get out," he answered once, however, to a man who said he was sorry. "It never was the most certain thing in the world, and I didn't consider it as such."

There were a good many expressions of sympathy, Hawthorne's friends said. The tall old man is a general favorite in the prison. But with it all there is no outward sign of disappointment as he sits in the midst of his fellows on the little hill overlooking the baseball diamond, his sharp face set, his keen eyes squinting as they look out over the bright, bare, sunlit field.

He and Dr. W. P. Morton will be free, by the natural expiration of their terms, in October.

Daniels to Dispense Fresh Air Hospitality

Secretary of the Navy to Keep Country Home Open Throughout Winter.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—Fresh air hospitality will be the slogan Secretary of the Navy and Mrs. Daniels will sound in Washington society next winter, now they have decided to retain "Single Oak," their country place on the outskirts of Washington, as an all-year-round residence.

Despite the distance from the fashionable center of the northwest, the Daniels plan a series of unique country sports to entertain their friends in good old Southern fashion, cross-country tramps, week-end parties when hunting and winter sports will be in order, are included in these plans.

At Christmas a jolly house party will make the old mansion ring from rafters to yule log on the roomy hearth.

John Lind Has Most Unusual Job But Lind Is Most Unusual Man Calling Bluffs Is His Specialty

Former Governor John Lind, of Minnesota, who is in Mexico to tell President Huerta that President Wilson disapproves of him an dhis policies.

Former Governor Has No Official Position, but Has Been Selected in Ticklish Diplomatic Work.

A plain man named John Lind is in Mexico City awaiting an opportunity to tell the explosive and dynamic President Huerta that President Wilson, of the United States, disapproves of him and his government.

This man is not the Ambassador of the United States. He has no more an official standing than a Chinese coolie. He is a plain American citizen come to discuss matters.

President Huerta may refuse to see him. The President might tell John Lind to go back to Minnesota whence he came, and still would be on safe ground.

But President Huerta will see him, and will talk to him, and will listen to what he has to say. Because John Lind, as all the world knows, is the personal representative of President Woodrow Wilson. He does not stand for the Government of the United States, nor represent any plan of intervention or anexation. He is merely the ears ad mouth of Woodrow Wilson, who wants to know exactly what is going on and why.

The mission on which President Wilson sent John Lind, former Governor of Minnesota, to Mexico, is one of the most remarkable in diplomatic history.

Holds No Office.

"It is to be pointed out that Mr. Lind holds no office which is recognized between nations," announced dispatches from Washington. "A grave responsibility rests on his shoulders. * * * The administration insisted that it should be made plain that Mr. Lind was acting entirely in an unofficial capacity in his mission to Mexico, but that he possesses most extraordinary powers in speaking for President Wilson is admitted."

It is plain that John Lind is on a most unusual mission, to be successful in which he must be calm, cool, careful, tactful, unruffled and all that. He must be alive to his responsibility. He must expect rebuffs. He must be honest, fearless, sincere.

John Lind's friends say he is all that. His enemies concede that he is every bit of it. President Wilson was certain that John Lind would meet all requirements, and so he sent to St. Paul for him.

John Lind is a former Governor of Minnesota. Years after he had served his first term, the Democrats nominated him again. They wanted him badly, and in the convention mentioned the name of nobody else.

But Lind was on his way to Alaska. He refused to turn back to accept the nomination. He refused to say yes or no. They had disregarded his wishes back home concerning a county option plank in the platform, and he scornfully said nothing to their overtures to come back and be Governor.

Weeks passed. Election time drew near. Politicians in Minnesota were certain that Lind would run. Who ever refused a gubernatorial nomination with certain victory to result from it?

Lind's Refusal Firm.

But when Lind got back, he broke his silence with a firm refusal. He would have none of the Governorship. And it being too late for the Democrats to rally around anyone else, the Republican Eberhardt won out.

It is the same calm, imperturbable John Lind for whom President Wilson invented a job as his personal representative. An unusual job it was, and President Wilson looked about for an unusual man to fill it. He decided that his friend John Lind was the man.

John Lind comes naturally by his impassiveness. He was born in Sweden and came to America a boy of 11, when his mother and father decided, like hundreds of other Swedes, to move to the new country and try to find their fortunes in the great Northwest. They came over and moved into their log cabin at Goodhue, Minn.

John Lind went to the common schools in his home town until he was 17. Then he taught school himself, saving his money that he might enter the University of Michigan. Then he practiced law, got married, moved to Minneapolis, held the job of receiver in a land office, went to Congress, lost out for re-election after three terms, served as lieutenant and quartermaster in the Twelfth Minnesota Volunteers during the war with Spain, ran for Governor and was defeated, all before 1898.

But when he came back from the war, the pleased Democrats named him as their candidate for Governor, and won with him. All Minnesota knew him by that time as a calm, self-contained, capable, good-hearted lawyer who never beat about the bush and who usually managed to call the other fellow's bluff. Out in Minnesota they like that kind of fellow.

Takes Defeat Calmly.

In 1900, a bad year for Democrats, he was beaten for re-election. John Lind took his defeat calmly. He just stuck around, practiced law, ran for Congress again, and was elected. After retirement here, he worked plainly and simply and prosperously until President Wilson, knowing him for a worker and a plain-talking, hard-fisted person, sent for him to go to Mexico. It was in the interim, about 1910, that he refused the offer of Minnesota Democrats to make him Governor again.

Mr. Lind is a man of action, cool-headed, alert, and a fighter; but above all he is silent and inscrutable. It is this quality which is going to stand him in good stead in the present situation, and it is the quality which no doubt proved very forceful in moving President Wilson to appoint him.

In all the words of criticism of Mr. Lind's mission to Mexico—and there have been many to criticise the President's course—there has been no hint of dissatisfaction with the personal qualities of the man. It is pointed out that Mr. Lind's mission in Mexico will fail. He is going to tell President Huerta that President Wilson disapproves of him and his government. But none has said that it will fail because of his personality, and it is certain that it will not fail because the President's representative talks too much. If it is to be a game of bluff, John Lind is the man to play it.

Webster's Old Home Restored by Society

Preparations Are Made for Celebration of Rehabilitation of Birthplace of Statesman.

FRANKLIN, N. H., Aug. 16.—The ancient New Hampshire farmhouse in which Daniel Webster was born has been reset on its old foundations and restored to look as it did in the eighteenth century when Webster was a small boy, and preparations have been made to celebrate its rehabilitation. It is in the town of Franklin, and the celebration will take place August 28.

It is expected that President Wilson will attend and deliver an address. Samuel W. McCall, former Congressman from Massachusetts, who was the principal speaker at the hundredth anniversary of Webster's graduation from Dartmouth College, will speak.

Coffee Tastes Cause Break in Family

Wife Liked Hers Strong, Husband Preferred It Weak, so She Entered Suit.

ALLENTOWN, PA., Aug. 16.—Black coffee and the high cost of living wrecked the romance of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Hauser, of Catasauqua, who were married three years ago, when he was 63 and she was 43, each embarking in matrimony the second time. The wife, Zenobia, has started divorce proceedings.

Mrs. Hauser says she was used from life with her first husband to good black coffee. Hauser wanted his coffee as weak as dishwater, and also objected to the bills she ran up at the store for her favorite beverage. The rackets that followed got on her nerves to such an extent that she desires to resume the state of single blessedness.

The court allowed her $6 a week temporary alimony.

State Has Turkey Farm to Cut Price

Ohio Goes Into Poultry Business When Cost of Thanksgiving Birds Soar.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, Aug. 16.—The State of Ohio is going into the turkey raising business. Kind o' forced into it, as it were, because of the high price of the favored Thanksgiving bird and the demand from State institutions for the bird.

The experiment was tried out a little the last year, and so successful did it prove that this year practically in all of the State institutions where any chickens are kept turkeys have been added.

The price of turkeys has been gradually soaring until they have become almost too expensive for even the State of Ohio to buy, and rather than permit the wards of the State to go hungry on Thanksgiving Day the employees of the different institutions began the work of hatching them.

Rivals David Harum As a Horse Trader

But Youth Is Forced to Pay Back Money He Got for a 'Frozen Tail.'

INDIANAPOLIS, Aug. 16.—William H. Schmidt, 17, a horse trader, was directed to give back $70 he accepted from Tom Cavanaugh for a "frozen tail" horse, and return the horse to Tom Shroyer, a liveryman, when his case was heard in court.

Schmidt was charged with false pretenses, in that he represented the horse to have a useful and active fly chaser. As a matter of fact, the swatting appendage was merely ornamental and utterly useless. Schmidt said he did not know the horse had a broken tail.

"Why that horse was as helpless as a baby," asserted Mrs. Cavanaugh. "We had to carry along a fly brush as well as a buggy whip everywhere we went."

Returns $1,000 Gems And Gets $1 Reward

Laundry Girl Is Not Even Thanked When She Returns Diamonds.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—For returning $1,000 worth of jewelry to its owner, Miss Ella Veronica Shea, of No. 969 Putnam avenue, Brooklyn, was rewarded with a dollar.

Miss Shea works in a laundry. While unpacking a laundry bag received from Mrs. I. Rodberg, of No. 635 Decatur street, she found four diamond rings and a diamond lavalliere.

"The shock which Mrs. Rodberg got when she received the jewelry was so great she forgot to thank me," said Miss Shea yesterday. "I had scarcely got back to the office when a man came running after me with an envelope in which was a note of thanks and—a dollar."

MORE THAN 300 BILLS PASSED BY LEGISLATURE; GOVERNOR LAUDS WORK

Act for Equalization of Taxes Is Regarded of Supreme Importance, Meaning Millions of Added Revenue to Ga. Each Year.

Measure Was Passed Only After One of Most Dramatic Fights General Assembly Has Known. Will Revolutionize System.

The 1913 session of the General Assembly of Georgia, which adjourned Thursday night, passed more than three hundred bills. Of these more than 250 were local bills, designed to relieve conditions existinfi in individual counties, and not operative in any other county. The remaining ones were general bills and local bills of general application.

Practically all of the measures have been engrossed and sent to Governor Slaton's office, and need only the signature of the Chief Executive of the State to become laws.

Governor Slaton has already signed some of the more important bills. He signed the Lipscomb-Miller-Anderson tax bill, to be known as the Lipscomb act, within a day after it passed the House, and Friday he signed the bill giving mothers equal rights with fathers to the custody of minor children.

Other bills received the official O. K. Saturday, but the great majority of them will not be signed until the coming week.

Of the 50 or more general bills that passed both branches of the Legislature, 19 are of importance, and their effect will be generally felt throughout the State.

Governor Praises Work.

They have been praised by Governor Slaton, Speaker Burwell, of the House, and President Anderson, of the Senate, as comprising one of the best Legislatures the State has had since the Civil War. They have passed five tax measures that will revolutionize the taxation system of the State, and add millions to the revenues; they have raised the standard of physicians in the State and centralized the control of practicing doctors; they have heard the pleas of Georgia mothers and enacted a law that places her on a par with the father and recognizes her ability to care for her own child; they have established a home to care for the wayward girls of the State, and they have shown their friendship to the cause of higher education by passing an appropriation bill that carries large sums for the maintenance of the educational institutions of the State.

By far the most important measure passed by the House is the bill creating the office of State Tax Commissioner and county boards of tax assessors. This law has been characterized by veteran members of the House and Senate and by legislative experts as the best measure that has been passed in Georgia in 50 years.

It will revolutionize the taxation system of the State, and conservative estimates place the amount of revenue it will add to the funds of the State at $1,000,000 a year, sufficient to clear the State of debt and allow plenty of money to conduct the business of the Empire State of the South in a manner commensurate with her importance.

Four other tax bills that will bring in large sums, though the amounts can hardly be estimated until the laws are tried, were passed—the automobile tax bill, the inheritance tax bill, the special tax on bottling works and the occupation tax on corporations.

Inheritance Tax Important.

The inheritance tax alone is expected to bring into the treasury hundreds of thousands of dollars.

The bill providing for the State Tax Commissioner developed the hardest fight. Opponents of tax reform in the House, where the bill was first introduced by Lipscomb of Clarke County, led by Sheppard of Sumter and Stovall of Elbert County, succeeded in defeating the original bill and securing the passage of what was known as the Sheppard substitute, providing for county boards of equalization only. This measure went to the senate, where it was defeated and the substitute prepared that eventually became a law, by Senators Miller and Anderson. Ten Senate substitute, with its provisions for a State Tax Commissioner and the county boards of assessors, came back to the House during the last days of the session.

The fight that developed was one of the most thrilling and dramatic the House has ever seen. During the time the bill was under consideration by the Senate, tax reform members of the House had converted many of their original enemies. Efforts to destroy the bill by substituting amendments were defeated, and the bill was brought to a vote during the latter part of last week.

To Speaker Burwell, of Hancock County, belongs the credit for the passage of the bill. From the time the original Lipscomb bill was introduced he worked hard to get the bill through, and when the Senate substitute came to a vote, and Henderson of Jones County, a staunch friend of tax revision, tied up the vote after a thrilling ride to the Capitol in an auto, Speaker Burwell made the measure a law by casting his vote in favor of it.

Features of Tax Bill.

The bill is modeled after similar laws that are now on the statute books of a number of Northern States, where it has worked satisfactorily. Its main provisions are as follows:

It creates the office of State Tax Commissioner at $2,500 a year, and County Boards of Assessors.

The Tax Receivers of the counties shall open their books February 1 and close them May 1.

In ten days after the books are closed the Tax Receivers shall present the returns to the county boards.

The county board is to be composed of three members, appointed by the Board of County Commissioners or the Ordinary.

The county board must examine the tax returns and equalize them.

The taxpayer, if dissatisfied with the decision of the county board, can ask for reconsideration and arbitration. The differences shall be adjusted by three arbitrators.

The county boards shall complete their work by July 1.

The State Tax Commissioner shall carefully examine all tax returns submitted by the county boards and recommend decreases or increases.

The State Tax Commissioner shall carefully investigate all taxation questions and recommend laws to the General Assembly.

The Tax Commissioner shall visit annually all the counties of the State and investigate conditions.

If the county board is dissatisfied with the decision of the State Tax Commissioner upon its returns, it may appeal for arbitration, to be conducted the same as when a taxpayer appeals to the county board.

Governor Slaton already has appointed a State Tax Commissioner, Judge J. C. Hart, and the formation of the county boards probably will be begun at once. The law becomes operative January 1, 1914.

The medical practices act abolishes the old system of a separate board for each school of medicine, and creates a joint board to pass upon the physicians who apply for permission to practice in Georgia.

The bill for the establishment of a home for wayward girls, to be known as the Georgia Industrial Home for Girls, carries with it an appropriation of $10,000. The original bill carried a $30,000 appropriation, but was cut $10,000 in the House and $10,000 more in the Senate.

Though the Legislature passed many measures that are recognized as good, there were many other good bills that failed to get through. Many of them, however, were held over until the next session for various reasons, and may be passed then. Among them were a number of child labor bills, measures designed to remedy working conditions, the vital statistics bill, compulsory education bill, and others.

In addition to aiding in the fight for tax reform, in which they were strong factors, the Fulton County delegation—Blackburn, Smith and Cochran—succeeded in getting through three bills that directly affect Atlanta. They are a bill creating a new charter for the city, a bill establishing municipal courts, and a bill providing an additional Superior Court judge for the Atlanta Circuit. The three Fulton County men, Blackburn and Smith especially, were recognized as being among the leaders in the House, and were in the forefront in the fight for all the reform legislation that was passed.

Important Bills Made Laws by 1913 Legislature

Here are the most important bills that passed both houses of the General Assembly, and which become laws upon receiving the signature of the Governor:

To provide for a State Tax Commissioner and County Boards of Tax Assessors.

A "blue sky" measure, to regulate the sale of stocks and bonds.

To allow freight trains to run on Sunday.

To increase the occupation tax on corporations.

To place a special tax on bottling works.

The general appropriation bill.

To provide an inheritance tax.

To regulate the practice of medicine and raise the standard of physicians.

To create a new charter for the city of Atlanta.

To create municipal courts in Atlanta and abolish the Justice courts.

To provide an additional Superior Court judge for the Atlanta Circuit.

To provide for the permanent registration of voters.

To establish and maintain a Home for Wayward Girls.

To enable judges to grant charters in vacation.

To create a Western & Atlantic Commission to investigate the release of the State Road.

To give the mother equal rights with the father in the custody of minor children.

To provide a tax of $5 on automobiles.

To create a commission to investigate the advisability of the State publishing its own school books.

To allow trial judges to place persons convicted of misdemeanors on probation, and to provide county probation officers.

To provide for the popular election of United States Senators.

Off in Canoe on 7,000-Mile Trip

Couple to Make Record Cruise

Argonauts to Visit the South

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Green, who have started from Staten Island to cruise to New Orleans and back in a canoe.

© by Underwood and Underwood.

Yearning to See Dixie and West Prompts Young Pair to Make Hazardous Journey.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—"We have never been South," said Mrs. Walter Green half to herself. There was yearning in her tone.

"Nor West," said Walter Green, who heard her.

They sat in their canoe as it drifted with the tide, their faces turned away from their Staten Island home, toward the South.

Mrs. Green looked at her husband with a quick inspiration.

"Let's go," she said, eagerly.

And so they planned within a few minutes the 7,000-mile canoe trip on which they started yesterday and which will take them not only South, but West, revealing to them the grandeur of the Mississippi, the warmth of the Gulf Coast and the stretch of the Atlantic Ocean. The two young persons, enthusiastic canoeists both of them, and inveterate campers, will be away from their home for ten months or more in the course of the journey.

Will Call on Wilson.

They started up the Hudson River, going on the first stage of the journey to Yonkers. Thence they will go through the Erie Canal to Buffalo, through Lake Erie to Ashtabula, then through Canal and Rochester, Pa. From there they will go up the Ohio to Pittsburg, down the Ohio to Cairo, up the Mississippi to St. Louis, down the Mississippi to New Orleans, across the Gulf of Mexico and along the coast to St. James City, Fla., through the Everglades and a river or two to Palm Beach, up Indian River to Jacksonville, along the Atlantic coast to Chesapeake Bay, up to Washington to call on President Wilson and present a letter from Mayor Gaynor. Last they will go by canal to Delaware River, Raritan Canal an river to New York Bay and home.

A crowd cheered the gay young couple at their start. A party of suffragettes, admirers of Mrs. Green for her daring, presented her with a "Votes for Women" pennant, which her craft will fly. The life-saving crew of Clifton, to Greens' home, gave them a pennant, which also became a part of the equipment.

Light Equipment Carried.

In order to make the canoe as light as possible, they took only four boxes containing provisions, camp equipage and clothing, and two large duffel bags containing a small circular tent and bedding. All was covered with canvas, which will be used as floor of the tent.

It is the intention of the couple to put into a city, town or village each night, pitch their tent and sleep for eight hours. When the stores they carry run out, they will get new supplies at the places where they will stop.

The Greens are anticipating with the greatest eagerness the portion of their trip that will take them to the South, about the gulf and the South Atlantic coast.

NEW MEMBERS' PET BILLS DYING IN COMMITTEE

Recently Elected Congressmen Have Hard Time Telling Why District Doesnt Profit.

By JONATHAN WINFIELD.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—The new members of the House—there are approximately 150 of them—are beginning to find out something about the intricacies of legislation at Washington, and just now they are busy explaining away a bunch of campaign promises. The new member isn't getting anywhere with pet legislation and he is a sorely distressed individual.

Nearly 7,000 bills and resolutions have been introduced in the House of Representatives since President Wilson called the Sixty-third Congress into extra session early in April. About one in a hundred have received consideration, and the ratio bids fair to be maintained during the remainder of the extra session owing to a rule of the Democratic caucus which binds the House committees not to report out legislation before the regular session, which begins in November.

In consequence of this unexpected caucus rule, the new member who came to Congress leaving many promises behind is up against it. His hands are tied; he may introduce bills and resolutions to his heart's content, but they won't get anywhere for months, and perhaps not then. It is embarrassing to make explanations, especially when a statesman beat out some other fellow by promising big things for the district.

All Have Horde of Bills.

The average new member, as soon as he reaches the House chamber, walks up to the bill basket and drops therein a bill providing that the town of Jonesville shall have a $25,000 postoffice. He follows this with a dozen or so bills proposing that certain worthy pensioners in his district shall have their annual pensions increased. Then he comes along with the crying complaint that the little Bee River needs about $50,000 or $100,000 to improve navigation in order that the towns of Squash Center and Hickory Hollow may have increased transportation facilities.

Congressman Newcomer then passed the word along to the newspaper correspondent representing the home paper that he has introduced the foregoing bill and will push it to an early passage. The people back home are duly elated and begin to get glad that they retired the former Congressman and sent so active a successor in his place.

In a short time the new member drops around to the committee to which his various pet kind bills have been referred. Without desiring to appear too solicitous, he gently inquires when he may expect the committee to get together and take up the pressing need of his district. The chairman, with equal gentleness, breaks the news that it will be absolutely impossible to do anything for the present.

Caucus Rules Forbid.

In the first place, says the chairman, a quorum of the committee isn't in town. In the second place, the caucus has forbidden the report of anything except currency, tariff reform and pressing appropriations bills or resolutions at this session. The new member is absolutely unable to see the justice of such a mandate, even though he may have been a member of the caucus. He thought the rule would apply to the other fellow, not himself. There is general woe and lamentation.

It is the same old story, told over in about 50 different ways. Each new member has a peculiar complaint to make and peculiar local needs to satisfy. There is nothing doing, however, and the recruit statesman is told that he will have to wait until the regular session rolls around.

TAKES PRIZED BEES FOR VACATION IN MOUNTAINS

HOOD RIVER, OREG., Aug. 16.—W. W. Dakin, who owns the largest apiary here, left for his vacation in the forest reserves above Parkdale. Mr. Dakin took two hives of bees to the mountains to gather honey from fireweed in the burned-over regions.

"I am going to try for some of the prizes offered at the State fair," said Mr. Dakin.

LIVING DEATH IN ITALY IS FACED BY CHARLTON

Young American Travels in Steerage, but Is Confident of an Early Acquittal.

son of Paul Charlton, law adviser of the Bureau of Insular Affairs, and former President Taft's classmate at Yale. He has stood by his son through all the fight against extradition.

Extradition Fight Begins.

The fight began the day after the confession appeared. It seemed at first that the young man surely must go back to Italy to face trial, and every legal step was taken against it. His friends, led by his father, took the position that he could not be extradited, because Italy had always refused, under the extradition treaty of 1868, to return Italian subjects to the United States to answer for crimes committed here.

They lost this fight, when Italy made a request for the prisoner. The fight was resumed, and Charlton's father entered the insanity plea, in a habeas corpus suit. Losing this in the lower court, the father appealed to the Supreme Court, in which, about a month ago, the opinion of Justice Lurton was handed down, to the effect that Charlton was subject to extradition.

Officers arrived in the United States from Italy last week to take Charlton back for trial. Conflicting reports have been spread regarding the young man's health, certain physicians contending that he is the victim of pulmonary tuberculosis and others that he is in perfect health.

Newspaper reports, written by men who have seen him, say that he appears healthy. He has been allowed an unusual degree of freedom while being held in the Hudson County jail, being permitted to take walks, automobile drives and two hours of exercise each day. Sometimes he was taken to picture shows.

Charlton Expects Acquittal.

Charlton is cheerful. He has expressed the opinion that he will be acquitted in spite of the evidence against him, and has told his father and mother and other friends as well that he will be back home for Christmas dinner.

The trial will be held in Milan some time early in the fall.

Appeals have been made to Secretary of State Bryan, and an attempt even has been made to reach the ear of President Wilson to present the extradition of the young man. His father has stopped at nothing to save his son. But all attempts have proved fruitless. Secretary Bryan, Judge Charlton's personal friend of long standing, has expressed his sympathy, but declared that it was impossible for him to do anything for the son.

The plans for the defense will take the form of an inquisition to bring out the moral and mental traits of the murdered woman, besides the consideration of Charlton's sanity. Attorneys will try to show that there was great provocation for the killing. It is hoped in this that the sentence of Charlton will not be the short-living death at solitary confinement in an Italian dungeon, but a more tempered punishment.

Nance Believed Mad When He Slew Wife

Relatives Declare He Was Mentally Unbalanced When He Left Knoxville Friday.

KNOXVILLE, Aug. 16.—George R. Nance is believed by his wife's relatives in Knoxville to have been insane when he killed her in a hotel at Hamlet, N. C., yesterday. They recite incidents connected with his former residence in this city that cause them to suspect he was mentally unbalanced.

At one time Nance left home and his wife did not know of his whereabouts until she received a cablegram from him in Liverpool, England. Soon thereafter he came here and they remained until they went to Greenville, S. C., last March, where his wife was manager of a sanitarium operated by a company with hospitals in various cities. For four years she was head of this company's hospital at Los Angeles. Her last station had been at Chattanooga, where her local relatives thought she was yesterday.

Mrs. Nance was born in Sweetwater, Tenn., and had many relatives over East Tennessee. She married Nance in Alexandria, Va., nine years ago, and they had no children. Mrs. J. T. Steele, of Jacksonville, Fla.; Mrs. B. T. Baker, of Alexandria, Va.; Mrs. Jerry Reagan, of Portland, Oreg., and Mrs. J. A. McCampbell, of Friendsville, Tenn., are her sisters.

Autos Are Barred By Canadian Island

Residents of Prince Edward Will Not Allow Machines to Enter Province.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—"It seems strange in these days when automobiles are seen on every street, on every country road that there should be one section on the American continent where these vehicles are positively prohibited," said R. A. Dewey, of Toronto.

"Recently the Canadian Parliament enacted legislation to permit the use of self-propelling carriages in the Province of Prince Edward Island, but it is by no means certain that the legislation will be effective. There is every indication that the law will never be put in force because a plebiscite on the question was taken throughout the island when the annual district school meetings were held.

"The returns that have come thus far indicate that the farmers are strenuously opposed to allowing automobiles on Prince Edward Island. More than 90 per cent of the population voted no on the proposition, and in some of these places the vote in the negative was unanimous.

Wealthy Father at Last Finds Daughter

Search of 38 Years Ends In Astonishment for His Policeman Son-in-Law.

POTTSVILLE, PA., Aug. 16.—Anthony Lloyd, a policeman, living on $65 a month, was surprised when John Strause, aged 76, walked into his home and embraced Mrs. Lloyd, who turns out to be his only child, lost to him for more than 38 years.

Strause is worth $200,000 and lives in Laramie City.

Many years ago, after he returned from service in the Seventh Pennsylvania Cavalry of the Civil War, he placed his daughter, Emma, in the charge of relatives and went West. Though wealthy, he was unable to find any trace of her until his sudden meeting.

PASTOR SHEDS HIS COLLAR.

GRANITE CITY, Aug. 16.—A new pace has been set by the Rev. W. W. Brown, pastor of the First Baptist Church at Granite City, who tells the men to come without collar or neckties and with sleeves rolled up if that will conduce to their comfort. He promises to do likewise.

WAITS FOR WIFE WITH A HEARSE; FINDS HER ALIVE

Husband Who Got Message of Her Death Overjoyed to See Her Alight From Train

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—Heinrich Dietz became the happiest man in Chicago yesterday, and his condition in this respect is likely to be chronic. It all happened in a few seconds. From the depths of woe Mr. Dietz was raised to an ecstatic joy that almost took his breath away.

Dietz is a Russian who came to this country about a year ago, and earned money slowly and saved it until he could rent and furnish a small apartment at No. 529 Hartland court. Then he saved some more and sent a steamship ticket to his wife. She embarked for America. Dietz expected her to arrive here yesterday.

On Thursday night K. W. Kempf, the ticket agent at No. 120 North La Salle street, handed Dietz a telegram from Philadelphia reading:

"Your wife Eva died to-day—on 9:40 B. and O. Comm's Immigration."

That message dropped a somber curtain on Dietz's happiness. To cap his misery, he had almost no money. Kempf in sympathy lent him $10 and gave him a note to P. Hursen, an undertaker. Hursen read the note, then returned the $10 to Dietz and sent a hearse with him to the La Salle street depot.

Dietz was mournfully watching the train when suddenly he saw a plump, rosy cheeked young woman leave it. With a shout he sprang forward and Mr. and Mrs. Dietz were clasped in each other's arms.

Mrs. Dietz had sent a telegram as her husband had requested, but the operator had written "died" instead of "arrived."

AFFINITY EARLE ABOUT TO LOSE 'DEAREST' DORA

Third Wife of Famous Wooer, Declared "Sweetest of Them All," Files Suit.

TELLS STORY OF MEETING

Did Not Know of Long Marital Record of Poet Until She Had Joined Him.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—Dora of the laughing brown eyes, third wife and unnumbered affinity of Ferdinand Pinney Earle, New York poet, artist and record wooer—described by him at the time of their marriage in June, 1911, as "the dearest, sweetest and loveliest of them all"—said to-day that she is about to seek her freedom.

She said she actually has begun suit in New York for an absolute divorce, basing her action on evidence she says she has obtained of Earle's behavior on the Continent since she parted from him in March.

Mrs. Earle is now only 25, twelve years younger than Earle. Her maiden name was Helen Theodora Sidford. From her father, an English architect, she inherited artistic tastes and is an artist of pronounced talent. She is a very attractive young woman.

Lived at "Earle's Folly."

The original story that reached America of her relations with Earle narrated a meeting in the fields, a walk home hand in hand, swift and ardent wooing, marriage within the month and a start on a tour of the world, which wound up prematurely in the country home in Monroe, Orange County, known as "Earle's Folly."

Her story to-day sets right much of that early fiction, for the meeting with Earle seems to have been conventional.

"How did you come to give yourself to a man of Earle's matrimonial record?" was asked.

"I knew nothing of his past until after our marriage," she replied. "Whatever his reputation in America, I had lived in a quiet English town and had never heard of his antecedents. After our marriage his life story was cabled from America to the London newspapers. Clippings were sent to me on the Continent on our honeymoon by my mother.

He Softened the Blow.

"It was a terrible shock to find that I had been so utterly deceived, but I accepted the explanation and excuses offered by Mr. Earle and his assurances that I would never have anything of which to complain.

"After our wedding we spent two months on the Continent. In September, 1911, three months following the wedding, we went to America, and lived happily at his place in Monroe, N. Y. Our first baby was born there in April, 1912. I remained with him in America until last January, and then came here to visit my mother, with whom I have since lived. It was arranged that Mr. Earle would come here for the summer.

"At the time of my return I had not the slightest expectation that our relations would go wrong. We kept in constant correspondence. He arrived here in March, remained two days and then went to the Continent. My second baby was born here April 20. Her father has never seen her.

"Soon after he went from here in March information reached me which left me no option except to prepare divorce proceedings. He has appealed to me to abandon them, but that is quite impossible after his conduct as disclosed to me."

Mrs. Earle declined to anticipate by publication the specific evidence she is reserving for the court. Thus the name of the co-respondent is withheld. Judging from Mrs. Earle's convincing manner of speech, she thinks she has ample ground for her petition.

Earle's Love Affairs.

Earle's love affairs were first brought to public notice in 1908 when he took to his Monroe home Miss Julia Kuttner, and informed his wife that the newcomer was his affinity and soul-mate. The rightful Mrs. Earle at that time was formerly Miss Emilie Marie Fischbacher, daughter of a bookseller on the banks of the Seine in Paris, whom Earle had married in 1903 and by whom he had a son, Harold Erwin.

Mrs. Earle departed for France, with a reported money settlement, and obtained a divorce there. Earle, Miss Kuttner and Miss Kuttner's mother went to Europe and domiciled themselves in Venice. Their departure from Monroe was hastened by threats of neighbors there to punish Earle without process of law.

Within a few months Mrs. Kuttner decided a marriage was necessary and a ceremony was performed at the British consulate. Soon afterward a son was born and named Edmond Erwin Earle. In 1910 the second wife sued for the anulment of the marriage on the ground that the ceremony had taken place before Earle was free under French law.

She also charged cruelty, especially following the birth of the child. After long consideration the Westchester County Court granted the petition of annulment and declared the child legitimate.

Earle had not defended either suit, but while the courts were trying to dispose of the second he sailed to Europe with Miss Gertrude Buell Dunn, a bright-eyed young woman from Chicago, who had "advanced" ideas. It was announced that together they would work out and publish a new philosophy on the ideal relations of the sexes. Their zeal subsided and they parted without scandal.

TOWN BLACKLISTS 85 DEMON RUM'S SLAVES

CHESTER, PA., Aug. 16.—Leading citizens of this city are lauding the blacklisting of habitual drunkards, which prevents them purchasing intoxicants in saloons, as a far-reaching temperance victory. The list contains, according to the police, the names of 85 persons who have made no effort to free themselves of the drink habit.

'Kneeless Stocking' Arrives

Fair Wearer Defies Hot Weather

Men's Socks Adorn Girl's--Ahem

Miss Bunee Wyde, pretty actress at Forsyth last week, who shows how comfortable she is in new "kneeless stockings."

Miss Bunee Wyde Is Bold Apostle of New Style and She's a Good Proselyter.

Miss Bunee Wyde said she should worry. Everybody else was swearing at the beastly weather whose heat left no peace in mind or body.

"You see?" she said naively, and hoisted her skirts a wee bit beyond the conventional height. She was wearing half hose. Men's socks.

She had brought to Atlanta a new fashion. Very frankly she announced her belief that the short socks are good to wear, much, ever so much, more comfortable than the long stocking; allow much, ever so much, freedom of the limbs, and are altogether desirable. And to her very best friends she minded not a bit to show them that she indeed wore them.

Everybody in Atlanta laughed at Miss Wyde and with Miss Wyde at the Forsyth Theater last week, where she played with Franker Wood in a little act, "Good Night." Nobody picked her for the bold apostle of a new fashion in wearing apparel, though. But she is, and a pretty good proselyter at that. She talked the new fad very generally in Atlanta while she was here.

She calls them the "kneeless stocking," though. "Half hose" has a cold, unfamiliar, masculine tone to it. And she makes the prophecy that the kneeless stocking will be popular.

"Garters?" said she. "Certainly not. I don't need 'em. Up New York lots of the girls wear silk garters or men's hose supporters with these, but under certain desirable physical features, you won't need anything to hold them up. They just stay.

"Of course you couldn't wear these with a slit skirt, and some might blush to put them on with a tight skirt that clings when you mount a street car or even a sidewalk curbing. Still, there is nothing immodest in wearing kneeless stockings. They are comfortable and convenient.

"Well, you needn't look if you don't want to," she pertly adds.

Dog Carries Mail 10 Miles for Master

Faithful Canine Postman Prefers Making His Trips Between Sundown and Dark.

COVINGTON, IND., Aug. 16.—Charles Keller, south of this city, owns a dog which carries letters from Mr. Keller's home to Philip Keller's home, ten miles. When Mr. Keller wishes to communicate with his father he fastens the letter on the dog's neck and instructs him to deliver it.

The trip is always begun between sundown and dark, as this seems to be the time of day that the dog likes to travel best. The following evening the dog will return to his master with a reply.

Human skulls containing teeth filled with gold were among the interesting discoveries made in Ecuador.

WOMEN RUN TOWN WHERE MEN FAILED

For Twenty Years Efforts to Put Woodland, Colo., on the Map Were Useless.

WOODLAND PARK, COLO., Aug 16.—The women of Woodland Park have started a movement to put the town on the map of Colorado's summer resorts.

Twenty years ago the men of the town tried it and their efforts ended a few years ago in the best building lots selling for taxes.

When the men of two decades ago thought the town offered great inducements, they voted $20,000 in bonds and built a water system and an artificial lake in the center of the town.

There were bandstands built in the woods around the town, and a band was maintained for two or three summers. Then the bottom fell out.

The other day the waterworks bonds became due. The men who had been the prime movers in the boom of twenty years ago were discouraged and their daughteds and wives took up the affairs of the town.

They organized the Woodland Park Improvement Association. The association succeeded in having the bonded indebtedness compromised for $6,000 and the town now has the money to pay the bonds and improve the water system.

The women have decided to have a series of "tag" days and entertainments by which they will raise funds to put in street lights, street signs, lights at the Colorado Midland station and other improvements.

BOY FINANCIER FIGHTING FOR PRISON PAROLE

Earl W. Butler, of Canton, Ill., Seeks to Escape Penalty for Banking Methods.

CANTON, ILL., Aug. 16.—Earl W. Butler, the boy banker, whose career in frenzied finance wrecked two banks in Fulton and one in Peoria County in 1910, and ended by landing Butler in the Joliet penitentiary with an indeterminate sentence of from one to three years, again is making strenuous efforts through his attorneys and friends, to obtain his release from the State Board of Pardons.

So far the boy banker has not made much progress toward getting his freedom, because of the position taken by former State's Attorney W. S. Jewell, under whose incumbency Butler was convicted of embezzlement in connection with the Ellisville bank, and who is supported in his view of the matter by the present State's Attorney, M. P. Rice.

Butler was convicted in the Fulton County Circuit Court in October, 1911, over a year after his three banks closed their doors, and he was taken to Joliet in November of the same year. He has served nearly two years in the penitentiary and has another year to remain there, if his sentence is carried out to the limit. In addition to imprisonment, the verdict in his case imposed a fine of $2,800, but it is the expectation that he will try to schedule out of this obligation.

Predicts Dancing Is To Be Part of Church

Dr. G. Stanley Hall, President of Clark University, Declares Grace Should Be Encouraged.

GREELEY, COLO., Aug. 16.—That dancing is one of the best forms of exercise that is possible to take and that eventually it will become a part and parcel of the church when the grosser forms of it have been eliminated, was the statement made by Dr. G. Stanley Hall, president of Clark University.

"Dancing in itself as practiced in ancient times is what kept the Greeks and Romans healthful and graceful. The dances of those days were far different from the kind which are popular now and made strong men and graceful women.

"Rhythm is the basis of all physical movement, and I am convinced that this form of amusement, under the proper supervision, will become not only an adjunct to the church, which is proper and right, but to the schools also."

Trees of Ice Age Found in Illinois

Species Have Been Preserved Through Thousands of Years.

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—Members of the International Phytographic Society who made studies among the hills and cliffs about Lake Bluff this week discovered there species of trees and shrubs that have been retained in the region since the Ice Age. This species, the Europeans found, have been preserved through thousands of years.

The poplar and creeping juniper, examples of the Ice Age flora, rarely found in this part of the temperate zone, were seen flourishing vigorously beside the beech, birch, oak and maple, which followed them in the normal succession. Lake Bluff is said to be "farthest south" for the creeping juniper.

PASTOR POSING AS A DRUG USER GETS VICE DATA

Visits Omaha Stores and Secures Evidence for the Grand Jury. Made Up Like Tramp.

OMAHA, Aug. 16.—In order to more effectively carry on war against vice of all kinds, the Rev. A. E. Hess, pastor of the Hirst Memorial Young People's Church, of this city, has been disguising himself as a "rough-neck" dope fiend and scouring the haunts of the denizens of the underworld for proofs of lawbreaking to present to the Grand Jury.

His latest tour was through a number of drug stores suspected of selling "coke." For his disguise he secured the services of a professional costumer, and so good was his "make-up" that he now has in his possession a hatful of little wooden boxes, each containing a few grains of cocaine—each labeled with the time and place of purchase, and in many cases the name of the clerk who sold it.

"I was never so scared in my life as when I started out for the 'dope' drug stores," Mr. Hess. "I was 'made up' like a dope fiend tramp and I was afraid I would be recognized and quizzed.

"At the first drug store I entered twice before I raked up enough courage to ask for the cocaine. The first time I merely watched the traffic; and that was terrible enough. I saw a woman fairly weep in her plea for the drug she craved and for which she had not the purchase price.

MOTHER ENABLED TO SEE

Although 66 Years Old, She Travels From Home to Hospital All Alone.

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—Fifty years ago a little girl was stricken blind.

She was 16, and never had seen the man whom she later married. In her home at Hillsdale, Mich., she became the mother of eight children.

The father died a little later and they went out into the world, but the mother never had seen their faces.

The woman, now bent and feeble, is Mrs. Mary J. Welsh, and is back in her Hillsdale home, her sight restored. Mrs. Welsh during the last month has been in the Wesley Hospital here. The operation that gave her back her sight, surgeons say, was one of the most remarkable on record. It consisted in the removal of a cataract of fifty years standing.

A chaplain of the hospital, the Rev. M. W. Satterfield, delivered an address in Hillsdale several months ago. He told of the charitable work done by the hospital. The white-haired blind woman heard him. She groped her way forward.

"Can you do anything for me?" she asked. "I only want to see my babies before I go. I have been praying."

A month ago the Methodist congregation took up a collection which made it possible for her to make the trip to Chicago.

In the Piano Business the Concern by Which All Others Are Measured Is the Phillips & Crew Company!

There's always One by which the Rest are Measured---

In every line of business there's unquestionably ONE that is generally accepted by ALL as being the Standard---the one by which ALL OF THE REST ARE MEASURED OR COMPARED.

So, ask any Piano Salesman what Atlanta Piano house he would like most to work for or to represent in the field---

Ask Piano purchasers what Piano Concern's lines are always mentioned in comparison, when other Pianos are being considered for purchase.

And then, ask yourself at what Store you'd rather select a Piano for use in your own home---

The answer cannot help but be in every instance the same, for the Phillips & Crew Company are the acknowledged Standard Piano concern in Atlanta---the Old and Reliable Piano House by which all others are Measured or Compared.

MORE THAN 200 Columbus SUFFRAGETTES INVADE STAID GEORGIA TOWN

Thomasville Has Its Quota of Women Who Demand the Ballot.

THOMASVILLE, Aug. 16.—The granting of a charter for a Woman's Suffrage Association in Georgia and the bobbing up of the suffragettes over the country generally is causing many towns to take an introspective view, so to speak, to ascertain if there are any of this new brand of women within their borders, and the result shows that while there may not be a great many avowedly calling themselves suffragettes, there are more in sympathy with the movement than the mind of the average man conceives to be the case.

That there should be suffragettes in other towns in Georgia seemed very probable, but that they should be found in Thomasville, which is regarded by the outside world as being eminently staid and conservative, never going wild over anything but baseball or fighting about anything but "Sis" Cow, seemed almost unbelievable, but they are here just the same.

This does not at all mean that the majority of the fair sex here are in sympathy with this new order of women who are fighting for the ballot. There is, however, a very fair sprinkling of them, who do not hesitate to assert their belief in the equal rights of woman, and they likewise acknowledge that they would enjoy taking a hand in the management of public affairs, to a certain extent at any rate.

Of course, there are a few of the more advanced in their ideas who even believe that they could run a town and would like to try it a while and show the male management in charge just how a sure enough town should look and how affairs would be managed with a female board at the head of things. When questioned as to what would be done in a town run by women in regard to holding Police Court, serving on juries, etc., the enthusiasm did not seem so marked, though little attention was paid to the query, it evidently being the idea that all unpleasant duties could be turned over to the mere men and only the "running" of affairs be reserved for those in charge.

As it will probably be a good long time before Thomasville will be run by a female management, at least openly, as they are often accused of being the power behind the throne, nobody is very much worried over it, but it is interesting to know just how the matter stands and whether the women of the South will ever go into this movement in earnest as they have in the West and parts of the North.

Timbermen Fight Over Debt; 1 Dead

W. C. Stamper and G. R. Keen End Dispute by Pistol Duel in Street at Blakely.

BLAKELY, Aug. 16.—W. C. Stamper and G. R. Keen, two well-known timbermen, had a pistol duel on the public square at 2:30 o'clock this afternoon, as a result of which Keen is dead with five bullet holes in his body.

Keen is said to have shot at Stamper twice and missed him. Stamper escaped unhurt, except a graze near the left eye.

The trouble grew out of a dispute over the division of the proceeds of a debt due to both of them by a common debtor.

Keen leaves a wife and several children.

Truck Growers to Organize in Tift

Object Is to Promote Growing and Marketing of Products.

TIFTON, Aug. 16.—Present indications are that not only the truck growers of Tift County will work in co-operation, but that all the truckers of South Georgia counties will co-operate in promoting the growing and marketing of trucking products.

Two melon and truck growers of Brooks County, M. L. Bowen, of Quitman, and A. J. Powell, of Dixie, were in Tifton this week and conferred with the Tifton Chamber of Commerce and a number of men engaged in trucking, inquiring as to the working of the Tift County Truckers' Association, with a view to forming a similar organization in Brooks County.

Mr. Bowen has been in the melon business for nearly twenty years and Mr. Powell is an expert at growing Irish potatoes.

TERRELL FARMER FIRES BULLET THROUGH HEAD

DAWSON, Aug. 16.—P. C. Calley, well-to-do Terrell County farmer and brother-in-law of Jesse Mercer, committed suicide at his country home near Dawson by shooting himself through the head. He left no note as to the cause, but despondency over money matters is believed to have been responsible.

Columbus Shows Healthy Increase

Nearly Half Million Gained on Tax Values of Property—Rate Was Reduced.

COLUMBUS, Aug. 16.—Tax Assessor Frank M. Sommerkamp, of Muscogee County, has completed his tax digest for 1913, which shows $22,769,804 compared to $22,508,202 in 1912, an increase for 1913 of $261,602.

When it is taken into consideration that the tax assesments this year in the city of Columbus were made at 75 per cent of the county assessment, while they have been made heretofore at the same, it will be seen that the county has made a remarkable showing. In other words, something like $14,000,000 worth of property has only been asssessed at 75 per cent of the assessment of last year. It is believed that the increase in values would have run far over half a million dollars.

The digest shows that there are 40 lawyers, 43 doctors, 17 dentists, 1 veterinary surgeon, 2 architects, 2 engineers. The dogs in the county are valued at $2,192.

DOUGHERTY TAX VALUES SHOW GOOD INCREASE

ALBANY, Aug. 16.—The total value of taxable property in Dougherty County, as shown by the figures just compiled by Tax Receiver J. H. Davis, shows an increase for 1913 over 1912 of $437,218. The comparative figures are as follows: Property values, 1913, $7,449,866. Property values, 1912, $7,012,648.

ALBANY MAY BUILD BIG CREMATORY PLANT

ALBANY, Aug. 16.—A crematory to dispose of Albany's garbage is a matter that is being seriously considered at the present time. Mayor Tarver has procured literature bearing on this subject and is giving the matter careful study.

With the idea of making Albany one of the most healthy and sanitary towns in the State, the city officials, led by Mayor Tarver, are considering this step.

GLENN TAKES CHARGE AS DEPUTY MARSHAL

VALDOSTA, Aug. 16.—L. H. Glenn, of Rochelle, who has been appointed Deputy United States Marshal for this district, to succeed R. L. Thomas, resigned, will make this city his headquarters. He is now here preparing to take over the office.

RHEUMATISM COMES FROM CONDITIONS WHICH CAN BE REMEDIED

But Local Applications on the Skin Cannot Get at the Cause of Your Suffering.

Just a bilious attack and a slight deposit of uric acid. Now calomel and similar mercurial purgatives do not dissolve and expel the uric acid sediment that forms from undigested, fermenting foods, and when this poisonous acid is not expelled it accumulates quickly, thickens the blood and settles in joints and muscles. The joints and muscles then become stiff.

An attempt to cure this rheumatism must be directed toward removing uric acid from blood and tissues, breaking up the crystalline urates already formed and preventing new deposits.

JACOBS' LIVER SALT is remarkably successful in the treatment of rheumatism. It dissolves uric acid out of the tissues, holds it in solution and expels it in the urine. It thoroughly cleanses the system of fermentation and purifies the blood. It will give prompt relief in all cases of rheumatism resulting from uric acid poisoning.

If you are suffering with rheumatism, try JACOBS' LIVER SALT immediately. It will relieve you more promptly and surely than anything else. Don't take an inferior substitute; some closely imitate the name, but none produces the same result. Insist on the genuine JACOBS' LIVER SALT, 25c. If your druggist can not supply you, full size jar mailed upon receipt of price, postage free. Made and guaranteed by Jacobs' Pharmacy Co., Atlanta.—(Advt.)

COURT HEARING OF INJUNCTION IS POSTPONED

Americus City Council Would Prevent Consolidation of Power Plant Companies.

AMERICUS, Aug. 16.—The postponement by Judge Z. A. Littlejohn in the Superior Court of the hearing of the injunction brought by the City Council of Americus against the Americus Power Company, the rival power company to the old Americus Gas and Electric Company, to keep the new company from consolidating with the old and advancing rates, is another link in the history of one of the most sensational municipal fights in Georgia.

Judge Littlejohn postponed the hearing until September 27 on the ground that certain important parties to the various transactions were not in Americus, though it is claimed that at least one of them was here.

City Attorney Hollis Fort and W. P. Wallis, for the city, and Shipp & Sheppard, for the Americus Power Company, are prepared for a grueling and continued fight when the hearing does occur.

It is thought that it will either kill forever the hopes of municipal ownership here or revive them anew. As this has been a hotly contested municipal issue, the interest in the hearing is wide and keen.

'Hoodoo Doctors' Ply 'Art' in Cordele

Raid Farms for Cotton Root to Brew Tea for Superstitious Negroes.

CORDELE, Aug. 16.—"Hoodoo" or "root" doctors, as they are commonly known, seem to be getting in some very effective work in Cordele, though if their identity should become known to the police the effect would very probably not be pleasing to them. For several nights these characters have devastated patches of cotton in the western part of the city, belonging to negroes. For the purpose of making cotton root tea, which is said to have a healing effect in a good many cases, they have pulled up row after row of cotton by the roots, cutting off the weeds and taking the roots with them.

UNKNOWN NEGRO STABS WHITE MAN AT RAY'S MILL

VALDOSTA, Aug. 16.—W. J. Williams, of Rays Mill, Ga., was probably fatally stabbed by an unknown negro in this city at 1 o'clock Friday morning. Williams and a companion passed a group of negro youths at the Georgia Southern and Florida passenger station and said something to the negroes which they resented. One of them plunged his knife into Williams' side and drew it across his breast, making a gash nine inches long and exposing the heart-action. Two negroes are in jail charged with complicity in the affair, but they claim that the youth who did the stabbing escaped.

MUSCOGEE JURY BOARD RESUMES WORK MONDAY

COLUMBUS, Aug. 16.—Muscogee County's Jury Commissioners will meet again Monday to take up the work they began sometime ago, but were forced to drop because of the continued illness of one of the members. It is expected that every effort will be made to increase the list, as there has been much complaint in recent years over the difficulty experienced in obtaining jurors, when only about one-fourth of the taxpayers and voters of the county have their names in the jury box. A remedy has been demanded often.

100 BALES OF COTTON SOLD AT TIFTON IN WEEK

TIFTON, Aug. 17.—The cotton market has opened up lively in Tifton this week and it is believed that the receipts will show a total of nearly 100 bales. There is quite a lot of old cotton in this section and this is opening fast as a result of the warm weather of the past several days. However, the bulk of the crop is young and it will be several weeks yet before the season is on in full.

ALBANY MAY HAVE RIVERSIDE DRIVE

ALBANY, Aug. 16.—That Mayor Tarver's idea of a beautiful winding driveway along the Flint River may terminate in some definite action seems probable. Superintendent of Parks Harmon has been asked to consider plans and offer suggestions. This has been done and he not only thinks the plan feasible but is a very ethusiastic advocate.

Dougherty's Jail Doing Double Duty

Ten Prisoners From Early County Added to Number Already Confined There.

ALBANY, Aug. 16.—Dougherty's new county jail is now doing double duty, containing not only the county prisoners and those of the city of Albany, but those of Early County, ten of whom have been brought here for safe-keeping.

Soon after the new jail was completed the city of Albany made arrangements for the city prisoners to be jailed and cared for in a portion of the county jail. The city barracks were small, insanitary and not safe in case of violent prisoners. That portion of the city hall formerly used as the guardhouse has been remodeled for offices. The county feeds all the city's prisoners and City Court is held each day in the detention corridor of the jail.

The Sheriff of Early County, realizing the condition of the new jail, selected this one for the safe-keeping of his prisoners while Early's jail is being remodeled.

Feast on Collards Instead of Cabbage

Thomas County Convicts Revel in Delicious "Greens"—Fresh Corn as Dessert.

THOMASVILLE, Aug. 16.—The convicts in the camps of Thomas County have had a change of diet from the cabbage which was so much enjoyed by them in the spring and early summer, and have transferred their allegiance to collard greens.

The report made by the superintendent of the county farm this week shows that for the month of July 1,250 head of these collards were fed to the convicts of the various camps, and as the average darky is proverbially fond of these greens they doubtless enjoyed their meals. With the collards were eaten 600 ears of green corn and several bushels of onions.

As vegetables are considered good summertime diet they probably went a long way toward preserving the health of the convicts as all the camps are reported in a healthy condition.

Cashier, Sentenced, Making Hard Fight

J. H. Cason's Lawyers Determined to Carry Case Through Highest State Courts.

MOULTRIE, Aug. 16.—Arguments in the motion for a new trial of J. H. Cason, now under five-year sentence in the penitentiary for embezzling nearly $8,000 from the Bank of Cresland, will be heard in Valdosta before Judge Thomas on September 8.

Attorneys for the former bank cashier state they will leave nothing undone to save their client and that the case will be fought through all the courts before it is concluded.

CORDELE COTTON MARKET SHOWS GREAT ACTIVITY

CORDELE, Aug. 16.—With more than 100 bales ginned and marketed, the cotton season is getting well under way in Cordele and within two weeks will be in full sway. The movement of the crop has already had a decided effect upon the business interests of the city and county, a general optimism prevailing among the people as a result. The opinion is common that the yield of cotton will surpass that of the past several years and that the quality of the staple will hold up unusually well, demanding good prices.

WOODMEN OF WORLD HOLD 'CUE AND PICNIC AT TY TY

TIFTON, Aug. 17.—Friday was Woodmen of the World Day in Ty Ty, nine miles west of Tifton, in Tift County, the choppers holding a big barbecue and basket picnic, between 1,500 and 2,000 people attending. Besides enjoying a good basket dinner and some of Jack Frost's barbecue, better than which there is none, those attending heard an excellent address by Hon. Roscoe Luke on the W. O. W. order and an address on general topics by Colonel Claude Payton, of Sylvester.

NEW TARIFF SCHEDULE WELCOMED BY SHIPPERS

COLUMBUS, Aug. 16.—Columbus tariff schedule No. 2, on which the Board of Trade has been working, has been received in the city and the merchants are prepared to take advantage of it at every opportunity. The new tariff schedule applies to all of the railroads entering the city.

MELROSE YOUTH UNDER BOND FOR FATAL STABBING

Harry Miller, 17 Years Old, Must Face Trial for Slaying Turpentine Man.

VALDOSTA, Aug. 16.—Hardy Miller, the 17-year-old lad who stabbed and instantly killed L. A. Smith at Melrose recently, has been released from custody under a $5,000 bond on a charge of manslaughter.

The preliminary hearing of the case was before Judge J. G. Cranford, of the City Court. Several eye-witnesses to the killing testified that the man had a quarrel and that Smith struck Miller with a stick. A few minutes later Miller passed by Smith and struck him in the breast with his knife, the blade penetrating Smith's heart. The men were employed at the turpentine distillery of Miller's brother, Smith having charge of the mules on the place. The fatal quarrel was caused by Smith's refusal to let the boy ride one of the mules at night after it had been worked all day.

Valdosta to Issue Bonds for Paving

Election Called to Vote on $50,000 for Streets and Waterworks.

VALDOSTA, Aug. 16.—An election for an issue of $50,000 municipal bonds has been called by the City Council for September 15.

If it carries Valdosta will in a few months be the best paved city of its size in the State, and will have a waterworks system adequate to take care of the growth of the city for several years.

Of the proposed issue $35,000 is to be used for extending the paving now in operation, while the remainder, $15,000, is to be used for extending the water mains and in improving the waterworks station. A 3,000,000-gallon pump was bought with a portion of the last bond issue and the plant is now being prepared for its installation. In the business section the six-inch mains are being taken up and replaced with twelve-inch mains, while the system is being extended to the northern and eastern portions of town, which were recently taken into the corporate limits.

Three of the principal residence streets are now being paved with asphalt, but the recent bond issue has not been sufficient to pave other streets on which the work is demanded.

The proposed issue will be 30-year bonds to bear 5 per cent interest.

MOULTRIE RAISES $100,000 FOR A PACKING HOUSE

MOULTRIE, Aug. 16.—A hundred thousand dollars has been subscribed by Moultrie business men to build a packing house and abattoir. All preliminary plans have been completed and construction is scheduled to begin soon.

It is believed this will encourage stock raising in Southwest Georgia, providing as it will a cash market at all seasons.

FARMER BEGINS SERVING SENTENCE AS COW THIEF

MOULTRIE, Aug. 16.—J. J. Hiers, farmer, of Colquitt, began serving a twelve months' sentence on the chaingang this week, after being denied a new trial by Judge Thomas, of the Southern Circuit.

Hiers was convicted at the last term of Superior Court on an indictment charging him with cow rustling, but the jury recommended that he be punished as for a misdemeanor.

Albany Boosters Get Big Meeting

Put Up Winning Fight for State Agricultural Society Session In 1914.

ALBANY, Aug. 16.—Knowing that the bringing of the State Agricultural Society to Albany for its 1914 meeting would be a great boom for Albany, as well as furnishing a good place for its meeting, several of Albany's citizens went to Cuthbert this week and attended the session which has been in progress. On Thursday it was realized that a hard fight would be necessitated to secure them, as Norta Georgia was making a strong bid, and immediate steps were taken to apply the pressure. All Dougherty residents who were at the meeting started boosting Albany as the proper place, this being supplemented with telegrams from the Mayor, president of the Chamber of Commerce and others who are recognized as leaders in Albany. The net result was that they decided on Albany, and in addition expressed their thanks for the strong effort that was made to secure them.

Tift's Courthouse Handsome Building

One of the Most Complete and Comfortable in the State.

TIFTON, Aug. 16.—There are many handsome and comfortably furnished courtrooms in this section of the State, but none will surpass the one in Tift County's attractive new courthouse when that building has been completed. The work is now nearing completion, and some idea can be gained of its attractive simplicity and elegance.

Five large windows on either side of the courtroom give plenty of light and ventilation. Between each window is a pilaster column capped with a scroll design, and over each window an arch surmounted by a keystone. Crossing the ceiling are five large beams and between these is an attractive design in dental work. In this work there are over 7,000 pieces, nine to the foot, and there are 875 running feet to be covered.

There are three large lights in the ceiling, with a light on each column and a desk light at the judge's stand.

The staircases will be of steel with terazza steps.

CORDELE PLANS TO PUT $40,000 IN WATERWORKS

Site Selected for Big Plant, and Work Will Begin in Short Time.

CORDELE, Aug. 16.—The Cordele Bond Commission has selected and purchased a site for a new waterworks plant for the city, located immediately adjacent to the site on which the old station is situated. The location provides ample room for the improvements to be made, and was purchased by the commission from Judge E. F. Strozier, administrator of the estate of W. E. Smith, the consideration being $4,500.

A $40,000 issue of bonds will be expended in building the new plant and making further improvements upon the waterworks system. The building alone will probably cost $3,500, and is to be fireproof, while the machinery will be of the most modern type and will be duplicated all the way round, costing not under $18,000. The new reservoir will be capacitated at 250,000 gallons, and an elevated tank of almost three times that capacity will be erected.

RECORD PECAN CROP IN SOUTH GEORGIA

THOMASVILLE, Aug. 16.—That there will be more pecan nuts in South Georgia this season than ever before is the general opinion of the growers. This is owing not merely to the fact that the crop is a good one, but is the result of the larger number of trees that have come into bearing. The crop of paper-shell pecans planted all through this section is a large one, but many of the young trees are just beginning to bear well. Some of the growers are very enthusiastic over the crop on these young trees this year and the knowledge that they will put on a larger one each year as they grow older means that it will not be very long before the output of these nuts will be the means of bringing much money into South Georgia.

PHYSICIANS AID M'NAUGHTON IN FIGHT FOR LIFE

Savannah Medicos Lending Influence to Secure Pardon for Condemned Doctor.

SAVANNAH, Aug. 16.—Savannah physicians are lending their aid toward securing the freedom of Dr. W. J. McNaughton, who is in jail here under sentence of death for the murder of Fred Flanders in Emanuel County three years ago.

At the request of the Rev. John S. Wilder, pastor of the South Side Baptist Church, who has been a consistent friend of the condemned man, several Savannah physicians have given affidavits relative to the effect of the amount of arsenic poisoning which it is claimed killed Flanders. They declare this amount of the poison would not produce death. It is understood the Prison Commission, which is now considering the case of Dr. McNaughton, is perfectly willing to grant him a commutation to life imprisonment, but his friends are striving for a full pardon for him.

Dr. McNaughton may return to his old home in Emanuel County and resume the practice of his profession if the Prison Commission acts favorably upon his application for a pardon.

"I am an innocent man, and naturally expect to be given a full pardon," he said. "All I hope is that the facts were presented to the Prison Commission properly. If they were, I feel confident I will be liberated. I have already been deprived of several years of my life, and I am praying constantly that the great wrong that has been done me may be righted as far as possible by the granting of a full pardon."

Marion Lucas Will Get Savannah Plum

Congressman Edwards Picks Successor to Marcus Baker as Savannah Postmaster.

SAVANNAH, Aug. 16.—The fact that Congressman Charles G. Edwards has announced his intention of indorsing Marion Lucas for postmaster to succeed Marcus S. Baker, Jr., who is expected to be ousted shortly as a result of a recent investigation of his private and official life, has created little surprise here. It had been known for more than a week that Lucas stood the best chance to land the plum.

Besides the indorsements sent to Congressman Edwards direct, Lucas has furnished him with more than 1,000 letters from Savannahians in every walk of life.

Chatham Jail Too Full for Comfort

New Sheriff Asks County Commission to Remodel and Enlarge Prison.

SAVANNAH, Aug. 15.—As a result of an inspection of the county jail by the newly elected Sheriff, Colonel Merrett W. Dixon, the County Commission will be asked to do something to relieve the congestion there.

It may be necessary to build an annex to the jail or convert the southern wing of the building now occupied by the jailer as a residence, into prison quarters. Sheriff Dixon was accompanied on his inspection by Judge Walter G. Charlton, of the Superior Court, and Solicitor General Walter G. Hartridge.

Of the 183 prisoners in the jail there was only one who registered a kick.

SHUPTRINE TO HEAD BIG POLITICAL CLUB

SAVANNAH, Aug. 16.—Although the officials will not make public the result of the election, it is learned that Herman C. Shuptrine, Representative in the Legislature from Chatham County, was elected president of the Cracker Progressive Club, a political organization, last night. Shuptrine has stated that he will accept.

TRADE BOARD SECRETARY RETAINED AT BRUNSWICK

BRUNSWICK, Aug. 16.—Secretary J. G. Weatherly has been reappointed by unanimous vote of the Brunswick Board of Trade. Mr. Weatherly came to this city last year from Columbus, Miss., and since taking charge of the local board he has made an enviable reputation, both for himself and the city.

Summer-Spoiled Skin Removed by Absorption

(From Home Queen.)

As undue summer exposure usually leaves an undesirable surface of tan, just or grease, often freckles, too, it would seem more sensible to remove such surface than to hide it with cosmetics. There's nothing better for this than ordinary mercolized wax, which actually absorbs an unwholesome complexion. The thin layer of surface skin is itself absorbed, gently and gradually, so there's no inconvenience and no detention indoors. Just spread the wax lightly over the entire face at bedtime and take it off in the morning with warm water. If you will get one ounce of mercolized wax at the drug store and use for a week or so, you may expect marked improvement daily. When the underlying skin is wholly in view your complexion will be a marvel of spotless purity and beautiful whiteness.

Don't let those summer wrinkles worry you; worry will breed more wrinkles. Better to banish them by bathing the face in a solution of powdered saxolite, 1 oz., dissolved in ½ pt. witchhazel. Used daily for a while this will be found wonderfully effective. (Adv.)

Savannah Minister Has Saloons Raided

Pastor Objects to Near-Beer Dispensaries Near His Church. Dealers Arrested.

SAVANNAH, Aug. 15.—On complaint of the Rev. M. F. Roberts, pastor of the Fourth Baptist Church, three near-beer dealers, with places around the corner from his church have been placed under arrest and required to give bond for their appearance on charges of violating the State prohibition law.

The places raided are the same which received the attention of the authorities last Sunday. The men under arrest are Andrew Pappedes, M. Patro and C. L. Davis. A lot of near beer and whisky was confiscated and will be used as evidence against the men.

Recovery of Dare Question of Time

Savannah Man, Shot by Wife, Improves Rapidly After Reconciliation.

SAVANNAH, Aug. 16.—Stretched comfortably on a cot in a cell at police barracks, quietly reading a novel while the summer breezes blow through the bars upon her, Mrs. Joe Dare, who several weeks ago shot her husband following a quarrel in their apartment, presents a striking contrast to-day to her extremely nervous condition two weeks ago, when it was believed that Dare would die and that she would be called upon to face trial for his murder.

The physicians who are attending Dare at the Savannah Hospital have given out the information that he is continually improving. His recovery is now practically assured unless there is a sudden change for the worse. The physicians are confident that his reconciliation with his pretty wife on what was believed to be his deathbed has had much to do with bringing about the change in his condition.

Dare was shot by his wife in a fit of jealousy after he had remained out later at night than she thought he ought to.

Grimshaw Will Not Give Up Residence

Transferred to Americus, Savannah Alderman Holds His Office in City Government.

SAVANNAH, Aug. 16.—Harry G. Grimshaw, superintendent of the Savannah division of the Atlantic Coast Line Railway, who has recently been transferred to Americus as superintendent of the Alabama division, effective to-day, will maintain a residence in Savannah, and will not resign from the aldermanic board of the city. He will also retain his position of chairman of the board of control of the Union Station.

Superintendent Grimshaw will retain a residence in Savannah, and will come down each week-end, remaining over until Monday morning. He will also be able to make special trips to Savannah when necessity arises, and will thus be a regular attendant upon the meetings of Council. Mr. Grimshaw's force of clerks, stenographers and dispatchers will depart for their new location to-morrow morning.

WRECKER WANTED TO SEE WHAT TRAIN WOULD DO

SAVANNAH, Aug. 16.—"Just wanted to see a wreck, just to see what the train would do," was the explanation of John Hosey, 14 years old, when arrested last night charged with placing a beam on the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad tracks at Thirty-third and Plant streets in an attempt to wreck the shuttle train running between Savannah and Newyards. A special officer saw two boys place the beam on the track. He arrested Hosey, but the other lad escaped.

8-Foot Shark Caught At St. Simons Island

Sam Levinne Lands Largest Catch of Years in Waters Around Brunswick.

BRUNSWICK, Aug. 16.—An eight-foot shark has been caught on St. Simons Island by Sam Levinne, of this city. Before the fish could be landed it required a horse to pull it ashore.

The young man had his line out for a shark for more than an hour when suddenly it was almost jerked from his hand. Several times he managed to get the shark to the surface, each time shooting it, and before it was killed eight bullets had been poured into its body.

The shark weighed more than 300 pounds, and was the largest caught in these waters in ten years.

Firemen Endangered By a Falling Steeple

Lightning Sets Brunswick Church Spire Ablaze and Causes It to Topple.

BRUNSWICK, Aug. 16.—When McKendree Methodist Church was struck by lightning and set on fire, Fire Chief Harrison and three of his men narrowly missed death.

The lightning set fire to the steeple. The chief and three firemen climbed to the roof of a one-story addition adjoining the main part of the building. Before the fire was under control the steeple fell. Chief Harrison saw wha was coming and quickly ordered his men to seek safety. Just as the got under cover the steeple crashed on the roof where they had been standing.

NEGRO ACCUSED OF SLAYING 16 YEARS AGO IS CAUGHT

WAYCROSS, Aug. 16.—Charged with killing B. C. Booth, at Manor, Ware County, sixteen years ago, Will Eady, a negro, has been brought to Waycross from near Blountstown, Fla. He has been identified and will be placed on trial in December.

Eady's escape from a mob was narrow. The Booth family conducted a search for him. W. S. Booth has just paid a reward of $100 for the negro's arrest and the State's reward of $100 will be paid soon.

WAYCROSS PLANS TO SEND MAN ON BOOSTER TRIP

WAYCROSS, Aug. 16.—Waycross may have a representative on the Georgia Booster Train, which will leave Macon soon for a tour of the Middle West.

Secretary T. Jeff Botley, of the Board of Trade, has been authorized to make the trip. He is getting splendid co-operation from the citizens. Thousands of Waycross booster booklets will be distributed by the secretary while on the trip.

FACE COVERED WITH PIMPLES

Spread to Back. Could Hardly Sleep for Burning and Itching, Caused Disfigurement. Cuticura Soap and Ointment Entirely Cured.

214 Brevard St., Tampa, Fla. — "Some three years ago I commenced to suffer from a rash on my face and back. Before the pimples came on my face there were a lot of blackheads. It looked as if the blackheads turned into pimples because after a little while all of them were gone and my face was covered with pimples. They were small at first but gradually grew and right at the end of each pimple it was all white. I carelessly picked them with my finger nails, which made them spread, and I soon discovered them on my back. My back was covered with pimples and my face the same way. At night I could hardly sleep on account of the burning and itching sensation they caused. I felt like a lot of small-sized crabs biting at my back. I did not like to go out because the pimples caused disfigurement.

"Seeing the advertisement of Cuticura Soap and Ointment in one of the magazines I sent for a sample. At night I would put the Cuticura Ointment on my face and back and I was pleased with the result. I bought some Cuticura Soap and Ointment, and I am glad to be able to say that I am entirely cured of pimples." (Signed) Jno. O. Darlington, Jan. 25, 1913.

Cuticura Soap 25c. and Cuticura Ointment 50c. are sold everywhere. Liberal sample of each mailed free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. T, Boston."

Men who shave and shampoo with Cuticura Soap will find it best for skin and scalp.

STREET PAVING AGITATION IS ON IN WAYCROSS

Act of Legislature Gives Authority to Make Levies on Property Owners.

WAYCROSS, Aug. 16.—While none of the members of the Georgia Legislatures except those from Ware knew what the passage of the local act on levies for street pavement in Waycross meant they really paved Gilmore, a leading street of the city, by voting to pass the act.

The amendment to the city charter was proposed by Council to establish beyond any question the right of the city to make a levy against property of the street railway company for paving on a street occupied by the tracks of the company, whether the part of the street occupied by the tracks was paved or left unpaved.

In trying to pave Gilmore, Council has handled one of the hardest problems Waycross has ever tackled. First one proposition would be agreed upon, then another, and all kinds of petitions from property owners were received. Sentiment is anything but unanimous with reference to the paving of Gilmore, but Council is apparently determined to pave the street with brick.

Estimates on the cost of paving Gilmore have varied from $20,000 to above $30,000. With the street car company's portion of the expense certain for the city, the financial end of the pavement has been closed, and Council probably will be asked at an early date to authorize the Mayor to sign a contract and have work started without delay.

Convicts to Work Streets.

At last Waycross is going to get some return from the part the city has been contributing to the improvement of roads in Ware County. The convict gang of the county, under the new county commissioner law, will have to be worked on the principal streets of Waycross three months of each year, and in order that some benefit might result this year, the law stipulates that for 45 days between now and the end of the year the gang must be worked in Waycross.

An effort to reduce the membership of the board to five was defeated, and the board will be increased after January 1, 1915, to seven instead of six members, as at present. Four of the seven will be from the Waycross district. The chairman, instead of being a resident of the Waycross district, may reside in any district of the county. However, with four members from Waycross, it is extremely doubtful if the chairmanship ever goes out of the Waycross district.

Senator J. L. Sweat's plan for a board of information, holding quarterly meetings with the Commissioners, were eliminated.

SHORTHAND WILL NOT BE TAUGHT IN SCHOOLS

SAVANNAH, Aug. 16.—Stenography and typewriting will not be taught in the public schools of Chatham County during the coming session "because of the shortness of finances." This is the decision of the Board of Education of the county.

Superintendent Otis Ashmore and Principal B. F. Pickett, of the High School, were instructed by the board to investigate the question and report. They hold that the only additional expense would be the purchase of typewriters. It would not be necessary to employ another teacher. Bookkeeping and commercial subjects already are taught in the schools.

Waycross Lid Is On 7 Days Every Week

Sunday Closing Supplement by 'Move On Order to 'Houses in Our Midst.'

WAYCROSS, Aug. 16.—Although the first warrants issued in the crusade against the sale of cold drinks in Waycross on Sundays have been withdrawn on the promise of good behavior, it is announced to-day that the campaign for Sabbath observance will in no way be lessened. The prime reformers are H. Murphy and Dan T. Cowart.

Right on top of the fight on Sunday drink sales, Chief of Police John W. Colley has issued warnings to women who have returned here despite the "lid order" issued last fall by Mayor Reed shortly after Atlanta closed the "houses in our midst." Several houses bordering on the disorderly variety have just been closed and the inmates compelled to leave the city. Only a few of the women waited until the last day to leave, as the police let it be known that all caught here after the limit expired would be arrested and tried in Police Court.

Fire Chief May Hold His Job After All

Expected Shake-up Fails to Materialize in Waycross—Council Remains Inactive.

WAYCROSS, Aug. 16.—The expected shake-up in the Waycross fire department has not yet materialized. It was reported a week ago that former Chief Thomas Ballentyne, of the Savannah fire department, would become chief of the Waycross department. So far, however, the matter has not been presented to Council for action.

Recent improvements in the fire department caused members of Council to feel that a more experienced man was needed as chief, and the report of the expected change caused the friends of Chief E. C. Hall to get busy. What effect, if any, this had is unknown, but it is stated on authority that the fire department shake-up may not be talked about again until the first of the year, when Council elects the Fire Chief along with other city officials.

Fought Four Men; Held for Killing

Charlton County Slayer Released on Bond of $5,000—Now in Hospital.

WAYCROSS, Aug. 16.—An order was passed by Judge E. A. Parker, of the Waycross circuit to-day allowing C. W. Webb, charged with killing J. M. Crawford at Moniac, in Charlton County, temporary bail of $5,000. Authority was also given to transfer Cobb from Valdosta, where he has been in a hospital, to Hazlehurst. Thursday is the date fixed for a commitment trial at Folkston.

When he killed Crawford, Cobb was fighting four men, who attacked him as he started to board a passenger train. After he was cut to pieces he was left by the track all night.

NEW TRIAL FOR LANIER OVERRULED BY JUDGE

WAYCROSS, Aug. 16.—Judge T. A. Parker overruled the motion for new trial in the case of State vs. W. C. Lanier, under life sentence for killing an infant. Attorneys will appeal the case to the Supreme Court. Lanier's wife, who was jointly indicted with him, was acquitted when she was tried at an adjourned term of court in June.

WAYCROSS TO TRY NEW FORM OF GOVERNMENT

Semi-Commission and Business Manager Plans To Be Voted on at Special Election.

WAYCROSS, Aug. 16.—Waycross is on the verge of two interesting elections, and will top off the year with a warm municipal campaign.

The first election will be that of a Recorder to fill the recently-created position of City Recorder. The bill, as passed by the Georgia Legislature, provides that any lawyer 21 years of age may fill the place, and while there are no announced candidates for the position, it is known that members of Council have been approached by several who would like to serve until the election next year.

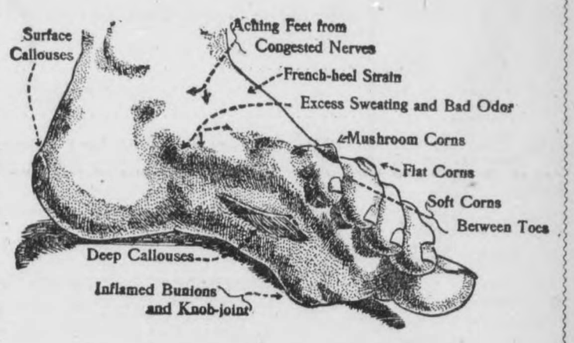
After the election of a Recorder will be the charter election. This will probably be called by Council at a meeting to be held next Tuesday, and will be for the purpose of deciding what changes, if any, in the present government of Waycross will be made. The charter bill provides for the city manager plan of government, which is a combination of the aldermanic and commission government, and an increased Board of Aldermen with appointive departmental heads. The proposition to have an all-time Mayor has been given up, and instead the charter provides that whoever is named Mayor must give sufficient time to look after the office properly. The salary of the Mayor is doubled, $1,200 being allowed under the new charter, as compared to $600 at present. The salaries for Aldermen are wiped out completely by the new charter. Heretofore Aldermen have been paid $200 a year.

There are many advocates of the two kinds of city government, and the election to be held will undoubtedly go down in the city's history as one of the warmest ever known in Waycross.

NEW RAILROAD TO BRUNSWICK FROM DARIEN

Connecting Link Will Be Completed by October 1—Preparations for Entry.

BRUNSWICK, Aug. 16.—Preparations are already under way for the entry of the Georgia Coast and Piedmont Railroad into Brunswick on October 1.



The rails are laid almost in entirety from Darien to Brunswick, and all that remains to make the connecting link perfect is the completion of the steel bridge over the Altamaha River. Work on the passenger and freight depots in this city is well under way, as likewise the work on the terminals along the river front.

By connecting Brunswick and Darien, many miles will be saved in going from one place to the other. The only direct connection with the McIntosh County seat is by boat from this city, which requires four and one-half hours to make the trip. With the Georgia Coast and Piedmont in operation, it will be possible to traverse the distance in less than an hour.

The road now runs from Collins, in Toombs County, to Darien, and with the extension to this city one of the richest territories agriculturally in Georgia will be opened up.

The road was started last summer, after having been under discussion for five years. The County Commissioners of Glynn and the city of Brunswick appropriated a large sum to aid in bringing the road here. The general offices of the road will be brought to Brunswick from Darien before the entry into this city.

Tells Positive Cure For all Foot Troubles

Science has proven that nearly all foot troubles originate from a common cause; that of injured tissues. The following information will be welcomed by thousands of victims of daily foot torture. No matter how many patent medicines you have tried in vain, this treatment which was formerly known only to doctors will do the work. Don't waste time. Get it at once. "Dissolve two tablespoonfuls of Calocide compound in a basin of warm water. Soak the feet for a full fifteen minutes, gently rubbing the sore parts." The effects are marvelous. All pain disappears instantly and the feet feel simply delightful. Corns and callouses can be peeled right off. Bunions, aching feet and sweaty, smelly feet get immediate relief. Use this treatment a week and your foot troubles will be a thing of the past. Calocide works through the pores and removes the cause. Any druggist has Calocide in stock or will get it from his wholesale house. Don't be influenced to take something else instead. A twenty-five cent box is said to be enough to cure the worst feet.

MR. HEARST TELLS WHY HE KEEPS OIL LETTERS FROM LOBBY INQUIRY

Publisher Does Not Wish to Associate Already Proven Documents With Series of Exaggerated Accusations as Mulhall Confession Seems To Be.

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 16.—The following is a letter from Mr. William Randolph Hearst in reply to a letter sent to him by Congressman Clyde H. Tavenner asking Mr. Hearst to put the Standard Oil letters before the Garrett lobby investigation committee in the House of Representatives:

Los Angeles, Cal., Aug. 5, 1913.

Hon. Clyde H. Tavenner, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Sir:

Did you write me a letter and make the letter public, asking me to submit all the Standard Oil letters that I have in my possession to the House committee now investigating the charges of lobbying made by a certain Mulhall?

I would be very glad to submit again to the Congressional committee or to any responsible body the Standard Oil letters which I have already submitted many times to the public and to bodies which more or less accurately and sincerely represent the public.

I would prefer, however, not to submit these Standard Oil letters in connection with the Mulhall letters and charges for the simple reason that the Standard Oil letters are very important to the nation, very serious in their incriminations and wholly authoritative and genuine, while the Mulhall letters and documentary evidence have never appeared to me especially important or serious or genuine.

The Mulhall letters and charges were offered to one of my magazines, the one that published the Standard Oil letters, but the editors of the magazine with my approval declined to purchase or publish the Mulhall documents and confession. The reason we did not purchase the Mulhall letters was not at all because of the price. That question was not even considered.

The reason we failed to purchase them was because we had not full confidence in them. We felt that the more or less innocent or at least moderate wording of the documents did not justify the extravagant allegations on which Mulhall based the documents, and we felt if that any part of Mulhall's evidence or testimony was untrue that all of it was open to suspicion.

Furthermore, our magazine had just performed what we had every right and reason to believe a great public service. We had performed this service with the utmost sincerity and consciousness and with the most scrupulous care.

We had exposed the corrupting influence of privilege-seeking corporations in politics. We had revealed the connection between these corrupt corporations and certain important public officials who were supposed to represent the people in office, but who in reality, prostituted their offices to serve the illegitimate interests of criminal trusts.

The editors of the magazine were agreed that we did not wish to diminish or discredit the effect of these genuine revelations by the publication of Mulhall's letters, which seemed to us less serious and sincere.

The Standard Oil letters can not be denied, because there always have been additional documents to disprove every denial made to confuse and confound every falsifier.

We did not wish our magazine to associate a great public service and a vital political exposure like this with an extravagant series of exaggerated accusations, as the Mulhall confessions appeared to us to be, and I would rather not associate the genuine with the questionable at your Congressional investigation.

Of course, I am expressing only my preference. I can control the course of my magazine, but I do not seek to control or influence the action of your committee. I shall always be ready to submit to any such committee any such information I have which can be considered of public interest or importance.

Very sincerely yours,
WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST.

Dogs Succeed Boys On Chickasaw Links

Troubles With Latter Send Golfers Scurrying for Tamer Kind of Caddies.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 16.—Bird dogs to replace caddies and retrieve lost golf balls will soon make their appearance on the municipal links at Overton Park, according to an announcement made by City Hall officials.

J. P. Clages, dog fancier and expert trainer, has been schooling the animals at the links for several weeks and the dogs will be given a trial, and if they prove adept, they will be used regularly.

The canine caddies are the result of numerous troubles with boys, who were put under charge of the Juvenile Court for various offenses committed at the links.

REPUBLIC, KANS., Aug. 16.—To have part of a knife blade imbedded in his cheek for 31 years and not know it is the experience of Ora Figgins, who has just returned from Minneapolis, Minn., where he underwent an operation for the removal of a [illegible] on his cheek.

Border Officer Who Killed Six Men Dies

Louis Kreeger Also Convicted His Son, Who Will Attend Funeral Under Guard.

TRINIDAD, COLO., Aug. 16.—Luis M. Kreeger, 68 years old, for nearly forty years one of the prominent peace officers of the Southwest, is dead at his home here. He had served variously as Sheriff, Under Sheriff, town marshal and special deputy in this county, and during that time he had figured in almost every adventure with criminals of any importance, and no less than six men are known to have been victims of his marksmanship.

Kreeger was a native of Missouri and came here in 1868. He achieved fame late in the seventies by killing Rice Brown, jockey and cowpuncher, then employed by the Thomas outfit. In trailing a quartet who were accused of robbing the Victor-American Coal Company's pay wagon near Gray Creek in 1910, Kreeger obtained part of the evidence which resulted in the conviction of his own son, "Quick Trigger" Kreeger. The son, under guard, will attend the funeral.

BREAKS TOOTH ON PEARL.

AKRON, OHIO, Aug. 16.—While eating clams at a restaurant here, Jack Newman, a waiter, bit into something hard, breaking a tooth. He found a pearl worth $1,000.

Foreign-Born Women Voting Is Restricted

Illinois Attorney General Outlines Conditions Under Which They Can Cast Ballots.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., Aug. 16.—In answer to Mayor Schriver, of Rock Island, for an opinion on votes for women under the new suffrage law and to govern authorities in an approaching election, Attorney General Lucey to-day held:

"That a foreign-born woman who marries a citizen of the United States, whether such citizen be natural born or naturalized, by such an act of marriage becomes a citizen of the United States.

"An unmarried foreign-born woman whose father did not become naturalized until after she arrived at her majority, would not, by such act of naturalization upon the part of her father, become a citizen of the United States.

"A woman born in the United States whose father was not naturalized prior to her arriving at her majority is a citizen of the United States."

Science Pleads for Bats, Insect Killers

University Professor Says Can Not See, but Are Guided by Sound.

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA, Aug. 16.—That the bat by killing night-flying insects is a benefit to humanity; that he can not really see at night, as is popularly believed, but directs his flight and hunts his prey by sound; that, as a rule, he devours his prey in full flight—these are among the interesting statements in a plea for the bat which Dr. Joseph Grinnell, of the university faculty, has included in a recent paper in which he says:

"A vast quantity of night-flying insects are destroyed by bats every 24 hours. It can be seen, therefore, that bats continue the warfare on insect life which is so incessantly waged by the birds during the daytime.

"All bats have enormously developed ears, and their sense of hearing is doubtless very acute. It is suggested that the drone of a June beetle sounds to a bat as does the roar of a biplane motor to us."

Girl Asleep 10 Days Apparently Is Dead

New York Sufferer Has 86 Convulsions Before Relapsing Into Comatose State.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Jeannette Guttman, the 13-year-old daughter of a plumbing contractor, living at 1046 Tiffany street, the Bronx, for ten days has been lying in a state of coma in the Hydropathic Institute, 2011 Madison avenue.

With the exception of a faint blush of crimson on the girl's cheek, she apparently is lifeless. Life has been sustained by feeding her brandy and predigested milk, and the process of nourishment has been so successful that the girl has not lost any weight.

According to Dr. Gilbert Miller, Miss Guttman has been an epileptic for about ten years. Three days before she relapsed into a comatose state she had 86 convulsions.

From Dr. Miller it was learned that her temperature was just normal, while there was no accentuation of the pulse. Efforts have been made to produce some kind of response from the girl, without result.

Father and Son Vote For Every President

Pennsylvania Pair Hold Suffrage Record That Is Unequaled in United States.

TUNKHANNOCK, PA., Aug. 16.—George C. Miller, of Tunkhannock, claims that he and his father, George Miller, Sr., and the only father and son in the United States who have voted at every Presidential election, commencing with Washington, in 1788, to the present time.

The father voted until 1852, being then 90 years of age. He and son George C., then 22, both cast their ballot for Winfield Scott for President. The son has voted at every Presidential election since, and is now 83 years old.

The father, when about 30 years old, removed from near Harrisburg to Tunkhannock, where he opened the first gun store in that place. He died at the age of 93.

The son is the last of a family of ten children, and is in good health, with a prospect of voting for some years to come.

DEER HINDERS TRAFFIC; DODGES TEAMS IN ROAD

ALBANY, ORE., Aug. 16.—Running along on a well-traveled country road a big buck deer dodged its way between three teams of horses and escaped unhurt last week. The deer was encountered near Brewster Station, on the Woodburn-Springfield line between Crabtree and Labanon, by three men who were hauling lumber to the railroad line.

As the season is not yet open for deer no attempt was made to shoot it.

WANT TO MAKE MONEY? START TERRAPIN FARM

Government Authority Declares There Are Big Profits in the Diamond Backs.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—The diamond-back terrapin, aristocrat of the dining table and king of the banquet menu, need not disappear from the sandy shores of the United States and be lost to disciples of Epicurus forever if the business men of the nation will allow themselves to be awakened to the fact that there are fat dividends in the breeding of the animals.

Uncle Sam is sponsor for this statement. Experts in the Bureau of Fisheries are anxious that business men shall read its report.

At Beaufort, N. C., the experts started out four years ago with 40 females and 18 males, terrapin such as may be found from Southern Virginia all along the coast down to Florida. From this small breeding stock the experts procured 295 eggs in 1910. Of the 295 eggs only 7 failed to hatch.

In 1911 513 eggs were procured, and of these 421 were hatched. Even better results were obtained in 1912, when 650 eggs were procured and 538 hatched. The number of eggs laid and hatched in 1913 is expected to be far greater. Of course, a terrapin must be five or six years old before he is in the best shape for the table, but this slow growth is offset by the fact that "one man may care for several thousand terrapin."

Terrapin farms, the Government report says, should be situated on the shore line of tidal salt water, where a supply of fresh water also is available; low, swamp land where fish and crabs are plentiful being preferable. Best results are obtained by breeding the terrapin in pens specially built, but not expensive in construction.

Unlike the chicken breeders and the breeders of other food animals, the terrapin breeder need not worry about disease in his stock. The Government experts say: "So far as is known, diamond-back terrapins are not subject to epidemic disease, and after reaching the age of two or three years have no important enemy except man."

500 Birds Kept in Cage on Housetop

St. Louis Collector Has Scores of Varieties and Many of Them Are Carnivorous.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 16.—A huge cage, containing 500 birds, is built on top of the home of D. J. Pishorski, No. 1911 North Twelfth street. Not one of these birds is for sale.

Instead Pishorski adds to his collection almost every week, and will continue to do so until he possesses a pair of every variety of birds.

Almost every land is represented in this assemblage of feathered warblers. They range from the nightingale of Japan to the Missouri jaybird.

In this collection are probably 106 birds that can not exist on seeds, lettuce and grass. They belong to the carnivorous class and must feed upon insects.

ADMITS HE IS A SLAYER TO SAVE DYING BROTHER

Arthur Spaugh Tells the Pardon Board That He Shot Sheriff at Ironton, Mo.

JEFFERSON CITY, MO., Aug. 16.—In a last attempt to get a parole for his brother, William Spaugh, Jr., who is ill of tuberculosis and can live but a short time, Arthur Spaugh, the younger brother, also an inmate of the Penitentiary, told the Board of Pardons that he killed Sheriff Polk at Ironton, Mo., to save William's life. William Spaugh is serving a life sentence for shooting Polk, while Arthur Spaugh was sentenced to fifty-five years.

"Bill did not shoot Sheriff Polk. I shot him when I thought he intended to kill Bill. He had already shot Bill through the shoulder and was advancing on him when I fired. My brother had his hands in the air, begging the sheriff not to shoot him," said Arthur Spaugh.

Doesn't Care for Himself.

"I do not want my brother to die here. He is not guilty of the killing of Sheriff Polk. I alone am guilty. Bill was not even armed when the sheriff was shot. I thought the sheriff intended to kill my brother, and after warning him not to advance three times, shot him. I hope the Governor will release Bill so that he can spend what few days he has to live a free man. It does not matter what becomes of me."

The prison physician says that William Spaugh can not live to exceed sixty days and his death is expected sooner. William Spaugh has arranged to have his body shipped back to their old home at Ironton Mo., for burial, provided he does not secure his release.

Mother Also Pleads.

Arthur Spaugh has tuberculosis also, and is unable to do heavy work. He is in the first stage of the disease, but is able to work about the halls and do light work in the open air.

Mary E. Spaugh, aged mother of the Spaughs, has been here much of late pleading with the Board of Pardons and Paroles for her dying son. She says she would like to take him to her home in St. James, Mo., and nurse him until he dies.

Arthur Spaugh has been in the penitentiary since July 27, 1906. William Spaugh was received July 26, 1907. Both have been model prisoners.

HIGH COST OF LIVING BAR TO FREE LUNCHES

LA CROSSE, WIS., Aug. 16.—While saloonkeepers of Connecticut are preparing to go into court to resist the law which forbids free lunches in saloons, liquor men of La Crosse are circulating a petition which will be presented to the Common Council asking for the passage of an ordinance making the free lunch unlawful. All saloonkeepers in town except two have signed it.

Downtown proprietors who have been setting up expensive lunches are the instigators of the movement. They declare the cost of meats and vegetables is so high they can no longer afford it.

Perhaps the 'Pied Piper' Can Explain

'What Becomes of Rats That Die Natural Deaths?' Scientist Wants to Know.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—An article in the current public health bulletin, issued to-day, makes a mystery of the question:

"What becomes of rats which die natural deaths?"

The article was prepared by Surgeon Victor G. Heiser, chief quarantine officer of the Philippine Islands, who had charge of the rat-destroying campaign in Manila.

He states that the average rat mortality for the Philippine city is 2,500 a month. He seeks to find out what becomes of the bodies of those that die each day.

"It appears that at least many hundreds of rats disappear each month from Manila by natural means, the exact nature of which is not known, but if it could be discovered the knowledge might be useful in the destruction of rats."

COUPLE ELOPE, THOUGH THEY CAN NOT CONVERSE

GARY, IND., Aug. 16.—Cupid was somewhat nonplussed for a while in Gary, when a young couple, neither of whom can speak the language of the other, eloped to Crown Point, where they answered the marriage vow by means of an interpreter.

On their way home the pair were arrested at the instance of the irate father, because of the bride's youth.

They were taken to the Gary police station, where neither could give the other a word of comfort. Later the father's heart melted, and they were released.

GIRL STICKS TO STORY OF HER FLIGHT WITH DIGGS

Marsha Warrington Says Former State Architect Took Advantage of Friendship in Elopement to Reno—Lived as Man and Wife.

Accused Appealed to Her to Keep Him Out of the Penitentiary, She Testifies—Court Cautions Jurors Not to Discuss the Case.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 16.—Her eyes averted from the gaze of Maury L. Diggs, former State Architect, on trial for white slavery, Marsha Warrington, the girl with whom he is alleged to have eloped to Reno, leaving behind a wife and family, finished her recital of her relations with the prisoner and remained steadfast to her story how he had taken advantage of a platonic friendship and against her will made her take the trip to the Nevada town, where they lived together as man and wife.

Though vigorously cross-examined, the girl's story was unshaken.

In concluding her testimony, Miss Warrington said:

"After arriving in Reno on March 10 we had luncheon and then we went to the Riverside Hotel, while Diggs and Caminetti went to a real estate office," she said. "They said they were going to rent a bungalow and that they intended to remain in Reno about six months.

Took Suite of Roome.

"When Diggs and Caminetti returned, Diggs registered and we went to a suite of rooms. We had two bedrooms, a parlor and a bath. Diggs and I had one room and Caminetti and Lola the other.

"We took a bungalow while we were there. We were never out of it except at night and never farther away than around the block. Diggs cautioned us not to be seen.

"When Chief Hillhouse came to arrest us on the morning of the 14th, we were still in bed. Diggs said: 'There are the police.'

"He understood that it was a serious situation, for he told me: 'It's up to you girls to keep us out of the penitentiary. Do everything you can to shield us.' He told us to say that Lola and I had occupied the front room and that he and Caminetti had slept in the rear room.

"Dear Pickles," He writes.

A letter addressed to "Dear Pickles," said to have been written to Miss Warrington by Diggs after his arrest, was shown to the jury. The letter contained this sentence:

"Don't worry now; everything will come out O. K., and you remember what I said to you, the last words?"

Miss Warrington was asked what were the "last words." Adjurations, she answered, not to tell anything that would incriminate the writer.

During the cross-examination Diggs constantly prompted the questions of his attorneys and steadily kept his eyes on the girl's veiled face, but she constantly avoided his gaze.

When the essentials of her previous testimony were called into doubt, she made her answers a stronger reaffirmation.

The courtroom was somewhat startled in the afternoon session by the emphatic admonitions of the judge to the jury that the case must not be discussed by the jurors, particularly with any friend of Diggs or F. Drew Caminetti, the latter a co-defendant in another case on a similar indictment. The judge said they must not even allow the case to be mentioned within their hearing or read about it in the newspapers.

Jurors Are Cautioned.

These are the usual instructions to jurors, but the emphasis with which they were twice repeated by Judge Van Fleet this afternoon gave rise to inquiries which he would not satisfy. Theodore Roche, who thus far has conducted the Government's case, merely said there was reason for the court's order. One juror admitted he had been in company where the case was discussed, though he had not joined in the talk.

Two minor witnesses—the managing editor of a Sacramento newspaper and the Probation Officer of Sacramento County—denied to-day that there had been any scandal connected with the names of the four on the point of exploding into print or that arrests were impending if they remained in Sacramento. Miss Warrington had testified that Diggs had told her such was the case, and this fear had been her prime motive for leaving home.

May Yohe to Re-Wed Lord Hope, Is Rumor

American Singer Wins Back Her Former Husband With Favorite Music Hall Song.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—Rumors that Lord Francis Hope may re-wed his former wife, May Yohe, are current. A week ago Lord Hope visited the London Opera House, where Miss Yohe is appearing with considerable success. The former Lady Hope was in excellent voice and sang "Honey, Ma Honey" that she often sang to her husband during their life together.

Lord Francis is said to have been touched by the song. Overtures for a reconciliation, it is said, have been made through Lord Francis' brother, the Duke of Newcastle, and the Duke's lawyer, Mr. Isitt, husband of Adeline Genee.

4 Royal Bridesmaids For Manuel's Wedding

Eighty Princes and Princesses Will Attend Ex-King's Betrothed on September 4.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, Aug 16.—Arrangements for ex-King Manuel's wedding to Princess Augustine Hohenzollern on September 4 at Sigmaringen show the ceremony will be gorgeous.

Eighty royal princes and princesses will attend, including the Prince of Wales, representing King George, and four princesses as bridesmaids.

The Kaiser excuses himself from being present on account of the German army maneuvers. He and other monarchs will be represented by princes.

Col. Degrange Ill In Paris Hospital

Prominent New Orleans Man Is Compelled to Undergo Operation Following Sickness Aboard Ship.

Special Cable to The American.

PARIS, Aug. 16.—Colonel Joseph H. Degrange, of New Orleans, is ill in the American Hospital at Neuilly. Mr. Degrange's illness developed first on board a steamer on his way to Europe early in the summer.

On July 22 he was taken to the hospital for an operation for the removal of the carbuncle on the back of his neck. A second operation became necessary on Tuesday of this week. The operations, while painful, were not dangerous, and the attending physicians say that he will be able to be about within a few days.

Papers Have Right To Refuse Advertising

Court Rules That Objectionable Matter May Be Declined, Despite Previous Contract.

ST. PAUL, Aug. 16.—That newspapers have a right to decline advertising when they deem it objectionable, even if it is submitted to them under a yearly contract, is the effect of a decision handed down today in the District Court here. The case came up when a local department store was sued by a local paper to recover money due under a yearly contract, which the store management had declared void because certain portions of its advertising copy had been rejected by the paper.

Joy Rider Compelled To Pension Victim

In Lieu of Jail Sentence, Speeder Must Pay Girl $30 a Month Until Recovery.

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 16.—Instead of sending J. S. McNutt, a convicted joy rider, to prison, Judge Wilbur, of the Superior Court, suspended a five-year sentence over him to-day, on condition that he pay $30 a month until she recovers to Miss Olive Davis, a young woman injured when McNutt's machine was wrecked. Physicians say Miss Davis' injuries are permanent.

The girl, in a plaster cast, testified to-day that McNutt was speeding while intoxicated.

'Pussy Sneak' Routs Staid Old Tangos

Creepy Glide Brings New York Team Applications to Teach New Dance.

ONSET, MASS., Aug. 16.—The "tangoes," "hugs," "trots," "grapevine" and other similar dances have been cast into darkness by the creation introduced this afternoon at the local dancing casino by a New York couple. It is called the "pussy sneak," and is danced with the rubber-soled shoes commonly worn at the seaside.

The "pussy sneak" is a creepy sort of dance, with a few glides, but catchy and the New York team that "put the stunt on" had several applications to-night to teach it.

AFFINITY EARLE ABOUT TO LOSE 'DEAREST' DORA

Third Wife of Famous Wooer, Declared "Sweetest of Them All," Files Suit.

TELLS STORY OF MEETING

Did Not Know of Long Marital Record of Poet Until She Had Joined Him.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—Dora of the laughing brown eyes, third wife and unnumbered affinity of Ferdinand Pinney Earle, New York poet, artist and record wooer—described by him at the time of their marriage in June, 1911, as "the dearest, sweetest and loveliest of them all"—said to-day that she is about to seek her freedom.

She said she actually has begun suit in New York for an absolute divorce, basing her action on evidence she says she has obtained of Earle's behavior on the Continent since she parted from him in March.

Mrs. Earle is now only 25, twelve years younger than Earle. Her maiden name was Helen Theodora Sidford. From her father, an English architect, she inherited artistic tastes and is an artist of pronounced talent. She is a very attractive young woman.

Lived at "Earle's Folly."

The original story that reached America of her relations with Earle narrated a meeting in the fields, a walk home hand in hand, swift and ardent wooing, marriage within the month and a start on a tour of the world, which wound up prematurely in the country home in Monroe, Orange County, known as "Earle's Folly."

Her story to-day sets right much of that early fiction, for the meeting with Earle seems to have been conventional.

"How did you come to give yourself to a man of Earle's matrimonial record?" was asked.

"I knew nothing of his past until after our marriage," she replied. "Whatever his reputation in America, I had lived in a quiet English town and had never heard of his antecedents. After our marriage his life story was cabled from America to the London newspapers. Clippings were sent to me on the Continent on our honeymoon by my mother.

He Softened the Blow.

"It was a terrible shock to find that I had been so utterly deceived, but I accepted the explanation and excuses offered by Mr. Earle and his assurances that I would never have anything of which to complain.

"After our wedding we spent two months on the Continent. In September, 1911, three months following the wedding, we went to America, and lived happily at his place in Monroe, N. Y. Our first baby was born there in April, 1912. I remained with him in America until last January, and then came here to visit my mother, with whom I have since lived. It was arranged that Mr. Earle would come here for the summer.

"At the time of my return I had not the slightest expectation that our relations would go wrong. We kept in constant correspondence. He arrived here in March, remained two days and then went to the Continent. My second baby was born here April 20. Her father has never seen her.

"Soon after he went from here in March information reached me which left me no option except to prepare divorce proceedings. He has appealed to me to abondon them, but that is quite impossible after his conduct as disclosed to me."

Mrs. Earle declined to anticipate by publication the specific evidence she is reserving for the court. Thus the name of the co-respondent is withheld. Judging from Mrs. Earle's convincing manner of speech, she thinks she has ample ground for her petition.

Earle's Love Affairs.

Earle's love affairs were first brought to public notice in 1908 when he took to his Monroe home Miss Julia Kuttner, and informed his wife that the newcomer was his affinity and soul-mate. The rightful Mrs. Earle at that time was formerly Miss Emilie Marie Fischbacher, daughter of a bookseller on the banks of the Seine in Paris, whom Earle had married in 1903 and by whom he had a son, Harold Erwin.

Mrs. Earle departed for France, with a reported money settlement, and obtained a divorce there. Earle, Miss Kuttner and Miss Kuttner's mother went to Europe and domiciled themselves in Venice. Their departure from Monroe was hastened by threats of neighbors there to punish Earle without process of law.

Within a few months Mrs. Kuttner decided a marriage was necessary and a ceremony was performed at the British consulate. Soon afterward a son was born and named Edmond Erwin Earle. In 1910 the second wife sued for the anulment of the marriage on the ground that the ceremony had taken place before Earle was free under French law.

She also charged cruelty, especially following the birth of the child. After long consideration the Westchester County Court granted the petition of annulment and declared the child legitimate.

Earle had not defended either suit, but while the courts were trying to dispose of the second he sailed to Europe with Miss Gertrude Buell Dunn, a bright-eyed young woman from Chicago, who had "advanced" ideas. It was announced that together they would work out and publish a new philosophy on the ideal relations of the sexes. Their zeal subsided and they parted without scandal.

Weds Model; Loses Home; Goes to Work

'I Should Worry,' Remarks Rich Retired Merchant's Son When Disowned.

WORCESTER, MASS., Aug. 16.—Because William A. Lyttle, Jr., son of Colonel W. A. Lyttle, a wealthy retired merchant and erstwhile member of the Governor's Council, eloped with Miss Thyra Linea Johnson, a 19-year-old artist's model of this city, to Putnam, Conn., he has been disowned by his father.

Colonel Lyttle has ordered his son to give the girl up. Disregarding that mandate, young Lyttle brought matters to a crisis by quietly slipping out of town a few days ago with his sweetheart and having the matrimonial knot tied.

"I should worry," said young Lyttle when he was told of his father's decision, and then he promptly started with his bride to Detroit, where he will learn the automobile business.

Court Frees 'Old Maid' Who Resents Epithet

Judge Rules Spinster Was Right in Smiting Married Woman With Chair.

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—Unmarried women of mature years who are subjected to ridicule as "old maids" have won a victory in court. Miss Minnie Flatley, of the Colonial Hotel, is 31, and Mrs. Lizzie Varley, of the same address, has been calling her an "old maid."

Miss Flatley resented the sarcasm by smiting Mrs. Varley with a chair and punishing her seriously. When she was arraigned in court Judge Gemmill, after hearing the story, said "Discharged."

"I think this sort of provocation justifies any assault up to murder," said the judge. "It is despicable to humiliate a woman."

Father Sells Girl at Auction in Detroit

Authorities Take Steps to Have Marriage of Syrian Child to Turk Annulled.

DETROIT, MICH., Aug. 16.—The marriage license department of the County Clerk's office has taken steps to nullify an auction sale of Marie Aman, a Syrian girl, only 15 years old. Her father made the sale. There were half a dozen bidders.

The girl had been in the country only seven weeks, and was brought here by her father expressly to be sold. A Turk, Mehammed Haj Seleem, was the successful bidder.

The bargain was sealed immediately by the reading of an Oriental marriage service. The girl had a sweetheart who could not bid high enough to win her.

Triplets in Home Where 6 Twins Live

President Wilson Is Honored Three Times in the Naming of the Babies.

LAONIA, WIS., Aug. 16.—Three pairs of twins and a set of triplets is the record that Mrs. Joseph Checota, of this town, boasts. The triplets will be named Woodrow, Wilson and W. W. Joseph, in honor of the President.

The father believes this is a record that will stand for a long time to come.

Mr. and Mrs. Checota have been married six years and in that time have had nine children. All but one are living.

Rockefeller's Rival In Riches Tips Dime

Nitrate King Hands Man Ten Cents for Returning Lost Pocketbook.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Senor E. E. Ossio, the Nitrate King of Chili, who has declared John D. Rockefeller a pauper in comparison with himself, overwhelmed a steward on the United Fruit steamer Pastores yesterday by the size of a tip.

The steward had picked up the Nitrate King's wallet and, running after him, bowed low and handed over the pocketbook. Opening it, Senor Ossio pulled out a dollar bill, then changed his mind, and, taking a dime from his pocket, handed it to the steward.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Apparent evidence that dentistry was a profession in prehistoric ages has been disclosed by Professor Marshall H. Human skulls containing teeth filled with gold were among the interesting discoveries made in Ecuador.

Charlton at Last in Italy's Grasp

Wife Slayer Loses 3-Year Fight

Now on Ocean on Way to Trial

Porter Charlton, young American, who killed beautiful wife and is now on way to face trial in Italy.

Young Prisoner Is Confident He Will Escape Spending Life in Solitary Confinement.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Porter Charlton, after three years' fight against extradition from America, is in the clutches of the Italian Government and to-day is on the high seas, bound for Italy and for trial on the charge of killing his beautiful young wife and sinking her body in Lake Como in June, 1910.

In spite of the ordeal that faces him, Charlton left New York as cheerful as a schoolboy. Three years in close confinement had repressed his natural buoyancy, but the prospect of a sea voyage, even with a trial for murder awaiting him at his journey's end, restored it to a considerable degree.

"I'll be back for Christmas!" he cried, waving a good-bye from the liner as it pulled out. All the time he has declared that he will be acquitted, in spite of the fact that he confessed to killing his wife on their honeymoon. Extenuating circumstances, his friends declare, will have their weight on the Italian jury.

Charlton's quarters on the liner are isolated, and he is not permitted to mingle with the other passengers. He travels third class, as the Italian Government does not provide first-class accommodations for prisoners.

Faces Living Death.

Unless the contention of his insanity can be proved, a living death surely will be the fate of Porter Charlton, a hideous confinement that is far worse than death on the gallows.

Extenuating circumstances, it is expected, can not be revealed of sufficient strength to obtain his acquittal, and unless his defense prove insanity, he must go to prison. There is no death sentence in Italy.

And imprisonment in Italy is a dreadful punishment, feared far more than the electric chair, the gallows, or the garrote. It is invested with mental torture of such degree that few who live through it more than a few years are sound of mind.

Charlton is known to have a sensitive, nervous temperament. His behavior toward his wife proves him high-strung. To a person of his psychological make-up incarceration under the Italian system would be certainly destructive of mental balance.

For the first ten years of a life sentence the prisoner may be kept in utter darkness and in the strictest solitude, with nothing to eat and drink but plain bread and water. A few weeks of this treatment generally is sufficient to reduce the most unemotional criminal to a state of nervous collapse.

Insanity Practically Only Hope.

His attorneys hope to present in the Italian courts the great mass of evidence brought to bear in the United States Supreme Court to prove him insane. Justice Lurton, in the opinion which declared that Charlton must go back to Italy to stand trial, admitted that the evidence to substantiate the insanity plea was preponderous.

The opinion of the Supreme Court brought to an end the three years' unsuccessful fight of Charlton and his family against extradition to Italy. It was in June, 1910, that he killed his wife, according to his own confession. After the crime he fled, but was caught at Hoboken, N. J., when the liner landed there. The brother of the slain wife there met him, and caused him to be placed under arrest.

The first night of his imprisonment in New Jersey a confession was produced, bearing his name, and generally supposed to be authentic.

"My wife and I lived happily together, but she had an uncontrollable temper," read the confession. "So had I. On the night of the murder she had the worst outbreak of temper I ever saw.

"I told her to keep quiet or I would make her quiet. Then she had another outbreak. I took up a wooden mallet, with which I had been repairing a table, and hit her on the head and body two or three times. At midnight I put the body in a trunk, dragged it to a small pier near the house, and threw it overboard."

His wife was a beautiful young woman, although eight years older than he, who was only 21. The two were on their honeymoon when the murder occurred.

Mrs. Charlton was the divorced wife of Neville H. Castle, a San Francisco lawyer. Charlton is the

FRANK'S COUNSEL BIT BY BIT BUILDS STRUCTURE TO CRUSH CONLEY STORY

Intricate Mass of Circumstantial Evidence Is Assembled to Disprove Direct Testimony of Negro and Corroboration Theories of State.

DEFENDANT'S MORALS TO BE NEXT BATTLE GROUND

An intricate structure is being raised by Leo Frank's lawyers as his defense against the formidable case made out by the prosecution. Little by little its parts were laid, all during last week's period of the trial, with no less than 50 witnesses as agents.

No one of the many witnesses for the defense has given testimony that in itself was essentially significant. But each one has embodied an attack on the State's case, testifying against the character of a damaging anti-Frank witness, or to Frank's good character, or as to the likelihood of expert testimony that the State drew forth.

The case of the defense, as it was made out with the close of the week's session, is a structure of little bits. It is an attempt to overcome a long line of circumstantial evidence and the direct testimony of a single witness—Jim Conley—with another long line of circumstances. In this case as the week has revealed the State is truly the aggressive, the defense truly the defensive.

Arnold Charges Scheme.

Most strenuous of the attempts of the defense has been that to prevent the examination of witnesses along the lines of Frank's alleged immoral conduct. Time and again Solicitor Dorsey has asked witnesses if they have heard of certain actions by Frank in connection with young girls. Each time a heated objection has come from Reuben Arnold, Frank's attorney, who has charged that the questions are without foundation, and that they are framed merely to set the prisoner in an evil light before the jury.

To Lawyer Arnold's objections was added the protest of the prisoner's mother, in a startling, dramatic manner. Plainly overwrought, bordering on the hysterical, Mrs. Frank rose from her seat after Dorsey asked J. Ashley Jones if he had heard of Frank's immoral behavior with a little girl.

Mrs. Frank was trembling and pale faced. She advanced toward the Solicitor and pointed a finger at him.

"No, he hasn't heard," she cried, her voice almost a shriek. "Nor you either."

The situation was doubly dramatic, coming as it did unexpectedly. Mrs. Frank has been apparently the calmest and coolest and most courageous person in the courtroom since the trial began, not a quiver of her face betokening lack of composure. No one expected the outburst from her.

Dorsey's Look Triumphant.

To all the protests of the lawyers, however, Solicitor Dorsey declared that the State can prove the charges of gross immoral conduct against Frank, and will bring witnesses to that effect on rebuttal. There was something triumphant in the Solicitor's bearing when Frank's attorneys introduced testimony to prove the good character of the prisoner.

This lets down the bars. The prosecution now may produce witnesses in rebuttal to attack Frank's character and his behavior, in case they have such evidence in hand. The Solicitor announces that he has this evidence and will produce it.

At one time during the week's course of the trial it was hinted that forty or fifty witnesses will be called by the State when the case again comes into its hands in reply to the testimony for the defense. In that event, the trial will be prolonged through the greater part of next week. Several days undoubtedly will be required for the lawyers' argument of the case, which has become one of the most complicated and tangled of Georgia's legal history. And thus it is not unlikely that the last week of the month will come before the verdict of the jury is announced.

Testimony on which the defense relies most was produced in that of several medical experts—Dr. George Bachman, Dr. T. H. Hancock, Dr. Willis Westmoreland, Dr. W. S. Kendrick and Dr. William Owens. All these men were called to reply to the statement of Dr. Harris, of the State Board of Health, whose testimony is

Young Woman Is Arrested When Masked Battery Is Exposed as She Crosses Street.

UNIONTOWN, PA., Aug. 16.—Holding her dress a little too high to avoid the water as she crossed Main street to-day, Mattie Pearce was arrested when she revealed a large revolver in a holster fastened around her leg at the knee.

She was taken to the police station, where she showed the officers the new mode of carrying a gun. Strapped to a leg was the holster in which she carried the revolver.

The girl explained that there were "bad men" at Uniontown and she was not taking any chances with them. She stated that she had worn the revolver in that position for some time.

Mattie said she did not know she was holding her dress quite as high as she was, and that she had forgotten for a moment about the masked battery. She was released on bail.

Wife Paints Story of Her Life on Walls

St. Louis Matron Does Remarkable Work She Calls 'A Young Girl's Love."

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 16.—One of the most-talked-of works of art in St. Louis hangs in the home of Dr. Robert E. Wilson and was painted by Mrs. Wilson. The canvas is called "The Story of a Young Girl's Love," and covers the entire wall space in the parlor of this magnificent Colonial home. Two years were devoted to the work.

The painting is divided into panels, the size of each picture depending on the amount of space to be covered. Artists pronounce the canvas a masterpiece. Mrs. Wilson's friends say that the painting illustrates her blissful married state.

MORAL CONDUCT OF FRANK NOW IS BATTLE GROUND

believed to be hurtful to the defense.

He had declared that the undigested bits of cabbage in Mary Phagan's stomach proved she was killed within a short period after her midday meal. The whole contention of the State is that Frank killed Mary Phagan before 12:30 o'clock on the afternoon of April 26, and the fact has been established that she ate dinner less than an hour before that time.

But the experts called by the defense were almost unanimous in declaring that Dr. Harris could have been mistaken, however positively he stated his opinion. A bitter fight developed on cross-examination of each of the experts.

Bitter also was the fight that came over the testimony of Dr. William Owens. It was he who timed the actions of mimics when they rehearsed in pantomime Conley's version of the death of Mary Phagan some time after his arrest. Eighteen and a half minutes were taken up by the incident, a length of time which seems to offset the State's theory that the murder was done and the body disposed of within a short time. Solicitor Dorsey objected to the introduction of the testimony, but Judge Roan allowed it to be entered, with the remark that he would study the arguments for and against and announce later a judgment as to its admissibility.

The hope and belief of the defense that the commission of the crime may be laid on the shoulders of Jim Conley was revealed in the course of the Owens examination, when Lawyer Arnold made a heated statement.

Arnold Accuses Conley.

Solicitor Dorsey was objecting to the admission of the evidence concerning the murder in pantomime, and spoke sarcastically of its features.

"Your honor," he protested to Judge Roan, "you're surely not going to allow a thing like this."

"I don't know what I am going to do," replied Judge Roan.

The Solicitor turned to Arnold.

"Well," he asked, "how long did it take in this farce to choke the little girl to death?"

"We don't know how long it took the nigger to kill the child," replied the lawyer for the defense, hotly.

The Solicitor turned to the Judge at this accusation of Conley.

"Now, your honor," he said, "that won't do."

Judge Roan agreed with him, and the examination proceeded.

Following the examination of the expert witnesses the defense produced men who were classmates and associates of Frank in college to testify to his good character. It was at this juncture that the hearing of the Solicitor plainly revealed triumph. He had contended all during the trial that he would produce evidence of Frank's immoral behavior if an opening were given him. This was the opening.

The first four character witnesses were A. L. Lane and R. A. Knight, of Brooklyn, and Philip Nash, of Greenwood, N. J., and J. Ashley Jones, an insurance man of Atlanta. Others, the defense has announced, will be brought forth. The attitude of Frank's lawyers is that of defying the prosecution to attack the prisoner's moral character.

500 Birds Kept in Cage on Housetop

St. Louis Collector Has Scores of Varieties and Many of Them Are Carnivorous.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 16.—A huge cage, containing 500 birds, is built on top of the home of D. J. Pishorski, No. 1911 North Twelfth street. Not one of these birds is for sale.

Instead Pishorski adds to his collection almost every week, and will continue to do so until he possesses a pair of every variety of birds.

Almost every land is represented in this assemblage of feathered warblers. They range from the nightingale of Japan to the Missouri jaybird.

In this collection are probably 100 birds that can not exist on seeds, lettuce and grass. They belong to the carnivorous class and must feed upon insects.

John Lind Has Most Unusual Job

But Lind Is Most Unusual Man

Calling Bluffs Is His Specialty

Former Governor John Lind, of Minnesota, who is in Mexico to tell President Huerta that President Wilson disapproves of him an dhis policies.

© By Zimmerman

Former Governor Has No Official Position, but Has Been Selected in Ticklish Diplomatic Work.

A plain man named John Lind is in Mexico City awaiting an opportunity to tell the explosive and dynamic President Huerta that President Wilson, of the United States, disapproves of him and his government.

This man is not the Ambassador of the United States. He has no more an official standing than a Chinese coolie. He is a plain American citizen come to discuss matters.

President Huerta may refuse to see him. The President might tell John Lind to go back to Minnesota whence he came, and still would be on safe ground.

But President Huerta will see him, and will talk to him, and will listen to what he has to say. Because John Lind, as all the world knows, is the personal representative of President Woodrow Wilson. He does not stand for the Government of the United States, nor represent any plan of intervention or anexation. He is merely the ears ad mouth of Woodrow Wilson, who wants to know exactly what is going on and why.

The mission on which President Wilson sent John Lind, former Governor of Minnesota, to Mexico, is one of the most remarkable in diplomatic history.

Holds No Office.

"It is to be pointed out that Mr. Lind holds no office which is recognized between nations," announced dispatches from Washington. "A grave responsibility rests on his shoulders. * * * The administration insisted that it should be made plain that Mr. Lind was acting entirely in an unofficial capacity in his mission to Mexico, but that he possesses most extraordinary powers in speaking for President Wilson is admitted."

It is plain that John Lind is on a most unusual mission, to be successful in which he must be calm, cool, careful, tactful, unruffled and all that. He must be alive to his responsibility. He must expect rebuffs. He must be honest, fearless, sincere.

John Lind's friends say he is all that. His enemies concede that he is every bit of it. President Wilson was certain that John Lind would meet all requirements, and so he sent to St. Paul for him.

John Lind is a former Governor of Minnesota. Years after he had served his first term, the Democrats nominated him again. They wanted him badly, and in the convention mentioned the name of nobody else.

But Lind was on his way to Alaska. He refused to turn back to accept the nomination. He refused to say yes or no. They had disregarded his wishes back home concerning a county option plank in the platform, and he scornfully said nothing to their overtures to come back and be Governor.

Weeks passed. Election time drew near. Politicians in Minnesota were certain that Lind would run. Who ever refused a gubernatorial nomination with certain victory to result from it?

Lind's Refusal Firm.

But when Lind got back, he broke his silence with a firm refusal. He would have none of the Governorship. And it being too late for the Democrats to rally around anyone else, the Republican Eberhardt won out.

It is the same calm, imperturbable John Lind for whom President Wilson invented a job as his personal representative. An unusual job it was, and President Wilson looked about for an unusual man to fill it. He decided that his friend John Lind was the man.

John Lind comes naturally by his impassiveness. He was born in Sweden and came to America a boy of 11, when his mother and father decided, like hundreds of other Swedes, to move to the new country and try to find their fortunes in the great Northwest. They came over and moved into their log cabin at Goodhue, Minn.

John Lind went to the common schools in his home town until he was 17. Then he taught school himself, saving his money that he might enter the University of Michigan. Then he practiced law, got married, moved to Minneapolis, held the job of receiver in a land office, went to Congress, lost out for re-election after three terms, served as lieutenant and quartermaster in the Twelfth Minnesota Volunteers during the war with Spain, ran for Governor and was defeated, all before 1898.

But when he came back from the war, the pleased Democrats named him as their candidate for Governor, and won with him. All Minnesota knew him by that time as a calm, self-contained, capable, good-hearted lawyer who never beat about the bush and who usually managed to call the other fellow's bluff. Out in Minnesota they like that kind of fellow.

Takes Defeat Calmly.

In 1900, a bad year for Democrats, he was beaten for re-election. John Lind took his defeat calmly. He just stuck around, practiced law, ran for Congress again, and was elected. After retirement here, he worked plainly and simply and prosperously until President Wilson, knowing him for a worker and a plain-talking, hard-fisted person, sent for him to go to Mexico. It was in the interim, about 1910, that he refused the offer of Minnesota Democrats to make him Governor again.

Mr. Lind is a man of action, cool-headed, alert, and a fighter; but above all he is silent and inscrutable. It is this quality which is going to stand him in good stead in the present situation, and it is the quality which no doubt proved very forceful in moving President Wilson to appoint him.

In all the words of criticism of Mr. Lind's mission to Mexico—and there have been many to criticise the President's course—there has been no hint of disssatisfaction with the personal qualities of the man. It is pointed out that Mr. Lind's mission in Mexico will fail. He is going to tell President Huerta that President Wilson disapproves of him and his government. But none has said that it will fail because of his personality, and it is certain that it will not fail because the President's representative talks too much. If it is to be a game of bluff, John Lind is the man to play it.

AFTER 50 YEARS MOTHER OF 8 IS ENABLED TO SEE

Although 66 Years Old, She Travels From Home to Hospital All Alone.

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—Fifty years ago a little girl was stricken blind.

She was 16, and never had seen the man whom she later married. In her home at Hillsdale, Mich., she became the mother of eight children.

The father died a little later and they went out into the world, but the mother never had seen their faces.

"But every night I taught them to pray: "God, give mother back her sight before she dies,'" she said in Chicago. "And their prayers have been answered."

The woman, now bent and feeble is Mrs. Mary J. Welsh, and is back in her Hillsdale home, her sight restored. Mrs. Welsh during the last month has been in the Wesley Hospital here. The operation that gave her back her sight, surgeons say, was one of the most remarkable on record. It consisted in the removal of a cataract of fifty years standing.

Mrs. Welsh came to the hospital from her home alone. On her breast she wore the inscription, "I am blind. I am going to the Wesley Hospital, Chicago. Please direct me," on a large card.

A chaplain of the hospital, the Rev. M. W. Satterfield, delivered an address in Hillsdale several months ago. He told of the charitable work done by the hospital. The white-haired blind woman heard him. She groped her way forward.

"Can you do anything for me?" she asked. "I only want to see my babies before I go. I have been praying."

A month ago the Methodist congregation took up a collection which made it possible for her to make the trip to Chicago.

Perhaps the 'Pied Piper' Can Explain

'What Becomes of Rats That Die Natural Deaths?' Scientist Wants to Know.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—An article in the current public health bulletin, issued to-day, makes a mystery of the question:

"What becomes of rats which die natural deaths?"

The article was prepared by Surgeon Victor G. Heiser, chief quarantine officer of the Philippine Islands, who had charge of the rat-destroying campaign in Manila.

He states that the average rat mortality for the Philippine city is 2,500 a month. He seeks to find out what becomes of the bodies of those that die each day.

"It appears that at least many hundreds of rats disappear each month from Manila by natural means, the exact nature of which is not known, but if it could be discovered the knowledge might be useful in the destruction of rats."

Troubles With Latter Send Golfers Scurrying for Tamer Kind of Caddies.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 16.—Bird dogs to replace caddies and retrieve lost golf balls will soon make their appearance on the municipal links at Overton Park, according to an announcement made by City Hall officials.

J. P. Clages, dog fancier and expert trainer, has been schooling the animals at the links for several weeks and the dogs will be given a trial, and if they prove adept, they will be used regularly.

The canine caddies are the result of numerous troubles with boys, who were put under charge of the Juvenile Court for various offenses committed at the links.

Girl Asleep 10 Days Apparently Is Dead

New York Sufferer Has 86 Convulsions Before Relapsing Into Comatose State.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Jeannette Guttman, the 13-year-old daughter of a plumbing contractor, living at 1046 Tiffany street, the Bronx, for ten days has been lying in a state of coma in the Hydropathic Institute, 2011 Madison avenue.

With the exception of a faint blush of crimson on the girl's cheek, she apparently is lifeless. Life has been sustained by feeding her brandy and predigested milk, and the process of nourishment has been so successful that the girl has not lost any weight.

According to Dr. Gilbert Miller, Miss Guttman has been an epileptic for about ten years. Three days before she relapsed into a comatose state she had 86 convulsions.

From Dr. Miller it was learned that her temperature was just normal, while there was no accentuation of the pulse. Efforts have been made to produce some kind of response from the girl, without result.

HIGH COST OF LIVING BAR TO FREE LUNCHES

LA CROSSE, WIS., Aug. 16.—While saloonkeepers of Connecticut are preparing to go into court to resist the law which forbids free lunches in saloons, liquor men of La Crosse are circulating a petition which will be presented to the Common Council asking for the passage of an ordinance making the free lunch unlawful. All saloonkeepers in town except two have signed it.

Downtown proprietors who have been setting up expensive lunches are the instigators of the movement. They declare the cost of meats and vegetables is so high they can no longer afford it.

BOY FINANCIER FIGHTING FOR PRISON PAROLE

Earl W. Butler, of Canton, Ill., Seeks to Escape Penalty for Banking Methods.

CANTON, ILL., Aug. 16.—Earl W. Butler, the boy banker, whose career in frenzied finance wrecked two banks in Fulton and one in Peoria County in 1910, and ended by landing Butler in the Joliet penitentiary with an indeterminate sentence of from one to three years, again is making strenuous efforts through his attorneys and friends, to obtain his release from the State Board of Pardons.

So far the boy banker has not made much progress toward getting his freedom, because of the position taken by former State's Attorney W. S. Jewell, under whose incumbency Butler was convicted of embezzlement in connection with the Ellisville bank, and who is supported in his view of the matter by the present State's Attorney, M. P. Rice.

Butler was convicted in the Fulton County Circuit Court in October, 1911, over a year after his three banks closed their doors, and he was taken to Joliet in November of the same year. He has served nearly two years in the penitentiary and has another year to remain there, if his sentence is carried out to the limit. In addition to imprisonment, the verdict in his case imposed a fine of $2,800, but it is the expectation that he will try to schedule out of this obligation.

Before Butler left the Fulton County jail, after sentence was passed, his attorneys began efforts to save him from the penitentiary.

Science Pleads for Bats, Insect Killers

University Professor Says Can Not See, but Are Guided by Sound.

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA, Aug. 16.—That the bat by killing night-flying insects is a benefit to humanity; that he can not really see at night, as is popularly believed, but directs his flight and hunts his prey by sound; that, as a rule, he devours his prey in full flight—these are among the interesting statements in a plea for the bat which Dr. Joseph Grinnell, of the university faculty, has included in a recent paper in which he says:

"A vast quantity of night-flying insects are destroyed by bats every 24 hours. It can be seen, therefore, that bats continue the warfare on insect life which is so incessantly waged by the birds during the daytime.

"All bats have enormously developed ears, and their sense of hearing is doubtless very acute. It is suggested that the drone of a June beetle sounds to a bat as does the roar of a biplane motor to us."

Father and Son Vote For Every President

Pennsylvania Pair Hold Suffrage Record That Is Unequaled in United States.

TUNKHANNOCK, PA., Aug. 16.—George C. Miller, of Tunkhannock, claims that he and his father, George Miller, Sr., and the only father and son in the United States who have voted at every Presidential election, commencing with Washington, in 1788, to the present time.

The father voted until 1852, being then 90 years of age. He and son George C., then 22, both cast their ballot for Winfield Scott for President. The son has voted at every Presidential election since, and is now 83 years old.

The father, when about 30 years old, removed from near Harrisburg to Tunkhannock, where he opened the first gun store in that place. He died at the age of 93.

The son is the last of a family of ten children, and is in good health, with a prospect of voting for some years to come.

Border Officer Who Killed Six Men Dies

Louis Kreeger Also Convicted His Son, Who Will Attend Funeral Under Guard.

TRINIDAD, COLO., Aug. 16.—Luis M. Kreeger, 68 years old, for nearly forty years one of the prominent peace officers of the Southwest, is dead at his home here. He had served variously as Sheriff, Under Sheriff, town marshal and special deputy in this county, and during that time he had figured in almost every adventure with criminals of any importance, and no less than six men are known to have been victims of his marksmanship.

Kreeger was a native of Missouri and came here in 1868. He achieved fame late in the seventies by killing Rice Brown, jockey and cowpuncher, then employed by the Thomas outfit. In trailing a quartet who were accused of robbing the Victor-American Coal Company's pay wagon near Gray Creek in 1910, Kreeger obtained part of the evidence which resulted in the conviction of his own son, "Quick Trigger" Kreeger. The son, under guard, will attend the funeral.

AUTO AS MATADOR SAVES FARMER FROM MAD BULL

ELGIN, ILL., Aug. 16.—Matadors may be succeeded by automobiles as bullfighters. This was proven when Peter Green, a farmer, 60 years old, of Huntley, was being gored by a bull in one of his pastures. His screams attracted an automobile party of three men, who were in the road. They witnessed the attack for a moment, then the driver of the big touring car made a dash into the pasture and after the bull.

The horn was tooted and tooted, and the bull finally was driven away from the helpless farmer. Three of Green's ribs were broken, but he will recover.

Mr. Hearst Tells Why He Keeps Oil Letters From Lobby Inquiry

Publisher Does Not Wish to Associate Already Proven Documents With Series of Exaggerated Accusations as Mulhall Confession Seems To Be.

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 16.—The following is a letter from Mr. William Randolph Hearst in reply to a letter sent to him by Congressman Clyde H. Tavenner asking Mr. Hearst to put the Standard Oil letters before the Garrett lobby investigation committee in the House of Representatives:

Los Angeles, Cal., Aug. 5, 1913.

Hon. Clyde H. Tavenner, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Sir:

Did you write me a letter and make the letter public, asking me to submit all the Standard Oil letters that I have in my possession to the House committee now investigating the charges of lobbying made by a certain Mulhall?

I would be very glad to submit again to the Congressional committee or to any responsible body the Standard Oil letters which I have already submitted many times to the public and to bodies which more or less accurately and sincerely represent the public.

I would prefer, however, not to submit these Standard Oil letters in connection with the Mulhall letters and charges for the simple reason that the Standard Oil letters are very important to the nation, very serious in their incriminations and wholly authoritative and genuine, while the Mulhall letters and documentary evidence have never appeared to me especially important or serious or genuine.

The Mulhall letters and charges were offered to one of my magazines, the one that published the Standard Oil letters, but the editors of the magazine with my approval declined to purchase or publish the Mulhall documents and confession. The reason we did not purchase the Mulhall letters was not at all because of the price. That question was not even considered.

The reason we failed to purchase them was because we had not full confidence in them. We felt that the more or less innocent or at least moderate wording of the documents did not justify the extravagant allegations on which Mulhall based the documents, and we felt if that any part of Mulhall's evidence or testimony was untrue that all of it was open to suspicion.

Furthermore, our magazine had just performed what we had every right and reason to believe a great public service. We had performed this service with the utmost sincerity and consciousness and with the most scrupulous care.

We had exposed the corrupting influence of privilege-seeking corporations in politics. We had revealed the connection between these corrupt corporations and certain important public officials who were supposed to represent the people in office, but who in reality, prostituted their offices to serve the illegitimate interests of criminal trusts.

The editors of the magazine were agreed that we did not wish to diminish or discredit the effect of these genuine revelations by the publication of Mulhall's letters, which seemed to us less serious and sincere.

The Standard Oil letters can not be denied, because there always have been additional documents to disprove every denial made to confuse and confound every falsifier.

We did not wish our magazine to associate a great public service and a vital political exposure like this with an extravagant series of exaggerated accusations, as the Mulhall confessions appeared to us to be, and I would rather not associate the genuine with the questionable at your Congressional investigation.

Of course, I am expressing only my preference. I can control the course of my magazine, but I do not seek to control or influence the action of your committee. I shall always be ready to submit to any such committee any such information I have which can be considered of public interest or importance.

Very sincerely yours,
WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST.

Wealthy Father at Last Finds Daughter

Search of 38 Years Ends in Astonishment for His Policeman Son-in-Law.

POTTSVILLE, PA., Aug. 16.—Anthony Lloyd, a policeman, living on $65 a month, was surprised when John Strause, aged 76, walked into his home and embraced Mrs. Lloyd, who turns out to be his only child, lost to him for more than 38 years.

Strause is worth $200,000 and lives in Laramie City.

Many years ago, after he returned from service in the Seventh Pennsylvania Cavalry of the Civil War, he placed his daughter, Emma, in the charge of relatives and went West. Though wealthy, he was unable to find any trace of her until his sudden meeting.

COUPLE ELOPE, THOUGH THEY CAN NOT CONVERSE

GARY, IND., Aug. 16.—Cupid was somewhat nonplussed for a while in Gary, when a young couple, neither of whom can speak the language of the other, eloped to Crown Point, where they answered the marriage vow by means of an interpreter.

On their way home the pair were arrested at the instance of the irate father, because of the bride's youth.

They were taken to the Gary police station, where neither could give the other a word of comfort. Later the father's heart melted, and they were released.

LIVING DEATH IN ITALY IS FACED BY CHARLTON

Young American Travels in Steerage, but Is Confident of an Early Acquittal.

son of Paul Charlton, law adviser of the Bureau of Insular Affairs, and former President Taft's classmate at Yale. He has stood by his son through all the fight against extradition.

Extradition Fight Begins.

The fight began the day after the confession appeared. It seemed at first that the young man surely must go back to Italy to face trial, and every legal step was taken against it. His friends, led by his father, took the position that he could not be extradited, because Italy had always refused, under the extradition treaty of 1868, to return Italian subjects to the United States to answer for crimes committed here.

They lost this fight, when Italy made a request for the prisoner. The fight was resumed, and Charlton's father entered the insanity plea, in a habeas corpus suit. Losing this in the lower court, the father appealed to the Supreme Court, in which, about a month ago, the opinion of Justice Lurton was handed down, to the effect that Charlton was subject to extradition.

Officers arrived in the United States from Italy last week to take Charlton back for trial. Conflicting reports have been spread regarding the young man's health, certain physicians contending that he is the victim of pulmonary tuberculosis and others that he is in perfect health.

Newspaper reports, written by men who have seen him, say that he appears healthy. He has been allowed an unusual degree of freedom while being held in the Hudson County jail, being permitted to take walks, automobile drives and two hours of exercise each day. Sometimes he was taken to picture shows.

Charlton Expects Acquittal.

Charlton is cheerful. He has expressed the opinion that he will be acquitted in spite of the evidence against him, and has told his father and mother and other friends as well that he will be back home for Christmas dinner.

The trial will be held in Milan some time early in the fall.

Appeals have been made to Secretary of State Bryan, and an attempt even has been made to reach the ear of President Wilson to present the extradition of the young man. His father has stopped at nothing to save his son. But all attempts have proved fruitless. Secretary Bryan, Judge Charlton's personal friend of long standing, has expressed his sympathy, but declared that it was impossible for him to do anything for the son.

The plans for the defense will take the form of an inquisition to bring out the moral and mental traits of the murdered woman, besides the consideration of Charlton's sanity. Attorneys will try to show that there was great provocation for the killing. It is hoped in this that the sentence of Charlton will not be the short-living death at solitary confinement in an Italian dungeon, but a more tempered punishment.

Chic and Dashing Fall Hats Will Bring $1,000,000 to Atlanta

Here's where the factions divide—some like it; some laugh. It is made of midnight blue plush, with a yellow figured top and a yellow feather butterfly off at the side.

Shaped like a man's derby, this hat of garnet plush has a silk ribbon to match which trails behind the left shoulder. Gray roses are used.

"One must be pretty to wear this hat"—of black velvet and patent leather.

A flat sailor, of "tete de negre" plush, trimmed with cream and brown fur and sacred bird of Siam feathers.

Butterflies are the prevailing motif. This is a hat of black velvet with a black lace butterfly.

MULHALL BARES FRAUD USED TO DEFEAT HEARST IN RACE FOR GOVERNOR

Lobbyist Got Confidence of Up-State Chairman in New York Campaign by Fake Letter and Betrayed Plans of Democrats to Republican Leaders.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—Colonel Martin M. Mulhall, self-confessed lobbyist of the National Association of Manufacturers, testified before the Garrett Lobby Investigating Committee that his political lines crossed those of William Randolph Hearst in 1906, and that he helped to defeat Mr. Hearst for the New York Governorship.

Introduced by a letter forged upon the letterhead of the Hearst campaign headquarters, Mulhall said that he went into Congressman Fairchild's district, the Twenty-fourth New York, an upstate district, and gained the confidence of a local campaign manager for Mr. Hearst.

Tells Plans to Republicans.

Learning from the latter the plans of campaign in the district, Mulhall reported them to Fairchild, and Republican plans to checkmate them and defeat their object were perfected. Mulhall was employed for a week on this work with the approval, he says, of Fairchild.

Mulhall told a few days ago how he started to work for Senator Foraker in Ohio. He was prepared to make his report to Foraker when the Hearst Standard Oil disclosure letters were first made public. Foraker admitted to the Senate committee that these letters defeated him for re-election to the Unied Staes Senate.

Unconcernedly, Mulhall told how he had taken his "fake letters" of introduction to Fairchild and got his instructions for political detective work. He met Mr .Hearst's friends, including a clergyman, at a hotel, entertained them and worked his way into their confidence. He ascertained that the Republican district committee chairman was not friendly to Fairchild.

Letter Was Faked.

"Whose signature did this fake letter of introduction bear?" asked Representative Stafford.

"It was that of some member of the Democratic State Committee."

"Who were you represented to be?"

"I was supposed to be connected with Mr. Hearst, and so represented myself to Mr. Scott, the candidate, I think, opposing Fairchild."

"It was your first meeting with him, and you won his confidence to the extent of getting from him his campaign plans?" said Stafford.

"Yes."

"Who signed this fake letter?"

"The letter was given to me by Marshall Cushing, and I can not say who signed it. Mr. Cushing was a very good letter writer. He told me it was a fake letter. I knew that Cushing was not connected with the Hearst organization."

Mr. Stafford—He was connected in the way of using the letterhead of the Hearst organization to good effect.

"Mr. Cushing thought it was a smart political trick, and I guess that was his system of working," replied Mulhall.

Scott Well Deceived.

"Mr. Scott's confidence was so complete," continued Mulhall, "that he told me Mr. Hearst had sent him a number of workers and quite an amount of money, and I believe in this letter the latter stated that they were ready to send at that time more workers and more money."

"Scott swallowed everything, hook, line and all, as far as you represented it," commented Stafford.

"Yes."

"Did Mr. Fairchild know all about this arrangement?" asked Representative Kline.

"Yes, he knew about hte letter, and I had Mr. Fairchild's advice in presenting it. He has spoken to me since about that clever piece of work."

Confusion in Study Of Grammar Dispelled

Committee's Report on Standardizing Nomenclature Makes Good Impression.

COLORADO SPRINGS, Aug. 16.—Standardization of grammatical nomenclature, which will do away with the confusion in the study of English, as well as other languages, in American schools, has been effected by a committee of fifteen, of which Professor Hills, of Colorado College, was a member.

The committee made a report to the National Education Association in convention at Salt Lake City and its adoption without amendment virtually insures the following of the committee's recommendations in all schools and colleges.

According to Professor Hills, it was found that in the sentence "John is good," the word "good" was called by nine different names in 25 grammars; the word "John" in "This is John," was called by nineteen terms, and in "We made John president," the word "president" was given eighteen different names in the textbooks examined.

Prisoner 34 Years, Hates to Leave Jail

Slayer of Policeman Says Such Life as He Led Has Not Been Failure.

THOMASTON, MAINE, Aug. 16.—Samuel D. Haynes, of Detroit, walked out of the prison gates to-day, after serving 34 years for the murder of James L. Robbins, a policeman, at Rockland, in 1879.

At midnight his sister, Mrs. F. H. Rogers, of Detroit, had telephoned the prisoner that Governor Haines had pardoned him.

"The battle is won," Haynes told Warden Ham, "but I hate to leave." Outside the prison he held a reception for a big crowd, who knew him as a model prisoner.

"I am willing to forgive and forget," he said. "The prison has been a good thing for me, but I feel that I have paid my bill to society.

"I have been in prison since I was 17 years old, but I have spent the better part of my life here trying to be useful. There is no failure in such a life as that."

Returns $1,000 Gems And Gets $1 Reward

Laundry Girl Is Not Even Thanked When She Returns Diamonds.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—For returning $1,000 worth of jewelry to its owner, Miss Ella Veronica Shea, of No. 969 Putnam avenue, Brooklyn, was rewarded with a dollar.

Miss Shea works in a laundry. While unpacking a laundry bag received from Mrs. I. Rodberg of No. 635 Decatur street, she found four diamond rings and a diamond lavalliere.

"The shock which Mrs. Rodberg got when she received the jewelry was so great she forgot to thank me," said Miss Shea yesterday. "I had scarcely got back to the office when a man came running after me with an envelope in which was a note of thanks and—a dollar."

PASTOR SHEDS HIS COLLAR.

GRANITE CITY, Aug. 16.—A new pace has been set by the Rev. W. W. Brown, pastor of the First Baptist Church at Granite City, who tells the men to come without collar or neckties and with sleeves rolled up if that will conduce to their comfort. He promises to do likewise.

Webster's Old Home Restored by Society

Preparations Are Made for Celebration of Rehabilitation of Birthplace of Statesman.

FRANKLIN, N. H., Aug. 16.—The ancient New Hampshire farmhouse in which Daniel Webster was born has been reset on its old foundations and restored to look as it did in the eighteenth century when Webster was a small boy, and preparations have been made to celebrate its rehabilitation. It is in the town of Franklin, and the celebration will take place August 28.

It is expected that President Wilson will attend and deliver an address. Samuel W. McCall, former Congressman from Massachusetts, who was the principal speaker at the hundredth anniversary of Webster's graduation from Dartmouth College, will speak.

Rivals David Harum As a Horse Trader

But Youth Is Forced to Pay Back Money He Got for a 'Frozen Tail.'

INDIANAPOLIS, Aug. 16.—William H. Schmidt, 17, a horse trader, was directed to give back $70 he accepted from Tom Cavanaugh for a "frozen tail" horse, and return the horse to Tom Shroyer, a liveryman, when his case was heard in court.

Schmidt was charged with false pretenses, in that he represented the horse to have a useful and active fly chaser. As a matter of fact, the swatting appendage was merely ornamental and utterly useless. Schmidt said he did not know the horse had a broken tail.

"Why that horse was as helpless as a baby," asserted Mrs. Cavanaugh. "We had to carry along a fly brush as well as a buggy whip everywhere we went."

Autumn Styles in Millinery Show That Large Creations Are Thing of the Past—Butterflies Are Popular.

"Now, deny it if you can,
"Though it's manners make the man,
"It's millinery makes the girl."
—Song from "Red Feather."

Millinery, then, being such a serious affair, some 1,400 women and 100 men will visit Atlanta these later weeks of August, and they will spend close to $1,000,000 for millinery. The "openings" for fall and winter styles are on in Atlanta's great wholesale houses, and the great semi-annual buying is under way.

The general public will not see these styles for a month or so to come. Therefore, this is NEWS—real hot stuff—for feminine readers. Here goes:

Black predominates.
Nearly all hats are almost collapsible.
Butterflies are the prevailing motif in trimmings.
Few large hats are shown.
Feathers and fur are "particularly good."
Rats and switches apparently have gone to stay, for nearly all the new hats are close-fitting and necessitate scant coiffures.

For instance, one of the very prettiest styles shown—from masculine viewpoint at least—is a new poke of black plush with pink facing and paradise feathers. This is a saucy little hat that goes with a pert face and lively manner. One can imagine it on a vivacious little demoiselle at Longchamps—where, in fact, it was photographed by an Atlanta designer, and copied.

Splendiferous, indeed, must be the sacred bird of Siam, whose feathers adorn an extremely flat plush hat of sailor shape.

Fur Cream and Brown.

A pelt of some little animal, about the size of a weasel, twists about the crown, and the two feathers complete the trimming. The fur is cream and brown. The feathers are brown with wonderful bluish markings more beautiful than a peacock's glories. The plush is a new shade of brown called "tete de negre," which sounds much better in French than in English. All this sets "hubby" back about fifty.

"Tete de negre," by the way, vies with black in popularity.

A huge black butterfly is the only trimming on a little black silk velvet turban with soft crown.

"Smart. And good. Oh! Very good, indeed," is what the designer calls it. Let it go at that. Why argue?

All humanity is divided into two parts. Of these, one is composed of those to whom styles in millinery are a serious matter; the other, of those who grin.

There's one hat which will bring strict division of these parties. Now, from the "pro's" standpoint it is a creation of midnight blue plush, with a variegated plush top on the crown, and an artistic feather butterfly perched airily on the edge of the brim.

Now, the "antis": It's a dark blue contraption with a yellow, scrambled, Bulgarian top, and a funny little yellow thingamajig sticking up behind.

Take your choice.

"Donna e mobile," as our old friend Caruso hes it—"woman is fickle"—and he might add, inexplicable. No doubt this is pretty, to a woman.

One must be pretty to wear the little black velvet hat, shaped like a traffic cop's helmet and trimmed with patent leather fixings—so says the designer. If this is carefully explained to customers, the hat should sell well.

Derby Covers Eye.

Rather a novelty, but pretty, too, is a hat shaped like a man's derby, which pulls down almost covering the right eye. The shape is of garnet plush, and a long ribbon matching this shade is thrown across the throat from right to left, so that it hangs down behind the left shoulder. Gray roses complete the trimming.

Current history ever finds its reflection in the styles. Bulgarian designs still are with us, and now comes a blue plush hat—one of the few large ones, in the Mexican style—that is, it has a broad, flat brim ornamented with fuzzy little balls.

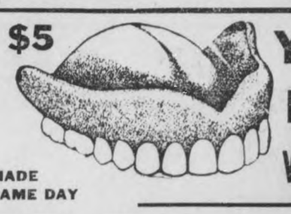
Big velvet hats, very like the sort art students wear in the Latin Quarter of Paris, are to be seen. They are almost bare of trimming—just great, floppy pieces of black velvet, sometimes to be pulled down over one eye.

"Dubitine" is a new material. It is seen to best advantage in a hat with a brim flaring up on one side, and with a round crown. An aigrette stands pertly off to the rear. The crown is of turquoise dubitine and the underbrim of taupe satin.

If you see a slate gray rubber hat worn by some pretty girl on Peachtree street this winter, don't say you weren't prepared for it. This is due notice that rubber has been called into use for millinery. It was sure to come, straw, feathers, furs, flowers, silks, satins, fruits, birds, animals and what-not having been used.

The rubber hats are severe in design. One has a "drape" to go under the chin, made of green and blue chenille. "They say" rain won't hurt them, and that they're fine for autoing, because they're small.

It is the auto, so every one in the millinery trade believes, that has killed the big hat. A big hat is a nuisance in a limousine, and hard to keep on in a touring car or runabout—and the rest of us like to act as if we might go autoing, even if we do not.



ANTI-KISSING LAW NOT IN BOOKS, SO SUITOR IS FREED

TRINIDAD, COLO., Aug. 16.—Howard B. Smith, employee of a local moving picture house, was arrested a few days ago for publicly kissing and hugging Florence Vigil, a pretty 14-year-old girl, of Verjemo Park, N. Mex. Taken to the city jail, it was found there was no city ordinance that prevented kissing either in public or private, and the offender was released with the admonition of Police Judge Hines to "go forth and kiss no more." The affair was the result of a summer afternoon flirtation.

Tells Positive Cure For all Foot Troubles

Science has proven that nearly all foot troubles originate from a common cause; that of injured tissues. The following information will be welcomed by thousands of victims of daily foot torture. No matter how many patent medicines you have tried in vain, this treatment which was formerly known only to doctors will do the work. Don't waste time. Get it at once. "Dissolve two tablespoonfuls of Calocide compound in a basin of warm water. Soak the feet for a full fifteen minutes, gently rubbing the sore parts." The effects are marvelous. All pain disappears instantly and the feet feel simply delightful. Corns and callouses can be peeled right off. Bunions, aching feet and sweaty, smelly feet get immediate relief. Use this treatment a week and your foot troubles will be a thing of the past. Calocide works through the pores and removes the cause. Any druggist has Calocide in stock or will get it from his wholesale house. Don't be influenced to take something else instead. A twenty five cent box is said to be enough to cure the worst feet.

SULZER AND LAWYERS GRIMLY FIGHTING TO CLEAR GOVERNOR'S NAME

Wife Is Determined to Take Stand to Tell Her Husband's Accusers That She Signed His Name to Checks to Gamble in the Stock Market.

ALBANY, N. Y., Aug. 16.—Governor William Sulzer and a formidable staff of lawyers are busy in the preparation of an answer to the impeachment charges brought against him by the New York Assembly. Issue will be joined and a trial held September 18 before the New York Senate and Court of Appeals, sitting in joint assembly.

The sensation of the trial and the incident which the public most avidly awaits will be the statement by Mrs. Sulzer, the brave wife whose attempt to save her husband from disgrace involved a sacrifice of her own honor.

The most telling charge against Sulzer is that he appropriated to his own use in stock exchange gambling certain checks which were given toward his campaign fund. Mrs. Sulzer, in statements to her friends, declared that she indorsed the checks and used them in Wall street speculation without her husband's knowledge, and that she would go on the stand at the trial of her husband to reiterate the story of her misdeed.

Enemies Are Pitiless.

If she does, she will be bared to vicious attacks and cross-examination by the lawyers for the prosecution, who, as members of the assembly which impeaches her husband, already have proved themselves pitiless and vindictive.

It may be that her statement, proved true, will save her husband. None of its purport was revealed to the General Assembly before the impeachment came. However, to-day the Governor announces that under no circumstances will he allow his wife to become a witness, even if h's honor and his fortune suffer.

Mrs. Sulzer is in a state of nervous collapse. The long strain imposed on her during the investigation by the General Assembly told on her, and she succumbed when the impeachment vote was announced. So serious became her condition that the Governor was forced to send a hurry call to New York summoning a famous nerve specialist.

In her chamber Mrs. Sulzer is hysterical, and it is understood that she insists that she be allowed to testify for her husband.

Mrs. Sulzer was Miss Clara Rodelheim, of Philadelphia. She married Sulzer, who then was a Congressman, July 7, 1908. They have no children, and Mrs. Sulzer is enthrallingly interested in politics. During her husband's campaign for the election to Congress, and his subsequent campaign for Governor, she accompanied him on his speaking trips.

She, Too, Is Combative.

More than anything else she openly admires his combative nature. She is aggressive and positive herself. Of her husband she is quoted as saying: "He's ready to fight at the drop of the hat, and he'll drop the hat himself. As long as he fights, I'll fight, too—and then some."

If she takes the stand in her heroic attempt to save her husband, it is likely that her reputation will suffer. Otherwise, her husband's reputation will suffer, her friends say.

These friends say that a week ago she besought the Governor to permit her to tell her story to the public, and he refused. They say, too, that he consented to the publication of her statement only when he found he could not prevent it, and that it had been widely circulated as a rumor on the lips of the public.

Governor Sulzer, the fighter, is easily recognized in his avowed intention of holding his office even with the impeachment charges against him. His enemies in the General Assembly have declared against his right of remaining in office and have insisted that Lieutenant Governor Glynn take over the reins of government. But Sulzer shows a firm determination to stay in, and the wildest rumors are given credence as to what he will do to retain his authority. It is even asserted that he will call the militia to prevent the entrance of the Lieutenant Governor, and to prevent his own ejection. At any rate, he and his lawyers firmly contend for his right to hold office with the impeachment proceedings pending.

Herrick Issues Statement.

Little is said concerning the approaching ordeal by either the Governor or his attorneys. Mrs. Sulzer can not be reached, and it is understood that could she be seen no statement would be obtained, as she has the attorneys' orders to say nothing. Judge D. Cady Herrick, who will act as chief counsel for the defense, made a statement, which is regarded as the only word to come from him.

"Counsel for Governor Sulzer," he said, "have no desire to try the case in the newspapers. We have engaged in his defense not for William Sulzer, but as a professional duty to the Governor of the State, and to preserve, so far as it can now be preserved, the good name and fame of the State.

"After an examination of Mr. Sulzer in relation to the transactions disclosed by the Frawley committee, we are satisfied that there has been only a partial revelation of the facts so far, as we are satisfied that he has been guilty of no willful wrongdoing."

Besides Judge Herrick, Governor Sulzer's attorneys at the trial will be Irving G. Vann, Syracuse; Louis Marshall and Austen G. Fox, New York; Harvey D. Hinman, Binghamton; Virgil Kellogg, Watertown, and Judge James Gay Gordon, of Philadelphia.

Governor Sulzer, the eighth Governor of all the United States to be impeached, is the victim of Tammany's vengeance.

7 Governors Have Been Impeached

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—In all the United States only seven other Governors have faced impeachment proceedings. These men and the results that followed were:

Charles Robinson, Kansas, 1862, acquitted.

Harrison Reed, Florida, 1868, charges dropped.

William W. Holden, North Carolina, 1870, removed.

Powell Clayton, Arkansas, 1871, charges dropped.

David Butler, Nebraska, 1871, removed.

Henry C. Warmouth, Louisiana, 1872, term expired and proceedings dropped.

Adelbert Ames, Mississippi, 1876, resigned.

WILLIAM SULZER, impeached Governor of New York, with his wife, who intends to sacrifice her own good name to save him. Below is Martin Glynn, Lieutenant Governor, who disputes Sulzer's claim that he is still in office.

BREAKS TOOTH ON PEARL.

ADMITS HE IS A SLAYER TO SAVE DYING BROTHER

Arthur Spaugh Tells the Pardon Board That He Shot Sheriff at Ironton, Mo.

JEFFERSON CITY, MO., Aug. 16.—In a last attempt to get a parole for his brother, William Spaugh, Jr., who is ill of tuberculosis and can live but a short time, Arthur Spaugh, the younger brother, also an inmate of the Penitentiary, told the Board of Pardons that he killed Sheriff Polk at Ironton, Mo., to save William's life. William Spaugh is serving a life sentence for shooting Polk, while Arthur Spaugh was sentenced to fifty-five years.

"Bill did not shoot Sheriff Polk. I shot him when I thought he intended to kill Bill. He had already shot Bill through the shoulder and was advancing on him when I fired. My brother had his hands in the air, begging the sheriff not to shoot him," said Arthur Spaugh.

Doesn't Care for Himself.

"I do not want my brother to die here. He is not guilty of the killing of Sheriff Polk. I alone am guilty. Bill was not even armed when the sheriff was shot. I thought the sheriff intended to kill my brother, and after warning him not to advance three times, shot him. I hope the Governor will release Bill so that he can spend what few days he has to live a free man. It does not matter what becomes of me."

The prison physician says that William Spaugh can not live to exceed sixty days and his death is expected sooner. William Spaugh has arranged to have his body shipped back to their old home at Ironton Mo., for burial, provided he does not secure his release.

Mother Also Pleads.

Arthur Spaugh has tuberculosis also, and is unable to do heavy work. He is in the first stage of the disease, but is able to work about the halls and do light work in the open air.

Mary E. Spaugh, aged mother of the Spaughs, has been here much of late pleading with the Board of Pardons and Paroles for her dying son. She says she would like to take him to her home in St. James, Mo., and nurse him until he dies.

Arthur Spaugh has been in the penitentiary since July 27, 1906. William Spaugh was received July 26, 1907. Both have been model prisoners.

DEEP-LAID PLOT IN APPOINTMENT HOBSON CHARGE

Alabama Congressman Attacks Governor O'Neal for Naming Clayton for U. S. Senate.

MONTGOMERY, Aug. 16.—Congressman Richmond Pearson Hobson of the Sixth District, who was a candidate for the Senatorship against the late Senator Joseph F. Johnston, in a warm card charges a deep-laid conspiracy in the appointment by Governor O'Neal of Congressman Henry D. Clayton to succeed Senator Johnston.

From Washington comes the news that there is an overwhelming opinion among both Democrats and Republicans in the Senate that Governor O'Neal had no right to appoint without specific authority from the Legislature of Alabama, and that the belief is general that Mr. Clayton has no chance of being seated on the credentials he holds.

Governor O'Neal said to-day that in event the United States Senate rejected the appointment of Congressman Clayton he would act on the recommendation of the Senate Judiciary Committee. He refused to say whether or not he would call an extra session of the Legislature.

Hobson's Card.

Congressman Hobson says of Clayton's appointment:

"It is a brazen defiance of law, the people and the Constitution—the most humiliating travesty of our political institutions.

"It is a defiance of the law and the rights of the people, willfully made with the knowledge that the appointment is illegal and is so regarded by the United States Senators, not only by the opposition Senators, but by Democratic Senators as well.

"The effect of the appointment will be to postpone indefinitely the settlement of the question. This delay is fully understood by the Alabama politician, and is incurred against the earnest advice of our Democratic leaders.

"In the midst of the crisis of the tariff bill, the interest of the Democratic party, the relief and welfare of the nation, the law of the land, the sacred political rights of the people seem to have counted for naught.

Jockeying Charged.

"The fact is that after all the jockeying and caucusing, the scheme went through precisely as Mr. Bankhead had planned. It was very remarkable how Senator Bankhead hurried to Alabama and had the whole specious article prepared to give out almost immediately.

"You will recall that Senator Bankhead and the lamented Johnston were themselves chosen by popular vote; in fact, the principle was considered of such sacred importance in our progressive State that we even went so far as to provide an election for successors to our great Morgan and Pettus before the deaths of these grand old men.

"How, then, can any true Alabaman stand for the miserable expedient of having their United States Senators appointed by Emmet O'Neal instead of being elected by the people themselves?

"It belongs to the people. It is theirs by law as well as every true consideration of the Democratic rights. They demand it, and they are not going to be fooled or hoodwinked by the hair-splitting quibblings of technical lawyers or professional pot-politicians."

HENRY D. CLAYTON, who has been appointed Senator from Alabama by Governor O'Neal to fill Senator Johnston's unexpired term.

Tammany and Sulzer's Fight Thrilling Drama

When Governor William Sulzer, the "People's Governor," and the "Poor Man's Friend," refused to do the bidding of Boss Murphy, of Tammany Hall, the most remarkable political drama New York State had ever seen was enacted. From that very moment Tammany Hall carried out a steady and consistent program of guerrilla warfare against Sulzer and all things Sulzer.

A tammanyized Legislature instituted an "investigation" of Sulzer and Sulzer reciprocated with an "investigation" of some Tammany controlled State departments.

Charles F. Murphy, the Tammany Hall leader, sought to have certain organization men appointed to office. Sulzer declined to appoint them, although he had been something of an organization man himself for a great many years, and immediately after his election to the governorship, had been extremely intimate with Murphy.

Breaks With Tammany.

Sulzer broke with Tammany over the question of appointments. Immediately afterward he employed guards to protect him against assassination, which he feared. No attempt to injure Sulzer's person was made, but political attacks came thick and fast. Sulzer first was accused of perjury, committed, according to his accuser, in 1890. The acquisation carried no weight. The public retained its confidence in Sulzer. Then another bombshell was expected. A suit was filed in Philadelphia by a young woman, Mignon (Polly) Hopkins, charging Sulzer with breach of promise.

Miss Hopkins asked $30,000 damages for her wounded heart. Sulzer admitted having known Miss Hopkins some years ago, but denied that he had ever proposed marriage to her and declared the filing of the suit was engineered by his Tammany enemies.

Fights for Direct Primary.

When Sulzer promised direct primaries to the people of New York he evidently meant what he said. When he went into office he started such legislation. Immediately he discovered his political associates didn't want direct primaries and would not back him up in his fight for the primary bill as he framed it. His bill was introduced in the Legislature, but before it was voted upon a Tammany direct primaries bill, which Sulzer characterized a "fraud upon the people," was introduced in both branches of the Legislature and passed. Governor Sulzer promptly vetoed it, and then called upon the Legislature to pass his bill.

The Assembly and then the Senate killed the Sulzer bills, amid wild scenes in the Senate and Assembly chambers. There were shouts of rage and shaking of fists in the direction of the Capitol. There was wild cheering when it was announced that the Sulzer bill had been killed.

Sulzer then inaugurated a campaign to obtain direct primaries. He enlisted many well-known men in his cause, and called the Legislature in extraordinary session. It had then become a case of open warfare. It became Sulzer's object to make himself leader of the Democratic party in New York.

He had lined up with him some 33 county chairmen and about 17 State committeemen. In one of his speeches at this time Sulzer said that he had been attacked, vilified and threatened as no other man ever had been who had occupied the Governorship of New York.

Tammany Loses Patronage.

Tammany lost hundreds of thousands of dollars in patronage. No appointments of Tammany men were made by Sulzer. George W. Blake was made a special investigator by the Governor and set about unearthing incompetency in the State prisons. John A. Hennessy was made an investigator by Sulzer and he conducted several probes into various State departments. Tammany verged on panic. Finally that organization turned on Sulzer the very same weapon that he had used against it and an investigation of Sulzer's campaign fund was instituted by a legislative committee composed of Tammany men.

Senator Frawley, a Tammany chieftain, was the chairman of the committee, and it commenced its sittings in Albany. The first witness to be called was Louis A. Sarecky, Sulzer's private secretary and campaign manager. Sarecky was questioned about Sulzer's campaign fund, but he declined to answer. It was intimated that Sulzer had received checks for his campaign fund which he had not listed in his sworn statement, a misdemeanor under the laws of New York State.

Two checks were introduced into the evidence. One was for $2,500 from Kuhn, Loeb & Co., the bankers, and indorsed "Mr. Schiff's contribution to the Sulzer campaign." The other check was for $500, and was signed by Abram I. Elkus, a prominent New York City lawyer. It was alleged by the Frawley committee that neither of these checks appeared in Sulzer's campaign list.

Then Came Stock Dealing.

At a later session of the Frawley committee, held in New York, testimony was given to the effect that the "People's Governor" and the "Poor Man's Friend" had owed the stock brokerage firm of Harris & Fuller $48,599.38 on January 1, 1912, when Sulzer was in Congress. According to testimony and evidence offered, Sulzer had been a steady loser in the stock market.

The brokers to whom he owed money dunned him for payment, according to the testimony, and Sulzer finally was rescued by his business partner, ex-Governor A. E. Spriggs, of Montana, who paid $5,000, and Louis M. Josephthal, of New York, who on July 19 last paid $26,749.21.

It also was testified before the committee that Sulzer had traded with Boyer, Griswold & Co. Charles H. Reynolds, formerly cashier for that firm, testified that on October 16 last Frederick L. Colwell, whom he understood to be an agent for Sulzer, had bought 200 shares of Big Four Railroad stock for $12,025. The stock was paid for the same day, with eight checks and $7,125 in cash. One check given in payment for the stock was a campaign contribution. The Frawley committee alleged that the seven other checks also were campaign contributions, and asserted that this would be proved.

State Has Turkey Farm to Cut Price

Ohio Goes Into Poultry Business When Cost of Thanksgiving Birds Soar.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, Aug. 16.—The State of Ohio is going into the turkey raising business. Kind o' forced into it, as it were, because of the high price of the favored Thanksgiving bird and the demand from State institutions for the bird.

The experiment was tried out a little the last year, and so successful did it prove that this year practically in all of the State institutions where any chickens are kept turkeys have been added.

The price of turkeys has been gradually soaring until they have become almost too expensive for even the State of Ohio to buy, and rather than permit the wards of the State to go hungry on Thanksgiving Day the employees of the different institutions began the work of hatching them.

Coffee Tastes Cause Break in Family

Wife Liked Hers Strong, Husband Preferred It Weak, so She Entered Suit.

ALLENTOWN, PA., Aug. 16.—Black coffee and the high cost of living wrecked the romance of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Hauser, of Catasauqua, who were married three years ago, when he was 63 and she was 43, each embarking in matrimony the second time. The wife, Zenobia, has started divorce proceedings.

Mrs. Hauser says she was used from life with her first husband to good black coffee. Hauser wanted his coffee as weak as dishwater, and also objected to the bills she ran up at the store for her favorite beverage. The rackets that followed got on her nerves to such an extent that she desires to resume the state of single blessedness.

The court allowed her $6 a week temporary alimony.

Summer-Spoiled Skin Removed by Absorption

(From Home Queen.)

As undue summer exposure usually leaves an undesirable surface of tan, dust or grease, often freckles, too, it would seem more sensible to remove such surface than to hide it with cosmetics. There's nothing better for this than ordinary mercolized wax, which actually absorbs an unwholesome complexion. The thin layer of surface skin is itself absorbed, gently and gradually, so there's no inconvenience and no detention indoors. Just spread the wax lightly over the entire face at bedtime and take it off in the morning with warm water. If you will get one ounce of mercolized wax at the drug store and use for a week or so, you may expect marked improvement daily. When the underlying skin is wholly in view your complexion will be a marvel of spotless purity and beautiful whiteness.

Don't let those summer wrinkles worry you; worry will breed more wrinkles. Better to banish them by bathing the face in a solution of powdered saxolite, 1 oz., dissolved in ½ pt. witchhazel. Used daily for a while this will be found wonderfully effective. (Adv.)

Goodrich Guide Posts are as dependable as

Goodrich Tires

—Best in the Long Run

Over fifty thousand miles of American highways are marked by Goodrich guide posts, and more are being put up right along. Goodrich guide posts tell the motorist how to go where he wants to go. Goodrich Tires take him there.

You can depend upon the exact knowledge of rubber which comes from our forty-three years experience in manufacturing all kinds of rubber products—which is crystalized in the Goodrich principle of Unit Molding.

Every Goodrich Tire is made and molded as a unit. The layers of fine, strong fabric, strips of pure rubber, side strips, bead, and the thick tough tread are literally molded into a unit in our single vulcanization.

The result is a unit tire which gives resistance and resiliency, as both tire users and automobile manufacturers testify by their choice.

Your tire dealer will supply you with the particular Goodrich Tire which best meets the requirements of your car, whether it is the Goodrich American Clincher, Goodrich Quick Detachable, Goodrich Straight Bead, Goodrich Cord for electrics, Goodrich Metal Stud, Goodrich Pneumatic Truck, Goodrich Bailey Tread or Goodrich Safety Tread.

NEW MEMBERS' PET BILLS DYING IN COMMITTEE

Recently Elected Congressmen Have Hard Time Telling Why District Doesnt Profit.

RULES OF CAUCUS FORBID

Measures to Build Postoffice at Squash Center Will Have to Wait for a Session.

By JONATHAN WINFIELD.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—The new members of the House—there are approximately 150 of them—are beginning to find out something about the intricacies of legislation at Washington, and just now they are busy explaining away a bunch of campaign promises. The new member isn't getting anywhere with pet legislation and he is a sorely distressed individual.

Nearly 7,000 bills and resolutions have been introduced in the House of Representatives since President Wilson called the Sixty-third Congress into extra session early in April. About one in a hundred have received consideration, and the ratio bids fair to be maintained during the remainder of the extra session owing to a rule of the Democratic caucus which binds the House committees not to report out legislation before the regular session, which begins in November.

In consequence of this unexpected caucus rule, the new member who came to Congress leaving many promises behind is up against it. His hands are tied; he may introduce bills and resolutions to his heart's content, but they won't get anywhere for months, and perhaps not then. It is embarrassing to make explanations, especially when a statesman beat out some other fellow by promising big things for the district.

All Have Horde of Bills.

The average new member, as soon as he reaches the House chamber, walks up to the bill basket and drops therein a bill providing that the town of Jonesville shall have a $25,000 postoffice. He follows this with a dozen or so bill's proposing that certain worthy pensioners in his district shall have their annual pensions increased. Then he comes along with the crying complaint that the little Ben River needs about $50,000 or $100,000 to improve navigation in order that the towns of Squash Center and Hickory Hollow may have increased transportation facilities.

Congressman Newcomer then passed the word along to the newspaper correspondent representing the home paper that he has introduced the foregoing bill and will push it to an early passage. The people back home are duly elated and begin to get glad that they retired the former Congressman and sent so active a successor in his place.

In a short time the new member drops around to the committee to which his various pet kind bills have been referred. Without desiring to appear too solicitous, he gently inquires when he may expect the committee to get together and take up the pressing need of his district. The chairman, with equal gentleness, breaks the news that it will be absolutely impossible to do anything for the present.

Caucus Rules Forbid.

In the first place, says the chairman, a quorum of the committee isn't in town. In the second place, the caucus has forbidden the report of anything except currency, tariff reform and pressing appropriations bills or resolutions at this session. The new member is absolutely unable to see the justice of such a mandate, even though he may have been a member of the caucus. He thought the rule would apply to the other fellow, not himself. There is general woe and lamentation.

It is the same old story, told over in about 50 different ways. Each new member has a peculiar complaint to make and peculiar local needs to satisfy. There is nothing doing, however, and the recruit statesman is told that he will have to wait until the regular session rolls around.

Off in Canoe on 7,000-Mile Trip

Couple to Make Record Cruise

Argonauts to Visit the South

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Green, who have started from Staten Island to cruise to New Orleans and back in a canoe.

Yearning to See Dixie and West Prompts Young Pair to Make Hazardous Journey.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—"We have never been South," said Mrs. Walter Green half to herself. There was yearning in her tone.

"Nor West," said Walter Green, who heard her.

They sat in their canoe as it drifted with the tide, their faces turned away from their Staten Island home, toward the South.

Mrs. Green looked at her husband with a quick inspiration.

"Let's go," she said, eagerly.

And so they planned within a few minutes the 7,000-mile canoe trip on which they started yesterday and which will take them not only South, but West, revealing to them the grandeur of the Mississippi, the warmth of the Gulf Coast and the stretch of the Atlantic Ocean. The two young persons, enthusiastic canoeists both of them, and inveterate campers, will be away from their home for ten months or more in the course of the journey.

Will Call on Wilson.

They started up the Hudson River, going on the first stage of the journey to Yonkers. Thence they will go through the Erie Canal to Buffalo, through Lake Erie to Ashtabula, then to Beaver Canal and Rochester, Pa. From there they will go up the Ohio to Pittsburg, down the Ohio to Cairo, up the Mississippi to St. Louis, down the Mississippi to New Orleans, across the Gulf of Mexico and along the coast to St. James City, Fla., through the Everglades and a river or two to Palm Beach, up Indian River to Jacksonville, along the Atlantic coast to Chesapeake Bay, up to Washington to call on President Wilson and present a letter from Mayor Gaynor. Last they will go by canal to Delaware River, Raritan Canal and river to New York Bay and home.

A crowd cheered the gay young couple at their start. A party of suffragettes, admirers of Mrs. Green for her daring, presented her with a "Votes for Women" pennant, which her craft will fly. The life-saving crew of Clifton, the Greens' home, gave them a pennant, which also became a part of the equipment.

Light Equipment Carried.

In order to make the canoe as light as possible, they took only four boxes containing provisions, camp equippage and clothing, and two large duffel bags containing a small circular tent and bedding. All was covered with canvas, which will be used as floor of the tent.

It is the intention of the couple to put into a city, town or village each night, pitch their tent and sleep for eight hours. When the stores they carry run out, they will get new supplies at the places where they will stop.

The Greens are anticipating with the greatest eagerness the portion of their trip that will take them to the South, about the gulf and the South Atlantic coast.

PASTOR POSING AS A DRUG USER GETS VICE DATA

Visits Omaha Stores and Secures Evidence for the Grand Jury. Made Up Like Tramp.

OMAHA, Aug. 16.—In order to more effectively carry on war against vice of all kinds, the Rev. A. E. Hess, pastor of the Hirst Memorial Young People's Church, of this city, has been disguising himself as a "roughneck" dope fiend and scouring the haunts of the denizens of the underworld for proofs of lawbreaking to present to the Grand Jury.

His latest tour was through a number of drug stores suspected of selling "coke." For his disguise he secured the services of a professional costumer, and so good was his "makeup" that he now has in his possession a hatful of little wooden boxes, each containing a few grains of cocaine—each labeled with the time and place of purchase, and in many cases the name of the clerk who sold it.

"I was never so scared in my life as when I started out for the 'dope' drug stores," Mr. Hess. "I was 'made up' like a dope fiend tramp and I was afraid I would be recognized and quizzed. I walked down alleys and hid in doorways every time I saw a policeman. Had I been seen by one of them I surely would have been arrested.

"At the first drug store I entered twice before I raked up enough courage to ask for the cocaine. The first time I merely watched the traffic; and that was terrible enough. I saw a woman fairly weep in her plea for the drug she craved and for which she had not the purchase price. Negroes and white men, trembling with the 'habit,' elbowed each other to the counter. I was unnoticed; they probably took me for one of their kind, which was just what I desired. When I finally asked for the 'snow'—a slang term for cocaine—it was handed out without question. The clerk simply went back behind his prescription case for an instant and emerged with the little box and handed it to me—but not before he took my dime. Later I had the contents of the box analyzed. It was 98 per cent cocaine.

"I got the idea of this individual raid while visiting the Police Court. I noticed that an alarming per cent of the prisoners showed unmistakable signs of being dope fiends. After I began this investigation I found that 'coke' can be purchased at almost any drug store in the lower wards of the city. The police don't, or won't, get the evidence with which to stop the traffic, although, from what I saw, the evidence is lying around loose ready for anyone to pick up and present to the County Attorney."

Mr. Hess is a young man and his congregation is composed almost exclusively of young people. He is college and city bred, and he "knows the ropes" as well as the ordinary young man about town. His sermons on the uplift of the city have attracted much attention. During his "coke" tour he secured enough proofs of law violation to close half the drug stores in the lower part of the city.

Predicts Dancing Is To Be Part of Church

Dr. G. Stanley Hall, President of Clark University, Declares Grace Should Be Encouraged.

GREELEY, COLO., Aug. 16.—That dancing is one of the best forms of exercise that is possible to take and that eventually it will become a part and parcel of the church when the grosser forms of it have been eliminated, was the statement made by Dr. G. Stanley Hall, president of Clark University.

"Dancing in itself as practiced in ancient times is what kept the Greeks and Romans healthful and graceful. The dances of those days were far different from the kind which are popular now and made strong men and graceful women.

"Rhythm is the basis of all physical movement, and I am convinced that this form of amusement, under the proper supervision, will become not only an adjunct to the church, which is proper and right, but to the schools also."

Neighbors Spur Lone Bachelor to Marry

Induce Him to Write to Widow He Never Has Seen and Wedding Follows.

CONCONCULLY, Wash., Aug. 16—Marriage licenses have been issued to Benedict Gubser, of Conconully, and Carolina G. Marshall, of Ontario.

Benedict Gubser has been a bachelor, living on a ranch near Conconully, Carolina G Marshall, was a widow, living alone in Ontario. Neighbors of Gubser's took pity on his bachelorhood and prevailed upon him to write to Carolina Marshall, who was a friend of theirs, but who Gubser had never seen and did not know.

The correspondence was kept up for more than a year, and a short time ago she came to Pine Creep to visit with friends. They were introduced at a neighbor's and in a few days decided to be married.

Trees of Ice Age Found in Illinois

Species Have Been Preserved Through Thousands of Years.

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—Members of the International Phytographic Society who made studies among the hills and cliffs about Lake Bluff this week discovered there species of trees and shrubs that have been retained in the region since the Ice Age. This species, the Europeans found, have been preserved through thousands of years.

The poplar and creeping juniper, examples of the Ice Age flora, rarely found in this part of the temperate zone, were seen flourishing vigorously beside the beech, birch, oak and maple, which followed them in the normal succession. Lake Bluff is said to be "farthest south" for the creeping juniper.

Dog Carries Mail 10 Miles for Master

Faithful Canine Postman Prefers Making His Trips Between Sundown and Dark.

COVINGTON, IND., Aug. 16.—Charles Keller, south of this city, owns a dog which carries letters from Mr. Keller's home to Philip Keller's home, ten miles. When Mr. Keller wishes to communicate with his father he fastens the letter on the dog's neck and instructs him to deliver it.

The trip is always begun between sundown and dark, as this seems to be the time of day that the dog likes to travel best. The following evening the dog will return to his master with a reply.

WAITS FOR WIFE WITH A HEARSE; FINDS HER ALIVE

Husband Who Got Message of Her Death Overjoyed to See Her Alight From Train

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—Heinrich Dietz became the happiest man in Chicago yesterday, and his condition in this respect is likely to be chronic. It all happened in a few seconds. From the depths of woe Mr. Dietz was raised to an ecstatic joy that almost took his breath away.

Dietz is a Russian who came to this country about a year ago, and earned money slowly and saved it until he could rent and furnish a small apartment at No. 529 Hartland court. Then he saved some more and sent a steamship ticket to his wife. She embarked for America. Dietz expected her to arrive here yesterday.

On Thursday night K. W. Kempf, the ticket agent at No. 120 North La Salle street, handed Dietz a telegram from Philadelphia reading:

"Your wife Eva died to-day—on 9:40 B. and O. Comm's Immigration."

That message dropped a somber curtain on Dietz's happiness. To cap his misery, he had almost no money. Kempf in sympathy lent him $10 and gave him a note to P. Hursen, an undertaker. Hursen read the note, then returned the $10 to Dietz and sent a hearse with him to the La Salle street depot.

Dietz was mournfully watching the train when suddenly he saw a plump, rosy cheeked young woman leave it. With a shout he sprang forward and Mr. and Mrs. Dietz were clasped in each other's arms.

Mrs. Dietz had sent a telegram as her husband had requested, but the operator had written "died" instead of "arrived."

Foreign-Born Women Voting Is Restricted

Illinois Attorney General Outlines Conditions Under Which They Can Cast Ballots.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., Aug. 16.—In answer to Mayor Schriver, of Rock Island, for an opinion on votes for women under the new suffrage law and to govern authorities in an approaching election, Attorney General Lucey to-day held:

"That a foreign-born woman who marries a citizen of the United States, whether such citizen be natural born or naturalized, by such an act of marriage becomes a citizen of the United States.

"An unmarried foreign-born woman whose father did not become naturalized until after she arrived at her majority, would not, by such act of naturalization upon the part of her father, become a citizen of the United States.

"A woman born in the United States whose father was not naturalized prior to her arriving at her majority is a citizen of the United States."

Asks Court to Keep Mother-in-Law Away

Wealthy Nebraskan Gets Out Injunction to Curtail Visit of His Wife's Parent.

OMAHA, NEBR., Aug. 16.—Mrs. Levi A. Gardner, of Harvard, Ill., was yesterday placed under a restraining order from the District Court ordering her to keep out of the house of her son-in-law, Leslie L. King, a wealthy business man of Omaha.

Mrs. Gardner has been visiting the King family for some months, and, according to King, is causing trouble between him and his wife. Mrs. Gardner refused to leave when requested to do so, and King applied to the court and secured an injunction. Mrs. Gardner moved to a hotel.

According to King's petition, he furnished his home at a cost of $15,000, and offered to pay his mother-in-law expenses to the amount of $15 per day if she will go somewhere else in the city.

BOLT KILLS HIM ON GRAVE.

CLIFTON HEIGHTS, PA., Aug. 16. Lightning killed Patrick Toomey, 47 years old, on a grave in Holy Cross Cemetery.

HOW 8,000 YEAR OLD STATUE WAS FOUND IN CELLAR

Priceless Bust of Parian Marble of the Archaic Greek Period Was Stolen 15 Years Ago.

BALTIMORE, Aug. 16.—The story of how the priceless Grecian bust stolen from Athens fifteen years ago, was discovered in a cellar near here reads like a romance.

The detectives found it buried in the damp cellar of the store of Charles Memphos. There was nothing to protect it from the soil, which had to be brushed and scraped from the features and hair of the head.

It is just the head and shoulders of a child—a girl about five. But it is one of the finest samples extant of the sculpture of the archaic period of Greece. It is of Parian marble. Its age is placed at 3,000 years, 800 years older than the famous de Milo.

Fifteen years ago the bust was stolen from the National Greek Museum at Athens. Government detectives traced the thief to America. Since the time the Greek Government has spent thousands of dollars searching for it.

The bust was recovered after Memphos had been subjected to a "third degree" quizzing which lasted all night. A spirit of revenge caused the story to come out. Memphos has a nephew, Charles Memphos, with whom he quarreled several weeks ago, and the latter told about the hidden bust.

"Ten, maybe eleven, years ago," said Memphos, "a man work for me. He was Greek like me. He sells bananas for me. His name I forget. One day he want to borrow some money. He came to me and say he have statue worth much money. It come from Athens, he says; I lend him the money. He give me the statue. He never pay the money back. Then he leave me to work for another man. I don't know where he is. I don't know where it came from."

Asked why he had buried the bust, Memphos said because he feared it would be stolen.

WOMEN RUN TOWN WHERE MEN FAILED

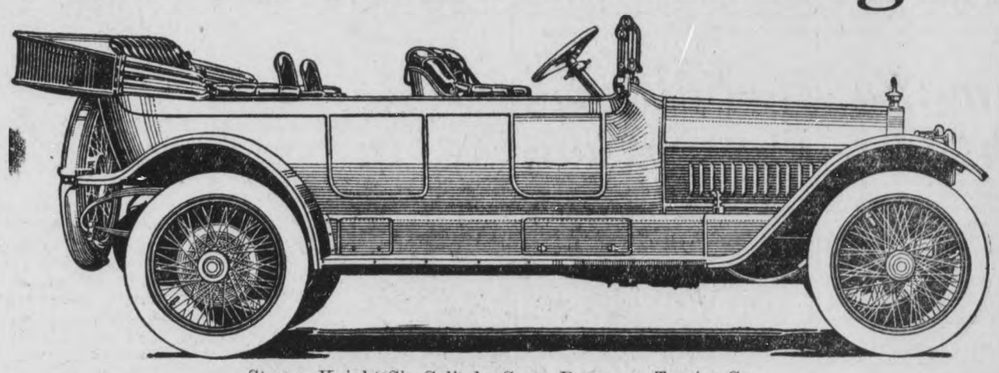
For Twenty Years Efforts to Put Woodland, Colo., on the Map Were Useless.

WOODLAND PARK, COLO., Aug. 16.—The women of Woodland Park have started a movement to put the town on the map of Colorado's summer resorts.

Twenty years ago the men of the town tried it and their efforts ended a few years ago in the best building lots selling for taxes.

When the men of two decades ago thought the town offered great inducements, they voted $20,000 in bonds and built a water system and an artificial lake in the center of the town.

There were bandstands built in the woods around the town, and a band was maintained for two or three summers. Then the bottom fell out.



The other day the waterworks bonds became due. The men who had been the prime movers in the boom of twenty years ago were discouraged and their daughteds and wives took up the affairs of the town.

They organized the Woodland Park Improvement Association. The association succeeded in having the bonded indebtedness compromised for $6,000 and the town now has the money to pay the bonds and improve the water system.

The women have decided to have a series of "fad" days and entertainments by which they will raise funds to put in street lights, street signs, lights at the Colorado Midland station and other improvements.

The women are going to work now to make Woodland Park an important station on the new international automobile highway, which probably will pass through here. They have an organization of 50 active members, and are going to show their fathers, husbands and brothers the right way to put a town on the map. They have done more in a week than the men have done in twenty years, and the men have about concluded that they are amateurs in town building.

For MILADY'S WARDROBE

By MME. HAUTE MONDE.

MANY of the latest summer models are almost entirely made of white muslin richly embroidered in the openwork English style. These dresses are accompanied by broad sashes and short coats of real lace. The hats worn with them are exaggeratedly "picture" in outline. The brim is always wide and the crown almost hidden behind immense butterfly bows of tulle or lace. For occasions of ceremony Leghorn and Tuscan hats are trimmed with sweeping ostrich feathers in white or palé pastel tints.

• • •

Half a dozen different coatees or mantlets can be worn with the same robette, and endless variations can be arranged with the introduction of finely embroidered sashes which possess heavily fringed ends. The corsage portion of these robettes is quite plain, almost like a fine corset cover. It is made plain expressly, because the great object is the introduction of dainty lace and net blouses and picturesque coatees or mantlets. When accompanied by a shady hat in Leghorn trimmed with pale roses and black velvet ribbons these little dresses have a special cachet.

Embroidered linen bags are offered in many shapes and in as many degrees of smartness, some being treated quite as carefully in matters of finish, mountings, etc., as though they were of gorgeous material. Colored linen, embroidered with a touch of Bulgarian embroidery makes some effective bags for individual costumes, but the one-tone color is more practical for general use, and some of the handsome bags of real Irish lace filat or other bold lace are better for general summer use than the embroidered linens.

• • •

Some particularly good belts called the hip belt, are made up in white and fashionable shades and have large oval buckles of the leather.

• • •

The waistline is not only allowed to remain normal, but by swathing it in wide supple sashes its size is considerably increased.

• • •

The soft draped bodice minus the high restraining collar is a feature of artistic gowns worn by women in Paris.

• • •

The French designer knows where a line must be accentuated and in many cases uses tiny buttons for this purpose.

• • •

Keen appreciation of the effective lights and shadows given by a moire effect has returned. Many frocks worn by Paris manequins at the Longchamps races were made of soft crepe with the moire effect.

• • •

Very much worn are the evening coats of fine black net, closely woven with glittering beads.

• • •

Plaited peplums of maline, net or mousseline de soie appear on some of the newest frocks, and these are stiffened by a thin wire or ruching of taffeta at the bottom, so they extend beyond the frock.

• • •

The colored slip is in vogue and summer frocks of sheer linen, mousseline de soie or batiste have pink, blue, yellow or green silk linings. The girdles worn with these costumes are usually of a contrasting color.

• • •

In millinery a single red rose is a note which bids fair to become extremely popular. It nestles among folds of black or white tulle, clings to the edge of the brim, hangs over the hair on the underbrim or forms a spikelike arrangement at the back.

The large garden hats of leghorn, maline and lace are trimmed with black velvet ribbon, drawn about the crown and, passing through the slits at the back, is tied in a flat bow at the back. A single flower placed at the side near the edge of the brim completes the trimming.

• • •

Coats show great diversity of length, plain tailor-made models being shorter than dressier models, in which coats may reach to knees.

• • •

One pretty feature of recent summer frocks has been the lace jacket or coatee with its trimming of fur or of swansdown. Ermine is being used for this purpose, sometimes forming a wide collar at the back. Wide lace bretelles are another feature of late fashions. They are a poor second, it must be admitted, to the surplice and the fichu. But anything that has the temerity to dispute the claims of these two effects deserves some notice.

• • •

Apropos of furs, it is reported that Bechoff-David recently introduced fox scarfs dyed a reddish shade; and the somewhat alarming suggestion is made that next winter we shall see furs artificially colored in brilliant tints. It is rather appalling to think of blue, green, red and violet furs!

• • •

The cincture that suggests the plaster babies of Lucas della Robia, at the Orphanage in Florence, is strongly suggested in some of the sashes that wrap around the waist and girdle the torso of the fashionable woman. When these long sashes first appeared they were not liked, but the public taste now finds them picturesque.

• • •

Velvet, brocaded velvet and metallic brocades are going to be the favored fabrics for these garments in the autumn and winter, just as they are now, and the fur collars that make them smart in summer—according to fashion's paradoxical whims—will make them practical as well as smart when the theater and opera seasons begin.

• • •

Many women are wearing eyelet embroidered stockings in white, black and colors; also white and black silk stockings ornamented with embroidery or insets of lace. The girls who are clever with the needle can fashion these expensive stockings for themselves, and pretty color notes to match the gowns may be introduced.

• • •

Popular prizes at the bridge contests held by the sea are the bathing girl pin cushions. Bisque jointed dolls dressed in red and white and blue and white striped bathing suits are mounted on cushions of Turkish toweling. Some are very prim looking, with the hair in two long braids; others suggest the mermaid with flowing hair. The cushions are shown in ovals, squares, circles, etc., and are arranged to hang up and stand. They are fitted with pins and trimmed with ribbons to match the bathing suits.

• • •

It is almost compulsory for the blue serge suit to have a vest or waistcoat, and all sorts of materials are being used for them. The new duvetyns—a successor to the velvety velours de laine—in the lovely soft colorings are ideal for these waistcoats.

• • •

Chiffon veils are being embroidered, the work being done in floss of the same color. The pattern in all these veils must be so arranged as to make the plain mesh area, whether over the entire face or simply over the eyes, conspicuously transparent by way of contrast.

Now that the pendulum of fashion has swung in the direction of pleated skirts they threaten to become ubiquitous. Women are discovering that the little loose folds at the feet are very becoming, and also that pleated skirts do not really add width to the figure. The sunray pleats are in great demand for such materials as charmeuse, silk cashmere and tussor, but for crepe de chine and chiffon nothing can take the place of the fine accordion pleats.

• • •

In the world of fashion things are frequently topsy-turvy. The unexpected is always welcome. Now that valuable jewels are worn on hats and shoes the homely, but always effective jet ornaments are given a place of honor. Round jet brackets are the latest fad, and they are worn with light and fragile summer gowns of lace and chiffon.

The black and white season in the world of Fashion is now upon us. After the garish colors of the spring, there has come a complete revulsion of feeling. Women of taste have grown disgusted with the color schemes in which crude tints were thrown together by unskilled hands, at the bidding of inartistic brains. Bulgarian tints have sounded the knell of crude colors; for the moment we are black and white or "pastel." And for the Trouville season, of which I shall speak in detail in a future article, an amazing number of pure white costumes are being made. White linen, white China silk, white embroidered lawn—these and many other dainty materials are in constant request for seaside dresses. As a fine white tulle it is being used for a dozen different purposes—for dresses, mantles, millinery, blouses, etc. Very lovely summer gowns are those made of wide-meshed silk net, the net which bears the name of "Tosca." These gowns are mounted over pleated slips of chiffon or crepe de chine and very frequently they are decorated with tiers of graduated flounces. Ordinary Brussels net is also fashionable just now, especially for draped mantles and for pleated waistcoats, the latter being used in connection with tailored suits of fine serge or linen.

• • •

A pretty fashion has been revived for children's summer frocks of thin material. This is the long-ended bow of ribbon, fastened just below the left shoulder. The ribbon, in soft shades of blue or pink, is made into a many-looped rosette, quite in the old fashion, and from the rosette hang three or four streamer ends. The ribbon should not be more than an inch or an inch and a half wide.

FACE COVERED WITH PIMPLES

Spread to Back. Could Hardly Sleep for Burning and Itching. Caused Disfigurement. Cuticura Soap and Ointment Entirely Cured.

214 Brevard St., Tampa, Fla. — "Some three years ago I commenced to suffer from a rash on my face and back. Before the pimples came on my face there were a lot of blackheads. It looked as if the blackheads turned into pimples because after a little while all of them were gone and my face was covered with pimples. They were small at first but gradually grew and right at the end of each pimple it was all white. I carelessly picked them with my finger nails, which made them spread, and I soon discovered them on my back. My back was covered with pimples and my face the same way. At night I could hardly sleep on account of the burning and itching sensation they caused. I felt like a lot of small-sized crabs biting at my back. I did not like to go out because the pimples caused disfigurement.

"Seeing the advertisement of Cuticura Soap and Ointment in one of the magazines I sent for a sample. At night I would put the Cuticura Ointment on my face and back and I was pleased with the result. I bought some Cuticura Soap and Ointment, and I am glad to be able to say that I am entirely cured of pimples." (signed) Jno. O. Darlington, Jan. 25, 1913.

Cuticura Soap 25c and Cuticura Ointment 50c. are sold everywhere. Liberal sample of each mailed free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. T, Boston."

Men who shave and shampoo with Cuticura Soap will find it best for skin and scalp.

Daring Dresses Stir Even Paris

MODISTES THREATENED WITH BOYCOTT

The climax in bold attire for women. The "Languourous Lift" is shown at the left, while the "Dagger Point" appears at the right. All Paris is excited over these latest gowns for evening dress.

"Languorous Lift" and "Dagger Point" Two Productions That Have Caused Criticism.

Special Cable to The American.

PARIS, Aug. 16.—All manner of figure-displaying fashions have eben disported at race courses and in the cafes of Paris by models of the modistes, and in some instances the public of the French Capital has been disgusted by the extreme to which the dictators of feminine attire have gone, but has looked on with unprotesting interest. At length, however, Parisiennes are overwrought. Even the leading dressmakers are endeavoring to put forth evening gowns which in their scantiness expose to view more of the bust and limbs of the wearer than modest woman will countenance. All Paris is stirred and threats of boycotts are to be heard.

The two productions which are accredited with precipitating this disturbed situation are termed the "Languorous Lift" and the "Dagger Point." The situation has been acute for months, and the introduction of these latest effects has but served to bring it to a head. The protests come not alone from women of France, but rumors are drifting into Paris of a revulsion on the part of American and German patrons, who for years have proved so profitable to the modistes of this city.

Being designed exclusively for evening wear, both the "Languorous Lift" and the "Dagger Point" are made with extensive trains. The former gown is so constructed as to display one limb to the height of the knee. This effect is not gained, however, by a side slit, but by the draping of the skirt, which is caught up near the hip and permitted to fall in folds on either side of the exposed limb. The bodice, close fitting, is cut with a deep square neck and trimmed in velvet, which extends down the front, terminating in streamers.

The "Languorous Lift," though the cause of wide criticism, does not approach in boldness the "Dagger Point." This is the most pronounced limb-displaying gown which has been shown here. With its train at the back, the front of the skirt is cut away on either side slightly above the knees to terminate in the sharp point, from which the creation gets its name.

From a front view both lower limbs are entirely exposed, and when the wearer attempts to walk, leaving her train to sweep from knees down her form is displayed. It is with this gown that the most profusely decorated hosiery has been introduced. All manner of unique designs in varied colors are embroidered on these stockings.

The bodice is nearly as scanty as the skirt. Being close fitting, it is cut in a sharp V to the high waist line formed by a broad sash girdle. The arm, like neck and limbs, are exposed to view, since shoulder sleeves are worn.

Decollete Gowns for Day Wear

The newest models for gowns created by the leading dressmakers for the seasons at the fsahionable seaside resorts present several novel features. In the first place, the greater number of these gowns would have been pronounced evening dresses by our mothers, but not by our great-great-grandmothers, who themselves wore decolete corsages in the daytime. The sleeves of the elaborate afternoon gown of to-day are so short and so skimpy that they hardly deserve to be called sleeves at all. In many cases the corsages of garden party and race gowns do not have the pointed back and front effect which is peculiar to the evening dresses of today, but are made round on the shoulders, quite in the style of certain 1830 gowns. White fox stoles and borders are freely used in conjunction with such robes as these. A quaint but exceedingly picturesque idea.

New Jewelry Fads

Platinum, which has bounded up to the height of fashion (and price, too) as a setting for diamonds, seems now to be the supreme metal, and in the latest designs of the jewelers gold is used only in jewels designed for informal morning wear. Small gems have crowded out the larger sizes, and the dainty, filmy creations, to be popular this summer, show this trend. The Balkan war is reflected by jewelry of many colors, and the designs follow the ideas embodied in the jewelry of those countries, but somewhat modified.

Yellow, at present a popular color in the fashion world, has called for the use of amber, topaz and yellow sapphires, while the use of red, in its various shades, has met with a response in the Oriental trend in jewelry. Good taste and fashion go hand in hand in dictating that jewelry appropriate for evening wear is entirely out of place in the morning, when only ornaments of actual use are suitable, as, for example, a simple brooch that holds the collar in place. If a woman is in the habit of wearing earrings—which, by the way, are waning in popularity in the latest jewelry offerings—those of the "stud" type are considered right for morning wear. They may be either of pearls, baroque pearls (of good quality) or a pearl and small diamond. A simple pin at the throat, either in bar, circle, oval or other shape, may be worn in the forenoon with good taste, but in the whole realm of jewelry the pearl necklace of a single strand is the only piece that may be worn with absolute good taste mornings, afternoons or evenings.

Perhaps the most popular single article of jewelry that has appeared in the shops in months is the watch bracelet. Shown in every conceivable pattern and in all grades, from the expensive diamond studded platinum affairs, which only the wealthy can afford, to the cheaper of plated gold and silver offerings.

Lapel Chains for Men

There was a time not so very long ago when lapel buttons and chains were considered bad form by some of the men who pay special attention to matters of dress, but nowadays the fashion is generally accepted, though of course only with the negligee. With the soft shirt and light summer suit these chains are much worn.

The chains are of gold or silver to correspond with the watch, and the button which is fastened in the lapel buttonhole may be of plain, polished gold or silver, hand engraved or with engine turning (a popular mode of decoration) or enamelled, set with one or more gems, and fashioned into any one of countless shapes.

The plainer buttons are concave disks, ovals, triangles, squares, hexagons or octagons with engine-turned holders, and variations of these shapes are shown with fluted or beaded edges.

The monogram may be engraved on the lapel button, or the crest or initials traced in colored enamels. Club, fraternity or society emblems or school or college colors make good decorations for the buttons.

Uses for Old Lace

The woman who possesses rare old family lace is as fortunate as she who owns lovely jewelry. Lace lends itself to a thousand adaptations. A woman of taste and individuality can do more with lace than with anything else to solve the problem of dressing well at a moderate cost.

Lace is never old-fashioned. Take, for instance, a dress of supple white silk over which is a clinging straight gown with a tunic effect. The bodice is plain over the shoulders. Under the arms and across the bust is a full, straight piece of lace with a blue velvet ribbon threading the top. The fullness is gathered in at the waist, under a blue velvet waistband, and in front is a row of pretty shaded roses over the waistband. Could anything be more charmingly youthful? Almost any woman has old pieces of lace laid away which would serve in such a gown.

For a young matron a yellow crepe de chine is gathered up over a lace front panel. Another frock of white lace is partially veiled in old rose, and pale blue mousseline de soie, draped toward one side. With the present fashions of draping, the possibilities of using beautiful laces without cutting or destroying them is endless.

FUTURIST GAUZE WRAPS LATEST EUROPEAN FAD

Weirdest Designs Are Printed Upon Them, and Some, Not Too Grotesque, Are Attractive.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—The very latest craze, initiated by a futurist artist in Paris, is for gauze wraps to be worn at race meetings or at the Casino on the continent. These wraps have the weirdest designs printed upon them, and some of them, when not too grotesque, are wonderfully attractive.

The Viscountess Curzon, one of the loveliest blondes in England, has just had made a marvelous gauze wrap for continental wear. It has a border of Egyptian figures in black thrown against dead white background, the material being so fine that it could be drawn through a ring.

The lining of the wrap is of tangerine orange tulle and there is an immense tulle.

It is to be worn over a fairylike dress of embroidered muslin. The hat is a broad Tuscan, weighed down at one side by a cluster of white, black and purple irissee. Long single black velvet ribbon, which depends on the hat, is passed round the throat and allowed to hang low at the back.

All the latest tunics are of striped gauze, and they are very effective, and are worn over black charmeuse. Sleeves are shorter and shorter, so that thirty-button gloves are an absolute necessity.

In regard to hats, society women are getting tired of big lace, since they have become fashionable in the music halls. The bonnet-shaped hat is now much in favor with girls.

Lady Diana Manners looked particularly attractive at a recent garden party in one which came well down over her ears. Around the rim were clusters of black and red cherries and wide strings of black velvet, tied at the back so that the ends fell straight down.

At the seaside resorts, white linen hats lined with black moire, adorned with white wings, are being worn by many well dressed girls.

Perfect Diamond Is Exceedingly Rare

London Dealer Declares That Women Are Best Judge of the Jewels.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—It was demonstrated at the Jewelers' Exhibition, Agricultural Hall, Islington, which closed the other day, that the perfect diamond is rare.

One dealer produced a very large diamond which he was prepared to sell for $200.

"If nature," he said, "had not tinged it with that tint of yellow the stone would be worth $30,000.

"To those who have no knowledge of gems I would say: 'Do not buy as real for $25 a diamond that is pure crystal without blemish, for it would not be real.'

"Women are the best judges of the value of precious stones because they treasure them more than men. It is a matter of instinct."

X-Ray Skirts Told To Hide in Spokane

Meeting of Transparent Gowns and Sunday Sunshine Forbidden on the Streets.

SPOKANE, WASH., Aug. 16.—Women who saunter about the streets of Spokane clad in flimsy, transparent silhouette or tango gowns will hereafter do so at risk of arrest, according to the announcement to-day by David C. Coates, Commissioner of Silic Safety. The much-heralded silhouette gown appeared on the streets in the Sunday sunshine and created so much commotion that the Commissioner issued the warning at once.

"If necessary, I will order the police department to make arrests," said the Commissioner.

FULFILL DYING PLEA FOR POSIES AND FINE DRESS

FORT COLLINS, COLO., Aug. 16. Complying so far as they were able with the last expressed wish of Mrs. Alice McMillan, who was frozen to death in the Manhattan mining district, many sympathetic women of Fort Collins united to provide a decent burial for the body, thus saving it from interment in the Potter's Field.

Mrs. McMillan, whose body was not found until the April thaws, had left a note asking that she be buried in "fine clothing, in a white casket, with a white hearse and an abundance of flowers."

When it was learned definitely that Mrs. McMillan was likely to be buried in a pauper's grave, the women took the matter in hand and the funeral was held.

POLICEMEN PERMITTED TO WORK IN SHIRT SLEEVES

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., Aug. 16.—Shirt sleeves and white duck caps are to replace the blue coat and heavy helmet of the traffic policemen.

White roll collars and narrow black bow ties are to be worn with the shirtwaists, and the traffic officers have been asked to have their "gun pockets" deepened, so that their revolvers will not show.

HOBBLE HINDERS HER FLIGHT FROM POLICE

KANSAS CITY, Aug. 16.—Mrs. Hazel Allsworth's hobble skirt was her undoing. "Otherwise I never should have been caught," she told the police, when relating her pursuit by a policeman.

Mrs. Allsworth confessed to the police, they said, that she had received $40 her husband had taken from a man from Keytesville, Mo., who was stopping at their home.

BLACK HOSE BOSTON FAD.

BOSTON, Aug. 16.—Black stockings worn with white shoes seem to be quite the fad on the North Shore. Last year all wore white stockings with black shoes, but this season things have been reversed. Several girls are following the fad.

Alert Modisters Now Invent Dress For the Pet Dogs

Motoring Coats, Jeweled Collars and Fancy Leashes Among Articles of Canine Apparel.

Special Cable to The American.

PARIS, Aug. 16.—The dog question is again the liveliest subject at seaside and salon. Having thrashed out fashions for women, artists and our leaders of fashion, male and female, are discussing what fashionable dogs should wear. Here are their conclusions:

Leather collars are still worn, but they should be of the same color and material as the leash. The most fashionable collars are of brass or silver, many of them mounted with precious stones, turquoises, sapphires and rubies.

Color Schemes Popular.

Much attention is paid to artistic combinations in dog wear. For instance, a dark brindled bulldog should have a red leather collar with silver-gilt mountings, while a white brindled dog looks best in a white collar set with tourquoises.

For Pekinese, Japanese and King Charles spaniels the collar should be of worked silver, light and supple, of fine mesh and closed by a tiny padlock. A very stylish effect is obtained by the use of patent leather collars, and a ravishing combination for Poms is the dog harness which encircles the neck and breast.

Light Coats for Greyhounds.

Greyhounds look best in light colored coats with a stripe to match.

For motoring dogs, English stuffs and fur coats are in high favor, and plaids of dark shades are considered most suitable. At the seaside, sporting sweaters are very fashionable for short-haired dogs, and the wet summer is responsible for the appearance of canine mackintoshes, daintily gathered in at the neck and legs.

Every well bred dog has at least two pairs of boots, a pair of Wellingtons for outdoors wear and velvet or satin pumps for indoors.

"Unlucky Opal" Is To Be Worn a Great Deal This Season

Royalty Starts the Vogue and Jewelers Find it a Hard Matter to Supply the Demand.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—The real opal, which has long been out of favor with the fair sex, is going to enjoy a great vogue this fall. There has always been a superstitious prejudice against these stones, but the new fashion of long necklaces of uncut opals has proved too much for the women to resist, and the jewelers of Bond street and the Rue de la Paix are hard put to it to get a sufficient stock.

Queen Victoria presented to each of her daughters on her marriage a magnificent set of opal ornaments, but these have seldom seen the light of day. One night at the opera, however, it was observed that Princess Henry of Pattenberg was wearing hers, and no doubt Princess Louise and Princess Christian will follow her example.

The Queen of Spain has always worn these stones, for her birthday is in October, the lucky month for opals, and Lady Deerhurst and Lady Aline Vivian are similarly fortunate—the latter indeed wore them on her wedding day.

Lady de Bathe (Lily Langtry) has some fine stones, but probably the most valuable opals in England belong to Countess Beauchamp, who has a tiara, necklace, brooches and earrings, which were collected at much below their value by Lord Beauchamp when he was Governor of Australia.

Others who have worn opals lately are the Dowager Lady Sligo and Lady Norah Brassey.

The Princess Royal has a deep-rooted horror of them. Some fine opals were maong the jewels she lost when whencked on the Delhi and she declares that their evil influence pursues her to this day.

SUSPENDERS TO BE INCLUDED IN WOMAN'S ATTIRE

"Galluses" or Braces of Blue the Last Word in New Masculine Mode.

Special Cable to The American.

PARIS, Aug. 16.—Women's skirts for some time have been approaching the shape of the garments worn by the masculine sex, and now Paris and London face the prospect of seeing feminine attire more like men's than ever. The last word in women's clothes is "galluses." The suspenders look very much like the broad blue variety often hung in shop windows in America and possibly labeled, "The Fireman's Friend."

A Rue de la Paix dressmaker is enthusiastic over women wearing suspenders. "Braces," she declared, "will keep the blouse from coming up out of the waistband, as it sometimes does, and if carried out in the color of the skirt they should make a charming line."

Braces are not the only masculine trend in fashion, however, for after a wave of decided femininity in frocks, when frills and fluffs, and sashes and slashes, and hoppings and hobblings have been in vogue, fashion has dashed to the other extreme and London and Paris are promised waistcoats with cutaway coats, large steel trouser buckles at the back of tweed skirts and a ponderous and portly watch chain stretched across the diaphragm.

For the present the waistcoats are still daintily evolved in delicate grays and chestnuts, sprigged or flowered. Sometimes the waistcoats reach up to the neck, finishing in a small "V." Again they wrinkle effectively around the waist with a single or double row of pearl buttons. One ladies' tailor is showing a striped blue and red waistcoat with roses of another shade wandering gayly across it, the whole effect being something like a Union Jack with a flower garden on it.

The men's tailors speak rather contemptuously of the new fashions for women, scoffing especially at waistcoats, which they say have been tried several seasons without much success.

"GETS-IT" Chases Corns Alright!

Easy As One, Two, Three; No Fuss, No Pain, by Using "GETS-IT."

Just take two seconds to put a little "GETS-IT" on that corn. That corn is "done for" as sure as the sun rises. The corn shrivels up, vanishes. That's the surprise you get by using this new-plan corn cure. There's nothing to stick to the stockings or sock; your corn pains stop. You're saved the bother of applying plasters that make the corn bulge out from the core. You're saved salves that eat into the healthy flesh and "pull;" no more fussing with bandages. You don't have to help by picking and dragging out your corns, or cutting with knives or razors.

"We can Dance All Night and Our Corns Won't Hurt. We Both Use 'GETS-IT'—It Gets Corns Every Time, Dead Sure!"

"GETS-IT" is safe, painless, stops pain, never hurts healthy flesh. It is guaranteed. Try it on warts, callouses and bunions, too.

"GETS-IT" is sold at all druggists at 25 cents a bottle, or sent direct by E. Lawrence & Co., Chicago. Sold in Atlanta by Jacobs' Pharmacy Co., Elkin Drug Co., Coursey & Munn, Gunter-Watkins Co., E. H. Cone, Inc., Tipton & Co.

'OH, I SAY,' REAL FRENCH FARCE; ITS DOORS BANG

Alan Dale Finds It Minus the Star, but He Is Willing to Admit That He Did Smile.

By ALAN DALE,
Special Correspondent of The Sunday American.

LONDON, Aug. 7.—One swallow may not make a summer (though I believe it does), but nobody will deny that one "star" can make a play. Therefore, if that one "star" should be out of the cast (as often happens in London) it is quite likely that the play will lose its exuberance. I saw "Oh, I Say!" at the Criterion Theater when Mr. James Welch was out of the cast. I couldn't ask for my money back (I had been kindly presented with a pair of stalls), so I sat through a star-less "Oh, I Say!" and paid far more attention to the play than I should have done.

Londoners don't mind a bit when the actor or actress they pay to see takes a little vacation and an understudy goes on. (You learn this from a slip always inclosed in the program, when it is too late to repine.) Londoners are used to it.

I don't know what had happened to James Welch. Anyway, it was his understudy, H. Langdon Bruce, who played the part of the bridegroom in "Oh, I Say!"—a particularly arduous role for an understudy to tackle. I divided my time feeling sorry for H. Langdon Bruce and for myself—particularly for myself.

"Oh, I Say!" must have been a scorcher in its original French of Henri Kersai and Albert Barre, when it was called "Une Nuit de Noces" (A Wedding Night). It had to be adapted into London by Sydney Blew and Douglas Hoare. What they had to do was to "wedding-ring" the affair, or at least, in a question of equivocal relations, to suggest that the two were "engaged."

The little English word "engaged" covers a multitude of Parisian iniquities. Marcel, the hero of the piece, just married to the beautiful Suzette, meets in the foyer of the Hotel d'Angleterre at Beauvais the scintillant and corruscating Sidonie, to whom he has been "engaged." You smile as the word pops out in its Anglo-Saxon humbug. You are perfectly well aware what the adapter has done, but you look around you at the ornate and bare-shouldered British matron, and you quite understand why Marcel and Sidonie were "engaged."

That is really the gist and the gust of "Oh, I Say!!" The usual farcical use of lies is resorted to, and when I tell you that there are four doors in the setting—all of which bank—you can see your play. Everybody is pushed in at one door or other. Everybody else rushes in at another door. The most popular remark made is "You here?"

Each, seeing the other, cries "You here?" I daresay you have heard the remark before in French farce. Half of the French farces wouldn't get over the footlights unless you heard that lovely query, "You here?" Sometimes it is only "You here?" More emphatically, it is You here?" In cases of desperation it is "YOU here?"

However, I'm not going to pretend that I didn't smile at "Oh, I say!!" for it would be foolish pretense. I did smile. It has its funny moments in spite of allusions to pajamas, keyholes, disinfectants, and so on. Once get into the mood, and in spite of reason one laughs. "Laughter," says Professor Henri Bergson, "always implies a sort of secret freemasonry, or even complicity, with other laughers, real or imaginary. How often has it been said that the fuller the theater, the more uncontrolled the laughter of the audience!" There was a good deal of laughter at the Criterion Theater, and whatever one may write, in all cynicism of this cut-and-dried farce business, the piece HAS caught on. In my humble opinion, what "Oh, I Say!!" needs, and what I am told Mr. Lee Shubert will give it for U. S. A., is music.

Music dulls noe's sense of logic What appears banal and trite and far-fetched in a straight farce is accepted without question when a bit of music happens. With a chorus of pretty girls chirping "Oh, I Say!!" it wouldn't matter very much what I DID say. So there you are.

I can't tell you what James Welch did with the farce, but I should imagine that it belonged to him. There were two very pretty girls in the cast—Miss Sybil de Bray, who appeared as the bride, and Miss Ruby Miller, who was the maid. Then there was a very clever actress, rejoicing in the name of Marguerite Sciaitiel, who is, I fancy, Norwegian, and who is quite likely to be heard from again. There were many others, who had to rush in and rush out, and get banged in the doors. They had to work hard for their living; and if they were not merry, they were at least active little things!

It is a long time since we have had a dose of real French farce, even in London, and the English public has taken kindly to "Oh, I Say!!" even without music. The piece is very short, indeed, which is distinctly in its favor, and it says what it has to say with lightning-like rapidity. Anyway, it is established here.

American Likely to Rule Ireland

Earl of Granard May Be Viceroy

Wife Was Miss Beatrice Mills

Countess of Granard, formerly Miss Beatrice Mills, whose husband is prominently mentioned as first Viceroy of Ireland under home rule.

All London Believes She Will Grace Court if Husband Gets Important Post.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—An American woman may rule in Ireland as wife the first victory under home rule.

All London is talking over the prospect and is prophesying the appointment of the Earl of Granard as Vice Regent of Ireland. The Countess of Granard was formerly Miss Beatrice Mills, of New York, the beautiful heiress whose marriage to the Earl was generally considered a love match.

The talk of the appointment is almost universally popular gossip. The Earl is a Catholic and his American wife is wealthy, and it is believed he will be acceptable to the Irish people, and fully able to hold his own as to the splendor of his court.

But apart from the material advantages of politics, wealth and religion, society talks pleasantly of the Countess herself. They recall the brilliant figure that Lady Daisy Leiter Curzon made as wife of the Viceroy in India, and announce in their opinion Countess of Granard will be as presentable.

Color of reality was given to the gossip when the Earl and his Countess went to Castle Forbes, Ireland, last week. No announcement was made that their trip had anything of a momentous nature, but it is rumored that beyond the casual appearance of the journey there is something of significance.

'WHITE LADY' IS AGAIN SEEN IN KAISER'S HALLS

Fears Feft for Life of Emperor if Traditional Ghost Appears in Castle

By STEVEN BURNETT.
Special Cable to The American.

BERLIN, Aug. 16.—Superstitious people here are convinced that some great calamity is threatening the Kaiser or his family for the Hohenzollern family ghost, the famous "white lady," is said to have walked at the Palace, a thing she never does except when some disaster is impending or when a Hohenzollern is about to die.

The Kaiser himself ridicules the idea and has forbidden any talk about it inside the Palace walls, but several of the servants swear they did see the "white lady" and that the explanation that it must have been some lady resident of the Palace walking in her sleep through the endless corridors in her night dress is absurd, for she looked exactly as tradition says she does look, clad in long flowing white dress, her pale hands crossed on her breast, and her face covered with a nun's veil.

Appears in Middle Ages.

The "white lady" was first heard of as haunting the castles at Bayreuth, Ansbach and Plassenburg in the middle ages. At Plassenburg she was so much feared that the cavaliers of the court took delight in masquerading in white in certain rooms to frighten those who came their way.

Once, when Markgraf Albrecht, the Warrior, met a white lady at Plassenburg, he grasped her with his strong arms and threw her down the stairs, and at the bottom was found the dead body of his Chancellor, who, with the Bishop of Bamberg, had conspired against his ruler. But this incident did not in any way damage the reputation of the "white lady." Someone always managed to see her just before death entered the castle.

Napoleon Saw Specter.

The great Napoleon, who was intensely superstitious, on his military campaigns twice had occasion to pass through Bayreuth. The first time was in 1812, when on his way to Russia, and he sent a request from Aschaffenburg that he should not be asked to pass the night in the rooms at Bayreuth, which were known to be visited by the "white lady." His request was granted; yet next morning he arose in the worst of moods, and as he was getting into his carriage he was heard to mutter something about the "accursed castle." It was certainly the presage of disaster to him. The following year when he passed through the place he refused to pass the night there.

Last time a "white lady" showed herself at Berlin was in 1859, a short time before the birth of the present Kaiser.

Windsor Castle Open To Tourists Again

King George Orders That Any Official Accepting Tip Will Be Dismissed.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—At this time of the year hundreds of American visitors go to Windsor to explore the castle, and there is rejoicing in the town over the reopening of the State apartments which have been closed ever since last January through fear of suffragette outrages.

Every person who enters the castle will have to pay a shilling, and there will be no free days as hitherto. By the King's command this money will go to the local hospital.

By the King's command also it is reported that no "tips" whatever shall be given to guides or to any of the officials at the castle. If any official is discovered accepting a "tip," he will be dismissed.

POLYGAMY URGED AS CRYING NEED BY GIRL MILITANT

British Suffragette Declares That Monogamy Is Favored Only by the Happily Wedded

By HERBERT TEMPLE.
Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—There is no better evidence of the remarkable change that is taking place in English women and girls than the existence of militancy and the appearance of a movement led by a young English girl for the introduction of polygamy in England.

Militancy among suffragettes had been confined to a very small number of women and to a certain class of women. The advocate of polygamy to whom I refer, however, is a very well-known writer, although quite a young girl.

An interview with the Sheik Ul Islam, the supreme priest of the Mohammedan Church, cabled first to New York and then to London, in which the Sheik pointed out he Mo-Mohammedans have polygamy and very little immorality, whereas we Europeans have monogamy and widespread immorality, was read with a great deal of interest here, particularly by women. It was very widely commented upon.

The young woman writer who would have polygamy says:

"Let us approach the problem fearlessly and frankly. The fact is that the present standard of morality is false and unreal, or that while nature produces what is ultimately a surplus of women over men, monogamy is not a suitable system for all our people.

"No system can be suitable which condemns to death or non-life so large a portion of the community as we, the surplus women, form.

"Monogamy is not a sacred institution, and there is no real necessity for hundreds of thousands, even millions, of women to be sacrificed upon its altar. Nor would anything of value be destroyed by its removal and by the setting up of a more suitable moral and legal standard.

"We are told that the ideal condition is one man—one wife. Well, whatever alteration takes place there can be nothing to force people, if they think fit, to preserve that equation so far as they themselves are concerned.

"But those who adopt that standard for themselves have no right—human or divine—to try to impose it upon others who are able and willing to adopt another, especially when imposing such standard is against nature itself and actually condemns a large number of human beings who have equal rights to themselves to exclusion from life.

"I do not believe the difficulty lies with men. I think that each man deep down in his heart admits—if only to himself—that monogamy is unnatural and has failed.

"The difficulty lies with the fortunately married woman.

"If she and her husband are satisfied with one another, then whatever the legal right may be they would never have anyone else.

"If they are not satisfied with each other, then monogamy will not bind them in fact.

"When all bachelor women and widows have the parliamentary vote, and their right to assist in the making of the nation's laws, one of its first influences will be to remove and destroy the artificial and arbitrary standard of monogamy and to establish polygamy as the legal and proper right and custom of an advanced people!"

Plombieres-les-Bains Bores And Drenches Paris Society

By LA RACONTEUSE

Special Cable to The American.

PARIS, Aug. 16.—I have just returned from Plombieres-les-Bains, our most fashionable pleasure resort, where I went not because I really wanted to, for in this miserably wet summer Paris is most decidedly the best place to spend your time, but because my concierge, in plain words, told me that she could not possibly have any respect for a tenant who showed such atrocious disrespect of the laws of "le beau-monde" as to remain in Paris all summer instead of going to some fashionable resort.

In other words, I had to leave my cozy apartment for a while, or I knew that my female tyrant would make life unbearable for me by those thousands of mean little tricks known only to a Paris concierge, against which you are absolutely defenseless.

I found Plombieres-les-Bains as cold and wet as I had expected it, but crowded with society people, all dreadfully bored and all asking what to do on a dreadfully long afternoon with the rain pouring down.

Takes Hour to Recover.

In the morning time passes quickly, no matter how the weather. You take "le traitement," which here consists in a hot bath, followed by a cold shower, massage "sans l'seau" in the "kurhouse," or massage "a sec" at home in bed, after which you need at least an hour's rest to recover.

After lunch you go to the kursal to drink your coffee, tea or elder blossom tea to the accompaniment of the band; then you attend to your private correspondence, play a little "aux petits chevaux" or "a la roulette," but what then?

The afternoon is still young, and promenading, tennis or golf are out of the question.

Suddenly an electric shock passed through the room the news has spread that Monseigneur Angouard, the Congo missionary, will give a lecture at Hotel Deschauseaux, the hotel of all priests and religious people. You know in advance whom you will meet there and whom not. Not a single gambler, not a single "dame dernier cri"—nobody, in fact, but the members of the poorer aristocracy and the badly dressed bourgeoisie.

On the stroke of 4 these people meet in the large hall, and when they are all seated, firm steps are heard in the corridor and Monseigneur's imposing figure appears in the doorway smiling at everybody. He pretends to take a sip of watery and then he begins to tell about the 37 years he has spent in voluntary exile, first as a soldier in the Foreign Legion and then, when he was tired of shooting heathens, trying to save their souls as a missionary.

And the Hat Is Passed.

And when he has finished, one of the young girls present gets up, takes off her hat, turns it upside down and carries it around, asking for contributions to Monseigneur's little colored babies, and a few moments later she smilingly hands Monseigneur $150.

These affairs are always alike, and the Monseigneurs always turn up on a rainy day when people can not get away.

A lady who has caused a stir is the beautiful and charming Duchess of Manchester, who has given us a new dance which my readers probably know and which "isn't doing a thing" (is that right?) to the once almighty tango.

The dance, I am told, is composed by an American, Uriel Davis.

To be able to dance it you must first patiently practice walking upstairs instead of using the elevator. When you are quite familiar with the movement required to walk from one step to the one above, all you have to do is to repeat this movement in the ballroom—eight steps forward, eight steps back, raising your knees as much as possible; then you slide sideways as fast as possible and then repeat the first eight steps each way.

Without intending to hurt the feelings of Mr. Uriel Davis, I venture to say that I find the dance silly, and the reason it is so popular is because it is an excellent exercise to take off flesh.

Croquet Suddenly The Fad in England

Old Game Again Is Feature of the Smartest Week-End Parties.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—Croquet has suddenly come back into favor after a long rest, and is a marked feature at all smart week-end parties.

Tennis is too strenuous and golf too baffling for many whose social duties call for much of their time.

The croquet lawns at Ranelagh and Hurlingham are in great demand, and many are introducing new rules and new kinds of hoops to give novelty to the game.

The Earl of Essex is devoted to the game. Lady Charles Beresford also passes hours at it.

Viscount Doneraile, Lord Tollamache, Lord Lurgan and Nigel Kingscote are often to be seen playing at Ranelagh.

Among the fair sex one notices Lady Angela Forbes, Lady Margaret Spicer, Lady Sophie Scott, Lady Winifred Butler and Mrs. Arthur Sassoon.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—There are 300 or 400 homesick Americans in London. They are music hall artists who flocked over here when ragtime brought about a trans-Atlantic boom.

They came first class, talking of three-figure contracts, and now they are scheming to get cheap passages home disguised as Polish emigrants.

The trouble, of course, is that the music hall stage has been glutted with American turns.

BRITISH PRESS CALLS KIPLING REAL LAUREATE

Appointment of Dr. Bridges Declared Tribute to Pedantry Rather Than to Poetry.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—The appointment of Dr. Robert Bridges to succeed Alfred Austin as poet laureate has note been treated as kindly by the press as was Mr. Austin's succession to Tennyson, notwithstanding the fact that both as a man of letters and as a poet Dr. Bridges is measurably his immediate predecessor's superior. The censure of Dr. Bridges' selection is probably to be found in the fact that the press is merely voicing public opinion, which is keenly disappointed that Rudyard Kipling did not secure the office.

Says The Morning Post: "If Mr. Kipling had been appointed laureate our people in these islands and overseas would have understood the honor as expressing a national sense. We are apt to forget that poets are of service in the world not merely as delighting the ears and refining the emotions of the cultured few, but as calling like a trumpet to duty in life and work, to the scorn of the base and the glory of the patriot, according to the poet's conception of baseness and patriotism."

The Pall Mall Gazette: "Mr. Kipling's claim is far above that of any contemporary. The writer of the 'Recessional' and of 'If' will be the laureate of the English people whenever crisis calls for utterance, and a world-wide empire will be his responsive audience."

The Star: "Mr. Kipling has more poetry in his little finger than Dr. Bridges has in his whole body. To be perfectly candid, the election of Dr. Bridges is a tribute to pedantry, and not to poetry. There are many living poets whose claims are indisputably superior to his. But in this country the path of dullness is the road to glory."

Just before the post of poet laureate was filled, T. P.'s Weekly published the following table as the result of an exhaustive canvass among its readers:

$30,000,000 Yearly in Penny-Slot Gambling

French Government Is Forced to Put Ban on Machines in Small Cafes.

Special Cable to The American.

PARIS, Aug. 16.—The French Government has decided to prohibit the "penny-in-the-slot" gambling machines in all the lower class cafes.

The last available statistics show that in 1911 there were 64,953 of these petty gambling machines in use in France, and that their total receipts during the year were $30,000,000.

The machines are usually leased by cafe keepers on a sharing basis. During 1911 the proprietors received as their share $10,000,000.

The remaining $20,000,000 was represented by tickets, drawn from the machines, which were useless unless exchanged for drinks.

Red Horses for Army; New Breed Developed

Chestnut Equines Said to Have More Fire Than Those of Less Vivid Color.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, Aug. 12.—As a result of experiments made in Leicestershire by biologists, not yet completed, a new species of horses is being developed for the army.

Bright chestnut, which is the equivalent of red hair in children, has quite overcome all other tints among hackneys, and it is associated with the mental quality that is called "fire." It is a master color in more than one respect, indicating a viking spirit.

In horses and men a sort of duel is going on between red and brown, or rather chestnut and bay. The hackney is chiefly red, the hunter chiefly brown, though Ireland is now producing many chestnuts.

RITCHIE DOESN'T COMPARE WITH OTHER CHAMPS

Must Meet Murphy, Welsh and Cross Before He Can Hope To Be World Figure.

By W. W. Naughton.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 16.—Here is a question fired at me from a home critic:

"How does Willie Ritchie compare with the lightweight champions who preceded him?"

Up to date he does not begin to compare in the slightest. Ritchie is still young and lacking in experience, however, and may loom up as more of a world-figure in pugilism when he has pitted himself against men like Tommy Murphy, Freddy Welsh and Leach Cross. Wolgast, who preceded as a champion, was a wonderful fighter before appendicitis marked him for its own. His handling of Battling Nelson on Richmond Field was something to live in memory, even if little "Ad" had never accomplished anything else.

* * *

BATTLING NELSON in his prime, was an interesting performer. And it was his negative qualities that made him worth while. There never was a man within twenty pounds of his weight who could stand such rough usage and keep pressing steadily forward. He wasn't the most gainly fighter of his class, by long odds, but his powers of assimilation covered a multitude of defects.

* * *

JOE GANS was a thorough workman, and a sight of him in action was as great a treat as a student of boxing could desire. He stepped around in a soft-footed way and was never out of position. His manner of ending it all with a downward clip of the right, delivered without drawing back the elbow, was well worth the price of admission.

He was an artist and it was a lament with old-time sports that Joe and Jack McAuliffe did not flourish contemporaneously. A tilt between the pair would have been worth a journey to see.

Koney Makes One Error a Month

Cards' Fielder May Set New Mark

ST. LOUIS, MO., Aug. 16.—An error a month is the pace Ed Koney is setting for what probably will be a world's record as a fielding first baseman. So far the guardian of the Cardinals' initial sack has turned but four miscues this season—one in April, May, June and July—and if he gets but one in August and September his name will be engraved in the record books.

To accept 1,112 of the 1,116 chances offered him in 101 games is quite a phenomenal performance; still this is owned by Koney for his 1913 work. And it has everything eclipsed in the records of fielding first basemen since the National League was organized.

The highest average ever compiled by a first baseman in the National League was by Frank Chance in 1910, when he missed but three chances out of 814; that gave him a mark of .996. This to-day stands supreme, but if Koney continues his average of one error per month he will shade Chance's record by a slight margin.

Chance Leads All Rivals.

Since 1871, when the first set of records was kept in the National League, Chance's .996 stands out on top. Next to the ex-Peerless Leader is Dan McGann with a .995, and then .994 is the highest figure. The following table shows the five highest averages of the first basemen:

Year.	Name.	g	po.	a.	e.	pct.
1910—Chance		87	773	38	3	.996
1906—McGann.		133	1391	83	8	.995
1909—Chance		92	901	40	6	.994
1907—McGann.		81	781	55	5	.994
1897—Tebeau		91	912	42	5	.994

Koney's fielding this year has been sensational and proves that he is without a superior as a fielding first baseman. Of course, now Chase and Daubert and Stovall have their supporters, but the truth is that for being steady day in and day out Koney is supreme.

Koney isn't as flashy as Chase. He will not dive high into the air and make the catch one-handed and he doesn't pull off the fancy stuff which Chase does. But he gets the wild pegs, the high ones, the low ones and those far too high, left and right minus the "grandstand" effort.

How Koney Made Errors.

On April 20 Koney made his first error. It was at Robison Field and he missed an easy foul off Chief Wilson. Later, Wilson put a single in left. The second error was May 28 in Chicago against the Cubs. It happened in the inning when Mitchell rolled to Huggins. Hug made the perfect toss, but Big Ed clamped his hands before the ball arrived, muffed and the runner was safe.

Then came error No. 3. It was June 25, at Robison Field. Carey grounded to Koney. Max raced for the bag and Ed, seeing he couldn't get there first, made a toss to Harmon. Bob let it get away, Carey ran to second and Koney got the error.

Big Ed almost escaped the month of July, but a bit of severe scoring gave him an error on the last day of the month. In the fourth inning Connolly rolled a slow grounder to Koney. Sallee raced over to the bag, but Connolly had the play beaten and it was scored as a hit. Sal allowed the ball to drop, roll a few feet away, and taking his time in recovery, Connolly hiked down to second.

There is how Ed Koney has made his four errors this season. And in between them he has accepted 1,112, certainly a remarkable record.

With the Cards in a slump this year, Koney's fielding hasn't dropped a bit. His batting has, and for that reason the fans have been handing the jeers occasionally to the Big Train. Every fan can rehearse when Ed failed to get a hit and drive in a run. And why? Because his play is watched every day where the others are passed by.

McCloskey Develops Big Ed.

Koney can miss driving in a run and the fans will see it. But Magee, Oakes, Mowrey, Wingo, Whitted and others will miss and nobody pays any attention to it. Not Koney, though.

It took time and constant training on the part of John J. McCloskey to develop Koney into the great first baseman that he is. Koney came here in June, 1907. He was a big kid, awkward around first, and didn't know how to shift his feet. He had the right foot in front when the left should have been there, and often the other way, too.

But McCloskey knew what he had. The entire summer John J. drilled his new capture. In the morning practice Mac toiled with Koney. He showed him this; he showed him that; he showed him how to keep one foot on the sack and catch the wide throw with the gloved mitt.

And it didn't take Koney long to master these fine points. He shows it to-day.

Some will doubt Koney's ability as a first baseman. But here he has a .996 average, just a fraction under .997, and every winter the Cubs, Pirates and Giants bid for the "Big Train."

Koney really isn't appreciated in St. Louis. They won't realize what a marvel and wonder he is until if, by chance, a trade will send him to some other club. And a duplicate of Ed Koney isn't cavorting around any of the minor league fields to-day.

TO CHANGE A. A. U. CODE.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—G. T. Kirby, president of the Amateur Athletic Union, is to revise the A. A. U. code of rules, which, he says, in their present form can not be understood by attorneys. Kirby made this announcement before sailing for Berlin to attend the conference of athletic authorities of the world.

GIANTS CAN GET KONEY IF MATTY IS IN THE DEAL

President Britton Says He Will Make Swap With McGraw for "Big Six" and Merkle.

ST. LOUIS, MO., Aug. 16.—If the Giants will part with Christy Mathewson and Fred Merkle, then McGraw can have Ed Koney from the Cardinals!

From New York Thursday came a report that the Giants were dickering with the Cardinals for another swap, and that McGraw had offered Southpaw Wiltse and First Baseman Fred Merkle for the "Big Train."

Considering that Wiltse is fading and fading fast, and that Koney easily outclasses Merkle, the cards would run second on such an exchange, and the truth of such a transaction was asked of President Britton.

"If McGraw will make it Mathewson and Merkle instead of Wiltse and Merkle then I will O. K. the trade," said President Britton. "But Wiltse and Merkle, no."

Then the Cards' Prexy smiled and puffed his perfecto and continued:

"Yes, that's what I mean, Matty and Merkle. Matty must be in the deal. Anybody but Matty and there's nothing doing with us for Ed Koney."

"But don't you know, Mr. Britton, that McGraw never would consent to trade Mathewson?" was put to the Cards' chief.

"Why, certainly I know it, and that's just why I name Matty in a deal with the Giants for Koney," flashed back Britton. "After we took Crandall instead of Wiltse for McLean, I offered to buy Wiltse from the Giants, but McGraw said he did not want money, but was after players.

"We're after players to strengthen our club, too. We are trying to get the youngsters, and are willing to make a trade where we have an edge, but it's a cinch that we're not going to pass out anything like Koney for Merkle and Wiltse."

GIANTS ALWAYS FIGHTING, EVEN IF IT'S M'GRAW

Crandall Incident Goes to Prove That Muggsy's Men Are Always in Wrangling Mood.

CINCINNATI has pulled the story that two or three of the New York Giants took a punch at Manager McGraw because he released Otis Crandall, star pinch pitcher and pinch hitter, accompanying his action with the statement that Otis never was a real star and wasn't fit for membership on a high class baseball team. Naturally the players were incensed to see an old pal thus turned down, the more because McGraw's action deprives the young Indiana boy of a probable slice of world's series money later in the fall. Maybe they did punch McGraw and maybe they didn't. It doesn't look reasonable that they did, for "Muggsy" isn't standing around as a target for anybody.

* * *

BUT the incident shows two things conclusively. The Giants are fighters, every inch of them, and it is the fighting spirit that wins in any sort of an athletic contest. The Giants are keyed up to the right tension and their position at the head of the National League race is one to which they are fully entitled because of this fighting spirit. McGraw has them gingered to a nicety and doubtless welcomes a little shindig now and then off the field, just as a matter of relaxation.

* * *

MANY of the McGraw methods are far from commendable and some of them are even reprehensible, but in the main other baseball managers might well take example of the Giants' leader and instill this fighting spirit into the men. Frank Chance could keep the old Cub machine snarling and snapping in much the same way and Jimmy Callahan's nature is infectious at times and carries the team along under high pressure. Joe Tinker is a fighter at heart and even the queer conditions in Cincinnati hasn't taken all of Joe's heart. There are few other managers, however, who really scrap and succeed in getting the fighting spirit into their men.

DUFFY SELLS OUTFIELDER JOSEPH BURNS TO TIGERS

PORTLAND, ME., Aug. 16.—Manager Hugh Duffy, of the Portland club of the New England League, announced that Outfielder Joseph Burns had been sold to Detroit.

Burns' home is in Ipswich, Mass. The price was not made public.

RACE TRACK AT AUCTION.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—The passing of another famous New York race track apparently is forecast in a foreclosure sale of the Brighton Beach property, scheduled for August 28. The action was brought on a second mortgage of approximately $95,000. The first mortgage is $650,000.

Johnny Evers Need Not Worry

President Murphy Is With Him

By Davenport.

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—John Evers is not worried concerning the report he is to be ousted from the managership of the Cubs.

"I am worried in a sense," said the Keystone King when he heard the report, "for I know these reports are not tending to the improvement of conditions on the club.

"I firmly believe the reports emanate from sources unfriendly to the Cubs.

"Last winter when it was announced I had been appointed to succeed Frank Chance, my enemies said I would not last until Decoration Day.

"I was right on the job at Pittsburg on Memorial Day and then the fellows who seem to have a grudge against me said: 'Well, he'll blow up before the Fourth of July,' but there was no premature explosion and yours truly celebrated the glorious Fourth by managing the Cubs while they went through a double-header.

"Now they are flirting me right off the reel, but so far as the stability of my position is concerned I am not concerned.

Murphy Pleased With Work.

"I have the knowledge that President Murphy is back of me. He has convinced me upon more than one occasion that he is backing me, and I know him well enough to feel that I can rely upon him.

"He has upheld everything I have done in the management of the players and he has informed me upon more than one occasion that I am giving satisfaction.

"As I have said concerning alleged dissensions in the club, I know who is starting these reports. They do not come from West Side fans. It is a trouble that has existed for years, and some one must be the goat, so why not your humble servant? Let it go with the other managerial duties. My shoulders are broad. I can not only stand the hisses and jeers of the fans, but I guess it is up to me to pay no heed to these false reports that are being circulated and have been circulated all season."

President Murphy also emphatically denies he intends to remove the Keystone King.

When apprised of the fact some one had started the report Evers was to be separated from his job, President Murphy said: "There is absolutely no truth in the report. I still believe Evers is the best manager in the business and the greatest ball player in the world. I have backed him up in his action on and off the field.

"I wouldn't give 2 cents for a manager who can't manage, and I am satisfied that Evers is not one of that sort."

Discussing the reports that the Cubs are fighting among themselves, Manager Evers said: "I want men who fight, but I want them to use a little judgment in whom they fight.

Wants Fighting Spirit.

"I like men of the Zimmerman type, who are fighting every inch of the way.

"True, Heine was put out of a number of games this summer, but why? Because he was always up on the job, watching every play and ready to fight for what he considered his rights.

"I do think it is unfair for the fans and sport writers to pick up every little petty quarrel that may come up and make a mountain of it. These are the things that are hurting the club."

Considering the pitching the Cubs had during the early part of the season, the misfortune sustained by Overall in the way of illness, and the other hard luck, Evers has done well to keep his club up among the top notchers, and he is being given credit for it all around the circuit.

Then there was the hard luck encountered when the Cubs invaded the East the last time, Archer out of the game with a bad finger, Zimmerman out with a game ankle, and Bridwell out with punk pins.

Some handicap, "fellers," but Jawn has been right on the job fighting his way through all the time.

We have it from the Keystone King, right from the shoulder, that stories of dissension on the club have been greatly magnified, and here's a little secret that will surprise you.

That story to the effect Evers is to be deposed came from an eavesdropper.

GEO. HARRISON IS JOE BEAN'S BEST PLAYER

Ex-Marist Star Now Making Fine Baseball Record at Georgia University.

By O. B. Keeler.

WITH your kind permission, we will now introduce Mr. Harrison, prominent second baser of the University of Georgia baseball team, former Marist star and a corking good student of pharmaceutics as well as the national sport.

Mr. Harrison's initials are George L., the "L." standing for Larrup. He is an Atlanta boy, 19 years old, sound in wind and limb, and quite a hobby of Joe Bean's.

"I think a lot of George because he can think," says Joe, who was George's coach at Marist. "Every year the colleges show us a lot of young ball players that can run and throw and field and hit. But a fearful percentage of these neat little baseball machines use their heads mainly to keep their collars from slipping off."

But that isn't the way of George. Take it from Joe.

A Smart Ball Player.

"He is what is known in professional circles as a 'smart ball player,'" Joe adds. "He remembers every little tip anybody gives him—and he uses his memory on the field. He thinks fast and he has the physical speed to carry out his hunches. He is the best all-round college ball player I ever had charge of."

George was a freshman last year, starring in pharmaceutics and the territory around second base. He is expected to do the same, only more so, in the gentle springtime of 1914.

At present George, who is an earnest investigator of things entirely apart from the squeeze play and touching second, is doing a bit of extra work in physics at the summer school of the university. He takes quite a serious view of life, even at the supposedly callow age of 19 summers and the same number of winters.

Had Heart Trouble?

An odd feature of George's development as a ball player cropped out when he started to Marist where he played with great effect three years for Joe Bean.

George was very young then, and he was growing so fast that he frequently found his clothes too small for him when he got up in the morning. The stretching worried some of his insides a bit, and George's folks had an idea he had a floppy heart. It used to flop when George played tennis. They asked Joe Bean to take good care of George and not let him play ball too hard. They recommended first base as the easiest job.

The Flopping Stopped.

But Joe needed a second baseman. Also he saw right away where George ought to perform. He reasoned that one place was as bad as another, if not worse, when it came to causing cardiacal floppings, and he diagnosed properly the uncertain behavior of George's pumping apparatus.

Moreover, George had let up on the growing by that time and was feeling great.

So George went to second base, where he proceeded to eat 'em alive. He has been doing that ever since, too.

George isn't looking forward to professional toil on the sunburned square. He is going to be a pharmacist, which is a druggist with a university training.

And if George applies the same system to pharmaceutics that he has to baseball, he should travel along on the high speed.

Joe Bean says George is one smart ball player.

BOOKING AGENCY FOR BOXERS TO BE FORMED

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—Plans are maturing for a national boxing organization, which will have for its purpose the booking of boxers for various clubs or promoters throughout the country; in fact, it is to be a general booking agency, the same as is in vogue among theatrical people. The man back of the project is Wilbur Stuart, of Columbus, Ohio.

It is the intention of the organizers of the company to have connections in all the large cities of the country. This project would do away with the middleman, or manager, to some extent, but not necessarily, as very often managers are only too willing to pay the regular booking fee to get a match.

The scheme may not look very tempting to some at the present time, but with the growth of the boxing game there is no reason why the project should not be a success—at least, it is worth trying.

KONETCHY FOR MERKLE AND WILTSE IS RUMORED TRADE

PITTSBURG, PA., Aug. 16.—Local baseball men gave credence to-day to a tip that Manager McGraw, of the Giants, is dealing with St. Louis for First Baseman Konetchy and has offered First Baseman Merkle and Pitcher Wiltse in exchange. Since the golf squabble in which Merkle was involved along with Mathewson, McGraw and Merkle have not been the best of friends.

INDIANS GET CENTRAL STAR.

TERRE HAUTE, IND., Aug. 16.—Wheeler, of the Terre Haute club, has been ordered by the Cubs to report to the Indianapolis American Association club. This was a great surprise to the fans, who did not know that the Cubs owned him. Wheeler leads the Central League in batting with .342.

PLANTEN'S C & C OR BLACK CAPSULES
REMEDY FOR MEN
AT DRUGGISTS OR TRIAL BOX BY MAIL 50c
FROM PLANTEN 93 HENRY ST. BROOKLYN, N.Y.
—BEWARE OF IMITATIONS—

Here Is George Harrison, Georgia's Great Infielder, Who Uses His "Bean" in Playing Baseball

Three years of second basing under the tuition of Joe Bean at Marist fitted George to jump right into the spotlight in his freshman year at Georgia and pile himself up a fine little reputation. He will start with flying colors when the season opens next spring.

This looks like pretty severe training for a future pharmacist, but it isn't the only kind Harrison takes. Just now Georgia's star infielder is taking a summer course in physics at the University.

It really doesn't matter how fast the pace is, or whether George Harrison is sliding to second, or dashing in to start a swinging double play—he's always thinking. Joe Bean says he thinks faster and with more effect than any other college player he ever had anything to do with. "His head does more than merely hold his collar on," says Joe. And Joe ought to know something about it.

Looking over the film, it is hard to imagine that George was suspected of having heart trouble a few years ago, when he entered Marist and wanted to play first base, because that job was supposed to be easier than the other stations of the infield. Joe Bean diagnosed George's trouble as rapid growing, and Joe was right about it. As soon as George stopped expanding, his heart settled down to a fine, even gait, and has never missed a tick since. He is now approaching his twentieth year, and is sound in wind, limb and disposition.

'Walsh Now Pitching for Sox' Tickers Don't Flash That Now

ED WALSH is not with the White Sox on their Eastern trip. In all the games Callahan's men play during their stay in the East, the ticker will never flash, 'NINTH INNING: WALSH NOW PITCHING FOR CHICAGO."

The Big Moose, the greatest of iron men, isn't the Walsh of 1912. The averages give him seven won and three lost for a percentage of .700. He has pitched 10 games, with the season half over. If he pitches 10 more during the remainder of 1913 it will be a surprise.

Walsh is worn out. He has the heart and head of last year, but his arm isn't able to perform what he wills. He is just a shadow of his 1912 self, so far as pitching goes.

Too many innings of relief work, too many innings pitched did for his iron arm.

For years he was "THE WHITE SOX," practically all there was to the White Sox, and the only reason anyone went to see the club. Last season, with ordinary backing, he pitched Chicago into fourth place. There were 78 games won by the club. Walsh is credited with 27 of them in his own record. Many more he saved for other twirlers, going in with the Sox ahead and stopping rallies.

Callahan pitched his willing worker 393 innings, or 43 nine-inning games, during the American League season. This shows on the books but there is no record of the innings Walsh warmed up and used up his arm by so doing.

This season Comiskey, the Sox owner, thought Walsh would pitch more than 400 innings. Callahan thought so Wash thought so.

But the Iron Man was through. He had held the White Sox up so long that his arm was weary, even if he didn't know it. His record of 393 innings in the American League season, topped off by his feat of twirling the Sox to victory by pitching 40 innings of the Chicago city series with the Cubs—which he won practically by himself—has taken toll.

Whether Ed Walsh will come back is a thing the future will have to tell. Sometimes they do, but oftener they don't. Rest may bring him back, if Callahan gives it to him. But again it may be that 393 innings of fiercely competitive ball have ruined his arm for good and all and that one of the greatest pitchers the game has known is now a has-been.

Universal Polo at Panama Exposition

Exciting Game To Be Opening Feature of Great Affair—Stand to Seat 18,000.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., Aug. 16.—Universal polo will be the opening feature incident to the department of live stock at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition.

There will be many stables on the site, and the race track infield will afford an ideal location for polo grounds.

Polo enthusiasm is spreading all over the world and it is proposed to have ten or fifteen days of polo, beginning with the opening day of the exposition.

A series of elimination matches will be arranged, and because of climatic advantages a number of the established teams will winter their ponies in California.

There will be a grand stand which will seat 18,000, and its capacity will be taxed during the great tournament, which will be held on the exposition grounds.

The question of cups and prizes is now being considered. If the Hurlingham cup still remains in this country it is possible that the international polo match can be held at San Francisco. That, of course, is a question which can only be decided by time, but in any event representative teams from many countries will be attracted to a universal meet at San Francisco in 1915.

TESREAU HAS BEEN ON SLAB IN MANY GAMES

McGraw Has Sent Jeff to Mound Oftener Than Any Other Member of Giants.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—John McGraw had called on Jeff Tesreau oftener to start battles this year than any other member of the Giants' pitching staff. Up to August 12 the "Little Napoleon" had given the pitching assignment to the big spitballer 28 times. Jeff only went the route on ten occasions, but on many of the times he was dercricked he was lifted to allow a pinch hitter to be inserted into the proceedings, and not because he was not performing to the satisfaction of his commander.

* * *

WERE Hugh Chalmers, of Detroit, to offer a car to the National League pitcher who twirled the greatest number of complete games instead to the player who is most valuable to his team, Christy Mathewson undoubtedly would be riding around in a new auto next fall. "Big Six" has opened on the firing line in 22 skirmishes for the Giants this year and has lasted through 17 engagements, which gives him a finishing average of .773. Matty quit twice because he had to, twice because his team had an enormous lead and once because McGraw wished to shove Harry McCormick in as a pinch hitter.

* * *

THE club that has compelled Mathewson to retire under fire is St. Louis, the team that handed him his first beating twelve years ago, when he first became famous. The Cardinals ought to be proud of themselves for their showing against "Big Six" this year. They have received five of the thirteen passes Matty has issued this season, Ed Konetchy and Miller Huggins each obtaining two and Steve Evans one. The eight other National Leaguers who have been honored with complimentaries by Mathewson this season are Viox and Mensor, of Pittsburg; Bates and Groh, of Cincinnati; Zimmerman, of Chicago, and Titus, Rariden and Maranville, of Boston.

MANY CATCHERS GET INJURED BY MIXED SIGNALS

Chief Meyers Nearly Lost a Finger When Christy Mathewson Double-Crossed Him.

By Otto C. Floto.

DENVER, Aug. 16.—Nothing breaks up a battery so fast as double-crossing the catcher. Mind, we do not mean to say this is intentionally done—but through carelessness or through not getting the signal correct, it happens in some of the most important games. And when it does—well, the opposition has the "shade" from that time forth. In Chicago recently, during a conversation between John McGraw and the writer, the Grand Mandarin of the Giants told us of an incident when even the great Mathewson was at fault in this sort of play.

"Meyers is naturally dark," said McGraw. "When he becomes tanned in the summer time he is darker than ever and quite naturally when he places his finger on the palm of the soiled glove it takes quite an eye to distinguish whether he has one or two fingers pointed to the ground. Oftentimes one finger means a straight fast ball and then again it means a curve, and vice versa. Mathewson, in one of the games against St. Louis, got his signals mixed and pitched a curve when Meyers was looking for a straight fast one. The result was that the ball not only got away from the Indian, but came near tearing his finger off. Of course, I immediately took him out of the game, because I knew he would be rattled from that time forth. The next day he was steadied again and the incident forgotten.

* * *

ANOTHER time while with Baltimore, Joe Corbett double-crossed Robinson and lost a game for us. Of course, the double-crossing is unintentional on the part of the pitcher, and it occurs only when the catcher and the pitcher get mixed in the signals and don't ask each other for a repetition of the same. If they did this no error would be made. In the big leagues when this tangle occurs the players think nothing of it. But I have seen in the smaller leagues, when the battery gets mixed the catcher, generally a youngster trying to make his reputation, seems to labor under the impression that the pitcher is 'trying to show him up,' and it often creates hard feelings on a team."

* * *

REFERRING again to the honesty of the game, we need nothing better to point to than the leaders of the National and American Leagues. Both the Giants and the Athletics have spoiled the race. They are so far ahead of all the other clubs that even at this early day of August 4 interest is eliminated. It means several hundred thousand dollars to the club owners to have a condition of this sort exist. Yet they would rather have it this way and lose thousands of dollars than "frame" and kill the sport.

What if Boston and the Athletics in the American League were neck-and-neck and battling for every game—well, the grounds in either city would not be large enough to hold the crowds. In the National League, what if New York and Chicago were abreast—it would simply mean all records for attendance would be shattered.

So you see the playing is absolutely on its merits and when a team wins or loses everything connected with it is on the level. That's why baseball will ever remain the most popular of outdoor sports. The finger of suspicion is never pointed at any act on the ball field.

Meddling Has Ruined Red Sox Stallings Is Popular in Boston

By W. J. McBeth.

THERE is little comfort in a reputation to the fellow who has lost his punch. This ring chatter applies directly to baseball. A pugilist may get away by sidestepping action, but organized baseball requires 154 tilts every year.

The Boston Red Sox furnishes a very fine object lesson for the point in question. One year ago the staid old "Hub" was wild with enthusiasm over its pets of a generation. To dispute that the "Speed Boys" boasted the classiest aggregation in modern times was the shortest route to suicide. To-day, though a world's championship has been added to the achievements of the Back Bay athletes, the pennant winners are the scorn of the City of Culture.

The answer lies for the most part in four agate lines—which represent the difference between first and fifth places in the American League standings. Boston's National League team which saw many lean and hungry years, while its rival lived upon the fat of the land, has usurped the popularity of its fading contemporary. The Red Sox in their company have shown the better percentage of victories. But still their work has slopped off so badly from what was expected of the holders of baseball's highest honors that in comparison to the improvement made by the Braves the Red Sox appear in the light of the veriest "bush" class.

Boston, like every other town, has little use for a team that has hit the chutes, while always ready to extend a hand of encouragement to a club that stems on the upward trend.

* * *

IN gaining a few rounds on the ladder from the cellar George Stallings' Braves have accomplished a task that well might be considered more wonderful than cinching a second American League pennant with the champions. Baseball fandom is clever enough to appreciate the point and pay tribute where tribute is due. But the Boston situation of the American League furnishes a moral which many of our meddling promoters might well take to heart. One thing is to leave good enough alone; another that it is far easier to destroy a finely attuned mechanism than to overhaul and rebuilt it.

* * *

EVERYBODY said a year ago that the Boston Red Sox were the luckiest world's champions known to history. Perhaps they were, but they certainly had some class to get in the finals. Moreover, they went through a long campaign without dropping more than two games in a row till the pennant was cinched. The club looked anything but impressive in the world's series. But was it altogether the fault of the club?

I honestly believe, in the light of later developments, that if the real inside truth were known President James McAleer had a lot to do both with the poor showing of that team against the Giants and in the 1913 race so far this season. Jake Stahl, deposed from the management in mid-season, may have been left unhampered this season as McAleer insinuated, but he certainly did not have a free hand against the Giants last fall. He was girt about by a so-called bond of strategy. These many cooks came very near to scorching the broth.

While the Red Sox were setting themselves, Jake Stahl and, incidentally, McAleer on the high pedestal where the bump incident to this year's fall should be all the more pronounced, somebody put a stick of dynamite under the foundation. In the height of battle a serious row cropped out among certain players. As is usually the case, factions resulted. The unity of the team was undermined. The big explosion followed the poor start of 1913 consequent to wholesome injuries and sickness.

McAleer may not have directly interfered with Stahl. Yet the inference is there pretty strong. Jimmy looked like an ideal president when everything was of rosy hue. But once a manager always a manager. We see that in the attitudes of some of our renowned scouts. The cunning hand of McAleer might be traced in the present dilemma of his noble country.

AT least McAleer, or his associates in the business administration of the club, deserve little sympathy for the cold desertion of Hub fandom. They brought it upon themselves by a cold throw down of their most loyal supporters. The band of "Royal Rooters" which had accompanied the team to and fro between New York and Boston were not provided with seats for the seventh game. The business management was unable to explain satisfactorily this shameful oversight; naturally the rooters took it as an insult, believing they had been "given the works" simply through avarice of the management.

"It is the last game and they think standing room good enough for us" was the universal sentiment. The rooters put a boycott on the eighth and deciding game. Also they gathered round the offices at the close of the contest when they were slighted to put the curse on Fenway Park, Red Sox and all connected with them. By the looks of things it was some curse.

Tire Prices Down

How We Did It Without Skimping On the Costliest Tire That's Built

Here are a few amazing facts which every tire user should know.

Goodyear No-Rim-Cut tires used to cost one-fifth more than other standard tires. And yet they gained the topmost place in Tiredom.

Three things caused this extra price.

In the base of each tire we vulcanize six flat bands of 126 braided wires. It is thus that we make a hookless tire—a tire that can't be rim-cut.

Then every No-Rim-Cut gets the "On-Air Cure." It is final-vulcanized on air bags. This is done to save blow-outs. It adds to our tire cost $1,500 per day.

Then we use in each tread base a patent "rivet" fabric. We paid $50,000 for this feature to prevent tread separation.

Not one of these costly features are used in any other make of tire.

We have clung to small capitalization. On this account we can and do keep our profits under 8½ per cent.

All these savings, as fast as we made them, went to users of our tires.

Note What Our Price Includes

Rival makers must in some way meet the Goodyear price. But please consider what our price includes.

A tire that never rim-cuts.

A tire built to save blow-outs, in a way so costly that no one else employs it.

A tire built in our patent way to prevent tread separation. And built in every other way for longest mileage, regardless of the cost.

Now No Extra Price

Now these same tires, with all of these features, cost you no extra price. Not a standard tire of any type costs you any less.

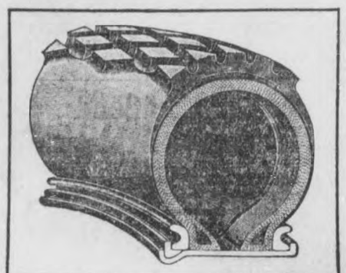
And these are the reasons:

Our overhead cost, in days of small output, ran as high as thirty per cent.

It is now less than six per cent. Our multiplied output, in this one way, has cut our tire cost twenty-four per cent.

We have built new factories with modern equipment, with every new invention in labor-saving machinery.

That's Why They Outsell



Hundreds of thousands now use these tires. They far outsell any other. Yet the demand from users is now growing faster than ever before in our history.

That's for the reasons told you.

Rim-Cutting alone, with old-type tires, ruins 31.8 per cent—almost one tire in three. Blow-outs and loose treads, which our methods combat, are immensely costly items.

You should get these savings—get them all—when you pay the Goodyear price.

Our dealers are everywhere.

SULLIVAN TELLS WHY A.A.U. PUTS BAN ON WOMEN

Athletic Body Objects to Mixed Competitions in Order to Preserve Dignity of Women.

By James E. Sullivan.
Secretary-Treasurer of the A. A. U. and "Father of Amateur Athletics."

(Mr. Sullivan submitted the following interesting article to The American just before he sailed for Germany last Tuesday. Mr. Sullivan will attend the first convention of the International Athletic Federation at Berlin on August 20-21 as the representative of the United States.)

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Should women be allowed by the Amateur Athletic Union in open competition against men? is a question attracting a lot of attention in the world of sport at present. From the woman's side of the question the opinion is voiced that to be in keeping with the great strides of women's emancipation the women should be allowed to compete on the same footing as men, especially in aquatic sports and other competitions.

Unfortunately, perhaps, for the feelings of the gay and thoughtless, the A. A. U. looks at the matter from an entirely different angle, and it is as well that the public should know right now that the A. A. U. national body will never permit mixed competitions between men and women in any of the sports it happens to govern.

I may say that this is no mere personal statement. It is the unanimous policy of the national body. I have frequently been criticised on account of my alleged opposition to mixed competition in swimming races, and am sorry to have aroused the ire of the progressive element among the women and the suffragists.

I happen to be secretary-treasurer of the A. A. U., and would remind my critics that the man in such an office is always intrusted with the job of making public the feelings of the governing body; and its domain extends from the Atlantic Ocean to the Pacific and from Florida to the North Pole.

Against Mixed Competition.

More than once the question of allowing women to register has been discussed, and to the present it has been turned down every time without a dissenting voice. So far as I can see now nothing short of a miracle will ever change the views of the A. A. U. men on the subject of mixed competition.

Of course, a great many will want to know the reason for this stand of the A. A. U. in keeping out the women. There are two reasons. One is to try and preserve the dignity of the American girl and the woman, and the other is to keep amateur sport clear of the demimonde. If we are in the business of developing champion athletes to uphold the American flag in international competition we surely ought to be pardoned for being conservative about our women.

While those old-fashioned men of the A. A. U. like to see the American woman healthy, and in the full enjoyment of sports and pastimes suitable to her sex, they do not want to see a feminine race of Amazons devoid of home ties, and the qualities that create the respect and admiration of men.

The A. A. U. is guided by experiences of the past. Years ago when the long distance walking craze struck New York a great number of women were seized with the fad, especially as it was found to be good for their health and complexions. Numbers of women's walking clubs sprung up, and it was a great thing to see bunches of women hiking along the highways at a brisk clip and at all hours.

Bicycle Craze Expires.

The bicycle craze of a few years ago furnished another illustration of the unsavory element in sport, and they spoiled one of the finest recreations of modern times. At first myriads of decent women enjoyed it until the questionable element swarmed over the roads and drives devoted to cycling. Again the decent women were forced to quit, and with them went their companions—husbands, fathers and brothers.

Now suppose that to-morrow the A. A. U. was to throw down the bars and allow women to register, and that they would have liberty to compete in the track and field games, the swimming, the gymnastics and the tumbling. What would be the consequence? For a while there might be nothing but decent girls among the boys in the swimming tanks and the pools, but after a spell the other element would appear.

What a nice position the decent young girls would find themselves in then, and what a tirade of criticism the A. A. U. would bring forth from the clergy, and from the men and women of the uplift! I wonder if those who are so willing to comment unfavorably on the A. A. U.'s rejection of mixed competition ever looked at the probable situation in this light.

Although the A. A. U. does not countenance mixed competition, its governing members are willing to advocate that women and girls engage in swimming races among themselves. If those among the women who are so anxious for speed conditions can form themselves into an association, then the sport can be made even more popular than if the women were allowed into the A. A. U.

GOOD STILL A MEMBER OF CUBS, SAYS JOHNNY EVERS

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—Wilbur Good, the Cub outfielder, is still a member of the West Side club. At least, Manager Evers said so just before the Cubs started for the East. John was greatly surprised when he saw in local papers that Good had been released to Indianapolis. Evers says that there is no chance of Good leaving the Cubs, as he figures that the pinch hitter is fast developing into one of the best outfielders in the business. The Cub manager further stated that if waivers had been asked on Good it was done without his knowledge. Good accompanied the team to Boston.

Giants Again Must Oppose "$100,000 Infield" in World's Series

Athletics' Inner Defense Hailed as Greatest in Baseball History

This is the "$100,000 infield" of the Athletics the Giants must again face in the coming world's series—if the local champions repeat their pennant triumph in the National League and the Athletics recapture the American League flag, which is almost a certainty now. From left to right: Baker, third base; Barry, shortstop; McInnis, first base. Below, Eddie Collins, second base.

Fans Await World-Series Clash

Former Rivals May Meet Again

By Monty.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—In view of the fact that the Giants and Athletics are conceded almost universally now as certain to meet in the next world's series, fans are beginning to turn their attention to the question of how the two teams compare with each other. Though nearly two months remain before the clash for the world's championship gets under way, it is the main subject in the minds of the real followers of the game, now that the pennant races have ceased to absorb more than a superficial amount of interest.

The series this year has an extra element of attraction in that old rivals are meeting again, aggregations that met only two years ago. Enough of the 1911 players still remain to make the tilt practically a renewal of the same duel.

* * *

THE majority of baseball men in the country seem to think that the Athletics are the strongest team in the game. There is one sound way of reasoning this out. At the end of last season the Quakers were playing a much better grade of ball than the Red Sox, who won the pennant and whose performance was good enough to beat the Giants. This would prove almost a final argument if the present Giants and present Athletics were identical with the Giants and Athletics of last fall, but they, of course, are not.

The main basis for the superior appraisal of the Philadelphians by the fans, however, is simply that they seem a stronger team, one with greater ability, without bothering to delve into the dope for any more specific reasons. This system, though, is like betting on a race horse because of a "hunch." It is going in blindly. Baseball is a game of such distinct departments of play that they all must be considered separately with one phase of this team compared to the opposite department of the other. For instance, the estimate of the Athletics' batting in the series must be formed at the same time that the Giants' pitching is considered, and vice versa.

* * *

IF such things as base running and fielding were eliminated, the problem would be, "Will the Giants hit the Athletic pitchers harder and more timely than the Athletics hit the Giant pitchers?" Many seem to believe they will not, but this remains to be seen. Both aggregations possess tremendous batting power, with all hands in shape, and both have pitching staffs that can not be called other than great.

In the matter of one team's batting opposed to the other's pitching, a reminiscent light is thrown toward that old foolish puzzle of an irresistible body meeting an immovable one. Nobody can predict with any degree of confidence whether these games will produce the highest scoring on record for a world's series or the lowest. A complete triumph for batting would result in the former and the same for pitching would bring the latter. Or—which is more likely—it may produce about an even break with scores of average size.

* * *

JUST now an attempt might be made to decide the way this unique combat of departments will turn out, but it would be the old blind guess again to a large extent, for many changes may occur in the outlook between now and October. For instance, Jack Coombs may show himself to be back in form and the same old Quaker artist of the mound, or it may turn out that his sickness and consequent long lay-off have impaired his efficiency badly. Mathewson may be lost to the Giants through injury. Home Run Frank Baker may sprain his ankle and Larry Doyle may or may not recover his batting eye. Any one of these things could have a telling effect. Therefore, it is wise to lay low and wait until October before making any bold predictions.

Red Sox May Send Yerkes to Athletics

BOSTON, Aug. 16.—Steve Yerkes, who for the last few years has been the star second baseman of the world's champion Boston Red Sox, will probably wear an Athletic uniform in the near future, as waivers have been asked on him.

Connie Mack refused to waive claim on the former brilliant second baseman, and the chances are that he will be sent to Philadelphia in the near future.

Yerkes first learned to play baseball on the lots at Millville, N. J., and reached the height of his baseball career in the world's series with the New York Giants when he played an important part in the notable victories of the Boston Red Sox.

He proved far superior to Doyle, the Giants' second baseman, in that series, hitting the ball hard and timely and fielding in sensational style.

WOLVERINES PICK LUNDGREN.

ANN ARBOR, MICH., Aug. 16.—Carl L. Lundgren, former twirler on the Chicago team and once a University of Illinois star, has been chosen as coach of the Michigan baseball team to succeed Branch Rickey, who recently resigned. Lundgren pitched four years at Illinois and then joined the Chicago club in 1902, where he remained seven years, being a member of two world's championship nines.

20,000 Boy Athletes In Playground Meet

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—The most elaborate playground field day ever held in New York city will take place at Empire City Park, Yonkers, N. Y., on August 20. The meet is made possible by the courtesy of the officials of the Greater New York Fair and Exposition and the sanction of the A. A. U., and will be under the direction of the Bureau of Recreation, Department of Parks.

Twenty thousand boys are now in training for the fifteen events to be contested at their first interpark-playground athletic championship of Greater New York.

This invitation meet is the greatest incentive offered the boys to join the athletic clubs at the park playgrounds. No expense of any kind will be incurred; even transportation will be afforded the boys.

SOUTHERN BOY IS AFTER MATCH WITH KILBANE

CLEVELAND, Aug. 16.—George Chaney, featherweight champion of the South, may yet have a fling at Johnny Kilbane. Chaney claims 100 victories. He has beaten Al Delmont, George Kirkwood and Ty Cobb and has stopped Phil McGovern.

When one stops to consider, there is hardly a featherweight in the game who could give Kilbane a battle, unless it be Kid Julian. But there are a few comers, among them Matty McCue, of Racine, whose loss to Patsy Branningan will not put him out of his stride.

Tommy Leach in Same Class as Wagner, Lajoie and Mathewson

A good bit has been spoken and written about the wonderful way Wagner, Lajoie and others are hanging on, despite their duration of service. But in this respect we know of no one who can push through and edge by Tommy Leach. Tommy has been reported all in for several seasons, and yet to-day he is still playing fine ball in every department with his old speed intact. They crowded him away from third, where he ruled for over twelve years, and now he is starring at another job on a par with almost any in the game. In the salvos of applause that are scattered about, Leach deserves enough to rock the stands.

MORAN GETS BOUT WITH PALZER IN NEW YORK RING

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—That Jimmy Johnston, the new manager of the St. Nicholas A. C., only intends to provide top notch cards for his patrons is inferred by the matches he has already arranged. Johnston realizes that it is only from the high class bouts he can hope to make any money, and he only intends to run shows when he has such to offer.

The bouts already arranged by Johnston for the near future look to be about the best obtainable. On September 10 Jack Britton, the unusually clever Chicagoan, will hook up with Young Shugrue, the aggressive boy from Jersey City. They'll clash at 133 pounds, weigh in at 10 o'clock on the night of the bout.

Another card clinched will bring together Al Palzer, the tenacious Iowan, and Frank Moran, the Pittsburger, who made such a great battle against long odds when he met the late Luther McCarty in this city. Moran and Palzer will clash either on August 20 or 27, the date to be selected later by Dan McKetrick and Tom O'Rourke, the respective managers of the two heavyweights.

Ritchie Open to Harsh Criticism

Willie Ignores Murphy and Ad

By W. W. Naughton.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 16.—Every once in a while the thoughtful critic informs us that boxing is in a chaotic condition.

It occurs to the writer that remarks of that character would be particularly apropos just now. As I understand it, chaos reigns when you can not figure out just what is going to happen, and it seems to me that to attempt to peer into the pugilistic future at this juncture would be to invite vertigo, or at any rate headache.

In some of the weight classes there is actual stagnation, while in others confusion reigns. True, Willie Ritchie, who won the lightweight title through a foul, and Arthur Pelky, who became white heavyweight champion through a fatality are going to risk their laurels in September, but it is doubtful if either of the events referred to rises to the dignity of a championship battle in the eyes of the American sporting public.

Of course, if one argues by the book—and in cases of this kind the record book should be the basis of all discussion—Freddie Welsh has every right to aspire to a crack at the championship. He is England's premier lightweight and he won from Ritchie once before.

Murphy Entitled to Chance.

But Freddie has been a long time in the lists and in this country there are other lads who are thought to have a better claim to the consideration. Tommy Murphy, the Harlem spitfire, for instance, is looked upon as Ritchie's logical opponent, and the coast sports fondly hoped to see Ritchie and Murphy signed for a clash on Labor Day.

On the plea that better inducements were forthcoming, Ritchie has decided to take his dolls to Vancouver, B. C., on September 1 and tackle Welsh in a 20-round contest.

In the consciousness that he is doing exactly what is sportsmanlike and fair, Ritchie seems to defy criticism. But, like all champions before him, he has enemies and detractors. He is sure to be dealt harshly with by these, and unless i miss my guess his motives also will be questioned by numbers of fight fans who view these matters dispassionately.

Willie Also Ignores Ad.

Coming right at this time, some of these things told by Billy Nolan after he ceased to manage Ritchie will carry weight. Nolan said that before Ritchie returned to the ring he planned to meet just three men, to-wit: Rivers, Freddie Welsh and Leach Cross. Ritchie by his actions is bearing out Nolan's words, but public opinion can whip any champion into line, and Ritchie will have a hard time trying to withstand the lances of criticism that will be leveled at him if he refuses to recognize the claims of Tommy Murphy and Ad Wolgast later along.

Of course, if Ritchie is defeated by Freddie Welsh, he would be allowed to go on his way in peace, but somehow the far Western sports appear to think that a contingency of that kind is not on the cards.

Pelky vs. Miller.

Late in September Arthur Pelky and Big Charlie Miller are to box in Los Angeles. As Pelky under existing heavyweight conditions has the best right to call himself white heavyweight champion, the match will of necessity be for the championship But why could not Pelky be signed with some hope who is better known to fame.

If there is such a thing as pugilistic code, Miller is the last man in the world who should have been selected as a champion candidate. At the same time, if Arthur has picked Miller in the belief that a man with such a meager record must necessarily be easy, he will find himself mistaken. Miller is a man of much displacement and he is as strong as an elephant and can sop up punishment as a sponge absorbs water.

And if Miller should win—well, chaos would not begin to describe the situation.

In the smaller classes of pugilism there is a marked degree of inaction.

Whenever any violent action talk is indulged in in Bantam Champion Johny Coulon's presence, the news goes out that Johny is the next thing to a confirmed invalid and that his doctor has warned him to avoid anything calculated to excite him.

It would seem that the only way to keep Johny Coulon in good humor would be to crown him perpetual king of the knights and make it a felony to challenge him. It may be that this is of course sarcasm, but in view of the many times Johnny's small ailments have prevented him defending his title, I think it warranted

No Welters in Sight.

Welterweights there appear to be none. Mike Gibbons and Jimmy Clabby, who could fill welter requirements, are eager to be known as middleweights.

For some time the middleweight division has been all head and points, but now that there has been an infusion of new blood, the spirit of rivalry and competition may be revived.

Maybe Frank Klaus will stay away from Paris long enough to take a hand in clearing up the championship question, provided he can make the weight.

Let us hope that in some of the classes events will so shape themselves that here will soon be a deciding match in prospect—one that will have the earmarks of a genuine world's championship and appeal to the sports generally as such.

NEW WHITE HOPE SOUGHT AMONG BRITISH HEAVIES

Failure of Wells Has Brought About a Change, and Dick Smith Is New Entrant.

By T. S. Andrews.

MILWAUKEE, Aug. 16.—Since the defeat of Bombardier Wells, the heavyweight champion of Great Britain, by Gunboat Smith in New York, the Britishers have been casting about for another "white hope," one who will be able to "stand the gaff" and weather the storm when it comes to body punishment; and from information at hand they have unearthed another "hope" in the person of Dick Smith, the amateur champion of England.

Dick has decided to throw in his lot with the professionals. Born 27 years ago, Smith possesses all the necessary qualifications for a "white hope," and may go further than some of the blasted hopes. He stands 6 feet 1 1-2 inches, weighs about 190 pounds, and has a very satisfactory record. Of his 49 contests he has won 45, lost 3 and drawn 1.

Formerly a soldier, he followed Bombardier Wells as champion of India. As an amateur boxer he has done remarkably well, having won the championship of Great Britain in 1911-12-13, while a member of the London police force.

Will Not Tackle Wells First.

He probably will not take on Bombardier Wells and Georges Carpentier for his intial efforts as a professional, but one of the lesser lights. Professional and amateur boxing are vastly different things on the other side of the Atlantic, as many amateurs have found on taking the plunge into the professional waters.

The referees view things from an entirely different standpoint, and a 20-round contest with three-minute rounds under professional rules takes a bit of negotiating. Under amateur laws boxing contests are not allowed of longer duration than six rounds of two minutes each, but for the championships and most interclub competitions, the bouts are limited to three rounds.

Amateur Referees Strict.

Amateur referees are very strict in upholding the rules of the game, and some of their antics would not be tolerated by professionals for one minute. Clinching is barred and a boxer is liable to be disqualified for a second offense after having been once cautioned. Then, again, amateurs are forbidden to receive any advice during the progress of a bout, and any instructions that the second may have for his boy has to wait until the round ends. Under amateur rules boxing is kept very clean, which is more than can be said for professions.

Therefore the entry of Dick Smith (namesake of Gunboat) will be watched with interest, even by followers on this side of the big pond.

JOHNSON HELPS SICK YOUTH.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 16.—A baseball and an autograph letter from Walter Johnson, Washington's premier pitcher, did more than medicine could do to bring about the rapid convalescence of Warren A. Slee, a youthful admirer of the big ball tosser. Johnson, whose numerous admirers include scores of youthful fars who idolize the pitcher, heard of the serious illness of the boy and wrote to him, sending a baseball he had used in pitching the Washington team to victory. The boy's recovery since receiving the letter has progressed rapidly.

RED SOX GET OUTFIELDER.

BOSTON, MASS., Aug. 16.—The Boston American League team announced yesterday the purchase of Outfielder Walsh from the Worcester team of the New England League.

WAR DECLARED BY P. A. A. OVER 1915 FAIR PLUM

James E. Sullivan's Reported Action in Naming T. S. Mulvey as Aide Causes Strife.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., Aug. 11. There is a flurry among the officials of the Pacific Athletic Association and in amateur athletic circles generally over the allegation that James E. Sullivan, director general of the amateur games to be held here during the Panama-Pacific Exposition, has appointed Thomas S. Mulvey, the well-known San Francisco clubman, his principal aide in connection with the handling of the exposition sports.

A few days ago Mulvey received a telegram from Sullivan, who was then on the point of departure to Berlin to attend a conference of the Olympiad committee.

In his telegram Sullivan said he would be back in New York early in September, and that it would be necessary for Mulvey to come to New York at that time to aid in interesting the athletic fraternities there in the games to be held in this city in 1915.

Elliott Issues Statement.

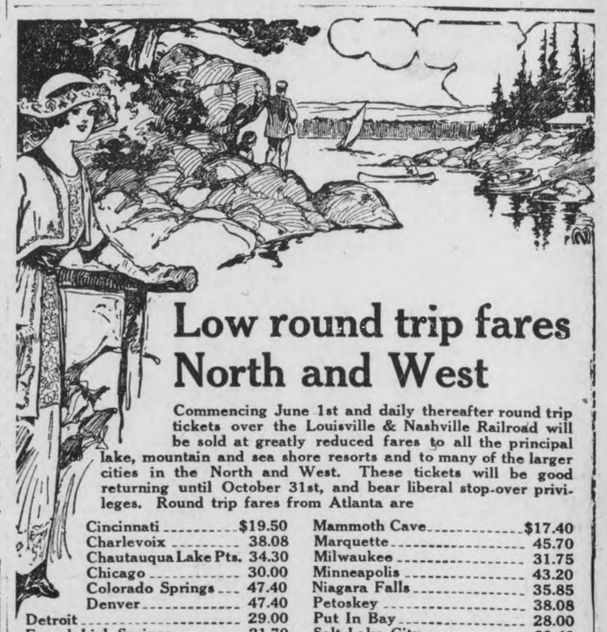
While the telegram intimated that Mulvey was appointed the head of the San Francisco committee on games, no reference was made to any other appointments of local men in the same connection.

The Pacific Association of the Amateur Athletic Association took umbrage at this indication of Mulvey's appointment, and John Elliott, president of the association, issued a statement yesterday in which he said that the selection of Mulvey to the post did not meet with the sanction of the association.

Elliott pointed out that the Pacific Association had given valuable assistance to the exposition officials in securing sanctions for American championships to be held here in 1915. He declared that Mulvey had no knowledge of or affiliation with amateur sports, and intimated that Mulvey's appointment would cause the association to refrain from using its endeavors toward making the 1915 games the success they should be.

Mulvey Has No News.

While Elliott did not say so, it is evident that he and his associates expected Sullivan to depend upon the local athletic body for whatever assistance he required.



The Panama Exposition officials stated emphatically that no appointment such as the Pacific Association complained of had been made, nor had any such appointment been authorized by the exposition directorate, which, of course, is the last word in all matters of this kind.

Under these circumstances it is believed that the Pacific Association will take no precipitate action until a clearer understanding is had as to just what honor Sullivan intended to confer upon Mulvey. As Sullivan is on the high seas, it would be some little time before he could be heard from.

Mulvey said yesterday that he had no news regarding his appointment other than was conveyed in the Sullivan telegram. He said he intended going East, but will wait to hear further before making the trip.

M'FARLAND IS GETTING READY FOR BUSY CAMPAIGN

CHICAGO, ILL., Aug. 16.—Packey McFarland is getting himself ready for the ring again. While no matches have been closed as yet by Manager Thiry, the latter is negotiating with Milwaukee, Kenosha and several Eastern clubs. Once Packey is back in action his matches will come fast, his style and rep being favored all over. Jimmy Coffroth would like McFarland out West with Tommy Murphy.

HOME RUN GAVE H. WAGNER REAL START IN GAME

Big Dutchman Has the Most Interesting Career of All the Baseball Stars.

HANS WAGNER, the hero of all baseball heroes, has had an interesting career. Wagner, the big German, was born in what is now Carnegie, Pa., on February 27, 1874. His father, who is still living, was a coal miner in those days, and he decided that John P. should help him in his work. So Honus was packed off to the mines to help dad every day. Hans was not lazy, but he didn't like the black darkness of the earth's interior, and many a warning he received for playing hookey from the bituminous section and scampering off for a game of baseball with other kids of the neighborhood.

A correspondent recently approached the big fellow and asked him to tell how he came to break into baseball. Honus pondered a moment, and then spun the following yarn about his early experience:

* * *

"I BROKE into baseball by posing as my brother Al. We were playing ball around home. Al received an offer from Canton, Ohio, before he was offered a place with the Mansfield, Ohio, club, in the same league. The day he got the second offer he turned to me and told me to go to Mansfield. I got there early in the afternoon, and a man named Taylor recognized me. He had seen me play. The club was hard put for a third baseman, however, and Taylor decided to take a chance with me.

"It so happened that Mansfield played Canton that day. My brother was in the line-up of the Canton team, and the pitcher, 'Toots' Barret, was also from Carnegie, or Mansfield, as it was called in those days. They regarded me as pretty much of a kid, and when Canton got away to a good lead early in the game Barret let up in his pitching when I went to bat. He want to see me make good and figured that a couple of hits more or less would not affect his rating any. I made a couple of hits in this way, and then came the ninth inning. Never will I forget it. Mansfield was three runs to the bad when we went to bat. They needed four to win. We filled the bases and it was my turn to bat.

* * *

"TAYLOR was not wise to the fact that Barrett had been easing up when I had been at bat before and made a couple of hits, or he might have sent in a pinch hitter. He let me stick. With the bases full, Barrett meant to strike me out. It was too ticklish a time for monkey business. He shoved across a fast one and I knocked it over the fence for a home run and won the game. It was just a case of the luck of things. That's always the way. If the pitcher is lucky he gets you. If you're lucky you get him."

Wagner then explained that he went to Adrian, Mich., where the club was owned by a son of the Taylor who ran the Mansfield (Ohio) club. He went there as infielder and captain. Honus got homesick after a few months and quit the club, going to Warren in the Iron and Oil League. Toward the close of the season he joined the Steubenville club of the Interstate League. That was in 1895.

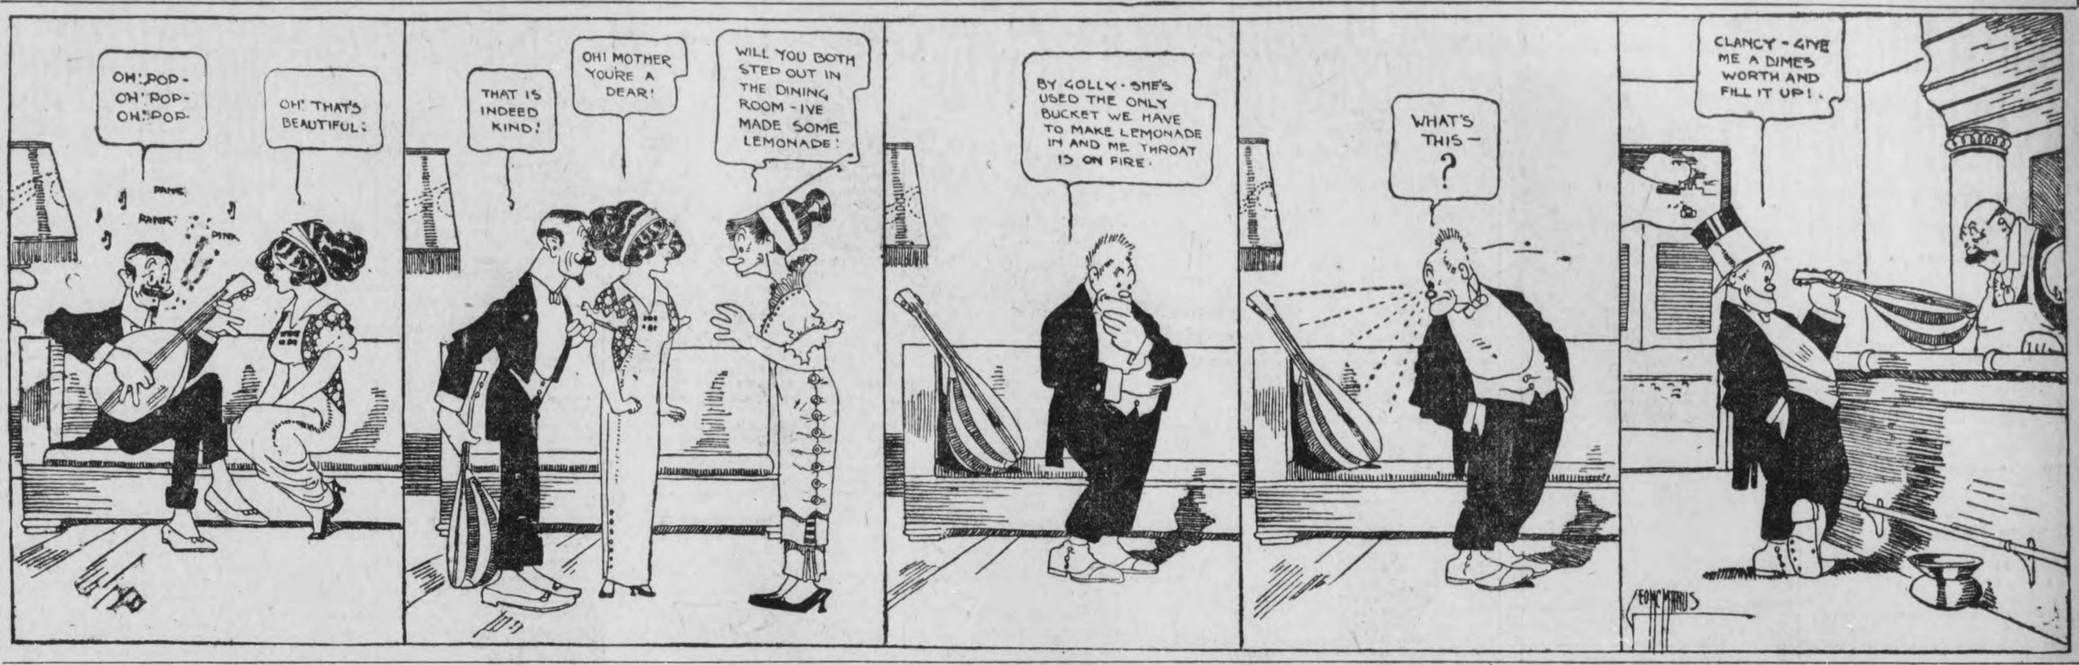
* * *

"I WENT there as a sort of all-around player," said Wagner. "I pitched for a while. I was so wild that I used to walk half the batters and strike out the other half. I had terrific speed and it was hard to get a catcher who could hold me. They borrowed Pete Lavelle from the Pittsburg Nationals to catch me in a couple of games, thinking it would steady me. As a pitcher I was a failure. However, while in the games as a twirler I banged a couple of hits over the fence and they made me an outfielder, putting me in the middle garden.

"The following spring the Pittsburg club signed me, and W. W. Kerr, who then owned the Pirates, wanted to farm me out to Kansas City, but I insisted that it was too far from home, so he sent me to Paterson, N. J., in the Atlantic League. I played with Paterson all of that year and until June 29, 1897, when the Louisville club, then owned by Barney Dreyfuss, my present employer, bought my release. The Colonels were managed by Fred Clarke, and the secretary of the club was the late Harry C. Pulliam, later secretary of the Pirates, and still later president of the National League. Harry was one of the best friends I ever had."

NAPS ARE AFTER THREE PLAYERS FROM MUD HENS

TOLEDO, OHIO, Aug. 16.—Vice President Barnard, of the Naps, came to Toledo yesterday to look over possible purchases for the Naps. It is thought that Pitcher Lefty James, Shortstop Brady and First Baseman Bluhm may be sold to the Cleveland club.



James may be the only player to report to the Naps before the A. A. season closes. In return for him the Hens expect a good southpaw from the Naps. Toledo will recall Pitchers Leak and Myers from Charleston, W. Va.; Pitcher Williams and Catcher Brady from Waterbury.

Nash, who has been playing a whirlwind game at short for the latter club, and is hitting at a .360 clip, and on whom Toledo has a string, will quit baseball at the close of the season to go into politics. He is now running for Assemblyman in his home town.

CUBS NOT AFTER DENVER MEN.

CHICAGO, ILL., Aug. 16.—Officials of the Chicago Nationals denied today that the visit of President McGill and Manager Hendricks, of the Denver Western League club, here was made in connection with a deal for players. The Denver men, according to President O'Neill, of the Western League, came to discuss general matters and the annual draft, which takes place this month.

PUNCH COUNTS IN THE VARIOUS LINES OF SPORT

McLoughlin Possesses Punch in Tennis; So Have American Poloists and Boxers.

By W. W. Naughton.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 16.—A magazine man of my acquaintance told me that one of his short stories was returned to him with the criticism that it lacked "the punch."

This goes to show that "the punch" counts in fiction as well as in real life.

An Englishman wrote to one of the London papers the other day, complaining that Maurice E. McLoughlin had introduced the punch into lawn tennis. The smashing service which McLoughlin has perfected was characterized as a trick, but a legitimate trick at that.

The Englishman referred to said that if methods like McLoughlin's are countenanced "lawn tennis is within measurable distance of death."

It was the plaint of a man who is used to old ideals. He has watched the rhythmic, lobbing game for years, and got it into his blood that that is the only way to play tennis.

But perhaps the outlook is not as gloomy as he pictures it. His countrymen may adopt McLoughlin's trick and try to improve on it.

Even lawn tennis must change in character when the punch comes along.

* * *

ANOTHER Englishman discusses a form of sport into which the punch enters with broader view. He wrote to The Times asking how it is that English boxers are more easily knocked out than American ringmen.

Then he attempts to furnish the explanation. Beginning with the question of physique, he satisfies himself that while Americans are slightly sturdier than latter-day Britons, the answer is not found in that. He believes that it all rests in what he considers a false conception of the manner in which pugilists should be schooled.

English lads, he says, are required to conform to old standards of boxing. It would be quite different, he thinks, if academic notions were sacrificed to personal initiative, for, while learning to spar on the "one, two, three" principle, a British student loses his punch and never recovers it.

* * *

In America, he says, it is different. It is by setting in his own particular fashion with various kinds of opponents, rather than by following the rules laid down in some pugilistic primer, that a young American develops an effective individual style; that with those who learn boxing naturally—that is from experience—the acquisition of the punch is not only the first consideration, but a matter that takes care of itself as the student's knowledge widens.

This Englishman, it is noticed, does not take the stand that because English pugilists are deficient in smiting force boxing "is within measurable distance of death."

He says frankly that English methods are wrong and intimates that there would be wisdom in taking a leaf out of America's book.

* * *

THE punch was in evidence again when the American polo players took the Britishers by storm at Meadowbrook recently. The judgment of the expert was that the visiting Britishers comprised the flower of the polo world. They brought their own ponies with them, and their seeming superiority influenced the betting market to the extent that they were made odds-on favorites.

From all accounts the Americans went at them like Japanese at a Russian fort. The visitors were just loaded to the Plimsoll mark with knowledge of "how to play polo," but the punch upset them. All the King's horses and all the King's men could not withstand the onslaught of the Americans and the cup remained on this side.

Maiden Turned in Great Card Didn't Make a Single "Five"

By Tich Tichenor.

WHEN H. H. Barker did a 69 over the course of the Atlanta Athletic Club in the open tournament held in December, 1910, it was the opinion of all of the professionals who were present that he had set a record which would stand for some years. In this opinion they have thus far been correct. Yet on two different occasions Stewart Maiden, the local professional, has had a chance to break it if he could have holed out in one put on the eighteenth green, while at another time he reached the last green on his sixty-sixth shot. He tried to hole the put for a 67 and ran past the hole and then missed a comparatively easy one for the record.

In one of his rounds which tied the record Maiden performed the feat which might be equaled but which can not be excelled when he went around without a five upon his card. If you are familiar with the East Lake course the more you think of this performance the more wonderful it becomes.

On the outward journey there are the second, the seventh and eighth holes, which are all par fives, while it is easy enough to take a five at either the fourth or ninth, both of which are bogey five. In coming home there are the twelfth, sixteenth and eighteenth, which are par fives, while the fifteenth and seventeenth are hard fours. Yet not a five did he have at any of these holes. At every hole he took a four except at the fifth, fourteenth and fifteenth where he secured threes. Just think of it, fifteen fours and three threes and neither of the threes gotten at the first or third holes, where he would be expected to get a three.

I don't know how this score will appeal to others, but the more I play around East Lake and labor to keep out the sixes and sevens, the more remarkable this score becomes. To be perfectly frank, I do not recall but one round I have ever played around this course in which my card did not register at least one six. George Adair has had the same experience, except he has two such rounds to his credit.

* * *

DURING the early part of June Maiden took a trip to his home in Scotland and while on this visit entered the British open championship. In this event there were 270 entries. These were divided into squads of 90 players each, who played a 36-hole medal play qualifying round, and the lowest twenty in each squad qualified for the championship, which was 72 holes of medal play.

Maiden landed on Tuesday and had only one day to learn the course and to become accustomed to the vast difference in the greens from those he has played upon since he has been in Atlanta, as he was drawn among the players who had to play on Thursday. In this qualifying round he failed to get in by two strokes which he says was due entirely to his putting, which was very bad.

* * *

IN writing of this tournament, the British correspondent of The American Golfer says: "For most of the day the weather was very bad, indeed. When play began at 9 o'clock, the wind was very strong and rain was pouring down, while late in the afternoon it was worse. In such circumstances the peculiar difficulties of Hoylake were well brought out, and the foreign visitors had an unenviable task before them. The first of the Americans to go out was Stewart Maiden, of Atlanta, who was partnered with J. Higgins, of Walsall, and this pair was second on the list, striking off at five minutes past 9. Maiden opened with a nice four at the dog-leg hole, with which the round begins, and after dropping a stroke at the second, went along steadily to the sixth, the famous Briars, and the hole which caused more disaster than any other on this course (it was once halved in nine in the final of the amateur championship), and here he took a six.

"However, at the difficult short hole that follows he got a splendid two, but another six was added at the eighth, and he turned in 40. He came home fairly well, but lost a stroke at the short blind Alps, being the eleventh, and two very valuable ones at the home hole, making his round in 82. In his second round in the afternoon he had a bad seven at the third hole, which is a long one and straight, but very narrow in the fairway, with ditches on either side, and another six was added at the Briars, so that by the time he got to the turn he had used up 43 strokes. He came home really fine in 36, almost the only blemish on his card being the five at the eighteenth, and that was very excusable."

His second round was 79.

Total for 36 holes, 161.

Maiden's 36 for the last nine made in his second round was the best done on this nine holes on the first day of the elimination rounds.

It was on this first day that George Duncan, who was the favorite to win the tournament, was unable to fight against the weather conditions and failed to qualify by four strokes. This was also the round which eliminated Alex Smith, Mike Brady and Alex Campbell, of the American team.

It was a strange coincidence that five of the six American entries should be drawn in the first squad of 90 to fight it out against each other as well as all of the others to get into the tournament.

JAKE STAHL DENIES HE IS TO SUCCEED CALLAHAN

GLOUCESTER, Aug. 16.—The rumor that Jake Stahl was to be given the position as manager of the Chicago White Sox and that Jimmy Callahan, the present head of the team, was to be deposed is entirely without foundation, according to Stahl, who was interviewed at Annisquam yesterday afternoon.

"No," said Stahl, "I have no knowledge of my being picked for the position of manager, and I had not even heard the rumor until you told me just now. Rumors put me out of a job. I guess that is all this talk is, rumor. Those things hurt the club considerably and it keeps the fellows guessing as to the exact truth of the matter. You can say for me that it is a rumor pure and simple and one without the least foundation."

When asked if he would accept the position if it were offered him, Stahl declined to answer.

BOSTON BUYS NEW PLAYER.

BOSTON, Aug. 16.—President McAleer, of the Boston American League club, announced to-day that he has purchased First Baseman Mundy from the Portsmouth club of the Virginia State League.

GOV. TENER FINDS JOB FOR A BASEBALL MATE

HARRISBURG, PA., Aug. 16.—Governor John K. Tener has given a substantial reward to a comrade of his old baseball days, when he appointed George Wood, once a member of the Philadelphia National League team, and a mighty outfielder and hitter, to a good State position. Governor Tener and Wood have been friends ever since their ball-playing days.

About two years ago the Governor found Wood serving as a ticket taker at the American League park in Philadelphia and told him he would try and find him a better job.

Soon afterward Wood was made messenger in the office of the Secretary of the Commonwealth. Later he was promoted to a clerkship in the same office. Now he is marshal of the new Public Service Commission, with a salary of $2,000 a year.

W.-I. DROPS TWO UMPIRES.

GREEN BAY, WIS., Aug. 16.—President Weeks, of the Wisconsin-Illinois League, announced yesterday he had dropped Umpires Roth and McFarlane. George Hogreiver was given a regular place on the staff.

ATHLETES ARE IMPROVING IN BRITISH ISLES

European Track and Field Stars Gradually Approaching Americans; 17,000 Saw Games.

THE fact that the United States and English track and field championships were held upon the same day makes a comparison of the work of the native athletes and their visiting competitors of more than usual interest. England's A. A. A. games were held on the famous oval at Stamford Bridge, London, while the United States championships were being contested at Chicago.

Some 17,000 spectators watched the English and Swedish athletes battle for honors in a drizzle, while about half that number sweltered in a temperature close to 100, while American titles were won on a track and in a field which failed to elicit any praise from the competitors. Although conditions as reported from both athletic fields were against record-breaking performances, a remarkable improvement was shown in the general all-round work of the English and Swedish athletes, indicating that the lessons learned in the recent Olympic games have not been forgotten.

* * *

THE English program consisted of fourteen events, of which English athletes won nine and Sweden's representatives five. Four A. A. A. records were established, two by the Swedes and two by English contenders. The United States schedule contained eighteen contests, in which two new "games" records were made, one by an American-born and another by an Irish athlete.

A comparison of the programs of the two meets shows that eleven similar events appeared on both, and with these as a basis a comparing of records proves that times of distances were better at Stamford Bridge in six of the eleven competitions. To what extent local conditions affected these figures there is no way of knowing. The comparison is made simply to show that the oft-repeated statements that European athletics are gradually approaching American standards are not based on idle observation.

* * *

BEGINNING with the 100, 200 and 440-yard runs, England showed a winner in the first two events in the person of W. R. Applegarth, who won in 10 and 21 2-3 seconds, respectively, against Sprinter Drew's times of 10 2-5 and 22 4-5 seconds at Chicago. Haff, the Chicago A. A. and Michigan flyer, won the 440 yards in 51 1-5, while G. Nichol did 49 2-5 at London.

In both the mile and one-half mile runs the United States figures were better. Baker, the New York A. C. runner, captured the 880 in 2 minutes and 1-5 second. E. Wide, of Sweden, winner in England, was two-fifths of a second slower. Norman Tabor won the mile at Chicago in 4:20 2-5, while Zander, of the Swedish team, required 4:25 4-5 to take the English title. In the running broad jump Abrahams cleared 22 feet 6 inches at the A. A. A. games, while Stiles, the winner at Chicago, did 22 feet 3-4 inch.

* * *

THE running high jump showed that Richards, the Olympic champion, had but three-eighths of an inch advantage over Baker, England's champion, who jumped 6 feet 1 inch. Nilsson, the Swedish shotputter, pushed the weight out 47 feet 4 1-4 inches, against American Champion Whitney's 46 feet 2 5-6 inches. In the pole vault and hammer throw the American figures were far superior to those made at Stamford Bridge.

WHAT ATLANTA MANUFACTURERS AND JOBBERS ARE DOING

ATLANTA HAS NEW FRIENDS AS RESULT OF CONVENTION

Many Attracted to City Who Never Came Before, but Who Now Will Make Semi-Annual Trips and Become Regular Customers.

Attendance Surpasses All Expectations, as Does the Volume of Business Transacted as Direct Result of the Fine Gathering.

The Southern Merchants' Convention is over.

With a theater party at the Forsyth Monday night, a barbecue Wednesday, and the Atlanta-Chattanooga ball game Friday, the visiting delegates enjoyed the second week of their stay, and the Atlanta merchants who pushed the convention to success believe they have made enduring friends of their guests, friends who will come again in February and every half year after that.

The purpose of the convention was twofold. First, the retail dealers from all over the South were given an opportunity to meet and discuss the problems which confront them in the everyday conduct of their business. Second, every effort was made to emphasize Atlanta's advantages as a buying center for all the South.

Both Objects Achieved.

Both these objects were achieved. The speeches during the first week of the convention threw valuable help in the way of those who found perplexities in buying, selling, management of stores, credits, or any of the multitudinous things which go to make up a merchant's work.

It is a good thing that the proceedings are to be published. All of the speeches are well worthy of preservation for future reference. Some of the speakers gave plain talks, just the simple, practical expression of what they had learned through years of experience.

Others spoke with scholarly finish—their speeches really were erudite, of studied completeness and finish. Still others were inspirational—they pointed out the intellectual and spiritual significance of the merchant's work. They made him feel that his is a noble calling, that the great prizes of the world are for the business man.

New Friends Made.

From the other point of view, the results attained were no less notable. Hundreds of buyers came to Atlanta who never had been here before, and who would not have come this time had it not been for the convention.

To them the completeness, the cheapness, the quality and the diversity of things sold by Atlanta manufacturers and jobbers must have been a revelation—indeed, they so expressed themselves.

Some of them bought big bills. Every large jobbing house reports a splendid fall trade. The crop prospects are such as to make everyone optimistic. There will be a good demand for merchandise in the fall, and the buyers prepared to meet it.

There were others who did not buy so much. They are just as welcome, for the Atlantans feels that their goods, their prices and their service are right, and that every customer who buys here once will come again.

New Associations.

A noteworthy result of the meeting was the organization of a permanent body—the Southern States Merchants' Association, headed by J. W. Vaughn, of Carnesville, Ga.

This it is hoped, will bring very tangible benefits to the retailers of the South in general. It may prove to be the parent of scores of local organizations, which can do worlds of good in watching credits, preventing price-slashing and equalizing freight rates.

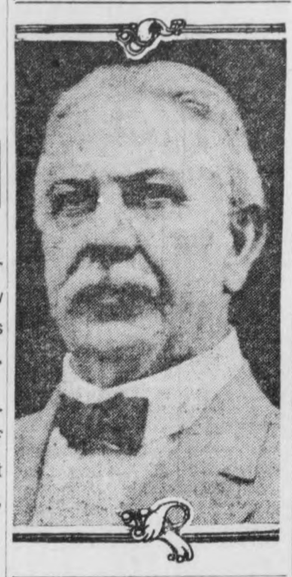
Notions Novelties in Demand From Buyers

Americans Tire Quickly of Any One Style, as Compared to Stability in Europe.

Buyers are very anxious for novelties this season, and it is constantly shown how quickly Americans tire of a given style. In England, France and Germany certain classes of merchandise move about the same year after year, but here we get new things continually. This has its advantages, however, because it stimulates business and there are new interests arising all the time.

Fall business in fancy goods and notions has opened well.

Styles this season are radically new, and leather hand bags with deep pockets and vanity accessories, as well as the beaded varieties in high colors, are especially strong. Tasmania shell hair ornaments are a new item. These goods are the nearest approach to genuine tortoise shell ever produced, and the line comprises braid pins, barettes, and back combs.



Opera length bead necklaces in jet, pearl, amethyst, galalith, white amber and real and imitation pearl are excellent sellers among the newer jewelry features.

Cuff pins, bar pins and hat pins, set with diamond chips, also move readily. Beaded tunics, in the staple gold and silver and high colors, are also strong, and are attractively priced.

Metal vanity cases are produced more reasonably this season, chased effects being shown in gold, oxidized silver or nickel, which are in exact imitation of the very expensive goods.

Parisian ivory goods have been enlarged and the line shown extends from the simple vanity case, retailing at 25 cents, to the more pretentious toilet sets retailing at $25.

WILLIS E. RAGAN, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the "M. & M.," to whom much of the convention's success is due.

GARMENT TRADE AWAITS REPORT OF WAGE BOARD

Complicated Mathematics Necessary to Compute Proper Pay for Piece Workers.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—It is recognized generally in the dress and waist industry that one of the most important provisions of the protocol signed early this year by the manufacturers and their employees is that which brought the wage scale board into existence.

This board, as designated in the protocol, consists of eight members, four nominated by the manufacturers and four by the union. The duties of the board are to standardize work throughout the industry, and to preserve data and statistics, with a view to establishing a scientific basis for fixing these prices that will insure a minimum wage.

It has power to engage experts in price fixing, to settle all disputes over prices and to make special exemptions for week work where special exigencies arise or where special scales are required.

A kindred provision made necessary an immediate investigation of the rates paid in various parts of the industry, the earnings of the operatives and the classification of garments. This investigation is now being made under the direction of N. I. Stone, formerly chief statistician of the tariff board. Commenting recently on the scope of the work, Mr. Stone said:

36,000 Employed.

"There are now about 36,000 operatives in this industry. To date we have collected two sets of wage records, one for 1912 and one for this year, for 30,000 of them, and we are now tabulating the returns. Averages are useless in work of this kind. There are some workers earning as high as $40 a week, and there are some who make only $4. To say that the average wage in the industry is $22 because of these figures is ridiculous.

When our tabulations are completed, I expect to be able to show the percentage of operatives earning from $4 to $5 a weekly, $5 to $6, and so on. Then we will have a practical basis for working out a satisfactory minimum rate.

"Following the report on weekly wage, the board will begin its labors on piecework rates. This will be extremely difficult work, but by a system of minute dissection of garments that has been worked out, I believe that we eventually will be able to determine just what rate should be fixed for each operation. From that the rates justly due the various operatives can be provided on the cheaper lines, and from that the more complicated rates will be figured.

Test Used Now.

"At the present time piece rates are decided by the employers, and piece price committees selected by the workers in the various shops.

"In case of failure to agree on estimates, an experienced operative, a good worker, is selected to make the garment, and the rate is then fixed as provided by the protocol. For instance, if the operative took four hours to make the garment and the factory rate was 30 cents an hour, the manufacturer would then have to allow his employees $1.20 for making the garment.

"This test, however, is not always satisfactory. If the operative takes longer than the employer thinks should be required to make the garment in question, there is apt to be complaints of 'soldiering;' if the operative finishes more quickly than the workers had estimated, she is apt to be accused of siding with the employer. It is this discontent we are working to do away with."

SHINGLES FROM TIN CANS.

In Ottawa a machine has been perfected to make shingles out of discarded tin cans. After being rolled straight the can is put through a corrugating machine. Then it is put through a weatherproofing process, and then into a vat containing a substance like tar. The tin, while still wet, is dipped in asbestos, which readily adheres to the tar-like coating. Shingles so made are said to be more flexible and lighter than the wood or corrugated steel articles, and they are produced in various colors.

SHOE DEALERS HAVE REASONS FOR DECEPTION

Motives for Using Code in Marking Sizes on Footwear Is Humanitarian, They Say.

Fully 90 adults out of every 100, be they male or female, show a distinct unwillingness to buy shoes that are long enough and wide enough to fit their feet comfortably.

This statement is made on the authority of a retailer who has tried for more than twenty years to suit the buying public and who has succeeded only at the sacrifice of a considerable portion of his stock of truthfulness. This tendency to buy small shoes is characteristic of Americans, according to this merchant.

The position of the retail merchant and salesman is none too desirable as a result of this liking for small feet. Often the customer will want a size that the salesman can see at once will be too short or too narrow. Argument is dangerous, for the customers are frequently more willing to accept cramped toes than a criticism of their knowledge of their own necessities. Most often argumentative salesmanship results in lost sales.

Numerous Codes.

It is for this reason that plain marking of lengths and widths of shoes is more and more avoided by the retailers. Numerous codes have come into existence in the last few years that have completely put the average layman out of the running when it comes to telling the size of the shoes he is having fitted. Wholesalers make no attempt to deny that these codes are used purposely to keep the customer in the dark as to the real size of the shoe, but the retailers are less willing to acknowledge this point.

It can not be denied, however, that code markings save lost sales, time, and money. This is due largely to the fact that there is no general standard last, despite the efforts of several of the leading manufacturers to have one established. A 7C shoe made by one manufacturer often will differ in size from a shoe bearing a similar mark, but coming from another factory. This is not generally known, and a salesman often has difficulty in explaining why a size that at one time gave a comfortable fit gives an uncomfortable pinch at another.

Styles Make Difference.

In shoes made by the same manufacturer it frequently happens that a size which fits well in one style will not fit at all in a second style. This gives another trying time for the salesman when plain markings are used, especially so if the customer be a woman. Customers do not complain a great deal on finding out a clerks' deception if the shoes fit all right, whereas if they knew the real size of the shoe at the time they bought it they would probably go to some other shop.

The wide variety of codes now in existence has caused no small trouble to the manufacturers. In one case twenty-two different markings are required to satisfy the codes of retail dealers. This has led the manufacturers to ask that the retailers order their shoes stamped only in plain sizes and widths, or to adopt one standard system of code marking. This, it is believed, eventually will be done.

One of the most practical codes used is the so-called "Western System." In this code the English width designations, AA, A, B, C, etc., are indicated by figures ranging from zero for AA to 5 for E. The length of the shoe is given plainly as 3, 4 or 5, with zero attached for whole size and b attached for half sizes. The whole code contains three figures, and by its use size 3 1-2C would be marked 335. Size 7D would be marked 470, and so on.

Electric Signs Now Made Right at Home

One of the First Products of New Studio Is Largest Display South of New York.

Atlanta now possesses a first-class electric sign studio. Heretofore local merchants have been obliged to purchase their electric signs in other cities and have them shipped here at heavy expense.

Proof that this is no inconsequential studio is the new electric sign at the south end of the Whitehall-Peachtree viaduct—the largest south of New York, and one of the most beautiful anywhere. It was made in Atlanta from start to finish. It uses more than 2,500 lamps, and some of the letters on the sign are more than twelve feet high.

The new studio is the property of the Massengale Bulletin System, and is in the remodeled building which the Atlanta Athletic Club once occupied at 56 Edgewood avenue.

Ten high-salaried experts, men who thoroughly understand how to design and manufacture intricate and artistic electric signs, have been brought here by the Massengale Company to take charge of the new studio. M. O. Trusdell is in charge of the electrical department.

St. Elmo Massengale is president of the company and Gordon B. Massengale is secretary and manager.

E. Frank Munn is assistant manager and general superintendent.

NEW ARTIFICIAL SILK IS MADE FROM COTTON

A factory on an eight-acre plot will soon be erected at Kingston, N. Y., for manufacturing artificial silk from cotton by the Greiner-Wilkins process. Proof of the practicability of the new process was that stockings, shirtings, plushes, velvets and neckties could be made from the spun yarn. The demand for artificial silk is considerably greater than the supply, and it is maintained that the cost of its production from cotton is cheaper than where wood was used, and that silk made by the new process is more durable than that made from wood.

USES U. S. PORTS.

Of wheat exported from Canada last year, 64 per cent went by United States ports.

NEW RICE HIGH; MARKET IS BARE OF LAST YEAR'S

Honduras Quoted at 7½ Cents to Jobbers by Big Atlanta Brokerage House.

New rice is being shown by H. H. Whitcomb & Burke Co., Atlanta's foremost grocery brokers, and the price is "sky high," higher than any of the grocers remember, the figure quoted being 7 1-2 cents for full head Honduras clean. Japan sells for 3 1-2 and 4 cents. These are quotations to wholesalers.

The market is bare of old crop rice of good grades. Those who demand the fancy article have had to deny themselves. The new crop, it seems, is moving slowly, and indications are that the high levels will be maintained for some time, although a break is possible later on. At the present time, even samples are hard to get from New Orleans, which, of course, is the center of the rice trade.

Cheese also is high, considering the season. The usual fall advance is coming very early. Plymouth, Wis., American full cream cheese is quoted, daisy, 15 cents, and twin daisies, 14 3-4 cents.

"White Fish" Coming.

Great Lakes salt herring will begin to come in next month, and this most palatable fish promises to be in unparalleled demand. This is the variety known for years as "white fish," but the real white fish is as scarce as prairie chicken, and by a recent government ruling it is made an offense to brand fresh water herring by this name. The Whitcomb-Burke supply comes from the great fisheries at Green Bay, Wis.

Every week, it seems, some new product appears on the market to make the housewife's work lighter. The woman who so desires could feed her family for months at a time and never do a bit of cooking, with bakers' bread, canned brown bread, coffee which needs only the addition of water, tinned roast beef, lemon pie filling, lemon sugar, onion salad and a multitude of ready-prepared articles.

The latest in this line is prepared doughnut flour. The powder contains flour, eggs, spices and all the other ingredients of doughnuts. All that is necessary is to add water, roll the dough, cut it and fry the doughnuts. Sufficient to make two dozen doughnuts is sold for 15 cents.

New Pack Yams Due.

New pack sweet potatoes are due in a few weeks, with a fair-sized crop of excellent quality in prospect. This is an all-Southern product unknown in the North a few years ago. But the juicy Southern yellow pumpkin yam is so much superior to the kiln-dried, mealy Jersey sweet potato of the North that it is believed a very short time will serve to make the more palatable product supreme in the market.

Every day there's a new condiment. This time it is onion salad, a Boston product with a peculiar tang which makes a hit on first trial. Louisiana, the home of tabasco peppers, is putting out a new tabasco sauce which the Whitcomb-Burke Company is introducing with considerable success.

Sweeping Decision In Soft Drinks Case

Beverage Similar in Color, Taste and Bottle Infringes, Even Though Names Differ Widely.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—A decision which is likely to have an important bearing upon the whole question of imitation and substitution in various lines of business has just been rendered by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals.

The court has ordered an injunction in favor of the manufacturers of a popular beverage and restraining the making of a similar articles from putting out their product in bottles of the same size and shape.

What is generally regarded as the important phase of the court's decree is the apparently broad interpretation given to the law for the protection of manufacturers against imitators. In this particular case the similarity between the two products was confined to their color and taste and the shape of the bottles. The names were wholly dissimilar, the labels were of different colors and had no points of resemblance, either as to typography or general appearance. Also, the caps for sealing the bottles were of different kinds. The court held, however, that differences which do not destroy the general similarity of appearance to the ordinary purchaser are of no consequence and need not be dwelt upon, and that the defendant had not performed his legal duty of distinguishing his product by making differences which leave unimpaired the general resemblance.

TOYS FROM WASTE WOOD.

A toy company in Sheboygan, Wis., has begun to use only the waste wood from other mills. It has even worked out a system of using all small pieces, as well as the larger ones, so that practically nothing is lost but sawdust.

In Field Where Brains Win, Atlanta Is Leader

Millinery Business Amounts to $2,000,000 Yearly—Buyers Now Are in the City.

In a field which is in many respects the most difficult in the mercantile world—millinery—Atlanta stands supreme in the South, and is one of the prominent centers of the United States.

Millinery involves no question of geography. Transportation charges do not enter into it as they do, for instance, in the flour or coal trade. Millinery involves few problems of prices or narrow cost margins. A hat is worth what it will bring.

The business does require the keenest study—study carried on on two sides of the ocean (there are many Atlanta designers who spend a part of each season in Paris). It requires able generalship, for competition is keen both in the designing and selling fields. More trying than any of these things is the constant shifting of women's whims. These make the business the great thing it is, but also they cause heavy losses when goods bought at high prices suddenly become absolutely unsalable.

Brains, then, alone conquer in this peculiar business. And Atlanta is long on brains.

Brains have built up a business which insiders estimate at $2,000,000 a year in Atlanta. There are six large wholesale houses in Atlanta—E. L. Rhodes Company, Meyer-Regenstein Company, M. Kutz Company, D. Silverman Company, N. Myers Company and N. Bodenheimer & Bro.

The fall season just has opened. It will attract, in two weeks or so, about 1,500 buyers.

They come here to see the advance styles, to buy hats trimmed in these styles, to take notes of the models for later production in Tallapoosa or Hushpuckena, or to copy the models with thorough fidelity for the same purpose.

A little before the semi-annual openings women begin to appear, seeking work as trimmers. Now, here is a strange thing. These women are milliners. Many of them own prosperous little establishments in the smaller towns. Others are managers of millinery departments in department stores.

They work until the opening, learning the new styles and how to trim them—how to make the new bows, for instance.

Then these women change from their role of wage-earners and become merchants. They make their selections, buy their stock for the season and go back to Tallapoosa to remain until a little before the opening of the next season.

The wholesale houses encourage this. It gives them skilled workers when they need such help and it gives them friends in all the millinery shops on whom they must depend for trade.

Mrs. Jones, who works a few weeks a year at Rhodes', learns styles there, and knows Rhodes' stock, is pretty apt to buy all her goods from Rhodes. This is the system, and the wholesalers make of themselves regular employment bureaus, furnishing skilled milliners to any firms which demand them.

Fall Car Shortage Will Be No Worse

Shippers and Railroad Men Are Cooperating to Make Best Possible Use of Equipment.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Railroad officials say that while there will be a shortage of cars in the fall, it is not likely to be greater than last year, when average deficiency was reported as 27,581 cars.

The situation this year may be less difficult to handle because shippers, as well as railroad men, have had impressed on them the requirements of the situation that arise every autumn. In the case of railroad men, timely repair of freight equipment, simplification of terminal operations and recasting of inspection and interchange rules are the considerations.

Railroads are devoting more attention to utilization of the freight car, their best assets, earning about 75 per cent of gross, and undoubtedly their best freight solicitor during periods of heavy traffic. Average earnings of each car per day for 1912 were $2.35, or, eliminating Sundays and holidays and confining computation to the busy season, gross earnings capacity was $3.85, while net was $1.15.

Overcoats Will Be Shorter This Season

Norfolk Designs Less in Favor—Chinchilla Favorite Material for the Garments.

There will be no decided change in the fall and winter styles for men's clothing, excepting that overcoats will be made shorter.

Chinchilla is the popular fabric for them, and there is a tendency toward using solid colors and avoiding fancy effects. The demand for Norfolk coats is diminishing. Soft roll front coats of the two and three button English style, with patch pockets, are favored. Sack coats will be slightly shorter. Vests will be cut somewhat lower than formerly and trousers are to be narrower.

For suitings, narrow pencil stripes, serges and Oxfords are the featured materials. The color trend is toward blue, gray and brown. Some manufacturers think well of neat plaids and checks.

FRANCE COINS GOLD.

Because of recent monetary stringency, Bank of France has decided to convert its $600,000,000 gold reserve, until now represented by ingots, into gold currency. More than $200,000,000 has already been coined.

TIGHTER MONEY NOT LIKELY.

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—John J. Mitchell says: "Money is unlikely to get any closer this year than it has been recently, and would not, regardless of treasury relief. Good rains would restore corn to very general conditions."

WATERPROOF SHOES OF PAPER.

Waterproof shoes made of paper are covered by a patent recently issued to Morris H. Siegel. The paper is of sufficient toughness to stand at least one wearing. To prevent tearing there are gores at the sides which unfold to admit the foot.

Lace Hosiery Latest Novelty in the Trade

Radical Fashions Encourage Demand for These Goods—Only High-Priced Samples Shown.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Some members of the hosiery trade believe there are indications of an increasing demand for lace goods, and that the novelty developments for another season will be along this line. Their opinions are based on the business that already is being done this season in high-priced lace hosiery. Women with the money to satisfy the latest fashion demands are turning to lace hosiery as the surest way to get something different, something that is not worn by the populace at large.

Fashionable summer resorts accordingly have seen this year a large use of lace hosiery. The goods already on the market of this kind are so far, of course, all high priced, $5 a pair being nothing unusual. Such goods are made with a regular silk foot, with genuine lace inserted in a panel form.

Should this latest hosiery style prove to be of the importance now given to it by members of the trade, it is predicted that before long domestic manufacturers in large numbers will be taking it up and turning out goods in quantity to sell at prices that will mean a large distribution.

Past experience, it was pointed out, showed that by simple changes in machinery, lace hosiery, so called, can be turned out so cheaply as to warrant its sale at popular prices. During the last run on lace hosiery, a number of years ago, the production was large because of the cheapness at which goods could be offered.

Prevailing fashions in women's dresses, with the skirt conspicuous, will help materially any established demand for lace effects.

Dress Goods Moving With More Freedom

Spot Lots of Underwear and Hosiery, Lightweight, Being Picked Up Wherever Found.

On some dry goods lines jobbers admit that retailers are rather slow in taking hold, while on other lines sales are ahead of those for the corresponding period last year.

Dress goods are moving ou with more freedom, silks are wanted, and buyers are asking for immediate shipment of goods on old order. Spot lots of lightweight underwear and hosiery are being picked up wherever available, but jobbers' stocks have been reduced to such a point that there is little or nothing left on which deliveries can be made.

The question of prices on forward cotton goods contracts for the last nine months of the year is still coming in for considerable discussion. The shortage of spot and nearby delivery goods is causing some manufacturers to hesitate over shading their prices for future delivery, although it is a difficult matter to bring home the shortage to buyers, unless they actually come into the market for goods and can not obtain what they want.

BUYERS SLOW TO TAKE FANCY COTTON GOODS

Business Actually Placed With Many Houses Confined to Sample Lines—Ratines Lead.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Hesitation marks the course of many buyers of wash fabrics and fine fancy cottons. In many instances restrictions of merchandise managers are restraining them, the desire of financial heads of many houses being to postpone all buying that is not absolutely essential for the conduct of the business.

Numbers of buyers have operated in quantities sufficient to permit them to ask for full lines of sample cards for traveling men, and no more. They have said that if the lines sell well on the road when men go out seeking business for spring from retailers they will duplicate in their usual quantities, but they declare that if business is to be slow on fancies and novelties they are going to see that mills bear the burden of any accumulations.

Style developments have held many men back. The development of the ratine and crepe weaves has been so broad that buyers are afraid to order them fully until they hear more from their own trade.

That a great many of these cloths will be worn goes without saying, if for no other reason than the one that few other fancies have been shown and prepared. As a rule, buyers are less troubled about the style probabilities of the cloths than they are about the danger of a flooding of the trade with the cheap goods.

A cloth that was scarce at $1 a yard at retail a year ago and is now found freely at 8 1-2 cents a yard in various forms at wholesale, is sufficient in itself to make the experienced buyer pause and await for the answer that will come from retailers to road men traveling for the jobbing houses.

RAILROADS TAX SALESMEN WHO HAVE NO VOTE

Excess Baggage Rates Are Much Higher Than Express Company Charges, One Complaint.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Out of the maze of discussion that has centered about the excess baggage problem during the past two years a few points have been brought out to show the salesman's need of the voting privilege when away on business trips.

When shippers complain of railroad and express companies' rates, the Interstate Commerce Commission gives prompt attention to an appeal, but the voice of the traveling man is unheard. He pays his own expenses and has no vote. For example, the excess rate for a Pacific coast excursion ticket up to a year ago was $8.80 per hundred pounds. The railroads thought that the traveler could stand another squeeze and raised it to $10.

The present rate of 16 2-3 per cent and more is maintained in spite of the fact that the maximum legal charge is 12 1-2 per cent. The unfairness of this rate is more apparent when it is compared with the charges of express companies.

To illustrate, a first class ticket to Chicago on the Pennsylvania or the New York Central is $20. The excess rate per 100 pounds is $3.45, or 17 per cent of the ticket's cost. The express rate is $2.50 per 100 pounds, out of which the railroad receives $1.25, which is only 6 3-4 per cent of $20. On the Baltimore and Ohio the ticket costs only $18, but the excess rate is the same, thus bringing the rate to a still higher percentage in that case. Under the new express rate schedule the discrepancy will be still larger without lowering the excess rates to the salesmen.

The movement to procure votes for traveling men is steadily gaining ground. The Secretary of the Navy, in a letter expressed his approval of the idea.

High Prices for Ostrich Farms.

A striking illustration of the profits in ostrich farming is found in the report that a man in the Oudtshoorn feather district of South Africa has leased 290 acres of land for a period of ten years for $7,500 per year. In the same district 35 acres of land sold for $30,000.

At What Rate Do You Do Business?

Fire insurance rates on a building are based not only on the chances of that building catching fire, but to a larger extent on the facilities at hand for putting out the fire, should it occur.

The more convenient the Fire Service, the lower the rate.

Just so in merchandising; the cost of doing business is directly governed by the convenience of a merchant's source of supply.

Take shoes, for instance; the Southern merchant who buys his stock in the distant markets of New England and the West is paying a mighty high rate to do business.

Here are the extra costs he pays:

1st. Excess freight charges.

2d. Interest on half the stock he now carries that would be unnecessary with a near-by efficient factory connection.

3d. Loss on accumulation and depreciation of dead styles.

4th. Sales missed by being out of the right styles and sizes when he needs them.

News and Views by Experts of Finance, Industry, Crops and Commerce

COTTON FIELDS TELL STORY OF TWO ASPECTS

No Cause for Complaint in the Central or Eastern Belt. Spinners Reluctant.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 16.—A genuine crop scare in a considerable portion of the cotton belt and an absence of bullish activity in the price marts was an anomaly presented during the week. A partial explanation for it was, that while the crop was admittedly losing condition in Oklahoma and Texas, in practically all the rest of the belt there was no good reason for complaint. In fact, most of the central and eastern belt sent in reports of excellent progress toward a satisfactory yield. There was thus a two-sided story from the cotton fields, and the sections which last season had only moderate outturns were giving promise of evening up matters with a section that had bumper crops.

The promise of rains in the western part of the belt at the close of last wek, which afforded much of the basis for the bearish activity in the speculative market on Friday and Saturday, proved barren of much results, for the showers were scattered, and by no means sufficient to relieve the situation. In only a few localities did they amount to enough to give relief, and as the temperatures continued high, some of them might better not have come. Arkansas had some fine rains, which put an end to an incipient drouth. The week has brought no important relief to Oklahoma and Texas, and most students of the situation have reduced expectations for those important areas.

It seems certain enough damage already has been done to make unlikely a yield of as much as last year, despite increased acreage. The injury will continue until the drouth is relieved, and then for them to have full benefit there will have to be a late and open fall so late fruit can mature.

In the central belt conditions are still excellent, and the critical period will soon pass. Expectations are for the largest crop ever gathered in this territory, and picking will start in earnest in a few weeks. The "first" bale has already appeared here, nine days ahead of last year and five earlier than the average date. However, the crop as a whole is not that much ahead, the bale having come from the section that is trying to get ahead of the boll weevil by early planting and forced cultivation.

Opinion here is that the improvement of the past few weeks in the eastern belt has been such as to make possible a large yield, though it is doubted whether the record of two years ago will be reached in any large area.

The spot situation is still without much feature, and it seems likely that the spinners are going to take their time about buying. Very little forward business is reported booked and the disposition to scatter orders is not yet marked. From across the water comes talk of trade not being so promising, though there is a suspicion that one motive for such news is the need of raw material in large quantities soon and it will not hurt any to spread the notion that trade is going to be dull, thus helping to depress values and enable as cheap buying as possible.

The effect of the legislation against futures, should it be passed, is also expected to be for lower prices, which is another motive for the spinners waiting. There are many people who think the removal of this menacing cloud would result in a very quick revival of bullish speculative activity and thus the crop scare would become a price factor of more importance than it has been.

The foreign spinner, no doubt, also feels that the money situation is such that there will be a rush to sell the new crop, which will better his chances of getting bargains provided he does not show too much eagerness this early.

The domestic spinner naturally is biding his time and being conservative, pending the passage of the tariff act and its effect on business. Other things also encourage him to be a little patient, although advices indicate a healthy prospect for business.

SEABOARD NOTES CHEAP.

The offering of the unsold balance of Seaboard Air Line $1,900,000 equipment trust notes is being made at a price to yield 6 per cent. Seaboard Air Line Railway's surplus over all fixed charges and bond interest, for the year ended June 30, last, it is understood, was between $1,725,000 and $1,750,000, or equivalent to 6.9 per cent on the $25,000,000 preferred stock. Last year the surplus on the same basis was $899,000.

THE NEW ISSUES.

The Financial Chronicle's New York review of new security issues for the last six months shows them to have been the smallest in years and much below the average of the last eight years, totaling for stocks and bonds only $627,048,160, par value, compared with $1,219,250 in the first six months of 1912.

PHYSICAL LIMIT SET.

The Baldwin Locomotive Company says the factor determining size and power of locomotives is the physical ability of firemen to shovel coal.

Six Crops of Alfalfa in One Season; Big Opportunity for Farmers of South

Special Soil Preparatin Is Necessary to Success—Inoculation and Liming Important—Seed Bed Preparation Should Begin Two Years in Advance.

CHARLES A. WHITTLE.

(Georgia State College of Agriculture.)

Think of from four to six crops of hay off a field in a year, and you are thinking of the possibilities of alfalfa growing in the South. Think of cutting from one to one and a half tons per acre each time and figure that each ton is worth at least $25 and you arrive at a very snug income with mighty little sweat as compared to cotton, for instance.

But be not deceived. Learning to grow alfalfa in the South is the biggest thing about it. Anybody who takes it as a matter of course that all he has to do is to stir the land and plant and thereafter watch the negroes harvest, is more than likely to be enrolled with the long list of those who have proven alfalfa failures in the South.

With all the good things that can be said of the soil of the South, it can pretty generally be said that Southern lands are not naturally "cut out" to grow alfalfa. This is not saying that alfalfa as a rule will not grow in the South, nor is it reflecting in any wise on either the soil or the climate. The point is that all Southern soils have to be given special treatment and preparation before alfalfa will be at home in it.

Alfalfa on Every Farm.

"Alfalfa on every farm," the slogan now going the rounds, does not point to an impossible ideal, but if anyone thinks it can be attained in the South without a considerable revolution, he may be easily deceived by trying it.

With all, it is easy enough to prepare the soil for alfalfa and go along producing it, if the prospective grower will follow good advice—but there is the rub.

The ordinary cotton grower of the South will have to practice crop rotation, he will have to add inoculation to his vocabulary and practices, and he will have to get lime into his soil. Those who have been teaching this sort of doctrine and have observed how far it has taken root in the South will understand how much farming practice will have to be changed to realize "Alfalfa on every farm."

To the average Southern farmer to mention inoculation is to elicit inquiries. What is it? Why? And to tell the truth, it is neither easy to understand nor to explain. A full explanation, indeed, is impossible. Inoculation means to introduce friendly bacteria into the soil. Without certain nitrogen fixing bacteria present in the ordinary soil, alfalfa and other legumes make poor headway. Certain it is that some of these bacteria can take the nitrogen from the air and fix it in the ground, converting at the same time the nitrogen into food for the growing plant.

Alfalfa Bred Bacteria Best.

It is believed that almost any soil has some of the nitrogen fixing bacteria present in it, but as a matter of fact in some soils these bacteria are few and apparently so starved as to be unequal to the task imposed by thrifty alfalfa.

The best bacteria with which to inoculate are those which have been bred in a good alfalfa field. Good bacteria can be grown artificially and it is with such artificially grown bacteria that seed are inoculated. When sprinkled with a solution in which the artificially grown bacteria have been turned loose, the seed carry on their surface enough of the bacteria to start up business in a new field.

Of course the bacteria are invisible except under a compound microscope. The farmer can not see them and when he buys he buys on faith. If his alfalfa grows and produces good crops he believes in inoculation. If it does not, he is likely to have notions of his own about inoculation. It is possible for seed to be perfectly inoculated and by reason of improper handling may fail to show results. Sunlight destroys bacteria and inoculated seed left exposed to the sunlight will become sterile. To escape the danger of sunlight it is necessary, of course, to shelter the bacteria, and it is wiser to sow or to apply the inoculation medium late in the afternoon or during cloudy weather.

Again, the seed may be properly inoculated, due precaution may be taken to get it into the soil with the least injury from the sunlight, but the soil may be sour, which is no sort of soil for a nitrogen fixing bacteria.

Lime Necessary to Alfalfa.

To correct sourness of soil lime is necessary. The fact is that practically all soils in the South are deficient in lime. This may never become apparent so long as cotton or corn is grown, but it is certainly true when it comes to growing legumes.

The lime is not needed as a fertilizer. It is merely a tonic to nitrogen fixing bacteria. Soils generally are supplied with all the lime that the crops need. Experiments have shown that most of the crops grown in the South are benefited by the use of lime, a benefit that is attributable to increasing bacterial activity. Bacterial activity means increase of plant food, for bacteria in effect are minute laboratories changing the elements nonavailable for plant food into elements of the soil that are available. Of course there are good and bad bacteria. Some of those that might be classed as bad operate to change available plant food into non-available. Of such are the denitrifying bacteria, which instead of preparing bacteria for the plants change it into perhaps free nitrogen that returns again to the air.

These friendly bacteria have been isolated and named and are nurtured, coaxed and strengthened to do their best. Only the border of the realm of these soil agents has been entered, and it may be reckoned with a degree of certainty that as the scientist ventures further into the mysterious country of the unseen that he will bring back to the farmer knowledge that will mean two bushels where one is now grown, all by learning which are the good bacteria that are serving plant life and how to encourage their growth.

The first great contribution of the scientist in looking into the teeming soil world is that lime is good for nitrogen-fixing bacteria, and since nitrogen is the most expensive plant food and one of the most important, it is a wonderful discovery this of lime and its relations to bacteria.

Since nitrogen-fixing bacteria operating to the good of alfalfa set up shop on the roots of the plant and there extract nitrogen from the air that has penetrated the soil, to know that lime will make it thrive is equivalent to saying that without lime alfalfa will not grow in many Southern soils, for it is a fact that most Southern soils are deficient in lime and are too sour for nitrogen-fixing bacteria.

Success Has Made Failures.

Some pretty well-known, highly respected and intelligent men have said that they do not believe in inoculation nor in liming for alfalfa. They point to their successful alfalfa patch to show you that neither is necessary. Unwittingly such well-meaning people have been the means of the downfall of others in their attempts to grow alfalfa. Do not get an idea that there are many such alfalfa successes in the South, especially among those who have not used lime. Even where the soil has been formed by the disintegration of limestone rock, where there is a foundation of limestone in the soil, is to be found a marked deficiency in available lime. The lime has leached out. It must be supplied. On soils which for some reason, exceptional to the rule, there is sufficient lime, alfalfa may be started and grown successfully even without inoculation. The reason for the unnecessary inoculation will be found to be that the soil has already been stocked with nitrogen-fixing bacteria through the medium of clover, cowpeas, beans or one of a hundred other legumes.

Some of the authorities are now advocating going to the roadside, the fence corners or other places where sweet clover or burr clover, or lespedeza, or some other legumes are growing, taking some of the soil from underneath, scatter it over the alfalfa seed bed and harrow it under. By this mean nitrogen-fixing bacteria will be added to the soil, bacteria that have been making their living off the very kind of soil in which they are appointed to continue operations.

Better still, of course, would be soil taken from a field in which alfalfa had grown, a field where conditions are similar as to character of soil, climate, growing zone, etc. Naturally bacteria that have been feeding on alfalfa must have established alfalfa-loving characteristics.

Suppose some cotton farmer gets inspiration enough to get out of the ruts and takes the advice of the man who does not believe in inoculation or liming, and suppose he fails, as he is likely to do, what a pity! When again will he be in frame of mind to try?

Preparing the Seed Bed.

The preparation of the seed bed with reference to weed eradication is important. It is time well spent if two years are taken in preparing the land for alfalfa. If barnyard manure is applied, it is better to follow with a crop of corn as a weed eradicator. This followed by rye or oats drilled between the corn rows at the last time the corn is worked, will afford not only a winter cover crop, but good pasturage for the colts and calves during the winter. After the rye or oats, as the case may be, is taken off, the cowpea or soy bean will prove excellent for keeping the weeds from getting a start. Turning under the cowpeas or soy beans and harrowing the ground until it is in find tilth, as good a seed bed as could be obtained for growing alfalfa is prepared.

Weeds and alfalfa do not do well together. If the farmer can not get rid of the weeds, he need not look to alfalfa to do it. Many farmers have had fits of despair over the weeds and crab grass which have made their appearance in their alfalfa patches.

But weeds are not formidable obstacles to growing alfalfa where the precautions described have been taken. Even where the weeds have appeared in an alfalfa patch there is a fighting chance for alfalfa if the right steps are taken to keep down the weeds. The method usually recommended is to run a disk harrow over the field. This plays havoc with the weeds, but harms the alfalfa very little. By some it is claimed that the harrowing will break up the alfalfa crowns or bunches and start new plants. Weed eradication in the field will rarely be necessary if the seed bed is properly prepared in advance.

Then Put In Lime.

Having brought the seed bed through two seasons of preparation and having broken and harrowed the ground, the next important step is to put in the lime. The amount of lime to apply will depend upon the degree of acidity or sourness of the land, not on the amount of lime already in the soil. The degree of sourness is usually determined by the use of litmus paper, a prepared paper that can be purchased at any drug store. This paper when imbedded in fairly moist soil and left a short time, when taken out will show by the change of color how acid the soil is. If the change of color is very marked plenty of lime should be applied. The application will vary from one to two tons per acre.

Lime is comparatively inexpensive and when once applied serves its purpose five or more years. Ground limestone is the form which is most generally used. The price is determined largely by the cost of freight. At lime manufacturing centers the ground limestone can usually be bought at $1 per ton and even less, especially where the lime is a by-product.

The lime should be broadcasted or drilled in. If broadcasted, then harrowed under.

Sourness of soil is attributed to an incomplete stage of decomposition of vegetable matter which has been turned into the soil. The lime is the one element that will at once adjust conditions and permit other bacteria as well as the nitrogen fixing bacteria to do their work. The vegetable matter which has been turned under in preparing the seed bed and is in process of decomposition, that is, which is being transformed by bacteria, proceeds with its processes most favorably in the presence of lime, becomes humus and then plant food.

An application of nitrate of soda after the alfalfa has come up, especially if it is not showing good color, has often proved helpful.

Cropping Alfalfa.

When the alfalfa plant has grown its full height, a second growth will the second growth has put up its shoots and has started vigorously, be found starting at the roots. When then is the time to cut off the first crop. If the weather is normal, in a month's time there will be another crop ready to cut. The same signs of when to cut are to be followed in each instance—that is, the oncoming of another crop.

In the South when there has been as much rain as has generally prevailed this summer, the owner of an alfalfa patch will be cutting hay once a month for about six months in the year. Indeed, the prospect are favorable in some alfalfa patches for seven crops this year, five already having been cut, and the growing season ahead extending through September and October.

If a ton of cured hay per acre is obtained with each cutting, the alfalfa can be counted as doing first rate. Some will do better.

Alfalfa hay is worth taking good care of. The weather is not always favorable for curing it in the field, especially during the thundershower period. Canvas caps for the piles of hay in the field pay for themselves over and over by saving hay that would rot in the field from too much rain. Any grower of hay of whatever kind of hay it may be can well afford to provide hay caps.

Alfalfa hay is good, rich hay and ranks very near wheat bran in the amount of nutriments, ton for ton. Wheat bran costs about $30 per ton laid down in the South. Raise alfalfa hay and the wheat bran need not be purchased. The alfalfa has a feeding value of nearly $30 per ton at present prices, but at the outset of this article a selling prices of $25 was set as an average.

As a feed alfalfa is a producer of high-class barnyard manure. Considering that the feeding value of alfalfa is nearly $30 per ton and the manure produced of high fertilizing value, the conclusion is that alfalfa is most profitable to the farmer when he feeds it to farm animals and applies the manure to the land.

Thus the story of alfalfa ends most happily when alfalfa is married to a home made live stock business.

Selling U. S. Bonds Short Is Risky Deal

Restricted Market for These Securities Makes the 'Bear's' Lot One Not Enviable.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—The trader who sells any Government bonds short takes a long chance of making a profit, because of the restricted market for these securities, and the short seller of those which bear coupons assumes a risk much greater than is attached to any active stock or bond on the Stock Exchange list. Government coupon bonds, particularly those which have the circulation privilege, are comparatively scarce.

The coupon bonds may be converted into registered bonds, but registered bonds may not be exchanged for others of the same clas which bear coupons.

The application of this provision to the issues which are used to secure bank note issues, naturally, has worked to cut down the number of coupon bonds outstanding and thereby greatly lessened the opportunity of short-sellers for covering their contracts at times when they have the best advantage for a profitable transaction.

An expert on Government issues predicted yesterday that traders who went short on coupon 2s below 96 would have difficulty in covering at any price under par unless some development at Washington occurs to weaken them drastically.

No One Surprised at Passing of Dividend

National Railways of Mexico Made the Plaything of Every Rebel Chieftain.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Persons sufficiently interested in the National Railways of Mexico to watch earnings long ago decided that the company could not pay another semi-annual dividend on its first preferred stock while the revolution continued. Members of the New York board said the payment due August 10 would not be made; and when word came from Mexico City that the usual declaration expected at this time had been omitted by the directors, there was no surprise.

The Railways' lines have been the plaything of the rebels and bandits wherever they have congregated in numbers sufficient to defy the authorities. Under the delusion that one of the first rules of warfare is to destroy as much property as possible, the insurrectos have burned trestles and torn up track in which they, as natives of Mexico, had a proprietary interest.

There is a great deal of European money invested in the National Railways, as well as a very respectable amount of American capital but the Mexican Government owns $74,724,000 of the $150,000,000 common stock, $10,000,000 of the $57,662,000 of the first preferred and $38,278,00 of the $240,597,000 of second preferred.

Moreover, the Government will be held liable for the damage to the railways when peace is restored, so that every time a piece of property is destroyed the Mexican Government is saddled with additional obligations. Preliminary estimates for the last year indicate that the company earned almost $2,000,000 over its expenses and fixed charges, or about $500,000 less than the dividends paid.

PULLMAN'S YEAR.

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—The report of the Pullman company for the twelve months ended July 31, which will be published about a month hence, is expected to show the largest gross earnings in the corporation's history.

BEARS CHECKED BY DAMAGE IN WESTERN BELT

Small Demand for Forward Delivery in Spots Best Argument for Low Prices.

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 16.—Bearish activity, which had been encouraged by the anti-option legislation pending at Washington has been somewhat restrained recently by reports of deterioration in the condition of the cotton crop in Texas and Oklahoma.

Unevenly distributed showers have fallen in both of those States within the last few days, but it is believed that what relief has come has been too late to prevent material damage to the crop in that section of the belt. Consequently the next bureau report is expected to show a further decline in condition from last month, when both Texas and Oklahoma fell off sharply.

The one redeeming feature in the crop situation at the moment is the improved outlook in the eastern half of the belt. According to reports received in this market, the crop in Alabama and in Georgia has undergone wonderful improvement since the date of the last bureau report. Should this improvement in the eastern belt continue, the deterioration likely to be shown in the Western belt will be offset, in a measure, by the improvement in the Atlantics.

It is believed that while conditions may be serious in those two States, rains within a week would yet permit the making of a fairly large crop, and it is argued that even if there were a shortage in the crop in the Western belt the increase apparent in the Atlantics, together with a normal yield in the Central belt, would result in a crop of at least 15,000,000 bales.

The most bearish feature in the general situation is the fact that there is less demand for forward deliveries in spots than has been the case in years. Fully good middling is being offered in this market at 45 points on October, and good middling at 15 points less for September delivery, with few, if any, buyers in sight. The slack spot demand is attributed to declining trade at Manchester and to the bearish sentiment engendered at Liverpool by the introduction of the Clarke bill in Congress.

News as to the outcome of the fight being made against the Clarke bill continues of a favorable character, and it is believed here now that the measure has been practically killed as a result of the criticism aimed at it by Southern newspapers generally.

The optimistic feeling prevailing here has been reflected by an advance of $600 in the price of New Orleans Cotton Exchange stock, two shares of which have sold this week for $2,100, with none offering at less than $2,500 now.

When the Clarke bill was first introduced, shares of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange declined below $1,500, whereas the stock had been $2,500 bid before the bill was introduced by Senator Clarke.

Cures Blood Poison

Wonderful New Vegetable Discovery, as Proved by Wasserman Test, Cures at Home the Blood Poison That Causes Ulcers, Copper Spots, Mucous Patches, etc.

Free to You How to Cure Yourself Quickly, Absolutely, Safely, Without Mercury, Iodide or Other Mineral Poisons.

It doesn't matter how bad your case of blood poison, no matter in what stage, I can cure you quickly, completely, permanently with the wonderful, pure, vegetable Obbac Treatment. It has revolutionized the treatment of blood poison. Its cures have been amazing, and the infallible Wasserman Test absolutely proves it. I have cured cases with the body covered with ulcers, the hair gone, the internal organs badly damaged, the brain affected, and the bones of nose and throat involved.

'L. & N.' Not Much Worried Over the Senatorial Probe

Busy Developing Its Own Lines, Has No Time To Buy New Holdings.

Interests familiar with affairs of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company are not apprehensive over the outcome of whatever action may be taken in connection with the resolution introduced in the Senate by Senator Lea. This resolution calls for investigation and report by the Interstate Commerce Commission of the ownership and control of the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis Railway Company and other subsidiary companies of the first mentioned road, "and the practices and methods of the Louisville and Nashville in attempting to preserve a monopoly in its territory."

It is not thought that there will be immediate legal action in the matter, as any investigation that may be made by the commission would necessarily consume a considerable amount of time, and it is considered more or less doubtful in the minds of some that sufficient evidence will be obtained to warrant the institution of a suit by the Government calling for the divorce of the lines involvei.

It is known that the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis has lines running in territory which may be considered competitive with the Louisville and Nashville. But whether it can be established that any collusion exists or has existed between the two roads to abolish competition is quite another question. So far as te Tennessee Central Railroad's purchase by the Louisville and Nashville is concerned, it is understood that such a development has not been considered by the management of the last mentioned property.

The Louisville and Nashville, it is pointed out, is kept busy developing and improving its own road in order to care more expeditiously for the large traffic that is being offered, and is not in the market for other lines. It owns about 75 per cent of the stock of the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis, which virtually gives it control of that system. No doubt the management of the Louisville and Nashville will fight a suit should it be instituted by the Government, to the bitter end.

At the present time the company is spending large amounts of money in double-tracking its main liens from a point about 10 miles above Nashville to Birmingham, Ala., a distance of over 300 miles. When this important work is completed the road will be in a position to handle its business in that territory much more effectively than at present. The double-track work is not being done on the old roadbed all the distance, as in many places lines are being straightened, and at Nashville one track is being run around the city to avoid congestion. It is proposed to utilize one of the tracks between Nashville and Birmingham for freight and the other for passengers.

Louisville and Nashville has a very large surplus and it is believed in some circles that before long stockholders will receive another "bonus" in stock. The last one of $12,000,000 was only about half what was expected, and at that time predictions were freely made that within a reasonable length of time something more in this connection might be looked for. Earnings of the company are substantial during the fiscal year ended June 30 last, there having been an estimated balance available for dividends approximately of 11 1-2 or 12 per cent. Last year there was a surplus available for dividends equal to 15.93 per cent on the $60,000,000 capital stock then outstanding.

NEWS FOR INVESTORS

Anaconda Copper Company's production for July exceeds June's by 600,000 pounds, although this is 1,000,000 pounds below the July output last year.

• • •

American Smelting and Refining Company earnings, although not so large as last year, owing to Mexican disturbances, will make no change in the regular dividend.

• • •

Minneapolis and St. Louis Railroad for the twelve months ended June 30 increased gross by $1,880,782 and net by $1,173,665, compared with last year.

Seaboard Air Line for the fiscal year increased total operating revenue $783,417 and net $1,028,700 over 1912. Surplus, which increased $836,558 over last year, is equal to 7 1-4 per cent on the preferred stock outstanding, compared with 3 3-4 per cent in 1912.

• • •

The St. Louis, Iron Mountain and Southern Railway Company has been authorized by the Missouri Public Service Commission to issue $28,584,500 first and refunding 40-year 6 per cent bonds, of which $26,730,000 are to replace bonds already outstanding, and the remainder for reimbursing the road for expenditures made for improvements and equipment.

NEW SEABOARD MANAGEMENT IS DOING WELL

Deficit of $121,000 in First Quarter Overcome and oGod Surplus Besides.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Seaboard Air Line in the year ended June 30 earned in excess of 7 per cent on $23,894,000. Final surplus was approximately $1,730,000, against $813,000 in 1912, both figures including only rail operations.

The showing reflects credit on the new management. In a year when the company's territory scored only about 60 per cent of a normal cotton crop and when the initial three months' operations under the old management produced a deficit of $121,000, results for the succeeding nine months not only overcame these handicaps, but so far recovered that gross increased $1,523,000 and surplus over all charges increased $817,000.

On basis of nine months' operations under the new management, and allowing for effort necessary to pick up and recover the initial quarter's deficit, the property appears to be earning at rate of nearly $2,000,000 surplus annually, or equivalent to more than 8 per cent on the outstanding preferred. Total operating ratio in the past year was 72 per cent of gross. In 1912 it was 75 per cent.

Officials look forward to better than a $2,000,000 surplus in the current year. Crops offer excellent promise, with one of the largest cotton crops ever raised among the prospects this year. General business is moving in fair volume and traffic outlook shows no unfavorable signs.

PITTSBURG COAL MINES PRODUCING BIG PROFIT

PITTSBURG, Aug. 16.—Mines in the Pittsburg district are being operated to the limit fixed by car and labor supply. As these are very satisfactory, output is correspondingly large. There is not a very heavy demand for quick delivery. Contracts are calling for the greater part of the attention of operators.

Consumers have very little coal on hand and the increased activity in iron production may cause a stiffening of prices of both coal and coke.

GIRL STICKS TO STORY OF HER FLIGHT WITH DIGGS

Marsha Warrington Says Former State Architect Took Advantage of Friendship in Elopement to Reno—Lived as Man and Wife.

Accused Appealed to Her to Keep Him Out of the Penitentiary, She Testifies—Court Cautions Jurors Not to Discuss the Case.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 16.—Her eyes averted from the gaze of Maury L. Diggs, former State Architect, on trial for white slavery, Marsha Warrington, the girl with whom he is alleged to have eloped to Reno, leaving behind a wife and family, finished her recital of her relations with the prisoner and remained steadfast to her story how he had taken advantage of a platonic friendship and against her will made her take the trip to the Nevada town, where they lived together as man and wife.

Though vigorously cross-examined, the girl's story was unshaken.

In concluding her testimony, Miss Warrington said:

"After arriving in Reno on March 10 we had luncheon and then we went to the Riverside Hotel, while Diggs and Caminetti went to a real estate office," she said. "They said they were going to rent a bungalow and that they intended to remain in Reno about six months.

Took Suite of Roome.

"When Diggs and Caminetti returned, Diggs registered and we went to a suite of rooms. We had two bedrooms, a parlor and a bath. Diggs and I had one room and Caminetti and Lola the other.

"We took a bungalow while we were there. We were never out of it except at night and never farther away than around the block. Diggs cautioned us not to be seen.

"When Chief Hillhouse came to arrest us on the morning of the 14th, we were still in bed. Diggs said: 'There are the police.'

"He understood that it was a serious situation, for he told me: 'It's up to you girls to keep us out of the penitentiary. Do everything you can to shield us.' He told us to say that Lola and I had occupied the front room and that he and Caminetti had slept in the rear room.

"Dear Pickles," He writes.

A letter addressed to "Dear Pickles," said to have been written to Miss Warrington by Diggs after his arrest, was shown to the jury. The letter contained this sentence:

"Don't worry now; everything will come out O. K., and you remember what I said to you, the last words?"

Miss Warrington was asked what were the "last words." Adjurations, she answered, not to tell anything that would incriminate the writer.

During the cross-examination Diggs constantly prompted the questions of his attorneys and steadily kept his eyes on the girl's veiled face, but she constantly avoided his gaze.

When the essentials of her previous testimony were called into doubt, she made her answers a stronger reaffirmation.

The courtroom was somewhat startled in the afternoon session by the emphatic admonitions of the judge to the jury that the case must not be discussed by the jurors, particularly with any friend of Diggs or W. Drew Caminetti, the latter a co-defendant in another case on a similar indictment. The judge said they must not even allow the case to be mentioned within their hearing or read about it in the newspapers.

Jurors Are Cautioned.

These are the usual instructions to jurors, but the emphasis with which they were twice reiterated by Judge Van Fleet this afternoon gave rise to inquiries which he would not satisfy. Theodore Roche, who thus far has conducted the Government's case, merely said there was reason for the court's order. One juror admitted he had been in company where the case was discussed, though he had not joined in the talk.

Two minor witnesses—the managing editor of a Sacramento newspaper and the Probation Officer of Sacramento County—denied to-day that there had been any scandal connected with the names of the four on the point of exploding into print or that arrests were impending if they remained in Sacramento. Miss Warrington had testified that Diggs had told her such was the case, and this fear had been her prime motive for leaving home.

May Yohe to Re-Wed Lord Hope, Is Rumor

American Singer Wins Back Her Former Husband With Favorite Music Hall Song.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—Rumors that Lord Francis Hope may re-wed his former wife, May Yohe, are current. A week ago Lord Hope visited the London Opera House, where Miss Yohe is appearing with considerable success. The former Lady Hope was in excellent voice and sang "Honey, Ma Honey" that she often sang to her husband during their life together.

Lord Francis is said to have been touched by the song. Overtures for a reconciliation, it is said, have been made through Lord Francis' brother, the Duke of Newcastle, and the Duke's lawyer, Mr. Isitt, husband of Adeline Genee.

4 Royal Bridesmaids For Manuel's Wedding

Eighty Princes and Princesses Will Attend Ex-King's Betrothed on September 4.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, Aug 16.—Arrangements for ex-King Manuel's wedding to Princess Augustine Hohenzollern on September 4 at Sigmaringen show the ceremony will be gorgeous.

Eighty royal princes and princesses will attend, including the Prince of Wales, representing King George, and four princesses as bridesmaids.

The Kaiser excuses himself from being present on account of the German army maneuvers. He and other monarchs will be represented by princes.

Col. Degrange Ill In Paris Hospital

Prominent New Orleans Man Is Compelled to Undergo Operation Following Sickness Aboard Ship.

Special Cable to The American.

PARIS, Aug. 16.—Colonel Joseph H. Degrange, of New Orleans, is ill in the American Hospital at Neuilly. Mr. Degrange's illness developed first on board a steamer on his way to Europe early in the summer.

On July 22 he was taken to the hospital for an operation for the removal of the carbuncle on the back of his neck. A second operation became necessary on Tuesday of this week. The operations, while painful, were not dangerous, and the attending physicians say that he will be able to be about within a few days.

Papers Have Right To Refuse Advertising

Court Rules That Objectionable Matter May Be Declined, Despite Previous Contract.

ST. PAUL, Aug. 16.—That newspapers have a right to decline advertising when they deem it objectionable, even if it is submitted to them under a yearly contract, is the effect of a decision handed down today in the District Court here. The case came up when a local department store was sued by a local paper to recover money due under a yearly contract, which the store management had declared void because certain portions of its advertising copy had been rejected by the paper.

Joy Rider Compelled To Pension Victim

In Lieu of Jail Sentence, Speeder Must Pay Girl $30 a Month Until Recovery.

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 16.—Instead of sending J. S. McNutt, a convicted joy rider, to prison, Judge Wilbur, of the Superior Court, suspended a five-year sentence over him to-day, on condition that he pay $30 a month until she recovers to Miss Olive Davis, a young woman injured when McNutt's machine was wrecked. Physicians say Miss Davis' injuries are permanent.

The girl, in a plaster cast, testified to-day that McNutt was speeding while intoxicated.

'Pussy Sneak' Routs Staid Old Tangos

Creepy Glide Brings New York Team Applications to Teach New Dance.

ONSET, MASS., Aug. 16.—The "tangoes," "hugs," "trots," "grapevine" and other similar dances have been cast into darkness by the creation introduced this afternoon at the local dancing casino by a New York couple. It is called the "pussy sneak," and is danced with the rubber-soled shoes commonly worn at the seaside.

The "pussy sneak" is a creepy sort of dance, with a few glides, but catchy, and the New York team that "put the stunt on" had several applications tonight to teach it.

AFFINITY EARLE ABOUT TO LOSE 'DEAREST' DORA

Third Wife of Famous Wooer, Declared "Sweetest of Them All," Files Suit.

TELLS STORY OF MEETING

Did Not Know of Long Marital Record of Poet Until She Had Joined Him.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—Dora of the laughing brown eyes, third wife and unnumbered affinity of Ferdinand Pinney Earle, New York poet, artist and record wooer—described by him at the time of their marriage in June, 1911, as "the dearest, sweetest and loveliest of them all"—said to-day that she is about to seek her freedom.

She said she actually has begun suit in New York for an absolute divorce, basing her action on evidence she says she has obtained of Earle's behavior on the Continent since she parted from him in March.

Mrs. Earle is now only 25, twelve years younger than Earle. Her maiden name was Helen Theodora Sidford. From her father, an English architect, she inherited artistic tastes and is an artist of pronounced talent. She is a very attractive young woman.

Lived at "Earle's Folly."

The original story that reached America of her relations with Earle narrated a meeting in the fields, a walk home hand in hand, swift and ardent wooing, marriage within the month and a start on a tour of the world, which wound up prematurely in the country home in Monroe, Orange County, known as "Earle's Folly."

Her story to-day sets right much of that early fiction, for the meeting with Earle seems to have been conventional.

"How did you come to give yourself to a man of Earle's matrimonial record?" was asked.

"I knew nothing of his past until after our marriage," she replied. "Whatever his reputation in America, I had lived in a quiet English town and had never heard of his antecedents. After our marriage his life story was cabled from America to the London newspapers. Clippings were sent to me on the Continent on our honeymoon by my mother.

He Softened the Blow.

"It was a terrible shock to find that I had been so utterly deceived, but I accepted the explanation and excuses offered by Mr. Earle and his assurances that I would never have anything of which to complain.

"After our wedding we spent two months on the Continent. In September, 1911, three months following the wedding, we went to America, and lived happily at his place in Monroe, N. Y. Our first baby was born there in April, 1912. I remained with him in America until last January, and then came here to visit my mother, with whom I have since lived. It was arranged that Mr. Earle would come here for the summer.

"At the time of my return I had not the slightest expectation that our relations would go wrong. We kept in constant correspondence. He arrived here in March, remained two days and then went to the Continent. My second baby was born here April 20. Her father has never seen her.

"Soon after he went from here in March information reached me which left me no option except to prepare divorce proceedings. He has appealed to me to abondon them, but that is quite impossible after his conduct as disclosed to me."

Mrs. Earle declined to anticipate by publication the specific evidence she is reserving for the court. Thus the name of the co-respondent is withheld. Judging from Mrs. Earle's convincing manner of speech, she thinks she has ample ground for her petition.

Earle's Love Affairs.

Earle's love affairs were first brought to public notice in 1908 when he took to his Monroe home Miss Julia Kuttner, and informed his wife that the newcomer was his affinity and soul-mate. The rightful Mrs. Earle at that time was formerly Miss Emilie Marie Fischbacher, daughter of a bookseller on the banks of the Seine in Paris, whom Earle had married in 1903 and by whom he had a son, Harold Erwin.

Mrs. Earle departed for France, with a reported money settlement, and obtained a divorce there. Earle, Miss Kuttner and Miss Kuttner's mother went to Europe and domiciled themselves in Venice. Their departure from Monroe was hastened by threats of neighbors there to punish Earle without process of law.

Within a few months Mrs. Kuttner decided a marriage was necessary and a ceremony was performed at the British consulate. Soon afterward a son was born and named Edmond Erwin Earle. In 1910 the second wife sued for the anulment of the marriage on the ground that the ceremony had taken place before Earle was free under French law.

She also charged cruelty, especially following the birth of the child. After long consideration the Westchester County Court granted the petition of annulment and declared the child legitimate.

Earle had not defended either suit, but while the courts were trying to dispose of the second he sailed to Europe with Miss Gertrude Buell Dunn, a bright-eyed young woman from Chicago, who had "advanced" ideas. It was announced that together they would work out and publish a new philosophy on the ideal relations of the sexes. Their zeal subsided and they parted without scandal.

Weds Model; Loses Home; Goes to Work

'I Should Worry,' Remarks Rich Retired Merchant's Son When Disowned.

WORCESTER, MASS., Aug. 16.—Because William A. Lyttle, Jr., son of Colonel W. A. Lyttle, a wealthy retired merchant and erstwhile member of the Governor's Council, eloped with Miss Thyra Linea Johnson, a 19-year-old artist's model of this city, to Putnam, Conn., he has been disowned by his father.

Colonel Lyttle has ordered his son to give the girl up. Disregarding that mandate, young Lyttle brought matters to a crisis by quietly slipping out of town a few days ago with his sweeaheart and having the matrimonial knot tied.

"I should worry," said young Lyttle when he was told of his father's decision, and then he promptly started with his bride to Detroit, where he will learn the automobile business.

Court Frees 'Old Maid' Who Resents Epithet

Judge Rules Spinster Was Right in Smiting Married Woman With Chair.

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—Unmarried women of mature years who are subjected to ridicule as "old maids" have won a victory in court. Miss Minnie Flatley, of the Colonial Hotel, is 31, and Mrs. Lizzie Varley, of the same address, has been calling her an "old maid."

Miss Flatley resented the sarcasm by smiting Mrs. Varley with a chair and punishing her seriously. When she was arraigned in court Judge Gemmill, after hearing the story, said "Discharged."

"I think this sort of provocation justifies any assault up to murder," said the judge. "It is despicable to humiliate a woman."

Father Sells Girl at Auction in Detroit

Authorities Take Steps to Have Marriage of Syrian Child to Turk Annulled.

DETROIT, MICH., Aug. 16.—The marriage license department of the County Clerk's office has taken steps to nullify an auction sale of Marie Aman, a Syrian girl, only 15 years old. Her father made the sale. There were half a dozen bidders.

The girl had been in the country only seven weeks, and was brought here by her father expressly to be sold. A Turk, Mehammed Haj Seleem, was the successful bidder.

The bargain was sealed immediately by the reading of an Oriental marriage service. The girl had a sweetheart who could not bid high enough to win her.

Triplets in Home Where 6 Twins Live

President Wilson Is Honored Three Times in the Naming of the Babies.

LAONIA, WIS., Aug. 16.—Three pairs of twins and a set of triplets is the record that Mrs. Joseph Checota, of this town, boasts. The triplets will be named Woodrow, Wilson and W. W. Joseph, in honor of the President.

The father believes this is a record that will stand for a long time to come.

Mr. and Mrs. Checota have been married six years and in that time have had nine children. All but one are living.

Rockefeller's Rival In Riches Tips Dime

Nitrate King Hands Man Ten Cents for Returning Lost Pocketbook.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Senor E. E. Ossio, the Nitrate King of Chili, who has declared John D. Rockefeller a pauper in comparison with himself, overwhelmed a steward on the United Fruit steamer Pastores yesterday by the size of a tip.

The steward had picked up the Nitrate King's wallet and, running after him, bowed low and handed over the pocketbook. Opening it, Senor Ossio pulled out a dollar bill, then changed his mind, and, taking a dime from his pocket, handed it to the steward.

Evidence Found of Prehistoric Dentists

Archaeologist of Columbia University Discovers Ancient Skulls With Gold-Filled Teeth.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Apparent evidence that dentistry was a profession in prehistoric ages has been disclosed by Professor Marshall H. Saville, archaeoligist of Columbia University, who returned here to-day from an exploring expedition in South America. Human skulls containing teeth filled with gold were among the interesting discoveries made in Ecuador.

Charlton at Last in Italy's Grasp

Wife Slayer Loses 3-Year Fight

Now on Ocean on Way to Trial

Porter Charlton, young American, who killed beautiful wife and is now on way to face trial in Italy.

Young Prisoner Is Confident He Will Escape Spending Life in Solitary Confinement.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Porter Charlton, after three years' fight against extradition from America, is in the clutches of the Italian Government and to-day is on the high seas, bound for Italy and for trial on the charge of killing his beautiful young wife and sinking her body in Lake Como in June, 1910.

In spite of the ordeal that faces him, Charlton left New York as cheerful as a schoolboy. Three years in close confinement had repressed his natural buoyancy, but the prospect of a sea voyage, even with a trial for murder awaiting him at his journey's end, restored it to a considerable degree.

"I'll be back for Christmas!" he cried, waving a good-bye from the lifter as it pulled out. All the time he has declared that he will be acquitted, in spite of the fact that he confessed to killing his wife on their honeymoon. Extenuating circumstances, his friends declare, will have their weight on the Italian jury.

Charlton's quarters on the liner are isolated, and he is not permitted to mingle with the other passengers. He travels third class, as the Italian Government does not provide first-class accommodations for prisoners.

Faces Living Death.

Unless the contention of his insanity can be proved, a living death surely will be the fate of Porter Charlton, a hideous confinement that is far worse than death on the gallows.

Extenuating circumstances, it is expected, can not be revealed of sufficient strength to obtain his acquittal, and unless his defense prove insanity, he must go to prison. There is no death sentence in Italy.

And imprisonment in Italy is a dreadful punishment, feared far more than the electric chair, the gallows, or the garrote. It is invested with mental torture of such degree that few who live through it more than a few years are sound of mind.

Charlton is known to have a sensitive, nervous temperament. His behavior toward his wife proves him high-strung. To a person of his psychological make-up incarceration under the Italian system would be certainly destructive of mental balance.

For the first ten years of a life sentence the prisoner may be kept in utter darkness and in the strictest solitude, with nothing to eat and drink but plain bread and water. A few weeks of this treatment generally is sufficient to reduce the most unemotional criminal to a state of nervous collapse.

Insanity Practically Only Hope.

His attorneys hope to present in the Italian courts the great mass of evidence brought to bear in the United States Supreme Court to prove him insane. Justice Lurton, in the opinion which declared that Charlton must go back to Italy to stand trial, admitted that the evidence to substantiate the insanity plea was preponderous.

The opinion of the Supreme Court brought to an end the three years' unsuccessful fight of Charlton and his family against extradition to Italy. It was in June, 1910, that he killed his wife, according to his own confession. After the crime he fled, but was caught at Hoboken, N. J., when the liner landed there. The brother of the slain wife there met him, and caused him to be placed under arrest.

The first night of his imprisonment in New Jersey a confession was produced, bearing his name, and generally supposed to be authentic.

"My wife and I lived happily together, but she had an uncontrollable temper," read the confession. "So had I. On the night of the murder she had the worst outbreak of temper I ever saw.

"I told her to keep quiet or I would make her quiet. Then she had another outbreak. I took up a wooden mallet, with which I had been repairing a table, and hit her on the head and body two or three times. At midnight I put the body in a trunk, dragged it to a small pier near the house, and threw it overboard."

His wife was a beautiful young woman, although eight years older than he, who was only 21. The two were on their honeymoon when the murder occurred.

Mrs. Charlton was the divorced wife of Neville H. Castle, a San Francisco lawyer. Charlton is the

Hidden Pistol Seen As Girl Lifts Dress

Young Woman Is Arrested When Masked Battery Is Exposed as She Crosses Street.

UNIONTOWN, PA., Aug. 16.—Holding her dress a little too high to avoid the water as she crossed Main street to-day, Mattie Pearce was arrested when she revealed a large revolver in a holster fastened around her leg at the knee.

She was taken to the police station, where she showed the officers the new mode of carrying a gun. Strapped to a leg was the holster in which she carried the revolver.

The girl explained that there were "bad men" at Uniontown and she was not taking any chances with them. She stated that she had worn the revolver in that position for some time.

Mattie said she did not know she was holding her dress quite as high as she was, and that she had forgotten for a moment about the masked battery. She was released on bail.

Wife Paints Story of Her Life on Walls

St. Louis Matron Does Remarkable Work She Calls 'A Young Girl's Love."

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 16.—One of the most-talked-of works of art in St. Louis hangs in the home of Dr. Robert E. Wilson and was painted by Mrs. Wilson. The canvas is called "The Story of a Young Girl's Love," and covers the entire wall space in the parlor of this magnificent Colonial home. Two years were devoted to the work.

The painting is divided into panels, the size of each picture depending on the amount of space to be covered. Artists pronounce the canvas a masterpiece. Mrs. Wilson's friends say that the painting illustrates her blissful married state.

TOWN CELEBRATES WEDDING.

AXTELL, KANS., Aug. 16.—All the citizens of this town celebrated today the sixty-second wedding anniversary of Stephen and Margaret Stout, aged 85 and 81, respectively, whose home for more than a third of a century has been the social center here.

FRANK'S COUNSEL BIT BY BIT BUILDS STRUCTURE TO CRUSH CONLEY STORY

Intricate Mass of Circumstantial Evidence Is Assembled to Disprove Direct Testimony of Negro and Corroboration Theories of State.

DEFENDANT'S MORALS TO BE NEXT BATTLE GROUND

An intricate structure is being raised by Leo Frank's lawyers as his defense against the formidable case made out by the prosecution. Little by little its parts were laid, all during last week's period of the trial, with no less than 50 witnesses as agents.

No one of the many witnesses for the defense has given testimony that in itself was essentially significant. But each one has embodied an attack on the State's case, testifying against the character of a damaging anti-Frank witness, or to Frank's good character, or as to the likelihood of expert testimony that the State drew forth.

The case of the defense, as it was made out with the close of the week's session, is a structure of little bits. It is an attempt to overcome a long line of circumstantial evidence and the direct testimony of a single witness—Jim Conley—with another long line of circumstances. In this case as the week has revealed the State is truly the aggressive, the defense truly the defensive.

Arnold Charges Scheme.

Most strenuous of the attempts of the defense has been that to prevent the examination of witnesses along the lines of Frank's alleged immoral conduct. Time and again Solicitor Dorsey has asked witnesses if they have heard of certain actions by Frank in connection with young girls. Each time a heated objection has come from Reuben Arnold, Frank's attorney, who has charged that the questions are without foundation, and that they are framed merely to set the prisoner in an evil light before the jury.

To Lawyer Arnold's objections was added the protest of the prisoner's mother, in a startling, dramatic manner. Plainly overwrought, bordering on the hysterical, Mrs. Frank rose from her seat after Dorsey asked J. Ashley Jones if he had heard of Frank's immoral behavior with a little girl.

Mrs. Frank was trembling and pale faced. She advanced toward the Solicitor and pointed a finger at him.

"No, he hasn't heard," she cried, her voice almost a shriek. "Nor you either."

The situation was doubly dramatic, coming as it did unexpectedly. Mrs. Frank has been apparently the calmest and coolest and most courageous person in the courtroom since the trial began, not a quiver of her face betokening lack of composure. No one expected the outburst from her.

Dorsey's Look Triumphant.

To all the protests of the lawyers, however, Solicitor Dorsey declared that the State can prove the charges of gross immoral conduct against Frank, and will bring witnesses to that effect on rebuttal. There was something triumphant in the Solicitor's bearing when Frank's attorneys introduced testimony to prove the good character of the prisoner.

This lets down the bars. The prosecution now may produce witnesses in rebuttal to attack Frank's character and his behavior, in case they have such evidence in hand. The Solicitor announces that he has this evidence and will produce it.

At one time during the week's course of the trial it was hinted that forty or fifty witnesses will be called by the State when the case again comes into its hands in reply to the testimony for the defense. In that event, the trial will be prolonged through the greater part of next week. Several days undoubtedly will be required for the lawyers' argument of the case, which has become one of the most complicated and tangled of Georgia's legal history. And thus it is not unlikely that the last week of the month will come before the verdict of the jury is announced.

Testimony on which the defense relies most was produced in that of several medical experts—Dr. George Bachman, Dr. T. H. Hancock, Dr. Willis Westmoreland, Dr. W. S. Kendrick and Dr. William Owens. All these men were called to reply to the statement of Dr. Harris, of the State Board of Health, whose testimony is believed to be hurtful to the defense.

He had declared that the undigested bits of cabbage in Mary Phagan's stomach proved she was killed within a short period after her midday meal. The whole contention of the State is that Frank killed Mary Phagan before 12:30 o'clock on the afternoon of April 26, and the fact has been established that she ate dinner less than an hour before that time.

But the experts called by the defense were almost unanimous in declaring that Dr. Harris could have been mistaken, however positively he stated his opinion. A bitter fight developed on cross-examination of each of the experts.

Bitter also was the fight that came over the testimony of Dr. William Owens. It was he who timed the actions of mimics when they rehearsed in pantomime Conley's version of the death of Mary Phagan some time after his arrest. Eighteen and a half minutes were taken up by the incident, a length of time which seems to offset the State's theory that the murder was done and the body disposed of within a short time. Solicitor Dorsey objected to the introduction of the testimony, but Judge Roan allowed it to be entered, with the remark that he would study the arguments for and against and announce later a judgment as to its admissibility.

The hope and belief of the defense that the commission of the crime may be laid on the shoulders of Jim Conley was revealed in the course of the Owens examination, when Lawyer Arnold made a heated statement.

Arnold Accuses Conley.

Solicitor Dorsey was objecting to the admission of the evidence concerning the murder in pantomime, and spoke sarcastically of its features.

"Your honor," he protested to Judge Roan, "you're surely not going to allow a thing like this."

"I don't know what I am going to do," replied Judge Roan.

The Solicitor turned to Arnold.

"Well," he asked, "how long did it take in this farce to choke the little girl to death?"

"We don't know how long it took the nigger to kill the child," replied the lawyer for the defense, hotly.

The Solicitor turned to the Judge at this accusation of Conley.

"Now, your honor," he said, "that won't do."

Judge Roan agreed with him, and the examination proceeded.

Following the examination of the expert witnesses the defense produced men who were classmates and associates of Frank in college to testify to his good character. It was at this juncture that the hearing of the Solicitor plainly revealed triumph. He had contended all during the trial that he would produce evidence of Frank's immoral behavior if an opening were given him. This was the opening.

The first four character witnesses were A. L. Lane and R. A. Knight, of Brooklyn, and Philip Nash, of Greenwood, N. J., and J. Ashley Jones, an insurance man of Atlanta. Others, the defense has announced, will be brought forth. The attitude of Frank's lawyers is that of defying the prosecution to attack the prisoner's moral character.

500 Birds Kept in Cage on Housetop

St. Louis Collector Has Scores of Varieties and Many of Them Are Carnivorous.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 16.—A huge cage, coptaining 500 birds, is built on top of the home of D. J. Pishorski, No. 1911 North Twelfth street. Not one of these birds is for sale.

Instead Pishorski adds to his collection almost every week, and will continue to do so until he possesses a pair of every variety of birds.

Almost every land is represented in this assemblage of feathered warblers. They range from the nightingale of Japan to the Missouri jaybird.

In this collection are probably 100 birds that can not exist on seeds, lettuce and grass. They belong to the carnivorous class and must feed upon insects.

John Lind Has Most Unusual Job

But Lind Is Most Unusual Man

Calling Bluffs Is His Specialty

Former Governor John Lind, of Minnesota, who is in Mexico to tell President Huerta that President Wilson disapproves of him an dhis policies.

© By Zumbrun

Former Governor Has No Official Position, but Has Been Selected in Ticklish Diplomatic Work.

A plain man named John Lind is in Mexico City awaiting an opportunity to tell the explosive and dynamic President Huerta that President Wilson, of the United States, disapproves of him and his government.

This man is not the Ambassador of the United States. He has no more an official standing than a Chinese coolie. He is a plain American citizen come to discuss matters.

President Huerta may refuse to see him. The President might tell John Lind to go back to Minnesota whence he came, and still would be on safe ground.

But President Huerta will see him, and will talk to him, and will listen to what he has to say. Because John Lind, as all the world knows, is the personal representative of President Woodrow Wilson. He does not stand for the Government of the United States, nor represent any plan of intervention or anexation. He is merely the ears ad mouth of Woodrow Wilson, who wants to know exactly what is going on and why.

The mission on which President Wilson sent John Lind, former Governor of Minnesota, to Mexico, is one of the most remarkable in diplomatic history.

Holds No Office.

"It is to be pointed out that Mr. Lind holds no office which is recognized between nations," announced dispatches from Washington. "A grave responsibility rests on his shoulders. * * * The administration insisted that it should be made plain that Mr. Lind was acting entirely in an unofficial capacity in his mission to Mexico, but that he possesses most extraordinary powers in speaking for President Wilson is admitted."

It is plain that John Lind is on a most unusual mission, to be successful in which he must be calm, cool, careful, tactful, unruffled and all that. He must be alive to his responsibility. He must expect rebuffs. He must be honest, fearless, sincere.

John Lind's friends say he is all that. His enemies concede that he is every bit of it. President Wilson was certain that John Lind would meet all requirements, and so he sent to St. Paul for him.

John Lind is a former Governor of Minnesota. Years after he had served his first term, the Democrats nominated him again. They wanted him badly, and in the convention mentioned the name of nobody else.

But Lind was on his way to Alaska. He refused to turn back to accept the nomination. He refused to say yes or no. They had disregarded his wishes back home concerning a county option plank in the platform, and he scornfully said nothing to their overtures to come back and be Governor.

Weeks passed. Election time drew near. Politicians in Minnesota were certain that Lind would run. Who ever refused a gubernatorial nomination with certain victory to result from it?

Lind's Refusal Firm.

But when Lind got back, he broke his silence with a firm refusal. He would have none of the Governorship. And it being too late for the Democrats to rally around anyone else, the Republican Eberhardt won out.

It is the same calm, imperturbable John Lind for whom President Wilson invented a job as his personal representative. An unusual job it was, and President Wilson looked about for an unusual man to fill it. He decided that his friend John Lind was the man.

John Lind comes naturally by his impassiveness. He was born in Sweden and came to America a boy of 11, when his mother and father decided, like hundreds of other Swedes, to move to the new country and try to find their fortunes in the great Northwest. They came over and moved into their log cabin at Goodhue, Minn.

John Lind went to the common schools in his home town until he was 17. Then he taught school himself, saving his money that he might enter the University of Michigan. Then he practiced law, got married, moved to Minneapolis, held the job of receiver in a land office, went to Congress, lost out for re-election after three terms, served as lieutenant and quartermaster in the Twelfth Minnesota Volunteers during the war with Spain, ran for Governor and was defeated, all before 1898.

But when he came back from the war, the pleased Democrats named him as their candidate for Governor, and won with him. All Minnesota knew him by that time as a calm, self-contained, capable, good-hearted lawyer who never beat about the bush and who usually managed to call the other fellow's bluff. Out in Minnesota they like that kind of fellow.

Takes Defeat Calmly.

In 1900, a bad year for Democrats, he was beaten for re-election. John Lind took his defeat calmly. He just stuck around, practiced law, ran for Congress again, and was elected. After retirement here, he worked plainly and simply and prosperously until President Wilson, knowing him for a worker and a plain-talking, hard-fisted person, sent for him to go to Mexico. It was in the interim, about 1910, that he refused the offer of Minnesota Democrats to make him Governor again.

Mr. Lind is a man of action, cool-headed, alert, and a fighter; but above all he is silent and inscrutable. It is this quality which is going to stand him in good stead in the present situation, and it is the quality which no doubt proved very forceful in moving President Wilson to appoint him.

In all the words of criticism of Mr. Lind's mission to Mexico—and there have been many to criticise the President's course—there has been no hint of disssatisfaction with the personal qualities of the man. It is pointed out that Mr. Lind's mission in Mexico will fail. He is going to tell President Huerta that President Wilson disapproves of him and his government. But none has said that it will fail because of his personality, and it is certain that it will not fail because the President's representative talks too much. If it is to be a game of bluff, John Lind is the man to play it.

AFTER 50 YEARS MOTHER OF 8 IS ENABLED TO SEE

Although 66 Years Old, She Travels From Home to Hospital All Alone.

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—Fifty years ago a little girl was stricken blind.

She was 16, and never had seen the man whom she later married. In her home at Hillsdale, Mich., she became the mother of eight children.

The father died a little later and they went out into the world, but the mother never had seen their faces.

"But every night I taught them to pray: "God, give mother back her sight before she dies,'" she said in Chicago. "And their prayers have been answered."

The woman, now bent and feeble is Mrs. Mary J. Welsh, and is back in her Hillsdale home, her sight restored. Mrs. Welsh during the last month has been in the Wesley Hospital here. The operation that gave her back her sight, surgeons say, was one of the most remarkable on record. It consisted in the removal of a cataract of fifty years standing.

Mrs. Welsh came to the hospital from her home alone. On her breast she wore the inscription, "I am blind. I am going to the Wesley Hospital, Chicago. Please direct me," on a large card.

A chaplain of the hospital, the Rev. M. W. Satterfield, delivered an address in Hillsdale several months ago. He told of the charitable work done by the hospital. The white-haired blind woman heard him. She groped her way forward.

"Can you do anything for me?" she asked. "I only want to see my babies before I go. I have been praying."

A month ago the Methodist congregation took up a collection which made it possible for her to make the trip to Chicago.

'What Becomes of Rats That Die Natural Deaths?' Scientist Wants to Know.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—An article in the current public health bulletin, issued to-day, makes a mystery of the question:

"What becomes of rats which die natural deaths?"

The article was prepared by Surgeon Victor G. Heiser, chief quarantine officer of the Philippine Islands, who had charge of the rat-destroying campaign in Manila.

He states that the average rat mortality for the Philippine city is 2,500 a month. He seeks to find out what becomes of the bodies of those that die each day.

"It appears that at least many hundreds of rats disappear each month from Manila by natural means, the exact nature of which is not known, but if could be discovered the knowledge might be useful in the destruction of rats."

Dogs Succeed Boys On Chickasaw Links

Troubles With Latter Send Golfers Scurrying for Tamer Kind of Caddies.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 16.—Bird dogs to replace caddies and retrieve lost golf balls will soon make their appearance on the municipal links at Overton Park, according to an announcement made by City Hall officials.

J. P. Clages, dog fancier and expert trainer, has been schooling the animals at the links for several weeks and the dogs will be given a trial, and if they prove adept, they will be used regularly.

The canine caddies are the result of numerous troubles with boys, who were put under charge of the Juvenile Court for various offenses committed at the links.

Girl Asleep 10 Days Apparently Is Dead

New York Sufferer Has 86 Convulsions Before Relapsing Into Comatose State.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Jeannette Guttman, the 13-year-old daughter of a plumbing contractor, living at 1046 Tiffany street, the Bronx, for ten days has been lying in a state of coma in the Hydropathic Institute, 2011 Madison avenue.

With the exception of a faint blush of crimson on the girl's cheek, she apparently is lifeless. Life has been sustained by feeding her brandy and predigested milk, and the process of nourishment has been so successful that the girl has not lost any weight.

According to Dr. Gilbert Miller, Miss Guttman has been an epileptic for about ten years. Three days before she relapsed into a comatose state she had 86 convulsions.

From Dr. Miller it was learned that her temperature was just normal, while there was no accentuation of the pulse. Efforts have been made to produce some kind of response from the girl, without result.

HIGH COST OF LIVING BAR TO FREE LUNCHES

LA CROSSE, WIS., Aug. 16.—While saloonkeepers of Connecticut are preparing to go into court to resist the law which forbids free lunches in saloons, liquor men of La Crosse are circulating a petition which will be presented to the Common Council asking for the passage of an ordinance making the free lunch unlawful. All saloonkeepers in town except two have signed it.

Downtown proprietors who have been setting up expensive lunches are the instigators of the movement. They declare the cost of meats and vegetables is so high they can no longer afford it.

BOY FINANCIER FIGHTING FOR PRISON PAROLE

Earl W. Butler, of Canton, Ill., Seeks to Escape Penalty for Banking Methods.

CANTON, ILL., Aug. 16.—Earl W. Butler, the boy banker, whose career in frenzied finance wrecked two banks in Fulton and one in Peoria County in 1910, and ended by landing Butler in the Joliet penitentiary with an indeterminate sentence of from one to three years, again is making strenuous efforts through his attorneys and friends, to obtain his release from the State Board of Pardons.

So far the boy banker has not made much progress toward getting his freedom, because of the position taken by former State's Attorney W. S. Jewell, under whose incumbency Butler was convicted of embezzlement in connection with the Ellisville bank, and who is supported in his view of the matter by the present State's Attorney, M. P. Rice.

Butler was convicted in the Fulton County Circuit Court in October, 1911, over a year after his three banks closed their doors, and he was taken to Joliet in November of the same year. He has served nearly two years in the penitentiary and has another year to remain there, if his sentence is carried out to the limit. In addition to imprisonment, the verdict in his case imposed a fine of $2,800, but it is the expectation that he will try to schedule out of this obligation.

Before Butler left the Fulton County jail, after sentence was passed, his attorneys began efforts to save him from the penitentiary.

Science Pleads for Bats, Insect Killers

University Professor Says Can Not See, but Are Guided by Sound.

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA, Aug. 16.—That the bat by killing night-flying insects is a benefit to humanity; that he can not really see at night, as is popularly believed, but directs his flight and hunts his prey by sound; that, as a rule, he devours his prey in full flight—these are among the interesting statements in a plea for the bat which Dr. Joseph Grinnell, of the university faculty, has included in a recent paper in which he says:

"A vast quantity of night-flying insects are destroyed by bats every 24 hours. It can be seen, therefore, that bats continue the warfare on insect life which is so incessantly waged by the birds during the daytime.

"All bats have enormously developed ears, and their sense of hearing is doubtless very acute. It is suggested that the drone of a June beetle sounds to a bat as does the roar of a biplane motor to us."

Father and Son Vote For Every President

Pennsylvania Pair Hold Suffrage Record That Is Unequaled in United States.

TUNKHANNOCK, PA., Aug. 16.—George C. Miller, of Tunkhannock, claims that he and his father, George Miller, Sr., and the only father and son in the United States who have voted at every Presidential election, commencing with Washington, in 1788, to the present time.

The father voted until 1852, being then 90 years of age. He and son George C., then 22, both cast their ballot for Winfield Scott for President. The son has voted at every Presidential election since, and is now 83 years old.

The father, when about 30 years old, removed from near Harrisburg to Tunkhannock, where he opened the first gun store in that place. He died at the age of 93.

The son is the last of a family of ten children, and is in good health, with a prospect of voting for some years to come.

Border Officer Who Killed Six Men Dies

Louis Kreeger Also Convicted His Son, Who Will Attend Funeral Under Guard.

TRINIDAD, COLO., Aug. 16.—Luis M. Kreeger, 68 years old, for nearly forty years one of the prominent peace officers of the Southwest, is dead at his home here. He had served variously as Sheriff, Under Sheriff, town marshal and special deputy in this county, and during that time he had figured in almost every adventure with criminals of any importance, and no less than six men are known to have been victims of his marksmanship.

Kreeger was a native of Missouri and came here in 1868. He achieved fame late in the seventies by killing Rice Brown, jockey and cowpuncher, then employed by the Thomas outfit. In trailing a quartet who were accused of robbing the Victor-American Coal Company's pay wagon near Gray Creek in 1910, Kreeger obtained part of the evidence which resulted in the conviction of his own son, "Quick Trigger" Kreeger. The son, under guard, will attend the funeral.

AUTO AS MATADOR SAVES FARMER FROM MAD BULL

ELGIN, ILL., Aug. 16.—Matadors may be succeeded by automobiles as bullfighters. This was proven when Peter Green, a farmer, 60 years old, of Huntley, was being gored by a bull in one of his pastures. His screams attracted an automobile party of three men, who were in the road. They witnessed the attack for a moment, then the driver of the big touring car made a dash into the pasture and after the bull.

The horn was tooted and tooted, and the bull finally was driven away from the helpless farmer. Three of Green's ribs were broken, but he will recover.

Mr. Hearst Tells Why He Keeps Oil Letters From Lobby Inquiry

Publisher Does Not Wish to Associate Already Proven Documents With Series of Exaggerated Accusations as Mulhall Confession Seems To Be.

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 16.—The following is a letter from Mr. William Randolph Hearst in reply to a letter sent to him by Congressman Clyde H. Tavenner asking Mr. Hearst to put the Standard Oil letters before the Garrett lobby investigation committee in the House of Representatives:

Los Angeles, Cal., Aug. 5, 1913.

Hon. Clyde H. Tavenner, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Sir:

Did you write me a letter and make the letter public, asking me to submit all the Standard Oil letters that I have in my possession to the House committee now investigating the charges of lobbying made by a certain Mulhall?

I would be very glad to submit again to the Congressional committee or to any responsible body the Standard Oil letters which I have already submitted many times to the public and to bodies which more or less accurately and sincerely represent the public.

I would prefer, however, not to submit these Standard Oil letters in connection with the Mulhall letters and charges for the simple reason that the Standard Oil letters are very important to the nation, very serious in their incriminations and wholly authoritative and genuine, while the Mulhall letters and documentary evidence have never appeared to me especially important or serious or genuine.

The Mulhall letters and charges were offered to one of my magazines, the one that published the Standard Oil letters, but the editors of the magazine with my approval declined to purchase or publish the Mulhall documents and confession. The reason we did not purchase the Mulhall letters was not at all because of the price. That question was not even considered.

The reason we failed to purchase them was because we had not full confidence in them. We felt that the more or less innocent or at least moderate wording of the documents did not justify the extravagant allegations on which Mulhall based the documents, and we felt if that any part of Mulhall's evidence or testimony was untrue that all of it was open to suspicion.

Furthermore, our magazine had just performed what we had every right and reason to believe a great public service. We had performed this service with the utmost sincerity and consciousness and with the most scrupulous care.

We had exposed the corrupting influence of privilege-seeking corporations in politics. We had revealed the connection between these corrupt corporations and certain important public officials who were supposed to represent the people in office, but who in reality, prostituted their offices to serve the illegitimate interests of criminal trusts.

The editors of the magazine were agreed that we did not wish to diminish or discredit the effect of these genuine revelations by the publication of Mulhall's letters, which seemed to us less serious and sincere.

The Standard Oil letters can not be denied, because there always have been additional documents to disprove every denial made to confuse and confound every falsifier.

We did not wish our magazine to associate a great public service and a vital political exposure like this with an extravagant series of exaggerated accusations, as the Mulhall confessions appeared to us to be, and I would rather not associate the genuine with the questionable at your Congressional investigation.

Of course, I am expressing only my preference. I can control the course of my magazine, but I do not seek to control or influence the action of your committee. I shall always be ready to submit to any such committee any such information I have which can be considered of public interest or importance.

Very sincerely yours,
WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST.

Wealthy Father at Last Finds Daughter

Search of 38 Years Ends in Astonishment for His Policeman Son-in-Law.

POTTSVILLE, PA., Aug. 16.—Anthony Lloyd, a policeman, living on $65 a month, was surprised when John Strause, aged 76, walked into his home and embraced Mrs. Lloyd, who turns out to be his only child, lost to him for more than 38 years.

Strause is worth $200,000 and lives in Laramie City.

Many years ago, after he returned from service in the Seventh Pennsylvania Cavalry of the Civil War, he placed his daughter, Emma, in the charge of relatives and went West. Though wealthy, he was unable to find any trace of her until his sudden meeting.

COUPLE ELOPE, THOUGH THEY CAN NOT CONVERSE

GARY, IND., Aug. 16.—Cupid was somewhat nonplussed for a while in Gary, when a young couple, neither of whom can speak the language of the other, eloped to Crown Point, where they answered the marriage vow by means of an interpreter.

On their way home the pair were arrested at the instance of the irate father, because of the bride's youth.

They were taken to the Gary police station, where neither could give the other a word of comfort. Later the father's heart melted, and they were released.

LIVING DEATH IN ITALY IS FACED BY CHARLTON

Young American Travels in Steerage, but Is Confident of an Early Acquittal.

son of Paul Charlton, law adviser of the Bureau of Insular Affairs, and former President Taft's classmate at Yale. He has stood by his son through all the fight against extradition.

Extradition Fight Begins.

The fight began the day after the confession appeared. It seemed at first that the young man surely must go back to Italy to face trial, and every legal step was taken against it. His friends, led by his father, took the position that he could not be extradited, because Italy had always refused, under the extradition treaty of 1868, to return Italian subjects to the United States to answer for crimes committed here.

They lost this fight, when Italy made a request for the prisoner. The fight was resumed, and Charlton's father entered the insanity plea, in a habeas corpus suit. Losing this in the lower court, the father appealed to the Supreme Court, in which, about a month ago, the opinion of Justice Lurton was handed down, to the effect that Charlton was subject to extradition.

Officers arrived in the United States from Italy last week to take Charlton back for trial. Conflicting reports have been spread regarding the young man's health, certain physicians contending that he is the victim of pulmonary tuberculosis and others that he is in perfect health.

Newspaper reports, written by men who have seen him, say that he appears healthy. He has been allowed an unusual degree of freedom while being held in the Hudson County Jail, being permitted to take walks, automobile drives and two hours of exercise each day. Sometimes he was taken to picture shows.

Charlton Expects Acquittal.

Charlton is cheerful. He has expressed the opinion that he will be acquitted in spite of the evidence against him, and has told his father and mother and other friends as well that he will be back home for Christmas dinner.

The trial will be held in Milan some time early in the fall.

Appeals have been made to Secretary of State Bryan, and an attempt even has been made to reach the ear of President Wilson to present the extradition of the young man. His father has stopped at nothing to save his son. But all attempts have proved fruitless. Secretary Bryan, Judge Charlton's personal friend of long standing, has expressed his sympathy, but declared that it was impossible for him to do anything for the son.

The plans for the defense will take the form of an inquisition to bring out the moral and mental traits of the murdered woman, besides the consideration of Charlton's sanity. Attorneys will try to show that there was great provocation for the killing. It is hoped in this that the sentence of Charlton will not be the short-living death at solitary confinement in an Italian dungeon, but a more tempered punishment.

"One must be pretty to wear this hat"—of black velvet and patent leather.

A flat sailor, of "tete de negre" plush, trimmed with cream and brown fur and sacred bird of Siam feathers.

Butterflies are the prevailing motif. This is a hat of black velvet with a black lace butterfly.

Turquoise blue satin crown, with a brim of taupe dubitine, and an aigrette—dubitine being a new material.

Chic—that's the word. It needs a pert face and vivacious manner. Black velvet with pink facings and Paradise feathers.

Autumn Styles in Millinery Show That Large Creations Are Thing of the Past—Butterflies Are Popular.

"Now, deny it if you can,
"Though it's manners make the man,
"It's millinery makes the girl."
—Song from "Red Feather."

Millinery, then, being such a serious affair, some 1,400 women and 100 men will visit Atlanta these later weeks of August, and they will spend close to $1,000,000 for millinery. The "openings" for fall and winter styles are on in Atlanta's great wholesale houses, and the great semi-annual buying is under way.

The general public will not see these styles for a month or so to come. Therefore, this is NEWS—real hot stuff—for feminine readers. Here goes:

Black predominates.
Nearly all hats are almost collapsible.
Butterflies are the prevailing motif in trimmings.
Few large hats are shown.
Feathers and fur are "particularly good."
Rats and switches apparently have gone to stay, for nearly all the new hats are close-fitting and necessitate scant coiffures.

For instance, one of the very prettiest styles shown—from masculine viewpoint at least—is a new poke of black plush with pink facing and paradise feathers. This is a saucy little hat that goes with a pert face and lively manner. One can imagine it on a vivacious little demoiselle at Longchamps—where, in fact, it was photographed by an Atlanta designer, and copied.

Splendiferous, indeed, must be the sacred bird of Siam, whose feathers adorn an extremely flat plush hat of sailor shape.

Fur Cream and Brown.

A pelt of some little animal, about the size of a weasel, twists about the crown, and the two feathers complete the trimming. The fur is cream and brown. The feathers are brown with wonderful bluish markings more beautiful than a peacock's glories. The plush is a new shade of brown called "tete de negre," which sounds much better in French than in English. All this sets "hubby" back about fifty.

"Tete de negre," by the way, vies with black in popularity.

A huge black butterfly is the only trimming on a little black silk velvet turban with soft crown.

"Smart. And good. Oh! Very good, indeed," is what the designer calls it. Let it go at that. Why argue?

All humanity is divided into two parts. Of these, one is composed of those to whom styles in millinery are a serious matter; the other, of those who grin.

There's one hat which will bring strict division of these parties. Now, from the "pro's" standpoint it is a creation of midnight blue plush, with a variegated plush top on the crown, and an artistic feather butterfly perched airily on the edge of the brim.

Now, the "antis": It's a dark blue contraption with a yellow, scrambled, Bulgarian top, and a funny little yellow thingamajig sticking up behind.

Take your choice.

"Donna e mobile," as our old friend Caruso has it—"woman is fickle"—and he might add, inexplicable. No doubt this is pretty, to a woman.

One must be pretty to wear the little black velvet hat, shaped like a traffic cop's helmet and trimmed with patent leather fixings—so says the designer. If this is carefully explained to customers, the hat should sell well.

Derby Covers Eye.

Rather a novelty, but pretty, too, is a hat shaped like a man's derby, which pulls down almost covering the right eye. The shape is of garnet plush, and a long ribbon matching this shade is thrown across the throat from right to left, so that it hangs down behind the left shoulder. Gray roses complete the trimming.

Current history ever finds its reflection in the styles. Bulgarian designs still are with us, and now comes a blue plush hat—one of the few large ones, in the Mexican style—that is, it has a broad, flat brim ornamented with fuzzy little balls.

Big velvet hats, very like the sort art students wear in the Latin Quarter of Paris, are to be seen. They are almost bare of trimming—just great, floppy pieces of black velvet, sometimes to be pulled down over one eye.

"Dubitine" is a new material. It is seen to best advantage in a hat with a brim flaring up on one side, and with a round crown. An aigrette stands pertly off to the rear. The crown is of turquoise dubitine and the underbrim of taupe satin.

If you see a slate gray rubber hat worn by some pretty girl on Peachtree street this winter, don't say you weren't prepared for it. This is due notice that rubber has been called into use for millinery. It was sure to come, straw, feathers, furs, flowers, silks, satins, fruits, birds, animals and what-not having been used.

The rubber hats are severe in design. One has a "drape" to go under the chin, made of green and blue chenille. "They say" rain won't hurt them, and that they're fine for autoing, because they're small.

It is the auto, so every one in the millinery trade believes, that has killed the big hat. A big hat is a nuisance in a limousine, and hard to keep on in a touring car or runabout—and the rest of us like to act as if we might go autoing, even if we do not.

ANTI-KISSING LAW NOT IN BOOKS, SO SUITOR IS FREED

TRINIDAD, COLO., Aug. 16.—Howard B. Smith, employee of a local moving picture house, was arrested a few days ago for publicly kissing and hugging Florence Vigil, a pretty 14-year-old girl, of Verjemo Park, N. Mex. Taken to the city jail, it was found there was no city ordinance that prevented kissing either in public or private, and the offender was released with the admonition of Police Judge Hines to "go forth and kiss no more." The affair was the result of a summer afternoon flirtation.

MULHALL BARES FRAUD USED TO DEFEAT HEARST IN RACE FOR GOVERNOR

Lobbyist Got Confidence of Up-State Chairman in New York Campaign by Fake Letter and Betrayed Plans of Democrats to Republican Leaders.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—Colonel Martin M. Mulhall, self-confessed lobbyist of the National Association of Manufacturers, testified before the Garrett Lobby Investigating Committee that his political lines crossed those of William Randolph Hearst in 1906, and that he helped to defeat Mr. Hearst for the New York Governorship.

Introduced by a letter forged upon the letterhead of the Hearst campaign headquarters, Mulhall said that he went into Congressman Fairchild's district, the Twenty-fourth New York, an upstate district, and gained the confidence of a local campaign manager for Mr. Hearst.

Tells Plans to Republicans.

Learning from the latter the plans of campaign in the district, Mulhall reported them to Fairchild, and Republican plans to checkmate them and defeat their object were perfected. Mulhall was employed for a week on this work with the approval, he says, of Fairchild.

Mulhall told a few days ago how he started to work for Senator Foraker in Ohio. He was prepared to make his report to Foraker when the Hearst Standard Oil disclosure letters were first made public. Foraker admitted to the Senate committee that these letters defeated him for re-election to the Unied Staes Senate.

Unconcernedly, Mulhall told how he had taken his "fake letters" of introduction to Fairchild and got his instructions for political detective work. He met Mr .Hearst's friends, including a clergyman, at a hotel, entertained them and worked his way into their confidence. He ascertained that the Republican district committee chairman was not frienaly to Fairchild.

Letter Was Faked.

"Whose signature did this fake letter of introduction bear?" asked Representative Stafford.

"It was that of some member of the Democratic State Committee."

"Who were you represented to be?"

"I was supposed to be connected with Mr. Hearst, and so represented myself to Mr. Scott, the candidate, I think, opposing Fairchild."

"It was your first meeting with him, and you won his confidence to the extent of getting from him his campaign plans?" said Stafford.

"Yes."

"Who signed this fake letter?"

"The letter was given to me by Marshall Cushing, and I can not say who signed it. Mr. Cushing was a very good letter writer. He told me it was a fake letter. I knew that Cushing was not connected with the Hearst organization."

Mr. Stafford—He was connected in the way of using the letterhead of the Hearst organization to good effect.

"Mr. Cushing thought it was a smart political trick, and I guess that was his system of working," replied Mulhall.

Scott Well Deceived.

"Mr. Scott's confidence was so complete," continued Mulhall, "that he told me Mr. Hearst had sent him a number of workers and quite an amount of money, and I believe in this letter the latter stated that they were ready to send at that time more workers and more money."

"Scott swallowed everything, hook, line and all, as far as you represented it," commented Stafford.

"Yes."

"Did Mr. Fairchild know all about this arrangement?" asked Representative Kline.

"Yes, he knew about hte letter, and I had Mr. Fairchild's advice in presenting it. He has spoken to me since about that clever piece of work."

Confusion in Study Of Grammar Dispelled

Committee's Report on Standardizing Nomenclature Makes Good Impression.

COLORADO SPRINGS, Aug. 16.—Standardization of grammatical nomenclature, which will do away with the confusion in the study of English, as well as other languages, in American schools, has been effected by a committee of fifteen, of which Professor Hills, of Colorado College, was a member.

The committee made a report to the National Education Association in convention at Salt Lake City and its adoption without amendment virtually insures the following of the committee's recommendations in all schools and colleges.

According to Professor Hills, it was found that in the sentence "John is good," the word "good" was called by nine different names in 25 grammars; the word "John" in "This is John," was called by nineteen terms, and in "We made John president," the word "president" was given eighteen different names in the textbooks examined.

Prisoner 34 Years, Hates to Leave Jail

Slayer of Policeman Says Such Life as He Led Has Not Been Failure.

THOMASTON, MAINE, Aug. 16.—Samuel D. Haynes, of Detroit, walked out of the prison gates to-day, after serving 34 years for the murder of James L. Robbins, a policeman, at Rockland, in 1879.

At midnight his sister, Mrs. F. H. Rogers, of Detroit, had telephoned the prisoner that Governor Haines had pardoned him.

"The battle is won," Haynes told Warden Ham, "but I hate to leave." Outside the prison he held a reception for a big crowd, who knew him as a model prisoner.

"I am willing to forgive and forget," he said. "The prison has been a good thing for me, but I feel that I have paid my bill to society.

"I have been in prison since I was 17 years old, but I have spent the better part of my life here trying to be useful. There is no failure in such a life as that."

Returns $1,000 Gems And Gets $1 Reward

Laundry Girl Is Not Even Thanked When She Returns Diamonds.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—For returning $1,000 worth of jewelry to its owner, Miss Ella Veronica Shea, of No. 969 Putnam ovenue, Brooklyn, was rewarded with a dollar.

Miss Shea works in a laundry. While unpacking a laundry bag received from Mrs. I. Rodberg of No. 635 Decatur street, she found four diamond rings and a diamond lavalliere.

"The shock which Mrs. Rodberg got when she received the jewelry was so great she forgot to thank me," said Miss Shea yesterday. "I had scarcely got back to the office when a man came running after me with an envelope in which was a note of thanks and—a dollar."

PASTOR SHEDS HIS COLLAR.

GRANITE CITY, Aug. 16.—A new pace has been set by the Rev. W. W. Brown, pastor of the First Baptist Church at Granite City, who tells the men to come without collar or neckties and with sleeves rolled up if that will conduce to their comfort. He promises to do likewise.

Webster's Old Home Restored by Society

Preparations Are Made for Celebration of Rehabilitation of Birthplace of Statesman.

FRANKLIN, N. H., Aug. 16.—The ancient New Hampshire farmhouse in which Daniel Webster was born has been reset on its old foundations and restored to look as it did in the eighteenth century when Webster was a small boy, and preparations have been made to celebrate its rehabilitation. It is in the town of Franklin, and the celebration will take place August 28.

It is expected that President Wilson will attend and deliver an address. Samuel W. McCall, former Congressman from Massachusetts, who was the principal speaker at the hundredth anniversary of Webster's graduation from Dartmouth College, will speak.

Rivals David Harum As a Horse Trader

But Youth Is Forced to Pay Back Money He Got for a 'Frozen Tail.'

INDIANAPOLIS, Aug. 16.—William H. Schmidt, 17, a horse trader, was directed to give back $70 he accepted from Tom Cavanaugh for a "frozen tail" horse, and return the horse to Tom Shroyer, a liveryman, when his case was heard in court.

Schmidt was charged with false pretenses, in that he represented the horse to have a useful and active fly chaser. As a matter of fact, the swatting appendage was merely ornamental and utterly useless. Schmidt said he did not know the horse had a broken tail.

"Why that horse was as helpless as a baby," asserted Mrs. Cavanaugh. "We had to carry along a fly brush as well as a buggy whip everywhere we went."

Tells Positive Cure For all Foot Troubles

Science has proven that nearly all foot troubles originate from a common cause; that of injured tissues. The following information will be welcomed by thousands of victims of daily foot torture. No matter how many patent medicines you have tried in vain, this treatment which was formerly known only to doctors will do the work. Don't waste time. Get it at once. "Dissolve two tablespoonfuls of Calocide compound in a basin of warm water. Soak the feet for a full fifteen minutes, gently rubbing the sore parts." The effects are marvelous. All pain disappears instantly and the feet feel simply delightful. Corns and callouses can be peeled right off. Bunions, aching feet and sweaty, smelly feet get immediate relief. Use this treatment a week and your foot troubles will be a thing of the past. Calocide works through the pores and removes the cause. Any druggist has Calocide in stock or will get it from his wholesale house. Don't be influenced to take something else instead. A twenty-five cent box is said to be enough to cure the worst feet.

SULZER AND LAWYERS GRIMLY FIGHTING TO CLEAR GOVERNOR'S NAME

Wife Is Determined to Take Stand to Tell Her Husband's Accusers That She Signed His Name to Checks to Gamble in the Stock Market.

ALBANY, N. Y., Aug. 16.—Governor William Sulzer and a formidable staff of lawyers are busy in the preparation of an answer to the impeachment charges brought against him by the New York Assembly. Issue will be joined and a trial held September 18 before the New York Senate and Court of Appeals, sitting in joint assembly.

The sensation of the trial and the incident which the public most avidly awaits will be the statement by Mrs. Sulzer, the brave wife whose attempt to save her husband from disgrace involved a sacrifice of her own honor.

The most telling charge against Sulzer is that he appropriated to his own use in stock exchange gambling certain checks which were given toward his campaign fund. Mrs. Sulzer, in statements to her friends, declared that she indorsed the checks and used them in Wall street speculation without her husband's knowledge, and that she would go on the stand at the trial of her husband to reiterate the story of her misdeed.

Enemies Are Pitiless.

If she does, she will be bared to vicious attacks and cross-examination by the lawyers for the prosecution, who, as members of the assembly which impeaches her husband, already have proved themselves pitiless and vindictive.

It may be that her statement, proved true, will save her husband. None of its purport was revealed to the General Assembly before the impeachment came. However, to-day the Governor announces that under no circumstances will he allow his wife to become a witness, even if his honor and his fortune suffer.

Mrs. Sulzer is in a state of nervous collapse. The long strain imposed on her during the investigation by the General Assembly told on her, and she succumbed when the impeachment vote was announced. So serious became her condition that the Governor was forced to send a hurry call to New York, summoning a famous nerve specialist.

In her chamber Mrs. Sulzer is hysterical, and it is understood that she insists that she be allowed to testify for her husband.

Mrs. Sulzer was Miss Clara Rodelheim, of Philadelphia. She married Sulzer, who then was a Congressman, July 7, 1908. They have no children, and Mrs. Sulzer is enthrallingly interested in politics. During her husband's campaign for the election to Congress, and his subsequent campaign for Governor, she accompanied him on his speaking trips.

She, Too, Is Combative.

More than anything else she openly admires his combative nature. She is aggressive and positive herself. Of her husband she is quoted as saying:

"He's ready to fight at the drop of the hat, and he'll drop the hat himself. As long as he fights, I'll fight, too—and then some."

If she takes the stand in her heroic attempt to save her husband, it is likely that her reputation will suffer. Otherwise, her husband's reputation will suffer, her friends say.

These friends say that a week ago she besought the Governor to permit her to tell her story to the public, and he refused. They say, too, that he consented to the publication of her statement only when he found he could not prevent it, and that it had been widely circulated as a rumor on the lips of the public.

Governor Sulzer, the fighter, is easily recognized in his avowed intention of holding his office even with the impeachment charges against him. His enemies in the General Assembly have declared against his right of remaining in office and have insisted that Lieutenant Governor Glynn take over the reins of government. But Sulzer shows a firm determination to stay in, and the wildest rumors are given credence as to what he will do to retain his authority. It is even asserted that he will call the militia to prevent the entrance of the Lieutenant Governor, and to prevent his own ejection. At any rate, he and his lawyers firmly contend for his right to hold office with the impeachment proceedings pending.

Herrick Issues Statement.

Little is said concerning the approaching ordeal by either the Governor or his attorneys. Mrs. Sulzer can not be reached, and it is understood that could she be seen no statement would be obtained, as she has the attorneys' orders to say nothing. Judge D. Cady Herrick, who will act as chief counsel for the defense, made a statement, which is regarded as the only word to come from him.

"Counsel for Governor Sulzer," he said, "have no desire to try the case in the newspapers. We have engaged in his defense not for William Sulzer, but as a professional duty to the Governor of the State, and to preserve, so far as it can now be preserved, the good name and fame of the State.

"After an examination of Mr. Sulzer in relation to the transactions disclosed by the Frawley committee, we are satisfied that there has been only a partial revelation of the facts so far, as we are satisfied that he has been guilty of no willful wrongdoing."

Besides Judge Herrick, Governor Sulzer's attorneys at the trial will be Irving G. Vann, Syracuse; Louis Marshall and Austen G. Fox, New York; Harvey D. Hinman, Binghamton; Virgil Kellogg, Watertown, and Judge James Gay Gordon, of Philadelphia.

Governor Sulzer, the eighth Governor of all the United States to be impeached, is the victim of Tammany's vengeance.

7 Governors Have Been Impeached

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—In all the United States only seven other Governors have faced impeachment proceedings. These men and the results that followed were:

Charles Robinson, Kansas, 1862, acquitted.

Harrison Reed, Florida, 1868, charges dropped.

William W. Holden, North Carolina, 1870, removed.

Powell Clayton, Arkansas, 1871, charges dropped.

David Butler, Nebraska, 1871, removed.

Henry C. Warmouth, Louisiana, 1872, term expired and proceedings dropped.

Adelbert Ames, Mississippi, 1876, resigned.

WILLIAM SULZER, impeached Governor of New York, with his wife, who intends to sacrifice her own good name to save him. Below is Martin Glynn, Lieutenant Governor, who disputes Sulzer's claim that he is still in office.

ADMITS HE IS A SLAYER TO SAVE DYING BROTHER

Arthur Spaugh Tells the Pardon Board That He Shot Sheriff at Ironton, Mo.

JEFFERSON CITY, MO., Aug. 16.—In a last attempt to get a parole for his brother, William Spaugh, Jr., who is ill of tuberculosis and can live but a short time, Arthur Spaugh, the younger brother, also an inmate of the Penitentiary, told the Board of Pardons that he killed Sheriff Polk at Ironton, Mo., to save William's life. William Spaugh is serving a life sentence for shooting Polk, while Arthur Spaugh was sentenced to fifty-five years.

"Bill did not shoot Sheriff Polk. I shot him when I thought he intended to kill Bill. He had already shot Bill through the shoulder and was advancing on him when I fired. My brother had his hands in the air, begging the sheriff not to shoot him," said Arthur Spaugh.

Doesn't Care for Himself.

"I do not want my brother to die here. He is not guilty of the killing of Sheriff Polk. I alone am guilty. Bill was not even armed when the sheriff was shot. I thought the sheriff intended to kill my brother, and after warning him not to advance three times, shot him. I hope the Governor will release Bill so that he can spend what few days he has to live a free man. It does not matter what becomes of me."

The prison physician says that William Spaugh can not live to exceed sixty days and his death is expected sooner. William Spaugh has arranged to have his body shipped back to their old home at Ironton, Mo., for burial, provided he does not secure his release.

Mother Also Pleads.

Arthur Spaugh has tuberculosis also, and is unable to do heavy work. He is in the first stage of the disease, but is able to work about the halls and do light work in the open air.

Mary E. Spaugh, aged mother of the Spaughs, has been here much of late pleading with the Board of Pardons and Paroles for her dying son. She says she would like to take him to her home in St. James, Mo., and nurse him until he dies.

Arthur Spaugh has been in the penitentiary since July 27, 1906. William Spaugh was received July 26, 1907. Both have been model prisoners.

DEEP-LAID PLOT IN APPOINTMENT HOBSON CHARGE

Alabama Congressman Attacks Governor O'Neal for Naming Clayton for U. S. Senate.

MONTGOMERY, Aug. 16.—Congressman Richmond Pearson Hobson of the Sixth District, who was a candidate for the Senatorship against the late Senator Joseph F. Johnston, in a warm card charges a deep-laid conspiracy in the appointment by Governor O'Neal of Congressman Henry D. Clayton to succeed Senator Johnston.

From Washington comes the news that there is an overwhelming opinion among both Democrats and Republicans in the Senate that Governor O'Neal had no right to appoint without specific authority from the Legislature of Alabama, and that the belief is general that Mr. Clayton has no chance of being seated on the credentials he holds.

Governor O'Neal said to-day that in event the United States Senate rejected the appointment of Congressman Clayton he would act on the recommendation of the Senate Judiciary Committee. He refused to say whether or not he would call an extra session of the Legislature.

Hobson's Card.

Congressman Hobson says of Clayton's appointment:

"It is a brazen defiance of law, the people and the Constitution—the most humiliating travesty of our political institutions.

"It is a defiance of the law and the rights of the people, willfully made with the knowledge that the appointment is illegal and is so regarded by the United States Senators, not only by the opposition Senators, but by Democratic Senators as well.

"The effect of the appointment will be to postpone indefinitely the settlement of the question. This delay is fully understood by the Alabama politician, and is incurred against the earnest advice of our Democratic leaders.

"In the midst of the crisis of the tariff bill, the interest of the Democratic party, the relief and welfare of the nation, the law of the land, the sacred political rights of the people seem to have counted for naught.

Jockeying Charged.

"The fact is that after all the jockeying and caucusing, the scheme went through precisely as Mr. Bankhead had planned. It was very remarkable how Senator Bankhead hurried to Alabama and had the whole specious article prepared to give out almost immediately.

"You will recall that Senator Bankhead and the lamented Johnston were themselves chosen by popular vote; in fact, the principle was considered of such sacred importance in our progressive State that we even went so far as to provide an election for successors to our great Morgan and Pettus before the deaths of these grand old men.

"How, then, can any true Alabaman stand for the miserable expedient of having their United States Senators appointed by Emmet O'Neal instead of being elected by the people themselves?

"It belongs to the people. It is theirs by law as well as every true consideration of the Democratic rights. They demand it, and they are not going to be fooled or hoodwinked by the hair-splitting quibblings of technical lawyers or professional pot-politicians."

HENRY D. CLAYTON, who has been appoointed Senator from Alabama by Governor O'Neal to fill Senator Johnston's unexpired term.

Tammany and Sulzer's Fight Thrilling Drama

When Governor William Sulzer, the "People's Governor," and the "Poor Man's Friend," refused to do the bidding of Boss Murphy of Tammany Hall, the most remarkable political drama New York State had ever seen was enacted. From that very moment Tammany Hall carried out a steady and consistent program of guerrilla warfare against Sulzer and all things Sulzer.

A tammanyized Legislature instituted an "investigation" of Sulzer and Sulzer reciprocated with an "investigation" of some Tammany controlled State departments.

Charles F. Murphy, the Tammany Hall leader, sought to have certain organization men appointed to office. Sulzer declined to appoint them, although he had been something of an organization man himself for a great many years, and immediately after his election to the governorship, had been extremely intimate with Murphy.

Breaks With Tammany.

Sulzer broke with Tammany over the question of appointments. Immediately afterward he employed guards to protect him against assassination, which he feared. No attempt to injure Sulzer's person was made, but political attacks came thick and fast. Sulzer first was accused of perjury, committed, according to his accuser, in 1890. The acquisation carried no weight. The public retained its confidence in Sulzer. Then another bombshell was expected. A suit was filed in Philadelphia by a young woman, Mignon (Polly) Hopkins, charging Sulzer with breach of promise.

Miss Hopkins asked $30,000 damages for her wounded heart. Sulzer admitted having known Miss Hopkins some years ago, but denied that he had ever proposed marriage to her and declared the filing of the suit was engineered by his Tammany enemies.

Fights for Direct Primary.

When Sulzer promised direct primaries to the people of New York he evidently meant what he said. When he went into office he started such legislation. Immediately he discovered his political associates didn't want direct primaries and would not back him up in his fight for the primary bill as he framed it. His bill was introduced in the Legislature, but before it was voted upon a Tammany direct primaries bill, which Sulzer characterized a "fraud upon the people," was introduced in both branches of the Legislature and passed. Governor Sulzer promptly vetoed it, and then called upon the Legislature to pass his bill.

The Assembly and then the Senate killed the Sulzer bills, amid wild scenes in the Senate and Assembly chambers. There were shouts of rage and shaking of fists in the direction of the Capitol. There was wild cheering when it was announced that the Sulzer bill had been killed.

Sulzer then inaugurated a campaign to obtain direct primaries. He [illegible] many well-known men in his cause, and called the Legislature in extraordinary session. It had then become a case of open warfare. It became Sulzer's object to make himself leader of the Democratic party in New York.

He had lined up with him some 33 county chairmen and about 17 State committeemen. In one of his speeches at this time Sulzer said that he had been attacked, vilified and threatened as no other man ever had been who had occupied the Governorship of New York.

Tammany Loses Patronage.

Tammany lost hundreds of thousands of dollars in patronage. No appointments of Tammany men were made by Sulzer. George W. Blake was made a special investigator by the Governor and set about unearthing incompetency in the State prisons. John A. Hennessy was made an investigator by Sulzer and he conducted several probes into various State departments. Tammany verged on panic. Finally that organization turned on Sulzer the very same weapon that he had used against it and an investigation of Sulzer's campaign fund was instituted by a legislative committee composed of Tammany men.

Senator Frawley, a Tammany chieftain, was the chairman of the committee, and it commenced its sittings in Albany. The first witness to be called was Louis A. Sarecky, Sulzer's private secretary and campaign manager. Sarecky was questioned about Sulzer's campaign fund, but he declined to answer. It was intimated that Sulzer had received checks for his campaign fund which he had not listed in his sworn statement, a misdemeanor under the laws of New York State.

Two checks were introduced into the evidence. One was for $2,500 from Kuhn, Loeb & Co., the bankers, and indorsed "Mr. Schiff's contribution to the Sulzer campaign." The other check was for $500, and was signed by Abram I. Elkus, a prominent New York City lawyer. It was alleged by the Frawley committee that neither of these checks appeared in Sulzer's campaign list.

Then Came Stock Dealing.

At a later session of the Frawley committee, held in New York, testimony was given to the effect that the "People's Governor" and the "Poor Man's Friend" had owed the stock brokerage firm of Harris & Fuller $48,599.23 on January 1, 1912, when Sulzer was in Congress. According to testimony and evidence offered, Sulzer had been a steady loser in the stock market.

The brokers to whom he owed money dunned him for payment, according to the testimony, and Sulzer finally was rescued by his business partner, ex-Governor A. E. Spriggs, of Montana, who paid $5,000, and Louis M. Josephthal, of New York, who on July 19 last paid $26,749.21.

It also was testified before the committee that Sulzer had traded with Boyer, Griswold & Co. Charles H. Reynolds, formerly cashier for that firm, testified that on October 16 last Frederick L. Colwell, whom he understood to be an agent for Sulzer, had bought 200 shares of Big Four Railroad stock for $12,025. The stock was paid for the same day with eight checks and $7,125 in cash. One check given in payment for the stock was a campaign contribution. The Frawley committee alleged that the seven other checks also were campaign contributions, and asserted that this would be proved.

State Has Turkey Farm to Cut Price

Ohio Goes Into Poultry Business When Cost of Thanksgiving Birds Soar.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, Aug. 16.—The State of Ohio is going into the turkey raising business. Kind o' forced into it, as it were, because of the high price of the favored Thanksgiving bird and the demand from State institutions for the bird.

The experiment was tried out a little the last year, and so successful did it prove that this year practically in all of the State institutions where any chickens are kept turkeys have been added.

The price of turkeys has been gradually soaring until they have become almost too expensive for even the State of Ohio to buy, and rather than permit the wards of the State to go hungry on Thanksgiving Day the employees of the different institutions began the work of hatching them.

Summer-Spoiled Skin Removed by Absorption

(From Home Queen.)

As undue summer exposure usually leaves an undesirable surface of tan, dust or grease, often freckles, too, it would seem more sensible to remove such surface than to hide it with cosmetics. There's nothing better for this than ordinary mercolized wax, which actually absorbs an unwholesome complexion. The thin layer of surface skin is itself absorbed, gently and gradually, so there's no inconvenience and no detention indoors. Just spread the wax lightly over the entire face at bedtime and take it off in the morning with warm water. If you will get one ounce of mercolized wax at the drug store and use for a week or so, you may expect marked improvement daily. When the underlying skin is wholly in view your complexion will be a marvel of spotless purity and beautiful whiteness.

Don't let those summer wrinkles worry you: worry will breed more wrinkles. Better to banish them by bathing the face in a solution of powdered saxolite, 1 oz., dissolved in ½ pt. witch-hazel. Used daily for a while this will be found wonderfully effective. (Adv.)

Coffee Tastes Cause Break in Family

Wife Liked Hers Strong, Husband Preferred It Weak, so She Entered Suit.

ALLENTOWN, PA., Aug. 16.—Black coffee and the high cost of living wrecked the romance of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Hauser, of Catasauqua, who were married three years ago, when he was 63 and she was 43, each embarking in matrimony the second time. The wife, Zenobia, has started divorce proceedings.

Mrs. Hauser says she was used from life with her first husband to good black coffee. Hauser wanted his coffee as weak as dishwater, and also objected to the bills she ran up at the store for her favorite beverage. The rackets that followed got on her nerves to such an extent that she desires to resume the state of single blessedness.

The court allowed her $6 a week temporary alimony.

BREAKS TOOTH ON PEARL

AKRON, OHIO, Aug. 16.—While eating clams at a restaurant here, Jack Newman, a waiter, bit into something hard, breaking a tooth. He found a pearl worth $1,000.

Goodrich Guide Posts are as dependable as

Goodrich Tires

—Best in the Long Run

Over fifty thousand miles of American highways are marked by Goodrich guide posts, and more are being put up right along. Goodrich guide posts tell the motorist how to go where he wants to go. Goodrich Tires take him there.

You can depend upon the exact knowledge of rubber which comes from our forty-three years experience in manufacturing all kinds of rubber products—which is crystalized in the Goodrich principle of Unit Molding.

Every Goodrich Tire is made and molded as a unit. The layers of fine, strong fabric, strips of pure rubber, side strips, bead, and the thick tough tread are literally molded into a unit in our single vulcanization.

The result is a unit tire which gives resistance and resiliency, as both tire users and automobile manufacturers testify by their choice.

Your tire dealer will supply you with the particular Goodrich Tire which best meets the requirements of your car, whether it is the Goodrich American Clincher, Goodrich Quick Detachable, Goodrich Straight Bead, Goodrich Cord for electrics, Goodrich Metal Stud, Goodrich Pneumatic Truck, Goodrich Bailey Tread or Goodrich Safety Tread.

Write for our free folders telling how to avoid common tire injuries and how to get the most tire service.

CENTRAL ROAD LOSES IN FIGHT TO LUMBERMEN

Judge Orders Verdict in Favor of the Plaintiff in Chatham Superior Court.

SAVANNAH, Aug. 16.—A verdict in favor of James M. Dixon & Co., in the mandamus suit against the Central of Georgia Railway, has been returned in the Chatham County Superior Court. Judge Walter G. Charlton, before whom the proceeding was heard, directed the jury to find in favor of all the contentions of the plaintiff.

The abrupt ending came after counsel for both sides had devoted an entire afternoon to arguments on a motion to direct a verdict, both sides contending it was entitled to a judgment from the bench.

The decision is one of vast importance to lumber shippers, many of whom participated in a meeting at the Board of Trade just prior to the filing of this suit by Dixon, at which time the trade as a whole protested against the alleged arbitrary and discriminatory methods employed by the railroads and steamship lines.

Rule Not Signed.

Judge Charlton has not yet signed the rule absolute on the writ of mandamus. If this rule holds it will destroy a rule promulgated by the Central of Georgia many years ago in regard to the handling of shipments of lumber from connecting rail lines at Savannah. This rule was the bone of contention in the case. Judge Charlton took the positon that such an arbitrary rule is unjust and not justifiable by law.

Under the Central's rule this road would not receive from connecting lines cars of lumber for delivery to the steamship docks until the shipper had first obtained the consent of the steamship company for the rail carrier to move the cars. It was contended that this allowed the carriers to discriminate against shipments which originated locally in favor of through cars. In addition to the fact that there was so much delay in the handling of the business, it was shown that the lines on which the cars were delayed charged the shipper demurrage.

Complete Victory.

The verdict is considered a complete victory for the Dixon Company, and shippers are naturally elated at the outcome. Dixon was the only shipper who was willing to "buck the tiger" after the lumbermen had held their indignation meeting. He filed suits against the Central of Georgia, the case now before the court; the Seaboard Air Line and the Atlantic Coast Line.

Following the verdict in the mandamus suit application for a writ of supersedeas was filed by the Central, which, if granted, will prevent the enforcement of the mandamus until the Supreme Court of Georgia has passed on the appeal, notice of which has been filed by the public service corporation. The mandamus directs the Central to receive all local shipments of lumber just as it would handle consignments billed through from outside points.

Following the victory of the Dixon Company the complaining concern and the Seaboard Air Line, against which a similar suit was filed, came to a temporary agreement pending the outcome of the appeal of the Central to the Supreme Court. Under this adjustment the Seaboard agrees to accept all shipments of the Dixon people and deliver them at the terminals of the Central, without waiting on the Merchants and Miners' Transportation Company. It is agreed also that the demurrage claim will not be pressed until the outcome of the Central's case before the Supreme tribunal.

SECOND BATTERY OF CHATHAM ARTILLERY

SAVANNAH, Aug. 16.—Steps for the organization of a second battery of the Chatham Artillery, under the authority of the adjutant general, have already been taken.

First Lieutenant E. D. Wells has been informally elected captain of the new battery, while Second Lieutenant Gilbert Lang has been chosen for the first lieutenancy. Sergeant Joseph Thompson has been selected as the second lieutenant of the battery. All three of these officers have been ordered to appear for examination.

Schedule to Tybee For September

Superstitious Fears Vanish as Record Is Unearthed—Few Storms in September.

SAVANNAH, Aug. 16.—Following a prolonged agitation on the subject, the Central of Georgia Railway has announced a Tybee schedule for September which will answer all requirements of those who care to remain on the island during that month, and will make it possible for the season to be extended for the additional 30 days. It is now up to the people to show whether the experiment is justifiable or not.

For years a sort of superstition has existed that it is not well to stay on Tybee during the month of September. People have thought that it is not healthful to go in the water during this month. There is also a very deep-seated fear of storms during this period, when the hurricane season is in full swing and the weather man is likely to spring a West Indian tornado this way overnight. It is certainly not pleasant on Tybee during one of these storms.

Heretofore the season at Tybee has always closed with Labor Day, after which winter schedules on the railroad were in operation, making excursion visits to Tybee impracticable.

CHATHAM'S TAX RETURNS SHOW BIG INCREASE

Official Report Gives $2,669,598 Over 1912—Exceeds Estimate More Than Half-Million.

SAVANNAH, Aug. 16.—With an increase of $2,669,598 over the returns of 1912, the tax returns for Chatham County for this year have reached a figure beyond the most optimistic expectations—that of $41,316,140. The total of the returns has been officially declared by Tax Receiver Marcus S. Baker.

The collector had expected a large return this year, based upon the evident increase in the individual returns received, but it was impossible to predict with any certainty how great the increase would be. An increase of $2,000,000 was figured on, however, and more than this was hardly expected.

The budget of the County Commissioners was made up on the anticipated increase of two million.

County's Revenues.

The county's revenues from these returns will be $309,871.05, an unprecedented figure, giving the county an income increased by $20,021.98 over 1912. The county gets its revnue on a basis of $7.50 on each one thousand dollars of tax returns.

It is shown by the returns that building activities and improvements to lands and general prosperity in the city and county, which caused this large increase in returns, is not confined only to the white population. The total returns from colored people for the year are $1,031,448, as compared with a total of $964,478 for 1912. This is the first time that the colored returns have gone over the one-million mark.

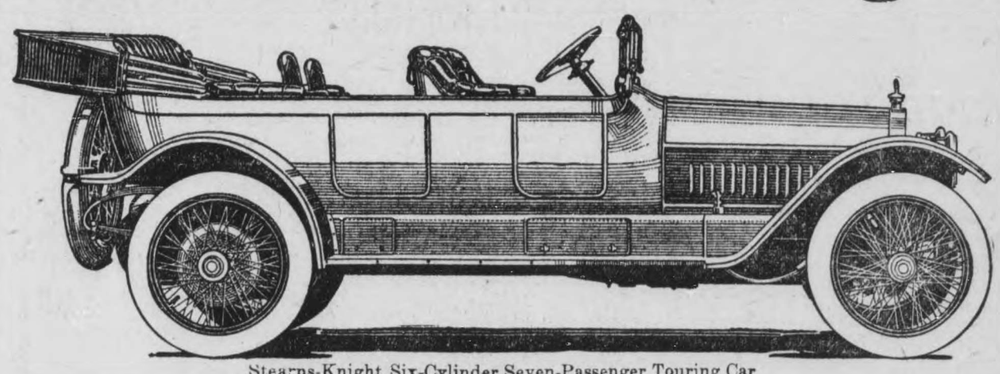
PHYSICIANS AID M'NAUGHTON IN FIGHT FOR LIFE

Savannah Medicos Lending Influence to Secure Pardon for Condemned Doctor.



SAVANNAH, Aug. 16.—Savannah physicians are lending their aid toward securing the freedom of Dr. W. J. McNaughton, who is in jail here under sentence of death for the murder of Fred Flanders in Emanuel County three years ago.

At the request of the Rev. John S. Wilder, pastor of the South Side Baptist Church, who has been a consistent friend of the condemned man, several Savannah physicians have given affidavits relative to the effect of the amount of arsenic poisoning which it is claimed killed Flanders. They declare this amount of the poison would not produce death. It is understood the Prison Commission, which is now considering the case of Dr. McNaughton, is perfectly willing to grant him a commutation to life imprisonment, but his friends are striving for a full pardon for him.

Dr. McNaughton may return to his old home in Emanuel County and resume the practice of his profession if the Prison Commission acts favorably upon his application for a pardon.

"I am an innocent man, and naturally expect to be given a full pardon," he said. "All I hope is that the facts were presented to the Prison Commission properly. If they were, I feel confident I will be liberated. I have already been deprived of several years of my life, and I am praying constantly that the great wrong that has been done me may be righted as far as possible by the granting of a full pardon."

For MILADY'S WARDROBE

By MME. HAUTE MONDE.

MANY of the latest summer models are almost entirely made of white muslin richly embroidered in the openwork English style. These dresses are accompanied by broad sashes and short coats of real lace. The hats worn with them are exaggeratedly "picture" in outline. The brim is always wide and the crown almost hidden behind immense butterfly bows of tulle or lace. For occasions of ceremony Leghorn and Tuscan hats are trimmed with sweeping ostrich feathers in white or pale pastel tints.

• • •

Half a dozen different coatees or mantlets can be worn with the same robette, and endless variations can be arranged with the introduction of finely embroidered sashes which possess heavily fringed ends. The corsage portion of these robettes is quite plain, almost like a fine corset cover. It is made plain expressly, because the great object is the introduction of dainty lace and net blouses and picturesque coatees or mantlets. When accompanied by a shady hat in Leghorn trimmed with pale roses and black velvet ribbons these little dresses have a special cachet.

• • •

Embroidered linen bags are offered in many shapes and in as many degrees of smartness, some being treated quite as carefully in matters of finish, mountings, etc., as though they were of gorgeous material. Colored line, embroidered with a touch of Bulgarian embroidery, makes some effective bags for individual costumes, but the one-tone color is more practical for general use, and some of the handsome bags of real Irish lace filet or other bold lace are better for general summer use than the embroidered linens.

• • •

Some particularly good belts called the hip belt, are made up in white and fashionable shades and have large oval buckles of the leather.

• • •

The waistline is not only allowed to remain normal, but by swathing it in wide supple sashes its size is considerably increased.

• • •

The soft draped bodice minus the high restraining collar is a feature of artistic gowns worn by women in Paris.

• • •

The French designer knows where a line must be accentuated and in many cases uses tiny buttons for this purpose.

• • •

Keen appreciation of the effective lights and shadows given by a moire effect has returned. Many frocks worn by Paris manequins at the Longchamps races were made of soft crepe with the moire effect.

• • •

Very much worn are the evening coats of fine black net, closely woven with glittering beads.

• • •

Plaited peplums of maline, net or mousseline de soie appear on some of the newest frocks, and these are stiffened by a thin wire or ruching of taffeta at the bottom, so they extend beyond the frock.

• • •

The colored slip is in vogue and summer frocks of sheer linen, mousseline de soie or batiste have pink, blue, yellow or green silk linings. The girdles worn with these costumes are usually of a contrasting color.

• • •

In millinery one single red rose is a note which bids fair to become extremely popular. It nestles among folds of black or white tulle, clings to the edge of the brim, hangs over the hair on the underbrim or forms a spikelike arrangement at the back.

The large garden hats of leghorn, maline and lace are trimmed with black velvet ribbon, drawn about the crown and, passing through the slits at the back, is tied in a flat bow at the back. A single flower placed at the side near the edge of the brim completes the trimming.

• • •

Coats show great diversity of length, plain tailor-made models being shorter than dressier models, in which coats may reach to knees.

• • •

One pretty feature of recent summer frocks has been the lace jacket or coatee with its trimming of fur or of swansdown. Ermine is being used for this purpose, sometimes forming a wide collar at the back. Wide lace bretelles are another feature of late fashions. They are a poor second, it must be admitted, to the surplice and the fichu. But anything that has the temerity to dispute the claims of these two effects deserves some notice.

• • •

Apropos of furs, it is reported that Bechoff-David recently introduced fox scarfs dyed a reddish shade; and the somewhat alarming suggestion is made that next winter we shall see furs artificially colored in brilliant tints. It is rather appalling to think of blue, green, red and violet furs!

• • •

The cincture that suggests the plaster babies of Lucas della Robia, at the Orphanage in Florence, is strongly suggested in some of the sashes that wrap around the waist and girdle the torso of the fashionable woman. When these long sashes first appeared they were not liked, but the public taste now finds them picturesque.

• • •

Velvet, brocaded velvet and metallic brocades are going to be the favored fabrics for these garments in the autumn and winter, just as they are now, and the fur collars that make them smart in summer—according to fashion's paradoxical whims—will make them practical as well as smart when the theater and opera seasons begin.

• • •

Many women are wearing eyelet embroidered stockings in white, black and colors; also white and black silk stockings ornamented with embroidery or insets of lace. The girls who are clever with the needle can fashion these expensive stockings for themselves, and pretty color notes to match the gowns may be introduced.

• • •

Popular prizes at the bridge contests held by the sea are the bathing girl pin cushions. Bisque jointed dolls dressed in red and white and blue and white striped bathing suits are mounted on cushions of Turkish toweling. Some are very prim looking, with the hair in two long braids; others suggest the mermaid with flowing hair. The cushions are shown in ovals, squares, circles, etc., and are arranged to hang up and stand. They are fitted with pins and trimmed with ribbons to match the bathing suits.

• • •

It is almost compulsory for the blue serge suit to have a vest or waistcoat, and all sorts of materials are being used for them. The new duvetyns—a successor to the velvety velours de laine—in the lovely soft colorings are ideal for these waistcoats.

• • •

Chiffon veils are being embroidered, the work being done in floss of the same color. The pattern in all these veils must be so arranged as to make the plain mesh area, whether over the entire face or simply over the eyes, conspicuously transparent by way of contrast.

• • •

Now that the pendulum of fashion has swung in the direction of pleated skirts they threaten to become ubiquitous. Women are discovering that the little loose folds at the feet are very becoming, and also that pleated skirts do not really add width to the figure. The sunray pleats are in great demand for such materials as charmeuse, silk cashmere and tussor, but for crepe de chine and chiffon nothing can take the place of the fine accordion pleats.

• • •

In the world of fashion things are frequently topsy-turvy. The unexpected is always welcome. Now that valuable jewels are worn on hats and shoes the homely, but always effective jet ornaments are given a place of honor. Round jet brackets are the latest fad, and they are worn with light and fragile summer gowns of lace and chiffon.

• • •

The black and white season in the world of Fashion is now upon us. After the garish colors of the spring, there has come a complete revulsion of feeling. Women of taste have grown disgusted with the color schemes in which crude tints were thrown together by unskilled hands, at the bidding of inartistic brains. Bulgarian tints have sounded the knell of crude colors; for the moment we are black and white or "pastel." And for the Trouville season, of which I shall speak in detail in a future article, an amazing number of pure white costumes are being made. White linen, white China silk, white embroidered lawn—these and many other dainty materials are in constant request for seaside dresses. As a fine white tulle it is being used for a dozen different purposes—for dresses, mantles, millinery, blouses, etc. Very lovely summer gowns are those made of wide-meshed silk net, the net which bears the name of "Tosca." These gowns are mounted over pleated slips of chiffon or crepe de chine and very frequently they are decorated with tiers of graduated flounces. Ordinary Brussels net is also fashionable just now, especially for draped mantles and for pleated waistcoats, the latter being used in connection with tailored suits of fine serge or linen.

• • •

A pretty fashion has been revived for children's summer frocks of thin material. This is the long-ended bow of ribbon, fastened just below the left shoulder. The ribbon, in soft shades of blue or pink, is made into a many-looped rosette, quite in the old fashion, and from the rosette hang three or four streamer ends. The ribbon should not be more than an inch or an inch and a half wide.

FACE COVERED WITH PIMPLES

Spread to Back. Could Hardly Sleep for Burning and Itching. Caused Disfigurement. Cuticura Soap and Ointment Entirely Cured.

214 Brevard St., Tampa, Fla. — "Some three years ago I commenced to suffer from a rash on my face and back. Before the pimples came on my face there were a lot of blackheads. It looked as if the blackheads turned into pimples because after a little while all of them were gone and my face was covered with pimples. They were small at first but gradually grew and right at the end of each pimple it was all white. I carelessly picked them with my finger nails, which made them spread, and I soon discovered them on my back. My back was covered with pimples and my face the same way. At night I could hardly sleep on account of the burning and itching sensation they caused. I felt like a lot of small-sized crabs biting at my back. I did not like to go out because the pimples caused disfigurement.

"Seeing the advertisement of Cuticura Soap and Ointment in one of the magazines I sent for a sample. At night I would put the Cuticura Ointment on my face and back and I was pleased with the result. I bought some Cuticura Soap and Ointment, and I am glad to be able to say that I am entirely cured of pimples." (Signed) Jno. O. Darlington, Jan. 25, 1913.

Cuticura Soap 25c. and Cuticura Ointment 50c. are sold everywhere. Liberal sample of each mailed free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. T, Boston."

Men who shave and shampoo with Cuticura Soap will find it best for skin and scalp.

Daring Dresses Stir Even Paris

MODISTES THREATENED WITH BOYCOTT

The climax in bold attire for women. The "Languorous Lift" is shown at the left, while the "Dagger Point" appears at the right. All Paris is excited over these latest gowns for evening dress.

"Languorous Lift" and "Dagger Point" Two Productions That Have Caused Criticism.

Special Cable to The American.

PARIS, Aug. 16.—All manner of figure-displaying fashions have eben disported at race courses and in the cafes of Paris by models of the modistes, and in some instances the public of the French Capital has been disgusted by the extreme to which the dictators of feminine attire have gone, but has looked on with unprotesting interest. At length, however, Parisiennes are overwrought. Even the leading dressmakers are endeavoring to put forth evening gowns which in their scantiness expose to view more of the bust and limbs of the wearer than modest woman will countenance. All Paris is stirred and threats of boycotts are to be heard.

The two productions which are accredited with precipitating this disturbed situation are termed the "Languorous Lift" and the "Dagger Point." The situation has been acute for months, and the introduction of these latest effects has but served to bring it to a head. The protests come not alone from women of France, but rumors are drifting into Paris of a revulsion on the part of American and German patrons, who for years have proved so profitable to the modistes of this city.

Being designed exclusively for evening wear, both the "Languorous Lift" and the "Dagger Point" are made with extensive trains. The former gown is so constructed as to display one limb to the height of the knee. This effect is not gained, however, by a side slit, but by the draping of the skirt, which is caught up near the hip and permitted to fall in folds on either side of the exposed limb. The bodice, close fitting, is cut with a deep square neck and trimmed in velvet, which extends down the front, terminating in streamers.

The "Languorous Lift," though the cause of wide criticism, does not approach in boldness the "Dagger Point." This is the most pronounced limb-displaying gown which has been shown here. With its train at the back, the front of the skirt is cut away on either side slightly above the knees to terminate in the sharp point, from which the creation gets its name.

From a front view both lower limbs are entirely exposed, and when the wearer attempts to walk, leaving her train to sweep from knees down her form is displayed. It is with this gown that the most profusely decorated hosiery has been introduced. All manner of unique designs in varied colors are embroidered on these stockings.

The bodice is nearly as scanty as the skirt. Being close fitting, it is cut in a sharp V to the high waist line formed by a broad sash girdle. The arm, like neck and limbs, are exposed to view, since shoulder sleeves are worn.

Decollete Gowns for Day Wear

The newest models for gowns created by the leading dressmakers for the seasons at the fashionable seaside resorts present several novel features. In the first place, the greater number of these gowns would have been pronounced evening dresses by our mothers, but not by our great-great-grandmothers, who themselves wore decollete corsages in the daytime. The sleeves of the elaborate afternoon gown of to-day are so short and so skimpy that they hardly deserve to be called sleeves at all. In many cases the corsages of garden party and race gowns do not have the pointed back and front effect which is peculiar to the evening dresses of to-day, but are made round on the shoulders, quite in the style of certain 1830 gowns. White fox stoles and borders are freely used in conjunction with such robes as these. A quaint but exceedingly picturesque idea.

New Jewelry Fads

Platinum, which has bounded up to the height of fashion (and price, too) as a setting for diamonds, seems now to be the supreme metal, and in the latest designs of the jewelers gold is used only in jewels designed for informal morning wear. Small gems have crowded out the larger sizes, and the dainty, filmy creations, to be popular this summer, show this trend. The Balkan war is reflected by jewelry of many colors, and the designs follow the ideas embodied in the jewelry of those countries, but somewhat modified.

Yellow, at present a popular color in the fashion world, has called for the use of amber, topaz and yellow sapphires, while the use of red, in its various shades, has met with a response in the Oriental trend in jewelry. Good taste and fashion go hand in hand in dictating that jewelry appropriate for evening wear is entirely out of place in the morning, when only ornaments of actual use are suitable, as, for example, a simple brooch that holds the collar in place. If a woman is in the habit of wearing earrings—which, by the way, are waning in popularity in the latest jewelry offerings—those of the "stud" type are considered right for morning wear. They may be either of pearls, baroque pearls (of good quality) or a pearl and small diamond. A simple pin at the throat, either in bar, circle, oval or other shape, may be worn in the forenoon with good taste, but in the whole realm of jewelry the pearl necklace of a single strand is the only piece that may be worn with absolute good taste mornings, afternoons or evenings.

Perhaps the most popular single article of jewelry that has appeared in the shops in months is the watch bracelet. Shown in every conceivable pattern and in all grades, from the expensive diamond studded platinum affairs, which only the wealthy can afford, to the cheapest of plated gold and silver offerings.

Lapel Chains for Men

There was a time not so very long ago when lapel buttons and chains were considered bad form by some of the men who pay special attention to matters of dress, but nowadays the fashion is generally accepted, though of course only with the negligee. With the soft shirt and light summer suit these chains are much worn.

The chains are of gold or silver to correspond with the watch, and the button which is fastened in the lapel buttonhole may be of plain, polished gold or silver, hand engraved or with engine turning (a popular mode of decoration) or enamelled, set with one or more gems, and fashioned into any one of countless shapes.

The plainer buttons are concave disks, ovals, triangles, squares, hexagons or octagons with engine-turned holders, and variations of these shapes are shown with fluted or beaded edges.

The monogram may be engraved on the lapel button, or the crest or initials traced in colored enamels. Club, fraternity or society emblems or school or college colors make good decorations for the buttons.

Uses for Old Lace

The woman who possesses rare old family lace is as fortunate as she who owns lovely jewelry. Lace lends itself to a thousand adaptations. A woman of taste and individuality can do more with lace than with anything else to solve the problem of dressing well at a moderate cost.

Lace is never old-fashioned. Take, for instance, a dress of supple white silk over which is a clinging straight gown with a tunic effect. The bodice is plain over the shoulders. Under the arms and across the bust is a full, straight piece of lace with a blue velvet ribbon threading the top. The fullness is gathered in at the waist, under a blue velvet waistband, and in front is a row of pretty shaded roses over the waistband. Could anything be more charmingly youthful? Almost any woman has old pieces of lace laid away which would serve in such a gown.

For a young matron a yellow crepe de chine is gathered up over a lace front panel. Another frock of white lace is partially veiled in old rose, and pale blue mousseline de soie, draped toward one side. With the present gashions of draping, the possibilities of using beautiful laces without cutting or destroying them is endless.

BLACK HOSE BOSTON FAD.

BOSTON, Aug. 16.—Black stockings worn with white shoes seem to be quite the fad on the North Shore. Last year all wore white stockings with black shoes, but this season things have been reversed. Several girls are following the fad.

FUTURIST GAUZE WRAPS LATEST EUROPEAN FAD

Weirdest Designs Are Printed Upon Them, and Some, Not Too Grotesque, Are Attractive.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—The very latest craze, initiated by a futurist artist in Paris, is for gauze wraps to be worn at race meetings or at the Casino on the continent. These wraps have the weirdest designs printed upon them, and some of them, when not too grotesque, are wonderfully attractive.

The Viscountess Curzon, one of the loveliest blondes in England, has just had made a marvelous gauze wrap for continental wear. It has a border of Egyptian figures in black thrown against dead white background, the material being so fine that it could be drawn through a ring.

The lining of the wrap is of tangerine orange tulle and there is an immense tulle.

It is to be worn over a fairylike dress of embroidered muslin. The hat is a broad Tuscan, weighed down at one side by a cluster of white, black and purple irissee. Long single black velvet ribbon, which depends on the hat, is passed round the throat and allowed to hang low at the back.

All the latest tunics are of striped gauze, and they are very effective, and are worn over black charmeuse. Sleeves are shorter and shorter, so that thirty-button gloves are an absolute necessity.

In regard to hats, society women are getting tired of big lace, since they have become fashionable in the music halls. The bonnet-shaped hat is now much in favor with girls.

Lady Diana Manners looked particularly attractive at a recent garden party in one which came well down over her ears. Around the rim were clusters of black and red cherries and wide strings of black velvet, tied at the back so that the ends fell straight down.

At the seaside resorts, white linen hats lined with black moire, adorned with white wings, are being worn by many well dressed girls.

Perfect Diamond Is Exceedingly Rare

London Dealer Declares That Women Are Best Judge of the Jewels.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—It was demonstrated at the Jewelers' Exhibition, Agricultural Hall, Islington, which closed the other day, that the perfect diamond is rare.

One dealer produced a very large diamond which he was prepared to sell for $300.

"If nature," he said, "had not tinged it with that tint of yellow the stone would be worth $30,000.

"To those who have no knowledge of gems I would say: 'Do not buy as real for $25 a diamond that is pure crystal without blemish, for it would not be real.'

"Women are the best judges of the value of precious stones because they treasure them more than men. It is a matter of instinct."

X-Ray Skirts Told To Hide in Spokane

Meeting of Transparent Gowns and Sunday Sunshine Forbidden on the Streets.

SPOKANE, WASH., Aug. 16.—Women who saunter about the streets of Spokane clad in filmsy, transparent silhouette or tango gowns will hereafter do so at risk of arrest, according to the announcement to-day by David C. Coates, Commissioner of Public Safety. The much-heralded silhouette gown appeared on the streets in the Sunday sunshine and created so much commotion that the Commissioner issued the warning at once.

"If necessary, I will order the police department to make arrests," said the Commissioner.

FULFILL DYING PLEA FOR POSIES AND FINE DRESS

FORT COLLINS, COLO., Aug. 16. Complying so far as they were able with the last expressed wish of Mrs. Alice McMillan, who was frozen to death in the Manhattan mining district, many sympathetic women of Fort Collins united to provide a decent burial for the body, thus saving it from interment in the Potter's Field.

Mrs. McMillan, whose body was not found until the April thaws, had left a note asking that she be buried in "fine clothing, in a white casket, with a white hearse and an abundance of flowers."

When it was learned definitely that Mrs. McMillan was likely to be buried in a pauper's grave, the women took the matter in hand and the funeral was held.

POLICEMEN PERMITTED TO WORK IN SHIRT SLEEVES

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., Aug. 16.—Shirt sleeves and white duck caps are to replace the blue coat and heavy helmet of the traffic policemen.

White roll collars and narrow black bow ties are to be worn with the shirtwaists, and the traffic officers have been asked to have their "gun pockets" deepened, so that their revolvers will not show.

HOBBLE HINDERS HER FLIGHT FROM POLICE

KANSAS CITY, Aug. 16.—Mrs. Hazel Allsworth's hobble skirt was her undoing. "Otherwise I never should have been caught," she told the police, when relating her pursuit by a policeman.

Mrs. Allsworth confessed to the police, they said, that she had received $40 her husband had taken from a man from Keytesville, Mo., who was stopping at their home.

Alert Modisters Now Invent Dress For the Pet Dogs

Motoring Coats, Jeweled Collars and Fancy Leashes Among Articles of Canine Apparel.

Special Cable to The American.

PARIS, Aug. 16.—The dog question is again the liveliest subject at seaside and salon. Having thrashed out fashions for women, artists and our leaders of fashion, male and female, are discussing what fashionable dogs should wear. Here are their conclusions:

Leather collars are still worn, but they should be of the same color and material as the leash. The most fashionable collars are of brass or silver, many of them mounted with precious stones, turquoises, sapphires and rubies.

Color Schemes Popular.

Much attention is paid to artistic combinations in dog wear. For instance, a dark brindled bulldog should have a red leather collar with silver-gilt mountings, while a white brindled dog looks best in a white collar set with tourquoises.

For Pekinese, Japanese and King Charles spaniels, the collar should be of worked silver, light and supple, of fine mesh and closed by a tiny padlock. A very stylish effect is obtained by the use of patent leather collars, and a ravishing combination for Poms is the dog harness which encircles the neck and breast.

Light Coats for Greyhounds.

Greyhounds look best in light colored coats with a stripe to match.

For motoring dogs, English stuffs and fur coats are in high favor, and plaids of dark shades are considered most suitable. At the seaside, sporting sweaters are very fashionable for short-haired dogs, and the wet summer is responsible for the appearance of canine mackintoshes, daintily gathered in at the neck and legs.

Every well bred dog has at least two pairs of boots, a pair of Wellingtons for outdoors wear and velvet or satin pumps for indoors.

"Unlucky Opal" Is To Be Worn a Great Deal This Season

Royalty Starts the Vogue and Jewelers Find it a Hard Matter to Supply the Demand.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—The real opal, which has long been out of favor with the fair sex, is going to enjoy a great vogue this fall. There has always been a superstitious prejudice against these stones, but the new fashion of long necklaces of uncut opals has proved too much for the women to resist, and the jewelers of Bond street and the Rue de la Paix are hard put to it to get a sufficient stock.

Queen Victoria presented to each of her daughters on her marriage a magnificent set of opal ornaments, but these have seldom seen the light of day. One night at the opera, however, it was observed that Princess Henry of Pattenberg was wearing hers, and no doubt Princess Louise and Princess Christian will follow her example.

The Queen of Spain has always worn these stones, for her birthday is in October, the lucky month for opals, and Lady Deerhurst and Lady Aline Vivian are similarly fortunate—the latter indeed wore them on her wedding day.

Lady de Bathe (Lily Langtry) has some fine stones, but probably the most valuable opals in England belong to Countess Beauchamp, who has a tiara, necklace, brooches and earrings, which were collected at much below their value by Lord Beauchamp when he was Governor of Australia.

Others who have worn opals lately are the Dowager Lady Sligo and Lady Norah Brassey.

The Princess Royal has a deep-rooted horror of them. Some fine opals were maong the jewels she lost when whencked on the Delhi and she declares that their evil influence pursues her to this day.

SUSPENDERS TO BE INCLUDED IN WOMAN'S ATTIRE

"Galluses" or Braces of Blue the Last Word in New Masculine Mode.

Special Cable to The American.

PARIS, Aug. 16.—Women's skirts for some time have been approaching the shape of the garments worn by the masculine sex, and now Paris and London face the prospect of seeing feminine attire more like men's than ever. The last word in women's clothes is "galluses." The suspenders look very much like the broad blue variety often hung in shop windows in America and possibly labeled, "The Fireman's Friend."

A Rue de la Paix dressmaker is enthusiastic over women wearing suspenders. "Braces," she declared, "will keep the blouse from coming up out of the waistband, as it sometimes does, and if carried out in the color of the skirt they should make a charming line."

Braces are not the only masculine trend in fashion, however, for after a wave of decided femininity in frocks, when frills and fluffs, and sashes and slashes, and hoppings and hobblings have been in vogue, fashion has dashed to the other extreme and London and Paris are promised waistcoats with cutaway coats, large steel trouser buckles at the back of tweed skirts and a ponderous and portly watch chain stretched across the diaphragm.

For the present the waistcoats are still daintily evolved in delicate grays and chestnuts, sprigged or flowered. Sometimes the waistcoats reach up to the neck, finishing in a small "V." Again they wrinkle effectively around the waist with a single or double row of pearl buttons. One ladies' tailor is showing a striped blue and red waistcoat with roses of another shade wandering gayly across it, the whole effect being something like a Union Jack with a flower garden on it.

The men's tailors speak rather contemptuously of the new fashions for women, scoffing especially at waistcoats, which they say have been tried several seasons without much success.

"GETS-IT" Chases Corns Alright!

Easy As One, Two, Three; No Fuss, No Pain, by Using "GETS-IT."

Just take two seconds to put a little "GETS-IT" on that corn. That corn is "done for" as sure as the sun rises. The corn shrivels up, vanishes. That's the surprise you get by using this new-plan corn cure. There's nothing to stick to the stockings or sock; your corn pains stop. You're saved the bother of applying plasters that make the corn bulge out from the core. You're saved salves that eat into the healthy flesh and "pull;" no more fussing with bandages. You don't have to help by picking and dragging out your corns, or cutting with knives or razors.

"We can Dance All Night and Our Corns Won't Hurt. We Both Use 'GETS-IT'—It Gets Corns Every Time, Dead Sure!"

"GETS-IT" is safe, painless, stops pain, never hurts healthy flesh. It is guaranteed. Try it on warts, callouses and bunions, too.

SUNDAY AMERICAN'S SPECIAL CABLE LETTERS RECEIVED FROM ALL THE GREAT CAPITALS OF EUROPE

'OH, I SAY,' REAL FRENCH FARCE; ITS DOORS BANG

Alan Dale Finds It Minus the Star, but He Is Willing to Admit That He Did Smile.

By ALAN DALE,
Special Correspondent of The Sunday American.

LONDON, Aug. 7.—One swallow may not make a summer (though I believe it does), but nobody will deny that one "star" can make a play. Therefore, if that one "star" should be out of the cast (as often happens in London) it is quite likely that the play will lose its exuberance. I saw "Oh, I Say!" at the Criterion Theater when Mr. James Welch was out of the cast. I couldn't ask for my money back (I had been kindly presented with a pair of stalls), sb I sat through a star-less "Oh, I Say!!" and paid far more attention to the play than I should have done.

Londoners don't mind a bit when the actor or actress they pay to see takes a little vacation and an understudy goes on. (You learn this from a slip always inclosed in the program, when it is too late to repine.) Londoners are used to it.

I don't know what had happened to James Welch. Anyway, it was his understudy, H. Langdon Bruce, who played the part of the bridegroom in "Oh, I Say!!"—a particularly arduous role for an understudy to tackle. I divided my time feeling sorry for H. Langdon Bruce and for myself—particularly for myself.

"Oh, I Say!!" must have been a scorcher in its original French of Henri Kersai and Albert Barre, when it was called "Une Nuit de Noces" (A Wedding Night). It had to be adapted into London by Sydney Blew and Douglas Hoare. What they had to do was to "wedding-ring" the affair, or at least, in a question of equivocal relations, to suggest that the two were "engaged."

The little English word "engaged" covers a multitude of Parisian iniquities. Marcel, the hero of the piece, just married to the beautiful Suzette, meets in the foyer of the Hotel d'Angleterre at Beauvais the scintillant and corruscating Sidonie, to whom he has been "engaged." You smile as the word pops out in its Anglo-Saxon humbug. You are perfectly well aware what the adapter has done, but you look around you at the ornate and bare-shouldered British matron, and you quite understand why Marcel and Sidonie were "engaged."

That is really the gist and the gust of "Oh, I Say!!" The usual farcical use of lies is resorted to, and when I tell you that there are four doors in the setting—all of which bank—you can see your play. Everybody is pushed in at one door or other. Everybody else rushes in at another door. The most popular remark made is "You here?"

Each, seeing the other, cries "You here?" I daresay you have heard the remark before in French farce. Half of the French farces wouldn't get over the footlights unless you heard that lovely query, "You here?" Sometimes it is only "You here?" More emphatically, it is You here?" In cases of desperation it is "YOU here?"

However, I'm not going to pretend that I didn't smile at "Oh, I say!!" for it would be foolish pretense. I did smile. It has its funny moments in spite of allusions to pajamas, keyholes, disinfectants, and so on. Once get into the mood, and in spite of reason one laughs. "Laughter," says Professor Henri Bergson, "always implies a sort of secret freemasonry, or even complicity, with other laughers, real or imaginary. How often has it been said that the fuller the theater, the more uncontrolled the laughter of the audience!" There was a good deal of laughter at the Criterion Theater, and whatever one may write, in all cynicism of this cut-and-dried farce business, the piece HAS caught on. In my humble opinion, what "Oh, I Say!!" needs, and what I am told Mr. Lee Shubert will give it for U. S. A., is music.

Music dulls noe's sense of logic What appears banal and trite and far-fetched in a straight farce is accepted without question when a bit of music happens. With a chorus of pretty girls chirping "Oh, I Say!!" it wouldn't matter very much what I DID say. So there you are.

I can't tell you what James Welch did with the farce, but I should imagine that it belonged to him. There were two very pretty girls in the cast—Miss Sybil de Bray, who appeared as the bride, and Miss Ruby Miller, who was the maid. Then there was a very clever actress, rejoicing in the name of Marguerite Sciaitiel, who is, I fancy, Norwegian, and who is quite likely to be heard from again. There were many others, who had to rush in and rush out, and get banged in the doors. They had to work hard for their living, and if they were not merry, they were at least active little things!

It is a long time since we have had a dose of real French farce, even in London, and the English public has taken kindly to "Oh, I Say!!" even without music. The piece is very short, indeed, which is distinctly in its favor, and it says what it has to say with lightning-like rapidity. Anyway, it is established here.

ITALY BUILDS FLEET OF 300 MILITARY AIRCRAFT

When this program is completed Italy will have 300 military aeroplanes.

Dirigibles also will be built.

American Likely to Rule Ireland

Earl of Granard May Be Viceroy

Wife Was Miss Beatrice Mills

Countess of Granard, formerly Miss Beatrice Mills, whose husband is prominently mentioned as first Viceroy of Ireland under home rule.

All London Believes She Will Grace Court if Husband Gets Important Post.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—An American woman may rule in Ireland as wife the first victory under home rule.

All London is talking over the prospect and is prophesying the appointment of the Earl of Granard as Vice Regent of Ireland. The Countess of Granard was formerly Miss Beatrice Mills, of New York, the beautiful heiress whose marriage to the Earl was generally considered a love match.

The talk of the appointment is almost universally popular gossip. The Earl is a Catholic and his American wife is wealthy, and it is believed he will be acceptable to the Irish people, and fully able to hold his own as to the splendor of his court.

But apart from the material advantages of politics, wealth and religion, society talks pleasantly of the Countess herself. They recall the brilliant figure that Lady Daisy Leiter Curzon made as wife of the Viceroy in India, and announce in their opinion Countess of Granard will be as presentable.

Color of reality was given to the gossip when the Earl and his Countess went to Castle Forbes, Ireland, last week. No announcement was made that their trip had anything of a momentous nature, but it is rumored that beyond the casual appearance of the journey there is something of significance.

$30,000,000 Yearly in Penny-Slot Gambling

French Government Is Forced to Put Ban on Machines in Small Cafes.

Special Cable to The American.

PARIS, Aug. 16.—The French Government has decided to prohibit the "penny-in-the-slot" gambling machines in all the lower class cafes.

The last available statistics show that in 1911 there were 64,953 of these petty gambling machines in use in France, and that their total receipts during the year were $30,000,000.

The machines are usually leased by cafe keepers on a sharing basis. During 1911 the proprietors received as their share $10,000,000.

The remaining $20,000,000 was represented by tickets, drawn from the machines, which were useless unless exchanged for drinks.

Red Horses for Army; New Breed Developed

Chestnut Equines Said to Have More Fire Than Those of Less Vivid Color.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, Aug. 12.—As a result of experiments made in Leicestershire by biologists, not yet completed, a new species of horses is being developed for the army.

Bright chestnut, which is the equivalent of red hair in children, has quite overcome all other tints among hackneys, and it is associated with the mental quality that is called "fire." It is a master color in more than one respect, indicating a viking spirit.

In horses and men a sort of duel is going on between red and brown, or rather chestnut and bay. The hackney is chiefly red, the hunter chiefly brown, though Ireland is now producing many chestnuts.

'WHITE LADY' IS AGAIN SEEN IN KAISER'S HALLS

Fears Feft for Life of Emperor if Traditional Ghost Appears in Castle

By STEVEN BURNETT.
Special Cable to The American.

BERLIN, Aug. 16.—Superstitious people here are convinced that some great calamity is threatening the Kaiser or his family for the Hohenzollern family ghost, the famous "white lady," is said to have walked at the Palace, a thing she never does except when some disaster is impending or when a Hohenzollern is about to die.

The Kaiser himself ridicules the idea and has forbidden any talk about it inside the Palace walls, but several of the servants swear they did see the "white lady" and that the explanation that it must have been some lady resident of the Palace walking in her sleep through the endless corridors in her night dress is absurd, for she looked exactly as tradition says she does look, clad in long flowing white dress, her pale hands crossed on her breast, and her face covered with a nun's veil.

Appears in Middle Ages.

The "white lady" was first heard of as haunting the castles at Bayreuth, Ansbach and Plassenburg in the middle ages. At Plassenburg she was so much feared that the cavaliers of the court took delight in masquerading in white in certain rooms to frighten those who came their way.

Once, when Markgraf Albrecht, the Warrior, met a white lady at Plassenburg, he grasped her with his strong arms and threw her down the stairs, and at the bottom was found the dead body of his Chancellor, who, with the Bishop of Bamberg, had conspired against his ruler. But this incident did not in any way damage the reputation of the "white lady." Someone always managed to see her just before death entered the castle.

Napoleon Saw Specter.

The great Napoleon, who was intensely superstitious, on his military campaigns twice had occasion to pass through Bayreuth. The first time was in 1812, when on his way to Russia, and he sent a request from Aschaffenburg that he should not be asked to pass the night in the rooms at Bayreuth, which were known to be visited by the "white lady." His request was granted; yet next morning he arose in the worst of moods, and as he was getting into his carriage he was heard to mutter something about the "accursed castle." It was certainly the presage of disaster to him. The following year when he passed through the place he refused to pass the night there.

Last time a "white lady" showed herself at Berlin was in 1859, a short time before the birth of the present Kaiser.

Windsor Castle Open To Tourists Again

King George Orders That Any Official Accepting Tip Will Be Dismissed.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—At this time of the year hundreds of American visitors go to Windsor to explore the castle, and there is rejoicin- in the town over the reopening of the State apartments which have been closed ever since last January through fear of suffragette outrages.

Every person who enters the castle will have to pay a shilling, and there will be no free days as hitherto. By the King's command this money will go to the local hospital.

By the King's command also it is reported that no "tips" whatever shall be given to guides or to any of the officials at the castle. If any official is discovered accepting a "tip," he will be dismissed.

CHINA SUFFRAGETTES GET FIRST BIGAMY SENTENCE

HONG KONG, Aug. 16.—The first Chinese bigamy trial that has ever taken place ended in Un Chan Tse being sentenced to eighty days imprisonment by a mixed court at Shanghai. The prosecution was instigated by the Chinese Woman Suffragette Society.

POLYGAMY URGED AS CRYING NEED BY GIRL MILITANT

British Suffragette Declares That Monogamy Is Favored Only by the Happily Wedded

By HERBERT TEMPLE.
Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—There is no better evidence of the remarkable change that is taking place in English women and girls than the existence of militancy and the appearance of a movement led by a young English girl for the introduction of polygamy in England.

Militancy among suffragettes had been confined to a very small number of women and to a certain class of women. The advocate of polygamy to whom I refer, however, is a very well-known writer, although quite a young girl.

An interview with the Sheik Ul Islam, the supreme priest of the Mohammedan Church, cabled first to New York and then to London, in which the Sheik pointed out he Mo-Mohammedans have polygamy and very little immorality, whereas we Europeans have monogamy and widespread immorality, was read with a great deal of interest here, particularly by women. It was very widely commented upon.

The young woman writer who would have polygamy says:

"Let us approach the problem fearlessly and frankly. The fact is that the present standard of morality is false and unreal, or that while nature produces what is ultimately a surplus of women over men, monogamy is not a suitable system for all our people.

"No system can be suitable which condemns to death or non-life so large a portion of the community as we, the surplus women, form.

"Monogamy is not a sacred institution, and there is no real necessity for hundreds of thousands, even millions, of women to be sacrificed upon its altar. Nor would anything of value be destroyed by its removal and by the setting up of a more suitable moral and legal standard.

"We are told that the ideal condition is one man—one wife. Well, whatever alteration takes place there can be nothing to force people, if they think fit, to preserve that equation so far as they themselves are concerned.

"But those who adopt that standard for themselves have no right—human or divine—to try to impose it upon others who are able and willing to adopt another, especially when imposing such standard is against nature itself and actually condemns a large number of human beings who have equal rights to themselves to exclusion from life.

"I do not believe the difficulty lies with men. I think that each man deep down in his heart admits—if only to himself—that monogamy is unnatural and has failed.

"The difficulty lies with the fortunately married woman.

"If she and her husband are satisfied with one another, then whatever the legal right may be they would never have anyone else.

"If they are not satisfied with each other, then monogamy will not bind them in fact.

"When all bachelor women and widows have the parliamentary vote, and their right to assist in the making of the nation's laws, one of its first influences will be to remove and destroy the artificial and arbitrary standard of monogamy and to establish polygamy as the legal and proper right and custom of an advanced people!"

Plombieres-les-Bains Bores And Drenches Paris Society

By LA RACONTEUSE

Special Cable to The American.

PARIS, Aug. 16.—I have just returned from Plombieres-les-Bains, our most fashionable pleasure resort, where I went not because I really wanted to, for in this miserably wet summer Paris is most decidedly the best place to spend your time, but because my concierge, in plain words, told me that she could not possibly have any respect for a tenant who showed such atrocious disrespect of the laws of "le beau-monde" as to remain in Paris all summer instead of going to some fashionable resort.

In other words, I had to leave my cozy apartment for a while, or I knew that my female tyrant would make life unbearable for me by those thousands of mean little tricks known only to a Paris concierge, against which you are absolutely defenseless.

I found Plombieres-les-Bains as cold and wet as I had expected it, but crowded with society people, all dreadfully bored and all asking what to do on a dreadfully long afternoon with the rain pouring down.

Takes Hour to Recover.

In the morning time passes quickly, no matter how the weather. You take "le traitement," which here consists in a hot bath, followed by a cold shower, massage "sans l'seau" in the "kurhouse," or massage "a sec" at home in bed, after which you need at least an hour's rest to recover.

After lunch you go to the kursal to drink your coffee, tea or elder blossom tea to the accompaniment of the band; then you attend to your private correspondence, play a little "aux petits chevaux" or "a la roulette," but what then?

The afternoon is still young, and promenading, tennis or golf are out of the question.

Suddenly an electric shock passed through the room the news has spread that Monseigneur Angouard, the Congo missionary, will give a lecture at Hotel Deschauseaux, the hotel of all priests and religious people. You know in advance whom you will meet there and whom not. Not a single gambler, not a single "dame dernier cri"—nobody, in fact, but the members of the poorer aristocracy and the badly dressed bourgeoisie.

On the stroke of 4 these people meet in the large hall, and when they are all seated, firm steps are heard in the corridor and Monseigneur's imposing figure appears in the doorway smiling at everybody. He pretends to take a sip of water, and then he begins to tell about the 37 years he has spent in voluntary exile, first as a soldier in the Foreign Legion and then, when he was tired of shooting heathens, trying to save their souls as a missionary.

And the Hat Is Passed.

And when he has finished, one of the young girls present gets up, takes off her hat, turns it upside down and carries it around, asking for contributious to Monseigneur's little colored babies, and a few moments later she smilingly hands Monseigneur $150.

These affairs are always alike, and the Monseigneurs always turn up on a rainy day when people can not get away.

A lady who has caused a stir is the beautiful and charming Duchess of Manchester, who has given us a new dance which my readers probably know and which "isn't doing a thing" (is that right?) to the once almighty tango.

The dance, I am told, is composed by an American, Uriel Davis.

To be able to dance it you must first patiently practice walking upstairs instead of using the elevator. When you are quite familiar with the movement required to walk from one step to the one above, all you have to do is to repeat this movement in the ballroom—eight steps forward, eight steps back, raising your knees as much as possible; then you slide sideways as fast as possible and then repeat the first eight steps each way.

Without intending to hurt the feelings of Mr. Uriel Davis, I venture to say that I find the dance silly, and the reason it is so popular is because it is an excellent exercise to take off flesh.

Croquet Suddenly The Fad in England

Old Game Again Is Feature of the Smartest Week-End Parties.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—Croquet has suddenly come back into favor after a long rest, and is a marked feature at all smart week-end parties.

Tennis is too strenuous and golf too baffling for many whose social duties call for much of their time.

The croquet lawns at Ranelagh and Hurlingham are in great demand, and many are introducing new rules and new kinds of hoops to give novelty to the game.

The Earl of Essex is devoted to the game. Lady Charles Beresford also passes hours at it.

Viscount Doneraile, Lord Tollamache, Lord Lurgan and Nigel Kingscote are often to be seen playing at Ranelagh.

Among the fair sex one notices Lady Angela Forbes, Lady Margaret Spicer, Lady Sophie Scott, Lady Winifred Butler and Mrs. Arthur Sassoon.

MANY ESCAPE VACCINATION.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—More than a quarter of a million children—or 31.6 per cent of those born—were exempted from vaccination last year under the "conscientious objection" rule.

Over 300 Ragtimers Pining for America

London Music Halls Crowded With Idle Singers Scheming to Raise Steerage Fare.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—There are 300 or 400 homesick Americans in London. They are music hall artists who flocked over here when ragtime brought about a trans-Atlantic boom.

They came first class, talking of three-figure contracts, and now they are scheming to get cheap passages home disguised as Polish emigrants.

The trouble, of course, is that the music hall stage has been glutted with American turns.

BRITISH PRESS CALLS KIPLING REAL LAUREATE

Appointment of Dr. Bridges Declared Tribute to Pedantry Rather Than to Poetry.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—The appointment of Dr. Robert Bridges to succeed Alfred Austin as poet laureate has note been treated as kindly by the press as was Mr. Austin's succession to Tennyson, notwithstanding the fact that both as a man of letters and as a poet Dr. Bridges is measurably his immediate predecessor's superior. The censure of Dr. Bridges' selection is probably to be found in the fact that the press is merely voicing public opinion, which is keenly disappointed that Rudyard Kipling did not secure the office.

Says The Morning Post: "If Mr. Kipling had been appointed laureate our people in these islands and overseas would have understood the honor as expressing a national sense. We are apt to forget that poets are of service in the world not merely as delighting the ears and refining the emotions of the cultured few, but as calling like a trumpet to duty in life and work, to the scorn of the base and the glory of the patriot, according to the poet's conception of baseness and patriotism."

The Pall Mall Gazette: "Mr. Kipling's claim is far above that of any contemporary. The writer of the 'Recessional' and of 'If' will be the laureate of the English people whenever crisis calls for utterance, and a world-wide empire will be his responsive audience."

The Star: "Mr. Kipling has more poetry in his little finger than Dr. Bridges has in his whole body. To be perfectly candid, the election of Dr. Bridges is a tribute to pedantry, and not to poetry. There are many living poets whose claims are indisputably superior to his. But in this country the path of dullness is the road to glory."

Just before the post of poet laureate was filled, T. P.'s Weekly published the following table as the result of an exhaustive canvass among its readers:

RITCHIE DOESN'T COMPARE WITH OTHER CHAMPS

Must Meet Murphy, Welsh and Cross Before He Can Hope To Be World Figure.

By W. W. Naughton.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 16.—Here is a question fired at me from a home critic:

"How does Willie Ritchie compare with the lightweight champions who preceded him?"

Up to date he does not begin to compare in the slightest. Ritchie is still young and lacking in experience, however, and may loom up as more of a world-figure in pugilism when he has pitted himself against men like Tommy Murphy, Freddy Welsh and Leach Cross. Wolgast, who preceded as a champion, was a wonderful fighter before appendicitis marked him for its own. His handling of Battling Nelson on Richmond Field was something to live in memory, even if little "Ad" had never accomplished anything else.

* * *

BATTLING NELSON in his prime, was an interesting performer. And it was his negative qualities that made him worth while. There never was a man within twenty pounds of his weight who could stand such rough usage and keep pressing steadily forward. He wasn't the most gainly fighter of his class, by long odds, but his powers of assimilation covered a multitude of defects.

* * *

JOE GANS was a thorough workman, and a slight of him in action was as great a treat as a student of boxing could desire. He stepped around in a soft-footed way and was never out of position. His manner of ending it all with a downward clip of the right, delivered without drawing back the elbow, was well worth the price of admission.

He was an artist and it was a lament with old-time sports that Joe and Jack McAuliffe did not flourish contemporaneously. A tilt between the pair would have been worth a journey to see.

WACO SECOND SACKER IS SOLD TO BOSTON BRAVES

WACO, TEXAS, Aug. 16.—Oscar Dugey, second baseman of the Waco Texas League team and leading base runner of the league, was sold to the Boston Nationals, to report at the end of the local season. The consideration is said to have been about $2,000.

Koney Makes One Error a Month

Cards' Fielder May Set New Mark

ST. LOUIS, MO., Aug. 16.—An error a month is the pace Ed Koney is setting for what probably will be a world's record as a fielding first baseman. So far the guardian of the Cardinals' initial sack has turned but four miscues this season—one in April, May, June and July—and if he gets but one in August and September his name will be engraved in the record books.

To accept 1,112 of the 1,116 chances offered him in 101 games is quite a phenomenal performance; still this is owned by Koney for his 1913 work. And it has everything eclipsed in the records of fielding first basemen since the National League was organized.

The highest average ever compiled by a first baseman in the National League was by Frank Chance in 1910, when he missed but three chances out of 814; that gave him a mark of .996. This to-day stands supreme, but if Koney continues his average of one error per month he will shade Chance's record by a slight margin.

Chance Leads All Rivals.

Since 1871, when the first set of records was kept in the National League, Chance's .996 stands out on top. Next to the ex-Peerless Leader is Dan McGann with a .995, and then .994 is the highest figure. The following table shows the five highest averages of the first basemen:

Year.	Name.	g	po.	a.	e.	pct.
1910—	Chance . .	87	773	38	3	.996
1906—	McGann. .	133	1391	83	8	.995
1909—	Chance . .	92	901	40	6	.994
1907—	McGann. .	81	781	55	5	.994
1897—	Tebeau . .	91	912	42	5	.994

Koney's fielding this year has been sensational and proves that he is without a superior as a fielding first baseman. Of course, now Chase and Daubert and Stovall have their supporters, but the truth is that for being steady day in and day out Koney is supreme.

Koney isn't as flashy as Chase. He will not dive high into the air and make the catch one-handed and he dosen't pull off the fancy stuff which Chase does. But he gets the wild pegs, the high ones, the low ones and those far too high, left and right minus the "grandstand" effort.

How Koney Made Errors.

On April 20 Koney made his first error. It was at Robison Field and he missed an easy foul off Chief Wilson. Later, Wilson put a single in left. The second error was May 28 in Chicago against the Cubs. It happened in the inning when Mitchell rolled to Huggins. Hug made the perfect toss, but Big Ed clamped his hands before the ball arrived, muffed and the runner was safe.

Then came error No. 3. It was June 25, at Robison Field. Carey grounded to Koney. Max raced for the bag and Ed, seeing he couldn't get there first, made a toss to Harmon. Bob let it get away, Carey ran to second and Koney got the error.

Big Ed almost escaped the month of July, but a bit of severe scoring gave him an error on the last day of the month. In the fourth inning Connolly rolled a slow grounder to Koney. Sallee raced over to the bag, but Connolly had the play beaten and it was scored as a hit. Sal allowed the ball to drop, roll a few feet away, and taking his time in recovery, Connolly hiked down to second.

There is how Ed Koney has made his four errors this season. And in between them he has accepted 1,112, certainly a remarkable record.

With the Cards in a slump this year, Koney's fielding hasn't dropped a bit. His batting has, and for that reason the fans have been handing the jeers occasionally to the Big Train. Every fan can rehearse when Ed failed to get a hit and drive in a run. And why? Because his play is watched every day where the others are passed by.

McCloskey Develops Big Ed.

Koney can miss driving in a run and the fans will see it. But Magee, Oakes, Mowrey, Wingo, Whitted and others will miss and nobody pays any attention to it. Not Koney, though.

It took time and constant training on the part of John J. McCloskey to develop Koney into the great first baseman that he is. Koney came here in June, 1907. He was a big kid, awkward around first, and didn't know how to shift his feet. He had the right foot in front when the left should have been there, and often the other way, too.

But McCloskey knew what he had. The entire summer John J. drilled his new capture. In the morning practice Mac toiled with Koney. He showed him this; he showed him that; he showed him how to keep one foot on the sack and catch the wide throw with the gloved mitt.

And it didn't take Koney long to master these fine points. He shows it to-day.

Some will doubt Koney's ability as a first baseman. But here he has a .996 average, just a fraction under .997, and every winter the Cubs, Pirates and Giants bid for the "Big Train."

Koney really isn't appreciated in St. Louis. They won't realize what a marvel and wonder he is until if, by chance, a trade will send him to some other club. And a duplicate of Ed Koney isn't cavorting around any of the minor league fields to-day.

TO CHANGE A. A. U. CODE.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—G. T. Kirby, president of the Amateur Athletic Union, is to revise the A. A. U. code of rules, which, he says, in their present form can not be understood by attorneys. Kirby made this announcement before sailing for Berlin to attend the conference of athletic authorities of the world.

GIANTS CAN GET KONEY IF MATTY IS IN THE DEAL

President Britton Says He Will Make Swap With McGraw for "Big Six" and Merkle.

ST. LOUIS, MO., Ang. 16.—If the Giants will part with Christy Mathewson and Fred Merkle, then McGraw can have Ed Koney from the Cardinals!

From New York Thursday came a report that the Giants were dickering with the Cardinals for another swap, and that McGraw had offered Southpaw Wiltse and First Baseman Fred Merkle for the "Big Train."

Considering that Wiltse is fading and fading fast, and that Koney easily outclasses Merkle, the cards would run second on such an exchange, and the truth of such a transaction was asked of President Britton.

"If McGraw will make it Mathewson and Merkle instead of Wiltse and Merkle then I will O. K. the trade," said President Britton. "But Wiltse and Merkle, no."

Then the Cards' Prexy smiled and puffed his perfecto and continued:

"Yes, that's what I mean, Matty and Merkle. Matty must be in the deal. Anybody but Matty and there's nothing doing with us for Ed Koney."

"But don't you know, Mr. Britton, that McGraw never would consent to trade Mathewson?" was put to the Cards' chief.

"Why, certainly I know it, and that's just why I name Matty in a deal with the Giants for Koney," flashed back Britton. "After we took Crandall instead of Wiltse for McLean, I offered to buy Wiltse from the Giants, but McGraw said he did not want money, but was after players.

"We're after players to strengthen our club, too. We are trying to get the youngsters, and are willing to make a trade where we have an edge, but it's a cinch that we're not going to pass out anything like Koney for Merkle and Wiltse."

GIANTS ALWAYS FIGHTING, EVEN IF IT'S M'GRAW

Crandall Incident Goes to Prove That Muggsy's Men Are Always in Wrangling Mood.

CINCINNATI has pulled the story that two or three of the New York Giants took a punch at Manager McGraw because he released Otis Crandall, star pinch pitcher and pinch hitter, accompanying his action with the statement that Otis never was a real star and wasn't fit for membership on a high class baseball team. Naturally the players were incensed to see an old pal thus turned down, the more because McGraw's action deprives the young Indiana boy of a probable slice of world's series money later in the fall. Maybe they did punch McGraw and maybe they didn't. It doesn't look reasonable that they did, for "Muggsy" ins't standing around as a target for anybody.

* * *

BUT the incident shows two things conclusively. The Giants are fighters, every inch of them, and it is the fighting spirit that wins in any sort of an athletic contest. The Giants are keyed up to the right tension and their position at the head of the National League race is one to which they are fully entitled because of this fighting spirit. McGraw has them gingered to a nicety and doubtless welcomes a little shindig now and then off the field, just as a matter of relaxation.

* * *

MANY of the McGraw methods are far from commendable and some of them are even reprehensible, but in the main other baseball managers might well take example of the Giants' leader and instill this fighting spirit into the men. Frank Chance could keep the old Cub machine snarling and snapping in much the same way and Jimmy Callahan's nature is infectious at times and carries the team along under high pressure. Joe Tinker is a fighter at heart and even the queer conditions in Cincinnati hasn't taken all of Joe's heart. There are few other managers, however, who really scrap and succeed in getting the fighting spirit into their men.

DUFFY SELLS OUTFIELDER JOSEPH BURNS TO TIGERS

RACE TRACK AT AUCTION.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—The passing of another famous New York race track apparently is forecast in a foreclosure sale of the Brighton Beach property, scheduled for August 28. The action was brought on a second mortgage of approximately $95,000. The first mortgage is $650,000.

Johnny Evers Need Not Worry

President Murphy Is With Him

By Davenport.

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—John Evers is not worried concerning the report he is to be ousted from the managership of the Cubs.

"I am worried in a sense," said the Keystone King when he heard the report, "for I know these reports are not tending to the improvement of conditions on the club.

"I firmly believe the reports emanate from sources unfriendly to the Cubs.

"Last winter when it was announced I had been appointed to succeed Frank Chance, my enemies said I would not last until Decoration Day.

"I was right on the job at Pittsburg on Memorial Day and then the fellows who seem to have a grudge against me said: 'Well, he'll blow up before the Fourth of July,' but there was no premature explosion and yours truly celebrated the glorious Fourth by managing the Cubs while they went through a double-header.

"Now they are flirting me right off the reel, but so far as the stability of my position is concerned I am not concerned.

Murphy Pleased With Work.

"I have the knowledge that President Murphy is back of me. He has convinced me upon more than one occasion that he is backing me, and I know him well enough to feel that I can rely upon him.

"He has upheld everything I have done in the management of the players and he has informed me upon more than one occasion that I am giving satisfaction.

"As I have said concerning alleged dissensions in the club, I know who is starting these reports. They do not come from West Side fans. It is a trouble that has existed for years, and some one must be the goat, so why not your humble servant? Let it go with the other managerial duties. My shoulders are broad. I can not only stand the hisses and jeers of the fans, but I guess it is up to me to pay no heed to these false reports that are being circulated and have been circulated all season."

President Murphy also emphatically denies he intends to remove the Keystone King.

When apprised of the fact some one had started the report Evers was to be separated from his job, President Murphy said: "There is absolutely no truth in the report. I still believe Evers is the best manager in the business and the greatest ball player in the world. I have backed him up in his action on and off the field.

"I wouldn't give 2 cents for a manager who can't manage, and I am satisfied that Evers is not one of that sort."

Discussing the reports that the Cubs are fighting among themselves, Manager Evers said: "I want men who fight, but I want them to use a little judgment in whom they fight.

Wants Fighting Spirit.

"I like men of the Zimmerman type, who are fighting every inch of the way.

"True, Heine was put out of a number of games this summer, but why? Because he was always up on the job, watching every play and ready to fight for what he considered his rights.

"I do think it is unfair for the fans and sport writers to pick up every little petty quarrel that may come up and make a mountain of it. These are the things that are hurting the club."

Considering the pitching the Cubs had during the early part of the season, the misfortune sustained by Overall in the way of illness, and the other hard luck, Evers has done well to keep his club up among the top notchers, and he is being given credit for it all around the circuit.

Then there was the hard luck encountered when the Cubs invaded the East the last time, Archer out of the game with a had finger, Zimmerman out with a game ankle, and Bridwell out with punk pins.

Some handicap, "fellers," but Jawn has been right on the job fighting his way through all the time.

We have it from the Keystone King, right from the shoulder, that stories of dissension on the club have been greatly magnified, and here's a little secret that will surprise you.

That story to the effect Evers is to be deposed came from an eavesdropper.

AFTER BERTH IN WESTERN.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA., Aug. 16.—Leo Meyer, of this city, has made a bid for the Sioux City franchise of the Western League. Meyer said he was anxious to bring the club here, but declared he was not sure about meeting all the requirements of the league.

GEO. HARRISON IS JOE BEAN'S BEST PLAYER

Ex-Marist Star Now Making Fine Baseball Record at Georgia University.

By O. B. Keeler.

WITH your kind permission, we will now introduce Mr. Harrison, prominent second baser of the University of Georgia baseball team, former Marist star and a corking good student of pharmaceutics as well as the national sport.

Mr. Harrison's initials are George L., the "L." standing for Larrup. He is an Atlanta boy, 19 years old, sound in wind and limb, and quite a hobby of Joe Bean's.

"I think a lot of George because he can think," says Joe, who was George's coach at Marist. "Every year the colleges show us a lot of young ball players that can run and throw and field and hit. But a fearful percentage of these neat little baseball machines use their heads mainly to keep their collars from sliping off."

But that isn't the way of George. Take it from Joe.

A Smart Ball Player.

"He is what is known in professional circles as a 'smart ball player,'" Joe adds. "He remembers every little tip anybody gives him—and he uses his memory on the field. He thinks fast and he has the physical speed to carry out his hunches. He is the best all-round college ball player I ever had charge of."

George was a freshman last year, starring in pharmaceutics and the territory around second base. He is expected to do the same, only more so, in the gentle springtime of 1914.

At present George, who is an earnest investigator of things entirely apart from the squeeze play and touching second, is doing a bit of extra work in physics at the summer school of the university. He takes quite a serious view of life, even at the supposedly callow age of 19 summers and the same number of winters.

Had Heart Trouble?

An odd feature of George's development as a ball player cropped out when he started to Marist where he played with great effect three years for Joe Bean.

George was very young then, and he was growing so fast that he frequently found his clothes too small for him when he got up in the morning. The stretching worried some of his insides a bit, and George's folks had an idea he had a floppy heart. It used to flop when George played tennis. They asked Joe Bean to take good care of George and not let him play ball too hard. They recommended first base as the easiest job.

The Flopping Stopped.

But Joe needed a second baseman. Also he saw right away where George ought to perform. He reasoned that one place was as bad as another, if not worse, when it came to causing cardiacal floppings, and he diagnosed properly the uncertain behavior of George's pumping apparatus.

Moreover, George had let up on the growing by that time and was feeling great.

So George went to second base, where he proceeded to eat 'em alive.

He has been doing that ever since, too.

George isn't looking forward to professional toil on the sunburned square. He is going to be a pharmacist, which is a druggist with a university training.

And if George applies the same system to pharmaceutics that he has to baseball, he should travel along on the high speed.

Joe Bean says George is one smart ball player.

BOOKING AGENCY FOR BOXERS TO BE FORMED

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—Plans are maturing for a national boxing organization, which will have for its purpose the booking of boxers for various clubs or promoters throughout the country; in fact, it is to be a general booking agency, the same as is in vogue among theatrical people. The man back of the project is Wilbur Stuart, of Columbus, Ohio.

It is the intention of the organizers of the company to have connections in all the large cities of the country. This project would do away with the middleman, or manager, to some extent, but not necessarily, as very often managers are only too willing to pay the regular booking fee to get a match.

The scheme may not look very tempting to some at the present time, but with the growth of the boxing game there is no reason why the project should not be a success—at least, it is worth trying.

KONETCHY FOR MERKLE AND WILTSE IS RUMORED TRADE

PITTSBURG, PA., Aug. 16.—Local baseball men gave credence to-day to a tip that Manager McGraw, of the Giants, is dealing with St. Louis for First Baseman Konetchy and has offered First Baseman Merkle and Pitcher Wiltse in exchange. Since the golf squabble in which Merkle was involved along with Mathewson, McGraw and Merkle have not been the best of friends.

INDIANS GET CENTRAL STAR.

TERRE HAUTE, IND., Aug. 16.—Wheeler, of the Terre Haute club, has been ordered by the Cubs to report to the Indianapolis American Association club. This was a great surprise to the fans, who did not know that the Cubs owned him. Wheeler leads the Central League in batting with .342.

Here Is George Harrison, Georgia's Great Infielder, Who Uses His "Bean" in Playing Baseball

Three years of second basing under the tuition of Joe Bean at Marist fitted George to jump right into the spotlight in his freshman year at Georgia and pile himself up a fine little reputation. He will start with flying colors when the season opens next spring.

This looks like pretty severe training for a future pharmacist, but it isn't the only kind Harrison takes. Just now Georgia's star infielder is taking a summer course in physics at the University.

It really doesn't matter how fast the pace is, or whether George Harrison is sliding to second, or dashing in to start a swinging double play—he's always thinking. Joe Bean says he thinks faster and with more effect than any other college player he ever had anything to do with. "His head does more than merely hold his collar on," says Joe. And Joe ought to know something about it.

Looking over the film, it is hard to imagine that George was suspected of having heart trouble a few years ago, when he entered Marist and wanted to play first base, because that job was supposed to be easier than the other stations of the infield. Joe Bean diagnosed George's trouble as rapid growing, and Joe was right about it. As soon as George stopped expanding, his heart settled down to a fine, even gait, and has never missed a tick since. He is now approaching his twentieth year, and is sound in wind, limb and disposition.

'Walsh Now Pitching for Sox' Tickers Don't Flash That Now

ED WALSH is not with the White Sox on their Eastern trip. In all the games Callahan's men play during their stay in the East, the ticker will never flash, 'NINTH INNING: WALSH NOW PITCHING FOR CHICAGO."

The Big Moose, the greatest of iron men, isn't the Walsh of 1912. The averages give him seven won and three lost for a percentage of .700. He has pitched 10 games, with the season half over. If he pitches 10 more during the remainder of 1913 it will be a surprise.

Walsh is worn out. He has the heart and head of last year, but his arm isn't able to perform what he wills. He is just a shadow of his 1912 self, so far as pitching goes.

Too many innings of relief work, too many innings pitched did for his iron arm.

For years he was "THE WHITE SOX," practically all there was to the White Sox, and the only reason anyone went to see the club. Last season, with ordinary backing, he pitched Chicago into fourth place. There were 78 games won by the club. Walsh is credited with 27 of them in his own record. Many more he saved for other twirlers, going in with the Sox ahead and stopping rallies.

Callahan pitched his willing worker 393 innings, or 43 nine-inning games, during the American League season. This shows on the books but there is no record of the innings Walsh warmed up and used up his arm by so doing.

This season Comiskey, the Sox owner, thought Walsh would pitch more than 400 innings. Callahan thought so Wash thought so.

But the Iron Man was through. He had held the White Sox up so long that his arm was weary, even if he didn't know it. His record of 393 innings in the American League season, topped off by his feat of twirling the Sox to victory by pitching 40 innings of the Chicago city series with the Cubs—which he won practically by himself—has taken toll.

Whether Ed Walsh will come back is a thing the future will have to tell. Sometimes they do, but oftener they don't. Rest may bring him back, if Callahan gives it to him. But again it may be that 393 innings of fiercely competitive ball have ruined his arm for good and all and that one of the greatest pitchers the game has known is now a has-been.

Universal Polo at Panama Exposition

Exciting Game To Be Opening Feature of Great Affair—Stand to Seat 18,000.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., Aug. 16.—Universal polo will be the opening feature incident to the department of live stock at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition.

There will be many stables on the site, and the race track infield will afford an ideal location for polo grounds.

Polo enthusiasm is spreading all over the world and it is proposed to have ten or fifteen days of polo, beginning with the opening day of the exposition.

A series of elimination matches will be arranged, and because of climatic advantages a number of the established teams will winter their ponies in California.

There will be a grand stand which will seat 18,000, and its capacity will be taxed during the great tournament, which will be held on the exposition grounds.

The question of cups and prizes is now being considered. If the Hurlingham cup still remains in this country it is possible that the international polo match can be held at San Francisco. That, of course, is a question which can only be decided by time, but in any event representative teams from many countries will be attracted to a universal meet at San Francisco in 1915.

TESREAU HAS BEEN ON SLAB IN MANY GAMES

McGraw Has Sent Jeff to Mound Oftener Than Any Other Member of Giants.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—John McGraw had called on Jeff Tesreau oftener to start battles this year than any other member of the Giants' pitching staff. Up to August 12 the "Little Napoleon" had given the pitching assignment to the big spitballer 28 times. Jeff only went the route on ten occasions, but on many of the times he was dericked he was lifted to allow a pinch hitter to be inserted into the proceedings, and not because he was not performing to the satisfaction of his commander.

• • •

WERE Hugh Chalmers, of Detroit, to offer a car to the National League pitcher who twirled the greatest number of complete games instead to the player who is most valuable to his team, Christy Mathewson undoubtedly would be riding around in a new auto next fall. "Big Six" has opened on the firing line in 22 skirmishes for the Giants this year and has lasted through 17 engagements, which gives him a finishing average of .773. Matty quit twice because he had to, twice because his team had an enormous lead and once because McGraw wished to shove Harry McCormick in as a pinch hitter.

• • •

THE club that has compelled Mathewson to retire under fire is St. Louis, the team that handed him his first beating twelve years ago, when he first became famous. The Cardinals ought to be proud of themselves for their showing against "Big Six" this year. They have received five of the thirteen passes Matty has issued this season, Ed Konetchy and Miller Huggins each obtaining two and Steve Evans one. The eight other National Leaguers who have been honored with complimentaries by Mathewson this season are Viox and Mensor, of Pittsburg; Bates and Groh, of Cincinnati; Zimmerman, of Chicago, and Titus, Rariden and Maranville, of Boston.

MANY CATCHERS GET INJURED BY MIXED SIGNALS

Chief Meyers Nearly Lost a Finger When Christy Mathewson Double-Crossed Him.

By Otto C. Floto.

DENVER, Aug. 16.—Nothing breaks up a battery so fast as double-crossing the catcher. Mind, we do not mean to say this is intentionally done—but through carelessness or through not getting the signal correct, it happens in some of the most important games. And when it does—well, the opposition has the "shade" from that time forth. In Chicago recently, during a conversation between John McGraw and the writer, the Grand Mandarin of the Giants told us of an incident when even the great Mathewson was at fault in this sort of play.

"Meyers is naturally dark," said McGraw. "When he becomes tanned in the summer time he is darker than ever and quite naturally when he places his finger on the palm of the soiled glove it takes quite an eye to distinguish whether he has one or two fingers pointed to the ground. Oftentimes one finger means a straight fast ball and then again it means a curve, and vice versa. Mathewson, in one of the games against St. Louis, got his signals mixed and pitched a curve when Meyers was looking for a straight fast one. The result was that the ball not only got away from the Indian, but came near tearing his finger off. Of course, I immediately took him out of the game, because I knew he would be rattled from that time forth. The next day he was steadied again and the incident forgotten.

• • •

ANOTHER time while with Baltimore, Joe Corbett double-crossed Robinson and lost a game for us. Of course, the double-crossing is unintentional on the part of the pitcher, and it occurs only when the catcher and the pitcher get mixed in the signals and don't ask each other for a repetition of the same. If they did this no error would be made. In the big leagues when this tangle occurs the players think nothing of it. But I have seen in the smaller leagues, when the battery gets mixed the catcher, generally a youngster trying to make his reputation, seems to labor under the impression that the pitcher is 'trying to show him up,' and it often creates hard feelings on a team."

• • •

REFERRING again to the honesty of the game, we need nothing better to point to than the leaders of the National and American Leagues. Both the Giants and the Athletics have spoiled the race. They are so far ahead of all the other clubs that even at this early day of August 4 interest is eliminated. It means several hundred thousand dollars to the club owners to have a condition of this sort exist. Yet they would rather have it this way and lose thousands of dollars than "frame" and kill the sport.

What if Boston and the Athletics in the American League were neck-and-neck and battling for every game—well, the grounds in either city would not be large enough to hold the crowds. In the National League, what if New York and Chicago were abreast—it would simply mean all records for attendance would be shattered.

So you see the playing is absolutely on its merits and when a team wins or loses everything connected with it is on the level. That's why baseball will ever remain the most popular of outdoor sports. The finger of suspicion is never pointed at any act on the ball field.

Meddling Has Ruined Red Sox Stallings Is Popular in Boston

By W. J. McBeth.

THERE is little comfort in a reputation to the fellow who has lost his punch. This ring chatter applies directly to baseball. A pugilist may get away by sidestepping action, but organized baseball requires 154 tilts every year.

The Boston Red Sox furnishes a very fine object lesson for the point in question. One year ago the staid old "Hub" was wild with enthusiasm over its pets of a generation. To dispute that the "Speed Boys" boasted the classiest aggregation in modern times was the shortest route to suicide. To-day, though a world's championship has been added to the achievements of the Back Bay athletes, the pennant winners are the scorn of the City of Culture.

The answer lies for the most part in four agate lines—which represent the difference between first and fifth places in the American League standings. Boston's National League team, which saw many lean and hungry years, while its rival lived upon the fat of the land, has usurped the popularity of its fading contemporary. The Red Sox in their company have shown the better percentage of victories. But still their work has slopped off so badly from what was expected of the holders of baseball's highest honors that in comparison to the improvement made by the Braves the Red Sox appear in the light of the vertest "bush" class.

Boston, like every other town, has little use for a team that has hit the chutes, while always ready to extend a hand of encouragement to a club that stems on the upward trend.

• • •

IN gaining a few rounds on the ladder from the cellar George Stallings' Braves have accomplished a task that well might be considered more wonderful than cinching a second American League pennant with the champions. Baseball fandom is clever enough to appreciate the point and pay tribute where tribute is due. But the Boston situation of the American League furnishes a moral which many of our meddling promoters might well take to heart. One thing is to leave good enough alone; another that it is far easier to destroy a finely attuned mechanism than to overhaul and rebuilt it.

• • •

EVERYBODY said a year ago that the Boston Red Sox were the luckiest world's champions known to history. Perhaps they were, but they certainly had some class to get in the finals. Moreover, they went through a long campaign without dropping more than two games in a row till the pennant was cinched. The club looked anything but impressive in the world's series. But was it altogether the fault of the club?

I honestly believe, in the light of later developments, that if the real inside truth were known President James McAleer had a lot to do both with the poor showing of that team against the Giants and in the 1913 race so far this season. Jake Stahl, deposed from the management in mid-season, may have been left unhampered this season as McAleer insinuated, but he certainly did not have a free hand against the Giants last fall. He was girt about by a so-called bond of strategy. These many cooks came very near to scorching the broth.

While the Red Sox were setting themselves, Jake Stahl and, incidentally, McAleer on the high pedestal where the bump incident to this year's fall should be all the more pronounced, somebody put a stick of dynamite under the foundation. In the height of battle a serious row cropped out among certain players. As is usually the case, factions resulted. The unity of the team was undermined. The big explosion followed the poor start of 1913 consequent to wholesome injuries and sickness.

McAleer may not have directly interfered with Stahl. Yet the inference is there pretty strong. Jimmy looked like an ideal president when everything was of rosy hue. But once a manager always a manager. We see that in the attitudes of some of our renowned scouts. The cunning hand of McAleer might be traced in the present dilemma of his noble country.

AT least McAleer, or his associates in the business administration of the club, deserve little sympathy for the cold desertion of Hub fandom. They brought it upon themselves by a cold throw down of their most loyal supporters. The band of "Royal Rooters" which had accompanied the team to and fro between New York and Boston were not provided with seats for the seventh game. The business management was unable to explain satisfactorily this shameful oversight; naturally the rooters took it as an insult, believing they had been "given the works" simply through avarice of the management.

"It is the last game and they think standing room good enough for us" was the universal sentiment. The rooters put a boycott on the eighth and deciding game. Also they gathered round the offices at the close of the contest when they were slighted to put the curse on Fenway Park, Red Sox and all connected with them. By the looks of things it was some curse.

Tire Prices Down

How We Did It Without Skimping On the Costliest Tire That's Built

Here are a few amazing facts which every tire user should know.

Goodyear No-Rim-Cut tires used to cost one-fifth more than other standard tires. And yet they gained the topmost place in Tiredom.

Three things caused this extra price.

In the base of each tire we vulcanize six flat bands of 126 braided wires. It is thus that we make a hookless tire—a tire that can't be rim-cut.

Then every No-Rim-Cut gets the "On-Air Cure." It is final-vulcanized on air bags. This is done to save blow-outs. It adds to our tire cost $1,500 per day.

Then we use in each tread base a patent "rivet" fabric. We paid $50,000 for this feature to prevent tread separation.

Not one of these costly features are used in any other make of tire.

We have clung to small capitalization. On this account we can and do keep our profits under 8½ per cent.

All these savings, as fast as we made them, went to users of our tires.

Note What Our Price Includes

Rival makers must in some way meet the Goodyear price. But please consider what our price includes.

A tire that never rim-cuts.

A tire built to save blow-outs, in a way so costly that no one else employs it.

A tire built in our patent way to prevent tread separation. And built in every other way for longest mileage, regardless of the cost.

Now No Extra Price

Now these same tires, with all of these features, cost you no extra price. Not a standard tire of any type costs you any less.

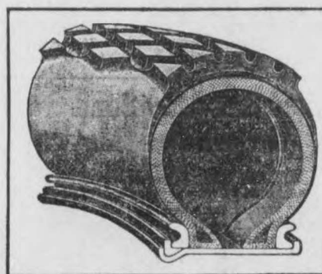
And these are the reasons:

Our overhead cost, in days of small output, ran as high as thirty per cent.

It is now less than six per cent. Our multiplied output, in this one way, has cut our tire cost twenty-four per cent.

We have built new factories with modern equipment, with every new invention in labor-saving machinery.

That's Why They Outsell



Hundreds of thousands now use these tires. They far outsell any other. Yet the demand from users is now growing faster than ever before in our history.

That's for the reasons told you.

Rim-Cutting alone, with old-type tires, ruins 31.8 per cent — almost one tire in three. Blow-outs and loose treads, which our methods combat, are immensely costly items.

You should get these savings—get them all—when you pay the Goodyear price.

Our dealers are everywhere.

SULLIVAN TELLS WHY A.A.U. PUTS BAN ON WOMEN

Athletic Body Objects to Mixed Competitions in Order to Preserve Dignity of Women.

By James E. Sullivan.
Secretary-Treasurer of the A. A. U. and "Father of Amateur Athletics."

(Mr. Sullivan submitted the following interesting article to The American just before he sailed for Germany last Tuesday. Mr. Sullivan will attend the first convention of the International Athletic Federation at Berlin on August 20-21 as the representative of the United States.)

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Should women be allowed by the Amateur Athletic Union in open competition against men? is a question attracting a lot of attention in the world of sport at present. From the woman's side of the question the opinion is voiced that to be in keeping with the great strides of women's emancipation the women should be allowed to compete on the same footing as men, especially in aquatic sports and other competitions.

Unfortunately, perhaps, for the feelings of the gay and thoughtless, the A. A. U. looks at the matter from an entirely different angle, and it is as well that the public should know right now that the A. A. U. national body will never permit mixed competitions between men and women in any of the sports it happens to govern.

I may say that this is no mere personal statement. It is the unanimous policy of the national body. I have frequently been criticised on account of my alleged opposition to mixed competition in swimming races, and am sorry to have aroused the ire of the progressive element among the women and the suffragists.

I happen to be secretary-treasurer of the A. A. U., and would remind my critics that the man in such an office is always intrusted with the job of making public the feelings of the governing body; and its domain extends from the Atlantic Ocean to the Pacific and from Florida to the North Pole.

Against Mixed Competition.

More than once the question of allowing women to register has been discussed, and to the present it has been turned down every time without a dissenting voice. So far as I can see now nothing short of a miracle will ever change the views of the A. A. U. men on the subject of mixed competition.

Of course, a great many will want to know the reason for this stand of the A. A. U. in keeping out the women. There are two reasons. One is to try and preserve the dignity of the American girl and the woman, and the other is to keep amateur sport clear of the demimonde. If we are in the business of developing champion athletes to uphold the American flag in international competition we surely ought to be pardoned for being conservative about our women.

While those old-fashioned men of the A. A. U. like to see the American woman healthy, and in the full enjoyment of sports and pastimes suitable to her sex, they do not want to see a feminine race of Amazons devoid of home ties, and the qualities that create the respect and admiration of men.

The A. A. U. is guided by experiences of the past. Years ago when the long distance walking craze struck New York a great number of women were seized with the fad, especially as it was found to be good for their health and complexions. Numbers of women's walking clubs sprung up, and it was a great thing to see bunches of women hiking along the highways at a brisk clip and at all hours.

Bicycle Craze Expires.

The bicycle craze of a few years ago furnished another illustration of the unsavory element in sport, and they spoiled one of the finest recreations of modern times. At first myriads of decent women enjoyed it until the questionable element swarmed over the roads and drives devoted to cycling. Again the decent women were forced to quit, and with them went their companions—husbands, fathers and brothers.

Now suppose that to-morrow the A. A. U. was to throw down the bars and allow women to register, and that they would have liberty to compete in the track and field games, the swimming, the gymnastics and the tumbling. What would be the consequence? For a while there might be nothing but decent girls among the boys in the swimming tanks and the pools, but after a spell the other element would appear.

What a nice position the decent young girls would find themselves in then, and what a tirade of criticism the A. A. U. would bring forth from the clergy, and from the men and women of the uplift! I wonder if those who are so willing to comment unfavorably on the A. A. U.'s rejection of mixed competition ever looked at the probable situation in this light.

Although the A. A. U. does not countenance mixed competition, its governing members are willing to advocate that women and girls engage in swimming races among themselves. If those among the women who are so anxious for speed conditions can form themselves into an association, then the sport can be made even more popular than if the women were allowed into the A. A. U.

GOOD STILL A MEMBER OF CUBS, SAYS JOHNNY EVERS

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—Wilbur Good, the Cub outfielder, is still a member of the West Side club. At least, Manager Evers said so just before the Cubs started for the East. John was greatly surprised when he saw in local papers that Good had been released to Indianapolis. Evers says that there is no chance of Good leaving the Cubs, as he figures that the pinch hitter is fast developing into one of the best outfielders in the business. The Cub manager further stated that if waivers had been asked on Good it was done without his knowledge. Good accompanied the team to Boston.

Giants Again Must Oppose "$100,000 Infield" in World's Series

Athletics' Inner Defense Hailed as Greatest in Baseball History

This is the "$100,000 infield" of the Athletics the Giants must again face in the coming world's series—if the local champions repeat their pennant triumph in the National League and the Athletics recapture the American League flag, which is almost a certainty now. From left to right: Baker, third base; Barry, shortstop; McInnis, first base. Below, Eddie Collins, second base.

Fans Await World-Series Clash

Former Rivals May Meet Again

By Monty.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—In view of the fact that the Giants and Athletics are conceded almost universally now as certain to meet in the next world's series, fans are beginning to turn their attention to the question of how the two teams compare with each other. Though nearly two months remain before the clash for the world's championship gets under way, it is the main subject in the minds of the real followers of the game, now that the pennant races have ceased to absorb more than a superficial amount of interest.

The series this year has an extra element of attraction in that old rivals are meeting again, aggregations that met only two years ago. Enough of the 1911 players still remain to make the tilt practically a renewal of the same duel.

* * *

THE majority of baseball men in the country seem to think that the Athletics are the strongest team in the game. There is one sound way of reasoning this out. At the end of last season the Quakers were playing a much better grade of ball than the Red Sox, who won the pennant and whose performance was good enough to beat the Giants. This would prove almost a final argument if the present Giants and present Athletics were identical with the Giants and Athletics of last fall, but they, of course, are not.

The main basis for the superior appraisal of the Philadelphians by the fans, however, is simply that they seem a stronger team, one with greater ability, without bothering to delve into the dope for any more specific reasons. This system, though, is like betting on a race horse because of a "hunch." It is going in blindly. Baseball is a game of such distinct departments of play that they all must be considered separately with one phase of this team compared to the opposite department of the other. For instance, the estimate of the Athletics' batting in the series must be formed at the same time that the Giants' pitching is considered, and vice versa.

* * *

IF such things as base running and fielding were eliminated, the problem would be, "Will the Giants hit the Athletic pitchers harder and more timely than the Athletics hit the Giant pitchers?" Many seem to believe they will not, but this remains to be seen. Both aggregations possess tremendous batting power, with all hands in shape, and both have pitching staffs that can not be called other than great.

In the matter of one team's batting opposed to the other's pitching, a reminiscent light is thrown toward that old foolish puzzle of an irresistible body meeting an immovable one. Nobody can predict with any degree of confidence whether these games will produce the highest scoring on record for a world's series or the lowest. A complete triumph for batting would result in the former and the same for pitching would bring the latter. Or—which is more likely—it may produce about an even break with scores of average size.

* * *

JUST now an attempt might be made to decide the way this unique combat of departments will turn out, but it would be the old blind guess again to a large extent, for many changes may occur in the outlook between now and October. For instance, Jack Coombs may show himself to be back in form and the same old Quaker artist of the mound, or it may turn out that his sickness and consequent long lay-off have impaired his efficiency badly. Mathewson may be lost to the Giants through injury. Home Run Frank Baker may sprain his ankle and Larry Doyle may or may not recover his batting eye. Any one of these things could have a telling effect. Therefore, it is wise to lay low and wait until October before making any bold predictions.

Tommy Leach in Same Class as Wagner, Lajoie and Mathewson

A good bit has been spoken and written about the wonderful way Wagner, Lajoie and others are hanging on, despite their duration of service. But in this respect we know of no one who can push through and edge by Tommy Leach. Tommy has been reported all in for several seasons, and yet to-day he is still playing fine ball in every department with his old speed intact. They crowded him away from third, where he ruled for over twelve years, and now he is starring at another job on a par with almost any in the game. In the salvos of applause that are scattered about, Leach deserves enough to rock the stands.

MORAN GETS BOUT WITH PALZER IN NEW YORK RING

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—That Jimmy Johnston, the new manager of the St. Nicholas A. C., only intends to provide top notch cards for his patrons is inferred by the matches he has already arranged. Johnston realizes that it is only from the high class bouts he can hope to make any money, and he only intends to run shows when he has such to offer.

The bouts already arranged by Johnston for the near future look to be about the best obtainable. On September 10 Jack Britton, the unusually clever Chicagoan, will hook up with Young Shugrue, the aggressive boy from Jersey City. They'll clash at 133 pounds, weigh in at 10 o'clock on the night of the bout.

Another card clinched will bring together Al Palzer, the tenacious Iowan, and Frank Moran, the Pittsburger, who made such a great battle against long odds when he met the late Luther McCarty in this city. Moran and Palzer will clash either on August 20 or 27, the date to be selected later by Dan McKetrick and Tom O'Rourke, the respective managers of the two heavyweights.

Red Sox May Send Yerkes to Athletics

BOSTON, Aug. 16.—Steve Yerkes, who for the last few years has been the star second baseman of the world's champion Boston Red Sox, will probably wear an Athletic uniform in the near future, as waivers have been asked on him.

Connie Mack refused to waive claim on the former brilliant second baseman, and the chances are that he will be sent to Philadelphia in the near future.

Yerkes first learned to play baseball on the lots at Millville, N. J., and reached the height of his baseball career in the world's series with the New York Giants when he played an important part in the notable victories of the Boston Red Sox.

He proved far superior to Doyle, the Giants' second baseman, in that series, hitting the ball hard and timely and fielding in sensational style.

WOLVERINES PICK LUNDGREN.

ANN ARBOR, MICH., Aug. 16.—Carl L. Lundgren, former twirler on the Chicago team and once a University of Illinois star, has been chosen as coach of the Michigan baseball team to succeed Branch Rickey, who recently resigned. Lundgren pitched four years at Illinois and then joined the Chicago club in 1902, where he remained seven years, being a member of two world's championship nines.

20,000 Boy Athletes In Playground Meet

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—The most elaborate playground field day ever held in New York city will take place at Empire City Park, Yonkers, N. Y., on August 20. The meet is made possible by the courtesy of the officials of the Greater New York Fair and Exposition and the sanction of the A. A. U., and will be under the direction of the Bureau of Recreation, Department of Parks.

Twenty thousand boys are now in training for the fifteen events to be contested at their first interpark-playground athletic championship of Greater New York.

This invitation meet is the greatest incentive offered the boys to join the athletic clubs at the park playgrounds. No expense of any kind will be incurred; even transportation will be afforded the boys.

SOUTHERN BOY IS AFTER MATCH WITH KILBANE

CLEVELAND, Aug. 16.—George Chaney, featherweight champion of the South, may yet have a fling at Johnny Kilbane. Chaney claims 100 victories. He has beaten Al Delmont, George Kirkwood and Ty Cobb and has stopped Phil McGovern.

When one stops to consider, there is hardly a featherweight in the game who could give Kilbane a battle, unless it be Kid Julian. But there are a few comers, among them Matty McCue, of Racine, whose loss to Patsy Brannigan will not put him out of his stride.

Ritchie Open to Harsh Criticism

Willie Ignores Murphy and Ad

By W. W. Naughton.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 16.—Every once in a while the thoughtful critic informs us that boxing is in a chaotic condition.

It occurs to the writer that remarks of that character would be particularly apropos just now. As I understand it, chaos reigns when you can not figure out just what is going to happen, and it seems to me that to attempt to peer into the pugilistic future at this juncture would be to invite vertigo, or at any rate headache.

In some of the weight classes there is actual stagnation, while in others confusion reigns. True, Willie Ritchie, who won the lightweight title through a foul, and Arthur Pelky, who became white heavyweight champion through a fatality are going to risk their laurels in September, but it is doubtful if either of the events referred to rises to the dignity of a championship battle in the eyes of the American sporting public.

Of course, if one argues by the book—and in cases of this kind the record book should be the basis of all discussion—Freddie Welsh has every right to aspire to a crack at the championship. He is England's premier lightweight and he won from Ritchie once before.

Murphy Entitled to Chance.

But Freddie has been a long time in the lists and in this country there are other lads who are thought to have a better claim to the consideration. Tommy Murphy, the Harlem spitfire, for instance, is looked upon as Ritchie's logical opponent, and the coast sports fondly hoped to see Ritchie and Murphy signed for a clash on Labor Day.

On the plea that better inducements were forthcoming, Ritchie has decided to take his dolls to Vancouver, B. C., on September 1 and tackle Welsh in a 20-round contest.

In the consciousness that he is doing exactly what is sportsmanlike and fair, Ritchie seems to defy criticism. But, like all champions before him, he has enemies and detractors. He is sure to be dealt harshly with by these, and unless I miss my guess his motives also will be questioned by numbers of fight fans who view these matters dispassionately.

Willie Also Ignores Ad.

Coming right at this time, some of these things told by Billy Nolan after he ceased to manage Ritchie will carry weight. Nolan said that before Ritchie returned to the ring he planned to meet just three men, to-wit: Rivers, Freddie Welsh and Leach Cross. Ritchie by his actions is bearing out Nolan's words, but public opinion can whip any champion into line, and Ritchie will have a hard time trying to withstand the lances of criticism that will be leveled at him if he refuses to recognize the claims of Tommy Murphy and Ad Wolgast later along.

Of course, if Ritchie is defeated by Freddie Welsh, he would be allowed to go on his way in peace, but somehow the far Western sports appear to think that a contingency of that kind is not on the cards.

Pelky vs. Miller.

Late in September Arthur Pelky and Big Charlie Miller are to box in Los Angeles. As Pelky under existing heavyweight conditions has the best right to call himself white heavyweight champion, the match will of necessity be for the championship But why could not Pelky be signed with some hope who is better known to fame.

If there is such a thing as pugilistic code, Miller is the last man in the world who should have been selected as a champion candidate. At the same time, if Arthur has picked Miller in the belief that a man with such a meager record must necessarily be easy, he will find himself mistaken. Miller is a man of much displacement and he is as strong as an elephant and can sop up punishment as a sponge absorbs water.

And if Miller should win—well, chaos would not begin to describe the situation.

In the smaller classes of pugilism there is a marked degree of inaction.

Whenever any violent action talk is indulged in in Bantam Champion Johny Coulon's presence, the news goes out that Johny is the next thing to a confirmed invalid and that his doctor has warned him to avoid anything calculated to excite him.

It would seem that the only way to keep Johny Coulon in good humor would be to crown him perpetual king of the knights and make it a felony to challenge him. It may be that this is of course sarcasm, but in view of the many times Johnny's small ailments have prevented him defending his title, I think it warranted.

No Welters in Sight.

Welterweights there appear to be none. Mike Gibbons and Jimmy Clabby, who could fill welter requirements, are eager to be known as middleweights.

For some time the middleweight division has been all head and points, but now that there has been an infusion of new blood, the spirit of rivalry and competition may be revived.

Maybe Frank Klaus will stay away from Paris long enough to take a hand in clearing up the championship question, provided he can make the weight.

Let us hope that in some of the classes events will so shape themselves that here will soon be a deciding match in prospect—one that will have the earmarks of a genuine world's championship and appeal to the sports generally as such.

NEW WHITE HOPE SOUGHT AMONG BRITISH HEAVIES

Failure of Wells Has Brought About a Change, and Dick Smith Is New Entrant.

By T. S. Andrews.

MILWAUKEE, Aug. 16.—Since the defeat of Bombardier Wells, the heavyweight champion of Great Britain, by Gunboat Smith in New York, the Britishers have been casting about for another "white hope," one who will be able to "stand the gaff" and weather the storm when it comes to body punishment; and from information at hand they have unearthed another "hope" in the person of Dick Smith, the amateur champion of England.

Dick has decided to throw in his lot with the professionals. Born 27 years ago, Smith possesses all the necessary qualifications for a "white hope," and may go further than some of the blasted hopes. He stands 6 feet 1 1-2 inches, weighs about 190 pounds, and has a very satisfactory record. Of his 49 contests he has won 45, lost 3 and drawn 1.

Formerly a soldier, he followed Bombardier Wells as champion of India. As an amateur boxer he has done remarkably well, having won the championship of Great Britain in 1911-12-13, while a member of the London police force.

Will Not Tackle Wells First.

He probably will not take on Bombardier Wells and Georges Carpentier for his intial efforts as a professional, but one of the lesser lights. Professional and amateur boxing are vastly different things on the other side of the Atlantic, as many amateurs have found on taking the plunge into the professional waters.

The referees view things from an entirely different standpoint, and a 20-round contest with three-minute rounds under professional rules takes a bit of negotiating. Under amateur laws boxing contests are not allowed of longer duration than six rounds of two minutes each, but for the championships and most interclub competitions, the bouts are limited to three rounds.

Amateur Referees Strict.

Amateur referees are very strict in upholding the rules of the game, and some of their antics would not be tolerated by professionals for one minute. Clinching is barred and a boxer is liable to be disqualified for a second offense after having been once cautioned. Then, again, amateurs are forbidden to receive any advice during the progress of a bout, and any instructions that the second may have for his boy has to wait until the round ends. Under amateur rules boxing is kept very clean, which is more than can be said for professions.

Therefore the entry of Dick Smith (namesake of Gunboat) will be watched with interest, even by followers on this side of the big pond.

JOHNSON HELPS SICK YOUTH.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 16.—A baseball and an autograph letter from Walter Johnson, Washington's premier pitcher, did more than medicine could do to bring about the rapid convalescence of Warren A. Slee, a youthful admirer of the big ball tosser. Johnson, whose numerous admirers include scores of youthful fans who idolize the pitcher, heard of the serious illness of the boy and wrote to him, sending a baseball he had used in pitching the Washington team to victory. The boy's recovery since receiving the letter has progressed rapidly.

RED SOX GET OUTFIELDER.

BOSTON, MASS., Aug. 16.—The Boston American League team announced yesterday the purchase of Outfielder Walsh from the Worcester team of the New England League.

WAR DECLARED BY P. A. A. OVER 1915 FAIR PLUM

James E. Sullivan's Reported Action in Naming T. S. Mulvey as Aide Causes Strife.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., Aug. 11. There is a flurry among the officials of the Pacific Athletic Association and in amateur athletic circles generally over the allegation that James E. Sullivan, director general of the amateur games to be held here during the Panama-Pacific Exposition, has appointed Thomas S. Mulvey, the well-known San Francisco clubman, his principal aide in connection with the handling of the exposition sports.

A few days ago Mulvey received a telegram from Sullivan, who was then on the point of departure to Berlin to attend a conference of the Olympiad committee.

In his telegram Sullivan said he would be back in New York early in September, and that it would be necessary for Mulvey to come to New York at that time to aid in interesting the athletic fraternities there in the games to be held in this city in 1915.

Elliott Issues Statement.

While the telegram intimated that Mulvey was appointed the head of the San Francisco committee on games, no reference was made to any other appointments of local men in the same connection.

The Pacific Association of the Amateur Athletic Association took umbrage at this indication of Mulvey's appointment, and John Elliott, president of the association, issued a statement yesterday in which he said that the selection of Mulvey to the post did not meet with the sanction of the association.

Elliott pointed out that the Pacific Association had given valuable assistance to the exposition officials in securing sanctions for American championships to be held here in 1915. He declared that Mulvey had no knowledge of or affiliation with amateur sports, and intimated that Mulvey's appointment would cause the association to refrain from using its endeavors toward making the 1915 games the success they should be.

Mulvey Has No News.

While Elliott did not say so, it is evident that he and his associates expected Sullivan to depend upon the local athletic body for whatever assistance he required.

The Panama Exposition officials stated emphatically that no appointment such as the Pacific Association complained of had been made, nor had any such appointment been authorized by the exposition directorate, which, of course, is the last word in all matters of this kind.

Under these circumstances it is believed that the Pacific Association will take no precipitate action until a clearer understanding is had as to just what honor Sullivan intended to confer upon Mulvey. As Sullivan is on the high seas, it would be some little time before he could be heard from.

Mulvey said yesterday that he had no news regarding his appointment other than was conveyed in the Sullivan telegram. He said he intended going East, but will wait to hear further before making the trip.

M'FARLAND IS GETTING READY FOR BUSY CAMPAIGN

CHICAGO, ILL., Aug. 16.—Packey McFarland is getting himself ready for the ring again. While no matches have been closed as yet by Manager Thiry, the latter is negotiating with Milwaukee, Kenosha and several Eastern clubs. Once Packey is back in action his matches will come fast, his style and rep being favored all over. Jimmy Coffroth would like McFarland out West with Tommy Murphy.

HOME RUN GAVE H. WAGNER REAL START IN GAME

Big Dutchman Has the Most Interesting Career of All the Baseball Stars.

HANS WAGNER, the hero of all baseball heroes, has had an interesting career. Wagner, the big German, was born in what is now Carnegie, Pa., on February 27, 1874. His father, who is still living, was a coal miner in those days, and he decided that John P. should help him in his work. So Honus was packed off to the mines to help dad every day. Hans was not lazy, but he didn't like the black darkness of the earth's interior, and many a warning he received for playing hookey from the bituminous section and scampering off for a game of baseball with other kids of the neighborhood.

A correspondent recently approached the big fellow and asked him to tell how he came to break into baseball. Honus pondered a moment, and then spun the following yarn about his early experience:

* * *

"I BROKE into baseball by posing as my brother Al. We were playing ball around home. Al received an offer from Canton, Ohio, before he was offered a place with the Mansfield, Ohio, club, in the same league. The day he got the second offer he turned to me and told me to go to Mansfield. I got there early in the afternoon, and a man named Taylor recognized me. He had seen me play. The club was hard put for a third baseman, however, and Taylor decided to take a chance with me.

"It so happened that Mansfield played Canton that day. My brother was in the line-up of the Canton team, and the pitcher, 'Toots' Barret, was also from Carnegie, or Mansfield, as it was called in those days. They regarded me as pretty much of a kid, and when Canton got away to a good lead early in the game Barret let up in his pitching when I went to bat. He want to see me make good and figured that a couple of hits more or less would not affect his rating any. I made a couple of hits in this way, and then came the ninth inning. Never will I forget it. Mansfield was three runs to the bad when we went to bat. They needed four to win. We filled the bases and it was my turn to bat.

* * *

"TAYLOR was not wise to the fact that Barrett had been easing up when I had been at bat before and made a couple of hits, or he might have sent in a pinch hitter. He let me stick. With the bases full, Barrett meant to strike me out. It was too ticklish a time for monkey business. He shoved across a fast one and I knocked it over the fence for a home run and won the game. It was just a case of the luck of things. That's always the way. If the pitcher is lucky he gets you. If you're lucky you get him."

Wagner then explained that he went to Adrian, Mich., where the club was owned by a son of the Taylor who ran the Mansfield (Ohio) club. He went there as infielder and captain. Honus got homesick after a few months and quit the club, going to Warren in the Iron and Oil League. Toward the close of the season he joined the Steubenville club of the Interstate League. That was in 1895.

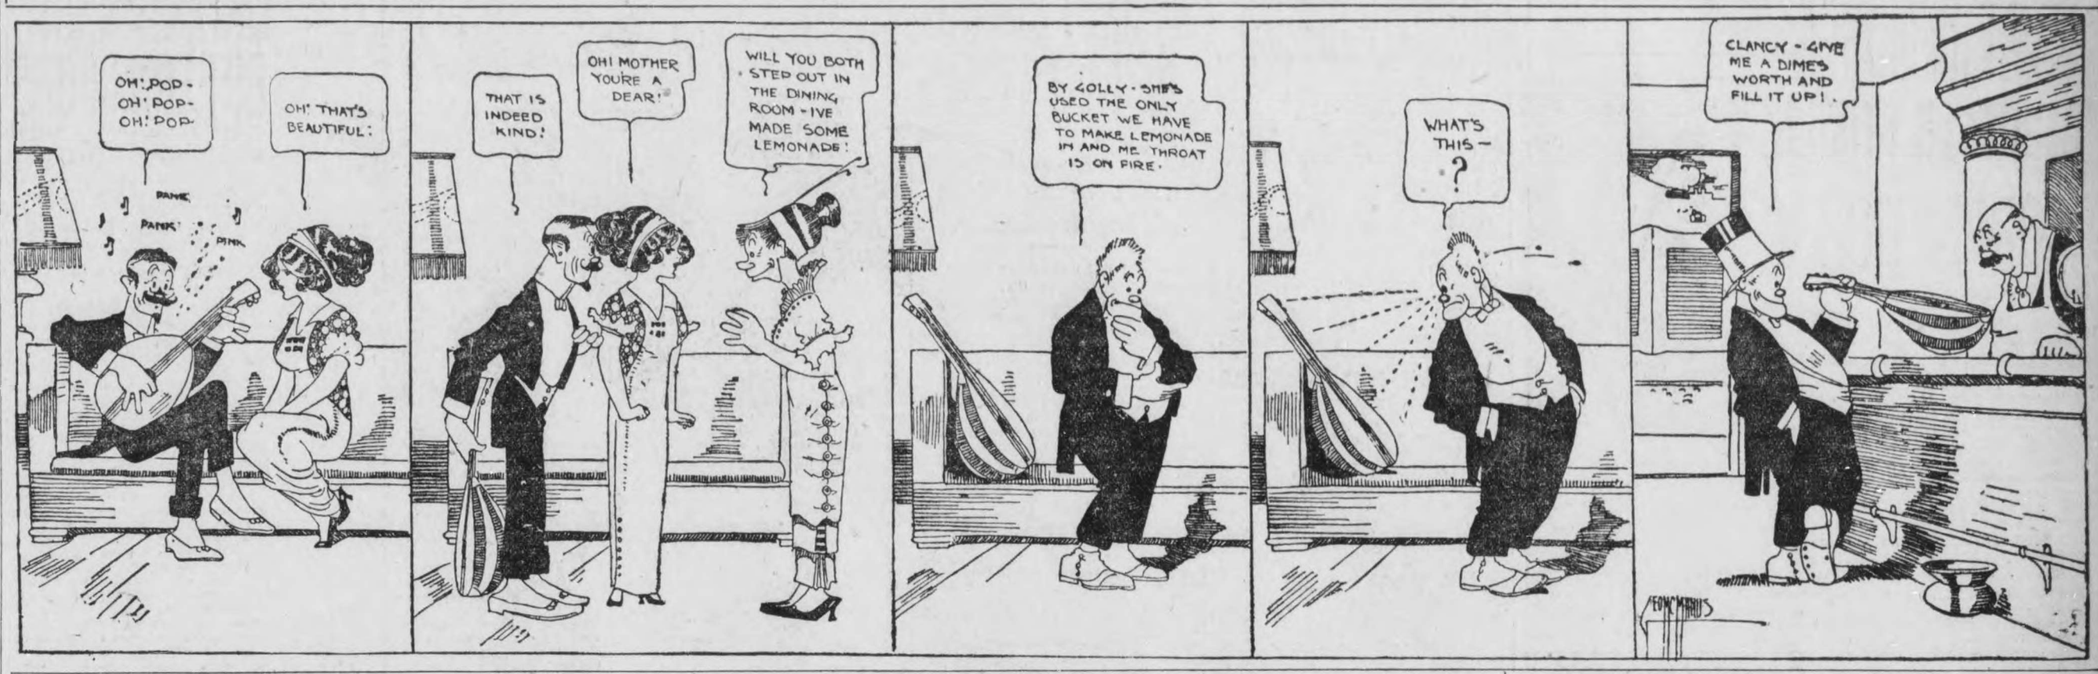
* * *

"I WENT there as a sort of all-around player," said Wagner. "I pitched for a while. I was so wild that I used to walk half the batters and strike out the other half. I had terrific speed and it was hard to get a catcher who could hold me. They borrowed Pete Lavelle from the Pittsburg Nationals to catch me in a couple of games, thinking it would steady me. As a pitcher I was a failure. However, while in the games as a twirler I banged a couple of hits over the fence and they made me an outfielder, putting me in the middle garden.

"The following spring the Pittsburg club signed me, and W. W. Kerr, who then owned the Pirates, wanted to farm me out to Kansas City, but I insisted that it was too far from home, so he sent me to Paterson, N. J., in the Atlantic League. I played with Paterson all of that year and until June 29, 1897, when the Louisville club, then owned by Barney Dreyfuss, my present employer, bought my release. The Colonels were managed by Fred Clarke, and the secretary of the club was the late Harry C. Pulliam, later secretary of the Pirates, and still later president of the National League. Harry was one of the best friends I ever had."

NAPS ARE AFTER THREE PLAYERS FROM MUD HENS

TOLEDO, OHIO, Aug. 16.—Vice President Barnard, of the Naps, came to Toledo yesterday to look over possible purchases for the Naps. It is thought that Pitcher Lefty James, Shortstop Brady and First Baseman Bluhm may be sold to the Cleveland club.



James may be the only player to report to the Naps before the A. A. season closes. In return for him the Hens expect a good southpaw from the Naps. Toledo will recall Pitchers Leak and Myers from Charleston, W. Va.; Pitcher Williams and Catcher Brady from Waterbury.

Nash, who has been playing a whirlwind game at short for the latter club, and is hitting at a .360 clip, and on whom Toledo has a string, will quit baseball at the close of the season to go into politics. He is now running for Assemblyman in his home town.

CUBS NOT AFTER DENVER MEN.

CHICAGO, ILL., Aug. 16.—Officials of the Chicago Nationals denied today that the visit of President McGill and Manager Hendricks, of the Denver Western League club, here was made in connection with a deal for players. The Denver men, according to President O'Neill, of the Western League, came to discuss general matters and the annual draft, which takes place this month.

PUNCH COUNTS IN THE VARIOUS LINES OF SPORT

McLoughlin Possesses Punch in Tennis; So Have American Poloists and Boxers.

By W. W. Naughton.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 16.—A magazine man of my acquaintance told me that one of his short stories was returned to him with the criticism that it lacked "the punch."

This goes to show that "the punch" counts in fiction as well as in real life.

An Englishman wrote to one of the London papers the other day, complaining that Maurice E. McLoughlin had introduced the punch into lawn tennis. The smashing service which McLoughlin has perfected was characterized as a trick, but a legitimate trick at that.

The Englishman referred to said that if methods like McLoughlin's are countenanced "lawn tennis is within measurable distance of death."

It was the plaint of a man who is used to old ideals. He has watched the rhythmic, lobbing game for years, and got it into his blood that that is the only way to play tennis.

But perhaps the outlook is not as gloomy as he pictures it. His countrymen may adopt McLoughlin's trick and try to improve on it.

Even lawn tennis must change in character when the punch comes along.

* * *

ANOTHER Englishman discusses a form of sport into which the punch enters with broader view. He wrote to The Times asking how it is that English boxers are more easily knocked out than American ringmen.

Then he attempts to furnish the explanation. Beginning with the question of physique, he satisfies himself that while Americans are slightly sturdier than latter-day Britons, the answer is not found in that. He believes that it all rests in what he considers a false conception of the manner in which pugilists should be schooled.

English lads, he says, are required to conform to old standards of boxing. It would be quite different, he thinks, if academic notions were sacrificed to personal initiative, for, while learning to "bear on the 'one, two, three" principle, a British student loses his punch and never recovers it.

* * *

In America, he says, it is different. It is by setting in his own particular fashion with various kinds of opponents, rather than by following the rules laid down in some pugilistic primer, that a young American develops an effective individual style; that with those who learn boxing naturally—that is from experience—the acquisition of the punch is not only the first consideration, but a matter that takes care of itself as the student's knowledge widens.

This Englishman, it is noticed, does not take the stand that because English pugilists are deficient in smiting force boxing "is within measurable distance of death."

He says frankly that English methods are wrong and intimates that there would be wisdom in taking a leaf out of America's book.

* * *

THE punch was in evidence again when the American polo players took the Britishers by storm at Meadowbrook recently. The judgment of the expert was that the visiting Britishers comprised the flower of the polo world. They brought their own ponies with them, and their seeming superiority influenced the betting market to the extent that they were made odds-on favorites.

From all accounts the Americans went at them like Japanese at a Russian fort. The visitors were just loaded to the Plimsoll mark with knowledge of "how to play polo," but the punch upset them. All the King's horses and all the King's men could not withstand the onslaught of the Americans and the cup remained on this side.

Maiden Turned in Great Card Didn't Make a Single "Five"

By Tich Tichenor.

WHEN H. H. Barker did a 69 over the course of the Atlanta Athletic Club in the open tournament held in December, 1910, it was the opinion of all of the professionals who were present that he had set a record which would stand for some years. In this opinion they have thus far been correct. Yet on two different occasions Stewart Maiden, the local professional, has had a chance to break it if he could have holed out in one put on the eighteenth green, while at another time he reached the last green on his sixty-sixth shot. He tried to hole the put for a 67 and ran past the hole and then missed a comparatively easy one for the record.

In one of his rounds which tied the record Maiden performed the feat which might be equaled but which can not be excelled when he went around without a five upon his card. If you are familiar with the East Lake course the more you think of this performance the more wonderful it becomes.

On the outward journey there are the second, the seventh and eighth holes, which are all par fives, while it is easy enough to take a five at either the fourth or ninth, both of which are bogey five. In coming home there are the twelfth, sixteenth and eighteenth, which are par fives, while the fifteenth and seventeenth are hard fours. Yet not a five did he have at any of these holes. At every hole he took a four except at the fifth, fourteenth and fifteenth where he secured threes. Just think of it, fifteen fours and three threes and neither of the threes gotten at the first or third holes, where he would be expected to get a three.

I don't know how this score will appeal to others, but the more I play around East Lake and labor to keep out the sixes and sevens, the more remarkable this score becomes. To be perfectly frank, I do not recall but one round I have ever played around this course in which my card did not register at least one six. George Adair has had the same experience, except he has two such rounds to his credit.

* * *

DURING the early part of June Maiden took a trip to his home in Scotland and while on this visit entered the British open championship. In this event there were 270 entries. These were divided into squads of 90 players each, who played a 36-hole medal play qualifying round, and the lowest twenty in each squad qualified for the championship, which was 72 holes of medal play.

Maiden landed on Tuesday and had only one day to learn the course and to become accustomed to the vast difference in the greens from those he has played upon since he has been in Atlanta, as he was drawn among the players who had to play on Thursday. In this qualifying round he failed to get in by two strokes which he says was due entirely to his putting, which was very bad.

* * *

IN writing of this tournament, the British correspondent of The American Golfer says: "For most of the day the weather was very bad, indeed. When play began at 9 o'clock, the wind was very strong and rain was pouring down, while late in the afternoon it was worse. In such circumstances the peculiar difficulties of Hoylake were well brought out, and the foreign visitors had an unenviable task before them. The first of the Americans to go out was Stewart Malden, of Atlanta, who was partnered with J. Higgins, of Walsall, and this pair was second on the list, striking off at five minutes past 9. Maiden opened with a nice four at the dog-leg hole, with which the round begins, and after dropping a stroke at the second, went along steadily to the sixth, the famous Briars, and the hole which caused more disaster than any other on this course (it was once halved in nine in the final of the amateur championship), and here he took a six.

"However, at the difficult short hole that follows he got a splendid two, but another six was added at the eighth, and he turned in 40. He came home fairly well, but lost a stroke at the short blind Alps, being the eleventh, and two very valuable ones at the home hole, making his round in 82. In his second round in the afternoon he had a bad seven at the third hole, which is a long one and straight, but very narrow in the fairway, with ditches on either side, and another six was added at the Briars, so that by the time he got to the turn he had used up 43 strokes. He came home really fine in 36, almost the only blemish on his card being the five at the eighteenth, and that was very excusable."

His second round was 79.

* * *

HIS scores were as follows:

Out.

Holes.	Dist.	1st.	2d.
1	420	4	4
2	330	5	4
3	490	5	7
4	155	3	3

14	485	5	4
15	440	5	5
16	510	5	5
17	360	5	4
18	40	6	5
In	3270	42	36

Total for 36 holes, 161.

Maiden's 36 for the last nine made in his second round was the best done on this nine holes on the first day of the elimination rounds.

It was on this first day that George Duncan, who was the favorite to win the tournament, was unable to fight against the weather conditions and failed to qualify by four strokes. This was also the round which eliminated Alex Smith, Mike Brady and Alex Campbell, of the American team.

It was a strange coincidence that five of the six American entries should be drawn in the first squad of 90 to fight it out against each other as well as all of the others to get into the tournament.

JAKE STAHL DENIES HE IS TO SUCCEED CALLAHAN

GLOUCESTER, Aug. 16.—The rumor that Jake Stahl was to be given the position as manager of the Chicago White Sox and that Jimmy Callahan, the present head of the team, was to be deposed is entirely without foundation, according to Stahl, who was interviewed at Annisquam yesterday afternoon.

"No," said Stahl, "I have no knowledge of my being picked for the position of manager, and I had not even heard the rumor until you told me just now. Rumors put me out of a job. I guess that is all this talk is, rumor. Those things hurt the club considerably and it keeps the fellows guessing as to the exact truth of the matter. You can say for me that it is a rumor pure and simple and one without the least foundation."

When asked if he would accept the position if it were offered him, Stahl declined to answer.

BOSTON BUYS NEW PLAYER.

BOSTON, Aug. 16.—President McAleer, of the Boston American League club, announced today that he has purchased First Baseman Mundy from the Portsmouth club of the Virginia State League.

GOV. TENER FINDS JOB FOR A BASEBALL MATE

HARRISBURG, PA., Aug. 16.—Governor John K. Tener has given a substantial reward to a comrade of his old baseball days, when he appointed George Wood, once a member of the Philadelphia National League team, and a mighty outfielder and hitter, to a good State position. Governor Tener and Wood have been friends ever since their ball-playing days.

About two years ago the Governor found Wood serving as a ticket taker at the American League park in Philadelphia and told him he would try and find him a better job.

Soon afterward Wood was made messenger in the office of the Secretary of the Commonwealth. Later he was promoted to a clerkship in the same office. Now he is marshal of the new Public Service Commission, with a salary of $2,000 a year.

W.-I. DROPS TWO UMPIRES.

GREEN BAY, WIS., Aug. 16.—President Weeks, of the Wisconsin-Illinois League, announced yesterday he had dropped Umpires Roth and McFarlane. George Hogreiver was given a regular place on the staff.

ATHLETES ARE IMPROVING IN BRITISH ISLES

European Track and Field Stars Gradually Approaching Americans; 17,000 Saw Games.

THE fact that the United States and English track and field championships were held upon the same day makes a comparison of the work of the native athletes and their visiting competitors of more than usual interest. England's A. A. A. games were held on the famous oval at Stamford Bridge, London, while the United States championships were being contested at Chicago.

Some 17,000 spectators watched the English and Swedish athletes battle for honors in a drizzle, while about half that number sweltered in a temperature close to 100, while American titles were won on a track and in a field which failed to elicit any praise from the competitors. Although conditions as reported from both athletic fields were against record-breaking performances, a remarkable improvement was shown in the general all-round work of the English and Swedish athletes, indicating that the lessons learned in the recent Olympic games have not been forgotten.

* * *

THE English program consisted of fourteen events, of which English athletes won nine and Sweden's representatives five. Four A. A. A. records were established, two by the Swedes and two by English contenders. The United States schedule contained eighteen contests, in which two new "games" records were made, one by an American-born and another by an Irish athlete.

A comparison of the programs of the two meets shows that eleven similar events appeared on both, and with these as a basis a comparing of records proves that times of distances were better at Stamford Bridge in six of the eleven competitions. To what extent local conditions affected these figures there is no way of knowing. The comparison is made simply to show that the oft-repeated statements that European athletics are gradually approaching American standards are not based on idle observation.

* * *

BEGINNING with the 100, 200 and 440-yard runs, England showed a winner in the first two events in the person of W. R. Applegarth, who won in 10 and 21 2-3 seconds, respectively, against Sprinter Drew's times of 10 2-5 and 22 4-5 seconds at Chicago. Haff, the Chicago A. A. and Michigan flyer, won the 440 yards in 51 1-5, while G. Nichol did 49 2-5 at London.

In both the mile and one-half mile runs the United States figures were better. Baker, the New York A. C. runner, captured the 880 in 2 minutes and 1-5 second. E. Wide, of Sweden, winner in England, was two-fifths of a second slower. Norman Tabor won the mile at Chicago in 4:20 2-5, while Zander, of the Swedish team, required 4:25 4-5 to take the English title. In the running broad jump Abrahams cleared 22 feet 6 inches at the A. A. A. games, while Stiles, the winner at Chicago, did 22 feet 3-4 inch.

* * *

THE running high jump showed that Richards, the Olympic champion, had but three-eighths of an inch advantage over Baker, England's champion, who jumped 6 feet 1 inch. Nilsson, the Swedish shotputter, pushed the weight out 47 feet 4 1-4 inches, against American Champion Whitney's 46 feet 2 5-6 inches. In the pole vault and hammer throw the American figures were far superior to those made at Stamford Bridge.

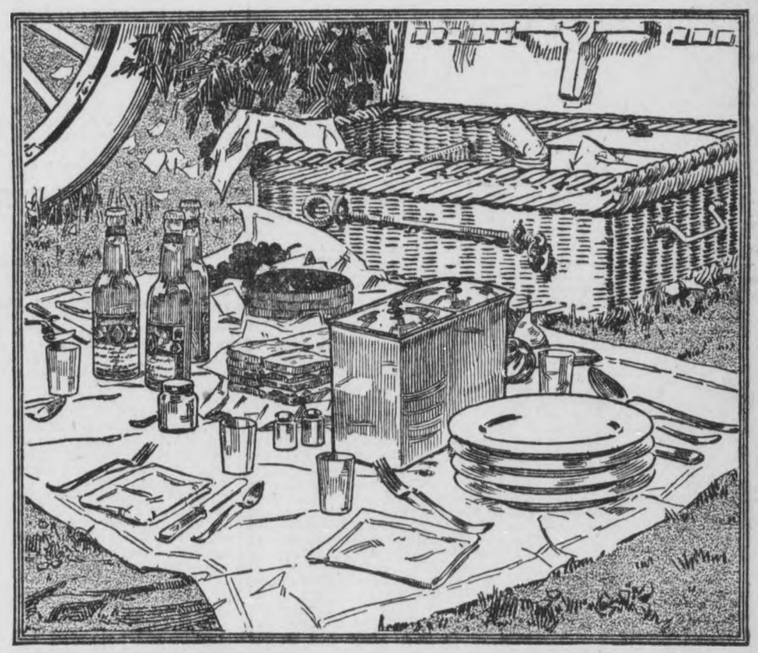
MANAGER OUT FOR SEASON.

CHAMPAIGN, ILL., Aug. 16.—Fred Wilson, manager of the Champaign baseball team, is out of the game for the rest of the season with a broken shoulder blade, received while sliding to base. Charles Fleming has succeeded him.

KEWANEE SIGNS CALHOUN.

KEWANEE, ILL., Aug. 16.—Outfielder Calhoun, of Danville, was signed yesterday by the Kewanee Central Association team.

NEW HURLER FOR GRIFFITH.



HELENA, MONT., Aug. 16.—Manager Flannery, of the Helena baseball club, announced yesterday the sale of Pitcher M. Williams to the Washington Americans. The price stated was $3,000.

DETROIT BUYS TWO PLAYERS.

FORT WAYNE, IND., Aug. 16.—Infielder Fadrique and Outfielder Tuetweiler, of the Fort Wayne club, have been sold to the Detroit Americans and will finish the season with Providence.

GOTCH BUYS 920 ACRES.

CROOKSTON, MINN., Aug. 16.—Frank A. Gotch, of Humboldt, Iowa, the champion wrestler, closed a deal yesterday which makes him the owner of 920 acres of land in Polk County, south of Crookston. He secured some very fine land, and it is understood that he will at once begin the development of a model farm and spend a portion of his time here. Gotch intends starting a thoroughbred herd and raising prize-winning stock.

WHAT ATLANTA MANUFACTURERS AND JOBBERS ARE DOING

ATLANTA HAS NEW FRIENDS AS RESULT OF CONVENTION

Many Attracted to City Who Never Came Before, but Who Now Will Make Semi-Annual Trips and Become Regular Customers.

Attendance Surpasses All Expectations, as Does the Volume of Business Transacted as Direct Result of the Fine Gathering.

The Southern Merchants' Convention is over.

With a theater party at the Forsyth Monday night, a barbecue Wednesday, and the Atlanta-Chattanooga ball game Friday, the visiting delegates enjoyed the second week of their stay, and the Atlanta merchants who pushed the convention to success believe they have made enduring friends of their guests, friends who will come again in February and every half year after that.

The purpose of the convention was twofold. First, the retail dealers from all over the South were given an opportunity to meet and discuss the problems which confront them in the everyday conduct of their business. Second, every effort was made to emphasize Atlanta's advantages as a buying center for all the South.

Both Objects Achieved.

Both these objects were achieved. The speeches during the first week of the convention threw valuable help in the way of those who found perplexities in buying, selling, management of stores, credits, or any of the multitudinous things which go to make up a merchant's work.

It is a good thing that the proceedings are to be published. All of the speeches are well worthy of preservation for future reference. Some of the speakers gave plain talks, just the simple, practical expression of what they had learned through years of experience.

Others spoke with scholarly finish—their speeches really were erudite, of studied completeness and finish. Still others were inspirational—they pointed out the intellectual and spiritual significance of the merchant's work. They made him feel that his is a noble calling, that the great prizes of the world are for the business man.

New Friends Made.

From the other point of view, the results attained were no less notable. Hundreds of buyers came to Atlanta who never had been here before, and who would not have come this time had it not been for the convention.

To them the completeness, the cheapness, the quality and the diversity of things sold by Atlanta manufacturers and jobbers must have been a revelation—indeed, they so expressed themselves.

Some of them bought big bills. Every large jobbing house reports a splendid fall trade. The crop prospects are such as to make everyone optimistic. There will be a good demand for merchandise in the fall, and the buyers prepared to meet it.

There were others who did not buy so much. They are just as welcome, for the Atlantans feels that their goods, their prices and their service are right, and that every customer who buys here once will come again.

New Associations.

A noteworthy result of the meeting was the organization of a permanent body—the Southern States Merchants' Association, headed by J. W. Vaughn, of Cartersville, Ga.

This, it is hoped, will bring very tangible benefits to the retailers of the South in general. It may prove to be the parent of scores of local organizations, which can do worlds of good in watching credits, preventing price-slashing and equalizing freight rates.

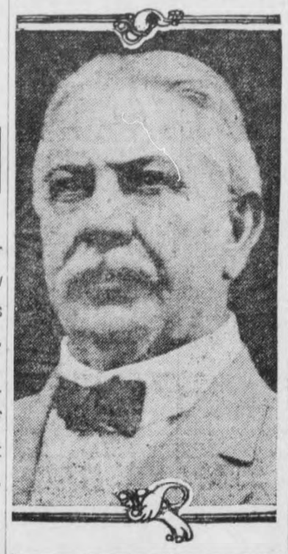
Notions Novelties in Demand From Buyers

Americans Tire Quickly of Any One Style, as Compared to Stability in Europe.

Buyers are very anxious for novelties this season, and it is constantly shown how quickly Americans tire of a given style. In England, France and Germany certain classes of merchandise move about the same year after year, but here we get new things continually. This has its advantages, however, because it stimulates business and there are new interests arising all the time.

Fall business in fancy goods and notions has opened well.

Styles this season are radically new, and leather hand bags with deep pockets and vanity accessories, as well as beaded varieties in high colors, are especially strong. Tasmania shell hair ornaments are a new item. These goods are the nearest approach to genuine tortoise shell ever produced, and the line comprises braid pins, barettes, and back combs.



Opera length bead necklaces in jet, pearl, amethyst, galalith, white amber and real and imitation pearl are excellent sellers among the newer jewelry features.

Cuff pins, bar pins and hat pins, set with diamond chips, also move readily. Beaded tunics, in the staple gold and silver and high colors, are also strong, and are atttractively priced.

Metal vanity cases are produced more reasonably this season, chased effects being shown in gold, oxidized silver or nickel, which are in exact imitation of the very expensive goods.

Parisian ivory goods have been enlarged and the line shown extends from the simple vanity case, retailing at 25 cents, to the more pretentious toilet set, selling at $25.

WILLIS E. RAGAN, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the "M. & M.," to whom much of the convention's success is due.

GARMENT TRADE AWAITS REPORT OF WAGE BOARD

Complicated Mathematics Necessary to Compute Proper Pay for Piece Workers.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—It is recognized generally in the dress and waist industry that one of the most important provisions of the protocol signed early this year by the manufacturers and their employees is that which brought the wage scale board into existence.

This board, as designated in the protocol, consists of eight members, four nominated by the manufacturers and four by the union. The duties of the board are to standardize work throughout the industry, and to preserve data and statistics, with a view to establishing a scientific basis for fixing these prices that will insure a minimum wage.

It has power to engage experts in price fixing, to settle all disputes over prices and to make special exemptions for week work where special exigencies arise or where special scales are required.

A kindred provision made necessary an immediate investigation of the rates paid in various parts of the industry, the earnings of the operatives and the classification of garments. This investigation is now being made under the direction of N. I. Stone, formerly chief statistician of the tariff board. Commenting recently on the scope of the work, Mr. Stone said:

36,000 Employed.

"There are now about 36,000 operatives in this industry. To date we have collected two sets of wage records, one for 1912 and one for this year, for 30,000 of them, and we are now tabulating the returns. Averages are useless in work of this kind. There are some workers earning as high as $40 a week, and there are some who make only $4. To say that the average wage in the industry is $22 because of these figures is ridiculous.

When our tabulations are completed, I expect to be able to show the percentage of operatives earning from $4 to $5 a weekly, $5 to $6, and so on. Then we will have a practical basis for working out a satisfactory minimum rate.

"Following the report on weekly wage, the board will begin its labors on piecework rates. This will be extremely difficult work, but by a system of minute dissection of garments that has been worked out, I believe that we eventually will be able to determine just what rate should be fixed for each operation. From that the rates justly due the various operatives can be provided on the cheaper lines, and from that the more complicated rates will be figured.

Test Used Now.

"At the present time piece rates are decided by the employers, and piece price committees selected by the workers in the various shops.

"In case of failure to agree on estimates, an experienced operative, a good worker, is selected to make the garment, and the rate is then fixed as provided by the protocol. For instance, if the operative took four hours to make the garment and the factory rate was 30 cents an hour, the manufacturer would then have to allow his employees $1.20 for making the garment.

"This test, however, is not always satisfactory. If the operative takes longer than the employer thinks should be required to make the garment in question, there is apt to be complaints of 'soldiering;' if the operative finishes more quickly than the workers had estimated, she is apt to be accused of siding with the employer. It is this discontent we are working to do away with."

SHINGLES FROM TIN CANS.

In Ottawa a machine has been perfected to make shingles out of discarded tin cans. After being rolled straight the can is put through a corrugating machine. Then it is put through a weatherproofing process, and then into a vat containing a substance like tar. The tin, while still wet, is dipped in asbestos, which readily adheres to the tar-like coating. Shingles so made are said to be more flexible and lighter than the wood or corrugated steel articles, and they are produced in various colors.

SHOE DEALERS HAVE REASONS FOR DECEPTION

Motives for Using Code in Marking Sizes on Footwear Is Humanitarian, They Say.

Fully 90 adults out of every 100, be they male or female, show a distinct unwillingness to buy shoes that are long enough and wide enough to fit their feet comfortably.

This statement is made on the authority of a retailer who has tried for more than twenty years to suit the buying public and who has succeeded only at the sacrifice of a considerable portion of his stock of truthfulness. This tendency to buy small shoes is characteristic of Americans, according to this merchant.

The position of the retail merchant and salesman is none too desirable as a result of this liking for small feet. Often the customer will want a size that the salesman can see at once will be too short or too narrow. Argument is dangerous, for the customers are frequently more willing to accept cramped toes than a criticism of their knowledge of their own necessities. Most often argumentative salesmanship results in lost sales.

Numerous Codes.

It is for this reason that plain marking of lengths and widths of shoes is more and more avoided by the retailers. Numerous codes have come into existence in the last few years that have completely put the average layman out of the running when it comes to telling the size of the shoes he is having fitted. Wholesalers make no attempt to deny that these codes are used purposely to keep the customer in the dark as to the real size of the shoe, but the retailers are less willing to acknowledge this point.

It can not be denied, however, that code markings save lost sales, time, and money. This is due largely to the fact that there is no general standard last, despite the efforts of several of the leading manufacturers to have one established. A 7C shoe made by one manufacturer often will differ in size from a shoe bearing a similar mark, but coming from another factory. This is not generally known, and a salesman often has difficulty in explaining why a size that at one time gave a comfortable fit gives an uncomfortable pinch at another.

Styles Make Difference.

In shoes made by the same manufacturer it frequently happens that a size which fits well in one style will not fit at all in a second style. This gives another trying time for the salesman when plain markings are used, especially so if the customer be a woman. Customers do not complain a great deal on finding out a clerks' deception if the shoes fit all right, whereas if they knew the real size of the shoe at the time they bought it they would probably go to some other shop.

The wide variety of codes now in existence has caused no small trouble to the manufacturers, as these twenty-two different markings are required to satisfy the codes of retail dealers. This has led the manufacturers to ask that the retailers order their shoes stamped only in plain sizes and widths, or to adopt one standard system of code marking. This, it is believed, eventually will be done.

One of the most practical codes used is the so-called "Western System." In this code the English width designations AA, A, B, C, etc., are indicated by figures ranging from zero for AA to 5 for E. The length of the shoe is given plainly as 3, 4 or 5, with zero attached for whole size and a attached for half sizes. The whole code contains three figures, and by its use size 3 1-2C would be marked 335. Size 7D would be marked 470, and so on.

Electric Signs Now Made Right at Home

One of the First Products of New Studio Is Largest Display South of New York.

Atlanta now possesses a first-class electric sign studio. Heretofore local merchants have been obliged to purchase their electric signs in other cities and have them shipped here at heavy expense.

Proof that this is no inconsequential studio is the new electric sign at the south end of the Whitehall-Peachtree viaduct—the largest south of New York, and one of the most beautiful anywhere. It was made in Atlanta from start to finish. It uses more than 2,500 lamps, and some of the letters on the sign are more than twelve feet high.

The new studio is the property of the Massengale Bulletin System, and is in the remodeled building which the Atlanta Athletic Club once occupied at 56 Edgewood avenue.

Ten high-salaried experts, men who thoroughly understand how to design and manufacture intricate and artistic electric signs, have been brought here by the Massengale Company to take charge of the new studio. M. O. Trusdell is in charge of the electrical department.

St. Elmo Massengale is president of the company and Gordon B. Massengale is secretary and manager.

E. Frank Munn is assistant manager and general superintendent.

NEW ARTIFICIAL SILK IS MADE FROM COTTON

A factory on an eight-acre plot will soon be erected at Kingston, N. Y., for manufacturing artificial silk from cotton by the Greiner-Wilkins process. Proof of the practicability of the new process was that stockings, shirtings, plushes, velvets and neckties could be made from the spun yarn. The demand for artificial silk is considerably greater than the supply, and it is maintained that the cost of its production from cotton is cheaper than where wood was used, and that silk made by the new process is more durable than that made from wood.

USES U. S. PORTS.

Of wheat exported from Canada last year, 64 per cent went by United States ports.

NEW RICE HIGH; MARKET IS BARE OF LAST YEAR'S

Honduras Quoted at 7½ Cents to Jobbers by Big Atlanta Brokerage House.

New rice is being shown by H. H. Whitcomb & Burke Co., Atlanta's foremost grocery brokers, and the price is "sky high," higher than any of the grocers remember, the figure quoted being 7 1-2 cents for full head Honduras clean. Japan sells for 3 1-2 and 4 cents. These are quotations to wholesalers.

The market is bare of old crop rice of good grades. Those who demand the fancy article have had to deny themselves. The new crop, it seems, is moving slowly, and indications are that the high levels will be maintained for some time, although a break is possible later on. At the present time, even samples are hard to get, from New Orleans, which, of course, is the center of the rice trade.

Cheese also is high, considering the season. The usual fall advance is coming very early. Plymouth, Wis., American full cream cheese is quoted, daisy, 15 cents, and twin daisies, 14 3-4 cents.

"White Fish" Coming.

Great Lakes salt herring will begin to come in next month, and this most palatable fish promises to be in unparalleled demand. This is the variety known for years as "white fish," but the real white fish is as scarce as prairie chicken, and by a recent government ruling it is made an offense to brand fresh water herring by this name. The Whitcomb-Burke supply comes from the great fisheries at Green Bay, Wis.

Every week, it seems, some new product appears on the market to make the housewife's work lighter. The woman who so desires could feed her family for months at a time and never do a bit of cooking, with bakers' bread, canned brown bread, coffee which needs only the addition of water, tinned roast beef, lemon pie filling, lemon sugar, onion salad and a multitude of ready-prepared articles.

The latest in this line is prepared doughnut flour. The powder contains flour, eggs, spices and all the other ingredients of doughnuts. All that is necessary is to add water, roll the dough, cut it and fry the doughnuts. Sufficient to make two dozen doughnuts is sold for 15 cents.

New Pack Yams Due.

New pack sweet potatoes are due in a few weeks, with a fair-sized crop of excellent quality in prospect. This is an all-Southern product unknown in the North a few years ago. But the juicy Southern yellow pumpkin yam is so much superior to the kiln-dried, mealy Jersey sweet potato of the North that it is believed a very short time will serve to make the more palatable product supreme in the market.

Every day there's a new condiment. This time it is onion salad, a Boston product with a peculiar tang which makes a hit on first trial. Louisiana, the home of tabasco peppers, is putting out a new tabasco sauce which the Whitcomb-Burke Company is introducing with considerable success.

Sweeping Decision In Soft Drinks Case

Beverage Similar in Color, Taste and Bottle Infringes, Even Though Names Differ Widely.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—A decision which is likely to have an important bearing upon the whole question of imitation and substitution in various lines of business has just been rendered by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals.

The court has ordered an injunction in favor of the manufacturers of a popular beverage and restraining the making of a similar articles from putting out their product in bottles of the same size and shape.

What is generally regarded as the important phase of the court's decree is the apparently broad interpretation given to the law for the protection of manufacturers against imitators. In this particular case the similarity between the two products was confined to their color and taste and the shape of the bottles. The names were wholly dissimilar, the labels were of different colors and had no points of resemblance, either as to typography or general appearance. Also, the caps for sealing the bottles were of different kinds. The court held, however, that differences which do not destroy the general similarity of appearance to the ordinary purchaser are of no consequence and need not be dwelt upon, and that the defendant had not performed his legal duty of distinguishing his product by making differences which leave unimpaired the general resemblance.

TOYS FROM WASTE WOOD.

A toy company in Sheboygan, Wis., has begun to use only the waste wood from other mills. It has even worked out a system of using all small pieces, as well as the larger ones, so that practically nothing is lost but sawdust.

In Field Where Brains Win, Atlanta Is Leader

Millinery Business Amounts to $2,000,000 Yearly—Buyers Now Are in the City.

In a field which is in many respects the most difficult in the mercantile world—millinery—Atlanta stands supreme in the South, and is one of the prominent centers of the United States.

Millinery involves no question of geography. Transportation charges do not enter into it as they do, for instance, in the flour or coal trade. Millinery involves few problems of prices or narrow cost margins. A hat is worth what it will bring.

The business does require the keenest study—study carried on on two sides of the ocean (there are many Atlanta designers who spend a part of each season in Paris). It requires able generalship, for competition is keen both in the designing and selling fields. More trying than any of these things is the constant shifting of women's whims. These make the business the great thing it is, but also they cause heavy losses when goods bought at high prices suddenly become absolutely unsalable.

Brains, then, alone conquer in this peculiar business. And Atlanta is long on brains.

Brains have built up a business which insiders estimate at $2,000,000 a year in Atlanta. There are six large wholesale houses in Atlanta—E. L. Rhodes Company, Meyer-Regenstein Company, M. Kutz Company, D. Silverman Company, N. Myers Company and N. Bodenheimer & Bro.

The fall season just has opened. It will attract, in two weeks or so, about 1,500 buyers.

They come here to see the advance styles, to buy hats trimmed in these styles, to take notes of the models for later production in Tallapoosa or Hushpuckena, or to copy the models with thorough fidelity for the same purpose.

A little before the semi-annual openings women begin to appear, seeking work as trimmers. Now, here is a strange thing. These women are milliners. Many of them own prosperous little establishments in the smaller towns. Others are managers of millinery departments in department stores.

They work until the opening, learning the new styles and how to trim them—how to make the new bows, for instance.

Then these women change from their role of wage-earners and become merchants. They make their selections, buy their stock for the season and go back to Tallapoosa to remain until a little before the opening of the next season.

The wholesale houses encourage this. It gives them skilled workers when they need such help and it gives them friends in all the millinery shops on whom they must depend for trade.

Mrs. Jones, who works a few weeks a year at Rhodes', learns styles there and knows Rhodes' stock, is pretty apt to buy all her goods from Rhodes. This is the system, and the wholesalers make of themselves regular employment bureaus, furnishing skilled milliners to any firms which demand them.

Fall Car Shortage Will Be No Worse

Shippers and Railroad Men Are Cooperating to Make Best Possible Use of Equipment.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Railroad officials say that while there will be a shortage of cars in the fall, it is not likely to be greater than last year, when average deficiency was reported as 27,581 cars.

The situation this year may be less difficult to handle because shippers, as well as railroad men, have had impressed on them the requirements of the situation that arise every autumn. In the case of railroad men, timely repair of freight equipment, simplification of terminal operations and recasting of inspection and interchange rules are the considerations.

Railroads are devoting more attention to utilization of the freight car, their best assets, earning about 75 per cent of gross, and undoubtedly their best freight solicitor during periods of heavy traffic. Average earnings of each car per day for 1912 were $2.35, or, eliminating Sundays and holidays and confining computation to the busy season, gross earnings capacity was $3.85, while net was $1.15.

Overcoats Will Be Shorter This Season

Norfolk Designs Less in Favor—Chinchilla Favorite Material for the Garments.

There will be no decided change in the fall and winter styles for men's clothing, excepting that overcoats will be made shorter.

Chinchilla is the popular fabric for them, and there is a tendency toward using solid colors and avoiding fancy effects. The demand for Norfolk coats is diminishing. Soft roll front coats of the two and three button English style, with patch pockets, are favored. Sack coats will be slightly shorter. Vests will be cut somewhat lower than formerly and trousers are to be narrower.

For suitings, narrow pencil stripes, serges and Oxfords are the featured materials. The color trend is toward blue, gray and brown. Some manufacturers think well of neat plaids and checks.

FRANCE COINS GOLD.

Because of recent monetary stringency, Bank of France has decided to convert its $600,000,000 gold reserve, until now represented by ingots, into gold currency. More than $200,000,000 has already been coined.

TIGHTER MONEY NOT LIKELY.

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—John J. Mitchell says: "Money is unlikely to get any closer this year than it has been recently, and would not, regardless of treasury relief. Good rains would restore corn to very general conditions."

WATERPROOF SHOES OF PAPER.

Waterproof shoes made of paper are covered by a patent recently issued to Morris H. Siegel. The paper is of sufficient toughness to stand at least one wearing. To prevent tearing there are gores at the sides which unfold to admit the foot.

Lace Hosiery Latest Novelty in the Trade

Radical Fashions Encourage Demand for These Goods—Only High-Priced Samples Shown.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Some members of the hosiery trade believe there are indications of an increasing demand for lace goods, and that the novelty developments for another season will be along this line. Their opinions are based on the business that already is being done this season in high-priced lace hosiery. Women with the money to satisfy the latest fashion demands are turning to lace hosiery as the surest way to get something different, something that is not worn by the populace at large.

Fashionable summer resorts accordingly have seen this year a large use of lace hosiery. The goods already on the market of this kind are so far, of course, all high priced, $5 a pair being nothing unusual. Such goods are made with a regular silk foot, with genuine lace inserted in a panel form.

Should this latest hosiery style prove to be of the importance now given to it by members of the trade, it is predicted that before long domestic manufacturers in large numbers will be taking it up and turning out goods in quantity to sell at prices that will mean a large distribution.

Past experience, it was pointed out, showed that by simple changes in machinery, lace hosiery, so called, can be turned out so cheaply as to warrant its sale at popular prices. During the last run on lace hosiery, a number of years ago, the production was large because of the cheapness at which goods could be offered.

Prevailing fashions in women's dresses, with the skirt conspicuous, will help materially any established demand for lace effects.

Dress Goods Moving With More Freedom

Spot Lots of Underwear and Hosiery, Lightweight, Being Picked Up Wherever Found.

On some dry goods lines jobbers admit that retailers are rather slow in taking hold, while on other lines sales are ahead of those for the corresponding period last year.

Dress goods are moving ou with more freedom, silks are wanted, and buyers are asking for immediate shipment of goods on old order. Spot lots of lightweight underwear and hosiery are being picked up wherever available, but jobbers' stocks have been reduced to such a point that there is little or nothing left on which deliveries can be made.

The question of prices on forward cotton goods contracts for the last nine months of the year is still coming in for considerable discussion. The shortage of spot and nearby delivery goods is causing some manufacturers to hesitate over shading their prices for future delivery, although it is a difficult matter to bring home the shortage to buyers, unless they actually come into the market for goods and can not obtain what they want.

BUYERS SLOW TO TAKE FANCY COTTON GOODS

Business Actually Placed With Many Houses Confined to Sample Lines—Ratines Lead.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Hesitation marks the course of many buyers of wash fabrics and fine fancy cottons. In many instances restrictions of merchandise managers are restraining them, the desire of financial heads of many houses being to postpone all buying that is not absolutely essential for the conduct of the business.

Numbers of buyers have operated in quantities sufficient to permit them to ask for full lines of sample cards for traveling men, and no more. They have said that if the lines sell well on the road when men go out seeking business for spring from retailers they will duplicate in their usual quantities, but they declare that if business is to be slow on fancies and novelties they are going to see that mills bear the burden of any accumulations.

Style developments have held many men back. The development of the ratine and crepe weaves has been so broad that buyers are afraid to order them fully until they hear more from their own trade.

That a great many of these cloths will be worn goes without saying, if for no other reason than the one that few other fancies have been shown and prepared. As a rule, buyers are less troubled about the style probabilities of the cloths than they are about the danger of a flooding of the trade with the cheap goods.

A cloth that was scarce at $1 a yard at retail a year ago and is now found freely at 8 1-2 cents a yard in various forms at wholesale, is sufficient in itself to make the experienced buyer pause and await for the answer that will come from retailers to road men traveling for the jobbing houses.

RAILROADS TAX SALESMEN WHO HAVE NO VOTE

Excess Baggage Rates Are Much Higher Than Express Company Charges, One Complaint.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Out of the maze of discussion that has centered about the excess baggage problem during the past two years a few points have been brought out to show the salesman's need of the voting privilege when away on business trips.

When shippers complain of railroad and express companies' rates, the Interstate Commerce Commission gives prompt attention to an appeal, but the voice of the traveling man is unheard. He pays his own expenses and has no vote. For example, the excess rate for a Pacific coast excursion ticket up to a year ago was $8.50 per hundred pounds. The railroads thought that the traveler could stand another squeeze and raised it to $10.

The present rate of 16 2-3 per cent and more is maintained in spite of the fact that the maximum legal charge is 12 1-2 per cent. The unfairness of this rate is more apparent when it is compared with the charges of express companies.

To illustrate, a first class ticket to Chicago on the Pennsylvania or the New York Central is $20. The excess rate per 100 pounds is $3.45, or 17 per cent of the ticket's cost. The express rate is $2.50 per 100 pounds, out of which the railroad receives $1.25, which is only 6 3-4 per cent of $20. On the Baltimore and Ohio the ticket costs only $18, but the excess rate is the same, thus bringing the rate to a still higher percentage in that case. Under the new express rate schedule the discrepancy will be still larger without lowering the excess rates to the salesmen.

The movement to procure votes for traveling men is steadily gaining ground. The Secretary of the Navy, in a letter expressed his approval of the idea.

High Prices for Ostrich Farms.

A striking illustration of the profits in ostrich farming is found in the report that a man in the Oudtshoorn feather district of South Africa has leased 290 acres of land for a period of ten years for $7,500 per year. In the same district 35 acres of land sold for $30,000.

At What Rate Do You Do Business?

Fire insurance rates on a building are based not only on the chances of that building catching fire, but to a larger extent on the facilities at hand for putting out the fire, should it occur.

The more convenient the Fire Service, the lower the rate.

Just so in merchandising; the cost of doing business is directly governed by the convenience of a merchant's source of supply.

Take shoes, for instance; the Southern merchant who buys his stock in the distant markets of New England and the West is paying a mighty high rate to do business.

Here are the extra costs he pays:

1st. Excess freight charges.

2d. Interest on half the stock he now carries that would be unnecessary with a near-by efficient factory connection.

3d. Loss on accumulation and depreciation of dead styles.

4th. Sales missed by being out of the right styles and sizes when he needs them.

COTTON FIELDS TELL STORY OF TWO ASPECTS

No Cause for Complaint in the Central or Eastern Belt. Spinners Reluctant.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 16.—A genuine crop scare in a considerable portion of the cotton belt and an absence of bullish activity in the price marts was an anomaly presented during the week. A partial explanation for it was, that while the crop was admittedly losing condition in Oklahoma and Texas, in practically all the rest of the belt there was no good reason for complaint. In fact, most of the central and eastern belt sent in reports of excellent progress toward a satisfactory yield. There was thus a two-sided story from the cotton fields, and the sections which last season had only moderate outturns were giving promise of evening up matters with a section that had bumper crops.

The promise of rains in the western part of the belt at the close of last wek, which afforded much of the basis for the bearish activity in the speculative market on Friday and Saturday, proved barren of much results, for the showers were scattered, and by no means sufficient to relieve the situation. In only a few localities did they amount to enough to give relief, and as the temperatures continued high, some of them might better not have come. Arkansas had some fine rains, which put an end to an incipient drouth. The week has brought no important relief to Oklahoma and Texas, and most students of the situation have reduced expectations for those important areas.

It seems certain enough damage already has been done to make unlikely a yield of as much as last year, despite increased acreage. The injury will continue until the drouth is relieved, and then for them to have full benefit there will have to be a late and open fall so late fruit can mature.

In the central belt conditions are still excellent, and the critical perjod will soon pass. Expectations are for the largest crop ever gathered in this territory, and picking will start in earnest in a few weeks. The "first" bale has already appeared here, nine days ahead of last year and five earlier than the average date. However, the crop as a whole is not that much ahead, the bale having come from the section that is trying to get ahead of the boll weevil by early planting and forced cultivation.

Opinion here is that the improvement of the past few weeks in the eastern belt has been such as to make possible a large yield, though it is doubted whether the record of two years ago will be reached in any large area.

The spot situation is still without much feature, and it seems likely that the spinners are going to take their time about buying. Very little forward business is reported booked and the disposition to scatter orders is not yet marked. From across the water comes talk of trade not being so promising, though there is a suspicion that one motive for such news is the need of raw material in large quantities soon and it will not hurt any to spread the notion that trade is going to be dull, thus helping to depress values and enable as cheap buying as possible.

The effect of the legislation against futures, should it be passed, is also expected to be for lower prices, which is another motive for the spinners waiting. There are many people who think the removal of this menacing cloud would result in a very quick revival of bullish speculative activity and thus the crop scare would become a price factor of more importance than it has been.

The foreign spinner, no doubt, also feels that the money situation is such that there will be a rush to sell the new crop, which will better his chances of getting bargains provided he does not show too much eagerness this early.

The domestic spinner naturally is biding his time and being conservative, pending the passage of the tariff act and its effect on business. Other things also encourage him to be a little patient, although advices indicate a healthy prospect for business.

SEABOARD NOTES CHEAP.

The offering of the unsold balance of Seaboard Air Line $1,900,000 equipment trust notes is being made at a price to yield 6 per cent. Seaboard Air Line Railway's surplus over all fixed charges and bond interest, for the year ended June 30, last, it is understood, was between $1,725,000 and $1,750,000, or equivalent to 6.9 per cent on the $25,000,000 preferred stock. Last year the surplus on the same basis was $899,000.

THE NEW ISSUES.

The Financial Chronicle's New York review of new security issues for the last six months shows them to have been the smallest in years and much below the average of the last eight years, totaling for stocks and bonds only $627,048,160, par value, compared with $1,219,250 in the first six months of 1912.

PHYSICAL LIMIT SET.

The Baldwin Locomotive Company says the factor determining size and power of locomotives is the physical ability of firemen to shovel coal.

Six Crops of Alfalfa in One Season; Big Opportunity for Farmers of South

Special Soil Preparatin Is Necessary to Success—Inoculation and Liming Important—Seed Bed Preparation Should Begin Two Years in Advance.

CHARLES A. WHITTLE.

(Georgia State College of Agriculture.)

Think of from four to six crops of hay off a field in a year, and you are thinking of the possibilities of alfalfa growing in the South. Think of cutting from one to one and a half tons per acre each time and figure that each ton is worth at least $25 and you arrive at a very snug income with mighty little sweat as compared to cotton, for instance.

But be not deceived. Learning to grow alfalfa in the South is the biggest thing about it. Anybody who takes it as a matter of course that all he has to do is to stir the land and plant and thereafter watch the negroes harvest, is more than likely to be enrolled with the long list of those who have proven alfalfa failures in the South.

With all the good things that can be said of the soil of the South, it can pretty generally be said that Southern lands are not naturally "cut out" to grow alfalfa. This is not saying that alfalfa as a rule will not grow in the South, nor is it reflecting in any wise on either the soil or the climate. The point is that all Southern soils have to be given special treatment and preparation before alfalfa will be at home in it.

Alfalfa on Every Farm.

"Alfalfa on every farm," the slogan now going the rounds, does not point to an impossible ideal, but if anyone thinks it can be attained in the South without a considerable revolution, he may be easily deceived by trying it.

With all, it is easy enough to prepare the soil for alfalfa and go along producing it, if the prospective grower will follow good advice—but there is the rub.

The ordinary cotton grower of the South will have to practice crop rotation, he will have to add inoculation to his vocabulary and practices, and he will have to get lime into his soil. Those who have been teaching this sort of doctrine and have observed how far it has taken root in the South will understand how much farming practice will have to be changed to realize "Alfalfa on every farm."

To the average Southern farmer to mention inoculation is to elicit inquiries. What is it? Why? And to tell the truth, it is neither easy to understand nor to explain. A full explanation, indeed, is impossible. Inoculation means to introduce friendly bacteria into the soil. Without certain nitrogen fixing bacteria present in the ordinary soil, alfalfa and other legumes make poor headway. Certain it is that some of these bacteria can take the nitrogen from the air and fix it in the ground, converting at the same time the nitrogen into food for the growing plant.

Alfalfa Bred Bacteria Best.

It is believed that almost any soil has some of the nitrogen fixing bacteria present in it, but as a matter of fact in some soils these bacteria are few and apparently so starved as to be unequal to the task imposed by thrifty alfalfa.

The best bacteria with which to inoculate are those which have been bred in a good alfalfa field. Good bacteria can be grown artificially and it is with such artificially grown bacteria that seed are inoculated. When sprinkled with a solution in which the artificially grown bacteria have been turned loose, the seed carry on their surface enough of the bacteria to start up business in a new field.

Of course the bacteria are invisible except under a compound microscope. The farmer can not see them and when he buys he buys on faith. If his alfalfa grows and produces good crops he believes in inoculation. If it does not, he is likely to have notions of his own about inoculation. It is possible for seed to be perfectly inoculated and by reason of improper handling may fail to show results. Sunlight destroys bacteria and inoculated seed left exposed to the sunlight will become sterile. To escape the danger of sunlight it is necessary, of course, to shelter the bacteria, and it is wiser to sow or to apply the inoculation medium late in the afternoon or during cloudy weather.

Again, the seed may be properly inoculated, due precaution may be taken to get it into the soil with the least injury from the sunlight, but the soil may be sour, which is no sort of soil for a nitrogen fixing bacteria.

Lime Necessary to Alfalfa.

To correct sourness of soil lime is necessary. The fact is that practically all soils in the South are deficient in lime. This may never become apparent so long as cotton or corn is grown, but it is certainly true when it comes to growing legumes.

The lime is not needed as a fertilizer. It is merely a tonic to nitrogen fixing bacteria. Soils generally are supplied with all the lime that the crops need. Experiments have shown that most of the crops grown in the South are benefited by the use of lime, a benefit that is attributable to increasing bacterial activity. Bacterial activity means increase of plant food, for bacteria in effect are minute laboratories changing the elements nonavailable for plant food into elements of the soil that are available. Of course there are good and bad bacteria. Some of those that might be classed as bad operate to change available plant food into non-available. Of such are the denitrifying bacteria, which instead of preparing bacteria for the plants change it into perhaps free nitrogen that returns again to the air.

These friendly bacteria have been isolated and named and are nurtured, coaxed and strengthened to do their best. Only the border of the realm of these soil agents has been entered, and it may be reckoned with a degree of certainty that as the scientist ventures further into the mysterious country of the unseen that he will bring back to the farmer knowledge that will mean two bushels where one is now grown, all by learning which are the good bacteria that are serving plant life and how to encourage their growth.

The first great contribution of the scientist in looking into the teeming soil world is that lime is good for nitrogen-fixing bacteria, and since nitrogen is the most expensive plant food and one of the most important, it is a wonderful discovery this of lime and its relations to bacteria.

Since nitrogen-fixing bacteria operating to the good of alfalfa set up shop on the roots of the plant and there extract nitrogen from the air that has penetrated the soil, to know that lime will make it thrive is equivalent to saying that without lime alfalfa will not grow in many Southern soils, for it is a fact that most Southern soils are deficient in lime and are too sour for nitrogen-fixing bacteria.

Success Has Made Failures.

Some pretty well-known, highly respected and intelligent men have said that they do not believe in inoculation nor in liming for alfalfa. They point to their successful alfalfa patch to show you that neither is necessary. Unwittingly such well-meaning people have been the means of the downfall of others in their attempts to grow alfalfa. Do not get an idea that there are many such alfalfa successes in the South, especially among those who have not used lime. Even where the soil has been formed by the disintegration of limestone rock, where there is a foundation of limestone in the soil, is to be found a marked deficiency in available lime. The lime has leached out. It must be supplied. On soils which for some reason, exceptional to the rule, there is sufficient lime, alfalfa may be started and grown successfully even without inoculation. The reason for the unnecessary inoculation will be found to be that the soil has already been stocked with nitrogen-fixing bacteria through the medium of clover, cowpeas, beans or one of a hundred other legumes.

Some of the authorities are now advocating going to the roadside, the fence corners or other places where sweet clover or burr clover, or lespedeza, or some other legumes are growing, taking some of the soil from underneath, scatter it over the alfalfa seed bed and harrow it under. By this mean nitrogen-fixing bacteria will be added to the soil, bacteria that have been making their living off the very kind of soil in which they are appointed to continue operations.

Better still, of course, would be soil taken from a field in which alfalfa had grown, a field where conditions are similar as to character of soil, climate, growing zone, etc. Naturally bacteria that have been feeding on alfalfa must have established alfalfa-loving characteristics.

Suppose some cotton farmer gets inspiration enough to get out of the ruts and takes the advice of the man who does not believe in inoculation or liming, and suppose he fails, as he is likely to do, what a pity! When again will he be in frame of mind to try?

Preparing the Seed Bed.

The preparation of the seed bed with reference to weed eradication is important. It is time well spent if two years are taken in preparing the land for alfalfa. If barnyard manure is applied, it is better to follow with a crop of corn as a weed eradicator. This followed by rye or oats drilled between the corn rows at the last time the corn is worked, will afford not only a winter cover crop, but good pasturage for the colts and calves during the winter. After the rye or oats, as the case may be, is taken off, the cowpea or soy bean will prove excellent for keeping the weeds from getting a start. Turning under the cowpeas or soy beans and harrowing the ground until it is in find tilth, as good a seed bed as could be obtained for growing alfalfa is prepared.

Weeds and alfalfa do not do well together. If the farmer can not get rid of the weeds, he need not look to alfalfa to do it. Many farmers have had fits of despair over the weeds and crab grass which have made their appearance in their alfalfa patches.

But weeds are not formidable obstacles to growing alfalfa where the precautions described have been taken. Even where the weeds have appeared in an alfalfa patch there is a fighting chance for alfalfa if the right steps are taken to keep down the weeds. The method usually recommended is to run a disk harrow over the field. This plays havoc with the weeds, but harms the alfalfa very little. By some it is claimed that the harrowing will break up the alfalfa crowns or bunches and start new plants. Weed eradication in the field will rarely be necessary if the seed bed is properly prepared in advance.

Then Put In Lime.

Having brought the seed bed through two seasons of preparation and having broken and harrowed the ground, the next important step is to put in the lime. The amount of lime to apply will depend upon the degree of acidity or sourness of the land, not on the amount of lime already in the soil. The degree of sourness is usually determined by the use of litmus paper, a prepared paper that can be purchased at any drug store. This paper when imbedded in fairly moist soil and left a short time, when taken out will show by the change of color how acid the soil is. If the change of color is very marked plenty of lime should be applied. The application will vary from one to two tons per acre.

Lime is comparatively inexpensive and when once applied serves its purpose five or more years. Ground limestone is the form which is most generally used. The price is determined largely by the cost of freight. At lime manufacturing centers the ground limestone can usually be bought at $1 per ton and even less, especially where the lime is a by-product.

The lime should be broadcasted or drilled in. If broadcasted, then harrowed under.

Sourness of soil is attributed to an incomplete stage of decomposition of vegetable matter which has been turned into the soil. The lime is the one element that will at once adjust conditions and permit other bacteria as well as the nitrogen fixing bacteria to do their work. The vegetable matter which has been turned under in preparing the seed bed and is in process of decomposition, that is, which is being transformed by bacteria, proceeds with its processes most favorably in the presence of lime, becomes humus and then plant food.

An application of nitrate of soda after the alfalfa has come up, especially if it is not showing good color, has often proved helpful.

Cropping Alfalfa.

When the alfalfa plant has grown its full height, a second growth will the second growth has put up its shoots and has started vigorously, be found starting at the roots. When then is the time to cut off the first crop. If the weather is normal, in a month's time there will be another crop ready to cut. The same signs of when to cut are to be followed in each instance—that is, the oncoming of another crop.

In the South when there has been as much rain as has generally prevailed this summer, the owner of an alfalfa patch will be cutting hay once a month for about six months in the year. Indeed, the prospcest are favorable in some alfalfa patches for seven crops this year, five already having been cut, and the growing season ahead extending through September and October.

If a ton of cured hay per acre is obtained with each cutting, the alfalfa can be counted as doing first rate. Some will do better.

Alfalfa hay is worth taking good care of. The weather is not always favorable for curing it in the field, especially during the thundershower period. Canvas caps for the piles of hay in the field pay for themselves over and over by saving hay that would rot in the field from too much rain. Any grower of hay of whatever kind of hay it may be can well afford to provide hay caps.

Alfalfa hay is good, rich hay and ranks very near wheat bran in the amount of nutriments, ton for ton. Wheat bran costs about $30 per ton laid down in the South. Raise alfalfa hay and the wheat bran need not be purchased. The alfalfa has a feeding value of nearly $30 per ton at present prices, but at the outset of this article a selling prices of $25 was set as an average.

As a feed alfalfa is a producer of high-class barnyard manure. Considering that the feeding value of alfalfa is nearly $30 per ton and the manure produced of high fertilizing value, the conclusion is that alfalfa is most profitable to the farmer when he feeds it to farm animals and applies the manure to the land.

Thus the story of alfalfa ends most happily when alfalfa is married to a home made live stock business.

Selling U. S. Bonds Short Is Risky Deal

Restricted Market for These Securities Makes the 'Bear's' Lot One Not Enviable.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—The trader who sells any Government bonds short takes a long chance of making a profit, because of the restricted market for these securities, and the short seller of those which bear coupons assumes a risk much greater than is attached to any active stock or bond on the Stock Exchange list. Government coupon bonds, particularly those which have the circulation privilege, are comparatively scarce.

The coupon bonds may be converted into registered bonds, but registered bonds may not be exchanged for others of the same clas which bear coupons.

The application of this provision to the issues which are used to secure bank note issues, naturally, has worked to cut down the number of coupon bonds outstanding and thereby greatly lessened the opportunity of short sellers for covering their contracts at times when they have the best advantage for a profitable transaction.

An expert on Government issues predicted yesterday that traders who went short on coupon 2s below 96 would have difficulty in covering at any price under par unless some development at Washington occurs to weaken them drastically.

No One Surprised at Passing of Dividend

National Railways of Mexico Made the Plaything of Every Rebel Chieftain.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Persons sufficiently interested in the National Railways of Mexico to watch earnings long ago decided that the company could not pay another semi-annual dividend on its first preferred stock while the revolution continued. Members of the New York board said the payment due August 10 would not be made; and when word came from Mexico City that the usual declaration expected at this time had been omitted by the directors, there was no surprise.

The Railways' lines have been the plaything of the rebels and bandits wherever they have congregated in numbers sufficient to defy the authorities. Under the delusion that one of the first rules of warfare is to destroy as much property as possible, the insurrectos have burned trestles and torn up track in which they, as natives of Mexico, had a proprietary interest.

There is a great deal of European money invested in the National Railways, as well as a very respectable amount of American capital but the Mexican Government owns $74,724,000 of the $150,000,000 common stock, $10,000,000 of the $57,662,000 of the first preferred and $38,278,00 of the $240,597,000 of second preferred.

Moreover, the Government will be held liable for the damage to the railways when peace is restored, so that every time a piece of property is destroyed the Mexican Government is saddled with additional obligations. Preliminary estimates for the last year indicate that the company earned almost $2,000,000 over its expenses and fixed charges, or about $500,000 less than the dividends paid.

PULLMAN'S YEAR.

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—The report of the Pullman company for the twelve months ended July 31, which will be published about a month hence, is expected to show the largest gross earnings in the corporation's history.

BEARS CHECKED BY DAMAGE IN WESTERN BELT

Small Demand for Forward Delivery in Spots Best Argument for Low Prices.

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 16.—Bearish activity, which had been encouraged by the anti-option legislation pending at Washington, has been somewhat restrained recently by reports of deterioration in the condition of the cotton crop in Texas and Oklahoma.

Unevenly distributed showers have fallen in both of those States within the last few days, but it is believed that what relief has come has been too late to prevent material damage to the crop in that section of the belt. Consequently the next bureau report is expected to show a further decline in condition from last month, when both Texas and Oklahoma fell off sharply.

The one redeeming feature in the crop situation at the moment is the improved outlook in the eastern half of the belt. According to reports received in this market, the crop in Alabama and in Georgia has undergone wonderful improvement since the date of the last bureau report. Should this improvement in the eastern belt continue, the deterioration likely to be shown in the Western belt will be offset, in a measure, by the improvement in the Atlantics.

It is believed that while conditions may be serious in those two States, rains within a week would yet permit the making of a fairly large crop, and it is argued that even if there were a shortage in the crop in the Western belt the increase apparent in the Atlantics, together with a normal yield in the Central belt, would result in a crop of at least 15,000,000 bales.

The most bearish feature in the general situation is the fact that there is less demand for forward deliveries in spots than has been the case in years. Fully good middling is being offered in this market at 45 points on October, and good middling at 15 points less for September delivery, with few, if any, buyers in sight. The slack spot demand is attributed to declining trade at Manchester and to the bearish sentiment engendered at Liverpool by the introduction of the Clarke bill in Congress.

News as to the outcome of the fight being made against the Clarke bill continues of a favorable character, and it is believed here now that the measure has been practically killed as a result of the criticism aimed at it by Southern newspapers generally.

The optimistic feeling prevailing here has been reflected by an advance of $600 in the price of New Orleans Cotton Exchange stock, two shares of which have sold this week for $2,100, with none offering at less than $2,500 now.

When the Clarke bill was first introduced, shares of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange declined below $1,500, whereas the stock had been $2,500 bid before the bill was introduced by Senator Clarke.

'L. & N.' Not Much Worried Over the Senatorial Probe

Busy Developing Its Own Lines, Has No Time To Buy New Holdings.

Interests familiar with affairs of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company are not apprehensive over the outcome of whatever action may be taken in connection with the resolution introduced in the Senate by Senator Lea. This resolution calls for investigation and report by the Interstate Commerce Commission of the ownership and control of the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis Railway Company and other subsidiary companies of the first mentioned road, "and the practices and methods of the Louisville and Nashville in attempting to preserve a monopoly in its territory."

It is not thought that there will be immediate legal action in the matter, as any investigation that may be made by the commission would necessarily consume a considerable amount of time, and it is considered more or less doubtful in the minds of some that sufficient evidence will be obtained to warrant the institution of a suit by the Government calling for the divorce of the lines involved.

It is known that the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis has lines running in territory which may be considered competitive with the Louisville and Nashville. But whether it can be established that any collusion exists or has existed between the two roads to abolish competition is quite another question. So far as te Tennessee Central Railroad's purchase by the Louisville and Nashville is concerned, it is understood that such a development has not been considered by the management of the last mentioned property.

The Louisville and Nashville, it is pointed out, is kept busy developing and improving its own road in order to care more expeditiously for the large traffic that is being offered, and is not in the market for other lines. It owns about 75 per cent of the stock of the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis, which virtually gives it control of that system. No doubt the management of the Louisville and Nashville will fight a suit, should it be instituted by the Government, to the bitter end.

At the present time the company is spending large amounts of money in double-tracking its main liens from a point about 10 miles above Nashville to Birmingham, Ala., a distance of over 300 miles. When this important work is completed the road will be in a position to handle its business in that territory much more effectively than at present. The double-track work is not being done on the old roadbed all the distance, as in many places lines are being straightened, and at Nashville one track is being run around the city to avoid congestion. It is proposed to utilize one of the tracks between Nashville and Birmingham for freight and the other for passengers.

Louisville and Nashville has a very large surplus and it is believed in some circles that before long stockholders will receive another "bonus" in stock. The last one of $12,000,000 was only about half what was expected, and at that time predictions were freely made that within a reasonable length of time something more in this connection might be looked for. Earnings of the company are substantial during the fiscal year ended June 30 last, there having been an estimated balance available for dividends approximately of 11 1-2 or 13 per cent. Last year there was a surplus available for dividends equal to 15.93 per cent on the $60,000,000 capital stock then outstanding.

NEWS FOR INVESTORS

Anaconda Copper Company's production for July exceeds June's by 600,000 pounds, although this is 1,000,000 pounds below the July output last year.

* * *

American Smelting and Refining Company earnings, although not so large as last year, owing to Mexican disturbances, will make no change in the regular dividend.

* * *

Minneapolis and St. Louis Railroad for the twelve months ended June 30 increased gross by $1,880,782 and net by $1,173,665, compared with last year.

Seaboard Air Line for the fiscal year increased total operating revenue $783,417 and net $1,028,700 over 1912. Surplus, which increased $835,558 over last year, is equal to 7 1-4 per cent on the preferred stock outstanding, compared with 3 3-4 per cent in 1912.

* * *

The St. Louis, Iron Mountain and Southern Railway Company has been authorized by the Missouri Public Service Commission to issue $28,584,500 first and refunding 40-year 6 per cent bonds, of which $26,730,000 are to replace bonds already outstanding, and the remainder for reimbursing the road for expenditures made for improvements and equipment.

NEW SEABOARD MANAGEMENT IS DOING WELL

Deficit of $121,000 in First Quarter Overcome and oGod Surplus Besides.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Seaboard Air Line in the year ended June 30 earned in excess of 7 per cent on $23,894,000. Final surplus was approximately $1,730,000, against $813,000 in 1912, both figures including only rail operations.

The showing reflects credit on the new management. In a year when the company's territory scored only about 60 per cent of a normal cotton crop, and when the initial three months' operations under the old management produced a deficit of $121,000, results for the succeeding nine months not only overcame these handicaps, but so far recovered that gross increased $1,523,000 and surplus over all charges increased $817,000.

On basis of nine months' operations under the new management, and allowing for effort necessary to pick up and recover the initial quarter's deficit, the property appears to be earning at rate of nearly $2,000,000 surplus annually, or equivalent to more than 8 per cent on the outstanding preferred. Total operating ratio in the past year was 72 per cent of gross. In 1912 it was 75 per cent.

Officials look forward to better than a $2,000,000 surplus in the current year. Crops offer excellent promise, with one of the largest cotton crops ever raised among the prospects this year. General business is moving in fair volume and traffic outlook shows no unfavorable signs.

PITTSBURG COAL MINES PRODUCING BIG PROFIT

PITTSBURG, Aug. 16.—Mines in the Pittsburg district are being operated to the limit fixed by car and labor supply. As these are very satisfactory, output is correspondingly large. There is not a very heavy demand for quick delivery. Contracts are calling for the greater part of the attention of operators.

Consumers have very little coal on hand and the increased activity in iron production may cause a stiffening of prices of both coal and coke.

This is not a "cookbook" in the ordinary sense. It is unique—the work of the foremost authority on salad-making, Olive M. Hulse.

"Salads" contains more than 200 original recipes—each a masterpiece in the art of making salads; 30 recipes for salad dressings, and a remarkable introductory chapter on "Salad Lore."

There are 95 pages and the printing and binding are most attractive. $1 Postpaid.

"DESSERTS"

This volume contains 155 pages. In it are more than 200 matchless recipes for the making of the most delicious desserts—French Pastries, Pies, Cakes, Puddings, Ices and Fruit Desserts. The introductory chapter on "Dessert Lore" reads more like a fairy story than the actual history of desserts.

In the preparation of "Desserts" Mrs. Hulse has had the co-operation of some of the most famous chefs in America. The result is the most fascinating and useful book of its kind ever published. $1 Postpaid.

Don't Delay—Send Now

Mrs. Hulse's "Salads" and "Desserts" are unique not only because of their invaluable recipes, but in the manner in which the author presents her subject. Her recipes enable the woman in the most moderate circumstances to match the skill of the French chef. Send to-day for "Salads" and "Desserts"—they are $1 each, prepaid. GIRL STICKS TO STORY OF HER FLIGHT WITH DIGGS

Marsha Warrington Says Former State Architect Took Advantage of Friendship in Elopement to Reno—Lived as Man and Wife.

Accused Appealed to Her to Keep Him Out of the Penitentiary, She Testifies—Court Cautions Jurors Not to Discuss the Case.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 16.—Her eyes averted from the gaze of Maury L. Diggs, former State Architect, on trial for white slavery, Marsha Warrington, the girl with whom he is alleged to have eloped to Reno, leaving behind a wife and family, finished her recital of her relations with the prisoner and remained steadfast to her story how he had taken advantage of a platonic friendship and against her will made her take the trip to the Nevada town, where they lived together as man and wife.

Though vigorously cross-examined, the girl's story was unshaken.

In concluding her testimony, Miss Warrington said:

"After arriving in Reno on March 10 we had luncheon and then we went to the Riverside Hotel, while Diggs and Caminetti went to a real estate office," she said. "They said they were going to rent a bungalow and that they intended to remain in Reno about six months.

Took Suite of Roome.

"When Diggs and Caminetti returned, Diggs registered and we went to a suite of rooms. We had two bedrooms, a parlor and a bath. Diggs and I had one room and Caminetti and Lola the other.

"We took a bungalow while we were there. We were never out of it except at night and never farther away than around the block. Diggs cautioned us not to be seen.

"When Chief Hillhouse came to arrest us on the morning of the 14th, we were still in bed. Diggs said: 'There are the police.'

"He understood that it was a serious situation, for he told me: 'It's up to you girls to keep us out of the penitentiary. Do everything you can to shield us.' He told us to say that Lola and I had occupied the front room and that he and Caminetti had slept in the rear room.

"Dear Pickles," He writes.

A letter addressed to "Dear Pickles," said to have been written to Miss Warrington by Diggs after his arrest, was shown to the jury. The letter contained this sentence:

"Don't worry now; everything will come out O. K., and you remember what I said to you, the last words?"

Miss Warrington was asked what were the "last words." Adjurations, she answered, not to tell anything that would incriminate the writer.

During the cross-examination Diggs constantly prompted the questions of his attorneys and steadily kept his eyes on the girl's veiled face, but she constantly avoided his gaze.

When the essentials of her previous testimony were called into doubt, she made her answers a stronger reaffirmation.

The courtroom was somewhat startled in the afternoon session by the emphatic admonitions of the judge to the jury that the case must not be discussed by the jurors, particularly with any friend of Diggs or C. Drew Caminetti, the latter a co-defendant in another case on a similar indictment. The judge said they must not even allow the case to be mentioned within their hearing or read about it in the newspapers.

Jurors Are Cautioned.

These are the usual instructions to jurors, but the emphasis with which they were twice reiterated by Judge Van Fleet this afternoon gave rise to inquiries which he would not satisfy. Theodore Roche, who thus far has conducted the Government's case, merely said there was reason for the court's order. One juror admitted he had been in company where the case was discussed, though he had not joined in the talk.

Two minor witnesses—the managing editor of a Sacramento newspaper and the Probation Officer of Sacramento County—denied to-day that there had been any scandal connected with the names of the four on the point of exploding into print or that arrests were impending if they remained in Sacramento. Miss Warrington had testified that Diggs had told her such was the case, and this fear had been her prime motive for leaving home.

May Yohe to Re-Wed Lord Hope, Is Rumor

American Singer Wins Back Her Former Husband With Favorite Music Hall Song.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—Rumors that Lord Francis Hope may re-wed his former wife, May Yohe, are current. A week ago Lord Hope visited the London Opera House, where Miss Yohe is appearing with considerable success. The former Lady Hope was in excellent voice and sang "Honey, Ma Honey" that she often sang to her husband during their life together.

Lord Francis is said to have been touched by the song. Overtures for a reconciliation, it is said, have been made through Lord Francis' brother the Duke of Newcastle, and the Duke's lawyer, Mr. Isitt, husband of Adeline Genee.

4 Royal Bridesmaids For Manuel's Wedding

Eighty Princes and Princesses Will Attend Ex-King's Betrothed on September 4.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, Aug 16.—Arrangements for ex-King Manuel's wedding to Princess Augustine Hohenzollern on September 4 at Sigmaringen show the ceremony will be gorgeous.

Eighty royal princes and princesses will attend, including the Prince of Wales, representing King George, and four princesses as bridesmaids.

The Kaiser excuses himself from being present on account of the German army maneuvers. He and other monarchs will be represented by princes.

Col. Degrange Ill In Paris Hospital

Prominent New Orleans Man Is Compelled to Undergo Operation Following Sickness Aboard Ship.

Special Cable to The American.

PARIS, Aug. 16.—Colonel Joseph H. Degrange, of New Orleans, is ill in the American Hospital at Neuilly. Mr. Degrange's illness developed first on board a steamer on his way to Europe early in the summer.

On July 22 he was taken to the hospital for an operation for the removal of the carbuncle on the back of his neck. A second operation became necessary on Tuesday of this week. The operations, while painful, were not dangerous, and the attending physicians say that he will be able to be about within a few days.

Papers Have Right To Refuse Advertising

Court Rules That Objectionable Matter May Be Declined, Despite Previous Contract.

ST. PAUL, Aug. 16.—That newspapers have a right to decline advertising when they deem it objectionable, even if it is submitted to them under a yearly contract, is the effect of a decision handed down today in the District Court here. The case came up when a local department store was sued by a local paper to recover money due under a yearly contract, which the store management had declared void because certain portions of its advertising copy had been rejected by the paper.

Joy Rider Compelled To Pension Victim

In Lieu of Jail Sentence, Speeder Must Pay Girl $30 a Month Until Recovery.

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 16.—Instead of sending J. S. McNutt, a convicted joy rider, to prison, Judge Wilbur, of the Superior Court, suspended a five-year sentence over him to-day, on condition that he pay $30 a month until she recovers to Miss Olive Davis, a young woman injured when McNutt's machine was wrecked. Physicians say Miss Davis' injuries are permanent.

The girl, in a plaster cast, testified to-day that McNutt was speeding while intoxicated.

'Pussy Sneak' Routs Staid Old Tangos

Creepy Glide Brings New York Team Applications to Teach New Dance.

ONSET, MASS., Aug. 16.—The "tangoes," "hugs," "trots," "grapevine" and other similar dances have been cast into darkness by the creation introduced this afternoon at the local dancing casino by a New York couple. It is called the "pussy sneak," and is danced with the rubber-soled shoes commonly worn at the seaside.

The "pussy sneak" is a creepy sort of dance, with a few glides, but catchy and the New York team that "put the stunt on" had several applications tonight to teach it.

AFFINITY EARLE ABOUT TO LOSE 'DEAREST' DORA

Third Wife of Famous Wooer, Declared "Sweetest of Them All," Files Suit.

TELLS STORY OF MEETING

Did Not Know of Long Marital Record of Poet Until She Had Joined Him.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—Dora of the laughing brown eyes, third wife and unnumbered affinity of Ferdinand Pinney Earle, New York poet, artist and record wooer—described by him at the time of their marriage in June, 1911, as "the dearest, sweetest and loveliest of them all"—said to-day that she is about to seek her freedom.

She said she actually has begun suit in New York for an absolute divorce, basing her action on evidence she says she has obtained of Earle's behavior on the Continent since she parted from him in March.

Mrs. Earle is now only 25, twelve years younger than Earle. Her maiden name was Helen Theodora Sidford. From her father, an English architect, she inherited artistic tastes and is an artist of pronounced talent. She is a very attractive young woman.

Lived at "Earle's Folly."

The original story that reached America of her relations with Earle narrated a meeting in the fields, a walk home hand in hand, swift and ardent wooing, marriage within the month and a start on a tour of the world, which wound up prematurely in the country home in Monroe, Orange County, known as "Earle's Folly."

Her story to-day sets right much of that early fiction, for the meeting with Earle seems to have been conventional.

"How did you come to give yourself to a man of Earle's matrimonial record?" was asked.

"I knew nothing of his past until after our marriage," she replied. "Whatever his reputation in America, I had lived in a quiet English town and had never heard of his antecedents. After our marriage his life story was cabled from America to the London newspapers. Clippings were sent to me on the Continent on our honeymoon by my mother.

He Softened the Blow.

"It was a terrible shock to find that I had been so utterly deceived, but I accepted the explanation and excuses offered by Mr. Earle and his assurances that I would never have anything of which to complain.

"After our wedding we spent two months on the Continent. In September, 1911, three months following the wedding, we went to America, and lived happily at his place in Monroe, N. Y. Our first baby was born there in April, 1912. I remained with him in America until last January, and then came here to visit my mother, with whom I have since lived. It was arranged that Mr. Earle would come here for the summer.

"At the time of my return I had not the slightest expectation that our relations would go wrong. We kept in constant correspondence. He arrived here in March, remained two days and then went to the Continent. My second baby was born here April 20. Her father has never seen her.

"Soon after he went from here in March information reached me which left me no option except to prepare divorce proceedings. He has appealed to me to abondon them, but that is quite impossible after his conduct as disclosed to me."

Mrs. Earle declined to anticipate by publication the specific evidence she is reserving for the court. Thus the name of the co-respondent is withheld. Judging from Mrs. Earle's convincing manner of speech, she thinks she has ample ground for her petition.

Earle's Love Affairs.

Earle's love affairs were first brought to public notice in 1908 when he took to his Monroe home Miss Julia Kuttner, and informed his wife that the newcomer was his affinity and soul-mate. The rightful Mrs. Earle at that time was formerly Miss Emilie Marie Fischbacher, daughter of a bookseller on the banks of the Seine in Paris, whom Earle had married in 1903 and by whom he had a son, Harold Erwin.

Mrs. Earle departed for France, with a reported money settlement, and obtained a divorce there. Earle, Miss Kuttner and Miss Kuttner's mother went to Europe and domiciled themselves in Venice. Their departure from Monroe was hastened by threats of neighbors there to punish Earle without process of law.

Within a few months Mrs. Kuttner decided a marriage was necessary and a ceremony was performed at the British consulate. Soon afterward a son was born and named Edmond Erwin Earle. In 1910 the second wife sued for the anulment of the marriage on the ground that the ceremony had taken place before Earle was free under French law.

She also charged cruelty, especially following the birth of the child. After long consideration the Westchester County Court granted the petition of annulment and declared the child legitimate.

Earle had not defended either suit, but while the courts were trying to dispose of the second he sailed to Europe with Miss Gertrude Buell Dunn, a bright-eyed young woman from Chicago, who had "advanced" ideas. It was announced that together they would work out and publish a new philosophy on the ideal relations of the sexes. Their zeal subsided and they parted without scandal.

Weds Model; Loses Home; Goes to Work

'I Should Worry,' Remarks Rich Retired Merchant's Son When Disowned.

WORCESTER, MASS., Aug. 16.—Because William A. Lyttle, Jr., son of Colonel W. A. Lyttle, a wealthy retired merchant and erstwhile member of the Governor's Council, eloped with Miss Thyra Linea Johnson, a 19-year-old artist's model of this city, to Putnam., Conn., he has been disowned by his father.

Colonel Lyttle has ordered his son to give the girl up. Disregarding that mandate, young Lyttle brought matters to a crisis by quietly slipping out of town a few days ago with his sweeaheart and having the matrimonial knot tied.

"I should worry," said young Lyttle when he was told of his father's decision, and then he promptly started with his bride to Detroit, where he will learn the automobile business.

Court Frees 'Old Maid' Who Resents Epithet

Judge Rules Spinster Was Right in Smiting Married Woman With Chair.

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—Unmarried women of mature years who are subjected to ridicule as "old maids" have won a victory in court. Miss Minnie Flatley, of the Colonial Hotel, is 31, and Mrs. Lizzie Varley, of the same address, has been calling her an "old maid."

Miss Flatley resented the sarcasm by smiting Mrs. Varley with a chair and punishing her seriously. When she was arraigned in court Judge Gemmill, after hearing the story, said "Discharged."

"I think this sort of provocation justifies any assault up to murder," said the judge. "It is despicable to humiliate a woman."

Father Sells Girl at Auction in Detroit

Authorities Take Steps to Have Marriage of Syrian Child to Turk Annulled.

DETROIT, MICH., Aug. 16.—The marriage license department of the County Clerk's office has taken steps to nullify an auction sale of Marie Aman, a Syrian girl, only 15 years old. Her father made the sale. There were half a dozen bidders.

The girl had been in the country only seven weeks, and was brought here by her father expressly to be sold. A Turk, Mehammed Haj Seleem, was the successful bidder.

The bargain was sealed immediately by the reading of an Oriental marriage service. The girl had a sweetheart who could not bid high enough to win her.

Triplets in Home Where 6 Twins Live

President Wilson Is Honored Three Times in the Naming of the Babies.

LAONIA, WIS., Aug. 16.—Three pairs of twins and a set of triplets is the record that Mrs. Joseph Checota, of this town, boasts. The triplets will be named Woodrow, Wilson and W. W. Joseph, in honor of the President.

The father believes this is a record that will stand for a long time to come.

Mr. and Mrs. Checota have been married six years and in that time have had nine children. All but one are living.

Rockefeller's Rival In Riches Tips Dime

Nitrate King Hands Man Ten Cents for Returning Lost Pocketbook.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Senor E. E. Ossio, the Nitrate King of Chili, who has declared John D. Rockefeller a pauper in comparison with himself, overwhelmed a steward on the United Fruit steamer Pastores yesterday by the size of a tip.

The steward had picked up the Nitrate King's wallet and, running after him, bowed low and handed over the pocketbook. Opening it, Senor Ossio pulled out a dollar bill, then changed his mind, and, taking a dime from his pocket, handed it to the steward.

Evidence Found of Prehistoric Dentists

Archaeologist of Columbia University Discovers Ancient Skulls With Gold-Filled Teeth.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Apparent evidence that dentistry was a profession in prehistoric ages has been disclosed by Professor Marshall H. Saville, archaeoligist of Columbia University, who returned here to-day from an exploring expedition in South America. Human skulls containing teeth filled with gold were among the interesting discoveries made in Ecuador.

Charlton at Last in Italy's Grasp

Wife Slayer Loses 3-Year Fight

Now on Ocean on Way to Trial

Porter Charlton, young American, who killed beautiful wife and is now on way to face trial in Italy.

Young Prisoner Is Confident He Will Escape Spending Life in Solitary Confinement.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Porter Charlton, after three years' fight against extradition from America, is in the clutches of the Italian Government and to-day is on the high seas, bound for Italy and for trial on the charge of killing his beautiful young wife and sinking her body in Lake Como in June, 1910.

In spite of the ordeal that faces him, Charlton left New York as cheerful as a schoolboy. Three years in close confinement had repressed his natural buoyancy, but the prospect of a sea voyage, even with a trial for murder awaiting him at his journey's end, restored it to a considerable degree.

"I'll be back for Christmas!" he cried, waving a good-bye from the liner as it pulled out. All the time he has declared that he will be acquitted, in spite of the fact that he confessed to killing his wife on their honeymoon. Extenuating circumstances, his friends declare, will have their weight on the Italian jury.

Charlton's quarters on the liner are isolated, and he is not permitted to mingle with the other passengers. He travels third class, as the Italian Government does not provide first-class accommodations for prisoners.

Faces Living Death.

Unless the contention of his insanity can be proved, a living death surely will be the fate of Porter Charlton, a hideous confinement that is far worse than death on the gallows.

Extenuating circumstances, it is expected, can not be revealed of sufficient strength to obtain his acquittal, and unless his defense prove insanity, he must go to prison. There is no death sentence in Italy.

And imprisonment in Italy is a dreadful punishment, feared far more than the electric chair, the gallows, or the garrote. It is invested with mental torture of such degree that few who live through it more than a few years are sound of mind.

Charlton is known to have a sensitive, nervous temperament. His behavior toward his wife proves him high-strung. To a person of his psychological make-up incarceration under the Italian system would be certainly destructive of mental balance.

For the first ten years of a life sentence the prisoner may be kept in utter darkness and in the strictest solitude, with nothing to eat and drink but plain bread and water. A few weeks of this treatment generally is sufficient to reduce the most unemotional criminal to a state of nervous collapse.

Insanity Practically Only Hope.

His attorneys hope to present in the Italian courts the great mass of evidence brought to bear in the United States Supreme Court to prove him insane. Justice Lurton, in the opinion which declared that Charlton must go back to Italy to stand trial, admitted that the evidence to substantiate the insanity plea was preponderous.

The opinion of the Supreme Court brought to an end the three years' unsuccessful fight of Charlton and his family against extradition to Italy. It was in June, 1910, that he killed his wife, according to his own confession. After the crime he fled, but was caught at Hoboken, N. J., when the liner landed there. The brother of the slain wife there met him, and caused him to be placed under arrest.

The first night of his imprisonment in New Jersey a confession was produced, bearing his name, and generally supposed to be authentic.

"My wife and I lived happily together, but she had an uncontrollable temper," read the confession. "So had I. On the night of the murder she had the worst outbreak of temper I ever saw.

"I told her to keep quiet or I would make her quiet. Then she had another outbreak. I took up a wooden mallet, with which I had been repairing a table, and hit her on the head and body two or three times. At midnight I put the body in a trunk, dragged it to a small pier near the house, and threw it overboard."

His wife was a beautiful young woman, although eight years older than he, who was only 21. The two were on their honeymoon when the murder occurred.

Mrs. Charlton was the divorced wife of Neville H. Castle, a San Francisco lawyer. Charlton is the

Hidden Pistol Seen As Girl Lifts Dress

Young Woman Is Arrested When Masked Battery Is Exposed as She Crosses Street.

UNIONTOWN, PA., Aug. 16.—Holding her dress a little too high to avoid the water as she crossed Main street to-day, Mattie Pearce was arrested when she revealed a large revolver in a holster fastened around her leg at the knee.

She was taken to the police station, where she showed the officers the new mode of carrying a gun. Strapped to a leg was the holster in which she carried the revolver.

The girl explained that there were "bad men" at Uniontown and she was not taking any chances with them. She stated that she had worn the revolver in that position for some time.

Mattie said she did not know she was holding her dress quite as high as she was, and that she had forgotten for a moment about the masked battery. She was released on bail.

Wife Paints Story of Her Life on Walls

St. Louis Matron Does Remarkable Work She Calls 'A Young Girl's Love."

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 16.—One of the most-talked-of works of art in St. Louis hangs in the home of Dr. Robert E. Wilson and was painted by Mrs. Wilson. The canvas is called "The Story of a Young Girl's Love," and covers the entire wall space in the parlor of this magnificent Colonial home. Two years were devoted to the work.

The painting is divided into panels, the size of each picture depending on the amount of space to be covered. Artists pronounce the canvas a masterpiece. Mrs. Wilson's friends say that the painting illustrates her blissful married state.

TOWN CELEBRATES WEDDING.

AXTELL, KANS., Aug. 16.—All the citizens of this town celebrated today the sixty-second wedding anniversary of Stephen and Margaret Stout, aged 85 and 81, respectively, whose home for more than a third of a century has been the social center here.

FRANK'S COUNSEL BIT BY BIT BUILDS STRUCTURE TO CRUSH CONLEY STORY

Intricate Mass of Circumstantial Evidence Is Assembled to Disprove Direct Testimony of Negro and Corroboration Theories of State.

DEFENDANT'S MORALS TO BE NEXT BATTLE GROUND

An intricate structure is being raised by Leo Frank's lawyers as his defense against the formidable case made out by the prosecution. Little by little its parts were laid, all during last week's period of the trial, with no less than 50 witnesses as agents.

No one of the many witnesses for the defense has given testimony that in itself was essentially significant. But each one has embodied an attack on the State's case, testifying against the character of a damaging anti-Frank witness, or to Frank's good character, or as to the likelihood of expert testimony that the State drew forth.

The case of the defense, as it was made out with the close of the week's session, is a structure of little bits. It is an attempt to overcome a long line of circumstantial evidence and the direct testimony of a single witness—Jim Conley—with another long line of circumstances. In this case as the week has revealed the State is truly the aggressive, the defense truly the defensive.

Arnold Charges Scheme.

Most strenuous of the attempts of the defense has been that to prevent the examination of witnesses along the lines of Frank's alleged immoral conduct. Time and again Solicitor Dorsey has asked witnesses if they have heard of certain actions by Frank in connection with young girls. Each time a heated objection has come from Reuben Arnold, Frank's attorney, who has charged that the questions are without foundation, and that they are framed merely to set the prisoner in an evil light before the jury.

To Lawyer Arnold's objections was added the protest of the prisoner's mother, in a startling, dramatic manner. Plainly overwrought, bordering on the hysterical, Mrs. Frank rose from her seat after Dorsey asked J. Ashley Jones if he had heard of Frank's immoral behavior with a little girl.

Mrs. Frank was trembling and pale faced. She advanced toward the Solicitor and pointed a finger at him.

"No, he hasn't heard," she cried, her voice almost a shriek. "Nor you either."

The situation was doubly dramatic, coming as it did unexpectedly. Mrs. Frank has been apparently the calmest and coolest and most courageous person in the courtroom since the trial began, not a quiver of her face betokening lack of composure. No one expected the outburst from her.

Dorsey's Look Triumphant.

To all the protests of the lawyers, however, Solicitor Dorsey declared that the State can prove the charges of gross immoral conduct against Frank, and will bring witnesses to that effect on rebuttal. There was something triumphant in the Solicitor's bearing when Frank's attorneys introduced testimony to prove the good character of the prisoner.

This lets down the bars. The prosecution now may produce witnesses in rebuttal to attack Frank's character and his behavior, in case they have such evidence in hand. The Solicitor announces that he has this evidence and will produce it.

At one time during the week's course of the trial it was hinted that forty or fifty witnesses will be called by the State when the case again comes into its hands in reply to the testimony for the defense. In that event, the trial will be prolonged through the greater part of next week. Several days undoubtedly will be required for the lawyers' argument of the case, which has become one of the most complicated and tangled of Georgia's legal history. And thus it is not unlikely that the last week of the month will come before the verdict of the jury is announced.

Testimony on which the defense relies most was produced in that of several medical experts—Dr. George Bachman, Dr. T. H. Hancock, Dr. Willis Westmoreland, Dr. W. S. Kendrick and Dr. William Owens. All these men were called to reply to the statement of Dr. Harris, of the State Board of Health, whose testimony is believed to be hurtful to the defense.

He had declared that the undigested bits of cabbage in Mary Phagan's stomach proved she was killed within a short period after her midday meal. The whole contention of the State is that Frank killed Mary Phagan before 12:30 o'clock on the afternoon of April 26, and the fact has been established that she ate dinner less than an hour before that time.

But the experts called by the defense were almost unanimous in declaring that Dr. Harris could have been mistaken, however positively he stated his opinion. A bitter fight developed on cross-examination of each of the experts.

Bitter also was the fight that came over the testimony of Dr. William Owens. It was he who timed the actions of mimics when they rehearsed in pantomime Conley's version of the death of Mary Phagan some time after his arrest. Eighteen and a half minutes were taken up by the incident, a length of time which seems to offset the State's theory that the murder was done and the body disposed of within a short time. Solicitor Dorsey objected to the introduction of the testimony, but Judge Roan allowed it to be entered, with the remark that he would study the arguments for and against and announce later a judgment as to its admissibility.

The hope and belief of the defense that the commission of the crime may be laid on the shoulders of Jim Conley was revealed in the course of the Owens examination, when Lawyer Arnold made a heated statement.

Arnold Accuses Conley.

Solicitor Dorsey was objecting to the admission of the evidence concerning the murder in pantomime, and spoke sarcastically of its features.

"Your honor," he protested to Judge Roan, "you're surely not going to allow a thing like this."

"I don't know what I am going to do," replied Judge Roan.

The Solicitor turned to Arnold.

"Well," he asked, "how long did it take in this farce to choke the little girl to death?"

"We don't know how long it took the nigger to kill the child," replied the lawyer for the defense, hotly.

The Solicitor turned to the Judge at this accusation of Conley.

"Now, your honor," he said, "that won't do."

Judge Roan agreed with him, and the examination proceeded.

Following the examination of the expert witnesses the defense produced men who were classmates and associates of Frank in college to testify to his good character. It was at this juncture that the hearing of the Solicitor plainly revealed triumph. He had contended all during the trial that he would produce evidence of Frank's immoral behavior if an opening were given him. This was the opening.

The first four character witnesses were A. L. Lane and R. A. Knight, of Brooklyn, and Philip Nash, of Greenwood, N. J., and J. Ashley Jones, an insurance man of Atlanta. Others, the defense has announced, will be brought forth. The attitude of Frank's lawyers is that of defying the prosecution to attack the prisoner's moral character.

500 Birds Kept in Cage on Housetop

St. Louis Collector Has Scores of Varieties and Many of Them Are Carnivorous.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 16.—A huge cage, containing 500 birds, is built on top of the home of D. J. Pishorski, No. 1911 North Twelfth street. Not one of these birds is for sale.

Instead Pishorski adds to his collection almost every week, and will continue to do so until he possesses a pair of every variety of birds.

Almost every land is represented in this assemblage of feathered warblers. They range from the nightingale of Japan to the Missouri jaybird.

In this collection are probably 106 birds that can not exist on seeds, lettuce and grass. They belong to the carnivorous class and must feed upon insects.

John Lind Has Most Unusual Job

But Lind Is Most Unusual Man

Calling Bluffs Is His Specialty

Former Governor John Lind, of Minnesota, who is in Mexico to tell President Huerta that President Wilson disapproves of him an dhis policies.

Former Governor Has No Official Position, but Has Been Selected in Ticklish Diplomatic Work.

A plain man named John Lind is in Mexico City awaiting an opportunity to tell the explosive and dynamic President Huerta that President Wilson, of the United States, disapproves of him and his government.

This man is not the Ambassador of the United States. He has no more an official standing than a Chinese coolie. He is a plain American citizen come to discuss matters.

President Huerta may refuse to see him. The President might tell John Lind to go back to Minnesota whence he came, and still would be on safe ground.

But President Huerta will see him, and will talk to him, and will listen to what he has to say. Because John Lind, as all the world knows, is the personal representative of President Woodrow Wilson. He does not stand for the Government of the United States, nor represent any plan of intervention or anexation. He is merely the ears ad mouth of Woodrow Wilson, who wants to know exactly what is going on and why.

The mission on which President Wilson sent John Lind, former Governor of Minnesota, to Mexico, is one of the most remarkable in diplomatic history.

Holds No Office.

"It is to be pointed out that Mr. Lind holds no office which is recognized between nations," announced dispatches from Washington. "A grave responsibility rests on his shoulders. * * * The administration insisted that it should be made plain that Mr. Lind was acting entirely in an unofficial capacity in his mission to Mexico, but that he possesses most extraordinary powers in speaking for President Wilson is admitted."

It is plain that John Lind is on a most unusual mission, to be successful in which he must be calm, cool, careful, tactful, unruffled and all that. He must be alive to his responsibility. He must expect rebuffs. He must be honest, fearless, sincere.

John Lind's friends say he is all that. His enemies concede that he is every bit of it. President Wilson was certain that John Lind would meet all requirements, and so he sent to St. Paul for him.

John Lind is a former Governor of Minnesota. Years after he had served his first term, the Democrats nominated him again. They wanted him badly, and in the conventions mentioned the name of nobody else.

But Lind was on his way to Alaska. He refused to turn back to accept the nomination. He refused to say yes or no. They had disregarded his wishes back home concerning a county option plank in the platform, and he scornfully said nothing to their overtures to come back and be Governor.

Weeks passed. Election time drew near. Politicians in Minnesota were certain that Lind would run. Who ever refused a gubernatorial nomination with certain victory to result from it?

Lind's Refusal Firm.

But when Lind got back, he broke his silence with a firm refusal. He would have none of the Governorship. And it being too late for the Democrats to rally around anyone else, the Republican Eberhardt won out.

It is the same calm, imperturbable John Lind for whom President Wilson invented a job as his personal representative. An unusual job it was, and President Wilson looked about for an unusual man to fill it. He decided that his friend John Lind was the man.

John Lind comes naturally by his impassiveness. He was born in Sweden and came to America a boy of 11, when his mother and father decided, like hundreds of other Swedes, to move to the new country and try to find their fortunes in the great Northwest. They came over and moved into their log cabin at Goodhue, Minn.

John Lind went to the common schools in his home town until he was 17. Then he taught school himself, saving his money that he might enter the University of Michigan. Then he practiced law, got married, moved to Minneapolis, held the job of receiver in a land office, went to Congress, lost out for re-election after three terms, served as lieutenant and quartermaster in the Twelfth Minnesota Volunteers during the war with Spain; ran for Governor and was defeated, all before 1898.

But when he came back from the war, the pleased Democrats named him as their candidate for Governor, and won with him. All Minnesota knew him by that time as a calm, self-contained, capable, good-hearted lawyer who never beat about the bush and who usually managed to call the other fellow's bluff. Out in Minnesota they like that kind of fellow.

Takes Defeat Calmly.

In 1900, a bad year for Democrats, he was beaten for re-election. John Lind took his defeat calmly. He just stuck around, practiced law, ran for Congress again, and was elected. After retirement here, he worked plainly and simply and prosperously until President Wilson, knowing him for a worker and a plain-talking, hard-fisted person, sent for him to go to Mexico. It was in the interim, about 1910, that he refused the offer of Minnesota Democrats to make him Governor again.

Mr. Lind is a man of action, cool-headed, alert, and a fighter; but above all he is silent and inscrutable. It is this quality which is going to stand him in good stead in the present situation, and it is the quality which no doubt proved very forceful in moving President Wilson to appoint him.

In all the words of criticism of Mr. Lind's mission to Mexico—and there have been many to criticise the President's course—there has been no hint of dissatisfaction with the personal qualities of the man. It is pointed out that Mr. Lind's mission in Mexico will fail. He is going to tell President Huerta that President Wilson disapproves of him and his government. But none has said that it will fail because of his personality, and it is certain that it will not fail because the President's representative talks too much. If it is to be a game of bluff, John Lind is the man to play it.

AFTER 50 YEARS MOTHER OF 8 IS ENABLED TO SEE

Although 66 Years Old, She Travels From Home to Hospital All Alone.

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—Fifty years ago a little girl was stricken blind.

She was 16, and never had seen the man whom she later married. In her home at Hillsdale, Mich., she became the mother of eight children.

The father died a little later and they went out into the world, but the mother never had seen their faces.

"But every night I taught them to pray: "God, give mother back her sight before she dies,'" she said in Chicago. "And their prayers have been answered."

The woman, now bent and feeble is Mrs. Mary J. Welsh, and is back in her Hillsdale home, her sight restored. Mrs. Welsh during the last month has been in the Wesley Hospital here. The operation that gave her back her sight, surgeons say, was one of the most remarkable on record. It consisted in the removal of a cataract of fifty years standing.

Mrs. Welsh came to the hospital from her home alone. On her breast she wore the inscription, "I am blind. I am going to the Wesley Hospital, Chicago. Please direct me," on a large card.

A chaplain of the hospital, the Rev. M. W. Satterfield, delivered an address in Hilsdale several months ago. He told of the charitable work done by the hospital. The white-haired blind woman heard him. She groped her way forward.

"Can you do anything for me?" she asked. "I only want to see my babies before I go. I have been praying."

A month ago the Methodist congregation took up a collection which made it possible for her to make the trip to Chicago.

Perhaps the 'Pied Piper' Can Explain

'What Becomes of Rats That Die Natural Deaths?' Scientist Wants to Know.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—An article in the current public health bulletin, issued to-day, makes a mystery of the question:

"What becomes of rats which die natural deaths?"

The article was prepared by Surgeon Victor G. Heiser, chief quarantine officer of the Philippine Islands, who had charge of the rat-destroying campaign in Manila.

He states that the average rat mortality for the Philippine city is 2,500 a month. He seeks to find out what becomes of the bodies of those that die each day.

"It appears that at least many hundreds of rats disappear each month from Manila by natural means, the exact nature of which is not known, but if it could be discovered the knowledge might be useful in the destruction of rats."

Dogs Succeed Boys On Chickasaw Links

Troubles With Latter Send Golfers Scurrying for Tamer Kind of Caddies.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 16.—Bird dogs to replace caddies and retrieve lost golf balls will soon make their appearance on the municipal links at Overton Park, according to an announcement made by City Hall officials.

J. P. Clages, dog fancier and expert trainer, has been schooling the animals at the links for several weeks and the dogs will be given a trial, and if they prove adept, they will be used regularly.

The canine caddies are the result of numerous troubles with boys, who were put under charge of the Juvenile Court for various offenses committed at the links.

Girl Asleep 10 Days Apparently Is Dead

New York Sufferer Has 86 Convulsions Before Relapsing Into Comatose State.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Jeannette Guttman, the 13-year-old daughter of a plumbing contractor, living at 1046 Tiffany street, the Bronx, for ten days has been lying in a state of coma in the Hydropathic Institute, 2011 Madison avenue.

With the exception of a faint blush of crimson on the girl's cheek, she apparently is lifeless. Life has been sustained by feeding her brandy and predigested milk, and the process of nourishment has been so successful that the girl has not lost any weight.

According to Dr. Gilbert Miller, Miss Guttman has been an epileptic for about ten years. Three days before she relapsed into a comatose state she had 86 convulsions.

From Dr. Miller it was learned that her temperature was just normal, while there was no accentuation of the pulse. Efforts have been made to produce some kind of response from the girl, without result.

HIGH COST OF LIVING BAR TO FREE LUNCHES

LA CROSSE, WIS., Aug. 16.—While saloonkeepers of Connecticut are preparing to go into court to resist the law which forbids free lunches in saloons, liquor men of La Crosse are circulating a petition which will be presented to the Common Council asking for the passage of an ordinance making the free lunch unlawful. All saloonkeepers in town except two have signed it.

Downtown proprietors who have been setting up expensive lunches are the instigators of the movement. They declare the cost of meats and vegetables is so high they can no longer afford it.

BOY FINANCIER FIGHTING FOR PRISON PAROLE

Earl W. Butler, of Canton, Ill., Seeks to Escape Penalty for Banking Methods.

CANTON, ILL., Aug. 16.—Earl W. Butler, the boy banker, whose career in frenzied finance wrecked two banks in Fulton and one in Peoria County in 1910, and ended by landing Butler in the Joliet penitentiary with an indeterminate sentence of from one to three years, again is making strenuous efforts through his attorneys and friends, to obtain his release from the State Board of Pardons.

So far the boy banker has not made much progress toward getting his freedom, because of the position taken by former State's Attorney W. S. Jewell, under whose incumbency Butler was convicted of embezzlement in connection with the Ellisville bank, and who is supported in his view of the matter by the present State's Attorney, M. P. Rice.

Butler was convicted in the Fulton County Circuit Court in October, 1911, over a year after his three banks closed their doors, and he was taken to Joliet in November of the same year. He has served nearly two years in the penitentiary and has another year to remain there, if his sentence is carried out to the limit. In addition to imprisonment, the verdict in his case imposed a fine of $2,800, but it is the expectation that he will try to schedule out of this obligation.

Before Butler left the Fulton County jail, after sentence was passed, his attorneys began efforts to save him from the penitentiary.

Science Pleads for Bats, Insect Killers

University Professor Says Can Not See, but Are Guided by Sound.

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA, Aug. 16.—That the bat by killing night-flying insects is a benefit to humanity; that he can not really see at night, as is popularly believed, but directs his flight and hunts his prey by sound; that, as a rule, he devours his prey in full flight—these are among the interesting statements in a plea for the bat which Dr. Joseph Grinnell, of the university faculty, has included in a recent paper in which he says:

"A vast quantity of night-flying insects are destroyed by bats every 24 hours. It can be seen, therefore, that bats continue the warfare on insect life which is so incessantly waged by the birds during the daytime.

"All bats have enormously developed ears, and their sense of hearing is doubtless very acute. It is suggested that the drone of a June beetle sounds to a bat as does the roar of a biplane motor to us."

Father and Son Vote For Every President

Pennsylvania Pair Hold Suffrage Record That Is Unequaled in United States.

TUNKHANNOCK, PA., Aug. 16.—George C. Miller, of Tunkhannock, claims that he and his father, George Miller, Sr., and the only father and son in the United States who have voted at every Presidential election, commencing with Washington, in 1788, to the present time.

The father voted until 1852, being then 90 years of age. He and son George C., then 22, both cast their ballot for Winfield Scott for President. The son has voted at every Presidential election since, and is now 83 years old.

The father, when about 30 years old, removed from near Harrisburg to Tunkhannock, where he opened the first gun store in that place. He died at the age of 93.

The son is the last of a family of ten children, and is in good health, with a prospect of voting for some years to come.

Border Officer Who Killed Six Men Dies

Louis Kreeger Also Convicted His Son, Who Will Attend Funeral Under Guard.

TRINIDAD, COLO., Aug. 16.—Luis M. Kreeger, 68 years old, for nearly forty years one of the prominent peace officers of the Southwest, is dead at his home here. He had served variously as Sheriff, Under Sheriff, town marshal and special deputy in this county, and during that time he had figured in almost every adventure with criminals of any importance, and no less than six men are known to have been victims of his marksmanship.

Kreeger was a native of Missouri and came here in 1868. He achieved fame late in the seventies by killing Rice Brown, jockey and cowpuncher, then employed by the Thomas outfit. In trailing a quartet who were accused of robbing the Victor-American Coal Company's pay wagon near Gray Creek in 1910, Kreeger obtained part of the evidence which resulted in the conviction of his own son, "Quick Trigger" Kreeger. The son, under guard, will attend the funeral.

AUTO AS MATADOR SAVES FARMER FROM MAD BULL

ELGIN, ILL., Aug. 16.—Matadors may be succeeded by automobiles as bullfighters. This was proven when Peter Green, a farmer, 60 years old, of Huntley, was being gored by a bull in one of his pastures. His screams attracted an automobile party of three men, who were in the road. They witnessed the attack for a moment, then the driver of the big touring car made a dash into the pasture and after the bull.

The horn was tooted and tooted, and the bull finally was driven away from the helpless farmer. Three of Green's ribs were broken, but he will recover.

Mr. Hearst Tells Why He Keeps Oil Letters From Lobby Inquiry

Publisher Does Not Wish to Associate Already Proven Documents With Series of Exaggerated Accusations as Mulhall Confession Seems To Be.

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 16.—The following is a letter from Mr. William Randolph Hearst in reply to a letter sent to him by Congressman Clyde H. Tavenner asking Mr. Hearst to put the Standard Oil letters before the Garrett lobby investigation committee in the House of Representatives:

Los Angeles, Cal., Aug. 5, 1913.

Hon. Clyde H. Tavenner, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Sir:

Did you write me a letter and make the letter public, asking me to submit all the Standard Oil letters that I have in my possession to the House committee now investigating the charges of lobbying made by a certain Mulhall?

I would be very glad to submit again to the Congressional committee or to any responsible body the Standard Oil letters which I have already submitted many times to the public and to bodies which more or less accurately and sincerely represent the public.

I would prefer, however, not to submit these Standard Oil letters in connection with the Mulhall letters and charges for the simple reason that the Standard Oil letters are very important to the nation, very serious in their incriminations and wholly authoritative and genuine, while the Mulhall letters and documentary evidence have never appeared to me especially important or serious or genuine.

The Mulhall letters and charges were offered to one of my magazines, the one that published the Standard Oil letters, but the editors of the magazine with my approval declined to purchase or publish the Mulhall documents and confession. The reason we did not purchase the Mulhall letters was not at all because of the price. That question was not even considered.

The reason we failed to purchase them was because we had not full confidence in them. We felt that the more or less innocent or at least moderate wording of the documents did not justify the extravagant allegations on which Mulhall based the documents, and we felt if that any part of Mulhall's evidence or testimony was untrue that all of it was open to suspicion.

Furthermore, our magazine had just performed what we had every right and reason to believe a great public service. We had performed this service with the utmost sincerity and consciousness and with the most scrupulous care.

We had exposed the corrupting influence of privilege-seeking corporations in politics. We had revealed the connection between these corrupt corporations and certain important public officials who were supposed to represent the people in office, but who in reality, prostituted their offices to serve the illegitimate interests of criminal trusts.

The editors of the magazine were agreed that we did not wish to diminish or discredit the effect of these genuine revelations by the publication of Mulhall's letters, which seemed to us less serious and sincere.

The Standard Oil letters can not be denied, because there always have been additional documents to disprove every denial made to confuse and confound every falsifier.

We did not wish our magazine to associate a great public service and a vital political exposure like this with an extravagant series of exaggerated accusations, as the Mulhall confessions appeared to us to be, and I would rather not associate the genuine with the questionable at your Congressional investigation.

Of course, I am expressing only my preference. I can control the course of my magazine, but I do not seek to control or influence the action of your committee. I shall always be ready to submit to any such information I have which can be considered of public interest or importance.

Very sincerely yours,
WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST.

Wealthy Father at Last Finds Daughter

Search of 38 Years Ends in Astonishment for His Policeman Son-in-Law.

POTTSVILLE, PA., Aug. 16.—Anthony Lloyd, a policeman, living on $65 a month, was surprised when John Strause, aged 76, walked into his home and embraced Mrs. Lloyd, who turns out to be his only child, lost to him for more than 38 years.

Strause is worth $200,000 and lives in Laramie City.

Many years ago, after he returned from service in the Seventh Pennsylvania Cavalry of the Civil War, he placed his daughter, Emma, in the charge of relatives and went West. Though wealthy, he was unable to find any trace of her until his sudden meeting.

COUPLE ELOPE, THOUGH THEY CAN NOT CONVERSE

GARY, IND., Aug. 16.—Cupid was somewhat nonplussed for a while in Gary, when a young couple, neither of whom can speak the language of the other, eloped to Crown Point, where they answered the marriage vow by means of an interpreter.

On their way home the pair were arrested at the instance of the irate father, because of the bride's youth.

They were taken to the Gary police station, where neither could give the other a word of comfort. Later the father's heart melted, and they were released.

LIVING DEATH IN ITALY IS FACED BY CHARLTON

Young American Travels in Steerage, but Is Confident of an Early Acquittal.

son of Paul Charlton, law adviser of the Bureau of Insular Affairs, and former President Taft's classmate at Yale. He has stood by his son through all the fight against extradition.

Extradition Fight Begins.

The fight began the day after the confession appeared. It seemed at first that the young man surely must go back to Italy to face trial, and every legal step was taken against it. His friends, led by his father, took the position that he could not be extradited, because Italy had always refused, under the extradition treaty of 1868, to return Italian subjects to the United States to answer for crimes committed here.

They lost this fight, when Italy made a request for the prisoner. The fight was resumed, and Charlton's father entered the insanity plea, in a habeas corpus suit. Losing this in the lower court, the father appealed to the Supreme Court, in which, about a month ago, the opinion of Justice Lurton was handed down, to the effect that Charlton was subject to extradition.

Officers arrived in the United States from Italy last week to take Charlton back for trial. Conflicting reports have been spread regarding the young man's health, certain physicians contending that he is the victim of pulmonary tuberculosis and others that he is in perfect health.

Newspaper reports, written by men who have seen him, say that he appears healthy. He has been allowed an unusual degree of freedom while being held in the Hudson County jail, being permitted to take walks, automobile drives and two hours of exercise each day. Sometimes he was taken to picture shows.

Charlton Expects Acquittal.

Charlton is cheerful. He has expressed the opinion that he will be acquitted in spite of the evidence against him, and has told his father and mother and other friends as well that he will be back home for Christmas dinner.

The trial will be held in Milan some time early in the fall.

Appeals have been made to Secretary of State Bryan, and an attempt even has been made to reach the ear of President Wilson to present the extradition of the young man. His father has stopped at nothing to save his son. But all attempts have proved fruitless. Secretary Bryan, Judge Charlton's personal friend of long standing, has expressed his sympathy, but declared that it was impossible for him to do anything for the son.

The plans for the defense will take the form of an inquisition to bring out the moral and mental traits of the murdered woman, besides the consideration of Charlton's sanity. Attorneys will try to show that there was great provocation for the killing. It is hoped in this that the sentence of Charlton will not be the short-living death at solitary confinement in an Italian dungeon, but a more tempered punishment.

Chic and Dashing Fall Hats Will Bring $1,000,000 to Atlanta

Here's where the factions divide—some like it; some laugh. It is made of midnight blue plush, with a yellow figured top and a yellow feather butterfly off at the side.

Shaped like a man's derby, this hat of garnet plush has a silk ribbon to match which trails behind the left shoulder. Gray roses are used.

"One must be pretty to wear this hat"—of black velvet and patent leather.

A flat sailor, of "tete de negre" plush, trimmed with cream and brown fur and sacred bird of Siam feathers.

Butterflies are the prevailing motif. This is a hat of black velvet with a black lace butterfly.

Turquoise blue satin crown, with a brim of taupe dubitine, and an aigrette—dubitine being a new material.

Chic—that's the word. It needs a pert face and vivacious manner. Black velvet with pink facings and Paradise feathers.

Autumn Styles in Millinery Show That Large Creations Are Thing of the Past—Butterflies Are Popular.

"Now, deny it if you can,
"Though it's manners make the man,
"It's millinery makes the girl."
—Song from "Red Feather."

Millinery, then, being such a serious affair, some 1,400 women and 100 men will visit Atlanta these later weeks of August, and they will spend close to $1,000,000 for millinery. The "openings" for fall and winter styles are on in Atlanta's great wholesale houses, and the great semi-annual buying is under way.

The general public will not see these styles for a month or so to come. Therefore, this is NEWS—real hot stuff—for feminine readers. Here goes:

Black predominates.
Nearly all hats are almost collapsible.
Butterflies are the prevailing motif in trimmings.
Few large hats are shown.
Feathers and fur are "particularly good."
Rats and switches apparently have gone to stay, for nearly all the new hats are close-fitting and necessitate scant coiffures.

For instance, one of the very prettiest styles shown—from masculine viewpoint at least—is a new poke of black plush with pink facing and paradise feathers. This is a saucy little hat that goes with a pert face and lively manner. One can imagine it on a vivacious little demoiselle at Longchamps—where, in fact, it was photographed by an Atlanta designer, and copied.

Splendiferous, indeed, must be the sacred bird of Siam, whose feathers adorn an extremely flat plush hat of sailor shape.

Fur Cream and Brown.

A pelt of some little animal, about the size of a weasel, twists about the crown, and the two feathers complete the trimming. The fur is cream and brown. The feathers are brown with wonderful bluish markings more beautiful than a peacock's glories. The plush is a new shade of brown called "tete de negre," which sounds much better in French than in English. All this sets "hubby" back about fifty.

"Tete de negre," by the way, vies with black in popularity.

A huge black butterfly is the only trimming on a little black silk velvet turban with soft crown.

"Smart. And good. Oh! Very good, indeed," is what the designer calls it. Let it go at that. Why argue?

All humanity is divided into two parts. Of these, one is composed of those to whom styles in millinery are a serious matter; the other, of those who grin.

There's one hat which will bring strict division of these parties. Now, from the "pro's" standpoint it is a creation of midnight blue plush, with a variegated plush top on the crown, and an artistic feather butterfly perched airily on the edge of the brim.

Now, the "antis": It's a dark blue contraption with a yellow, scrambled, Bulgarian top, and a funny little yellow thingamajig sticking up behind.

Take your choice.

"Donna e mobile," as our old friend Caruso has it—"woman is fickle"—and he might add, inexplicable. No doubt this is pretty, to a woman.

One must be pretty to wear the little black velvet hat, shaped like a traffic cop's helmet and trimmed with patent leather fixings—so says the designer. If this is carefully explained to customers, the hat should sell well.

Derby Covers Eye.

Rather a novelty, but pretty, too, is a hat shaped like a man's derby, which pulls down almost covering the right eye. The shape is of garnet plush, and a long ribbon matching this shade is thrown across the throat from right to left, so that it hangs down behind the left shoulder. Gray roses complete the trimming.

Current history ever finds its reflection in the styles. Bulgarian designs still are with us, and now comes a blue plush hat—one of the few large ones, in the Mexican style—that is, it has a broad, flat brim ornamented with fuzzy little balls.

Big velvet hats, very like the sort art students wear in the Latin Quarter of Paris, are to be seen. They are almost bare of trimming—just great, floppy pieces of black velvet, sometimes to be pulled down over one eye.

"Dubitine" is a new material. It is seen to best advantage in a hat with a brim flaring up on one side, and with a round crown. An aigrette stands pertly off to the rear. The crown is of turquoise dubitine and the underbrim of taupe satin.

If you see a slate gray rubber hat worn by some pretty girl on Peachtree street this winter, don't say you weren't prepared for it. This is due notice that rubber has been called into use for millinery. It was sure to come, straw, feathers, furs, flowers, silks, satins, fruits, birds, animals and what-not having been used.

The rubber hats are severe in design. One has a "drape" to go under the chin, made of green and blue chenille. "They say" rain won't hurt them, and that they're fine for autoing, because they're small.

It is the auto, so every one in the millinery trade believes, that has killed the big hat. A big hat is a nuisance in a limousine, and hard to keep on in a touring car or runabout—and the rest of us like to act as if we might go autoing, even if we do not.

MULHALL BARES FRAUD USED TO DEFEAT HEARST IN RACE FOR GOVERNOR

Lobbyist Got Confidence of Up-State Chairman in New York Campaign by Fake Letter and Betrayed Plans of Democrats to Republican Leaders.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—Colonel Martin M. Mulhall, self-confessed lobbyist of the National Association of Manufacturers, testified before the Garrett Lobby Investigating Committee that his political lines crossed those of William Randolph Hearst in 1906, and that he helped to defeat Mr. Hearst for the New York Governorship.

Introduced by a letter forged upon the letterhead of the Hearst campaign headquarters, Mulhall said that he went into Congressman Fairchild's district, the Twenty-fourth New York, an upstate district, and gained the confidence of a local campaign manager for Mr. Hearst.

Tells Plans to Republicans.

Learning from the latter the plans of campaign in the district, Mulhall reported them to Fairchild, and Republican plans to checkmate them and defeat their object were perfected. Mulhall was employed for a week on this work with the approval, he says, of Fairchild.

Mulhall told a few days ago how he started to work for Senator Foraker in Ohio. He was prepared to make his report to Foraker when the Hearst Standard Oil disclosure letters were first made public. Foraker admitted to the Senate committee that these letters defeated him for re-election to the Unied Staes Senate.

Unconcernedly, Mulhall told how he had taken his "fake letters" of introduction to Fairchild and got his instructions for political detective work. He met Mr .Hearst's friends, including a clergyman, at a hotel, entertained them and worked his way into their confidence. He ascertained that the Republican district committee chairman was not friendly to Fairchild.

Letter Was Faked.

"Whose signature did this fake letter of introduction bear?" asked Representative Stafford.

"It was that of some member of the Democratic State Committee."

"Who were you represented to be?"

"I was supposed to be connected with Mr. Hearst, and so represented myself to Mr. Scott, the candidate, I think, opposing Fairchild."

"It was your first meeting with him, and you won his confidence to the extent of getting from him his campaign plans?" said Stafford.

"Yes."

"Who signed this fake letter?"

"The letter was given to me by Marshall Cushing, and I can not say who signed it. Mr. Cushing was a very good letter writer. He told me it was a fake letter. I knew that Cushing was not connected with the Hearst organization."

Mr. Stafford—He was connected in the way of using the letterhead of the Hearst organization to good effect.

"Mr. Cushing thought it was a smart political trick, and I guess that was his system of working," replied Mulhall.

Scott Well Deceived.

"Mr. Scott's confidence was so complete," continued Mulhall, "that he told me Mr. Hearst had sent him a number of workers and quite an amount of money, and I believe in this letter the latter stated that they were ready to send at that time more workers and more money."

"Scott swallowed everything, hook, line and all, as far as you represented it," commented Stafford.

"Yes."

"Did Mr. Fairchild know all about this arrangement?" asked Representative Kline.

"Yes, he knew about hte letter, and I had Mr. Fairchild's advice in presenting it. He has spoken to me since about that clever piece of work."

Confusion in Study Of Grammar Dispelled

Committee's Report on Standardizing Nomenclature Makes Good Impression.

COLORADO SPRINGS, Aug. 16.—Standardization of grammatical nomenclature, which will do away with the confusion in the study of English, as well as other languages, in American schools, has been effected by a committee of fifteen, of which Professor Hills, of Colorado College, was a member.

The committee made a report to the National Education Association in convention at Salt Lake City and its adoption without amendment virtually insures the following of the committee's recommendations in all schools and colleges.

According to Professor Hills, it was found that in the sentence "John is good," the word "good" was called by nine different names in 25 grammars; the word "John" in "This is John," was called by nineteen terms, and in "We made John president," the word "president" was given eighteen different names in the textbooks examined.

Prisoner 34 Years, Hates to Leave Jail

Slayer of Policeman Says Such Life as He Led Has Not Been Failure.

THOMASTON, MAINE, Aug. 16.—Samuel D. Haynes, of Detroit, walked out of the prison gates to-day, after serving 34 years for the murder of James L. Robbins, a policeman, at Rockland, in 1879.

At midnight his sister, Mrs. F. H. Rogers, of Detroit, had telephoned the prisoner that Governor Haines had pardoned him.

"The battle is won," Haynes told Warden Ham, "but I hate to leave." Outside the prison he held a reception for a big crowd, who knew him as a model prisoner.

"I am willing to forgive and forget," he said. "The prison has been a good thing for me, but I feel that I have paid my bill to society.

"I have been in prison since I was 17 years old, but I have spent the better part of my life here trying to be useful. There is no failure in such a life as that."

Returns $1,000 Gems And Gets $1 Reward

Laundry Girl Is Not Even Thanked When She Returns Diamonds.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—For returning $1,000 worth of jewelry to its owner, Miss Ella Veronica Shea, of No. 969 Putnam avenue, Brooklyn, was rewarded with a dollar.

Miss Shea works in a laundry. While unpacking a laundry bag received from Mrs. I. Rodberg of No. 635 Decatur street, she found four diamond rings and a diamond lavalliere.

"The shock which Mrs. Rodberg got when she received the jewelry was so great she forgot to thank me," said Miss Shea yesterday. "I had scarcely got back to the office when a man came running after me with an envelope in which was a note of thanks and—a dollar."

PASTOR SHEDS HIS COLLAR.

GRANITE CITY, Aug. 16.—A new pace has been set by the Rev. W. W. Brown, pastor of the First Baptist Church at Granite City, who tells the men to come without collar or neckties and with sleeves rolled up if that will conduce to their comfort. He promises to do likewise.

Webster's Old Home Restored by Society

Preparations Are Made for Celebration of Rehabilitation of Birthplace of Statesman.

FRANKLIN, N. H., Aug. 16.—The ancient New Hampshire farmhouse in which Daniel Webster was born has been reset on its old foundations and restored to look as it did in the eighteenth century when Webster was a small boy, and preparations have been made to celebrate its rehabilitation. It is in the town of Franklin, and the celebration will take place August 28.

It is expected that President Wilson will attend and deliver an address. Samuel W. McCall, former Congressman from Massachusetts, who was the principal speaker at the hundredth anniversary of Webster's graduation from Dartmouth College, will speak.

Rivals David Harum As a Horse Trader

But Youth Is Forced to Pay Back Money He Got for a 'Frozen Tail.'

INDIANAPOLIS, Aug. 16.—William H. Schmidt, 17, a horse trader, was directed to give back $70 he accepted from Tom Cavanaugh for a "frozen tail" horse, and return the horse to Tom Shroyer, a liveryman, when his case was heard in court.

Schmidt was charged with false pretenses, in that he represented the horse to have a useful and active fly chaser. As a matter of fact, the swatting appendage was merely ornamental and utterly useless. Schmidt said he did not know the horse had a broken tail.

"Why that horse was as helpless as a baby," asserted Mrs. Cavanaugh. "We had to carry along a fly brush as well as a buggy whip everywhere we went."

ANTI-KISSING LAW NOT IN BOOKS, SO SUITOR IS FREED

TRINIDAD, COLO., Aug. 16.—Howard B. Smith, employee of a local moving picture house, was arrested a few days ago for publicly kissing and hugging Florence Vigil, a pretty 14-year-old girl, of Verjeme Park, N. Mex. Taken to the city jail, it was found there was no city ordinance that prevented kissing either in public or private, and the offender was released with the admonition of Police Judge Hines to "go forth and kiss no more." The affair was the result of a summer afternoon flirtation.

Tells Positive Cure For all Foot Troubles

Science has proven that nearly all foot troubles originate from a common cause; that of injured tissues. The following information will be welcomed by thousands of victims of daily foot torture. No matter how many patent medicines you have tried in vain, this treatment which was formerly known only to doctors will do the work. Don't waste time. Get it at once. "Dissolve two tablespoonfuls of Calocide compound in a basin of warm water. Soak the feet for a full fifteen minutes, gently rubbing the sore parts." The effects are marvelous. All pain disappears instantly and the feet feel simply delightful. Corns and callouses can be peeled right off. Bunions, aching feet and sweaty, smelly feet get immediate relief. Use this treatment a week and your foot troubles will be a thing of the past. Calocide works through the pores and removes the cause. Any druggist has Calocide in stock or will get it from his wholesale house. Don't be influenced to take something else instead. A twenty-five cent box is said to be enough to cure the worst feet.

SULZER AND LAWYERS GRIMLY FIGHTING TO CLEAR GOVERNOR'S NAME

Wife Is Determined to Take Stand to Tell Her Husband's Accusers That She Signed His Name to Checks to Gamble in the Stock Market.

ALBANY, N. Y., Aug. 16.—Governor William Sulzer and a formidable staff of lawyers are busy in the preparation of an answer to the impeachment charges brought against him by the New York Assembly. Issue will be joined and a trial held September 18 before the New York Senate and Court of Appeals, sitting in joint assembly.

The sensation of the trial and the incident which the public most avidly awaits will be the statement by Mrs. Sulzer, the brave wife whose attemp' to save her husband from disgrace involved a sacrifice of her own honor.

The most telling charge against Sulzer is that he appropriated to his own use in stock exchange gambling certain checks which were given toward his campaign fund. Mrs. Sulzer, in statements to her friends, declared that she indorsed the checks and used them in Wall street speculation without her husband's knowledge, and that she would go on the stand at the trial of her husband to reiterate the story of her misdeed.

Enemies Are Pitiless.

If she does, she will be bared to vicious attacks and cross-examination by the lawyers for the prosecution, who, as members of the assembly which impeaches her husband, already have proved themselves pitiless and vindictive.

It may be that her statement, proved true, will save her husband. None of its purport was revealed to the General Assembly before the impeachment came. However, to-day the Governor announces that under no circumstances will he allow his wife to become a witness, even if his honor and his fortune suffer.

Mrs. Sulzer is in a state of nervous collapse. The long strain imposed on her during the investigation by the General Assembly told on her, and she succumbed when the impeachment vote was announced. So serious became her condition that the Governor was forced to send a hurry call to New York, summoning a famous nerve specialist.

In her chamber Mrs. Sulzer is hysterical, and it is understood that she insists that she be allowed to testify for her husband.

Mrs. Sulzer was Miss Clara Rodelheim, of Philadelphia. She married Sulzer, who then was a Congressman, July 7, 1908. They have no children, and Mrs. Sulzer is enthrallingly interested in politics. During her husband's campaign for the election to Congress, and his subsequent campaign for Governor, she accompanied him on his speaking trips.

She, Too, Is Combative.

More than anything else she openly admires his combative nature. She is aggressive and positive herself. Of her husband she is quoted as saying: "He's ready to fight at the drop of the hat, and he'll drop the hat himself. As long as he fights, I'll fight, too—and then some."

If she takes the stand in her heroic attempt to save her husband, it is likely that her reputation will suffer. Otherwise, her husband's reputation will suffer, her friends say.

These friends say that a week ago she besought the Governor to permit her to tell her story to the public, and he refused. They say, too, that he consented to the publication of her statement only when he found he could not prevent it, and that it had been widely circulated as a rumor on the lips of the public.

Governor Sulzer, the fighter, is easily recognized in his avowed intention of holding his office even with the impeachment charges against him. His enemies in the General Assembly have declared against his right of remaining in office and have insisted that Lieutenant Governor Glynn take over the reins of government. But Sulzer shows a firm determination to stay in, and the wildest rumors are given credence as to what he will do to retain his authority. It is even asserted that he will call the militia to prevent the entrance of the Lieutenant Governor, and to prevent his own ejection. At any rate, he and his lawyers firmly contend for his right to hold office with the impeachment proceedings pending.

Herrick Issues Statement.

Little is said concerning the approaching ordeal by either the Governor or his attorneys. Mrs. Sulzer can not be reached, and it is understood that could she be seen no statement would be obtained, as she has the attorneys' orders to say nothing. Judge D. Cady Herrick, who will act as chief counsel for the defense, made a statement, which is regarded as the only word to come from him.

"Counsel for Governor Sulzer," he said, "have no desire to try the case in the newspapers. We have engaged in his defense not for William Sulzer, but as a profession al duty to the Governor of the State, and to preserve, so far as it can now be preserved, the good name and fame of the State.

"After an examination of Mr. Sulzer in relation to the transactions disclosed by the Frawley committee, we are satisfied that there has been only a partial revelation of the facts so far, as we are satisfied that he has been guilty of no willful wrongdoing."

Besides Judge Herrick, Governor Sulzer's attorneys at the trial will be Irving G. Vann, Syracuse; Louis Marshall and Austen G. Fox, New York; Harvey D. Hinman, Binghamton; Virgil Kellogg, Watertown, and Judge James Gay Gordon, of Philadelphia.

Governor Sulzer, the eighth Governor of all the United States to be impeached, is the victim of Tammany's vengeance.

7 Governors Have Been Impeached

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—In all the United States only seven other Governors have faced impeachment proceedings. These men and the results that followed were:

Charles Robinson, Kansas, 1862, acquitted.

Harrison Reed, Florida, 1868, charges dropped.

William W. Holden, North Carolina, 1870, removed.

Powell Clayton, Arkansas, 1871, charges dropped.

David Butler, Nebraska, 1871, removed.

Henry C. Warmouth, Louisiana, 1872, term expired and proceedings dropped.

Adelbert Ames, Mississippi, 1876, resigned.

WILLIAM SULZER, impeached Governor of New York, with his wife, who intends to sacrifice her own good name to save him. Below is Martin Glynn, Lieutenant Governor, who disputes Sulzer's claim that he is still in office.

AKRON, OHIO, Aug. 16.—While eating clams at a restaurant here, Jack Newman, a waiter, bit into something hard, breaking a tooth. He found a pearl worth $1,000.

ADMITS HE IS A SLAYER TO SAVE DYING BROTHER

Arthur Spaugh Tells the Pardon Board That He Shot Sheriff at Ironton, Mo.

JEFFERSON CITY, MO., Aug. 16.—In a last attempt to get a parole for his brother, William Spaugh, Jr., who is ill of tuberculosis and can live but a short time, Arthur Spaugh, the younger brother, also an inmate of the Penitentiary, told the Board of Pardons that he killed Sheriff Polk at Ironton, Mo., to save William's life. William Spaugh is serving a life sentence for shooting Polk, while Arthur Spaugh was sentenced to fifty-five years.

"Bill did not shoot Sheriff Polk. I shot him when I thought he intended to kill Bill. He had already shot Bill through the shoulder and was advancing on him when I fired. My brother had his hands in the air, begging the sheriff not to shoot him," said Arthur Spaugh.

Doesn't Care for Himself.

"I do not want my brother to die here. He is not guilty of the killing of Sheriff Polk. I alone am guilty. Bill was not even armed when the sheriff was shot. I thought the sheriff intended to kill my brother, and after warning him not to advance three times, shot him. I hope the Governor will release Bill so that he can spend what few days he has to live a free man. It does not matter what becomes of me."

The prison physician says that William Spaugh can not live to exceed sixty days and his death is expected sooner. William Spaugh has arranged to have his body shipped back to their old home at Ironton Mo., for burial, provided he does not secure his release.

Mother Also Pleads.

Arthur Spaugh has tuberculosis also, and is unable to do heavy work. He is in the first stage of the disease, but is able to work about the halls and do light work in the open air.

Mary E. Spaugh, aged mother of the Spaughs, has been here much of late pleading with the Board of Pardons and Paroles for her dying son. She says she would like to take him to her home in St. James, Mo., and nurse him until he dies.

Arthur Spaugh has been in the penitentiary since July 27, 1906. William Spaugh was received July 26, 1907. Both have been model prisoners.

DEEP-LAID PLOT IN APPOINTMENT HOBSON CHARGE

Alabama Congressman Attacks Governor O'Neal for Naming Clayton for U. S. Senate.

MONTGOMERY, Aug. 16.—Congressman Richmond Pearson Hobson of the Sixth District, who was a candidate for the Senatorship against the late Senator Joseph F. Johnston, in a warm card charges a deep-laid conspiracy in the appointment by Governor O'Neal of Congressman Henry D. Clayton to succeed Senator Johnston.

From Washington comes the news that there is an overwhelming opinion among both Democrats and Republicans in the Senate that Governor O'Neal had no right to appoint without specific authority from the Legislature of Alabama, and that the belief is general that Mr. Clayton has no chance of being seated on the credentials he holds.

Governor O'Neal said to-day that in event the United States Senate rejected the appointment of Congressman Clayton he would act on the recommendation of the Senate Judiciary Committee. He refused to say whether or not he would call an extra session of the Legislature.

Hobson's Card.

Congressman Hobson says of Clayton's appointment:

"It is a brazen defiance of law, the people and the Constitution—the most humiliating travesty of our political institutions.

"It is a defiance of the law and the rights of the people, willfully made with the knowledge that the appointment is illegal and is so regarded by the United States Senators, not only by the opposition Senators, but by Democratic Senators as well.

"The effect of the appointment will be to postpone indefinitely the settlement of the question. This delay is fully understood by the Alabama politician, and is incurred against the earnest advice of our Democratic leaders.

"In the midst of the crisis of the tariff bill, the interest of the Democratic party, the relief and welfare of the nation, the law of the land, the sacred political rights of the people seem to have counted for naught.

Jockeying Charged.

"The fact is that after all the jockeying and caucusing, the scheme went through precisely as Mr. Bankhead had planned. It was very remarkable how Senator Bankhead hurried to Alabama and had the whole specious article prepared to give out almost immediately.

"You will recall that Senator Bankhead and the lamented Johnston were themselves chosen by popular vote; in fact, the principle was considered of such sacred importance in our progressive State that we even went so far as to provide an election for successors to our great Morgan and Pettus before the deaths of these grand old men.

"How, then, can any true Alabaman stand for the miserable expedient of having their United States Senators appointed by Emmet O'Neal instead of being elected by the people themselves?

"It belongs to the people. It is theirs by law as well as every true consideration of the Democratic rights. They demand it, and they are not going to be fooled or hoodwinked by the hair-splitting quibblings of technical lawyers or professional pot-politicians."

HENRY D. CLAYTON, who has been appointed Senator from Alabama by Governor O'Neal to fill Senator Johnston's unexpired term.

Tammany and Sulzer's Fight Thrilling Drama

When Governor William Sulzer, the "People's Governor," and the "Poor Man's Friend," refused to do the bidding of Boss Murphy, of Tammany Hall, the most remarkable political drama New York State had ever seen was enacted. From that very moment Tammany Hall carried out a steady and consistent program of guerrilla warfare against Sulzer and all things Sulzer.

A tammanyized Legislature instituted an "investigation" of Sulzer and Sulzer reciprocated with an "investigation" of some Tammany controlled State departments.

Charles F. Murphy, the Tammany Hall leader, sought to have certain organization men appointed to office. Sulzer declined to appoint them, although he had been something of an organization man himself for a great many years, and immediately after his election to the governorship, had been extremely intimate with Murphy.

Breaks With Tammany.

Sulzer broke with Tammany over the question of appointments. Immediately afterward he employed guards to protect him against assassination, which he feared. No attempt to injure Sulzer's person was made, but political attacks came thick and fast. Sulzer first was accused of perjury, committed, according to his accuser, in 1890. The acquisation carried no weight. The public retained its confidence in Sulzer. Then another bombshell was expected. A suit was filed in Philadelphia by a young woman, Mignon (Polly) Hopkins, charging Sulzer with breach of promise.

Miss Hopkins asked $30,000 damages for her wounded heart. Sulzer admitted having known Miss Hopkins some years ago, but denied that he had ever proposed marriage to her and declared the filing of the suit was engineered by his Tammany enemies.

Fights for Direct Primary.

When Sulzer promised direct primaries to the people of New York he evidently meant what he said. When he went into office he started such legislation. Immediately he discovered his political associates didn't want direct primaries and would not back him up in his fight for the primary bill as he framed it. His bill was introduced in the Legislature, but before it was voted upon a Tammany direct primaries bill, which Sulzer characterized a "fraud upon the people," was introduced in both branches of the Legislature and passed. Governor Sulzer promptly vetoed it, and then called upon the Legislature to pass his bill.

The Assembly and then the Senate killed the Sulzer bills, amid wild scenes in the Senate and Assembly chambers. There were shouts of rage and shaking of fists in the direction of the Capitol. There was wild cheering when it was announced that the Sulzer bill had been killed.

Sulzer then inaugurated a campaign to obtain direct primaries. He enlisted many well-known men in his cause, and called the Legislature in extraordinary session. It had then become a case of open warfare. It became Sulzer's object to make himself leader of the Democratic party in New York.

He had lined up with him some 33 county chairmen and about 17 State committeemen. In one of his speeches at this time Sulzer said that he had been attacked, vilified and threatened as no other man ever had been who had occupied the Governorship of New York.

Tammany Loses Patronage.

Tammany lost hundreds of thousands of dollars in patronage. No appointments of Tammany men were made by Sulzer. George W. Blake was made a special investigator by the Governor and set about unearthing incompetency in the State prisons. John A. Hennessy was made an investigator by Sulzer and he conducted several probes into various State departments. Tammany verged on panic. Finally that organization turned on Sulzer the very same weapon that he had used against it and an investigation of Sulzer's campaign fund was instituted by a legislative committee composed of Tammany men.

Senator Frawley, a Tammany chieftain, was the chairman of the committee, and it commenced its sittings in Albany. The first witness to be called was Louis A. Sarecky, Sulzer's private secretary and campaign manager. Sarecky was questioned about Sulzer's campaign fund, but he declined to answer. It was intimated that Sulzer had received checks for his campaign fund which he had not listed in his sworn statement, a misdemeanor under the laws of New York State.

Two checks were introduced into the evidence. One was for $2,500 from Kuhn, Loeb & Co., the bankers, and indorsed "Mr. Schiff's contribution to the Sulzer campaign." The other check was for $500, and was signed by Abram I. Elkus, a prominent New York City lawyer. It was alleged by the Frawley committee that neither of these checks appeared in Sulzer's campaign list.

Then Came Stock Dealing.

At a later session of the Frawley committee, held in New York, testimony was given to the effect that the "People's Governor" and the "Poor Man's Friend" had owed the stock brokerage firm of Harris & Fuller $48,599.38 on January 1, 1912, when Sulzer was in Congress. According to testimony and evidence offered, Sulzer had been a steady loser in the stock market.

The brokers to whom he owed money dunned him for payment, according to the testimony, and Sulzer finally was rescued by his business partner, ex-Governor A. E. Spriggs, of Montana, who paid $5,000, and Louis M. Josephthal, of New York, who on July 19 last paid $26,749.21.

It also was testified before the committee that Sulzer had traded with Boyer, Griswold & Co. Charles H. Reynolds, formerly cashier for that firm, testified that on October 16 last Frederick L. Colwell, whom he understood to be an agent for Sulzer, had bought 200 shares of Big Four Railroad stock for $12,025. The stock was paid for the same day with eight checks and $7,125 in cash. One check given in payment for the stock was a campaign contribution. The Frawley committee alleged that the seven other checks also were campaign contributions, and asserted that this would be proved.

State Has Turkey Farm to Cut Price

Ohio Goes Into Poultry Business When Cost of Thanksgiving Birds Soar.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, Aug. 16.—The State of Ohio is going into the turkey raising business. Kind o' forced into it, as it were, because of the high price of the favored Thanksgiving bird and the demand from State institutions for the bird.

The experiment was tried out a little the last year, and so successful did it prove that this year practically in all of the State institutions where any chickens are kept turkeys have been added.

The price of turkeys has been gradually soaring until they have become almost too expensive for even the State of Ohio to buy, and rather than permit the wards of the State to go hungry on Thanksgiving Day the employees of the different institutions began the work of hatching them.

Coffee Tastes Cause Break in Family

Wife Liked Hers Strong, Husband Preferred It Weak, so She Entered Suit.

ALLENTOWN, PA., Aug. 16.—Black coffee and the high cost of living wrecked the romance of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Hauser, of Catasauqua, who were married three years ago, when he was 63 and she was 43, each embarking in matrimony the second time. The wife, Zenobia, has started divorce proceedings.

Mrs. Hauser says she was used from life with her first husband to good black coffee. Hauser wanted his coffee as weak as dishwater, and also objected to the bills she ran up at the store for her favorite beverage. The rackets that followed got on her nerves to such an extent that she desires to resume the state of single blessedness.

The court allowed her $6 a week temporary alimony.

Summer-Spoiled Skin Removed by Absorption

(From Home Queen.)

As undue summer exposure usually leaves an undesirable surface of tan, dust or grease, often freckles, too, it would seem more sensible to remove such surface than to hide it with cosmetics. There's nothing better for this than ordinary mercolized wax, which actually absorbs an unwholesome complexion. The thin layer of surface skin is itself absorbed, gently and gradually, so there's no inconvenience and no detention indoors. Just spread the wax lightly over the entire face at bedtime and take it off in the morning with warm water. If you will get one ounce of mercolized wax at the drug store and use for a week or so, you may expect marked improvement daily. When the underlying skin is wholly in view your complexion will be a marvel of spotless purity and beautiful whiteness.

Don't let those summer wrinkles worry you; worry will breed more wrinkles. Better to banish them by bathing the face in a solution of powdered saxolite, 1 oz., dissolved in ½ pt. witchhazel. Used daily for a while this will be found wonderfully effective. (Adv.)

CASE STRONGER THAN LAWYERS HAD EXPECTED

Girl's Aunt Gives That as Reason for Disappearance of Witnesses From Tampa.

TAMPA, Aug. 16.—Miss Dora Green, aunt of the 11-year-old girl whom her brother-in-law, W. E. Mattox, is charged with mistreating, to-day told what she knows about the mysterious disappearance of her sister, Mrs. Mattox and the girl. They are the most material witnesses against Mattox, whom G. E. Green, of Sylvania, Ga., an uncle of the girl, tried to shoot in the county courtroom on July 2.

Miss Green told how the woman and child disappeared after an interview with Attorney Layton Shepard, of Fort Valley, Ga., a relative of Mattox, and Police Justice Bailey of this city.

"They had no money and were utterly without means," said Miss Green. "My niece told her story to the lawyers and my sister admitted to me after it that it 'cooked' her husband. The testimony against Mattox was too strong for the lawyers to contest."

Judge Whitaker has taken a strong stand in the matter, saying that Mattox will remain in the county jail without hearing until Whitaker's term expires or the missing witnesses are produced.

New Florida Road Nears Completion

Tampa and Gulf Coast Will Haul Fruit by Middle of Next Winter.

TAMPA, Aug. 16.—President Charles H. Brown, of the Tampa and Gulf Coast Railway, has announced that construction is going ahead rapidly and that it may be possible to haul fruit over the new road next winter. It had hardly been hoped to have it ready for use before the middle of next summer.

The road is 47 miles long, from here to St. Petersburg, via Clearwater, and will form an important Seaboard feeder, virtually giving that road an entry to St. Petersburg, where the Coast Line has had a monopoly.

Negro Surrenders to Pensacola Sheriff

Feared Lynching if Captured Near Scene of Cutting of Young White Man.

PENSACOLA, Aug. 16.—Glenville Johnson, a negro, wanted on a charge of cutting Leon Milstead, a young white man, at Millview, in this county, several days ago, has surrendered The Sheriff and posse had been hunting for Johnson since the cutting affray. The negro stated that the reason he had been in hiding was that he feared lynching if captured in the Millview neighborhood.

Feeling is said to be high against the negro in that neighborhood.

BIG INCREASE SHOWN IN TAX VALUATIONS

GAINESVILLE, FLA., Aug. 16.—After purging the tax books of delinquents to the extent of $150,000, Tax Assessor Dell, completing his 1913 roll, reports valuations of $7,200,000 for Alachua County, an increase in twelve months of $304,000, although the State Comptroller has reduced assessments on railroads and telegraph property in the county $128,000.

SHIPS FIRST BALE OF SEA ISLAND COTTON

GAINESVILLE, FLA., Aug. 16.—A. B. McClenny, of Cadillac, this county, shipped Wednesday a bale of sea island cotton to Frost & Co., Savannah, the grade was fine, weight 385 pounds.

The weather is good for rapid opening of the bolls, and picking will be well under way next week.

STOCK VENDERS WILL BE DRIVEN OUT OF FLORIDA

Blue Sky Law Will Force Investment Fakers to Leave the "Land of Flowers."

TALLAHASSEE, Aug. 16.—In view of the fact that stock venders and investment fakers have enjoyed some good pickings among the unsuspecting public of Florida, especially during the last few years, it is well to note some of the provisions of the act of the recent Legislature with regard to stock salesmen, which became effective on July 1.

This law is generally known as the "blue sky law." It is now unlawful to offer for sale outside of the county in which the company may be located the stocks, bonds or securities of any concern except those of Florida public utility corporations, banking and trust companies and corporations under the control of the Railroad Commission without an official permit.

It requires every concern located in or out of the State except those specially exempted as enumerated above, before offering for sale any of their stock, bonds or other securities of any kind or character outside of the county in which they are located to submit to the Comptroller complete financial statements and get a permit signed by the Comptroller and Attorney General. The law requires also that when the company is given such a permit they register every agent, and a registration certificate is given.

Before the Comptroller and Attorney General may issue to any investment company a permit to sell its stocks, bonds or securities in this State they must make such an examination of the concern and of their plan of doing business as will satisfy them that the concern has a fair, just and equitable proposition to offer, but the law does not permit the Comptroller and Attorney General to recommend any company's securities.

Florida Merchants Hit by New Tax Law

Giving of Premiums Matter of Serious Nature on Account of Stock on Hand.

GAINESVILLE, FLA., Aug. 16.—The last Florida Legislature created a law placing a tax of $500 on any business selling goods containing premiums or coupons and in addition to State tax counties can collect $250 tax.

Merchants are much worried over this, as they do not know in what way to dispose of goods on hand, not being able to pay the license.

The Internal Revenue Collector wrote to Washington for advice in regard to cigarette packages, and United States Revenue Commissioner Osborne authorized the removal of the coupons before sale, but an affidavit must be made by dealer as to the number removed.

ITALIAN SHOT TO DEATH BY HIS CONTRYMEN

TAMPA, Aug. 16.—Guiseppe Illuminato, an Italian who was shot to death Tuesday night by two men armed with shotguns, which they threw away, is said to have been killed because of improper relations with another Italian's wife. Judge Fernandez is said to be in ossession of evidence that convinces him this is the fact, and has postponed the Coroner's inquest to Monday, when this woman will be asked to take the stand.

NO WHISKY EXCEPT IN HOMES IN FLORIDA TOWN

ST. PETERSBURG, Aug. 15.—The city commissioners have passed stringent ordinances regulating the selling of liquor in this city, Pinellas County having voted "dry" at the recent election. The ordinance is even more stringent than the State law. It provides that liquor found anywhere except in a private residence is prima focie evidence that it is for sale.

FLORIDA ROAD MAY BE BUILT BY SURETY CO.

Arrest of President Dickinson Will Hasten Work — Franchise Expires September 1.

PENSACOLA, Aug. 16.—According to well-founded reports, the arrest of W. P. Dickinson, president of the Memphis and Pensacola Railroad, in Chicago on the charge of issuing worthless checks will not prevent the building of this road, which has already been graded for a considerable distance out of Pensacola.

In fact, it is claimed that the arrest of the president, who is still in the Cook County jail, Chicago, will hasten the construction work on the road, as some other parties are said ot be very eager to secure the franchise granted the road by this city, which will expire on September 1 unless certain conditions are complied with, which it is certain Dickinson can not comply with unless he gets out of jail, and probably not even then.

The city is secured by a surety bond of $10,000, but parties in Pensacola who contracted for and did considerable grading are said to have claims amounting to more than $5,000 against Dickinson and no security. These bills are said to have led indirectly to his arrest, as it is alleged that he represented to his associates that he had already settled them and obtained money from them for that purpose.

RECORD ATTENDANCE.

GAINESVILLE, FLA., Aug. 16.—The coming session of the State University, which opens September 23, will be the largest in the history of the institution. Many are coming from other States, and large accommodations will be crowded.

Girl Thinks Soldier Only Intended to Rob

Opinion Changes Charge and Court-martial Ordered at Pensacola Post.

PENSACOLA, Aug. 16.—The young woman upon whom Jack Gord, a soldier, is alleged to have attempted an attack at her home in Warrington Tuesday night, has made a statement, in which she said she believed his motive was robbery. Tuesday was pay day at the postoffice and she believes the soldier knew it and thought she had a considerable sum of money in her room.

It was at her request that the warrant issued by the United States Commissioner was withdrawn and Gord turned over to military authorities. He is still held in irons and will be tried by courtmartial at an early date.

Women Clerks for Central of Georgia

Road Claims Girls Are More Valuable in Office Than Men—Boost for Suffragettes.

SAVANNAH, Aug. 16.—The Central of Georgia Railway hereafter will employ women clerks in its offices in preference to men. The officials claim that they get the best results from girls, who are more attentive to their duties, quicker to learn, not so clamorous for promotion, and have less outside interests.

The suffrage movement helps rather than hinders the efficiency of the women, according to these officials, in that it makes them more self-assertive and independent.

BOY RIDES OFF DOCK ON WHEEL IS RESCUED

FT. MYERS, Aug. 16.—As Albert Stevens was riding a bicycle on the Ireland Dock here, he went overboard in 10 feet of water. The lad could not swim, and came near drowning before being pulled out by his father and others.

PHYSICIANS AID M'NAUGHTON IN FIGHT FOR LIFE

Savannah Medicos Lending Influence to Secure Pardon for Condemned Doctor.

SAVANNAH, Aug. 16.—Savannah physicians are lending their aid toward securing the freedom of Dr. W. J. McNaughton, who is in jail here under sentence of death for the murder of Fred Flanders in Emanuel County three years ago.

At the request of the Rev. John S. Wilder, pastor of the South Side Baptist Church, who has been a consistent friend of the condemned man, several Savannah physicians have given affidavits relative to the effect of the amount of arsenic poisoning which it is claimed killed Flanders. They declare this amount of the poison would not produce death. It is understood the Prison Commission, which is now considering the case of Dr. McNaughton, is perfectly willing to grant him a commutation to life imprisonment, but his friends are striving for a full pardon for him.

Dr. McNaughton may return to his old home in Emanuel County and resume the practice of his profession if the Prison Commission acts favorable upon his application for a pardon.

"I am an innocent man, and naturally expect to be given a full pardon," he said. "All I hope is that the facts were presented to the Prison Commission properly. If they were, I feel confident I will be liberated. I have already been deprived of several years of my life, and I am praying constantly that the great wrong that has been done me may be righted as far as possible by the granting of a full pardon."

Social News of Florida

Tampa

TAMPA, Aug. 16.—Miss Sarah Elizabeth McCreery, of Nashville, Tenn., whose engagement to Judge Shelby Graham, of Tampa, has been announced by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John F. McCreery, has spent the last three winters in this city, and is well known and very popular here. Judge Graham was county judge for several years, and was thought to be a confirmed bachelor. News of the betrothal has aroused much interest in society circles of this city. The marriage takes place at Nashville on August 27.

Dr. and Mrs. John O'Donoghue and daughter, Miss Aileen, left Friday morning for Jacksonville, from where they sail by Clyde Line steamer to New York. From there they will go to Buffalo, where Dr. O'Donoghue will attend the encampment of Spanish war veterans, of which organization he has been surgeon general. Later they will tour through Niagara Falls, Canada and Michigan. On returning to New York, Mrs. O'Donoghue and her daughter will sail for Montevideo, where they will spend six months with Mrs. O'Donoghue's parents. Miss O'hDonoghue, who has been living with her grandparents, will be married there in the near future.

Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Snow, of Fort Myers, are in the city for a short visit with their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Henry E. Snow. From here they will go to Washington to visit friends.

St. Augustine

ST. AUGUSTINE, Aug. 16.—Extensive plans for city beautification and general civic improvement are being urged by the Woman's Civic League, and as a result members of the league are preparing for an active winter season of work.

The league was organized last winter and accomplished a great deal. The members are now urging additional beautification. The league has "beauty spots" in each ward, and these will be planted in pretty flowers which will bloom through the tourist season. Mrs. C. M. Bevan is president of the league.

Mrs. Alleen Cooper, a favorite in local social circles and an active leader in the work of the St. Cecilia Music Club, is now visiting relatives in Charlotte, N. C. She will spend some time in Atlanta before returning home.

Mrs. W. W. Greatorex and daughter, Miss Winnifred, are spending several weeks at White Springs.

The Misses Everett left yesterday for Clarkesville, Ga., where they will spend some time visiting friends.

For MILADY'S WARDROBE

By MME. HAUTE MONDE.

MANY of the latest summer models are almost entirely made of white muslin richly embroidered in the openwork English style. These dresses are accompanied by broad sashes and short coats of real lace. The hats worn with them are exaggeratedly "picture" in outline. The brim is always wide and the crown almost hidden behind immense butterfly bows of tulle or lace. For occasions of ceremony Leghorn and Tuscan hats are trimmed with sweeping ostrich feathers in white or pale pastel tints.

* * *

Half a dozen different coatees or mantlets can be worn with the same robette, and endless variations can be arranged with the introduction of finely embroidered sashes which possess heavily fringed ends. The corsage portion of these robettes is quite plain, almost like a fine corset cover. It is made plain expressly, because the great object is the introduction of dainty lace and net blouses and picturesque coatees or mantlets. When accompanied by a shady hat in Leghorn trimmed with pale roses and black velvet ribbons these little dresses have a special cachet.

* * *

Embroidered linen bags are offered in many shapes and in as many degrees of smartness, some being treated quite as carefully in matters of finish, mountings, etc., as though they were of gorgeous material. Colored linen, embroidered with a touch of Bulgarian embroidery makes some effective bags for individual costumes, but the one-tone color is more practical for general use, and some of the handsome bags of real Irish lace filet or other bold lace are better for general summer use than the embroidered linens.

* * *

Some particularly good belts called the hip belt, are made up in white and fashionable shades and have large oval buckles of the leather.

* * *

The waistline is not only allowed to remain normal, but by swathing it in wide supple sashes its size is considerably increased.

* * *

The soft draped bodice minus the high restraining collar is a feature of artistic gowns worn by women in Paris.

* * *

The French designer knows where a line must be accentuated and in many cases uses tiny buttons for this purpose.

* * *

Keen appreciation of the effective lights and shadows given by a moire effect has returned. Many frocks worn by Paris manequins at the Longchamps races were made of soft crepe with the moire effect.

* * *

Very much worn are the evening coats of fine black net, closely woven with glittering beads.

* * *

Plaited peplums of maline, net or mousseline de soie appear on some of the newest frocks, and these are stiffened by a thin wire or ruching of taffeta at the bottom, so they extend beyond the frock.

* * *

The colored slip is in vogue and summer frocks of sheer linen, mousseline de soie or batiste have pink, blue, yellow or green silk linings. The girdles worn with these costumes are usually of a contrasting color.

* * *

In millinery the single red rose is a note which bids fair to become extremely popular. It nestles among folds of black or white tulle, clings to the edge of the brim, hangs over the hair on the underbrim or forms a spikelike arrangement at the back.

The large garden hats of leghorn, maline and lace are trimmed with black velvet ribbon, drawn about the crown and, passing through the slits at the back, is tied in a flat bow at the back. A single flower placed at the side near the edge of the brim completes the trimming.

* * *

Coats show great diversity of length, plain tailor-made models being shorter than dressier models, in which coats may reach to knees.

* * *

One pretty feature of recent summer frocks has been the lace jacket or coatee with its trimming of fur or of swansdown. Ermine is being used for this purpose, sometimes forming a wide collar at the back. Wide lace bretelles are another feature of late fashions. They are a poor second, it must be admitted, to the surplice and the fichu. But anything that has the temerity to dispute the claims of these two effects deserves some notice.

* * *

Apropos of furs, it is reported that Bechoff-David recently introduced fox scarfs dyed a reddish shade; and the somewhat alarming suggestion is made that next winter we shall see furs artificially colored in brilliant tints. It is rather appalling to think of blue, green, red and violet furs!

* * *

The cincture that suggests the plaster babies of Lucas della Robia, at the Orphanage in Florence, is strongly suggested in some of the sashes that wrap around the waist and girdle the torso of the fashionable woman. When these long sashes first appeared they were not liked, but the public taste now finds them picturesque.

* * *

Velvet, brocaded velvet and metallic brocades are going to be the favored fabrics for these garments in the autumn and winter, just as they are now, and the fur collars that make them smart in summer—according to fashion's paradoxical whims—will make them practical as well as smart when the theater and opera seasons begin.

* * *

Many women are wearing eyelet embroidered stockings in white, black and colors; also white and black silk stockings ornamented with embroidery or insets of lace. The girls who are clever with the needle can fashion these expensive stockings for themselves, and pretty color notes to match the gowns may be introduced.

* * *

Popular prizes at the bridge contests held by the sea are the bathing girl pin cushions. Bisque jointed dolls dressed in red and white and blue and white striped bathing suits are mounted on cushions of Turkish toweling. Some are very prim looking, with the hair in two long braids; others suggest the mermaid with flowing hair. The cushions are shown in ovals, squares, circles, etc., and are arranged to hang up and stand. They are fitted with pins and trimmed with ribbons to match the bathing suits.

* * *

It is almost compulsory for the blue serge suit to have a vest or waistcoat, and all sorts of materials are being used for them. The new duvetyns—a successor to the velvety velours de laine—in the lovely soft colorings are ideal for these waistcoats.

* * *

Chiffon veils are being embroidered, the work being done in floss of the same color. The pattern in all these veils must be so arranged as to make the plain mesh area, whether over the entire face or simply over the eyes, conspicuously transparent by way of contrast.

* * *

Now that the pendulum of fashion has swung in the direction of pleated skirts they threaten to become ubiquitous. Women are discovering that the little loose folds at the feet are very becoming, and also that pleated skirts do not really add width to the figure. The sunray pleats are in great demand for such materials as charmeuse, silk cashmere and tussor, but for crepe de chine and chiffon nothing can take the place of the fine accordion pleats.

* * *

In the world of fashion things are frequently topsy-turvy. The unexpected is always welcome. Now that valuable jewels are worn on hats and shoes the homely, but always effective jet ornaments are given a place of honor. Round jet brackets are the latest fad, and they are worn with light and fragile summer gowns of lace and chiffon.

* * *

The black and white season in the world of Fashion is now upon us. After the garish colors of the spring, there has come a complete revulsion of feeling. Women of taste have grown disgusted with the color schemes in which crude tints were thrown together by unskilled hands at the bidding of inartistic brains. Bulgarian tints have sounded the knell of crude colors; for the moment we are black and white or "pastel." And for the Trouville season, of which I shall speak in detail in a future article, an amazing number of pure white costumes are being made. White linen, white China silk, white embroidered lawn—these and many other dainty materials are in constant request for seaside dresses. As a fine white tulle it is being used for a dozen different purposes—for dresses, mantles, millinery, blouses, etc. Very lovely summer gowns are those made of wide-meshed silk net, the net which bears the name of "Tosca." These gowns are mounted over pleated slips of chiffon or crepe de chine and very frequently they are decorated with tiers of graduated flounces. Ordinary Brussels net is also fashionable just now, especially for draped mantles and for pleated waistcoats, the latter being used in connection with tailored suits of fine serge or linen.

* * *

A pretty fashion has been revived for children's summer frocks of thin material. This is the long-ended bow of ribbon, fastened just below the left shoulder. The ribbon, in soft shades of blue or pink, is made into a many-looped rosette, quite in the old fashion, and from the rosette hang three or four streamer ends. The ribbon should not be more than an inch or an inch and a half wide.

FACE COVERED WITH PIMPLES

Spread to Back. Could Hardly Sleep for Burning and Itching. Caused Disfigurement. Cuticura Soap and Ointment Entirely Cured.

214 Brevard St., Tampa, Fla. — "Some three years ago I commenced to suffer from a rash on my face and back. Before the pimples came on my face there were a lot of blackheads. It looked as if the blackheads turned into pimples because after a little while all of them were gone and my face was covered with pimples. They were small at first but gradually grew and right at the end of each pimple it was all white. I carelessly picked them with my finger nails, which made them spread, and I soon discovered them on my back. My back was covered with pimples and my face the same way. At night I could hardly sleep on account of the burning and itching sensation they caused. I felt like a lot of small-sized crabs biting at my back. I did not like to go out because the pimples caused disfigurement.

"Seeing the advertisement of Cuticura Soap and Ointment in one of the magazines I sent for a sample. At night I would put the Cuticura Ointment on my face and back and I was pleased with the result. I bought some Cuticura Soap and Ointment, and I am glad to be able to say that I am entirely cured of pimples." (Signed) Jno. O. Darlington, Jan. 25, 1913.

Cuticura Soap 25c. and Cuticura Ointment 50c. are sold everywhere. Liberal sample of each mailed free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. T, Boston."

Men who shave and shampoo with Cuticura Soap will find it best for skin and scalp.

Daring Dresses Stir Even Paris

MODISTES THREATENED WITH BOYCOTT

The climax in bold attire for women. The "Languourous Lift" is shown at the left, while the "Dagger Point" appears at the right. All Paris is excited over these latest gowns for evening dress.

"Languorous Lift" and "Dagger Point" Two Productions That Have Caused Criticism.

Special Cable to The American.

PARIS, Aug. 16.—All manner of figure-displaying fashions have been disported at race courses and in the cafes of Paris by models of the modistes, and in some instances the public of the French Capital has been disgusted by the extreme to which the dictators of feminine attire have gone, but has looked on with unprotesting interest. At length, however, Parisiennes are overwrought. Even the leading dressmakers are endeavoring to put forth evening gowns which in their scantiness expose to view more of the bust and limbs of the wearer than modest woman will countenance. All Paris is stirred and threats of boycotts are to be heard.

The two productions which are accredited with precipitating this disturbed situation are termed the "Languorous Lift" and the "Dagger Point." The situation has been acute for months, and the introduction of these latest effects has but served to bring it to a head. The protests come not alone from women of France, but rumors are drifting into Paris of a revulsion on the part of American and German patrons, who for years have proved so profitable to the modistes of this city.

Being designed exclusively for evening wear, both the "Languorous Lift" and the "Dagger Point" are made with extensive trains. The former gown is so constructed as to display one limb to the height of the knee. This effect is not gained, however, by a side slit, but by the draping of the skirt, which is caught up near the hip and permitted to fall in folds on either side of the exposed limb. The bodice, close fitting, is cut with a deep square neck and trimmed in velvet, which extends down the front, terminating in streamers.

The "Languorous Lift," though the cause of wide criticism, does not approach in boldness the "Dagger Point." This is the most pronounced limb-displaying gown which has been shown here. With its train at the back, the front of the skirt is cut away on either side slightly above the knees to terminate in the sharp point, from which the creation gets its name.

From a front view both lower limbs are entirely exposed, and when the wearer attempts to walk, leaving her train to sweep from knees down her form is displayed. It is with this gown that the most profusely decorated hosiery has been introduced. All manner of unique designs in varied colors are embroidered on these stockings.

The bodice is nearly as scanty as the skirt. Being close fitting, it is cut in a sharp V to the high waist line formed by a broad sash girdle. The arm, like neck and limbs, are exposed to view, since shoulder sleeves are worn.

BLACK HOSE BOSTON FAD.

BOSTON, Aug. 16.—Black stockings worn with white shoes seem to be quite the fad on the North Shore. Last year all wore white stockings with black shoes, but this season things have been reversed. Several girls are following the fad.

Decollete Gowns for Day Wear

The newest models for gowns created by the leading dressmakers for the seasons at the fsahionable seaside resorts present several novel features. In the first place, the greater number of these gowns would have been pronounced evening dresses by our mothers, but not by our great-great-grandmothers, who themselves wore decollete corsages in the daytime. The sleeves of the elaborate afternoon gown of to-day are so short and so skimpy that they hardly deserve to be called sleeves at all. In many cases the corsages of garden party and race gowns do not have the pointed back and front effect which is peculiar to the evening dresses of today, but are made round on the shoulders, quite in the style of certain 1830 gowns. White fox stoles and borders are freely used in conjunction with such robes as these. A quaint but exceedingly picturesque idea.

New Jewelry Fads

Platinum, which has bounded up to the height of fashion (and price, too) as a setting for diamonds, seems now to be the supreme metal, and in the latest designs of the jewelers gold is used only in jewels designed for informal morning wear. Small gems have crowded out the larger sizes, and the dainty, flimy creations, to be popular this summer, show this trend. The Balkan war is reflected by jewelry of many colors, and the designs follow the ideas embodied in the jewelry of those countries, but somewhat modified.

Yellow, at present a popular color in the fashion world, has called for the use of amber, topaz and yellow sapphires, while the use of red, in its various shades, has met with a response in the Oriental trend in jewelry. Good taste and fashion go hand in hand in dictating that jewelry appropriate for evening wear is entirely out of place in the morning, when only ornaments of actual use are suitable, as, for example, a simple brooch that holds the collar in place. If a woman is in the habit of wearing earrings—which, by the way, are waning in popularity in the latest jewelry offerings—those of the "stud" type are considered right for morning wear. They may be either of pearls, baroque pearls (of good quality) or a pearl and small diamond. A simple pin at the throat, either in bar, circle, oval or other shape, may be worn in the forenoon with good taste, but in the whole realm of jewelry the pearl necklace of a single strand is the only piece that may be worn with absolute good taste mornings, afternoons or evenings.

Perhaps the most popular single article of jewelry that has appeared in the shops in months is the watch bracelet. Shown in every conceivable pattern and in all grades, from the expensive diamond studded platinum affairs, which only the wealthy can afford, to the cheapest of plated gold and silver offerings.

Lapel Chains for Men

There was a time not so very long ago when lapel buttons and chains were considered bad form by some of the men who pay special attention to matters of dress, but nowadays the fashion is generally accepted, though of course only with the negligee. With the soft shirt and light summer suit these chains are much worn.

The chains are of gold or silver to correspond with the watch, and the button which is fastened in the lapel buttonhole may be of plain, polished gold or silver, hand engraved or with engine turning (a popular mode of decoration) or enamelled, set with one or more gems, and fashioned into any one of countless shapes.

The plainer buttons are concave disks, ovals, triangles, squares, hexagons or octagons with engine-turned holders, and variations of these shapes are shown with fluted or beaded edges.

The monogram may be engraved on the lapel button, or the crest or initials traced in colored enamels. Club, fraternity or society emblems or school or college colors make good decorations for the buttons.

Uses for Old Lace

The woman who possesses rare old family lace is as fortunate as she who owns lovely jewelry. Lace lends itself to a thousand adaptations. A woman of taste and individuality can do more with lace than with anything else to solve the problem of dressing well at a moderate cost.

Lace is never old-fashioned. Take, for instance, a dress of supple white silk over which is a clinging straight gown with a tunic effect. The bodice is plain over the shoulders. Under the arms and across the bust is a full, straight piece of lace with a blue velvet ribbon threading the top. The fullness is gathered in at the waist, under a blue velvet waistband, and in front is a row of pretty shaded roses over the waistband. Could anything be more charmingly youthful? Almost any woman has old pieces of lace laid away which would serve in such a gown.

For a young matron a yellow crepe de chine is gathered up over a lace front panel. Another frock of white lace is partially veiled in old rose, and pale blue mousseline de soie, draped toward one side. With the present fashions of draping, the possibilities of using beautiful laces without cutting or destroying them is endless.

FUTURIST GAUZE WRAPS LATEST EUROPEAN FAD

Weirdest Designs Are Printed Upon Them, and Some, Not Too Grotesque, Are Attractive.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—The very latest craze, initiated by a futurist artist in Paris, is for gauze wraps to be worn at race meetings or at the Casino on the continent. These wraps have the weirdest designs printed upon them, and some of them, when not too grotesque, are wonderfully attractive.

The Viscountess Curzon, one of the loveliest blondes in England, has just had made a marvelous gauze wrap for continental wear. It has a border of Egyptian figures in black thrown against dead white background, the material being so fine that it could be drawn through a ring.

The lining of the wrap is of tangerine orange tulle and there is an immense tulle.

It is to be worn over a fairylike dress of embroidered muslin. The hat is a broad Tuscan, weighed down at one side by a cluster of white, black and purple irissee. Long single black velvet ribbon, which depends on the hat, is passed round the throat and allowed to hang low at the back.

All the latest tunics are of striped gauze, and they are very effective, and are worn over black charmeuse. Sleeves are shorter and shorter, so that thirty-button gloves are an absolute necessity.

In regard to hats, society women are getting tired of big lace, since they have become fashionable in the music halls. The bonnet-shaped hat is now much in favor with girls.

Lady Diana Manners looked particularly attractive at a recent garden party in one which came well down over her ears. Around the rim were clusters of black and red cherries and wide strings of black velvet, tied at the back so that the ends fell straight down.

At the seaside resorts, white linen hats lined with black moire, adorned with white wings, are being worn by many well dressed girls.

Perfect Diamond Is Exceedingly Rare

London Dealer Declares That Women Are Best Judge of the Jewels.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—It was demonstrated at the Jewelers' Exhibition, Agricultural Hall, Islington, which closed the other day, that the perfect diamond is rare.

One dealer produced a very large diamond which he was prepared to sell for $300.

"If nature," he said, "had not tinged it with that tint of yellow the stone would be worth $30,000.

"To those who have no knowledge of gems I would say: 'Do not buy as real for $25 a diamond that is pure crystal without blemish, for it would not be real.'

"Women are the best judges of the value of precious stones because they treasure them more than men. It is a matter of instinct."

X-Ray Skirts Told To Hide in Spokane

Meeting of Transparent Gowns and Sunday Sunshine Forbidden on the Streets.

SPOKANE, WASH., Aug. 16.—Women who saunter about the streets of Spokane clad in flimsy, transparent silhouette or tango gowns will hereafter do so at risk of arrest, according to the announcement to-day by David C. Coates, Commissioner of Public Safety. The much-heralded silhouette gown appeared on the streets in the Sunday sunshine and created so much commotion that the Commissioner issued the warning at once.

"If necessary, I will order the police department to make arrests," said the Commissioner.

FULFILL DYING PLEA FOR POSIES AND FINE DRESS

FORT COLLINS, COLO., Aug. 16. Complying so far as they were able with the last expressed wish of Mrs. Alice McMillan, who was frozen to death in the Manhattan mining district, many sympathetic women of Fort Collins united to provide a decent burial for the body, thus saving it from interment in the Potter's Field.

Mrs. McMillan, whose body was not found until the April thaws, had left a note asking that she be buried in "fine clothing, in a white casket, with a white hearse and an abundance of flowers."

When it was learned definitely that Mrs. McMillan was likely to be buried in a pauper's grave, the women took the matter in hand and the funeral was held.

POLICEMEN PERMITTED TO WORK IN SHIRT SLEEVES

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., Aug. 16.—Shirt sleeves and white duck caps are to replace the blue coat and heavy helmet of the traffic policemen.

White roll collars and narrow black bow ties are to be worn with the shirtwaists, and the traffic officers have been asked to have their "gun pockets" deepened, so that their revolvers will not show.

HOBBLE HINDERS HER FLIGHT FROM POLICE

KANSAS CITY, Aug. 16.—Mrs. Hazel Allsworth's hobble skirt was her undoing. "Otherwise I never should have been caught," she told the police, when relating her pursuit by a policeman.

Mrs. Allsworth confessed to the police, they said, that she had received $40 her husband had taken from a man from Keytesville, Mo., who was stopping at their home.

Alert Modisters Now Invent Dress For the Pet Dogs

Motoring Coats, Jeweled Collars and Fancy Leashes Among Articles of Canine Apparel.

Special Cable to The American.

PARIS, Aug. 16.—The dog question is again the liveliest subject at seaside and salon. Having thrashed out fashions for women, artists and our leaders of fashion, male and female, are discussing what fashionable dogs should wear. Here are their conclusions:

Leather collars are still worn, but they should be of the same color and material as the leash. The most fashionable collars are of brass or silver, many of them mounted with precious stones, turquoises, sapphires and rubies.

Color Schemes Popular.

Much attention is paid to artistic combinations in dog wear. For instance, a dark brindled bulldog should have a red leather collar with silver-gilt mountings, while a white brindled dog looks best in a white collar set with tourquoises.

For Pekinese, Japanese and King Charles spaniels, the collar should be of worked silver, light and supple, of fine mesh and closed by a tiny padlock. A very stylish effect is obtained by the use of patent leather collars, and a ravishing combination for Poms is the dog harness which encircles the neck and breast.

Light Coats for Greyhounds.

Greyhounds look best in light colored coats with a stripe to match.

For motoring dogs, English stuffs and fur coats are in high favor, and plaids of dark shades are considered most suitable. At the seaside, sporting sweaters are very fashionable for short-haired dogs, and the wet summer is responsible for the appearance of canine mackintoshes, daintily gathered in at the neck and legs.

Every well bred dog has at least two pairs of boots, a pair of Wellingtons for outdoors wear and velvet or satin pumps for indoors.

"Unlucky Opal" Is To Be Worn a Great Deal This Season

Royalty Starts the Vogue and Jewelers Find it a Hard Matter to Supply the Demand.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—The real opal, which has long been out of favor with the fair sex, is going to enjoy a great vogue this fall. There has always been a superstitious prejudice against these stones, but the new fashion of long necklaces of uncut opals has proved too much for the women to resist, and the jewelers of Bond street and the Rue de la Paix are hard put to it to get a sufficient stock.

Queen Victoria presented to each of her daughters on her marriage a magnificent set of opal ornaments, but these have seldom seen the light of day. One night at the opera, however, it was observed that Princess Henry of Pattenberg was wearing hers, and no doubt Princess Louise and Princess Christian will follow her example.

The Queen of Spain has always worn these stones, for her birthday is in October, the lucky month for opals, and Lady Deerhurst and Lady Aline Vivian are similarly fortunate—the latter indeed wore them on her wedding day.

Lady de Bathe (Lily Langtry) has some fine stones, but probably the most valuable opals in England belong to Countess Beauchamp, who has a tiara, necklace, brooches and earrings, which were collected at much below their value by Lord Beauchamp when he was Governor of Australia.

Others who have worn opals lately are the Dowager Lady Sligo and Lady Norah Brassey.

The Princess Royal has a deep-rooted horror of them. Some fine opals were maong the jewels she lost when whencked on the Delhi and she declares that their evil influence pursues her to this day.

SUSPENDERS TO BE INCLUDED IN WOMAN'S ATTIRE

"Galluses" or Braces of Blue the Last Word in New Masculine Mode.

Special Cable to The American.

PARIS, Aug. 16.—Women's skirts for some time have been approaching the shape of the garments worn by the masculine sex, and now Paris and London face the prospect of seeing feminine attire more like men's than ever. The last word in women's clothes is "galluses." The suspenders look very much like the broad blue variety often hung in shop windows in America and possibly labeled, "The Fireman's Friend."

A Rue de la Paix dressmaker is enthusiastic over women wearing suspenders. "Braces," she declared, "will keep the blouse from coming up out of the waistband, as it sometimes does, and if carried out in the color of the skirt they should make a charming line."

Braces are not the only masculine trend in fashion, however, for after a wave of decided femininity in frocks, when frills and fluffs, and sashes and slashes, and hoppings and hobblings have been in vogue, fashion has dashed to the other extreme and London and Paris are promised waistcoats with cutaway coats, large steel trouser buckles at the back of tweed skirts and a ponderous and portly watch chain stretched across the diaphragm.

For the present the waistcoats are still daintily evolved in delicate grays and chestnuts, sprigged or flowered. Sometimes the waistcoats reach up to the neck, finishing in a small "V." Again they wrinkle effectively around the waist with a single or double row of pearl buttons. One ladies' tailor is showing a striped blue and red waistcoat with roses of another shade wandering gayly across it, the whole effect being something like a Union Jack with a flower garden on it.

The men's tailors speak rather contemptuously of the new fashions for women, scoffing especially at waistcoats, which they say have been tried several seasons without much success.

"GETS-IT" Chases Corns Alright!

Easy As One, Two, Three; No Fuss, No Pain, by Using "GETS-IT."

Just take two seconds to put a little "GETS-IT" on that corn. That corn is "done for" as sure as the sun rises. The corn shrivels up, vanishes. That's the surprise you get by using this new-plan corn cure. There's nothing to stick to the stockings or sock; your corn pains stop. You're saved the bother of applying plasters that make the corn bulge out from the core. You're saved salves that eat into the healthy flesh and "pull;" no more fussing with bandages. You don't have to help by picking and dragging out your corns, or cutting with knives or razors.

"We can Dance All Night and Our Corns Won't Hurt. We Both Use 'GETS-IT'—It Gets Corns Every Time, Dead Sure!"

"GETS-IT" is safe, painless, stops pain, never hurts healthy flesh. It is guaranteed. Try it on warts, callouses and bunions, too.

"GETS-IT" is sold at all druggists at 25 cents a bottle, or sent direct by E. Lawrence & Co., Chicago. Sold in Atlanta by Jacobs' Pharmacy Co., Elkin Drug Co., Coursey & Munn, Gunter-Watkins Co., E. H. Cone, Inc., Tinton & Co.

'OH, I SAY,' REAL FRENCH FARCE; ITS DOORS BANG

Alan Dale Finds It Minus the Star, but He Is Willing to Admit That He Did Smile.

By ALAN DALE,
Special Correspondent of The Sunday American.

LONDON, Aug. 7.—One swallow may not make a summer (though I believe it does), but nobody will deny that one "star" can make a play. Therefore, if that one "star" should be out of the cast (as often happens in London) it is quite likely that the play will lose its exuberance. I saw "Oh, I Say!" at the Criterion Theater when Mr. James Welch was out of the cast. I couldn't ask for my money back (I had been kindly presented with a pair of stalls), so I sat through a star-less "Oh, I Say!!" and paid far more attention to the play than I should have done.

Londoners don't mind a bit when the actor or actress they pay to see takes a little vacation and an understudy goes on. (You learn this from a slip always inclosed in the program, when it is too late to repine.) Londoners are used to it.

I don't know what had happened to James Welch. Anyway, it was his understudy, H. Langdon Bruce, who played the part of the bridegroom in "Oh, I Say!!"—a particularly arduous role for an understudy to tackle. I divided my time feeling sorry for H. Langdon Bruce and for myself—particularly for myself.

"Oh, I Say!!" must have been a scorcher in its original French of Henri Kersai and Albert Barre, when it was called "Une Nuit de Noces" (A Wedding Night). It had to be adapted into London by Sydney Blew and Douglas Hoare. What they had to do was to "wedding-ring" the affair, or at least, in a question of equivocal relations, to suggest that the two were "engaged."

The little English word "engaged" covers a multitude of Parisian iniquities. Marcel, the hero of the piece, just married to the beautiful Suzette, meets in the foyer of the Hotel d'Angleterre at Beauvais the scintillant and corruscating Sidonie, to whom he has been "engaged." You smile as the word pops out in its Anglo-Saxon humbug. You are perfectly well aware what the adapter has done, but you look around you at the ornate and bare-shouldered British matron, and you quite understand why Marcel and Sidonie were "engaged."

That is really the gist and the gust of "Oh, I Say!!" The usual farcical use of lies is resorted to, and when I tell you that there are four doors in the setting—all of which bank—you can see your play. Everybody is pushed in at one door or other. Everybody else rushes in at another door. The most popular remark made is "You here?"

Each, seeing the other, cries "You here?" I daresay you have heard the remark before in French farce. Half of the French farces wouldn't get over the footlights unless you heard that lovely query, "You here?" Sometimes it is only "You here?" More emphatically, it is You here?" In cases of desperation it is "YOU here?"

However, I'm not going to pretend that I didn't smile at "Oh, I say!!" for it would be foolish pretense. I did smile. It has its funny moments in spite of allusions to pajamas, keyholes, disinfectants, and so on. Once get into the mood, and in spite of reason one laughs. "Laughter," says Professor Henri Bergson, "always implies a sort of secret freemasonry, or even complicity, with other laughers, real or imaginary. How often has it been said that the fuller the theater, the more uncontrolled the laughter of the audience!" There was a good deal of laughter at the Criterion Theater, and whatever one may write, in all cynicism of this cut-and-dried farce business, the piece HAS caught on. In my humble opinion, what "Oh, I Say!!" needs, and what I am told Mr. Lee Shubert will give it for U. S. A., is music.

Music dulls noe's sense of logic What appears banal and trite and far-fetched in a straight farce is accepted without question when a bit of music happens. With a chorus of pretty girls chirping "Oh, I Say!!" it wouldn't matter very much what I DID say. So there you are.

I can't tell you what James Welch did with the farce, but I should imagine that it belonged to him. There were two very pretty girls in the cast—Miss Sybil de Bray, who appeared as the bride, and Miss Ruby Miller, who was the maid. Then there was a very clever actress, rejoicing in the name of Marguerite Sciaitiel, who is, I fancy, Norwegian, and who is quite likely to be heard from again. There were many others, who had to rush in and rush out, and get banged in the doors. They had to work hard for their living; and if they were not merry, they were at least active little things!

It is a long time since we have had a dose of real French farce, even in London, and the English public has taken kindly to "Oh, I Say!!" even without music. The piece is very short, indeed, which is distinctly in its favor, and it says what it has to say with lightning-like rapidity. Anyway, it is established here.

American Likely to Rule Ireland

Earl of Granard May Be Viceroy

Wife Was Miss Beatrice Mills

Countess of Granard, formerly Miss Beatrice Mills, whose husband is prominently mentioned as first Viceroy of Ireland under home rule.

All London Believes She Will Grace Court if Husband Gets Important Post.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—An American woman may rule in Ireland as wife the first victory under home rule.

All London is talking over the prospect and is prophesying the appointment of the Earl of Granard as Vice Regent of Ireland. The Countess of Granard was formerly Miss Beatrice Mills, of New York, the beautiful heiress whose marriage to the Earl was generally considered a love match.

The talk of the appointment is almost universally popular gossip. The Earl is a Catholic and his American wife is wealthy, and it is believed he will be acceptable to the Irish people, and fully able to hold his own as to the splendor of his court.

But apart from the material advantages of politics, wealth and religion, society talks pleasantly of the Countess herself. They recall the brilliant figure that Lady Daisy Leiter Curzon made as wife of the Viceroy in India, and announce in their opinion Countess of Granard will be as presentable.

Color of reality was given to the gossip when the Earl and his Countess went to Castle Forbes, Ireland, last week. No announcement was made that their trip had anything of a momentous nature, but it is rumored that beyond the casual appearance of the journey there is something of significance.

$30,000,000 Yearly in Penny-Slot Gambling

French Government Is Forced to Put Ban on Machines in Small Cafes.

Special Cable to The American.

PARIS, Aug. 16.—The French Government has decided to prohibit the "penny-in-the-slot" gambling machines in all the lower class cafes.

The last available statistics show that in 1911 there were 64,953 of these petty gambling machines in use in France, and that their total receipts during the year were $30,000,000.

The machines are usually leased by cafe keepers on a sharing basis. During 1911 the proprietors received as their share $10,000,000.

The remaining $20,000,000 was represented by tickets, drawn from the machines, which were useless unless exchanged for drinks.

Red Horses for Army; New Breed Developed

Chestnut Equines Said to Have More Fire Than Those of Less Vivid Color.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, Aug. 12.—As a result of experiments made in Lecestershire by biologists, not yet completed, a new species of horses is being developed for the army.

Bright chestnut, which is the equivalent of red hair in children, has quite overcome all other tints among hackneys, and it is associated with the mental quality that is called "fire." It is a master color in more than one respect, indicating a viking spirit.

In horses and men a sort of duel is going on between red and brown, or rather chestnut and bay. The hackney is chiefly red, the hunter chiefly brown, though Ireland is now producing many chestnuts.

'WHITE LADY' IS AGAIN SEEN IN KAISER'S HALLS

Fears Feft for Life of Emperor if Traditional Ghost Appears in Castle

By STEVEN BURNETT.
Special Cable to The American.

BERLIN, Aug. 16.—Superstitious people here are convinced that some great calamity is threatening the Kaiser or his family for the Hohenzollern family ghost, the famous "white lady," is said to have walked at the Palace, a thing she never does except when some disaster is impending or when a Hohenzollern is about to die.

The Kaiser himself ridicules the idea and has forbidden any talk about it inside the Palace walls, but several of the servants swear they did see the "white lady" and that the explanation that it must have been some lady resident of the Palace walking in her sleep through the endless corridors in her night dress is absurd, for she looked exactly as tradition says she does look, clad in long flowing white dress, her pale hands crossed on her breast, and her face covered with a nun's veil.

Appears in Middle Ages.

The "white lady" was first heard of as haunting the castles at Bayreuth, Ansbach and Plassenburg in the middle ages. At Plassenburg she was so much feared that the cavaliers of the court took delight in masquerading in white in certain rooms to frighten those who came their way.

Once, when Markgraf Albrecht, the Warrior, met a white lady at Plassenburg, he grasped her with his strong arms and threw her down the stairs, and at the bottom was found the dead body of his Chancellor, who, with the Bishop of Bamberg, had conspired against his ruler. But this incident did not in any way damage the reputation of the "white lady." Someone always managed to see her just before death entered the castle.

Napoleon Saw Specter.

The great Napoleon, who was intensely superstitious, on his military campaigns twice had occasion to pass through Bayreuth. The first time was in 1812, when on his way to Russia, and he sent a request from Aschaffenburg that he should not be asked to pass the night in the rooms at Bayreuth, which were known to be visited by the "white lady." His request was granted; yet next morning he arose in the worst of moods, and as he was getting into his carriage he was heard to mutter something about the "accursed castle." It was certainly the presage of disaster to him. The following year when he passed through the place he refused to pass the night there.

Last time a "white lady" showed herself at Berlin was in 1859, a short time before the birth of the present Kaiser.

Windsor Castle Open To Tourists Again

King George Orders That Any Official Accepting Tip Will Be Dismissed.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—At this time of the year hundreds of American visitors go to Windsor to explore the castle, and there is rejoicing in the town over the reopening of the State apartments which have been closed ever since last January through fear of suffragette outrages.

Every person who enters the castle will have to pay a shilling, and there will be no free days as hitherto. By the King's command this money will go to the local hospital.

By the King's command also it is reported that no "tips" whatever shall be given to guides or to any of the officials at the castle. If any official is discovered accepting a "tip," he will be dismissed.

POLYGAMY URGED AS CRYING NEED BY GIRL MILITANT

British Suffragette Declares That Monogamy Is Favored Only by the Happily Wedded

By HERBERT TEMPLE.
Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—There is no better evidence of the remarkable change that is taking place in English women and girls than the existence of militancy and the appearance of a movement led by a young English girl for the introduction of polygamy in England.

Militancy among suffragettes had been confined to a very small number of women and to a certain class of women. The advocate of polygamy to whom I refer, however, is a very well-known writer, although quite a young girl.

An interview with the Sheik Ul Islam, the supreme priest of the Mohammedan Church, cabled first to New York and then to London, in which the Sheik pointed out he Mo-Mohammedans have polygamy and very little immorality, whereas we Europeans have monogamy and widespread immorality, was read with a great deal of interest here, particularly by women. It was very widely commented upon.

The young woman writer who would have polygamy says:

"Let us approach the problem fearlessly and frankly. The fact is that the present standard of morality is false and unreal, or that while nature produces what is ultimately a surplus of women over men, monogamy is not a suitable system for all our people.

"No system can be suitable which condemns to death or non-life so large a portion of the community as we, the surplus women, form.

"Monogamy is not a sacred institution, and there is no real necessity for hundreds of thousands, even millions, of women to be sacrificed upon its altar. Nor would anything of value be destroyed by its removal and by the setting up of a more suitable moral and legal standard.

"We are told that the ideal condition is one man—one wife. Well, whatever alteration takes place there can be nothing to force people, if they think fit, to preserve that equation so far as they themselves are concerned.

"But those who adopt that standard for themselves have no right—human or divine—to try to impose it upon others who are able and willing to adopt another, especially when imposing such standard is against nature itself and actually condemns a large number of human beings who have equal rights to themselves to exclusion from life.

"I do not believe the difficulty lies with men. I think that each man deep down in his heart admits—if only to himself—that monogamy is unnatural and has failed.

"The difficulty lies with the fortunately married woman.

"If she and her husband are satisfied with one another, then whatever the legal right may be they would never have anyone else.

"If they are not satisfied with each other, then monogamy will not bind them in fact.

"When all bachelor women and widows have the parliamentary vote, and their right to assist in the making of the nation's laws, one of its first influences will be to remove and destroy the artificial and arbitrary standard of monogamy and to establish polygamy as the legal and proper right and custom of an advanced people!"

Plombieres-les-Bains Bores And Drenches Paris Society

By LA RACONTEUSE

Special Cable to The American.

PARIS, Aug. 16.—I have just returned from Plombieres-les-Bains, our most fashionable pleasure resort, where I went not because I really wanted to, for in this miserably wet summer Paris is most decidedly the best place to spend your time, but because my concierge, in plain words, told me that she could not possibly have any respect for a tenant who showed such atrocious disrespect of the laws of "le beau-monde" as to remain in Paris all summer instead of going to some fashionable resort.

In other words, I had to leave my cozy apartment for a while, or I knew that my female tyrant would make life unbearable for me by those thousands of mean little tricks known only to a Paris concierge, against which you are absolutely defenseless.

I found Plombieres-les-Bains as cold and wet as I had expected it, but crowded with society people, all dreadfully bored and all asking what to do on a dreadfully long afternoon with the rain pouring down.

Takes Hour to Recover.

In the morning time passes quickly, no matter how the weather. You take "le traitement," which here consists in a hot bath, followed by a cold shower, massage "sans l'seau" in the "kurhouse," or massage "a sec" at home in bed, after which you need at least an hour's rest to recover.

After lunch you go to the kursal to drink your coffee, tea or elder blossom tea to the accompaniment of the band; then you attend to your private correspondence, play a little "aux petits chevaux" or "a la roulette," but what then?

The afternoon is still young, and promenading, tennis or golf are out of the question.

Suddenly an electric shock passed through the room the news has spread that Monseigneur Angouard, the Congo missionary, will give a lecture at Hotel Deschauseaux, the hotel of all priests and religious people. You know in advance whom you will meet there and whom not. Not a single gambler, not a single "dame dernier cri"—nobody, in fact, but the members of the poorer aristocracy and the badly dressed bourgeoisie.

On the stroke of 4 these people meet in the large hall, and when they are all seated, firm steps are heard in the corridor and Monseigneur's imposing figure appears in the doorway smiling at everybody. He pretends to take a sip of water, and then he begins to tell about the 37 years he has spent in voluntary exile, first as a soldier in the Foreign Legion and then, when he was tired of shooting heathens, trying to save their souls as a missionary.

And the Hat Is Passed.

And when he has finished, one of the young girls present gets up, takes off her hat, turns it upside down and carries it around, asking for contributions to Monseigneur's little colored babies, and a few moments later she smilingly hands Monseigneur $150.

These affairs are always alike, and the Monseigneurs always turn up on a rainy day when people can not get away.

A lady who has caused a stir is the beautiful and charming Duchess of Manchester, who has given us a new dance which my readers probably know and which "isn't doing a thing" (is that right?) to the once almighty tango.

The dance, I am told, is composed by an American, Uriel Davis.

To be able to dance it you must first patiently practice walking upstairs instead of using the elevator. When you are quite familiar with the movement required to walk from one step to the one above, all you have to do is to repeat this movement in the ballroom—eight steps forward, eight steps back, raising your knees as much as possible; then you slide sideways as fast as possible and then repeat the first eight steps each way.

Without intending to hurt the feelings of Mr. Uriel Davis, I venture to say that I find the dance silly, and the reason it is so popular is because it is an excellent exercise to take off flesh.

Croquet Suddenly The Fad in England

Old Game Again Is Feature of the Smartest Week-End Parties.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—Croquet has suddenly come back into favor after a long rest, and is a marked feature at all smart week-end parties.

Tennis is too strenuous and golf too baffling for many whose social duties call for much of their time.

The croquet lawns at Ranelagh and Hurlingham are in great demand, and many are introducing new rules and new kinds of hoops to give novelty to the game.

The Earl of Essex is devoted to the game. Lady Charles Beresford also passes hours at it.

Viscount Doneraile, Lord Tollamache, Lord Lurgan and Nigel Kingscote are often to be seen playing at Ranelagh.

Among the fair sex one notices Lady Angela Forbes, Lady Margaret Spicer, Lady Sophie Scott, Lady Winifred Butler and Mrs. Arthur Sassoon.

MANY ESCAPE VACCINATION.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—More than a quarter of a million children—or 31.6 per cent of those born—were exempted from vaccination last year under the "conscientious objection" rule.

Over 300 Ragtimers Pining for America

London Music Halls Crowded With Idle Singers Scheming to Raise Steerage Fare.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—There are 300 or 400 homesick Americans in London. They are music hall artists who flocked over here when ragtime brought about a trans-Atlantic boom.

They came first class, talking of three-figure contracts, and now they are scheming to get cheap passages home disguised as Polish emigrants.

The trouble, of course, is that the music hall stage has been glutted with American turns.

BRITISH PRESS CALLS KIPLING REAL LAUREATE

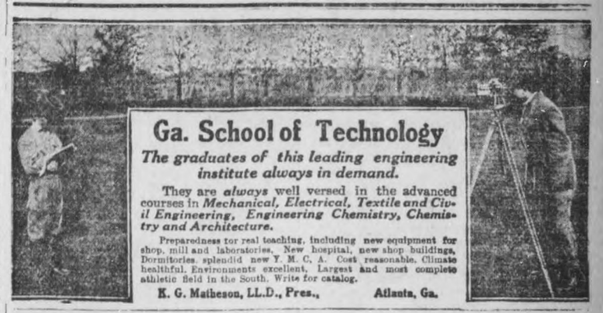
Appointment of Dr. Bridges Declared Tribute to Pedantry Rather Than to Poetry.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—The appointment of Dr. Robert Bridges to succeed Alfred Austin as poet laureate has note been treated as kindly by the press as was Mr. Austin's succession to Tennyson, notwithstanding the fact that both as a man of letters and as a poet Dr. Bridges is measurably his immediate predecessor's superior. The censure of Dr. Bridges' selection is probably to be found in the fact that the press is merely voicing public opinion, which is keenly disappointed that Rudyard Kipling did not secure the office.

Says The Morning Post: "If Mr. Kipling had been appointed laureate our people in these islands and overseas would have understood the honor as expressing a national sense. We are apt to forget that poets are of service in the world not merely as delighting the ears and refining the emotions of the cultured few, but as calling like a trumpet to duty in life and work, to the scorn of the base and the glory of the patriot, according to the poet's conception of baseness and patriotism."

The Pall Mall Gazette: "Mr. Kipling's claim is far above that of any contemporary. The writer of the 'Recessional' and of 'If' will be the laureate of the English people whenever crisis calls for utterance, and a world-wide empire will be his responsive audience."



The Star: "Mr. Kipling has more poetry in his little finger than Dr. Bridges has in his whole body. To be perfectly candid, the election of Dr. Bridges is a tribute to pedantry, and not to poetry. There are many living poets whose claims are indisputably superior to his. But in this country the path of dullness is the road to glory."

Just before the post of poet laureate was filled, T. P.'s Weekly published the following table as the result of an exhaustive canvass among its readers:

RITCHIE DOESN'T COMPARE WITH OTHER CHAMPS

Must Meet Murphy, Welsh and Cross Before He Can Hope To Be World Figure.

By W. W. Naughton.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 16.—Here is a question fired at me from a home critic:

"How does Willie Ritchie compare with the lightweight champions who preceded him?"

Up to date he does not begin to compare in the slightest. Ritchie is still young and lacking in experience, however, and may loom up as more of a world-figure in pugilism when he has pitted himself against men like Tommy Murphy, Freddy Welsh and Leach Cross. Wolgast, who preceded as a champion, was a wonderful fighter before appendicitis marked him for its own. His handling of Battling Nelson on Richmond Field was something to live in memory, even if little "Ad" had never accomplished anything else.

* * *

BATTLING NELSON in his prime, was an interesting performer. And it was his negative qualities that made him worth while. There never was a man within twenty pounds of his weight who could stand such rough usage and keep pressing steadily forward. He wasn't the most gainly fighter of his class, by long odds, but his powers of assimilation covered a multitude of defects.

* * *

JOE GANS was a thorough workman, and a sight of him in action was as great a treat as a student of boxing could desire. He stepped around in a soft-footed way and was never out of position. His manner of ending it all with a downward clip of the right, delivered without drawing back the elbow, was well worth the price of admission.

He was an artist and it was a lament with old-time sports that Joe and Jack McAuliffe did not flourish contemporaneously. A tilt between the pair would have been worth a journey to see.

WACO SECOND SACKER IS SOLD TO BOSTON BRAVES

WACO, TEXAS, Aug. 16.—Oscar Dugey, second baseman of the Waco Texas League team and leading base runner of the league, was sold to the Boston Nationals, to report at the end of the local season. The consideration is said to have been about $2,000.

Koney Makes One Error a Month

Cards' Fielder May Set New Mark

ST. LOUIS, MO., Aug. 16.—An error a month is the pace Ed Koney is setting for what probably will be a world's record as a fielding first baseman. So far the guardian of the Cardinals' initial sack has turned but four miscues this season—one in April, May, June and July—and if he gets but one in August and September his name will be engraved in the record books.

To accept 1,112 of the 1,116 chances offered him in 101 games is quite a phenomenal performance; still this is owned by Koney for his 1913 work. And it has everything eclipsed in the records of fielding first basemen since the National League was organized.

The highest average ever compiled by a first baseman in the National League was by Frank Chance in 1910, when he missed but three chances out of 814; that gave him a mark of .996. This to-day stands supreme, but if Koney continues his average of one error per month he will shade Chance's record by a slight margin.

Chance Leads All Rivals.

Since 1871, when the first set of records was kept in the National League, Chance's .996 stands out on top. Next to the ex-Peerless Leader is Dan McGann with a .995, and then .994 is the highest figure. The following table shows the five highest averages of the first basemen:

Year. Name.	g	po.	a.	e.	pct.
1910—Chance . .	87	773	38	3	.996
1906—McGann. .	133	1391	83	8	.995
1909—Chance . .	92	901	40	6	.994
1907—McGann. .	81	781	55	5	.994
1897—Tebeau . .	91	912	42	5	.994

Koney's fielding this year has been sensational and proves that he is without a superior as a fielding first baseman. Of course, now Chase and Daubert and Stovall have their supporters, but the truth is that for being steady day in and day out Koney is supreme.

Koney isn't as flashy as Chase. He will not dive high into the air and make the catch one-handed and he dosen't pull off the fancy stuff which Chase does. But he gets the wild pegs, the high ones, the low ones and those far too high, left and right minus the "grandstand" effort.

How Koney Made Errors.

On April 20 Koney made his first error. It was at Robison Field and he missed an easy foul off Chief Wilson. Later, Wilson put a single in left. The second error was May 28 in Chicago against the Cubs. It happened in the inning when Mitchell rolled to Huggins. Hug made the perfect toss, but Big Ed clamped his hands before the ball arrived, muffed and the runner was safe.

Then came error No. 3. It was June 25, at Robison Field. Carey grounded to Koney. Max raced for the bag and Ed, seeing he couldn't get there first, made a toss to Harmon. Bob let it get away, Carey ran to second and Koney got the error.

Big Ed almost escaped the month of July, but a bit of severe scoring gave him an error on the last day of the month. In the fourth inning Connolly rolled a slow grounder to Koney. Sallee raced over to the bag, but Connolly had the play beaten and it was scored as a hit. Sal allowed the ball to drop, roll a few feet away, and taking his time in recovery, Connolly hiked down to second.

There is how Ed Koney has made his four errors this season. And in between them he has accepted 1,112, certainly a remarkable record.

With the Cards in a slump this year, Koney's fielding hasn't dropped a bit. His batting has, and for that reason the fans have been handing the jeers occasionally to the Big Train. Every fan can rehearse when Ed failed to get a hit and drive in a run. And why? Because his play is watched every day where the others are passed by.

McCloskey Develops Big Ed.

Koney can miss driving in a run and the fans will see it. But Magee, Oakes, Mowrey, Wingo, Whitted and others will miss and nobody pays any attention to it. Not Koney, though.

It took time and constant training on the part of John J. McCloskey to develop Koney into the great first baseman that he is. Koney came here in June, 1907. He was a big kid, awkward around first, and didn't know how to shift his feet. He had the right foot in front when the left should have been there, and often the other way, too.

But McCloskey knew what he had. The entire summer John J. drilled his new capture. In the morning practice Mac toiled with Koney. He showed him this; he showed him that; he showed him how to keep one foot on the sack and catch the wide throw with the gloved mitt.

And it didn't take Koney long to master these fine points. He shows it to-day.

Some will doubt Koney's ability as a first baseman. But here he has a .996 average, just a fraction under .997, and every winter the Cubs, Pirates and Giants bid for the "Big Train."

Koney really isn't appreciated in St. Louis. They won't realize what a marvel and wonder he is until if, by chance, a trade will send him to some other club. And a duplicate of Ed Koney isn't cavorting around any of the minor league fields to-day.

TO CHANGE A. A. U. CODE.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—G. T. Kirby, president of the Amateur Athletic Union, is to revise the A. A. U. code of rules, which, he says, in their present form can not be understood by attorneys. Kirby made this announcement before sailing for Berlin to attend the conference of athletic authorities of the world.

GIANTS CAN GET KONEY IF MATTY IS IN THE DEAL

President Britton Says He Will Make Swap With McGraw for "Big Six" and Merkle.

ST. LOUIS, MO., Aug. 16.—If the Giants will part with Christy Mathewson and Fred Merkle, then McGraw can have Ed Koney from the Cardinals!

From New York Thursday came a report that the Giants were dickering with the Cardinals for another swap, and that McGraw had offered Southpaw Wiltse and First Baseman Fred Merkle for the "Big Train."

Considering that Wiltse is fading and fading fast, and that Koney easily outclasses Merkle, the cards would run second on such an exchange, and the truth of such a transaction was asked of President Britton.

"If McGraw will make it Mathewson and Merkle instead of Wiltse and Merkle then I will O. K. the trade," said President Britton. "But Wiltse and Merkle, no."

Then the Cards' Prexy smiled and puffed his perfecto and continued:

"Yes, that's what I mean, Matty and Merkle. Matty must be in the deal. Anybody but Matty and there's nothing doing with us for Ed Koney."

"But don't you know, Mr. Britton, that McGraw never would consent to trade Mathewson?" was put to the Cards' chief.

"Why, certainly I know it, and that's just why I name Matty in a deal with the Giants for Koney," flashed back Britton. "After we took Crandall instead of Wiltse for McLean, I offered to buy Wiltse from the Giants, but McGraw said he did not want money, but was after players.

"We're after players to strengthen our club, too. We are trying to get the youngsters, and are willing to make a trade where we have an edge, but it's a cinch that we're not going to pass out anything like Koney for Merkle and Wiltse."

GIANTS ALWAYS FIGHTING, EVEN IF IT'S M'GRAW

Crandall Incident Goes to Prove That Muggsy's Men Are Always in Wrangling Mood.

CINCINNATI has pulled the story that two or three of the New York Giants took a punch at Manager McGraw because he released Otis Crandall, star pinch pitcher and pinch hitter, accompanying his action with the statement that Otis never was a real star and wasn't fit for membership on a high class baseball team. Naturally the players were incensed to see an old pal thus turned down, the more because McGraw's action deprives the young Indiana boy of a probable slice of world's series money later in the fall. Maybe they did punch McGraw and maybe they didn't. It doesn't look reasonable that they did, for "Muggsy" isn't standing around as a target for anybody.

* * *

BUT the incident shows two things conclusively. The Giants are fighters, every inch of them, and it is the fighting spirit that wins in any sort of an athletic contest. The Giants are keyed up to the right tension and their position at the head of the National League race is one to which they are fully entitled because of this fighting spirit. McGraw has them gingered to a nicety and doubtless welcomes a little shindig now and then off the field, just as a matter of relaxation.

* * *

MANY of the McGraw methods are far from commendable and some of them are even reprehensible, but in the main other baseball managers might well take example of the Giants' leader and instill this fighting spirit into the men. Frank Chance could keep the old Cub machine snarling and snapping in much the same way and Jimmy Callahan's nature is infectious at times and carries the team along under high pressure. Joe Tinker is a fighter at heart and even the queer conditions in Cincinnati hasn't taken all of Joe's heart. There are few other managers, however, who really scrap and succeed in getting the fighting spirit into their men.

PORTLAND, ME., Aug. 16.—Manager Hugh Duffy, of the Portland club of the New England League, announced that Outfielder Joseph Burns had been sold to Detroit.

Burns' home is in Ipswich, Mass. The price was not made public.

RACE TRACK AT AUCTION.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—The passing of another famous New York race track apparently is forecast in a foreclosure sale of the Brighton Beach property, scheduled for August 28. The action was brought on a second mortgage of approximately $95,000. The first mortgage is $650,000.

Johnny Evers Need Not Worry

President Murphy Is With Him

By Davenport.

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—John Evers is not worried concerning the report he is to be ousted from the managership of the Cubs.

"I am worried in a sense," said the Keystone King when he heard the report, "for I know these reports are not tending to the improvement of conditions on the club.

"I firmly believe the reports emanate from sources unfriendly to the Cubs.

"Last winter when it was announced I had been appointed to succeed Frank Chance, my enemies said I would not last until Decoration Day.

"I was right on the job at Pittsburg on Memorial Day and then the fellows who seem to have a grudge against me said: 'Well, he'll blow up before the Fourth of July,' but there was no premature explosion and yours truly celebrated the glorious Fourth by managing the Cubs while they went through a double-header.

"Now they are flirting me right off the reel, but so far as the stability of my position is concerned I am not concerned.

Murphy Pleased With Work.

"I have the knowledge that President Murphy is back of me. He has convinced me upon more than one occasion that he is backing me, and I know him well enough to feel that I can rely upon him.

"He has upheld everything I have done in the management of the players and he has informed me upon more than one occasion that I am giving satisfaction.

"As I have said concerning alleged dissensions in the club, I know who is starting these reports. They do not come from West Side fans. It is a trouble that has existed for years, and some one must be the goat, so why not your humble servant? Let it go with the other managerial duties. My shoulders are broad. I can not only stand the hisses and jeers of the fans, but I guess it is up to me to pay no heed to these false reports that are being circulated and have been circulated all season."

President Murphy also emphatically denies he intends to remove the Keystone King.

When apprised of the fact some one had started the report Evers was to be separated from his job, President Murphy said: "There is absolutely no truth in the report. I still believe Evers is the best manager in the business and the greatest ball player in the world. I have backed him up in his action on and off the field.

"I wouldn't give 2 cents for a manager who can't manage, and I am satisfied that Evers is not one of that sort."

Discussing the reports that the Cubs are fighting among themselves, Manager Evers said: "I want men who fight, but I want them to use a little judgment in whom they fight.

Wants Fighting Spirit.

"I like men of the Zimmerman type, who are fighting every inch of the way.

"True, Heine was put out of a number of games this summer, but why? Because he was always up on the job, watching every play and ready to fight for what he considered his rights.

"I do think it is unfair for the fans and sport writers to pick up every little petty quarrel that may come up and make a mountain of it. These are the things that are hurting the club."

Considering the pitching the Cubs had during the early part of the season, the misfortune sustained by Overall in the way of illness, and the other hard luck, Evers has done well to keep his club up among the top notchers, and he is being given credit for it all around the circuit.

Then there was the hard luck encountered when the Cubs invaded the East the last time, Archer out of the game with a had finger, Zimmerman out with a game ankle, and Bridwell out with punk pins.

Some handicap, "fellers," but Jawn has been right on the job fighting his way through all the time.

We have it from the Keystone King, right from the shoulder, that stories of dissension on the club have been greatly magnified, and here's a little secret that will surprise you.

That story to the effect Evers is to be deposed came from an eavesdropper.

AFTER BERTH IN WESTERN.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA., Aug. 16.—Leo Meyer, of this city, has made a bid for the Sioux City franchise of the Western League. Meyer said he was anxious to bring the club here, but declared he was not sure about meeting all the requirements of the league.

GEO. HARRISON IS JOE BEAN'S BEST PLAYER

Ex-Marist Star Now Making Fine Baseball Record at Georgia University.

By O. B. Keeler.

WITH your kind permission, we will now introduce Mr. Harrison, prominent second baser of the University of Georgia baseball team, former Marist star and a corking good student of pharmaceutics as well as the national sport.

Mr. Harrison's initials are George L., the "L." standing for Larrup. He is an Atlanta boy, 19 years old, sound in wind and limb, and quite a hobby of Joe Bean's.

"I think a lot of George because he can think," says Joe, who was George's coach at Marist. "Every year the colleges show us a lot of young ball players that can run and throw and field and hit. But a fearful percentage of these neat little baseball machines use their heads mainly to keep their collars from slipping off."

But that isn't the way of George. Take it from Joe.

A Smart Ball Player.

"He is what is known in professional circles as a 'smart ball player,'" Joe adds. "He remembers every little tip anybody gives him—and he uses his memory on the field. He thinks fast and he has the physical speed to carry out his hunches. He is the best all-round college ball player I ever had charge of."

George was a freshman last year, starring in pharmaceutics and the territory around second base. He is expected to do the same, only more so, in the gentle springtime of 1914.

At present George, who is an earnest investigator of things entirely apart from the squeeze play and touching second, is doing a bit of extra work in physics at the summer school of the university. He takes quite a serious view of life, even at the supposedly callow age of 19 summers and the same number of winters.

Had Heart Trouble?

An odd feature of George's development as a ball player cropped out when he started to Marist where he played with great effect three years for Joe Bean.

George was very young then, and he was growing so fast that he frequently found his clothes too small for him when he got up in the morning. The stretching worried some of his insides a bit, and George's folks had an idea he had a floppy heart. It used to flop when George played tennis. They asked Joe Bean to take good care of George and not let him play ball too hard. They recommended first base as the easiest job.

The Flopping Stopped.

But Joe needed a second baseman. Also he saw right away where George ought to perform. He reasoned that one place was as bad as another, if not worse, when it came to causing cardiacal floppings, and he diagnosed properly the uncertain behavior of George's pumping apparatus.

Moreover, George had let up on the growing by that time and was feeling great.

So George went to second base, where he proceeded to eat 'em alive.

He has been doing that ever since, too.

George isn't looking forward to professional toil on the sunburned square. He is going to be a pharmacist, which is a druggist with a university training.

And if George applies the same system to pharmaceutics that he has to baseball, he should travel along on the high speed.

Joe Bean says George is one smart ball player.

BOOKING AGENCY FOR BOXERS TO BE FORMED

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—Plans are maturing for a national boxing organization, which will have for its purpose the booking of boxers for various clubs or promoters throughout the country; in fact, it is to be a general booking agency, the same as is in vogue among theatrical people. The man back of the project is Wilbur Stuart, of Columbus, Ohio.

It is the intention of the organizers of the company to have connections in all the large cities of the country. This project would do away with the middleman, or manager, to some extent, but not necessarily, as very often managers are only too willing to pay the regular booking fee to get a match.

The scheme may not look very tempting to some at the present time, but with the growth of the boxing game there is no reason why the project should not be a success—at least, it is worth trying.

KONETCHY FOR MERKLE AND WILTSE IS RUMORED TRADE

PITTSBURG, PA., Aug. 16.—Local baseball men gave credence to-day to a tip that Manager McGraw, of the Giants, is dealing with St. Louis for First Baseman Konetchy and has offered First Baseman Merkle and Pitcher Wiltse in exchange. Since the golf squabble in which Merkle was involved along with Mathewson, McGraw and Merkle have not been the best of friends.

INDIANS GET CENTRAL STAR.

TERRE HAUTE, IND., Aug. 16.—Wheeler, of the Terre Haute club, has been ordered by the Cubs to report to the Indianapolis American Association club. This was a great surprise to the fans, who did not know that the Cubs owned him. Wheeler leads the Central League in batting with .342.

Here Is George Harrison, Georgia's Great Infielder, Who Uses His "Bean" in Playing Baseball

Three years of second basing under the tuition of Joe Bean at Marist fitted George to jump right into the spotlight in his freshman year at Georgia and pile himself up a fine little reputation. He will start with flying colors when the season opens next spring.

This looks like pretty severe training for a future pharmacist, but it isn't the only kind Harrison takes. Just now Georgia's star infielder is taking a summer course in physics at the University.

It really doesn't matter how fast the pace is, or whether George Harrison is sliding to second, or dashing in to start a swinging double play—he's always thinking. Joe Bean says he thinks faster and with more effect than any other college player he ever had anything to do with. "His head does more than merely hold his collar on," says Joe. And Joe ought to know something about it.

Looking over the film, it is hard to imagine that George was suspected of having heart trouble a few years ago, when he entered Marist and wanted to play first base, because that job was supposed to be easier than the other stations of the infield. Joe Bean diagnosed George's trouble as rapid growing, and Joe was right about it. As soon as George stopped expanding, his heart settled down to a fine, even gait, and has never missed a tick since. He is now approaching his twentieth year, and is sound in wind, limb and disposition.

'Walsh Now Pitching for Sox' Tickers Don't Flash That Now

ED WALSH is not with the White Sox on their Eastern trip. In all the games Callahan's men play during their stay in the East, the ticker will never flash, 'NINTH INNING: WALSH NOW PITCHING FOR CHICAGO."

The Big Moose, the greatest of iron men, isn't the Walsh of 1912. The averages give him seven won and three lost for a percentage of .700. He has pitched 10 games, with the season half over. If he pitches 10 more during the remainder of 1913 it will be a surprise.

Walsh is worn out. He has the heart and head of last year, but his arm isn't able to perform what he wills. He is just a shadow of his 1912 self, so far as pitching goes.

Too many innings of relief work, too many innings pitched did for his iron arm.

For years he was "THE WHITE SOX," practically all there was to the White Sox, and the only reason anyone went to see the club. Last season, with ordinary backing, he pitched Chicago into fourth place. There were 78 games won by the club. Walsh is credited with 27 of them in his own record. Many more he saved for other twirlers, going in with the Sox ahead and stopping rallies.

Callahan pitched his willing worker 393 innings, or 43 nine-inning games, during the American League season. This shows on the books but there is no record of the innings Walsh warmed up and used up his arm by so doing.

This season Comiskey, the Sox owner, thought Walsh would pitch more than 400 innings. Callahan thought so Wash thought so.

But the Iron Man was through. He had held the White Sox up so long that his arm was weary, even if he didn't know it. His record of 393 innings in the American League season, topped off by his feat of twirling the Sox to victory by pitching 40 innings of the Chicago city series with the Cubs—which he won practically by himself—has taken toll.

Whether Ed Walsh will come back is a thing the future will have to tell. Sometimes they do, but oftener they don't. Rest may bring him back, if Callahan gives it to him. But again it may be that 393 innings of fiercely competitive ball have ruined his arm for good and all and that one of the greatest pitchers the game has known is now a has-been.

Universal Polo at Panama Exposition

Exciting Game To Be Opening Feature of Great Affair—Stand to Seat 18,000.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., Aug. 16.—Universal polo will be the opening feature incident to the department of live stock at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition.

There will be many stables on the site, and the race track infield will afford an ideal location for polo grounds.

Polo enthusiasm is spreading all over the world and it is proposed to have ten or fifteen days of polo, beginning with the opening day of the exposition.

A series of elimination matches will be arranged, and because of climatic advantages a number of the established teams will winter their ponies in California.

There will be a grand stand which will seat 18,000, and its capacity will be taxed during the great tournament, which will be held on the exposition grounds.

The question of cups and prizes is now being considered. If the Hurlingham cup still remains in this country it is possible that the international polo match can be held at San Francisco. That, of course, is a question which can only be decided by time, but in any event representative teams from many countries will be attracted to a universal meet at San Francisco in 1915.

TESREAU HAS BEEN ON SLAB IN MANY GAMES

McGraw Has Sent Jeff to Mound Oftener Than Any Other Member of Giants.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—John McGraw had called on Jeff Tesreau oftener to start battles this year than any other member of the Giants' pitching staff. Up to August 12 the "Little Napoleon" had given the pitching assignment to the big spitballer 28 times. Jeff only went the route on ten occasions, but on many of the times he was dericked he was lifted to allow a pinch hitter to be inserted into the proceedings, and not because he was not performing to the satisfaction of his commander.

* * *

WERE Hugh Chalmers, of Detroit, to offer a car to the National League pitcher who twirled the greatest number of complete games instead to the player who is most valuable to his team, Christy Mathewson undoubtedly would be riding around in a new auto next fall. "Big Six" has opened on the firing line in 22 skirmishes for the Giants this year and has lasted through 17 engagements, which gives him a finishing average of .773. Matty quit twice because he had to, twice because his team had an enormous lead and once because McGraw wished to shove Harry McCormick in as a pinch hitter.

* * *

THE club that has compelled Mathewson to retire under fire is St. Louis, the team that handed him his first beating twelve years ago, when he first became famous. The Cardinals ought to be proud of themselves for their showing against "Big Six" this year. They have received five of the thirteen passes Matty has issued this season, Ed Konetchy and Miller Huggins each obtaining two and Steve Evans one. The eight other National Leaguers who have been honored with complimentaries by Mathewson this season are Vlox and Mensor, of Pittsburg; Bates and Groh, of Cincinnati; Zimmerman, of Chicago, and Titus, Rariden and Maranville, of Boston.

MANY CATCHERS GET INJURED BY MIXED SIGNALS

Chief Meyers Nearly Lost a Finger When Christy Mathewson Double-Crossed Him.

By Otto C. Floto.

DENVER, Aug. 16.—Nothing breaks up a battery so fast as double-crossing the catcher. Mind, we do not mean to say this is intentionally done—but through carelessness or through not getting the signal correct, it happens in some of the most important games. And when it does—well, the opposition has the "shade" from that time forth. In Chicago recently, during a conversation between John McGraw and the writer, the Grand Mandarin of the Giants told us of an incident when even the great Mathewson was at fault in this sort of play.

"Meyers is naturally dark," said McGraw. "When he becomes tanned in the summer time he is darker than ever and quite naturally when he places his finger on the palm of the soiled glove it takes quite an eye to distinguish whether he has one or two fingers pointed to the ground. Oftentimes one finger means a straight fast ball and then again it means a curve, and vice versa. Mathewson, in one of the games against St. Louis, got his signals mixed and pitched a curve when Meyers was looking for a straight fast one. The result was that the ball not only got away from the Indian, but came near tearing his finger off. Of course, I immediately took him out of the game, because I knew he would be rattled from that time forth. The next day he was steadied again and the incident forgotten.

* * *

ANOTHER time while with Baltimore, Joe Corbett double-crossed Robinson and lost a game for us. Of course, the double-crossing is unintentional on the part of the pitcher, and it occurs only when the catcher and the pitcher get mixed in the signals and don't ask each other for a repetition of the same. If they did this no error would be made. In the big leagues when this tangle occurs the players think nothing of it. But I have seen in the smaller leagues, when the battery gets mixed the catcher, generally a youngster trying to make his reputation, seems to labor under the impression that the pitcher is 'trying to show him up,' and it often creates hard feelings on a team."

* * *

REFERRING again to the honesty of the game, we need nothing better to point to than the leaders of the National and American Leagues. Both the Giants and the Athletics have spoiled the race. They are so far ahead of all the other clubs that even at this early day of August 4 interest is eliminated. It means several hundred thousand dollars to the club owners to have a condition of this sort exist. Yet they would rather have it this way and lose thousands of dollars than "frame" and kill the sport.

What if Boston and the Athletics in the American League were neck-and-neck and battling for every game—well, the grounds in either city would not be large enough to hold the crowds. In the National League, what if New York and Chicago were abreast—it would simply mean all records for attendance would be shattered.

So you see the playing is absolutely on its merits and when a team wins or loses everything connected with it is on the level. That's why baseball will ever remain the most popular of outdoor sports. The finger of suspicion is never pointed at any act on the ball field.

Meddling Has Ruined Red Sox Stallings Is Popular in Boston

By W. J. McBeth.

THERE is little comfort in a reputation to the fellow who has lost his punch. This ring chatter applies directly to baseball. A pugilist may get away by sidestepping action, but organized baseball requires 154 tilts every year.

The Boston Red Sox furnishes a very fine object lesson for the point in question. One year ago the staid old "Hub" was wild with enthusiasm over its pets of a generation. To dispute that the "Speed Boys" boasted the classiest aggregation in modern times was the shortest route to suicide. To-day, though a world's championship has been added to the achievements of the Back Bay athletes, the pennant winners are the scorn of the City of Culture.

The answer lies for the most part in four agate lines—which represent the difference between first and fifth places in the American League standings. Boston's National League team which saw many lean and hungry years, while its rival lived upon the fat of the land, has usurped the popularity of its fading contemporary. The Red Sox in their company have shown the better percentage of victories. But still their work has slopped off so badly from what was expected of the holders of baseball's highest honors that in comparison to the improvement made by the Braves the Red Sox appear in the light of the veriest "bush" class.

Boston, like every other town, has little use for a team that has hit the chutes, while always ready to extend a hand of encouragement to a club that stems on the upward trend.

* * *

IN gaining a few rounds on the ladder from the cellar George Stallings' Braves have accomplished a task that well might be considered more wonderful than cinching a second American League pennant with the champions. Baseball fandom is clever enough to appreciate the point and pay tribute where tribute is due. But the Boston situation of the American League furnishes a moral which many of our meddling promoters might well take to heart. One thing is to leave good enough alone; another that it is far easier to destroy a finely attuned mechanism than to overhaul and rebuilt it.

* * *

EVERYBODY said a year ago that the Boston Red Sox were the luckiest world's champions known to history. Perhaps they were, but they certainly had some class to get in the finals. Moreover, they went through a long campaign without dropping more than two games in a row till the pennant was clinched. The club looked anything but impressive in the world's series. But was it altogether the fault of the club?

I honestly believe, in the light of later developments, that if the real inside truth were known President James McAleer had a lot to do both with the poor showing of that team against the Giants and in the 1913 race so far this season. Jake Stahl, deposed from the management in mid-season, may have been left unhampered this season as McAleer insinuated, but he certainly did not have a free hand against the Giants last fall. He was girt about by a so-called bond of strategy. These many cooks came very near to scorching the broth.

While the Red Sox were setting themselves, Jake Stahl and, incidentally, McAleer on the high pedestal where the bump incident to this year's fall should be all the more pronounced, somebody put a stick of dynamite under the foundation. In the height of battle a serious row cropped out among certain players. As is usually the case, factions resulted. The unity of the team was undermined. The big explosion followed the poor start of 1913 consequent to wholesome injuries and sickness.

McAleer may not have directly interfered with Stahl. Yet the inference is there pretty strong. Jimmy looked like an ideal president when everything was of rosy hue. But once a manager always a manager. We see that in the attitudes of some of our renowned scouts. The cunning hand of McAleer might be traced in the present dilemma of his noble country.

AT least McAleer, or his associates in the business administration of the club, deserve little sympathy for the cold desertion of Hub fandom. They brought it upon themselves by a cold throw down of their most loyal supporters. The band of "Royal Rooters" which had accompanied the team to and fro between New York and Boston were not provided with seats for the seventh game. The business management was unable to explain satisfactorily this shameful oversight; naturally the rooters took it as an insult, believing they had been "given the works" simply through avarice of the management.

"It is the last game and they think standing room good enough for us" was the universal sentiment. The rooters put a boycott on the eighth and deciding game. Also they gathered round the offices at the close of the contest when they were slighted to put the curse on Fenway Park, Red Sox and all connected with them. By the looks of things it was some curse.

Tire Prices Down

How We Did It Without Skimping On the Costliest Tire That's Built

Here are a few amazing facts which every tire user should know.

Goodyear No-Rim-Cut tires used to cost one-fifth more than other standard tires. And yet they gained the topmost place in Tiredom.

Three things caused this extra price.

In the base of each tire we vulcanize six flat bands of 126 braided wires. It is thus that we make a hookless tire—a tire that can't be rim-cut.

Then every No-Rim-Cut gets the "On-Air Cure." It is final-vulcanized on air bags. This is done to save blow-outs. It adds to our tire cost $1,500 per day.

Then we use in each tread base a patent "rivet" fabric. We paid $50,000 for this feature to prevent tread separation.

Not one of these costly features are used in any other make of tire.

We have clung to small capitalization. On this account we can and do keep our profits under 8½ per cent.

All these savings, as fast as we made them, went to users of our tires.

Note What Our Price Includes

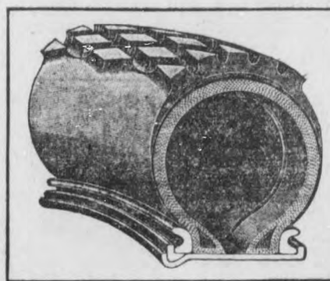
Rival makers must in some way meet the Goodyear price. But please consider what our price includes.

A tire that never rim-cuts.

A tire built to save blow-outs, in a way so costly that no one else employs it.

A tire built in our patent way to prevent tread separation. And built in every other way for longest mileage, regardless of the cost.

Now No Extra Price



Now these same tires, with all of these features, cost you no extra price. Not a standard tire of any type costs you any less.

And these are the reasons:

Our overhead cost, in days of small output, ran as high as thirty per cent.

It is now less than six per cent. Our multiplied output, in this one way, has cut our tire cost twenty-four per cent.

We have built new factories with modern equipment, with every new invention in labor-saving machinery.

GOODYEAR AKRON, OHIO
No-Rim-Cut Tires
With or Without Non-Skid Treads

That's Why They Outsell

Hundreds of thousands now use these tires. They far outsell any other. Yet the demand from users is now growing faster than ever before in our history.

That's for the reasons told you.

Rim-Cutting alone, with old-type tires, ruins 31.8 per cent—almost one tire in three. Blow-outs and loose treads, which our methods combat, are immensely costly items.

You should get these savings—get them all—when you pay the Goodyear price.

Our dealers are everywhere.

SULLIVAN TELLS WHY A.A.U. PUTS BAN ON WOMEN

Athletic Body Objects to Mixed Competitions in Order to Preserve Dignity of Women.

By James E. Sullivan.
Secretary-Treasurer of the A. A. U. and "Father of Amateur Athletics."

(Mr. Sullivan submitted the following interesting article to The American just before he sailed for Germany last Tuesday. Mr. Sullivan will attend the first convention of the International Athletic Federation at Berlin on August 20-21 as the representative of the United States.)

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Should women be allowed by the Amateur Athletic Union in open competition against men? is a question attracting a lot of attention in the world of sport at present. From the woman's side of the question the opinion is voiced that to be in keeping with the great strides of women's emancipation the women should be allowed to compete on the same footing as men, especially in aquatic sports and other competitions.

Unfortunately, perhaps, for the feelings of the gay and thoughtless, the A. A. U. looks at the matter from an entirely different angle, and it is as well that the public should know right now that the A. A. U. national body will never permit mixed competitions between men and women in any of the sports it happens to govern.

I may say that this is no mere personal statement. It is the unanimous policy of the national body. I have frequently been criticised on account of my alleged opposition to mixed competition in swimming races, and am sorry to have aroused the ire of the progressive element among the women and the suffragists.

I happen to be secretary-treasurer of the A. A. U., and would remind my critics that the man in such an office is always intrusted with the job of making public the feelings of the governing body; and its domain extends from the Atlantic Ocean to the Pacific and from Florida to the North Pole.

Against Mixed Competition.

More than once the question of allowing women to register has been discussed, and to the present it has been turned down every time without a dissenting voice. So far as I can see now nothing short of a miracle will ever change the views of the A. A. U. men on the subject of mixed competition.

Of course, a great many will want to know the reason for this stand of the A. A. U. in keeping out the women. There are two reasons. One is to try and preserve the dignity of the American girl and the woman, and the other is to keep amateur sport clear of the demimonde. If we are in the business of developing champion athletes to uphold the American flag in international competiton we surely ought to be pardoned for being conservative about our women.

While those old-fashioned men of the A. A. U. like to see the American woman healthy, and in the full enjoyment of sports and pastimes suitable to her sex, they do not want to see a feminine race of Amazons devoid of home ties, and the qualities that create the respect and admiration of men.

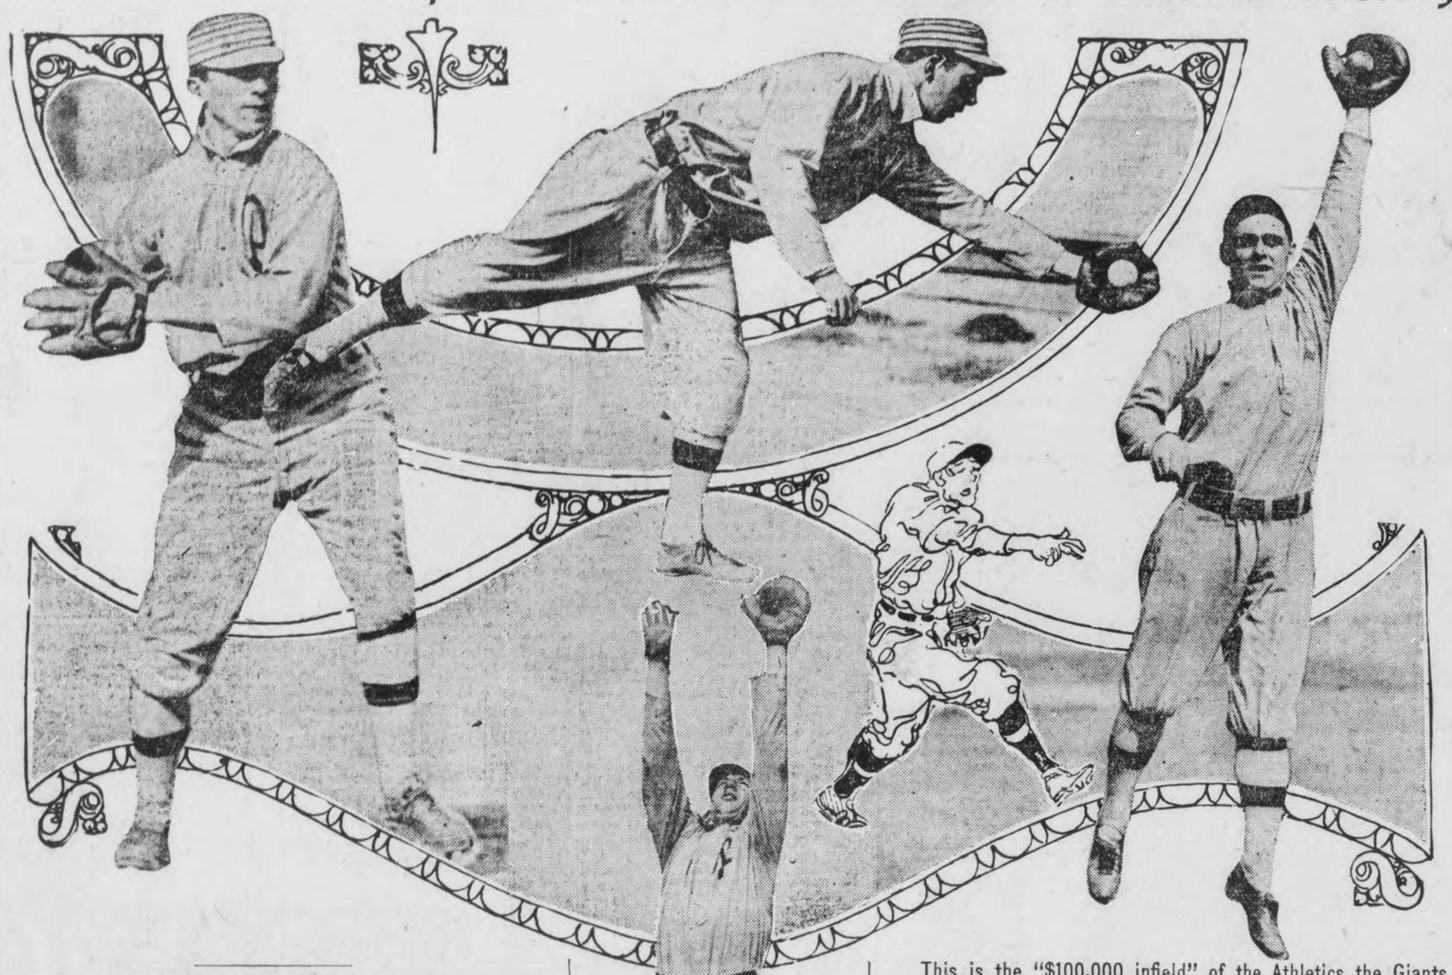
The A. A. U. is guided by experiences of the past. Years ago when the long distance walking craze struck New York a great number of women were seized with the fad, especially as it was found to be good for their health and complexions. Numbers of women's walking clubs sprung up, and it was a great thing to see bunches of women hiking along the highways at a brisk clip and at all hours.

Bicycle Craze Expires.

The bicycle craze of a few years ago furnished another illustration of the unsavory element in sport, and they spoiled one of the finest recreations of modern times. At first myriads of decent women enjoyed it until the questionable element swarmed over the roads and drives devoted to cycling. Again the decent women were forced to quit, and with them went their companions—husbands, fathers and brothers.

Now suppose that to-morrow the A. A. U. was to throw down the bars and allow women to register, and that they would have liberty to compete in the track and field games, the swimming, the gymnastics and the tumbling. What would be the consequence? For a while there might be nothing but decent girls among the boys in the swimming tanks and the pools, but after a spell the other element would appear.

What a nice position the decent young girls would find themselves in then, and what a tirade of criticism the A. A. U. would bring forth from the clergy, and from the men and women of the uplift! I wonder if those who are so willing to comment unfavorably on the A. A. U.'s rejection of mixed competition ever looked at the probable situation in this light.



Although the A. A. U. does not countenance mixed competition, its governing members are willing to advocate that women and girls engage in swimming races among themselves. If those among the women who are so anxious for speed conditions can form themselves into an association, then the sport can be made even more popular than if the women were allowed into the A. A. U.

GOOD STILL A MEMBER OF CUBS, SAYS JOHNNY EVERS

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—Wilbur Good, the Cub outfielder, is still a member of the West Side club. At least, Manager Evers said so just before the Cubs started for the East. John was greatly surprised when he saw in local papers that Good had been released to Indianapolis. Evers says that there is no chance of Good leaving the Cubs, as he figures that the pinch hitter is fast developing into one of the best outfielders in the business. The Cub manager further stated that if waivers had been asked on Good it was done without his knowledge. Good accompanied the team to Boston.

Giants Again Must Oppose "$100,000 Infield" in World's Series

Athletics' Inner Defense Hailed as Greatest in Baseball History

This is the "$100,000 infield" of the Athletics the Giants must again face in the coming world's series—if the local champions repeat their pennant triumph in the National League and the Athletics recapture the American League flag, which is almost a certainty now. From left to right: Baker, third base; Barry, shortstop; McInnis, first base. Below, Eddie Collins, second base.

Fans Await World-Series Clash

Former Rivals May Meet Again

By Monty.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—In view of the fact that the Giants and Athletics are conceded almost universally now as certain to meet in the next world's series, fans are beginning to turn their attention to the question of how the two teams compare with each other. Though nearly two months remain before the clash for the world's championship gets under way, it is the main subject in the minds of the real followers of the game, now that the pennant races have ceased to absorb more than a superficial amount of interest.

The series this year has an extra element of attraction in that old rivals are meeting again, aggregations that met only two years ago. Enough of the 1911 players still remain to make the tilt practically a renewal of the same duel.

* * *

THE majority of baseball men in the country seem to think that the Athletics are the strongest team in the game. There is one sound way of reasoning this out. At the end of last season the Quakers were playing a much better grade of ball than the Red Sox, who won the pennant and whose performance was good enough to beat the Giants. This would prove almost a final argument if the present Giants and present Athletics were identical with the Giants and Athletics of last fall, but they, of course, are not.

The main basis for the superior appraisal of the Philadelphians by the fans, however, is simply that they seem a stronger team, one with greater ability, without bothering to delve into the dope for any more specific reasons. This system, though, is like betting on a race horse because of a "hunch." It is going in blindly. Baseball is a game of such distinct departments of play that they all must be considered separately with one phase of this team compared to the opposite department of the other. For instance, the estimate of the Athletics' batting in the series must be formed at the same time that the Glans' pitching is considered, and vice versa.

* * *

IF such things as base running and fielding were eliminated, the problem would be, "Will the Giants hit the Athletic pitchers harder and more timely than the Athletics hit the Giant pitchers?" Many seem to believe they will not, but this remains to be seen. Both aggregations possess tremendous batting power, with all hands in shape, and both have pitching staffs that can not be called other than great.

In the matter of one team's batting opposed to the other's pitching, a reminiscent light is thrown toward that old foolish puzzle of an irresistible body meeting an immovable one. Nobody can predict with any degree of confidence whether these games will produce the highest scoring on record for a world's series or the lowest. A complete triumph for batting would result in the former and the same for pitching would bring the latter. Or—which is more likely—it may produce about an even break with scores of average size.

* * *

JUST now an attempt might be made to decide the way this unique combat of departments will turn out, but it would be the old blind guess again to a large extent, for many changes may occur in the outlook between now and October. For instance, Jack Coombs may show himself to be back in form and the same old Quaker artist of the mound, or it may turn out that his sickness and consequent long lay-off have impaired his efficiency badly. Mathewson may be lost to the Giants through injury. Home Run Frank Baker may sprain his ankle and Larry Doyle may or may not recover his batting eye. Any one of these things could have a telling effect. Therefore, it is wise to lay low and wait until October before making any bold predictions.

Tommy Leach in Same Class as Wagner, Lajoie and Mathewson

A good bit has been spoken and written about the wonderful way Wagner, Lajoie and others are hanging on, despite their duration of service. But in this respect we know of no one who can push through and edge by Tommy Leach. Tommy has been reported all in for several seasons, and yet to-day he is still playing fine ball in every department with his old speed intact. They crowded him away from third, where he ruled for over twelve years, and now he is starring at another job on a par with almost any in the game. In the salvos of applause that are scattered about, Leach deserves enough to rock the stands.

Red Sox May Send Yerkes to Athletics

BOSTON, Aug. 16.—Steve Yerkes, who for the last few years has been the star second baseman of the world's champion Boston Red Sox, will probably wear an Athletic uniform in the near future, as waivers have been asked on him.

Connie Mack refused to waive claim on the former brilliant second baseman and the chances are that he will be sent to Philadelphia in the near future.

Yerkes first learned to play baseball on the lots at Millville, N. J., and reached the height of his baseball career in the world's series with the New York Giants when he played an important part in the notable victories of the Boston Red Sox.

He proved far superior to Doyle, the Giants' second baseman, in that series, hitting the ball hard and timely and fielding in sensational style.

WOLVERINES PICK LUNDGREN.

ANN ARBOR, MICH., Aug. 16.—Carl L. Lundgren, former twirler on the Chicago team and once a University of Illinois star, has been chosen as coach of the Michigan baseball team to succeed Branch Rickey, who recently resigned. Lundgren pitched four years at Illinois and then joined the Chicago club in 1902, where he remained seven years, being a member of two world's championship nines.

20,000 Boy Athletes In Playground Meet

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—The most elaborate playground field day ever held in New York city will take place at Empire City Park, Yonkers, N. Y., on August 20. The meet is made possible by the courtesy of the officials of the Greater New York Fair and Exposition and the sanction of the A. A. U., and will be under the direction of the Bureau of Recreation, Department of Parks.

Twenty thousand boys are now in training for the fifteen events to be contested at their first interpark-playground athletic championship of Greater New York.

This invitation meet is the greatest incentive offered the boys to join the athletic clubs at the park playgrounds. No expense of any kind will be incurred; even transportation will be afforded the boys.

SOUTHERN BOY IS AFTER MATCH WITH KILBANE

CLEVELAND, Aug. 16.—George Chaney, featherweight champion of the South, may yet have a fling at Johnny Kilbane. Chaney claims 100 victories. He has beaten Al Delmont, George Kirkwood and Ty Cobb and has stopped Phil McGovern.

When one stops to consider, there is hardly a featherweight in the game who could give Kilbane a battle, unless it be Kid Julian. But there are a few comers, among them Matty McCue, of Racine, whose loss to Patsy Branningan will not put him out of his stride.

MORAN GETS BOUT WITH PALZER IN NEW YORK RING

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—That Jimmy Johnston, the new manager of the St. Nicholas A. C., only intends to provide top notch cards for his patrons is inferred by the matches he has already arranged. Johnston realizes that it is only from the high class bouts he can hope to make any money, and he only intends to run shows when he has such to offer.

The bouts already arranged by Johnston for the near future look to be about the best obtainable. On September 10 Jack Britton, the unusually clever Chicagoan, will hook up with Young Shugrue, the aggressive boy from Jersey City. They'll clash at 133 pounds, weigh in at 10 o'clock on the night of the bout.

Another card clinched will bring together Al Palzer, the tenacious Iowan, and Frank Moran, the Pittsburger, who made such a great battle against long odds when he met the late Luther McCarty in this city. Moran and Palzer will clash either on August 20 or 27, the date to be selected later by Dan McKetrick and Tom O'Rourke, the respective managers of the two heavyweights.

Ritchie Open to Harsh Criticism

Willie Ignores Murphy and Ad

By W. W. Naughton.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 16.—Every once in a while the thoughtful critic informs us that boxing is in a chaotic condition.

It occurs to the writer that remarks of that character would be particularly apropos just now. As I understand it, chaos reigns when you can not figure out just what is going to happen, and it seems to me that to attempt to peer into the pugilistic future at this juncture would be to invite vertigo, or at any rate headache.

In some of the weight classes there is actual stagnation, while in others confusion reigns. True, Willie Ritchie, who won the lightweight title through a foul, and Arthur Pelky, who became white heavyweight champion through a fatality, are going to risk their laurels in September, but it is doubtful if either of the events referred to rises to the dignity of a championship battle in the eyes of the American sporting public.

Of course, if one argues by the book—and in cases of this kind the record book should be the basis of all discussion—Freddie Welsh has every right to aspire to a crack at the championship. He is England's premier lightweight and he won from Ritchie once before.

Murphy Entitled to Chance.

But Freddie has been a long time in the lists and in this country there are other lads who are thought to have a better claim to the consideration. Tommy Murphy, the Harlem spitfire, for instance, is looked upon as Ritchie's logical opponent, and the coast sports fondly hoped to see Ritchie and Murphy signed for a clash on Labor Day.

On the plea that better inducements were forthcoming, Ritchie has decided to take his dolls to Vancouver, B. C., on September 1 and tackle Welsh in a 20-round contest.

In the consciousness that he is doing exactly what is sportsmanlike and fair, Ritchie seems to defy criticism. But, like all champions before him, he has enemies and detractors. He is sure to be dealt harshly with by these, and unless I miss my guess his motives also will be questioned by numbers of fight fans who view these matters dispassionately.

Willie Also Ignores Ad.

Coming right at this time, some of these things told by Billy Nolan after he ceased to manage Ritchie will carry weight. Nolan said that before Ritchie returned to the ring he planned to meet just three men, to-wit: Rivers, Freddie Welsh and Leach Cross. Ritchie by his actions is bearing out Nolan's words, but public opinion can whip any champion into line, and Ritchie will have a hard time trying to withstand the lances of criticism that will be leveled at him if he refuses to recognize the claims of Tommy Murphy and Ad Wolgast later along.

Of course, if Ritchie is defeated by Freddie Welsh, he would be allowed to go on his way in peace, but somehow the far Western sports appear to think that a contingency of that kind is not on the cards.

Pelky vs. Miller.

Late in September Arthur Pelky and Big Charlie Miller are to box in Los Angeles. As Pelky under existing heavyweight conditions has the best right to call himself white heavyweight champion, the match will of necessity be for the championship. But why could not Pelky be signed with some hope who is better known to fame.

If there is such a thing as pugilistic code, Miller is the last man in the world who should have been selected as a champion candidate. At the same time, if Arthur has picked Miller in the belief that a man with such a meager record must necessarily be easy, he will find himself mistaken. Miller is a man of much displacement and he is as strong as an elephant and can sop up punishment as a sponge absorbs water.

And if Miller should win—well, chaos would not begin to describe the situation.

In the smaller classes of pugilism there is a marked degree of inaction.

Whenever any violent action talk is indulged in in Bantam Champion Johny Coulon's presence, the news goes out that Johny is the next thing to a confirmed invalid and that his doctor has warned him to avoid anything calculated to excite him.

It would seem that the only way to keep Johny Coulon in good humor would be to crown him perpetual king of the knights and make it a felony to challenge him. It may be that this is of course sarcasm, but in view of the many times Johnny's small ailments have prevented him defending his title, I think it warranted.

No Welters in Sight.

Welterweights there appear to be none. Mike Gibbons and Jimmy Clabby, who could fill welter requirements, are eager to be known as middleweights.

For some time the middleweight division has been all head and points, but now that there has been an infusion of new blood, the spirit of rivalry and competition may be revived.

Maybe Frank Klaus will stay away from Paris long enough to take a hand in clearing up the championship question, provided he can make the weight.

Let us hope that in some of the classes events will so shape themselves that here will soon be a deciding match in prospect—one that will have the earmarks of a genuine world's championship and appeal to the sports generally as such.

NEW WHITE HOPE SOUGHT AMONG BRITISH HEAVIES

Failure of Wells Has Brought About a Change, and Dick Smith Is New Entrant.

By T. S. Andrews.

MILWAUKEE, Aug. 16.—Since the defeat of Bombardier Wells, the heavyweight champion of Great Britain, by Gunboat Smith in New York, the Britishers have been casting about for another "white hope," one who will be able to "stand the gaff" and weather the storm when it comes to body punishment; and from information at hand they have unearthed another "hope" in the person of Dick Smith, the amateur champion of England.

Dick has decided to throw in his lot with the professionals. Born 27 years ago, Smith possesses all the necessary qualifications for a "white hope," and may go further than some of the blasted hopes. He stands 6 feet 1 1-2 inches, weighs about 190 pounds, and has a very satisfactory record. Of his 49 contests he has won 45, lost 3 and drawn 1.

Formerly a soldier, he followed Bombardier Wells as champion of India. As an amateur boxer he has done remarkably well, having won the championship of Great Britain in 1911-12-13, while a member of the London police force.

Will Not Tackle Wells First.

He probably will not take on Bombardier Wells and Georges Carpentier for his intial efforts as a professional, but one of the lesser lights. Professional and amateur boxing are vastly different things on the other side of the Atlantic, as many amateurs have found on taking the plunge into the professional waters.

The referees view things from an entirely different standpoint, and a 20-round contest with three-minute rounds under professional rules takes a bit of negotiating. Under amateur laws boxing contests are not allowed of longer duration than six rounds of two minutes each, but for the championships and most interclub competitions, the bouts are limited to three rounds.

Amateur Referees Strict.

Amateur referees are very strict in upholding the rules of the game, and some of their antics would not be tolerated by professionals for one minute. Clinching is barred and a boxer is liable to be disqualified for a second offense after having been once cautioned. Then, again, amateurs are forbidden to receive any advice during the progress of a bout, and any instructions that the second may have for his boy has to wait until the round ends. Under amateur rules boxing is kept very clean, which is more than can be said for professions.

Therefore the entry of Dick Smith (namesake of Gunboat) will be watched with interest, even by followers on this side of the big pond.

JOHNSON HELPS SICK YOUTH.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 16.—A baseball and an autograph letter from Walter Johnson, Washington's premier pitcher, did more than medicine could do to bring about the rapid convalescence of Warren A. Slee, a youthful admirer of the big ball tosser. Johnson, whose numerous admirers include scores of youthful fars who idolize the pitcher, heard of the serious illness of the boy and wrote to him, sending a baseball he had used in pitching the Washington team to victory. The boy's recovery since receiving the letter has progressed rapidly.

WAR DECLARED BY P. A. A. OVER 1915 FAIR PLUM

James E. Sullivan's Reported Action in Naming T. S. Mulvey as Aide Causes Strife.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., Aug. 11. There is a flurry among the officials of the Pacific Athletic Association and in amateur athletic circles generally over the allegation that James E. Sullivan, director general of the amateur games to be held here during the Panama-Pacific Exposition, has appointed Thomas S. Mulvey, the well-known San Francisco clubman, his principal aide in connection with the handling of the exposition sports.

A few days ago Mulvey received a telegram from Sullivan, who was then on the point of departure to Berlin to attend a conference of the Olympiad committee.

In his telegram Sullivan said he would be back in New York early in September, and that it would be necessary for Mulvey to come to New York at that time to aid in interesting the athletic fraternities there in the games to be held in this city in 1915.

Elliott Issues Statement.

While the telegram intimated that Mulvey was appointed the head of the San Francisco committee on games, no reference was made to any other appointments of local men in the same connection.

The Pacific Association of the Amateur Athletic Association took umbrage at this indication of Mulvey's appointment, and John Elliott, president of the association, issued a statement yesterday in which he said that the selection of Mulvey to the post did not meet with the sanction of the association.

Elliott pointed out that the Pacific Association had given valuable assistance to the exposition officials in securing sanctions for American championships to be held here in 1915. He declared that Mulvey had no knowledge of or affiliation with amateur sports, and intimated that Mulvey's appointment would cause the association to refrain from using its endeavors toward making the 1915 games the success they should be.

Mulvey Has No News.

While Elliott did not say so, it is evident that he and his associates expected Sullivan to depend upon the local athletic body for whatever assistance he required.

The Panama Exposition officials stated emphatically that no appointment such as the Pacific Association complained of had been made, nor had any such appointment been authorized by the exposition directorate, which, of course, is the last word in all matters of this kind.

Under these circumstances it is believed that the Pacific Association will take no precipitate action until a clearer understanding is had as to just what honor Sullivan intended to confer upon Mulvey. As Sullivan is on the high seas, it would be some little time before he could be heard from.

Mulvey said yesterday that he had no news regarding his appointment other than was conveyed in the Sullivan telegram. He said he intended going East, but will wait to hear further before making the trip.

M'FARLAND IS GETTING READY FOR BUSY CAMPAIGN

CHICAGO, ILL., Aug. 16.—Packey McFarland is getting himself ready for the ring again. While no matches have been closed as yet by Manager Thiry, the latter is negotiating with Milwaukee, Kenosha and several Eastern clubs. Once Packey is back in action his matches will come fast, his style and rep being favored all over. Jimmy Coffroth would like McFarland out West with Tommy Murphy.

HOME RUN GAVE H. WAGNER REAL START IN GAME

Big Dutchman Has the Most Interesting Career of All the Baseball Stars.

HANS WAGNER, the hero of all baseball heroes, has had an interesting career. Wagner, the big German, was born in what is now Carnegie, Pa., on February 27, 1874. His father, who is still living, was a coal miner in those days, and he decided that John P. should help him in his work. So Honus was packed off to the mines to help dad every day. Hans was not lazy, but he didn't like the black darkness of the earth's interior, and many a warning he received for playing hookey from the bituminous section and scampering off for a game of baseball with other kids of the neighborhood.

A correspondent recently approached the big fellow and asked him to tell how he came to break into baseball. Honus pondered a moment, and then spun the following yarn about his early experience:

* * *

"I BROKE into baseball by posing as my brother Al. We were playing ball around home. Al received an offer from Canton, Ohio, before he was offered a place with the Mansfield, Ohio, club, in the same league. The day he got the second offer he turned to me and told me to go to Mansfield. I got there early in the afternoon, and a man named Taylor recognized me. He had seen me play. The club was hard put for a third baseman, however, and Taylor decided to take a chance with me.

"It so happened that Mansfield played Canton that day. My brother was in the line-up of the Canton team, and the pitcher, 'Toots' Barret, was also from Carnegie, or Mansfield, as it was called in those days. They regarded me as pretty much of a kid, and when Canton got away to a good lead early in the game Barret let up in his pitching when I went to bat. He want to see me make good and figured that a couple of hits more or less would not affect his rating any. I made a couple of hits in this way, and then came the ninth inning. Never will I forget it. Mansfield was three runs to the bad when we went to bat. They needed four to win. We filled the bases and it was my turn to bat.

* * *

"TAYLOR was not wise to the fact that Barrett had been easing up when I had been at bat before and made a couple of hits, or he might have sent in a pinch hitter. He let me stick. With the bases full, Barrett meant to strike me out. It was too ticklish a time for monkey business. He shoved across a fast one and I knocked it over the fence for a home run and won the game. It was just a case of the luck of things. That's always the way. If the pitcher is lucky he gets you. If you're lucky you get him."

Wagner then explained that he went to Adrian, Mich., where the club was owned by a son of the Taylor who ran the Mansfield (Ohio) club. He went there as infielder and captain. Honus got homesick after a few months and quit the club, going to Warren in the Iron and Oil League. Toward the close of the season he joined the Steubenville club of the Interstate League. That was in 1895.

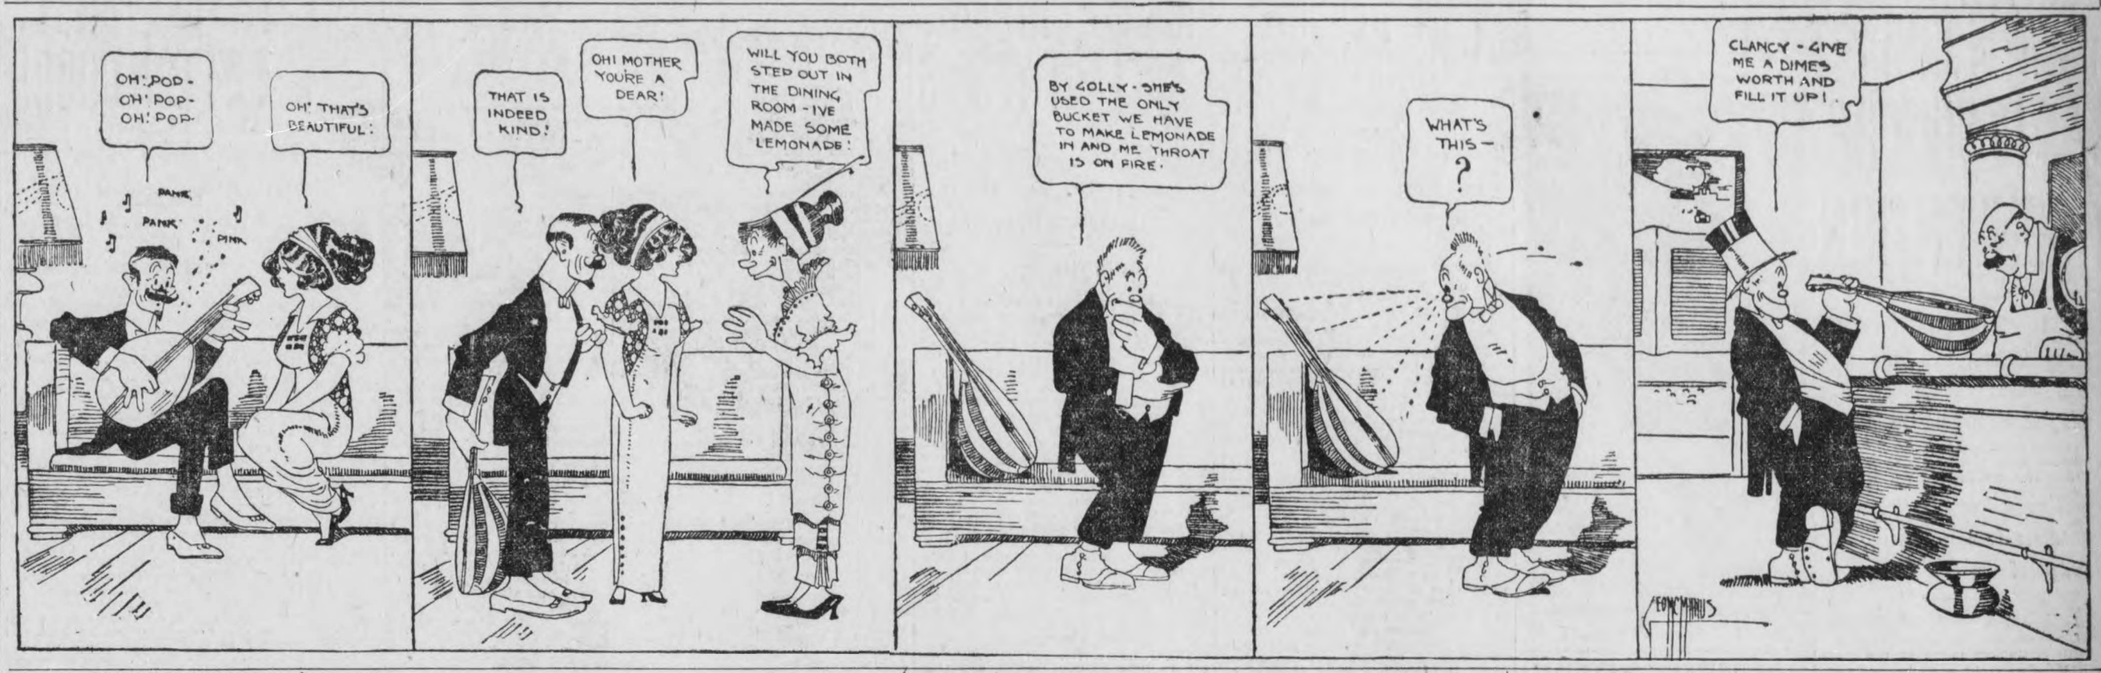
* * *

"I WENT there as a sort of all-around player," said Wagner. "I pitched for a while. I was so wild that I used to walk half the batters and strike out the other half. I had terrific speed and it was hard to get a catcher who could hold me. They borrowed Pete Lavelle from the Pittsburg Nationals to catch me in a couple of games, thinking it would steady me. As a pitcher I was a failure. However, while in the games as a twirler I banged a couple of hits over the fence and they made me an outfielder, putting me in the middle garden.

"The following spring the Pittsburg club signed me, and W. W. Kerr, who then owned the Pirates, wanted to farm me out to Kansas City, but I insisted that it was too far from home, so he sent me to Paterson, N. J., in the Atlantic League. I played with Paterson all of that year and until June 29, 1897, when the Louisville club, then owned by Barney Dreyfuss, my present employer, bought my release. The Colonels were managed by Fred Clarke, and the secretary of the club was the late Harry C. Pulliam, later secretary of the Pirates, and still later president of the National League. Harry was one of the best friends I ever had."

NAPS ARE AFTER THREE PLAYERS FROM MUD HENS

TOLEDO, OHIO, Aug. 16.—Vice President Barnard, of the Naps, came to Toledo yesterday to look over possible purchases for the Naps. It is thought that Pitcher Lefty James, Shortstop Brady and First Baseman Bluhm may be sold to the Cleveland club.



James may be the only player to report to the Naps before the A. A. season closes. In return for him the Hens expect a good southpaw from the Naps. Toledo will recall Pitchers Leak and Myers from Charleston, W. Va.; Pitcher Williams and Catcher Brady from Waterbury.

Nash, who has been playing a whirlwind game at short for the latter club, and is hitting at a .360 clip, and on whom Toledo has a string, will quit baseball at the close of the season to go into politics. He is now running for Assemblyman in his home town.

CUBS NOT AFTER DENVER MEN.

CHICAGO, ILL., Aug. 16.—Officials of the Chicago Nationals denied to-day that the visit of President McGill and Manager Hendricks, of the Denver Western League club, here was made in connection with a deal for players. The Denver men, according to President O'Neill, of the Western League, came to discuss general matters and the annual draft, which takes place this month.

PUNCH COUNTS IN THE VARIOUS LINES OF SPORT

McLoughlin Possesses Punch in Tennis; So Have American Poloists and Boxers.

By W. W. Naughton.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 16.—A magazine man of my acquaintance told me that one of his short stories was returned to him with the criticism that it lacked "the punch."

This goes to show that "the punch" counts in fiction as well as in real life.

An Englishman wrote to one of the London papers the other day, complaining that Maurice E. McLoughlin had introduced the punch into lawn tennis. The smashing service which McLoughlin has perfected was characterized as a trick, but a legitimate trick at that.

The Englishman referred to said that if methods like McLoughlin's are countenanced "lawn tennis is within measurable distance of death."

It was the plaint of a man who is used to old ideals. He has watched the rhythmic, lobbing game for years, and got it into his blood that that is the only way to play tennis.

But perhaps the outlook is not as gloomy as he pictures it. His countrymen may adopt McLoughlin's trick and try to improve on it.

Even lawn tennis must change in character when the punch comes along.

* * *

ANOTHER Englishman discusses a form of sport into which the punch enters with broader view. He wrote to The Times asking how it is that English boxers are more easily knocked out than American ringmen.

Then he attempts to furnish the explanation. Beginning with the question of physique, he satisfies himself that while Americans are slightly sturdier than latter-day Britons, the answer is not found in that. He believes that it all rests in what he considers a false conception of the manner in which pugilists should be schooled.

English lads, he says, are required to conform to old standards of boxing. It would be quite different, he thinks, if academic notions were sacrificed to personal initiative, for, while learning to spar on the "one, two, three" principle, a British student loses his punch and never recovers it.

* * *

In America, he says, it is different. It is by setting in his own particular fashion with various kinds of opponents, rather than by following the rules laid down in some pugilistic primer, that a young American develops an effective individual style; that with those who learn boxing naturally—that is from experience—the acquisition of the punch is not only the first consideration, but a matter that takes care of itself as the student's knowledge widens.

This Englishman, it is noticed, does not take the stand that because English pugilists are deficient in smiting force boxing "is within measurable distance of death."

He says frankly that English methods are wrong and intimates that there would be wisdom in taking a leaf out of America's book.

* * *

THE punch was in evidence again when the American polo players took the Britishers by storm at Meadowbrook recently. The judgment of the expert was that the visiting Britishers comprised the flower of the polo world. They brought their own ponies with them, and their seeming superiority influenced the betting market to the extent that they were made odds-on favorites.

From all accounts the Americans went at them like Japanese at a Russian fort. The visitors were just loaded to the Plimsoll mark with knowledge of "how to play polo," but the punch upset them. All the King's horses and all the King's men could not withstand the onslaught of the Americans and the cup remained on this side.

Maiden Turned in Great Card Didn't Make a Single "Five"

By Tich Tichenor.

WHEN H. H. Barker did a 69 over the course of the Atlanta Athletic Club in the open tournament held in December, 1910, it was the opinion of all of the professionals who were present that he had set a record which would stand for some years. In this opinion they have thus far been correct. Yet on two different occasions Stewart Maiden, the local professional, has had a chance to break it if he could have holed out in one put on the eighteenth green, while at another time he reached the last green on his sixty-sixth shot. He tried to hole the put for a 67 and ran past the hole and then missed a comparatively easy one for the record.

In one of his rounds which tied the record Maiden performed the feat which might be equaled but which can not be excelled when he went around without a five upon his card. If you are familiar with the East Lake course the more you think of this performance the more wonderful it becomes.

On the outward journey there are the second, the seventh and eighth holes, which are all par fives, while it is easy enough to take a five at either the fourth or ninth, both of which are bogey five. In coming home there are the twelfth, sixteenth and eighteenth, which are par fives, while the fifteenth and seventeenth are hard fours. Yet not a five did he have at any of these holes. At every hole he took a four except at the fifth, fourteenth and fifteenth where he secured threes. Just think of it, fifteen fours and three threes and neither of the threes gotten at the first or third holes, where he would be expected to get a three.

I don't know how this score will appeal to others, but the more I play around East Lake and labor to keep out the sixes and sevens, the more remarkable this score becomes. To be perfectly frank, I do not recall but one round I have ever played around this course in which my card did not register at least one six. George Adair has had the same experience, except he has two such rounds to his credit.

* * *

DURING the early part of June Maiden took a trip to his home in Scotland and while on this visit entered the British open championship. In this event there were 270 entries. These were divided into squads of 90 players each, who played a 36-hole medal play qualifying round, and the lowest twenty in each squad qualified for the championship, which was 72 holes of medal play.

Maiden landed on Tuesday and had only one day to learn the course and to become accustomed to the vast difference in the greens from those he has played upon since he has been in Atlanta, as he was drawn among the players who had to play on Thursday. In this qualifying round he failed to get in by two strokes which he says was due entirely to his putting, which was very bad.

* * *

IN writing of this tournament, the British correspondent of The American Golfer says: "For most of the day the weather was very bad, indeed. When play began at 9 o'clock, the wind was very strong and rain was pouring down, while late in the afternoon it was worse. In such circumstances the peculiar difficulties of Hoylake were well brought out, and the foreign visitors had an unenviable task before them. The first of the Americans to go out was Stewart Maiden, of Atlanta, who was partnered with J. Higgins, of Walsall, and this pair was second on the list, striking off at five minutes past 9. Maiden opened with a nice four at the dog-leg hole, with which the round begins, and after dropping a stroke at the second, went along steadily to the sixth, the famous Briars, and the hole which caused more disaster than any other on this course (it was once halved in nine in the final of the amateur championship), and here he took a six.

"However, at the difficult short hole that follows he got a splendid two, but another six was added at the eighth, and he turned in 40. He came home fairly well, but lost a stroke at the short blind Alps, being the eleventh, and two very valuable ones at the home hole, making his round in 82. In his second round in the afternoon he had a bad seven at the third hole, which is a long one and straight, but very narrow in the fairway, with ditches on either side, and another six was added at the Briars, so that by the time he got to the turn he had used up 43 strokes. He came home really fine in 36, almost the only blemish on his card being the five at the eighteenth, and that was very excusable."

His second round was 79.

* * *

HIS scores were as follows:

Out.	Dist.	1st.	2d.
Holes.
1	420	4	4
2	330	5	4
3	490	5	7
4	155	3	3

15	440	5	5
16	510	5	5
17	360	5	4
18	40	6	5
In	3270	42	36

Total for 36 holes, 161.

Maiden's 36 for the last nine made in his second round was the best done on this nine holes on the first day of the elimination rounds.

It was on this first day that George Duncan, who was the favorite to win the tournament, was unable to fight against the weather conditions and failed to qualify by four strokes. This was also the round which eliminated Alex Smith, Mike Brady and Alex Campbell, of the American team.

It was a strange coincidence that five of the six American entries should be drawn in the first squad of 90 to fight it out against each other as well as all of the others to get into the tournament.

JAKE STAHL DENIES HE IS TO SUCCEED CALLAHAN

GLOUCESTER, Aug. 16.—The rumor that Jake Stahl was to be given the position as manager of the Chicago White Sox and that Jimmy Callahan, the present head of the team, was to be deposed is entirely without foundation, according to Stahl, who was interviewed at Annisquam yesterday afternoon.

"No," said Stahl, "I have no knowledge of my being picked for the position of manager, and I had not even heard the rumor until you told me just now. Rumors put me out of a job. I guess that is all this talk is, rumor. Those things hurt the club considerably and it keeps the fellows guessing as to the exact truth of the matter. You can say for me that it is a rumor pure and simple and one without the least foundation."

When asked if he would accept the position if it were offered him, Stahl declined to answer.

GOV. TENER FINDS JOB FOR A BASEBALL MATE

HARRISBURG, PA., Aug. 16.—Governor John K. Tener has given a substantial reward to a comrade of his old baseball days, when he appointed George Wood, once a member of the Philadelphia National League team, and a mighty outfielder and hitter, to a good State position. Governor Tener and Wood have been friends ever since their ball-playing days.

About two years ago the Governor found Wood serving as a ticket taker at the American League park in Philadelphia and told him he would try and find him a better job.

Soon afterward Wood was made messenger in the office of the Secretary of the Commonwealth. Later he was promoted to a clerkship in the same office. Now he is marshal of the new Public Service Commission, with a salary of $2,000 a year.

GREEN BAY, WIS., Aug. 16.—President Weeks, of the Wisconsin-Illinois League, announced yesterday he had dropped Umpires Roth and McFarlane. George Hogreiver was given a regular place on the staff.

ATHLETES ARE IMPROVING IN BRITISH ISLES

European Track and Field Stars Gradually Approaching Americans; 17,000 Saw Games.

THE fact that the United States and English track and field championships were held upon the same day makes a comparison of the work of the native athletes and their visiting competitors of more than usual interest. England's A. A. A. games were held on the famous oval at Stamford Bridge, London, while the United States championships were being contested at Chicago.

Some 17,000 spectators watched the English and Swedish athletes battle for honors in a drizzle, while about half that number sweltered in a temperature close to 100, while American titles were won on a track and in a field which failed to elicit any praise from the competitors. Although conditions as reported from both athletic fields were against record-breaking performances, a remarkable improvement was shown in the general all-round work of the English and Swedish athletes, indicating that the lessons learned in the recent Olympic games have not been forgotten.

* * *

THE English program consisted of fourteen events, of which English athletes won nine and Sweden's representatives five. Four A. A. A. records were established, two by the Swedes and two by English contenders. The United States schedule contained eighteen contests, in which two new "games" records were made, one by an American-born and another by an Irish athlete.

A comparison of the programs of the two meets shows that eleven similar events appeared on both, and with these as a basis a comparing of records proves that times of distances were better at Stamford Bridge in six of the eleven competitions. To what extent local conditions affected these figures there is no way of knowing. The comparison is made simply to show that the oft-repeated statements that European athletics are gradually approaching American standards are not based on idle observation.

* * *

BEGINNING with the 100, 200 and 440-yard runs, England showed a winner in the first two events in the person of W. R. Applegarth, who won in 10 and 21 2-3 seconds, respectively, against Sprinter Drew's times of 10 2-5 and 22 4-5 seconds at Chicago. Haff, the Chicago A. A. and Michigan flyer, won the 440 yards in 51 1-5, while G. Nichol did 49 2-5 at London.

In both the mile and one-half mile runs the United States figures were better. Baker, the New York A. C. runner, captured the 880 in 2 minutes and 1-5 second. E. Wide, of Sweden, winner in England, was two-fifths of a second slower. Norman Tabor won the mile at Chicago in 4:20 2-5, while Zander, of the Swedish team, required 4:25 4-5 to take the English title. In the running broad jump Abrahams cleared 22 feet 6 inches at the A. A. A. games, while Stiles, the winner at Chicago, did 22 feet 3-4 inch.

* * *

THE running high jump showed that Richards, the Olympic champion, had but three-eighths of an inch advantage over Baker, England's champion, who jumped 6 feet 1 inch. Nilsson, the Swedish shotputter, pushed the weight out 47 feet 4 1-4 inches, against American Champion Whitney's 46 feet 2 5-6 inches. In the pole vault and hammer throw the American figures were far superior to those made at Stamford Bridge.

WHAT ATLANTA MANUFACTURERS AND JOBBERS ARE DOING

ATLANTA HAS NEW FRIENDS AS RESULT OF CONVENTION

Many Attracted to City Who Never Came Before, but Who Now Will Make Semi-Annual Trips and Become Regular Customers.

Attendance Surpasses All Expectations, as Does the Volume of Business Transacted as Direct Result of the Fine Gathering.

The Southern Merchants' Convention is over.

With a theater party at the Forsyth Monday night, a barbecue Wednesday, and the Atlanta-Chattanooga ball game Friday, the visiting delegates enjoyed the second week of their stay, and the Atlanta merchants who pushed the convention to success believe they have made enduring friends of their guests, friends who will come again in February and every half year after that.

The purpose of the convention was twofold. First, the retail dealers from all over the South were given an opportunity to meet and discuss the problems which confront them in the everyday conduct of their business. Second, every effort was made to emphasize Atlanta's advantages as a buying center for all the South.

Both Objects Achieved.

Both these objects were achieved. The speeches during the first week of the convention threw valuable help in the way of those who found perplexities in buying, selling, management of stores, credits, or any of the multitudinous things which go to make up a merchant's work.

It is a good thing that the proceedings are to be published. All of the speeches are well worthy of preservation for future reference. Some of the speakers gave plain talks, just the simple, practical expression of what they had learned through years of experience.

Others spoke with scholarly finish—their speeches really were erudite, of studied completeness and finish. Still others were inspirational—they pointed out the intellectual and spiritual significance of the merchant's work. They made him feel that his is a noble calling, that the great prizes of the world are for the business man.

New Friends Made.

From the other point of view, the results attained were no less notable. Hundreds of buyers came to Atlanta who never had been here before, and who would not have come this time had it not been for the convention.

To them the completeness, the cheapness, the quality and the diversity of things sold by Atlanta manufacturers and jobbers must have been a revelation—indeed, they so expressed themselves.

Some of them bought big bills. Every large jobbing house reports a splendid fall trade. The crop prospects are such as to make everyone optimistic. There will be a good demand for merchandise in the fall, and the buyers prepared to meet it.

There were others who did not buy so much. They are just as welcome, for the Atlantans feels that their goods, their prices and their service are right, and that every customer who buys here once will come again.

New Associations.

A noteworthy result of the meeting was the organization of a permanent body—the Southern States Merchants' Association, headed by J. W. Vaughn, of Cartersville, Ga.

This it is hoped, will bring very tangible benefits to the retailers of the South in general. It may prove to be the parent of scores of local organizations, which can do worlds of good in watching credits, preventing price-slashing and equalizing freight rates.

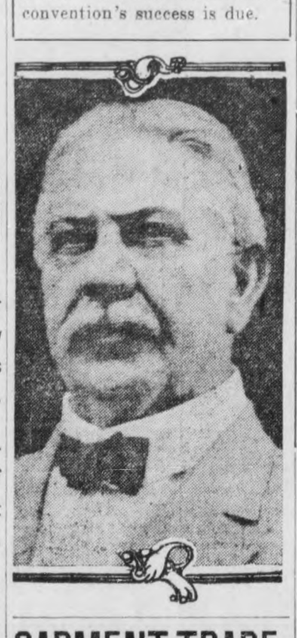
Notions Novelties in Demand From Buyers

Americans Tire Quickly of Any One Style, as Compared to Stability in Europe.

Buyers are very anxious for novelties this season, and it is constantly shown how quickly Americans tire of a given style. In England, France and Germany certain classes of merchandise move about the same year after year, but here we get new things continually. This has its advantages, however, because it stimulates business and there are new interests arising all the time.

Fall business in fancy goods and notions has opened well.

Styles this season are radically new, and leather hand bags with deep pockets and vanity accessories, as well as beaded varieties in high colors, are especially strong. Tasmania shell hair ornaments are a new item. These goods are the nearest approach to genuine tortoise shell ever produced, and the line comprises braid pins, barettes, and back combs.



Opera length bead necklaces in jet, pearl, amethyst, galalith, white amber and real and imitation pearl are excellent sellers among the newer jewelry features.

Cuff pins, bar pins and hat pins, set with diamond chips, also move readily. Beaded tunics, in the staple gold and silver and high colors, are also strong, and are atttractively priced.

Metal vanity cases are produced more reasonably this season, chased effects being shown in gold, oxidized silver or nickel, which are in exact imitation of the very expensive goods.

Parisian ivory goods have been enlarged and the line shown extends from the simple vanity case, retailing at 25 cents, to the more pretentious toilet set retailing at $25.

GARMENT TRADE AWAITS REPORT OF WAGE BOARD

Complicated Mathematics Necessary to Compute Proper Pay for Piece Workers.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—It is recognized generally in the dress and waist industry that one of the most important provisions of the protocol signed early this year by the manufacturers and their employees is that which brought the wage scale board into existence.

This board, as designated in the protocol, consists of eight members, four nominated by the manufacturers and four by the union. The duties of the board are to standardize work throughout the industry, and to preserve data and statistics, with a view to establishing a scientific basis for fixing these prices that will insure a minimum wage.

It has power to engage experts in price fixing, to settle all disputes over prices and to make special exemptions for week work where special exigencies arise or where special scales are required.

A kindred provision made necessary an immediate investigation of the rates paid in various parts of the industry, the earnings of the operatives and the classification of garments. This investigation is now being made under the direction of N. I. Stone, formerly chief statistician of the tariff board. Commenting recently on the scope of the work, Mr. Stone said:

36,000 Employed.

"There are now about 36,000 operatives in this industry. To date we have collected two sets of wage records, one for 1912 and one for this year, for 30,000 of them, and we are now tabulating the returns. Averages are useless in work of this kind. There are some workers earning as high as $40 a week, and there are some who make only $4. To say that the average wage in the industry is $22 because of these figures is ridiculous.

When our tabulations are completed, I expect to be able to show the percentage of operatives earning from $4 to $5 a weekly, $5 to $6, and so on. Then we will have a practical basis for working out a satisfactory minimum rate.

"Following the report on weekly wage, the board will begin its labors on piecework rates. This will be extremely difficult work, but by a system of minute dissection of garments that has been worked out, I believe that we eventually will be able to determine just what rate should be fixed for each operation. From that the rates justly due the various operatives can be provided on the cheaper lines, and from that the more complicated rates will be figured.

Test Used Now.

"At the present time piece rates are decided by the employers, and piece price committees selected by the workers in the various shops.

"In case of failure to agree on estimates, an experienced operative, a good worker, is selected to make the garment, and the rate is then fixed as provided by the protocol. For instance, if the operative took four hours to make the garment and the factory rate was 30 cents an hour, the manufacturer would then have to allow his employees $1.20 for making the garment.

"This test, however, is not always satisfactory. If the operative takes longer than the employer thinks should be required to make the garment in question, there is apt to be complaints of 'soldiering;' if the operative finishes more quickly than the workers had estimated, she is apt to be accused of siding with the employer. It is this discontent we are working to do away with."

SHINGLES FROM TIN CANS.

In Ottawa a machine has been perfected to make shingles out of discarded tin cans. After being rolled straight the can is put through a corrugating machine. Then it is put through a weatherproofing process, and then into a vat containing a substance like tar. The tin, while still wet, is dipped in asbestos, which readily adheres to the tar-like coating. Shingles so made are said to be more flexible and lighter than the wood or corrugated steel articles, and they are produced in various colors.

SHOE DEALERS HAVE REASONS FOR DECEPTION

Motives for Using Code in Marking Sizes on Footwear Is Humanitarian, They Say.

Fully 90 adults out of every 100, be they male or female, show a distinct unwillingness to buy shoes that are long enough and wide enough to fit their feet comfortably.

This statement is made on the authority of a retailer who has tried for more than twenty years to suit the buying public and who has succeeded only at the sacrifice of a considerable portion of his stock of truthfulness. This tendency to buy small shoes is characteristic of Americans, according to this merchant.

The position of the retail merchant and salesman is none too desirable as a result of this liking for small feet. Often the customer will want a size that the salesman can see at once will be too short or too narrow. Argument is dangerous, for the customers are frequently more willing to accept cramped toes than a criticism of their knowledge of their own necessities. Most often argumentative salesmanship results in lost sales.

Numerous Codes.

It is for this reason that plain marking of lengths and widths of shoes is more and more avoided by the retailers. Numerous codes have come into existence in the last few years that have completely put the average layman out of the running when it comes to telling the size of the shoes he is having fitted. Wholesalers make no attempt to deny that these codes are used purposely to keep the customer in the dark as to the real size of the shoe, but the retailers are less willing to acknowledge this point.

It can not be denied, however, that code markings save lost sales, time, and money. This is due largely to the fact that there is no general standard last, despite the efforts of several of the leading manufacturers to have one established. A 7C shoe made by one manufacturer often will differ in size from a shoe bearing a similar mark, but coming from another factory. This is not generally known, and a salesman often has difficulty in explaining why a size that at one time gave a comfortable fit gives an uncomfortable pinch at another.

Styles Make Difference.

In shoes made by the same manufacturer it frequently happens that a size which fits well in one style will not fit at all in a second style. This gives another trying time for the salesman when plain markings are used, especially so if the customer be a woman. Customers do not complain a great deal on finding out a clerks' deception if the shoes fit all right, whereas if they knew the real size of the shoe at the time they bought it they would probably go to some other shop.

The wide variety of codes now in existence has caused no small trouble to the manufacturers. In one case twenty-two different markings are required to satisfy the codes of retail dealers. This has led the manufacturers to ask that the retailers order their shoes stamped only in plain sizes and widths, or to adopt one standard system of code marking. This, it is believed, eventually will be done.

One of the most practical codes used is the so-called "Western System." In this code the English width designations, AA, A, B, C, etc., are indicated by figures ranging from zero for AA to 5 for E. The length of the shoe is given plainly as 3, 4 or 5, with zero attached for whole size and b attached for half sizes. The whole code contains three figures, and by its use size 3 1-2C would be marked 335. Size 7D would be marked 470, and so on.

Electric Signs Now Made Right at Home

One of the First Products of New Studio Is Largest Display South of New York.

Atlanta now possesses a first-class electric sign studio. Heretofore local merchants have been obliged to purchase their electric signs in other cities and have them shipped here at heavy expense.

Proof that this is no inconsequential studio is the new electric sign at the south end of the Whitehall-Peachtree viaduct—the largest south of New York, and one of the most beautiful anywhere. It was made in Atlanta from start to finish. It uses more than 2,500 lamps, and some of the letters on the sign are more than twelve feet high.

The new studio is the property of the Massengale Bulletin System, and is in the remodeled building which the Atlanta Athletic Club once occupied at 56 Edgewood avenue.

Ten high-salaried experts, men who thoroughly understand how to design and manufacture intricate and artistic electric signs, have been brought here by the Massengale Company to take charge of the new studio. M. O. Trusdell is in charge of the electrical department.

St. Elmo Massengale is president of the company and Gordon B. Massengale is secretary and manager.

E. Frank Munn is assistant manager and general superintendent.

NEW ARTIFICIAL SILK IS MADE FROM COTTON

A factory on an eight-acre plot will soon be erected at Kingston, N. Y., for manufacturing artificial silk from cotton by the Greiner-Wilkins process. Proof of the practicability of the new process was that stockings, shirtings, plushes, velvets and neckties could be made from the spun yarn. The demand for artificial silk is considerably greater than the supply, and it is maintained that the cost of its production from cotton is cheaper than where wood was used, and that silk made by the new process is more durable than that made from wood.

USES U. S. PORTS.

Of wheat exported from Canada last year, 64 per cent went by United States ports.

NEW RICE HIGH; MARKET IS BARE OF LAST YEAR'S

Honduras Quoted at 7½ Cents to Jobbers by Big Atlanta Brokerage House.

New rice is being shown by H. H. Whitcomb & Burke Co., Atlanta's foremost grocery brokers, and the price is "sky high," higher than any of the grocers remember, the figure quoted being 7 1-2 cents for full head Honduras clean. Japan sells for 3 1-2 and 4 cents. These are quotations to wholesalers.

The market is bare of old crop rice of good grades. Those who demand the fancy article have had to deny themselves. The new crop, it seems, is moving slowly, and indications are that the high levels will be maintained for some time, although a break is possible later on. At the present time, even samples are hard to get from New Orleans, which, of course, is the center of the rice trade.

Cheese also is high, considering the season. The usual fall advance is coming very early. Plymouth, Wis., American full cream cheese is quoted, daisy, 15 cents, and twin daisies, 14 3-4 cents.

"White Fish" Coming.

Great Lakes salt herring will begin to come in next month, and this most palatable fish promises to be in unparalleled demand. This is the variety known for years as "white fish," but the real white fish is as scarce as prairie chicken, and by a recent government ruling it is made an offense to brand fresh water herring by this name. The Whitcomb-Burke supply comes from the great fisheries at Green Bay, Wis.

Every week, it seems, some new product appears on the market to make the housewife's work lighter. The woman who so desires could feed her family for months at a time and never do a bit of cooking, with bakers' bread, canned brown bread, coffee which needs only the addition of water, tinned roast beef, lemon pie filling, lemon sugar, onion salad and a multitude of ready-prepared articles.

The latest in this line is prepared doughnut flour. The powder contains flour, eggs, spices and all the other ingredients of doughnuts. All that is necessary is to add water, roll the dough, cut it and fry the doughnuts. Sufficient to make two dozen doughnuts is sold for 15 cents.

New Pack Yams Due.

New pack sweet potatoes are due in a few weeks, with a fair-sized crop of excellent quality in prospect. This is an all-Southern product unknown in the North a few years ago. But the juicy Southern yellow pumpkin yam is so much superior to the kiln-dried, mealy Jersey sweet potato of the North that it is believed a very short time will serve to make the more palatable product supreme in the market.

Every day there's a new condiment. This time it is onion salad, a Boston product with a peculiar tang which makes a hit on first trial. Louisiana, the home of tabasco peppers, is putting out a new tabasco sauce which the Whitcomb-Burke Company is introducing with considerable success.

Sweeping Decision In Soft Drinks Case

Beverage Similar in Color, Taste and Bottle Infringes, Even Though Names Differ Widely.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—A decision which is likely to have an important bearing upon the whole question of imitation and substitution in various lines of business has just been rendered by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals.

The court has ordered an injunction in favor of the manufacturers of a popular beverage and restraining the making of a similar articles from putting out their product in bottles of the same size and shape.

What is generally regarded as the important phase of the court's decree is the apparently broad interpretation given to the law for the protection of manufacturers against imitators. In this particular case the similarity between the two products was confined to their color and taste and the shape of the bottles. The names were wholly dissimilar, the labels were of different colors and had no points of resemblance, either as to typography or general appearance. Also, the caps for sealing the bottles were of different kinds. The court held, however, that differences which do not destroy the general similarity of appearance to the ordinary purchaser are of no consequence and need not be dwelt upon, and that the defendant had not performed his legal duty of distinguishing his product by making differences which leave unimpaired the general resemblance.

TOYS FROM WASTE WOOD.

A toy company in Sheboygan, Wis., has begun to use only the waste wood from other mills. It has even worked out a system of using all small pieces, as well as the larger ones, so that practically nothing is lost but sawdust.

In Field Where Brains Win, Atlanta Is Leader

Millinery Business Amounts to $2,000,000 Yearly—Buyers Now Are in the City.

In a field which is in many respects the most difficult in the mercantile world—millinery—Atlanta stands supreme in the South, and is one of the prominent centers of the United States.

Millinery involves no question of geography. Transportation charges do not enter into it as they do, for instance, in the flour or coal trade. Millinery involves few problems of prices or narrow cost margins. A hat is worth what it will bring.

The business does require the keenest study—study carried on on two sides of the ocean (there are many Atlanta designers who spend a part of each season in Paris). It requires able generalship, for competition is keen both in the designing and selling fields. More trying than any of these things is the constant shifting of women's whims. These make the business the great thing it is, but also they cause heavy losses when goods bought at high prices suddenly become absolutely unsalable.

Brains, then, alone conquer in this peculiar business. And Atlanta is long on brains.

Brains have built up a business which insiders estimate at $2,000,000 a year in Atlanta. There are six large wholesale houses in Atlanta—E. L. Rhodes Company, Meyer-Regenstein Company, M. Kutz Company, D. Silverman Company, N. Myers Company and N. Bodenheimer & Bro.

The fall season just has opened. It will attract, in two weeks or so, about 1,500 buyers.

They come here to see the advance styles, to buy hats trimmed in these styles, to take notes of the models for later production in Tallapoosa or Hushpuckena, or to copy the models with thorough fidelity for the same purpose.

A little before the semi-annual openings women begin to appear, seeking work as trimmers. Now, here is a strange thing. These women are milliners. Many of them own prosperous little establishments in the smaller towns. Others are managers of millinery departments in department stores.

They work until the opening, learning the new styles and how to trim them—how to make the new bows, for instance.

Then these women change from their role of wage-earners and become merchants. They make their selections, buy their stock for the season and go back to Tallapoosa to remain until a little before the opening of the next season.

The wholesale houses encourage this. It gives them skilled workers when they need such help and it gives them friends in all the millinery shops on whom they must depend for trade.

Mrs. Jones, who works a few weeks a year at Rhodes', learns styles there, and knows Rhodes' stock, is pretty apt to buy all her goods from Rhodes. This is the system, and the wholesalers make of themselves regular employment bureaus, furnishing skilled milliners to any firms which demand them.

Fall Car Shortage Will Be No Worse

Shippers and Railroad Men Are Cooperating to Make Best Possible Use of Equipment.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Railroad officials say that while there will be a shortage of cars in the fall, it is not likely to be greater than last year, when average deficiency was reported as 27,581 cars.

The situation this year may be less difficult to handle because shippers, as well as railroad men, have had impressed on them the requirements of the situation that arise every autumn. In the case of railroad men, timely repair of freight equipment, simplification of terminal operations and recasting of inspection and interchange rules are the considerations.

Railroads are devoting more attention to utilization of the freight car, their best assets, earning about 75 per cent of gross, and undoubtedly their best freight solicitor during periods of heavy traffic. Average earnings of each car per day for 1912 were $2.35, or, eliminating Sundays and holidays and confining computation to the busy season, gross earnings capacity was $3.85, while net was $1.15.

Overcoats Will Be Shorter This Season

Norfolk Designs Less in Favor—Chinchilla Favorite Material for the Garments.

There will be no decided change in the fall and winter styles for men's clothing, excepting that overcoats will be made shorter.

Chinchilla is the popular fabric for them, and there is a tendency toward using solid colors and avoiding fancy effects. The demand for Norfolk coats is diminishing. Soft roll front coats of the two and three button English style, with patch pockets, are favored. Sack coats will be slightly shorter. Vests will be cut somewhat lower than formerly and trousers are to be narrower.

For suitings, narrow pencil stripes, serges and Oxfords are the featured materials. The color trend is toward blue, gray and brown. Some manufacturers think well of neat plaids and checks.

FRANCE COINS GOLD.

Because of recent monetary stringency, Bank of France has decided to convert its $600,000,000 gold reserve, until now represented by ingots, into gold currency. More than $200,000,000 has already been coined.

TIGHTER MONEY NOT LIKELY.

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—John J. Mitchell says: "Money is unlikely to get any closer this year than it has been recently, and would not, regardless of treasury relief. Good rains would restore corn to very general conditions."

WATERPROOF SHOES OF PAPER.

Waterproof shoes made of paper are covered by a patent recently issued to Morris H. Siegel. The paper is of sufficient toughness to stand at least one wearing. To prevent tearing there are gores at the sides which unfold to admit the foot.

Lace Hosiery Latest Novelty in the Trade

Radical Fashions Encourage Demand for These Goods—Only High-Priced Samples Shown.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Some members of the hosiery trade believe there are indications of an increasing demand for lace goods, and that the novelty developments for another season will be along this line. Their opinions are based on the business that already is being done this season in high-priced lace hosiery. Women with the money to satisfy the latest fashion demands are turning to lace hosiery as the surest way to get something different, something that is not worn by the populace at large.

Fashionable summer resorts accordingly have seen this year a large use of lace hosiery. The goods already on the market of this kind are so far, of course, all high priced, $5 a pair being nothing unusual. Such goods are made with a regular silk foot, with genuine lace inserted in a panel form.

Should this latest hosiery style prove to be of the importance now given to it by members of the trade, it is predicted that before long domestic manufacturers in large numbers will be taking it up and turning out goods in quantity to sell at prices that will mean a large distribution.

Past experience, it was pointed out, showed that by simple changes in machinery, lace hosiery, so called, can be turned out so cheaply as to warrant its sale at popular prices. During the last run on lace hosiery, a number of years ago, the production was large because of the cheapness at which goods could be offered.

Prevailing fashions in women's dresses, with the skirt conspicuous, will help materially any established demand for lace effects.

Dress Goods Moving With More Freedom

Spot Lots of Underwear and Hosiery, Lightweight, Being Picked Up Wherever Found.

On some dry goods lines jobbers admit that retailers are rather slow in taking hold, while on other lines sales are ahead of those for the corresponding period last year.

Dress goods are moving ou with more freedom, silks are wanted, and buyers are asking for immediate shipment of goods on old order. Spot lots of lightweight underwear and hosiery are being picked up wherever available, but jobbers' stocks have been reduced to such a point that there is little or nothing left on which deliveries can be made.

The question of prices on forward cotton goods contracts for the last nine months of the year is still coming in for considerable discussion. The shortage of spot and nearby delivery goods is causing some manufacturers to hesitate over shading their prices for future delivery, although it is a difficult matter to bring home the shortage to buyers, unless they actually come into the market for goods and can not obtain what they want.

BUYERS SLOW TO TAKE FANCY COTTON GOODS

Business Actually Placed With Many Houses Confined to Sample Lines—Ratines Lead.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Hesitation marks the course of many buyers of wash fabrics and fine fancy cottons. In many instances restrictions of merchandise managers are restraining them, the desire of financial heads of many houses being to postpone all buying that is not absolutely essential for the conduct of the business.

Numbers of buyers have operated in quantities sufficient to permit them to ask for full lines of sample cards for traveling men, and no more. They have said that if the lines sell well on the road when men go out seeking business for spring from retailers they will duplicate in their usual quantities, but they declare that if business is to be slow on fancies and novelties they are going to see that mills bear the burden of any accumulations.

Style developments have held many men back. The development of the ratine and crepe weaves has been so broad that buyers are afraid to order them fully until they hear more from their own trade.

That a great many of these cloths will be worn goes without saying, if for no other reason than the one that few other fancies have been shown and prepared. As a rule, buyers are less troubled about the style probabilities of the cloths than they are about the danger of a flooding of the trade with the cheap goods.

A cloth that was scarce at $1 a yard at retail a year ago and is now found freely at 8 1-2 cents a yard in various forms at wholesale, is sufficient in itself to make the experienced buyer pause and await for the answer that will come from retailers to road men traveling for the jobbing houses.

RAILROADS TAX SALESMEN WHO HAVE NO VOTE

Excess Baggage Rates Are Much Higher Than Express Company Charges, One Complaint.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Out of the maze of discussion that has centered about the excess baggage problem during the past two years a few points have been brought out to show the salesman's need of the voting privilege when away on business trips.

When shippers complain of railroad and express companies' rates, the Interstate Commerce Commission gives prompt attention to an appeal, but the voice of the traveling man is unheard. He pays his own expenses and has no vote. For example, the excess rate for a Pacific coast excursion ticket up to a year ago was $8.80 per hundred pounds. The railroads thought that the traveler could stand another squeeze and raised it to $10.

The present rate of 16 2-3 per cent and more is maintained in spite of the fact that the maximum legal charge is 12 1-2 per cent. The unfairness of this rate is more apparent when it is compared with the charges of express companies.

To illustrate, a first class ticket to Chicago on the Pennsylvania or the New York Central is $20. The excess rate per 100 pounds is $3.45, or 17 per cent of the ticket's cost. The express rate is $2.50 per 100 pounds, out of which the railroad receives $1.25, which is only 6 3-4 per cent of $20. On the Baltimore and Ohio the ticket costs only $18, but the excess rate is the same, thus bringing the rate to a still higher percentage in that case. Under the new express rate schedule the discrepancy will be still larger without lowering the excess rates to the salesmen.

The movement to procure votes for traveling men is steadily gaining ground. The Secretary of the Navy, in a letter expressed his approval of the idea.

High Prices for Ostrich Farms.

A striking illustration of the profits in ostrich farming is found in the report that a man in the Oudtshoorn feather district of South Africa has leased 290 acres of land for a period of ten years for $7,500 per year. In the same district 35 acres of land sold for $30,000.

At What Rate Do You Do Business?

Fire insurance rates on a building are based not only on the chances of that building catching fire, but to a larger extent on the facilities at hand for putting out the fire, should it occur.

The more convenient the Fire Service, the lower the rate.

Just so in merchandising; the cost of doing business is directly governed by the convenience of a merchant's source of supply.

Take shoes, for instance; the Southern merchant who buys his stock in the distant markets of New England and the West is paying a mighty high rate to do business.

Here are the extra costs he pays:

1st. Excess freight charges.

2d. Interest on half the stock he now carries that would be unnecessary with a near-by efficient factory connection.

3d. Loss on accumulation and depreciation of dead styles.

4th. Sales missed by being out of the right styles and sizes when he needs them.

News and Views by Experts of Finance, Industry, Crops and Commerce

COTTON FIELDS TELL STORY OF TWO ASPECTS

No Cause for Complaint in the Central or Eastern Belt. Spinners Reluctant.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 16.—A genuine crop scare in a considerable portion of the cotton belt and an absence of bullish activity in the price marts was an anomaly presented during the week. A partial explanation for it was, that while the crop was admittedly losing condition in Oklahoma and Texas, in practically all the rest of the belt there was no good reason for complaint. In fact, most of the central and eastern belt sent in reports of excellent progress toward a satisfactory yield. There was thus a two-sided story from the cotton fields, and the sections which last season had only moderate outturns were giving promise of evening up matters with a section that had bumper crops.

The promise of rains in the western part of the belt at the close of last wek, which afforded much of the basis for the bearish activity in the speculative market on Friday and Saturday, proved barren of much results, for the showers were scattered, and by no means sufficient to relieve the situation. In only a few localities did they amount to enough to give relief, and as the temperatures continued high, some of them might better not have come. Arkansas had some fine rains, which put an end to an incipient drouth. The week has brought no important relief to Oklahoma and Texas, and most students of the situation have reduced expectations for those important areas.

It seems certain enough damage already has been done to make unlikely a yield of as much as last year, despite increased acreage. The injury will continue until the drouth is relieved, and then for them to have full benefit there will have to be a late and open fall so late fruit can mature.

In the central belt conditions are still excellent, and the critical period will soon pass. Expectations are for the largest crop ever gathered in this territory, and picking will start in earnest in a few weeks. The "first" bale has already appeared here, nine days ahead of last year and five earlier than the average date. However, the crop as a whole is not that much ahead, the bale having come from the section that is trying to get ahead of the boll weevil by early planting and forced cultivation.

Opinion here is that the improvement of the past few weeks in the eastern belt has been such as to make possible a large yield, though it is doubted whether the record of two years ago will be reached in any large area.

The spot situation is still without much feature, and it seems likely that the spinners are going to take their time about buying. Very little forward business is reported booked and the disposition to scatter orders is not yet marked. From across the water comes talk of trade not being so promising, though there is a suspicion that one motive for such news is the need of raw material in large quantities soon and it will not hurt any to spread the notion that trade is going to be dull, thus helping to depress values and enable as cheap buying as possible.

The effect of the legislation against futures, should it be passed, is also expected to be for lower prices, which is another motive for the spinners waiting. There are many people who think the removal of this menacing cloud would result in a very quick revival of bullish speculative activity and thus the crop scare would become a price factor of more importance than it has been.

The foreign spinner, no doubt, also feels that the money situation is such that there will be a rush to sell the new crop, which will better his chances of getting bargains provided he does not show too much eagerness this early.

The domestic spinner naturally is biding his time and being conservative, pending the passage of the tariff act and its effect on business. Other things also encourage him to be a little patient, although advices indicate a healthy prospect for business.

SEABOARD NOTES CHEAP.

The offering of the unsold balance of Seaboard Air Line $1,900,000 equipment trust notes is being made at a price to yield 6 per cent. Seaboard Air Line Railway's surplus over all fixed charges and bond interest, for the year ended June 30, last, it is understood, was between $1,725,000 and $1,750,000, or equivalent to 6.9 per cent on the $25,000,000 preferred stock. Last year the surplus on the same basis was $899,000.

THE NEW ISSUES.

The Financial Chronicle's New York review of new security issues for the last six months shows them to have been the smallest in years and much below the average of the last eight years, totaling for stocks and bonds only $627,048,160, par value, compared with $1,219,250 in the first six months of 1912.

PHYSICAL LIMIT SET.

The Baldwin Locomotive Company says the factor determining size and pewer of locomotives is the physical ability of firemen to shovel coal.

Six Crops of Alfalfa in One Season; Big Opportunity for Farmers of South

Special Soil Preparatin Is Necessary to Success—Inoculation and Liming Important—Seed Bed Preparation Should Begin Two Years in Advance.

CHARLES A. WHITTLE.
(Georgia State College of Agriculture.)

Think of from four to six crops of hay off a field in a year, and you are thinking of the possibilities of alfalfa growing in the South. Think of cutting from one to one and a half tons per acre each time and figure that each ton is worth at least $25 and you arrive at a very snug income with mighty little sweat as compared to cotton, for instance.

But be not deceived. Learning to grow alfalfa in the South is the biggest thing about it. Anybody who takes it as a matter of course that all he has to do is to stir the land and plant and thereafter watch the negroes harvest, is more than likely to be enrolled with the long list of those who have proven alfalfa failures in the South.

With all the good things that can be said of the soil of the South, it can pretty generally be said that Southern lands are not naturally "cut out" to grow alfalfa. This is not saying that alfalfa as a rule will not grow in the South, nor is it reflecting in any wise on either the soil or the climate. The point is that all Southern soils have to be given special treatment and preparation before alfalfa will be at home in it.

Alfalfa on Every Farm.

"Alfalfa on every farm," the slogan now going the rounds, does not point to an impossible ideal, but if anyone thinks it can be attained in the South without a considerable revolution, he may be easily deceived by trying it.

With all, it is easy enough to prepare the soil for alfalfa and go along producing it, if the prospective grower will follow good advice—but there is the rub.

The ordinary cotton grower of the South will have to practice crop rotation, he will have to add inoculation to his vocabulary and practices, and he will have to get lime into his soil. Those who have been teaching this sort of doctrine and have observed how far it has taken root in the South will understand how much farming practice will have to be changed to realize "Alfalfa on every farm."

To the average Southern farmer to mention inoculation is to elicit inquiries. What is it? Why? And to tell the truth, it is neither easy to understand nor to explain. A full explanation, indeed, is impossible. Inoculation means to introduce friendly bacteria into the soil. Without certain nitrogen fixing bacteria present in the ordinary soil, alfalfa and other legumes make poor headway. Certain it is that some of these bacteria can take the nitrogen from the air and fix it in the ground, converting at the same time the nitrogen into food for the growing plant.

Alfalfa Bred Bacteria Best.

It is believed that almost any soil has some of the nitrogen fixing bacteria present in it, but as a matter of fact in some soils these bacteria are few and apparently so starved as to be unequal to the task imposed by thrifty alfalfa.

The best bacteria with which to inoculate are those which have been bred in a good alfalfa field. Good bacteria can be grown artificially and it is with such artificially grown bacteria that seed are inoculated. When sprinkled with a solution in which the artificially grown bacteria have been turned loose, the seed carry on their surface enough of the bacteria to start up business in a new field.

Of course the bacteria are invisible except under a compound microscope. The farmer can not see them and when he buys he buys on faith. If his alfalfa grows and produces good crops he believes in inoculation. If it does not, he is likely to have notions of his own about inoculation. It is possible for seed to be perfectly inoculated and by reason of improper handling may fail to show results. Sunlight destroys bacteria and inoculated seed left exposed to the sunlight will become sterile. To escape the danger of sunlight it is necessary, of course, to shelter the bacteria, and it is wiser to sow or to apply the inoculation medium late in the afternoon or during cloudy weather.

Again, the seed may be properly inoculated, due precaution may be taken to get it into the soil with the least injury from the sunlight, but the soil may be sour, which is no sort of soil for a nitrogen fixing bacteria.

Lime Necessary to Alfalfa.

To correct sourness of soil lime is necessary. The fact is that practically all soils in the South are deficient in lime. This may never become apparent so long as cotton or corn is grown, but it is certainly true when it comes to growing legumes.

The lime is not needed as a fertilizer. It is merely a tonic to nitrogen fixing bacteria. Soils generally are supplied with all the lime that the crops need. Experiments have shown that most of the crops grown in the South are benefited by the use of lime, a benefit that is attributable to increasing bacterial activity. Bacterial activity means increase of plant food, for bacteria in effect are minute laboratories changing the elements non-available for plant food into elements of the soil that are available. Of course there are good and bad bacteria. Some of those that might be classed as bad operate to change available plant food into non-available. Of such are the denitrifying bacteria, which instead of preparing bacteria for the plants change it into perhaps free nitrogen that returns again to the air.

These friendly bacteria have been isolated and named and are nurtured, coaxed and strengthened to do their best. Only the border of the realm of these soil agents has been entered, and it may be reckoned with a degree of certainty that as the scientist ventures further into the mysterious country of the unseen that he will bring back to the farmer knowledge that will mean two bushels where one is now grown, all by learning which are the good bacteria that are serving plant life and how to encourage their growth.

The first great contribution of the scientist in looking into the teeming soil world is that lime is good for nitrogen-fixing bacteria, and since nitrogen is the most expensive plant food and one of the most important, it is a wonderful discovery this of lime and its relations to bacteria.

Since nitrogen-fixing bacteria operating to the good of alfalfa set up shop on the roots of the plant and there extract nitrogen from the air that has penetrated the soil, to know that lime will make it thrive is equivalent to saying that without lime alfalfa will not grow in many Southern soils, for it is a fact that most Southern soils are deficient in lime and are too sour for nitrogen-fixing bacteria.

Success Has Made Failures.

Some pretty well-known, highly respected and intelligent men have said that they do not believe in inoculation nor in liming for alfalfa. They point to their successful alfalfa patch to show you that neither is necessary. Unwittingly such well-meaning people have been the means of the downfall of others in their attempts to grow alfalfa. Do not get an idea that there are many such alfalfa successes in the South, especially among those who have not used lime. Even where the soil has been formed by the disintegration of limestone rock, where there is a foundation of limestone in the soil, is to be found a marked deficiency in available lime. The lime has leached out. It must be supplied. On soils which for some reason, exceptional to the rule, there is sufficient lime, alfalfa may be started and grown successfully even without inoculation. The reason for the unnecessary inoculation will be found to be that the soil has already been stocked with nitrogen-fixing bacteria through the medium of clover, cowpeas, beans or one of a hundred other legumes.

Some of the authorities are now advocating going to the roadside, the fence corners or other places where sweet clover or burr clover, or lespedeza, or some other legumes are growing, taking some of the soil from underneath, scatter it over the alfalfa seed bed and harrow it under. By this mean nitrogen-fixing bacteria will be added to the soil, bacteria that have been making their living off the very kind of soil in which they are appointed to continue operations.

Better still, of course, would be soil taken from a field in which alfalfa had grown, a field where conditions are similar as to character of soil, climate, growing zone, etc. Naturally bacteria that have been feeding on alfalfa must have established alfalfa-loving characteristics.

Suppose some cotton farmer gets inspiration enough to get out of the ruts and takes the advice of the man who does not believe in inoculation or liming, and suppose he fails, as he is likely to do, what a pity! When again will he be in frame of mind to try?

Preparing the Seed Bed.

The preparation of the seed bed with reference to weed eradication is important. It is time well spent if two years are taken in preparing the land for alfalfa. If barnyard manure is applied, it is better to follow with a crop of corn as a weed eradicator. This followed by rye or oats drilled between the corn rows at the last time the corn is worked, will afford not only a winter cover crop, but good pasturage for the colts and calves during the winter. After the rye or oats, as the case may be, is taken off, the cowpea or soy bean will prove excellent for keeping the weeds from getting a start. Turning under the cowpeas or soy beans and harrowing the ground until it is in find tilth, as good a seed bed as could be obtained for growing alfalfa is prepared.

Weeds and alfalfa do not do well together. If the farmer can not get rid of the weeds, he need not look to alfalfa to do it. Many farmers have had fits of despair over the weeds and crab grass which have made their appearance in their alfalfa patches.

But weeds are not formidable obstacles to growing alfalfa where the precautions described have been taken. Even where the weeds have appeared in an alfalfa patch there is a fighting chance for alfalfa if the right steps are taken to keep down the weeds. The method usually recommended is to run a disk harrow over the field. This plays havoc with the weeds, but harms the alfalfa very little. By some it is claimed that the harrowing will break up the alfalfa crowns or bunches and start new plants. Weed eradication in the field will rarely be necessary if the seed bed is properly prepared in advance.

Then Put In Lime.

Having brought the seed bed through two seasons of preparation and having broken and harrowed the ground, the next important step is to put in the lime. The amount of lime to apply will depend upon the degree of acidity or sourness of the land, not on the amount of lime already in the soil. The degree of sourness is usually determined by the use of litmus paper, a prepared paper that can be purchased at any drug store. This paper when imbedded in fairly moist soil and left a short time, when taken out will show by the change of color how acid the soil is. If the change of color is very marked plenty of lime should be applied. The application will vary from one to two tons per acre.

Lime is comparatively inexpensive and when once applied serves its purpose five or more years. Ground limestone is the form which is most generally used. The price is determined largely by the cost of freight. At lime manufacturing centers the ground limestone can usually be bought at $1 per ton and even less, especially where the lime is a by-product.

The lime should be broadcasted or drilled in. If broadcasted, then harrowed under.

Sourness of soil is attributed to an incomplete stage of decomposition of vegetable matter which has been turned into the soil. The lime is the one element that will at once adjust conditions and permit other bacteria as well as the nitrogen fixing bacteria to do their work. The vegetable matter which has been turned under in preparing the seed bed and is in process of decomposition, that is, which is being transformed by bacteria, proceeds with its processes most favorably in the presence of lime, becomes humus and then plant food.

An application of nitrate of soda after the alfalfa has come up, especially if it is not showing good color, has often proved helpful.

Cropping Alfalfa.

When the alfalfa plant has grown its full height, a second growth will the second growth has put up its shoots and has started vigorously, be found starting at the roots. When then is the time to cut off the first crop, if the weather is normal, in a month's time there will be another crop ready to cut. The same signs of when to cut are to be followed in each instance—that is, the oncoming of another crop.

In the South when there has been as much rain as has generally prevailed this summer, the owner of an alfalfa patch will be cutting hay once a month for about six months in the year. Indeed, the prospcest are favorable in some alfalfa patches for seven crops this year, five already having been cut, and the growing season ahead extending through September and October.

If a ton of cured hay per acre is obtained with each cutting, the alfalfa can be counted as doing first rate. Some will do better.

Alfalfa hay is worth taking good care of. The weather is not always favorable for curing it in the field, especially during the thundershower period. Canvas caps for the piles of hay in the field pay for themselves over and over by saving hay that would rot in the field from too much rain. Any grower of hay of whatever kind of hay it may be can well afford to provide hay caps.

Alfalfa hay is good, rich hay and ranks very near wheat bran in the amount of nutriments, ton for ton. Wheat bran costs about $30 per ton laid down in the South. Raise alfalfa hay and the wheat bran need not be purchased. The alfalfa has a feeding value of nearly $30 per ton at present prices, but at the outset of this article a selling prices of $25 was set as an average.

As a feed alfalfa is a producer of high-class barnyard manure. Considering that the feeding value of alfalfa is nearly $30 per ton and the manure produced of high fertilizing value, the conclusion is that alfalfa is most profitable to the farmer when he feeds it to farm animals and applies the manure to the land.

Thus the story of alfalfa ends most happily when alfalfa is married to a home made live stock business.

Selling U. S. Bonds Short Is Risky Deal

Restricted Market for These Securities Makes the 'Bear's' Lot One Not Enviable.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—The trader who sells any Government bonds short takes a long chance of making a profit, because of the restricted market for these securities, and the short seller of those which bear coupons assumes a risk much greater than is attached to any active stock or bond on the Stock Exchange list. Government coupon bonds, particularly those which have the circulation privilege, are comparatively scarce.

The coupon bonds may be converted into registered bonds, but registered bonds may not be exchanged for others of the same clas which bear coupons.

The application of this provision to the issues which are used to secure bank note issues, naturally, has worked to cut down the number of coupon bonds outstanding and thereby greatly lessened the opportunity of short sellers for covering their contracts at times when they have the best advantage for a profitable transaction.

An expert on Government issues predicted yesterday that traders who went short on coupon 2s below 96 would have difficulty in covering at any price under par unless some development at Washington occurs to weaken them drastically.

No One Surprised at Passing of Dividend

National Railways of Mexico Made the Plaything of Every Rebel Chieftain.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Persons sufficiently interested in the National Railways of Mexico to watch earnings long ago decided that the company could not pay another semi-annual dividend on its first preferred stock while the revolution continued. Members of the New York board said the payment due August 10 would not be made; and when word came from Mexico City that the usual declaration expected at this time had been omitted by the directors, there was no surprise.

The Railways' lines have been the plaything of the rebels and bandits wherever they have congregated in numbers sufficient to defy the authorities. Under the delusion that one of the first rules of warfare is to destroy as much property as possible, the insurrectos have burned trestles and torn up track in which they, as natives of Mexico, had a proprietary interest.

There is a great deal of European money invested in the National Railways, as well as a very respectable amount of American capital but the Mexican Government owns $74,724,000 of the $150,000,000 common stock, $10,000,000 of the $57,662,000 of the first preferred and $38,278,00 of the $240,597,000 of second preferred.

Moreover, the Government will be held liable for the damage to the railways when peace is restored, so that every time a piece of property is destroyed the Mexican Government is saddled with additional obligations. Preliminary estimates for the last year indicate that the company earned almost $2,000,000 over its expenses and fixed charges, or about $500,000 less than the dividends paid.

PULLMAN'S YEAR.

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—The report of the Pullman company for the twelve months ended July 31, which will be published about a month hence, is expected to show the largest gross earnings in the corporation's history.

BEARS CHECKED BY DAMAGE IN WESTERN BELT

Small Demand for Forward Delivery in Spots Best Argument for Low Prices.

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 16.—Bearish activity, which had been encouraged by the anti-option legislation pending at Washington, has been somewhat restrained recently by reports of deterioration in the condition of the cotton crop in Texas and Oklahoma.

Unevenly distributed showers have fallen in both of those States within the last few days, but it is believed that what relief has come has been too late to prevent material damage to the crop in that section of the belt. Consequently the next bureau report is expected to show a further decline in condition from last month, when both Texas and Oklahoma fell off sharply.

The one redeeming feature in the crop situation at the moment is the improved outlook in the eastern half of the belt. According to reports received in this market, the crop in Alabama and in Georgia has undergone wonderful improvement since the date of the last bureau report. Should this improvement in the eastern belt continue, the deterioration likely to be shown in the Western belt will be offset, in a measure, by the improvement in the Atlantics.

It is believed that while conditions may be serious in those two States, rains within a week would yet permit the making of a fairly large crop, and it is argued that even if there were a shortage in the crop in the Western belt the increase apparent in the Atlantics, together with a normal yield in the Central belt, would result in a crop of at least 15,000,000 bales.

The most bearish feature in the general situation is the fact that there is less demand for forward deliveries in spots than has been the case in years. Fully good middling is being offered in this market at 45 points on October, and good middling at 15 points less for September delivery, with few, if any, buyers in sight. The slack spot demand is attributed to declining trade at Manchester and to the bearish sentiment engendered at Liverpool by the introduction of the Clarke bill in Congress.

News as to the outcome of the fight being made against the Clarke bill continues of a favorable character, and it is believed here now that the measure has been practically killed as a result of the criticism aimed at it by Southern newspapers generally.

The optimistic feeling prevailing here has been reflected by an advance of $600 in the price of New Orleans Cotton Exchange stock, two shares of which have sold this week for $2,100, with none offering at less than $2,500 now.

When the Clarke bill was first introduced, shares of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange declined below $1,500, whereas the stock had been $2,500 bid before the bill was introduced by Senator Clarke.

'L. & N.' Not Much Worried Over the Senatorial Probe

Busy Developing Its Own Lines, Has No Time To Buy New Holdings.

Interests familiar with affairs of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company are not apprehensive over the outcome of whatever action may be taken in connection with the resolution introduced in the Senate by Senator Lea. This resolution calls for investigation and report by the Interstate Commerce Commission of the ownership and control of the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis Railway Company and other subsidiary companies of the first mentioned road, "and the practices and methods of the Louisville and Nashville in attempting to preserve a monopoly in its territory."

It is not thought that there will be immediate legal action in the matter, as any investigation that may be made by the commission would necessarily consume a considerable amount of time, and it is considered more or less doubtful in the minds of some that sufficient evidence will be obtained to warrant the institution of a suit by the Government calling for the divorce of the lines involvel.

It is known that the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis has lines running in territory which may be considered competitive with the Louisville and Nashville. But whether it can be established that any collusion exists or has existed between the two roads to abolish competition is quite another question. So far as te Tennessee Central Railroad's purchase by the Louisville and Nashville is concerned, it is understood that such a development has not been considered by the management of the last mentioned property.

The Louisville and Nashville, it is pointed out, is kept busy developing and improving its own road in order to care more expeditiously for the large traffic that is being offered, and is not in the market for other lines. It owns about 75 per cent of the stock of the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis, which virtually gives it control of that system. No doubt the management of the Louisville and Nashville will fight a suit, should it be instituted by the Government, to the bitter end.

At the present time the company is spending large amounts of money in double-tracking its main lines from a point about 10 miles above Nashville to Birmingham, Ala., a distance of over 300 miles. When this important work is completed the road will be in a position to handle its business in that territory much more effectively than at present. The double-track work is not being done on the old roadbed all the distance, as in many places lines are being straightened, and at Nashville one track is being run around the city to avoid congestion. It is proposed to utilize one of the tracks between Nashville and Birmingham for freight and the other for passengers.

Louisville and Nashville has a very large surplus and it is believed in some circles that before long stockholders will receive another "bonus" in stock. The last one of $12,000,000 was only about half what was expected, and at that time predictions were freely made that within a reasonable length of time something more in this connection might be looked for. Earnings of the company are substantial during the fiscal year ended June 30 last, there having been an estimated balance available for dividends approximately of 11 1-2 or 12 per cent. Last year there was a surplus available for dividends equal to 15.93 per cent on the $60,000,000 capital stock then outstanding.

NEWS FOR INVESTORS

Anaconda Copper Company's production for July exceeds June's by 600,000 pounds, although this is 1,000,000 pounds below the July output last year.

* * *

American Smelting and Refining Company earnings, although not so large as last year, owing to Mexican disturbances, will make no change in the regular dividend.

* * *

Minneapolis and St. Louis Railroad for the twelve months ended June 30 increased gross by $1,880,782 and net by $1,173,665, compared with last year.

Seaboard Air Line for the fiscal year increased total operating revenue $783,417 and net $1,028,700 over 1912. Surplus, which increased $836,558 over last year, is equal to 7 1-4 per cent on the preferred stock outstanding, compared with 3 3-4 per cent in 1912.

* * *

The St. Louis, Iron Mountain and Southern Railway Company has been authorized by the Missouri Public Service Commission to issue $28,584,500 first and refunding 40-year 6 per cent bonds, of which $26,730,000 are to replace bonds already outstanding, and the remainder for reimbursing the road for expenditures made for improvements and equipment.

NEW SEABOARD MANAGEMENT IS DOING WELL

Deficit of $121,000 in First Quarter Overcome and oGod Surplus Besides.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Seaboard Air Line in the year ended June 30 earned in excess of 7 per cent on $24,894,000. Final surplus was approximately $1,730,000, against $812,000 in 1912, both figures including only rail operations.

The showing reflects credit on the new management. In a year when the company's territory scored only about 60 per cent of a normal cotton crop, and when the initial three months' operations under the old management produced a deficit of $121,000, results for the succeeding nine months not only overcame these handicaps, but so far recovered that gross increased $1,523,000 and surplus over all charges increased $817,000.

On basis of nine months' operations under the new management, and allowing for effort necessary to pick up and recover the initial quarter's deficit, the property appears to be earning at rate of nearly $2,000,000 surplus annually, or equivalent to more than 8 per cent on the outstanding preferred. Total operating ratio in the past year was 72 per cent of gross. In 1912 it was 75 per cent.

Officials look forward to better than a $2,000,000 surplus in the current year. Crops offer excellent promise, with one of the largest cotton crops ever raised among the prospects this year. General business is moving in fair volume and traffic outlook shows no unfavorable signs.

PITTSBURG COAL MINES PRODUCING BIG PROFIT

PITTSBURG, Aug. 16.—Mines in the Pittsburg district are being operated to the limit fixed by car and labor supply. As these are very satisfactory, output is correspondingly large. There is not a very heavy demand for quick delivery. Contracts are calling for the greater part of the attention of operators.

Consumers have very little coal on hand and the increased activity in iron production may cause a stiffening of prices of both coal and coke.

The first edition of "Salads" is sold out; but the second edition is just off the press. The first edition of "Desserts" is going fast. Send in orders at once. There are no books like these.

"SALADS"

This is not a "cookbook" in the ordinary sense. It is unique—the work of the foremost authority on salad-making, Olive M. Hulse.

"Salads" contains more than 200 original recipes—each a masterpiece in the art of making salads; 30 recipes for salad dressings, and a remarkable introductory chapter on "Salad Lore."

There are 95 pages and the printing and binding are most attractive. $1 Postpaid.

"DESSERTS"

This volume contains 155 pages. In it are more than 200 matchless recipes for the making of the most delicious desserts—French Pastries, Pies, Cakes, Puddings, Ices and Fruit Desserts. The introductory chapter on "Dessert Lore" reads more like a fairy story than the actual history of desserts.

In the preparation of "Desserts" Mrs. Hulse has had the co-operation of some of the most famous chefs in America. The result is the most fascinating and useful book of its kind ever published. $1 Postpaid.

Don't Delay—Send Now

Mrs. Hulse's "Salads" and "Desserts" are unique not only because of their invaluable recipes, but in the manner in which the author presents her subject. Her recipes enable the woman in the most moderate circumstances to match the skill of the French chef. Send to-day for "Salads" and "Desserts"—they are $1 each, prepaid. REFUSE TO BUDGE INCH

Deadlock Results in New York Impeachment Situation as Each Claimant Refuses to Make Move—Both Go to Capitol.

Accused Executive Accompanied by His Bodyguard Goes to State House and Plunges Into Business—No Outbreak Surprise.

ALBANY, N. Y., Aug. 16.—Neither drastic nor violent steps will be taken by Lieutenant Governor Martin H. Glynn to force William Sulzer, the impeached Governor of New York, from office—at least not to-day. Owing to the fact that this was a half holiday at the State offices, Mr. Glynn spent but a few minutes at the Capitol, and while both Sulzer and Glynn forces refused to budge an inch, matters were at a deadlock.

Accompanied by his bodyguard, Governor Sulzer walked from the executive mansion to the Capitol, where he plunged into State business, just as though his right to exercise the gubernatorial prerogatives were not contested.

Lieutenant Governor Glynn, who claims the powers of Acting Governor under the Constitution until Mr. Sulzer is brought to trial on September 18, went from the Capitol to the offices of his newspaper and announced he would spend the afternoon at an athletic meet. He denied that, like Napoleon, he would lift the power of ruling New York State on the bayonets of the National Guard.

Lack of Trouble a Surprise.

Absence of an actual outbreak today was a surprise to many who expected to see the executive chamber a battleground for the Sulzer and Tammany forces.

Mr. Sulzer now virtually stands alone, having been deserted by the members of his cabinet, who have allied themselves to the Glynn forces. But Sulzer refuses to abdicate, despite the fact that the ranks of his political enemies have been strengthened during the last 24 hours.

Lieutenant Governor Glynn, who is now signing State documents with this signature, "Martin H. Glynn, Acting Governor, State of New York," announced that, in spite of any obstructions thrown in his way by the Sulzer legal forces, he would continue to administer gubernatorial affairs pending Mr. Sulzer's trial for alleged high crimes and misdemeanors September 18.

Both Sides Fear Trick.

Both sides are taking elaborate precautions to guard against a trick. Throughout the night armed guards stood watch over each State department, while lawyers and legislators involved in the struggle were trailed by private detectives. Mr. Sulzer was in retirement planning a new legal move with his counsel. Messenger boys with Washington and New York city telegrams could not find the Governor, but members of the "inner circle" took charge of the dispatches, saying they would find the Governor.

Leaders of the anti-Sulzer faction made the threat that Mr. Glynn, now having control of the State Military Department, would actually invade the executive chamber.

"He will get a mighty warm reception," declared Sulzer adherents, who are few, but courageous.

Some Fear Martial Law.

Some residents of this city, realizing the intense seriousness of the situation, fear that conditions may become so grave that martial law will have to be declared.

It was assumed that Governor Sulzer to-day would reply to the second note from Lieutenant Governor Glynn, demanding the unconditional surrender of all prerogatives by Mr. Sulzer and the abdication of the Governor. Counsel were with the Governor at the beginning of the official day, and it was reported that the Governor was urged to take a fling at Tammany Hall.

Wife Slayer Loses 3-Year Fight

Now on Ocean on Way to Trial

Porter Charlton, young American, who killed beautiful wife and is now on way to face trial in Italy.

Young Prisoner Is Confident He Will Escape Spending Life in Solitary Confinement.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Porter Charlton, after three years' fight against extradition from America, is in the clutches of the Italian Government and to-day is on the high seas, bound for Italy and for trial on the charge of killing his beautiful young wife and sinking her body in Lake Como in June, 1910.

In spite of the ordeal that faces him, Charlton left New York as cheerful as a schoolboy. Three years in close confinement had repressed his natural buoyancy, but the prospect of a sea voyage, even with a trial for murder awaiting him at his journey's end, restored it to a considerable degree.

"I'll be back for Christmas!" he cried, waving a good-bye from the liner as it pulled out. All the time he has declared that he will be acquitted, in spite of the fact that he confessed to killing his wife on their honeymoon. Extenuating circumstances, his friends declare, will have their weight on the Italian jury.

Charlton's quarters on the liner are isolated, and he is not permitted to mingle with the other passengers. He travels third class, as the Italian Government does not provide first-class accommodations for prisoners.

Faces Living Death.

Unless the contention of his insanity can be proved, a living death surely will be the fate of Porter Charlton, a hideous confinement that is far worse than death on the gallows.

Extenuating circumstances, it is expected, can not be revealed of sufficient strength to obtain his acquittal, and unless his defense prove insanity, he must go to prison. There is no death sentence in Italy.

And imprisonment in Italy is a dreadful punishment, feared far more than the electric chair, the gallows, or the garrote. It is invested with mental torture of such degree that few who live through it more than a few years are sound of mind.

Charlton is known to have a sensitive, nervous temperament. His behavior toward his wife proves him high-strung. To a person of his psychological make-up incarceration under the Italian system would be certainly destructive of mental balance.

For the first ten years of a life sentence the prisoner may be kept in utter darkness and in the strictest solitude, with nothing to eat and drink but plain bread and water. A few weeks of this treatment generally is sufficient to reduce the most unemotional criminal to a state of nervous collapse.

Insanity Practically Only Hope.

His attorneys hope to present in the Italian courts the great mass of evidence brought to bear in the United States Supreme Court to prove him insane. Justice Lurton, in the opinion which declared that Charlton must go back to Italy to stand trial, admitted that the evidence to substantiate the insanity plea was preponderous.

The opinion of the Supreme Court brought to an end the three years' unsuccessful fight of Charlton and his family against extradition to Italy. It was in June, 1910, that he killed his wife, according to his own confession. After the crime he fled, but was caught at Hoboken, N. J., when the liner landed there. The brother of the slain wife there met him, and caused him to be placed under arrest.

The first night of his imprisonment in New Jersey a confession was produced, bearing his name, and generally supposed to be authentic.

"My wife and I lived happily together, but she had an uncontrollable temper," read the confession. "So had I. On the night of the murder she had the worst outbreak of temper I ever saw.

"I told her to keep quiet or I would make her quiet. Then she had another outbreak. I took up a wooden mallet, with which I had been repairing a table, and hit her on the head and body two or three times. At midnight I put the body in a trunk, dragged it to a small pier near the house, and threw it overboard."

His wife was a beautiful young woman, although eight years older than he, who was only 21. The two were on their honeymoon when the murder occurred.

Mrs. Charlton was the divorced wife of Neville H. Castle, a San Francisco lawyer. Charlton is the Judge Rules Spinster Was Right in Smiting Married Woman With Chair.

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—Unmarried women of mature years who are subjected to ridicule as "old maids" have won a victory in court. Miss Minnie Flatley, of the Colonial Hotel, is 31, and Mrs. Lizzie Varley, of the same address, has been calling her an "old maid."

Miss Flatley resented the sarcasm by smiting Mrs. Varley with a chair and punishing her seriously. When she was arraigned in court Judge Gemmill, after hearing the story, said "Discharged."

"I think this sort of provocation justifies any assault up to murder," said the judge. "It is despicable to humiliate a woman."

Nitrate King Hands Man Ten Cents for Returning Lost Pocketbook.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Senor E. E. Ossio, the Nitrate King of Chili, who has declared John D. Rockefeller a pauper in comparison with himself, overwhelmed a steward on the United Fruit steamer Pastores yesterday by the size of a tip.

The steward had picked up the Nitrate King's wallet and, running after him, bowed low and handed over the pocketbook. Opening it, Senor Ossio pulled out a dollar bill, then changed his mind, and, taking a dime from his pocket, handed it to the steward.

Hidden Pistol Seen As Girl Lifts Dress

Young Woman Is Arrested When Masked Battery Is Exposed as She Crosses Street.

UNIONTOWN, PA., Aug. 16.—Holding her dress a little too high to avoid the water as she crossed Main street to-day, Mattie Pearce was arrested when she revealed a large revolver in a holster fastened around her leg at the knee.

She was taken to the police station, where she showed the officers the new mode of carrying a gun. Strapped to a leg was the holster in which she carried the revolver.

The girl explained that there were "bad men" at Uniontown and she was not taking any chances with them. She stated that she had worn the revolver in that position for some time.

Mattie said she did not know she was holding her dress quite as high as she was, and that she had forgotten for a moment about the masked battery. She was released on bail.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 16.—One of the most-talked-of works of art in St. Louis hangs in the home of Dr. Robert E. Wilson and was painted by Mrs. Wilson. The canvas is called "The Story of a Young Girl's Love," and covers the entire wall space in the parlor of this magnificent Colonial home. Two years were devoted to the work.

The painting is divided into panels, the size of each picture depending on the amount of space to be covered. Artists pronounce the canvas a masterpiece. Mrs. Wilson's friends say that the painting illustrates her blissful married state.

TO BEAT HEARST, SAYS MULHALL

Lobbyist Declares He Obtained Confidence of Democratic Leader in Campaign for Governor.

GAVE REPUBLICANS SECRET

Letter Was Forged to Give Him Introduction to Up-State Committeeman.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—Colonel Martin M. Mulhall, self-confessed lobbyist of the National Association of Manufacturers, testified before the Garrett Lobby Investigating Committee that his political lines crossed those of William Randolph Hearst in 1906, and that he helped to defeat Mr. Hearst for the New York Governorship.

Introduced by a letter forged upon the letterhead of the Hearst campaign headquarters, Mulhall said that he went into Congressman Fairchild's district, the Twenty-fourth New York, an upstate district, and gained the confidence of a local campaign manager for Mr. Hearst.

Tells Plans to Republicans.

Learning from the latter the plans of campaign in the district, Mulhall reported them to Fairchild, and Republican plans to checkmate them and defeat their object were perfected. Mulhall was employed for a week on this work with the approval, he says, of Fairchild.

Mulhall told a few days ago how he started to work for Senator Foraker in Ohio. He was prepared to make his report to Foraker when the Hearst Standard Oil disclosure letters were first made public. Foraker admitted to the Senate committee that these letters defeated him for re-election to the Unied Staes Senate.

Unconcernedly, Mulhall told how he had taken his "fake letters" of introduction to Fairchild and got his instructions for political detective work. He met Mr .Hearst's friends, including a clergyman, at a hotel, entertained them and worked his way into their confidence. He ascertained that the Republican district committee chairman was not friendly to Fairchild.

Letter Was Faked.

"Whose signature did this fake letter of introduction bear?" asked Representative Stafford.

"It was that of some member of the Democratic State Committee."

"Who were you represented to be?"

"I was supposed to be connected with Mr. Hearst, and so represented myself to Mr. Scott, the candidate, I think, opposing Fairchild."

"It was your first meeting with him, and you won his confidence to the extent of getting from him his campaign plans?" said Stafford.

"Yes."

"Who signed this fake letter?"

"The letter was given to me by Marshall Cushing, and I can not say who signed it. Mr. Cushing was a very good letter writer. He told me it was a fake letter. I knew that Cushing was not connected with the Hearst organization."

Mr. Stafford—He was connected in the way of using the letterhead of the Hearst organization to good effect.

"Mr. Cushing thought it was a smart political trick, and I guess that was his system of working," replied Mulhall.

Scott Well Deceived.

"Mr. Scott's confidence was so complete," continued Mulhall, "that he told me Mr. Hearst had sent him a number of workers and quite an amount of money, and I believe in this letter the latter stated that they were ready to send at that time more workers and more money."

"Scott swallowed everything, hook, line and all, as far as you represented it," commented Stafford.

"Yes."

"Did Mr. Fairchild know all about this arrangement?" asked Representative Kline.

"Yes, he knew about hte letter, and I had Mr. Fairchild's advice in presenting it. He has spoken to me since about that clever piece of work."

PARIS, Aug. 16.—Colonel Joseph H. Degrange, of New Orleans, is ill in the American Hospital at Neuilly. Mr. Degrange's illness developed first on board a steamer on his way to Europe early in the summer.

On July 22 he was taken to the hospital for an operation for the removal of the carbuncle on the back of his neck. A second operation became necessary on Tuesday of this week. The operations, while painful, were not dangerous, and the attending physicians say that he will be able to be about within a few days.

Papers Have Right To Refuse Advertising

Court Rules That Objectionable Matter May Be Declined, Despite Previous Contract.

ST. PAUL, Aug. 16.—That newspapers have a right to decline advertising when they deem it objectionable, even if it is submitted to them under a yearly contract, is the effect of a decision handed down today in the District Court here. The case came up when a local department store was sued by a local paper to recover money due under a yearly contract, which the store management had declared void because certain portions of its advertising copy had been rejected by the paper.

Joy Rider Compelled To Pension Victim

In Lieu of Jail Sentence, Speeder Must Pay Girl $30 a Month Until Recovery.

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 16.—Instead of sending J. S. McNutt, a convicted joy rider, to prison, Judge Wilbur, of the Superior Court, suspended a five-year sentence over him to-day, on condition that he pay $30 a month until she recovers to Miss Olive Davis, a young woman injured when McNutt's machine was wrecked. Physicians say Miss Davis' injuries are permanent.

The girl, in a plaster cast, testified to-day that McNutt was speeding while intoxicated.

Creepy Glide Brings New York Team Applications to Teach New Dance.

ONSET, MASS., Aug. 16.—The "tangoes," "hugs," "trots," "grapevine" and other similar dances have been cast into darkness by the creation introduced this afternoon at the local dancing casino by a New York couple. It is called the "pussy sneak," and is danced with the rubber-soled shoes commonly worn at the seaside.

The "pussy sneak" is a creepy sort of dance, with a few glides, but catchy and the New York team that "put the stunt on" had several applications tonight to teach it.

SUPREME TEST COMES AS STATE TRAINS GUNS ON FRANK'S CHARACTER

Defendant Will Take the Stand Early in Week to Give His Account of His Movements on Day Mary Phagan Was Killed.

ATTORNEYS SEEKING TO PROVE A COMPLETE ALIBI

Believed That Case Will Stand or Fall on Efforts of Prosecution to Prove Its Charge of Immorality Against the Accused.

BY AN OLD POLICE REPORTER.

The third week of the Frank trial came to an end at noon Saturday.

The defense has not yet concluded its case, but confidently expects to finish within the next day or two.

Its last card, and one of its biggest, will be the defendant's statement. This statement is scheduled for the early part of this week.

It will mark the climax of the defense's case, just as Conley's story marked the climax of the State's.

It became more and more evident as the case progressed during the past week that the defense is pitting Frank squarely against Conley—that it is to be Frank's life or Conley's life for little Mary Phagan's, snuffed out cruelly nearly four months ago in the National Pencil Factory.

Frank's statement on the stand, which the law permits him to make, but not under oath, and which may be accepted by the jury, either in whole or in part, in preference to all the sworn testimony, will be matched against the story the negro told so dramatically and with such frightful emphasis soon after the case got under way.

Into the negro's story, moreover, was injected the question of Frank's general character, particularly in one unmentionable direction, and this the defense will undertake to offset completely and finally.

More than a hundred witnesses have been summoned to testify to Frank's good character, and these include men and women from every walk of life, where it could be shown that such witnesses had come in contact with Frank from time to time in such wise as to be competent judges of his general character.

DALTON'S TESTIMONY IMPEACHED.

Already, the one witness (Dalton) so far introduced by the State to corroborate Conley has been successfully impeached by the defense, and it is likely that others introduced to uphold the negro also will be subjected to impeachment proceedings, if the defense suspects that it may successfully inaugurate the same.

The defense seemingly has realized fully the heavy necessity of breaking down Conley's awful story, not only in direct connection with the murder, but in every phase of it that bears upon the character of the defendant.

As a primary proposition, the advantage in the situation thus set up dwells within the defense.

In the first place, Frank goes to the jury with the presumption of innocence in his favor. The burden is not upon him to make out a case in behalf of himself. It is upon the State to make out a case against him.

Moreover, the only right of appeal attaching to persons indicted for felonies is within the defense. Once the State loses, it is lost forever.

The State must allege and prove the guilt of the defendant "beyond a reasonable doubt," and fight right up to that limit.

If there remains a reasonable doubt of Frank's guilt, after the last word has been said to the jury, Frank, under the law, is entitled to it, and if the trial jury fails to award it, a court of review will remedy the legal wrong thus inflicted upon him.

ALL STATE TESTIMONY SWORN.

The State, moreover, must submit every bit of its evidence, to the last shred or patch, under oath.

The defense, on the contrary, may clear itself upon testimony not one word of which is sworn to.

The State's star witness, Conley, also comes into court a confessed accessory after the fact of the murder, a confessed falsifier in numerous conflicting statements as to his knowledge of and connection with the crime, and accompanied by a well established jail record fearfully and wonderfully made up.

His is a much harder story to hold up than Frank's, viewing the two stories generally and in their broader personal aspects.

Even without Conley, to be sure, the State still has a circumstantial case against Frank that might compel considerable attention and respect, but there are few people who seemingly believe that it alone would be sufficiently strong to convict.

It probably is a realization of the State's tremendous task, involved in the holding together of Conley's story, that has caused

Trial Will Last Through Week, Declare Men Who Have Followed It.

the defense to train its every gun squarely upon it, for upon Conley's story will the State be forced to stand or fall eventually.

One of the curious things about the Frank case is the way the question of his general character got into the pleadings.

Theoretically, the defense alone may put the defendant's character in issue—it being contemplated by the law that no man shall be required, without his own consent, to answer more than one charge at one and the same time.

And so far as legal strategy and astuteness is concerned, the State ouegenera lthe defense in the matter of getting Frank's character before the jury.

Had Conley, the State's star witness, ben a man, even a negro, of respectability and approximately good previous record, the necessity of attaching to Frank the charge of utter depravity might not have seemed so pressing. But Frank's previous good record seemed so well established, and his standing generally was thought to be so high, that it contrasted rather painfully with the record of the main witness of all others (Conley) set up for the defndant's undoing.

The State doubtless knew that the unspeakable portion of Conley's evidence was primarily inadmissible, but it also knew that the defense would be taking rather a long chance to move its rejection when tendered.

In that event, a sinister and certainly dangerous impression would have been left upon the mind of the jury.

So the State deliberately drew out of Conley the unmentionable charge, which, in addition to the murder charge, undoubtedly made absolutely necessary the injection of Frank's character in issue.

The defense, in not objecting to the admission of the evidence last cited when it was first offered, may have been moved by the idea that it would, in the cross-examination of Conley, so break him down that it still might save itself the necessity of pleading Frank's good character—that it would even be able to make the frightful charge of perversion act as a boomerang on Conley!

Defense Objects too Late.

Seemingly, that idea, if it ever existed, was dissipated as the Conley cross-examination proceeded, however, for eventually the defense DID move to strike out the evidence, but at that time it was too late.

Having walked into the trap set by the State, if it indeed was a trap, the defense could not very well extricate itself save by pleading Frank's complete good character, and thus in a sweeping way dispose of the specific charge lodged against Frank by Conley, in addition to the murder charge.

Once committed to the necessity of establishing Frank's good character, however, the defense went at it in no half-hearted way.

It summoned indiscriminately every employee of the National Pencil Factory, male and female, old and new, and with unanimous voice they testified willingly and thoroughly that the defendant's general character is good.

In addition to these witnesses, business men, former college professors and classmates, and dozens of others fell into line with the same line of evidence.

The State now stands, therefore, where it must close up the gap between its primary allegation, depending alone upon Conley's word so far, and the absolute proof of his sinister story.

If the State in rebuttal is able to prove conclusively that Frank is the thing Conley has labeled him, the State's case will go to the jury dangerously formidable.

If it fails to substantiate and corroborate Conley, it will go to the jury greatly weakened.

To overcome the fine showing as to Frank's good character made by the defense the State must bring forth witnesses in rebuttal that can not be impeached.

The impression throughout Atlanta is that to fail in the establishment and corroboration of Conley's story by witnesses of integrity and standing will be to fail in a crisis heavily important to the State now.

Liability Becomes Asset.

Strange to say—there are so many strange things to say in this surpassingly strange Phagan story—one of the State's apparent weaknesses is proving, in one direction, to be one of its greatest elements of strength.

The deefnse's strenuous insistence that Conley's remarkable story is impossible is one reason why a lot of people are saying that it is impossible. Conley may have manufactured it out of the whole cloth.

If it is a lie, it is a lie too devilishly cunning for a negro of Conley's limited mentality to conjure or carry in his own mind in such remarkable detail, these people hold. If the negro were only less sure of everything, if he had wabbled dangerously under the terrific grilling administered by Luther Z. Rosser, if he had broken down or contradicted himself in any essential detail once he got to the witness stand, it now would be an easier thing for many people, fair-minded enough, too, to believe the negro's tale a mass of lies from start to finish!

And the danger to the defense here is that if Conley's story sticks in the minds of the jury, even in fractional part, it probably just as well stick in its entirety, so far as the hope of acquittal upon this trial is concerned.

In other words, many people are arguing to themselves that the negro, no matter how hard he tried and no matter how generously he was coached, still neevr could have framed up a story like the one he told, unless there was somewhere in it some foundation in fact.

And if there remains the impression of even a little foundation in fact, the defense is damaged beyond repair.

And so it gets back to where it started, and to where it will end—it is Conley pitted against Frank!

The State, with the burden of proof to carry, appears to have considerably more of an uphill fight on its hands than the deefnse has, and yet the very nature of both fights—uncompromising, and neither asking nor giving quarter—makes it something of a toss-up, really, as to which actually, and as a matter of fact, has the harder task to perform.

Undoubtedly, the defense expects to profit much through its insistence that the time element, as set up in Conley's story, constitutes a most vital and compelling factor in determining the truth or falsity of the entire story.

Relv on State Witnesses.

It is rather odd, too, that the defense should be relving upon the State's witnesses in this matter quite as much as upon its own. It will seek to use generously the State's witnesses to the State's embarrassment—through the discrediting of Conley's story—in several differeat directions.

The deefnse is seeking to show how utterly absurd Conley's story is from Frank's point of view, by setting up these incompatible things:

That Mary Phagan (Conley's testimony) reached the pencil factory sufficiently well in advance of Monteen Stover (Conley's testimony) to go up to Frank's office, get her pay, be lured to a room in the rear and killed, notwithstanding the fact that Miss Stover (Conley's and Miss Stover's testimony) reached the factory at 12:05. And this despite the fact that Mary Phagan could not have been in the factory before 12:12, in any event, as shown by Mrs. Coleman (Mary's mother), George Epps, a motorman, and a conductor.

To get around this state of things, set up for the most part by the State's own witnesses, the State already has suggested, by a line of examination probebly to be amplified, that the car upon which Mary Phagan came into town on Saturday, April 26, was running AHEAD of scheduled time, and that the litle girl did, as a matter of fact, reach the factory before 12:12, and that the clock in the factory, by which both Miss Stover and Conley testified as to the time, was running SLOW on the day of the crime.

In other words, to meet its own witnesses' statements, the State will move backward the time of the street car and move forward the time of the office clock!

If the State can do that, which looks like a big job, it will eliminate the dangerous time element in one direction, at least; but if it can not do that, it will find itself in a most trying position.

And whether it now can get away from its own established time element is one of the very prettiest problems involved in the entire case thus far!

Again, the defense will insist that the time element cuts in another direction most favorably in Frank's behalf, when it will show by Conley's evidence that the disposing of Mary Phagan's body began at 12:56, but that Frank was seen at the corner of Alabama and Whitehall streets at 1:10, waiting for a car. The latter fact is testified to by Miss Helen Curran positively, and she is unimpeachable.

The defense contends that the body of Mary Phagan could not have been disposed of, and the things done that Conley alleges were done, within the fourteen minutes of time thus allowed, between the beginning of the work, according to Conley, and the time of Frank's presence two blocks and a half away.

Conley would have been obliged to dispose of the body in the remarkable way he says he did, have written the notes, remained in the wardrobe eight minutes or more, all within the fourteen minutes.

According to the State's own witnesses, Conley was in the wardrobe eight minutes and used six minutes framing the notes. This would have consumed the entire fourteen minutes, without the dead girl's body ever having been touched.

It is admitted among lawyers generally that there is no defense so completely effective as a sustained alibi—which means that the crime alleged was committed in the absence and without the knowledge of the alleged principal to it, or, more properly stated, perhaps, that the crime could not have been committed by the defendant because it would have been a physical impossibility for him to have effected it, in the circumstances of it.

The past week, of course, was the defense's day in court, and it is but fair to say that it made good use of it.

Challenge to State.

It has frankly and aggressively urged Frank's character as a vital fact in his favor, and it thereby challenged the State to do its very worst by way of breaking that character down, if it can.

This attitude upon the part of the defense undoubtedly has had a steadying effect upon the public, too, for it seems at least to have suspended judgment pending the State's rebuttal.

In addition to its insistence upon Frank's good character, the defense unquestionably has given the State serious concern in the way it has brought forward the time element, and that in two separate and distinct directions.

If it successfully maintains either one of its time theories, it will have greatly discredited Conley's story. If it successfully maintains both theories, it will have about discredited the Conley story to the point of complete collapse.

As it was out of order to conclude at the end of the second week of the Frank trial, however, that the State had made out a case that could not be broken down, so it now is out of order to conclude that the defense has broken down the State.

The State for one thing does not appear to be particularly alarmed, either by the injection of Frank's character or by the turning of the time element against the Conley story.

The State, it must be remembered, has not yet entered or disclosed its rebuttal, either of the character evidence or the undermining of its own witnesses as to the time elements stated.

State Seems Confident.

It is perfectly confident of its ability to show that Frank's character is not good, despite the opinions of his friends, business associates and acquaintances; and it will insist, indeed, that as in other depraved characters of the sort it claims Frank to be, his business acquaintances, his relatives and his social intimates would be the very last people of all to discover the truth concerning him.

The State, in seeking to prove Frank a dissolute character, may be forced to the summoning of dissolute characters, with whom he is alleged to have been associated in degrading practices, in order to prove its contention.

Thus witnesses brought out by the State to establish Frank's depravity are apt to be easier marks for impeachment proceedings than witnesses of the ordinary sort, and to that extent the breaking down of Frank's character is pregnant with difficulty.

Nevertheless, the State proposes to establish the fact of Frank's degeneracy by witnesses of sufficient credibility, particularly in the nature of the charge sought to be proved, to get by at least in sufficient numbers to overwhelm the defendant.

If the State can put up even one or two witnesses that can weather the gale of the defense's rights of impeachment, it will have put Frank in a most unenviable position before the jury. If, therefore, it puts up 50 witnesses, and 48 of them get knocked out, there still will remain the two that stood the test!

Here, then, is another pretty problem to be thrashed out: Can the State, in sustaining a charge of degeneracy against Frank, bring forth witnesses to prove it absolutely, and at the same time not bring forth witnesses so much a party to Frank's offense that they will run serious risks in testifying themselves?

A witness who is willing to swear that he saw Frank do thus and so, or was a party to Frank's doing thus and so, if the thus and so is particularly reprehensible, is apt to get on pretty thin ice himself, if he isn't very careful!

The State says it can and will rebut Frank's good character. If it does, Frank is in unutterably bad shape; but if it doesn't, Frank's cause must be helped tremendously.

Girl on Stand Shouts She Would Die for Leo Frank

Employee of Pencil Factory Furnishes Dramatic Incident of Day—Dressing Room Evidence Is Brought Out.

More than one hundred witnesses had been called to testify in defense of Leo M. Frank's character when the third week of the factory superintendent's trial concluded shortly after 1 o'clock Saturday.

Character witnesses occupied most of the time during the four hours of Saturday's session. They displayed a remarkable loyalty to their employer, who is being tried on the charge of being the murderer of little Mary Phagan. Only one of the number, Miss Irene Jackson, gave testimoney in any way prejudicial to the case of Frank.

The character testimony, the tale of the finding of Mary Phagan's envelope and other so-called clews on the first floor of the factory by W. D. McWorth, Pinkerton operative, and the return of Mrs. Rae Frank, mother of the defendant, formed the important features of the day.

Girl Furnishes Incident.

A spectacular incident, which would have been even more amusing than it proved had it not been for the evident sincerity and profound earnestness of the witness, came in the testimony of Miss Sarah Barnes, one of the pencil factory employees.

"I'd die for Mr. Frank if they'd let me!" she exclaimed almost the instant she had composed herself in the witness chair. Attorney Arnold had only time to ask her the formal question: "Do you know Leo M. Frank, the defendant in this case?" before she launched into a eulogistic description of the young factory superintendent that left her breathless at the end of five minutes.

The attorney sought to interject another of the formal questions prescribed by law, but by the time she had caught her breath and was engaged in telling her willingness to lay down her life, if need be, to prove the guiltlessness of Frank.

Attorney Arnold could not stop her. The court could not dam the flood of words. She had a mind to speak and she was determined to speak without check and without interruption.

"I know Frank couldn't have committed such a terrible deed," she cried, accompanying her declaration with an emphatic brandishing of her folded fan. "I have known him ever since I have been in the pencil factory. He has always been kind to all of the employees and to the girls in particular. He never has done any of these things that have been told about him. He has always been a gentleman.

Willing to Die for Him.

"I've had to fight for him, almost, a number of times since these awful charges have been made against him. I'm willing to fight for him again. I am willing to die in his place."

At this point she turned toward the jury and said:

"You can give me any sort of a death you want. I know he is an innocent man. I just wish that I could make everyone believe in his innocence."

Attorney Arnold succeeded in the brief space of one of the moments when she paused for a fresh start to ask the remainder of the questions he desired, and then gave her to Solicitor Dorsey.

Dorsey met with the same trouble. He tried to get her to say with whom she had talked about the testimony to which she was to swear. Disregarding his question as though if never had been asked, she continued in her encomiums of Frank until the courtroom spectators were convulsed with laughter and the Solicitor filed with disgust at his inability to get the sort of answer he wanted from the girl.

Miss Irene Jackson, daughter of County Policeman A. W. Jackson, was called by the defense as a character witness, but gave testimony on her cross-examination in regard to conduct by Franak which the State has construed as highly improper.

Looked in Dressing Room.

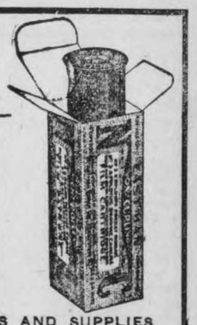
Miss Jackson said that so far as she knew the character of Frank was good and that she never had known him to attempt any liberties with the factory girls. To the Solicitor she admitted, however, that she three times had been in the girls' dressing room when Frank had pushed open the door and looked in.

Once Emmeline Mayfield had been in the room with her, she said; once Mamie Kitchen and once her own sister. Her sister had threatentod to quit on this last occasion, she testified, but had been persuaded against it.

She said that Frank merely pushed the door open, looked in, one one occasion smiled toward Miss Kitchen, and then turned around and walked away. She testified that the girls never were any further in a condition of undress than lacking their overskirt.

Solicitor Dorsey inquired of her in regard to a reported remark of N. V. Darley, general manager, that "if the girls stay with us through this, they will not lose by it." She said she had overheard Darley say this.

Many Employees Called.



The following pencil company employees were called as character witnesses during the day:

Misses Mollie Blair, Ethel Stewart, Sarah Barnes, Corinthia Hall, Ina Hayes, Eula May Flowers, Elma Hayes, Minnie Foster, Obie Dickerson, Gussie Wallace, Annie Osman, Bessie Thrailkill, Allie Denham, Rebecca Carson, Maude Wright, Irene Jackson, and Mesdames Emma Freeman and Ella Thomas.

LEO FRANK IS READY TO REVEAL HIS STORY

Accused Superintendent to Appeal to Reason of the Men Who Will Decide His Fate

COUNSEL FOR DEFENSE DECLARE HE ALONE HAS PREPARED STATEMENT

Defendant Will in No Way Try to Stir Emotion of Jurors, But Will Simply Outline His Contention as to Tragedy.

Leo M. Frank's statement to the jury, delayed from last week by the swarm of character witnesses brought in at the last moment, is the main factor of interest remaining in the trial of the National Pencil Factory superintendent before the rebuttal is taken up by the two attorneys representing the State.

What this statement will be the defendant's lawyers themselves profess not to know. They have had little or no part in framing it, they say. All they know is that he proposes to make one, and that he has been preparing it piecemeal as the trial has progressed and one point after another has arisen.

Whether it will be a formal statement read verbatim, no one knows except the prisoner and possibly his immediate relatives.

If the lawyers know they are keeping it darkly a secret. They believe, they have ventured to say, that it will be more or less informal and that it will be in the nature of an address to the jury and the court based upon the notes that Frank has made from time to time during the trial.

Appeal To Reason.

That there will be little appeal to the emotions of the jurors is practically a foregone conclusion. It is the purpose of Frank, it is understood, to appeal directly to the reason and common sense of the twelve men—to outline to them as he has outlined to his own attorneys the weak points or improbabilities in the negro Conley's story.

As well as this, it is his intention to picture to them his every movement during the entire day and to represent the physical impossibility of his having committed the crime and disposed of the body as Conley describes, if his alibi as set up by a score of witnesses is accepted by the jury.

The statement will embrace much to which he testified at the Coroner's inquest. But there will be much more. He will go into some things on which his own lawyers have not touched. The statement practically is certain to form a most remarkable and most important portion of the record of the trial's proceedings.

What promised to provide a sensation during the presentation of the defendant's case may collapse into nothing. This is W. H. Mincey and his startling declaration that he saw Jim Conley on the afternoon of the murder, and that Jim bragged to him that he had killed a girl that afternoon and didn't want to kill anyone else.

Appear to Doubt Mincey.

The attorneys for the defense have not been willing to say whether or not they would call Mincey. They have appeared to entertain some doubts of Mincey's credibility. Reuben Arnold said Saturday that he was not prepared to say that he would or would not call Mincey.

If Mincey's story could be corroborated it would furnish a most effective weapon in winning the battle for Frank's life. Granting its truthfulness, it is the most definite and direct evidence of the entire case, embracing as it does a virtual confession of murder on the part of the negro.

Mincey said he met Conley at Electric avenue and Carter street Saturday afternoon, April 26. Conley was partially intoxicated and becoming angered at Mincey's insistence that he take out an insurance policy threatened the agent and boasted of killing a girl shortly before, according to the affidavit made by Mincey.

If Mincey goes on the stand his testimony will become the target for some of the State's strongest rebuttal. That and the character of Frank will divide the attention of the Solicitor. He will not bother about much else. He is content to let Conley's story, as bolstered and strengthened by the testimony of detectives and other witnesses, stand as a sufficient rebuttal for practically all of the evidence that the defense has brought out in favor of Frank. The Solicitor believes that when the arguments go before the jury the members will be willing to accept the story of the negro as against that of Frank.

After Frank's Character.

Dorsey, however, has been unceasing in his efforts to wreck Frank's character. He has branded him as a degenerate and a criminal of the worst type. The introduction of character witnesses by the defense has given him a new opening, and he proposes to take every advantage of it. His attitude is shown in a colloquy between himself and Judge Roan.

"How far do you intend to go in that line of testimony?" inquired the judge.

"Just exactly as far as your honor will let me," Dorsey replied.

Judge Roan remonstrated that the Solicitor General should not seek to introduce evidence that he knew was illegal. The Solicitor smiled.

Dorsey has about twenty witnesses he will use in an effort to destroy all of the favorable impression created by the 100 character witnesses who have testified for Frank so far in the trial. From some of them he has promised to produce testimony of the most sensational sort.

One young girl, Dewey Hewell, not yet out of her teens, was brought all the way from Cincinnati last Friday for the express purpose of testifying against the young factory superintendent.

American Girl Tells Of 'Walloping' Prince

"I Kicked Radziwill Out of His Auto for Kissing My Hand too Rapturously," She Says.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Miss Elizabeth Frewen, of Philadelphia, arrived from London to-day on the Oceanic with a Pekinese named Bo Sing, a gift from Prince Albert Radziwill, who married Miss Dorothy Deacon, a Boston society girl, some years ago.

"Just because I tell you the Prince gave me Bo Sing," said Miss Frewen, "don't think he is a friend of mine. Just before I left London I walloped him on the jaw and kicked him out of his automobile for kissing my hand too rapturously."

Miss Frewen is six feet tall. She was met at the pier by Joseph Daley, of Boston, to whom she is to be married next month.

Father Sells Girl at Auction in Detroit

Authorities Take Steps to Have Marriage of Syrian Child to Turk Annulled.

DETROIT, MICH., Aug. 16.—The marriage license department of the County Clerk's office has taken steps to nullify an auction sale of Marie Aman, a Syrian girl, only 15 years old. Her father made the sale. There were half a dozen bidders.

The girl had been in the country only seven weeks, and was brought here by her father expressly to be sold. A Turk, Mehammed Haj Saleem, was the successful bidder.

The bargain was sealed immediately by the reading of an Oriental marriage service. The girl had a sweetheart who could not bid high enough to win her.

Triplets in Home Where 6 Twins Live

President Wilson Is Honored Three Times in the Naming of the Babies.

LAONIA, WIS., Aug. 16.—Three pairs of twins and a set of triplets is the record that Mrs. Joseph Checota, of this town, boasts. The triplets will be named Woodrow, Wilson and W. W. Joseph, in honor of the President.

The father believes this is a record that will stand for a long time to come.

Mr. and Mrs. Checota have been married six years and in that time have had nine children. All but one are living.

Custom Officers Seize Davis Trophy

International Tennis Cup, Just Won by America Is Held Up for Duty.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—The Davis cup, international tennis trophy, recently won in England by the American team, was seized by customs officials when it reached here to-day on the liner Mauretania, but Collector of the Port Mitchell intimated to-night that the prize would probably be released within a short time.

The basis of the seizure was the officials claim that although the trophy was originally American property, it had been abroad so long that the payment of duty might be necessary.

Woman Not Man's Equal, Says Prelate

Archbishop Says He Wouldn't Dare Say Suffrage Agitation Is Against Church Rules.

MILWAUKEE, Aug. 16.—"I do not believe the Creator intended the position of woman in the world should be the same as that of man," said Archbishop Sebastian G. Messmer, of this city, in an address to the Catholic Press Association to-day.

"But I would not dare make the positive statement that agitation for woman suffrage is against the rules of the church. The church has not taken any definite stand and until it does each individual has a right to think, talk and act as he sees fit."

Weds Model; Loses Home; Goes to Work

'I Should Worry,' Remarks Rich Retired Merchant's Son When Disowned.

WORCESTER, MASS., Aug. 16.—Because William A. Lyttle, Jr., son of Colonel W. A. Lyttle, a wealthy retired merchant and erstwhile member of the Governor's Council, eloped with Miss Thyra Linea Johnson, a 19-year-old artist's model of this city, to Putnam., Conn., he has been disowned by his father.

Colonel Lyttle has ordered his son to give the girl up. Disregarding that mandate, young Lyttle brought matters to a crisis by quietly slipping out of town a few days ago with his sweetheart and having the matrimonial knot tied.

"I should worry," said young Lyttle when he was told of his father's decision, and then he promptly started with his bride to Detroit, where he will learn the automobile business.

HOMESTEADER IS BLOWN FROM HIS BED BY STORM

PIERRE, S. DAK., Aug. 16.—Otto Everhardt, a young bachelor homesteader, arrived at the home of a neighbor dressed only in a two-foot piece of blanket, which he said was all that remained of his household property as a result of the storm which swept this section. Everhardt said that the tornado struck his shack while he was in bed, carried away the shanty and bed and left him uninjured. Other homesteaders suffered heavy losses, reports indicate.

Grape Juice vs. Milk

Secretary Bryan Does Not Have Undivided Support of Cabinet in Choice of Beverage.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—Grape juice as a Cabinet beverage has gone into eclipse, in spite of the prominence given to it by Ciceronian eloquence as being the only nectar of the gods.

A canvass of the preferences of other members of the Cabinet beside that of Mr. Bryan, whose favorite beverage is well known, disclosed the fact that plain old milk, sweet and buttermilk, is ahead in the race. President Wilson prefers orange juice to that of the luscious grape.

Secretary of the Navy Daniels is one of the sweet milk champions and has a fellow champion in Secretary of Labor William B. Wilson.

Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo leans toward buttermilk.

Attorney General McReynolds and Secretary of War Garrison are said to be ardent milk advocates.

Secretary of Agriculture David Houston is one of the two members that find enjoyment in pure unfermented grape juice.

Secretary of the Interior Lane prefers hot tea, while Secretary of Commerce Redfield likes his tea cold.

Charges Sister Stole Her Husband's Love

California Woman Names Beautiful Relative In Her Plea for a Divorce.

SUSANVILLE, CAL., Aug. 16.—Charging that her younger and prettier sister had stolen her husband's love, Mrs. Celia Rundquist Schaefer asked Judge Monroe for a divorce from Marin Schaefer, a fruit grower and rancher. Miss Rose Rundquist, sister of the plaintiff, was named as co-respondent.

Mrs. Schaefer testified that her sister admitted that her husband was a "grand man," and that he showered attentions upon the sister and admitted making love to her. The plaintiff also claimed that she had to support both for two years.

Judge Monroe held that there was insufficient corroborating evidence and instructed the applicant for divorce to get more witnesses.

AUTO AS MATADOR SAVES FARMER FROM MAD BULL

ELGIN, ILL., Aug. 16.—Matadors may be succeeded by automobiles as bullfighters. This was proven when Peter Green, a farmer, 60 years old, of Huntley, was being gored by a bull in one of his pastures. His screams attracted an automobile party of three men, who were in the road. They witnessed the attack for a moment, then the driver of the big touring car made a dash into the pasture and after the bull.

The horn was tooted and tooted, and the bull finally was driven away from the helpless farmer. Three of Green's ribs were broken, but he will recover.

Confusion in Study Of Grammar Dispelled

Committee's Report on Standardizing Nomenclature Makes Good Impression.

COLORADO SPRINGS, Aug. 16.—Standardization of grammatical nomenclature, which will do away with the confusion in the study of English, as well as other languages, in American schools, has been effected by a committee of fifteen, of which Professor Hills, of Colorado College, was a member.

The committee made a report to the National Education Association in convention at Salt Lake City and its adoption without amendment virtually insures the following of the committee's recommendations in all schools and colleges.

According to Professor Hills, it was found that in the sentence "John is good," the word "good" was called by nine different names in 25 grammars; the word "John" in "This is John," was called by nineteen terms, and in "We made John president," the word "president" was given eighteen different names in the textbooks examined.

GIRLS BARE SECRETS OF FLIGHT WITH DIGGS AND CAMINETTI

Blushing and With Downcast Eyes They Tell Jury Pitiful Story of Their Downfall

FEAR OF EXPOSURE OF THEIR RELATIONS WITH MEN LED TO ELOPEMENT

Marsha Warrington Declares Both She and Lola Norris Had Promises of Marriage When They Embarked on Trip---Firm Under Cross-Fire.

MARSHA WARRINGTON and Maury T. Diggs, whom she accuses on a white slavery charge, as they appeared in court. Below is Lola Norris, the other girl witness in noted case.

BOTH PROMISED MARRIAGE, GIRLS TESTIFY

Diggs said he would get a divorce from his wife and marry me. He also said Mr. Caminetti was going to get a divorce from his wife and marry Miss Norris.---From the testimony of Marsha Warrington.

Mr. Caminetti told me he was not living happily with his wife and he promised that he would get a divorce and marry me.---From the testimony of Lola Norris.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 16.—The case of Maury I. Diggs, formerly State Architect of California, charged before the United States Court under the Mann white slavery act because he took pretty, dainty Marsha Warrington, of Sacramento, to Reno, Nev., leaving behind a beautiful wife and a little daughter, has passed the stage of revelation and disclosure and now has come to the technicalities of defense.

It will be recalled that on March 10 last the tea tables of the West were rattled by the tale that Diggs had run away with Miss Warrington, daughter of a general agent of the Santa Fe, and that F. Drew Caminetti, son of the Commissioner General of Immigration of the United States, had fled from his wife's children at the same time, taking with him Miss Lola Norris, the prettiest girl in the State Library, daughter of one of the oldest and most respected families in the Capital of the State.

Caught in a bungalow at Reno, the United States authorities took over the prosecution.

Becomes National Incident.

Then came the effort at Washington to postpone and suppress that prosecution, with the explosion and resignation of United State District Attorney John L. McNab, the forcing of Cabinet consideration and the administrative fake of sustaining Attorney General McReynolds in theory and rebuking him in fact and procedure. An escapade of love and champagne had been dignified into an event of national importance.

After a struggle that exhausted the entire panel and required a special venire, a jury was sworn, and on Tuesday of this week came the long-expected sacrifice—the appearance of Miss Marsha Warrington before her shearers.

She appeared, a pretty, plump, frightened little thing, 20 years of age, who kept her eyes in her lap and slowly and painfully told, detail on detail, of her meeting with Diggs of the making up of a joy-hunting party of four with Miss Norris and Caminetti; of her yielding to her lover's importunities in his office; of trips that extended near and far, joy riding to destruction.

Then she told of how Diggs and Caminetti had, playing upon their fears of arrest and exposure, induced and coerced her and Miss Norris to fly with them to Nevada. There was no relation, however intimate, no situation, however delicate, that the pretty miss was not forced to disclose.

Terrified Into Trips.

Next came Miss Norris, tall, willowy and prepossessing, and she, too, clearly, distinctly, compellingly, told how she had loved not wisely and how she and Miss Warrington had been cajoled, persuaded and terrified into accompanying Diggs and Caminetti to Reno, where her own downfall was completed.

There has been something of corroboration of the love tale and the completion of a hard case under the letter of the Mann law, which punishes those who take women from one State to another for the purpose of making them mistresses and concubines.

And now the defense has stated its case. It does not intend to deny the stories of the two girls, but will rest its hopes on the theory that there was "no persuasion" to leave California, or "intent" to force the young women into concubinage in Nevada; but that all fled Sacramento in the same fear of exposure of their liaison and arrest and disgrace following the exposure.

Both Miss Warrington and Miss Norris had to submit to the most searching questions during their appearance on the witness stand. The two girls occupied the stand from Tuesday to Friday. The transcript of their testimony virtually tells the complete story of the escapade that led to the indictment of Diggs and Caminetti and made the flight to Reno eventually result in a crisis in the Cabinet of President Wilson. On it the Government proposes to convict the two defendants.

Love for Wife Forgotten.

"How often during the two weeks prior to your departure to Reno did Mr. Diggs discuss with you his relations with his wife?" was one of the first questions asked Miss Warrington by Special Prosecutor Roche.

"Several times," replied Miss Warrington, giving the answer in such low voice that Judge VanFleet had to tell her to speak up louder.

Q. Did he say anything concerning himself and yourself in the future?—A. Yes.

Q. How often did he refer to his regard for you?—A. He spoke of it very often and said that he cared more for me than he did for his wife.

Q. Did you believe what he said?—A. I did.

Q. Did Diggs demonstrate his affection—I mean did he ever kiss you?—A. Yes, he did.

Q. Did he discuss marriage with you?—A. He did.

Q. What did he say about marriage?—A. He said he would divorce his wife and marry me.

Q. How often did he discuss marriage with you?—A. I don't know.

Q. More than once?—A. Yes.

Best to Leave City.

Q. Now, tell the jury what the defendant said that resulted in your deciding to leave Sacramento.—A. Well, he said his father was coming up from Berkeley to prosecute us; that there was talk about us all over town; that it was best for all of us to leave the city, and that it was the advice of his attorney. He said he had paid an attorney large sums for his advice on the situation.

Talks of Reform School.

Q. Now go on and state what you said and what the others said, starting with the first discussion.—A. Well, Mr. Diggs said we would be sent to the reform school; that there was going to be something published in the papers; that we would be tried in the juvenile court and there was a warrant out for our arrest, and if we did not go we would be put through the third degree.

Q. By whom?—A. He didn't say. The policeman, I suppose.

Q. What did Caminetti say?—A. He didn't say much. He just agreed.

Q. What did you and Lola Norris say?—A. We said we couldn't go.

Q. What part of the time of your meetings was taken up with these discussions?—A. Most all of the time.

Q. Did you agree to leave for Reno before Saturday, March 9?—A. No.

Q. Did Miss Norris?—A. No.

Q. Did you make any statement as to the effect of your leaving on your father or mother?—A. I said I couldn't go and leave my father; it would simply kill him. He said it would all come out in the papers anyway, and I might as well go.

Would Kill Her Mother.

Q. What did Miss Norris say about her mother?—A. She said it would kill her if she left.

Q. Did the men say anything about that?—A. Diggs said her mother would get over it.

Q. How soon did they say you should get away?—A. Right away.

Q. Did they say that each time you discussed going?—A. Yes; they said we had to go immediately every time.

Q. What time did you meet Diggs and Caminetti at the Saddle Rock restaurant the evening you left for Reno?—A. About 8:30 o'clock.

Q. Did Diggs say anything about marrying you there?—A. He said he would get a divorce from his wife and marry me.

Q. Did he say anything about any action his wife might take?—A. Regarding a divorce, do you mean? He didn't say she would get a divorce.

Q. Did Diggs say what Caminetti would do?—A. He said Mr. Caminetti was going to get a divorce from his wife and marry Miss Norris.

Q. Who did the talking?—A. Mr. Diggs. He said we might go to Salt Lake City, Reno or Los Angeles. He finally decided Reno.

Q. Was anything said about what would happen if you didn't go?—A. He said we had to go; that we couldn't back out now.

Q. Did you protest?—A. We said we would stay there and take our chances, and he repeated it was too late to back out then.

Q. What was said about tickets?—A. First we talked about buying them ourselves. Mr. Caminetti said it would be better to have the girls buy them. Finally Diggs said he would get them.

Q. Was any more money given to anybody by one of the four?—A. Mr. Caminetti gave Miss Norris some money.

Q. How much?—A. I don't know.

Girl Kept Money.

Q. To buy tickets with? What did he say when he gave her the money?—A. He told her to keep it.

Q. How long after Caminetti left did you stay in the restaurant?—A. About an hour.

Q. What did you talk about?—A. About Mr. Caminetti and whether he would get the money, and our destination.

Q. How were the berths occupied?—A. Miss Norris and Mr. Caminetti had the upper and Mr. Diggs and myself had the lower berth.

Q. What baggage did the party have?—A. Mr. Diggs had a suitcase and I had a grip.

Q. Was the baggage checked?—A. No.

Q. Did you see the tickets?—A. I saw Mr. Diggs give them to the conductor.

Q. Where did you go from the restaurant?—A. The depot.

Q. Did you wait in the depot for Caminetti?—A. No; he was to return to the restaurant. There was some talk about going on an earlier train. We waited in a little street car waiting room near the depot. Miss Norris stayed in there when the train came in. I walked out with Mr. Diggs and told him to go and I would stay there. He said, "No," that he thought too much of me to have me stay there. The train finally left.

Caminetti Gets Money.

Q. Then Mr. Diggs went to the waiting room and telephoned?—A. Yes, to Mr. Caminetti, I think.

Q. Then what did you do?—A. We returned to the Saddle Rock and waited half an hour for Mr. Caminetti. When he came, he said he had the money and would go on the next train.

Q. Then you did what?—A. We went to the depot.

Q. What was said about tickets?—A. Mr. Diggs said to wait while he got the tickets.

Q. Whom did you wait with?—A. With Lola Norris and Mr. Caminetti.

Q. Then what?—A. When the train came, we got on.

Q. What kind of a car did you get in?—A. A Pullman sleeper.

Q. What part did you go into first?—A. We stood in the car while Mr. Diggs got a drawing room.

Q. Who paid for the drawing room?—A. Mr. Diggs.

Q. Who ordered the porter to make up the berths?—A. Mr. Diggs.

Q. Did the four of you enter the room together?—A. Yes.

Q. How many beds were there in the drawing room?—A. Two berths and the little side bed.

Q. Did you go to bed?—A. Yes.

Q. Right away?—A. Yes.

Tried to Rent House.

Q. Miss Warrington, you recall, do you, going to the Riverside Hotel on the 10th day of March, 1913?—A. I do.

Q. Was that after or before the four of you had your lunch at the cafe?—A. After.

Q. Upon leaving the cafe in Reno, just state to what place the two men went, that is, Mr. Caminetti and Mr. Diggs?—A. They said we could go to the hotel and wait for them and they would try to rent a house.

Q. During the time that you were in Reno with Mr. Diggs and Mr. Caminetti and Miss Norris, were any further statements made by Mr. Diggs as to what he intended to do so far as you were concerned?—A. I don't understand.

Q. Well, I mean so far as marriage was concerned?—A. Yes.

Q. What, if anything, did he say?—A. He said he would get a divorce from his wife and marry me.

Q. And what, if anything, did Mr. Caminetti say in your presence to Miss Norris regarding that subject?—A. He said the same thing.

Q. What room in that bungalow was occupied by you?—A. The front room.

Q. Who else occupied that room with you?—A. Mr. Diggs.

Q. Who occupied the rear room, that is, the north bedroom?—A. Miss Norris and Mr. Caminetti.

Miss Warrington was subjected to a gruelling cross-examination by Nat Coghlan, counsel for Diggs and Caminetti.

Replying to his questions, Miss Warrington explained she was working for her father, general agent of the Santa Fe Railroad at Sacramento, as a stenographer at the time she went to Reno.

"Under what circumstances did you meet Mr. Diggs?" she was asked.

"He was introduced to me by a friend of mine, Mr. Monte Austin," was the girl's reply.

Q. Were you not introduced to Mr. Diggs as Miss Williamson?—A. I could not say?

Q. Did Mr. Austin give you the name of Mr. Diggs?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you at that time know who Mr. Diggs was?—A. I did not.

Q. You did not know whether he was a married or a single man?—A. Mr. Austin told me that he was not living with his wife at that time.

Pair Met Frequently.

Q. When was it that you met Mr. Diggs the next time?—A. The last of October.

Q. Did you meet him frequently after the second time?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember visiting Mr. Diggs and Mr. Caminetti in the city of San Francisco and going to the Grand Hotel during the month of February, 1913?—A. Yes.

Q. And did Mr. Caminetti and Miss Norris stop at the Grand Hotel, the same place, in San Francisco, upon that occasion?—A. Yes.

Q. And the same room was occupied by you and Mr. Diggs upon that night, was it not?—A. Yes.

Q. And Miss Norris and Mr. Caminetti, to your knowledge occupied another room alone in that hotel, did they not?—A. Yes.

Stopped at San Jose.

Q. Upon the second day of February, 1913, you, Mr. Diggs and Miss Norris, did not go in an automobile from San Francisco to San Jose?—A. Yes.

Q. You stopped, did you not, at the New Montgomery Hotel, at San Jose?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember, Miss Warrington, going to Stockton upon a certain Sunday in January, 1913, with Mr. Diggs?—A. Yes.

Q. Didn't you go to the Old Heidelberg there and hire a cottage for the afternoon?—A. I don't remember.

Mr. Coghlan—I will ask you if you do not remember going to Jackson with Mr. Diggs and Miss Norris in the auto of Mr. Diggs upon election night for the purpose of getting Mr. Caminetti—that is to say, election night in November, 1912?—A. Yes, I remember.

Q. Where did you stop at Jackson that night?—A. We didn't stay there. We came right back.

Q. During that trip did you and the other three members of that party drink any intoxicating liquors?—A. Yes, a little.

Q. Is it not a matter of fact that you arrived home on that night about 3 o'clock—I mean the next morning, on the morning of November 4, I believe it was or, at any rate, the morning after election—and that you had been drinking considerably upon the trip?—A. I do not remember what time we returned home; I do not think it was so late as that.

Wanted to Leave Town.

Q. Is it not a matter of fact that you wanted to leave Sacramento by reason of the fact of your condition?—A. No.

Q. And you were frightened at that time, were you?—A. Yes.

Q. Afraid that you might be arrested? Is that correct?—A. That is what Mr. Diggs said, that we were to be arrested the next day.

Q. I am asking you now if you were afraid or were not afraid you would be arrested.—A. Certainly.

Miss Lola Norris made an even better witness for the Government than Miss Warrington, although much of her testimony was simply in corroboration of the testimony of her chum.

"How old are you?" she was asked by Prosecutor Roche upon taking the stand.

"I was 20 the 3d of last August," she replied.

Q. Do you know Maury I. Diggs?—A. Yes.

Q. From when does your acquaintance with him date?—A. Since about the latter part of October, 1912.

Q. At that time where were you employed?—A. In the State Library, Sacramento.

Q. You are acquainted with Drew Caminetti?—A. Yes.

Q. How long have you been acquainted with him?—A. A little over a year.

Knew He Was Married.

Q. Did you know he was a married man?—A. I did.

Q. And did you know Mr. Diggs was a married man?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, Miss Norris, you remember the trip you took to Reno with Mr. Caminetti and Miss Warrington and Mr. Diggs. How many times were you in the habit of meeting together before that time?—A. Three or four times each week.

Q. Did Diggs say anything about his relations with his wife during these meetings?—A. Yes; he said he was not happy with his wife.

Q. How often did he say this?—A. A number of times.

Q. And did Mr. Caminetti say anything about his relations with his wife?—A. Yes.

Q. What did he say?—A. He told me he was not living happily with her.

Q. Did Diggs ever tell you that his relations with his wife were about to be served? What, if anything, did he say upon this subject?—A. Well, I remember on one occasion that I received a telephone message saying that he and Mrs. Diggs had agreed to separate and that she was to apply for a divorce in a few days.

Promised to Marry Her.

Q. Did Mr. Caminetti say anything about his wife and what his plans were respecting her after he went away?—A He said that he would get a divorce from her and marry me.

A. He said that he would get a divorce from her and marry me.

Mr. Roche:

Q. Go on and state what occurred in the drawing room after you entered it?—A. There were two berths on one side, an upper and a lower, and a couch on the other side. I lay down on the couch for a while.

Q. What became of Mr. Diggs and Miss Warrington?—A. They went into a lower berth?

Q. What became of Mr. Caminetti?—A. He entered the upper berth.

Q. You were still lying on the couch?—A. Yes.

Q. How long did you remain there?—A. About half an hour.

Q. Then what did you do?—A. I got into the upper berth.

Q. At whose request?—A. Mr. Caminetti's.

Reached Reno in Morning.

Q. Do you recall what time it was when you reached Reno?—A. It might have been 8 or 9 o'clock the next morning.

Q. Now coming back to the trip to Reno, did you shed any tears on the train?—A. Yes, because I was very unhappy.

Q. How were the rooms occupied at the bungalow you finally rented at Reno?—A. Mr. Diggs and Miss Warrington occupied the front rooms and Mr. Caminetti and I the back room.

Q. At this time had Mr. Caminetti made any declarations of his intention to marry you?—A. Yes; he promised that he would marry me.

Q. When the officer finally arrived with Mr. Martin Beasley, what did you and Miss Warrington do?—A. We cried, but he told us not to worry—that everything would be all right when we returned to our homes and parents.

Q. Was any hilarity indulged in by either Miss Warrington or yourself on this occasion?—A. No. We couldn't laugh, because we were both very unhappy.

Q. Now, Miss Norris, prior to this trip to Reno, had you ever been intimate with any man besides Mr. Caminetti?—A. I had not, and Mr. Caminetti knew it.

—A. I had not, and Mr. Caminetti knew it.

Q. And when you entered into these relations with Mr. Caminetti, you believed that he would marry you?—A. Yes, sir.

Miss Norris was cross-examined by Attorney Robert Devlin, of the defense, former United States District Attorney here.

"Now, Miss Norris, on the trip you took to San Francisco and San Jose," was one of Attorney Devlin's questions, "did not Mr. Caminetti at first object to going, saying his wife was ill in the hospital, and didn't Miss Warrington say, 'You're a piker. We girls have framed this up and you must go along'?"

"I don't remember any such thing," Miss Norris answered.

Q. Did you have anything to drink on this trip?—A. I think I had some lemonade.

Q. Don't you remember that there was considerable drinking done in the party, and that you girls took part in some auto racing with another machine containing theatrical people, members of David Warfield's company?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you remember that when you finally returned to the Grand Hotel it was very late—about 4 o'clock in the morning?—A. No, sir. I had no idea what time it was.

Q. You said you rapped on Miss Warrington's door after you had reached the hotel and that you tried to enter her room. Did she hear you knocking?

Objection interposed by Mr. Roche.

Q. Did you stay in the room all night with Mr. Caminetti after you left the Grand Hotel and went to San Jose—at the hotel in San Jose?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At that time did you rap on Miss Warrington's door?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, after the trip to Jackson did you make another trip to Stockton—you four?—A. Yes, sir.

Registered as His Wife.

Q. Do you remember on this occasion that Mr. Diggs and Miss Warrington retired to a room and were gone for two hours, and that you and Mr. Caminetti retired to another room?—A. I don't remember.

Q. Upon your arrival in Reno, Mr. Caminetti registered at the Riverside Hotel as Mr. Ross and you as Mrs. Ross?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Mr. Diggs as Mr. Enright and Miss Warrington as Mrs. Enright?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, after leaving the hotel and going to the cottage that you occupied, do you remember Mr. Diggs and Miss Warrington going downtown and buying you a night gown?—A. Yes; they returned with one, but I don't know who bought it.

Q. Do you remember after the Reno incident that Miss Warrington heard that Mr. Diggs and his wife were reconciled, and that she remarked: "If I can't get him, he'll go to the penitentiary?"—A. She never said that to me.

Q. Do you remember on one occasion entering the private office of Mr. Diggs in Sacramento when he was alone with Miss Warrington? Do you remember on this occasion Miss Warrington remarked, "What do you think this is—a private show, and why don't you buy tickets?"—A. No, sir.

ENTERS RACE FOR COUNCIL FIFTH WARD

JESSE B. LEE

Well Known Business Man Who Announces His Candidacy for Council.

Atlanta, Ga., Aug. 16, 1913.

To the Voters of the Fifth Ward:

I hereby respectfully announce myself a candidate for Councilman to succeed Hon. J. J. Greer, whose term expires with this year, subject to the action of the city primary.

I was born in the Fifth Ward and have lived in its boundaries all my life. I am reasonably well informed about city affairs and feel that I am in position to render you efficient and intelligent service.

I am the candidate of no clique or faction, and shall always vote for and advocate those measures in Council which, in my opinion, are for the best interests of the people of the city and my ward, regardless of where they come from or who supports them.

I shall not be content to support measures introduced by other people, but shall endeavor to introduce and advocate measures which I have originated for the good of the people.

On all such questions as charter reform, etc., I shall endeavor to ascertain the wishes of my constituents, and then support their will, whether it coincides with my own private and personal views or not.

I shall do my best as your representative, if elected, to render you capable and satisfactory service, always standing for the best thing to be had for the city as a whole and my own section and ward in particular.

I shall appreciate the vote and influence of my many friends and the voters generally of the Fifth Ward.—Adv.

'COURAGE' IS MESSAGE SENT BY HAWTHORNE

Distinguished Prisoner Writes Poem When Told That Attorney General Denied Him Parole.

CONVICTS ARE SYMPATHETIC

Author Gives No Outward Sign of Keen Disappointment, Declares Penitentiary Inmates.

Julian Hawthorne, novelist, poet, philosopher, in the Atlanta Federal prison, was a very characteristic Julian Hawthorne at the moment when he learned that Attorney General McReynolds had denied him the freedom which the parole board recommended and which he had frankly anticipated.

Hawthorne read a newspaper account of the official action. For a long time he stared at the story, which was a very short story. Then, without a word to the men near him, he went into his cellroom, and lay on his cot.

For half an hour he meditated. Then he arose, and wrote a poem that will be published in the next issue of Good words, the prison paper.

The poem is entitled "Courage."

It is a short verse of Hawthorne's typical pentameter style, and chock full of Hawthorne's typical philosophy of optimism.

Hawthorne Keeps Silent.

All this is the story that Hawthorne's fellow prisoners tell of the incident two weeks ago, when the news first came to the prison that the Attorney General had blasted the hopes of the distinguished prisoner. Hawthorne himself would say nothing of it, maintaining a consistent silence concerning his personal affairs, as he has since he first came to the prison.

It is generally considered among the prisoners who have come to know Hawthorne well that he was keenly disappointed at the action of the Attorney General, especially after friends in Washington had assured him that freedom was forthcoming, and after the parole board had acted favorably on his petition for release. It was believed that he had even laid plans for the period of freedom that seemed to be near.

"It hurt him," said one of the prisoners Saturday. "But he has kept it to himself. He never mentions the subject, and it looks as if he resents the mention of it by others. When they say anything about it, he usually laughs, and says nothing.

Prisoners Sympathetic.

"Well, it was only the newspapers who were sure I would get out," he answered once, however, to a man who said he was sorry. "It never was the most certain thing in the world, and I didn't consider it as such."

There were a good many expressions of sympathy, Hawthorne's friends said. The tall old man is a general favorite in the prison. But with it all there is no outward sign of disappointment as he sits in the midst of his fellows on the little hill overlooking the baseball diamond, his sharp face set, his keen eyes squinting as they look out over the bright, bare, sunlit field.

He and Dr. W. P. Morton will be free, by the natural expiration of their terms, in October.

Daniels to Dispense Fresh Air Hospitality

Secretary of the Navy to Keep Country Home Open Throughout Winter.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—Fresh air hospitality will be the slogan Secretary of the Navy and Mrs. Daniels will sound in Washington society next winter, now they have decided to retain "Single Oak," their country place on the outskirts of Washington, as an all-year-round residence.

Despite the distance from the fashionable center of the northwest, the Daniels plan a series of unique country sports to entertain their friends in good old Southern fashion, cross-country tramps, week-end parties when hunting and winter sports will be in order, are included in these plans.

At Christmas a jolly house party will make the old mansion ring from rafters to yule log on the roomy hearth.

John Lind Has Most Unusual Job

But Lind Is Most Unusual Man

Calling Bluffs Is His Specialty

Former Governor John Lind, of Minnesota, who is in Mexico to tell President Huerta that President Wilson disapproves of him an dhis policies.

Former Governor Has No Official Position, but Has Been Selected in Ticklish Diplomatic Work.

A plain man named John Lind is in Mexico City awaiting an opportunity to tell the explosive and dynamic President Huerta that President Wilson, of the United States, disapproves of him and his government.

This man is not the Ambassador of the United States. He has no more an official standing than a Chinese coolie. He is a plain American citizen come to discuss matters.

President Huerta may refuse to see him. The President might tell John Lind to go back to Minnesota whence he came, and still would be on safe ground.

But President Huerta will see him, and will talk to him, and will listen to what he has to say. Because John Lind, as all the world knows, is the personal representative of President Woodrow Wilson. He does not stand for the Government of the United States, nor represent any plan of intervention or anexation. He is merely the ears ad mouth of Woodrow Wilson, who wants to know exactly what is going on and why.

The mission on which President Wilson sent John Lind, former Governor of Minnesota, to Mexico, is one of the most remarkable in diplomatic history.

Holds No Office.

"It is to be pointed out that Mr. Lind holds no office which is recognized between nations," announced dispatches from Washington. "A grave responsibility rests on his shoulders. * * * The administration insisted that it should be made plain that Mr. Lind was acting entirely in an unofficial capacity in his mission to Mexico, but that he possesses most extraordinary powers in speaking for President Wilson is admitted."

It is plain that John Lind is on a most unusual mission, to be successful in which he must be calm, cool, careful, tactful, unruffled and all that. He must be alive to his responsibility. He must expect rebuffs. He must be honest, fearless, sincere.

John Lind's friends say he is all that. His enemies concede that he is every bit of it. President Wilson was certain that John Lind would meet all requirements, and so he sent to St. Paul for him.

John Lind is a former Governor of Minnesota. Years after he had served his first term, the Democrats nominated him again. They wanted him badly, and in the convention mentioned the name of nobody else.

But Lind was on his way to Alaska. He refused to turn back to accept the nomination. He refused to say yes or no. They had disregarded his wishes back home concerning a county option plank in the platform, and he scornfully said nothing to their overtures to come back and be Governor.

Weeks passed. Election time drew near. Politicians in Minnesota were certain that Lind would run. Who ever refused a gubernatorial nomination with certain victory to result from it?

Lind's Refusal Firm.

But when Lind got back, he broke his silence with a firm no. He would have none of the Governorship. And it being too late for the Democrats to rally around anyone else, the Republican Eberhardt won out.

It is the same calm, imperturbable John Lind for whom President Wilson invented a job as his personal representative. An unusual job it was, and President Wilson looked about for an unusual man to fill it. He decided that his friend John Lind was the man.

John Lind comes naturally by his impassiveness. He was born in Sweden and came to America a boy of 11, when his mother and father decided, like hundreds of other Swedes, to move to the new country and try to find their fortunes in the great Northwest. They came over and moved into their log cabin at Goodhue, Minn.

John Lind went to the common schools in his home town until he was 17. Then he taught school himself, saving his money that he might enter the University of Michigan. Then he practiced law, got married, moved to Minneapolis, held the job of receiver in a land office, went to Congress, lost out for re-election after three terms, served as lieutenant and quartermaster in the Twelfth Minnesota Volunteers during the war with Spain, ran for Governor and was defeated, all before 1898.

But when he came back from the war, the pleased Democrats named him as their candidate for Governor, and won with him. All Minnesota knew him by that time as a calm, self-contained, capable, good-hearted lawyer who never beat about the bush and who usually managed to call the other fellow's bluff. Out in Minnesota they like that kind of fellow.

Takes Defeat Calmly.

In 1900, a bad year for Democrats, he was beaten for re-election. John Lind took his defeat calmly. He just stuck around, practiced law, ran for Congress again, and was elected. After retirement here, he worked plainly and simply and prosperously until President Wilson, knowing him for a worker and a plain-talking, hard-fisted person, sent for him to go to Mexico. It was in the interim, about 1910, that he refused the offer of Minnesota Democrats to make him Governor again.

Mr. Lind is a man of action, cool-headed, alert, and a fighter; but above all he is silent and inscrutable. It is this quality which is going to stand him in good stead in the present situation, and it is the quality which no doubt proved very forceful in moving President Wilson to appoint him.

In all the words of criticism of Mr. Lind's mission to Mexico—and there have been many to criticise the President's course—there has been no hint of disssatisfaction with the personal qualities of the man. It is pointed out that Mr. Lind's mission in Mexico will fail. He is going to tell President Huerta that President Wilson disapproves of him and his government. But none has said that it will fail because of his personality, and it is certain that it will not fail because the President's representative talks too much. If it is to be a game of bluff, John Lind is the man to play it.

Webster's Old Home Restored by Society

Preparations Are Made for Celebration of Rehabilitation of Birthplace of Statesman.

FRANKLIN, N. H., Aug. 16.—The ancient New Hampshire farmhouse in which Daniel Webster was born has been reset on its old foundations and restored to look as it did in the eighteenth century when Webster was a small boy, and preparations have been made to celebrate its rehabilitation. It is in the town of Franklin, and the celebration will take place August 28.

It is expected that President Wilson will attend and deliver an address. Samuel W. McCall, former Congressman from Massachusetts, who was the principal speaker at the hundredth anniversary of Webster's graduation from Dartmouth College, will speak.

Coffee Tastes Cause Break in Family

Wife Liked Hers Strong, Husband Preferred It Weak, so She Entered Suit.

ALLENTOWN, PA., Aug. 16.—Black coffee and the high cost of living wrecked the romance of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Hauser, of Catasauqua, who were married three years ago, when he was 63 and she was 43, each embarking in matrimony the second time. The wife, Zenobia, has started divorce proceedings.

Mrs. Hauser says she was used from life with her first husband to good black coffee. Hauser wanted his coffee as weak as dishwater, and also objected to the bills she ran up at the store for her favorite beverage. The rackets that followed got on her nerves to such an extent that she desires to resume the state of single blessedness.

The court allowed her $6 a week temporary alimony.

State Has Turkey Farm to Cut Price

Ohio Goes Into Poultry Business When Cost of Thanksgiving Birds Soar.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, Aug. 16.—The State of Ohio is going into the turkey raising business. Kind o' forced into it, as it were, because of the high price of the favored Thanksgiving bird and the demand from State institutions for the bird.

The experiment was tried out a little the last year, and so successful did it prove that this year practically in all of the State institutions where any chickens are kept turkeys have been added.

The price of turkeys has been gradually soaring until they have become almost too expensive for even the State of Ohio to buy, and rather than permit the wards of the State to go hungry on Thanksgiving Day the employees of the different institutions began the work of hatching them.

Rivals David Harum As a Horse Trader

But Youth Is Forced to Pay Back Money He Got for a 'Frozen Tail.'

INDIANAPOLIS, Aug. 16.—William H. Schmidt, 17, a horse trader, was directed to give back $70 he accepted from Tom Cavanaugh for a "frozen tail" horse, and return the horse to Tom Shroyer, a liveryman, when his case was heard in court.

Schmidt was charged with false pretenses, in that he represented the horse to have a useful and active fly chaser. As a matter of fact, the swatting appendage was merely ornamental and utterly useless. Schmidt said he did not know the horse had a broken tail.

"Why that horse was as helpless as a baby," asserted Mrs. Cavanaugh. "We had to carry along a fly brush as well as a buggy whip everywhere we went."

Returns $1,000 Gems And Gets $1 Reward

Laundry Girl Is Not Even Thanked When She Returns Diamonds.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—For returning $1,000 worth of jewelry to its owner, Miss Ella Veronica Shea, of No. 969 Putnam avenue, Brooklyn, was rewarded with a dollar.

Miss Shea works in a laundry. While unpacking a laundry bag received from Mrs. I. Rodberg, of No. 635 Decatur street, she found four diamond rings and a diamond lavalliere.

"The shock which Mrs. Rodberg got when she received the jewelry was so great she forgot to thank me," said Miss Shea yesterday. "I had scarcely got back to the office when a man came running after me with an envelope in which was a note of thanks and—a dollar."

MORE THAN 300 BILLS PASSED BY LEGISLATURE; GOVERNOR LAUDS WORK

Act for Equalization of Taxes Is Regarded of Supreme Importance, Meaning Millions of Added Revenue to Ga. Each Year.

Measure Was Passed Only After One of Most Dramatic Fights General Assembly Has Known. Will Revolutionize System.

The 1913 session of the General Assembly of Georgia, which adjourned Thursday night, passed more than three hundred bills. Of these more than 250 were local bills, designed to relieve conditions existinfi in individual counties, and not operative in any other county. The remaining ones were general bills and local bills of general application.

Practically all of the measures have been engrossed and sent to Governor Slaton's office, and need only the signature of the Chief Executive of the State to become laws.

Governor Slaton has already signed some of the more important bills. He signed the Lipscomb-Miller-Anderson tax bill, to be known as the Lipscomb act, within a day after it passed the House, and Friday he signed the bill giving mothers equal rights with fathers to the custody of minor children.

Other bills received the official O. K. Saturday, but the great majority of them will not be signed until the coming week.

Of the 50 or more general bills that passed both branches of the Legislature, 15 are of importance, and their effect will be generally felt throughout the State.

Governor Praises Work.

They have been praised by Governor Slaton, Speaker Burwell, of the House, and President Anderson, of the Senate, as comprising one of the best Legislatures the State has had since the Civil War. They have passed five tax measures that will revolutionize the taxation system of the State, and add millions to the revenues; they have raised the standard of physicians in the State and centralized the control of practicing doctors; they have heard the plea of Georgia mothers and enacted a law that places her on a par with the father and recognizes her ability to care for her own child; they have established a home to care for the wayward girls of the State, and they have shown their friendship to the cause of higher education by passing an appropriation bill that carries large sums for the maintenance of the educational institutions of the State.

By far the most important measure passed by the House is the bill creating the office of State Tax Commissioner and county boards of tax assessors. This law has been characterized by veteran members of the House and Senate and by legislative experts as the best measure that has been passed in Georgia in 50 years.

It will revolutionize the taxation system of the State, and conservative estimates place the amount of revenue it will add to the funds of the State at $1,000,000 a year, sufficient to clear the State of debt and allow plenty of money to conduct the business of the Empire State of the South in a manner commensurate with her importance.

Four other tax bills that will bring in large sums, though the amounts can hardly be estimated until the laws are tried, were passed—the automobile tax bill, the inheritance tax bill, the special tax on bottling works and the occupation tax on corporations.

Inheritance Tax Important.

The inheritance tax alone is expected to bring into the treasury hundreds of thousands of dollars.

The bill providing for the State Tax Commissioner developed the hardest fight. Opponents of tax reform in the House, where the bill was first introduced by Lipscomb of Clarke County, led by Sheppard of Sumter and Stovall of Elbert County, succeeded in defeating the original bill and securing the passage of what was known as the Sheppard substitute, providing for county boards of equalization only. This measure went to the senate, where it was defeated and the substitute prepared that eventually became a law, by Senators Miller and Anderson. Ten Senate substitute, with its provisions for a State Tax Commissioner and the county boards of assessors, came back to the House during the last days of the session.

The fight that developed was one of the most thrilling and dramatic the House has ever seen. During the time the bill was under consideration by the Senate, tax reform members of the House had converted many of their original enemies. Efforts to destroy the bill by substituting amendments were defeated, and the bill was brought to a vote during the latter part of last week.

To Speaker Burwell, of Hancock County, belongs the credit for the passage of the bill. From the time the original Lipscomb bill was introduced he worked hard to get the bill through, and when the Senate substitute came to a vote, and Henderson of Jones County, a staunch friend of tax revision, tied up the vote after a thrilling ride to the Capitol in an auto, Speaker Burwell made the measure a law by casting his vote in favor of it.

Features of Tax Bill.

The bill is modeled after similar laws that are now on the statute books of a number of Northern States, where it has worked satisfactorily. Its main provisions are as follows:

It creates the office of State Tax Commissioner at $2,500 a year, and County Boards of Assessors.

The Tax Receivers of the counties shall open their books February 1 and close them May 1.

In ten days after the books are closed the Tax Receivers shall present the returns to the county boards.

The county board is to be composed of three members, appointed by the Board of County Commissioners or the Ordinary.

The county board must examine the tax returns and equalize them.

The taxpayer, if dissatisfied with the decision of the county board, can ask for reconsideration and arbitration. The differences shall be adjusted by three arbitrators.

The county boards shall complete their work by July 1.

The State Tax Commissioner shall carefully examine all tax returns submitted by the county boards and recommend decreases or increases.

The State Tax Commissioner shall carefully investigate all taxation questions and recommend laws to the General Assembly.

The Tax Commissioner shall visit annually all the counties of the State and investigate conditions.

If the county board is dissatisfied with the decision of the State Tax Commissioner upon its returns, it may appeal for arbitration, to be conducted the same as when a taxpayer appeals to the county board.

Governor Slaton already has appointed a State Tax Commissioner, Judge J. C. Hart, and the formation of the county boards probably will be begun at once. The law becomes operative January 1, 1914.

The medical practices act abolishes the old system of a separate board for each school of medicine, and creates a joint board to pass upon the physicians who apply for permission to practice in Georgia.

The bill for the establishment of a home for wayward girls, to be known as the Georgia Industrial Home for Girls, carries with it an appropriation of $10,000. The original bill carried a $30,000 appropriation, but was cut $10,000 in the House and $10,000 more in the Senate.

Though the Legislature passed many measures that are recognized as good, there were many other good bills that failed to get through. Many of them, however, were held over until the next session for various reasons, and may be passed then. Among them were a number of child labor bills, measures designed to remedy working conditions, the vital statistics bill, compulsory education bill, and others.

In addition to aiding in the fight for tax reform, in which they were strong factors, the Fulton County delegation—Blackburn, Smith and Cochran—succeeded in getting through three bills that directly affect Atlanta. They are a bill creating a new charter for the city, a bill establishing municipal courts, and a bill providing an additional Superior Court judge for the Atlanta Circuit. The three Fulton County men, Blackburn and Smith especially, were recognized as being among the leaders in the House, and were in the forefront in the fight for all the reform legislation that was passed.

Important Bills Made Laws by 1913 Legislature

Here are the most important bills that passed both houses of the General Assembly, and which become laws upon receiving the signature of the Governor:

To provide for a State Tax Commissioner and County Boards of Tax Assessors.

A "blue sky" measure, to regulate the sale of stocks and bonds.

To allow freight trains to run on Sunday.

To increase the occupation tax on corporations.

To place a special tax on bottling works.

The general appropriation bill.

To provide an inheritance tax.

To regulate the practice of medicine and raise the standard of physicians.

To create a new charter for the city of Atlanta.

To create municipal courts in Atlanta and abolish the Justice courts.

To provide an additional Superior Court judge for the Atlanta Circuit.

To provide for the permanent registration of voters.

To establish and maintain a Home for Wayward Girls.

To enable judges to grant charters in vacation.

To create a Western & Atlantic Commission to investigate the release of the State Road.

To give the mother equal rights with the father in the custody of minor children.

To provide a tax of $5 on automobiles.

To create a commission to investigate the advisability of the State publishing its own school books.

To allow trial judges to place persons convicted of misdemeanors on probation, and to provide county probation officers.

To provide for the popular election of United States Senators.

Off in Canoe on 7,000-Mile Trip

Couple to Make Record Cruise

Argonauts to Visit the South

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Green, who have started from Staten Island to cruise to New Orleans and back in a canoe.

Yearning to See Dixie and West Prompts Young Pair to Make Hazardous Journey.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—"We have never been South," said Mrs. Walter Green half to herself. There was yearning in her tone.

"Nor West," said Walter Green, who heard her.

They sat in their canoe as it drifted with the tide, their faces turned away from their Staten Island home, toward the South.

Mrs. Green looked at her husband with a quick inspiration.

"Let's go," she said, eagerly.

And so they planned within a few minutes the 7,000-mile canoe trip on which they started yesterday and which will take them not only South, but West, revealing to them the grandeur of the Mississippi, the warmth of the Gulf Coast and the stretch of the Atlantic Ocean. The two young persons, enthusiastic canoeists both of them, and inveterate campers, will be away from their home for ten months or more in the course of the journey.

Will Call on Wilson.

They started up the Hudson River, going on the first stage of the journey to Yonkers. Thence they will go through the Erie Canal to Buffalo, through Lake Erie to Ashtabula, then to Beaver Canal and Rochester, Pa. From there they will go up the Ohio to Pittsburg, down the Ohio to Cairo, up the Mississippi to St. Louis, down the Mississippi to New Orleans, across the Gulf of Mexico and along the coast to St. James City, Fla., through the Everglades and a river or two to Palm Beach, up Indian River to Jacksonville, along the Atlantic coast to Chesapeake Bay, up to Washington to call on President Wilson and present a letter from Mayor Gaynor. Last they will go by canal to Delaware River, Raritan Canal an river to New York Bay and home.

A crowd cheered the gay young couple at their start. A party of suffragettes, admirers of Mrs. Green for her daring, presented her with a "Votes for Women" pennant, which her craft will f. The life-saving crew of Clifton, t. Greens' home, gave them a pennant, which also became a part of the equipment.

Light Equipment Carried.

In order to make the canoe as light as possible, they took only four boxes containing provisions, camp equippage and clothing, and two large duffel bags containing a small circular tent and bedding. All was covered with canvas, which will be used as floor of the tent.

It is the intention of the couple to put into a city, town or village each night, pitch their tent and sleep for eight hours. When the stores they carry run out, they will get new supplies at the places where they will stop.

The Greens are anticipating with the greatest eagerness the portion of their trip that will take them to the South, about the gulf and the South Atlantic coast.

NEW MEMBERS' PET BILLS DYING IN COMMITTEE

Recently Elected Congressmen Have Hard Time Telling Why District Doesnt Profit.

By JONATHAN WINFIELD.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—The new members of the House—there are approximately 150 of them—are beginning to find out something about the intricacies of legislation at Washington, and just now they are busy explaining away a bunch of campaign promises. The new member isn't getting anywhere with pet legislation and he is a sorely distressed individual.

Nearly 7,000 bills and resolutions have been introduced in the House of Representatives since President Wilson called the Sixty-third Congress into extra session early in April. About one in a hundred have received consideration, and the ratio bids fair to be maintained during the remainder of the extra session owing to a rule of the Democratic caucus which binds the House committees not to report out legislation before the regular session, which begins in November.

In consequence of this unexpected caucus rule, the new member who came to Congress leaving many promises behind is up against it. His hands are tied; he may introduce bills and resolutions to his heart's content, but they won't get anywhere for months, and perhaps not then. It is embarrassing to make explanations, especially when a statesman beat out some other fellow by promising big things for the district.

All Have Horde of Bills.

The average new member, as soon as he reaches the House chamber, walks up to the bill basket and drops therein a bill providing that the town of Jonesville shall have a $25,000 postoffice. He follows this with a dozen or so bills proposing that certain worthy pensioners in his district shall have their annual pensions increased. Then he comes along with the crying complaint that the little Bo i River needs about $50,000 or $100,000 to improve navigation in order that the towns of Squash Center and Hickory Hollow may have increased transportation facilities.

Congressman Newcomer then passed the word along to the newspaper correspondent representing the home paper that he has introduced the foregoing bill and will push it to an early passage. The people back home are duly elated and begin to get glad that they retired the former Congressman and sent so active a successor in his place.

In a short time the new member drops around to the committee to which his various pet kind bills have been referred. Without desiring to appear too solicitous, he gently inquires when he may expect the committee to get together and take up the pressing need of his district. The chairman, with equal gentleness, breaks the news that it will be absolutely impossible to do anything for the present.

Caucus Rules Forbid.

In the first place, says the chairman, a quorum of the committee isn't in town. In the second place, the caucus has forbidden the report of anything except currency, tariff reform and pressing appropriations bills or resolutions at this session. The new member is absolutely unable to see the justice of such a mandate, even though he may have been a member of the caucus. He thought the rule would apply to the other fellow, not himself. There is general woe and lamentation.

It is the same old story, told over in about 50 different ways. Each new member has a peculiar complaint to make and peculiar local needs to satisfy. There is nothing doing, however, and the recruit statesman is told that he will have to wait until the regular session rolls around.

TAKES PRIZED BEES FOR VACATION IN MOUNTAINS

HOOD RIVER, OREG., Aug. 16.—W. W. Dakin, who owns the largest apiary here, left for his vacation in the forest reserves above Parkdale. Mr. Dakin took two hives of bees to the mountains to gather honey from fireweed in the burned-over regions.

"I am going to try for some of the prizes offered at the State fair," said Mr. Dakin.

LIVING DEATH IN ITALY IS FACED BY CHARLTON

Young American Travels in Steerage, but Is Confident of an Early Acquittal.

son of Paul Charlton, law adviser of the Bureau of Insular Affairs, and former President Taft's classmate at Yale. He has stood by his son through all the fight against extradition.

Extradition Fight Begins.

The fight began the day after the confession appeared. It seemed at first that the young man surely must go back to Italy to face trial, and every legal step was taken against it. His friends, led by his father, took the position that he could not be extradited, because Italy had always refused, under the extradition treaty of 1868, to return Italian subjects to the United States to answer for crimes committed here.

They lost this fight, when Italy made a request for the prisoner. The fight was resumed, and Charlton's father entered the insanity plea, in a habeas corpus suit. Losing this in the lower court, the father appealed to the Supreme Court, in which, about a month ago, the opinion of Justice Lurton was handed down, to the effect that Charlton was subject to extradition.

Officers arrived in the United States from Italy last week to take Charlton back for trial. Conflicting reports have been spread regarding the young man's health, certain physicians contending that he is the victim of pulmonary tuberculosis and others that he is in perfect health.

Newspaper reports, written by men who have seen him, say that he appears healthy. He has been allowed an unusual degree of freedom while being held in the Hudson County jail, being permitted to take walks, automobile drives and two hours of exercise each day. Sometimes he was taken to picture shows.

Charlton Expects Acquittal.

Charlton is cheerful. He has expressed the opinion that he will be acquitted in spite of the evidence against him, and has told his father and mother and other friends as well that he will be back home for Christmas dinner.

The trial will be held in Milan some time early in the fall.

Appeals have been made to Secretary of State Bryan, and an attempt even has been made to reach the ear of President Wilson to present the extradition of the young man. His father has stopped at nothing to save his son. But all attempts have proved fruitless. Secretary Bryan, Judge Charlton's personal friend of long standing, has expressed his sympathy, but declared that it was impossible for him to do anything for the son.

The plans for the defense will take the form of an inquisition to bring out the moral and mental traits of the murdered woman, besides the consideration of Charlton's sanity. Attorneys will try to show that there was great provocation for the killing. It is hoped in this that the sentence of Charlton will not be the short-living death at solitary confinement in an Italian dungeon, but a more tempered punishment.

Nance Believed Mad When He Slew Wife

Relatives Declare He Was Mentally Unbalanced When He Left Knoxville Friday.

KNOXVILLE, Aug. 16.—George R. Nance is believed by his wife's relatives in Knoxville to have been insane when he killed her in a hotel at Hamlet, N. C., yesterday. They recite incidents connected with his former residence in this city that cause them to suspect he was mentally unbalanced.

At one time Nance left home and his wife did not know of his whereabouts until she received a cablegram from him in Liverpool, England. Soon thereafter he came here and they remained until they went to Greenville, S. C., last March, where his wife was manager of a sanitarium operated by a company with hospitals in various cities. For four years she was head of this company's hospital at Los Angeles. Her last station had been at Chattanooga, where her local relatives thought she was yesterday.

Mrs. Nance was born in Sweetwater, Tenn., and had many relatives over East Tennessee. She married Nance in Alexandria, Va., nine years ago, and they had no children. Mrs. J. T. Steele, of Jacksonville, Fla.; Mrs. B. T. Baker, of Alexandria, Va.; Mrs. Jerry Reagan, of Portland, Oreg., and Mrs. J. A. McCampbell, of Friendsville, Tenn., are her sisters.

Autos Are Barred By Canadian Island

Residents of Prince Edward Will Not Allow Machines to Enter Province.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—"It seems strange in these days when automobiles are seen on every street, on every country road that there should be one section on the American continent where these vehicles are positively prohibited," said R. A. Dewey, of Toronto.

"Recently the Canadian Parliament enacted legislation to permit the use of self-propelling carriages in the Province of Prince Edward Island, but it is by no means certain that the legislation will be effective. There is every indication that the law will never be put in force because a plebiscite on the question was taken throughout the island when the annual district school meetings were held.

"The returns that have come thus far indicate that the farmers are strenuously opposed to allowing automobiles on Prince Edward Island. More than 90 per cent of the population voted no on the proposition, and in some of these places the vote in the negative was unanimous.

Wealthy Father at Last Finds Daughter

Search of 38 Years Ends in Astonishment for His Policeman Son-in-Law.

POTTSVILLE, PA., Aug. 16.—Anthony Lloyd, a policeman, living on $65 a month, was surprised when John Strause, aged 76, walked into his home and embraced Mrs. Lloyd, who turns out to be his only child, lost to him for more than 38 years.

Strause is worth $200,000 and lives in Laramie City.

Many years ago, after he returned from service in the Seventh Pennsylvania Cavalry of the Civil War, he placed his daughter, Emma, in the charge of relatives and went West. Though wealthy, he was unable to find any trace of her until his sudden meeting.

PASTOR SHEDS HIS COLLAR.

GRANITE CITY, Aug. 16.—A new pace has been set by the Rev. W. W. Brown, pastor of the First Baptist Church at Granite City, who tells the men to come without collar or neckties and with sleeves rolled up if that will conduce to their comfort. He promises to do likewise.

WAITS FOR WIFE WITH A HEARSE; FINDS HER ALIVE

Husband Who Got Message of Her Death Overjoyed to See Her Alight From Train

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—Heinrich Dietz became the happiest man in Chicago yesterday, and his condition in this respect is likely to be chronic. It all happened in a few seconds. From the depths of woe Mr. Dietz was raised to an ecstatic joy that almost took his breath away.

Dietz is a Russian who came to this country about a year ago, and earned money slowly and saved it until he could rent and furnish a small apartment at No. 529 Hartland court. Then he saved some more and sent a steamship ticket to his wife. She embarked for America. Dietz expected her to arrive here yesterday.

On Thursday night K. W. Kempf, the ticket agent at No. 120 North La Salle street, handed Dietz a telegram from Philadelphia reading:

"Your wife Eva died to-day—on 9:40 B. and O. Comm's Immigration."

That message dropped a somber curtain on Dietz's happiness. To cap his misery, he had almost no money. Kempf in sympathy lent him $10 and gave him a note to P. Hursen, an undertaker. Hursen read the note, then returned the $10 to Dietz and sent a hearse with him to the La Salle street depot.

Dietz was mournfully watching the train when suddenly he saw a plump, rosy cheeked young woman leave it. With a shout he sprang forward and Mr. and Mrs. Dietz were clasped in each other's arms.

Mrs. Dietz had sent a telegram as her husband had requested, but the operator had written "died" instead of "arrived."

AFFINITY EARLE ABOUT TO LOSE 'DEAREST' DORA

Third Wife of Famous Wooer, Declared "Sweetest of Them All," Files Suit.

TELLS STORY OF MEETING

Did Not Know of Long Marital Record of Poet Until She Had Joined Him.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—Dora of the laughing brown eyes, third wife and unnumbered affinity of Ferdinand Pinney Earle, New York poet, artist and record wooer—described by him at the time of their marriage in June, 1911, as "the dearest, sweetest and loveliest of them all"—said to-day that she is about to seek her freedom.

She said she actually has begun suit in New York for an absolute divorce, basing her action on evidence she says she has obtained of Earle's behavior on the Continent since she parted from him in March.

Mrs. Earle is now only 25, twelve years younger than Earle. Her maiden name was Helen Theodora Sidford. From her father, an English architect, she inherited artistic tastes and is an artist of pronounced talent. She is a very attractive young woman.

Lived at "Earle's Folly."

The original story that reached America of her relations with Earle narrated a meeting in the fields, a walk home hand in hand, swift and ardent wooing, marriage within the month and a start on a tour of the world, which wound up prematurely in the country home in Monroe, Orange County, known as "Earle's Folly."

Her story to-day sets right much of that early fiction, for the meeting with Earle seems to have been conventional.

"How did you come to give yourself to a man of Earle's matrimonial record?" was asked.

"I knew nothing of his past until after our marriage," she replied. "Whatever his reputation in America, I had lived in a quiet English town and had never heard of his antecedents. After our marriage his life story was cabled from America to the London newspapers. Clippings were sent to me on the Continent on our honeymoon by my mother.

He Softened the Blow.

"It was a terrible shock to find that I had been so utterly deceived, but I accepted the explanation and excuses offered by Mr. Earle and his assurances that I would never have anything of which to complain.

"After our wedding we spent two months on the Continent. In September, 1911, three months following the wedding, we went to America, and lived happily at his place in Monroe, N. Y. Our first baby was born there in April, 1912. I remained with him in America until last January, and then came here to visit my mother, with whom I have since lived. It was arranged that Mr. Earle would come here for the summer.

"At the time of my return I had not the slightest expectation that our relations would go wrong. We kept in constant correspondence. He arrived here in March, remained two days and then went to the Continent. My second baby was born here April 20. Her father has never seen her.

"Soon after he went from here in March information reached me which left me no option except to prepare divorce proceedings. He has appealed to me to abondon them, but that is quite impossible after his conduct as disclosed to me."

Mrs. Earle declined to anticipate by publication the specific evidence she is reserving for the court. Thus the name of the co-respondent is withheld. Judging from Mrs. Earle's convincing manner of speech, she thinks she has ample ground for her petition.

Earle's Love Affairs.

Earle's love affairs were first brought to public notice in 1908 when he took to his Monroe home Miss Julia Kuttner, and informed his wife that the newcomer was his affinity and soul-mate. The rightful Mrs. Earle at that time was formerly Miss Emilie Marie Fischbacher, daughter of a bookseller on the banks of the Seine in Paris, whom Earle had married in 1903 and by whom he had a son, Harold Erwin.

Mrs. Earle departed for France, with a reported money settlement, and obtained a divorce there. Earle, Miss Kuttner and Miss Kuttner's mother went to Europe and domiciled themselves in Venice. Their departure from Monroe was hastened by threats of neighbors there to punish Earle without process of law.

Within a few months Mrs. Kuttner decided a marriage was necessary and a ceremony was performed at the British consulate. Soon afterward a son was born and named Edmond Erwin Earle. In 1910 the second wife sued for the annulment of the marriage on the ground that the ceremony had taken place before Earle was free under French law.

She also charged cruelty, especially following the birth of the child. After long consideration the Westchester County Court granted the petition of annulment and declared the child legitimate.

Earle had not defended either suit, but while the courts were trying to dispose of the second he sailed to Europe with Miss Gertrude Buell Dunn, a bright-eyed young woman from Chicago, who had "advanced" ideas. It was announced that together they would work out and publish a new philosophy on the ideal relations of the sexes. Their zeal subsided and they parted without scandal.

TOWN BLACKLISTS 85 DEMON RUM'S SLAVES

CHESTER, PA., Aug. 16.—Leading citizens of this city are lauding the blacklisting of habitual drunkards, which prevents them purchasing intoxicants in saloons, as a far-reaching temperance victory. The list contains, according to the police, the names of 85 persons who have made no effort to free themselves of the drink habit.

'Kneeless Stocking' Arrives

Fair Wearer Defies Hot Weather

Men's Socks Adorn Girl's--Ahem

Miss Bunee Wyde, pretty actress at Forsyth last week, who shows how comfortable she is in new "kneeless stockings."

Miss Bunee Wyde Is Bold Apostle of New Style and She's a Good Proselyter.

Miss Bunee Wyde said she should worry. Everybody else was swearing at the beastly weather whose heat left no peace in mind or body.

"You see?" she said naively, and hoisted her skirts a wee bit beyond the conventional height. She was wearing half hose. Men's socks.

She had brought to Atlanta a new fashion. Very frankly she announced her belief that the short socks are good to wear, much, ever so much, more comfortable than the long stocking; allow much, ever so much, freedom of the limbs, and are altogether desirable. And to her very best friends she minded not a bit to show them that she indeed wore them.

Everybody in Atlanta laughed at Miss Wyde and with Miss Wyde at the Forsyth Theater last week, where she played with Franker Wood in a little act, "Good Night." Nobody picked her for the bold apostle of a new fashion in wearing apparel, though. But she is, and a pretty good proselyter at that. She talked the new fad very generally in Atlanta while she was here.

She calls them the "kneeless stocking," though. "Half hose" has a cold, unfamiliar, masculine tone to it. And she makes the prophecy that the kneeless stocking will be popular.

"Garters?" said she. "Certainly not. I don't need 'em. Up New York lots of the girls wear silk garters or men's hose supporters with these, but under certain desirable physical features, you won't need anything to hold them up. They just stay.

"Of course you couldn't wear these with a slit skirt, and some might blush to put them on with a tight skirt that clings when you mount a street car or even a sidewalk curbing. Still, there is nothing immodest in wearing kneeless stockings. They are comfortable and convenient.

"Well, you needn't look if you don't want to," she pertly adds.

Dog Carries Mail 10 Miles for Master

Faithful Canine Postman Prefers Making His Trips Between Sundown and Dark.

COVINGTON, IND., Aug. 16.—Charles Keller, south of this city, owns a dog which carries letters from Mr. Keller's home to Philip Keller's home, ten miles. When Mr. Keller wishes to communicate with his father he fastens the letter on the dog's neck and instructs him to deliver it. The trip is always begun between sundown and dark, as this seems to be the time of day that the dog likes to travel best. The following evening the dog will return to his master with a reply.

Human skulls containing teeth filled with gold were among the interesting discoveries made in Ecuador.

WOMEN RUN TOWN WHERE MEN FAILED

For Twenty Years Efforts to Put Woodland, Colo., on the Map Were Useless.

WOODLAND PARK, COLO., Aug. 16.—The women of Woodland Park have started a movement to put the town on the map of Colorado's summer resorts.

Twenty years ago the men of the town tried it and their efforts ended a few years ago in the best building lots selling for taxes.

When the men of two decades ago thought the town offered great inducements, they voted $20,000 in bonds and built a water system and an artificial lake in the center of the town.

There were bandstands built in the woods around the town, and a band was maintained for two or three summers. Then the bottom fell out.

The other day the waterworks bonds became due. The men who had been the prime movers in the boom of twenty years ago were discouraged and their daughteds and wives took up the affairs of the town.

They organized the Woodland Park Improvement Association. The association succeeded in having the bonded indebtedness compromised for $6,000 and the town now has the money to pay the bonds and improve the water system.

The women have decided to have a series of "tag" days and entertainments by which they will raise funds to put in street lights, street signs, lights at the Colorado Midland station and other improvements.

BOY FINANCIER FIGHTING FOR PRISON PAROLE

Earl W. Butler, of Canton, Ill., Seeks to Escape Penalty for Banking Methods.

CANTON, ILL., Aug. 16.—Earl W. Butler, the boy banker, whose career in frenzied finance wrecked two banks in Fulton and one in Peoria County in 1910, and ended by landing Butler in the Joliet penitentiary with an indeterminate sentence of from one to three years, again is making strenuous efforts through his attorneys and friends, to obtain his release from the State Board of Pardons.

So far the boy banker has not made much progress toward getting his freedom, because of the position taken by former State's Attorney W. S. Jewell, under whose incumbency Butler was convicted of embezzlement in connection with the Ellisville bank, and who is supported in his view of the matter by the present State's Attorney, M. P. Rice.

Butler was convicted in the Fulton County Circuit Court in October, 1911, over a year after his three banks closed their doors, and he was taken to Joliet in November of the same year. He has served nearly two years in the penitentiary and has another year to remain there, if his sentence is carried out to the limit. In addition to imprisonment, the verdict in his case imposed a fine of $2,800, but it is the expectation that he will try to schedule out of this obligation.

Predicts Dancing Is To Be Part of Church

Dr. G. Stanley Hall, President of Clark University, Declares Grace Should Be Encouraged.

GREELEY, COLO., Aug. 16.—That dancing is one of the best forms of exercise that is possible to take and that eventually it will become a part and parcel of the church when the grosser forms of it have been eliminated, was the statement made by Dr. G. Stanley Hall, president of Clark University.

"Dancing in itself as practiced in ancient times is what kept the Greeks and Romans healthful and graceful. The dances of those days were far different from the kind which are popular now and made strong men and graceful women.

"Rhythm is the basis of all physical movement, and I am convinced that this form of amusement, under the proper supervision, will become not only an adjunct to the church, which is proper and right, but to the schools also."

Trees of Ice Age Found in Illinois

Species Have Been Preserved Through Thousands of Years.

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—Members of the International Phytographic Society who made studies among the hills and cliffs about Lake Bluff this week discovered there species of trees and shrubs that have been retained in the region since the Ice Age. This species, the Europeans found, have been preserved through thousands of years.

The poplar and creeping juniper, examples of the Ice Age flora, rarely found in this part of the temperate zone, were seen flourishing vigorously beside the beech, birch, oak and maple, which followed them in the normal succession. Lake Bluff is said to be "farthest south" for the creeping juniper.

PASTOR POSING AS A DRUG USER GETS VICE DATA

Visits Omaha Stores and Secures Evidence for the Grand Jury, Made Up Like Tramp.

OMAHA, Aug. 16.—In order to more effectively carry on war against vice of all kinds, the Rev. A. E. Hess, pastor of the Hirst Memorial Young People's Church, of this city, has been disguising himself as a "roughneck" dope fiend and scouring the haunts of the denizens of the underworld for proofs of lawbreaking to present to the Grand Jury.

His latest tour was through a number of drug stores suspected of selling "coke." For his disguise he secured the services of a professional costumer, and so good was his "makeup" that he now has in his possession a hatful of little wooden boxes, each containing a few grains of cocaine—each labeled with the time and place of purchase, and in many cases the name of the clerk who sold it.

"I was never so scared in my life as when I started out for the 'dope' drug stores," Mr. Hess. "I was 'made up' like a dope fiend tramp and I was afraid I would be recognized and quizzed.

"At the first drug store I entered twice before I raked up enough courage to ask for the cocaine. The first time I merely watched the traffic; and that was terrible enough. I saw a woman fairly weep in her plea for the drug she craved and for which she had not the purchase price.

AFTER 50 YEARS MOTHER OF 8 IS ENABLED TO SEE

Although 66 Years Old, She Travels From Home to Hospital All Alone.

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—Fifty years ago a little girl was stricken blind.

She was 16, and never had seen the man whom she later married. In her home at Hillsdale, Mich., she became the mother of eight children.

The father died a little later and they went out into the world, but the mother never had seen their faces.

The woman, now bent and feeble, is Mrs. Mary J. Welsh, and is back in her Hillsdale home, her sight restored. Mrs. Welsh during the last month has been in the Wesley Hospital here. The operation that gave her back her sight, surgeons say, was one of the most remarkable on record. It consisted in the removal of a cataract of fifty years standing.

A chaplain of the hospital, the Rev. M. W. Satterfield, delivered an address in Hillsdale several months ago. He told of the charitable work done by the hospital. The white-haired blind woman heard him. She groped her way forward.

"Can you do anything for me?" she asked. "I only want to see my babies before I go. I have been praying."

A month ago the Methodist congregation took up a collection which made it possible for her to make the trip to Chicago.

In the Piano Business the Concern by Which All Others Are Measured Is the Phillips & Crew Company!

There's always One by which the Rest are Measured---

In every line of business there's unquestionably ONE that is generally accepted by ALL as being the Standard---the one by which ALL OF THE REST ARE MEASURED OR COMPARED.

So, ask any Piano Salesman what Atlanta Piano house he would like most to work for or to represent in the field---

Ask Piano purchasers what Piano Concern's lines are always mentioned in comparison, when other Pianos are being considered for purchase.

And then, ask yourself at what Store you'd rather select a Piano for use in your own home---

The answer cannot help but be in every instance the same, for the Phillips & Crew Company are the acknowledged Standard Piano concern in Atlanta---the Old and Reliable Piano House by which all others are Measured or Compared.

SUFFRAGETTES INVADE STAID GEORGIA TOWN

Thomasville Has Its Quota of Women Who Demand the Ballot.

THOMASVILLE, Aug. 16.—The granting of a charter for a Woman's Suffrage Association in Georgia and the bobbing up of the suffragettes over the country generally is causing many towns to take an introspective view, so to speak, to ascertain if there are any of this new brand of women within their borders, and the result shows that while there may not be a great many avowedly calling themselves suffragettes, there are more in sympathy with the movement than the mind of the average man conceives to be the case.

That there should be suffragettes in other towns in Georgia seemed very probable, but that they should be found in Thomasville, which is regarded by the outside world as being eminently staid and conservative, never going wild over anything but baseball or fighting about anything but "Sis" Cow, seemed almost unbelievable, but they are here just the same.

This does not at all mean that the majority of the fair sex here are in sympathy with this new order of women who are fighting for the ballot. There is, however, a very fair sprinkling of them, who do not hesitate to assert their belief in the equal rights of woman, and they likewise acknowledge that they would enjoy taking a hand in the management of public affairs, to a certain extent at any rate.

Of course, there are a few of the more advanced in their ideas who even believe that they could run a town and would like to try it a while and show the male management in charge just how a sure enough town should look and how affairs would be managed with a female board at the head of things. When questioned as to what would be done in a town run by women in regard to holding Police Court, serving on juries, etc., the enthusiasm did not seem so marked, though little attention was paid to the query, it evidently being the idea that all unpleasant duties could be turned over to the mere men and only the "running" of affairs be reserved for those in charge.

As it will probably be a good long time before Thomasville will be run by a female management, at least openly, as they are often accused of being the power behind the throne, nobody is very much worried over it, but it is interesting to know just how the matter stands and whether the women of the South will ever go into this movement in earnest as they have in the West and parts of the North.

Timbermen Fight Over Debt; 1 Dead

W. C. Stamper and G. R. Keen End Dispute by Pistol Duel in Street at Blakely.

BLAKELY, Aug. 16.—W. C. Stamper and G. R. Keen, two well-known timbermen, had a pistol duel on the public square at 2:30 o'clock this afternoon, as a result of which Keen is dead with five bullet holes in his body.

Keen is said to have shot at Stamper twice and missed him. Stamper escaped unhurt, except a graze near the left eye.

The trouble grew out of a dispute over the division of the proceeds of a debt due to both of them by a common debtor.

Keen leaves a wife and several children.

Truck Growers to Organize in Tift

Object Is to Promote Growing and Marketing of Products.

TIFTON, Aug. 16.—Present indications are that not only the truck growers of Tift County will work in co-operation, but that all the truckers of South Georgia counties will co-operate in promoting the growing and marketing of trucking products.

Two melon and truck growers of Brooks County, M. L. Bowen, of Quitman, and A. J. Powell, of Dixie, were in Tifton this week and conferred with the Tifton Chamber of Commerce and a number of men engaged in trucking, inquiring as to the working of the Tift County Truckers' Association, with a view to forming a similar organization in Brooks County.

Mr. Bowen has been in the melon business for nearly twenty years and Mr. Powell is an expert at growing Irish potatoes.

TERRELL FARMER FIRES BULLET THROUGH HEAD

DAWSON, Aug. 16.—P. C. Calley, well-to-do Terrell County farmer and brother-in-law of Jesse Mercer, committed suicide at his country home near Dawson by shooting himself through the head. He left no note as to the cause, but despondency over money matters is believed to have been responsible.

Columbus Shows Healthy Increase

Nearly Half Million Gained on Tax Values of Property—Rate Was Reduced.

COLUMBUS, Aug. 16.—Tax Assessor Frank M. Sommerkamp, of Muscogee County, has completed his tax digest for 1913, which shows $22,769,804 compared to $22,508,202 in 1912, an increase for 1913 of $261,602.

When it is taken into consideration that the tax assessments this year in the city of Columbus were made at 75 per cent of the county assessment, while they have been made heretofore at the same, it will be seen that the county has made a remarkable showing. In other words, something like $14,000,000 worth of property has only been asssessed at 75 per cent of the assessment of last year. It is believed that the increase in values would have run far over half a million dollars.

The digest shows that there are 40 lawyers, 43 doctors, 17 dentists, 1 veterinary surgeon, 2 architects, 2 engineers. The dogs in the county are valued at $2,192.

DOUGHERTY TAX VALUES SHOW GOOD INCREASE

ALBANY, Aug. 16.—The total value of taxable property in Dougherty County, as shown by the figures just compiled by Tax Receiver J. H. Davis, shows an increase for 1913 over 1912 of $437,218. The comparative figures are as follows: Property values, 1913, $7,449,866. Property values, 1912, $7,012,648.

ALBANY MAY BUILD BIG CREMATORY PLANT

ALBANY, Aug. 16.—A crematory to dispose of Albany's garbage is a matter that is being seriously considered at the present time. Mayor Tarver has procured literature bearing on this subject and is giving the matter careful study.

With the idea of making Albany one of the most healthy and sanitary towns in the State, the city officials, led by Mayor Tarver, are considering this step.

GLENN TAKES CHARGE AS DEPUTY MARSHAL

VALDOSTA, Aug. 16.—L. H. Glenn, of Rochelle, who has been appointed Deputy United States Marshal for this district, to succeed R. L. Thomas, resigned, will make this city his headquarters. He is now here preparing to take over the office.

COURT HEARING OF INJUNCTION IS POSTPONED

Americus City Council Would Prevent Consolidation of Power Plant Companies.

AMERICUS, Aug. 16.—The postponement by Judge Z. A. Littlejohn in the Superior Court of the hearing of the injunction brought by the City Council of Americus against the Americus Power Company, the rival power company to the old Americus Gas and Electric Company, to keep the new company from consolidating with the old and advancing rates, is another link in the history of one of the most sensational municipal fights in Georgia.

Judge Littlejohn postponed the hearing until September 27 on the ground that certain important parties to the various transactions were not in Americus, though it is claimed that at least one of them was here.

City Attorney Hollis Fort and W. P. Wallis, for the city, and Shipp & Sheppard, for the Americus Power Company, are prepared for a grueling and continued fight when the hearing does occur.

It is thought that it will either kill forever the hopes of municipal ownership here or revive them anew. As this has been a hotly contested municipal issue, the interest in the hearing is wide and keen.

'Hoodoo Doctors'. Ply 'Art' in Cordele

Raid Farms for Cotton Root to Brew Tea for Superstitious Negroes.

CORDELE, Aug. 16.—"Hoodoo" or "root" doctors, as they are commonly known, seem to be getting in some very effective work in Cordele, though if their identity should become known to the police the effect would very probably not be pleasing to them. For several nights these characters have devastated patches of cotton in the western part of the city, belonging to negroes. For the purpose of making cotton root tea, which is said to have a healing effect in a good many cases, they have pulled up row after row of cotton by the roots, cutting off the weeds and taking the roots with them.

UNKNOWN NEGRO STABS WHITE MAN AT RAY'S MILL

VALDOSTA, Aug. 16.—W. J. Williams, of Rays Mill, Ga., was probably fatally stabbed by an unknown negro in this city at 1 o'clock Friday morning. Williams and a companion passed a group of negro youths at the Georgia Southern and Florida passenger station and said something to the negroes which they resented. One of them plunged his knife into Williams' side and drew it across his breast, making a gash nine inches long and exposing the heart-action. Two negroes are in jail charged with complicity in the affair, but they claim that the youth who did the stabbing escaped.

MUSCOGEE JURY BOARD RESUMES WORK MONDAY

COLUMBUS, Aug. 16.—Muscogee County's Jury Commissioners will meet again Monday to take up the work they began sometime ago, but were forced to drop because of the continued illness of one of the members. It is expected that every effort will be made to increase the list, as there has been much complaint in recent years over the difficulty experienced in obtaining jurors, when only about one-fourth of the taxpayers and voters of the county have their names in the jury box. A remedy has been demanded often.

100 BALES OF COTTON SOLD AT TIFTON IN WEEK

TIFTON, Aug. 17.—The cotton market has opened up lively in Tifton this week and it is believed that the receipts will show a total of nearly 100 bales. There is quite a lot of old cotton in this section and this is opening fast as a result of the warm weather of the past several days. However, the bulk of the crop is young and it will be several weeks yet before the season is on in full.

ALBANY MAY HAVE RIVERSIDE DRIVE

ALBANY, Aug. 16.—That Mayor Tarver's idea of a beautiful winding driveway along the Flint River may terminate in some definite action seems probable. Superintendent of Parks Harmon has been asked to consider plans and offer suggestions. This has been done and he not only thinks the plan feasible but is a very ethusiastic advocate.

Dougherty's Jail Doing Double Duty

Ten Prisoners From Early County Added to Number Already Confined There.

ALBANY, Aug. 16.—Dougherty's new county jail is now doing double duty, containing not only the county prisoners and those of the city of Albany, but those of Early County, ten of whom have been brought here for safe-keeping.

Soon after the new jail was completed the city of Albany made arrangements for the city prisoners to be jailed and cared for in a portion of the county jail. The city barracks were small, insanitary and not safe in case of violent prisoners. That portion of the city hall formerly used as the guardhouse has been remodeled for offices. The county feeds all the city's prisoners and City Court is held each day in the detention corridor of the jail.

The Sheriff of Early County, realizing the condition of the new jail, selected this one for the safe-keeping of his prisoners while Early's jail is being remodeled.

Feast on Collards Instead of Cabbage

Thomas County Convicts Revel in Delicious "Greens"—Fresh Corn as Dessert.

THOMASVILLE, Aug. 16.—The convicts in the camps of Thomas County have had a change of diet from the cabbage which was so much enjoyed by them in the spring and early summer, and have transferred their allegiance to collard greens.

The report made by the superintendent of the county farm this week shows that for the month of July 1,250 head of these collards were fed to the convicts of the various camps, and as the average darky is proverbially fond of these greens they doubtless enjoyed their meals. With the collards were eaten 600 ears of green corn and several bushels of onions.

As vegetables are considered good summertime diet they probably went a long way toward preserving the health of the convicts as all the camps are reported in a healthy condition.

Cashier, Sentenced, Making Hard Fight

J. H. Cason's Lawyers Determined to Carry Case Through Highest State Courts.

MOULTRIE, Aug. 16.—Arguments in the motion for a new trial of J. H. Cason, now under five-year sentence in the penitentiary for embezzling nearly $8,000 from the Bank of Cresland, will be heard in Valdosta before Judge Thomas on September 8.

Attorneys for the former bank cashier state they will leave nothing undone to save their client and that the case will be fought through all the courts before it is concluded.

CORDELE COTTON MARKET SHOWS GREAT ACTIVITY

CORDELE, Aug. 16.—With more than 100 bales ginned and marketed, the cotton season is getting well under way in Cordele and within two weeks will be in full sway. The movement of the crop has already had a decided effect upon the business interests of the city and county, a general optimism prevailing among the people as a result. The opinion is common that the yield of cotton will surpass that of the past several years and that the quality of the staple will hold up unusually well, demanding good prices.

WOODMEN OF WORLD HOLD 'CUE AND PICNIC AT TY TY

TIFTON, Aug. 17.—Friday was Woodmen of the World Day in Ty Ty, nine miles west of Tifton, in Tift County, the choppers holding a big barbecue and basket picnic, between 1,500 and 2,000 people attending. Besides enjoying a good basket dinner and some of Jack Frost's barbecue, better than which there is none, those attending heard an excellent address by Hon. Roscoe Luke on the W. O. W. order and an address on general topics by Colonel Claude Payton, of Sylvester.

NEW TARIFF SCHEDULE WELCOMED BY SHIPPERS

COLUMBUS, Aug. 16.—Columbus tariff schedule No. 2, on which the Board of Trade has been working, has been received in the city and the merchants are prepared to take advantage of it at every opportunity. The new tariff schedule applies to all of the railroads entering the city.

For social news of the South, see Page 11, this section, and the society section.

MELROSE YOUTH UNDER BOND FOR FATAL STABBING

Harry Miller, 17 Years Old, Must Face Trial for Slaying Turpentine Man.

VALDOSTA, Aug. 16.—Hardy Miller, the 17-year-old lad who stabbed and instantly killed L. A. Smith at Melrose recently, has been released from custody under a $5,000 bond on a charge of manslaughter.

The preliminary hearing of the case was before Judge J. G. Cranford, of the City Court. Several eye-witnesses to the killing testified that the man had a quarrel and that Smith struck Miller with a stick. A few minutes later Miller passed by Smith and struck him in the breast with his knife, the blade penetrating Smith's heart. The men were employed at the turpentine distillery of Miller's brother, Smith having charge of the mules on the place. The fatal quarrel was caused by Smith's refusal to let the boy ride one of the mules at night after it had been worked all day.

Valdosta to Issue Bonds for Paving

Election Called to Vote on $50,000 for Streets and Waterworks.

VALDOSTA, Aug. 16.—An election for an issue of $50,000 municipal bonds has been called by the City Council for September 15.

If it carries Valdosta will in a few months be the best paved city of its size in the State, and will have a waterworks system adequate to take care of the growth of the city for several years.

Of the proposed issue $35,000 is to be used for extending the paving now in operation, while the remainder, $15,000, is to be used for extending the water mains and in improving the waterworks station. A 3,000,000-gallon pump was bought with a portion of the last bond issue and the plant is now being prepared for its installation. In the business section the six-inch mains are being taken up and replaced with twelve-inch mains, while the system is being extended to the northern and eastern portions of town, which were recently taken into the corporate limits.

Three of the principal residence streets are now being paved with asphalt, but the recent bond issue has not been sufficient to pave other streets on which the work is demanded.

The proposed issue will be 30-year bonds to bear 5 per cent interest.

MOULTRIE RAISES $100,000 FOR A PACKING HOUSE

MOULTRIE, Aug. 16.—A hundred thousand dollars has been subscribed by Moultrie business men to build a packing house and abattoir. All preliminary plans have been completed and construction is scheduled to begin soon.

It is believed this will encourage stock raising in Southwest Georgia, providing as it will a cash market at all seasons.

FARMER BEGINS SERVING SENTENCE AS COW THIEF

MOULTRIE, Aug. 16.—J. J. Hiers, farmer, of Colquitt, began serving a twelve months' sentence on the chaingang this week, after being denied a new trial by Judge Thomas, of the Southern Circuit.

Hiers was convicted at the last term of Superior Court on an indictment charging him with cow rustling, but the jury recommended that he be punished as for a misdemeanor.

Albany Boosters Get Big Meeting

Put Up Winning Fight for State Agricultural Society Session In 1914.

ALBANY, Aug. 16.—Knowing that the bringing of the State Agricultural Society to Albany for its 1914 meeting would be a great boom for Albany, as well as furnishing a good place for its meeting, several of Albany's citizens went to Cuthbert this week and attended the session which has been in progress. On Thursday it was realized that a hard fight would be necessitated to secure them, as North Georgia was making a strong bid, and immediate steps were taken to apply the pressure. All Dougherty residents who were at the meeting started boosting Albany as the proper place, this being supplemented with telegrams from the Mayor, president of the Chamber of Commerce and others who are recognized as leaders in Albany. The net result was that they decided on Albany, and in addition expressed their thanks for the strong effort that was made to secure them.

Tift's Courthouse Handsome Building

One of the Most Complete and Comfortable in the State.

TIFTON, Aug. 16.—There are many handsome and comfortably furnished courtrooms in this section of the State, but none will surpass the one in Tift County's attractive new courthouse when that building has been completed. The work is now nearing completion, and some idea can be gained of its attractive simplicity and elegance.

Five large windows on either side of the courtroom give plenty of light and ventilation. Between each window is a pilaster column capped with a scroll design, and over each window an arch surmounted by a keystone. Crossing the ceiling are five large beams and between these is an attractive design in dental work. In this work there are over 7,000 pieces, nine to the foot, and there are 875 running feet to be covered.

There are three large lights in the ceiling, with a light on each column and a desk light at the judge's stand.

The staircases will be of steel with terazza steps.

CORDELE PLANS TO PUT $40,000 IN WATERWORKS

Site Selected for Big Plant, and Work Will Begin in Short Time.

CORDELE, Aug. 16.—The Cordele Bond Commission has selected and purchased a site for a new waterworks plant for the city, located immediately adjacent to the site on which the old station is situated. The location provides ample room for the improvements to be made, and was purchased by the commission from Judge E. F. Strozier, administrator of the estate of W. E. Smith, the consideration being $4,500.

A $40,000 issue of bonds will be expended in building the new plant and making further improvements upon the waterworks system. The building alone will probably cost $3,500, and is to be fireproof, while the machinery will be of the most modern type and will be duplicated all the way round, costing not under $18,000. The new reservoir will be capacitated at 250,000 gallons, and an elevated tank of almost three times that capacity will be erected.

RECORD PECAN CROP IN SOUTH GEORGIA

THOMASVILLE, Aug. 16.—That there will be more pecan nuts in South Georgia this season than ever before is the general opinion of the growers. This is owing not merely to the fact that the crop is a good one, but is the result of the larger number of trees that have come into bearing. The crop of paper-shell pecans planted all through this section is a large one, but many of the young trees are just beginning to bear well. Some of the growers are very enthusiastic over the crop on these young trees this year and the knowledge that they will put on a larger one each year as they grow older means that it will not be very long before the output of these nuts will be the means of bringing much money into South Georgia.

RHEUMATISM COMES FROM CONDITIONS WHICH CAN BE REMEDIED

But Local Applications on the Skin Cannot Get at the Cause of Your Suffering.

Just a bilious attack and a slight deposit of uric acid. Now calomel and similar mercurial purgatives do not dissolve and expel the uric acid sediment that forms from undigested, fermenting foods, and when this poisonous acid is not expelled it accumulates quickly, thickens the blood and settles in joints and muscles. The joints and muscles then become stiff.

An attempt to cure this rheumatism must be directed toward removing uric acid from blood and tissues, breaking up the crystalline urates already formed and preventing new deposits.

JACOBS' LIVER SALT is remarkably successful in the treatment of rheumatism. It dissolves uric acid out of the tissues, holds it in solution and expels it in the urine. It thoroughly cleanses the system of fermentation and purifies the blood. It will give prompt relief in all cases of rheumatism resulting from uric acid poisoning.

If you are suffering with rheumatism, try JACOBS' LIVER SALT immediately. It will relieve you more promptly and surely than anything else. Don't take an inferior substitute; some closely imitate the name, but none produces the same result. Insist on the genuine JACOBS' LIVER SALT, 25c. If your druggist can not supply you, full size jar mailed upon receipt of price, postage free. Made and guaranteed by Jacobs' Pharmacy Co., Atlanta.—(Advt.)

PHYSICIANS AID M'NAUGHTON IN FIGHT FOR LIFE

Savannah Medicos Lending Influence to Secure Pardon for Condemned Doctor.

SAVANNAH, Aug. 16.—Savannah physicians are lending their aid toward securing the freedom of Dr. W. J. McNaughton, who is in jail here under sentence of death for the murder of Fred Flanders in Emanuel County three years ago.

At the request of the Rev. John S. Wilder, pastor of the South Side Baptist Church, who has been a consistent friend of the condemned man, several Savannah physicians have given affidavits relative to the effect of the amount of arsenic poisoning which it is claimed killed Flanders. They declare this amount of the poison would not produce death. It is understood the Prison Commission, which is now considering the case of Dr. McNaughton, is perfectly willing to grant him a commutation to life imprisonment, but his friends are striving for a full pardon for him.

Dr. McNaughton may return to his old home in Emanuel County and resume the practice of his profession if the Prison Commission acts favorably upon his application for a pardon.

"I am an innocent man, and naturally expect to be given a full pardon," he said. "All I hope is that the facts were presented to the Prison Commission properly. If they were, I feel confident I will be liberated. I have already been deprived of several years of my life, and I am praying constantly that the great wrong that has been done me may be righted as far as possible by the granting of a full pardon."

Marion Lucas Will Get Savannah Plum

Congressman Edwards Picks Successor to Marcus Baker as Savannah Postmaster.

SAVANNAH, Aug. 16.—The fact that Congressman Charles G. Edwards has announced his intention of indorsing Marion Lucas for postmaster to succeed Marcus S. Baker, Jr., who is expected to be ousted shortly as a result of a recent investigation of his private and official life, has created little surprise here. It had been known for more than a week that Lucas stood the best chance to land the plum.

Besides the indorsements sent to Congressman Edwards direct, Lucas has furnished him with more than 1,000 letters from Savannahians in every walk of life.

Chatham Jail Too Full for Comfort

New Sheriff Asks County Commission to Remodel and Enlarge Prison.

SAVANNAH, Aug. 15.—As a result of an inspection of the county jail by the newly elected Sheriff, Colonel Merrett W. Dixon, the County Commission will be asked to do something to relieve the congestion there.

It may be necessary to build an annex to the jail or convert the southern wing of the building now occupied by the jailer as a residence, into prison quarters. Sheriff Dixon was accompanied on his inspection by Judge Walter G. Charlton, of the Superior Court, and Solicitor General Walter G. Hartridge.

Of the 183 prisoners in the jail there was only one who registered a kick.

SHUPTRINE TO HEAD BIG POLITICAL CLUB

SAVANNAH, Aug. 16.—Although the officials will not make public the result of the election, it is learned that Herman C. Shuptrine, Representative in the Legislature from Chatham County, was elected president of the Cracker Progressive Club, a political organization, last night. Shuptrine has stated that he will accept.

TRADE BOARD SECRETARY RETAINED AT BRUNSWICK

BRUNSWICK, Aug. 16.—Secretary J. G. Weatherly has been reappointed by unanimous vote of the Brunswick Board of Trade. Mr. Weatherly came to this city last year from Columbus, Miss., and since taking charge of the local board he has made an enviable reputation, both for himself and the city.

Summer-Spoiled Skin Removed by Absorption

(From Home Queen.)

As undue summer exposure usually leaves an undesirable surface of tan, dust or grease, often freckles, too, it would seem more sensible to remove such surface than to hide it with cosmetics. There's nothing better for this than ordinary mercolized wax, which actually absorbs an unwholesome complexion. The thin layer of surface skin is itself absorbed, gently and gradually, so there's no inconvenience and no detention indoors. Just spread the wax lightly over the entire face at bedtime and take it off in the morning with warm water. If you will get one ounce of mercolized wax at the drug store and use for a week or so, you may expect marked improvement daily. When the underlying skin is wholly in view your complexion will be a marvel of spotless purity and beautiful whiteness.

Don't let those summer wrinkles worry you; worry will breed more wrinkles. Better to banish them by bathing the face in a solution of powdered saxolite, 1 oz., dissolved in ½ pt. witchhazel. Used daily for a while this will be found wonderfully effective. (Adv.)

Savannah Minister Has Saloons Raided

Pastor Objects to Near-Beer Dispensaries Near His Church. Dealers Arrested.

SAVANNAH, Aug. 15.—On complaint of the Rev. M. F. Roberts, pastor of the Fourth Baptist Church, three near-beer dealers, with places around the corner from his church have been placed under arrest and required to give bond for their appearance on charges of violating the State prohibition law.

The places raided are the same which received the attention of the authorities last Sunday. The men under arrest are Andrew Pappedea, M. Patro and C. L. Davis. A lot of near beer and whisky was confiscated and will be used as evidence against the men.

Recovery of Dare Question of Time

Savannah Man, Shot by Wife, Improves Rapidly After Reconciliation.

SAVANNAH, Aug. 16.—Stretched comfortably on a cot in a cell at police barracks, quietly reading a novel while the summer breezes blow through the bars upon her, Mrs. Joe Dare, who several weeks ago shot her husband following a quarrel in their apartment, presents a striking contrast to-day to her extremely nervous condition two weeks ago, when it was believed that Dare would die and that she would be called upon to face trial for his murder.

The physicians who are attending Dare at the Savannah Hospital have given out the information that he is continually improving. His recovery is now practically assured unless there is a sudden change for the worse. The physicians are confident that his reconciliation with his pretty wife on what was believed to be his deathbed has had much to do with bringing about the change in his condition.

Dare was shot by his wife in a fit of jealousy after he had remained out later at night than she thought he ought to.

Grimshaw Will Not Give Up Residence

Transferred to Americus, Savannah Alderman Holds His Office in City Government.

SAVANNAH, Aug. 16.—Harry G. Grimshaw, superintendent of the Savannah division of the Atlantic Coast Line Railway, who has recently been transferred to Americus as superintendent of the Alabama division, effective to-day, will maintain a residence in Savannah, and will not resign from the aldermanic board of the city. He will also retain his position of chairman of the board of control of the Union Station.

Superintendent Grimshaw will retain a residence in Savannah, and will come down each week-end, remaining over until Monday morning. He will also be able to make special trips to Savannah when necessity arises, and will thus be a regular attendant upon the meetings of Council. Mr. Grimshaw's force of clerks, stenographers and dispatchers will depart for their new location to-morrow morning.

WRECKER WANTED TO SEE WHAT TRAIN WOULD DO

SAVANNAH, Aug. 16.—"Just wanted to see a wreck, just to see what the train would do," was the explanation of John Hosey, 14 years old, when arrested last night charged with placing a beam on the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad tracks at Thirty-third and Plant streets in an attempt to wreck the shuttle train running between Savannah and Newyards. A special officer saw two boys place the beam on the track. He arrested Hosey, but the other lad escaped.

8-Foot Shark Caught At St. Simons Island

Sam Levinne Lands Largest Catch of Years in Waters Around Brunswick.

BRUNSWICK, Aug. 16.—An eight-foot shark has been caught on St. Simons Island by Sam Levinne, of this city. Before the fish could be landed it required a horse to pull it ashore.

The young man had his line out for a shark for more than an hour when suddenly it was almost jerked from his hand. Several times he managed to get the shark to the surface, each time shooting it, and before it was killed eight bullets had been poured into its body.

The shark weighed more than 300 pounds, and was the largest caught in these waters in ten years.

Firemen Endangered By a Falling Steeple

Lightning Sets Brunswick Church Spire Ablaze and Causes It to Topple.

BRUNSWICK, Aug. 16.—When McKendree Methodist Church was struck by lightning and set on fire, Fire Chief Harrison and three of his men narrowly missed death.

The lightning set fire to the steeple. The chief and three firemen climbed to the roof of a one-story addition adjoining the main part of the building. Before the fire was under control the steeple fell. Chief Harrison saw wha was coming and quickly ordered his men to seek safety. Just as the got under cover the steeple crashed on the roof where they had been standing.

NEGRO ACCUSED OF SLAYING 16 YEARS AGO IS CAUGHT

WAYCROSS, Aug. 16.—Charged with killing B. C. Booth, at Manor, Ware County, sixteen years ago, Will Eady, a negro, has been brought to Waycross from near Blountstown, Fla. He has been identified and will be placed on trial in December.

Eady's escape from a mob was narrow. The Booth family conducted a search for him. W. S. Booth has just paid a reward of $100 for the negro's arrest and the State's reward of $100 will be paid soon.

WAYCROSS PLANS TO SEND MAN ON BOOSTER TRIP

WAYCROSS, Aug. 16.—Waycross may have a representative on the Georgia Booster Train, which will leave Macon soon for a tour of the Middle West.

Secretary T. Jeff Bailey, of the Board of Trade, has been authorized to make the trip. He is getting splendid co-operation from the citizens. Thousands of Waycross booster booklets will be distributed by the [illegible] while on the trip.

FACE COVERED WITH PIMPLES

Spread to Back. Could Hardly Sleep for Burning and Itching, Caused Disfigurement. Cuticura Soap and Ointment Entirely Cured.

214 Brevard St., Tampa, Fla. — "Some three years ago I commenced to suffer from a rash on my face and back. Before the pimples came on my face there were a lot of blackheads. It looked as if the blackheads turned into pimples because after a little while all of them were gone and my face was covered with pimples. They were small at first but gradually grew and right at the end of each pimple it was all white. I carelessly picked them with my finger nails, which made them spread, and soon discovered them on my back. My back was covered with pimples and my face the same way. At night I could hardly sleep on account of the burning and itching sensation they caused. I felt like a lot of small-sized crabs biting at my back. I did not like to go out because the pimples caused disfigurement.

"Seeing the advertisement of Cuticura Soap and Ointment in one of the magazines I sent for a sample. At night I would put the Cuticura Ointment on my face and back and I was pleased with the result. I bought some Cuticura Soap and Ointment, and I am glad to be able to say that I am entirely cured of pimples." (Signed) Jno. O. Darlington, Jan. 25, 1913.

Cuticura Soap 25c. and Cuticura Ointment 50c. are sold everywhere. Liberal sample of each mailed free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. T, Boston."

Men who shave and shampoo with Cuticura Soap will find it best for skin and scalp.

STREET PAVING AGITATION IS ON IN WAYCROSS

Act of Legislature Gives Authority to Make Levies on Property Owners.

WAYCROSS, Aug. 16.—While none of the members of the Georgia Legislatures except those from Ware knew what the passage of the local act on levies for street pavement in Waycross meant they really paved Gilmore, a leading street of the city, by voting to pass the act.

The amendment to the city charter was proposed by Council to establish beyond any question the right of the city to make a levy against property of the street railway company for paving on a street occupied by the tracks of the company, whether the part of the street occupied by the tracks was paved or left unpaved.

In trying to pave Gilmore, Council has handled one of the hardest problems Waycross has ever tackled. First one proposition would be agreed upon, then another, and all kinds of petitions from property owners were received. Sentiment is anything but unanimous with reference to the paving of Gilmore, but Council is apparently determined to pave the street with brick.

Estimates on the cost of paving Gilmore have varied from $20,000 to above $30,000. With the street car company's portion of the expense certain for the city, the financial end of the pavement has been closed, and Council probably will be asked at an early date to authorize the Mayor to sign a contract and have work started without delay.

Convicts to Work Streets.

At last Waycross is going to get some return from the part the city has been contributing to the improvement of roads in Ware County. The convict gang of the county, under the new county commissioner law, will have to be worked on the principal streets of Waycross three months of each year, and in order that some benefit might result this year, the law stipulates that for 45 days between now and the end of the year the gang must be worked in Waycross.

An effort to reduce the membership of the board to five was defeated, and the board will be increased after January 1, 1915, to seven instead of six members, as at present. Four of the seven will be from the Waycross district. The chairman, instead of being a resident of the Waycross district, may reside in any district of the county. However, with four members from Waycross, it is extremely doubtful if the chairmanship ever goes out of the Waycross district.

Senator J. L. Sweat's plan for a board of information, holding quarterly meetings with the Commissioners, were eliminated.

SHORTHAND WILL NOT BE TAUGHT IN SCHOOLS

SAVANNAH, Aug. 16.—Stenography and typewriting will not be taught in the public schools of Chatham County during the coming session "because of the shortness of finances." This is the decision of the Board of Education of the county.

Superintendent Otis Ashmore and Principal B. F. Pickett, of the High School, were instructed by the board to investigate the question and report. They hold that the only additional expense would be the purchase of typewriters. It would not be necessary to employ another teacher. Bookkeeping and commercial subjects already are taught in the schools.

Waycross Lid Is On 7 Days Every Week

Sunday Closing Supplement by 'Move On Order to 'Houses in Our Midst.'

WAYCROSS, Aug. 16.—Although the first warrants issued in the crusade against the sale of cold drinks in Waycross on Sundays have been withdrawn on the promise of good behavior, it is announced to-day that the campaign for Sabbath observance will in no way be lessened. The prime reformers are H. Murphy and Dan T. Cowart.

Right on top of the fight on Sunday drink sales, Chief of Police John W. Colley has issued warnings to women who have returned here despite the "lid order" issued last fall by Mayor Reed shortly after Atlanta closed the "houses in our midst." Several houses bordering on the disorderly variety have just been closed and the inmates compelled to leave the city. Only a few of the women waited until the last day to leave, as the police let it be known that all caught here after the limit expired would be arrested and tried in Police Court.

Fire Chief May Hold His Job After All

Expected Shake-up Fails to Materialize in Waycross—Council Remains Inactive.

WAYCROSS, Aug. 16.—The expected shake-up in the Waycross fire department has not yet materialized. It was reported a week ago that former Chief Thomas Ballentyne, of the Savannah fire department, would become chief of the Waycross department. So far, however, the matter has not been presented to Council for action.

Recent improvements in the fire department caused members of Council to feel that a more experienced man was needed as chief, and the report of the expected change caused the friends of Chief E. C. Hall to get busy. What effect, if any, this had is unknown, but it is stated on authority that the fire department shake-up may not be talked about again until the first of the year, when Council elects the Fire Chief along with other city officials.

Fought Four Men; Held for Killing

Charlton County Slayer Released on Bond of $5,000—Now in Hospital.

WAYCROSS, Aug. 16.—An order was passed by Judge E. A. Parker, of the Waycross circuit to-day allowing C. W. Webb, charged with killing J. M. Crawford at Moniac, in Charlton County, temporary bail of $5,000. Authority was also given to transfer Cobb from Valdosta, where he has been in a hospital, to Hazlehurst. Thursday is the date fixed for a commitment trial at Folkston.

When he killed Crawford, Cobb was fighting four men, who attacked him as he started to board a passenger train. After he was cut to pieces he was left by the track all night.

NEW TRIAL FOR LANIER OVERRULED BY JUDGE

WAYCROSS, Aug. 16.—Judge T. A. Parker overruled the motion for new trial in the case of State vs. W. C. Lanier, under life sentence for killing an infant. Attorneys will appeal the case to the Supreme Court. Lanier's wife, who was jointly indicted with him, was acquitted when she was tried at an adjourned term of court in June.

WAYCROSS TO TRY NEW FORM OF GOVERNMENT

Semi-Commission and Business Manager Plans To Be Voted on at Special Election.

WAYCROSS, Aug. 16.—Waycross is on the verge of two interesting elections, and will top off the year with a warm municipal campaign.

The first election will be that of a Recorder to fill the recently-created position of City Recorder. The bill, as passed by the Georgia Legislature, provides that any lawyer 21 years of age may fill the place, and while there are no announced candidates for the position, it is known that members of Council have been approached by several who would like to serve until the election next year.

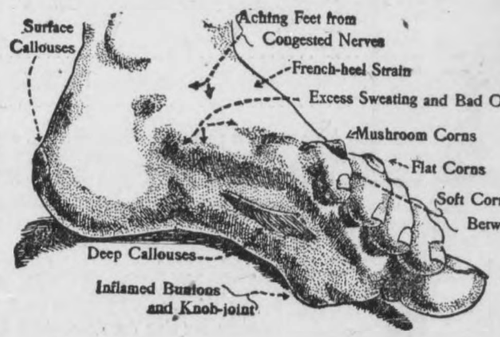
After the election of a Recorder will be the charter election. This will probably be called by Council at a meeting to be held next Tuesday, and will be for the purpose of deciding what changes, if any, in the present government of Waycross will be made. The charter bill provides for the city manager plan of government, which is a combination of the aldermanic and commission government, and an increased Board of Aldermen with appointive departmental heads. The proposition to have an all-time Mayor has been given up, and instead the charter provides that whoever is named Mayor must give sufficient time to look after the office properly. The salary of the Mayor is doubled, $1,200 being allowed under the new charter, as compared to $600 at present. The salaries for Aldermen are wiped out completely by the new charter. Heretofore Aldermen have been paid $200 a year.

There are many advocates of the two kinds of city government, and the election to be held will undoubtedly go down in the city's history as one of the warmest ever known in Waycross.

NEW RAILROAD TO BRUNSWICK FROM DARIEN

Connecting Link Will Be Completed by October 1—Preparations for Entry.

BRUNSWICK, Aug. 16.—Preparations are already under way for the entry of the Georgia Coast and Piedmont Railroad into Brunswick on October 1.



The rails are laid almost in entirety from Darien to Brunswick, and all that remains to make the connecting link perfect is the completion of the steel bridge over the Altamaha River. Work on the passenger and freight depots in this city is well under way, as likewise the work on the terminals along the river front.

By connecting Brunswick and Darien, many miles will be saved in going from one place to the other. The only direct connection with the McIntosh County seat is by boat from this city, which requires four and one-half hours to make the trip. With the Georgia Coast and Piedmont in operation, it will be possible to traverse the distance in less than an hour.

The road now runs from Collins, in Toombs County, to Darien, and with the extension to this city one of the richest territories agriculturally in Georgia will be opened up.

The road was started last summer, after having been under discussion for five years. The County Commissioners of Glynn and the city of Brunswick appropriated a large sum to aid in bringing the road here. The general offices of the road will be brought to Brunswick from Darien before the entry into this city.

Tells Positive Cure For all Foot Troubles

Science has proven that nearly all foot troubles originate from a common cause; that of injured tissues. The following information will be welcomed by thousands of victims of daily foot torture. No matter how many patent medicines you have tried in vain, this treatment which was formerly known only to doctors will do the work. Don't waste time. Get it at once. "Dissolve two tablespoonfuls of Calocide compound in a basin of warm water. Soak the feet for a full fifteen minutes, gently rubbing the sore parts." The effects are marvelous. All pain disappears instantly and the feet feel simply delightful. Corns and callouses can be peeled right off. Bunions, aching feet and sweaty, smelly feet get immediate relief. Use this treatment a week and your foot troubles will be a thing of the past. Calocide works through the pores and removes the cause. Any druggist has Calocide in stock or will get it from his wholesale house. Don't be influenced to take something else instead. A twenty-five cent box is said to be enough to cure the worst feet.

MR. HEARST TELLS WHY HE KEEPS OIL LETTERS FROM LOBBY INQUIRY

Publisher Does Not Wish to Associate Already Proven Documents With Series of Exaggerated Accusations as Mulhall Confession Seems To Be.

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 16.—The following is a letter from Mr. William Randolph Hearst in reply to a letter sent to him by Congressman Clyde H. Tavenner asking Mr. Hearst to put the Standard Oil letters before the Garrett lobby investigation committee in the House of Representatives:

Los Angeles, Cal., Aug. 5, 1913.

Hon. Clyde H. Tavenner, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Sir:

Did you write me a letter and make the letter public, asking me to submit all the Standard Oil letters that I have in my possession to the House committee now investigating the charges of lobbying made by a certain Mulhall?

I would be very glad to submit again to the Congressional committee or to any responsible body the Standard Oil letters which I have already submitted many times to the public and to bodies which more or less accurately and sincerely represent the public.

I would prefer, however, not to submit these Standard Oil letters in connection with the Mulhall letters and charges for the simple reason that the Standard Oil letters are very important to the nation, very serious in their incriminations and wholly authoritative and genuine, while the Mulhall letters and documentary evidence have never appeared to me especially important or serious or genuine.

The Mulhall letters and charges were offered to one of my magazines, the one that published the Standard Oil letters, but the editors of the magazine with my approval declined to purchase or publish the Mulhall documents and confession. The reason we did not purchase the Mulhall letters was not at all because of the price. That question was not even considered.

The reason we failed to purchase them was because we had not full confidence in them. We felt that the more or less innocent or at least moderate wording of the documents did not justify the extravagant allegations on which Mulhall based the documents, and we felt if that any part of Mulhall's evidence or testimony was untrue that all of it was open to suspicion.

Furthermore, our magazine had just performed what we had every right and reason to believe a great public service. We had performed this service with the utmost sincerity and consciousness and with the most scrupulous care.

We had exposed the corrupting influence of privilege-seeking corporations in politics. We had revealed the connection between these corrupt corporations and certain important public officials who were supposed to represent the people in office, but who in reality, prostituted their offices to serve the illegitimate interests of criminal trusts.

The editors of the magazine were agreed that we did not wish to diminish or discredit the effect of these genuine revelations by the publication of Mulhall's letters, which seemed to us less serious and sincere.

The Standard Oil letters can not be denied, because there always have been additional documents to disprove every denial made to confuse and confound every falsifier.

We did not wish our magazine to associate a great public service and a vital political exposure like this with an extravagant series of exaggerated accusations, as the Mulhall confessions appeared to us to be, and I would rather not associate the genuine with the questionable at your Congressional investigation.

Of course, I am expressing only my preference. I can control the course of my magazine, but I do not seek to control or influence the action of your committee. I shall always be ready to submit to any such committee any such information I have which can be considered of public interest or importance.

Very sincerely yours,
WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST.

Foreign-Born Women Voting Is Restricted

Illinois Attorney General Outlines Conditions Under Which They Can Cast Ballots.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., Aug. 16.—In answer to Mayor Schriver, of Rock Island, for an opinion on votes for women under the new suffrage law and to govern authorities in an approaching election, Attorney General Lucey to-day held:

"That a foreign-born woman who marries a citizen of the United States, whether such citizen be natural born or naturalized, by such an act of marriage becomes a citizen of the United States.

"An unmarried foreign-born woman whose father did not become naturalized until after she arrived at her majority, would not, by such act of naturalization upon the part of her father, become a citizen of the United States.

"A woman born in the United States whose father was not naturalized prior to her arriving at her majority is a citizen of the United States."

Science Pleads for Bats, Insect Killers

University Professor Says Can Not See, but Are Guided by Sound.

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA, Aug. 16.—That the bat by killing night-flying insects is a benefit to humanity; that he can not really see at night, as is popularly believed, but directs his flight and hunts his prey by sound; that, as a rule, he devours his prey in full flight—these are among the interesting statements in a plea for the bat which Dr. Joseph Grinnell, of the university faculty, has included in a recent paper in which he says:

"A vast quantity of night-flying insects are destroyed by bats every 24 hours. It can be seen, therefore, that bats continue the warfare on insect life which is so incessantly waged by the birds during the daytime.

"All bats have enormously developed ears, and their sense of hearing is doubtless very acute. It is suggested that the drone of a June beetle sounds to a bat as does the roar of a biplane motor to us."

Girl Asleep 10 Days Apparently Is Dead

New York Sufferer Has 86 Convulsions Before Relapsing Into Comatose State.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Jeannette Guttman, the 13-year-old daughter of a plumbing contractor, living at 1046 Tiffany street, the Bronx, for ten days has been lying in a state of coma in the Hydropathic Institute, 2011 Madison avenue.

With the exception of a faint blush of crimson on the girl's cheek, she apparently is lifeless. Life has been sustained by feeding her brandy and predigested milk, and the process of nourishment has been so successful that the girl has not lost any weight.

According to Dr. Gilbert Miller, Miss Guttman has been an epileptic for about ten years. Three days before she relapsed into a comatose state she had 86 convulsions.

From Dr. Miller it was learned that her temperature was just normal, while there was no accentuation of the pulse. Efforts have been made to produce some kind of response from the girl, without result.

Father and Son Vote For Every President

Pennsylvania Pair Hold Suffrage Record That Is Unequaled in United States.

TUNKHANNOCK, PA., Aug. 16.—George C. Miller, of Tunkhannock, claims that he and his father, George Miller, Sr., and the only father and son in the United States who have voted at every Presidential election, commencing with Washington, in 1788, to the present time.

The father voted until 1852, being then 90 years of age. He and son George C., then 22, both cast their ballot for Winfield Scott for President. The son has voted at every Presidential election since, and is now 83 years old.

The father, when about 30 years old, removed from near Harrisburg to Tunkhannock, where he opened the first gun store in that place. He died at the age of 93.

The son is the last of a family of ten children, and is in good health, with a prospect of voting for some years to come.

DEER HINDERS TRAFFIC; DODGES TEAMS IN ROAD

ALBANY, ORE., Aug. 16.—Running along on a well-traveled country road a big buck deer dodged its way between three teams of horses and escaped unhurt last week. The deer was encountered near Brewster Station, on the Woodburn-Springfield line between Crabtree and Labanon, by three men who were hauling lumber to the railroad line.

As the season is not yet open for deer no attempt was made to shoot it.

WANT TO MAKE MONEY? START TERRAPIN FARM

Government Authority Declares There Are Big Profits in the Diamond-Backs.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—The diamond-back terrapin, aristocrat of the dining table and king of the banquet menu, need not disappear from the sandy shores of the United States and be lost to disciples of Epicurus forever if the business men of the nation will allow themselves to be awakened to the fact that there are fat dividends in the breeding of the animals.

Uncle Sam is sponsor for this statement. Experts in the Bureau of Fisheries are anxious that business men shall read its report.

At Beaufort, N. C., the experts started out four years ago with 40 females and 18 males, terrapin such as may be found from Southern Virginia all along the coast down to Florida. From this small breeding stock the experts procured 295 eggs in 1910. Of the 295 eggs only 7 failed to hatch.

In 1911 513 eggs were procured, and of these 421 were hatched. Even better results were obtained in 1912, when 650 eggs were procured and 538 hatched. The number of eggs laid and hatched in 1913 is expected to be far greater. Of course, a terrapin must be five or six years old before he is in the best shape for the table, but this slow growth is offset by the fact that "one man may care for several thousand terrapin."

Terrapin farms, the Government report says, should be situated on the shore line of tidal salt water, where a supply of fresh water also is available; low, swamp land where fish and crabs are plentiful being preferable. Best results are obtained by breeding the terrapin in pens specially built, but not expensive in construction.

Unlike the chicken breeders and the breeders of other food animals, the terrapin breeder need not worry about disease in his stock. The Government experts say: "So far as is known, diamond-back terrapins are not subject to epidemic disease, and after reaching the age of two or three years have no important enemy except man."

500 Birds Kept in Cage on Housetop

St. Louis Collector Has Scores of Varieties and Many of Them Are Carnivorous.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 16.—A huge cage, containing 500 birds, is built on top of the home of D. J. Pishorski, No. 1911 North Twelfth street. Not one of these birds is for sale.

Instead Pishorski adds to his collection almost every week, and will continue to do so until he possesses a pair of every variety of birds.

Almost every land is represented in this assemblage of feathered warblers. They range from the nightingale of Japan to the Missouri jaybird.

In this collection are probably 100 birds that can not exist on seeds, lettuce and grass. They belong to the carnivorous class and must feed upon insects.

ADMITS HE IS A SLAYER TO SAVE DYING BROTHER

Arthur Spaugh Tells the Pardon Board That He Shot Sheriff at Ironton, Mo.

JEFFERSON CITY, MO., Aug. 16.—In a last attempt to get a parole for his brother, William Spaugh, Jr., who is ill of tuberculosis and can live but a short time. Arthur Spaugh, the younger brother, also an inmate of the Penitentiary, told the Board of Pardons that he killed Sheriff Polk at Ironton, Mo., to save William's life. William Spaugh is serving a life sentence for shooting Polk, while Arthur Spaugh was sentenced to fifty-five years.

"Bill did not shoot Sheriff Polk. I shot him when I thought he intended to kill Bill. He had already shot Bill through the shoulder and was advancing on him when I fired. My brother had his hands in the air, begging the sheriff not to shoot him," said Arthur Spaugh.

Doesn't Care for Himself.

"I do not want my brother to die here. He is not guilty of the killing of Sheriff Polk. I alone am guilty. Bill was not even armed when the sheriff was shot. I thought the sheriff intended to kill my brother, and after warning him not to advance three times, shot him. I hope the Governor will release Bill so that he can spend what few days he has to live a free man. It does not matter what becomes of me."

The prison physician says that William Spaugh can not live to exceed sixty days and his death is expected sooner. William Spaugh has arranged to have his body shipped back to their old home at Ironton Mo., for burial, provided he does not secure his release.

Mother Also Pleads.

Arthur Spaugh has tuberculosis also, and is unable to do heavy work. He is in the first stage of the disease, but is able to work about the halls and do light work in the open air.

Mary E. Spaugh, aged mother of the Spaughs, has been here much of late pleading with the Board of Pardons and Paroles for her dying son. She says she would like to take him to her home in St. James, Mo., and nurse him until he dies.

Arthur Spaugh has been in the penitentiary since July 27, 1906. William Spaugh was received July 26, 1907. Both have been model prisoners.

HIGH COST OF LIVING BAR TO FREE LUNCHES

LA CROSSE, WIS., Aug. 16.—While saloonkeepers of Connecticut are preparing to go into court to resist the law which forbids free lunches in saloons, liquor men of La Crosse are circulating a petition which will be presented to the Common Council asking for the passage of an ordinance making the free lunch unlawful. All saloonkeepers in town except two have signed it.

Downtown proprietors who have been setting up expensive lunches are the instigators of the movement. They declare the cost of meats and vegetables is so high they can no longer afford it.

'What Becomes of Rats That Die Natural Deaths?' Scientist Wants to Know.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—An article in the current public health bulletin, issued to-day, makes a mystery of the question:

"What becomes of rats which die natural deaths?"

The article was prepared by Surgeon Victor G. Heiser, chief quarantine officer of the Philippine Islands, who had charge of the rat-destroying campaign in Manila.

He states that the average rat mortality for the Philippine city is 2,500 a month. He seeks to find out what becomes of the bodies of those that die each day.

"It appears that at least many hundreds of rats disappear each month from Manila by natural means, the exact nature of which is not known, but if it could be discovered the knowledge might be useful in the destruction of rats."

COUPLE ELOPE, THOUGH THEY CAN NOT CONVERSE

GARY, IND., Aug. 16.—Cupid was somewhat nonplussed for a while in Gary, when a young couple, neither of whom can speak the language of the other, eloped to Crown Point, where they answered the marriage vow by means of an interpreter.

On their way home the pair were arrested at the instance of the irate father, because of the bride's youth.

They were taken to the Gary police station, where neither could give the other a word of comfort. Later the father's heart melted, and they were released.

...d Boys On Chickasaw Links

Troubles With Latter Send Golfers Scurrying for Tamer Kind of Caddies.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 16.—Bird dogs to replace caddies and retrieve lost golf balls will soon make their appearance on the municipal links at Overton Park, according to an announcement made by City Hall officials.

J. P. Clages, dog fancier and expert trainer, has been schooling the animals at the links for several weeks and the dogs will be given a trial, and if they prove adept, they will be used regularly.

The canine caddies are the result of numerous troubles with boys, who were put under charge of the Juvenile Court for various offenses committed at the links.

FINDS KNIFE BLADE IN CHEEK AFTER 31 YEARS

REPUBLIC, KANS., Aug. 16.—To have part of a knife blade imbedded in his cheek for 31 years and not know it is the experience of Ora Figgins, who has just returned from Minneapolis, Minn., where he underwent an operation for the removal of a growth on his cheek.

Border Officer Who Killed Six Men Dies

Louis Kreeger Also Convicted His Son, Who Will Attend Funeral Under Guard.

TRINIDAD, COLO., Aug. 16.—Luis M. Kreeger, 68 years old, for nearly forty years one of the prominent peace officers of the Southwest, is dead at his home here. He had served variously as Sheriff, Under Sheriff, town marshal and special deputy in this county, and during that time he had figured in almost every adventure with criminals of any importance, and no less than six men are known to have been victims of his marksmanship.

Kreeger was a native of Missouri and came here in 1868. He achieved fame late in the seventies by killing Rice Brown, jockey and cowpuncher, then employed by the Thomas outfit. In trailing a quartet who were accused of robbing the Victor-American Coal Company's pay wagon near Gray Creek in 1910, Kreeger obtained part of the evidence which resulted in the conviction of his own son, "Quick Trigger" Kreeger. The son, under guard, will attend the funeral.

Poultry—All Varieties.

MAKE MONEY WITH POULTRY.

AMERICAN POULTRY is a magazine devoted entirely to helping earnest men and women make a financial success of poultry raising. Its staff of writers is composed entirely of those who have made a practical, instead of theoretical, success of poultry farming, and who are glad to pass on the results of their hard-earned experience to AMERICAN POULTRY readers. There are many pitfalls in the path of the novice which may be entirely avoided by those who will follow the teachings set forth in this magazine. It fully explains how to make a start, how to construct houses, coops, and other devices, how to get a large egg yield, how to cure and prevent disease, how to exhibit, how to get the top price for eggs, how to use incubators and brooders, and hundreds of other points which every one wishes to know. It explains the famous secret system through which poultrymen have become rich and afterwards solid for hundreds of dollars. AMERICAN POULTRY is a large, handsomely illustrated, monthly journal, well printed on fine paper, and should be found on file in the home of every poultry lover. No beginner in the poultry business should think of being without it. It will save him many times the small subscription price. The advanced poultryman will also find it of great value; the articles being varied in their scope.

SPECIAL OFFER. The regular price of AMERICAN POULTRY is 50c per year, but in order to introduce it to several thousand new readers, we will, for a short time, give a large 200-page poultry book, which is a complete guide in the poultry business, absolutely free to every one sending 50c for a yearly subscription or $1.00 for a three-year-subscription to AMERICAN POULTRY. A trial six months' subscription (without book) will be sent for 25c. Never has so much been offered for so small a sum. Advantage of this offer should be taken at once.

J. H. EWING PLANS MOVE FOR PEACHTREE HOME

J. H. Ewing, of the real estate firm of Smith & Ewing, will sell his present home and build on Peachtree road. He made this announcement during the past week, although he declared that his plans were not definite.

Mr. Ewing lives in Ansley Park south of the stone house of Edwin P. Ansley, and his home is one of the most attractive in the park. He has several lots at his disposal on Peachtree road and will decide on one of them soon.

SELLS CITY RESIDENCE TO BUILD IN COUNTRY

CHICAGO, ILL., Aug. 16.—William V. Kelley, president of the Mieble Printing Press and Manufacturing Company, has sold to Samuel C. Hibben, an attorney, his residence at the northeast corner of Ellis avenue and Forty-ninth street, lot 55 by 200 feet.

The dwelling is of brick and stone, three stories high, containing fifteen rooms and six bathrooms. There is a garage in the rear.

The price is said to have been about $70,000. It has been the intention of Mr. Kelley to build a fine country place in Lake Forest for some time. W. K. Young & Bro. were the brokers.

GOOD REALTY INCREASE IN CHICAGO MARKET

CHICAGO, ILL., Aug. 16.—Realty transfers for July show a large increase in recorded deeds as compared with the same period a year ago. This has been the case practically during all this year.

There were filed for record 5,013 deeds. Involving a total consideration of $11,772,254, as compared with 3,843 and $12,552,129 for July, 1912, a gain of 1,170 in number and a decrease of $779,875 in consideration, the latter due to "nominal" considerations.

There were recorded 3,971 trust deeds and mortgages involving a total of $18,773,121, compared with 2,835 and $12,522,800 for july a year ago, a gain of 1,133 in number and $6,250,321 in amount.

SKYSCRAPERS NOT TOO HIGH.

Building Inspector Ed R. Hays does not think that Atlanta has reached the point where it should limit the height of buildings. "Furthermore," declared Mr. Hays, "I don't believe there is an office building in Atlanta that could be dislodged by a cyclone. Some glass might blow out, but this would relieve the tension."

Six Crops of Alfalfa in One Season; Big Opportunity for Farmers of South

Special Soil Preparatin Is Necessary to Success—Inoculation and Liming Important—Seed Bed Preparation Should Begin Two Years in Advance.

CHARLES A. WHITTLE.
(Georgia State College of Agriculture.)

Think of from four to six crops of hay off a field in a year, and you are thinking of the possibilities of alfalfa growing in the South. Think of cutting from one to one and a half tons per acre each time and figure that each ton is worth at least $25 and you arrive at a very snug income with mighty little sweat as compared to cotton, for instance.

But be not deceived. Learning to grow alfalfa in the South is the biggest thing about it. Anybody who takes it as a matter of course that all he has to do is to stir the land and plant and thereafter watch the negroes harvest, is more than likely to be enrolled with the long list of those who have proven alfalfa failures in the South.

With all the good things that can be said of the soil of the South, it can pretty generally be said that Southern lands are not naturally "cut out" to grow alfalfa. This is not saying that alfalfa as a rule will not grow in the South, nor is it reflecting in any wise on either the soil or the climate. The point is that all Southern soils have to be given special treatment and preparation before alfalfa will be at home in it.

Alfalfa on Every Farm.

"Alfalfa on every farm," the slogan now going the rounds, does not point to an impossible ideal, but if anyone thinks it can be attained in the South without a considerable revolution, he may be easily deceived by trying it.

With all, it is easy enough to prepare the soil for alfalfa and go along producing it, if the prospective grower will follow good advice—but there is the rub.

The ordinary cotton grower of the South will have to practice crop rotation, he will have to add inoculation to his vocabulary and practices, and he will have to get lime into his soil. Those who have been teaching this sort of doctrine and have observed how far it has taken root in the South will understand how much farming practice will have to be changed to realize "Alfalfa on every farm."

To the average Southern farmer to mention inoculation is to elicit inquiries. What is it? Why? And to tell the truth, it is neither easy to understand nor to explain. A full explanation, indeed, is impossible. Inoculation means to introduce friendly bacteria into the soil. Without certain nitrogen fixing bacteria present in the ordinary soil, alfalfa and other legumes make poor headway. Certain it is that some of these bacteria can take the nitrogen from the air and fix it in the ground, converting at the same time the nitrogen into food for the growing plant.

Alfalfa Bred Bacteria Best.

It is believed that almost any soil has some of the nitrogen fixing bacteria present in it, but as a matter of fact in some soils these bacteria are few and apparently so starved as to be unequal to the task imposed by thrifty alfalfa.

The best bacteria with which to inoculate are those which have been bred in a good alfalfa field. Good bacteria can be grown artificially and it is with such artificially grown bacteria that seed are inoculated. When sprinkled with a solution in which the artificially grown bacteria have been turned loose, the seed carry on their surface enough of the bacteria to start up business in a new field.

Of course the bacteria are invisible except under a compound microscope. The farmer can not see them and when he buys he buys on faith. If his alfalfa grows and produces good crops he believes in inoculation. If it does not, he is likely to have notions of his own about inoculation. It is possible for seed to be perfectly inoculated and by reason of improper handling may fail to show results. Sunlight destroys bacteria and inoculated seed left exposed to the sunlight will become sterile. To escape the danger of sunlight it is necessary, of course, to shelter the bacteria, and it is wiser to sow or to apply the inoculation medium late in the afternoon or during cloudy weather.

Again, the seed may be properly inoculated, due precaution may be taken to get it into the soil with the least injury from the sunlight, but the soil may be sour, which is no sort of soil for a nitrogen fixing bacteria.

Lime Necessary to Alfalfa.

To correct sourness of soil lime is necessary. The fact is that practically all soils in the South are deficient in lime. This may never become apparent so long as cotton or corn is grown, but it is certainly true when it comes to growing legumes.

The lime is not needed as a fertilizer. It is merely a tonic to nitrogen fixing bacteria. Soils generally are supplied with all the lime that the crops need. Experiments have shown that most of the crops grown in the South are benefited by the use of lime, a benefit that is attributable to increasing bacterial activity. Bacterial activity means increase of plant food, for bacteria in effect are minute laboratories changing the elements non-available for plant food into elements of the soil that are available. Of course there are good and bad bacteria. Some of those that might be classed as bad operate to change available plant food into non-available. Of such are the denitrifying bacteria, which instead of preparing bacteria for the plants change it into perhaps free nitrogen that returns again to the air.

These friendly bacteria have been isolated and named and are nurtured, coaxed and strengthened to do their best. Only the border of the realm of these soil agents has been entered, and it may be reckoned with a degree of certainty that as the scientist ventures further into the mysterious country of the unseen that he will bring back to the farmer knowledge that will mean two bushels where one is now grown, all by learning which are the good bacteria that are serving plant life and how to encourage their growth.

The first great contribution of the scientist in looking into the teeming soil world is that lime is good for nitrogen-fixing bacteria, and since nitrogen is the most expensive plant food and one of the most important, it is a wonderful discovery this of lime and its relations to bacteria.

Since nitrogen-fixing bacteria operating to the good of alfalfa set up shop on the roots of the plant and there extract nitrogen from the air that has penetrated the soil, to know that lime will make it thrive is equivalent to saying that without lime alfalfa will not grow in many Southern soils, for it is a fact that most Southern soils are deficient in lime and are too sour for nitrogen-fixing bacteria.

Some pretty well-known, highly respected and intelligent men have said that they do not believe in inoculation nor in liming for alfalfa. They point to their successful alfalfa patch to show you that neither is necessary. Unwittingly such well-meaning people have been the means of the downfall of others in their attempts to grow alfalfa. Do not get an idea that there are many such alfalfa successes in the South, especially among those who have not used lime. Even where the soil has been formed by the disintegration of limestone rock, where there is a foundation of limestone in the soil, is to be found a marked deficiency in available lime. The lime has leached out. It must be supplied. On soils which for some reason, exceptional to the rule, there is sufficient lime, alfalfa may be started and grown successfully even without inoculation. The reason for the unnecessary inoculation will be found to be that the soil has already been stocked with nitrogen-fixing bacteria through the medium of clover, cowpeas, beans or one of a hundred other legumes.

Some of the authorities are now advocating going to the roadside, the fence corners or other places where sweet clover or burr clover, or lespedeza, or some other legumes are growing, taking some of the soil from underneath, scatter it over the alfalfa seed bed and harrow it under. By this mean nitrogen-fixing bacteria will be added to the soil, bacteria that have been making their living off the very kind of soil in which they are appointed to continue operations.

Better still, of course, would be soil taken from a field in which alfalfa had grown, a field where conditions are similar as to character of soil, climate, growing zone, etc. Naturally bacteria that have been feeding on alfalfa must have established alfalfa-loving characteristics.

Suppose some cotton farmer gets inspiration enough to get out of the ruts and takes the advice of the man who does not believe in inoculation or liming, and suppose he fails, as he is likely to do, what a pity! When again will he be in frame of mind to try?

Preparing the Seed Bed.

The preparation of the seed bed with reference to weed eradication is important. It is time well spent if two years are taken in preparing the land for alfalfa. If barnyard manure is applied, it is better to follow with a crop of corn as a weed eradicator. This followed by rye or oats drilled between the corn rows at the last time the corn is worked, will afford not only a winter cover crop, but good pasturage for the colts and calves during the winter. After the rye or oats, as the case may be, is taken off, the cowpea or soy bean will prove excellent for keeping the weeds from getting a start. Turning under the cowpeas or soy beans and harrowing the ground until it is in find tilth, as good a seed bed as could be obtained for growing alfalfa is prepared.

Weeds and alfalfa do not do well together. If the farmer can not get rid of the weeds, he need not look to alfalfa to do it. Many farmers have had fits of despair over the weeds and crab grass which have made their appearance in their alfalfa patches.

But weeds are not formidable obstacles to growing alfalfa where the precautions described have been taken. Even where the weeds have appeared in an alfalfa patch there is a fighting chance for alfalfa if the right steps are taken to keep down the weeds. The method usually recommended is to run a disk harrow over the field. This plays havoc with the weeds, but harms the alfalfa very little. By some it is claimed that the harrowing will break up the alfalfa crowns or bunches and start new plants. Weed eradication in the field will rarely be necessary if the seed bed is properly prepared in advance.

Then Put In Lime.

Having brought the seed bed through two seasons of preparation and having broken and harrowed the ground, the next important step is to put in the lime. The amount of lime to apply will depend upon the degree of acidity or sourness of the land, not on the amount of lime already in the soil. The degree of sourness is usually determined by the use of litmus paper, a prepared paper that can be purchased at any drug store. This paper when imbedded in fairly moist soil and left a short time, when taken out will show by the change of color how acid the soil is. If the change of color is very marked plenty of lime should be applied. The application will vary from one to two tons per acre.

Lime is comparatively inexpensive and when once applied serves its purpose five or more years. Ground limestone is the form which is most generally used. The price is determined largely by the cost of freight. At lime manufacturing centers the ground limestone can usually be bought at $1 per ton and even less, especially where the lime is a by-product.

The lime should be broadcasted or drilled in. If broadcasted, then harrowed under.

Sourness of soil is attributed to an incomplete stage of decomposition of vegetable matter which has been turned into the soil. The lime is the one element that will at once adjust conditions and permit other bacteria as well as the nitrogen fixing bacteria to do their work. The vegetable matter which has been turned under in preparing the seed bed and is in process of decomposition, that is, which is being transformed by bacteria, proceeds with its processes most favorably in the presence of lime, becomes humus and then plant food.

An application of nitrate of soda after the alfalfa has come up, especially if it is not showing good color, has often proved helpful.

Cropping Alfalfa.

When the alfalfa plant has grown its full height, a second growth will the second growth has put up its shoots and has started vigorously, be found starting at the roots. When then is the time to cut off the first crop. If the weather is normal, in a month's time there will be another crop ready to cut. The same signs of when to cut are to be followed in each instance—that is, the oncoming of another crop.

In the South when there has been as much rain as has generally prevailed this summer, the owner of an alfalfa patch will be cutting hay once a month for about six months in the year. Indeed, the prospect are favorable in some alfalfa patches for seven crops this year, five already having been cut, and the growing season ahead extending through September and October.

If a ton of cured hay per acre is obtained with each cutting, the alfalfa can be counted as doing first rate. Some will do better.

Alfalfa hay is worth taking good care of. The weather is not always favorable for curing it in the field, especially during the thundershower period. Canvas caps for the piles of hay in the field pay for themselves over and over by saving hay that would rot in the field from too much rain. Any grower of hay of whatever kind of hay it may be can well afford to provide hay caps.

Alfalfa hay is good, rich hay and ranks very near wheat bran in the amount of nutriments, ton for ton. Wheat bran costs about $30 per ton laid down in the South. Raise alfalfa hay and the wheat bran need not be purchased. The alfalfa has a feeding value of nearly $30 per ton at present prices, but at the outset of this article a selling prices of $25 was set as an average.

As a feed alfalfa is a producer of high-class barnyard manure. Considering that the feeding value of alfalfa is nearly $30 per ton and the manure produced of high fertilizing value, the conclusion is that alfalfa is most profitable to the farmer when he feeds it to farm animals and applies the manure to the land.

Thus the story of alfalfa ends most happily when alfalfa is married to a home made live stock business.

COTTON FIELDS TELL STORY OF TWO ASPECTS

No Cause for Complaint in the Central or Eastern Belt. Spinners Reluctant.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 16.—A genuine crop scare in a considerable portion of the cotton belt and an absence of bullish activity in the price marts was an anomaly presented during the week. A partial explanation for it was, that while the crop was admittedly losing condition in Oklahoma and Texas, in practically all the rest of the belt there was no good reason for complaint. In fact, most of the central and eastern belt sent in reports of excellent progress toward a satisfactory yield. There was thus a two-sided story from the cotton fields, and the sections which last season had only moderate outturns were giving promise of evening up matters with a section that had bumper crops.

The promise of rains in the western part of the belt at the close of last wek, which afforded much of the basis for the bearish activity in the speculative market on Friday and Saturday, proved barren of much results, for the showers were scattered, and by no means sufficient to relieve the situation. In only a few localities did they amount to enough to give relief, and as the temperatures continued high, some of them might better not have come. Arkansas had some fine rains, which put an end to an incipient drouth. The week has brought no important relief to Oklahoma and Texas, and most students of the situation have reduced expectations for those important areas.

It seems certain enough damage already has been done to make unlikely a yield of as much as last year, despite increased acreage. The injury will continue until the drouth is relieved, and then for them to have full benefit there will have to be a late and open fall so late fruit can mature.

In the central belt conditions are still excellent, and the critical period will soon pass. Expectations are for the largest crop ever gathered in this territory, and picking will start in earnest in a few weeks. The "first" bale has already appeared here, nine days ahead of last year and five earlier than the average date. However, the crop as a whole is not that much ahead, the bale having come from the section that is trying to get ahead of the boll weevil by early planting and forced cultivation.

Opinion here is that the improvement of the past few weeks in the eastern belt has been such as to make possible a large yield, though it is doubted whether the record of two years ago will be reached in any large area.

The spot situation is still without much feature, and it seems likely that the spinners are going to take their time about buying. Very little forward business is reported booked and the disposition to scatter orders is not yet marked. From across the water comes talk of trade not being so promising, though there is no suspicion that one motive for such news is the need of raw material in large quantities soon and it will not hurt any to spread the notion that trade is going to be dull, thus helping to depress values and enable as cheap buying as possible.

The effect of the legislation against futures, should it be passed, is also expected to be for lower prices, which is another motive for the spinners waiting. There are many people who think the removal of this menacing cloud would result in a very quick revival of bullish speculative activity and thus the crop scare would become a price factor of more importance than it has been.

The foreign spinner, no doubt, also feels that the money situation is such that there will be a rush to sell the new crop, which will better his chances of getting bargains provided he does not show too much eagerness this early.

The domestic spinner naturally is biding his time and being conservative, pending the passage of the tariff act and its effect on business. Other things also encourage him to be a little patient, although advices indicate a healthy prospect for business.

'L. & N.' Not Much Worried Over the Senatorial Probe

Busy Developing Its Own Lines, Has No Time To Buy New Holdings.

Interests familiar with affairs of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company are not apprehensive over the outcome of whatever action may be taken in connection with the resolution introduced in the Senate by Senator Lea. This resolution calls for investigation and report by the Interstate Commerce Commission of the ownership and control of the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis Railway Company and other subsidiary companies of the first mentioned road, "and the practices and methods of the Louisville and Nashville in attempting to preserve a monopoly in its territory."

It is not thought that there will be immediate legal action in the matter, as any investigation that may be made by the commission would necessarily consume a considerable amount of time, and it is considered more or less doubtful in the minds of some that sufficient evidence will be obtained to warrant the institution of a suit by the Government calling for the divorce of the lines involved.

It is known that the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis has lines running in territory which may be considered competitive with the Louisville and Nashville. But whether it can be established that any collusion exists or has existed between the two roads to abolish competition is quite another question. So far as te Tennessee Central Railroad's purchase by the Louisville and Nashville is concerned, it is understood that such a development has not been considered by the management of the last mentioned property.

The Louisville and Nashville, it is pointed out, is kept busy developing and improving its own road in order to care more expeditiously for the large traffic that is being offered, and is not in the market for other lines. It owns about 75 per cent of the stock of the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis, which virtually gives it control of that system. No doubt the management of the Louisville and Nashville will fight a suit, should it be instituted by the Government, to the bitter end.

At the present time the company is spending large amounts of money in double-tracking its main liens from a point about 10 miles above Nashville to Birmingham, Ala., a distance of over 300 miles. When this important work is completed the road will be in a position to handle its business in that territory much more effectively than at present. The double-track work is not being done on the old roadbed all the distance, as in many places lines are being straightened, and at Nashville one track is being run around the city to avoid congestion. It is proposed to utilize one of the tracks between Nashville and Birmingham for freight and the other for passengers.

Louisville and Nashville has a very large surplus and it is believed in some circles that before long stockholders will receive another "bonus" in stock. The last one of $12,000,000 was only about half what was expected, and at that time predictions were freely made that within a reasonable length of time something more in this connection might be looked for. Earnings of the company are substantial during the fiscal year ended June 30 last, there having been an estimated balance available for dividends approximately of 11 1-2 or 12 per cent. Last year there was a surplus available for dividends equal to 15.93 per cent on the $60,000,000 capital stock then outstanding.

Gains Outnumber Losses in Stocks

Business Is Light, but Tone Is Firm During Short Session In Wall Street.

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Texas Company touched 120 at the opening of the stock market, advancing 1 point over Friday's final. A number of stocks were higher at the beginning, but at the end of half an hour the tone was heavy and recessions were in order. There was a nervous feeling over corn crop figures. Rock Island preferred declined a point, and the same amount of loss was sustained by Mexican Petroleum and St. Paul.

Amalgamated Copper began ¼ higher, but soon lost it and declined ½.

Steel common was ⅛ off.

Among the other losses were Union Pacific ⅜, Erie ¼ and American Can ⅛. The gains included Southern Pacific ⅜, Northern Pacific ½ and Colorado Fuel and Iron ¼.

Americans in London were irregular.

The curb market was dull.

The market closed steay; governments unchanged; other bonds steady.

No One Surprised at Passing of Dividend

National Railways of Mexico Made the Plaything of Every Rebel Chieftain.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Persons sufficiently interested in the National Railways of Mexico to watch earnings long ago decided that the company could not pay another semi-annual dividend on its first preferred stock while the revolution continued. Members of the New York board said the payment due August 10 would not be made; and when word came from Mexico City that the usual declaration expected at this time had been omitted by the directors, there was no surprise.

The Railways' lines have been the plaything of the rebels and bandits wherever they have congregated in numbers sufficient to defy the authorities. Under the delusion that one of the first rules of warfare is to destroy as much property as possible, the insurrectos have burned trestles and torn up track in which they, as natives of Mexico, had a proprietary interest.

There is a great deal of European money invested in the National Railways, as well as a very respectable amount of American capital, but the Mexican Government owns $74,724,000 of the $150,000,000 common stock; $10,000,000 of the $57,662,000 of the first preferred and $38,278,00 of the $240,597,000 of second preferred.

Moreover, the Government will be held liable for the damage to the railways when peace is restored, so that every time a piece of property is destroyed the Mexican Government is saddled with additional obligations. Preliminary estimates for the last year indicate that the company earned almost $2,000,000 over its expenses and fixed charges, or about $500,000 less than the dividends paid.

SEABOARD NOTES CHEAP.

The offering of the unsold balance of Seaboard Air Line $1,900,000 equipment trust notes is being made at a price to yield 6 per cent. Seaboard Air Line Railway's surplus over all fixed charges and bond interest, for the year ended June 30, last, it is understood, was between $1,725,000 and $1,750,000, or equivalent to 6.9 per cent on the $25,000,000 preferred stock. Last year the surplus on the same basis was $899,000.

THE NEW ISSUES.

The Financial Chronicle's New York review of new security issues for the last six months shows them to have been the smallest in years and much below the average of the last eight years, totaling for stocks and bonds only $627,048,160, par value, compared with $1,219,250 in the first six months of 1912.

NEWS FOR INVESTORS

Anaconda Copper Company's production for July exceeds June's by 600,000 pounds, although this is 1,000,000 pounds below the July output last year.

• • •

American Smelting and Refining Company earnings, although not so large as last year, owing to Mexican disturbances, will make no change in the regular dividend.

• • •

Minneapolis and St. Louis Railroad for the twelve months ended June 30 increased gross by $1,880,782 and net by $1,173,665, compared with last year.

• • •

Seaboard Air Line for the fiscal year increased total operating revenue $783,417 and net $1,028,700 over 1912. Surplus, which increased $836,558 over last year, is equal to 7 1-4 per cent on the preferred stock outstanding, compared with 8 3-4 per cent in 1912.

• • •

The St. Louis, Iron Mountain and Southern Railway Company has been authorized by the Missouri Public Service Commission to issue $28,584,500 first and refunding 40-year 6 per cent bonds, of which $26,730,000 are to replace bonds already outstanding, and the remainder for reimbursing the road for expenditures made for improvements and equipment.

HAS METHOD OF MAKING COTTON LIVE FOR YEARS

German Savant Patents System for Producing Frost and Pest Proof Perennial Plant.

By M. A. ROSE.

Now comes Herr Woldemar Schuetze, the newest recruit to the ranks of those who would revolutionize cotton growing.

All the world eventually will adopt his system, he asserts, and thereby produce a wiltproof, pestproof, frostproof, high-grade cotton which need be planted but once in 25 years.

The system makes the cotton-picking machine entirely practicable and increases the planter's profit, not only by cutting out the cost of seed, but also by reducing the cost of labor. These are some of his claims.

The system, it seems, is protected by patents in every country of the globe except in Japan. The wily Japs, according to Herr Woldemar Schuetze, considered his application, turned it down, and then spread knowledge of his methods the length and breadth of the Flowery Empire.

Details Are Vague.

But when it comes to details, Herr Schuetze is rather vague, or at least the reports of interviews with him in London are rather vague.

The cotton plant in its wild state is perennial. This is the foundation stone of the system. In the countries where wild cotton is found the plant lives 20 to 25 years. Under cultivation it degenerates to the extent of about 80 per cent after the first crop, and can not resist frost.

Herr Schuetze promises to prevent this degeneration, to make the cotton plant live 25 years or more, to make it proof against frost and all pests. He does not tell how, except to say:

"Like so many great discoveries, mine is most simple.

"One wonders why it has not been discovered ages ago. It is really the result of applying the law that in grafting, the closer the relationship, the better the result. When this system is once applied, the reduction in cost will soon amount to 50 per cent at least.

"There is an old law that the qualities of cultivation in a plant are not continued with certainty in seedlings; that is to say, that they are most unreliable. Now, my process prevents this, applying the law I referred to by first sowing, and then grafting from the parent plant onto the seedling."

Herr Schuetze takes great comfort from the fact that experiments by the Royal Pomological Society at Eisenach bear him out.

Helps Cotton Picker.

"With perennial cotton plants, or rather, trees," he goes on, "it will be possible to train them to grow in a series of arches. It follows, therefore, that a cotton-picking machine can be designed which will do its work with far greater regularity and thoroughness than is possible under the present system, where a large number of levers or arms are required to work in equally numerous directions and angles. At present, the cotton-picking machine leaves behind about one-third of the cotton, whereas, under the new system, practically all of the cotton will be picked with comparative ease.

"Again, with the trees trained in this manner, the cotton bolls will be better exposed to the rays of the sun, with the result that the bolls will develop better, grow larger and produce better cotton."

The Carvonica cotton plant, which is perennial, already is well known, but it will not grow everywhere. Herr Schuetze says he can fit his system to any cotton-growing climate. Three to five years would be required to adapt the cotton of the South to his system.

Shorts Cover When Rains Fail to Come

Forecast of Fair Weather for Texas and Oklahoma Causes Rally in Cotton.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Reports of half an inch of rainfall over the Oklahoma belt lessened the strong influence of Liverpool cables to-day, and the cotton market opened only 2 to 6 points higher than Friday's final, whereas Liverpool was 4 to 6 points higher. Ordinarily such strength in Liverpool would have caused much higher prices here. There was some unloading on weather reports, but prices were only lowered 2 to 4 points from the opening range. The ring, however, were inclined to sell rather freely on rains in Oklahoma and predictions by Kofler, of New Orleans, for more rain in Oklahoma and better prospects for Texas. Offerings were readily absorbed by the leaders who bought yesterday.

A sudden short covering movement prevailed during the last hour, based on the Government forecast of fair weather in Oklahoma and Texas over Sunday, resulting in prices recovering the early decline and advancing some 4 to 8 points higher than the initial level.

At the close the market was steady with prices at a net adance of 3 to 5 points from the closing quotations of Friday.

NEW SEABOARD MANAGEMENT IS DOING WELL

Deficit of $121,000 in First Quarter Overcome and oGod Surplus Besides.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Seaboard Air Line in the year ended June 30 earned in excess of 7 per cent on $23,894,000. Final surplus was approximately $1,730,000, against $813,000 in 1912, both figures including only rail operations.

The showing reflects credit on the new management. In a year when the company's territory scored only about 60 per cent of a normal cotton crop, and when the initial three months' operations under the old management produced a deficit of $121,000, results for the succeeding nine months not only overcame these handicaps, but so far recovered that gross increased $1,523,000 and surplus over all charges increased $817,000.

On basis of nine months' operations under the new management, and allowing for effort necessary to pick up and recover the initial quarter's deficit, the property appears to be earning at rate of nearly $2,000,000 surplus annually, or equivalent to more than 8 per cent on the outstanding preferred. Total operating ratio in the past year was 72 per cent of gross. In 1912 it was 75 per cent.

Officials look forward to better than a $2,000,000 surplus in the current year. Crops offer excellent promise, with one of the largest cotton crops ever raised among the prospects this year. General business is moving in fair volume and traffic outlook shows no unfavorable signs.

Selling U. S. Bonds Short Is Risky Deal

Restricted Market for These Securities Makes the 'Bear's' Lot One Not Enviable.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—The trader who sells any Government bonds short takes a long chance of making a profit, because of the restricted market for these securities, and the short seller of those which bear coupons assumes a risk much greater than is attached to any active stock or bond on the Stock Exchange list. Government coupon bonds, particularly those which have the circulation privilege, are comparatively scarce.

The coupon bonds may be converted into registered bonds, but registered bonds may not be exchanged for others of the same clas which bear coupons.

The application of this provision to the issues which are used to secure bank note issues, naturally, has worked to cut down the number of coupon bonds outstanding and thereby greatly lessened the opportunity of short sellers for covering their contracts at times when they have the best advantage for a profitable transaction.

An expert on Government issues predicted yesterday that traders who went short on coupon 2s below 96 would have difficulty in covering at any price under par unless some development at Washington occurs to weaken them drastically.

New High Made for Corn, But Not Held

Fear of Rains Throughout the Southwest Acts as Check on Bull Operations.

ST. LOUIS CASH QUOTATIONS.

Wheat—No. 2 red . . . . . 87¼@89½
Corn—No. 2 . . . . . 78½
Oats—No. 2 . . . . . 42½@43

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—Profit-taking was again to be seen in the corn market early to-day. December corn was ⅛c to ¼c lower than yesterday. At Oklahoma City there was a half inch of rain reported and fifteen minutes of rain at Hutchinson, Kans.

Wheat was up ⅝c to ⅞c and strong, mainly in sympathy with corn. Northwestern receipts were smaller. Liverpool was higher.

Oats were up ¼c to ⅜c.

Provisions were better.

New high prices were made in corn on the present bull campaign in that cereal when September sold at 75⅛, December at 69¾ and May at 71 to-day. There were recessions of ⅜c to ⅝c from the best prices and resting spots for the day were at an advance of only ⅛c for September, while the other months were ⅛c to ⅜c lower. The fear of rains throughout the Southwest was the leading bearish factor late in the session.

Wheat closed ⅝c to ⅞c higher and oats were unchanged to ⅛c higher.

Provisions were higher all around on shorts covering.

BEARS CHECKED BY DAMAGE IN WESTERN BELT

Small Demand for Forward Delivery in Spots Best Argument for Low Prices.

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 16.—Bearish activity, which had been encouraged by the anti-option legislation pending at Washington has been somewhat restrained recently by reports of deterioration in the condition of the cotton crop in Texas and Oklahoma.

Unevenly distributed showers have fallen in both of those States within the last few days, but it is believed that what relief has come has been too late to prevent material damage to the crop in that section of the belt. Consequently the next bureau report is expected to show a further decline in condition from last month, when both Texas and Oklahoma fell off sharply.

The one redeeming feature in the crop situation at the moment is the improved outlook in the eastern half of the belt. According to reports received in this market, the crop in Alabama and in Georgia has undergone wonderful improvement since the date of the last bureau report. Should this improvement in the eastern belt continue, the deterioration likely to be shown in the Western belt will be offset, in a measure, by the improvement in the Atlantics.

It is believed that while conditions may be serious in those two States, rains within a week would yet permit the making of a fairly large crop, and it is argued that even if there were a shortage in the crop in the Western belt the increase apparent in the Atlantics, together with a normal yield in the Central belt, would result in a crop of at least 15,000,000 bales.

The most bearish feature in the general situation is the fact that there is less demand for forward deliveries in spots than has been the case in years. Fully good middling is being offered in this market at 45 points on October, and good middling at 15 points less for September delivery, with few, if any, buyers in sight. The slack spot demand is attributed to declining trade at Manchester and to the bearish sentiment engendered at Liverpool by the introduction of the Clarke bill in Congress.

News as to the outcome of the fight being made against the Clarke bill continues of a favorable character, and it is believed here now that the measure has been practically killed as a result of the criticism aimed at it by Southern newspapers generally.

The optimistic feeling prevailing here has been reflected by an advance of $600 in the price of New Orleans Cotton Exchange stock, two shares of which have sold this week for $2,100, with none offering at less than $2,500 now.

When the Clarke bill was first introduced, shares of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange declined below $1,500, whereas the stock had been $2,500 bid before the bill was introduced by Senator Clarke.

Travel Troubles

They are great and numerous—if not precluded by availing yourself of the opportunities offered by this safe, strong bank.

For instance: If you leave your valuable papers or jewelry in the house during your absence from the city, all during your travels you will be anxious concerning their safety. Whereas, if you rent a Safe Deposit Box in our Steel Vault, your mind will be relieved of this anxiety, which will be worth many times the cost of rental.

Again: If you start out with a pocketful of cash, you will be incessantly bothered with making change; and if traveling in foreign countries, will be subject to the dangers of receiving SHORT change. Our Travelers' Cheques or Letters of Credit will make your travel money matters simple and safe. And the cost is very nominal.

WHAT ATLANTA MANUFACTURERS AND JOBBERS ARE DOING

ATLANTA HAS NEW FRIENDS AS RESULT OF CONVENTION

Many Attracted to City Who Never Came Before, but Who Now Will Make Semi-Annual Trips and Become Regular Customers.

Attendance Surpasses All Expectations, as Does the Volume of Business Transacted as Direct Result of the Fine Gathering.

The Southern Merchants' Convention is over.

Registration reached the imposing total of 2,500, Secretary H. T. Moore reported Saturday. Several hundreds did not register. Probably 3,000 is none too liberal an estimate of the number of retailers from Atlanta territory who visited the city during the two weeks.

With a theater party at the Forsyth Monday night, a barbecue Wednesday, and the Atlanta-Chattanooga ball game Friday, the visiting delegates enjoyed the second week of their stay, and the Atlanta merchants who pushed the convention to success believe they have made enduring friends of their guests, friends who will come again in February and every half year after that.

The purpose of the convention was twofold. First, the retail dealers from all over the South were given an opportunity to meet and discuss the problems which confront them in the everyday conduct of their business. Second, every effort was made to emphasize Atlanta's advantages as a buying center for all the South.

Both Objects Achieved.

Both these objects were achieved. The speeches during the first week of the convention threw valuable help in the way of those who found perplexities in buying, selling, management of stores, credits, or any of the multitudinous things which go to make up a merchant's work.

It is a good thing that the proceedings are to be published. All of the speeches are well worthy of preservation for future reference. Some of the speakers gave plain talks, just the simple, practical expression of what they had learned through years of experience.

Others spoke with scholarly finish—their speeches really were erudite, of studied completeness and finish. Still others were inspirational—they pointed out the intellectual and spiritual significance of the merchant's work. They made him feel that his is a noble calling, that the great prizes of the world are for the business man.

New Friends Made.

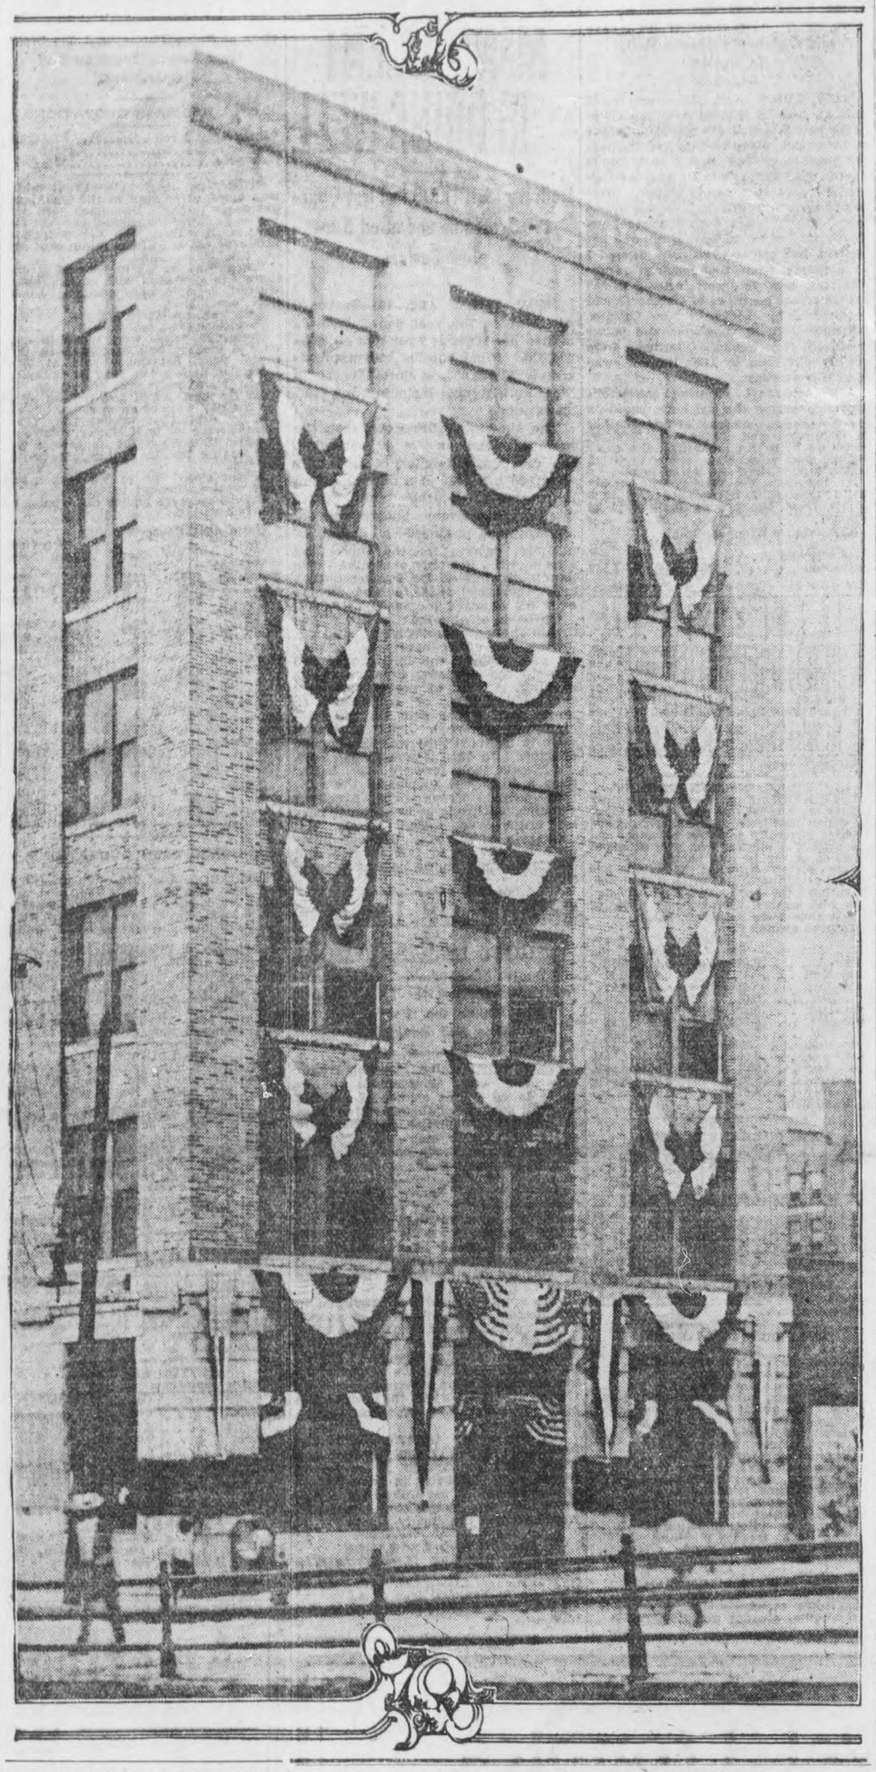
From the other point of view, the results attained were no less notable. Hundreds of buyers came to Atlanta who never had been here before, and who would not have come this time had it not been for the convention.

To them the completeness, the cheapness, the quality and the diversity of things sold by Atlanta manufacturers and jobbers must have been a revelation—indeed, they so expressed themselves.

Some of them bought big bills. Every large jobbing house reports a splendid fall trade. The crop prospects are such as to make everyone optimistic. There will be a good demand for merchandise in the fall, and the buyers prepared to meet it.

There were others who did not buy so much. They are just as welcome, for the Atlantans feels that their goods, their prices and their service are right, and that every customer who buys here once will come again.

New Associations.



A noteworthy result of the meeting was the organization of a permanent body—the Southern States Merchants' Association, headed by J. W. Vaughn, of Cartersville, Ga.

This, it is hoped, will bring very tangible benefits to the retailers of the South in general. It may prove to be the parent of scores of local organizations, which can do worlds of good in watching credits, preventing price-slashing and equalizing freight rates.

USES U. S. PORTS.

Of wheat exported from Canada last year, 64 per cent went by United States ports.

WARD-TRUITT COMPANY'S building, decorated in honor of the visiting merchants, as were many of the wholesale houses.

WATERPROOF SHOES OF PAPER.

Waterproof shoes made of paper are covered by a patent recently issued to Morris H. Siegel. The paper is of sufficient toughness to stand at least one wearing. To prevent tearing there are gores at the sides which unfold to admit the foot.

High Prices for Ostrich Farms.

A striking illustration of the profits in ostrich farming is found in the report that a man in the Oudtshoorn feather district of South Africa has leased 290 acres of land for a period of ten years for $7,500 per year. In the same district 35 acres of land sold for $30,000.

NEW RICE HIGH; MARKET IS BARE OF LAST YEAR'S

Honduras Quoted at 7½ Cents to Jobbers by Big Atlanta Brokerage House.

New rice is being shown by H. H. Whitcomb & Burke Co., Atlanta's foremost grocery brokers, and the price is "sky high," higher than any of the grocers remember, the figure quoted being 7 1-2 cents for full head Honduras clean. Japan sells for 3 1-2 and 4 cents. These are quotations to wholesalers.

The market is bare of old crop rice of good grades. Those who demand the fancy article have had to deny themselves. The new crop, it seems, is moving slowly, and indications are that the high levels will be maintained for some time, although a break is possible later on. At the present time, even samples are hard to get from New Orleans, which, of course, is the center of the rice trade.

Cheese also is high, considering the season. The usual fall advance is coming very early. Plymouth, Wis., American full cream cheese is quoted, daisy, 15 cents, and twin daisies, 14 3-4 cents.

Great Lakes salt herring will begin to come in next month, and this most palatable fish promises to be in unparalleled demand. This is the variety known for years as "white fish," but the real white fish is as scarce as prairie chicken, and by a recent government ruling it is made an offense to brand fresh water herring by this name. The Whitcomb-Burke supply comes from the great fisheries at Green Bay, Wis.

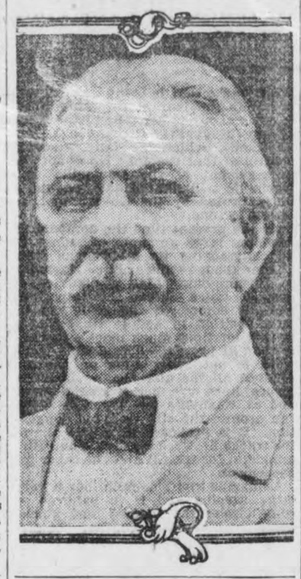
Every week, it seems, some new product appears on the market to make the housewife's work lighter. The woman who so desires could feed her family for months at a time and never do a bit of cooking, with bakers' bread, canned brown bread, coffee which needs only the addition of water, tinned roast beef, lemon pie filling, lemon sugar, onion salad and a multitude of ready-prepared articles.

The latest in this line is prepared doughnut flour. The powder contains flour, eggs, spices and all the other ingredients of doughnuts. All that is necessary is to add water, roll the dough, cut it and fry the doughnuts. Sufficient to make two dozen doughnuts is sold for 15 cents.

New pack sweet potatoes are due in a few weeks, with a fair-sized crop of excellent quality in prospect. This is an all-Southern product unknown in the North a few years ago. But the juicy Southern yellow pumpkin yam is so much superior to the kiln-dried, mealy Jersey sweet potato of the North that it is believed a very short time will serve to make the more palatable product supreme in the market.

Every day there's a new condiment. This time it is onion salad, a Boston product with a peculiar tang which makes a hit on first trial. Louisiana, the home of tabasco peppers, is putting out a new tabasco sauce which the Whitcomb-Burke Company is introducing with considerable success.

Fate of Exhibit to Be Sealed Tuesday



Thirty-one Manufacturers Signed Up by Saturday, Besides Those of Cotton Industry.

Atlanta manufacturers will seal the fate of the proposed permanent exhibit of Atlanta-made goods Tuesday. A luncheon will be held at the Ansley at 10 o'clock that day. If sufficient support can not be secured by that time to guarantee the rental of four floors for two years, the attempt will be dropped, at least for a year.

Thirty-one manufacturers had signed by Saturday, an each of the 31 was commissioned to bring in another. Including the cotton exhibit, three floors seemed to be assured.

Contractors now are at work on the Chamber of Commerce building, remodeling it for offices. If the plans are to be changed, immediate decision is necessary.

WILLIS E. RAGAN, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the "M. & M.," to whom much of the convention's success is due.

Electric Signs Now Made Right at Home

One of the First Products of New Studio Is Largest Display South of New York.

Atlanta now possesses a first-class electric sign studio. Heretofore local merchants have been obliged to purchase their electric signs in other cities and have them shipped here at heavy expense.

Proof that this is no inconsequential studio is the new electric sign at the south end of the Whitehall-Peachtree viaduct—the largest south of New York, and one of the most beautiful anywhere. It was made in Atlanta from start to finish. It uses more than 2,500 lamps, and some of the letters on the sign are more than twelve feet high.

The new studio is the property of the Massengale Bulletin System, and is in the remodeled building which the Atlanta Athletic Club once occupied at 56 Edgewood avenue.

Ten high-salaried experts, men who thoroughly understand how to design and manufacture intricate and artistic electric signs, have been brought here by the Massengale Company to take charge of the new studio. M. O. Trusdell is in charge of the electrical department.

St. Elmo Massengale is president of the company and Gordon B. Massengale is secretary and manager.

E. Frank Munn is assistant manager and general superintendent.

NEW ARTIFICIAL SILK IS MADE FROM COTTON

A factory on an eight-acre plot will soon be erected at Kingston, N. Y., for manufacturing artificial silk from cotton by the Greiner-Wilkins process. Proof of the practicability of the new process was that stockings, shirtings, plushes, velvets and neckties could be made from the spun yarn. The demand for artificial silk is considerably greater than the supply, and it is maintained that the cost of its production from cotton is cheaper than where wood was used, and that silk made by the new process is more durable than that made from wood.

TOYS FROM WASTE WOOD.

A toy company in Sheboygan, Wis., has begun to use only the waste wood from other mills. It has even worked out a system of using all small pieces, as well as the larger ones, so that practically nothing is lost but sawdust.

YEARLY TRADE IN MILLINERY IS $2,000,000

Atlanta Leads in Field Where Brains Are Prime Requisite for Success.

In a field which is in many respects the most difficult in the mercantile world—millinery—Atlanta stands supreme in the South, and is one of the prominent centers of the United States.

Millinery involves no question of geography. Transportation charges do not enter into it as they do, for instance, in the flour or coal trade. Millinery involves few problems of prices or narrow cost margins. A hat is worth what it will bring.

The business does require the keenest study—study carried on on two sides of the ocean (there are many Atlanta designers who spend a part of each season in Paris). It requires able generalship, for competition is keen both in the designing and selling fields. More trying than any of these things is the constant shifting of women's whims. These make the business the great thing it is, but also they cause heavy losses when goods bought at high prices suddenly become absolutely unsalable.

Brains, then, alone conquer in this peculiar business. And Atlanta is long on brains.

Brains have built up a business which insiders estimate at $2,000,000 a year in Atlanta. There are six large wholesale houses in Atlanta—E. L. Rhodes Company, Meyer-Regenstein Company, M. Kutz Company, D. Silverman Company, N. Myers Company and N. Bodenheimer & Bro.

The fall season just has opened. It will attract, in two weeks or so, about 1,500 buyers.

They come here to see the advance styles, to buy hats trimmed in these styles, to take notes of the models for later production in Tallapoosa or Hushpuckena, or to copy the models with thorough fidelity for the same purpose.

At What Rate Do You Do Business?

Fire insurance rates on a building are based not only on the chances of that building catching fire, but to a larger extent on the facilities at hand for putting out the fire, should it occur.

The more convenient the Fire Service, the lower the rate.

Just so in merchandising; the cost of doing business is directly governed by the convenience of a merchant's source of supply.

Take shoes, for instance; the Southern merchant who buys his stock in the distant markets of New England and the West is paying a mighty high rate to do business.

Here are the extra costs he pays:

1st. Excess freight charges.

2d. Interest on half the stock he now carries that would be unnecessary with a near-by efficient factory connection.

3d. Loss on accumulation and depreciation of dead styles.

4th. Sales missed by being out of the right styles and sizes when he needs them.

GIRL STICKS TO STORY OF HER FLIGHT WITH DIGGS

Marsha Warrington Says Former State Architect Took Advantage of Friendship in Elopement to Reno—Lived as Man and Wife.

Accused Appealed to Her to Keep Him Out of the Penitentiary, She Testifies—Court Cautions Jurors Not to Discuss the Case.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 16.—Her eyes averted from the gaze of Maury L. Diggs, former State Architect, on trial for white slavery, Marsha Warrington, the girl with whom he is alleged to have eloped to Reno, leaving behind a wife and family, finished her recital of her relations with the prisoner and remained steadfast to her story how he had taken advantage of a platonic friendship and against her will made her take the trip to the Nevada town, where they lived together as man and wife.

Though vigorously cross-examined, the girl's story was unshaken.

In concluding her testimony, Miss Warrington said:

"After arriving in Reno on March 10 we had luncheon and then we went to the Riverside Hotel, while Diggs and Caminetti went to a real estate office," she said. "They said they were going to rent a bungalow and that they intended to remain in Reno about six months.

Took Suite of Roome.

"When Diggs and Caminetti returned, Diggs registered and we went to a suite of rooms. We had two bedrooms, a parlor and a bath. Diggs and I had one room and Caminetti and Lola the other.

"We took a bungalow while we were there. We were never out of it except at night and never farther away than around the block. Diggs cautioned us not to be seen.

"When Chief Hillhouse came to arrest us on the morning of the 14th, we were still in bed. Diggs said: 'There are the police.'

"He understood that it was a serious situation, for he told me: 'It's up to you girls to keep us out of the penitentiary. Do everything you can to shield us.' He told us to say that Lola and I had occupied the front room and that he and Caminetti had slept in the rear room.

"Dear Pickles," He writes.

A letter addressed to "Dear Pickles," said to have been written to Miss Warrington by Diggs after his arrest, was shown to the jury. The letter contained this sentence:

"Don't worry now; everything will come out O. K., and you remember what I said to you, the last words?"

Miss Warrington was asked what were the "last words." Adjurations, she answered, not to tell anything that would incriminate the writer.

During the cross-examination Diggs constantly prompted the questions of his attorneys and steadily kept his eyes on the girl's veiled face, but she constantly avoided his gaze.

When the essentials of her previous testimony were called into doubt, she made her answers a stronger reaffirmation.

The courtroom was somewhat startled in the afternoon session by the emphatic admonitions of the judge to the jury that the case must not be discussed by the jurors, particularly with any friend of Diggs or F. Drew Caminetti, the latter a co-defendant in another case on a similar indictment. The judge said they must not even allow the case to be mentioned within their hearing or read about it in the newspapers.

Jurors Are Cautioned.

These are the usual instructions to jurors, but the emphasis with which they were twice repeated by Judge Van Fleet this afternoon gave rise to inquiries which he would not satisfy. Theodore Roche, who thus far has conducted the Government's case, merely said there was reason for the court's order. One juror admitted he had been in company where the case was discussed, though he had not joined in the talk.

Two minor witnesses—the managing editor of a Sacramento newspaper and the Probation Officer of Sacramento County—denied to-day that there had been any scandal connected with the names of the four on the point of exploding into print or that arrests were impending if they remained in Sacramento. Miss Warrington had testified that Diggs had told her such was the case, and this fear had been her prime motive for leaving home.

Big Patches of Skin Her Birthday Gifts

Father, Nurse, Brother, Sister and Friends Under Knife for Girl's Sake.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Carolyn Estelle Day, daughter of Frederick D. Day, of Hollis, L. I., celebrated her fourth birthday yesterday in the children's ward of Jamaica Hospital. Carolyn was badly burned while playing around a bondfire, but was all smiles when a dozen of her playmates were ushered into the ward, each bearing a gift. Carolyn admired the presents, and thanked each friend.

"I've got some other presents, too," she said.

"This is a birthday present from daddy," she said, pointing to a three-inch strip of skin which was removed from the arm of her father.

"Here's one from Uncle Langdon," she said, pointing to another strip.

The child's father was unable to supply enough skin, so his brothers, Langdon and Roland; his sisted, Miss Dorothy Day, and Benjamin Dubocq made up the amount needed.

Woman Carried to Shrine, Walks Back

Victim of Elephantiasis Apparently Cured During Novena at Chapel Near Kankakee, Ill.

KANKAKEE, ILL., Aug. 16.—After visiting the shrine of St. Anne de Beaupre at St. Anne, near here, Mrs. Beaupriele Mailloux, of Earl Park, Ind., who had been declared to be slowly dying of elephantiasis, and was carried to the shrine, was able to walk away, and is believed by her friends to be cured.

No other cures were announced by the 3,000 pilgrims who visited the shrine during the novena just closed. The first cure reported was that of Miss Cunea, of Chicago, about ten years ago.

Papers Have Right To Refuse Advertising

Court Rules That Objectionable Matter May Be Declined, Despite Previous Contract.

ST. PAUL, Aug. 16.—That newspapers have a right to decline advertising when they deem it objectionable, even if it is submitted to them under a yearly contract, is the effect of a decision handed down today in the District Court here. The case came up when a local department store was sued by a local paper to recover money due under a yearly contract, which the store management had declared void because certain portions of its advertising copy had been rejected by the paper.

Joy Rider Compelled To Pension Victim

In Lieu of Jail Sentence, Speeder Must Pay Girl $30 a Month Until Recovery.

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 16.—Instead of sending J. S. McNutt, a convicted joy rider, to prison, Judge Wilbur, of the Superior Court, suspended a five-year sentence over him to-day, on condition that he pay $30 a month until she recovers to Miss Olive Davis, a young woman injured when McNutt's machine was wrecked. Physicians say Miss Davis' injuries are permanent.

The girl, in a plaster cast, testified to-day that McNutt was speeding while intoxicated.

'Pussy Sneak' Routs Staid Old Tangos

Creepy Glide Brings New York Team Applications to Teach New Dance.

ONSET, MASS., Aug. 16.—The "tangoes," "hugs," "trots," "grapevine" and other similar dances have been cast into darkness by the creation introduced this afternoon at the local dancing casino by a New York couple. It is called the "pussy sneak," and is danced with the rubber-soled shoes commonly worn at the seaside.

The "pussy sneak" is a creepy sort of dance, with a few glides, but catchy and the New York team that "put the stunt on" had several applications tonight to teach it.

Wildcat Attacks Artist in His Studio

Painter Using Stuffed Animal as Model Has to Fight the Real Thing.

PITTSFIELD, MASS., Aug 16.—Robert Hamilton, a New York artist who has a summer studio in Lenox, near Frogs Landing, is recovering from injuries received in a rough and tumble fight with a wildcat in his lonely studio. He was surprised by the beast while painting a wildcat from a stuffed model.

AFFINITY EARLE ABOUT TO LOSE 'DEAREST' DORA

Third Wife of Famous Wooer, Declared "Sweetest of Them All," Files Suit.

TELLS STORY OF MEETING

Did Not Know of Long Marital Record of Poet Until She Had Joined Him.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—Dora of the laughing brown eyes, third wife and unnumbered affinity of Ferdinand Pinney Earle, New York poet, artist and record wooer—described by him at the time of their marriage in June, 1911, as "the dearest, sweetest and loveliest of them all"—said to-day that she is about to seek her freedom.

She said she actually has begun suit in New York for an absolute divorce, basing her action on evidence she says she has obtained of Earle's behavior on the Continent since she parted from him in March.

Mrs. Earle is now only 25, twelve years younger than Earle. Her maiden name was Helen Theodora Sidford. From her father, an English architect, she inherited artistic tastes and is an artist of pronounced talent. She is a very attractive young woman.

Lived at "Earle's Folly."

The original story that reached America of her relations with Earle narrated a meeting in the fields, a walk home hand in hand, swift and ardent wooing, marriage within the month and a start on a tour of the world, which wound up prematurely in the country home in Monroe, Orange County, known as "Earle's Folly."

Her story to-day sets right much of that early fiction, for the meeting with Earle seems to have been conventional.

"How did you come to give yourself to a man of Earle's matrimonial record?" was asked.

"I knew nothing of his past until after our marriage," she replied. "Whatever his reputation in America, I had lived in a quiet English town and had never heard of his antecedents. After our marriage his life story was cabled from America to the London newspapers. Clippings were sent to me on the Continent on our honeymoon by my mother.

He Softened the Blow.

"It was a terrible shock to find that I had been so utterly deceived, but I accepted the explanation and excuses offered by Mr. Earle and his assurances that I would never have anything of which to complain.

"After our wedding we spent two months on the Continent. In September, 1911, three months following the wedding, we went to America, and lived happily at his place in Monroe, N. Y. Our first baby was born there in April, 1912. I remained with him in America until last January, and then came here to visit my mother, with whom I have since lived. It was arranged that Mr. Earle would come here for the summer.

"At the time of my return I had not the slightest expectation that our relations would go wrong. We kept in constant correspondence. He arrived here in March, remained two days and then went to the Continent. My second baby was born here April 20. Her father has never seen her.

"Soon after he went from here in March information reached me which left me no option except to prepare divorce proceedings. He has appealed to me to abondon them, but that is quite impossible after his conduct as disclosed to me."

Mrs. Earle declined to anticipate by publication the specific evidence she is reserving for the court. Thus the name of the co-respondent is withheld. Judging from Mrs. Earle's convincing manner of speech, she thinks she has ample ground for her petition.

Earle's Love Affairs.

Earle's love affairs were first brought to public notice in 1908 when he took to his Monroe home Miss Julia Kuttner, and informed his wife that the newcomer was his affinity and soul-mate. The rightful Mrs. Earle at that time was formerly Miss Emilie Marie Fischbacher, daughter of a bookseller on the banks of the Seine in Paris, whom Earle had married in 1903 and by whom he had a son, Harold Erwin.

Mrs. Earle departed for France, with a reported money settlement, and obtained a divorce there. Earle, Miss Kuttner and Miss Kuttner's mother went to Europe and domiciled themselves in Venice. Their departure from Monroe was hastened by threats of neighbors there to punish Earle without process of law.

Within a few months Mrs. Kuttner decided a marriage was necessary and a ceremony was performed at the British consulate. Soon afterward a son was born and named Edmond Erwin Earle. In 1910 the second wife sued for the annulment of the marriage on the ground that the ceremony had taken place before Earle was free under French law.

She also charged cruelty, especially following the birth of the child. After long consideration the Westchester County Court granted the petition of annulment and declared the child legitimate.

Earle had not defended either suit, but while the courts were trying to dispose of the second he sailed to Europe with Miss Gertrude Buell Dunn, a bright-eyed young woman from Chicago, who had "advanced" ideas. It was announced that together they would work out and publish a new philosophy on the ideal relations of the sexes. Their zeal subsided and they parted without scandal.

Weds Model; Loses Home; Goes to Work

'I Should Worry,' Remarks Rich Retired Merchant's Son When Disowned.

WORCESTER, MASS., Aug. 16.—Because William A. Lyttle, Jr., son of Colonel W. A. Lyttle, a wealthy retired merchant and erstwhile member of the Governor's Council, eloped with Miss Thyra Linea Johnson, a 19-year-old artist's model of this city, to Putnam, Conn., he has been disowned by his father.

Colonel Lyttle has ordered his son to give the girl up. Disregarding that mandate, young Lyttle brought matters to a crisis by quietly slipping out of town a few days ago with his sweeaheart and having the matrimonial knot tied.

"I should worry," said young Lyttle when he was told of his father's decision, and then he promptly started with his bride to Detroit, where he will learn the automobile business.

Court Frees 'Old Maid' Who Resents Epithet

Judge Rules Spinster Was Right in Smiting Married Woman With Chair.

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—Unmarried women of mature years who are subjected to ridicule as "old maids" have won a victory in court. Miss Minnie Flatley, of the Colonial Hotel, is 31, and Mrs. Lizzie Varley, of the same address, has been calling her an "old maid."

Miss Flatley resented the sarcasm by smiting Mrs. Varley with a chair and punishing her seriously. When she was arraigned in court Judge Gemmill, after hearing the story, said "Discharged."

"I think this sort of provocation justifies any assault up to murder," said the judge. "It is despicable to humiliate a woman."

Father Sells Girl at Auction in Detroit

Authorities Take Steps to Have Marriage of Syrian Child to Turk Annulled.

DETROIT, MICH., Aug. 16.—The marriage license department of the County Clerk's office has taken steps to nullify an auction sale of Marie Aman, a Syrian girl, only 15 years old. Her father made the sale. There were half a dozen bidders.

The girl had been in the country only seven weeks, and was brought here by her father expressly to be sold. A Turk, Mehammed Haj Seleem, was the successful bidder.

The bargain was sealed immediately by the reading of an Oriental marriage service. The girl had a sweetheart who could not bid high enough to win her.

Triplets in Home Where 6 Twins Live

President Wilson Is Honored Three Times in the Naming of the Babies.

LAONIA, WIS., Aug. 16.—Three pairs of twins and a set of triplets is the record that Mrs. Joseph Checota, of this town, boasts. The triplets will be named Woodrow, Wilson and W. W. Joseph, in honor of the President.

The father believes this is a record that will stand for a long time to come.

Mr. and Mrs. Checota have been married six years and in that time have had nine children. All but one are living.

Rockefeller's Rival In Riches Tips Dime

Nitrate King Hands Man Ten Cents for Returning Lost Pocketbook.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Senor E. E. Ossio, the Nitrate King of Chili, who has declared John D. Rockefeller a pauper in comparison with himself, overwhelmed a steward on the United Fruit steamer Pastores yesterday by the size of a tip.

The steward had picked up the Nitrate King's wallet and, running after him, bowed low and handed over the pocketbook. Opening it, Senor Ossio pulled out a dollar bill, then changed his mind, and, taking a dime from his pocket, handed it to the steward.

Archaeologist of Columbia University Discovers Ancient Skulls With Gold-Filled Teeth.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Apparent evidence that dentistry was a profession in prehistoric ages has been disclosed by Professor Marshall H. Saville, archaeologist of Columbia University, who returned here to-day from an exploring expedition in South America. Human skulls containing teeth filled with gold were among the interesting discoveries made in Ecuador.

Charlton at Last in Italy's Grasp

Wife Slayer Loses 3-Year Fight

Now on Ocean on Way to Trial

Porter Charlton, young American, who killed beautiful wife and is now on way to face trial in Italy.

Young Prisoner Is Confident He Will Escape Spending Life in Solitary Confinement.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Porter Charlton, after three years' fight against extradition from America, is in the clutches of the Italian Government and to-day is on the high seas, bound for Italy and for trial on the charge of killing his beautiful young wife and sinking her body in Lake Como in June, 1910.

In spite of the ordeal that faces him, Charlton left New York as cheerful as a schoolboy. Three years in close confinement had repressed his natural buoyancy, but the prospect of a sea voyage, even with a trial for murder awaiting him at his journey's end, restored it to a considerable degree.

"I'll be back for Christmas!" he cried, waving a good-bye from the liner as it pulled out. All the time he has declared that he will be acquitted, in spite of the fact that he confessed to killing his wife on their honeymoon. Extenuating circumstances, his friends declare, will have their weight on the Italian jury.

Charlton's quarters on the liner are isolated, and he is not permitted to mingle with the other passengers. He travels third class, as the Italian Government does not provide first-class accommodations for prisoners.

Faces Living Death.

Unless the contention of his insanity can be proved, a living death surely will be the fate of Porter Charlton, a hideous confinement that is far worse than death on the gallows.

Extenuating circumstances, it is expected, can not be revealed of sufficient strength to obtain his acquittal, and unless his defense prove insanity, he must go to prison. There is no death sentence in Italy.

And imprisonment in Italy is a dreadful punishment, feared far more than the electric chair, the gallows, or the garrote. It is invested with mental torture of such degree that few who live through it more than a few years are sound of mind.

Charlton is known to have a sensitive, nervous temperament. His behavior toward his wife proves him high-strung. To a person of his psychological make-up incarceration under the Italian system would be certainly destructive of mental balance.

For the first ten years of a life sentence the prisoner may be kept in utter darkness and in the strictest solitude, with nothing to eat and drink but plain bread and water. A few weeks of this treatment generally is sufficient to reduce the most unemotional criminal to a state of nervous collapse.

Insanity Practically Only Hope.

His attorneys hope to present in the Italian courts the great mass of evidence brought to bear in the United States Supreme Court to prove him insane. Justice Lurton, in the opinion which declared that Charlton must go back to Italy to stand trial, admitted that the evidence to substantiate the insanity plea was preponderous.

The opinion of the Supreme Court brought to an end the three years' unsuccessful fight of Charlton and his family against extradition to Italy. It was in June, 1910, that he killed his wife, according to his own confession. After the crime he fled, but was caught at Hoboken, N. J., when the liner landed there. The brother of the slain wife there met him, and caused him to be placed under arrest.

The first night of his imprisonment in New Jersey a confession was produced, bearing his name, and generally supposed to be authentic.

"My wife and I lived happily together, but she had an uncontrollable temper," read the confession. "So had I. On the night of the murder she had the worst outbreak of temper I ever saw.

"I told her to keep quiet or I would make her quiet. Then she had another outbreak. I took up a wooden mallet, with which I had been repairing a table, and hit her on the head and body two or three times.

Hidden Pistol Seen As Girl Lifts Dress

Young Woman Is Arrested When Masked Battery Is Exposed as She Crosses Street.

UNIONTOWN, PA., Aug. 16.—Holding her dress a little too high to avoid the water as she crossed Main street to-day, Mattie Pearce was arrested when she revealed a large revolver in a holster fastened around her leg at the knee.

She was taken to the police station, where she showed the officers the new mode of carrying a gun. Strapped to a leg was the holster in which she carried the revolver.

The girl explained that there were "bad men" at Uniontown and she was not taking any chances with them. She stated that she had worn the revolver in that position for some time.

Mattie said she did not know she was holding her dress quite as high as she was, and that she had forgotten for a moment about the masked battery. She was released on bail.

Wife Paints Story of Her Life on Walls

St. Louis Matron Does Remarkable Work She Calls 'A Young Girl's Love."

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 16.—One of the most-talked-of works of art in St. Louis hangs in the home of Dr. Robert E. Wilson and was painted by Mrs. Wilson. The canvas is called "The Story of a Young Girl's Love," and covers the entire wall space in the parlor of this magnificent Colonial home. Two years were devoted to the work.

The painting is divided into panels, the size of each picture depending on the amount of space to be covered. Artists pronounce the canvas a masterpiece. Mrs. Wilson's friends say that the painting illustrates her blissful married state.

TOWN CELEBRATES WEDDING.

AXTELL, KANS., Aug. 16.—All the citizens of this town celebrated today the sixty-second wedding anniversary of Stephen and Margaret Stout, aged 85 and 81, respectively, whose home for more than a third of a century has been the social center here.

FRANK'S COUNSEL BIT BY BIT BUILDS STRUCTURE TO CRUSH CONLEY STORY

Intricate Mass of Circumstantial Evidence Is Assembled to Disprove Direct Testimony of Negro and Corroboration Theories of State.

DEFENDANT'S MORALS TO BE NEXT BATTLE GROUND

An intricate structure is being raised by Leo Frank's lawyers as his defense against the formidable case made out by the prosecution. Little by little its parts were laid, all during last week's period of the trial, with no less than 50 witnesses as agents.

No one of the many witnesses for the defense has given testimony that in itself was essentially significant. But each one has embodied an attack on the State's case, testifying against the character of a damaging anti-Frank witness, or to Frank's good character, or as to the likelihood of expert testimony that the State drew forth.

The case of the defense, as it was made out with the close of the week's session, is a structure of little bits. It is an attempt to overcome a long line of circumstantial evidence and the direct testimony of a single witness—Jim Conley—with another long line of circumstances. In this case as the week has revealed the State is truly the aggressive, the defense truly the defensive.

Arnold Charges Scheme.

Most strenuous of the attempts of the defense has been that to prevent the examination of witnesses along the lines of Frank's alleged immoral conduct. Time and again Solicitor Dorsey has asked witnesses if they have heard of certain actions by Frank in connection with young girls. Each time a heated objection has come from Reuben Arnold, Frank's attorney, who has charged that the questions are without foundation, and that they are framed merely to set the prisoner in an evil light before the jury.

To Lawyer Arnold's objections was added the protest of the prisoner's mother, in a startling, dramatic manner. Plainly overwrought, bordering on the hysterical, Mrs. Frank rose from her seat after Dorsey asked J. Ashley Jones if he had heard of Frank's immoral behavior with a little girl.

Mrs. Frank was trembling and pale faced. She advanced toward the Solicitor and pointed a finger at him.

"No, he hasn't heard," she cried, her voice almost a shriek. "Nor you either."

The situation was doubly dramatic, coming as it did unexpectedly. Mrs. Frank has been apparently the calmest and coolest and most courageous person in the courtroom since the trial began, not a quiver of her face betokening lack of composure. No one expected the outburst from her.

Dorsey's Look Triumphant.

To all the protests of the lawyers, however, Solicitor Dorsey declared that the State can prove the charges of gross immoral conduct against Frank, and will bring witnesses to that effect on rebuttal. There was something triumphant in the Solicitor's bearing when Frank's attorneys introduced testimony to prove the good character of the prisoner.

This lets down the bars. The prosecution now may produce witnesses in rebuttal to attack Frank's character and his behavior, in case they have such evidence in hand. The Solicitor announces that he has this evidence and will produce it.

At one time during the week's course of the trial it was hinted that forty or fifty witnesses will be called by the State when the case again comes into its hands in reply to the testimony for the defense. In that event, the trial will be prolonged through the greater part of next week. Several days undoubtedly will be required for the lawyers' argument of the case, which has become one of the most complicated and tangled of Georgia's legal history. And thus it is not unlikely that the last week of the month will come before the verdict of the jury is announced.

Testimony on which the defense relies most was produced in that of several medical experts—Dr. George Bachman, Dr. T. H. Hancock, Dr. Willis Westmoreland, Dr. W. S. Kendrick and Dr. William Owens. All these men were called to reply to the statement of Dr. Harris, of the State Board of Health, whose testimony is believed to be hurtful to the defense.

He had declared that the undigested bits of cabbage in Mary Phagan's stomach proved she was killed within a short period after her midday meal. The whole contention of the State is that Frank killed Mary Phagan before 12:30 o'clock on the afternoon of April 26, and the fact has been established that she ate dinner less than an hour before that time.

But the experts called by the defense were almost unanimous in declaring that Dr. Harris could have been mistaken, however positively he stated his opinion. A bitter fight developed on cross-examination of each of the experts.

Bitter also was the fight that came over the testimony of Dr. William Owens. It was he who timed the actions of mimics when they rehearsed in pantomime Conley's version of the death of Mary Phagan some time after his arrest. Eighteen and a half minutes were taken up by the incident, a length of time which seems to offset the State's theory that the murder was done and the body disposed of within a short time. Solicitor Dorsey objected to the introduction of the testimony, but Judge Roan allowed it to be entered, with the remark that he would study the arguments for and against and announce later a judgment as to its admissibility.

The hope and belief of the defense that the commission of the crime may be laid on the shoulders of Jim Conley was revealed in the course of the Owens examination, when Lawyer Arnold made a heated statement.

Arnold Accuses Conley.

Solicitor Dorsey was objecting to the admission of the evidence concerning the murder in pantomime, and spoke sarcastically of its features.

"Your honor," he protested to Judge Roan, "you're surely not going to allow a thing like this."

"I don't know what I am going to do," replied Judge Roan.

The Solicitor turned to Arnold.

"Well," he asked, "how long did it take in this farce to choke the little girl to death?"

"We don't know how long it took the nigger to kill the child," replied the lawyer for the defense, hotly.

The Solicitor turned to the Judge at this accusation of Conley.

"Now, your honor," he said, "that won't do."

Judge Roan agreed with him, and the examination proceeded.

Following the examination of the expert witnesses the defense produced men who were classmates and associates of Frank in college to testify to his good character. It was at this juncture that the hearing of the Solicitor plainly revealed triumph. He had contended all during the trial that he would produce evidence of Frank's immoral behavior if an opening were given him. This was the opening.

The first four character witnesses were A. L. Lane and R. A. Knight, of Brooklyn, and Philip Nash, of Greenwood, N. J., and J. Ashley Jones, an insurance man of Atlanta. Others, the defense has announced, will be brought forth. The attitude of Frank's lawyers is that of defying the prosecution to attack the prisoner's moral character.

500 Birds Kept in Cage on Housetop

St. Louis Collector Has Scores of Varieties and Many of Them Are Carnivorous.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 16.—A huge cage, containing 500 birds, is built on top of the home of D. J. Pishorski, No. 1911 North Twelfth street. Not one of these birds is for sale.

Instead Pishorski adds to his collection almost every week, and will continue to do so until he possesses a pair of every variety of birds.

Almost every land is represented in this assemblage of feathered warblers. They range from the nightingale of Japan to the Missouri jaybird.

In this collection are probably 100 birds that can not exist on seeds, lettuce and grass. They belong to the carnivorous class and must feed upon insects.

John Lind Has Most Unusual Job But Lind Is Most Unusual Man Calling Bluffs Is His Specialty

Former Governor John Lind, of Minnesota, who is in Mexico to tell President Huerta that President Wilson disapproves of him an dhis policies.

Former Governor Has No Official Position, but Has Been Selected in Ticklish Diplomatic Work.

A plain man named John Lind is in Mexico City awaiting an opportunity to tell the explosive and dynamic President Huerta that President Wilson, of the United States, disapproves of him and his government.

This man is not the Ambassador of the United States. He has no more an official standing than a Chinese coolie. He is a plain American citizen come to discuss matters.

President Huerta may refuse to see him. The President might tell John Lind to go back to Minnesota whence he came, and still would be on safe ground.

But President Huerta will see him, and will talk to him, and will listen to what he has to say. Because John Lind, as all the world knows, is the personal representative of President Woodrow Wilson. He does not stand for the Government of the United States, nor represent any plan of intervention or anexation. He is merely the ears ad mouth of Woodrow Wilson, who wants to know exactly what is going on and why.

The mission on which President Wilson sent John Lind, former Governor of Minnesota, to Mexico, is one of the most remarkable in diplomatic history.

Holds No Office.

"It is to be pointed out that Mr. Lind holds no office which is recognized between nations," announced dispatches from Washington. "A grave responsibility rests on his shoulders. * * * The administration insisted that it should be made plain that Mr. Lind was acting entirely in an unofficial capacity in his mission to Mexico, but that he possesses most extraordinary powers in speaking for President Wilson is admitted."

It is plain that John Lind is on a most unusual mission, to be successful in which he must be calm, cool, careful, tactful, unruffled and all that. He must be alive to his responsibility. He must expect rebuffs. He must be honest, fearless, sincere.

John Lind's friends say he is all that. His enemies concede that he is every bit of it. President Wilson was certain that John Lind would meet all requirements, and so he sent to St. Paul for him.

John Lind is a former Governor of Minnesota. Years after he had served his first term, the Democrats nominated him again. They wanted him badly, and in the convention mentioned the name of nobody else.

But Lind was on his way to Alaska. He refused to turn back to accept the nomination. He refused to say yes or no. They had disregarded his wishes back home concerning a county option plank in the platform, and he scornfully said nothing to their overtures to come back and be Governor.

Weeks passed. Election time drew near. Politicians in Minnesota were certain that Lind would run. Who ever refused a gubernatorial nomination with certain victory to result from it?

Lind's Refusal Firm.

But when Lind got back, he broke his silence with a firm refusal. He would have none of the Governorship. And it being too late for the Democrats to rally around anyone else, the Republican Eberhardt won out.

It is the same calm, imperturbable John Lind for whom President Wilson invented a job as his personal representative. An unusual job it was, and President Wilson looked about for an unusual man to fill it. He decided that his friend John Lind was the man.

John Lind comes naturally by his impassiveness. He was born in Sweden and came to America a boy of 11, when his mother and father decided, like hundreds of other Swedes, to move to the new country and try to find their fortunes in the great Northwest. They came over and moved into their log cabin at Goodhue, Minn.

John Lind went to the common schools in his home town until he was 17. Then he taught school himself, saving his money that he might enter the University of Michigan. Then he practiced law, got married, moved to Minneapolis, held the job of receiver in a land office, went to Congress, lost out for re-election after three terms, served as lieutenant and quartermaster in the Twelfth Minnesota Volunteers during the war with Spain, ran for Governor and was defeated, all before 1898.

But when he came back from the war, the pleased Democrats named him as their candidate for Governor, and won with him. All Minnesota knew him by that time as a calm, self-contained, capable, good-hearted lawyer who never beat about the bush and who usually managed to call the other fellow's bluff. Out in Minnesota they like that kind of fellow.

Takes Defeat Calmly.

In 1900, a bad year for Democrats, he was beaten for re-election. John Lind took his defeat calmly. He just stuck around, practiced law, ran for Congress again, and was elected. After retirement here, he worked plainly and simply and prosperously until President Wilson, knowing him for a worker and a plain-talking, hard-fisted person, sent for him to go to Mexico. It was in the interim, about 1910, that he refused the offer of Minnesota Democrats to make him Governor again.

Mr. Lind is a man of action, cool-headed, alert, and a fighter; but above all he is silent and inscrutable. It is this quality which is going to stand him in good stead in the present situation, and it is the quality which no doubt proved very forceful in moving President Wilson to appoint him.

In all the words of criticism of Mr. Lind's mission to Mexico—and there have been many to criticise the President's course—there has been no hint of disssatisfaction with the personal qualities of the man. It is pointed out that Mr. Lind's mission in Mexico will fail. He is going to tell President Huerta that President Wilson disapproves of him and his government. But none has said that it will fail because of his personality, and it is certain that it will not fail because the President's representative talks too much. If it is to be a game of bluff, John Lind is the man to play it.

AFTER 50 YEARS MOTHER OF 8 IS ENABLED TO SEE

Although 66 Years Old, She Travels From Home to Hospital All Alone.

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—Fifty years ago a little girl was stricken blind.

She was 16, and never had seen the man whom she later married. In her home at Hillsdale, Mich., she became the mother of eight children.

The father died a little later and they went out into the world, but the mother never had seen their faces.

"But every night I taught them to pray: "God, give mother back her sight before she dies,'" she said in Chicago. "And their prayers have been answered."

The woman, now bent and feeble, is Mrs. Mary J. Welsh, and is back in her Hillsdale home, her sight restored. Mrs. Welsh during the last month has been in the Wesley Hospital here. The operation that gave her back her sight, surgeons say, was one of the most remarkable on record. It consisted in the removal of a cataract of fifty years standing.

Mrs. Welsh came to the hospital from her home alone. On her breast she wore the inscription, "I am blind. I am going to the Wesley Hospital, Chicago. Please direct me," on a large card.

A chaplain of the hospital, the Rev. M. W. Satterfield, delivered an address in Hillsdale several months ago. He told of the charitable work done by the hospital. The white-haired blind woman heard him. She groped her way forward.

"Can you do anything for me?" she asked. "I only want to see my babies before I go. I have been praying."

A month ago the Methodist congregation took up a collection which made it possible for her to make the trip to Chicago.

Perhaps the 'Pied Piper' Can Explain

'What Becomes of Rats That Die Natural Deaths?' Scientist Wants to Know.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—An article in the current public health bulletin, issued to-day, makes a mystery of the question:

"What becomes of rats which die natural deaths?"

The article was prepared by Surgeon Victor G. Heiser, chief quarantine officer of the Philippine Islands, who had charge of the rat-destroying campaign in Manila.

He states that the average rat mortality for the Philippine city is 2,500 a month. He seeks to find out what becomes of the bodies of those that die each day.

"It appears that at least many hundreds of rats disappear each month from Manila by natural means, the exact nature of which is not known, but if it could be discovered the knowledge might be useful in the destruction of rats."

Dogs Succeed Boys On Chickasaw Links

Troubles With Latter Send Golfers Scurrying for Tamer Kind of Caddies.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 16.—Bird dogs to replace caddies and retrieve lost golf balls will soon make their appearance on the municipal links at Overton Park, according to an announcement made by City Hall officials.

J. P. Clages, dog fancier and expert trainer, has been schooling the animals at the links for several weeks and the dogs will be given a trial, and if they prove adept, they will be used regularly.

The canine caddies are the result of numerous troubles with boys, who were put under charge of the Juvenile Court for various offenses committed at the links.

Girl Asleep 10 Days Apparently Is Dead

New York Sufferer Has 86 Convulsions Before Relapsing Into Comatose State.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Jeannette Guttman, the 13-year-old daughter of a plumbing contractor, living at 1046 Tiffany street, the Bronx, for ten days has been lying in a state of coma in the Hydropathic Institute, 2011 Madison avenue.

With the exception of a faint blush of crimson on the girl's cheek, she apparently is lifeless. Life has been sustained by feeding her brandy and predigested milk, and the process of nourishment has been so successful that the girl has not lost any weight.

According to Dr. Gilbert Miller, Miss Guttman has been an epileptic for about ten years. Three days before she relapsed into a comatose state she had 86 convulsions.

From Dr. Miller it was learned that her temperature was just normal, while there was no accentuation of the pulse. Efforts have been made to produce some kind of response from the girl, without result.

HIGH COST OF LIVING BAR TO FREE LUNCHES

LA CROSSE, WIS., Aug. 16.—While saloonkeepers of Connecticut are preparing to go into court to resist the law which forbids free lunches in saloons, liquor men of La Crosse are circulating a petition which will be presented to the Common Council asking for the passage of an ordinance making the free lunch unlawful. All saloonkeepers in town except two have signed it.

Downtown proprietors who have been setting up expensive lunches are the instigators of the movement. They declare the cost of meats and vegetables is so high they can no longer afford it.

BOY FINANCIER FIGHTING FOR PRISON PAROLE

Earl W. Butler, of Canton, Ill., Seeks to Escape Penalty for Banking Methods.

CANTON, ILL., Aug. 16.—Earl W. Butler, the boy banker, whose career in frenzied finance wrecked two banks in Fulton and one in Peoria County in 1910, and ended by landing Butler in the Joliet penitentiary with an indeterminate sentence of from one to three years, again is making strenuous efforts through his attorneys and friends, to obtain his release from the State Board of Pardons.

So far the boy banker has not made much progress toward getting his freedom, because of the position taken by former State's Attorney W. S. Jewell, under whose incumbency Butler was convicted of embezzlement in connection with the Ellisville bank, and who is supported in his view of the matter by the present State's Attorney, M. P. Rice.

Butler was convicted in the Fulton County Circuit Court in October, 1911, over a year after his three banks closed their doors, and he was taken to Joliet in November of the same year. He has served nearly two years in the penitentiary and has another year to remain there, if his sentence is carried out to the limit. In addition to imprisonment, the verdict in his case imposed a fine of $2,800, but it is the expectation that he will try to schedule out of this obligation.

Before Butler left the Fulton County jail, after sentence was passed, his attorneys began efforts to save him from the penitentiary.

Science Pleads for Bats, Insect Killers

University Professor Says Can Not See, but Are Guided by Sound.

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA, Aug. 16.—That the bat by killing night-flying insects is a benefit to humanity; that he can not really see at night, as is popularly believed, but directs his flight and hunts his prey by sound; that, as a rule, he devours his prey in full flight—these are among the interesting statements in a plea for the bat which Dr. Joseph Grinnell, of the university faculty, has included in a recent paper in which he says:

"A vast quantity of night-flying insects are destroyed by bats every 24 hours. It can be seen, therefore, that bats continue the warfare on insect life which is so incessantly waged by the birds during the daytime.

"All bats have enormously developed ears, and their sense of hearing is doubtless very acute. It is suggested that the drone of a June beetle sounds to a bat as does the roar of a biplane motor to us."

Father and Son Vote For Every President

Pennsylvania Pair Hold Suffrage Record That Is Unequaled in United States.

TUNKHANNOCK, PA., Aug. 16.—George C. Miller, of Tunkhannock, claims that he and his father, George Miller, Sr., and the only father and son in the United States who have voted at every Presidential election, commencing with Washington, in 1788, to the present time.

The father voted until 1852, being then 90 years of age. He and son George C., then 22, both cast their ballot for Winfield Scott for President. The son has voted at every Presidential election since, and is now 83 years old.

The father, when about 30 years old, removed from near Harrisburg to Tunkhannock, where he opened the first gun store in that place. He died at the age of 93.

The son is the last of a family of ten children, and is in good health, with a prospect of voting for some years to come.

Border Officer Who Killed Six, Men Dies

Louis Kreeger Also Convicted His Son, Who Will Attend Funeral Under Guard.

TRINIDAD, COLO., Aug. 16.—Luis M. Kreeger, 68 years old, for nearly forty years one of the prominent peace officers of the Southwest, is dead at his home here. He had served variously as Sheriff, Under Sheriff, town marshal and special deputy in this county, and during that time he had figured in almost every adventure with criminals of any importance, and no less than six men are known to have been victims of his marksmanship.

Kreeger was a native of Missouri and came here in 1868. He achieved fame late in the seventies by killing Rice Brown, jockey and cowpuncher, then employed by the Thomas outfit. In trailing a quartet who were accused of robbing the Victor-American Coal Company's pay wagon near Gray Creek in 1910, Kreeger obtained part of the evidence which resulted in the conviction of his own son, "Quick Trigger" Kreeger. The son, under guard, will attend the funeral.

AUTO AS MATADOR SAVES FARMER FROM MAD BULL

ELGIN, ILL., Aug. 16.—Matadors may be succeeded by automobiles as bullfighters. This was proven when Peter Green, a farmer, 60 years old, of Huntley, was being gored by a bull in one of his pastures. His screams attracted an automobile party of three men, who were in the road. They witnessed the attack for a moment, then the driver of the big touring car made a dash into the pasture and after the bull.

The horn was tooted and tooted, and the bull finally was driven away from the helpless farmer. Three of Green's ribs were broken, but he will recover.

Mr. Hearst Tells Why He Keeps Oil Letters From Lobby Inquiry

Publisher Does Not Wish to Associate Already Proven Documents With Series of Exaggerated Accusations as Mulhall Confession Seems To Be.

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 16.—The following is a letter from Mr. William Randolph Hearst in reply to a letter sent to him by Congressman Clyde H. Tavenner asking Mr. Hearst to put the Standard Oil letters before the Garrett lobby investigation committee in the House of Representatives:

Los Angeles, Cal., Aug. 5, 1913.

Hon. Clyde H. Tavenner, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Sir:

Did you write me a letter and make the letter public, asking me to submit all the Standard Oil letters that I have in my possession to the House committee now investigating the charges of lobbying made by a certain Mulhall?

I would be very glad to submit again to the Congressional committee or to any responsible body the Standard Oil letters which I have already submitted many times to the public and to bodies which more or less accurately and sincerely represent the public.

I would prefer, however, not to submit these Standard Oil letters in connection with the Mulhall letters and charges for the simple reason that the Standard Oil letters are very important to the nation, very serious in their incriminations and wholly authoritative and genuine, while the Mulhall letters and documentary evidence have never appeared to me especially important or serious or genuine.

The Mulhall letters and charges were offered to one of my magazines, the one that published the Standard Oil letters, but the editors of the magazine with my approval declined to purchase or publish the Mulhall documents and confession. The reason we did not purchase the Mulhall letters was not at all because of the price. That question was not even considered.

The reason we failed to purchase them was because we had not full confidence in them. We felt that the more or less innocent or at least moderate wording of the documents did not justify the extravagant allegations on which Mulhall based the documents, and we felt if that any part of Mulhall's evidence or testimony was untrue that all of it was open to suspicion.

Furthermore, our magazine had just performed what we had every right and reason to believe a great public service. We had performed this service with the utmost sincerity and consciousness and with the most scrupulous care.

We had exposed the corrupting influence of privilege-seeking corporations in politics. We had revealed the connection between these corrupt corporations and certain important public officials who were supposed to represent the people in office, but who in reality, prostituted their offices to serve the illegitimate interests of criminal trusts.

The editors of the magazine were agreed that we did not wish to diminish or discredit the effect of these genuine revelations by the publication of Mulhall's letters, which seemed to us less serious and sincere.

The Standard Oil letters can not be denied, because there always have been additional documents to disprove every denial made to confuse and confound every falsifier.

We did not wish our magazine to associate a great public service and a vital political exposure like this with an extravagant series of exaggerated accusations, as the Mulhall confessions appeared to us to be, and I would rather not associate the genuine with the questionable at your Congressional investigation.

Of course, I am expressing only my preference. I can control the course of my magazine, but I do not seek to control or influence the action of your committee. I shall always be ready to submit to any such committee any such information I have which can be considered of public interest or importance.

Very sincerely yours,
WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST.

Wealthy Father at Last Finds Daughter

Search of 38 Years Ends in Astonishment for His Policeman Son-in-Law.

POTTSVILLE, PA., Aug. 16.—Anthony Lloyd, a policeman, living on $65 a month, was surprised when John Strause, aged 76, walked into his home and embraced Mrs. Lloyd, who turns out to be his only child, lost to him for more than 38 years.

Strause is worth $200,000 and lives in Laramie City.

Many years ago, after he returned from service in the Seventh Pennsylvania Cavalry of the Civil War, he placed his daughter, Emma, in the charge of relatives and went West. Though wealthy, he was unable to find any trace of her until his sudden meeting.

COUPLE ELOPE, THOUGH THEY CAN NOT CONVERSE

GARY, IND., Aug. 16.—Cupid was somewhat nonplussed for a while in Gary, when a young couple, neither of whom can speak the language of the other, eloped to Crown Point, where they answered the marriage vow by means of an interpreter.

On their way home the pair were arrested at the instance of the irate father, because of the bride's youth.

They were taken to the Gary police station, where neither could give the other a word of comfort. Later the father's heart melted, and they were released.

LIVING DEATH IN ITALY IS FACED BY CHARLTON

Young American Travels in Steerage, but Is Confident of an Early Acquittal.

At midnight I put the body in a trunk, dragged it to a small pier near the house, and threw it overboard."

His wife was a beautiful young woman, although eight years older than he, who was only 21. The two were on their honeymoon when the murder occurred.

Mrs. Charlton was the divorced wife of Neville H. Castle, a San Francisco lawyer. Charlton is the son of Paul Charlton, law adviser of the Bureau of Insular Affairs, and former President Taft's classmate at Yale. He has stood by his son through all the fight against extradition.

Extradition Fight Begins.

The fight began the day after the confession appeared. It seemed at first that the young man surely must go back to Italy to face trial, and every legal step was taken against it. His friends, led by his father, took the position that he could not be extradited, because Italy had always refused, under the extradition treaty of 1868, to return Italian subjects to the United States to answer for crimes committed here.

They lost this fight, when Italy made a request for the prisoner. The fight was resumed, and Charlton's father entered the insanity plea, in a habeas corpus suit. Losing this in the lower court, the father appealed to the Supreme Court, in which, about a month ago, the opinion of Justice Lurton was handed down, to the effect that Charlton was subject to extradition.

Officers arrived in the United States from Italy last week to take Charlton back for trial. Conflicting reports have been spread regarding the young man's health, certain physicians contending that he is the victim of pulmonary tuberculosis and others that he is in perfect health.

Newspaper reports, written by men who have seen him, say that he appears healthy. He has been allowed an unusual degree of freedom while being held in the Hudson County jail, being permitted to take walks, automobile drives and two hours of exercise each day. Sometimes he was taken to picture shows.

Charlton Expects Acquittal.

Charlton is cheerful. He has expressed the opinion that he will be acquitted in spite of the evidence against him, and has told his father and mother and other friends as well that he will be back home for Christmas dinner.

The trial will be held in Milan some time early in the fall.

Appeals have been made to Secretary of State Bryan, and an attempt even has been made to reach the ear of President Wilson to present the extradition of the young man. His father has stopped at nothing to save his son. But all attempts have proved fruitless. Secretary Bryan, Judge Charlton's personal friend of long standing, has expressed his sympathy, but declared that it was impossible for him to do anything for the son.

The plans for the defense will take the form of an inquisition to bring out the moral and mental traits of the murdered woman, besides the consideration of Charlton's sanity. Attorneys will try to show that there was great provocation for the killing. It is hoped in this that the sentence of Charlton will not be the short-living death at solitary confinement in an Italian dungeon, but a more tempered punishment.

Cat Rides Brake Beam To Be With Master

Feline Fails to Relish Being Given to Baby and Climbs Aboard Train.

CUMBERLAND, MD., Aug. 16.—Charles Toner, of Frederick, Md., recently brought to his baby brother, of this place, from Frederick, 135 miles away, a fine cat. The next morning the cat seemed dissatisfied, and when the Frederick man was preparing to return to his home the cat disappeared.

Toner was annoyed about the disappearance of the feline, and to his surprise, when the train stopped at Frederick, the cat jumped off the brakebeam of the car and greeted its master.

Chic and Dashing Fall Hats Will Bring $1,000,000 to Atlanta

Here's where the factions divide—some like it; some laugh. It is made of midnight blue plush, with a yellow figured top and a yellow feather butterfly off at the side.

Shaped like a man's derby, this hat of garnet plush has a silk ribbon to match which trails behind the left shoulder. Gray roses are used.

"One must be pretty to wear this hat"—of black velvet and patent leather.

A flat sailor, of "tete de negre" plush, trimmed with cream and brown fur and sacred bird of Siam feathers.

Butterflies are the prevailing motif. This is a hat of black velvet with a black lace butterfly.

Turquoise blue satin crown, with a brim of taupe dubitine, and an aigrette—dubitine being a new material.

Chic—that's the word. It needs a pert face and vivacious manner. Black velvet with pink facings and Paradise feathers.

Autumn Styles in Millinery Show That Large Creations Are Thing of the Past—Butterflies Are Popular.

"Now, deny it if you can,
"Though it's manners make the man,
"It's millinery makes the girl."
—Song from "Red Feather."

Millinery, then, being such a serious affair, some 1,400 women and 100 men will visit Atlanta these later weeks of August, and they will spend close to $1,000,000 for millinery. The "openings" for fall and winter styles are on in Atlanta's great wholesale houses, and the great semi-annual buying is under way.

The general public will not see these styles for a month or so to come. Therefore, this is NEWS—real hot stuff—for feminine readers. Here goes:

Black predominates.
Nearly all hats are almost collapsible.
Butterflies are the prevailing motif in trimmings.
Few large hats are shown.
Feathers and fur are "particularly good."
Rats and switches apparently have gone to stay, for nearly all the new hats are close-fitting and necessitate scant coiffures.

For instance, one of the very prettiest styles shown—from masculine viewpoint at least—is a new poke of black plush with pink facing and paradise feathers. This is a saucy little hat that goes with a pert face and lively manner. One can imagine it on a vivacious little demoiselle at Longchamps—where, in fact, it was photographed by an Atlanta designer, and copied.

Splendiferous, indeed, must be the sacred bird of Siam, whose feathers adorn an extremely flat plush hat of sailor shape.

Fur Cream and Brown.

A pelt of some little animal, about the size of a weasel, twists about the crown, and the two feathers complete the trimming. The fur is cream and brown. The feathers are brown with wonderful bluish markings more beautiful than a peacock's glories. The plush is a new shade of brown called "tete de negre," which sounds much better in French than in English. All this sets "hubby" back about fifty.

"Tete de negre," by the way, vies with black in popularity.

A huge black butterfly is the only trimming on a little black silk velvet turban with soft crown.

"Smart. And good. Oh! Very good, indeed," is what the designer calls it. Let it go at that. Why argue?

All humanity is divided into two parts. Of these, one is composed of those to whom styles in millinery are a serious matter; the other, of those who grin.

There's one hat which will bring strict division of these parties. Now, from the "pro's" standpoint it is a creation of midnight blue plush, with a variegated plush top on the crown, and an artistic feather butterfly perched airily on the edge of the brim.

Now, the "antis": It's a dark blue contraption with a yellow, scrambled, Bulgarian top, and a funny little yellow thingamajig sticking up behind.

Take your choice.

"Donna e mobile," as our old friend Caruso has it—"woman is fickle"—and he might add, inexplicable. No doubt this is pretty, to a woman.

One must be pretty to wear the little black velvet hat, shaped like a traffic cop's helmet and trimmed with patent leather fixings—so says the designer. If this is carefully explained to customers, the hat should sell well.

Derby Covers Eye.

Rather a novelty, but pretty, too, is a hat shaped like a man's derby, which pulls down almost covering the right eye. The shape is of garnet plush, and a long ribbon matching this shade is thrown across the throat from right to left, so that it hangs down behind the left shoulder. Gray roses complete the trimming.

Current history ever finds its reflection in the styles. Bulgarian designs still are with us, and now comes a blue plush hat—one of the few large ones, in the Mexican style—that is, it has a broad, flat brim ornamented with fuzzy little balls.

Big velvet hats, very like the sort art students wear in the Latin Quarter of Paris, are to be seen. They are almost bare of trimming—just great, floppy pieces of black velvet, sometimes to be pulled down over one eye.

"Dubitine" is a new material. It is seen to best advantage in a hat with a brim flaring up on one side, and with a round crown. An aigrette stands pertly off to the rear. The crown is of turquoise dubitine and the underbrim of taupe satin.

If you see a slate gray rubber hat worn by some pretty girl on Peachtree street this winter, don't say you weren't prepared for it. This is due notice that rubber has been called into use for millinery. It was sure to come, straw, feathers, furs, flowers, silks, satins, fruits, birds, animals and what-not having been used.

The rubber hats are severe in design. One has a "drape" to go under the chin, made of green and blue chenille. "They say" rain won't hurt them, and that they're fine for autoing, because they're small.

It is the auto, so every one in the millinery trade believes, that has killed the big hat. A big hat is a nuisance in a limousine, and hard to keep on in a touring car or runabout—and the rest of us like to act as if we might go autoing, even if we do not.

MULHALL BARES FRAUD USED TO DEFEAT HEARST IN RACE FOR GOVERNOR

Lobbyist Got Confidence of Up-State Chairman in New York Campaign by Fake Letter and Betrayed Plans of Democrats to Republican Leaders.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—Colonel Martin M. Mulhall, self-confessed lobbyist of the National Association of Manufacturers, testified before the Garrett Lobby Investigating Committee that his political lines crossed those of William Randolph Hearst in 1906, and that he helped to defeat Mr. Hearst for the New York Governorship.

Introduced by a letter forged upon the letterhead of the Hearst campaign headquarters, Mulhall said that he went into Congressman Fairchild's district, the Twenty-fourth New York, an upstate district, and gained the confidence of a local campaign manager for Mr. Hearst.

Tells Plans to Republicans.

Learning from the latter the plans of campaign in the district, Mulhall reported them to Fairchild, and Republican plans to checkmate them and defeat their object were perfected. Mulhall was employed for a week on this work with the approval, he says, of Fairchild.

Mulhall told a few days ago how he started to work for Senator Foraker in Ohio. He was prepared to make his report to Foraker when the Hearst Standard Oil disclosure letters were first made public. Foraker admitted to the Senate committee that these letters defeated him for re-election to the Unied Staes Senate.

Unconcernedly, Mulhall told how he had taken his "fake letters" of introduction to Fairchild and got his instructions for political detective work. He met Mr .Hearst's friends, including a clergyman, at a hotel, entertained them and worked his way into their confidence. He ascertained that the Republican district committee chairman was not friendly to Fairchild.

Letter Was Faked.

"Whose signature did this fake letter of introduction bear?" asked Representative Stafford.

"It was that of some member of the Democratic State Committee."

"Who were you represented to be?"

"I was supposed to be connected with Mr. Hearst, and so represented myself to Mr. Scott, the candidate, I think, opposing Fairchild."

"It was your first meeting with him, and you won his confidence to the extent of getting from him his campaign plans?" said Stafford.

"Yes."

"Who signed this fake letter?"

"The letter was given to me by Marshall Cushing, and I can not say who signed it. Mr. Cushing was a very good letter writer. He told me it was a fake letter. I knew that Cushing was not connected with the Hearst organization."

Mr. Stafford—He was connected in the way of using the letterhead of the Hearst organization to good effect.

"Mr. Cushing thought it was a smart political trick, and I guess that was his system of working," replied Mulhall.

Scott Well Deceived.

"Mr. Scott's confidence was so complete," continued Mulhall, "that he told me Mr. Hearst had sent him a number of workers and quite an amount of money, and I believe in this letter the latter stated that they were ready to send at that time more workers and more money."

"Scott swallowed everything, hook, line and all, as far as you represented it," commented Stafford.

"Yes."

"Did Mr. Fairchild know all about this arrangement?" asked Representative Kline.

"Yes, he knew about hte letter, and I had Mr. Fairchild's advice in presenting it. He has spoken to me since about that clever piece of work."

Confusion in Study Of Grammar Dispelled

Committee's Report on Standardizing Nomenclature Makes Good Impression.

COLORADO SPRINGS, Aug. 16.—Standardization of grammatical nomenclature, which will do away with the confusion in the study of English, as well as other languages, in American schools, has been effected by a committee of fifteen, of which Professor Hills, of Colorado College, was a member.

The committee made a report to the National Education Association in convention at Salt Lake City and its adoption without amendment virtually insures the following of the committee's recommendations in all schools and colleges.

According to Professor Hills, it was found that in the sentence "John is good," the word "good" was called by nine different names in 25 grammars; the word "John" in "This is John," was called by nineteen terms, and in "We made John president," the word "president" was given eighteen different names in the textbooks examined.

Prisoner 34 Years, Hates to Leave Jail

Slayer of Policeman Says Such Life as He Led Has Not Been Failure.

THOMASTON, MAINE, Aug. 16.—Samuel D. Haynes, of Detroit, walked out of the prison gates to-day, after serving 34 years for the murder of James L. Robbins, a policeman, at Rockland, in 1879.

At midnight his sister, Mrs. F. H. Rogers, of Detroit, had telephoned the prisoner that Governor Haines had pardoned him.

"The battle is won," Haynes told Warden Ham, "but I hate to leave." Outside the prison he held a reception for a big crowd, who knew him as a model prisoner.

"I am willing to forgive and forget," he said. "The prison has been a good thing for me, but I feel that I have paid my bill to society.

"I have been in prison since I was 17 years old, but I have spent the better part of my life here trying to be useful. There is no failure in such a life as that."

Returns $1,000 Gems And Gets $1 Reward

Laundry Girl Is Not Even Thanked When She Returns Diamonds.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—For returning $1,000 worth of jewelry to its owner, Miss Ella Veronica Shea, of No. 969 Putnam ovenue, Brooklyn, was rewarded with a dollar.

Miss Shea works in a laundry. While unpacking a laundry bag received from Mrs. I. Rodberg, of No. 635 Decatur street, she found four diamond rings and a diamond lavalliere.

"The shock which Mrs. Rodberg got when she received the jewelry was so great she forgot to thank me," said Miss Shea yesterday. "I had scarcely got back to the office when a man came running after me with an envelope in which was a note of thanks and—a dollar."

PASTOR SHEDS HIS COLLAR.

GRANITE CITY, Aug. 16.—A new pace has been set by the Rev. W. W. Brown, pastor of the First Baptist Church at Granite City, who tells the men to come without collar or neckties and with sleeves rolled up if that will conduce to their comfort. He promises to do likewise.

Webster's Old Home Restored by Society

Preparations Are Made for Celebration of Rehabilitation of Birthplace of Statesman.

FRANKLIN, N. H., Aug. 16.—The ancient New Hampshire farmhouse in which Daniel Webster was born has been reset on its old foundations and restored to look as it did in the eighteenth century when Webster was a small boy, and preparations have been made to celebrate its rehabilitation. It is in the town of Franklin, and the celebration will take place August 28.

It is expected that President Wilson will attend and deliver an address. Samuel W. McCall, former Congressman from Massachusetts, who was the principal speaker at the hundredth anniversary of Webster's graduation from Dartmouth College, will speak.

Rivals David Harum As a Horse Trader

But Youth Is Forced to Pay Back Money He Got for a 'Frozen Tail.'

INDIANAPOLIS, Aug. 16.—William H. Schmidt, 17, a horse trader, was directed to give back $70 he accepted from Tom Cavanaugh for a "frozen tail" horse, and return the horse to Tom Shroyer, a liveryman, when his case was heard in court.

Schmidt was charged with false pretenses, in that he represented the horse to have a useful and active fly chaser. As a matter of fact, the swatting appendage was merely ornamental and utterly useless. Schmidt said he did not know the horse had a broken tail.

"Why that horse was as helpless as a baby," asserted Mrs. Cavanaugh. "We had to carry along a fly brush as well as a buggy whip everywhere we went."

WAITS FOR WIFE WITH A HEARSE; FINDS HER ALIVE

Husband Who Got Message of Her Death Overjoyed to See Her Alight From Train

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—Heinrich Dietz became the happiest man in Chicago yesterday, and his condition in this respect is likely to be chronic. It all happened in a few seconds. From the depths of woe Mr. Dietz was raised to an ecstatic joy that almost took his breath away.

Dietz is a Russian who came to this country about a year ago, and earned money slowly and saved it until he could rent and furnish a small apartment at No. 529 Hartland court. Then he saved some more and sent a steamship ticket to his wife. She embarked for America. Dietz expected her to arrive here yesterday.

On Thursday night K. W. Kempf, the ticket agent at No. 120 North La Salle street, handed Dietz a telegram from Philadelphia reading:

"Your wife, Eva, died to-day—on 9:40 B. and O. Comm's Immigration."

That message dropped a somber curtain on Dietz's happiness. To cap his misery, he had almost no money. Kempf in sympathy lent him $10 and gave him a note to P. Hursen, an undertaker. Hursen read the note, then returned the $10 to Dietz and sent a hearse with him to the La Salle street depot.

Dietz was mournfully watching the train when suddenly he saw a plump, rosy cheeked young woman leave it. With a shout he sprang forward and Mr. and Mrs. Dietz were clasped in each other's arms.

Mrs. Dietz had sent a telegram as her husband had requested, but the operator had written "died" instead of "arrived."

TAKES PRIZED BEES FOR VACATION IN MOUNTAINS

HOOD RIVER, OREG., Aug. 16.—W. W. Dakin, who owns the largest apiary here, left for his vacation in the forest reserves above Parkdale. Mr. Dakin took two hives of bees to the mountains to gather honey from fireweed in the burned-over regions.

"I am going to try for some of the prizes offered at the State fair," said Mr. Dakin.

TOWN BLACKLISTS 85 DEMON RUM'S SLAVES

CHESTER, PA., Aug. 16.—Leading citizens of this city are lauding the blacklisting of habitual drunkards, which prevents them purchasing intoxicants in saloons, as a far-reaching temperance victory. The list contains, according to the police, the names of 85 persons who have made no effort to free themselves of the drink habit.

HOMESTEADER IS BLOWN FROM HIS BED BY STORM

PIERRE, S. DAK., Aug. 16.—Otto Everhardt, a young bachelor homesteader, arrived at the home of a neighbor dressed only in a two-foot piece of blanket, which he said was all that remained of his household property as a result of the storm which swept this section. Everhardt said that the tornado struck his shack while he was in bed, carried away the shanty and bed and left him uninjured. Other homesteaders suffered heavy losses, reports indicate.

SULZER AND LAWYERS GRIMLY FIGHTING TO CLEAR GOVERNOR'S NAME

Wife Is Determined to Take Stand to Tell Her Husband's Accusers That She Signed His Name to Checks to Gamble in the Stock Market.

ALBANY, N. Y., Aug. 16.—Governor William Sulzer and a formidable staff of lawyers are busy in the preparation of an answer to the impeachment charges brought against him by the New York Assembly. Issue will be joined and a trial held September 18 before the New York Senate and Court of Appeals, sitting in joint assembly.

The sensation of the trial and the incident which the public most avidly awaits will be the statement by Mrs. Sulzer, the brave wife whose attempt to save her husband from disgrace involved a sacrifice of her own honor.

The most telling charge against Sulzer is that he appropriated to his own use in stock exchange gambling certain checks which were given toward his campaign fund. Mrs. Sulzer, in statements to her friends, declared that she indorsed the checks and used them in Wall street speculation without her husband's knowledge, and that she would go on the stand at the trial of her husband to reiterate the story of her misdeed.

Enemies Are Pitiless.

If she does, she will be bared to vicious attacks and cross-examination by the lawyers for the prosecution, who, as members of the assembly which impeaches her husband, already have proved themselves pitiless and vindictive.

It may be that her statement, proved true, will save her husband. None of its purport was revealed to the General Assembly before the impeachment came. However, to-day the Governor announces that under no circumstances will he allow his wife to become a witness, even if his honor and his fortune suffer.

Mrs. Sulzer is in a state of nervous collapse. The long strain imposed on her during the investigation by the General Assembly told on her, and she succumbed when the impeachment vote was announced. So serious became her condition that the Governor was forced to send a hurry call to New York, summoning a famous nerve specialist.

In her chamber Mrs. Sulzer is hysterical, and it is understood that she insists that she be allowed to testify for her husband.

Mrs. Sulzer was Miss Clara Rodelheim, of Philadelphia. She married Sulzer, who then was a Congressman, July 7, 1908. They have no children, and Mrs. Sulzer is enthrallingly interested in politics. During her husband's campaign for the election to Congress, and his subsequent campaign for Governor, she accompanied him on his speaking trips.

She, Too, Is Combative.

More than anything else she openly admires his combative nature. She is aggressive and positive herself. Of her husband she is quoted as saying:

"He's ready to fight at the drop of the hat, and he'll drop the hat himself. As long as he fights, I'll fight, too—and then some."

If she takes the stand in her heroic attempt to save her husband, it is likely that her reputation will suffer. Otherwise, her husband's reputation will suffer, her friends say.

These friends say that a week ago she besought the Governor to permit her to tell her story to the public, and he refused. They say, too, that he consented to the publication of her statement only when he found he could not prevent it, and that it had been widely circulated as a rumor on the lips of the public.

Governor Sulzer, the fighter, is easily recognized in his avowed intention of holding his office even with the impeachment charges against him. His enemies in the General Assembly have declared against his right of remaining in office and have insisted that Lieutenant Governor Glynn take over the reins of government. But Sulzer shows a firm determination to stay in, and the wildest rumors are given credence as to what he will do to retain his authority. It is even asserted that he will call the militia to prevent the entrance of the Lieutenant Governor, and to prevent his own ejection. At any rate, he and his lawyers firmly contend for his right to hold office with the impeachment proceedings pending.

Herrick Issues Statement.

Little is said concerning the approaching ordeal by either the Governor or his attorneys. Mrs. Sulzer can not be reached, and it is understood that could she be seen no statement would be obtained, as she has the attorneys' orders to say nothing. Judge D. Cady Herrick, who will act as chief counsel for the defense, made a statement, which is regarded as the only word to come from him.

"Counsel for Governor Sulzer," he said, "have no desire to try the case in the newspapers. We have engaged in his defense not for William Sulzer, but as a professional duty to the Governor of the State, and to preserve, so far as it can now be preserved, the good name and fame of the State.

"After an examination of Mr. Sulzer in relation to the transactions disclosed by the Frawley committee, we are satisfied that there has been only a partial revelation of the facts so far, as we are satisfied that he has been guilty of no willful wrongdoing."

Besides Judge Herrick, Governor Sulzer's attorneys at the trial will be Irving G. Vann, Syracuse; Louis Marshall and Austen G. Fox, New York; Harvey D. Hinman, Binghamton; Virgil Kellogg, Watertown, and Judge James Gay Gordon, of Philadelphia.

Governor Sulzer, the eighth Governor of all the United States to be impeached, is the victim of Tammany's vengeance.

Other Governors States Impeached

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—In all the United States only seven other Governors have faced impeachment proceedings. These men and the results that followed were:

Charles Robinson, Kansas, 1862, acquitted.

Harrison Reed, Florida, 1868, charges dropped.

William W. Holden, North Carolina, 1870, removed.

Powell Clayton, Arkansas, 1871, charges dropped.

David Butler, Nebraska, 1871, removed.

Henry C. Warmouth, Louisiana, 1872, term expired and proceedings dropped.

Adelbert Ames, Mississippi, 1876, resigned.

WILLIAM SULZER, impeached Governor of New York, with his wife, who intends to sacrifice her own good name to save him. Below is Martin Glynn, Lieutenant Governor, who disputes Sulzer's claim that he is still in office.

Tammany and Sulzer's Fight Thrilling Drama

When Governor William Sulzer, the "People's Governor," and the "Poor Man's Friend," refused to do the bidding of Boss Murphy, of Tammany Hall, the most remarkable political drama New York State had ever seen was enacted. From that very moment Tammany Hall carried out a steady and consistent program of guerrilla warfare against Sulzer and all things Sulzer.

A tammanyized Legislature instituted an "investigation" of Sulzer and Sulzer reciprocated with an "investigation" of some Tammany controlled State departments.

Charles F. Murphy, the Tammany Hall leader, sought to have certain organization men appointed to office. Sulzer declined to appoint them, although he had been something of an organization man himself for a great many years, and immediately after his election to the governorship, had been extremely intimate with Murphy.

Breaks With Tammany.

Sulzer broke with Tammany over the question of appointments. Immediately afterward he employed guards to protect him against assassination, which he feared. No attempt to injure Sulzer's person was made, but political attacks came thick and fast. Sulzer first was accused of perjury, committed, according to his accuser, in 1890. The acquisation carried no weight. The public retained its confidence in Sulzer. Then another bombshell was expected. A suit was filed in Philadelphia by a young woman, Mignon (Polly) Hopkins, charging Sulzer with breach of promise.

Miss Hopkins asked $30,000 damages for her wounded heart. Sulzer admitted having known Miss Hopkins some years ago, but denied that he had ever proposed marriage to her and declared the filing of the suit was engineered by his Tammany enemies.

Fights for Direct Primary.

When Sulzer promised direct primaries to the people of New York he evidently meant what he said. When he went into office he started such legislation. Immediately he discovered his political associates didn't want direct primaries and would not back him up in his fight for the primary bill as he framed it. His bill was introduced in the Legislature, but before it was voted upon a Tammany direct primaries bill, which Sulzer characterized as "fraud upon the people," was introduced in both branches of the Legislature and passed. Governor Sulzer promptly vetoed it, and then called upon the Legislature to pass his bill.

The Assembly and then the Senate killed the Sulzer bills, amid wild scenes in the Senate and Assembly chambers. There were shouts of rage and shaking of fists in the direction of the Capitol. There was wild cheering when it was announced that the Sulzer bill had been killed.

Sulzer then inaugurated a campaign to obtain direct primaries. He enlisted many well-known men in his cause, and called the Legislature in extraordinary session. It had then become a case of open warfare. It became Sulzer's object to make himself leader of the Democratic party in New York.

He had lined up with him some 33 county chairmen and about 17 State committeemen. In one of his speeches at this time Sulzer said that he had been attacked, vilified and threatened as no other man ever had been who had occupied the Governorship of New York.

Tammany Loses Patronage.

Tammany lost hundreds of thousands of dollars in patronage. No appointments of Tammany men were made by Sulzer. George W. Blake was made a special investigator by the Governor and set about unearthing incompetency in the State prisons. John A. Hennessy was made an investigator by Sulzer and he conducted several probes into various State departments. Tammany verged on panic. Finally that organization turned on Sulzer the very same weapon that he had used against it and an investigation of Sulzer's campaign fund was instituted by a legislative committee composed of Tammany men.

Senator Frawley, a Tammany chieftain, was the chairman of the committee, and it commenced its sittings in Albany. The first witness to be called was Louis A. Sarecky, Sulzer's private secretary and campaign manager. Sarecky was questioned about Sulzer's campaign fund, but he declined to answer. It was intimated that Sulzer had received checks for his campaign fund which he had not listed in his sworn statement, a misdemeanor under the laws of New York State.

Two checks were introduced into the evidence. One was for $2,500 from Kuhn, Loeb & Co., the bankers, and indorsed "Mr. Schiff's contribution to the Sulzer campaign." The other check was for $500, and was signed by Abram I. Elkus, a prominent New York City lawyer. It was alleged by the Frawley committee that neither of these checks appeared in Sulzer's campaign list.

Then Came Stock Dealing.

At a later session of the Frawley committee, held in New York, testimony was given to the effect that the "People's Governor" and the "Poor Man's Friend" had owed the stock brokerage firm of Harris & Fuller $48,599.38 on January 1, 1912, when Sulzer was in Congress. According to testimony and evidence offered, Sulzer had been a steady loser in the stock market.

The brokers to whom he owed money dunned him for payment, according to the testimony, and Sulzer finally was rescued by his business partner, ex-Governor A. E. Spriggs, of Montana, who paid $5,000, and Louis M. Josephthal, of New York, who on July 19 last paid $26,749.21.

It also was testified before the committee that Sulzer had traded with Boyer, Griswold & Co. Charles H. Reynolds, formerly cashier for that firm, testified that on October 16 last Frederick L. Colwell, whom he understood to be an agent for Sulzer, had bought 200 shares of Big Four Railroad stock for $12,025. The stock was paid for the same day with eight checks and $7,125 in cash. One check given in payment for the stock was a campaign contribution. The Frawley committee alleged that the seven other checks also were campaign contributions, and asserted that this would be proved.

State Has Turkey Farm to Cut Price

Ohio Goes Into Poultry Business When Cost of Thanksgiving Birds Soar.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, Aug. 16.—The State of Ohio is going into the turkey raising business. Kind o' forced into it, as it were, because of the high price of the favored Thanksgiving bird and the demand from State institutions for the bird.

The experiment was tried out a little the last year, and so successful did it prove that this year practically in all of the State institutions where any chickens are kept turkeys have been added.

The price of turkeys has been gradually soaring until they have become almost too expensive for even the State of Ohio to buy, and rather than permit the wards of the State to go hungry on Thanksgiving Day the employees of the different institutions began the work of hatching them.

Veteran Priest Prepares Own Tomb

Oldest Living Father in Kansas Writes Inscription on His Last Resting Place.

KANSAS CITY, KANS., Aug. 16.—A plain concrete vault, empty and without a door, has attracted the curiosity of visitors to St. John's Catholic Cemetery, west of here.

The vault was built according to specifications made by the Rev. Monsignor Antony Kuhls, the oldest living Catholic priest in point of service in Kansas.

In addition to having the vault built, it was learned too that the veteran priest has prepared his own epitaph. It reads:

"REV. ANTONIUS KUHLS,
Rector of St. Mary's
1864 to 1908.
Born Sept. 26, 1839.
Died, ——.
Rest in Peace."

Coffee Tastes Cause Break in Family

Wife Liked Hers Strong, Husband Preferred It Weak, so She Entered Suit.

ALLENTOWN, PA., Aug. 16.—Black coffee and the high cost of living wrecked the romance of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Hauser, of Catasauqua, who were married three years ago, when he was 63 and she was 43, each embarking in matrimony the second time. The wife, Zenobia, has started divorce proceedings.

Mrs. Hauser says she was used from life with her first husband to good black coffee. Hauser wanted his coffee as weak as dishwater, and also objected to the bills she ran up at the store for her favorite beverage. The rackets that followed got on her nerves to such an extent that she desires to resume the state of single blessedness.

The court allowed her $6 a week temporary alimony.

Canary Flies Away; Cat Brings it Back

Feline Sleuth Trails Bird by Song and Returns it Unharmed.

READING, PA., Aug. 16.—While Mrs. Franklin Woods, of Denver Township, was clearing her canary bird's cage four days ago the canary flew away. The family cat seemed disconsolate.

That night the cat disappeared and nothing was seen of either of the household pets until to-day, when the cat came back. Tenderly holding the missing bird by a wing, pussy delivered her burden to Mr. Woods. His wife at once restored it to its cage. There was not a scratch on the bird. Mr. Woods believes the cat went out in search of the missing canary and when he heard its song captured it.

WIFE TAKES 16 YEARS TO DECIDE TO ASK DIVORCE

ST. PAUL, Aug. 16.—Sixteen years ago Peter N. Engstrom, angry because his wife had gone walking with a mutual friend, slapped her face and upbraided her, she declares. After thinking the incident over carefully, and considering also other alleged cruel acts, she filed a suit for divorce in the District Court here. Mrs. Engstrom is 68 years old and her husband 64. The couple lived together 40 years.

Autos Are Barred By Canadian Island

Residents of Prince Edward Will Not Allow Machines to Enter Province.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—"It seems strange in these days when automobiles are seen on every street, on every country road that there should be one section on the American continent where these vehicles are positively prohibited," said R. A. Dewey, of Toronto.

"Recently the Canadian Parliament enacted legislation to permit the use of self-propelling carriages in the Province of Prince Edward Island, but it is by no means certain that the legislation will be effective. There is every indication that the law will never be put in force because a plebiscite on the question was taken throughout the island when the annual district school meetings were held.

"The returns that have come thus far indicate that the farmers are strenuously opposed to allowing automobiles on Prince Edward Island. More than 90 per cent of the population voted no on the proposition, and in some of these places the vote in the negative was unanimous.

DEER HINDERS TRAFFIC; DODGES TEAMS IN ROAD

ALBANY, ORE., Aug. 16.—Running along on a well-traveled country road a big buck deer dodged its way between three teams of horses and escaped unhurt last week. The deer was encountered near Brewster Station, on the Woodburn-Springfield line between Crabtree and Labanon, by three men who were hauling lumber to the railroad line.

As the season is not yet open for deer no attempt was made to shoot it.

HOW 8,000 YEAR OLD STATUE WAS FOUND IN CELLAR

Priceless Bust of Parian Marble of the Archaic Greek Period Was Stolen 15 Years Ago.

BALTIMORE, Aug. 16.—The story of how the priceless Grecian bust stolen from Athens fifteen years ago, was discovered in a cellar near here reads like a romance.

The bust is now held by State's Attorney Broening for the Greek Legation at Washington preparatory to shipping it to Greece.

The detectives found it buried in the damp cellar of the store of Charles Memphos. There was nothing to protect it from the soil, which had to be brushed and scraped from the features and hair of the head.

It is just the head and shoulders of a child—a girl about five. But it is one of the finest samples extant of the sculpture of the archaic period of Greece. It is of Parian marble. Its age is placed at 3,000 years, 800 years older than the famous de Milo.

Fifteen years ago the bust was stolen from the National Greek Museum at Athens. Government detectives traced the thief to America. Since the time the Greek Government has spent thousands of dollars searching for it.

The bust was recovered after Memphos had been subjected to a "third degree" quizzing which lasted all night. A spirit of revenge caused the story to come out. Memphos has a nephew, Charles Memphos, with whom he quarreled several weeks ago, and the latter told about the hidden bust.

"Ten, maybe eleven, years ago," said Memphos, "a man work for me. He was Greek like me. He sells bananas for me. His name I forget. One day he want to borrow some money. He came to me and say he have statue worth much money. It come from Athens, he says; I lend him the money. He give me the statue. He never pay the money back. Then he leave me to work for another man. I don't know where he is. I don't know where it came from."

Asked why he had buried the bust, Memphos said because he feared it would be stolen.

Wife No. 3 Shelters Girl Victim No. 2

Meanwhile Polygamist Husband Goes to Prison for Bigamy and Forgery.

BOSTON, Aug. 16.—As W. T. Southwick entered upon a sentence of sixteen months' imprisonment, after his conviction of a forgery and polygamy charge, his third "wife," herself only 19, undertook to provide a shelter for Southwick's second wife whom he deserted that he might "marry" the former.

It was by his arrest and prosecution on the fraud charge that it was discovered that in addition to Miss Mildred Morse, who lives at No. 48 Gray street, in the South End, whom he married last February, Southwick also had a wife in Miss Dorothy M. Allen, who until a few months ago lived at No. 88 Winter street, Malden.

The latter is only 18, was married about eighteen months ago to Southwick and has a baby three months old. The child is now being cared for by the Boston Floating Hospital.

Both girls faced Southwick, but neither could appear against him. He pleaded guilty to both the charge of passing the bad check and of marrying the two young women, and he seemed relieved when sentence was passed.

Miss Allen, or Mrs. Southwick second, declared that she had no place to go, since her own people had disowned her. Thereupon Miss Morse said that she would see to it that her sister victim had a home and both young women went to Miss Morse's home in the South End.

D. A. R.'s Will Mark Old Missouri Trails

Sites Are Selected for Designation Pioneer Route to West in Callaway County.

FULTON, MO., Aug. 16.—Sites for the location of markers on the Old Trails road across Callaway County have been selected by Mrs. Mary L. Salisbury, of Independence, and a committee representing the Fulton Chapter of Daughters of the American Revolution.

The first marker will be at the Emmett Grant farm; the next at the site of the old John Jones tanyard, on the east side of Auxvasse Creek, a mile east of the present town of Calwood; the third on the site of the Elkanah Smith carding mill, on the east extension of Fulton; another is to be placed somewhere near the western limits of Fulton, and the fifth on the Henry Wolfmeyer farm, four miles west of Fulton.

Jokes Called Fine Aid to Digestion

Doctor Believes Keeping in Good Humor Would Reduce High Cost of Living.

GREELEY, COLO., Aug. 16.—A new method of reducing the high cost of living was advanced here in a lecture given by Dr. G. Stanley Hall, president of Clark University of Massachusetts, who talked upon the "Psychology of Eating." He said:

"Everything affects the appetite and appetite is the mainspring of life. Clean napkins, good table talk, a clean tablecloth, companionships, flowers and music will make the same quantity of food go twice as far as it will without them. A good joke is a digester and good cooking a preventive of intemperance.

"Cell hunger is responsible for all activities. This hunger is a different thing from stomach hunger, for cells are eating all the time. All our curiosity is the hunger of brain cells."

Gored by Steer, He Wins Girl He Loves

Moving Picture Actress Refuses 'Broncho Buster' Until He Meets With Accident.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, Aug. 16.—Pity is akin to love, is the adage which again was proved by the marriage of Art Acord, one of the best broncho riders in the West. He wedded Miss Edythe Kessinger, motion picture actress. The romance began in California, where the two were filling an engagement with a film company.

The "movie" associations of the couple developed a warm love affair, but the little actress persistently whispered "No" when Acord refused to give up his hazardous occupation. Then Acord came to Salt Lake City to become a contestant in the recent "Stampede," where he was gored by a maddened steer.

Only when Miss Kessinger saw her admirer at St. Mark's Hospital would she recede from her former stand.

'Dead' Soldier Says He Is Quite Alive

Michigan Veteran of the Civil War Tells How Department Killed Him Off.

LANSING, MICH., Aug. 16.—One of the most interesting figures in the ranks of the G. A. R. is John Broad, of Lansing.

According to the war records, Mr. Broad did not participate in the recent reunion here at all. The war records say he is dead. He has been trying for years to convince the officials at Washington that he is alive, and he has not succeeded yet. "John Broad; killed at the battle of Fair Oaks, Va.," say the records, and so far as the department is concerned that is all there is to it.

"I'm dead yet, officially," he says, "but the boys don't object to associating with a ghost, so I guess it's all right."

Charges Sister Stole Her Husband's Love

California Woman Names Beautiful Relative in Her Plea for a Divorce.

SUSANVILLE, CAL., Aug. 16.—Charging that her younger and prettier sister had stolen her husband's love, Mrs. Celia Rundquist Schaefer asked Judge Monroe for a divorce from Marin Schaefer, a fruit grower and rancher. Miss Rose Rundquist, sister of the plaintiff, was named as co-respondent.

Mrs. Schaefer testified that her sister admitted that her husband was a "grand man," and that he showered attentions upon the sister and admitted making love to her. The plaintiff also claimed that she had to support both for two years.

Judge Monroe held that there was insufficient corroborating evidence and instructed the applicant for divorce to get more witnesses.

SAN FRANCISCO BOASTS OF ITS MANY COMMUTERS

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 16.—Figures brought out at a hearing of the State Railroad Commission shows that the commuter is more active around San Francisco Bay than anywhere else in the country.

For the month of June the Southern Pacific Railroad handled on its suburban and ferry service between San Francisco and Alameda County, 1,733,191 passengers. For the same month the Delaware and Lackawanna Railroad, which carries the heaviest suburban business to and from New York City, handled 1,450,000 commuters and the Illinois Central, to and from Chicago, 1,269,744.

ADMITS HE IS A SLAYER TO SAVE DYING BROTHER

Arthur Spaugh Tells the Pardon Board That He Shot Sheriff at Ironton, Mo.

JEFFERSON CITY, MO., Aug. 16.—In a last attempt to get a parole for his brother, William Spaugh, Jr., who is ill of tuberculosis and can live but a short time, Arthur Spaugh, the younger brother, also an inmate of the Penitentiary, told the Board of Pardons that he killed Sheriff Polk at Ironton, Mo., to save William's life. William Spaugh is serving a life sentence for shooting Polk, while Arthur Spaugh was sentenced to fifty-five years.

"Bill did not shoot Sheriff Polk. I shot him when I thought he intended to kill Bill. He had already shot Bill through the shoulder and was advancing on him when I fired. My brother had his hands in the air, begging the sheriff not to shoot him," said Arthur Spaugh.

Doesn't Care for Himself.

"I do not want my brother to die here. He is not guilty of the killing of Sheriff Polk. I alone am guilty. Bill was not even armed when the sheriff was shot. I thought the sheriff intended to kill my brother, and after warning him not to advance three times, shot him. I hope the Governor will release Bill so that he can spend what few days he has to live a free man. It does not matter what becomes of me."

The prison physician says that William Spaugh can not live to exceed sixty days and his death is expected sooner. William Spaugh has arranged to have his body shipped back to their old home at Ironton Mo., for burial, provided he does not secure his release.

Mother Also Pleads.

Arthur Spaugh has tuberculosis also, and is unable to do heavy work. He is in the first stage of the disease, but is able to work about the halls and do light work in the open air.

Mary E. Spaugh, aged mother of the Spaughs, has been here much of late pleading with the Board of Pardons and Paroles for her dying son. She says she would like to take him to her home in St. James, Mo., and nurse him until he dies.

Arthur Spaugh has been in the penitentiary since July 27, 1906, William Spaugh was received July 26, 1907. Both have been model prisoners.

Horse Drowns Self While Despondent

Gets Blue, Wades Into Shallow River and Commits Suicide, Says Farmer.

MONTCLAIR, N. J., Aug. 16.—Frederick J. Minor, who returned from a canoeing trip on the Passaic, states what he believes is a sure enough case of suicide by a horse.

Near the town of Beaufort, Mr. Minor saw a farmer draw a dead horse from the river, where it is only 2 feet deep. He asked the farmer what had caused the horse's death.

"Suicide, sir," said the farmer. "He was ambling around in the morning as spry as a colt. Later he seemed to be afflicted with the blues and moped about. Then I saw him go down to the river and look all around. He lay down in the water, and when I got there I'll be hanged if he hadn't drowned himself. I tugged and hauled, but when I got him out he was dead."

Mr. Minor asserts it was impossible for the horse to drown unless he wanted to, for the river at the point in question is too shallow.

Summer-Spoiled Skin
Removed by Absorption

(From Home Queen.)

As undue summer exposure usually leaves an undesirable surface of tan, dust or grease, often freckles, too, it would seem more sensible to remove such surface than to hide it with cosmetics. There's nothing better for this than ordinary mercolized wax, which actually absorbs an unwholesome complexion. The thin layer of surface skin is itself absorbed, gently and gradually, so there's no inconvenience and no detention indoors. Just spread the wax lightly over the entire face at bedtime and take it off in the morning with warm water. If you will get one ounce of mercolized wax at the drug store and use for a week or so, you may expect marked improvement daily. When the underlying skin is wholly in view your complexion will be a marvel of spotless purity and beautiful whiteness.

Don't let those summer wrinkles worry you; worry will breed more wrinkles. Better to banish them by bathing the face in a solution of powdered saxolite, 1 oz., dissolved in ½ pt. witch hazel. Used daily for a while this will be found wonderfully effective. (Adv.)

NEW MEMBERS' PET BILLS DYING IN COMMITTEE

Recently Elected Congressmen Have Hard Time Telling Why District Doesnt Profit.

RULE OF CAUCUS FORBID

Meaures to Build Postoffice at Squash Center Will Have to Wait for a Session.

By JONATHAN WINFIELD.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—The new members of the House—there are approximately 150 of them—are beginning to find out something about the intricacies of legislation at Washington, and just now they are busy explaining away a bunch of campaign promises. The new member isn't getting anywhere with pet legislation and he is a sorely distressed individual.

Nearly 7,000 bills and resolutions have been introduced in the House of Representatives since President Wilson called the Sixty-third Congress into extra session early in April. About one in a hundred have received consideration, and the ratio bids fair to be maintained during the remainder of the extra session owing to a rule of the Democratic caucus which binds the House committees not to report out legislation before the regular session, which begins in November.

In consequence of this unexpected caucus rule, the new member who came to Congress leaving many promises behind is up against it. His hands are tied; he may introduce bills and resolutions to his heart's content, but they won't get anywhere for months, and perhaps not then. It is embarrassing to make explanations, especially when a statesman beat out some other fellow by promising big things for the district.

All Have Horde of Bills.

The average new member, as soon as he reaches the House chamber, walks up to the bill basket and drops therein a bill providing that the town of Jonesville shall have a $25,000 postoffice. He follows this with a dozen or so bills proposing that certain worthy pensioners in his district shall have their annual pensions increased. Then he comes along with the crying complaint that the little Ben River needs about $50,000 or $100,000 to improve navigation in order that the towns of Squash Center and Hickory Hollow may have increased transportation facilities.

Congressman Newcomer then passed the word along to the newspaper correspondent representing the home paper that he has introduced the foregoing bill and will push it to an early passage. The people back home are duly elated and begin to get glad that they retired the former Congressman and sent so active a successor in his place.

In a short time the new member drops around to the committee to which his various pet kind bills have been referred. Without desiring to appear too solicitous, he gently inquires when he may expect the committee to get together and take up the pressing need of his district. The chairman, with equal gentleness, breaks the news that it will be absolutely impossible to do anything for the present.

Caucus Rules Forbid.

In the first place, says the chairman, a quorum of the committee isn't in town. In the second place, the caucus has forbidden the report of anything except currency, tariff reform and pressing appropriations bills or resolutions at this session. The new member is absolutely unable to see the justice of such a mandate, even though he may have been a member of the caucus. He thought the rule would apply to the other fellow, not himself. There is general woe and lamentation.

It is the same old story, told over in about 50 different ways. Each new member has a peculiar complaint to make and peculiar local needs to satisfy. There is nothing doing, however, and the recruit statesman is told that he will have to wait until the regular session rolls around.

Off in Canoe on 7,000-Mile Trip

Couple to Make Record Cruise

Argonauts to Visit the South

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Green, who have started from Staten Island to cruise to New Orleans and back in a canoe.

BY UNDERWOOD AND UNDERWOOD.

Yearning to See Dixie and West Prompts Young Pair to Make Hazardous Journey.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—"We have never been South," said Mrs. Walter Green half to herself. There was yearning in her tone.

"Nor West," said Walter Green, who heard her.

They sat in their canoe as it drifted with the tide, their faces turned away from their Staten Island home, toward the South.

Mrs. Green looked at her husband with a quick inspiration.

"Let's go," she said, eagerly.

And so they planned within a few minutes the 7,000-mile canoe trip on which they started yesterday and which will take them not only South, but West, revealing to them the grandeur of the Mississippi, the warmth of the Gulf Coast and the stretch of the Atlantic Ocean. The two young persons, enthusiastic canoeists both of them, and inveterate campers, will be away from their home for ten months or more in the course of the journey.

Will Call on Wilson.

They started up the Hudson River, going on the first stage of the journey to Yonkers. Thence they will go through the Erie Canal to Buffalo, through Lake Erie to Ashtabula, then to Beaver Canal and Rochester, Pa. From there they will go up the Ohio to Pittsburg, down the Ohio to Cairo, up the Mississippi to St. Louis, down the Mississippi to New Orleans, across the Gulf of Mexico and along the coast to St. James City, Fla., through the Everglades and a river or two to Palm Beach, up Indian River to Jacksonville, along the Atlantic coast to Chesapeake Bay, up to Washington to call on President Wilson and present a letter from Mayor Gaynor. Last they will go by canal to Delaware River, Raritan Canal and river to New York Bay and home.

A crowd cheered the gay young couple at their start. A party of suffragettes, admirers of Mrs. Green for her daring, presented her with a "Votes for Women" pennant, which her craft will fly. The life-saving crew of Clifton, the Greens' home, gave them a pennant, which also became a part of the equipment.

Light Equipment Carried.

In order to make the canoe as light as possible, they took only four boxes containing provisions, camp equippage and clothing, and two large duffel bags containing a small circular tent and bedding. All was covered with canvas, which will be used as floor of the tent.

It is the intention of the couple to put into a city, town or village each night, pitch their tent and sleep for eight hours. When the stores they carry run out, they will get new supplies at the places where they will stop.

The Greens are anticipating with the greatest eagerness the portion of their trip that will take them to the South, about the gulf and the South Atlantic coast.

PASTOR POSING AS A DRUG USER GETS VICE DATA

Visits Omaha Stores and Secures Evidence for the Grand Jury. Made Up Like Tramp.

OMAHA, Aug. 16.—In order to more effectively carry on war against vice of all kinds, the Rev. A. E. Hess, pastor of the Hirst Memorial Young People's Church, of this city, has been disguising himself as a "roughneck" dope fiend and scouring the haunts of the denizens of the underworld for proofs of lawbreaking to present to the Grand Jury.

His latest tour was through a number of drug stores suspected of selling "coke." For his disguise he secured the services of a professional costumer, and so good was his "makeup" that he now has in his possession a hatful of little wooden boxes, each containing a few grains of cocaine—each labeled with the time and place of purchase, and in many cases the name of the clerk who sold it.

"I was never so scared in my life as when I started out for the 'dope' drug stores," Mr. Hess. "I was 'made up' like a dope fiend tramp and I was afraid I would be recognized and quizzed. I walked down alleys and hid in doorways every time I saw a policeman. Had I been seen by one of them I surely would have been arrested.

"At the first drug store I entered twice before I raked up enough courage to ask for the cocaine. The first time I merely watched the traffic; and that was terrible enough. I saw a woman fairly weep in her plea for the drug she craved and for which she had not the purchase price. Negroes and white men, trembling with the 'habit,' elbowed each other to the counter. I was unnoticed; they probably took me for one of their kind, which was just what I desired. When I finally asked for the 'snow'—a slang term for cocaine—it was handed out without question. The clerk simply went back behind his prescription case for an instant and emerged with the little box and handed it to me—but not before he took my dime. Later I had the contents of the box analyzed. It was 98 per cent cocaine.

"I got the idea of this individual raid while visiting the Police Court. I noticed that an alarming per cent of the prisoners showed unmistakable signs of being dope fiends. After I began this investigation I found that 'coke' can be purchased at almost any drug store in the lower wards of the city. The police don't, or won't, get the evidence with which to stop the traffic, although, from what I saw, the evidence is lying around loose ready for anyone to pick up and present to the County Attorney."

Mr. Hess is a young man and his congregation is composed almost exclusively of young people. He is college and city bred, and he "knows the ropes" as well as the ordinary young man about town. His sermons on the uplift of the city have attracted much attention. During his "coke" tour he secured enough proofs of law violation to close half the drug stores in the lower part of the city.

Predicts Dancing Is To Be Part of Church

Dr. G. Stanley Hall, President of Clark University, Declares Grace Should Be Encouraged.

GREELEY, COLO., Aug. 16.—That dancing is one of the best forms of exercise that is possible to take and that eventually it will become a part and parcel of the church when the grosser forms of it have been eliminated, was the statement made by Dr. G. Stanley Hall, president of Clark University.

"Dancing in itself as practiced in ancient times is what kept the Greeks and Romans healthful and graceful. The dances of those days were far different from the kind which are popular now and made strong men and graceful women.

"Rhythm is the basis of all physical movement, and I am convinced that this form of amusement, under the proper supervision, will become not only an adjunct to the church, which is proper and right, but to the schools also."

Neighbors Spur Lone Bachelor to Marry

Induce Him to Write to Widow He Never Has Seen and Wedding Follows.

CONCONCULLY, Wash., Aug. 16—Marriage licenses have been issued to Benedict Gubser, of Conconully, and Carolina G. Marshall, of Ontario.

Benedict Gubser has been a bachelor, living on a ranch near Conconully, Carolina G Marshall, was a widow living alone in Ontario. Neighbors of Gubser's took pity on his bachelorhood and prevailed upon him to write to Carolina Marshall, who was a friend of theirs, but who Gubser had never seen and did not know.

The correspondence was kept up for more than a year, and a short time ago she came to Pine Creep to visit with friends. They were introduced at a neighbor's and in a few days decided to be married.

Trees of Ice Age Found in Illinois

Species Have Been Preserved Through Thousands of Years.

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—Members of the International Phytographic Society who made studies among the hills and cliffs about Lake Bluff this week discovered there species of trees and shrubs that have been retained in the region since the Ice Age. This species, the Europeans found, have been preserved through thousands of years.

The poplar and creeping juniper, examples of the Ice Age flora, rarely found in this part of the temperate zone, were seen flourishing vigorously beside the beech, birch, oak and maple, which followed them in the normal succession. Lake Bluff is said to be "farthest south" for the creeping juniper.

Dog Carries Mail 10 Miles for Master

Faithful Canine Postman Prefers Making His Trips Between Sundown and Dark.

COVINGTON, IND., Aug. 16.—Charles Keller, south of this city, owns a dog which carries letters from Mr. Keller's home to Philip Keller's home, ten miles. When Mr. Keller wishes to communicate with his father he fastens the letter on the dog's neck and instructs him to deliver it.

The trip is always begun between sundown and dark, as this seems to be the time of day that the dog likes to travel best. The following evening the dog will return to his master with a reply.

SCHOOLS MUST TEACH HEALTH, SAYS EXPERT

Knoxville Educator Declares Children Must Be Given Training in Method of Living.

DENVER, Aug. 16.—"Is a college education necessary to fit a boy or girl for life?" P. P. Claxton, of Knoxville, Tenn., Commissioner of Education, was asked during his stay here.

"Every boy or girl should be given training of the kind best fitted to prepare him for life until he or she reaches the age of twenty-one. I do not believe that every young man or woman should spend all of his or her time studying dead languages or acquiring the ordinary cultural education. Girls are divided into two classes—pie-crust girls and Shakespeare girls. The first should have a pie-crust training, the latter a Shakespeare training.

"My hobby is the rural schools. The economic and social value of the country school is underestimated. It is in truth the training ground for our country."

Believes in Eugenics.

"Do you believe that eugenics should be taught in our schools?"

"There is one fundamental interest of humanity, and that is life. What has to do with the perpetuation of life and the improvement of the life of the race should certainly be taught in our schools," Claxton answered.

"I believe that the mother should teach the child the serious matters connected with its life, but when she fails, the school must do her work.

"I can see no sane reason why that which is of vital importance to the child should be omitted from its education."

In speaking at the University of Denver on the subject of "Some Rights of Children," he said.

"Legislators have more power than God Almighty to dominate the homes and characters of children.

Everything in Environment.

"When Dr. Holmes was asked when education begins he answered:

"'With the child's grandmother at least. A child should live in such an environment that his character will respond to its healthy influences. It is better for a child to be reared in a home where the living is plain and the thinking high rather than in a home where the thinking is petty and trivial, though the living may be as fat as a pig eating swill out of a golden trough.

"The first right of the child," Claxton continued, "is to live and not to die. Formerly two out of every five children died when very young. It is the duty of parents to see that their child is born with vitality enough to live. In the second place, the parents must see that home conditions are sanitary. Mothers must know how to care for children. Girls should be taught domestic science and the care of the children in the schools.

"The second right of the child is to reach manhood and womanhood in good health, so as to do his or her work with power and strength and to reach a good old age."

Rich Girl Takes Job In Milliner's Shop

Young Woman Works to Equip Herself for Teaching at Eastern Girls' School.

ST. LOUIS Aug. 16.—Miss Delphine Force, pretty society girl and daughter of wealthy parents, is now a millinery apprentice at $3 a week and says she likes it. She recently acquired fame by quitting society to become a professional cook. Not that she means apprenticing to be her life work; she is going to be a teacher of domestic science at Dana Hall, Wellesley, Mass., in the fall, and as millinery comes in the curriculum, she has to know it.

Two months ago she applied for a position at a big St. Louis store. She was offered $1.50 a week. She refused and got $2. On July 26 her pay was raised to $3. She felt so good about having her proficiency recognized that she took a week's vacation.

CHANCE REVEALS $200 SECRETED IN A TABLE

BRISTOL, PA., Aug. 16.—Because a table was too big to get through the door at the sale of the household effects of Joseph Hall, who committed suicide, it was taken apart, when a roll of bills totaling $200 dropped out.

BREAKS TOOTH ON PEARL.

AKRON, OHIO, Aug. 16.—While eating clams at a restaurant here, Jack Newman, a waiter, bit into something hard, breaking a tooth. He found a pearl worth $1,000.

U. S. Commissioner's Idea Of the Rights of Children

To live and not to die.
To reach manhood and womanhood in good health.
To be born with a good name.
To have a joyous childhood.
Induction into appreciation of institutional life.
Induction into understanding of religious heritage.
Right to have individuality respected.

Foreign-Born Women Voting Is Restricted

Illinois Attorney General Outlines Conditions Under Which They Can Cast Ballots.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., Aug. 16.—In answer to Mayor Schriver, of Rock Island, for an opinion on votes for women under the new suffrage law and to govern authorities in an approaching election, Attorney General Lucey to-day held:

"That a foreign-born woman who marries a citizen of the United States, whether such citizen be natural born or naturalized, by such an act of marriage becomes a citizen of the United States.

"An unmarried foreign-born woman whose father did not become naturalized until after she arrived at her majority, would not, by such act of naturalization upon the part of her father, become a citizen of the United States.

"A woman born in the United States whose father was not naturalized prior to her arriving at her majority is a citizen of the United States."

Leaves Rich Man's Home for Kitchen

Canadian's Wife Arrested Says She Prefers Love to Comfort and Luxury.

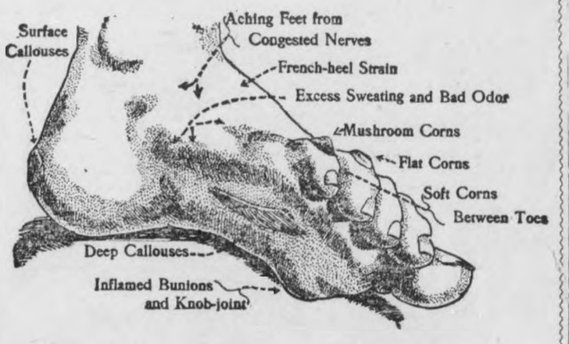
MINNEAPOLIS, Aug. 16.—In order to be near her first husband, whom she declared she had always loved, Mrs. J. F. Bradford, who says she is the wife of a wealthy business man of Medicine Hat, left her husband's comfortable home eight months ago and came here where, until a few days ago, she worked as a domestic in a kitchen.

H. M. Cherron, the half-breed Indian whom she had married in Stillwater fourteen years ago when she was 16, was arrested with her. Mrs. Bradford, herself part Indian, told the police that she married Bradford eighteen months ago in Canada. Life with him was not pleasant, she said, so she took her two children by her first marriage and was joined by Cherron.

Fathers to Learn To Care for Babies

Philadelphia Hospital Will Have Training School Feature for Paternal Nurses.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 16.—Physicians in charge of the Children's Homeopathic Hospital have decided to have a weekly clinic for fathers. Heretofore they have conducted throughout the year a clinic for mothers in order that a free course of instruction might be given to show the mothers how to care for the babies and children. The course has given such success that many of the mothers frequently expressed the desire that their husbands might hear the lectures, too, for they said that many of the things that they went home and told were not believed.



The doctors began to plan an investigation, and they found that many of the errors of childhood might be corrected if the "Old Man" only knew what to do in emergencies.

Wedding Ring Made Smaller for Another

Wife Enters Suit When She Finds Husband Had Bridal Token Transformed.

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 16.—When she discovered that her husband had caused her wedding ring to be remelted and made small enough to fit the finger of another woman, Cleroa Prentiss, a vaudeville actress, began suit for divorce, according to her testimony before Superior Judge B. V. Sargent, sitting for Judge Cabaniss.

Judge Sargent, after listening to her story, granted an interlocutory decree from Colonel D. Prentiss, an actor. The grounds were statutory.

Tells Positive Cure For all Foot Troubles

Science has proven that nearly all foot troubles originate from a common cause; that of injured tissues. The following information will be welcomed by thousands of victims of daily foot torture. No matter how many patent medicines you have tried in vain, this treatment which was formerly known only to doctors will do the work. Don't waste time. Get it at once. "Dissolve two tablespoonfuls of Calocide compound in a basin of warm water. Soak the feet for a full fifteen minutes, gently rubbing the sore parts." The effects are marvelous. All pain disappears instantly and the feet feel simply delightful. Corns and callouses can be peeled right off. Bunions, aching feet and sweaty, smelly feet get immediate relief. Use this treatment a week and your foot troubles will be a thing of the past. Calocide works through the pores and removes the cause. Any druggist has Calocide in stock or will get it from his wholesale house. Don't be influenced to take something else instead. A twenty-five cent box is said to be enough to cure the worst feet.

WOMEN RUN TOWN WHERE MEN FAILED

For Twenty Years Efforts to Put Woodland, Colo., on the Map Were Useless.

WOODLAND PARK, COLO., Aug. 16.—The women of Woodland Park have started a movement to put the town on the map of Colorado's summer resorts.

Twenty years ago the men of the town tried it and their efforts ended a few years ago in the best building lots selling for taxes.

When the men of two decades ago thought the town offered great inducements, they voted $20,000 in bonds and built a water system and an artificial lake in the center of the town.

There were bandstands built in the woods around the town, and a band was maintained for two or three summers. Then the bottom fell out.

The other day the waterworks bonds became due. The men who had been the prime movers in the boom of twenty years ago were discouraged and their daughters and wives took up the affairs of the town.

They organized the Woodland Park Improvement Association. The association succeeded in having the bonded indebtedness compromised for $6,000 and the town now has the money to pay the bonds and improve the water system.

The women have decided to have a series of "tag" days and entertainments by which they will raise funds to put in street lights, street signs, lights at the Colorado Midland station and other improvements.

The women are going to work now to make Woodland Park an important station on the new international automobile highway, which probably will pass through here. They have an organization of 50 active members, and are going to show their fathers, husbands and brothers the right way to put a town on the map. They have done more in a week than the men have done in twenty years, and the men have about concluded that they are amateurs in town building.

Slayer's Children Cause Bishop's Plea

Family Needs Prisoner More Than State, Minister Declares in His Petition.

ST. PAUL, Aug. 16.—Explanation of the recent request of Bishop Edwin H. Hughes, of San Francisco, that the Minnesota Board of Pardons consider favorably the application of Matthew H. McNabb, is contained in a letter to Governor Eberhart. Bishop Hughes, a boyhood playmate of McNabb, who was convicted of white slavery, writes:

"My appeal was not based on behalf of McNabb himself, but rather in behalf of his wife and six children, who sorely needed his financial support."

McNabb's application for a pardon was denied.

Asks Court to Keep Mother-in-Law Away

Wealthy Nebraskan Gets Out Injunction to Curtail Visit of His Wife's Parent.

OMAHA, NEBR., Aug. 16.—Mrs. Levi A. Gardner, of Harvard, Ill., was yesterday placed under a restraining order from the District Court ordering her to keep out of the house of her son-in-law, Leslie L. King, a wealthy business man of Omaha.

Mrs. Gardner has been visiting the King family for some months, and, according to King, is causing trouble between him and his wife. Mrs. Gardner refused to leave when requested to do so, and King applied to the court and secured an injunction. Mrs. Gardner moved to a hotel.

According to King's petition, he furnished his home at a cost of $15,000, and offered to pay his mother-in-law expenses to the amount of $15 per day if she will go somewhere else in the city.

BOLT KILLS HIM ON GRAVE.

CLIFTON HEIGHTS, PA., Aug. 16. Lightning killed Patrick Toomey, 47 years old, on a grave in Holy Cross Cemetery.

WANT TO MAKE MONEY? START TERRAPIN FARM

Government Authority Declares There Are Big Profits in the Diamond Backs.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—The diamond-back terrapin, aristocrat of the dining table and king of the banquet menu, need not disappear from the sandy shores of the United States and be lost to disciples of Epicurus forever if the business men of the nation will allow themselves to be awakened to the fact that there are fat dividends in the breeding of the animals.

Uncle Sam is sponsor for this statement. Experts in the Bureau of Fisheries are anxious that business men shall read its report.

At Beaufort, N. C., the experts started out four years ago with 40 females and 18 males, terrapin such as may be found from Southern Virginia all along the coast down to Florida. From this small breeding stock the experts procured 295 eggs in 1910. Of the 295 eggs only 7 failed to hatch.

In 1911 513 eggs were procured, and of these 421 were hatched. Even better results were obtained in 1912, when 650 eggs were procured and 538 hatched. The number of eggs laid and hatched in 1913 is expected to be far greater. Of course, a terrapin must be five or six years old before he is in the best shape for the table, but this slow growth is offset by the fact that "one man may care for several thousand terrapin."

Terrapin farms, the Government report says, should be situated on the shore line of tidal salt water, where a supply of fresh water also is available; low, swamp land where fish and crabs are plentiful being preferable. Best results are obtained by breeding the terrapin in pens specially built, but not expensive in construction.

Unlike the chicken breeders and the breeders of other food animals, the terrapin breeder need not worry about disease in his stock. The Government experts say: "So far as is known, diamond-back terrapins are not subject to epidemic disease, and after reaching the age of two or three years have no important enemy except man."

BANKRUPT'S REQUEST TO PAY DEBTS JARS COURT

COLUMBUS, OHIO, Aug. 16.—In John Mitchell, of Troy, Federal Judge Sater has discovered an honest man.

Several months ago, when Mitchell filed his petition in bankruptcy, his liabilities so exceeded his assets that his creditors decided that the estate offered "poor picking."

Judge Sater rubbed his eyes and read twice when he received a letter from Mitchell stating he had recently come into possession of enough property to pay off entirely his outstanding claims. It will take about all, he said, but he desired to escape being declared a bankrupt.

For MILADY'S WARDROBE

By MME. HAUTE MONDE.

MANY of the latest summer models are almost entirely made of white muslin richly embroidered in the openwork English style. These dresses are accompanied by broad sashes and short coats of real lace. The hats worn with them are exaggeratedly "picture" in outline. The brim is always wide and the crown almost hidden behind immense butterfly bows of tulle or lace. For occasions of ceremony Leghorn and Tuscan hats are trimmed with sweeping ostrich feathers in white or pale pastel tints.

* * *

Half a dozen different coatees or mantlets can be worn with the same robette, and endless variations can be arranged with the introduction of finely embroidered sashes which possess heavily fringed ends. The corsage portion of these robettes is quite plain, almost like a fine corset cover. It is made plain expressly, because the great object is the introduction of dainty lace and net blouses and picturesque coatees or mantlets. When accompanied by a shady hat in Leghorn trimmed with pale roses and black velvet ribbons these little dresses have a special cachet.

* * *

Embroidered linen bags are offered in many shapes and in as many degrees of smartness, some being treated quite as carefully in matters of finish, mountings, etc., as though they were of gorgeous material. Colored linen, embroidered with a touch of Bulgarian embroidery makes some effective bags for individual costumes, but the one-tone color is more practical for general use, and some of the handsome bags of real Irish lace filet or other bold lace are better for general summer use than the embroidered linens.

* * *

Some particularly good belts called the hip belt, are made up in white and fashionable shades and have large oval buckles of the leather.

* * *

The waistline is not only allowed to remain normal, but by swathing it in wide supple sashes its size is considerably increased.

* * *

The soft draped bodice minus the high restraining collar is a feature of artistic gowns worn by women in Paris.

* * *

The French designer knows where a line must be accentuated and in many cases uses tiny buttons for this purpose.

* * *

Keen appreciation of the effective lights and shadows given by a moire effect has returned. Many frocks worn by Paris manequins at the Longchamps races were made of soft crepe with the moire effect.

* * *

Very much worn are the evening coats of fine black net, closely woven with glittering beads.

* * *

Plaited peplums of maline, net or mousseline de soie appear on some of the newest frocks, and these are stiffened by a thin wire or ruching of taffeta at the bottom, so they extend beyond the frock.

* * *

The colored slip is in vogue and under frocks of sheer linen, mousseline de soie or batiste have pink, blue, yellow or green silk linings. The girdles worn with these costumes are usually of a contrasting color.

* * *

In millinery the single red rose is a note which bids fair to become extremely popular. It nestles among folds of black or white tulle, clings to the edge of the brim, hangs over the hair on the underbrim or forms a spikelike arrangement at the back.

The large garden hats of leghorn, maline and lace are trimmed with black velvet ribbon, drawn about the crown and, passing through the slits at the back, is tied in a flat bow at the back. A single flower placed at the side near the edge of the brim completes the trimming.

* * *

Coats show great diversity of length, plain tailor-made models being shorter than dressier models, in which coats may reach to knees.

* * *

One pretty feature of recent summer frocks has been the lace jacket or coatee with its trimming of fur or of swansdown. Ermine is being used for this purpose, sometimes forming a wide collar at the back. Wide lace bretelles are another feature of late fashions. They are a poor second, it must be admitted, to the surplice and the fichu. But anything that has the temerity to dispute the claims of these two effects deserves some notice.

* * *

Apropos of furs, it is reported that Bechoff-David recently introduced fox scarfs dyed a reddish shade; and the somewhat alarming suggestion is made that next winter we shall see furs artificially colored in brilliant tints. It is rather appalling to think of blue, green, red and violet furs!

* * *

The cincture that suggests the plaster babies of Lucas della Robia, at the Orphanage in Florence, is strongly suggested in some of the sashes that wrap around the waist and girdle the torso of the fashionable woman. When these long sashes first appeared they were not liked, but the public taste now finds them picturesque.

* * *

Velvet, brocaded velvet and metallic brocades are going to be the favored fabrics for these garments in the autumn and winter, just as they are now, and the fur collars that make them smart in summer—according to fashion's paradoxical whims—will make them practical as well as smart when the theater and opera seasons begin.

* * *

Many women are wearing eyelet embroidered stockings in white, black and colors; also white and black silk stockings ornamented with embroidery or insets of lace. The girls who are clever with the needle can fashion these expensive stockings for themselves, and pretty color notes to match the gowns may be introduced.

* * *

Popular prizes at the bridge contests held by the sea are the bathing girl pin cushions. Bisque jointed dolls dressed in red and white and blue and white striped bathing suits are mounted on cushions of Turkish toweling. Some are very prim looking, with the hair in two long braids; others suggest the mermaid with flowing hair. The cushions are shown in ovals, squares, circles, etc., and are arranged to hang up and stand. They are fitted with pins and trimmed with ribbons to match the bathing suits.

* * *

It is almost compulsory for the blue serge suit to have a vest or waistcoat, and all sorts of materials are being used for them. The new duvetyns—a successor to the velvety velours de laine—in the lovely soft colorings are ideal for these waistcoats.

* * *

Chiffon veils are being embroidered, the work being done in floss of the same color. The pattern in all these veils must be so arranged as to make the plain mesh area, whether over the entire face or simply over the eyes, conspicuously transparent by way of contrast.

* * *

Now that the pendulum of fashion has swung in the direction of pleated skirts they threaten to become ubiquitous. Women are discovering that the little loose folds at the feet are very becoming, and also that pleated skirts do not really add width to the figure. The sunray pleats are in great demand for such materials as charmeuse, silk cashmere and tussor, but for crepe de chine and chiffon nothing can take the place of the fine accordion pleats.

* * *

In the world of fashion things are frequently topsy-turvy. The unexpected is always welcome. Now that valuable jewels are worn on hats and shoes the homely, but always effective jet ornaments are given a place of honor. Round jet brackets are the latest fad, and they are worn with light and fragile summer gowns of lace and chiffon.

* * *

The black and white season in the world of Fashion is now upon us. After the garish colors of the spring, there has come a complete revulsion of feeling. Women of taste have grown disgusted with the color schemes in which crude tints were thrown together by unskilled hands at the bidding of inartistic brains. Bulgarian tints have sounded the knell of crude colors; for the moment we are black and white or "pastel." And for the Trouville season, of which I shall speak in detail in a future article, an amazing number of pure white costumes are being made. White linen, white China silk, white embroidered lawn—these and many other dainty materials are in constant request for seaside dresses. As to fine white tulle it is being used for a dozen different purposes—for dresses, mantles, millinery, blouses, etc. Very lovely summer gowns are those made of wide-meshed silk net, the net which bears the name of "Tosca." These gowns are mounted over pleated slips of chiffon or crepe de chine and very frequently they are decorated with tiers of graduated flounces. Ordinary Brussels net is also fashionable just now, especially for draped mantles and for pleated waistcoats, the latter being used in connection with tailored suits of fine serge or linen.

* * *

A pretty fashion has been revived for children's summer frocks of thin material. This is the long-ended bow of ribbon, fastened just below the left shoulder. The ribbon, in soft shades of blue or pink, is made into a many-looped rosette, quite in the old fashion, and from the rosette hang three or four streamer ends. The ribbon should not be more than an inch or an inch and a half wide.

FACE COVERED WITH PIMPLES

Spread to Back. Could Hardly Sleep for Burning and Itching. Caused Disfigurement. Cuticura Soap and Ointment Entirely Cured.

214 Brevard St., Tampa, Fla. — "Some three years ago I commenced to suffer from a rash on my face and back. Before the pimples came on my face there were a lot of blackheads. It looked as if the blackheads turned into pimples because after a little while all of them were gone and my face was covered with pimples. They were small at first but gradually grew and right at the end of each pimple it was all white. I carelessly picked them with my finger nails, which made them spread, and I soon discovered them on my back. My back was covered with pimples and my face the same way. At night I could hardly sleep on account of the burning and itching sensation they caused. I felt like a lot of small-sized crabs biting at my back. I did not like to go out because the pimples caused disfigurement.

"Seeing the advertisement of Cuticura Soap and Ointment in one of the magazines I sent for a sample. At night I would put the Cuticura Ointment on my face and back and I was pleased with the result. I bought some Cuticura Soap and Ointment, and I am glad to be able to say that I am entirely cured of pimples." (Signed) Jno. O. Darlington, Jan. 25, 1913.

Cuticura Soap 25c. and Cuticura Ointment 50c. are sold everywhere. Liberal sample of each mailed free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. T, Boston."

Men who shave and shampoo with Cuticura Soap will find it best for skin and scalp.

Daring Dresses Stir Even Paris

MODISTES THREATENED WITH BOYCOTT

The climax in bold attire for women. The "Languourous Lift" is shown at the left, while the "Dagger Point" appears at the right. All Paris is excited over these latest gowns for evening dress.

"Languorous Lift" and "Dagger Point" Two Productions That Have Caused Criticism.

Special Cable to The American.

PARIS, Aug. 16.—All manner of figure-displaying fashions have been disported at race courses and in the cafes of Paris by models of the modistes, and in some instances the public of the French Capital has been disgusted by the extreme to which the dictators of feminine attire have gone, but has looked on with unprotesting interest. At length, however, Parisiennes are overwrought. Even the leading dressmakers are endeavoring to put forth evening gowns which in their scantiness expose to view more of the bust and limbs of the wearer than modest woman will countenance. All Paris is stirred and threats of boycotts are to be heard.

The two productions which are accredited with precipitating this disturbed situation are termed the "Languorous Lift" and the "Dagger Point." The situation has been acute for months, and the introduction of these latest effects has but served to bring it to a head. The protests come not alone from women of France, but rumors are drifting into Paris of a revulsion on the part of American and German patrons, who for years have proved so profitable to the modistes of this city.

Being designed exclusively for evening wear, both the "Languorous Lift" and the "Dagger Point" are made with extensive trains. The former gown is so constructed as to display one limb to the height of the knee. This effect is not gained, however, by a side slit, but by the draping of the skirt, which is caught up near the hip and permitted to fall in folds on either side of the exposed limb. The bodice, close fitting, is cut with a deep square neck and trimmed in velvet, which extends down the front, terminating in streamers.

The "Languorous Lift," though the cause of wide criticism, does not approach in boldness the "Dagger Point." This is the most pronounced limb-displaying gown which has been shown here. With its train at the back, the front of the skirt is cut away on either side slightly above the knees to terminate in the sharp point, from which the creation gets its name.

From a front view both lower limbs are entirely exposed, and when the wearer attempts to walk, leaving her train to sweep from knees down her form is displayed. It is with this gown that the most profusely decorated hosiery has been introduced. All manner of unique designs in varied colors are embroidered on these stockings.

The bodice is nearly as scanty as the skirt. Being close fitting, it is cut in a sharp V to the high waist line formed by a broad sash girdle. The arm, like neck and limbs, are exposed to view, since shoulder sleeves are worn.

BLACK HOSE BOSTON FAD.

BOSTON, Aug. 16.—Black stockings worn with white shoes seem to be quite the fad on the North Shore. Last year all wore white stockings with black shoes, but this season things have been reversed. Several girls are following the fad.

Decollete Gowns for Day Wear

The newest models for gowns created by the leading dressmakers for the seasons at the fashionable seaside resorts present several novel features. In the first place, the greater number of these gowns would have been pronounced evening dresses by our mothers, but not by our great-great-grandmothers, who themselves wore decollete corsages in the daytime. The sleeves of the elaborate afternoon gown of to-day are so short and so skimpy that they hardly deserve to be called sleeves at all. In many cases the corsages of garden party and race gowns do not have the pointed back and front effect which is peculiar to the evening dresses of to-day, but are made round on the shoulders, quite in the style of certain 1830 gowns. White fox stoles and borders are freely used in conjunction with such robes as these. A quaint but exceedingly picturesque idea.

New Jewelry Fads

Platinum, which has bounded up to the height of fashion (and price, too) as a setting for diamonds, seems now to be the supreme metal, and in the latest designs of the jewelers gold is used only in jewels designed for informal morning wear. Small gems have crowded out the larger sizes, and the dainty, flimy creations, to be popular this summer, show this trend. The Balkan war is reflected by jewelry of many colors, and the designs follow the ideas embodied in the jewelry of those countries, but somewhat modified.

Yellow, at present a popular color in the fashion world, has called for the use of amber, topaz and yellow sapphires, while the use of red, in its various shades, has met with a response in the Oriental trend in jewelry. Good taste and fashion go hand in hand in dictating that jewelry appropriate for evening wear is entirely out of place in the morning, when only ornaments of actual use are suitable, as, for example, a simple brooch that holds the collar in place. If a woman is in the habit of wearing earrings—which, by the way, are waning in popularity in the latest jewelry offerings—those of the "stud" type are considered right for morning wear. They may be either of pearls, baroque pearls (of good quality) or a pearl and small diamond. A simple pin at the throat, either in bar, circle, oval or other shape, may be worn in the forenoon with good taste, but in the whole realm of jewelry the pearl necklace of a single strand is the only piece that may be worn with absolute good taste mornings, afternoons or evenings.

Perhaps the most popular single article of jewelry that has appeared in the shops in months is the watch bracelet. Shown in every conceivable pattern and in all grades, from the expensive diamond studded platinum affairs, which only the wealthy can afford, to the cheapest of plated gold and silver offerings.

Lapel Chains for Men

There was a time not so very long ago when lapel buttons and chains were considered bad form by some of the men who pay special attention to matters of dress, but nowadays the fashion is generally accepted, though of course only with the negligee. With the soft shirt and light summer suit these chains are much worn.

The chains are of gold or silver to correspond with the watch, and the button which is fastened in the lapel buttonhole may be of plain, polished gold or silver, hand engraved or with engine turning (a popular mode of decoration) or enamelled, set with one or more gems, and fashioned into any one of countless shapes.

The plainer buttons are concave disks, ovals, triangles, squares, hexagons or octagons with engine-turned holders, and variations of these shapes are shown with fluted or beaded edges.

The monogram may be engraved on the lapel button, or the crest or initials traced in colored enamels. Club, fraternity or society emblems or school or college colors make good decorations for the buttons.

Uses for Old Lace

The woman who possesses rare old family lace is as fortunate as she who owns lovely jewelry. Lace lends itself to a thousand adaptations. A woman of taste and individuality can do more with lace than with anything else to solve the problem of dressing well at a moderate cost.

Lace is never old-fashioned. Take, for instance, a dress of supple white silk over which is a clinging straight gown with a tunic effect. The bodice is plain over the shoulders. Under the arms and across the bust is a full, straight piece of lace with a blue velvet ribbon threading the top. The fullness is gathered in at the waist, under a blue velvet waistband, and in front is a row of pretty shaded roses over the waistband. Could anything be more charmingly youthful? Almost any woman has old pieces of lace laid away which would serve in such a gown.

For a young matron a yellow crepe de chine is gathered up over a lace front panel. Another frock of white lace is partially veiled in old rose, and pale blue mousseline de soie, draped toward one side. With the present fashions of draping, the possibilities of using beautiful laces without cutting or destroying them is endless.

FUTURIST GAUZE WRAPS LATEST EUROPEAN FAD

Weirdest Designs Are Printed Upon Them, and Some, Not Too Grotesque, Are Attractive.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—The very latest craze, initiated by a futurist artist in Paris, is for gauze wraps to be worn at race meetings or at the Casino on the continent. These wraps have the weirdest designs printed upon them, and some of them, when not too grotesque, are wonderfully attractive.

The Viscountess Curzon, one of the loveliest blondes in England, has just had made a marvelous gauze wrap for continental wear. It has a border of Egyptian figures in black thrown against dead white background, the material being so fine that it could be drawn through a ring.

The lining of the wrap is of tangerine orange tulle and there is an immense tulle.

It is to be worn over a fairylike dress of embroidered muslin. The hat is a broad Tuscan, weighed down at one side by a cluster of white, black and purple frissee. Long single black velvet ribbon, which depends on the hat, is passed round the throat and allowed to hang low at the back.

All the latest tunics are of striped gauze, and they are very effective, and are worn over black charmeuse. Sleeves are shorter and shorter, so that thirty-button gloves are an absolute necessity.

In regard to hats, society women are getting tired of big lace, since they have become fashionable in the music halls. The bonnet-shaped hat is now much in favor with girls.

Lady Diana Manners looked particularly attractive at a recent garden party in one which came well down over her ears. Around the rim were clusters of black and red cherries and wide strings of black velvet, tied at the back so that the ends fell straight down.

At the seaside resorts, white linen hats lined with black moire, adorned with white wings, are being worn by many well dressed girls.

Perfect Diamond Is Exceedingly Rare

London Dealer Declares That Women Are Best Judge of the Jewels.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—It was demonstrated at the Jewelers' Exhibition, Agricultural Hall, Islington, which closed the other day, that the perfect diamond is rare.

One dealer produced a very large diamond which he was prepared to sell for $300.

"If nature," he said, "had not tinged it with that tint of yellow the stone would be worth $30,000.

"To those who have no knowledge of gems I would say: 'Do not buy as real for $25 a diamond that is pure crystal without blemish, for it would not be real.'

"Women are the best judges of the value of precious stones because they treasure them more than men. It is a matter of instinct."

X-Ray Skirts Told To Hide in Spokane

Meeting of Transparent Gowns and Sunday Sunshine Forbidden on the Streets.

SPOKANE, WASH., Aug. 16.—Women who saunter about the streets of Spokane clad in flimsy, transparent silhouette or tango gowns will hereafter do so at risk of arrest, according to the announcement to-day by David C. Coates, Commissioner of Public Safety. The much-heralded silhouette gown appeared on the streets in the Sunday sunshine and created so much commotion that the Commissioner issued the warning at once.

"If necessary, I will order the police department to make arrests," said the Commissioner.

FULFILL DYING PLEA FOR POSIES AND FINE DRESS

FORT COLLINS, COLO., Aug. 16. Complying so far as they were able with the last expressed wish of Mrs. Alice McMillan, who was frozen to death in the Manhattan mining district, many sympathetic women of Fort Collins united to provide a decent burial for the body, thus saving it from interment in the Potter's Field.

Mrs. McMillan, whose body was not found until the April thaws, had left a note asking that she be buried in "fine clothing, in a white casket, with a white hearse and an abundance of flowers."

When it was learned definitely that Mrs. McMillan was likely to be buried in a pauper's grave, the women took the matter in hand and the funeral was held.

POLICEMEN PERMITTED TO WORK IN SHIRT SLEEVES

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., Aug. 16.—Shirt sleeves and white duck caps are to replace the blue coat and heavy helmet of the traffic policemen.

White roll collars and narrow black bow ties are to be worn with the shirtwaists, and the traffic officers have been asked to have their "gun pockets" deepened, so that their revolvers will pot show.

HOBBLE HINDERS HER FLIGHT FROM POLICE

KANSAS CITY, Aug. 16.—Mrs. Hazel Allsworth's hobble skirt was her undoing. "Otherwise I never should have been caught," she told the police, when relating her pursuit by a policeman.

Mrs. Allsworth confessed to the police, they said, that she had received $40 her husband had taken from a man from Keytesville, Mo., who was stopping at their home.

Alert Modisters Now Invent Dress For the Pet Dogs

Motoring Coats, Jeweled Collars and Fancy Leashes Among Articles of Canine Apparel.

Special Cable to The American.

PARIS, Aug. 16.—The dog question is again the liveliest subject at seaside and salon. Having thrashed out fashions for women, artists and our leaders of fashion, male and female, are discussing what fashionable dogs should wear. Here are their conclusions:

Leather collars are still worn, but they should be of the same color and material as the leash. The most fashionable collars are of brass or silver, many of them mounted with precious stones, turquoises, sapphires and rubies.

Color Schemes Popular.

Much attention is paid to artistic combinations in dog wear. For instance, a dark brindled bulldog should have a red leather collar with silver-gilt mountings, while a white brindled dog looks best in a white collar set with tourquoises.

For Pekinese, Japanese and King Charles spaniels, the collar should be of worked silver, light and supple, of fine mesh and closed by a tiny padlock. A very stylish effect is obtained by the use of patent leather collars, and a ravishing combination for Poms is the dog harness which encircles the neck and breast.

Light Coats for Greyhounds.

Greyhounds look best in light colored coats with a stripe to match.

For motoring dogs, English stuffs and fur coats are in high favor, and plaids of dark shades are considered most suitable. At the seaside, sporting sweaters are very fashionable for short-haired dogs, and the wet summer is responsible for the appearance of canine mackintoshes, daintily gathered in at the neck and legs.

Every well bred dog has at least two pairs of boots, a pair of Wellingtons for outdoors wear and velvet or satin pumps for indoors.

"Unlucky Opal" Is To Be Worn a Great Deal This Season

Royalty Starts the Vogue and Jewelers Find it a Hard Matter to Supply the Demand.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—The real opal, which has long been out of favor with the fair sex, is going to enjoy a great vogue this fall. There has always been a superstitious prejudice against these stones, but the new fashion of long necklaces of uncut opals has proved too much for the women to resist, and the jewelers of Bond street and the Rue de la Paix are hard put to it to get a sufficient stock.

Queen Victoria presented to each of her daughters on her marriage a magnificent set of opal ornaments, but these have seldom seen the light of day. One night at the opera, however, it was observed that Princess Henry of Pattenberg was wearing hers, and no doubt Princess Louise and Princess Christian will follow her example.

The Queen of Spain has always worn these stones, for her birthday is in October, the lucky month for opals, and Lady Deerhurst and Lady Aline Vivian are similarly fortunate—the latter indeed wore them on her wedding day.

Lady de Bathe (Lily Langtry) has some fine stones, but probably the most valuable opals in England belong to Countess Beauchamp, who has a tiara, necklace, brooches and earrings, which were collected at much below their value by Lord Beauchamp when he was Governor of Australia.

Others who have worn opals lately are the Dowager Lady Sligo and Lady Norah Brassey.

The Princess Royal has a deep-rooted horror of them. Some fine opals were maong the jewels she lost when whencked on the Delhi and she declares that their evil influence pursues her to this day.

SUSPENDERS TO BE INCLUDED IN WOMAN'S ATTIRE

"Galluses" or Braces of Blue the Last Word in New Masculine Mode.

Special Cable to The American.

PARIS, Aug. 16.—Women's skirts for some time have been approaching the shape of the garments worn by the masculine sex, and now Paris and London face the prospect of being feminine attire more like men's than ever. The last word in women's clothes is "galluses." The suspenders look very much like the broad blue variety often hung in shop windows in America and possibly labeled, "The Fireman's Friend."

A Rue de la Paix dressmaker is enthusiastic over women wearing suspenders. "Braces," she declared, "will keep the blouse from coming up out of the waistband, as it sometimes does, and if carried out in the color of the skirt they should make a charming line."

Braces are not the only masculine trend in fashion, however, for after a wave of decided femininity in frocks, when frills and fluffs, and sashes and slashes, and hoppings and hobblings have been in vogue, fashion has dashed to the other extreme and London and Paris are promised waistcoats with cutaway coats, large steel trouser buckles at the back of tweed skirts and a ponderous and portly watch chain stretched across the diaphragm.

For the present the waistcoats are still daintily evolved in delicate grays and chestnuts, sprigged or flowered. Sometimes the waistcoats reach up to the neck, finishing in a small "V." Again they wrinkle effectively around the waist with a single or double row of pearl buttons. One ladies' tailor is showing a striped blue and red waistcoat with roses of another shade wandering gayly across it, the whole effect being something like a Union Jack with a flower garden on it.

The men's tailors speak rather contemptuously of the new fashions for women, scoffing especially at waistcoats, which they say have been tried several seasons without much success.

"GETS-IT" Chases Corns Alright!

Easy As One, Two, Three; No Fuss, No Pain, by Using "GETS-IT."

Just take two seconds to put a little "GETS-IT" on that corn. That corn is "done for" as sure as the sun rises. The corn shrivels up, vanishes. SUNDAY AMERICAN'S SPECIAL CABLE LETTERS RECEIVED FROM ALL THE GREAT CAPITALS OF EUROPE

'OH, I SAY,' REAL FRENCH FARCE; ITS DOORS BANG

Alan Dale Finds It Minus the Star, but He Is Willing to Admit That He Did Smile.

By ALAN DALE,
Special Correspondent of The Sunday American.

LONDON, Aug. 7.—One swallow may not make a summer (though I believe it does), but nobody will deny that one "star" can make a play. Therefore, if that one "star" should be out of the cast (as often happens in London) it is quite likely that the play will lose its exuberance. I saw "Oh, I Say!" at the Criterion Theater when Mr. James Welch was out of the cast. I couldn't ask for my money back (I had been kindly presented with a pair of stalls), so I sat through a star-less "Oh, I Say!!" and paid far more attention to the play than I should have done.

Londoners don't mind a bit when the actor or actress they pay to see takes a little vacation and an understudy goes on. (You learn this from a slip always inclosed in the program, when it is too late to repine.) Londoners are used to it.

I don't know what had happened to James Welch. Anyway, it was his understudy, H. Langdon Bruce, who played the part of the bridegroom in "Oh, I Say!!"—a particularly arduous role for an understudy to tackle. I divided my time feeling sorry for H. Langdon Bruce and for myself—particularly for myself.

"Oh, I Say!!" must have been a scorcher in its original French of Henri Kersai and Albert Barre, when it was called "Une Nuit de Noces" (A Wedding Night). It had to be adapted into London by Sydney Blew and Douglas Hoare. What they had to do was to "wedding-ring" the affair, or at least, in a question of equivocal relations, to suggest that the two were "engaged."

The little English word "engaged" covers a multitude of Parisian iniquities. Marcel, the hero of the piece, just married to the beautiful Suzette, meets in the foyer of the Hotel d'Angleterre at Beauvais the scintillant and corruscating Sidonie, to whom he has been "engaged." You smile as the word pops out in its Anglo-Saxon humbug. You are perfectly well aware what the adapter has done, but you look around you at the ornate and bare-shouldered British matron, and you quite understand why Marcel and Sidonie were "engaged."

That is really the gist and the gust of "Oh, I Say!!" The usual farcical use of lies is resorted to, and when I tell you that there are four doors in the setting—all of which bank—you can see your play. Everybody is pushed in at one door or other. Everybody else rushes in at another door. The most popular remark made is "You here?"

Each, seeing the other, cries "You here?" I daresay you have heard the remark before in French farce. Half of the French farces wouldn't get over the footlights unless you heard that lovely query, "You here?" Sometimes it is only "You here?" More emphatically, it is You here?" In cases of desperation it is "YOU here?"

However, I'm not going to pretend that I didn't smile at "Oh, I say!!" for it would be foolish pretense. I did smile. It has its funny moments in spite of allusions to pajamas, keyholes, disinfectants, and so on. Once get into the mood, and in spite of reason one laughs. "Laughter," says Professor Henri Bergson, "always implies a sort of secret freemasonry, or even complicity, with other laughers, real or imaginary. How often has it been said that the fuller the theater, the more uncontrolled the laughter of the audience!" There was a good deal of laughter at the Criterion Theater, and whatever one may write, in all cynicism of this cut-and-dried farce business, the piece HAS caught on. In my humble opinion, what "Oh, I Say!!" needs, and what I am told Mr. Lee Shubert will give it for U. S. A., is music.

Music dulls noe's sense of logic What appears banal and trite and far-fetched in a straight farce is accepted without question when a bit of music happens. With a chorus of pretty girls chirping "Oh, I Say!!" it wouldn't matter very much what I DID say. So there you are.

I can't tell you what James Welch did with the farce, but I should imagine that it belonged to him. There were two very pretty girls in the cast—Miss Sybil de Bray, who appeared as the bride, and Miss Ruby Miller, who was the maid. Then there was a very clever actress rejoicing in the name of Marguerite Scialtiel, who is, I fancy, Norwegian, and who is quite likely to be heard from again. There were many others, who had to rush in and rush out, and get banged in the doors. They had to work hard for their living; and if they were not merry, they were at least active little things!

It is a long time since we have had a dose of real French farce, even in London, and the English public has taken kindly to "Oh, I Say!!" even without music. The piece is very short, indeed, which is distinctly in its favor, and it says what it has to say with lightning-like rapidity. Anyway, it is established here.

American Likely to Rule Ireland

Earl of Granard May Be Viceroy

Wife Was Miss Beatrice Mills

Countess of Granard, formerly Miss Beatrice Mills, whose husband is prominently mentioned as first Viceroy of Ireland under home rule.

All London Believes She Will Grace Court if Husband Gets Important Post.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—An American woman may rule in Ireland as wife the first victory under home rule.

All London is talking over the prospect and is prophesying the appointment of the Earl of Granard as Vice Regent of Ireland. The Countess of Granard was formerly Miss Beatrice Mills, of New York, the beautiful heiress whose marriage to the Earl was generally considered a love match.

The talk of the appointment is almost universally popular gossip. The Earl is a Catholic and his American wife is wealthy, and it is believed he will be acceptable to the Irish people, and fully able to hold his own as to the splendor of his court.

But apart from the material advantages of politics, wealth and religion, society talks pleasantly of the Countess herself. They recall the brilliant figure that Lady Daisy Leiter Curzon made as wife of the Viceroy in India, and announce in their opinion Countess of Granard will be as presentable.

Color of reality was given to the gossip when the Earl and his Countess went to Castle Forbes, Ireland, last week. No announcement was made that their trip had anything of a momentous nature, but it is rumored that beyond the casual appearance of the journey there is something of significance.

'WHITE LADY' IS AGAIN SEEN IN KAISER'S HALLS

Fears Feft for Life of Emperor if Traditional Ghost Appears in Castle

By STEVEN BURNETT.
Special Cable to The American.

BERLIN, Aug. 16.—Superstitious people here are convinced that some great calamity is threatening the Kaiser or his family for the Hohenzollern family ghost, the famous "white lady," is said to have walked at the Palace, a thing she never does except when some disaster is impending or when a Hohenzollern is about to die.

The Kaiser himself ridicules the idea and has forbidden any talk about it inside the Palace walls, but several of the servants swear they did see the "white lady" and that the explanation that it must have been some lady resident of the Palace walking in her sleep through the endless corridors in her night dress is absurd, for she looked exactly as tradition says she does look, clad in long flowing white dress, her pale hands crossed on her breast, and her face covered with a nun's veil.

Appears in Middle Ages.

The "white lady" was first heard of as haunting the castles at Bayreuth, Ansbach and Plassenburg in the middle ages. At Plassenburg she was so much feared that the cavaliers of the court took delight in masquerading in white in certain rooms to frighten those who came their way.

Once, when Markgraf Albrecht, the Warrior, met a white lady at Plassenburg, he grasped her with his strong arms and threw her down the stairs, and at the bottom was found the dead body of his Chancellor, who, with the Bishop of Bamberg, had conspired against his ruler. But this incident did not in any way damage the reputation of the "white lady." Someone always managed to see her just before death entered the castle.

Napoleon Saw Specter.

The great Napoleon, who was intensely superstitious, on his military campaigns twice had occasion to pass through Bayreuth. The first time was in 1812, when on his way to Russia, and he sent a request from Aschaffenburg that he should not be asked to pass the night in the rooms at Bayreuth, which were known to be visited by the "white lady." His request was granted; yet next morning he arose in the worst of moods, and as he was getting into his carriage he was heard to mutter something about the "accursed castle." It was certainly the presage of disaster to him. The following year when he passed through the place he refused to pass the night there.

Last time a "white lady" showed herself at Berlin was in 1859, a short time before the birth of the present Kaiser.

Windsor Castle Open To Tourists Again

King George Orders That Any Official Accepting Tip Will Be Dismissed.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—At this time of the year hundreds of American visitors go to Windsor to explore the castle, and there is rejoicing in the town over the reopening of the State apartments which have been closed ever since last January through fear of suffragette outrages.

Every person who enters the castle will have to pay a shilling, and there will be no free days as hitherto. By the King's command this money will go to the local hospital.

By the King's command also it is reported that no "tips" whatever shall be given to guides or to any of the officials at the castle. If any official is discovered accepting a "tip," he will be dismissed.

POLYGAMY URGED AS CRYING NEED BY GIRL MILITANT

British Suffragette Declares That Monogamy Is Favored Only by the Happily Wedded

By HERBERT TEMPLE.
Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—There is no better evidence of the remarkable change that is taking place in English women and girls than the existence of militancy and the appearance of a movement led by a young English girl for the introduction of polygamy in England.

Militancy among suffragettes had been confined to a very small number of women and to a certain class of women. The advocate of polygamy to whom I refer, however, is a very well-known writer, although quite a young girl.

An interview with the Sheik Ul Islam, the supreme priest of the Mohammedan Church, cabled first to New York and then to London, in which the Sheik pointed out he Mo-Mohammedans have polygamy and very little immorality, whereas we Europeans have monogamy and widespread immorality, was read with a great deal of interest here, particularly by women. It was very widely commented upon.

The young woman writer who would have polygamy says:

"Let us approach the problem fearlessly and frankly. The fact is that the present standard of morality is false and unreal, or that while nature produces what is ultimately a surplus of women over men, monogamy is not a suitable system for all our people.

"No system can be suitable which condemns to death or non-life so large a portion of the community as we, the surplus women, form.

"Monogamy is not a sacred institution, and there is no real necessity for hundreds of thousands, even millions, of women to be sacrificed upon its altar. Nor would anything of value be destroyed by its removal and by the setting up of a more suitable moral and legal standard.

"We are told that the ideal condition is one man—one wife. Well, whatever alteration takes place there can be nothing to force people, if they think fit, to preserve that equation so far as they themselves are concerned.

"But those who adopt that standard for themselves have no right—human or divine—to try to impose it upon others who are able and willing to adopt another, especially when imposing such standard is against nature itself and actually condemns a large number of human beings who have equal rights to themselves to exclusion from life.

"I do not believe the difficulty lies with men. I think that each man deep down in his heart admits—if only to himself—that monogamy is unnatural and has failed.

"The difficulty lies with the fortunately married woman.

"If she and her husband are satisfied with one another, then whatever the legal right may be they would never have anyone else.

"If they are not satisfied with each other, then monogamy will not bind them in fact.

"When all bachelor women and widows have the parliamentary vote, and their right to assist in the making of the nation's laws, one of its first influences will be to remove and destroy the artificial and arbitrary standard of monogamy and to establish polygamy as the legal and proper right and custom of an advanced people!"

Plombieres-les-Bains Bores And Drenches Paris Society

By LA RACONTEUSE

Special Cable to The American.

PARIS, Aug. 16.—I have just returned from Prombieres-les-Bains, our most fashionable pleasure resort, where I went not because I really wanted to, for in this miserably wet summer Paris is most decidedly the best place to spend your time, but because my concierge, in plain words, told me that she could not possibly have any respect for a tenant who showed such atrocious disrespect of the laws of "le beau-monde" as to remain in Paris all summer instead of going to some fashionable resort.

In other words, I had to leave my cozy apartment for a while, or I knew that my female tyrant would make life unbearable for me by those thousands of mean little tricks known only to a Paris concierge, against which you are absolutely defenseless.

I found Plombieres-les-Bains as cold and wet as I had expected it, but crowded with society people, all dreadfully bored and all asking what to do on a dreadfully long afternoon with the rain pouring down.

Takes Hour to Recover.

In the morning time passes quickly, no matter how the weather. You take "le traitement," which here consists in a hot bath, followed by a cold shower, massage "sans l'seau" in the "kurhouse," or massage "a sec" at home in bed, after which you need at least an hour's rest to recover.

After lunch you go to the kursal to drink your coffee, tea or elder blossom tea to the accompaniment of the band; then you attend to your private correspondence, play a little "aux petits chevaux" or "a la roulette," but what then?

The afternoon is still young, and promenading, tennis or golf are out of the question.

Suddenly an electric shock passed through the room the news has spread that Monseigneur Angouard, the Congo missionary, will give a lecture at Hotel Deschauseaux, the hotel of all priests and religious people. You know in advance whom you will meet there and whom not. Not a single gambler, not a single "dame dernier cri"—nobody, in fact, but the members of the poorer aristocracy and the badly dressed bourgeoisie.

On the stroke of 4 these people meet in the large hall, and when they are all seated, firm steps are heard in the corridor and Monseigneur's imposing figure appears in the doorway smiling at everybody. He pretends to take a sip of water, and then he begins to tell about the 37 years he has spent in voluntary exile, first as a soldier in the Foreign Legion and then, when he was tired of shooting heathens, trying to save their souls as a missionary.

And the Hat Is Passed.

And when he has finished, one of the young girls present gets up, takes off her hat, turns it upside down and carries it around, asking for contributions to Monseigneur's little colored babies, and a few moments later she smilingly hands Monseigneur $150.

These affairs are always alike, and the Monseigneurs always turn up on a rainy day when people can not get away.

A lady who has caused a stir is the beautiful and charming Duchess of Manchester, who has given us a new dance which my readers probably know and which "isn't doing a thing" (is that right?) to the once almighty tango.

The dance, I am told, is composed by an American, Uriel Davis.

To be able to dance it you must first patiently practice walking upstairs instead of using the elevator. When you are quite familiar with the movement required to walk from one step to the one above, all you have to do is to repeat this movement in the ballroom—eight steps forward, eight steps back, raising your knees as much as possible; then you slide sideways as fast as possible and then repeat the first eight steps each way.

Without intending to hurt the feelings of Mr. Uriel Davis, I venture to say that I find the dance silly, and the reason it is so popular is because it is an excellent exercise to take off flesh.

BRITISH PRESS CALLS KIPLING REAL LAUREATE

Appointment of Dr. Bridges Declared Tribute to Pedantry Rather Than to Poetry.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—The appointment of Dr. Robert Bridges to succeed Alfred Austin as poet laureate has note been treated as kindly by the press as was Mr. Austin's succession to Tennyson, notwithstanding the fact that both as a man of letters and as a poet Dr. Bridges is measurably his immediate predecessor's superior. The censure of Dr. Bridges' selection is probably to be found in the fact that the press is merely voicing public opinion, which is keenly disappointed that Rudyard Kipling did not secure the office.

Says The Morning Post: "If Mr. Kipling had been appointed laureate our people in these islands and overseas would have understood the honor as expressing a national sense. We are apt to forget that poets are of service in the world not merely as delighting the ears and refining the emotions of the cultured few, but as calling like a trumpet to duty in life and work, to the scorn of the base and the glory of the patriot, according to the poet's conception of baseness and patriotism."

The Pall Mall Gazette: "Mr. Kipling's claim is far above that of any contemporary. The writer of the 'Recessional' and of 'If' will be the laureate of the English people whenever crisis calls for utterance, and a world-wide empire will be his responsive audience."

The Star: "Mr. Kipling has more poetry in his little finger than Dr Bridges has in his whole body. To be perfectly candid, the election of Dr. Bridges is a tribute to pedantry, and not to poetry. There are many living poets whose claims are indisputably superior to his. But in this country the path of dullness is the road to glory."

Just before the post of poet laureate was filled, T. P.'s Weekly published the following table as the result of an exhaustive canvass among its readers:

Croquet Suddenly The Fad in England

Old Game Again Is Feature of the Smartest Week-End Parties.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—Croquet has suddenly come back into favor after a long rest, and is a marked feature at all smart week-end parties.

Tennis is too strenuous and golf too baffling for many whose social duties call for much of their time.

The croquet lawns at Ranelagh and Hurlingham are in great demand, and many are introducing new rules and new kinds of hoops to give novelty to the game.

The Earl of Essex is devoted to the game. Lady Charles Beresford also passes hours at it.

Viscount Doneralle, Lord Tollemache, Lord Lurgan and Nigel Kingscote are often to be seen playing at Ranelagh.

Among the fair sex one notices Lady Angela Forbes, Lady Margaret Spicer, Lady Sophie Scott, Lady Winifred Butler and Mrs. Arthur Sassoon.

MANY ESCAPE VACCINATION.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—More than a quarter of a million children—or 31.6 per cent of those born—were exempted from vaccination last year under the "conscientious objection" rule.

Over 300 Ragtimers Pining for America

London Music Halls Crowded With Idle Singers Scheming to Raise Steerage Fare.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—There are 300 or 400 homesick Americans in London. They are music hall artists who flocked over here when ragtime brought about a trans-Atlantic boom.

They came first class, talking of three-figure contracts, and now they are scheming to get cheap passages home disguised as Polish emigrants.

The trouble, of course, is that the music hall stage has been glutted with American turns.

$30,000,000 Yearly in Penny-Slot Gambling

French Government Is Forced to Put Ban on Machines in Small Cafes.

Special Cable to The American.

PARIS, Aug. 16.—The French Government has decided to prohibit the "penny-in-the-slot" gambling machines in all the lower class cafes.

The last available statistics show that in 1911 there were 64,953 of these petty gambling machines in use in France, and that their total receipts during the year were $30,000,000.

The machines are usually leased by cafe keepers on a sharing basis. During 1911 the proprietors received as their share $10,000,000.

The remaining $20,000,000 was represented by tickets, drawn from the machines, which were useless unless exchanged for drinks.

Red Horses for Army; New Breed Developed

Chestnut Equines Said to Have More Fire Than Those of Less Vivid Color.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, Aug. 12.—As a result of experiments made in Lecestershire by biologists, not yet completed, a new species of horses is being developed for the army.

Bright chestnut which is the equivalent of red hair in children, has quite overcome all other tints among hackneys, and it is associated with the mental quality that is called "fire." It is a mas er color in more than one respect, indicating a viking spirit.

In horses and men a sort of duel is going on between red and brown, or rather chestnut and bay. The hackney is chiefly red, the hunter chiefly brown, though Ireland is now producing many chestnuts.

RITCHIE DOESN'T COMPARE WITH OTHER CHAMPS

Must Meet Murphy, Welsh and Cross Before He Can Hope To Be World Figure.

By W. W. Naughton.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 16.—Here is a question fired at me from a home critic:

"How does Willie Ritchie compare with the lightweight champions who preceded him?"

Up to date he does not begin to compare in the slightest. Ritchie is still young and lacking in experience, however, and may loom up as more of a world-figure in pugilism when he has pitted himself against men like Tommy Murphy, Freddy Welsh and Leach Cross. Wolgast, who preceded as a champion, was a wonderful fighter before appendicitis marked him for its own. His handling of Battling Nelson on Richmond Field was something to live in memory, even if little "Ad" had never accomplished anything else.

* * *

BATTLING NELSON in his prime, was an interesting performer. And it was his negative qualities that made him worth while. There never was a man within twenty pounds of his weight who could stand such rough usage and keep pressing steadily forward. He wasn't the most gainly fighter of his class, by long odds but his powers of assimilation covered a multitude of defects.

* * *

JOE GANS was a thorough workman, and a sight of him in action was as great a treat as a student of boxing could desire. He stepped around in a soft-footed way and was never out of position. His manner of ending it all with a downward clip of the right, delivered without drawing back the elbow, was well worth the price of admission.

He was an artist and it was a lament with old-time sports that Joe and Jack McAuliffe did not flourish contemporaneously. A tilt between the pair would have been worth a journey to see.

WACO SECOND SACKER IS SOLD TO BOSTON BRAVES

Koney Makes One Error a Month

Cards' Fielder May Set New Mark

ST. LOUIS, MO., Aug. 16.—An error a month is the pace Ed Koney is setting for what probably will be a world's record as a fielding first baseman. So far the guardian of the Cardinals' initial sack has turned but four miscues this season—one in April, May, June and July—and if he gets but one in August and September his name will be engraved in the record books.

To accept 1,112 of the 1,116 chances offered him in 101 games is quite a phenomenal performance; still this is owned by Koney for his 1913 work. And it has everything eclipsed in the records of fielding first basemen since the National League was organized.

The highest average ever compiled by a first baseman in the National League was by Frank Chance in 1910, when he missed but three chances out of 814; that gave him a mark of .996. This to-day stands supreme, but if Koney continues his average of one error per month he will shade Chance's record by a slight margin.

Chance Leads All Rivals.

Since 1871, when the first set of records was kept in the National League, Chance's .996 stands out on top. Next to the ex-Peerless Leader is Dan McGann with a .995, and then .994 is the highest figure. The following table shows the five highest averages of the first basemen:

Year.	Name.	G	po.	a.	e.	pct.
1910—	Chance	87	773	38	3	.996
1906—	McGann.	133	1391	83	8	.995
1909—	Chance	92	901	40	6	.994
1907—	McGann.	81	781	55	5	.994
1897—	Tebeau	91	912	42	5	.994

Koney's fielding this year has been sensational and proves that he is without a superior as a fielding first baseman. Of course, now Chase and Daubert and Stovall have their supporters, but the truth is that for being steady day in and day out Koney is supreme.

Koney isn't as flashy as Chase. He will not dive high into the air and make the catch one-handed and he dosen't pull off the fancy stuff which Chase does. But he gets the wild pegs, the high ones, the low ones and those far too high, left and right minus the "grandstand" effort.

How Koney Made Errors.

On April 20 Koney made his first error. It was at Robison Field and he missed an easy foul off Chief Wilson. Later, Wilson put a single to left. The second error was May 28 in Chicago against the Cubs. It happened in the inning when Mitchell rolled to Huggins. Hug made the perfect toss, but Big Ed clamped his hands before the ball arrived, muffed and the runner was safe.

Then came error No. 3. It was June 25, at Robison Field. Carey grounded to Koney. Max raced for the bag and Ed, seeing he couldn't get there first, made a toss to Harmon. Bob let it get away, Carey ran to second and Koney got the error.

Big Ed almost escaped the month of July, but a bit of severe scoring gave him an error on the last day of the month. In the fourth inning Connolly rolled a slow grounder to Koney. Sallee raced over to the bag, but Connolly had the play beaten and it was scored as a hit. Sal allowed the ball to drop, roll a few feet away, and taking his time in recovery, Connolly hiked down to second.

There is how Ed Koney has made his four errors this season. And in between them he has accepted 1,112, certainly a remarkable record.

With the Cards in a slump this year, Koney's fielding hasn't dropped a bit. His batting has, and for that reason the fans have been handing the jeers occasionally to the Big Train. Every fan can rehearse when Ed failed to get a hit and drive in a run. And why? Because his play is watched every day where the others are passed by.

McCloskey Develops Big Ed.

Koney can miss driving in a run and the fans will see it. But Magee, Oakes, Mowrey, Wingo, Whitted and others will miss and nobody pays any attention to it. Not Koney, though.

It took time and constant training on the part of John J. McCloskey to develop Koney into the great first baseman that he is. Koney came here in June, 1907. He was a big kid, awkward around first, and didn't know how to shift his feet. He had the right foot in front when the left should have been there, and often the other way, too.

But McCloskey knew what he had. The entire summer John J. drilled his new capture. In the morning practice Mac failed with Koney. He showed him this; he showed him that; he showed him how to keep one foot on the sack and catch the wide throw with the gloved mitt.

And it didn't take Koney long to master these fine points. He shows it to-day.

Some will doubt Koney's ability as a first baseman. But here he has a .996 average, just a fraction under .997, and every winter the Cubs, Pirates and Giants bid for the "Big Train."

Koney really isn't appreciated in St. Louis. They won't realize what a marvel and wonder he is until if, by chance, a trade will send him to some other club. And a duplicate of Ed Koney isn't cavorting around any of the minor league fields to-day.

TO CHANGE A. A. U. CODE.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—G. T. Kirby, president of the Amateur Athletic Union, is to revise the A. A. U. code of rules, which, he says, in their present form can not be understood by attorneys. Kirby made this announcement before sailing for Berlin to attend the conference of athletic authorities of the world.

GIANTS CAN GET KONEY IF MATTY IS IN THE DEAL

President Britton Says He Will Make Swap With McGraw for "Big Six" and Merkle.

ST. LOUIS, MO., Aug. 16.—If the Giants will part with Christy Mathewson and Fred Merkle, then McGraw can have Ed Koney from the Cardinals!

From New York Thursday came a report that the Giants were dickering with the Cardinals for another swap, and that McGraw had offered Southpaw Wiltse and First Baseman Fred Merkle for the "Big Train."

Considering that Wiltse is fading and fading fast, and that Koney easily outclasses Merkle, the cards would run second on such an exchange, and the truth of such a transaction was asked of President Britton.

"If McGraw will make it Mathewson and Merkle instead of Wiltse and Merkle then I will O. K. the trade," said President Britton. "But Wiltse and Merkle, no."

Then the Cards' Prexy smiled and puffed his perfecto and continued:

"Yes, that's what I mean, Matty and Merkle. Matty must be in the deal. Anybody but Matty and there's nothing doing with us for Ed Koney."

"But don't you know, Mr. Britton, that McGraw never would consent to trade Mathewson?" was put to the Cards' chief.

"Why, certainly I know it, and that's just why I name Matty in a deal with the Giants for Koney," flashed back Britton. "After we took Crandall instead of Wiltse for McLean, I offered to buy Wiltse from the Giants, but McGraw said he did not want money, but was after players.

"We're after players to strengthen our club, too. We are trying to get the youngsters, and are willing to make a trade where we have an edge, but it's a cinch that we're not going to pass out anything like Koney for Merkle and Wiltse."

GIANTS ALWAYS FIGHTING, EVEN IF IT'S M'GRAW

Crandall Incident Goes to Prove That Muggsy's Men Are Always in Wrangling Mood.

CINCINNATI has pulled the story that two or three of the New York Giants took a punch at Manager McGraw because he released Otis Crandall, star pinch pitcher and pinch hitter, accompanying his action with the statement that Otis never was a real star and wasn't fit for membership on a high class baseball team. Naturally the players were incensed to see an old pal thus turned down, the more because McGraw's action deprives the young Indiana boy of a probable slice of world's series money later in the fall. Maybe they did punch McGraw and maybe they didn't. It doesn't look reasonable that they did, for "Muggsy" ins't standing around as a target for anybody.

* * *

BUT the incident shows two things conclusively. The Giants are fighters, every inch of them, and it is the fighting spirit that wins in any sort of an athletic contest. The Giants are keyed up to the right tension and their position at the head of the National League race is one to which they are fully entitled because of this fighting spirit. McGraw has them gingered to a nicety and doubtless welcomes a little shindig now and then off the field, just as a matter of relaxation.

* * *

MANY of the McGraw methods are far from commendable and some of them are even reprehensible, but in the main other baseball managers might well take example of the Giants' leader and instill this fighting spirit into the men. Frank Chance could keep the old Cub machine snarling and snapping in much the same way and Jimmy Callahan's nature is infectious at times and carries the team along under high pressure. Joe Tinker is a fighter at heart and even the queer conditions in Cincinnati hasn't taken all of Joe's heart. There are few other managers, however, who really scrap and succeed in getting the fighting spirit into their men.

DUFFY SELLS OUTFIELDER JOSEPH BURNS TO TIGERS

PORTLAND, ME., Aug. 16.—Manager Hugh Duffy, of the Portland club of the New England League, announced that Outfielder Joseph Burns had been sold to Detroit.

Burns' home is in Ipswich, Mass. The price was not made public.

RACE TRACK AT AUCTION.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—The passing of another famous New York race track apparently is forecast in a foreclosure sale of the Brighton Beach property, scheduled for August 28. The action was brought on a second mortgage of approximately $95,000. The first mortgage is $650,000.

Johnny Evers Need Not Worry

President Murphy Is With Him

By Davenport.

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—John Evers is not worried concerning the report he is to be ousted from the managership of the Cubs.

"I am worried in a sense," said the Keystone King when he heard the report, "for I know these reports are not tending to the improvement of conditions on the club.

"I firmly believe the reports emanate from sources unfriendly to the Cubs.

"Last winter when it was announced I had been appointed to succeed Frank Chance, my enemies said I would not last until Decoration Day.

"I was right on the job at Pittsburg on Memorial Day and then the fellows who seem to have a grudge against me said: 'Well, he'll blow up before the Fourth of July,' but there was no premature explosion and yours truly celebrated the glorious Fourth by managing the Cubs while they went through a double-header.

"Now they are firing me right off the reel, but so far as the stability of my position is concerned I am not concerned.

Murphy Pleased With Work.

"I have the knowledge that President Murphy is back of me. He has convinced me upon more than one occasion that he is backing me, and I know him well enough to feel that I can rely upon him.

"He has upheld everything I have done in the management of the players and he has informed me upon more than one occasion that I am giving satisfaction.

"As I have said concerning alleged dissensions in the club, I know who is starting these reports. They do not come from West Side fans. It is a trouble that has existed for years, and some one must be the goat, so why not your humble servant? Let it go with the other managerial duties. My shoulders are broad. I can not only stand the hisses and jeers of the fans, but I guess it is up to me to pay no heed to these false reports that are being circulated and have been circulated all season."

President Murphy also emphatically denies he intends to remove the Keystone King.

When apprised of the fact some one had started the report Evers was to be separated from his job, President Murphy said: "There is absolutely no truth in the report. I still believe Evers is the best manager in the business and the greatest ball player in the world. I have backed him up in his action on and off the field.

"I wouldn't give 2 cents for a manager who can't manage, and I am satisfied that Evers is not one of that sort."

Discussing the reports that the Cubs are fighting among themselves, Manager Evers said: "I want men who fight, but I want them to use a little judgment in whom they fight.

Wants Fighting Spirit.

"I like men of the Zimmerman type, who are fighting every inch of the way.

"True, Heine was put out of a number of games this summer, but why? Because he was always up on the job, watching every play and ready to fight for what he considered his rights.

"I do think it is unfair for the fans and sport writers to pick up every little petty quarrel that may come up and make a mountain of it. These are the things that are hurting the club."

Considering the pitching the Cubs had during the early part of the season, the misfortune sustained by Overall in the way of illness, and the other hard luck, Evers has done well to keep his club up among the top notchers, and he is being given credit for it all around the circuit.

Then there was the hard luck encountered when the Cubs invaded the East the last time, Archer out of the game with a had finger, Zimmerman out with a game ankle, and Bridwell out with punk pins.

Some handicap, "fellers," but Jawn has been right on the job fighting his way through all the time.

We have it from the Keystone King, right from the shoulder, that stories of dissension on the club have been greatly magnified, and here's a little secret that will surprise you.

That story to the effect Evers is to be deposed came from an eavesdropper.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA., Aug. 16.—Leo Meyer, of this city, has made a bid for the Sioux City franchise of the Western League. Meyer said he was anxious to bring the club here, but declared he was not sure about meeting all the requirements of the league.

GEO. HARRISON IS JOE BEAN'S BEST PLAYER

Ex-Marist Star Now Making Fine Baseball Record at Georgia University.

By O. B. Keeler.

WITH your kind permission, we will now introduce Mr. Harrison, prominent second baser of the University of Georgia baseball team, former Marist star and a corking good student of pharmaceutics as well as the national sport.

Mr. Harrison's initials are George L., the "L." standing for Larrup. He is an Atlanta boy, 19 years old, sound in wind and limb, and quite a hobby of Joe Bean's.

"I think a lot of George because he can think," says Joe, who was George's coach at Marist. "Every year the colleges show us a lot of young ball players that can run and throw and field and hit. But a fearful percentage of these neat little baseball machines use their heads mainly to keep their collars from slipping off."

But that isn't the way of George. Take it from Joe.

A Smart Ball Player.

"He is what is known in professional circles as a 'smart ball player,'" Joe adds. "He remembers every little tip anybody gives him—and he uses his memory on the field. He thinks fast and he has the physical speed to carry out his hunches. He is the best all-round college ball player I ever had charge of."

George was a freshman last year, starring in pharmaceutics and the territory around second base. He is expected to do the same, only more so, in the gentle springtime of 1914.

At present George, who is an earnest investigator of things entirely apart from the squeeze play and touching second, is doing a bit of extra work in physics at the summer school of the university. He takes quite a serious view of life, even at the supposedly callow age of 19 summers and the same number of winters.

Had Heart Trouble?

An odd feature of George's development as a ball player cropped out when he started to Marist where he played with great effect three years for Joe Bean.

George was very young then, and he was growing so fast that he frequently found his clothes too small for him when he got up in the morning. The stretching worried some of his insides a bit, and George's folks had an idea he had a floppy heart. It used to flop when George played tennis. They asked Joe Bean to take good care of George and not let him play ball too hard. They recommended first base as the easiest job.

The Flopping Stopped.

But Joe needed a second baseman. Also he saw right away where George ought to perform. He reasoned that one place was as bad as another, if not worse, when it came to causing cardiacal floppings, and he diagnosed properly the uncertain behavior of George's pumping apparatus.

Moreover, George had let up on the growing by that time and was feeling great.

So George went to second base, where he proceeded to eat 'em alive. He has been doing that ever since, too.

George isn't looking forward to professional toil on the sunburned square. He is going to be a pharmacist, which is a drugeist with a university training.

And if George applies the same system to pharmaceutics that he has to baseball, he should travel along on the high speed.

Joe Bean says George is one smart ball player.

BOOKING AGENCY FOR BOXERS TO BE FORMED

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—Plans are maturing for a national boxing organization, which will have for its purpose the booking of boxers for various clubs or promoters throughout the country; in fact, it is to be a general booking agency, the same as is in vogue among theatrical people. The man back of the project is Wilbur Stuart, of Columbus, Ohio.

It is the intention of the organizers of the company to have connections in all the large cities of the country. This project would do away with the middleman, or manager, to some extent, but not necessarily, as very often managers are only too willing to pay the regular booking fee to get a match.

The scheme may not look very tempting to some at the present time, but with the growth of the boxing game there is no reason why the project should not be a success—at least, it is worth trying.

KONETCHY FOR MERKLE AND WILTSE IS RUMORED TRADE

PITTSBURG, PA., Aug. 16.—Local baseball men gave credence to-day to a tip that Manager McGraw, of the Giants, is dealing with St. Louis for First Baseman Konetchy and has offered First Baseman Merkle and Pitcher Wiltse in exchange. Since the golf squabble in which Merkle was involved along with Mathewson, McGraw and Merkle have not been the best of friends.

INDIANS GET CENTRAL STAR.

TERRE HAUTE, IND., Aug. 16.—Wheeler, of the Terre Haute club, has been ordered by the Cubs to report to the Indianapolis American Association club. This was a great surprise to the fans, who did not know that the Cubs owned him. Wheeler leads the Central League in batting with .342.

FROM PLANTEN 93 HENRY ST. BROOKLYN, N.Y.
—BEWARE OF IMITATIONS—

Here Is George Harrison, Georgia's Great Infielder, Who Uses His "Bean" in Playing Baseball

Three years of second basing under the tuition of Joe Bean at Marist fitted George to jump right into the spotlight in his freshman year at Georgia and pile himself up a fine little reputation. He will start with flying colors when the season opens next spring.

This looks like pretty severe training for a future pharmacist, but it isn't the only kind Harrison takes. Just now Georgia's star infielder is taking a summer course in physics at the University.

It really doesn't matter how fast the pace is, or whether George Harrison is sliding to second, or dashing in to start a swinging double play—he's always thinking. Joe Bean says he thinks faster and with more effect than any other college player he ever had anything to do with. "His head does more than merely hold his collar on," says Joe. And Joe ought to know something about it.

PHOTOS BY SUNDAY AMERICAN STAFF PHOTOGRAPHER

Looking over the film, it is hard to imagine that George was suspected of having heart trouble a few years ago, when he entered Marist and wanted to play first base, because that job was supposed to be easier than the other stations of the infield. Joe Bean diagnosed George's trouble as rapid growing, and Joe was right about it. As soon as George stopped expanding, his heart settled down to a fine, even gait, and has never missed a tick since. He is now approaching his twentieth year, and is sound in wind, limb and disposition.

'Walsh Now Pitching for Sox' Tickers Don't Flash That Now

ED WALSH is not with the White Sox on their Eastern trip. In all the games Callahan's men play during their stay in the East, the ticker will never flash, 'NINTH INNING: WALSH NOW PITCHING FOR CHICAGO."

The Big Moose, the greatest of iron men, isn't the Walsh of 1912. The averages give him seven won and three lost for a percentage of .700. He has pitched 10 games, with the season half over. If he pitches 10 more during the remainder of 1913 it will be a surprise.

Walsh is worn out. He has the heart and head of last year, but his arm isn't able to perform what he wills. He is just a shadow of his 1912 self, so far as pitching goes.

Too many innings of relief work, too many innings pitched did for his iron arm.

For years he was "THE WHITE SOX," practically all there was to the White Sox, and the only reason anyone went to see the club. Last season, with ordinary backing, he pitched Chicago into fourth place. There were 78 games won by the club. Walsh is credited with 27 of them in his own record. Many more he saved for other twirlers, going in with the Sox ahead and stopping rallies.

Callahan pitched his willing worker 393 innings, or 43 nine-inning games, during the American League season. This shows on the books, but there is no record of the innings Walsh warmed up and used up his arm by so doing. This season Comiskey, the Sox owner, thought Walsh would pitch more than 400 innings. Callahan thought so Walsh thought so.

But the Iron Man was through. He had held the White Sox up so long that his arm was weary, even if he didn't know it. His record of 393 innings in the American League season, topped off by his feat of twirling the Sox to victory by pitching 40 innings of the Chicago city series with the Cubs—which he won practically by himself—has taken toll.

Whether Ed Walsh will come back is a thing the future will have to tell. Sometimes they do, but oftener they don't. Rest may bring him back, if Callahan gives it to him. But again it may be that 393 innings of fiercely competitive ball have ruined his arm for good and all and that one of the greatest pitchers the game has known is now a has-been.

MANY CATCHERS GET INJURED BY MIXED SIGNALS

Chief Meyers Nearly Lost a Finger When Christy Mathewson Double-Crossed Him.

By Otto C. Floto.

DENVER, Aug. 16.—Nothing breaks up a battery so fast as double-crossing the catcher. Mind, we do not mean to say this is intentionally done—but through carelessness or through not getting the signal correct, it happens in some of the most important games. And when it does—well, the opposition has the "shade" from that time forth. In Chicago recently, during a conversation between John McGraw and the writer, the Grand Mandarin of the Giants told us of an incident when even the great Mathewson was at fault in this sort of play.

"Meyers is naturally dark," said McGraw. "When he becomes tanned in the summer time he is darker than ever and quite naturally when he places his finger on the palm of the soiled glove it takes quite an eye to distinguish whether he has one or two fingers pointed to the ground. Oftentimes one finger means a straight fast ball and then again it means a curve, and vice versa. Mathewson, in one of the games against St. Louis, got his signals mixed and pitched a curve when Meyers was looking for a straight fast one. The result was that the ball not only got away from the Indian, but came near tearing his finger off. Of course, I immediately took him out of the game, because I knew he would be rattled from that time forth. The next day he was steadied again and the incident forgotten.

* * *

ANOTHER time while with Baltimore, Joe Corbett double-crossed Robinson and lost a game for us. Of course, the double-crossing is unintentional on the part of the pitcher, and it occurs only when the catcher and the pitcher get mixed in the signals and don't ask each other for a repetition of the same. If they did this no error would be made. In the big leagues when this tangle occurs the players think nothing of it. But I have seen in the smaller leagues, when the battery gets mixed the catcher, generally a youngster trying to make his reputation, seems to labor under the impression that the pitcher is 'trying to show him up,' and it often creates hard feelings on a team."

* * *

REFERRING again to the honesty of the game, we need nothing better to point to than the leaders of the National and American Leagues. Both the Giants and the Athletics have spoiled the race. They are so far ahead of all the other clubs that even at this early day of August 4 interest is eliminated. It means several hundred thousand dollars to the club owners to have a condition of this sort exist. Yet they would rather have it this way and lose thousands of dollars than "frame" and kill the sport.

What if Boston and the Athletics in the American League were neck-and-neck and battling for every game—well, the grounds in either city would not be large enough to hold the crowds. In the National League, what if New York and Chicago were abreast—it would simply mean all records for attendance would be shattered.

So you see the playing is absolutely on its merits and when a team wins or loses everything connected with it is on the level. That's why baseball will ever remain the most popular of outdoor sports. The finger of suspicion is never pointed at any act on the ball field.

Universal Polo at Panama Exposition

Exciting Game To Be Opening Feature of Great Affair—Stand to Seat 18,000.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., Aug. 16.—Universal polo will be the opening feature incident to the department of live stock at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition.

There will be many stables on the site, and the race track infield will afford an ideal location for polo grounds.

Polo enthusiasm is spreading all over the world and it is proposed to have ten or fifteen days of polo, beginning with the opening day of the exposition.

A series of elimination matches will be arranged, and because of climatic advantages a number of the established teams will winter their ponies in California.

There will be a grand stand which will seat 18,000, and its capacity will be taxed during the great tournament, which will be held on the exposition grounds.

The question of cups and prizes is now being considered. If the Hurlingham cup still remains in this country it is possible that the international polo match can be held at San Francisco. That, of course, is a question which can only be decided by time, but in any event representative teams from many countries will be attracted to a universal meet at San Francisco in 1915.

TESREAU HAS BEEN ON SLAB IN MANY GAMES

McGraw Has Sent Jeff to Mound Oftener Than Any Other Member of Giants.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—John McGraw had called on Jeff Tesreau oftener to start battles this year than any other member of the Giants' pitching staff. Up to August 12 the "Little Napoleon" had given the pitching assignment to the big spitballer 28 times. Jeff only went the route on ten occasions, but on many of the times he was dericked he was lifted to allow a pinch hitter to be inserted into the proceedings, and not because he was not performing to the satisfaction of his commander.

* * *

WERE Hugh Chalmers, of Detroit, to offer a car to the National League pitcher who twirled the greatest number of complete games instead to the player who is most valuable to his team, Christy Mathewson undoubtedly would be riding around in a new auto next fall. "Big Six" has opened on the firing line in 22 skirmishes for the Giants this year and has lasted through 17 engagements, which gives him a finishing average of .773. Matty quit twice because he had to, twice because his team had an enormous lead and once because McGraw wished to shove Harry McCormick in as a pinch hitter.

* * *

THE club that has compelled Mathewson to retire under fire is St. Louis, the team that handed him his first beating twelve years ago, when he first became famous. The Cardinals ought to be proud of themselves for their showing against "Big Six" this year. They have received five of the thirteen passes Matty has issued this season, Ed Konetchy and Miller Huggins each obtaining two and Steve Evans one. The eight other National Leaguers who have been honored with complimentaries by Mathewson this season are Viox and Mensor, of Pittsburg; Bates and Groh, of Cincinnati; Zimmerman, of Chicago, and Titus, Rariden and Maranville, of Boston.

Meddling Has Ruined Red Sox Stallings Is Popular in Boston

By W. J. McBeth.

THERE is little comfort in a reputation to the fellow who has lost his punch. This ring chatter applies directly to baseball. A pugilist may get away by sidestepping action, but organized baseball requires 154 tilts every year.

The Boston Red Sox furnishes a very fine object lesson for the point in question. One year ago the staid old "Hub" was wild with enthusiasm over its pets of a generation. To dispute that the "Speed Boys" boasted the classiest aggregation in modern times was the shortest route to suicide. To-day, though a world's championship has been added to the achievements of the Back Bay athletes, the pennant winners are the scorn of the City of Culture.

The answer lies for the most part in four agate lines—which represent the difference between first and fifth places in the American League standings. Boston's National League team, which saw many lean and hungry years, while its rival lived upon the fat of the land, has usurped the popularity of its fading contemporary. The Red Sox in their company have shown the better percentage of victories. But still their work has slopped off so badly from what was expected of the holders of baseball's highest honors that in comparison to the improvement made by the Braves the Red Sox appear in the light of the veriest "bush" class.

Boston, like every other town, has little use for a team that has hit the chutes, while always ready to extend a hand of encouragement to a club that stems on the upward trend.

* * *

IN gaining a few rounds on the ladder from the cellar George Stallings' Braves have accomplished a task that well might be considered more wonderful than cinching a second American League pennant with the champions. Baseball fandom is clever enough to appreciate the point and pay tribute where tribute is due. But the Boston situation of the American League furnishes a moral which many of our meddling promoters might well take to heart. One thing is to leave good enough alone; another that it is far easier to destroy a finely attuned mechanism than to overhaul and rebuilt it.

* * *

EVERYBODY said a year ago that the Boston Red Sox were the luckiest world's champions known to history. Perhaps they were, but they certainly had some class to get in the finals. Moreover, they went through a long campaign without dropping more than two games in a row till the pennant was cinched. The club looked anything but impressive in the world's series. But was it altogether the fault of the club?

I honestly believe, in the light of later developments, that if the real inside truth were known President James McAleer had a lot to do both with the poor showing of that team against the Giants and in the 1913 race so far this season. Jake Stahl, deposed from the management in mid-season, may have been left unhampered this season as McAleer insinuated, but he certainly did not have a free hand against the Giants last fall. He was girt about by a so-called bond of strategy. These many cooks came very near to scorching the broth.

While the Red Sox were setting themselves, Jake Stahl and, incidentally, McAleer on the high pedestal where the bump incident to this year's fall should be all the more pronounced, somebody put a stick of dynamite under the foundation. In the height of battle a serious row cropped out among certain players. As is usually the case, factions resulted. The unity of the team was undermined. The big explosion followed the poor start of 1913 consequent to wholesome injuries and sickness.

McAleer may not have directly interfered with Stahl. Yet the inference is there pretty strong. Jimmy looked like an ideal president when everything was of rosy hue. But once a manager always a manager. We see that in the attitudes of some of our renowned scouts. The cunning hand of McAleer might be traced in the present dilemma of his noble country.

AT least McAleer, or his associates in the business administration of the club, deserve little sympathy for the cold desertion of Hub fandom. They brought it upon themselves by a cold throw down of their most loyal supporters. The band of "Royal Rooters" which had accompanied the team to and fro between New York and Boston were not provided with seats for the seventh game. The business management was unable to explain satisfactorily this shameful oversight; naturally the rooters took it as an insult, believing they had been "given the works" simply through avarice of the management.

"It is the last game and they think standing room good enough for us" was the universal sentiment. The rooters put a boycott on the eighth and deciding game. Also they gathered round the offices at the close of the contest when they were slighted to put the curse on Fenway Park, Red Sox and all connected with them. By the looks of things it was some curse.

Tire Prices Down

How We Did It Without Skimping On the Costliest Tire That's Built

Here are a few amazing facts which every tire user should know.

Goodyear No-Rim-Cut tires used to cost one-fifth more than other standard tires. And yet they gained the topmost place in Tiredom.

Three things caused this extra price.

In the base of each tire we vulcanize six flat bands of 126 braided wires. It is thus that we make a hookless tire—a tire that can't be rim-cut.

Then every No-Rim-Cut gets the "On-Air Cure." It is final-vulcanized on air bags. This is done to save blow-outs. It adds to our tire cost $1,500 per day.

Then we use in each tread base a patent "rivet" fabric. We paid $50,000 for this feature to prevent tread separation.

Not one of these costly features are used in any other make of tire.

We have clung to small capitalization. On this account we can and do keep our profits under 8½ per cent.

All these savings, as fast as we made them, went to users of our tires.

Note What Our Price Includes

Rival makers must in some way meet the Goodyear price. But please consider what our price includes.

A tire that never rim-cuts.

A tire built to save blow-outs, in a way so costly that no one else employs it.

A tire built in our patent way to prevent tread separation. And built in every other way for longest mileage, regardless of the cost.

Now No Extra Price

Now these same tires, with all of these features, cost you no extra price. Not a standard tire of any type costs you any less.

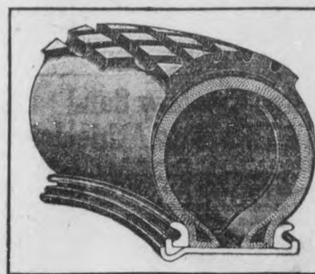
And these are the reasons:

Our overhead cost, in days of small output, ran as high as thirty per cent.

It is now less than six per cent. Our multiplied output, in this one way, has cut our tire cost twenty-four per cent.

We have built new factories with modern equipment, with every new invention in labor-saving machinery.

That's Why They Outsell



Hundreds of thousands now use these tires. They far outsell any other. Yet the demand from users is now growing faster than ever before in our history.

That's for the reasons told you.

Rim-Cutting alone, with old-type tires, ruins 31.8 per cent — almost one tire in three. Blow-outs and loose treads, which our methods combat, are immensely costly items.

You should get these savings—get them all—when you pay the Goodyear price.

Our dealers are everywhere.

SULLIVAN TELLS WHY A.A.U. PUTS BAN ON WOMEN

Athletic Body Objects to Mixed Competitions in Order to Preserve Dignity of Women.

By James E. Sullivan.
Secretary-Treasurer of the A. A. U. and "Father of Amateur Athletics."

(Mr. Sullivan submitted the following interesting article to The American just before he sailed for Germany last Tuesday. Mr. Sullivan will attend the first convention of the International Athletic Federation at Berlin on August 20-21 as the representative of the United States.)

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Should women be allowed by the Amateur Athletic Union in open competition against men? is a question attracting a lot of attention in the world of sport at present. From the woman's side of the question the opinion is voiced that to be in keeping with the great strides of women's emancipation the women should be allowed to compete on the same footing as men, especially in aquatic sports and other competitions.

Unfortunately, perhaps, for the feelings of the gay and thoughtless, the A. A. U. looks at the matter from an entirely different angle, and it is as well that the public should know right now that the A. A. U. national body will never permit mixed competitions between men and women in any of the sports it happens to govern.

I may say that this is no mere personal statement. It is the unanimous policy of the national body. I have frequently been criticised on account of my alleged opposition to mixed competition in swimming races, and am sorry to have aroused the ire of the progressive element among the women and the suffragists.

I happen to be secretary-treasurer of the A. A. U., and would remind my critics that the man in such an office is always intrusted with the job of making public the feelings of the governing body; and its domain extends from the Atlantic Ocean to the Pacific and from Florida to the North Pole.

Against Mixed Competition.

More than once the question of allowing women to register has been discussed, and to the present it has been turned down every time without a dissenting voice. So far as I can see now nothing short of a miracle will ever change the views of the A. A. U. men on the subject of mixed competition.

Of course, a great many will want to know the reason for this stand of the A. A. U. in keeping out the women. There are two reasons. One is to try and preserve the dignity of the American girl and the woman, and the other is to keep amateur sport clear of the demimonde. If we are in the business of developing champion athletes to uphold the American flag in international competition we surely ought to be pardoned for being conservative in shut our women.

While those old-fashioned men of the A. A. U. like to see the American woman healthy, and in the full enjoyment of sports and pastimes suitable to her sex, they do not want to see a feminine race of Amazons devoid of home ties, and the qualities that create the respect and admiration of men.

The A. A. U. is guided by experiences of the past. Years ago when the long distance walking craze struck New York a great number of women were seized with the fad, especially as it was found to be good for their health and complexions. Numbers of women's walking clubs sprung up, and it was a great thing to see bunches of women hiking along the highways at a brisk clip and at all hours.

Bicycle Craze Expires.

The bicycle craze of a few years ago furnished another illustration of the unsavory element in sport, and they spoiled one of the finest recreations of modern times. At first myriads of decent women enjoyed it until the questionable element swarmed over the roads and drives devoted to cycling. Again the decent women were forced to quit, and with them went their companions—husbands, fathers and brothers.

Now suppose that to-morrow the A. A. U. was to throw down the bars and allow women to register, and that they would have liberty to compete in the track and field games, the swimming, the gymnastics and the tumbling. What would be the consequence? For a while there might be nothing but decent girls among the boys in the swimming tanks and the pools, but after a spell the other element would appear.

What a nice position the decent young girls would find themselves in then, and what a tirade of criticism the A. A. U. would bring forth from the clergy, and from the men and women of the uplift! I wonder if those who are so willing to comment unfavorably on the A. A. U.'s rejection of mixed competition ever looked at the probable situation in this light.

Although the A. A. U. does not countenance mixed competition, its governing members are willing to advocate that women and girls engage in swimming races among themselves. If those among the women who are so anxious for speed conditions can form themselves into an association, then the sport can be made even more popular than if the women were allowed into the A. A. U.

GOOD STILL A MEMBER OF CUBS, SAYS JOHNNY EVERS

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—Wilbur Good, the Cub outfielder, is still a member of the West Side club. At least Manager Evers said so just before the Cubs started for the East. John was greatly surprised when he saw in local papers that Good had been released to Indianapolis. Evers says that there is no chance of Good leaving the Cubs, as he figures that the pinch hitter is fast developing into one of the best outfielders in the business. The Cub manager further stated that if waivers had been asked on Good it was done without his knowledge. Good accompanied the team to Boston.

Giants Again Must Oppose "$100,000 Infield" in World's Series

Athletics' Inner Defense Hailed as Greatest in Baseball History

This is the "$100,000 infield" of the Athletics the Giants must again face in the coming world's series—if the local champions repeat their pennant triumph in the National League and the Athletics recapture the American League flag, which is almost a certainty now. From left to right: Baker, third base; Barry, shortstop; McInnis, first base. Below, Eddie Collins, second base.

Fans Await World-Series Clash

Former Rivals May Meet Again

By Monty.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—In view of the fact that the Giants and Athletics are conceded almost universally now as certain to meet in the next world's series, fans are beginning to turn their attention to the question of how the two teams compare with each other. Though nearly two months remain before the clash for the world's championship gets under way, it is the main subject in the minds of the real followers of the game, now that the pennant races have ceased to absorb more than a superficial amount of interest.

The series this year has an extra element of attraction in that old rivals are meeting again, aggregations that met only two years ago. Enough of the 1911 players still remain to make the tilt practically a renewal of the same duel.

* * *

THE majority of baseball men in the country seem to think that the Athletics are the strongest team in the game. There is one sound way of reasoning this out. At the end of last season the Quakers were playing a much better grade of ball than the Red Sox, who won the pennant and whose performance was good enough to beat the Giants. This would prove almost a final argument if the present Giants and present Athletics were identical with the Giants and Athletics of last fall, but they, of course, are not.

The main basis for the superior appraisal of the Philadelphians by the fans, however, is simply that they seem a stronger team, one with greater ability, without bothering to delve into the dope for any more specific reasons. This system, though, is like betting on a race horse because of a "hunch." It is going in blindly. Baseball is a game of such distinct departments of play that they all must be considered separately with one phase of this team compared to the opposite department of the other. For instance, the estimate of the Athletics' batting in the series must be formed at the same time that the Giants' pitching is considered, and vice versa.

* * *

IF such things as base running and fielding were eliminated, the problem would be, "Will the Giants hit the Athletic pitchers harder and more timely than the Athletics hit the Giant pitchers?" Many seem to believe they will not, but this remains to be seen. Both aggregations possess tremendous batting power, with all hands in shape, and both have pitching staffs that can not be called other than great.

In the matter of one team's batting opposed to the other's pitching, a reminiscent light is thrown toward that old foolish puzzle of an irresistible body meeting an immovable one. Nobody can predict with any degree of confidence whether these games will produce the highest scoring on record for a world's series or the lowest. A complete triumph for batting would result in the former and the same for pitching would bring the latter. Or—which is more likely—it may produce about an even break with scores of average size.

* * *

JUST now an attempt might be made to decide the way this unique combat of departments will turn out, but it would be the old blind guess again to a large extent, for many changes may occur in the outlook between now and October. For instance, Jack Coombs may show himself to be back in form and the same old Quaker artist of the mound, or it may turn out that his sickness and consequent long lay-off have impaired his efficiency badly. Mathewson may be lost to the Giants through injury. Home Run Frank Baker may sprain his ankle and Larry Doyle may or may not recover his batting eye. Any one of these things could have a telling effect. Therefore, it is wise to lay low and wait until October before making any bold predictions.

Red Sox May Send Yerkes to Athletics

BOSTON, Aug. 16.—Steve Yerkes, who for the last few years has been the star second baseman of the world's champion Boston Red Sox, will probably wear an Athletic uniform in the near future, as waivers have been asked on him.

Connie Mack refused to waive claim on the former brilliant second baseman, and the chances are that he will be sent to Philadelphia in the near future.

Yerkes first learned to play baseball on the lots at Millville, N. J., and reached the height of his baseball career in the world's series with the New York Giants when he played an important part in the notable victories of the Boston Red Sox.

He proved far superior to Doyle, the Giants' second baseman, in that series, hitting the ball hard and timely and fielding in sensational style.

WOLVERINES PICK LUNDGREN.

ANN ARBOR, MICH., Aug. 16.—Carl L. Lundgren, former twirler on the Chicago team and once a University of Illinois star, has been chosen as coach of the Michigan baseball team to succeed Branch Rickey, who recently resigned. Lundgren pitched four years at Illinois and then joined the Chicago club in 1902, where he remained seven years, being a member of two world's championship nines.

20,000 Boy Athletes In Playground Meet

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—The most elaborate playground field day ever held in New York city will take place at Empire City Park, Yonkers, N. Y., on August 20. The meet is made possible by the courtesy of the officials of the Greater New York Fair and Exposition and the sanction of the A. A. U., and will be under the direction of the Bureau of Recreation, Department of Parks.

Twenty thousand boys are now in training for the fifteen events to be contested at their first interpark-playground athletic championship of Greater New York.

This invitation meet is the greatest incentive offered the boys to join the athletic clubs at the park playgrounds. No expense of any kind will be incurred; even transportation will be afforded the boys.

SOUTHERN BOY IS AFTER MATCH WITH KILBANE

CLEVELAND, Aug. 16.—George Chaney, featherweight champion of the South, may yet have a fling at Johnny Kilbane. Chaney claims 100 victories. He has beaten Al Delmont, George Kirkwood and Ty Cobb and has stopped Phil McGovern.

When one stops to consider, there is hardly a featherweight in the game who could give Kilbane a battle, unless it be Kid Julian. But there are a few comers, among them Matty McCue, of Racine, whose loss to Patsy Branningan will not put him out of his stride.

Tommy Leach in Same Class as Wagner, Lajoie and Mathewson

A good bit has been spoken and written about the wonderful way Wagner, Lajoie and others are hanging on, despite their duration of service. But in this respect we know of no one who can push through and edge by Tommy Leach. Tommy has been reported all in for several seasons, and yet to-day he is still playing fine ball in every department with his old speed intact. They crowded him away from third, where he ruled for over twelve years, and now he is starring at another job on a par with almost any in the game. In the salvos of applause that are scattered about, Leach deserves enough to rock the stands.

MORAN GETS BOUT WITH PALZER IN NEW YORK RING

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—That Jimmy Johnston, the new manager of the St. Nicholas A. C., only intends to provide top notch cards for his patrons is inferred by the matches he has already arranged. Johnston realizes that it is only from the high class bouts he can hope to make any money, and he only intends to run shows when he has such to offer.

The bouts already arranged by Johnston for the near future look to be about the best obtainable. On September 10 Jack Britton, the unusually clever Chicagoan, will hook up with Young Shugrue, the aggressive boy from Jersey City. They'll clash at 133 pounds, weigh in at 10 o'clock on the night of the bout.

Another card clinched will bring together Al Palzer, the tenacious Iowan, and Frank Moran, the Pittsburger, who made such a great battle against long odds when he met the late Luther McCarty in this city. Moran and Palzer will clash either on August 20 or 27, the date to be selected later by Dan McKetrick and Tom O'Rourke, the respective managers of the two heavyweights.

Ritchie Open to Harsh Criticism

Willie Ignores Murphy and Ad

By W. W. Naughton.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 16.—Every once in a while the thoughtful critic informs us that boxing is in a chaotic condition.

It occurs to the writer that remarks of that character would be particularly apropos just now. As I understand it, chaos reigns when you can not figure out just what is going to happen, and it seems to me that to attempt to peer into the pugilistic future at this juncture would be to invite vertigo, or at any rate headache.

In some of the weight classes there is actual stagnation, while in others confusion reigns. True, Willie Ritchie, who won the lightweight title through a foul, and Arthur Pelky, who became white heavyweight champion through a fatality, are going to risk their laurels in September, but it is doubtful if either of the events referred to rises to the dignity of a championship battle in the eyes of the American sporting public.

Of course, if one argues by the book—and in cases of this kind the record book should be the basis of all discussion—Freddie Welsh has every right to aspire to a crack at the championship. He is England's premier lightweight and he won from Ritchie once before.

Murphy Entitled to Chance.

But Freddie has been a long time in the lists and in this country there are other lads who are thought to have a better claim to the consideration. Tommy Murphy, the Harlem spitfire, for instance, is looked upon as Ritchie's logical opponent, and the coast sports fondly hoped to see Ritchie and Murphy signed for a clash on Labor Day.

On the plea that better inducements were forthcoming, Ritchie has decided to take his dolls to Vancouver, B. C., on September 1 and tackle Welsh in a 20-round contest.

In the consciousness that he is doing exactly what is sportsmanlike and fair, Ritchie seems to defy criticism. But, like all champions before him, he has enemies and detractors. He is sure to be dealt harshly with by these, and unless I miss my guess his motives also will be questioned by numbers of fight fans who view these matters dispassionately.

Willie Also Ignores Ad.

Coming right at this time, some of these things told by Billy Nolan after he ceased to manage Ritchie will carry weight. Nolan said that before Ritchie returned to the ring he planned to meet just three men, to-wit: Rivers, Freddie Welsh and Leach Cross. Ritchie by his actions is bearing out Nolan's words, but public opinion can whip any champion into line, and Ritchie will have a hard time trying to withstand the lances of criticism that will be leveled at him if he refuses to recognize the claims of Tommy Murphy and Ad Wolgast later along.

Of course, if Ritchie is defeated by Freddie Welsh, he would be allowed to go on his way in peace, but somehow the far Western sports appear to think that a contingency of that kind is not on the cards.

Pelky vs. Miller.

Late in September Arthur Pelky and Big Charlie Miller are to box in Los Angeles. As Pelky under existing heavyweight conditions has the best right to call himself white heavyweight champion, the match will of necessity be for the championship. But why could not Pelky be signed with some hope who is better known to fame.

If there is such a thing as pugilistic code, Miller is the last man in the world who should have been selected as a champion candidate. At the same time, if Arthur has picked Miller in the belief that a man with such a meager record must necessarily be easy, he will find himself mistaken. Miller is a man of much displacement and he is as strong as an elephant and can sop up punishment as a sponge absorbs water.

And if Miller should win—well, chaos would not begin to describe the situation.

In the smaller classes of pugilism there is a marked degree of inaction.

Whenever any violent action talk is indulged in in Bantam Champion Johny Coulon's presence, the news goes out that Johny is the next thing to a confirmed invalid and that his doctor has warned him to avoid anything calculated to excite him.

It would seem that the only way to keep Johny Coulon in good humor would be to crown him perpetual king of the knights and make it a felony to challenge him. It may be that this is of course sarcasm, but in view of the many times Johnny's small ailments have prevented him defending his title, I think it warranted.

No Welters in Sight.

Welterweights there appear to be none. Mike Gibbons and Jimmy Clabby, who could fill welter requirements, are eager to be known as middleweights.

For some time the middleweight division has been all head and points, but now that there has been an infusion of new blood, the spirit of rivalry and competition may be revived.

Maybe Frank Klaus will stay away from Paris long enough to take a hand in clearing up the championship question, provided he can make the weight.

Let us hope that in some of the classes events will so shape themselves that here will soon be a deciding match in prospect—one that will have the earmarks of a genuine world's championship and appeal to the sports generally as such.

NEW WHITE HOPE SOUGHT AMONG BRITISH HEAVIES

Failure of Wells Has Brought About a Change, and Dick Smith Is New Entrant.

By T. S. Andrews.

MILWAUKEE, Aug. 16.—Since the defeat of Bombardier Wells, the heavyweight champion of Great Britain, by Gunboat Smith in New York, the Britishers have been casting about for another "white hope," one who will be able to "stand the gaff" and weather the storm when it comes to body punishment; and from information at hand they have unearthed another "hope" in the person of Dick Smith, the amateur champion of England.

Dick has decided to throw in his lot with the professionals. Born 27 years ago, Smith possesses all the necessary qualifications for a "white hope," and may go further than some of the blasted hopes. He stands 6 feet 1 1-2 inches, weighs about 190 pounds, and has a very satisfactory record. Of his 49 contests he has won 45, lost 3 and drawn 1.

Formerly a soldier, he followed Bombardier Wells as champion of India. As an amateur boxer he has done remarkably well, having won the championship of Great Britain in 1911-12-13, while a member of the London police force.

Will Not Tackle Wells First.

He probably will not take on Bombardier Wells and Georges Carpentier for his intial efforts as a professional, but one of the lesser lights. Professional and amateur boxing are vastly different things on the other side of the Atlantic, as many amateurs have found on taking the plunge into the professional waters.

The referees view things from an entirely different standpoint, and a 20-round contest with three-minute rounds under professional rules takes a bit of negotiating. Under amateur laws boxing contests are not allowed of longer duration than six rounds of two minutes each, but for the championships and most interclub competitions, the bouts are limited to three rounds.

Amateur Referees Strict.

Amateur referees are very strict in upholding the rules of the game, and some of their antics would not be tolerated by professionals for one minute. Clinching is barred and a boxer is liable to be disqualified for a second offense after having been once cautioned. Then, again, amateurs are forbidden to receive any advice during the progress of a bout, and any instructions that the second may have for his boy has to wait until the round ends. Under amateur rules boxing is kept very clean, which is more than can be said for professions.

Therefore the entry of Dick Smith (namesake of Gunboat) will be watched with interest, even by followers on this side of the big pond.

JOHNSON HELPS SICK YOUTH.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 16.—A baseball and an autograph letter from Walter Johnson, Washington's premier pitcher, did more than medicine could do to bring about the rapid convalescence of Warren A. Slee, a youthful admirer of the big ball tosser. Johnson, whose numerous admirers include scores of youthful fans who idolize the pitcher, heard of the serious illness of the boy and wrote to him, sending a baseball he had used in pitching the Washington team to victory. The boy's recovery since receiving the letter has progressed rapidly.

RED SOX GET OUTFIELDER.

BOSTON, MASS., Aug. 16.—The Boston American League team announced yesterday the purchase of Outfielder Walsh from the Worcester team of the New England League.

WAR DECLARED BY P. A. A. OVER 1915 FAIR PLUM

James E. Sullivan's Reported Action in Naming T. S. Mulvey as Aide Causes Strife.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., Aug. 11. There is a flurry among the officials of the Pacific Athletic Association and in amateur athletic circles generally over the allegation that James E. Sullivan, director general of the amateur games to be held here during the Panama-Pacific Exposition, has appointed Thomas S. Mulvey, the well-known San Francisco clubman, his principal aide in connection with the handling of the exposition sports.

A few days ago Mulvey received a telegram from Sullivan, who was then on the point of departure to Berlin to attend a conference of the Olympiad committee.

In his telegram Sullivan said he would be back in New York early in September, and that it would be necessary for Mulvey to come to New York at that time to aid in interesting the athletic fraternities there in the games to be held in this city in 1915.

Elliott Issues Statement.

While the telegram intimated that Mulvey was appointed the head of the San Francisco committee on games, no reference was made to any other appointments of local men in the same connection.

The Pacific Association of the Amateur Athletic Association took umbrage at this indication of Mulvey's appointment, and John Elliott, president of the association, issued a statement yesterday in which he said that the selection of Mulvey to the post did not meet with the sanction of the association.

Elliott pointed out that the Pacific Association had given valuable assistance to the exposition officials in securing sanctions for American championships to be held here in 1915. He declared that Mulvey had no knowledge of or affiliation with amateur sports, and intimated that Mulvey's appointment would cause the association to refrain from using its endeavors toward making the 1915 games the success they should be.

Mulvey Has No News.

While Elliott did not say so, it is evident that he and his associates expected Sullivan to depend upon the local athletic body for whatever assistance he required.

The Panama Exposition officials stated emphatically that no appointment such as the Pacific Association complained of had been made, nor had any such appointment been authorized by the exposition directorate, which, of course, is the last word in all matters of this kind.

Under these circumstances it is believed that the Pacific Association will take no precipitate action until a clearer understanding is had as to just what honor Sullivan intended to confer upon Mulvey. As Sullivan is on the high seas, it would be some little time before he could be heard from.

Mulvey said yesterday that he had no news regarding his appointment other than was conveyed in the Sullivan telegram. He said he intended going East, but will wait to hear further before making the trip.

M'FARLAND IS GETTING READY FOR BUSY CAMPAIGN

CHICAGO, ILL., Aug. 16.—Packey McFarland is getting himself ready for the ring again. While no matches have been closed as yet by Manager Thiry, the latter is negotiating with Milwaukee, Kenosha and several Eastern clubs. Once Packey is back in action his matches will come fast, his style and rep being favored all over. Jimmy Coffroth would like McFarland out West with Tommy Murphy.

HOME RUN GAVE H. WAGNER REAL START IN GAME

Big Dutchman Has the Most Interesting Career of All the Baseball Stars.

HANS WAGNER, the hero of all baseball heroes, has had an interesting career. Wagner, the big German, was born in what is now Carnegie, Pa., on February 27, 1874. His father, who is still living, was a coal miner in those days, and he decided that John P. should help him in his work. So Honus was packed off to the mines to help dad every day. Hans was not lazy, but he didn't like the black darkness of the earth's interior, and many a warning he received for playing hookey from the bituminous section and scampering off for a game of baseball with other kids of the neighborhood.

A correspondent recently approached the big fellow and asked him to tell how he came to break into baseball. Honus pondered a moment, and then spun the following yarn about his [illegible] experience:

* * *

"I BROKE into baseball by posing as my brother Al. We were playing ball around home. Al received an offer from Canton, Ohio, before he was offered a place with the Mansfield, Ohio, club, in the same league. The day he got the second offer he turned to me and told me to go to Mansfield. I got there early in the afternoon, and a man named Taylor recognized me. He had seen me play. The club was hard put for a third baseman, however, and Taylor decided to take a chance with me.

"It so happened that Mansfield played Canton that day. My brother was in the line-up of the Canton team, and the pitcher, 'Toots' Barret, was also from Carnegie, or Mansfield, as it was called in those days. They regarded me as pretty much of a kid, and when Canton got away to a good lead early in the game Barret let up in his pitching when I went to bat. He want to see me make good and figured that a couple of hits more or less would not affect his rating any. I made a couple of hits in this way, and then came the ninth inning. Never will I forget it. Mansfield was three runs to the bad when we went to bat. They needed four to win. We filled the bases and it was my turn to bat.

* * *

"TAYLOR was not wise to the fact that Barrett had been easing up when I had been at bat before and made a couple of hits, or he might have sent in a pinch hitter. He let me stick. With the bases full, Barrett meant to strike me out. It was too ticklish a time for monkey business. He shoved across a fast one and I knocked it over the fence for a home run and won the game. It was just a case of the luck of things. That's always the way. If the pitcher is lucky he gets you. If you're lucky you get him."

Wagner then explained that he went to Adrian, Mich., where the club was owned by a son of the Taylor who ran the Mansfield (Ohio) club. He went there as infielder and captain. Honus got homesick after a few months and quit the club, going to Warren in the Iron and Oil League. Toward the close of the season he joined the Steubenville club of the Interstate League. That was in 1895.

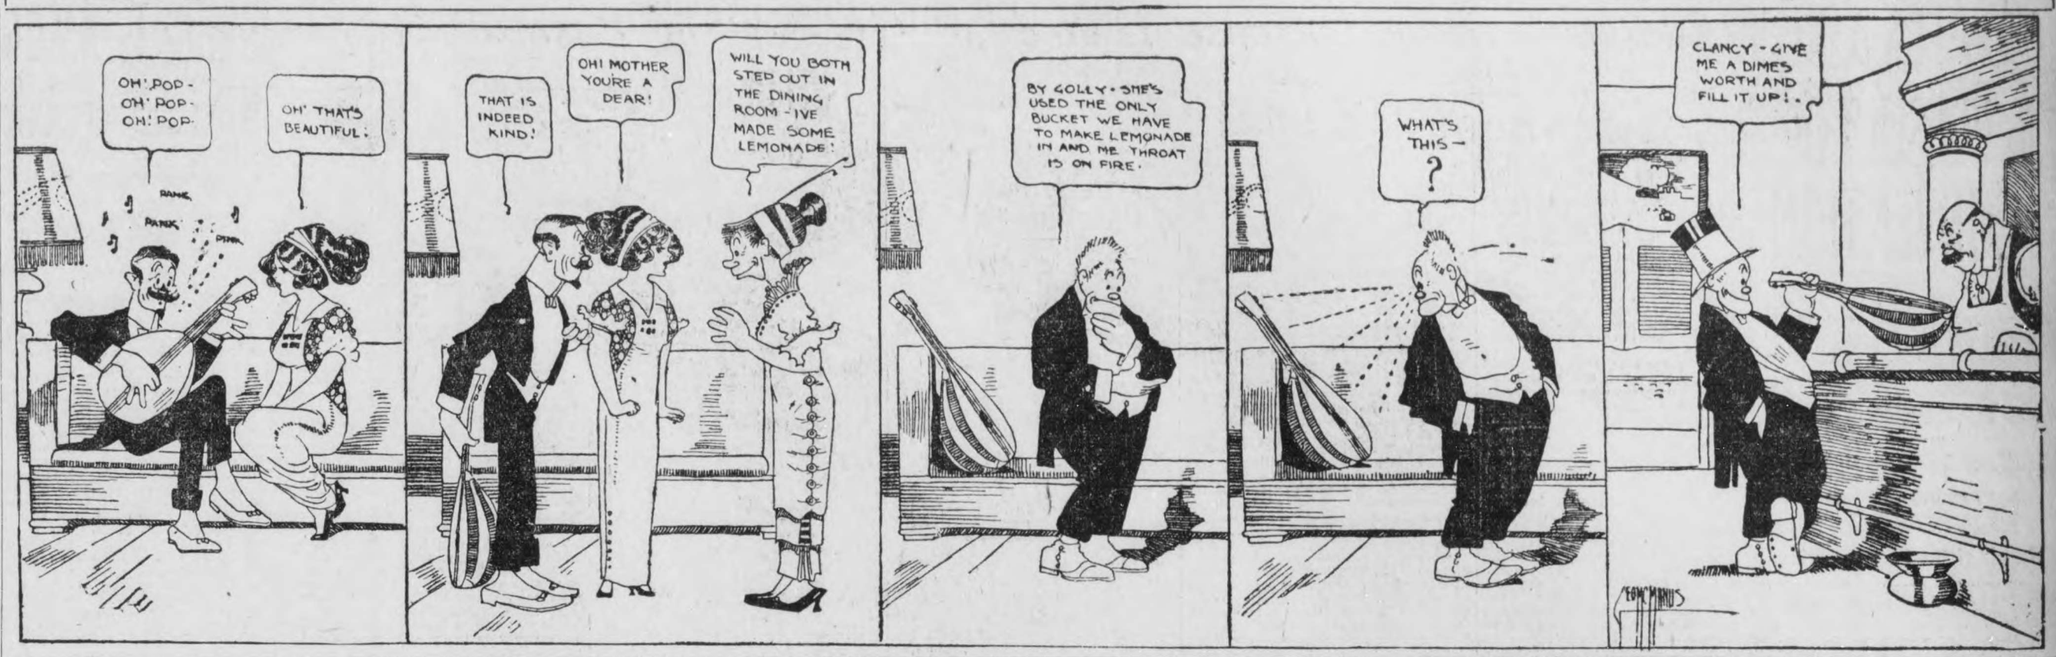
* * *

"I WENT there as a sort of all-around player," said Wagner. "I pitched for a while. I was so wild that I used to walk half the batters and strike out the other half. I had terrific speed and it was hard to get a catcher who could hold me. They borrowed Pete Lavelle from the Pittsburg Nationals to catch me in a couple of games, thinking it would steady me. As a pitcher I was a failure. However, while in the games as a twirler I banged a couple of hits over the fence, and they made me an outfielder, putting me in the middle garden.

"The following spring the Pittsburg club signed me, and W. W. Kerr, who then owned the Pirates, wanted to farm me out to Kansas City, but I insisted that it was too far from home, so he sent me to Paterson, N. J., in the Atlantic League. I played with Paterson all of that year and until June 29, 1897, when the Louisville club, then owned by Barney Dreyfuss, my present employer, bought my release. The Colonels were managed by Fred Clarke, and the secretary of the club was the late Harry C. Pulliam, later secretary of the Pirates, and still later president of the National League. Harry was one of the best friends I ever had."

NAPS ARE AFTER THREE PLAYERS FROM MUD HENS

TOLEDO, OHIO, Aug. 16.—Vice President Barnard, of the Naps, came to Toledo yesterday to look over possible purchases for the Naps. It is thought that Pitcher Lefty James, Shortstop Brady and First Baseman Bluhm may be sold to the Cleveland club.



James may be the only player to report to the Naps before the A. A. season closes. In return for him the Hens expect a good southpaw from the Naps. Toledo will recall Pitchers Leak and Myers from Charleston, W. Va.; Pitcher Williams and Catcher Brady from Waterbury.

Nash, who has been playing a whirlwind game at short for the latter club, and is hitting at a .360 clip, and on whom Toledo has a string, will quit baseball at the close of the season to go into politics. He is now running for Assemblyman in his home town.

CUBS NOT AFTER DENVER MEN.

CHICAGO, ILL., Aug. 16.—Officials of the Chicago Nationals denied today that the visit of President McGill and Manager Hendricks, of the Denver Western League club, here was made in connection with a deal for players. The Denver men, according to President O'Neill, of the Western League, came to discuss general matters and the annual draft, which takes place this month.

PUNCH COUNTS IN THE VARIOUS LINES OF SPORT

McLoughlin Possesses Punch in Tennis; So Have American Poloists and Boxers.

By W. W. Naughton.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 16.—A magazine man of my acquaintance told me that one of his short stories was returned to him with the criticism that it lacked "the punch."

This goes to show that "the punch" counts in fiction as well as in real life.

An Englishman wrote to one of the London papers the other day, complaining that Maurice E. McLoughlin had introduced the punch into lawn tennis. The smashing service which McLoughlin has perfected was characterized as a trick, but a legitimate trick at that.

The Englishman referred to said that if methods like McLoughlin's are countenanced "lawn tennis is within measurble distance of death."

It was the plaint of a man who is used to old ideals. He has watched the rhythmic, lobbing game for years, and got it into his blood that that is the only way to play tennis.

But perhaps the outlook is not as gloomy as he pictures it. His countrymen may adopt McLoughlin's trick and try to improve on it.

Even lawn tennis must change in character when the punch comes along.

* * *

ANOTHER Englishman discusses a form of sport into which the punch enters with broader view. He wrote to The Times asking how it is that English boxers are more easily knocked out than American ringmen.

Then he attempts to furnish the explanation. Beginning with the question of physique, he satisfies himself that while Americans are slightly sturdier than latter-day Britons, the answer is not found in that. He believes that it all rests in what he considers a false conception of the manner in which pugilists should be schooled.

English lads, he says, are required to conform to old standards of boxing. It would be quite different, he thinks, if academic notions were sacrificed to personal initiative, for, while learning to roar on the "one, two, three" principle, a British student loses his punch and never recovers it.

* * *

In America, he says, it is different. It is by setting in his own particular fashion with various kinds of opponents, rather than by following the rules laid down in some pugilistic primer, that a young American develops an effective individual style; that with those who learn boxing naturally—that is from experience—the acquisition of the punch is not only the first consideration, but a matter that takes care of itself as the student's knowledge widens.

This Englishman, it is noticed, does not take the stand that because English pugilists are deficient in smiting force boxing "is within measurable distance of death."

He says frankly that English methods are wrong and intimates that there would be wisdom in taking a leaf out of America's book.

* * *

THE punch was in evidence again when the American polo players took the Britishers by storm at Meadowbrook recently. The judgment of the expert was that the visiting Britishers comprised the flower of the polo world. They brought their own ponies with them, and their seeming superiority influenced the betting market to the extent that they were made odds-on favorites.

From all accounts the Americans went at them like Japanese at a Russian fort. The visitors were just loaded to the Plimsoll mark with knowledge of "how to play polo," but the punch upset them. All the King's horses and all the King's men could not withstand the onslaught of the Americans and the cup remained on this side.

Maiden Turned in Great Card Didn't Make a Single "Five"

By Tich Tichenor.

WHEN H. H. Barker did a 69 over the course of the Atlanta Athletic Club in the open tournament held in December, 1910, it was the opinion of all of the professionals who were present that he had set a record which would stand for some years. In this opinion they have thus far been correct. Yet on two different occasions Stewart Maiden, the local professional, has had a chance to break it if he could have holed out in one put on the eighteenth green, while at another time he reached the last green on his sixty-sixth shot. He tried to hole the put for a 67 and ran past the hole and then missed a comparatively easy one for the record.

In one of his rounds which tied the record Maiden performed the feat which might be equaled but which can not be excelled when he went around without a five upon his card. If you are familiar with the East Lake course the more you think of this performance the more wonderful it becomes.

On the outward journey there are the second, the seventh and eighth holes, which are all par fives, while it is easy enough to take a five at either the fourth or ninth, both of which are bogey five. In coming home there are the twelfth, sixteenth and eighteenth, which are par fives, while the fifteenth and seventeenth are hard fours. Yet not a five did he have at any of these holes. At every hole he took a four except at the fifth, fourteenth and fifteenth where he secured threes. Just think of it, fifteen fours and three threes and neither of the threes gotten at the first or third holes, where he would be expected to get a three.

I don't know how this score will appeal to others, but the more I play around East Lake and labor to keep out the sixes and sevens, the more remarkable this score becomes. To be perfectly frank, I do not recall but one round I have ever played around this course in which my card did not register at least one six. George Adair has had the same experience, except he has two such rounds to his credit.

* * *

DURING the early part of June Maiden took a trip to his home in Scotland and while on this visit entered the British open championship. In this event there were 270 entries. These were divided into squads of 90 players each, who played a 36-hole medal play qualifying round, and the lowest twenty in each squad qualified for the championship, which was 72 holes of medal play.

Maiden landed on Tuesday and had only one day to learn the course and to become accustomed to the vast difference in the greens from those he has played upon since he has been in Atlanta, as he was drawn among the players who had to play on Thursday. In this qualifying round he failed to get in by two strokes which he says was due entirely to his putting, which was very bad.

* * *

IN writing of this tournament, the British correspondent of The American Golfer says: "For most of the day the weather was very bad, indeed. When play began at 9 o'clock, the wind was very strong and rain was pouring down, while late in the afternoon it was worse. In such circumstances the peculiar difficulties of Hoylake were well brought out, and the foreign visitors had an unenviable task before them. The first of the Americans to go out was Stewart Maiden, of Atlanta, who was partnered with J. Higgins, of Walsall, and this pair was second on the list, striking off at five minutes past 9. Maiden opened with a nice four at the dog-leg hole, with which the round begins, and after dropping a stroke at the second, went along steadily to the sixth, the famous Briars, and the hole which caused more disaster than any other on this course (it was once halved in nine in the final of the amateur championship), and here he took a six.

"However, at the difficult short hole that follows he got a splendid two, but another six was added at the eighth, and he turned in 40. He came home fairly well, but lost a stroke at the short blind Alps, being the eleventh, and two very valuable ones at the home hole, making his round in 82. In his second round in the afternoon he had a bad seven at the third hole, which is a long one and straight, but very narrow in the fairway, with ditches on either side, and another six was added at the Briars, so that by the time he got to the turn he had used up 43 strokes. He came home really fine in 36, almost the only blemish on his card being the five at the eighteenth, and that was very excusable."

His second round was 79.

Total for 36 holes, 161.

Maiden's 36 for the last nine made in his second round was the best done on this nine holes on the first day of the elimination rounds.

It was on this first day that George Duncan, who was the favorite to win the tournament, was unable to fight against the weather conditions and failed to qualify by four strokes. This was also the round which eliminated Alex Smith, Mike Brady and Alex Campbell, of the American team.

It was a strange coincidence that five of the six American entries should be drawn in the first squad of 90 to fight it out against each other as well as all of the others to get into the tournament.

JAKE STAHL DENIES HE IS TO SUCCEED CALLAHAN

GLOUCESTER, Aug. 16.—The rumor that Jake Stahl was to be given the position as manager of the Chicago White Sox and that Jimmy Callahan, the present head of the team, was to be deposed is entirely without foundation, according to Stahl, who was interviewed at Annisquam yesterday afternoon.

"No," said Stahl, "I have no knowledge of my being picked for the position of manager, and I had not even heard the rumor until you told me just now. Rumors put me out of a job. I guess that is all this talk is, rumor. Those things hurt the club considerably and it keeps the fellows guessing as to the exact truth of the matter. You can say for me that it is a rumor pure and simple and one without the least foundation."

When asked if he would accept the position if it were offered him, Stahl declined to answer.

BOSTON BUYS NEW PLAYER.

BOSTON, Aug. 16.—President McAleer, of the Boston American League club, announced to-day that he has purchased First Baseman Mundy from the Portsmouth club of the Virginia State League.

GOV. TENER FINDS JOB FOR A BASEBALL MATE

HARRISBURG, PA., Aug. 16.—Governor John K. Tener has given a substantial reward to a comrade of his old baseball days, when he appointed George Wood, once a member of the Philadelphia National League team, and a mighty outfielder and hitter, to a good State position. Governor Tener and Wood have been friends ever since their ball-playing days.

About two years ago the Governor found Wood serving as a ticket taker at the American League park in Philadelphia and told him he would try and find him a better job.

Soon afterward Wood was made messenger in the office of the Secretary of the Commonwealth. Later he was promoted to a clerkship in the same office. Now he is marshal of the new Public Service Commission, with a salary of $2,000 a year.

W.-I. DROPS TWO UMPIRES.

GREEN BAY, WIS., Aug. 16.—President Weeks, of the Wisconsin-Illinois League, announced yesterday he had dropped Umpires Roth and McFarlane. George Hogreiver was given a regular place on the staff.

ATHLETES ARE IMPROVING IN BRITISH ISLES

European Track and Field Stars Gradually Approaching Americans; 17,000 Saw Games.

THE fact that the United States and English track and field championships were held upon the same day makes a comparison of the work of the native athletes and their visiting competitors of more than usual interest. England's A. A. A. games were held on the famous oval at Stamford Bridge, London, while the United States championships were being contested at Chicago.

Some 17,000 spectators watched the English and Swedish athletes battle for honors in a drizzle, while about half that number sweltered in a temperature close to 100, while American titles were won on a track and in a field which failed to elicit any praise from the competitors. Although conditions as reported from both athletic fields were against record-breaking performances, a remarkable improvement was shown in the general all-round work of the English and Swedish athletes, indicating that the lessons learned in the recent Olympic games have not been forgotten.

* * *

THE English program consisted of fourteen events, of which English athletes won nine and Sweden's representatives five. Four A. A. A. records were established, two by the Swedes and two by English contenders. The United States schedule contained eighteen contests, in which two new "games" records were made, one by an American-born and another by an Irish athlete.

A comparison of the programs of the two meets shows that eleven similar events appeared on both, and with these as a basis a comparing of records proves that times of distances were better at Stamford Bridge in six of the eleven competitions. To what extent local conditions affected these figures there is no way of knowing. The comparison is made simply to show that the oft-repeated statements that European athletics are gradually approaching American standards are not based on idle observation.

BEGINNING with the 100, 200 and 440-yard runs, England showed a winner in the first two events in the person of W. R. Applegarth, who won in 10 and 21 2-3 seconds, respectively, against Sprinter Drew's times of 10 2-5 and 22 4-5 seconds at Chicago. Haff, the Chicago A. A. and Michigan flyer, won the 440 yards in 51 1-5, while G. Nichol did 49 2-5 at London.

In both the mile and one-half mile runs the United States figures were better. Baker, the New York A. C. runner, captured the 880 in 2 minutes and 1-5 second. E. Wide, of Sweden, winner in England, was two-fifths of a second slower. Norman Tabor won the mile at Chicago in 4:20 2-5, while Zander, of the Swedish team, required 4:25 4-5 to take the English title. In the running broad jump Abrahams cleared 22 feet 6 inches at the A. A. A. games, while Stiles, the winner at Chicago, did 22 feet 3-4 inch.

* * *

THE running high jump showed that Richards, the Olympic champion, had but three-eighths of an inch advantage over Baker, England's champion, who jumped 6 feet 1 inch. Nilsson, the Swedish shotputter, pushed the weight out 47 feet 4 1-4 inches, against American Champion Whitney's 46 feet 2 5-6 inches. In the pole vault and hammer throw the American figures were far superior to those made at Stamford Bridge.

WHAT ATLANTA MANUFACTURERS AND JOBBERS ARE DOING

ATLANTA HAS NEW FRIENDS AS RESULT OF CONVENTION

Many Attracted to City Who Never Came Before, but Who Now Will Make Semi-Annual Trips and Become Regular Customers.

Attendance Surpasses All Expectations, as Does the Volume of Business Transacted as Direct Result of the Fine Gathering.

The Southern Merchants' Convention is over.

With a theater party at the Forsyth Monday night, a barbecue Wednesday, and the Atlanta-Chattanooga ball game Friday, the visiting delegates enjoyed the second week of their stay, and the Atlanta merchants who pushed the convention to success believe they have made enduring friends of their guests, friends who will come again in February and every half year after that.

The purpose of the convention was twofold. First, the retail dealers from all over the South were given an opportunity to meet and discuss the problems which confront them in the everyday conduct of their business. Second, every effort was made to emphasize Atlanta's advantages as a buying center for all the South.

Both Objects Achieved.

Both these objects were achieved. The speeches during the first week of the convention threw valuable help in the way of those who found perplexities in buying, selling, management of stores, credits, or any of the multitudinous things which go to make up a merchant's work.

It is a good thing that the proceedings are to be published. All of the speeches are well worthy of preservation for future reference. Some of the speakers gave plain talks, just the simple, practical expression of what they had learned through years of experience.

Others spoke with scholarly finish—their speeches really were erudite, of studied completeness and finish. Still others were inspirational—they pointed out the intellectual and spiritual significance of the merchant's work. They made him feel that his is a noble calling, that the great prizes of the world are for the business man.

New Friends Made.

From the other point of view, the results attained were no less notable. Hundreds of buyers came to Atlanta who never had been here before, and who would not have come this time had it not been for the convention.

To them the completeness, the cheapness, the quality and the diversity of things sold by Atlanta manufacturers and jobbers must have been a revelation—indeed, they so expressed themselves.

Some of them bought big bills. Every large jobbing house reports a splendid fall trade. The crop prospects are such as to make everyone optimistic. There will be a good demand for merchandise in the fall, and the buyers prepared to meet it.

There were others who did not buy so much. They are just as welcome, for the Atlantans feels that their goods, their prices and their service are right, and that every customer who buys here once will come again.

New Associations.

A noteworthy result of the meeting was the organization of a permanent body—the Southern States Merchants' Association, headed by J. W. Vaughn, of Cartersville, Ga.

This, it is hoped, will bring very tangible benefits to the retailers of the South in general. It may prove to be the parent of scores of local organizations, which can do worlds of good in watching credits, preventing price-slashing and equalizing freight rates.

Notions Novelties in Demand From Buyers

Americans Tire Quickly of Any One Style, as Compared to Stability in Europe.

Buyers are very anxious for novelties this season, and it is constantly shown how quickly Americans tire of a given style. In England, France and Germany certain classes of merchandise move about the same year after year, but here we get new things continually. This has its advantages, however, because it stimulates business and there are new interests arising all the time.

Fall business in fancy goods and notions has opened well.

Styles this season are radically new, and leather hand bags with deep pockets and vanity accessories, as well as the beaded varieties in high colors, are especially strong. Tasmania shell hair ornaments are a new item. These goods are the nearest approach to genuine tortoise shell ever produced, and the line comprises braid pins, barettes, and ~~comb~~ combs.

Opera length bead necklaces in jet, pearl, amethyst, galalith, white amber and real and imitation pearl are excellent sellers among the newer jewelry features.

Cuff pins, bar pins and hat pins, set with diamond chips, also move readily. Beaded tunics, in the staple gold and silver and high colors, are also strong, and are attractively priced.

Metal vanity cases are produced more reasonably this season, chased effects being shown in gold, oxidized silver or nickel, which are in exact imitation of the very expensive goods.

Parisian ivory goods have been enlarged and the line shown extends from the simple vanity case, retailing at 25 cents, to the more pretentious toilet ~~fitting~~ fitting at $25.

'L. & N.' Not Much Worried Over the Senatorial Probe

Busy Developing Its Own Lines, Has No Time To Buy New Holdings.

Interests familiar with affairs of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company are not apprehensive over the outcome of whatever action may be taken in connection with the resolution introduced in the Senate by Senator Lea. This resolution calls for investigation and report by the Interstate Commerce Commission of the ownership and control of the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis Railway Company and other subsidiary companies of the first mentioned road, "and the practices and methods of the Louisville and Nashville in attempting to preserve a monopoly in its territory."

It is not thought that there will be immediate legal action in the matter, as any investigation that may be made by the commission would necessarily consume a considerable amount of time, and it is considered more or less doubtful in the minds of some that sufficient evidence will be obtained to warrant the institution of a suit by the Government calling for the divorce of the lines involved.

It is known that the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis has lines running in territory which may be considered competitive with the Louisville and Nashville. But whether it can be established that any collusion exists or has existed between the two roads to abolish competition is quite another question. So far as te Tennessee Central Railroad's purchase by the Louisville and Nashville is concerned, it is understood that such a development has not been considered by the management of the last mentioned property.

The Louisville and Nashville, it is pointed out, is kept busy developing and improving its own road in order to care more expeditiously for the large traffic that is being offered, and is not in the market for other lines. It owns about 75 per cent of the stock of the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis, which virtually gives it control of that system. No doubt the management of the Louisville and Nashville will fight a suit, should it be instituted by the Government, to the bitter end.

At the present time the company is spending large amounts of money in double-tracking its main liens from a point about 10 miles above Nashville to Birmingham, Ala., a distance of over 300 miles. When this important work is completed the road will be in a position to handle its business in that territory much more effectively than at present. The double-track work is not being done on the old roadbed all the distance, as in many places lines are being straightened, and at Nashville one track is being run around the city to avoid congestion. It is proposed to utilize one of the tracks between Nashville and Birmingham for freight and the other for passengers.

Louisville and Nashville has a very large surplus and it is believed in some circles that before long stockholders will receive another "bonus" in stock. The last one of $12,000,000 was only about half what was expected, and at that time predictions were freely made that within a reasonable length of time something more in this connection might be looked for. Earnings of the company are substantial during the fiscal year ended June 30 last, there having been an estimated balance available for dividends approximately of 11 1-2 or 12 per cent. Last year there was a surplus available for dividends equal to 15.83 per cent on the $60,000,000 capital stock then outstanding.

GARMENT TRADE AWAITS REPORT OF WAGE BOARD

Complicated Mathematics Necessary to Compute Proper Pay for Piece Workers.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—It is recognized generally in the dress and waist industry that one of the most important provisions of the protocol signed early this year by the manufacturers and their employees is that which brought the wage scale board into existence.

This board, as designated in the protocol, consists of eight members, four nominated by the manufacturers and four by the union. The duties of the board are to standardize work throughout the industry, and to preserve data and statistics, with a view to establishing a scientific basis for fixing these prices that will insure a minimum wage.

It has power to engage experts in price fixing, to settle all disputes over prices and to make special exemptions for week work where special exigencies arise or where special scales are required.

A kindred provision made necessary an immediate investigation of the rates paid in various parts of the industry, the earnings of the operatives and the classification of garments. This investigation is now being made under the direction of N. I. Stone, formerly chief statistician of the tariff board. Commenting recently on the scope of the work, Mr. Stone said:

36,000 Employed.
